Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Are there not others who could occupy the time we have at our disposal, because this is the last order on the paper for to-day ?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON—If neither the hon. senator from Kingston nor the hon. senator from St. John is prepared to speak, I should like to make a few remarks on the subject.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—Then I beg to withdraw my motion.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON—I have listened with a great deal of attention to the speeches made on this important subject, and I must say they were fraught with a good deal of consideration and information. It gave me great pleasure indeed to listen to them, particularly the speeches delivered in the first part of the discussion. I noticed that all who spoke on the subject agreed on one particular point, namely, that an Upper House in this parliament is required, and no one has expressed the opinion that it is right or necessary to abolish the Senate. In my own opinion it would be a great mistake to abolish the Senate. It would deprive the parliament of Canada of one of its most important elements. Supporting this view we have the opinion of such men as Sir John Macdonald, Sir Oliver Mowat, Hon. Geo. Brown and Sir Wilfrid Laurier. I think we have done right in paying respect to the opinions of such noted men, men of experience, who knew what they were talking about when they said that a second Chamber was necessary in this country. Besides this we must remember that the fathers of confederation in framing the constitution of this Dominion considered that a second Chamber was necessary. The only point which has been under discussion to any great extent is, how can we change the constitution of the Senate so as to improve it with regard to the appointment of senators. A great many suggestions have been advanced by different speakers. Some are in favour of the elective system ; some are in favour of having half the senators elected and the other half appointed by the Crown. Others would desire that the universities should have a voice in the matter ; others that the leader of the opposition should share in the nomination of senators. My own opinion is, after careful consideration of the matter, that no improvement can be made on the present method of appointing senators. As to the local governments of the different provinces having these appointments in their hands, I do not approve of this proposition at all, because it would introduce into our local legislatures a bone of contention. I differ very much from my hon. friend from Shediac, who said he approved of having the local legislatures appoint our senators, and that this would have the effect of eliminating partyism from the Senate. I cannot see that ; my opinion is that it would have the contrary effect, and would introduce partyism here. We have not now very much partyism here. Senators are found dividing on quite other than party lines in regard to questions coming before the House; but I believe if we were to adopt the idea of the hon. gentleman from Shediac, partyism would be found to increase very rapidly in the Senate. The men appointed by the local governments would be bound to support the parties appointing them. Then again, we would be introducing the system which is adopted in the United States, where the different states of the Union have the appointment of senators. I, as one humble member of this Senate, will object with all my power to having any part of the system of the United States introduced into our parliament. The senators of the United States, I have no hesitation in saying, instead of being responsible to the people of that country are simply the nominees of the combines, the trusts, and the moneyed men. They actually represent the money of the United States. Can you expect to have an independent body, when its members are appointed in that manner? The present United States Senate shows this very clearly. We have an independent body here—being appointed by the Crown, independent of all influences outside the Senate. It is not so with the Senate of the United States. The hon. gentleman from Wolseley (Hon. Mr. Perley) suggested an idea of appointing senators which, certainly, was novel, but I do not believe he will get very much support for his scheme. It was that the leader of the government should appoint eight members of his cabinet, that the leader of opposition would appoint six of the wisest men he could select, and that the chief justice of the province in which the appointment was to be made would select three. These men would cast a ballot for the senator. You will notice that the chief justice would have the appointment of the three men, who would constitute the majority of the electing body. They would hold the balance of power, and the result would be that we would have an element here which is very useful in its place, but which I think would be better to keep in the minority. We would have the House filled full of lawyers. I do not think it would be possible to carry out the hon. gentleman's idea in any way. I think it would be a complete failure in comparison with the way in which senators are at present appointed. My own idea is that, if we depart from the present system, we had better go direct to the electorate and be elected say on a property qualification for a value of $500 or $1,000. Let half the Senate be elected every 5, 6 or 8 years, as may be considered best. At the end of that time let the other half be elected. This would give senators a tenure of ten or twelve years, which would be sufficiently long to show whether a man was a capable man for the Senate or not. If he was a very capable man and a very good man he would then have the opportunity of being re-elected. This is the course I would prefer if any of the plans are to be adopted which are suggested here; but I cannot see that there is any benefit in a system of direct election. We would have an interminable number of elections. We have already elections for the House of Commons, elections for the local legislature, civic and municipal elections, and I think these are quite enough without having the Senate elected. You would have some 44 or 45 senators elected every 5 or 6 years, but that would not include all the elections, because there would be quite a number of by-elections. Since the present government came into power ten years ago Sir Wilfrid Laurier has had the appointment of from 55 to 60 senators—55 at all events, there may have been a few more. 5 to 6 every year; 47 of these were to replace Conservatives, and eight to replace Liberals. This shows that we have from 5 to 6 by-elections every year, which would be a nuisance. I cannot, therefore, consent to the idea that if we were elected it would be a better system than we have at the present time. I cannot see but that the Prime Minister with his cabinet, they being advised by the members and senators from the locality in which the senator is to be appointed, can make just as good selections as under any system of direct election. Then we have to take into consideration the experience and the wisdom of the fathers of confederation when they adopted this system. They certainly thought they were adopting the system best calculated to meet the needs of the country, and I think it would be wise on our part to follow what they have done. and keep it in existence. We are not very much troubled with partyism in the Senate. We see it spring up occasionally, but not to a very great extent. Any hon. gentleman who has sat in this Chamber for any length of time and has noticed the Bills coming before the House and observed the analyses and criticism to which each measure is subjected, will have seen that senators vote in nearly every instance without regard to what might be called a strict party line. I do not know how it was before my time, but I believe it was much the same as it is at present. The usefulness of the Senate is evinced very strongly in the amendments made to Bills coming before the House. Scarcely a Bill comes from the House of Commons but what is scrutinized very carefully by the Senate and a great many important amendments are made. Take for instance the case of the Railway Bill we had here two years ago. We made from 90 to 100 amendments to that Bill, and when it went back to the House of Commons they adopted from 70 to 80 of that number. I think I am within the mark, and I believe that senators sitting about me will agree that that Bill was very much improved indeed by the amendments which the Senate made to it. Some of the speakers on this subject, particularly the hon. gentleman from Marshfield (Hon. Mr. Ferguson) took a great deal of credit to the Senate—and I do not say that he was not right in doing so—for throwing out several important Bills. One Bill he mentioned in particular, the Franchise Bill of Prince Edward Island. When we entered into confederation the laws of Canada were made applicable to our island. Among them was the Franchise Act, and as the hon. senator said, we had at that time an elective legislative council. We had £100 qualification for electors in connection with elections to the legislative council, and it was during the reign of the Mackenzie government that we were applying this Bill to our island, and they adopted this £100 qualification as the qualification for voters in Prince Edward Island in the election of members of the House of Commons. In the Senate at that time there was a representative from Queen's county, Prince Edward Island. He moved that the Bill be rejected. It would have been quite easy for that senator—he was a man who understood the condition of Prince Edward Island very well—to have moved an amendment giving us universal suffrage in Prince Edward Island as we have it for our local election, and I think if he had done so it would have been adopted both by the Senate and by the cabinet, but in place of that he moved that the Bill be thrown out. This senator made a great ado about disfranchising the young men and the poor men of Prince Edward Island. That was a little bit of partyism, the like of which I have rarely seen exhibited here since. It was not the intention of the government of that day to disfranchise the young men, or the poor men of Prince Edward Island.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Senator Haythorne, a Liberal, took the same position.

Hon. Mr. ROBERSON—I am surprised he did not read the Bill a little better. Party capital was going to be made out of this in Prince Edward Island, and was made out of it. I had to meet it, and the hon. Secretary of State, who was in this House at the time, can put me right if I am wrong. At the foot of the Bill was a clause to the effect, namely, that the franchise provided in the Bill by the Dominion government was only to be in existence until such time as the local government would provide a franchise for the people of Prince Edward Island. The local government was in session at the time, and in 48 hours could have adopted a franchise suitable to Prince Edward Island but they neglected to do so. Then, of course, the Bill was thrown out here and we went back to universal suffrage.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—The hon. gentleman is in error in this respect; the alternative in the Bill was, not that the local legislature should furnish another franchise, but that they should provide a registration of voters.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON—And a franchise. Probably the hon. Secretary of State, if he remembers anything of it, will put me right. The proviso at the bottom of the Bill was that this qualification should only be in existence until such time as the local government would provide a franchise and a list of voters to prepare for the Dominion election. The hon. senator, perhaps, did not remember this at the time he was speaking, but he left that portion of it out; therefore,

I do not think there is so much credit to be given to the Senate for throwing out that Bill as the hon. senator claimed. Another Bill thrown out by the Senate was the Yukon Railway Bill. I think it was a mistake on the part of the Senate to defeat that Bill.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON—That Bill was based largely on the Canadian Pacific Railway scheme. Alternate sections of land were to be given as a subsidy in the country through which the road was to pass, yet we hear senators even to-day saying the government were giving away a province to that railway. The land was a terra incognita; it was mostly rock. There might have been minerals, but the company that took the chances of building a railway through that country took very great risks, and I do not believe you could get any company—you certainly could not get the same company—to enter into such a contract to-day. That portion of the country is a dead letter, but if a railway had been built through it the land would have been opened up and mining, lumbering and other industries developed up.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Can my hon. friend tell us why the government did not re introduce that Bill if it was so good a measure?

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON—Simply because they gave away the whole business to the United States, and United States capitalists built a railway in there in opposition to this Canadian route. That, of course, turned the tide of trade away from the Dominion to the bordering states on the Pacific. I do not know whether it is true or not, but it was reported at that time, and has since been intimated, that United States lobbyists were around the Senate at that time, and probably the fate of the Bill was the result of lobbying. I do not say it was; I do not know whether it is true or not, but if that is the case it is the biggest slur ever cast on the Senate.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman is misrepresenting, unintentionally no doubt, the whole Bill and the country through which the road was to pass.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON—I do not understand the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have no doubt the hon. gentleman is unintentionally misrepresenting the object and character of the Bill and the character of the country through which the road was to pass as well as the subsidies which were to be given in aid of the enterprise.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON—I am not misrepresenting it at all. Every alternate section was to be given on the way. You did the same thing with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and have since been claiming that you made the lands of the Northwest valuable by building the Canadian Pacific Railway through them. The same results would have followed had the Yukon Railway Bill not been defeated.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Bill did not propose to give one single acre of land to the company in the part of the country through which the line was to run.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON—The question is asked, why did they reject the Bill ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We will tell you that by and by.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON—I do not know; perhaps it was all right for the Senate to throw out the Bill. At the same time there are very grave doubts about it. I think the Senate is deserving of credit for having thrown out other Bills. No doubt questions will come up in this Senate which we will probably throw out after serious consideration. I notice at the present time that some of our newspaper friends forecast that in the near future the Senate will throw out some Bills. I should like to know how they get that information ? I think it is a piece of impertinence for any journalist to pass judgment in this regard. Those people who are anxious that the Senate should be abolished I think should be sufficiently satisfied with the changes that are taking place in this chamber at the present time. The figures I pointed out a few minutes ago show that the Senate is changing fast enough to please any body or any section of men. New elements are coming in every day and old men who gave this Senate a character are passing away very fast, to our great regret. Some of the older men that are here, and who gave this Senate as I say, a character, established it in this country, made it a portion of the parliamentary history of the country, were the glory of this Senate, and it is regrettable to see them passing away as fast as they are. But there is one little objection that might perhaps come up in reference to this point, and it is this; that under the late Conservative regime the Liberal members were pretty nearly wiped out. I think there were only ten or eleven left. At the present time our Conservative friends are passing away and that makes the balance of power probably too weak on their side. I admit that. That is one argument which might be advanced in reference to the elective system. It would maintain the balance of power in the Senate; at the same time I do not think there is any particular harm going to result from any party dwindling down to a small number. As long as there are a dozen or two dozen of good representatives on either side they can put forward the ideas the opposition represent, as strongly probably as if there were three dozen. Our friends are now 33. They could afford to be reduced to half that number, and I believe their views would be just as forcibly advanced in this Senate as it is at the present time. They could criticise measures, oppose measures and agree with measures just as strongly as an opposition of fifteen or twenty as they do at the present time. Under those conditions, not wishing to weary the House, I think it would be wisdom on our part to retain the Senate just as it is at the present time; to hold to our present mode of appointment to the Senate, to give credit to the fathers of confederation who formed the constitution of the Senate, who granted it its powers, and in my opinion I do not believe we can amend it in any regard. I think, therefore, that we should pay no attention whatever to the flippant and ungenerous remarks, such as we see in a newspaper published in Toronto the other day, made by men who know little or nothing of the character of the Senate. I am pleased to see that another paper, which I consider far ahead of the Toronto 'News', namely the Montreal 'Gazette', advises the House of Commons to stop talking and do their work, or else go home and let the Senate do the work, as they do it better than the House of Commons. Under these circumstances, my idea is to pay no attention to the flippant remarks made by members of the House of Commons and by some newspapers whose editors know very little about what they are discussing.

An important point which appears to have been overlooked in this debate is the importance and value of the example of the Senate, not merely upon the parliamentary life and practice of Canada, but upon Canadian society at large.

Any one who follows the procedure in this House must admit, and many who do not so follow it admit, that as compared with any other legislative body on the continent of America, the Senate is a very model of parliamentary decency and order. And one of the proudest boasts a Canadian can make to-day is that this country, governed as it is as nearly as may be after the unequalled British model—a form of government which combines the maximum of personal liberty with the maximum of law, order and personal safety—stands on this continent as the champion of well ordered liberty as opposed to all ill-considered license which but too often acts as a cloak for excess and lawlessness.

This honourable House is the acknowledged custodian and authoritative exponent of the ancient, distinctly dignified, and wisely devised forms and stately ceremonials of British parliamentary practice, the scrupulous preservation of which, there can be no doubt, has had a valuable practical influence upon the satisfactory development of the parliamentary system of government in Canada. From its rigid and even jealous adhesion to established precedent, and its scrupulously strict observance of the more stately forms of procedure, the Senate of Canada stands as a model of sound parliamentary practice, and it has exercised, and still exercises an important and benign influence upon the whole parliamentary body in this Dominion.

This House, by reason of its component parts, is naturally a staid and cautious body. It stands unflinchingly for what has been proved by the unerring test of time to be wholesome and beneficial, as against any rash and hasty theories which are bound to be evolved in a young, vigorous and enterprising community such as ours.

And this honourable House has, who can doubt it, a mellowing elevating influence, not only upon the body politic, but upon Canadian society in all of its strata and miscellaneous ramifications.

In these days of advancement and unrest, any human agency that has a restraining influence upon the prevailing iconoclastic tendency of the age, that acts as a brake upon the rapidly developing tendency of the public mind under proper restraint, that inculcates respect for authority and honourable and useful precedent, that demands a high standard of honour in public as in private life, requires no justification of its existence.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS moved that the debate be adjourned till to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I think this is going to be a long drawn out discussion, and I would suggest that it be proceeded with to-night. It will degenerate into a miserable debate if we do not proceed with it in a more rapid way.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In an important debate of this character, we have always consulted the wishes of the hon. gentlemen who desire to speak. We have only one important measure on the order paper for to-morrow, and I fancy we can finish this debate in good time.

The motion was agreed to.

GRAIN INSPECTION ACT, AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (207) an Act to amend the Grain Inspection Act.

The Bill was read a first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Bill be read a second time to-morrow.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is this Bill dealing with standards ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. They have the notion that the standard has been too high, to the detriment of the people in the Northwest.

The SPEAKER—I have received a petition from the Winnipeg Grain and Produce Exchange with reference to this Bill, which I will lay on the table.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is it for or against the measure ?

The SPEAKER—I do not know.

The Senate adjourned till three o'clock to-morrow.

SENATE.

OTTAWA, Wednesday, June 27, 1906.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

THE PETITION OF J. T. PATERSON.

REJECTED.

The petition from James Thomson Paterson, of the city of New York, praying to be paid for his services as an expert witness before a special committee of the Senate appointed to investigate into the affairs of the Mutual Reserve Fund Life Assurance Company of New York in Canada, was read.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that this is a petition praying for public money, which, under the constitution of parliament, cannot be received. If a reference be made to Bourinot and May, it will be found that that principle is laid down very clearly. Hence the petition is out of order.

The SPEAKER—This petition cannot be received, as the granting of the prayer of the petition would involve the expenditure of public money.

Bill (159) An Act to incorporate the Cobalt Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. McHugh.)

Bill (57) An Act respecting the Montreal, Ottawa and Georgian Bay Canal Company.—(Hon. Mr. Edwards.)

TEMAGAMI, TIMISKAMING AND COBALT RAILWAY COMPANY BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN, from the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, reported Bill (JJ) An Act to incorporate the Temagami, Temiskaming and Cobalt Railway Company, with amendments.

Hon. Mr. POWER moved concurrence in the amendments. He said: There is really only one amendment. Clause 9 of the Bill as it was submitted to the committee set forth the various powers which the company could exercise, and the committee struck out that clause, and substituted the two clauses which the committee have been in the habit of inserting in Bills of this kind. They may be called standard clauses, and the amendment is simply to substitute the two clauses for the one clause, which appears in the Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It seems to me, from what I heard of the amendments as read by the clerk, that they are of some importance, and therefore should stand until to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I would appeal to the hon. gentleman not to insist on his right. There was no difference of opinion in the committee. These are the standard clauses. This is a Bill originating in the Senate. It is in the standard and orthodox form, and if we refuse to allow it to go through to-day the probabilities are that it will not become law this session. The Hon. Mr. McHugh, who is in charge of the Bill, is not present. I simply take charge of the measure in his absence. It is a Bill for a railway which is to go through the Temiskaming and Cobalt districts. About one-half of the line is in the province of Ontario and the other half in the province of Quebec. It is an important undertaking, and it is really very desirable that the Bill should become law this session. I trust, therefore, the hon. gentleman will not insist on his right.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—With that explanation I withdraw my objection.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a third time under suspension of rule 70.

BURK'S FALLS AND FRENCH RIVER RAILWAY COMPANY BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière) from the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, reported Bill (158) An Act to incorporate the Burk's Falls and French River Railway Company, with amendments. He said: One amendment is to add clause 14 making the railway subject to any laws of Ontario now existing or hereafter to be enacted, and the other amendment is to add clause 15 declaring this railway to be a work for the general advantage of Canada.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I suppose the work is entirely within the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière)—It is.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—Is it to the general advantage of Canada because it connects two railways?

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière)—Yes, it connects the Grand Trunk Pacific and the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—That makes it a work for the general advantage of Canada, and, therefore, lawfully a Dominion work under the constitution of Canada.

The amendments were agreed to, and the Bill was then read a third time and passed.

Bill (LL) An Act for the relief of Nettie M. Bulmer.—(Hon. Mr. Frost.)

THE NORTH ATLANTIC TRADING COMPANY.

LORD STRATHCONA'S CORRESPONDENCE.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Before the orders of the day are called, I wish to draw the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to what purport to be copies of letters received by the government from Lord Strathcona, and which are published in the evening papers of yesterday and the morning papers of to-day. I will read some extracts from the report of the Montreal 'Star' of last evening, which I find to be as copious as any of the others:

On April 28th Lord Strathcona wrote that he had noticed in the Toronto 'Globe' of April 5 that it was mentioned that he had opened the negotiations which led to the existing arrangement with the North Atlantic Trading Company. He disclaimed having originated or carried through the negotiations. He said that the suggestions put forward by Mr. Preston never commended themselves to his better judgment.

He adds: 'But it was urged upon me so strongly that a trial might be given to the scheme, and it was received with so much favour by the Department of the Interior, that I did not feel justified in the circumstances in withholding such assistance as I could properly give to carry into effect the declared policy of the government.' Further on he says: 'I had no connection at all with the negotiations in connection with the first interchange of letters, the Department of the Interior having placed itself in direct communication with the company. While personally I could not approve of the proposed arrangements, I felt it incumbent on me, under the circumstances, to carry out the policy of the government, but at the same time I wish most distinctly to disclaim the direct responsibility attributed to me in the matter.'

On May 12 Lord Strathcona wrote Sir Wilfrid Laurier another letter, in which he said: 'My principal reason for not favouring a hard and fast contract with any body of individuals like the North Atlantic Trading Company was the fear that it might launch us in difficulties with some of the governments concerned. There was also the consideration that they would obtain the advantage, without any great expense of effort themselves, of the movement which was bound shortly to take place, as the result of our continuous educational work with the various agencies on the continent. My idea was that the agents who had been working on our behalf should themselves participate in the bonuses; and that we should endeavour also to secure the co-operation of the large continental steamship companies, which it would not have been difficult to arrange, judging from my interviews with the North German Lloyd directors, and Mr. Ballin of the Hamburg-American line—gentlemen of great prominence on the continent—as reported in my letters before referred to. Of course it would have been possible to gradually lessen the bonus payments, as the emigration increased the increase being the natural consequences of the work that was being done, and of the the successful settlement of the people who were going out from year to year.'

Lord Strathcona's letter concluded as follows: 'I am sure you will understand, in writing this letter, that I only wish to make my own position clear, and that I have no desire whatever to reflect in any way either upon the Department of the Interior or its officers in connection with the arrangements made between the government and the company.

Then he goes on to deal with the statement of Mr. Preston, which I would consider it unnecessary to mention in this connection were it not for the concluding observation which I shall read:

On May 19, 1906, Lord Stratcona sent a long cable to the premier in which he said: 'Preston, in his evidence as reported in the press, stated having said I admitted that certain papers stolen from his office are in possession of Griffith. I made no such admission. I was informed certain letters were in Griffith's personal possession, not with office papers, and Griffith absolutely denied they were stolen from Preston's office, which statement rests so far as I know, on Preston's assertion.' The cable goes on to say that Mr. Preston's evidence as to what occurred at Hamburg in 1898 does not correctly represent what took place, and goes on to say: 'Count Hatzfeldt did mention it to Lord Salisbury and Mr. Chamberlain and Mr. Chamberlain communicated conversation to me. I explained the nature of my visit to the continent, which had more to do with general questions and with the steamship companies than with German emigration in particular. My explanation was regarded as entirely satisfactory.

'Preston's reported statement that I was aware of negotiations with North Atlantic Trading Company from beginning to end is only partly accurate. I knew of them, it is true as reported to me, but I took no active part in the negotiations which were conducted under the direct auspices of the Department of the Interior.

In directing the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to these extracts from letters which purport to have been received by the government, I should like to inquire of him whether these documents were received before the 13th June of this year, when my hon. friend and his colleague the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce attributed a very large responsibility to Lord Strathcona in connection with this North Atlantic Trading Company contract. My object is to ascertain whether the government were at that time in possession of these letters, and cablegrams, and, if they were, I think it is due to the House and to the hon. gentlemen themselves to explain why they attributed so large a share of responsibility to Lord Strathcona as they did on the 13th inst. in this House.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think I am called upon to make any comment on the subject. Any reference I made to Lord Strathcona was simply reading one of his letters. I do not propose to be drawn into any discussion on the subject of the unfortunate and unhappy differences that have prevailed in the London office. The letter that was read from Lord Strathcona was, I think, in 1899 when the negotiations were first being brought to a head, in which the statement occurs that the information should be confidential. I do not think it seemly or right that hon. gentlemen should be drawn into a discussion on the points in dispute that have arisen in connection with this inquiry in another place. Certainly I do not desire to be. I have a very strong regard for Lord Strathcona, and I am quite sure he would not do anything that was not, from his standpoint at all events, consistent with the highest honour and the very best principles that would guide and direct any gentleman. He always had the interests of Canada foremost in his mind. I have no doubt he was anxious and desirous to support, as far as he could, any policy in the way of immigration that was proposed ; but I do not think it would be fair to say that because Lord Strathcona may have tacitly allowed it to proceed in the office that it could be charged that he was a party to it.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I dare say if my hon. friend looks at the revised copy of the debates of this House, he will be borne out in his statements that he did not refer to Lord Strathcona except in that way.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I read a letter or telegram sent in 1899 ; the letter speaks for itself.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—My hon friend referred frequently through his address to Lord Strathcona, and I notice that in the revised issue of the Debates this reference is converted into a reference to some officers in London. However it is not so much my hon. friend that I have to deal with as the Minister of Trade and Commerce. I read a telegram published in the Montreal 'Star,' from 'Windermere,' in which he appeared to be authorized by Lord Strathcona to say precisely what I have now read to the House, which he has communicated direct to the government, and the Minister of Trade and Commerce repudiated that statement by saying that it was absolutely worthless, although it appears that at the very time when he made that repudiation the government were in possession of full and ample documents completely substantiating what 'Windermere' had cabled.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In justice to the Minister of Trade and Commerce I think my hon. friend's statement is rather too strong.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—Not at all.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was a letter to Sir Wilfrid Laurier. All the letters to Sir Wilfrid Laurier do not come to council. I did not know of it until a short time before it was sent to committee. Necessarily the correspondence between the Premier and persons outside are not state documents that fairly and properly come before council on all occasions.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Can my hon. friend say in that connection what will be the attitude of the government in reference to retaining Preston in their employ now that his statement, made under oath, has been most distinctly contradicted by Lord Strathcona, and particularly in view of the fact that so many representations have been made to the government from important sources, labour unions and other equally important sources, demanding the dismissal of Preston ? I can scarcely appreciate how the government can retain Mr. Preston any longer in view of those facts.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am quite unable to foreshadow the policy of the government, and I do not usually do so until the government has come to some decision. I do not in advance suggest what will be done.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Can the hon. gentleman say if it is under consideration ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I cannot say that.

COURT OF APPEAL FOR MANITOBA BILL.

THIRD READING.

The order of the day being called :

Third reading Bill (195) An Act respecting the Court of Appeal for Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—When this Bill was up for consideration in Committee of the Whole, I was asked to give some information in reference to the passage of the Bill by the Manitoba legislature creating a Court of Appeal. After some difficulty I found a copy of the Act in the Department of Justice, and I extracted from it a short memorandum which perhaps will explain the circumstances sufficiently. The Court of Appeal for Manitoba was created by a statute passed in March last, but will only come into force on proclamation by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. It is to consist of the chief justice and three other judges, and each of the said judges shall have all the jurisdiction, both civil and criminal, possessed by any judge of the Court of King's Bench under any statute of Canada or the provinces. So soon as the chief justice of the Court of King's Bench ceases to hold office the chief justice of the Court of Appeal shall be styled the chief justice of Manitoba. He will take precedence after the present chief justice of the Court of King's Bench has retired. The chief justice of the Court of Appeal and the other judges of that court will also be ex-officio judges of the Court of King's Bench, and may, in addition to their duties as justices of the Court of Appeal, preside over any trials in civil or criminal cases in the Court of King's Bench to be tried before a judge with a jury, and over any trials at bar and over the trial of any election petition.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Have they exclusive jurisdiction in regard to election petitions ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I cannot say they have, it is open to doubt. They are given special jurisdiction over election petitions. They seem to be on the same plane with the judges of the King's Bench, because they have jurisdiction, both civil and criminal, possessed by any judge of the Court of King's Bench.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—What is the occasion for this special court in Manitoba ? In the other provinces there is no special Court of Appeal.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Manitoba is a growing province, and a very ambitious one, as my hon. friend probably knows. The amount of business done there is increasing very rapidly. They have the right under the constitution to create a court of the kind, and if they do so we cannot ignore it altogether. The simpler way is to recognize it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In connection with what my hon. friend has stated about the jurisdiction in the controverted elections, may I ask was it at the instance of the Manitoba government that clause 3 of the present Bill was introduced ? That is the clause which makes provision for the transference of controverted elections from the Court of King's Bench to the Court of Appeal.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No I do not think so. I do not think there is any correspondence. I think the Department of Justice may have inferred that it was intended to give exclusive jurisdiction to the Court of Appeal. I would not care to say definitely, having only read the statute hastily.

The motion was agreed to.

CONSTITUTION OF THE SENATE.

DEBATE RESUMED.

The order of the day being called :

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of the Hon. Mr. David : That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General ; praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before the Senate, copies of all petitions, resolutions or documents concerning the abolition or reorganization of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—In the few observations which I propose to make upon the resolution offered by the hon. member from Mille Isles (Hon. Mr. David), I will endeavour, as far as possible, to be impersonal, and to follow the excellent example which that hon. gentleman set when he introduced the subject. Of course it is not easy, perhaps, to be as impersonal as he was, because there have been several speeches made during the discussion, and it may be necessary to refer to some of them. The hon. gentleman from Marshfield (Hon. Mr. Ferguson), in his opening observations, referred to the fact that on a previous occasion I had made some remarks upon the Senate, and he observed that I had the credit of being in favour of the abolition of this body ; that I was here to speak for myself, however, and could say whether that impression was well founded or not. In the observations which I made during the debate on the address at the opening of the session, I referred to the circumstance that the hon. leader of the opposition had constantly complained, since I have been here, that the Senate was not properly treated in the presentation of public matters by the government ; that many important matters were kept back until the closing days of the session, when they were hurried through. The rejoinder of the hon. Secretary of State, was that that had been the former practice as well as the present one ; and I argued from that and from other similar causes that it was quite possible that the Senate itself was not the necessity to the public which it imagined itself to be. Now, I do not know what impression the Senate has received during the addresses which have been delivered, or what the opinion of the country may be as to the utility of the Senate, but no doubt it will sufficiently develop during the recess when the public have had time to consider all the various points which have been put forward in the course of the debate. I feel, however, that whatever doubt may have existed in my own mind still remains. I have not been cured of any doubt which I may have had on that point, because it has not been clearly shown, it seems to me, that there is an absolute necessity for the Senate; and while I would not say that it has been shown that there is no necessity for the Senate, I still feel that the doubt remains. My hon. friend himself pointed out that the government—which is perhaps true—cannot be responsible to both branches of the legislature. Therefore, there must be a limit to the powers of the Senate, and the utility of the Senate must be reduced correspondingly. It seems to me that it is a debatable question whether in a country which has responsible government there should be two branches of parliament at all. The government of the country is responsible to the people through the House which is elected by the people; and how it is possible for any other House to override the will of that House, or how it is possible for any other body to come in and constantly perform useful independent work in a parliament so constituted, is certainly a doubtful question. The House which is not responsible must in the end be irremediably weak, and must constantly give way. That seems to be a fact which cannot be controverted, and that view was also taken, though not prominently put forward by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce. I shall probably refer to his attitude on that point later on. But some person discussing the whole matter might raise the question whether responsible government really exists in this country at all in the way in which we formerly understood it. There is no doubt that the government is responsible to parliament, and parliament is responsible to the people; but in the observations which I have made over quite a number of years I have found that the responsibility of the government is really to the country—that the parliament of the country is ceasing to hold the government responsible to them, and that the responsibility is going directly to the people themselves. In other words, I cannot remember,—although my memory may fail me in that—any case since confederation when there was an adverse vote in the House to dismiss the government. Some hon. gentlemen may remember some such instance, but I do not. Some hon. gentleman reminds me that in 1873 there would have been if the government had not resigned.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman is quite correct so far as 1873 is concerned.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—But it was the vote of want of confidence which led to the resignation of the government.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There was no vote.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There was a resolution, but it was not pressed to a vote.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—In the local legislatures now, a defeat of the government by a vote in the House is a very rare thing. I was a member of the local legislature of New Brunswick in 1883 when the government was dismissed by a vote, but it was a legislature fresh from the people, and there was no debate whatever. The leader of the opposition simply moved that the government had not the confidence of the House or of the country in view of the result of the election, and the government was defeated on that. While I do not say in all that period there has been no adverse vote, yet I say it has fallen into disuse, and the American system of which hon. gentlemen are so fearful is coming into use in this country; the people themselves decide the question of who shall govern. I merely state this as being along the lines of the observations I made with regard to one House and the responsibility of the government. But there is no doubt whatever that the idea of two Chambers is strong in the general mind of the people. That it is strong in this House is quite evident. I think every hon. gentleman who spoke professed a great, and almost undying faith in the necessity of two branches of parliament. There are few countries, I am free to admit, in which there are not two Houses. The kingdom of Greece, I believe, one of the latest founded kingdoms of Europe, has no second Chamber—and Norway——

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Bulgaria. Norway is not yet formed.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—Bulgaria is not an absolutely independent country. In Norway the elected legislature is divided into two branches; as I understand their system, when it is elected, and they agree among themselves which shall be the upper and which the lower House. At any rate some principle like that exists in Norway. The idea of having two branches of parliament has its origin largely in the idea that there are two distinct sets of people to be looked after, and that one division of the country in some way or other,—either the peers, noblemen, land-owners, or some particular body of the people—has to be cared for by a particular branch of parliament. The English House of Lords is probably one of the oldest organizations in the world, but there was a time in English history, probably, when there was no House but the House of Lords. The King called in the great nobles, as the hon. gentleman from Shediac (Hon. Mr. Poirier) mentioned the other day, the King called his earls; he was first among his equals, and called them together for a great enterprise, and that was, no doubt, the origin of the first parliamentary assemblies in England if you choose to call them parliamentary; but, in time, when the cities became large and wealthy, the King called in representatives from the people as well, so that he might levy the taxes which were necessary, as well as to get from the lords and earls the men to follow in his battles. In time the representative body over-shadowed the other. The House of Lords, however, continued to meet first with the representatives of the towns and cities, but finally continued its existence by itself, and it existed in some form down to the time of Cromwell. When England became a republic, in the time of Cromwell, the House of Lords for quite a while disappeared. There was but one House until Cromwell, finding the lower House too strong for him, composed a House of Peers of his own, which was the laughing stock of the old English peerage, so that the House of Lords, as it exists to-day, and the peers as they exist to-day, are very largely the out-growth or have come in since, the Cromwellian period. Several hon. gentlemen who have spoken, indeed almost every hon. gentleman who has made observations on this question in the House, made a reference to the Senate of the United States, and there seems to be a terrible fear of that body. My hon. friend from Marshfield, one of the shrewdest men in the House, appeared to be willing to do the Senate of the United States a certain amount of justice, but my hon. friend from Smith's Falls was terribly in earnest in his dislike of that body. He saw in it a great cause for worry. Now it is well to remember that in the United States you have the development of the English system as it existed at the time the constitution of the national union was adopted. The United States system was founded upon somewhat different lines from the way in which we have developed, but nevertheless it is a national development, and it is a national institution. There was a time in England when there was no cabinet; and there is not a cabinet in the United States to-day in the sense in which we understand the cabinet, and the Senate of the United States is founded upon the old idea that there should be a body to assist the King and assist the ruler of the country, and to divide with him, in part at least, the power which he possessed. Therefore, the Senate of the United States has the power of confirming appointments which are made by the President. No appointment can be made by the President without the consent of the Senate of the United States. It is therefore an executive body. The hon. gentleman from Marshfield objected strongly to the secret sessions of the Senate of the United States. I can readily understand why there are secret sessions of the Senate when they are dealing with certain matters. The Privy Council of Canada hold secret session, and when any hon. gentlemen seeks to obtain information from the Secretary of State when he is not prepared to give it, he can easily understand that secrecy extends to the deliberations of that body. With regard to the making of treaties, I think it is a good plan for the Senate to make them. The government is formed for the benefit of the people of the United States, and the question is: does it discharge its duties well for the people it governs? I think the right of making treaties should be in the open control of a body like the Senate rather than it should be in the secret control of an irresponsible body, of the fascinations of a King or of a back stairs influence to which in some lands some time ago treaty making was subject; influences that very often disregarded entirely the public, and are not of a character which should be admitted in the making of arrangements between peoples. I know that in this country there has always been a great deal of fault finding with treaties which the mother country made with the United States as far as they affect us. We have adopted a chronic state of grumbling with regard to the treaties. We always think we are badly treated, and that the United States has got the better of the bargain, but gentlemen who follow the discussions on the other side of the line will discover as well that, on many occasions, they have viewed the matter from a different standpoint altogether, and they are by no means sure that the treaty that has been made with Great Britain, as far as Canadian interests are concerned, has been in the best interests of the United States. I refer to all this because there was an argument in these objections to the United States Senate as against the introduction of an elective system in the Senate of Canade. The senatorial system in the United States is condemned or objected to, or it is argued against, inasmuch as some gentlemen here have brought forward or suggested or favoured the idea of electing this Senate in the same way. My hon. friend from Smith's Falls had something to say, perhaps in an indirect way, about the trusts which found their way into the Senate of the United States. I do not feel called upon to discuss that very much. My hon. friend thought it was well to argue upon it, but if I were a United States critic discussing the Canadian system, I would take up the discussion which occurred in the Senate and in the committee of the Senate, as far as that could be got at, when we were passing the new rules. Of course we know differently, but it would be a fair inference from much of the discussion, that there are strong reasons why the members of the Senate of Canada should be bound by rules which prevent them advancing their own personal interest, and if I went further I would make a strong point of the fact that the chairmanship of the Banking and Commerce Committee of this Chamber is in the hands of a leading banker, the president of the Bank of Montreal. He is a leading member of the Senate, and while I do not wish to convey any wrong impression, I suggest that an unfriendly observer might say that we are open to the same criticism as the Senate of the United States. I am doing nothing more than making the observation on the point. Mr. James Hill, who made a speech in this city the other day upon the progress which he had observed in the neighbouring republic during the time he lived there, referred to the fact that twelve or thirteen states had grown up in the United States. There is no doubt whatever, that however great the Senate of the United States may have been in its earlier days, when some of the most eminent men in the nation were in it, there has been a deterioration in some of those newer states, because the Senators chosen from these states would naturally be men interested in the public works and undertakings of the state, and would come to the front on account of their ability to carry on public works rather than their purely intellectual power. That is a thing which will settle itself in time. I assume these difficulties which have arisen will disappear, and that the senators of these states will restore the old prestige in the Senate, and that they will be just as good men in their way, if they are not as good now, as the men who represent the New England, middle and older states. Then again, with regard to the assumption of power by the Senate, to which my hon. friend referred, it must always be remembered that under the United States system of government there is a check by the legal power; that the Supreme Court of the United States has a power to decide whether the Senate or whether any of the legislative bodies—whether the law-making body—improperly exercises its power, and that legal power decides upon the question whether the United States Congress has exceeded its authority or not. So that if there was any illegal exercise of power in that country there is a mode of settling it which is peculiar to the country itself, and which is the best system, after all, of deciding these matters.

My hon. friend quoted Mr. Bryce. He quoted the unfavourable things which Mr. Bryce said of the United States Senate, but Mr. Bryce, in his 'American Commonwealth,' vol. I., page 114, one of the most eminent of modern Englishmen, also said:—

> The Senate has succeeded in making itself eminent and respected. It has drawn the best talent of the nation, so far as that talent flows to politics, into its body; has established an intellectual supremacy, has furnished a vantage ground from which men of ability may speak with authority to their fellow-citizens.

There is no doubt whatever that the United States Senate is one of the strongest legislative bodies in the world; but the democratic spirit is making such progress in the neighbouring republic that thirty-one states have united in an application to Congress to allow senators to be elected by the popular vote. Thirty-one states are more than the requisite two-thirds required to secure a vote upon a constitutional amendment to that effect. So that, notwithstanding the fact that the Senate is elected by the state legislatures there is still a strong tendency towards securing their election by popular vote. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce admitted that there was a necessity for reform in the Canadian Senate. Indeed, in discussing the question, his speech took rather the direction of a warning. He suggested to us that we had better set our house in order; that there was something coming which would make it necessary for us to take steps of some kind, and he proposed a scheme of reform for the Senate to which I shall make a short reference. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce suggested a change in the composition of the Senate. He suggested that the number of members should be reduced, but that is not important, and he suggested that a certain number of them should be elected by the local legislatures and a certain number appointed by the government. He made a very strong point in favour of minority representation. As regards minority representation, I feel bound to say that I do not look with any favour upon it at all. The hon. member from Marshfield took it up and was very desirous that such a system should prevail. The question of minority representation has long been before the people of England. Mr. Hare, a great many years ago, developed a system on paper of minority representation; then a Mr. Marshall, I think, followed it up by some practical suggestions, by which if three vacancies were to be filled, two could be elected by the majority and one by the minority. And if I remember right the parliament of France, some years ago, adopted a system by which representatives were elected over a large area of country, and by a judicious system of voting, some minority representatives could be chosen; but that system is no longer in practice in France. If I remember right, in Ontario at one time, in the city of Toronto, there was a system of electing a minority representative. The opposition had the right, or privilege, or power, if they choose to exercise it, to elect one, but that system seems to have fallen into disuse, because it was ineffective and did not secure to the minority what was desired. My hon. friend beside me (Hon. Mr. Legris) also favoured representation of minorities, but it seems to me it is not an important thing. If the people send to parliament a certain number of men, no matter how large or how small the number of representatives of the minority is their influence would be just as great as if they formed a larger proportion of the representatives. The only advantage I can see in the minority being strong is, that the government has less difficulty in carrying out the practical work of politics in restraining its followers. It forms a check, but it is not of sufficient importance or value to introduce it here. Then the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce proposed that a certain number of senators should be chosen from privy councillors, judges, lieutenant governors and other persons. That also was the idea of John Stuart Mill. It is not original, but the application of it is to the conditions here. Mr. Mill made the suggestion, looking at the gradual decline of influence of the House of Lords in England, and favouring a second Chamber to a certain extent, that there might be a Chamber formed on some of these lines ; he proposed to take in the great admirals, generals and judges, and he would allow the lords to be represented by one in every ten of their number, and he proposed to form a council in that way which might make a second Chamber in place of the House of Lords. But that has never been attempted anywhere. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce suggested also, in the course of his observations, that the legislative initiative in regard to private Bills and some other matters might be left to the Senate. That would be a good arrangement if it could be carried out, but it is impossible to suppose that the House of Commons would yield to the Senate any right which it has now. The right to initiate legislation, the right to do as it chooses with regard to legislation would be held by the Commons, and I can conceive of no arrangement of that kind which the House of Commons would make. The hon. member from Richmond, in the course of his observations, said that this very question had been discussed before, and it was entirely out of the line of probability that it could be adopted. I observe that in the confederation of Switzerland there is an arrangement which might be carried out, I will not say in the parliament of Canada as at present constituted, but it is worth glancing at for a moment. In Switzerland there are two Houses. The people generally have representation in the Lower House and have two members each in the Upper House. Each canton provides its own mode of election. Some representatives are chosen by the Canton legislatures and some by a popular vote. As soon as the parliament assembles, a division of legislative powers is made between them by the federal council, so that one does not overlap the other, but it must be remembered also in Switzerland the referendum prevails, and when parliament has agreed upon any extraordinary or out of the way question it is left for the consideration of the people. In Germany there is an Upper House in which the monarchical states appoint their members and the free cities elect theirs, but, as I understand the Germanic system, that House only lasts for one year. Each session there is a new Upper House. It has certain specified and defined powers, and is not exactly like the Senate of United States, the House of Lords or the Senate of Canada. In France each department elects a senator by an electoral college composed of the deputies, the members of the general council of the arrondissement and delegates chosen by the municipal councils of the communis or towns in proportion to population. There are three hundred senators in France, chosen for nine years in three divisions. There was a life system of senators in France, but it has almost disappeared ; the number has been reduced by death, and the Senate is now elected by a representative body. The hon. senator from Richmond, in the course of his remarks, while he was very strongly of the opinion that a nominated House had failed, was very much against fancy franchises and proposed direct election by the people. With regard to the French Senate, I shall quote an observation made by M. d'Estournelles de Constant, a French politican, to Mr. Depew :

> Believing the American method the only one by which a Conservative upper house could be had, they adopted the American scheme ; this worked admirably, and in his judgment the existence of the Republic had been due to the Senate and the independence it had from the method of its election.

But as I have just mentioned, the senators in France are elected by one remove from the popular vote. I give the hon. member from Marshfield credit for having made a careful and pains-taking survey and consideration of the whole question. He went over the legislative action of the Senate and examined as to whether it had failed in its duties or had faithfully performed them, and he came to the conclusion that on the whole the Senate had performed its duties very well. Still he favoured a change so far as to give the minority representation in the Senate. Generally, I take it that the hon. gentleman agreed with the views of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce. He agreed with regard to representation of minorities, as did my hon. friend beside me (Hon. Mr. Legris). My hon. friend would give the opposition the right to nominate two senators to three nominated by the government. I do not think I could go that far, if I adopted the idea at all. I question whether under our system it would be fair and right to extend the power of the opposition leader. I do not approve of what has been recently done, making the leader of the opposition a paid officer of the state. It is not a direction along which we should develop our system of administration. I know that the Premier has said that he recognized it as a new stage in the development of constitutional government, and Mr. Fielding, in some observations which he made, used almost the indentical words, saying it was evidence of the development of our system of responsible government; but, as the opposition leader is not responsible to the majority of the people, it is hard to see why he should have such power, and, further than that, as the hon. member from Richmond argued, if it be correct to allow the leader of the opposition to perform executive work of that kind, he might just as well become a member of the government, and the whole matter of responsible administration might cease; but it could not cease because, after all, the government of the day must be responsible for the appointments which are made. Dividing power with the leader of the opposition would seem to be division of authority for which there would be not only no warrant, but which must lead to a complete confusion in the government of the country along the lines which we have adopted.

However, there was a very general agreement that the reform of the Senate is needed. The hon. gentleman from Richmond (Hon. Mr. Miller) whose experience goes back over the whole history of our country from the time of confederation, held that the nominated Chamber was a failure. The hon. gentleman from Marshfield (Hon. Mr. Ferguson) concurred in that to the extent of declaring in favour of a new mode of appointment. The hon. gentleman from Wolseley (Hon. Mr. Perley) took the ground that the Senate could not be independent and must be partisan. I regret the hon. senator is not in the House at present, as I wished to make one observation with regard to the address which he made. He rang the changes very strongly in his beautiful and harmonious voice, on the fact that the government had not filled certain vacancies in New Brunswick and persistently referred to the fact that the city of St. John was not represented here. I appreciated the compliment which the hon. gentleman paid me by forgetting me entirely; but that statement and also the statement which the hon. gentleman made, that in the early days of confederation a much better Senate was appointed than is appointed now and that in fact all religions, all classes, and all conditions of men were represented, were scarcely in accordance with the facts. I do not wish to bring up any reference to old sores. I have nothing to say in regard to gerrymanders and things of that kind; but I would like to remind the Senate, because, no doubt, the members know it, that when the first senators were called from the province of New Brunswick there was not a single Roman Catholic called among the number, so that while the hon. gentleman was, no doubt, correct so far as the other provinces were concerned he was quite inexact as far as New Brunswick was concerned. Further than that, the hon. gentleman stated that all parties were represented. I would say that the party to which I and a number of the residents of New Brunswick happen to belong was not represented in the Senate, for quite a long time. It is quite true there was a break up of parties which unhinged matters somewhat, and while it would be fair to say that there were both Conservatives and Liberals called from New Brunswick, it would be correct also to say that the opposition in New Brunswick was not represented in the Senate at first. There are two principal grounds upon which the idea of a Senate is upheld. One of them is the revision of the parliamentary work of the Lower House, and the other the representation of the provinces—that is to say, that there shall be a certain number of senators from each of the provinces, and that by this means the safety of the smaller provinces in the confederation is secured. I was very much amused at an illustration which my hon. friend opposite (Hon. Mr. Ferguson) used during the course of his observations and at the summary which he made of the various questions which have come before the Senate in which the Senate had saved the rights of the provinces. My hon. friend selected from among the number a vote upon which some Prince Edward Island question—the formation of a steamship company or something of the kind—when all the representatives of Prince Edward Island were against this measure, their friends in the Senate nobly came to their assistance and defeated the Bill. I do not know how far that illustration is of value, because the next night my hon. friend himself voted against a measure which the British Columbia senators desired, and the whole of the representation from British Columbia in the House of Commons desired. It did not seem to me that there was very much in an argument illustrated in that manner by the hon. gentleman himself. No doubt, however, there may be times when it is to the interests of a province to be represented in the Senate as such. That must be the reason why the senators are divided up according to provinces; but I observe that upon all questions which come before this body, senators divide according to their feelings, according to their party affiliations, or according to the views they may take upon the case in question. I can conceive of no question coming forward in the Senate itself in which the members of the Senate would desire to do what was unfair or unjust to a province. The member from Smith's Falls, with great vigour, told us that the imperial parliament would not think for a moment of breaking up the existing system inasmuch as there had been a solemn guarantee that the Senate was constituted as it is for the protection of the minority in some of the provinces. I think I am quite safe in saying from a review of the course of English history, that if the parliament of Canada sought to change the constitution of the Senate, the English parliament would listen to the request, and that the views which my hon. friend holds with regard to the rebuff which we would receive, are entirely unfounded. If the British government has learned one thing better than another it has learned that the best way to treat the colonies is to allow them to develop according to their own ideas. I imagine further that if the parliament of Canada decided a change was necessary it would not make that change in such a way as to adversly affect any particular province. It would have to be with the consent of the Senate and Commons of Canada and, under such circumstances, it is most probable that the imperial parliament would agree to it. The people are generally able to get what they really want, and if they wanted a change in this respect very badly they would be as likely to get it as anything else. I have before me a memo. of two or three ideas which I entertain as regards the constitution of the Senate. First I think that the Senate might be divided into three groups, one to be elected by members of the House of Commons, one by a joint vote of the House of Commons and the Senate, and one by the municipal councils and the local house. The hon. gentleman from Prince Edward Island (Hon. Mr. Robertson), in his remarks last night, made the observation, and several other gentlemen have made a somewhat similar suggestion, that there are too many elections. My hon. friend opposite me from Rockland (Hon. Mr. Edwards) at some time in his life believed—he does not say that he has got rid of the idea yet—that the public business could be done better by three commissioners. That might be the opinion of a man who is very strongly conservative in his mind, and who does not know it. To transfer to three commissioners the legislative authority of the people and the right to control and govern the people, would be simply to have three kings in a country where perhaps one is quite enough. It would do away with the whole idea of the authority and power of the people, and would lead, as it has done in the city of Washington—where the commission idea is carried out to the fullest extent—to a system which is not as good as the elective system, as existing in incorporated towns either in this country or on the other side of the line. I, therefore, favour election by the people. I do not think that we can do away with the necessity for elections; I do not think it is desirable to do so. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce put forward the view that the House of Commons, the elected representatives of the people, after two or three years lost touch with the people to a certain extent, and that the Senate might do the work of checking legislation until the time for another general election came round. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman seriously considered that proposition or not. It would seem to me that much the better way would be to dissolve the popular House and go directly to the people to ascertain what they want. It does not seem to me that the Senate would be in a position to hold the other House in check for two or three years, particularly when the Senate consisted of a body of men elected for a term of ten or twelve years, as the hon. gentleman suggested, or if it were a body appointed for life. If there was to be a system of popular election, the scheme I would prefer would be something like that which we find in Norway. I would make the life of a Senator equal to the life of these parliaments, dividing them into these divisions, and at each general election taking from the elected members by some plan to be worked out, or from Senators whose term has expired, a sufficient number to fill vacancies. All vacancies occurring between general elections to be filled by appointment by the Lieutenant Governor in Council of the province affected. I would fill the vacancies thus created in the commons by new elections. I would reduce the number of senators one-third at least. I would be perfectly willing, in view of all the conditions, to allow Prince Edward Island to have four senators, as at present, but I would cut off Nova Scotia and New Brunswick six each, and proportionately reduce the number coming from the other provinces. In that way the number to be re-elected on each occasion for the popular House would be so small that it would not be nearly as bad as the contested elections which upset so many gentlemen who have obtained majorities by the usual means; and you would then have a Senate that would be thoroughly representative of the people, and also a continuing senatorial body. They would sit for a sufficient length of time to intelligently discharge their duties and acquire experience which would entitle them to re-election if the people saw fit.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not apprehend exactly what the proposal of the hon. gentleman is. Is it that a certain number of gentlemen elected to the House of Commons shall be Senators ?

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—Yes, that is the idea.

Hon. Mr. POWER—How is the hon. gentleman going to distinguish between those who are elected ?

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—If I am in the government when that occurs I shall find a way. It will not be so difficult to arrange. The same system really exists in Norway. I should like to say that the idea of election by the people had made considerable progress in Canada up to the time of confederation. The old legislative council in Canada, the members or representatives of Upper Canada, or a considerable portion of them, were elected by the people ; I do not know how many, but quite a number, and when hon. gentlemen quote in parliament the observations of Sir John Macdonald and George Brown in regard to the observations which they held for an appointed House, must be read in the light of the facts which existed at that time. When confederation was agreed upon, it was absolutely necessary that it should carry—it was the ordinary view taken that it would be carried. Therefore the men who were propounding and preparing the scheme of confederation provided that the senators should be appointed from the legisative councils then in existence. If that had not been done they would never have carried it through the legislative councils and the public men of that day naturally looked around for arguments to justify the departure which they made in making the Senate of Canada an appointed body ; so then the argument quoted developed in their minds, and they condemned elective legislative councils. I think there is no mistake in that, and if hon. gentlemen will refer to the history of the time they will find that was the case.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Both Upper and Lower Canada were divided into large electoral districts before confederation, and all the legislative council were elected alternately for two, four and six years.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I was not exactly aware just what it was. I knew they were elected, and I knew that the popular mind was favourable to election. They were originally appointed by the Crown, and the idea of election was brought about because the people desired it. It could not have been done otherwise.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I might say also it was quite satisfactory.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—As regards the Senate and the House of Commons, there might I think be an improvement in the parliamentary practice. All legislation, in view of the large amount of work we have to do, should be resumed in the next session of parliament where it is left this session. There is no doubt the Senate itself, as regards its strength before the country, is weakened by the fact that the moment a senator gets an important position in the cabinet he leaves the Senate and goes to the House of Commons. I would remedy that by allowing the senators to sit in the House of Commons, which is the French system—there is a good deal to be learned in France—and I would allow the commoners to sit in this Chamber. I think it is a common right in France. At any rate I would allow the members to sit in both Houses, so that when their policy was to be explained, they would have a right to speak in parliament, no matter what branch they belonged to.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would the hon. gentleman give them a vote also ?

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—No, I should not do that. My hon. friend sat in the Lower House, and he knows that whenever an important minister sat in the Senate there was a constant expression of dissatisfaction, and it was urged that the minister ought to be here to explain himself, and do this, that, and the other thing, and the Lower House was never satisfied with the explanation, no matter how good it was, if the minister was not there to make it himself. I am of the opinion—and I merely state this as my own opinion—that the second Chambers everywhere will, in the course of time, disappear ; that notwithstanding the value of the second Chamber as a critical body, criticising the acts of the House below, the popular feeling which is at work in the United States endeavouring to have the senators elected ; the popular feeling which exists in England to-day attacking the House of Lords—and the attacks upon the House of Lords in England are far greater and stronger than is supposed in this country, and that popular feeling is working in Canada to-day. Any man who reads the English reviews will find that there is a constant attack on the House of Lords because it is not doing its duty, as the duty of public men is understood to-day by the English people. I observed the other day, in some paper an article in which practices in the United States were being discussed where some of these rich men sat in the Senate of the United States, and the rejoinder was made, I think by an English paper : ' Well, what does the Duke of Westminster sit in parliament for except to look after his large estates ? ' So that, in time, as the people get to the democratic idea that there is only one united body of people to be cared for, all the labour and revision necessary for doing that will necessarily fall into the hands of one branch of parliament. I will trouble the House with a short extract from an observation of John Stuart Mill in his book on representative government. Mr. Mill favoured a second House, and suggested such a House as that to which the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce referred. But he remarked :

> The really moderating power in a democratic constitution must act in and through the democratic House.
> That there should be in every policy a centre of resistance to the predominant power in the constitution—and in a democratic constitution therefore a nucleus of resistance to the democracy—I have already maintained ; and I regard it as a fundamental maxim of government. If any people who possess a democratic representation are from their historical antecedents more willing to tolerate such a centre of resistance in the form of a second chamber or House of Lords than in any other shape, this constitutes a strong reason for having it in that shape. But it does not appear to me the best shape in itself, nor by any means the most efficacious for its object. If there are two houses, one considered to represent the people, the other to represent only a class, or not to be representative at all, I cannot think that where democracy is the ruling power in society, the second House would have any real ability to resist even the aberrations of the first. It might be suffered to exist, in an effective check on even here. If it exercised an independent will, it would be required to do so in the same general spirit as the other House ; to be equally democratic with it, and to content itself with correcting the accidental oversights of the more popular branch of the legislature or competing with it in popular measures.

It seems to me that the weakness of the Senate is in its creation. It has no mandate from the people. Mr. Dilke said more than fifteen years ago—but I am sorry he does not argue the question at all—in discussing second Chambers :

Canada alone of great federal countries has unfortunately adopted a nominative system which gives it a weak Senate and deprives it of the real upper House which if it had liked it might have had.

The hon. gentleman from Acadie (Hon. Mr. Poirier) referred to the fact that some years ago he introduced a resolution discussing the whole question. The other day he submitted to the House some views which he entertained providing for a system of representation by nationalities, and I think the hon. gentleman's system would not be be a good one. I regard it as undesirable. And while we must give him credit for his desire to do the best he can in his view of the matter, yet what we need is a greater unity of the nationalities within the confederation rather than by dividing them. Appointed as the Senate is by the government of the day no doubt many things will influence the appointments. I say this with regard to both parties. In the discussion in the Lower House the other day, the Premier admitted his own weakness in the matter. He could not go outside the party lines in making appointments, although willing apparently to do so if he could. The desire to get a man out of the way, to secure a man of a certain religion, to give representation to a particular place, may easily influence appointments, and men will naturally yield to influences of this kind. I can say as a member of the Senate—and I should like these observations to go to the country—I am not conscious of any direct influence on the part of the government to induce me to cast my vote one way or the other, but it is natural for a man to vote with his party. We are under a system of party government, and it is exceedingly hard work for an hon. gentleman to divest himself of the idea that the party to which he has attached himself is not the best party, and that the views of his party are quite correct; and if, in the exercise of his judgment, he is led away from that view, he still has the feeling that his own judgment may not be so good as the judgment of his party, and he is very apt, I think, to yield somewhat when he would not do so otherwise. I do not think, however, that that is a matter for which the government itself is to blame, but I do think that probably the system may have something to do with it. In this connection I desire to call the attention of the House to some observations somewhat along that line made by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield in the discussion of the question; and I should like to say that if the leader of the opposition had the right to appoint members of the Senate they would be influenced just in the same way. If there be a wrong influence; if a man's freedom or desire to follow certain lines is affected in any way by the mode in which he is appointed by the government, a man appointed by the hon. leader of the opposition would be in the same position. It does not follow that the government is wrong all the time, but the reasons which would induce a man who is appointed by the government to vote with the government would just as readily induce a man appointed by the hon. leader of the opposition to follow the same example, and vote with his party.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—That is the admirable feature of my suggestion; both sides would be represented.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I answer that suggestion, and say that it is not numbers so much that count. But the hon. gentleman in his review of what the Senate had done, said:

Up to this time, there has been very slight indication of independence among the supporters of the government in this House with regard to government measures. Of course you will tell me that this is only four or five years, but many of us think that there were instances in that period in which the supporters of the government might have found occasion to have asserted their independence.

* * * * *

These facts go to show that British parliamentary institutions have been carried out with a great deal of success, and in a very harmonious manner in the working of our institutions in Canada. Indeed, if there is any fault at all to be found with the record of the Senate in all the different periods I have referred to, it is that the Senate has been too acquiescent. I have no hesitation in looking back over the events which have occurred between 1878 and 1896—although I was in the Senate a part of that time myself—in saying that the Senate would have done itself justice if more criticism and independence had been evinced during that time, that it would have been better for Canada and it would have given the Senate a better record.

* * * * *

I think the verdict of history will be that the Senate has been on the whole rather too acquiescent in assenting to measures passed by the House of Commons, and I would utter a warning to hon. gentlemen sitting opposite me and to hon. gentlemen around me as well, and that is this: During the long period that the Conservative party were in power the Liberal press and the Liberal public men stirred up a very strong feeling of opposition to the Senate, mainly on account of its acquiescence in the measures of the government of the day and of its very strong party complexion.

What I am endeavouring to do by reading the extracts is to show that the conditions complained of now existed before. But while the hon. gentleman from Smith's Falls was satisfied with existing conditions, it must be remembered the Reform party declared against the condition of the Senate in 1893. I think my hon. friend was at that conference. I think we were all of the opinion in those days that a change in the Senate was advisable. I had selected some other remarks made by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield, showing strongly that in his mind there is a consciousness that the Senate itself during its whole period discharged its duty as it should and, while with considerable ingenuity and ability he endeavoured to make it appear we are worse now than before, yet I think the fair reading of the hon. gentleman's remarks would be that the Senate has not responded to the idea with which it was created, and that the general system of nominating senators has failed. That, I think, can be fairly drawn from his remarks. I desire to make one further reference. My hon. friend from North Wellington, in the course of his observations as against electing members of the Senate, pointed out that in the United States, in some state in which he had been visiting there had been an election every day of the month, or quite a period of time with regard to the election of senators; that day by day under the law passed by the Senate in order to get state legislators to elect senators, there was a constant ballot with no result. That seems to be a very vicious system. But the same state of things prevail in this country, not in the system but in the fact that the Senate vacancies are not filled when they occur. It has been the case of this government, as of other governments, that the vacancies are not filled up as they should be the moment they occurred, and that is calculated to create an impression in the public mind that the Senate is not really needed, not as fully adapted to the public welfare as the senators themselves think it should be. I would strongly urge on the government that, while the present system remains, there should not be thrown at us the same thing that the hon. member from Wellington brought up, that the senatorial vacancies in the United States remained unfilled by reason of their vicious system, when the same system exists here to-day. I think further with regard to the senators who compose the House at present—and I do not like to say it just in that way—but the senators who sit a long time in parliament, and when the government has been some time in power and is quite strong, the senators themselves on the opposition as well as on the government side, not having any mandate from the people, not being responsible, not having to answer to any person for their sins in omission or commission, fall into a routine habit and there grows in the Senate a system by which the legislative business is done, not with a disregard to the public business, but there is not the effort on the part of the Senate to square itself with the public mind or make itself an intellectual force in the country. The Senate gives careful attention, as far as I have seen, to all the Bills that come before it in the committee. The work done there, I quite agree, is well and faithfully done, but, at the same time, there is no difference whatever between the senators so far as they are members of the Senate. I think they both get into the same habit and mode of carrying on political work, and whether they are in opposition or whether they are not, the facile and matter-of-fact conditions which exist are due to the fact that they are a nominative body and are here for life. There is an old remark which everybody knows that Providence fights on the side of the strongest battalions and so Providence fights on the side of ideas. There are just as able men in the Senate of Canada to-day as there were at any time in the history of the country. Great occasions make great men, and in the early days of the country there were many matters arising which brought out the strength of great men, but there is no reason whatever to believe, if an emergency of any kind arose in this country, that the Senate would not be able to provide as many able men as the country demanded. I have before me now the remark of Mr. Mill to which I referred before:

An assembly which does not rest on the basis of some great power in the country is ineffectual against one which does.

The House of Commons is strong in the country because it appoints the premier. The premier appoints the senators. It is only necessary to state the fact to exhibit the cause of the Senate's weakness. The second proposition of John Stuart Mill with regard to chosing a second chamber was that he would have it elected by the first, subject to the restriction that they should not nominate any of their own members. There is one other point I should like to make, and that is with regard to the appointment of young men. I am quite in favour of seeing young men in this Chamber. I recognize the fact that Canada needs young men. The ideas which young men have, and the vigour with which they can carry them out, the spirit of progress which they have, all would have a good influence, so I would not limit in any way the age at which a young man could enter the Senate. Of course if all the senators would be elected, there would be no limit whatever. I would not think of putting a limit to the electing of whoever the people pleased, but so long as the appointing power exists, the government might as well send some young men to the Senate, men of twenty-five or thirty years, as well as men of fifty or sixty. I do not know whether I made an observation when I was referring to the speech of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce with regard to the appointment of Privy Councillors, etc., to show how that would work out in connection with the province from which I come. I find in the province of New Brunswick we have three privy councillors and one ex-governor. Of course I do not want to make any personal observations with regard to that, but two of those gentlemen no longer live in the province, and one of them, while he represents a constituency, can hardly be said to live in New Brunswick, therefore the suggestion of selecting privy councillors does not seem to me to be one of great practical value. During the discussion which has taken place, there have been many references to the fact of two parties being represented, and a great deal of the discussion has been based on that, but I sometimes inquire of myself, whether there are really two parties in Canadian politics to-day. There are differences of opinion as to the mode of doing certain things, sometimes perhaps on one question of not very great importance so far as the whole country is concerned, and sometimes upon another. We did appear to have a division along party lines on the question of the Transcontinental Railway, and yet that was not a matter of politics so much as a practical work, and when I hear remarks made that the party interests suffers here or there I am led to question myself whether under the political system of to-day, in the disappearance of the issues on which men once fought, we are divided on any question of principle whatever. I favour so far as you may gather from these observations, the election of the Senate by a direct vote of the people. If that is not successful, then I would favour the election of senators by an indirect system such as the French system—by members of the House of Commons and senators; if you like, by members of the local legislature and representatives of the municipal councils of the country. I would carry that on regardless of the fear that so many elections might be a disadvantage. With regard to the two parties, I trust hon. gentlemen will excuse me if I make a few observations.

When the Liberals were in opposition they were full of ideas as to modes by which the interests of Canada could be advanced. They had commercial union, reciprocal trade, economical administration, Senate reform, tariff reform and other like ideas and ideals which arrested public attention and gave them a picturesque place in the political imagination of the people, so that when the Conservative party fell, the whole country turned to the opposition with cheerful hopefulness.

I will not say that the Liberals have accomplished all they promised. But they have done some good work; they have expanded the national life, they have enlarged the national resources and by a great railway project, they have created new hopes of the future, and they have made the country prosperous. Senate reform is yet to be undertaken.

What is the Conservative position? As a party it has indicated no active belief in new Canadian development; it has created no new ideals; it contents iteslf with its past record, and with criticism upon the petty quarrels of the Immigration Department, with consideration of the details of Arctic outfits, the supplies of navigation of the Marine Department within the Polar circles, and like matters. Its best work, which is perhaps not to be despised, is in probing the mismanagement which seems to attach to details of public administration; which mismanagement unhappily is too common in all governments of all countries. It is no wonder that under such conditions the party leader here, the member for Belleville, lays down his baton and retires from the front rank, or that the member for Richmond finds it necessary to form a new party for himself.

Yet there is work for a great party in opposition.

There are changes imminent. I appreciate—we must all appreciate—the thoughtful words in which the member for Mille Isle, introducing the resolution upon which this debate is founded, if you will, referred to the progress of socialistic ideas, and it is easy to see that here is a force which is to be counted with in moulding, in re-modeling our institutions. The old order changeth. Sympathy, a conservative sympathy, if you will, with any great movement which has its foundation in the heart of man, and which seeks to better the condition of life of the toiler, is wiser and safer than to sternly damn such a movement and to seek arbitrarily to arrest its advance. It may or may not be based upon a false philosophy, but its humanitarianism, its suggestiveness of comfort and ease, is commending it to men in all nations and I may say in all creeds. At the moment it seems to threaten the destruction of the cement which binds together the whole fabric of civil society; but wise counsels and good management may turn its forces along practical and beneficial lines.

In addition to this general movement of the mass of mankind into which we may be swept, there is proceeding in this country to-day another movement natural and peculiar to our special conditions, a movement which is rapidly leading us towards absolute national independence. The declaration which is often made that Canada is a nation is as yet but a prediction, a prophecy; but it is one whose day of fulfilment seems to be near at hand. It will involve, when it comes, changed relations with our mother country, and with our near neighbours, also our kinsmen, on this American continent. The times seem, therefore, to demand of us institutions in thorough harmony with the spirit of the age, a spirit which has little regard for governments that are not representative for permanent legislatures, or for privileges which exist under the pretense that they are of divine right.

With something of this feeling in my own mind, hon. gentlemen, I candidly confess that I favour the reconstitution of this Senate—if it be continued at all—upon some plan which will give the people of this Dominion thorough control over it; which will adapt it to the performance of the fullest measure of its work as a governing body in the state, by making it directly and amply responsible to the people, by whom it ought to be chosen; and I have no hesitation in saying that when, to give effect to such a reform, the seat which I have the honour to hold is needed, I will as readily and as cheerfully give it to the people of Canada as I will go to my home upon the prorogation of the present session of parliament. I base my political creed upon the belief that the government of an intelligent people should be by the people, and that the moment an institution ceases to respond to their needs or to carry out their wishes as expressed through their representatives, the time has arrived when it should be recast or remodelled. But I can see also that no method of choice of any legislative body can avail unless it is upheld by the intelligence, the vigilance, the conscience, of the individual voter.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—With the thermometer at the high degree at which it is at present I do not propose to occupy your time at much length. I have approached this subject in a truly non-political spirit. What the motives were which actuated the accomplished and learned gentleman in moving this resolution, I do not know. That they were of a nature to elicit from the Senate itself an opinion as to its relations and what it thought of itself was a very bright idea, but I think that as the great Scotch poet says we ought to 'see ourselves as ithers see us.' This debate was intended to show us as we see ourselves, and I confess I found a considerable amount of vanity, not too much. I felt also a certain degree of pride in this body because one hon. gentleman (the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce) gave utterance to one of the most brilliant speeches that has been delivered in this Senate, and the most eloquent and the best in parliamentary style which he has delivered. In fact I thought it was so well prepared that there was some degree of collusion between him and the hon. gentleman who brought forward the motion. I was glad, because he is a constituent of mine, and I was proud also because I thought the change of atmosphere, as it was represented to be in this Senate might have impaired in some way his oratorical powers and I was glad, as we all are, to see that 'Richard is himself again'. While I say that, and while I appreciate the eloquence of which he gave us a pleasing exhibition, and an interesting one also, I must differ decidedly from his views. Why on earth the hon. gentleman deviated into the region of gerrymander, or any other mander, I cannot imagine. What this Senate has to do with gerrymandering if it ever had anything to do with it must have been anterior to my entrance into this Chamber over twenty years ago. I can only speak of what has occurred within the past twenty years, and if there was anything else before that I call the hon. gentleman from Halifax (Mr. Power) who represents his district in this Senate with such ability, assiduity and learning, and who has contributed in no small degree to the legislative efficiency of the Senate by his industry and knowledge—I call upon him to testify when, on any occasion, has there been any political feeling or political asperity shown in this House. If there ever was, it must have been anterior to my time, and I call upon him to say when it was. There never was an occasion—I testify upon honour, which I hope will carry some weight—on which I have given a political vote; and I hope I never shall. Holding these views, I was very sorry that the right hon. gentleman (Sir Richard Cartwright) and the hon. gentleman from Wellington (Mr. McMullen) should have launched out into a bitter invective against the actors in the gerrymander scheme. Heaven knows who they were, I do not. However, I had nothing to do with it, nor do I know of any other senator who had. But these hon. gentlemen could not resist the idea of fighting their battles over again, and 'thrice slaying the slain.'

In approaching this subject in a philosophic way, apart altogether from political feeling, two postulates present themselves to our view. The first is that the highest evidence of the sagacity of mankind in civilization, and the highest point which has been attained in regulating the intercourse of man with his fellow-man, has been in the formation of party governments. The name may sound ill, but it nevertheless represents the highest effort of our modern civilization. Another postulate which follows from the first is that there ought to be two chambers. This, the bi-cameral method, was first introduced by England, the mother of parliaments, from whom all have taken their ideas of what a parliament ought to be. In England in fact, the House of Lords existed prior to the House of Commons. It would be well, I think, to take a rapid survey of the many forms which the upper Chamber takes. There is the hereditary type, the elective House, and the nominative body. In the first mentioned England stands at the head. England, Spain, Portugal, Baden, Bavaria, Prussia, Wurtemburg and Saxony, all have upper chambers with life members in limited or unlimited number. The elective method is followed in the German Bundesrath, in Belgium, Denmark, the Netherlands, Sweden and Norway, France, Roumania, Mexico and the southern republics, including of course the greatest of all these republics, the United States. It may be of interest to mention that Belgium does not admit any member under forty years of age. The Senate in that country possesses only half the number of the house of deputies. They are retired every eight years, and for indemnity they get nothing. They and the House of Lords in England are the only two bodies of the kind which I could discover, where no indemnity was paid. France has 300 senators, the indemnity is 9,000 francs. In Denmark twelve members are appointed by the king, and fifty-four by the people, making a total of sixty-six. The members retire every eight years, and receive the very small sum of six shillings and nine pence per day. The German Bundesrath contains fifty-eight members, elected by the twenty-five states, Prussia electing seventeen, Bavaria six, Wurtemburg four. In the Netherlands the Senate contains fifty members elected by the eleven provinces. In Roumania there are 120 members, who retire every eight years. Sweden and Norway have 145 members who retire every eight years.

The youngest age at which members are admitted to any Senate is thirty-five years. Switzerland has forty-four members, elected by the twenty-two cantons, much the same as in the United States, but the House resembles the United States Senate in that connection only. I need not say anything about the United States Senate; you know all about that body, and also about the Mexican House. There is one, which I have left to the last, that is Italy, because it comes nearer to Canada in some respects than any of the others. Italy has an entirely nominative system, and the senators are nominated for life. No members are admitted under forty years of age, which would be a good plan to adopt here. Those who are nominated as members are men eminent in law, science or in the church, or who have contributed in some remarkable way to literature or science. This is one of the most influential upper Houses in Europe, and as I have said closely resembles that of Canada. The only point of difference is in regard to remuneration, and even in that there is some resemblance. The members receive free transportation everywhere. I mention this to show the excellence of that feature, appearing as it does in a house of such high reputation. I wish to read a short extract from a work entitled 'The House of Lords,' published in 1891 being one number of a quarterly review of current topics, entitled 'Subjects of the Day,' edited by James Samuelson. At page 33 we find the following:

> The Senate of Italy, composed as it is of the elite of the kingdom, men of mark and wealth, and of members of the Chamber of Deputies, of long experience, possesses great influence in checking the extreme views of a very progressive lower House. On all burning questions the Senate gauges with wonderful accuracy the real feelings of the country, and when it rejects or amends a Bill it is certain to act in accordance with public sentiment, a conflict of opinion between the Senate and the people being quite unknown.

That is exactly what occurs in Canada. Now, I am going to express certain views which may disappoint some hon. gentlemen here. There is no man in Canada today who has more respect for the English nobility than I have. I consider that they are at the head of the aristocracies of Europe, for patriotism, dignity, honour and honesty. In these characteristics they are supreme; at the same time, as an assembly we must remember that they represent a distinct class. I mention this particularly because we are told here that we should follow the pattern of the House of Lords. It was left as a gospel by the fathers of confederation, that when we were in doubt in our own practice we were to follow the practice of the House of Lords. I hold that the House of Lords instead of being held up for imitation, should be held up as a warning, and I will give you my reasons. That House is composed of 560 members who have a hereditary right to sit in parliament. They own one-third of the whole of the cultivated land of England; they have most of the benefices of the church at their command; they also have the army and navy at their disposal, as well as the diplomatic service, which renders them, as a class, a most desirable one to belong to; but—now I am not going to give you my individual opinion, because it might be thought I was actuated by feeling—I will give you the words of John Bright. In a speech he delivered in England in 1884 he said:

> Now many of the peers are the results—I had almost used a more unpleasant word—but they are the results of one of the darkest periods of our history; for I believe about one-half of them were created and placed in the House of Commons between the accession of George III. in 1760, and the year 1830, which we may call the era of the great Reform Bill. They were many of them, the result, the spawn of the plunder and the wars and the corruption of those dark ages of our country. Now let us see what they have done—that is what the majority of the House of Lords has done since the year 1830. They risked a revolution in the year 1832. For thirty years from the year 1815 to 1846 they raised their rents by law at a cost of periodic famine to hundreds of thousands of families in this kingdom, and they have rejected a crowd of Bills from the House of Commons of which I have not the exact number, and which it would be tedious to go into in any detail; and as Mr. Tangye has mentioned, they have been especially hostile to any wise and just legislation for Ireland. I believe that the recent calamities of Ireland, the sufferings of its people, their discontent, and disloyalty, are mainly to be attributed to the persistent resolution of the House of Lords during the last fifty years not to pass any measure until just recently, which was calculated to give any satisfaction to the Irish people.

That, I think, is sufficient to confirm the opinion I have expressed, that we should not follow the example of the House of Lords. Looking at the constitutions of the different legislatures of the world, I would rather take the American Senate as an example. Mr. Bright expresses the opinion that the Senate of the United States is facile princeps at the head of all the Senates of the world ; is in his opinion an ideal one. From Jefferson to John C. Spooner, the present senator from Wisconsin who leads that House at the present day, they have always had the best and ablest men of the country. I was astonished to find that the hon. gentleman from Marshfield had anything to say in disparagement of that chamber. When I look back and reflect on the names of Webster, Calhoun, Clay, Everett and others, I am at a loss to imagine how this great body can be entitled to anything else than the highest respect. The hon. gentleman claimed that they were inferior in diplomatic ability. Now, I think, if there is one country in the world which has evidence of the astuteness, not to say cunning, and ability of the United States, and of their diplomatic skill, it is Canada. From the time of the unfortunate Ashburton treaty to the time of the Geneva award, and down to the present, no one who looks at the map of Canada can fail to see ample evidence of the shrewdness and ability of the United States as a diplomatic power. Some hon. gentleman says, 'sharp practice.' It was reported generally that they were offered the whole of Canada in the Geneva award if they would give up other claims elsewhere. I only give that as a report, that is how it came to me. Now, this gentleman whom the hon. gentleman from Marshfield quoted, Mr. Bryce, whose work every senator ought to read, says :

> The smallness and the permanence of the Senate have, however, another inportant influence on its character. They contribute to one main cause of its success, the superior intellectual quality of its members. Every European who has described it has dwelt on the capacity of those who compose it, and most have followed De Tocqueville in attributing this capacity to the method of double election. The choice of senators by the state legislatures is supposed to have proved a better means than direct choice by the people of discovering and selecting the fittest men.

He is unqualified in his praise of the American Senate, and at all events that great system of committees which we have and which is so successful here, is derived from the United States. But I am not going to make an invidious distinction in that line; it does not come within the scope of the resolution. The resolution of the hon. gentleman from Mille Isles has called forth a great deal of attention. It has been made the subject of comment by the press of Canada, and for the first time in my life I find that the press can be given an unqualified meed of praise for the very handsome manner in which they have treated the Senate in connection with the resolution. What are the causes of any animadversion which may have been made with reference to the Senate ? I need not go very deeply into this subject, because I find one of the principal causes at hand. I attribute the disparagement of the Senate largely to the numerous adjournments which have taken place here. In 1898 these adjournments extended over a period of thirty-nine days, in 1899 over thirty days, in 1900 over fifty-nine days, in 1901 ten days, in 1902 nineteen days; then in 1903 the number reached sixty-one days; in 1904 it runs down to forty-four. In 1905 it is sixty-one days again. Such a length of time taken out of the session of this House is calculated to attract public attention. Furthermore, some hon. gentlemen who have attended regularly this year did not attend so regularly heretofore. If I had the number of members who were absent during previous session with the length of time in each case, it would make a very bad showing I am afraid, but I have only taken the number of days of actual adjournment, excluding Saturdays and Sundays. It may be said, we do all the work. I suppose we do, but we do it in a hurried manner, and it is that I complain of. I have seen eighteen or nineteen Bills run through in half an hour in the rapid manner—I do not say it in any disparaging way—in which our Speaker has attained such excellence. He is unexcelled by any other Speaker I ever saw in his ability to facilitate business in that way. Another thing, I have seen members nod at the Speaker for a second reading of a Bill. A formal motion should be made, and the senator should arise and explain the Bill in due form. This is a small matter perhaps, but it shows laxity and it is a fault. 'He that contemneth small things shall fall by little and little.' Another cause for criticism is the sudden invasion of political methods. That has occurred by pure accident, it was not due to any design, but simply to the fact of how large a number of senators have passed over to the great majority in recent years, and I hope are now enjoying the reward of their labours. During 1889 there were five vacancies, during 1890 six ; 1891, seven; 1892, four; 1893, four; 1894, five; 1895, three; 1896, eight; 1897, four; 1898, three; 1899, seven; 1900, one; 1901, eight; 1902, seven. Then comes a dark letter year, a black year, 1903, when no less than thirteen senators were removed from this House; most of them, I think, died. In 1904 there were four vacancies; in 1905, three, and in 1906, one, a total of 93 since 1889. The effect of this has been to bring in a number of men fresh from the politics of the House of Commons. and then was introduced for the first time in this House, so far as I am aware, a party caucus or a party whip. I do not say it was done with any intention. These gentlemen simply had acquired the habits of the House of Commons and they came here imbued with the same feelings.

But the public are quick to take notice of that; the reporters are about and any of them who are disposed to condemn it, when they find political reason for doing so, act upon it. Now, there are other reasons, and one of them is the smallness of the quorum which we consider necessary. In taking up this measure I forgot to mention about the schemes of reform that have been introduced. The inventors of these schemes will pardon me for saying that I consider they are chimerical. I consider that we had better bear the evils we have than fly to those we know not of. I consider the systems proposed by the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce and the hon. gentleman from Marshfield, of appointment to the Senate would not result beneficially, but would create partisan feeling, and if there is anything that will destroy the prestige and efficiency of this House it is partisan and political feeling. Therefore, it is your duty to the House and the country to avoid it as much as you can. The hon. gentleman from Marshfield had a very elaborate plan. I give him credit for the marvellous ingenuity, care and patience with which he worked it out, and it would do very well, but, mark you, it has the same failing as the other. It perpetuates political and party feeling and creates discontent so that party lines would be drawn here as closely as they are in the House of Commons. To simplify matters we might do it in this way; just give the leader of the government on one side twenty good men, painted red, and the leader of the opposition twenty men painted blue, and put them on the table, and when having a division simply count them. You would have just as good legislation by the other system. This House has hitherto been kept comparatively free from party feeling. I know there was a good deal more of this feeling four or five years ago than at the present time. I think it is gradually disappearing, because there is an atmosphere, and there are traditions in this House, and there is a feeling whereby a man is constrained to be respectable, honourable and clean—taught that he is not sent here to represent a party or a county. He is here on higher and nobler grounds. He represents the nation and it is as a representative of the nation that he acts in this Chamber. I am sorry to hear from the hon. gentleman who preceded me some remarks with reference to this matter, and I am sorry that he was giving an inferior status to senators. I think if a senator only appreciates the honour conferred upon him, and the high destiny to which he is called, this House would be the bulwark of the freedom and liberties of this country, and would be the guardian and protector of the rights of the lowest subject in Canada. You know it is the part of a good doctor to find out what is the matter with a patient. First he must get his patient and find out his disease. The skilled physician is known by the way in which he can get any intuitive or any natural idea of the illness of his patient. I have felt the pulse of the Senate, and I do not think it is as bad as some people imagine. I think it is only a little functional derangement. All it wants is a little more oil, a little tightening of the screws in a metaphorical way and a little better feeling, a little higher notion of our destiny, of our position than this debate might indicate. There are certain remedies which I would apply. It is easy to apply remedies when you know the cause of the trouble. In the first place, I would have a larger quorum. A small quorum allows members to absent themselves, and they should be made to come here. My own opinion is that this House should require one-half of its membership to constitute a quorum. Then I would have the oath which the senator takes, one with regard to the nation—that he would recognize no party in his deliberations in this Senate—and I am sure that I am perfectly willing to take that oath myself. Then again I think the age limit should be a little different. The extraordinary number of senators dying has left the Premier without any difficulty whatever. He has been able to fill up the gaps, and he has filled them up very well. They are not a bad lot of men, and I do not think he could pick out better ones than he has, considering the nature of their politics. However, that is a pure accident. To show you how this House is able to take care of itself in that respect, just let me give you, not my own views, but the views of an able member of the House of Lords, the Earl of Pembroke, with reference to this. On page 50 of his work he says:—

> All attempts to equalize parties on the principle of nomination have been found to be useless because Liberal politicians become Conservatives almost as fast as they can be created on entering the independent atmosphere of the House of Lords. I believe that all such attempts must, if not futile, certainly be mischievous, because they encourage a wrong idea of what the spirit and functions of the House of Lords should be. The House of Lords should certainly not be the place for constant party struggles and attempts to win party victories in the division lobbies. The spirit of party cannot of course be altogether excluded from any assembly connected with English politics; but it is the peculiar duty of the House of Lords to take a national rather than a party view of political questions and for this purpose it is specially fitted by its constitution.
> It is quite a mistake to suppose that the Conservative majority in the House of Lords habitually sees its power to reject or nullify the measures of Liberal governments. Such occasions are the exceptions, not the rule. As a matter of fact there is never a session when a radical government is in power that the Conservative party do not put their party prejudices and even their conscientious opinions into their pockets again and again in deference to what they believe to be their party duty.
> If we make the House representative of any electorate we shall inadvertently deprive it of this peculiar spirit. Members would be returned as representatives of parties, pledged to support the Conservative or the Liberal caucus. With such an assembly as this for a second Chamber to have a Conservative party in one House when there is a Liberal one in the other would probably lead to an intolerable series of deadlocks.

That is enough for the elective system. The more you dilute a body the weaker it gets. If you take any spirit and dilute it, you will make it so that you will not notice the taste of it. So that I consider this nominative system by the Premier is essentially the best. If the Premier is an honest and honourable man, if he is as good as any in his party, what difference will there be between the party and him? The more you dilute the electorate the worse representative you get. The more you concentrate its essence and power, the better man you procure, and, therefore, if the government carries out its intention properly, you will find that you will get the very best men in the country. I have nothing to say against the members who have been appointed to the Senate. I think they are good representative men. So far as religious denominations are concerned and the different classes in the community, professional and secular, I think they are as good men as can be found. We have ecclesiastical representation in some of the states. Austria-Hungary has it, and so has England, but England has only one denomination. Several other countries have it—Prussia, Baden, Bavaria and Spain and Portugal to a slight extent, and so has Roumnia. We could not have ecclesiastics in the Senate in this country for the simple reason that we would not know where to stop. To-day we were considering a Bill and we mustered up four denominations, but if you are to have ecclesiastical representatives here you would have about 25 or 30. Judging from the figures I have read to you of the Bundesrath, and the United States Senate above all others, which has 90 members on its roster to-day, the highest number for years. These 90 members represent a population of nearly one million each. I should say Canadian senators should represent at least 100,000. That would give 60 representatives, which would be plenty. With regard to the age of senators, I want to give the Premier and the nominative system as much scope as possible, but I would allow no man to enter the Senate under 40 years. That is the limit in France, Belgium, Germany and many other countries. They do not have an age for retiring ; 75 is the age I would give. Remember this, as soon as evolution ceases involution begins. That is the law of animated nature. There are exceptions here, but exceptional cases should not determine the matter. Some of our members remind me of the reply Jacob gave to Pharaoh, when he asked him how old he was : 'The days of my pilgrimage on this earth are 130 years.' I believe there are gentlemen in this House who will be able to say that when the time comes. A senator was appointed the other day in the United States, one of the ablest men in America, Albert Pinckney White, at the age of 83. Gorman and Pettus, the senators from Alabama, are aged respectively 82 and 83 years. Look at the number of gentlemen here who are too modest to tell their age, but they are phenomenal. If you allow senators to retire at 75, that would give a large percentage of men who would retire, and thus would not bring about any trouble or irritation in the country. These I think are all the remarks I have to make with reference to a remedy for the improvement of this Chamber. I trust I have been actuated by the sentiments which the able and accomplished gentleman who introduced this subject had in view. I think he put it forward with the idea of getting the opinion of every senator, and there is not a member of this House that ought not to stand up, if the time and weather permit, and give his opinion, and thus you would have a sheaf of opinions that would be worth a great deal and give the people an idea of what the Senate is and requires. In conclusion let me say to your own selves be true. Remember a stream cannot rise any higher or be any purer than its source, and if the individual senators are actuated here by sentiments of honour and honesty and by a desire for truth, which we are all aiming at, I do not think there is any doubt about this Senate having a long reign such as it has at present, going on from victory to victory until some future premier will canonize it.

At six o'clock the Speaker left the chair.

After Recess.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Cobourg) moved the adjournment of the debate until to-morrow. The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (206) An Act to amend the Manitoba Grain Act, 1900.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

REVILLON BROS. BILL.

AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN.

The order of the day being called :

Consideration of the amendments made by the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce to (Bill 76) An Act respecting Revillon Brothers, Limited.—(Hon. Mr Coffey.)

Hon. Mr. COFFEY—The promoters of this Bill are quite satisfied that in its present shape, as amended by the leader of the government, it would be of no use whatever to the company. It would restrict their business to unorganized territory. This they consider would be a very great disadvantage ; in fact they could not carry on their business at all. What they want is permission to initiate business in the unorganized territories and send it to the provinces and through the provinces, to the posts which they have organized. I do not think it is the intention of the company—in fact I am sure it not the intention that they shall go into the post office business. What they want is, if they transmit letters through the unorganized territory to receive permission to send those letters to their various posts in the provinces. The same way with express, telephone, and telegraph business. They want to have the same advantage as the other companies doing business in the province. That is, they want to be placed on the same footing as the existing telephone, telegraph and express companies so as to make their business profitable. I am very sorry that I am not intimately acquainted with the work which this company have for many years been doing in the Northwest. I think the hon. members from that part of the Dominion will bear me out, however, when I say that they have spent a great deal of money that they are men of capital, that this capital is foreign capital brought into the country for the purpose of carrying on their business in the west, and it would be a pity if we restrict their business to the unorganized territories because they claim that, in case we do this, their business would be entirely destroyed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Perhaps before considering the amendments to which my hon. friend refers, we had better dispose of the amendment made in committee. And I may just say here that the statement that the Bill would be useless to them if the amendments to which I have given notice were made, is very extreme, when I only touched on two clauses of the Bill by introducing the word unorganized. However we will discuss that later on.

Hon. Mr. COFFEY moved concurrence in the amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman has not given any notice of the motion for third reading.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no objection taken to it.

The SPEAKER — The third reading can take place, because rule 70 only prohibits the third reading of the Bill on the same day that it is reported from committee. This Bill was not reported from the committee to-day.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The concurrence in the amendment did not take place owing to the notice given by the hon. Secretary of State. He asked for delay, and then he gave notice of certain amendments which he would make, as I understood, on the motion for the third reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I withdraw the objection.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have no desire in the slightest degree to weaken the force of the Bill, but the Bill ought to express what the parties themselves expect to realize by it. The first clause in which I introduced the word 'unorganized' reads in this way:

> 1. Revillon Brothers, Limited, hereinafter called 'the Company,' may make contracts with any government, corporation or person, for the carriage of the mails in any portion of the territory in which its fur and trading posts are now or hereafter may be established.

There is only one government with which they can make a contract for the carriage of mails. The mails are carried in the settled parts of Canada largely by our railway companies, and I ask the House to introduce before the word territory the word 'unorganized.' I cannot see why any objection should be taken to that. If the attention of the House of Commons had been called to the point, the Bill would not have passed in its present form. The territory, as there expressed, covers any part of Canada, because the Act applies all over Canada. The company have their head office in the city of Montreal. The unorganized territories are the portions of the country where there are no municipal institutions.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Regina)—What about the new provinces?

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—Most of the trading posts of the company are in the northern parts of Alberta and Saskatchewan. They are organized provinces.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, but the municipalities are not organized. My amendment simply makes it clear where they are to operate.

Under clause three, we find that the company may construct and operate telegraph and telephone lines. Did parliament ever give to any other company a similar power unless they defined where they were going to build their line? It was quite unprecedented. All I ask is that it should be limited to the unorganized portions of the country. It is practically a blanket charter that is granted to them under the Bill as it stands. The company first got a charter under the Joint Stock Companies Act. It gave them very large and liberal powers, but I could not give them power to build a railway or to construct telegraph and telephone lines. The Companies Act did not permit of that. They come to parliament for that power, but if any other company came to parliament in the same way they would not obtain authority unless they set forth distinctly where they were going to operate. Parliament never granted a charter on such broad lines before. You are giving this company absolute powers which you would give to no other company. They do not contemplate operating in the organized portions of the Dominion; why then should they hesitate to say so? It would be an extraordinary precedent for this House to set, to allow a charter to go through without defining were the company were to operate.

Then in regard to clause 9, which gives the company the right to carry on the business of a money forwarder by post or telegraph, let me ask would you give any other company that right in the settled parts of Canada? Certainly not, without saying between what points. It is only in these three cases I have asked to make any special change; and why the hon. gentleman should be forced to say that the company could not accept the Bill with these amendments, is beyond my comprehension. If you put that Bill on record without amending it, I do not see how you can refuse to grant to any other company the same privileges. It would be quoted against parliament. We are giving this company freedom to operate within the whole of Canada, because the word 'territory' cannot be interpreted as territories. If it were territories it would relate to those portions of Canada where there are no organized provinces; but it is wider than that, it is 'in the territory of Canada' The territory of Canada extends from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and it extends southward to the American boundary line. You are going to give a right which you do not intend to give, which the company did not ask for, and which they do not propose to use. Why should not the language be made to conform to the intention of the company. It certainly cannot embarrass them. I do not desire in the smallest degree to take from them any power which they propose to exercise. All I desire to do is to prevent a very improper precedent being created. Under the Bill, as I proposed to amend it, they could operate all through the northern parts of British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Ontario, Quebec and in portions of the maritime provinces—those portions that are not under municipal government. Is not that a pretty wide field? The company is essentially a fur company; that is the main object of their enterprise. They have, of course, many other powers. They can build and operate ships for the carriage of passengers and merchandise, construct telegraph and telephone lines; they have the right to speculate in timber limits, to erect saw-mills and to speculate in water powers and their accessories. We had here a day or two ago a water power Bill in reference to which inquiry was made with the greatest particularity as to where the water was going to be obtained, where it was going to be used, and what route was going to be taken, yet we are asked to give this company carte blanche. I do not desire to tie them up in any way; I only wish to limit the field of their operations as regards telegraph lines, carriage of mails, and transmission of money. You are going to supercede the postal money order office? We have express companies which have a special charter in order to issue money orders; but the company is to be allowed to issue money orders all over the country anywhere they like. They admit they want to send moneys from Toronto to Montreal, and other points. That is an innovation on the proper system of legislation, and if it is done you will have cause to regret it, because if you give such powers to this company you will be bound to give them to any other company. Then, under clause 11, the company may carry on business in Canada and elsewhere. They can go down to Mexico, to South America, all over the world. I do not think that is prudent legislation. I do not think it is going to serve or benefit the promoters of the Bill in any way, and it is going to create an extremely awkward precedent. I therefore move the first amendment of which I have given notice, in regard to clause 1.

Hon. Mr. TALBOT—I do not think the company can object at all to the amendment proposed by the hon. Secretary of State, provided it is understood that he is giving the correct definition of the term 'unorganized territories.' The expression would appear to cover only Keewatin and Mackenzie districts, which are not organized. The company's trading posts are mostly in the northern part of Alberta and Saskatchewan. If these are to be considered unorganized territories because they have no municipalities, then I think it should be entirely satisfactory to the company.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I call the attention of the mover of the Bill to the amendment which was made in committee which strikes out clause 12. That clause deals with the capital of the company. Why is that clause struck out?

Hon. Mr. COFFEY—I do not know.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—It was struck out because this company is already incorporated, and the amount of capital is stated in its charter. It was, therefore, unnecessary to state it in the Bill. On the other hand, it relieved us of the necessity of enacting a declaratory clause. The company were quite willing that it should go because their charter already fixed the amount of the capital.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I would also call attention to the first clause, which deals with carrying letters. It is possible to carry letters all over the country by messengers if they wish to do so, and I do not see any necessity for this first clause. If they are operating in unorganized territory they can send their mail by private messengers and carriers without a contract with anybody. I fully agree with the striking out of clause 9, but I do not know whether clause 10 should be struck out also.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I did not propose to stike out clause 9 ; I merely limit it to unorganized territory.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I suppose there are very few gentlemen in the Senate who are directly interested in this Bill. Speaking for myself, I am not, but it seems to me that the hon. Secretary of State has not considered what is covered by the term 'unorganized territories.' If you put in those words they destroy to a very great extent the operations of this company. The hon. gentleman shakes his head. Are there not portions of the unorganized territories in which the government has no means of sending money or goods and that do not come within the purview of this Bill ? Are there not portions of the country in the Northwest that are organized but which are not settled, and in which this company has its posts, and has had them for a great number of years? The hon. gentleman said a few minutes ago that had the statement which he made been brought before the House of Commons he is quite sure that the Bill would never have passed. I am assured that this Bill was submitted to the Minister of Railways and Canals, to the Minister of Justice and to the Finance Minister, all of whom concurred in its provisions. Have the government no policy in a matter of this kind ? I am making this statement on the authority of a gentleman who is promoting the Bill.

Hon. Mr. POWER—These statements are decidedly ex-parte.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not understand how the hon. gentleman makes them ex-parte. I am replying to the statement made by the representative of the government in this House, that had the facts been submitted to the House of Commons the Bill would not have passed. My reply to that is that I am informed that this Bill was submitted to three members of the cabinet, who would be and are particularly interested in its provisions, the Minister of Justice, the Minister of Railways and Canals and the Minister of Finance. They have been misrepresented or the statement made by the hon. Secretary of State can have no force. Take the first clause to which my hon. friend objects. This company exists at the present time, and has its posts in the organized and in the unorganized territory and, as I learn, has been carrying on business of all kinds since some time in the seventeenth century. They have been in the habit of accommodating the people in many of those parts of the country in the manner indicated in the Bill. All they ask is that they shall have power to enter into an arrangement with the government to carry the mail. Is there any particular harm in that ? The hon. gentleman says they can only enter into an agreement to carry the mail with one party, and that is the government. The government need never give them the authority to carry the mails unless they like. As I understand it, they now carry parcels from one post to another, and as people have begun to settle in that part of the country, for agricultural or other purposes, they accommodate them, and all they ask is that as a company they shall have authority to carry on this business, a business they have been carrying on without any responsibility, and if they carry the mails, as no doubt they are not allowed to do under the law, what possible harm could there be? What objection could there be to giving them the power to enter into an arrangement with the Postmaster General from post to post and from settlement to settlement, where the government has no mail accommodation now? That is all they ask. If there are any contracts for carrying the mail in that portion of the country, all the government has to do is to say 'No, you cannot have it.' They are carried now by a responsible party.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—But they can make a contract without that clause. The clause goes further and says 'with any corporation or any individual.'

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No it does not go further. I am speaking of the one point. That is to take power as a company to enter into this contract. That is all it does, and it is precisely the same with the other amendments, and the same argument applies to all the amendments which the hon. Secretary of State proposes. It proposes to restrict the operations of this company in matters of making contracts with the government for certain purposes, and in erecting telephone and telegraph communication between different posts and elsewhere if they please. The hon. gentleman says 'Why they can go anywhere, even to Mexico'. Supposing they do. Have we not already in two or three charters granted powers to Canadian corporations to go into Mexico and into other countries and islands on the Pacific. That is a power we have given them, and even supposing this company has that power what harm is it going to do?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is not the point. My contention is that under this charter they can build a telephone line between Edmonton and Calgary.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then let them build it if they please. Is the hon. gentleman standing here as the advocate of all the monopolists in the country?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We have had too much of that kind of thing, and if we could have an opposition telephone, or telegraph communication by any company, particularly this new company, let us have it. Let me tell the hon. gentleman another thing; if he has studied at all the character of the corporations that are in the unorganized territories and that have been carrying on business there for a long time, he will find that they would close out any other company that goes in, unless they have the authority to carry on their business by law. It was urged very strongly that the clause giving them the right of expropriation should not be inserted in this Bill. Well, it was pointed out particularly by the hon. gentleman from the Northwest Territories who has studied this question, and every one knows that the companies in the Northwest Territories—that is in the unorganized portions, on the borders of Alaska, down through that country—are so powerful that unless this company had power to construct their lines over portions of the territory which the other companies own, no one could go in there, and the time is fast approaching when they will be obliged to give others the power to enter that country and erect telephone and telegraph lines and do other work which they cannot do on account of the monopoly which exists at present in the country. I must confess that when I first read the Bill I thought it was an extraordinary one, but when I came to consider where its operations are to be carried on—and there are no powers given in this Bill which are not given in the other—I gave my weak support, whatever it might be, to the passage of the clause and I am quite satisfied that the gentlemen who come from the Northwest Territories and those particularly who have studied the question as effecting the unorganized territories will tell the hon. Secretary of State that if these amendments are adopted this Bill is not worth the snap of your finger.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not propose to restrict them in the slightest degree by the language I propose introducing there. But I say this Bill gives them power which parliament never contemplated, and which they never intended to use themselves. Under that Bill they can build a telegraph or telephone line between any two places in Canada. You do not give any other company the right to do that. They can erect a telegraph line between Calgary and Edmonton. They do not propose to do it. Why not say so. I have done my duty in calling the attention of the House to the matter.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—I was going to ask the hon. Secretary of State to give us a definition of unorganized territory. What does it mean? I think that the northern part of Quebec, the northern part of Ontario, Saskatchewan and Alberta would be unorganized.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—But how does the hon. gentleman draw the line? By what principle?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They are organized in the older provinces where they introduce municipal institutions and elect a council. In the northern part of Quebec it goes north to Roberval and here in this district it goes north to the Temiskaming territory, and so on in the west.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There will be no difficulty about ascertaining that.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No difficulty at all.

Hon. Mr. ROSS—I should like to know from the hon. leader of the House as to why they should not have a right to make a contract with the government, the only people who can make a contract to carry the mails.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have no objection to that, but it looks rather absurd. I have not the slightest objection to that part of it, because there is only one person.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Order.

Hon. Mr. ROSS—I do not think these people want to build telegraph lines in the organized portions of the territory, but hon. gentlemen must understand that the larger portion of Alberta and Saskatchewan are unorganized. These people want to do business between their posts in the unorganized portions of the territory, but I am afraid if this proposed clause goes in it will deter them from working in that portion of the province of Alberta which is organized, and therefore these people will be barred entirely from carrying out their enterprise. They can have these telephone lines in Mackenzie. That is from Fort Simpson to the mouth of the Mackenzie river. As a matter of fact it was all termed unorganized until last fall. Last year Arthabaska was cut in two, and part of it went to Saskatchewan and part to Alberta. That portion of the country we always called unorganized and that portion is not cut out in this Bill.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I do not suppose I can speak of what occurred in committee, but I was one of those who criticised and opposed some of the provisions of this Bill until the matter was thoroughly discussed. There was a great deal of information given there which the House is not in possesion of, but I am at liberty to say that this business is carried on not merely in the city of Quebec where they have a warehouse and storehouse, not merely in the city of Montreal where they have one, but in the northern part of the province of Quebec, in parts which are most difficult of access, and where there is almost as much difficulty and trouble in communicating between one point and another as there would be on the northern part of the Mackenzie river, and this territory on the other hand cannot be said to be unorganized. The province of Ontario, in consequence of a railway pushing north towards Hudson bay, is now organizing as fast as they can township after township, and therefore it would be a difficult thing, many of these posts would be cut out if you were to say unorganized parts of the province even.

What has occurred to me therefore is, after considering all that was stated in the discussions in committee here, to give them an opportunity to carry on their business. I believe that this is a very meritorious scheme in many ways and that these people are doing a great work for the public that could not be done otherwise in those outlying places, and they need all the encouragement possible. I would suggest, and it would overcome the whole difficulty, if instead of undertaking to define the limitations as proposed here by saying 'in the unorganized territory,' if it was left in a discretionary way so it could be determined by order in council. They could show, here is a place where we would not interfere with other business of a legitimate kind, and an order in council could be passed enabling them to operate in that portion of the country. It would meet with the approval of the House, it would meet the case of those people and give the public the convenience which the company propose to furnish and every other interest would be protected. If they made application to do this business, you will see the clause of the Bill will protect them :

4. Nothing in this section contained shall authorize the company to construct or operate any telegraph or telephone lines upon, along or across any highway or public place without first obtaining the consent, expressed by the by-law, of the municipality having jurisdiction over such highway or public place, and upon terms to be agreed upon with such municipality.

By this, municipalities and the public are protected. But if instead of using the strict words here an amendment were made in the different clauses, where the Secretary of State proposes to amend them by inserting, 'in such portions of territories and provinces of Canada as may be authorized by order in council' everybody would be protected and the company would be enabled to do that which would be a meritorious thing so far as the public are concerned.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have no objection.

Hon. Mr. FERGUSON—There should be a definition of the word territory, describing it as parts of the country included in an order in council.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will not press the first amendment. That may be struck out.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The amendment might be applied in the other two places.

Hon. Mr. ROY—Coming from that part of the country, I feel it my duty to make some remarks on the amendment. If I understood the hon. Secretary of State, he objected to that company connecting their telephone and telegraph lines with Edmonton.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I do not object to their connecting with existing lines.

Hon. Mr. ROY—If they can only operate in unorganized territory there is a municipality in Edmonton, and another at Athabaska Landing, 90 miles north of Edmonton, and they will not be able to operate within either of these municipalities. That means killing the Bill altogether. I do not see why this company should be obstructed in doing business in that part of the country. They have spent already millions of dollars and expect to spend millions more and are bringing people into that part of the country. If we prevent them carrying on operations in the way they ask permission to do, we are stopping competition. I should like to know from the hon. Secretary of State if under his amendment they could get into Edmonton ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have no desire to press my amendments against the opinions of the House. I have warned the House and given my views of the Bill and have done my duty. I did not consider that the amendments I proposed could in any way restrict the legitimate operations of the company. They are a fur company, intending to operate in the more remote portions of the country. Under this Bill they could construct telegraph or telephone lines anywhere they liked. Now, that surely was not contemplated by parliament.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—As one who has charge of this Bill, and as it is stated that these amendments would render the Bill useless to the company, thereby creating the impression that we are virtually killing the Bill, I would suggest that the third reading be postponed until to-morrow. The suggestion of the hon. senator from Toronto (Hon. Mr. Kerr) is a good one, and I think, in the best interests of all concerned, it would be better to postpone the third reading until to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Moosejaw)—This Bill has been pretty fairly discussed. We had the promoter before the committee, and about the only point on which the committee did not agree with him was on giving the company the right to expropriate land for telegraph and telephone lines. Now, there was some reason for these people asking the right to expropriate lands. To build a telegraph or telephone line from post to post, you will have to follow the rivers. They could not possibly put a line up across the country and cut down timber for miles and miles to build that line. They cannot build it through timber ; the windfalls would break down the lines from time to time. It would be impossible to keep it up. They must therefore follow the river, and following the river they will find companies with four and five thousand acres of land given them by an Imperial Act. To construct the line they must cross lands owned by rival companies, who will not allow even a rival boat to touch on their land. Their idea is to keep out competition and destroy the trade of rivals if they can. I think this company will do it too. To build a telegraph line they require power to cross those lands. In so far as building through the settled part of the country is concerned, I do not think they should have that right, but they must connect with the settled portions. For instance, in coming from Slave Lake or from Athabaska Landing to Edmonton they must pass through settled portions of the country, and they should have a right to do so. These people in the north—I have been amongst them there four or five months and I know exactly what those conditions are—will derive great advantage through the passage of this Bill. For instance, the government take every summer a great many thousands of dollars into that country for the purpose of paying the Indians their treaty money. Payment is made in dollar bills. This company and other small companies in that part of the country take in a certain amount of money and the smaller companies would like to be able to deposit that money with this larger company, and they, I suppose, would charge something to transmit the money down east. It is a convenience to these people to have these facilities. Then again, there are men up in that country who make money by trading or hunting, &c, and they want to make connections some way with the settled portions of the country. All they are asking for, as far as I am aware, is simply for the convenience of the people of that country.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—How would it do to introduce this amendment to section three, after the word 'settlements,' in the twentieth line of the Bill, the words 'where there is no competing line.'

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Then they could not come from the northwesterly portions of the country down to Edmonton.

Hon. Mr. ROSS—There is no business going on away up in the north where the companies posts are situated. They simply want to get into communication with the outside world. They do not want to go into the business of a telegraph company.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I do not think there is anything unreasonable in this Bill, except that to my mind there is something misleading in clause 11. I am sure it is clear to any one that the House is quite willing to facilitate the business of the company in every way. As has been pointed out, they must of course, make connections with the companies which are already in existence. I believe every one will agree to that proposition; but under clause 11, it would seem that they might be able to carry a telegraph line all over Canada. Some amendment should be made to section 11, probably that the company may carry on business in Canada and elsewhere as defined in clause three. I can see there is a desire on the part of every one that this Bill should be made of use to the company. They are carrying on a very important business; the best evidence we have of that is the high character given to the members of the company by senators who live in that part of the country. Everything that can be done should be done to aid them; at the same time we must not let them go all over Canada. I think it would be well to pin them down to the business of their own company, not forbidding them to make connections with other telephone or telegraph lines.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I propose to insert the following words in section three after 'settlements':

'As may be authorized by order in council.

That would enable the company to go to council and make an application showing the convenience which would result to the public, and get the necessary authority. If they are interfering with any existing right, the Governor in Council will be in a position to protect that right. In the same way in section nine I would insert the words:

'In any portions of the territory in which its fur and trading posts are now, or are hereafter established, as may be authorized by order in council.

Then I would amend clause eleven by adding the words:

Subject to the provisions herein contained.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think the hon. Secretary of State might accept these amendments ; it would then leave it within the power of the Governor in Council to object to the construction of any line which would interfere with existing rights.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—With these amendments I think the Bill would be acceptable ; but without them, I think with all due respect and sympathy for this great company, which is doing a great deal of good—we must admit it is a most extraordinary Bill, one of the most extraordinary ever introduced during the time I have been in parliament. We are incorporating a telegraph and telephone company ; we are giving them power to do a lumber business—in fact every power possible ; but with these amendments perhaps it will be possible to safeguard existing interests as the matter will be in the hands of the Governor in Council. I submit, however, that the first clause ought also to be amended in a similar way. According to that clause the company can make contracts to carry mails in any portion of the territory in which its fur and trading posts are now or may hereafter be established. Suppose they have a post in Montreal and they establish one in Montmagny, they would have a right to make a contract to carry the mails with any corporation or person, with the government or with any one else.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Post Office Act prevents any one carrying even one letter without subjecting himself to a fine, unless he has the consent of the government.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Exactly, but with this clause there will be a fight between them and the government if we give them the right to carry the mail. It is just as well to safeguard it now.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I would like to tell my hon. friend that if any person who is not a member of parliament wishes to do so, he could go to-morrow and make a contract with the government of Canada to carry the mail from the railway station to the town. It is done everywhere without an Act of parliament.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto).

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Regina)—These people will carry the mails themselves. They wish to do so and it is for the satisfaction of the people who live in these remote districts. The very thing the government wants is to get this company to do that work.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is scarcely a month that the Postmaster General does not ask for contracts for carraying mails between different points in the Dominion. The Postmaster General has the power to enter into a contract with the hon. gentleman himself if he were not a member of parliament, for carrying the mails. All this company asks is that they may have the corporate power to enter into a contract with the government, if the government want them to carry the mail in the unorganized territories.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I do not think that is the meaning of the clause.

The SPEAKER—Do I understand the hon. Secretary of State to withdraw his amendment ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, I withdraw the amendment to the first section.

The SPEAKER—The question is on the amendment proposed to clause 3.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not propose to divide the House on this clause, but I wish to emphasize what has been said by the hon. gentleman who has just sat down (Hon. Mr. Choquette). I do not think the attention of the Senate has been sufficiently directed to the character of this Bill. We have never passed a Bill which is more emphatically an omnibus Bill than this one.

Under clause 2,

The company may build, construct, lease, own and operate ships and vessels for the carriage of passengers and of merchandise, and carry on the business of wharfingers and warehousemen.

Under clause 3,

Subject to the provisions of the Railway Act, 1903, and amendments thereto, the company may construct and operate telegraph and telephone lines between any of its posts or settlements.

That really means that they are authorized under this Act to build telegraph and telephone lines all over Canada because their posts are scattered over the whole country. Hon. gentlemen will remember that only to-day this House received a report which refused to allow a company which applied for a charter for the purpose of doing nothing but building and operating telegraph and telephone lines throughout Canada—refused to allow them to do that, and decided that they should be limited to the province of British Columbia. Yet here we are now undertaking to authorize a company to do this very thing—to build and operate telegraph and telephone lines over the whole face of Canada ; and that is only one of about a dozen different kinds of business which the company is authorized to conduct. We have heard something said about consistency ; now I appeal to the House to know whether the action which was taken this afternoon in dealing with that Northern Telegraph Companies Bill and the action which we are taking now, are consistent with each other.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—It is only between their own posts.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Excuse me, they have posts all over the country, as for example, one in Montreal, another in Toronto, as I understand, and one in Edmonton ; and the Bill allows them to construct these lines without any restrictions, not even subject to the limitations which we have placed on other companies when they come here for special incorporation. Here are the gentlemen who would not allow the company I have mentioned to do business anywhere except in the province of British Columbia, prepared to support this measure.

This Bill goes on to provide :

4. The company may buy, lease, develop and sell timber limits and rights, and in connection therewith build, erect, establish, own and operate saw-mills and their accessories, and also, in connection therewith or otherwise, purchase, lease, develop and sell water-powers and their accessories.

5. The company may buy lease, own, sell and operate mines and the products thereof, and deal in mining claims of every description.

6. The company may buy, lease, own, sell and develop land for the purposes of colonization and of settlement.

7. The company may buy, sell, lease and dispose of fishing and hunting rights and privileges.

8. The company may preserve and can fish, meat, vegetables, and articles of a similar nature, and may carry on the business of general merchants, manufacturers and millers, both wholesale and retail.

9. The company may carry on the business of a money forwarder by post, telegraph or other means, in any portion of the territory in which its fur and trading posts are now or are hereafter established.

10. The company may receive money on deposit from its employees and servants, upon such terms as to interest, security or otherwise as are agreed upon.

11. The company may carry on business in Canada and elsewhere.

If there is anything else under the canopy of Heaven that any company can do, which this company cannot do, under this charter, I should like to know what it is. I think it is the most extraordinary, and I would almost say outrageous piece of legislation which has ever come before this House.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Moosejaw)—The company is asking for about the same powers as the Hudson Bay Company have to-day.

Hon. Mr. POWER—We did not incorporate the Hudson Bay Company.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Moosejaw)—The company ask for the right to construct and operate vessels for fur trading. They must have boats on the inland waters; they cannot do business without that. In the next place they want the right to build telephone and telegraph lines from post to post. It is a terrible thing to give that power—they ought not to be allowed to have that at all. It helps not only themselves, but their rival companies even, and the settlements up there will be benefited. Those settlements may not be large, but if there are only 100 people at a post they want to be in communication with the outside world if possible. That is a terrible thing to grant. In the next place, they wish to buy and develop timber limits. As a matter of fact what the people who are living in that country want above all things is that mills should be built. This company has the money and are able to take in boilers engines and machinery for the purpose of manufacturing lumber. For goodness sake let them do it. Why stop them ? Have they to come here from time to time for permission to do all these things? They must do so; therefore give them power to do it. They want to buy, lease, sell and operate mines. Well, there might be something in that outside their business, but I do not know that anybody will object to them doing it. If they can develop any mines in that country it will be a good thing for Canada. They will likely be able to do it, because they will have more opportunity and more knowledge in regard to that northern country than anybody else. They have their explorers all over the country. They know every creek and every lake. They should have the power and I have no doubt in the world you will find on account of their operations that it will open up that northern territory as a mining country.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Have the Hudson Bay Company any rights of this kind?

Hon. Mr. ROSS—I never knew of any rights they did not have.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—What has this company done up to this time? They have carried on their operations for many years without legislation.

Hon. Mr. ROSS—They have a Company's Act. They do not require an Act for any of these things except mining. I hope they will put up some money and open up the country. I have been in the country and know something about it: I have an idea that this company and the Hudson Bay Company, when they have facilities close to them, when the Peace river is open to them, and the navigation is open to Slave lake, will open up the country with their boats, and if they will develop the mines there I hope they will be successful. There is nothing that I know of in this Bill that they are asking for that will not be beneficial to that northern country, and I trust will be a benefit to Canada.

Hon. Mr. JAFFRAY—I think we should understand that the Secretary of State does not wish to interfere with these people, but he wishes that their rights should be defined.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. JAFFRAY—And his objection is to their having powers extending all over Canada. I quite agree with the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Moosejaw, that it is desirable to give them every power to develop that country, but let it be understood that these powers are not to be exercised over the whole of Canada, as the 11th clause provides. I think it is a wide and dangerous power that this Senate has no right to give.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Moosejaw).

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I was going to refer to subsection 4, of clause 3, which reads as follows:

4. Nothing in this section contained shall authorize the company to construct or operate any telegraph or telephone lines upon, along or across any highway or public place without first obtaining the consent, expressed by by-law, of the municipality having jurisdiction over such highway or public place, and upon terms to be agreed upon with such municipality.

I was going to say that there was no municipality out there, and that they should be put under some proper authority. We should add the words: 'The Lieutenant Governor of the province,' or 'The Commissioner of the Territories, as the case may be'.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—If the hon. gentleman will look at subclause 3 of clause 3, he will see that the Electric Telegraph Company Act shall apply to the telegraph business of the company, which covers the point he calls attention to.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I was not aware of that; it may be so.

The clause was adopted.

The amendment to clause 9 was adopted.

The amendment to clause 11 was adopted.

On clause 1,

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I would suggest that the same word be added to clause 1. It provides that the company may enter into contracts with any government or person for the carriage of mails. I think it might be subject to difficulties hereafter and misunderstanding. Would the passage of this clause supercede the provisions of the Post Office Act?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Or are they to be read in the light of the provision in the Post Office Act? If they are not, then the company could enter into a contract with a corporation or with a person to carry their mails and other matters from one post to another, in any portion of the country which would be in competition with the carrying of the mails by the contractor of the government. I do not think there is any such contention, but we ought to guard the Bill, so as to prevent it. And if the hon. gentleman moving the amendment would make the first clause subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, that would meet the point.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I regard it as permissive, and the Postmaster General would exercise the proper discretion. I do not think there need be any fear or apprehension under the first clause, because it rests with the Postmaster General. Those contracts are not assignable, and nobody can carry the mails without the assent of the Postmaster General.

Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We understand that. But the point I am trying to make is this; would the passage of the Bill supercede——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no.

Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Well let it go. I have no objection.

Hon. Mr. COFFEY moved the third reading of the Bill.

The motion was agreed to on a division, and the Bill was then read a third time and passed.

SECOND READING.

Bill (207) An Act to amend the Grain Inspection Act.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

The Senate adjourned until three p.m. tomorrow.

THE SENATE

OTTAWA, Thursday, June 28, 1906.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (LL) An Act for the relief of Nettie M. Bulmer.—(Hon. Mr. Frost.)

Bill (Y) An Act to incorporate the Prince Albert and North Saskatchewan Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Davis.)

NORTHERN COMMERCIAL TELEGRAPH COMPANY BILL.

AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN.

The order of the day being called:

Consideration of the amendments made by the Standing Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours to (Bill 139) An Act respecting the Northern Commercial Telegraph Company, Limited.—(Hon. Mr. Lougheed.)

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The promoters of this company very strongly object to one of the amendments made to the Bill, namely, limiting the territory through which they propose to operate. I understand that my hon. friend from Victoria proposes to move that the report be not concurred in, and has an amendment to move.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Would it not be more regular to wait until some hon. gentlemen moved concurrence in the report, and then move that the first amendment be not concurred in?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—For the purpose of facilitating the discussion on the subject, I beg to move concurrence in the amendment.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The solicitor for this company has placed what you might call a brief in my hand. The incorporators of this company were first of all, in England, the Right Hon. Lord Thurlow and Theodore Van Puten, of the city of London, England, Edward Friedburg, of the county of Surrey, England, William Braid and William Naismith, both of the city of Vancouver, B.C., Allen Haley, of the town of Windsor, N.S., and Isaac Burpee, of the city of St. John, N.B.

This company did a great deal of work and subscribed their capital, paid up 25 per cent, went to work, and gave instructions for poles in British Columbia, so as to construct the telegraph line up to Dawson. In the meantime the government took in hand to build a telegraph line from Vancouver to Dawson, and that killed the enterprise of this company. Notwithstanding what was done at that time they want to go on again, and to get power to build telegraph and telephone lines over different parts of the Dominion of Canada. An amendment was made in the committee striking out the power to operate throughout Canada, confining their operations entirely to British Columbia. As the honourable House will see, this destroys the scheme of the company; they would not go into operation at all if confined to that one province. They might just as well have been confined to Nova Scotia, New Brunswick or any other of the provinces. So many companies have been incorporated with power to operate over the whole Dominion that I do not think it is quite right to select this company and confine them entirely to one province. I have here a list of Bills for the same purpose relating to companies incorporated by the parliament of Canada. Seven or eight of them are granted powers to operate all over Canada. I shall not trouble the House by reading the names of these various companies, but will simply say that this company should not be singled out and confined in its operations according to this amendment, and I hope the House will reject it. I would ask the hon. gentleman who moved this amendment if he will withdraw it. If the company fail in their undertaking it will hurt no one, and if they succeed they will accomplish a great deal of good by constructing telegraph and telephone lines in different parts of the country. I move that the first amendment be not concurred in.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—It was I who made the motion in the committee that the words 'British Columbia' be substituted for 'Canada.' This company was incorporated some years ago, with the object, as stated by the hon. gentleman, of building a telegraph line from Victoria to Dawson City, with the right to lay cables where necessary for the purpose of making connections. Their counsel appeared before the committee and claimed that the company was deprived of the opportunity of building that line because the government undertook to build a telegraph line to Dawson City. He represented that they had some wire on hand and that they wanted the privilege of using that wire in constructing a line. But in this Bill it is not simply a telegraph line they ask power to build, but a telegraph and telephone line, with the right to lay cables in any waters in all parts of Canada. We are therefore virtually incorporating a telephone company; and my object in limiting these people to British Columbia was, I might say, because in the first charter they defined the location of their proposed line as being on the west coast of British Columbia. We are really extending the territory of the company beyond that if we give them the right to operate in any part of British Columbia. It is well known that there is at the present time a great agitation in favour of municipal ownership for the control of telephone lines, &c., and I think it is a mistake to give any company permission to go into the telephone business in any part of Canada. I know in the province of Manitoba the legislature unanimously adopted a resolution approving of the provincial government taking over the telephone system. It would be a mistake to pass legislation of this kind giving these people freedom to construct telegraph and telephone lines in any part of Canada, and for that reason I moved in committee to substitute the province of British Columbia for Canada.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC—During the last ten or fifteen years parliament has granted several charters to companies giving them these powers. If the House sustains the amendment made in the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, I do not think this parliament has a right to grant the charter, because it then becomes a local affair, coming exclusively under the jurisdiction of the government of British Columbia. I do not see why this company should be singled out and prevented from exercising the same powers which has been granted to other companies. When this company's first charter was granted, they were authorized to build a line to the Yukon. There was very little necessity for it then and the company delayed building. The great cry has been against monopolies in railways, telegraphs and telephones, and in a new country like western Canada the more competition we have in these matters the better. Companies should be encouraged to construct them, so I shall support the motion of the hon. senator from Victoria, and I hope this House will adopt the Bill as it was first presented.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I entirely endorse the view taken by the hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie. In committee we gave this Bill full consideration. In the first place the company based their claim simply on the ground that they had bought wire to build a line to the Yukon, and the government had stepped in and prevented them from doing so, and they still had the wire and wanted to use it. I have no doubt they could place the wire on the market to-morrow and sell it for 50 per cent more than it cost them, so there is nothing in that argument. Then as to the right of this House to pass the Bill restricting the company to British Columbia, this House is within its right, because the company asked the privilege of laying cables, which no province could give them power to do. It was also said at the meeting of the committee that parliament would in all probability meet again within six months, and in the meantime this company could show its good faith and begin work in British Columbia. They have been in existence for eight years and have done nothing, but if they show a readiness to go to work, they may be able to convince parliament of their good faith and it will then be time enough to consider the proposition to give them more extensive powers. The notice they gave of this application for a charter was very limited. For an application to carry on undertakings from the Atlantic to the Pacific, a very extended notice should be given so that all parties interested would have an opportunity to be heard before the committee. I concur in the opinion of the hon. senator from Portage la Prairie that the company's operations, for the present at all events, should be limited to British Columbia.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is to be regretted that the report of the committee should be discussed in the House, but since the discussion has come up I think it is one's duty to express his opinion on the subject. This company was incorporated in 1898 for the purpose of building a telegraph and cable line between Vancouver and Dawson along the coast of British Columbia. The company were put out of business by the government which undertook to build the line themselves, and declined the offer of the company. The company offered to put up the line and, I think, to pay the government whatever expense they had beeen put to in making surveys, but the latter declined the offer of the company, and so the company could do nothing under their original charter.

