The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m. May I remind hon. members that the House will then proceed with the ordinary daily routine of business.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

MEASURES TO REDUCE LEVEL OF UNEMPLOYMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under Standing Order 43. In view of the federal government's figures which reveal that unemployment, far from improving as the budget promised, will deteriorate and increase over the next two years, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn):

That this government take immediate steps to correct this very inhuman situation.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43, presentation of such a motion for debate can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Alexander: Goodale said "no".

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED POSTPONEMENT OF DRILLING IN BEAUFORT SEA UNTIL CLEAN-UP TECHNOLOGY AVAILABLE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. Given that the Department of Fisheries and the Environment has gone on record as being against further drilling in the Beaufort Sea owing to the immense environmental risks and to the inadequate clean-up technology for handling Arctic oil spills; and given that we have no indication drilling procedures this year will be any better than last year, when control was lost over one well owing to inadequate care on the part of the drilling company and the failure of the government to enforce its drilling regulations, a view supported by the United States government in a note to the Canadian government dated March 15, 1977, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House express its disapproval of the decision to permit offshore drilling in the Beaufort Sea this year and urges the government to withhold approval until clean-up technology for Arctic oil spills is clearly available and the environmental risks have been substantially reduced.

Mr. Speaker: In accordance with the provisions of Standing Order 43, presentation for debate of such a motion can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Alexander: Goodale said "no".

FINANCE

SUGGESTED PAYMENT OF COMPENSATED DISCOUNT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that during May food prices in Canada have risen for the fifth consecutive month, increasing by 2.3 per cent, and that the Anti-Inflation Board ascribes that rise partly to the price of potatoes, beef, pork and non-alcoholic beverages which went up by 10 per cent last month, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That the House take immediately the necessary steps to consider the possibility of subsidizing the consumption of Canadian food products such as potatoes, beef, pork and fish and this through a consumer compensated discount, the main effect of which would be to reduce the price of those products and make them more available to all Canadians.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

IMMIGRATION

PROPOSED CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES AND DEBATE IN HOUSE ON POLICY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I rise to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. In light of the fact that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) indicated yesterday that no policy sharing program between the province of Quebec and the government of Canada has been fully developed but that there are to be working discussions over the summer months between these two specific governments, because there is an urgent need to establish policy which will be acceptable to all provinces and under which the federal government will retain the ultimate authority with regard to immigration of peoples to Canada, and with full recognition of the need for freedom of mobility within the country, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander):

That no working discussions be proceeded with until all provinces are invited to participate and that no policy be accepted until first endorsed by the Parliament of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43 such a motion can be presented for debate only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HARBOURS

SUGGESTED GREATER USE OF PRINCE RUPERT AND CHURCHILL AS EXPORT TERMINALS FOR GRAIN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. The port of Prince Rupert has been used as a back-up facility rather than an active export terminal. Greater exploitation of Churchill's natural locational advantage and Prince Rupert's natural locational advantage should be made. Given these findings and evidence in the Hall Report I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House urge the government to increase the utilization of the Ports of Prince Rupert and Churchill as recommended by the Hall Commission Report.

Mr. Goodale: We are already doing it. The motion is redundant.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate can only be done with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

OLD AGE SECURITY ACT

MEASURES TO MARK TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF COMING INTO FORCE OF ACT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, within the last two or three days the two million pensioners of Canada have received from the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) a nicely printed brochure asking them to join with him in recognizing the twenty-fifth anniversary of the institution of the Old Age Security Act. As I believe this occasion should be recognized in a more substantial way, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That the government be urged, in recognition of the twenty-fifth anniversary of the coming into effect of the Old Age Security Act, to mark this event in a substantial way, (a) by introducing a measure to increase by at least $100 a month the basic amount of the Old Age Security pension, and (b) by lowering the eligible age under both the Old Age Security Act and the Canada Pension Plan so that the pensions under these two statutes will be available, on a voluntary basis, to all persons between the ages of 60 and 65 who are out of the labour market.

Mr. Speaker: Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House for the presentation of such a motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT—REASON FOR FAILURE TO ADOPT MEASURES TO REDUCE LEVEL IN VIEW OF FORECASTS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Finance. My question concerns the truly astonishing callousness of the government, the primary concern of which appears not to be job creation but job destruction. Yesterday projections which were irrefutably those of the Department of Manpower and Immigration showed what is very nearly criminal complacency. The projections indicated that by this time next year there may be another 50,000 people added to the 400,000 residents of eastern Canada who are already unemployed. Can the minister tell the House whether he was apprised of this prediction of at least two wasted years before he introduced his budget, and if so, why was he so content to stand pat when there are already one million people out of work?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): As I indicated in my budget, we did anticipate the difficulty of reducing the rate of unemployment in Canada over the next several years, and indeed that is the reason why instead of standing pat, as the hon. member has said, we have devoted $1.2 billion by way of an additional forgoing of taxation for the purpose of stimulating the economy in this and in succeeding years, and have provided additional direct employment funds through my colleague, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, to deal on a selective basis with problems of unemployment particularly among youth, and in the eastern parts of Canada. I would say, therefore, that the budget was specifically directed at these problems of unemployment. I regret that the hon. gentleman voted against those measures, but we think they will be in the interest of further activity within the economy and will reduce unemployment.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Finger in the dike.

Mr. Alexander: Apparently the minister has not been advised of the ineffectiveness of his "do-nothing" budget. I would refer him particularly to the Atlantic provinces economic report which indicates that, despite his budget, things are going to get much worse in Canada. In view of the fact that he said his budget is so great, and keeping in mind that the Atlantic council says it is not, what specific measures does the minister intend to introduce in the near future in order to alleviate this serious situation?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): We have taken the position that the best prospect for employment in Canada, both on the short-term basis and over a longer run, is through further stimulation in the private sector. That the best future for Canadians out of work now and for young Canadians coming into the work force is to stimulate the private sector.

Mr. Stevens: They should go to another country. Which one, Pierre?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I regret that the hon. member does not support this view, but further stimulation of the private sector provides young Canadians and others with the best prospects of economic improvement in this country.

SUGGESTED INTRODUCTION OF REVISED BUDGET

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I will have the minister know that we on this side readily understand that it is the private sector that can create full and longlasting employment. In light of the fact that the minister speaks of the private sector bringing about longlasting employment, is it now the intention of the minister to bring in a revised budget in view of the fact that the last budget was a complete disaster?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): I might well consider that under some circumstances, but not under prompting by the hon. member who voted against the measures in the last budget that do stimulate employment.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: Notwithstanding the fact—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Halifax.

UNEMPLOYMENT—REASON FOR LARGE INCREASE IN FIGURES FOR ATLANTIC REGION—CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance a question about what I am sure he will agree are very alarming unemployment figures for the Atlantic provinces. Does he accept the analysis recently made by the Economic Council of Canada in its report called "Living Together" in which the council explains the much greater jump that takes place in the rate of unemployment in the Atlantic provinces than in the rest of Canada during a national recession in terms of a greater fall in aggregate demand in the Atlantic provinces than in the rest of the country. I would like to ask the minister—despite the occasional cat-calls down the way—whether he would indicate that he and the government either accept or reject this explanation of the extraordinary jump in unemployment figures that accompanies a recession in the nation.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): I appreciate the hon. member having brought his interest in this question to my attention in private conversation. I have pursued that with my officials. I hope to be able to respond to him at a very early date. With respect to another opinion on the analysis of the Economic Council of Canada and opinions on the questions of fiscal stabilization which the Economic Council Report referred to, I would be happy to bring that to his attention and to the attention of the House.

• (1420)

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If this analysis is correct it certainly corresponds with what I might describe as the gut feeling of maritimers through the years. It also goes far to explain the chronic economic difficulties of the Atlantic provinces because each time there is a national recession, the economy there gets set back further and there is a lower platform from which to start again. In view of the fact that the longer this goes on the deeper the difficulties become, may I ask the minister whether he is prepared to give this question some priority? Specifically, is he prepared to discuss the analysis and priorities suggested by the Economic Council of Canada with the premiers of the Atlantic provinces, immediately?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am prepared to give it priority and I would be prepared to pursue that further when I have had further comment on the proposal.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

DRILLING IN BEAUFORT—ALLEGED APPROVAL OF APPLICATION OF DOME PETROLEUM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development if he can confirm reports that over the weekend Cabinet approved drilling by Dome Petroleum in the Beaufort Sea despite the fact that officials of his department and of the Department of the Environment have recommended against such drilling until more sophisticated technology has been developed? Also, can he explain to the House how he can assure us that there will be stiffer enforcement of the regulations this year than there was last year? I ask this in view of the fact that there was an explosion last year, the reasons for which were set forth in a note which the United States government sent to the government of Canada stating that "measures the operators had promised to put into effect to prevent accidents and avoid environmental damage either were not fully implemented or did not function adequately and that of greater concern were the apparent difficulties experienced by authorities—"

Some hon. Members: Order, order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I think the preamble permitted to the hon. member has already been generous.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, while many elements of the matter have been decided upon there are still loose ends which have to be tied. As soon as they are, an announcement will be made, perhaps as soon as tomorrow. I must say I do not accept any of the other allegations made in the hon. member's remarks.

DRILLING IN BEAUFORT SEA—REASON FOR 30-DAY SAFETY PERIOD

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Has approval been given or has approval not been given? According to the report in the press there is to be only a 30-day no-drilling period. I would ask the minister to explain why his department recommended a 14-day period for safety and why, according to the press reports, the Cabinet recommended 30 days whereas the minister's department originally recommended 40 days? The department is reported to have sent a memorandum to Cabinet saying that had last year's blowout involved oil no relief well could have been drilled and that oil might still be seeping into the Beaufort Sea. Surely the minister can tell the House whether approval has been given for drilling and if so, whether a 30-day period is all that has been set aside which would give rise to the same disastrous situation as happened last summer?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, many elements of the hon. member's statement are incorrect. All information with respect to the decision will be given when we announce the decision tomorrow, including the reasoning behind the decision.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I think the minister is stalling. May I ask him if it is not becoming increasingly clear that the government's desire for activity in the Beaufort Sea is simply to justify its intention to approve the building of a pipeline from the Mackenzie Valley on the application for a permit from Arctic Gas? Is it not a fact that all the meetings of the National Energy Board and the sittings of the Berger Commission have been a virtual farce, that the government has already made up its mind and this is the prelude to that decision.

[Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands).]

Mr. Allmand: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member's suggestion is completely false. If he were to read the Berger report he would note that Mr. Justice Berger did not oppose a pipeline for all time. He said there was room to do exploration in the north but no pipeline should be built for ten years.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PARIS CONFERENCE—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF TERM "NEW ORDER"

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Prime Minister.

The London Conference in which the Prime Minister took part generated some fresh ideas in respect of this new order we have been hearing so much about since 1974 and which has been emphasized by President Giscard d'Estaing. Could the Prime Minister inform the House in a few words what is meant by this new order; will it in effect create more and more unemployment while removing some of the tariff barriers?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not think I can give the hon. member a brief answer to his question. When speaking about a new order, he no doubt refers to an international economic new order, an expression used to define a very complex reality that is now being debated in Paris under the co-chairmanship of the President of the Privy Council. On his return, the hon. member might wish to ask him more precise questions which will be answered then.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

DRILLING IN BEAUFORT SEA—STATEMENT ON APPLICATION OF DOME—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF CONDITIONS ATTACHED TO PERMIT

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, with regard to the announcement the minister hopes to make tomorrow. Will that statement with regard to the Dome-Canmar application for drilling permits be made on motions, and will the minister undertake to table any conditions which may attach to the drilling permits?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, the announcement will be made as soon as we can tie up some of the remaining loose ends. I will try to make a statement, if those loose ends are tied up in time. With respect to the tabling of information, I will see what can be done.

DRILLING IN BEAUFORT SEA—REQUEST FOR DETAILS OF ARRANGEMENTS FOR COMPENSATION FOR DAMAGES

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the gravity of the situation, I hope the minister will make his statement on motions in order to be in the position to answer some important questions. This morning's press reports indicate that the present option of the drilling company for posting a $10 million bond to compensate for environmental damage done to United States territory will be replaced by what is called a "permanent solution". Does this permanent solution, so-called, involve reciprocal legislation with the United States, whereby Canadians along our west coast who may suffer environmental damage because of oil tanker spills will be compensated as United States citizens will be compensated for damage done to their environment. In other words, is this so-called permanent solution to be a one-way street, or a two-way street?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, we will deal with these matters when the announcement is made. Meanwhile I suggest the hon. member should not believe everything he reads in newspaper reports.

Mr. Jarvis: Make a statement, then.

TRADE

POSSIBILITY OF ACTION TO INCREASE EXPORT TRADE OF ATLANTIC PROVINCES WITH UNITED STATES

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. According to the Atlantic provinces economic council, the Atlantic region is unable to absorb people coming on to the work force or increased production. According to the report the situation is deteriorating. Since the region's economic hopes are based mainly on its export markets in the United States, which country's economic performance is expected to be better than Canada's, and since that market absorbs some 85 per cent of our pulp and paper, 75 per cent of our fish, more than 75 per cent of our iron ore and 20 per cent of our lumber, will the minister take steps to get in touch with his counterpart in the United States, in the hope that increased sales of our primary, staple products will stimulate the private sector of our area.

[Translation]

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I have already visited the United States. As a matter of fact, I set this up as a priority when I took over the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce portfolio. Since last fall, I have visited four or five decision-making centres to promote trade between Canada and the United States; indeed, when I went to the Middle East, I was accompanied by a pulp and paper producer in an effort to promote the sale of these manufactured goods which originate from the Atlantic provinces. Therefore, we keep on trying, because we feel our relationship with the United States is of paramount importance, and I am glad to see the hon. member shares this point of view.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

REQUEST FOR AID TO LABRADOR LINERBOARD MILL

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the same minister. The Export Development Corporation, a Crown corporation under the minister's department, could help out in the distressing and deteriorating pulp and paper industry, and I refer in particular to the linerboard industry. However, the Export Development Corporation is restricted in the help it can give to this industry. Will the minister introduce some flexibility into the terms of reference of the Export Development Corporation in order to help this potential industry in improving the capacity of the building?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, I shall seek information from that Crown corporation, and we shall carry out the necessary improvements, if they are warranted.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SUGGESTION EXPORT MARKETS BE DEVELOPED FOR LABRADOR LINERBOARD MILL

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. CIDA, which comes under his department, can also help. It is helping other countries with technical assistance and financing to help build linerboard and pulp and paper mills which are taking away our markets. Will the minister review the situation with a view to providing funding in order to create markets in those countries for our marketable products?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether there has been any financing for the kind of operation the hon. member speaks of overseas, but it is a very good idea to look at whether they can use products from Canadian plants such as the linerboard mill. I will be glad to take the hon. member's suggestion.

Oral Questions

PROPOSED WITHDRAWAL FROM HELSINKI AGREEMENT IN VIEW OF DISREGARD OF SOVIET UNION FOR HUMAN RIGHTS

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the answer given in this House Wednesday, May 25, regarding the violation of the Helsinki accord as exemplified in the lost human rights and fundamental freedoms of Ioseph Begun, and in view of Russia's obvious show of contempt for the signatories to that agreement, will Canada reconsider her position, dissociate and withdraw from the Helsinki agreement at the Belgrade meeting scheduled for this fall?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): I would think that would be most unlikely, Mr. Speaker.

SPORTS

USE OF POST OFFICE FOR DELIVERY OF DEPARTMENTAL MAIL—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport). Has her department adopted the policy of not using the post office for the delivery of departmental and other mail, but rather using a courier service or other such means?

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Not to my knowledge, Mr. Speaker, but if we do we will probably entertain the use of Newfoundland dogs.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, if there is no departmental policy against using the mails for the delivery of correspondence and cheques, why did the Secretary of State for External Affairs take a government jet aircraft to St. John's last Friday, May 27, to, as stated in the newspapers, "fork over a $1.5 million cheque" to the Canada Summer Games chairman at a brief ceremony at St. John's airport on Friday at a cost of—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Central Nova.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour. He is not in the chamber at the moment. Perhaps I could ask it later.

MANPOWER

CANADA WORKS PROGRAM—EXPEDITING OF APPLICATION

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the unemployment crisis in our nation and in view of the government's attempts to alleviate it by the introduction of job creation programs such as Canada Works and Young Canada Works, will the minister take immediate steps to expedite approval of all applications made months ago under these programs, including programs and projects which are now classified as "status unclear" in order to assist in alleviating unemployment in those areas of high unemployment?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I will so advise my staff, Mr. Speaker.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

EDUCATIONAL GRANT TO CANADIAN LABOUR CONGRESS—REQUEST FOR TABLING OF AGREEMENT

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour with respect to the agreement reportedly entered into between the CLC and the government of Canada with reference to a grant of $10 million in public funds for the purpose of labour education. Will he table the precise terms of this agreement and will the agreement, when tabled, explain precisely how these public moneys are being used and who it is that will judge whether these funds are being used, as I trust they will be, in the public interest? Will the Auditor General have any role in monitoring the use of the funds?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, to both questions, Mr. Speaker. Yes, the Auditor General will have a role and yes, I will be pleased to table the agreement.

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, I thank the minister for his answer. The government, in announcing the grant, has implied it is a quid pro quo to counter-balance comparable grants which have already been made to management. Is it management per se, or rather employers or employer organizations? Would the minister give details of such so-called comparable grants so that organizations which have not received them will not be perceived to have been the beneficiaries. For example, have grants been made to the CMA, Chambers of Commerce, construction organizations or organizations of that type?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): No, Mr. Speaker, but government tax moneys go to the universities to provide courses in business administration. They are usually of tangible assistance to management and industry in this country. However, there are no analogous courses for people who wish to pursue careers, and useful careers at that, in the trade union movement. For certain courses that are undertaken by employees I believe there is a tax deductability for the corporation.

GRAIN

PLANS FOR MARKETING SURPLUS WHEAT

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture who met recently with the Secretary of Agriculture of the United States, Mr. Bergland. Apparently there was some concern over the marketing of wheat. In view of the deep feeling of fear in western Canada on the part of farmers over the fact that the amount of wheat in surplus now amounts to seven million bushels—If they wish to consult together, I will hold my question. The Minister of Transport is advising the Minister of Agriculture what is the best answer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: What plans does the government have in mind for the marketing of wheat? I ask this because the surplus is piling up to such an extent that it is becoming even worse than when we came into office.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, there were discussions. I was present when discussions took place between my counterpart and the minister in charge of the Wheat Board.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whelan: I think the minister in charge of the wheat board should answer the question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to confirm to hon. members that the wheat board's efforts in selling grain are continuing. With a record volume of production last year, there will of course be some increase in the amount of wheat on hand, but not a burdensome increase by any means. There will perhaps be a total of 200 million bushels out of what was a record crop. Apparently barley sales have been going so well that if the weather had not turned for the good, we would have been quite concerned about having an adequate amount for our markets. I might also tell the right hon. member and other hon. members today that the Canadian Wheat Board has just confirmed the completion of another sale to China for 110 million bushels of wheat commencing this fall.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I am always glad to hear of sales made to Communist China because when we brought this about, those sitting opposite in the Liberal party at that time condemned it as ridiculous. I would like to get the attention of the Minister of Agriculture who is now getting instructions from another former minister. The reason I asked him the question was in view of the Reuter despatch to the effect that it was he and the United States Secretary for Agriculture who discussed the matter and then it went on to say that the Canadian minister responsible for the Wheat Board, Otto Lang, was also involved in the discussion. So the general discussions were with him. Now I ask him, having regard to all the circumstances and the fact that there is this tremendous surplus, irrespective of the statement made by the Minister of Transport, is he still of the opinion that things would be far better if the responsibility for wheat were placed under his jurisdiction rather than under the present minister?

GREATER USE OF PRINCE RUPERT AS EXPORT PORT FOR GRAIN—EXPANSION AND MODERNIZATION OF FACILITIES

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): My questions are also for the Bobbsy twins, Mr. Speaker. I will put my first question to the boss, the Minister of Transport. On May 17 he received a telegram from the grain coordinating committee in Prince Rupert, B.C., asking for the expansion and greater utilization of the Port of Prince Rupert as a major Pacific export point for grain. When can we expect the minister to announce a program to increase the utilization of that port and the modernization of its facilities?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, a decision will be made soon.

Mr. Nystrom: Maybe I should ask the Minister without Portfolio from Alberta, Mr. Speaker. But anyway I will address a supplementary to the Minister of Agriculture who also received a similar telegram. The Hall Commission recommends that the Prince Rupert terminal be expanded from 2,250,000 bushels to 6 million bushels and be fully modernized. I should like to ask the minister when he intends to make an announcement that the port will be expanded as the Hall Commission recommends. Also, when he is awarding tenders for the Prince Rupert elevator, can he assure us that that tender will not go to the Carghill Grain Company?

Mr. Whelan: I have received a final report from the Grain Commission which advises me about the terminal facilities and what should be done with them. A decision will be made shortly. When the hon. member talks about tenders and so on, these were submissions which were made to us by the grain companies about how they would operate the facilities at Prince Rupert.

AIRPORTS

MEASURES TO MAKE MIRABEL MORE VIABLE—GOVERNMENT'S INTENTIONS WITH REGARD TO PICKERING

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. It deals with the government's two recent ventures into airport construction—Mirabel and Pickering. Would the minister indicate what steps are being taken to try to make Mirabel a more viable airport?

Is it true consideration is being given to awarding landing rights to the Concord? Further, would he clear the air with regard to Pickering and say once and for all that they have dropped their plans to construct that airport near Toronto?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The question with regard to the Concord is, as far as I know, hypothetical. We have not received a formal request with regard to its landing. We are attempting to improve the way in which passengers can move through Mirabel to points beyond in Canada. In order to increase the convenience to passengers we have been making a traffic study from this point of view and it is very likely we shall conclude that additional direct flights from Mirabel to a point in Western Canada in addition to those recently added to Ottawa and Toronto will be an adequate first step to increase the desirability of Mirabel.

With respect to Toronto, we have been taking every step we can to examine how passengers can be conveniently offered an opportunity to fly into and out of Toronto in the period ahead when we see increasing numbers creating some very serious problems. The improvement of the use of Mirabel is, of course, one of the alternatives we are looking at.

Mr. Stevens: My supplementary centres on an advertisement placed by the Logan Airport Authority in Boston in which they are soliciting Canadian business away from Mirabel. The advertisement refers to hypothetical travellers, the Simpsons, and it says: "The Simpsons want to thank you for that scenic, restful one and a half-hour 37-mile busride to Mirabel." And it adds: "Funny, but the Simpsons thought they were flying to Europe." The message is: "Come through Boston: We will get you there quicker". Is the minister familiar with this advertisement and could he inform us to what extent Logan Airport in Boston is taking business away from Mirabel through the sheer inefficiency of Mirabel?

Mr. Lang: I regret to see the hon. member endorsing any false advertising. This was brought to my attention by the manager at Mirabel when he wrote to the people in Boston drawing their attention to the falseness of that advertisement and emphasizing the convenience that Mirabel can give and will give to passengers travelling into and out of Canada in the future.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

DATE OF ESTABLISHMENT OF LOCAL OFFICE IN BRANDON

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Veterans Affairs arising from the hon. gentleman's statement about a year ago that he was setting up a storefront service to cut down the expense of serving the large veteran population in Western Manitoba. In view of the fact that old soldiers do fade away, would the minister tell us when he intends to set up this operation in Brandon?

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): The study I initiated at that time in reference to this question is still under way. Brandon is under study at the present time. As far as giving the hon. member a definite date, I prefer not to do so now.

AGRICULTURE

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL CHICKEN MARKETING BOARD—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture.

I want to thank him for the interest he has shown the Joliette area poultry producers' union by saying that he is willing to ask the cabinet to discuss setting up a national chicken marketing board. Unless I am mistaken, the minister is favourable to the creation of such a body; in view of the importance of that board, can the minister tell the House now when the matter will be discussed by the cabinet?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): No, Mr. Speaker.

IMMIGRATION

CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES ON MORE ACTIVE PARTICIPATION IN CHOICE OF IMMIGRANTS

Mr. Jacques Lavoie (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

In view of the minister's answer to the question put to him yesterday by my colleague from Battle River on the complete freedom of immigrants within Canada, to the effect that he had a common denominator with Minister Couture, namely a person's ability to move throughout Canada despite the fact that he might originally have been designated to go to one province, can the minister tell the House whether he intends to amend clause 109(1) of Bill C-24 with a view to granting greater participation to the provinces in the choice of immigrants to their territory? If the minister agrees to it, I am willing to give him a copy of the amendment I intend to move in the House, on third reading.

[English]

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): That bill is before the committee and I think that is the place to deal with it.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

INVESTIGATION OF ALLEGEDLY ILLEGAL OPERATIONS OF BANK OF MONTREAL IN VANCOUVER—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General. On April 19 I asked the minister whether he could confirm that the RCMP were investigating alleged illegalities involving the operations of the Bank of Montreal in the Vancouver area and the minister replied that the RCMP commercial crime section in Vancouver were looking into the matter. In view of the fact that this is going on and that the Vancouver Province is presently running a series of articles about what the Bank of Montreal refers to as "the Greek connection", which is certainly uncomplimentary, and involves a series of kickbacks involving a million dollar loss to the bank, can the Solicitor General bring us up to date as to the progress being made in this matter and, keeping in mind any problems of split jurisdiction, can the Solicitor General advise me as to the extent of the information he now has and is prepared to give it to the House?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, if there is an investigation going on the hon. member knows very well it is not the practice to disclose the material obtained during the course of an investigation. If this material constitutes evidence of illegality the matter will be brought before the courts.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NUMBER OF POLITICAL PRISONERS IN SOVIET UNION ABOUT WHOM CANADA MAKING REPRESENTATIONS

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs and arises out of the answer he gave me in this House on February 24 in which he indicated that the Department of External Affairs had a list of some 136 or 137 cases of political prisoners within the Soviet Union. Since the sub-committee on international organizations in the United States has published a list which names over 700 political prisoners kept in the Soviet Union, can the minister explain the discrepancy between the cases the Canadian government feels worth fighting for and the cases on behalf of which the U.S. government is making representations?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I would have to check the answer I gave in order to be sure of my facts. My recollection, however, is that I was referring to cases of family reunification; I believe the hon. member said political prisoners or prisoners of conscience. The answer I gave was directed principally to those cases which had been brought to our attention where we had been asked for assistance regarding reunification of families, which obviously is quite a different list from the one in the United States to which the hon. member refers.

Mr. O'Sullivan: Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the minister. Accepting his preliminary answer, is it the policy of the Canadian government not to limit itself solely to representations on behalf of reunification of families but to take as a matter of protest to the Soviet authorities cases of all political prisoners kept in the Soviet Union, the list of which far exceeds the 136 or 137 figure given in the House by the minister?

Mr. Jamieson: Yes, Mr. Speaker. As I have indicated on previous occasions, it is the policy of the government to make periodic and indeed frequent representations with regard to the whole range of human rights issues with the Soviet Union. It is not always on the matter of a specific person but on a matter of principle. I think our record is quite clear in that we have been consistent in making the kinds of representations which are also made, of course, by other countries, including the United States.

PRIME MINISTER'S OFFICE

USE OF GOVERNMENT AIRCRAFT

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. I wonder whether the Prime Minister would tell the House all the reasons justifying his use of Department of Transport aircraft to travel on May 19 to Quebec City and Summerside, P.E.I., and on May 21 to Rouyn, Quebec, while campaigning in the recent byelections; and is the Liberal party going to reimburse the government for the public funds expended in this regard?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

ACTION TO PREVENT IDI AMIN FROM ATTENDING COMMONWEALTH GAMES

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister and is related to the Prime Minister's journey to London for a few days for the Commonwealth Conference. Concerning the Commonwealth Games in Edmonton, I should like to ask the Prime Minister whether the government has yet reached a policy which will at one and the same time resolve the problem of sporting links between New Zealand and South Africa, so there will be no African boycott of the Commonwealth Games in Edmonton, and show the protest of Canadians to the presence of Idi Amin in Canada during the Commonwealth Games, on the ground that the report of the International Commission of Jurists to the United Nations showed that 100,000 people were murdered in Uganda during the six years of Amin's administration?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): On the first question, Mr. Speaker, of the Commonwealth Games there has been a great deal of preparatory work by myself, by the Minister of External Affairs and our officials. On many occasions we have tried to solve this question. If it is not solved before the London conference next week then we must find some way of solving it there. The second question is premature.

REQUEST THAT REPORT OF INTERNATIONAL JURISTS ON UGANDA BE ON AGENDA OF COMMONWEALTH CONFERENCE

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, having to do with the International Commission of Jurists report which Canadian ambassador Beaulne told the external affairs committee last week would not be dealt with by the United Nations until next February. Therefore I now ask the Prime Minister whether he will personally acquaint himself with this report and put it on the agenda of the Commonwealth Conference in London.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): It is too late to put it on the agenda, Mr. Speaker.

PUBLIC SERVICE

PROPOSED EXTENSION OF BENEFITS AND PROTECTION TO EMPLOYEES OF TEMPORARY SERVICE ORGANIZATIONS

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the President of the Treasury Board in his capacity as the government's chief employer. My question is based on an announcement made by his colleague the Minister of Labour in a recent speech to the Canadian Association of Temporary Services in which he said that the government would seek to provide for unorganized workers certain benefits and forms of protection they do not now enjoy. In view of the fact that the government, through Treasury Board, employs a great many individuals in Ottawa and in other places from temporary services organizations, Office Overload people and so on, where there are no such benefits or forms of protection, will the President of the Treasury Board take steps to insist that these benefits and forms of protection now apply?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the question of temporary employment pools or temporary employment agencies is being looked at more particularly by the Public Service Commission. I think there will be some announcements in that regard in the not too distant future.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister take steps to obtain from the Minister of Labour the precise provisions which he announced, and see to it that they are made available to all those who are concerned in this matter?

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, I note the hon. member's representation and I will consult with my colleague.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

SUGGESTION MINISTER ISSUE WHITE PAPER CONTAINING PROPOSALS MADE IN SPEECH AT EDMONTON

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Labour arising out of the speech which he made to the annual meeting of the Canadian Association of Temporary Services in the city of Edmonton. I think the minister indicated he was intending to bring down legislation at some stage, and he and I both know the situation with respect to House business now. In view of that I wonder if the minister would consider putting his proposals into the form of a green or white paper which we might be able to consider in advance of the legislative proposal? To put it another way, has he rejected that and, if not, would he consider it?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, that is a proposal which is worth considering and I will do so.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. In view of the promise by the leader of the NDP, Mr. Stephen Lewis, in the Ontario provincial election that, if elected, he would raise the minimum wage to $4, and owing to Ontario's dominance in our economy, if this proposal were carried out across the country, would it increase inflation and would it work against the decontrols process?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member surely realizes that the question is extremely hypothetical.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

LAYING OF HEAVY STEEL RAILS ON LINE TO CHURCHILL

Mr. Cecil Smith (Churchill): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Now that the Hall commission has made its recommendations, will the CNR be continuing with the installation of heavy steel to Churchill to accommodate the 100 ton hopper cars?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have drawn to the attention of Canadian National my view that the reason they gave for discontinuing the upgrading of the Herchmer subdivision was inadequate and I asked them to review the situation. I have not yet had a response in this regard. I am happy to tell the hon. member that other matters relating to Churchill are going forward and a $5.6 million contract for dredging is now being let for the harbour.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF ESTABLISHING FOOD POLICY COUNCIL TO CONSIDER NATIONAL FOOD POLICY

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. Since there is a great deal of misunderstanding and confusion between agricultural producer groups and consumers as to what a comprehensive food policy should consist of, I would ask the Prime Minister whether the government is considering the setting up of a joint food policy council consisting of both private and government members to cover every segment of food production from transportation to tariffs, in order to come up with a comprehensive national food policy which could be set before not only producer groups but also consumers?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I take that to be a representation. I will consider it most seriously.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to the Special Order passed by the House yesterday, for the balance of the month of June the House will be sitting extra hours. One of the features of that order is considering matters set aside for the adjournment debate, not at ten o'clock, between ten and ten thirty, but at six o'clock, between six and six thirty. That raises certain administrative difficulties in that Standing Orders provide that the Chair must indicate at five o'clock each day the subjects to be dealt with at the hour of adjournment, which is ordinarily five hours later. This gives time to the member who is involved in putting the question at the hour of the adjournment and also for the responder from the government to make preparations to meet that eventuality. If we were to continue to adhere to that procedure, obviously we would make these announcements and decisions at five o'clock for an event which is to take place one hour later, which really does not provide that opportunity.

It is my responsibility to make those choices each day. The order will not have any effect tomorrow, being Wednesday, but will have effect again on Thursday. It is to be hoped that consultations between now and Thursday afternoon might lead to some solution to the problem. In the meantime, I am attempting to meet it today in the only way that seems reasonable to me, which is to exercise my prerogative to choose questions for the late show for six o'clock this afternoon and to announce them to the House at this time, which is contrary to the practices of the House and the Standing Orders. I hope it will be accepted on this occasion until we find a better way to do it, bearing in mind that at six o'clock there must be some preparation by the people on both sides.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised on the adjournement motion which, pursuant to the Special Order will take place at six p.m., are as follows: the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis)—Transport—Request for statistical data indicating risk of oil spills as a result of increased tanker traffic; the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale)—Air Transport—Effect of proposed take-over by Transair by Pacific Western on prairie regional service; and the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen)—Income Tax—Meal allowance for truck drivers—possibility of change.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in connection with a question which I attempted to put this afternoon in order to understand the reason for your ruling. I asked the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) whether her department had a policy of no longer using the Post Office for mail, but rather a courier service in connection with departmental correspondence. She answered no, that they did not have such a policy, although they might use Newfoundland dogs, which is very apropos. I was granted permission to ask a supplementary question. My supplementary question was: in that event, why was the Secretary of State for External Affairs apparently asked to deliver a cheque for $1.5 million to St. John's by government jet last Friday to the Canada Summer Games Committee during a brief stop at the airport and a ceremony?

I was going to continue by saying that he went on to do business in his district. Why was that necessary if there are mails? Why was it necessary since the committee was in Ottawa on May 16, just ten days ago, at a ceremony here on parliament hill? The cheque could have been passed over then. Your Honour did not let me complete the question, and that is why I raise this point of order. If you could explain to me why that was out of order, I would appreciate it.

Mr. Speaker: It seems to me, if the hon. member refers to questions which are both frivolous and argumentative, he will understand my ruling.

OFFICE OF THE MINISTER OF STATE—FITNESS AND AMATEUR SPORT

Question No. 702—Mr. Jelinek:

1. What will be the cost of establishing the new sub-ministry responsible for Fitness and Amateur Sport?

2. What number of personnel will be responsible to the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport and what will be their salaries?

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): 1. No new sub-ministry responsible for Fitness and Amateur Sport has been established. However, a Minister of State has been appointed to assist the Minister of National Health and Welfare in carrying out his responsibilities with respect to the policy and programs related to fitness and amateur sport. The cost of establishing this Ministry of State is estimated at $123,000 which will be funded by existing Departmental budgets.

2. As of the date of this question, the Minister of State employed 5 persons through her exempt budget. The related salary ranges are shown below:

No.	Title	Salary
1	Executive Assistant	up to $27,250
2	Special Assistants	up to $22,900
1	Private Secretary	up to $17,900
1	Secretary	up to $12,500

RESEARCH INTO CANCER AND HEART DISEASE

Question No. 993—Mr. Howie:

In each fiscal year ending March 31 (a) 1976 (b) 1975 (c) 1974 (d) 1973, what amount was spent for research into (i) cancer (ii) heart disease?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): In so far as the Department of National Health and Welfare is concerned:

	(i) Cancer	(ii) Heart Disease
(a)	$849,988	$423,672
(b)	$795,819	$491,562
(c)	$751,547	$487,228
(d)	$522,181	$458,062

In so far as the Medical Research Council is concerned:

	(i) Cancer	(ii) Heart Disease
(a)	$4,751,819	$4,963,319
(b)	$4,387,506	$4,734,831
(c)	$3,752,149	$4,632,807
(d)	$3,515,318	$3,707,166

RELIEF OF IMPORT DUTIES ON INDUSTRIAL EQUIPMENT

Question No. 1,348—Mr. MacDonald (Egmont):

Is (a) DREE (b) the Department of Finance (c) the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce aware of measures in effect in Ireland which allow full relief from import duties on plant and equipment for industry in designated development areas and, if so, are any such measures (i) now in effect in Canada

(ii) under study or contemplated for the future as encouragement to more balanced industrial development between Canada's regions, and if so, what are they?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Regional Economic Expansion, Finance and Industry, Trade and Commerce as follows: (a) See question No. 1346 answered on March 11, 1977. (b) The results of enquiries by the Department of Finance indicate that Ireland has not adopted tariff relief measures on machinery and equipment relating specifically to industries located in designated development areas. Canada has no provisions of this kind nor are any being considered at this time. There is, however, a program of general application, the machinery program, which is administered by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The program covers a broad range of machines, as well as their accessories, attachments, control equipment, tools and parts, used by the manufacturing and service industries. It provides for remission of duty on imported machinery when the Machinery and Equipment Advisory Board considers that reasonably equivalent machinery is not available from Canadian production and that remission is in the public interest. (c) The results of enquiries by the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce indicate that there are no measures in Ireland which allow full relief from import duties on plant and equipment for industry in designated development areas. The existing custom licensing provisions empower the Minister of Industry and Commerce to waive the custom duties only to the extent that Irish duty is higher than Community Common Tariff (CCT) with regard to plant and equipment not manufactured in Ireland. However, as of July 1, 1977, Ireland will apply CCT fully. The Minister will not have power to relieve any tariff and CCT will apply in all cases. (i) and (ii) The Machinery program of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce allows for remission of duties on machinery and equipment of a type not manufactured in Canada.

ABESTOS INDUSTRY IN QUEBEC

Question No. 2,192—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

1. On December 31 (a) 1975 (b) 1976, how many persons were employed by the asbestos industry in Quebec?

2. For each of the same years, what was the total in salaries paid to such persons?

3. For each of the same years, what was the value of the asbestos produced?

4. For each of the same years, what were the profits accrued to the companies?

5. What (a) federal (b) provincial taxes were paid in (i) 1973-74 (ii) 1974-75 by the companies?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports: 1. (a) On December 31, 1975, there were 6,057 persons employed by the asbestos industry in Quebec. (b) On December 31, 1976 there were 6,339 persons employed by the asbestos industry in Quebec.

NOTE: These are the total number of employees reported for the last pay period of the month; data are not available for end of month.

2. The total salaries for 1975 were $63,188,000. This information for 1976 is not available.

3. The value of the asbestos produced was $176,943,000.00 for 1975 and $343,164,000 (Preliminary) for 1976.

4. The profits accrued to the companies were: Net Profit before taxes and non-recurring items: 1975—5 companies—confidential because of dominance) 1976—5 companies—$114,576,000.00.

5. (a) The federal taxes paid by the companies in 1973-74 were $11,821,000. This information for 1974-75 is not yet available. (b) The provincial taxes paid by the companies were $4,784,000. This information is not yet available for 1974-75.

LRPA CONTRACT

Question No. 2,312—Mr. McKinnon:

1. Has Lockheed been paid the progress payment on the LRPA Contract of (a) $2,905,000 which was due on November 30, 1976 (b) $3,375,000 which was due on December 31, 1976 (c) $4,523,000 which was due on January 31, 1977 (d) $3,715,000 which was due on February 28, 1977 (e) $4,658,000 which was due on March 31, 1977?

2. Has Lockheed been paid the second Accomplishment Milestone Payment of $517,000?

3. Were any adjustments made to the Contract at the end of the first quarter of 1977, in accordance with the formula and conditions set out in Articles 8.1, 8.2, 8.3 and 8.4 of the Contract and, if so, what were they?

4. Have the specifications and capabilities of the Comox Data Interpretation and Analysis Centre set out in Article 1.1(1) of the Contract been defined yet and, if so, what is its estimated cost in (a) dollars (b) as a percentage of the cost of the DIAC at Greenwood?

5. Have any modifications been made to the Contract, including Progress and Milestone Payments schedules, to accommodate the purchase of the Comox DIAC, or is the purchase of the DIAC being handled separately and, if so, in what manner?

6. Since the Contract was signed, have any changes been made in the LRPA Project Office and, if so, what are they?

7. Have any changes been made to Article 4 of the Contract with respect to the role and authority of the LRPA (a) Project Manager (b) Deputy Project Manager and, if so, what are they?

8. Has the Minister exercised the option under the Contract to purchase a Versatile Avionics Shop Test (VAST) system, together with Interconnecting Devices (IDs) and Test Programme Sets (TPSs) for a firm fixed price of US $16,500,000 and, if not (a) for what reason (b) are there any plans to acquire the system at a later date?

9. (a) Has the contracting authority made any changes in the work and specifications, or the place or time of delivery, of the LRPA System under Article 37 of the Contract and, if so, what are they (b) has the contractor submitted any engineering change proposals in accordance with Article 37.2 and, if so, have any adjustments been made to the Contract price in accordance with Article 37.3 and, if so, what are they?

10. For what reason were Articles 39.1 to 39.10 inclusive of the Contract, covering Canadian industrial benefits and industrial benefits commitments, not included in the Contract as tabled in the House of Commons?

11. With reference to P-3 structural components tooling which is to be moved to Canada as part of the Aurora Programme, has the shipment of tooling for rudders and elevators and for nose and aft radomes commenced and, if so, has shipment been completed?

12. Has the Minister entered into any contracts with consultants or other contractors to assist him during the performance of the Contract under Article 49.1 and, if so (a) who are the consultants (b) what is the amount of each contract?

13. Does Article 60.1 of the Contract state certain premises with respect to the future actions of the US Government and, is the Contract based on these premises and, if so, have these premises, as set out in Articles 60.1 (a), (b) and (c) remained unchanged and, if not (a) what are the changes (b) what steps have been taken by the Minister to adjust the Contract price accordingly or to make other arrangements with the US government?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): 1. (a)(b)(c)(d)(e) Yes.

2. Yes.

3. No.

4. No.

5. The manner in which the purchase of the Comox DIAC is to be handled has yet to be determined.

6. Yes. The LRPA Project Office per se is no longer in existence. This office was put in place to deal with the specifics of programme definition. On completion of this task, a new organization was established, designed specifically to handle the implementation phase of the programme.

7. Yes. All reference to the LRPA project manager and deputy project manager has been deleted from Article 4 of the Contract and the following substituted: "4.1 The Director, CP-140 Procurement Branch, Department of Supply and Services (throughout called the "Director") is the contracting authority and the officer designated to be responsible for the management and administration of the contract and, for these purposes he is an agent of the Minister . . . 4.2 The Aurora Programme Manager is the representative of the Department of National Defence appointed by that Department to perform the duties assigned to him under the Contract . . ."

8. Yes. (a) Not applicable (b) Not applicable.

9. (a) No. (b) No.

10. The contract tabled in the House of Commons included all Articles covering Canadian industrial benefits and industrial benefit commitments, and was identical to that executed with Lockheed. There is an inconsistency in the numbering of Article 39.0 as compared with the other articles of the contract. This could give the impression that a number of sub-articles have been omitted. This is not the case.

11. Yes, it has been completed.

12. Yes. (a) Dr. S. J. Kubina. (b) $15,000.

13. Yes. However, the facts are different than the premises in that the U.S. Government requires a payment for the recovery of non-recurring cost on the P-3A or S-3A. The Minister has made arrangements with the United States Government for payment of these charges outside the Lockheed CP-140 contract. Accordingly, the CP-140 Contract Price will not be adjusted.

U.S. TARIFFS ON OILSEED PRODUCTS

Question No. 2,340—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

1. Does the government plan to press the United States for the removal of its tariffs on flax, linoil and linseed meal?

[Mr. McKinnon.]

2. Has the government pressed for their removal previously and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so, what has been the US response?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): 1. Both Canada and the United States are currently participating in multilateral trade negotiations in Geneva aimed at the reduction or elimination of tariff and non-tariff barriers to international trade. The Canadian Trade and Tariffs Committee was established in 1973 to receive the views of all Canadians with respect to Canada's participation in these trade negotiations. Since that time, several Canadian interests, including provincial governments and industry associations, have suggested that Canada should seek reduction or removal of U.S.A. tariffs on certain oilseed products. These include not only flaxseed, linoil and linseed meal, but also certain rapeseed, sunflowerseed and mustardseed products. The Canadian delegation in Geneva has notified the U.S.A. of our export interest in these and other agricultural products, and we will be pursuing this matter in the course of the negotiations.

2. Under the U.S.A. Trade Act of 1974, the President has been granted the authority to negotiate the removal of U.S.A. tariffs of 5 percent ad valorem or lower. It is therefore possible that complete elimination of the U.S.A. tariffs on flaxseed and on linseed meal might be negotiated. U.S.A. tariffs above 5 percent ad valorem, such as that which applies on linseed oil, would be eligible for a maximum duty reduction of 60 percent.

3. The current round of multilateral trade negotiations is the first to take place since the Kennedy Round of 1964-67. At the time of the Kennedy Round, Canada, as the principal supplier to the United States of linseed oil cake and meal, was able to successfully negotiate a reduction in the U.S.A. duty from 0.22 cent lb. to the current 0.12 cent lb. As Canada was not a significant supplier of either flaxseed or linoil to the U.S.A., we were not in a position to press for a reduction of U.S.A. duties on those products. Since the Kennedy Round, however, Canada has become the principal foreign supplier of all three products to the U.S.A. market, and we will therefore be in a better position to press our interests in the current trade negotiations.

GRANTS UNDER CONSUMER AFFAIRS PROGRAMME

Question No. 2,361—Mr. O'Sullivan:

1. What was the total amount, by province, assigned as base fund allocations for grants to local groups since 1972 under the Consumer Affairs Programme of the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs?

2. By province, what amounts were actually distributed?

3. Have any applications for such grants to local groups been received by the Department from (a) Hamilton (b) Burlington (c) Stoney Creek (d) Grimsby (e) Oakville (f) Ancaster (g) Dundas (h) St. Catharines, Ontario, since 1972 and, if so (i) how many (ii) what number and percentage have been successful (iii) what was the total amount granted in each case?

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. The base fund allocation for grants to local consumer organizations was not initiated until the start of the fiscal year 1976/77. The sum of $225,000 was set aside (on a national basis) for grants to local groups. This sum was apportioned by region based on demographic factors (distribution of families). (1) Atlantic Region, $42,500; (2) Quebec Region, $46,000; (3) Ontario Region, $60,500; (4) Prairie Region, $49,500; (5) Pacific Region, $26,500; Total $225,000.

2. In 1976/77, the following grants were awarded to local organizations for consumer education and assistance projects. (1) Atlantic Region: Newfoundland, $13,000, NAPO Mobile education project; $6,000, CAC (Nfld.) complaints and enquiries; New Brunswick $11,000, Centre de Communication et d'information mobile Bathurst; $3,500, CHIMO, Fredericton debt and credit counselling; $5,000, Northumberland Information and Referral Centre, Chatham complaints and Enquiries; Total $38,500, (2) Quebec Region: $4,000, CAC (La Tuque)—Complaints and Enquiries; $10,000, Service d'aide aux consommateurs Shawinigan, complaints and enquiries; $3,000, CAC (Trois-Rivières) consumer assistance, research; Total $17,000,

NB: Grants of $50,000 were also made to the Automobile Protection Association and L'Institut de Promotion des Intérêts du Consommateur.

(3) Ontario Region: $10,000, Quinte Information and Assistance Centre, Belleville, complaints and enquiries; $8,000, Nutrition Improvement Project, Waterloo, consumer education; $3,700, Nepean Contact, Ottawa, consumer education; $2,500, North Bay Family Life Centre, credit counselling; $1,835, Thunder Bay Indian Friendship Centre, consumer education; $7,000, Hamilton Central Information Service, complaints and enquiries; $1,300, Porcupine Credit Counselling Service, Timmins, credit counselling; $12,000, Italian Immigrant Aid Society, Toronto, consumer education, complaints and enquiries; $7,000, Peterborough Information Centre, complaints and enquiries; $2,000, Information Niagara, complaints and enquiries; $3,500, Information Sudbury, complaints and enquiries; $2,000, New Welfare Action Centre, Toronto, consumer education; Total $60,835. (4) Prairie Region: Manitoba, $12,375, Community Consumer Credit Counselling Winnipeg, debit and credit counselling; Saskatchewan $14,770, Community Service Centre, Prince Albert, consumer education and assistance; Alberta $21,900, Calgary Family Service Bureau, money management education program; N.W.T. $5,000, Baffin Region Inuit Association, consumer education; Total $54,045. (5) Pacific Region: $7,900, Consumer Action League, Vancouver, debt and credit counselling and income tax service; $6,000, Consumer Action League, West Kootenay, consumer assistance; $3,500, Mission Community Services, consumer information; $4,925, Nanaimo A.I.D. Centre, consumer education; $775, Community Planning Association of British Columbia—survey; Total $23,100,

3. In 1976, one grant request was received from a Hamilton organization. A grant of $7,000, was awarded to the Hamilton Central Information Service to undertake a pilot project involving consumer complaints and enquiries. No grant requests were receive from Burlington, Stoney Creek, Grimsby, Oakville, Ancaster, Dundas, or St. Catharines.

Order Paper Questions

THE DRUG "NAPROSYN"

Question No. 2,373—Mr. Rynard:

1. Did the Food and Drug Directorate, Department of National Health and Welfare, test the drug Naproxyn before allowing its sale in Canada and, if so, what were the results?

2. Is the government aware of studies conducted on Naproxyn by the United States Health of Animals Branch and, if not, for what reason?

3. What, if any, negative and precautionary factors have been reported to the Food and Drug Directorate concerning Naproxyn?

4. What other drugs, if any, are available for use by arthritics?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1. The Health Protection Branch evaluated the available data on the drug Naprosyn prior to issuing a notice of compliance permitting sale in Canada. The branch did not test the drug.

2. The Health Protection Branch is aware of the American Food and Drug Administration's investigation of animal studies carried out on Naprosyn in the U.S.A.

3. The Health Protection Branch has received a number of reports of adverse reactions to Naprosyn. These reports have not required any changes in the precautions listed for the drug at the time when the Notice of Compliance was issued.

4. There are many other drugs available for use by arthritics including ASA (acetylsalicylic acid), phenylbutazone, indomethacin, ibuprofen, steroids, gold salts, and a number of recently introduced agents such as fenoprofen and tolmetin.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—CONSTRUCTION, NEW CANEX COMPLEX AT CFB GAGETOWN

Question No. 2,392—Mr. Howie:

1. Has approval been given for the new CANEX complex at CFB Gagetown?

2. Will the recreation facilities of the complex, when completed, be available to all dependents of Armed Forces personnel without charge and will they be available on the same basis to the Town of Oromocto?

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): 1. No. This project is only in the intitial planning stage.

2. The facilities of the complex will be available to all dependents of Armed Forces personnel. However, some participant charge will have to be levied for most activities to obtain the funds necessary to meet operating and debt repayment costs since the complex will be constructed primarily with non-public funds (i.e Canex profits, messes and canteen etc.) as well as being maintained and operated from non-public funds. The facilities will also be available to the local community, after the needs of the military community have been met, at a charge to defray the costs as explained above.

STUDENT SUMMER EMPLOYMENT PROGRAMME

Question No. 2,422—Mr. Marshall:

1. What additional staff was hired and what was the cost to operate the Student Summer Employment Programme (a) Summer Product Safety (b) Summer Puppet under the Department of Consumer and Corporate Affairs?

2. Are any other programmes available for students under the Department?

Order Paper Questions

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): 1. Twenty-three students were hired during the summer of 1976 to staff the Summer Product Safety Program. Costs were: (a) Salaries, $27,252; (b) Other costs, $51,774 (includes travel and living expenses paid out to students) Total $79,026.

NOTE: The Summer Product Safety and the Summer Puppet Programs are one and the same.

2. Yes. In 1977, the following programs will be sponsored by the Department: (a) Summer Product Safety Program (SSEAP); (b) Summer Job Corps (SSEAP); (i) Food Talk; (ii) CCAC in Action; (c) Career Oriented Summer Employment Program (COSEP); (d) Non-Career Oriented Summer Employment Program (NCOSEP).

* SSEAP—Student Summer Employment Activities Program—a program controlled by the Department of Manpower and Immigration.

METRIC CONVERSION ASSISTANCE AND U.S. LIAISON

Question No. 2,446—Mr. Rynard:

1. Is financial assistance available to the small independent service station operators and petroleum dealers for conversion to the metric system of gasoline pumps and delivery trucks with meters and (a) if so, in what manner (b) if not, is any being planned?

2. Is there a possibility that Canada will delay its change to metric conversion to coincide with a decision by the United States in this regard?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): In so far as the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce is concerned: 1. (a) Yes, some assistance may be granted under the terms of Revenue Canada Interpretation Bulletin IT-348. (November 2, 1976); (b) Refer to 1(a).

2. The U.S. Metric Conversion Act was signed into law on December 23, 1975 by President Ford. Over one hundred sector committees in Canada are planning and scheduling metric conversion, each in accordance with its own supplier and customer needs and constraints, including those of suppliers and customers in the United States.

Mr. Goodale: I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order in regard to question No. 1 on the order paper, which has been outstanding since October 12 and was also on the order paper in the last session of parliament. This question concerns William Teron of Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and asks for the amount of government business that he, or companies with which he is associated, has received since April 20, 1968. It seems to me all this time, which is in effect over a year, would be sufficient for the government to answer this question. I feel I have a legitimate point of order in drawing attention, as I have before, to the fact that it has not been answered and ask when I can obtain an answer.

I would like to draw attention to questions 29 and 30, and certain other questions too numerous to list, all on the subject of the use of government aircraft by cabinet ministers. I am referring to one in particular concerning the Minister of Agriculture. The question asks for the cost of 32 trips which he made with his relatives at public expense. Those questions have been outstanding for a great deal of time.

An hon. Member: He is a jet setter.

Mr. Cossitt: There is no reason that this information should be held back, curtailed or kept from parliament, simply because the Minister of Transport got his fanny burned when he answered one of my questions last year on the number of trips he made which amounted to three-quarters of a million dollars. I think it is time we learned how much of taxpayers' funds all these people have spent to become a jet set and fly all over Canada at public expense. I would like to hear the Minister of Transport reply to this point of order and explain why those questions have not been answered.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

AIR CANADA ACT, 1976

MEASURE RESPECTING REORGANIZATION OF AIR CANADA

The House resumed from Friday, May 27, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lang that Bill C-17, respecting the reorganization of Air Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have only a couple of minutes left. I just want to conclude my speech by saying, as I was at noon, that I thought the management, and indeed the Department of Transport, would find it to their benefit if they could solicit some of the expertise available from their own employees in making decisions in certain policy areas.

As a final thought, I would like to protest, on my own behalf as well as on behalf of other members, the lack of accountability implicit in this government, and the department, as exemplified by not having had the executives of Air Canada before the relevant Standing Committee of this House, that is Transport and Communications, since 1973 at which time it was only the 1972 annual report that parliamentarians were able to consider. During the past four years undoubtedly many matters of interest to the airline, to aviation and to the country could have been and would have been discussed. The people of Canada ought to know it is not the fault of Air Canada that they did not appear before the committee. The airline was ready, willing and able to do so. It is not the fault of parliament that they did not appear. It is simply the fault of the government, which does not particularly believe in accountability, even when it pertains to its own Crown corporations.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I was pleased to listen to the remarks of the previous speaker. He has a great interest in Air Canada, as have many other hon. members. I, too, am concerned that the changes which are being made are not necessarily in the interest of Air Canada but rather are in the interests of civil servants and the government, who want to have more say in the operation of Air Canada. I listened with interest to the charges which were being made about the unwillingness of Air Canada to schedule flights in the maritime provinces at times which would meet the convenience of people travelling into central Canada. While I have no particular interest in Air Canada from that point of view, Air Canada having left my part of the country and having left much of northern Ontario and northern Quebec, I still am interested in the development of a national airline which can bring the parts of Canada which are easy to service and unite together with those areas which are not so easy to service.

There seems to be little interest on the part of the national carrier to have schedules which would provide domestic travel service which would be a unifying factor in our country. Second, it seems to me that Air Canada should have on its board of directors those people who run the airline. Others have mentioned this, particularly the previous speaker. As the previous speaker said, it may be necessary to have representatives from the civil service, if it is the intention of the government to allow the civil service to have some say in the running of the airline. If that is the case, some civil servants should be on the board of directors and should take some interest in how the airline is run. There should also be representation on a regional basis.

The airline should be able to do something it has not yet been able to do. It should be able to set up a sales agency to put together package tour arrangements, which Air Canada has totally failed to do up until now. True, Air Canada has been operating Sunflights, but it has never been able to break even. It has never been able to make any money, and it has never understood why it cannot handle tourist traffic to other countries. It is quite likely that if Air Canada were able to get into the tourist field and succeed, it would be able to afford the kind of aircraft it needs and to make better utilization of that aircraft. We can use Quebecair and Nordair as examples. Quebecair and Nordair under no circumstances could afford the type of aircraft they have if they were used only for domestic purposes. They are flying Boeing 727's, Boeing 737's and several other aircraft which they in no way could afford for their domestic travel only. They would not be able to keep up the payments on those aircraft if they depended on their domestic scheduled routes, but they have been able to utilize those aircraft at the weekends. In fact, Nordair flies each aircraft back and forth to the Caribbean four times per weekend. If tourist operators are using those aircraft, they are likely filled to capacity or near capacity, which would be unlikely on a seven day basis on scheduled flights.

One thing Air Canada has never been able to do is relate its prestige to domestic needs. I am sure the government wants to have prestige aircraft flying the flag of Canada in other countries, and I am surprised at the fragmentation which has taken place in the airline. For years I have travelled Air Canada. Air Canada once went from Montreal to Ottawa, Val d'Or, Rouyn, Earlton, North Bay, Toronto and back to Montreal. It covered half the continent with one aircraft and did a reasonable job. However, that type of schedule will not carry the traffic—if it is operating twice a day—which would warrant the use of DC-9's. In fact, I doubt whether the Viscount was feasible on that run. The Viscount has been phased out. I do not know what happened at the management level of Air Canada, but obviously it should have looked at some of the ancillary areas it was going to service, and it should have provided an aircraft for those areas.

There is nothing wrong with DC-9's. Someone mentioned that he would much rather travel on a DC-8. Well, I suggest he talk to an engineer about the DC-8. He might find that it might not be as attractive to travel on that aircraft as he thinks. We should have a small aircraft, but Air Canada has never purchased one. Presently I travel on a commercial scheduled airline which flies DC-3's. There is nothing wrong with DC-3's. Perhaps new DC-3's should be built. Some of the DC-3's I am flying on now have a lifespan which is almost, I suppose, as long as my own. Many of them are Second World War aircraft, and they are doing a fairly good job. They are economic on short runs. However, in Ontario we have also had to develop a provincial government airline. I think the fact Air Canada was providing much of the rest of the country with the kind of aircraft which could fly those small scheduled runs had some merit. Air Canada now has a very expensive and normally efficient reservation system which operates by computer, and I think it does a reasonably good job. Most of the small ancillary airlines cannot provide that kind of service unless they are tied in with Air Canada. Recently some did become tied in with Air Canada.

I fly First Air, which is a commercial operation of Bradley Air Services. Bradley is now flying an Otter between Ottawa and Montreal, to Mirabel. Because Bradley is going into Mirabel with that Otter three times a day, Air Canada is quite happy to put Bradley on the computer. First Air now goes to North Bay and Sudbury, and it is also on the computer system because of the arrangement which was made for Mirabel. It seems to me that the management of Air Canada should have a choice of what to do.

I am not happy about CP getting into the national domestic routes in Canada because I am not sure that 22 million or 23 million people can carry the overhead which is necessary to operate two international companies. Certainly CP and Air Canada are fairly large international airlines, considering the size of our country and the length of the trips those airlines have to make on scheduled runs outside this country. If we go into the international field, we have to have aircraft which are capable of doing the job. We should also be handling many domestic routes in this country, and they should be either operated in conjuction with Air Canada or in partnership with them. It was suggested some time ago that we buy into Wardair. The reason for that was not that we needed their aircraft. All we needed was Tom Ward's expertise in the field of package tourist operations. I was opposed to our buying it because I was of the opinion that rather them buying it we should take over the operation. In addition, I was frightened of Air Canada getting into any other field than flying airplanes.

This is what happened to the railroads. We allowed CNR to buy and operate hotels, to buy real estate, smelters, truck lines, and so forth. Pretty soon they were making more money out of their subsidiaries than they were out of the railroads, so they quit running the railroads. They did not put any balast on the tracks and they did not fix their running equipment. They were operating railroads on the basis of a little bit for the railroad and a whole lot for the subsidiaries which were more valuable to them. So I was opposed to Air Canada setting up subsidiary companies unless they were directly related to the running of the airline, and I am still opposed to it. It seems to me that if Air Canada is to be successful, if it is to operate for the people in general rather than for a small group of businessmen, it should concentrate wholly on running the airline.

Part of the problem stems from the businessmen. Air Canada rates have gone up tremendously. Why are members of parliament not complaining about Air Canada rates? The reason is that the government pays for the tickets. The government also pays for every businessman who travels on the airline by means of tax exemptions, so that nobody really cares about the cost of the tariff on the scheduled airlines. I am sure I do not know whether the tariff is reasonable or justifiable, but we pay for the airports and for all the facilities at the airports, for weather reports and radio control as well as all the services that are provided. All the airline does is rent space. So we should be looking at the fees for scheduled airlines and whether or not the public is getting good service for their money. It is my opinion that in many areas of this country the public is not being well served by Air Canada simply because the airline is not supplying the kind of aircraft that is needed to meet the needs of the people.

It was interesting to talk to people in western Canada on this subject. There are many westerners here today who can probably comment on the services of Air Canada. The ones I spoke to told me they could not fly on scheduled Air Canada flights between Edmonton and Calgary for two reasons—and this is something that Air Canada should consider. One reason was that the aircraft landed way out of town and it was difficult to get into town from the airport at which they were landing. Second, the airline was operating on a schedule that did not satisfy the business community or the travelling public. The last time I was in that area we travelled on what they call an airbus. You buy your ticket and stand in line for a flight that leaves every hour on the hour and comes back on the half hour. It takes off at the municipal airport right in the city, and there is not much waiting at either end.

Mention has been made of the Mirabel airport. There is an easy solution to the problem at Mirabel and one that we should consider very shortly. The advertisements you see in the newspapers from Boston are only the beginning. There are few airlines that will agree much longer to go through the hastle with their customers that they have to go through now in Mirabel where passengers have to transfer to the domestic routes at Dorval. Very few airlines will put up with that for very long. They will schedule all their flights into Montreal or into Boston where services can be provided. We made a mistake with Mirabel. This government has made lots of mistakes. I do not know whether our mistake was in building Mirabel or in keeping Dorval, but it is my honest opinion that we should either close down Dorval or close down Mirabel and operate only one airport from which passengers can travel either overseas or within the country. I do not care which airport is closed down.

It would seem to me to be more sensible to close down Dorval because we have built this monster at Mirabel and no one likes facing the fact that we made such a bad mistake that we must close down the new airport. Nevertheless, we should make a decision. There are many passengers now travelling through both Mirabel and Dorval, whereas a couple of years ago they were only travelling through Dorval. Dorval can handle the passenger traffic and, I dare say, so can Mirabel, but I suggest that one of the things that we better do very shortly is close down one of those airports and arrange for the traffic to come into the gateway of Canada, whether it be at Mirabel or Dorval so that people can transfer to domestic flights at the same airport. This would make things much simpler for people travelling with a lot of luggage. It is surprising that everyone coming from overseas has more luggage than they need, a lot more luggage than they have on domestic flights. This creates a problem if you have to travel 29 miles to reach another airport and go through the same hastle at the second airport as you did at the first one.

So I suggest that if we are really serious about helping Air Canada to continue to grow, a good way to do it is to establish a board of directors rather than having the governor in council make the decisions. The board of directors should answer directly to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang). He might as well run the airline. This might facilitate some things for him. Perhaps arrangements could be made which he could not make otherwise. The board of directors should be able to make decisions for Air Canada and the minister should be aware of the troubles at Mirabel and of the ways to solve them. Secondly, Air Canada should look for a 25 to 35 passenger aircraft to replace the old Viscount. I suggest that we should not take the Viscount out of mothballs. Even the Canadian government is not rich enough to afford the gasoline that plane guzzles. That was never an efficient aircraft at any time and to get it out of mothballs would be a regressive rather than a progressive step. There are small jets today that are available at a much smaller price than a DC-9. They can handle 25 to 35 passengers. They can provide service on those runs where aircraft of this type can normally be efficient and meet the needs of the community.

I think that much of Air Canada service has to be related to passengers coming off domestic flights to the trans Canada corridor or going to the international corridor, and certainly with the expenditure we have made on accounting and computerization in Air Canada, this could be utilized by all those making connection with the service from the feeder lines. Much of that could be done by Air Canada itself. I hope that before long the Minister of Transport will give us some indication of what he will do about the Mirabel problem. I hope he will give some indication of what he is going to do about the problems of the regional carriers. They are providing competition in a field that I think Air Canada should be involved in, that is, package tours. Schedules in regional areas could be more efficient if they could be interrelated the way train schedules used to be. When you came to a junction you could transfer to another line within a reasonable period of time. But the airlines have not so far made any such arrangements.

I think the changes being made in accounting are worthwhile. I agree with those members who said the minister should not be afraid to ask for the assistance of members of parliament for a reference of the Air Canada annual report to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. Members would have an opportunity to make their contribution to problems in their area which do not appear to be understood by the officials of Air Canada.

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, I should like to congratulate my colleagues who have taken part in the debate and to commend them for some of their constructive suggestions. Air Canada is one of the best airlines in the world and as I look back over its 40 years of service to Canada I am proud of it. As a Canadian, I regard Canada's airline as my airline. It is owned by all Canadians. I want to see it improve. I want to see it serve Canadians better. I want to see Air Canada become an instrument for national unity and I want it to become an instrument to unlock the dynamics of growth in areas of regional disparity.

To achieve this purpose it becomes extremely important that the board of directors of Air Canada should have as its members persons drawn from every region of Canada. The lines of communication between government and the board of directors should be strong enough to ensure that government policies will be clearly interpreted and reflected in Air Canada's policies. At the same time, the operation of the airline should be the responsibility of the professional staff who are accountable for their performance to the board of directors.

It is important that government be plugged into the operation of our national airline to ensure that the national purpose is served and that the privileges it enjoys are properly exercised and also to prevent unfair competition by a national Crown company with regional air carriers. To achieve this purpose it is not necessary and most certainly not desirable that the government should be involved in the day-to-day operations of the company. It should not inflict on the company its judgment in matters where it has less expertise.

The requirement that bylaws of the corporation must first be approved by Cabinet before they have any force has the favourable effect of giving the government an insight into the operation of the corporation and enables it to control changes contemplated by the board of directors. On the other hand, it also undermines confidence in the board of directors and inflicts on government the role of being a corporate babysitter with a mass of paperwork to do. The ponderous and foot-dragging result is that the corporate structure of Air Canada would be weakened and government would be the villain for holding Air Canada back from making decisions in time to compete effectively in the market place. I suggest that a more efficient process would be for the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) to have a personal representative on the board of directors—the government after all will soon appoint all directors—and this personal representative could keep the minister and the Cabinet informed of all activities of the board, including bylaw changes. It may also be possible and desirable that the minister be made an ex officio member of the board of directors.

The expanded role of Air Canada in a wider range of activities and the opening of new avenues for finance causes me to have mixed feelings. The entry into the hotel business, if it is profitable, can stimulate the air carrier segment of its business and hopefully reduce fares. On the other hand, losses in this field could have the opposite effect. If Air Canada is to compete effectively it needs a broader base of operations and the additional powers proposed in this bill. The use to which these powers are put and the degree to which the airline moves in the national interest of Canada will be the test of the quality of leadership of the people whom the government puts in charge of the airline and therefore of the government itself.

It is in my view extremely important that Mr. Justice Estey's recommendations delivered following the Air Canada inquiry of October 1975 be followed in one respect. I should like to quote the paragraph to which I refer:

> The Air Canada Act should provide a channel for the government or the responsible minister to issue to the board of directors of the corporation policy directives where the national interest from time to time requires. Where the national interest requires the corporation to undertake routes and projects where it will be demonstrably impossible to operate at a profit in the commercial sense, the airline should undertake them for the account of the government and be reimbursed accordingly.

The reason I am so concerned about this section is that I am not convinced that transportation is now being used as a development tool in areas where other government departments and policies are attempting to focus on the root causes of regional disparity.

In the new summer Air Canada flight schedule, the city of Fredericton, which serves central New Brunswick, will lose a morning flight from Montreal and a return flight to Montreal at noon hour each day. This will result in the reduction of air seat capability and an equally severe reduction in air cargo transportation. Air Canada must feel this reduction is necessary to cure its economic problems but it may well create them for people in New Brunswick.

The hard-nosed decision to retrench air service to central New Brunswick is a serious rejection by the federal government of the use of transportation as a development tool. It makes a mockery of the government's commitment to a policy of regional development. Indeed, this cutback was undertaken without the prior knowledge of or notice being given to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard). The war on economic disparity cannot be won in Canada by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion itself. Neither can it be won by our national airline. It requires the concentration, the combined efforts and the focus of all departments and Crown agencies, on the problem. It is not enough to have DREE spend millions of dollars on worthwhile projects in New Brunswick and other areas of Canada if the effect is to be eroded by the failure of the government to focus its fiscal, monetary, tariff and transportation policies on the same goal.

Fredericton will hold a large number of conventions this year, including over 5,000 people to the Learned Societies' conference for which Air Canada plans to put on extra flights. My initial calculation indicated that some 48 extra flights would be required; my last inquiry indicated that at least 20 were already sold out and ticketed. Extra flights were required for the graduation at the University of New Brunswick. These are only two of literally dozens of conventions and conferences that will take place during the tourist season in New Brunswick. Because the provincial and municipal governments in New Brunswick are working with the federal government to creater a climate attractive to Canadians who wish to invest in tourism—one of the principal businesses in New Brunswick—we can see evidence of new developments.

New Brunswick is trying to move ahead. For example, a Howard Johnson's motel is just about ready to open its doors in Fredericton and what happens? Because the government does not have the structure or the desire or the knowledge, our national airline celebrates the opening of the tourist season in New Brunswick with a serious cutback in facilities. It is not the fault of the airline. I realize full well Air Canada cannot be expected to fly empty planes around the sky and I do not want them to do that, but I feel the government should enable Air Canada to balance what appears to be an outstanding tourist year against an investment in our tourist industry and the development of our region.

I would like to see the accent put on more passengers at lower fares for the same or better dollar volume. We are already losing some passenger and cargo service to Delta Airlines in Maine. We have on occasion filled the flight being cancelled. On April 20 for example, it was over-sold and had to leave some passengers on the ground. Air charter seats allotted to our area were booked before the advertisements ran out. I had hoped the profits Air Canada makes from the extra flights put on to serve the Learned Societies' conference and other conventions and conferences would enable Air Canada to maintain its existing direct air ties between Montreal and Fredericton at least for the tourist season.

[Mr. Howie.]

Excluding Eastern Provincial Airways, the Air Canada retrenchment means that our national airline will have only one flight leaving Fredericton from Montreal which connects with ongoing flights west. A later flight terminates in Montreal.

We have no rail passenger service to New Brunswick's capital city and the cutback in air service is a serious blow. It may be necessary for Air Canada to break even on its profit and loss account; but I wish the government could enable it this once to invest in New Brunswickers and display its faith in our ability to attract visitors to this most beautiful part of Canada.

I feel also that in the national interest we should do everything we possibly can to enable Canadians to travel to all parts of this great country and get to know and understand one another. There is no magic formula or blueprint for national unity. There is only human decency, understanding and tolerance—these are the things that made our country and these are the things that can preserve it. We do, however, have to learn to communicate it and one of the ways we can communicate is through our national airline operating at a break even point with unprofitable lines clearly designated and subsidized by our government.

I like the amendments to the act which will enable the government to provide compensation for unprofitable routes in the national interest. I should like also to see the department of Regional Economic Expansion and our provincial governments directly involved in the selection of the routes to be compensated. I feel that this can be accomplished without undue interference or involvement in the day-to-day operations of the company.

One final matter: I should like to see the Auditor General much more involved with the Air Canada audit. Perhaps an external audit under the general direction of the Auditor General should be considered, but I am not clear whether the Auditor General has the power to act as a joint auditor. I think it would be a good idea if the Auditor General could direct external auditors to pay particular attention to some point or, at his option, personally intercede to direct the external auditors; or with his own staff, he might expand the audit into any area he considers necessary. This point perhaps can be taken up in committee.