I submit that this company should be placed in no worse position to-day than if they were making a first application to parliament for a charter to go into the telegraph and telephone business throughout Canada; and I do not think any hon. gentleman can point a single instance where this parliament has refused to charter a company which asked for those powers. I need not refer to the Montreal Telegraph Company and the Great Northwest Telegraph Company and the powers given to the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Canadian Rapid Telegraph Company and the North Atlantic Telegraph Company, but I shall just refer to two or three charters which have been granted lately. In 1903 the Canadian Telephone and Telegraph Company was by chapter 100 authorized to construct, maintain, acquire by purchase, lease, &c., and operate by means of cables, poles and conduits, overhead or underground, telegraph and telephone lines, to or from any place in Canada. The powers granted to that company in 1903 were on all fours with the powers proposed to be granted to this company. Then in 1902 the Canadian Northern Telegraph Company was authorized to do the same thing as to telegraph lines, and again by an Act which we passed during the present session, the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company was authorized to establish, construct or acquire and operate any overhead, underground or cable line or lines of telephone or telegraph or any system of wireless telegraphy or of signalling or any magnetic communication to or from any places in Canada or elsewhere. There never was any question raised in this House with respect to the granting of any of these charters, and I fail to see why there should be opposition in this case, looking at it as though it was an original charter; and I contend the fact that the government put the original company out of business is no reason why the present company should not come and ask for power to do what any other body of men have been given power to do. With respect to the procedure, I think that in this case it has not been quite fair to the promoters of this company. This question as to limiting the powers of the company to the province of British Columbia was brought up when the Bill was discussed the first time in the Railway Committee. The Railway Committee reported to this House, giving the company the power to do business all over Canada. The hon. gentleman from Kamloops pointed out that certain clauses which had been inserted in the charter of the Grand Trunk Pacific Telegraph Company had not been inserted in this charter, and he thought that these clauses should be inserted, and the House agreed with him, and the hon. gentleman from Kamloops moved that the Bill be referred back to the committee for further consideration. The understanding of the House was that the reference back was for the purpose of having the changes which were indicated by the hon. gentleman from Kamloops made in the Bill, and when the amendments which the hon. gentleman presented had been adopted by the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, and the Bill was about being reported, the hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie moved this amendment, which took the small number of members who were then present completely by surprise.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I think not. I objected at the meeting of the committee, as I had a right to do; and I objected when the matter came up in the House.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This matter had been discussed at the previous meeting of the committee. The hon. gentleman had not succeeded in inducing a majority of the committee to take his view, and what I contend is, that while the hon. gentleman was strictly within his rights it was something which took the committee by surprise, something not expected, and inasmuch as the committee had already expressed its opinion on that point it was rather irregular to make the motion as the hon. gentleman did.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—It is irregular to refer to what occurred in committee.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Why did the hon. gentleman not raise that point when the hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie spoke of what took place in committee? The hon. gentleman is perfectly right; I was out of order, but I was only one of three who have been out or order in connection with this matter already to-day. I have no interest in this question one way or the other; but I do not see any reason why the gentlemen who apply for this incorporation should be treated differently from any other gentlemen who have in the past applied for incorporation under similar circumstances. Hon. gentlemen will remember that yesterday this House granted to a company a power to do just what this company seeks, to establish telegraph and telephone lines all over Canada, and it was not the only power that the company got; they also obtained power to do every kind of business you can mention in addition to telegraph and telephone; and I do not see why the incorporators in this Bill should be treated differently from any other people. I shall, therefore, support the amendment of the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I am astonished at my hon. friend who has just resumed his seat for the course he has taken because it was only the other day he was upbraiding the members of the House for not adopting the report of a committee. With regard to the Bill that was before the House last night, it must be admitted that in that Bill they ask for everything that they got, but they already had it in their charter. The difference between that company and this is simply that these people had authority to build a line from Vancouver to the Yukon, along the west coast of British Columbia. When the government built the Yukon line it did not put them out of business. It simply stopped them from going any further, because they believed there would not be room in that part of the country for business for two such lines, particularly with one belonging to the government.

These people have laid on their oars for eight years and now they ask this House to grant them the power to lay a cable line along the west coast of British Columbia or anywhere else in Canada. By this request—a concealed request if you like—it will be seen that they ask for the liberty of doing the same thing on the Atlantic coast and then to have connection from one coast to the other, in other words to build a telegraph line from the shores of the Pacific to the shores of the Atlantic. Why did not the company come like a reputable company, and ask for the right to build a telegraph and telephone system from the Atlantic to the Pacific? We would then have had the other companies who are doing telegraph and telephone business throughout Canada here to preserve their rights. It was found out during the course of the discussion that the conditions of the Bill are altogether at variance with what they are asking for, according to the representations made by the company. They simply say they want power to build along the west coast of British Columbia. The committee felt that if the company had the telegraph wire on hand they might at least give them the power to build telegraph and telephone lines in the province of British Columbia, and that that would be sufficient without giving them power to build from the Atlantic to the Pacific. I think the committee did what was right and proper and I venture to say that no company would have come here asking for such wide powers without giving notice to the other companies interested. We talk about vested rights—they are vested rights. The Bell Telephone Company and other companies have spent millions of money in the construction of telegraph and telephone lines; and this company are simply asking by way of a blind what appears to be a very small matter—power to lay a cable line along the west coast of British Columbia, 'or elsewhere.' Elsewhere may mean —and that is what it does mean—along the east coast of Canada. Then they will be able to build connecting lies from one coast to the other. That is the real purport of the Bill, and I for one, as a member of the committee, will stand by the committee's report.

The Senate divided on the amendment which was adopted. Contents, 22; non-contents, 17.

The other amendments were then concurred in.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the third reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. WATSON moved that the Bill be not now read a third time, but that it be amended by striking out the word 'telephone' where it occurs in the 4th line of clause 2. He said: My particular objection to limiting the Bill to the province of British Columbia was on account of the telephone clause. So far as telegraphing is concerned it can be done by any company. It is simply a matter of convenience between the sender and receiver, but it must be admitted by every one that the telephone, to be of service, must of necessity be a monopoly, and so long as the government have control of rates the fewer people that engage in telephone business the better. I do not think any one who has had experience of two or three telephone systems in a city wants to have the experience continued, and, for that reason, I am strongly opposed to chartering any more companies with power to do a telephone business, because they may induce municipalities to adopt more than one system with the hope of getting a cheaper service. To have a good service you must have a large connection, and of necessity the telephone business must be a monopoly. What we want to do is to work on the line of regulating the charges and then allow the companies that are in the business to give the service. The province of Manitoba decided unanimously in the legislature to go into the telephone business. They believe it can be done by the province. The Bell Telephone Company is there now, and power has been taken to expropriate its lines if the province see fit. I favour the suggestions which have been made to amend the Railway Act, giving the Railway Commission power to control the rates and provide for connections. The Bill provides that connections must be made with long distance lines, and if a municipality wishes to go into the telephone business, the Bell Telephone Company is bound to give them connections over the long distance lines and at the terminals as well.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—If it is a good thing to have competition in telegraph, I think it is also a good thing to have competition in telephones. We are told that a telephone monopoly is a good thing.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I do not say it is a good thing, but I say of necessity it is a monopoly.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I do not think so. My hon. friend says he does not want to have two or three telephones in a house, but no person is obliged to take more than one telephone if he does not want it. In the province of Saskatchewan at the present time we have a telephone system in the larger towns, but no long distance system, and the people up there would be only too happy to see any company coming in that would establish telephones all over the country. We are not stuck on the Bell Telephone Company, and I do not see why they should have any special rights.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie has used the strongest argument he could against his own amendment. He says telephones are a monopoly now.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I said telephones of necessity are a monopoly.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—No telephone company can compete with a municipality, because the municipality can block the company at every point. I hope the House will reject the amendment and let the Bill go through as it is.

The Senate divided on the amendment which was rejected.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

MANITOBA GRAIN ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (205). He said: This is a Bill of one clause which deals with the distribution of cars. It provides that:

> (b) When an applicant has loaded or cancelled a car allotted to him he may, if he requires another car, become eligible therefor by placing his name, together with the section, township and range in which he resides, at the bottom of the list; and when the second car has been allotted to him and he has loaded or cancelled it, he may again write his name, together with the section, township and range in which he resides, at the bottom of the list; and so on, until his requirements have been filled.
> (c) No applicant shall have more than one unfilled order on the order book at any time.

The only difference I see between the law as it is proposed is that in the existing Act it did not apply to a party who had cancelled a car. In this Bill it seems to be wider and gives a larger privilege.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

FOREST RESERVES BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

Pursuant to the order of the day the House went into Committee of the Whole on Bill (47) An Act respecting Forest Reserves.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have obtained from the Interior Department a map showing where the forest reserves are laid off. The plan shows in green several reserves, the Porcupine Riding mountain, Duck mountain, &c.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Are these reserves to be kept entirely in the government's hands?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. The reserves in the railway belt in British Columbia are shown on a separate map. They chiefly consist of high mountain land.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—How much of these reserves are under license to cut timber?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Some of the lands are under license; of course the licensees are interested equally with the government in preserving the timber. Some gentlemen have asked for the areas of the reserves. In Manitoba the sizes are as follows:—

Riding mountain consists of 1,535 square miles.
Duck mountain, 2 square miles.
Porcupine No 1, 324 square miles.
Lake Manitoba west, 248 square miles.
Sprucewoods, 110 square miles.
Turtle mountain, 100 square miles.
Total in Manitoba, 3,537 square miles.

In Saskatchewan the areas of the reserves are:

Moose mountain, 69 square miles.
Beaver hill, 172 square miles.
The Pines, 145 square miles.
Porcupine No. 2, 252 square miles.
Total in Saskatchewan, 632 square miles

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Is it the intention of the government to commence planting trees in these reserves?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I hope the hon. Secretary of State will not forget that there are trees imported from different parts of Europe at a great cost, and between Lake Superior and Winnipeg there are millions of trees the right seizes for transplanting. The hon. gentleman from Killarney will bear me out in that. There are poplar, pine and spruce, six to ten feet high, and the government could save a great deal of money and a good deal of trouble if they had the trees dug up at the proper time, in the winter, when there is a ball of frozen earth around the roots. There are between Lake Superior and Winnipeg millions of trees, enough to plant the whole Northwest.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—When this Bill came up for second reading, it was suggested that the principle of the Bill might be discussed in committee owing to the limitation of our time. I only desire to say that this is legislation in the right direction. It is somewhat belated, and while it is in the right direction, yet it is not as extended as I should like to see it. The only regrettable feature about this legislation is that it makes no provision for reforestation for the reproduction of trees. Not only this government but the previous government have been very lax in giving proper attention to the reforestation, particularly of our western land, and tree culture which might have been carried out successfully had attention been given to that important subject. It is never too late to carry out a great problem of this kind, particularly in a new country like Canada, and I see no good reason why this Bill should not have gone to the extent of promulgating a policy by which a state of forestry might be promoted in those vast prairie lands which would be extremely advantageous, I understand that in some parts of the states tree claims have been administrated by the government; I am not sure whether by the state government or the federal authorities. But under their homestead laws, my recollection is that provision was made in their statute-book that a certain quantity of trees should be cultivated upon each homestead before the homesteader became entitled to his patent. There is no good reason why this should not have been carried out years ago in the Northwest. Had it been made a condition of the homestead requirements it is not an exaggeration to say that thousands and thousands of acres would have been covered to-day with a very desirable growth of timber. I see no good reason why the Department of the Interior should not introduce into the Dominion Lands Act a condition that a homesteader should plant a certain number of trees around his farm before he receives his homestead patent. There is no scarcity of young trees. My hon. friend gave the figures of the trees distributed from the experimental farms in the Northwest by the Department of Agriculture. Does my hon. friend recollect the number distributed annually?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, it has increased very largely, and it was thought the distribution this present year would be two million trees.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Those experimental farms are convenient of access to most of the centres of settlement in that western country, and it certainly would not be a very difficult matter to successfully introduce a policy compelling homesteaders to plant a certain number of trees upon their homesteads annually. Had this been carried out years ago, nearly all the farms in the Northwest might have been supplied with a very desirable growth of trees. We have very little conception of the importance of forestry to the Dominion of Canada. Our exports of timber alone will approximate $5,000,000 annually and the raw and manufactured products will approximate $35,000,000. We have more square miles of forest in Canada than in the United States. It is estimated that we have within the Dominion a total area of 1,250,000 square miles of forest, equivalent to 38 per cent of the whole surface of the country. It is assumed that we have 165 acres of forest for every inhabitant, one-third of the Dominion being made up of timbered lands. Whether these statistics are to be relied upon, I cannot say for the moment, but they have been taken from what is regarded as a reliable authority. This being the case, surely it would not be unreasonable to expect that the government might successfully introduce a policy of reforestation. But up to the present nothing has been done by the government to compel the reforestation of those tracts of land which are denuded of their timber. This work is carried on in many parts of Europe, in Germany, France, Austria, Denmark and Belgium, and also in the British Indies, the Cape of Good Hope, and Japan. And has been carried on so successfully that it is said to pay a very handsome interest upon the investment, in many cases having been productive of more satisfactory results then the cultivation of the land. This being the case, and as the government has entered upon this question of giving some attention to the preservation of our forests, it is not too much to hope that this policy may be very considerably extended; that the question of reforestation may receive that attention to which it is entitled, and also that the government may go further and make it a condition precedent to any homesteader obtaining a homestead that he shall cultivate a certain number of trees upon his claim annually.

.Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I entirely concur in the observations made by the hon. leader of the opposition. The subject to me is not a new one, but it is one upon which it is extremely difficult to educate the people of the country. It is now over 40 years since circumstances led to my taking a special interest in the preservation of our pine forests. But at that time it was absolutely impossible to make any impression whatever on public opinion. It was thought that one hundred years would find Canada possessed of vast forests. It was not thought that fire or the axe could denude this country of timber; that it would last for ages. That was the case not only in Upper and Lower Canada, but also in New Brunswick where, at the time of which I speak, the policy was the most insane and destructive that could be conceived. Year after year the timber licenses were put up for sale by auction. The man who bought it had no security that he would hold it the following year, and so he took the finest timber he could get. I am speaking now of a period before the introduction of the machinery for sawing lumber, when the lumbering interests of this country was confined to the export of square timber. At the period of which I speak, the United States was pretty well supplied with timber, particularly in Wisconsin and Michigan, where to-day there is none, and, in consequence, the water in the streams rush off in the months of April and May leaving none for the succeeding months of the year, the freshet descending and carrying destruction before it. At the time of which I speak, when this subject was first introduced it was absolutely impossible to induce the press to take it up. The theory was that the settlers should be allowed to go into any timber limit and cut down the timber and do what he liked with it, burn it up, and a year or two afterwards settle in another timber area and destroy the magnificent pine. It took years and years to educate even the governments of the provinces to the importance of preserving the timber. In 1872 and 1873, being commissioner of Crown lands, and having had a good deal to do with the subject before that, I introduced regulations with a view of preserving the timber of the country, appointing forest rangers or fire wardens who would pass through the timber limits between the months of May and October in order to check the fires that were from time to time created by settlers, fishermen, and others; but the absolute indifference of the people of the country to the value and importance of the forest resources, and the slight appreciation they had of the necessity of preserving the timber, led to a policy which has been most destructive. I do not hesitate to say that if 50 years ago anything like fair and reasonable measures had been taken to preserve the timber of Canada. $200,000,000 worth might have been saved from destruction. In the latter part of the fifties and the beginning of the sixties it was conceded that more timber was burned than went to the market from year to year. Hon. gentlemen who have passed over the Canadian Pacific Railway through the Ottawa valley have observed miles and miles of territory where fires have destroyed magnificent pine forests within the last 40 years. The wealth of California could not be compared to the wealth of our timber areas, had anything like reasonable efforts been made to preserve them from destruction. It is conceded that the white and red pine grown on the northern part of this continent is unequalled by any other timber in the world. It has been valued highly in Europe, and large quantities were sent yearly to European markets. I am extremely glad to hear the observations of my hon. friend. They are in the right direction and I shall be only too glad to impress my colleagues with the views he has expressed. Of course it is quite in line with the policy the government has adopted. The convention that met here in January last was for the purpose of bringing before the public the importance of adopting measures not only to preserve the existing forests, but also to induce the people to take up the system that now exists in Europe, of reforestation. An effort is now being made in the Northwest to do so. I had an illustration of it the other day, when we brought forward the measure here for exchanging certain Crown lands for school lands, with a view of continuing in the possession of the forestry station a depot that has formed to grow the young plants. It happened to be a suitable location, and on that occasion I referred to the fact that year by year the number of tree plants that have been sent out from the particular station has been increasing enormously, and that the distribution for the present year is calculated to be at least 2,000,000. But that is a mere bagatelle compared with the whole area. If there was a forestry station every 5 miles in the Northwest it would be a most valuable enterprise, because all that region, which is called the arid plain in southern Saskatchewan and Alberta, as the hon. gentleman stated, might, under certain conditions, be made to grow trees, increasing the value of the territory enormously.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—I recognize the importance of reforestation, especially in our western prairies, but at the same time the government should go carefully in this matter, especially with regard to the settlers or homesteaders. They are mostly poor people, and the government should not put too heavy burdens on their shoulders. There may be some districts where the government might themselves establish something in that way and that would be better than imposing too heavy burdens on the settlers.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I am very much pleased that the government have seen fit to introduce this Bill, and to introduce it in its present shape. For some years the government have had timber reserves in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories, but the limits of those reserves have always been encroached on by settlers, and in the past it must have been very hard for the Minister of the Interior to resist the encroachment of settlement on those reserves. Settlers would claim that there was very little timber on land suitable for growing wheat, and that they wanted homesteads, and thus encroachments were made from time to time on the reserves, but now the government have, by Act of parliament, set out what the boundaries of those reserves are. In addition to the commercial value of the timber in Canada, there is no doubt that in the west they will be very valuable for the precipitation of moisture. We all know that where there is a forest it draws and retains moisture and in fact in the prairie country the sources of our streams are in those forests. Take the Riding mountains, one of the largest forest reserves in the west; it is all good soil, and no doubt if settlers were allowed to go in there the timber would be cleared and the land cultivated though at such an altitude it might not be profitable to grow wheat. There is an immense amount of timber there, and that is the source of water supply to the Assiniboine river. If that timber were allowed to be destroyed, there would be very little water in the Assiniboine river. The attention of the people of Canada has been called to the fact that the levels of the waters of Lake Huron and Lake Superior are going down. There is no doubt in my mind that that is due to the destruction of the forests. There is not now the same percipitation of moisture as there was in former years. The work that has been done in the west in growing timber is probably due not so much to reforestation as to preventing fires. If the fires are prevented the prairie, in a very short time will become forest where it is not disturbed by the plough. Seeds take root and will grow almost anywhere in the west if the fires are kept down. In this Bill provision is made for fire guardians, and I know that for the last two years the government have given a great deal of attention to keeping fires out of the bush, and I think, so far as the west is concerned, every member from the prairie country commends the government for the action taken at the present time. There is no doubt about the change in the climate which follows. During last summer I had occasion to go down through the state of Nebraska. In that state, for a number of years, tree planting homesteads have been taken up and any one travelling through that part of the country now would suppose that it had always been a thickly forested country instead of open prairie as it was some years ago. At one time our Dominion land regulations provided for tree planting claims. I think ten acres was the area a person was supposed to plant with trees and a certain number of trees were to be kept growing on each acre. By doing that, the homesteader became entitled to a patent for 160 acres. I think that provision is eliminated from the Dominion lands regulations now, but it was in force in the west formerly. Very few people took advantage of it, but at the present time there is hardly a thrifty farmer in Manitoba who is not planting trees on his farm. They have learned what can be done in the way of beautifying their farms and obtaining protection against the cold winter winds and also holding the moisture in the soil, by planting trees. They have also had the advantage of visits to the experimental farms, and have learned there what can be done in this direction. This work is having a very beneficial effect, and I certainly endorse the action of the government in introducing this Bill.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—I am very pleased indeed to see this Bill brought into the House and that so much interest is being taken in the question of forest reserves. It is a most important matter to British Columbia on account of the large amount of timber we have had destroyed there in late years. This Bill can, of course, only affect what is known as the railway belt, and the reserves which have been laid out in that belt are largely set apart for the purpose of preserving the water at the sources of the creeks to enable the people to keep up the irrigation of lands in the dry part of the railway belt. At the present time a large amount of work is being done by the forestry association which is in connection with the Interior Department, and I am glad to see that as the result of the work of that association the people of the country are taking a great deal more interest in the matter of planting trees and of preserving the trees which are already growing. The association will hold a meeting in British Columbia in September next, and there is great hope on the part of those who are interested in this question that it will have the effect of awakening the provincial government, and the people in British Columbia generally, to a greater sense of their duty in this matter. I regret to say that the provincial government have not seen their way to co-operate with the Dominion government in their endeavour to prevent the destruction of forests by fire, so that we are at the present time in this unfortunate position, that although we are protecting the railway belt by means of fire rangers during the dangerous part of the year and have been successful in preventing fires within the belt, a large number of fires are started outside the belt and on account of the provincial government not taking the necessary action in the matter these fires make great headway before they enter the belt and are therefore very much more difficult to deal with. I most sincerely hope that all hon. gentlemen in this House who are interested in this question will try and attend the meeting of the forestry association in British Columbia this fall, and that we shall be able by that means to help educate the people to the necessity of paying more attention to this matter.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD—I am also pleased to be able to support this Bill. It was a great oversight that a Bill of this character had not been introduced in parliament years ago. Timber lands have been destroyed in a great many parts of Canada, from the fact that the government have not taken that interest in the forests that they should have done. I hope the government will take every means to reserve these lands on the head waters of the rivers, in order that the water supply may be protected. I notice in my own country, on the River St. John, some 35 years ago when the last steamer ran up the head waters, we had an average of three months' steamboating in the year. Now the boat could not run one month. And the reason is, the forests have been cut down and burned away and the land drained ; so that the water supply is falling off. The western people should be very anxious that the government will now set apart forest reserves ; not only that but encourage tree planting in the way indicated by the hon. leader of the opposition. I do not think it would be so much hardship as mentioned by the hon. gentleman from Manitoba ; that there would not be so much expense attending it, and I would advise people to get the trees as near home as possible. It is not necessary to go to other countries to obtain them ; nearer home they are obtained the better they will do. The results that will be obtained will be astonishing. I have noticed the trees planted round houses in my country. A spruce in 25 years will grow large enough to be cut down for lumbering purposes, and it will measure fourteen inches in diameter. To my mind the greatest damage done to forests has been in allowing farmers to squat down in the middle of a good lumbering district. They squat down in the middle of a district where lumbering has been carried on, and in clearing up a few acres they burn up large areas of timber. I think it is important to see that the farmers are not allowed to settle in lumbering districts. There should be blocks set apart for farming, and blocks for lumbering purposes and have the forests well guarded. To show you, a fact not generally known to many, how the people of this country are becoming interested in tree planting, in 1901 there were 58,000 plants sent out, and in 1905 over 2,000,000. I think the people should do all in their power to encourage tree planting because in the west there is a great deal of prairie land, and they cannot afford to lose any of the forest. While down in the maritime provinces we are not obliged to resort to tree planting as yet, our great trouble will be to take care of what we have got. Down in that country there has been great destruction in the forest. I am happy to say that the government is beginning to look upon the preservation of the forest as a necessity, and they are making the laws more rigid and putting on fire wardens and beginning to take care of the timber. In the old times we had to haul wide sleds through the forest to take the logs down, but now they hitch the logs together and take them down without sleds. I hope the government will select the forest reserves at the heads of the streams, because that is of the greatest importance. They are the reservoirs that supply the waters in our rivers and you should see to it that this is done. The selection made in other places would not be so beneficial to the rivers and that is of great importance when we come to consider our water system in Canada.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I do not think it is well to allow a discussion of this kind to pass without a word from Ontario. I think this is one of the most important Bills brought before us this session. The setting aside of forest reserves for the purpose of preserving our streams and so on, is a very desirable thing to do. The province of Ontario has set aside some forest reserves, but I think they might be very largely added to. There is an enormous district in northwest Ontario that never can be turned into an agricultural district, and the government could not do better than spend some money in reforesting that district, whatever parts of it would be suitable for tree planting I think it would be a good move for them to make. With regard to the western provinces, I entirely agree with the views expressed by the hon. leader of the opposition and concurred in by the hon. leader of the government. I think the propositions made by both these gentlemen are in the right line, and, if carried out, would unquestionably have a beneficial effect. If a man before being granted a patent for his homestead, which he virtually gets for nothing, would be required to plant and have in a growing condition a certain number of trees, it certainly would be a step in the right direction, and not only tend to benefit agriculture, but would be a climatic advantage I have no doubt. I had an opportunity of visiting the southwestern states two years ago. I was down in Texas and I noticed that they are reforesting a good deal of country that is not suitable in some cases for cultivation. There was a piece of timber pointed out to me that a man had reforested some thirty years ago. He had lived on the balance of his land and had taken care of the timber. It was reforested with either mahogany or walnut or perhaps a little of both. I was told by the party who was driving me to see that section of country, that this farmer had recently sold his right to remove the timber at $300 an acre, or $9,000 for some thirty acres. So that reforesting is not only desirable for the purpose of having shade trees, but can also be made lucrative if men will only adopt proper methods in replanting trees. I do think that the Ontario government should resort to that method. Any person travelling through the northwest section of the province of Ontario, towards Manitoba will observe that there is a barren, rocky country along there for many miles, which evidently has been burned off, and the fire has destroyed millions of dollars worth of timber. I think it would be a good thing if that country was replanted with trees, and that they should be preserved. I am entirely in accord with the proposition of this Bill. I look upon it as one of the most important that has been brought down.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not think there is any difference of opinion as to the propriety of the course pursued by the government in adopting the policy they have in reference to the forest reserve and the reforestation of portions of the country. All I am surprised at is that with the very strong views the hon. Secretary of State holds, he has not insisted on the Department of the Interior going a little further than they have done in this Bill, by providing for the planting of trees as suggested by the hon. leader of the opposition. I can verify from personal experience every word that the hon. Secretary of State has uttered in reference to the destruction of timber in the province of Ontario. I have travelled through my own constituency for miles and miles and there was as handsome a forest, and as handsome a red pine growth as could be found in any part of the world, acres and acres of trees thirty and forty feet high perhaps, from two or two and a half feet in diameter. I have passed through the same section a year or two afterwards, and the fire had destroyed every tree there was in the locality. The great difficulties any government will find in the future will be in the preservation of the forest from fire. The railways have destroyed hundreds of thousands of dollars worth by fire. The settlers who go into these parts of the country which are principally forest will see that there are portions of the country, perhaps about one-third—I am speaking of that section of the country to which my hon. friend from Wellington drew the attention of the House a few moments ago one-third of it cultivable and good land, because it lies in the valley. It is well watered. The waters are pure, particularly when they come from the Laurentian ranges and where those lands can be settled, and a system of dairying introduced, the product of the dairy is of the most superior kind. Speaking of my own locality, there are cheese factories and butter factories in the rural districts over a hundred miles from the front, where the character of the soil is as I have indicated, and the waters flowing from the hills are pure. The result is what I have pointed out in reference to the products of the dairy. As a rule they carry off the prizes at our fair. But the danger arises there from the want of care on the part of the settlers when kindling fires. When they clear their land they burn their chopping in a dry season, and if a wind comes up it is apt to destroy thousands and tens of thousands of dollars worth of timber. Then the lumbermen are to a large extent to blame. I know in our country they have been to a certain extent at fault, for the reason that in too many cases they refused to allow the settler to take the logs and have them manufactured into boards and lumber for building purposes. I know they have gone so far in the county of Hastings, that when travelling through it you would find segments of timber eight or ten feet in length by two feet in diameter, not of sufficiently good quality in those early days to go to the expense of taking it out to the river in order to float it down to the mills; but even in cases of that kind I have understood the large lumbering establishments prevent the settler from utilizing these culled logs for the manufacturing of lumber for their farm building. The result of that in too many cases has been out of revenge, they would burn them up when clearing their land.

I passed through that country a great deal in my electioneering tours forty years ago, and have had to jump my horse over the logs. For the reason I have given, the selfishness of those who really owned the timber limits in preventing the settler from taking up the land, resulted in a very great deal of damage. That trees can be planted in this country, and during the life time of a man arrive at a marketable value, is beyond doubt. You may be surprised when I say that about forty-two years ago I planted some maple trees in front of the dwelling in which I now live, trees which were not larger than my wrist, and to-day they are over three feet in diameter, and I have had to cut down every second tree to prevent too much shade in front of the house. It is evidence to those who will study the subject that if the farmers will take their rough lands, of which they have plenty in Ontario, after clearing them and burning out the stumps and taking off one or two crops, replant them with trees, during their own life time they would have a very valuable return for their investment. I remember as long ago as in 1866. when I was playing soldier at the head of Lake Erie, walking along the fences by the roadside and noticing that nearly half the rails were of black walnut. When my father carried on a cabinet business, and furniture manufacturing in 1839 or 1840, black walnut could be purchased for $40 or $45 per 1,000 feet. You could not get 100 feet of it for that to-day. If our people, particularly in the western peninsula of Ontario, were to plant the walnut, I do not think they could make a better investment. If a man, when a son was born to him, would take say five acres and plant it in walnut, by the time that child came of age he would have a good inheritance. The system has been carried on in England for centuries. On the birth of a male child, those who own large areas of territory set apart a certain plantation of young trees, and that plantation is given to the son when he comes of age. I should very much like to see that system carried out here. We are too apt, as young men, to think that it is useless to plant a tree, because we may not ourselves live to derive any benefit from it; but my experience, as I have indicated shows that a man can plant trees, and in forty years if he lives that long, he will have not only an ample return pecuniarily but he will also have had a yearly return in the pleasure he derives in seeing the trees grow.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—He could get that result in much less time than forty years.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, I admit that, because the trees I have referred to, which I planted myself forty-two years ago, might have been utilized twenty years ago.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—They were a benefit to you long before that?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, that is quite correct. Another idea suggests itself to me. What course does the government intend to take to prevent, when issuing timber licenses, the destruction of timber on these reserves? It has transpired lately that one man has about 500 square miles of timbered lands under license in the Northwest Territories. When these lands are cleared the result will be precisely as my hon. friend from New Brunswick has pointed out. That will result in every section of the country where there is a forest and the land is fit for settlement being desolated by forest fires and the streams will dry up. We can all speak more confidently of sections of the country with which we are personally acquainted. In the city in which I now live—my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce knows that part of the country very well—when I was a boy we never knew, in what was then the village, now the city of Belleville, what a flood was. The reason was that forests existed all along the river banks and in the swamps. When they were cut down and the farmers began to till the soil, in the spring the snow melted very rapidly and the water was emptied from the swamps, and low lying lands all at once into the river; the result was, as soon as the ice broke up there was a flood. In the old times we never had such a thing. The very conditions that created floods in the older portions of this province are the causes which will prevent floods in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories. When the snow melted and the rain fell in the spring, it fell upon a matted grass on the prairie, a grass which had been matting for centuries, and the result was the earth did not absorb it, and it either had to evaporate or run into the rivers. It ran off so rapidly that they had frequent floods in the city of Winnipeg, but just as soon as the prairie was broken by the plough, the earth absorbed the melting snow and rains in the spring and now such a thing as a flood is unknown. What the government should do is to take the most rigid precautions to preserve the forest from destruction by fire, and refuse to license them to lumbermen. If they license the timber limits the country will soon be denuded of forests.

Hon. Mr. OWENS—The subject before us is one of the most important we could discuss. We have heard a good deal to-day with reference to reforestation and tree planting. No doubt the time is coming when tree planting can be carried on to advantage even for commercial purposes, but if we would only preserve the trees that a kind Providence has given us, in a very few years our timber resources would increase to a great extent. A few years ago I had some experience of this in a block of timber lands which we owned, land as well as timber. In the cutting of timber I restricted the trees the men should cut to a certain size. The foreman and others considered at the time that I was a crank, and that after cutting the timber once they would never go over the limit again, as it was a mountainous country. However, I carried out that policy and allowed them to cut only timber of a certain size. Thirteen years afterwards, fire ran through that forest and we were obliged to cut the balance of the timber, and those very men who had objected before were surprised to find within three or four feet of the stumps they cut thirteen years before, larger timber than they had cut at that time. It is quite evident that if these trees had been of a commercial size they would have been cut thirteen years before. This goes to show how rapid the growth of timber is. That timber was principally spruce and pine, and that is timber that really increases to a greater extent probably than almost any other. We frequently hear reflections upon the manner in which lumbermen have operated, and the ruthless way they have wasted the timber, but the great waste in this country has been by fire. The loss by fire has been a hundred times more than by the axe and if there is anything weak in the Bill before us it is, perhaps, because there is not sufficient precaution taken to guard against fire. The losses of timber in the prairie country are occasioned by prairie fires. If timber reserves are to be maintained there, ample precaution must be taken to provide for fire guards around those forests, and the employment of forest rangers. Unless there are fire guards you may have an army of forest rangers and they will be unable to protect the timber from destruction by fire. The hon. gentleman from Belleville was rather taking a drive at the lumber men for refusing to give the refuse timber in the woods to neighbouring farmers for fire wood. But if he had had some practical experience that way—and I am sure the hon. senator from Perth will corroborate what I state—he would know that when such a privilege is granted to farmers or others, they are not satisfied with taking the refuse timber, but they take also the choice trees.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They would take them any way.

Hon. Mr. OWENS—They could not steal them unless you permitted them to make roads in through the woods. It is in the winter the timber is removed, and unless you grant permission to parties to go in, if they do go, their trespass would be immediately taken cognizance of and they would be prohibited. I merely mention this to show the difficult position the lumberman is in when he attempts to be generous. The refuse timber is a source of danger to the forest, because in case of fire it supplies dry fuel for the spread of the flames, and we would be willing to let farmers and others remove it if they would take nothing more valuable. My object in rising to speak on this subject is to impress on the government the importance of taking ample precautions to provide against fire. I have not had experience of the western country, but I have learned that the great trouble there is from prairie fires, and it will be useless to create forest reserves there unless you protect them against destruction by fire. I trust the government will take every precaution.

On clause 2—Lands in schedule withdrawn from sale and occupancy.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Does my hon. friend know what portion of this land is now occupied ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Parts that are under timber licenses.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Can my hon. friend say what proportion ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—From time to time, in the last twenty years, licenses have been granted for more or less areas.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Are those licenses for timber in the west issued on the same terms and conditions as those in Ontario ; that is only for one year, subject to renewal ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They are on the same conditions practically as in Ontario. Provided all the terms are complied with, the licensee will have the privilege of renewing. Under this Bill it is proposed that where the area is under license the timber shall be cut under regulations made by the department. Only a particular class of trees may be cut, and with all precautions necessary taken to prevent fire.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What is the area of lands reserved in Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and British Columbia?

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Moosejaw)—The schedule gives the number of miles in the forest reserve.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The largest portion is in Manitoba.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Does my hon. friend know what proportion of the entire area of the reserves is under license?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have not the proportion.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Before the third reading, would my hon. friend be good enough to furnish that information to the House?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—In conversation with one of the officials of the Interior Department yesterday about this Bill, he stated that in the schedule, clause 18, which covers the Saskatchewan reserve, it was desired to take out township 38, in the third line, the reason given being that it was the only township covering any timber berth in the reserve, and the minister made the statement in another place that none of these reserves covered timber berths.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I feel satisfied that a large proportion of this area is either under license or under lease. I noticed various comments made on that fact by the press at the time the Bill was in the House of Commons and my impression is that a tabulated statement was submitted to the House of Commons giving that information.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I was about to read it. It will be found on pages 3427 to 3430 of the Commons 'Hansard.'

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Could the hon. gentleman tell us on what terms these are held? Will the lease-holders be treated as having vested rights?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am sorry to say I think they will.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Do they contribute in any way towards the additional expenditure of maintaining those reserves, especially against fire?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—You will see they were sold to the parties on a bonus, in addition to paying a certain sum for stumpage, and the licenses are renewable so long as the conditions are performed, so it would be extremely difficult to terminate the leases. They have no right to cut anything but merchantable timber. I think the minimum diameter is eight inches:

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Those are not the conditions of the leases either.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They are the conditions in Ontario and Quebec.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Not in Ontario. The licenses are renewable every year in Ontario, and being considered vested rights they have been, as a matter of course, renewed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As I had something to do with making it a vested right, I ought to know something about it. In 1873, I intimated to the licensees that the licenses would be renewed provided they complied with the conditions.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Not only should the conditions be fulfilled and observed, but the Ontario license conditions are of such a character that whatever changes may be made by the government in the way of more strict regulations or raising of the stumpage dues, they have to submit to it. I have always been under the impression that the action of the Ontario government some years ago was scarcely equitable in dealing with those licenses, because they adopted the system of charging so much more for stumpage and so much more per thousand for the lumber that was not manufactured in Canada. The policy was correct, but the large bonuses which had been given by those who purchased the right to cut the timber at the time the licenses were first obtained, should be taken into consideration, and at that time there was no restriction as to the exportation of timber.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There was this restriction, that the Crown could increase the stumpage, because at first when I had to deal with these questions the stumpage was only 75 cents a thousand feet B.M. and then it went up to $1.25 and rose higher according to the value of the timber.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What about the odd numbered section within the limits of these reserves ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Crown will endeavour to get the parties to exchange for lands elsewhere. There is a clause authorizing the minister to make arrangements, where any lands have passed out of the hands of the Crown, to induce the holders to exchange.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is a very unlikely thing. It is manifestly to the advantage of the owners to retain title. Very great inducements will have to be given and it seems to me nothing like a reasonable exchange will be made. In looking over the debate which took place in the Commons, I notice a copy of the regulations brought down by the Minister of the Interior, in which one of the conditions is that the lessee shall pay ground rent, dues, and one half the cost of fire guarding. Can my hon. friend say what that fire guarding is ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The provision with regard to fire guarding is copied largely from Ontario. A certain number of rangers are appointer as fire guardians. One half the cost is paid by the licensee and the other half by the Crown. In section 6, clause 7, authority is given to the Governor in Council to make an exchange of land and to pay compensation.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Has there been any calculation made as to the probable cost of buying out the present holders ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think not.

Clause 2 was adopted.

On clause 3,

3. The said reserves are hereby set apart and established and shall hereafter be and be known as Dominion Forest Reserves, for the maintenance and protection of the timber growing or which may hereafter grow therein, and for the protection, so far as the parliament of Canada has jurisdiction, of the animals and birds therein, and the fish in the waters therein ; but subject to such regulations as may be made under the provisions of section 4 of this Act.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We are setting apart timber reserves and apparently allowing the licensees to cut the timber.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It would cost too much to expropriate. It was thought better for the present to allow the timber to be cut under regulations made by the department.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If the department had not recklessly departed from regulations which obtained for many years, by which these licenses were renewable every year, the government could have had a reserve which would practically have excluded all lessees or licensees. Can my hon. friend say when these regulations were changed ? It must have been during the last few years.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think they were always in that uncertain way.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Oh, no. The leases up to ten years ago all provided that they should be renewable year by year, and the government had a clearly defined right to take possession at any time. I quite concede the fact that there was a moral claim to renew the lease, but not a legal one.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 8,

8. Where a road allowance within the boundaries of any such reserve has been vested in the Crown in the right of the province in which it is situated, or has passed under the control of the executive authorities of the province, such road allowance may, with the consent of the Lieutenant Governor of the province in Council, be included in and form part of such reserve and may be closed by any fence which may be erected for the enclosure of such reserve, or any part thereof.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Is it proposed under this section that the trails or roads shall be practically excluded from use by the settlers ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is subject to the Lieutenant Governor in Council. If it is going to inconvenience any settler, his rights could not be taken away from him without compensation.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—He might not have any strict legal rights. Suppose the government should fence the roads surrounding these reserves, if the title is transferred from the province, it might involve very serious inconvenience to settlers in getting from one point to another. Does my hon. friend know what the intention of the government is with regard to that ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is to give a wide margin, so that any unused or unoccupied road allowance can be taken over. The Lieutenant Governor of the province in Council, the executive council, would certainly not allow a road allowance to be closed up. It is vested in them now by law. They would not allow it to be closed up if it inconvenienced any settler.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Who would not?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Lieutenant Governor in Council. They would have the right to say——

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I take it, it is this government will close up the road allowance. I take it the Lieutenant Governor may hand over to the Governor in Council the road allowance. The clause says :

Such road allowance may, with the consent of the Lieutenant Governor of the province in Council, be included in and form part of such reserve and may be closed by any fence which may be erected for the inclosure of such reserve, or any part thereof.

I do not think the consent of the Lieutenant Governor to the closing up of the road would be necessary.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Clause 9 provides for it.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 9,

9. Notwithstanding anything in this Act, the Governor in Council may cause to be established through and over any such reserve such roads as are necessary for the convenience of the public, and nothing in this Act or in any regulation made thereunder shall prevent the proper use of such roads by bona fide travellers or by others requiring to cross such reserve in the pursuit of their ordinary business or calling, but nothing in this section shall operate to withdraw such roads from the reserve.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is with a view of preventing fires on the railway that is now being built from Quebec to the other provinces.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Any road.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, but that was particularly in view. We have had a correspondence with some of the provincial governments, and in New Brunswick they are willing to undertake it by our giving them a fixed sum, which would probably be better. Where the provinces have fire rangers, if they choose to assume the control and accept a certain sum to pay for the cost of the fire rangers, it might be as well to hand it over to them. It is not provided for here, but it may be done as a matter of arrangement. An agreement has been made with New Brunswick.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is difficult to see what this has to do with forest reserves. It is introducing another question altogether.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. But it was thought a suitable place to put it in, because we are building a road from the Atlantic to the Pacific and it is germane to the subject of the Bill. It does no harm there.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—You make the regulation apply to all the land through which the railway runs, as well as to the forest reserves. Is this the object of the clause ?

The clause was adopted.

On clause 10.

10. During the construction of any railway passing through Dominion lands, the Minister of the Interior may appoint such forest rangers as he deems necessary for the protection from fire of the forest along or adjacent to such railway, and it shall be the duty of every such ranger to enforce the provisions of this Act and any regulations made thereunder, and of any other Act either of the parliament of Canada or of the province in which such lands are situated, when and in so far as such Acts or any regulations made thereunder relate to the prevention of fires and are in force in the district for which such ranger is appointed; and for such purposes and within a tract of five miles on either side of such railway every such ranger shall have all the powers of a justice of the peace, and one-half of the expenses incident to and connected with such fire ranging shall be a debt due to the Crown from the person constructing such railway and shall be payable upon demand of the Minister of the Interior, and may be recovered at the suit of the Crown in any court of competent jurisdiction.

2. The Governor in Council may make such regulations as he deems necessary or expedient to give full effect to the object and intention of this section.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This clause has no connection with the Bill. Should it not be in the Public Works Act?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is more convenient here.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Take the province of Quebec and the province of Ontario—this clause could not effect those lands.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT. No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The law refers to Dominion lands, not provincial lands. During the construction of any railway passing through Dominion lands the Minister of the Interior may do so and so. The Dominion holds no lands either in Quebec or Ontario, unless you have some arrangements with the provincial governments.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In the older provinces attention has been drawn to the fact that this railway will endanger the provincial lands, and the government have said: 'We will either appoint persons to protect the trees from fire or we will pay you a bulk sum and you take the responsibility of it.' It is just an incident to this.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is not covered by this clause. That is a regulation between the two governments.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT. I mentioned that.

The clause was adopted,

On clause 13,

13. Neither the Governor in Council nor the minister is authorized or empowered for the purposes of this Act to expropriate, purchase or acquire for compensation any right or interest held under license to cut timber.

2. In the event of the Governor in Council or the minister being hereafter authorized or empowered for the purposes of this Act to expropriate, purchase or acquire any such right or interest, the compensation payable therefor shall not be assessed or determined, either judicially or by agreement, at any larger or increased amount by reason of the land covered by such right or interest being situate in any forest reserve created under the authority of this Act.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—It strikes me that section 1 of this clause is complete. Why do you want subclause 2? When they give power to revoke this clause, and give power to make this purchase, would it not then be time to impose these terms and conditions?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would say the provision is a very desirable one. It permits the government to engage for the purchase of these leases or licenses entirely irrespective of the land being created into a reserve. The licensee or owner will know that in the future he cannot depend upon his property being enhanced by reason of the provisions embodied in this Act in the event of it being created a reserve. If that were absent it would be almost impossible for the government to approach these people for the purpose of buying these roads. They would say: 'Our land is embraced within this reserve and our rights are so much enhanced by reason of the provisions of this Act that we shall hold on to our rights until we receive our figure.' They have left that element of value out.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I agree with the hon. gentleman from Killarney. I believe the second subsection is contradictory of the first. The first subsection reads:

13. Neither the Governor in Council nor the minister is authorized or empowered for the purposes of this Act to expropriate, purchase or acquire for compensation any right or interest held under license to cut timber.

That covers the whole ground and it is clear cut and decisive. Subclause 2 says:

2. In the event of the Governor in Council or the minister being hereafter authorized or empowered for the purpose of this Act to expropriate, purchase or acquire any such right or interest, the compensation payable therefor shall not be assessed or determined, either judicially or by agreement, at any larger or increased amount by reason of the land covered by such right or interest being situate in any forest reserve created under the authority of this Act.

That is authorizing him to do something contrary to the law.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The criticism on the Act is that the government propose to expropriate certain timber lands and pay enormous sums for them. So far as this Act is concerned, until it is changed by parliament, power is taken to the minister and notice is given.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—What good is that notice ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is useful to this extent ; that the licensee or lessee at this point knows his property is not going to be enhanced by this reserve so far as selling out to the government is concerned. There is nothing to prevent the government from negotiating now for the sale of those rights and the government getting power from parliament hereafter for instance to close a contract on those lines.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Then it cannot do any harm ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—Instead of saying first they cannot do a thing, and then saying in the event of their being authorized to do it you had better say, being authorized by statute.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They cannot do it except by statute.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—They might do it by order in council.

The clause was adopted.

On the schedules.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Some errors have crept into the schedules and probably the clerk can correct them. The words 'All west of the 6th meridian' have to be inserted in several places. They have been omitted by mistake.

The schedule as amended was adopted.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I desire to reiterate what I said the other day when the hon. Secretary of State moved the second reading of the Bill. The whole policy of the Bill should apply to all the provinces where there is a large quantity of timber, and I can see no reason why that cannot be done.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It would cost too much. We hope that the provinces will follow our example.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The province of Nova Scotia has within the last few years adopted very stringent and very successful measures to prevent the destruction of forests by fire. Before the chairman reports the Bill, I wish to say that I do not think we ought to report clause 13 in its present form. I think we ought to strike out the second subsection, because it is quite at variance with the first.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am under the impression that my hon. friend does not yet see the object of that clause. Parliament is laying down a policy of valuation ; it says that notwithstanding the fact that the minister or the Governor in council may not have power to expropriate lands within these reserves, yet in the future when power is given to them to do so it should be given on this basis of valuation.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—That could be put in the Act at the time.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend assumes that that future parliament will view the question of valuation in the same way as this parliament. This parliament has certain views on the subject which they have embodied in that subsection, and hereafter when parliament legislates in regard to this matter they are to do so upon the lines we have now laid down.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Can we bind the future parliament ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, but a future parliament will have regard to the opinion held by this parliament as embodied in this Act. Furthermore, it has this advantage, that lessees hereafter will have notice of the basis upon which they are to sell to the government—that they cannot expect an enhanced price by reason of these lands being included in the reserve. Consequently they will now probably prepare themselves to sell their rights to the Crown on this basis of valuation. Then the Crown will take to itself power to acquire the lands.

Hon. Mr. POWER—We have already amended the Bill, so that there can be no objection to making an amendment here. Would it not be better to say in the event of the Governor in Council or the minister 'being hereafter empowered by statute'—so as to show that this subsection is not intended to contradict the previous one.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I take no exceptions to that so long as this principle is embodied in the clause.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It would show that we know what we are doing. I move that the words 'by statute' be inserted.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As the power is taken away from the Governor in Council to act in that direction unless the government comes to parliament again, I cannot see any object in introducing these words.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The power can only be obtained by statute, because the prohibition is now in force by statute.

The amendment was adopted.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN, from the committee, reported the Bill with amendments, which were concurred in.

The Bill was then read a third time and passed.

BELL TELEPHONE COMPANIES BILL.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (81) an Act respecting the Bell Telephone Company of Canada.

The Bill was read the first and second times under the suspension of the rules.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved the suspension of the rules in order that the Bill might go to the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—We should have some chance of seeing the Bill before it goes to committee.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—While I quite appreciate what my hon. friend says, this Bill contains but one clause. Its object is to increase the capital stock of the company, and I fancy to-morrow we will have a larger meeting of the Railway Committee than we are likely to have next week.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—There has been a good deal of discussion over this Bill in the House of Commons and it has been delayed to enable parties to see what the other legislation bearing on it will be. The other Bill has not reached us yet, and I think this Bill should not be taken up in the committee to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The matter has been before the public for a copule of months.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The suspension of the rule would be to enable people who wished to oppose the Bill to come before the committee. It should not take us long to make up our minds whether the capital of the company should be increased.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—There is opposition to the Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, because they desire to compel the Bell Telephone Company to make certain concessions.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Will not those who oppose the Bill know that it is coming before the committee to-morrow? If so, they can appear before the committee as well to-morrow as any time and explain the grounds for their opposition.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—There should be an opportunity of giving the people who are opposed to the Bill sufficient notice. This Bill has attracted so much attention, particularly in Toronto, that an opportunity should be given to have those who are opposed to it to state their case fully.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No other Bill that has been before parliament this session has been more discussed, and the government decided that it should not be held back until the Railway Bill was passed. That is the whole case. It has been given priority there and has come to us. I do not see why it should not go to the committee to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The observation of the hon. gentleman does not seem to change the situation. If we are here simply to pass a Bill without giving it consideration or letting parties concerned say whether they will appear or not, we had better know it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We are doing that all the time.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I am sure the hon. gentleman is not doing that and I am not. Under these circumstances I do not think the motion should be pressed. We may as well have the Bill before the committee next week.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is no use in us arguing this question; if the hon. gentleman objects, that is an end of it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman has given the best reason why we should go on promptly. Here is a Bill which has been opposed in a very vigorous and persistent way. The gentlemen who are opposing the Bill have not left the city yet, because the fight has only just closed in the House of Commons and they are here on hand, and I assume can appear to-morrow when the committee meets, without any difficulty whatever, and it will be more convenient for them to attend now than to have to return to the city again. In the interests of the opponents of the Bill, the motion of the hon. senator from Calgary should be sustained.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The hon. gentleman probably knows that the opponents of the Bill will appear before the committee to-morrow. I have been informed that they will. I hope my hon. friend will let it go to the committee, then, to-morrow, if it becomes apparent that it is desirable to postpone it further in order that the opponents of the Bill may reach Ottawa, the committee can postpone the further consideration until next week.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I have just been informed that the counsel, Mr. Dewart, who represents the municipalities is here and would like the Bill to go on to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I do not know that Mr. Dewart is the only one opposed to it.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The organized municipalities have been opposing this Bill, and if their counsel is here and prepared to appear before the committee to-morrow, I do not see what objection there can be to having the Bill considered to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Will the hon. gentleman be content to let the Bill go to the committee for consideration to-morrow if Mr. Dewart is here?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—He may be here and yet not ready to go on. I do not want to have any misunderstanding about that.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I assure my hon. friend that if Mr. Dewart is not here it will be postponed.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—If Mr. Dewart is not here, or being here wants it to stand over, will the hon. gentleman consent to have it postponed?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—On that understanding I am quite willing to withdraw my objection.

The motion agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at three o'clock.

THE SENATE

OTTAWA, Friday, June 29, 1906.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (81) An Act respecting the Bell Telephone Company of Canada.—(Hon. Mr. Lougheed.)

Bill (130) An Act respecting the Grand Valley Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Coffey.)

Bill (161) An Act to incorporate the Trans-Niagara Bridge Company.—(Hon. Mr. Kerr, Toronto.)

Bill (140) An Act respecting the Southern Central Pacific Railway Company.—(Hon. Mr. Power.)

AN ADJOURNMENT.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved :

That when the Senate adjourns to-day, it do stand adjourned until Tuesday, the 3rd July next, at three o'clock in the afternoon.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I was about to ask my hon. friend when we might expect to have the Lord's Day Bill and also the Usury Bill before this House ? I would point out that it is extremely unfortunate that with controversial mesaures of this nature to come before us, this House, at the 11th hour of the session, should have to adjourn until Tuesday next. It seems to me the government owes to the Senate a greater consideration than to postpone to the end of the session, as they invariably do, the most important measures of the year. The Lord's Day Bill is one which could, with very great advantage, have been introduced in this House at an early stage of the session and discussed here at length. I observe also that the Uusury Bill has recently come from the Banking Committee of the Commons and is now before parliament. At a former session, this Chamber discussed the Usury Bill at very considerable length. I think it occupied a week of the session. The Lord's Day Bill will have occupied at least a week of the time of the Commons, not taking into consideration the work done by the special committee which has been considering it since parliament met.

We have been discussing at very great length the reform of the Senate, or what might contribute to the improvement of the Senate. As I have said, the government have been treating the Senate very unfairly with reference to the most important measures that come down from session to session, and I know of no more favourable way of impressing upon the government and also upon the public the utility of this Chamber and the functions which it discharges in the consideration of parliamentary measures of this character, than for the Senate to refuse in the session's dying hours to entertain important measures such as will be thrown upon next week, without giving us proper time for consideration. My hon. friend doubtless will say in answer to that : 'The Senate can stay here for the next fortnight and give proper consideration to these Bills,' and other gentlemen will doubtless say that it will be the duty of the Senate to sit until the most adequate consideration is given to these measures. My answer is that that is very well in theory but not in practice. Almost concurrently with the arrival of these Bills in the Senate, we will find the Governor General in the corridor waiting to prorogue parliament. That is almost invariably the case, and it is idle to say, with those circumstances facing us, that we can give proper consideration to those Bills. I would suggest to my hon. friend that the position of this Senate would warrant his impressing upon the government what the government owes to this branch of parliament in bringing down important measures such as we will be called upon to consider next week.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Is the hon. gentleman really serious ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Does my hon. friend not think I am justified in making the remarks which I have made ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No I do not. I am speaking frankly. This is my 32nd year in the Senate, and I venture to say that in all that time there has not been an occasion when the Bills are as far forward as they are to-day, and I challenge my hon. friend to take up any one year in the 18 years during which his friends on the other side of the House were in power in which so much business has been placed before the Senate at this stage. I can point to years where the Bills came down by the basketful when the guns were firing. There were occasions when ten and twelve Bills came down on the last day.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I admit that, but the tu quoque argument should be no reply to what I have said.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Take the Lord's Day Bill; hon. gentlemen know that it has been before the House of Commons for three months. It might have been passed long ago if the hon. gentleman's friends had stood aside.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—They have been standing aside, and will take no responsibility.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was a Bill that necessarily created a good deal of excitement over the country. There were diverse opinions upon it, and when we have passed it it will not meet with universal approval. It had to be made up of compromises, practically, and the difficulty has been to so gauge the provisions of it, changing a word here and a word there in order to reduce opposition to it which came from all quarters of the province, and, therefore, the hon. gentleman is somewhat unfortunate in citing that Bill. I quite admit that the Usury Bill might with propriety have been introduced here, and had the government originally intended to have brought that measure before parliament this session I might have urged its introduction here. But it was only within the last ten days, I think, that the decision was come to that the Bill had better be introduced and I hope it will be passed. We know very well that this House has already expressed an opinion on that measure. It is a matter of running the readings through in a few hours in this Chamber, because it has been freely discussed and the views of the hon. gentleman are so well known on the Usury Bill. It is not a Bill which should create any controversy in this Chamber. I hope that the number of Bills that have to come is not very large.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—They are very long though.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman has cited the practice of former governments in reference to this Chamber. He should cite also the conduct of the opposition. Would he have any objections if this side of the House pursued this session the course pursued by himself and his associates a few years ago when the troops were turned out, the guns were firing and the Governor was actually in the corridor, and these few hon. gentlemen prevented the possible prorogation of the House——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Very properly.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—By keeping up a discussion on a Bill brought down by the government?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was not a government Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the hon. Secretary of State justifies his present conduct by the course pursued by past governments, he certainly should have no objection if we follow in his illustrious footsteps, and he must not be surprised if these Bills, which are so important, are brought down on the day of prorogation, if we follow the example he set us and adopt the same tactics. I am quite sure, in that event, he would not quote his former conduct to condemn our obstruction. The basket of Bills to which he refers is new to me. It must have been before I had the honour of occupying a seat in this House. It certainly was not while I was leader of the Senate. I am not prepared to dispute his statement if he says it occurred previous to my entering the Senate, but no such thing ever occurred while I was leading this House.

The motion was agreed to.

THE EX-CHIEF JUSTICE OF QUEBEC.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Before the orders of the day are called, I would ask the government if it is true that ex-Chief Justice Routhier, of Quebec, who has just resigned and has taken his pension, is still continuing to act as judge of the Court of Admiralty at Quebec?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have no information on the subject. It has not been brought to the notice of the government in my presence.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Will my hon. friend ask the government if the report is true, and if so whether it is permissible for a judge so situated to act?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If the hon. gentleman will drop me a note I will see the Minister of Justice about it.

DELAYED RETURNS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. Secretary of State will remember that the hon. gentleman from Stadacona moved some little time ago for two returns, one in reference to the correspondence with the imperial government regarding the uniforms which are worn and which are to be worn by civil servants, privy councillors and others. The other was a return as to the per diem allowance to the commissioners who are investigating the various life insurance companies, together with a statement of the other expenses attending that investigation. Is there any probability of our getting those returns ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will make inquiry. In reference to uniforms, that, I understand, was entirely a matter resting with the Governor General. It was not a state paper, I presume, which could be brought down here. I only heard of it incidentally. I do not know that I have ever seen the despatch. I understood there was a despatch—I think I mentioned it before—which had the effect of raising, so to speak, the ministers who were in the third class, a step higher.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have reason to believe that there was correspondence, and the government must take the responsibility in that connection. If, however, the hon. Secretary of State says that this action was taken by the Governor General independently of the government, I would not press to have the papers brought down. I have no desire to interfere with the prerogatives of the Crown. I am quite sure there was some correspondence on the subject. Has my hon. friend asked that question in this own department ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I did make inquiry the other day, but I will renew it.

IMMIGRATION BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

Pursuant to the order of the day, the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (170) An Act respecting Immigration and Immigrants.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—A Bill was passed, in the year 32-33 Victoria, relating to this subject which continued to be the law up to 1886, when an Act respecting Immigration and Immigrants was passed, which is to be found in the Revised Statutes of Canada. Since that time the only amendments have been a very slight one made in 1887, and another in 1902. The conditions, however, have materially changed since this statute became law. At that time the immigrants almost universally arrived via the St. Lawrence in ships. Now a very considerable number come by rail ; they reach this continent at Boston or New York and come across the boundary by way of one of the railways. In many instances, immigrants now come in their own conveyances. Then again the number is so very much larger than was ever contemplated at that time, that it requires very much more extensive arrangements to prepare for their reception. I noticed recently by an official report that during the present year 150,000 immigrants have come to Canada, a considerable proportion of whom come from the United States. The law as it stood did not give the government that power to make a close examination, which is now found necessary when so many are coming from the continent of Europe, who may possibly be affected with various disorders. As regards immigrants belonging to what is called the undesirable class, it is necessary to have provision for very summary action. They have to be examined and if necessary returned to Europe.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—May I ask, in view of this Bill, what will be the policy of the government hereafter with regard to assisted immigration ? The Bill would look very much as a departure from the policy which has been pursued for some time past by the government on that question, and I fancy the public is very anxious to know what will be the policy of the government hereafter with reference to the undesirable class of immigrants that has been arriving upon our shores for years past.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Who are the undesirable class ?

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—You will find them described in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The class which this Bill is calculated to keep out.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There has been no announcement of any change in the policy except the cancellation of the contract made with the company which has recently obtained so much notoriety from bringing immigrants from central Europe. That contract expires, under the notice given, on the 1st December next.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Then what is the object of the repressive features of the Bill if there is to be no change in policy?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Many immigrants from the south of Europe are affected by disease of the eye, and others by tuberculosis and other diseases. It is not desirable to allow persons affected by diseases that are at all contagious to take up their residence in Canada, and, therefore, very full and arbitrary powers must be given to officials to prevent such persons landing, or, if having landed, to send them back by the vessels that brought them here. So far as the general policy is concerned, I am not aware that there has been any material change.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—You keep a number of them under your care for two years, which is decidedly paternal, and then you discharge them.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is a clause in the Bill which allows them to be deported at the end of the second year.

On clause 2,

2. In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires,—

(a) The expression 'immigrant' means and includes any steerage passenger or any 'work-a-way' on any vessel whether or not entered as a member of the crew after the vessel has sailed from its first or last port of departure, and any saloon or second-class passenger or person who having been a member of the crew has ceased to be such who upon inspection is found to come within any class liable to exclusion from Canada: provided that no person who is a Canadian by birth or has been naturalized as a British subject in Canada shall be held to be an immigrant within the meaning of this Act;

(b) The expression 'immigration agent' includes the superintendent of immigration, commissioners of immigration and any subagents within or outside of Canada;

(c) The expression 'land' or 'landing,' as applied to passengers or immigrants, means their admission (after having complied with the requirements of the Immigration Act), into Canada, otherwise than for inspection or treatment, or other temporary purpose provided for by this Act, or by any order in council, or proclamation, or regulation made thereunder;

(d) The expression 'master' means any person in command of a vessel;

(e) The expression 'medical officer' includes 'medical superintendent,' 'medical inspector' and 'inspecting physician';

(f) The expression 'minister' means the Minister of the Interior;

(g) The expression 'owner,' as applied to a ship or vessel, includes the charterer of such ship or vessel and the agent of the owner thereof;

(h) The expression 'passenger' includes any person carried upon a railway train or other vehicle or in a vessel, other than the master and crew, as well as all immigrants coming into Canada, but not troops or military pensioners and their families, who are carried in transports or at the expense of the government of the United Kingdom, or of any colony thereof; provided that any person who is unlawfully on board the vessel shall not be held to be a passenger;

(i) The expression 'port of entry' means any port, railway station, or place at which immigrants enter Canada, or at which there is an immigration agent, or where the medical inspection of immigrants is carried on;

(j) The expression 'ship' or 'vessel' includes all ships, vessels, boats, or craft of any kind carrying passengers.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In this clause I propose to strike out of subsection (a) all the words after 'Canada' in the 8th line, and substitute the following:

And any person arriving in Canada by railway train or other mode of travel, but it does not include any person who has previously resided in Canada or who is a tourist merely passing through Canada to another country.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There may be some explanation of the expression 'immigrant'. It practically covers every class of immigrants excepting those who come out first class. Supposing immigrants should arrive by first class who have all the objectionable features enumerated in the Bill, is there any provision to prevent them taking up their residence in Canada?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think there is any prohibition against first-class passengers.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Take the criminal classes; I can conceive of the very worst class of criminals arriving first class.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If any criminal arrives by first-class passage, I am quite sure that on his character being discovered, his case will be dealt with.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is just a question if you have the machinery in the Bill to do it.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Would it not be well to insert the words 'Or any other class?'

The clause, as amended, was adopted.

On clause 4,

4. The Governor in Council may establish and maintain immigration offices at such places within and outside of Canada as from time to time seems proper.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—This is a very wise provision that the matter is left to the Governor in Council, and not to one special minister. There has been a great deal of injury by the immigration operations being left to one minister to be carried out on his own responsibility; to that is to be attributed what has taken place with this North Atlantic Trading Company. If that arrangement had gone before the Governor in Council this contract would never have been made; consequently it is a very wise provision that the whole thing is left to the Governor in Council. I want to ask the Secretary of State if it is the intention of the government to keep the same department in Liverpool that we had formerly?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I could not answer that question, because it is a departmental matter. There has been no discussion on the subject.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I do not think an agency in London in addition to the office of High Commissioner is at all necessary.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Oh, yes, it is.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—All information could be obtained from the office of the High Commissioner, and the office of Mr. Preston could be easily abolished. The minister is not prepared, I suppose, to give an answer to any of these questions?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—It is a matter for consideration. There is no use in multiplying offices if they can be dispensed with.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no doubt of that.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 5,

5. The Governor in Council may appoint a superintendent of immigration, commissioners of immigration, immigration agents, a chief medical officer, medical officers, and such other officers as the Governor in Council determines.

Hon. Mr. WILSON.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The words 'chief medical officer' are to be struck out. There are a number of medical officers now, and it is felt that it is not necessary to have one chief over all the others.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I understand that Dr. Montizambert is called the chief medical officer of the Dominion?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This has no connection with Dr. Montizambert's office.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—The Governor in Council ought to have the power of appointing officers, but it seems to me that there must be some object in removing the words 'chief medical officer', that they are going to get rid of their present medical officer who has been acting for some length of time. We know that Dr. Bryce, a very just and efficient officer, has occupied that position for a number of years. He was transferred from Toronto, where he had been health officer under the Ontario government and performed very useful services, and brought to Ottawa by the Hon. Clifford Sifton. He was appointed to the position here, and I have yet to learn any just cause or reason why there should be a provision in this Bill that no medical officer shall be appointed in the future.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It does not say that.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—If you are to have an efficient service and proper inspection of immigrants coming into the country, you require a capable medical officer, who is the proper judge as to whether these immigrants should be admitted into the country or not. You have a medical officer——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We have authority to appoint medical officers.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—But you are striking out the medical officer in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We are not striking out any. My hon. friend is misinformed. Dr. Bryce was appointed a medical officer, not chief medical officer. He stands on the same footing as the others under the order in council.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Who is chief medical officer?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is none.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—But you are cancelling the present appointment.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman is misinformed. Dr. Bryce was not appointed chief medical officer. The order in council reads appointed 'as a medical officer,' not as 'chief medical officer'.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I would ask my hon. friend, if he was not appointed superintendent of the Immigration Department by Mr. Sifton, some years ago, what has he been doing? What have been his duties? There are other officers to be appointed in the service, but the chief medical officer is to be stricken out.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, no, nothing of the kind.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—But the hon. gentleman says that that clause relating to the chief medical officer is to be stricken out. Does he mean that or something else?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I stated over and over again that there is no chief medical officer in the department. The order in council appointing Dr. Bryce does not name him as a chief medical officer, simply as a medical officer of the department.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—If there is no chief medical officer, there should be one, because the duties which are assigned to medical officers by the Bill are the most important and the most imperative which could be imposed upon a physician. If there is a medical man, as I understood there was, at the head of the Immigration Department, I do not see why he should not be at the head of the staff. To have a medical department without a chief is nonsense. Doctors differ, and if they are all on the same level who is to give instructions? The diseases which are mentioned in the Bill, idiocy, insanity, epilepsy, trachoma—a new disease which like leprosy no one understands here—are all of a class which render it most imperatively necessary that there should be a chief medical officer. I thought the medical staff was to be under the same head as previously; that Dr. Montizambert would be the chief. He is a very competent man and well qualified for the position. If there is not to be a chief medical officer where there are so many different ports of entry, the result will be chaos and confusion.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is an unusual thing to find this House insisting that the government shall appoint officers who are not found necessary. The hon. gentleman who has just sat down seems to think it is necessary there should be a chief medical officer. I understand Dr. Bryce is now the medical officer at Ottawa. Ottawa is an important point, and there will continue to be a medical officer here; I suppose Dr. Bryce will continue to fill the position. But my hon. friend will see that the Governor in Council is empowered to appoint a superintendent of immigration. It is the duty of the officer to supervise all the other officers of the department. There is nothing in the Bill which would call for the appointment of a chief medical officer. The medical men at the various ports discharge their duties at the points for which they are appointed. I take it that the medical officer at Quebec is a much more important officer than the one at Ottawa. There are thousands of immigrants who first enter the country at Quebec, to hundreds who come to Ottawa; in fact the immigrant does not come to Ottawa until he has passed though the hands of a medical officer somewhere else, and I think it will be time enough to make provision for a chief medical officer when the government asks for power to appoint one.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—As my hon. friend is answering for the government, can he say who will assume the responsibility for the medical policy of the department, particularly in view of the fact that there will be a great number of medical men called upon to discharge the duties outlined in the Bill. Surely each one will not be a law unto himself. Surely one medical man will not be able to say, 'I will pursue such and such a course,' with reference to the different classes of disease, while another at a different port will take a diametrically opposite course. We know the medical men disagree as widely as lawyers disagree, and it seems to me it will be necessary to have one man in charge possessing superior knowledge and experience.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The minister is the man who is responsible.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Would my hon. friend venture an opinion as to what knowledge the present Minister of the Interior would have upon the medical policy to be pursued in such an important matter? Supposing the various medical men disagree among themselves, who is to be the arbiter ?

Hon. Mr. JONES—It appears to me that the clause omitting the words 'chief medical officer,' is just as wide as if it included them. The clause says the Governor in Council may appoint a superintendent of immigration, commissioners of immigration, &c., and such other officers as the Governor in Council may determine. No instructions are laid down as to the duties to be assigned, and in making the appointments it will be quite possible to constitute one man a chief medical officer if the government so desire. Striking out these words does not in any sense narrow the power of the government either to appoint a chief medical officer, or to give such instructions to each medical man as they may see fit.

It would appear to me that the same thing might be done in the case of the superintendent of immigration. The government would have just as wide powers then as they would have under the clause as it reads now.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—It may be owing to my extreme obtuseness that I cannot understand the object of the hon. Secretary of State in removing these words. If the government was appointing medical officers, what has Dr. Bryce been doing? What position has he been occupying? Has he been there as a mere drone doing no work? I understood that he was employed in 1904 by Hon. C. Sifton, when he inaugurated his great policy of immigration, and that he has been occupying that position up to the present time. We must have some chief medical officer at the head of the department, as the present Minister of the Interior would hardly understand the qualifications necessary in deciding what immigrants should be excluded from the country on account of disease. He would not be able to examine into that and ascertain all the facts in connection with the immigrants, therefore it is necessary to have an officer whose duty it will be to do that, and who will be held responsible to the Governor in Council for the proper importation of immigrants into Canada. I contend that we should have some good reason for dismissing the chief medical officer, who has been performing good service during these years. Some reasons should be given why that officer is removed. I do not know Dr. Bryce, but it does appear to me that it would be unfair treatment. Is there any object in getting rid of him ? If there is, let it be boldly stated why he is dismissed instead of striking out this clause at the last minute. No fault has been found heretofore with him. He has been performing his duties efficiently and there has been no cause of complaint. As was put by my hon. friend the leader of the opposition, is there some other man who desires the position ? Is there something behind the scenes, that this officer is to be set aside and somebody else put in his place ? If they say they are not going to have any one responsible to the department or to the government as the case may be ; if they are going to weaken the immigration policy, let them say so, and remove this man and do whatever they like, but in the meantime has the immigration policy not been an efficient one ? The government to-day glories in their policy of importing a large number of immigrants from foreign countries into the Northwest where they are locating by the thousands. They are bringing them from all countries, and is that not a reason why we should have a chief medical officer to inspect the class of people who are going there ? For this reason I raise my voice against the dismissal of this officer, and I ask the leader of the government what position has Dr. Bryce been occupying ? Has he or has he not been chief medical officer ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No he has not.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Who has been chief medical officer ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There has not been one.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Has he or has he not been the adviser of the Minister of the Interior, as to the proper course to pursue in reference to immigration from the old country ? Has he not been looked up to and consulted, and has he not advised the government as to the proper course to pursue in the matter of immigration ? Why was he brought here from Toronto ? Was there any reason why he should be removed from his position in Toronto to occupy the position he has occupied since 1904 ? Are we now in such a position that we do not want as careful inspection as we had before ? We are doing away with the system of offering bonuses to people to come here. We are trying to keep out the undesirable immigrants, and are we going to remove this officer who has been employed to prevent that class of immigrants being imported ? I say not. And I say if Dr. Bryce has been of any service for the last number of years,—and he has been of service or he ought not to have been retained up to the present time—let us keep him where he is. If he is no longer any use let the government tell us so. If he is of no use, but merely occupying a position without doing service to the country, remove him, but let us know why. Let us be bold enough to give a reason for the course we are pursuing, because this is evidently intended for the removal of that medical officer. I am therefore, opposed to striking out those words.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I am surprised at the attitude of the hon. gentleman. He speaks as though Dr. Bryce had been appointed chief medical officer. Up to the present time there has been no such officer. Dr. Bryce was appointed some years ago a medical officer in connection with the department

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Has he, or has he not been chief medical officer of the department during the last 4 years ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—If the fears that the hon. gentleman suggests are founded on fact, he has no evidence that if the Act were passed Dr. Bryce would be appointed chief medical officer. Dr. Bryce is not going to be supplanted by any one else occupying that position to-day. I am satisfied from information I have that these medical officers look after all immigrants arriving here. The argument advanced by the leader of the opposition is the very best possible argument in favour of striking out those words. The hon. gentleman says there may be differences of opinion among medical men, as to how immigrants should be treated. If his idea should prevail, that some one man should have the power to decide, who would be responsible ? Every other medical gentlemen giving an opinion is as competent as a chief medical officer would be to render a decision on any case coming before him. We hold the Minister of the Interior responsible for the class of immigrants coming to the country and the inspection of immigrants.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Who would be the proper one to decide whether an immigrant should be admitted or not ? Would it not be the medical officer ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The proper person to be held responsible is the Minister of the Interior. He has officers working under him inspecting immigrants.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Will the hon. gentleman tell me what qualification the Minister of the Interior has to decide who are proper immigrants ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I am not speaking of the qualification of the minister as an inspector of immigrants. I say he is responsible for the class of immigrants admitted into the country. He is the man who will appoint qualified medical men to advise him. If he has a competent staff, which I believe he has, composed of ten or twelve men, at different points in the Dominion, who are employed to inspect immigrants, it is his business to find out from the best authority what should be done in certain cases, and it should not be left entirely to one man.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Is the minister to take the advice of the different doctors and decide which is best ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Yes. If it was a serious matter I would suppose the minister would consult his medical officers, call in experts if necessary and not leave it entirely in the hands of one man. The hon. gentleman must remember this, that up to the present time there has been no appointment of a chief medical officer by the Governor in Council; consequently no person is to be deprived of his position by striking out those words.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I am perfectly well aware of that. But I stated distinctly that it was the Minister of the Interior who appointed the medical officer as chief of the department, and he has been so acting.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—So far as we know, there has been no chief medical officer.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Well, he has been acting.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—He has probably been acting under the direction of the minister, and probably he will continue to act under the minister. Clause 10 provides:

10. The Governor in Council may, on the recommendation of the minister, make such orders and regulations, not inconsistent with this Act, as are considered necessary or expedient for the carrying out of this Act according to its true intent and meaning and for the better attainment of its object.

There is the power given to the Minister of the Interior by order in council to make any regulations he sees fit. Surely it is much better to leave that matter in the hands of the minister who is responsible to the people of Canada for the expenditure in his department, than to say that a chief medical officer shall be appointed.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Would he or would he not be in a position to appoint a chief medical officer?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Certainly a chief medical officer may be appointed on the recommendation of the minister.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Then why is this clause to be struck out?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Because the minister has the power.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—The government have the power; then why do you want this clause struck out?

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I have nothing whatever to say about the appointment of Dr. Bryce. I know him to be a very efficient and very thorough member of the Liberal party during the time he was in command of the medical staff in the city of Toronto.

Hon. Mr. WATSON.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No one is saying anything against Dr. Bryce.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I say nothing with regard to that; it would only injure him probably if I were to recommend him. I know he is a good man for the position. I say this, however, here is a branch of a department established for the first time.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—No.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—It is a department which requires men of particular training and qualified to formulate the proper plan for examining these immigrants, detecting diseases to which they may be subject and which it is necessary for the health of the people of Canada to exclude, and it requires a man at the head who is well qualified. I know the difficulties that are met in cases of that kind, and that every physician who may get an appointment by political favour, may not be the best man for the position. If political influence would always secure the appointment of the best qualified men, I would not have so much to say; but the minister may have to get some expert to lay down a definite plan and frame rules and a system for these medical men, much better than anything we have ever had before in Canada. Therefore, when a new branch like this, peculiarly a scientific branch, is started for the first time, in the department, there should be a fully qualified man at the head.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It seems to me there is a great deal of cry over very little wool. I cannot understand why the minister desires to strike this out. It only empowers the government to do that which they need not do unless they think it necessary. Did I understand the hon. Secretary of State to say that this sentence was added to the Bill just at the close of its passing in the other House, or that it was struck out.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was struck out in the other House. We have not made any amendment here. It is just to correct the Bill as sent up. It was struck out in the other House.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Then why is it in this Bill?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I find I am wrong, it was not struck out.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I was going to ask, if it was struck out in the other House, who took the responsibility of placing it here?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There was no authority before the passing of this Bill to appoint any chief medical officer.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I take it for granted that the whole discussion has been on the suggestion of the hon. Secretary of State to strike out the power given to the Governor in Council to appoint a chief medical officer. It does not say that they shall do it; it says they may do it. Is there any difficulty among the medical officers that are now appointed, and is that difficulty of such a character that the government is not prepared to decide which of them shall be chief medical officer? Is that the reason why he wants to strike it out, to relieve them of the responsibility of making a selection?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. Secretary of State has not yet given the reason why he wants to strike this out, unless he wants to deprive the government of the power of appointing a chief over that branch of the public service in order to relieve themselves of some responsibility they do not wish to assume. As a layman, it is a matter of perfect indifference to me, but it seems to me that under the clauses of this Bill, even with those words struck out, the minister would have the power to place one of the staff at the head.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I have before me a copy of the Bill as it was introduced in the House of Commons and these words 'chief medical officer' do not appear in it, but were introduced in the House of Commons.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—By whom?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I do not know, but it was introduced against the wish of the minister, and the minister has made a request to have the words struck out. He does not believe it would be in the interest of immigration or of the medical staff to have that appointment made by the Governor in Council. He believes that he, as minister, has a right to name any one as medical officer, and the power is given under clause 10. The words 'chief medical officer' were not in the original Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman has given the Senate the best possible reason why these words should be allowed to remain in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Why?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The minister wants the clause so amended that he himself shall have the power of appointing a chief medical officer.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—By order in council.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It does not say so.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Yes, in clause 10.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That section would not apply at all.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That does not apply. It is quite clear to my mind why the suggestion is made to strike it out. In the Bill we were considering yesterday we had a motion that the section providing that the Governor in Council should take the responsibility of these appointments should be stricken out, and the power and the authority vested in the hands of the minister. This clause compels the Governor in Council directly to take the responsibility of these appointments, and, if these words are struck out, then the minister would have the power, as my hon. friend says himself, of making the appointment, irrespective of the Governor in Council.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The position, I think, is this : at the present time there is not by law any power given to the Governor in Council to appoint medical officers at all. The clause now before the committee is the first authorization of the appointment of medical officers by the Governor in Council, and I do not see any reason why this committee should insist that there shall be a chief medical officer. As I tried to point out before, looking at the character of the immigration into this country and the places where the immigrants enter the country, there is no special reason why any one medical officer should be placed above his fellows, and the hon. gentleman from Belleville, looking at clause 10 thinks he sees some sinister object in the striking out of the words 'chief medical officer'. What does clause 10 say? The clause reads:

The Governor in Council may, on the recommendation of the minister, make such orders and regulations, not inconsistent with this Act, as are considered necessary.

The Governor in Council, under clause 10, might make regulations providing that the officer at Ottawa, or some one of these other officers, should be the chief medical officer, but he is not bound to do so, and I do not see why this committee should undertake to insist that an officer whom the government do not now consider necessary should be appointed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I did not insinuate there was any sinister motive in connection with the wording of it, but I did make insinuations as to clause 5 which we are now considering. The second deputy minister from Portage la Prairie told us the object of the minister was to retain the power in himself. I would suggest to the first lieutenant and the second lieutenant of the hon. Secretary of State that they come to some agreement so that they can argue from the same standpoint.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I am not going to discuss the matter of medical men in Canada, but there is an important point which I wish to bring before the notice of the government. The hon. Secretary of State will remember that last year we discussed the case of some twenty men affected with trachoma who were returned to the old country, and it was then shown what cruelty was involved in allowing these men to embark and to come all the way to Canada, only to be turned back to Europe. This Bill provides for the inspection of immigrants in Canada, but there is no provision for inspection at the port of embarkation.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, there is.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The inspection is made by a doctor of the Board of Trade at Liverpool or London and by the medical officer of the ship. If that inspection is worth anything, why do they allow men having disease to come on board the ship? The shipping companies take their passage money and then the poor wretches are turned back, penniless and diseased, to their own country. I hope the government will take note of the necessity for a rigid inspection at the port of embarkation. That is where it should be made and then those who are idiots, insane or epileptic would be kept back. I think this is the right place to mention the matter, and I hope the hon. Secretary of State will not forget it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If it is considered sufficiently important in connection with the appointment of a medical officer to provide that it shall be made by the Governor in Council, surely it is extremely illogical to say that the Governor in Council shall not appoint the chief medical officer.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is not contemplated to appoint a chief medical officer. Any medical men who are appointed are simply styled medical officers. What would be the use of a chief medical officer at one point; he could not supervise other officers five hundred or a thousand miles away.

The clause as amended was adopted.

On clause (b) of clause 11,

(b) a greater number of persons, including the master and crew of the cabin passengers, if any, than one for every two tons of the tonnage of such vessel, calculated in the manner used for ascertaining the tonnage of British ships.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The tonnage of a British ship is stated in two ways, the gross tonnage and what is called the registered tonnage. Perhaps the minister can tell what is meant here? It is a matter of some importance, because sometimes the gross tonnage is one-third larger than the registered tonnage, and I think it would be better to have it defined.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I fancy it is the registered tonnage.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 15,

15. In addition to the particulars hereinbefore required in the report to be delivered on each voyage by the master of any vessel arriving at any port of entry in Canada to the immigration agent at such port, the master shall report in writing to such agent the name and age of all passengers embarked on board of such vessed on such voyage who are lunatic, idiotic, epileptic, deaf and dumb, or dumb, blind or infirm, or suffering from any disease or injury known to exist by the medical officer of the ship, specifying the nature of the disease and stating also whether they are accompanied by relatives able to support them or not.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—This would presuppose that the persons who are described are to be allowed to come on board the vessel.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is an examination made before the immigrants are taken on ; this is to prevent any possible mistake arising afterwards. Every effort is made to have a close examination at the port of embarkation, but you cannot always avoid the possibility of undesirable persons being passed over.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Clause 26 is perfectly right, but clause 15, as I read it, presupposes that these people are allowed to come on board.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—Take the case of a family in which there is one child who is deaf and dumb ; there is no humane person who would desire to see that child abandoned, left behind, as long as the country is satisfied that it will not become a charge upon the public. Surely the hon. gentleman would not insist upon the exclusion of such a person.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—It might be very difficult indeed for any medical officer making an inspection before the ship sails to say definitely whether or not a particular immigrant is affected with epileptic attacks. I can understand that long continued epilepsy might possibly affect the intellect, but, as a general rule, persons suffering from that disease may not during a considerable length of time display any sign of it. Am I to understand that if an epileptic is permitted to come on board the boat, the officers not noticing that he was subject to attacks of this nature, that that party is to be refused admission to Canada? We know that many epileptics are as clever men as we have in this country. The disease is not one which always renders the subject incapable of earning a livelihood or of being a useful member of society. Of course we sometimes find epileptics who are weak minded, and it is possible that they might not be able to make provision for their own maintenance ; but to say that because a person has had an epileptic fit he should not be allowed to enter Canada, does not seem proper. I suppose there is hardly one of us who has not been, in some portion of our lives, troubled with an epileptic fit. Children are frequently affected, and I think we ought not to exclude from Canada persons who might make useful citizens.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That clause only refers to the report which must be made by the captain of the ship.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The clause before us does not undertake to say that an epileptic shall not land. It simply says that it shall be the duty of the master of the ship to report such cases, and surely that is a reasonable proposition. If an epileptic is landed in Canada the authorities here should be made aware of the fact.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—It appears the epileptic is included in the Bill and with whom ? What class ? My hon. friend from Halifax knows full well what it means—that he is one of those subjects unfit to come to Canada as an immigrant.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No, one that has to be reported—that is all.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—And deported too.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—My learned friend will report a lunatic or a deaf and dumb person, or even a blind or infirm person, or a person suffering from a disease. The epileptic is with that class. Are you going to report others and not the epileptic ? It means all of them. They are to be reported, and those that are reported will be deported from the country.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 16,

16. The report shall further contain the name, age and last place of residence of any person who has died during the voyage, and shall specify whether such person was accompanied by relatives or other persons who were entitled to take charge of the moneys and effects left by such person and the disposition made thereof.

2. If there were no such relatives or other persons so entitled, the report shall fully designate the quantity and description of the property, whether money or otherwise, left by such person ; and the master of the vessel shall pay over and fully account, to the immigration agent at the port at which the vessel is entered, for all moneys and effects belonging to any person who has died on the voyage.

3. The immigration agent shall thereupon grant to the master a receipt for all moneys or effects so placed in his hands by the master, which receipt shall contain a full description of the nature or amount thereof.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I think there should be a slight amendment to this clause giving the cause of death, because I think it is important that it should be known whether the immigrant died of disease or injury or any other way.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no objection to that.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Following out the line suggested by the hon. gentleman from Kingston, I move that we insert in line 38, after the word specify, the words 'the cause of death and.'

The clause was amended and adopted.

On clause 19,

19. The immigration agent, whenever he deems proper, may request the medical officer before any passengers leave the vessel to go on board and inspect such vessel, and examine and take extracts from the list of passengers or manifest, and from the bill of health.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I think the medical officer should make an examination of the health of each of the passengers.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He does examine.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The clause says the medical officer shall examine and take extracts from the lists. He is limited to the lists. How will he take the extracts from the passengers?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think that that is an important question, and it is just as well to make it clear. I move that after the word 'examine' in the 19th line, we insert the words 'the passengers.'

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I understand the passengers are all thoroughly inspected in the immigration sheds.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Where is the provision for that?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The passengers are inspected in the sheds in Quebec. It takes them sometimes three days to examine them all. They are fed there for that time.

Hon. Mr. WILSON.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—They should not be detained there if there were any disease.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—You cannot have a personal examination on board.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The inspection should have a much larger scope than simply examining the list of passengers.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I think they would have to pass quarantine before they arrive at Quebec.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—Yes that is so, and if there is a contagious disease on board, the vessel is delayed there.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Then it means that there is another examination by another department.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—That is under Dr. Montizambert, the general health officer.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—No, the hon. gentleman is mistaken. The hon. Secretary of State said he had nothing to do with this.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Then that is not so understood. This is a new departure.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—This is dealing with a specific matter, but the other applies generally. No vessel is allowed under the present regulation to come to the port of Quebec or any other port in Canada without passing quarantine; if there is any contagious disease on board the vessel is detained.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 24,

24. The immigration agent shall be responsible for the safekeeping of any person so detained, except while in an hospital or other place of detention under the charge of a medical officer.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Where is this inspection?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—When they come ashore they are individually examined, and it takes from two to three days sometimes. They complain very much about being kept over.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 25,

25. The medical officer may, from time to time, with the consent and approval of the minister, make such arrangements as he considers necessary for the care and supervision of immigrants who are detained on board a vessel where hospital facilities on shore do not exist, or, having been permitted to leave the vessel, are detained either for medical treatment or are awaiting deportation.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Who is the medical officer referred to here?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is an officer at all the ports. St. John, Halifax, Quebec and other points.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—If there is any appeal from their decision, to whom would it be ?

Hon. Mr. JONES—The clause says to the minister.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I was asking the hon. Secretary of State. There are too many members of the government here to get the information we want.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The clause says that a medical officer may from time to time, with the consent and approval of the minister, make such arrangement and so on.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 26,

26. No immigrant shall be permitted to land in Canada, who is feeble-minded, an idiot, or an epileptic, or who is insane, or has had an attack of insanity within five years; nor shall any immigrant be so landed who is deaf and dumb, or dumb, blind or infirm, unless he belongs to a family who accompany him or are already in Canada and who give security, satisfactory to the minister, and in conformity with the regulations in that behalf, if any, for his permanent support if admitted into Canada.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think the words of this clause are liable to lead to misconception. I wish to direct the attention of the committee to this ; as that clause is worded and punctuated, the latter part, the provision with respect to belonging to a family, applies only to those who are deaf and dumb or blind and infirm, and does not apply to the idiots, epileptics, although it is the intention it should apply to all. In order to make the matter clear, I would move to strike out these words beginning in line 13 : 'Nor shall any immigrant be so landed '.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That would not do, because the insane person would have to be deaf and dumb. You would have to say 'Or who is deaf and dumb '.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes, insert 'or,' and the other words should be stricken out.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—A dumb man is just as good an immigrant as any. I do not consider that it is such an infliction as should deprive a man of the right to be landed here, because he may be in possession of all his mental faculties, perhaps in a degree superior to the medical examiner.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I object to any change in that clause.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—We know that there are persons who are dumb, but who have a method of communication and can understand the speech of others. I have seen cases of that kind ; therefore in order to embrace that class I think the clause had better remain as it is. But there is another one. What does my hon. friend from Halifax, who seems to approve of this clause, mean by the word 'infirm.' Is it feebleness from age or from some disease, or is it simply incapacity to perform a certain amount of labour ? Infirmities we know come on from old age. If this word infirm embraces all those meanings, a person of advanced years would not be allowed to come into Canada. As my hon. friend from Halifax has been explaining this clause, perhaps he will state what is meant by the use of this word 'infirm '.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I feel this way about it ; if the Senate has any duty I think it is to revise the legislation which comes up from the other House. Now I understand the attitude of the minister is that that is not our duty.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I did not say so.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman says he will not allow any amendment to this clause. If you go back to clause 15, you will find that it specifies any one who is a lunatic, idotic, epileptic, deaf and dumb, or dumb, blind or infirm, whether accompanied by a relative able to support such person or not. They are all in the same category. That would appear to provide that if an epileptic patient is accompanied by relatives who are able to support him, he will be allowed to land.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, not under this clause ; it is not intended.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I cannot speak for the intentions of the department, but clause 15 looks as if that were the intention. Clause 26 says :

26. No immigrant shall be permitted to land in Canada, who is feeble-minded, an idiot, or an epileptic, or who is insane, or has had an attack of insanity within five years; nor shall any immigrant be so landed who is deaf and dumb, or dumb, blind or infirm, unless he belongs to a family who accompany him or are already in Canada and who give security, satisfactory to the minister, and in conformity with the regulations in that behalf, if any, for his permanent support if admitted into Canada.

Clearly the intention of the department was that the clause should apply to all those.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, they do not allow insane persons to come, and never have.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No epileptic is to be allowed to land either. If that is the intention of the department, it is an exceedingly objectionable one. I give notice that I shall move to amend that clause at the third reading.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If clause 15 is to be construed as the hon. member from St. John has construed it, then the hon. member from Halifax is perfectly right in the construction which he places on clause 26, namely, that all the parties mentioned there are to come in if accompanied by their relatives and they have the means of supporting them. If the hon. Secretary of State be correct, then the hon. member from St. John is wrong, so that no humanitarian sympathies or purposes would permit any of those persons mentioned in clause 15 to land.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Clause 15 simply refers to a report of persons who are affected in any way with minor or greater weaknesses. Clause 26 refers to persons who are feeble-minded. Idiots have not been allowed to come into Canada.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes, if accompanied by their families.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, they have been deported, because idiots have to be sent to an asylum. The insane are not allowed to come to Canada. It has not been the policy of the department.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Then it is idle in clause 15 to say that this list shall be made up.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is for information only.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It should be expressly provided that the master of the vessel should be punished for bringing any such persons to Canada, but under this clause he may permit such persons to embark and he has only to provide a list and furnish it to the immigration agent. It seems to me there should be an express prohibition.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is, later on.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I appeal to the committee with respect to this matter. Say there is a family of eight, father, mother and half dozen children. Among those children is one feeble-minded, or who happens to be afflicted with epilepsy ; is it proposed that Canada shall take that feeble-minded or epileptic child and deport him and say he shall not be allowed to land with his parents ? That is one of the most inhuman doctrines I have ever heard laid down, and I am satisfied the Minister of the Interior never meant it that way.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is absolutely impossible to frame the language to be so specific as to deal with every case. You must leave a wide margin of discretion. That discretion is exercised every day.

Hon. Mr. POWER—This is not a case of discretion. Why not take the same language as in clause 15 and put all these classes together ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The other is simply a report from the captain.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 27,

27. No immigrant shall be permitted to land in Canada who is afflicted with a loathsome disease or with a disease which is contagious or infectious and which may become dangerous to the public health or widely disseminated, whether such immigrant intends to settle in Canada or only to pass through Canada to settle in some other country ; but if such disease is one which is curable within a reasonably short time the immigrant suffering therefrom may, subject to the regulations in that behalf, if any, be permitted to remain on board where hospital facilities do not exist on shore, or to leave the vessel for medical treatment, under such regulations as may be made by the minister.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—What on earth can the minister do in the way of making regulations? They should be made by the doctor. Take a case of small-pox; the man would be dead or better by the time you could get a communication to the minister and a reply. He could not get any instructions from the minister. That is why I speak of the necessity of having a chief medical officer to regulate all these things. It is absurd, to my mind, to assign this duty to the minister; it should be left undoubtedly to the medical officer.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is under regulations made by the minister. You cannot define all those circumstances by statute.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If the committee would permit me to hark back to clause 15 and clause 26, I think the hon. Secretary of State will observe upon reference to the Act that he is incorrect in saying that lunatics, epileptics and that class of immigrants have been absolutely prohibited from landing in Canada. They have been permitted to land in the event of their being in charge of their families, as the hon. gentleman will find by referring to subsection 2 of section 17. I think the hon. member from Halifax is right in the conclusion he drew from the language of clause 26; it certainly has been the policy of the government to allow such immigrants to land if they are accompanied by their families.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 28,

28. No immigrant shall be permitted to land in Canada who is a pauper, or destitute, a professional beggar, or vagrant, or who is likely to become a public charge; and any person landed in Canada who, within two years thereafter, has become a charge upon the public funds, whether municipal, provincial or federal, or an inmate of or a charge upon any charitable institution, may be deported and returned to the port or place whence such immigrant came or sailed for Canada.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The first part of this clause is proper, but the provision that a person who may, two years after, become a charge on the public funds may be deported, is an extraordinary provision. If an immigrant is admitted into the country and happen to become destitute within two years after his arrival, he may be deported; the period is altogether too long. I would suggest three months or six months.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Leave out the time altogether.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think Canada should not try to establish a reputation for being perfectly inhuman.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In the United States it is three years. Of course it is altogether a discretionary power, and not at all likely to be exercised except in some notable case where the circumstances would be justifiable.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—It does not appear to me that the clause leaves any discretionary power. It says positively that no immigrant shall be permitted to land in Canada who belongs to the class mentioned, and that he may be deported.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is a wide discretion.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Who is to have the authority? Is it upon an order in council, or is the immigration agent given the discretion?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The department would be governed by the conditions and circumstances. They would not want to do an inhuman or improper thing. There may be instances where an immigrant becomes a public charge when it would be only proper and right that he should be deported.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—I think two years is an objectionable feature.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is three years in the United States.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—That is no reason why we should follow their example.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—In the United States they have been obliged to draw the lines rigidly. They have suffered from an influx of an objectionable class of immigrants, immigrants who are not beneficial to the United States; but a man coming to the country may be perfectly sane when he arrives, and may be a useful citizen for a year or a year and one-half, and some disease may occur whereby he becomes deportable under this clause, and he is sent back to the country from where he came. The transportation companies are to be responsible, if the municipalities are not responsible, and the immigrant can be sent back to the place from which he was brought. No one can guarantee that a person will remain in his right mind for a period of two years. It appears to me that this would be a very unreasonable clause. I should think that a limitation of six months, or even less would be ample.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I saw it stated a few days ago that there were a very considerable number of persons in London, England, who were professional beggars, men who had accumulated considerable sums of money, but who still kept on begging—it had become a mania with them. We can easily understand a man of that class coming to Canada, possibly with $25 or $50 in his pocket, a healthy looking man, and he would be admitted. If that man were to take up his old calling as a professional beggar, do you mean to tell me that at any time, even after a longer interval than two years, he should not be deported ?

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I do not think the hon. Secretary of State really means that, because he would certainly, by this clause, expel many people from Canada to-day who are very useless and who do not earn their living. The agent in London or Liverpool who looks after the immigrants as they embark should see to this part of it. Why should we forbid professional beggars to come here ? They might make useful citizens.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is only where they continue to be professional beggars.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I do not want them to come with that purpose, but I can understand that people might desire to come to Canada because they had been unfortunate and could not earn a living at home. If they should be unsuccessful here I do not think they should be deported and have it go abroad that the people of Canada are so ungenerous.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—How would it do to send them to the county of Elgin?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I move that the words 'six months' be substituted for the words 'two years.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The clause only applies to a very undesirable class.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—I think it applies to any one.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am assuming a case where they continue to follow the undesirable vocation which they had when they left. If they were to change under the influence of Canadian sentiment, of course they would not come within the provisions of the Act.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I think it would be well to leave out the expressions 'pauper' and 'destitute.' A man may have met with losses and yet he might be in a position to become a useful citizen.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I think the country is getting rich, and it is getting inhuman at the same time. This is certainly an exceedingly severe provision, to turn a man out of the country after he has been here two years, because he may have fallen into decay in some way or another. The last portion of the clause, after the semi-colon, does not refer to professional beggars at all. It refers to any person who has become a charge upon the public funds, either municipal, provincial or federal. The beggar is not a charge on the funds in that sense. He is collecting his money in the street ; but any man may come here with the best of health and the best intentions, with a sincere desire to provide for his family, but he may suffer misfortune and be unable to support himself. Then the country ruthlessly turns him out.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—This provision, I think, will be found to be entirely unworkable. Who can tell after two years what railway or steamer brought the immigrant to Canada ? If you say to the Canadian Pacific Railway : 'You brought this man in two years ago and you must take him back', the answer would probably be : 'We did not bring him ; where is the proof that we brought him ?'

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—I must say I do not think the contention of my hon. friend the Secretary of State is correct. The clause says :

28. No immigrant shall be permitted to land in Canada who is a pauper, or destitute, a professional beggar, or vagrant, or who is likely to become a public charge ; and any person landed in Canada who, within two years thereafter, has become a charge upon the public funds, &c.

That is to say, a man may come to Canada who is worth $500,000 and lose it and if he becomes a charge afterwards, unable to make his own living, he must be sent away.

Hon. Mr. JONES—It is optional with the government. If they feel that it ought to be done, then they have the power to do it, otherwise no action would be taken.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—If the time be shortened as is proposed by the amendment, it is quite possible, and in fact more than probable, that a great number of these people whom the United States want to get rid of along the frontier will come to Canada. We may get them by the hundreds, and if you had immigration agents posted at every point along the boundary line it would still be possible for this class of people to get into the country. But if we have such a provision as this in the law, if they are in the country and are reported by the municipality to the government, the government can then deport them. We do not want to have the class described in this clause become a permanent burden and nuisance in the country, and I think the conditions set down here whereby the municipality may notify the government and the government may deport, is a proper provision to be included in the Bill.

The amendment was declared lost on a division.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 31,

31. Acting under the authority of the minister, the immigration agent, the medical officer, and any other officer or officers named by the minister for such purpose, may act as a board of inquiry at any port of entry to consider and decide upon the case of any immigrant seeking admission into Canada. The decision of such board touching the right of any such immigrant to land in Canada shall be subject to appeal to the superintendent of immigration, whose action shall be subject to review by the minister. Where the case to be considered is one arising under section 26 or 27, the appeal from the decision of the board shall be to the chief medical officer, whose action shall be subject to review by the minister.

2. The Governor in Council may make regulations governing the procedure in connection with inquiries by such boards of inquiry and appeals from their decisions.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In the first part of this clause, I move to strike out all the words after 'superintendent' in the 7th line, and add the word 'minister'.

The clause was amended and adopted.

On clause 33,

32. All railway or transportation companies or other persons bringing immigrants from any country into Canada shall, on the demand of the superintendent of immigration, deport to the country whence he was brought, any immigrant prohibited by this Act or any order in council or regulation made thereunder, from being landed in Canada who was brought by such railway, transportation company or other person into Canada within a period of two years prior to the date of such demand.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—It seems to me this should be amended to correspond with the other clauses of the Bill. Would it not be better to say : All immigrants arriving in Canada by railway or in any other manner by land shall be subject to the same inspection as immigrants arriving by vessel and by railway or transportation company. I desire that the same course shall be pursued towards the immigrants coming into Canada from the United States by railway. They should be subject to the same regulations.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think the clause is very clear as it is and could not be better drafted. I have read it over carefully and find that it is in unison with what we have already adopted.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 32,

33. Whenever in Canada an immigrant has within two years of his landing in Canada committed a crime involving moral turpitude, or become an inmate of a jail or hospital or other charitable institution, it shall be the duty of the clerk or secretary of the municipality to forthwith notify the minister thereof, giving full particulars. On receipt of such information the minister may, on investigating the facts, order the deportation of such immigrant at the cost and charges of such immigrant if he is able to pay, and if not then at the cost of the municipality wherein he has last been regularly resident, if so ordered by the minister, and if he is a vagrant or tramp, or there is no such municipality, then at the cost of the Department of the Interior. Every such immigrant shall be carried by the same transportation company or companies which brought him into Canada to the port from which he came to Canada without receiving the usual payment for such carriage. In case he was brought into Canada by a railway company such company shall similarly convey him or secure his conveyance from the municipality or locality whence he is to be deported to the country whence he was brought.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I wish to direct attention to this clause: the side note says one year and the text says two years. It seems to me this clause is unreasonable, and it will be found unworkable when you come to put the law into operation. It says whenever an immigrant has within two years of his landing committed a crime involving moral turpitude. Any crime involves moral turpitude.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We do not want criminals.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Certainly we do not, and I suppose the hon. gentleman should go further and say that all the inmates in the penitentiaries should be deported.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, we take care of our own criminals.

Hon. Mr. POWER—When does a man become our own criminal? This immigrant may be a citizen of Canada and may be a voter within two years.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Three years.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It would depend on how he votes.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It seems to me an extraordinary thing to say that if a man who came here and who was led to commit, say a small theft—

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No that is not contemplated.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Will the hon. gentleman define what it does mean? A man who takes an article animo furandi—that involves moral turpitude. And if this man, who may have gone out and settled in Alberta on a farm, perhaps after 22 months in the country has stolen ten dollars worth, you can deport him to Hungary or wherever he came from and undertake to say that the railway that brought him out there shall take him back, and then that the steamship company that landed him in Montreal or Quebec shall convey him also. That clause is, to my mind, absurd and will be found utterly unworkable in practice.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is absolutely impossible to administer the department unless there is some latitude. You cannot expect it. Surely the attitude of the minister and the officials would be rather to protect the man if he had been only guilty of a small crime. Moral turpitude means more than the commission of the theft of ten dollars. It means crimes that are sometimes unnameable, and it is not contemplated that we shall permit people who have been guilty of that class of crime to come into Canada.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The statistics desirable will not be obtainable through the municipality. I am not aware of the municipalities having any machinery for ascertaining statistics of this character. It seems to me the government should look for them from the provincial authorities or from the wardens of the jails or hospitals. May I ask my hon. friend why the term municipality has been put in there?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I could not really say. It was supposed that would be one of the sources of information. There would be many sources of information. If some remarkable case was brought to the notice of the authorities, where a man had committed a base crime, before any action would be taken an investigation would be held by the minister, and it would only be in some extreme cases that this power would be exercised.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is very desirable that the government should be able to receive statistics of this kind. If this two year clause is invoked I can assure my hon. friend that there is a large field in the west in which he can operate to very great advantage.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 36,

36. The minister or the superintendent of immigration may, from time to time, by instruction to the immigration agent at any port of entry appoint the place at which all passengers arriving at such port shall be landed

Hon. Mr. WILSON—If they are coming by railway from the other side of the line to this side, where do you land them ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—At the depot.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—You have no means at the depot of accepting them?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—That amendment I suggested would cover it.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 38,

38. No person shall, at any port or place in Canada, for hire, reward or gain, or the expectation thereof, conduct, solicit or recommend, either orally or by handbill or placard or in any other manner, any immigrant, to or on behalf of any owner of a vessel, or to or on behalf of any lodging-house keeper or tavern keeper or any other person, for any purpose connected with the preparations or arrangements of such immigrant for his passage to his final place of destination in Canada, or in the United States, or in other territories outside of Canada, or give or pretend to give to such immigrant any information, oral, printed or otherwise, or assist him to his place of destination, or in any way exercise the vocation of booking passengers, or of taking money for their inland fare, or for the transportation of their luggage, unless such person has first obtained a license from the superintendent of immigration authorizing him to act in such capacity.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Is this a new clause?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is just to protect him from the shark.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Is there anything analogous to it in the present Act?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It is in the old Act.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is the result of experience. The provision is enlarged I expect.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 39,

39. No person, whether a licensed immigrant runner, or agent or person acting on behalf of any steamboat company, railway company, forwarding company, or hotel or boarding-house keeper or his agent, shall go on board any vessel bringing immigrants into Canada after such vessel has arrived in Canadian waters, or into an immigration building or on to any wharf where immigrants are landed, or shall book or solicit any immigrant by such vessel, before the immigrants are landed from such vessel, unless he is authorized so to do by the superintendent of immigration or immigration agent at the port of entry where such vessel is to land its passengers.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Would this clause interfere with a farmer who is desirous of obtaining an employee through any source except the immigration agent from making inquiries and obtaining services of these people?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no. You see by the papers the farmers are at the stations waiting for immigrants. As soon as a responsible person is willing to hire an immigrant, the authorities are only too glad to get rid of him.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 42,

42. If both the immigrant parents, or the last surviving immigrant parent of any child or children brought with them in any vessel bound for Canada, die on the voyage, or at any quarantine station or elsewhere in Canada while still under the care of an immigration agent or other officer under this Act, the minister, or such officer as he deputes for the purpose, may cause or otherwise, or assist him to his said place of destination, or in the effects of such parents or parent to be disposed of for the benefit of such child or children to the best advantage in his power, or in his discretion to be delivered over to any institution or person assuming the care and charge of such child or children.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I wish to strike out the 42nd line of this clause. These words were inserted by mistake.

The clause was amended and adopted.

On clause 43,

43. No officer, seaman or other person on board of any vessel bringing immigrants to Canada shall, while such vessel is in Canadian waters, entice or admit any female immigrant passenger into his apartment, or, except by the direction or permission of the master of such vessel first made or given for such purpose, visit or frequent any part of such vessel assigned to female immigrant passengers.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is one word in line six which might be dropped. It seems to me the words 'or frequent' should be stricken out, and that no one should be allowed to visit those quarters except by permission of the captain. When you say 'frequent,' that means that one might visit it often, and that one of the crew might frequent the quarters of the female immigrants if he had the permission of the Captain. I think no member of the crew should be allowed to frequent those quarters, and should not be allowed to visit them without the permission of the captain.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is simply reiterating.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman does not seem to take the point of my objection. My objection is that when you use the words 'or frequent,' it means that the officer or seaman or other person on board the vessel may habitually go there. I do not think he should be allowed to habitually go there at all, and that he should not be allowed to visit that portion of the ship without the permission of the captain, and that therefore the words 'or frequent' should be stricken out.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It seems to me it is simply emphasizing.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I could understand that that might do a hardship. Supposing one of the immigrants coming over should take sick, and it was necessary that a physician or some one else should have an opportunity of seeing that patient. The suggestion of my hon. friend from Halifax would prevent anything of that kind, and I think likely that the captain ought to be permitted to give authority or withhold authority.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes. I have called attention to it with the view of getting information and I have it.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 71,

71. Any person found in Canada who has come into Canada within a period of one year from any other country by any means or mode of conveyance and who would be liable to exclusion or deportation under any of the provisions of this Act relating to immigrants or passengers arriving by ship or railway train may be apprehended and compelled to return to the country whence he came.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—A change is to be made there to conform with the previous clause of the Bill. The words 'one year,' in the second line should be stricken out, and the words 'two years' inserted.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think my hon. friend is wrong in that, if he will pardon me for saying so. If the person is found in Canada within one year from the time of his arrival, then he may be deported within two years from that time, so that I think the clause is all right as it is.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It reads one year.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, but the one year is given to discover him. My hon. friend does not appreciate the point. The clause gives one year for the government to discover the arrival of the person in Canada. Then from that date he has two years to go on good behaviour and at any time within the two years he may be deported.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I would not put that interpretation on it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Then he may not be discovered within the two years. This practically gives three years, and I think it is better the way it is.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 72,

72. In any case where deportation of the father or head of a family is ordered, all dependent members of the amily shall be deported at the same time.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Is not that a bad clause to adopt?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It just depends on the condition. You cannot lay down an arbitrary rule. It is not likely to be exercised except in extreme cases. However, I have no objection to moving that the clause be amended, by striking out the word 'shall' and substituting the word 'may.'

The amendment was agreed to, and the clause as amended was adopted.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Cobourg), from the committee, reported the Bill with amendments which were agreed to.

GRAIN INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (207) An Act to amend the Grain Inspection Act.

(In the Committee.)

On clause 2,

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—This creates a new grade in compliance with the request of the people of the western wheat growing region.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I might say that the section of the country from which I come thoroughly appreciate the action of the government in establishing this standard.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—I would ask the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce whether they have taken into consideration the petition sent to the government about the responsibility of owners of warehouses and elevators ?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—That is not referred to in this Bill.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Will it come up in another Bill ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My hon. friend has reference to a proposition that some legislation should be introduced by which owners of elevators and warehouses should be liable for grain destroyed ?

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Yes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is entirely a matter of civil rights over which the province will have control. It is a matter of contract.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Could not that be dealt with by an amendment to the Grain Act ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read a third time and passed.

MANITOBA GRAIN ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (206) An Act to amend the Manitoba Grain Act, 1900.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I should like my hon. friend to repeat that statement in connection with this Bill that he made just now—that petitions have been presented by the western members, and the government take the position that they have no jurisdiction ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is in reference to grain destroyed.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—To make the owners of terminal elevators and warehouses responsible.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I repeat what I said a few moments ago. It is a question of civil rights over which the province has jurisdiction. They can at any time enact a law to provide that in the event of loss of grain the elevator owners or warehouse men may be held liable.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—But the board of trade take the view that an amendment to that effect could be introduced in the Manitoba Grain Act. If you relegate that matter to the provincial authorities, it might be to a large extent ineffectual. The grain is sent for instance from Manitoba to Port Arthur. Winnipeg is in one province and Port Arthur in another. The farmer has two jurisdictions to deal with.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They can follow it.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Those who produce and send the grain are not protected.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We have no power to affect contracts of that kind.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Have those petitions received consideration?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, I received a communication from, I presume, the board of trade.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—Has the government answered the board of trade of Winnipeg?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I really do not know; I will inquire and if they have not I will see that an answer is sent.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is the answer which the hon. gentleman has just now given on behalf of the government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto) from the committee reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read a third time and passed.

TWELVE MILE POWER COMPANY BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—With the permission of the House I should like to refer to Bill (183) an Act to incorporate the Twelve Mile Power Company, Limited. I took objections to the report of the committee being taken into consideration today. My reason for doing so was that I objected to a certain portion of the Bill, particularly that declaring it to be a work for the advantage of Canada, and also to the expropriation powers.

As hon. gentlemen are aware, that was only my usual protest. However, apart from that, there is one feature of the Bill which I think is objectionable. I think that the powers are too large, and that they should be confined to the Yukon Territory. With the permission of the House, I will withdraw my request that the amendments be considered at the next sitting of the House, and now give notice that on the third reading of the Bill. I will move that the undertaking shall be confined to the Yukon Territory.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Cobourg). I am authorized by the legal gentleman representing the promoters of the Bill to accept this amendment for the sake of expediting the legislation. I move that the order fixing consideration of the amendments for Tuesday next be rescinded, and that the amendments be now concurred in.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Cobourg) moved the third reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—I now move that another clause be added to the Bill, namely :

25. The industrial undertakings of the company shall be confined to the Yukon Territory.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill as amended was read the third time and passed.

The Senate adjourned until Tuesday afternoon at three o'clock.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto).

THE SENATE

OTTAWA, Tuesday, July 3, 1906.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

IMMIGRATION AND IMMIGRANTS BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the third reading of Bill (170) An Act respecting Immigration and Immigrants.

Hon. Mr. POWER—In pursuance of the notice which I gave I move :

That the Bill be not now read a third time, but that clause 26 be amended by striking out the words 'nor shall any immigrant be so landed' in lines 13 and 14 of page 6, and substituting the word 'or.'

As the clause reads now there is no exception made, and no discretion is left with the department. It struck me when I read this clause that there had been an error made by the draughtsman. It says :

26. No immigrant shall be permitted to land in Canada, who is feeble-minded, an idiot, or an epileptic, or who is insane, or has had an attack of insanity within five years ; nor shall any immigrant be so landed who is deaf and dumb, or dumb, blind or infirm, unless he belongs to a family who accompany him or are already in Canada and who give security, satisfactory to the minister, and in conformity with the regulations in that behalf, if any, for his permanent support if admitted into Canada.

It appeared to me that the intention was that the feeble-minded and epileptics should be put on the same footing as those who are deaf and dumb, blind or infirm, and that if the persons so afflicted belonged to a family which was already in Caanda, or which should come with him, he should be admitted also. It appears that I was in error, and that this is not a mistake ; but I do not think that alters the duty of this House. If a father and mother come to this country bringing with them say half-dozen children and one of those children happens to be feeble-minded or an epileptic, it seems to me that he should be allowed to come in. As this clause reads either that child is excluded by himself or the whole family are shut out from Canada. It seems to me that that is a proceeding which is diametrically opposed to the spirit of christianity. The founder of our religion was apparently disposed to look with a peculiarly friendly eye upon people whom Providence had afflicted, and legislation such as this is inhuman, and is contrary to our ideas of christianity. If the afflicted person, no matter how he is afflicted, has a family who are prepared to take care of him, and to give security for his permanent support, then he should be admitted. There might be an exception made in the case of the insane.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The interpretation placed by the hon. senator on the clause is not really the correct one. This Bill must naturally be a matter of administration, and it is absolutely impossible to lay down in hard and fast language the policy that shall be adopted under it. I quite concur in all that the hon. gentleman has said in reference to the inhumanity of sending a family back which has with them one feeble charge, and I am quite sure the head of the department will concur, but he must have authority. It must be purely a matter of discretion. You cannot define it.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is no discretion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon, there is a discretion. The law must be violated constantly, and is violated. Powers are really necessary to administer the immigration law and this Bill is required. You must have some sort of confidence in the government administering the law in a humane and proper manner. The feeling will be that any man coming to Canada who can be converted under our conditions into a suitable citizen will be retained in this country, but there are ne'er do well's who will never do any better, and who have been a burden in the country from which they came, and will be a burden in the country to which they go to the end of their days, and it is for that class of people that this power to return is required. There are examinations made at the port, from which the immigrant sails. There are examinations made at the port where he enters, but further examinations have to be made later on, as time develops objectionable features in the particular immigrant. But certainly the Act will be interpreted in the most generous and humane manner possible. Are we not constantly paying for immigrants? Is it not costing us a considerable sum to bring them here? If they are suitable and adapted to the conditions in Canada we certainly are not going to turn them away. The conclusions of the hon. gentleman are not sound, and we cannot lay down for the administration of a department of that kind language that will exactly fit every condition that will arise. I hope the House will not accept the amendment.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—While my hon. friend is on his feet, will he say this is a departure from the past policy of the department?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it is what they have been doing all along without any law.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—While I am heartily in favour of even the most stringent restrictions being placed on immigrants coming to this country, I would point out that this has not been the policy of the department. It has been expressly provided by the old Act, which we now propose to repeal, that this class of persons had a right to come into the country if they belonged to the family, and with all due deference to the statement made by my hon. friend I must entirely differ from him.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Then it has been violated here year after year.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Subsection 2 of section 17 of the Act provides that if upon examination there is found among such passengers any lunatic, idiotic, deaf and dumb, blind or infirm person not belonging to any immigrant family, and such person is in the opinion of the medical superintendent likely to become a public charge, the superintendent shall do so and so, and such immigrant is deported. I simply point out the fact that this is the old law. I am not saying that I am in favour of it, because I believe in the greatest restrictions being placed on that class of persons; but I must take the position, and my hon. friend will have to concede that it is the correct one, that this is a departure from the policy which has heretofore been pursued under the old Act.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I think the conditions stated in the old Act exactly carry out this clause. I doubt if the hon. member from Halifax ever heard of hardship having been suffered by any family by refusing to allow such persons to land. This provides for giving the department power to prevent them if they see fit, and I do not think if that is left wide open and we strike out the words in this particular clause and these people are allowed to land that it will be in the interest of the country.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—There is no discretion here. It says: 'No such person shall be permitted'.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Unless they belong to a family.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—But the first class of persons are prohibited even though they belong to a family. Under the existing law they were permitted to land if they were in charge of a family.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—These people might come in here without any restriction at all.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that a dumb man may not be a very valuable acquisition to any country?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I do not say that at all, nor does the Act say so, and I do not know that the department, having the power ever knew of a dumb person being turned back; but the department ought to have discretion not to allow those people to come if they see fit to keep them out. We do not want to encourage these people to come here, and we do not want to leave the gate wide open. If the minister is satisfied that a deaf or dumb person belongs to a respectable family, but liable to become a burden on the state, they could ask for security from the family, that the person objected to would not become a burden on the state. Surely discretion ought to be left with the minister.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is not the question under discussion. There is no question as to the deaf and dumb and blind and infirm being permitted to come in. The discretion extends to those, but not to the first class, namely, the feeble-minded, idiots, epileptics, and those who are insane. They are absolutely prohibited from coming in. The position I take is that under the old Act the discretion did extend to them, and the medical superintendent would say whether or not the conditions warranted their coming in.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I do not understand the hon. gentleman from Halifax to find fault with the first part.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, that is the exception.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—As I understand this clause, idiots and epileptics are entirely prohibited.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes, absolutely.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—While the deaf and dumb are allowed to come in under guardianship of parents or anybody else. An idiot may be a child. As a rule idiots and epileptics are known to be such from childhood—from five to ten or along there. An attack, in the case of a child, before that might not be of an epileptic character. It could not settle into an epileptic character until the child reached 5 or 10 or along there. Such children must come in with their parents, and by this clause you are preventing the parents from entering the country at all. I certainly feel that they ought to be permitted to come, as well as the deaf and dumb.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Idiots too?

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Yes, idiots as well.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I might remark to my hon. friends opposite that there is very little doubt that there has been more or less a systematic attempt on the part of certain authorities in the old country and elsewhere to dump on Canada persons who would be a charge on their respective unions, and that having been ascertained by the department to be the case, it is desirable that the department should be armed with pretty extensive powers in order to check any such attempt. I think my hon. friends will agree with me that that should be done. I do not think there is the slightest fear that any great hardship will arise from entrusting the department with these powers. I look upon the clause as one which might be called an enabling clause; but it is not necessary that it should be executed to the extreme letter of the law. They may rest assured that it is of very great importance to the people of Canada that the quality as well as the quantity of immigration should be looked after. I have always been of opinion that in this country and in the United States, and, for the matter of that, in England as well, the privileges of citizenship have been accorded altogether too freely in a great many cases, and that it would be better if there was a much stricter inspection of immigrants coming into North America. The hon. gentleman knows that the question of the free admission of aliens into England, which country has for a long time been regarded as a sort of natural refuge for all distressed and persecuted people, has led to abuses of a grave character and that there is an extreme probability that the English people at long last will have to revise their attitude upon that subject and take precautions against the admission of aliens of an undesirable character. But the point I make is this: you are granting large powers to the department, a little larger than they had before, but the department may be fairly trusted not to administer these powers in a harsh manner.

Hon. Mr. BERNIER—The clause seems to me to consecrate the principle that government may separate a child from its own family. This, I contend, should not under any circumstances be adopted as a policy of the government. I think the hon. gentleman from Halifax is right, and that the clause should be drafted in some other way.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I cannot quite agree with my hon. friend. I think the government should have the power

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—My hon. friend does not quite catch my point I think. A child on its mother's knee may have convulsions which will ultimately lead to epilepsy. The government are taking power to turn that mother and child back at any time within a term of five years to the place from whence they came.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Two years.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—I think the clause should be amended so as to allow these people to come in as those who are deaf and dumb.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I would point out to the members of the government that if this class of immigrant is not good enough for Canada, it should not be considered good enough for Great Britain. Is Great Britain to receive these people back?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—They do not come from Great Britain exclusively.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—They have broken up their homes and when they land here they are homeless. Supposing Great Britain should say: We will not have them back, what is to become of them? Great Britain might very reasonably say these people have been refused admission into Canada as being useless. and we will not receive them. What would become of the case then?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The country to which they belong should provide for them.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—People from Germany, Italy or Belgium, are landed on the shores of England in this condition, and if I were an Englishman with power to prevent them from landing at all I would do it.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—There is one line in this clause which seems unparalleled nonsense—'Or who is insane or has had an attack of insanity within five years'. You might as well put in the date when he was last intoxicated as to put in a clause like that. I do not know whether any man can tell whether another has had an attack of insanity. I think there have been some acts in my life which would not be considered sane, even less than five years ago. What is the use of enacting such rubbish as this into Acts of parliament? What are the functions of the Senate if they are not to amend legislation so as to make it humane as well as efficient? What is the use of vesting such power in a minister? I grant you that the party in power is the very acme of administrative ability that has been seen in this country up to the present time, but with all their wisdom and humanity they may make a mistake. The amendment proposed by the senior member for Halifax is simple but effective, one which commends itself to all men irrespective of party, and I hope the hon. Secretary of State will not involve the co-horts of party to frown down this or any other valuable amendment.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I have no desire to limit the powers of the department ; on the contrary, I wish to increase them. Under the provisions of this clause that department have no discretion in this matter.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not agree with the hon. gentleman there.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. Secretary of State may or may not agree with me. It would be a remarkable thing if the hon. Secretary of State did agree with me when I proposed an amendment to a government measure. Here is the language of the Bill. It is absolutely positive and distinct :

There is no discretion with the department. I say there should be the same discretion left to the department as regards persons of that kind as is left to them with respect to those who are deaf and dumb or blind, or otherwise infirm. He has to belong to a family who accompany him, or who are already in Canada, or who give security satisfactory to the minister and in conformity with the regulations in that behalf, if any, for his permanent support if admitted into Canada. If you put the whole of the parties in the same category, these provisions which I have read protect the country and the government, and we should not ask for any more. That was the old law, and I think the departure from the old law is to be regretted.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Before this clause passes, I desire to express my disapproval of what the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce said as to the conduct of the authorities of Great Britain towards immigrants sent out from that country to Canada. I think that the first part of the clause is strongly prohibitive. I do not think there is any power under that clause whereby an immigrant can be brought into the country, if he is in any way afflicted with a feeble mind, and it is difficult to say just what a feeble mind is. We are at times in considerable difficulty when, as medical men, we are called upon to declare whether a person is insane or not, and they have empowered the officer whose duty it would be to inspect immigrants coming into the country, to decide whether a man be of sufficiently sound mind or not. But he is under a still greater difficulty. As far as epileptics are concerned, I think the Minister of Trade and Commerce must admit that we have any number of individuals so afflicted in Canada who are good citizens and are making a good living not only for themselves but for their families. We are well aware that many of those who are deaf and dumb are good citizens. They marry and intermarry and carry on their vocation, farming or whatever it may be, and are useful citizens in performing the ordinary duties of life. Are we to say that such people shall not land here ? Are we to say that England shall not send them to us unless they are accompanied by some one ? After they have been in Canada for a length of time and become known as honest, upright, industrious citizens, doing their best to make a comfortable home here, it would be a hardship for us to send them back, and whether England does or does not desire to get rid of these immigrants, it is certainly inhuman on our part to say that England, in some instances, desires to unload upon Canada, not just what would suit us here, and we are going to shut the door in their face, I say it would be wrong. Then it is provided that no one who is now or has been afflicted with epilepsy shall be allowed to land. My hon. friend must know that epilepsy is not a disease. If long continued, persistent, and of frequent occurrence it may weaken the mind ; but there are hundreds and hundreds of citizens who are suffering more or less with epilepsy who are just as good citizens as we have in Canada. Are we to say that because at some time in their lives they had epilepsy, they are not intelligent now ? As I said on a previous occasion, there is hardly a child between infancy and five or six years of age who has not been the subject of attack or attacks of epilepsy, and it is urged now as one reason why people are liable to insanity, in case they commit a crime, that in some portions of their lives they have been subject to epilepsy. The law holds them when they are once insane they are liable to continue insane upon certain subjects. These men are often useful citizens. They do their duty in life just as well as any. I object also to this clause in the form it now is on account of the inability to determine whether the weak minded are subject to epilepsy or not. I wish to repeat that there are many deaf and dumb people in Canada to-day. I know many families in that condition who are just as industrious farmers or labourers or workman as we have in the Dominion. Are we to say that they should not be allowed to come into Canada ; that they are not desirable immigrants when we have been making every effort to secure immigration into Canada ? I ask hon. gentlemen under such circumstances why should we shut the door and say that nothing but the best classes shall be admitted here ? We have vast areas of unsettled lands and we have the desire to encourage people to come here, still if clause 26 passes in its present form it will shut out from Canada a very useful and beneficial class. I, therefore, heartily endorse the amendment moved by the hon. gentleman from Halifax, and believe that it is in the interest of the country and in the interests of humanity that the amendment should be adopted.

Hon. Mr. De BOUCHERVILLE—It seems to me there is nothing that the government should object to in the amendment proposed by the senior member from Halifax. It is said that if the amendment is not carried, immigrants who are deaf and dumb shall not be admitted here. Who can say that a deaf and dumb man cannot become a very good citizen ? I have known a successful merchant in Quebec, and I have known scientific and able men who were dumb. But in this clause you do not state whether they are educated or not. That is not the test, but you prevent the deaf and dumb from landing at all. I would vote for the amendment of the hon. gentleman.

The Senate divided on the amendment, which was rejected on the following division.

Hon. Mr. De BOUCHERVILLE—May I ask the government if they consent to the admission of educated deaf and dumb persons ? They should be admitted ; they will make just as good citizens as others, and sometimes better than the average immigrant.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I move that clause 28 be amended by substituting '6 months' for '2 years'. Clause 28 is as follows :

28. No immigrant shall be permitted to land in Canada who is a pauper, or destitute, a professional beggar, or vagrant, or who is likely to become a public charge ; and any person landed in Canada who, within two years thereafter, has become a charge upon the public funds, whether municipal, provincial, or federal, or an inmate of or a charge upon any charitable institution, may be deported and returned to the port or place whence such immigrant came or sailed for Canada.

I discussed this in committee. It is not necessary to discuss it any more. The amendment proposes to substitute for the 2 years, 6 months. That is a reasonable time within which to find out whether an immigrant should be sent back to the country from which he came or not.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The period of two years has been fixed from the experience of the department. It has been found that even two years after an immigrant arrives, he is sometimes found to be a very undesirable person, and should not be allowed to remain in the country. In the United States they have found it absolutely necessary to make the term three years, and we make it one year shorter. It is a power exercised only in extreme cases. We are getting, as everybody knows from the crimes committed in the west and other parts of Canada, persons who are very undesirable immigrants and are a serious menace to our law-abiding population ; and if their character is only discovered after they have been in the country nearly 2 years, surely that should be no ground for retaining an undesirable class of people. If the influence of Canadian life has not had a beneficial effect upon them and reformed them by that time, they should be deported. I think the proposition is a very reasonable one.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—No matter what they have in the United States, we have to consider what is human or humane. Any immigrant who happened to be a professional beggar or a vagrant or a pauper would be found out within six months after his arrival.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He may be a professional murderer.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—All that can be found out within six months. I am only arguing against the inhuman conditions of this Bill, and this provision is part and parcel of it. If the hon. gentlemen wish to vote the amendment down, all right, but I contend that no man in this Senate can give a reason why this term of two years should be fixed. If it is following the example of the United States, it is a bad principle, and one that should be avoided instead of being imitated.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Can the hon. gentleman give us any instance of an immigrant who, after two years residence, has become unfit to remain any longer—who has been all right for the two years he has been here, but at the expiration of that time, it is found that he is unfit to remain longer? It seems to me that it would be a hardship that a person admitted into Canada as being in his right mind perhaps a good citizen for a year or a year and a half, might suffer some misfortune or accident through exposure or other means whereby he becomes afflicted, perhaps through no fault of his own—if he were, under this clause, sent back to the country from which he came. I am sorry that I have to oppose the government in reference to this matter. Reference has been made to the American practice, but we are not to be governed by what is done in the United States. They are charging a poll tax of $2 a head for every person who is admitted into that country now. I do not suppose we would care to follow that precedent. I regard this clause as unnecessarily severe. No doubt there should be authority to deport ; let it be after six months time, in accordance with the amendment moved by the senator from Halifax.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I would like to say in answer to the hon. gentleman, that I happen to be in a position to know the importance of having a clause of this nature in the Immigration Act. I had charge of the public institutions of the province of Manitoba for nine years, and I know that during that time there was more than one occasion when we would have liked very much to have had a provision of this kind in the law. From time to time people were received in the Home for Incurables, and also in the asylum who become a public charge ; and it is very important to have a provision whereby such persons could be deported instead of allowing them to remain as a charge upon the community. Very often such persons will be employed on a farm for a time, and they are not known to belong to the class I have mentioned within a period of six months or perhaps a year ; but at the end of a year and a half or two years it is found that they cannot make a living for some cause, and that they will become a public charge.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Will the hon. gentleman submit one of these cases ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—As Minister of Public Works, I had charge of the public institutions in Manitoba for a number of years. I know of several cases, but I cannot give the details at this moment. There were such cases, however.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—With what disease were they afflicted ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I am talking about paupers.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Could you not find out that a man is a pauper in less than two years ?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—What was done with these cases ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—We simply had to keep them in our public institutions. There are a number of them there to-day.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—In what condition were they when they entered the public institution ? Had they been carefully examined to ascertain whether they were of sound mind, or were they diseased when they went there ? How long had they been in the country as immigrants previously ? Perhaps with these facts before us we might feel that the hon. gentleman is justified in supporting this clause, otherwise we cannot. There is no evidence offered by the hon. gentleman that the people were undesirable when they entered the country and that two years after that they became unsound in mind.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—What is the hon. gentleman referring to ? These people became a public charge, and applied for admission to our charitable institutions, and a number of them are there to-day simply because there was no power to deport them.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Will the hon. gentleman state whether they were all right, good citizens, and passed the inspection when they went there ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—No, I do not think they were.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—I notice that in the discussion of this clause the two portions of it are confounded. The first part refers to the excluding of professional beggars, vagrants, &c. These are absolutely prohibited from coming into the country. The provision following that does not relate to the class of people I have mentioned. It is a provision affecting any person who may come into Canada. A man may come into this country in good circumstances, a perfectly healthy citizen, but he meets with adverse conditions and from illness or some other cause he becomes unable to support himself and becomes a charge upon the country. I do not think it would be proper that such a man should be deported, and I feel compelled to vote for the amendment.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—I agree with the last speaker, but I do not favour the term of six months any more than the two years mentioned in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—Neither do I, except that it is an improvement.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—It is possible that a very worthy citizen might become disabled, and unless it is through drunkenness or some such cause I do not think he should be sent back, if he has met with an accident for instance.

Hon. Mr. De BOUCHERVILLE—I agree with what the hon. senator from Rideau has just said. The second part of the clause does not apply to those who are mentioned in the first part of it, professional beggars vagrants, &c. It might apply to a citizen coming to Canada in very good circumstances. If he should fail in business he is liable to be deported. What right have we to deport a man whom we admitted to the country say a year or a year and a half ago, perhaps longer—it might be as long as 23 months ? What right have we to send such a man back to England, to France, to Italy or any other country ? There is no contract between Canada and the governments of these various countries. We could not do it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is a considerable amount of misconception in the interpretation of this Bill. Hon. gentlemen will recollect that there were weeks and weeks during the present season when five and six and up as high as seven thousand persons arrived at Quebec. The trains were waiting to take them away. Inspection of these immigrants could not be perfect. It must have been very inferior, because they had to be passed on so rapidly that careful supervision was impossible. There were days and days when a thousand immigrants a day entered the country, and, therefore, undesirable persons in many instances were allowed to pass. This has been the case in years gone by. What has been the practice of the department ? I am told by one of its officials that within a year they have been deporting undesirable immigrants without any law, yet there has been no disapproval of it in the press or anywhere else. The department exercises the very greatest care, in taking violent action of that kind. It is only where it becomes in the interest of the people in whose locality the unfortunate happens to reside that they exercise that power. During the last year they have exercised that power in 80 cases, as I am credibly informed by the official of the department. When without any provision of the law this has been going on, we are taking no extreme or radical step in conferring on the department the power to do that which has been in the past wisely and judiciously done.

The amendment was declared lost on a division.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

GENERAL INSPECTION ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

ORDER DISCHARGED.

The order of the day being called :

House again in Committee of the Whole on (Bill C) an Act to further amend the General Inspection Act.—Rt. Hon. Sir Richard Cartwright.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT moved that the order be discharged.

The motion was agreed to.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Bill (75) An Act to incorporate the Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Company.—(Hon. Mr. Watson.)

THE CONSTITUTION OF THE SENATE.

DEBATE CONTINUED.

The order of the day being called :

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of the Hon. Mr. David : That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General ; praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before the Senate, copies of all petitions, resolutions or documents concerning the abolition or reorganization of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Cobourg)—In rising to make a few observations upon the question now before the House, I do not do so for the purpose of attempting any serious discussion of the subject. That has already been well accomplished. I rise more to call the attention of this honourable body to some matters which, to my mind, affect this Chamber, although they may not be entirely irrelevant to the subject before the House. In the first place I wish to offer my very hearty congratulations as well as thanks to the hon. gentleman who launched this motion, and for the very able, intelligent and finished manner in which he placed his views before the Senate. I think the members of this House are his debtors. I may say that all the speeches which followed, according to my view, have been very valuable, very instructive, and of a very high order of merit. I do not intend to particularize. If I should venture to do that—which I might do perhaps without being considered individious—and if I had any intention to discuss the subject, I would perhaps be tempted to make this observation, that the right hon. senator from Kingston (Sir Richard Cartwright) has, to use an agricultural phrase, cut such a wide swath by his speech that he has covered nearly the whole field of discussion. There is little left, as I see it, for one at this stage of the debate, but to use simply his sickle about the fence corners, or an occasional stump, so thoroughly has the subject been discussed.

All history, ancient and modern, teaches this lesson, that every great movement in the moral, intellectual and political world is rather the offspring of the necessities of the times than the legitimate child of any one genius, however mighty.

Although Columbus was the first navigator to turn his prow towards the western sun and is entitled to great glory for his sublime faith in the existence of a western world, still there was at the time a spirit of unrest in all Europe, people apparently looking about for a land wherein they might work out their social regeneration in peace, free from many of the trammels of the old world. That is a case that illustrates the proposition which I stated. The invention of printing was another, and the cases are obvious and need not be multiplied to establish the truth of the proposition. So in Canada the time came, and the movement came when it was necessary for the peace, happiness and contentment of the people on this North American continent to do something, and that great movement was inaugurated largely, although the child, the offspring of the times, by Sir John A. Macdonald, and the Hon. George Brown. Canada had been, so to speak, in political travail for fifty years, and the result was the British North America Act, known as our Act of Confederation, and, as I see it, this discussion involves largely the existence of that Act—certainly its very existence in its present shape. The question is whether we shall end or mend this Act as a branch of the Canadian parliament. For my part I hesitate, and approach the subject with fear and trembling. The British North America Act was not the creation of a day, although when it was launched it was like Minerva from the brain of Jupiter, it came forth full grown and clad in armour. In the wisdom of the fathers of confederation, having the political systems of the old and new world before them, being at liberty to choose, these 33 or more able, wise men—men I am bound to say greater than whom have not yet appeared—framed the basis of confederation, and we are undertaking to say whether we shall abolish, reorganize or reconstitute some of their work. It is a pretty serious undertaking. I hesitate when I know that this body, a second Chamber called the Senate, was intended to be, and has been, as I contend, the bulwark of our liberties, the palladium and the safeguard of all the provinces, to tamper with the powers with which it is invested. What may be the case of the smaller provinces, looking at the great future before this country, may be the case of the largest province to-morrow. Besides, in my opinion, the prestige, the dignity, the powerful influence of the Canadian parliament would be immeasurably impaired by the abolition of one branch of that parliament. The parliament is now looked upon by the provinces as the imperial parliament is looked upon by colonial parliaments, although I have during most of my life every now and then heard men advocate the abolition of the House of Lords, that higher and second Chamber, in England. I have never taken that view. I think the House of Lords in England has fulfilled a mighty and a useful mission on the earth, and I hope that it will be many a long day before the House of Lords will be abolished, as I hope it will be many a day before this Senate, which is modelled on the British parliament will meet with such a fate. Look at the influence of the House of Lords in England. We need not go back further than that terrible war in South Africa. We are sometimes prone to underrate and speak lightly of the House of Lords and its personnel and ability, but we found them on that occasion respond with alacrity to the call of duty, and some of the noblest, the flower of the British youth, laid down their lives, and poured out their blood in the defence of the British empire, setting an example to all future generations of pluck and bravery unsurpassed. It is said that the Senate of Canada has not fulfilled its high mission. I controvert that proposition. I have been a pretty close student of the affairs of this country since 1867, some 39 years, and I assert without fear of successful contradiction, that the Senate of Canada has been a success. You judge the success of anything by the way in which it answers its purpose and fulfils its mission. But perhaps the Senate might have occupied a higher position in the estimation of this country than it does. The Senate of Canada has never had fair-play from the people of this Dominion, owing, possibly, to want of knowledge of its functions and its work. Both political parties are guilty in this respect, the Liberal party leading, and the Conservative party now largely following their bad example. For eighteen or twenty years I heard nothing but disparagement and evil prophecies of the Senate, and to-day not only are the opponents of the Liberal party following their bad example in this respect, but occasionally the press of the Liberal party is even now found saying uncharitable and untruthful things about the Senate. This body, as a legislative body, and as a branch of the federal parliament, is not as well known as it should be. Its usefulness is not as well known as it should be, and it is our duty to see that it is better known, but I do not say that it is necessary to reorganize our constitution to accomplish that result. I have very great faith in what can be done by the individual members of this House, no matter whether they are appointed or elected. I have great faith in the reformation of the Senate through the reformation, if possible, of every individual member of it. My idea is now, and has always been, that every man who finds a place upon the floor of this House is constitutionally bound to give this country of his best, while he is here, and if we do so we will not hear so much said in disparagement of the Senate. It is impossible to pass a day in travelling on the railway or in any public place without having ones ears offended in this respect. Only last year I happened, in another place to hear an ex-minister of the Crown rise in his place and speak of this Senate as a dead House. The remark was made sotto voce, that the Senate was not morally dead. We should be able to say in this Chamber that

> Then, none were for the party ;
> Then, all were for the state ;
> Then, the rich man helped the poor,
> And the poor man loved the great.

I have now in my hand a copy of a very prominent Liberal paper published in the province of Ontario in which this paragraph occurs :

> The country must make up its mind that the more or less unnecessary existence of the Senate for many years to come will have to be endured.

Imagine such a thing appearing in one of the first papers of this country. I have a great admiration for the press, because, on the whole, it aims to write up that which is right and to write down that which is wrong ; but for some reason or other the Senate has been a target during the past 39 years for a large portion of our Canadian press ; and the wonder is, not that the Senate does not stand better to-day before the people of Canada, but that it has any standing at all. If my poor words can have even this effect, to call public attention to the great wrong which is being done, I shall feel that they have not been in vain. I look upon this parliament as having been largely —so far as circumstances would permit— modelled on the British parliament, and I believe that this Chamber is the nearest we could get to the House of Lords in England. We can make it just as useful here if not more useful in this young and expanding country, than even the House of Lords is in England. Perhaps I have said enough on the question of the abolition of the Senate. I will now come to the second branch of this motion which speaks of the reorganization of the Senate. My view is, and I believe it is good logic—logicians say it is—that the onus probandi or burden or proof of showing that a change is necessary or desirable, is upon those who advocate that change. So that if there is to be any change in our constitution, I ask those who propose a change to show that what is proposed is better than what we have. I claim that we should act in that scriptural text which says : 'Prove all things, hold fast to that which is good.' Some hon. gentlemen will recollect that in their classical readings, some of the nations of Greece had a very peculiar law or custom. I think it prevailed among that nation of the Greeks called the Lacedemonians, who were very conservative of the existing state of things and of their constitution. That law or custom was : that any man who would advocate a change in the existing law which had worked well for a number of years, was to be accompanied into the market square or into the capitol grounds, and before he was allowed to propound his measure or change of the constitution, a rope was put around his neck, and he was to propound his measure in the presence of the assembled citizens or electors. The object of the rope was this : If his measure met with favour as he propounded it, a mighty huzza from the people went up, but if it was received with disfavour the rope was tightened, and the would-be aspiring lawgiver ceased to live or breathe. Sometimes I think when there is a desire to change laws too frequently in Canada, the exercise of such a practice would be wholesome. A public man proposing a reorganization of the constitution would feel his ground pretty well before running the risk of propounding his measure in a public square to the assembled people, and having that rope tightened. In fact looking back at some of the speeches we have here,—and we have had some going pretty fully into what they thought would be a desirable reorganization of the constitution of the Senate—I wondered if that rope was to be pulled if we would not sigh sometimes for 'the touch of a vanished hand and the sound of a voice that was still.' The point I want to make is this: and I do not think any senator listened to this debate with more patience and desired to listen more intelligently than I did—that as at present advised I do not believe it to be in the best interest of the Dominion that this Senate should be abolished or reorganized. Why should we reorganize? I do not know. We have two able statesmen, members of the government in this House, and we are all proud of them. I should like to know from them is it not possible, in the face of our present constitution, to introduce a larger volume of private legislation in this Chamber, and if it is work we want, my own view is there is plenty of work and it could be got in that way. I do not see why more government measures might not be introduced. There is one Bill now before another place which I think could very well have been introduced here. We need not re-model the Senate to give us work, or to make us do our work more thoroughly or efficiently. The want is not in us, but in others if there is any shortage. The British North America Act has been in operation in Canada with this Senate as one branch, and I contend a very important branch of the federal parliament and if we look at the results, where could they be found greater and grander? We have from one end of the country to the other abounding prosperity. We have an overflowing treasury, with mild but wise taxation. The British North America Act has been the chart by which this country has been steared the last 39 years, and we have a safe guide in that chart. True, our ship of state, during that time, has been well captained and well manned, though possibly not so bountifully provisioned as a certain ship that recently sailed for high latitudes. In the Mediterranean in a certain locality, two dangers are to be met which threaten the marine, called Scylla and Charybdis, and skilful pilots in avoiding the one sometimes wreck their ships upon the other. Is there not some danger to ourselves in avoiding some evil that we think we have, of wrecking the ship of state on other evils that we know not of? I think that is worty of consideration. I said that the result of the working of the British North America Act has been most salutary and successful. Besides there is a certain amount of respect due to the framers of that Act. They had had experience of elected chambers and nominated chambers before their eyes, when they worked out the present scheme. I want to speak further of the success of the British North America Act. It has given the country prosperity in the highest degree. The merchants and manufacturers of Canada are prosperous and happy. The banks of Canada are on a sound business basis, as sound as in any other part of the world, as I sometimes playfully say every prospect in Canada pleases and only man is vile. If you want another sample of the great success of the operation of the British North America Act I point you to our citizen soldiers. It comes to me by observation during the last week or ten days, and I contend that they are the very best in the world. If you want any more evidence of their courage, patriotism and usefulness, their conduct at Pretoria and Harts River give the answer. If you want men of science, where does the greatest university in Great Britain look for highest scientific minds? They look to the western world—not only look to the western world but they select, of all the men in the old and the new world available, a professor in a western university, and happily that one a Canadian. Then if you want men of nerve, men of endurance, athletes that have no peers in the world, listen to the mighty shouts that go up from the Plains of Marathon in celebrating the victory of a Canadian in that famous race. So that in every walk of life, in all the departments of industry, everywhere amazing prosperity abounds, notwithstanding the Senate is said to have a few defects. The most perfect of human institutions are only tentative—must necessarily be imperfect, but any imperfection on the part of the system can be greatly ameliorated and greatly overcome, and its usefulness greatly helped and enlarged by the operators of an institution and we are the operators of this Senate. I hope that this discussion will be productive of good. In what I have said I have not intended in the slightest to show my lack of appreciation of the theories that others have suggested. Perhaps the time has come when it should be said, and I am sure hon. gentlemen will all agree with me, that what has been said could not be better said than it has been since this debate began. That this discussion may be productive of good is my hearty wish, as I know it is yours. Canadians to-day are the 'heirs of all the ages in the foremost files of time.' Think of such a legacy ; let us see that we use it well :

Not in vain the distance beckons, forward, forward, let us range,
Let the great world spin for ever down the ringing grooves of change,
Through the shadow of the globe we sweep into the younger day,
Better fifty years of Europe than a cycle of Cathay.

Hon. Mr. POWER moved the adjournment of the debate.

The motion was agreed to.

It being six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Bill (90) An Act to incorporate United Empire Life Insurance Company.

THE USURY BILL.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (11) An Act respecting Money Lenders.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This Bill was distributed in the House of Commons form and has undergone no change except a reduction in the rate of interest from 6 per cent to 5 per cent. It is a Bill which has already been passed by this Senate on two different occasions. The only change in the present Bill is that the Act shall not apply to any loan or transaction to which the whole interest or discount charged, or the collection therewith does not exceed the sum of 50 cents. That is the only difference in this Bill from the Bill that was adopted by this Chamber. Hon. gentlemen are aware that for the last two years and longer an agitation prevailed, particularly in the leading cities of the Dominion, especially in the city of Montreal, and to some extent in Toronto, in regard to this question. The press have frequently drawn attention to the extortions that were being practised on poor people obtaining small loans of from fifteen to fifty dollars and paying interest in many instances at a rate over one hundred per cent, the interest being collected by the week or by the month. In the city of Montreal there is an organized association which is carrying on a very large business, controlled it is said chiefly by United States operators, who have put in a good deal of capital, finding the business a profitable one.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—What is the limit now for usury ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The proposal in this Bill is that no higher rate than 12 per cent per annum may be charged. An hon. gentleman who is familiar with the trade in Montreal says it will drive out the majority of those who are engaged in the business. If a higher charge is exacted in the first instance by way of a discount it is in the power of the judge, if the case should come into court, to inquire into the circumstance and fix such rate of interest as he thinks fair under the circumstances.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Did I understand my hon. friend to say that this Bill is precisely the same as the Bill which on two other occasions we passed here, except as regards the rate of interest ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—So I am informed by the law clerk of the House of Commons, but there is the clause which I read where the amount is not over 50 cents. I presume the House will have no objection to suspending rule 41, and allow the Bill to go to committee to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Will the Bill be sent to the Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce or will it be considered in Committee of the Whole ? If the latter course is adopted it would be of no use my notifying the parties who are opposed to the Bill ; but if it is to go to the standing committee, I would take the opportunity of notifying these parties in Toronto.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As a rule, unless under very extraordinary conditions, a Bill of this kind is considered in Committee of the Whole House.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Halifax)—I suppose if these parties from Toronto were to come here they would come specially to ask for a reduction in the rate of interest, even lower than what the Bill provides for? I have seen these gentleman from Toronto before, and their arguments were simply outrageous.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—They are not Scotchmen, they are Canadians, who desire to carry on their business.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Halifax)—I hope there are no Scotchmen in this country, I know there are none in the province of Nova Scotia, who would think of charging 12 per cent interest on a loan. You can get all the money you want from the banks in Halifax at from 5 to 6 per cent, and from the brokers at from 7 to 8 per cent. If I were to make any objection at all to this Bill, I would say that the rate of 12 per cent is out of all reason and I would be glad to see a further reduction. It is almost scandalous that money lenders in this country should be allowed to charge 12 per cent interest at this day.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I regret that we have not had the privilege of carefully perusing this Bill before giving it a second reading. I suppose since it is not very long we may be able to study its provisions tomorrow before going into committee. It is an exceedingly important measure. I do not know how far the government may be able to put a stop to the extortions which are practiced in charging excessive rates of interest. I am very much afraid that those people who have been in the habit of extorting in the way of direct interest will find some methods of getting around it, and will keep on doing the same thing in another way. I know that the laws in most of the states provide that they shall not charge more than six per cent or eight per cent, but, after all, the money lenders find some means of getting round the law and in many cases, charge 20 per cent and the way they do it is this: If a man goes to one of those people to borrow money he will tell him he has not any to lend, but if he will call upon such a man he will direct him where he can borrow it. He calls on that man and asks for a loan of money. The man asks him how much he wishes to borrow, and says to him: 'If you want to borrow the money I will get it for you if you will pay me 10 per cent.' The borrower pays the usurer 6 per cent and 10 per cent to the middle man who hands over 8 per cent to the usurer and in that way the usurer gets 14 per cent. There are very many ways of getting round such a law. For that reason I should like to have an opportunity of looking into the Bill before we go into committee.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is the Bill we have before us the Bill that passed the House of Commons?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, the difference is that the 6 per cent is changed to 5 per cent in clause 3, and in clause 6, line 18. and line 22. Then there was the change which I read to the House a few minutes ago a new clause. I have called attention to the amendments made by the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—While the question raised by my hon. friend from Elgin is worthy of some consideration, it might be said that on two previous occasions those opposed to the Bill had an opportunity of appearing before a select committee of the Senate, and it is not at all likely that if they were to appear again before a select committee, the mind of the Senate would be changed on an important question like this. It is very desirable that the Senate should keep in touch with public opinion, but in my judgment public sentiment is so strongly in favour of the passage of this measure, and that sentiment has been so peculiarly voiced by the press during the races between last session and the present, that I think we should have no hesitation in dealing with the Bill in Committee of the Whole, entirely irrespective of the views of money lenders outside, who may be opposed to it.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

The Senate adjourned until 3 o'clock tomorrow.

OTTAWA, Wednesday, July 4, 1906.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC BRANCH LINES COMPANY BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (De Lanaudière), from the Committee on Railways, Telegraphs and Harbours, reported Bill (75) An Act to incorporate the Grand Trunk Pacific Branch Lines Company, and moved concurrence in the amendment thereto.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. WATSON moved that rule 70 be suspended, which was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. WATSON moved the third reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—It will be within the recollection of hon. gentlemen that we adopted or affirmed a certain policy this session with regard to two subjects. One of these was that no railway should have the exclusive right of running through Yellow Head Pass. That was agreed to by the House and made a part of several Bills relating to railway companies who were seeking the right to construct roads through that pass. The other point was that no railway should be allowed to build toward Hudson bay for fear of jeopardizing the financial arrangements of the Canadian Northern Railway. It was pointed out that the Canadian Northern had built a number of miles of road in the direction of Hudson bay and that they should not be interfered with by granting charters to any other line intending to build in that direction. My hon. friend who has charge of this Bill was one of the strongest advocates of that policy, and other hon. gentlemen, the senators from Wellington, Elgin and Prince Albert also took that view ; the consequence was that in the case of two or three different railway charters the clause giving power to build to Hudson bay was dropped. The hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie also spoke of some of these other charters as blanket charters. If they were such, I would like to know what this is ? It covers the whole Northwest country and a great part of British Columbia ; I think there are about 12 different branches. If the others were blankets, this I think would be several bales of blankets. Many of these branches never will be built ; they are just to cover the ground in the meantime, which of course is useless. It would not keep out any other company unless parliament chose to give one particular company a monopoly. I do not desire that the House should act on the principle of making a difference whose ox is gored ; I think we should act fairly toward all companies. Why should this company be more favourably dealt with than any other company desiring power to build to Hudson bay ? I ask the hon. mover of the Bill why he goes back on his own principles and asks members of this House to swallow theirs to pass a measure of this kind ? It is not consistent ; it is not fair to other companies and the hon. gentleman was one of the strongest opponents of this kind of thing. I do not intend to move an amendment, because I think the House was wrong then, and I also think the Bill is right now, but it shows the inconsistency of members opposing the same principle in other Bills. Let the first company that comes have the first chance to go to any part of the country it wishes to go, consistent with the rules and regulations of parliament. I want to ask the hon. gentleman from Portage La Prairie—and I want an answer—why he has departed from his principles and supports this measure ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I think the hon. gentleman must be mistaken. If he will look at the records of this House he will not find that I ever opposed a Bill for the reasons he has assigned. I opposed a measure this session because I claimed it was a charter held by a speculator for the purpose of disposing of it to some other persons. If the hon. gentleman will read my remarks in the Debates he will find that I mentioned the Bill now before us. I was always in favour of permitting companies to build any line they wished. I objected to the principle of compelling companies to come here to ask for power to build roads. My contention was that we should have a general railway Act, and that the Canadian Pacific Railway, the Canadian Northern Railway or the Grand Trunk Pacific, or any other railway company should simply file their plans and build their roads under the general Act. In the debate the hon. gentleman refers to, I mentioned this road as one that might be built, and that is one of the reasons I gave why we should reject a speculative charter to Hudson bay. I never opposed it on the grounds that the Canadian Northern had the right to build there and it was going to interfere with their financial arrangements. I have always advocated the building of this road. The Grand Trunk Pacific, in this Bill, are simply getting the same power that the Canadian Pacific Railway had 25 years ago. All they had to do was to file their plans and go ahead and build. I should like to see the Canadian Northern Railway have the same privilege. I do not think it should be necessary to compel the Canadian Northern Railway to come here and put up a lobby to get the privilege. We should change our policy, so it would not be necessary to have so many Bills passed. All they should have to do would be to file their plans and proceed with the work. That is my explanation, as far as the Yellow Head Pass is concerned. The Grand Trunk Pacific had the power to build through Yellow Head Pass under their charter. I do not think any one will object to their building railways through this country, but I do object to speculative charters. We cut off part of their Bill in the Senate, and I think the House of Commons cut off the other part of it. I am not changing my policy. I have been consistent all the way through, and for that reason I have no hesitation in supporting this Bill. I trust the House will pass the third reading. Only one word has been changed. We are near the end of the session and it has to be sent back to the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The hon. gentleman cannot discriminate as to what is speculative and what is not. It just suits the purpose of a member to say that a charter is speculative. There is no foundation for it.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I may be wrong.

The motion was agreed to.

The Bill was read the third time and passed.

65½

PACIFIC AND ATLANTIC RAILWAY COMPANY BILL.

AMENDMENTS CONCURRED IN.

Hon. Mr. WATSON moved concurrence in the amendments made by the House of Commons to Bill (K) An Act respecting the Pacific and Atlantic Railway Company.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I should like to ask my hon. friend who has charge of the Bill what is the purport of the amendments? Is it the intention to exclude the branch lines and not have them declared works for the general advantage of Canada, thus leaving part of the undertaking under federal control and the branch lines under provincial control? It seems to me a rather extraordinary proposition to adopt.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is substantially what the amendment is. They do not propose to declare the branch lines to be for the general advantage of Canada. They limit the operation of this Bill before us to the main line. There is some inconsistency about it, but at this stage of the session it would probably be fatal to the Bill not to concur in the amendments.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before concurring in the amendments, we should understand exactly what their purport is. In looking over them I came to the same conclusion that my hon. friend from Halifax has reached. This is one of those Bills exclusively provincial in its character as it passed the Senate, and gave extraordinary powers. I have some recollection of a remark attributed to an eminent English parliamentarian who had been fighting the House of Lords for several years, but found them in one instance useful. He said: 'Thank God there is a House of Lords.' I think we may well thank Providence that there is a House of Commons to revise the extraordinary provisions of Bills that the Senate, the supposed revising body, passes. Here we have a Bill that has been on the statute-book of the province of Ontario for some 20 years, which has been altered and amended over and over again, until the last attempt that was made to renew the charter by the provincial legislature proposed certain restrictions and conditions which the company must observe before they could go on with the construction of the road, not one of which restrictions and conditions has been complied with. Not being able, in the province of Ontario, to obtain any further concessions they come to this parliament, declaring the work to be in the general interests of the Dominion, and we—not only the committee but the Senate—comply with their request, giving them still further powers and renewing the powers they had under the old charter, and without any of the conditions contained in the last charter they had from the provincial legislature. The House of Commons now has lopped off, if I may use such an expression, some of their powers. They have powers to construct a number of branch lines. The Bill as it comes before us, if we adopt those amendments, simply confines its provisions to the main line, and the branch lines which they have power to build under the Ontario charter, will not be a portion of the work under federal control, but will come under the control of the Ontario Railway Commission. The main line, having been declared to be in the general interests of the Dominion, will come under the control of the Dominion Railway Commission. These are the provisions of the Bill if these amendments are concurred in.

It will strike every one, as reasonable that if the work is to be declared to be in the general interests of the country the branches should be regarded as a portion of it. If on the contrary, it is to be considered a purely provincial road, then the Dominion should have nothing to do with it and it should be allowed to remain under the control and management of the railway commission which has lately been appointed by the government of Ontario. I do not hesitate to say, without casting any reflection upon those who differ from me on this point, that we have been granting charters which interfere with provincial autonomy in a reckless manner that is unprecedented in the history of the Senate. If this is to be continued it would be much better to have the constitution changed at once and bring all railways under the control and management of the Dominion. I repeat what I said in the committee, if the constitution had to be remodelled I would rather see all the railways in Canada under one control—the control of the Dominion; but that is not the constitution as it exists, and every time we pass a Bill of this character we interfere with the constitutional rights and the autonomy of the province through which the road may run. I am not going to ask for a division upon these amendments. I am glad they have been made because they will tend to frustrate the designs of the speculators who have had this charter under their control, but who have done nothing under it during the past 20 years. They have, I believe, secured the control of some island in one of the lakes which is considered to be valuable as a port of entry and they have filed their plans in the Railway Department. Beyond that, nothing has been done. Whether they will go on during the next 20 years or not, time alone can tell. I presume if they can sell the charter and obtain a little money out of it, that is about the only object they have in view.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I venture the opinion that the amendments which have been made by the Commons are illogical, inconsistent and unreasonable in view of the fact that both Houses have consented to the proposition that the work is one for the general advantage of Canada. Now, entirely apart from the merits or demerits of the Bill, as pointed out by the hon. gentleman from Belleville, what is the meaning of the amendment? It means that this road —because it must be treated as one road, the branches are as much a part of the system as the main line—is brought under two different systems of railway administration. Shippers who require to use the main line and who wish to invoke the aid of the railway commission as to the adjustment of freights, tolls, &c., would look to the federal commission for relief; but a shipper who is on one of the branch lines would have to invoke the aid of both the provincial and federal commissions for the purpose of obtaining an adjustment of any differences which might arise. Is that a precedent which we should sanction? I venture to say it is not. In the future this proposition will confront us, and if we are asked to sanction legislation of this character in the future, we will be told in connection with this Bill such and such action was taken. I think this is peculiarly a case which should be recomitted to the Railway Committee so that the matter should be discussed in its entirety. If this is a Bill which should not be declared to be for the general advantage of Canada, then parliament should certainly not grant the legislation which is now being granted. If it is a Bill that comes within the purview of the provision of the British North America Act by which we might declare the work to be one for the general advantage of Canada, then the entire system should be made a federal system. It should not be partly federal and partly provincial. While I do not desire to throw any impediment in the way, I shall move that these amendments be not now concurred in, but that they be recommitted to the Railway Committee for further consideration.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I gather from the remarks which the hon. leader of the opposition has made, that his idea is that when the Bill is referred to the Committee on Railways that committee would be at liberty to go into the whole question of the Bill. I submit that that should not be the case. The Bill was before that committee and was reported from the committee with the clause in it which it is proposed to amend, declaring that the work is for the general advantage of Canada. The House adopted that report, and I think it would be an inconsistent and unparliamentary procedure for us to refer the whole question to the committee again. The only thing which we could refer to the committee is the amendments made by the Commons.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is the motion I made.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I concur in the observations made by the hon. gentleman from Belleville and the hon. leader of the opposition. We have gone further, I think, this session than usual—at least it has happened that there have been more Bills before us this session where purely local works were declared to be for the general advantage of Canada, than during any previous session I can remember. It is a most unsatisfactory condition of things that purely local roads should be declared to be for the general advantage of Canada, simply because they happen to cross roads coming within the jurisdiction of the Dominion parliament. It has been stated in another place, I understand, that there is to be a conference between this government and the provincial governments during the recess to deal with the relations between the various governments; and I trust that the Dominion authorities will take steps, when that conference is held, to have some definite policy laid down so that if a road is a purely local road it shall not be held to come within the jurisdiction of this parliament. We shall then have no more legislation of this objectionable character. We have done this thing so often this session, however, that we can hardly draw the line at this particular Bill. As I understand this measure, the committee agreed to the declaration that it is a work for the general advantage of Canada on the ground that it connected at the Soo with roads leading to the United States, and with the roads of companies which are chartered by this parliament, and I do not know that under the circumstances we can very well say that the measure should not be passed. Of course we can decline to accept the amendments from the House of Commons, and put the responsibility on them.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I entirely concur with the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Belleville and the remaks of the hon. member from Halifax. There has been more legislation by parliament this session in the way of granting local charters, and for exceedingly short lines, than has ever before been granted from the date of confederation down to the present time. I have no recollection of any session when there were so many local charters granted for short lines, some no longer than four or five miles, and in one case, in Manitoba, we granted a charter not only within the bounds of Manitoba, but within the limits of one corporation, of one town, where we have granted a charter for a road that was declared to be for the general advantage of Canada. We have gone out of all bounds, in my humble opinion, this session in violating the principle of local rights or provincial rights. The premiers of the different provinces I understand, are to meet this year, with the Dominion government to discuss many questions that affect the legislation, both in Ottawa and in the several provinces. I earnestly hope the government will come to an understanding with the local authorities as to where the lines are to be drawn between the powers exercised at Ottawa in granting charters, and the powers to be reserved to the provinces to be exercised within their limit. If electric lines—and in my humble opinion electric lines should be subject entirely to provincial legislation—are to be relegated to the provinces, let us have an understanding to that effect. If lines absolutely within one province, short lines, are to be relegated absolutely to the province, let it be so. I agree, however, with the remarks dropped by the hon. gentleman from Belleville ; I do think it would be better if an understanding could be come to that all railways that exchange freights with each other, or cross each other should be declared to be works for the general advantage of Canada. We have been so long now legislating with regard to railways in the different provinces, and throughout the Dominion, that it has become a settled fact with the commission that has been appointed, that railways of the kind that I have referred to have been looked upon and even treated as, and really are, works for the general advantage of Canada. Then I think the central authority with the railway commission should have the oversight and control of those roads, but let it be understood that such is the case. Let us know where we are. Let us know whether we are exercising the powers vested in us here prudently, and at the same time recognizing the rights of the provinces. I think we ought to know that and I hope the government will have a declared policy upon the whole question before parliament meets again. There is another point which the hon. gentleman from Belleville has drawn attention to, and which I think we should emphasize; it is this: we have from session to session been renewing charters of railways where they have had a chartered existence for two years and five years. Nothing has been done, no work performed, no surveys made. The company come back at the end of 5 years and ask to have that charter renewed for 2 or 5 years more, making the most plausible excuses that possibly can be made to get the new legislation.

We have done that in many instances, and I venture to say that with very few exceptions those charters were obtained for speculative purposes. The parties that controlled them are in the market to sell them for whatever they can get. Parliament has no right to encourage that kind of thing. We have had experience in the past and we should lay down the principle that if any company comes back to parliament for a renewal of powers, they must show that they have made certain progress in the way of constructing their lines, and if they fail to do so then the charter should be forfeited. The fact that they have not done anything clearly indicates that they are holding the charter simply for speculative purposes. I have it from a high authority that one of the principal lines traversing Canada has been obliged, in order to get rid of obstructing charters, to compromise and buy out the holders of those charters. Parliament is not helping forward the development of a country in granting speculative charters of that kind ; on the contrary we are virtually restricting the development of the Dominion. We are throwing barriers in the way of legitimate companies, who were they not fettered and schackled by conditions of that kind, might make valuable progress. We have three transcontinental lines of which we have a right to be proud. The Canadian Pacific Railway, the Canadian Northern and the Grand Trunk Pacific. I am willing to concede to these companies any reasonable concession or extensions they seek, but when we come to granting charters to others who will only interfere with them and impede the carrying out of these grand undertakings, I say we should hold our hands. Fifty per cent of these charters, I believe, are held for speculative purposes. If we are spared to meet here next session we should have a distinct understanding with the holders of charters who ask for renewals or extensions that they must show that they have done a certain amount of work and are endeavouring to carry out their undertakings ; otherwise we should not renew their charters.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—If the motion of the hon. leader of the opposition prevails, it means simply killing the Bill for the session. The promoters of this Bill appeared before the Railway Committee and satisfied, I think, a large majority of the committee that they should get the legislation. The promoters explained that this project is part of the old Soo system inaugurated some years ago when Mr. Clergue was looking after the industries established at the Sault. The committee was satisfied with the explanation given, that it was necessary that this legislation should be granted. So far as the amendments are concerned, according to the hon. member from Belleville —and I do not say that I disagree with him —they are in the right direction. If the Bill was bad before, it is not so bad now since the branch lines have been cut off; but the explanations given by the promoters have convinced the committee that this work, the main line at least, should be declared for the general advantage of Canada. In the language of our hon. friend from Wellington I would say we have been bad sinners; we have sinned a lot this session, but do not sit down on this Bill at this late stage of the session. If the committee had not been convinced that it was important to pass this legislation they would not have agreed to recommend it. The Bill has come back to us with slight amendments which, according to the hon. member from Belleville, improves it. I ask the leader of the opposition not to persist in his motion, because if it prevails at this stage of the session the Bill could not possibly go through.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman has made a statement which I have no recollection of hearing anything about, that this is a portion of the Clergue system.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I notice on the margin of the Bill that the first incorporation of this company was in 1886.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Was that the time the offer was made at the Soo for the settlement of a large portion of that country on condition that certain concessions should be made to the Clergue interests? My recollection is that this has nothing whatever to do with it.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The original corporation, apparently, must have disposed of their interest to the Clergue system, because it was certainly explained most fully to the committee by the promoters of the Bill that it was part of the Clergue system of railways, and he referred to mines and pulp mills.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This charter was granted by the province of Ontario in 1886, renewed again in 1900, and again in 1902 with certain amendments. Then in 1905 the Bill was amended again by the Ontario legislature with certain conditions to which the promoters objected. Although they obtained a renewal of the charter from the Ontario legislature last year, they came to this parliament, declaring the road to be a work in the general interest of the Dominion, for no other purpose that I or any one else can understand than to relieve themselves of the obligations imposed on them by the province which granted them the original charter and the amendments thereto. If that be true, then the question is whether this Senate was right in passing the Bill in the first place. I frankly admit that the lopping off of these branches is carrying out, to a certain extent, the ideas which many of those who take the same view as I do entertain, and one principal reason why, if the Bill is to continue on the statute-book, the depriving the company of the power to build branches destroys to a great extent the charter. What we ought to do in our own interests, and with respect to the constitution, is to reject the Bill altogether. We can confine ourselves to the effect that these amendments will have on the Bill when it goes to the committee. I fully concur in the views of the hon. gentleman from Halifax, that in sending the Bill back to the House of Commons with amendments, it will not be open for us to discuss the merits of the Bill itself, unless power to do so be given in the reference.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—It is very late in the session to oppose this Bill. We have been passing a number of Bills with much more objectionable clauses than this Bill contains. The Bill has passed not only the Senate but the House of Commons, and has been returned with a few unimportant amendments. Why then should we reject the Bill at the end of the session ? If the company has had the charter for some 20 years, certainly no injury has been done to the section of the country where this project is located. My hon. friend laughs; well he might at the arguments he offered to this House with a view to defeating the Bill. I can understand, and no doubt my hon. friend understands, there is a reason why this Bill is now being opposed. It was opposed not in this House but in the other House. Is it the only Bill which infringes on provincial rights ? No, but there is a reason why this Bill is being opposed. If the parties promoting this Bill get the charter, the chances are they will go to work and the road will be constructed. The hon. senator from Wellington says it is a Bill for the purpose of speculation. Many Bills have been before this House and perhaps the parties incorporated were not fully prepared to go on with their undertakings, but parliament granted the charters, and others were found who constructed the roads.

Hon. Mr. McKAY (Truro)—They sold out.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—They sold out to parties who were able to build the road and the country got the benefit, and what injury has been done to any one ? Like my hon. friend from Wellington, I know of roads that people obtained charters for who were unable to construct them and the charters finally passed into the hands of some other company who went on and built the road. One of the best roads we have in the country, the Canadian Southern, running from the east to the west of the province of Ontario, a transprovincial road, was in similar circumstances. The legislature at Toronto first refused a charter to build that road ; afterwards the company that obtained the charter passed it over into the hands of the Vanderbilts, and they constructed the road, one of the finest pieces of railway property we have in the province of Ontario, and equal to any in the Dominion of Canada. I say, therefore, that the fear that the promoters are going to traffic in this charter is no reason why we should not grant their request. The session is nearly at its close ; is it intended by means of this motion to defeat the Bill ? Why is this Bill singled out ? There must be a reason for it. If it is now sent to the Railway Committee and amendments are made there, and it is then sent back to the House of Commons, the session will have come to an end and the Bill will be defeated. That is striking below the belt. I do not think it is a fair course to pursue, and I feel that we should, if we are going to tie up certain roads on account of their being provincial roads, pass an Act that no roads unless they are interprovincial, or works in the interests of the Dominion of Canada, should receive a charter. After we have done that we may then refuse Bills of this kind, but I say that this Bill ought not to be, under the circumstances, strangled in the manner in which it is sought to be done.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I hope the hon. leader of the opposition will not press this amendment.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If the House will permit me to again make explanation of the position which I have taken, I must say that I regard it as very much more important that I should be consistent than that I should be in effect accommodating in the sense in which my hon. friend has referred to. My hon. friend from Elgin has indicated, or has implied from his remarks that there is an attempt made to strangle this Bill. I may say to my hon. friend, and I may say to the hon. gentlemen who are advocating the Bill, that I gave probably a warmer support to it when in the Railway Committee than any of those hon. gentlemen who have spoken today. I strongly urged the passage of the Bill when in the Railway Committee; but, certainly if it had been proposed in the Railway Committee that the main line should be declared to be a work for the general advantage of Canada and the branch lines left within the provincial jurisdiction, I would not for a moment have supported a Bill of that character. Surely it must appeal to the reason of every hon. gentleman present that to make one part of the line subject to federal jurisdiction and the other part of the line subject to provincial jurisdiction is doing violence to the common sense of parliament. We have to consult, not the promoters of this Bill, not the convenience referred to by my hon. friend from Elgin, but the convenience of the public. Can any hon. gentleman conceive anything more inconvenient than shippers over the road having to invoke different bodies, the federal power having jurisdiction over the main line, and the provincial authorities over the branch lines. I think the proposition has simply to be mentioned to show how unreasonable it is. I have no desire to throw any impediment in the way, but I would suggest to my hon. friend that his motion is entirely out of order. The amendment will certainly have to go to the Standing Committee or to the Committee of the Whole House. If my hon. friend would prefer that the amendment should go before the Committee of the Whole instead of a standing committee, with the consent of the seconder of the motion, I shall withdraw my motion to send it to a standing committee, and I would point out to my hon. friend rule 72, which distinctly provides that where amendments of a consequential nature are made, those amendments shall go before a Committee of the Whole House or before a standing committee. The rule reads as follows:—

When any private Bill is returned from the House of Commons with amendments the same not being merely verbal or unimportant, such amendments are, previous to their second reading, referred to a Committee of the Whole, or to the standing committee to which such Bill was originally referred.

In fact all those amendments should have been referred.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman is correct, but that has never been the practice.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Will the hon. leader of the opposition show wherein those amendments are going to change the Bill so very materially from what it was when before the Railway Committee of the Senate ? He said that the hon. gentlemen who was supporting it now were not so warm advocates of it as he was before the committee. Will he point out where the Bill differs, so that be must oppose it, when he says he agreed with it in committee?

Hon. Sir WILLIAM HINGSTON—The readiness with which we legislate in this assembly upon questions which belong exclusively to the province, is doing more harm to the Senate, I think, than many of the speeches, some unwise, that have fallen from the hon. senators in this Chamber in defending the Senate. This question belongs exclusively to the province, and why do we not leave it to the province ? The hon. gentleman from Wellington has said, and very wisely, that we are sinners, but he is followed by the hon. gentleman opposite who says : 'Yes we are sinners', but let us not sit on the Bill, but go on sinning. I say no. I find out now—because you know I have not been a regular attendant here, I am sorry to say—that we are dealing with matters with which we have no concern, and the sooner we drop that practice the sooner we will go back to the right path. That is the reason why I should be glad, even at this very late moment, to stop legislating where we have no business to and legislate in regard to matters we have a right to deal with.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—If the motion was made to reject the whole Bill I could understand it, but I do not know what the partisans of provincial rights will gain by the amendments. If we cannot get the whole we ought to be glad to have a part. I do not know why we should reject the amendments which are a step in the right direction, when the object is to put the branches under the control of the legislature of Ontario. Unless I receive an answer to this question I will vote against the motion.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—According to the rules, the hon. leader of the opposition is entirely correct, and I move that the Speaker now leave the Chair and that the House do now go into Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER—Does the hon. gentleman from Calgary insist on his amendment?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Better give it a third reading on division.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I will consent as seconder of the motion that it be withdrawn, but I do it for the reason that I think the Bill is worse and less likely to be carried out, than if the amendments were not concurred in. I do not understand the remarks of the hon. gentleman from Elgin when he says there must be some reason. That would imply that there is some sinister or personal reason for the rejection of this measure. I tell the hon. gentleman there is a reason and a very good one, and a constitutional reason to my mind, why I should like to see the Bill stangled as he terms it at the present time. It is not from any personal reasons, because I have none. I know very little of the parties who are interested in this Bill. The position I have taken is the one I have constantly assumed, namely, that this is an interference with the rights of the province, so long as the constitution remains as it is. If the hon. gentleman does not consider that a good reason he can draw what inference he pleases.

Hon. Mr. WILSON—I merely wish to say that I believe I have a just reason. It does not matter what opinion the hon. gentleman from Belleville may entertain as to whether I have such a reason or not.

The motion being put for concurrence in the amendments.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would it not be necessary to rescind rule 72? I understood the hon. gentleman from Halifax to say, and quite correctly, that we have been in the habit of adopting amendments, important though they might be, without requiring the rule to be suspended. I think that the rules of the House should be carried out.

Hon. Mr. WATSON moved that rule 72 be suspended.

The motion was agreed to, and the amendments were then concurred in.

GENERAL ACCIDENT ASSURANCE COMPANY BILL.

CONCURRENCE IN COMMONS AMENDMENTS.

The order of the day being called :

Consideration of the amendments made by the House of Commons to (Bill BB) An Act to incorporate the General Accident Assurance Company of Canada.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The amendments to this Bill are simple. On page 2, line 6, leave out 'sub-boards' and insert 'advisory boards.' We have not I think used the expression sub-boards in our legislation before. On page 2, line 10, $150,000 is substituted for $100,000. The Bill provided that as soon as $100,000 capital stock had been subscribed, and 10 per cent paid up, the provisional directors should call a general meeting. That has been amended so as to make it $150,000. On page 2, line 35, strike out the words 'or to their property.' This is an accident insurance company, and is not supposed to insure property. On page 3, line 1, leave out from the second 'and' to 'may' in line 8. The clause provided for indemnification of owners against their workmen, and the House of Commons has stricken out the part which indemnified them against third parties. Then on page 3, line 8, the original subsection read : 'The company may also carry on the business of sickness insurance in all its branches.' That power has been taken away. On page 3, line 12, after 'age' insert 'and may generally carry on the business of accident and sickness insurance as defined by the Insurance Act'. The next amendment is on page 3, line 26, to strike out 'indemnify persons who are or may become sureties for others,' and insert instead 'may generally carry on the business of guarantee insurance as defined by the Insurance Act.' On page 3, line 36, leave out 'one' and insert 'two'—the company shall not commence the business of guarantee insurance until its subscribed capital has been increased at least to $250,000. Then there is an amendment in the next line substituting $50,000 for $25,000.

These amendments are all, I think, in the right direction. The solicitor for the promoter told me before the House met that he had had a conference with the superintendent of insurance and the Minister of Finance and they had all agreed to these amendments ; so that I suppose there will be no objection to concurring in them. I move that they be now concurred in.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does not the same rule apply in this as in the previous case, that is, that the rule should be suspended which requires the Bill to be sent back to the committee?

Hon. Mr. POWER—It has been our uniform practice when there has been no opposition to the amendments to concur in this way. I recognize the fact that, strictly speaking, the rule is as the hon. gentleman has pointed out; but as a matter of practice it would not be desirable to introduce the system of requiring the suspension of the rule in every case.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The rules must govern the proceedings of this House and I do not think that universal practice could set them aside.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The whole question turns on whether the amendments are of importance. The rule only applies where the amendments are more than verbal.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I quite recognize the fact that the rule does apply. They are important amendments; but our uniform practice has been that, when there has been no objection to the amendments, they have been concurred in without reference to the rule.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—These amendments are of a most important character. They double the capital, the amount paid in, and the percentage.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I move that rule 72 be suspended in so far as it relates to this Bill.

The motion was agreed to, and the amendments were then concurred in.

CHARTERED BANK OF LONDON AND CANADA BILL.

CONCURRENCE IN COMMONS AMENDMENTS.

The order of the day being called :

Consideration of the amendments made by the House of Commons to (Bill CC) An Act to incorporate the Chartered Bank of London and Canada.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—These are amendments which are not of an important character. £2,000,000 sterling is changed to $10,000,000, and the word 'pounds' in another place is changed to 'dollars.' This, I understand, was done upon the suggestion of the Minister of Finance, who thought it was much better that no difficulties should be allowed to arise under the Banking Act as it stands to-day.

The amendments were concurred in.

USURY BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

Pursuant to the order of the day the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (11) An Act respecting Money Lenders.

(In the Committee).

On clause 2,

2. The expression 'money-lender' in this Act shall include any person who carries on the business of money-lending, or advertises, or announces himself, or holds himself out in any way, as carrying on that business, and who makes a practice of lending money at a higher rate than ten per cent per annum, but does not comprise registered pawnbrokers as such.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I cannot understand how it is proposed to limit the application of this measure to money-lenders. It does not include private individuals who charge exhorbitant rates. Supposing a retired farmer or retired merchant is the lender, he is not known or recognized as a money-lender. Under the provisions of this Bill he might charge 20 per cent, and yet not be on the list of money-lenders. Why is it necessary to make that exception ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Because in the cities where the abuse has existed, Montreal and Toronto, there are regular syndicates who lend money to poor people, in sums of from ten to one hundred dollars, on furniture or other collateral securities. They are parties who make a practice of lending money. This applies only to those who make a practice of lending money, not to the occasional lender.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The Bill is confined to money-lenders, and then at the latter portion of the clause it says money-lenders who make a practice of lending money at a higher rate than 10 per cent. What constitutes a money-lender and what interpretation would be put on the practice of lending money ? Would the lending of money two or three times to a neighbour constitute a man a money-lender? It is defined further on 'The practice of lending money'—does that mean carrying on lending money exclusively as a business ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The language is supposed to cover the cases in view and the courts will interpret it. There are men who make a practice of lending money to poor people who cannot go to a bank, and who give their furniture as security for the loan. Those men charge exhorbitant rates, from one hundred to one hundred and fifty and two hundred per cent. It is that class of persons that this Bill is intended to reach, and it will be for the courts to say if the language is sufficiently clear to cover the cases intended to be dealt with.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would say to the hon. senator from North Wellington that if any of those modest, unassuming and retired farmers, up in North Wellington should lend $500 or under at 12 per cent on more than three occasions they certainly would be money-lenders within the meaning of the Act.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—Are registered pawn brokers exempted ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—They are. His honour the Speaker, it will be remembered, had charge of a measure almost indentical with this which passed the Senate some years ago twice. I for one should be glad to hear the hon. gentleman explain the Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before he does so, I should like to call the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to the fact that the clause to which he refers gives no power to the judge to declare what is the practice of lending money. The cases to be referred to the judges under this Bill are cases in which there has been an exhorbitant rate of interest extracted from the borrower and which he has attempted to collect. Then it is referred to the judges to see whether the agreement entered into comes within this law. It has nothing whatever to do with defining what is the practice of lending money or what constitutes a money-lender.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—All our laws are subject to the interpretation of judges and this law will in all cases be.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The language of this clause is much more definite than the hon. gentleman suggests. The second clause provides:

> 2. The expression 'money-lender' in this Act shall include any person who carries on the business of money-lending, or advertises or announces himself, or holds himself out in any way, as carrying on that business, and who makes a practice of lending money at a higher rate than ten per cent per annum.

That covers the case. In the case of a man who never made but one loan or as the Minister of Justice in the other House said, the man who made one loan or probably two loans would not come within the meaning of this, but the man who is shown to have made three or four or more loans might very well be called one who carried on the business of money-lending, and so you have a definition for that kind of case. The cases intended to be met are the cases of those who hold themselves out to be money-lenders, or who carry on money-lending as a business. That is what is intended to be hit at, and not the case of an individual money-lender.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I should like to put a case to the hon. leader of the opposition. In a recent court held in my own section, a man was sued for payment of a note which had been made payable at the expiration of six months, with a clause added that two and a half per cent interest per month after maturity should be paid until the note was redeemed. The man paid interest on it for two years, and there was a large amount due. The judge felt himself compelled to maintain the covenant that the borrower had made with the money-lender. That man did not advertise himself as a money-lender, nor did he practice the business of money-lending. He was a retired gentleman, and the borrower went to his House to get the money. I should like to ask the leader of the opposition if this Bill would reach the case of that man?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I should say unhesitatingly, notwithstanding his very retired disposition, which seems to be emphasized as the chief proposition, my hon. friend, if he made a loan on those lines on more than three occasions he certainly would be a money-lender within the Act. I do not think there is any question about it.

The SPEAKER—The description of a money-lender to which it has been judged proper to restrict the operation of the Act is the very description of a money-lender to be found in the English Act of 1900. I think that our own description goes a little further in describing the money-lender.

Clause 6, of the Money-Lenders Act, 1900, reads as follows :—

The expression 'money-lender' in this Act shall include every person whose business is that of money-lending or who advertises or announces himself, or holds himself out in any way as carrying on that business.

But there are very many exceptions. We go on and add to the clause :

And who makes a practice of lending money at a higher rate than ten per cent per annum.

But it does not comprise pawn brokers as such. The money-lender that this Bill wants to reach is the professional money-lender ; the one who makes a practice of money-lending, it does not cover the isolated case of one who lends money to a neighbour on a note of fifteen or thirty days. One would be very much surprised to find out possibly that he has violated this law when the amount he would collect as discount would seem to be most reasonable and would be as a matter of fact very modest. I may say I objected when this Bill came before the Senate to the interest being reduced to 12 per cent. If the hon. gentlemen who were here then will remember I had fixed 20 per cent as the outside limit to which money-lenders could lend money, but the Senate in its wisdom decided that it was somewhat demoralizing to hear of a loan carrying 20 per cent and reduced it to 12 per cent. I will have something to say on that subject when we reach that clause.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Does it not all depend on the security ? There are some notes I would not cash at 20 per cent, while others I would cash at 5 per cent.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I commend the government for making an effort to put a stop to exhorbitant interest. I earnestly hope that it may be successful, but I have very great doubts, and let me state the reason for my doubts. Some years ago, it was thought wise on the part of the Ontario government to pass a law exempting certain property from seizure for rent. The result was that conveyancers began to have inserted a clause in the leases that the tenant handed over his right to exemption under that agreement. He covenanted not to take advantage of the enactment ; the result was that it was nugatory altogether. They contracted themselves out of the provisions of the law. Supposing a money-lender in this case gets notes drawn whereby the maker of the note covenants on the face of the note that he will not take advantage of a certain Act passed in the reign of His Majesty, 1906, regarding money-lenders, and cites this very Act, I would like to know if he is going in that way to get over the difficulty ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—That would be absolutely illegal.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The judge would not recognize it.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—It is not illegal as a covenant in a lease.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The one is penal and the other is not. That is simply a privilege it gives to the debtor.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Did my hon. friend ever hear of exempted property being seized and sold ?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—No.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I think the party who did it would find himself in trouble.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—I think the intention of the law to protect the people is a good one, but why is the registered pawnbroker not included ? Supposing I have a gold watch worth $50 and want $10 for 10 days, he may charge me $5 for 10 days, and yet the money-lender with no security is not allowed to charge. Why is there the exemption ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The point is well taken to a certain extent. The pawnbroker is somewhat more favourably treated under the Pawn Brokers Act than the money-lender under this Act. The pawn-broker gets something tangible, which protects him fully, yet he is allowed by the Pawn Brokers Act about 18½ per cent on a money loan, and that was one of the reasons why I thought that 20 per cent on those loans on notes, where the security is doubtful, was not too large an amount to charge ; but, as I said, the Senate decided that it should be 12 per cent and it left this Chamber at 12 per cent, and the same Bill was taken up in the House of Commons and passed, leaving the rate of interest at 12 per cent. The pawn-broker is exempted from the operation of this Bill, because there is a special law governing pawn-brokers.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—He is already regulated.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do I understand that all the provisions of this Bill apply only to money-lenders who make a practice of lending money ? If so the individual who cannot be considered a money-lender, and who is not in the habit or practice of lending money, could lend to an individual money at any rate of interest they chose to agree upon. The private individual could loan to another if he did not come within the meening of the clause, money at 50 or 75 per cent.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—So long as he does not do it too often.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I might say to my hon. friend who spoke last, that I had occasion a good many years ago, when Minister of Finance, to consider this question, and I had occasion to confer with some gentlemen of very considerable experience as regard to the way in which the poorer classes of our cities were fleeced by some of these money-lenders. Now, with respect to the pawn-brokers, the universal consensus of opinion was this—and I think the House will see the force of it—that if you refuse to allow the pawn-brokers to exercise their vocation in some such way as they are now permitted to do, the only result will be that the property which customers pawn they would be compelled to sell for an absurdly low price, and they would suffer very much more in that way than if they had to pay for a comparatively short time the high rate of interest referred to, and I do not see how on earth you are going to avoid in such cases permitting pawn-brokers to charge a pretty high rate of interest. As to the general question, the House must be aware that anything we could do in this way is liable to be avoided in a thousand different fashions. All that we can possibly do, and all my friend the Attorney General hoped to do was to avoid the scandal of compelling our courts to enforce transactions which, on the face of them, were grossly usurious. That I think will be attained in measure by this Bill. More than that I do not think any legislation will attain, so far as my own experience and inquiry enables me to offer an opinion on the subject ; but we can prevent the courts of justice from being made a means of assisting certain vampires in bleeding their fellow creatures to death.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 3,

3. Notwithstanding the provisions of chapter 127 of the revised statutes no money-lender shall stipulate for, allow or exact on any negotiable instrument, contract or agreement, concerning a loan of money, the principal of which is under five hundred dollars, a rate of interest or discount greater than twelve per cent per annum ; and the said rate of interest shall be reduced to the rate of five per cent per annum from the date of judgment in any suit, action or other proceeding for the recovery of the amount due.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I simply want to repeat that the cure we wanted to effect of a certain evil would have been a satisfactory cure if we had allowed the money-lender, the shark, 20 per cent interest. That is a very small amount on the sums that are loaned by these people. The reason why I speak of raising that rate of interest from 12 to 20 per cent is that we have two classes of money-lenders in large cities, and perhaps in towns and cities throughout the land. But we have money-lenders who are the usurers. They loan small sums to people who are hardly solvent but have hopes; young men between twenty-one and thirty, and they take an endorser not worth much more than the maker. They try to borrow small sums, from $10 up to $50, $75 or $100, but we have other men who help contractors and builders and others who happen to be short of money, but who have a certain kind of solvency, though not sufficiently solvent to go to the banks, and who will pay 15 per cent, 20 per cent and 25 per cent for fifteen days, for a week or a month and be able to meet their obligations, to pay their men. When I was endeavouring to promote this legislation in this House I received very many protests from a number of men who were doing a regular business of money lending, respectable men, not charging a higher rate than 20 per cent. On $100, 20 per cent means $20 per annum, but for a month, it means a little more than a dollar, for fifteen days it would only be 50 or 60 cents. So that all this business will be practically stopped. These channels by which men who need temporary help will be prevented, if the 12 per cent is maintained, from getting advances from those regular and decent business men who are money-lenders, who call themselves bankers, who lend money openly on short notes, and that was the reason why I had originally fixed the rate at 20 per cent. Some people may be scandalized at the idea of passing a Bill to restrict usury, and yet allowing 20 per cent, but those notes are made for a month or two and 20 per cent did not appear to me to be large, and seemed to be satisfactory to the other regular money lenders who lend thousands and thousands of dollars at between 20 per cent and 25 per cent. They were asking in fact that we should put the margin at 25 per cent, but I convinced them at the time that 20 per cent was perhaps sufficient and they should accept it as a compromise; but the Senate thought otherwise and fixed 12 per cent. Inasmuch as it is five or six years since this measure passed the Senate and this Chamber was not composed of the same members as at present I mention the fact, although I do not propose to move an amendment. There will be some undoubted hardship if the Bill passes the 12 per cent provision.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the 10th clause not cover, to a great extent, the objections which the hon. gentleman makes? That clause reads:

10. This Act shall not apply to any loan or transaction in which the whole interest or discount charged or collected in connection therewith does not exceed the sum of fifty cents.

If you borrow $5 for a month, and the money lender charges you 50 cents, that would be 120 per cent per annum. On $10 it would be 33⅓ per cent. It seems to me that for these small sums that clause covers the case to which the hon. gentleman refers.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Yes, small loans, $5, $10 and $20.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This clause was probably based on the fact that it was just as much trouble to draw a note and do the clerical work for a ten dollar loan as if the loan were $100, and if you confined it to 12 per cent for the small loan. it would only give to the money-lender a few cents. I think this clause was put in to cover cases of that kind. I hope the Senate will not change the rate of 12 per cent; that is quite high enough. I would rather see a general law myself. I have always been in favour of a usury law, though I frankly admit the force of the argument made by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. All these enactments can and will be evaded. If you cannot get rid of them in any other way, there is the commercial transaction. There are many estates wound up in which there are a number of notes and very frequently these notes are put up at auction or sold by private sale. There may be ten or fifteen thousand dollars worth of notes which may be sold at 50 cents or 25 cents on the dollar. There may be ten or fifteen thousand dollars as the case may be. They would not come within the meaning of this Act, I suppose, because it is a commercial transaction; and it is by that means that the law can be evaded. Whether it be a bankrupt estate or a person giving his note to another for the purpose of raising money, where the note passes into the hands of a third party at say 50 or 75 cents on the dollar. I do not think this Bill will meet the case; but if it meets the cases which the hon. gentleman from Wellington and the hon. Speaker have mentioned it will be of benefit. In one case in particular, in the city of Montreal, I think judgment was given by the judge, very reluctantly I remember, where the rate of interest ran up to three or four hundred per cent, but he had under the law to give decision against the unfortunate debtor.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I saw accidentally to-day that this clause was added by the chairman of the committee after the report had been fully concurred in, to cover some cases which had not been provided for.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman from Belleville has spoken of clause 10. This clause was added on the representation that the banks do not negotiate a note where the interest is less than 50 cents. When we reach that clause I intend to move that it be struck out. I will try to convince the Senate that this is a bad clause.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—I do not know that I am in favour of a usury law at all, but since we are going to have one for the money-lenders, why not have one for money-borrowers as well. I think such legislation would serve a useful purpose to a certain extent, if we had the right to pass it. There is one point which I wish to bring to the notice of the government—I do not suppose my view will be agreed in by many. We have chartered banks in Canada with a total capital of $85,000,000. They are borrowers from the people—from the very poorest of the people to the extent of some $600,000,000. Why does the government form a combination with the banks to give these poor people only 3 per cent ? When trade is good, money is worth seven or eight per cent, but these peoples' money at 3 per cent, surely the banks should not be allowed to take their money from them at so low a rate. Why should we limit what a man must charge and not limit what he must pay ? I think the government should give the matter some consideration.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—The hon. gentleman is very much concerned about what the banks should do with regard to charging a high rate of interest when they are only giving the people three per cent for their money. He wants the Senate to take some cognizance of the banks with respect to the rate of interest, but the greatest sinner in connection with the whole matter is the government, who fix the rate of interest at 3 per cent. If my hon. friend would use his influence with the government he supports to encourage the thrift of the people by giving them a higher rate of interest he will accomplish something. But so long as the government are in the habit of taking peoples money at 3 per cent, surely the banks are not over-steppeing the rule when they do the same thing. In connection with clause 3, I should like to point out that while you are not dealing with a large sum of money, it is a large amount for poor people whose interest we are trying to protect, and I think the principal sum of $500 is too large. We should limit it to $100 and we would be doing justice to people who are compelled to borrow money in this way. They are not going to the banks for money, they are getting it on an article of value, and they should not be compelled to pay 12 per cent on money borrowed on something that is of value. We all know that the value set upon an article by a money-lender is about 50 per cent of its real value, and by this Bill you are allowing the lender to charge 12 per cent so long as the sum is under $500.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman misapprehends the effect of this clause. Up to $500, the rate of interest is limited tc 12 per cent per annum. Beyond that there is no limit, and the only effect of the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman would be that if the sum borrowed was anywhere between $100 and $500 the rate of interest might be as high as the parties would agree upon.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I should like very much if the government would consent to reduce the rate from 12 to 10 per cent.

Some hon. GENTLEMAN—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The public will be under the impression that parliament is legalizing 12 per cent as a rate of interest for any sum loaned under $500. Money-lenders will say that parliament has passed a law declaring that 12 per cent is the legal rate of interest on any sum under $500.

The SPEAKER—The evil we want to reach by this legislation is to bring down the rate of interest from 48 per cent to 12 per cent. The average rate of interest charged by money-lenders in the cities of Toronto and Montreal, and very likely elsewhere, is 48 per cent and the rate goes up to 120 per cent very easy. I may tell the hon. gentleman that he need not concern himself at all about this legislation ; 20 per cent will serve as well as 12 per cent to put a stop to the practice at which the Bill aims. I thought we should say 20 per cent because of other money-lenders who lend small sums of money for a few days, and who will not lend at less than 20 per cent, but the others who are lending on doubtful security and doubtful names, will be put out of business at any rate under 20 per cent.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I admit the force of my hon. friends remarks, but after all you will find that when farmers throughout the country go to private lenders to borrow money, the lenders will claim that they are justified in charing 12 per cent since parliament has passed an Act fixing that as the legal rate for any sum under $500. The simple farmer will say if that is what parliament has been doing in the interest of agriculturists and poor people, it is a great injustice.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman knows that the banks charge 7 per cent, though the legal rate of interest is 5 per cent. Yet we can borrow money on good security at as low as 4 per cent to-day.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—In the rural districts and small villages there are no chartered banks, and borrowers must go to private banks or private individuals and pay a larger rate of interest than a chartered bank would charge, even where their credit is good. Even where there is a chartered bank many a farmer would rather borrow from a private individual and pay 9 or 10 per cent for a year than be bothered going to a chartered bank and borrowing for three or four months, and having to return and get a renewal, and possibly not feeling sure that he would get a renewal. He would rather pay a higher interest and borrow for a year. There are many borrowers of that kind, and there are money-lending sharks who would take advantage of this legislation and tell such borrowers that parliament had fixed the rate at 12 per cent.

Hon. Mr. De BOUCHERVILLE—I wish this Bill had limited the rate of interest all over except with the banks, whom I would allow to charge a higher rate. The hon. senator from Wellington wants this 12 per cent to be reduced to 12 per cent on loans below $500. I am afraid that, against his wish probably the hon. senator would be doing a thing that would kill the entire Bill. Ten per cent would still be a very high rate of interest, but if you pass an amendment you must not forget that the amended Bill will run the risk of being thrown out in the other House. That occurred once before when a Bill limiting the rate of interest was sent down to the House of Commons. It reached the other House too late. They are on the eve of proroguing there now, and every member wants to get away, and those who are opposed to the Bill entirely would simply take advantage of that amendment to defeat the Bill. Twelve per cent is certainly a high rate to charge poor people in whose interest this legislation has been introduced, but it is an improvement on the existing state of affairs, and therefore I think the hon. gentleman ought not to insist on his amendment.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN. The point which the hon. senator from Wellington wishes to make is this: time is the essence of the contract. His honour the Speaker is quite correct in saying that 12 per cent or 20 per cent or any rate like that will not appear much for a short time, but advantage will be taken of the fact that we have fixed a limit of 12 per cent by this Bill. There is a good deal of force in what the hon. senator from Wellington says. Where it is a short time and a matter of great convenience to the borrower, it ought to be allowed, but advantage will be taken of the fact that parliament has acknowledged that 12 per cent is not excessive and I think we should reduce it at least to 10 per cent.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If I did not think that a reduction to 10 per cent would defeat the Bill in the other House, I would readily second the motion of the hon. senator from Wellington. It would be much better and high enough, but this is one of the Bills which would probably be lost if it were amended and sent back to the House of Commons at this stage of the session. Some years ago the Senate, at the instance of the present Speaker, passed a Usury Bill. The House of Commons either rejected it, or allowed it to die, and what I fear now is that if we reduce the rate to 10 per cent we will get no Bill at all. While I am strongly in favour of reducing it to 10 per cent, I would rather leave it as it is than run the risk of losing the Bill altogether.

Hon. Mr. POWER—As a matter of fact the Senate on two occasions has passed a Bill fixing the rate at 12 per cent.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Moosejaw)—In the Territories it is doubtful if this Bill will prove a benefit. Dealers go through the country selling horses at a season of the year, when the farmers are short of money. The farmer may wish to buy a horse which he could get for $100 cash. If he has to purchase on time he would be charged $150. If he can go to a private bank and borrow $100 and pay cash he could afford to pay 18 per cent and save money. As a matter of fact, in many cases of that kind, the farmer, the man who should be entitled to consideration now, is debarred from borrowing money at a reasonable rate. He cannot get it at 10 per cent, and very likely will not get it at 12 per cent, because the only security he has to offer is the horse, and that is not very good security. As a matter of fact you are injuring the farmer and the new comer in the Territories. Of course it does not apply to the Yukon, because, as a matter of fact, you could not get money there at 10 per cent. The banks charge one per cent per month, and, as a fact, about two per cent a month is the rate in ordinary trade. The security there is not as good as it is here. This Bill may be very good for cities like Toronto and Montreal, but I consider it legislation in the wrong direction for the section from which I come.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 10,

10. This Act shall not apply to any loan or transaction in which the whole interest or discount charged or collected in connection therewith does not exceed the sum of fifty cents.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It seems to me this clause might be subject to a very great deal of abuse. Let us assume that a man borrows ten dollars. The money-lender will only lend it to him for, say, one month. This is a case which will permit an evasion of the Act. I will undertake to say that any ingenious money-lender, under this clause, may lend all the money he desires, and get the same rates of interest as we are to-day trying to suppress.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—He could do that by renewing the note for two or three days at a time.

The SPEAKER—I move that this clause be struck out.

Hon. Mr. De BOUCHERVILLE—I think we ought not to strike out this clause. If a man refuses to pay such a small sum as 50 cents, what can the money-lender do? He can only sue him, and then the matter will be ventilated in court. If we change even one clause, the Bill will have to go back to the House of Commons and that would be the end of it.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Moosejaw).

The SPEAKER—Perhaps it is as well not to make this motion; the matter can be dealt with next session. I will leave it to the judgment of the hon. leader of the government, as it is a government measure. I would not like to jeopardize the measure.

Hon. Mr. De BOUCHERVILLE—In the House of Commons I am almost sure there are some members who are entirely opposed to this measure. There are some people there who are interested in these loans. It will be sufficient for two or three of them to keep on proposing amendments and by a little obstruction to see that the Bill shall be lost.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That would only apply to a private Bill. But this is a government measure and the government have control of the House of Commons and can see that an amendment which is made by the Senate is dealt with by the House. I do not think there is any fear of its being thrown out. This particular clause was not in the Bill which we passed on two occasions; and, in addition to what has already been said against the clause, one can see that a money-lender instead of lending an amount of $50 could make half a dozen different loans for smaller amounts and fleece the unfortunate just as effectually as if this Act were not in existence at all. The probable effect of passing this clause will be to render nugatory all the preceding part of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Is not this clause for the purpose of punishing evil doing? The government have committed so many sins that when they bring forward an Act which is intended for the benefit of the people we ought to pass it and not put it in a position where it may be imperilled. This clause, I contend, is in the right direction. It can be amended at another session if necessary. I think there is an undercurrent in the Senate for the purpose of defeating this Bill, and I hope it will not be allowed to prevail.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC—I am in favour of making this Bill as stringent as possible, but I am afraid the money-lender will be difficult to find. If I had been in the House of Commons I would surely have moved to strike out clause 2. We may make the Bill as stringent as we like, but if we define that a money-lender shall only be a man who makes a profession of lending money, then, in nine cases out of ten, the sharks will be free to act as they are doing at present. There are many persons who make loans of money at ten, fifteen, twenty and twenty-five per cent who cannot be called money lenders according to clause 2 of the Bill as it stands at present. I think it would be much better to say that any one who loans money at a higher rate than 12 per cent, whether he be a professional money-lender or not, should come under this Act.

Hon. Mr. De BOUCHERVILLE—If we refer to clause 4 it will be seen that provision is made for bringing into court any case where the loan is under $500. Consequently it is clear that in any of these small loans if the case comes into court, clause 4 of the Bill will apply.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It was stated in the Commons that this clause was put in to meet the requirements of the banks. That statement may have been made in all sincerity, but this Act cannot possibly extend to the banks and it is idle to say that this clause was put in for their protection.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is put in to meet the case of small loans of five and six dollars. Fifty cents would not be an unreasonable sum for five dollars loaned for a term of ten days.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the trick is resorted to of renewing the note every week in order to obtain a much higher rate of interest, would that not come under the operation of clause 4 ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The judge would of course take cognizance of all the circumstances.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Clause 10 is clear and unmistakable in its language. It would apply, on the face of it, to very poor people raising small loans—the very parties who are to be regarded as objects of commiseration. In addition to that, as I pointed out before, instead of making one loan of $50, the money-lender may say : 'I cannot lend you now more than $10, and on that $10 the 50 cents would not exceed the rate laid down by the Bill. Then next day, perhaps, he agrees to lend five or ten dollars more. It is all very well for hon. gentleman to intimate that they consider that absurd, but that is just the sort of transaction which would take place between a very low type of money lender and a very poor borrower; and the object of the whole Bill being to protect poor people from the operations of sharks, while this tenth clause remains in the Bill, that object will not be attained.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The judge has the widest possible power to inquire into all questions of discount, commission, expenses, fines, bonus, renewals and all other charges. He has the most ample powers.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—But this would probably be a cash transaction. The exorbitant interest would be extracted from the borrower day after day or week after week. I do not think this class of case would be likely to come into court, and, in any event, clause 10 expressly provides that that Act shall not apply to this class of cases.

Hon. Mr. De BOUCHERVILLE—Fifty cents for a loan of one week would be more than twelve per cent per annum. Let us suppose the borrower says 'I will not pay,' what follows ? Either the money-lender must sue the borrower or he must lose his money ? If he sues, he comes before the judge, and the judge has power, if he finds that illegal methods have been taken, to reduce the rate of interest to five per cent per annum, so that the danger is not as great as one might suppose. It is all very well to say that the government is all powerful, but we know that five or six members of the House of Commons could keep back this measure for months. We know what obstruction has already been employed in the case of this very Bill.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—If one will make a little careful calculation with regard to clause 10, he will find that a man borrowing $10 for a week and paying 50 cents for that loan, would pay in the course of a year $26 for the use of $10 dollars. Surely this House would not legalize a transaction of that kind. Surely 12 per cent per annum, one per cent per month, is enough under any ordinary circumstances without making provision for a rate of 260 per cent for the year.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I do not think there is very much risk of the clause being abused. Men who have money to lend are not so peculiar that they will renew a note every week, which is drawn for the sum of $10.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I didn't say a note; I didn't suppose there would be any note.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—This clause is put in evidently for the purpose of allowing bankers or brokers to charge up to 50 cents for small transactions. It is not worth while putting a transaction through a set of books for less than 50 cents. I do not think it is at all likely the clause will be abused in the way my hon. friend has pointed out.

The Senate divided on the motion to strike out clause 10, which was rejected.

Contents 8, non-contents not counted.

Hon. Mr. McKAY (Truro), from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment, and it was then read the third time and passed.

THE SAFETY OF SHIPS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (48) An Act respecting the safety of ships and the prevention of accidents on board thereof.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is not a government Bill. Mr. Sinclair introduced it in the other House, and the government allowed him to take up the Bill during a lull in proceedings. It is in reference to the deck loads of ships, a question which has been so often discussed in parliament.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—I beg to move the suspension of the rule to permit of the second reading of this Bill presently.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR moved the second reading of the Bill. He said: This Bill is simply following a Bill framed by the English Board of Trade. It is extending the time of the sailing of ships from the 12th October to the 16th October and from the 12th March to the 16th March. Formerly they were not allowed to carry over a three-foot deck load, and now they are allowed to carry a seven-foot deck load. My experience is that with a vessel which has a rail of six feet from the deck to the top of the rail, would be much safer with a full load three feet deep. The water is heavier than the lumber, and if she was allowed to carry a full deck load, the water would wash right over the ship. I think every man who has been at sea will know that it is much safer to have the deck load flush with the rail. The best explanation I can give of this matter is a discussion which took place in the English parliament during the consideration of the Merchants Shipping Act on the 26th May, 1906. The report reads as follows:

> Some discussion took place on clause 9 extending and amending the definition of 'wood goods.'
> Mr. Lloyd George remarked that at present wood goods could only be carried on deck in winter to a maximum height of three feet above the deck. The object of the clause was to allow wood goods to be carried to a maximum height of seven feet above the deck. As the clause in the Bill stood, there was a danger that the increased height allowed might extend to wood goods carried on the top of permanent structures on deck; that was to say, that the top or permanent structure would be taken to be the dock instead of the deck itself He therefore moved the following amendment with a view of making the matter clear:
> In the case of an uncovered space on a deck forming the top of a break, poop or other permanent closed-in space on the upper deck to a height not exceeding three feet above the top of such closed-in space, and in the case of any uncovered space, &c.

This is realy what passed in England and following on the line of the boards of trade in England. In regard to the extension of time, the 12th of October was the date fixed, but formerly the lumber was taken over by sailing vessels, and now steamers are used, and they have extended the time to the 16th of October.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—May I ask my hon. friend if it is not the case that when this Bill was originally before the Commons there were some protests against it by seamen, that it was regarded by seamen as being unfavourable to their interests and in favour of the ship owners?

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—I have no doubt there would be some, and there would be some gentlemen differ from me. I have had a little experience. Some men will tell us that it is still safer to have a three-foot deck load where you have a drop of six feet. I contend that it is safer to have a full deck load. I think the majority of seamen consider the full deck load is safer.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Personally, I have no knowledge of nautical questions of this kind, but it seems to me, having a Department of Marine, the government should assume the responsibility of passing legislation of this character.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They do.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I see that in England, a member of the government assumed the entire responsibility for the legislation. It seemed to me rather an exceptional thing that a private member in the House of Commons should introduce this measure and that the government should not intervene and express their approval or disapproval of it, particularly in viw of the fact that there was considerable opposition to the measure when it was presented to the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It could not be taken up without the approbation of the government, and it was only taken up yesterday by the government giving way and practically endorsing the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My attention was drawn to the fact that in the Commons the members of the government were particularly quiet in regard to this question and it was left to the private members. There does not seem to be any centre of responsibility for this legislation, and I think that is a suspicious circumstance.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The fact that this is a copy of an English Bill, which has recently been adopted, is sufficient reason why we should give it the second reading, and to-morrow if the details are not satisfactory we can alter it.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—So far as the legislation is sought for in regard to deck loads has obtained in England, a vessel cannot be put below the Plimsol mark, but here in Canada we have no Plimsol mark.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I am glad to hear that, because it is evidence that a vessel is not over-loaded when she is not below that mark. Some provision should be made in this Bill for protecting the seamen above the deck load line. We all know the bulwarks of a vessel are for the protection of the seamen. These stand four or five feet high, and the decks should not be loaded higher than the bulwarks without some provision being made to protect the seaman. Every one knows that it is a dangerous condition. It might be safe enough in our lakes, because they are not subject to the same sea, although they are probably subject to heavier winds in some cases. There is no provision of that kind in the Bill, and I think there should be. I have no objection, so far as my observations go in that direction, to the Bill, but I think we should make provision to protect those who have the working and management of the ship.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Marine Department will inquire into the whole thing befor it goes into operation it does not go into operation until proclamation.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This question is a very vexed one, and as gentlemen who have been in the House of Commons know, ever since confederation this question has been dealt with, and ship-owners are the gentlemen who have always urged the amendment to the law to enable them to carry high deck loads. That has been the request in the past. I have not read the debate in the House of Commons on this Bill, so I am not prepared to give an opinion, but, like my hon. friend in front of me, I am not a nautical man. I have, however, distinct recollection of discussions on this question very often, as the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce may remember also, and that the conflict has been as a rule between the ship-owners and those who are considered to be philanthropists and looking after the safety and lives of sailors. How far this Bill before us will justify the philanthropists in continuing their opposition to deck loads, I am not prepared to say. I am not objecting to the second reading now, but we should consider the question when in committee. I might inquire how far would this Bill affect the loading of the 'Arctic' going on her expeditions to the north ?

Hon. Mr. WILSON—Would you have money enough to load her up ?

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I hope the hon. gentleman will not proceed with this Bill to-morrow, because I have received a letter from Messrs. Wm. Thomson & Co., St. John, on the subject. I think they are not opposing the Bill, but they have some objection to state.

Hon. Mr. LOVITT—This Bill is merely a copy of an English measure, making an addition of about 3 feet to the deck load. If the imperial parliament do not pass the Bill now before it, this Bill will not become law. It is only to go into force by order in council. The present deck load law conforms to the English law. In England they are proposing to amend the law, and the object of this Bill is to conform to the change proposed there, if it should be made.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a second time.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES BILL.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (214) An Act to authorize the granting of subsidies in aid of the construction of the lines of railways therein mentioned.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the suspension of the rules. He said: The subsidies contained in this Bill are only revotes, as hon. gentlemen will find if they examine the details.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman is not strictly correct in saying they are all revotes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have not gone through each detail of it, but the Minister of Railways announced that it consisted, with perhaps one or two exceptions, of revotes. However, the revotes are referred to if hon. gentlemen will look at the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I suppose we can discuss the principle of the Bill in committee.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, we can discuss it more freely in committee.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAI RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

A message as received from the House of Commons with Bill (215) An Act to amend the National Transcontinental Railway Act.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the rules be suspended. He said: Under the provisions of the statutes and the agreement with the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway Company, they were to put up $5,000,000 as security for the building of the line. They have made an application to the government to be allowed to put up securities for an equal amount, and the government have accepted the offer, provided parliament approves of it. The effect of it is to save the company a certain amount of interest. It gives them the use of $5,000,000 now lying idle in the bank.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I thought it had been arranged that the government would pay interest on the $5,000,000 deposit?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, but not as much as they have to pay for the money. There is a difference of 2 per cent.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What securities has the government agreed to accept in lieu of the cash deposit?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Certain securities of the Grand Trunk Railway, which are now quoted at 102, were to be offered as securities at par.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Are they bonds, or preferred stock?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Either bonds or preference paper. The government have to take the responsibility of that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is the hon. gentleman sure that this will be the last time of asking?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I am afraid not.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We passed a Transcontinental Railway Bill which became law. The Grand Trunk Pacific pledges themselves and the government pledges the country that the original terms of the Bill would be carried out to the letter.

However the Grand Trunk Pacific did nothing, and at the next session of parliament they asked for concessions and further concessions were granted them. One of the terms was that they were to deposit $5,000,000 on which the government was to allow them 3 per cent. Now they desire to withdraw that money and deposit in lieu thereof the debentures or stock of the Grand Trunk Railway. Of course that would release a large amount of money, but the question is whether the security is as good as the money. I question it very much. But it enables the Grand Trunk Railway to make use of $5,000,000. Whether next session they will ask for some further concession or not I do not know. Perhaps the next proposal will be to withdraw that security.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The last time of calling.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This must be a new issue of bonds.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I cannot speak positively as to the security. The Minister of Finance made the announcement in another place.

Hon. Mr. De BOUCHERVILLE—The Grand Trunk Railway is our debtor already.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There is one element that has not been considered; what is the government receiving in lieu of this release of $5,000,000? It must be a very substantial consideration to the government to have $5,5000,000 in the exchequer at a very nominal rate of interest which, of course, is available for the public service. The government is to get no advantage so far as I can see by accepting stock which they cannot use but will only be kept in their vaults.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I presume it is the same to the country if an equivalent security is put up. The Minister of Finance in another place announced that it was proposed to accept securities from the Grand Trunk Railway which are at present quoted above par in the market, so the country would be perfectly safe.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That is not the phase of the question I am considering. I am asking what is the government receiving in lieu of the $5,000,000 cash which they can use for the public service, instead of having to borrow from the banks at a higher rate of interest. No particular advantage will enure to the government from holding securities?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My impression is that the money was simply deposited and not to be used.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The character of the securities to be given in lieu of the $5,000,000 is not indicated in this Bill?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It simply says any securities which may be approved by the Governor in Council, so that the country have no knowledge of what the securities may be. They may be good or bad. The bonds or the stock of these companies may be 102 to-day, and 90 to-morrow.

The motion was agreed, and the Bill was read the second time.

HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS OF MONTREAL BILL.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (222) An Act to provide for a further advance to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the suspension of the rules. He said: A sum of $250,000 or thereabouts of bonds issued by the harbour commissioners of Montreal is maturing. The object of this Bill is to authorize the government to practically redeem those bonds by accepting bonds of the harbour commissioners in lieu thereof. The object being to save them the additional amount they would have to pay over and above the loan the government would secure.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Can the government borrow this money at 3 per cent.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The money can be borrowed considerably lower by the government than it can be borrowed by the harbour commissioners.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Can they borrow it at as low a rate as they are lending it to the harbour commissioners?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, yes, the government lose nothing.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—If I am not misinformed the harbour commissioners had been paying 6 per cent, or 5 per cent at the least.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Have the Harbour Commissioners been appointed yet? If not when are they to be appointed?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The matter is under consideration.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have noticed in the press that there is a good deal of dissatisfaction at the manner in which the wharfs and the harbours are maintained at the present time, and it arises from the fact that there is no one to look after them; hence the necessity of the appointment being made at once.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman did not hear my answer. I said that the government had the names under consideration, but they have not finally decided on the appointment.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

FISHERIES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (223) An Act to amend the Fisheries Act.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the suspension of the rule. He said: The object of this Bill is to authorize the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to charge $50 for a license for those vessels that are frequenting Hudson bay. That is the whole object of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Why do they charge $50 for a license?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—One reason is that it costs the country something to watch these whalers. We have to send vessels up there to look after them. They very often smuggle in goods and carry on trade with the Indians when they have no right to do so.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—How many vessels go in annually?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—A very considerable number. Another object is that it asserts our sovereignty. On some occasions the whalers disputed the right of the government to collect anything from them or to make them account to the Customs Department for anything they might bring in to sell to the natives.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—United States vessels have been invading that territory for the last half century. Fifty dollars is a very small sum to impose upon foreign vessels, but I see this advantage in it: By charging fifty dollars for a license it establishes the fact that these are inland waters belong exclusively to Canada. After that point is once established the government of this country will be in a better position to regulate these fisheries. The whalers have been there I suppose for nearly a century and we have never really asserted our ownership. The imposition of this $50 fee will accomplish that object.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—May I ask my hon. friend what means the government has of asserting its authority in Hudson's bay in the event of their being any refusal on the part of these American vessels to comply with the demands of the government as to taking out a license?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—One or perhaps both of the vessels going up this year will have an officer of the customs on board. As my hon. friend knows the mounted police are not very far distant.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—You are not sending up a gunboat I suppose?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it is not necessary to do that.

I move the suspension of Rule 41.

The motion was agreed to.

The Bill was read the second time.

UNITED EMPIRE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I desire to move that the resolution which was passed today in reference to the United Empire Life Insurance Company Bill be rescinded. I find that this is the last Bill coming up from the House of Commons to go before the Banking and Commerce Committee. That committee is called for to-morrow morning, and, if there is no objection, I will move that the existing resolution be rescinded and that rule 41 be suspended.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

It being six o'clock the Speaker left the chair.

After Recess.

CONSTITUTION OF THE SENATE.

DEBATE RESUMED.

The order of the day being called :

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of the Hon. Mr. David : That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General ; praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before the Senate, copies of all petitions, resolutions or documents concerning the abolition or reorganization of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not suppose that any thing that I have to say will shed any additional light on this subject, which has already been so well discussed. I think that the House is under a very considerable debt to the hon. gentleman from Mille Isles (Hon. Mr. David) for having introduced this subject. His own address was a very interesting one and calculated to lift our minds above our every-day work ; and several of the addresses which followed shared in these qualities. As for myself I am not the least bit of an orator, and shall only try to give expression in a more or less conversational way to certain ideas which have occurred to me with respect to the matter under discussion. I think that up to last Wednesday—this day week—there seemed to be no difference of opinion amongst the members of this House as to the desirability of a second Chamber in the Parliament of Canada. We seemed to be quite unanimous upon that subject ; but the hon. gentleman from St. John (Hon. Mr. Ellis) who addressed the House on that day, and whose speech was in a great many ways a very admirable one, took the ground that the bicameral system as it is called, is inconsistent with responsible government. He prophesied that in the end there would be in this parliament —and I suppose he meant his prophesy to extend to other parliaments in the English speaking world—only one Chamber and that the popular House. His view was that it should be government by the people, as well as for the people. Apparently he took the ground that government by two Houses was not government by the people, as he spoke of this bicameral system as being inconsistent with responsible government. Now I respectfully submit that the hon. gentleman's interpretation of responsible government is somewhat inaccurate. The essential of the responsible government for which Howe and his colleagues fought in Nova Scotia, and for which his contemporaries and friends fought in New Brunswick and old Canada, which they ultimately won, and under which British North America has been governed for nearly 60 years, is not what the hon. gentleman seemed to think. The essential of the responsible government which our ancestors fought for and won is—not that there shall be only one House and that the popular House,—but that the administration of the day, carrying on the public business of the province or of the Dominion, as the case may be, shall be supported by a majority of the representatives of the people elected to serve in the popular House. It has never been held that an administration must have the confidence of the Upper House. In England no Liberal government for over one hundred years has had the confidence of the majority of the House of Peers ; and in Canada from the time of the union in 1867 until, I think the year 1901, no Liberal government had the support of a majority of the members of the Senate ; but in both countries during all those years there was responsible government, and the administration was carried on in accordance with the wishes of the people as expressed by their elected representatives, so I think the hon. gentleman from St. John must attach some different meaning to the expression 'responsible government' from the meaning which history assigns to it. It is clear, from the fact that England has, on the whole, been pretty well governed for the last one hundred years, and that Canada taking it altogether, although perhaps it was not governed just so well during the eighteen years prior to 1896 as it was for four years prior and has been for ten years since, comparing Canada with countries at large throughout the world, has been pretty well governed. It is true that when the Upper House is not in harmony with the Lower House, measures passed by the Lower House are more carefully scrutinized and are more likely to be amended or rejected than when the majority of the Upper House are in harmony with the government of the day. But there is this to be said; that where the Upper House is not elected, where the Upper House is a nominative body, it never sets itself up against the deliberate will of the people. A measure may be postponed for a session, and may possibly be postponed until an election has taken place, but always the nominative Upper House gives way to the wishes of the people; and after all it does not seem to me that it is a very unfortunate circumstance that there should be time given for second thought occasionally. Even under this system, with a majority of the Upper House differing from the majority in the Lower House, the people are governed by their own administration ; the administration of public affairs is in the hands of the people through their representatives, and the legislation, which is a different thing altogether, is in accordance ultimately with their sound, deliberate conclusions, and I do not think it is desirable that in every case legislation should follow the popular sentiment of the moment. The hon. gentleman from St. John, as I indicated, seems to favour a parliament of a single House. If the popular House were a perfect legislative machine there would be much in his contention. The question is whether it is or not ? I do not wish to reflect on that House, but I do not think that it is. I venture to say it is not quite perfect. I shall quote a few observations from Castell Hopkins, 'Canadian Enclycopaedia of the country,' fifth volume, page 539. I just quote some passages to show what I thought a perfect House ought to be. The portion I refer to reads as follows :—

To judge correctly as to what parliament should be we must look at the work which it has to do. What are the duties of parliament? Stated in a few words, they are to adopt measures and pass laws for the welfare and good government of the people of the country. The due performance of these duties is undoubtedly the highest earthly work of man, a work calling for the exercise in a great degree of the noblest human qualities. In a perfect parliament we should find in their highest development the following qualities : patriotism, wisdom, stability, justice, independence, energy, patience, industry and a sense of responsibility to the people. Are all these qualities likely to be found in a single house ? If men were perfect, if Adam had never sinned, it might be so, but if human nature were faultless government would be unnecessary, or at most nothing further would be required than one benevolent ruler of a patriarchial type. Under the present dispensation it is in the last degree improbable that any body of men having all these qualities shall be found. Is the House of Commons such a body ? The warmest admirer of that body will not venture to say yes. Experience has shown that a popular House—that is one chosen by an electorate embracing the bulk of the adult male population, is likely to be influenced by panic, popular delusion, party prejudices and corruption, to mistake temporary advantage for permanent good to be fickle and unstable, to be feeble in resisting vicious measures, to be unjust to the opponents of the majority and to favour their partisans, to follow the party leader even when he is believed to be in the wrong, to be impatient of detail, and to forget the public in the party. The popular branch of the legislature being imperfect—wanting in some of the qualities which I have named as being essential to good law makers—its measures will necessarily partake of the same character and be defective and will therefore need to be submitted to the scrutiny of a second body, by whom, if deemed unwise or mischievous they may be hindered from going into operation, or if imperfect may be amended. Few would be prepared to entrust this delicate and most important duty to any individual. This is one of the cases in which most people believe that there is safety in a multitude of counsellors, and consequently a second independent House is needed to check and revise the measures of the Commons. If the second House does not possess the legislative qualifications in a greater degree than the first, still its independent consideration and revision of measures will be most beneficial in themselves, and will also cause the administration of the day and the members of the lower branch to be more careful as to the character and details of the legislation which they introduce and adopt. Besides all this it is much more difficult to corrupt or deceive or intimidate two separate and independent bodies of men than a single one, and in this way a second House is a most valuable security against pernicious legislation. If we now go back and take up the list of qualities which I have said the law-making power should have and try to see in what proportions they are severally possessed by the two Houses of parliament, we shall find that the upper is not a mere reflex of the lower, but that, if in some respects it is less qualified, in others it is better qualified, to share in the task of making laws.

I apologize for the length of that quotation, which would not have been necessary if it had not been for the ground taken by the hon. member for St. John. I venture to think that the hon. gentleman is mistaken, and that there is really no question that a second House in a parliament such as ours is desirable. They have one in England, they have one in the United States, they have one in every state of the union, and although at the time of the adoption of the constitution, or at any rate at the time of the declaration of independence there were states in which they had no upper House, the upper House has been introduced since in each of those states, and there is not the slightest indication of any disposition on the part of the people of the United States to abandon the upper House in the country at large or in any individual state. The same thing is true all over Europe. In every civilized country there is a second House, and there is no proposal, as far as I am aware, to abandon the second House. In Norway, as was pointed out by the hon. member for St. John, they constitute their second House in an unusual way, by a sort of co-operation among the members of the lower House; and I understood the hon. member to intimate that that was rather his view as to the way in which we should get our second House, if we are to have one. The quotation I have made will indicate what I think the duties and functions of an upper House in a constitution such as ours should be, but perhaps the House will allow me to quote again, because it is easier to take what has been said before than to prepare something new. I take the Senate debates for 1890, and I may say that during that session there was a very thorough discussion of practically the same question we are considering now. It was originated by the hon. gentleman from Shediac (Hon. Mr. Poirier), who was then a comparatively young member of the House; and one of the most important speeches made during that discussion was by the late Sir John Abbott, a speech which I would commend to the attention of any hon. gentleman who wishes to know the impression made by the Senate upon a gentleman of very marked ability, and great experience in public business. I just wish to give my own idea of what the duties of the second Chamber in a constitution such as ours are. I quote from page 536 of the Senate 'Hansard' for 1890:

> Now the second chamber under a system such as ours and that of the British parliament should not be equal in power to the lower House. That is not what we want. We do not want a second House of Commons, we do not want a body that is capable, as is the United States Senate, of dealing with every kind of subject. We must recognize the fact that the ultimate seat of power is in the House of Commons; and we want a second chamber which will supplement that House and make up for its defects. Having laid down that proposition, I think rather an elementary proposition, I shall venture to say what I think an ideal Senate should be. It should be a body governed by a calm and judicial spirit. It should be a body made up as far as possible of upright and independent men; and it should be a patient body—a body that will take time to deal with the legislative and other business that comes before it; and of course it should be an intelligent body. Further, it should be—and that is implied in saying that it should be a calm and judicial body—a body that would not be influenced by the passions of the hour. These passions arise in every country, and sweep over the face of the land, and are very intense as a rule for a short time; and their length of life is generally short in proportion as they are intense. The upper House should not be a body that would be liable to be influenced by such passions. It should be a body that should look before and after, that would not be influenced by the passions of the hour, but would look upon every question in a calm and judicial way. The principal duty of the body would not be to originate legislation, although it should do that to a certain extent; but the principal use of the upper House under the British system is to check and revise the work of the popular body. That body is likely to do things hastily, to pass measures under the influence of those ebullitions of popular passion that I have spoken about; and where a measure is passed under the influence of that spirit and the upper House thinks it is not likely to promote the welfare of the state, it is the duty of the upper House to resist the popular passion of the hour. Of course if after the people have had time to carefully consider a question they still remain of the same mind, then as a rule it has been the practice, at any rate under the British system, that the upper House gives way. Even when the legislation of the lower House is not such as to be objectionable on the whole, it may be imperfect—it may be legislation that has passed through its various stages hurriedly. Then it is the duty of the upper House to revise that work and to atone for the want of care and study devoted to it in the other Chamber. The two principal functions of the upper House under the British system are to check and prevent injudicious legislation and to revise legislation that is imperfect.
> Hon. Mr. ABBOTT—Hear, hear.
> Hon. Mr. POWER—That is what the House ought to be in itself. Then in addition to that, an ideal House ought to be a House whose work would be understood and appreciated by the people, and a House that would be respected by the people and in whose proceedings the people would take almost as deep check and prevent injurious legislation and to revise legislation that is imperfect.

Without going into detail, I think we may say that we have done our work fairly well. I do not think it can be charged that on the whole what is called the party spirit has been unduly manifested in the Senate. While the Mackenzie administration were in power, on an average there was only one government Bill rejected each session by the Senate.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN. That has nothing to do with it. It depends entirely on the excellence of the Bill. It does not matter what number of Bills were rejected.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am simply pointing out that there has not been much party spirit shown. If my hon. friend wishes to prove that there has been, I shall, of course, defer to him, but in my opinion there has not. During the years between 1878 and 1896 the majorities in the Senate and House of Commons belonged to the same political party. Even during that time a certain number of government Bills were rejected. Between 1896 and 1901 a certain number of government Bills were also rejected, but not a large number, everything considered; and, as to most of these cases, I think, making allowance for the natural tendency of any member of either House to look at things from the point of view of his own party, perhaps there were only one or two cases where I should be disposed to find serious fault with the action of the majority. There was one measure introduced here which contained a provision for the retirement of county judges when they attained the age of 75 years, that is that a county judge should cease to fill his office, ipso facto, on his attaining the age of 75 years. That measure was killed in the Senate. I think the Senate made a mistake. That was in 1898; in 1898 or 1899 there was a measure before the House providing for the redistribution of the electoral districts of Canada, to be made by a judicial tribunal. That measure also failed to pass this House. I thought at the time, and I still think that the action of the Senate in that case was a mistaken action. I know there were grounds given for what was done, but my own impression is that substantially the action taken was unwise. But, taking it altogether, under either government, the Senate has not really done anything in the way of obstructing the popular will which deserves to be severely condemned. I do not propose to discuss our record or proclaim how good we are, that has been done already, very much better than I could do it; but the question occurs as to possible changes in the method of appointing the senators, or the method of constituting the Senate. There are one or two observations which I should like to make with respect to that feature of the subject; so that we may judge better of the schemes which are set before us. It is almost essential that members of the Upper House should be independent; that is really at the present day the most important qualification of an upper House. I mean that they should not look to the people for re-election, if they are elected, and that they should not on the other hand look to the government for re-appointment if they are appointed. I do not care to rest on my own humble opinion with respect to that matter, but on the subject of re-appointments I shall quote language used by a very distinguished man, the Hon. George Brown. At page 437 of this volume of Hopkins (page 89 of the confederation debates) he says:

> But it has been said that although you may not give the power to the executive to increase the numbers of the upper House in the event of a dead-lock, you might limit the term for which the members are appointed. I was myself in favour of that proposition. I thought it would be well to provide for a more frequent change in the composition of the upper House and lessen the danger of the chamber being largely composed of gentlemen whose advanced years might forbid the punctual and vigorous discharge of their public duties. Still, the objection made to this was very strong. It was said 'Suppose you appoint them for nine years, they would be anticipating its expiry and anxiously looking to the administration of the day for reappointment; and the consequence would be that a third of the members would be under the influence of the executive.' The desire was to render the upper House a thoroughly independent body—one that would be in the best position to canvass dispassionately the measures of this House, and stand up for the public interests in opposition to hasty or partisan legislation. It was contended that there is no fear of a dead-lock. We were reminded how the system of appointing for life had worked in past years since responsible government was introduced; we were told that the complaint was not then, that the upper chamber had been too obstructive a body—not that it had sought to restrain the popular will, but that it had too faithfully reflected the popular will.

That is what Mr. Brown said, and he knew what he was talking about, with respect to a nominated Senate. In my humble opinion, the effect on the House of looking forward to re-election would be quite as injurious as that of looking forward to re-nomination by the administration of the day. If senators had to look forward to being elected by the people instead of following the dictates of their own honest judgment, they would try to meet the supposed wishes of the electorate—I say supposed wishes, because very often the people are wiser and more just than the people who are looking for their suffrages give them credit for being. This weakness, this desire to try and meet the supposed wishes of the electorate, is one of the worst features of public life to-day. Just two or three days ago a friend of mine—we were not discussing this question—gave me a quotation from one of the leaders in the French revolution which I think describes very well the attitude of a great many popular leaders of the present day. I have no doubt my hon. friend from Mille Isle can tell which of the revolutionary leaders it was, but his saying was: 'I am their leader, I must follow them.'

That is the attitude of the leader of the the present day. The popular leader is a man who, as they say in the United States, has his ear to the ground listening to find out what the substratum, so to speak, of public opinion is, not the man who comes down boldly and sets before the people the view he honestly thinks to be best; and my own view is that if we could go back to the practice of former years when people were supposed to be governed and led and were not supposed to be followed, that we should be in a better position. At the present day particularly, this quality of independence is really an important and almost essential quality in an upper house, and if the members of this House are to be nominated only for a certain term, or if they are to be elected only for a certain term, that independence is largely sacrificed; consequently I do not think that senators should be elected for terms or nominated for terms. I have said a good deal on the general question, and now there comes the problem: supposing the Senate is not to be nominated for a term, nor to be elected for a term, how is it to be constituted? Like most others I have occasionally thought of some modification in the constitution of the Senate, and in the mode of appointing senators. I had recognized the difficulty of suggesting any plan which would be better than the present one, but still, I had certain views of my own on the subject, views which I entertained when this discussion began; but I am free to confess that certain speeches which have been made during this debate have rather tended to convince me that any change would be a change for the worse. I may refer particularly to the speeches of the hon. gentleman from Smith's Falls (Hon. Mr. Frost), the hon. gentleman from Rideau (Hon. Mr. Edwards) the hon. gentleman from Sackville (Hon. Mr. Wood) and the hon. gentleman from Cobourg (Hon. Mr. Kerr). I am disposed to think that these hon. gentlemen are right, and that we are pretty nearly perfect; but the misfortune is that while we may be nearly perfect, the deluded public outside do not realize the fact. And why is that? There is a feeling that we are no good. That is one of the public sentiments. And then we are found fault with for various reasons. Two things are particularly found fault with. One is that we adjourn very often, and the other is that we do not do very much beyond that. We know that we have merits, and we know that the charges against us are not well founded. Take the question of adjournments; as a matter of fact it is not this House which is responsible for the long adjournments of the Senate. It is the other House. And why? The reason that we have long adjournments is that the sessions of parliament in Canada are in recent years unduly long, and why are they so? They are unduly long because there is a great deal too much talk in one end of the building. I am not going to say now in which end, only I say it is not this end. To show what a change has taken place in this respect during the last few years, I shall call attention to some statistics with respect of the length of the sessions, beginning with 1874. I take the first period from 1874 to 1878, and I do not go back of 1874. The details are as follows:

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Were those sitting days ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—No, the whole length of the session.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Exclusive of Saturdays and Sundays ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—No the whole time.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Saturdays and Sundays and all ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes. The session of 1874 commenced on the 26th of March and ended on the 26th May; the session of 1878 commenced on the 7th February and ended on the 10th May. I just wish to make one observation with respect to that House. At that time, the opposition in the House of Commons was led by the late Hon. Sir J. A. Macdonald. He was I think then recognized and is to-day recognized, as having been an exceedingly judicious and skilful party leader.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—What year does the hon. gentleman refer to?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I refer to all those years; I say he was that always. There is the fact that he was leading the opposition during that parliament; and just look at the sessions. During the next House, from 1879 to 1882, the average length of the session was ninety-three and one-half days. During the third House, from 1883 to 1886, the average length of the session was 116¾ days. During that House there were one or two sessions which were unduly prolonged. The session of 1885 was a session in which the Franchise Bill was discussed, and also the session during which the rebellion in the Northwest took place. In the next House, from 1887 to 1891, the average length of the session was 92½ days. From 1891 to 1896 the average length of the session was 115 days. From 1896 to 1900, the next House, the average length of the session was 117 4-5 days. During the last House, from 1901 to 1904, the average length of the session was 136¾ days. So that you see that during the last House the average length of the session was about twice what it was during the 1874 to 1878 House. Inasmuch as there was not a very great deal more public business transacted—I mean business that required discussion—in the last House than in the House of 1874 to 1878, it will be seen that this House was naturally driven to frequent adjournments.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—In what years were we driven to adjournments ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not wish to weary the House by taking up every year in detail.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Does the hon. gentleman know that last year this House adjourned sixty-one days? If he can reconcile that with the days of sittings I shall be obliged.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I am not giving the days of sittings, but the number of days in the session. For instance, parliament met in the second session of 1896 on the 19th August and rose on the 5th October. I count every day between those days; I am not taking the number of days they actually sat, but the length of the session, which I think is a reasonable thing to do. It is clear that as regards adjournments the Senate is not altogether responsible. I have another statement here which is also somewhat interesting. I do not know that statistics are interesting as a rule, but I take the 'Hansard,' in which are recorded the debates of another place, and I find in 1875 the 'Hansard' of that place is included in one small volume of 1,095 pages of comparatively large type. The record year by year is as follows :—

* 1st Session. † 2nd Session.

In 1903 there were six volumes of 'Hansard,' published in a smaller type, containing altogether 14,862 columns. Last year 'Hansard' contained, although it was the first session after the election, 8,024 columns, making up four volumes. I think it is perfectly clear that this House is not responsible for the adjournments. I wish to point out another circumstance in connection with the undue length of our sessions, although it is somewhat aside from the matter immediately under discussion. The public or this country has almost altogether lost interest in parliamentary proceedings. Twenty-five years ago the public read the parliamentary reports in the newspapers with a great deal of interest, and they watched the public business as it went through parliament. That is not the case to-day. Not very long ago I met an intelligent business man who did not know whether parliament was sitting or not.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—That is because the country is more prosperous.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not think so. I think that public interest in the proceedings of parliament had fallen off, even before 1896 when the increased prosperity set in. Now this is the position with regard to the question of adjournments; when we have no business to do we adjourn; in another place they talk. I think in that way we serve the country better than the other people.

There is a second reason why our good qualities are not recognized. The public know very little about our work. In the first place, the newspapers do not report our proceedings as fully as they report the proceedings of the other Chamber. That is a perfectly natural thing. With respect to the summaries of our debates, I think that those which have appeared in the newspapers this session are more satisfactory than they have been in the past. I do not recall myself any year when we have seen as much of our proceedings and as satisfactory reports in the public press as during the present session. Then, our Hansard is hardly ever read, which, I think, is to be regretted. I do not think it is because I have an unduly high opinion of the members of the Senate, but I remember a good many years ago the debates of this House were published in one of the city newspapers—I think it was the 'Free Press'—and coming under the eyes of the public in the columns of that newspaper they were read a great deal, and there were, from various gentlemen who read the reports of our debates in the 'Free Press,' expressions of admiration and astonishment, at the amount of good sense that was talked in the Senate. Inasmuch as our official debates are not read, people have not nowadays the opportunity of finding out how wise we are. This is an important matter, and it is a defect that can be easily cured. I have already adverted to it, but I take the liberty of introducing the subject again. One of the ways of enabling the public to know what we are doing is to arrange for consolidating the reports of the two Houses. In England that is the case; in the English Hansard you get the Debates of the House of Lords and the Debates of the House of Commons in the same issue of Hansard. The same is the case in Washington; in the Congressional Record you get the reports of the speeches made in the Senate and those made in the House of Representatives. I think it would very much improve our standing in the public estimation if we were to consolidate the reporting of the two Houses. Then the public who read the Commons Hansard would get what we said also.

I said that I had some ideas as to what change might be desirable in order to meet the popular view. There is a popular feeling first that we are not a sufficiently popular body, and there is a great deal of ignorance as to what our work is, so that a great many members of this House think that even though we are doing our work fairly well and it is questionable whether any very substantial improvement might be made in the body, still it might be desirable to make a change with a view of meeting the popular wish and making us a body of more consequence in the popular eye, and the question is what form the change should take. The hon. gentleman from Shediac (Hon. Mr. Poirier) suggested that we should adopt the system which they have in the United States, and that the members of the Senate should be elected by the provincial legislatures. In the discussion which I have refered to that took place in the session of 1890, that matter was considered at considerable length. I do not propose to go over what was said. I would refer hon. gentlemen to that discussion. There is just this fact which hon. gentlemen do not consider: our parliamentary system is altogether different from that of the United States. Practically the members of this House are now appointed by the Premier of the Dominion. If you gave the appointment to the local legislatures, while nominally the appointment would be made by the legislatures, substantially the appointments would be made by the provincial premiers; and my view is that to have the members of the Senate appointed by the provincial premiers would be no improvement upon appointment by the Dominion premier. On the contrary, I do not think we should get a higher class of men, and I do not believe that it would be as appropriate and suitable as the present system. In addition to the objections that were made in 1890—there is this serious objection to that practice: In the United States to-day the selection of senators is looked upon in some states as being the chief business of the legislatures, and the members of the legislatures are selected with a view of voting for some particular candidate for the Senate instead of being selected with a view to their qualifications as members of the legislatures. That is a very objectionable condition of things. If we adopted that system here, the provincial business would suffer and at the same time, as I said just now, the level of the Senate personnel would not be raised. Attention has already been called to the fact that in the United States very frequently the element of purchase enters into the appointment of senators. There is no doubt that in certain cases the legislature has been bought up. I do not mean to say that would be the case here; still there might be a temptation to expand in that direction. Let us suppose that we had had that system in operation between 1867 and 1896. During nearly all that time the province of Ontario, for local purposes, was Liberal, and during almost all the years of Sir John Macdonald's administration you would have had the province of Ontario electing Liberal senators. We can understand that it would have created a very unsatisfactory condition of things, looked at from the point of view of the administration of the day, and it does seem to me that the complexion of the provincial legislature should not govern the selection of senators; that we should follow Dominion lines rather than local lines. I wish to say a few words as to certain plans which have been proposed during this discussion.

The right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce advocated proportional representation. I quite concur with the right hon. gentleman in thinking that that is an admirable system. It is to be regretted that it does not prevail much more extensively than it does ; and if we had such a system in operation in the case of elections to the House of Commons, I for one should be quite prepared to support it for the Senate, but inasmuch as the system of proportional representation is not in operation anywhere in Canada, I do not feel myself that I should be prepared to advocate its being adopted for the Senate. The right hon. gentleman's scheme, as I understood it, was to divide each province into districts which would be represented by three Senators. Well how are you going to get the three vacancies at the same time ? If we were starting de novo and were going to frame a scheme for the formation of a Senate, I think the suggestion of the right hon. gentleman would be an admirable one. The hon. member from Mille Isles suggests that we might all resign so as to give room for the new scheme to work, but there would be some difficulty in bringing about result. The scheme of the right hon. gentleman would involve considerable dislocation of the present adjustment. Then there was the plan advocated by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield that the leader of the Opposition should recommend a portion of the appointments to the Senate, to bear the same relation to those made by the Premier, as the number of the opposition members of the House of Commons bore to the Government members. There is a good deal to be said in favour of that scheme, but after all the position of the leader of the opposition is one which is not recognized at all in the British parliamentary system, and as an hon. friend suggests, carries no responsibility with it. It has been recognized in this country in the other House, but I think it would be very difficult to induce the present parliament, or in fact any other parliament in this country, to agree that any appointments to the Senate should be made by the leader of the opposition. I do not know any way in which you could induce the House of Commons to agree to it, or the Senate either for that matter.

Now, if we had to change, we might look at the experience of the old province of Canada before the union. Canada was divided into forty-eight legislative council divisions. There were twenty-four in Quebec and twenty-four in Ontario, and each of these divisions counted about three of the electoral divisions for the lower House—nearly three. The proportion was twenty-four to sixty-five, and the councillors were elected for eight years instead of four, as were the members of the lower House ; and the gentlemen who were elected to the upper House under that system were a very superior class of men. I do not say they were superior to those whom we have now, but they were a very superior class of men. I do not wish to go over the names, but within my own experience we had a number of very able men in this House who had been elected to the council before the union, and who were men of marked ability and very high character ; and I may say that some years ago, when discussing this question, I remember that the Hon. Edward Blake took the view that on the whole the system which had been in operation in old Canada was probably the best system, and I notice that in the discussion of 1890, to which I referred before, my hon. friend the Secretary of State took that view. Now to that view there are the objections that I mentioned some time ago. There are the objections which you find discussed at the time of confederation and you will find them in the discussions which took place in 1890.

With these other objections there is the objection which I took a little while ago to any system which would make the members of this House dependent upon any other body. The men elected for eight years would be to all intents aud purposes just about as subservient to the supposed wishes of the people as the House of Commons, and this House would not fulfil its proper function if its members were not independent. My own scheme, I presume, will not meet with the approval of very many hon. gentlemen. My scheme would be to divide the country up, as old Canada was divided up, into senatorial districts. Provision might be made, if we thought well of it, for reducing the number of senators. That is another point as to which I quite concur with the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, that some steps should be taken to prevent the Senate from going beyond about eighty. The scheme would be to divide the country up in that way into senatorial districts. Attach one sitting member of the Senate to each of those senatorial districts, and then provide that henceforth whenever a vacancy occurred in a senatorial district that vacancy was to be filled by election by the people. The senators would be elected just as the old legislative councillors were in the days immediately preceding confederation, elected by the same electors, but for much larger districts than members of the House of Commons, and such senators should be elected for life. Now, let us see what the effect of that would be. In the first place, it would involve no addition to the number of senators. It would involve no dislocation of existing arrangements; it would satisfy the desire of the people for representation in the upper House, and as the elections would be for life, it would give the members of this House the desirable independence, and it would meet the objections urged by Mr. Brown and also by Sir Alexander Campbell and others against the senator, who was looking forward to re-election or re-appointment. It would not involve any additional general election, and it would, I humbly submit, guarantee that we would have a pretty good class of men in the Senate. I do not say they would be any better than those we have now, but I think it would be a guarantee that we would not have an inferior class of men. A gentleman to be elected by a constituency embracing say three of the Commons constituencies would require to be a man of marked ability and considerable standing. This plan would not be open to the objection taken to the old plan, that elderly men would not care about running any more elections. There would be simply one election to run, and then the fight would be over. I contend that whereas we to-day are fairly independent, but somewhat timid in our independence, and not very popular, under this system which I suggest, when it once came into operation, we would be quite independent and very popular.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Halifax)—I do not intend to occupy the time of the Senate, because I have not prepared a speech on this subject. Many different reforms have been advocated by different speakers. The only two who have not advocated reform, are the hon. gentleman from Kingston (Hon. Mr. Sullivan) and the hon. gentleman from Cobourg (Hon. Mr. Kerr). I admire these two gentlemen for their great common sense, far above those who have been advocating so many different theories. The hon. gentleman from St. John (Hon. Mr. Ellis) would have only one Chamber. I think the day is passed in the Dominion of Canada when that theory will find a reception. I know that in the province of Nova Scotia, with whose legislature I am well acquainted, nothing of the kind would be dreamed of, and I think that even the large body which meets in Toronto would be the better of a second Chamber. I am not so sure but that in the new provinces which have been organized lately in the west the day will come when a second Chamber would be an improvement to their system also. The hon. gentleman from St. John disqualified me for being elected, because he limited the age; but if the Senate were to be made an elective body, unless the age limit would disqualify me, I would have as good a chance of coming back from Cape Breton as any of the other representatives from that island or from Nova Scotia. I am opposed to an elective Senate. Suppose the legislatures of Nova Scotia would have the power of electing the members coming to the Senate from that province; as that body is constitued at present they would all be supporters of the government. The same would be the case in Quebec and in the other provinces who sent representatives to the other House supporting the present government. Do you think that that reform would place the Senate in a better condition than it is at present? I think you would find that there would be confusion. There is no confusion now because we are a harmonious body of men, courteous in our debates, and we like to listen to good speeches no matter from what side of the House they may come. I have the highest respect for the hon. leader of the opposition in this House. He speaks well ; he speaks courteously ; he uses good language, and he has the good sense never to make a long speech. Some of the theories that were advocated by the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce did not meet with my approval. He generally settles his arguments on a pretty solid foundation, but in this instance he has wandered away and has advocated theories which would not, I think, be very beneficial if carried into effect. He was followed by the hon. gentleman from Marshfield (Hon. Mr. Ferguson). Pehaps the greatest fault of that hon. gentleman is that he makes long speeches. They are very exhaustive—he is an industrious man, and when he speaks on any ordinary subject he leaves little for any body else to say. I think it is a benefit for us that he is absent now, because the end of the session will be hastened on that account; my idea is that you had better leave the Senate as it is, that is the advice of an old man. The hon. gentleman from Cobourg has given us a little display of his classical knowledge. We always admire his speeches, and he has given us a little of his knowledge of scripture in the speech which he has made. While I would not attempt to follow him in the classics, when it comes to scripture I find myself just as much at home as he is, and there is one passage of scripture which I think applies very forcibly to the present question : 'Remove not the ancient landmarks which thy fathers set.'