In conclusion, I pay tribute to all that has been achieved over the past 40 years by Air Canada and hope, when the new act is proclaimed in its final form, that it will enable Canada's airline to fly the skies safely, and make a great and effective contribution to national unity and to resolving the problems of areas of regional disparity. I certainly hope the contribution parliament makes to our national airline will enable it to have as much faith in us as we have in it.

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, it gives me great pleasure to participate in this debate. I will not delay unduly second reading of this bill. Actually, I think I am the last speaker on this bill on this side of the House. The debate on this measure has been excellent and hon. members have exposed many points which they think merit consideration, and have voiced their concerns. Though we all consider this bill important, we should note that the government first introduced the bill on October 28, seven months ago. Surely it could have given it higher legislative priority, particularly since we do not often have the opportunity to examine the workings of this large and important Crown corporation which affects many Canadians one way or another. It is unfortunate as well that the minister saw fit to bring forward this bill at the very time when the transport committee is travelling in eastern Canada, examining various transportation problems in the Atlantic provinces. I suggest the minister has shown contempt for the work of the committee, many members of which would like to participate in this debate. Owing to the demands of travel to Atlantic Canada, they are unable to participate.

I am greatly concerned because there is no provision for regular review of Air Canada's activities. I think a committee of the House last considered an annual report of the corporation back in 1973. Since Air Canada is a large corporation, operating with an investment of approximately $1 billion of taxpayer money, and since it is our national air carrier and carries many Canadians, surely it behooves the government to order the company to appear regularly before a parliamentary committee and thus be accountable regularly to its shareholders, the people of this country. I hope, when this bill is in committee, we shall be able to enshrine either in the legislation or in some regulation a requirement for Air Canada to appear every year before the appropriate parliamentary committee. At least, it ought to appear when so ordered by that committee. Such provision would serve not only the interests of members of parliament and the House, but would be beneficial to Air Canada. I would improve the efficiency of Air Canada's operations and of its management.

Air Canada is often criticized for its service, and I suggest many complaints and criticism are justifiable. However, I suggest if Air Canada's management were to appear before a committee regularly, it could set the record straight and answer charges and criticisms levelled against the corporation from time to time which are not justifiable. Many hon. members in the last few days have criticized Air Canada for its inadequacies and shortcomings. I point out that we criticize the airline with the hope of improving its operations. Our criticism was not meant to be destructive. In that connection let me say that, though I have often criticized Air Canada in the past, I think the airline's senior management under its newly appointed chief executive officer and president, Mr. Claude Taylor, is doing a good job. Since taking over the running of the corporation, Mr. Taylor has done well. He and his associates have made decisions which have made our national airline function reasonably efficiently. The airline's employee morale has improved. Drastic steps were taken to cut costs, improve efficiency, improve the utilization rate and increase productivity. By and large, the new president and his board have made determined efforts to make Air Canada profitable.

The people of Canada hold various views about Air Canada. The airlines national task is not an easy one to fulfil. Many Canadians expect much of Air Canada. Bearing this in mind I say that, on balance, the new management has done a good job. It listened to and dealt with criticisms. However, no airline is perfect.

Many hon. members have complained about scheduling and frequency of service, with reason, I suggest. Although we complain, we must remember that one must balance costs, the cost of utilization against the cost of energy. I know, as well, that the Commissioner for Official Languages has used Air Canada as his favourite punching bag. The president of Air Canada has been preoccupied with attempts to implement some of the recommendations made in the Official Language Commissioner's report. A recent report makes 146 recommendations. Some of them arose from a recent study of the corporation's eastern region headquarters, and some appear unrealistic. Actually, some of them will tend to hurt the morale of employees and the operations of the airline, and may go far to erode the good will built up under Mr. Taylor's leadership. I hope, perhaps while we are considering this bill or when the committee has the chance to examine the company's annual report, that we can explore the recommendations and criticisms the Commissioner of Official Languages has levelled at Air Canada.

We have heard only one side of the story. I know the people working in ticket offices and on counters have been somewhat apprehensive about recommendations the Commissioner for Official Languages has made, and are even more apprehensive in case some of them will be implemented.

As others said, this year we celebrate the fortieth anniversary of Air Canada's establishment. During the past 40 years, no fundamental amendments have been made to the Air Canada Act. It is fair to say, therefore, that this bill is long overdue. In the 40 years since the first Air Canada Act was proclaimed, the corporation and the society in which it operates have undergone phenomenal growth and change. In that sense, one of the major failings of this particular piece of legislation is that nowhere in the bill is it spelled out what the mission and the role of Air Canada is intended to be.

It has been cited time and time again by former executive officers and particularly emphasized by the former chairman of Air Canada, Mr. Yves Pratte, who had this to say in testimony before the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications on June 22, 1971, and I quote:

> The basic problem in so far as we at the management level are concerned is that we do not know what the mission of Air Canada is. We wish we knew. It is awfully difficult to manage any organization when one does not know what the purpose of the organization is: when you are told on the one hand that the purpose of the organization is to be as profitable as any private corporation and, on the other hand, that you are to provide service at all cost.

The basic problem is for the government to define the role and mission of Air Canada. If that is defined, I am satisfied that we can do the job; but it is not up to us to decide what our role is.

Other speakers have pointed this out. Surely this is an appropriate time to define the role and the mission of Air Canada. Is it to provide a service at cost or is it to show a profit? Surely this legislation should provide that direction.

If Air Canada is to be a profit oriented corporation, as recent policy statements by the government seem to imply, the provisions of this bill should clearly state that. It would have the advantage of giving potential investors more confidence in the commercial orientation of this corporation. It would clear up the somewhat unnecessary ambiguities and uncertainties which are in this bill. In this connection, I want to quote somewhat extensively from a document entitled "The Evolution of Transportation Policy in Canada". It was written by Mr. John R. Baldwin who at one time was the president of Air Canada. He is dealing with the operations of two major Crown corporations, Air Canada and CNR. He states at page 41 and I quote:

There is no clear public definition why it is important that they—

That is referring to Air Canada and CNR.

—be publicly-owned or what the government expects from each that is different from private competitors. Greater responsiveness to government policies, willingness to act as a "model" corporation, and the need for a governmental instrument are generalities that have been used but mean little unless defined more specifically in a complete context of goals. Air Canada, worried by this situation a few years ago, prepared and submitted for approval to its minister a set of objectives. The company was told they were satisfactory but I would have been happier if they had become a public document opened for parliamentary debate. This could have resulted in some concurrence on the nature and purposes of public ownership, on corporate objectives, and on public expectations. The need is made greater by the insertion in the NTA of transportation principles with their commercial orientation.

I hoped something of this sort would emerge in the new Air Canada legislation but the bill submitted for first reading is silent on this point. An opportunity remains for the matter to be brought forward in parliamentary debate. I believe the same comment on value of broad parliamentary agreement on goals and objectives exists for CNR as well. I am aware that not all management may agree, some preferring the greater flexibility of a purely internal definition of objectives.

My attitude is influenced by other aspects of the first public draft of the new Air Canada legislation. While it would (or in some cases could, since permission from government would be needed) give Air Canada badly needed broader powers and improved capital structure, about 80 per cent of the principal operative clauses reserve a discretionary authority for the Governor in Council. This is a tremendous amount of power to place in the hands of the bureaucracy. It could nullify some objectives of the bill or allow intervention in management matters to a degree that would reverse the hitherto good record of government in regard to reasonable freedom for management. The Board of Directors, whose powers and role are nowhere defined in the legislation, could find themselves with little in the way of a useful role. My fear, incidentally, primarily centres on the temptation for the bureaucracy to intervene in management even more than of the intent of the Governor in Council to misuse its authority. I cannot believe that this situation will pass unnoticed.

That summarizes some of the concerns that members on this side of the House have expressed in connection with this legislation. Coming from an authority like Mr. Baldwin, it certainly deserves some very serious consideration. I hope that during the time we consider this bill that this passage will be considered in a serious manner.

The bill provides authorization for Canada to engage in activities which are not currently permitted. This act brings the question of the role of the corporation into even greater light. The proposed act broadens the capacities and activities which the company may undertake, both within and outside Canada. Aside from operating the business of an air carrier, there are references to hotels and other accommodation, surface vehicles and facilities for the transportation and housing of persons, goods and mail, services, facilities and equipment for organizing and conducting tours, catering and providing other passenger-related services, including reservations for transportation and accommodation, and computer and teleprocessing systems and technical, advisory and consulting services.

Generally the increases in these activities are good for the company. They will give it an opportunity to provide a more complete travel package. The act does this, and it is something that Mr. Baldwin referred to in his critique of the bill. All these things have to be authorized by the governor-in-council. There are two matters of concern in that connection. First, there is the potential danger of undue political interference or influence and bureaucratic intervention. Second, there is concern that it could allow the company to extend into "for-hire" trucking services, something about which the Canadian Trucking Association has expressed justifiable concern.

The Canadian Trucking Association argues that there is no reason for Crown corporations functioning in the rail or air mode to engage in "for-hire" trucking in competitions as it were to the primary function of said corporation. "For-hire" trucking has proved to be one mode where private enterprise can provide adequate service and effective competition in practically all parts of the country. I know the minister has responded. He attempted to allay the fears of the Canadian Trucking Association in this area. However, I do not believe that his response and explanation are satisfactory. We will consider that area quite thoroughly when this bill gets into committee.

Bill C-17 brings about an authority and mechanisms for transferring the ownership of Air Canada from CN to the government directly.

I think it is fair to say that the CN connection has in the past had the effect of allowing Air Canada management to effectively circumvent parliamentary control. Air Canada has received money from CN rather than directly from parliament, as well as advances of funds; a significant amount of money has been advanced in this way without reference to parliament and without any degree of accountability. The principle of trying to separate Air Canada from the CNR is one which we in this party have advocated for some time and we are very pleased that it is contained in this legislation. The former minister of transport, now Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) made reference to this back in 1969.

A large part of the bill deals with the financing of Air Canada. Authorizing more common shares is rather a non-issue at present, but it may have some bearing in the future if some or all of Air Canada is transferred to the private sector. Allowing the corporation to borrow on the private market would seem to be a step in the right direction. We note that all borrowing must first be approved by the Minister of Finance. It would seem that government control is being extended into the day to day operations of the airline, and this is something at which we must take a serious second look.

The government seems to have followed Judge Estey's recommendation only half way. He said in his report that the position of the board of directors as the ultimate authority in the corporation should be improved by enlarging the board and forming an executive committee of the board. The management set-up of Air Canada has been changed to allow for this change, but the rest of the bill, in my view, circumvents it in spirit. Clause 7 is a good example. We read that all bylaws made by the board have to be approved by order in council. This crops up again in clause 8 wherein it is said that Air Canada should provide a channel for the government to issue to the board policy directives where the national interest requires.

It would appear that, here again, the government has completely lost the spirit of the Estey report. Clause 8 gives the government sweeping powers to control Air Canada. Simply stated, the act tells Air Canada to comply with any directives which it is given. No limits are placed upon what directions are permitted. To my mind, this is inexcusable. A provision in clause 9 states that the governor in council may—it is not obliged to, but it may—pay compensation to Air Canada for operating unprofitable routes in the national interest. This, surely, should be clarified. We should be told how the losses are to be calculated and how the operation is to be carried out.

A number of clauses require clarification. In some cases we find ambiguities and contradictions in the legislation, and we hope we shall be able to refine those clauses so as to make them consistent with what should be the principal thrust of the legislation. The question of auditing has been raised by other members. This issue raises the question of political pork-barrelling. Surely, if the management of Air Canada is to manage, they should have discretion in this particular area.

In summary, the principle of the bill is, in our view, long overdue and we certainly support it. We feel that the wording has taken it past the major recommendations of Judge Estey in connection with the revamping of the corporation. This is one of the first occasions on which we have had a clear analysis of the workings of the airline. We feel the bill grants undue power to the governor in council and that it could amount to what one might refer to as a supermanagement level of the public service to oversee the normal management of Air Canada, and we have some apprehensions about that.

These features could tend to transform the corporation into an agency of government rather than a commercial enterprise. Subject to appropriate government directives and control measures and accountability procedures—and I must say that the word "appropriate" must be stressed here—the direction and control of the corporation should be vested in the board and in the management, and I cannot reiterate enough the fact that the corporation should be accountable to parliament, to the House of Commons, through the relevant committee.

I do not think Air Canada should be called upon to pay for some of the sins which have been committed by other Crown corporations. We have no choice but to accept as given that Air Canada is, and should be, professionally and responsibly managed. If that is not the case, the government has the means of changing the board and the management. Nevertheless, the government should not tie the hands of the company or set up a control mechanism which would demoralize the corporation and make it unattractive to those with the skills necessary to operate it at its best level.

I believe that if the corporation is given permission to manage itself within a defined set of government policies similar to the operation of a private airline and consistent with good business practice, without undue government interference, the nickname "Err Canada" may very well disappear for good. Indeed, Canada's national airline might well become an airline of which all Canadians can be proud.

We are pleased to see that this bill will now move to committee. We shall, naturally, have some amendments to introduce at that stage. We hope we shall have an opportunity to call witnesses to obtain their views and clarification of certain points. We hope, also, that the minister will be receptive to some of our suggestions, because it is in our interests to make the bill a better piece of legislation so that the Crown corporation can go forth and become a transportation entity of which we as Canadians can be proud.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take the time of the House for a few minutes to put forward some thoughts on Air Canada. It has long been a point of thoughtful observers that if the federal government ever got around to making a start in seriously cutting down spending, a useful place to start would be Air Canada. Air Canada has become fat and lazy. It has a monopoly of 75 per cent of cross-country routes, and one would have to be a very placid traveller to call the service provided much more than an indifferent one.

It is obvious we should have competition wherever possible, and in connection with the airlines it is one area which could certainly be more meaningful. But I note that the head of Air Canada has always decried the American practice of having a number of airlines competing with one another. I think it ill behooves the head of Air Canada to express such an opinion, since Air Canada has a monopoly of 75 per cent of the cross-Canada travel, come what may. CP Air and the five regional airlines would certainly be willing and able to play a more extensive role than that allowed them by the federal regulatory authority.

Although there is much competition in the field of railways, there is a place for it, too, in the matter of air travel. The routes which Air Canada finds least attractive are still served by private carriers at a profit, which just goes to show that Air Canada does not need to use the argument that it has "milk runs" which do not pay and hence cause a deficit. The government has protected Air Canada and set it apart from potential competitors. That may have been necessary at the beginning. It reports directly to parliament while other air carriers are governed strictly by the CTC. Air Canada, by and large, is given the most profitable routes while other airlines must be content with routes which the national airline does not want. Because Air Canada has been so zealously protected by the government, it has not been efficient or cost conscious and certainly compares unfavourably with U.S. airlines of comparable size.

Air Canada has really had everything its own way. If it wanted a route, the regulatory authority favoured its pet. An example of this was provided when Nordair applied in 1973 for a set service linking Thunder Bay, Sudbury, Ottawa and Montreal. It was a one-day flight. The CTC turned down the application when Air Canada undertook to provide comparable service, but the scheduling was such that it required a two-evening stay in Montreal for a one-day business trip.

The influence of Air Canada on the negotiators in the Department of Transport can certainly be noted. In recent trans-border allocations of routes Air Canada received 19 out of 20, the lone exception going to CP Air. In my own province of Manitoba, Transair would have been immeasurably helped by having at least one route allocated to them. It is significant that three U.S. airlines are flying out of Winnipeg south to Chicago, Minneapolis and Denver, with no Canadian alternative. As I understand it, the possibility of CP Air or Transair being allocated routes in other parts of Canada was under negotiation, and Air Canada has not even taken up some of the routes negotiated on their behalf. I feel that this crass cringing to the wishes of Air Canada by the Department of Transport is one reason CP Air has been failing to show a profit and is undergoing hard times. In any case, Air Canada always tends to show a loss.

For western Canadians, Air Canada has come to signify a largely eastern dominated airline, bringing with it the problem of language. One of the problems faced by Air Canada employees in the city of Montreal, which is its major base, is use of language. The Official Languages Act provides that in any public facility there should be a person available who is competent to speak one of the two official languages. As I say, use of one language or the other in maintenance work at Air Canada has now become a bone of contention. As I understand Bill 1, the Quebec legislature wishes the language of work in Quebec to be French. I have no quarrel with that, but it does create problems for a national airline like Air Canada. Should its employees be required to work only in French, and would this detract from their efficiency and the movement of Air Canada employees across the country? So far as cabin crews are concerned, we would all agree that facility in the second language should be available at all times. But does this mean that all cabin crews must originate from Montreal, to the detriment of potential cabin crews in other parts of the country?

One of the ways to solve the problem of competition would be to revoke Air Canada's 75 per cent cross-country monopoly which it has. This could be done in stages so Air Canada could adjust to the increased competition. It may not be able to retain its 75 per cent of the traffic. This bill seems to make very doubtful the proposition that Air Canada will be any more efficient or economic than it has been in the past. As I have said, the airline is associated essentially with eastern Canada; western Canadians look on CP Air as their airline. Pacific Western Airlines is also expanding and becoming a larger regional airline. I hope that this bill will answer some of the questions concerning Air Canada, but I doubt that it will.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

MEASURE TO INCREASE THE MAXIMUM LIABILITY OF THE CORPORATION AND CREDIT GUARANTEES

Hon. Ron Basford (for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce) moved that Bill C-47, to amend the Export Development Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Basford (for Mr. Chrétien) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Mr. Speaker, this bill, Bill C-47, to amend the Export Development Act increases the maximum liabilities for export credits insurance and guarantees. Specifically, by amending section 26 of the act the maximum liability ceiling on insurance written for the corporation's account would be increased from $750 million to $2.5 billion. By amending section 28, the ceiling on insurance written for the account of the government would be increased from $750 million to $1 billion. This amendment to the Export Development Act will raise the present statutory limit for insurance and guarantees such that EDC may meet the full requirements of Canadian exporters through to the end of 1978.

All hon. members are aware that success in international trade is absolutely essential to the health of the Canadian economy. The export credits insurance program of EDC is a critical factor in facilitating exports. Mr. Speaker, some 25 per cent of our gross national product is attributable to Canada's exports to foreign countries. The more successful our exporters are, the more our manufacturers will be required to manufacture more goods in order to meet their requirements, and in turn will be able to provide more employment, which is so needed at this time, for many, many Canadians.

The bill has had thorough discussion in committee covering all aspects of the operations of the Export Development Corporation. The co-operation and understanding of the importance of this measure by all members of the committee has resulted in an expeditious passage. Therefore, I would recommend that Bill C-47, to amend the Export Development Act, as reported from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs be passed by this House.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, as was indicated by the parliamentary secretary, this bill had three sessions with the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. The fact that it required three sessions should be a salutary lesson to a number of government agencies. In this particular case the government somehow or other waited until the last minute to schedule the bill before the House. Then it went over to committee, where committee members were met with the plea that the pipeline was more than full in so far as credit insurance was concerned.

I think it is wrong to say that any delay in the passage of the bill might inhibit the operations of the agency. The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) will have something to say about that, but I would like to indicate that I do not think it is the proper way to operate the shop. It was clearly understood and foreseeable, as was indicated by the chairman and other officers of the corporation, that because of increased dollar values due to inflation, not only in Canada but abroad, the then existing ceilings on loans and credit insurance were inadequate for the purposes of the corporation. With a little foresight we would have had an avoidance of this procedure.

In Great Britain and other countries there may be a wall of paper built around the operations of parallel institutions; but in the United States, on the other hand, it is quite open to determine who obtained credit insurance, for what purpose, what country was involved and what parties were involved. The same thing applies to loans. In so far as the government of Canada is concerned, it is high time to emulate it. The hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) is trying to impress upon the whole operation of government a right to information. We should not have the situation where somebody in a government agency at some director level, or at the assistant deputy minister level or the deputy minister level can say, "It would not be in the government's interests if we let anyone know what goes on. That would be sacrosanct". There has to be a good deal more information put out.

We did get some information. In the end, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) and his associates were as co-operative as they could be under the circumstances, but square one was so far down the line that other agencies which are going to come before parliament in the foreseeable future should take note of what the opposition is going to insist upon. We have a right to insist. Their operations are not going to be sacrificed or damaged in any way. Frankly, this bill took three days in committee merely to get that point across.

In so far as the operations are concerned, we know this agency is vital to Canadian trade. Canadian trade is in a tough spot. Many of our commodities are being priced out of the market by some darned foolishness at the productive levels, in government policies and in tax policies. They are hard-pressed to sell. Then there are great crocodile tears from some industries where employment has gone soft. All one has to say to those people doing the greatest crying is, "Look to your own actions in this regard".

One has to say, also, "How much have you been the author of the wrongs and the ills of your own industry? Let us see where the competitive costs are. It is not the government's role to subsidize in order to get into foreign market". This is a form of government subsidy. We have to practice it in the worldwide markets because other nations do it. If the operation of this corporation did not exist, and if these facilities were not available to Canadian business, I would say there would be a most appreciable decline in Canadian export trade and, naturally, in Canadian industry. Then we would see who would be doing the crying and the moaning.

I hope this bill will get third reading by five o'clock. The reports of the committee indicate to the members of the House information which is necessary. It being a short bill with a limited purpose, as far as I am concerned, having established the point about the right to information and that government should mend its ways with regard to the timing of these bills, I am quite prepared to recommend to hon. members that this bill be passed.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, members of this House should bear in mind that when we are referring to the Export Development Corporation we refer to one of the largest Crown corporations that this government has under its control. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) has indicated that we caught the government attempting to slip through the substance of what we have before us in Bill C-47 as a $1 item. I think their actions were wrong. They attempted to circumvent parliament, the committees of parliament and the House itself.

In requiring and asking for the ruling the Speaker gave that the $1 item was not proper we have at least secured the precedent of ensuring that the government in future, when they wish to raise the ceilings with respect to loan limits in EDC or the insurance ceilings in EDC, must do it in a proper way, and that is by amendment to the EDC legislation itself. Having said that and having once again agreed that we do not have any serious misgivings concerning the insurance side of EDC's activities, there is a caveat which I would like to mention later.

I would like to reiterate that we do have very serious questions concerning the financing activity which has become so much the lifeblood of EDC. We have come to the point where we have to start asking very basic questions. Is it in the long-term interest of Canada that EDC give soft loan financing, for example, to Poland to allow that country to establish a pulp and paper industry on the strength of our credit? As far as pulp and paper exports are concerned, world competition is becoming more and more competitive, and yet we find—this was brought out in the committee—that EDC had little hesitation in going to the Bank of Warsaw in Poland and signing an agreement to lend Poland $108.7 million to help finance the purchase of equipment and related services for pulp and paper complexes in that country. We cannot get the EDC to identify what interest rate it put on that loan. We understand it is probably in the range of 7 per cent to perhaps 8.5 per cent, but we know that starting possibly as late as January, 1981, the bank in Warsaw will be given ten years to repay that loan.

I cite that as an example of the activities which EDC has started to finance, and I think a serious question must be raised as to whether those who are currently in charge of EDC, which is under the direct supervision of the government, are being prudent in making loans to a country such as Poland with a view to helping it establish a pulp and paper industry which will be competitive with our own pulp and paper activities.

During the second reading debate of this bill we indicated our basic support for its provisions. It really only raises the insurance liability ceilings of EDC. As I have said, we have always felt that the insurance side of EDC was the more credible aspect of the activities of EDC, and we believe the change in the insurance provisions is justified. However, I said that there is a caveat. In the committee there was the startling revelation that comparatively few companies in Canada are sharing the bulk of the benefits as far as the insurance activities of EDC are concerned. In 1976, 50 corporations secured insurance commitments from EDC, for a total liability of $278.9 million. That, incidentally, represented about 60 per cent of the total insurance liabilities underwritten by EDC in that year. It is pertinent to ask ourselves whether that is equitable. Is EDC doing all in its power to ensure that comparatively small concerns get the benefit of export credit insurance to a greater extent than is now being awarded to those companies?

I ask that because if we look over the list it is rather startling to see where the insurance was actually written. We were only given ranges. In spite of the fact that EDC is a Crown corporation, apparently we were not entitled to know the precise insurance policies which were written with, for example, MacMillan Bloedel. But it is interesting to note that in 1976—in fact, for the past five years—MacMillan Bloedel has been number one on the hit parade as far as insurance commitment is concerned. In 1976 that company alone received an underwriting of $30 million to $40 million. As we can see from the figures I initially gave, that is more than 10 per cent of the total business written by EDC on the export insurance side alone. Canadian Cellulose Limited, and ATCO (Eastern) Limited both received insurance underwritings of $20 million to $30 million apiece. Seaboard Lumber Sales Company Limited and British Columbia Forest Products Limited received such insurance commitments in the range of $15 million to $20 million. The Steel Company of Canada Limited, and St. Anne Pulp and Paper Company Limited received commitments of $10 million to $15 million.

I could go through the list and indicate that $5 million to $10 million in liabilities was awarded to Campotex Limited; Gulf Oil (Canada); Lewis, Keefer and Penfield Limited; and Atlas Steels Limited, a division of Rio Algom Limited. It is obvious that EDC finds it comparatively easy to put out huge commitments for the benefit of such corporations, and our basic question is: Is EDC doing all in its power to ensure that comparatively small companies get a fair amount of assistance which should be going to them as opposed to relatively large corporations?

Dealing with this subject in the committee Mr. V. G. McKay, vice-president of finance, Export Development Corporation, stated the following:

> Of the top 50 policyholders of which you have a list in the short-term section of the insurance division, approximately 60 per cent of the liability of the corporation is represented in those 50 names.

I have referred to some of those 50 names. Then after the companies had been identified I stated the following:

> About 60 per cent of the total amount insured by EDC in 1976 went to 50 corporations. It totalled about $250 million—

It was actually some $270 million, which I referred to earlier.

> —which means on the average they received about $5 million per company, or per concern. The top range, which is presumably MacMillan Bloedel Limited, got between $30 million to $40 million in total liabilities. Is that pattern, what we may assume for the four other years that we had before us, 1972 to 1975, roughly the experience of EDC, that the top 50 have been getting about 60 per cent of the total insurance and the ranges I have referred to are roughly that?

Mr. John A. MacDonald, chairman of the EDC, replied: "Yes". Mr. Chase-Casgrain, vice-president of the corporation in charge of insurance, replied: "Yes, I think that would be an accurate statement, Mr. Stevens". I think it is important that we put on the record that in truth a tremendous amount of the insurance activity of the EDC benefits a comparatively small number of companies. I find it inconsistent that not only is it going for the benefit of those companies—and I point out that many of the companies I referred to are big pulp and paper companies in Canada— but we find the contradiction of EDC, through their financing arm, through their lending activities, going to a bank in a country such as Poland and lending $100 million to help them set up a pulp and paper company in Poland, which in turn will presumably compete with such companies as MacMillan Bloedel who feel they need the type of insurance I have been referring to in order to sell their goods around the world. Surely there is some inconsistency in our making a $100 million loan to Poland to help them get into the pulp and paper industry so they can compete with the very pulp and paper companies to which we are giving insurance coverage to help them sell their goods around the world.

So far I have touched mainly on the insurance side of EDC activities because that, frankly, is the part that is covered by the bill before us raising the limits. But on this side of the House we have felt much less comfortable with the financing side of EDC than with the insurance side. The loan activities of EDC deserve a much closer scrutiny than they have been receiving, and we would like to put forward a few of our concerns, if we may, on this matter, that is, the lending activity of EDC, on the record.

We find the EDC is extending hundreds of millions of dollars in credit for the benefit of a select few countries and eventually we might have to write off substantial portions of these loans. Unfortunately, this will be done with little or no recourse or review. In a sense, you might say that it is typical of this government's actions. They blunder, they make mistakes, they act irresponsibly, such as in this case when they lend money, and subsequently we will find two years, five years or ten years from now, when these loans are not being repaid, that somehow the government will present a new nationalization. They will say, "We have a problem. We must accept a write-off against our current budgetary position", and they will step in, if they are still in power, and say, "Give us the credit, now, for clearing up the mess".

The reason we on this side of the House wish to draw attention to the irregularities and irresponsibilities in EDC is that we realize it will be this party as the government of Canada that will have to clear up some of the mess that will be left by these EDC type loans to which I have referred. In a sense, it is very typical of this government's attitude concerning the so-called national unity question. Surely, the government of the last nine years have created many of the problems in Canada that have led to a spirit of disunity. Their economic mismanagement has been so tragic as to trigger the unemployment and inflation that we have. It is natural that some people are now talking about a better system or even about some type of separation. But let us never forget that it is this government that in the past nine years has created the fertile ground for those feelings to spring from. Yet now we find how ludicrous it is that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), and even certain of his cabinet ministers, are pretending that they are the people to unify the nation and set it all right again.

In no way is the Canadian public vulnerable to such a lie. The responsibility must be pinned where it should be pinned, and that is on the government for their gross mismanagement of the economic and other affairs of this country. That is why I am so concerned about the irresponsibility that is taking place with respect to financing through EDC. Only last weekend we had the government House leader gratuitously offering a write-off of some $250 million with respect to debts owed by other countries to this country. How nice it is to casually say that we will write off that money. But let me emphasize that that type of write-off is only the beginning of what may happen with regard to some of the loans that are being made by EDC. Further write-offs will be required. Later in my remarks today I want to suggest that it is time the government started to reserve those write-offs in their budgetary figures that will occur with respect to some of the so-called soft loans that EDC is making.

We have already seen how the government tried to slip $2 billion in additional authorized EDC insurance liability through the House as a $1 item. Both my colleague and I have referred to it. We opposed this, and the bill before us is a result of the objections we had at that time to that sleight of hand. But the sleight of hand continues, I suggest, especially, as I have said, in the loan activities of EDC.

It is not a partisan pronouncement that I am making. The Auditor General himself has expressed concern about some of the write-offs that are developing and showing already in EDC. Let me quote from page 42 of the last report of the Auditor General, dated March 23. He stated:

> The future economic and political conditions in some of the countries where the corporation has made loans are unpredictable and accordingly possible losses to the corporation are not susceptible to accurate measurement.

We find that with a little juggling and accounting gymnastics—the polite term is "rescheduling"—the government is able to carry some $61 million in defaulted loans by simply rewriting them as new or extended loans. What a convenient term! If any of us, for example, get into default with our bank, how nice it would be to merely go to the bank and suggest that they reschedule. By rescheduling, all that is meant is that you take the defaulted loan, you add accrued interest, issue a new note, and say it is now current. That is exactly the type of game that EDC has been playing with respect to over $60 million of the loans now on their books. When we questioned this practice in committee, the president of EDC, John A. MacDonald, told us that although rescheduling was necessary in some instances, the corporation in fact—> —did not make loans to a country that has been rescheduled for some considerable period of time.

What Mr. MacDonald was referring to was the simple fact that perhaps he was a little embarrassed. It was so obvious that they were carrying loans that had been rescheduled. He hastened to assure us that if a country has got into that plight, the rescheduled loans are needed and they do not make fresh loans to that country. When we checked, as we did in committee, we found that this considerable period of time referred to by Mr. MacDonald is in many cases much shorter than one would expect. Pakistan, for example, had rescheduled loans totalling $26.3 million in 1976, yet we find that early in this year, on January 27, the EDC advanced another $1.4 million to support export sales to that country.

There are also other examples, such as the case of the Philippines which has also apparently worked its way back into EDC's good graces. In the Philippines we have financed another $1.7 million, even though that country has had to reschedule $7.4 million of previous loans. It is not that we oppose this type of generosity to struggling nations but, rather, that we are concerned about the mounting payments that will have to be made by both the nations that I have referred to, other nations and Canada, as debt is piled upon debt.

It is time we examined our goals in this area and re-evaluated our policies. As the cycle of default mounts in the world, the ability of the Export Development Corporation to promote export trade is less feasible. At home we have a federal government that in the current year is running up a deficit of $7.2 billion—a record deficit of staggering proportions in light of last year's deficit of only $5 billion. This is the same federal government that has allowed our trade to deteriorate to a deficit position, as far as manufactured end products are concerned, of some $10 billion. This is the same government that has been so oblivious to date about our current account deficit of $4.3 billion and which now appears to blithely turn its back on mounting default being incurred with respect to loans previously made to certain countries.

Let me put it this way, Mr. Speaker. Domestically we have a government that has incurred a deficit this year of $7.1 billion; externally we have a government that is living with deficits of between $4 billion and $5 billion on current account and which, in effect, is encouraging corporations and provinces to borrow sufficiently from foreign sources to cover that kind of deficit. Most important in relation to Bill C-47, we also have the EDC directing loans to support export sales, but the loans themselves will not be repaid in their entirety in future years. That is the picture we have before us—three levels of debt being piled on debt.

If I remember correctly, at committee it was revealed that somewhere in the neighbourhood of 40 per cent of all manufacturing trade from Canada not going to the United States was underwritten by the EDC at the present time. Some place along the line we have to see the significance of this measure. Granted, we want work for Canadians today, and if financing is needed we can understand the desire of the government to help. But let us not delude ourselves. We must realize that in order to generate $1 million worth of work, the EDC is lending $1 million to some country for up to 15 years and that probably a substantial portion of that amount will never be repaid.

The more this indirect subsidization snowballs, the higher the probability of default and the more we have loaded debt upon debt. For the sake of an export sale today we are literally jeopardizing jobs for future Canadians. The government should begin now to set up meaningful reserves against this type of loan so that it will not be so hard to digest in future years.

In looking over the activities of the EDC we must also question the wisdom of soft loans to communist bloc nations. We have seen EDC advance financing to Yugoslavia, Poland, Cuba, Czechoslovakia, Rumania, Hungary and Bulgaria. In one case the EDC advanced $250 million. A loan was advanced to a pulp and paper operation in Poland, yet the president of EDC admitted that it is likely this operation would be a significant competitor with our own pulp and paper industry. He justified the loan on the basis that if we did not lend the funds, somebody else would and in effect we would end up with no loaf as opposed to half a loaf. I suggest it is shortsighted to subject this nation to the debt load the government has assumed. It is not in the best interests of Canada to continue such shaky loan activity to support international trade.

At committee we asked the minister to give us some evidence of the government's restraint in the international arena to insure that so-called soft loans will not balloon even more within a few years. I am pleased to say he indicated their concern with the type of relatively poorly secured long-term financing that is taking place. I hope we can work in conjunction with the other countries that have been active in this type of soft loan system to tighten the rules in order to ensure that Canada and the other nations in future are selling goods, not financing, as far as the export trade is concerned.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, in principle we have nothing against extending the insurance activity of EDC as contemplated in Bill C-47. We believe that is the more respectable side of EDC activities, but we feel that it should make a more sincere effort to have that insurance available to many more small businesses in the country than is the case at the present time. To have 60 per cent of the benefit of the insurance going to 50 of the largest corporations in the country is questionable. We are concerned about EDC lending activities because we think we are going to regret the day we made many of the loans that it is now publicizing with great glee in the name of supporting Canadian jobs. They may temporarily give work to Canadians, but in the long run there are going to be severe losses not only in the economic sense but in the sense of job creation in future years.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a good deal of interest to what has been said about the Export Development Corporation this afternoon, especially what the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) had to say about large companies, the long lending policy of the government, and the industries that would be competing with industries here at home. I agree that this should be given careful consideration. If we are going to build up corporations in other countries that are going to be competitive because of a lower wage scale than ours, it means we are going back to being an undeveloped country.

The hon. member for York-Simcoe spoke about the large insurance companies. I want to bring to the attention of the House the small companies that have been forgotten and have not been paid for their losses by the Export Development Corporation or the insurance companies. I refer to a company that sent $40,000 worth of goods to Nairobi. When the goods were delivered, it was found that some were damaged. This was investigated—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, private bills, and notices of motions.

Mr. Paproski: A point of order, Mr. Speaker, I believe there is a disposition to allow all other bills to stand and debate Bill

C-225 standing in the name of the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams).

Mr. Goodale: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Agreed, and so ordered.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BILLS

[English]

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT TO RAISE AGE OF CONVICTION OF YOUNG OFFENDERS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North) moved that Bill C-225, to amend the Criminal Code (young offenders), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, time being limited in private members' hour I shall not, as I usually do, speak without notes but will refer to my notes closely. I hope the government will listen with sympathy to the subject I am about to discuss. I take great pleasure in speaking to Bill C-225, my own bill, which seeks to amend a Criminal Code provision concerning young offenders. In order that hon. members may understand the purpose of this bill, I shall read two sections of the Criminal Code of Canada. Section 12 reads:

No person shall be convicted of an offence in respect of an act or omission on his part while he was under the age of seven years.

That means, in brief, that any person seven years of age can be convicted of a criminal offence, with one exception to which I shall allude in a moment. In short, the Criminal Code treats any person over the age of seven as if he is an adult. The exception is contained in section 13, which reads:

No person shall be convicted of an offence in respect of an act or omission on his part while he was seven years of age or more, but under the age of fourteen years, unless he was competent to know the nature and consequences of his conduct and to appreciate that it was wrong.

In other words, any person between the ages of 7 and 14 can be convicted of a criminal offence, provided he was competent to know the nature and consequences of his conduct and to appreciate that it was wrong. Lawyers in the House will know that that rule is almost identical with the M'Naghten rule concerning insanity. In brief, my amendment would raise the age in section 12 to 12 years. It would raise the age limit from 7 years to 12 years. In other words, no person shall be convicted of an offence in respect of an act or omission on his part while he is under the age of 12 years. Surely that is a reasonable request. Surely that outdated part of the Criminal Code which is nearly 100 years old should be thrown out.

My bill would provide, second, that no person shall be convicted of an offence under the code while he is 12 years of age or more but under the age of 16, unless he is competent to know the consequences of his conduct. In brief, at present under the Criminal Code a child of eight years can be convicted of murder, manslaughter or robbery with violence, if he knew what he was doing, knew the nature and consequence of his conduct and knew it was wrong. That is the present law of Canada. I will put on record today some shocking statistics concerning the treatment of children in Canada who have been convicted of offences under the code. I shall speak of children under the age of 14 and as young as 12 years. Such children have been sent to penitentiary, there to be incarcerated with adults.

The last time I moved this bill in the House was March 3, 1970, seven long years ago. At that time children were being incarcerated in our penitentiaries. They had been incarcerated in penitentiaries as early as 1964, six years before I introduced the bill the first time. I want to deal with a case of a 12-year old boy who was sentenced by a judge in this country. I want to quote what Mr. Allan MacLeod, the superintendent of penitentiaries in Canada, said to Mr. Bill Trent, at that time a Weekend staff writer. At that time I was happy to have in my office Mrs. Robbin Frazer, who helped me do some research into this question. I now read what Mr. Bill Trent wrote:

Henri had all the cards stacked against him. He was the product of a shiftless father and a prostitute mother, who had separated. In his short lifetime he had been in all sorts of trouble. He had been sentenced to reformatories and at one time had even been committed to a mental hospital.

Then one night, during a period of freedom, he walked into the house to find his mother sleeping with her landlord. Furious, he picked up a can of tomatoes and hurled it at the man, striking him in the head. He was charged with assault.

The judge considered the matter for some time. The nature of the boy's previous offences indicated that he was in serious need of help. But there were no facilities for handling such a case.

At present the law says any person seven years old or older can be charged as an adult. I continue:

The judge finally sentenced Henri to two years in St. Vincent de Paul, admitting he was worried about the sentence—worried whether the inmates would be a bad influence on the boy, or whether the boy would be a bad influence on the inmates.

I question the latter point. I continue:

Henri was escorted behind the high walls of the maximum-security institution—

I have been to that institution as a visitor. I continue:

—a 12-year old boy among hundreds of hardened criminals.

"I still choke up when I think about it," says Lionel St. Pierre, warden of St. Vincent's federal training centre, who was penitentiary psychologist when the boy arrived. "I hustled him into my office to keep him away from the inmates and arranged to have him transferred to Federal Training Centre."

Henri (who was later released and has apparently been keeping out of trouble) was a polite, wholly co-operative child who responded well to the sympathetic guards.

The guards liked him so well that they chipped into a fund to buy him a scooter, a toy construction set and a fleet of toy trucks.

"It was quite a sight," one of the guards told me, "to see the boy pushing his way around the prison yard on his scooter."

But St. Pierre thinks the saddest incident of all was the day he took Henri into his office.

"The boy had one request and I couldn't grant it," he recalls. "He asked me if it would be all right to go out and play in the streets until supper time."

One hopes Henri's case will not be duplicated. As a result of the crusade I conducted personally in 1963 and 1970, children were removed from federal penitentiaries where they were raped, forced into homosexual acts, and learned the tricks of hardened criminals. Since 1968 the Trudeau government has promised to introduce a young offenders act. We are about as close to getting that bill as we are to having unity in this country. Both promises have been broken and both situations are in the same disarray.

With the files and research I have done—the files are more than one foot deep in my office—and since I am a trial lawyer and have for a number of years conducted cases regarding the custody of children and children getting into difficulty, I find that 90 per cent of such cases are the result, I am sorry to say, of irresponsibility of adults, of broken homes and the conduct of parents which in some cases is only fit for publication in Penthouse and Playboy. An article written by Pierre Berton puts the point pretty well. He wrote in part:

One byproduct was homosexuality. Since young offenders were often dumped into prison compounds with old and hardened men, it was almost axiomatic that any youth entering prison (and there were children as young as 13 in Canadian penitentiaries in the 1960's) be forced into homosexual alliance that could scar him for life.

Since 1908 there have been no real changes in the Juvenile Delinquents Act. The Diefenbaker government set up a committee in 1962 to study the whole question of young offenders. The head of that committee was Allan J. MacLeod, and the others where Dr. L. P. Gendreau, Inspector E. W. Willes, Ronald R. Price, and Miss M. L. Lynch. I might say, for the benefit of the Hansard reporter, that I am reading from my notes and he will find all these names mentioned in the text. I say this since I know I am speaking rapidly. That committee recommended, or said that the term "juvenile delinquent" was a belittling one which does not recognize the dignity of youth. They said it should be changed to "young offenders", but the federal government has done nothing despite the framework of a new act which was recently circulated by the Solicitor General's department. After my speech of March 7, 1974, and as a result of the crusade which had been under way long before that date, I managed to get most of the children out of jail by bringing pressure to bear on appropriate authorities and getting the support of the media.

I am still sad to say that today recent statistics are most revolting and disconcerting. Mr. Speaker, at present five inmates 16 years of age are incarcerated in federal penitentiaries. In addition, there are 38 inmates 17 years old and 1,343 inmates between the ages of 18 and 21. Those are national figures applying to 1973. The figures for all Canada with regard to juveniles only are as follows: There are 863 males incarcerated and 557 females, for a total of 1,520 such juveniles. I have not been able to get the 1976-77 figures for all across Canada. However, I was able to obtain figures from Canada's largest province, Ontario, and I stress that the federal government itself has left the vacuum.

The provinces have had to set up training schools at their own expense and children now have been transferred to these schools from penitentiaries; or, on the other hand, they have been there confined in their later years instead of being confined with adults in federal penitentiaries. The figures for Ontario for 1975 are as follows: 25 children aged 12 in training schools, 71 aged 13, 204 aged 14, 384 aged 15, and 34 aged 16, for a total of 718. To make matters worse, in 1975 for the age group of young people up to 16 there was a 50 per cent rate of recidivism, meaning that they returned to the same or another institution as the result of crimes committed.

I was shocked when I read the magazine "Like It Is—Young and In Trouble", publisher Gary C. Price. I checked it out today. It contains stories of what is going on in the training schools across this country. Let me take a few moments to tell the story of Tony. I will not give his last name as that would be unfair to him. Tony, now aged 23, is serving a three-year term in Collin's Bay penitentiary for armed robbery. History: his father died when he was two years of age. He was mistreated by his stepfather, never given a chance, was caught stealing at a very young age, sentenced to St. Joseph's training school at age 13 for truancy.

Fancy sending a person to a training school, a prison, for truancy! At that time he weighed 75 pounds. He was repeatedly beaten by the staff and fellow inmates. He ran away and was caught by the RCMP and handcuffed, but the handcuffs were so large that they kept falling off his wrists. He was returned to school, his head shaved and placed in a padded cell for a six-week period. He started a life of crime.

What about little Peter? Peter's parents broke up. He was sent to live with an 89-year old grandmother. Children's Aid took him away and placed him in a detention home, for truancy. At age 11 he was sentenced to a training school for breaking into a parking meter. He was taken to Cobourg training school in handcuffs. He was beaten by his instructor with his fists and maintains that a nine-year old companion was beaten and kicked because he wet his bed. Finally, he was sent to a reformatory and later a penitentiary.

At age nine Michael was caught stealing. At age ten he was caught again and sent to a training school. A militaristic atmosphere prevailed at the training school. He was attacked by inmates and sometimes forced to bend over for hours with his head in a locker. In this case it is alleged that he was forced to stand against a wall on tip toes with his forefingers pressed against the wall. Thumbtacks were placed under his heels so he could not step back. Punishment was finished when the child had to step back on the tacks.

I can go on quoting experiences for a long time, but there it is. I am of the opinion that Judge Thompson of Ontario, in the Ministry of Community and Social Services at Queen's Park, has the answer. For example, if a person of ten commits murder, or putting it softer, kills someone, he should not be labelled an offender and should be placed under child welfare care. If he has a good home, well and good, he can get the necessary guidance from home. If the home is a seriously depraved one, he should be placed where he can get help from psychiatrists and psychologists and, above all, receive some degree of affection in line with what the average child receives in a normal home. That is all that children want, the same love and affection that the average child gets in a normal home.

I recommend that hon. members read the John Howard Society of Ontario's response to proposals for new legislation to replace the Juvenile Delinquents Act. There they point out the same kind of treatment that Dr. Thompson set out. I plead with the minister and with the House to remove the window-dressing from reform and get on with the job. Stop image building. Images will be built if you perform. It will take a lot of public relations firms to cover up for the sins of this generation when history is written. When the image builders are dead, the historians will bone-pick the raw, cold carcass of this civilization and the truth will be revealed.

We naturally get enraged and become emotionally disturbed when we see children in the training schools. I have been in training schools in my province. My partner defended someone under the age of 13 on a murder rap. I went to see him last summer because my partner was on holiday. I know how he was confined. If there are to be places of incarceration in reference to their offences and convictions, maybe the wrong people are being put in jail. Maybe it should be somebody else who is responsible for their birth, or it might even be us, the legislators. It is time we moved on, Mr. Speaker. Charles Dickens wrote, "The Law is an ass." Well, this law is an ass. Let us ride that donkey out of the parliamentary pasture. I thank hon. members for listening to me.

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I first want to congratulate the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) for his inspiring speech and graphic illustrations pertaining to children who have suffered in penitentiaries because of their acts. He is to be congratulated for bringing forth Bill C-225 to amend the Criminal Code (young offenders). It is very timely and should be considered by all Canadians. I note the explanatory notes which state:

> Under the present state of the law, no person under the age of seven years shall be convicted of an offence, this constituting a presumption de jure, and no person between the age of 7 and 14 can be convicted unless he was competent to know the nature and consequence of his conduct, this constituting a presumption juris tantum, that is rebuttable.
> The purpose of this bill is to provide that no person under the age of 12 years shall be convicted and to raise also from 7 to 12 and 14 to 16 the interval during which the presumption juris tantum is applicable.
> The bill provides also that no person under the age of 16 may be sentenced to imprisonment in a penitentiary as it is now possible for a delinquent, under the present state of law, in some cases.

This was pointed out graphically in the illustrations of the hon. member for Calgary North. We are concerned with sections 12 and 13 of the present act which read as follows:

> 12. No person shall be convicted of an offence in respect of an act or omission on his part while he was under the age of seven years.
> 13. No person shall be convicted of an offence in respect of an act of omission on his part while he was seven years of age or more, but under the age of 14 years unless he was competent to know the nature and consequences of his conduct and to appreciate that it was wrong.

It is an anachronism that the Criminal Code now contemplates that a child as young as seven can attract criminal responsibility. Therefore, in rising to speak on Bill C-225 I might say that I have a great deal of sympathy for part of the philosophy that, as I understand it, lies at the root of this bill. I suggest that this House is probably generally in accord with the thesis that children under the age of 12 should not be considered criminally responsible. I understand that in practice a relatively small percentage of juvenile delinquents adjudged to have committed a delinquency under the Juvenile Delinquents Act are under 12 years, and that most children under 12 are dealt with under the appropriate provincial child welfare or youth protection legislation.

The report of the Department of Justice Committee on Juvenile Delinquency in 1965 recommended that the minimum age of criminal responsibility be set at 10 or, at most, 12. Bill C-192, the young offenders bill, contained a provision to raise the minimum age to 10. The recent report of the Solicitor General's Committee on Young Persons in Conflict with the Law recommended raising the minimum age to 14. I understand that the responses received during the consultations held across Canada suggest support for the proposal of the hon. member for Calgary North to raise the minimum age to 12. In the report "Young Persons in Conflict with the Law" it is recommended that the minimum age under any new youth delinquency legislation should be 14. I quote from the report:

> This would not imply that anyone under the age of 14 could perform harmful acts with impunity. Rather, the committee proposes that children below the age of 14 should not come under the jurisdiction of criminal legislation, but would be more appropriately looked after under the provisions of provincial child welfare, youth protection and juvenile correction legislation.

In May, 1976, the Canadian Council of Juvenile and Family Court Judges drafted a working paper on the report, the judges contending that the minimum age should be 12. They concluded:

> —that 12 and 13-year olds are committing offences of sufficient seriousness that child welfare authorities will be unable or unwilling to assume responsibility for them.

There is certainly evidence to support this contention. In 1973, Statistics Canada reported that of 553 juvenile delinquents aged 12, 17 were convicted of common assault, one of assault causing bodily harm, 181 of crimes against property with violence and 6 of carrying offensive weapons. Of 1,137 juveniles aged 13, 27 were guilty of common assault, of assault causing bodily harm and danger with intent, 357 of crimes against property, with violence, and 11 cases of carrying offensive weapons. I believe these figures illustrate the fact that 12 and 13-year olds are capable of committing a wide variety of offences that cannot be shrugged off or taken lightly. Assault with intent to cause bodily harm is no laughing matter.

The remaining two provisions, however, present difficulties which I suggest will require further consideration. The second provision in the bill is to extend the application of what is known as the doli incapax rule so that persons aged 12 but under 16 should not be convicted unless shown to be competent to know the nature of their conduct and appreciate that it was wrong. The doli incapax rule under section 13 of the Criminal Code pertains now to persons of 7 years but under the age of 14. This rule is based on a rebuttable presumption that a child between the ages of 7 and 14 is incapable of committing a crime. Blacks Law Dictionary, fourth edition, defines doli incapax as the following:

Incapable of criminal intention or malice; not of the age of discretion; not possessed of sufficient discretion and intelligence to distinguish between right and wrong to the extent of being criminally responsible for his actions.

Thus, in order to establish criminal liability the prosecutor is required to show that the child has the competence to know the nature and consequences of his crime and to appreciate that it was wrong. The Department of Justice Committee on Juvenile Delinquency recommended the abolition of the doli incapax rule. The report noted that juvenile court judges were not then familiar with the doli incapax rule and that in any case the rule is difficult to apply. I would like to quote from the report which explains the reasoning for the abolition of the doli incapax rule:

The rule was formulated at a time when there were no juvenile courts and when the penalties of the criminal law were extremely harsh. Having regard to the difficulty in interpreting and applying the rule, and to the modest sanctions available under the present law, we doubt that there is any real advantage in retaining the rule. It is important to note also that the presumption weakens with the advance of the child's years towards fourteen. Its principal value is in connection with proceedings against offenders who are very young. Our proposal for raising the minimum age of criminal responsibility would further diminish the need for the rule. Finally, we think that the basic objective that the doli incapax rule is designed to serve can be accomplished more effectively through flexible disposition provisions.

That quotation can be found on page 54 of the report of the Department of Justice Committee on Juvenile Delinquency. The committee's report on Young Persons in Conflict with the Law also recommended that the doli incapax rule be abolished. Its recommendation was based on the rationale that in setting out the age jurisdiction of the proposed legislation to replace the Juvenile Delinquents Act, young persons between 14 years and under 18 should be held responsible for their illegal acts. Such an age range, however, would not prevent any province, on the basis of administrative policy, to choose not to apply the federal legislation if the circumstances of a given case demonstrated that a young person would be more appropriately dealt with under provincial legislation or that he should not be proceeded with at all.

If we increase the minimum age of criminal responsibility to 12, I would be inclined to support the recommendations of the two committees to abolish the doli incapax rule. This is based on the premise that young persons between 12 and 16 generally have the competence to know the nature and consequences of their conduct and appreciate the wrongfulness of their acts and thus should be held responsible for any illegal acts. At the same time, I support the philosophy that young persons in this age group are still in their formative years and that, generally, sanctions for their illegal behaviour should be more limited and, I believe, more specialized than those applicable to adults. They should receive special services to meet their needs, which are distinctly different from those that are available to adults.

I would like to turn to the provision in the hon. member's bill which calls for the use of industrial schools instead of the penitentiary system for young offenders convicted under the provisions of the Criminal Code. Under certain circumstances this may prove to be impossible. It is clear that the hon. member would like to protect a youthful offender from the hardened types he is likely to encounter in the "pen". Having been a member of the subcommittee investigating the penitentiary system in Canada, I can fully endorse that point of view. Some of the inmates I met were quite unsavoury and a young offender, it seems to me, would be at the mercy of such individuals. Instead of providing rehabilitation, the penitentiary would become a school for crime.

However, we are also faced with the problem of combining youths who have committed the crime of car theft—"joy-riding"—and a youth who has been convicted of murder. Under these circumstances the provisions the hon. member has put forward would be extremely impractical, not to mention unsafe. If a youth was convicted of murder—and in 1973, 5 youths between the ages of 14 and 17 were convicted of this crime—could we really expect him to serve his sentence of a minimum of 10 to 25 years, or for the rest of his life, in an institution designed for the custody and rehabilitation of youths who have committed, relatively speaking, of course, minor offences?

One of the proposals contained in the report of the Solicitor General's committee would partially meet the intent of the bill, and would in my opinion be more realistic. It would provide for a young person who has been transferred to adult court and sentenced to a term of imprisonment to be kept in a place of secure custody as defined under the federal juvenile legislation until age 21 after which, if his term of imprisonment is to continue, he would be transferred to a place where he might ordinarily have been imprisoned. In this regard, the proposal meets the intent of preventing the confinement of any person under the age of 16 years in a penitentiary and yet it is more realistic in allowing a young person to be transferred to an adult institution by the time he reaches the age of 21. This would likely facilitate rehabilitation as well as custodial treatment.

While I support in principle the provision to increase the minimum age of criminal responsibility and the intent of the provision to avoid the confinement of any person under the age of 16 in a penitentiary, I cannot support this bill as it now stands. I understand that the ministry of the Solicitor General has been working intensively on the development of proposals for new legislation to replace the Juvenile Delinquents Act. The Solicitor General's committee's report on Young Pesons in Conflict with the Law has been used as a basis for nationwide consultations on a broad range of issues, including those raised in this bill.

One such consultation is the working paper put out by juvenile and family court judges to which I referred earlier. I do not think it is desirable at this time to make specific changes to the Criminal Code affecting age limits. We must look at the whole problem of the young offender. We must contemplate how the age changes will bear on the philosophy, principles, the delivery of services by the provinces, and other related matters.

We must also look into the facilities that currently exist in the provinces. Are there enough institutions now to house youthful offenders if we pass this bill? I understand that at present the province of British Columbia is rethinking its approach to the juvenile delinquent. That rethinking includes the reinstitution of training schools into the correctional process. We can hardly agree to send a youth to an industrial school that does not yet exist. We must also consider the auxiliary services that we would require as well as buildings and thoroughly qualified and trained staff. Certainly there are many individuals who would qualify, but are there enough?

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that my hon. colleague from Calgary North withdraw his bill for the time being. Once the Department of Justice and the Solicitor General's office have had time to assess the results of the consultative process, I believe the government will be putting forward its proposals for changes to the Juvenile Delinquents Act and the Criminal Code. At that time the hon. member can make known his views on this very important subject, for I am certain that the Solicitor General (Mr. Fox) will seek the views of all those who have a material interest in the subject matter before any legislation is introduced.

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have only a few comments to make on this very important bill. I think great credit is due to my colleague, the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) for the interest he has shown in this very important topic and for bringing forward this bill. Not only has he demonstrated his interest on this occasion, but in the past he has been responsible for placing very great emphasis on legal reform as it pertains to better treatment of youthful offenders.

I was very impressed as well with the remarks of my friend, the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson), an excellent member of parliament who has many times shown his concern for matters of law reform and the protection of civil rights and liberties. Whenever such occasion has risen the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore has been in the forefront of those who have made an active and valuable contribution.

It seems to me that the principles implicit in this bill moved by the hon. member for Calgary North should find general agreement not only with members of parliament but with all people who are concerned with law reform and the rehabilitation of young offenders. I think it is fair to say that more selective and humane treatment of young people under our criminal law is long overdue. I trust that government will continue this impetus and that before long, as the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore has said, action is taken on a wide front, not just under the Criminal Code.

It seems to me to be rather paradoxical, judging from my own limited experience, that there appears to be in some areas of the civil law greater understanding of the foibles and unpredictability of youth than there is under the criminal law. I guess all of us who have practised law are aware that, while it might be frivolous to say that every dog is entitled to his first bite, there is a certain amount of truth to this in the matter of liability which accrues to young people and their parents under the civil law.

If, for example, a young person commits an act of destruction for which ordinarily such person would be directly accountable, as indeed their parents may be accountable in extreme circumstances, but it can be demonstrated that this is the first time the act has been committed and that there is no propensity shown for this kind of act, then in most cases, as I understand the law, such a juvenile is, in effect, permitted to have his first bite, to commit that one act of destruction, with the hope that all concerned will learn a lesson.

Surely since this kind of tradition under the common law has grown up over the centuries in terms of civil liability, it is time we took a very hard look at the attitude that continues to be reflected in the Criminal Code which, as my hon. friend from Calgary North so eloquently said, results in an unbelievable perversion of justice whereby young people between seven and 12 years of age under certain circumstances are incarcerated, so long as they appreciate the nature and quality of their act, and thus suffer the type of fate detailed in some of the incidents and statistics quoted by the hon. member for Calgary North.

I suggest that the Solicitor General (Mr. Fox), the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford), all concerned members of parliament, the ministers of justice and attorneys general of the provinces should take this opportunity which is afforded in the House of Commons of Canada to rethink this situation, and once more make a commitment to join together either to bring in specific measures of the type implicit in this bill or, as the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore has suggested, to move ahead in a different area and provide some social measures by way of legislation which will alleviate the situation.

Indeed, in the context of social reform, it seems to me that it would not be inappropriate, either through educational means or through other measures, to put more responsibility on the parents of children who are perfectly able to give their children better training and assume more responsibility for them. When these parents find their offspring in difficulty and it appears that the parents have wilfully neglected their responsibility as parents, then I feel some of the blame—indeed, some sanction may be necessary on the part of society—should fall upon them, as well as upon the children they have failed.

I conclude, Mr. Speaker, by congratulating both my learned friends for their remarks today. I just wanted to say a few brief words in support of the propositions which they have put forward.

Mr. Art Lee (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on Bill C-225 let me say at once that I have a great deal of sympathy for part of the philosophy which, as I understand it, is at the root of this particular bill. It is on this basis that I congratulate the hon.

member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams). He is a learned trial lawyer and certainly has displayed both inside and outside the House his deep concern for judicial reform.

Youth in conflict with the law is paramount in the minds of many Canadians. Young people are involved in such serious offences today as robbery, assault, etc. From time to time I receive letters from constituents who are very concerned and frustrated because they feel there is nothing the law can do to protect them from young offenders.

Recently police in my own area were conducting investigations concerning young offenders who were involved in a protection racket. Many of the people who were victims of this racket came to see me because they were very frustrated that the law could do very little to protect them. Other incidents I have heard of involved young offenders who live in public housing units; they vandalize these units and assault the people who live in them, particularly senior citizens.

Also of equal importance, those of us who served on the sub-committee on justice and legal affairs which was examining conditions in our penitentiaries were told that the average age of offenders in the Canadian penitentiary system is 27 years. We also heard some very tragic stories concerning inmates in maximum security institutions who entered the penal system at a very early age. Many of them entered our system at the age of 12 or 13 years. They started out in foster homes, graduated to industrial training schools, then went through the provincial jail system, finally ending up in the "big house" or what we call the maximum security institution. Fortunately many of these offenders are doing some of their time now in medium and minimum security institutions, most of them being out on day parole. It is this kind of tragedy which is the reason that I and the hon. member for Calgary North, as well as the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson) and the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay), are very concerned about the whole issue of young offenders.

I can cite some examples. When the subcommittee was travelling in the Atlantic region, we heard the story of a young individual who was incarcerated at the age of 13 years old in a maximum security institution, for stealing a car which really, in effect, amounted to no more than joyriding. At the time we talked to that individual he was 36 years of age. Thus, for some 23 years he had been in and out of our penal system.

I am sure it almost goes without saying that there are many clichés which people talk about that are true; but when a young person goes into the "big house" or a maximum institution, he is subject to a lot of pressure, a lot of harassment, and is also subject to learning the tools of the trade. In effect he graduates to much more serious crime and becomes very involved with that particular element. When we looked at that particular individual, he was in solitary confinement, and he certainly was a security risk. I made some inquiries about him, asking why he was in solitary confinement and why he was considered to be that much of a security risk. The authorities replied, "You look at him. You can see he is a security risk because he has taken a hostage, raised a lot of problems, caused vandalism within the institution, ransacked his cell, caused fires, broke the toilet in his cell, and also broke the sink. Also, on a number of occasions, he has worked with others and conspired with others attempting to escape. Certainly he should be classified as a security risk."

In talking to the classifications officer and to the psychologist working in the institution at that time, we found out that back in the history of this individual we could have certainly done something with him at the time of the original sentence which was for, to all intents and purposes, no more than joyriding, and yet he was charged with and convicted of stealing a motor vehicle. He was charged in the adult courts and placed in a maximum security institution. These are the kinds of tragedies we see in small numbers within our federal penal institutions. Even though they are in small numbers, it happens too often. There may be many that are not reported.

There are other instances where we see people 35-36 years of age who are serving time in our maximum institutions who literally get burned out, as they say, and tired of dealing with the entire system. They are tired of dealing with maximum security institutions, of going in and out like a revolving door and finally get to the point where they say "I have had enough". It is at that particular time they feel they should try and rehabilitate themselves, and they do so. There have been some very good success stories and testimonies from a number of these individuals. One of them we heard was from a man who is now doing work with young people, retarded people and young offenders, in the Atlantic region. At some point in time, if we had a proper set of laws to deal with such offenders, and proper programs to deal with them, it goes without saying that we could do something with them and save this very valuable resource, our youth.

It almost goes without saying, and for that matter it is almost a cliché, that the problems will not be resolved through bills like Bill C-225 or any other legislative reform dealing with young offenders. It requires community involvement and initiative. It also requires other imaginative governmental programs, like the creation of the Ministry of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport. Young people need to be active, and it is the government's responsibility and the community's responsibility to provide opportunities for youth.

In my own particular area we have a very high rate of young offenders. During some of the meetings with my community workers and people who work in my area I found, much to my surprise, that in one particular area, which has one of the highest rates of juvenile offenders—the Mount Pleasant area—the community facilities were closed at six o'clock in the evenings. That is the time the majority of our young people are looking for some facility where they can go and play basketball, badminton or something along these lines.

If we took a more imaginative and bold approach to trying to resolve some of the problems of our youth, we would be much better off. It is the responsibility of parents and the people involved in dealing with youth—the educational system.

As the hon. members who have spoken so far have pointed out, it behooves the government to lay down the ground work and the framework on which we can deal with youth offenders.

As the law now stands, young offenders are dealt with under the Juvenile Delinquents Act of 1908, as amended from time to time. The act established special juvenile courts and special procedures for dealing with young offenders. Previously, young offenders had been treated as ordinary criminals and brought before the ordinary criminal courts. The intent of the 1908 act was to treat a child not as a criminal but as a misdirected child and one needing aid, encouragement, help and assistance. In view of the changes in society and how society has learned to deal with them, the 1908 act has not fulfilled its promise.

I would like to quote from the "Highlights of the Proposed New Legislation for Young Offenders" at page 1, which reads as follows:

> In the view of many, young persons have not received proper care and treatment, and are not afforded all the basic rights and protections afforded to adults facing a criminal charge. It is also held that existing procedures fail to protect society and fail to bring about the salutary acceptance of responsibility for delinquent acts that should be part of the educational experience of the young offender.
> Rather, the 1908 act with its concentration upon the offence of juvenile delinquency tends to label and stigmatize a child, thereby reinforcing a delinquent self-image and perpetuating delinquent behaviour.

The government has long recognized the need to replace the 1908 Juvenile Delinquents Act in an attempt to design better ways to deal with young persons who break the law and to reflect changes that have developed in the way young people are regarded in society. Its more recent efforts occurred in the fall of 1973 when cabinet authorized the Department of the Solicitor General and the Department of National Health and Welfare to carry out a joint review in consultation with provincial governments, of the programs, services and related financial arrangements concerning young persons in conflict with the law. The report of the federal-provincial joint review group, published in August of 1974, documented deficiencies in the juvenile justice field with respect to the limitations of present services and resources; the need for extensions of existing resources; and the need for federal-provincial assistance to extend existing resources to administer more adequately the present legislation.

Concurrent with the work of the federal-provincial joint review group, a committee on legislation was appointed by the Solicitor General with the view to submitting recommendations for new legislation to replace the Juvenile Delinquents Act. In September of 1975 the Solicitor General's committee on legislation released its report entitled "Young Persons in Conflict with the Law". The report was widely distributed across Canada for the express purpose of eliciting reactions, through consultation, from provincial government departments, from agencies and groups offering services to young persons in trouble, from professionals, interest groups and associations and the general public. In the year following the publication of the report approximately 70 meetings were held across the country, and over 150 briefs and submissions were received on the subject.

The decision to organize and invest such time and resources in a wide reaching consultation process was a direct outcome of our past failures to bring about change in the field of juvenile justice in Canada. We are all familiar with the aborted attempts in the early seventies to replace the Juvenile Delinquents Act with Bill C-192, the young offenders legislation. It is generally agreed that one of the reasons for such failure was the lack of adequate consultation with interest groups and provincial governments prior to the presentation of the legislation to parliament.

For this reason, when the report on Young Persons in Conflict with the Law was released, the then solicitor general emphasized that before coming to final conclusions on new legislation it was important that consultation be undertaken to avoid the difficulties experienced with Bill C-192 and to provide for adequate public input on the development of legislation before proceeding to parliament.

At the close of the consultative process the reactions and suggested alternatives were closely analyzed, and a new set of legislative proposals was drafted. These proposals appeared in a document entitled "Highlights of the Proposed New Legislation for Young Offenders" which the Solicitor General (Mr. Fox) tabled in the House of Commons on March 21 of this year.

The most recent legislative recommendations were discussed at the meeting of the continuing committee of deputy ministers of corrections in Regina on March 25 where responses to the proposed legislation were generally positive. The topic, particularly relating to a few specific outstanding issues, will also be discussed at the joint meeting of attorneys general and ministers responsible for corrections scheduled for the end of June.

The proposals for new legislation are aimed at incorporating changing principles and practices which have developed in the juvenile justice field over the years. In addition to formalizing such change, the proposals for new legislation create new processes and procedures to overcome the outdated features or inadequacies which exist in the Juvenile Delinquents Act. I would like to quote from "Highlights of the Proposed New Legislation for Young Offenders" as follows:

> Young persons who commit offences should bear responsibility for their contraventions and while young persons should not in all instances be held accountable in the same manner or suffer the same consequences for their behaviour as adults, society must nonetheless be afforded the necessary protection from such illegal behaviour.
> In affording society protection from illegal behaviour, it is to be recognized that young persons require supervision, discipline and control, but also, because of their state of dependency and lack of maturity, have special needs and require guidance and assistance.
> Where not inconsistent with the protection of society, consideration should be given to using alternatives to the formal youth justice process for dealing with young persons who have committed offences which come within the jurisdiction of the Act.
> In determining the responsibility of young persons under the Act, it is to be recognized that young persons have rights and freedoms equal to those of adults including those stated in the Canadian Bill of Rights; and in particular, a right to be heard in the course of, and to participate in, the processes that lead to decisions that affect them, as well as special guarantees of these rights and freedoms.

In the application of the Act, the rights of young persons include a right to the least interference with freedom, having regard to the protection of society, the needs of young persons, and the interests of their families.

Young persons have the right, in every instance where they have rights or freedoms which may be affected by the Act, to be informed as to what those rights and freedoms are.

Parents have primary responsibility for the care and supervision of their children and, therefore, young persons should be removed from parental supervision either partly or entirely only when all other measures that provide for continuing parental supervision are inappropriate; however, if it is necessary so to remove them, they shall be dealt with, in all respects and as nearly as may be, as they would be dealt with if they were under the care and protection of wise and conscientious parents.

Discussions and consultation during the past three years have not, however, been restricted to the substance of legislation, as I have just outlined. A major objective has been to identify the resource requirements and financial implications of new legislation and to explore ways of extending additional federal financial support to the juvenile justice system.

As a result of our detailed discussions the federal government is now prepared to extend the range of juvenile services eligible for cost sharing to include diversion services, pre-dispositional assessments and reports, and post-dispositional community supervision, including probation. Such additional funding assistance would be extended under the framework of the proposed social services legislation.

These additional services place greater reliance on community solutions to the problems of young offenders are distinct from current financial assistance to provinces for custodial services which remove a young person from his home and often from his community.

Mr. Paproski: You are not going to talk a good bill like this out, are you?

Mr. Lee: I would now like to address myself to the substance of Bill C-225, standing in the name of the hon. member for Calgary North.

Mr. Goodale: There is so much good that has to be said.

Mr. Lee: In rising to speak on Bill C-225 I stated at the outset that I have a great deal of sympathy for part of the philosophy which, as I understand it, lies at the root of this bill. I submit that this House is generally in accord with the thesis that children under the age of 12 should not be considered criminally responsible. It is indeed an anachronism that the Criminal Code now contemplates that a child as young as seven can attract criminal responsibility. It is my understanding that in practice a relatively small percentage of juvenile delinquents adjudged to have committed a delinquency under the Juvenile Delinquents Act are under 12 years of age.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Question.

Mr. Lee: In fact most children under 12 are dealt with under the appropriate provincial child welfare or youth protection legislation. In 1965 the report of the Department of Justice Committee on Juvenile Delinquency recommended that the minimum age of criminal responsibility be set at 10, or, at most, 12. The young offenders bill, Bill C-192, contained a provision to raise the minimum age to 10. The recent report of the Solicitor General's committee on Young Persons in Conflict with the Law—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. parliamentary secretary, but his allotted time has expired. The hon. member for Chambly (Mr. Loiselle).

[Translation]

Mr. Bernard Loiselle (Chambly): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry I feel duty-bound to rise on a motion I find excellent, but I agree with the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) that we should intervene on such a matter as juvenile delinquency. Even then, I feel I should go even further. In his motion, the hon. member attacks, after a fashion, the consequences of our society. The penalties are criticized but not the source of evil. I have always felt that where juvenile delinquents are concerned, we should meet more often with the provinces as well as the various community groups, with a view to giving our young people . . . Mr. Speaker, may I call it six o'clock?

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

TRANSPORT—REQUEST FOR STATISTICAL DATA INDICATING RISK OF OIL SPILLS AS RESULT OF INCREASED TANKER TRAFFIC

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my questions to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), which were really a series of questions initiated on May 19 and continued on May 20 last, were to ask the minister whether he, or his department, was in a position to table in the House statistical data, or a report containing statistical data, which would indicate the risk factor in connection with the marine handling of oil and other hazardous cargo.

These questions were prompted by two recent events, the first of which was the release of a report commissioned by the Department of Fisheries and the Environment which was made available to those members of parliament who were interested. The report was entitled "The Determination of Probabilities of Oil Spills in Canadian Arctic Waters" and dealt specifically with the probabilities of blowouts in exploratory drilling in the Beaufort Sea and other Arctic areas. The briefing note from the environmental protection service of the department which accompanied the report indicated:

The report is an application to off-shore exploratory drilling of a method used to evaluate nuclear reactor safety. It uses the laws of probability to combine the probabilities of basic events which could lead to a blowout so as to predict the probability of a blowout.

The briefing note then goes on to say that while the report is limited,

. . . the report in its present form provides the best available statistical basis for decision-making.

My position is that it is very difficult as an issue to separate exploratory drilling from the handling of hazardous cargo. It may be that if we are successful in exploratory drilling, the amount of oil tanker traffic would dramatically increase, and therefore these two issues are inextricably combined.

The second event that prompted my series of questions to the Minister of Transport was a document filed by that department entitled "National Marine Emergency Plan" which deals with our capabilities, among other things, of handling oil spills and other toxic materials. I immediately had to ask myself that, given this report, which I found to be an interesting and informative report, does the department know the probability of an oil spill or of the spill of other toxic material and, if it does not, how can one evaluate the efficacy of the report or the ability to handle clean-up operations?