The fathers of confederation were wise men, men of great experience, men used to political life, who knew the necessity for a constitution for this country and they formed a scheme that has worked well to the present day. I did not admire my hon. friend from Cobourg (Hon. Mr. Kerr) in his high praise of the House of Lords. I think the House of Lords is not as much in sympathy with the electors of Great Britain as the Canadian Senate is with the electors of this Dominion. Suppose that there should be five vacancies in the province of Quebec to-morrow, those vacancies would be filled with men perhaps that would have the accord if not the request of the local government of the province of Quebec. The local government of Quebec is in close connection with the people, so that senators that would be appointed would be in that respect much closer to the people than the House of Lords is at present. I might be permitted here to quote from a speech once delivered by Mr. Chamberlain speaking of the House of Lords. The Westminster 'Gazette' quotes from a Birmingham speech delivered some time ago by Chamberlain :

Speaking of the House of Lords, he said :

> It has never contributed one iota towards popular liberties or popular freedom. It has protected every abuse and shattered every privilege. It has denied justice and delayed every reform. It is irresponsible without independence, obstinate without courage, arbitrary without judgment and arrogant without knowledge.

That was Chamberlain's view of the House of Lords. He has a different idea now ; he wants to praise the House of Lords because he thinks they would be the means of defeating the Education Bill. The hon. member from St. John prepared a long, valuable and learned address on this subject and advanced some theories that I thought were rather inconsistent. He would give Prince Edward Island four members in the Senate and would only give his own province six and Nova Scotia six. I doubt that he is speaking the voice of the people of New Brunswick. I know he would not be speaking the voice of the people of Nova Scotia if he were going to reduce the number of members in the Senate. There is very little, as the hon. senator from Smith's Falls said, in the constitution of the United States that we should like to follow or imitate. We have started on a good solid foundation, and we are progressing very favourably. Although an old man, I am a young member of the Senate, but I must confess that I admire the kind sentiment and feeling that prevails in the Senate. There is nothing like extreme partisanship in any shape or form. There is a desire on both sides to please, and I think that every subject that comes up to this House will receive fair consideration from both parties. I am not going to advocate any reform. I have a little more sense than to attempt anything of that kind ; but if in the kindness of their hearts, and I know that the Secretary of State is one of the kindest men we have in the Senate or out of it—the government would select two or three or more prominent members who have been known and trained to political life, of moderate views, even of the Conservative party, and appoint them to this House, I think it would show wisdom on the part of the government. However, there is a difficulty there ; the people outside would not take hold of that view, because there would be persons wanting to come into this Senate who would be supposed to have a better right to the appointment than members of the opposition. However, I think something of that kind would be an improvement, and it would encourage our friends who are in mild opposition to the government at present. My advice, the advice of an old man and an old politican also, is to let the Senate alone, and this kind sentiment that prevails in the Senate is growing stronger and better every day, and the result will be that every message that comes down to this House will receive as much and as careful attention as possible from both parties. For instance, yesterday, I voted with my hon. friend from Halifax and against the leader of the government in this House on some mild reform that was advocated, but if it would come to the abolition or the repeal or the vetoing of any government measure, I would not be found going that far. As a rule, when a government measure comes down from the other House to the Senate—I am not speaking of one government more than of another—a government supported by the representatives of the people, as a rule it is a pretty high handed act to repeal that measure in the Senate, and I do not think that I will live to see such a thing done again. I admired the speeches of the hon. senator from Kingston and the hon. senator from Cobourg, and I think they have shown perhaps more penetration and more wisdom than most of the other theoretical speakers who suggested this reform and that reform. I am not so sure that I would approve of the reform suggested by my hon. friend from Halifax, because I do not think we should go back to the old days. The idea in this age is to go forward, and if there is any change at all it should be more in a progressive way than to go back to ancient history. As I have already said, leave the Senate alone, and in the present spirit of the representatives of both parties in this House, the legislation that is introduced here and that will come down from the other House will receive the best and most careful attention.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.) moved that the debate be adjourned until to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to.

LOAN COMPANIES BILL.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (40) An Act respecting certain loan companies.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I beg to move the suspension of the rules in order to permit of the second reading to-night.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The title of the Bill is 'An Act respecting certain loan companies.' Will the hon. gentleman inform us what the character of the Bill is ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I was going to give that explanation at the second reading.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL.—Before consenting to the suspension of the rules, I want to know the character of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—This Bill has a limited application. It is intended to apply to companies, as it expressely states on the face of the Bill, incorporated as loan companies under the Act of 1886, chapter 119 of the Revised Statutes. It will be within the memory of the hon. gentleman that that was an Act respecting joint stock companies and contained clauses that related exclusively to loan companies that were incorporated by letters patent. The companies to which this Bill apply are companies that were incorporated under that Act. In 1899 a new Act was passed relating to loan companies, and that Act repealed the sections which I have just referred to in the Act of 1886, except as applying to companies then in existence. Under the Act of 1899, more extended powers of investment were granted to companies incorporated under that Act, and in 1903 a Bill was introduced, of which this is a copy. It passed this House and the House of Commons as Bill No. 24.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What is the number in the statutes ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—It is not in the statutes. By some mistake the Bill was mislaid and never received the Royal Assent, simply because it had gone astray. It was not discovered until some months afterwards that the Bill had not received the Royal Assent, and so the matter passed on until last year. It was intended to introduce it, but for some reason it was not introduced, but has been introduced this year. The Bill therefore now is word for word and letter for letter that of the Bill that was passed that year by both Houses, and it is intended to apply only to those companies that were incorporated under the general Act of 1886, chapter 119, because all the others which had been incorporated since 1899 are governed by the provisions of the Act of 1899. This gives them the same powers as the Act of 1899 and is the same Bill, as I have said, which passed here in 1903. Under these circumstances, I thought I might ask the indulgence of the House to suspend the rules and give this Bill the second reading now in order that it may be referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce to be dealt with tomorrow.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The companies to which the hon. gentleman refers, were they incorporated by Act of parliament ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—They were incorporated under the general Act.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—How is it that the government has not assumed responsibility for this legislation? The general Act under which loan companies are incorporated is, of course, a government measure. It is practically administered by the Finance Department and it seems to me a peculiarity that a government measure of this kind should be introduced at the instance of private companies.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Of course it affects a limited number of companies, two or three companies who are at the disadvantage of not having the same field of investment given by the general Act. It is introduced at their instance.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If there was this inequality to which my hon. friend referred and this was pointed out to the government, would the government not assume responsibility of placing them on the same footing?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—This course is following exactly the line taken in 1903. I might also add that this Bill has been approved by the Finance Minister, because I happened to be present in the committee of the House of Commons when the Bill was dealt with, although I had nothing whatever to do with the Bill at the time. I heard the explanation which was given, and the assent given by the Finance Minister to the Bill; and the Bill being passed as it passed the committee of the House of Commons, I am in a position to say that the government, through the Finance Minister, have approved of the measure.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What has the hon. Secretary of State to say, as representing the government, to a measure of this kind being brought down to amend a general Act without the government assuming the responsibility of it?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—My attention has not been called to it. One reason why the government would not have taken it up is that it is not a Bill which is general in its character. It is limited to a certain number of companies. I quite understand how it happens to be in the hands of a private member

Hon. Sir GEORGE DRUMMOND—There is no doubt this is a very important question. It is an extension of the powers already granted by the Act to certain loan companies. We should, in the first place, be well acquainted with what powers they have under the general Act before we undertake to extend them. I am of the opinion that the government should take upon itself to consider carefully the lending powers of all trust and loan companies, and also the investing powers of insurance companies, and frame a general Act which would meet the case. I am entirely of opinion that to pass a Bill like this at the very end of the session would be a rather rash proceeding. I think we ought to give very careful consideration to such a Bill as this.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—This is not a Bill, so far as those who are promoting it are concerned, which is being brought in at the last of the session. The Bill was introduced on the 22nd of March. It will be within the memory of members here that the Finance Minister was laid up by an accident and unable to attend the public business for a time, and this Bill stood for his consideration and assent. It has simply been delayed by the fact of other Bills getting precedence in the House of Commons. But so far as the companies are concerned who are interested in it, they saw to its introduction early in the session, and the explanation I have given is the only one there is as to why it is here now. It is of great importance to the three companies which are effected by it, because they are at the disadvantage of not having enjoyed the same powers as are granted by letters patent to companies which are incorporated under the Act of 1899.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—How many companies would this Bill affect ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The statement made in the committee of the House of Commons was that there were two or three. I had nothing to do with the matter until this evening, when I was asked to move as I am now doing. The instructions were to ask if the House would do it, to allow it to go to the Banking and Commerce Committee where everybody could be heard and the circumstances be detailed.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend knows that if these rules are suspended the Bill will go to the Banking and Commerce Committee in the morning. It has not been distributed up to the present, as far as I can ascertain, and it seems to me it would be utterly impossible to make full inquiry into so important a measure before to-morrow morning, more particularly in view of the fact that we have not the Bill before us.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—It is a Bill of the Commons, and it could not be printed for distribution here until now. I admit that is a disadvantage, but the reason for the delay is as I have stated. The first clause of the Bill quotes word for word the powers which are granted at present under the general Act, and it is word for word with a Bill which the Senate and House of Commons passed in the session of 1903. (Bill 24). It was supposed then that it would have become law, and this would have been the case but for a mistake.

Hon. Sir GEORGE A. DRUMMOND—If the matter was of such vital importance, how were the companies content to wait until now?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Might I also, if I am not interrupting my hon. friend, suggest that the very fact of the Governor not having given his assent to that Bill of 1903, would indicate that the government had withdrawn the Bill or that the Governor had purposely refused his assent.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I am only giving the explanation as given to me.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not doubt the correctness of my hon. friend's motive or statement, but it seems to me it bears upon it the imprint of this fact that the government must have reconsidered the measure and not permitted the Governor to assent to it.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Of course if that was the case I would not be able to make the statement I am making now. The statement made in the Commons committee, in the presence of the Finance Minister, who had considered the Bill in the meantime and approved of it—that statement was just as I have made it. And it was not that there was not any reconsideration, or that there was any reason it did not get it, except that the Bill was not amongst those that were assented to. We could easily understand such a thing as that could have happened, and it is what has appeared here.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What section in the Act of 1899 does this Bill re-enact ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Section 20. I do not see any reason why the matter should not go the way I speak of under the circumstances, because it is not as if the matter had been abandoned or anything of that kind, and all I am asking is an opportunity of being able to give the explanation to-morrow which I cannot give now. I understood it was the intention to have the Bill introduced last session, but for some reason or other that miscarried, I do not know what the reason was, I may be wrong about that. I do not undertake to to say that is the case, but it was months afterwards before it was discovered that the Bill was not in force. It was only when they came to turn up the Act that they found that the Bill had not been sanctioned.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think that in view of the importance of the matter the rule should not be suspended. The statement of the hon. gentleman is a peculiar one—that the Bill should have passed both Houses, and was not sanctioned by the Governor. There can be only one explanation to that, and that is that the government advised His Excellency not to consent to the Bill for some reason or other. It is as well that it should stand till to-morrow, in order that the Secretary of State should ascertain what the action of the government was at that time. If the Bill was passed, I scarcely conceive it possible that the clerks of both Houses should neglect to bring it before the Governor to receive his sanction, unless some action had been taken by the government to delay it. It is a statement, I must confess, that I never heard before, and it is extending the principle of the Bill to which the hon. gentleman has referred to all loan companies which were incorporated before and since which had not those powers. I do not think it is a reason why we should consent to a suspension of the rules dealing with so important a matter, for the simple fact that the Bill has been delayed by the House of Commons even for the reason suggested, and then laid before us. We are asked to confirm, by the action we are taking, the principles involved in it, without having the Bill laid before us or printed. It is one of the difficulties of rapid legislation, and the complaint which we are constantly making that Bills of the most important character are brought before the House during the dying hours of the session when we have no time to investigate them or even to know the contents of the Bills themselves. I hope the hon. gentleman will not press the motion for the suspension of the rules.

Hon. Sir GEORGE A. DRUMMOND—The necessity for some such Bill has forced itself very clearly on my mind during the experience I have had in the Committee on Banking and Commerce. The fact is that it is the duty of the government to give full consideration to all the items in such a Bill and frame it with the greatest care. As hon. gentlemen are aware, the House at large is scarcely the forum to discuss in detail the objects of the investment of a trust or loan company, but that some such Bill of a general character which would affect the legislation on trust and loan companies, something on the lines of the Railway Act and Companies Clauses Act, might be adopted with the greatest possible advantage in the ordinary legislation of the Senate. In my opinion it is not a thing to be done in a hurry or without due deliberation, but if it were possible to suggest to the government a method of doing it, which is an act of imprudence, perhaps, I would suggest that this Senate might very well devote the earlier days of the session, when as you all know we are occupied in really doing nothing and adjourning from time to time. I cannot conceive of any better piece of business that we can undertake in the early days of the session than to give such an Act as is contemplated in this Bill our most serious consideration. Hon. gentlemen are all aware that Bill after Bill comes before this House and is relegated to the consideration of the Banking and Commerce Committee, and notwithstanding all considerations of prudence, the attitude of the Senate committee and of the Senate itself is to be lenient and grant if possible the terms of any Act which comes before it. The leaning is always to be liberal, and an absolutely conclusive argument always invoked is that some other companies have got those rights before. In the face of any prudential considerations, that is supposed to be an absolutely final argument. Under those circumstances, I am deeply of opinion that it would be an excellent thing not to pass any such Bill as this at this stage of the session, but to make it a part of the business of next session to occupy our time in the Senate—which we might very well do—originating a Bill on the subject. I think it is the business of the government to undertake it however, and I would hail any attempt on the part of the government to solve this question. In the meantime I, for one, would object to the passage of this Bill now, simply because I do not understand its bearings without the closest consideration of details. I rather object to the Bill as proposed.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—In view of the objection to the suspension of the rules there is only one thing to do, and that is to move the second reading of the Bill to-morrow. The object I had in going before the Banking and Commerce Committee to-morrow was to get the very details and explanations necessary, information which I think everybody in this House will agree, if it establishes the case as I have put it, will justify this company asking for the same powers as other companies possess under the general Act.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend will have plenty of time before prorogation to do that.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Except there will be no opportunity to go to the Banking and Commerce Committee, and it will go to a committee of the whole House.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is a public Bill and can go to a committee of the whole.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Cobourg)—It is only just to the hon. member from Toronto and the Senate that I should state what I know about the subject under discussion. The very Bill which the hon. senator from Toronto has spoken of was under my charge in the Senate in 1903. I took charge of it at the request of a Toronto law firm. It was read the first and second time, and on motion referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce, where it was fully and thoroughly considered, under our present able chairman who made some remarks on the character of the Bill at the time. I think it was before it was referred to the Committee on Banking and Commerce that the attention of the Secretary of State was called to the character of it. As I recollect now, it affected two or three companies and the object was to bring these companies under the existing law. At the request of the hon. Secretary of State, the Bill was allowed to stand until he could look into it. After he had carefully examined it, he allowed it to pass this House and I supposed that it was law. The firm wrote me after the session was over to say that through some inadvertance the Bill had not received the Royal sanction. I wrote down to Ottawa to the hon. gentleman who had charge of it in the House of Commons, and said I would look into it thoroughly. I felt vexed at myself for having left Ottawa at the close of the session without making sure that the Bill had received the Royal sanction. It was not introduced in the last days of the session, but early in the session, and was one of the first Bills I had to look into in this Chamber. I felt after it had received the approval of the Secretary of State that the Bill was quite safe and would pass, and I wrote to the firm saying so. It was only when they wanted to make use of the legislation, which they supposed had been passed, that the mistake or inadvertence was discovered. I am not sure, but I believe the hon. gentleman from Belleville made some observations about the Bill when it was before this House.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I wish to direct attention to one provision in the first clause of the paragraph (b) which empowers loan companies to invest in certain classes of securities. It gives power to invest in the stock of any incorporated company incorporated by the Dominion parliament or any province of Canada. It seems to me that the power of investing in the stock of any incorporated company ought to be limited.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is that the Bill that has been introduced here?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—That is exactly the wording of the present law.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Then it ought to be changed.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—It seems to me that both Houses of parliament having passed this Bill, it is due to ourselves, as well as to the companies affected by it, that we should redress the mistake which has prevented this measure becoming law for the last three years. Instead of our being over captious about it, we ought rather to try and put the companies in the position it was intended by the parliament of Canada in 1903 to place these companies. I am not asking for anything but what was really granted at that time, and what would have been the law if the Bill had received the Royal Assent.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Is it not possible that the Minister of Justice may have advised His Excellency not to assent to the Bill?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—That question was asked and the reply was that it was not so. I do not know anything about it, because I can only tell you what was stated in committee. It was said that the only reason was that through some slip it had not received the Royal sanction. Under the circumstances, if the hon. member for Belleville persists in his objection, I must move that the Bill be read the second time to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not think the hon. gentleman from Toronto should attribute the criticism on this Bill to captiousness.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I did not mean to say that.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at three o'clock.

THE SENATE

OTTAWA, Thursday, July 5, 1906.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

THIRD READINGS.

Bill (129) An Act to incorporate the Sovereign Trust Company.—(Hon. Mr. Ferguson.)

Bill (131) An Act respecting the Royal Bank of Canada.—(Hon. Mr. McKay, Truro.)

UNITED EMPIRE LIFE INSURANCE COMPANY.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Sir GEORGE DRUMMOND, from the Committee on Banking and Commerce, reported Bill (90) An Act to incorporate the United Empire Life Insurance Company, with two amendments.

He said: It is my duty to explain that the amendments consist in striking out the words 'And 41' which has the effect of excluding clause 41 of the Companies Clauses Act from the exception which applied to sections 7, 18 and 39. Clause 41 is one which forbids the company to purchase the stock of another corporation, and was struck out by the committee.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Would the hon. gentleman state exactly what the purport of that amendment is? Is it an omission?

Hon. Sir GEORGE DRUMMOND—Clause 16 of the Bill reads as follows:

16. The Companies Clauses Act, except sections 7, 18, 39 and 41 thereof, shall apply to the company in so far as the said Act is not inconsistent with any provisions of this Act or of the Insurance Act: provided, however, that the company may make loans to its shareholders or policy-holders, not being shareholders' directors, on the securities mentioned in the Insurance Act.

The committee left the exception in clauses 7, 18 and 39 and struck out the exception in clause 41, which, as I said, is a section which forbids the company to purchase the stock of another corporation.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—That remains in to all intents and purposes; they are fobidden now?

Hon. Sir GEORGE DRUMMOND—Yes.

Hon. Mr. WATSON moved concurrence in the amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

The Bill was then read a third time and passed.

LOAN COMPANIES BILL.

Hon. Sir GEORGE DRUMMOND—I ask the forbearance of the Senate if for a moment I refer to a matter outside of the regular business which was confided to the Committee on Banking and Commerce by this House. It will be in the recollection of hon. gentlemen that a Bill was introduced last night and discussed at considerable length respecting certain loan companies, with the result that the House declined to grant the suspension of the rules which would have enabled that Bill to come before the committee to-day. The Bill was of a general character, and increased the powers of certain trust and loan companies. The representations made were that this Bill had been actually passed by both Houses in 1903, and through some accidental event had not received the Royal sanction. The committee entered into a full consideration of that and were satisfied that the representation was correct. I objected, if the House will remember, to the Bill on the ground that it was of vital interest to the Senate, and to the country at large, that a general Act dealing with investments and powers of the trust and loan companies more especially should be passed; that it was called for urgently, and this Bill was likely to forestall and impede such legislation. I was convinced this morning by a comparison of the statute-book charters that the powers requested in this Bill were really as represented and had already been enjoyed by a class of other companies investing in the same way. My objection to the Bill was thereby removed. I would only, in concluding what I have to say, urge on the House in the strongest way to impress on the government the necessity for a general Act dealing with powers and privileges of several classes of companies that come before the Banking and Commerce Committee, more especially the trust companies and the loan companies, and no doubt the commission now sitting on the insurance companies will make representations which will lead to legislation in that direction also.

RAILWAYS AND SUBSIDIES BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (214) An Act to authorize the granting of subsidies in aid of the construction of the lines of railway therein mentioned.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Would my hon. friend, at the beginning, point out what subsidies are new?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have not been able to find that any of them are new.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I understand that while most of them are re-votes, some of them are practically new in this respect that they are old subsidies transferred to new roads. Has my hon. friend any information as to where that has been done?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The policy of recent years has been not to allot a subsidy to a particular company but to any road constructed between the termini. That has been found to be a better way, because sometimes where the subsidy has been allotted to a particular company it has failed to make arrangements, while other parties could have succeeded in doing so. I do not find that there is any material difference except that there may be some difference in the mileage. I have spent some time looking through the Bill and I do not find that there are many new subsidies. The clauses are framed on the same lines which have governed the Bills introduced on this subject in past years. The subsidies are $3,200 per mile, except under certain conditions where the cost exceeds $15,000 per mile. Then the subsidy may be increased double the amount, but it is not to be greater than $6,400 per mile.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In clause 1, can my hon. friend say whether the Canadian Central Railway Company appeared in the former vote? The subsidy is now being voted to the Manitoulin and North Shore Railway Company.

Hon. Mr. KERR—(Toronto)—These two companies are affiliated, and it is not known which of them will construct the road.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Since no discussion took place on the motion to go into committee, I suppose we may be excused for asking questions outside of the paragraph immediately under consideration. Could the hon. gentleman inform the House of the number of miles that are subsidized and the different provinces in which the roads are situated, and the amount in each province?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I cannot do it off hand. In answer to the first question, I would refer the hon. gentleman to the Act of 1901 the first item of which related to the Manitoulin and North Shore Railway Company.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The former subsidy only extended to 30 miles of the road?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—130 miles.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am referring to 1903. That vote had lapsed, and revote was made in 1903 which will be found in item 34 of the Subsidy Act of that year.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What the hon. Secretary of State has said is not an answer to the question I asked. Can the hon. gentleman tell us the number of miles re-subsidized in the different provinces ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No I cannot. I checked the Bill over to ascertain whether they were all revotes. My hon. friend yesterday was under the impression they were not. As far as I can judge, they are revotes, but in one or two instances the mileage is somewhat changed or the route may be slightly altered. I did not find that any one of the votes came up for the first time—that they had appeared in a former subsidies Act.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I notice in these different items that they run from 130, 50 or 80 miles down to a mile. Upon what principle and what is the policy in granting to a company a subsidy for a mile of road ? If the hon. gentleman turns to item 10 he will see that there is 1½ miles, and 4½ miles in section 26. In section 29 there is only one mile, and in section 34 it is four miles. Then we get down to section 35 and it is only one mile. That seems to be carrying the principle of subsidy to a pretty good length, and if I were to use the sentences and language I have heard used in times gone by, I might say, adopting the language of others, that this looks like a bribe to some of these companies. Mind you, I do not say it myself, I am only repeating what was said a few years ago to members of the present government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The explanation, I presume, is that where a road has been subsidized for 38 miles, and they find in building the road that it is really 39 miles, they have come back and asked for the additional mile. That has occurred on several occasions, but I do not know about this case. It has frequently involved even a half mile.

On clause 1,

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Is this road under construction ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is the general clause under which the Governor in Council is authorized to pay the amount. It applies to all. The first road mentioned is the Manitoulin and North Shore Railway Company.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Are these for new roads, or are they under construction, and if they have been completed why has the subsidy formerly voted not been paid to them ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not aware that any of them has been completed. I do not apply my observations as to this mile question, but, as a general rule, none of them have been completed. None of them pactically have been commenced. I noticed that some of them were contained in the vote of 1904, and under the clauses of all these Bills they must commence within two years. Now those subsidies granted in 1904 would expire on the 1st day of August, unless the companies began work within two years from the date of the passing of the Act. so there are several roads that were subsidized in 1904, that have really done nothing, not only earned nothing, but have made no commencement.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I know one of those roads has been completed and has been running for a year or two.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That may be.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then why were the subsidies not paid ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—What road is it ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The road running from Tweed to Bannockburn in the county of Hastings.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Perhaps because the time stipulated for the subsidy had expired.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am glad the hon. Secretary of State and some one who understands the items can give the information.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—You say this road is finished ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The one that I refer to is running.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—These roads have not been paid all the amount of the subsidy.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am asking why, since the road has been completed and is running, the subsidy has not been paid ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I cannot explain. The Act is a very exact one. It requires very full examination and a certificate by local engineers and the engineers of the department and an order in council, so there is no doubt there is considerable delay about all those matters. I will make an inquiry in regard to it.

On subclause 7,

7. For a line of railway from a point at or near Sharbot Lake or Bathurst station, in the province of Ontario, or between those points, via Lanark village, to Carleton Place, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 7 of 1901, section 2, item 17, not exceeding 41 miles.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This is one in which the route has been completely changed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Could the hon gentleman tell us why ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—On the report of the Minister that there is a more desirable route. The Minister of Railways is the official who prepares this Bill, and he no doubt has seen the local parties, and on representations made to him that he thought reliable and satisfactory the route no doubt has been changed. Very often the routes are changed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The vote originally was to the Canadian Pacific Railway in order to shorten their line. Probably this is a shorter route.

The subclause was adopted.

On subclause 29,

29. To the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company, for a line of railway from Roberval to the government wharf at Lake St. John, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 57 of 1903, section 2, item 40, not exceeding one mile.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This is a one mile road. Is it simply a branch to run down to the lake, to a wharf, or to some warehouse ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is evidently an illustration of what I was speaking of; that the road has either been extended one mile, or that they were one mile short.

The subclause was adopted.

On subclause 32,

32. To the Brockville, Westport and Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company, the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by chapter 3 of 1889, not exceeding $3,200 per mile, and also the balance remaining unpaid of the subsidy granted by chapter 2 of 1890 which was regranted by chapter 5 of 1892 ; the whole not exceeding $86,800, being a revote of the subsidy granted by chapter 4 of 1894 ; and the said subsidy, or so much thereof as has heretofore been agreed upon by the terms of an agreement, filed in the Department of Railways and Canals, between the said Brockville, Westport and Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company and the creditors of the said company, may be paid over to the said creditors or their legal representatives, as mentioned in the said agreement.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Can the hon. gentleman tell us with regard to the claim under clause 32, the Brockville, Westport and Sault Ste. Marie Railway; has that not been a claim for some years, and now re-voted ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As the hon. gentleman is aware, this road has been in operation for some years as far as Westport. The road got into bankruptcy practically, and we had it before the Railway Committee two years ago. Then it was purchased by an American syndicate and they obtained a charter to extend it to Sault Ste. Marie.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is this subsidy for the extension ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This would be part of the extension. I do not think they have done very much at it. I am not aware that they have done anything.

The subclause was adopted.

On subclause 35,

35. For a line of railway from a point at or near Wolfville, on the Dominion Atlantic Railway, to the government pier at the Basin of Minas, not exceeding one mile, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 57 of 1903, section 2, item 25.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I would ask the hon. Secretary of State what was in the preceding grant in 1903 ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Act of 1903 read 'For a line of railway from a point at or near Wolfville on the Dominion Atlantic Railway to the government pier on the Basin of Minas, not exceeding one mile.' That was in lieu of the subsidy granted in 1901. It is just the same as in the former year.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Can the hon. gentleman tell us what company owns or operates this road ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Dominion Atlantic.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I may say that the government built a pier somewhere down in the harbour of Wolfville, and there was a good deal of difference of opinion at Wolfville as to whether the pier should not have been built nearer the railway. It was built by the government, for whatever reason, and this is to extend the track from the Dominion Atlantic Railway down to the pier. It has been standing since 1903 and nothing has been done yet.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I suppose this mile of road being in the constituency of the Minister of Militia, he will decide where the mile of road shall be built ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It appears not to have been built from 1903 up to the present time.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It must be very important, if they want a subsidy to build a mile of road ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Does my hon. friend know if there is water around this pier ?

Hon. Mr. McKAY (Truro)—There is, when the tide is in.

The subclause was adopted.

On subclause 40,

40. To the Ottawa, Northern and Western Railway, for a line of railway from Aylmer to a point of junction with the Interprovincial Bridge approach in the city of Hull (except that portion thereof beginning at a point of junction with the line of the Hull Electric Railway in the city of Hull and terminating at a point on the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway at the east end of its Hull station yard), not exceeding 9 miles, in lieu of the subsidy granted by item 12 of section 2 of chapter 7, of 1899, and by the first portion of item 13 of section 2 of chapter 57 of 1903.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think this requires some little explanation. There is an electric road now running from Aylmer to the Interprovincial bridge, and there is a railway also which was built some years ago running from Hull to Aylmer, and from this it appears that there is a subsidy for another road, or is it to pay for what has been built already ? The railway has been built as hon. gentlemen know, for years, ten or fifteen years. The electric road has been built for a number of years, and, according to the reading of this item they propose to build a third road over the same route.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, it is a puzzle. It has been up ever since 1899 and has been in all the subsidy Acts. I presume in some of those cases the claim is made, and the minister will not decide favourably, and it goes on for another year, and he has not come to any conclusion, and it is still put in.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What is the necessity for the road, if there are already two roads ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is a claim, I suppose, for a portion of the road built. Formerly the road was subsidized between Aylmer and Ottawa. Then I think the electric road took part of the original line.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then the Canadian Pacific Railway bought both.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Then they made a claim for some additional mile subsidy and it appears to have been up since 1899. It ought to have been settled, and decided one way or the other before this.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Will the hon. gentleman, before the third reading, make some inquiry about it ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The vote showed this to be for a part of the road from a point in the city of Hull to the Ottawa and Gatineau.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There is nothing in this item about the Gatineau. It says: ' To the Ottawa Northern and Western Railway for a line of railway from Aylmer to a point of junction with the Interprovincial bridge approach in the city of Hull, except that portion thereof beginning at a point of junction with the line of the Hull Electric Railway, and so on. It says nothing about the Gatineau road.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The former vote did.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The vote in 1899 read in this way :

To the Pontiac Pacific Junction Railway Company for a railway from Aylmer to Hull, Quebec, not exceeding nine miles, in lieu of the subsidy granted by chapter 4 of 1897.

So it has been running for nearly ten years.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to know for the information of the Senate, and myself in particular, why it has been standing so long ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall try to obtain some information about it. Probably it was ruled out and the time expired, and the application was renewed.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Under the subsidy Act of 1903, the subsidy is limited to one mile and a quarter, and that is divided into two sections, so it is growing very rapidly apparently, from a mile and a quarter to 9 miles.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is very absurd not having it closed up. It should have been closed up long ago.

The subclause was adopted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I notice that there is no recognition of the claim made by the province of Ontario for assistance and subsidy from the Dominion for the roads which they have built out of the provincial treasury for the purpose of opening up and developing the unsettled portions of Ontario to the north and northwestward. Might I ask what consideration was given to the application made by the Ontario government for aid in connection with their road ? If we carry our recollection and memory back for a short time, we will remember that a very large subsidy was voted by parliament to relieve the province of Quebec from the liability which it had incurred in connection with the North Shore road. I am not finding any fault with that appropriation, but it seems to me that if one province could be relieved of a liability incurred in the construction of a road through a well settled portion of the country—that is the North Shore road—there can be no good reason why the province of Ontario, building a road into an unsettled portion of the country, should not be treated in the same way. The province of Nova Scotia also incurred a liability in connection with the Nova Scotia Eastern and after a good deal of negotiation this present government took over that road and paid the liability incurred by the province of Nova Scotia. There are two cases in which the Dominion government has taken over provincial works, one by the present government, the other by the government which preceded the present administration. Why should not Ontario be treated in the same way ? That is, if the question has been considered by the present government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In reference to taking over the line from Quebec to Montreal, that was done on the assumption that it was part of the Transcontiental Railway.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Transcontinental ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, we paid for the road between Montreal and Ottawa, and took over the Canada Central that was built through the county of Renfrew, or gave a very large bonus of $13,000 a mile.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Over $2,000,000.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This application from the province of Ontario has been repeatedly before Council. I can harly say it has been finally disposed of, but the principle on which hesitation was expressed was that it seemed rather inconsistent that both the Dominion and the province should be expending money in the same direction. The expenditure on federal matters ought to be limited to the federal exchequer, because the provinces can go into debt at any time if the policy is once recognized that they ought to subsidize railways. The subsidizing of railways involves a very lage sum, and it is not one of those matters that was in contemplation at the time the subsidies were allotted to the provinces. In regard to some of the provinces it is absolutely impossible. Some of them have already made themselves, I will not say financially embarrassed, but they have seriously affected their finances by either advancing to railways or guaranteeing bonds, and I presume it is a question which will have to be discussed when the provincial premiers and the Dominion Premier meet. The application of Ontario I cannot say has been absolutely turned down. It has been under discussion and argued in the direction I have stated.

It would seem a very bad precedent to commence and bonus roads built by provinces, because there would be no end to it. You do not know where it would land us if a province were to build railways and call on the federal government to subsidize them in the same way they subsidize their own roads.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That would be a very good rule if it had been adopted years ago. The deductions to be drawn from the remarks of the hon. Secretary of State are these : if a province is reckless and runs into debt, you come to its assistance ; but because Ontario has not done that in the past—what it may do in the future I do not know—it is not to be assisted in the opening up and developing of an unsettled portion of the country. Let me put this question to the hon. gentleman; have not both governments recognized the principle, by relieving the provinces in the two cases to which I have called attention, of liabilities incurred in aiding the construction of railways ? That policy has been carried out in the case of two provinces, and I think I could instance others. Now, supposing a company had been organized for the purpose of constructing a road from North Bay to the Cobalt district, the government then, no doubt, would have granted a subsidy of $3,200 per mile ; but because the Ontario government has done this work, then it is to be deprived of the subsidy, while the right of other provinces has been recognized. I am very glad to hear that the matter has not been finally settled. In equity, the Ontario government, although not involved as some of the other provincial governments are, is certainly entitled to the $3,200 per mile, the same as a private company would be. I am fully aware, and so is every one else who has paid any attention to public affairs, that what many of the provinces have done has involved them in debt. If it is to be understood that a province which is reckless and extravagant is to be aided by the Dominion government, surely some assistance should be rendered to a government which is opening up a section of the country which was a wilderness, while the other governments were only contributing to the construction of roads through settled portions of the country.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is worthy of note that the application was pressed strongly on the government before any change took place in the government of Ontario. When the Hon. Mr. Ross was premier this application was pressed on the government.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That does not detract fom the equity of the claim.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think this provincial road in Ontario is in a different position from any other road. As far as I am aware, there is no other road in the Dominion which is owned and operated by a province. The object of granting a subsidy, I think, is not to benefit the parties who build the road, but to secure the construction of a road which would not be built without the subsidy. In the case of the Temiskaming road that question did not arise. The province undertook to build the road, and was able to build it, so that it was not necessary that there should be a Dominion subsidy to secure its construction. Although I do not know very much about what happens in Ontario, still I gather from the newspapers that this road which the province owns, and which I believe it is extending, is a property which pays the province handsomely ; and I really do not see why the Dominion treasury should contribute to put more money into the treasury of the province.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman will permit me to congratulate him on his ingenious explanation.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 6,

6. Every company receiving a subsidy under this Act, its successors and assigns, and any person or company controlling or operating the railway or portion of railway subsidized under this Act, shall each year furnish to the government of Canada transportation for men, supplies, materials and mails over the portion of the lines in respect of which it has received such subsidy, and, whenever required, shall furnish mail cars properly equipped for such mail service ; and such transportation and service shall be performed at such rates as are agreed upon between the minister of the department of the government for which such service is being performed and the company performing it, and, in case of disagreement, then at such rates as are approved by the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada ; and in or towards payment for such charges the government of Canada shall be credited by the company with a sum equal to three per cent per annum on the amount of the subsidy received by the company under this Act.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—May I ask my hon. friend if the government has ever availed itself of this provision which has been inserted in many of the Bills relating to railways to which aid has been given? Has the government ever invoked its rights under this section?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I think it has in a few instances, but not, as the hon. gentleman is well aware, as a rule.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It, no doubt, has formed an element in making a contract with the Postmaster General for the carriage of the mails.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Is there any systematic account kept by the government with those roads which are bound to carry the mails and to extend to the government the privileges mentioned?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, they have always been in an impecunious position.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If I may be permitted to refer to the debates in the other House, it was acknowledged by the Minister of Railways that these rights had never been invoked, and the government had never received any return.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—In a certain number of cases, not many, in the Northwest, this clause was put into force.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If my recollection serves me right, those subsidies were given under different conditions altogether. There was a certain amount advanced to the companies and the conditions were that they were to carry the mounted police, the mails, &c., as the government might desire. That was a different principle altogether.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I speak from recollection, and if my hon. friend's recollection differs from mine I will not press the point; but I think on one or two occasions that question did come up.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My right hon. friend will remember that, in the construction of the Calgary and Edmonton road, the government gave a subsidy extending I think over 20 years, compelling the road at the same time to accord to the government the privileges and rights enumerated in this section. I am under the impression the government must have invoked to some extent at least their rights under that section, but I have never seen any return.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—My recollection is that the only cases in which it was taken advantage of had reference to some few roads in the Northwest. I had the Calgary and Edmonton Railway in my mind, and I think the same thing also was done in the case of the Qu'Appelle road, and one or two others, but it certainly was not done as a general rule.

The clause was adopted.

On the question of adopting the preamble.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before the committee rises, I wish to express my regret that there is no clause providing for the assumption by the government of any of these roads which had been built, the subsidy been paid by the government, and then the companies have allowed the roads to fall into disuse. That may not be the case in many instances, but it has happened in my own county. The Grand Trunk Railway were granted the full subsidy for the building of a road of 6 or 7 miles running from the terminus of what is called the North Hastings Road from Belleville to Madoc to Eldorado, connecting with the Ontario Central. The Grand Trunk Railway, after building the road and obtaining the subsidy, operated the line just as long as the hematite mines continued to yield a return for carrying the ore to the front. As soon as that ceased, that section of the road which connected Madoc with Eldorado on the Ontario Central was allowed to fall into disuse. So that really the money that was paid by the government of the day in aid of the construction of that road has been of no use whatever to the section of the country beyond the benefit that was derived for a short time in carrying out ore from the hematite mines along the road. There ought to be some provision of law by which a company receiving aid in that way should be compelled to keep the road up. It is very important for the city of Belleville and for the village of Madoc that that connection should be made. It is only made now by stage coach.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Does my hon. friend inform us that that road exists, has been operated, and is now absolutely discontinued ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, discontinued. Whether the rails have been taken up I am not in position to say ; but I know that the road ceased to operate years ago.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The money was paid over to the Grand Trunk was it ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The money was absolutely paid to them, and I will say further that they received half the subsidy first, and then the road required repair, and the hon. John H. Pope, when Minister of Railways, caused a vote, the difference between the $3,200 per mile and that which had been paid them before, which was $1,500 to be paid to the Grand Trunk and the road has been allowed to run down and has not been operated for several years. A deputation, of which I was one, waited on the manager of the Grand Trunk years ago and offered to take the whole line off their hands, and bind a small company, which could be formed for that purpose, to put the road in repair.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The two points are Madoc and Eldorado.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes. There is no village at Eldorado, but the junction of the other road was called Eldorado, and the name was given on account of the discovery of the Richardson gold mine.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Was it intended to stop at Eldorado, or was it intended to have gone further ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, simply intended to make a junction with the Ontario Central, which road runs in the northern section of the county.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Which passes Eldorado ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Which goes through Eldorado southward to Trenton.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—There is a good deal in what the hon. gentleman says. If these people got our money and chose to take it, it seems to me they should be compelled to operate the road or pay the money back, or let those who will run it take charge of it. I will take a note of it and bring it to the attention of the Minister of Railways.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think this is the first time it has been brought to the attention of the House, but I felt it my duty to call attention to it for fear of any other road getting a subsidy and as soon as they found that the road did not pay for the moment, to let it go into disuse.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Perhaps it is not too much to ask the hon. gentleman to send a note to myself or the hon. Secretary of State giving the full particulars.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I will see that all the facts are communicated to the government.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I see the importance of the point, and it seems to me it might be very well considered by the department.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It might be pointed out that in the Bill before us, as I presume in all former subsidy Bills, provision is made only for construction. This subsidy is given conditional upon the construction of the road and not upon its operation. It seems to me it would be very reasonable to make it conditional that the road should not only be constructed but operated, so that a railway company having received this subsidy and not having operated the road might be liable to repay the amount.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—My hon. friend probably has looked into that matter a little. Is he not of opinion that the charter is forfeited by non-user ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There might be something in that, but to whom will the property revert ? I do not think it will revert to the Crown.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The general principle is, if there is no other owner, that it reverts to the Crown.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—In this particular case, the company charged with the operation of the road refuses to permit any other person to operate it, so it is like Mahommid's coffin, suspended between heaven and earth.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The hon. gentleman is referring to the case which the hon. member from Belleville spoke of. If a railroad charter is not operated, is it not forfeited by the general law? I should think its charter would perish.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would not be prepared to say off-hand what the result of that would be. The property would certainly be vested in the owners unless there is express provision to the contrary in the Railway Act.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The Railway Act is a very long and complicated one, but I rather think some provisions are made in it for forfeiture in the case of non-operation.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The government would surely have to take some steps to possess itself of the title.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Probably it would.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I am not aware of any machinery of that kind in the Act.

Hon. Mr. ROY, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

NATIONAL TRANSCONTINENTAL RAILWAY BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (213) An Act to amend the National Transcontinental Railway Act.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Can my hon. friend give us any further information than we got yesterday as to the nature of the securities to be taken by the government?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Grand Trunk Railway furnished the government with a certificate from the Bank of Montreal that the bank held $5,000,000 security. The certificate lies in the vaults, and no doubt the Grand Trunk Railway is paying a handsome sum annually or monthly for the use of the credit.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The hon. gentleman now refers to the $5,000,000?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—As I understand the $5,000,000 security now consists of a certificate of the Bank of Montreal?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Referring to the securities to be given in lieu of the $5,000,000, can my hon. friend say what securities the government have in view?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The securities proposed, and under consideration now of the Finance Department, are securities of the Grand Trunk Railway up to $5,500,000 value—half a million of a margin above the present value of the securities offered. It is considered quite sufficient.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Does my hon. friend consider that margin would be sufficient to make provision for the fluctuation in the value of stock?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Surely in the negotiations between the company and the government, the company must have indicated, or the government must have stipulated, what those securities shall be. Will they be bonds, preference stock, or ordinary stock?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They will be stocks of the Grand Trunk Railway. I noticed that Mr. Fielding said in another place that the value of the particular stock he quoted was now 104; that is four above par and the deputy minister, who is familiar with it, when I asked him this morning, said the proposition was to deposit with the government Grand Trunk Railway securities up to $5,500,000. As hon. gentlemen know, the Grand Trunk Railway has spent a large sum of money already. The company is at work on the line building it rapidly from Winnipeg westward, and extending eastward to Lake Superior.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Then I presume the terms of the contract have not been carried out in the government paying to the Grand Trunk Railway three per cent upon this $5,500,000 ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The contract of 1903 provided that the company should deposit with the government $5,000,000, either in cash or partly in cash, and partly in bonds, and that the government should pay to the company 3 per cent upon the cash deposited, and the dividends upon the bonds or stock or securities which made up the $5,000,000. Now that transaction, as I understand, has not been carried out in that form.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, in no other way than I have stated. They furnished the government with a certificate of deposit from the Bank of Montreal.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—So the government has taken the Bank of Montreal for it ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. The Grand Trunk Pacific wants to save so much a year that the company is now paying to the Bank of Montreal.

Hon. Mr. JONES, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Bill be now read the third time.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is one point as to which I should like to be clear. Under the contract, the government are obliged to pay interest on this deposit. When the bonds or stock of the Grand Trunk Pacific are deposited and accepted instead of the money, they would assume no interest.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Certainly not.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think that during the period of construction there probably would not be any dividends to pay on the stock either.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is not stock of the Grand Trunk Pacific. It is existing stock of the Grand Trunk Railway.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I apprehend the government would have to pay back to the company all dividends collected on the stock and bonds. That was the provision in the original contract, and it should apply under this arrangement.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Yes, if it is to be stock of the Grand Trunk Railway, but if it is to be stock of the Grand Trunk Pacific—

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is to be stock of the Grand Trunk Railway.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

HARBOUR COMMISSIONERS OF MONTREAL BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (222) An Act to provide for further advances to the Harbour Commissioners of Montreal.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What is the indebtedness of the Harbour Commissioners to the government now ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think the authority ran up to $2,000,000.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What would be the total liabilities of the commission ? I suppose there are liabilities outside of what may be owing to the government ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have not heard of any. In the last 20 or 25 years the government have practically cashed their debentures. The debentures have been deposited with the Finance Minister and they have paid interest on them and the government has given the Harbour Commissioners the benefit of the credit of the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I was under the impression that it was a very much larger sum than $2,000,000.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Act passed in 1896 authorized a loan to be taken up from time to time by the Montreal Harbour Commissioners to the extent of $2,000,000 and this Bill refers to that in the last clause.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Can the hon. gentleman say what is the revenue of the commission ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They have never been in default to the government of Canada. They have always paid up promptly and punctually.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. senator from Calgary would be correct in his estimate of the amount due were it not that the government some years ago had relieved the harbour commissioners of a large portion of the indebtedness incurred in deepening the channel below Montreal. That ran up into the millions. But this must be said of the Montreal harbour commission, that they have never been in default in paying interest on the money advanced to them to be expended in the improvement of the harbour, I think it is the only harbour commission that has paid the interest upon the money invested. At Three Rivers, Que., and other places the money has been expended, but nothing has ever been paid in return.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—The Bill itself seems, as it were, to endorse or create a policy on the part of the government, which probably was created before, of endorsing expenditures in reference to harbours. The question has been asked as to how it is in St. John. We have never, so far as I can remember, had any dealings with the government in that way, but it opens up a very good scheme by which the corporation of St. John, which itself owns the harbour, there being no intervening board, can deal with the government in this way. The government is very liberal, and they have done work which is not charged against the harbour, but the harbour is under no obligation to the government in the matter of bonds. I think it would be a fair thing for the city of St. John to come to the government and say : 'Do the same with our debentures', $700,000 or $800,000 or what ever it is ; 'endorse them in the same way as you are endorsing these bonds and we will be certain to pay the money, but the effect will be to give us the interest at a much lower rate than we can get it in the market.' I shall have much pleasure in calling the attention of the people of St. John to this measure.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have no doubt if the attention of the government is called to it they will accede to the request of the hon. gentleman from St. John. The growing importance of the port will justify it. The great advantage would be that with the government guaranteeing the interest upon the bonds the city would save a considerable amount, and, giving my own opinion, I see no reason why important ports like St. John should not be aided in that way. It would be carrying out to a certain extent the recommendation made by the transportation committee. They have recommended making all these ports free, but the government might very well aid them in the way suggested.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 2,

2. The corporation shall, upon any advance being made, deposit with the Minister of Finance and Receiver General debentures of the corporation equal in par value to the advance so made (which debentures the corporation are hereby authorized to issue), and such debentures so issued shall be of such amounts as the Minister of Finance and Receiver General determines, and shall bear date on the day when such advance is made, and shall be payable within twenty-five years from the date of their issue, and in the meantime shall bear interest at the rate of three per cent per annum, such interest to be payable half-yearly, on the first day of July and the first day of January in each year.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Can the government negotiate a loan at 3 per cent ? Of course the preliminary expenses of negotiating these loans are considerable. It seems to me the government cannot borrow money at that rate.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I would not like to say that the government can borrow money to-day at that rate, but it is to be hoped that in the course of a few months, when the money market eases up, they will be able to do so. I think our three per cent are at par or very nearly so.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It seems to me that, in the discussion in the Commons the other day, the Minister of Finance expressed some doubt as to being able to negotiate a loan at three per cent.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—My hon. friend is quite right. He spoke of the state of things at this moment. I do not think he could to-day make a loan at that rate; but the hon. gentleman knows there have been circumstances affecting the money market for a considerable time back, which will now be eased up.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It would not be unreasonable to make this a larger amount, so that the government would be reimbursed for all the expenses incident in the case of such a loan. It would not be unreasonable to say that the commissioners should pay at least 3½ per cent.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They have always paid promptly in the past.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD, from the committee reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

THIRD READING.

Bill (223) An Act to amend the Fisheries Act.—(Hon. Mr. Scott.)

LOAN COMPANIES ACT.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto) moved the second reading of Bill (40), An Act respecting certain Loan Companies. He said: After the statement which was made by the chairman of the Banking and Commerce Committee to-day of what took place before them, it will not be necessary for me to go into any explanation of the matter further than what I gave last night.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before the Bill is read the second time, I would suggest, although I do not know that there is any precedent for it, that if this Bill is a counter part of one which was passed two or three years ago and not assented to, why should not the Governor assent to it now? If the facts are ascertained that it was passed, as I believe there is no doubt now of the fact, since the investigation has been made, is it not as much an Act of both branches of parliament as if we passed this Bill? There is no question that, on investigation, it has been proved that the Bill was passed by the Commons and also by this House. Its title was changed in the Senate and it was sent back to the Commons for approval. The records show that the Premier, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, moved concurrence in the amendment which was made by this House to the title of the Bill, and after the amendment was made, whatever was necessary was done, and it became de facto an Act of both branches of parliament. There it stands. The only difficulty that I see in the way is finding the Bill as it passed. As I understand, the Bill has been lost or mislaid, and cannot be obtained.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—As I understand the hon. gentleman, it has never received the Governor's signature?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No, that is what I am calling attention to; but it passed both branches of parliament. The records show that fact, and if it passed both branches of parliament why could not the Governor sanction it now?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—It is a nice constitutional question.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I suppose there are two or three reasons why it could not be done. First, because the Governor General is the third part of the parliament of Canada, and that the Governor General not having given his assent during that session, the Bill fell, just as if any other branch of parliament had failed to give its assent. In the second place, it is a different Governor General from the one that was here then. How would it be possible for the Governor General now to give his asesnt to a Bill, which was passed by both Houses prior to his being Governor General? I think there are so many difficulties about it, that the best thing is to pass the Bill in the regular way. The parliament had expired; there was a new election, and this is a different Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That makes no difference.

Hon. Mr. POWER—An Act must be an Act of a particular session, and this was not an Act of a particular session.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand all that; still it does not make it any less true that both Houses of parliament passed it. I merely call attention to the fact.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—I do not think there is any precedent to meet the case.

The motion was agreed to, the Bill was read the second time.

The Bill was then read a third time and passed, under a suspension of the rules.

CONSTITUTION OF THE SENATE.

DEBATE CONCLUDED.

The Order of the Day being called :

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion of the Hon. Mr. David : That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General ; praying that His Excellency will cause to be laid before the Senate, copies of all petitions, resolutions or documents concerning the abolition or reorganization of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—My remarks on this occasion will be very short indeed, for the reason that the subject is worn threadbare after having been before the House for a number of weeks. Another reason is that, I do not think the resolution calls for the propounding of any scheme for re-organization of the Senate at all. The resolution simply calls for the expressions of any one outside the Senate that may have been sent to the Governor General for consideration, and not that we should formulate any scheme for the abolition or reorganization of the Senate. The resolution does not hold within its four corners any invitation for any member of the Senate to cast a reflection of a partisan character on any other members of the House. That, unfortunately, has been done, and I shall allude to it hereafter. The hon. gentleman who moved the resolution very carefully and very wisely confined himself entirely to a historical account of the first organization of the Senate and its usefulness before and after he joined it, and he expressed himself in a very appropriate and commendable way, and I appreciate entirely all that he said. The hon. gentleman, in part of his remarks said:

I do not think it necessary to remind this honourable House of every important act which the Senate has done, but nobody will deny that it has accomplished the object which the makers of confederation had in view when they established it, and speaking especially of what I have seen since I became a member of this House.

The hon. gentleman's whole speech is in that same strain, approving of what the Senate has done and what it is doing. Other hon. gentlemen made excellent speeches, that contained a great deal of information, and if they are not necessary at this stage in the history of the Senate at all events they afforded an opportunity for hon. gentlemen to look into and deal with historical events which strengthen the position of the Senate to-day. The House of Lords, in England, has been attacked continually and its abolition, not its reformation chiefly, but total abolition has been suggested, but that House never took upon themselves, never thought it worth while, to listen to public clamour outside, or to public opinion, but went on with their work year after year, paying no heed to such agitation, and I think that should be the policy of the Canadian Senate. Newspaper reporters and discontented politicians may find fault with this House, but our duty, so long as we do it honestly and faithfully, is to neglect all those outside opinions. If we were to-morrow to be influenced by public clamour in the performance of our duties we would receive no thanks for it, and all we have to do is to continue as we have in the past. Some hon. gentlemen have suggested various schemes for the reorganization or reformation of the Senate. I entirely oppose anything in the way of an election. If you adopt the elective system, you destroy the independence of the Senate, and you will have a mixed representation, some nominated by the government of the day and some elected, and even those members would clash. One class would say : ' We have been elected and you have to give in to our opinion because we represent the people,' and such a clash would not be of any advantage to an Upper Chamber. The Senate should be composed of members who are independent, neither autocratic nor radically democratic, who will do their duty faithfully and honestly. Elected members we know, in other parts of parliament, not only in this parliament but many other parliaments, are entirely slaves to party, and we have an evidence of that from a gentleman who has been a long time in the House of Commons, the right hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce. He says that he knows perfectly well that many members in that House did not at all times express their real opinion. They voted with their party, and they were in hopes while doing so that the objectionable Bills they passed would be thrown out by the Senate. Now it is a very miserable condition of things when men go to parliament without the courage or manliness to express their opinions, suffer who may. But unfortunately under party government that is the case, and I suppose it will continue to be so. All the speeches we have heard, eloquent as they were, and replete with information have been entirely premature and not necessary at this stage in our history. They would be quite proper at the proper time, but our institutions have not been attacked seriously or systematically.

As regards any self-praise which these speeches may contain will any one tell me that they will elevate the opinion which the public may entertain of this House. Will it place this House on a higher pinacle in public estimation than it is now? I do not think so ; it will not make the slightest difference. Any praise we may shower upon ourselves will have very little influence.

If I were selecting any speeches to embrace my own opinions, I would select those of the gentleman from Smith's Falls (Hon. Mr. Frost) and the hon. gentleman from Rideau (Hon. Mr. Edwards). They were excellent speeches. Neither of these gentlemen saw any necessity for any reformation. They are perfectly satisfied, comparing our system with the American system. The hon. gentleman from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power) made an excellent speech, but he marred it by suggesting that the Senate should be elective or partly so. I entirely disapprove of anything of that kind. The hon. gentleman from Repentigny (Hon. Mr. Legris) made an excellent speech as did the hon. gentleman from Cobourg (Hon. Mr. Kerr), the senator from Cape Breton (Hon. Mr. Ross) and others. The hon. gentleman from Kingston (Hon. Mr. Sullivan) is not here just now, but he made a very instructive address and one which was highly moral, advocating that there should be no partisan spirit known in this House ; but I am afraid that advice cannot be taken. Under responsible government there must be party. The government could never rely on carrying their measures through if every member was independent. A certain number of members must give the government a following. It need not be a servile following. They could discuss matters and point out the rocks and shoals to the government. I fear that the advice of the hon. gentleman from Kingston cannot be followed in this era of parliamentary history. I am sorry the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce has left the room as I had a few words to say to him, but he will be able to read them afterwards, perhaps. That hon. gentleman took occasion to make partisan remarks entirely uncalled for by the resolution now before the House. He said :

> The Liberal party had been in possession of office since confederation for fifteen years. Of those fifteen years ten were passed with a hostile partisan majority in the Senate and in my judgment, although I admit that it is a matter of dispute, very considerable injury to the public interests resulted therefrom.

I deny that entirely. I have selected four Bills which the Senate rejected and in rejecting which, in my judgment, the Senate, instead of doing an injury, conferred a benefit upon the country. First I take the Drummond County Railway. We were asked to ratify an immoral and extravagant contract. We refused to do so, and saved the country a million dollars. The Bill came up afterwards, modified, and with the amount to be paid reduced, and we passed it. The road had been bought for immoral purposes, to pay for election work done at the election before the contract was made. Another Bill was the Stickeen-Teslin Railway. We threw it out and saved the Yukon to the country. That Bill was the most stupid, senseless measure that ever came before any parliament. To reach the southern end of the railway you had to pass through United States waters for 30 miles, up a rapid stream, which was closed by ice more than half the year. Then a narrow gauge road was to have been built from the Stickeen to Teslin lake, and to reach Dawson it was necessary to travel some 600 miles further by lakes and streams which were open for only a portion of the year. For this work the government were giving away the whole Yukon country, all the water-powers, timber and nearly all the mines of the country. The company had power to go where they pleased and take blocks of land, and in that way could have become possessed of all the best mining lands in the Yukon. Was it an injury to the country to throw out such a measure? Of what use would the Yukon have been to Canada, if we had handed over that country to a private company? Then we have the case of the Soulanges canal. A Bill was introduced to deprive a contractor of his rights, and we threw out the Bill. The contractor had a quarry which the government expropriated, and, after getting the stone they required, as they could not agree upon the price, they wanted to throw the land on the contractors hands. It was like sucking an orange and giving the skin. The government tried to amend the plea in the Exchequer Court, but the court decided that the government, having taken the man's property, must pay him the fair value for it. The fourth case to which I shall refer was that of Mr. Burland, the bank note contract. His contract had been taken from him and given to a United States company. The government ordered Mr. Burland to deliver up certain plates and dies, and he refused to do so, and this Bill was introduced to make his refusal a criminal act. All that Mr. Burland demanded was a fair trial of the case in the courts in order that his rights might be determined, but the government would not consent to that. How the case was settled I do not know. These four Bills were thrown out, and it cannot be said that in any one instance the Senate injured the country by the course they pursued, and certainly in two cases they compelled the government to deal fairly with two men with whom they had differences. I would have told the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, if he had been here, that the Conservative members of this House, when in a majority, never even called a caucus at any time to discuss what government Bills they should approve of and what Bills they should reject. They merely threw out Bills that they thought were injurious to the public interest. They dealt with every measure on its merits. Speaking personally, I never experienced any feeling or had any feeling or had any intention to thwart the government or injure any government measure that I thought was in the public interest. The hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce said he thought that the Catholics in Ontario had not proper representation in parliament. Now, I am entirely opposel to any church being represented in parliament. There are very few ecclesiastical questions coming before parliament, and I am sure the large body of Catholics and Protestants will be able to take their own part in the future as they have done in the past. It is absurd that any consideration of that kind should be entertained, or that there should be any representation for any denomination. The Senate has done its duty—is doing it and will do it.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON—Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that if the Bill to construct the Stickeen-Teslin Railway had passed the company would have had the Yukon?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Pretty well the whole thing—the very best lands in the Yukon. There was no limit.

Hon. Mr. ROBERTSON—When I was speaking on this subject, the hon. senator from Belleville contradicted me to this effect: that the Bill did not propose to give one single acre of land to the company in the section through which the line was to run. I do not know which hon. gentleman is right.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is quite evident that the hon. gentleman has not studied the question. The section of the country through which the railway was to run was between Stickeen river and Teslin lake. That is not the territory in which gold mines have been developed. You have after reaching the terminus of the railway at Teslin lake to go five or six hundred miles through the different lakes and rivers before you reach Dawson. After reaching the northern end of the proposed railway you have to cross Teslin lake then descend to Hootalinqua river, which is navigable only in portions. That river empties into the other rivers which you have to descend to the Yukon, then you have to go some distance down the Yukon before reaching Dawson. From the Yukon you have to go southward before reaching the Bonanza, the Hunker and other creeks to reach the gold mines. The portion of the country through which the tramway was to be built was from the Stickeen river to Teslin lake. To reach the southern end of the railway, it was necessary to ascend the Stickeen for some 30 miles through United States territory where you would be stopped by a United States officer to see that you had nothing contraband, and then ascend still further up the river to Glenora or Telegraph creek, and then to cross almost a peninsula until you reach Teslin lake; so that I was quite correct, the land that was to be given to the road was in the territory in which the gold is found and not through that portion of the country through which the road was to run.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The road is entirely in British Columbia while the grant is in the Yukon.

Sir MACKENIE BOWELL—A number of members have asked me to give my opinion on this question generally. I have no desire to enter into the discussion further than to say that I am totally opposed to any change in the present system. I am quite in accord with the remarks of my hon. friend (Hon. Dr. Robertson), less that portion in which he referred to past actions of the Senate. It is a subject on which I think I could occupy the attention of the House for some little time, but I do not propose to do so. The suggestions which have been made as to reforming the Senate, speaking for myself, I am opposed to, except, perhaps, the suggestion made by the hon. gentleman who spoke last night (Hon. Mr. Power). If a change is to take place, I would give my best support to a system somewhat analogous to that which was suggested by him. In looking back to the time before confederation I hesitate not to say that we had as fine a body of men who constituted the old legislative council as could be selected in the whole Dominion. They were elected. The objection I would have taken to the suggestion—I am only dealing with this question parenthetically—is this: I do not propose, nor would I support a system which would place the power to elect Senators in the hands of the same electors who elect the members of the House of Commons. I think those voters should have a stake in the country, and that the gentlemen who become candidates should also be men of prominence having a stake in the country. By that means, if the system were to be changed, to my mind we would have the best system which could be adopted. Whether the term of office should be for life or for eight, ten, or twelve years is a question I am not going to discuss now. I am strongly of the opinion that the present system is better than any of the new fangled notions which have been brought forward. It is not very often I am in accord with the editorials of the Toronto 'Globe.' But I am fully in accord with that editorial ridiculing the new fangled ideas which have been put forth. The proposition of my hon. friend from Marshfield, my colleague for a great many years, would be, to my mind, a direct violation of the principle of responsible government. In a country governed as we are, the whole responsibility must be with the government of the day; and to divide that responsibility with the leader of the opposition would be, to my mind, an abnegation of the principles which govern us. The remarks made by my hon. friend to my left (Hon. Mr. Macdonald, B.C.) I think were pertinent and to the point. The House of Lords has been in existence for centuries. It has been condemned and reviled by almost every radical politician. My hon. friend from Cape Breton (Hon. Mr. Ross) quoted some language uttered some years ago by Mr. Chamberlain. That was when he was an ardent young radical. As he got older, like most Liberals, he has become a little more Conservative and I question very much whether he would give utterence to the same sentiments to-day. I have no sympathy with the remarks made by some hon. gentleman, particularly the hon. gentleman from Kingston (Hon. Mr. Sullivan) in their condemnation of the House of Lords, because they are not always in accord with what is termed public sentiment. We have known them to reject Bills that have been passed by the House of Commons in England, although the subject had been submitted, but not the details, to the people of England, and on an appeal to the people afterwards when the details were laid before them, the Lords have been sustained and the Commons condemned, and the government had to resign. I could instance a number of cases of that kind, which shows that while it may be contended that the House of Lords has not always been in accord with the sentiments of the electorate, in every instance where they have rejected what was supposed to be the will of the populace at the time, after consideration and after the electors had had ample time to consider the question and then re-affirmed their decision, the House of Lords has always given way; and that is the position of this Senate and will, I have no doubt, continue to be such. My hon. friend who spoke from the seat in which I am now standing (Hon. Mr. Miller) suggested other schemes. He looked forward to the time when all the Conservative members would have died off and when there would be a large majority of Liberals—when the Senate would be in the same position as the Liberal party found it when they came into power. I have no such fear as that which was expressed by the hon. gentleman from Richmond. I take it for granted there is sufficient patriotism in the incoming senators whoever they may be, that they would not obstruct legislation even if a Conservative government was in power, to the extent which has been indicated. I feel, however, that if a Conservative government came into power and found as large a Liberal majority in the Senate as the Conservative majority was a few years ago, and that government should introduce Bills of the character which were introduced by the Liberal government, they would be lacking in their duty if they did not reject them. My hon. friend has given a number of instances in which the Dominion was saved large expenditure by the rejection of a policy which we believed, and I still believe, would be detrimental to the best interests of the country. I have never had cause to regret that. I had a little conversation with the premier on one occasion, and I told him then, when it was supposed he was going to the Yukon Territory, that if on his visit to the Yukon he could find a single citizen, public or private, who would justify the action of the Liberal government in entering into a contract with McKenzie & Mann and giving away the territory which that contract provided for, I would apologize for anything I had said and withdraw it. I only refer to this matter now because it has been mentioned by others. My experience was, after some little time spent in that country in conversation with men in all ranks of life, politicians, miners and others, that I never found a single individual who approved of the scheme which the Senate rejected at that time. Beyond that I do not desire to go. I may express my regret, however, at the introduction of what I may call irrelevant matters in connection with a question of this kind. I think this matter is of sufficient importance without dragging in political controversial questions which, as my hon. friend said, were unduly introduced into this discussion by the Minister of Trade and Commerce. Otherwise his speech would have been unexceptionable though we might differ from him as to his proposition for reforming the Senate. To that I have a decided objection. I have been trying to puzzle my head ever since as to how the reform of the Senate, if I may use that expression, or the changing of our constitution, was going to affect the electorate in the province of Ontario. The people of Ontario have the right to elect whom they please, and it matters not how you change the constitution of this body, it would not change the opinions of those who vote. If we change the constitution of the Senate whether they will elect more Roman Catholics then than they have in the past is a very problematical matter to my mind. They would do in the future just as they have done in the past. My hon. friend from St. John referred to the fact that there was no one of that creed appointed to the Senate at the inauguration of the confederacy. I think he was correct, but he will remember that two of the Senators who were appointed for New Brunswick, Messrs. Chandler and Robertson, were both members of the legislative council. That accounts for the fact of their having been selected as senators. In the scheme propounded at that time, the senators were to be selected from the two parties, Ontario was to have

24. Twelve Conservatives were selected and twelve Liberals, from those who were legislative councillors at the time of confederation, and I presume that the smaller number of legislative councillors in the province of New Brunswick may account for the fact of the selections having been made to which I refer. Whether there were any of that creed in the legislative council of New Brunswick, I am not prepared to say. However that wrong, if it was a wrong, was rectified immediately afterwards. The two gentlemen to whom I refer declined the honour of a seat in the Senate. Mr. Chandler, for the reason that he was appointed a commissioner in connection with the construction of the Intercolonial Railway. In the appointments which were made to fill their places, one was Mr. Dever, whom you all know. He was a member of the Roman Catholic church. I merely make this explanation because the matter has been referred to. Appeals to questions of that kind I think are very much to be regretted and partake more of the spirit of the demagogue than of the statesman. Referring to the composition of the Senate, I think my late leader had regard to every class of the people of Ontario. Commencing at the eastern end of the province, we find there is a representative for almost every class or section found in connection with the Roman Catholic church. In Glengarry we have our hon. friend (Hon. Mr. McMillan) who represents the Scotch. Coming from Kingston we have a representative (Hon. Mr. Sullivan) of the Conservative element among the Irish Roman Catholics. Coming from Toronto we had a gentleman of the standing and ability of Sir Frank Smith. Then on the other hand Sir John Macdonald appointed Hon. John O'Donoghue, who was a Liberal. Going further west we have our friend Hon. Mr. Casgrain (Windsor) who represents the French element, so that in the appointments made to the Senate by Sir John Macdonald, every element, if I may use that expression, was represented.

I should not have referred to that, except in justification of the party to which I belong, and have belonged during my whole life. I do not desire to continue this discussion further than to compliment the hon. gentleman, if I may be permitted to do so, who introduced this subject, particularly on the speech that he made. The hon. gentleman from Victoria (Hon. Mr. Macdonald) referred to the remarks made by the hon. gentleman from Rideau, the hon. gentleman from Smith Falls, and other hon. senators, and I would recommend any of those hon. gentlemen who desire to inform themselves fully as to the benefit to this country of a second Chamber, to read a little pamphlet issued some years ago by the hon. gentleman who sits opposite me, the senior member for Halifax, in which he dealt with this subject, not only in an exhaustive, but a logical and statesmanlike way. I read that address once or twice some time ago with a great deal of interest; and in addition to that let them read the speech delivered by Mr. Powell, who represented this city for one term in the Ontario legislature, when this question came up before that body, at the instance, I have no doubt, of the present government, when they desired an expression of opinion from the different local legislatures. It will be remembered that the Hon. Sir Charles Tupper, in the lower House, called attention to the necessity of a second Chamber in order to protect the interests of the smaller provinces. Immediately after that, a scheme was put in motion, and the different legislatures in the Dominion were incited to pass resolutions, asking for some change in or amendments to the constitution of the Senate, and it was upon that occasion that Mr. Powell delivered that admirable speech. There are statements in that speech that I doubt not my Liberal friends would not concur in, but so far as he dealt with the question of the efficiency and the benefit to the country in its legislation, it must convince any one of the necessity of a second Chamber. I did give expression of opinion on an occasion in replying to a very violent attack which had been made by the hon. gentleman from Wellington upon myself in particular, that in future no matter what he might say in reference to my conduct in connection with what he termed the Gerrymander Bill that I should never refer to it again. I convicted him then of making a statement which was utterly incorrect, where he accused me of doing something 'villainous,' I think he said at the time, when it was actually the action of one of his own friends, and a member of the present government. The agitation for reformation in the Senate was not begun at the period to which that hon. gentleman called attention. The first agitation for a change in the composition of the Senate commenced after the rejection of the Nanaimo Railway Bill, when the late Hon. Alexander Mackenzie, then premier of the country, applied to the imperial government for power to increase the number of senators, under the provisions of the Constitutional Act. That is the time the first agitation began, and it continued to a greater or less extent until the change of government. It suggested itself to me, when I heard the gentlemen speak who in the past condemned the Senate and called for its reform or abolition, that they might have condensed their speeches into a few words indeed; that if they had added after a few remarks, that the Senate was amply reformed, and had become eminently respectable from that fact, that 'I am here,' that would have been an answer to the whole matter.

It has been somewhat amusing to me, I must confess, after watching events for the past few years and listening to the utterances in condemnation of the Senate to find every hon. gentlemen who of recent years has come into the Senate, now quite satisfied that it is a very valuable body, and I can only account for it from the fact that they are here. I compliment them on their reformation and their conversion, and I have no doubt that if they stop here long enough they will become quite as Conservative in the maintenance of the rights of the Senate as I possibly can be, and I have been denominated an old Tory fogy. However, we had better take the advice given by the hon. gentleman from British Columbia. Let people out of doors say just what they please about the senators, but let the senators not forget what their duty to the country and themselves is, and act in the future as they have done in the past, and I have no doubt people will learn e'er long to appreciate the actions of the Senate. I am merely referring to what has been said outside. I differ in toto from the sentiments expressed by the hon. gentleman from St. John—whose speeches are always listened to with a great deal of attention, and on my part with a great deal of pleasure—in his views as to the ultimate destiny of this colony, but this has nothing to do particularly with the Senate. I notice the English press has been referring to the hon. gentleman's remarks, that the tendency of the age, and the desire of the leading politicians of this country is toward independence. I hope the day may never come when we shall be placed in that position. I look forward to the time when the union between the mother country and the outlying portions of the empire may be still closer than it is to-day; that our commercial intercourse may be increased, as it can be increased, by a proper policy. Protectionist as I am, I am prepared to go a long way towards meeting the policy of the empire, in order to bring together the different outlying portions of the empire in connection with the mother country. That is what I look forward to, and I hope the day will never come when the severance will take place as expressed by the premier, that this country will become as the ripe apple of the tree and fall of itself peacefully from the parent stem. I do not see any reason for that. We cannot be a greater people by any such policy. There is no greater boast, to my mind, that a British subject can have than the fact that he belongs to the greatest empire in the world, and the closer we are knitted together the stronger we will become in the advancement of civil and religious liberty, when we can dictate to the whole world what that liberty shall be. I have given utterance to this view, because it was suggested on reading the comments upon my hon. friend's speech in which he indicated that the time was approaching when a change must take place. I do not think this is necessary. I hope it will never occur, and in discussing this question I do not desire to go into the merits or demerits of it further than to say that as the honourable House of Lords which has withstood all the calumny which has been thrown at it and has remained the bulwark of freedom to a very great extent in the old country, so can the Senate of this country be. We want to see no change. If any change is attempted while I have power of utterance and maintain the position I now hold, I shall have to change my mind materially if ever I give my consent and vote for any change whatever. I have a better opinion of human nature than some of my colleagues. I have no confidence in the present government. I need not have told hon. gentleman that, but, notwithstanding that fact, I think that many of the appointments that have been made have been a credit to the premier and his cabinet.

I notice this also, that the longer members sit in this Senate the less partisan they become; and they soon begin to forget party differences, as all of us do as we emerge from the active political arena in which we have moved, fighting elections continually. The longer we are in the atmosphere of this Senate, the more moderate, and may I say the more conservative do we become. Even my old friend opposite (Sir Richard Cartwright), who was a Conservative in his earlier days, is modifying his views of some ten or fifteen years ago. The older we become, the more we mingle with our fellow men, and the further we are removed from the political atmosphere of the lower House and of the elections, the less likely we are to consider questions purely from a political standpoint. I want the hon. senator from St. John to understand that my reason for desiring another gentleman to occupy the position I have held for the last ten years are not the reasons which he suggested. I thought it was quite time, after forty years of public life, some seventeen or eighteen of them spent in the government, and ten leading the opposition in this House, that some younger man with more ability and tact than I possess should lead the opposition in the Senate in the future. I do not desire it to be understood that I would like to see what we call an opposition leader in this House, occupying exactly the same position in relation to the government and to government measures as the leader of the opposition in the lower House. My hon. friend will give me credit for having attended to my business tolerably well during the time he has been here, and he surely will not grudge me some little rest in the future. I am as firm in my convictions as to how the country should be governed as I ever was. Since my boyhood I have always believed that a country like ours should have protection almost to its fullest extent, and I congratulate the present government on having violated the pledges they made when in opposition. I thank my hon. friend from St. John for having admitted that the party to which he belongs have not carried out their promises, that in direct contradiction of the assurances that are constantly made, even by members of the present government not only on the stump but in the House of Commons, they have not abandoned the policy they advocated in opposition, and some of them assert that they have carried out all the public pledges they have ever made. My hon. friend is a very good witness, and he has placed himself in the witness box to assert the contrary. In that, as in other matters, he is frank and honest in the expression of his opinions. Let him continue so, and he will become an ornament to his party and, ultimately, I have no doubt, will join the moderate party on this side of the House.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—With regard to the remarks which I made on the non-appointment of Catholic representatives to the first Senate, from New Brunswick, they appear to me to be necessary, because of statements made by the hon. gentleman from Woolsley (Hon. Mr. Perley), who, criticising the action of the present administration in regard to the Senate, sought to convey the idea that under former administrations there was a perfect system. With reference to my observations on the independence of Canada, I do not see how, holding the views I do, it is possible for Canada to enter into the alliance which the member for Belleville suggests, and which I hope for also, unless Canada is an independent country. That would be an absolute necessity, according to my view. With regard to the hon. gentleman himself, I hope he will long continue to be here, whether as leader—he will always be a leader in one sense of the term—or as a private member of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—I have taken some notes, but I shall not use them. Enough has been said, and so well said, that I do not want to spoil the good that has been done. What is left to me is to thank the hon. members of the Senate for having done so much honour and given so much attention to the motion which I put before them. I thank those who have been so kind to me and bestowed on me praises which I do not deserve. I do not regret that I made this motion and raised such a discussion, because I think that the discussion which has taken place has been a good illustration of the debating power of the Senate. It has proved that in the Senate there are many members who are able to make strong and interesting speeches. I am pleased to see that those speeches have been appreciated generally by the public. This discussion confirms me in the belief that the Senate is necessary. I am more confident of that than ever, and that this second chamber must be maintained in the interest of Canada. I admit that I am confidently convinced it is useless to speak of reform, and I think it proper to mention one of the reasons which induced me to make this motion. It is because I have recently believed that in the conference which is to take place in the course of the year between representatives of the federal government and representatives of the different local governments, that the question of the Senate will be raised, and I thought proper to have an expression from this House on the subject. I do not regret that I was the cause of that expression of views. I think it will be very useful to those who may read the speeches and suggestions that have been made. I think hon. gentlemen have furnished enough material, not only to reform the Senate but to construct three or four senates, and good senates. The discussion, and the able speeches which have been made by some hon. members, have not convinced me that no reform is necessary. It is wise and prudent sometimes to forestall events and make certain reforms before it is too late. The best of governments have perished because they have not foreseen future events and done at the proper time what they attempted to do afterwards when it was too late. Reform of the Senate must come, and that is one of the reasons which induced me to make this motion. If I could sum up in a few words the complaints which have been expressed by hon. members of this House, I could reduce them to two. The principal one is that the Senate, as at present constituted, is liable to be too Liberal or too Conservative. There is some foundation for that complaint. It is a grievance which deserves consideration. The second complaint is that the Senate is not enough in touch with public opinion. Public opinion and governments change, but the Senate does not change. The senators are elected for life. Many remedies have been suggested. I do not intend to speak of all those remedies, but one which has been proposed is to make the Senate elective. In spite of the talent of the hon. gentlemen who have advocated that view, they have not been able to convince me. I am more confident than ever that an elected Senate will not fulfil its mission, that it will be but a duplicate of the House of Commons, subject to the same influences and unable to do what the Senate must do to accomplish the objects for which it was established. Going over all the different systems of the world, the one which I am inclined to appreciate most is the system which prevails in Denmark, which is a very well governed country. That system is as follows; one half the number are appointed for life by the Government or the King, and the other half are elected. If a reform is necessary, I would be prepared to accept that principle but with a modification. What I would advocate, if a reform was necessary, would be to have a great part of the Senate appointed by the government for life, and the remainder by the provincial legislatures and for these reasons: first, because that system would give to the government the protection which it requires. The government must not be at the mercy of a Senate composed of opponents. With this system, the government would have nothing to fear in that way. Second, because that system would give to the provincial legislatures the protection they are entitled to have. If the Senate is to be reformed, we must take into consideration the object for which the Senate was established. It was established specially for the protection of provincial autonomy, and if a reform is to be effected, the provincial legislatures should have their share in the appointment of a part of the senators. Thirdly, because it would remove one of the principal complaints, which is, that the Senate, constituted as it is now, is liable to be too Liberal or too Conservative. There is no doubt that on this point there is a real grievance which must be remedied one way or an other. I say that the appointment of a portion of the senators by provincial governments would be a remedy. Why? Because there is no doubt that out of eight provincial governments there will be at least two or three if not four opposed to the federal government of the day, so that we could rely upon this, that those appointed by the provincial governments would include some opponents of the government of the day. It has been said that the present system is good, and that the responsibility rests upon the Prime Minister; but the premier, even when he is the ablest of men, is not always able to withstand the prsssure brought to bear upon him, when he has to make a choice of members of the Senate. It has been said that certain important men of the Conservative party should be appointed. I do not share that opinion. I think it would be good and useful to appoint such men, but do you think a Premier of Canada, whether Conservative or Liberal, would set aside the claims of able men in his own following to appoint an opponent? It is asking too much. I hope that this debate will have a very good effect. As to those who, during this discussion, have written and spoken unkindly of the Senate, I have only this remark to make; I am confident they will, before long, make application to be appointed to the Senate, and some of those who have spoken and written most unkindly of the Senate, will be among the first to seek appointment to the Upper House. I hope they will not be admitted before being obliged to cover themselves with sackcloth and ashes, and wait at the bar of the House long enough to confess their errors and expiate their crime.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Halifax)—In my remarks yesterday I found I was too narrow in confining my compliments to the hon. members from Kingston and Cobourg. I should have extended them to the hon. member from Smith Falls, the junior member from Prince Edward Island, who made an excellent speech on the subject under consideration, and the hon. member for Wellington (Hon. Mr. McMullen). I must apologize to those gentlemen that I did not extend my congratulations to them. I had some notes, but I do not see very well, and I dropped them and depended on my memory for what I said, and I have just risen to make this explanation, and this apology to those gentlemen for not mentioning them and praising the speeches they made on this subject.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before the motion is put, I might suggest to the government that they have now an opportunity of carrying out the suggestion of the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce, and also of the hon. gentleman who has just sat down. There are four vacancies in the Senate at the present time; let us see if the government can act in accordance with their utterances here and select some three or four good Conservatives for appointment to the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

THE LORD'S DAY BILL.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—May I ask my hon. friend what progress is being made with the Lord's Day Bill? There is considerable curiosity seemingly in the public mind as to when parliament will prorogue, and certainly the government seems to be dealing very leisurely with this Bill. If it is expected that the Senate will give it the same consideration which it has received in the House of Commons, and extend their deliberations over a corresponding length of time, I fear the public expectations as to the date of prorogation will scarcely be realized.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am sorry I cannot gratify my hon. friend. I presume the House of Commons will have made the Bill so perfect that the Senate will be ready to pass it at once.

VACANCIES IN THE SENATE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—As the question of the vacancies in the Senate has been referred to, might I ask my hon. friend if there is any prospect of their being filled? I recollect that there used to be a good deal of complaint made because vacancies were allowed to exist. There has been a vacancy in New Brunswick for over two years. Let me thank the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce for paying me the compliment when in Commons of saying that when I was at the head of the government, as soon as I got control I filled the vacancies in the Senate. There was only one seat which was not filled, and that was because a suggestion made by a colleague of mine was entertained. Will my hon. friend tell us how long the government intend to keep these appointments in abeyance, particularly those in New Brunswick ? Is there a lack of applications, or is it possible the government cannot find people to fill the position ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman knows that the aspirations of the people in the maritime provinces are not very strong. Some time ago we appointed a gentleman from there and he declined to take the seat. We have to make sure the next appointee will be ready to accept the position offered to him. I hope before next session action will be taken ; there is no object in making the appointments at the very end of the sesson.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow afternoon at three o'clock.

THE SENATE

OTTAWA, Friday, July 6, 1906.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

PRACTICE REGARDING PRIVATE BILLS.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Before the orders of the day are called, I desire to direct the attention of the House to certain proposed changes in the private Bills practice of the House of Commons. I have before me a draft of the report of the committee of that House on their rules and proceedings, and in this draft I observe there is a radical departure in private Bills practice in so far as regards fees. They have a scale of fees and a scale of fines also. As hon. gentlemen know, we have adopted a new set of rules which will come into force next session. Up to the present we have had a uniform practice as between the two Houses, which, as you will recollect was brought about some two or three years ago, and it was found to be a very desirable and proper way of regulating the charges relating to private Bills. I simply desire to call attention to the matter, I do not know what we can do, at this late stage of the session, to bring about uniformity for next year, but, possibly, before the House rises it may be thought advisable to reconsider our rules in regard to private Bills. The copy of the report has only come into my hands a short while ago, but glancing over it there are some very good changes made, to my mind, in the way of punishing a delinquent applicant for private legislation. They also take care that the delinquents shall not escape by commencing legislation in the Senate, because in one of their clauses here they say :—

> That the additional charges provided for in section 3 of this rule shall also apply to private Bills originating in the Senate, provided, however, that if the petition for any such Bill has been received for this House within the first six weeks of this session the additional charges provided for under sections (c) and (d) shall not be levied thereon.

Sections (c) and (d) refer to Bills being presented later than the rules provide for. So that with the exception of the presentation of Bills which may originate in the Senate, all the other fines and penalties which they propose to impose will be enforced against any Bill whether it originates in this House or the Commons. The scale of fees increases with the amount of capital proposed by those seeking incorporation as a private company. For instance, where the capital is $250,000 to $500,000 the additional fee to be paid is $100, and from $500,000 to $750,000 it is $150 and from $750,000 to $1,000,000 to $200, and from $1,000,000 to a million and a half three hundred dollars. From $1,500,000 to $2,000,000, four hundred dollars and for every additional million or fractional part of a million an additional one hundred dollars. This is the scale that they have adopted in the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Is that for the nominal capital or the real capital?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I suppose it is for the capital which they will be empowered to employ, provided in their application.

Hon. Mr. De BOUCHERVILLE—Has the report of that committee been approved by the House of Commons ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I think not. My information is that it has not yet been approved, but very likely it will be.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It will come up on Monday.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I understand it is set down for consideration on Monday next, and I am calling the attention of the House to it so that hon. members can consider the matter.

Hon. Mr. De BOUCHERVILLE—Is the report printed ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Not yet.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Would that scale of charges not require an Act of parliament, to be legal ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—No. These rules in the House of Commons are the same as our rules. They are adopted by the House itself.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—How far will the definition apply to the Senate ? I have not read it but, from what has fallen from the hon. gentleman, the impression was left on my mind that if a Bill be introduced in the Senate and regular fees paid thereon, the additional fee to be imposed by the Commons on the promoters will be added in the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—The fees which are imposed on delinquents in presenting private Bills will have to be paid.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Would not the promoter have to pay the additional fee for the introduction of it in the House of Commons after the fee was paid in the Senate ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I think so.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Has any proposition been made that the rules of both Houses should correspond in the matter which has been mentioned ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I am very glad my hon. friend has called my attention to that. I omitted to say that, on a former occasion, when the rules were changed in both Houses, they were changed as the result of a conference. I have no knowlede that any conference on this occasion was either sought or desired by hon. gentlemen of the House of Commons, and, as a result, there has been no conference with reference to this proposed change, although on a former occasion a committee was appointed in this House to meet a committee of the other House and between the two they arranged a joint practice.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—But this is departed from very radically in the proposed rules.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Is it not desirable that something be done to bring about a common understanding between the two Chambers as to Bills of this character ? It seems very undesirable that each House should have its own set of rules, the one clashing with the other. For the convenience of the public as well as for the harmony which should prevail between the two Houses there should be uniformity.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—It was thought desirable before. We can consider that on Monday.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The leader of the government should take some action in reference to this subject. I understand it is proposed to submit the rules to the House of Commons on Monday next, and, if nothing is done in the interim, I apprehend the rules will be sanctioned by the Commons and will go into force, and the consequence will be, we will find two sets of rules, not at all in harmony with each other, and the two Houses in conflict.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I would suggest that the chairman of our committee have a conference with the chairman of the Standing Orders Committee of the other House with a view to securing uniformity.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—A resolution to that effect should be moved.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the chairman of the Standing Orders Committee have authority to confer with the chairman of the Standing Orders Committee of the House of Commons with a view to securing uniformity in practice with respect to the presentation of petitions for and the introduction of private Bills.

Hon. Mr. POWER—My hon. friend might move that the Standing Orders Committee of the Senate be instructed to do what he has suggested.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The chairman can call a meeting of the Standing Orders Committee, and they can have authority.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—In the House of Commons they had a special committee to prepare their rules, as we had here. To my mind the chairman of our committee should consult with the chairman of their special committee because it is not the Standing Orders Committee of the other House that is dealing with the matter. Of course the matter has passed out of the committee stage there. If they are going to consider these rules on Monday, there will be no opportunity of getting our committee together to consider the matter.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not suppose that any action we may take will effect the action of the House of Commons. My suggestion is that we should instruct our Standing Orders Committee who have to deal with this very matter of the payment of fees and notices for petitions for private Bills, to consider the matter and report to us a scheme to harmonize the rules of the two Houses upon these points. Then the committee can present their report as soon as the Commons has acted on the report which has been presented there. The reason I say that the committee should be instructed is, that our Committee on Standing Orders has no power, unless the House gives it power, to consider the matter.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—I would be much more in favour of reviving for the time being our committee which have had charge of the work all along.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Has not that committee passed out of existence? You cannot very well revive it.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—You can revive it just as easily as you can give power to the Standing Orders Committee.

The motion was agreed to.

RAILWAY SUBSIDIES BILL.

THIRD READING.

The order of the day being called :

Third reading (Bill 214) An Act to authorize the granting of subsidies in aid of the construction of the lines of railway therein mentioned.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Some information was asked in reference to an item which has appeared frequently in the Bills submitting railway subsidies, in regard to the railway between Aylmer and Hull. On inquiry, I find that although the subsidy has been renewed from time to time, a part of the mileage has never been paid in consequence of the accounts not having been in such shape that the government could approve of them. It only amounts to about three-fourths of a mile. The sum I find is payable to the company which originally built the road, not the present owner, the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is only a matter of about $8,000 although from the item it would appear that nothing had been paid. I move the third reading of the Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The wording of the item is certainly misleading, because it says : 'Towards the construction of a road from Aylmer to Hull.' Probably from the explanation the hon gentleman has made, it relates to a road from the station at Hull to the Interprovincial bridge.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is a part for which the company were not able to submit the accounts at the time the larger sum was paid, and it has been held over from year to year. The balance due relates only to some three-quarters of a mile.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time and passed.

THE PRINTING OF PARLIAMENT.

ORDER OF THE DAY POSTPONED.

The order of the day being called :

Consideration of the fifth report of the Joint Committee of both Houses on the Printing of Parliament.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I am sorry to have to make so many motions with regard to this report, but the first paragraph of it contains a money item, and the usual proceeding is to allow the House of Commons to deal with it first. I observe in the journals of the House this morning that the House has referred that particular paragraph to the Committee on Internal Economy in that House. Whether the constitution is in danger or not I do not know, but I move that the order of the day be discharged, pending the action of the House of Commons.

The motion was agreed to.

SAFETY OF SHIPS ACT AMEDMENT BILL.

The order of the day being called:

Committee of the Whole House on (Bill 48) An Act to amend the Act respecting the Safety of Ships and the Prevention of Accidents on board thereof.—(Hon. Mr. McGregor.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I would be glad if the hon. member would permit that order to stand. I understand there have been more recent amendments made in the House of Commons in England. I have not been able to see Mr. Sinclair, and I should like to have him communicate with us, as he has been looking into the subject. There is a clause in the Bill which states that it shall go into operation only by proclamation, so that it would be quite safe, but if there is any more recent amendment which should be incorporated——

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—I have not heard of any, but I am satisfied to let the order stand.

The order of the day was allowed to stand.

SATURDAY SITTING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Two Bills passed the House of Commons last night, one amending the Railway Act and the other authorizing the formation of a new court in New Brunswick. I had given instructions to have them here, but unfortunately they have not arrived yet. Perhaps the House might adjourn during pleasure and I would then ascertain whether the Bills will be here within any reasonable period. I think it would be better if this House were to sit to-morrow as it is possible that an important Bill may pass the Commons to-day. I, therefore, move that when the House adjourns to-day it do stand adjourned until to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We will not pass any measure finally to-morrow so that if any hon. gentlemen who left this afternoon under the impression that the House would not sit on Saturday will not be prejudiced. If it is a question of any great importance we will not take all the stages until Monday.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Are there many very important amendments to the Railway Act?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I cannot say that they are important. The general gist of them seems to be conferring additional power on the Railway Commission Board, and there are those new clauses in reference to express companies and also to the telephone to a limited extent. These are the only changes. I move now that the House adjourn during pleasure, to meet at 4 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to and the House adjourned during pleasure.

At 4 p.m. the House resumed.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE OF NEW BRUNSWICK BILL.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (224) An Act relating to the Supreme Court of Judicature in the province of New Brunswick.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—At the last session of the New Brunswick legislature, held in the month of March, an Act was passed remodelling their judicature system. Clause 3 of the Act provides that the Supreme Court, Circuit Court, all courts of Oyer and Terminer and general jail delivery and the Supreme Court of Equity shall be abolished, and provides that there shall be created one Supreme Court of Judicature for the province, to consist of two divisions, the Court of Appeal and the Trial division. The Act only comes into force on a proclamation issued by the Lieutenant Governor. In consequence of the passage of that Act, it becomes necessary to pass an Act here relegating to the new court, whenever it is established, those particular classes of subjects, for instance, relating to the criminal law, that are now under the jurisdiction of the parliament of Canada. That is the object of this Bill. I move the second reading of the Bill, under suspension of rule 41. I think perhaps it would suit the convenience of the House, in regard to these three Bills, if we were to have the second reading today and let them come up for consideration in committee to-morrow morning.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Will my hon. friend say what effect this will have upon the present judges of the Court of Appeal with reference to the preservation of their status and their seniority ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not able to say, because the subject has come under my notice now for the first time. It has not been brought up in council, and I was not really aware of it until I saw the discussion of the Bill in the other House. The announcement made there by the Minister of Justice was that of course the judges would be reappointed. He was asked in reference to their position as to seniority, and if the chief justice was to be made the judge of either court. He was unable to answer, for the reason that the subject had never been considered and he was quite unable to say. The Act simply provides for the new condition that is created by the legislature of New Brunswick over which we have no control.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It seems to me this was a peculiarly fitting case for the government to give proper consideration to before the introduction of this Bill. I will not say that the effect of the Bill is to wipe out that court, but the effect of the provincial legislature is to wipe out the existing court. The government, by this Bill, proposes to give effect to that legislation, thus practically leaving the judges of the present court without a court. Surely the government must have given some consideration to the matter of the reappointment of the present judges to the new courts or that new judges would be appointed. Either one thing or the other must be done by this government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have had no opportunity of discussing it with the Minister of Justice. The House of Commons has been sitting in the morning, but I noted that he said in the House of Commons, when that question arose, that of course the judges would be reappointed. Then the question was asked as to their relative positions as to seniority. His answer was that the subject had never been considered, and until it had been considered by council he was not in a position to make any statement. I am much less in such a position, because so much rests in a case of that kind with the report of the Minister of Justice. If he is not able to give an answer I am not.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—One branch of the court would take precedence over the other. There is an appellate court and a trial court ; it is divided into two divisions, so that the one court, I would assume, would take precedence over the other, and, consequently, the question would arise as to the precedence of the judges. One would suppose that they would naturally follow in the order of seniority.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have not been able in the time at my disposal to master the New Brunswick Act. It is a pretty long one. The court will consist of a chief justice and five other judges, the chief justice and two other judges to be appointed in the manner hereinafter provided, shall form the Court of Appeal, and the three remaining judges to be appointed in the manner hereafter provided shall form the trial division.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What is the provision in that legislation about the chief justice ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is in the most general terms. As I looked over it first, I thought that the judges did not permanently remain in the Court of Appeal, but I think I am mistaken in that. The reading of that clause would convey the opinion that it was intended that the chief justice of the Court of Appeal should remain there and should not be interchangeable.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes. that is what I understood. He is not to be chief justice of the Appeal Court. His title will be chief justice of the Supreme Court of judicature. It may be that they are interchangeable. My hon. friend might make further inquiry so that when we go into committee to-morrow we may have additional information on the subject.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If I can. I am afraid I cannot.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would suggest that the hon. Secretary of State should not get the information from the government because on reading the debate in the House of Commons I cannot see that the government knows anything more than my hon. friend on the subject.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is the embarrassment I feel. If he is not able to give answers I am not. Speaking personally, I should certainly regret that any tampering with the seniority would occur, but the Minister of Justice having been unable to answer the question in the House of Commons I am quite unable to answer it here, because if he gave the House of Commons no further information I do not expect to be able to furnish any further information myself.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Who is responsible for the change?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The legislature of New Brunswick. They abolish the court, and we then have to provide judges for the new court. No doubt we will appoint the same judges. I should hope so at least. I should be sorry if it were different. A similar transition has taken place in the other provinces. It has taken place in Ontario twice, but there has been no affliction whatever. What was right and proper should be done before anything like criticism of the court. The relative position of the judges in the way of seniority has not been disturbed. It would be regrettable if it were so.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I would like to say that I do not favour this legislation. I did not care to interpose any objection to the Bill taking its stage, because I suppose it should go on its merits. The position in New Brunswick is this: There are six judges; five of them are circuit judges and one is an equity judge. All of them are trial judges with the exception of the equity judge, whose jurisdiction was in the equity court, and I think he did not go out on circuit, although he did hold court at more places than the capital. The Act which has been passed reduces the number of trial judges from five to three, and that is the objection. These judges will be overworked, while the appeal judges will have comparatively little to do. No person will suspect me of any particular leaning towards the chief justice of New Brunswick, but at the same time I have the ordinary feelings of a man; and I may say that the general impression in the province of New Brunswick, is that the legislation of the province has been aimed at the chief justice to get him out of the way. The hon. Secretary of State has stated clearly what was said in the House of Commons by the Minister of Justice, but it is very easy to imagine that a condition might arise when it would be impossible for the chief justice of New Brunswick to accept a reappointment, if he were to be placed in a lower position than he occupies now. The proper plan and the fairest plan would have been to get the chief justice to give way, and then this arrangement, if it is a better arrangement than the present one—which may be doubted—could have been brought into effect. It seems rather strange that the parliament of Canada is compelled to submit to whatever may be done by the provinces with regard to courts of this kind. The local authorities may be influenced by particular feelings or particular motives, but apparently they have the power to sweep the whole Supreme Court of New Brunswick out of existence, if not for the absolutely avowed purpose of getting the chief justice out of the way, still that is generally believed to be the purpose. I can see that this Act is prepared for the purpose of enabling representatives of clients to stand as effectively before the new courts as they did before the old courts of New Brunswick and, to that extent, I think the Act can be justified; but as to the general principle which underlies the legislation it is abhorrent.

The motion was agreed to.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (97) An Act to amend the Act respecting the Senate and the House of Commons.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the suspension of the rule. He said the Bill is very short and speaks for itself. As hon. gentlemen know, in the Bill of last year there was a deduction of $15 a day for each day a member was absent from the sittings of the House. This Bill contains the following proviso :

Provided that each day during the session on which there has been no sitting of such House in consequence of its having adjourned over such day, or on which the member is in the place where the session is held but is by reason of his illness unable to attend any such session, for the purposes of such indemnity ; and a member shall, for the said purposes, be held to be in the place where the session is held whenever he is within ten miles of such place.

That disposes of the question which arose in reference to the payment at the end of the month. The days will be counted on which the House does not sit.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD—Then a member is to receive $15 a day when he is not present ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He is to be docked $15 a day for every day on which the House sits that he does not attend.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend will perceive from the reading of this clause that two classes of cases are dealt with.

Provided that each day during the session on which there has been no sitting of such House in consequence of its having adjourned over such day.

That is one case ; that is where there is an adjournment of the House. The other case is :

Or on which the member is in the place where the session is held but is by reason of his illness unable to atend any such sitting as aforesaid, shall be reckoned as a day of attendance at such session, for the purposes of such indemnity, and a member shall for the said purpose be held to be in the place where the session is held whenever he is within ten miles of such place.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS.

That would necessitate, during an adjournment, that a member should be within ten miles of Ottawa. That certainly was never intended.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it is intended to apply to a case of sickness.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It should be amended this way :—'And a member shall for the said latter purpose'. My hon. friend will observe that the ten miles applies to the two purposes, which was never intended. It is not necessary to be within ten miles of Ottawa when the Senate is adjourned.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—You can make the change in committee.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would direct the attention of my hon. friend from Halifax, who has an analytical mind, to that point.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Is that intended to apply only to persons who are ill and unable to attend ? According to my reading of this clause, it applies only to members who are absent through illness, and not on account of adjournments.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The illness clause is to cover the cases of gentlemen who are ill in Ottawa or within ten miles of Ottawa. Their time is to count, so long as they are ill and unable to attend. That is the object, whether the clause expresses it or not.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I wish to suggest a doubt as to whether the House has a right to amend this Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We can give ourselves the benefit of the doubt.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The necessity for this has arisen in this way ; the original Act, as it appears in the revised statutes, contains the same provision which we find in the proviso to this first clause. That is contained in section 26 of the old Act. Under that, there was very great abuse, because the proviso in section 26 allowed a member to count for his attendance every non-sitting day if he had attended once. The provision in the Bill before the House is different, and I think it is reasonable. It provides that no deduction shall be made at the rate of $15 a day for any day on which there has been no sitting of the House. I do not think there could be a deduction at any rate for a day on which there was no sitting. But it goes on and provides that, if a member is prevented by reason of illness from being here, there shall be no deduction. Those are both very reasonable propositions.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not think my hon. friend met the point raised by the hon. senator from Calgary. To what two cases—because it is in the plural—do the words 'said purposes' apply, except it be to both cases as pointed out by the hon. senator from Calgary? My information is that in the codifications of the laws the commissioners gave an interpretation to the old Act which would prevent the payment of any indemnity to a member during an adjournment, who was more than ten miles away from the place of sitting.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—That is during adjournments?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, during adjournments. The chief justice of the Supreme Court was the chairman of that Codification Committee, and I understand he gave that interpretation to the law. That could be ascertained, I presume, by reference of the provision of this Act to the commission, and it is just as well that we should know whether that be correct or not. There are a number of incongruities in this Bill. A senator or a member of the House of Commons, if his residence is within 10 miles of the parliament buildings, will be entitled to draw his whole indemnity, provided he is ill, without ever being in his seat at all; but if he live 11 miles beyond the parliament buildings he will not receive a cent. It is very singular that members of the profession, so eminent as the present Minister of Justice, could not draft a clause in an Act that an ordinary mortal could understand, and which could not be interpreted in a dozen ways. The hon. member from Halifax thinks that this being a money Bill we cannot very well amend it. Not very long ago we had a money Bill before the Senate, and objection was taken to one of its clauses affecting the payment of money to retired judges. The Senate threw it out. The House of Commons accepted the amendment which we made. Whether they acted on constitutional grounds, or were influenced by political considerations, I am not prepared to say. My own impression was then, that we transgressed the constitution. A majority in the Senate thought differently and the House of Commons acquiesced in our decision. Surely in a little matter of this kind, where it does not interfere in any way with the expenditure of money, but merely makes the law plain, there can be no objection. These are matters which can be discussed more freely in committee. There is another amendment to the Act which it would be difficult for any one to reconcile logically. If a man travels 400 miles he is to be treated differently from the man who travels 399 miles. I should like to call the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to a promise he made last session when a Bill similar to this was under consideration. I pointed out to him that, under the latter clause, a senator and a member of the House of Commons has to make an affidavit if he desires to draw his travelling and living expenses, while an ordinary civil servant, if he is sent out on business, has merely to make out his account and say it is correct. My recollection is that the hon. gentleman promised to have that amended this session, so that a senator or member of the House of Commons would not be placed in a more humiliating position than a civil servant.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Bill meets my hon. friend's point.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—'Upon the said statement being certified to by the clerk and sworn to by the member'. Read the last clause.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That was not in it when I last saw it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is there now.

The Bill was read the second time under suspension of rule 41.

RAILWAY ACT, 1903, AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST AND SECOND READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (62) An Act to amend the Railway Act, 1903.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As I have already mentioned, the greater part of this Bill consists of amendments to particular clauses of the Railway Act. In many cases it is simply a change in the phraseology ; in other cases there is a substitution which I shall be happy to point out to the House at another stage. The new points in the Bill are, giving the Board of Railway Commissioners jurisdiction over the express companies and their charges, and also to a certain extent meeting that feeling which was expressed pretty generally in the newspapers that the telephone systems should give connections to individual lines. It is only to a certain degree, as hon. gentlemen will see when they read the Bill. It was felt that the government had gone quite as far in that direction as was justifiable.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It will be understood that we may discuss the principle of the Bill in committee, because it is certainly a radical departure and introduces a principle almost equivalent to confiscation in some respects.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

The Bill was read the second time under suspension of the rules.

SITTINGS.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think I intimated, if the House would concur, that we might meet to-morrow at 11, and that we might have two sittings, one at 11 a.m. and the other at 3 p.m., so that Bills that came up might be given a stage.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What is to be gained by two sittings ? All the difficulties are overcome in the usual way by suspending the rules.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The same idea occurred to me, but I was rather acting on the suggestion of a friend of mine. I move that hereafter the House meet at eleven a.m. and three p.m. each day for the remainder of the session, each meeting to be a distinct sitting of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned till Eleven a.m. to-morrow.

THE SENATE

OTTAWA, Saturday, July 7, 1906.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

CHANGE OF HOUSE OF COMMONS RULES.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—According to the instructions of the House yesterday with reference to the change of rules in the House of Commons, the Standing Orders Committee met this morning and looked over the situation, and have asked me to report to the House that at this stage of the proceedings in the other House they did not like to make any recommendation to the Senate at the present time. They notice the difference in the scale of fees and the other differences proposed by the new rules in the House of Commons, but they failed to note that there would be any deadlock or any inconvenience to the public in the matter of legislation if the rules were adopted in the House of Commons as proposed. Therefore, as far as this is concerned, while we had only a short time to glance over the matter, the committee failed to note that there was anything to interfere with the legislation of the coming session if these rules were in force, with the exception, of course, that it will be far more expensive in future to obtain private legislation than it has been in the past so far as the Commons are concerned. As the session is drawing so near a close, the House can see that it was impossible for us to make any recommendation, and we will have to govern ourselves in future according to the course the House of Commons pursued. I think I am reflecting the opinions of the committee in making this statement ; if not, they will speak for themselves.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Did my hon. friend ascertain whether those rules would be promulgated during the present session so as to come into force at the beginning of next session ?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—That is the intention. I understand the question will be brought up on Monday in the House of Commons, and if the rules are adopted then, it is proposed they shall come into force at the beginning of next session.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—My own opinion is that the House of Commons, as a whole, will never adopt those rules, because they are extortionate. There is a most fearful Shylock at the bottom of the whole business; the charges are exhorbitant, and hon. gentlemen will find the House of Commons will never adopt them, so that we need not be the least afraid about it.

MUTUAL RESERVE COMMITTEE.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I beg to inquire of the government:

1. Was the account of James Thompson Patterson, an expert actuary from the city of New York, summoned to attend the investigation regarding the New York Mutual Reserve Life, on or about June, 1904, submitted to the Department of Justice for their opinion as to the payment of the amount demanded, in all $1,090?
2. What was the report of the Department of Justice?
3. He was paid in all $240.
4. Is it the government's intention to pay him any further sum in addition to the last stated amount? And if not, why not?

In putting this question I may state that Mr. Thompson Patterson, when in Ottawa, showed me a letter from one of the southwestern states, I forget which one it was, offering him $20 a day and expenses if he would go there and discharge the duties of an expert accountant in connection with the accounts of the state. He could not leave here because he was here under summons and had to remain in Ottawa. I deeply regret our treating a man of his distinguished ability in the parsimonious way we have been doing, putting him off with some $6 a day in lieu of an account of $1,090. That committee received very curt treatment at the hands of this House; but I felt it my duty to do my work faithfully as a member of it, and I think the committee, as a whole, rendered admirable service in exposing the rotten condition of the New York Mutual Reserve Company. I am not saying that the committee was composed of the best members of the House who might have been chosen to act upon it, but at all events they were the choice of the House and they did their work. I regret to think that the Senate of Canada should refuse to pay a man, after his being subpœnaed to attend here and brought all the way from New York. Mr. Thompson Patterson rendered admirable service; he kept a typewriter at his own expense all the time he was here, and he received the paltry sum of $6 a day, out of which to pay his board, for the services of his typewriter and for his own services. He got altogether $240 out of a claim for $1,090. If the rules of the Department of Justice preclude the possibility of paying that expert what is justly due him I would like to know why?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Was he summoned as a witness or as an expert?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—He was summoned as an expert, as a necessity, in order that the investigation might be carried on and the facts probed to the bottom. He was brought here for that purpose.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In order that we may carry out the rules hereafter, I wish to call attention to the fact that no question put to the government is in order if it makes a positive statement, as this third paragraph does.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I apologize for putting the question in that shape. I am not accustomed to putting questions, and did not know that I was violating any rule.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not accusing the hon. gentleman; I am merely pointing out that it is contrary to the rules of parliament.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not desire to take advantage of any technicality on this question, but I do dissent from the statement of my hon. friend, that Mr. Patterson was obliged to come here. He came here of his own free will, and was free to go at any time he liked; there was no power to compel him to remain. Had he not been a party to the investigation he would not have been here. What his motives were I do not propose to inquire into. The rule in those cases is laid down in Bourinot, page 561:

> Under this rule it is the practice to pay witnesses a travelling and hotel expenses, but nothing is necessarily allowed for loss of time even in the case of professional men.

The accounts were referred to the Department of Justice, and that department taxed the costs, and the taxation of Mr. Patterson was the sum which was paid. This House, for reasons of its own, overruled some portions of the decision of the Department of Justice, but so far as Mr. Patterson's account was concerned, no change was proposed to be made in it, and it would be idle to talk of making a change in it now. Certainly it would not be done with the approval of the Minister of Justice.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I am not in a position to challenge the statement of the hon. Secretary of State with regard to Mr. Patterson's coming here and not being subpœnaed. I am only trusting to the statement put in my hands. It may be incorrect, but if I am spared to return here next session, we shall hear more of this matter.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This witness can scarcely be said to be an expert. An expert witness is one who is disinterested, and will give evidence on the science of any subject on which he undertakes to speak. This witness was a person who had been in litigation with the company and one of the most active opponents of the company, ;and it would certainly be doing violence to one's sense of justice to conceive of Mr. Patterson coming here as an expert, speaking disinterestedly as to the operations of the company.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Mr. Patterson keeps an office in New York, and is an expert accountant. He also is employed by the largest firms in New York and throughout the United States as an expert, and he left the company simply because he could not conscientiously swallow their transactions. That is why he tendered his resignation.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman surely knows that no process that we could issue could compel Mr. Patterson to come here from New York ?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—That may be true.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He came at the instance of those who were conspiring with him.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to point out the danger of recognizing witnesses as experts. I think I succeeded in incurring the eternal enmity of a gentleman in Toronto who was subpœnaed as a witness in the Cook case.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Was he an expert ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am just going to state the facts. He was a lawyer, and as a lawyer I suppose would be considered an expert in law. The committee ordered him to be paid in accordance with the rule which the hon. Secretary of State has laid down, and which is confirmed by Bourinot. He claimed $50 a day, not as an expert, but as a legal gentleman.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Professional.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, a professional gentleman. My answer to him was, as chairman of the committee, 'You were summoned here as a witness to tell this committee what you knew of this transaction, in reference to an effort which was alleged to have been made to get Mr. Cook to pay $10,000 for a seat in the Senate.' He gave his evidence, but he claimed the $50 a day and, not many months ago, when I was in Toronto, we happened to be in the same street car, and he cooly told me he could live without it, and I told him I was very glad of it, and he said that he considered it an insult ; he had never taken the amount which was allowed him, and did not intend to do so. I would advise my hon. friend to let his client, if I may so call him, or Mr. Patterson, assume the same position.

SAFETY OF SHIPS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (48) An Act to amend the Act respecting the Safety of Ships and the Prevention of Accidents on board thereof.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Has my hon. friend the Secretary of State satisfied himself on the point he mentioned yesterday ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes ; I am advised that it is in accordance with the Imperial Act. However, I think it only goes into operation on the proclamation of the Governor in Council, and further care will be taken.

On subclause (b) of clause 1,

(b) any more than five spare spars, or store spars made, dressed and finally prepared for use, or not so dressed and prepared.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I would call the attention of the hon. gentleman in charge of this Bill to the fact that a ship was allowed to carry five spars or store spars made, dressed and finally prepared for use. but they are not allowed to carry any other quality of heavy timber on the deck. Is that it ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—There is no change in the existing law in this respect.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Then we have subsection (c) where a ship is allowed to carry a certain amount of deck load, and in addition to that it is allowed to carry over the poop three extra feet in height of light timber. Is that not so ?

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—Yes.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Is that not too much ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Here is a diagram which the hon. gentleman can look at. They can fill up to a height of three feet according to the present law, and it is proposed to allow them to fill up the space between that three feet and the hurricane deck. They can put deals or spars in there.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I think they can put over the height of the poop or deck house three extra feet of light stuff. I think the clause reads like that.

The clause was adopted.

On the question : Shall the Bill be reported ?

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—Perhaps I ought to say, since my hon. friend was good enough to hold the Bill over until to-day so that I might communicate with a firm in St. John, who are large ship-owners, that I have heard from them. and they have expressed themselves as satisfied with its provisions.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN, from the committee. reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

SUPREME COURT OF JUDICATURE OF NEW BRUNSWICK BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (224) An Act relating to the Supreme Court of Judicature of the province of New Brunswick.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Has the hon. Secretary of State any further information to give the House than that which he gave the other day ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, I have not.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I notice by the newspaper reports that this Bill has caused a good deal of discussion on account of want of information which was asked from the government in reference to their action in connection with those who are now judges in the province of New Brunswick. It has been intimated that this whole scheme was for the purpose of getting rid of a certain judge. Whether that be the case or not, outsiders cannot say; but I was under the impression that the Constitutional Act provided that a judge could not be removed from the position he held except he was impeached before parliament. As I understand the case before the House—and if I am not right I would like to be set right—that is a provision of the constitution. Could the government, under this Bill, dispense with the services of the present judges of New Brunswick ? Presuming that they cannot do so under the constitution, unless the judges resign at a certain age, is it the intention to get rid of the active work of the present judges who are on the bench in that province by appointing others to supersede them, and thereby duplicate the number of judges, or a certain portion of the number in that province ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The question is a very natural one, and I can quite appreciate that the discussion which took place in the other House would have created a natural inquiry as to the object to be attained. I never heard of this Bill personally until I saw it introduced in the other Chamber by Hon. Mr. Aylesworth, either yesterday or the day before. It has never been brought up in council, and although I asked my colleague from New Brunswick if he could give me any information, he did not seem to be able to do so. The hon. gentleman is quite correct in reference to the action ordinarily taken where a judge because of misbehaviour or misconduct has to be got rid of. It is done by impeachment in parliament.

Fortunately, in this country we have had very few such cases. I think two only within my recollection have arisen, and it was not necessary to pursue the effort to get rid of the judge. When it became known that public opinion was so strongly pronounced as to justify the House of Commons in taking action, the judge, I think, withdrew of his own mere motion. In reference to the constitutional question, I will read the clause in which powers of appointment to provincial courts are given. It is subsection 14 of the section 92, and reads as follows :

In each province the legislature may exclusively make laws in relation to matters coming within the classes of subjects next hereinafter enumerated, that is to say—

And the 14 subsection reads in this way :

The administration of justice in the province, including the constitution, maintenance and organization of provincial courts, both of civil and criminal jurisdiction, and including procedure in civil matters in those courts.

So that their powers were absolute. They can sweep away their courts there, and apparently need not inaugurate other courts. It is to be presumed the good sense of the community would not allow any such action. This morning I endeavoured to get the information from the journals to find how this question came up, and I do not find there was a division in the House on it. There were two pages, I think, of the proceedings of the House which I have not been able to get, which had not been sent. When the order for the second reading of the Bill came up, it was discharged, and the Bill was referred to a special committee of five members, consisting of Messrs. Tweedie, Pugsley, Allan, Hane and Clarke. Then the House went into committee, and there is no indication in the Votes and Proceedings. I have looked over them——

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman is speaking of the Votes and Proceedings of the legislature of New Brunswick ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes ; I want to find out what the popular opinion down there was. One would naturally suppose there would be a strong protest, and public opinion would be aroused if improper action was being taken by the legislature. That body is certainly amenable to public feeling, and the people of New Brunswick are certainly up to the highest level of any people in the world. I failed, however, to find any protest. The committee reported the Bill, and it was read a third time without any division. Two pages of the report are missing, and it is possible that on the adoption of the report of the committee there was a division. However, I could not find that there was.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Some of the New Brunswick members of the House of Commons, perhaps, had taken those two pages to read ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, they were taken from the Secretary of State's office. I asked the official in charge of them, and he said they had never come to the office. Therefore, the entire responsibility for this action rests with the government and legislature of New Brunswick. We could do no more and could do no less than to pass a Bill of this kind dealing with matters over which we have no jurisdiction. In the formation of the new court it becomes necessary to refer the laws enacted by the parliament of Canada to the new court just as they stood before the former court. I am unable to give any further explanation of this Bill. When the responsibility arises, the government of Canada must assume it in dealing with the question if it should arise. The Act is not yet in force. It only comes in force by proclamation of the executive council of the province.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD—It is within the power of the Dominion government to appoint all those men if they see fit or to appoint any of them.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—I do not understand that this Bill displaces any of the judges of the New Brunswick courts. The judges get their appointment from the Dominion government, and the only thing the local government can do in this case, even if they are disposed to do it, is not to assign to some of the judges the work of the court. The judges could only be removed by impeachment, and the bench of New Brunswick will remain as at present until vacancies occur.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not know that my hon. friend's conclusions are quite in accord with constitutional law, because I find they have abolished the courts for which those gentlemen were judges, and they provide in their Act who shall take their places—the chief justice and others judges of the court will be appointed. The Act of the legislature of New Brunswick provides that the persons to be appointed judges of the court shall be barristers-at-law of at least ten years standing at the bar of New Brunswick. So it would indicate that they had in view displacing entirely the present judges. It absolutely ignores, as far as the legislature could possibly do it, the existence of any judges in New Brunswick.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—The provincial legislature has no right in respect to the appointment of the chief justice. That is entirely in the hands of the Dominion government.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As far as the legislature of New Brunswick are concerned they have simply abolished the courts of which the present judges were heads. Under their law, new persons could be appointed, persons not on the bench now, because they distinctly say that persons to be appointed judges of the court they are now forming shall be barristers-at-law of at least ten years standing at the bar of New Brunswick. Then in reference to priority, it provides that, 'The chief justice shall have rank and precedence over all other judges.'

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—As I understand it, the local authorities cannot make the appointments. The appointments have to be made by the Dominion government.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD—That does not alter the fact that the present judges of New Brunswick are out of business.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. The hon. gentleman puts it in a very pointed way. The judges have to be reappointed to courts which do not exist. The courts over which they have presided are swept away.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—I do not understand that the judges of the Supreme Court of New Brunswick will be out of office as judges. I understand that, under this Act, they will be assigned to new duties by virtue of the provisions of the British North America Act, that the local legislature have the right to assign the duties. But they will be judges still ; there will be no vacancies to fill up unless the number of judges is increased. I do not understand that the present judges vacate their positions as judges ; they still retain their position as judges, but if the local legislature establishes no courts they will have nothing to do. This Act does not cancel their appointment.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It does, for the reason if the courts are organized these judges could not act at once ; they must all be reappointed.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—By the Dominion government ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes ; and even the oath of office is prescribed.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—There are six judges now in the province of New Brunswick. If the government does not appoint them, but appoints new men those six judges would be judges at large drawing salaries. That cannot be touched, but if the government of Canada reappoint these six judges, and they do not choose to accept the offices, they will still be judges at large with their salaries. That I think is clear.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, they would be superannuated.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—That would be the position, and there might be twelve judges in New Brunswick.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That anomaly could not arise. Naturally, if the local legislature sweep away a court that had been in existence, and the federal government, under the authority of parliament, appoint judges and the provincial legislature displaces them, our duty would be to superannuate them. But to show how thoroughly the legislature dealt with this subject, they require the judges, when appointed, to come under new commissions, and to take an oath, the form of which is here prescribed. So it is absolutely within the contemplation of the legislature that the judges have to be appointed, and they have provided, as I have read from a section of the Act, of whom the court is to be composed—barristers of at least ten years' standing. The form of oath shows that the present judges are absolutely, under the statute, wiped out as far as the legislature of New Brunswick could do it. They throw the entire responsibility on the government of the Dominion as to who shall be appointed. Neither the legislature nor the government of the province has any right to dictate to this government who shall be appointed as judges. That rests entirely with the federal power, and this government must take the responsibility of it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I was about to observe that my hon. friend can scarcely divest his government of the responsibility which they really assume in bringing down this legislation. There is nothing objectionable, so far as I can ascertain, in what has been done by the New Brunswick legislature. That legislation has been duplicated in many of the other provinces. The procedure there has become somewhat antequated, and, through the necessity for the adoption of a more modern procedure, they have of necessity to wipe out the existing courts. That throws upon this government the responsibility of meeting that condition of affairs by proper legislation, which I submit to the House has not been done. It seems to me that before this Bill was introduced by this government, before they assumed the responsibility of acting under the New Brunswick statute, they should have brought down to parliament this session legislation to meet the peculiar condition of affairs which has arisen, and that has not been done. In the first place, some principle should have been indicated to the House as to the reappointment of the present judges. There is no doubt that through the abolition of the courts in New Brunswick, that is of the civil courts, these judges, as my hon. friend has very aptly said, are out of business. There is no doubt that the government of the day would, therefore, be at liberty to appoint new judges to discharge the judicial duties of that province; but I fancy that this government will scarcely take the responsibility upon itself of leaving the present judges without anything to do and appointing new judges. That would be a very objectionable precedent—especially, as my hon. friend from St. John pointed out yesterday, to appoint a new chief justice of the province. Yet this government has the right to do it. The government has never announced to parliament in any way the principle which it will adopt in reference to the appointment of the judges. There can only be one conclusion—that is, that these judges should be reappointed. The government has refused, not only in the other House but also in the Senate, to state on what principle they intend to act in this connection. I contend that this legislation should have been supplemented by a provision declaring that the government should have authority to appoint the present judges to the new judicial positions which have been created under the provincial statute, and in the absence of that legislation I am at a loss to understand—if as my hon. friend from St. John has suggested the judges refuse to accept office under the provincial Act, what the consequence will be. I do not think that we have any machinery under the Act at present to meet this condition of affairs by which the government can compel the present judges, notwithstanding the non-expiration of their time for superannuation, to take office—at least to accept the judicial position—under the provincial statute, and yet at the same time my hon. friend the Secretary of State seems to labour under the opinion that these judges can now be superannuated. With all due deference, I beg to express dissent from that proposition, because the present Act will not permit of the superannuation of a judge except, as I understand, under two conditions, namely, that of illness or that of the expiration of his time for superannuation. This condition of affairs is certainly not provided for in the Dominion Act. Therefore, I think the Act is certainly wanting in the respect which I have pointed out, and it illustrates the fact that was first pointed out by my hon. friend the Secretary of State, as to the unwisdom of introducing legislation without the government having considered it in all its ramifications. My hon. friend is candid enough to say that he as a member of the government was not aware that such legislation was before parliament until it was introduced in this House yesterday. It, therefore, must be apparent that the responsibility for this Bill has been avoided by the government though it has been assumed by some one minister without consultation with his associates. It seems to me that this is a condition of affairs that is extremely reprehensible, not only reprehensible with reference to ill-digested legislation being introduced into this House, but possibly involving grave injustice to parties who may be affected by reason of it. This legislation should have been considered in all its phases, and certainly a very much more comprehensive Bill should have been introduced into parliament this session than that contained within the four corners of the present measure.

Hon. Mr. POWER—When I heard the speech made yesterday by the hon. gentleman from St. John (Hon. Mr. Ellis) and the earlier part of the discussion to-day, it struck me that this legislation was of a very peculiar character; but when I come to examine the statute of the province of New Brunswick I find my objections are to a very considerable extent removed. What they are doing down in New Brunswick is not making an effort to get rid of certain judges who are personally obnoxious——

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I have not said that; I do not think any one said that.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I have not intimated that the hon. gentleman has. I am quite aware that he did not, but there was something said to that effect in the course of the discussion yesterday. What they are doing in New Brunswick, where, up to the present time, they have had the old common law practice, is introducing the judicature system, and that necessarily involves the reconstruction of the court. But I rise chiefly for the purpose of calling attention to the closing sentence in subsection 5 of the provincial Act, which reads as follows:—

Provided that nothing in this subsection contained shall be held to apply to or in any manner affect the judges of the existing Supreme Court, who may be appointed as judges of the court hereby created.

These are the qualifications that precede the appointment of the barrister of ten years standing and so on. These provisions do not affect the existing judges who may be appointed as judges of the court hereby created. I am disposed to agree with the leader of the opposition in thinking that the Dominion statute is somewhat defective, inasmuch as it might have provided that the present judges of the existing courts should be appointed to the new courts, but I notice that in the discussion in another place the Minister of Justice said that it was the intention of the government to reappoint the existing judges, and that, of course, in a sense is a pledge. From the general character of the discussion it is apparent that this measure has not probably been as fully considered by the government as it might have been. I suppose that the New Brunswick government brought the matter before the Dominion government only a short time ago, and it occurs to me that we would be doing excellent work in this House if we were to add a clause to this effect:

This Act shall only come into force upon a proclamation of the Governor in Council.