On May 20 when I asked the minister the second set of questions he indicated that internal working documents were available to him and that the department was developing positions in anticipation of an international conference. Therefore I have to ask if the department is in a position to make domestic decisions in this regard. Certainly they went so far as to file this marine emergency plan, and if they are in a position to adopt a Canadian position at what would presumably be an important international conference, why can they not table the material in the House of Commons? In my view his answer is unsatisfactory.

We are dealing daily with increased tanker traffic, super tankers, marine traffic and other hazardous cargo, super ports, such as the one that exists at Cherry Point, Washington, and the proposed Kitimat super-port on the west coast. Why in this area, when we have reports on nuclear reactor risks, on exploratory drilling risks, and a report from the Department of Fisheries and the Environment entitled "An Environmental Risk Index for the Siting of Deep Water Oil Ports", do we not have the report on the risk of handling oil and other hazardous cargo? I would like to know what the risk would be with increased traffic of oil tankers and other cargo ships, what it would be with increased size of ships, in certain weather conditions and at certain times of the year, all of which can be done actuarially.

To my dismay I found I could write or phone the U.S. coastguard and secure information from them, and yet we are in a position here in Canada where the minister can make a decision on the Canadian position at an international conference and yet is not in a position to table the material on which he based the decision. I can only assume therefore that the government maintains the view that this information is so technical that it should not be made available to the public for fear they would misunderstand, or not understand it at all. I suggest, in reply to that paranoia, that the government greatly underestimates the maturity of the Canadian public and the maturity of this House. How else can we make proper decisions—except of course the NDP who are always inclined to throw out the matter whether it be Kitimat or the Makenzie Valley or anything else—and how can we act responsibly and responsively unless the Minister of Transport is willing to take us into his confidence and release this information to us?

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I should like to answer a part of my distinguished colleague's question in the three minutes available to me. I am sure he understands and appreciates that it will be difficult to do so in three minutes.

The main source of the vessel casualty statistics used in developing an oil spill expectation analysis for Canadian ship terminal systems was provided through records of the 3,763 world-wide tanker accidents which took place between 1969-1974. Records included only those tankers which have greater than 3,000 tons deadweight, which excluded, therefore, small harbour tankers used for bunkering ships in port.

An oil spill expectation algorithm was then developed from these existing ship casualty statistics in conjunction with predicted change in the volume of the marine traffic flow within the ship terminal system under consideration. Further, the algorithm was modified to encompass all the marine network constraints of the ship terminal system, including critical channel widths and areas of concern.

As you might appreciate, Mr. Speaker, some fairly complicated calculations are required to arrive at an algorithm which would take into account such factors as spill probability for coastal and ship terminal areas, exposure rates of design ships, etc., but time this afternoon does not allow me to pursue these factors in more depth.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the Kitimat ship terminal oil spill expectations, using this algorithm it was concluded that over a 25-year period there is a 75 per cent probability of one pollution causing incident of a major nature developing within the Kitimat ship terminal system, which could cause an oil outflow of 387 tons. In addition, an annual oil outflow of approximately 35 tons arising from minor incidents could be expected.

In conclusion I should like to point out that these oil spill tonnages compare favourably with the empirical rule of 40-70 barrels spill expected per million barrels of oil throughput.

AIR TRANSPORT—EFFECT OF PROPOSED TAKE-OVER OF TRANSAIR BY PACIFIC WESTERN ON PRAIRIE REGIONAL SERVICE

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, on May 6 I asked a question regarding the long anticipated prairie air service. It was one of a series of questions I have asked since 1974 when the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), in company with the then minister of national defence, the hon. member for Winnipeg South (Mr. Richardson), made a special trip to Winnipeg. He announced, during the election campaign, that there would be a prairie air service commenced, and that it would be dealt with expeditiously because it was realized that first-class air service was necessary to the continuing progress of the economy and of the community of eastern Saskatchewan and western Manitoba.

There has been no action since that time in specific terms other than a long series of negotiations, changes of mind, and unkept promises. This evening I raise the issue again in the hope, now that another summer is upon us, that we will be able to get assurance that this long anticipated service will commence during the summer months of 1977. I say this because it will require certain upgrading of facilities, and in answer to questions the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) has indicated that plans are under way and the necessary infrastructure will proceed as soon as the decision is made.

The situation becomes more ridiculous when you realize that in 1973 a terminal was opened at the airport just north of Brandon, Manitoba, which cost a considerable sum of money, and a short time later the service was withdrawn. This only adds to the urgency of the matter.

We thought we were about to get an air service when negotiations were under way with the province of Manitoba. But the proposal was turned down because it proved unsatisfactory to the government and the Minister of Transport. The minister has stated specifically that he wants commuter service between Winnipeg, Yorkton and Saskatoon. He has offered a $.9 million subsidy for that purpose. He also wants a jet service between Toronto, Brandon and Regina, and is providing a $1.1 million subsidy for that purpose.

A further complication emerged recently. As was indicated in the press and statements in this House, Pacific Western Airlines is now negotiating with Transair to take-over that facility and develop a co-ordinated and organized western regional air service. Transair has made the specific proposal in response to the minister's subsidy proposals. When I asked the question on May 6 the minister indicated that the last date for intervention was May 9, after which the Canadian Transport Commission would decide. Almost three weeks have passed since that date, and I hope this evening that whoever speaks for the government will indicate that the green signal has been given, that the service has been announced, and that we will receive the good news soon. We hope that at long last this badly needed air service will be provided to the prairie region and that the service will be well under way this summer.

I raise another matter in connection with the anticipated Pacific Western Airlines take-over of Transair. We want several assurances in this regard. As was indicated, negotiations will take almost one year. The government has approved the conducting of the negotiations. We want the assurance that the Transair maintenance base will remain in Winnipeg. Air Canada's moving its base to Montreal created an economic disaster of considerable proportions. That disaster was slowly being put right by the establishment of a maintenance air base operated by Transair. I hope we shall have the assurance that this facility will remain, despite the proposed take-over by Pacific Western Airlines.

We also want the assurance that jet service is still an essential part of the minister's proposal. If it will not be possible for a western regional air carrier to provide this service, we want the assurance that Air Canada will discharge that obligation. We used to have Air Canada service. That, unfortunately, was discontinued. Air Canada could easily divert one of its jets to the Toronto-Brandon-Regina route.

First and foremost, we trust the government can indicate this evening that the service will begin this coming summer.

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I can understand the impatience of my colleague, the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale). The minister is keenly interested in the introduction of air services to Brandon, Dauphin and Yorkton. The Government of Canada has announced its willingness to provide financial support of operating deficits, recoverable in part or in whole in return for service guarantees by the successful carriers. Applications to provide air services to some or all of these communities have been submitted to the Canadian Transport Commission by several interested parties.

The CTC has the responsibility to determine whether these proposed services meet requirements for public convenience and necessity. The date for final reply to interventions by the various apllicants was May 9, as the hon. member mentioned, and consideration of public hearings to assess the applications will probably be the next step taken by the CTC.

Should the proposed take-over by Pacific Western Airlines of Transair come to pass, this may influence the timing of future developments. Of course the take-over of one airline by another must be approved by the CTC. If a take-over of Transair were to take place, public hearings may be required.

The statutory responsibilities and the required procedures for assessing and approving the prairie air service proposals and any potential take-over remain with the CTC. The minister is deeply interested in improving air services in the west and prefers that the necessary steps to this realization be completed as quickly as possible.

INCOME TAX—MEAL ALLOWANCE FOR TRUCK DRIVERS—POSSIBILITY OF CHANGE

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I have a number of hourly wage earners in my constituency. A good many of them are truck drivers. Some of them have come to me with a problem that is endemic to the trucking industry. The Income Tax Department requires daily receipts for all meals which the truckers eat. In consequence of their representations, I asked the minister a question on March 22, which stated in part:

As the minister is aware, many of these drivers spend up to 200 days a year in their cabs, which is not the most conducive place to conduct office procedure, yet they are allowed only $7.50 per day for meals without receipts, whereas members of her department receive an allowance of up to $15. Is there any plan in her department or on her part to change the present requirement for truck drivers and allow at least $12 per day?

The first thing I would like to point out regarding this policy is the fact that it is discriminatory. Truckers have to show receipts in the 1975 taxation year for anything spent beyond $7.50. I understand it has now been increased to $9. By and large, what the tax department is saying is that they will grant them as little as possible without receipts.

Federal employees who travel on behalf of the government outside of their offices are granted per diems with no receipts at as realistic a rate as possible of at least $13.50 or $15. I do not understand why a truck driver should only get half as much an allowance as a civil servant.

These truckers travel across the country. They cannot just stop at any old place and get a meat that is good for them. They are hard working men and they deserve a little bit of allowance.

The minister said in a letter to me that it is a matter of control, the department has to be able to control expense. I received a notification from a hotel owner in an interior city. He pointed out that most federal civil servants when they stay outside the main metropolitan area go to a hotel down the street where they pay $22 or $23 a night, whereas if they stay at another hotel or motel they could get the same accommodation for $14 or $16. I do not think the government is in any position to talk about control over spending. The only ones it wants to control are the wage earners.

The second point I want to make is that the whole procedure of requiring these receipts is uneconomic. Imagine a tax file being delivered to the Income Tax office containing the records of a truck driver on the road for 200 days, eating three meals a day, with a total of 600 receipts. An accountant in the office would have to total the 600 receipts. If he missed a few, he would have to look through them again. He would have to be paid wages while counting those receipts. At the end, his figure may be challenged by the taxpayer and he would have to do it again. On the difference between the $7.50 and the $9, or the $9 and the $12 the truck drivers would like to have, when you figure out the tax on that difference is it an economic procedure to have a civil servant totalling all of those receipts, maybe twice, and then figuring out the difference? They might save a couple of bucks, but they will get it off the blue collar workers.

The third point I want to make is that this is a very disturbing mentality on the part of the government. Essentially what the government is saying is that every truck driver in this country is a potential crook. The government feels he should be watched because he might eat more than $9 worth of food. If he happened to have $11 or $12, the government might miss out on 30 cents. Therefore it tries to get that crook.

I lived in the United States for a few years. I attended university and worked part time there. I had to file an income tax return. The difference I saw was this. Any time I had to file an income tax claim in the United States I could go to that office and I could say, "Look, here is my file, can you help me with it?" And they would say, "Sure, here are two or three other places where you can save some money; you did not make the deductions for it." But try to do that with the Canadian revenue service. They would say, "You are trying to get away with something here." It is an entirely different attitude in Canada. What we are doing is educating our people to see themselves as potential crooks. Why cannot we give them the benefit of the doubt and let them eat proper meals on the road, quit fudging on a few receipts, and let them feel as though they were upstanding, honourable, taxpaying, working people?

The irony is that according to an article in the Vancouver Sun, when prisoners are let out of our penitentiaries on compassionate leave they are allowed $15. But a truck driver gets $9. I guess crime pays. Salesmen, when they go on the road, can take their customers to lunch. They can buy them cocktails, get them rib steaks, give them liqueurs. It is all a deductible expense. But unless a truck driver takes his three meals at McDonald's he will be seen as a crook if he does not have receipts.

I know one taxpayer who went to the bother of saving all his receipts for three months just to prove to the taxation department that he was spending $12 a day on meals. Mr. Speaker, you have been on trains. You know what it costs to eat on the road. A working man needs three square meals a day. Yet this gentleman who saved his receipts and proved beyond a doubt that after three months he had spent $12 a day was told, at the end, "Give us the receipts for the other nine months or you don't get your deduction."

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the administrative procedures insofar as away-from-home expenses are concerned are explained in detail in our information circular 73-21R2. The hon. member asked about the allowance for meals for long-distance truck drivers for income tax purposes. An employee of a trucking company or other employer whose principal business is goods and passenger transport, and is required regularly to travel away from his home terminal on vehicules used by his employer for that purpose, may deduct amounts disbursed for meals and lodging while travelling to the extent he is not entitled to be reimbursed by his employer.

He may claim under one of two procedures. Under the simplified method, he may file with his tax return a listing of trips actually taken, and the department will allow a maximum cost of $3.00 per meal without a supporting voucher. Under the detailed method, the employee must maintain a record book in which each disbursement is recorded, including the name and location of the restaurant and individual amounts expended. Disbursements so recorded will be allowed to the extent they are reasonable and where they are in excess of $3 a meal they must be supported by vouchers.

Some members may quarrel with this method but it seems to me the simplest and the easiest way. We all recognize that in parts of the country it may not be possible to get a reasonable meal for $3. All we ask a person to do is to collect his bills and to list them.

Anyone who can live within the $3 meal ticket has an easy job; he does not have to collect any receipts. The hon. member referred to salesmen or executives taking their clients out for luxurious meals and deducting the cost from their income tax. Obviously in that case receipts must be collected; I do not think there is any other way. The idea of the $3 meal is to make it easy for those who eat a quick hamburger lunch. For those who want to taste French cuisine, we simply ask them to collect receipts so they can deduct the cost.

I thank the hon. member for bringing these points to the attention of the government. We will look into his suggestions. It might be that the floor of $3 should be raised, but whether it be raised to $4 or $5 per meal there will always be those who require larger meals—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the parliamentary secretary but his allotted time has expired. The motion before the House is now deemed to have been withdrawn.

Motion withdrawn.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I do now leave the chair till eight o'clock tonight.

EXPORT DEVELOPMENT ACT

MEASURE TO INCREASE THE MAXIMUM LIABILITY OF THE CORPORATION AND CREDIT GUARANTEES

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Basford (for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce) that Bill C-47, to amend the Export Development Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, before I called it five o'clock I was speaking about the Export Development Corporation and its treatment of those who have small claims. The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) illustrated the point and spoke about the large amounts which were going to be lent to corporations to develop and to build companies in foreign countries which might even be competing against us because of their lower labour costs. That is the point I had come to when I called it five o'clock.

I want to deal with the question of how the little fellow—Small Industry— is treated in this regard. I have a claim here before me which goes back to August 3 of 1971. At that time I believe the minister of industry, trade and commerce was the present Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie). At that time there was a shipment of 40 bazoos made to the buyer on the terms of DOP/SD, later revised to 50 per cent 90 days, 50 per cent 150 days. That was the contract. On December 21, 1971, EDC was notified by Otaco Limited about the damaged condition of some goods which had arrived. I am just following this sequence and putting it on the record, and I will have more to say on each one individually.

On November 7, 1972, Otaco's representatives visited EDC and notified EDC that a claim was being placed with the Marine Insurance Company. EDC advised Otaco to send a representative to Kenya to sort out the problem. On January 19, 1973, the commercial secretary of the Canadian High Commission at Nairobi, Kenya, telexed Otaco suggesting that a representative from Otaco visit Kenya to sort out Marine Insurance problems and legal positions. On January 26, 1973, EDC advised Otaco that nothing had been heard from them since the meeting of November 7, 1972. Otaco wrote EDC suggesting that a representative from EDC visit Kenya with Otaco's sales manager. EDC advised Otaco that a trip to Kenya by a representative from EDC would not be justified at that time. Hon. members must realize that with all the contacts EDC and the government must have in Kenya, that type of answer should not have been given to a firm in Ontario.

On February 26, 1973, a claim was placed with EDC for the amount owing to Otaco by Grafton Construction Company. On March 21, 1973, EDC again advised Otaco that Otaco should send a representative to Kenya but that EDC could not consider paying the claim until the dispute regarding the damaged goods was settled. That claim was settled by the insurance company, yet EDC never kept its end of the bargain, nor did the minister and neither did the minister see that EDC kept its end of the bargain in this matter.

I would like to go back to the rules of the game as they are laid down. When goods are delivered in good condition they should be paid for, or if the people who order them go bankrupt, they should still be paid for. This is a part of that policy:

> ... failure of the buyer to pay ... goods delivered to and accepted by the buyer ... .failure or refusal of the buyer to accept the goods ... where such failure is not excused by and does not arise from ... any breach of contract on the part of the exporter ... insolvency of the buyer ...

The buyer went broke in this situation and was unable to pay, and yet that firm was made to make good the loan at the bank for those bazoos. This contract was entered into, and the claim is claim number 3354. This contract was entered into by the Grafton Construction Company to buy 40 units of bazoos. A bazoo is an all terrain vehicle. It can go on land, water, mud or sand. It is an all purpose vehicle. Those units were sold to the Grafton Construction Company of Nairobi, Kenya. The goods were delivered and marked "Notify Bantam Plant Sales Company Limited". From all of the lengthy correspondence, I was able to learn from the government or its representative in Nairobi what part the Bantam sales organization played in this transaction.

I learned that the Bantam sales organization was to assemble the vehicles. The buyer was the Grafton Construction Company Limited. When the goods were inspected, it was found that some of the crates were damaged as well as some of the bazoos. The crates were landed at Mombasa and placed in bond. The Grafton Construction Company accepted the documents. The insurance company paid for the damaged goods. The insurance company accepted the claim, and for the goods which were damaged it paid $10,000. Surely that was evidence that the goods were all there and accepted. The insurance company accepted the claim, but the Export Development Corporation would not accept it. That left $30,000 still owed by this company.

The claim was pressed, and there was various correspondence. This went on from 1971 to December, 1975, when the last letter was filed, a period covering four years. I want to say to everyone in this House that expensive bureaucracy was never more demonstrated than it was in this little claim for $30,000 which that small firm had to pay. It cost 13 men their jobs. I am illustrating this case because we were talking about big deals involving other corporations amounting to millions of dollars over 15 years. This matter extended over a period of five years. Over and over the minister stated that he was working on it to see what could be done.

The rules which are laid down plainly provide that the Export Development Corporation will reimburse a firm which goes broke, if it bought goods. The company was assured of this at the bank, but who paid? This little firm paid and, as I said, 13 people lost their jobs. Another firm bought this firm out. I say again that the minister should consider this and see that the little guy gets a fair deal. The machines which were built would have been of tremendous help in Kenya where the terrain goes from mud to lakes to streams to rivers, and so forth. Bazoos can go across all of those things. This equipment was needed.

I have a whole file of correspondence here. I only read part of it. I do not intend to put it all on the record. However, I want to say that the auditors in Kenya checked the books and found everything to be in order. Why did they go to all that trouble never to pay that claim? Why all this bureaucracy?

I think it is time we took a look at the bureaucracy we have today and are developing in this country at taxpayer's expense. In this case $30,000 was involved. Two or three trips by the bureaucracy on its expensive aircraft could have been taken, the whole thing could have been paid on the expense incurred on investigation, it could have been written off and EDC could have kept its word because the insurance company paid the claim.

I am appealing for a square deal not just for multinational corporations, for corporations which are going to borrow millions of dollars over a long period of years, and not for communist countries which are lent money at low rates of interest. I am appealing for small companies in Canada that hire Canadian workmen. They should be looked after on a small claim such as this just as attentively as a big corporation is looked after, as the hon. member for York-Simcoe said today, a company which may be establishing in some foreign country and which will compete with us because of the lower wage scale there. That is my point, and I hope the minister has listened attentively to the case of the little worker who, for five or six years, went through the wringer of bureaucracy and in the final analysis was cheated.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I just want to make one comment with respect to this matter. I feel that perhaps it could have been dealt with earlier if there had not been a difficulty with respect to this bill involving EDC which was first the subject matter of a $1 item in the estimates. The opposition indicated its opposition at that time to this method of legislating, and the Chair upheld in part our position. I will not make any comment beyond that. This bill is the result of the position that was sustained by the Chair at the instance of the opposition.

As the debate on this bill closes I hope the government will learn the lesson of this bill and bear it in mind so that with regard to $1 items in our estimates, items which are an attempt to legislate outside of the normal legislative process, the government will studiously avoid this kind of procedure. I think the record will show that, when speaking for Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition, at that time I indicated that we would give this bill swift passage when it came. I think the record will also show that we have done so in terms of the debate on this bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

JUDGES ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCLUDE TIME SPENT AS MAGISTRATE IN DETERMINING ELIGIBILITY FOR SENIOR POSITION

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-50, to amend the Judges Act and other acts in respect of judicial matters, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Basford moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I intend to be brief in speaking on this bill on third reading. First, I want to commend the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) and other members of the official opposition serving on the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs who dealt with this bill, both on second reading and in committee, in an expeditious and thoughtful way.

During the debate on second reading of this bill I spoke of the importance of preserving, and indeed, enhancing the independence of the judiciary. I indicated that this is a responsibility resting equally upon the government, the legislators, and the judiciary itself.

In this bill there are a number of provisions directed to this end. Provision is made for the appointment of a number of additional judges to enable the courts to contend with increasing case loads. Modest salary increases for judges are authorized to maintain judicial salaries at appropriate levels. Further representational allowances and conference allowances are provided to enable judges to keep abreast of developments in the law and to discharge special duties attaching to their offices.

In particular, there are the provisions creating a new regime for the administration of federal judicial affairs and establishing a county court committee of the Canadian Judicial Council.

As proposed in the legislation, the transfer from the Department of Justice to the new commissioner for federal judicial affairs, who is to be appointed only after consultation with the Canadian Judicial Council, that is to say, after consultation with the Chief Justice of Canada and the chief justices of appeal and of the superior courts in all the provinces and to the registrar of the Supreme Court of Canada of responsibility for the administrative affairs of federally appointed judges and federally constituted courts is a significant step forward in enhancing the judiciary's independence. It also recognizes the singular importance of the Supreme Court of Canada as the apex of our judicial system.

The creation of the county court committee equally strengthens the Canadian judicial council which was established in 1971 as a forum in which the judiciary itself could assume direct and active responsibility for enhancing the efficiency, quality, and uniformity of judicial services and for the self-discipline of judges throughout Canada. The Committee will provide an opportunity for the county and district court judges to participate more actively and directly in a number of the council's affairs.

Consequently, passage of this bill will constitute another important step in affirming parliament's commitment to the principle of an independent judiciary, and I wish to commend and thank members of this House who, both during second reading debate and committee consideration of this bill, gave close consideration to the measures provided for in the bill, and who also assisted in ensuring early passage of it by the House.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. We had an excellent debate on second reading and the bill received good scrutiny in the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

I agree with the minister that we must respect the independence of the judiciary. That is part of the separation of powers in our democratic process. But I would remind the minister that things are not always beautiful and academic, as he points out. Many people say they make sacrifices, but there are very few people, and I could name one, who have ever refused a judgeship. Mr. Chambers, head of the firm of the former prime minister, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker)—that was R.B. Bennett's law firm—turned one down. Not too many have turned one down.

If we are going to get the best men we must realize they are probably only going to earn 50 per cent of the income they earned in a law firm.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Or women.

Mr. Woolliams: Men or women. Persons.

Mr. Faulkner: A subtle difference.

Mr. Woolliams: I am worried about you.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Identify him.

Mrs. Holt: Are you worried or interested?

Mr. Woolliams: Well, if you were a lawyer I would make you Chief Justice because not only do you have the intelligence but you have the ability to understand human behaviour.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Woolliams: I will call them people. Not many people refuse the call of the wild goose. I remember when I was a young man—that was a long time ago—we used to lie on our backs and watch the geese go south. When it comes to the call of the wild goose very few refuse. Generally speaking, the appointment is offered to the best person. I think we made a great step forward when we referred the matter to the Canadian Bar Association and the bars of the various provinces for recommendation.

This bill will increase the salaries of judges, and of course the cost of living goes up the same for them as it does for members of parliament. A committee has been set up to identify matters in which neither the Chief Justice nor judges should become involved.

Our party endorses the bill. It has had very careful scrutiny and study in debate here and in committee. We are happy it is before the House for third reading, and we endorse it all the way.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, anything I might have said at this stage of the bill can be found between the lines of what the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) has just said, so I shall settle for that.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS ACT

MEASURE TO PROTECT PRIVACY OF INDIVIDUALS

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-25, to extend the present laws in Canada that proscribe discrimination and that protect the privacy of individuals, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North) moved:

That Bill C-25, an act to extend the present laws in Canada that proscribe discrimination and that protect the privacy of individuals, be amended in Clause 43, by adding immediately after line 4 at page 25 the following new subclause:

(3) Notwithstanding this Act, or any other Act of the Parliament of Canada, an appeal shall lie to a Federal Court of Canada from any order or decision or review of a tribunal, or from any dismissal of a complaint by a tribunal

(a) on any ground of appeal involving a question of law;

(b) on any ground of appeal involving a question of mixed law and fact;

(c) on any ground of appeal involving a question of fact.

He said: Mr. Speaker, may I say that I moved this amendment in committee but we have not received the committee report yet. I would have liked to have seen what was said by all members of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs and to have incorporated some of their remarks in the record. I felt I had the sympathy of members of the committee on all sides. All came to me—I am not breaking any confidence in saying this and I shall not name them but I can say that some are smiling now as they look at me—and said they were concerned that there was no appeal.

In my experience at the bar, Mr. Speaker, once there has been a finding of fact by the trial judge, tribunal or administrative body, and providing they have acted within the law and have not usurped the principle of natural justice or waived jurisdiction by some irregularity, and if there is no appeal from the facts, then the decision handed down stands.

I have had some experience with the Federal Court Act, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to read Section 18 into the record. It reads as follows:

The Trial Division has exclusive original jurisdiction . . .

The Federal Court was set up to deal with most matters that relate to the federal statutes. There is one exception, however. I see the minister looking at me and I will tell him what that exception is. I have had experience with it. Under the Broadcasting Act you can apply to any superior court in the province. That is much better than having to go to the Federal Court because few lawyers understand that the rules and regulations are more in tune with the British system than with the Canadian system in the Federal Court.

Section 18 continues as follows:

(a) to issue an injunction, writ of certiorari, writ of prohibition, writ of mandamus or writ of quo warranto, or grant declaratory relief, against any federal board, commission or other tribunal; and

(b) to hear and determine any application or other proceeding for relief in the nature of relief contemplated by paragraph (a), including any proceeding brought against the Attorney General of Canada, to obtain relief against a federal board, commission or other tribunal.

Section 18 deals with special damages. A writ of certiorari is where there has been a mistake on the record or a mistake in law; where jurisdiction has been exceeded it can be quashed by procedures. If some person acts beyond their jurisdiction then there is a writ of prohibition. If some administrator will not do what he is supposed to do, there is a writ of mandamus.

I know what the minister is going to say. He will say that this is good legislation that is on the books and that we do not need any procedure of appeal under the Human Rights Act.

Section 28 of the Federal Court Act is quite broad. It reads as follows:

(1) Notwithstanding section 18 or the provisions of any other Act, the Court of Appeal has jurisdiction—

That is the appeal court of the Federal Court. It continues:

—to hear and determine an application to review and set aside a decision or order, other than a decision or order of an administrative nature—

I want the House, and particularly the lawyers here, to listen to that again:

—other than a decision or order of an administrative nature—

Some boards and tribunals—and I will deal with them when I deal with the Human Rights Act—make administrative orders and make decisions of an administrative nature.

In committee the minister said that this is sufficient and that we do not have to worry but, Mr. Speaker, I can quote many cases, and if it is of an administrative nature you might just as well forget about any appeal under the act.

Section 28 continues:

—not required by law to be made on a judicial or quasi-judicial basis, made by or in the course of proceedings before a federal board, commission or other tribunal, upon the ground that the board, commission or tribunal

(a) failed to observe a principle of natural justice or otherwise acted beyond or refused to exercise its jurisdiction;

● (2040)

I read again:

(a) failed to observe a principle of natural justice or otherwise acted beyond or refused to exercise its jurisdiction;

That is a question of law.

(b) erred in law in making its decision or order, whether or not the error appears on the face of the record; or

(c) based its decision or order on an erroneous finding of fact that it made in a perverse or capricious manner or without regard for the material before it.

No matter what the minister may say, Section 28 gives the right of appeal to an individual from the decision of an administrative tribunal only on a question of law. Consider the wording of subparagraph (c) "... based its decision or order on an erroneous finding of fact." That language refers to a judge's finding something as a fact where there was no evidence to support such finding; or that he found something as a fact, totally contrary to the evidence. The subparagraph goes on to say, "—that it made in a perverse or capricious manner—". That language refers to a perverse or capricious finding of fact.

As the minister well knows, there is lots of law saying that a perverse finding of fact involves a question of law. Therefore, the only right of appeal under the Federal Court Act is on a question of law.

I now come to my amendment. It asks that, notwithstanding this act or any other act of the Parliament of Canada, an appeal shall lie to a federal court from any order or decision, on any ground of appeal involving a question of law. That language does not contradict the language of the act. Subparagraph (b) reads: "On any ground of appeal involving a question of mixed law and fact." That point can cause difficulty. What is a question of mixed law and fact? I suggest it would include a perverse finding of fact. The last part of my proposed amendment reads, "(c) on any ground of appeal involving a question of fact."

This evening we are considering Bill C-25, an act to extend the present laws in Canada that proscribe discrimination and that protect the privacy of individuals. In other words, we are considering a human rights bill.

Before I get to the meat of my argument allow me to read Clause 2 of the bill. It says:

The purpose of this Act is to extend the present laws in Canada to give effect, within the purview of matters coming within the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada, to the following principles:

(a) every individual should have an equal opportunity with other individuals to make for himself or herself the life that he or she is able and wishes to have, consistent with his or her duties and obligations as a member of society, without being hindered in or prevented from doing so by discriminatory practices based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, age, sex or marital status, or conviction for an offence for which a pardon has been granted or by discriminatory employement practices based on physical handicap; and

b) the privacy of individuals should be protected to the greatest extent consistent with public order and well-being.

The intent of that language is almost identical to the intent of the language in the Bill of Rights. Both pieces of legislation will commend themselves to Canadians. However, when you analyze this bill you will note that a tribunal is to be set up, or a commission, and one person can make a decision. What will be the effect of this? Let me give an example.

I have many friends in Calgary, some of them Jewish. One of those people owned a shop a little way from my office. When my children were younger I used to stop at his shop on the way home and buy my kids a little candy and popcorn. We always used to chat about politics. This chap hired, let us say, a Pakistani, and for some unknown reason some people of the community did not like the person he hired. They kept throwing bricks through his window. He had been at that location for 35 years and never encountered trouble. What happened?

Finally, he said to his employee, "Look, I feel sorry for you; we have suffered from discrimination, and you are suffering from it also. All the same, I am afraid I will have to let you go, because nobody will insure my windows. The people of this area are heaving bricks through them almost every night".

What would happen if his employee were to take his case to the human rights tribunal, if this bill were law? I assume this bill will pass. Say one man hears the case and says to my little friend, whom I have known 35 years, "You discriminated against your worker, you fired him because he was of a certain race. We do not know who is throwing the bricks, but I say to you, rehire that man. If you do not, we will close your shop or remove your popcorn machine." This could happen under this human rights bill.

Let us say this happens, as I have recited it, and my little friend loses his popcorn machine and is forced to close down the business he has operated 35 years. Unless this bill is amended, on those facts my little friend would have no right of appeal, because the tribunal say there is no question of law involved and, "I find you have discriminated against Mr. X," whatever the employee's name might be. Mr. Speaker, I am shocked that lawyers in this House and elsewhere have not been up in arms about this provision.

Hearing my submission in committee, the minister, showing either good judgment or political acumen, decided that yes, something must be done in relation to such arbitrary decisions. He said, "I tell you what; I agree that one man on a tribunal might make a mistake. Therefore let us make available the right of appeal." The aggrieved person, if less than three sit on the original tribunal, can appeal to other tribunal members, but these will all be administrators, appointed by order in council, and very likely all Liberals.

An hon. Member: Crummy Liberals.

Mr. Woolliams: I don't know about their being crummy Liberals; but that they will be Liberals you can be certain. I always remember what the right hon. gentleman for Prince Albert said when the government appointed 19 people to the bench, 18 of them Grits. He said it helped him to understand something. When a CBC reporter asked what he meant, he replied, "I never understood the just society. Now I understand it very well. It's just for Grits."

The minister is a great poltician. I have always admired the political urbanity of the Minister of Justice. I remember sitting on a committee with him some years ago out in Banff and saw how smoothly he handled the whole affair. You can say one thing about the Minister of Justice: if there is any difficulty, he will sweep it under the carpet and so dismiss it.

An hon. Member: He's a Basford.

Mr. Woolliams: That's him.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is "he".

Mr. Woolliams: The hon. member is right. My English is bad. I must apologize to the hon. member who always corrects us in our procedure, grammar, and otherwise. Of course, we do not all have the intellectual capacities of the hon. member in question.

You can bet that the people to be appointed to that commission, or to that tribunal will be Liberals.

An hon. Member: And highly qualified.

● (2050)

Mr. Woolliams: They are highly qualified if they are Grits. I could not agree more. However, they will be shaped and trimmed to make certain decisions. This will be without a right of appeal on facts because 99 per cent of the judgments, providing they are acting within the scope of their jurisdiction as a board, if it can sit as one man, are on findings of fact.

I think I know some law. Hon. members flattered me this afternoon. Tonight they will criticize me. That is typical of this place. How can one person make a mistake on law when under the act he has a right to find the facts? Once he finds the facts, that is the decision. You can check Sections 18 or 28 of the Federal Act and you will see there is no right of appeal.

Once I appealed to the legal instinct of the Minister of Justice. He said that maybe he had made a mistake, and he repented. When the Minister of Justice repents, it is quite a repentance. He said "We will allow you to appeal to your friends." It goes to the same old board, the same old club that belongs to the same group. That is no appeal at all.

We are dealing with human rights. Any individual, whether it be an employer, employee or unemployed person should have the right of appeal. The Minister of Justice does not agree.

In the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, we live together. We flatter each other. We are lawyers. We see eyeball to eyeball. I have been a member of that committee for quite a while. But there is one thing I have learned over the years. Once the government decides to do something, it does it.

This bill was not drawn up by the minister. He probably did not see it until it came to his office. It was drawn by a bunch of bureaucrats. However, he has to justify it. I will tell you why. If he goes against those who tell him what to do, do you know what happens? They have a little discussion over coffee. They say that the minister is acting rather queer, going against what they are doing. He therefore has to stay within the terms of reference of his department. If we were the government, I guess we would have to do the same thing. However, that does not mean that I cannot raise the kind of grievance I am raising now.

Surely the minister is not going to tell me that the commissioners appointed to that tribunal will be perfect, great men who never have any ideas. Do you think there is anyone in this Chamber or in all Canada who does not have any prejudices? We are all a part of all that we have met, each is needed by each one, and nothing is God alone, said Emerson. We are a part of our environment.

Some person who sits alone makes a decision. We have the right, and we got that through the Conservatives, to appeal to three other people in the tribunal. However, I repeat, they all belong to the same club, the same factory, the same everything.

Why does the government deny my amendment? What is it afraid of? I will tell you. What government supporters fear most is that once they set up this administrative body they do not want any interference. According to Sections 18 and 28 of the federal act, there is no right of appeal from a finding of fact. Ninety percent of the decisions made by administrative boards, superior trial courts and county courts are on findings of fact.

There is a judge in Alberta who is now retired, God bless him. He was so frightened of an appeal from his judgments that whoever he would find for, the plaintiff for example, he would say, "I believe the plaintiff and disbelieve the witnesses for the defence. These are the facts."

The Court of Appeal would know it was a perverse finding. However, because of the law there could be no appeal from a finding of fact because trial judges are able to find those facts on the evidence. They would look at the witnesses and, when making their decisions, they would say who was telling the truth and who was not. Therefore the appeal would be thrown out of the court.

I will go further. In my own province there were trial judges so shaped and trimmed in their understanding of that kind of jurisprudence they could make a finding of fact against you that you could win in the court of appeal in Alberta. However, the Supreme Court of Canada followed the British practice and upset the judgment of the court of appeal. They always reinstated the original judgment.

We had a judge who is now retired, a great gentleman. I will not name him. He never wrote a judgment. If he was going to find for the plaintiff in an automobile accident, he would say "I find negligence. I give the plaintiff $50,000 and costs and double column five". If it went to the Supreme Court with no reasons for the judgment, they would say the judge must have instructed himself correctly, that he must have understood the evidence and found the proper facts. Once that judge learned that was the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada, he never wrote a judgment, only one line. He was a very brilliant man of jurisprudence, very able and very understanding of our system. He understood its weaknesses and its greatness.

There are not many in the Chamber this evening on any side. Where are the lawyers who have read this bill without the right of appeal? I want to repeat, we are dealing with human rights. What we are dealing with is the same as the Bill of Rights. This bill states there will not be any discriminatory practices based on race. You and I know what that means—national or ethnic origin. You and I know what that means—colour or religion, age and sex, marital status, or conviction for an offence, etc. etc. And one person on an administrative board is to make a decision. That was the way the bill was drawn, but the Minister of Justice is going to stand and say "Oh, I gave them half a cake." He gave us nothing. You appeal, now, to his brothers and they will be three.

And when we have a bill going through on human rights I am shocked that outside of one in the NDP who stands for civil rights, a great gentleman and a great parliamentarian, there should be no one in this House of all of them, the great philosophers and supporters of human rights; the rest are not here, standing and supporting my amendment. Only one, a stalwart, a great Canadian.

An hon. Member: What is his name?

Mr. Woolliams: Well, there is only one here. He is from Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I see a Liberal now sitting at the back behind the NDP to back him up. They do not seem to be doing that in Ontario. I am shocked at this great party, and there is an election going on in Ontario; I will excuse them. I know that, but I sat in the committee, and where were they? They were absent.

Mr. Faulkner: As usual.

Mr. Woolliams: I don't know about "as usual" but they were absent and they did not raise their voices. There were Liberals who came to me, and I am not going to name them because things were said to me in confidence. I will say to the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) that there were Liberals who came to my office and said "You were right but we can do nothing about it because the discipline is there."

I can see what is going to happen. This bill will be rammed through the House of Commons. The minister will ride either a black horse or a white horse, whatever horse he wants to ride, and say, "I am the saviour of human rights in this nation." Yet he is passing a bill which does not give the right of appeal to any individual whenever he stands, whatever his race is, whatever his colour is, whatever his religion is, whatever his employment is, whether he is an employer or an employee. It is not good enough.

In all the years I have been in this House I have never been more serious. This is a denial of natural justice and I urge the minister to reconsider his position. Don't come along with this wiffling, waffling amendment saying we are going to allow you to appeal to a bunch of other members of the commission when they are all in the same family, appointed in the same way, under the same conditions. God help us if that is the law we are going to implement as human rights legislation in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I listened transfixed to the speech made by my hon. friend from Calgary North. The hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) said it was the best speech of the day. He spoke with eloquence. He spoke with conviction, he spoke from a long background in the practice of the law, and I think he brought home as forcefully as anyone could in this House the importance of distinguishing in our jurisprudence between an administrative tribunal with judicial overtones and the judiciary itself.

There is in practice and in fact a difference between an administrative tribunal on the one hand, however well intentioned its members may be, and the traditions which surround the judges and our courts. I join with the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) in appealing to the minister and to the government to consider the amendment which has been put on the order paper. I would remind the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) if I can do so, with the greatest respect, that this is the first time that there has been a human rights bill of this magnitude covering the matters which this bill covers within the federal jurisdiction.

Listen to part of Clause 2. It says:

> (a) every individual should have an equal opportunity with other individuals to make for himself or herself the life that he or she is able and wishes to have, consistent with his or her duties and obligations as a member of society, without being hindered in or prevented from doing so by discriminatory practices based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, age, sex or marital status, or conviction for an offence for which a pardon has been granted or by discriminatory employment practices based on physical handicap; and
> (b) the privacy of individuals should be protected to the greatest extent consistent with public order and well-being.

I do not intend to stand in this House and denigrate the sentiments of the minister with respect to this bill because it is one which affects every one of our lives. Yesterday in this House I raised the case of a person who feels discriminated against because of colour. I would not want that person's future to be decided on the basis of an arbitrary decision within the bureaucracy, however well intentioned, and I would not want to see that man denied access to the courts of this country. If that recourse were denied to him he would harbour within his soul for the rest of his days the suspicion that he had not been fairly dealt with.

I say to the minister that this is the first attempt, and a noble attempt indeed, to bring within our jurisdiction, at least at the federal level, some recognition of equality among individuals before the law regardless of their station. What is so wrong if that is the case? What is so wrong with acceding to what my hon. friend from Calgary North has asked, and allowing those who must deal with this tribunal in one way or another, at least at the beginning while we test this new system, the right which has been granted historically, as it ought to have been granted, that is, access to the courts?

The amendment is broad, but the principles with which we are dealing are broad and, as I say, it will affect all of us in one way or another. This is the government's first attempt. The hon. member for Calgary North is absolutely right. Even within the judicial process there are occasions when people walk away from the courtroom feeling aggrieved. It is pretty hard to tell a person, as I have had to from time to time, why they lost their case. It is hard to get them to understand why, in a matter involving dollars and cents, or freedom, or relations between individuals, the court has found the facts against them and that another court cannot deal with the facts. In the mind of that person that is dreadfully wrong. It is no comfort for him to be told that had there been an error in law there would be a chance to go to another court and appear before a different set of judges.

We are not talking here about matters of dollars and cents or about relations between individuals. We are talking about the relationship between society and individuals. This is why the hon. member for Calgary North has gone so far in his amendment as to deal not only with errors in law which are to be the subject of appeal, and which I hope is nothing unusual, but errors involving mixed law and fact as well as errors involving a question of fact.

In this first attempt we are making to legislate broadly in the field of human rights we are saying to the people of this country that we have done our very best to ensure that all avenues are kept open to them, that no one avenue has been closed. If the amendment does not pass, then in terms of this new approach to that which human beings normally take for granted—the relationship of one individual to another, fairness of society and a whole host of other things—we will be saying that such matters ought not to be a matter for the court.

I appeal to the Minister of Justice to reconsider his position overnight on this matter. I am sure he has received representations from members of his own party on this subject. I cannot imagine some members from his own party on the committee, for all of whom I have great respect, not making representations to him privately in regard to this provision. I ask him to consider those representations as well as those put forward by the hon. member for Calgary North. I do not want this bill to leave this parliament deficient. I want the bill to leave this parliament as complete a first step as it possibly can be. I am afraid that unless there is couched within the bill those provisions suggested by the hon. member for Calgary North in his amendment, then the bill will be deficient and the government will have reason to regret its failure to support this amendment.

I am not suggesting that it would not be other than an administrative inconvenience to have an extra ground of appeal. I am not suggesting that there would not be some delay. But it would be a delay occasioned by people who felt themselves legitimately aggrieved by a decision. I think it important that we not let administrative inconvenience stand in the way of the proper administration of justice.

The Minister of Justice has talked from time to time about the two roles he performs. As Minister of Justice he has administrative responsibility for a department of government. He is also the Attorney General of Canada, which puts him above party. It puts him above considerations of mere convenience. It puts him in the position where he has to consider the administration of justice in a way perhaps different from any other member of the House of Commons.

It is in that spirit that I am happy to support this amendment which is being so ably presented by the hon. member for Calgary North. And it is in that spirit that I ask the Minister of Justice to consider the amendment carefully and to stand in his place before the end of this debate and agree it should be placed into the statute law that is to be eventually approved by the House of Commons.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to rise and support my friend, the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) in the amendment he has moved at the report stage of Bill C-25. This is a bill to extend the present laws in Canada that proscribe discrimination and that protect the privacy of individuals. The short title of the bill is the "Canadian Human Rights Act".

As my hon. friend from Calgary North so ably pointed out, how can you start to define in a proper way human rights when in the interpretation clause of the bill legal rights are denied or restricted? In terms of the new area which this bill reaches into trying to remove discrimination of various forms, it is rather ironic, to say the least, that in attempting to control or eliminate discrimination the bill takes away something which has been fundamental in almost every bill, namely, the right of appeal to a higher tribunal.

I agree with my hon. friend from Grenville-Carleton that undoubtedly if this amendment were carried an appeal to the Federal Court might occasion delay. But, Mr. Speaker, what is a little delay in terms of defining human rights and making sure that errors are corrected when, on the other side of the coin, there could very well be a denial of justice and a restriction of freedom?

On this first day of extended sittings we are endeavouring to remove some of the legislative logjam along the road to June 30 so that we can celebrate our national birthday on July 1. Thank God, Mr. Speaker, the Centennial Flame continues to burn, because if we were to depend upon the inconsistency of the government it would be an on again off again thing. Your Honour may be wondering what this has to do with human rights. I suggest that the members of the House at this time have become over saturated not with just human rights but with the right of Canadians to have a Canada that extends from coast to coast. I could comment perhaps a little longer on that.

The moon is almost full outside. It is ironic. This year we are going to turn it on and have a July 1 celebration. Last year we turned it off.

Sometime I want to make a speech to my Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) about his inconsistencies on national unity and many other things. But tonight we are not talking about national unity. We are talking about human rights in all their form, colour, gender and mode of employment. We are going to have an administrative tribunal to define and enforce those rights. It is only to be subject to redress by some fellow brethren in the same level of the court, with no appeal to a higher court.

It is paradoxical to move into this very sensitive area, which is also an area of personal conflict. We move into this area to try to help individuals. We are trying to help them by defining and restricting discrimination. We are going to remove something almost every commonlaw lawyer looks at and knows, through experience, is necessary. I am referring to the right of appeal to a higher tribunal. However principled, however just, and however experienced the brethren in court are, there is a necessity to have that right of appeal.

If the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) says tonight the implementation of this amendment of my hon. friend will delay some of the proceedings under the Canadian Human Rights Act, what is a little delay when you are talking about human rights? What is a little delay when you are talking about a potential denial of justice? What is a little delay when you are talking about a potential restriction of freedom? I hope the Minister of Justice, either tonight or tomorrow, after having had a chance to reflect on this, will tell this House he is not breaking new ground by going along with the amendment of the hon. member for Calgary North. Almost every judicial bill has an appeal provision. Why do we take away the fundamental help which an individual can look to when every other source of help is gone? I am referring to the right of appeal to a higher court.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: We have no experience in this field in terms of an administrative tribunal implementing this bill. It is only a bill, it is not an act yet. We are in a brand new area. That is another reason why we have to tread sensitively and build in protections down the road.

In another debate in this House the minister and other members on both sides of this House took very firm positions on something called capital punishment. We have all gone through the trauma and the emotion of that debate. I have faced the dilemma of the debate on the gallows on three or four different occasions in the eight or nine years I have been a member. Every time emotion builds up, and every time members wrestle with their consciences. Individual members have put their own consciences ahead of the collective conscience of Canadians.

I have respected those who were against capital punishment, but one of the salient arguments was the fact that you could always have a terminal error in the area of capital crime, with capital punishment at the end of the road. That could not be redressed, and that was an argument I could understand. I might not have accepted it and I certainly do not believe the judicial system today is anything like it was ten, 15 or 50 years ago when the underprivileged, the underdog, who was so often the accused, had not much chance at all in the judicial process.

The scales of justice have pretty effectively swung to rehabilitation and reform, which are high on the list of judicial process. Retribution and punishment certainly have been downplayed. In the former debate one of the salient arguments was that you could have capital punishment because you might make a mistake. We were told, "Make sure there is always an appeal; you might even have the final commutation, that is, executive commutation through the royal prerogative so that someone would not hang. We all know there are cases of that mistake occurring. In the last ten years there were even more cases documented where the killer, who was convicted once, was let out early, and he killed again. That is one of the reasons why I switched my stand on capital punishment.

It was the assessment of the potential of trial error and judicial error which said, "Let the condemned man have every right of appeal, right up to the highest person in the land", for example, the sovereign, for royal clemency.

Members to the left of me are usually provocative and prolonged—

Mr. Woolliams: And vociferous.

Mr. Nowlan: —and vociferous in their sincere defence of human rights and different types of rights. I do not fault them for that; but I do not know if it is the full moon outside that has got them all down by the Centennial Flame looking toward a potential June 30 recess in honour of July 1, which we are going to celebrate this year. We are going to be Canadians again this year. Last year it was not in style, this year it is in style.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Nowlan: I hear moans, groans, hee-haws and guffaws. Did you go to a birthday party on July 1 last year? No, you did not, because our Prime Minister said—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I suggest the hon. member should return to the terms of the amendment.

Mr. Nowlan: With respect, Mr. Speaker, I am talking about human rights. I am not going to have anyone guffaw and hee-haw at me and then have them protected by His Honour on something as fundamental as my right to celebrate the birthday of my country on July 1, just because this Prime Minister is on again off again Finnegan, and on again off again Pierre.

Mrs. Holt: The Chair has ruled that it is irrelevant.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I suggest the hon. member should refer to the Prime Minister of this country by his title and not by his first name.

Mr. Nowlan: Well, Mr. Speaker, I was not calling anyone "Pierre Elliott Trudeau". In any event, the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) used to be an author of some note.

An hon. Member: She still is.

Mr. Nowlan: She is an author of some note with a newspaper in the west. She fought for rights in police courts, was interested in the drug laws of the land, and in problems of juvenile delinquency. She was very active, vociferous, and made quite a name for herself in her concern for rights. I hope she stands in this House and says something positive about how she can support a bill, or conversely how she can deny the amendment moved by the hon. member for Calgary North which gives the right of appeal to the Federal Court.

Mrs. Holt: Why did you not bring it in 20 years ago?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) has the floor for the purpose of making a speech.

Mr. Nowlan: I did not want to get into hot water here. I am glad you intervened, Mr. Speaker, because sometimes I need protection and help, especially when the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway gets after my tail.

An hon. Member: Watch what you say.

● (2130)

Mr. Nowlan: Be that as it may I would like to conclude.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Nowlan: Hon. members opposite applaud. Their party used to be a party which was liberal on rights. Mr. Speaker, I hope you will not rule me out of order for mentioning John Stuart Mill. He used to be a liberal theoretician in the classical sense of the word. A fellow called Sir Wilfrid Laurier was a very eminent member of this House and once the Prime Minister of this land. Stuart Garson was an eminent minister of justice in a then Liberal government. Louis St. Laurent was a classical liberal in the best sense of the word, and a lawyer to boot. Those gentlemen could not stomach this type of bill, which restricts the right of the individual and which does not redress a wrong which could be perpetrated by an administrative tribunal.

I wonder how many hon. members appreciate what the amendment put forward by the hon. member for Calgary North says. The amendment reads as follows:

> That Bill C-25, An Act to extend the present laws in Canada that proscribe discrimination and that protect the privacy of individuals, be amended in Clause 43, by adding immediately after line 32 at page 22 the following new subclause:
> "(3) Notwithstanding this Act, or any other Act of the Parliament of Canada, an appeal shall lie to a Federal Court of Canada from any order or decision or review of a tribunal, or from any dismissal of a complaint by a tribunal
> (a) on any ground of appeal involving a question of law;
> (b) on any ground of appeal involving a question of mixed law and fact;

This amendment is said to break new ground and will create difficulty and administrative hangups in the Department of Justice. It is said it might be a cloak around the new administrative tribunal which might adversely affect the rights of individuals. All this amendment provides is an appeal to the Federal Court on a question of law, on a question of fact, or on a question of mixed law and fact. I think all of us in this House would be prepared to delay the implementation of an administrative tribunal rather than have a denial of justice, and as far as I am concerned I am prepared to support the amendment of my hon. friend because an administrative delay does not compare with restriction of individual freedoms. We cannot have an effective administrative tribunal which tries to protect human rights if we take away the right of appeal.

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, I support this amendment without reservation or qualification. I am disappointed and surprised at what I perceive to be the minister's reaction to it.

I would like to deal with the subject matter under three or four different headings. As a lawyer I have practised before administrative tribunals on many occasions. As the minister will remember from his law school days, the nature of an administrative tribunal is somewhat of a jungle. Law students and law schools approach this subject with either trepidation on the one hand or fear and loathing on the other, because no one really knows how to deal with an administrative tribunal.

In law school we deal with remarkable things. We deal with extraordinary remedies, certiorari, mandamus, and that type of thing. There is no history, precedent or codification dealing with the operation of these tribunals. Some have operated effectively, and some have been disastrous. The point which I think is terribly important to make is that what is sometimes regarded as a cliche—justice must not only be done but must also appear to be done—is far more than a cliche. The perception of those who might find themselves in front of this tribunal is equally important as the substance of that tribunal's work. Let us remember that if those who might find themselves in the very extraordinary and emotional position of being before that tribunal are inhibited from doing so because of their perception of that tribunal, then this legislation is self-defeating.

I agree with the preamble of this bill. I do not think anyone in the House will challenge it, but if those who are potentially before the tribunal are deterred from availing themselves of its provisions, then this legislation is counter-productive. What would deter them from availing themselves of the protection of this tribunal? Well, certainly one thing would be if it is regarded as somewhat of a star chamber. There have been administrative tribunals of that nature, and I will name one, the CRTC.

The atmosphere before the CRTC prohibits the free expression of those who choose to challenge its rulings. We have CRTC hearings in Ottawa which decide the fate of people right across the country. Who is to come from my riding, from Calgary North, from the minister's riding, or from Annapolis Valley to appear before that tribunal in order to express freely their concerns about its deliberations?

Another one is the National Energy Board, which is charged with a terribly important function, but the atmosphere there is one in which no one but a lawyer would be comfortable. That is why I think we owe a great tribute to Mr. Justice Berger, who created a quasi-administrative tribunal and provided an atmosphere for people in all walks of life to be comfortable in while expressing their opinions about the future of their country and their communities.

With regard to appeals, it seems to me that the perception of an appeal to a group of confreres of the sole arbitrator has to be negative. As the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) pointed out, it is all in the club. At least that is the perception. I do not question the integrity of those people, but I can see what the perception would be. Why should the so-called appeal board overrule the decision of one of its fellows?

Mr. Nowlan: Are they going to do it over lunch?

Mr. Jarvis: That would be terribly counter-productive to the stated purposes of this legislation.

It is my view that a judicial appeal helps an administrative tribunal. An appeal to a court of appeal, for example, is almost like going to school for those who sat on the administrative tribunal in the original case because there are many cases where, without a lack of integrity or keen desire to be an effective tribunal, these people go astray. They get off on tangents. They do make mistakes, not just in law but also in their terms of reference. They make mistakes on the amount of evidence they allow in, and there are all kinds of things which lead an administrative tribunal astray. It has happened over and over again with innumerable tribunals. Therefore it appears to me that the right of appeal which is proposed in this amendment by the hon. member for Calgary North makes sense.

I think a good example of helping an administrative tribunal become more effective has been the system of possibly the best known administrative tribunal in Ontario. That is the Ontario Municipal Board, a very important administrative tribunal to the various communities of Ontario. Many of its decisions have been appealed successively, but I have never heard any of the board members say anything else but that those appeals were a great assistance to them in their future deliberations. Therefore, I earnestly solicit the minister's consideration of this amendment.

The minister must feel that there is some basis for an appeal, otherwise he would not have agreed in committee to an appeal to a board of three members. If he agrees in principle with an appeal, I would earnestly hope that he would agree, or at least consider, a judicial appeal which under this bill in particular makes much more sense than an appeal to three fellow board members from the original board member. As one of the earlier speakers said—it might have been either the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) or the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan)—perhaps the minister could sleep on it, and sleep well on it, because this amendment, as proposed by the hon. member for Calgary North, has a great deal to commend it in terms of justice and equity and in terms of being a useful tool to increase the effective administration of the original tribunal, and finally, in terms of the perception of those men and women on the tribunal who will be seeking a sense of integrity. Surely they deserve nothing less than that.

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, this seems like a very simple argument. The amendment is so simple and clear to me and to anyone who has practised law or is still practising law that it must be quite obvious what is taking place.

The amendment has already been quoted several times here tonight. It is a request for an appeal to the Federal Court of Canada on the basis of facts, on the basis of law, or an appeal on the basis of a mixture of facts and law. What we are concerned about are the human rights that are referred to in Clause 2 of the bill. This too might have been recited on several occasions this evening. My only regret is that the clause is not complete.

There is so much discrimination in this country today. One that I know of and one of which I have been a victim is political affiliation, or lack of it. I am certain that the committee, of which I am not a member, should have considered it and put it in the clause. But be that as it may, any decision that will be made by officials appointed by the government or by another group of government officials is a decision made by an administrative tribunal. Any lawyer, official, or union official who has appeared before appointed tribunals knows the errors in facts and the errors in law, or errors in fact and law that they make, and there are many of them. I will give you an example of one.

The review committees before the Canada Pension Plan and the various boards of referees across this country are an example. Goodness gracious, if people were to exercise their right of appeal, we should be in one heck of a mess in this country. Nevertheless, these are human rights, and it is important. Someone said here that we are starting down a new road. Let us get on that road and stay on it.

All I can say is that this amendment, which is fair and equitable, and which attempts to give some justice to a bill which should try to give justice to the people, and which attempts to see justice done, should be approved. I suggest that members of the House and the minister should acknowledge that there is a gap and a loophole in this proposed law which should be filled if human rights are to be protected. If the purpose of the bill, the preamble and the title are to mean anything, and if human rights mean anything to parliamentarians, then we should approve this amendment. If we do not pass this amendment, the entire purport and intent of the bill will be useless. Certainly a judicial appeal will mean a great deal more than an administrative appeal. A judicial appeal before a judge in the Federal Court will mean that you will get a proper interpretation and a proper study of the real facts and of the law.

I have no alternative but to support this amendment because it is just, and without it the bill would be unjust.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, may I speak very briefly on the amendment moved by the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams). First may I say that I have enjoyed this debate immensely with the praise for the bill from the hon. member for Calgary North, the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan), and the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker). They said what a terribly important bill this is and what an important initiative by the government it was to put before parliament a bill dealing with the human rights of Canadians. What a contrast! I am delighted that hon. members opposite have, in the course of debating this bill and listening in committee, learned something about the bill, because at second reading, if one wants to look back at the record, this bill was pooh-poohed as being unnecessary.

Mr. Woolliams: That is nonsense.

Mr. Basford: And they are the party of the great hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) who wrote the Bill of Rights. They said that that was all that was really necessary and that this bill was quite unnecessary. I am delighted that the opposition has had a change of heart and has recognized tonight that this is a bold and important initiative of the government.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Basford: The hon. member for Calgary North just said that that is nonsense. Let me read from the proceedings of the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs of May 10 at page 17:5,77. The hon. member for Calgary North cross-examined me and went through a whole course of questions to me and to one of my consultants, Professor Walter Tarnopolsky, who has worked on the bill with me. He is a special consultant to the Department of Justice and a Canadian representative to the United Nations Commission on Human Rights. This is what the hon. member for Calgary North said:

> How does it strenghten the law to give human rights to the average Canadian?

It is a great question compared to what he has argued here this evening. Later on he said:

> With the greatest respect, and I am not saying that there is anything wrong with the bill, I am just asking you what it adds, other than what the Bill of Rights has already done?

Throughout the course of that cross-examination there was the allegation that the bill was unnecessary.

Canadian Human Rights

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege. As the Attorney General of Canada and the Minister of Justice, the minister should not take things out of context. I recall that he used to do that when he was a backbencher, but I would think that now he has been raised to the exalted position of the Minister of Justice he would not take things out of context. I will tell him that if he reads my speech with any degree of honesty he will find that my only criticism of the bill is what they will do by order in council. If he is honest he will know that I co-operated throughout the debate on the bill. The bill went through the committee expeditiously. It is true that I said the bill covered many things that the Bill of Rights covers. But I am saying to the minister: let us get the facts. He is denying in a bill that covers human rights, and natural justice, the right of appeal of the average Canadian.

● (2150)

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I have previously stated many times in this House that the hon. member for Calgary North has been helpful and constructive at the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs with this and other bills. That is a matter that I have put on the public record many times. For purposes of this debate I am also quoting the public record of the cross-examination of me in the committee. I mention it in order to record my delight this evening at the recognition by hon. members opposite that this is an immensely important measure to the welfare of the average Canadian and an important measure to taking further steps to establish justice, fairness, and equality for all Canadians.

It has been said in the debate on the amendment this evening that there is no right of appeal in Bill C-25. This is utter nonsense. Under the Human Rights Act, the tribunals and their decisions are subject to the Federal Court Act.

Mr. Woolliams: Under Sections 28 and 18; I read them.

Mr. Basford: Subject to Sections 28 and 18, as the hon. member for Calgary North just indicated. Let me read into the record what section 28 provides. Section 18 deals with access to the trial court of the Federal Court for the use of prerogative writs in the supervision of administrative tribunals. Section 28 reads:

> (1) Notwithstanding section 18 or the provisions of any other Act, the Court of Appeal has jurisdiction to hear and determine an application to review and set aside a decision or order, other than a decision or order of an administrative nature not required by law to be made on a judicial or quasi-judicial basis, made by or in the course of proceedings before a federal board, commission or other tribunal, upon the ground that the board, commission or tribunal
> (a) failed to observe a principle of natural justice or otherwise acted beyond or refused to exercise its jurisdiction;

The hon. member for Calgary North heckled me, saying that it did not provide appeal for natural justice.

Mr. Woolliams: I did not say that. Mr. Speaker, a point of order—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member for Calgary North rises on a point of order.

Mr. Woolliams: I wish the Minister of Justice would stay with the facts. I am sure he knows the point I made. I do not know how long the minister practised. I am told it was two years before he became a member of parliament, but I am sure with a law degree he would know that everything in Section 28, no matter how he dishes it up, is a question of law. What I am saying and what I said is that I want to appeal from one person sitting in a tribunal alone. He said in committee that there could be an appeal to three—which is all part of the hanky-panky nonsense when we are dealing with human rights—on a question of fact. He can dish up perverse facts, capricious facts. They are all questions of law. I would hope that the Minister of Justice has not forgotten his first-year classes in law.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, that is not a question of privilege, it is debate, with deference. The hon. member for Calgary North made his speech in support of his amendment and I should like to make mine. If I misunderstood his heckle, then I withdraw my remarks.

Mr. Woolliams: Good.

Mr. Basford: I do quote and make clear to this House—because in some of the speeches it has not been made clear—that there is the right of appeal from a decision of the commission or any of its tribunals on the basis that the commission or tribunal, as Section 28 provides:

> (a) failed to observe a principle of natural justice or otherwise acted beyond or refused to exercise its jurisdiction;
> (b) erred in law in making its decision or order, whether or not the error appears on the face of the record; or
> (c) based its decision or order on an erroneous finding of fact that it made in a perverse or capricious manner or without regard for the material before it.

It has been suggested in this debate that Section 28 is not very useful; that it is really not an appeal and therefore we should accept this amendment to supplant it. Since that section was passed in 1971, 1,507 cases have been heard by it on questions of natural justice, errors of law and decisions or orders based on an erroneous finding of fact, including decisions against the Canadian Transport Commission, the Department of Manpower and Immigration or the Immigration Appeal Board, actions against the Public Service Commission, and a whole range of administrative tribunals that are subject to judicial supervision as provided in this section.

If, as is alleged, Section 28 is not very effective, I doubt that 1,507 people would have gone to the trouble and expense—

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, again the Minister of Justice is leaving the wrong impression with the media, hoping to bail himself out. I should like leave to ask the minister a question. He dealt with 1,507 cases. I suggest to him that they were all on points of law—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): That is not a point of order but a point of debate.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner).]

Mr. Woolliams: —and secondly, all of those were motions on a question of taxation. Let us be honest. Let us not misrepresent the facts.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member for Calgary North that he is debating. That is not a point of order.

Mr. Woolliams: I say to you, Mr. Speaker, let the Attorney General and the Minister of Justice come clean with the facts and be honest tonight.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member wants the facts, I have with me a very comprehensive statement of those statistics which is far too extensive to read into the record. I would ask leave of the House to table it.

Mr. Woolliams: No. I want them explained.

Mr. Basford: Now the hon. member does not want them. I indicated at committee that of the some 1,500 cases, 1,100 involved appeals against decisions made under the Immigration Act, which is surely one of the very basic human rights of this country. It has nothing whatsoever to do with income tax and the Department of National Revenue. I believe that was 1,103, speaking from memory—

Mr. Woolliams: Taxation cases.

Mr. Basford: —involved manpower and immigration. I would ask the hon. member for Calgary North to pay some attention to the facts and some attention to the record of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs where these facts were broken down. It was clear that the majority of cases using Section 28 involved manpower and immigration decisions, a basic human right in this country.

May I suggest that because of Section 28 this amendment is unnecessary. I should like to quote from the brief that the Canadian Bar Association presented to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs. It had a number of comments to make on Bill C-25, including a section on appeal. They claimed that the bill did not seem to provide for any right of appeal and recommended that appeal should be available on questions of law or on jurisdictional facts, from decisions of the tribunal. They questioned whether judicial review of the tribunal's decision would provide a speedier remedy.

Let me deal with those three sentences and those three recommendations. In complaining that the bill does not seem to provide for any right of appeal, the Canadian Bar Assocation failed to take cognizance of Section 18 or Section 28 of the Federal Court Act. They recommended that appeals should be available on questions of law or jurisdictional facts from decisions of the tribunal. But those two grounds, law and jurisdictional facts, are clearly contained within the rights of appeal provided in Section 28. In fact Section 28 goes further.

The third sentence says, "We question whether judicial review of the tribunal's decision would provide a speedier remedy." That means that they question the very amendment the hon. member has proposed, because that amendment would provide for a complete judicial review of every decision, and the Canadian Bar Association says that it questions whether a judicial review of the tribunal's decision would provide a speedier remedy.

The hon. member for Calgary North can get up, if he wishes, claim he is a great legal expert, and say that this is a very basic legal question. He can accuse me of not fulfilling my obligations or duties as Minister of Justice if I resist his amendment. But I say that the Canadian Bar Association, in its representations made to the Justice and Legal Affairs Committee, in effect recommended against the adoption of his amendment.

Mr. Woolliams: They didn't say that at all.

Mr. Basford: They supported the two grounds, or those grounds of appeal provided in section 28 of the Federal Court Act.

An hon. Member: Read the entire comment.

Mr. Basford: I just did. That was the entire comment of the Canadian Bar Association on the question of appeal.

Mr. Woolliams: That was one of your own Liberals speaking. A Liberal said that.

Mr. Basford: May I touch on why we, in this country, have established human rights commissions and human rights tribunals?

Mr. Woolliams: I still think I'm right.

Mr. Basford: In all the provinces of Canada we have set up human rights commissions and passed human rights acts, and the idea has been to develop anti-discrimination programs within the jurisdiction of those provinces. Now, following the actions of human rights commissions and tribunals, we have established an administrative organization known as an administrative tribunal. This can come to the rescue and assistance of those in society against whom discrimination is practised. Mr. Speaker, we are embarked on a highly specialized area of endeavour.

What is the concept of this bill? It is the promotion and development of affirmative action programs, and the promotion and development of the concept of equal pay for work of equal value, both for men and women, without discrimination. It has been found from experience that this sort of thing is most effectively done through human rights commissions, tribunals or inquiries—whatever they may be called.

I quote the evidence given on May 19 before the committee by Professor Tarnopolsky, whom I have already mentioned. After the committee had wondered if human rights could better be advanced by the courts or by the sort of commission being proposed, he said, among other things:

> The condition that had occurred right up through the enactment of human rights legislation in the provinces was that it was impossible to get redress in the courts for acts of discrimination. The same thing was true as based upon the civil law of Quebec because it was based on the common law of the other provinces. It was specifically for this reason that the provincial legislatures all moved into the area of the administrative tribunals, as the minister mentioned . . .
> The experience showed repeatedly in the province of Quebec where there are three cases, in Ontario there were two cases—and this was even after the enactment of the human rights legislation—and a certain number in Saskatchewan. But when the cases were taken to the courts, it was a totally new approach to comprehend the objects of human rights legislation. I would not want to say it was failure to comprehend because that would be unfair to the courts, but at least it was such a totally new approach that the provincial legislatures found it just unsatisfactory and moved to the field of the administrative agency.

The provinces of this country have had to legislate in this area. They have introduced anti-discrimination legislation and human rights legislation, and implemented this legislation through administrative tribunals, with limited rights of appeal. That has been found the only effective way to deal, in this specialized area, with the problems of those who suffer from discrimination. We are building on the experience of the ten provinces and that, exactly, is why we are proposing the provisions in Bill C-25. We are proposing the setting up of an administrative tribunal; the human rights commission and its tribunals. They will operate in a specialized area, with limited rights of review or appeal under the Federal Court Act, covering questions of natural justice, jurisdiction, errors of law and decisions based on erroneous findings of fact.

I suggest, in spite of the rhetoric from members opposite, that the approach embodied in Bill C-25 is based on the experience of ten provinces and ten jurisdictions in this country.

There has been some criticism within the committee and within this debate of the provisions of Section 28. I made it clear publicly and made it specifically clear in committee that the whole of the Federal Court Act is under review, including the jurisdiction of the court and the exercise of powers by the court in line with discussions and consultations I have had with provincial attorneys general.

If, as some members suggest, Section 28 is somehow deficient, which I do not concede for the purposes of this discussion, the time to amend it is when the Federal Court Act is before this parliament, which will be the next session.

The whole purpose of the Federal Court Act was to develop a federal court and a federal court of appeal that would provide a uniform judicial supervision over all of the federal administrative tribunals. I submit it would be unwise to go against that trend and go back to the old days where we had different rights of appeal.

Mr. Woolliams: Will the minister answer a question?

Mr. Basford: When I am finished, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Woolliams: That shows he is afraid to answer the question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please! The minister said he would accept a question after he finishes his speech.

Mr. Woolliams: But this is the time to ask it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please.

Mr. Basford: It would be wrong to reverse the trend of the last six years where we have endeavoured, through the Federal Court Act and amendments to various statutes, to provide uniform, consistent, co-ordinated judicial supervision of administrative tribunals. It would be wrong to reverse that trend and begin establishing different rights of appeal for each of the different federal tribunals.

If the rights of appeal are to be changed in the Federal Court Act, they should be done in the Federal Court Act itself—applicable to all administrative tribunals.

Mr. Woolliams: Isn't that awful.

Mr. Basford: If the procedures of appeal and the rights of appeal are wrong for the human rights commission as suggested—

Mr. Woolliams: Rubbish.

Mr. Basford:—they are equally wrong for the immigrants to this country under the Immigration Act. They are equally wrong for people who have rights and needs under the transportation policies implemented by the transportation commissions. Therefore this piecemeal approach suggested by members opposite is one that is not to be recommended.

Mr. Nowlan: How many immigration appeal boards are there in Canada?

Mr. Basford: I guess the hon. member was not listening. There were 1,100 appeals.

Mr. Nowlan: How many immigration appeal boards are there?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The Minister of Justice has the floor.

Mr. Woolliams: Well, it's too bad he does.

Mr. Basford: Concern was expressed in the committee about one-man tribunals. The committee discussed and accepted a system whereby there would be an appeal from a one-man tribunal. That is a proper solution to that problem.

The employer or the claimant not liking the decision of a one-man tribunal would have two remedies. He could either appeal to a three man tribunal or exercise his right under Section 28 and appeal to the Federal Court of Appeal. This question of appeal was examined very carefully by the committee. The committee heard not only my evidence but the evidence of Dr. Tarnopolsky whose credentials are accepted by this House as well as across the country. This is a process which resembles the mechanism the provinces have followed and I commend it to the House, and this can only done by defeating this amendment.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I obviously shall not comment on what the minister has just said, but that basically was my question. My question is in two parts. The minister quoted very interesting figures of the use made of the appeal procedure under section 28 of the Federal Court Act. But cannot the minister understand that it is the very fact that there has been provincial involvement in the provincial human rights commissions—I think they have them in all the provinces, but the minister would know this better than I—but if there are ten human rights commissions in ten different provinces they would be dealing with human rights as they are recognized in those provinces. And this is why, certainly in the federal human rights commission, there should be that final right of appeal to a judicial process, the Federal Court, so that perhaps we might get some consistency in human rights legislation.

You only have one Immigration Appeal Board. You only have one Income Tax Appeal Board. You only have one Transport Commission. All of the bodies the minister mentioned which have utilized the Federal Court Act have been single administrative bodies. The minister himself admits that the different provinces have set up their own commissions. Does this not suggest that there should be at the end of the road some judicial process from the federal human rights commission to the Federal Court?

The last part of my question is this. Again using the analogy to which the minister referred, does he not see already, with what is going on in the country, the human rights commission in Quebec being overruled by a provision of Bill 1, which says in effect that Bill 1 will have priority over human rights decisions by the human rights commission of Quebec, some need for the right of appeal to a federal court?

Some hon. Member: Right on!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): That is a long question.

Mr. Woolliams: It doesn't matter. It is important.

Mr. Basford: I have some difficulty answering the question because I am not sure the hon. member understands the division of jurisdiction in the country. There are ten human rights commissions operating under different provincial statutes. There are different requirements in each of those acts, and in the various provincial laws there are rights of appeal provided, rights which are, generally, limited for the same reason that the rights in this law are limited, that is to say, because we are dealing with a specialized area. It would be totally wrong, incidentally, and an invasion of provincial jurisdictions to suggest, as the question seems to suggest, that there should be some appeal by way of the Federal Court Act from decisions of human rights commissions in the provinces.

Mr. Nowlan: I did not suggest that.

Mr. Basford: These ten provincial commissions are operating within their own jurisdictions under their own laws, many of which are different from Bill C-25 in various respects.

Whatever judicial supervision is provided over provincial commissions is provided within the laws of each of the provinces. Provision exists for judicial review of the federal commission provided for under this law and this is properly done by the Federal Court. But a decision of the Federal Court cannot and should not be used as some means of judicially supervising provincial commissions.

Mr. Nowlan: I did not suggest that.

Mr. Woolliams: I wish to thank the Minister of Justice for indicating he would accept a question. I will be brief. I ask him, to the best of his ability, having read sections 28 and 18 of the Federal Court Act, if, on a pure question of fact—I do not mean a finding of perverse fact or capricious fact—there is an appeal?

I would ask the minister a second question and he can answer both. Did he not promise in committee when I raised this question that Section 28, which has been subjected to legal scrutiny, would be amended? Knowing the weaknesses of Section 28, will the minister not come clean and say that, under the circumstances, there is no proper, legal or just appeal from this bill?

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, with regard to that question, the right of appeal on questions of fact is clearly set out in Section 28(1) of the Federal Court Act. A review may be made if the commission or tribunal bases its decision or order upon an erroneous finding of fact which it made in a perverse or capricious manner, or without regard to the material before it.

There is a whole line of cases dealing with questions of fact and how the Federal Court has exercised its jurisdiction under the section. I might refer the hon. member to Mojica v. Minister of Manpower and Immigration, (1977) 1 Federal Court, 458, and to—

Mr. Woolliams: Answer the question. Don't read off a bunch of names.

Mr. Basford: There is a whole line of cases which clearly give the legal interpretation which the Federal Court Act has given to Section 28(1)(c). I undertook in committee that the Federal Court Act, which I announced quite some time ago, would be subject to review. I did not—I want the hon. member clearly to understand this—undertake to amend Section 28. I said it was part of the review process to review Section 28.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of privilege. I must say that this bill went ahead at report stage before all the committee reports were published; I checked that very carefully. The Minister of Justice did say in committee, and left no reservation whatever, that Section 28 would be reviewed.

Mr. Basford: That is what I have just said.

Mr. Woolliams: My other point of privilege is that the Minister of Justice knows, if he knows anything, that every (a), (b) and (c) of Section 28 concerns questions of law. On a question of pure fact there is no appeal from the tribunal. We are dealing with human rights and natural justice. We have been good friends over the years, but tonight I am shocked that he would mislead or try to mislead the press and the House as Attorney General and Minister of Justice of this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member for Calgary North that that is not a question of privilege but a dispute over facts.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, the procedures which have been chosen by the Attorney General (Mr. Basford) for setting up the human rights commission seem indeed strange and extraordinarily complicated. It would have been far wiser, speaking primarily of the hierarchy for dealing with an appeal, to have either a one-man commission or more than one man, since there is provision for at least five members of the commission and at the most eight. Why go to all the trouble of appointing a tribunal? After all, the province of Ontario has had a great deal more experience in human rights codes. In 1971 it amended its human rights code, which was chapter 318 of the revised statutes of the province of Ontario, to provide specifically under new section 14d(1) the following:

● (2220)

> Any party to a hearing before a board may appeal from the decision or order of the board to the Supreme Court in accordance with the rules of court.

In effect, that is all this amendment is saying.

An hon. Member: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): There should be no tribunal. This is another blessed bureaucracy. According to Section 39, people will be chosen from a panel of prospective members, which will be established and maintained by the governor in council. Mr. Speaker, that is nothing but a panel of fat cats who are going to have the opportunity to be paid a salary to be prescribed by a bylaw of the commission. Why on earth go through the process of a tribunal, if the procedure to the Federal Court is directly from the Immigration Appeal Board, the Tax Review Board, the Canadian Transport Commission or from CRTC? Why have a tribunal set up which is to consist of three on an ad hoc basis from a panel established by the governor in council? Why have a tribunal, and then have to rely upon devious wording in the Federal Court Act at Section 28?

It is a matter of law. We have seen it in many cases, where the federal court has denied its jurisdiction because an appeal purported to be on a matter of fact. In the provincial legislation of the province of Alberta there is parallel right of appeal from the provincial human rights commission to the Supreme Court of that province. In Ontario it is an appeal de novo to a judge of the Supreme Court.

Why have this sort of practice? Why have this complicated procedure where there is some doubt? The hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) is entitled to his legal opinion as much as the Attorney General of Canada is to his. The hon.

member for Calgary North has been more successful in court than the Attorney General of Canada has been. He has the experience of many years before the courts, which is something the Attorney General has not got.

I am fully in accord with the spelling of this legislatlion of the right of appeal, not only on law, not only on mixed law and fact, but also on fact alone. One should not have to wait for some federal court which, according to the Minister of Justice, would have before it an application for leave, and that court, basing itself on the circumstances of the case, might say, "Oh, but this is just an appeal as to facts, and there lies no jurisdiction in this court to review it". Just that one potential case would be sufficient to justify this direct and unambiguous amendment, and I would so urge the House to accept it.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, if we are going to accept this proposed legislation in a serious spirit—and I think all of us in this Chamber are committed to the spirit of the legislation—I think we should do our best to see that it is effective legislation. For this reason I must raise and support the argument of the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) and reject the argument which has been advanced by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford).

As I see his point, the Minister of Justice relies upon Section 28 of the Federal Court Act. That section has had difficulty going in previous court cases, and apparently it is the subject of review as to whether it might be improved by amendment, although the minister has told us that he is not going to guarantee that any amendment will be proposed.

However, given the circumstances, if there is a question about legislation which may not achieve the purpose we want, or legislation which through an amendment, such as the one set out by the hon. member for Calgary North, would at least clearly spell out people's rights, I would say that it would be common sense to pass the amendment. If it adds surplusage to the legislation, at least its intention is in the right direction, and it does set forth something specific which is not otherwise clear at all in the law as it exists in Canada now. For that reason alone I must say that the hon. member for Calgary North has made his case, and the Minister of Justice has let the House down.

Second, I must support the argument of the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) that it would be helpful to have consistency within the legal operations of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It being 10.30 p.m., this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 10.30 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to special order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

INTRODUCTION OF NEW MEMBERS

Mr. Speaker: Hon. members I am sure will be aware that there are a number of successful candidates in recent by-elections who wish to be introduced and take their places in the House of Commons today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: It is obviously a matter of some priority. Therefore, I feel it appropriate that we move to that at once. I undertake to members that those who have motions pursuant to Standing Order 43 which cannot wait 24 hours will be recognized. I will, of course, protect the proper question period. If the ceremony takes an undue amount of time, there may be some discussion about compensating the party responsible for the motion today, if that is necessary, later in the day. Surely, that is a matter for discussion later on.

TERMS FOR ESTABLISHING COMMITTEE TO STUDY RIGHTS OF FRANCOPHONES OUTSIDE QUEBEC—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the announcement of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) on Tuesday, May 31, setting up an interdepartmental committee to study the rights of French speaking minorities outside Quebec, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That (1) the terms of reference of the interdepartmental committee be tabled in the House; (2) the interdepartmental committee be bipartisan and reflect regional Canadian interests; (3) a similar bipartisan interdepartmental committee be established to study the rights of the English-speaking and other minorities in Quebec.

[Mr. Speaker.]

Mr. Speaker: The provisions of Standing Order 43 require the unanimous consent of the House for presentation for debate of such a motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Alexander: Goodale said no on behalf of the Liberals.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

REQUEST THAT REGIONAL OFFICES BE ESTABLISHED IN TÉMISCAMINGUE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to make a motion, and I want to draw the attention of all members of the House to the wording and the significance of this motion which, of course, cannot be turned down by those concerned with the well-being of the Canadian people.

Since the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion recently visited my constituency and promised on behalf of the government to open an office of his department in my area, and since most Liberal members from Quebec had the opportunity to visit my constituency and to ascertain its needs as far as both regional development and employment are concerned, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette):

That the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard) announce immediately in the House when work will begin on this office project, how many jobs will be created and when this office will be operational.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Being open-minded under the circumstances, I ask the House whether it will give its unanimous consent to the presentation of such a motion under Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

REQUEST FOR INFORMATION ON ALLEGED TERRORIST TRAINING CAMP IN EAST GERMANY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity concerning the possible effects on our national security due to the existence at Finsterwalde, East Germany, of a training camp of 500 to 600 persons for terrorist and guerrilla warfare activities under the direction of Department 5 of the Russian KGB.

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie):

That the Prime Minister make a statement outlining all information in the possession of the government, specifically including the number of persons representing Quebec extremist elements in attendance, all action taken or that will be taken by the government on this matter, any information in the possession of the government concerning recruitment of trainees in Canada, and finally, the involvement at any time of a Cuban with the surname of Alonso, sometimes known as Camilo.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

SUGGESTION PROVISIONS RELATED TO QUEBEC BE REVISED—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to introduce a motion on a pressing and urgent matter.

Considering that the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Chapter E-2 of the Revised Statutes of Canada 1970, as amended, has proven to be inadequate; that, by its essence, it jeopardizes the minimum representation to which the people of Quebec are entitled within this Parliament; that because of the present situation Quebec must be considered as an entity not proportional but equal to the other Canadian entities; and, finally, that the number of representatives from Quebec has been constantly decreasing, again dropping from 28 to 26 per cent for the next federal general election, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Rimouski (Mr. Allard):

That Parliament order that the said Act not be enforced until new legislation is introduced in this regard.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, such motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

INQUIRY WHETHER DEVELOPMENT ASSISTANCE BUDGET ADDITIONAL TO DEBT FORGIVEN

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Srathcona): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. At the North-South Conference on International Economic Co-operation concluding now in Paris, Canada announced that it would forgive $254 million in debts owed Canada by developing countries. The net value of this concession is $35 million. Can the Prime Minister state whether this amount represents an addition to Canada's official development assistance represented in the $1.1 billion CIDA budget approved last night by the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence, or is the amount obtained by a bookkeeping transfer within CIDA so that, in effect, no fresh funds are to be expended by Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it is in addition. I do not think the hon. member should belittle the gesture. It is true the discounted value to the present is in the amount the hon. member said; but to these countries it does amount to a very substantial remission of a debt which they owe to Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AMOUNT PLEDGED TO COMMON FUND FOR COMMODITIES

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, we are not belittling the amount. We are trying to obtain the reality of Canada's relationship with the developing nations. The Canadian government statement at the conference said that the government "has pledged our proper share of the financial contributions" to a common fund for commodities, the common fund being the centerpiece of the present North-South negotiations at this time. Can the Prime Minister tell the House how much Canada has pledged to this fund and in what way this appropriation will be represented in parliament?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, no specific amount was discussed at the London summit. As the communiqué says, each country agreed to the establishment of the fund as a matter of principle and the details of it are to be worked out between north-south countries themselves and particularly at the CIEC conference. It is conceivable that when the President of the Privy Council returns he will be able to answer the hon. member more precisely.

PROPOSED PUBLICATION OF INFORMATION ON ECONOMIC RELATIONS WITH DEVELOPING COUNTRIES

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Stathcona): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the absence of a specific commitment to the common fund was one reason why the Third World countries expressed disappointment with the industrialized countries' performance at the conference. This of course reflects the great complexity of the trade, monetary and aid issues in the interdependent world. I therefore want to ask the Prime Minister if he intends to act on the recommendation of the subcommittee on international development that the Canadian government should integrate and publish all the relevant information from the various departments in Canada on our economic relations with developing countries? This itself would be an important step in promoting a worldwide flow of integrated information on relations between the rich and poor countries.

Right Hon P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to take this up with my colleague the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It is of course the government's interest and desire to make all the facts known so that the Canadian public and members of parliament may know the extent to which we are assisting the less developed countries. If it is the desire of hon. members opposite to encourage the government to spend more in that regard, we will take this under very serious consideration.

DEBT OF THIRD WORLD COUNTRIES HELD IN PRIVATE HANDS—POSSIBILITY OF CHANGE IN CONDITIONS

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Prime Minister. Of the $9 billion of debt from the Third World countries to Canada, 75 to 80 per cent is held in private hands. I should like to ask the Prime Minister if there was any discussion about lengthening the terms of maturity of private debt or of the possibility of cancellation of the interest on some of the private debt? Was there any discussion concerning the private debt situation, that is, the debt owed by Third World countries to private holders of debts in Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, there was no discussion of this at the summit conference but if my memory serves me well, there was discussion of this point at the UNCTAD Conference in Nairobi which preceded the summit conference by many months. Of course, this is a matter for very serious consideration by all countries, others more than ours. We took this decision to grant a remission of debt because our proportion was much more highly publicly held than other countries. Of course, other countries may not be able to imitate our gesture, but we hope it will serve as an example.

POSSIBILITY ASSETS IN FOREIGN COUNTRIES GIVEN PROTECTION IN RETURN FOR CANCELLATION OF DEBTS

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): A supplementary question. Could the Prime Minister tell the House whether in the course of these discussions there was any quid pro quo in relation to the cancellation of the Canadian government debt or the security of Canadian assets in foreign countries? In other words, was there any guarantee or any trade-off that by cancelling this proportion of the public debt in Canada we would have some certainty that our assets in perhaps some volatile countries would be given more protection than otherwise might be the case?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, concern was expressed about this point and some consideration was given to it but my knowledge of the situation and the announcement of the minister in Paris is that there is no quid pro quo. It is a generous gesture by Canada and Canadians, if I can put it in that sense. We feel any goodwill which will follow from it is so much the better but it is not conditional.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

DRILLING IN BEAUFORT SEA—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE REGULATIONS STRICTLY ENFORCED

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, this morning the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development issued a press release announcing that the government has authorized offshore drilling in the Beaufort Sea for the next three years. First of all, I want to protest that this is a matter that should have been announced by the minister on motions at which time members would have had an opportunity to interrogate the minister.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): This is an affront to parliament. The note of protest which the United States government sent to the Canadian government on March 15 last pointed out that last year the measures which the operators promised to put into effect to prevent oil spills were not fully implemented nor did they function properly. The United States government went on to criticize the Canadian government for not stopping repeated violations and for taking no steps whatsoever to stop the operation when deficiencies were found. In light of those acts, I want to ask the minister what assurance he can give the House that the measures which will be introduced this year to deal with the danger of oil spills will be any more effective or the regulations any more stringently enforced than they were last year?

● (1430)

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): When I answered questions in the House yesterday I said that I would make an announcement on this matter as soon as some loose ends had been tied up. I was informed this morning that that was done, and to avoid further speculation I thought I would get out the government's statement on this as soon as possible. With respect to the note from the United States, first of all, we do not accept all the allegations that were made in that note last year, but in any case we have had discussions with the United States government, and with respect to compensation and equipment we have tried to meet some of their concerns by introducing much more stringent conditions, technically, environmentally and in the socio-economic field.

DRILLING IN BEAUFORT SEA—REASON FOR ORDERING DRILLING TO CEASE TWO WEEKS BEFORE END OF SEASON

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I understand that the minister's department, in a memorandum to cabinet, said that "in order to ensure some seasonal well relief capability the drilling must cease half way through the season which, in a normal year, might be 40 days or on September 1". In light of that, I want to ask the minister whether he will explain the statement in his announcement of today in which he said that exploratory drilling will cease two weeks before the forecast closure of the Beaufort Sea operations or on September 25, whichever is earlier. I want to ask the minister why he has chosen this earlier date in view of the fact that this will not leave sufficient time in the case of an oil spill to put in a relief well and the result might well be that oil will be seeping all winter into the Beaufort Sea.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): The hon. member's information is not correct. First of all, the department does not make recommendations to cabinet—the ministers make recommendations to cabinet. Second, the advice which the department had originally given us was not for a longer period but for a shorter period. It was the ministers who made the period longer.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That figures.

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON PRESSING ENERGY NEEDS REFERRED TO BY MINISTER

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in his announcement today the minister said that "there are pressing national energy requirements to be weighed against environmental risks and concerns expressed by the Canadian native and environmental groups". I should like to ask the minister what are these pressing national energy requirements in view of the fact that this morning's paper carries a statement by Mr. Sydney Kahanoff, president of the Independent Petroleum Association, in which he says:

We are finding much more new gas than the domestic market can absorb.

What are these pressing energy requirements? They are certainly not for oil because no oil pipeline is envisaged at present and gas was found in southern Alberta in the past few years. The statement made by the president of the Independent Petroleum Association indicates at present the gas industry is talking about seeking permits to export gas, and therefore surely this is not as pressing as the minister would indicate and there is ample time to carry out the type of research that is necessary to ensure that we will not have oil spills in the Beaufort Sea.

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, the best minister to answer the question with respect to our energy requirements would be the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. This decision was participated in by several departments including the Department of the Environment, the Department of Energy, Mines and Resources and so on. As the hon. member knows, we have a need to know energy resource policy and the exploration in the Delta is not only for gas but also for oil. Also, it is for the long-term and not for the short-term. Consequently, although there may be new sources of gas that have been discovered recently or that are available, exploration is looking to the long-term, not to the short-term.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

ALLEGED PROMISE OF ASSISTANCE TO SILICATE MINE IN TÉMISCAMINGUE—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

During the last election campaign, the minister met with the officials of the silicate mine at Saint-Bruno-de-Guigues and showed interest in their project. Is he in a position today to announce the grant mentioned at the time to create about thirty jobs?

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I must say to the hon. member that a grant was never mentioned at the time. As always, he is distorting the facts. However, I arranged a meeting between these gentlemen and my departmental officials in order that they may explain their program and their project. If it is possible to provide assistance under the act, our department will gladly do so as it has already helped other business concerns in the hon. member's area.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, I want to put a supplementary question to the Prime Minister.

Does the Prime Minister know that the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion said on television during the election campaign that grants would be forthcoming only if a Liberal candidate was elected? If so, does he agree with the stand taken by his minister?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. member to send me the alleged quotations.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): With pleasure.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

DRILLING IN BEAUFORT SEA—RIGHT TO REVOKE PERMIT FOLLOWING ANNUAL REVIEW

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development who is so concerned about loose ends. The only loose end he did not tie up was to ensure that members of parliament in the Confederation Building received copies of his statement. It was only through the courtesy of his parliamentary secretary that those of us in that building saw it at 1.45 p.m. In view of the fact that the statement raises more questions than it answers, I share the concern of the spokesman for the NDP and deplore the fact that the minister refuses to make a statement on motions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jarvis: In view of the fact that the statement indicates that it is an authorization for three years subject to annual review, will the minister tell us whether it is a three year drilling permission or is it a one year drilling permission on the basis that the annual review would give to the government a unilateral right to revoke the drilling permit? In other words, if there is going to be a review each year, does the government have the right to unilaterally revoke the drilling permit for the subsequent year on the basis of the results of that annual review?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, in the first place I must apologize to the hon. member if he did not receive the statement until the hour he indicated. I gave instructions earlier this morning that it be distributed.

With respect to his principal question, we have given a three year authorization, subject to an annual review which will be a complete review by a committee in touch with the communities, which will study the technical, environmental and socio-economic conditions. If those are not lived up to completely, the government has the right to cancel the permit unilaterally. In addition to that, if we find, during the monitoring and surveillance program that we have introduced, that there is any discrepancy between the compliance and the conditions, we can order the immediate suspension of drilling at any time.

DRILLING IN BEAUFORT SEA—POSSIBILITY OF RECIPROCAL AGREEMENT WITH UNITED STATES ON COMPENSATION FOR DAMAGE

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): The last sentence of the press statement says that a further joint contingency plan has been agreed upon with the United States. Will the terms of that plan be tabled today, and does the plan include such matters as the $10 million liability bond, the proceeds of which can be used to compensate U.S. owners for environmental damage? Is the plan of a reciprocal nature so that if Canadians suffer environmental damage along the British Columbia coast from spills resulting from U.S. tankers they will be compensated from a similar bond filed by U.S. tanker owners? In other words, we have been talking about a reciprocal agreement with the United States. Is this the one referred to in the statement, and is it a two way street so that Canadian owners can be compensated for environmental damage caused by U.S. tankers as well as U.S. tankers compensated for oil spills in the Beaufort Sea?

Hon. Warren Allmand (Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): The contingency plan does deal with compensation but it was negotiated by the Department of External Affairs. Perhaps my colleague could provide us with more information on that point. Off hand, I do not recall whether it is reciprocal.

● (1440)

REQUEST FOR TABLING AGREEMENT WITH UNITED STATES ON COMPENSATION FOR DAMAGE FROM OIL SPILLS

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that the press release from the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development indicates that a contingency plan with respect to the Beaufort has been agreed upon with the United States, will the details or will the agreement itself be tabled today, and if not, will the minister take this opportunity to indicate to the House the general nature of the agreement, particularly as it pertains to compensation to owners who have suffered environmental damage? Are Canadian owners to be compensated as well as American owners?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, on such a matter rather than trying to answer orally and perhaps leaving the wrong impression, I should say to the hon. member that a note was delivered to the United States State Department today. To the best of my knowledge there is no reason why it should not be made public. If the hon. member will bear with me, I will make some inquiries and make it available to him tomorrow, if that is possible.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

MEASURES TO STIMULATE PRODUCTIVITY

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. As the index of real domestic product, which measures industrial activity in Canada, has remained stationary since the first of the year, clearly indicating the stagnation which exists in our economy, would the Prime Minister take the first opportunity on motions to outline to the House what steps he and his government intend to take to correct this situation and to get the economy moving so that we can provide the jobs our people need?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member may recall that the Minister of Finance in his budget speech and in the budget debate indicated that there were serious problems with the Canadian economy, and he indicated in the rest of his budget statement what the government was doing about it.

Mr. Hees: As the budget is one of the factors which is contributing seriously to the stagnation and stagflation which has been taking place in this country, is that the best answer the Prime Minister can think up to deal with a very important question affecting the future of this country?

SMALL BUSINESS

MEASURES TO STIMULATE TO PROVIDE EMPLOYMENT

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of State (Small Business). In light of the dismal unemployment forecast and because the small business community probably has the largest economic potential and the most employment opportunities of any other sector in our economy, could the minister advise the House what steps, if any, he has taken to utilize this potential regarding the unemployed?

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Small Business)): Mr. Speaker, I will be making further announcements in the paper which I will be presenting to the cabinet.

Mr. Alexander: Do it in the House.

Mr. Marchand: I will probably do it in the House as well. In any event, hon. members will know what I present to the cabinet after it is presented. I should point out also that a number of measures relating to small business were taken in the recent budget, and by and large these are long-term measures. We know full well—and the Minister of Finance and others have said this on many occasions—that we want the jobs created in the business community and particularly in the small business community.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, since the appointment of this minister not one positive step has been taken.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jelinek: Earlier this week during my party's opposition day on small business we enunciated in detail a policy proposal consisting of the creation of a small business act which, based on a specific definition of small business, would commit the government to creating jobs for the economy. I would like to ask the minister whether he would advise this House, in view of the absence of a government small business policy, whether he would consider implementing some of the proposals as outlined by my party, and if not, would he tell us why not?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Surely that was a matter for debate when the motion was before the House.

MANPOWER

UNEMPLOYMENT FORECAST FOR NEWFOUNDLAND—CONSULTATIONS WITH PROVINCE ON MEASURES TO PROVIDE EMPLOYMENT

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of the unemployment projections of the Department of Manpower and Immigration which were referred to in the House yesterday, which in the case of the province of Newfoundland are alarming, which show an annual unemployment rate for the last fiscal year of 14.4 per cent and which project a 17.4 per cent rate for fiscal 1978-79, by far the highest rate of any province, six percentage points over the next highest province, Prince Edward Island, I would like to ask the minister if he is prepared to look upon this as an emergency situation in the case of this province and accordingly to initiate discussions immediately with the premier of Newfoundland to see what programs, additional to existing make-work programs under Canada Works, can be worked out to try to meet or offset these very serious and quite dangerous projections?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, with a casual wave of his hand the hon. member suggested that there should be something new or in addition to what we already have. I would like to point out that on institutional and industrial training for 1977-78 we are spending $15.4 million. This involves some 6,400 workers. Under LIP the allocation for 1976-77 was $17.8 million, which resulted in the creation of some 4,700 jobs; $11.4 million is being allocated in the first phase of the Canada Works Program, and $2.4 million is to be allocated to Young Canada Works. There will be a further allocation of Canada Works funds later in the year, so we are not unaware of the situation, and as far as my own department is concerned we are doing a yeoman's service in that region.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, given the present quite disastrous situation prevailing in Newfoundland, with an unemployment rate which is near 25 per cent in actual unadjusted terms, and notwithstanding the scope and, indeed, the commendable objectives of the present make-work programs and the relatively little impact they are having on the unemployment situation, my question to the minister is a plea: will he co-ordinate the activities of the government of Canada and enter into negotiations with the government of Newfoundland with a view to having the government of Newfoundland co-ordinate its activities to come up with some immediate crash program to offset this tragic loss of productivity and human loss in real terms which these figures mean.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member himself said his question was a plea rather than a question.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

POSSIBILITY OF ASSISTING MATANE TELEVISION STATION

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State.

In view of the fact that the CBC decision to purchase private station CJBR-TV of Rimouski should in no way hinder the expansion of its Matane station and its extension to the Gaspé peninsula, could the Secretary of State ask the CBC to provide more funds to its Matane station so that it may cover important events, such as the conference given by the Minister of Communications (Mrs. Sauvé) at the Gaspé Board of Trade last week, with a better camera than a Polaroid?

[English]

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, the whole question of what arrangements are to be made in relation to Rimouski and Matane is still under consideration.

TRANSPORT

FAILURE OF OWNERS OF THE "LOWELL THOMAS EXPLORER" TO PAY WAGES TO CREW—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Has the minister's attention been brought to the situation in Montreal in which the ship, the Lowell Thomas Explorer, which is carrying cargo between Canadian ports on the seaway, which is registered under Philippine registry and which is operated by Philippine seamen, is tied up in that city by a court order because the company has failed to pay its crew members their wages for February and March, despite the fact that the company—and Canada—is a signatory to the ITF wage agreement? If the minister is aware of this, what does his department intend to do about it?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the matter was brought to my attention, and I asked that it be looked into to see if there is any action I should be taking.

Mr. Orlikow: Would the minister look into the charge that the company is applying pressure on its employees to drop their claims and threatening to repatriate them and to bring in a new crew from the Philippines?

Mr. Lang: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

HEALTH

APPLICATION OF RED CROSS TO SET UP BLOOD FRACTIONATION PLANT—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Can the minister tell the House whether at the federal-provincial meeting of deputy ministers last week a decision was made with regard to the application of the Red Cross to set up a blood fractionation plant?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the federal-provincial conference of deputy ministers never makes decisions. It is only authorized to make recommendations to the ministers who will be called upon to make a decision at the end of June.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

LACK OF NAVAL ARCHITECTS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Defence. Last evening Admiral Falls informed the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence that the navy no longer has the capacity to produce the designs for the next generation of Canadian warships since naval architects were let go due to cutbacks in defence spending. Will the minister assure the House that the $75 million worth of design work for new ships will go to Canadian naval architects and, in view of the current manpower shortage in maritime command, will the minister increase the over-all strength of maritime command. If so, to what levels?

• (1450)

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I believe two questions were asked with respect to design capacity. We believe it exists in the private sector. It was formerly "in house", but now exists almost totally in the private sector. That design capacity will be used wherever possible. The hon. member also asked a question about maritime command. We have an indicated need for additional manpower in that area, particularly in the high seas trades, and I am considering this question seriously at present.

MANPOWER

REASON FOR REFUSAL TO PUBLISH FORECASTS OF UNEMPLOYMENT LEVELS IN PROVINCES

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I direct a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration regarding his intended cover up policy which shows a complete disregard for the rights and interests of the provinces. Talking about projections and trends compiled by his department, he said yesterday that he did not intend to make it a practice to publish these figures in future, either for Quebec or the other provinces. That statement is completely unacceptable. I ask, why should the provinces not have access to this information since, after all, taxpayer dollars were used to compile it. Will the minister say why his counterparts in the provinces, particularly the six provinces in which the survey indicates the existence of a problem, should not have that information?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the kind of information the provinces want in this area, information on projections and forecasts, is available from at least 12 other agencies operating in Canada; the provinces are in the same position as we are to choosc, and to decide how much weight to give any particular piece of information. We have discovered from time to time that some projections are right, some are wrong; some are way off base, and some dead on. We have our own priorities in this regard. The provinces have their own departments. They exercise their own intelligence and draw their own conclusions.

Mr. Alexander: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister did not answer my question. I am not interested in those other 12 agencies. I am interested in the projections and trends the federal government compiled. Does the minister not know that when he covers up this information he hinders planning for social assistance? Will the minister not change his mind and share this information with his counterparts?

HISTORIC SITES

DATE WHEN GOVERNMENT WILL IMPROVE POINTE-AU-PÈRE LIGHTHOUSE

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the hon. Minister of Public Works.

Since the old Pointe-au-Père lighthouse is a tourist attraction in eastern Quebec which has been classified as an historic site as of last week, and since the lighthouse's caretaker had been instructed last year not to admit any more visitors because of the dangerous conditions existing at the entrance, can the minister tell us whether his department intends to open the lighthouse to the public in the near future, and if so, when does he think that repairs will be carried out?

[English]

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to look into the matter. I am not familiar with the situation at the lighthouse. If we have a responsibility, I will look into it and see what can be done.

AGRICULTURE

POSSIBILITY OF ESTABLISHING CHICKEN MARKETING BOARD

Mr. Pierre Bussières (Portneuf): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture.

In view of the representations made by the Quebec Farmers' Union, the Quebec Poultry Producers' Federation and other Canadian poultry producers, asking that a chicken marketing board be established, could the Minister of Agriculture inform us of his intentions or the government's regarding the possible establishment of such a marketing board?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I cannot add much to what I said yesterday. We have been discussing this question in cabinet very seriously.

IMMIGRATION

EFFECT OF PROPOSED AGREEMENT WITH PROVINCES ON SELECTION OF IMMIGRANTS

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, my question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration concerns the sharing of immigration powers between the federal government and the province of Quebec. The minister, in his reply of May 30 as reported on page 6043 of Hansard, indicated that agreement had been reached on the establishment of a joint working group to look at the options for future immigration and sharing of powers. Will that joint working group study an option providing for equal sharing of power, or what the minister prefers to call codetermination of immigration powers as between the federal and provincial governments in the selection of immigrants? If that option is accepted, would it not give veto power to any given province, in this case Quebec? I say this since section 95 of the BNA Act still gives the federal government a primary responsibility in immigration.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I preface my answer by saying we were operating under the aegis of section 95, from which the authority stems. Therefore there is no suggestion of a veto. There would be codetermination possibility with regard to a points system, or with regard possibly to a sponsorship program, or any other similar ideas which could be engendered in that particular meeting; they could emanate from ourselves or Mr. Couture's department. Recognizing the spirit of section 95, we are trying to do what is in the best interests of Canada and Quebec. We have a common interest with Quebec to increase Francophone immigration where we can.

Mr. Epp: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. When the minister answered the right hon. member for Prince Albert, was he answering in the spirit of section 95, to which he referred just now. I point out that, although that spirit exists, the federal government still retains primary responsibility. I am concerned in case one province acquires rights or powers which other provinces do not share. This could lead to the Balkanization of Canada. I ask the minister to assure the House that, no matter what is agreed to, the same immigration rules will apply in all provinces of this country.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, precisely because we do not want to see this country Balkanized, we used the phrase "the common denominator." We are operating under section 95, which gives the primary role to the federal government. Too often in the past, in setting up a points system, we have operated as though we are a unitary state. We have done this in determining which immigrants should and should not be allowed to enter this country. Some of the provinces feel they should have more say, and that is what we are attempting to do. We have distinct and unique arrangements already with Quebec under the Bienvenue-Andras agreement, and it has not led to any Balkanization of Canada. Actually, it has been an asset to Quebec, because it has increased Francophone immigration to that province.

SMALL BUSINESS

RESULTS OF MINISTER'S TRIP TO COMMUNIST COUNTRIES

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I direct my question to the Minister of State responsible for small business. I was much interested in his observation a few moments ago and his declaration that private business, small business, is most important. I ask him, what were the circumstances under which he took his recent—I do not know what to call it—safari into communist countries, the U.S.S.R. and one or two other communist countries? Did he get any ideas over there from communist leaders as to what might be done in Canada to encourage the private business, which no longer exists in communist countries?

Hon. Len Marchand (Minister of State (Small Business)): Mr. Speaker, I regret having to answer that question asked by the right hon. gentleman, whom I respect greatly; indeed, I think all of us here respect him greatly. I am a little tired of hearing innuendos from the other side about my having gone to visit communist countries.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand: It is ridiculous. I went there on a trade mission. I think hon. members opposite know full well I went on a trade mission. It happened to be a very successful trade mission.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Marchand: Mr. Speaker, my skin might be red; that has nothing to do with my political philosophy.

[Mr. Epp.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I was interested in that reply. I asked a simple question. I did not think there was any innuendo.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Listen to those leftists.

• (1500)

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, there are more leftists over there than can be found anywhere else in Canada. I asked a simple question. Did he get any ideas from those "Commies" over there as to how he might be able to encourage the attainment of that objective he has in mind of the preservation of small business in Canada? Did he get any ideas? There was no innuendo there.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Essentially that is a repetition of the previous question.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RAID BY RHODESIA INTO MOZAMBIQUE—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO AID IN PROHIBITING

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, I wish to address my question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. I am sorry I did not give him notice, but the subject matter is one with which he will be very familiar. The Secretary General of the United Nations has referred to the Rhodesian raid 60 miles into Mozambique, a neighbouring country, as a blatant disregard for the principles of the United Nations charter. The foreign secretary of the United Kingdom has told the Secretary General of the United Nations that steps are to be taken by the United Kingdom to secure the end of these aggressive acts. Will the minister advise whether the Canadian government will consult with the Secretary General of the United Nations and the United Kingdom Foreign Secretary to see what steps Canada can fit into to discourage these actions which endanger the peace of the world?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the answer is obviously yes. In addition, I may say that I share, as does the government, the views expressed by Mr. Waldheim and Dr. Owen in the United Kingdom. It is to be very much regretted that the Rhodesians have undertaken this sortie into Mozambique. We are now examining the most appropriate and effective ways in which the Canadian views can be made known. I have no doubt that our permanent mission in New York will be discussing this in the United Nations context. I will, of course, be in communication with Dr. Owen, the Foreign Secretary of the United Kingdom, to discuss the same question as to the appropriate steps for Canada to take.

GRAIN

MEETING OF WHEAT COUNCIL IN EUROPE—CANADIAN PROPOSALS FOR INTERNATIONAL WHEAT AGREEMENT

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my question is either for the Minister of Agriculture or the minister responsible for the Canadian Wheat Board. I am not sure who will be responsible for answering the question. It has to do with the upcoming wheat council talks in Europe at the end of June. Will Canada be in a position to make any substantive proposals regarding the international wheat agreement and the proposed agreement at this upcoming meeting at the end of June?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Yes, Mr. Speaker. It is our intention to put forward some positive proposals. The work that has been going on with the exporting countries has been primarily directed toward this end.

CONSULTATIONS WITH FARM ORGANIZATION ON PROPOSALS FOR INTERNATIONAL WHEAT AGREEMENT

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary to the minister responsible for the wheat board is really a two-pronged question. First, will the House of Commons have an opportunity to debate or discuss the proposals the government intends to put forward? Second, has the minister met with various farm groups and farm organizations connected with the growing and selling of cereal grain in western Canada to get their complete assurance and consultation with regard to the moves he is now proposing?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there has been a broad series of discussions over time on the kinds of principles which must be involved, but not actually in connection with the drawing up of tentative proposals. I do not foresee a debate in the House in connection with the material being put forward at this time because it is very much exploratory in its nature. However, I would be happy to discuss the matter with members of the House, in the agriculture committee in particular, at a later date to look at the matter as it goes forward.

INDUSTRY

TELEVISION—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO STEM DECLINE IN INDUSTRY

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Prime Minister were all here earlier but have left. I will pose my question to any member of the ministry who is still here. In view of the fact that the 1976 annual report of Electrohome Limited, which is Canada's major home entertainment, electronics equipment and furniture manufacturer, showed that the company sustained an $8 million loss in 1976 and in light of the fact that the number of production employees in the electronics division declined from 1,200 in 1974 to 150 at the present time, what action if any does the government propose to take to stem the decline in Canada's television industry? On May 18, as recorded at page 5819 of Hansard, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance made the statement, and I quote:

> If they will make television sets for low prices in Asian countries, why cannot we have the benefit of those television sets, provided we can do something in return, provided Canadians can find jobs worth $6, $7 or $8 an hour;

Does that indicate that the government has given up on maintaining an electronics industry in Canada?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I will see that the question is brought to the immediate attention of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR ACTION TO STOP DISPOSAL OF BREEDING EWES AS RESULT OF DROUGHT

Mr. Ken Hurlburt (Lethbridge): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Agriculture. In view of the fact there are still pockets of drought in western Canada, will the minister have one of his own staff immediately look into the situation at Pincher Creek, Alberta, to try to stop the many flocks of breeding ewes from being disposed of due to the drought?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, we received a representation about the conditions in that area. I understand that some of my officials, together with the provincial officials, are now investigating that.

INCOME TAX

DISCUSSIONS ON TREATY WITH UNITED STATES—POSSIBILITY OF CHANGE IN UNITED STATES' PROVISION FOR CONVENTIONS

Hon. Martin O'Connell (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. Will she tell the House whether in the discussions leading up to a new tax treaty between Canada and the United States the recent changes in the tax laws regarding tax deductibility for conventions held outside the United States were discussed? If not, before signing such a tax treaty between our two countries, will she consider the tax deductibility question with a view to equalizing tax treatment in both countries as recent United States moves have had immediate and adverse, although quite unintended, effects by way of the cancellation of conventions in Canada.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague for the question. It states the problem very well. I believe the result was unintended by our neighbour to the south. However, I do not want to be a prisoner by attempting to settle that particular question before signing any agreement of reciprocity between Canada and the United States. I can assure hon. members who have made strong representations with regard to tourist losses incurred as a result of current measures that I will make strong representation to my counterpart in the United States.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I hesitate to take up the time of the House, but I do so because of the seriousness and the importance of the supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration which Your Honour ruled out of order. I used the word "plea" not inadvertently; I used it to underline the importance and the urgency of the question.

I am not in any way challenging Your Honour's ruling. However, I would, with respect, like to point out to the Chair that it is possible that Your Honour, in picking on the word "plea", missed the very important interrogatory part of my question. It had to do with a suggestion to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, who I am sorry is not listening, asking if he was prepared to play a co-ordinating role in so far as federal government plans are concerned, with a view to maximizing the job-creating potential of these federal plans in the province of Newfoundland.

In other words, in addition to playing this co-ordinating role, whether he would enter into immediate discussions with the government of Newfoundland to ensure that there is co-ordination between the two levels of government; because I would point out to the House, with respect, Mr. Speaker, that we have arrived at a point in time at which this is a critical situation and one which calls for a critical and serious response. I know that the minister wanted to make a response, and I would ask Your Honour, with great respect, if you would permit him to reply to that question.

Mr. Speaker: It is often difficult to distinguish between a representation and a question, particularly when there is a combination of both elements. I may have ruled precipitously in this case. Perhaps I was influenced by the fact that the hon. member himself described it as being more of a plea than a question. However, if I missed the question, perhaps the minister could make a brief comment, should that be agreeable to him.

Mr. Cullen: As the hon. member knows, I share his concern for the unemployed in Newfoundland and I did try to catalogue some of the things that were done. In the case of the linerboard factory there was a splendid joint effort. Unfortunately, it had to take place after the industry had closed down. But we are doing what we can in that area for the unemployed.

Similarly, community employment strategies have been devised. Under the new bill we will have a director-general specifically responsible for the province from which the hon. member comes, and I expect that our people will be co-operating very closely with officials and elected representatives in that province. As to co-ordination, I think this is already taking place. We are working hard to make sure there is no overlapping, and even in connection with Canada Works projects and Young Canada Works projects we are asking the provinces to make their input so as to avoid duplication of effort.

If the bill which is presently before the committee, C-27, is passed, I expect it will be possible to free up some money there for the training program called for by the province of Newfoundland and that some of this money will also be available to the area of Cape Breton, in which case we might be able to provide a little more assistance. Anyway, we are, in fact, co-ordinating our efforts. Maybe improvements could be made and, if so, I shall be happy to consider the matter.

Mr. Yewchuk: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order to indicate my displeasure at having been interrupted prematurely in the line of questioning I wanted to pursue with the Minister of National Health and Welfare dealing with a very important aspect of Canadian life, namely, the future of Canada's biologic industry. I was able to put only one question by way of a preliminary. The key questions were to follow, and unfortunately, because of some unacceptable happenings from my point of view, I was interrupted after the first question, one which in itself was perhaps meaningless.

Mr. Speaker: I can only recall that at the end of the hon. member's first question I looked at his colleagues and saw that they were standing, while he was not. The only reason I would ever interrupt after the first question was that the hon. member was not on his feet, while his colleagues were.

Mr. Penner: Mr. Speaker, I rise very briefly on a question of privilege. During the question period the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot mentioned to the House that he had not received his copy of an announcement by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development as early as did other members of parliament. This is very regrettable and my question of privilege is related to this difficulty.

I am advised that there is in the House of Commons a central distribution system. Officials from the department brought copies for all members of the House to the central system which is in this building, and they were to be distributed from here to the other post offices which serve members of parliament. It is understandable that there might be some slight delay in getting those copies to the other buildings, but it does seem to me there is a question of privilege affecting all members if the difference in time is so great as to cause inconvenience.

All members should be treated as equally as possible and if, in the distribution of important information, some members find themselves at a disadvantage or are in some way inconvenienced, I believe their privileges have been violated. I would, therefore, ask whether it would be possible for Your Honour to inquire whether there might be a problem in this regard and, if so, whether steps could be taken to rectify it.

Mr. Speaker: It goes without saying that since the administration of the House is ultimately my responsibility, I shall ascertain whether or not these copies were delivered without undue delay; and if delivery through our distribution system was in fact in any way unduly delayed, I shall certainly report back to the House on the matter.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES READJUSTMENT ACT

REPRESENTATION AND ELECTORAL DISTRICTS READJUSTMENT ACT (QUEBEC)

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve) moved for leave to introduce Bill C-421 entitled: "An Act to readjust the representation of Quebec in the House of Commons and to readjust the electoral districts in Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Explain.

Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I decided to introduce this bill readjusting the representation of Quebec in the House of Commons first and foremost because the draft representation order prepared under the Electoral Boundaries Readjustment Act is based on the 1971 census conducted before the James Bay development added over 10,000 workers to north-west Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, my amendment is only meant to take into account this large increase in the population, so that north-west Quebec will be represented in keeping with today's reality.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

VILLENEUVE AIRPORT, ALBERTA

Question No. 1,746—Mr. Schellenberger:

1. Does the Department of Transport plan to complete its two runway development plan for the Villeneuve Airport in Alberta and, if so, on what date?

2. Will the basic amenities for the Airport be completed at the same time as the two runway development plan?

3. What is the schedule of user fees to be collected at the Airport?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): 1. The second runway for Villeneuve is planned for the 1978/79 construction season.

2. Basic amenities for this airport are expected to be installed by approximately October 1, 1977. This will include water, sewer and gas. The necessary power is available at this time. A telephone is located in the tower and the airport manager's office and the capability exists to provide telephone service to all areas as required.

TRANSPORTATION SERVICES THROUGH AND TO NEWFOUNDLAND

Question No. 1,812—Mr. Crosbie:

1. Is there an obligation on the government under the terms of union entered into between Newfoundland and Canada providing for the entry of Newfoundland into Confederation in 1949 to provide transportation services by rail through Newfoundland and by sea between Newfoundland and North Sydney and, if so, what is the nature of the obligation?

2. Did CNR apply to the Canadian Transport Commission in September 1967 for leave to discontinue passenger train service between St. John's and Port-aux-Basques and to substitute a bus service between the same points on the Trans-Canada Highway and, if so, was the application approved subject to certain conditions including that the bus service "be inaugurated and continued as long as the requirement for passenger service continues"?

3. Does the government consider CNR obligated to provide the bus passenger service forever unless a rail passenger service was again substituted and, if not, what does the government or CNR consider its obligation to be?

4. Does the government consider that bus passenger fares must not exceed rail fare levels in comparable circumstances?

[Mr. Kaplan.]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): 1. Under the British North America Act 1949 and in the Act to approve the Terms of Union of Newfoundland with Canada, the following obligations are contained with specific reference to transportation services and facilities. "31. At the date of Union, or as soon thereafter as practicable, Canada will take over the following services and will as from the date of Union relieve the Province of Newfoundland of the public costs incurred in respect of each service taken, namely, (a) the Newfoundland Railway, including steamship and other marine services. 32. (1) Canada will maintain in accordance with the traffic offering a freight and passenger steamship service between North Sydney and Port aux Basques, which, on completion of a motor highway between Corner Brook and Port aux Basques, will include suitable provision for the carriage of motor vehicles. (2) For the purpose of railway rate regulation the Island of Newfoundland will be included in the Maritime region of Canada, and through-traffic moving between North Sydney and Port aux Basques will be treated as all-rail traffic. 32. (3) All legislation of the Parliament of Canada providing for special rates on traffic moving within, into, or out of, the Maritime region will, as far as appropriate, be made applicable to the Island of Newfoundland. 33. The following public works and property of Newfoundland shall become the property of Canada when the service concerned is taken over by Canada, subject to any trusts existing in respect thereof, and to any interest other than that of Newfoundland in the same, namely, (a) the Newfoundland Railway, including rights-of-way, wharves, drydocks, and other real property, rolling stock, equipment, ships and other personal property".

2. The application was approved subject to certain conditions (see answer to part 3).

3. As part of the Terms of Union of Newfoundland with Canada, the Canadian Government was given the assets of the Newfoundland Railway and agreed to accept the public costs incurred in respect of each service taken over. Since that time, it has been the Government of Canada's position, as enunciated in Pamphlet 14, Canadian Transport Commission, judgments, orders, regulations and rulings, "that public passenger transport should be provided (by the Canadian Government) so long as there is a substantial demand for such service. Canadian National's obligation to provide service in Newfoundland is detailed in Order-in-Council P.C. 1454 passed in 1949. In part, this Order-in-Council reads "they (Canadian National) are hereby entrusted in respect of management and operation thereof to the Company on the terms in the Canadian National Railway's Act expressly specified, namely, that such management and operation shall continue during the pleasure of the Governor-in-Council". Presently, Canadian National is providing certain bus service in Newfoundland as a condition imposed upon them by the Canadian Transport Commission when Canadian National was given approval to abandon certain rail services in the Province. The requirement that the bus service "be inaugurated and continued as long as the requirement for passenger service continues" was contained in the original Order No. R-2673. This Order was rescinded by Order No. R-5185 and this condition is not contained in this latter Order.

4. The government does not have a specific policy on the relationship between bus and rail fares. Where Part III of the National Transportation Act applies, the operator of a motor vehicle undertaking must file a tariff with the Canadian Transport Commission. The Commission may disallow any tariff of tolls considered to be not compensatory and not justified by the public interest or considered to unduly take advantage of a monopoly.

TRAINING IN CONSTRUCTION INDUSTRY TRADES—NORTHWEST TERRITORIES

Question No. 1,890—Mr. Herbert:

1. What programmes exist for the training of persons in the Northwest Territories in construction industry trades?

2. How many have (a) started courses (b) sucessfully completed courses in each of the past five years?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): In so far as the Department of Indian and Northern Affairs is concerned: 1. The Hire North Project is a special programme of the Government of the Northwest Territories which is funded by the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and was established to provide training and employment opportunities on the Mackenzie Highway construction project for the indigenous people of the area. When first developed in 1972, Hire North's prime function was to undertake clearing work for the Mackenzie Highway. In the spring of 1973, the concept of Hire North was expanded to include a secondary function—an operational program aimed at training native northerners on heavy duty construction equipment for subsequent employment with contractors constructing the Mackenzie highway and other related employment.

2. (a) Figures are not available on the number of people who started training. (b) 1973-74: Approximately 30 personnel were trained to various levels of competence on road construction equipment. 1974-75: Approximately 15 operators were trained. 1975-76: An additional 30 operators were trained. 1976-77: Approximately 55 personnel were trained as heavy equipment operators.

In so far as the Department of Manpower and Immigration is concerned: 1. Training of persons in the construction industry trades in the Northwest Territories is provided through the Canada Manpower Training Programme, which includes the Institutional Training and Industrial Training components. The Institutional component involves classroom training while the Industrial component concerns employer-based training including classroom and on-the-job training. From 1971 to June 1974 the Department has administered two industrial training programmes. The Training-on-the-Job Programme and the Training-in-Industry-Programme were combined in June 1974 to form the Canada Manpower Industrial Training Programms. The attached information covers each programme separately.

VANCOUVER AIRPORT—BUS SERVICE

Question No. 1,979—Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra):

1. (a) What company is presently under contract to provide bus service from the parking lot of the Vancouver Airport to the Airport (b) who are the officers and directors of the company?

2. (a) On what date was the contract negotiated (b) what were its terms, including (i) cost (ii) length of contract (iii) number of buses in use (iv) hours of service (v) frequency of service?

3. Did the government call for tenders on the contract and, if so, what are the names of the other companies that tendered and, in each case, what were their terms?

4. (a) How many directors and officers are employed by the government to oversee the operation of the service, or in any other capacity, related to its operation (b) what are their (i) positions (ii) salaries (iii) names?

5. Does the government intend that the service be a permanent part of the operation at the Airport?

6. Is the government presently studying alternative parking facilities for the Airport?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): 1. (a) Perimeter Transportation Ltd., 4440 Cowley Crescent, Vancouver, B.C. V7B 1B8. (b) Mr. S. A. Miles, President; Mrs. Mary Miles, Secretary; Mr. Wayne Hansen, Director; Mr. Brian Kerr, Director.

2. (a) The contract was not negotiated but awarded following a public tender. The tender was called early in June 1975 and closed on July 4, 1975. Tenderers were required to bid on three separate items of payment: (i) Management and Overhead; (ii) Depreciation; (iii) Operating costs. Three companies submitted tenders; Perimeter Transportation Ltd.—$1,653,-954; Vancouver Airlines Limousine (1963) Ltd. $2,702,530; Metro Parking Ltd. $1,048,628; Metro parking subsequently withdrew its bid citing miscalculation of the depreciation. (b) (i) Total Cost $1,653,954 based on; Management and Overhead, $9,957 per month; Depreciation charge per bus $600 per month; Operation charge each bus, $8.82 per hour. The first two payment items are firm for the life of the contract. The last payment item may be adjusted annually to reflect increased fuel and labour costs. (ii) Contract term three years with provision for two, one-year renewal periods. (iii) Four buses. (iv) 5:30 am to 1:00 am (v) 5 to 7 minutes service during normal hours and increasing to 3 to 5 minute service during peak hours.

3. See Para. 2. (a).

4. The bus service is provided under a management contract. It is inherent in the terms of the contract that the contractor provide all operating personnel, superintendence and management. Involvement of airport management staff is minimal and relates to occasional directives and audit reviews to ensure contractor is meeting all terms of the contract.

5 and 6. Consideration is presently being given to the construction of a car parking structure. Act such time that a parking structure is built the need for a shuttle bus service will be eliminated.

CNR—PENSIONS

Question No. 2,022—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. How many retired employees of the Canadian National Railways are in receipt of pensions of less than $25.00 per month?

2. How many are in receipt of a pension of $25.00 per month?

3. How many are in receipt of pensions of (a) $25.01 to $29.99 per month (b) $30.00 to $39.99 per month (c) $40.00 to $49.99 per month (d) $50.00 to $59.99 per month (e) $60.00 to $69.99 per month (f) $70.00 to $79.99 per month (g) $80.00 to $89.99 per month (h) $90.00 to $99.99 per month (i) $100.00 to $124.99 per month (j) $125.00 to $149.99 per month (k) $150.00 to $199.99 per month (l) $200.00 to $299.99 per month (m) $300.00 to $399.99 per month (n) $400.00 per month and over?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The Management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1. One hundred seventy-six.

2. Four hundred four.

3. (a) 203; (b) 182; (c) 570; (d) 400; (e) 479; (f) 1,140; (g) 520; (h) 459; (i) 1,025; (j) 1,224; (k) 2,847; (l) 6,208; (m) 4,475; (n) 7,322. In a number of cases, the amounts of pension paid by Canadian National Railways do not represent the total pensions payable to employees for railway service. Pension payable by CNR to international employees (service in both Canada and the United States) relate to their service in Canada only. Such employees also receive annuities respecting eligibility for which CN has made contributions payable under the U.S. Railroad Retirement Act for the Social Security Act for service performed in the United States. For example, in the group receiving pensions under $25 a month, in 1976 there are 32 former international employees who receive U.S. Railroad Retirement or Social Security annuities in respect of CN service rendered in the United States. In addition, there are various pension agreements between CN and other companies, such as Canadian Pacific Limited, CP Telecommunications and the Ontario Northland Railway where each company issued separate cheques for its portion of the total pension. Only the pension payable by CN is in this statement. Also, since the passing of the Pension Benefits Standards Act by the Federal Government on October 1, 1967, there are 41 employees who have terminated service with CN and are receiving rather small compulsory deferred pensions for service performed only from October 1, 1967. The balance of those receiving small pensions are employees who elected Early Retirement (before age sixty-five) with reduced basic pensions ($25) and employees who had very short service and very small contributions.

PENSION PLANS

Question No. 2,025—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. How many persons are receiving pensions from private pension plans, such pensions being based on employment in Canada and what is the average pension per month received by such persons?

2. Of those indicated in the answer to Part (1), (a) how many are having their pensions escalated annually at a rate equal to the rise in the Consumer Price Index (b) how many are having their pensions escalated annually at a lesser rate (c) how many receive no annual escalation of their pensions?

3. How many persons are contributing to or are enrolled in private pension plans based on their employment in Canada?

4. Of those indicated in the answer to Part (3), (a) how many are in plans which provide, after retirement, for an annual escalation of their pensions at a rate equal to the rise in the Consumer Price Index (b) how many are in plans which provide, after retirement, for an annual escalation at a lesser rate (c) how many are in plans which provide for no escalation, after retirement, of their pensions?

5. How many persons in Canada are receiving retirement benefits from annuities, insurance plans, retirement saving plans or other schemes apart from employment-related pension plans and what is the average amount per month received by such persons from such plans?

6. Of those indicated in the answer to Part (5), (a) how many are having such benefits escalated annually at a rate equal to the rise in the Consumer Price Index (b) how many are having their benefits escalated annually at a lesser rate (c) how many receive no annual escalation of their benefits?

7. How many persons in Canada are enrolled in retirement plans of all types other than employment-related pension plans?

8. Of those indicated in the answer to Part (7), (a) how many are enrolled in plans which will provide, after the payment of benefits commences, for an annual escalation equal to the rise in the Consumer Price Index (b) how many are enrolled in plans which will provide, after the payment of benefits commences, for an annual escalation at a lesser rate (c) how many are enrolled in plans which will provide after the payment of benefits commences, for no escalation?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): In so far as the Department of National Revenue is concerned: 1, 2, 5, 6, 7 and 8. There are no departmental programs to capture this information either by analysis of documentation filed for registration purposes or through filing of special information returns.

In so far as Statistics Canada is concerned: 3. There are 3,902,498 members enrolled in private pension plans in Canada.

4. (a) The number of plans which provide, after retirement, for an annual escalation of pensions at a rate equal to the rise in the Consumer Price Index is 29. (b) The number of plans which provide, after retirement, for an annual escalation at a rate less than the Consumer Price Index is 142. (c) The number of plans which provide for no escalation after retirement is 15,454.

NOTE: This information is based on January 1, 1976 data.

PUBLIC HEALTH LAWS

Question No. 2,163—Mr. Stevens:

As of December 31 (a) 1968 (b) 1976, what was the number of federal employees engaged to enforce public health laws?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): In so far as Agriculture Canada is concerned: (a) 970; (b) 1,381. Departmental personnel devote only a portion of their time to enforce public health laws.

In so far as the Department of National Health and Welfare is concerned: (a) 237; (b) 325.

QUEEN CHARLOTTE ISLANDS—FERRY SERVICE

Question No. 2,189—Mr. Brisco:

1. What is the full one way air fare from the British Columbia mainland to the Queen Charlotte Islands?

2. What is the full return fare from the Queen Charlotte Islands to the mainland?

3. What is the estimated number of passengers per month that will use the new subsidized air fare from the Queen Charlotte Islands to the mainland, one way and return?

4. What department and/or ministry made the decision to employ the Manibou Princess to carry passengers between the mainland and the Charlottes?

5. What was the cost to the taxpayer of the ferry service provided to the Queen Charlotte Islands from the mainland prior to the removal of the ferry service and substitution by the Manibou Princess?

6. What is the estimated number of Queen Charlotte residents who will be in a position to make application to the Minister of Transport for rebates for air fare from March 1 to March 11, 1977?

7. What is the estimated cost of the Public Awareness and Information Programme to be carried out by the regional officials of the Department of Transport to acquaint Queen Charlotte Island residents with the air rebate system?

8. Other than passengers, what cargo, if any, was carried by the Manibou Princess between the Queen Charlotte Islands and the mainland and return?

9. What cargo, if any, was carried by the former ferry service to the Queen Charlotte Islands from the mainland and return?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): 1. By Trans Provincial Airlines Ltd: From Prince Rupert to Masset, $29; to Sandspit, $36; to Queen Charlotte City, $36; By North Coast Air Services: From Prince Rupert to Masset, $30.

2. Return fares are twice the above.

3. It is estimated that over the period of a year, there may be an average of 1,000 passengers travelling in each direction each month.

4. The Canadian Transport Commission in co-operation with officials of the Department of Transport.

5. It is almost impossible to calculate exactly the cost of the subsidy for the shipping service from the British Columbia mainland to the Queen Charlotte Islands, as the subsidy paid to the operator was for the operation of three vessels, two of which made calls at Queen Charlotte Island ports. One of the two called weekly at Island ports directly from Vancouver before proceeding to Prince Rupert, and then returned to Vancouver via the Islands again. The second vessel called at Masset as one port in a series during weekly voyages between Vancouver and Stewart. The third ship serviced ports on the lower B.C. coast as far north as Klemtu. The operating subsidy paid in Fiscal Year 1975/76 amounted to $3,748,500 and in 1976, from April 1st until the subsidy was terminated at the end of October, the amount was $2,186,625.

6. Departmental officials have no reliable information on which to base an estimate.

7. Five thousand dollars.

8. None.

9. Records show the following freight tonnage (combined weight and measurement tons).

Calendar Year	Mainland to Queen Charlotte Island (tons)	Queen Charlotte Island to Mainland (tons)
1973	10,238	1,598
1974	11,165.5	1,652.5
1975	10,133	1,625.5
1976 (to October 31)	10,442	1,353

FRENCH LANGUAGE TRAINING

Question No. 2,204—Mr. Schumacher:

With reference to the answer to Question No. 1,199, for each year specified what were the reasons given for (a) withdrawal (b) removal from the second language training programmes in (i) 1973, 72 French; 8 English withdrawals: 20 French removals (ii) 1974, 216 French; 46 English withdrawals: 158 French; 4 English removals (iii) 1975, 281 French; 20 English withdrawals: 270 French; 3 English removals (iv) 1976, 279 French; 25 English withdrawals: 152 French; 2 English removals?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: The Public Service Commission does not keep a record of the reasons given by students for withdrawing from language training. As a rule, it is for personal reasons such as: (i) realization by the student that the required standard would not be met within the 52 weeks allotted to training. (ii) nervous tension. (iii) age. These are the main reasons given. To know each individual reasons would require input from every department. However, in general, students withdrawing from language training are those with a low aptitude to learn a second language. To answer this question in detail would necessitate the retrieval of computer print-outs of 1,566 names, the search of individual files to determine the reason of every withdrawal or removal, and finally the preparation of tables for each year.

FRENCH NATIONALS—NEW BRUNSWICK

Question No. 2,207—Mr. Jones:

1. For each year 1966 to 1976, how many French nationals were on the staff or faculty at the University of Moncton, New Brunswick?

2. How many were paid and/or on expenses paid by the Government of France and were they considered to be doing such assignments in lieu of military service for France?

3. For the same years, how many French nationals were on staff or working at L'Evangeline newspaper, Moncton, New Brunswick and was this in addition to the equipment and monetary assistance supplied by the Government of France?

4. How many were paid by the Government of France and were they considered to be doing such assignments in lieu of military service for France?

5. To the knowledge of the government, were such nationals considered as working in a colony of France and, for this purpose, was Canada considered a colony of France?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of Manpower and Immigration and External Affairs as follows: 1. The matter of French nationals on the faculty of the University of New Brunswick is not a Federal responsibility. The Department of Manpower and Immigration is responsible for ensuring that if such persons are admitted to Canada that they meet normal immigration requirements.

2. Not available.

3. The matter of French nationals working at L'Evangeline newspaper is not a Federal responsibility. The Department of Manpower and Immigration is responsible for ensuring that if such persons are admitted to Canada that they meet normal immigration requirements.

4. Not available.

5. No.

PORT OF MONTREAL

Question No. 2,218—Mr. Forrestall:

Has money been allocated in the National Harbours Board 1977-78 Estimates for the Port of Montreal under the caption "Floating Derrick" and, if so (a) for what reason (b) is this for new equipment in addition to the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority floating derrick and various National Harbours Board and privately owned shore based cranes?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises as follows: Yes. (a) Purchase of a derrick to perform inner harbour dredging by N.H.B. employees. (b) Yes. Its purpose is to perform dredging, whereas the S.L.S.A. "Hercules" is a floating crane.

[Mr. Roberts.]

AIR SERVICE TO LINK CANADA AND ST. LUCIA, WEST INDIES

Question No. 2,302—Mr. O'Sullivan:

Has Air Canada completed its study of the possibilities of providing air service to link Canada and St. Lucia, West Indies and, if so (a) on what date (b) what were the findings and recommendations?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The Management of Air Canada advises as follows: Yes. A preliminary study. (a) Late 1975; (b) The study recommended the consideration of service to St. Lucia no earlier than 1981. However, since then, operating economics and other constraints have forced Air Canada to cut back scheduled international operations and to defer the introduction of new routes. As a result, any present recommendations concerning service to St. Lucia are subject to revision.

INTEREST RATES ON INCOME TAX REFUNDS AND PENALTIES

Question No. 2,321—Mr. O'Sullivan:

1. What were the rates of interest on payments of income tax refunds and penalties for late payments in the years 1972 to date?

2. What are the new rates of interest proposed in the new Budget?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Departments of National Revenue and Finance as follows: 1. The rate of interest of income tax was three per cent prior to May 1, 1974, and six per cent since that date. The rate of interest on late payments has been six per cent since 1972.

2. In the Budget Speech, an increase was announced in the rate of interest on both underpayments and overpayments of tax. While a specific rate was not mentioned, there is a statement in the Budget Document to the effect that starting in 1978 the rate of interest will be set by reference to the prime rate charged by the chartered banks. It is the intention to establish the rate for a year sometime before the end of the preceding year. Thus the rate of interest for 1978, to be announced before the end of this year, will depend on the prime rate later in the year. The interest rate, once established will continue in effect throughout 1978 but would be expected to change for 1979 in line with any change in the prime rate.

REVENUE ACCRUED TO NATIONAL HARBOURS BOARD FROM CAST GROUP

Question No. 2,355—Mr. Forrestall:

1. What revenue accrued to the National Harbours Board from the Cast Group from tonnage shipped over the Port of Montreal during the 12 months ending March 31, 1977?

2. What is the government's best estimate of such revenue for the same amount of tonnage for the 12 months commencing April 1, 1977?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises as follows: 1. $1,080,716.

2. $1,162,735.

LIP AND/OR CANADA WORKS PROGRAMMES ALLOCATIONS IN NEWFOUNDLAND

Question No. 2,467—Mr. Marshall:

What is the breakdown, by constituency, of the financial allocation (a) $6,250,000 in 1971-72 (b) $11,204,934 in 1972-73 (c) $8,382,294 in 1973-74 (d) $7,409,000 in 1974-75 (e) $11,114,000 in 1975-76 (f) $14,069,945 in 1976-77 under the Local Initiatives Programme and/or Canada Works Programme for the Province of Newfoundland?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): (a) and (b) Under the 1971-72, 1972-73 Local Initiatives Programme, funds were not allocated by constituency. (c), (d), (e) and (f) The amounts quoted in the question do not represent the amounts allocated in the province of Newfoundland under LIP for those years. See Appendix A for the total allocations to constituencies in the province of Newfoundland by programme year. The Canada Works Programme was not administered in 1976-77.

Allocations by constituency in Newfoundland under the 1973-74, 1974-75, 1975-76, and 1976-77 Local Initiatives Program Allocations

MOTION FOR PAPERS

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, would you be good enough to call notice of motion for the production of papers No. 86?

Economic Conditions

MANPOWER AND IMMIGRATION

COPY OF CORRESPONDENCE CONCERNING THE WITHHOLDING OF UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE BENEFITS FROM PEOPLE OVER 65

[Text]

Motion No. 86—Mr. Rodriguez:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all correspondence or papers exchanged between any level of the Department of Manpower and Immigration and any level of the Department of Justice concerning the withholding of or elimination from unemployment insurance benefits from or of people who were over age 65 or who were in receipt of dependency benefits at the time of the implementation of Bill C-69, An Act to amend the Unemployment Insurance Act, 1971, on January 1, 1976.

[Translation]

Mr. Arthur Portelance (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the correspondence and papers in question were legal opinions for the use of the Commission and are not returnable.

[English]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On behalf of my hon. friend from Nickel Belt, I ask that this motion be transferred for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate. Shall the remaining notices of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[Translation]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED LACK OF GOVERNMENT LEADERSHIP IN AFFAIRS OF STATE

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière) moved:

That this House regrets the lack of foresight and leadership of the Government in the management of State affairs, particularly in view of the fact that it deliberately permits the worsening of inflation and unemployment problems, which directly leads to a very marked deterioration of the social climate and national unity and prevents Canadians from using their vast human and economic resources to achieve their personal aspirations.

Mr. Gilles Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, as you can see, the opposition motion moved today by the hon. member for Lobtbinière (Mr. Fortin) calls the attention of the entire country to the fact that the lack of government leadership is a serious problem with many aspects which must be looked into and analysed.

When we say in our motion that the government permits the worsening of inflation and unemployment problems, it is because the results are there to see. Even though we came through by-elections, we did not come up with a solution to these problems. We were told during those by-elections that if Liberals were elected there would be no more problems! In my riding, people were a little more realistic. They realized that they did not need any Liberal members in the House but rather representatives who can stand up and point out to the government that it does not do what needs to be done to resolve the problems.

We had the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard) in my riding going from one village to another and saying to people that they were the ones who would tell the government on the 24th whether it was going to invest money in their riding. We know quite well that there are problems of unemployment, of lack of industries in my riding. So this guy comes on TV—and he is not just anybody but a government administrator—to tell the population of Témiscamingue: You are going to tell us on the 24th whether or not we should look after problems in your area. And the same thing was repeated in other regions throughout the province of Quebec and the province of Prince Edward Island. We cannot stand still for that sort of thing. It is not through economic blackmail by a government minister that we are going to resolve problems but by bringing the proper solutions to the proper places.

People have been asking for grants to small businesses. Instead of doing what the government has done for a number of years, subsidizing big business, why not take those same amounts and give them to small businesses in remote areas, so that people can work in their localities and not be forced to go away, as many are in the province of Quebec now and in other provinces. Grants are needed, and rather than trying to reinforce the economy, the government has tried by all means to minimize and destroy our production.

Last year in June, farmers were here on Parliament Hill to complain about the reduction in dairy production quotas. They were told then: you farmers have to reduce your income by 20 or 30 per cent because you produce too much powdered milk. In fact, what do we need in Canada? Milk butterfat. If there is a surplus of powder milk, let us give it to underdeveloped countries. Let our farmers produce what they can produce, and then we will allow those people to live a decent life on their farms and their sons to continue the work they have done. With its legislation, the government has compressed the potential of farmers, reduced their productivity, often through negative incentives, and discouraged the sons from following in their fathers' footsteps. We had evidence of this again in June of last year. We saw the government authorize excessive imports, to the prejudice of Canadian producers. That's the government's position! And when there is a by-election, it sends ministers such as the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to tell the people that if they vote for the government, the government will solve all their problems. In fact, the quotas should be out by now, but the farmers have not yet received them.

We are aware that there are 1,400,000 unemployed, but instead of providing them with a guaranteed annual income, as we have often suggested, to help them seek employment and increase their income with something other than unemployment insurance benefits, the government introduces a new bill to reduce further the income of the unemployed, a way of telling them to leave these benefits alone and get a job, when in fact there are no jobs. This is an example of the attitude of the present government, which is not interested in finding a solution to our problems, but instead, as is said in the motion, and I quote:

> . . . which leads directly to a deterioration of the social climate and national unity . . .

No, they prefer to resort to economic blackmail in the province of Quebec and in other provinces. They would rather have 1,400,000 unemployed and force them to live on unemployment insurance, so that they can lay all the blame on local governments or on the government of the province of Quebec and say to them: "This provincial administration is no good, there are more people on welfare in this province then in any other part of the country. " Actually it is the federal government which is the cause of the problem. It should find ways, if not to create jobs, at least to provide the unemployed with a guaranteed income, an allowance which would help them through.

They talk of inflation, they talk of unemployment. But what has been changed by the anti-inflation controls? Absolutely nothing. The price of sugar is up, the price of coffee is up and gas is going to increase once more and they come and tell us: "We have done a tremendous job there. The government has solved the problem there. And again during the last by-election campaign they have told people the same old story. Meanwhile they allowed the multinationals to increase their prices and their production and, at the same time, they reduced consumers' purchasing power through indirect tax increases, and through chronic unemployment across Canada, which means people do not have enough money to pay for the goods which are being produced. And this goes on and on. Now they say: There is nothing we can do, as they said to farmers in June of last year, there is nothing we can do, we cannot do more. It is strange that those same politicians, come elections time, did not hide behind a cordon of police to meet farmers and producers; but when farmers and producers come down here to meet their representatives in the House of Commons, then the minister and the whole gang remain behind a cordon of police to be sure they will not have to face them. We have a provocative government, and they try by all means, not to settle problems but to throw all the blame for their administrative inability at the provinces, the municipalities, and individuals rather than really govern and find and implement solutions to our problems.

When we look at the government's mode of financing, and when we have been saying for so many years—and I am not the first one to say so—to the government that it is inconsistent to pay for government sponsored services for the benefit of the whole population, at a high rate of interest when in return we have to tax people two, three, four or five time their value before we pay off the interest on that very same thing.

Let me give you one more example: the construction of the Champlain bridge in Montreal, which is a public utility, cost $54 million. The debt still amounts to $52 million, plus $24 million in accrued interests. After using it for 15 years, we still have to pay 25 cents toll and moreover, this bridge still costs $54 million. We, smarties, now owe $76 million on this bridge, because of this government's policies. This is the kind of administration which kills initiative and drive in this country. As for the Jacques-Cartier bridge, it has been going on for even longer. It is even funnier. It cost $24 million to build in 1930. After paying $20 million in interest since 1930, which is 47 years ago, we still owe $21 million on it.

And then we are told that inflation comes from overseas, that foreign countries export their inflation to Canada. We are creating it ourselves through the present policies of the government. They create inflation. And because of this, people do not have the purchasing power which is necessary to buy goods and services. We are forced to curtail the payroll or employment ceases because we cannot afford to go on, we then have the jobless. And because of these jobless people, we or the government put forward a new piece of legislation to fight unemployment and say that we have solved the problem, putting the blame, in a spirit of confrontation, on the provinces, and particularly on the province of Quebec, for their inability to create jobs. And this is what is happening, at the moment we have 1.4 million unemployed. And then we tell job hunters to make at least three contracts a week. That is no joke! How much does this amount to? Three millions; four by three make twelve. That makes 4,200,000 people a week in search of a job while industries keep on closing their doors.

An hon. Member: That is a lot of gas!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Right, and the price of gas is rising too. So they introduce unemployment insurance legislation forcing people back on the labour market to find some of those 4,200,000 jobs which do even exist; if they get no unemployment insurance benefits, it is obvious that they will have to go on welfare. Then the government will wash its hands of it, saying that it depends on the provinces, especially in Quebec which metes out social welfare, so it depends on them. We have no unemployed, just people on welfare. For the government, that is the solution to the problem.