So that they will have time to think about it. If we pass this Bill without any suspending clause of that kind, as soon as the Act is assented to, the local government of New Brunswick will issue their proclamation and the Act will come into operation at once; but it will be better that the government here should have time to consider, even after we have enacted the legislation.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I fail to have read the statement made by the hon. gentleman just now, that the Minister of Justice or any other minister made a declaration that he intended to reappoint or to assign the duties to these judges under the New Brunswick law. On the contrary, the statement was made repeatedly by ministers of the Crown in the lower House that they were not in a position to say what they would do, and, in the last discussion in the House upon that question, the Minister of Finance stated distinctly that they were not in a position to answer the question which was put to them as to what they propose to do under the circumstances. He then added that the matter would be considered by the government when it was necessary to allot the duties of the judges, or to appoint new ones, and that they would take the responsibility of their action and leave it to the judgment of the House. That was the declaration made by the Minister of Finance, in answer to the question which has been put in this House in relation to what the government propose to do in reference to the present judges. The Commons are still in the dark, and my hon. friend the Secretary of State has just made the same declaration here, but he did not go quite as far. This is another illustration of the irresponsible manner in which the present government conduct the affairs of the country. This is not the first time that I have called attention to the fact as hon. gentleman know. This loose administration of affairs, more particularly upon questions which affect the administration of justice of the whole province is open to condemnation. The Secretary of State tells us that he, as a member of the cabinet, and as a minister equally responsible with the Minister of Justice who introduced this Bill knew nothing about it, never discussed it in council, and, until it was laid before parliament, he was in utter ignorance of what they intended to do. Is it possible, under responsible government, where every member of the government is responsible for what is done by the cabinet, and for every Bill that is laid before parliament by a member of the government, that one member, let him be Minister of Justice if you please, can draft a Bill affecting the whole jurisprudence of a province, without the consent and knowledge of his colleagues? Does he do it upon his own individual responsibility, or has he consulted the Premier or any other of his colleagues? One thing is certain and that is that he did not consult the whole of them. It is not laid before council and hence one of his colleagues, the Secretary of State, one responsible for his act, is placed in the humiliating position as I consider, of informing the Senate that an important government measure which he himself introduced and endeavours to have passed through parliament, knew nothing of it until it was placed in his hands. It is another evidence of the impropriety of the manner in which the present government are conducting the affairs of the country. If one minister likes to assume the responsibility of everything his colleagues do without knowing anything about it until it is done, that is their business and they assume the responsibility.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Basing my judgment on constitutional law, I must dissent entirely from the doctrine laid down by the hon. leader of the opposition and the hon. gentleman from Belleville. There was no action to be taken by the government; there was no course to be adopted other than the production of this Bill. We have no control over the maintenance or organization of the courts of New Brunswick. That is a matter resting entirely with the province. They have not chosen to pass a law putting this system into force and therefore this Government has nothing to consider. It was purely a matter for the Department of Justice; there was no constitutional point involved. No government is wise or prudent in foreshadowing what its policy is going to be in the future. The Department of Justice found that the organization of the courts in New Brunswick was liable to be displaced, and probably would be displaced at a time when parliament was not sitting. Therefore, it was their duty to bring in a Bill simply covering the technical question, providing that the subject-matters which this parliament has jurisdiction over shall be subject to the new courts when the law is changed by the action of the New Brunswick government. That is all this Act provides for; it could go no further; it ought to go no further. When the contingency arises of the new courts coming into existence, this government will then have to take action and it will be responsible to the people of Canada to discharge that duty in a manner to meet approval; but I never heard of any legislation anticipating a measure of this kind being placed on the statute-book.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend entirely misapprehends the position which I have taken. I took no exception to the provincial legislation, or to this government giving force and effect to it. What I did say was that, in view of the provincial legislation coming into force, this government should have given due consideration to all the possibilities which would occur. This government has not considered in all its phases the effect of the provincial legislation. The Bill which has been introduced should have been very much more comprehensive. It should have taken power to reappoint the present judges.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They do not need authority to do that. They can appoint them all.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Will my hon. friend say, if these judges refuse a reappointment to the new courts, what will be the position of the government? You would have six judges in New Brunswick not doing anything except administering criminal law, and six judges appointed by this government to carry out the duties assigned to them uner the new provincial legislation. The legislation of New Brunswick has certainly not in it anything objectionable; but I do take objection to the paucity of the legislation brought down by this government.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—I observe in the debates of the other House, if it is permissible to refer to them, that an inquiry was made by one gentleman who said:

I understand we have the pledge of the government that if this legislation is carried out the present judges will be appointed.

The Minister of Justice in answer to this said:

I have said that it is the intention to appoint the judges of the new court from the judges who are now in office under the present law.

That is an official statement made by the Minister of Justice.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is only another evidence of the members of the government not acting in concert. The Minister of Finance stated that he knew nothing about it and would not take the responsibility of answering.

The clause was adopted.

Hon. Mr. POWER—In order that the various members of the government may have a chance to inform themselves on the subject-matter of these appointments, I move that the following clause be added to the Bill:

This Act shall only come into force upon proclamation of the Governor in Council.

The Supreme Court of New Brunswick has been in existence now, since, I think, the year 1784; and the judicial business of the province has been fairly well conducted. Although it is a good thing to introduce the judicature system, they could get on there for another month or so while the government was making inquiries as to what action had better be taken with respect to filling the vacant places on the bench. In Nova Scotia, I do not remember what the exact wording of the enactment was, but all the judges of the Supreme Court were constituted judges of the new court as a matter of course, and that has been the practice adopted everywhere.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I cannot accept the amendment; it is an imputation on the government that they are going to act unwisely or imprudently. There was nothing for them to do to provide for bringing the law into force at the earliest possible moment, so as to be prepared for any emergency. If this law receives its assent in the early part of next week, and the government of New Brunswick choose to issue their proclamation, this government would then be instantly in a position to make the appointment. We require no information; we are fully informed of all the conditions and circumstances which exist, as far as they can be known. It would not be proper to wait and make inquiry. We shall act according to the responsibilities which the constitution imposes upon us, when the time comes to consider the subject.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman told us a few moments ago that he knew nothing whatever about this matter until the Bill was introduced in the House.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I did not need to know anything more.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If the hon. gentleman is prepared to legislate with his eyes shut, he cannot expect his colleagues in the Senate to do so. I think it is the duty of the government to take time and, not as the hon. gentleman suggests, to have these appointments made at the earliest possible moment. As soon as you are sure that you are doing right, then go ahead as soon as possible. I have the greatest respect for the Supreme Court of New Brunswick. That court has been in operation for 120 years now, and has administered justice, on the whole, in a very satisfactory way, and they can get along for a week or two beyond the prorogation of this parliament so as to give the government time to consider what they will do. There is a condition of things existing in New Brunswick of which some hon. gentlemen have spoken, and I think it would be regrettable if the government of Canada, influenced by the feeling against one or two of the judges should fail to reappoint them. There is a saying that hard cases make bad law, and I should be very sorry that any member of the Supreme Court should not be reappointed unless he is guilty of some substantial misconduct which would disqualify him. Otherwise, even if a gentleman's temper may not be very good or his manner may not be all that it ought to be, I should be very sorry that any judge should fail of reappointment on any ground of that kind. I think that my amendment instead of indicating want of confidence in the government, points in the other direction.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was not necessary that this should be brought before council. We do not take cognizance of it until the proper time comes. The Department of Justice felt that legislation should be passed in order to enable the government to take it up when it arose. The sooner the law is brought into operation the better, because it must be dealt with promptly. They may bring that law into operation on Wednesday next, and we are not going to issue another proclamation.

Hon. Mr. POWER—But surely the government of New Brunswick will not bring their law into operation until some provision is made for the judges? We have a statement made here by one member of the government who is supposed to represent his colleagues, that he knows nothing about this measure and has not inquired into it. Is it not a right thing that the whole council should have an opportunity to consider this matter. If for instance one member of the government wishes this measure put through, it is just barely possible that that member of the government may be in error and that when his colleagues come to consider the matter they will think that they had better not take the line which he has indicated. This Bill has been read the second time; the principle is adopted. The amendment proposes simply that this Bill shall not go into operation until the proclamation is issued by the Governor in Council. How on earth a member of the government can say that that indicates want of confidence in the government, I cannot imagine. It is not moved in that sense, and I hope the government will accept it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We have not been consulted at all.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I will not be charged with any lack of confidence in the government, but the hon. Secretary of State must have heard during this debate sufficient reasons to justify the asking for a little more time in the matter, or at any rate to give the government an opportunity and for him to have a chance to consult with his colleagues and cover the whole ground. It is not an unusual request which the amendment carries, and I beg leave to second it.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—This is a matter which applies exclusively to the province of New Brunswick, but I must confess my amazement at the announcement made by the hon. Secretary of State, that where a local government choose to recast their courts, the judges who have occupied the position of judges in previous courts are virtually out of office. I have no idea that a local legislature has the power of doing that. When Sir Oliver Mowat, for instance, consolidated the courts, the Court of Chancery, as a court, was abolished, and several other courts were abolished, but I never heard that all the judges were virtually deprived of their positions by the action of the Ontario legislature. It appears they must have been, and that they were reappointed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They were reappointed the same day that the amendment to the Act passed.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—It is a very singular thing if a province has that power.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, yes, they have the power.

The committee divided on the amendment, which was declared lost, contents 7; no count of non-contents.

Hon. Sir JOHN CARLING, from the committee, reported the Bill without amendment.

The Bill was then read the third time and passed.

The Senate adjourned until Three p.m. to-day.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (97) An Act to amend the Act respecting the Senate and House of Commons.

(In the Committee.)

On clause 1,

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This clause says that:

For each session of parliament hereafter held a deduction at the rate of fifteen dollars per day shall be made from such sessional allowance for every day on which the member does not attend a sitting of the House of which he is a member if the House sits on such day.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is the law now.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is not the law now, exactly. This clause repeals the Act of 1905 in part, and substitutes the clause which I have read. What I want to call attention to is the proviso. It says:

Provided that each day during the session on which there has been no sitting of such House in consequence of its having adjourned over such day.

That is one provision. Then it goes on:

Or on which the member is in the place where the session is held, but is by reason of his illness unable to attend any such sitting as aforesaid.

That is a provision to re-enact the law as it existed last year, simply providing for the payment of the sessional indemnity to a gentleman who is ill within ten miles of Ottawa and not able to be present. Then it says that his time shall be reckoned as a day of attendance at such session—that is while he is sick—'for the purposes of such indemnity, and a member shall for the said purposes'—that is the two purposes—'be held to be in the place where the session is held whenever he is within ten miles of such place.' It is quite clear, on the reading of it, that during an illness or an adjournment of the House, unless the senator or member of the House of Commons is within ten miles of the place where parliament is sitting, he would not be entitled to the per diem allowance. Now, let me read it by eliminating a portion of it, this way:

Provided that each day during the session on which there has been no sitting of such House in consequence of its having adjourned over such day, shall be reckoned as a day of attendance at such session, for the purposes of such indemnity; and a member shall, for the said purposes, be held to be in the place where the session is held whenever he is within ten miles of such place.

Then the other provision is, in case he is ill within ten miles of the place where parliament is in session. If the suggestion made by the leader of the opposition were adopted, it would carry out what I think the intention of the government was in framing this measure, by introducing in the third line from the bottom the words: 'And a member shall for the said latter purpose.' Then it would only apply to the case of absence from the city by a senator who was ill and could not attend. Again, I find in the next section that for each session of parliament hereafter held there shall be allowed to each member of the Senate and House of Commons the actual living or transportation expenses and 'reasonable living expenses.' I should like to ask why the word reasonable is inserted there? If you were going into court, living expenses would be held to be reasonable expenses. There is no other inference to be drawn from this sentence, and that is, that a member's living expenses would be unreasonable.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—If he drank champagne, for instance?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—One senator might be satisfied with a little porridge and a cup of coffee for breakfast; another one might want coffee, boiled eggs, mutton chops and tenderloin, which would cost five times as much. Would that be considered unreasonable? Reasonable living expenses would, I take it to be, the expenses incident to the position a man occupied and the manner in which he had been living during his life. Then subsection 2 reads :

2. Any member residing at a greater distance than four hundred miles from Ottawa may commute such allowance for travelling and living expenses, receiving in lieu thereof an allowance of fifteen dollars per day for each day necessarily occupied in the journey between his place of residence and Ottawa, going and coming, once each way, the day of departure and the day of arrival being counted each as a full day.

I do not know whether any hon. gentleman has taken the trouble to see what the practical working of that clause would be. Let me give one or two illustrations. A gentleman lives in Sarnia. The distance from his place of abode to Ottawa is 425 miles. He would take two days to reach Ottawa, and two days to return. Under the present Bill he would receive $60, which would be $15 a day for four days. A gentleman living in London, which is only 54 miles less distance than Sarnia, it being 371 miles. The most probably that he could collect, though it takes him two days to reach the city, would be $15, so that the senator living 54 miles further west would draw $60 for coming and returning, while the senator living 54 miles east of Sarnia would receive only $15, and they would take the same time precisely to reach this city. Take another case. From Windsor to Ottawa is 474 miles. That also takes two days. He would receive $60. The senator living in London, which is 371 miles, being about 100 miles less, though it takes him just as long to reach the capital as the man who lives in Windsor would receive $15, while his neighbour living westward, taking no longer time to reach Ottawa, would receive $60. That does not seem to me to be reasonable. Then let me refer to the senator from the Yukon. There are no travelling expenses allowed—that is, no passes. From Dawson by boat to Whitehorse is 400 or 500 miles ; he could have no pass, under the law, on the steamer. He would have to pay his expenses. Then he would have to take the railway at Whitehorse and travel until he reached the summit of the mountain, where he would strike a United States railway on which he would have to pay his fare until he reaches Skagway ; then from Skagway by boat it takes about two days to reach Vancouver, and he would have to pay his fare on the steamer. Reaching Vancouver, he would then travel on his pass eastward. That is an exceptional case, but just one of the cases that is not provided for by this Act.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Twelve days from Dawson to Ottawa.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am talking about the effect of it—not the time it would take. You can make the calculation in that way. I do not know whether the hon. Secretary of State has noticed this provision of the proposed law. In the first place, in the present Act the following sentence is not enacted :

After the first day on which the member attends as aforesaid.

Then his time shall be counted for the payment of the indemnity from that time. That is, he would have to be present 31 days after the first day that he sits. This Act makes no such provision, and a close reading of it I think will lead you to the conclusion as it has myself, that you are allowed the $15 per day for every day that there is no sitting and for adjournments. That is Saturdays and Sundays and for an adjournment of a week or two. I venture the opinion that, under this Act, a man who never attends a sitting at all during a four months session, would be enabled under the wording of this Act to draw his fifteen dollars a day for every Saturday, every Sunday and every day of an adjournment, because there is no provision for his taking his seat. There is a provision, however, for paying $15 per diem for every day that the House does not sit, through adjournment or Sundays, &c. Consequently the question is—and I do not know whether the attention of the hon. Secretary of State was called to it or not—whether, under the wording of this Act, a senator would not be enabled to draw pay for every day the Senate did not sit from the time of its opening until its close, less than the 31 days. It is a point that I would suggest to my hon. friend for his consideration before finally passing this Bill. One of the principal difficulties that I should like to see removed could be remedied by adding after subsection 2 a few words, to make it read in this way :

2. Any member residing at a greater distance than four hundred miles from Ottawa may commute such allowance for travelling and living expenses, receiving in lieu thereof an allowance of fifteen dollars per day for each day and the members of the Senate at the rate of —— dollars per day.

I do not say what it should be. That would place them on an equal footing. Take the hon. gentleman from Toronto. He takes a whole day. He is not allowed for that day under this law, but the hon. gentleman who lives 400 miles from Ottawa draws his $15 for that day. Now, in order to put them all on an equal footing, I submit that these few words would accomplish the object which I have in view. I am not finding fault with the repeal—I wish that distinctly understood—of that portion of the old Act which enabled a man to charge for railway fares that he never paid. I think that is quite legitimate, but when we come to that clause, having made these remarks, I will submit a short amendment which I think will be an improvement, and make it a little more equitable than it is. I apologize to the House for having occupied so much time, but, having looked into this matter, I may say that as it presents itself to me it is exceedingly illogical, not fair to some and a little too fair to others ; therefore, I have taken the liberty of making these suggestions to the House.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—It appears to be a difficult matter to arrange the travelling expenses. Very much depends upon the decency and the honesty of the member, under present conditions, whether he draws exactly what is right or whether he makes an effort to draw more than what is honestly due him. There may be men who, perhaps, would be guilty of doing that. I do not say that there are. However, there appears to be a great difficulty in settling the question as to what travelling allowance should be made, whether it should be so much a mile.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I think it would be more in order if we discussed that point when we came to it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, and there are some other amendments to be moved.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—There is another point. I think the fifteen days absence which is now allowed to members under the ample allowance that is paid to senators should be wiped out.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I agree with the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Look at the empty seats in this Chamber. What is the reason of it ? The reason is, because members are absent and are taking advantage of that fifteen days. They should be here to attend to the public duties as senators of this Dominion. We will not have a regular attendance in this Chamber or in the House of Commons until we wipe out that fifteen days allowance, and I say that it should be wiped out here and now, and let every member understand that there are certain duties which he owes to the country. When he accepts the commission of a senator he pledges himself to discharge his duties faithfully. In view of that, when a man absents himself, unless he is sick and unable to attend, there should be no allowance of ten days or fifteen days. Wipe it out and deduct from every man's sessional indemnity the days he is absent. We ought to be honest with the country as well as honest with ourselves. I am prepared now, if the government accept the suggestion, to move that the allowance be wiped out. At the commencement of the session there was a general feeling that there was to be no more ten days or fifteen days reduction, and there was a fairly good attendance, until now, near the end, a number of gentlemen having put in the thirty-one days will draw their full sessional indemnity allowing the fifteen days. They have gone home, and a few of us are left here to finish up the public business.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We cannot introduce it in this Bill. It has no connection with this measure.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED moved that the nineteenth line, between the word 'said' and the word 'purposes' the word 'latter' be inserted, and the letter 's' be stricken out of the word 'purposes.' He said this amendment will make this clause read in this way :

Or on which the member is in the place where the session is held but is by reason of his illness unable to attend any such sitting as aforesaid, shall be reckoned as a day of attendance at such session, for the purposes of such indemnity; and a member shall, for the said latter purpose be held to be in the place where the session is held whenever he is within ten miles of such place.

My hon. friend will observe, if he reads the latter section, that there are two conditions there. If the Bill passes as it is at present, it would necessitate members remaining within ten miles of Ottawa during an adjournment or lose their indemnity. That is quite obvious.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That was not intended.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The ten-mile limit is only intended to apply to those who are sick while the House is sitting, and if my hon. friend will make the change I have proposed, it will remedy the defect.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There can be no harm in the amendment.

Hon. Mr. JONES—It will make it perfectly clear. It is doubtful now.

The amendment was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The leader of the opposition has pointed out that the limit of ten miles should apply only to the latter part of the clause. Does the sickness depend on the limit or the limit on the sickness? Supposing a man in Kingston is at death's door during a session of parliament, he cannot get his indemnity, but if he is within ten miles of Ottawa he can. Do you not think that is improper? Because you happen to be laid up in the hospital here instead of at home more than ten miles from the capital, you get your indemnity, while if you live eleven miles from here you may be stricken down and get no indemnity. What is the difference between the two cases? Just one mile?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I will point out the objection. That paragraph was the old law previous to 1905. The difficulty I see is that if a member is allowed an indemnity when sick at home, I, with all due deference to the conscientiousness of senators, will undertake to say that there will be slim attendance of senators here.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I was sick sixteen days this session, and also the number of days allowed; consequently I have attended very industriously up to the last. I do not see why a gentleman fit to be a member of this Senate should be put down as a man whose veracity cannot be depended upon. Make the law as stringent as you like; require positive proof of a gentleman's allowance by a doctor's certificate, or by his own statement on oath, but to provide that a man who is taken ill at the capital or within ten miles of the capital is more truthful than one who is a hundred miles away from the capital, is an aspersion on the character of the Senate. I differ from the hon. gentleman from Calgary; I think that the standard of the Senate with regard to truth is higher. Any man who would be mean enough to make a statement here on oath that he was ill and unable to attend, when he was not ill, is not a man who should occupy a seat in this House, and I do not believe that there is such a man in the Senate.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The House of Commons has voted the indemnity where the member has been sick and unable to come here.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not think that this discussion is calculated to raise the Senate in the estimation of the public. We have no right to amend a money Bill and this is a money Bill. Why should we talk about it in the way we are doing? The hon. gentleman from Kingston objects to this provision, with respect to the ten-mile limit. I call attention to the fact that that limit has been in our legislation since 1867.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It should not be any longer.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I suppose some pains were taken when this Act was originally framed, with a view to getting something which would be fair and reasonable, and there has not been any change since, and why we should, after nearly forty years, now be squabbling over it is something I cannot understand. Let us accept the decision of the past and of the other Chamber.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Forty years does not make any difference. I dare say the hon. gentleman's lynx's eye did not bear upon it or it would have been removed long ago. I only judge on the face of the matter. I say that the statement of a man of honour is just as good if he is sick a hundred miles from here, as if he were within ten miles of the city, and you cast a stigma on the honour and veracity of the Senate when you fix a limit of ten miles. I say if the hon. gentleman was party to such legislation he did not do his duty.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I was not in parliament then.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The hon. senator from Halifax is great on small matters, great on a ten-mile limit. Under this clause a senator living in Carleton county is entitled to his indemnity if he happens to be sick and unable to attend, but a senator from Vancouver or the Yukon who happens to be sick while parliament is in session and unable to come to the capital is not entitled to anything. Does the hon. senator from Halifax mean to say that the difference in distance should make any difference in the way the two cases should be looked at? What is the principle at stake? A man who happens to be sick in his own home, whether it is here in Ottawa or at Halifax or Vancouver, should be treated in the same way. The difference, if any, should be in favour of the man who is far away from Ottawa, and would be glad to be here. If I can get support in this House I shall move this amendment to line 21, to make it read: 'be held to be in the place where the session is held whenever he is sick, at home or abroad.'

Hon. Mr. POWER—That resolution is out of order. The passing of that amendment would increase the charge on the public treasury, and we have no right to make such an amendment.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Does the chairman rule that my amendment would increase the charge on the public treasury?

The CHAIRMAN—I do not know that that is out of order.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, because the effect of it is to add to the public burden.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—How would it do that?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Two-thirds of the members might state that they were sick at home and be drawing their allowance if this amendment were admitted. However, that subject was thoroughly discussed by the members of the government and the clause was adopted by the House of Commons.

The CHAIRMAN—I rule the amendment out of order.

The clause as amended was adopted.

On subsection 2 of clause 2,

2. Any member residing at a greater distance than four hundred miles from Ottawa may commute such allowance for travelling and living expenses receiving in lieu thereof an allowance of fifteen dollars per day for each day necessarily occupied in the journey between his place of residence and Ottawa, going and coming, once each way, the day of departure and the day of arrival being counted each as a full day.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I move that this clause be amended by adding the following words after 'day' in the 36th line—'And to all other members at the rate of per day.' In order that the chairman may not be called to rule this out of order, I propose to leave the blank to be filled in by the House of Commons when the Bill is returned to that House. The hon. senator from Halifax knows, from his long parliamentary experience, that many Bills have been introduced in this House dealing with salaries and the expenditure of money, but while we affirm the principle we leave the amount in blank and let the House of Commons fill it in.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The words 'other members' would have to be qualified, because that would take in the members living in Ottawa, and the rate ought to be fixed at say $5. I see no great objection to the amendment. This is not adding to the public burden, because this is an alternative. It is to be assumed that the expenses would be quite equal, if not more than the $5. Probably the House of Commons would accept it with that limit. It does not interfere with the amount. Supposing a member would get more than $5 he would charge his account. Five dollars is taken as a sum that would probably meet many of the cases; of course it will not cover all the cases.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the hon. member think that $5 would be sufficient?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think $5 would be a reasonable sum. The objection I heard urged to this was that members would be obliged to swear to the account, and in the case of a small account of that kind that would seem to be very unreasonable. I think that in the drafting of the Bill it was not intended that members should be obliged to make an oath on it. I do not know how that clause got in, but, certainly, it was not intended when the Bill was first discussed, because particular reference was made to this, that a member's word, a member's own certificate in reference to his own travelling expenses, ought to be accepted, that no man ought to be called upon to swear in a small matter of five or six or ten dollars, whatever it might be. That was so stated and expressed, and it was evidently inadvertently, that this clause was made to apply to the travelling expenses.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Living three hundred miles away, the hon. gentlemen will, if he reflects a moment, find that he will have to take a sleeping car if he comes at night. Young people, like the hon. Secretary of State and myself, like to have a little air, and when a member comes to pay for his breakfast, dinner and supper——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Then make it six or seven dollars.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—You will have to provide for an additional sum when they raise the cost of berths on sleeping cars.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—Strike out the 'four hundred miles,' and make it apply to all outside of Ottawa.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am fully in accord with the hon. gentleman, but I am afraid we would not be able to carry that.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If that change were made, the travelling expenses would be raised probably almost to what the old mileage came to, and surely we have no right to take a step which is likely to increase the charge on the public treasury to that extent.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Do I understand that the government accept the suggestion of the hon. leader of the opposition as increasing in no manner whatever the public expenditure in this matter ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it is an alternative. A member has a right either to a fixed sum, or to a statement of account. In putting it down at $5 in nine cases out of ten it would be less than a detailed statement would show. He has to pay four dollars for his berth for instance.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Does not the suggestion of the hon. leader of the opposition involve the same objection ?

The CHAIRMAN—No, he did not mention any money.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I did not mention any money.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In the hon. gentleman's case, it was paying parties not provided for in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—He is paying them also.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—They are splitting hairs on this question, and it is a small business. A senator who leaves Toronto by train can reach here in ten hours. Supposing he comes here by boat and it takes two days, who is going to pay the expenses ?

Hon. Mr. JONES—He has not that right under the Bill.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The shortest route may be by boat.

Hon. Mr. JONES—If it is the most direct route.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—And by boat it would take two or three days.

Hon. Mr. JONES—I do not see why we have the alternative system. It is a departure for which I have not heard a reason, and I am of the opinion that it will not be on the statute-book any considerable time before the necessity for a change will be apparent. Take two members living 1,500 miles from Ottawa ; one of them comes here for a day. It will cost $45 and if the other comes here on the principle of the first clause of the Bill it would cost twice that. It does not appear to be good legislation. Personally I should like to see—and it would be saving considerable money—the first clause cut out altogether. It would make it materially less, and it would not bring in the accounts from the members varying as they do in the meantime. I think people who live within 300 miles of Ottawa do not deserve any consideration for their coming, because they can come and go frequently and they are placed at a much less disadvantage than those who live at a distance; but under the conditions that exist it must be admitted that it is rather extraordinary that the difference between London, Sarnia or Chatham will give to one man $60 for coming here, while you give to the other man only $7.50. If this Bill becomes law, a senator will come from London and receive $7.50 and the man from Chatham will receive $60 if he asks for it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman has given utterance to the opinion I expressed, that if you attempt to carry out that suggestion you have to remodel the whole Bill, and I think the easiest way to make it a little more equitable would be to adopt the amendment which I proposed. I should like to call the attention of the hon. gentleman from Halifax to the fact that while this may add a little, not much, it will only cover about the actual expenses, and if the law is left as it was before it would be more equitable. In his own particular case, under the old law, if I understand it, he receives about $15 his actual expenses to come from Halifax here, and $15 to go back. Now he will get $60. I do not see why he should be so particular as to allowing those who do not live a distance of less than two days' travel from Ottawa about $5 a day to pay their expenses instead of having to swear to their actual expenses. It depends a good deal, it seems to me in his case whose ox is gored in discussing these matters.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hon. gentlemen must recognize that it is absolutely impossible to smooth over the inequalities. Last session we passed an Act in which it was provided that each member of the House and Senate should give a detailed statement of expenses. Take the case of members from the coast who travel four or five days; they say it is impossible to keep an accurate account of what they paid, and there was a general protest against it. This alternative provision was put in because of that protest of these people who said 'I would rather take a lump sum per day than put in a detailed statement'.

It is simply to meet the views of the two Houses. It is not logical, but is the best that can be done. I would rather pass the Bill without the change of a word if the House was prepared to agree to it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is agreed that the amount shall be left blank in order that the Commons may take the responsibility of settling it.

The clause was amended and adopted.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS, from the committee, reported the Bill with amendments which were concurred in.

The Bill was then read a third time and passed.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

IN COMMITTEE.

The House resolved itself into a Committee of the Whole on Bill (62) An Act to amend the Railway Act, 1903.

(In the Committee).

On clause 6,

6. Subsection 3 of section 122 of the said Act is repealed and the following is substituted therefor:

3. Before approving such map and location the minister may, subject to the Special Act, make such changes and alterations therein as he may deem expedient, and upon being satisfied herewith shall signify his approval upon the map and the duplicate thereof, and when so approved, the map and application shall be filed in the Department of Railways and Canals and the duplicate thereof with the board. The minister in approving any such map and location may approve the whole or any portion thereof, and where he approves only a portion thereof he shall signify his approval upon the map and the duplicate thereof accordingly.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The new part there is giving the minister power to approve of the whole or any portion of a location.

possesses or may take under the preceding section, for the convenient accommodation of the public, or the traffic on its railway, or for protection against snowdrifts, or for the diversion of a highway, or for the substitution of one highway for another, or for the construction or taking of any works or measures ordered by the board under any of the provisions of this Act or the Special Act, or to secure the efficient construction, maintenance or operation of the railway, it may apply to the board for authority to take the same, for such purposes, without the consent of the owner.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is materially changed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The change commences with the words 'or for the diversion of a highway, or for the substitution of one highway for another.' 'Or for the construction or taking of any works or measures ordered by the board under any of the provisions of this Act or a special Act, or to secure the efficient construction, maintenance and operation of the railway.'

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They have to apply to the board under the old Act for authority. It is giving the board the full power. I suppose it is right enough.

The clause was adopted.

On subclause 2,

2. The said section 139 is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following subsection :

7. The board may, upon consent in writing having been first obtained from the minister in that behalf, repeal, rescind, change or vary any certificate of the minister made under section 109 of the Railway Act, chapter 29 of the statutes of 1888.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I thought we repealed the Railway Act of 1888?

Hon. Mr. POWER—But even in that case the orders which the minister had made while the Act was in force could not be repealed.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What orders are referred to here?

The CHAIRMAN—The orders which might be passed under section 109 of the Act of 1888.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There were a couple of the sections of the Act we did not repeal. Let us assume that such an order is repealed or rescinded, what then becomes of the land? It would seem that that is an order made anterior to expropriation, practically.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Section 109 reads as follows:

The minister shall inquire into the correctness of the map or plan and book of reference and the truth of the allegations of such application, and if he is satisfied thereof shall grant a certificate to that effect, and declaring it to be necessary in the public interest that the land shown on such map or plan or book of reference or any less quantity should be required by the company, and such certificates shall be in accordance with one of the duplicates of the plan or book of reference, and the other duplicate shall remain in the department.

That must be dealing with some isolated instance.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If the board could rescind those orders, what would become of those expropriated lands ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—If the order for expropriation was rescinded the land would revert I suppose.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, there is nothing in the Railway Act to make it revert. The rescision of the order would not make it revert.

The subclause was adopted.

On clause 10,

10. Section 159 of the said Act is amended by adding thereto the following subsection :

2. If the opposite party is absent from the district or county in which the lands lie or is unknown, service of such six days' notice may be made by advertisement as in the next two preceding sections provided ; provided that the judge may dispense with, or shorten the time or times for, the publication of the notice in any such case in which he deems it proper.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Ten days is not very long.

On clause 14,

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Under this clause, as I understand it, if any business was established within six miles of a railway, and they want to get connection with that railway, the people who own the business must pay for the railway, but it is not clear who will own the spur when it is completed.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The company will own it.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Why not give the same privilege to a municipality. Subsection 2 provides for a refund by rebates on tolls, and I do not know why the privilege which is given here to an industry or business should not be extended to a municipality.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The municipality may be an applicant with the approval of the ratepayers.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I know the people of Saskatoon has been trying to get the Grand Trunk Pacific to run a branch into the town but have not succeeded.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We are broadening the Act.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—This clause simply provides for a branch being built in the case of the establishment of an industry. It does not apply to municipalities.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Why should it not apply to municipalities? If Saskatoon is willing to pay for a spur from the main line, why should it not have the same privilege as an industry or a business?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Business is a pretty broad word; the business of a town is a matter that would come under the Act.

The clause was adopted.

On subclause 2, of clause 17,

2. Notwithstanding anything in any Act contained, the board, in determining the terms or compensation upon which any such connection or communication is to be provided for, shall not take into consideration any contract, lease or agreement now or hereafter in force by which the company has given or gives any exclusive or other privilege to any company or person, other than the applicant, with respect to any such station or premises.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Is that to meet such cases as arose some time ago in Ontario in connection with the Bell Telephone Company—for instance at Fort William and Port Arthur?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Very likely.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My recollection is, the matter came before the Railway Commission and the question as to the consideration paid to the railway company by the Bell Telephone Company. As I understand, this is to exclude any such factor entering into the valuation which may be placed on the right.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It excludes the agreement made between the telephone company and the railway company.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This seems to me a rather extraordinary clause. I can understand the propriety of saying that the board shall not be bound to determine the value by reason of those contracts, but to say that the board shall not take the question into consideration at all, I cannot appreciate. It seems to me that every factor should be taken into consideration by the board. For instance, in a court of law the court, in determining the value of any right or franchise, would take into consideration every factor which might enter into the question of value in assessing the value. Here the board seems to be precluded from giving consideration to this particular factor.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD—I think this is a move in the right direction. It makes it much easier for independent lines to get into railway stations. I do not see why the Bell Telephone Company should have the exclusive right to enter stations and keep independent lines out. This is legislation that the people have been fighting to obtain for years. I do not see on what ground the Bell Telephone should be entitled to compensation.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend misapprehends the point I take. I say it is very desirable that those connections be made, but that the board should have all information before it. It certainly should be permitted to take evidence in regard to every factor that might determine valuation. Can my hon. friend say why the board should be prohibited from taking into consideration the factors of value of this kind—why a prohibition should be placed upon it?

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—What is the meaning of the expression 'any Act.' Would that cover provincial as well as federal Acts?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not understand the section, and I ask for information.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is plain enough. In the case to which reference has been made, the Port Arthur case, the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Bell Telephone Company had a contract which covered all the stations where their telephone was used. They gave the telephone company the exclusive right and a consideration was paid for it. When it was ordered that other connections should be made there, naturally the question of contract became an element. If that contract had to be cancelled it was an element of damage. The town objected to that. This cancels, practically, the contract and provides that notwithstanding the existence of that contract other companies shall have the right to go in and that contract shall not be considered in estimating the damages. It is relying on the public sentiment of the age.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In Fort William and other places, the quarrel has been between the municipalities which desired to make a connection with the Bell Telephone Company, at the railway station, but the railway company had entered into a contract with the Bell Telephone Company by which they were to have the exclusive right for some time within their station, and they were to give the Bell Telephone Company certain privileges and concessions in the way of freight and carrying their servants over the road.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD—And the company was to give them the use of their 'phones.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Yes, and they were to give the railway company the use of the 'phones. This is a provision to allow connection to be made with their stations without regard to the contract into which this railway company had entered ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is a question whether that is not a direct interference with vested rights which the Bell Telephone Company had. You might just as well enter a man's private house, or any public building, if the outside world demanded it, without any consideration at all as to what they might lose or suffer by such connection. I know what the scheme is. It is to deprive railway companies and others from entering into any bargain by which they would have exclusive rights.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD—There is a difference between entering a man's private house and entering a railway station. The railway station is built for the use of the public and I can see no reason; as I am allowed to walk into railway station for the purpose of doing business, why I should not have the privelege of communicating with it on any 'phone I please.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Providing you pay for it.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD—Yes, and I do not know any reason why the company should make an exclusive contract with any telephone company to give them the exclusive use of their station for their 'phones used by the public.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—There is no analogy between the cases. A private house is one thing and a railway station is another. Parliament grants a railway company valuable franchises and they do not pay anything for them and the public has some rights as well as the railway companies, and if they enter into an exclusive contract with the Bell Company or any other company I think it is right that parliament should protect the public.

The clause was allowed to stand.

On clause 21,

21. Section 227 of the Railway Act, 1903, is repealed and the following section is substituted therefor :

227. No train shall pass over any highway crossing at rail-level in any thickly peopled portion of any city, town or village at a greater speed than ten miles an hour, unless such crossing is properly protected, or unless such crossing is constructed and thereafter duly maintained in accordance with such orders, regulations and directions of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council and the board as may be in force with respect thereto. The board may limit such speed in any case to any rate that it deems expedient.

2. The company shall have until the first day of January, one thousand nine hundred and eight, to comply with the provisions of this section.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The passage of this clause would affect these through fast trains. I wish to point out how I thought it would affect the speed of these trains. Take the train running from Belleville to Toronto, 113 miles. It runs that distance in three hours, that is about 35 miles an hour. It stops only at Cobourg and Port Hope. If it is obliged to slow its speed at each crossing between Belleville and Toronto, it would of necessity delay them at least five minutes at each of these crossings.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—More than that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—There are six or seven stations. There is half an hour lost, and it would be a loss between those two points of at least three-quarters of an hour. I do not know what their calculation is, but this is what suggests itself to me. If the delay in 113 miles was 45 minutes, how long would it delay a train running from Montreal to Toronto, with all the stations and crossings they would have to make. Instead of making the distance in the time between 9 a.m. and 4.30 p.m. I question if they would not lose a couple of hours by the operation of this clause between those distances.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I cannot understand the adoption of a clause of that kind. It is very well to make provision for the protection of life and property. Take West Toronto Junction on the Canadian Pacific Railway to the Union station, I venture to say you could get off the Canadian Pacific Railway at West Toronto and get into the Union station quicker by street car than by railway, if this Bill became law. A good fast trotting horse would go ten miles an hour and you limit a train from Toronto Junction into the city to a rate of ten miles, because you are crossing roads all the way. The speed of a train is not so much the cause of accidents as the neglect of the necessary signals, the whistle and the gong.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am just informed by the solicitor of the Grand Trunk that the calculations they have made, if this provision is put in force, is that there would be a loss of some hours between Toronto and Montreal. Without having gone into the calculation, I had come to the conclusion it would lose three or four hours.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Cut out the ten miles, and change the wording at the end of the section and give the board power to regulate it.

The CHAIRMAN—They have that now.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The board may limit their speed to any rate they may deem expedient. In this case an ordinary automobile will go through the streets at the rate of 20 miles an hour ; that is the ordinary thing. You can stand on Sparks street or any street in the city and watch an automobile pass you by on a thickly populated street where people are not on the look out for danger, at 20 miles an hour. But on a railway track passing through a village or municipality where every precaution is taken against danger, the speed is reduced to 10 miles an hour. It is an inconsistent clause, entirely without sense or reason.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Inasmuch as the clause is to stand, there has been sufficient discussion to enable us to appreciate the objections to it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Why not deal with it now ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—Because it is a thin House.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is the duty of members of the Senate to be here, and not, by their absence, to delay those who are here to attend to the public business.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is all very well, but we went into committee with the distinct understanding that no contentious clauses were to be dealt with at this sitting.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—And for the reason advanced by the hon. gentleman a minute ago.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I fully concur in the objection to this clause which prevents freight trains running at a speed of over ten miles an hour over crossings. It is an absurd clause, and should not be in the Bill. There are thousands of crossings in Canada which will be affected by this clause where there is practically no danger at all. If there is a dangerous crossing, the board has the power to limit the speed of trains ; but to fix the limit at ten miles for all railway crossings is going too far. The illustration given by the hon. leader of the opposition shows the inconsistency of such a provision. It just occurred to me the same way that it occurred to him when I read the clause. Automobiles are allowed to run at ten to twenty miles an hour in the streets of a city, and thirty to forty miles an hour in the country on roads where there are no rails to guide them, but this restriction is placed on locomotives which run on steel rails and cannot leave them, and where, so long as you are off the track you are not in danger. I venture to say that the time of a train running say, between Toronto and Montreal, will be increased by four or five hours if it has to slack up at every crossing. I am informed that the railway companies wish to be heard on this matter before the Bill passes the Senate and they would like to be heard on Monday next.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—We can deal with it now.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The clause should be amended in such a way that there would be no doubt as to the power of the commission.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There is no doubt now as to the power of the commission under the existing Act.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The railway companies should only be restricted by order of the board, and in the Act as it stands they are restricted unless they get permission from the board to go at a greater speed than ten miles an hour. I submit we should let this clause stand if it is to be amended.

Hon. Mr. JONES—This Bill is not to come into force until January, 1908. Under the law as it stands, the speed at crossings is limited to ten miles an hour, unless the railways get permission from the board to travel at a higher speed. Would it not be better to give a more reasonable speed limit ?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED : I fail to understand why the protection afforded by the present Act is not sufficient for all purposes. The restriction now is ten miles an hour, unless the board regulates to the contrary. The board can issue an order permitting trains to run faster than ten miles an hour. The matter is entirely in the hands of the Railway Commission. In every clause of this Bill we have passed to-night the board is given power to regulate railway companies. Why, in this important matter, should the jurisdiction of the board be limited. It seems but reasonable and logical that the whole matter should be left to the board.

Hon. Mr. JONES—The board would not issue an open order for the speed at all the crossings between Montreal and Toronto for instance. They would take each individual crossing and the surrounding circumstances into consideration. There may be places where the speed ought to be ten miles, others fifteen, others twenty and others thirty miles, so no one order would overcome the difficulty.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The board take into consideration that condition of affairs. They make their regulations in view of the conditions attending each crossing.

The clause was allowed to stand.

On subclause 2 of clause 26,

2. Every person who knowingly or wilfully sells, gives, or barters any spirituous or intoxicating liquor to or with any servant or employee of any company, while on duty, is liable on summary conviction to a penalty not exceeding fifty dollars, or to imprisonment with or without hard labour for a period not exceeding one month, or to both.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The words that are new in this subclause are 'knowingly or wilfully.' From my experience of legislation in which these words occur, it would be very difficult indeed to secure a conviction under the clause as drafted. The use of these words 'knowingly and wilfully' destroys all chances of conviction.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Suppose a conductor or telegraph operator, or train despatcher goes into a saloon and orders liquor, and the bartender does not know that he is a railway employee on duty, should that man be punished ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think he should be.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Even if he does not know who the man is ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They always know.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not think any injustice would be done if the Act were left as it is to-day. If a prosecution were attempted under this clause, the defence would be that the man who sold the liquor did not know that the man to whom he sold it was a railway employee on duty, and it will be almost utterly impossible to establish the fact that he had knowledge. I move that these words 'knowingly or wilfully' be struck out.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will not oppose it.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This Act has been in force, and I certainly am not aware of any case of hardship having arisen under it as it now exists, but I unhesitatingly say that if the responsibility is thrown on the prosecution to show that the liquor seller has a knowledge that a man is on duty, you cannot establish the condition of that man's mind. It means that you have to speak positively as to what was operating in his mind.

The amendment was agreed to, and the clause as amended was adopted.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the Bill, and asked leave to sit again on Monday next.

The Senate then adjourned till Monday, 9th July, at Eleven a.m.

THE SENATE

OTTAWA, Monday, July 9, 1906.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven a.m.

LORD'S DAY BILL.

SECOND READING.

The order of the day being called :

Second reading, Bill (129) An Act respecting the Lord's Day.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Looking around at the empty benches, I feel a great regret in having to take up so important a Bill as the one on the order paper which has just been called. I think it is a very grave reflection on the Senate that the most important measure of the session, the one which touches the hearts of the people of the country more keenly and tenderly than any other Bill which has been up in a long series of years, should, in the Senate Chamber, receive such scant justice. If we wanted to keep in touch with the people of Canada, and establish a principle which will justify the existence of the Senate, on an occasion of this kind when the interests of the people, their customs, feelings, views and I may say prejudices, are at stake, we should all be in our places. Yet I find that more than half our colleagues have gone away. They have attended at times when Bills not nearly so important were engrossing our attention, but when a Bill which I venture to say touches the home and family sentiment of more people in the Dominion of Canada than any other measure which had been brought forward in the last twenty-five years, they are absent. It throws upon us who remain, a mere minority of the Senate, the responsibility of the action which may be taken in reference to this measure. Certainly no measure has been debated in the House of Commons with greater keenness. The Bill, as originally presented, has been entirely metamorphized from its original form. The exceptions are far more numerous than the clauses. Day after day changes have been made, in the endeavour to meet the diverse sentiments entertained with reference to this important subject. Many questions of necessity, and many changes have been pressed on the attention of parliament by way of exceptions although, in truth, in no part of God's dominion is the Sunday observed better than in Canada. We are a moral and religious people. We need not hesitate to place our conduct in comparison, I would not say with the country to the south of us ; I would not insult the House by doing so, but with any part of the civilized world. We are abreast of all, and it is because this tolerant spirit has, in the past, prevailed that happily, thrown together as two races we have had consideration for each other and have so developed a system of government that is certainly not second to any in the world in securing to the people liberty without license; therefore we ought to show our appreciation of the blessing we enjoy, and I do say that I am sorry that the Senate of Canada should pay so small a compliment to the people of this country as to be absent on an occasion of this kind.

Many persons think that this is a new subject—one of necessity that ought to be now passed into law with a view of securing a homogeneous condition of the people of Canada. Happily, in the past, we in Ontario, of all the provinces of this Dominion, have had a Sunday law. In the old parliament of Canada, when Upper and Lower Canada were united closely together, more closely certainly than in the confederation which embraced so many other provinces, and having been myself a member of that parliament I can bear witness to the tenderness, to the consideration which was paid by each section of United Canada in all subject-matters that effect the customs, the habits and the sentiments of the two races. I have under my hand here a volume of statutes which are not incorporated in the revised statutes of Canada. They are made up of the statutes that relate to individual provinces. They were passed before those provinces came into confederation. They were passed as the people of those provinces desired they should exist. Those statutes have been preserved, and properly so. They are respected and they are in force to-day. We ought to be very careful if we seek to repeal, or in any way to change those laws, unless with the entire approval of the people who are affected by them.

Now, I open one here, an Act passed in 1845 in United Canada for the better observance of the Lord's Day in Upper Canada. That did not extend to the sister province. That Act is an exact copy of the Act passed in the reign of Charles II., and covers nearly the entire ground, apart from transportation. I will just briefly refer to it. That Act is in force in Ontario to-day :

It is not lawful for any merchant, tradesman, artificer, mechanic, workman, labourer or other person whatsoever, on the Lord's Day to sell or publicly show forth, or expose or offer for sale, or to purchase, any goods, chattels, or other personal property, or any real estate whatsoever, or to do or exercise any worldly labour, business or work of his ordinary calling, (conveying travellers or Her Majesty's mail, by land or by water, selling drugs and medicines, and other works of necessity, and works of charity, only excepted.)

2. It is not lawful for any person on that day to hold, convene or to attend any public political meeting, or to tipple or to allow or permit tippling in any inn, tavern, grocery or house of public entertainment, or to revel, or publicly exhibit himself in a state of intoxication, or to brawl or use profane language in the public streets or open air, so as to create any riot or disturbance, or annoyance to Her Majesty's peaceable subjects.

3. It is not lawful for any person on that day to play at skittles, ball, foot-ball racket, or any other noisy game, or to gamble with dice or otherwise, or to run races on foot, or on horseback, or in carriages, or in vehicles of any sort.

4. Except in defence of his property, from any wolf or other ravenous beast or a bird of prey, it is not lawful for any person on that day to go out hunting or shooting or in quest of, or to take, kill, or destroy, any deer or other game, or any wild animal, or any wild fowl, or bird, or to use any dog, gun, rifle, or other engine, net or trap, for the above mentioned purpose.

5. It is not lawful for any person on that day to go out fishing, or to take, kill or destroy any fish, or to use any gun, fishing rod, net or other engine for that purpose.

6. It is not lawful for any person on that day to bathe in any exposed situation in any water within the limits of any incorporated city or town, or within view of any place of public worship or private residence.

There are also preserved, in the statutes, laws peculiar to the province of Quebec. For instance, the Civil Code, which was never disturbed, which under the treaty of 1760 was continued in the province of Quebec. There is also in this book a statute for the better observance of the Lord's day in British Columbia, passed long before that province came into the union ; and there are also Acts passed by the province of Prince Edward Island relating more particularly to fishing. I may very briefly mention the subjects which are by the laws of the several provinces interdicted. It is just as well we should understand how the question stands at present. I may first refer to the decision of the Privy Council that has led to the necessity for this legislation. The province of Ontario thought proper to re-enact certain clauses of the Act of Charles II., the one which I have just read, practically classing some of the acts as criminal, whether they were against the moral law or not. When the question came to the Privy Council, as gentlemen who were watching the proceedings before that august body will know, that as a rule if they can find a reason for throwing out a case at the start they invariably do. They selected one section of the Ontario Act, and came to the conclusion that the subject was included in the criminal law, and as a consequence the Ontario jurisdiction was ousted, the criminal law being entirely under the jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada. They said, without going any further, the Act contains clauses which encroach on the domain of the Dominion, and therefore we declare the Bill to be ultra vires.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does the decision interfere in any way with the statute passed years ago ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No. The question arose under the Ontario statute, not under an Act of this parliament. That was an Act of Charles II., incorporated in the laws of Upper Canada in 1845, and continues to this day part of the law of Ontario. Now, as far as sales on the Lord's day are concerned, there are Acts forbidding them in British Columbia, Quebec, Ontario and Prince Edward Island. In British Columbia it is limited to what is known as the old colony, and therefore when speaking of British Columbia I refer to it as that part of the colony before it entered confederation. Servile labour, except acts of charity and necessity, are forbidden in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. The exercise of worldly business or ordinary calling, excepting works of necessity and charity, which are always excepted, are forbidden in Ontario, British Columbia and Prince Edward Island. Prevention of tippling houses is to be found in the laws of Ontario, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and hunting and fishing in Ontario, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and British Columbia. Fishing is forbidden in Ontario and Prince Edward Island. Horse racing is forbidden in Ontario. The playing of skittles and noisy games is forbidden in Ontario and Prince Edward Island. Public meetings of all kinds are forbidden in Ontario. Gambling is forbidden in Ontario, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. Bathing in public places is forbidden in Ontario. Sales made on Sunday, of course, are void in nearly all the provinces. Sunday excursions and Sunday cars are forbidden in Ontario. Hiring or employing any one to perform servile labour or allowing any workman to perform servile labour, is forbidden in New Brunswick. The selling of goods on Sunday or doing any worldly business—to which there are a number of exceptions, such as the delivering of milk and ice—are forbidden in New Brunswick. In Manitoba and the Northwest Territories there are numerous provisions of a like character. I have under my hands the laws of these several provinces ; but I will not detain the House by reading them. I simply refer to their existence, so that it cannot be charged that in Canada the people have not, through their representatives, had laws passed for the observance of Sunday—not alike possibly in all the provinces, but still in harmony with the sentiment prevailing in each province. I mention these facts because I think it is only due that the public should be informed of the reasons which so seriously debarred this Bill from making greater progress in the House of Commons. As hon. gentlemen know, it was debated very keenly for weeks. I might almost say months. For nearly three months it has been before the House, and it was, no doubt, because of the existence of the laws to which I have briefly adverted that the people felt that the Act was somewhat of an intrusion.

I quite agree that it would be extremely desirable that we should all be able to harmonize on that particular subject. I should be glad if there was sufficient homogenity exhibited to conform to certain fixed principles in reference to the Lord's day ; whether we can accomplish that by an Act of parliament or not I do not propose now to discuss. From what experience I have had of life, and what I have noted, I have come to the conclusion that Acts of parliament are of very little use where they encroach on the habits and customs of the people. They become repellant and they are practically non-observant. The Act that bears my name is probably as good an illustration as one might quote, where we know. under a rush of influence, parliament passed an Act by a very large majority, and then left it absolutely abortive, making conditions worse than they were before, simply because the Act was in advance of the public sentiment and did not secure the cooperation of the people. This explanation accounts necessarily for the changes that were forced on the government as this Bill proceeded through the House of Commons. The exceptions finally became more numerous than the clauses. The first clause of this Bill is a definition of the Lord's day. It extends from Saturday midnight to Sunday midnight. Clause 2 reads :

2. It shall not be lawful for any person on the Lord's day, except as provided herein or in any provincial Act now or hereafter in force regarding matters coming within the classes of subjects enumerated in section 92 of the British North America Act, 1867, to sell or offer for sale or purchase any goods, chattels, or other personal property, or any real estate, or to carry on or transact any business of his ordinary calling, or in connection with such calling, or for gain to do, or employ any other person to do, on that day any work, business or labour.

As the Bill was drawn, and as it remained for some weeks, before the House of Commons, the words 'are hereinafter in force' had not been inserted. The effect of the clause, as originally drawn, was that it shall not be lawful for any person on the Lord's day to do any act except where at the time, this Act is passed, a provincial Act allowed the Act to be done. That was so strongly contested in the other House that an amendment was carried which was very far-reaching in its consequences and now provides that, hereafter, if a provincial legislature passes a law which they have authority to do under section 92 of the British North America Act which gives exclusive control to the province in conformity with the powers it possesses under its constitution, although it may be in defiance of this law, the provincial law shall prevail. That is, of course, a concession to provincial rights clearly and absolutely, and makes the Act an extremely different Act from what it was originally, when enforced in the provinces, except where it was in conflict with any existing statute. Now if a province feels that this law encroaches on its domain in any way, it can pass an Act which will override it, in so far as the particular subject is concerned, provided it is a subject-matter contained in section 92 of the British North America Act. These subject-matters, as hon. gentlemen will readily remember, are exclusively under the control of the provinces. Therefore, the provinces have no right to complain of this legislation for the reason that, as far as their powers are concerned, they can reverse it. I must admit there are provisions in this Bill that, no doubt, conflict with the customs of the provinces and for which no law now exists, and it is not likely any law will hereafter be passed, and as we put them in the category of crime they will have to be accepted by the provinces.

Clause 3 reads as follows :—

3. Notwithstanding anything herein contained, any person may on the Lord's day do any work of necessity or mercy, and for greater certainty, but not so as to restrict the ordinary meaning of the expression 'work of necessity or mercy, it is hereby declared that it shall be deemed to include the following classes of work :

In the Bill as introduced to parliament the only exception practically was that works of mercy and of necessity were exempted, but those words were not found sufficient to meet the views of a majority of the House of Commons and so the Bill is loaded down with a series of exceptions that extend alphabetically from (a) to (z).

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Who is to be the judge of a work of necessity ? What is a work of necessity ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Act, like any other law, rests with the courts of the land for interpretation. We make it as clear as we can, but judges sometimes have a faculty of interpreting a law differently from what parliament intended.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC—Who are the judges before whom the cases will have to be taken ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They will be the judges of the ordinary courts. Minor cases will come before a magistrate, with an appeal to higher courts, as provided for in the criminal law. The exemption (a) refers to any necessary or customary work in connection with divine worship. There can be no question on that. The exception (b) refers to work for the relief of sickness and suffering, including the sale of drugs, medicines and surgical appliances by retail. No one can take exception to that. The next exemption relates to receiving, transmitting or delivering telegraphs or telephone messages. It was very generally acknowledged in the conditions that exist to-day in society, we should be lacking something very material in our lives if we were not able to utilize the advantages we have in both telegraph and telephone. Then subsection (d) :

(d) Starting or maintaining fires, making repairs to furnaces and repairs in case of emergency, and doing any other work, when such fires, repairs or work are essential to any industry or industrial process of such a continuous nature that it cannot be stopped without serious injury to such industry or its product or to the plant or property used in such process.

That, I presume, is one of the contentious questions that will no doubt be invoked and the opinion of the court sought. The main object of it, I presume, is to meet the cases of smelters where the letting down of a fire would involve not only the loss of one day to build it up, but would affect the continuous process which is necessary in the object to be attained through the smelting.

(e) Starting or maintaining fires, and ventilating, pumping out, and inspecting mines, when any such work is essential to the protection of property, life or health.

There can be no objection to that, because it applies only to cases where the protection of life, health or property is involved.

(f) Any work without the doing of which on the Lord's day, electric current, light, heat, cold air, water or gas cannot be continuously supplied for lawful purposes.

I presume that will be pretty universally accepted by the community. All recognize that we require light in our churches in the evening, and therefore must have gas or electric light. We require our houses to be heated, furnaces must be kept up, &c.

(g) The conveying of travellers, and work incidental thereto.

That, I presume, was one of the debatable questions that was discussed in another place with a great deal of interest and keenness.

(h) The continuance to their destination of trains and vessels in transit when the Lord's day begins.

I need not go into the argument that has been used for the preservation of that exception. It has been urged that we are living alongside a very active nation. Lines of communication are running in competition with theirs, and it might be regarded as a serious matter if we were to check absolutely the running of trains on the Lord's day.

(i) Loading and unloading merchandise, at intermediate points, on or from passenger boats or passenger trains.

(j) Keeping railway tracks clear of snow or ice, making repairs in cases of emergency, or doing any other work of a like incidental character without the doing of which on the Lord's day the traffic on any transportation line cannot be safely carried on.

No one would object to that, because it is very well known that we have in the winter time in this country very heavy storms sometimes and the railways are blocked. If all work were stopped on Sunday during the continuance of a storm it might be some days before a train could be dug out. I have had some experience of that kind myself where it was not possible to have appliances to dig out trains, and have been kept on a train for four or five days.

(k) Work before six o'clock in the forenoon and after eight o'clock in the afternoon of yard crews in handling cars in railway yards.

(l) Loading, unloading and operating any ocean-going vessel which otherwise would be unduly delayed after her scheduled date of sailing, or any vessel which otherwise would be in imminent danger of being stopped by the closing of navigation; or loading or unloading before seven o'clock in the morning or after eight o'clock in the afternoon any grain, coal or ore carrying vessel after the fifteenth of September.

The 15th September there is named as a period at which greater liberty may be allowed, because it is well known that our main export, grain, has to be moved in the few weeks before the closing in of the season after the grain reaches maturity. The period when the greater portion of it is moved is between the 15th September and the 1st December.

(m) The caring for milk, cheese, and live animals, and the caring for perishable products arriving at any point during the Lord's day.

(n) The operation of any ferry or boat, authorized by competent authority to carry passengers on the Lord's day.

A ferry may be a necessity in many parts of Canada. The church may be on one side of the river and the parish largely on the other. It would seem only a reasonable proposition that the people should be allowed to cross in a ferry to attend their churches.

(o) The hiring of horses and carriages or small boats for the personal use of the hirer or his family for any purpose not prohibited by this Act.

That is one of the many clauses that have been inserted in deference to pressure used that a family might desire to spend the afternoon in the country, and that they would be very much better off if permitted to hire a conveyance and go into the country than if they were to remain in the city or town. I myself have very strong views on this subject. It has been very well said that God made the country, man made the town. I think the influence on everybody of going into the country on the Sunday afternoon is good, I care not how they get there. If there is anything which purifies, elavates, I might say sanctifies the mind, it is bringing it into closer contact with nature. The mind is led to look up from nature to nature's God. It is a spiritualizing influence and therefore it is a great mistake to say that people shall not be permitted to go into the country to commune with all that is beautiful. The heart is at once filled with gratitude to the Divine Ruler for beautifying the world. The sight of the mountains, rivers, fields and trees has a purifying and refining influence on the intellect of the observer and, therefore, we should favour a movement of that kind rather than check it.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—Does the hon. Secretary of State say that clause allows that ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This clause would have no reference to excursions, but my observations would equally apply necessarily to any method by which the people could be taken out of the city and brought into the country.

(p) Any unavoidable work after six o'clock in the afternoon of the Lord's day, in the preparation of the regular Monday morning edition of a daily newspaper.
(q) The conveying His Majesty's mails and work incidental thereto.
(r) The delivery of milk for domestic use, and the work of domestic servants and of watchmen.

The last provision is an exception which was not in the original Bill.

(s) The operation by any Canadian electric street railway company, whose line is interprovincial or international, of its cars, for passenger traffic, on the Lord's day or any line or branch now regularly so operated.

That would, of course, leave the electric system of each province to be controlled by the legislature of that province. It would rest entirely with that province. The electric system at Ottawa is an interprovincial one, it extends into the province of Quebec.

(t) Work done by any person in the public service of His Majesty while acting therein under any regulation or direction of any department of the government.
(u) Any unavoidable work by fishermen after six o'clock in the afternoon of the Lord's day in the taking of fish.
(v) All operations connected with the making of maple sugar and maple syrup in the maple grove.

I do not know at whose instance this exemption (v) was introduced. It is an industry which prevails in some parts of Canada, and the flow of sap has to be taken care of.

(w) Any unavoidable work on the Lord's day to save property in cases of emergency or where such property is in imminent danger of destruction or serious injury.

That was, I think, introduced in the last day or two in the House of Commons in order to meet a very strong pressure brought to bear for the preservation of property. The last exception is as follows:—

(x) Any work which the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada, having regard to the object of this Act, deem necessary to permit in connection with the freight traffic of any railway. The costs of all persons of applications to the board under this paragraph shall be borne by the applicant, and, if more than one, equally. Notice of application, in which the reasons to be relied on shall be fully set out, shall be given to the Department of Railways and Canals. In all other respects the procedure under the Railway Act, 1903, shall, so far as applicable, apply.

One of the great features which I hope will be secured by this Bill will be that the toiler, the man who labours for six days of the week, will have one day of rest. Under the artificial conditions which exist in our lives, when we require so large a number of people to work on Sunday, it is a good thing that the employer shall be bound to give the employee a day in lieu of the Sunday which he has given to his employer. If the Bill did not go any further than that, I think it would be an advance, looking at it on the broad principle of humanity. It is a cruel thing that any man should be forced to work seven days in the week. The day of rest is a sacred day handed down to us for preservation, enshrined with associations which are, I am sorry to say, being rapidly swept away. Sunday in many countries, and in some instances in Canada, is entirely ignored. Travelling by railway trains, the operating of telegraph systems, and electric systems, and all the other manifold means by which our comforts are placed on their present high level, have largely done away with the observance of a day of rest. I say, therefore, that if the Bill contains no other provision than this, it is worthy of the support of this Chamber, giving as it does to the toiler, the man who is earning his living by the sweat of his brow, one day to rest with his family.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—The hon. gentleman, a moment ago, read a clause with regard to the hiring of horses and carriages or small boats for the personal use of the hirer or his family, for any purpose not prohibited by this Act. Clause 6 of the Bill says :

6. It shall not be lawful for any person on the Lord's day to run, conduct, or convey by any mode of conveyance any excursion on which passengers are conveyed for hire, and having for its principal or only object the carriage on that day of such passengers for amusement or pleasure, and pasengers so conveyed shall not be deemed to be travellers within the meaning of this Act.

Under this clause will I be allowed, in the city of Quebec, to take a cab with my friends and go out and visit Montmorency Falls ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, I think so. The exceptions are absolutely taken out of the Act. If the hon. gentleman will look at the basis on which the Act is framed, he will find that there are certain things exempted absolutely from the Act. They are the subject-matters which I have been running over cursorily, numbered from (a) to (z). Although presumably by other clauses of the Bill there may be penalties provided for doing certain things, if any of these things are among the exemptions they are outside of the Act altogether. Clause 3 provides for all the various exceptions which I have referred to.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I could understand it if the last words were omitted from subclause (o) ' for any purpose not prohibited by this Act,' but if you leave those words in, and leave the clause 6 as it is, I do not think that, under the law, I would be allowed to visit the falls.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I cannot agree with my hon. friend. The clauses were discussed probably with more critical eyes than any other Bill that has been before parliament. The exceptions that I have read are absolutely out of the Act. No clause can affect them at all. I was commenting on section 4 and pointing out that the Bill, if for no other reason, ought to be accepted because it protects the labourer, giving him one day of rest in lieu of work he has to do on Sunday. Now we come to clause 5 :

5. It shall not be lawful for any person, on the Lord's day, to engage in any public game or contest for gain, or for any prize or reward, or to be present thereat, or to provide, engage in, or be present at any performance or public meeting at which any fee is charged, directly or indirectly, either for admission to such performance or meeting, or to any place within which the same is provided, or for any service or privilege thereat.

That clause was very much disputed in another place, but in the form in which it comes to us now was finally accepted and passed.

2. When any performance at which an admission fee or any other fee is so charged is provided in any building or place to which persons are conveyed for hire by the proprietors or managers of such performance or by any one acting as their agent or under their control, the charge for such conveyance shall be deemed an indirect payment of such fee within the meaning of this section.

Of course, where a place of amusement is situated at any distance, so that one would have to take a car, if you pay your car fare in the direction of that particular place of amusement and they give you a ticket which will entitle you to enter, that is a fee that would bring the entertainment within the provisions of this clause. Otherwise it might be evaded.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Does the hon. Secretary of State prefer that questions should be asked as he proceeds, or that we should wait until he is finished ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is immaterial to me.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—If clause 5 remains part of the Bill, we will fight it to the bitter end. There are other clauses which I consider objectionable but this is one which we cannot stand, and I should like to know if the hon. gentleman persists in pressing this clause ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—A bill of this kind is full of inconsistencies, I admit. The exceptions are greater than the provisions. It was a Bill, however, that had to meet the good-will of all, as far as possible. There had to be principle of give and take in it, and in framing it one could not expect that all would accept the Bill in its entirety. But in view of the many exceptions that have been introduced in certain clauses—take the one to which the hon. gentleman has adverted—grating upon the prejudices and feeling of certain classes, it was thought that they might yield for the good that is in the measure. I think that clause is an element of the Bill. It was agreed to as a matter of compromise and, therefore, I hope it will be permitted to stand.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—There is no compromise in that for me. I shall give my hon. friend an illustration of my reason for so strongly objecting to the clause. Only yesterday I went to a race after having attended church twice.

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I do not say that in the way of boasting but merely to illustrate why I object to this clause. I went to church in the morning and again in the afternoon. At 3 o'clock, after afternoon service held in our church, usual in our province, there were races—small races, merely for pleasure.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—What kind? Horse races?

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Yes, horse races. They are held in nearly every riding in our province in the summer time. One or two farmers in every county will maintain a small race course, just for the pleasure of having good horses there and to show which are the best horses in the riding. On Sunday afternoon, after all the services are over, the people go there and the farmer who maintains the race course charges an admission fee of 10 cents or 25 cents for a carriage containing four or five persons.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Is there any betting at the races?

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—No, it is just to try who has the best horse. It is a pleasure we indulge in in our province. The races begin at three and finish about six. All the farmers go there with their families, and meet and talk about their families, the crops, etc., and smoke a pipe together. They go home after 6 o'clock, and next day attend to their regular business. There is no harm done to any one. I venture to say that not one-tenth of the harm that members who are advocating this Bill do every Sunday. The priests watch over the people. The priest after service says: 'I am told there is to be a race this afternoon; I will allow that if you behave well and no wrong is done.' The people go to mass first and then afterwards to the races. Do you think the people will submit to a law of this kind? They will not; they must have this form of amusement in the province of Quebec. There are a lot of clauses in this Bill that I do not approve of, but I will not stand this clause and at the very outset I warn my hon. friend that, if he proceeds with it as it is, we will be a long time here before that clause passes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am sorry my hon. friend expresses himself in such positive language before we have got through the Bill, because he must recognize that if we are to live together peacefully and happily in this country, we have to be considerate of each others' prejudices.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Then take that clause out of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We must yield a little to each others' prejudices. This is not exactly a Bill that I approve of, but it contains many excellent features and I recognize it as the best that can be had under the circumstances. Perhaps half the people of Canada think this Bill is a mere skeleton of what they are entitled to. Those people have their conscientious views, which I am bound to respect. I may not concur in all their views, but to this extent whatever I can yield without seriously encroaching on my individual liberty I am prepared to give up to them for the sake of that peace and harmony which makes this the happy country it is. It is on that ground that I appeal to my hon. friend not to be too hasty in deciding on the line of action he is going to take upon this Bill. He must recognize that there is some good in the Bill and that if it is to be passed at all we must each one of us yield something of his views and opinions and judgment in deference to the larger views of those who differ from us on these questions.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC—Yes, but the hon. gentleman said a little while ago that in all the provinces they already have all the rights asked for in this Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not all the rights; I especially mentioned one subject-matter, that in reference to transportation. There are a number of questions in connection with transportation in this Bill that may be properly classed as interprovincial, and therefore they come directly under the federal power. What I said was that many of the subject-matters of this Bill are under their control, and that in deference to the provincial view and those who advocate provincial rights, under clause 2 of the Bill, at the very start, provision is made that if a province, when within its rights under the British North America Act, section 92, chooses to legislate on the subject-matters therein set forth, and those subject-matters are referred to here, that the provincial law will override this law. As the Bill was originally drawn it did not go so far as that.

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC—Am I to understand that when in this law you make something a crime, the local legislature will have a right to supersede this law?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In any matters relating to property and civil rights. But if you made a certain act a crime which under provincial law is not a crime, under the moral law, as we recognize it, it would be an extension of federal jurisdiction that would be untenable and improper.

2. It shall not be lawful for any person on the Lord's day, except as provided herein or in any provincial Act now or hereafter in force regarding matters coming within the classes of subjects enumerated in section 92 of the British North America Act.

That is very strong. If the subject-matters that we declare here to be crimes are subject-matters under section 92 of the British North America Act relegated to the provinces, then the provincial law must prevail and if it is possible to make the law any stronger I am not opposed to doing so. Clause 6 is one that has been very much debated and discussed, and reads as follows:—

It shall not be lawful for any person on the Lord's day to run, conduct or convey by mode of conveyance any excursion on which passengers are conveyed for hire and having for its principal or only object the carriage on that day of such passengers for amusement or pleasure and passengers so conveyed shall not be deemed to be travellers within the meaning of this Act.

Looking at it fairly and squarely, all of us have had some experience that the privileges to which I have adverted just now of going outside of the city have been abused in regard to excursions. Excursions have taken place both by water and land merely for the purpose of carousal at some distant point, not for the purpose of mere innocent amusement or pleasure, but for the purpose of diversion, either visiting places of amusement for drinking or dancing, or objects of that kind. This is a clause that has been a good deal discussed and debated, and if you could be sure that the privilege was not one that would be abused, one would not be disposed to insist upon its retention, but with the knowledge we all have that the excursions are very often demoralized by going to places where liquor is sold and people misbehave themselves, certainly as they should not do on Sunday, some legislation is necessary. There are, of course, excursions for religious purposes, visiting St. Anne de Beaupré and things of that kind. That would not be forbidden. Excursion parties gong to church would be quite permissible. Very often the church may be some distance away and an excursion of that kind would not come within the purview of the Act.

Clause 7 reads:

7. It shall not be lawful for any person to advertise in any manner whatsoever any performance or other thing prohibited by this Act.

2. It shall not be lawful for any person to advertise in Canada in any manner whatsoever any performance or other thing which if given or done in Canada would be a violation of this Act.

I presume no one would take exception to that clause. The sale of foreign newspapers on Sunday is forbidden. I do not think the Sunday newspapers from the United States are at all elevating in their character. They are generally filled with suicides, sensational stories, many of them grossly exaggerated, and not at all elevating or purifying reading on Sunday.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—This seems to exclude the sale of foreign newspapers entirely. How with regard to local newspapers? They can be sold on Sunday. There are two or three Sunday papers in Canada.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I presume they can be sold. There have been different conditions prevailing in different parts of the Dominion. For instance, there is a Sunday paper in British Columbia, although no Saturday evening paper. They get up a paper on Saturday for Sunday.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—One or two papers.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—The regular evening paper is published Saturday evening and the regular Monday morning paper is published on Sunday instead of Monday.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No Monday paper?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—No.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Clause 11 provides:

11. Every employer who authorizes or directs anything to be done in violation of any provision of this Act, shall for each offence be liable, on summary conviction, to a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars and not less than twenty dollars, in addition to any other penalty prescribed by law for the same offence.

And the next clause affects corporations. Clause 13 reads:

13. Nothing herein shall prevent the operation on the Lord's day for passenger traffic of any railway subject to the legislative authority of any province unless such railway is prohibited by provincial authority from so operating.

2. Nothing herein shall prevent the operation on the Lord's day for passenger traffic by any railway company incorporated by or subject to the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada of its railway where such operation is not otherwise prohibited.

That is another evidence of the desire of parliament not to interfere and encroach upon provincial rights. Clause 14 reads:

14. Nothing herein shall be construed to repeal or in any way affect any provisions of any Act relating in any way to the observance of the Lord's day in force in any province of Canada when this Act is passed; and where any person violates any of the provisions of this Act, and such offence is also a violation of any other Act, the offender may be proceeded against either under the provisions of this Act or under the provisions of any other Act applicable to the offence charged.

It leaves all provincial Acts in force. There is a limitation to the Act, that no prosecution shall take place unless within thirty days, in order to ensure prompt attention. I have cursorily run over the Bill, and I submit it for the approval of this Chamber. Considering the way it has been emasculated in another place, and the multitude of exceptions, I think the Senate should have no hesitation in adopting the Bill. All I can say is that I am extremely sorry that the number of senators in attendance is not larger to-day, and that we shall have to pronounce upon this measure with so small a number of the representatives from the provinces.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I rise to make a suggestion. Whether the animadversions of the Secretary of State upon the absence of senators is justifiable or not I will not discuss; but I observe the hon. gentleman's colleague is not here, as it has been quite unusual for the Senate to sit in the morning. We decided to do so lately. I daresay a great many of the absent senators have not the slightest idea that this Bill is being considered in the Senate this morning, and I should suggest that the matter stand until the evening session, when. in the ordinary course, the absent members will have returned.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I quite agree with what has been said by the hon. gentleman from St. John. I did not understand that we were to sit this morning, and I think it would be desirable to adjourn the debate on this Bill until the evening sitting, so that we can read the debate in the other House and consider the principles of the Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In view of the threat that the hon. gentleman who has just spoken made a few moments ago that unless some amendments were made we would be kept here all summer, I do not think it is advisable to accept the suggestion of the hon. gentleman from St. John. We had better proceed until one o'clock and continue the discussion at the next sitting of the House.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would point out to the hon. gentleman from St. John that we are simply discussing the principles of the Bill, and that the probabilites are against our having a division until a further stage is reached, and the time will be spent pending the arrival of the government cohorts, in discussing the principle of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I was under the impression on Saturday that this measure was not coming up this morning, and I am quite satisfied that there were a great many other members under this impression also, and I fancy this is the reason why so many members are absent. I think this discussion should be postponed until the evening session.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—When the hon. Secretary of State introduced the Bill and proceeded to make his speech, why did the hon. gentleman not suggest the undesirability of proceeding with it at this stage ?

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I was not here. I did not think it was coming up.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The hon. gentleman from St. John was here.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I think it is a good thing that we have heard the explanation of the hon. Secretary of State, and now that he has made his explanation we should have time to consider the question and see what objections there are to be made to the Bill. Now that we have the views of the hon. Secretary of State we are in a better position to consider the matter and discuss and dispose of it, and I suggest that we adjourn the discussion until the evening sitting.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Halifax)—I think we should go on with the Bill just now, and should endeavour to discuss it as calmly and reasonably as possible without any show of temper or antagonism. Concessions have been made in connection with the Bill which hon. gentleman who are opposing the measure should accept with gratitude.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I did not intend to address the House at this stage of the Bill, I was rather disposed to wait until we got into committee, but if it is desirable to continue the debate on the general principle of the Bill, with a view of going into committee at three o'clock, I have no objection. I exceedingly regret the large number of empty chairs upon the occasion of the introduction and the disposal of this exceedingly important Bill, one of the most important, I think, that has been placed before the Senate since confederation. I know of no more important question ; therefore I regret that so many seats are empty. It is a wonder to me that men who have received a commission from the Crown to discharge the duties of senators, have so little regard for the obligations they have taken when they were sworn to perform their duties, that they will attend the sittings of parliament until within ten or fifteen days of prorogation, and then go home, leaving the most important legislation to be dealt with in the dying hours of the session. I think it is greatly to be regretted that that should happen. I have been pleased to listen to the lucid explanation which has been given of the several clauses of the measure by the hon. Secretary of State. I think he has well and ably discharged the duty devolving upon him as leader of the government in this House, in outlining very clearly and distinctly its provisions. It has received extended consideration in the House of Commons. It has been in that House for many weeks. It has been cast and recast. It has been modified and altered both in the Committee of the Whole and in the House, and eventually, after extended criticism from all places and all the opposition that could be brought to the Bill, and suggestions from the side of those who were anxious to frame the best Bill that could be passed, it has been sent up to us. For one I cannot say that I am entirely satisfied with all its provisions. I regret very much some of the amendments that have been made to it in the House of Commons. I have no desire whatever to trample upon the conscientious convictions of any other individual, or any other province, but we must not forget that we claim to be a Christian nation, we are a Christian-professing nation at least, and as such we should respect the laws of God. We generally make our laws in accordance with the provisions of God's law. His law says 'Thou shalt not kill,' and our law says that the man that sheds man's blood by man shall his blood be shed. God's law says 'Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbour,' and our law says that a man who is guilty of perjury is liable to be punished and imprisoned for a violation of the law.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—And there is another commandment. 'Thou shalt not covet another man's wife'.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—We confirm all these commandments by legislation. Why do we not confirm that commandment which says 'Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy'?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—And there are other commandments too.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I cannot understand how my hon. friend from Chicoutimi (Hon. Mr. Choquette) can reconcile his views with regard to Sunday afternoon amusements in horse-racing and in games and entertainments of that kind with God's words that say 'Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy'. If that is considered to be preserving and honouring of the Lord's day, well and good, but I do not think so. However, I have no desire to trample upon the conscientious convictions of others. Men are not responsible to each other. Members in this House differ from other members. The senators in this House from Ontario are not responsible to the senators from Quebec, nor are the Quebec senators to the Ontario senators. We are responsible to a higher authority. The responsibility is that we should recognize God's law that is established and published in His own word. We love our friends from the province of Quebec, and we ask them to join us in respecting that law. We do not say to them that they shall in any way sacrifice their religious scruples nor do we seek to interfere with their religious rights or privileges. We do not want them to judge themselves by the standard that we set up; we want them to judge themselves by the standard that God has set up. If they can reconcile horse-racing, gambling, sporting and amusement of that kind with the standard of God's laws——

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I cannot allow that statement to go to the country unchallenged, that we in the province of Quebec reconcile gambling, and horse-racing with God's law.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I do not charge Quebec with being guilty of anything of that kind. I simply say that if they can reconcile any of these things that I have enumerated with the standard of God's law, we simply express surprise. We do not want to force on them our convictions. It is late in the history of this Dominion to be passing a Lord's Day Act. It should have been done years and years ago. I regret that we did not commence earlier in our history to lay down principles along the lines that tend to build up a nation and make it great. Look across the border and see the open desecration of the Lord's day in that country. It did not exist twenty-five years ago to the extent that it now prevails. I can remember the time when there was a fairly decent respect for the Lord's day in the United States; to-day in some of the states there is almost none, and if they keep on the down grade for another twenty-five years there will be no recognition of the Lord's day throughout the length and breadth of the republic. Not very long ago I spent a Sunday in St. Louis. When I woke up on Sunday morning I raised my blind and looked across the street, and there was a large placard advertising an exhibition of the Canadian Wild West to be held Sunday afternoon at three o'clock. I thank Providence from the bottom of my heart—perhaps I am blinded, thank God if I am—that our country would not tolerate that kind of thing. I rejoice to think that we have not descended to that condition of things. I spent some weeks at Old Orchard Beach on one occasion, and saw a number of excursion trains come in on Sunday morning from Boston. The first train which carries the poorer people starts early in the morning, and arrives at Old Orchard at ten. A second starts at eight, arriving about eleven, and a third express which carries the higher grade of society leaves Boston at ten and arrives at twelve. The excursionists bring with them their baskets and liquor, because the state of Maine is supposed to be a prohibition state. I have seen more drunkenness at Old Orchard Beach between six and seven o'clock in the evening when these Sunday excursionists were taking their train home than I ever saw in any city in Canada at any time, and on Monday morning you could collect a cart load of empty bottles left there by the excursionists from Boston. They had drunk the contents of them and made an exhibition of their own contents as they left the station going home. They had had a day of revelry, drinking, sporting and amusements of every kind. Possibly these people may be able to reconcile their conduct with God's law, but in my humble opinion it was an open violation of that law. It is not remembering the Sabbath day to keep it holy.

I entirely agree with the hon. Secretary of State when he says that we are proud of our history as a country and of the way Canada regards the Lord's day. We have very large numbers of church-going people. Toronto on the Sabbath is a model in itself. I admit you have the street cars there. The people adopted Sunday cars; we are not going to challenge their right to do so. A great many people may go to church in the street cars, and in the absence of Sunday cars they might have to employ men to harness their horses and drive them to and from church. That would be a work of necessity no doubt; but on the other hand mention was made a moment ago of taking a drive into the country in a hired cab with a number of friends,—going out for a jolly ride and enjoying the afternoon in that way. That means labour on the part of the man that drives the hack and labour for hire and gain on the part of the man who cleans the harness and cares for the horse. The law, as outlined by the hon. Secretary of State, permits a man to hire a vehicle for the purpose of taking his wife and family for a drive. That is right. Many men who work all week have no other opportunity to take out their families unless they go on the Lord's day. I have no objection to a man quietly driving out his wife and children, but that is a very different matter. It is an entirely different thing when a crowd of jolly fellows hire a rig and go out for a jolly time, and possibly call at some road-side inn. I do not consider that a religious observance of the Lord's day. It does not comply with the standard that God has set up. That standard should be respected by all, Catholics and Protestants alike. I believe there are as good Christians among Catholics as among Protestants, men who worship God according to their own conscientious convictions. I admire them where they are devout and reverence God's law in accordance with the rules of their church. I admire my hon. friend, the Secretary of State, for his conscientious convictions with regard to those things. Every Catholic should have all the liberty that any other man enjoys. Our Catholic fellow subjects are good citizens, no better, and we want them to join hands with us and set up a good national standard for Christian observance of the Lord's day. It will bring to us the greatest national blessing that possibly can fall upon any counrty. Look at ancient civilization; where have these nations gone to? They are buried in ruins. They have suffered from the curse that follows desecration and irreverent disregard for God's laws. I could point to other nations, which I shall not name, as examples of what results from violating the law of God. Canada has a good record, and it behooves us here and now to legislate in the right direction. If we cannot get all we want in connection with this legislation we surely can get a part. If this Bill does not contain everything to satisfy my conscientious scruples and the conscientious scruples of my hon. friends let us take it as it is, and if experience should show that any of its provisions are harassing or unfair, or that they bear unjustly on any particular class or creed, this I hope is not the last session of this parliament. We have an intimation already that we may meet in November, and if we do, as far as I am concerned, I shall be ever ready to concede to any man who lives in the province of Quebec a fair and reasonable consideration for his conscientious convictions. I do not want to drive the people of that province, by legislation——

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Pardon my interruption. What did I understand my hon. friend to say with reference to the month of November?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—We are, I understand, to have another meeting of parliament in November. If so, and if there is anything in the law that is now to be passed —and I hope it will pass—which trenches seriously upon the convictions——

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC—The present Bill, even if passed now, will not go into operation before March next.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Then we will have another meeting of parliament after that. Surely we will be able to deal with a law of this kind session after session. If there are any features about it which are harassing or unjust towards any class or creed we can easily amend it. I am quite sure that there will be liberality enough on the part of members from Ontario and the other provinces to concede any reasonable and fair relief to the people of Quebec. For my part I shall be ready at all times to listen to what they have to say and sympathetically consider any amendment they may suggest. During the nineteen years I had the privilege of sitting in the House of Commons there were no members in that House whose social intercourse, kindly feeling and courteous treatment I admired and loved more than our French representatives from the province of Quebec. We enjoyed their society and the intimacy which we cultivated with them from year to year, and if there is one thing I regret more than another it is that I am now too old to begin the study of the French language. I regret exceedingly that I have not been blessed with a good French education, because I feel that it would have enabled me to learn a great deal more with regard to the French-Canadian people and their manners and customs.

I now move the adjournment of the debate.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until this afternoon at three o'clock.

SECOND SITTING.

RAILWAY ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

THIRD READING.

The House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (62) An Act to amend the Railway Act, 1903.

(In the Committee.)

On subclause 7, of clause 2.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There were three clauses in the Bill that were allowed to stand over. The first was subclause 7 of clause 2. It was not postponed on account of any opposition to it, but an explanation was asked. Some one inquired whether there was any change from the existing Act. I find that the clause is exactly the same as the clause in the Act of 1903, except that the words 'upon every question of fact' are left out. The clause in the Act of 1903 reads as follows:

> 7. The decision of the Board upon every question of fact as to whether any company, municipality or person is or not a party interested within the meaning of this section shall be binding and conclusive upon all companies and persons and in all courts.

Under the law as it stood in 1888, as hon. gentlemen will remember, the Railway Committee of the Privy council had the supreme jurisdiction and the clause introduced in the Act of 1903, was simply an enlargement of the powers that they had.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would point out to my hon. friend that that is scarcely an answer to the objection taken, that the word 'municipalities' or word 'municipality' is left out. The whole object of this Bill practically is to cure defects in the Act of 1903, and because this clause is taken from the Act of 1903, and that having been taken from the old Railway Act, it does not follow that it will meet the conditions it is proposed to provide against.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. The object is that when any matter is litigated, where it is a matter of fact, that they shall name who are the parties to be heard, who are the parties interested, the company and the individual proprietor, and the municipality or any one of them.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—But there is evidently an omission. That is to say, there is no provision for the decision of the board being binding upon a municipality. The word 'municipality' should be there as well as the words 'company and person'.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If the hon. gentleman does not object, I should move, in order to remove any possible doubt, that the word 'municipality' be inserted after the word 'companies' in the last line of the clause.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have no objection.

The amendment was agreed to.

On clause 17,

17. Section 193 of the said Act is amended by inserting after the word 'compensation' in the tenth line the words 'or otherwise,' and also by adding thereto as subsection 2 the following :—

2. Notwithstanding anything in any Act contained, the Board, in determining the terms of compensation upon which any such connection or communication is to be provided for, shall not take into consideration any contract, lease or agreement now or hereafter in force by which the company has given or gives any exclusive or other privilege to any company or person, other than the applicant, with respect to any such station or premises.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I understand that the parties most interested in this matter have no desire to move any amendment, and I therefore move the adoption of clause 17.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Do I understand the hon. gentleman to say that the parties who are affected by this clause have withdrawn any opposition ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I was notified that amendments would be offered, but since I have come into the Chamber I have been notified that the amendments will not be moved.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If they are satisfied, I am.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 21,

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is the clause which limits the speed of trains at crossings to ten miles an hour.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I move that this clause be struck out. There is no necessity for it, since it is all covered by section 227 of the old Act. The Act as it stands gives all the protection needed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I may remark here that it leaves it subject to the orders, regulations and directions of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. It must have been adopted very hastily in the House of Commons, because in the Railway Act of 1903, the Railway Committee of the Privy Council is abolished. There seems to be ample provision made for it in the law as it stands, and why they should have introduced the regulations made by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, when by the Act of 1903 the Railway Committee is abolished, I cannot understand.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think I can understand why ; it is in order to provide that regulations which had been made by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council before the passing of the Act of 1903 should continue in force until repealed by this Act.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am not aware there were any regulations.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There must have been, because the question about crossings had come up before the Railway Committee of the Privy Council on various occasions, and that committee had come to decisions, and I assume that these words are inserted in order to keep those decisions in force until properly abrogated.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I cannot see any just ground why we should depart from the old regulations. The matter was well provided for in the previous Act when it was put under the charge of the Railway Commission. If there is any special danger in trains moving over crossings in cities, the people who run the risk have nothing to do but to bring the question before the Railway Commission, and no doubt they will give it their attention and see that proper precautions are taken for the protection of life. If we should fix the limit at ten miles under all circumstances it would seriously affect the running of express trains, and interfere with public traffic.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG, from the committee, reported the Bill with amendments, which were concurred in.

The Bill was then read a third time and passed.

LORD'S DAY BILL.

DEBATE CONTINUED.

The order of the day being called,

Resuming the adjourned debate on motion for second reading of Bill (12) An Act respecting the Lord's Day.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Permit me to reply to an interrogation of the hon. leader of the opposition, who drew my attention to the fact that the law does not come into force until March, 1907, I suggested that in the meantime after a full consideration of the Bill, if there were any objectionable features in it, features that were looked upon as irksome, we could amend it at the next session of parliament. I do not think there is anything to prevent us dealing with the Bill by an amendment even supposing it did not come into force until March, 1907. I can see no difficulty in our dealing with it, even supposing we decided to do so at the next meeting of parliament. I endeavoured to point out what I conceived to be the lines within which we should endeavour to lay the foundation of this great country of ours. We hope and believe that we are at the birth of a great country. It is well that we should lay its foundation along the lines as outlined by the Supreme Ruler who rules all things in heaven and on earth. On one occasion, when Queen Victoria was asked what was the origin and basis of the prosperity, the greatness and the grandeur of the empire over which she presided, the greatest empire the world had ever seen, she is said to have held up a copy of the Old and New Testament, the Bible, as we call it, in her hand and said that within the covers of the book was the explanation of England's greatness, its stability, its progress, its loyalty and its devotion to the Crown under which we live.

We on our part should learn a lesson from a declaration such as that. Queen Victoria was one of the greatest sovereigns who ever ruled in the history of the world. There never was one who received such unlimited devotion and respect from her people from one end of her empire to the other. Queen Victoria was a woman of pronounced religious views, which she never hesitated to make known upon all occasions, and when the question of the greatness of her empire was put to her she did not hesitate for a moment to say that it was based upon Christian principles and Christian doctrine. I think we should imitate that example and endeavour to lay the lines of our great Dominion on principles which will endure and which will be creditable to us, as well as a decided advantage to those who may follow us. We know that in the past ages of the world, where nations sinned as nations, they were punished as nations. That is a rule that has held good all down the ages, and I think it will hold good to the end of time. In view of that, we ought if possible, to shape our course as a country along the lines which we believe are those which will procure success, peace and harmony and that measure of development and prosperity which we all hope our country will attain. As I have already said, I respect our friends in the province of Quebec. I do not want to be understood as attempting for one moment to interfere with any rights of conscience which they may claim, but we should be united, and we should take those great principles as our guiding star. They should have as much regard, and I have no doubt they have, as their fellow-citizens have to those great principles which will be an honour to any nation if adopted and carried out. They should be just as willing as we are to adopt that high standard which is laid down by the Ruler of the universe, and I hope they are. They may look at the matter in a different light, but I earnestly hope that we will act as Christian people and agree to what is believed to be for the best interests of the country and that we shall be willing to bury in one grave any difficulties, any feeling of bitterness which might possibly grow out of sectarian difference, and as united Canadians lay the foundations of this country in a manner that will be creditable to ourselves and of advantage to our descendants. I hope that in dealing with the provisions in this Bill a spirit of conciliation will characterize the utterances of every member of this House.

We are here to perform a very grave and important duty. The House of Commons has devoted an immense amount of time to the consideration of this Bill, and their best energies in preparing and sending us a measure with clauses that apparently, to a large extent, meet the objections that have been raised. Let us deal with it in a spirit of consideration for each other's prejudices, and see if we cannot pass the Bill and give to the country the benefit that will accrue from the adoption of such legislation. If, afterwards, we find that any of its provisions seriously interfere with the rights or the convictions of any province or any section, it is the duty and the high privilege of parliament to amend it where amendment is really necessary. I hope that spirit of conciliation, reason and consideration will characterize every word that is said and every effort that is put forth to put this Bill on the statute-book.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—This is a question which affects the whole Dominion in various ways. I am strongly in favour of strict Sunday observance. I want to see the people of this country observing the Sabbath in line with the principles they were taught as children; but I do not think that the Bill before us is one that will commend itself to the country as a whole. We are trying to legislate for the whole of the provinces. The Bill as it stands is drawn as broadly as possible to meet the conditions of the country from one end to the other, a country with as varied and diversified conditions as any other on the face of the globe. As the hon. Secretary of State pointed out to-day when he was speaking on this matter, we have at the present time in the province of British Columbia an Act dealing with the question of Sunday observance, but curiously enough that Act is confined to only one portion of the province. It was enacted some years ago, when there was a part of British Columbia then known as the Colony of British Columbia, and that Act provides that the Sunday observance laws in force in British Columbia shall apply only to that territory then known as the colony of British Columbia. The effect of that is that in the rest of British Columbia there is practically no Sunday observance law at the present time, but it has not, so far, made any difference to the people of British Columbia. As far as I know—and I think my hon. friends from British Columbia in this House will bear me out in this statement—Sunday observance is maintained as strictly and as properly in the parts of British Columbia that that Act is not supposed to effect, as it is in that part of the province that it is specially provided that that Act shall effect, and I strongly maintain that this question of Sunday observance is not so much a matter of legislation as it is a matter of the training of the children and of public opinion. I may safely say that in the province of British Columbia a Sunday is much better observed than it was ten or even five years ago, and that condition of things has been brought about by public opinion by the people themselves realizing that they should better observe the sanctity of the Sabbath day, and it is only right that they should do so. But when you come to the passing of a law such as this Bill now before us, you are going to materially affect the conditions of things, not only in British Columbia but in several parts of the Dominion. I might refer for a few minutes to some of the difficulties that present themselves to me. In the province of British Columbia we have been for instance, in the habit of having the daily papers published on six days of the week. The morning paper is published on Sunday morning, but no paper is published on Monday morning. I would ask hon. gentlemen to bear with me a few minutes while I show what the effect of this Bill, if it becomes law, is going to be. The work necessary to publish the papers issued on Sunday morning is nearly all done on Saturday, and the only men connected with the business of those papers who were brought out on Sunday are probably two reporters, the press man and his assistant, and the two men who attend to the distribution of the papers. The result is that at the most you have about six men who have to work from twelve o'clock on Saturday night to three o'clock on Sunday morning, and all the rest of the staff of the paper are able to go home about from twelve to twelve thirty on Saturday night. They get the whole of their Sunday to themselves, and they get a part of Monday as well. Subclause (p) of clause 3 reads as follows:

> (p) Any unavoidable work after six o'clock in the afternoon of the Lord's day, in the preparation of the regular Monday morning edition of a daily newspaper.

That means that, as the Bill stands at present, no other work can be done on Sunday for a newspaper except as provided in this subclause, and, consequently, to be within the Act, the morning papers would have to discontinue their Sunday morning publication and they would naturally take up the publication of a Monday morning paper. What would the result of that be? The result would be that the reporters for these papers would probably be working most of Sunday. It would be a very difficult thing indeed for anybody interested in putting this Bill into force to prevent a newspaper reporter going to church and reporting the sermons that are preached on Sunday. It would probably be a difficult thing to prevent others of the staff of the newspaper going down to the office and working on Sunday, in order to bring out this Monday morning paper and then at six o'clock in the afternoon you would have to bring the rest of the staff together and everybody practically, with the exception of the pressman and his helper, would have to begin work at or about six o'clock on Sunday afternoon. So that in place of having, as you have at the present time in British Columbia, about six men doing three hours work in the early hours of Sunday morning, we would have somewhere about twenty or thirty men on one of these papers working some of them pretty nearly all Sunday and some of them working from six o'clock in the evening until midnight on Sunday. That would be six hours in place of three, and in this way as any one interested in seeing that as little work as possible is done on Sunday, in which number I class myself, by voting for this clause is practically voting that these people shall be forced to work on Sundays instead of being able, as they are at the present time, to get the whole of their Sunday to themselves and to make it a thorough day of rest.

Now I quite admit that it would not be right to make the other provinces come into line with British Columbia and not have Monday morning papers. That really would be a clause more in line with the real principle of this Act than the clause we have in the Bill, allowing work to be done from six o'clock on Sunday afternoon. I think that shows the difficulty of drafting in this Dominion parliament an Act that shall be fair and reasonable as regards all the provinces of the Dominion. I would like to take another question which affects British Columbia. Subclause (u), of clause 3 of this Bill, which was inserted at the special request of the fishermen in the Fraser river of British Columbia provides that any unavoidable work may be done by fishermen after six o'clock on Sunday afternoon in the taking of fish. That subclause was inserted in order to meet a condition of things which existed in British Columbia. The fishermen on the Fraser river, when the salmon are running in the fall of the year, are allowed to start from the Fraser river with their boats and put out into the bay and begin the catching of fish after six o'clock on Sunday afternoon. That only occurs during six or eight weeks at most throughout the year; but in order to provide for that condition of things we have to declare in this Act, that any man, practically, can fish after six o'clock on Sunday in any part of the Dominion. I am, of course, in favour of the fishermen in British Columbia being allowed to continue the methods of work which they have followed up to the present time. They get their rest on Saturday and Sunday and I do not think it does them any harm to be allowed to start out at six o'clock on Sunday afternoon. They have practically had the whole of Sunday to themselves, and the fact of sailing down the river and letting out their nets I do not think makes any difference to them as far as the observance of Sunday is concerned. But it is a bad thing that we should be legislating in this way making a law for the whole Dominion that fishermen shall fish after six o'clock on Sunday, when it is only necessary to meet the conditions in one particular province. That is a point which I think should appeal to every gentleman who is anxious for the observance of Sunday, and I draw attention to it because it seems to me one of the unfortunate features of trying to deal in this parliament with such a diversified subject. I would take this opportunity of giving notice, in order that the matter may not be sprung upon the House in a way that would not give hon. gentlemen time to fully consider it, that when the House goes into Committee of the Whole on this Bill I shall move that clause one and all the following clauses be struck out and repealed, and the following two clauses be substituted therefor:

1. Any Act of the legislature of a province dealing with the question of the observance of the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday, which is in force at the time of the passing of this Act, is hereby confirmed and ratified and made as valid and effectual as if it had been duly enacted by the parliament of Canada.

2. The Governor in Council may at any time, and from time to time, by proclamation, confirm any Act of the legislature of any province passed after the passing of this Act, dealing with the question of the observance of the first day of the week, commonly called Sunday; and from and after the date of any such proclamation the Act shall be thereby confirmed and ratified and made as valid and effectual as if it had been enacted by the parliament of Canada.

The wording of these clauses might probably be improved, but I have drafted them for the purpose of meeting a condition of things that I think would be more in line with the interests of this country to-day. Provinces can deal with this question a great deal better than we can here. It is useless to pass a law that we cannot enforce, and we cannot enforce this law if the people are not in accord with it. This is a law which we should be very careful about passing until we can do so with the sanction of the people. I might almost venture to say that should this Bill go into force as it is at present drafted, it would be a very difficult law to enforce with regard to that particular subject the Sunday papers. I am inclined to think that any body taking action under this law would find it difficult to get a jury in any town in British Columbia to find a man guilty of breaking the law in connection with this work on a Sunday morning paper. It is most undesirable that we should have on the statute-book a law that cannot be enforced. With regard to these clauses, of which I have given notice, there is some justification for an enactment of that kind. Similar clauses to those I have read here were made part of the General Railway Act in 1904. This legislation would be quite in line on that account. I have given this notice, not because it is necessary, but because I thought it well to do so, and I shall move the amendment when the Bill is before the Committee of the Whole.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I agree very much with my hon. friend from Wellington that this is a question of great importance, not only to our own honourable body, but to the people of Canada. I am in accord with him probably more than he imagines in the demand of our people for respect for divine law always, everywhere and all the time, not only on one point, but upon all; not only where it suits man's convenience, but where it suits the Divine will against man's convenience. The hon. senator from Wellington appealed to me to-day when he said there was no greater measure before the parliament of Canada than this Bill. I agree with him as far as the principle of the measure goes, because it is a recognition of the Supreme Ruler of the universe. We admit on the floor of this Senate to-day the right of the Divine Being to rule, and that is a great thing for our young country, the Benjamin of the human race, to admit, that God through his laws has a right to appear on this floor and have them endorsed and enforced. The principle is undeniable. Nobody will dispute it. The enforcement is a question of human wisdom and foresight, in demanding obedience to what the Divine Being wants. This law is a recognition by the Dominion of Canada, as distinguished from many other countries, that there is a Supreme Being. The hon. senator from Wellington asks the Senate to endorse and support this Bill because it is a supplementary effort of man to enforce the Divine will. There are few countries on the face of the earth to-day, not France or Germany, or even England that would demand from the representatives of a democracy the enforcement of human or civil law because its origin is divine, and I thank the hon. senator from Wellington to-day for having put before the country that idea, that Canada is not dominated merely by human or selfish conceptions, but that its destinies must be controlled by the Divine idea.

We are called upon by the government of the day, and especially by the House of Commons—much more by the House of Commons than by the government—to accept a certain Bill. Under these circumstances, I feel myself at perfect liberty to discuss the whole question in its principle and in its details. It is supposed to be a ministerial measure, but there is as much of opposition in it as of government effort. It is supposed to be a measure introduced by the Liberal party, but there is as much of the Conservative party in it as of the Liberal party. The House of Commons have joined on common issues. Have they joined on grounds which can appeal to the whole people of Canada? That is the question for the Senate to decide. The lower House was given this measure by an ex-Minister of Justice. It was supposed to be perfect. It came from the hands of men who pretend, and legitimately pretend, to hold the morals of this country in their hands; to hold the virtue of Canada in their hands, to direct the conscientious convictions of the people. They handed that Bill to the ex-Minister of Justice, Mr. Fitzpatrick. It was supposed to be perfect. But the House of Commons has placed before the Senate a Bill coming from people whom I admire and respect, because they wish the uplifting of this country along moral, virtuous, spiritual and religious lines. But because they want such a Bill, it does not necessarily mean that they are always right. They must remember that this Canada of ours is composed not of one class or one religion alone, but of several classes and several religions, and what may suit the hon. gentleman from Wellington may not suit me at all, although we agree on the fundamental principles of christianity. When it got through the House of Commons we find that Bill of the Lord's Day Alliance cut to pieces. There is not a word of Divinity in the Bill. Here is the Lord's Day Alliance Bill without one provision for the sanctification of the Lord's day, for which they are working, and for which I think they are working thoroughly and honestly—not one provision in the law to say that the Lord shall be adored, that the Lord shall be served and loved. The clauses of this Bill refer to transportation companies, railway companies, golf clubs and other such things. Where is there a clause in this Bill asking the people of Canada to respect the day and to respect the Divine Being by going to church? There is not one mention of it in the whole Bill. It is a commercial Bill, an industrial Bill, a golf Bill, a baseball Bill, but there is no clause in it to direct me or my children to attend church on Sunday.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Put it in.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—We will put a lot in or we will put them all out. I believe in the observance of a law which commands our respect for Him who made us, who keeps us in this life and who makes our destinies. I have all respect and love for Him, and yet this Bill says nothing about the Creator; it is the Lord's Day Alliance Bill. The Lord, in his commandments, said: 'The Lord's day you shall keep holy.' But what does the parliament of Canada say? On the Lord's day you shall work, you shall play baseball, you shall run your trains, your steamboats, your pulp mills, and you shall run anything else you like.

This Bill will give rise to petty persecution. I have had an instance of that in Hawkesbury, not later than three weeks ago. My boy goes out to play baseball and football on Sunday afternoon, and I am glad he does, and he is fined $2.86 for doing it? Why? Because there happens to be, I will not say a spy, an informer, but a man so built up in the love of the Lord that he cannot see a poor little boy kick a football, or throw a ball on Sunday and he has the whole team of twenty-four up, and they are fined $2.80 each—poor little boys, instead of knocking around hotels, they were out in the field kicking a ball, and on Monday morning they are fined. Is that Sunday observance?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Under what law?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Under the provincial law—the law of Ontario. The law in Quebec is more liberal and has more regard for the needs of human nature. There is one of the principles of our religion which is not understood, even by the hon. member for Wellington, nor by others like him. Under the Christian law—I know the high church will admit and agree with this at once—under the Christian law there is one act which distinguishes the Christian from the atheist, and that is the reverence and the respect he pays to a sacrifice. Under the law of Moses, he who attended the sacrifice of a lamb performed his duty on the Sabbath. By every branch of the human race sacrifice is regarded as the great prayer to the Almighty. You will find this the case in Egypt, in India—all over the world. Let me tell you here to-day that there still exists, after 6,000 years, a sacrifice on earth, and that is in the Catholic branch of the Christian religion, the holy sacrifice of the mass. Any Christian who attends that sacrifice has performed his essential duty. I do not say he has performed his whole duty, but he has performed his essential duty towards his Creator by attending that sacrifice, whether he takes half an hour at early mass or two hours at high mass makes no difference; once he has accomplished that duty he has done all that is essential in the eyes of the Christian church from the Catholic point of view, because I am not going to exclude from the Church of Christ either Baptists, Presbyterians or Episcopalians. We are all on the same footing, some higher, some lower, and the only difference between the Catholic and the other sects of the Christian religion is that we Catholics have to accept the whole gospel, while the other sects only accept what suits them. We have to go to confession; we have to believe everything, while the Baptist and Episcopalian takes what suits him. We benighted Catholics are the slaves of the gospel, while the others are more or less the masters of the gospel; and that is why we are such rigid observers of the Sabbath. Do hon. gentlemen know what it means to a Catholic to miss mass on Sunday? It means if he does it wilfully and knowingly, his damnation; and what more can you put on the statute law, with that conviction in the heart of a man, that when he misses the observance of the Sabbath he is eternally damned? What does the law give us? The law says, if you fail to observe the Sabbath you are subject to a fine of $1.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—You do not find that in the Scripture?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—You find in the Scripture that what the Church teaches you must submit to.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Halifax)—What about horse racing on Sunday?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That does not pertain to the doctrines of the Church. When Roman Catholics are charged by certain people with not observing the Sabbath, I reply that we do, though it may not be according to their ideas.

The principle of Sabbath observance dwells deep in our hearts. We have much more than some of our hon. gentlemen's friends imagine, because we are under constraint and they are not. If we are called upon to do a certain thing and fail to do it, the punishment is not a one dollar fine but eternal damnation. Don't you think that is enough? When we have attended to the divine act of sacrifice as between God and man through the Saviour, don't you think we are entitled to a little leisure afterwards, and if we take it in one way or another, whether I go on horse back, or you run an automobile or a bicycle or drive a buggy, what difference is there in principle? Absolutely none. Yet we have clauses in this Bill trying to regulate that act of the family. A man who engages a rig for his family is not liable to a fine, but suppose I have strangers as guests, and I wish to take them for a drive, what will happen me under this Act? I am liable to a fine. The provisions of this Bill are most absurd and childish. Take the first clause. Are hon. gentlemen aware that they are called upon to fabricate and create a new Sabbath? From my reading of history and theology, I know of but two authorities who were entitled to the right of creating the Sabbath, that is Moses and Christ. Moses created the Jewish Sabbath. Christ created the Christian Sunday, but now, owing to the influence of the Lord's Day Alliance, parliament has assumed the right of creating a third Sunday. I do not think the Lord's Day Alliance meant what they set out in the first clause of the Bill. Either that or they do not know the English language. The Lord's day according to subsection (a) of clause 1 is defined as follows:—

(a) 'The Lord's day' means the period of time which begins at twelve o'clock on Saturday afternoon and ends at twelve o'clock on the following afternoon.

Moses made the Sabbath for the Jews on Saturday; Christ made it for the Christians on Sunday, and the House of Commons comes in now and splits the difference and makes the Lord's day a compromise between the two, half Jewish and half Christian. It so surprised me that I consulted the highest authorities in parliament on the other side and what do they say? 'You had better amend it.' Now, what constitutes the afternoon? Here is the New England dictionary, giving all the leading interpretations of words, and I shall quote from it the definition of afternoon:

Afternoon means the time from mid-day to evening.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is in England.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is everywhere throughout the world, and I have this compliment to pay to our fellow-citizens of the province of Quebec, that in the French translaton of the Bill it is properly stated. Our French Canadian citizens, who are supposed to be against the Bill, are not opposed to the principle of the observance of the Lord's day, and I deny the right of any man to say so, but they are against certain provisions of the Bill. The French Bill reads as follows:

(a) "Le dimanche" signifie la période de temps qui commence à minuit le samedi soir et finit à minuit le soir suivant;

In English it is nonsense. They say the Sabbath begins at twelve o'clock on Saturday afternoon and ends Sunday at twelve o'clock on the following afternoon. I admire our French friends for having a little more knowledge of the necessity of the case than we have.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the hon. gentleman will permit me, I will call the attention of the hon. Speaker to the fact that there is no quorum in this House.

The SPEAKER—There is a quorum in the House now and the hon. gentleman may proceed.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am gratified that the hon. gentleman from Stadacona has in this way called attention to the slim attendance in the House. I do not wish to base my remarks simply on my own conception of the English language, although if I had been asked personally I think I was pretty sure of what I would have said, but in order to corroborate what I say I shall now quote another authority, which is probably one of the strongest in the world of English literature and on English decisions. 'Words and Phrases,' judically defined, volume 1. It was put before the courts of England as to what the word 'afternoon' meant, and the judges decided as follows:

Afternoon may mean the whole time from noon to midnight, or it may mean the earlier part of that time as distinguished from the evening. It was used in this latter sense in a state prohibiting the opening of a public house during the usual hours of afternoon divine service and did not include the service at six p.m. The Queen vs. Knapp, second volume, pages 447-451.

Though accurately and properly speaking afternoon signifies from noon until evening, an indictment charging the violation of sessional law 81, page 251, prohibiting saloons from keeping open after nine o'clock at night, which alleges that the saloon was kept open at eleven o'clock in the afternoon, will be construed as sufficiently alleging the keeping open of a saloon after nine o'clock at night.

Now, here we have the highest English authorities from the bench and on literature deciding what the afternoon means. It means from 12 noon until 12 at midnight, and our entire Dominion parliament, the lower House from top to bottom, did not know that such was the case. In case the English definition was astray I thought we might consult the French literary world which is also supposed to know something of the value of language. What does the Frenchmen of letters, the French word of science say?:

Après-midi est la période de temps qui commence à midi et finit à minuit.

This, translated into English, reads as follows:

Sunday shall signify the period of time which commences at midnight on Saturday and finishes at midnight on Sunday.

The French coincides with the English sense, as found in the dictionaries. So that when the time comes, if the Lord's Day Alliance people will allow me, I would suggest to them that they prepare an amendment in that sense because otherwise it would be most obnoxious to most of our people to have all our sports cut off on Saturday afternoon. It would not be fair to us who like a little life. I will not make the motion myself, but I suggest to them to prepare an amendment to make the day coincide either with the Jewish day or the Christian day but not to mix up the two. Our people in Canada will not stand to have their Saturday afternoon holiday turned into a Sabbath. I do not know what they will stand on Sunday, but know that they will not permit Saturday afternoon to be taken from them. I see that the Bill goes on to define the word 'railway' and also the word 'vessel.' Has the government been asleep; have the minister and the Lord's Day Alliance been asleep? Are they not aware that there are to-day other modes of conveyance than tramways, street railways, &c. Are they not aware that in commercial competition to-day there are balloons? Have they forgotten the balloons? Why did they not include them in the clause, and automobiles? The automobile to-day is as great a factor in transportation as a railway car. It is well known that there are automobiles which carry from forty to sixty passengers, yet there is no provision in the Bill to prevent them from exercising their rights from carrying passengers as they do in New York, in Washington and other large cities. Then we have a definition of the word 'performance.' We are told that it includes any game, match, sport, contest, exhibition or entertainment. I had the opportunity of pointing out to the Minister of Justice that this definition does not include any other performance. 'No,' he said, 'it is simply to make the expression more clear, but anything that is not clear is contained in it.' A performance may be spiritual it may be athletic, intellectual or theatrical. We have many kinds of performances in the province of Quebec, and outside of that province, because I am not going to make it a matter of the province of Quebec. I contend that the people of that province are more religious than those of any other part of Canada, and they show it by their family traditions. I will not stand here and permit any one to say that the province of Quebec is behind any other province in regard to morals. It is not true, and the statistics are against the statement. Not long ago we had one of the chief officials of the province of Ontario deploring the immorality of that province along the same line as Roosevelt complained about the United States. Your own statistican of the province of Ontario, not later than last week, admitted that crime was rift. You do not find any statistics of that kind in the province of Quebec. We may not lie on ashes and cover ourselves with sackcloth, but we observe, as far as we can, the ten commandments. We violate them if you will, but we do not do so maliciously, we do not do so saying, 'there is no God,' as is done in other portions of our community. We do not commit crime because we deny the existence of a God; we commit crime on account of our weakness, not in malice or with evil intent and evil thoughts against the Supreme Being.

'Performance' what does it mean? In many parts of this country, as well as in the United States and Europe, especially in the poorer parts, the church has found it necessary to charge an admission fee to divine services. Our Protestant brethren have more wealth; there are more millionaires among them, more people capable of contributing ten or fifteen dollars a Sunday, when our poor workingmen, earning $1 or $1.50 a day can only give a few cents. Our churches have to be maintained; they cannot be kept upon wind. Take a parish with one thousand families; out of that there may be one or two hundred who are regular contributors to the church, paying $5 or $10 a year, and you have the balance, perhaps two-thirds of the whole, who are unable to go to their parish priest and offer him $5. But they go to mass with the love of God in their hearts, not because the law of Canada tells them to go, but because of the law which my hon. friend from Wellington cited here to-day, 'Remember to keep holy the Sabbath day.' In large centres as in small centres, everywhere throughout this country, you find poor people rising in the early morning in the cold winter days as well as in the warm days of summer, at five, six and seven o'clock to attend mass and adore their God. If hon. gentlemen have witnessed this they cannot charge our people with failing to observe the Sabbath. They make the sacrifice of getting out of their homes, the servant girl and the mistress together, the children and the father taking turns to go to early church, and when they arrive at church they do not refuse the five cents that is necessary to buy fuel to heat the church and to light it. Under this Bill they will be deprived of the opportunity of going to church? Why? Because it is a question of fee; it is a performance where an admission fee is asked. I said to the Minister of Justice, do you want to destroy the means for the maintenance of the church? He said, 'No, I never thought of it,' he never knew that such a thing existed. There comes the question that the people of the west do not understand the people of the east, and when we rise and ask for the protection of our rights and customs we are put down as being more or less extreme, fanatical, not understanding things, but that is not correct. The first people who settled in Canada were the French. They developed from 60,000 to one and a half millions in this country, and other million five hundred thousand in the neighbouring country. If they had been vicious or immoral, would they have prospered in that way? They could not, no more than France their mother country, the brightest gem of the earth to-day, but sinking by its immorality not only into degradation but into non-existence. The French Canadians have held the flag of morals, of honour, of virtue and religion high in this country, as they have held the flag of patriotism in the past century, and why this Bill should be more or less directed at them is more than I can understand. Under this clause you annihilate their attendance at church. I will not propose any amendment: I will ask the Lord's Day Alliance to go back to the Commons or come here and suggest an amendment, that where a five or a ten cent fee is charged in any church, Protestant or Catholic, it shall not be considered a performance against the law, which it is to-day under this Bill. When I pointed out this matter to the Minister of Justice, he said, 'Amend it.' It had been left to the full consideration and calm judgment of the House of Commons for months, and now we are told to amend the Bill. I say let the Lord's Day Alliance deal with that. Now we come to clause two, which provides :

2. It shall not be lawful for any person on the Lord's day, except as provided herein or in any provincial Act now or hereafter in force regarding matters coming within the classes of subjects enumerated in section 92 of the British North America Act, 1867, to sell or offer for sale or purchase any goods, chattels or other personal property, or any real estate, or to carry on or transact any business of his ordinary calling, or in connection with such calling, or for gain to do, or employ any other person to do, on that day any work, business or labour.

It shall be unlawful to 'Sell or offer for sale or purchase, &c.' I am with them there, but they do not go far enough. Remember I am not against the Bill, but I want to improve it. Now what about the man who goes to a store and fails to purchase because he cannot get the article as cheap as he wants it ? The man who offers to sell is guilty, but the man who tries to purchase is not guilty if he fails to make a purchase. I would ask that this clause 2, be amended so that the man who enters a store to make a purchase on Sunday shall be in the same position as the man who keeps the store. I wish to bring before the attention of the Senate some points which go to show on what a false principle this Bill is based. For instance amongst the exemptions are :

Receiving, transmitting or delivering telegraph or telephone messages.

That is within the law. I ask this honourable body is there any greater commercial pursuit in existence to-day in Canada than the telephone and telegraph lines ? They are in the business to make what money they can, and under this Bill they are at liberty to keep their employees busy on Sunday, not merely to transmit messages of love, I could condone such an offence—but messages of a commercial nature. Let the Lord's Day Alliance look after that clause ! Then I find amongst the exemptions the following :

The operation of any ferry boat authorized by any competent authority to carry passengers on the Lord's day.

I know lots of streams in Ontario and Quebec, and elsewhere in Canada on which there are ferries run absolutely without any authority, either federal, municipal or provincial, and I have often found it a great convenience to be ferried across a stream by such ferrymen on Sunday. But the ferryman who does it under this Bill is liable to a penalty. Now, where is the justice of that ? I have travelled a great deal in the country, and I know there are many ferries which are operated without any authority, but you are very glad to have them, and under this Bill they cannot be operated on Sunday without a fine. One occasion I was detained in the village of Russell over Sunday. There was no Catholic church in the village, and in order to go to mass I had to cross a ferry and Johnston, an orangeman, ferried me across. Under this law he would be liable to a fine for doing so, because he has no authority. There is another clause which strikes me as very peculiar :

Any unavoidable work after six o'clock in the afternoon of the Lord's day in the preparation of the regular Monday morning edition of the newspaper.

God knows we have enough newspapers for six days a week. Not that I am opposed to Monday morning papers. I have been a newspaper man myself and know what it means, and the only point I raise with regard to this paragraph is this—why should the newspaper industry have this privilege ? There are very few men indeed in Canada in the newspaper business except for commercial ends. With very few exceptions, they are in it for all they can make out of it. Why should we grant them this privilege and deny it to other people ? I am one of those who believe in equal rights, and I do not believe in granting to the newspaper industry rights which are not accorded to any other. Is the Senate prepared to endorse class legislation ? That because you belong to a certain class of enterprise, whether it be a newspaper or otherwise, you are going to have this privilege which others will not have ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—They have no privilege at all.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—They have the privilege of working on the Sabbath.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No, the Sabbath ends at noon.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—If the entire body of the Senate agrees with the hon. member from Stadacona and myself, the whole Bill is out of order unless the parliament of Canada wishes to establish a new Sabbath day, but I have asked the Lord's Day Alliance to amend that. It is all very well to say that we want our morning paper on Monday, but we want our morning loaf of bread on Monday, and why not give the butchers authority to kill and dress meat after six o'clock on Sunday ? Why not give the bakers the right ? Why not give the grocer the right ? I am simply citing these facts to show the absurdity of the situation, giving liberties to one and forbidding another. Is that right ?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—This Bill is a compromise.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Throw out the compromise which creates injustice, throw out the compromise which creates the state of affairs that brings about ill-feeling. That is the worst principle on which you can build a Lord's Day Bill. The Lord knows no compromise between truth and error, between good and evil. The Lord knows no compromise between what is right and what is wrong, and when you, as an adherent and supporter of the Lord's day ask me to compromise with evil and error I shall not do so ; and I ask my fellow senators to follow on that line. Let the Lord's commandments be observed. I was shocked at the modesty of my hon. friend when he was defending the ten commandments. My hon. friend from Wellington, who is a good friend of mine, stood by the principles of christianity to a certain degree, but he did not endorse and accept the whole as we have to do. When I asked the senator to stand by the eighth commandment as he stood by the third, he did not do so. He insisted on respecting the Lord's day because the Lord said so but when I asked him to stand by the other commandment and not allow any man to covet another man's wife, he declined to do so. Let not the laugh go round—the majority of senators are particeps criminis in this matter. They sanction a man's coveting another man's wife. I admit that the hon. gentleman was right in saying that legislation passed by men respecting a civilized nation should insist that the ten commandments be respected. Is it alone on the question of divorce, of matrimonial sanctity, that parliament is loose ? Take the commandment 'Thou shalt not steal.' Does the hon. gentleman from Wellington know in his long parliamentary experience that laws have been passed which allow trusts and great corporations to take from the poor what does not belong to them. I am simply pointing out where parliament is lax. If we are here to enforce the ten commandments, and I hope we are, we ought to enforce all the ten and not pick out those which suit us. With regard to Sunday newspapers, I wish the newspaper men to understand that I have no grudge against them. I like my Monday morning paper—I like my Sunday morning paper. I have to differ from my hon. friend from Wellington in regard to that matter ; the Sunday morning paper involves no labour as a desecration of the Sabbath compared to the preparation of a Monday morning paper. The Sunday morning paper has to be set up in type, the newspaper reporters, correspondents and editors must all have their articles completed by at least 11.30 at night when they are sent to the composing room. If the staff is big enough, they will get these articles in half an hour or an hour's time. Say they get them at 12 o'clock; the correspondents work is in; the newspaper reporters' work is done. The editor's work is finished. It goes up to the composing room. If the foreman of the composing room has a sufficient staff all the composition will be through in half an hour, and the lights will be put out before one o'clock on Sunday morning, and the only people left in the establishment would be the engine driver and the pressman—that is if the paper is rich enough to have a press that runs by steam. Most of them have. At any rate, it only takes two or three hands. The paper is printed by two in the morning; all the work is done, and the establishment is clear of all workmen, Christians, Jews or otherwise. In the morning the paper is sent out. With whom does it interfere? Take the city of Montreal. It gives a living to fifty or sixty Jewish boys and girls. These are practically the only ones who sell papers on Sunday. Now there is the whole violation of the Sabbath day by Sunday papers; but what does the Monday morning paper mean? It means the whole staff has to be on hand from three o'clock or six o'clock on Sunday afternoon at the latest. They have to report at the office. The correspondents, editors and typesetters, everybody has to be on hand at six o'clock, and earlier if there is special work to be done, and they work all Sunday afternoon and night. Now why give to the Monday morning paper what you refuse to the Sunday paper? I am not in favour of one any more than the other, but I like justice. I do not like that a man who works one hour on Sunday should be put out of business when the other man works nine and is kept in business by the parliament of Canada. When historians read about this legislation, they will say that the Senate and the parliament of Canada are not fit to deal with public matters. They will say that we have passed classed legislation. I ask the promoters of this Bill to rectify the discrepancies, the contradictions, the inequalities and injustices in this Bill before the House is asked to pass it. This is a measure that should, if properly framed, have appealed to the common sense and the sense of justice of every hon. member of this House. They have fought one another on the floor of the House, both opposition and ministerial members. We are here to discuss this measure, not from a ministerial, Liberal or Conservative point of view. We are here to discuss it from the point of view of justice, fair-play and equality among all classes of our people, and not from any other standard. The principle of the Bill commands my utmost respect and reverence, but the provisions of the Bill must be so framed that they will not offend common sense, or justice or equality. I will not ask that it be so framed that it will not offend prejudice, but that they will not offend justice, equality and common sense and I will go no further than that. I do not ask if this Bill shall favour the prejudices of Ontario, or the prejudices of Quebec, because I recognize none in this matter. The question whether I sanctify the Sabbath by going to mass on Sunday morning or going to vespers Sunday afternoon is the business of nobody. The only person to whom it pertains is my conscience and my spiritual adviser. If I see fit not to go to early morning mass, and go in the afternoon to vespers, why should the parliament of Canada tell me I am doing wrong? I have only to answer to my conscience, which is supposed to be enlightened, and if it is not then I am supposed to procure aid and succour from my spiritual adviser to enlighten it, just as a man who is sick secures the services of a doctor, or a man who is in legal difficulties consults a legal adviser. But no man has a right to step in between my conscience and my God in regard to that. I want a Bill that will meet the situation, that will educate, not force our people. We cannot force men to be virtuous or moral, but we can lead them on. We can turn on the lights so that they can see, and that is what we should do. Lead on our population. We cannot force the people by imposing fines or inflicting punishment by a term in the penitentiary, to become good and virtuous citizens. We cannot do what God Almighty could not do. He brought down one of his own to show us the way—to lead the way.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Halifax)—The scripture says that to God all things are possible.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Certainly, as a metaphysical phrase there is no doubt about that. But literally the expression to God all things are possible is not true. If you want a flat contradiction I say that to God all things are not possible. You never heard of a Divine being making two and two make five.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Halifax)—Christ said that.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Phraseology in a discussion of this kind is no use. To God all things are not possible. It is impossible for him to lie; it is impossible for him to be unjust. So that the phraseology 'to God all things are possible' must be taken in a theological sense.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Halifax)—Christ said it.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Yes, he said that, but he never said that he could do impossibilities. I have noticed latterly in our modern civilization that people are getting very exacting. They want fresh bread and fresh milk and fresh meat, and it very often happens, especially amongst the poorer classes—I am not talking about the millionaires of Sherbrooke street—that they are not able to buy two or three days' provisions at a time, and they pay for what they get as the milkman and the grocer come along.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—They should not buy a three days' supply. The milk will get sour if they keep it.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The hon. gentleman from Kingston is heartily in sympathy with the ideas I am about to express. Subclause (r) says:

> The delivery of milk for domestic use and the work of domestic workmen and watchmen.