An hon. Member: The parade of the Holy Innocents!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Exactly! We saw the parade of Holy Innocents in the riding of Témiscamingue. It was not the Holy Innocents but the seven innocents: seven ministers, six Liberal members from Quebec, with their secretaries—what a farce!—going from one village to the other trying to convince the people that all their problems had been solved. And, as the Minister for Regional Economic Expansion said: If you don't vote for us on the 24th, you can forget about your grants. Now that is how bright the government is; and a minister who claims to be competent, who claims he wants to solve the problems; and members such as the hon. member for Beauce (Mr. Caron), a fellow who has never risen in the House to say anything, except perhaps to chase the flies around and who, in the riding of Témiscamingue, tried to tell the people and the farmers that their problems would be solved if they voted Liberal, when in his own riding the farmers' quotas were reduced last year and that, when the Grits are in power. The same goes for the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Tessier); and the hon. member for Frontenac (Mr. Corriveau); we saw them going up and down sidewalks one after the other, greeting everyone. Why did they, who were in power, not solve the problem for the people in their riding? No, they prefer to resort to economic blackmail and discriminatory language against a segment of the population. That is the attitude of this government. We suggest that such an attitude goes against national unity; people are getting fed up with those tactics, fed up seeing the government playing small politics. I call that backyard politics where people try to exert pressure and tell constituents: Well, if you help us, we'll help you. The money that the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce distribute or set aside for any project across the country, not only in Témiscamingue but across Quebec, that is not Liberal money, it is money which the government first took out of people's pockets, and I do not accept that a minister or a government should blackmail a riding by saying: If you do not vote for us, you are not going to get grants. A funny thing in Témiscamingue, most people who pay taxes are Social Crediters because during the last election they still had a Social Credit member of parliament; people will continue to pay taxes after May 24th and most of them are still Social Crediters. That money is no more Social Credit money than it is Liberal money, it is Canadian money that we, the taxpayers, invest in a government, and we ask the government to meet our needs. Ridings like Témiscamingue, as most Quebec ridings, need investments in small business, not in multinationals, not in imports. For example, imports have destroyed Canada's footwear industry. And they say we have people unemployed. A whole gang of people used to work in the footwear industry; because of imports, those industries had to close down, and they say we have unemployed people. Those people no longer have jobs. They have destroyed or are about to kill the rest of the textile industry in the province of Quebec because they allow massive imports of foreign products. They say: Well, yes, but the international market—that's right, let us cater to the international market and never mind starving Canadians, that is the government position. What our party favours is to help small business, to help people. I did not resort to economic blackmail during the last election campaign. I asked some individuals: What can you do in your area, in your village, in your parish to help create employment? A lot of projects. During the last campaign we found 12 projects, a tannery, for instance. Earlier in a question to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard) I mentioned a silica mine at Saint-Bruno-de-Guigues, a furniture factory, other industries related to hunting, fishing and tourism. Twelve such projects have been created where people are interested in employee participation in the business, not as slaves, but as direct participants in the company. People are ready to get to work, but once again the government must invest money or consider the matter but as far as we are concerned we are ready to go with these people and meet the public servants, meet the ministers if necessary, and make them realize the merit of the requests presented by Canadians who want to build their country in spite of this government which is now trying to destroy small business. With these people, we shall succeed in developing and implementing these projects, and if sometimes we have to twist the arm of the ministers we shall do so. The government has invested $13 million in the DASH-7 plane. Our own Canadian companies, Air Canada and Canadian Pacific, are not even interested in purchasing this plane. Yet money has been invested in this venture. It would have been far better to invest these millions in small local businesses to enable people to make a living in their own community. It is less costly for them to live in their own communities than to have to travel across the country to find work in the Yukon and in the Northwest Territories, or for those who live in Quebec, at James Bay. People want to work at projects in their communities. This is why we ask the government to reinvest the money taken in taxes, in the constituencies so that people can work in their own area. This is the course of action we want to see followed. This is why we criticize the government for its lack of leadership and its lack of interest concerning the promotion of Canadian projects. The government is more interested in playing the great game of politics with other countries. It then tells the Canadian people to stop producing.

Earlier I mentioned the farmers. They are asked, for far-fetched reasons at that, to reduce their production by 20 or 30 per cent, that is to reduce their income by 20 or 30 per cent. That is what this government asked the farmers last year. It did not even ask them, it forced them to do so. The farmers came to Ottawa to complain and the government said that there was nothing to be done. It justified its action by saying: There is a milk powder surplus. When do we hear in Canada companies like CIP, Abitibi Paper and others say that they should cut their production because there are too many branches on a tree. It is a nonsense! When it is a big corporation it can do whatever it wants but in the case of individuals who fight to build their country it is a different matter; their potential, their revenue is reduced and they have to go on unemployment. Once they are unemployed, their allowances are cut and then they have to go on welfare.

Mr. Marceau: You are late, you are one year behind. Talk about this year.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): The quotas for this year are not yet known. They are late again as they have always been since you are in power. You did not come up with any answer, you are still taxing and overtaxing people and investing in the financing sector instead of putting money in small business. Instead of using that money as an investment to produce something, you pay exorbitant interest rates. This is what you have done.

I referred to Champlain. I referred to the Jacques-Cartier bridge. I could mention buildings which are presently under construction. It is the same type of mismanagement. You say things were like that a year ago but this year you continue the same type of mismanagement which sparks the inflationary spiral. What should be changed in the present government is that we should stop financing federal, provincial or municipal administrations through interest free loans. We do it indirectly for other countries so we could do it at home. This way, we shall solve our inflation problem.

Mr. Marceau: Oh!

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): You will cope with unemployment when you start investing money in small business. There is unemployment in your area as there is in ours. You even have more of it. It is not because you are in power that there is less unemployment in your riding. Unemployment is higher in your area, in the Lapointe riding. Yet your constituents voted for a government member and they have unemployment and inflation as we do. But there is a difference. In Témiscamingue, people have awakened and they are not going to be fooled by two-bit politicians and their stories.

Generally speaking, this prevents Canadians from using their vast human and economical resources. That is precisely what the government is doing. It is simply destroying individual initiative. People are being forced out of the work force by various laws. At present, under the income tax and the unemployment insurance regulations, if someone wants to hire a carpenter to work at home, simply because one is not a contractor, it cannot be done. A restriction has been set. The chap must work for someone, so he can come and work at your place, but by so doing he forfeits his unemployment insurance stamps. In this way, they are making sure he is not going to work, and then the government can say: the unemployed are just lazy people who do not want to work. Well, in fact, the government is making sure that if they ever find work, they will be penalized.

Mr. Marceau: Who said the workers are lazy?

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): The hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Marceau)!

Mr. Marceau: I never said that.

Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Marceau) on a point of order.

Mr. Marceau: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) has just made a very serious accusation alleging that I said the workers were lazy. I demand that he withdraw his remarks because I have never made such a statement, for I know that those who are now out of work do their best to find a job. I have never made such a thing. I therefore ask him to take those words back because I have never made such a statement, as I feel much sympathy for people out of work.

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): Mr. Speaker, it is not sympathy that is needed but jobs, when the hon. member will start working at it, he will create jobs, and then he will not have the problem he has in his own riding which also exists everywhere else in Canada.

Use the vast human resources—

Mr. Marceau: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Caouette (Témiscamingue): The hon. member will have an opportunity to speak later on. His time has not come yet. Let him listen. Some would be better to listen more often instead of burbling.

Let us use our vast human resources! As I said earlier, they try to destroy individual initiative, to penalize people by every available means; therefore, it is about time to move into a new direction. We can still hope since there will be a federal election within 10, 12, 15 or 18 months, that the government will finally decide, after announcing it day after day, month after month, to remove those anti-inflation measures which have been a real failure. It is to be hoped as well that before the next election, the government will finally inject some funds into small business. At that time we shall continue our work, namely to get the people to understand that they should not expect too much from this government, that Canadians themselves should prepare projects, work with a view to create jobs at home, and then, the government will have no choice but to follow suit. This is what we did during the election campaign and this is the kind of work we want to pursue, to get people to understand that we are living in a democracy and not in a red dictatorship, that we are working under a democratic system and that together, we, the citizens, are able to develop projects, to create employment in this country, and then, the government will have to follow suit.

Mr. Speaker, this is about all I had to say about this motion. There are two main points, however, one which shows the inefficiency of this government and the other one which proves there are solutions to our problems. It is a pity, that this government does not want to accept our solutions, that he chooses confrontation rather than trying to solve our problems. It is a pity, but nevertheless, we still continue to work with the people to try to convince this government which will, during the coming election campaign as I said, be able to show more recognition towards workers, those people who want to work in their country instead of being unemployed because of ill-advised and ill-oriented policies such as those this government has been developing up to now.

[English]

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I am honoured to rise and support this motion moved by the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette). As far as I am concerned, the government has already proved that the motion is 100 per cent correct. It reads as follows:

Economic Conditions

That this House regrets the lack of foresight and leadership of the government in the management of state affairs, particularly in view of the fact that it deliberately permits the worsening of inflation and unemployment problems—

That part of the motion has been proved by the answers given to questions put in this House in the last day or two. The government has admitted it has adopted a deliberate policy to permit inflation and unemployment to worsen. Its very lack of action proves this. The motion continues:

—Which directly leads to a very marked deterioration of the social climate and national unity and prevents Canadians from using their vast human and economic resources to achieve their personal aspirations.

The motion is 100 per cent correct, and that is why I am proud to support it. First of all, Mr. Speaker, I have to apologize to my confrères in the Social Credit party because I cannot address the House in French. I never lived in an area where French was used and therefore was not able to retain the ability to speak French after my high school education. Having lived in a place where the language is 99 per cent English, I am afraid I cannot converse in French in this House. Although I may not be able to speak French, however, I can understand the aspirations and motives that lie behind this motion. I believe I can understand what agitates many of the people who live in Quebec today, although I do not speak their language.

Questions were asked in the House yesterday by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander) of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald), as reported at page 6102 of Hansard. The hon. member asked the Minister of Finance what steps he was going to take in view of the unemployment figures that had been revealed by the leader of the NDP on Monday and the projections by the Department of Manpower and Immigration. The hon. member asked the minister whether he was content to stand pat, or what action he was going to take; and the minister answered:

As I indicated in my budget, we did anticipate the difficulty of reducing the rate of unemployment in Canada over the next several years.

He went on to allege that they were going to give a little stimulus by spending more money and by putting more money into the programs of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. So it is quite evident that the minister knew, when he brought down his budget, that unemployment rates—as forecast—will keep increasing for the next several years, and he will do nothing about it.

Then the hon. member for Hamilton West asked the minister what specific measure he intended to introduce in the near future to alleviate this serious situation. The answer which came from the bolshy Minister of Finance, who was like a bolshy for two or three years up to this year because he had no regard whatsoever for the private sector and in his view it was only the great Liberal government that could pull Canada through the following:

We have taken the position that the best prospect for employment in Canada, both on the short-term basis and over a longer run, is through further stimulation in the private sector.

What a turnabout for the Minister of Finance in the last two years! He thought he and his party had all the answers. Now he says it is up to private business to give us the solutions. The government has thrown up its hands; it can do nothing; it will allow one million Canadians to stay unemployed for the next two years. It is an admission of moral and political bankruptcy by the government. I say: on to the barricades!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I say: On to the electoral barricades so we can give the people of Canada a chance to dump this government before they leave us in stagnation any longer.

This motion mentions national unity. Hon. gentlemen opposite think that the national unity issue will allow them to pull the wool over the eyes of the Canadian voters. No matter how many are unemployed, no matter how many suffer from inflation, no matter how the economy stagnates in Quebec and in the Atlantic provinces, they think they can pull through anything. Their policy is to out-redneck the rednecks in the nine provinces and say to the people of Quebec, "We are the only alternative to what you have in Quebec". They think they will take all the alleys home with them on the national unity issue.

I say it is a scurvy policy they have adopted, one that will not work. Over the next two or three months these issues have to be discussed in Canada. The Liberal government believes that the national unity issue is a security blanket for the Liberal party. Last year separatism was dead. This year, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) is glad to have the ghost of separatism arisen in the province of Quebec with which to wrestle. Mr. Speaker, if René Lévesque did not exist, Keith Davey would have invented him.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: He would have had to invent him, because that is the only hope the hon. gentlemen have of succeeding in a general election. Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to make one more reference to Hansard of Monday, May 30, when the leader of the NDP brought forward the unemployment figures, which were kept hidden by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen), and the forecast for the next two years. He put the question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, who is in the chamber today. There is one thing I will say about him, and that is that at least he is in the chamber a good deal of the time and has some regard for the House, although it may be because there have been a lot of debates regarding his department this year. But he does come to the House often. One of the sorriest things I have seen since I came to Ottawa last November is the general irrelevancy of the House. About that I will speak at another time.

The minister was asked what specific programs he will establish to do something about the alarming situation which his department forecast. The hon. gentleman's answer was that he is doing all he can, that the Minister of Finance has introduced a budget to try to increase export trade, and that there are other projects to deal with the situation in so far as the government is able to cope with it. The answer, Mr. Speaker, is that the government is not able to cope with the situation. If the hon. gentleman is asked what he is doing, and he says they are doing all they can in so far as they can cope, then the answer is to get them out because they cannot cope.

There is raging unemployment in the country. The hon. gentleman's own figures—which he has kept hidden and secret from the provinces, from the opposition, from the members of his own caucus and which were probably hidden from the minister because his officials did not want to bother him with such onerous problems—show for the province of Newfoundland, my own province, an unemployment rate of 16.4 per cent for 1977-78, rising to 17.4 per cent next year. In P.E.I. the unemployment rate will be over 10 per cent in the next two years. In New Brunswick it will be over 11 per cent; in Nova Scotia, 10.4 per cent and 10.8 per cent, rising to 11.3 per cent; in Quebec it was 9 per cent last year, 9.4 per cent in the present year, and it will be 9.8 per cent next year. Soon Quebec will join the rest of us in the Atlantic provinces with an unemployment rate of over 10 per cent.

Hon. gentlemen opposite stay in government because they have given up trying to cope with the unemployment problem and the economic situation. All they want to cope with is the spurious issue of so-called national unity to which they say only they have the solution. The people of Canada want a government that will cope with more than so-called national unity. National unity has been weakened considerably by the lack of economic policies of this government, by the breakdown of the economy, by the government's failure to bring forward programs. It is true that Canada Works and Young Canada Works are doing some good, but these are makeshift programs.

It is interesting to note, when mismanagement became really bad with the Liberal government opposite, that that government has been in office since 1963. If we look at the document tabled by the Minister of Finance entitled "Economic Review, May, 1977", we see them condemned in their own pallid review. This document is as tastelessly written as possible so that no one will read it and see the awful facts of our economic situation. Their own document shows, at page 10, what has happened to prices and inflation since 1971.

In 1971 the CPI went up to 2.8 per cent, and in 1972 to 4.8 per cent. Then the hon. gentlemen opposite were returned as a minority government and they just gave up all attempts to control inflation. They wanted to stay in power. They had the well known Liberal disease of staying in power above anything else. In 1973 the inflation rate went up to 7.6 per cent, and in 1974 they gave up any attempt to do anything, but stay in power by spending, at which time it went up to 10.9 per cent. In 1975 it was 10.8 per cent. After the election in 1974 they introduced a program which they have campaigned against, the program of wage and price controls. They are doing anything just to stay in power. The Minister of Finance brought down a budget that does not have as much meat in it as one McDonald's hamburger. That one hamburger has more meat and sustenance for the unemployed of this country than does Macdonald's budget.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: That is the hon. gentleman who answered some questions yesterday and said they had to leave it to private enterprise. The same minister, in his own document to which I just referred, at page 68 shows the following new capital expenditures, by region, for 1970 to 1975. In the Atlantic region, the new capital expenditures increased to 12.2 per cent in 1970 to 1975. Then this figure went down to 8.5 per cent, and then to 3.3 per cent in 1976. In Quebec it went from 21.8 per cent in the period 1970 to 1975, up to 24 per cent, and in 1976 it went down to 2.9 per cent. That was before the bogey-man was elected on November 15. The bogey-man was only in power in Quebec 1½ months in 1976. Under the economic policies of this government the figure for new capital expenditure in Quebec went from 24 per cent in 1975 to 2.9 per cent in 1976.

• (1600)

There was also a decline in Ontario. On the prairies there was an increase, presumably because of the good governments they have on the prairies and because of their economic conditions. In B.C. the figure went up slightly. That is the record of this government which talks about national unity. That is what this government has done for Quebec.

Mrs. Holt: What would you do?

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. lady opposite can speak in a few minutes, if she dares, and I do not doubt that she would dare because she has a lot to say.

Mrs. Holt: What I have to say is more valid than what you have to say.

Mr. Crosbie: That is a question of judgment.

Mrs. Holt: You wouldn't know what judgment is.

Mr. Crosbie: What is causing the so-called national crisis is the lack of success of the Liberal party and the Liberal government since 1963 and their policies and attitudes here in Ottawa as well as the failure of the Bourassa government in Quebec. Bourassa was installed by the federal Liberals to lead their party in Quebec, but he failed, they failed and their policies failed, and that is why we have a unity crisis.

The Liberal party has been in power in Canada since 1935, with the exception of five glorious years under the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). The Prime Minister has been in power for nine years. He came to power promising that he had the solutions to Canada's problems. He said that bilingualism was going to solve the unity problem and the Quebec problem. The Department of Regional Economic Expansion was going to overcome regional disparity—and that has been an abject failure. We are asked to keep the right hon. gentleman in office to continue this record of failure for the next five years. I say, let us get through the barricades; let us put it to the test. The policy of bilingualism whereby a person should be able to speak French or English anywhere he goes in Canada has not been a success. It has not done away with the problem of separatism. What are the real causes of the discontent in Quebec, in Newfoundland and in Atlantic Canada generally? First, the arrogance of the government of Canada in its federal-provincial relations and the way it treats the provinces.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) has the floor, and I suggest hon. members listen.

Mr. Crosbie: People in Quebec feel that their culture and their racial survival is in danger. The rest of us believe we can survive no matter how arrogant the government in Ottawa is and no matter how much it centralizes or how it conducts federal-provincial relations. However, in Quebec the people feel that their cultural and racial identity is threatened because of this move of power to the centre. That is one cause of national disunity. The second main cause is the unparallelled mismanagement of the economy, the inflation we suffer from, the unemployment we have, and the swollen government structure which swallows up so much of our national wealth. No wonder there is disaffection in Quebec. It is everywhere in this country, but added to this disaffection in Quebec is a feeling of historic injustice which many feel they have suffered for the last 100 years. That is what is exasperating this situation.

What other causes are there for this national unity problem? The government which is now in power is so arrogant that it cares not what the public thinks of the actions it takes in its administration. We had proof of that the other day when a minister of the Crown took a jet to travel from Ottawa to St. John's, Newfoundland, to deliver a cheque to the Canada Summer Games committee. That committee was in this very capital two weeks before. That cheque could have been sent by registered mail for 20 cents. However, it cost the taxpayers of Canada $3,000 or $4,000 to have it delivered to St. John's so that that minister could have his picture in the newspaper in St. John's showing him handing over the cheque to the Canada Summer Games committee. Any city would be entitled to that money if it were staging the Canada Summer Games. Things like that cause discontent. That is an arrogant misuse of power.

Then the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) got into a jet at Torbay airport and flew to the Burin peninsula to fly about his district and to make visits. I wonder if the Liberal party paid for that. That same minister refuses to answer questions tabled in this House about his trip to Newfoundland in August and September of last year. That minister reminds me of the story of the emperor's new clothes. He is going to be left without a stitch before the government opposite is finished with him. The Prime Minister has taken all Francophone affairs away from him and given them to the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer). CIDA is the responsibility of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen). In another six months the Secretary of State for External Affairs will have nothing left. Perhaps he will become the minister in charge of St. Pierre and Miquelon.

This government believes it has been rescued by an issue. It found that separatism was not dead, as stated by the Prime Minister, but that it is alive and apparently doing well in Quebec. The government feels this issue will pull it out of the hurdle and that people will overlook the other things which have affected them over the last five years of Liberal mismanagement. Let us put it to the test. I say, call an election tomorrow. Let us get the show on the road and find out whether the people of Canada are that gullible.

I would like to use Newfoundland as an example of our poor economic situation, because the figures for Newfoundland are worse than the figures for anywhere else in this country. They are bad enough, God knows, elsewhere. However, in May there were 17,789 construction workers unemployed. These figures were given to us by the minister's department. There were 11,442 labourers, 111 concrete finishers, 3,925 carpenters, 604 electricians, 91 boiler-makers and 37 plasterers unemployed. The construction industry is almost dormant in Newfoundland. The provincial government there cannot borrow any more. It is doing all it can, as confirmed by the Economic Council of Canada in its study "Living Together", a study of regional disparities. In that study the Economic Council says that the one province in Canada which should not try to increase aggregate demand when necessary by borrowing more is Newfoundland.

What is our great federal government doing to help in that traumatic situation? The unemployment rate in Newfoundland is 19.2 per cent actual unemployment, 16.8 per cent adjusted. Is there a special program under way, is there some special effort to help these unemployed Newfoundlanders, or are the Newfoundlanders to be considered as some kind of different breed or outer breed to be allowed to wallow in their unemployment for the next two years while mainlanders laugh up their sleeves about it and think it is comical to see those poor old Newfies unemployed? Is that the attitude?

The premier of Newfoundland wrote to the Prime Minister on October 18, 1976, describing the situation. The premier outlined what the Newfoundland government was doing and he described the problems. The Prime Minister was asked to introduce some special programs to help Newfoundland. There has not been one special program. That is the answer to the call for help which went out from the government of Newfoundland. There has been neglect. Now we see from the minister's figures that we are supposed to tolerate this for another two years without any improvement or any attempt to bring about an improvement.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent to continue?

[Mr. Crosbie.]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I will try to conclude briefly. I know there are many others who wish to speak. I do not want to be too parochial, so I will refer to the situation in the Atlantic region as described in an APEC report on Saturday. The economy of the Atlantic region is unable to absorb a bigger work force or substantially raise production. It was unable to do that in 1976, and we are slipping through 1977 without the prospect of rapid economic development. The report shows that in the whole Atlantic region the seasonally adjusted unemployment rate was 13.3 per cent in March of this year and 10.5 per cent a year earlier. The unadjusted figure this year is 15.2 per cent, and it was 11.1 per cent last year. The labour force has grown to 842,000 from 818,000, with the number of unemployed being 113,000 in the Atlantic region. It is pointed out that there is a surplus of office space in the region, which shows that there is not going to be much new construction.

• (1610)

Housing starts are down. That condition will not change and provincial government spending will not increase because the province cannot spend more. We are to depend, hopefully, on export markets in the U.S. Mr. Speaker, the Atlantic region is in great trouble economically. No wonder I support the motion moved by the hon. member for Temiscamingue. The economic ills of Quebec are almost as bad as those of the Atlantic provinces.

We have the right to ask the government what it will do. We do not need to be told that the Minister of Finance's budget was the answer. It was not the answer. The government would have answered our condition if it had made a real attempt to improve conditions in eastern Canada. It could have done it with tax write-offs, at least more generous tax write-offs than those suggested, with a phasing out of the federal sales tax, with a reduction of corporate taxes even to zero in the underdeveloped regions of this country like the Atlantic provinces. This would have provided some incentive for business to move to the area. The government could have introduced even a 100 per cent tax credit to answer the needs of the area. A number of measures could have been taken if the government had been truly concerned about the problem. The government feels it can use the national unity issue to stay in power, and it will not move to meet the real economic needs of Quebec and the Atlantic provinces. That is shabby, too shabby for words. We are in a Liberal economic bog. They are not prepared to put ground under our feet so that we can step out of the bog.

In conclusion, I say we need a new budget to stimulate the economy in eastern Canada. We want more assistance to overcome unemployment, more concrete measures to stimulate private investment, the removal of controls which are discouraging the private investment sector, better co-ordination to overcome regional disparities, and a change of government.

Mr. Paproski: Hear, hear! They don't have the guts to pull the plug.

Mr. Crosbie: That's what we and the Canadian people want. The Liberal government's policy is to coast on the gut issues of mismanagement of the economy, unemployment, inflation and controls, while stepping on the pedal of national unity concerning Canada. I say we need new actors on the federal scene, new people sitting on your right-hand side, Mr. Speaker. Led by the hon. member for Rocky Mountain (Mr. Clark), we need a new group to take over the government of Canada. It would deal with the national unity issue on a proper foundation. We would see conciliation, not confrontation. We would see a real desire to solve our problems, not bluff. We would see not confrontation, which we see every week when one side slams the other, but serious discussions and a getting down to consideration of how we can keep Canada together and keep Canadians working so that they can live decent lives, feel they are wanted and needed, feel their lives are not useless, see they can do something and put their talents to it.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the motion. I am not surprised that not a single government supporter has risen so far to participate in the debate. After all, if people in increasing measure support the government because they think the government party is best able to deal with the issue of national unity—and if they are right or wrong is another question—why should the government involve itself in a debate on unemployment, which at present is of disastrous proportions, when that government does not intend to act?

According to the latest figures available for April, 914,000 people were unemployed across Canada. That is the largest number recorded as unemployed since Statistics Canada began keeping records. In April, 8.3 per cent of our work force, seasonally adjusted, was out of work. That percentage is a near record. According to a Department of Manpower and Immigration study the gist of which was released some days ago, unemployment will become worse, rather than better, in the next two years. According to estimates, instead of a national average of 7.3 per cent unemployment, seasonally adjusted, the figure will be 7.6 per cent.

I suggest these unemployment estimates are too low. I think many more people will be unemployed than the figures suggest. The extent of our unemployment was documented clearly by Mr. Wayne Cheveldayoff, writing in the Globe and Mail of Wednesday, May 11. He reports certain figures made available by Statistics Canada and other sources for the month of February. It is often said that unemployment is not as serious as some pretend because there are always unfilled job vacancies. He examined such claims.

Let me put on record some of his figures. For example, he shows that in Ontario, 316,000 were listed as officially unemployed. There were 15,000 job vacancies, which means that even if all jobs were filled, more than 300,000 people would remain unemployed. In Quebec, 303,000 were listed as officially unemployed. There were 9,000 job vacancies, which means that if all jobs were filled, 294,000 would still remain unemployed in that province. In British Columbia, 103,000 were listed as officially unemployed. There were 3,000 job vacancies, which means that 100,000 would still be unemployed if all vacancies were filled. I mention these provinces as examples to show how serious is our unemployment situation.

Those official figures do not include the tens of thousands, perhaps hundreds of thousands across this country who have given up looking for work because none is to be found; women who have stopped looking because there are no jobs; men in their forties and fifties who have lost hope of finding work because employers like to hire younger people who can better participate in pension plans. Therefore, I suggest between 8 per cent and 10 per cent of our people are unemployed. We argued for years that you could reduce unemployment by educating our people, by training them better to acquire new skills. We said if people are educated and skilled they can find jobs, for the unemployed are mainly the unskilled. The Winnipeg Tribune of Wednesday, May 4, 1977, had this to say on that question:

> A Statistics Canada report says there is a glut of university and community college educated students which will continue for the next 15 years—

In other words, the glut will continue until 1900. I continue quoting:

> The report . . . says young people leaving post-secondary schools until about 1990 will face grim employment prospects even if enrolment in those schools is curtailed . . .
> The labour force is becoming increasingly better educated. In 1966, one-quarter of all Ontario students leaving school had attended a university or community college, but by 1986 this figure will rise to 50 per cent.

Our country's young people are better educated than ever before. What has been the result? I wish to quote a few sentences from an editorial which appeared in today's Globe and Mail. It deals with one group of young people in whom we have invested a great deal of opportunity and a very substantial amount of money in order to educate them. I quote:

> According to Liberal leader Stuart Smith, as many as 5,000 teachers graduating in Ontario this year are not expected to find work as teachers . . .
> The cost of tuition for that final year is $5,000 per student (exactly double the cost of one year in an undergraduate arts program), of which the taxpayer contributes about $4,300.

They estimate what it costs the province of Ontario to educate these people for teacher training. The editorial continues:

> The surplus of teachers or the drought in jobs—no matter on which side the emphasis is placed—is not going to improve of its own . . .
> This year's class of unemployed teachers will be joined by next year's and by the following year's, on and on—all stacking up like airplanes above a steadily shrinking runway.

I did a small survey in my own city along the same lines. I called the president of the graduating class of the faculty of education of the University of Manitoba a few days ago. She told me that to the best of her knowledge two-thirds of this year's graduating class have not yet found a position. Now is the time when schools are hiring for next September. I called the president of the graduating class at the school of social work. I got the same story. To the best of her knowledge, two-thirds of the graduating class had not found jobs in the field of social work.

I also called the president of the graduating class of engineering students. He told me that those graduating in electrical engineering were doing very well and those graduating in mechanical engineering were doing well in terms of getting jobs. However, students graduating in civil engineering, a substantial percentage, have not yet found jobs. I talked to the president of the Red college, a very large institution. A substantial percentage of the students are there because the Department of Manpower is paying for their training courses. The community colleges were developed because we realized that a university education in a field such as the arts did not really equip young people to get jobs. The community colleges were developed at tremendous cost. Hundreds of millions of dollars went into building community colleges and expending our universities. Last year the federal contribution to post-secondary education was over $500 million.

The citizens of this country, as well as the federal parliament and provincial legislatures, encouraged these young people not to go into the labour force after completing high school, but to stay in our educational system. They were told to attend universities or community colleges where they could take Manpower training courses. It became almost an eleventh commandment: Improve your education. However, for these young people the prospects are grim.

I spoke to the secretary of the building trade council in Winnipeg. It takes in all the unions whose members work in the construction industry in the city of Winnipeg. Last year Winnipeg did relatively better in terms of construction than larger cities such as Toronto, Montreal and Vancouver.

Mr. Paproski: That is because you have a good mayor, Stephen Juba.

Mr. Orlikow: Whatever the reason, this is not the time to talk about that. In any event, Winnipeg did relatively better than the larger cities. This year the situation is grim. There is very little work.

Mr. Faulkner: Same mayor, same premier.

Mr. Orlikow: Despite very favourable weather, construction has not really begun. A large percentage of the construction workers in the province of Manitoba are unemployed. There are plants in Winnipeg which have had massive lay-offs of people. Some people with over 20 years seniority have been laid off. These are plants which produce agricultural implements, steel fabricating plants and steel erection plants. The situation in Winnipeg is the same as in every city, although Winnipeg does have a relatively low rate of unemployment as does the rest of the province of Manitoba.

A few moments ago I talked about the plight of our young people, our best educated people. We now have a situation where people in their forties and fifties are being laid off. These are people who have never been out of work; they have had the same job for years; never have they made a claim for unemployment insurance benefits. These people have no idea when, if ever they will be called back to work.

The minister may say there has been a rapid increase in population in Canada. That is true. He may say that in recent years we have had the largest increase in the number of people joining the labour force of any country in the western world. That is true. However, this government, at least since October, 1976, has believed that the problem of inflation is more serious than the problem of unemployment. On October 14, 1976, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said that our inflation was a result of international external forces, and the way to deal with it was to adopt a program of restraint. That meant, and means, that federal, provincial and municipal governments must cut back on doing things which are in their areas of jurisdiction.

It sounds good to people when the government says that this year it is not going to provide "X" million dollars on programs. What they do not say when they make that kind of announcement is that "Y" number of people will be unemployed. For every million dollars governments do not spend, a certain number of people do not get jobs. That is why we have this large number of unemployed. Inflation is dealt with on the backs of the unemployed of this country: they are the ones who suffer the most.

We in the New Democratic Party believe that not only is full employment possible, but it is an absolute necessity if this country is to survive and if our young people are not to become completely disillusioned and embittered. I have said this before, and I repeat it today. It does not surprise me that a substantial number of the younger people, particularly the French-speaking younger people of Quebec should have turned to separatism as a solution to their problems. If you have between 12 per cent and 15 per cent unemployed among the most recent graduates of French-speaking universities and CEGEPs in Quebec, and you have a federal government which says, "There is nothing we can do for you; you are just going to have to suffer", it does not surprise me they should turn in increasing numbers to a party and to a government which has as its first objective the establishment of a separate state in Canada.

We do not believe that such unemployment is necessary. We believe we could get full employment. How? There is no easy way. There is no magic solution. There is no single solution. The first step would be a new budget with a cut in income tax particularly for people in the lower and middle income ranges. These are the people who really do not earn enough money to save. These are the people who, if they got a cut in their income tax, would spend the money on purchase of the goods and services they need, thereby creating more employment. We need a vastly extended program of capital works projects funded by federal, provincial and municipal governments. Sewer and water systems are needed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired. Unless there is consent for him to continue, I shall have to call upon the minister. Is there consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Orlikow: I thank hon. members for their courtesy. I note that the sewage treatment system in Montreal is not to be completed until 1984 because of financial difficulty. I find it strange that though they were able to find well over $1 billion to complete the Olympics, they cannot find the money from any source to complete their sewage treatment system. They are still dumping raw sewage into the St. Lawrence River. Public transit systems need to be built up if we are to cut down the use of the private automobile and save costly fuel imports. Hospitals, parks, recreational facilities are all needed. The whole public housing program ought to be greatly expanded. A program to this end would put a large number of people back to work. We need to deal in a meaningful way with the repair and renovation of older houses in the core areas of our cities. These have deteriorated rapidly in recent years. People have left them and, as a result, school and recreational facilities are being left unused.

Then, as a matter of urgency, we should be taking measures to conserve energy. The National Energy Board has predicted a tremendous shortage within 10 to 15 years. We should begin, now, to do on a national scale what the government has already begun to do in a tentative way in the Atlantic provinces by embarking upon a major home insulation program. This would not only provide employment but would lead to the saving of a tremendous amount of energy. All these things could be done, given the will and the desire necessary. I hope the government will realize how wrong it has been in recent years and will inaugurate programs such as I have suggested so as to reduce the very large number of persons presently unemployed.

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to respond to the motion on behalf of the government. The opposition motion advances the proposition which is clearly contradicted by the record of economic performance in Canada, a record of recovery from the recession afflicting all the western economies in 1973 and 1974, which is widely regarded by international economic commentators as being close to the best of any major industrial nation in recent years.

The Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) recently tabled in the House the Economic Review for 1977. This document provides a very useful point of departure when assessing the performance of the Canadian economy—not in isolation, as hon. members opposite have all done today—but in the context of the international economy. The year 1976 marked a continuation of worldwide recovery from the most serious economic problems faced in over 30 years. For most of the major countries belonging to the Organization for Economic Co-operation and Development, the turning point from recession came early in 1975. The modest nature of the recovery reflects caution on the part of governments in stimulating demand in view of the underlying rates of inflation and a failure of investment spending to come forward at its traditional point in the expansion. Consumer prices in the OECD countries, after increasing 11.4 per cent on average in 1975, increased 8.6 per cent in 1976. At 7.5 per cent, Canada had the fourth lowest rate of increase, behind Switzerland, Germany and the United States.

Significant headway was made in slowing down the increases in prices and costs. While a large part of the improvement resulted from flat or declining food prices, prices of goods other than food also rose less rapidly in 1976. The year over year increase in the consumer price index in October, 1976, was 6.2 per cent. Personal disposable income rose less strongly in 1976 than in 1975, but the improved price performance resulted in a real gain of 3.2 per cent per person employed, almost equal to that achieved in 1975 and well in excess of the increase in total productivity. The rate of wage increases slowed significantly during 1976. In new settlements, the average increase in base rates over the life of the contract and during the first year of the agreement eased to 8.4 per cent and 9.9 per cent respectively by the fourth quarter of 1976, from the all-time high of 18.8 per cent and 22.4 per cent in the second quarter of 1975.

Canada's index of economic performance in March of 1977, according to the National Bureau of Economic Research, a highly respected research organization, was 67 per cent ahead of the situation at the start of the recession. Partly, this reflected the fact that Canada, as a result of deliberate policy initiatives taken by the government, had not plunged as far into recession as had our trading partners. It also reflected the considerable progress we have made in the past 24 months. Comparable figures for West Germany, France and the U.S. ranged between 2 per cent and 10 per cent. Italy, Japan and the United Kingdom have not, even yet, fully recovered the level of economic activity which they had experienced prior to the recession. This study, which was prepared in advance of the recent London summit, tries to summarize, in a single measure, the most important measures of aggregate economic activity such as income, output, employment, unemployment, sales, etc., and it shows that, relative to our trading partners, Canada has done very well. It is clear that Canada has made very significant progress in lowering our rate of inflation and the rate of wage settlements. The decline in our competitive position, particularly when compared to the U.S., has been significantly reduced and this is an essential precondition to sustained economic growth and improvement in the unemployment situation.

The Minister of Finance in his budget speech underlined the interrelated nature of inflation and unemployment. He emphasized the key importance of reducing inflation and controlling our costs. The anti-inflation program is achieving this result. The budget provided additional financial resources to the private sector which will encourage business enterprises to make the capital investments which are needed to create new jobs.

The unemployment figures will be reduced only by measures which deal with the real economic problems which face Canada and, indeed, all of our economic competitors. The federal government recognized this: this was the basis for the anti-inflation program, for the stimulative measures provided in the budget, and for the direct employment measures, the Canada Works program and the Young Canada Works program outlined to the House by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen).

The measures proposed in the budget will create employment, encourage investment and foster regional growth. They will improve the equity market and improve the cash flow of business as sources of funds for expansion. They will particularly help small business. They will help sustain consumer spending and provide further tax relief to Canadians with modest incomes.

On the investment side, the 5 per cent investment tax credit, which was due to expire June 30, was extended for three more years. This measure has been very important for our manufacturing and processing industries. The scope of the investment tax credit was broadened to make eligible capital and operating expenditures on scientific research and development. To provide additional assistance to slow-growth regions the rate of the investment tax credit was raised to 7½ per cent in Saskatchewan, Manitoba, northern Ontario and designated regions in Quebec. For the Gaspé and the Atlantic provinces the rate was raised to 10 per cent. A number of measures were introduced to improve the market for equity investments. These measures, the most important of which was a major increase in the dividend tax credit, are estimated to provide tax relief of $300 million and should greatly increase the flow of funds available for business expansion.

In the recent budget the federal government continued its efforts to improve the position of small and medium-sized business. In addition to the investment tax credit measures and the dividend tax credit measures already mentioned, the Minister of Finance introduced a number of technical amendments which will prove of great assistance to small business and are designed to allow key employees to participate in such business.

On the personal income tax side, in addition to the indexing of the personal tax system which occurs automatically at the start of each year measures were introduced in the budget to provide extra deductions against federal tax payable. These measures are valued at almost $400 million in 1977. These budget measures provide a strong boost to the economy and will certainly result in additional jobs.

On May 7 and May 8, Canada, together with the United States, the United Kingdom, France, Germany, Japan and Italy took part in the economic summit in London. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance emphasized the critical importance of dealing in a systematic and co-ordinated way with the economic problems facing the western world. This approach was welcomed by all the leaders present and provided the basis for the Downing Street declaration which was issued following the summit. I would like to quote a few sentences from that declaration because they summarize the approach being taken by Canada and our western allies toward solving the economic challenges before us:

[Mr. Buchanan.]

The world economy has to be seen as a whole—

That is a point which, as I suggested earlier, seems to have eluded our colleagues opposite.

—it involves not only co-operation among national government but also strengthening appropriate international organizations. We were reinforced in our awareness of the interrelationship of all the issues before us, as well as our interdependence. We are determined to respond collectively to the challenges of the future.

Our most urgent task is to create more jobs while continuing to reduce inflation. Inflation does not reduce unemployment. On the contrary, it is one of its major causes. We are particularly concerned about the problem of unemployment among young people.

We commit our governments to stated economic growth targets or to stabilisation policies which, taken as whole, should provide a basis for sustained non-inflationary growth.

We will provide strong political leadership to expand opportunities for trade to strengthen the open international trading system, which will increase job opportunities. We reject protectionism: it would foster unemployment, increase inflation and undermine the welfare of our peoples.

The message of the Downing Street summit is thus one of confidence:

—in the continuing strength of our societies and proven democratic principles that give them vitality; —that we are undertaking the measures needed to overcome problems and achieve a more prosperous future.

This is the way responsible governments face up to economic challenges, Mr. Speaker. This is the way responsible governments solve economic problems. I suggest it provides a more useful approach than the pious and, in many ways, erroneous motion put before the House today.

[Translation]

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I wish to congratulate the mover of this motion, the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin), and judging from the support from the other opposition parties, we could say he hit the target.

Mr. Speaker, talking about inflation, unemployment and poverty has been a constant practice for several years. One can see it everyday in the newspapers, as well as on television and radio. So, we are not saying anything new when bringing up those issues in this House on behalf of our constituents and all Canadians, regardless of their language, religion, nationality, age, sex, whether they are the minority or the majority, rich or poor. Everyone suffers from inflation, unemployment and poverty in a country with such a high economic potential and gross national products.

We know that Canada's gross national product is $190 billion, or an average of $8,300 per person, one of the highest averages in the world. Therefore, how is it that so many people suffer hardships, poverty, unemployment and lack the necessities of life? I ask the question, but I know the answer. Even if the production is great, the cause of all our ills is poor distribution of this production. From an economic standpoint, this poor distribution is caused by the government's lack of foresight, since it has all legislative powers concerning money, currency, credit, banks, money supply, interest rates and unemployment insurance. All these legislative powers that are under the jurisdiction of the federal government are clearly specified in the British North America Act which has been considered as the Canadian constitution since 1867, that is for over 110 years.

Mr. Speaker, before changing this constitution, would it not be of the utmost importance to allow it to play its full role within the framework which we are used? The federal government has the responsibility for all things concerning trade and commerce, the raising of money by any mode or system of taxation, the borrowing of money on the public credit, currency and coinage, banking, the incorporation of banks, the issue of paper money, interest and unemployment insurance. Those are the legislative powers of the government of Canada with regard to economy. The government of Canada must therefore feel responsible for the unfair distribution of the wonderful production of Canadians, whatever their language, as I said a moment ago, their religion, nationality and political affiliation, regardless of whether they belong to the majority or the minority.

The "fine" average production of $8,300 per capita does not say much about the farmer, the family head with a low or middle income, the housewife who stays at home without any wage, the student and the child. Where is the surplus which the great majority of people lack to enjoy a pleasant and honest life? Do we have any idea? The Gazette of Canada tells us in its informative pages: Over the last five months, the 11 chartered banks of Canada have raised the value of their assets from $121 billion to $133 billion, an increase of $12 billion, and this, after having increased it by $16 billion the year before. If this rate remains the same over the next 12 months, our banks will increase the value of their assets by more than $25 billion, while our country will operate on a deficit which according to the estimates of our honourable friend, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald), will reach some $7 billion.

In spite of this deficit our government feels prosperous enough to sacrifice $250 million in receivable accounts owed by the so-called poor countries, or Third World countries. Is that not going to increase our deficit for the current year? Is that good administration? Why should the debts run up by our municipalities, our school boards, the Olympics in Montreal and others not be paid this way too? That would surely lighten the taxpayer's burden.

So, Mr. Speaker, in view of the government's carelessness in providing for a sound economy or a fair distribution of the national production among all citizens, how could Canadians be happy with inflation, unemployment or poverty resulting from the carelessness, the negligence and the lack of foresight shown by this incompetent government? True, this sad situation is rather generalized, even worldwide. But is that a reason to neglect to apply the remedies we see within our reach?

All economic summits seek to encourage production and growth of the means of production through the institutions which derive profit from the work and the business done by the workers. While those institutions grow and prosper, workers, Canadian citizens are poorer and the quality of life is everywhere on the decline. Must we get discouraged and let everything go adrift? Is the challenge above human ability? Must we call upon the heavens to help us? The answer is quite simple: Whatever our monetary system may be, what can be produced can also be distributed, and in a better way, for the benefit of every Canadian rather than a small group, of rich, knowledgeable and qualified citizens. Is it not a fact that the talents of the mighty must benefit everyone?

Mr. Speaker, the time has come for everyone of us at all levels of our major institutions, up to and including our government, to open our eyes to the obvious economic needs of our citizens, which is a basic ingredient to any administration of organized society, made up of all citizens in this country. This is a matter of administration, economics and political science, but all this boils down to a question of money, of figures, in other words accounting, sensible technical formulas leading to the goal, to the end pursued. Production's primary aim is to supply consumption. Profit can only come second. The Prime Minister must know that first for himself and then for each and every Canadian, for each and every Canadian family starting from the smallest, because the biggest are always in a better position to fend for themselves and manage.

We are living in an age of great affluence, and nobody must be restricted in his legitimate expectations so long as we are in an overproduction situation. It has been proved that Canadians are capable of producing when required. There is no shortage in our stores. Despite an unemployment rate bordering on 20 per cent in some areas, we, Canadians, have proved that with a reduced manpower we are capable of producing at will.

It is always more tempting to work and legislate by millions and billions rather than dollars and cents, especially when it comes to small people, the everyday life and trade of the Canadian individual and his family. All research conducted by scientists, experts, economists and scholars is generally at the level of private and public institutions, whether industrial, commercial, professional or labour, wherein the aim is to constantly promote the production of goods and services. No attention is paid to individual consumption, especially within families. Economic status and adequate treatment in terms of compensation, personal wages, only go to the working citizen. No consideration is given to the family per se.

Yet, the family is the first natural institution based on kinship, love and nature, whereas other societies are established by citizens, but for private interests which are secondary or artificial or for monetary, economic or political interests. Money comes before both man and the quality of life. The institution comes before both the person and the family. Companies thrive while families are jeopardized. Man forgets his dignity because of money. This is the point on which the experts and the scientists must agree in order to establish a new technical formula which would restore an economic balance among all citizens and check or at least reduce inflation, unemployment and poverty.

We often hear about the right to live. Isn't it the basic right of each citizen of a country? And if the right to live is the basic right, then it is the prime responsibility of the central government of a country. Even before having the right to a job and a salary, before having the right to capital and interest, each citizen must first be alive and healthy, because a corpse can have neither work nor capital. But this right to live means a guaranteed personal income for each citizen, whether this guaranteed personal income is derived from earnings, from interest on capital or from his personal vital right directly paid to him by the federal government, the only one responsible for distributing money at all levels of our social life, financial, economic and political, in all the provinces of the country.

Mr. Speaker, after having established that inflation, unemployment and poverty result from the national economic imbalance for which the legislative powers of the central government are solely responsible under our Canadian constitution, it remains to demonstrate that the situation is not hopeless, that we still can be optimistic and that it would be possible and indeed very easy, especially in Canada, and in 1977, to restore an economic balance among the various classes of society through better tax distribution, in order to ensure the security and the development of our institutions and the future of our citizens.

Let us sum up the situation in order to find some specific remedial measures that the present government must and can apply to our economy within the existing and regular framework of our monetary, economic and political systems, without changing or disrupting our structures.

Today, heads of families and single persons get equal pay for equal work. Today, mothers receive no salary for their maternal care and domestic work. Today, children and students cost of lot of money but have no regular personal income. Today, companies make enormous profits but pay less taxes than organized workers. Let us consider these four points and see how easy it would be to remedy this situation and strike a better economic balance. When citizens pay $5 in taxes, corporations pay only $1. The government collects the total of $6. All this should be changed so that individuals would pay $3 as well as corporations. With a 40 per cent tax cut on personal income, corporations would only pay their fair share of taxes. Assuming that the 10,000,000 workers in the Canadian labour force earn an adequate income, proportionate to their contribution to the production of goods and services, the fact is that dependants without work or capital, which number almost 13,000,000, must be taken into account as they have a right to live and must receive a guaranteed personal income based on their basic essential needs.

From then on, Mr. Speaker, housewives who stay at home, to raise their family, children and students would get their guaranteed personal income on honorable terms and at reasonable rates as a personal vital right and no more as charity, alimony, unemployment insurance, alms or social welfare. In Canada, we have no poor, we only have people who have been denied their rights to life, in terms of a legitimate participation in national production, in Canadian and world natural resources and in all aspects of national and international trade.

All of you have greatly contributed to the study of our economic situation. I realize that I am putting forward new precisions and a new way to deal with inflation and unemployment, but I am also convinced that I have said nothing you have not heard before. I am not swaying away from the free enterprise principles which you are all familiar with and you would be surprised to hear that those precise techniques which I am advocating now, are a practical application of the great sharing law which was expounded by the great economist of world-wide reputation, Lord John Maynard Keynes, who addressed himself to the governments of various countries in the following terms: "Governments must make every effort to insure full employment through revenue redistribution, thereby giving consumers a purchasing power in keeping with the development of the production potential". That British economist and businessman who died in 1946, is still quoted in every western country, and taught many students in major English and American universities. The more we think over that balanced distribution law formulated by Keynes, between capital and consumption needs, the better we realize that the suggestions I am making here are perfectly consistent with that law of economic balance and harmony. It is the logic and common sense of the great economist Keynes that I tried to bring to you, to the best of my ability.

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, somebody once said that we do not know what tomorrow holds. If I knew the name of this man and if he were still alive, I would probably invite him to come and attend a few debates in the House of Commons and he would quickly change his saying for "we always know what tomorrow holds". The more I listen to my friends opposite, the more I find that the least we can say is that there is a lack of originality in their remarks.

If I try to remember what I have heard this afternoon and the remarks of hon. members I have listened to, I cannot find any constructive and innovative suggestion. First, I was very disappointed by the remarks of our new colleague, the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) who, on his first day in this House, did nothing else than make general and easy charges against the government. I would have thought that, with so likeable a leader, he would have understood that it is not with general charges and overall judgment on this government that we are going to solve the unemployment problem.

It is agreed, and I readily concur, that those who are in power have a clear responsibility for the problems we are facing whether they have to do with inflation, unemployment, social climate or national unity. Far from me the idea of exonerating the government or suggesting that it is entirely blameless and not partly responsible for current problems. However, Mr. Speaker, I think that if we want to provide solutions and if we are serious when on one side of the House or the other we maintain that we are aware of the fact that those who now experience difficulties are not members of the House but people in general, especially the underprivileged. If we are serious when making such statements, I think the first thing to do, with the co-operation of members of the House from any area, is to try to solve that serious situation. I am in a position to make such a statement since I know that my riding of Lapointe is home to an unacceptable number of unemployed. There are underprivileged people who must experience almost insuperable difficulties caused by inflation. That situation is most regrettable and it prevails throughout Quebec, Canada, in fact, the whole world. If we look at the situation in Canada as compared with other countries around the world, I think we must recognize that, all in all, it is not as bad as that of many other countries.

Mr. Speaker, we have unemployment in Canada, but there are several reasons for it. Since I am particularly interested in that problem, like many of my colleagues, I have had occasion to realize that there exists a considerable, serious and worrisome discrepancy between the courses that are given and the courses organized by the manpower centres. Let me explain myself. It often happens, Mr. Speaker, that Manpower Canada buys courses from the provincial government and limits itself to simply buying so many slots in the courses given by the provincial governments. It seems there is a lack of coordination between the two levels of government, and that the people who take the courses, once they have completed them and obtained their certificate, cannot get jobs corresponding to the training received.

Mr. Speaker, we can see in the papers that a lot of jobs are being offered and we cannot figure out how come there is a very high unemployment rate on the one hand and positions which cannot apparently be filled on the other. It is a situation we have often noticed, not in isolated areas such as ours of course where employment is rather restrictive, but in other regions. And I wonder, Mr. Speaker, if special attention should not be given by the two levels of government to coordinating their operations so that those who are taking training courses at any level of specialization and who are entering the labour market could find challenging opportunities to join the labour force and find a way to earn their living. Knowing the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen), I can say he is conscious of those problems and I have no intention whatsoever of blaming him for this situation but I would invite him and his officials to look into that matter which seems serious and whose solution might help cut down the unemployment that we are unfortunately faced with.

Mr. Speaker, today's motion blames the government for doing nothing or not showing any leadership when it comes to unemployment and inflation. Of course, I want to protest against this statement which is, in my opinion, much too general. I can say the situation has improved since I first became the member for Lapointe. I remember 1968, Mr. Speaker, when the unemployment rate was high and when there were not any concrete programs to assist unemployed people living in outlying areas.

Of course, the general policy of investing in large cities like Montreal, Quebec or others has always been applied by governments since they consider these important cities are the motors and that investment must be made there to keep the general economy of provinces growing. But it was realized in recent years that to ensure the development of important centres, it was also necessary to assist people living in the vicinity. For these people are entitled to live outside large centres and if they all decided to live in great cities, there would be serious environment problems and the quality of life would even be worse than it is today. Since then the government has established programs to help unemployed people in slow-growth areas. The Local Initiatives Program, Mr. Speaker, even if in fact it exists, must only be considered as an incomplete measure which nevertheless helps in some practical and concrete way to solve the unemployment problem.

I would like to express my unconditional support to the principle of those programmes, which provide for substantial investments into remote or rural areas in order to help ease the unemployment situation prevailing there.

Mr. Speaker, these programmes have developed in the right direction. I remember a few years ago, these programmes were package deals devised for those regions without regards to the specific problems affecting each constituency. The money, for example, for Opportunity for Youth, the then Local Initiatives Programme, was given to a region as a whole, and the MPS from these regions had a hard time allocating the funds. Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, we have to admit over the last few years, the new programmes have taken into consideration the needs of the constituencies and the fact that the federal representatives of a riding were able, as worthwhile representatives of their constituents, to ascertain the local needs that were to be met. That is why these monies were re-distributed within the constituencies.

Mr. Speaker, I believe that this move towards decentralization, which is often referred to extremely vaguely, represents in the case of these programs a practical and useful solution which should be accelerated and intensified rather than replaced by large programs which, as I said earlier, have a tendency to benefit exclusively major centres, to the disadvantage of cities outside metropoles.

Mr. Speaker, if I may, I would like to say a few words about the contribution of the Progressive Conservative member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) who took it upon himself earlier to make a judgment on the situation in Quebec. I did not ask him, but I would be curious to know when he visited Quebec, whom he talked to and how long he stayed to be able to make such a rash judgment. I will not make any judgment about what is going on in Newfoundland because I do not feel qualified to do so. I would have liked it better if he had had the wisdom and the intelligence not to make such a definitive judgment as to say that if there are problems in Quebec at the present time, only the federal government is to blame. Mr. Speaker, I believe that this judgment is false and pernicious and gives a completely inaccurate picture of the situation.

Mr. Speaker, the situation in Quebec is not easy to determine, and when someone wants to make a judgment, I believe he must have the wisdom and the intelligence to see that the fact of blaming one group is to show a lack of understanding. It would be just as absurd to say that it is the fault of the Progressive Conservatives, the New Democrats, the Social Crediters or the government. All these politically biased judgments are dangerous because they leave people with the impression that only the governments or the members of parliament are able to find solutions to problems as serious as those we are now facing in Quebec.

The social climate in Quebec is an issue which dates back several years ago, and if the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) who spoke earlier were to come to Quebec to meet the Quebecers and tell them he is ready to accept them as first class citizens with their own language and culture, I think it would be a more positive attitude because I do not hesitate to tell my English-speaking colleagues on both sides of this House that not only I respect them but that I am ready to accept their language and culture. I think this attitude is definitely a positive one. It tends to demonstrate that as a French-speaking Canadian, I am ready to make an effort to sit down with them at the same table in an attempt to deal with, in a spirit of brotherhood, friendship and mutual understanding, the problems we are now facing and which we all want to solve.

In Quebec, there are housing problems, and the federal government has offered a $90 million housing grant to the province of Quebec. Quebec has not yet accepted that grant because the money comes from the federal government. All kinds of reasons are invoked. In the meantime, people suffer from a lack of housing because it has not been possible to come to an agreement at the higher level. In spite of divergent opinions, it has not been possible to work out a compromise such as the agreement reached by the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) and Mr. Couture from Quebec. The Minister of Manpower and Immigration is to be commended for coming to an arrangement and working out a solution with Mr. Couture. Solutions can be found, but it is not always easy. I urge the members of this House to start seeking a solution to our problems not only in Quebec but across Canada. I think it is possible and I am sure that we can do it together.

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I know there are only 30 minutes left and that my colleagues from Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) intends to take the floor so I shall be very pleased to share the rest of the time with him.

Of course, I wish to make a few remarks on the motion before us which I find very timely. But first I shall comment on the remarks of my colleague, the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Marceau) who called for objectivity. I think he is right. It is urgent that the House take the time to discuss the issues in all objectivity. Like him I think it is urgent to be more open-minded about the present problems and the present economic context. I think he is as aware as I am of the importance—particularly in Quebec, since we come from the same province—of restoring a sound economic climate and to do it urgently to demonstrate to the people of Quebec it is possible to achieve legitimate aspirations without going beyond the constitutional framework. Should we give it the flexibility I think everybody wishes? Should we also conceive in some cases a new consultation mechanism?

I noted yesterday, for example, Mr. Speaker, that the Minister of Recreation and Sport at the the Winnipeg conference pointed out or rather criticized the federal grants because they hindered their planning in the recreational field. He referred to Opportunities for Youth which has become Young Canada Works, the New Horizons program, etc.

What is important, Mr. Speaker, is surely not to blame the government for its generosity but to ask for further assistance in order to set up new mechanisms for consultation if necessary. Perhaps there were no adequate prior negotiations with the provinces. I therefore urge the minister responsible for the programs to enter into a more realistic dialogue with the responsible provincial ministers, especially in Quebec, to see that federal subsidies do not go against the interests of the provinces. No member opposite nor any government member would support lower grants to the provinces.

But I believe that we are also promoting national unity, since this subject is constantly cropping up, and that we are of course aware of the respect that we owe to the planning of provincial programs. This could be the root cause of the whole problem, that is the attitude or the implementation of the present federalism which has irritated many Canadians and many provinces and is consequently giving rise to certain problems concerning national unity.

Of course, I congratulate the members of the Social Credit Party of Canada, and I take this opportunity to congratulate the new member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette). If he was elected, Mr. Speaker, I had nothing to do with it, and in all honesty, I must congratulate him and wish him much success in the House in the best interests of his voters. I should like to quote the motion:

> That this House regrets the lack of foresight and leadership of the Government in the management of State affairs, particularly in view of the fact that it deliberately permits the worsening of inflation . . .

"Deliberately" is perhaps an overstatement, because I do not think the government deliberately wants to create problems for the provinces or the citizens, but as representatives of the people and members of the opposition, it still remains that we have the responsibility to denounce the government for its failure to take some action or measures likely to solve our present problems. In my opinion, this is not a criticism that should be brushed aside, as it is our job to make it. I continue the quotation:

> . . . which directly leads to a very marked deterioration of the social climate . . .

It is certain, Mr. Speaker, that there is a real danger. If my memory serves me right, the chairman of the Canadian Labour Congress said recently that maintaining the 40 per cent of the 1,000,000 unemployed who are between 18 and 24 could create an explosive and dangerous climate. There is no doubt about this and I believe that no member of this House would doubt it. There had been talk of eliminating regional disparities, that is of correcting them. We have not succeeded in doing so. Indeed, not only Quebec is not alone in making representations and showing its discontent. The problems that we are now facing make the provinces wonder if it is not precisely the present federalist system that is creating such blatant inequities in certain areas.

Once again, we ask the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard) to take new steps to help for example the most disadvantaged areas, the most disadvantaged provinces, and we ask this government to make the extraordinary effort under the circumstances to increase its cooperation with the province of Quebec and with all other provinces.

The issue of immigration was raised not long ago. I think the federal government, in view of the fact that provincial aspirations are as different as they can be, had to review its agreements with the provinces, whether on immigration or on economic affairs since immigration has a direct impact on the social level, and I was myself very happy to note that the federal minister has accepted to negotiate changes that may hopefully satisfy a province which happens to be our own, without for that matter denying other provinces which might want them, those very same rights and privileges.

In my opinion, this is a positive attitude. I insist on this because I feel it would be unfair on our part to level only unwarranted criticism against the government. The government is certainly trying. I repeat that it has not done enough up to now in certain areas, but who can blame us for asking the government to do more to try and solve the problems we are faced with. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, I have just returned from a meeting with representatives of the Poultry Producers' Association, people from my constituency, representatives on the provincial level of the Agricultural Producers' Union, who are anxious to see the Government set up a chicken broiler and poultry meat marketing board. We know that the Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Whelan) is in favour of this and we are glad.

On the other hand, these people have met with hon. members on the government side and the minister has been saying for the past three weeks that he will propose this legislation to the Cabinet, but we know that the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Abbott) is not quite in favour of it, supposedly because he wants to protect Canadian consumers. However, Mr. Speaker, we all know that the agricultural industry is going bankrupt, that consumers are not really protected. We are convinced that in the long run procrastination on the part of the government is harmful to the farming industry. If for political reasons the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs wants consumers to think he is protecting them by letting our business move abroad and, by doing so, placing us in the hands of foreign producers, and at what cost, I think that is not honest.

I urge the Minister of Agriculture who is in favour of that marketing board if he knows why he did not bring it before cabinet, I urge members on the government side to impress upon him the need to introduce this bill as soon as possible and I urge all members of the House to show the Minister of Consumers and Corporate Affairs that he is doing a disservice to consumers by letting a vital and important industry in our economy deteriorate. I think those things must be said. I said it I think without bitterness. I believe that is important, and I just heard from a valid source of information. Today the representatives of that association and the UPA met with government members, who are very receptive to their demands.

The Minister of Agriculture has been telling us for three weeks that he is going to sort things out, and even we on this side think—and if that is wrong I hope the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs will tell us tomorrow because I think we will have an opportunity to question him—we think somebody is holding back. For once it is not the Minister of Agriculture but somebody is holding back and I think the government party must act quickly and in the interest of consumers because if that industry starts going down—as the textile industry did—as a result of a philosophy called the free trade policy, well again the consumer is going to pay for it, and that might very well add to the number of unemployed. It seems to me we have enough of those, and I would never believe that, in a situation such as the one we are experiencing, this government would deliberately leave idle a whole generation of youths aged 18 to 24.

So, Mr. Speaker, I think we must congratulate the sponsor of the motion because that allows us to remind members of the problems we are faced with. I do not want to criticize the remarks that were made—unfortunately, I had to leave during the first speeches because, as many others, I had certain responsibilities—but I wanted to participate in this debate, coming from a province where the rate of unemployment is hurting us, coming from a province where we have been looking forward to a real dialogue with the federal government for long time. If I may be permitted I expect from the federal government and its authorities nearly unlimited understanding in the present context to help bring about that national harmony because we are all concerned about what will happen tomorrow. I do think we all wish that those marked differences we are witnessing all across Canada will finally be recognized, understood, and I think then we can reach a certain harmony.

I am one of those who believe that with a new constitutional agreement and new mechanisms it would be possible to have more useful and more human negotiations than those we have held so far and, more important, negotiations which would not be of a partisan or political nature. I think we can look up to the future with much optimism but again, as the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Marceau) pointed out, we shall not do it with a partisan attitude but rather through objective statements. While we are seeking objectivity, I would like such an attitude to be evident throughout this House in the interest of Quebecers, of Canadians but again we cannot avoid the responsibility of insisting that the government implement improved measures when we are faced with a difficult situation.

Mr. Speaker, since the motion has been introduced by the Social Credit Party of Canada, I am glad I was given the opportunity to make a few remarks and of course would not want to deny to an hon. member of that party and to their leader, the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin), the chance to take part in the debate. Therefore, I will limit myself to these few remarks in which I have tried to be objective and I will thus let the hon. member for Lotbinière close the debate.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. With the permission of the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin), I would inform him that under Standing Order 37 he is allowed to reply at this time. According to Beauchesne's Citation 166 (4), when someone introduces a motion as the hon. member did, even though he yielded to the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette), he is still considered as having had the floor. Therefore, if I recognize him now, I would allow to reply and if he cannot use the 18 or 20 minutes left to him, the debate would end anyhow.

The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) has the floor.

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): I wish to thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your courtesy. This will give me and my colleague from Joliette (Mr. La Salle) who has just pointed out the fact that we have to share the few remaining minutes, the opportunity to speak on this motion. The reason why I gave the floor to the hon. member for Témiscamingue (Mr. Caouette) was to give him his first opportunity to take part in the debates of this House.

Mr. Speaker, this motion will surely irritate some members who believe that the present government has taken an excellent approach to the economical problems facing Canadians today. As for me, I believe that this motion deals with the roots of our problems which is the social climate that prevails in Canada and particularly in Quebec and which has become a source of friction, an expression of misunderstanding and a clear symptom, in some cases, of a tendency to split the country. Our country, Mr. Speaker, is presently experiencing the highest unemployment rate and the most acute constitutional dispute in its history and these two things are happening at a time when the government is still fighting inflation.

In the few minutes that I have left, I would like to elaborate on these three points and express our deep conviction that this government lacks the sense of leadership and innovation that is really needed to face the future. Its fight against inflation has not prevented rising costs in housing, nor has this controversial law and its commission prevented a petrol price increase. Food prices kept rising as well, and so have interest rates in Canada.

Concerning the fight against inflation, through the same publicity which was used in the by-elections, the government is trying to make people believe that it was successful in controlling the profits of some companies. That, Mr. Speaker, does not impress me because lower and middle class taxpayers had to face an ever increasing cost of living while a ceiling was imposed on their wages.

In my opinion, those anti-inflation measures have been a failure at that level. If we go back to the beginning, we can remember that in a speech by the Prime Minister the government had invited every Canadian to join the fight against international inflation. But, Mr. Speaker, Canadians did not. One has only to consider the tensions created by the government with labour in general to realize in all objectivity—as we were urged to do by the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Marceau) and the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle)—that the fight against inflation generally has been done at the expense of poorer people. The fight against inflation which has become a very high priority for the government has been carried out by increasing our unemployment rate, because in its wisdom and its economic orthodoxy the government said, as some members of this House will recall, that it was impossible to fight both inflation and unemployment at the same time.

The basic policy choice at that time was to fight inflation while trying to lessen as much as possible the secondary effects on unemployment, and that is really what we were told here in the last two budget speeches. Mr. Speaker, the present rate of unemployment in Canada—and in this respect I agree with the hon. member of Lapointe when he talks about training courses—particularly affects our young people, for they make up the bulk of the unemployed. That is why unemployment is particularly serious. Mr. Speaker, the fight against inflation has led directly to unemployment. Why? Because in the long run it has curtailed investments. Secondly, by curtailing investments it has forced consumers to look for the best quality possible, at the best price available. And so, we see, on looking at the statistics, not of our party but of Statistics Canada, that since the start of the fight against inflation the rate of imports of staple commodities, such as clothing and footwear, has increased in Canada. And that, because the demand has gone up. Actually, consumers wanted the best prices possible, because, on the one hand, a ceiling was put on salary increases, and on the other, the necessities of life such as housing, food, clothing went without price controls, as they still do.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, after a while we are faced with an alarming, not to say discouraging, rate of unemployment. The hon. member for Lapointe, whom I congratulate for his honesty, has recognized that in his riding that rate is, to quote him, unacceptable. I think all hon. members will admit that the very same situation prevails. Because of what I have explained, unemployment is felt even more in the processing area such as the textile and furniture industries. So, Mr. Speaker, that explains our first proposal. The hon. member for Lapointe said a while ago that unfortunately, the Social Credit members are not making any new proposals. I have always thought that a proposal is not necessarily good only if it is something new.

Yet, it has often been repeated in this House that it is time, it is even urgent that our tariffs, our laws and regulations governing imports were comprehensively and exhaustively reviewed in every sector. I need only refer to the position taken in Washington a few days ago concerning textiles. Our Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Chrétien), for whom I have great respect but whose managerial skills deserve little praise, assuming of course that he is truly serving Canada's interests, suggested in a press release a few days ago that he is finally accepting the restrictions now coming from the United States. And so it is that at home, in my own town, industries like the Robin Brothers and the Utex Corporation with job capacities of 1,000 and over, will soon wake up with an unemployment rate where production will be 30 per cent below capacity, precisely because we have no economic leadership in this country. We have no industrial strategy, neither short nor medium-term, let alone a long-term one.

We already held an opposition day on this subject and we must come back to it, because what will cause Canada's breakup, if this ever happens, are economic rather than linguistic or constitutional issues. We are told that Créditistes have no new proposals. What kind of proposals does the government have to check unemployment? Forgetting the late Opportunities for Youth program that was quite similar to the Young Canada Works program, forgetting the Canada Works program which anyway succeeded the late LIP program, and in the final analysis there is not much difference between the two, basically the government is only putting forward rehashed temporary make-work measures in the services area, while unemployment is competing with employment, while all the medium business community is neither encouraged nor helped.

I am in agreement with the previous speaker that our major problems can only be solved if we, in this House, put forward objective and impartial views. Let us assume that the hon. member for Lapointe (M. Marceau), the hon. member for Joliette (M. LaSalle) and myself got together and invested our capital in a Canadian company. By the end of the year, we would be penalized by the capital gains tax, we would be penalized in our own tax returns, and finally, few Canadians are encouraged to invest in those conditions. It is the opposite. Consumer credit has increased more than ever and the collective debt of both individuals and municipalities or provinces has increased continuously. The public debt has doubled since the present government came into power eight years ago.

One day we shall have to pay back those loans and the accrued interests. In order to do so, we shall have to tax the people even more, those very people who are out of work and whose purchasing power is eroded because of the inflation which this government has failed to wrestle to the ground. This is why, Mr. Speaker, we say in this motion, but not in a partisan way, that this government has lacked and is still lacking in leadership. This is why we put this motion forward today. Before and during the recent by-elections, the government candidates said: Vote Liberal. We will give a new impetus to the economy. This is what our Prime Minister said, as reported in a newspaper: The May 24 by-elections are important for our future. It is time to ensure the development of our economy. We all agree on this point. It is time to promote Canadian unity. There again, we all agree on this point. The Prime Minister should understand it and stop needling the Quebec government every night on the news. It is time, according to the Prime Minister, to work more than ever for the future of all Canadians. On May 24, let us vote Liberal.

This is what we hear from the government. There is no suggestion for solving the unemployment problem, Mr. Speaker. Before the recent elections, this government was in power and we had over one million and a few thousand unemployed in Canada. Now that the elections are over, we are just about at the same point where we were at the time of the general election of 1974; now that the same government is still in power, Mr. Speaker, we are again waiting for solutions to the unemployment problem in Canada.

When I listen to the premiers of British Columbia, Alberta, Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Quebec or of the Atlantic provinces, I find a will to live together, a will to build a great country. I find a will to participate more actively in the development of this country, to sit down at the same table and to discuss the appropriate ways of building such a country. We must absolutely innovate in this area and stop saying that because a solution is advocated by the Progressive Conservatives, the Liberals, the New Democratic Party or the Social Credit, it is ridiculous.

In concluding, Mr. Speaker, as I said this government has no short, medium or long term industrial strategy not only to give a new impetus to our economy but to allow as many Canadians as possible to take a real part in the process. And as long as this government has no such strategy, it will not be able to do so alone, for Canada does not belong to the Liberal party: it will have to do so in collaboration, as was said earlier by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. La Salle) and the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Marceau). The government should not ask us to be objective for the sole purpose of preventing us from criticizing, and then take decisions which ignore the proposals made by opposition parties.

Mr. Speaker, we have specific proposals to make. The economic recovery is an important one. Eventually, the Unemployment Insurance Act will have to be revised completely so that our unemployment people will no longer act like robots when looking for jobs that do not exist. As my colleague for Témiscamingue was saying, there are about 300,000 jobs available now in Canada, but there are one million unemployed people, roughly speaking, who are forced under the law to look for jobs three times a week, which makes three million people a week or 160 million a year looking for jobs, Mr. Speaker. We should not go crazy in this country and force people to look for jobs which do not exist. Unemployment is going to cost us this year more than $1 billion over and above the costs of an all pervasive bureaucracy. Once again, this leads to collective disgust for the government, and to the deep feeling that the Canadian people do not participate in the economy of their country. And I ask the hon. member for Lapointe, as well as the others, when they go back to their riding, to talk to the unemployed and to ask them what feeling of participation they have, if any. On the contrary, and I hope you will forgive me the expression, Mr. Speaker, it seems that people are generally deeply indifferent or disgusted.

Just look at the number of votes any party or all the parties obtained in the last election and you will see that fewer and fewer Canadians feel involved in the making of this country's policy, less and less participation, more and more indifference, more and more apathy generally speaking, and that is bad, that is a preliminary sign that time has come not only for the government opposite but also for our party and other parties to get together, to show real leadership in this country by leaving aside political partisanship which makes us fight against each other instead of building our country.

Today, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Témiscamingue put his finger on the problem by proposing that motion. I think we should recognize that there is a lack of leadership in this country, a lack of industrial strategy and that it is time to change course, Mr. Speaker, to set order again in the house, otherwise more or less shortly it will be the end of this country. Let us not forget that it is not for linguistic or constitutional reasons. We have been living for a hundred years with that constitution. For a hundred years we have been speaking English and French in this country but it is the first time that we have such a high unemployment rate and this is dangerous, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order please! It being 6 p.m. it is my duty to interrupt the proceedings on the motion of the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin), pursuant to Standing Order 58(11). Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until 11 a.m. tomorrow pursuant to the special order agreed upon Monday, May 30, 1977.

At 6 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

The House met at 11 a.m.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS ACT

MEASURE TO PROTECT PRIVACY OF INDIVIDUALS

The House resumed, from Tuesday, May 31, consideration of Bill C-25, to extend the present laws in Canada that proscribe discrimination and that protect the privacy of individuals, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs; and the amendment thereto of Mr. Woolliams.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I had about two minutes in which to start my speech the other night. Perhaps I could set the scene again this morning for those who might be unfamiliar with the issue raised by my friend, the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams). We are dealing with Bill C-25, an act to extend the present laws in Canada that proscribe discrimination and that protect the privacy of individuals. Most of us, however, call it—as indeed it calls itself in clause 1—the Canadian human rights act.

The measure before us presents a procedure for people who feel themselves aggrieved under a variety of circumstances. These are set forth in a series called "discriminatory practices" in clauses 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12 and 13. Then there are exceptions not considered to be discriminatory practices which follow. If one has a complaint under the human rights act, one can take it before the commission and an investigation may be launched. The official may say that the complaint will be taken up elswhere, that there is another act of parliament which offers a remedy. I presume, since we deal with dominion-provincial niceties and things like this, the commission might direct the person to take his complaint before a provincial ombudsman because that is where any remedy, if possible, lies.

There is a procedure for conciliation. The result of that conciliation may, by clause 38, be referred to the commission for its approval. All that failing, the person aggrieved can march on to the human rights tribunal. Its powers are set forth in clause 40 of the measure before us. It is possible to go to the Federal Court to make the finding of that human rights tribunal an enforcement. In effect, the Minister of Justice and the government are saying that while the human rights tribunal can adjudicate and make a decision, the power of enforcement must be found somewhere else. They place that power in the Federal Court.

If I can complete the reference to the Federal Court as specifically set out in the measure before us, in clause 44 there are other rules set out for the court. However, the act goes no further than that and a person who is aggrieved by the finding of a human rights tribunal must ask himself where he can go from there. In the Federal Court Act is section 28 which provides the right of appeal from administrative decisions to the Federal Court in certain circumstances. It is on section 28 that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) relied when he turned down the motion we are now debating. On the other hand, the Minister of Justice has to admit, as he did the other night, that there are some sections of the Federal Court Act which give rise to difficulty, that a study is being made, and so on. So it is possible we shall be faced with an amendment some time in the future to clear up imperfections in that act.

I have no quarrel with that, but I must quarrel with the contention of the Minister of Justice when he says the Federal Court Act will give an aggrieved person protection. If section 28 is doubtful at all—and I gather it is—then surely somebody who has a complaint about a human rights decision should not be placed in the position of having to spend a pile of money going through all the procedures, including a hearing before the tribunal, and then having to wonder whether, going one step further, section 28 really fits the purpose. This is why I support the proposition put forward by the hon. member for Calgary North. At least the motion before us does one thing. It gives a clear right, a positive right, and no one will find himself engaged in legal foofaraw in the courts to the extent of that right.

If we can send out of parliament a procedure which people can follow, which is easy to understand, which does not get people involved in the dreadful labyrinth of argument as to what exactly the legislation means, I say by all means do so. There is a virtue in having a clear right set forth, one which can be clearly understood by people who become enmeshed in the law. But if the minister still has any doubt about section 28, let him bring in his remedy at a future time and then repeal what is proposed by the hon. member for Calgary North. To my mind, it is as simple as that. We passed a motion presented by the hon. member for Calgary North as a good solution, one which makes sense, one which can be followed. If the Minister of Justice finds that section 28 does not serve the interests of people who have been confounded by the decisions of administrative tribunals, he can come along with his own remedy and what the hon. member has done on a short-term basis can be reviewed on a long-term basis.

My feeling is that we must decide in favour of something that is exact and which will work, and that we are bound to reject the thoughts of the Minister of Justice, "Section 28 may be good or it may be bad, so we shall study it and perhaps do something about it later." If that is the way we run this country, God help any members of parliament who have anything to do with sanctioning such an approach.

My final point has been expressed so eloquently by my hon. friend from Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) that I simply want to go on record as endorsing his position. If we can set up a procedure which follows a doctrine of consistency, that should be done. We have a long-established tradition in the courts of Canada whereby judges are bound by what other judges have decided. I should like to see this doctrine of consistency embedded here through the provision of the right to appeal through the Federal Court. Our judges operate from Newfoundland to Vancouver Island, and from Pelee Island to the Arctic pole. They are bound by standards of consistency. Tribunals, it seems to me, are not likely to achieve such standards within a reasonable period of time. Consistency is a virtue in the law, anyway.

The minister should accept the very practical suggestion put forward by the hon. member for Calgary North. The Minister of Justice has always struck me as being a very practical person. I do not know why he feels called upon to dig in his heels about a suggestion like this, one which has the hallmark of common sense. No one can point to any awful reason why it ought not to be accepted. It makes sense. Mr. Speaker, I have made my pitch in the best way I know, and I hope the minister will accept it.

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, I was not able to be in parliament when the earlier part of the debate took place. I understand that the hon. member of Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) made an eloquent and impassioned plea for the amendment which is now before us. Notwithstanding this, I cannot agree to the amendment. The purpose of the amendment, apparently, is to give the right of appeal to the Federal Court from any order, decision or review of a tribunal: I think both the tribunal and the review tribunal are included. The idea is that a review by a court somehow or other improves the situation; that going to court is the right way to deal with any administrative act. I have had quite a different experience. Certainly there are some matters that ought to be reviewed by the courts, but there are others which administrative tribunals are far better suited to deal with than are the courts themselves.

What I am afraid of, Mr. Speaker—and this has been found to be so—is that some lawyers have been protesting over the years that the courts should have a monopoly on dealing with these matters, yet in practice it has not been found to be the best way of securing the justice which parliament is seeking to enact in this type of legislation.

[Mr. McCleave.]

Mr. Woolliams: A typical socialist statement.

Mr. Brewin: If that is a typical socialist statement, then yours is a typical reactionary attitude, so we are even on that particular point.

Mr. Woolliams: I am not asking for the court; I am asking for an appeal from the tribunal.

Mr. Brewin: I know you are, and I will outline what I think is the trouble with an appeal. First of all, it would cause expense, and this matters to some people who are being discriminated against. A person cannot go to the Federal Court without considerable expense. Second, it would cause delay. There is nothing that some employers, or others who have indulged in acts of discrimination, would rather have than be able to delay matters by lengthy proceedings. The Federal Court is already overburdened with work. Apart from the theoretical result of passing this amendment, the practical result would be to delay and to add to expense. Indeed, it would help frustrate the purposes of the act, some of which are not only that justice be done, but that it be done with expedition.

Although I was not here at the time, I understand the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) has already called the attention of the House to the fact that in the Federal Court Act section 28 provides for review of cases where there has been a breach of national rights or excessive jurisdiction has been exercised. It seems to me that that is a perfectly adequate remedy, rather than setting up special individual rights of appeal.

It is because we want the legislation to be effective that we propose to vote against this amendment. We think it would frustrate and delay the healthy operation of the legislation. I do not think I need elaborate any further on our reasons. I dispute the proposition that courts are the only tribunals fit to consider matters of the kind encompassed within this bill. Practice has shown it to be the converse. The courts have their virtues, but they also have their failings, and sometimes their failings consist of lack of appreciation of the kinds of matters which are dealt with by this bill. General jurisdiction to review cases of injustice, or complete disregard for human rights, or breaches of jurisdiction, is something that should be preserved, but this particular right of appeal is unnecessary. I hope that the House will reject this amendment.

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on behalf of this amendment. I think the right of appeal is imperative if we are to preserve human rights in this country. I have received a notice from a constituent of mine who works on behalf of diabetics in Canada. This is a fairly small group, though probably larger as a group than we realize, which is discriminated against more frequently than we know. It has just come to my attention that one government agency or corporation, the CNR, is in the vanguard of this kind of discrimination. I am recently in receipt of a letter from a young man, 20 years old, who has been working for the CNR for about three years. He decided to apply for a different job within the corporation, and in the process of making application he naturally had to have a medical. The doctor in charge was a Dr. Rosetti, who made the following statement:

CNR will not hire diabetics for any position no matter how stable or unstable the person's diabetes may be.

Dr. Rosetti said he had never allowed a diabetic who had come through his office to be hired by the company. Other matters have come to my attention in connection with diabetics who have been discriminated against. I have mentioned in the House the matter of the Bank of Montreal. Soon after that incident I received a letter from another diabetic in Toronto who had on file a letter from another bank which had the same discriminatory hiring practices. We now have a government agency discriminating against diabetics.

The extent to which these companies go to discriminate against diabetics indicates the need for the kind of tribunal which the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams) is recommending ought to be included in the legislation. I, therefore, want to go on record as supporting this kind of amendment which would ensure protection of the rights of this minority group who are facing flagrant discrimination on the part of large corporations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Call in the members.

The House divided on the motion (Mr. Woolliams) which was negatived on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice) moved that the bill be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some hon. Members: Now.

Canadian Human Rights

Mr. Basford moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

He said: Mr. Speaker, when I addressed this bill on second reading debate—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I hope hon. members who wish to leave will do so quickly, so the minister may begin his remarks and be heard.

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, when I addressed this bill on second reading debate I suggested that parliament could, and should give it careful and constructive examination and yet pass it by the end of June. That objective was agreed to by spokesmen of all parties in this House. I appreciate the support from all corners of the House and the constructive interest that has been expressed in the bill. I suspect it would pass third reading without debate or a statement from me or anyone else, but I thought it valuable that the House should pause for a brief time just before it is given third reading.

There are two principles embodied in the bill. The first, which applies to parts I, II and III of the bill, is set out in clause 2(a) which reads as follows:

—every individual should have an equal opportunity with other individuals to make for himself or herself the life that he or she is able and wishes to have, consistent with his or her duties and obligations as a member of society, without being hindered in or prevented from doing so by discriminatory practices, based on race, national or ethnic origin, colour, religion, age, sex or marital status, or conviction for an offence for which a pardon has been granted or by discriminatory employment practices based on physical handicap—

The grounds of discrimination prohibited under that clause constitute the most complete and comprehensive listing in any of the Canadian provinces or in the United States at the federal or state level. It is for that reason that I think the bill has received the support of all parties in this House.

One particularly important aspect of the anti-discrimination portion of the bill is the requirement that there be equal pay for work of equal value between men and women. This concept, put forward in the work of the Royal Commission on the Status of Women and the principle set out in the International Labour Organization's equal pay formula, and now being enacted in this bill, is a very significant development in equal pay legislation. It has received the enthusiastic support of all the major women's organizations in this country. Hopefully, the adoption of this measure at the federal level in this country will give us the instruments to deal with the serious problem that women face of low-paying job ghettos. I want to express my appreciation for the work of those organizations in the development and passage of this bill. Those same organizations were concerned about one provision in the bill, and I would ask them to note the amendment made in committee by which the loophole they feared has been closed.

In the area of human rights, the mechanism of enforcement is as important as the declarative divisions themselves. Parts II and III of the bill provide that mechanism, setting forth, respectively, the nature of the human rights commission and the procedural system for investigation of a complaint which, if not settled at that stage, can be followed either by conciliation or referral to a tribunal. It should be noted that those two parts of the bill also set out the research, educational and reporting functions of the commission. The second principle embodied in this bill is set out in clause 2(b), which reads as follows:

the privacy of individuals and their right of access to records containing personal information concerning them for any purpose including the purpose of ensuring accuracy and completeness should be protected to the greatest extent consistent with the public interest.

The translation of this principle into law is found in part IV. This part would provide Canadians with the right of access to personal information contained in government files, the right to request correction of that information where it is not felt to be accurate, and the right to control of that information. This represents the first time that such rights will be granted in Canada and, indeed, in a parliamentary system anywhere in the world that is similar to Canada. It is an extremely important development in the recognition and protection of individual rights. Under this system any individual will be able to consult an index covering all government records containing personal information which is used for administrative purposes. He can then apply to the government for any of the rights listed above. If his application is denied, he can refer the matter to the privacy commissioner who shall sit as a special member of the human rights commission.

Of course, the public interest and the protection of the privacy of others both demand that some exemptions to the principle be included in the bill. Obviously, for example, it would not be in the public interest to grant heroin traffickers a right of access to police investigation files. Real efforts have been taken to limit these exemptions to the greatest extent possible consistent with the public interest.

The proposition set out in clause 2(b) was amended in committee. It sets out, in connection with the protection of privacy of individuals and the right of Canadians to access of information, a set of objectives and principles for part IV. I hope, as I am sure all members of the House hope, that the administrators of this act in time to come will interpret the exemptions in light of the principles and objectives of the bill, in light of the spirit of the bill, and that, to the greatest extent possible, there will be access to information.

I would like to take a few minutes to emphasize that the rights being granted under part IV must not be confused with the concept of freedom of information. There has been confusion among some members of parliament and some members of the public, including the Canadian Bar Association, that part IV amounts to, or is intended to be, a substitute for freedom of information legislation. This is quite wrong. Whereas freedom of information deals with the access of the public to government documents in general, part IV provides a mechanism for an individual to see his own file, at the same time excluding him from seeing personal information about others which would amount to an invasion of their privacy. I agree with the statement by my predecesor that "the right to privacy and the right to know are not contradictory but complementary; they are companion rather than conflicting freedoms". However, it should be recognized that the two are quite different.

Although part IV deals with one only of these so-called "twin freedoms", this is not to suggest that the other one is to be neglected. I forcefully endorse the concept of freedom of information and this government is presently involved in preparing a policy paper on the issue for presentation to the Joint Parliamentary Committee on Statutory Instruments which will be brought forward by my colleague, the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts). This matter can then be studied with a view to developing the best legislation possible on the methods to improve public access to government information. I expect that this paper will soon be available and I hope that we will see early legislation on the subject.

I wish to make two important policy suggestions. While the provisions of part IV only apply at present to departments and agencies of the federal government, on the basis that we should legislate our own instrumentalities first, it is important that a scheme for the protection of privacy and the right of individuals to correct information in data banks be extended as rapidly as possible to services and industries in the federally-regulated private sector. Soon after the privacy commissioner is appointed I intend to direct that he undertake a study into the possibility of such action. We are seeing more and more, in the private sector, the development of bigger and bigger data bank systems. It is important that they be subject to some form of legislation and regulation. I also hope that through the enactment of Part IV and through discussions with the provinces, the provinces will be encouraged to take action to grant individuals the right of access to personal information and the right of correction.

Having mentioned both portions of the Human Rights Act, I would like to return to the grounds of prohibition provided for in part I. In committee a number of other grounds of discrimination were discussed, such as the possibility of including language, sexual orientation, political affiliation and physical handicap in the areas of services, facilities and accommodation. Obviously, under this legislation physical handicap is included as a ground only in employment matters. The reasons for not including those grounds were discussed and fully examined in the committee. I wish to mention only two.

Parliament, through its official languages regime, is actively involved in the protection and promotion of French and English language rights in this country. To include through our Official Languages Act, through resolutions of the parliament of Canada or through other means, official language rights in a general anti-discrimination scheme would not only add considerable confusion to the situation but would run the risk of actually diluting the rights already granted for our official languages. In my opinion, any action which is necessary to promote and protect French and English language rights in Canada should be dealt with in the specific context of the official languages scheme.

While agreeing that French and English rights are appropriately dealt with under the official languages policy, some have suggested that the language rights of those Canadians who speak languages other than French or English should be dealt with in Bill C-25. I agree that discrimination against persons because they are identified as speaking a particular language cannot be tolerated. However, I would like to point out that Bill C-25 does prohibit discrimination on such a basis under the ground of "national or ethnic origin".

To suggest that the multitude of languages freely spoken by many Canadians be a prohibited ground of discrimination under this act would result in services, employment and accommodation having to be made available in all of those languages. While we all agree that people should not be discriminated against because of the particular inflection of their voice, and that in a free society we should be free to speak whatever language we want, it is another matter to impose a legal obligation for the provision of services and accommodation in those other languages.

It was discussed in committee and in representations to me that the ground of physical handicap be extended to areas of services, facilities and accommodation. I am very sympathetic to the problems faced by the physically handicapped in these areas and feel that action must be taken to alleviate them. To this end, Bill C-25 provides a mechanism for doing so. Under clause 22(1)(h) a duty is placed on the commission to encourage the development and improvement of the arrangements for physically handicapped in the areas of services, facilities and accommodation. I feel that in the long run this method of dealing with the problems of the physically handicapped, taken together with the actions of other government departments and agencies, may prove to be more effective than including physical handicap as a prohibited ground on this expanded basis.

Throughout our history many in this country in politics, in the churches, in the trade unions and in voluntary organizations have fought against discrimination and for the equality of men and women. It is a story of which they can be proud, and much has been accomplished. Much, however, remains to be done. It is the essence of a free society that people are judged according to their own value and their own work. Where discrimination exists in Canada, it must be rooted out. When human rights are not conceded, when acts of discrimination take place in this country, we in Canada must take a stand against it, all the more so today with human rights under sustained attack throughout the world. Regardless of our various beliefs, we in this country all seek, I believe, the brotherhood of man. Today, in some small way by the passage of this bill we, as members of parliament of all parties, are taking an important step toward the establishment of that brotherhood in this country.

Mr. Woolliams: Before my good friend, the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) rises to address the House, would the minister answer a question? Does the minister interpret this measure as meaning that once it is passed into law, the reference to "the right to work" implies that when certain rules have been laid down by the union for the protection of the working man, a person should have the right to a job although he does not belong to a union? Would it be held that such a person was subject to discrimination?

Mr. Basford: Not entirely, in the sense of the question. The "right to work" is used, in the question, in the context of the right to work without the person concerned joining a union. That is not affected one way or the other by this legislation. What is provided for are regulations and laws related to employers and employee organizations—trade unions—to ensure that there is no discrimination in membership on the basis of any of the grounds mentioned in the legislation.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I should like to clarify one matter. With regard to part IV there is some concern among the research community about the possibility that the legislation would also apply to statistical data banks as well as to administrative data banks. Does the legislation differentiate between the two? Is it the intention to place additional restrictions on statistical data which might affect the ability of researchers in their work?

Mr. Basford: That question is dealt with in the definitions section on page 28. The definitions in question are those of "administrative purposes" and "federal information banks". The right to privacy and the right to make corrections relate to federal information banks where information is in the hands of the government and is being used in relation to an individual for an administrative purpose. I would not categorize those banks as statistical banks of the kind about which the hon. member is asking. The definition of "information banks" is somewhat wider, though, and there is provision in the act that the designated minister shall have the duty of co-ordinating the operations of government information banks in an endeavour to limit, to the extent possible, consistent with good information, the information-gathering activities of government.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I am glad the minister paused for a minute or two in his speech to reflect about those who through the years have been the pioneers of this legislation. I think the House would not mind being reminded that one of those pioneers was Mrs. Florence Bird—Anne Francis, to those who listened to her on the radio in other days—and the government of the late Lester B. Pearson who appointed Florence Bird and the commission out of which this legislation arose. I have been thinking lately about the propensity of hon. members to be somewhat verbal about their policy declarations. This may be fine, except it often means that others in legislative history are overlooked. We politicians are very much "instant" people, and I want to pause for a moment to pay tribute to Florence Bird and others in our history who have espoused the cause of human rights and, in particular, the rights of women in society.

It was pointed out in earlier stages of this debate that the provinces have in place human rights commissions. Part of the dilemma which arises in this field originates, from the fact that jurisdiction is shared by provincial and federal governments. This means we should be forewarned that just because the apparatus is in place does not mean there will be an end of discrimination. I know the minister does not expect this, and very few of us do as we debate the issue in parliament today, but I make a plea to those who will be responsible for the working of this legislation to co-operate very closely with the human rights commissions in the various provinces. I hope that at an early stage they will seek an opportunity to gather experience of the day by day operations of these commissions as they work to end discrimination in our country.

As those who sat on the committee know, I was anxious that the matter of sexual orientation be faced squarely by the committee. I said in committee that it was a pity it was not faced. The minister has given an explanation. He is part of a majority government and, of course, he has an obligation to put forward those measures which he believes not only the government can sustain but that parliament will approve. Nevertheless, I think that if one believes, as the minister believes, that this parliament will be addressing itself very soon to discrimination which is inherent in sexual orientation, he is very optimistic indeed. That is why many of us, but not enough, were anxious to have the government face this issue when the bill was before committee.

I believe very sincerely that it is by being open about orientation that the activities of blackmailers and others who prey upon the propensities of people in society are brought to an end. The longer people have to keep their sexual propensities hidden, the more they are preyed upon by blackmailers. I believe this very much, and I had hoped that a bill having to do with human rights would have faced this issue squarely in the latter half of the seventies. But it is not to be. We made an effort in committee to bring this about, but we were unsuccessful.

If I may turn to the question of equal pay for work of equal value, many of us heard the cries of alarm, when the bill was in committee, regarding how difficult it would be to implement this concept. I have always wondered why people seem to think that Canada cannot pioneer jurisprudence. The concept of equal pay for work of equal value is a difficult one. It has been raised at ILO conventions, but there has not been very much experience of the concept. Would it not be rather refreshing if for once Canada pioneered this concept? I am sure we are able to develop a sensitive jurisprudence and formula of implementation of this concept.

I should like to speak for a moment about one other aspect of the act to which I think it is a pity the government did not address itself and which I had hoped the minister might mention during his speech. I refer to the fact that clause 63(2) continues the present discrimination against Indian women. The minister was very forthcoming in committee about this, and he did receive some publicity. When ministers are forthcoming there should certainly be publicity, since it is so rare.

Mr. Leggatt: That is new in itself.

Mr. Fairweather: Yes, that in itself is news. In any event, when we tested the comittee's will, the minister said that an amendment to abolish the section of the Indian Act which continues to discriminate against the Indian people would be considered. If I interpret the minister's remarks correctly, in his answer to the Indian people he gave them a signal to get on with the matter of making suggestions to parliament for an Indian Act which would not continue what is one of the outrages of modern society, namely, the blatant, legislated discrimination against women who are Indian.

I hope that this warning is noted by those in charge of framing a new Indian Act and those in the Indian community. As my hon. friend from Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) has pointed out, even the name "Indian Brotherhood" is in itself somewhat discriminatory, or is evidence of discrimination. I hope that the very eloquent cries of witnesses such as Mary Two Axe Early and others who came to the committee to tell of the injustices suffered by Indian women will be addressed very soon by this parliament.

A colleague of ours, the hon. member for Greenwood (Mr. Brewin)—he will not like what I am going to say because he is innately a modest man—was honoured the other day by Canadians of Japanese ancestry for the contribution he has made to human rights throughout his entire career.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fairweather: I could not imagine a better opportunity for me to have parliament recognize his contribution than during third reading of a bill having to do with human rights.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fairweather: The hon. member can, of course, speak for himself when I am through, if he likes. Isn't that generous of me? He recognizes the innate paradox—we should keep this in mind with all legislation having to do with rights—that when the events for which he has been honoured occurred during World War II, namely, what Canada did to Canadian citizens of Japanese ancestry, we did not have a Bill of Rights. Our neighbours have an entrenched bill of rights in every sense of that word, but despite that they dealt just as shabbily with Americans of Japanese ancestry as did we Canadians.

I think we should regard this occurrence as a lesson that in times of stress governments can find excuses for overstepping the fundamental rights and freedoms of individuals. This is why, although the members of my party welcome this legislation, we realize that you cannot legislate humankind to be just one with the other. I sincerely believe that a Bill of Rights and that human rights commissions are a signpost of civility placed in the statute books by those who hope to promote civility along with human rights. I recall, and I think it is well that the House recalls, that just because a bill is in place and has all the apparatus of royal assent does not necessarily mean that humankind is going, ipso facto, to treat others with civility. Nevertheless, it is an important signpost. I just want to repeat that I have been pleased to participate in this legislation.

Canadian Human Rights

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) for referring to my colleague from Greenwood (Mr. Brewin) regarding the great contribution he has made toward achieving human rights for all Canadians.

Mr. Brewin: I am not ready for the Senate yet.

Mr. Leggatt: Indeed, no. On the subject of human rights, "exemplary" is the right word to describe the contribution made by people like Andrew Brewin to protect unpopular groups. Human rights legislation is not worth much if all we are going to do is protect people who happen to be very popular in a country at any particular time. I think it is to the great credit of the hon. member for Greenwood and others in the House that during the emergency of the Second World War, when clearly Japanese Canadians were one of the more unpopular groups in this country, they withstood as a matter of principle the unpopular decision they made to defend groups which were unpopular.

In the same vein, I want to give credit to the hon. member for Fundy-Royal for what he did to defend unpopular groups in Canada such as Japanese Canadians. The logic of what he said applies, as well, to legislation which does not include provisions having to do with sexual orientation. This group of people is also unpopular and it is not a popular move to bring forward legislation to protect that group. Nevertheless, sometimes there is a difference between what is right and what is popular. I would like to give credit to the hon. member who preceded me, because he has fought those kinds of battles in the past. He deserves credit for the work he has done in this field.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Leggatt: Human rights legislation at the federal level is long overdue. Our party will support this legislation. There are a couple of questions which I do not think the minister has answered properly. One of them was referred to by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal. What kind of human rights legislation is it in Canada when the rights of native women are not included? They are exempted from this legislation, as the minister knows full well. Under clause 63(2) a specific exemption is made for the sole purpose of continuing to discriminate against native women in Canada. That is a shame; it is wrong.

Human rights legislation has to protect everybody and must not provide exemptions here and there. I know the minister's answer is that it is premature and we are going to work this thing out. It is difficult enough to pass legislation in this House. When these amendments come forward they will be harder to pass then than they are now. Human rights legislation, to be worth its salt, must include groups which are clearly discriminated against. The minister has missed several groups.

We have mentioned the question of sexual orientation. We have mentioned the question of native women. The minister has missed the broad group of people who because of their political affiliations or their political beliefs are discriminated against in their employment. I will not go into examples, but legions of people cannot get employment because of views they may have held. This infamous black list which has been dealt with in this House from time to time is an excellent example of people who, because of political views not necessarily held at this time but at one time, find themselves discriminated against in Canadian society.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: They were never changed.

Mr. Leggatt: They were never charged, never accused nor convicted. It is the government which stands convicted in terms of that type of conduct. I thought this bill would have gone in some direction to solving that problem. The problem with the legislation is that the minister has not been forthcoming enough. He has not taken on the unpopular causes which are necessary for a valid piece of human rights legislation.

There were some changes in the bill at committee stage. I think they were positive changes. That is the reason there were not many amendments at report stage. The minister and the committee went along with increasing the penalty which I proposed at committee stage. I am referring to a very important section of the bill which would have hived off the whole question of employment discrimination to the Department of Labour and gutted the capacity of the new human rights commission to develop any jurisprudence around its operations. Our party was successful in having an amendment to that section passed at committee stage. It is to the committee's credit that they took a fairly objective look at the details of the bill.

The minister should look at an amendment which was not successful. I refer to clause 14, which deals in the negative. It reads:

> It is not discriminatory practice if (a) any refusal, exclusion, expulsion, suspension, limitation, specification or preference in relation to any employment is established by an employer to be based on a bona fide occupational requirement—

In committee we attempted to have the onus as to what is bona fide placed upon the employer, since it is the employer who has to make that kind of decision. It is the employer, for example, who has been paying reduced rates to women over the years in order to maximize his operation, his profit, and hurt a very large section of the Canadian community.

The minister has been unwilling to change that fundamental question of dealing with the onus and dealing with whose responsibility it is to get from under that kind of exemption. The exemption should never have dealt with it in a negative way. It should have been the other around. As the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) pointed out, this is a handle to give the employer a chance to discriminate. All he has to do, basically is say that there is a bona fide occupational requirement that a lumber worker, for example, has to be male. Thus, he beats the meaning of the human rights legislation. The onus should be clearly, forcefully, and fully placed upon the employer to prove that it is bona fide in a court of law or the human rights commission.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Basford: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I do not want to get involved in a dispute in any way, but in fairness the hon. member should point out that we did make an amendment to that section in committee, which provides that those exclusions have to be established by the employer to be bona fide. It is the government's view that that places the onus on the employer. That is a matter of dispute between the hon. member and myself, but there is no doubt as to the intention and the belief of the government.

Mr. Leggatt: It would have been easier to understand the minister's position on this clause if he had accepted clear words which would have placed the onus on the employer, instead of weaselling around with the clause and continuing to engage in what is a legal dispute between the two of us. The clause we proposed was perfectly clear; the onus was set and the employer had a legal responsibility to satisfy that onus. We can get into the legal question of whether the word "establishes" in fact means "onus". The minister could have been forthcoming on this clause making it very clear that employers were not going to be able to weasel around clause 14 and hide behind the question of bona fide, in the practice of employment.

The bill goes some distance in providing protection to some groups. I wish we could say "all groups" and I wish we could say that the minister had the courage to protect the unpopular under this legislation. I must say that neither he nor his government has had that courage. There are times in this House when playing politics with a bill as important as this one is wrong. Our party will support it because it does go some distance in protecting people who are discriminated against as a result of their employment. But we should have seen a little more forthrightness by the minister in the bill.

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): Mr. Speaker, I really did not intend to speak on this bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sorry that I allowed the hon. member to take the floor, but I have to call it one o'clock at this time. I will now leave the chair until two o'clock. The hon. member may continue his remarks after routine proceedings this afternoon.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

PROPOSED NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES TO DIVERT OIL TANKERS FROM WEST COAST OF BRITISH COLUMBIA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. My motion is prompted by the collapse of the Kitimat pipeline project and the consequent plans to ship very nearly all of the Alaskan crude to the Cherry Point, Washington refinery through the strait of Juan de Fuca and the Georgia straits. In view of the grim threat of an ecological catastrophe which the shipment of perhaps ultimately one million barrels of oil a day presents to the British Columbia coastine and fishing grounds, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot (Mr. Jarvis):

That the House views the threat posed to the British Columbia environment by the massive transshipment of oil with concern and calls upon the government to enter into immediate negotiations with the United States to divert oil tanker routes away from the west coast of Vancouver Island and Queen Charlotte Islands and terminate at Port Angeles, Washington.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate pursuant to Standing Order 43 can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

REASON FOR FAILURE TO ESTABLISH BROILER MARKETING BOARD—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the terms of Standing Order 43. In view of this government's failure to act upon the request of the Canadian broiler producers to create a national broiler marketing board, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. LaSalle):

That the Minister of Agriculture explain to this House and to the Canadian broiler producers why this Liberal government has failed to set up a national broiler marketing board.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate pursuant to Standing Order 43 can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUGGESTED SUBSIDIES ON GOODS SHIPPED TO ARCTIC COMMUNITIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, arising out of reports that the cost of freight to remote northern communities in the eastern Arctic has recently risen by 50 per cent on the only air carrier for several of the towns in the Baffin region.

Given that air freight provides the only means of providing fresh produce and other essentials to these areas that are already paying over 60 per cent more for most consumer goods than in southern Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House urges the government to provide freight subsidies on essential goods that would bring the cost of essential goods to the same price range as in southern Canada.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate pursuant to Standing Order 43 can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROPOSED INQUIRY INTO INCREASE IN UNEMPLOYMENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, under the terms of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion dealing with an important and urgent matter.

In view of the generally unstable economic situation throughout the country, and the fact that it is the direct result of the inflation which has been plaguing us for a number of years; in view of the resulting unemployment and the attitude within government circles to the effect that all the disastrous consequences of our economic situation are to be blamed on the constitutional uncertainty created since November 15, which view discredits the cause of the emancipation and fulfilment of Quebec, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin):

That the government order an inquiry into the specific causes of higher unemployment with a view to finding the ways and means of remedying it.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Pursuant to the terms of Standing Order 43, the motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PROPOSED ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL BROILER MARKETING BOARD—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 to ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion.

Considering the unfair competition against Canadian broiler producers these last three years through low price imports which increased by 671 per cent from 1974 to 1976, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise):

That the House unanimously give the government leave to establish immediately a national broiler marketing board to ensure Canadian consumers the presence of this food in large quantities and at a stable and reasonable price, instead of having to trust uncertain imports without any guarantee of stability, which will inevitably happen if Canadian broiler producers are on the verge of bankruptcy.

Some hon. Members: This matter is settled.

Mr. La Salle: If it is settled, I am pleased about it, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the terms of the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, such motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

SUGGESTION GOVERNMENT REQUEST HUNGARY TO ALLOW REUNIFICATION OF GECZI FAMILY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity concerning the reunification of a Canadian family. In light of the federal government's lack of action in reuniting Mr. and Mrs. Geczi with three children who are now being retained against their will by Hungarian authorities behind the iron curtain, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski):

That this House urges the federal government and the Department of External Affairs to express to the Hungarian government the fact that it has no right to decertify Canadian citizens or to violate the Helsinki accords and to demand the immediate reunification of the Geczi family.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES TO DIVERT OIL TANKERS FROM CHERRY POINT TO PORT ANGELES AND COMPENSATION FOR OIL SPILLS

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs, and it concerns the news that with the collapse of the Kitimat pipeline application we can expect nearly all of the oil to pass by the Queen Charlottes and through the Strait of Juan de Fuca and Georgia Strait, a massive environmental threat, in return for no additions to our energy supplies. In view of the fact that the Cherry Point refinery in Washington already has one oil spill to its credit, and for the benefit of the city of White Rock, will the minister tell the House whether he intends to open discussions with the United States with a view to reducing environmental risks by bringing in oil to Port Angeles, a far safer alternative to Cherry Point?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, with regard to the announcement yesterday, there has not been an application filed. Therefore, other than the declared intentions of the operators we do not know precisely what kind of proposal is going to be put forward. However, presumably the hon. member's conclusion is correct in the sense that it would probably add to the amount of traffic, but I do not know with certainty. I believe the hon. member referred to opening discussions with the United States. We have had ongoing discussions with the United States on the whole question of anti-pollution measures and control measures on the west coast. We have also talked about alternative locations and this will obviously make it all the more important that we keep those talks going and elevate them to emphasize what is clearly in the view of the hon. member and myself an increasingly important subject, given yesterday's developments.

Mr. Friesen: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. As the minister knows, those who were proposing the Kitimat route now support the Trans-Mountain route and therefore considerable weight is added to that application. In view of the fact that no mutual compensation agreement over the question of oil pollution has yet been concluded, even though those negotiations have been going on for sometime, will the minister tell the House whether he has taken up the point referred to by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West about a month ago? Is the minister now in a position to announce shortly, interim agreements for compensation measures to protect the livelihood and property of those threatened by the vastly increased possibility of oil pollution? I believe the question was originally addressed to the Prime Minister but I am sure the minister has been apprised of it.

Mr. Jamieson: Mr. Speaker, I am aware of it but because the issue is so important I would prefer not to rely upon my memory to give the hon. member a specific answer today. If he would do me the kindness of waiting, I will look into it and give him a more considered answer tomorrow.

While I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, I believe I said at the beginning that the application had not been received; I should have said it had not been heard. I understand the application in relation to Kitimat has been filed.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

REQUEST FOR EQUIPMENT TO CLEAN UP OIL SPILLS BE STATIONED AT WHITE ROCK, BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, a final supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources in the absence of the Minister of the Environment. Since I believe the nearest equipment for combating oil spills is in Vancouver, will the minister give us the assurance and will he urge the Minister of the Environment to see to it that there will be standby equipment in place in White Rock to serve the south coast areas in emergencies because that would be the first beach to be hit in the event of an oil spill?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I will be very pleased to pass on those representations to my colleagues.

NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES CONCERNING COMPENSATION FOR DAMAGE FROM OIL SPILLS

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of the fact that no Canadian institution has legal jurisdiction to deal with the threat to the Canadian environment arising from increased marine traffic to the superport at Cherry Point because the National Energy Board can only deal with a pipeline over Canadian soil and the proponents need not file under the Canadian interdepartmental committee known as TERMPOL with regard to marine environmental risks, and in view of the fact that several weeks ago the Secretary of State for External Affairs responded positively to suggestions in this House that he enter into discussions with the United States government with a view to formulating a bilateral agreement—they may be the same discussions the minister referred to in his reply to the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock—can the minister confirm that the discussions he referred to a moment ago have been entered into with a view to getting a bilateral agreement that will deal with such things—not just compensation but also the risk factor involved in terms of increased marine traffic and the superport at Cherry Point?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I repeat my answer. The hon. member is quite right; it was the same matter that I answered a moment ago. Those discussions are going on both bilaterally and as they relate exclusively to the tanker route. I might also point out that the whole question of pollution control and responsibility is also an element in the negotiations between Canada and the United States over border questions or boundary questions, for example, and also in the multilateral context in the law of the sea conference so that there are a number of fora in which this matter is now being discussed.

TRANSPORT

STUDY OF RISK OF SITING DEEPWATER OIL PORTS ON WEST COAST—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): A supplementary question to the Minister of Transport, Mr. Speaker. Since December 1976 a publication has been available entitled "An Environmental Risk Index for the Siting of Deepwater Oil Ports" which only pertains to oil ports on the east coast. May I ask if a similar study is being conducted or has been conducted that will indicate, if it is tabled in the House, the risk of siting deepwater ports on the west coast? This is particularly important now in view of the announcement last night about the abandonment of the Kitimat proposal and the prospect that Cherry Point would become a very vulnerable area?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that type of study has not been completed in connection with the west coast. That was one of the reasons for engaging the services of the Thompson Commission, in order to look at the specific question which would have come before us in connection with the Kitimat application.

SUGGESTION THOMPSON COMMISSION INQUIRE INTO CHERRY POINT PROPOSAL

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, in view of the minister's reference to the Thompson inquiry under the Public Inquiries Act, and having regard to the limitations that we now experience vis-à-vis Cherry Point being an existing port on United States soil, will the Minister of Transport consider amending the reference to Professor Thompson, having regard to these limits and his structure already being in place, so that he might pursue, in so far as he is able, a study into the marine aspects and environmental risks as far as Cherry Point is concerned, at least in the Canadian context? In other words, Dr. Thompson has a structure in place ready to go. It would be abandoned because of the abandonment of the Kitimat proposal. Can we make use of his good services as far as the Cherry Point proposal is concerned?

● (1420)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the terms of reference were broader than just Kitimat in that they refer to the movement of oil by tankers through Canadian waters. They would have some reference therefore to the project even as they stand. I will be looking with my colleague, the Minister of the Environment, at the question as to whether some broader terms of reference are required under the circumstances.

MANPOWER

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF FORECASTS OF UNEMPLOYMENT LEVELS IN PROVINCES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the minister of misery, formally known as the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Will he confirm that his department has forecast a monthly increase of 200,000 in the average number of UIC beneficiaries in the next two years directly related to the department's forecasts of higher unemployment in Canada over the same period? Whill he also confirm that more than 2.6 million individuals will draw benefits annually over the same period of time, according to a forecast done by his department? Will he now agree, as I asked last week, that these forecasts on the employment situation should be tabled and made available to all members of this House and the public?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, off the top of my head I would not want to confirm or otherwise the figures the hon. member has indicated. Perhaps if a question were placed on the order paper we could deal with it in more detail and with more accuracy.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

ESTIMATE OF INCREASED COST—REASON FOR PAYING BENEFITS RATHER THAN CREATING JOBS

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I asked the minister related questions last week to which he gave the same kind of phony answer. Two days later he indicated that the figures were accurate. I suggest he knows he has these figures. Instead of waiting for a question on the order paper, he should pay a courtesy to the members of this House and produce the figures. While checking into that, will the minister also confirm that during the same fiscal years his department has estimated there will be an increase in the cost of UIC programs to a level of about $4 billion in total expenditures for running the UIC program. Will he confirm that is the case? Also, will he explain to the House why his department would rather spend money on UIC payouts instead of creating the jobs Canadians want?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows we want to make positive use of the UIC fund. The bill presently before the committee makes proposals to do precisely that. In so far as the other figures are concerned, I am not prepared to guess at the accuracy or otherwise of what the hon. member is quoting.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

CONSULTATION WITH PROVINCES ON ESTABLISHING A JOB CREATION PROGRAM

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my final supplementary to the Prime Minister. Given the alarming forecast in the cost increases of unemployment insurance payouts which the Manpower Department has done and the related forecast showing an alarming increase in the number of recipients, does the Prime Minister have an answer to the question I asked last week. It was related to Premier Schreyer's request for a first minister's meeting to be held sometime in June to prepare plans jointly between the provinces and the federal government in order to come up with some major job creation programs?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I did give some consideration to this request by Premier Schreyer. Unless such a conference were preceded by a meeting either by the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Manpower or officials of those particular departments, it would be premature. The question is viewed urgently by all members of government. Cooperation is important and is forthcoming. However, I have not gathered from Premier Schreyer or anyone else that they have any major new initiatives to propose.

PARLIAMENT HILL

REQUEST THAT MEMBER FOR VERDUN BE GIVEN PARKING SPOT

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister.

According to the CBC 10:30 newsbroadcast last night, the hon. member for Verdun has had serious parking problems on the Hill which explains why he was late coming into the House of Commons. As chief of the Liberal party, can the Prime Minister tell the House whether he has taken the necessary steps to ensure that his supporter will have the same benefit the others have for parking in a suitable space thus enabling him to be on time for the sittings of the House?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether this is a serious question or not, but it certainly is within the duties of the Speaker of the House rather than mine if it has to do with parking on Parliament Hill.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Yesterday in the House of Commons, the Social Credit Party of Canada had, according to our rules, the opportunity to put a motion on its allotted day for the consideration of the business of supply, a motion which I moved myself, which was debated by more than three members of the Social Credit Party of Canada, and which had been preceded by two oral questions and a motion moved under Standing Order 43. Yet, completely overlooking those debates in the House of Commons, the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation saw fit to report on the parking problem of the hon. member for Verdun. Can the Prime Minister assure the House that he himself will settle the parking problem of the hon. member for Verdun so that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation can report to the Canadian people on what is going on in the House?

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

REQUEST FOR NAMES OF ECONOMIC DECISION-MAKERS NEEDED TO AGREE TO RESTRAINT PRIOR TO ENDING CONTROLS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. The right hon. gentleman has stated it would be folly to remove controls except and until there is "agreement among the main economic decision-makers" on the whole question of voluntary restraint. Would the Prime Minister tell us who he considers to be suitable economic decision-makers in Canada to reach such an agreement? Who will speak for business, for example, or for the farmers or for the consumers?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): That is a difficult and complex question and it is one to which we address ourselves in a green paper tabled last week by the Minister of Finance. I hope the hon. member will peruse the chapter relating to that point.

TYPE OF AGREEMENT SOUGHT PRIOR TO ENDING CONTROLS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, that question was put to the Minister of Finance in the light of the green paper and the Minister of Finance also told us it was a complicated question and one to which he could not give a ready answer. Would the Prime Minister indicate what kind of agreement he is seeking? Is it a written agreement? These aspects are certainly not dealt with in the green paper.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): The most binding type of agreement would be the one I would prefer.

Mr. Stevens: Would the Prime Minister tell us what, in his mind, would constitute a binding agreement affecting business, labour and the consumer?

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member is no doubt aware of the hypothesis contained in his question.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

BREAK-IN AT L'AGENCE DE PRESSE LIBRE—PERSON WITH WHOM PRIME MINISTER CHECKED PRIOR TO DENIAL OF MINISTERIAL KNOWLEDGE

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. It relates to an urgent and pressing matter, involving, as it does, the very credibility of the office the right hon. gentleman now holds. It concerns the confirmation yesterday by one, Pierre Cappiello, of allegations made in this House last Friday respecting a registered letter sent to the then solicitor general in relation to the break-in and burglary of L'Agence de Presse Libre in Quebec some three days after the actual break-in on, I believe, October 10. Outside the House last Thursday afternoon, the Prime Minister made two points at a press conference. First, he said that as soon as any minister was informed the investigation which eventually resulted in these charges immediately took place, and, second, if my rough French translation is correct, he made the point that it was several years after the break-in before any minister knew of the illegality.

My question to the Prime Minister is this. I have great respect for the office which he holds, and I think that this attacks the credibility of his office. With whom did he check in relation to those rather blanket denials of any knowledge; and specifically did the Prime Minister check before he made those statements with the then solicitor general, the present Minister of Supply and Services?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is assuming or insinuating that my replies were incorrect. I still hold them to be correct. I am talking of illegality in so far as it concerns the RCMP. Any break-in is illegal. Unless I am mistaken, the hon. member is implying that I was referring to any illegality. I am referring to any illegality in which the federal government directly or indirectly would be involved, and my statement still stands.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the Prime Minister is misinterpreting my words but I am sure it is my fault. I am talking about knowledge, ministerial knowledge, of an illegality, of a break-in, of the involvement of a federal police force, among others. I think this was the matter the Prime Minister referred to in the press conference. It is completely different from sentencing. It is completely different from the actual break-in. I am referring to ministerial knowledge of events and the circumstances relating thereto, and I think this was a very direct, blanket denial of any ministerial knowledge at that time. This is what I am directing my question to and it is what I would appreciate the Prime Minister referring to. Did he specifically check with the Solicitor General's two predecessors in respect of their knowledge of this matter at that time, or even now?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that the hon. member did not get my previous answer. I am telling him that the answers I gave at the press conference and in the House still stand. No minister knew until several years after that the RCMP had been involved in a break-in. That is what the hon. member wanted to know.

As for how I came by this knowledge, Mr. Speaker, I came by it by memorandum. I did not talk to the ministers specifically within the last couple of weeks; I came to it by way of a memorandum which refreshed my knowledge of incidents which had been discussed in my office with the commissioner of the RCMP about a year ago.

BREAK-IN AT L'AGENCE DE PRESSE LIBRE—KNOWLEDGE OF DEPARTMENT OFFICIALS OF BREAK-IN

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. We live in an era when there is supposed to be ministerial responsibility for acts of department officials as well. If the Prime Minister is denying, as I assume he now is, that any minister of his government knew a few days after the event of any allegation made in respect to that event and the involvement of a federal police force, would the Prime Minister now inform me that no minister had any responsibility for officials under him who also knew of the events or allegations made in respect to that illegality immediately after the event as well? In other words, did the then solicitor general's departmental officials have any allegations before them at that time of any involvement of the federal police force in respect to this matter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Of course I am not denying ministerial responsibility in this or in any other matter, Mr. Speaker. I am saying what the facts are in answers to questions which are put to me, and I am repeating what the present Solicitor General has made quite clear, that these facts will be restated and put in a complete context, as open as we can possibly make it, as soon as the sentencing of those who pleaded guilty takes place, which I am informed will be in less than a week or two. I do not feel I can add anything to what I have said, Mr. Speaker, but I am confirming that what I said corresponds to the knowledge given to me and of which I have taken cognizance and which, so far as I am able to decipher, absolves any minister from any lack of responsibility in the matter since he was not made aware of the break-in by the RCMP.

NATIONAL CAPITAL

POSSIBILITY OF DESIGNATING THE NATIONAL CAPITAL REGION AS CAPITAL OF CANADA

Mr. Gaston Isabelle (Hull): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister.

In view of the many stabs in the back the federal government receives from the Quebec government, the city of Ottawa and other partial and politically-oriented groups in the National Capital Region to slow down or prevent the achievement of the objective it set in 1969, namely to restore a normal balance between the Ontario and Quebec parts of this region, due also to the humiliations, frustrations, trucklings and penalties which its residents must endure every day, does the Prime Minister intend to consider amending the BNA Act section 16 to make the National Capital Region the capital of Canada, or does he intend to make it the subject of a national referendum so that the citizens of this region may be relieved once and for all of all that stress?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I take the liberty to reassure the hon. member who is certainly doing his duty in speaking on behalf of the people of his region, by telling him that the government's intentions have not changed since 1968 or 1969, when we discussed the matter at a federal-provincial conference. By means of an amendment to the Constitution, we did propose at that time to consider the National Capital Region as the capital of Canada. As long as the perspective is agreeable to the people of this region, it is one of our projects. I am glad to reassure the hon. member by asking him to refer to the federal proposals of many years ago and by telling him that they have not changed.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

BREAK-IN AT L'AGENCE DE PRESSE LIBRE—POSSIBILITY OF INQUIRY BY QUEBEC AUTHORITIES AND PARTICIPATION BY FEDERAL MINISTERS

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to that raised by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham and I direct it to the Solicitor General. My question arises out of reports that the solicitor general of Quebec, Marc-André Bédard, is planning to make further inquiries into L'Agence de Presse Libre affair—inquiries which may lead to a full public inquiry by a body such as the Quebec Police Commission. Will the Solicitor General tell the House if he has been asked by his counterpart in Quebec for information, and will he also assure the House that he, and his predecessors, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development and also the Minister of Supply and Services, are willing to testify about ministerial involvement in the break-in before any such inquiry?

[Translation]

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I did not receive any inquiry from Mr. Bédard. The file clearly establishes that, following the allegations which were made, the then solicitor general who I think was at the same time attorney general of Quebec, had ordered a judicial investigation on the circumstances surrounding the APLQ affair. This investigation is about to come to its conclusion; therefore I think it would be premature to make any other comment on this matter at this time.

KNOWLEDGE OF PLANNING AND ANALYSIS GROUP OF BREAK-IN AT L'AGENCE DE PRESSE LIBRE

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question concerns the police intelligence planning and analysis group among whose functions it is apparently to ensure that the Prime Minister and the Solicitor General are kept aware of what is happening in the security services. Will the minister tell the House whether that organization informed him or his predecessor of L'Agence de Presse Libre break-in, and in the event that they did not, whether he considers them negligent for not doing so?

[Translation]

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the agency the hon. member refers to appeared not such a long time ago before a parliamentary committee; on that occasion, the hon. member for Yukon asked a number of questions about its role. I shall have to check the exact dates as to when this agency was set up. It is clear that this agency had nothing to do with these activities. It is not an operational agency. It is absolutely not involved in the activities of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, as its duties concern the analysis of the information which may reach the government.

TRANSPORT

RECORD OF MEETINGS BETWEEN MINISTER AND PROVINCIAL PREMIERS—REQUEST FOR PUBLICATION

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Transport. Are minutes kept of meetings between the Minister of Transport and provincial premiers and, if so, could these be made public so that the public might be able to grasp what goes on at these shadow parliaments?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is ordinarily our practice at these meetings to keep a record or a summary of the proceedings. I will have to consult with them and examine other practices to determine whether making the proceedings public would be a sensible procedure.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, might I ask by way of supplementary whether the minister would consult with the premiers of the four Atlantic provinces specifically so we could have some idea of what went on?

● (1440)

Mr. Lang: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to do that. I will also take into consideration the question of general practices in this area.

BILINGUALISM

RELATIONSHIP OF COMMITTEE TO STUDY RIGHTS OF FRANCOPHONES OUTSIDE QUEBEC TO RESPONSIBILITIES OF SECRETARY OF STATE

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. The Prime Minister had a press release or an announcement about a visit from French-speaking minorities who live outside of Quebec, and the Prime Minister announced the setting up of an interdepartmental committee to study this. Can the Prime Minister tell us how such a committee relates to what has been thought to be the over-all responsibilities of the Secretary of State for looking after minorities anywhere in Canada, either French-speaking or English-speaking? What is the rationalization for the committee, and how does it fit into the duties of the Secretary of State?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am very grateful for the question, because I understand there have been some areas or interpretation as to the function of this committee. I am grateful for the opportunity to make it clear. La Fédération des Francophones Hors-Québec gave us a very voluminous and interesting report, which concerned the actions of many departments. All I did in answer to that report was to say that I would set up an interdepartmental committee composed of the various departments involved. As is usual and customary, that committee is to be chaired by a member of the Privy Council staff. Of course, he will be reporting to the Secretary of State because of the capacity of the Secretary of State and his responsibility, as the hon. member puts it, for minorities, and particularly Francophone minorities outside of Quebec. That line of authority should be quite clear. The interdepartmental committee is merely a tool, at the departmental level, to report to the Secretary of State, and then the Secretary of State chairs an ad hod committee of ministers on this particular question. Then, of course, they will be responsible to the full cabinet through the Secretary of State.

POSSIBILITY INTERDEPARTMENTAL COMMITTEE WILL DEAL WITH OTHER MINORITIES AS WELL AS FRANCOPHONES

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, can we assume that any minority, who feels aggrieved in our country, would go through this interdepartmental committee to have—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: Just listen, fais attention.

Mr. Fairweather: With the greatest of respect, I find it rather extraordinary that a sensitive question asked by somebody who has spent his entire life here, interested in minorities no matter what language—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fairweather: The crows can crow all they like. I happen to feel it is a terribly sensitive problem which has to be solved.

I wonder if the interdepartmental committee will be confined to Francophones, or will it deal with other aggrieved minorities? What country do we live in? Obviously, we know there are minorities who feel aggrieved at this moment because of the ethnocentric policies of the government of Quebec, and I want to know about that.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I find the hon. member's question perfectly normal and sensible. This committee was set up by me the day before yesterday in response to a particular brief presented by the FFHG. Other briefs have been presented by other minority groups in Canada—multicultural groups, Indian and native groups and Eskimo groups. They have all been dealt with in a similar or parallel fashion. This particular group has been set up to look at this particular brief. Of course, other minorities will always have a hearing from this government and we will deal with them in the most appropriate way.

Mr. Paproski: I hope so.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

MAXIMUM CLAIM RESIDENT OF BRITISH COLUMBIA CAN MAKE AGAINST UNITED STATES IN EVENT OF OIL SPILL

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It concerns the problems following a decision of the Kitimat Consortium to withdraw from the Kitimat line and the increase in tanker traffic which will be faced by the Gulf of Georgia. Could the minister advise the House as to the maximum claim a resident of British Columbia can now make in the event of a tanker spill in the Rosario Straits or in that gulf area? What is the maximum claim that the residents of British Columbia can make against the United States government as things presently stand?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, as I replied to an earlier question, I am sure the hon. member will understand I would prefer to get specific information than draw on my memory for an answer to that question. I will get it is as soon as I can for the hon. member.

NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES ON ALTERNATIVES TO USE OF CHERRY POINT BY OIL TANKERS

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): There are two routes which can be taken to avoid some of this extra tanker traffic in the gulf. I am sure the minister is aware of this. One is to offload at the Pacific port which does not affect the inside, or to take the surplus oil down to Los Angeles and ship it to the midwest through American territory. Has the minister, at any time, entered into joint negotiations with the United States to develop a west coast joint oil board so that the citizens of British Columbia can be protected in their inside waters? Second, has this government ever taken a positive step in encouraging the Los Angeles terminal as the logical alternative to putting British Columbia waters at risk?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, to be quite specific, I personally have not had those kinds of conversations since I assumed these responsibilities. Once again, in the interests of accuracy, I would like to check the records to see what discussions of that nature have taken place. I will respond as early as possible.

POSSIBILITY OF AGREEMENT WITH UNITED STATES ON CONTROL OF TANKER TRAFFIC USING STRAIT OF JUAN DE FUCA

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, while the minister is checking into the background of this, in terms of the regulations which control tanker traffic in the Strait of Juan de Fuca, at the present time Canada is spending some $16 million in new radar installations which are not being installed on the United States side. Can the minister advise whether we have entered into any joint enforcement agreement or regulations in that strait? The Minister of Transport may be more aware of this. Can the minister advise whether we have come to any agreement with regard to joint enforcement of tanker regulations with the United States, since those tankers will be using both sides of the strait, coming in and going out?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, we have been making very good progress in that regard. We are confident we will have a full vessel management system in place.

LABOUR RELATIONS

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN FLOUR MILLS OF QUEBEC AND UNION

Mr. Jacques Lavoie (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, my question was for the Minister of Labour, but as he is absent from the House just now, I shall direct it to the Prime Minister.

Some time ago, I asked a question in the House concerning the millers' strike in Quebec, and it seems that although the government appointed a mediator, the millers are still on strike because of their union's dilemma with the Anti-Inflation Act. Could the Prime Minister, or the Minister of Labour who has just joined us, advise the House how the bargaining involving these striking millers is progressing? Because I do not know whether the minister has heard my question, I shall repeat it.

[English]

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker, I met with the CSN yesterday afternoon in Montreal. We discussed the flourmill situation and some other matters. The CSN requested that my officers, with the Labour Department in Montreal, intervene to see if some settlement could not be reached with the employers. I agreed that they would do so, and they undertook to do so today.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

PERSONS FROM WHOM GOVERNMENT WANTS AGREEMENT ON RESTRAINT PRIOR TO ENDING CONTROLS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister, as one who has spent several years studying the position of the government on controls. I would like to know what the government's present position is, fully realizing of course that it may be different somewhere down the line. Since the Prime Minister seems to be mistaken as to what is in the green paper, I would like to ask him who the principal decision-makers are from whom the government will be seeking a report. I ask this question because the Prime Minister seems to be under the illusion this has been spelled out, and it has not been. I think not only myself but the people of Canada are interested in knowing what the government's policy is. To whom is the government looking for a binding commitment on a position of voluntary restraint as soon as possible?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He is talking about an election promise.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I recognize the hon. gentleman has spent a great deal of time thinking about the problem of controls. In the question of controls, of course, he would want to be reminded that timing, like politics, is all. Perhaps he did not consider that aspect enough when studying this question.

● (1450)

Mr. Paproski: His timing was not at fault. It took you nearly 18 months to implement his ideas.

Mr. Trudeau: At some periods of the economic cycle the timing is wrong for controls. At other times in the economic cycle—

An hon. Member: Like, after an election.

Mr. Trudeau: —it is right. As to the main economic decision makers, Mr. Speaker, I could, of course, name a whole series of them. These are people with whom we hope to enter into the proper kind of dialogue in response to the green paper and get the kind of agreement I alluded to earlier. Those whom we have met have been principally but not exclusively union leaders and representatives of large corporations; we have also had occasion to meet with many other groups across the country, and our consultations continue through the green paper, and directly.

TYPE OF AGREEMENT BEING SOUGHT PRIOR TO ENDING CONTROLS

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question without getting involved in the relationship between timing and, shall we say, frankness.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanfield: In view of the importance of the duration of the control period to Canadians generally, as well as to people whom the Prime Minister may be meeting privately, I ask, is the Prime Minister prepared to say precisely, not in the vague generalities of the green paper, what the position is, what kind of agreement the Prime Minister and the Minister of Finance are seeking which would bind the principal decision makers of the country. In other words, is this a serious position on the part of the government, or is it one of those timing propositions to keep things up in the air until it is suitable to announce something different to the Canadian people?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in introducing the notion of frankness the hon. member may be intent on proclaiming his own virtues but I can assure him that, to me, his answer spells out this: he has not understood what I said in my previous answer. In controls, whether of prices and incomes or, for that matter, controls of the exchange rate or controls of the dollar, it seems to me frankness is always desirable but the decision must be made almost simultaneously with the announcement of it.

Mr. Paproski: Surreptitiously.

Mr. Trudeau: Therefore, I am somewhat puzzled by the introduction of the notion of frankness, as though this were something which existed for all time, as though it is written in the mind of God that controls will come in at a certain time. The hon. member knows that you do not announce those kinds of controls before they are actually brought in.

Mr. Stanfield: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I am quite prepared to accept that my right hon. friend outmanoeuvred me a few years ago; but if he intends to take the position that frankness is a matter of timing, that is something the Canadian people, excepting himself, will have some difficulty understanding. I ask the right hon. gentleman if the question of confidence in this country is not sufficiently serious for the government to come clean. Instead of playing games with me or anybody else is the Prime Minister or the Minister of Finance prepared, rather than issuing some wishy-washy, woolly green paper, to indicate to the people of Canada at this crucial time in our economy what the government's policy is, if it has one?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Paproski: Come on, Pierre, answer.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I hear hon. members opposite urging a continuation of this dialogue of the deaf. I assure the hon. member that in my view his introduction of frankness is completely irrelevant. I did not indicate that frankness was a question of timing. I indicated that there was no great virtue in deciding a year or two in advance that you are going to control the exchange rate of the Canadian dollar one year or two down the road. You do that when you come to it and decide then.

Mr. Stevens: Answer the question.

DATE OF DECISION ON PROVISION OF FUNDS FOR URBAN TRANSIT PROJECTS

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. As the minister is aware, urban commuter transit in Canada it still in serious need of help. In the Toronto area in particular the expansion of Union Station, and other programs, has been postponed until word is received if the federal government will provide additional financial assistance as promised. In view of this climate of uncertainty, and even the encouraging news that CN actually made a profit of some $11.8 million in the last fiscal year and could help to finance some of these improvements, I ask the minister if any further decision has been reached regarding federal funding for public urban transit; if so, can he say what the decision is; if not, when can we expect one?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, a further decision has not been reached. We made it clear to the province of Ontario that existing programs can be of assistance in projects such as the renovation of Union Station. Substantial assistance is available but they have not yet addressed themselves to these programs.

RAIL LINE ABANDONMENT RECOMMENDED BY HALL COMMISSION—INQUIRY AS TO FORM OF APPEAL AVAILABLE

Mr. Craig Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Since certain areas of western Canada will be severely affected by the Hall Commission's proposals for rail abandonment, particularly region 4 area of western Manitoba, and since it is proposed to close some of those lines as early as December 31, 1977, can the minister say what form of appeal is available to those communities which feel the report deals unfairly with their areas?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised that the hon. member would ask that question. I understood from other members of his party the other day that there was practically unanimous support for the recommendations of the Hall Commission.

Mr. Paproski: That is not what he said. Why don't you listen?

Mr. Lang: Certainly, the job of the Hall Commission—

Mr. Paproski: That is not what he said.

[Mr. Trudeau.]

Mr. Lang: It appears that the Conservatives again have found after reading the report that it is different from their first impression of it.

Mr. Paproski: How do you know? Have you read it?

Mr. Lang: Yes, I have read it. I also said, and I thought it was agreed by all sides, that the Hall Commission did a superb job of hearing people, receiving their viewpoints and analyzing the impact on communities and areas of sensitive proposals concerning rail service. The commission had to determine what rail service could be maintained, given the serious cost to the taxpayer of upgrading and maintaining the system. The Hall Commission did this job, and I will continue to pay a great deal of respect to the recommendations of that commission.

Mr. Mazankowski: Why don't you try answering the question?

Mr. Stewart (Marquette): Mr. Speaker, I am surprised at the minister playing politics with something so serious for Manitoba.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: Why don't you pull the plug, Pierre?

Mr. Stewart (Marquette): I gather from the minister's reply that there is no right of appeal given to the communities of western Canada. They cannot appeal the Hall Commission proposals.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, to the extent that the question asks for legal advice, I suppose it is not appropriate. Obviously, there are provisions in law in relation to the actual steps to be taken to implement the recommendations of the Hall Commission. Indeed, as the law now stands, the Canadian Transport Commission has the final role in approving the abandonment of any line. They will be looking at that question progressively as they follow the timetables supplied by the Hall Commission. Of course, the Hall Commission did recommend that we in parliament move to a different form of approval for those discontinuations, and that is a matter which we may be considering when we have had time to analyse the Hall report.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

POSSIBILITY QUEBEC WILL BE REIMBURSED FOR NOT USING FORCE

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

● (1500)

The Minister of Justice of the province of Quebec having indicated clearly that he would continue the representations made by his predecessor concerning the recovery of some $300 or $400 million for the service rendered for many years by the Quebec Police Force in lieu of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, would the Prime Minister tell the House whether or not his government will seriously consider this request in the next federal-provincial conference of justice ministers?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the question is hypothetical since I am not aware of any federal-provincial conference and I do not know the agenda of that hypothetical conference.

Mr. Matte: On a supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

In the statement he made on May 14, the Quebec Minister of Justice indicated quite clearly that he would file such a request at the next conference. Therefore, would the Prime Minister tell us if his government has received such a request from the Quebec Minister of Justice about the reimbursement of these $300 or $400 million and how does he intend to deal with it?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) just told me that a federal-provincial conference is indeed scheduled but to his knowledge this item is not on the agenda. If the Minister of Justice of Quebec wants to contact us, he knows where to find us. I do not think he has to go through the Social Credit member.

Mr. Lavoie: I rise on a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Hochelaga on a question of privilege.

Mr. Lavoie: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. You will recall that last week I raised that same question with respect to an incident with the Canadian National, and I must thank the Chair for having made the necessary arrangements. But yesterday, after getting some information, and since the controller involved seems to recognize his mistake and to worry about the whole thing, I should simply like to ask the Chair not to seek the excuses I asked for, because that man got his lesson and has the right to earn his living like any other citizen. Therefore, I should like to ask the Chair that that man not suffer from any retaliation. As far as I am concerned, that incident is closed.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the House will be pleased to hear of the attitude of the hon. member. I was concerned, first of all, not so much with the details of the presentation of the pass, because if a member is issued with a pass, it can scarcely be against his privilege not to be given the rights that accompany that pass if he has not got the pass with him. That was not the problem. I was more concerned about the level of service of a federal agency to either a member or any other citizen, and in fact I want to make this very clear. I was not concerned that the individual member on the CNR staff at the time was not comfortable in communicating in either the French or the English language. I intended to express concern that there would be nobody on the train representing the Crown corporation who could do so, and I am sure that that was not the case at the time and it was never the intention of the hon. member to convey that impression. I am pleased that the matter has been attended to by the hon. member raising it and that it is now closed.

[Translation]

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin) on a question of privilege.

Mr. Fortin: Mr. Speaker, are we now on motions? Mr. Speaker, considering that the CBC did not comment on the motion moved by Social Credit members yesterday in the House pursuant to the Standing Order governing allotted days, I think that Canadians were not properly informed and that anyhow the inquiry on the CRTC will not be fair to the Canadian public as regards the business of the House, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That this House do now adjourn to allow a discussion on the position and the treatment of the CBC as regards the House of Commons, particularly each opposition party in this House.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I am sure the hon. member for Lotbinière realizes that the motion to adjourn the House is pursuant to the standing orders provided, however, the hon. member gets the floor pursuant to the standing orders and not on a question of privilege as he is now trying to do. In a moment, on motions, the hon. member will have the opportunity to put this motion forward.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Today is Thursday and I wonder if the deputy House leader on the government side would like to inform the House of his intentions with respect to the legislative program to be presented by the government to the House through the course of the next week. While he is doing that, I wonder if he might consider as well designating next Tuesday and Wednesday as allotted days.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, we have no hesitation with regard to the latter portion of the hon. member's request. Indeed, the government was ready to designate next Tuesday and Wednesday as opposition days.

First of all I would like to thank hon. members for their co-operation as it seems that the legislative program is proceeding apace. We hope to terminate third reading of Bill C-25 this afternoon. We will then proceed to consideration of Bill C-3, the deposit insurance bill; then go on to Bill C-8, the Satisfied Securities Act; then Bill C-12, the tax conventions, and if we have time, and with the continued co-operation of hon. members opposite, we hope to proceed to Bill C-26, the scientific activities bill.

Mr. Paproski: What about the Canadian anthem?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I wonder whether the deputy House leader would like to go any further, in order that the co-operation, which is quite usual from this side of the House, may be continued, and let us know what other items of legislation might be forthcoming when we deal expeditiously with the bills he has named.

Mr. Blais: Yes, Mr. Speaker, and I am pleased to have that further co-operation. Subject to alteration of the following order and depending on the bills that will be reported, with that co-operation, out of committees in the next few days, we intend to proceed with Bill C-13, the historic sites bill; Bill S-3, the insurance companies bill, and Bill C-6, the diplomatic immunities bill. In view of the co-operation that the hon. member offers, I would ask also for the co-operation of hon. members opposite at the committee stage in order that we get some of the important bills out of committees and into the House so that we can proceed with them prior to the end of June.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): In this atmosphere of co-operation I wonder if the acting government House leader will indicate when we will deal with Bill C-30, which has to do with Heritage Day?

Mr. Blais: In due course, Mr. Speaker.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

MOTION TO ADJOURN

Mr. André Fortin (Lotbinière): Mr. Speaker, during the proceedings of the House of Commons on May 12, 1977, as reported in Hansard at page 5554, the Chair recognized that points raised by the Social Credit Party of Canada concerning Radio-Canada could not be considered as a question of privilege but as very valid grievances, particularly those of the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) and mine. Since the corporation did not change its attitude after the by-elections and the work of the members of the Social Credit Party of Canada continues to be completely ignored by the corporation, we consider that we cannot wait any longer for the results of the CRTC inquiry and that the matter justifies an emergency debate. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That this House do now adjourn.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin), seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert), moves:

That this House do now adjourn.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members have risen:

Mr. Speaker: Call in the members.

MIRABEL AIRPORT

Question No. 1,830—Mr. Beatty:

1. Will Mirabel Airport suffer a deficit of nearly $50 million by the end of this fiscal year and, if so, for what reason has there been a significant revenue shortfall?

2. For what reasons did Mirabel planners not adjust the Airport's financial plans to take into account the shift in DOT policy which diverted some foreign airline landing rights from Montreal to Toronto?

3. If present conditions remain the same, what will be the projected Mirabel Airport deficit for the fiscal year 1977-78?

4. (a) What avenues is the government presently exploring to lower the Mirabel Airport deficit (b) can an announcement be expected for an airport policy change and, if so, on what date?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): 1. Yes, the forecast deficit is $47,500,000. This forecast deficit includes an amount of $43,000,000 carried as the interest charges on the construction costs. Revenues have not reached forecasted levels due to the fact that actual aircraft movement at the Airport was not as great as forecast. One contributing factor was the general downturn in North Atlantic sector traffic for the period in question. In addition connecting flights between Mirabel and other domestic points did not provide a good level of service, in terms of frequency and scheduling.

2. During the development of the Mirabel Airport the financial plans were adjusted periodically to take into account many factors such as construction costs, inflation and anticipated airport activity which included changes due to foreign carriers being granted landing rights in Toronto. Landing rights for some foreign airlines were not diverted from Montreal to Toronto but extended to include the right to serve both Montreal and Toronto.

3. The following financial information has been extracted from the 1977/78 Main Estimates. Operating and Maintenance Costs, $25,403,000; Forecast Revenues, $29,301,000; Surplus, $3,898,000; Amortization, Depreciation and Interest Charges, $60,458,000; Net Loss, $56,560,000.

4. (a) A number of avenues are being studied at the present time to decrease the Mirabel Airport deficit. (i) Mirabel Airport is funded through the Airport Revolving Fund of Transport Canada. The structure of this fund and the means whereby the airports in the fund can be made financially viable are being studied. It is expected that the results of this study will be available by the summer of 1977. (ii) It is anticipated that traffic growth on the North Atlantic will generate new revenue. (iii) Landing fees and other common system charges were increased during the present fiscal year and have contributed to generating additional revenue. (iv) Operating and maintenance procedures at Mirabel are constantly reviewed to ensure that operating and maintenance costs are kept to a minimum, so that new revenue can be applied to retirement of the capital debt. (v) A study is in progress to determine the extent to which realignment of traffic at and between Mirabel and Dorval is feasible, with the aim of increasing the use of Mirabel, (thus increasing revenues) by providing more convenient connecting flights. (b) The study relating to the use of Mirabel will be completed in the Spring and following discussions with the air carriers and other principals concerned, I expect to be in a position to outline any changes proposed for the operating of Mirabel early in the Summer.

CHARTER OF SHIPS TO CNR ATLANTIC REGION

Question No. 1,976—Mr. MacKay:

1. From January 1975 to date, have any of the ships (a) Mount Blair (b) Sandy Point (c) Glencoe (d) Ambrose Foote (e) Stevenville (f) Marine Transport (g) Marine Voyageur (h) Newfoundland Coast been chartered to the CNR Atlantic Region and, if so, in each case (i) on what date (ii) at what cost (iii) what was the duration of the charter (iv) what is its cubic capacity (v) who is the owner?

2. Was there any cost to CNR for repairs/refits to and/or maintenance of the ships and, if so, in what amount?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1. From January 1975 to date, the following ships in question were chartered to CN Marine: (a) Mount Blair; (b) Sandy Point; (c) Glencoe; (d) Ambrose Foote; (e) Stephenville; (f) Marine Transport; (g) Marine Voyager; (h) Newfoundland Coast. (i) The date each vessel was placed on charter is listed below: (a) Mount Blair, 19/06/75; (b) Sandy Point, 19/06/75; (c) Glencoe, 01/09/75 and 29/07/76; (d) Ambrose Foote, 30/06/75 and01/06/76; (e) Stephenville, 30/06/75; (f) Marine Transport, 28/08/75 and 25/05/76; (g) Marine Voyager, 17/06/75, 25/05/76 and 24/11/76; (h) Newfoundland Coast, 20/05/75 and 26/05/76. (ii) The rate of charter is considered privileged information between the owner and CN Marine in that bids were received in a competitive situation. In order to protect the shipowners' interest, this information is held in confidence. (iii) The duration of each vessel's charter during 1975 and 1976 was as follows: (a) Mount Blair, 185 days 1975; (b) Sandy Point, 193 days 1975; (c) Glencoe, 104 days 1975, 142 days 1976; (d) Ambrose Foote, 129 days 1975, 160 days 1976; (e) Stephenville, 156 days 1975; (f) Marine Transport, 125 days 1975, 220 days 1976; (g) Marine Voyager, 196 days 1975, 274 days 1976; (h) Newfoundland Coast, 224 days 1975, 182 days 1976. (iv) The cubic capacity of the vessels in question is as follows: (a) Mount Blair, 34,699; (b) Sandy Point, 42,000; (c) Glencoe, 60,907; (d) Ambrose Foote, 8,245; (e) Stephenville, 16,000; (f) Marine Transport, 51,400; (g) Marine Voyager, 38,000; (h) Newfoundland Coast, 90,000. (v) The vessel owners are as follows: (a) Mount Blair, Claymore Shipping Ltd.; (b) Sandy Point, Stephenville Shipping Ltd.; (c) Glencoe, D. Frampton & Co. Ltd.; (d) Ambrose Foote, J.B. Foote & Sons Ltd.; (e) Stephenville, Stephenville Shipping Ltd.; (f) Marine Transport, Marine Transport Ltd.; (g) Marine Voyager, Marine Voyager Ltd.; (h) Newfoundland Coast, Newfoundland Marine Services Ltd.