Why not put in the delivery of bread? I know that there are many bakers who only call two or three times a week, Monday, Wednesday and Friday. Why not give a poor man a chance to have his fresh bread Sunday morning, the only day in the week the poor man is at home; the man on the engine, the man in the fire-box, the man in the pit, the man everywhere, the man in the mill, has only that one day at home, and yet under such a clause he cannot have his fresh bread and fresh meat. The only thing you allow him to have fresh will be milk. The only time the poor man can have his meals with his children, and although I am not a poor man, I will cite to this honourable House what happened to myself this week in regard to domestic servants, and hon. gentlemen must remember that they are not the slowest to advance their rights. They do not belong to labour unions. They are not controlled by walking bosses, but they have a knowledge of their rights. My latest experience of domestic servants was last week. I had two new ones in my house and on the second day after my arrival both of them walked out on Saturday evening and remained out all Saturday night and all Sunday and came back Monday morning about ten. They said they were entitled to the Lord's day as a day of rest, but I said: 'My good girls, I am charged with your protection, and I don't see why you should stop out of my household two nights,' and I asked: 'What about our meals on Sunday?' Their reply was: 'Why don't you cook your meals on Saturday and eat them cold?' That is what the Bill leads to. The domestic servants in this country will be up in arms. That is no invention. It is what has happened in my own house.

With regard to the subclause which covers all operations connected with the making of maple sugar, and maple syrup in the maple grove, I would say that I have a maple grove myself, but unforunately I do not make the sugar in the grove. I have to cart the sap into the barn-yard where I have my furnace to boil it. Under this Bill I would be liable to be fined for doing so; the maple syrup or sugar must be made in the grove. This does not apply in my own case only, I know of dozens of others. Is there any sense in drafting a clause in that manner? When a man makes his syrup in the maple grove it is because it is situated at a considerable distance from his farm house, and, for his own convenience, he builds a little hut in the grove and makes his sugar there; but the man who has only forty or fifty or perhaps a hundred trees finds it easier to gather the sap and bring it to his house and boil it there. Nine out of ten of the producers of maple sugar follow the latter method, so that the clause favours certain individuals and discriminates against others. Then we have subclause (k), relating to the freight traffic of any railway. I do not see why the Railway Commissioners were not given permission to deal with the same matters in relation to passenger traffic. The Bill is incomplete. It is badly thought out. Before going any further I wish to direct the attention of the House to a document which has just come into my hand.

The document, I regret very much, did not reach me before I arose to address the House. You may notice I have passed over a great many of the subsections of clause three without alluding to them, simply because I have not had time to study them properly. The request to have this Bill left over for discussion until this evening was a most reasonable one. This matter has been forced on our attention without an opportunity being afforded to know what amendments have been made to the Bill in the House of Commons. We must discuss the Bill on its general principles without giving it careful study. It is so clumsily drawn and so contradictory that it is unworthy to be put on the statute-book of our country. If enacted it will lead to litigation beyond limit. It is not a Bill which appeals to the best judicial sentiment of the men who will be called upon to enforce the law. I repeat, it is one thing to appoint judges to enforce and apply the law, and it is another thing to put on their shoulders the power, the authority and the responsibility of interpreting the law. It is the plain duty of parliament to make the laws which it passes so clear that no judge in the land shall have the right to say what parliament meant when enacting those laws. We are here to look after the interests of the country, and the best way we can do so is to put on the statute-books, laws so clear and distinct that no judge will be able to tell a lawyer before him 'I do not know what the law means, I will have to take the case en délibéré to look up the authorities and find what it means.' That is not a position in which we should place our judges. I know from experience that judges have protested time after time against the indistinctness of the statutes. Let us take sufficient time here, instead of playing into the lands of the legal fraternity, to make our laws plain and distinct so that they can be understood. We are the interpreters of the people's wants and needs, and it is our duty to make our laws perfectly clear and distinct. When you come to examine the subsections of clause 3, dealing with our transportation companies, you will find that in certain cases they are given powers which they do not need, and in other cases are hampered very often against the best interests of the country. I commend this memorial prepared by an eminent lawyer in Ottawa, Mr. Chrysler, to the attention of the House. I have seen enough of the document at the first glance to be able to say that he is perfectly justified in putting these views before parliament, and I regret very much that the hon. Secretary of State did not accede to the request made by several hon. senators on the floor of this House, that the debate on the principles of the Bill should be postponed until we had an opportunity to see in what shape the House of Commons had left the Bill.

I wish to state to this honourable House that the feeling in regard to this Bill is not all one-sided; that there are different impressions regarding its value and its effectiveness. Take the metropolitan city of Canada, and what is the opinion of probably 500,000 or 600,000 people within the immediate districts of the city of Montreal as voiced by deputations and representatives of that population? I shall give it to you as adopted solemnly and calmly by the city corporation of Montreal. It was 'resolved that this council'—that is the council of the city of Montreal—'deem it advisable to renew its protests against the adoption of the Bill now before the Dominion parliament concerning the observance of the Lord's Day, and it respectfully prays the members of the House of Commons and the Senate to kindly take into consideration its objections to such Bill as set forth in a resolution passed this council on the 26th March, 1906.' There is the formal declaration of the will of 500,000 people. I won't say directly, but at least 350,000 people directly represented in the city council, with all the surrounding constituencies, Jacques Cartier, Hochelaga, Laval and all these other outlying districts wherein live over 500,000 people. By a formal resolution of that representative body they come before this honourable parliament of Canada and ask that they take into consideration their objections to the Bill. Now, what was the kindness extended to that request? We were forced to go on with the consideration of the matter, serious or otherwise. That was the kindness extended to the city of Montreal, and no doubt my hon. friends from Stadacona and other places will say the same thing for the city of Quebec, Three Rivers, Sorel and other districts in the province of Quebec.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—But the hon. gentleman wants the Bill.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I am in favour of the principle of the Bill but not in favour of the clauses of the Bill as drafted. There are other memorials, I have dozens of them on my desk. I have one here from British Columbia, which shows that there is a large class of people in British Columbia who feel aggrieved at the provisions of the present Bill. Now why should not their prayer be taken into consideration ? I shall not conclude my remarks now, but I desire to propose before the House adjourns, so that hon. senators may think the matter over, that as it took the combined wisdom of the House of Commons to digest this Bill in the first place, and we all admit that it was a heavy load for any digestion ; as it took the combined energies of opposition and government to endeavour to improve it ; and since it was sent to this Chamber by the House of Commons at half-past three in the morning, with ill-considered amendments, amendments which cannot appeal to the best sense of this country—it is the duty of this honourable House, in view of all these facts, and in view of the incompetency of the House of Commons to prepare a Bill that would meet all the exigencies of the situation in Canada to go slowly with such an important measure. I do not blame the House of Commons for it, because human wisdom is too finite, too restricted, to frame a law that will meet the consciences of all men. The Almighty Himself could not do it. He laid down the law in blank—'You must observe the sabbath,' leaving it to each man's conscience to decide in what way he should best carry out that command. Man comes in and says : you may play golf, but not baseball. We have the spectacle of a parliament composed of men who pretend to be desirous of observing the Lord's day accepting the golf amendment because baseball and football can be played. The adherents of these two classes of games were at loggerheads in the House of Commons. The golf amendment was struck out, and then to get it in again, the people who were in favour of baseball and football accepted the golf amendment. That is an exhibition of the lack of human wisdom in dealing with a divine law. Under these circumstances, I shall ask this House, at the proper time, to do as the House of Commons did, appoint a special committee to examine into the law as it stands, and to see how far this honourable body can improve the Bill. I have not gone into the merits of clause 13 as compared with the suggestions made by Mr. Chrysler. I think they are of a serious character, and that it would be within the jurisdiction and within the duty of this House to appoint a special committee to study this matter and report to the Senate before we go any further with the Bill. I move the adjournment of the debate.

The motion was agreed to.

It being six o'clock the Speaker left the chair.

After Recess.

THE SENATE DEBATES.

MOTION.

Hon Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL from the Committee on Debates and Reporting presented their second report and moved its adoption. He said : The effect of adopting this report is to re-employ the present Senate press reporter. Speaking on behalf of the committee, and I think also most of those who have paid any attention to the services he has rendered this House must have come to the conclusion that the synopsis of our debates prepared for the press has been satisfactory to us as far as the reported is concerned. One thing I have observed, the synopsis is of a character which has induced the press to accept what they never would publish before. Under the circumstances the committee thought it not only advisable but proper that they should present a short report authorizing his employment for next session. It will enable the clerk at the opening of next session to pay the reporter, which he could not do if the report were not adopted.

The motion was agreed to.

THE LORD'S DAY BILL.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN resumed. He said, I have to continue the debate and finish my remarks on this subject and I desire to do so in as brief a way as possible. I know that my sentiments do not coincide with those of some of my colleagues. I am sorry for the sentiments of my colleagues, but my own I maintain, and they shall be heard on the floor of the House for the benefit of the country. I had occasion during the afternoon, not to condemn the Bill but to criticise most of its provisions. The Lord's day appeals to me as a Christian and as a good Canadian. The Lord's Day Bill, conceived in excessive zeal was brought out by parliamentary compromise and an effort is made to put it on the statute-book. Excessive zeal—there is no question about it. The first Bill, as laid before parliament by the ex-Minister of Justice, was one that would appeal to nobody with a sense of justice or fair-play in this community. It had to be mangled, it had to be almost assassinated in the House of Commons before it could pass that Chamber. The Bill is the product of excessive zeal, and we all know that in pagan doctrine, as well as in Christian doctrine, virtue does not lie on either extreme but in the middle state. That principle was enunciated by a pagan philosopher and poet, endorsed by Christianity and emphasized by Christian practice. Unfortunately, in our community as in all others, there are extremists on both sides; some who want everything and some who want nothing. I stand for those who would like to have something in the middle and leave the extremists out. That is about the best way a parliament like ours can best serve the interests of a democratic country.

The Lord's Day Bill, as I have already said, appealed to me as a Christian and as a Canadian, but the provisions of it are not of a character which would induce me to accept or to ask my fellow-citizens to accept. I have had the opportunity of pointing out many defects in the Bill. Even the very first phrase of the Bill is an attack on Christianity. It wants to make the Sabbath itself a half Jewish day and a half Christian day. The wisdom that fabricated that clause is the same wisdom that fabricated the other clauses. If in the determination of what constitutes the Lord's day, the wisdom of parliament was astray, can it not be astray also on other clauses? If parliament cannot tell the people of Canada when the Lord's day begins and when it ends, what are they able to tell the people of Canada? That is a point for the country to discuss. That is a point for this House to settle. Here it is in black and white printed, reprinted, amended and reamended and sent up by the sanction of the popular branch of parliament to the Senate. What to do? To sanction their saying that the Lord's day begins at twelve o'clock on Saturday afternoon and finishes at twelve o'clock on Sunday afternoon. Is that the kind of legislation that is going to be forced down our throats?

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Halifax)—That is the practice in Nova Scotia.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is the practice in Nova Scotia, the hon. gentleman says. Then the people wake up twelve hours sooner than we do, and that is the reason, I suppose, they have dominated the rest of Canada. They are wide awake people there. They get up twelve hours before us and produce men who become prime ministers. Is that the explanation of it?

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Halifax)—The explanation is this: a ship or a steamer comes in with a cargo, and at twelve o'clock on Saturday night she knocks off discharging, and after twelve o'clock on Sunday night they proceed with the work again. That has been the practice in Nova Scotia. I have been collector of customs in a port there thirteen years.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I never knew before that because an hon. senator of this House should rise and say that when a steamer comes into Halifax or any other port in the maritime provinces at twelve o'clock on Saturday that that constitutes Saturday afternoon. We have in our hands a Bill passed by the House of Commons saying that the Lord's day shall begin at twelve o'clock Saturday afternoon and finish at twelve o'clock in the afternoon of the following day, and I am told by the venerable senator from Halifax that when the ships come into the harbour there at twelve o'clock they stop work and start again at twelve o'clock Saturday night. That is not a serious answer to my point. I would call the attention of the Senate to an amendment that was inserted in the Bill, not by its framers, not by those who originated the Bill, not by those who want the observance of the Lord's day maintained, but put in at the last moment by one of the members as a compromise. The Bill is a compromise, and a sorry spectacle it is. He put in an amendment, notwithstanding the strong advocacy—and I believe in the advocacy of the Lord's Day Alliance of the principle that when a man has worked six days faithfully, honestly and laboriously, he is entitled to the seventh as a day of rest. That principle underlies human life; human life without rest is worth nothing. But what do we find ? We find that at two o'clock in the morning, at the last stages of the discussion in the House of Commons, this amendment was added to clause 4 :

2. This section shall not apply to any employee engaged in the work of any industrial process in which the regular day's labour of such employee is not of more than eight hours' duration.

Have the hon. senators seized the meaning of these few words? Do they comprehend what it means to the labouring classes of this Dominion? That clause is a slap in the face to every labour union throughout Canada and the United States; yes, throughout Europe. If there is anything the workingmen in this hemisphere to-day are striving for, it is the right to have eight hours labour, eight hours rest and eight hours for recreation, whether intellectual, physical or otherwise. That is the great aim of the working classes, but the House of Commons by this amendment declares that a man who has worked eight hours steadily, whether in the mine, in the workshop, on the railway or for a transportation company, if he has worked only eight hours he has not the right to benefit by this law. Do I understand that the members of the Lord's Day Alliance sanctioned this amendment? Do I understand that these men who desire the observance of the Sabbath, stand by this amendment and say to the workingmen of this country, 'Because you have only worked eight hours a day you are not entitled to the benefit of the provisions of this Bill?' In black and white that is what it means. How many industries are there in this country where a man cannot work much more than eight hours a day, putting aside the claims of the labour unions and of the workingmen who demand a few hours during the week to be with their families instead of being forced to rise at four or five in the morning in order to get to their factories at seven, remaining there until six and getting home at seven or eight in the evening? That is the daily toil of the workingman in every community. He has to go to the factory, to the mill, to the locomotive; he is obliged to rise at five in the morning in time to get his meals and travel two or three miles before reaching the factory. He gets there at 7 or 7.30 and works until twelve, has an hour for lunch, and works from one to six. It is seven or half past seven before he gets home. He has scarcely time to take the grime off his face and hands when supper is waiting for him. In what condition is he to associate with or educate his children, to teach the ten commandments, to supplement the teaching of the schools, which are Godless where God is not mentioned ? How can the father get down there before his seven or eight children at night, after coming from the factory and teach them the precepts which would make them lovers of their country, of their God and of their fellow men ? The poor man cannot do it. He has to go to his rest after supper, and has to rise again at five in the morning, and that is the protection this honourable Senate, we, the big lords of the nation, offer. We look down upon our poor fellow countrymen ? We deny them the little ease that we ourselves take wholesale. It is fine to put things like this in the law, but let me tell you the people you represent from this high sphere are the people going to be benefited, or the poor will be led into greater distress. I say that clause has no right to be in the Bill. There are many industries in which a man cannot work more than eight hours a day. In the mine, in sulphite mills, in many occupations of human labour a man who works eight hours a day is doing a great service not only to himself and his family, but to the country, but in doing it he is ruining his health in many cases. He is doing a great service to the country when he works hard eight hours, and yet because he works eight hours he is not to come under the beneficent provisions, and there are a few, in this Bill? How many hours do you work hon. gentleman?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Ten or twelve.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The hon. gentleman is about the only one of the whole outfit who works ten hours. I ask why do you not give your neighbour what you take for yourself? I give notice that when the time comes I shall move to have that clause struck out. The labourer puts in his full day, whether he works eight hours or six hours, and there are some cases where a man cannot work more than six hours, for instance a diver, and men engaged in occupations dangerous to life and limb. Are you going to exact from them ten hours a day so that they can benefit by this law? The clause as I have said is a class one for which the Senate of Canada should not stand. When the time comes I will move, and I think I shall have the support of hon. senators in this matter, that a labourer who has worked eight hours a day, whether by consent of his employer, or through the manipulation of labour organizations, shall have any benefit there is to be derived from this legislation. Why should we not admit on the floor of this honourable House in our legislation the right of labourers to combine, to organize, and to have unions to exact prices the same as professional men? The day before yesterday the medical fraternity found a man guilty of dishonourable and infamous conduct. Why? Because he offered to treat poor humanity at a less price than his confreres charge. We have the medical faternity of Ontario assembled in solemn conclave to denounce the conduct of one of their number because he offered to cure the ills of humanity for a less sum that his more ambitious colleagues. And the legal fraternity have the same privileges, but the labourer when he organizes becomes the enemy of society.

Hon. Mr. McKAY (Truro)—That is not it.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—What is it?

Hon. Mr. McKAY—The Medical Association denounced the doctor in question because he promised a permanent cure for a certain sum.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—They all do that. That is no answer.

Hon. Mr. McKAY (Truro)—That is the explanation.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It is an explanation which does not justify them in denouncing a colleague's conduct as dishonourable and infamous because he offered to cure a patient for a fixed sum. That is a poor excuse. I do not deny their right to have unions; I am denying their right to coalesce and put up the costs of certain operations which are necessary in the life of men and women, to $25 when it is only worth $5. They combined to do that, and we know there are lots of poor people in this country that when the stork comes once a year cannot afford $25 and the medical fraternity combined to put up the prices on them.

Hon. Mr. McKAY (Truro)—I suppose the hon. gentleman is looking forward to that himself?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Whether I am or not, I am now looking to the interests of the people. If the legislatures give the people the right to organize in their common interest—which they do—and I do not ask the right for labourers to organize against the common interest—I say when they organize under protection of the law, their decisions ought to be respected. We have many unions to-day which declare that a working man who has put in eight hours a day is satisfying the law of supply and demand, the law of the family and the laws of the country. Let me say as a young senator that our usefulness will not be gauged by our attendance here but by the wisdom we put into the laws, by the attention we give to the rights of the masses of the people, by the respect we show to these labour unions. Show them the same respect that you show to corporations, against which I have nothing to say because they are needed in our modern civilization; corporations great and small are needed for the development of our resources. I am not against them, but when you give them all that they require and more than they ask sometimes, do not trample on the rights of the masses of the people. The day may come when they will demand your heads if you are not careful of their rights, as men who are working for the building up of this country. I shall therefore, when this clause comes before the committee, if the Lord's Day Alliance does not suggest an amendment, propose that it shall be changed. Now let us consider clause 5. It is a very innocent clause, one I am perfectly in harmony with, because I am in harmony with mostly all the clauses, but there is always a little of the lawyer's hand in each clause to do something wrong in the courts, to do something against the interests of the masses. Take clause five. It is very innocent. There are two paragraphs in it. I do not require to read the first, but the second reads as follows:—

When any performance at which an admission fee or any other fee.

Whatever that means, it is not very good English—

2. When any performance at which an admission fee or any other fee is charged is provided in any building or place to which persons are conveyed for hire by the proprietors or managers of such performance or by any one acting as their agent or under their control, the charge for such conveyance shall be deemed an indirect payment of such fee within the meaning of this section.

That is outside the law, whether the party pays his fee directly, or whether he pays it to the busman, or the trolley car man, or the railway magnate or automobilist or any one else. When he attends a performance and pays a fee he is outside the law. I had the honour and I had the duty of placing this matter before the Minister of Justice. I do not hesitate to say so. I asked him 'What do you mean by this'. Well, he said, 'It means what the law states.' I said 'Do you know what it means?' It means that you destroy in a very large number of the communities of Canada, from Victoria to Halifax, all religion—not all religion because they cannot drive it out of the hearts of the people, but it would deprive a large number of the people of Canada of the privilege of attending divine service. He could not believe it, he thought it was impossible. A performance can be of several characters. A performance can be of an intellectual character, a performance may be of a spiritual nature; a ceremony going on in a church is a performance.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—There is no admission fee.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—In the face of that statement I have no need to apologize for the Minister of Justice, when one of the oldest members of this House makes such a statement. There is an admission fee in the vast majority of cases.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—There is not.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Then you have to contradict a man that has to pay every Sunday.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Voluntarily?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—No I can't get into the church unless I pay.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—In your church perhaps? Not in mine.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I did not say your church; I said that this law would drive thousands out of the church, that is, prevent them from going there. I understand now why the Minister of Justice was ignorant of the situation, since I find the hon. gentleman from British Columbia is ignorant of it also. I do not blame him, because he does not come to my church. Within the last ten or fifteen years a change has come over our people in regard to the maintenance of our churches. In older times they had the church law which forced church members to pay tithes. We have got out of that habit.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—In what church was that?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That was in the Catholic church, which contains two-fifths of the population of Canada among its members.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think the hon. gentleman is mistaken; that church law still exists.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—In a large number of communities where that church prevails, the people did not contribute. The cities and towns were growing larger, and the result was very often that the poor parish priests had very little to live on. It became very difficult for the church authorities to control the contributions of the frequenters of the church. In some parishes, of course, the parish priest knew exactly how many persons there were there, and it was easy to say what contributions should be made in order to keep the curate, light and heat the church, and so on. It is only an act of justice after all that such contributions should be made. If I go to church and find it heated and lighted I ought to contribute something.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—If it is voluntary?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Under our law it is obligatory, on pain of going to hell. You wouldn't believe that. Under a pain of mortal sin you had to pay.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that he was refused admission if he did not pay?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Under the old law we had to pay our tithes; not to pay was tantamount to an act of injustice and that is equivalent to a mortal sin. A man who commits a mortal sin in the Catholic church cannot go to heaven unless he repents.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Unless he pays?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—He has to pay, and he has to be sorry as well. The hon. gentleman is not acquainted with Catholic theology; it is more strict than he imagines. Owing to the movement of the people from the country to the city, a change has taken place in the practice. Take for instance, St. Louis de France, Notre Dame, in Montreal or St. Patrick's church, you have say 2,000 families. About 500 would pay and there are 1,500 who would go free. The result was that in order to maintain the churches they had to charge an entrance fee of five or ten cents.

An hon. GENTLEMAN—Was it a performance after you got in?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—A performance may be spiritual, athletic or intellectual, and that is why you give the judges the power to say whether a performance in the church will come under this law or not—so much so, that the Minister of Justice wishes, I believe, to qualify the clause by using some such words as these 'performances except for divine worship.' The law is incomplete on that point. The next provision in the Bill which I wish to speak of is subclause (f) the definition of the employer. I put this clause before one of the largest manufacturers in the country, one of the largest paper and pulp makers in Canada, and I asked him what he thought of it. He said it is absurd. 'Employer includes every person to whose orders or directions any other person is by his employment bound to conform.'

I hear from behind me plain enough, 'who is the employer?' The president of the company, the superintendent of the company, the foreman of the company—who is the employer? According to this the employer is the last man who gives the other man his orders. Employer includes every person whose orders, directions any other person may be obliged to conform. Now there is not a mill in the country to-day and there is not a work on railway construction to-day which does not provide half a dozen employers. In the first place you have the superintendent who bosses the foreman, who bosses the section men, who afterwards bosses a certain man, but according to this law the employer is the one who gives the direction. When a man is employed on the work, does he go to the president of the company or superintendent or general manager. No, he goes to his foreman. According to this law, you make the foreman or an ordinary labourer the employer. This provision needs further explanation and further improvement. There are many other points which I could mention in which the measure is defective, but I will not do so at the present stage. I have every confidence in the Senate framing a Bill which will meet the needs of the people of this country. I have not the slightest suspicion that any hon. senator would deliberately vote for a measure that would conflict with the convictions of any man, Christian, Jew or Pagan. I believe every senator on the floor of this House is willing that the Creator should have some respect paid to him. I am firmly of that belief. Your presence here, your past records are an indication and proof of what I say, but what we have to do here in this discussion on the framing of this law is to pass a Bill that will meet with as little obstruction as possible, with as little collision as possible, with the principles of the different sections and different classes of our community. Give them a free hand to adore their Creator and to pay their respect to him as they thnk best. I believe it is the duty of parliament to prevent abuses, and it is their prime duty to prevent abuses whether in labour or anything else, and that is the point that the Senate ought to occupy itself with. I believe it is the duty of the Senate to protect all men in the practice of virtue. I believe it is the duty of parliament and of this House to see that the morals of the people are sufficiently protected and advanced, but you cannot make me believe that parliament will make men more virtuous and more moral than God Almighty makes them. Lead them on by mild ways, by good thoughts, by example and so on. But I have this to say, feeling all that I owe to Him who made me —and I bow in reverence to him—each Sunday or each day that I miss my mass by my own fault I feel it in my heart and I am sorry for it, and when I have that feeling I want no other man to interfere with my conscience or to come between myself and my Maker.

Hon. Mr. FROST—I only desire to say a few words on this very important measure. It is a question that has been pretty thoroughly threshed out in the House of Commons, and having read over the Bill since it has come into our hands, it strikes me it is an eminently fair one. Concessions have been made on every side, and the measure does not seem to infringe to any great extent on the ordinary work any more than it prohibits the work that is done on Sunday for gain. Other than that, it does not interfere with the ordinary innocent pleasures of people upon the Lord's day. I have heard some people say that it prohibited the playing of a game of golf, or it prohibited the game of baseball, but when I point out in the Act that these games can be indulged in if simply for the pleasure of them, and without any intent for gain or the making of money, they appear to be surprised. The truth of the matter is that many people are discussing this Bill adversly because they have not read it. There is not any interference as far as I can see, with our railway companies as to any work that is an absolute necessity upon the Lord's day. There is no interference with any work that requires to be done in an emergency upon the Lord's day, but it does interfere with the carrying on of work whereby labouring men will be compelled under a penalty of dismissal, to work for seven days in the week. It does provide that the Mosaic Christian law shall be carried out; that upon six days of the week thou shalt do thy work but the seventh day shall be considered a day of rest. It matters not to me how any one takes the seventh day as a day of rest; he may go to church if he choose, or he may wander in the woods. The law does not prohibit any one from using that day as they desire to do provided they do not use it for the purposes of gain or in any way by which they might become a nuisance to their neighbour or to the community. The law is a simple one. Many concessions have been made throughout the whole Bill; there is a spirit of charity pervading it from beginning to end. It is not necessary for us to scrutinize every clause. It is not necessary for us to say that because we pay a small fee in the church that we are thereby being prohibited from attending church. That is an undue straining of the Act that is not warranted by the language itself, and therefore we simply have to take the Bill, precisely as it reads, and if we go into it carefully, to look all through it, we will find that there is in it that which will preserve the Lord's day as a day of rest as a day of withdrawing from business life, that must be very commendable indeed. It is only a few days ago that I met a gentleman from Minneapolis. He told me that the Lord's day in that city had practically become one of the busiest days of the week, a day when thousands of people were compelled to work against their will, and that if any refused to work on that day, they were liable to dismissal from the service. We would not like to see that in our country. Our country is young. We have not reached the proportions where an Act of this character might be almost impossible to enact. We have not come to a day when if we undertook to enact such a measure as this we would find our population, many of them perhaps foreigners in our country who would not permit such an Act. If we are ever to have an Act for the preservation of the Lord's day, we are to enact this Bill now. Now is the time. This is the best time in the history of our country for the passing of such an Act for the preservation of the Lord's day. As far as I can see it, the Bill is practically in the interests more particularly of the workingman of Canada. That is what the Bill practically is being passed for, and in that feature of it, it is a measure for every one who desires to have a quiet day on Sunday and who desires to protect our workingmen from any inordinate labour for the purpose of gain. I do not say that our railway companies are to be characterized in that way, but I do say that the pressure of business and competition in this feverish age is getting so that it is a very easy matter for those who employ large bodies of men to trample the workingman under their feet, and there should be something on our statute-books by which the men who are helpless in themselves as a body should be protected from any undue tyranny or any indication of anything that might perhaps draw them down and compel them to almost a position of slavery. I do not pretend that such is the case, but we know that in the United States there are men engaged in mines and in some railroads, and in other vast enterprises, where they are practically placed in the position of white slaves. We do not want that position in this country. We want to have such legislation on our statute-books as will protect every man. Our legislation intends that each man shall have his rights, but at the same time we have a right to take into consideration the just claims of the poor man who is helpless in himself, and it is on his account more than almost anything else that this law is being placed on the statute-book.

In concluding these remarks I have just a quotation which I wish to give that is just along the lines of my own mind, but given in better language than I can express it. It is a letter written by His Grace Archbishop Bruchesi to the Hon. Mr. Fitzpatrick when he was Minister of Justice in regard to this Sunday Observance Bill. The whole tenor of this letter is most admirable and fitting, and is given in moderation and in a spirit of concession and charity, and I believe it is admirably adapted for the consideration of this Senate in the discussion of this Bill. He writes on the 29th March as follows:

The following letter has been sent by His Grace Archbishop Bruchesi to the Hon. Charles Fitzpatrick, Minister of Justice, who asked his opinion on the Sunday Observance Bill :

With regard to the desire you have expressed, I beg to give my opinion regarding your measure on Sunday observance. I hasten to say, in the first place, that I approve of the principle of the Bill, as well as of the greater number of its clauses. Contrary to what has been written in several newspapers, I am of the opinion that the government has the power and is in duty bound to offer legislation on this matter. In doing this, it in no way interferes in matters of conscience and religion ; it does not restrain the liberty of worship as it is recognized in Canada ; it only gives its aid to the maintenance of a practice common to all Christian people. Our country is really a Christian one, and our governing bodies should keep this in view in framing legislation. If it were necessary to accept certain statements which have been put forth in the name of liberty of conscience, it would follow that the civil power would have to abstain from enacting all laws for the observance of Sunday, and would not have the right to prohibit on that day the carrying on of business or general work. There may be some people in our country who have reached this conclusion, but it is not true that the almost totality of our fellow-citizens admit that legislation on this point is a necessity ?

I admit that the measure presented to parliament is, perhaps severe on several points, but we must also add that there are very grave abuses to suppress, and that it is high time to act on the question. Without precise and firm legislation, our Canada will before long resemble certain European countries, where we find not a vestige of respect due to the Lord's day. Your measure might, perhaps, be mitigated in several of its clauses, but on the whole it seems to me that you have struck the right note. For my part, I have been obliged to prohibit, in my diocese, several of the things prohibited in the Bill, which fact you no doubt have noticed in my last circular, a copy of which has been sent to your address.

I consider it quite in order that all traffic, all sales, unless they refer to necessities of life, should be prohibited on Sunday, and the same should apply to the running of freight trains, when they are not a real necessity. As to trains and steamers for the transportation of passengers, they should be, of course, less numerous on Sunday than during the week, but I would not demand their suppression altogether. It behooves us to accord to our people, and particularly to the labouring classes, facilities for leaving the city and to making trips on Sunday which they could not, perhaps, make on any other day. I am, however, absolutely opposed to the organization of public excursions, whether it be with the object of making money or amusement, experience having proved that these excursions promote disorder and deplorable abuses. I approve entirely of the clauses of the Bill which prohibit theatrical representations, concerts and tournaments given as public or paying entertainments.

Of course, the details of the measure may be the subject of discussion; it may be opportune also to make certain points clear in order that they may be well understood. For instance, let it not be forbidden to go to the country to take fresh air, or to take a quiet hunting or fishing excursion. Once more, however, let me say that I look upon a law for Sunday observance as decidedly opportune, and I hope that such a law may receive the sanction of parliament. When, however, you come to Montreal, I will be happy to talk the matter over with you.

In the meantime accept, dear minister, the assurance of my sincere and devoted sentiments.

PAUL,
Archbishop of Montreal.

March 29.

Practically speaking these are my sentiments. I believe every word the archbishop has written. It is a moderate statement of what we should have in this Dominion. We should have a law that would be applicable to all parts of Canada and a check upon undue violations of the sanctity of the Lord's day. We should have such laws enacted, not the old Puritanical laws we have read of in the past, because they are all out of date, but laws which will give liberty and not let liberty degenerate into license. If we have such measures we will grow as a nation. We will not become as European countries; we will grow and we will have a race of people on this northern half of the continent that will be the pride and glory of the race. That, I believe, is what this archbishop is pointing at. Today, as I was coming on the train I purchased a copy of the 'Globe' and cut out of it the closing sentence of an article on this Sunday observance law which I think expresses the sentiment, following up this quotation, which I have given here from the Archbishop of Montreal. It says:

If life in Canada is to be kept worth the living there must be maintained the regular pause in the midst of life's increasing clamour and wasting strain. If the history of these centuries proves anything it is that the state, as surely as the church, suffers irreparable loss when the Sabbath is openly desecrated or profanely done away. Because man is other than a machine and more than a beast he needs one day in seven when he may rest from his toil and cease from his pleasures and join with his fellows in the worship of his God.

These practically are my sentiments. I simply give them as a member of this honourable House. I would like to see the Bill as it is now before the House ratified. There may be one or two amendments, but as the Bill has been so thoroughly threshed out in the House of Commons, and as it has been changed in almost every particular, there is very little more that I can see which can be amended. However, if there are any amendments suggested which will make the Bill more acceptable to all classes without doing violence to the principle of the measure, these amendments will have hearty support. In the meantime, I am prepared, as a member of this House, to support the Bill, and I hope to see it receive its second and third readings and become the law of the land in due course.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I have but one or two words to say on the subject which is now occupying the attention of this House. The hon. Secretary of State, who introduced the measure, gave us all the necessary arguments to vote against it, and I think he would be a very disappointed man if the Bill should carry; but I hope it will carry. I hope it will carry, if we take in view the political aspect of the question and the advantages that will accrue to our party; but on the other hand if we consider the merits of the measure I feel that it is my duty to vote against it, and I shall vote against it. The hon. Secretary of State said that a measure on the Lord's Day Observance passed by the province of Ontario had been contested before the Privy Council in England and was declared unconstitutional because the provincial legislature had taken upon themselves to classify as crimes certain infractions of the Ontario law and the fact that they constituted those infractions crimes induced the Privy Council to declare the law unconstitutional, because the criminal law was within the control of the federal power. Well, that was not a reason there was no object and no necessity for bringing in a federal law. The hon. Secretary of State read us out of a book which he brought to this House all the laws actually in force on the Lord's Day Observance in the different provinces of this Dominion. He showed us that even the law of Charles II. was incorporated in the provincial legislation of Ontario and was the law of the land in that province. The provinces have a right to enact that legislation. They have a right to make laws for the observance of the Lord's day. It is not the duty of the federal parliament to interfere. The only ground upon which the federal authorities could enact such legislation would be to declare crimes certain infractions of their law. They enact a law and declare that if we transgress that law it is a crime. That effects the criminal law of the Dominion and that is the only feature of the legislation which places it under the federal control; but outside that particular point as a matter of right, as a matter of fact, that subject should remain under the control of the provincial legislature. We are intruding to-day on the powers of the local legislatures and, for that reason, and that is a very good and sound reason, I shall vote against the second reading of the Bill. It is not my intention to provoke a vote on the measure. I think it would be useless to do so, but I think it my duty to tell this House and to tell the country that I am going to vote against an intrusion of the federal parliament into local affairs.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I do not wish to discuss the Bill because I think everybody in this House and in the country knows now what are the contents of the measure, but before it receives its second reading I should like to ask the hon. leader of the government if it will be allowed to discuss the principle of the Bill when the House is in Committee of the Whole and on the third reading if the Bill passes the committee? I put this question, for the reason that this Bill is undoubtedly of a two-fold nature. It contains provisions which this parliament certainly has the right to legislate upon, such as railway transporation, general trade, and other questions which undoubtedly belong to the federal House, and which it will be intra vires to pass. On the other hand, there are clauses which certainly belong to the jurisdiction of the provinces and if we pass them here we shall be encroaching upon the provincial legislature. As regards these special matters, I do not intend to support the Bill, but as I have said, there are clauses which it pertains to this House to discuss, and I wish to reserve the few remarks I have to make until we go into committee. I would therefore ask the hon. Secretary of State if it is quite understood that in committee we will be allowed to discuss the principle of the Bill while we are taking the measure clause by clause, because the principle of the Bill will have to be discussed in connection with several of the clauses on their merits.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think before the hon. minister gives his answer to that question, it should be remembered that the rules of this House and the rules of parliament provide that the discussion of the merits of a Bill is on its second reading. No hon. member can interfere with these rules.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—While that is conceded as a principle, hon. gentlemen must of course remember that on very many occasions members have risen in their places and said, the terms of this Bill may be altered so substantially in its later stages as to enable me to support it. I therefore desire to say that I shall be left free if I decide not to move against the second reading of the Bill, to vote against it at any subsequent stage. It is very often the stage at which the six months' hoist is moved—in fact more often than on the second reading. So long as the House quite understands that every member is at liberty and absolutely free to vote against the measure at a subsequent stage, I think I am not breaking any parliamentary rule in expressing the opinion that in my judgment they should be free.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Who gives that freedom ?

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—The authority of the House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No, the authority of the House is against that, and anybody could stand up and call to order any member who discusses the principle of the Bill in committee.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—There is no rule to that effect.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. member does not know all the rules.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—That very thing was done in the other House. There have been cases where on the third reading members have discussed the whole principle of a Bill and rejected the Bill itself.

The SPEAKER—Rule 42 says that the principle of a Bill is 'usually debated an the second reading.'

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a second time on a division.

The Senate adjourned until to-morrow at eleven a.m.

THE SENATE

OTTAWA, Tuesday, July 10, 1906.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven a.m.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

DRILL PAY OF COMMANDING OFFICERS AT LEVIS CAMP.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired of the government:

Why at the last camp at Lévis was there not paid to the commanding officers of the various corps (regiments and companies) the command and drill pay to which these commanding officers have a right according to the regulations in force?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is the first time I have seen this notice.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Then postpone it until to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, and I will make some inquiry.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—We may prorogue to-morrow.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Well, I shall try and get the information for the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY.

LORD'S DAY BILL.

IN COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the House into Committee of the Whole on Bill (12) An Act respecting the Lord's Day.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Before this motion is carried, I should like to call attention to what took place in committee last evening. The hon. gentleman from Grandville (Hon. Mr. Choquette) asked the Secretary of State if permission to discuss in committee the principle of the measure would be allowed while we were considering it clause by clause, because the principle will have to be discussed in connection with several of the clauses on their merits. I rose at that juncture and remarked that in committee the discussion on the principle of the Bill was not allowed, and the hon. gentleman from Grandville said that with the authority of the House we could do that. I know the hon. gentleman is familiar with the rules of the House; at all events, I call the attention of the House to rule 76.

Rule 76 says: 'No arguments are admitted against the principle of a Bill in Committee of the Whole.' That rule would prevent any member from rising in Committee of the Whole to offer any arguments against the principle of a Bill. I think I was quite right yesterday when I made my objection, and those who pretended that I was wrong were themselves in the wrong. I know the thing can be done, but only with the permission of the House. If any one moves the suspension of rule 76, I do not say that I shall object to it; but in order to have our proceedings correct, I think some hon. gentleman should rise and make that motion, in order that we may, in Committee of the Whole, be permitted to discuss the principle of the Bill. If that is done there will be no objection at all, but if it is not done we will be going against one of the rules of the House, and any member could ask that the rules be put in force. If no one else moves the suspension of the rule I shall do so.

The SPEAKER—I cited rule 42, which relates to debates on the second reading. We were then on the motion for the second reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—My objection is, that in Committee of the Whole we could not discuss the principle of the Bill except with the authority of the House.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Is it understood that the House grants the latitude asked for ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There was an understanding to that effect yesterday.

The SPEAKER—The motion is carried.

(In the Committee.)

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Bill is entirely different from ordinary legislation. There are a dozen different principles in it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think the hon. gentleman ought to move that rule 76 be suspended.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have no objection to doing so.

The CHAIRMAN (Hon. Mr. Young)—If it is an understanding with the committee that a general discussion may take place, then I will be bound to accept that understanding. I want to allow every latitude in the discussion that is possible within the rules of the House and the will of the committee.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I suggest that the discussion as to principles should take place on the first amendment. If we are going to have a discussion of that kind on every amendment there will be no end to it.

On clause 1, subclause (a).

The Lord's day means the period of time which begins at twelve o'clock on Saturday afternoon and ends at twelve o'clock on the following afternoon.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I move that the word 'Sunday' be substituted for the words 'The Lord's Day' wherever they occur in the Bill. The expression 'Lord's Day' is one which is never used in ordinary conversation, or in business. It is never used even by clerical gentlemen except when speaking in their official capacities from the pulpit, or on some similar occasion, and every one knows just what Sunday means. We ought to follow the language of the law, which is supposed to be the language of everyday life. Then there is another point. The day which has been selected as the day of rest and to be observed as such is Sunday. The great majority of the population are Christians, and Christians who believe in Sunday as being the day to be observed; but there are certain classes of the population who look upon Saturday as the Lord's day. Every one knows what Sunday is, and recognizes that Sunday is the first day of the week. I have spoken to a number of members of this honourable House, and also to some gentlemen outside, and all appeared to be in favour of making the change, that the name which is generally applied to the day should be applied to it in the Bill.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD—What would you do with the title of the Bill ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—Everywhere the word Sunday is substituted for 'The Lord's Day.'

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Then the clause will read as follows :

Sunday means the period of time which begins at twelve o'clock on Saturday afternoon and ends at twelve o'clock on the following afternoon.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is not the point now. If my amendment is adopted, then Sunday will come in there.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The hon. gentleman might as well have made the two amendments in one. He says, 'The Lord's Day' is not a common expression. It is. In French it is, 'La Jour du Seigneur.' Of course I accept the amendment, with the understanding that Sunday will not commence on Saturday afternoon.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—It would be a great risk on our part to introduce this amendment. In the other House this expression, 'The Lord's Day' has been associated with the Bill in all its different phases. Every petition that has been sent here has been for legislation for the better observance of the Lord's day. I see no necessity to change the word. We had better let it stand as it is.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I quite agree with the amendment. In the French version, the word used in the title is Sunday. The Lord's day, in French, does not mean Sunday at all. The word Dimanche is understood everywhere. The translation is bad from beginning to end—even the title is bad. I quite agree with the amendment, and think it ought to be accepted.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Halifax)—If you turn to the first chapter of Revelations you find the expression used by St. John is, 'The Lord's Day.' Moses, before they got to Sinai, said 'To-morrow is the Sabbath of the Lord.' I do not think it would be well to make the proposed change. The Lord's day is good enough for us, and no change would be an improvement.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—Every day is the Lord's day; the old-fashioned Sunday is good enough. That is what it has been called by our forefathers.

The committee divided on the amendment, which was agreed to; contents, 31, non-contents, 13.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—Before anything further is done in this matter, speaking about this Bill yesterday, I said that I should introduce an amendment. My reason for so doing was that I did not agree with certain clauses of the Bill which are going to affect the province of British Columbia very materially, and which will, if adopted, put the people in certain businesses in that part of the country in the position of having to work more on the Sunday than they are in the habit of doing at the present time.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I would ask the hon. gentleman if he intends to propose an amendment to the first clause?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—My amendment would strike out all the clauses of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is this an amendment to the first clause, because there are other amendments to be proposed, and we must proceed in order?

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—As I have already stated, I think that this Bill will work a great hardship in certain parts of the country, and it is a matter that would be much better dealt with as a provincial measure, and that we can meet the different requirements of this enormous country a great deal better by having this amendment which I intend to propose placed in the Bill; but I have ascertained that there is not much probability of being able to carry it. It is probably very much against the desires of the House, and as the session is drawing so near a close, and we do not want to waste time over a discussion of amendments which are not going to be carried, I have thought better not to put this amendment before the House, and I will not, therefore, lay it on the Table.

On subclause (a) of clause 1—definition of Lord's day.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I move that the entire clause be struck out, and that it read as follows:

Sunday means the period of time which begins at twelve o'clock midnight Saturday and ends at twelve o'clock on Sunday night following.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—I would ask the hon. gentleman, does not 10 o'clock in the afternoon mean 10 o'clock at night, does not 11 o'clock in the afternoon mean 11 o'clock at night? Then 12 o'clock in the afternoon must mean 12 o'clock at night?

Hon. Mr. POWER—At first sight, there might appear to be some force in the contention of the hon. gentleman for Victoria division (Hon. Mr. Cloran), but we should not make any amendments which are not really amendments. The whole day from 12 o'clock on Saturday night until 12 o'clock on Sunday night is divided into forenoon and afternoon. Up to noon on Sunday it is forenoon; from noon on Sunday until midnight is the afternoon, and, consequently, this definition is quite correct as it stands. Sunday means the period of time which begins at 12 o'clock on Saturday afternoon and ends at 12 o'clock on the following afternoon. The hon. gentleman, in his amendment, proposes to use the word Sunday, but when you come to define the expression you cannot use that same expression in the definition. The definition, as it now appears in the Bill, is perfectly correct.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It is altogether against the interpretation of men of science and of the English language, and against the rules of interpretation. I am surprised at the hon. gentleman from Halifax asking us to put on the statute-book a phrase which is not in accordance with the language of the times. He knows, as well as I do, that 12 o'clock on Saturday afternoon means 12 noon to midnight. Does he mean from 12 a.m.? If so, why does he not say so? Let the law be clear. The Minister of Justice admitted to me that this definition is not clear, it is indistinct, and when the question was put to him, if he were on the bench and had to interpret what the word afternoon meant, he would have to go according to the legal definition of the word, the literary definition of the word. Saturday afternoon starts at noon and winds up at 12 o'clock at night. If you leave this on the statute as it is in this Bill you make a new Sabbath from 12 o'clock Saturday afternoon. I quoted here last evening the highest authorities I could find in the library showing that afternoon means from noon of the day until midnight. As far as I am concerned, I shall not be a party to putting on the statute-book a thing which is not correct and against all traditions.

The Senate divided on the amendment, which was rejected. Contents, 11; non-contents not counted.

On subclause (e) of clause 2,

'Performance' includes any game, match, sport, contest, exhibition or entertainment.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—I should like to have a better definition of the word 'performance' than appears in this subclause. I have the opinion of a firm of very good lawyers in Montreal, and they say that this definition is too broad for the province of Quebec. I should like to know from the hon. Secretary of State if the parks are allowed to be open on Sunday?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If there is no fee charged for entrance, or no performance for a fee, they are.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—I should like to have the subclause read, 'theatrical performance.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—The hon. gentleman from Victoria last night contended that the word performance could be applied to performances in churches—sacred performances.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman defined it, and his views are met largely by exceptions that come later in the Bill. I think the word is not too general in the interpretation clause.

The subclause was adopted.

On subclause (g),

(g) 'Provincial Act' means any public Act of any province whether passed before or since confederation.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I do not know that a provincial Act would cover the Acts passed by the council of the Yukon. I suppose if this is to be a general Act for the whole Dominion it would apply to the Yukon as well as to the provinces. The Yukon is not a province, and there are territories outside of Alberta and Saskatchewan in which laws will be enacted in a short time probably.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—It will certainly be under the Dominion government until such time as the province is created.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—But in the meantime they have their own local laws.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—They will have their own local laws. The provinces we have recently formed had as much self government, practically, as we had in any province of the Dominion, and if this law is going to be, practically, placed to a certain extent under provincial legislation, I do not see why the territorial Act should not be included as well. I move that the word territory be added.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Is there not some provision already which includes territorial Acts, if you can call them such, under the term 'provincial Acts'? I think there is.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would point out to my hon. friend from Prince Albert that the word province included the Northwest Territory. I think the Yukon Territories are within the Northwest Territories now, if I am not mistaken.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—If the legal gentlemen of the House are satisfied that the word province will cover the Yukon and the other territories, I am satisfied.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—This is a definition, and you give the words 'provincial Act' the meaning you want, and you apply it to provinces.

Hon. Mr. JONES—I do not think it would cover Keewatin.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Yes, the word 'province' covers the district of Keewatin.

On clause 2,

2. It shall not be lawful for any person on Sunday, except as provided herein or in any provincial Act now or hereafter in force regarding matters coming within the classes of subjects enumerated in section 92 of the British North America Act, 1867, to sell or offer for sale or purchase any goods, chattels or other personal property, or any real estate, or to carry on or transact any business of his ordinary calling, or in connection with such calling, or for gain to do, or employ any other person to do, on that day any work, business or labour.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I notice in this clause that you make the penalty for any person who will sell, offer for sale, or purchase, but there is no penalty for the man who wants to buy and attempts to buy. If the one is culpable, why not the other ?

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—What will be the use of him going to buy, if there is nobody to sell to him, according to law.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Suppose he goes into a shop and dickers for an object—tries to purchase, but does not purchase because he will not pay the price of the articles——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Either the purchaser or the seller is liable.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It is covered by the words in line 25—'To sell or offer for sale or purchase.'

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The one who attempts to buy commits no offence, but the one who offers for sale does.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—The first part of this clause reads :—

It shall not be lawful for any person on Sunday, except as provided herein or in any provincial Act now or hereafter in force regarding matters coming within the classes of subjects enumerated in section 92 of the British North America Act, 1867, &c.

It is all right for the provinces that have the English law, but it is very unfair to the province of Quebec, which has not the English law. I would suggest that, in order to protect the province of Quebec, it would be only fair if this clause were altered to put the common law of the province of Quebec on an equal footing with the laws of the other provinces.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The province of Quebec is under the constitutional Act passed in 1867, and known as the British North America Act. I think the clause as now worded gives ample protection to the province of Quebec. It in no way interferes with the civil law in force there, nor does it interfere with the right of the province to legislate hereafter. Not only all the laws that exist now in the province of Quebec are continued, but the laws that may hereafter be enacted by their own legislature.

The CHAIRMAN—The point which the hon. gentleman raises is covered by clause 14, which reads as follows :—

14. Nothing herein shall be construed to repeal or in any way affect any provision of any Act relating in any way to the observance of the Lord's day in force in any province of Canada when this Act is passed ; and where any person violates any of the provisions of this Act, and such offence is also a violation of any other Act, the offender may be proceeded against either under the provisions of this Act or under the provisions of any other Act applicable to the offence charged.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—That is all very well for the laws that have been passed, but it does not recognize our common law.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, yes it does.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—I am not a lawyer, but my attention has been drawn to it by a very good firm of lawyers in Montreal.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Is not this a matter which might properly be left to the provinces to deal with? It seems to me it is a provincial matter and should not be in this Bill at all.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—But they will not do it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I would call the attention of the hon. gentleman from Halifax to the fact that while line 25 provides a punishment for the man who purchases, there is no punishment for the man who attempts to purchase,—that is the point I make.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—He does not commit any offence ; he does not perform the act ; he does not buy.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—He does not conclude the act ; he performs all he can.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—I would ask that this clause be delayed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It has been so thoroughly threshed out in another place that I do not see any object in allowing it to stand. It has been changed a dozen times and has secured the final approval of the House of Commons in its present form, and I am quite sure it is already in accordance with the views of the Senate.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—What did I understand my hon. friend to say a few moments ago as to the common law which was in force in the different provinces before confederation?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I said the common law is not in force in Quebec. It does not disturb the civil law of the province. They have adopted in Quebec large portions of the English law. The criminal law of England, as we have it in Canada now, is in force in the province of Quebec, otherwise it is governed by what is known as the Code Napoleon, ordinarily called the civil law. The Bill neither detracts from nor adds to the provincial law in any respect. It allows the provincial law, in so far as the matters herein concerned are affected, to have absolute supremacy.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend's statement is radically opposed to the opinion of a leading firm of counsel in Montreal as to the common law being in force in Quebec. The opinion is stated by them, with confidence, apparently, that it would oust the common law of Quebec so far as its application to the observance of the Sabbath is concerned.; that the Act should be made to extend not only to provincial Acts, but to provincial laws, thus covering the common law which may be in force in the province.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—What is the objection to accepting an amendment covering the common law of Quebec?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There can be no amendment to this clause; that I emphatically state, because it has been agreed upon and it would only be a waste of time to amend it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Will the hon. gentleman tell us what are the clauses which we cannot amend? We are here to discuss the Bill and when the government declares certain clauses shall not be touched, it is a contempt of this House.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Perhaps my expression was rather too strong. At this period of the session, when hon. gentlemen are anxious to get away, if I saw there was any probability of a clause being amended by free and full discussion I should be glad to co-operate in it, but in stating what I did I had in view the opinions of another place. They have to approve of any changes we may make, and, knowing the views of the House of Commons, I do not hesitate to say that any change we might make would be perfectly idle. There are certain other clauses which I think we could insist on having changed. If this House were by vote to change some of the other clauses I think the other House would acquiesce. But in regard to this clause, which has been so thoroughly discussed, we could not enforce our views on that House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is perfectly plain now that a caucus took place last night.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This has nothing to do with the caucus.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We know now by the declaration of the leader of the House that certain clauses have been agreed on that are to be amended, and certain others must remain as they are. It is not the Senate now who is going to decide, it is the caucus which has been held outside the Senate.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am willing that the clause shall stand.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Let it pass and I will move an amendment on clause 14 which will cover the case.

The CHAIRMAN—Is it the pleasure of the House that the clause shall stand?

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—Is it the intention that the clause will stand until the next sitting, or just for the present?

The CHAIRMAN—It will stand until the committee desire to take it up.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It will save time if we come to an agreement amongst ourselves, that where any clause is really and earnestly contested it shall be allowed to stand, and we will pass the non-controversial clauses and reduce the discussion thereafter within more reasonable limits.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is just the information I was asking the hon. gentleman to give us a few moments ago.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—The hon. Secretary of State tells us that this clause has been well threshed out in the House of Commons and he is not ready to accept an amendment. A great many things are well threshed out in that House, and when it is suggested that a clause could be amended in a fair way they are quite willing to accept it. It may be for instance something that has been overlooked. I am not trying to amend the clause to defeat the object of the Bill, but trying to make it more perfect. If the attention of the members of the lower House is drawn to it they would be glad to accept it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The amendment may be laid on the Table.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It is proposed that the words 'or law' should follow the words 'provincial Act,' so as to preserve in force the common law in all the provinces. The question might arise as to whether this would not be an express repeal of the common law on this subject in the various provinces in which it may be in force respecting the Lord's day that would involve an amendment in the second and fourteenth clauses, namely, the insertion of the words 'or law,' following the words 'provincial Act,' so that it would read 'in any provincial Act or law.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I did not consider that in the nature of an amendment, because I thought the clause wide enough to cover it. I stated that it in no way interfered with the provincial or civil law.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The word Act would certainly exclude the common law.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It did not, in my judgment.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The word Act may be stricken out and the words provincial law may be inserted.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Make it read 'provincial Act or law,' and that will be accepted.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.

The amendment was agreed to.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 3,

3. Notwithstanding anything herein contained, any person may on the Lord's day do any work of necessity or mercy, and for greater certainty, but not so as to restrict the ordinary meaning of the expression 'work of necessity or mercy,' it is hereby declared that it shall be deemed to include the following classes of work.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I should like a little more information about what constitutes a 'work of necessity.' Who is to be the judge of the work of necessity? It appears to me it would be inconvenient to have it settled by the judge of the court, because you might have to go to court and spend hundreds of dollars to have the matter settled. A man in Quebec might think a work he has to perform was a work of necessity, and in another section of the country he might think differently. It appears to me it is very broad and one could do mostly anything under this. A man might say that anything was a work of necessity. For instance, out in the country, if people felt inclined they might run their threshing machines. If a man had his wheat in stock and the clouds looked threatening, he might turn out his threshing mill and in that way we might have all the threshing mills in the country working and that would be called 'a work of necessity.'

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is all right.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—If it is all right, I am satisfied.

The clause was adopted.

On subclause (c),

Receiving, transmitting or delivering telegraph or telephone messages.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Could we post letters?

Hon. Mr. JONES—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—You could under this Bill prosecute the Postmaster General and have him fined?

On subclause (e),

(e) Starting or maintaining fires, and ventilating, pumping out, and inspecting mines, when any such work is essential to the protection of property, life or health.

Hon. Mr. JONES—With reference to that clause, in the management of a coal mine into which quantities of water are coming continued pumping is a necessity to keep the water to such level as will make it practicable for the men to work every day in the week except Sunday. Suppose that the pumping ceased because it was not a necessity for the protection of property, life or health. The water might rise in the mine in sufficient quantities, if you are not pumping on Sunday, to require all Monday to reduce it sufficiently to enable the men to go to work; yet it might not be considered that the pumping on Sunday was a necessity for the protection of the property. It might not in any sense injure the property, and might not injure life or health if there were no men working, but it would prohibit the mines from being worked on Monday. The men would have to keep the pumps going on Sunday to enable the mines to be worked continuously the other six days.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The water would injure the property.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think it falls under the other subsection.

Hon. Mr. JONES—It would not necessarily injure the property, but it would injure the results. I do not say the clause is not sufficient, but it is doubtful if it is broad enough to cover the case I suggest. I do not know whether it is or not

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Clause (d) covers that clearly.

The clause was adopted.

On clause (g),

The conveying of travellers and work incidental thereto.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—There appears to be no provision there for the carrying of express matter, and we all know that express matter its carried on all trains that carry passengers. I move that the words 'and all express matter' be added.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—And baggage.

Hon. Mr. JONES—Will the transportation of passengers include the baggage of passengers ?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—The word incidental will cover it.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—I do not see why we should give a right to the express companies which should be given to cases of emergency.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD—The express matter might be perishable goods.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Or a dead body.

The amendment was agreed to, and the clause as amended was adopted.

On clause (h),

The continuance to their destination of trains and vessels in transit when Sunday begins.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—There are some doubts as to the meaning of this clause, and I think we should make it clear. I move that the word 'cars' be added after the word 'trains.'

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Trains include cars.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—At the end of that clause should be added 'and work incidental to'. There is a question as to what a train means and where its destination is. It has been claimed that the destination of a train is a divisional point, but the understanding is that through freight in transit shall not be interrupted by Sunday. The definition of a train is of course the whole train made up. It might be necessary to take a few cars out of that train at some intervening point. Certain cars might be left at a divisional point, and others added to the train. It appears to me it was not the intention of the promoters of the Bill to prevent that; and to make it clear that it is not to be prevented. I move that the word 'cars' be inserted after the word 'trains'.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Is there no mention to be made of what is in the car ?

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—That is dealt with under another clause.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—A train might reach a divisional point, and for some reason there might be a necessity to break it up, and a portion of it might pass on to its destination. It might be found necessary to add to the train a number of cars so as to make it what would be considered a train of sufficient size. Under this amendment, only the cars originally with the train at the time Sunday commenced, could be carried forward. It might not be in the interest of the company to move a locomotive with only three or four cars, and there might be at the divisional point a number of other cars which would make up a train of sufficient size. If we are going to have freight trains moving on Sunday, it would be well to provide for cases of this kind.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That would interfere with the original intention. The intention was that only those cars which were in motion when Sunday began should be continued.

Hon. Mr. THOMPSON—Take the case of a train coming from the west, say from Toronto. It might reach a divisional point during Sunday where it would be necessary to have the division of the train. The portion of the train to be sent on to Montreal might consist of such a small number of cars that it would be hardly in the interests of the railway to move them.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I think it would be unfortunate to make the change which has been suggested. If hon. gentleman will refer to subclause (x) they will observe that the board of railway commissioners have power to make regulations with regard to the freight traffic of any railway, and I think it is much better to leave matters of this kind in the hands of the board of railway commissioners, and not encumber the law with exceptions of this kind.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—I do not believe that the railway commission would care to interfere with the Act as it is passed. If this point is not conceded, of allowing a train to be made up with other cars, the consequence will be that you will have very few trains moving, and probably some perishable goods will not be moved, because a company will not run an engine and crew over a division for two or three cars. I do not believe that the railway commissioners will be very ready to over-ride what you put on the statute-book.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—This should be made clear. This is a more important clause to us in the west than any other clause in the Bill. We have a congestion of grain at certain times in the year and we don't want to have any doubt or difficulty about the matter whatever. If there is a possibility, under the Bill as it stands without the amendment of the hon. gentleman from Portage la Prairie, of tying up trains at divisional points, we should make it clear and not leave anything to the railway commission, because, as my hon. friend from Drummond says, the railway commissioners may not want to interfere with legislation of this kind.

The amendment was adopted.

On subclause (i),

Loading and unloading merchandise, at intermediate points on or from passenger boats or passenger trains.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—How would that affect the traffic on the upper lakes ? Take the Canadian Pacific Railway boats leaving Fort William and arriving on Sunday at their destination which would be Owen Sound ? They could not unload, because that is the terminus of the line. But take the Northern Transportation Company, whose western terminus is also at Fort William or Port Arthur, and whose eastern terminus is, I understand, at Sarnia. They could at the intermediate port of Owen Sound or any other port in that vicinity and unload their whole cargo, and then proceed to their destination. Or take the Grand Trunk Pacific boats which, I presume, will be placed on the lakes as soon as their connection is made at Port Arthur with the west. Their terminus may be at Midland. They could not unload their cargo there on Sunday under this clause; but if they stopped at an intermediate port five or six miles from Midland, they unload and then go on to their terminus. The Bill is, no doubt, as it was described by the hon. Secretary of State when he moved its second reading. It is a mass of incongruities and contradictions. This clause would favour—quite unintentionally no doubt,—one transportation company, but it would be diametrically opposed to the interests of another, and the privileges which would be assumed and exercised by the one could not be exercised by the other.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I wish to call the attention of the House to a peculiar feature in this clause of the Bill. Say that an animal from Montreal ; provided I am sending it through to Niagara Falls, I can unload it at Toronto on Sunday, but not at its destination. That is what it means practically. At the intermediate points you allow them to do anything, but at the terminus you allow them to do nothing, and that is a very serious question. An animal may be in transit for days and requires to be fed and watered and taken care of on its arrival, yet under this clause you do not allow the railway company or steamboat company to take the animal out and feed and water it. It must remain on the boat or on cars until Monday. That is a stupid and unreasonable thing to begin with, a thing that would lead railway companies and steamboat companies into endless litigation, because if any damage occurs to an animal, we all know how valuable that animal becomes when a claim is made for it against a railway company or a corporation. No such hardships should be inflicted on the owners of steamboats and railways.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If my hon. friend will look at subclause (m), he will see that it provides for the care of the animals at any rate.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I can see what the friends of Sunday observance wish, that a cargo say of coal or flour or other material that is not perishable arriving at its destination on Sunday should not be discharged until the following day. That is right, but they should have no objection to the prompt discharge of perishable goods or live animals. They ought to go halfway in that matter. The company should have the right to discharge perishable freight or animals at their destination, because it is a work of necessity.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—The railway commission will regulate that.

Hon. Mr CLORAN—I think the objection made by the hon. senator from Lincoln (Hon. Mr. Gibson) is a most sensible one.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Clause (m) covers that case.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That applies to the care of animals in the stable or on the farm. You will get no judge to interpret it otherwise. The hon. senator from Lincoln is perfectly right.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—If you look at clause (m) you will find that it does not provide for unloading at destination on Sunday. If it does, then why is clause (h) here at all? As a layman, I allow the lawyers must have some clauses in the Bill on which to base lawsuits, but if clause (m) covers the whole case we have in view, why have clause (h) there at all? Clause (m) only makes provision that you can care for an animal or feed and water it, but you cannot unload it if it reaches its destination on Sunday. When you go before a court, it will not be what the Senate said or meant about it, but what the judge interprets the language to mean as it appears on the statute-book. I have a great deal of sympathy for those who respect the Sabbath. I respect it myself and I have always done so, but I am not here to preach about it. At the same time I do not think that it is the meaning or the wish of the people of Canada to put unnecessary restrictions upon railway companies or steamship companies. I do not believe that steamship companies should start from this side of the water on a Sunday, nor from the other side on a Sunday, but when they are on their voyage and arrive in port on Sunday, say in the city of Quebec, they might land all their passengers, because the ship is destined to Montreal, but when she arrives in Montreal they cannot unload the merchandise or land their passengers there because it is Sunday. At Quebec they can take care of them, feed them, look after their luggage, do anything, because it is an intermediate point between Liverpool or Glasgow and the city of Montreal. When they arrive at Montreal on Sunday morning, according to law, these passengers are not allowed to land, the steamship company is not allowed to unload the luggage or to land its passengers. If any hon. gentleman should be on board an ocean liner for ten or twelve days and he has the bad luck to land in Montreal on Sunday, and is compelled to remain on board the ship until Monday, I should like to know how pleasant he would be to the officers when he was compelled to remain on board ship over Sunday and be told that the steamship company could not unload his baggage or permit him to land on Sunday.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Look at clause (g), the conveying of passengers and the work incidental thereto. That covers taking passengers and luggage from the boat.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—Oh, no. Clause (g) refers to the conveyance of travellers and work incidental thereto. The three subclauses read as follows:

(g) The conveying of travellers, and work incidental thereto ;
(h) The continuance to their destination of trains and vessels in transit when the Lord's day begins ;
(i) Loading and unloading merchandise, at intermediate points, on or from passenger boats or passenger trains.

There is no provision for unloading at the destination. So long as the passenger is in transit, or the animal is in transit, unloading can be done, but if they arrive at the destination on Sunday they have to remain on board the vessel or car.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—If a train load of cattle were to leave Calgary or Winnipeg and come through to Montreal it is doubtful if you could unload them on Sunday. Some hon. gentlemen say that you could under subclause (m) and others say that you could not. Would it not be just as well to add a clause to make it clear? No railway man wants to go voluntarily into a lawsuit, and this House could make the point so plain that it would not require lawyers to interpret it—there is a train arrives at its destination on Sunday that they can unload.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Halifax)—I think the hon. gentleman from Lincoln is entirely mistaken. Supposing he arrives in Halifax on Sunday morning with one hundred passengers; they would be allowed to proceed to the port of destination on Sunday without any objection at all.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—If the House would consent, I would move to add these words, 'loading and unloading merchandise at intermediate points or points of destination.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, that breaks into the Bill.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—At once when you make provision for it, objection is raised by the lawyers; that just shows exactly that it is prohibitory to land at the point of destination, because, if it was not prohibitory, why object to incorporating this amendment in the Bill? If you are going to allow the handling and unloading in transit why not at the point of destination? If, perchance, a merchant ships goods from the city of Montreal to Vancouver, and it arrives there on Sunday, it must remain in the car over Sunday, but at Banff or Calgary it could be unloaded. I cannot see why one place should be interfered with more than another. I say the purposes of the shipper should be carried out, no matter whether it is live stock or perishable merchandise, he should be permitted to remove it from the cars on its arrival on Sunday, because it did not start on Sunday. The amendment I offer is that we should add the words 'or points of destination' after the words 'intermediate points.'

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think it would be very undesirable to adopt the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman from Lincoln. If there is to be any Sunday law for railways at all, this is just where it comes in. His amendment would practically put an end to any Sunday observance on the railways. The original Bill did not contain this provision, but provision was inserted to meet the purposes of the railway companies, that merchandise which was carried on passenger trains could be unloaded at intermediate stations; that is so as to prevent the train being delayed to allow these trains to carry freight, passenger or mixed trains, and at the same time to go on and not lose time; but when the train arrives at its destination there is no argument in favour of the railway company being allowed to unload its freight there. The freight can wait, and the men employed about the railway yard may have a chance to have Sunday to themselves. The live animals, for which the hon. gentleman expressed so much sympathy, a sympathy in which we all share, are provided for in subclause (m). I assume that if the train arrives at Montreal with live animals on board——

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It would not be a passenger train.

Hon. Mr. POWER—It does not say passenger train, in subclause (m). When the animals arrive at Montreal, the natural way to care for them is to take them out of the cars and put them in a shed and water and attend to them there, and nothing is going to happen. It is all right to look after the railway interests of the country, but if we are going to have a Sunday Bill at all, we had better, to a certain extent, protect the men who are employed by the railways. I say that if a train has arrived at its destination, the caring for the cattle, would necessarily imply that they should be taken out of the cars and attended to. I do not think it was intended by the gentleman who appeared on behalf of the railways, that subclause (i) should be altered in the way proposed by my hon. friend. We are giving these people what they are asking for.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière)—How would it do to include the words 'live stock at destination ?'

Hon. Mr. POWER—That would simply nullify the whole question.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—The hon. gentleman from Halifax says that we are working here in the interests of the railway companies.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I did not say that at all. The hon. gentleman must not put words in my mouth that I did not use.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—Personally, I can say I am not legislating in the interest of the railway companies. I am trying to legislate in the interest of the whole people of Canada. I want to say further, that no representative of a railway company ever mentioned this Sunday Bill to me. I am as anxious as anybody to see the legislation of this House put on a proper basis, and that Sunday shall be properly observed. But, in doing that, let us do it on business principles, having due regard to the Lord's day, now called Sunday. My hon. friend from Halifax is a lawyer, and has all the advantages of legal knowledge that I do not possess, but he says that anything overlooked in clause (i) is taken care of in clause (m). With regard to subclause (m) it simply says, 'the caring for live animals,' and the argument I used before was that it did not provide for the disembarking of cattle if they arrived at their destination on the Sabbath day. I propose as an amendment to subsection (i), that it should read:

Loading and unloading merchandise at intermediate points or points of destination, for perishable goods or animals.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Halifax)—The hon. senator from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power) has very justly asked, are we going to have a Sunday at all ? I do not think we are. There is nothing in this Bill which shows the slightest respect for the fourth commandment or its obligations. Now as to the matter of cattle. A merciful man is merciful to his beast, and when a cargo of cattle arrives after a journey of say 1,000 miles at a port of shipment, what they actually want is a day of rest, so that they may be watered and rested before they are fit to ship. No man that has any sense or feeling would think of shipping cattle after coming a long distance without giving them a rest at the point of arrival. I have had some experience in shipping cattle for a number of years.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The several paragraphs enumerated have been very carefully prepared and all possible contingencies have been provided for. The clause under discussion refers only to one provision of the Bill. It is the loading and unloading at intermediate points. It might amount only to the sending ashore of a trunk. It has no possible connection with cattle. They are taken care of in another clause of the Bill. The whole tenor of the Bill will be changed if we provide that where freight arrives at its destination, labour shall be employed to take it ashore. That is not the intention of the Bill and the Bill would be worth nothing if that view were entertained. I am sorry my hon. friend cannot accept the subclause which provides for one single circumstance, and no other. Why introduce anything foreign to it ?

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—My purpose in rising was to refer exactly to what the hon. Secretary of State has mentioned. This amendment applies to clause (i). If my hon. friend who moves it will go back to clause (h), he will see that it provides for the continuance to their destination of trains and vessels in transit. The first part of clause (3) reads as follows :

Notwithstanding anything herein contained, any person may on the Lord's day do any work of necessity or mercy.

Now coming to clause (m) it provides for the caring for milk, cheese and live animals, and the caring for perishable products arriving at any point during the Lord's day. Taking all these three together it seems to me that the question to which my hon. friend refers is absolutely covered. Now as to the question of mercy, let me point out that where a few animals arrive at the terminus in a car well provided for, it is not and act of mercy to unload them. They are just as well off in the car, in many instances as if they were unloaded ; but as far as a carload of steers is concerned, it would be an act of mercy to unload them. There can be no question but that this point is covered. As to passengers, under any circumstances can it be considered an unlawful act for passengers to walk ashore at the termination of their voyage ? There can be no question about that. To my mind it would appear that the amendment is an unnecessary one.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—If the matter appears clear to my hon. friend why not allow us to make it clear for others by adding a few words. Our object should be to make the measure as clear as possible. My hon. friend who has just taken his seat says that the matter is clear to him ; if so what objection can he have to admitting the words which my hon. friend desires to insert ? We know how, from the very beginning, this Bill has been handled. On the title of the measure itself we have had to divide the House to ascertain what is the meaning of the Bill, and if the amendment suggested to the title had not been carried, we would have had two interpretations of the title, because for some people the Lord's day is Saturday, while for others Sunday is the day. I have had some experience on the bench as a judge, and I know that not only in regard to legislation which passes the Senate or the House of Commons, but in regard to local legislation as well, every Act that is passed might be interpreted in two or three different ways, and there is always a difficulty to know what is the meaning of the law. In some cases it is necessary to refer to the debates in Hansard to find this out. This Bill, I venture to say, will create any amount of litigation from one end of the country to the other. Let us make it as clear as possible.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—The leader of the House says that all these clauses have been carefully gone over and he thinks they are perfect. If that is the case, I do not see why we are sitting here. I thought we were here for the purpose of offering suggestions, and if anything comes up in a Bill which affects the part of the country I come from I am justified in offering a suggestion. Some hon. gentlemen may consider that as far as the handling of live stock at terminal points is concerned, it is provided for in this clause. I am not quite so sure about that. We find other hon. gentlemen differing from them, so that there is likely to be an opening for litigation. Take the case of subclause (i). It is a well known fact that on the upper lakes there are boats which carry not only passengers but freight as well. Does anybody mean to tell me if one of these vessels arrives at any point on this side of the lake, loaded with cattle and also carrying passengers, that the passengers may come ashore, but that the people who own the cattle will have to keep them there from say seven o'clock Sunday morning, until the next day?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Twelve o'clock Saturday afternoon.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I think not, and I think it should be made so plain that we shall not want any interpretation by lawyers at all, that the average man on the street would know what this clause means. I do not see that it can do any harm to add the words the hon. gentleman from Lincoln has asked to have inserted in this Bill. Make it plain, so that everybody will know what it means, because it is an important point. We do not want whole train loads of cattle to stand on a siding for twenty-four hours without being able to unload them, and if we do unload them we do not want to be dragged into court to prove it was a necessity. No man in business wants to go into court to prove he has, under the law, a right to unload cattle, when, by the addition of half a dozen words in the Bill, we could make it quite plain. I think the amendment should be adopted.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I entirely concur with the explanation of the hon. Secretary of State of the difficulty we fancy we have struck. In the first place, it is clearly specified 'loading and unloading merchandise at intermediate points, on or from passenger boats or passenger trains.' That is clearly provided for. With regard to the amendment suggested by the hon. gentleman from Lincoln, it is clearly provided for by clause (m).

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—No.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—No.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Clause (m) reads:

The caring for milk, cheese, and live animals, and the caring for perishable products arriving at any point during the Lord's day.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—And it does not matter whether those points are intermediate points or destination.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—It is the caring for cattle and not unloading cattle.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The caring for cattle is provided for, loading or unloading, whatever is necessary for their preservation. If it is fruit, and it is necessary to put it in cold storage, you can do it.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—Why not provide for it?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—It is provided for.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—What is the objection to providing for it?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think we could meet the difficulty by adding the following:

And the unloading of live stock at terminal points.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Would it not be better to deal with the passenger trains alone here, and when we get down to (m), if we find it does not go far enough, we can amend it so as to cover the case referred to by the hon. gentleman from Lincoln, but I do not see why we should mix cattle and passengers together.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG, from the committee, reported that they had made some progress with the Bill, and asked leave to sit again at the next sitting of the House.

The Senate adjourned until three p.m.

SECOND SITTING.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three p.m.

DRILL PAY OF COMMANDING OFFICERS AT LEVIS.

INQUIRY.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY inquired of the government:

Why at the last camp at Lévis was there not paid to the commanding officers of the various corps (regiments and companies) the command and drill pay to which these commanding officers have a right according to the regulations in force?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The answer is that the payments were never made in camp, but were made direct from the head office.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There is an order now making application to be paid during camp. I am asking why it was not served?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have not the memo. at hand, but perhaps the officials were not aware of the order.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I will give the hon. minister a reference to the clause of the regulation.

CHARGES OF IRREGULARITIES AT LEVIS CAMP IN 1905.

MOTION.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY moved:

That an humble address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General praying that His Excellency will be graciously pleased to cause to be laid before this House a copy,—

1. Of the complaint made against Lieutenant Colonel Boulanger with respect to the alleged irregularities committed by him at the time of the camp at Lévis in 1905.

2. Of the inquiry held with regard to such alleged irregularities and of the evidence given.

3. Of all the correspondence exchanged on this subject between the Department of Militia and Defence or any member of the government and any person whomsoever.

4. Of every decision of the Militia Council and of every order of the Governor General in Council decreeing the expulsion of Lieutenant Colonel Boulanger from the ranks of the militia.

5. Of all correspondence subsequent to such expulsion asking for the holding of a court martial and for the appearance before it of the person alleged to be guilty in order to be able to reply to the charge.

6. Of every decision of the Militia Council and of every order of the Governor in Council replacing on the militia list without other form of trial the name of Lieutenant Colonel Boulanger.

7. Of all correspondence whatsoever which may have been exchanged on this subject up to this date.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no objection to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

SUNDAY BILL.

REPORTED FROM COMMITTEE.

The House resumed into Committee of the Whole, consideration of Bill (12) An Act respecting the Lord's day.

The CHAIRMAN (Hon. Mr. Young)—At the close of the last sitting we had under consideration subclause (i) of clause 3. To that an amendment was moved by Senator Gibson that the words 'or perishable products and live stock at points of destination' be added after the word 'points' in the second line.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The objection to that was that it was germane to paragraph (i). Provision is made elsewhere, and therefore it would destroy the symmetry of the Bill to introduce it here.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—If the hon. Secretary of State has no objection to including the amendment in subclause (m), I will withdraw it for the present.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We will make (m) as plain as possible.

Subclause (i) was adopted.

On subclause (j),

Keeping railway tracks clear of snow or ice, making repairs in cases of emergency, or doing any other work of a like incidental character, without the doing of which on the Lord's day the traffic on any transportation line cannot be safely carried on.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—There is no doubt as to what the intention of that clause is from the wording of it, but I think it would be made more plain as to what the companies have the right to do if it were amended by striking out the word 'character' and inserting the words 'necessary to keep the line open.' Any person knows that where a track is liable to be blocked with snow or ice it is necessary to do certain works; for instance, the only way to keep a track open during a heavy snow storm is to keep the trains moving. If there is snow lying on the track and it begins to rain, freezing at the same time, the only way to keep the track in a condition to operate is by running trains over it. Then, again, bridges may be washed away or an accident may happen which will require the removing of debris or the laying of new rails. All this work would be included in the words I have suggested, 'necessary to keep the line open.'

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—If you want to make that effective, you should use the word 'track'. There are plenty of tracks besides the main line, and somebody might drop on a railway company and say you are keeping your switches and sidings open when the law only allows you to keep the main line open. If we are passing legislation to help keep the tracks open it should be worded so that it could not be disputed in a court or anywhere else.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I use both words 'line and tracks'.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That covers everything.

The amendment was agreed to and the clause, as amended, was adopted.

On subclause (l) of clause 3,

(l) Loading, unloading and operating any ocean-going vessel which otherwise would be unduly delayed after her schedule date of sailing, or any vessel which otherwise would be in imminent danger of being stopped by the closing of navigation; or loading or unloading before seven o'clock in the morning or after eight o'clock in the afternoon any grain, coal or ore carrying vessel after the fifteenth of September.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—We have a lot of ships on the upper lakes, and during the grain season, in the fall of the year, the elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur and other shipping points are full to overflowing. It is absolutely necessary that the grain should be moved out every day in order to give place to what is pouring into the hopper from the west. If you enact legislation to prevent the loading of wheat at Port Arthur or unloading it at some port on this side of the lake, which would be practically the same thing; it would have this effect; the shippers do not care very much whether they send the grain out by Canadian or United States routes. A boat can be unloaded on Sunday at Buffalo, and if it cannot be unloaded at a Canadian port on Sunday, you will find that two-thirds of the wheat will go out by United States channels.

Hon. Mr. POWER—In line with the observations just made by the hon. gentleman, I have the honour to move that the words 'ocean-going,' in the first line of this paragraph be struck out.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That would render it liable to very great abuse. I would put in the words 'grain laden vessel on the upper lakes.' That will cover it.

The CHAIRMAN—A vessel coming in with coal and taking grain out would be delayed just as much

Hon Mr. SCOTT—It must be qualified so as to embrace every vessel. There should be some qualification after the words 'ocean-going.' It might be well to add 'or grain, coal or ore vessel on the upper lakes.'

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—It occurs to me that the effect of this clause will be to cut off boats running up to Skagway on the coast of British Columbia; they are not ocean-going vessels.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Oh, yes.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—They do not go outside the three-mile limit, and if an amendment is made to this clause it certainly should be made to include those vessels.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I do not know whether the amendment moved by the hon. gentleman from Halifax will meet the case or not, but the latter part of this clause provides merely for vessels at the close of navigation. My object is to have it apply to the earlier part of the season as well, because this congestion of grain takes place at the upper lake ports in the latter part of September or the beginning of October. The clause reads:—

(1) Loading, unloading and operating any ocean-going vessel which otherwise would be unduly delayed after her schedule date of sailing, or any vessel which otherwise would be in imminent danger of being stopped by the closing of navigation; or loading before seven o'clock in the morning or after eight in the afternoon any grain, coal or ore carrying vessel after the fifteenth of September.

I suppose that probably September 15 would be late enough. I wish to meet the case of the grain, and if my hon. friend can make a suitable amendment I am satisfied.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think the amendment which has been proposed is in the right direction. There is no trade which deserves more consideration than the grain trade coming out from Fort William. The words which follow qualify it sufficiently—loading, unloading and operating any vessel which otherwise would be delayed after her scheduled date of sailing, or any vessel which otherwise would be in imminent danger of being stopped by the close of navigation. I may say with respect to the observation made by the hon. gentleman from Kamloops, that the hon. gentleman is perfectly right. Under one of our statutes a vessel running from Victoria to Skagway would be held to be a coasting vessel—not an ocean-going vessel.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—There is an omission in that clause. It is drafted to apply to the lake steamers. The clause fixes the 15th September, without saying up to what date the exemption shall continue. I suppose it is until the close of navigation.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—But we have the ports of St. John and Halifax as well, which are open all the year around.

Hon. Mr. POWER—The vessels which sail from those ports are ocean-going vessels.

The CHAIRMAN—The question is on the amendment of the hon. senator from Halifax that the words 'ocean-going' be struck out.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I move in amendment thereto, that after 'ocean-going' the words 'or grain carrying vessels on the upper lakes' be inserted.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—I do not think that would meet the condition of things I referred to. It would be necessary to put in something relating to coasting vessels.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If the object of the hon. Secretary of State is to confine the loading and unloading to grain, he would have to word it somewhat differently.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It was to include the grain vessels trading on the upper lakes. The argument of the hon. gentleman from Prince Albert was that the importance of getting grain forward in the fall of the year was so great that special provision ought to be made for it, and I am willing to meet his view.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The expression 'grain carrying vessel' applies to the vessel, but that vessel might carry anything else besides grain.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I would point out that a vessel getting into port on Sunday morning or Saturday night, loaded with coal, would have to unload it, and reload with grain or else she would have to lie over. That will have to be prevented. If you do detain the vessels it will be a serious impediment to getting out the wheat in the fall of the year, and will have the effect of driving all the traffic into American channels. I would rather have the amendment of the senator from Halifax which covers the whole question.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The objection to the unqualified use of the word 'vessel' is that you open the door too wide, because a vessel can make arrangements to sail from Toronto to Kingston or to Sackett's Harbour opposite, or any other point. It was intended to be limited, but this amendment would have the effect of widening it. It throws the whole subject open, which is not the spirit of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—The argument of the hon. Secretary of State is one which is going to affect the provinces all through. In a question like this it is very difficult to cover all the points that come up. I certainly think that if this clause is going to be amended at all, the amendment of the senator from Halifax is the one which best meets the requirements of the case.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—There is a very important industry besides grain carrying. It is growing in importance every day and will soon be of the greatest possible consequence to Canada, that is ore carrying. The ore is just as important as the grain, probably, for the industries of the country. It will be perfectly safe to leave the clause so that it will include any vessel at all.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does not the hon. gentleman see from the wording of it that it might be a grain carrying vessel, but it does not restrict it to carrying grain alone.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The description might include a vessel of that nature. It might mean an ocean-going vessel that happened to be up there, that is a through ship to Liverpool that had gone all the way through. There is no sense in legislating for a case of that kind. On the American side, there are very large ships of ocean-going size which are only lake boats and which carry nothing but ore; enormous vessels of ten or twelve thousand tons. Our trade in that direction is growing also, and why should vessels of this class not be permitted to take advantage of this clause, and not be forced to tie up for the winter in the wrong port. At times the season closes in very rapidly, and an hour or two makes all the difference in the world. It seems to me it is not an unreasonable thing to ask that this provision should apply to any vessel whether travelling on the lakes or on the ocean.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—There is in my opinion a great deal to be said in behalf of the gorged condition of navigation in the fall of the year, when the grain is being got out. I think we should consider that question seriously in framing this clause, and I am willing to accept the suggestion made by the Secretary of State. But ore is a product that is taken out every month of navigation from beginning to end. It differs altogether from wheat. Wheat is only reaped late in the year, and the result is that it is sent forward with a rush. There is an enormous quantity on the railways and on the grain carriers on the lakes, and it is necessary that we should specially consider that feature of the case. No such argument can be presented in favour of ore, and, consequently, we are doing well if we follow the suggestion of the hon. Secretary of State.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Would the loading and unloading of boats include the elevators as well?

Hon. Mr. BOLDUC—In view of the conflicting interpretations of these words by legal gentlemen, it is evidently impossible at this stage of the session to deal with the measure properly, and I give notice that at the third reading I shall move that the Bill be not read the third time now, but that it be referred to a committee composed of five or six members of the legal profession to study it carefully and make a report to the House. I have no hesitation in doing so, because the Bill would not go into operation before March next, if passed now. We are to have another session in November, so I do not see that my suggestion, if adopted, will delay the Bill at all.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I move that in the beginning of the third line of this clause the word 'time' be substituted for 'date.' In connection with the grain trade it is often a very important thing to get away at a certain hour, and if a ship which should sail at 8 o'clock in the morning is delayed until 8 o'clock in the evening, the result may be serious where there is a congestion of freight as there is at Fort William towards the close of navigation. In order to help the business there, I move that the word 'time' be substituted for 'date' in the third line of the paragraph.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—There is certainly an omission there. That only applies to the lake ports.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière)—No, ocean-going ports.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—From 15th September till when?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Until the lakes freeze up there.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—But in places where there is not ice?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Then till the following year.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I should like to have some information on this clause. The provision of the clause reads, 'before 7 in the morning or after 8 in the afternoon.' Would that mean they would not be allowed to load in the middle of the day?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—You can load up to 7 o'clock in the morning and after 8 o'clock in the afternoon.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I think that should be struck out. Any one who knows anything about grain shipping there will understand that that will be a serious matter. Those elevators will not hold one half of the wheat crop, and it will have to be removed, and if any impediment is put in the way of getting that wheat out it will have a very serious effect on the western country.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—The first few lines of that clause provide for the very condition the hon. gentleman suggests.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes; that is quite clear.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—It says 'loading and operating any ocean-going vessel which otherwise would be unduly delayed after her scheduled date of sailing.'

The subclause, as amended, was adopted.

On subclause (m),

(m) The caring for milk, cheese and live animals, and the caring for perishable products arriving at any point during the Lord's day.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I should like to move to add one word in the first line, so as to make it read 'caring for milk, cheese and unloading live animals.'

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What about caring for the live animals?

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman had better make a second paragraph, caring for milk, cheese and live animals—you have to care for the live animals—and then you might add 'and unloading live animals.'

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—I will amend my motion to suit the hon. gentleman from Halifax.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I think there is a good deal of difference of opinion as to what the clause really means. My own view of the clause as it stands is that without the addition of any words, where it was necessary, in order to properly care for the live animals that were on board any train, they might be unloaded.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière)—If there is any doubt we should make it clear.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—And I might say further that I think under this clause that, if it were necessary in the case of milk which comes in on a train, it would be unloaded, and I take it that the intention of that clause is that milk coming in on a train on Sunday morning will not only be unloaded but distributed. That is my understanding of the clause as it appears; but if there is any doubt about it, the word 'unloading' should be inserted in the first line of the clause, and it should read like this:

Unloading and caring for cheese and live animals.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As I explained before, I thought the clause was so wide that it comprehended everything under the word 'caring.' In the case of perishable articles, you would have to take them out of the car and put them in the refrigerator. There is a special clause with reference to milk, and if you insert these words in this paragraph you throw some doubt on the wording of the latter part of the clause. I accepted the proposal to make the clause clearer when hon. gentlemen expressed some doubt as to the extent of it, but if you make the first part clearer you must make the second part clearer, or else you throw a doubt on it.

The CHAIRMAN—The amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman from Westmoreland is that after the word 'the' the words 'unloading and' be added.

The amendment was adopted.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—And there must be a similar amendment in the latter part of the clause.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—As I understand this clause, it will do away with what it was intended to cover in the first instance, that is the case of farmers who will have to look after stock on Sunday. As I understand the way it was read just now, the loading and unloading and caring were the whole thing. Now the farmer does not unload stock on Sunday.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no doubt the hon. member is perfectly correct. The hon. member from Lincoln (Hon. Mr. Gibson) put the other proposition so strongly before the House that an impression was created that the clause referred to animals in transit. It was originally framed for the purpose of protecting the farmers.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It should not be amongst the transportation clauses. It is quite apparent this was inserted here through the solicitude probably of some agriculturists, when it should have come in paragraph (r). If this amendment which has been proposed is carried, it will take it out of the category of agriculture and entirely limit the clause to transportation subjects. I suggest that caring for milk, cheese and live animals be consolidated with paragraph (r) and the two clauses will harmonize.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We will have to leave the clause as it was originally, and frame another clause to meet the arguments of the hon. senator from Lincoln.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The Minister of Justice interpreted this clause to cover the care of perishable products in the dairy or on the farm, and had no reference at all to transportation, so there would be nothing to unload about them.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—It must refer to transportation, because it says 'arriving at any point.'

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The later part of the clause does; but the first part refers to dairies and farms.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The first part refers to animals on the farm, and taking care of any perishable article on the farm, and has nothing to do with transportation.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I suppose the committee will agree to transfer the words 'unloading and' from the first part of the clause to the latter part.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I would suggest to the hon. Secretary of State that inasmuch as the two subjects are absolutely diverse from each other, he should frame a clause and put the earlier part of this section in with paragraph (r). Otherwise it will lead to confusion.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It will do to make the unloading refer to the latter part of the clause.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—One part of the clause deals with farming, the other with transportation. Why should those two subjects be confused in this way, particularly as we deal with agricultural subjects in the latter part of this clause. My hon. friend had better remedy this defect.

The amendment was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière)—I move to insert after the words 'perishable products' the words 'live animals.'

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Halifax)—Stock would be a better word. A fox or a bear would be a live animal.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Suppose a circus should come along with elephants, lions and tigers on board. They do not constitute what we call stock. Consequently if you have a carload of monkeys, elephants and giraffes, you would have to keep them locked up over Sunday.

The amendment was agreed to, and the clause as amended was adopted.

On clause (n),

The operation of any ferry or boat authorized by competent authority to carry passengers on Sunday.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think we should add after the word 'boat' 'or toll bridge.' Take for instance the bridge across the Bay of Quinté. From Belleville there is a toll bridge crossing to Prince Edward county to a place called Rossmore. The question arises whether the working of the draw upon that bridge would not be an infraction of the law. On Sundays, clergymen from the city of Belleville drive over to hold religious services on the other side of the bay. If that draw should be open it would be an infringement of the law if the men who are kept there for the purpose of working the bridge should close it. There is no ferry there now. It was taken away after the construction of the bridge. There is a dispute, I know, as to the powers given under another clause. Some lawyers contend that the draw could be worked under another clause; other lawyers have told me that it does not give the power. As the intention clearly is not to prevent the passage from one side of the bay to the other on Sunday, there can be no harm in adding the words 'or toll bridge.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Better make it read 'The operation of any toll or draw bridge, or of any ferry or boat.'

Hon. Mr. FORGET—I would like to have some explanation as to that part of the clause which speaks of competent authority. In Montreal we have a great many working men employed in the city all week who live in different parishes along the St. Lawrence river. Every Sunday morning a boat leaves the city to carry these men to their different parishes to spend Sunday with their families and come back at night. Will that boat be permitted under this clause to operate as usual? What is competent authority?'

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I endorse what the hon. senator has just said; the question of competent authority is not clear. It is obscure; it is worded in such a way as to bring cases into court. Is it federal authority, provincial or municipal, or what authority is it? The word 'competent'. does not mean anything in this line. Who is to be the judge? Should parliament not say what authority is to give a man a right to run a ferry or a boat and not let the judges decide. Then again, apart from ferrys and boats which are run by competent authority as we understand, but which the judges will not understand, the courts will say: 'Why did you not make your law plain and clear?' We have hundreds of streams through the country, rivers and lakes, and not one out of ten of the ferry boats are conveying passengers under competent authority; they are doing it for public convenience. All you have to do is to whistle from one side of the river to the other, and who will come out? The poor fishermen will come across for your convenience. He has no authority to do it, but he comes because you ask him to. Under this law all this traffic is suspended. Any man who will carry a passenger on Sunday is doing it without authority. Right here on the Ottawa there are men who ferry passengers across without any authority whatever, simply to be agreeable. Under this clause none of that traffic should be done on Sunday. That clause should be remodeled as most of the clauses have been.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I cannot understand any man taking that view of a question of this kind. The clause says: 'The operation of any ferry or boat authorized by competent authority to carry passengers on the Lord's day.' That is a steamer. My hon. friend will admit that any person handling a steamer has to have a certificate as captain. They have to have a certificate that it is run as a steamboat.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Put in the word 'steamer' and I will agree with you.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—It is authorized by competent authority, simply that it is properly handled, that is has perhaps a pilot, a captain and engineer and all the necessary equipment to carry passengers. That is all that is wanted. When it is authorized under the authority of the law of the province of Quebec, that provides for the efficiency of captains and of engineers that are on board. They have to undergo an examination and must have a license. That is the competent authority.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—It is not necessary to insert that provision in the Bill. The hon. gentleman is aware that no one can navigate the waters of the St. Lawrence without a proper certificate. No one can be a pilot without having a license or a certificate. That provision is there for the protection and safety of the public.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—There must be some other meaning.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—There is no other meaning. Why should we put it in there. The law provides for it already. What I desire to know is whether we can start a boat on Sunday from one point to another point on that river on that day?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—No.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think it depends altogether on the character of the persons on the boat. If it is an excursion party they cannot. If it is a party going to their own homes, I think you can. Under subclause (g) the words 'conveying of travellers' would, I should think, cover the case. The clause under consideration has no connection with vessels going up and down the river. It is simply crossing the river backward and forward, and not going up and down, because it refers to ferry boats such as the boats running across the Ottawa or the boats at Montreal going to St. Helen's island or La Prairie. It has no reference to boats going up and down the river.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—It says any ferry or boat. A ferry must be a boat. Why should you put in 'any ferry or boat ?'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Because there are so many kinds of ferrys; there is a ferry boat, horse ferry, steam ferry, but it is quite clear from the way it is worded that it applies to a ferry.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—In that case I suggest that the clause should be amended. I think it is very hard on poor people who have to work all the week, and the only day they have to go to their homes is Sunday and the only means of communication is by boats. It is hard to prevent these people going home on Sunday. It is not an excursion, it is simply a man taking a boat to travel twenty or thirty miles, and then returning at night after spending the day with his family. I do not think excursions should be allowed.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Does the hon. gentleman not think that if a man wishes to go from Montreal forty miles down the river that he would come under clause (g)—the conveying of travellers? He is travelling.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—If they go for pleasure they are not travellers.

Hon. Mr. POWER—But if a man wishes to go to his own home from the city of Montreal, and his home is down the river, he would come under subclause (d). With respect to the clause which is under consideration, I think the 'competent authority' mentioned there is the authority which licenses the ferryman. I don't know how it is in the province of Quebec, but I know that in Nova Scotia a man is not allowed to carry on a ferry without a license. In some cases the license is granted by the provincial authorities, and in others by the municipal authorities, and the idea is that a duly licensed ferryman is to be allowed to carry passengers to and fro.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—No doubt that is the intention of the framers of the law. In Ontario, any one who operates a ferry must take out a license. If it is an interprovincial or international ferry, such as the one from Ottawa to Hull, or from Prescott to Ogdensburg, Dominion authority must be obtained. The case referred to would, I think, be fully covered by the fact that the ferryman has competent authority in the power given to him under the charter which enables him to operate the ferry. If my hon. friend from Victoria will look at subclause (o) he will find that the objection he takes is fully covered there. That clause would not prevent him from taking his family or his friend down the river.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I quite agree with my hon. friend from Sorel, that the words 'competent authority' must be defined in some way. Does it mean that we cannot hire a boat without asking the permission of the municipal council before starting? Take the case of the boats of the Island Park Company at Montreal. Can they leave their wharf at Montreal on Sunday morning and carry passengers to St. Helen's island or must they apply for permission to do so; and if they must apply who is the authority to whom application is to be made? In Quebec, we have boats plying between the city of Quebec and the Island of Orleans, excursion boats, simply to enable the people to take a pleasure trip on the water. Must they ask competent authority for the right to start the boat; and if so, who is that authority? It seems to me that the clause is not well worded.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As I explained before, it is absolutely clear. There are no ferries in any part of Canada which are not either under federal or provincial authority, and control. This applies solely to ferry boats passing back and forward in a river which is international or provincial. If provincial, they get licenses from the provincial government. It has no reference whatever to a boat passing up or down. If workmen want to go to their homes fifteen or twenty miles down the river, they do not take a ferry for that purpose.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—If the word Sunday was not there, I could understand that, for every boat has authority to carry passengers. But there is nobody in the province of Quebec who could give authority to carry passengers on Sunday. If you omit the word 'Sunday' it is all right. But with that word there, you must have authority to carry passengers on Sunday.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—The Richelieu and Ontario boat has power to carry passengers every day of the year.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have already explained, and I cannot do it more clearly, that this clause is exclusively confined to ferries, and ferries are under either provincial or federal control. This clause has no reference to boats plying between Quebec and Montreal.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Take the ferry between St. Helen's Island and Montreal; the authority to run that ferry will not be good on Sunday under this Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, it would.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Then every Sunday you would have to go and get the authority.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They have the right, if they have any authority for a ferry. It is not specially confined to Sunday.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What the Bill says is this; you must apply to competent authority.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Nothing of the kind.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It says 'authorized by competent authority.' Authorized to do what? To carry passengers?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No, to carry passengers on Sunday. Where is the authority that gives that right?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In the instance given by the hon. senator opposite, this particular ferry, I presume, holds a license, does it not?

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Yes.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Then it does not interfere with that in the slightest degree, because they hold a license to ferry.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—It is put in here for a ferry that does not hold a license. A man undertakes to do a ferry business——

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—He has no right to do so unless he has a license.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—The hon. senator from Halifax (Hon. Mr. Power) says that these passengers spoken of could be carried under clause (g), 'the conveying of travellers and work incidental thereto.' Does the hon. gentleman mean that we could start a boat at Montreal to run to Quebec on Sunday?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—The hon. senator from Halifax says we can under this clause. As I have said, nobody understands this Bill and it should be made clear. I contend that workingmen who work all week in Montreal should have the privilege of going to their homes on Sunday.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The case put by the hon. gentleman is reasonable, and I think provision should be made for it. That does not fit in with his illustration of running a boat from Montreal to Quebec. He tells me that a number of workingmen, and other people in Montreal live out of Montreal and they should have a right to go to their homes. I have no objection to amending the clause to read 'the conveying of travellers or passengers passing between their homes and places of business and employment.' That would be a proper thing to do.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—I am satisfied.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I can quite see the case my hon. friend has brought up is not provided for really in the Bill, and it is only proper that it should be provided for.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The amendment of the hon. gentleman is made in the interest of the people who do not need it; people who have homes in the country do not need such legislation. What we want in the large centres of labour, whether Montreal, Quebec or Toronto or elsewhere, is a chance for the workingman who has no home in the country, after going to church, to take a boat and sail on the river or on the lake and get the fresh air which he has not got in his home. The amendment proposed by the hon. Secretary of State means this: If I miss my train on Saturday afternoon, I will be at liberty to take a boat in the morning and go to Sorel or Laprairie, while the poor workingman will not have the right to get on board that boat because he is not travelling to his home. The president of the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Company is here and knows what he is talking of. He is not speaking for himself alone, but rendering a service for 200,000 people in the cities of Montreal, Quebec, Three Rivers and Sorel, and wherever there is a centre of population. It may be said that he is talking in the interest of his company. Admitting he is doing so, is he not talking in the interests of the health of the working classes of this country? He says, personally he does not care to run his boats on Sunday, but he knows that our people need fresh air. It is all very fine for us to legislate in our own interests and on our behalf, but we should not forget that when we are legislating here we should legislate for all classes and not for a few who are able to have country homes out of the big cities.

Hon. Sir WILLIAM HINGSTON—There must be a great deal of ambiguity about this Bill. I have asked four legal gentlemen since I came here to-day the meaning of this clause, and the four gave me two opinions, and in the Senate this afternoon we have the same thing, no three agreeing upon that clause. It is a very important one and the only way of meeting the difficulty is to make it read thus: 'The operation of any ferry or boat authorized to carry passengers.'

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—By competent authority.

Hon. Sir WILLIAM HINGSTON—A boat goes by competent authority. Then we do not allude to the fact that it is Sunday. The hon. senator from Sorel mentioned the case where persons went in large numbers on Sunday morning to the country. I am obliged myself to go down the river Sunday morning to my country residence, sixteen miles below Montreal. I find that the boat carries large numbers of passengers and lands them at every small place on the way until reaching Sorel, and in the afternoon, when the boat returns, at three or four o'clock, it takes all those people home, and they are in their houses at nine o'clock at night. I add, with great pleasure, that I have never seen a sign of liquor on any of these persons either going down or coming back. We find fathers and mothers and their children going to spend Sunday with their parents and their grandfathers, and sometimes their great grandfathers, and we should afford every possible facility to their circulating easily on Sunday.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I move that the words after 'passengers' be struck out.

Hon. Mr. POWER—We had better leave the words 'on Sunday' in, because it does not mean, as objected by some hon. gentlemen, that the owner of a ferry or boat is licensed to carry passengers only on Sunday. It means that he is licensed to carry passengers every day, including Sunday.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Then there is no harm in taking it out.

The CHAIRMAN—I do not know that the word 'Sunday' is necessary in this clause when you come to read clause (l).

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I do not pretend to say what was in the minds of the framers of the Bill, but my understanding of that clause is that it required any ferry, before it could carry passengers on a Sunday, to get a license from whatever the licensing authority was, and if, as the hon. Secretary of State says, all ferries in Canada require to have a license from some authority, either federal or local, I would understand it that under this clause any ferry boat which desired to operate on Sunday would have to get included in its license the liberty to operate on Sunday. It would place it, to a certain extent, in the hands of the local authorities to license or to refuse to license a ferry boat to operate on Sunday.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—It is absolutely necessary that these boats should be licensed. They carry large numbers of people, and they are required to come up to a certain degree of inspection. I do not think there is any more beneficent clause in the whole Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There may be in some of the provinces a provision that the ferries shall not run on Sunday. If they are licensed generally without any exclusion of Sunday, they run every day in the year; but if they are licensed to run on week days only we should be interfering with provincial legislation.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD—An ordinary ferry boat which crosses a river simply completes the link between the two highways. It is usually licensed by the municipality or county council or some such authority, but principally by the council of the county in which the ferry boat runs. The boat simply connects the highways on the two shores of the river, and therefore it is authorized to run on Sunday, because it is a completion of the highway.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Halifax)—I was brought up at a ferry which is called Ross's ferry, after my father. The ferries are licensed by the municipal council and they can carry passengers on Sunday just as well as on week days. People who have any regard for Sunday do not travel very much on that day, and we were never very much troubled on Sunday. But all the ferries in the province of Nova Scotia have their licenses from the municipal council and they have to make returns of the number of passengers, horses and carriages which they carry. When the ice moves out from the lakes and rivers in the spring of the year, the boats are inspected before they commence to run, and they must be up to a certain standard.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—I would not have any objection to have the municipal authority, say the city of Montreal, issuing the license.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is a competent authority. Whatever authority now has control of the ferry is competent. Sometimes it is federal, sometimes provincial and sometimes municipal. You cannot define it here.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—In this case I speak of, the federal authority is the authority; it should be the city.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We cannot change it if it is the federal authority.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Certainly you are not able to change a charter, but you are able to change this Bill. I will accept the amendment of the hon. gentleman from Stadacona.

The CHAIRMAN—We are discussing the amendment moved by the hon. gentleman from Belleville.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No; you cannot come in with another amendment to strike that out. The amendment, as read by the chairman, is that all these words stand part of the Bill, and if you declare that they shall stand part of the Bill, you cannot move an amendment afterwards to strike them out. The amendment should be put as the hon. gentleman from Belleville gave it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The motion I made was to add these words.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am taking it as it was put by the Chair.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman can propose any amendment he likes.

The CHAIRMAN—We will take a vote on the amendment of the hon. gentleman from Belleville, that the words 'toll or drawbridge, if any,' be added in the first line.

The amendment was adopted.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—My motion is that all the words after the word 'passenger' be erased.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Why should they be struck out ?

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—Because there is no ferry licensed by competent authority to run on Sunday.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—What is the effect of striking out the words 'on Sunday ?' I understand all the clauses from (a) to (x) are exceptions to the clause, which imposes penalties for infraction of the Lord's day or Sunday, and this is one of those clauses. If you strike out those words, you would prevent any muncipality in the future, or any local legislature, enacting laws against the carrying of passengers on that day. The intention of the law is to make certain exceptions to the general provision for the proper observance of Sunday ; and if you strike this out, it seems to me it is not necessary at all. However, I have no objection.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I will try to explain the view I took of that question. This is one of the exemption clauses—the operation of any ferry boat or toll bridge authorized by competent authority to carry passengers. The motion is to strike out 'Sunday,' because I take it that the operation of any ferry boat authorized by competent authority to carry passengers would be exempted. If you say 'to carry passengers on the Lord's day,' there must be a competent authority authorizing the carrying of passengers on Sunday. This is not the case ; it is the operation of any boat authorized by competent authority to carry passengers generally any day of the week. If there was a proper authority for Sunday and a different authority for the week, I would understand this qualification in the law, but there is only one authority that gives the license, and it gives it for every day in the week. So that we address ourselves to the authorities who give permission to carry passengers, and we say that the operation of any ferry boat authorized by competent authority to carry passengers generally is authorized to carry them on Sunday.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I must protest against that ; the hon. gentleman simply wipes out the whole Bill. If you make it 'any boat authorized to carry passengers,' you interfere with the whole Bill.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—The hon. gentleman from Stadacona means that a boat that is excepted here is a boat that is licensed to carry passengers on the Lord's day.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The exception is only given to ferry boats which are authorized to carry passengers and no one else.

Hon. Mr. McMILLAN—Unless they have that authority, they will not come under this exception.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The provincial legislature may grant a license for the carrying of passengers on every day of the week, but afterwards the same authority may pass a sabbatarian law for preventing the carrying of passengers on Sunday. Under this provision, no matter what law the provincial authorities would pass, the ferry could not be prevented from carrying passengers on Sunday. If this provision is left out, the province would have the authority to prevent their doing so.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—All ferry boats are supposed to be licensed by competent authority, whether to run on Saturday or to run on Sunday : why should we want to keep that word 'Sunday ?' I think it should be left out, and then the clause would read 'the operation of any ferry authorized by competent authority to carry passengers.'

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The province might pass a law preventing the ferry from running on Sunday. If they did so, that would stop the ferry ; but as long as this exception is included in the law, the provincial authorities could not do that.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—I don't think we need bother about that; the provincial authorities are not going to pass any such law.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We are not talking of what they might do, but about what power they have.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—I understand the hon. Secretary of State has an amendment to propose.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I said I would be glad to amend subclause (g).

The CHAIRMAN—The question before the committee is whether the words 'on Sunday' shall be struck out of subclause (n).

The amendment was declared lost, and the clause was adopted.

On subclause (g),

(g) The conveyance of travellers and work incidental thereto.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—To meet the case proposed by my hon. friend opposite, of persons who live outside of some of the cities and who go home on Sunday morning or Saturday evening, I think it is only fair and reasonable to enlarge subclause (g), and I will suggest the following :—

The conveying of travellers or persons passing between their homes and places of business or employment.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The clause is wider as it is.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—That would have the effect of limiting it. The word 'travellers' is a very wide term.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The word 'or' conveys a distinction. If a man lived four miles out of Montreal down the river and was in the habit of going down by boat on Sunday, returning Sunday evening to his work, you could not call him a traveller.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—He would be a passenger, under the Railway Act. How are you gong to draw the line whether he lives four miles or forty or four hundred miles away?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I was specifically putting the case as stated by the hon. gentleman from Montreal, which I did not think was met in the Bill. I do not think that a person going between his own home and Montreal a short distance would be classed as a traveller.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The hon. gentleman had better amend the Interpretation Act by making a new definition of 'traveller.'

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Why should a man not be able to go to his home by boat if he is permitted to go by tramway?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I can quite understand how it might be considered that under clause 6 persons passing to and fro in the way indicated would come under the provisions of clause 6 of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I understand excursions as mentioned in clause 6 to be an organized effort by transportation companies to carry an aggregation of people to a common point for a consideration. Surely such a person as my hon. friend from Montreal refers to would not be regarded as an excursionist?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Perhaps the hon. gentleman from Montreal will tell us what the difficulty is in saying that the man who travels a couple of miles from his house to the city is a traveller? What is a traveller? One who travels; if he travels two miles he is a traveller just as much as if he travelled a thousand miles.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—I do not agree with that; if you go home from your office you are not a traveller.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I am so far as the conveyance is concerned in which I go, and that is all we are dealing with here.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—It is very ambiguous.

On subclause (o),

The hiring of horses and carriages or small boats for the personal use of the hirer or his family for any purpose not prohibited by this Act.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—What about the man who has a horse to hire or a boat to rent? By other provisions in the Bill he is not allowed to do so.

Hon. Mr. POWER—If the hiring is not illegal, surely the other party to the bargain is not doing what is wrong?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—This clause is restrictive, because if I have guests in my house and I were to take them out in a carriage or boat, any one who wishes to do so might have me brought up in the courts. The guests do not belong to my family.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD—The clause goes on to say, 'for any purpose not prohibited by the Act.'

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The law should not be left open for people to attack others. I move that the word 'guest' be added.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—There is not the least doubt that if this clause is adopted and clause 6 as well, it will be illegal to hire a horse or a boat, because we must read the two clauses together. We have passed subclause (g) and we know what 'travellers' means. In clause 6 it is said that 'passengers so conveyed shall not be deemed to be travellers,' so that I would have no right to hire a horse for my pleasure or amusement only, unless the last words in this subsection are omitted—'for any purpose not prohibited by this Act.' If you retain these words and take this subclause in connection with clause 6 it will be illegal to hire a horse or boat for pleasure, but if the last words in subclause (o) are omitted, it will be all right, and I move that these words be stricken out.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The interpretation of this subclause by the hon. gentleman from Victoria division is not borne out by the wording of the clause. If I have a dozen guests in my house on Sunday and I desire to give them a drive in the afternoon, that is for my own personal use; that is not for the purpose of making money. It is simply taking a carriage to go into the country and that is for my own personal use, no matter whom I may take with me. That is for my own personal use. Then it goes further and says you can do the same thing for your family, you could do either one or the other. The hon. gentleman who has just spoken, refers to clause 6. There are clauses in this Bill which prevent certain work and certain things being done on Sunday. There are exceptions to those clauses running from (a) to (x), and one of the exceptions is the permission to a person hiring a carriage for his own use or for his family. I am not a lawyer, but it strikes me that common sense would lead one to the conclusion that if clause 6 remains in the Bill without the exception, then the objection my hon. friend makes would hold good.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—If you hire a yacht for pleasure or amusement, you violate the clause.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman's proposal is entirely in violation of the spirit of the Act. If we strike out those words, a dozen persons, might hire a carriage and go out on an excursion. Excursions are prohibited by clause 6.

Hon. Mr. JONES—While the Act appears to be clear that a man may hire a conveyance, it does not appear to be clear that he would be able to do so if he wished. Clause 2 says:

2. It shall not be lawful for any person on the Lord's day, except as provided herein or in any provincial Act now or hereafter in force regarding matters coming within the classes of subjects enumerated in section 92 of the British North America Act, 1867, to sell or offer for sale or purchase any goods, chattels, or other personal property, or any real estate, or to carry on or transact any business of his ordinary calling.

Would that not prevent a livery stable keeper from letting out for hire his horses or carriages?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Will the hon. gentleman read the remainder of the clause?

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—The second paragraph reads as follows:

3. Notwithstanding anything herein contained, any person may on the Lord's day do any work of necessity or mercy, and for greater certainty, but not so as to restrict the ordinary meaning of the expression 'work of necessity or mercy,' it is hereby declared that it shall be deemed to include the following classes of work:

That does not apply.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It makes all those exceptions.

Hon. Mr. JONES—But it does not appear to me that it leaves him free to hire a conveyance.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If you are allowed to hire a horse the man who hires it to you could not be punished certainly.

The CHAIRMAN—The question is on the amendment moved by the hon. gentleman from Grenville (Hon. Mr. Choquette).

The amendment was declared lost.

The clause was adopted.

On subclause (r),

The delivery of milk for domestic use and the work of domestic servants and of watchmen.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Does that include the carrying of milk by train? The ordinary sense of the word delivery is the delivery in town by hand or by milk rigs.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no restriction.

The clause was adopted.

On subclause (s),

The operation by any Canadian electric street railway company whose line is interprovincial or international, of its cars for passenger traffic on Sunday on any line or branch now regularly so operated.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Up at Sault Ste. Marie, the electric railway company own the plant and operate the road on the Canadian side and also on the United States side, but they are not connected by an interprovincial railway. They are connected by a ferry boat which belongs to the company that owns the electric roads, and the cars run on to the ferry boat. I would suggest these words:

The operation by any Canadian electric street railway company whose line is interprovincial or international or which is operated in connection with an interprovincial or international ferry.

That would make the clause clear. The Minister of Justice and others in the House of Commons are under the impression, and gave the opinion, that one of the other clauses which refers to the carrying of travellers would cover this case. If it does, there can be no harm in so amending the clause as to make it clear and distinct. If the street railway company at the Soo, on the Canadian side, had a bridge the same as they have at Niagara Falls, there would be no difficulty. If the road at Niagara Falls has the right to cross the international bridge on Sunday, as is the case, and connect with roads on the other side of the river, there certainly can be no reason why the company at the Soo should not be permitted to use a ferry for the same purpose, because the ferry runs constantly in the conveyance of travellers.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If the cars are carried on the ferry boat, I think it would come under the term international, but if there is a break with a ferry I do not think it would be included. To introduce the words that the hon. gentleman proposes, would be to widen it to include all places where a ferry is operated. Take, for instance, the ferry between Windsor and Detroit. The international ferries would run in connection with trains on each side, so the hon. gentleman would see it would be a very unsafe proposition to adopt, because it would open the door very seriously.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This clause refers exclusively to electric street railways, and not to railways generally.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I am speaking of street railways. There is a street railway in Windsor and one in Detroit.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—They are not connected.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is a ferry boat at Windsor by which they could exchange passengers.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not see why paragraph (s) is necessary in view of clause 13, which deals with provincial and Dominion roads. If provincial and federal roads having authority to operate their lines are not prohibited from operating on Sundays, why should the lines mentioned in paragraph (s), which must be either provincial or federal, receive the special mention which has been made in this paragraph?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Because otherwise we might interfere with the local authorities. Take the case illustrated by the hon. senator from Belleville. The province of Ontario may pass an Act preventing the railway at Sault Ste. Marie from running on Sunday. We would cut the province of Ontario out of its jurisdiction if we accepted the proposition of the hon. senator from Belleville, because it is not strictly international.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—If a line is being operated on Sunday at present, presumably it must have some authority for doing so. That authority must be either federal or provincial. Certainly that road cannot legally run without having authority, and paragraph (s) presupposes that the road is being operated under either one or the other authority. The explanation given by my hon. friend certainly does not meet the point.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The only place I can see where the international feature comes in is at Niagara Falls.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Then it would be under federal authority.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is international there. The interprovincial road is between Ottawa and Hull.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Then it will come under clause 13 whether it is international or interprovincial.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If we take the case put by the hon. senator from Belleville, and so arrange the language of the clause as to cover that case, we would be attacking the provincial authority, because under the provincial authority that road might not be allowed to run on Sunday. By framing the language of the clause to allow that road to connect with some road across the river, we would be taking the matter out of the hands of the provincial authority.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The case is one which should be provided for, because it might do very great injustice if it were not. I understand the suggestion is made to amend the clause by adding, 'or which is operated in connection with an international ferry.' I would add the words, 'as part of its system, unless as otherwise prohibited by provincial authority.' That would meet the case that the hon. Secretary of State has mentioned. If it is running as part of a system, it is part of an international system.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—I would like to move that the words after 'company' be stricken out. It would then read, 'the operation by any Canadian street railway company of its cars, &c.' I do not see the use of these two words here 'interprovincial' and 'international.' Why distinguish these two different railways? There are some local railways which are much larger than these interprovincial and international railways, and why leave them out? Why not say all Canadian railways?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Because we do not want to interfere with the provinces. For instance the province of Ontario and the province of Quebec may pass Acts prohibiting provincial electric railways from operating on Sunday.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—I think it would be clearer if you made it read 'the operation of any Canadian electric railway.' I desire to call the attention of the hon. member to the fact that I think it would interfere with another road which was going into operation to-day and was going to establish branches to-morrow. For instance, the Park and Island Company is operating forty miles of railway, and intend to build forty or fifty more this summer. These extensions would not come under this Bill.

The CHAIRMAN—Is it an interprovincial road ?

Hon. Mr. FORGET—No ; it is a provincial road. Under this law we could not make extensions and run our railway. We could only run the forty miles under operation to-day. I think if it were made plain that it applied to all Canadian railways, it would cover the case.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That would be exceedingly objectionable, because it would be an interference with the rights of the province. As a rule, the street railways are under the control of the provincial legislature, and it would not be a right thing for this parliament to interfere and to say that, for instance, in the province of Ontario, where, as a rule, they forbid the running of these lines on Sunday, that they should be allowed to run. Then, as to the case of the Park and Island Railway, that has a Dominion charter, and the legislature of the province of Quebec does not prevent you running these cars on Sunday.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—But this Bill does.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Yes ; it says 'now operated.'

Hon. Mr. POWER—Subclause 2 reads as follows :

2. Nothing herein shall prevent the operation on the Lord's day for passenger traffic by any railway company incorporated by or subject to the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada of its railway where such operation is not otherwise prohibited.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Well, it is prohibited otherwise.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not think so.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Do you not think the extensions are prohibited by clause (s) ?

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think subclause (s) was intended to protect the rights of the provinces, and that the question would not be likely to arise as to a company incorporated by the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—If these words were stricken out, I think it would be much better.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That would not do at all. That would take the jurisdiction over the street railways completely out of the hands of the provinces.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—It has not been shown to me yet how we are able to operate our extension under this law.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The electric railways may be divided into two classes. Some are provincial and some federal. These that obtain their charters from the federal parliament are considered federal. I do not see that it is an interference with the provinces for those electric railways which are considered federal to be taken under this.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I think this meets the objection, so that if the hon. gentleman will allow the addition to be made it would read in this way:

Or which is operated in connection with an international ferry as part of its system unless otherwise prohibited by federal authority.

I think that would meet the case.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think it meets it too much. If you put in the word 'or,' you legalize Sunday work on any street railway in Ontario which happens to have an interprovincial bridge.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—With the permission of the House, I will withdraw my amendment and propose another one, to read as follows :

Or any line or branch regularly operated or any line to be constructed.

75½

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That is utterly impossible. We cannot interfere with the provinces.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I would ask the hon. gentleman from Toronto one question : This railway cannot be operated without a ferry. The tramway across the Soo cannot be worked without a ferry; therefore the ferry is part of the line of the electric railway system, is it not?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Part of the system.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—And, therefore, there is no occasion for any amendment

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—It is only to avoid a technical difficulty that it is needed. It is part of the system. I am quite willing to modify the matter, so that if there is any qualification or prohibition of provincal authority it will be excepted.

The CHAIRMAN—The queston is on the motion of the hon. gentleman from Belleville, that subclause (s) be amended by adding the following words after the word international ;'

Or which is operated in connection with an international ferry as part of its system unless otherwise prohibited by provincial authority.

The amendment was adopted.

On subclause (t),

(t) Work done by any person in the public service of His Majesty while acting therein under any regulation or direction of any department of the government.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Does that mean that the government has a right to make a man work on Sunday ?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—He is protected in this. It is not compulsory.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That protects the man working under the orders of the government, but does the government take the responsibility of doing any work on the Lord's day ?

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—Yes, in certain cases.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Sometimes the canals have to be kept open in the fall of the year.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is not an unavoidable work. I think we should add the words 'any unavoidable work.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We must trust to the government to make the proper regulations.

The subclause was adopted.

On subclause (x),

(x) Any work which the Board of Railway Commisisoners for Canada, having regard to the object of this Act, deem necessary to permit in connection with the freight traffic of any railway. The costs of all persons of applications to the board under this paragraph shall be borne by the applicant, and, if more than one, equally. Notice of application, in which the reasons to be relied on shall be fully set out, shall be given to the Department of Railways and Canals. In all other respects the procedure under the Railway Act, 1903, shall, so far as applicable, apply.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—There is a view held by hon. members that under the wording of this clause the authority on which the commissioners should act might be too narrow, that it might throw on them the duty of looking at the object of the Act which is the abstention from work on the Lord's day, and make that the sole point of view from which they should consider any question, and it is advisable that that should be enlarged; therefore it is proposed that that should be amended after the word 'Act' as follows:

Having regard to the objects of this Act and with the object of preventing undue and unnecessary delays, &c.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Perhaps 'unnecessary' is not qualified enough. I would suggest that that word be left out.

The CHAIRMAN—The amendment now reads 'any work which the Board of Railway Commissioners for Canada having regard for the object of this Act, and with the object of preventing any undue delay, deem necessary, &c.'

The amendment was adopted.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—What is the meaning of the expression in line twenty, 'the costs of all persons of applications to the board?'

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Supposing one party applies and another opposes, it would mean the applicant would have to pay the costs. It means the costs of all parties to the application.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—It is suggested that the words 'persons of' should be left out.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—That would not change the sense; it is better to leave it the way the Commons have left it.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—In that case it is left to the board; in this case we force the board to include all that may claim to have a right. I move that the words 'persons of' be struck out.

The amendment was adopted.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I would ask the hon. Secretary of State why the costs, where there is more than one applicant, are to be borne equally? I do not see any necessity for that. It appears to me it should either be an arrangement between the parties themselves, or, if it is to be decided by any outside tribunal, it should be left to the Board of Railway Commissioners. The interests of one party might be very much greater than the interests of another.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—This is supposed to effect two railways. If three railways are interested, they pay a proportionate share of the cost.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Suppose one railway is the Canadian Pacific Railway and the other a small branch road, why should the cost be borne equally where one company might have half a million involved, and the other only a few dollars. If any tribunal is to settle it, it should be left to the Board of Railway Commissioners to settle according to the merits of each case, or it should be left to the parties themselves to agree upon.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We cannot judge in anticipation how the costs should be distributed. The fair way would be to provide that it shall be in the discretion of the board; it is a matter that the board ought to settle.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Is not that going a little too far? The railways are the applicants and ought to pay the costs of the application. Of course if the application is resisted ineffectually, then the party who resists should be made to pay. I think there is a great deal of force in the objection of the senator from Sackville to having the costs borne equally. I think it would be much better to say that the costs shall be borne in such proportions as the board may determine, and I move that amendment.

The amendment was adopted.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—I move that after the word 'railway' in line 20, the words 'or steamship companies' be added, thus leaving it in the hands of the Board of Railway Commissioners to deal with the matter if it should be found to seriously affect the trade on the coast of British Columbia. I do not consider myself in a position to say whether this Bill will seriously affect the coasting trade of British Columbia, but I am inclined to think it will. By inserting those words there will be sufficient protection for that business.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The board really have no power or authority over steamship companies.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—Then we should give them that power. They have power to deal with freights.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Only where the boat may be used in connection with railways. The commission can only deal with tolls; it has no other authority over steamships.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—The board has power to deal with freight traffic. Probably it would be better to strike out the words 'ocean-going' in clause (l). But the hon. Secretary of State does not see fit to allow that amendment to go; therefore I bring up the question here. I thought possibly it could be worked this way. I do not think the coasting vessels of British Columbia are covered by this clause (l) as it stands now,—'ocean-going or grain carrying vessels.' I do not think vessels running from Vancouver up the coast to Skagway can be called 'ocean-going.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I thought certainly vessels running up along the coast are ocean-going. Victoria and Vancouver are practically on the Pacific ocean. I have no objection to enlarging the clause to include ocean-coasting vessels.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—As I understand it, a vessel is only ocean-going when it goes outside the three-mile limit. A vessel which runs as these vessels do, in sight of land all the way, cannot be called ocean-going.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Is not the water within three miles of the coast the ocean as much as twenty miles of it?

Hon. Mr. POWER—The hon. gentleman from Kamloops is perfectly right. Under one of the Acts with respect to shipping, there is a provision that vessels running from any port or place in Canada to another port or place in Canada, and also ports in the United States within certain limits, are coasting vessels, and the chapter divided vessels into ocean-going and coasting. This is coasting trade between Vancouver and Skagway.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I offered to include the words 'ocean-coasting.' If you include coasting vessels, you include river vessels all over the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—I move to reconsider clause (l) with a view to adding the words 'or coasting vessels.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Coasting would not do, because it applies to vessels on the St. Lawrence and on all rivers and lakes of the Dominion.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—It would not be an unreasonable proposition to say that any vessel which had been unduly delayed might be relieved from the penalties of the Act. I do not see why a line should be drawn either at the ocean-going ship which happens to be in our waters, and a lake ship which is carrying freight from the mines to the industries of Canada, or grain to the markets of the world. The whole thing is this, it is not the trade generally which is being benefited by the exemption, it is only when vessels are unduly delayed. In order that they may be relieved from the penalties of the Act, the straightforward way to deal with the matter would be to strike out those words and put in 'otherwise unduly delayed.' The effect of this clause might be that a vessel would be so delayed that she would not only lose time but be exposed to a storm. These contingencies are beyond the control of anybody. They are from causes generally which are not avoidable, and if a storm should arise which would delay a boat or other circumstances would cause delay so that she was not able to leave on time, that vessel ought to be permitted to load or unload. The clause as it stands would prevent her loading or unloading or operating. I move in amendment that all those words be struck out so that the application would be to any vessel which may be otherwise unduly delayed.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The amendment would be a departure from the Bill to a degree that I think would not be acceptable. As the Bill came to us, it was confined entirely to ocean-going vessels. We altered that to include certain vessels that ply on the upper lakes, particularly those that carry grain. A case was made out for vessels of that character by our friends from the Northwest. Now we are asked to widen that still further. I do not think it is fair to the Bill because it is taking the life out of it.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—With all respect to the hon. senator from Toronto, if we make amendments we might as well put in a clause to provide that all vessels on our inland waters should go as they please on Sunday without restriction.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—It seems to me that there is a very large industry that may be hurt badly by this. It is a well known fact that the tonnage which passes down the lakes to and from Sault Ste. Marie, bearing ore, exceeds the tonnage of all the grain that is brought down from the Northwest up to date. That is a statement which will astonish a great many people, but the figures have been published time and again and the fact is beyond question. The tonnage of the boats exceeds more than half of all the tonnage on the register on the Canadian great lakes. Therefore, to say that, under these circumstances, a traffic which is of that character may be hampered by being penalized, where one of their ships may be unduly delayed, and might by reason of that be exposed to loss is, I think, pushing the Sabbath observance very far. I do not want to interfere with the usefulness of this Bill, but the more I think of it, the more it seems to me this is a matter that ought to receive more consideration before it is decided, and I do not see any reason why, if it is refused in this case, it should be granted in the case of the grain-bearing vessels. It should be granted in one case as much as the other. Considering the large interest that may be affected by this provision, is it proper that these parties should be exposed to penalties when other interests are not. As the interest is very important it should be protected.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I move that the committee rise.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Does the hon. gentleman mean to sit again?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No. My motion is in order.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The object of the motion is to kill the Bill, and if we are going to kill it we will do so in a fair and equitable manner.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We will take the yeas and nays on it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes; I am satisfied.

The motion was lost on the following division: Contents, 3; non-contents, not taken.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

The House resumed in Committee of the Whole consideration of Bill (12) An Act respecting Sunday.

On clause 4,

4. Except in cases of emergency, it shall not be lawful for any person to permit any employee engaged in any work described in paragraph (c) of section 3 of this Act or in the work of any industrial process or in connection with transporation, to do on the Lord's day the usual work of his ordinary calling, unless such employee is given during the next six days of such week, twenty-four consecutive hours without labour.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The object sought to be attained here, no doubt in the interest of the employer, could be better served by making a slight change in the second line of this clause, striking out the word 'permit' and inserting 'require.' It seems to me that would be better than to say it is an offence for the company to permit an employee to do a day's work, if he might be perfectly willing to do it. In the 32nd line the word 'give' should be made 'allowed'—that is, the employee would be allowed twenty-four hours rest if he so desired. It might be the wish of the employee not to take the twenty-four hours' rest. You may make it an offence, in the first place, for the employer to allow a person to work without taking a twenty-four hours' rest during the seven days of the week. I have no other reason for making that suggestion outside the fact that there is no doubt we may have fully appreciated the difficulty that would arise after this Act was passed, with railway companies with station agents and operators at small country stations. I know of them by the score, where probably there are no more than two trains a day. The duties of the agent are very slight, but the company have to keep a man there. Under this clause, as it is at present, it would seem to me that a railway company would be compelled to furnish some person to take the place of the station agent for twenty-four hours every seven days. Any one who views it that way will agree with me that it would be simply impracticable to apply the law along those lines. For these reasons, I believe if these two words are changed it will be simply a matter of arrangement between the station agent and operators and the railway company, and I do not think there is any danger of the operator being abused in any way on account of the change, because we all know that operators and station agents have their organizations and make their arrangements with the company, and they will be satisfied before they conclude any arrangement. It ought to be left open to the company and employee, so far as this class of officers are concerned, to make arrangements. I therefore move to strike out in the second line the word 'permit,' and insert 'require.'

The amendment was adopted.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I move to strike out the word 'given' in the 32nd line, and to insert the word 'allowed.'

Mr. McMULLEN—I am very much afraid that this is going to work very seriously against the safety of the travelling public. This virtually leaves it in the hands of the operator himself whether he will care to work for twenty-four hours without a rest or not. We know that in some cases accidents have occurred through operators and station agents having to do without rest or sleep, and I am afraid that if you make this change you may seriously effect the safety of the public in travelling. Men will be greedy to earn all the wages they can. Operators will sit up all night if they are well paid for it, and you are running the risk of men, through greed for wages, falling asleep at their posts, which of course is a serious thing for the company.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—And which often happens.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—And it is very serious for the travelling public.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think there is any diminution of the force by this subclause; there is a night watchman as well as a day man.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Halifax)—The pretended friends of this Bill are going to kill it, and when we send it back to the other House it will be thrown out. That will be the result of all your tinkering with it and making it such an absurd measure. We are making the measure a very different one from that which the Commons sent to us.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—I must say that I have never heard of such an amendment since I have been in public life. When a clause is passed as amended the whole clause is amended. In this case we have passed an amendment by which we strike out one word; now we are going back to it to strike out another word, and I think it is a matter so important that we should have the opinion of the Speaker and of the House to ascertain if there is a precedent for such a practice.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I do not think there is any doubt about the precedent. I wish to say in answer to the hon. gentleman from Wellington that I do not think that the amendment I have suggested will endanger the travelling public nearly as much as the suggestion that was made by the promoters of this Bill. It was suggested by the promoters of this Bill, that, for the purpose of carrying out the measure, the railway companies would be required to have an extra man as a relief man, increase their staff by one in number, so that one man could be relief agent, and go from station to station along the line of railway to allow these agents to have twenty-four hours off during the week. It seems to me that there would be much more danger to life in the operation of a railway to have a change of that kind every week than to have regular operators doing the work, because their work as a rule is not laborious and the hours are not long. Consequently, they ought to be able to thoroughly perform their duties. I think it is provided in the Railway Act that railway companies are not allowed to require an engine driver or train crew to go on the road unless they have so many hours' rest. If I had my way, I would go further than that, and would say that it would be an offence for an employee to take charge of a train and run it without having had a certain number of hours' rest and sleep, because I believe 50 per cent of the accidents on railways in Canada are due to the men being overworked. Not that they are asked to be overworked by their employers, but I know in the west railway men are so anxious to make money in the fall when the weather is good that they make extra runs. When the wet weather comes it is hard to man a train and it would be a good think to legislate on the lines of not allowing men to work long hours running trains. But so far as this amendment is concerned, it rather tends to the safety of operating a road to allow station agents to perform their duties through the week. If they ask for a day off they can get it; they cannot be forced to work more than six days in the week. With these changes the Bill would be in a better shape than it is now.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—As the hon. gentleman has not thought fit to answer my question, I appeal to the chairman for his decision. He has had a good deal of experience as Speaker in the House of Assembly in Manitoba. I should prefer to have the opinion of the Speaker. When a difficulty arises in a Committee of the Whole on a question of order, the Speaker generally takes the chair and gives his decision, if it is asked for. In this case I would be satisfied if the chairman would answer my objection. There is no precedent for an amendment made by striking out one word and another amendment offered by the same member to amend the same clause by striking out another word.

The CHAIRMAN—The proceedings are perfectly in order since we are in Committee of the Whole. The first amendment was made, changing a word in the second line. I merely put that one change to the committee. We proceeded further and another change was proposed.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—By the same member.

The CHAIRMAN—In a Committee of the Whole a member may speak as often as he likes, and move as many amendments as he likes, so long as they are germane to the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—The hon. gentleman has not perhaps seized my idea. What I ask is this: Is there a precedent for an amendment being made to a clause by striking out one word and then the same member moving to strike out another word in the same clause? How can we know that these two words will not clash? I asked the chairman if he has any knowledge of a precedent for anything of the kind?

The CHAIRMAN—It will be the duty of the committee to see that the words do not clash. That, of course, is in the hands of the committee.

The amendment was agreed to, and the clause, as amended, was adopted.

On subclause 2 of clause 4,

2. This section shall not apply to any employee engaged in the work of any industrial process in which the regular day's labour of such employee is not of more than eight hours' duration.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I have an amendment to offer which I think ought to receive the serious consideration of the committee. It is not opposed to the subsection, it is an explanation, and it is also a justification of the demands of a very large section in regard to labour. I understand and thoroughly appreciate the fact that there are many industries in this country as well as elsewhere where men working only eight hours cannot be replaced off-hand. That is evident to anybody who goes through a pulp mill, a coal mine or any place where life is at risk; but in the vast majority of callings of life to-day the limit of labour is nine or ten hours, and the labouring classes of this country as well as of the world at large, are fast getting down to eight hours a day. Take masons, plasterers, painters, all the trades outside of these big works such as steel works, coal mines, railroad and steam transportation, the vast mass of the callings of the people lie along other lines where labour is not continuous, and is not required to be continuous. Labour is required to be continuous in many callings but not in all, and I would ask this honourable House to make the distinction. The clause is a general one aiming against all labour. I will read the clause as I should like to see it:—

This section shall not apply to any employee engaged in the work of any industry of continuous process, &c.

Such as sugar factories, smelting and other industries, but where the law of the land to-day recognizes eight hours or nine hours of labour, such as masons, painters, plasterers, their rights should not be overstepped by the Senate, and when the Senate makes that concession it is doing all that the manufacturers of this country exact or require. I think the amendment will meet the wishes of the labouring classes of the country and will meet the exigencies and requirements of the manufacturers.

The amendment was rejected, the mover alone voting for it.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—A voice in the wilderness crying for the workingman.

The subsection was adopted.

On clause 5,

5. It shall not be lawful for any person, on the Lord's day, to engage in any public game or contest for gain, or for any prize or reward, or to be present thereat, or to provide, engage in, or be present at any performance or public meeting at which any fee is charged, directly or indirectly, either for admission to such performance or meeting, or to any place within which the same is provided, or for any service or privilege thereat.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—I beg to move that after the word 'Sunday' in the first line of this clause the following words be added:

Except as provided in any provincial Act now or hereafter in force.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That seems to be in conformity with the principle we laid down in section 2, which I thought was wide enough to apply to all the clauses, but many persons are apprehensive that it might not be constructed as such. However, I have no objection to the amendment.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I cannot see any necessity for the amendment; the only object is to encumber the Act with a lot of verbiage.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The people of Quebec think the first clause is not broad enough. I think it is. But if it is going to gratify them and secure their co-operation in the Bill I have no objection.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think we are pursuing an admirable course to have the Bill rejected in the other House.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—There should be no desire to override provincial powers.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is a pity the government did not act on that principle in passing certain other measures.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—We are here to make laws for the Dominion and not for the provinces, and I am afraid the amendment now proposed is going to seriously effect the whole Bill, and, as it appears to me, we might just as well throw it out. This amendment will simply leave the whole question of games and everything of that kind to the local legislature of any province and they can pass whatever law they please as to entertainments, games of lacrosse, or anything else on the Lord's day.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Why not?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Why not?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I am amazed at my hon. friends saying 'why not.'

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Why should we not be allowed to play football in Quebec?

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Are we a distinct set of provinces and are we passing laws to suit the different classes, creeds and convictions of each province?

Hon. Mr. FORGET—You have no right to legislate for the provinces.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—We are here to legislate for the Dominion as a whole, and legislation of this kind is only separating the provinces instead of bringing them together.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think we are here to accept the views of the government, and if the government consents to that amendment we should not object.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman seems to forget that this is confederation and not a legislative union.

The amendment was adopted.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—I desire to move a further amendment to this clause; after the words 'meeting' in line 41, add the words 'elsewhere than in a church.'

Hon. Mr. ROSS—I am sorry to see there are no lovers of the Lord's day in this House, and the fourth commandment is ignored altogether. The leader of the House complimented us in his fine speech the other day, and said we were all Christians. We are far from Christians; we are getting to be infidels now with the legislation we are passing here to-day.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—There are a great many religious performances which are carried out in our church, even among our Protestant fellow-citizens, who have meetings in groves, revivals on Sundays. I know from my own experience of Prescott county and elsewhere, we have meetings in our cemeteries and other places outside of the church. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman from British Columbia to enlarge the motion and make it read 'all meetings except meetings for divine worship,' and that will cover everything.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—This amendment is to meet the case of divine worship.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman says the intention is to meet the case of meetings in a church for divine worship. It would not prevent a political meeting being held in a church.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN—There would be no admittance fees.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I have held public meetings in churches across the river, to oust the Tories.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is very well known that in very many churches instead of leasing the pews there is a small fee charged for those who occupy these pews. It is to meet such cases. It is very harmless, and parties are apprehensive that if the exemption were not there it would come within the provisions of the statutes. It is simply to meet the case where they charge for pews.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—This is another illustration of sectional legislation.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That prevails all over the Dominion.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—When the proposition was made in the House of Commons to permit the management of the religious services which are carried on at Grimsby park, to charge a small admission fee, the Minister of Justice stated that he was in favour of free gospel to every one, and consequently refused to exempt that from the operations of the law, and now you are providing for precisely the same thing in churches.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—What about public meetings in universities and schools?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no fee charged there.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Sometimes there is.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I think the best amendment would be to define the word 'performance' in the interpretation clause—that it shall not mean divine service.

The amendment was carried.

Hon. Mr. ROSS—There is a plot in progress to destroy the Bill, and it is being carried on successfully.

The clause as amended was adopted.

On subclause 2,

2. When any performance at which an admission fee or any other fee is so charged is provided in any building or place to which persons are conveyed for hire by the proprietors or managers of such performance or by any one acting as their agent or under their control, the charge for such conveyance shall be deemed an indirect payment of such fee within the meaning of this section.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—This clause cannot be adopted, because you are going to strike out one of our occasions for divine worship and for the sanctification not only of the Lord's day, but of a great many other days. Now this matter, and I seriously state it to the House, has been submitted to the Minister of Justice and he is quite willing to insert after 'performance' the words 'except those for divine worship.' Everything that is done in a church is a performance. It performs a cermony, and when you bring the matter before the courts they will interpret the clause not as you intended it, but as it is worded. So I hold that the amendment which was suggested by the hon. member from British Columbia should also be introduced in this clause. That ought to go in, otherwise you destroy the value of the first clause.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is a direct contradiction.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Certainly, if you allow it to go, the second clause is a direct contradiction of the first. There are other things which are exhibited in our church, but although not excursions in the accepted term, are really excursions. We have a number of pilgrimages by train or boat from Montreal, Quebec and other places to St. Anne de Beaupré, Rigaud and half a dozen shrines in the province of Quebec, and I only hope in Ontario and other provinces they will have shrines erected where people can go, even though they are charged a dollar or two for the trip. It will do them good. This Bill prevents them.

Hon. Mr. McHUGH——Subclause (a) of clause 3 provides for that.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—No. A pilgrimage is not a necessary or a customary performance in connection with divine work. It is only incidental. Only when the parish priest thinks he can get enough pilgrims together, or when the railroads or steamship companies will supply transportation at reasonable prices. So they are not customary acts of worship. They are incidental, and by this clause you prevent the people of the province of Quebec taking part in these pilgrimages. I am of the opinion that the amendment introduced by the hon. member from British Columbia to the first part of this clause should be inserted in the second part.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman is mistaken in the interpretation to be given to the second part of the clause. The first part is in regard to performances and the second to the conveyance.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—I move that the words I have mentioned be introduced in the second clause—'any performance except for divine worship.' I do not see how the House can refuse the Catholic people of the country that amendment.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Divine worship is not a performance I hope.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—No, but the Minister of Justice says he thinks the amendment is necessary or I would not stand on the floor of the Senate to propose it. When the question was put before him he said: 'Amend the Bill.'

The committee divided on the amendment, which was rejected, only four voting for it.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—They are all against divine worship.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 6,

6. It shall not be lawful for any person on the Lord's day to run, conduct, or convey by any mode of conveyance any excursion on which passengers are conveyed for hire and having for its principal or only object the carriage on that day of such passengers for amusement or pleasure and passengers so conveyed shall not be deemed to be travellers within the meaning of this Act.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—I move the same amendment to this clause that I moved to clause 5—'except as provided in any provincial Act or law now or hereafter in force.'

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Does the hon. Secretary of State accept that amendment?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In my opinion it is mere surplusage, confirming what we have already agreed to. However, if it gratifies anybody I have no objection.

The amendment was agreed to, and the clause as amended was adopted.

On clause 7,

7. It shall not be lawful for any person to advertise in any manner whatsoever any performance or other thing prohibited by this Act.
2. It shall not be lawful for any person to advertise in Canada in any manner whatsoever any performance or other thing which if given or done in Canada would be a violation of this Act.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think the same amendment should be made to this clause.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it is not required.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. senator from British Columbia ought to have some little regard for the newspapers. Why not make the same provision for them that you do for excursions? Why not say except as otherwise provided by law in the provinces?

The SPEAKER—One can advertise anything that is allowed under this Act.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 9,

9. It shall not be lawful for any person to bring into Canada for sale or distribution, or to sell or distribute within Canada, on the Lord's day any foreign newspaper or publication classified as a newspaper.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In passing the tariff and the imposition of duties, goods from England and any British colony are treated the same as if they came from foreign countries. When you speak of 'foreign newspapers' does that include English newspapers.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think not.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The legal meaning of this clause is that when a paper comes in here at six o'clock on Sunday morning from the United States or England we cannot sell or distribute it. Supposing it is a foreign paper which comes in Saturday night can it be sold on Sunday morning?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Then you are interfering with provincial rights.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Suppose we are.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Then I ask the hon. senator from British Columbia to introduce his amendment. Because in the province of Quebec most people do not consider it a crime to buy a newspaper or a glass of ginger ale on Sunday. People in small villages may not know the needs of civilization in large centres, but in Montreal thousands of people who have few of the comforts of life in their homes, go out on Sunday with their children. They want to be free to buy a stick of candy for them, or a drink of ginger ale. Places where such things are sold are allowed to be open under municipal law, and it is a great convenience to people in large communities.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman does not know perhaps that the city of Montreal has legislated in that direction by its by-laws which will remain in force under this Act.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am inclined to the opinion that the view expressed by the hon. Secretary of State is not the correct one. The language of this paragraph would shut out the English newspapers on Sunday. I would refer the hon. gentleman to the regulations of the Post Office Department. Any newspaper published outside of Canada under the law and regulations of the Post Office Department would be considered a foreign newspaper. if that be the case I do not think we ought to shut out the English papers.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is not intended to apply to them. The necessity which arises is this: In the United States they publish a Sunday edition or literature that really is not fit for a moral community to read, particularly on Sunday. It is directed against the Sunday newspapers of the United States.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am quite prepared to accept that explanation. No doubt that is the intention, but there are so many paragraphs in this Bill which we have changed, though there cannot be a doubt that the interpretation which we have given them is correct, but was never contemplated by the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—You could not call an English paper a foreign paper.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—I do not see why this should not cover Canadian as well as foreign newspapers. I read the British weekly every Sunday.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—British papers are not foreign papers.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—If a paper is immoral it should not be read at all. Why exclude good foreign papers unless you exclude all papers?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—At the third reading I shall move to have this clause struck out.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Move it now.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Look at the situation. Our hotels are crowded with people travelling through this country, and you would not allow them to buy a paper at any hotel. Is it a Sunday newspaper or a yellow journal that they are likely to look for? No. The man who is serious in his life will buy a good newspaper, something worth reading, and you are going to prevent any hotel in this country, which is the home of the traveller, from selling him a newspaper, thereby preventing the travelling public from having information on Sunday such as he has on any other day. This clause goes too far. No doubt the gentleman who drafted it had in view a deserving object. He wanted to keep the yellow journals out of Canada, but why did he not draft a clause which would attain that end without excluding our best literature? The clause provides that it shall not be lawful 'to sell or distribute within Canada.' That means that it is not lawful for the Post Office Department to bring into this country papers for distribution on Sunday. The Post Office Department is the distributing agency of this Dominion. The others are the selling agency—the poor people, the boys and girls who try to make a living in that way. You put a barrier against the Post Office Department and prevent them distributing papers as they have done for the past forty years. If the Senate will think over this matter for a few minutes they will see the advisability of limiting the effect of this clause. I am against the importation of literature which is against morals, but let us not put a limit on the literature of the day.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I desire to call the attention of the Secretary of State to the regulations of the Post Office Department.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Clause 9 which has been passed, seems to me a very reasonable and proper clause. Under clause 2 the printing of Canadian newspapers and their sale and distribution on Sunday is forbidden. I understand the hon. gentleman from Victoria to claim that foreign newspapers should be allowed to be sold and distributed on Sunday when our own newspapers cannot be sold and distributed. I am not a protectionist, but I do not think we should extend more favourable treatment to our neighbours than we do to ourselves.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If a vessel arrives from England with newspapers on Sunday, it would be an infraction of the law to take them from the steamer. If the hon. Secretary of State will turn to the Canada official 'Postal Guide,' on page 11, he will find this heading:

Foreign posts, including British and Colonial.

Then there is a long correspondence, the heading of which is:

Foreign post correspondence with the United Kingdom.

That was the impression I had when I first read it, but under the Tariff Act and under the Postal Act anything coming from England or from the United Kingdom is treated as if it came from a foreign country.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not think it would be, because it specifically names 'including English papers.'

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Oh, certainly it would. The clause includes foreign newspapers. An English newspaper is, under the law, and under the postal guide, and under the postal law treated as a foreign paper. There can be no question about it.

The amendment was lost.

On clause 12,

12. Every corporation which authorizes, directs or permits its employees to carry on any part of the business of such corporation in violation of any of the provisions of this Act shall be liable, on summary conviction before two justices of the peace, for the first offence, to a penalty not exceeding two hundred and fifty dollars and not less than fifty dollars, and for each subsequent offence to a penalty not exceeding five hundred dollars and not less than one hundred dollars, in addition to any other penalty prescribed by law for the same offence.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I beg to call attention to the language of the first line :

Every corporation which authorizes, directs or permits.

I venture to say that the word 'permits' is not the proper word to use. Permitting a thing may be done by construction, and it is a word which I think would admit of trouble being given so that those who were charged with the management of the company might have no knowledge of it whatever. I move that the word 'permit' be struck out, and the word 'requires,' inserted.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—Should it not read 'authorizes or requires ?'

Hon. Mr. POWER—It seems to me that that clause will not be worth much if you strike out the word 'permits.' It would be a very easy thing for a corporation which wished to violate this law to let an understanding trickle down through the various grades of its employees that, while the corporation did not directly authorize or direct or require, the corporation would not be at all displeased if the employees did violate the law, and, while I do not believe in unreasonable provisions, if we are to have a law which is to prevent corporations from violating the Sunday, it should be made effectual. If you strike out the word 'permits' and substitute the word 'requires' you will have gone a very long way towards rendering this Bill ineffectual when it becomes law.

Hon. Mr. KERR—The word 'authorizes' would cover all the gentleman has been speaking about. It would be a presumed authorization, but the word 'permits' means something directly operating toward the particular act that is done. I think that word should not be there, and it should be something in the nature of 'requiring,' 'demanding' or 'insisting'—direction or insistance which the employee of the company would feel called upon to do by reason of instructions which he has received. Under those circumstances, I think the objection does not apply, and that the amendment would be a proper one for the protection of the public whose business may be large and who may be harassed by reason of things which they had not contracted to do but which had been done by some inferior officer.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Under the criminal law, there is no such principle as the recognition of a person requiring another to violate the law, so that the word 'requires' would be entirely inconsistent with all our notions of criminal law, and it seems to me the other two words would be quite sufficient—authorizes and directs.

Hon. Mr. JONES—I should like to point out to the House that we are dealing with clause 12. I do not understand why a corporation should be dealt with on a different basis from an individaul. If the hon. gentleman will look at clause 11, it says that every employer who authorizes or directs will be liable to certain penalties, and then the next clause, 12, deals with corporations. I do not understand why it is in two separate clauses, except that in the case of corporations the penalties are much heavier than they are in the case of the individual ; for the life of me I cannot see why a law that is wide enough to cover the case of an individual should not have been considered wide enough to cover the case of a corporation.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—One has a soul and the other has not.

Hon. Mr. JONES—Corporations may not have souls, but they probably have consciences equal to the individual conscience. It certainly would appeal to me that if the words 'authorizes, directs and requires' be put in and 'permits' is taken out, it will still be materially stronger in the case of the corporation than in the case of the individual, and I do not see why it should be different in the wording in that regard whatever. I think the corporation should stand exactly in the same position as an individual in reference to the law in that regard.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If you strike out the word permits as suggested by the hon. gentleman from Toronto, a corporation or an employer might not authorize or direct an unlawful act to be committed upon his premises or in his establishment, but he might have a foreman acting for the employer or for the corporation who would violate the law without the permission or consent of the corporation or employer. Then there would be no penalty imposed. The word 'permits' in this clause seems to me to be the correct one for the reason I have pointed out. A corporation or an employer would not permit a thing of this kind to be done. He may not have authorized or directed it. The position taken by the hon. senator from Toronto is well taken I think. The words in the 11th and 12th clause should be the same, and the employer should not be allowed to authorize, direct or permit, if he can stop it, or unless it is done without his knowledge, any act which is unlawful under this Act of parliament.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Why not say every employer or corporation ?

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—The reason the word corporation and employer are used is that an employer may have a very small establishment and very few workmen and a capital of $500 to run the shop, and he directs the employee to do something unlawful. In that case it would be a shame to charge him half his capital for the offence. It would be too severe a penalty. A corporation generally is wealthier than an individual employer and that is the reason of the distinction.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—A corporation may be bankrupt.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Yes, and so may the individual, but, as a rule, the corporation is wealthier. I am of the opinion that the word 'permits' should remain in the clause.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—It seems to meet the views of hon. members who have spoken on the subject to have the words 'authorizes or directs' in the clause and the word 'permits' struck out. Then the corporation would stand on the same footing as the private individual as far as the information went, but it would stand at a great disadvantage in the matter of a fine. There is a good deal to be said about the difference in the penalty but we cannot correct it now.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—Having had a good deal to do with large corporations, I may say that I do not see very much objection to the word permits, because the matter must come within their knowledge before they can permit it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If the foreman permits the act and the corporation knows nothing about it, the corporation is still liable.

Hon. Mr. JONES—I take it if the word 'permits' is left in, the corporation would be liable even if they did not know about it. The condition as to the way in which the fine should be levied as between the corporation and an individual must appear reasonable.

Hon. Mr. POWER—In Nova Scotia we have one director of a corporation who has a good deal of soul.

Hon. Mr. KERR—I move that we strike out the word 'permits.'

The amendment was adopted.

The clause, as amended, was adopted.

On clause 13,

13. Nothing herein shall prevent the operation on the Lord's day for passenger traffic of any railway subject to the legislative authority of any province unless such railway is prohibited by provincial authority from so operating.

2. Nothing herein shall prevent the operation on the Lord's day for passenger traffic by any railway company incorporated by or subject to the legislative authority of the parliament of Canada of its railway where such operation is not otherwise prohibited.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Will my hon. friend be good enough to explain why the language in the first part of the clause should be different from the language in the second part ? In line 2 of section 13 the clause speaks of any railway subject to the legislative authority of any province, and in line 6 practically the same language is used, with the exception of the word railway company. It refers in one case to the operations of a railway and in the other to the operations of a railway company. This is clearly inconsistent ; the two clauses should be alike. The first purports to deal with railways under provincial jurisdiction and the second with railways under Dominion jurisdiction. It seems to me that the word company should be stricken out of the subclause, so that it may read the same as the first.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is the operation of the railway; that is a correct expression.

Hon. Mr. POWER—There were two amendments moved by hon. gentlemen in the other House and they were not worded in exactly the same way, but the meaning is perfectly clear.

The clause was adopted.

On clause 14,

14. Nothing herein shall be construed to repeal or in any way affect any provisions of any Act relating in any way to the observance of the Lord's day in force in any province in Canada when this Act is passed; and where any person violates any of the provisions of this Act, and such offence is also a violation of any other Act, the offender may be proceeded against either under the provisions of this Act or under the provisions of any other Act applicable to the offence charged.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—I beg to move that after the word 'Act' the words 'or law,' the same as in clause 2, be added. These words should also be added in line 15 and in line 17.

The amendments were agreed to.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to ask the hon. Secretary of State a question in reference to this measure. When he moved the second reading of the Bill he quoted and read an Act of Charles II., which, if my memory serves me right, he informed the House was still in force in the province of Ontario, providing for penalties for the infraction of that law, which went as far I think as the province would now go with the exception of traffic on railways. Could the hon. gentleman inform the House what the penalties were for the infraction of that law, and, if there were penalties, are they still in force, and to enforce them would it be a contravention of the constitutional Act, which provides that all penalties or crimes must be regulated by the Dominion parliament? I find the latter part of this clause says:

Any such offence is also a violation of any other Act.

That is, the offence committed under the Act to which I have referred of Charles II. Then it says, 'the offender may be proceeded against either under the provisions of this Act or under the provisions of any other Act applicable to the offence charged.' If the law as it stands upon the statute-book in Ontario imposes penalties, can they under the constitution as it at present exists, impose those penalties, or if they cannot is the intention of this law to give them the power to proceed under the criminal law of the Dominion?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—In answer to my hon. friend, I will read the clause in the Act. Although it was an Act of Charles II., it was passed in 1845 by the United Legislature of Canada, but made to apply only to Canada.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That would be two years after the union of Upper and Lower Canada?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. The penalty clause reads in this way.

Any person convicted before a justice of the peace of any act hereinbefore declared not to be lawful, upon the oath or affirmation of one or more credible witness and upon view had of the offence by the said justice himself, shall for every such offence be fined in a sum not exceeding $40 and not less than $1, together with the costs and charges of the prosecution, &c.

They may be proceeded with under this Act or under the Lord's Day Act of 1835, and in all the provinces there are laws with penalties attached to them.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—I think the word 'passed' should be erased, and the words 'comes into force' substituted. If the word 'passed' remains in the measure, the provinces would not be able to enact any law.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is no objection to that.

The amendment was adopted.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I want to point out what I think the affect of this would be. I do not think they would act under it. It gives power to the legislature of any province to enact any law they like affecting Sunday observance, which will continue to be law under this clause, if amended. That might provide for the admission of all kinds of games, poker or any other card playing within the province. I do not say they will do it. Between this and the first of March they will have the power under this to pass a provincial law which would destroy every principle and provision of this Act.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—That is what they want.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It could not affect the transportation clause or those relating to international matters.

The clause as amended was adopted.

On clause 15,

15. No action or prosecution for a violation of this Act shall be commenced after the expiration of thirty days from the time of the commission of the alleged offence.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I gave notice of my intention to amend this clause, and I therefore move that the clause be amended by inserting after the word 'commenced,' in the second line of the clause, the words 'without the leave of the Attorney General for the province in which the offence is alleged to have been committed.' It will be observed by the clause which we have been considering and just approved of in committee, that there are some very heavy penalties to be imposed upon corporations and companies of various kinds. Necessarily these penalties are large in order to ensure the strict enforcement of the Act. At the same time the Acts which are prohibited are of such a varied character and may be done and committed under such circumstances as to expose parties to unnecessary prosecutions amounting to persecution. Under the circumstances, I take it that this is a proper case in which to provide some protection for the parties accused, so that they may not be unfairly harassed and annoyed, and so in point of fact it shall only be where there is a just cause or where a prima facie case can be made for a just cause that the prosecution can be undertaken at all. The offences in some cases may be committed on the Pacific coast, in others on the Atlantic coast, or at any point between, and therefore it is necessary, as these offences may be committed over such a wide extent of country, that some person who is at all events within reasonable reach of the informer, or the person who may be accused, may be available, so that there may be a reasonable way of ascertaining whether a case has been made out for prosecution. There is no wish, I am sure, on the part of any one to impose unreasonable restrictions or to expose people to annoyance. Under these circumstances, I move this amendment for the protection of an offender, for the vindication of the law and for the protection of the courts in not having the courts occupied in hearing vexatious and malicious complaints.

In selecting the Attorney General of the province in which the offence is committed as the one who should be satisfied, I have done so in view of the fact that, in every province the Attorney General is the one charged with seeing to the administration of justice, and the enforcement of the law, and therefore it is to him naturally and reasonably and properly that the application should be made. In the discharge of his duty, he can see that protection is given both to the accused, where there is not a proper case made out, and to the complainant wherever a proper case can be shown to justify proceedings. This is not a new policy. It is a policy which has been adopted by parliament in many instances, too numerous in fact to mention. It has been adopted in every variety of case where penal actions are to be brought. I shall recall some of the instances in which this has been done. In the criminal code various penalties are imposed for various offences. Proceedings for these, however, cannot be taken without the permission of some person. In the case of a penalty for disclosing official secrets, the proceedings cannot be taken without the consent of the Attorney General of Canada, and the same in the case of judicial corruption. In the case of unseaworthy ships being sent to sea, the consent of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries must be obtained; in the case of trustees for fraudulently disposing of money, the consent of the Attorney General must be obtained. In the case of trial of young persons of tender years, in some cases the consent of the Attorney General of the province must also be obtained. In our own experience here quite recently, in another class of cases under the Railway Act, many penalties were imposed upon companies guilty of neglect of duty and for violations of the law in various ways. In these cases the restrictions was put on the penalty clause that no prosecution shall be had against the company under this Act for any penalty exceeding $100 without the consent of the Board of Railway Commissioners first being had and obtained. So there is uniformity as to the person to be satisfied or the manner in which the application shall be made to him, but in all these cases—I might say almost hundreds of other cases, the variety has been so extensive—they have varied in form and in the personality of the officer whose consent shall be given or whose leave shall be obtained. Under these circumstances, it seemed to me that it was reasonable and proper where penalties are imposed such as we have in clause 12, penalties to the extent of $250 and so on, that this protection should be thrown around the company. That the consent of the proper law officer of the province in which the act is committed, who would be bound to see the nature of the prosecution and charged with the responsibility of seeing that it was conducted properly, should be obtained. It is reasonable that the parties should have, on the one hand, that protection, and that it should be clearly established that the prosecution was bona fide. I need not refer to the fact that in all informations on behalf of the Crown respecting property or the collection of forfeitures, the action can only be instituted with the leave of the Attorney General. It seemed to me, under these circumstances, that it would be proper that this protection should be given to the parties, and that some qualified person should see that there was a prima facie case made out for the prosecution.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD—Does the amendment now offered apply to all offences under this Act ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Yes, I propose to do so, but if the hon. gentleman desires to limit it, I will consider that. I think, however, it should apply to all offences under the Act.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD—The cases cited by the hon. gentleman from Toronto to my mind have no relevancy to the Bill before us. I can cite many cases. There is nothing to prevent people coming into this country from the United States committing offences, and continuing to commit them in many cases for three or four days before you would have an opportunity to notify the Attorney General. By this amendment, you allow such people to enter the country and violate this law, while the authorities in the district where the offence is committed are powerless to do anything until they communicate with the Attorney General, who, in many instances, might be 400 or 500 miles away from the place. This is the climax of the inconsistencies of this legislation. It would seem to me that the government supporters in this House have diligently sought to kill the Bill, and now they put the cap sheaf on.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The adoption of this amendment will result in no prosecutions at all.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—We are passing a law to impose penalties for violations of Sunday observance, leaving to the provinces such rights as they have at present. The proposition is to obtain leave from the Attorney General in each province where violations occur before any action can be entered against the offender. To ascertain how such a regulation would work, we have only to recall how the anti-alien law has been enforced. Under that law no prosecution could be undertaken except with the consent of the Attorney General of the province. How many prosecutions have taken place under that law ? Often we see in the newspapers charges made by individuals that aliens have been imported from the United States to work in our factories, yet seldom has prosecution taken place. If each case of violation under this law must be brought before the Attorney General, and his sanction obtained for entering proceedings, no prosecution will take place. As my hon. friend from New Brunswick has stated, it is the climax of the destruction of the whole principle of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Under the alien labour law, the application was to be made to the Attorney General of Canada, not to the Attorney General of the province.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Perhaps the hon. gentleman is right.

Hon. Mr. POWER—As the clause stands, the prosecution must be begun within 30 days from the commission of the alleged offence. Now 30 days is a very short time.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—It is too long.

Hon. Mr. POWER—When you have to go perhaps from a distant part of the province to have a consultation or have to correspond with the Attorney General for the purpose of getting his consent to initiate proceedings, then the limitation of 30 days is simply absurd. If my hon. friend's amendment carries, in order to put it in a reasonable form, I move in amendment to the amendment that 60 days be inserted in lieu of 30 days.

The CHAIRMAN—That is not an amendment to an amendment. It amends a separate part of the clause which the other amendment does not touch at all.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD—You give the offender a little longer time to get out of the country.

Hon. Mr. POWER—No, not at all. I say if the amendment proposed by the hon. senator from Toronto passes without any extension of the period for prosecution, it will be almost impossible to prosecute, because the thirty days will have expired before the Attorney General will have been got in motion.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD—And the offender will have got out of the country.

Hon. Mr. POWER—Is the hon. senator from Toronto willing to accept my amendment ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I have no objection.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Every single clause of this Bill that in any way infringes upon provincial rights has been amended. A rider has been added providing virtually that in all cases where provincial laws now exist, or may afterwards be brought into force shall take precedence over any provision of this Act. Now, in the end, we are asked to tack on another amendment declaring that when offences are committed no action can be brought until such time as the consent of the Attorney General of the province where the offence has been committed is secured in favour of that prosecution. I cannot understand why we are proceeding in the direction of making everything subject, not only to the laws of the provinces, but to the whims of the Attorney General of those provinces ? If an Attorney General chooses to refuse to grant permission to take proceedings against an offender, you cannot do anything. Take any case occurring along our border, where a violation of this law takes place. You may witness the violation of the Act, but you can do nothing. The offender can go scot-free. Why ? You have to get the consent of the Attorney General first before you can touch him. It is nothing short of a farce to pass such a law at all. You had better wipe the whole thing out. The people of this country will laugh at us if we put such a provision on the statute-book of this country. It is a most absurd proposition, and I cannot understand how any man could think of adding such a clause to the Act.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I was perfectly correct as to the authority to whom application should be made to prosecute under the alien labour law, and the hon. senator from Belleville also is right, because a subsequent Bill changed it. There are provisions now under which the Attorney General for the province and the Attorney General of the Dominion can both give their consent.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I entirely agree with what has been said by my hon. friend from New Brunswick (Hon. Mr. Baird) and by the last speaker, that if an amendment of this kind is adopted it will practically destroy the usefulness and effect of this Bill entirely.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—The time for commencing prosecution, 30 days, appears to me to put a very short limit upon the power of any one to enforce this Act, in his attempts to puinsh the offender. My own opinion is that slight offences against this law will not be prosecuted. The practical operation of the law will be to let trifling offences have the go by, and it will only be when some serious offence is committed against this law that it will be enforced at all by anybody. The hon. gentleman who moved this amendment seemed to have based the amendment upon the assumption that there was a class of people somewhere in Canada who would take a delight in putting this law in force for every trifling offence which might be committed against it. That this law will be administered not in the sense of trying to administer justice, but it would be used as a sort of weapon for persecuting different classes of people in the country, and that every trifling offence will be taken up and the offender persecuted to the extreme limit of the law. My own belief is that there is not the slightest reason for assuming that anything of that kind would be done. So far as I have had experience in the past, it is not the offender against Sunday laws that needs to be protected or for whom we should have particular concern in criticising the provisions of this Act. The difficulty with all such legislation in the past, and the difficulty of getting such legislation enforced, is to find any person willing to make a complaint and to put the law in motion. It must be remembered there is no public prosecutor. There is no particular person whose duty it is to see that the law is enforced. It depends upon the action of private individuals who have no interest in it except to see a reasonably fair observance of the Sabbath day, and it appears to me that in the general administration of this law any trifling offence which may be committed, and which might be punished under this law, will be allowed to pass unnoticed. It will only be when some glaring offence against the provisions of this law is committed that it will be enforced at all. In the first place, in limiting the period with which an action may be commenced to 30 days, you give a man who commits any serious offence which is punishable by one of the larger fines under the law, an opportunity to get away. All he has to do is to step across the line, remain there for 30 days, come back and then he cannot be touched.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—No, that is not so.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Once the warrant is issued it remains in force until it is executed.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—If you issue a summons and the man comes back in a year or so he can be prosecuted ?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—Yes.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—Then I was wrong. I thought if he kept away for 30 days he would escape. So far as that point is concerned, I quite admit there is no force in my objection, but the strongest objection, in my opinion, to the amendment which has been proposed is that you impose upon private individuals, upon those who desire to see the Sabbath observed reasonably in accordance with the provisions of this Act, the additional duty, when an offence is committed, of having it properly presented to the Attorney General, and my own idea would be that it would involve a trip to the Capital or wherever the Attorney General resided, and a formal leave obtained to proceed against the guilty party. In my belief it would be very difficult, and I do not think there would be any prosecutions under the Act if such a provision as that were inserted, and for my part I must certainly vote against it.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—The hon. gentleman from Westmoreland admits that there are two classes of offences under this Act that may be reviewed from a different point of view. He speaks of one as a serious offence, and another as a petty offence. He appears to admit that there is a warrant for more care and that the consent and signature of the Attorney General would be necessary in the more serious offences. As to the petty offences, he believes this Act will practically be nullified if this amendment passes. I want to draw the attention of hon. gentleman to the fact that the petty offences of which he speaks are, to-day, all covered by the provincial Acts in force throughout the Dominion of Canada. I venture to think that there is hardly one of these offences covered by this Act that is not already an offence under the provincial Act, and I would appeal to those gentlemen from New Brunswick, Nova Scotia and Prince Edward Island, as to whether absolute peace and harmony does not reign through those provinces, consequently there is a provincial law which safeguards all the provinces against any desecration of the Lord's day for all petty offences such as those referred to by the hon. gentlemen and which can be reached by those provincial laws. It was said when this very Bill was presented to parliament, that it was not to be an Act of oppression but an Act of liberty; that it was to provide for a day of rest. What is the main principle underlying this legislation, if not to allow a labourer a right to rest on the 7th day, and what is the protection that is given him? It is the protection against large corporations in most cases. Corporations are without souls. It is because the soul of a corporation is in a board of directors that only meets occasionally. It is not proper that when this law which will have to regulate railways, transportation companies and large corporations, is violated, the Attorney General of the province should be asked to intervene and to help in the execution and maintenance of this law. I think it is but proper that in all important breaches of this law and in a glaring breach of the principle of ths law, that the Attorney General of each province should be asked to intervene and lend his strong arm towards the enforcement of this law. As to the petty offences he says it will be ineffective. I repeat, that at present there is hardly a petty offence that is not amply covered by the legislation of all the provinces so that what we want is a law that will provide a day of rest; not a law which will permit of a persecution of a man by his neighbours, not that close surveillance of a citizen of this country by any man who thinks he may have violated in some principle this very exceptional law that makes a general prohibition. As has been stated elsewhere, this is a law of liberty and not a law of oppression, and I believe, therefore, that this is a very good amendment and I intend to vote for it.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Under these Acts of the provincial legislature to which the hon. gentleman has referred, they are not required now to get the authority of the Attorney General before instituting a prosecution?

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—No.

Mr. McMULLEN—This will oblige us to do it, and why should we be obliged to do it? Let me give an instance: If the province of Quebec has not a law at the present day against prize fighting. I do not know whether they have or not.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—We have.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Supposing a party from the United States comes across for the purpose of holding a prize fight on Sunday, and it is held on our side of the border, a constable cannot arrest any of them unless under the local law. You have first to send to the Attorney General of Quebec to take proceedings against those men before you can arrest them.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—You would not proceed under the Sunday Bill with reference to a prize fight.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Allow me to correct my hon. friend, smart and clever as he is. The clause says:

It shall not be lawful for any person on the Lord's day to engage in any public game or contest for gain or for any prize or award.

Pugilists usually fight for prizes or rewards, so that it certainly would come under this very same Act, if they had not the law in the province of Quebec against prize fighting.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The offence, happily, is a very much more serious one than any contemplated by this Bill.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Halifax)—The hon. Speaker has spoken about this amendment, and boasted that it would be a law of liberty. Pass this amendment and you can do whatever you like on Sunday, and nobody will be punished. I was surprised when my hon. friend the Secretary of State did not attempt to keep his followers in some line, and I regretted it very much. He might have said to them, 'this is the Bill that the government sent us and we are bound to carry it through.' But instead of that, most ridiculous amendments have been made, so that when the Bill will go back to the other House it will scarcely be recognized. It puts me in mind of a story that I think the House will be the better of listening to, because we are all getting dull and stupid. We have down at South Sydney what they call coal trimmers, those who load coal in the vessels, and among them was an Irishman of the name of Paddy Cooke, and he was a little lame, and like a good man he went to mass on Sunday morning, and a rascal of a boy up in the gallery spit some tobacco on his face. He got up with his stick and flourished it at the boy, and the priest said,

'Kneel down, Paddy, kneel down.' 'Kneel down, the devil; why don't you keep your folks in better order.' I would ask why does not the leader of the House keep his men in better order? With this amendment carried, the Bill is dead—dead as Julius Caesar.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Is the 60 days' amendment accepted by the hon. gentleman from Toronto?

The CHAIRMAN—Yes.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Any honourable senator who has had experience in the criminal court will understand that the extension to 60 days is altogether unreasonable. All prosecutions involving penalties by punishment, terms in the penitentiary and in the jail are not tolerated in our courts, and the judges will only accept with a great deal of circumspection and hesitancy a complaint that is laid 30 days after the commission of a crime. Complaint should be lodged as soon as possible, and why? Because by holding off the complaint for 60 days the offender is often left without his resources of defence, his witnesses have gone, he is not able to stand up against the Crown and private prosecutor, who has kept the complaint in his pigeon hole, and when the charge is made the prisoner has no means of defence. I think 30 days is quite reasonable, and I lodge my protest against the amendment as being unjust.

The committee divided on the amendment, which was carried on the following division:

Contents, 32; non-contents, 19.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—I draw the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to the fact that clauses 5 and 6 have been amended by adding the exception in favour of the provincial Acts at present in force or to come in force. In order to harmonize clause 2 with 5 and 6, I should suggest that we amend clause 2.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—I propose to move to strike out clause 2.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I move the following as an additional clause:—

Notwithstanding anything herein contained, whoever conscientiously and habitually observes the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath and actually refrains from work and labour on that day, shall not be subject to prosecution for performing work or labour on the first day of the week, provided that such work or labour does not disturb other persons in the observance of the first day of the week as holy time, and that the place where the same is performed is not open for traffic on that day.

I do not intend to make any extended observations on this subject. The clause is moved in a spirit of forbearance and consideration which all majorities in this country extend towards minorities. This is substantially the clause which was introduced in the House of Commons on the report of the special committee to whom the Bill was then referred, but although it was subsequently defeated there, I think it is worthy of being presented to them again for reconsideration. The Senate will only be doing itself justice and credit by adopting this clause and letting it be known that there is that spirit of toleration and conciliation to be found in the Senate.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Except on the school question.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—We are not considering Sunday as a religious day, but as a day of rest, and, under these circumstances, what we are providing is that where the day of rest which we have selected is not the one which others who from conscientious motives have been educated to celebrate as a holy day, and where there is one of the other days which stands in that position, it is only just and fair to the minority representing in this country some twenty or twenty-five thousand persons, that they should have the right to work six days of the week. If they observe conscientiously the seventh day they should be entitled to do their work on the day which we have set apart as a day of rest, but in doing that it must be done in such a way as not to interfere with the observance of Sunday as a national day of rest, nor with the conscientious scruples of others. The work they do must not be in a public place, nor must the shop they do it in be open to the public. With those qualifications and restrictions I submit the resolution to the House.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—It is asking too much of the House and country to adopt such a clause. We have Jews, Seventh-day Adventists, Infidels and others who have the same freedom under our laws as the larger body of Christians, and surely if the law is good enough for the Christian, it should be good enough for them. They are perfectly free in this country; they are not hated and slaughtered as they are in other parts of the world, and they should be grateful for the measure of freedom they enjoy in this country without demanding special privileges. We do not interfere with them? They can keep the seventh day but they must respect Sunday, because we are in the majority and the majority always rule. The vast majority of this country are Christians, and the Jews and other denominations who are not Christians, must respect the will of the majority. It is a most outrageous thing to ask the House to adopt such an amendment and I hope it will be rejected.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman wants the will of the majority to be respected. There is one other thing that should be respected in this country and that is the consciences of the minority.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—They are perfectly free.

The SPEAKER—They are not free to work on Saturday if their conscience tell them they should rest. My hon. friend would force them to rest on the following day as well, so that he thinks in the fight for life it is fair to force a man to rest two days while he himself would enjoy the advantage of being compelled to rest only one day. In this Christian country, we should apply Christian principles to those who do not profess our principles and treat them according to the golden rule, doing unto them as we would like them to do to us.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am very glad to hear that expression of opinion from the hon. member. Next time the Manitoba school question comes up in this House we will engage him to give us the golden rule also—to give to the minority in the western provinces the rights guaranteed to them under the constitution.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That was a political dodge, and so is this.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I suppose the hon. gentleman will be animated by the same spirit and do the same justice to our fellow-citizens in that part of Canada as to the Jews. I am for the amendment.

The SPEAKER—This is not the time or occasion to discuss the school question. When the proper times comes I shall be ready to discuss the question with the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—May I ask the hon. Secretary of State whether he, on behalf of the government, accepts this amendment?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The government were divided on this question. It was not in the original Bill. It was suggested in a special committee to which the Bill was referred, and when it came back to the House there was a division among the members of the government. They did not feel bound to vote together on the question.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—As the government have no policy, what will the hon. Secretary of State do?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I shall vote for the amendment.

Hon. Mr. McGREGOR—Personally, I am in favour of respecting everybody's conscience, but this amendment would be useless. We do not want hurried legislation. We know that the same amendment was moved in the House of Commons and defeated there by a large majority. If it is adopted here now it will be thrown out in the Commons again. It is our duty to remain here while there is work to be done, but there is no use in loosing time when we can accomplish nothing. Therefore, while I respect the conscientious convictions of all, I shall, under the circumstances, vote against the amendment.

The committee divided upon the amendment, which was rejected.

Contents, 18; non-contents, 24.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I ask a reconsideration of the first clause, for the purpose of having clause (g) amended by striking out the word 'public.' It would only be misleading to leave that word in the clause.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Does that mean that you wish to include any Act whether public or private ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Any Act of a province. For instance, the incorporation of the city of Montreal was by Act of parliament. The interpretation has been put on that Act that it is a private Act. I want to cover any case of that kind.

The amendment was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—I move that the following words be struck out of clause 2 : 'Regarding matters coming within the classes of subjects enumerated in section 92 of the British North America Act, 1867.' I do this because my amendments having been adopted in clauses 5 and 6, I want to bring clause 2 in harmony with them, so that there may be as little ambiguity as possible in this Act.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I hope the hon. Secretary of State will put his foot down and prevent the mutilation of this Bill. It will not be worth anything the way it has been amended.

The amendment was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I ask permission to have subclause (l) of clause 3 reconsidered. I move that this clause be amended by striking out the words 'ocean-going' in line 32.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Better strike out the whole Bill.

Hon. Mr. ROSS—How long will this farce continue ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—So that any vessel which would be unduly delayed may be relieved from the penalty of the Act, and may have the privilege of loading and unloading. It would include the ocean-going vessels and it would include the grain-bearing vessels, and include vessels bearing ore and other cargo. I made a statement here before dinner this afternoon, that more than half of all the tonnage under the British flag on the Canadian registrar now running on the lakes supplied ores and merchandise to the Sault industries, and there is as much reason for them to look for and expect the protection which this clause would give as there would be to any fleet of ships in the world. Instead of making difficulty about the matter I think we should encourage an enterprise of that kind, and see that when a vessel is unduly delayed it should not be exposed to the penalties here provided under this Bill, but should be at liberty to take advantage of the time, not to remain storm-bound and winter-bound, as they might be. I hope the hon. Secretary of State and the Senate will give the same right to ore-bearing vessels as has been given to grain-bearing vessels.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We have already discussed that clause and widened it to a greater latitude than it was originally as it came to us. Originally it read 'loading, unloading and operating any ocean-going vessel.' An appeal was made to us by the hon. gentleman from Prince Albert, in which he stated that it was very important that the grain coming down from Port Arthur and Fort William in September and October should also be provided for. As the grain trade was limited to a comparatively short period in the year, the Senate agreed to allow grain-bearing vessels to be included. We added the words grain-carrying vessel. That was agreed to in the afternoon by a considerable majority. The proposition of the hon. gentleman from Toronto was submitted and voted down. Having settled that, it would be exceedingly imprudent to reconsider that. If you open the door and exempt ore-bearing vessels, you give it to all vessels. The Bill is pretty well destroyed now. Do let us stop the sham and get through.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That argument is very good and sounds very nice, but why should our own trade and business be restricted any more than that of the ocean-going vessels ? I have already pointed out that this Bill is of an exceptional character, and that one clause is contradictory of the other. It has been amended and mutilated to such an extent that it is of very little use.

Hon. Mr. WOOD—I should like to point out before the amendment is adopted, that we are, in my opinion, altering the whole character and intention of this clause. As I understand the clause, it was at first intended to apply simply to ocean-going steamers which had a schedule time for sailing, and if such ocean-going steamers were unduly delayed they were allowed to work on Sunday in order to sail at the time fixed in the schedule. That first clause was simply intended to apply to that one class of business. Then, so far as the arguments of my hon. friend from Toronto go about vessels being unduly delayed and being in danger of being frozen in or something of that kind, it is provided for in the next part of the section, 'or any vessel.' That applies to any vessel, either ocean-going vessel or a vessel on the lake or anywhere else—any vessel which would otherwise be in imminent danger of being stopped by the close of navigation. In such cases they can work on Sunday according to the Bill as it was originally framed. So far as the grain trade and coal trade, and trade in ore on the lakes are concerned which passes through Sault Ste. Marie canal, that is provided for in the next clause of the section. 'Loading before seven in the morning and after eight in the afternoon can be carried on after the 15th September.' That is in the fall of the year when the rush comes on, and provision is made to allow vessels to work before seven in the morning and after eight in the afternoon on Sunday. So far as my judgment goes, that is giving a pretty wide latitude, and I think is making all the provision necessary to meet the requirements of the trade in that direction. I would very much prefer to see the clause remain as it came from the House of Commons. I did not make any objection before, but I think now we are pressing it a little too far.

The committee divided on the amendment, which was carried on the following division :

Contents, 19 ; non-contents, 17.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—I think there is a doubt about the division.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—No, there is no doubt about it.

The CHAIRMAN—The amendment is carried by a majority of two. We have taken a vote once, and taken it accurately, and that is an end of it. If hon. gentlemen come in after the question is put, they cannot be counted in the vote.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Mr. Chairman, there is a dispute as to the count.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Oh, no ; any hon. gentleman can make a statement, but that does not constitute a dispute. When the third reading is moved the feeling of the House can be tested.

The clause, as amended, was adopted.

The CHAIRMAN—As a rule, the title of a Bill is amended at the third reading, and not in committee of the whole.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. BAIRD—How will this affect the laws in New Brunswick and the other provinces ? You refer to the Lord's day and call it 'Sunday.' In all the Acts of the local legislatures it is called 'the Lord's day.'

Hon. Mr. WATSON—It is commonly called Sunday.

Hon. Mr. DANDURAND—It may now be logical.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I should like to hear the hon. speaker analyse it and point out the logical character of the Bill when we have more time, but not just now, because it would take too long. Does my hon. friend know that about three-fifths of the carrying trade of the lakes is from the Soo at the present moment, and that it exceeds altogether the grain trade? Is that business of no importance to the manufacturing establishments and the industries of that country ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—They have to submit to a Sunday law.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am as strongly in favour of a Sunday observance law as any one can be, and I am only dealing with this in what I consider to be a spirit of fair-play. You give to one class of carriers a right and privilege that you deny to others, and the parties to whom the denial is made, are our own industries in this country. That is the Bill as it stands at present. If you will propose a clause to prevent all work on the Lord's day I will vote for it with all my heart, I do not care what it is, let it apply to every one, but this sectional mode of legislation is not creditable to this country.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Will the hon. gentleman support the Bill as it came from the House of Commons and limit it to ocean-going vessels ?

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—No, certainly not.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I should like to know if our lumber trade is not as important as the ore trade ? If you open it to the ore trade, would you not open it to the lumber trade ?

Hon. Mr. KERR—I am not restricting it. I say any vessel.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is only when it unduly interferes with the business.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière)—This is only in exceptional cases that a ship would be allowed to unload on Sunday, when it is delayed by stress of weather or is in immediate danger of being lost, or in the very end of the season. On such occasions, surely you would not allow a ship to be in immediate danger to be perhaps lost if they were not permitted to unload their cargo in port on Sunday ? We know that shipping is carried on up to the last day of season. We hear of wrecks at the end of the season. We all know that at certain times of the year you cannot get insurance on steamers. The insurance ends about the 15th October. Therefore, I think it is absolutely necessary to allow the ships to unload their cargo whenever they can, knowing that those lakes are dangerous to navigate late in the year. I think, in fairness, any vessel should have this right at that time of the year.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG, from the committee, reported the Bill with amendments.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I think it would facilitate business at this period if we concurred in the amendments to-night, and had the Bill reprinted with the amendments for the third reading to-morrow.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I object to the amendments being concurred in to-night, for the reason that I propose to make a motion not concurring in some of the amendments which have been made to the Bill, and I frankly admit that I am not doing that with the expectation of carrying the motion, but I desire to have upon the records of parliament the votes of the senators upon the different points to which I have referred.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Would my hon. friend not adopt the suggestion of moving them on the third reading.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I would have to give notice.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No notice is required of an amendment to a public Bill, and if the amendments are not now concurred in it will throw us over one day. All these suggestions can be made on the third reading.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Why should we be asked to move so rapidly in an important matter of this kind ? We may as well consider the measure deliberately, if it is only for the pleasure of keeping some of the Commoners here, to let them know that the Senate has an existence and that it is necessary to recognize their rights ?

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—There is no doubt that this is a historic measure which effects the whole country, and we should not proceed hurriedly.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—To meet the wishes of the hon. Secretary of State and others, if it is understood that these amendments can be moved on the third reading without notice, I have no objection to the concurrence now.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That will be understood.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned until eleven o'clock to-morrow.

THE SENATE

OTTAWA, Wednesday, July 11, 1906.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Eleven o'clock a.m.

Prayers and routine proceedings.

THE PAY OF THE MILITIA AND USE OF ROSS RIFLE.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I would direct the attention of the leader of this House to the answer to a communication which he gave me yesterday from the Department of Militia, and to the following extract from the regulations for the Canadian militia respecting pay and allowances. I had the hon. gentleman's attention a few days ago called to the fact that a certain militia corps had not received their pay, and asked why. Article 255 of the regulations provides :—

The allowance for rural corps shall be paid at the termination of the annual training, or in case of a corps not having trained, at the close of the financial year.

That is the regulation in force to-day. I hope the Department of Militia will not forget that the regulations are binding on them. I would also call the attention of the government to this other fact: News has just been received from England that the Bisley team has not found the Ross rifle a success, and has been obliged, after practicing with the Ross rifle for ten days, to return to the Lee-Enfield rifle for the match. In the face of those facts, I would suggest to the minister the propriety of suspending any further action with regard to that rifle until convinced by a thorough examination of its efficiency, because it would not be a credit to our militia if they were armed with a rifle which they cannot use advantageously compared with the Lee-Enfield rifle.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will be glad to call the attention of the Minister of Militia to the comment the hon. gentleman has made upon the Ross rifle. My impression is that we have made a contract for a certain number of years. I do not know when the time will expire. I thought it was originally for four or five years only. However, I shall bring the matter before the Minister of Militia and probably he will have definite information on the subject also. In reference to the payment of the officers, would my hon. friend send me a reference to the law, so that I can be in possession of it, because my memory is not quite equal to retaining all these facts.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Regarding the Ross Rifle Company, there is a clause in the contract which says that the government has a right to compel the adoption of any improvement that may be useful, and if defects are discovered by the experiments that have been made upon the rifle, perhaps it would be easy to get the improvements made before the rifle is distributed among the militia.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

LORD'S DAY BILL.

THIRD READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the third reading of Bill (12) An Act respecting the Lord's Day : He said :

When we rose last evening, the subject of proposing changes in the Bill at the third reading was discussed. I should like to know whether my hon. friend from Belleville is going to follow up the notice he gave to the House or whether we will be permitted to have the Bill read the third time now.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I may inform the hon. Secretary of State that, after considering the matter, I have come to the conclusion not to trouble the House with any amendments. The Bill has been so completely emasculated, murdered and butchered that I question very much whether the promoters of the Bill or the government which introduced it, knows what it means or what it contains. I am convinced that it will not accomplish the object that the promoters of the Bill and the government had in view when they introduced it. I am not surprised that there is no unity of opinion among the government supporters on this question, when they find the ministers themselves voting against each other, not only in the Commons, but also in this House. It is not to be wondered at, therefore, that the ardent supporters of the administration, who follow them on most occasions so blindly, should be all at sea at the present moment, and that they should have run upon the rocks is not a matter of surprise. If they are wrecked, I shall be—I was going to say very glad of it, but perhaps that would be uncharitable. I am quite satisfied that the Bill as it has been amended meets the approval of my French friend opposite who is looking at me so earnestly just now, but to those who take a different view, it has gone quite far enough, indeed a little too far. We had the spectacle of the Prime Minister and one of his cabinet voting for certain amendments, while the Minister of Justice, the Minister of Customs and one or two others voted the other way. We had the spectacle here yesterday of the hon. Secretary of State on one of the amendments which were proposed voting one way and his colleague sitting to his right voting the other way; so that we have an unharmonious ministry at the present time. They scarcely know their own opinions upon any question. They are guided and actuated, as has been evidenced in this instance, by popular clamour from one standpoint on one side of the country and from another standpoint on another side. Any amendment I might move I am quite sure would be voted down, and I am not so sure that my amendment would improve the measure even if carried, because no one or two amendments that I could make would attain the object of those who desire the Sabbath to be kept in a better manner than it is at present. I shall watch very closely, as I think most people will, the working of this Bill when it becomes law. My own view is that it is not worth a snap of the finger. It would have been much better to have left the provinces to deal with the matter. However, when the government takes the responsibility of the action they must take the responsibility of the results which may follow from that action.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—At the last moment, last evening, a change was made in the interpretation clause. My attention has just been called to the fact that under a misconception some one made the statement that 'Provincial Act' means any public Act, and the word 'public' was struck out on the assurance that if we did not strike it out it might affect the charter of the city of Montreal. I am credibly informed that that was entirely erroneous, and that the effect of leaving the clause as it is now would make it refer to all the private Acts in all the provinces as well as the public Acts, which would be improper and misleading.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman will remember that I called attention to that fact at the time.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Before the motion is put, I should like to make an observation or two with reference to the Bill as it is now presented for third reading. It is legitimate comment, to which my hon. friends on the opposite side certainly cannot take exception, to say that the Bill, in the language of my hon. friend the Secretary of State, who introduced it yesterday, is a mass of inconsistencies; but I doubt very much if the Bill portrays the signs of inconsistency to as large an extent as the government itself has done in introducing this measure, and bringing it to its present stage. My hon. friend from Victoria, Nova Scotia (Hon. Mr. Ross), yesterday made some reference to scriptural warrant for the introduction of this Bill, as did also my hon. friend from North Wellington (Hon. Mr. McMullen). A very familiar text occurred to my mind when the Bill was first introduced by the present government in the month of April last. I recalled the words used by Jehu after he was appointed to succeed Ahab as king of Israel and as he was about to enter upon the slaughter of the prophets of Baal: 'Come and see my zeal for the Lord.' The government, unquestionably, in assuring the Lord's Day Alliance of their intention as to the Bill approached it in the spirit of Jehu as in the scriptural quotation I have referred to. I can well fancy the Prime Minister saying to the Lord's Day Alliance when this Bill was presented, 'Come with me and see my zeal for the Lord in passing this measure.' It was introduced in the House of Commons with all the sumptuary features which characterized it at that stage. We find in the address of His Excellency the Governor General an assurance that the government would submit to parliament during the present session a Bill for the better observance of the Lord's day. Notwithstanding the introduction of that Bill at a very early stage, and the fact that a special committee was appointed by the House of Commons that took evidence of all parties, both representing the alliance and representing the various interests which might possibly come in conflict with the Bill, yet we find it deferred until the dying hours of the session. There was a mass of evidence taken with reference to this Bill in the House of Commons, and yet the Senate was not put in possession of the important evidence elicited from the various parties examined before that committee as to what this Bill should be. I charge the government, without hesitation, and I think the supporters of the government must freely admit there are grounds for it, that this Bill from the time of its introduction down to the present moment has been jockeyed by the government for the purpose of riding it to a fall, every step which has been taken indicated the intention of the government to withhold from the Senate the information which was desirable and the opportunity which was required to obtain all that information which the Senate should have been placed in possession of before giving that mature consideration to an important measure of this kind which it required and which the public demanded from parliament.

I am not taking any exception to the course which was pursued here yesterday with reference to the Bill. I think it would be contrary to fact to say that the Senate did not give consideration to it, but one cannot fail to be impressed with the approach to recklessness shown by the government supporters in dealing with this measure. That recklessness may find its justification in the statement I have made, that the government wilfully withheld the opportunity from this Chamber to deal intelligently with this measure. The outcome of the attitude, and of the policy, pursued by the government on this question would only result in the inevitable, namely, that it could not receive at the hands of this Chamber in the expiring moments of the session that consideration to which so important a measure was entitled. I do not wish to weary the House, but to follow up the inconsistency to which I have alluded. this measure when introduced in the Commons, was to be peculiarly a federal measure. The rights of the provinces were not taken into consideration and the policy of the Bill fully indicated that it was not the intention of the government that the provinces should in any way intervene in the future with the policy which was crystallized in this legislation. The Bill was to be peculiarly a federal measure. It was to be a Lord's Day Act, and the criminal law within the jurisdiction of this Dominion was to be asserted from the Atlantic to the Pacific, entirely irrespective of the views which might be held by the provinces as to their respective rights within their boundaries. When it was first intimated in the Commons the rights of the provinces which were doubtful, owing to the 1903 decision of the Privy Council, were to be ousted. We find that the Minister of Justice, the Hon. Mr. Aylesworth, than whom there is no better authority, I will venture to say in the Dominion as to the respective rights of the provinces and of the federal parliament in the exercise of the rights so involved, what did he say upon the introduction of this Bill? His language was as follows:—

> It is a matter with respect to which there is unquestionably a general demand for legislation. It is a matter in regard to which this parliament of Canada is the only tribunal which can effectively pronounce.

Here we have an unequivocal statement of the Minister of Justice, representing the government, that the only tribunal that could deal with this legislation—and at that time the legislation was as introduced as in the first draft of the Bill—was this parliament. They only could enforce this legislation, and there was a public demand upon the federal parliament. Mr. Aylesworth said, for the measure as it was then presented to parliament. We afterwards find him confirming that position upon the introduction of Mr. Piché's amendment, which has for its intention the exercise of provincial jurisdiction with reference to the observance of the Lord's day. On June 20th, Mr. Aylesworth said:—

> Just a word with regard to the proposed amendment of my hon. friend from Montreal (Mr. Piché). Its effect would be far reaching indeed. It would destroy all practical benefits from the clause under consideration. It would in fact be delegating, if we had the power to delegate the whole question of dealing with the subject to each of the several provincial legislatures. . . . . This general question has been, by the highest tribunal, declared to be within the functions of this parliament. We ought not to shirk our responsibilities. We ought not to say, by any form of words or any side wind, that we will seek to put that responsibility upon the different provincial legislatures and let them legislate nine or ten different ways upon the same matter. . . . Parliament ought to legislate and not leave the question any longer in doubt.

Now, one would have thought with that emphatic declaration respecting the views, no doubt, of the government at that time, after due consideration, they would have left to this tribunal the exclusive right to legislate upon this question; but what do we find nine days afterwards? We find, after the meeting in Montreal on the Champ de Mars, Mr. Bourassa made his declaration before the people of Quebec as to the attitude of that province on this question. Then notwithstanding the course up to that date pursued by the government we find Mr. Aylesworth, the Minister of Justice, the hon. gentleman who was the doughty champion of federal rights making this statement:—

I am very pleased indeed that my hon. friend from St. Mary's has proposed the amendment. It is a recognition of what I think very properly may be, and ought to be, a recognition of the co-ordinate rights, within their own jurisdiction, of the provincial legislature to legislate on this subject. It has been and it is the pride of the political party to which I belong, as it is my personal pride, who regard myself as a humble member of it, to be ardent advocates of the principle of provincial rights. I, therefore, personally am glad indeed to see in this statute, as I shall be glad to see in every statute which this parliament might pass, recognized to the full the right of the provincial legislature to legislate on any question which is within their jurisdiction. That is the effect and course of this amendment, and it seems to afford a means by which this measure will be, at all events, made, if not more acceptable at least less disagreeable to the people of the province of Quebec. . . . Desiring to meet the wishes and views of those who do not accord with the province from which I come, I for my part gladly assent to the amendment which is proposed by my hon. friend from St. Mary's (Mr. Piché), and I will ask this committee to agree to passing it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear, correct.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Nine days previously the Minister of Justice absolutely refused to assent to this amendment, but on the evening of the meeting in the Champ de Mars in Montreal, when Mr. Bourassa took the government by the throat and said: 'We as representing Quebec demand that those provincial rights and sentiments be legally recognized,' not only the Minister of Justice but the whole cabinet, humiliatingly, climbed down from the lofty federal position which they had taken and acceded to the proposition made by Mr. Piché, the member from Montreal. Nor was that all. We find Mr. Borden, the leader of the opposition, willing—not only willing but anxious to have recognized the rights of the provinces with reference to legislation upon this important subject—moving an amendment on the last day this Bill passed the Commons and which amendment was rejected in fine scorn by the government. This very amendment moved by Mr. Borden and rejected by the government was brought in here last night by the hon. member from Yale (Hon. Mr. Bostock) and supported by my hon. friend the Secretary of State and all the government supporters.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—But what further do we find? When Mr Borden introduced that amendment in the Commons, representing the right of the provinces to legislate upon this subject, the government and its supporters denounced it as destructive to the Bill and last night we find the government as represented in this Chamber, with instructions from the Prime Minister, accepting that same amendment claiming its paternity and embodying it in this Bill. Therefore I say they cannot take exception to hon. gentlemen on this side of the House criticising the glaring inconsistency which has been pursued by the government in dealing with this Bill. It became quite apparent to my mind, and it must have been apparent to the mind of every hon. gentleman in this House when my hon. friend the Secretary of State introduced this Bill in the Senate, that the sentiments expressed in his introductory remarks were preparatory to a burial of the Bill. My hon. friend in very pathetic accents referred to the very small representation of senators in this Chamber, regretted their absence, regretted that an important measure of this kind was to come before so sparse a House, and we were all prepared, after those sentiments were expressed in the pathetic tones to which I have referred, for the treatment which the Bill afterwards received. I cannot fail to refer to an article which appeared in the 'Globe', which we regard as the organ of the Liberal party and which as to high moral sentiments—there is no paper within the Dominion so capable of at least giving expression and advice.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The 'Globe' neither professes, nor is it recognized as the organ of the government.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Does the hon. gentleman say that the government does not recognize the 'Globe' as the great Liberal organ of Ontario?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The 'Globe' neither professes to represent the government, nor does the government recognize the 'Globe' as its leading organ. On most important subjects the 'Globe,' during the past year, has taken violent opposition to the government.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—By accident.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is well they get right once in a while.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Owing to the reports which appeared in the press recently, there was considerable apprehension in the public mind that this Bill would not receive the kindliest treatment in this Chamber, but the Liberal press of Ontario, being conscious of the high moral sentiments which animate this body, at once came to the rescue to disabuse the public mind of any solicitude or anxiety they might entertain as to the reception of this measure in the Senate. We find the 'Globe' on Monday last expressing itself in this language:

> In the House of Commons the debates were marked on both sides with declarations of sympathy for Sunday observance. Egotists like Mr. Bourassa and irresponsibles like Mr. Lavergne could have no influence on the Liberal side against the resoluteness of the Prime Minister and the intelligent purposes of the great majority of his followers, both French and English, both Protestant and Catholic. The attitude of the leader of the opposition was weaker, and his services were less satisfactory than might have been expected of Mr. Borden in dealing with so critical a question outside the range of mere party politics. Thanks to the strong convictions and the conciliatory spirit of Sir Wilfrid Laurier, and to the masterful handling of the Bill by the Hon. A. B. Aylesworth, the new Minister of Justice, the measure as finally approved, while not without defects, is worthy of the intelligence and representative character of the House of Commons of Canada.

So much for the House of Commons. Now let us see what the Senate is going to do with this measure:

> The measure is now before the Senate. Notwithstanding the stories put in circulation by enemies of the government that the Bill will be mutilated or shelved by the Senate, no fears need be entertained. Such a course would be political folly of the rankest sort. The indirect damage it would do the government, and especially to the prestige of the Prime Minister, would be insignificant in comparison with its direct and inevitable damage to the prestige of the Senate itself. No measure of the present session has behind it a stronger and better informed or more representative body of public opinion. As the Minister of Justice declared, Christianity is the religion of Canada and the fabric of Canadian nationhood is buttressed by Christian institutions, but the great interests of social economics are as urgent as the churches that this measure be made law without weakening or delay.

I am anxiously awaiting the editorial of the 'Globe' in this morning's issue as to the reception which this Bill met with last night, and as to the prophesy which it made on July 9 of the treatment which it would receive at the hands of the Senate. I am anxious to study the science of explanation which will be resorted to by the reverend editor of that most excellent journal. We shall await with curiosity the attitude which it will take in seeking to reconcile the public to the mal-treatment which this Bill received yesterday in the Senate. Now, the question arises: will the Bill, as amended, receive concurrence in the Commons? In the first place, I presume to say that the Commons will scarcely recognize its child when it reaches there. It will have to be reintroduced into that body. The first question the Commons will, doubtless, ask, will be as it looks the young stranger in the face, 'What is the name of this child'? In its very baptismal name and features we have radically changed it. Whether the Lord's Day Alliance will be the sponsor I do not undertake to say; but I venture to say that the Commons will scarcely be ready to acknowledge its paternity and assume the responsibility which this Chamber has undertaken in preparing the Bill for the obsequies and the requiem service which will undoubtedly take place on the morrow. I expect to find to-morrow in the 'Globe' and the other leading organs of the Liberal party, among the death notices, that this Bill, after long suffering endured with Christian fortitude and resignation, has departed this life and was buried at the hour of the prorogation proceedings of this parliament. Without taking exception to, as I said before or criticising the amendments which have been made, I simply desire to point out that the government has not kept faith with the Lord's Day Alliance; it has not kept faith with the public nor with parliament itself in the passing of this measure. Having assumed the responsibility, which it did in the earlier part of this session, of having introduced a Bill containing features, sumptuary though they may be termed, on an important measure of this nature the government should certainly have been sufficiently courageous and consistent to have staked its reputation and destiny on giving to the public of the Dominion such a Bill as they promised and first committed themselves upon.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. leader of the opposition has given us a very entertaining and interesting disquisition on a variety of subjects. In the first place, he criticises the action of the government in not having had this measure before the Senate some weeks ago. The hon. gentleman knows full well that in the House which represents the people, this measure has been discussed pretty steadily during the past two months. It came here in the natural order of things; some Bill had to be last. The Senate can sit all this month and all next month, if necessary; there has been no attempt to hurry it, and, therefore, the strictures of my hon. friend are entirely groundless. I think we discussed this Bill as fully as any other measure that has ever come before us, and I deny that the changes made are of the revolutionary character which he claims. You cannot call the change in the title from 'Lord's Day' to 'Sunday' any change. Beyond that, looking at the Bill marked so as to indicate the changes made, there is very little to be seen. There is no change practically in the first clause except as regards the word Sunday. In the second clause there is the removing of the reference to the provincial authority, because it was inserted in another place as being more germane to the section to which it referred. That disposes of the first page of the Bill. On the second page the first change is the addition of the words 'express matter.' Was there any special change there to destroy the Bill or affect its tenor in any way? Then 'The continuance of trains and cars and work incidental thereto,' is the insertion of the word 'cars' a material change? I think it was covered entirely without that addition, and I saw no reason for it at the time. The next change is 'necessary to keep the line open,' which is simply a further interpretation of the meaning of parliament; and so on. I could go through every clause of the Bill and I deny that there is any justification for the remarks which the hon. gentleman has made as to our having destroyed the Bill. As to the utterances of the Minister of Justice in another place, the hon. gentleman knows well that this measure was pressed on us by a body of gentlemen—very excellent men—in the province of Ontario, who sought to impress their views upon the federal parliament. Those views were all in the right direction, so far as their moral tone was concerned. If all the provinces of the Dominion could have accepted those views, I am prepared to say that it would have been better so. I would like to see this country homogenous, although, on the contrary, there are many who think very differently and who say that the very fact of our embracing different races and different religious views is rather a benefit to the country, because it has resulted in producing the most tolerant people on the face of the globe; that we have learned to like each other better by being thrown together, and that our prejudices have consequently disappeared. The laws of Canada to-day are more tolerant of the views of minorities of all classes than those of any other country in the world, I care not where it lies. It is quite natural, when Mr. Aylesworth introduced the measure, that he should use those figures of speech which he would naturally like to live up to in shadowing forth a Bill of this kind which was to meet with the approval of every Canadian. But were we going to run counter to public opinion to do that—to trample on the views of the people? I say this government took the proper course. A sense of honour guided them in every step they have taken. They had to recognize the fact that the views which were sought to be impressed upon the people of Canada were not sound and justifiable and so this law had to be made to conform to the views of the people of the whole Dominion.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—They should have taken public opinion before they introduced the Bill, and not afterwards.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The only way to obtain an expression of public opinion is to introduce a Bill into parliament. The people are too busy with the prosperity which they are enjoying to pay any attention to questions of this kind. Take up the newspapers. How little of the Sunday Bill you will find in them. You will find a few lines from the correspondent at the seat of government, but the papers fail to make very much reference to the subject.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—That was a good reason to leave it over until next session. The people are too busy to discuss it now.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It does not come into operation until after next session.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—But it is the law now.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is not put in force.

Hon. Mr. MITCHELL—The hon. gentleman puts this in himself.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—So far as my course was concerned, from the beginning I intimated my views, which I think are thoroughly borne out by the fact, that this was an intrusion on the rights of the province. I pointed that out over and over again in this House, and we were quite willing to impose on the provinces just those restrictions which they were prepared to accept. If they were not willing to accept them in a wise sense, it was our duty to cut the Bill down to suit these provinces. That is the spirit that guided the Senate in the consideration of the Bill. I do not propose to continue the discussion. It gave my hon. friend an opportunity for showing how eloquently he could discuss these matters, but I deny that there was any false impression sought to be conveyed from the beginning in reference to the federal powers. We recognized in the beginning that we were encroaching on the provinces, and when the provinces said, 'We do not want to be encroached upon,' then the government receded, and very properly so.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is quite evident that the government is governed and does not govern.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—As there is no question of public policy, either Conservative or Liberal attached to this Bill, it being a Bill to please a large body of the people of Canada, I intend to deal with it shortly in an independent manner. About two years ago, the Lord's Day Alliance approached the premier and the Minister of Justice, and were met very cordially by those gentlemen who promised to present a Bill of this kind to parliament. They did not bring it in the first year. There was a great deal of work going on in the House of Commons. They could not then find time to bring in the Bill, but this year it was introduced, and I must give the premier of Canada my full praise, and commend him highly for the way he stuck to the Bill. But what do we find? In about three months the members of the House of Commons, on both sides, were like a nest of hornets around his head. Amendments were made here and there, and it was impossible to pass the Bill as originally intended. Then a new Minister of Justice came into office and so far, being a disappointing quantity, he has differed from himself and from the government in many ways. The premier had a great deal of difficulty, and stuck to this Bill in the most manful way, and I give him full credit for it, and we have it now before us. I congratulate the hon. Secretary of State for the splendid speech he made here in introducing the Bill. It was a godly speech, a speech with the right ring, and I regret that my hon. friend did not show a little more firmness in dealing with the matter afterwards. He should have had a whip for the members of his own party to control them more than they were controlled. The amendments moved by the hon. gentleman from Kamloops have destroyed the Bill. They give the provinces the power to legislate on different points. As far as my own province is concerned, I have no faith in its doing anything to preserve the Lord's day. The Lord's day people have petitioned the government and they have done nothing, and would not move. I call attention to the amendment made by the hon. gentleman in clause 5, which destroys the Bill. The clause now reads:

> It shall not be lawful for any person on Sunday, except as provided in any provincial Act or law now or hereafter in force.

The word 'hereafter' destroys the whole Bill. I should not object to permitting the provinces to conserve their rights in the laws they have already passed, but I would not give them authority to pass any laws hereafter to vitiate and destroy the effect of this measure. Any one looking at the Bill as it is now before us must come to the conclusion that it is destroyed. The same thing happens in clause 6, which says:—

It shall not be lawful for any person on Sunday, except as provided in any provincial Act or law now or hereafter in force.

The word 'hereafter' appears in that clause and destroys its effect. I had hoped the Bill would pass as originally framed, because there are large numbers of people in the Dominion who desire it. I would like to ask the hon. Secretary of State if he intends to amend it by inserting the word 'public'?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I should like to strike out the word 'hereafter' in clauses 5 and 6, so that the provinces would not have the power to detract from or weaken the force of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—In view of the remarks which have been made, I think it proper to say a few words. The hon. leader of the opposition said the House of Commons would not recognize their own child. I think he is mistaken. I think the House of Commons will be happy to find their child so much improved, so much increased in beauty, in value, in virtue, in justice, and so much in accordance with the national principles of provincial rights and autonomy. So that instead of disowning their child they will take care of it, and they will do everything to make it live as long as possible. The assertion was made that the government were influenced by the meeting which took place on the Champ de Mars, and that Mr Piché's amendment was accepted because of the effect produced at that meeting. I think I know pretty well what has taken place at the different stages of this Bill and I have no hesitation in saying, and I say what is true, that the assembly on Champ de Mars had no effect on the minds or resolutions of the government, because they had decided before hand to accept Mr. Piché's amendment. It was unjust to say they have changed their minds on the subject of provincial rights, because I know from the beginning their intention was not to infringe on provincial rights, and they were satisfied that the Bill did not contain any clause contrary to the principle of provincial autonomy. But it was a question of interpretation, and when the members of the government were convinced that there was a difference of opinion on that point, and that it would be wiser to meet the objections against the Bill, they did their duty towards the country and towards the constitution. They accepted the amendments made in the House of Commons, and afterwards in the Senate with a view to making it clearer that they did not want to infringe on provincial rights or provincial autonomy. In this respect, I am happy to say, the work of improvement was commenced in the House of Commons, and I am glad to say that the members from Montreal have done their duty. They were attacked at that famous public assembly on Champ de Mars as traitors to their country and nationality, but they were unjustly attacked. While others were talking and shouting on Champ de Mars, those members were doing their duty here amending the Bill and making it acceptable to all nationalities and all religious denominations. I am happy to have an opportunity to express my appreciation of what those members from Montreal have done for the city of Montreal and for their country. It has been asserted that senators were instructed by the Prime Minister to vote for the amendments introduced yesterday. No doubt the hon. senator from Calgary made that assertion in good faith. As leader of the opposition he is obliged to say something. I admit he has a very difficult position, and that he and those who co-operate with him have a right to be disappointed, but I think it only just and proper to state that when the hon. senator from Calgary said that the Senate had received instructions from the Prime Minister to vote for the amendment, he was misinformed. That is the best expression I can use, because I would not like to say anything which would not be polite. I affirm solemnly that the hon. gentleman's assertion is unfounded, that we received no instructions, and that the Prime Minister did not say a word to influence senators to make any change in the Bill as it was brought before this House. If anybody knows, I should know, because I try to keep myself well informed. So instead of blaming the Senate in this case there should be only one opinion in the country, and I am proud to say that in this instance the Senate has done its duty independently, and deserves praise for what it has done. It is not the first time the Senate has affirmed the principle of provincial autonomy and provincial rights, and if there ever was an occason when those principles should have been affirmed this is the occasion. It has been intimated that certain people have intervened to bring about a change in the minds of the government. I have no hesitation in saying that the government were in a very difficult position—in one of those positions which must occur under confederation very often, where they were obliged to take into consideration two extremes and draw a line between the two—where they were obliged to do what all governments that have been in power in Canada since confederation had to do, and what all future governments will have to do while confederation lasts. Because there is only one way to govern Canada, and that is by mutual concessions and forbearance. Confederation was the result of compromise, and when parliament or any government shall deviate from that principle on which the confederation was established, confederation will be a dead letter. The government were between two extremes. I want to make this remark, and I know it will be well received: Let the hon. members from the other provinces consider this, that the Bill as introduced was repugnant to the feeling and the customs, the habits, and even the laws of the people of the province of Quebec ; that they considered it an infringement on their rights, privileges and laws. They were satisfied that they had everything at home necessary for the proper observance of the Lord's day. Put yourselves in their position. Have they not a right to say to their friends in the other provinces : 'We are able to give you what you want ; we want nothing, but for God's sake take into consideration our rights. Take what you want for the observance of the Lord's day, but respect our feelings, our provincial autonomy, and our provincial rights.' They have been brought up with the idea that after having attended divine service they have a right to enjoy themselves on a Sunday afternoon with certain amusements and recreation. That has been their custom since the foundation of the country. I was amused the other day when in this House and in the other House the statutes passed under Charles I. and James I. were cited. I was curious to see what they contained, and if I had time I would read some of their provisions. You would be surprised to learn that what we want in the province of Quebec is exactly what was granted by Charles I. and James I. to the English people. The proclamation of Charles I. in 1632 contains the following :—

> And as for our good people's lawful recreation, our pleasure likewise is that after the end of divine service our good people be not disturbed, letted or discouraged, from any lawful recreation such as dancing, either men or women, archery for men, leaping, vaulting or any other such harmless recreation, nor from having of May games, Whitsun ales and Morris dances, and the setting up of May poles and other sports therewith used, so as the same be had in due and convenient time without impediment or neglect of divine service.

That was not a proclamation issued by a French Canadian or even by a Catholic, yet those in authority at that time entertained exactly the same view that we do as to the proper observance of the Lord's day. Moreover, the people of the province of Quebec contend that the usages, habits and customs have been guaranteed to them by the constitution, and that confederation was established on the principle of mutual concession and provincial autonomy. What are provincial rights composed of ? Not only of actual laws, but also of those habits and customs which form part of the national and social life. Naturally the Bill cannot give complete satisfaction to the extremists, to those who think that Sunday should be a day of sadness or a funeral day, or to those who think that on Sunday everything should be allowed, but it will satisfy those who are convinced that sound recreation is the best rest for mind and body to restore the strength which people require to perform their mission in this world. The Bill is not a triumph of a party, of a religious denomination, or of a national association.

It is the triumph of justice, of liberty, of provincial autonomy, of all those who think that in this country we must work the confederation on the principle upon which it was based, namely, mutual concession. Mutual forbearance is the price of harmony and of the national and material progress of Canada.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Halifax)—As I am going away to-day, I beg to say a few words on the Bill under discussion. I want my words to be as temperate as possible, but the action of this House last night was enough to make a man feel rather out of temper, because it is possible sometimes for a Scotchman to get out of temper, but only on great provocation. We had great provocation here last night by the friends of the government in destroying the Bill. I say that the Bill has been destroyed, and that it is, therefore, useless. When it is required, before a man can be punished, that you must get an order from the Attorney General to prosecute him, I want to know how the Bill can be put into operation in the larger provinces? You might as well pass a resolution to say that nobody would be punished under this Bill. Of course we hear the stereotyped argument that you cannot make any man better or more religious by an Act of parliament. That is true, but we can punish men for doing wrong, by Act of parliament. For instance, some senators, I believe, are addicted to the habit of swearing. I thank the Lord that I am not. I never uttered a profane oath in my life,—that is the teaching I got from my father and mother, and I hope I will continue to follow their example in that respect. Now, there was a determination on the part of some people to destroy this Bill, and they have succeeded to their heart's content. The hon. gentlemen who now occupies the Speaker's Chair was delighted with the resolution offered by the hon. gentleman from Toronto; he was beaming with happiness when that resolution passed. You would think he was almost like Moses when he came down from the mountain; his face had changed completely, because the unreasonable and unjust resolution of the hon. gentleman from Toronto had been adopted by this House. I like Sabbath observance; but the Bill which is now under consideration is far removed from the 4th commandment. It is not within miles of the teaching of the 4th commandment. You would think by this Bill that there is not a God in Heaven that rules over the destinies of nations and of individuals. The whole Bill appears to be drawn up in the interests of corporations and transportation companies. That appears to be the object of this legislation. Nobody appeared to think that there should be any connection between the 4th commandment and the passage of this Bill. I objected also to the hon. gentleman from Halifax moving to change the words 'Lord's Day' to 'Sunday.' He was introducing heathen mythology. We have the Bible's authority for the Lord's day, but we have no bible authority for 'Sunday;' you may search either Catholic or Protestant bibles in vain to find that word. Here is the authority for the Lord's day. I am referring now to a Catholic bible translation and my hon. friends from the province of Quebec will know that I am reading from a book that they should respect; whether they do or not is a very doubtful question. I am reading from the book of Revelations:

> I, John, your brother, a companion in tribulation and in the kingdom of patience of Christ Jesus, was in the island called Patino for the Word of God and for the testimony of Jesus Christ I was in the spirit on the Lord's day.

Now Catholic commentators explain it thus:

> On the Lord's day, not the Jewish Sabbath, which is our Saturday, but on the Christian Sabbath, our Sunday, called the Lord's day.

That is the authority of your judge. The extract continues:

> The church in the Apostolic times changed the day of rest on which the Jews were commanded to rest and sanctify, from Saturday to Sunday, from the last day of the week to the first. They judged this only to be an indispensable precept, that some day or some time should be appointed in a special manner for God's service and worship, on which Christians shall also abstain from servile labour.

I do not think we are going to abstain from servile labour.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—By this Bill we legalize it.

Hon. Mr. ROSS—This quotation proceeds:

> In which Christians should all abstain from servile labour, that were not necessary as to the determination of such a day of the week they judged that the church had power to change the day.

This is a compliment that the commentator paid to Christians:

The late pretended reformers have also agreed with us in this change.

We are thankful that they acknowledge that we are pretended reformers and that the day was changed. We have the authority of the scriptures for this, and this is also the Catholic translation. Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter. It is:

Fear God and keep His commandments.

Now, the senator that goes to church on every Sunday in the province of Quebec does a good thing, and we admire him that he has so much Christian principle as to go this far, but when he or his family go to horse-races in the afternoon of the same day, I question very much the Christian principle of that senator. I would say to him as the Apostle Paul said:

I perceive thou art in the gaul of bitterness and in the bonds of iniquity.

My hon. friend from Montreal recommended us to have holy shrines in Ontario. The only authority that I have for a shrine is where the scripture says to go to our closets to pray, but the prophet Daniel raised the window and prayed three times in defiance of the rules of the Jews. I think we can dispense with the shrines, and I think likely we will do very well without them. I disapprove of the idea of the hon. gentleman from Victoria. Of course he has a perfect right to praise the morality and religion of his own people. That is his duty, but when he makes a contrast between them and the Protestants, I think that is going perhaps a little too far, I may say that the people of the province of Nova Scotia, and I hope the people of Ontario, are as moral and religious as the people of Quebec. There is one thing certain, and that is that they observe the fourth commandment in a stricter manner.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is the third commandment the hon. gentleman means.

Hon. Mr. ROSS—I am translating the fourth commandment as it appears in the Roman Catholic bible:

Remember that thou keep holy the Sabbath day. Six days shalt thou labour and do all the work, but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God. In it thou shalt do no work, thou nor thy son nor thy daughter nor thy manservant nor thy maidservant nor the stranger that is within thy gates, for in six days the Lord made Heaven and earth, and rested the seventh day.

And so on.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—The hon. gentleman is quoting the Catholic version of the bible?

Hon. Mr. ROSS—Yes.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Please quote the Protestant version. Why do you quote the Catholic version?

Hon. Mr. ROSS—I do not suppose the hon. senator objects to my quoting the Catholic translation of the commandment?

Hon. Mr. FORGET—But you gave an impression to the House that the Catholic version was not the correct one.

Hon. Mr. ROSS—No, I do not want to create that impression at all. There is no difference between the two. The reason that I quoted the Catholic version of the commandment is that I thought it would command more reverence on the part of the senators from the province of Quebec.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—We respect the bible as well as anybody else.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Halifax)—Now I am going to give you Catholic authorities for the observance of Lord's day. His Holiness Pope Leo XIII., at the suggestion of Cardinal Gibbons, issued an address in which were these words :

The observance of the sacred day which was willed expressly by God from the first origin of man is imperatively demanded by an absolute and essential dependence of the creature upon the Creator. This law, which at one and the same time so admirably provides for the honour of God, the spiritual needs and dignity of man and the temporal well-being of human life, touches not only individuals but also peoples and nations.

There is one thing which I admire very much, the respect which Catholics pay to the highest authorities of their church, and in that respect I am afraid that they have rather forgotten what the authorities of their church have to say in connection with this subject.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—Would the hon. gentleman cite a case, where we do not follow the principles of the chief of our church?

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Halifax)—I would first explain what those principles are. I am not accustomed to public speaking, and I hope the hon. senator will allow me to express my disconnected ideas without interruption. Cardinal Gibbons says:

The institution of the Sabbath has contributed more to the peace and good order of nations than can be accomplished by standing armies and the best organized police force.

Archbishop Ireland, at a retreat held in St. Paul, Minnesota, attended by about 200 Catholic priests:

Called special attention to the desecration of the Lord's day in some localities in the diocese where saloons and business places are kept open just as on other days, and ordered the priests to exert all lawful influence to have the scandal stopped as far as Catholics might be implicated. In places where Catholics are the majority of the population and are consequently responsible for the disorder, the priests are directed to promptly inform the archbishop and he will interdict those places, that is, forbid religious service therein until the Lord's day shall be properly observed. In other places the priests and Catholic people are directed to work with non-Catholics who may wish to see the Lord's day properly observed.

The deceased Archbishop O'Brien says:—

I am in full sympathy with the movement for promoting the due observance of Sunday as a day of rest. I believe a law should be enacted to prevent all unnecessary servile work on that day so that all men may have the opportunity of resting their bodies and of adoring the Creator.

His Grace the Archbishop of Victoria says:—

In checking the fatal encroachment on the Lord's day, in the establishment of which we adore God's infinite wisdom, the Lord's Day Alliance of Canada is deserving of our grateful recognition and hearty co-operation.

So that the archbishops would have accepted the Bill as it came down to this House.

The Right Rev. Bishop Blais, of St. Germain, Rimouski, Quebec, writes (in French):

It is of the highest importance that the day consecrated each week to sanctified rest, which allows the exercise of divine worship, should be observed faithfully and religiously by all members of society, and protected with a jealous care by the regulations of our laws, both federal and provincial, against all use and abuse to the contrary. This is why I would cordially acknowledge the opportuneness and the usefulness of the association formed under the name of the Lord's Day Alliance of Canada; and I wish all possible success to the efforts it makes to attain the object at which it aims.

Both the Lord's Day Alliance, and the Bill as it came down to this House, met with the approval of this great and good man. I have a great deal of veneration for Catholics, and I believe there are as good men in that church as in any other denomination. I am doing business with my Catholic friends in the city of Halifax for a number of years now, and I find them honest and just. They are faithful and true to their church—more so, I must say, than we Protestants are.

The Baltimore Council of Archbishops and Bishops, inter alia, decreed saying:

It is well known that the tendency is to rush far beyond the bounds of necessity and propriety, virtually ignoring the sacredness of the day altogther. But no community can afford to have either gain or amusement at such cost. To turn the Lord's day into a day of toil is a blighting curse to a country; to turn it into a day of dissipation would be worse. We earnestly appeal, therefore, to all Catholics, without a distinction, not only to take no part in any movement tending toward a relaxation of the observance of Sunday, but to use their influence and power as citizens to resist in the opposite direction.

We decree that it is never permitted to hold these (picnics, excursions, &c.) during the night nor upon Sundays, fast and abstinence days, nor with intoxicating liquors, wine and beer included, or sold thereat. And likewise relative to what are commonly called 'fairs,' we decree that they must not be held on Sundays, nor without the license of the bishop, nor must intoxicating liquors, wine and beer, be used thereat.

That is the authority of the church, and that is the authority I think under which the premier wanted the Sunday Observance Bill to be passed. In my own hearing and in the hearing of others, the premier said that we should have a Lord's Day Act after what he had seen in Paris. Now just a word about Scotland. I think I may be permitted to say that, excepting the slums of Edinburgh and Glasgow, there is no place in the world where the Lord's day is observed with such sacredness as in Scotland. Look at that little community with its sterile land and limited population. Her steamers traverse every sea—they come to Montreal, those great steamers which we feel so proud of. Where are they built? In Scotland. There is no

Sunday work done in connection with those steamers. There will be no cargoes shipped on the Lord's day, on the other side of the water. Who commands those steamers? Scotchmen. Who are the engineers? Scotchmen; and it is the same all over the world. I venture to say that if the Lord's day was observed in France as well as it is in Scotland, France would be to-day the first power in Europe; but in that respect France is not setting a good example; and I am afraid that our friends from Quebec are taking perhaps too many of the traditions that were in vogue in France and continuing some of them to the present day. I regreed exceedingly that the Bill which promised to be useful as it came from the government and the other House, has been destroyed and made inoperative in this House. That appeared to be the determination of some senators who proclaim that they are supporters of the government. Now the individual or the family, the community, province or the Dominion which observes the Sabbath day as it should be observed, is the one that will prosper; and if we are to enter upon the down-grade by setting at defiance the fourth commandment, we will go down as a nation by doing so. As far as this Bill is concerned, it does not amount to a snap of the finger in the province of Nova Scotia, because we observe the Lord's day as a province strictly at the present time.

The danger is that some of our people will be rather encouraged in actions by some of the exemptions in this Act, which, through precept and example, were never practised by them before. I regret exceedingly the way the Bill has been mangled in this House. The premier can well say, 'Save me from my friends.' He wanted the Bill to be passed as it came up to the Senate. It contains some things that personally I would not care to approve; but from my desire to do justice to the people of the province of Quebec, I was willing to accept the Bill as it came to us. Too much attention was paid to that meeting in Montreal, and to the resolution that was passed by 'We, the citizens of Montreal.' There were tens of thousands of citizens of Montreal who did not attend that meeting, but had more respect for the Sabbath day than some of the fanatics that were present. You get a showy band——

Hon. Mr. FORGET—And bagpipes.

Hon. Mr. ROSS (Halifax)—No, not the bagpipes, because the French have no appreciation of that organ, the bagpipes, that has been so useful and that has given Scotland and Scotland's sons the tribute you find on every hard fought battle, and without the bagpipes they would be just useless. There is no necessity for sneering at the bagpipes so much beloved by Scotchmen. That resolution 'We, the inhabitants of Montreal,' reminds me of the three Tooley street tailors, 'We, the inhabitants of London.' They were not the inhabitants of Montreal. There were tens of thousands of people in Montreal that were not there. I am afraid the speeches that were made on that occasion rather intimidated some senators and made them doubtful as to what their course should be. I regret exceedingly that the Bill should pass from us in its present shape. It does not do us credit as senators; rather the other way.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—It was my intention to make a few remarks on the Bill, but at this hour of sitting I will not do more than express my satisfaction with the Bill and to say that I endorse every word in the eloquent remarks of my hon. friend from Mille Isle. I should like to put a question to the leader of the opposition: Does he claim that on a question of this kind we ought to legislate purely from the federal point of view and overrule and override all the provincial laws in existence on this question?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—No, I said nothing of the kind. I said that the Prime Minister had committed himself to the policy of the federal government legislating exclusively on this subject. I cited from a speech of the Minister of Justice, remarks confirmatory of that position. I cited also, or stated that the leader of the opposition. Mr. Borden, in the other House was in favour of permitting the provinces to exercise all the rights now given them with regard to Sunday laws, and the government, after rejecting that proposition, finally accepted it in this House.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I asked the hon. gentleman what does he say on the matter himself? I ask him plainly what is his position? Does he say that we ought to have overruled or overridden all provincial laws on this subject now in existence or hereafter to be passed? I want his own opinion?

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Since my hon. friend is so solicitous to know my opinion I say that each power should legislate within the sphere which pertains to it under the constitution.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—But on this special question.

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Question, question.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—A proposal was being made to amend the subclause by reinserting the word 'public.' I have been considering the matter since it has been under consideration in the House to-day, and I would ask the hon. Secretary of State to allow the Bill to go as it is to the House of Commons, and the Minister of Justice can there determine whether the word should be put in or not.

The SPEAKER (Hon. Mr. Power)—It is moved that this Bill be read the third time, and that the title be changed to 'An Act respecting Sunday'.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Was the title changed in committee last night?

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—No.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Then by what authority is the Bill changed now?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—A change in the title comes properly after the third reading.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—In committee it was suggested, I think by the chairman, that the proper place to change that title was on the motion for third reading. I have been waiting patiently for the Secretary of State to make the motion to change that title. If the title of a Bill can be altered on the third reading without the authority of the committee, the sooner we know it the better.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—When the Committee of the Whole first took into consideration this Bill, a motion was made by the hon. gentleman that wherever the word 'Lord's day' appeared in the Bill that it should be changed to 'Sunday'. In a sense, that might apply to the title of the Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Oh, no.

The SPEAKER (Hon. Mr. Power)—In putting the motion I said 'including the title.'

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Last night when the committee was rising, the question arose as to the change of title and I pointed out to the committee that it could be changed in committee; but the usual course was to change it on the third reading, and the committee rose and reported progress; therefore there was a clear understanding that the title would be changed, and it was only a question as to what stage of the proceedings the title would be changed, and the consensus of opinion in the committee seems to be that that course should be adopted on the third reading.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I move that the title of the Bill be changed from the 'Lord's day' to 'Sunday.'

The SPEAKER—Bourinot at page 673 provides that any amendment to the title may be made on the third reading. The committee have recommended the changing of the title, and when I put the question that the Bill do now pass, I added that the title be 'An Act respecting Sunday.'

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is not the proper way.

The SPEAKER—Then Bourinot is wrong.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The authority to make the change is the House, not the Speaker.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I am decidedly opposed to that. I think it is unchristian and not in accord with the Bill at all. Sunday is a day of heathen ordination, and only used by Teutonic and Scandinavian nations; but there is one day which stands above all others and it is the day of the Lord. The Bill as worded now, differs so materially from the commandment that we should be ashamed to pass it. I think where you follow the will of God all through you will do what is right. I have gone into this matter with a great deal of thought and sentiment. I consider that it is the most serious moment of my life during this session and I ought to take this subject cautiously to heart, and consider it carefully and not pass, in the hurried manner in which we are doing on this occasion, one of the greatest measures that can be submitted to a Christian. We ought not heedlessly to do anything of this kind, and when I find 'Sunday' substituted for the 'Lord's day' I scout the idea. I will vote in favour of the Lord's day most decidedly, because it is far superior to the heathen appellation of Sunday.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a third time and passed.

The Senate adjourned until three o'clock this afternoon.

SECOND SITTING.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at three p.m.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (10) An Act to amend the Act respecting the Senate and House of Commons.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the suspension of the rules. He said: This Bill was introduced at a very early period of the session, I think within a few days after the House met in March. The main provision of it is making it an offence, subject to severe consequences, for any member to accept fees for services in any parliamentary proceeding. It had been represented that members had either by themselves or by their partners appeared before committees, for which it was thought a fee had been received, and that was considered highly improper. This Bill is for the purpose of preventing that practice.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—It is a very good Bill. That will stop lobbying, to a certain extent.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is very great pity that we should have a Bill of such importance introduced at this stage of the session. Speaking for myself, from hearing it read, it meets with my hearty approval, but we should not have a Bill of such importance brought down at a time when we cannot give it more than five minutes consideration.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is not a government Bill. It was introduced by the leader of the opposition, I believe.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That does not make any difference.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Except that the government are not to blame.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I was not blaming the government. I was complaining that we are asked to pass Bills on such short notice. However simple they may be, we should have an opportunity of reading and understanding them. It is one of the evil effects of bringing down important measures a few hours before prorogation.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Hon. gentlemen will find this Bill was circulated in the month of March.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—But the Bill that is introduced into the House of Commons is not the Bill as a rule, that comes here. We have had Bills introduced in the Lower House with only one clause, and when they come here there would be two or three pages of them.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have obtained a copy of the Bill as distributed in March last. The present Bill is not changed very much, but is cut down a good deal and is made more specific and definite.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It involves a very grave question. If we look at the Independence of Parliament Act, we find the members of the Senate and the House of Commons are not on the same footing. We retain to ourselves the privilege of disqualifying members in this House, but by this legislation we are giving up that privilege and it will be the court that will decide?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, not unless we choose to adopt it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We are asked to give up our privileges and go before the courts, and if we are condemned before the courts we will be unseated.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I think it is much better to leave the question to the courts than to this House.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is a question of policy. We are asked to depart from what has always been done in the past as a question of privilege in this Chamber. I think it is very late in the session to ask us to take up a question of that kind.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—After glancing over the copy of the Bill which has been placed in my hands by the hon. Secretary of State, I observe that if a senator offends against the provision contained in the Bill he shall be disqualified for five years from being a member of the Senate. How are you going to get rid of him ? Supposing a senator offends, is he to be deprived of his seat in this House for five years ? A senator's position is a life position. It says he shall not be qualified to be a senator. He cannot be disqualified under the Act unless he is a senator, and there is no provision to unseat him or to get rid of him.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I presume the meaning of the Bill is that in the event of their being a conviction made by a competent court as to any infraction of this statute, either House would be bound to take notice of it, and to declare the disqualification of that member. If it should happen to be a member of this House, he would, of course, be absolutely disqualified. His membership would be vacated ; in any event he could not be reappointed, should the government of the day choose to reappoint him after the length of time mentioned in the Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The constitution declares clearly what the offences are which disqualify a senator. That is not one of them.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière)—I think we had better wait until we each have a copy of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—By consent of the House, I presume there could be an independent sitting this evening at eight o'clock, and this Bill might stand over until then. I move that when the House adjourns at six o'clock it meet again at eight o'clock as a separate sitting.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I oppose that. If our work is over at five or six o'clock, we might adjourn during pleasure and come back at eight o'clock.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Bill will stand for a second reading at a later period when the House is ready to take it up.

CRIMINAL CODE AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (4) An Act to amend the Criminal Code, 1892.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the suspension of the rules. He said the Criminal Code is amended by adding thereto :—

133a. The expression 'official or person in the employment of the government' and 'official or employee of the government' wherever used in section 133, extend to and include the Commissioners of the Transcontinental Railway and the persons holding office as such commissioners, and the engineers, officials, officers, employees and servants of the said Commissioners of the Transcontinental Railway ; and the expression 'the government' wherever used in the said section extends to and includes the said Commissioners of the Transcontinental Railway.

The object of this amendment to the Criminal Code is to bring the officials of the National Transcontinental Railway under provisions of the 133a section of the Criminal Code. That section makes it a punishable offence for any official in the employ of the government to accept any gift, loan or promise of any consideration directly or indirectly with a view to giving assistance to procure a contract from the government for the performance of any work or the furnishing of any goods, &c.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill passed through its final stages.

THE SUPPLY BILL.

FIRST, SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (225) An Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service for the financial year ending June 30, 1906, and the period of nine months ending March 31, 1907.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The estimates are for nine months. Hon. gentlemen are aware that it is proposed to change the fiscal year to March 31, instead of June 30, and consequently the estimates for the coming year have been prepared for a period of only nine months, the idea being that it will be better and we will be able to get a more satisfactory review of the business of the country if we meet at the end of the business season, that is November or December, with a recess over Christmas. And with that object in view, the fiscal year has been changed. The gross figures in this Bill are as follows :

Consolidated fund now $51,594,000. I do not give the hundreds.

Supplementary estimates $2,590.000, making a total of $54,184,000. That is what is called consolidated fund account. On capital account the vote contained in the estimates is $16,340,000, supplementary, $2,077.000, a total capital account $18,419,765. The total vote both capital and on consolidated account foots up $72,604,464. That is for nine months. If hon. gentlemen would like to compare that with the vote of last year, I shall be able to give the figures. In the last session the vote was :

Consolidated fund for 1905, $70,128,000; on account of 1906, $2,489,000; the total being, 72,618,000; the capital account last year was, $16,330,880, being a total of $88,949,000.

That was the vote of last year. That was consolidated and capital together. This year the total, as hon. gentlemen will remember, was $72,604,462. That is for nine months. Of course to get a comprehensive statement one would have to add twenty-five per cent to that.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It makes $8,000,000 per month.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As the fiscal year only terminated a few days ago, full returns are not in, but the statement usually given to the press show the receipts of this year as compared with the former year to be as follows : I give the amounts in round numbers.

	1904-5.	1905-6.
Customs..	$40,000,000	$46,000,000
Excise..	12,461,000	13,911,000
Public Works..	7,490,000	8,307,000
Miscellaneous..	3,691,000	4,449,000
Totals..	69,474,000	78,096,000

That is twelve months in each case. It might perhaps interest hon. gentlemen if I refer to the expenditure in the two years on capital account.

	1904-5.	1905-6.
Public Works..	$ 8,296,000	$ 7,441,000
Militia..	1,084,000	1,300,000
Railway subsidies ..	1,214,000	1,637,000
Iron and steel bounties	1,684,000	2,109,000
Total..	10,934,000	12,727,000

As regards the iron and steel bounties, hon. gentlemen will remember that they are on a decreasing scale, but although the rate of payment is less, the total amount is greater. I move that rule 41 be suspended in so far as it relates to this Bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I move that the Bill be now read a second time.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Instead of reading the Bill a second time now, I think it should be set down for second reading in the morning. If there is to be a morning session with prorogation taking place in the afternoon, I think we might discuss the Bill in the morning.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I would call the attention of the hon. Secretary of State to pages 34, 35, 36 having reference to works in Nova Scotia. It is the most ingenious part of this Bill. Every little creek, every small harbour, every mud hole that could be thought of, is included. There is to be a wharf or something at each of these places, involving a cost of nearly half million dollars—places never heard of before, places with no commerce—there cannot be any. It is just a scheme to catch votes and nothing more or less.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Has there been any election lately in that part of the country ?

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—I am sure the hon. minister cannot explain how they managed to get the names of all these little creeks and harbours in Nova Scotia. It is a marvel to anybody.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—I wish to call attention to a question which interests the whole Dominion. The government has thought fit—and I for my part agree with it in that respect—to appropriate a certain sum of money for improving the city of Ottawa. I have had the honour on previous occasions of remarking that there is an anomaly in the fact that Ottawa belongs to the province of Ontario. Ottawa should belong to all the provinces. It should not be subject to the laws of one province as it is at present. As it is the seat of the federal government it should be under the control of that government. It was the opinion of Sir John Macdonald, with whom I discussed this matter in the last days before his sickness, that Ottawa should occupy somewhat the same position as the district of Columbia does in the United States. It should be a district independent of the other provinces of this country.

As it is under the jurisdiction of Ontario we who come from the other provinces are subject to laws passed by the local government of Ontario; if a person from Quebec falls sick in Ottawa and desires to have a medical man from Montreal or any part of the province of Quebec, he cannot have him. I dare say the physician might come to attend him, but he would have no right to do so, and it would not be fair to ask a medical man from Montreal to come here. If a person from Quebec should be in Ottawa and fall sick, and, as would be very natural, had forgotten to make his will and called on a notary from the province of Quebec, the notary would not be able to come here and draw his will. Even in this building we have given a license to sell liquor.' We are acting in contravention of the law of Ontario. Ontario has the right to say: 'We shall require a license from them.' There are many other cases. Then there is another question to be considered. The day may come when in some parts of the country, without mentioning them, everybody will understand, population will be much larger than in the old provinces of Quebec, Ontario, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island and they may then, having a majority, succeed in removing the seat of government from Ottawa. As it is, the province of Ontario alone would be directly interested in keeping the seat of government here, but if Ottawa was declared to be for the whole Dominion; if all the members of the other provinces could say: 'When we are in Ottawa we are in our own province,' and this can easily be done. Then every one will be interested in keeping this city and district as it should be, and not allow the removal of the government from Ottawa. A district with a radius of a few miles around Ottawa should be declared an independent district as the district of Columbia is in the United States.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—Even outside the session.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—Yes, all the year round.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—That involves a great danger.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—That was the idea of Sir John Macdonald. If the House would pronounce itself in favour of such a change it would have its effect on the government and perhaps they might find a means of erecting Ottawa and vicinity into an independent district.

Hon. Mr. EDWARDS—The question to which my hon. friend refers is not a new one. Apart from what he has said, there are other reasons for carrying out his suggestion. A great deal has been done by the government in the way of beautifying Ottawa, and there is no doubt if a district such as he suggests were formed here, the people of Canada would take a greater pride in the city than they now do. There is no doubt that to-day, in certain districts of the country, the amount spent by the government of Ottawa is looked upon with a jealous eye, but if the proposed change were made, Ottawa would be a national city. Our country is growing and is destined undoubtedly to become very great. Every Canadian recognizes that fact. Ottawa has possibilities beyond many cities. There are few cities in Canada or perhaps in any country that have the possibility of being beautified compared with Ottawa, and if this change was made, certainly every citizen of Canada would be interested in having the capital made one to be the pride of the country.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—It seems to me it would be utterly impossible to carry out the idea suggested by the hon. senator opposite at the present time or in the future, because no person can suppose that the people of Ottawa would surrender the rights they now have as a municipal organization. The district of Columbia was created by a grant of unoccupied territory by certain states of the union, and the city of Washington was built there. Every person who went there knew the conditions, and as the people had no municipal privileges, so nothing was taken from them. In this case, you would have to deprive the people of Ottawa of every civic right. You would have to deprive Ontario of so much per head and create such a condition that there would be no resemblance whatever to the district of Columbia. The difficulties which the hon. gentleman points out with regard to the feeling of a citizen of Quebec being ill in Ottawa and not able to make his will or receive medical attendance, are certainly great grievances and they ought to be redressed by some agreement between the two provinces; but I do not see how we could entertain the suggestion made by the hon. gentleman backed up by the hon senator from Rideau.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not think the objections raised by my hon. friend are very serious. If a conference were held with the municipal authorities at Ottawa, I think they would yield to our demand. I think they would be ready to become a district apart, like the district of Columbia.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—Do you think they would give up control of their schools?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—We might not give them the money also. The government has been treating Ottawa very generously, and if they had a little more money in the future as in the past, perhaps it would be a soothing arrangement for them. There is nothing like trying, and where there is a will there is often a way, so I think the government should take some steps in that direction. When we do not succeed, very often we are at fault ourselves because we do not take the trouble to do what we should do. If we wish to arrive at a desired conclusion, we should take the means to do it, and if we do we will surely succeed.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—There are very strong objections to the proposition. I would be disposed to consider the question, but besides the objections which have been made, there is another one; hon. gentlemen know very well that in Quebec, as in other provinces, no doubt, certain contracts are recognized, marriage contracts, which must be made according to the law in force in the province. So that to escape the effect of the law of the province of Quebec one would only have to come to Ottawa, because they would change from the old law. I think the effect would be very serious and it is worthy of consideration.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understand that the second reading of this Bill is to be postponed?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I consented to postpone the second reading to any future time which would suit the convenience of hon. gentlemen, either this evening or to-morrow.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think we might take it up to-night, if my hon. friend in front of me concurs in the suggestion. While we have no power to change, alter or amend the Bill, we might like to make some remarks on its contents. In reference to the suggestion which was brought before the Senate by the hon. gentleman who introduced it, and supported by the hon. senator from Rideau, I think it is a matter well worthy of consideration. The remarks of the hon. gentleman from St. John and the difficulties he has pointed out are historically correct as I understand it. Difficulties would present themselves in the carrying out of the scheme that did not present themselves to the United States government or people when they established the district of Columbia. I can understand that, but I do not see that the difficulties which would present themselves are at all insurmountable. The question is, how far the people of Ottawa, supposing it were submitted to them, would object to having all the expense attending the keeping up of the capital paid by the government, and they be relieved of it to a very considerable extent. We are now spending nearly half a million dollars in beautifying the city. We should only be extending that principle if we established a district of Ottawa instead of a district of Columbia, by which the people of the city would be deprived, if I understand the principle upon which the district of Columbia is based, of certain privileges. It would disfranchise them; they would not have the right to elect any member of the House of Commons. I think that is the principle on which the district of Columbia is based. It would be then simply a question of money.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—They have no municipal government either.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—Are the people taxed.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is a question that deserves a good deal of consideration, and I am not so sure, in view of the future of this country, that the suggestion thrown out by the hon. gentleman from Montarville, would be not only worthy of consideration, but worthy of serious consideration, the adopting of some system by which this portion of the Dominion would be set apart and totally independent of a municipal corporation or representatives of the city itself, in order that it might be maintained for all time to come as the seat of government. I am not so sure that the fears expressed by my hon. friend would be at all likely to be realized. However, if the Northwestern part of the Dominion continues to grow as rapidly as it is growing, and it should contain twenty-five million or fifty million of people, there is no telling what they might do. We know that the people of the west, although they are composed principally of the people of the east, are a grasping people, and although proud of the other provinces from which they come, they are not any the less in love with their new homes than they were with their old ones. While they may venerate that portion of the Dominion in which they were born and educated, they have just as strong a love and affection for their new homes, which is quite proper for very many reasons, and the principal reason is the fact that they are growing with the country in wealth and in influence, and that influence might be exercised in the direction indicated by my hon. friend. However, as intimated to me a few moments ago, there is no doubt that the hon. gentleman and myself, being the two youngest members in the House, might live to see this great project accomplished. I think it is a good suggestion and it is one which might well be considered by any government, particularly in view of the possibilities of the future. Washington is not the centre of the United States by any means, but I should question very much, no matter how powerful the Pacific states might become, whether any attempt will ever be made to remove the capital of the United States from Washington further west.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—A question has been raised in the United States on that point.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—As long as human nature exists, there will always be these questions arising where there are individual interests concerned, but there has been no result flowing from it. The matter illustrates the advance of ideas in the minds of people in reference to the capital of the Dominion. I have a distinct recollection, that when the late government came into power in 1878, and assumed the responsibility of taking care of Major's Hill Park, it received the severest condemnation, not from the hon. Secretary of State, but from other members of the opposition at that time. I do not see the hon. member from Wellington in his place just now, but he used to spend a few hours every session in condemnation of keeping the lawn in proper repair and building fences. Now we are spending thousands of dollars in beautifying the city, and I have not heard a word of condemnation from the economists of past days. They are advancing in other ways as well as in the expenditure of money generally. It is a growing time, and with the growth of expenditure, the intellects of those who formerly opposed these improvements is growing equally so that they now may be said to comprehend and appreciate the expenditure of money in beautifying the national capital. We who are termed old fogies who took the first step in attempting to make this city look respectable, are quite content that they should go on and make it worthy of the Dominion, and I have no doubt if my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. McMullen) was here, he would justify himself and say he was quite consistent in what he did before. That is the position they all take with the exception of my venerable friend from St. John (Hon. Mr. Ellis). He had the honesty to tell us that the government had not fulfilled their promises in many particulars. This is one of them. I am glad my friend has introduced this subject, and I have no doubt the hon. Secretary of State would be glad to see anything done which would make this capital more attractive and more worthy of the Dominion. While the finances of the country are booming as they are at present, I hope he will go on and accomplish this object.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—This question is not merely a local one, but it concerns the whole Dominion. Those of us who come from the extremes of the Dominion, feel as deep an interest in Canada's capital as those who reside here. And it seems to me not only the people of Ottawa but the representatives in parliament coming from all parts of the Dominion should feel an indebtedness to my hon. friend from Montarville for bringing the matter before parliament at the present time. No later than yesterday, I was speaking to the mayor of Toronto who had just returned from Washington and he made some observations as to the decided advantages enjoyed by the people of Washington under the district administration which is there enjoyed in contrast to the municipal system under which affairs are administered. It was pointed out that the people of Washington enjoy all the municipal advantages of any other city, and pay a very much lower rate of taxation than probably any city in the United States. I think their rate on the dollar is either 14 or 15 mills. It seems to me that there should be no insuperable difficulty in the way of getting the government and the municipality of Ottawa together to discuss this matter with a view of improving the capital of the Dominion. I have had occasion very recently to go several times over the driveway which the government has been working upon during the past few years, and I am safe in saying that if hon. gentlemen present would pay that driveway a visit, it would prove a revelation as to the vast improvement which can be made by an intelligent commission in beautifying a city, particularly a city enjoying so many natural advantages as the city of Ottawa. I think I am safe in saying that there is no city in the Dominion which possess a driveway such as the one to which I have referred.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Except Quebec.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Even to-day it is only on the threshold of that beauty which it must possess in the near future. It seems to me that the people of Ottawa are blind to their own interests that they do not approach the government with a view to having the city administered in the same way that the government of the United States administers the district of Columbia. From what one can ascertain from the press reports which are daily circulated amongst us in this city, the people of Ottawa do not seem to be enamoured of the municipal machinery which governs them.