2. Each vessel is chartered on a time charter basis whereby all maintenance and refit are the responsibility of the Owner and the cost of same is included in the charter rate.

CNR—AMOUNT ON BOOKS OF PENSION FUND

Question No. 2,023—Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre):

1. What was the total amount of money on the books of the pension funds of the Canadian National Railways as at (a) December 31, 1974 (b) December 31, 1975 (c) December 31, 1976?

2. What rate of interest was earned on these funds during (a) 1974 (b) 1975 (c) 1976?

3. What amount of interest was credited to these funds during the years ending (a) December 31, 1974 (b) December 31, 1975 (c) December 31, 1976?

4. What amount of money was added to these funds from employee contributions during the years ending (a) December 31, 1974 (b) December 31, 1975 (c) December 31, 1976?

5. What amount of money was added to these funds as regular or current contributions by the Canadian National Railways during the years ending (a) December 31, 1974 (b) December 31, 1975 (c) December 31, 1976?

6. What amount of money was added to these funds in any other way by the Canadian National Railways during the years ending (a) December 31, 1974 (b) December 31, 1975 (c) December 31, 1976?

7. Is money owed to the above funds by the Canadian National Railways and, if so, how much and what arrangements are being made to meet such debt?

8. What was the total amount paid out of the above funds in pensions during the years ending (a) December 31, 1974 (b) December 31, 1975 (c) December 31, 1976?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The management of Canadian National Railways advises as follows: 1. As at December 31, 1974, $1,170,070,599; as at December 31, 1975, $1,295,992,657; as at December 31, 1976, $1,461,873,667.

2. To calculate the yield we have used the Statistics Canada formula, under which the investment is deemed to be opening investments plus closing investments, less earnings divided by two: On this basis, the yield is: 1974, 5.76 per cent; 1975, 5.95 per cent; 1976, 6.33 per cent.

3. Year ended December 31, 1974, $61,131,731; year ended December 31, 1975, $69,727,964; year ended December 31, 1976, $83,377,841.

4.	Year ended	Net
	December 31, 1974	$ 47,897,419
	December 31, 1975	51,609,714
	December 31, 1976	50,057,197
5.	Year ended December 31, 1974	$ 83,838,271
	Year ended December 31, 1975	94,746,365
	Year ended December 31, 1976	116,673,842
6.	Year ended December 31, 1974	$ 12,030,905
	Year ended December 31, 1975	14,766,374
	Year ended December 31, 1976	25,080,781

7. At December 31, 1976 Canadian National Railways owed $4,442,995 representing December items. This amount was paid in January, 1977.

8. Year ended December 31, 1974, $84,672,803; Year ended December 31, 1975, $93,567,159; Year ended December 31, 1976, $109,308,650.

ST. LAWRENCE SEAWAY AUTHORITY

Question No. 2,069—Mr. Laprise:

In (a) 1974 (b) 1975 (c) 1976, what interest was charged to the St. Lawrence Seaway Authority and what amount (i) has been paid (ii) is outstanding?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority advises as follows:

	TOTAL INTEREST
	Charged	Paid	Outstanding
(a) Jan. 1-Dec. 31, 1974 (12 Mos.)	$40,899,644	$25,599,644	$15,300,000
(b) Jan. 1/75-Mar. 31/76 (15 Mos.)*	54,428,110	24,828,110	29,600,000
(c) Apr. 1/76-Mar. 31/77 (12 Mos.)	46,175,559	21,175,559	25,000,000

*By Order-in-Council P.C. 1975-799, dated April 8, 1975, the financial year of The St. Lawrence Seaway Authority was changed from the calendar year to the fiscal year. This resulted in a fifteen month accounting period from January 1, 1975, to March 31, 1976 and is reflected in the above figures.

IMPORT/EXPORT CONTAINER TRAFFIC MOVING VIA UNITED STATES PORTS

Question No. 2,086—Mr. Crouse:

1. What action has the government taken over the past years to stop the flow of containers with Canadian import/export goods via US ports, in order to help maritime and St. Lawrence ports to retain this traffic?

2. How many more longshoremen would be employed in Canadian ports if such traffic would have moved via Canadian ports?

3. Will the government take any action, in view of the recent statement made by the chairman of the Federal Maritime Commission, to investigate the introduction of legislation in the US Congress which will force all carriers to file rates via Canadian ports?

4. Will the government require the American steamship lines to file their rates with the Canadian Transport Commission?

5. Will the government require the Canadian Transport Commission to scrutinize the rates filed to ascertain whether or not they are compensatory?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises as follows: 1. The government has developed competitive container facilities at major maritime and St. Lawrence ports and contacts users of United States ports to influence utilization of Canadian ports.

2. Due to the difficulty in accurately determining Canadian traffic through United States ports and the various productivity levels for different types of cargo at each port, the net effect on manpower requirements of routing all Canadian traffic through Canadian ports cannot be measured.

3. The government will take whatever action it considers necessary after examining the United States legislation.

4. The government will consider what action would be appropriate after examining the United States legislation.

5. See answer to 4 above.

FEDERAL EMPLOYEES ENGAGED IN PROTECTION AND POLICING OF PUBLIC PROPERTY

Question No. 2,166—Mr. Stevens:

As of December 31 (a) 1968 (b) 1976, what was the number of federal employees engaged in the protection and policing of public property?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): (a) 174; (b) 773.

NOTE: There has been an increase of 599 members so employed during the period involved. This growth is almost exclusively attributable to the creation, and expansion within the Airport Policing Branch, which increased from 66 members in 1968 to 646 members as of December 31, 1976, a total of 580 members.

REVENUE FROM COMPANIES OPERATING TERMINALS USED BY MANCHESTER LINES, CAST GROUP AND CP SHIPS

Question No. 2,217—Mr. Forrestall:

1. For (a) 1974 (b) 1975 (c) 1976, what was the total revenue collected by the National Harbours Board from companies operating the terminal used by (i) Manchester Lines at Montreal (ii) the CAST Group at Montreal (iii) CP ships at Quebec City?

2. In each case, since 1970, was paving or repaving undertaken and, if so, is it fully and directly being recovered from the operator and, if not, what government agency paid for the paving or repaving?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises as follows: 1.

		(i)	(ii)	(iii)
(a)	1974	$826,631	$ 849,350	$802,655
(b)	1975	647,487	876,178	519,081
(c)	1976	708,375	1,007,755	752,773

2. Original paving costs were included in the completed construction costs which are recoverable through terminal revenues, and no subsequent paving costs have been incurred.

OCTOBER 1970 CRISIS

Question No. 2,220—Mr. Matte:

1. During the October 1970 crisis, were the families and residences of (a) Senators (b) (i) MPs (ii) MLAs (c) other citizens put under the surveillance of the Army and, if so, how many in each case?

2. Were persons desirous of obtaining such surveillance required to submit a request to a committee and, if so, how many were on the committee?

3. Did the Quebec Provincial Police and other police bodies participate in the operation?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. The Canadian Forces, in support of various police agencies, provided protection to the families and residences of some Senators, Members of Parliament, Members of the Legislative Assembly, and government officials. The numbers varied from day to day throughout the operation.

2. No.

3. Yes, as part of their normal police duties.

DEPRECIATION ON ICEBREAKING VESSELS

Question No. 2,351—Mr. Forrestall:

1. For the year (a) 1970 (b) 1971 (c) 1972 (d) 1973 (e) 1974 (f) 1975 (g) 1976, what would be the dollar value of depreciation on all icebreaking vessels owned by the government assuming that the value of the vessels is depreciated over 20 years?

2. For the same years, what is the government's best estimate as to the portion of that depreciation which should be pro rated to icebreaking services in the St. Lawrence River and the Gulf of St. Lawrence in aid of navigation for ships destined to ports on the St. Lawrence River?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): 1. Dollar value of depreciation on all icebreaking vessels (Value Depreciated Over 20 years) 1970-71, $6,082,954; 1971-72, $6,138,845; 1972-73, $6,138,417; 1973-74, $5,772,783; 1974-75, $5,801,-972; 1975-76, $5,821,055; 1976-77, $5,849,001.

2. Estimate as to the portion of the depreciation which should be prorated to icebreaking services in the St. Lawrence river and the Gulf of St. Lawrence in Aid of navigation for ships designed to ports on the St. Lawrence River. Based on 1975-76 Costs: Total icebreaking services, $20,919,326; Total icebreaking costs (St. Lawrence river and Gulf of St. Lawrence), $9,788,202;

$$\frac{9,788,202}{20,919,326} = 46.8\%$$

Portion of depreciation which should be prorated, 46.8 per cent.

MIGRANT WORKERS

Question No. 2,350—Mr. Rynard:

1. For each year 1970 to 1976, by province, how many migrant workers entered the country for the purpose of harvesting (a) fruit (b) vegetable (c) tobacco (d) other crops?

2. For the same years, what was the (a) country of origin (b) cost of transportation to and from the country of origin (c) average daily wage (d) average number of man hours worked daily (e) cost of food and shelter provided?

3. For the same years, by province, what was the total amount of loss, if any, sustained by growers due to unharvested crops?

Return tabled.

[English]

Mr. O'Sullivan: Mr. Speaker, I wish to draw to the attention of the parliamentary secretary questions Nos. 1,941 and 1,945 which I placed on the order paper on February 24. I believe the parliamentary secretary will admit that I have not abused the order paper with an abundance of questions. These two concern two Liberal party hacks who have been inflicted upon the civil service of this country. I think the answers are being sat upon. I would like some answers.

Mr. Goodale: Without at all accepting any of the gratuitous elaboration which the hon. member just presented to the House, I will do my best to try to get the answers for him.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Before resuming the debate on Bill C-25 and recognizing the hon. member for Moncton (Mr. Jones) I might do as I did on Tuesday pursuant to the adjustments we have made for this month in our proceedings.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised on the adjournment motion at 6 p.m. are as follows: the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie)—Sports—use of post office for delivery of departmental mail; the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen)—Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—appointment of Mr. O'Neil to head public affairs programming; the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke)—Income Tax—legality of inclusion of benefits from low interest loans as income for tax purposes.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

CANADIAN HUMAN RIGHTS

MEASURE TO PROTECT PRIVACY OF INDIVIDUALS

The House resumed consideration of the motion (Mr. Basford) that Bill C-25 to extend the present laws of Canada that proscribe discrimination and protect the privacy of individuals be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. Leonard C. Jones (Moncton): As I was saying before the House rose at one o'clock it was not my intention, at first, to speak on this bill. I have now had an opportunity to read the measure more carefully and although I listened intently to what the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) had to say, as far as I am concerned it really does not protect one's freedom of association or one's lack of freedom of association; it does not protect an individual from the ravages and sins created by discrimination by political affiliation or the lack of political affiliation, or against discrimination by language or lack of language.

In my own constituency, or, for that matter, in various constituencies across the country, people are being discriminated against in a subtle manner by reason of language, or the lack of it. Under existing employment and hiring practices and promotion practices in the public service, the Armed Forces, Crown agencies and the private sector, too, there certainly are discriminatory practices. Sincere and honourable employees are being punished by reason of language or lack of language. The Official Languages Act and its messy implementation may very well be part of the cause of this language discrimination. The minister tells us this is one of the reasons it was left out of the bill before us. When one speaks to English-speaking public servants and to numerous citizens in the private sector, it becomes obvious there has been discrimination which should have been prohibited by this bill. This discrimination creates hardship and financial difficulty not only for the employees concerned but for their families and all associated with them. Even as far as the Parliamentary staff here on the Hill is concerned, there appears to be clear evidence of inequitable employment practices based on language. I am reliably informed that in at least one branch of the parliamentary staff there is obvious discrimination. I have already drawn this to the attention of Your Honour and I hope the situation will be corrected.

Right here among members of parliament there is discrimination by reason of political affiliation or lack of it. I refer to my own position—my inability to become a member of any of the committees of this House. This type of discrimination runs through the entire system of this House. This type of discrimination runs through the entire system of politics in this nation and I submit it is time it should be halted. This is the type of legislation which should be preventing these two types of discrimination—discrimination by reason of political affiliation, or the lack of it, and discrimination on the basis of language or the lack of it. This situation could have been corrected in Bill C-25. I believe the minister had the power to do so and he should have taken it upon himself here and now to ensure that the ravages and sins of discriminations should not continue in perpetuity.

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I rise to speak on this bill which finally codifies the Liberal—this government's abhorrence of any discrimination against Canada's citizens.

As a woman, and one who comes from a minority racial background—a minority which suffered everything including torture and genocide for 2,000 years—I personally welcome this legislation. I have known discrimination because of race, ethnic origin, religion and sex. Probably, now, I will face it on the basis of age. On the job, sexual discrimination has even been worse than discrimination because of race or ethnic background. It was done more blatantly because of sex. It was done as of right by men. I remember being told I would be the managing editor of my newspaper if I wasn't a woman, and I accepted that situation as being right and proper. I applied for the job as police chief for the City of Vancouver. Twenty-two people applied. I was the only woman. My credentials were considered among the best, but because I was a woman I was not even interviewed. I did not really care whether I became chief or not. I just wanted to let women know that they ought to apply for these executive jobs because one day there would be a human rights bill in Canada, such as is now before us, which would assure that they have, at least, an equal chance to work at jobs of this sort.

I welcome the bill also on behalf of my constituents. At least half of the population of Vancouver-Kingsway is composed, like that of all Canada, of women; many of them in my riding are mothers alone, working women who must hold their jobs and support their families at salaries lower than men have the potential to earn. The costs for food, lodging and the raising of children are the same for women breadwinners as they are for men. However, the opportunities for promotion, or leaving the women job ghettos until this bill comes into force will be nil.

My constituency needs this bill because it is a microcosm of the entire Canadian variety of ethnic cultural beauty. This mix, however, is not recognized by some as beauty. Discrimination does exist. As an illustration of the mix of nations in my riding of Vancouver Kingsway I cite last month's international night at one elementary school—Selkirk. Children of 39 nations, with their parents, jammed into a comparatively small auditorium, sharing their food, their art, their music, dance and costume. It is hard to believe that such beauty can be juxtaposed against cruel incidents of discrimination.

I welcome the bill, also, for the reason mentioned by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather). It could be atonement for that terrible, black time in Canadian history when the Japanese Canadians of British Columbia were herded from their homes and ridiculed, their property confiscated and their lives uprooted. The newspapers could, then,—and did—produce discriminatory stories calling them "yellow people" and sneering at their lifestyle and culture.

I welcome this legislation too, because racism, such as we saw then, is starting to bloom again in the West. Last week, a Vancouver newspaper of considerable stature, the Vancouver Province of the Southam chain, lifted a phrase from a police record to decorate a crime series. All the stories carried a fancy, circled design throughout with the words "Greek connection". I presume the next time an Italian, Chinese, Jew, a Pakistani or Indian gets into high profile trouble there will be decorative art around large letters spelling out "Italian connection", "Chinese connection", "Pakistani connection", "Indian connection" and so on. It may be that passage of this bill will cause the people responsible for this sort of racial slur to think twice before publishing in this manner.

This bill is also timely in view of the Parti Québécois plan to codify discrimination and a seemingly developing attack on all who are not French. Any time a government strives for ethnic purity, its direction is first to exclude from opportunity, joy and even freedom those who are not of that selected racial group. I believe that if René Lévesque continues along his present route with his vocally militant associates—more dangerous, I think, than he himself—we will have a similar situation to that created by Hitler when he sought Aryan purity, or to that in Lebanon where the Moslems are striving for religious purity. I am proud to support a government that introduced this legislation. It is only a pity it took so many years.

Yesterday the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), a man I respect and admire very much as a learned member of the justice and legal affairs committee, criticized the government with much support from very senior members who were in this House when that party had its brief stint at government. Why, when they formed the government of this land, did they not introduce a law of this sort? Yes, they brought in the toothless Bill of Rights. At least, it seems toothless to a woman who has lived with discrimination. Before that bill and after that bill discrimination continued without abatement or conscience, as I am personally aware. I believed then it was acceptable for men to be in control and for women to be subjugated. I had to accept it, and that Bill of Rights was a door closed against the advancement of women such as myself, as well as against different races.

Mr. O'Sullivan: Nonsense.

Mrs. Holt: My many friends of many races and every woman I knew in the work force were impotent against rules made for men, by men and administered by men. All jobs were administered by men and the Bill stood in its pretty frame on the wall—without meaning to them. Personally—hon. gentleman may disagree—I felt that it inscribed the denial of my equal opportunity.

Mr. O'Sullivan: You are dead wrong.

Mrs. Holt: It did many things to protect people, and it was there and was better than nothing. But hon. members could have brought in a complete human rights bill and saved many women and many races of my generation from hardship and pain of discrimination—could have given them an equal chance. Hon. members had the opportunity that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) had and which he has carried through. I just mention that in passing.

I am proud of this bill because it recognizes, in the language that it uses, that laws and opportunities exist for two sexes in this nation. I was interested to note that in every piece of legislation which has passed through committees the male pronoun has been used. Everyone self-righteously says that we have to look at the Interpretation Act. The Interpretation Act is the grossest form of subliminal discrimination which exists in Canadian statutes. But this bill is unique in that this type of sexist language has been expunged from it. Furthermore, the bill is written not just for lawyers but for people.

I do have some concerns about the bill. To my mind, it is not perfect. I wish the minister had deleted clause 14(b) which provides for exceptions. Any time a law allows for exceptions, the powerful and the rich can find a loophole. The minister, on the best advice of the lawyers of his department, added an amendment. I would have preferred it to be spelled out as recommended by the hon. member for New Westminster (Mr. Leggatt), so there was no doubt that the onus is on the employer to prove the grounds for the exception. The minister claims that his amendment does this, but it is not strong enough for one who has seen the powerful employer in large companies discriminate in the cruellest ways against women and those of different races so far as employment opportunities are concerned.

The amendment that I would like to see is the one put forward in committee to provide that the onus shall be on the employer to prove that the occupational requirement is bona fide. This is subtly provided for in the bill, but not strongly enough. I am a person who does not care for subtlety.

I am sure Canada has the quality of justice minister who, upon finding there is abuse, will correct it. In the meantime I am thankful for this bill. Ms. Lyne Kaye, of the National Action Committee, testified before the justice and legal affairs committee that she had hoped there would be no exceptions made, but in order to see the bill through, she compromised. As a minimum, she wanted a narrowing of those exceptions. She said, as reported at page 9:39 of the committee reports for April 26 last:

We feel it is totally unacceptable as it presently stands—

And the minister has changed the bill to meet some of the wishes of the National Action Committee.

—and that the minimum requirement is to have it narrowed right down to seniority and incentive which are the only factors we find reasonable or acceptable.

There are many lawyers I respect. Before I go on to the next part of my speech, I should like to tell the House that the greatest lawyer in this country is going to be in town today, a friend of mine, Mr. Justice George Law Murray. He is not sure if he taught me the law, or I taught him; but he is in town today. I also respect very much the members of the justice committee, with whom I have worked very closely, such as the hon. member for Calgary North (Mr. Woolliams), the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather), the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan), the hon. member for Lafontaine-Rosemont (Mr. Lachance), the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson), the hon. member for Lapointe (Mr. Marceau); and if I have missed anyone who is a lawyer, I apologize. I say this because of what I have to say next.

I have had a long career in the courts, probably handling more cases as a journalist—sometimes five or six a day—than most lawyers handle in a lifetime. But I have also seen the manipulations of lawyers, the cruelty they inflict and the games they play because they know the law. Even if they do not know it, they still use their professional training to confuse and to deal rather ruthlessly and cynically with the average citizen.

I have personal experience of this. I like to be personal because the best proof I have is my own, and it is to be found in the area of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) and the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski). My family has been manipulated out of an estate in Edmonton, and I am sure that every one of us who helped build that estate will spend the rest of our lives fighting the lawyers who know there is much in it for them. I refer to two Edmonton lawyers in private practice and a third lawyer in a trust company, and a so-called trust officer in the famous Canada Trust.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Mind the libel.

Mrs. Holt: We know they have done this, but because we do not have unlimited money—we have hired lawyers, too—we cannot cope with the situation. This is the law in Canada, and it must be happening everywhere in the country because of the laws lawyers in the departments of government write, the laws carried through here by lawyers, and the laws which are administered and manipulated by lawyers in our society. The hon. member can watch the law of libel because he is a lawyer and can play with people's lives, threatening libel. I resent very much what has happened to my family and to untold others at the hands of lawyers in this land.

An hon. Member: The Minister of Justice is a lawyer, too.

Mrs. Holt: The Minister of Justice is a lawyer I happen to respect.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): You must be sure that what you say is true.

Mrs. Holt: The hon. member does not like to have known what goes on in Edmonton, but the benchers there should start looking into their little household. Another behavioural pattern indigenous to lawyers is that they will not fight for a citizen if they endanger one of their brother's careers. That is happening in the hon. member's fair city. I suppose we could retain a lawyer there—and we finally did—one who was not afraid of the system. So doctors do that, too—protect their erring brothers. Some journalists do that, too. This happens daily throughout the nation because the law is written and administered by lawyers.

This bill has minimized the role of the lawyers. It is written in language understandable to the ordinary citizen, and the tribunal which is to be appointed is non-legal. I was originally very concerned about the amendment having to do with appeals moved by the hon. member for Calgary North. I had to decide what was best, a legal tribunal or a three-person, non-legal tribunal. I made the decision that I would feel safer with the human rights bill under a non-legal tribunal, and I voted against that amendment.

An hon. Member: Oh, oh!

Mrs. Holt: Do not feel badly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) has the floor, and I suggest we listen.

Mrs. Holt: I am also concerned about another exception, and that is clause 63(2) of this bill which reads as follows:

Nothing in this act affects any provision of the Indian Act or any provision made under or pursuant to that act.

In committee I voted for the deletion of this subclause, on the motion of the hon. member for Fundy-Royal. I feel very strongly that the Indian Act is extremely discriminatory legislation. It is probably the most discriminatory legislation in the statutes of this country. It has a unique basis of discrimination in that it discriminates on the basis of blood. There is also blatant cruelty to women. In this respect, the discrimination is based on the choice of marriage partner, and this is only directed toward women. This continues, despite the concern of the whole nation—which members on the other side have heard—in regard to that legislation and the injustice it imposes.

It exemplifies the worst inverse discrimination by selecting a small group of people for special favours. It builds what I guess could be a billion dollar establishment around this small group, with a budget which runs around $24 million this year for special privileges which no other Canadians have—no, not even all native people, not all native women, not all who have partial Indian blood, and not the remnants of the Indian nations wiped out by other Indian nations.

I hope the Minister of Justice and the government of Canada will look into cleaning up this act or abolishing it. Rather than bringing peace, comfort and freedom to these people, the government has divided them between themselves and caused them to be weakened throughout the history of this department. It has been a breeding ground for discrimination against women, children and a large number of men. The minister expresses deep concern about the handling of this clause of the bill. He was most sensitive to the concerns of the members of the committee. Perhaps the committee will move one day on this one.

A woman named Mary Two Axe Early came before our committee. She was 72 years of age. I cannot remember whether she told the whole committee, but she told me that the Indian Act should either be abolished, cleaned up or altered considerably. She said that even if the land grants were settled, only a few people would benefit, and that it would not benefit women such as Mary Two Axe Early. Her statements before the committee are probably better than I can paraphrase them. I asked her if she thought there was any benefit in scrubbing the Indian Act. The justice and legal affairs committee report of April 26, at page 9:41, reads:

> The Indian men will never want that Indian Act abolished. They can marry ten white women and all those women will have their rights on the reserves. They are getting money from the government, building homes for them, while their sisters are evicted. They have it too good, they will not want to change it.

She told me that she will never be buried on the reserve near her grandchildren, because she was driven off the reserve even though the wife of her brother, or her cousin—I cannot remember which—who is a white woman, can live in her place on the reserve. Mary Two Axe Early is a native-born Iroquois. The report continues:

> I just wanted to say that I come from the Iroquois confederacy where we were matriarchal, and the government changed us to patriarchal—which is the man. We had clan mothers and I think we had a very good government, social life and everything. All that has changed.

She explained to me that when the Indian Act came into force, the government's dealings were with the Indian Brotherhood; the Indian Sisterhood was ignored.

This bill recognizes human rights. They will actually be realized only when society recognizes these fundamental rights. This bill is a step toward that end. Only when human rights are fully realized will we have a humane and human society.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I want to make just a brief intervention to re-emphasize the point I made on second reading of this bill with regard to clause 8 having to do with immigration. There is a provision in the immigration regulations whereby an applicant aged 35 or over is penalized one point per year to a maximum of ten points. That is totally contrary to the legislation proposed in this bill. Clause 8 deals with employment, the physically handicapped being prohibited employment. Therefore, reference to age is a discriminatory practice and should not be circulated in any form of application for employment.

Any application by immigrants who are sponsored, those who are nominated or individual, independent applications, must be accompanied by a Manpower 1234 form. There are certain exceptions, such as an application for a fiancée or if the individual concerned is going to be bringing in enough money to be deemed an investor in Canada. In those instances the matter of age does not apply. In the normal course of events, an application by a person between 35 and 60 years of age is subject to a penalty of up to 10 points out of 100 points. In order to qualify and to be accepted as an immigrant, 50 points must be obtained, provided the further, and absolutely essential, condition of employment is met.

This piece of legislation is totally hypocritical at this point in time in view of the fact that the government has insisted for years that there shall be a points system. It insisted upon this under the white paper and also under the new bill. To me, this is totally wrong. I do not know how it could have crept in while the government has been encouraging people to hire persons over the age of 35. We know there are problems with group insurance plans, pension plans, and so on. It becomes extraordinarily difficult to fit these people into normal employment. The federal government, the provincial governments and all types of societies have been at pains to try to convince Canadian society which has behaved most mulishly and wrong-headedly in this connection, that any person over 45 was over the hill and unemployable.

I think that is wrong-headed and unjust, and I think the whole Canadian nation should hang their heads in collective shame because we overtly, and all too often silently, consent to this type of practice. We see this perpetrated in the Immigration Act. Why? It is a human right to be 45 years old and not to be discriminated against, in exactly the same way as it is a human right in this country to have a black skin and to be recognized as a human individual, or to observe any creed one chooses.

● (1610)

The Canadian Bill of Rights, passed in 1960, clearly indicates the position of a free Canadian. A number of provincial statutes, such as the Ontario human rights code and the Alberta individual rights code, are extensions of the Canadian Bill of Rights. But this bill is a sort of super blanket introduced in part for cosmetic purposes. Its very definitions condemn this government for allowing the inclusion of provisions in the immigration bill to which I alluded. I spoke to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) about this matter. Although I raised this point with the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) during second reading, he failed to reply to my allegations. I now invite the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, whom I see in the House, to do so.

Mr. Cullen: I am here today.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): The minister is in the House today. Perhaps it is his duty day.

Mr. Cullen: No, it is not. The hon. member is wrong, again.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Since I saw only two ministers in the House, I was persuaded it was the minister's duty day. I know ministers must serve on duty days and must have days away from the House. I do not criticize the minister when I say this, but hope he will comment on the point I have made. I have raised that question in correspondence for I do not know how long. I have raised it in many committee meetings considering the estimates of the minister and of his predecessor. I know officials say, "Here we go again." Mr. Speaker, I raise it for this purpose: I insist that there shall be eradicated from our immigration regulations any and all vestiges of prejudice related to age, and that there shall be removed from the points system as it may be set up any provision whereby any person, by reason of age, shall lose points.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It's fun to be forty.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): I would extend this provision to a person who is the parent of an applicant, provided such person is in good health; in other words, standing up, able to see and to breathe, and not subversive.

Mr. O'Connell: Would that not be discrimination by reason of marital status?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): No; I spoke of a parent. If one applies the rule to a parent, will that be discriminatory? I do not think so. It is a matter of relationship. I am sure the hon. member opposite made his intervention with tongue in both cheeks, as it were.

I say there should be removed from the immigration regulations references to admissibility based on age. I hope the Minister of Manpower and Immigration will intervene on this point because, with all due respect, the House will rise some time in June, all our committees are occupied and I see no prospect of the immigration bill coming back before the end of this month. We hear reports of a new session to be called when the House resumes. Therefore, the immigration bill as presently constituted will die. The minister shakes his head. He must believe in miracles. I do not. I know many people in Canada are exercised about certain provisions of the present immigration bill.

I hope the minister will intervene this afternoon, since there is no way the bill can be reported back, debated, passed on third reading and considered in the other place by the end of the month. We know that members of the other place view with mixed feelings certain provisions of the bill. Consequently, I would advise the minister not to bet on the future viability of that legislation unless we sit all summer. On that unhappy note I will conclude. I ask the Minister of Manpower and Immigration to say how his department hopes to prohibit discrimination by reason of age as presently applied under the points system, and to tell us the proposals concerning a new points system.

[Translation]

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity offered by the study of this bill at the report stage to state very clearly the fact that discrimination exists and that you do not have to go very far to find cases of discrimination based on prejudices since we live in an era of prevailing prejudices and witness a kind of discrimination that effects the very nature of Canada. If there are people who know what discrimination means in this country, these are French Canadians who, for centuries, have had to suffer all sorts of injustices for various reasons which should never have existed in the first place. And just to show you, Mr. Speaker, that I am not speaking through my hat, I will mention a particular case where a casual worker at the employ of the federal government is dismissed while other fellow workers doing very similar work are eventually hired on a permanent basis. This case has been submitted to the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer). It has also been submitted to a few hon. members opposite. It has even been submitted by myself to the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who has not found a solution to it. Why? Because they take into account only the opinions of those who are precisely the cause of the discriminatory practices suffered by this employee.

● (1620)

Being quite informed about one side of the story, I would not want to seem to have prejudices of my own, however, as it is our duty here in this House to raise issues involving cases of discrimination toward individuals whose rights must be respected. To illustrate my opinion on the matter, I will take the liberty of reading to you large extracts from the grievances written to me by that Quebecer who lives at 38 Sylvain St. in Gatineau, Quebec, whose name is Gaëtan Pelletier and who has tried for several months to seek justice. He eventually met me and has written to me this letter that explains his case.

Mr. Speaker, if the facts mentioned in that letter are grounded, and I do not see why I should have doubts regarding the circumstances and the facts related to me by this individual, then, it would seem to demonstrate that it is high time for the law to protect the rights of individuals. Here is the quotation:

Gatineau, April 14, 1977

Mr. René Matte,
Member for Champlain,
House of Commons, Ottawa
Dear Sir:

You will find enclosed a copy of my grievance and the answer I received from the department. You will notice that this answer deals only with the first request.

My union informed me today, April 12, 1977, that they cannot pursue the case further because under the law they cannot defend an individual who left government service. Any how, because of the provisions of the Public Service Staff Relations Act, all cases concerning temporary employees have always been lost.

I believe it would be appropriate to amend sections 90 and 91 of the Public Service Staff Relations Act.

After complaining that the union did not defend his grievance, he continues and I quote:

The minister, Jean-Pierre Goyer, did not make any research, he only asked the reasons to those who are against me. If Parliament can order a royal investigation into the CBC, why could it not do the same to compensate for injustice perpetrated against me?

What does the minister mean by colleagues? If he means the same opportunities as my French-speaking colleagues, it is questionable. But if he means the same opportunities as my English-speaking colleagues, then I say the minister is not well informed.

As for the paragraph where Mr. Goyer says that the union dropped my complaint for discrimination, it is not correct. I did not file an official grievance; all I did was ask what the union could do for me. My informal complaint concerned discrimination between English-speaking and French-speaking employees.

What was even more unfair, was that I managed to make Mr. Mereweather understand that the University of Quebec courses met the requirements and that, moreover, francophones are seriously discriminated against compared to anglophones. I was allowed to register provided my employers agreed. They denied me this opportunity that I had worked so hard to get under the pretext that the office would gain nothing by it. I emphasize that I was the only one able to take that course, as my French-speaking colleagues were too late to register.

The only alternative the union offered me, since a casual employee has no rights, was to inform the media of the facts concerning the unfair treatment I got. Mr. Yvon Billard made it clear to me that the union could not promise me this would work, but that my only chance was the pressure of public opinion. I preferred to let the whole matter drop because anglophone opinion cannot care less about the manner in which francophones are treated.

Mr. Goyer claims that my employers are all of the same origin as myself. In that case, why did they not obtain for French-speaking employees what English-speaking employees already had? How is it that a CR4 managed to get in one hour and 45 minutes what had never been done in 2½ years? How is it that Mr. Fernand Labelle told me that it was not his fault if I was educated in Quebec, that it was not his fault if I had registered with the Quebec CGA? These people may be francophiles, but they are not francophones and even less Quebecers. How is it that before November 15, 1976, the memos from those people were written only in English?

It is strange that Mr. Jean-Pierre Goyer does not dare to give the reasons why the CRTC no longer wanted me. I find it disgusting and immoral that they used facts which I could not disprove. I can give you the list of those reasons after having pressed H. Lane for a month to tell me.

Reasons:

1. My Quebec flag was not appreciated;

2. the employee with whom I shared an office did not want me to turn on the ceiling lights;

3. I am accused of wanting to rearrange the files that I was supposed to update.

Mr. Speaker, the letter goes on in the same vein, with a whole series of facts as reported by that Mr. Pelletier and which, I suggest, show clearly enough that discrimination does exist. Even if those allegations were disproved by claiming that the matter was investigated and that the facts were not so, Mr. Speaker, it would be quite paradoxical on our part to think that someone who seems intelligent would suddenly make up the whole story. Therefore, I believe the situation I am now denouncing has existed for years, and if no more employees have complained, it is not because they had nothing to complain about, but junior employees do not dare claim their rights because they are afraid of retaliation as a result.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, as can be seen, this letter was written only a few months ago, and as I happened to find out many times as well the situation thus denounced, namely that individual case which I submit to my colleagues in this House, happens time and again. For instance, when two young men, one from Quebec and the other from Ontario, with about the same education level, apply for a job, since the whole federal administration system is divised for the benefit of the English-speaking majority, there is basically a discrimination against the French-speaking applicant. This is what happened in the case I have just referred to, where a man was told that he could not be a permanent employee and would be laid off simply because he had been educated in Quebec.

Mr. Speaker, it is unbelievable to see senior officials give answers like that in 1977, particularly when on top of that we now live in confusion about the future of this country from a constitutional standpoint. Those little things where one cannot display the Quebec flag because one works in a federal government office, on what grounds does that person not have the right to do that? So it is time that the law allowed those people who are caught in the tongs of prejudices and discrimination to be able to defend themselves adequately.

I do think that those were the intentions of the minister when he introduced his bill but I wanted to show that this bill must not just remain theory and that there should be no more cases like the one I just spoke about in detail where an individual can suffer serious personal injustices for the simple reason that the laws do not allow him to further defend himself and we have to refer precisely to those against whom grievances are laid. I mention that incident hoping it will enable us to set things right not only in this case but also in all cases of other individuals who in the public service or elsewhere are discriminated against in this way.

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Gaspé): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. member allow a question?

Mr. Matte: Of course.

Mr. Cyr: Mr. Speaker, can the hon. member say whether he would approach the government of the province of Quebec so the Canadian flag would be raised in the schools of the province of Quebec, as is done elsewhere, and to put an end to the current discrimination on the part of the government of the province?

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, I do not see much discrimination there. I think there is no problem in that respect. The hon. member will note that I am wearing a badge that says: Proud to be a Quebecer, with the Canadian flag on top. I do not see any kind of incompatibility between the two, and I do not think there is any such thing since it always gives me great pleasure to send Canadian flags to schools in my riding which they display quite proudly beside the Quebec flag. I think the hon. member is missing the point here. There is no discrimination vis-à-vis the Canadian flag even if Quebec now has a government with a constitutional option for the future not only of Quebec but the whole country, and I do not think that is part of the debate.

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, as all those who have spoken on this bill since the beginning of the debate, I think individual freedom and protection of privacy are essential matters. We should ask ourselves the following question: will the bill now before us, namely bill C-25, truly contribute to ensure individual freedom and independence for all people in spite of the overwhelming bureaucracy and more particularly, data collecting agencies which are responsible for gathering personal information on individuals? It is clear that this bill means well, just as the road to hell is paved with good intentions. It is an ambitious piece of legislation which aims at putting an end to all forms of discrimination through the appointment of a board and a tribunal on human rights.

These two bodies might become another administrative mess as well, bulging with ineffective officials trying to solve discrimination problems. Mr. Speaker, judging by the usual measures taken by this government, there is every reason to believe and especially to fear, that all this commission and this tribunal will do will be to reduce unemployment somewhat by providing good jobs at high salaries to a few cronies of the Liberal party. But, as I said, Mr. Speaker, it is possible, if not probable, that the government introduced this bill with the best intentions. For my part, I believe that we are once more on the wrong track with this kind of bill. It is not by setting up commissions, subcommissions and subcommittees that we are going to solve our problems. It is not either, Mr. Speaker, by lavishing money on problems that we will find answers. Before legislating to solve a problem, we should always ask ourselves whether legislation is a good means, an effective means of solving the problem. In the present case, the problem seems to be one of discrimination in all its aspects and of protection of privacy.

In fact, our interest in such problems is the economic implications of discrimination and violation of privacy. It is a fact that a person cannot get a particular job because of discrimination, or that an individual loses his job because of a report concerning his private life he was never informed of. In both instances, the individual that is economically dependent on the job he is seeking or the one he is losing is subjected to economic hardship by the unacceptable actions of his current or potential employer.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, the individual is victimized in that his economic position, his economic security are jeopardized by the unacceptable actions of some individual who is in a position to cause financial harm to those against whom he is prejudiced because of the colour of their skin or the length of their hair. As far as I am concerned, they are the victims of discrimination, and I suggest that above anything else they cry out for the protection of their dignity. And the best way to protect an individual's dignity is to put him in a position where he will not be dependent upon those who want to revile him. Whenever he is independent from those who would deprive him of his rights, he can protect himself against their scorn and unacceptable behaviour. If, on the other hand, he is dependent, because for instance he absolutely needs the job that is available, he is automatically in a dependent position. Mr. Speaker, the law can force an employer to hire an individual, but it cannot prevent the employer from despising that individual or hurting him with subtle harassment that affects him deep down.

The tribunal is not always aware of the facts. The commission will not always be in a position to assess the quality of the relationship between the employer and the employee. Consequently, the main effect of this well meaning legislation, as I said a while ago, will be to place discrimination sufferers under the control of the individual whose only aim is to strike a blow at his dignity and integrity. Mr. Speaker, is that the purpose of this legislation? I am convinced it is not. We all wish to make discrimination impossible, because it affects the dignity of the individual. We suggest that a person can be protected against discrimination only if his economic interests are protected against those who try to discriminate against him. Mr. Speaker, we may wonder how it can be done. We feel that by ensuring the economic security of each person, we would ensure individual freedom for all. No person is free if he is financially dependent. If he must crawl on all fours to earn his living, he is not free, he is utterly at the mercy of the person who gives him a mere pittance.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, Socreds have been demanding for several years a guaranteed annual income for each and every citizen as a basic and unquestionable right. We regard the guaranteed annual income as the basis of individual freedom. A person who has a guaranteed income does not need to ingratiate himself with, or work for, an employer who despises or is prejudiced against him. How many times, Mr. Speaker, did our dear and sorely missed friend Réal Caouette mention how undignified it was for people over 65 to have to beg for any kind of menial work, because the government would not support them, when they could have stayed at home with the guaranteed income we are proposing.

Mr. Speaker, of course the guaranteed income will only be possible if we agree to a fundamental restructuring of our present economic system. The reforms we advocate are an essential prerequisite in that regard. I am afraid that members of other parties do not give social credit principles and solutions the attention they deserve. It may be because they think they know them well enough already, or perhaps because they are satisfied with the present situation. Judging by what some government members are saying, I am afraid those were not and never will be understood. The fact that they are pressing for urgent measures to solve our economic problems is evidence to me that they are not satisfied with the present situation. On the other hand, their everyday attitude demonstrates that they know nothing about the principles and solutions advocated by our party.

It is impossible to understand Social Credit unless one accepts from the outset the fact that changes advocated by this party imply fundamental changes in our economic system. The reason is very simple: the defects of the present economic system are so deep that the only possible solution lies in rethinking and rebuilding the financial system on new bases by adopting new principles. If one wants to understand Social Credit, the most logical procedure is to consult the works of its founder, Major C. H. Douglas. In 1933, replying to two professors who were critical of his ideas, as are many members in this House towards Social Credit representatives, he stated in a few words what he found wrong with the current economic system, and I quote:

First of all, financial credit claims to be, but is not, a reflection of real credit. This means that our society's financial organization neglects true factors of production and consumption.

There is no logical and automatic relationship between, say, the capacity of the people to purchase goods and the capacity of the producing system to make them available.

That, the same Major Douglas used to say, is the main result of technological progress. Yet, we must admit that financial costs keep increasing, and this in spite of technological progress. It is therefore evident that the current financial system must distort reality. But let us push this line of reasoning a little further. It is generally recognized that we can improve our economic situation during any given period, that is to say our productivity is greater than what we are spending to market it. In other words, consumption is then only a fraction of production. Now, Mr. Speaker, if we want our economic system to reflect reality and if we accept the idea that the true cost of production is consumption, this means that if we want the public to have access to our production as a whole we must share among our people the purchasing power which represents the difference between what is consumed in the production process and the amount of production.

As for us, Mr. Speaker, we think that the guaranteed annual income we are proposing could be paid to every individual on the basis of this gap existing between the available production and the purchasing power now available to them. Accordingly, we would be better advised to try first of all to secure economic independence for every citizen, really without any discrimination, and give to every one regardless of colour, sex or hair length, a guaranteed annual income as a matter of basic right. So, Mr. Speaker, nobody would have, as it is proposed in this legislation, to work for an employer who could harass him because he is prejudiced against him.

The commission and the tribunal provided under this legislation will only be able to place an individual in a dependent position towards his employer by allowing him to work for someone capable of subtly torturing him by his scorn. Mr. Speaker, what I suggest and what we have always suggested is to allow the individual to be financially independent so he may have a decent life without having, in order to make both ends meet, to work for an employer seeking to humiliate him. This is, Mr. Speaker, a sensible position. This is a reasonable position. This is a proposition which could ensure respect for human dignity without going through the bureaucracy and the red tape which we will be facing when this bill is accepted at second reading. Then perhaps everybody, even some hon. members, may live to regret having endorsed the bill.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION ACT

AMENDMENTS RESPECTING PREMIUMS, SHARE CAPITAL, ETC.

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-3, to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance) moved:

That Bill C-3, an act to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act, be amended in clause 9, by striking out line 42 at page 6 and substituting the following therefor:

"a deposit.

(4) Notwithstanding subsection (1), for the purposes of deposit insurance with the corporation, where moneys are received by a member institution on or after April 1, 1977, for which the member institution has issued or is obligated to issue an instrument of indebtedness other than a draft, certified draft or cheque, travelers' cheque, prepaid letter of credit or money order,

(a) the moneys do not constitute a deposit unless the instrument and records of the member institution specify the person entitled, at the date of issue of the instrument, to the repayment of the moneys evidenced thereby;

(b) the person referred to in paragraph (a) shall be deemed to be the depositor in respect of the moneys unless particulars of a transfer of the instrument are entered in the records of the member institution in which case the most recent transferee shown in the records shall be deemed to be the depositor; and

(c) the entry of a transfer in the records of a member institution is ineffective, if the entry is made subsequent to the termination or cancellation of the deposit insurance of the member institution.

(5) Notwithstanding subsection (1), moneys received by a member institution on or after January 1, 1977, for which the institution has issued or is obligated to issue an instrument of indebtedness other than a draft, certified draft or cheque, travellers' cheque, prepaid letter of credit or money order, do not constitute a deposit where the instrument is payable outside Canada or in a currency other than Canadian currency."

He said: Mr. Speaker, I wish to give just a few words of explanation about the amendment. The present definition of "deposits", as it is in the act now, broadly speaking includes all demand deposits in Canadian dollars and all term deposits having a maturity of five years or less. Term deposits in this sense would include guaranteed investment certificates issued by trust companies and debentures issued by mortgage loan companies. One of the changes proposed in the definition would withdraw deposit insurance from debentures or deposit receipts that are issued in bearer form.

Since insurance is limited to $20,000 per person per institution, it is essential that the deposits be in registered form in order that a determination may be made concerning the amount of deposit insurance. When the act was originally passed, this was not considered to be a problem, but in recent years there seems to have been some tendency toward the use of bearer-type instruments. A provision to this effect was included in the original terms of Bill C-3. However, as a result of scrutiny of the bill, by the financial community in particular, it became apparent that the provisions as put forward did not adequately meet the problems or the demands of the market. It was on the basis of this that a redraft was considered and the present amendment put forward.

One problem that has come to light is dealt with in subclause (5) of the amendment. Not only are we dealing here with bearer-type instruments but with the issue of instruments to holders outside of Canada in currencies other than Canadian dollars. The amendment to the bill arose by reason of the floating of an issue of debentures in the European market, using as part of the sale's presentation the fact that the debentures, as issued, would be insured by the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. It was the view of the directors of the CDIC that the use of deposit insurance in this way was not in accordance with the general intention of deposit insurance and, consequently, this type of debt instrument should not, in the future, be eligible for deposit insurance.

The amendment, accordingly, proposed that instruments intended for sale abroad not be considered as representing a deposit, and also that bearer instruments not be considered as insured deposits. It was not intended to withdraw insurance from deposits made in Canada by non-residents. The revised wording has the advantage over the preceding wording, first, that questions of the validity of transfers of instruments are not raised. Instead, it is provided that an instrument does not represent an insured deposit unless the name of the payee is registered on the records of the issuing institution. As I indicated, the purpose was for clarification. There is a belief now in the financial community that this meets the requirement. As I said before, a number of the types of instruments issued in the manner in which they were issued went well beyond the original purpose of the deposit insurance. It is for this reason the limitation has been put forward.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in replying to the statement of the minister with respect to his proposed amendment, I remind hon. members that this is actually the second version of the amendment that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) has proposed with regard to this change. I would point out that when the committee reviewed Bill C-3 it was not asked to consider this amendment. There was no suggestion that there was a problem at the time the committee studied the bill. It is most unfortunate that this lack of foresight is so evident in so far as the government's actions are concerned.

It is not just the economy that the government is running poorly. They are running their own internal administration very poorly in the sense that they bring bills into this House, take them to committee, make no mention of further amendments, and by the time they get to report stage, with apparently no particular demand from any source they propose new amendments, then withdraw those amendments and give us an amendment such as we have today.

I was rather surprised to hear the minister say that the amendment in its present form is acceptable to the industry. That is not my understanding. Over the dinner-hour I am going to check with the president of the Trust Association in Canada to find out whether at the last minute he acceded to the suggestion the minister has made.

It is a fairly important amendment that we are considering. Through the innovation of certain trust companies and loan companies we have been able to win some foreign funds expressed in Canadian dollars for the benefit of those who need mortgage money in Canada. As we know, mortgage interest rates are unduly high in Canada. They are certainly unduly high compared to mortgage rates in many other countries. Our trust and loan companies have found there is a market for the sale of their debentures or guaranteed investment certificates in these foreign countries. Because they have shown that initiative, because they have been true entrepreneurs, the government steps in and says they do not want them to bring in these funds from foreign countries. The impact of this amendment is to make it difficult for the trust and loan companies to attract these funds and offer the general insurance provisions of the CDIC. We in the House must consider whether that is a wise move.

I hope the minister will respond to some questions later in the debate in order to give us some insight into why he and the Department of Finance believe we should accede to this request. Why are we making it more difficult to bring mortgage money into the country? That is the net impact of the amendment we are now considering.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, private bills, notices of motions (papers), public bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' BILLS

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member for Villeneuve on a point of order.

Mr. Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I ask the unanimous consent of the House so that the bill appearing in the name of Mr. Réal Caouette, former member for Témiscamingue, that is Bill C-215, be transferred to the name of the hon. member for Richmond, Mr. Léonel Beaudoin, and that Bills C-257 and C-288 also in the name of Mr. Réal Caouette, be transferred to the name of Mr. André Fortin, member for Lotbinière.

[English]

Mr. Goodale: I certainly would have no objection to that proposal, but I would ask the hon. gentleman to allow us a little time in which to consider its regularity from a procedural point of view. I would be happy to take it up with the House leaders—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): We would agree right now.

Mr. Paproski: And we would give consent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Of course, unanimous consent would be needed, but I do not see why we should not follow the suggestion of the parliamentary secretary. It might be done this afternoon.

[Translation]

I think that the hon. member, who needs the unanimous consent, cannot reject the proposal of the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Goodale) who is merely asking for a delay. The House seems willing to accept that solution and the Chair would be prepared to put the question in due time.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I understand the reservation made by the parliamentary secretary. However, I thought that the hon. member for Villeneuve (Mr. Caouette) and the government representatives had met in that connection to obtain the unanimous consent and make the change. Evidently, the parliamentary secretary needs some delay to think about it and it could mean various things. It could mean two hours, five hours and even five months. I would like that delay, if necessary, to be as short as possible so that in a few days the bills would appear on the order paper under the names of the members suggested by the hon. member for Villeneuve.

[English]

Mr. Goodale: I shall certainly try to deal with the matter before six o'clock today.

Mr. O'Connell: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I understand that as a result of discussions which have taken place there is general agreement that we should spend the first part of private members' hour on Bill C-1001, with the understanding that if we complete that debate we shall revert to Bill S-2.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the House agree?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): This is one occasion on which the hon. member for Assiniboia did not say "No".

CONTINENTAL BANK OF CANADA

MEASURE TO CONVERT IAC INTO CHARTERED BANK

The House resumed, from Thursday, May 5, 1977, consideration of the motion of Mr. Reid that Bill C-1001, to incorporate Continental Bank of Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take a few minutes to conclude the remarks I made on May 5, remarks which meant to demonstrate that if we are serious in the House, we should, before we grant IAC its request, be able to answer very precise questions on the grounds for granting this company its request. For instance, why does IAC want to become a chartered bank? Why should we grant it a charter and, if we do, why not grant similar powers in other areas, to ease the creation of credit?

Mr. Speaker, the answer is obvious: why does IAC want a charter? To make profits, but more easily than it does by lending real capital since, to lend real capital one has to have it, while banks, through their charter, can lend air, credit, and consequently, can lend figures; so, one readily understands that making profits out of nothing is interesting and consequently that is the goal IAC has set for itself.

One could ask: Why should IAC not be granted a charter when dozens of other financial institutions across the land are? To that I would say that I object to its request because it does not need a charter. Do we really need, at this point in time, more financial institutions to make things easier for the consumer where credit is concerned? No. I would go even further and say that, on the contrary, there are enough of them. One can then wonder whether a new bank is being created to give more services, with which I would agree; but I doubt that it is the case in this instance, and I proved it on May 5. On the other hand, if we agree to give that charter, we should take advantage of the situation to have a say about what is good for IAC shareholders.

Why should it not be good for the Canadian provinces also? Why, in other words, should the provinces not be able to turn to that possibility and create the credit they need and so achieve the progress that is essential to their development? Mr. Speaker, the question is quite simple, and we have been putting it to the House for years; but, unfortunately, it is a question to which we have been refused an adequate answer.

Of course the principle under which IAC could lend up to $16 million against a $1 million deposit is not bad in itself, if we have the potential. But in the current inflationary crisis where indeed we are witnessing a day-to-day price escalation the end of which is not in sight, we must wonder how long we can go on approving new financial institutions when the problem is the people's purchasing power. People have no real capacity either to buy what they need in everyday life, because the system has finally succeeded in creating all by itself a genuine inflation, or to sustain the level of production that may be needed.

If we in this House decided on granting what IAC wish, we would be inconsistent. We would solve none of our current problems, we would simply allow financiers to exploit the people still further by granting loans with rather high interests rates. To conclude, Mr. Speaker, I oppose the granting of a new charter to IAC, to the extent further that the same principle is disallowed when it comes to the government helping citizens achieve what would be needed for the progress of our country as a whole.

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to express very briefly my views on second reading of Bill C-1001, concerning the corporation commonly known as IAC, which is requesting a bank charter under the corporate name of Continental Bank of Canada.

Mr. Speaker, I have often questioned in this House the principle of granting chartered banks the right to make money out of the nation's credit, to allow institutions to make profits by creating the deposits needed for private industry and even the government to make certain operations. Looking at statistics, we realize that the Canadian banking system is making profits while other segments of the economy are hard put to survive. We are even experiencing a high rate of bankruptcies by Canadians firms, headed by experienced people but not afforded the privileges granted to chartered banks. The right hon. Prime Minister himself (Mr. Trudeau), in an interview given to Fortune magazine, was emphatic about this, bitterly complaining about bankers.

Having said that both inflation and unemployment are high at the same time he asks: "What do bankers say to that?"

He was asked that question: What do they say? Here is his answer, Mr. Speaker, and I quote:

I shall tell you what they say. They say that the federal government interferes too much in business, that the government must put an end to that policy, that that policy of interference is at the root of all our problems.

He added, and this is what I find unbelievable, Mr. Speaker, it expresses the conviction of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and it is the same conviction I want to express myself. He said this, and I quote:

"The worst grumblers . . .

What is a grumbler? It is somebody who has all the advantages possible and yet complains about the fact that others have some advantages. So he said this, and I quote:

"The worst grumblers are bankers. They have never had it so good since I am at the head of the government.

He rightly added, and I quote:

I am ashamed. They make much more profits than the manufacturing sector, the natural resources sector and the service area as a whole.

They are at the top of the scale as regards profits. This is understandable. Mr. Speaker, if I enjoyed the same advantages, you can be sure that I would have at my disposal almost inexhaustible revenue sources which would enable me to be among those who make up what is known as the financial dictatorship. But as I do not have such means and I am in a position to realize they are in the hands of private institutions which compete with the state financial system, I believe it is my duty as a member of parliament to tell the House it is time for this situation to change.

Mr. Speaker, I am aware that the government has introduced legislation asking Parliament to postpone the introduction of a banking legislation which should normally expire in 1977, since under the law, the legislation concerning banking institutions and chartered banks must be reviewed every ten years, but as the years go by, this government, with the approval of chartered banks, is about to skip a decade. By continuously postponing reconsideration of legislation, we manage to delay and this year we are still delaying so that we might succeed in skipping a whole decade. But that is not the point.

The Canadian banking system goes back to 1817, according to some research I have made, when nine Montreal merchants went into partnership to carry banking operations. Similarly, two banks without statute began to operate in Lower Canada in 1818. The first to have a legal status was the Bank of New Brunswick, the smallest of the provinces in Confederation. Its incorporation was considered by the provincial legislature and received royal assent in 1820. The other three banks of Lower Canada did not get their charter before 1822. Other banks were established in the following years; most of them under provincial charters which tried to guarantee their stability and security. In 1850, an act which provided the free operation of banks in this province, inspired by the New York State legislation on the freedom of banks, was passed in the province of Canada.

Under that act individuals, alone or in partnership, and limited companies could set up banks if they had a minimum capital of $100,000. However, those banks could not have branches and their liability could not exceed three times the amount of the paid-in capital. Notes intended for circulation had to be obtained from the receiver general of the province and guaranteed by a deposit of an equivalent amount in government bonds. Those notes had to constitute a preferential debt on the liability of banks and were convertible on demand in gold. The act allowed any commercial bank which already had the right to issue notes to forgo that right in part or in its entirety. Those government notes were not subject to the 1 per cent tax set up in 1841 on bank notes in circulation.

Senior members in this House will remember seeing notes of different Canadian chartered banks. But after the Bank of Canada was set up in 1935, chartered bank notes gradually disappeared from circulation and were replaced by Bank of Canada notes. But the fact that chartered banks relinquished such privileges did not stop them from continuing to control and monetize the credit of the nation. So much so that in 1976, according to Statistics Canada, the money supply in Canada stood at $71 billion and was controlled in a proportion of up to $66 billion by chartered banks in Canada through the creation of deposits to make loans to institutions, businesses, or even governments either of Canada or the provinces.

Mr. Speaker, that provision regarding the multiplication of credit organized and allowed by the legislation provides that with a reserve of 8 per cent a bank may create deposits and lend money known as bank money. Under the law, that allows banks with, let us say 8 per cent reserves on which the bank pays interest, to create deposits and lend up to $100 to private borrowers, I think, or governments. If this is not a case of a government relinquishing its right to control the creation of currency under the form of credit, I wonder what it is. Mr. Speaker, I understand quite well that the fact that creating a bank or letting one disappear is not going to change anything to the system, and when a corporation applies to become a chartered bank putting forth as an argument that this will enhance competition in Canada and in so doing lower interest rates, I do not believe it, because at one time we had 25 banks in Canada and competition was no fiercer than today.

These banks have merged over the years, with or without permission being granted by the Canadian government and we have reached a state when we now have only 10 chartered banks and the most recent one created by an act of Parliament, the Unity Bank, is in the process of merging with the Provincial Bank of Canada. Even if there were 12 or even 15 they will still have the same privileges of creating money for the purpose of making loans either to individuals or to the government, and that is precisely what is wrong with the system.

Mr. Speaker, chartered banks should be subject to the same legislation as savings or credit cooperatives, which cannot lend money by creating deposits and which must use deposits made by members of the institutions. It is this formula that we oppose, this generosity on the part of Parliament, this privilege for these new institutions, the issue of new bank charters to people or corporations wanting to become incorporated under the Bank Act.

I would like my contribution to be understood by all Canadians because I am convinced of one thing, and that is that if all Canadians were truly aware of the way in which our chartered banks operate because of legislation passed by Parliament, not many of them would approve of the monetary system of our country. The private monetary system is in the hands of the chartered banks, which control the money supply of the country and before whom the Canadian government has to go down on hands and knees to obtain the necessary credits to be able to face the many problems of our country. This is why we have inflation. This is why the government and the whole country are now facing serious unemployment. It is because money has become the monopoly of these institutions instead of the servant of the whole nation.

Even if I talked for one hour, I know that it would change nothing in the situation. I am aware of this, but at least I want to do my duty as a representative of the people and to make every effort to urge for a change of this situation. Nevertheless, I know that the majority will necessarily win eventually, but I will surely have the opportunity to speak again before the Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs if the bill is referred to this committee for future study, and we shall certainly then be able to suggest amendments so that at least the bill may correspond to the general legislation instead of providing for exceptions. Many clauses of this bill are in contradiction of the Bank of Canada Act.

We can see exceptions for this and that if at least we stick to the letter of the Bank of Canada Act and of the legislation requiring that a bank charter be given to some institutions or businesses in conformity with the present statute. In any case, I hope that in the next twelve months at least we will have the opportunity in the House to discuss in depth all this banking legislation, our monetary system and that, together, we will endeavour to correct this whole system to serve the government and the whole nation so that instead of having a people prostrate before the dollar sign, we have a people which forces the dollar symbol to serve the nation.

[English]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I wish to bring to the attention of the House that if I give the floor to the hon. member for Kenora-Rainy River (Mr. Reid) at this time he will close the debate.

Mr. John M. Reid (Kenora-Rainy River): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank hon. members for their co-operation. I want to assure members that when the bill is in committee very attentive consideration will be given to amendments which have been proposed and which will be proposed. I want, also, to thank the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell) for deferring to me today in order to permit this bill to come forward.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, I would like to respond to the point of order which was raised at the beginning of private members' hour with respect to three bills which have been standing on the order paper in the name of the late Mr. Caouette, Bill C-215, Bill C-257 and Bill C-288.

• (1730)

It was proposed that the House might agree unanimously to having the names of other hon. members substituted as the proposers of those particular bills. I said earlier that, although I had no fundamental objection, I would want to inquire about this proposal. I have made those inquiries and can report that we agree to the suggestion which has been made. I point out to hon. members that in order to expedite business in private members' hour we have gone through the list of bills as they have been coming forward for debate. We have made a commitment to deal with the bill standing in the name of the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath) on June 10. Beyond that, we have made no commitment. I ask for the indulgence of hon. members in order that we may be able to fulfil that commitment and so expedite the business of private members' hour. Beyond that slight procedural reservation, we agree to dealing with the matter as proposed at the beginning of this hour.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we agreed to this request at five o'clock, and we still agree to it.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wonder why that restriction. The House is merely asked to substitute for the name of the late hon. member for Témiscamingue that of another hon. member, so that when they come up as usual, in the established order, when they are called, someone will be able to answer instead of Mr. Réal Caouette who cannot be with us. It changes nothing in the procedure. It merely means that we want to make sure the bill will have a sponsor present here in the House.

[English]

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, I do not disagree with the hon. member, for that is precisely what I have agreed to on behalf of the government. I wanted to alert the House to the commitment we had made with respect to one item of business for June 10. Beyond that, we intend to deal with the entire private members' business list in the usual way, with the names to be substituted.

[Translation]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It seems the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) now understands that, in short, the government had merely come to an agreement with the hon. member for St. John's East (Mr. McGrath), bearing in mind that the bill that could have been studied on June 10 was listed under the name of Mr. Caouette. So, because of the change, I am sure he would not want any change to be made in the agreement reached with the hon. member for St. John's East on Bill C-229.

[English]

Is it agreed unanimously that Bills C-215, C-257 and C-288 in the name of the late Mr. Caouette shall be transferred in the following manner: Bill C-215 shall appear in the name of the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin); and Bills C-257 and C-288 shall appear in the name of the hon. member for Lotbinière (Mr. Fortin). Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BELL CANADA

The House resumed from Thursday, March 10, consideration of the motion of Mr. O'Connell that Bill S-2, respecting Bell Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Before I recognize the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) again, may I inform him that he has already spoken for 17 minutes and has three minutes of his time left.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I would have been more pleased if Your Honour had not told me how limited my time is; however, at least I know. When I spoke on March 10 of this year I said Bell Canada is hoodwinking us in its application with regard to its capital structure. Its relationships with its subscribers are not what they appear. The company is not operating, I suggest, only as a public utility. It has a monopoly hold on certain sectors of the economy and the activities of certain of its subsidiaries are highly questionable.

I am pleased to note that by reason of government action, deliberate or otherwise, the CRTC, and not the Canadian Transport Commission, is to oversee the functioning of Bell Canada. By so doing the government made a wise choice. Although the commission has not looked into the question of stock relationships, it has criticized the company's operations, particularly the operations of certain subsidiary companies the operations of which it is difficult for the company's shareholders to control. Actually a large majority of the company's Canadian shareholders have all but lost the ability to control the operations of certain subsidiaries. The commission said that the company appeared to have made a profit of about 12 per cent, not the 7.8 per cent the CTC originally said was reasonable. It questioned the company's seeking some $3 million in advance payments or deposits from people it considered a poor credit risk.

When I last spoke on the bill I mentioned a small telephone company not far from Ottawa operating an exchange with 121 subscribers. By some strange quirk that small company controls a fleet of jet aircraft used by Bell Canada, controls Place Bell Canada, and prints telephone directories. At least it controls their printing. I think the directories are published by Tele-Direct.

The question is, how can such a small company control such large investments? The company operates a small telephone exchange serving 121 subscribers whose rates have not been increased for some time; so far as I know they will never be increased. How could a small company, serving a small number of subscribers, amass the capital with which to buy one jet costing between $5 million and $6 million, let alone a whole fleet of jets? How could it gain control of Place Bell Canada? I see that my time has almost ended, Mr. Speaker. I want to say much more. Perhaps I will be able to do so later this afternoon.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Is the House ready for the question?

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, not only does the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters) want to continue his speech; I am sure we all would like to hear him. Therefore I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

● (1740)

That the motion be amended by striking out all the words after the word "that", and by substituting therefor the following words:

"Bill S-2 be not now read a second time but that it be read a second time this day six months hence".

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House has heard the motion. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Temiskaming): Mr. Speaker, it gives me a great deal of pleasure to be able to speak to the amendment. As I was pointing out on the previous motion—

Mr. Goodale: Deal with the amendment now.

Bell Canada

Mr. Peters: —Bell Canada came to parliament and asked us to make a change in their relationship to their shareholders. In asking for time to allow them to reconsider the situation I think it would be wise for us to go back to see exactly what they did years ago.

Bell Canada was set up by the Canadian Transport Board in 1927, according to information which I received from Robert E. Babe, Ph.D., telecommunications economic consultant. The Board of Railway Commissioners, later called the Canadian Transport Commission, dealt with the first general rate case in 1919. The board held that the company should be permitted to earn profits sufficient to pay a $2 dividend per share plus "just and reasonable" retained earnings. This basic method of regulation continued in existence up to 1966. Bell paid a $2 dividend every year from 1891 until the mid-1950's, with the exception of the depression years.

In 1927, another rate increase was sought by Bell. The Board finally realized that the above procedures alone afforded very little protection to the subscribing public. While Bell was prevented from making excessive profits by regulation, the company was able to sell stock to existing shareholders at prices well below market value and pass on monopoly profits in the form of capital gains rather than income. However, since the new capital funds raised in this manner were insufficient to purchase assets that would yield the approved earnings per share, the company was able to argue in rate cases that it could no longer meet its dividend and permissible earnings per share under the existing rates.

The following quotation from the 1927 decision of the Board is instructive:

> It was stated that it was not an unusual practice with prosperous companies. On this point it would seem proper to draw a distinction between a company engaged in competitive business and a company having a monopoly in operating a public utility. In the case of a competitive company the burden of its acts rests upon itself. But in the case of the company whose service is a monopoly and whose tolls are fixed or varied on the responsibility of public authority . . . I am unable to concede that the company should be authorized to charge tolls which have in view the payment of an 8 per cent dividend on stock which did not realize for the company the increased assets that its actual value made available, to the amount of $3,529,217 on the $17,843,900 of stock which was sold to the shareholders at par in the years 1921 to 1925.

In 1929 parliament revised the Bell Act to require approval by the regulatory authority for all issues of stock.

Since 1929 the regulatory board has approved the issue price of Bell's stock and the company has been forced to sell its stock at prices above par, that is, $25. However, sales of stock at substantial discounts from market value have continued to be an important factor in Bell's financing down to the present, in spite of regulatory supervision. Note, for example, the decision of the Board of Transport Commissioners in 1966 at pages 658 and 688 where it is noted that new shares were sold to existing shareholders and employees at prices equal, on average, to 75 per cent of market value.

In pamphlet No. 16, 1966, of the judgments, orders, regulations and rulings of the Board of Transport Commissioners for Canada it is indicated that there is a cost saving to the company in issuing common stock only to shareholders and employees, namely, the underwriting fee. This cost saving should be deducted from the difference between the issue price of shares and the market value of shares in order to estimate the net amount of stock dilution. In the 1975 issue of 5.2 million "units", comprised of one share in Northern Electric and one half warrant of Bell Canada, the issue price was $26.50, the underwriting fee was $1.25, and proceeds to Bell were $25.25 per unit. For exemple, the underwriters' fee was 4.72 per cent. This is a far cry from the average discount of 25 per cent given employees and shareholders. It is estimated that Bell lost about $166 million in capital through such stock dilutions, 27 per cent of capital raised through stock issues, over the period 1960-1971.

At the company's urging, the regulatory board revised the methodology of regulating the company in 1966, replacing control on earnings per share with percentage return on average total capital. This, to a substantial degree, has lessened the incentives of the company to water its stock.

Since the company is now allowed a percentage return on its book equity—book equity being net proceeds to the company from stock issues—the company has an incentive to inflate its rate base by issuing stock at as high a price as possible.

In the brief prepared by the consultant for the Consumers' Association he argued that earnings per share plus control over the issue price of equity is a much more effective way of regulating the company than the present percentage return on capital. If legislation is passed to prevent the regulatory body from authorizing the terms and conditions of new stock issues, a return to this effective method would be impossible.

What all this means is that Bell Canada has been playing around for a long time with issuing stock, and the method which it adopted mainly was a very simple business practice. Their criterion was not to try to serve the public as a public utility operating for the common good, or to try to satisfy the subscribers on the basis of the myth which they created that the company is controlled by several million Canadian shareholders, small people like the man who lives across the street from you, Mr. Speaker. They are basing it on the idea that the stock must carry a dividend sufficient to allow that little old widow, whom everyone knows but really has not seen for a long time, to live. Because of this they ask for such things as a 20-cent pay telephone charge.

I am pleased to see that the CRTC is not nearly as stupid as the Canadian Transport Commission has been over the years. The CTC has never found out why things are done. Perhaps even the CRTC would not have acted if it had not been for some bright newsman who pointed out that when you put a quarter into the slot to make a 20-cent call, you do not get a nickel back. Bell was stealing a million dollars from the Canadian public.

It is very interesting to read what the CRTC is reported to have said. It is rather complicated. It always is. The CRTC said that there is an inconsistency in the decision to charge 20 cents in some places, because in hospitals and certain other insitutions the cost is ten cents. It is very difficult to justify why it is ten cents in hospitals but 20 cents in senior citizens homes and other places. The CRTC said it would get rid of this disparity by reducing the rate. That is the first time I have ever seen a government agency do that kind of thing. They usually get rid of disparity by raising rates, not lowering them.

The CRTC told Bell it could not charge 20 cents anywhere, that it would have to reduce the rate to a uniform ten cents. If the CTC, which deals with freight rates, had been dealing with these public telephone rates, it would have required everyone to pay 20 cents. It is interesting that up until recently the CTC adjudicated on these matters as well as freight rates. Even the government found that rather odd, so now we have the CRTC.

Nobody believes that pay telephones make money, but as a result of this reduction it is said that the loss to Bell will be about $9 million a year. The CRTC ruled that it is the responsibility of the telephone company to provide the public with convenient access to telephones at a wide variety of locations. All 20-cent telephones must be converted to ten-cent telephones within six months, and the commission is further undertaking to find out whether Bell has enough pay phones in service and, if it does not, where additional telephones are needed. CRTC looked into a number of other things. A lifeline service has been put into effect in a number of places. It looks as though the CRTC is doing something with this corporation.

However, considering what has been done with regard to Bell stock, considering the shocking way Bell has treated its common stockholders, and considering what Bell has done in terms of capital, which has affected very disproportionately the common and preferred shareholders of the company, I feel that it has not been managed responsibly. Bell has been able to tell the public to take or leave its service because it has a monopoly, and there is nothing the public can do about it. Certainly if there is any nationalization to be done in this country, the first company to be put on the list should be Bell Canada. I think everyone in the country would agree that if nationalization is justified in the public utility field, it is justified when it comes to telephone service.

I do not know how even the most unenlightened person could look at the assets of Bell and listen to the arguments which have been made before the commission without agreeing with me. Bell has indicated to the commission that it is not able to meet the basic requirements which have been established. One provision allows Bell to have a profit which would allow a $2 share dividend on common stock, and yet Bell has been able to buy an organization called Northern Electric. It has been able to buy Northern Telephone and a number of other small companies across the country.

Bell has established satellite control. It controls Capital Telephone, with its vast resources but no income at all. Bell has been able to do all this in the public field without being cited for stealing. Bell has not been cited for any of its other abuses. I suppose it would not be very difficult for a preferred shareholder or a common shareholder to lay charges against Bell under the normal procedure and to get some kind of redress for what has been done to him. However, if anybody had been at a commission hearing and seen the battery of lawyers retained by Bell Canada, he would know that in a life of 50 years or 60 years there would not be sufficient time to proceed with that type of action.

Now we are being asked to allow Bell to do a number of things it was not previously able to do. It seems to me that, before parliament makes these changes, this matter should go before the CRTC so that it could weigh all the "b.s." it has been handed with regard to Bell's rate structure and its financial background and ownership. Bell is having problems with deferred profits. It has been able to distribute those profits over the years, but it is now having difficulty with them because they fit into a capital gains position. There is a problem with regard to how to dispose of those deferred profits, but with people always coming into Bell Canada there will always be a disposition of those profits.