The change would evidently be to the advantage of the city of Ottawa and also to members of parliament who attend here from year to year, and particularly to the members of the Senate. It is no small consideration to the members of this Chamber who are appointed for life and who are spending almost half of their lives in the city of Ottawa, that they should have all the advantages which nature and art can produce in embellishing the natural beauties of so magnificent a city as Canada's present capital, and I hope that this little discussion to-day may possibly result in some advantage, not only to the city of Ottawa, but to the whole Dominion, through some scheme being carried out by which Canada's capital may be improved to a very much greater extent than under any scheme on which she has entered.

Hon. Mr. FROST—It is a very great pleasure to me, as a member of the Improvement Commission of Ottawa, to hear such favourable comments as I have listened to this afternoon on the work which has been done by that commission. It brings up the question of eventually placing the city of Ottawa under a government commission and transferring the municipal authority to that commission. The district of Columbia is ten miles square and is governed by a commission with a chairman, who is one of the senators. A couple of years ago I had the pleasure of meeting Senator Gallagher, of New Hampshire, who, by the way, is a Canadian by birth, and he gave me a great deal of information respecting the work that he was engaged in. They are spending large amounts of money, I fancy very much larger in proportion than our government, at the present time at least, would be willing to spend in the city of Ottawa. There is no doubt it would be a distinct advantage to the city of Ottawa if it was constituted a district like the district of Columbia and the expenditures were practically all from the government. As my hon. friend has just mentioned, there is a small tax levied upon the ratepayers in the district of Columbia, twelve to fourteen or fifteen mills on the dollar, with a very small assessment, but as Senator Gallagher assured me, the people of the city were just the same now under a government commission as they were under a municipal commision—they were constantly grumbling about their taxation, although they were getting hundreds of thousands of dollars expended in and about that city for the purpose of beautifying it and making it probably one of the most attractive cities in the world. In Ottawa we have a city whose natural advantages and resources for beautifying it are not excelled by those of any other city in the Dominion, or I might say on the continent of America. The commission of which I am a member has been now for several years expending a certain amount of money, but the amount which the government and parliament has voted us is not sufficient to do the work as rapidly as we would like. Sixty thousand dollars a year in a large city like this is not sufficient for the purposes for which that commission was constituted. We have had in the past two or three years to expend somewhere like two hundred and fifty to three hundred thousand dollars in land alone. If any of the hon. members will take the trouble to go down to Rockliffe park they will see very extensive works going on there. We are running a boulevard down the Ottawa river four miles; we are putting in, when our plan before us now is complete, over thirty miles of boulevard between the eastern and western parts of the city, so this will give the House some idea of what we are doing, and what is contemplated in the course of the next two or three ears. Now, in order to raise the money which we expended in the past two or three years we have had to issue bonds on the strength of the subsidy, taking some eight or ten years of the subsidy, and on the strength of these bonds we have secured the money for the purpose which I have already stated. I am sure that when the plan is completed it will be a credit to the city and a credit to the government that originated the scheme. As for the other plan my hon. friend has suggested, I am not quite certain about it. The people of this city would certainly have to lose their franchise for one thing.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—That might be a good thing.

Hon. Mr. FROST—My hon. friend thinks it might be a good thing. They would perhaps demur to that at first. The people in the district of Columbia regret that they have no franchise. They are very anxious for it, and for that reason thousands of the civil servants of the government at Washington leave that city at every election, and travel to their homes, to the most distant parts of the country, for the privilege of voting. A vote is a privilege which every man prizes as a rule, but they feel that they should have their vote, and that is one of the drawbacks which Senator Gallinger said was often regretted, that the people of the city did not have a vote. However, there is no doubt that if ten miles square were taken about the city of Ottawa, crossing into the province of Quebec, it might be a nice thing for the country, but it certainly would be a very expensive and very onerous upon the exchequer of the country. There would be no end to the demand. Senator Galligher assured me that in all parts of that district, outside of the city, there were demands for boulevards and parks and other things that required a very large expenditure, and we would have to be very careful in taking up a question of that kind at the present time, in the present condition and present state of the finances of this country. As my hon. friend from Belleville has said, the finances are booming, but while the finances are booming the expenditure of the country is also booming, and it will require every dollar we are collecting at the present time out of our revenues, and for my part I think if the government of the country—and I should like to call the attention of my hon. friend the Minister of Trade and Commerce to this statement—if the government would see their way clear to increase the subsidy a little, not a great deal, $20,000 or $30,000 per year for the benefit of the improvement commission, I believe that it would not be more than five or ten years at the very outside, before we would make the city of Ottawa one of the most delightful places to be found on the continent of America.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT—As my hon. friend has appealed to me, I would just say that I have listened with extreme gratification to the unanimous encomiums passed by both sides of the House on the work of the commissioners, and I think that in no case has it been better deserved. Those who have known Ottawa as I have done, for a matter of forty years, will recognize the enormous improvement that has been made and the scale on which the work has been carried out. I have seen a good many capital cities in my time, and I think for its size, and having reference to the time these commissioners have been at work, and to the resources at their disposal, that no money was ever better expended or produced better results than the money that has been invested so far by these commissioners in beautifying the city and suburbs of Ottawa. I think it is a thing in which we all, as Canadians, should be proud and are proud, and I can say that visitors to Ottawa who have travelled very extensively over the whole four quarters of the globe have assured me again and again that they have never seen a city in which the natural advantages were greater, or, if the plans of the commissioners are carried out, more skilfully made use of than has been done in the present case. As to the other matter my hon. friend suggested, fortunately or unfortunately this House is not allowed to dispose of the public moneys, and therefore I feel that my mouth is closed on the question other than saying that I feel perfectly certain from what I have seen of the work, that any money placed at the disposal of the Improvement Commission by parliament, will be well spent.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I made no observation whatever with regard to the idea at all. I merely called attention to the fact that I considered it utterly impossible to carry out such a project on the line suggested by the hon. gentleman, following the example of the district of Columbia. I can scarcely realize the idea that free people would surrender their institutions.

The SPEAKER (Hon. Mr. Power)—I understand that it is intended that the second reading of this Bill will be postponed until the House meets this evening.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

PRIVY COUNCILLORS ANNUITIES ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

FIRST READING.

A message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (220) An Act to repeal the Act respecting annuities to certain Privy Councillors.

The Bill was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I suppose this Bill will follow the same course as the previous one, and the second reading will be postponed until evening ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, I will make a few comments upon it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There is nothing before the House.

The SPEAKER—Does the hon. gentleman make the same motion as in the case of the last Bill for the suspension of rule 41 ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I object to that.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—There is no sense in objecting.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—This is a Bill of three lines. Everybody knows the purport of it, and there can be no possible misunderstanding in regard to it. I have never known any hon. gentleman to take exception to the usual procedure. When I was on the other side of the House I never invoked these rules when the government were passing Bills on the last day of the session, and I hope the hon. gentleman will not on the present occasion press his objection.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I have a right to object, and I exercise my right.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I will not press the second reading. If after I make my statement hon. gentleman choose to let the matter stand, well and good.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I do not think there is any rule to prevent the hon. gentleman making whatever observations he desires on the first reading.

The SPEAKER (Hon. Mr. Power)—There is nothing before the House. The hon. gentleman from Stadacona has exercised his right to object to the suspension of the rule.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—It is to be earnestly hoped that our hon. friend will not press his rules. We are getting near the close of the session, and he should be charitable.

The SPEAKER (Hon. Mr. Power)—There is nothing before the House.

It being six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

The House resumed consideration of the Supply Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is not my intention to occupy the time of the Senate by entering into a discussion on the Supply Bill. I think the hon. gentleman told us that the total amount voted for the nine months is seventy odd million dollars, which would mean about ninety-six millions for the year. That is about all the information that was given. I should like to ask the hon. Secretary of State if he could tell us how much has been paid out for bonuses, and how much for rent in the city of Ottawa?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I could not tell from memory. That information was asked for in the other Chamber, and a return was brought down. It was a considerable amount. I would not feel safe in naming it without having the figures before me.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Has the hon. gentleman no recollection of the amount paid in bounties ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I read a statement, which was no doubt given to the press, of the amount expended on capital account. That included bounties. The bounties in the past year were $2,109,898. In the preceding year they amounted to only $1,684,-333. The figure itself in each individual case was diminished, because the hon. gentleman will remember that when the bounty was first given some years ago there was to be a reduction. It has got down now, I think, to 55 per cent. I have here the amount expended on capital account on the various public works.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My principal reason for calling attention to the bounties is because that was one of the expenditures on the part of the late government which was condemned in such vigorous terms by the hon. gentleman and his colleagues. Bounties were denounced as robbery. Scarcely any adjective can be mentioned that was not used to denounce the system of paying bounties. What surprises me is that bounties should be charged to capital account. I understood capital account to mean expenditures upon works—something of a permanent character.

And why a bounty, which is taken from the revenue for the year—and there is an end to it at the end of the year—should be charged to capital account must be, I think, somewhat of a puzzle to financiers. The idea of charging a bounty to capital account. You might just as well charge the sessional indemnity to capital account, and if your books are kept in that manner you can easily have a surplus of ten, twelve, fifteen or twenty million dollars, if you will only carry the principle a little further. I hardly know what to term it, but it certainly has never been done by any previous government, and should not be done by this one. The account paid for rent is something that I cannot understand. I cannot conceive that the public business has increased in such proportions as to necessitate the extra room that has been required in the city of Ottawa for the accommodation of the clerks. The statement made by the Minister of Customs a few days ago was that we were paying $55,351.86 in rents to different landlords in this city for buildings in which to stow away—I do not hesitate to say that—the extra number of men that have been taken into the service, and who are living at the expense of the country. What has occurred in the way of the increase of business that can justify the expenditure of that amount of money annually, representing a capital at three per cent to an amount within a few dollars of two million? In my somewhat long experience of government I cannot conceive why increased room has been found necessary to the extent to which I have called the attention of the Senate, in the last ten years. I merely call attention to it because it seemed to me to be a reckless expenditure which is totally unjustifiable. I have had but a few minutes to look at this Bill, and I find that the government have almost raked the whole country to find places in which to expend money. There are no less than 315 items for bridges and wharfs throughout the country. It is fortunate for Nova Scotia that the Finance Minister is from that province. I find that the estimates contain no less than 141 items for different works in that province alone. Whether they take in all the little creeks that are about the country, the harbours, rivers and lakes, I cannot say. Then if you go to Prince Edward Island, there are about 26 items. I suppose, taking the size of the island, that is proportionate, but scarcely so, because that province is altogether surrounded by water. Every little nook and corner, even places where there is no water, are included, as has been proved in the other House. The cows pasture on the site of some of those wharfs in the summer; of course, when a flood comes there may be water enough to float a scow. The money which is now taken from the coffers of the country is used for the building of a bridge ostensibly for a wharf, but you might just as well go into the province of Ontario and the province of Quebec and build bridges across the different creeks in the rural sections of the country. It would be as justifiable to do so as in the cases I have referred to. Then if you come to New Brunswick, we find there are 33 items of this character; in Quebec, 113; and in Ontario, 67. But what is a puzzle to me is that on page 43 of the estimates there is a charge under the head of Ontario of $10,000 for Winnipeg river improvements. Why this is charged to Ontario I do not know. It must be a blunder on the part of somebody; but there it is, and I have yet to learn that Winnipeg river is in Ontario. For Manitoba there are only 13 items; for the Northwest Territories, 13; and for British Columbia, 19, making a total number of 315 items under the head of harbours and rivers, totting up to a very large sum. If I had had a little more leisure to look up these items, I could occupy a long time in showing the recklessness with which the business of the country is being carried on. There is one thing we do know, growing time as it may be, that in the ten years the present government have been in power they have increased the annual expenditure from about $42,000,000 to $96,000,000 per annum. What it will be if they should remain in power for another five years, time alone can tell.

But there appears to be a recklessness in the expenditure of money now that is unprecedented. I do not know whether my hon. friend from Wellington has had time to give any attention to these estimates. If he has, he will find that very objectionable item 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary,' appearing half a dozen or a dozen times in every department except the one presided over by my hon. friend opposite, to justify increases in salaries. In fact, the Civil Service Act as it stands on the statute-book is a nullity, utterly useless and it would be much more honourable and much more in accord with the proper conduct of the business of this country if they would repeal the law so as not to find it necessary on every occasion when they want to increase a civil servant's salary or appoint some one to the service who has not the qualification necessary if the law be carried out, and appoint any one they please. I know that tu quoque argument may be used—you have been just as bad. I admit there were occasions on which the same language was used by the previous government: 'Notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act to the contrary,' but not to anything like the same extent that it has been carried by those who so vigorously condemned the practice, and this in direct violation of the law. I admit frankly there were cases in which it was found necessary both by the past government and by the present government, in order to secure the services of an officer who has not passed the civil service examination, but whose ability and education and fitness justify the departure from the rule; but the indiscriminate manner in which it has been done by the present government is what I have been complaining of. I should like also to ask the Secretary of State why they have found it necessary to appoint an assistant to the deputy minister of Finance? I notice provision is made in the estimates for a deputy Finance Minister, who is to be appointed at $4,000 per annum, to take the place of Mr. Courtney who has intimated his desire to retire from the service. I know that that gentleman has been anxious to retire for a number of years. Although he looks like a robust, healthy man, his health is not of such a character as those who know his ability and worth in the position he holds would like it to be, but I learn from these estimates and the speeches made, that a deputy minister of Finance is to be appointed to take the position upon the superannuation of Mr. Courtney, and then there is an additional sum of $3,200 for a deputy to the deputy. Has the work of the department increased so enormously as to justify that?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Well, perhaps so. Perhaps the fact of your having to raise and spend $96,000,000 instead of $46,000,000 may justify it, but I have yet to learn that it is any more trouble or any more work to go to the English market and borrow $50,000,000 than it would be to borrow $25,000,000, or that there is any more work in placing it before the financiers and money-lenders of Europe than if you were borrowing only $10,000,000 or $15,000,000. The same criticism applies also to the increase in the Customs Department. There is no more work in making an entry upon which $10,000 duty is collected, than there is in collecting a thousand dollars. The only possible difference would be in the number of items which are entered, but when you have large entries they are generally importations by the wholesale merchants. Wholesale merchants import into the country in large quantities, and it is no more trouble to write an entry of ten thousand bales of cotton than it is to write an entry for one bale of cotton, though the value is much larger. So it must be with the Finance Department. My experience in the Finance Department is, and has been, and I have repeated it over and over again, that it does not involve one-twentieth part of the work that there is for a Minister of Customs or Minister of Inland Revenue or the Minister of Railways and Canals or of Public Works. It was my duty on many occasions, when Sir Leonard Tilly in particular, and other Ministers of Finance had to leave the country, either on business or on pleasure, to administer that department, and I have had some little experience of what work there is in it. I do not, therefore, hesitate a moment to make a comparison, so far as work is concerned, between the departments to which I have referred and the Finance Minister's Department, and from my experience and knowledge of what has been done in the past I am at a loss to know, until an explanation is given, why they should require two deputy heads for that department. You could understand two deputy heads for the Customs or the Trade and Commerce, because they are two distinct departments, although I think, I not only think, but I know, that if I had the opportunity to reorganize this department again it could be done under one head just as well as two, and I have been in both of them and organized the one and in the other some thirteen years, and if proper practical experience were brought to bear, I do not hesitate to say that in many cases the two could be amalgamated, and with one head and two deputies could manage the business well. But in the Finance Department we are now to have a deputy head and a deputy to the deputy. I simply rose for the purpose of calling attention to one or two matters, and to ask one or two questions, but having paid some little attention to these matters I thought it well, as the ideas suggested themselves to me, to call attention to what I feel and think the country would feel if they would only take the trouble to look at it, is extraordinarily extravagant management of the business of the whole country. If you look at the Auditor General's Report you will find thousands and thousands of dollars charged to capital account which should be placed under revenue account, and charged to the expenditure of the year. The repairs to the railways, the repairs to public buildings, which are not in themselves new works, should be charged, not to capital account, but to revenue account, and the capital account should be confined exclusively to additions to public buildings or new public buildings, because they are always charged to capital account with railways and canals and works of that kind. I do not know that we have a quorum in the House, but I am not going to call the Speaker's attention to the fact. It is not pleasant always to talk to put oneself on record to empty benches, but I venture the assertion that if hon. gentlemen present will take the Auditor General's Report and scan it carefully they will find hundreds of thousands of dollars are charged to capital account that legitimately belong to the current expenditure of the year.

We have been told just now, and it is a most extraordinary statement, that the bonuses which are paid for the production of steel rails and for beet root sugar and other articles to which that law applies, are actually charged to capital account. You may succeed in establishing an industry which I hope will flourish long after the bonus ceases, but that is not a reason why the expenditure should be charged to capital account. On the whole, it is fortunate that the crop throughout the country has been abundant and that Providence has smiled upon this country in the last few years. Instead of having droughts and frosts in Manitoba and the Northwest Territories which drove people out of the country, there has been an ample supply of rain producing very large crops and consequently a prosperity which has induced immigrants to go into that country who never would have gone under any other circumstances. I can only hope that this may continue, but while it may continue there is no justification for doubling and quadrupling—as will soon be the case at the present rate—the expenditure of the country. The expenditure which was declared ten years ago to be 'bleeding the people white,' has been doubled now, although the population has not been doubled; and what it will be in the future after the hundred millions of money have been spent in connection with the construction of the Grand Trunk Pacific, perhaps I may not live to see. Let me hope that the result—although it is only a hope—of the construction of the road may be equal in return and benefits to the cost of construction and maintenance of that national highway. If it is, I dare say if I should be alive at that time, I will do precisely what those who condemned the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway at the time, are now doing—acknowledge my error. But until that result does follow, with those who opposed what I consider a wild scheme, so far as the northern part of this country is concerned, not knowing where the road was going or is to go, or what it will cost, I shall consider that a mistake was made. These are a few of the suggestions that have come to my mind in rising simply to ask the question. I may as well say I did not expect to get an answer. It is not, unfortunately, the practice of the hon. Secretary of State when important questions of this kind are brought before the Senate, to supply the information which should be laid before the House in justifying them to record their votes in favour of these appropriations. If we had power to deal with these questions further than to approve of or disapprove of them we might occupy more time and give more attention to them and point out what I was almost going to say are the iniquities perpetrated under these appropriations which have been made. I could go on and detail many of them which, under ordinary circumstances, would shock the moral sense of the people, but they have become so used to it, that they do not mind it at all. The expenditures are of the character that I have called attention to. Evidence and exposures of late justify all the remarks I have made and show that there has been a reckless expenditure of money which it is to be hoped the people will resent whenever they have another opportunity.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I do not propose to discuss the financial question this evening. It has not been usual for the leader of this House ever to discuss it. I know for eighteen years when I sat on the other side of the House the gentleman who represented the government here laughed at me when I asked for an explanation. I do not remember Sir Alexander Campbell on any occasion giving one iota of information. The Supply Bill generally came to us shortly before the Governor General arrived, and sometimes I indulged in some slight criticism and that was the end of it. The Bill passed through its readings and was carried. I am always willing to give information, but I cannot be possessed of the details of all the departments of the government. I flatter myself that I know as much of all of them as most ministers have known in the past, but at the same time the departments of the government of Canada have got to be pretty large institutions. I admit they are heavy spending institutions, but they are also heavy receiving institutions. The business of the government has more than doubled, and the general business of the country more than quadrupled since my hon. friend and his colleagues occupied seats on this side of the House. Does he mean to tell me that he could conduct the Customs Department to-day with the staff he had in 1896? I say it would be absolutely impossible. In 1885 the revenue from customs was a little over $19,000,000; in 1895 it had gone down to $17,000,000. In all that period of ten years it was an easy matter to govern and administer the department with the same staff, but do you mean to tell me that when the work has more than doubled and the entries more than doubled the work could be done without increasing the staff. It is the increase in the number of entries that has caused the work. I do not think there could be a more economical man than Mr. Paterson at the head of the Customs. I am sure he would not allow a single supernumerary. He has excellent men on his staff. I think he has the same commissioner that my hon. friend had and a number of the same staff. They are to-day harder worked than they were when my hon. frend was at the head of the department. In 1895 the revenue from customs was $17,000,000, but what was it in 1905? It was $42,000,000 and last year it was $45,000,000. Do you mean to tell me that under the circumstance you could carry on the business of the department with the same staff? Take as an illustration other departments. The average number of immigrants arriving annually used to be from eight to ten thousand. This last year they numbered 175,000. Do you contend that you could regulate that department with the same staff, with the largely increased number of persons to be looked after on their arrival at St. John or Quebec or wherever they come in that took care of 8,000? Then take the number of homesteads. They have increased in the same proportion and require a staff to look after them. That is simply an illustration. What should this government have done when they found the spending of the money was simply adding to the revenue of the country? The more extravagant this country became in the eyes of the opposition, the more money it received. There must be some business in that. It did not occur in the preceding ten years. My hon. friend smiles, but it is unanswerable. I have given two illustrations, the increase in immigration from 8,000 to 175,000. I have not got in my mind the number of homestead entries, but for years and years under the administration before 1896 the homestead entries were absolutely nothing, whereas now they require a large staff of the Interior Department to look after them.

Now it requires a staff involving a large expenditure of money, but we do not tax the people of the country to obtain that money. We lowered the tariff, we put a number of articles on the free list. The reduction was so great that in 1897 the opposition cried out that the industries of the country were going to be ruined. On the contrary, they have all flourished and expanded; that is admitted on all hands. Take the case of my own department in 1895 and 1896; the receipts of the department were, I think about $5,000 a year. During the current year the receipts will be about $100,000. The business now cannot be done with the same staff as formerly, although I have increased my staff probably to a less extent than any other department. That is an evidence of the extraordinary expansion of the business of the country. In some instances it is ten times greater than it was before the change of government. The general trade, exports and imports, has more than doubled in the ten years. You cannot point to any period of ten years in the history of the country where any such increase can be shown. For the preceding ten years everything was at a standstill, absolutely stagnant. Take the case of the Post Office Department. At the time Sir William Mulock proposed to reduce the postage, the opposition said 'Oh, you cannot do that.' The average deficit during a long series of years was about $750,000 and yet this year I think, speaking from memory, there is nearly a million of a surplus, together with a reduction in postages to Great Britain, reductions in every direction. One third of the postage has been taken off all domestic letters. Do you tell me that if business which is expending say $100,000 if it doubles that expenditure it will not have to increase its staff? I do not think the Finance Department has increased relatively to the amount of extra business it has had to do. No man could be more economical or prudent than the present minister, Mr. Fielding, but he cannot get the people he wants at the prices he is able to offer. We kept Mr. Courtney there under protest, because the minister could not get a man to put in his place. Mr. Fielding thought two years ago that he had secured the right man, a Mr. Ross, a capital man. He was there only three or four months, when one of the new banks picked him up. We could not begin to give him his price.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I found no fault with the amount paid to Mr. Courtney or any one else in that department.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman cited the Finance Department, and said he knew something about it, and that the expense was too great; that there were too many clerks. I say they have not enough staff there, and I give as a proof of it that they cannot get the man they want. They are not able to obtain him at any figure that parliament would recognize, when bank managers are getting $10,000, $15,000 and $25,000 a year. Mr. Ross came in on an engagement, but the moment it was known that he was a good accountant, he was picked up, as all good accountants are, at three or four times the amount the government are prepared to pay. Capacity and ability in Canada to-day demand a price that no government could pay. As it is now, we pay some of our officials a good deal more than the ministers themselves receive. That is a curious state of things, but it is the fact. A first-class engineer cannot be had for the prices that were paid ten years ago. They charge double or treble the amounts. It is all very well to say you should not pay it, but the companies are looking for the best men and they do not stop at $10,000 or $15,000 a year to get them. I do not suppose it is necessary to give any figures with regard to the trade of this country. It has more than doubled, and that, of course, is the very best standard by which to judge of the increase in expenditure; any man who doubles his business requires also to double his staff, and that applies more particularly to the administration of departments, because it involves the doubling of the correspondence and of every other service in the administration of the department. I had the statutes for 1892 on my table at the time my hon. friend from British Columbia was commenting on Nova Scotia. On looking at them, I find that in 1892, when the revenue was very much smaller than it is to-day, Nova Scotia, under the head of harbours and rivers, had between 50 and 60 items in the estimates. That is fourteeen years ago. I say that with the revenue we are now in receipt of, it is only reasonable that the provinces should expect to receive a fair proportion back again.

Our receipts have gone up $12,000,000 over last year. You mean to tell me that a progressive country like Canada should be paying off the debt—that would be the suggestion my hon. friend would make I suppose—instead of investing its surplus in railways and aiding and developing various public enterprises? I think it would be too absurd under present conditions, because Canada has abundant resources; all it wants is developing, and it is the duty of the government to be foremost in that developing work, and any money they have to spare they should place where it is going to add to the prosperity of the whole country. That is what this government is doing, and that is why they have not hesitated to go into large expenditure.

If you run over in your own mind what we have done with the money, you will find it amounts to a good deal. The completion of the canal system, the enlargement of them, the construction of the railways—there are three transcontinental railways. The opening up of sections of the country that were terra incognita at the time my hon. friend was in the government. All these things show the way in which it was the duty of the government to spend the money of the people. I do not say that in every instance the money has been wisely spent, because even in conducting one's private business you cannot always avoid making mistakes. They will occur, and they are more likely to occur with governments than with individuals, because you cannot have the same supervision; but I say, as a general thing, taking into account the sums of money we have had to handle, the number of mistakes has not been enough to warrant any severe criticism.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have noticed not only on this occasion, but on others, that the Secretary of State has a happy faculty of fighting a phantom. He has a very happy faculty of building up a straw man and knocking him down. The hon. gentleman occupied some ten or fifteen minutes arguing the necessity for paying the officials well. Not one word did I utter from the time I rose to the time I resumed my seat about paying the officials.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The hon. gentleman spoke of the offices we filled.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I spoke of the additions. I said nothing about salaries. I am fully in accord with the hon. Secretary of State, that where you secure a good man you should pay him a good salary. I never believed—and I have not changed my opinion yet—that Mr. Courtney received the salary he should have had, and that he could have commanded in any financial establishment in the country. I have always been an advocate of the principle of paying good men good salaries. That is not what I complain of. What I said was that I failed to recognize the necessity of an assistant to the deputy minister. There was no necessity for trying to shoulder upon me an argument which I never used, and as for the illustration the hon. gentleman gave us in reference to Nova Scotia—well if there were 50 at the time he speaks of, there are 141 now, so that you have three times as many.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Are there three times as many harbours that it is necessary to look after than there were, and if so by what means were they created? The hon. gentleman said that the members of the opposition condemned the government for reduction of the tariff. The opposition always contended that had the government reduced the tariff and carried out their pledges to the people they would have ruined all the industries. That is the position they have taken, and the only industry in which the government did reduce the tariff materially has been ruined in this country, and that is the woollen manufacturers. The hon. gentleman knows just as well as I do that they increased the duties on the other articles the first year they came into power, and then, like the pawnbroker's shop, put a notice in the window 'reduced from the original price' from the larger to the smaller. The government increased the duty upon some articles 33⅓ per cent and then promised the people by way of rebate on all goods coming under the preferential tariff to deduct 12½ per cent, and next year 25 per cent, and now it is 33⅓ per cent, so that really with the 33⅓ per cent taken off goods imported under the preferential tariff, it is only a protection about 12½ per cent over and above what you denounced as a protective tariff, and it was much larger for the first year, and larger under the 25 per cent reduction than it was under the old tariff, and the 33⅓ per cent makes it about 2½ less. That is the extent to which the present government has reduced the tariff upon the imports from other countries. We have heard that story told over and over again, but you fail to tell the whole truth and in failing to tell the whole truth you leave a false impression upon the minds of the people who both hear and read the statement without knowing the facts.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—My hon. friend, in his previous address, made some reference to me, and I ask the privilege of making a few remarks. He spoke with regard to the civil service and with regard to the never ending use of the expression in the estimates 'notwithstanding anything in the Civil Service Act.' I admit that during the time I was in opposition in the House of Commons I criticised very severely and pointedly the abuse of that expression in dealing with the civil service. Our civil service was not then, nor is not now, in a satisfactory condition. It never has been since confederation, in my humble opinion. The hon. gentleman when in power appointed no less than two commissions to investigate the condition of the civil service with a view of putting it on a better footing than it was. There was never any one of the methods recommended by these reports adopted. One report recommended that there should be a civil service board of supervisers, men that would take charge virtually of the civil service, and that would introduce a system of appointments and promotions upon merit and take it to some extent, if not altogether, out of the hands of the government.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Quite correct. That report was never acted upon either by the late government or the present one.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—It was recommended that it should be adopted. It has not been acted upon by the present government nor by its predecessors.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL——If the hon. gentleman had the same experience that I have had and the experience the Secretary of State has had, he would not give utterance to the expressions which he has in reference to that being carried out, because it is impracticable in the interests of the service.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Whether it was or not, the commission was appointed for the purpose of looking into the civil service with a view of putting it on a permanent basis, and in some way securing a better and more efficient and cheaper service, but the government never made any effort in that direction. They just carried it on from year to year making appointments and making additions to the staffs, and then making promotions and increased salaries notwithstanding anything contained in the Civil Service Act, and so we went on from year to year, and I am sorry to have to confess we are continuing in the same way still. I believe that the present Civil Service Act should be abolished and a new system introduced. What should it be? I would venture to say that there is not a minister of the Crown to-day who is not bored every day with letters from civil servants urging and pressing for increases. And members of parliament are everlastingly bored with applications and letters urging and pleading for increases. Half the time of a member of parliament is taken up answering those appeals, calling to see ministers, dancing attendance on them at their offices and trying to please those who are looking for increases. That condition of things should not continue. The civil service should be prohibited from writing either to a minister or a member of parliament urging and coaxing for an increase. Increases should be given on the basis of merit, efficiency and ability. Those who render faithful and efficient service to the country should be considered when vacancies take place, and should get promotions. When vacancies are filled, it should be on the principle of recognition of merit and not on the principle of political influence. Until you do that, you will never have a civil service in this country to which the people are entitled. I venture to say, that if we would abolish the present system and put the civil service on a proper basis we would save to this country a million dollars a year in that item alone. I admit the government has had a great deal to do; they have made a good many commendable reforms, and I hope when time and opportunity will permit of their taking hold of it, they will take up this question of the civil service and put it on a proper basis. Another thing to which my hon. friend drew attention was the question of charging to capital account items which should be charged to revenue. I am sorry to say that principle did not begin yesterday or the year before. It was not introduced by the present government. Away back year after year we complained of that principle being violated in connection with the Intercolonial Railway. I remember at one time when Sir Charles Tupper was Minister of Railways, a lot of frame or board snow sheds got burned down by a fire on the Intercolonial Railway, and the new snow sheds put up to replace them were charged to capital account.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—That was right.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Sir Chas. Tupper asked us to accept the new snow sheds in lieu of those that had been burned down, and charged them to capital account.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That was right if they were the same kind.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—No, the expenditure should have been charged to working expenses. My hon. friend from Belleville has also criticised the Intercolonial Railway. I have said, and I still adhere to it, that the Intercolonial Railway will never render the return to the country that it should render, until it is put under an independent commission. It never will pay while it is run as a political institution. I criticised the Intercolonial Railway year after year when I sat in the House of Commons and pointed out where the extravagance was plainly to be seen in the expenditure on that road, but no improvement took place. It has now gone to that extent that it is evidently not hoped to make the Intercolonial Railway pay a revenue to this country for the enormous amount sunk in it. I noticed a short time ago the minister expressed the hope that the Intercolonial Railway would come to the point where it would pay running expenses. Some have gone so far as to say that the canals should be an off-set to the Intercolonial Railway. That is absurd. The canals were here long before there was an Intercolonial Railway. Some of the canals were built by the British government, and did good service before there was a railway at all. Talk of off-setting the one against the other is folly. I give Mr. Emmerson credit for making an effort to get a better financial return from the Intercolonial Railway. I hope he may succeed, but it never will come up to the standard it should reach until it is put under an independent board of commissioners or removed absolutely or entirely from under political management. In Mr. Emmerson's speech with regard to the Intercolonial Railway, he admitted that the people of Nova Scotia, for instance, are getting a service for 60 cents on the dollar, which costs the people of Ontario in the west one dollar. We are paying in the older provinces one dollar for what the people of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick are getting for 60 cents.

In addition to that, we are paying the interest on $60,000,000 or $70,000,000 a year at about 3 per cent—a little over $2,000,000 a year on the debt which has been created to produce it; and after all we have to contribute towards the working expenses. Something should be done; a determined effort should be made to take that road out of the miserable rut in which it has run for years and place it on a basis where we should get some return for the money sunk in it. My hon. friend said something in regard to canals. Our canals unquestionably render us a great deal of service, and I believe they will be of more service in the future than in the past. I have not the slightest doubt but that the canals of Canada will yet be one of the best assets of the Dominion and will ensure cheap transportation for the enormous produce of the great west. The United States is the greatest country on earth for railways and they are to-day taking up the question of canals anew. They spent over $200,000,000 on canals before they had a railway at all. For a time those canals have lain idle, but now the Americans are beginning to extend their canal system. In the State of New York, they have one of the most efficient lines of Railway on the continent,—the New York Central, but, although that railway has adopted methods of carrying grain which are unequalled by any other road, New York is so afraid that trade will follow the course of our canals and lakes and eventually reach Montreal and Quebec, going to the European market through that avenue, that they are going to spend something over $100,000,000 to deepen the canal from Buffalo to Albany, in order to secure to New York a continuation of the advantages which she has enjoyed in the past in having a very cheap carrying trade. Our canals will undoubtedly be an advantage to us in the future, and I hope to live to hear at least of the construction of the Georgian bay canal. That would be in the interest of Canada a magnificent undertaking. I believe that it would accomplish a great deal if it could be carried out. If we were to continue to develop for the next five or ten years at our present rate of progress, I would not be at all surprised to see Canada undertake the construction of that canal in order to facilitate the transportation of the produce of the west by the cheapest possible methods to our own ports in the east. I did not intend to speak as long as I have; if my hon. friend had not stirred me up I do not think I would have said anything, but he reminds me of old days. I used to endeavour to discharge my duty when I was in opposition in the House of Commons. I felt that I owed my country a debt, and I endeavoured to pay that debt. If there is one thing that any opposition is supposed to do it is to criticise expenditure, and I am glad to know that our friends in the House of Commons are getting educated in the discharge of that duty. They have not reached the standard of perfection which I hope to see them reach. I would like to see them criticise exhaustively and minutely every expenditure, and if the government do what is wrong I want to see it pointed out. The country has just as much right to expect the performance of that duty on the part of the opposition as to expect faithful administration on the part of the government. I hope my hon. friends will continue to criticise, and where there is any evidence that things are not conducted on a careful and economical basis it is their duty to point out the fact. We are all proud of the progress Canada has made, and I admit the truth of what the hon. Secretary of State says, that when the business increases it is necessary to increase the expenditure. The business of the country is just like the business of a firm or an individual. When a man extends his trade, he must employ more hands and expend more money. The business of the country has been extending very rapidly, and the government have been endeavouring to overtake it, as it is their duty to do. If they have been extravagant, it is right that the country should know it. I earnestly hope that the affairs of the country will be conducted carefully and that the basis upon which we start in the race to become a great country will be one creditable to ourselves and to the government in power. I care not who it may be.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I do not propose to enter upon the discussion at all, but I always regret when a member from the west thinks it necessary in speaking of the Intercolonial Railway to make reference to the people of the east as if they were poor relations who were getting something out of the purse of their richer brothers from the west. My hon. friend's reference to the Intercolonial Railway might have been handled somewhat differently and we would have felt better affected towards him. He was over the Intercolonial Railway not very long ago, and I think he is not justified in intimating in any way whatever that the people of the maritime provinces are getting any special advantage in connection with that railway over the people of the west.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I simply intimated what Mr. Emmerson said. It is not my opinion. Read his speech.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—The hon. gentleman went on in the same breath to make it appear as though the interest on the Intercolonial Railway was being paid by the people of the western part of Canada. Of course that is an error.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—I did not represent that.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—The effect of the way in which my hon. friend stated it, was to convey that impression. I do not suppose he intended to do so.

Hon Mr. McMULLEN—I did not state it in that way at all. I said the Intercolonial Railway had to be paid by this country ; so it has.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—It is hardly worth while to bandy words. My hon. friend was making it appear that the people of the maritime provinces were getting for 60 cents something which cost the people of the west $1. And then he went on in the same breath to say that in addition to that 'we are paying the interest.' I do not know whether my hon. friend always weighs his words ; sometimes I think he does, and a good many times I think he does not. This perhaps was one of the latter times.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—If the hon. gentleman will look over my utterances in this House, he will find them as correct as his own.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—I do not wish to offend my hon. friend at all. I call attention to the matter because it excites feeling in the country when a gentleman makes statements in that way. My hon. friend followed that up by reference to the canals of the country. While it is no harm perhaps to say that the expense of the canals is borne by the whole people, we in the maritime provinces pay our share of that expense whatever it may be. If the Georgian bay canal is built, we will pay our share of that, although I do not suppose we in the east will derive the direct benefit which you in the west will receive; but if the whole country is advantaged thereby, we will cheerfully bear our share of the burden. I think my hon. friend's criticism might have been made in a more generous spirit, and I hope he will think on this when he addresses the House again.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read a second time.

On motion for the third reading of the Bill.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I desire to call the attention of the Secretary of State to the condition of the attendance in the House. It is discreditable to the Senate that we should be passing a Bill of the magnitude of the present Supply Bill with scarcely a quorum in the House. Part of the time during which I was speaking, and part of the time the hon. gentleman was addressing the House, there was not a quorum, and yet with a beggarly attendance of ten or twelve senators we are voting $75,000,000 of money. I am not going tc arouse my hon. friend from Wellington now, because I am going to agree with him. It is a pleasure to me to arouse him once in a while, because I like to hear the the manner in which he used to address the House of Commons in old times. It is always a pleasure to old timers to listen to his sweet tones, and more particularly when he is directing his fire against some member of the opposition. However, what I was going to say was, that I hope the hon. Secretary of State will introduce a Bill next session repealing that portion of the Indemnity Act which allows a deduction of 15 days. I do not hesitate to say that I think it is an outrage. Speaking for myself alone, the most I have ever lost in the way of attendance during any one session has been four days, except on one occasion when I had to go to California in connection with a family affliction. I have always deemed it my duty to come at the beginning of the session and stay until its end; but we have dozens of both senators and commoners, the moment they put in the required 31 days, and can count the 15 days allowance, are off attending to other business. A stop should be put to that. We have an exhibition of it to-night. When this Bill is passed, we have other Bills coming up affecting the House, imposing enormous penalties on members who violate the law when it is passed, and we are placing that on the statute-book with only 8 or 10 senators out of 100 present. I take this opportunity to speak strongly on the subject, and I hope the hon. Secretary of State will impress upon his colleagues the necessity of changing the law and instead of giving the 15 days allowance, impose a penalty of double the amount they should get.

Hon. Mr. McMULLEN—Hear, hear.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If my hon. friend will introduce a Bill to that effect I will assist him and let us test the result. There may be many of my colleagues with whom I am on intimate terms who will be hard hit by the language I am using, but it is about time for those senators who cannot attend to their business to resign and let others take their place who are prepared to serve the country better.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the third time.

The SPEAKER—The Bill has been read the third time and is now ready to pass.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Before this Bill passes the third reading, I desire to say a word on this very solemn occasion——

The SPEAKER (Mr. Power)—I would appeal to the hon. gentleman that it is not the practice to have a debate on the motion for the Bill to pass.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I was only saying a word of approbation.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The hon. gentleman is quite right. There is no stage of a public or private Bill through which it passes that every member of the Senate or the House of Commons has not a right to speak or discuss it.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I wish to ask, when I look around and see the scant number of senators in attendance at the close of the session, what does it mean? Either that they have no idea what their position is, or they have no regard for the oath they have taken to be faithful to the interests of this country. I approve to the utmost degree of what the veteran statesman, the hon. member from Belleville has said. I think his words are words of wisdom, I think it is a reflection on this House to see so small a number of senators present to-night. French members, English members and the hon. members from Messapotamia and God knows where are not here to give their vote on a very important Bill of this session. Is not the Senate unworthy of its mission? Is it not time to call a halt and to say that we shall in the future act differently. I can remember scenes like this in times gone by. I know the hon. Secretary of State is delighted to get rid of the measure in a very peaceful manner, without more trouble. We have appointed a young man to lead the opposition; he is a man of great ability, a young man who has done his duty with extreme good sense and with extraordinary wisdom. He has been vigilant and assiduous, and he has conducted matters to the best of his ability in the political views which he has set forth in the Senate on public questions. I think it is a bounden duty of this Senate to say to this young man 'Go on; you have done well'; you have performed a good and noble work in this year 1906' and I am sure the hon. Secretary of State will corroborate every word of what has been said, that the hon. member for Calgary has been a model member for this House, that he has performed his duty with singular attention and singular industry and with singular wisdom. I am glad for Canada that a young man such as he is, reared up in this northwest country of ours, in so remote a place as Calgary, has been found to lead the opposition. The young men of the west are scions of a noble race, men who esteem liberty and freedom and men who will do their duty to this country in any station in life in which they may be placed. There is one particular feature that pervades this House and I am sorry I am so unwell that I cannot give it to hon. gentleman with all the force I would desire. There is a western spirit which has prevaded this House.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—A spirit of resurection a spirit of improvement, and we have found these gentlemen from the west have not been too forward, have not been too bold; we have kept them in restraint, and I tell them that the people of Ontario are bound to keep them in restraint and I say we will breed a race of statesmen—mark my words—who will be able to handle this country in any emergency which may arise. In the past, when an emergency arose, who rescued the country from the slough of despond?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The west did.

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—Western Canada. Who rescued this country and placed it in the position in which it should be? Who was the active guiding spirit in the Treaty of Washington? It was a young Canadian, and if a young Canadian had had the guiding hand when Ashburton and other men like him had formed a treaty between the British government and the United States there would have been a different tale to tell. There would not have been the blot on the map of Canada which we see on the south eastern part of New Brunswick. I wish to ask the House to pardon me, as exuberance is generally pardonable in a young man at the close of the session. I took the liberty of speaking, but had not the good manners to ask what the Senate was discussing. Perhaps if I had I would not have addressed the remarks which I have given utterance to.

I wish, on parting this session, to give to the leader of the opposition credit and my thanks to him as a young Canadian for his efforts during the past session. He has discharged his duty with wisdom with assiduity and with industry and with a high regard to Canadian honour and Canadian independence whenever it came in question.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I acquiesce in everything the hon. gentleman has said with regard to the leader of the opposition, but I should like to ask him if it is his opinion that the new leader is better than the ex-leader of the opposition in the Senate ?

Hon. Mr. SULLIVAN—I do not know about that ; comparisons are odious, and I would not say a word that would bring my loyal and gallant friend in competition with the present leader. I think he is a nonpareil ; he stands ahead of anybody in this country.

The Bill passed.

SENATE AND HOUSE OF COMMONS ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

SECOND AND THIRD READINGS.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of Bill (10) An Act to amend the Act respecting the Senate and House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not intend to oppose the second reading of this Bill, but I think it is my duty to call the attention of the government to its unconstitutionality. The Bill says:

18a. No member of the Senate or House of Commons shall receive or agree to receive any compensation, directly or indirectly, for services rendered, or to be rendered, to any person, either by himself or another, in relation to any bill, proceeding, contract, claim, controversy, charge, accusation, arrest, or other matter before the Senate or the House of Commons, or before a committee of either House, or in order to influence, or to attempt to influence any member of either House.

Then there is a penalty imposed for any infraction of this Act which reads :

2. Every person offending against this section shall be liable to a fine of not less than five hundred dollars or more than two thousand dollars, and shall for five years after conviction of such offence be disqualified from being a member of the Senate or House of Commons and from holding any office in the public service of Canada.

If we refer now to the British North America Act you find clause 29, is as follows :—

A senator shall, subject to the provisions of this Act, hold his place in the Senate for life.

Clause 30 says :

A senator may, by writing under his hand addressed to the Governor General, resign his place in the Senate and thereupon the same shall be vacant.

And then clause 31 provides :

The place of a senator shall become vacant in any of the following causes :

(1) If for two consecutive sessions of the parliament, he fails to give his attendance in the Senate :

(2) If he takes an oath or makes a declaration or acknowledgment of allegiance, obedience or adherence to a foreign power, or does an act whereby he becomes a subject or citizen, or entitled to the rights or privileges of a subject or citizen of a foreign power.

(3) If he is adjudged bankrupt or insolvent or applies for the benefit of any law relating to insolvent debtors, or becomes a public defaulter.

(4) If he is attainted of treason or convicted of felony or any infamous crime.

(5) If he ceases to be qualified in respect of property or of residence, provided that a senator shall not be deemed to have ceased to be qualified in respect of residence by reason only of his residing at the seat of the government of Canada while holding an office under that government requiring his presence there.

Our constitution says that a senator is to hold office for life, and the only exceptions are set forth in the clause which I have read. Now what does this Bill propose to enact ? It says that :

2. Every person offending against this section shall be liable to a fine of not less than five hundred dollars or more than two thousand dollars, and shall for five years after conviction of such offence be disqualified from being a member of the Senate or House of Commons and from holding any office in the public service of Canada.

I claim that this Bill is unconstitutional, and that it should not pass. If we refer now to the Act concerning the Senate and the House of Commons, chapter II. of the Revised Statutes of Canada, we find that while a member of the House of Commons who may enter into a contract with the government becomes disqualified to hold a seat in that House, a senator who offends against the Act is subject to a penalty for every day he continues to be a party to the contract ; you will find no provision in the law which disqualifies a senator as it disqualifies a member of the House of Commons from holding his seat? Because the qualification of a senator is set forth by the British North America Act, and no Act of this parliament can disqualify him. I call the attention of the government to these facts, and they can do as they please under the circumstances.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I want to call the attention of the hon. gentleman to one fact. He stated that this is not a government Bill, that it was introduced by Mr. Borden. I have made inquiry since the House rose, and find that this is not Mr. Borden's Bill. That Bill had the same object in view, but the matter was taken out of his hands by the then Minister of Justice, now Judge Fitzpatrick, and consequently it became more a government than a private Bill. I say that in justice to Mr. Borden, because I do not think he would ever have committed himself to the propositions contained in this Bill. The object of the Bill, to my mind, is very praiseworthy. It is unfortunately alleged, whether truly or not, out of doors that certain members of parliament are in the habit of taking fees to promote Bills in the House and before committees. That is highly reprehensible, and if such charges be true, there is no Bill that could be made sufficiently strong to condemn and punish members of parliament guilty of such offences. In the province of Ontario, those who have watched events know that a few years ago one member of that House—I will not mention any names—was charged with having received a certain sum of money to promote a Bill and put it through the legislature. My impression is that when the matter was brought before the House he was expelled. Certainly he left the House. Whether it was intimated to him that he would be expelled and he took advantage of the hint and resigned, I am not positive, but this I do know that the charge was sustained, that he had accepted a certain sum of money under the circumstances to which I had referred and he had to leave the House. The man who sits in the House and is supposed to be independent in voting on these questions, and receives money for what he is doing or expected to do, ought to be expelled. I do not propose to move any amendment to this Bill, because I should like to see it go on the statute-book, but I think, after reflection, at the next session some changes will be made. There is no way under this measure to punish a senator in the manner in which it is proposed to punish him. The only way we could reach a senator, if the Bill becomes law, will be by an amendment making any of the offences referred to in this Bill a felony under that section of the British North America Act which has been read by the hon. senator from Stadacona. We might set forth that any senator guilty of the offence mentioned here should be adjudged as having committed a felony. That will bring him under the clause of the British North America Act which disqualifies him. I have drafted some amendments in that direction, but I do not intend to submit them now. Even if they were adopted by the Senate, the Bill would have to go back to the House of Commons, and would probably be lost. Under all the circumstances, for the reasons I have given, I make no objection to the Bill; on the contrary I shall gladly assist in carrying it.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I am completely in accord with the principle of the Bill. It will protect us against lobbyists, but I think the objections taken by the hon. member from Stadacona are correct, and that the Bill if passed will be ultra vires. Therefore, while I should be glad to pass the Bill when we go into committee we ought to strike out the words 'the Senate.' Then the Bill will be intra vires and a great advantage to the House, and also to us, because it will relieve us from being bothered with the promoters in our corridors.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is regrettable that the House of Commons saw fit to draft the clause as it appears, but at the same time it would be rather invidious of us to strike it out. The popular sentiment outside would not really appreciate or comprehend our reasons for doing it; therefore, I think it would be unwise, and I would prefer myself to accept it just as it is. It will not affect any hon. gentleman's seat. No doubt, strictly speaking, the words 'the Senate' should be struck out, but our action would not be understood. The people would say we were actuated simply by a desire to preserve some of the privileges of the Senate which are already too large. It would give rise to criticism which would always reflect on us and therefore my advice is to let it go—not notice it.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—Does the Minister of Justice approve of the Bill?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I find on reference to the votes and proceedings of the House of Commons that Mr. Aylesworth presented the report of the select committee appointed to report on this Bill, and on his motion it was ordered that this and other Bills be placed among the government orders at the next sitting of the House. It would appear that it was not among the government measures in the first place. I was wrong in supposing that Mr. Borden had introduced this Bill; it was another Bill of a similar character. I should certainly advise the Senate to take no notice of it; it is not going to affect us.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—I think this a very good Bill and I would be very glad to see it pass, but there is certainly an impediment in the way, which is the British North America Act. If we pass this Bill it would certainly be ultra vires. Could we not find some means of amending it so that the House of Commons and the people in the country would not say that we refused to accept the Bill because we were interested in it, and would not pass a Bill declaring that a senator should be disqualified if he is found guilty of the offence mentioned in the Bill. I hope there is no senator who would do such a thing, but we cannot pass a law saying we confide in the honour of such a person. Would it not be acceptable to the people and to the House of Commons if we declared that the penalty should be from $500 to $2,000. Supposing we strike out the words 'the Senate,,' and provide that a senator who is found guilty of this offence shall be mulucted to the amount of $4,000—say $1,000 to $4,000; pepole could not then say that we desired to place ourselves in a different position. We might say that the constitution prevents us passing such a law, but it does not forbid us enacting that we shall be condemned to a larger penalty than the House of Commons in case we violate this provision. People could not then say that we were unjust and were protecting our own interests.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Supposing an hon. senator was guilty of the offence charged there he certainly could not hold his seat. If he is found guilty of a felony he forfeits his seat.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is not a felony.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—I think it would be very strange if we should amend this law when we are told by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona, and we have the admission of an ex-judge and a lawyer of good standing, that we cannot unless we violate the provisions of the British North America Act, declare that a senator shall be expelled from this House unless he is convicted of the offence which has been cited. I am fully in favour of a Bill which will prohibit a member taking advantage of his position to obtain fees for services in connection with his duty as a senator. I could not, however, vote for a Bill which would be in contravention of the British North America Act.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—While I must agree with what the hon. gentleman has said, I contend that we cannot easily amend the Bill in the direction he has suggested, and the only way is to let it go as it is. For my part, I cannot accept the reason given by the hon. leader of the government, because I will never vote for an unconstitutional measure for fear of public opinion. If the Bill is bad, I am not going to vote for it because the public might not understand my voting against it. We may expect that to-morrow the newspapers will explain the good reason given by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona, and those who take an interest in pubic affairs will see how things stand. Even if I were to be blamed, I would not for fear of blame vote for a Bill which is entirely unconstitutional. I will vote for it if it can be made constitutional, but if we include that clause which is unconstitutional I am going to vote against. We cannot vote here against the British North America Act. I would suggest that the Bill be amended in such a way as to make an addition to the various reasons for which a member of the Senate may be deprived of his seat. If it is too late to amend it in that way, let the government drop the Bill. As far as responsibility for the Bill is concerned, it would make no difference to me whether it was introduced in the House of Commons by the Minister of Justice or by the leader of the opposition. The Bill has passed the House and every member has a share in the responsibility. The leader of the opposition is just as responsible as the Minister of Justice and no more.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think we might now dispose of the principle of the Bill and in committee we might see what we could do there towards amending it in this respect.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—There is another amendment that could be made which would make the Bill constitutional. Instead of disqualification for the first offence, the penalty might be a fine of $500 or $1,000. or even $5,000. Then for the second offence provide that a member shall be sent to jail for two years. That would secure his disqualification; if he does not attend the Senate for two years he is disqualified. If the object of the government is to secure the disqualification of the member they can attain it in that way. If the object is, not to secure disqualification, but to prevent such conduct on the part of members of parliament, I think they could rely on the honour of a member not to sit in the House after he was found guilty and subjected to a fine.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Let us take the second reading now, and when the House is in committee it may be possible to remedy the defect.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is easy to remedy it, but, as I said before, it discriminates against the House of Commons. I am quite aware that the Bill as it stands is a violation of the constitutional Act, but I do not think it is of that nature that the Senate should avail itself of the fact. If a man is convicted of such an offence he ought not to sit one hour in the Senate. The hon. gentleman talks about a second offence, but a man doing such a thing once should be excluded for ever from either the Senate or the House of Commons.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

The House then resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the Bill.

(In the Committee.)

On subclause 2, of clause 1,

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—I desire to move that the clause be amended so as to read in this way:

Every senator offending against this section shall be liable to a fine of not less than $1,000 or more than $4,000; and every member of the House of Commons offending against this section shall be liable to a fine of not less than $500 or more than $2,000, and shall for two years after conviction of such offence be disqualified from being a member of the House of Commons and from holding any office in the public service of Canada.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think we should also disqualify the senator from holding any public office.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—We could amend our rules in some way to deal with that point.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE — Will that amendment be accepted by the government?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I would have preferred not to interfere with the Bill, but I find the sense of the House is in the direction of doubling the penalty with regard to senators, and I will not interfere.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—If the hon. gentleman has no objection to raise, I have one. We have not the right to impose a penalty; but there is another way of getting over the difficulty. It would be to have a conference and instruct those who would be sent from the Senate to inform the members of the House of Commons that we are ready to pass this Bill with this amendment, but as we have not the right to impose the penalty, they should take the amendment and pass it in the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I think there is no constitutional objection to our passing the amendment. This is not imposing any tax upon the public treasury. It is simply fixing the amount of a fine. There is no constitutional or parliamentary reason why you should alter this.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—In my estimation there is no fine that we could impose in this Bill that would be equivalent to our losing our seat. I contend that this Bill ought to apply with as much severity to the Senate as it does to the House of Commons, but I do not believe that we have the power to give to an inferior court the right to dispose of us. The Senate is the highest court in the land, and it would be an anomaly, in my opinion, and unconstitutional, to give to a lower court the power of pronouncing that a senator is no more a senator. In the case of senators, or lords, since we are to a certain extent imitating them, a guilty lord would be judged by his peers, and the House of Lords alone could have power to dismiss one of its members. I think the difficulty could be surmounted by leaving the Bill as it is, but adding a clause that the Senate will be empowered to cancel the patent of one of its members.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—That very point was discussed a few moments ago, and the amendment provides that the court will have no right to decide that matter.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—Supposing the courts of law should declare that a senator is bankrupt, that declaration of itself would not put an end to the existence of the member, but on that being officially declared, the Senate itself would pronounce that seat vacant for want of proper qualification by the member.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I call my hon. friend's attention to the fact that the disqualification clause is stricken out of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I am glad this clause has been expunged, and I am sorry to have taken up the time of the Senate with these remarks.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—When I expressed my willingness to permit the Bill to pass through the House without any further suggestion or amendments, I also intimated that I had some amendments prepared, and I will read them to the House. They provide for the objection taken by the hon. Secretary of State. His objection was that while you impose the penalty upon a commoner and deprive him of his seat for the committing of these crimes, for such they are made, that you will only impose the money penalty upon the senator, and, therefore, it would be misunderstood by the people. I would strike out the word 'person' in the first line of the second clause, and add thereto, 'member of the House of Commons,' so that it would read in this way :

Every member of the House of Commons offending against this section shall be liable to a fine of not less than $500 nor more than $2,000, and that for five years after conviction of such offence he is disqualified from being a member of the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER.

Then leave out the word 'senator,' and the remainder of the clause will read :

And from holding any office in the public service of Canada.

I am using the same language as is used in the clause as applicable to the House of Commons, and I would substitute the following for the third paragraph :

Every senator offending against such section shall, upon conviction, be subject to the penalties imposed by this Act, and for the purpose of subsection 4 of section 31 of the Confederation Act be judged guilty of a felony.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—That would cover it.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That leaves the penalties as imposed upon the member of the House of Commons as applicable to the Senate, and by declaring by Act of parliament that the commission of these crimes be adjudged a felony under the Confederation Act he has to lose his seat. That would meet the objection of the hon. Secretary of State. I move that as an amendment to the amendment.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—I think the hon. gentleman's amendment is very good. If a man is guilty of felony he will lose his seat. A member of the House of Commons will lose his seat only for five years.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—As we occupy a higher position, the penalty should be greater.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—We should make it for ever.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Have we right to declare a matter a felony which the British North America Act never intended to be a felony ? I think we have not.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We are in the habit of making certain offences crimes which are not crimes. For instance we did so in the Sunday Bill to-day. That is the only way really that we put ourselves on record, as subjecting ourselves to the same conditions as the House of Commons does.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It seems to me that parliament has power to declare any offence a felony. I thought of the point raised by the hon. senator from Stadacona when I drafted that amendment and discussed the question with my hon. friend from Calgary as to whether the offence would not have been a felony at the time of the passing of the British North America Act. My answer to that was—and I think he acquiesced in it—that parliament has power to make any crime a felony.

Hon. Mr. BOSTOCK—I do not see why, in the case of the Senate, we should declare it a felony, while there is no such declaration applying to the House of Commons ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That is because they have no means of reaching the seat of a senator except for the four reasons laid down in the British North America Act. Hence it is necessary to bring the crime within the meaning of ths section or it is of no avail.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—The amendment meets my views perfectly. We should not take it upon ourselves to enact that we should be dealt with more leniently than members of the House of Commons. It would not at all be accepted in the country. On the other hand, this amendment supports the view that I enunciated—instead of leaving it to the interference of a court to end our existence, it simply by a roundabout way comes under the British North America Act, and enables a senator who offends to die in a normal and constitutional manner. I therefore with great pleasure approve of and second the amendment of my hon. friend as meeting the requirements of this enactment.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Is it not a mistake to put in the words, 'for the purposes ?' Does not that, in point of fact, mean to say that we are taking a roundabout way of creating a vacancy in the Senate ? The object you have may be to reach that very point to disentitle a senator to continue in the Senate, but is it not a roundabout way of doing it, and such a way as will defeat your object ? It is only for that purpose that it is deemed a felony to bring it within the provisions of the British North America Act.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I have no objection to change it, if the hon. gentleman thinks so.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Is there any reason why, if you are making the Act a felony, there should be a distinction between a member of the House of Commons and a senator ?

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—My object in drafting that amendment as it is, was to make it apply particularly to that subsection which declares that a senator who is adjudged guilty of a felony forfeits his seat. That was the only object I had in view. I would not say 'for all purposes,' because it only refers to the offences mentioned in the Act itself, and we have no possible means of reaching a senator other than by declaring the act a felony in order to vacate his seat. It has been objected that that is a more grave penalty than the imposition of a fine or depriving a member of his seat for five years. We are supposed to occupy a more honourable and higher position than members of the other House, and the penalty should fit the crime. I do not object to a different wording of the clause if the legal gentlemen think the object I had in view can be obtained by a different form of amendment.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I was at first disposed to support the sub-amendment of the hon. gentleman from Belleville. But it occurs to me that there might be some difficulty in carrying it out. There seems to be some ground for the objection taken by the hon. senator from Toronto that you enact a penalty for one particular purpose; and then the British North America Act speaks of a senator being convicted of a felony. That involves a trial by his peers or by one of the courts of the land and being found guilty of a felony. I do not think we can, by simply putting these words in the Bill, bring about that result, that he would be held guilty of a felony. We would have to amend the criminal code to bring about the desired result, and, on the whole while, it may not be quite perfect. Looking at the short time we have to deal with the matter, it may be better to accept the amendment of the hon. Senator from Yale.

Hon. Mr. DAVID—If the amendment of the hon. senator from Belleville is accepted, there will be cases in which to declare the offence a felony would be unjust. The offence might not be very serious, but if the amendement of the hon. senator from Belleville is accepted, it will be a felony in any case and there would be no remedy. The offender would be found guilty and would be ostracised for the whole of his life.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—And so he should be.

Hon. Mr. BOWELL—The hon. senator from Halifax says that the offender would have to go before a jury and be tried. The same thing applies to a member of the House of Commons; he would have to be tried before he could be convicted.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—There is a difficulty which has not been thought of, and which might possibly arise under the code with reference to my hon. friend's amendment, and that is, the Bill makes it a penal offence. We declare it to be a felony. If it is declared to be a felony, it can be prosecuted under the criminal code and the person so convicted subjected to a long term of imprisonment. It has been held, I know, that the commission of the felony would make one liable not only to penalties but also to imprisonment under the general clauses of the code. I think it is fraught with a very great deal of complication. Furthermore, I would venture to suggest that, at this very late hour of the session, if any amendments are made to the Bill it may be defeated. If we send it back to the House of Commons with amendments at this late hour, the House of Commons will scarcely deal with it. If there is any desire that the Bill should pass, the only assurance we have of its passing is to accept it in its present form, and if it is found to be defective, remedy it next session.

Hon. Mr. POWER—I do not think we would be justified in passing this second subclause which we know to be unconstitutional. We have no right to disqualify a senator.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—If the Bill is to be passed now and amended next session, I would rather see it passed in accordance with the amendment of the hon. gentleman from Belleville than to be passed unconstitutionally.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I am not wedded to the amendment I have proposed. My object was to meet, as far as possible, the object of the hon. Secretary of State. The acceptance of money by a senator for the promoting, or assisting in carrying a Bill through the House ought to be visited with expulsion. If we have no power to do that, we should change the law to make the crime come within the British North America Act, and punish it accordingly.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière)—I think the amendment of the hon. gentleman from Yale should be accepted, and at another session, if further amendments are required, a more perfect Bill can be drafted. For the present, if the amendment of the hon. gentleman from Yale is adopted, and the Bill sent to the House of Commons this evening, the Commons might concur in the amendment and it would become law.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—That does not answer the point taken by the hon. gentleman from Halifax.

Hon. Mr. CASGRAIN (de Lanaudière)—The hon. gentleman from Halifax is willing to vote in favour of the amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman from Kamloops.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I understood him to say that we should not pass an Act that would be unconstitutional.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—I am entirely in accord with the principle of the Bill. There is no penalty too severe for an offence of this kind and it is in the interests of the House, as well as in the interest of good government, that such a law should be enacted and enforced. But there is a distinction between the provision of the British North America Act and the provision which appears in this Bill as to the punishment to be visited upon a member of the Senate who is guilty of such an offence. The British North America Act provides that the place of a senator shall become vacant in any one of certain cases which are enumerated. The Bill before us does not say that his place shall become vacant, but declares that he shall be disqualified. There is a distinction there, and I think this requires more working out. For the purpose of attaining the object which is desired here, of creating a vacancy in the Senate, it would be necessary to introduce into the Bill a provision that the senator, so offending shall be convicted of a felony. That would probably have to be done by amending the Criminal Code, so as to create the offence. Under the circumstances, instead of trying to impose a lesser penalty than the Bill does as it stands, I would rather take the risk of passing the measure so as to have no mistake as to what the object of parliament is in dealing with the case, and at another session we can do what is necessary in the matter.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Are we to understand that you cannot create a crime by law without amending the Criminal Code? The very fact of passing this Bill would bring it within the meaning of the Criminal Code. Surely we can declare what is a crime without referring to the Code.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The fact of our declaring this offence to be a felony is not sufficient to render the seat vacant. The senator must be convicted of felony. The criminal law must create the offence; then the offender could be tried, and, on conviction, the Act would operate at once. Therefore it is not necessary to include anything about it in this Bill. The British North America Act would act automatically upon his being convicted of a felony, and if this offence were made a felony under the criminal law that would end the matter.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If a senator is convicted of a felony, would not the Senate have the power under that conviction to expel him from his seat? The Senate would declare the seat forfeited in the same manner as they declared the seat of a senator forfeited who has failed to attend for two years.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Upon his being convicted of a felony, his seat would, under the statute, become vacant. It would simply be necessary to record the fact that he had been convicted, because our records would not be complete without that statement, just as if a man has been absent for two years his seat becomes vacant, but the fact is placed on the record here to complete it. It is not the recording that makes the seat vacant.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If a senator fails to take his seat for two years it is declared vacant.

Hon. Mr. CLORAN—Under the criminal law, there are two things necessary to create a felony, the commission of the crime, and the punishment. I know of no act in the criminal law, either inside or outside the British empire, which can be made a felony without entailing a term of imprisonment. This crime is only punished by a fine, and you cannot fairly declare it to be a felony unless there is a term of imprisonment accompanying the fine. A felony is a crime which entails punishment by imprisonment. By this measure, parliament wishes to punish the man who gives the money more severely than the representative of the people who takes the money. The first named is liable to a year's imprisonment and to a fine. Why punish the giver more severely than the receiver? I have heard senators say that the act of a representative of the people in taking money under such circumstances, cannot be too strongly condemned and cannot be too severely punished. The proper way to punish an act of that kind is to send the offender to the penitentiary as they do in the United States without the option of a fine. We have had dozens of instances in the United States during the last four or five years, where the representatives of the people committing such an offence have had no option of a fine; they have been sent to penitentiary for a term of years. After the expression of opinion that this crime is so abominable, we can attain the object of the Bill in disqualifying the members by providing that the offender be sent to penitentiary for from two to five years. If senators are sincere in their denunciation of the conduct of members who receive money, that is a way out of the difficulty.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I still adhere to the opinion I have expressed. It is not likely that we will agree on this. I think it is much better we should not create any individous distinction between the two Houses, and should accept the Bill as it stands. If that is not the sense of the House, something else must be done, but it is a late period of the session to be discussing amendments which will not be accepted by the Commons. In order to ascertain the sense of the House I move the clause be adopted as it stands.

Hon. Mr. POWER—That is not in order. There is a second amendment before the House, and you cannot have a third. I further direct attention to the fact that it is not the Senate which makes the distinction between a senator and member of the House of Commons. It is the British North America Act, and if we pass it as it is, we pass it with the distinction between the two, because the words 'senate or' are not operative in this Bill, because they are contrary to the British North America Act.

The amendment to the amendment was declared lost on a division.

The amendment proposed by the hon. gentleman from Yale (Hon. Mr. Bostock) was carried on the following division :—

Contents, 21 ; non-contents, 14.

The clause as amended was adopted.

Hon. Mr. FROST, from the committee reported the Bill with one amendment which was concurred in.

The Bill was then read a third time and passed.

The SPEAKER—There is nothing before the House.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We have the pension Bill.

The SPEAKER—(Hon. Mr. Power)—The hon. gentleman will remember that he moved to suspend rule 41 with respect to that Bill and that motion was rejected so that Bill is not now before the House. The hon. gentleman cannot move the second reading now. He can move that it be placed on the Orders of the Day for a second reading at the next sitting of the House. But the objection having been taken by the hon. gentleman from Stadacona, the Bill cannot be read at this sitting of the House ; if the hon. gentleman adheres to the objection it cannot be read.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I took my objection and it stands. Although it is a small little Bill I cannot get a French copy.

The Senate adjourned during pleasure.

After some time the Senate resumed.

LORD'S DAY BILL—SENATE AMENDMENTS RETURNED FROM THE COMMONS.

A Message was received from the House of Commons with Bill (12) An Act respecting the Lord's Day, informing Senate that the House of Commons :

hath agreed to the 3rd, 4th, 7th, 8th, 10th, 11th, 12th, 13th, 15th, 16th, 17th, 18th, 19th, 20th, 21st, 22nd, 25th, 26th, 27th, 28th, 29th and 30th of their amendments to the Bill No. 12, An Act respecting the Lord's Day.

And hath disagreed to the 1st, 2nd, 5th, 6th, 9th, 14th, 23rd, 24th and 31st of their amendments.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—We had better take these amendments seriatim. The first amendment is changing the title of the Bill to the 'The Sunday Bill.' The Commons disagree to the first amendment, because Lord's Day is a well recognized legal expression and is preferable to the expression given by the amendment. I move that the Senate do not insist on this amendment.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER—Our second amendment was page 1, line 19, leave out 'public.' Paragraph (g) of the 1st clause, 'Provincial Act means any public act passed before or since confederation. We strike out 'public' and the Commons say they disagree to the amendment for the following reason :—

2nd amendment.—Because the expression in the amendment is incomplete and would leave private legislation exempt from the operation of the Act—but that this House will agree to the word 'public' if it remains in the clause being accompanied by the words 'the charter of any municipality or' inserted after the word 'means,' so that the clause will read : '(g) Provincial Act,' means 'the charter of any municipality or any public Act of any province whether passed before or since confederation.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I move that we do not insist on our amendment, and that we concur in the amendments suggested by the House of Commons.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It seems to me some of these amendments and the reasons given for them can scarcely be comprehended on hearing them read. Why not take them up to-morrow morning ? The first two amendments are in accordance with the views of the minority in this House and for that reason I did not object to accepting them, but as the Hon. Speaker is reading them we can scarcely comprehend their real meaning until we compare them with the original clause.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—As the Bill came to us. it read 'Provincial Act means any public Act.' We passed it in that form, and afterwards several members of the House of Commons came over and said we ought to change that because the charter of the city of Montreal was a private Act, and they wanted Montreal to come under it. I endeavoured to assure them that we were quite right, that the charter of Montreal was a public Act. Mr. Gervais, a lawyer, said it was not. I looked up the Montreal charter and satisfied myself it was a public Act, but to satisfy the members of the House of Commons we struck out the word 'public' against our own judgment. Now they want it reinserted.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Does the same distinction not prevail in provincial statutes as in Dominion statutes? We call a public Act a measure of the government, or an Act affecting the public at large, whereas the Act of a corporation, be it a city, a street railway company, or any other railway company, is a private Act.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Provincial Act means any public Act of any province. The interpretation Act of the province should decide. I referred to the interpretation Act of the Province of Quebec, in the consolidated statutes of Quebec, and it says distinctly: 'All Acts passed by the legislature are public Acts unless the contrary is stated in the Act.' In the Act incorporating the city of Montreal, and granting it a charter, there is no reference whatever to its being a private Act. Therefore, practically, the House of Commons agrees with the view we took of it. We struck it out at the instance of the city of Montreal and not of our own accord.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Other cities have private Acts; Brandon for instance.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Some of these very Acts may not be public Acts.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—True, but, as it is worded the municipal charter brings the Act under the provisions of this clause.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not understand the hon. Secretary of State saying that this was done at the instance of the House of Commons?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes. After the Bill was complete, two or three members of the House of Commons came over and said that they wanted a change made. They wished us to strike out the word 'public.' The Premier himself expressed a wish to that effect.

The motion was adopted.

On the 5th amendment, after 'travellers' insert 'and express matter.'

The SPEAKER—(Hon. Mr. Power)—The reason given in this case is, because there would be no restriction at all on express business on Sunday if the amendment were adopted.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I move that the Senate do not insist upon its amendment in that case.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—By refusing to include these words, you are exposing the express matter which travels across the prairies, containing as it does valuables of all kinds, to the attacks of robbers who may attack the trains, and break into the cars. The idea at first was that express matter was covered by the word 'merchandise,' which appears in sub-clause (i); but express matter which often consists of packages of money, large sums in cash, bullion, &c., cannot be called merchandise.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—My hon. friend might have pointed out that this express matter invariably goes by the same train as the travellers. To cut off an express car from the passenger cars and leave it at the point which was reached on Saturday night, would be the height of absurdity.

Hon. Mr. COX—I think that would be provided for by the Railway Commission. That is the idea that was entertained in the other House.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The Railway Commission will certainly be governed by this Act; that is to say that if the policy of this Act is against a particular action, they will not exercise so wide a discretion as to pursue a course repugnant to the policy of the law. It is necessary, in my judgment, that express matter should be included among the exceptions.

The Senate divided on the motion which was agreed to.

Contents, 29 ; non-contents, 9.

The SPEAKER—(Hon. Mr. Power)—The 6th amendment is, page 2, line 20, after 'train' insert 'and car.'

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I had forgotten that I was paired with the Speaker. I cannot tell which side he would have voted on.

An hon. GENTLEMAN—The names were not taken.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—The names should have been taken. I wish it distinctly understood that I did not desire to break the pair I had made with the Speaker.

The SPEAKER—(Hon. Mr. Power)—The 6th amendment relates to subclause (h) of clause 3.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Before proceeding further, I desire to have this question decided. In the first place the members should have been called in and the names should have been recorded.

The SPEAKER—No one asked for the names. It is too late now ; the House has proceeded to other business.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I do not quite agree with the Under Secretary of State that the word 'cars'——

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I rise to a point of order. The yeas and nays were demanded and taken. Instead of recording the names, the clerk counted the number as if we were in committee, but we were not in committee—the Speaker was in the Chair.

The SPEAKER—I said that I could not decide, because the voices seemed to be nearly equal. The hon. gentlemen who are opposed to the motion perhaps spoke a little louder than those in favour of it, and the yeas and nays were asked for, and I simply asked hon. gentlemen to rise so that I might tell on which side there were more members. I think I was right in that.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It is not in order.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED.

The SPEAKER—And further, the hon. gentleman is not in order because another question has been put from the chair, and I understand the hon. Secretary of State has moved in reference to subclause (g).

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I do not desire to have any controversy with the Speaker. I rose the moment that the Speaker rose to call attention to the other item to which they had agreed. I had no opportunity to do it before that.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—It was before the new business was taken up.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The hon. gentleman may not have heard the other motion, and may have been otherwise engaged, but the hon. Speaker had put another question, and a motion had been made by the hon. Secretary of State when the hon. gentleman rose to speak about the pair.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—Quite correct. It would not have been necessary, except that I had supposed my name was recorded, which would have violated the pair.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—With regard to the vote now before the House, that we concur in striking out the word cars in 'x,' I do not consider that an important amendment in the way in which we understood the Bill when it was before us, because it was understood when we were discussing this clause that the termination of the right to entrain was at divisional points. If that was the case, I am sure it was not the intention of this House or parliament to say that through freight should be stopped at divisional points, because I understand that in railroading the termination of a train as a train as described here is at a divisional point, and for fear that that construction should be placed on it, I saw fit to move that the word 'cars' be added, and provided also that the work necessary to make up those cars in a train would be allowed on the Lord's day. I believe it was distinctly understood by the Commons, and I think by the Senate, when they agreed to this amendment, that in regard to live stock or through freight destined to some particular point, the destination of that freight is the destination to which it is billed, and not at a divisional point, and if that is the understanding arrived at, I have no objection to concurring in the amendment; but if that was not the understanding I should insist on our amendment. With that understanding I have no objection to the motion of the hon. Secretary of State.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Nothing could be plainer than the word 'destination.' It may be Vancouver, Halifax or any other point. It is not a divisional point.

Hon. Mr. FORGET—It is just as plain as it was last night, and we all understood what it meant, but it is very well to take back water.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I stated that I did not see any object in putting in the word 'cars,' because a train is made up of cars, and some one said they might break a train, but it is the same train that originally started until it arrives at its destination.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—I wish to throw back the insinuation about taking back water. I think one can get information as this matter is being discussed. I am not satisfied that the interpretation of this clause is that cars should be allowed to proceed to destination of freight or cars.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The Commons disagree to the 9th amendment, because it is opposed to the spirit and scope of the measure. I move that the House do not insist on its amendment to sub-clause (1).

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—What may be a sin against the moral law for a lake vessel is quite proper and justifiable for an ocean vessel. Salt water is far stronger in the Sunday law than fresh water. There is no interpretation for the words 'ocean-going.' It should be 'sea-going vessels.' I must admit I do not quite understand the logic of it.

Hon. Mr. POIRIER—I should like to know what is the spirit and scope of the measure? I think this is discriminating against lake navigation, and if such is the spirit and the scope of the law it is an evil spirit and a scope that we should simply annihilate in this House. I do not see what equity there is in discriminating against all the shipping of the lakes and hampering them on Sundays to the extent they will be hampered. We are giving ocean shippers privileges which we are refusing to our inland shippers. Whatever may be the spirit of the Bill, latent or patent, and I protest by my voice and vote, if a vote is taken, against that spirit and scope likewise that favours one class of shippers as against another.

The House divided on the motion, which was carried on the following division:—

On the fourteenth amendment relating to subclause (s) of clause 3.

The SPEAKER—The reason given by the Commons is as follows:

"Because Railways under Provincial authority are already provided for by paragraph (k) section 3 of the Bill."

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved that the Senate do not insist upon its amendment. He said: In the case which was brought up in the House when this subclause was under discussion I find that it is not a continuous railway. There is a ferry intervening. The argument was that the ferry was under the control of the proprietors of the railway on the American side and of the railway on the Canadian side. I asked whether the cars were transferred on the ferry, and was informed that they were, that it was a continuous road.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—It was I who made the motion for the amendment. The Bill provides for the continuous running of an electric car over an international or interprovincial bridge, and it gives the right to ferries to operate on Sunday. The explanation which I made to the Senate, and which induced them to accept the amendment, was this : that the owners of the electric railway at Sault Ste. Marie, on the Canadian side, are owners of the ferry and also of the electric road on the American side. At Niagara Falls there is a bridge running from the Canadian side to the American side. The owners of the electric railway there are permitted to continue the traffic over the bridge, but at the Soo the owners of the railway and the owners of the ferry upon which they transfer the cars are prohibited from continuing traffic on Sunday. The hon. Secretary of State was labouring under a mistake when he stated that the ferry was not owned by the railway people. It is. The electric railway on both sides of the river is owned by the company which controls the ferry ; and instead of having a bridge over which they could transfer their cars they run them on board the ferry boat. If they would unload them they could transfer all their passengers to the ferry and take them across to the American side. We give the right to run over a bridge but not to take a car across on the company's own ferry-boat, even though that boat is permitted under the law to carry passengers during the Sabbath.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I put the question distinctly, 'Are these cars taken on the ferry, and are they transferred to the rails on the opposite side ?' The answer was, 'No, the two railways, although owned by the same proprietor, are distinct railways. The cars from the United States do not come over to Canada, nor do the Canadian cars go to the United States. The passengers are transferred by ferry.'

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—The ground on which the Commons decline to accept this amendment was because the case of such a railway as was described in our amendment is dealt with in section 13, and by the Interpretation Act an electric railway is comprised within the definition of the word 'railway.' I supported the proposition here, and I wish to state the reasonable ground which is given for their action.

Hon Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I think the hon. Secretary of State has misunderstood the case.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No.

Hon. Mr. COX—The cars are not carried over on the boat. There is a ferry boat which connects the railways on both sides; they all belong to the one company, but the cars do not go on the boat.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—The hon. gentleman from Belleville is misinformed. The only electric railway which crosses is at Queenston, and the arch bridge immediately below Niagara Falls. The railway running from Queenston runs up to Chippewa, and there the passengers are put on the steamer. There are no other cars carried over the waters of the Niagara river either above or below the falls. The only place they cross is on the upper and lower bridge, the one at Queenston and the other at Niagara Falls.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—I wish to say that I have made inquiry and find my information was not correct, or I misunderstood the information. They do transfer, as the hon. gentleman from Toronto says, at the ferry boat.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate adjourned till eleven o'clock a.m. to-day.

ANNUITIES TO PRIVY COUNCILLORS BILL.

SECOND READING.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—There is but one Bill left for us to consider ; Bill (220) An Act to repeal the Act respecting Annuities to certain Privy Councillors. I was commencing yesterday to explain the character of the Bill and move its second reading, when exception was taken that no notice had been given for the suspension of the rules. I brought it up again in the evening and it was ruled out as not being in conformity with the rules of the House. I regret that, as it is an extremely unusual proceeding because I had suggested, that there should be two or three distinct sittings of the House some days ago and the hon. senator from Belleville remarked that that was quite unnecessary as no objection would be taken to suspending the rules under ordinary procedure, as it has been invariably the practice not to hold up Bills coming down at the eleventh hour. It is a matter of history that often as many as ten or twelve Bills have come down on the very last day, and neither side has ever taken advantage of it to interrupt the legislation. I therefore move that the rule be suspended in so far as it rerelates to Bill (220) An Act to repeal the Act granting annuities to ex-ministers.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think the hon. gentleman is labouring under a misunderstanding when he asserts that he moved yesterday the second reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I did move the second reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think the hon. minister is under a misunderstanding also, when he makes that statement to-day; the motion he made was for the suspension of the rules and not the second reading of the Bill. I objected to the suspension of the rules. I did not object to the second reading at all. The motion was not made.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I coupled with it the second reading of the Bill myself, and I said I proposed making a few observations on the second reading. Then the hon. gentleman objected to my proceeding at all.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—With all deference to the hon. gentleman, I will state what, in my opinion, took place and I will leave it to the judgment of this House. When the hon. gentlemen rose, the motion he placed in the hands of the Speaker, was that rule 41 be suspended. I objected to that, as was my right. Then, if I am correct, the hon. gentleman proposed to make the night sitting a second sitting. I said that in declaring it six o'clock, we could continue at the evening sitting, and in the meantime adjourn until that time. That was done, and when evening came, the hon. gentleman did not make a single effort to place that Bill on the Orders of the Day.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I appeal to the Speaker as to whether I did not make the motion again in the evening ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—For what ?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—For a suspension of the rules in order to enable the Bill to be read a second time.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not remember that, but at all events, if the hon. gentleman made a motion to suspend the rules, he had another course to take. If the suspension of the rules was objected to, the only thing he had to do was to move that the second reading take place at the next sitting of the House, which is to-day. He failed to do that, and left the matter in abeyance, and now there is no Bill on the order paper. There is no motion to read the Bill a second time to-day, and he wishes to suspend all the rules of the House so that he may be able not only to terminate his work, but to begin his work.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, it was read the first time.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—As a matter of fact, when it came from the House of Commons and was introduced here, that meant that it was read the first time, but he never made a motion for second reading, and I defy the hon. gentleman to find in our minutes that a motion has been placed in the hands of the Speaker proposing the second reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Well, I make my motion now for the suspension of the rules in so far as it effects this Bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think I would waive any objection on one condition ; that this Bill shall not be imposed upon us and that we have a right to amend it in committee.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I cannot agree to that.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the hon. gentleman says that a Bill sent to the Senate cannot be amended, I maintain my objection.

Hon. Mr. De BOUCHERVILLE—I believe the hon. member for Stadacona is perfectly right; the more so as this Bill requires amendment; but the result will be, if he insists upon his objection, that we shall have to stay here another day and that will be putting his colleagues to great inconvenience. Some of them, probably, have made their arrangements to leave here to-day. The hon. gentleman is perfectly within his right in the demand he makes, but he is at liberty to waive that right and allow the hon. Secretary of State to move that the rules be suspended and I hope that he will do so, in consideration of the inconvenience to which he would put his colleagues. The amendment required is a very simple one. The Bill says that it shall go into force on the 1st of July. This is the 12th July. There is no doubt that the gentlemen who are entitled to annuities under the Act of last year will have that right until this Bill passes. Probably when the Bill was drafted it was thought that prorogation would take place before the 1st July. We ought to make the amendment which I suggest, unless we want to take away money which is due those gentlemen. The Bill should be amended to provide that it shall come into force when it is sanctioned by the Governor General. We do not want to declare that money which is due to certain persons shall be taken away. My principal object in rising is to request the hon. member from Stadacona to withdraw his objection and allow the Bill to pass.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have no objection to the Bill being altered in the sense indicated by my hon. friend. It reads now that it shall take effect from the 1st July, 1906. It is not usual to declare that a law shall take effect twelve days antecedent to its passing. I have no objection to amending it, to say that it shall take effect from the day it has been given the Royal Assent.

Hon. Sir MACKENZIE BOWELL—If I were not personally interested in this, I would join most heartily with my hon. friend from Stadacona in paying back the debt we owe the hon. gentleman for some years, but, as the matter stands, I would advise my hon. friend to act on the suggestion made by the hon. senator to my right, (Hon. Mr. De Boucherville) and not insist upon his objection to which, under the rules, he is legally entitled. I would suggest that he let the Bill go in whatever shape the government think proper. I make the suggestion, because none of us desire to keep the House here until Monday morning, although I think the government richly deserve it.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Does the hon. gentleman from Stadacona withdraw his objection?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No, I asked the hon. gentleman if we would be allowed to amend the Bill, and he said 'no.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I said 'no,' but I afterwards said I would accept an amendment allowing the Act to come into force from the date of the Royal Assent.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I asked the question, if we might amend the Bill and was answered in the negative. I asked if a Bill which comes from the House of Commons could be amended in the Senate, and the hon. Secretary of State said 'no.' Then another hon. member rises and asks the same question, and the hon. Secretary of State replies 'certainly.'

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Because he indicated what he wanted. My hon. friend did not indicate what amendment he desired.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is a compliment to me. I did not know what I wanted; and the other gentleman knew what he wanted. Because I did not give a reason when I made the request, it means I had no reason to give. That is the argument of the hon. gentleman.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—No, my hon. friend called my attention to a defect in the Bill. I had not seen the Bill, but I took it from the table and noticed that it was to take effect, beginning twelve days ago. I did not consider that right.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I accept the hon. gentleman's declaration that he did not know anything about the Bill.

Some hon. GENTLEMEN—Order, order.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—That is the hon. gentleman's declaration. If his declaration is out of order, he should have been called to order when he made it. If I repeat it, I am as much in order as he was when he made the declaration I have been denied a request, which another member has been accorded and, therefore, my objection stands.

Hon. Mr. MACDONALD (B.C.)—The best way out of this dead-lock would be to let the hon. Secretary of State move now to place the Bill on the order paper for the next sitting of the House, and let the House now adjourn and have a special sitting at one o'clock.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—There is no doubt if the Senate is willing to pass this Bill it can pass through all its stages in time to allow prorogation to take place at three o'clock. I understand that the government is determined that the Bill should go through. If the hon. gentleman insists upon his objection, there is no doubt——

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I came back specially for that.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—This Bill has been discussed for a year at least. We know the feeling of the country, and what our own feelings are on this matter. A Bill is presented to us for one specific purpose, and it is for us to decide whether we are going to pass that Bill or not. No doubt the hon. gentleman has the power to delay its passing, but there is no great credit in exercising that power.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—It is not for that.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Then I can't see any other objection. It is a government Bill, and it will pass. Everybody understands the provisions of the Bill, and unless the hon. gentleman insists upon his objection, we can suspend the rules and pass the Bill in time to prorogue at three o'clock.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I understand that. No doubt we could suspend the rules and put the Bill through in time to prorogue this afternoon. That is precisely what I do not want done. Let us stay here and perform our duty in a regular way.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The hon. gentleman should have some regard for the convenience of the other members. Most of us have made arrangements for our transportation. The hon. senator from Belleville has mentioned an incident which I remember, when prorogation was delayed. I hope the present government will not be caught in that way. The soldiers were turned out and everything was in readiness for prorogation, and they had to telephone the Governor General not to come.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. Secretary of State had better telephone to the Governor immediately.

Hon. Mr. De BOUCHERVILLE—It was the hon. senator himself (Hon. Mr. Landry) who called my attention to the fact that this would be a retroactive measure. I said 'no.' He said this is the 12th and a clause of the Bill provides that it shall take effect from July 1, 1906.

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—That can be amended. Let us say it shall take effect from August 1.

Hon. Mr. De BOUCHERVILLE—It was because the hon. senator from Stadacona called my attention to the defect in the Bill that I asked to have it amended. The way the hon. senator has been treated, justifies the stand he has taken. He is insisting on his undoubted right. A suggestion could be made by which the hon. member would gain his point. Would he have any objection to another mode of going on with the Bill? If there is a way that will show the hon. senator that he is right in his objection, and also a way of getting on with the Bill would he object to that ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not quite understand what the hon. gentleman wants me to do.

Hon. Mr. De BOUCHERVILLE—The hon. gentleman has declared, and I declare that the hon. gentleman is right.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Certainly I am right.

Hon. Mr. DeBOUCHERVILLE—If we can show a way of approving of the hon. gentleman's conduct, will he object again to another motion being made afterwards? Supposing we admit that the hon. gentleman is perfectly right, would he object to a motion that this House would adjourn until after 12.25 p.m., and that it be a new sitting.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If the Bill is to go through, we don't want any new sittings. We will pass it through immediately.

Hon. Mr. WATSON—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The hon. gentleman must not be so joyous. I said if the thing was to go through at once it could go through without a second or third reading.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I regret that this mistake was made last night. We all admit that the hon. gentleman is within his rights, or the discussion would not have proceeded, but there is no one knows better than my hon. friend, that it was the intention of the Secretary of State when he asked for the suspension of the rule to move the second reading.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There is a road to a certain place which is paved with good intentions.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—And the hon. gentleman should have followed it up by moving the second reading, and the difficulty would have been overcome. There is no one better qualified than my hon. friend from Stadacona to look after the rules of the House; at the same time he and every member has to ask for an indulgence of the House to allow Bills to go through, and when my hon. friend is good natured he permits Bills to go through. I appeal to him now. I think I have caught his ear because he smiles. As far as I am personally concerned, I am as anxious as any one to see the business of the House go through. If, at the same time, my honourable and genial friend would force us to stay here for a week, I am quite willing to stay. The Bill is a government measure, and one that meets with the approbation of the general public of Canada from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and it was hailed with delight when the government had the courage to propose to parliament the repeal of that Act. I hope my hon. friend will accede to the wishes of hon. gentlemen and permit the Bill to pass.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Where is the courage of the government? That measure was promised during the last elections by the Postmaster General, the present Minister of Justice, and the government shows its courage on the last day of the session, in coming forward with that measure and asking us to suspend all the rules. They have not the courage to put it on the orders of the day, and they ask us to be accomplices in sacrificing our rights and violating our rules. Is that the courage of the government?

Hon. Mr. CHOQUETTE—Does the hon. gentleman object to the Bill passing, or merely to the way in which it is proposed to be passed ?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am not objecting to the Bill itself at all, but my hon. friend, who was a judge, knows est modus in rebus. When we have rules we must comply with them. Will the hon. gentleman consent to amend that Bill?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have indicated the amendment I would agree to.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—To the first of August?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is that a money Bill?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Not to the extent that it could not be amended. I will take the chances.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I want to know if it is a money Bill?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, because it suspends the payment of further amounts. It deals with certain payments that are now made under the law. I do not think any exception will be taken by anybody to it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—But I want the Senate to affirm the doctrine that money Bills should be amended by the Senate.

Hon. Mr. DAVIS—This is a non-money Bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Here is a Bill that comes to us from the House of Commons, relieving the public from the expenditure of money up to the 1st of July. By our amendment, putting it on the 1st of August we impose on the public the obligation to pay to the 1st of August. Is that a money Bill or not?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—Yes, it is. If exception is taken to it it might operate.

Hon. Mr. JONES—Does the hon. gentleman from Stadacona desire to be a party to saying that a money Bill can be amended in this House? He is as anxious, more anxious than many probably, to see the rules of this House and its dignity maintained. I understand that he is asking that the Bill be amended in committee with a view to changing the amount that would be paid under the Bill, and if his views were met that would mean an increased expenditure. I was under the impression that the hon. gentleman from Stadacona would not desire to be a party to such a proceeding. I should think it would be clear that if we so changed the Bill it would be increasing the public expenditure. If we have no right to increase or decrease the expenditure, surely we would have no power to deal with the Bill?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There is a way out of the difficulty.

Hon. Mr. JONES. I was going to make a request of the hon. gentleman from Stadacona, and do it somewhat on the principle of the Irishman who was going through a dense forest and met a bear. He had not been in the habit of praying, but he prayed in this case and he promised that if his prayer were granted, he would never ask another favour so great. I would not like to promise that, but I hope as a favour to those of us who are anxious to see prorogation take place to-day, he will withdraw his objection. I am willing to stay if needs be, but the hon. gentleman should consider that the situation would be extremely awkward if he should persist, and we would appreciate it very much if he could see his way to allowing the matter to go through with an understanding, if it would be in order, that next session we should take up and thresh it out to our hearts content.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Did I understand the hon. gentleman to say that he never said his prayers before?

Hon. Mr. JONES. I did not say that.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—There should be some finality to the discussion; I rise to a point of order. We are not discussing anything apparently.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—There is a motion to suspend the rules.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Yes, and the hon. gentleman from Stadacona objected and that settled it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I do not want to consent to this House committing itself to amending a money Bill. They did it once, but they never boasted of what they did at that time. They did it against the decision of the Speaker. A senator called for the Speaker's decision, and that decision was reversed, on a money Bill. I voted for the decision of the Speaker. In the present instance, if we incorporate in the Bill that it shall come into force only on proclamation by the Governor General, that will leave the matter in the hands of the executive and they will take the responsibility. How does that strike the leader of the government ?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The Indemnity Bill was amended in this House, and the Commons objected because it was a money Bill. What is the use of amending this Bill, if it is only going to be objected to in the same way?

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—If there is no use in doing that, why does the minister promise to do it?

Hon. Mr. WATSON—The Commons might not agree to it.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—My hon. friend knows this, that apart from any arrangements as regards the extension of the time in connection with this Bill, it still remains a money Bill and we cannot amend it. Until the pension stops it is an expenditure under authority of Act of parliament. It is a money Bill and we cannot amend it.

The SPEAKER—On the point raised by the hon. gentleman from St. John, I must say that there is nothing before the House. The hon. gentleman from Stadacona objected to the motion for the suspension of the rules, which was moved by the hon. Secretary of State, and that ends the matter. We have spent about an hour in beseeching the hon. gentleman to withdraw his objection, and I think that is enough. He is a man who knows his own mind.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—It seems to me the matter might be disposed of without any further delay upon the assurance of the leader of the government that the Bill would be amended along the lines indicated.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I would take objection to that in toto. It might be killed in the House of Commons.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I was not submitting it to the hon. gentleman from Lincoln, but to the Secretary of State. It seems to me that would not be an amendment of the Bill, because the point could not be raised with reference to that suggestion. The government could bring it into operation at once and it therefore could not be said that we were adding to the expenditure.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I do not propose to beg for favours. If my hon. friend insists upon the objection, I think the next order of business should be called.

Hon. Mr. KERR (Toronto)—Now that objection has been taken, if it is persisted in, we cannot proceed until the House meet again. I think the best thing to do is to make up our mind that this Bill is going through as it stands. It is entirely beneath the dignity of the Senate to dicker and make terms with any one senator, no matter how important he may be. If it means sitting until Christmas, if it means sitting every night, let us do it.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think the hon. gentleman should keep cool.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I have just been informed that prorogation has been postponed. I therefore move that this Bill be placed on the orders of the day for second reading at the next sitting of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I now give notice that at the next sitting of the House I will move the suspension of rule 41 so as to carry the Bill through committee and third reading.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Does the hon. gentleman give that as a notice only?

The Senate then adjourned until three o'clock this afternoon.

SECOND SITTING.

ANNUITIES FOR CERTAIN PRIVY COUNCILLORS BILL.

MOTION TO SUSPEND THE RULES.

Hon. Sir RICHARD CARTWRIGHT moved:

That rules 17 and 41 be suspended in so far as they relate to Bill (220) an Act to repeal the Act respecting annuities for certain Privy Councillors.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Rule 17 reads as follows:—

No motion to suspend, modify or amend any rule or part thereof shall be in order except on one day's notice in writing specifying precisely the rule proposed to be suspended, modified or amended and the purpose of such suspension.

I claim that this motion is not in order. There is a distinction to be made between one day's notice and the previous day, and this distinction has been made in the rules themselves. If you look at page 24, of the rules of the Senate you find the following:

No important amendment may be proposed to any private Bill in a committee of the whole or at the third reading of the Bill unless notice of the same shall have been given on a previous day.

Here is a case where a notice may be made or given on a previous day. In such cases there is no need of twenty-four hours notice, but when a motion is made to suspend, modify or amend any rule or part thereof, the rule says that, to be in order, it should be made after one day's notice. What is one day's notice? Is it not twenty-four hours in advance? A motion having been made a few days ago declaring that there would be two sittings a day, there is no doubt that the sitting of this afternoon is to be compared to a sitting of the following day, but that does not give the twenty-four hours notice. When we want to give twenty-four hours notice to make an amendment or suspend a rule, we must give it the day before. There must be an intermediate day between the two; and I claim there must be in this case an intermediate day between the notice that is given and the sitting at which the motion is to be made. You cannot get a day's notice without that.

Hon. Mr. YOUNG—Correct.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—The second objection to the notice is this: it is provided that a motion to suspend, modify or amend any rule or part thereof shall only be in order on one day's notice in writing. The notice given this morning was verbal. It did not specify precisely the rule proposed to be suspended, and the purpose of such suspension, but in a vague way it referred to the Bill now under consideration. For all those reasons I claim that the motion is not in order, and I ask the ruling of the Chair on the point.

The SPEAKER—The hon. gentleman called attention to rules 17 and 71. Rule 71 which refers to private Bills says :

> No important amendment may be proposed to any private Bill in a committee of the whole, or at the third reading of the Bill, unless notice of the same shall have been given on a previous day.

I do not see that there is any particularly close relation between that and rule 17. Rule 17 reads :—

> No motion to suspend, modify or amend any rule or part thereof, shall be in order, except on one day's notice in writing, specifying precisely the rule proposed to be suspended, modified or amended, and the purpose of such suspension.

In the present case, the hon. Secretary of State gave the verbal notice at the last sitting of the House that he would move at the next sitting—that is this sitting, that rules 17 and 41 be suspended in so far as they related to Bill (220). I think that there is no vagueness about the notice. The notice is to do just what the hon. gentleman proposes to do—to suspend rules 17 and 41. Rule 41, of course, is the rule which says that a Bill shall not take more than one stage the same day. The hon. gentleman has stated correctly that this sitting this afternoon is, under a resolution of the House, the same as though this meeting of the House were being held to-morrow. A day elapses. This rule says that there is to be one day's notice.

Mr. LANDRY—In writing.

The SPEAKER—As to the notice in writing, the object of course of a notice is to notify the members in attendance at the sitting that the motion for the suspension of the rule is to be made, and all hon. gentlemen, I think, have had notice. I understood the hon. Secretary of State to say that he would reduce his notice to writing, and I find that the notice is here on our paper for to-day and I would assume that the hon. gentleman did what I understood him to say that he proposed to. I think it would be putting too technical a construction upon our rules to hold that because I have not seen the written notice that it has not been given. I direct attention also to the fact that in rule 13, where it is proposed there should be more than one day's notice, the rule states that there shall be one intermediate day's notice in writing. I hold that there is no necessity for the intermediate day, and that the notice given at the last sitting of the House is sufficient for the purpose. By way of confirming that view; in our rules, which come into operation after the close of this session, which I suppose embody the views of the House on parliamentary procedure, I find that new rule 24 states :

> One day's notice in writing must be given of any of the following motions : to suspend any rule or standing order.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—These are not our rules.

The SPEAKER—I only wish to say that that seems to express the feeling of the House. Paragraph (k) of rule 4 says :

> One day's notice—a notice given on one sitting day for a motion or inquiry to be made on the next succeeding sitting day.

My impression—and I so rule—is that the notice given by the hon. Secretary of State is sufficient.

The motion was agreed to.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT moved the second reading of the Bill.

He said: When the Bill was introduced last year, it was following the principles that prevail in the parliament which we take as our guide. We know that for a very long period of time, in the imperial parliament, those ministers who have given some years time and attention to the affairs of the empire, when they leave the government, if they are in need, if they are not in a position to support themselves as becomes members who have occupied important positions of that kind, the country recognizes that it is a reasonable thing that they should receive a pension in order that they may not be reduced to penury. I think myself that the example is a good one to follow. It has been a benefit in Great Britain, not alone as regards men who have sat on the treasury benches, but also among the men who have rendered services to the state on the ocean or o.

land. We know very well that if you go back in English history for many centuries you will find that in the army or the navy, men who have rendered special service to their country have not been forgotten when they were retired from the service. In this country we have, in a measure, for many years, adopted the principle of pension. We know that when we appoint a gentleman to the bench of this country, his salary is limited to just such an amount as will enable him to maintain the position in which he is placed, and he is sure that when he retires, either from illness or on account of years, that the country has provided such an allowance for him that he is relieved from poverty. In this country very many years ago, we considered it would be an essential benefit to our civil service if, when the time came for retiring, they were placed in a position above poverty, and so we adopted the superannuation plan. I do not agree with the action taken by my friends that it was a good plan to repeal the superannuation. I think this country will have to go back and face the conditions.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—If we are to get honest service, and men are paid only reasonable amounts, it would be infinitely better that they should understand that in their declining years they are to be taken care of. In looking back on the statesmen that have made this Canada of ours, and whose memories we hold in very great regard, and when we speak of them we speak of the fathers of confederation and of the men who brought about the condition of things in this country to-day, we speak in a grateful sentiment. During the last 60 years, not one per cent of our public statesmen—and it has been my privilege to know the leading men of this country during that time—can be charged with what is called graft. To their honour be it spoken when they died, unless through the benevolence of friends, they were poor. That distinguished statesman whom my hon. friends so often speak of, the late Sir John A. Macdonald, would have been in the sheriff's hands time and again, but for the benevolence of his friends. It was just through the benevolence of his friends that he was able to keep up his position, and that his widow is now able to maintain her position. In other instances, I could point to the same course having been adopted. In those cases, where it was not adopted, the public men of this country who are spoken of in terms of appropriation and admiration, were in many instances allowed to die paupers, buried at public expense or the expense of their friends.

Take Sir George Cartier; no man deserved better of his country than he did. Any one who has followed his personal history recognizes that, yet we found that when he died the state felt obliged to give an annuity to Lady Cartier and to support his two daughters. Thomas D'Arcy McGee was buried at the public expense, and the public gave to his widow and children annuities while they lived. A gentleman who figures very largely in confederation times, a man with strong mind and great force of character, who made several trips to England in the last fifteen years of his life, was supported by a relation of his own wife. He had not a dollar, I allude to the late William McDougall. When he died, parliament felt that at all events some recognition should be made and so allotted a pension to his widow. It does not speak well for a country in the prosperous position Canada is now in, when they laud the public men of the past, to be reminded that they failed to take care of them in their latter days, when they were no longer able to maintain the position in life in which they had originally moved. I mention these instances to show that the principle has incidentially been recognized by giving to those who remain, the widows and children, some compensation for the omission to do to the actors themselves that justice that their merits really deserve. Hon. gentlemen will recognize, from these observations, that I am in sympathy with the Bill passed last year. No doubt it was hastily adopted, and the public mind was not educated on the subject. There were many conditions that would have been modified in time, but, in the main, I think the principle is a sound one. If a country like Canada wants to secure honest service from its public men and keep them from speculation, it had better make them feel that when their usefulness is gone they will not be obliged to seek refuge in a poor house. I could name very many gentlemen who have distinguished themselves in the past history of this country who have gone down and left nothing whatever behind. In their latter days they were really in needy circumstances. Any provision of this kind should only be applied under exceptional conditions. I need not enlarge upon the rule followed in England, because I presume in the discussions that have taken place on this subject, everybody probably understands it. Only those who show such a statement as to convince the powers that be at the time that they really need it, receive the pension. That was not a provision in the present Bill. I need not mention now a number of conditions and circumstances that, in my judgment, ought to be thoughtfully considered before any absolute conclusion is reached. The mistake made in the passage of the Act of last year was that it was rushed in the House of Commons. Nobody liked to say a word about it, and it was put through there and put through in the Senate without any practical discussion taking place. The public were startled; it was a new principle, and it had not been thought out. The newspapers in the country were divided one way or the other, but so far as I have been able to judge, those newspapers that hold extreme views one way or the other favoured the proposition, not perhaps in the crude shape in which it was submitted to parliament, but approved of making some such provision as would be reasonable and fair and proper from the standpoint which I like to see adopted, that is, the practice which prevails in England. I am one of those who believe always in candour. Sometimes my views may not accord with those of others, but I have at least this quality: I am never afraid to express what I think, and in doing that, I have no hesitation in giving at any time the public the benefit of my judgment. I could say a good deal more in support of the view I entertain, but I think it quite unnecessary on the present occasion. This Bill will close the legislation of this session. I notice that in another place the expressions that fell from gentlemen on both sides of the House rather indicated that this matter would be taken up on a future occasion. No absolute promise was made in that direction, but it was simply indicated that the Bill of last year was a very crude one, was one that did not meet and could not meet with general approbation, because it was too unconditional. There were not proper limitations to it, but it was intimated by those who expressed opinions on the subject, that it was not unlikely that the subject would come up on a future occasion. With those observations, I move the second reading of the Bill.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—I have listened with some degree of pleasure to the expressions of my hon. friend the Secretary of State, more on account of his candour than by reason of any other virtue which he has displayed in introducing this Bill. It is a very desirable thing on the part of a member of the government that he should be candid and frank, to say the least, when introducing a measure of this kind where the government is to recede from the position taken by them upon a very important question. It is certainly very much more desirable that we should have an expression so candid and frank as that of my hon. friend than that any evasion should be resorted to.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I was speaking for myself alone.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—The reasons advanced by my hon. friend are the very best possible reasons why this measure should not have been introduced now. I desire to say, in the first instance, that I never was in sympathy with this Act. I think pension Bills, particularly of the character which this refers to, are not in harmony with the democratic institutions by which we are governed in this country. Therefore, I am not an advocate of the legislation embraced within the four corners of the Act just about to be repealed. Once the government of this country, or of any other country, in all solemnity commits itself on an important question of this kind, that government should certainly be sufficiently courageous, even though mistaken in its legislation, to adhere to the position which they had taken, and regard as sacred the arrangements they have entered into with those interested in such a measure. One may safely say that it has been the boast of all British institutions that the provisions of an Act of parliament should ever be regarded as sacred, and that where rights are involved, particularly rights so important as those involved in this Bill, repudiation should be the last resort of a government. One might understand an individual attempting to repudiate obligations of this kind, but the government of Canada once having placed the Act upon the statute-books is not justified in deliberately coming down to parliament the following session and repudiating the responsibility they had assumed towards the beneficiaries under this Act. The position is a most humiliating one, for which you will scarcely find a precedent in any self-governing nation. Exception was taken to the course pursued by my hon. friend (Hon. Mr. Landry) objecting to the suspension of the rules. My hon. friend was entirely within his right, and although I do not say it with authority, there is no gentleman in this House more opposed to the principle embodied in the Act of last session, namely the pension clauses, than the hon. member from Stadacona. It is certainly not by reason of his being in sympathy with the principle embraced within those clauses that he has taken the position which he assumed to-day in objecting to the suspension of the rules. I think the object which my hon. friend had in view was this, that it should be a standing protest against the course pursued by the government, not only this session, but in previous sessions, and not only by this government but by previous governments, of bringing down the most important legislation of the session at its dying moments. Now, without drawing any invidious distinction between the proceedings of this session and the proceedings of previous sessions, I ask hon. gentlemen to recall the many important measures which have been introduced in this House within the present week and last week, without this Chamber having an opportunity to give proper consideration to them. We have been anxious for weeks, yes for months, that the government should introduce into this Chamber early in the session those measures in which the public are more deeply interested. But whether it is for the purpose of preventing this Chamber from giving proper consideration to such measures or not, I am not at present able to say; but it must be obvious to every one that there is no manifest excuse for the policy of delay which has been systematically pursued by the government session after session respecting measures of the kind to which I have just alluded. This measure was foreshadowed—I might say, by the government before parliament met. When the present Minister of Justice appealed to the electors for his election, although parliament was not then sitting, he committed the government to a repeal of this measure, so that I have no hesitation in saying that the Minister of Justice, in making that statement on the public hustings, must have known what the intention of the government was respecting the repeal of the pension clauses of last year's Indemnity Act.

And yet, notwithstanding the fact that that statement was made publicly to the electors of North York before parliament met, we find this Bill introduced into this Chamber and senators are asked to pronounce upon the most important principle which has come before us for consideration this session, at a moment when the flags are flying for prorogation. I appeal to my hon. friends on the opposite side of the House, who showed a considerable degree of heat this morning on account of the course pursued by the hon. member for Stadacona, in view of the position which they occupy and of the duties they are called upon to discharge—I would ask them if it is what is due to this Chamber that legislation such as this should be introduced in the dying moments of the session? Was not the hon. gentleman from Stadacona justified in demanding that further consideration be given to this measure, when we find, on referring to the debate which took place in the House of Commons the day before yesterday, that the Prime Minister announced on the floor of parliament that this measure would not become law during the present session; that he was opposed to an absolute repeal of the pension clauses, and promised not only parliament but the country that the measure would be withheld, and that further consideration would be given to it; that at the next session of parliament a well considered scheme would be introduced in the place of the one which we are now called upon to deal with. The language of the Prime Minister on this question was as follows:

> I do not want to speak as head of the government, but personally, hoping perhaps my opinion would have some weight on such a question as this, at least on this side of the House. We are not far away from another session. The matter can be laid over and thought over and debated and looked into and a report made and discussion had in the press so that we could have such a scheme devised as would, I believe, meet the general conditions which would arise, as stated by my hon. friend, Mr. Foster. After all, I think it would meet the approval if not all, then almost all, the people of the country.

That is the language employed by the Prime Minister on the floor of parliament in discussing this measure only the day before yesterday. I would ask what are we to rely on in this country if we cannot rely upon the deliberate statement of the Prime Minister made in such a manner? What are we to rely upon if we cannot rely on a statute solemnly embodied in our law, involving a sacred compact between the country and the beneficiaries of that measure? What are we to rely upon for stability, if the word of the Prime Minister and a statute deliberately placed upon our books are to be disregarded? Is public clamour upon such questions to take the place of solemn deliberation and sacred compact? It is due to this country ; it is due to our intelligence and to our honour and to the binding nature of the contract, that some deliberate consideration should be given to this matter. We have often heard the question asked: What is the Senate for? During the period I have had the honour of occupying a seat in this Chamber, I know of no occasion when the functions of the Senate might so reasonably be called into exercise as in dealing with this particular measure. We have been discussing at length during the present session the functions of the Senate and we have been told over and over again—ever since confederation it has been re-echoed year after year, that the principal function of the Senate is to check hasty legislation, to revise, and to prevent undue haste being employed in the work of legislating. Any hon. gentleman reading 'Hansard' will observe that within half an hour from the time when the Prime Minister made the statement which I have quoted, the Minister of Finance, in a moment I must say of petulance, repudiated the obligation which the Prime Minister had assumed, and, apparently, upon his own responsibility, took the Bill out of the hands of the First Minister and insisted upon parliament passing it through all its stages. I think I am safe in saying that in no country where the English language is spoken, where representative institutions exist, where a parliament properly legislates for its people, will you find a precedent of this kind—a precedent where there has been an express repudiation of a solemn obligation without any reasonable explanation being made to parliament for so doing. This matter has been discussed over and over again in the British parliament. Time and again as the result of clamour, that parliament has been called upon to cancel pensions, but the British parliament has ever stood firm as a rock against anything like repudiation, no matter how unreasonable or seemingly unjust these pensions may have appeared to be, and to-day many of them, after centuries, stand in all their integrity. Taking all these matters into consideration, I know of no occasion when the Senate might more properly assert itself entirely irrespective of all political or party sympathies and declare that no legislation of this kind should be passed without every hon. gentleman within the four walls of this Chamber having an opportunity of giving his best thought and consideration to the principle involved in such a repeal. I beg to say again, that the remarks which I have made have not been uttered by reason of being in sympathy with a Pension Bill; but I say that the honour of the country and of our parliamentary institutions is at stake, and it is more important that this should be upheld than that the country should be relieved of a burden which, possibly, in a moment of improvidence, was placed upon our statute-books, involving the payment of considerable money for years to come. It is, therefore, with a desire to thus place myself on record as to my disapproval of this class of legislation at this particular moment, that I have made these few observations.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I do not know that I would have taken up the time of the House, but my hon. friend who has just taken his seat appealed to the members on this side of the House. If my hon. friend was so much in sympathy with the Bill, or the hon. gentleman from Stadacona for whom he apologizes, this Bill would have gone through this morning, but the hon. gentleman from Stadacona wanted a condition attached to the Bill and then he would allow it to go through, the condition being that it should be amended. No one in this House knows better than these two gentlemen that the Bill cannot be amended in this House, because it is a money Bill, and the extension of one day's time beyond that stipulated in the Bill would mean a further expenditure of money which we are not in a position in this House to justify. My hon. friend sheds crocodile tears for the members on this side of the House because we are obliged to accept legislation brought down at the eleventh hour, forgetting the number of years he sat in this House as a supporter of the Conservative government and had to accept legislation brought down at the eleventh hour every term he attended here. We are under a different condition to-day, because we have accepted the provisions that are laid down by this House and the rules that guide us, and we are here patiently and willing to wait for this Bill to take its proper course without asking any consideration from the hon. gentleman from Stadacona or any other hon. gentleman. That hon. gentleman wished to hold up the government, under an idea that we would compromise in order that prorogation might take place. I think that idea is dispelled by the stand that every hon. member on this side of the House has taken with regard to prorogation; that we are here to support and maintain the government of this country in the legislation which is before the House, and, if necessary, if it takes a month to put the Bill through, I for one—and I think I am speaking for those sitting around me—am prepared to stay here for months if necessary to do this work properly. So that there is nothing hasty about this legislation at all. If my hon. friend was as much in favour of the Bill as he pretends to be, it would have been passed before now, because he would not have taken the technical objections which he has. Every one knows that when the Secretary of State moved the suspension of the rules to allow the second reading to take place, it was equivalent to a notice being given, but unfortunately it was not moved for to-day. My hon. friend took advantage of that and held up the government, and the House is prepared to wait until the Bill is put through each stage in the proper way. I am afraid my hon. friend had more sympathy for friends of his who are being deprived of the advantages under this Bill and he was more anxious to defeat this Bill, so that they might for another year reap the benefit of it, if this measure should be defeated by the tactics which my hon. friend has adopted. I am sure it does not reflect credit on the hon. leader of the opposition to cast any reflection on this side of the House because we are fully alive to our duties here, and, being alive to our duties, we have resolved to remain here until this Bill becomes law.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I have no apology to make for my course in this matter. If any one should apologize it should be the government. We simply asked that the proper course be followed. We have been following the proper course. The hon. gentleman cannot say I did not gain my point, because I did. I am not one of those who form in this House a power party. I am not one of the power that rules. I am not one of those who govern the government in this House.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—We are glad of that.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I am one of those who belong to the opposition, and if anything goes wrong in the government ranks they cannot accuse me; they know I am against them, but they should accuse the hon. gentlemen sitting behind the government—behind the leader of this House. All the row came from that power room. I observe by the smiles of hon. gentlemen that I am understood. The hon. gentleman is very indignant because I asked the government to amend this Bill. He says we cannot do so, because it is a money Bill. I hope that he gained that knowledge from what I said this morning because he did not find it out himself. Supposing it is a money Bill, why is the hon. gentleman so indignant when, two years ago, after the decision given by the Speaker of this House on a money Bill, he voted against the decision of the Speaker. He intervened and amended a money Bill. What has he to say to that accusation? I suppose he is converted to-day. He has better feelings and more knowledge to-day. He has acquired knowledge since the days when he voted against a money Bill, and, at that time, he did not feel so indignant. I do not think he is a symbol of consistency. The hon. gentleman took upon himself to say that I was more in sympathy with my friends the beneficiaries of this Pension Act and perhaps on that account I took this position. The hon. gentleman is not serious. I never saw Mr. Sifton, I never saw Mr. Mulock, I never saw the other parties who are beneficiaries of this Pension Act. I may tell my hon. friend I was never approached by any beneficiary under this Act. What I do in this House I am able to do of my own accord, and I do not want any suggestion or imputation coming from the power room. I am not against the repeal of the law if the government desires it.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—You want it to be amended.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I still want it to be amended.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—The hon. gentleman will not succeed.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—No, because I am not going to address myself to the reason nor the justice of the hon. gentleman. If I addressed myself to the justice of the hon. gentleman, I would not get anything at all. I will tell hon. gentlemen why I want it amended. This law says that it shall take effect on July 1. That is enacting a law with a retroactive effect. On what principle is such legislation introduced? making a law to-day or to-morrow that is to take effect from fifteen days ago? What does the hon. gentleman call that if it is not retroactive in its effect. I think the principle is a vicious one.

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—I may tell my hon. friend that there is no provision being made in the estimates passed by parliament for the continuation of these pensions beyond June 30. They expire on that date.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Is that a sufficient answer? Is that all the hon. gentleman can say? Because he does not see the money, he says it has not a retroactive effect. Is money the supreme argument in his eyes?

Hon. Mr. GIBSON—That is the trouble in this Bill.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—This Bill has a retroactive effect, and I defy the hon. gentleman to say it has not. It provides that it will be in force on the 1st July, and the first July is past. The Bill must take effect on the 1st July. Is that not retroactive? I am ashamed of the hon. gentleman from Beamsville. For the reasons I have given, I ask that the Bill should be amended. What does the government say? They did not acquiesce when I made the request, but they acquiesced when the hon. gentleman from Montarville made the suggestion. The government in this House is not the government. The government of this House is the power room, and they decided that we would not go into committee and would not amend the Bill. So that the government has acquiesced in one thing to-day, and that is to yield to the desires and decisions of my hon. friend. They do that nicely, and my hon. friend will feel satisfied when he goes home with the grand victory, not over us, but over his own friend and over the government of the day. These are the reasons I wish to advance to justify the position I took, because I had a right to take it, and I think from the observations I have made that my hon. friend from Beamsville is convinced that I was correct—at all events he has yielded, and he is doing what I suggested—following the rules of this House.

Hon. Mr. ELLIS—It seems to me that under the legislation of last year the government has contracted an obligation, and, whatever the result, I think the beneficiaries under this Act should be paid up to the time the Act expires. The country cannot repudiate that. The fact that no provision is made in the estimates does not relieve the country from the obligation it undoubtedly owes to these gentlemen. I hope the government will consider that matter. While not agreeing with the hon. Secretary of State in regard to the principles of pensions,

I naturally would vote for this Bill, but I think the country is under an obligation which should be fulfilled.

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was read the second time.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—It is not usual to go into committee with a small Bill of this kind, a money Bill. Therefore I move the third reading.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—I think the hon. gentleman should not give the reason that it is a small Bill; it is a money Bill.

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—The practice is to have them read at the table, unless there are details which require the committee stage.

Hon. Mr. LOUGHEED—Is the hon. gentleman at liberty to say what course the government will take at the next session of parliament to pass a measure in place of the one now repealed? As indicated by the premier the other day, a new scheme was to be brought before parliament, a better considered scheme than the one we are now dealing with. Am I to understand from my hon. friend that this Bill is being repealed in view of the legislation which will be introduced next session?

Hon. Mr. SCOTT—I cannot speak for the future. The premier was apparently candid like myself, but he spoke for himself, as I spoke for myself. There are the views of some twelve other gentlemen which have to be considered, and no proposition can be foreshadowed of the nature indicated by my hon. friend. The hon. gentleman from Stadacona stated that while I was ready to accept an amendment from another gentleman I would not accept one from him. When he spoke, my attention had not been called to the date, the 1st July. When the hon. gentleman from Montarville spoke of retroactive legislation. I thought it was highly improper, and I was quite prepared, on my own responsibility, to have the change made. I am not now in a position to do so. Speaking as I do for the government, I would have consented to go further and make it the 1st August, but I am not in a position to do that now.

Hon. Mr. LANDRY—Yes, that is just what I said. It is not the government that governs here.

Hon. Mr. JONES—What position is the opposition in?

The motion was agreed to, and the Bill was then read a third time and passed.

The Senate adjourned until eleven o'clock to-morrow.

THE SENATE.

An Act to amend the Act respecting the Senate and House of Commons.

An Act to repeal the Act respecting Annuities for certain Privy Councillors.

To these Bills the Royal Assent was pronounced by the Clerk of the Senate in the following words :

In His Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General doth assent to these Bills.

Then the Honourable the Speaker of the House of Commons addressed His Excellency the Governor General as follows :

May it please Your Excellency :

The Commons of Canada have voted the supplies required to enable the government to defray the expenses of the public service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Excellency the following Bill :

An Act for granting to His Majesty certain sums of money for the public service of the financial year ending the 30th June, 1906, and the period of nine months ending the 31st March, 1907.

Then, after the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery had read the title of the Bill,

The Clerk of the Senate, by His Excellency's command, did thereupon say :

In His Majesty's name, His Excellency the Governor General thanks His loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to this Bill.

After which His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the Second Session of the Tenth Parliament of the Dominion with the following Speech :

SPEECH :

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

In relieving you from further attendance in parliament, I desire to thank you for the care and assiduity exhibited in the discharge of your laborious and exacting duties.

Your invitation to His Majesty the King to visit this part of his Dominions was duly forwarded to Buckingham Palace. That it would be a source of great rejoicing in Canada if His Majesty would favourably entertain the invitation is confirmed by many similar addresses adopted in the several provinces, cities and towns—all expressing the hope that His Majesty may honour us with another visit.

It is very gratifying to note that Canada continues to enjoy a prosperity rarely equalled in the history of nations. The volume of exports and imports during the year just closed exceeds that of any previous record. The revenue also shows a remarkable increase, the receipts on account of the consolidated fund having doubled in the last ten years. The large number of private Bills that have received your approval—having for their object the incorporation of railway and other industrial enterprises—affords additional evidence of the general prosperity prevailing over the Dominion.

The stream of immigrants seeking homes in the western provinces continues to flow in increasing volume, and owing to the favourable conditions now existing in Alberta and Saskatchewan their vacant lands are being rapidly taken up.

Several Acts of great public utility have been added to the laws in the session now drawing to a close. Among the number, I am glad to note :

An Act for the better observance of the Lord's Day.

An Act in restriction of Usury.

An Act to secure the better Marking of Fruit.

An Act requiring that certain articles containing a proportion of gold and silver when offered for sale should be honestly marked.

An Act relating to immigrants and immigration, which, among other provisions, will enable the authorities to deport undesirable persons.

It is earnestly to be hoped that your example in passing the Act setting apart large areas for forest reserves will be followed by those provincial legislatures having jurisdiction over their public domain ; and that a system of reforestation may be adopted in all parts of the Dominion thereby preserving the uniform flow of our rivers and of our valuable water-powers.

In view of the many important Acts passed, and of the numerous amendments made to existing laws during this session, it has been deemed expedient to stay the issue of the volumes of the revised statutes, in order that the recent legislation may be embodied.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

I thank you in His Majesty's name for the supplies you have so liberally voted.

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :
Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

A copy of the convention regarding commercial relations between Japan and Canada has now been received. The treaty has been duly ratified and exchanged, thereby giving Canada material advantages in our trade with Japan.

I now beg to express the hope that on your return to your several homes you will find evidences that the coming harvest will be a bountiful one, thus assuring another year's prosperity throughout the Dominion.

The Speaker of the Senate then said :

Honourable Gentlemen of the Senate :
Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

It is His Excellency the Governor General's will and pleasure that this parliament be prorogued until Tuesday, the twenty-first day of August next, to be here holden, and this parliament is accordingly prorogued until the twenty-first day of August next.