Northern Electric and Bell Canada have always been related as far as rates are concerned. Mr. Speaker, I see it is six o'clock, and I would like to continue this for several more hours, so I would like to call it six o'clock at this time.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, the hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

SPORTS—USE OF POST OFFICE FOR DELIVERY OF DEPARTMENTAL MAIL—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday I asked a question of the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) (Mrs. Campagnolo). I asked whether her department is no longer using the Post Office but, rather, using a courier service to deliver its mail. She said that to her knowledge it is not using a courier service but that if it ever does she would probably entertain the idea of using Newfoundland dogs. That was significant because she is not now using Newfoundland dogs; she is using a Newfoundland minister.

● (1800)

Last Friday the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson), the minister from Newfoundland, utilized a government jet at a cost presumably of approximately $3,000 or $4,000 to fly from Ottawa to St. John's, Newfoundland, to perform the ceremony of handing over a cheque to the Canada Summer Games Committee in St. John's. The ceremony took place at the airport. I have a picture of the minister in all his glory handing the cheque for $1.5 million over to the chairman of the summer games. The contribution of the federal government to the games is a paltry one, some $4 million in total; the province of Newfoundland is contributing over $5.5 million.

The minister took the cheque to Newfoundland by jet but, Mr. Speaker, the cheque could have been given to the members of the Canada Summer Games Committee when they visited Ottawa on May 16, or it could have been sent by registered mail for 20 cents or 30 cents. Either way would have saved the taxpayers of Canada several thousand dollars. Rather than that, however, the Secretary of State for External Affairs, who is supposed to be a busy minister, jetted to Newfoundland to present the $1.5 million cheque.

A newspaper report said that the minister stepped off the government "King Air" jet at Torbay airport, complimented the committee on what it was doing, and disclosed that the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Governor General will officially open the games. He added that the games would be of enormous benefit to the province, jumped back in the plane, and took off for his riding where he spent two days politicking.

This is improper use and wasteful use of government funds. The minister could have travelled to Newfoundland first-class on Air Canada as he is entitled to, at a probable cost of $400, but instead he took the government jet at a cost of $3,000 or $4,000.

Questions have been put on the order paper about the minister's air travel. The hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt) set down Question No. 2,028 on March 7, and last December I set down a question inquiring about the minister's travels to Newfoundland in the jet last September in relation to a byelection to be held in October. Those questions have not been answered; the minister refuses to answer them. I would venture a guess that his travel bill exceeds that of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) in the last two or three years. Neither of them wrote the book "The Fear of Flying". I would say that the Lang air service has now been out-paced by the Jamieson jet service or the Jamieson "air farce".

I ask the minister, or whoever is going to answer for him, to tell the House when the questions on the order paper will be answered. Perhaps the minister has lots of time now. We know that CIDA has been taken from him and given to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen); we know that all negotiations with French-speaking countries have been turned over to the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer). It reminds me of that old joke about putting your false leg in the corner and putting your false teeth in the glass. The minister will soon have nothing left to do. As I said yesterday, he will be the minister responsible for Saint Pierre and Miquelon if all his duties are given to other people. Perhaps he has nothing better to do than to fly back and forth to Newfoundland.

This silver tongued orator will find his tongue turning to gilt if he will not answer some of these questions. If the Secretary of State for External Affairs wants to jet to Newfoundland to present a cheque, or if the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) wants to take a government jet to British Columbia to present a cheque, surely the public is entitled to know the cost of this pandering to the wasteful habits of cabinet ministers.

In the old days there was a movie entitled "Flying Down to Rio". that has been replaced by the picture of cabinet ministers thinking that they are emperors, flying about in jets no matter how lowly the mission—delivering cheques, delivering mail, picking up dogs, flying their nannies around. I think the public is entitled to know the cost of this arrogant behaviour.

I have a poem here in honour of the minister, which goes as follows:

You may fly free to St. John's

If you are a friend of Don's

If you think the cost too high

Don't cross Don's path in the sky

It is becoming positively dangerous to use the commercial airways because you never know when one of these ministers in their jets will be delivering a cheque to your area. I certainly do not want to get in the way when the Secretary of State for External Affairs has in his hot little hand a cheque for $1.5 million and is rushing to St. John's with it to have his picture taken.

I would ask the parliamentary secretary to answer question No. 2,028 set down on March 7 about the minister's travelling expenses in the last several years. On October 12, question No. 29 was put down by the hon. member for Leeds about the use of DOT aircraft. On October 12, question No. 30 was asked by the hon. member for Leeds with regard to the use of Department of National Defence aircraft by the minister.

On December 17, 1976, I asked question No. 1,397 about the minister's trips for political purposes to the St. John's area in September and October 1976 at the time of the by-election. If on those trips the minister was engaged in politics, that should have been included in the Liberal candidate's election expenses. I want to know how many trips the minister made then. That is a question that will take an official in the department ten minutes to answer. This is another example of fantastic arrogance. We want the answers. If these trips are going to be made, we should have the information as to what they are costing the electorate.

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) was requested by his colleague, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard), to represent the federal government at the official opening of the St. Lawrence Central High School in St. Lawrence, Newfoundland. The High School was constructed at a cost of $3,337,120 and was financed under the Canada-Newfoundland Special Areas Agreement between the Department of Regional Economic Expansion and the government of Newfoundland.

The Department of Regional Economic Expansion contributed the total cost of construction through the agreement; 50 per cent of which was made in the form of a non-repayable grant, with the remaining 50 per cent through a long-term repayable loan to the province of Newfoundland.

The St. Lawrence Central High School is one of 22 educational facilities constructed in Newfoundland in recent years with the assistance of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion under the special area programs.

Other facilities constructed include seven elementary schools, three junior high schools, seven high schools, one vocational school, and extensions to three others.

In addition, partial funding was provided through the agreement for the construction of the Memorial University of Newfoundland Engineering School.

The Special Areas Agreement expired in March of this year and the official opening of the St. Lawrence Central High School completed the construction undertaken through this agreement.

With regard to the hon. member's question concerning the use of the mails by the Ministry of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport, he will be interested to learn that approximately 37,000 pieces of mail have been deposited with the Post Office for delivery since September 1, 1976.

Contributions by the federal government in aid of major sporting events have been delivered by several representatives of the federal government. In the case of the last contribution to the 1977 Canada Summer Games, the amount of the cheque was $1.5 million. This brings the total value of the federal government contribution to the games, in both direct funding and services, to $3.7 million.

In the interests of public awareness of the federal government's involvement in the 1977 Canada Summer Games, the formal presentation was made in the home of this year's games.

[Translation]

In answer to the other questions put by the hon. member I would say that they are now on the order paper. I also want to tell him that the department is now in the process of studying the questions and preparing the appropriate answers, and that the work will be completed as soon as possible.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—APPOINTMENT OF MR. O'NEIL TO HEAD PUBLIC AFFAIRS PROGRAMMING—POSSIBILITY OF MORE BALANCED PROGRAMMING

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, on May 5 the Montreal Gazette carried an article with the headline "O'Neil to head TV public affairs". It reads in part:

> The former press secretary to Prime Minister Trudeau has been appointed head of public affairs programming for the Radio-Canada television network.
> Pierre O'Neil served Trudeau until September, 1975, when he went to the University of Dakar in Senegal to train French-language journalists. The date his new job begins has not been set because he is still in Africa.

That led me on May 17 to ask the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) the following question:

> I ask if, in making the personal appointment, the Prime Minister instructed the CBC to make a balanced presentation of public affairs and news programs in order to avoid those situations of which government members were so critical?

● (1810)

It strikes me first of all that the Prime Minister did not deny the purport of the questions, that is, that the appointment of Mr. O'Neil was a personal appointment to be a kind of a watchdog over CBC television programming. That is his specific duty.

This is to be seen against the backdrop of some outspoken statements by cabinet ministers. I have here some screaming headlines from the Toronto Star, for example, of February 23. In the article itself, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Chrétien) was reported as saying, "If you were to ask me if there were to be no CBC until after the referendum would I be more comfortable, I would say, yes." If that is not a kind of veiled blackmail, I don't know what it is. In effect the minister is saying, "Hey, if we can't get the CBC to perform the way we would like it to perform, we would be better off without a CBC."

The Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) and the Minister of National Revenue (Miss Bégin) have made similar outbursts. I ask you, Mr. Speaker, what would it be like to be a CBC reporter putting together a news broadcast or an editorial comment on the CBC presenting material which was mildly critical of the government? It seems to me we are developing a climate where everything is valid and objective only if it is in agreement with the government line. I do not know whether we ought to tolerate this.

The Minister of National Revenue, for example, is quoted in one article as saying that the CBC reflects separatism and nothing else. Another thing which strikes me as remarkable is that the premier of Quebec, a former colleague of the Prime Minister, was formerly an announcer and broadcaster for the CBC and nobody thought there was anything strange about this until after November 15 last. One of the cabinet ministers in Quebec had the most popular show in the province for months, even years, before her election. Nobody thought anything of it even though they knew she was a PQ partisan. That is the backdrop against which the Prime Minister's appointment must be seen.

I repeat: what must it be like to be a newscaster or an editorialist on the CBC today when all the time they are afraid that if they make a comment, or broadcast a news comment which is unfavourable to the government, they are likely to find one of the cabinet ministers bursting out in headlines in the next day's paper, saying, "This is not loyalty; they are not representing the government fairly."

The issue today is freedom for the public broadcasting system. Since the Prime Minister has made his own personal appointment to a very sensitive area of the programming department and of Radio Canada, I wonder whether Mr. O'Neil is not the watchdog, whether he has a red telephone to the Prime Minister's office over which he will be saying, "Look, there is something here which is not quite the way you would like it."

The issue here is freedom, but it seems to me that the Prime Minister's interpretation of freedom in broadcasting is freedom for himself to regulate it and put his own man in place so that he can control the news coverage which emanates from the system. The power of the government is the power of appointment, and as long as the government exercises this power in such a partisan way, making sure that its own people are in these posts of great sensitivity, we shall find a government which is increasingly paranoid every time something is broadcast to which it takes exception.

I find it objectionable that the Prime Minister would make such a personal appointment in such a sensitive area in order, it would appear, to control the kind of news which comes out of the province of Quebec. I think it is time for the Prime Minister to become a little less sensitive about the kind of news broadcast in the province, and to preserve genuine freedom and objectivity, and thereby the unity of our nation.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Guilbault (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I find regrettable the attitude taken by my colleague for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen) of assuming that because Mr. O'Neil is a former press secretary of the right hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Trudeau) his nomination was decided by the Prime Minister, because this assumption is totally wrong. That nomination was decided by the CBC management, as it is supposed to be. Hon. members are well aware that the only positions in that corporation where candidates can be designated by the government are those at the upper management level, namely the members of the board of directors.

If you will allow me some comments on the choice made by the CBC, I will mention to you some information made available to me by that corporation; in addition to having been in the position that he is mostly known for, namely in the service of the Prime Minister of Canada, Mr. O'Neil has also been a correspondent of two newspapers, La Presse and Le Devoir, at the Quebec National Assembly as well as in the press gallery here in Ottawa. This man has therefore held some prestigious functions in the news-reporting business and has acquired a broad journalistic experience especially in the field of politics and government. One can therefore understand why the CBC chose to name a man of such experience to such a position, so the inferences made by my colleague from Surrey-White Rock are less understandable given the fact that the Prime Minister did not deny it lately. I can understand why the Prime Minister did not deny it for it is crystal clear that he was not the one who made that nomination.

Regarding the remarks made by my colleague concerning the balanced programming we should be getting from the CBC, I must tell him once again that we are dealing here with a mandate which is entirely placed under the jurisdiction of that corporation, and that neither the present government nor any other government of Canada can interfere in that respect because of the legal conditions that surround the creation of the CBC. And finally, let me add that if, on various occasions, some members of the present cabinet have raised their concern about certain things they did not like with the CBC, this is precisely because the CBC is an independent body. If the government were in charge of the CBC programming, the ministers would have no reasons for disagreeing with the contents of certain programs simply because assuming the government were to control those programs, the corporation would have to go along with the views of the government. Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to set the facts in their true light and remind the House that this nomination stems from a decision made by the CBC management, as should be the case and as provided for by an act of Parliament, without undue interference on the part of the government.

[Mr. Friesen.]

INCOME TAX—LEGALITY OF INCLUSION OF BENEFITS FROM LOW INTEREST LOANS AS INCOME FOR TAX PURPOSES

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, this debate arises out of a question I put to the Minister of National Revenue (Miss Bégin) on May 19 concerning the proposal which the minister announced to tax the benefit provided by low interest loans from employers to employees. I asked this question inasmuch as the courts, it seemed to me, had ruled that there was no necessity for anyone to charge interest at any specified rate, or indeed any rate or interest. The minister relied in her answer on section 6(1)(a) of the Income Tax Act, which provides:

> There shall be included in computing the income of a taxpayer for a taxation year as income from an office or employment such of the following amounts as are applicable:
> (a) the value of board, lodging and other benefits of any kind whatever—

The provision then goes on to list some exceptions, which I should like to refer to later. The minister may have been correct in the narrow sense of the law, although she made reference in her answer to the spirit and the letter of the law.

● (1820)

I should point out that in 1956 the words "of any kind whatever" were added to that section or its predecessor section in the former Income Tax Act. That may have been because of an Appeal Board case in which the minister was seeking to tax interest to a shareholder, who may have also been an employee, because he borrowed money from the company in order to buy majority shareholders' interests. At any rate, it was held that no benefit was conferred on the appellant by the company in the years under question, 1952 and 1953. The exact words of the Appeal Board tribunal were:

> Apart from specific legislation in a taxing statute, I know of no law which imposes an obligation upon a lender to demand the payment of interest in connection with a loan granted by the lender to a borrower, and if the lender does not require the payment of interest, the borrower is under no obligation to pay interest.

I would like to refer also to a case from the Exchequer Court, which was the forerunner of the Federal Court of Canada. In this case companies were being dealt with, but I think the principle is the same. This is the Pillsbury Holdings Limited case, and I would like to read from the summary as follows:

The amounts of interest so foregone by the subsidiary companies in favour of their parent company were construed by the minister as benefits conferred on a shareholder within the meaning of section 8(1)(c), . . .

The taxpayer's appeal was allowed by the Tax Appeal Board, and the minister appealed to the Exchequer Court. The Exchequer Court held the following:

That a benefit received from a corporation by a shareholder must be received by him qua shareholder for the benefit to fall within section 8(1)(c); a taxable benefit could not be imputed in respect of a bona fide transaction;

The fact that the interest was waived in this case was not held to be material and the minister's appeal was dismissed by the Exchequer Court.

The day before I asked the question, the minister responded to the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) on a similar point. She said:

We have noticed a considerable increase in the loans, at low interest rates or without interest, being granted by employers to employees. We have therefore decided to revise our last interpretation bulletin to the effect that the difference between the interest rate on those loans and the bank rate will be considered as additional income, for income tax purposes, this ruling to become effective on January 1, 1978.

While it may be according to the letter of the law, there is certainly no equity involved in this. If it is the spirit of the law, I doubt it very much because the government tells us that equity is the spirit of the income tax law.

Section 6(1)(a) exempts any employer's contribution to or under a registered pension fund or plan, group sickness or accident insurance plan, private health services plan, supplementary unemployment benefit plan, deferred profit sharing plan or group term life insurance. If we are going to capture the benefit of so-called interest free or low interest loans from employers to employees, then I wonder when we shall be examining the matter of subsidized meals and employee discounts for retail outlets and that sort of thing.

Section 15 of the act allows a loan to shareholders, who are officers or employees of a company, without tax consequence if the loan is used for the purchase of a dwelling, to purchase treasury shares in the company, or to purchase an automobile to be used in the fulfilment of duties. It can also apply to a shareholder if the loan is repaid within one year.

We are creating a second class of taxpayers and further inequities by allowing deductions to certain classes of taxpayers, that is shareholders, and not to simple employees, and by legislating by the size of the loophole. The taxation of this so-called benefit was not thought of until it was realized that too many people were making use of it.

Mr. George Baker (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke) raised a question in the House of Commons on May 19, 1977, about a departmental interpretation that employees or shareholders borrowing money at less than a reasonable rate of interest receive a taxable benefit, and that commencing January 1, 1978, the value of the benefit will be computed as the amount by which the interest paid by the borrower is less than it would have been had a reasonable rate been charged. The hon. member referred to court rulings that there is no obligation for a lender to charge a specified rate of interest on loans, and asked how we would enforce such an interpretation without legislative approval. The Minister of National Revenue (Miss Bégin) replied that there had been consultations with the Department of Justice respecting this matter.

The point is, Mr. Speaker that while it has been held that it is not obligatory for a lender to charge interest on a loan, in our view it does not necessarily follow that the borrower in these circumstances does not receive and enjoy a benefit. Such a benefit is taxable under the Income Tax Act.

In earlier years it was not a widespread practice for companies to make loans at low or zero interest rates to employees and shareholders, and where this was done relatively small amounts were involved. But the practice has grown over the years and in many instances substantially large sums of money are involved. The department feels it has a responsibility to check a practice that has clearly become an abuse.

Perhaps a simple example will suffice to illustrate how unfair it is to taxpayers generally when some taxpayers are able to enjoy the benefits of an interest free loan without incurring tax. Employee A accepts a $30,000 a year job. He buys a home, and out of his earnings pays $5,000 a year in mortgage interest. Employee B accepts a similar job for $25,000 but also receives an interest free loan from his employer that has enabled him to buy a home of the same value as Employee A's. Both employees would have $25,000 left, but under the practice that has been developing Employee A reports $30,000 of income whereas Employee B is taxed on only $25,000. The new interpretation has been issued in the interests of fairness and equity to all taxpayers.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The motion before the House is now deemed to have been withdrawn.

Motion withdrawn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock tonight.

CANADA DEPOSIT INSURANCE CORPORATION ACT

AMENDMENTS REPECTING PREMIUMS, SHARE CAPITAL, ETC.

The House resumed consideration of Bill C-3, to amend the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, and the amendment of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, prior to the dinner hour I had been speaking on the amendment of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) which is now before us with respect to Bill C-3. Perhaps I should read the portion of the amendment with which I want to deal. The amendment is in general reference to the activities of the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation. Subclause (5) of the amendment reads:

Notwithstanding subsection (1), moneys received by a member institution on or after January 1, 1977, for which the institution has issued or is obligated to issue an instrument of indebtedness other than a draft, certified draft or cheque, travellers' cheque, prepaid letter of credit or money order do not constitute a deposit where the instrument is payable outside Canada or in a currency other than Canadian currency.

The reason that I read the subclause is that it will have two effects. One is that when an institution such as a trust or loan company takes a deposit that is payable in a foreign currency, it is not covered by CDIC. We do not object to that, that is fine, we are not suggesting that foreign currency obligations should carry in any way the insurance protection which CDIC is able to extend.

What we take exception to is that a Canadian dollar obligation, simply because it happens to be payable outside Canada, will not carry insurance protection. That is the effect of the subclause to which I have referred.

This amendment was triggered by the fact that Canada Trust placed a $25 million issue in Europe through a reputable investment house at 9.25 per cent, the issue being due December 31, 1981. Canada Trust did this in the latter part of last year. It was obviously a five year debenture which was placed by that underwriter with European investors. The interesting thing is that at the same time the Canada Permanent Mortgage Corporation placed the same amount, $25 million, at 9.75 per cent, with the same due date. In short, Canada Permanent did exactly the same thing. Its issue had the same due date, but Canada Permanent ended up paying .5 per cent more than did Canada Trust. Over the life of the debenture, that .5 per cent represents $625,000, so we are talking about a considerable saving, and I remind hon. members that that saving eventually accrues to mortgage holders in this country. That will mean cheaper mortgage financing for those who wish mortgage funds in Canada to the extent we can win cheaper foreign funds than are available in Canada.

The important question for us to consider is whether the department is correct in saying that that should be stopped, because frankly I do not think anybody in the CIDC had thought of it before. It was the innovation of the trust company to which I referred which triggered the department, and I think the department arbitrarily said that somehow it is wrong to have an issue like that placed in Europe with insurance attached to it. We say it is not wrong. What is wrong with getting cheaper mortgage money for Canadians?

[Mr. Deputy Speaker.]

If a trust company, loan company, or any other insured institution wishes to take in those funds anywhere in the world, as long as they are expressed in Canadian dollars what is wrong with winning those funds and hopefully getting cheaper mortgage rates for Canadians?

Prior to five o'clock the minister stated that he understood that the financial community was generally in agreement with the wording which we now have before us. Mr. Art Mingay, who happens to be the president of the Trust Companies Association of Canada says "No way". It comes as a great surprise to him that that representation should be put before us in this House. Incidentally, his company, Canada Trust, is the one I referred to when I referred to that $25 million issue.

Mr. Mingay feels that it would be preferable to refer this matter back to the committee and to allow the trust industry, perhaps the loan industry and other industries which are involved, to have an opportunity to explain why they feel that this is not a desirable thing to encourage as far as Canadians are concerned.

Our position on this amendment is that while certain parts of it—for example, the part which restricts the use of bearer certificates—are acceptable, we feel we cannot accept the suggestion that money which would result in lower mortgage rates for Canadians should be turned down arbitrarily just because a bureaucracy says it did not have that in mind at one point. There is no question that the insurance applies only up to $20,000. The issue which was placed in Europe is subject to that restriction. Those who are putting the money up in Europe, or wherever it is placed, are insured only up to $20,000 per depositor. Our suggestion is that the minister should reconsider this amendment and either withdraw it before the bill is passed this evening, or refer it back to the committee where that committee can have a second look at the bill with particular reference to the proposed amendment. Hopefully the amendment can be amended or withdrawn at that stage.

Do we in this House wish to encourage cheaper mortgage funds for Canadians, or, because the bureaucracy says it does not think that should be done, should we let the bureaucracy rule? Should we say, "To hell with the larger sector of the mortgage community; they can bear the heavy mortgage debt at higher rates; we feel that the bureaucracy must rule?"

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, when this bill was before the committee this amendment was not mentioned. It seems to me that it is unfair of the minister to propose this amendment at this time when we have not had an opportunity to quiz him on it.

The main point which was brought out in committee was that there have been only two cases in which the fund has been called upon to protect the borrowing public, and these took place in two provinces, Alberta and British Columbia.

I would like to refer to page 2:7 of the minutes of the standing committee for November 4. The hon. member for Gatineau (Mr. Clermont) was questioning Mr. Gingras as follows:

MR. CLERMONT: This means that you had two claims to settle so far, and in only one case did you make a refund, which in that instance came to about $600,000.

MR. GINGRAS: That means that we paid out about $25 million to the depositors, but when all these assets are liquidated, our loss will come to about $600,000.

MR. CLERMONT: The $25 million you are going to have to pay out is therefore a claim.

MR. GINGRAS: Yes, that is the case, since we paid out money to depositors.

MR. CLERMONT: Was it a federal or provincial corporation?

MR. GINGRAS: It was provincial.

MR. CLERMONT: In which province?

MR. GINGRAS: Alberta. That is why Alberta paid . . . excuse me. The case in which we did not suffer any losses concerned Alberta. The claim made by British Columbia resulted in a loss for us.

MR. CLERMONT: It was a provincial corporation in that instance as well.

MR. GINGRAS: Yes, in both cases.

MR. CLERMONT: It is left up to the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation to decrease or refund certain premiums, which amounts to a reduction of the premiums. Is this why I see the following heading on page 8 of the Annual Report:

The hon. member continued on that very point. This was the main issue brought before the committee while it was investigating Bill C-3, and I think it behooves the minister to accede to the request of the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) to allow this amendment to go back to the committee so that we can find out just what its consequences might be.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those in favour of the motion will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In my opinion the nays have it.

And more than five members having risen:

● (2020)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, as it is possible there are going to be other divisions this evening I wonder if there could be agreement to postpone this and have all divisions taken at ten o'clock.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, there is a possibility of other divisions on the bills coming before the House. I think we would be agreeable to defer taking the divisions, let the other business go ahead, and try to arrive at a mutually satisfactory time for taking the divisions. If that is not possible we might then proceed at the earliest opportunity to call in the members.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we will agree to deferring the vote on the understanding that the time for calling that vote be worked out by consultation.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): I have heard the representations of the three parties that there is unanimous consent to deferral of the vote without any set time. Is it agreed to defer the vote?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): The House will now proceed to consideration of Bill C-8. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) on a point of order.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, there has been some consultation across the floor and the rather more substantial matter for discussion now is the tax treaties bill. I wonder if we could change the order of business by agreement, deal with Bill C-12 at this time, and follow it with Bill C-8.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Bill C-8 having been called, is it agreed to proceed with Bill C-12 instead?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

INCOME TAX

MEASURE TO IMPLEMENT AGREEMENTS BETWEEN CANADA AND CERTAIN COUNTRIES TO AVOID DOUBLE TAXATION

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-12, to implement an agreement between Canada and the Federal Republic of Germany and conventions between Canada and Morocco, Canada and Pakistan, Canada and Singapore, Canada and the Philippines, Canada and the Dominican Republic and Canada and Switzerland for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): Before we proceed with the report stage of Bill C-12 I might put on the record some remarks concerning the approach to consideration of the different motions that have been received. On today's notice paper there are 31 motions to amend Bill C-12, 24 in the name of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald), and seven in the name of the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens).

The effect of motions Nos. 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 21, 23, 25, 27, 29 and 30, in the name of the minister, if carried, would be to delete from the bill all references to an agreement between Canada and Germany for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax.

Since all 24 motions deal with the same aspect of the bill, or the same principle, it would be my intention to group them for the purpose of debate. I would also suggest that when the question is put on motion No. 1, a recorded division, if required, would dispose of the remaining 23 motions.

Likewise, motions Nos. 2, 20, 22, 24, 26, 28 and 31, standing in the name of the hon. member for York-Simcoe, have a similar intention as those of the minister by deleting from the bill all references to a convention between Canada and Switzerland. It is also my intention to group them for the purpose of debate, and a division on motion No. 2, if required, would dispose of the remaining six motions.

Is this to the satisfaction of all hon. members?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Laniel): If the House agrees I shall read only motion No. 1 and assume that the other 23 motions are read into the record. Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance) moved motion No. 1:

That Bill C-12, An Act to implement an agreement between Canada and the Federal Republic of Germany and conventions between Canada and Morocco, Canada and Pakistan, Canada and Singapore, Canada and the Philippines, Canada and the Dominican Republic and Canada and Switzerland for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax, be amended by deleting from the long title the words "an agreement between Canada and the Federal Republic of Germany and".

He said: Mr. Speaker, as you pointed out so correctly, the purpose of the amendments standing in my name is to deal with the tax agreement with the Federal Republic of Germany. I should explain that since the tax agreement which is incorporated in the bill was negotiated between Canada and the Federal Republic of Germany, that country has brought in a new system of corporate taxation. For that reason it is the view of the Government of Canada that the tax agreement with that country should be renegotiated. On this basis we are asking parliament to delete all reference to West Germany from the bill so that we may go back and engage in these negotiations.

Under the old system in West Germany, undistributed profits were subjected to a corporate tax of 51 per cent while distributed profits were subjected only to 24.5 per cent. Under the new system the rate of corporate tax on undistributed profits is 56 per cent while the rate on distributed profits is 36 per cent. This, coupled with the 25 per cent witholding tax which is recognized in the new Canada-Germany tax treaty, would result in a substantial increase in the taxes paid by Canadian shareholders of German companies. The Canadian government therefore asked the German authorities for a revision of some of the provisions of the new agreement between the two countries.

The principal change in the agreement would be made in the dividend article; technical changes may also be made to other provisions of the agreement but they are expected to remain substantially the same.

I should tell the House that discussions with West Germany are scheduled for July in order to revise the agreement, and it is expected that the agreement will be resubmitted to parliament as soon as it is concluded.

I should also make reference to one minor amendment that is proposed to the treaty, and that is to correct an error that was made in the Canada-Morocco double-taxation convention. It is a typographical error in the Moroccan convention. On page 50 of Bill C-12 the cross-reference at the end of paragraph 2 of article 13 is to article 22, namely, the methods for prevention of the double-taxation article. It should instead refer to Article 21 which deals with taxation of capital. As I said, the error was incorporated in the original text which was signed between the parties. We have now received the agreement of the Moroccan authorities to make the appropriate convention in the treaty. The purpose of the amendment, therefore, is to reflect in this enabling bill the change that has been agreed to between the two sovereign states. This is the explanation of the changes put forward in my name.

• (2030)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the minister a question with regard to the statement he just made that the agreement with the Federal Republic of Germany is being renegotiated. As I understand it, the agreement that had been negotiated before the bill was drafted was to take effect as of January 1, 1977. Is it intended that the revision of that agreement, or the new agreement, will have that same effective date?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, at the moment that question has not been determined. Obviously it would be desirable, given the impact of our own law, to try to make it effective from that particular date. However, I do not want to prejudge what the negotiators might come up with.

By way of further comment, there have been changes in the Canadian tax law which would have an impact as of January 1. It certainly would be desirable to hold to that date, but I think I would be prejudging what the West German position might be if I gave an assurance at this moment. That certainly would be a desirable objective. We will have to wait and see what the Germans have to say about it.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, with regard to motion No. 1 in the name of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) and the motions related to that motion, they have the effect of deleting the treaty that is now within the bill dealing with the Federal Republic of Germany. We have no objection to the minister's motion and the effect of it, which would be the deletion of this treaty from the bill that is now before us.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion No. 1 agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The adoption of motion No. 1 also disposes favourably of motions Nos. 3, 4, 5, 6, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 21, 23, 25, 27, 29 and 30 appearing in the name of the Minister of Finance. Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance) moved motion No. 3:

That Bill C-12, An Act to implement an agreement between Canada and the Federal Republic of Germany and conventions between Canada and Morocco, Canada and Pakistan, Canada and Singapore, Canada and the Philippines, Canada and the Dominican Republic and Canada and Switzerland for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax, be amended by striking out Part I, the heading preceding Clause 1 and Clauses 1 to 3 and by renumbering Parts II to VIII as Parts I to VII respectively.

"paragraph 3 of Article XXI."

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The House will now proceed to the consideration of motion No. 2 appearing in the name of the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), which will also dispose of motions Nos. 20, 22, 24, 26, 28 and 31. I will read motion No. 2 to the House. Is it agreed that, in doing this, it will be considered as though the other six motions have been read?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe) moved motion No. 2:

That Bill C-12, An Act to implement an agreement between Canada and the Federal Republic of Germany and conventions between Canada and Morocco, Canada and Pakistan, Canada and Singapore, Canada and the Philippines, Canada and the Dominican Republic and Canada and Switzerland for the avoidance of double taxation with respect to income tax, be amended by deleting from the long title the words "and Canada and Switzerland".

He said: Mr. Speaker, I hope in the spirit of co-operation that is showing this evening that having acceded to the minister's motion No. 1 the minister will now accede to our motion No. 2 which we feel will have an identical effect to the minister's motion. He dealt with the treaty dealing with Germany. We are dealing with the Swiss treaty. We are simply suggesting that the Swiss treaty should also be deleted from the bill before us.

In dealing with the amendments I propose, I wish to point out that they are aimed at improving a bill which, with but one exception, is acceptable to us on this side of the House.

The general provisions of Bill C-12 respecting withholding taxes on dividends, interest, royalties and the like are, I believe, basically sound, and follow established international practice. Most members of the House would agree that mutual conventions of this sort are usually considered essential today in promoting the flow of trade and investment.

We have no objection to any of this. Our objections to this bill and the subsequent amendments arise in particular from the treaty with Switzerland and specifically from the provisions which ask us to confirm, under treaty, the privileged secrecy of those who would hide behind the secret numbered Swiss bank account.

Of all seven treaties—it is now six—embodied in this bill, the Swiss agreement is the only one to limit severely our access to information which would be vital in prosecuting tax frauds and other international cheats.

When we view it in comparison to concessions the Americans have won from the Swiss, the arrangements struck by our negotiators are sadly inadequate and do nothing to protect Canada from the numbered account type of dodge.

Following on the heels, as it does, of recent revelations that our own Crown corporations have been linked to unethical, and possibly illegal, payments into secret Swiss bank accounts, I find this treaty poorly conceived and ill-timed. It is a treaty which at this time defies common sense and the best interests of Canada.

I would like to put on record four points which I urge hon. members to consider in the debate on this bill.

First, Switzerland is a tax haven. Despite the adamant insistence of the government in committee that Switzerland is not a tax haven because it levies taxes, a number of international financial experts think otherwise. One authority has this to say:

> For more than a century Switzerland had been recognized as the most popular tax haven in Europe and the most stable on any continent . . . In fact, surveys show that today Switzerland remains the leading tax-haven, next to Panama, in numbers of foreign based companies established in a single nation.

The source which gives several reasons for this, including low taxes, federal taxes on world-wide income begins at 3 per cent and graduates to 8 per cent, a hospitable climate for foreign investment and a unique banking system, is a publication entitled, appropriately enough, "Tax Havens of the World" 1976 edition. If the minister is not familiar with that booklet, I am willing to send it to him so that there is no doubt in his mind as to whether Switzerland is in fact a tax haven. In fact it is the most sought after tax haven in the world, bar none. The fact that our negotiators are unable to identify a tax haven when they see one is reflected in the relatively weak safeguards embodied in this treaty we are asked to ratify.

Second, our negotiators have failed to gain concessions from the Swiss that were granted to the Americans as far back as 1951. U.S. officials, under a series of treaties with the Swiss, are able to obtain bank account balances, particulars of deposits, and even, in some instances, names of account holders when they are U.S. nationals suspected of tax fraud, forgery, or other criminal activity recognized by both countries. Swiss banking authorities have told me how naive they believe Canadian negotiators have been. Naturally, they speak off the record. But they say that compared to the negotiators from the United States our people literally did not know what they were doing when they sat down to hammer out this treaty.

The original 1951 U.S.-Switzerland treaty includes a phrase similar to ours limiting exchange of information, but with one major exception—Article XVI (1) incorporates a clause providing for the exchange of information "for the prevention of fraud and the like in relation to taxes which are the subject of the present convention."

The treaty before us may offer some little help in this regard but nothing so broad as is embodied in the U.S.-Swiss treaties which the Swiss Supreme Court has ruled can even take precedence over Swiss domestic laws of secrecy.

I would emphasize that our treaty contains specific words limiting our access to anything that is contrary to the laws of Switzerland. The contrast between our treaty and the American treaty is startling.

In the Prentice-Hall "Federal Tax Treaty Reporter" the following is stated in paragraph 82.014 regarding the case of X versus the Swiss Confederation Tax Administration:

> Under Swiss Income Tax Treaties Swiss authorities could provide the Internal Revenue Service with data from records of a U.S. citizen's bank account when that citizen was charged with tax fraud, a crime in both countries, substantiated by the IRS and generally confirmed by investigation. Bank secrecy could be lifted for fraud as distinguished from mere assessment.

I suggest there is nothing in the Swiss treaty placed before us today which would give us anywhere near the kind of advantage the Americans have gained in lifting the veil of secrecy from those who would defraud their government. I might add that the Swiss are the first to state that they wish they could change the American treaty. They acknowledge the Americans have negotiated a tough deal. But, surely, Canadians can be equally tough—or, if they are not, we must draw other inferences from the fact that they have concluded an agreement with the Swiss as favourable as the one before us tonight.

As late as last August the Americans ratified a judicial and administrative mutual assistance treaty which provides for the exchange of certified bank records, expert testimony and other assistance necessary for the prosecution of mutually recognized crimes. That treaty went into effect in January of this year, yet the government is proposing ratification of a treaty with Switzerland which falls far short of these conventions. It is inconceivable to me that we would not insist on similar concessions from a tax-haven country, especially in the light of the recent revelations which have been debated in the House and to which my colleagues will be referring later in the debate tonight.

We have little to gain from ratifying this treaty at this time and much to gain from waiting. Highly placed sources within the Swiss banking community have indicated that Swiss authorities are alarmed by certain defalcations in their banking community which have arisen from the use of secret accounts. Apparently only a few officials at any time—usually two—are allowed access to banking records and the government is unhappy about the lack of control over secret bank accounts. The Swiss, I understand, are themselves considering a crackdown on non-disclosure practices in that country.

Similarly, other nations, including the United States, are reportedly pressing for more open disclosure practices. These nations are urging the adoption of an OECD model agreement in the hope it would lead to better international co-operation in taxation administration and the prevention of fraud.

Why are we rushing into this treaty at a time when the Swiss themselves are questioning secrecy? In what way does this anxiety to sign a treaty with Switzerland to assist tax dodgers, with their secret accounts and a kind of pay-off system, tie in with the government's attitude toward Polysar? We have to ask some of these pertinent questions before voting one way or the other on this important bill. In short, why are we rushing into this treaty? A reform of the Swiss secret account system might yield, at another time, a more beneficial treaty for Canada.

The Swiss government itself is pushing for amendments to the treaty which is now before us. This was not made clear during the committee sessions. It has not been made clear by the minister to date. The treaty we are being asked to ratify tonight has, in fact, been partially amended, certainly in the initial sense, by the Swiss and the Canadian authorities. The reason we do not have the amended form before us tonight is that the government apparently intends to give effect to the amendments by order in council at a later date. It is interesting that these amendments should have been prompted by Swiss banks which were balking at certain provisions in the treaty which they felt could create an administrative nightmare for them.

In short, while the treaty goes far further than the Swiss would normally have expected, it goes far further than the United States treaty in terms of ensuring the secrecy to which I have been referring. On the other hand the Swiss bankers have said that it is too complicated, from an administrative point of view, and they hope to have those complications removed. We understand the Canadian authorities have hastened to assure them that this will be done on the assumption that once the bill has passed through parliament here the desired amendments can be made by order in council, in that way avoiding the need for frankness in this Chamber.

Hon. members should note that the treaty is retroactive to January 1, 1976. On this point the government has not been candid with us, as I have just explained. I ask hon. members why we should not have the final treaty presented to us before we ratify an agreement of this nature.

To deal with the German treaty, as the minister indicated earlier, when dealing with motion No. 1, there have been extensive changes in German tax law so I think the minister can correctly state that the treaty he was bringing before us for ratification could not be proceeded with at the present time, on the ground that it would be rather meaningless. On the other hand, despite the fact that there is every intention of amending the Swiss treaty, the government is pushing ahead with it whereas it could easily be held up and dealt with later.

Mr. Speaker, the administration has clearly failed to negotiate terms that would be in Canada's best interests. Now they are trying to slip this through in a bill ratifying five good treaties and one bad one.

● (2050)

The Swiss treaty does nothing to prevent the Polysar type affair; it does nothing to give us meaningful access behind the shroud of secrecy that protects those who would violate our laws. It is inadequately negotiated. It is unnecessary to implement it at this time. That is why I am proposing in my amendments that the Swiss treaty be deleted and not ratified. That is why I have proposed amendments aimed at setting aside the Swiss treaty until cooler, more rational minds prevail.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to have the opportunity to deal with the hon. member's four points. Dealing with the first one, the hon. member has questioned the competence of federal officials and their word in this matter, so I will not rely on them for my authority on this particular occasion. Indeed, I will go to that rather fascinating body of literature which he referred to, the tax haven literature.

The observation may be made, and has been made, that while Switzerland was at one time looked on as a tax haven, since the federal decree of 1962 this can hardly be accurate.

Mr. Stevens: I referred to a 1976 book.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Yes, indeed. For example, the highly respected magazine Tax Haven Review of February, 1975, asked very directly the question "Switzerland: Is It a Tax Haven", and on page 12 the author wrote:

> The short answer to this question must be emphatic: No. Public opinion has erroneously come to regard Switzerland as a tax haven possibly because of general misconceptions held about Swiss banking laws ... The truth of the matter Switzerland has no tax haven facilities in the generally accepted sense of the term.

Income Tax

Mr. Marshall Langer in an article entitled "Tax Havens of the World", published in the Bulletin for International Fiscal Documentation, Vol. XXIV, stated the following:

> Switzerland is probably the most difficult country to generalize about as a tax haven. Most direct taxes are levied by the cantons (of which there are 25), rather than by the federal government. Switzerland has concluded tax treaties with many other countries. Some of these countries complained to Switzerland that people from all over the world were using Swiss companies to take advantage of treaty concessions to which they were not entitled. A 1962 decree of the Swiss Federal Council has effectively put an end to these alleged abuses.

In the "International Tax Strategy" service published in London under the direction of Mr. Michael Edwards-Kerr, it is stated at page 1 of chapter 27, devoted to Switzerland:

> Even now, despite the existence of special "favourable" legislation in various cantons, quite a heavy tax burden must be paid for using Switzerland ... Up till the early 1960's Switzerland was the favourite tax haven ... Since the passing of the Federal Decree of December 1962 the attraction of Switzerland as a tax haven has diminished substantially.

In his book entitled Tax Havens Encyclopedia, Mr. Barry Spitz states on page 4 of the chapter devoted to Switzerland:

> During the past decade a slight change in the attitude of the government towards tax haven operations has become manifest. The cantonal authorities generally have been more restrained in granting special tax status. This attitude is due principally to the influence of foreign governments especially those with which Switzerland has signed treaties to avoid double taxation.

With regard to the rates of total tax burden, Mr. Speaker, according to Mr. Milton Grundy in his book "Grundy's Tax Havens—A World Study", the total tax burden by his standard, in West Germany, for example, is 35.1 per cent—

Mr. Stevens: On international income?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): —in Great Britain it is 32.8 per cent, in the United States 28.3 per cent, and in Switzerland 25 per cent.

Mr. Stevens: Not on international income, come clean now.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I think, on the whole, Mr. Speaker, I would have to accept the judgment of Mr. Grundy rather than that of the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens).

Mr. Stevens: Make it clear. He does not say on international income.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): So it is quite clear that the hon. member is badly misinformed, that he has passed on judgments from the pre-1962 period. For this reason I think the House may safely reject the first of his arguments.

The hon. gentleman complained about the form of the tax treaty, particularly with regard to provision of information. I would point out to him, as he must know, that the form of this treaty is the same, for example, as the form for West Germany in terms of provision of information.

Mr. Stevens: It is not.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It is indeed. I would refer him in particular to Article XXV of the Swiss convention, which is in substantially the form of that of the Federal Republic of Germany in regard to provision of information.

Mr. O'Sullivan: Communist Germany?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member says "Communist Germany". If he does not know that the Federal Republic of Germany is not communist Germany, maybe he should not be sitting in this House. So we are talking here of treaties in the form of the OECD model tax convention. The hon. member for York-Simcoe said that he approved of the other five treaties. They are in accordance with the model tax convention, as is this one right here.

The hon. gentleman made the allegation that amendments could be made to this treaty with Switzerland by order in council in such a way that they would not be known generally, and in particular that the House would have no opportunity of passing judgment on them. May I just point out to the House that while it is true that provision is made in this bill to have ratification of supplementary agreements on the tax treaties with the various parties made by order in council, there is a specific provision in the bill, Clause 23, providing that the order in question must be tabled in the House, and providing for a negative resolution procedure so that the House of Commons may debate that particular judgment, so that far from parliament not being given an opportunity to pass judgment on these questions, the tax law which we are specifically putting before the House this evening does provide for that kind of parliamentary action in regard to any of the orders which might be made.

The hon. gentleman referred to the fact that there have been discussions with regard to the tax treaty. Indeed I think he suggested at one point that the Swiss did not want this particular treaty to be ratified. I have seen no evidence that that is the Swiss viewpoint. Indeed my understanding is that there is an expectation on their part that the treaty will be carried into law.

I think it is fair to point out that, in the absence of this kind of treaty in regard to double taxation, Canadian nationals who may have business operations with Switzerland do run the risk, if we take the advice of the hon. gentleman, of having to bear a heavier tax burden than would be the case if the treaty is carried into effect. Therefore, far from being in the interests of any sinister forces in Switzerland, the reason that a government enters into a tax treaty with another country is to secure equitable treatment for its own nationals in relation to the foreign tax system.

I suggest, in light of that, and in light of the mistaken impressions under which the hon. member for York-Simcoe labours and which he put before the House, the House should vote against these particular amendments, and that we should move on from here to provide for approval of the Swiss tax treaty.

Mr. Stevens: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker—

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for York-Simcoe is rising on a point of order.

Mr. Stevens: Would the hon. minister permit a question?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Go ahead.

Mr. Stevens: The minister has stated that the exchange of information provisions in the Swiss treaty and the German treaty are substantially the same. Before I ask him a direct question may I refer him to page 183 of the bill before us, where in article XXV of the Swiss treaty, under "Exchange of Information", it is stated:

> The competent authorities of the Contracting States shall exchange such information—

This is the important part.

> —(being information which is at their disposal under their respective taxation laws in the normal course of administration) as is necessary for carrying out the provisions of the present Convention—

● (2100)

I should like to direct the minister's attention to Article XXVI at page 31 dealing with exchange of information, which is the comparable section to the German treaty, that reads as follows:

> The competent authorities of the contracting states shall exchange such information as is necessary for the carrying out of this agreement . . .

The important words which were inserted in Switzerland and the reason we are making our amendment tonight is the information which is at their disposal under their respective taxation laws in the normal course of administration.

I would like to direct a question to the minister. Does the minister not agree that those two clauses are substantially different and that the Swiss treaty carefully protects and makes any obligation under their Swiss treaty subject to Swiss law, which is not the case in Germany?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I do not agree with that judgment at all. Very obviously the same provision would apply to Canada. It is information which is in the possession of Canadian authorities, in the normal application of Canadian law, just as is in the application of tax laws by any other country which is involved in this regard. Therefore the distinction which the hon. gentleman draws is distinction without a difference.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I was wondering if the minister could explain to the House why the words in the brackets of Clause 25 of the Swiss treaty were inserted in the Swiss treaty but not in the German treaty? Those words read as follows: "being information which is at their disposal under their respective taxation laws in the normal course of administration". Why were those words inserted in the Swiss treaty but not in one of the other six treaties we have before us tonight?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, they are the result of negotiations between Canada and Switzerland. I should invite any member to look at the words again, and he will note that the words really express only the obvious in this regard, namely, that it is information which is in the hands of the respective tax authorities of the two countries which is provided by this. There is no substantial difference involved by the words added in parenthesis.

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to participate briefly in this debate in order to endorse strongly the position taken by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) and to raise with the minister some concerns and apprehensions I feel might arise by virtue of accepting this part of the bill relating to the Swiss treaty, at the present time.

The point has been well made by my colleague from York-Simcoe that there is a distinction in the wording with respect to exchange of information. The identical provisions are not in the treaty with West Germany as are contained in the treaty with Switzerland. The minister may want to discount those particular words referred to by my colleague by simply saying they are merely an administrative provision. I would suggest to him that he look at the provision more closely in light of the well-known provisions in Switzerland relating to secrecy in bank accounts.

There has been considerable discussion in this parliament on the use of Swiss numbered bank accounts with respect to payments made by Crown corporations. That was referred to by my colleague from York-Simcoe. At the present time the Swiss are reviewing the whole question of their numbered accounts. I mention this fact because, in dealing with the observations and criticism raised by my colleague from York-Simcoe, it is my understanding that in Switzerland secrecy rules are not waived with respect to bank accounts. In criminal investigations tax evasion is not an offence in Switzerland. This is a very important point for us to consider in this debate.

On the basis of my reading of Article XXV of the treaty, any information we may want to get in Canada with respect to moneys going into numbered Swiss bank accounts, by virtue of an attempt to avoid the payment of taxes in Canada, does not necessarily have to be provided by Swiss officials. They do not have to provide that information to us under the terms of this particular agreement.

Mr. Stevens: In fact it is a criminal offence for them to do it.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: As the hon. member for York-Simcoe should know, the Swiss officials are now in the process of reviewing the whole question of Swiss bank accounts and are trying to set down a new code of ethics and a new set of rules with respect to numbered bank accounts. An attempt is going to be made to bring them under stricter control with a new agreement between the National Bank of Switzerland and the Bankers' Association.

Professor Leo Schuermann, the director general of the Swiss National Bank, said:

> . . . the agreement will "settle to an important extent" the issuance of numbered accounts in Swiss banks—a special service long offered to assure anonymity.

The director general may be attempting to establish a new set of rules with respect to Swiss bank accounts. They have good intentions in Switzerland. I do not doubt that at all. As has been suggested by the hon. member for York-Simcoe, the acceptance of this treaty in its present form is somewhat premature, especially when we consider the fact that Swiss bank accounts are a very important element with respect to the whole question of double taxation and taxation matters in general.

The whole question of Swiss bank accounts has come under considerable pressure in Switzerland. They are pushing for reform as a result of a banking scandal last month at the Chiasso branch of Crédit Suisse, one of the country's three largest banks. Losses from the scandal apparently involved an unauthorized flight of capital from neighbouring Italy, which is estimated at something like $400 million. One can understand that there is great concern with respect to that kind of flight of capital and funds into Switzerland.

The Swiss have their own reasons for wanting to improve and revise their own system with respect to numbered bank accounts and the secrecy provisions. These provisions have been in effect since the thirties. They were as a result of deposits of money from Germany, by Jewish and other German citizens, during that period of time. At that time Swiss banks facilitated the flight of money from Germany. The removal of money from Germany, prior to the second world war, was a capital offence. That is the genesis of the establishment of anonymous numbered accounts.

As I have said, pressure is developing because of the suggestion that since the Second World War secrecy and numbered accounts have led to repeated clashes between Switzerland and other western countries which have claimed that Swiss bank accounts have facilitated the flight of hundreds of billions of dollars to that country, largely to avoid taxes. That is the whole point of this particular treaty.

For the minister to stand up and suggest the provisions of Article XXV are clear and unequivocal, with respect to this very important factor, is premature on his part. That particular factor has been brought out clearly by my colleague from York-Simcoe. As he showed, some serious questions concerning this treaty need to be answered. We should not ratify the treaty until the Swiss have revised their own rules governing numbered bank accounts.

The government seeks to ratify this treaty after certain developments have taken place concerning government agencies. Those developments were reported by the media. The minister himself has had experience of and contact with Polysar, one of the Crown corporations now in the news.

Mr. Stevens: He was the minister.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He was the minister when certain developments concerning certain payments came to the fore.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I was not the minister at the time.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: The hon. gentleman says he was not the minister at the time. Since he was a member of the cabinet one assumes he knew about it. I hope he knew about these developments. Surely the government's attitude is strange.

A Crown corporation for which the federal government is responsible was involved in the payment of funds into a numbered Swiss bank account. The government surely is under the obligation to make sure we have the power or ability to obtain all necessary information, to enable us to identify to whom those payments were made, that is to say, who operated the numbered Swiss bank account, and why those payments were made. What was their purpose? Such information has not been forthcoming. I suggest there is a distinct relationship between that activity on the part of an agency of the federal government and our sanctioning this treaty at this time. I say this in view of the language of the treaty, or in view of the language of Article XXV concerning the obtaining of information from Swiss authorities on taxation matters and information relating to collection of taxes from Canadian citizens, corporations and nationals.

I understand that in Switzerland tax evasion is not an offence. Perhaps the minister can verify this. In other words, if taxes are evaded in Canada, or if Canadian taxes are evaded, that is not an offence in Switzerland, and they would not be obliged to give us information. If we try to collect taxes from people using a numbered Swiss bank account, we shall be whistling in the dark, for they could use a numbered Swiss bank account in order to hide money taken from Canada illegally.

The minister is responsible to this House. He ought to review the position and consider again the ratification of this treaty. He should accept the eminently sensible advice of the hon. member for York-Simcoe and accept his proposed amendment. After all, we can still consider the treaty. Apparently the Swiss will begin reviewing their numbered bank account system on June 6, or in four days. I suggest we should not pass this particular part of the bill. Perhaps this treaty could be introduced in a separate bill, once the points raised by my colleague from York-Simcoe have been met. We could do it after the Swiss have reviewed the operation of numbered, anonymous Swiss bank accounts. I say this because we may find, even after the Swiss have enacted a new code of rules governing their numbered accounts, that the code is still not satisfactory.

We may want to change the language of Article XXV to provide for carte blanche exchange of information without qualification. The minister may want to seek a legal opinion on the effect of such a provision. Perhaps we shall need to renegotiate the treaty, but I think the Swiss authorities will be receptive to this idea, if my colleague for York-Simcoe is right; since he is right 99.9 per cent of the time, I am sure he is right this time. Actually, I think he was wrong only once, and that's so long ago that it is most difficult to remember the event.

[Mr. Hnatyshyn.]

I do not think I make an unreasonable request. I suggest the Government of Canada should consider the consequences of ratifying a treaty imperfect in form, of perpetuating unsatisfactory conditions, and of countenancing the possibility of further incidents similar to the two or three raised not long ago in this House. I am talking of incidents involving Crown Corporations either directly or indirectly under the control of this government. I plead with the minister to reconsider the wording of Article XXV, to bear in mind the review which will soon begin in Switzerland, and to adopt the amendment proposed by my colleague from York-Simcoe.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I note that the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) is still working on about 36 treaties. It seems to me that at the end of the month they will be about 18 months behind schedule. Speaking on the amendment proposed by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) the minister commented on tax treaties, suggesting that we like to enter into tax treaties with co-operating countries. That is true in some cases. However, in other cases as in the case we are considering, the minister does not distinguish between countries which co-operate with Canada and countries which do not.

I wish to put on record some incidents concerning our dealings with Swiss enterprises, to show why the House should support my colleague's amendment. I suggest most hon. members remember that a Canadian Crown corporation, Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, paid $2.5 million U.S. as its part of the fee due with respect to the sale of a reactor. The money was paid to Intercontinental General Trading Company, a nominee of Banca Della Svizzera Italiana, Lugano, Switzerland. We could trace the money that far. Many attempts were made to trace the money further. All attempts to discover the destination of these funds were met with silence on the part of Swiss banks, although Swiss officials were fully co-operative.

I shall read some letters into the record. The first letter was written by the treasurer of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited to the head office of the Royal Bank of Canada, in Ottawa, dated December 14, 1976. It reads in part:

> Could you please supply us with a copy of your transmittal wire and wire the above bank for the following information, with a copy to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited:
> 1. Date of payment
> 2. Name of payee
> 3. Name of signing authority for payee.

Some weeks later the Royal Bank duly replied to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, with this information. I quote the letter the Royal Bank sent, under the signature of W. J. McCartney, dated January 7, 1977, which reads:

> Dear Sirs:
>
> Further to our letter of December 15th last, we wish to advise that on your behalf we contacted Banca Della Svizzera Italiana Lugano, Switzerland, who respond by telex as follows:

● (2120)

> "Re: Your telex of December 21, 1976—Atomic Energy of Canada
> We apologize for delay due to absence for Christmas holidays. We confirm that we have credited account of Intercontinental General Trading Establishment with U.S. dollars 2,500,000 on April 26, 1974, according to your telex of April 23, 1974.

Intercontinental General Trading Establishment of Schaan agrees with us to forward you the following information:

Intercontinental is a company acting on a fiduciary basis on behalf of clients and the amount involved of U.S. 2,500,000 had been immediately transferred in accordance with instructions received.

The principals are at present on journey outside Europe and we are sorry not to be able to give a complete answer to your telex until we will be released from professional and bank secrecy. We shall revert to the matter as soon as possible.

With our best regards

Banca Della Svizzera Italiana Lugano"

The letter continues:

As indicated in the last paragraph of their telex, the correspondent indicates that on return of the principals they will advise further. We will inform you of their response immediately on receipt.

Yours truly,

W. J. McCartney

If the commitments indicated in that letter had been followed, we might not have had such a problem and we might not be so concerned about this bill. However, despite the Christmas holidays referred to and the holidays outside of Europe also referred to, there was a further follow-up from the treasurer of AECL to the Royal Bank of Canada, which triggered a further letter of January 24, 1977, from the Royal Bank of Canada to Atomic Energy of Canada Limited in Ottawa for the attention of Mr. E. Deslauriers, treasurer. I am afraid that again I have to read the letter because it says it as clearly as it can be said. It reads:

Dear Sirs:

Further to our letter of January 7th and yours of January 14th last, we quote below a telex message received from Banca Della Svizzera Italiana, Lugano, Switzerland.

"Further to our telex of Dec. 30, 1976 re Atomic Energy of Canada, we believe that it might be of interest for you to obtain the text of our statement we released to the Canadian Press on January 13, 1977.

—Quote

With reference to the recent CBC broadcasts in which the names of Banca Della Svizzera Italiana (B.S.I.) of Lugano, Switzerland and the nominee company Intercontinental General Trading Establishment (I.G.T.) of Schaan, Liechtenstein were mentioned in relation to a certain payment allegedly made in connection with the sale of a nuclear reactor to Argentina B.S.I. wishes to make the following statement on its own behalf and on behalf of I.G.T.:

1. B.S.I. and I.G.T. are not and have not been parties and/or participants in the above mentioned sale of a nuclear reactor to Argentina either as principals or agents.

2. B.S.I. and I.G.T. have acted in this matter only as a banker carrying out routine banking functions.

3. B.S.I. and I.G.T. stand ready if required to provide any further information which they may lawfully give to any properly instituted authority.

—Unquote

The telex continues:

Kindly note that we now have been informed by our principals that:

1. The ultimate beneficiary of the remittance of doll.2,500,000 was neither a Canadian citizen, nor a company or other body subject to Canadian law.

2. Furthermore the above mentioned beneficiary was neither the company Italimpianti, nor a company or another body controlled by the same.

Hoping to have been of assistance to you, we remain, with best regards,

Banca Della Svizzera Italiana, Lugano."

We trust the foregoing will be of some assistance to you.

Yours truly,

W. J. McCartney

I am sorry to put all that material before the House, but I think the story has to be set out in a little detail so that we can understand the significance of the extended absences and of the spurious agreement to give further information which may be lawfully given to any properly constituted authority. Of course the answer that comes to us loud and clear is that it is not lawful under any circumstances to give any further or meaningful information.

The media were not entirely satisfied with the progress that was made by the Canadian parliament and its committees, and they made some attempts themselves in that direction in a recent story which, I believe, appeared in the Financial Post. The following paragraph was contained in the newspaper which indicated that the Swiss officials were at least in some way concerned. It stated:

Meanwhile, in Lugano, the public prosecutor for the Sottoceneri region of southern Switzerland confirmed he has opened an official investigation into AECL's payment of the $2.5 million secret commission to I.G.T., the Banca Svizzera Italiana (B.S.I.) nominee company. Partly owned by Banca Commerciale Italiana, Italimpianti's bankers, B.S.I. has its headquarters in Lugano.

Nothing ever came of that investigation and no further information was ever made available to the Canadian parliament of its committee.

One might consider that that would be regarded as an isolated instance, but of course members of the House will also be aware of the fact that there was another Canadian involvement in the way of Polysar Limited, a Crown Corporation, and further millions of taxpayers' dollars were paid into numbered Swiss bank accounts. The fact that they are numbered may not be completely significant because I understand all accounts are numbered, but the point is that these were secret accounts.

Polysar, in the light of these transactions, as a Canadian Crown corporation stood accused of involving itself in procedures which could have had the effect of hiding tax revenues from the Canadian taxation authorities. These practices would have enabled foreign customers to avoid foreign exchange regulations in the countries where they were located. They could have had the effect of evading income taxes in the countries involved, and they could have had the effect of defrauding minority shareholders in the customer companies.

Many officials from the companies came and testified, and others were invited to come and lend their testimony to try to sort out this matter for the benefit of the taxpayers of Canada whose many millions of dollars had been involved in these practices. However, we found that many witnesses, first of all out of fear of the Swiss secrecy laws and Swiss laws which prohibit disclosure of any information on the basis of confidentiality, refused to appear at all, and finally, on the assurance of the committee that no proceedings would be initiated against them for what they said here, they still feared their prosecution under Swiss law and said they would only appear if they were allowed to appear with Swiss counsel at their side so that they could be advised before they answered.

I think my colleague, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn), made reference to the banking reform that is taking place now in Switzerland in light of certain irregularities that have been discovered in the banking industry there. It seems that his plea that we wait until this reform is completed is a good one.

I would like also to refer to Article XXV in the treaty. I think the hon. member for York-Simcoe already referred to this. We find that in the Swiss treaty, unlike many of the others which we are being asked to pass at the same time, there is a strange reference to the exchange of information, and referring to this exchange of information the following clause is added: "being information which is at their disposal under their respective taxation laws in the normal course of administration".

It is difficult to understand that the minister was unable to explain what purpose this clause had in this particular agreement when it did not apply to the agreements of any other countries. And when one puts together the fact that Swiss law prohibits the release of information concerning bank accounts to any other competent authority, including the Government of Canada, and the fact that Swiss law would therefore not permit any information to be exchanged because it would not be at Switzerland's disposal as required under that clause, this can hardly be considered as the action of a co-operative and friendly government. I think the minister is not doing service to the House or to the Canadian taxpayer by rushing this bill through without considering these very important factors.

The minister well knows—and his colleagues can certainly remind him—of the furore which was created over the apparent careless use of millions of taxpayers' dollars in the instances to which I have referred.

For all these reasons I want to give my full support to the amendment proposed by the hon. member for York-Simcoe. I reiterate that we have little to gain at this time by passing this now, and we may have very much to gain by waiting until these glaring anomalies have been clarified by the Minister of Finance.

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my contribution to the debate tonight will not be a long one, unfortunately, but I have not had very much time to prepare because I did not realize that this bill would be debated tonight when I am on duty. Having the distinct pleasure of being on duty today, I would like to say a few words about this bill in support of my colleague, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), who has proposed a very worth-while amendment.

It is certainly an unusual and unlikely event to see the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) here today equating himself with Swiss gnomes. He is the most unlikely Swiss gnome I have ever seen, at least here in this House, but tonight he aligned himself with the Swiss. When I refer to Swiss gnomes, I refer to financial gnomes. Why is Canada rushing to engage in a tax treaty with Switzerland? If there is any need to engage in a tax treaty with Switzerland, obviously we should try to get something out of it which is to our benefit. Other countries besides Switzerland are used by financial dodgers, financial skimmers, financial scallywags, financial carpetbaggers, financial birds of prey, or financial flim-flam men as places to take their ill-gotten gains and bury them in unnumbered, numbered, or unknown bank accounts.

If we are going to have a tax treaty with Switzerland, would that not be an opportunity for us to try to get some concessions from Switzerland so that our government will no longer have the excuse, when a matter comes up before the Public Accounts Committee regarding pay-offs to agents or whatever it is, of saying that it cannot get information on that matter, so that our government would be in a position to get information when information is needed for tax purposes or for criminal prosecutions, and so that the government can get information from Switzerland?

The government's absolute lack of action and lack of enthusiasm about doing anything to get some information for the Public Accounts Committee on what happened in connection with AECL and the pay-offs which occurred with reference to the Korean contract, and the pay-offs which occurred with reference to other contracts with Polysar, have been the most laughable things I have noticed in my brief months in this House. The government has had an absolute lack of vim, vigour or enthusiasm in attempting to get information on those matters. It is laughable that the government should absolutely accept the statements made by the people involved, who said that if they were to give information to the Public Accounts Committee they would violate the laws of Switzerland or some other country. They said they positively could not be expected to inform one of our House committees of the facts in connection with these pay-offs made by Crown corporations to agents, customers, or otherwise.

Frankly I am fed up with this. If Canada is going to enter into a treaty with Switzerland, with Panama, with Costa Rica, or with Liechtenstein, Canada should be getting something in return, and Canada should take some action to stop these countries from being havens for birds of prey who use them as places to transfer their ill-gotten gains, in a manner unknown to their own jurisdictions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: Let me give the House an example. We all know about the Churchill Forest Industries incident in Manitoba and about how an entrepreneur from outside the country was able to sweep into Manitoba, inveigle the government into participating in the Churchill Forest Industries complex there, make millions of dollars, take them out of the country, hide them in Switzerland and in other countries around the world, and get away with it. That person still has not been brought to justice.

In Newfoundland we had a similar experience. When we came into office in Newfoundland in 1972 we came across a situation in which one John C. Doyle, a promoter for Canadian Javelin Limited, was involved in a matter with the previous government. The premier of the province, (Mr. Smallwood)—I think it was in 1965—gave a company known as Society Trans-shipping Incorporated of Liechtenstein—another tax dodge haven and another refuge for the criminal element of the world—a letter which said that company had the right to cut wood in 10,000 square miles of the mainland of Newfoundland, Labrador.

There was no order in council, no Crown lease, no Crown grant, and no document approved by the cabinet, but there was a letter from the premier of the province to Society Trans-shipping Incorporated telling that company it had the right to cut in 10,000 square miles, which I believe is bigger than the whole province of Prince Edward Island. There are 110,000 square miles in Labrador. Society Trans-shipping Incorporated of Liechtenstein, which had a bank account in Switzerland, sold its letter to Canadian Javelin Limited for $3.9 million. I am using round figures, but it was in that area.

Any lawyer who ever graduated from law school in this dominion could have advised Canadian Javelin Limited that the letter was not worth the paper on which it was written, that it did not have a scrap of legal validity, and that Society Trans-shipping Incorporated had not a jot or tittle of a right to do what it did. In fact even a layman could have advised that. Anyone but a numbskull, nitwit, or crook could have advised that that letter gave nothing. It certainly gave nothing worth $3.9 million belonging to private shareholders. That scrap of paper was signed by a premier and was authorized by a government, but there was no order in council and no legislation passed to validate it.

The question is: who owns Society Trans-shipping? That is the $3,900,000 question. Although I know who owns it I cannot prove it, nor can the Newfoundland government prove it, because no one can get behind the laws of Liechtenstein to find out who owns it. Are we putting up with this in Canada? We have no power in connection with Liechtenstein, but if a treaty ever comes before this House in connection with anything in Liechtenstein I will be 100 per cent against it until the Minister of Finance can find out from that country who is behind Society Trans-shipping and similar enterprises. That is the same sort of thing the government should be looking for in connection with Switzerland.

I happen to know that the $3,900,000 or whatever got transferred to Society Trans-shipping, went to Liechtenstein and passed through that country like a thief in the night to a bank in Switzerland. We can only guess where it went from there. I could use the immunity of this House to say who I am 100 per cent sure it went to, but I shall not.

An hon. Member: Oh, come on.

Mr. Crosbie: No, I will not.

An hon. Member: Put up or shut up.

Mr. Crosbie: I want hon. members opposite to bring in some legislation relating to Liechtenstein so that we can find out. This kind of skulduggery, this kind of crooked deal, this kind of suspicious deal, this kind of high level white collar, ingenious theft, is taking place every week of the year in Canada and other countries. Are we doing anything about it?

An hon. Member: How do you know that?

Mr. Crosbie: I have just given one instance of it, and we know there are hundreds of others. We can look at Churchill Forest Industries, Canadian Javelin, Society Trans-shipping, and we can look at who is down in Panama right now. That is another question, Mr. Speaker, and this gives me another opportunity to bring it up. I see the Minister of National Revenue (Miss Bégin) is in the House. The unequal administration of the tax laws of Canada is another matter that is not yet settled and it will be heard about in this House until the laws are administered equally.

Miss Bégin: Explain.

Mr. Crosbie: How can a taxpayer who owes millions of dollars in taxes be allowed to go 24 years without paying, go to Panama and stay there, a fugitive from justice, while this government does nothing about it? This matter will be heard about in the House until the answers are forthcoming.

When the Minister of Finance brings in a tax treaty with Switzerland or Panama or Liechtenstein or Costa Rica or anywhere else where the carrion of this world gather with their ill-gotten gains, we want to see what benefits Canada gets from it. What is Canada getting from this treaty with Switzerland? Are they opening up to the Department of Finance and the RCMP the unnumbered bank accounts of Canadian citizens who might be suspected of having ill-gotten gains over there? Is that one result of this treaty? Are they going to give our police co-operation in looking into financial frauds, in Switzerland? If they do not, then I say this bill is not worth our support and I will vote against it.

The criminal who steals a loaf of bread or breaks a window goes to jail for six months or a year, but the white collar, high flown, financial flim-flam confidence man gets away with millions. What is done to bring him to book? Nothing is done about it.

We all heard about the just society in 1968. Ha, ha! Where is the justice while the scallywags, the skimmers, the carpetbaggers, the birds of prey, and the flim-flam men roam the world—Liechtenstein, Panama, Costa Rica, Switzerland? I say let us put an end to it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Crosbie: I am only an unsophisticated country boy from Newfoundland, Mr. Speaker. I never thought I would see the day when Crown corporations would be whacking the money out to agents in Switzerland while a committee of this House was unable to get co-operation from the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) or any of the hon. lot opposite to find out where it went and to whom.

An hon. Member: Did you say the hon. louts opposite?

Mr. Crosbie: The hon. lot—the hon. crowd opposite, the hon. gentlemen.

I do not want to occupy the time of the House tonight Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: More, more.

Mr. Crosbie: I have learned of the interest of the Minister of Finance in Grundy's tax havens. I never thought there was such a thing as a Grundy tax haven, but I suppose if one is interested in a tax haven even Grundy's is better than nothing.

I will end with this piece of poetry in honour of the occasion, Mr. Speaker.

We will follow Sinc to Toronto or Rome
Rather than Donald the giant Swiss gnome
Reject this tax treaty in the Liberal tax haven
Their gall and effrontery is truly amazing.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): You ought to be a critic. You are terrific.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You get nine out of ten for that one.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I want to warn all hon. gentlemen opposite about something I learned on a trip to Switzerland last year.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): To check your account?

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): Did you open an account?

Mr. Crosbie: I did not open an account. But when you are in Switzerland, Mr. Speaker, never say to anyone, "I've got your number!" Your life would possibly be in danger.

I must admit I have a sneaking admiration for the Minister of Finance—particularly on learning that he is going to leave us this fall. I hate to vote against a piece of legislation that he has laboured so long and so hard over, as a Swiss treaty. I know he stayed up nights working on this one—it was to exemplify his whole career in federal politics. To have to vote against this touches me sorely. The only thing that might persuade me to vote for the bill is a piteous plea for mercy from him tonight not to spoil his departure from this House into retirement and into the decent security of a $1 million a year with McCarthy and McCarthy.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Crosbie.]

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I agree that it is going to be tough to vote against this bill when the hon. minister is to leave us so shortly. Perhaps he read in the paper today that he is supposed to bring in a new budget because the dollar has dipped below 95 cents. It has touched psychological bottom.

In regard to the Swiss connection, I must say it seems that this would be the time to try to find some solutions to the problems that beset us—the problems of the Churchill Forest Industries which negotiated under cover of unnumbered Swiss bank acounts, for instance. These things are all the more difficult now that we are proceeding to ratify a treaty with Switzerland.

The United States seems to have better luck in getting information from the Swiss on people who are suspected of tax fraud and other criminal activities. We also have these difficulties with Liechtenstein, as the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) indicated. Surely it is time we got to the bottom of all this. They cannot even seem to find the individual involved, let alone his numbered bank account. If they knew where his bank account was, it might help.

There does not seem to be anything to gain from ratifying this treaty at this time with Switzerland. No effort seems to have been made to ascertain whether they would be willing to give some information to our authorities.

I believe that the Swiss people are having second thoughts about the use of numbered bank accounts which has brought that country into disrepute. It is ridiculous to pass this bill when the Swiss themselves are indicating they would like to stop some of what has been going on with other countries. The Swiss are pushing for amendments to the treaties. Are the Swiss banks balking at the provisions of this treaty which could create an administrative nightmare for them? The Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) has not spelled out why it is impossible for the Swiss authorities to open their books to our law people in order to find out what is taking place.

We seem to have the idea that Crown corporations are beyond reproach. We have reservations about their ability to carry on business, but whatever else they do, they do honestly. However, the Polysar evidence has cast some doubt on this. We will not know what is happening on Polysar until the treaties are amended and we can find out through the numbered Swiss bank accounts who received what and where it went.

I wish to add my objection to passing this section with regard to Switzerland at this time. I hope the deal can be renegotiated so that we will have more fair and equal treatment. It would clear up some of the cloud behind which many people hide, using Swiss bank accounts for purposes not in the best interests of this country.

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I rise to join this debate for a few moments to add my comments and a few words of support for the arguments advanced tonight by my colleagues, the hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie) who just spoke, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) who led off this debate on behalf of our party, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn), and the hon. member for Vancouver-Quadra (Mr. Clarke).

Like all members, I consider it a privilege to have sat in this Chamber this evening and have heard one of the new fellows. I speak as a two-term veteran in the House in so referring to him. I refer to the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) and his eloquent remarks tonight—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. O'Sullivan: —and also his entertaining remarks. I believe even the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) found some enjoyment when the hon. member for St. John's West referred to greener pastures which may lie ahead for our friend from Toronto, the Minister of Finance.

There seems to be a theme which has pervaded the remarks of members on this side of the House in our contribution to the debate. It is a theme I would like to endorse and speak briefly upon. It refers to the question of openness, especially in matters of finance, particularly as they relate to government.

Since the tragic occurrence in the United States known as Watergate, there has evolved abroad in this land a cynicism about public life which is very discouraging to one of that generation that now forms over 50 per cent of the Canadian population.

When I was first elected to the House of Commons in 1972, I was asked, I guess because I was much younger in those days, to speak at a great many high schools in my constituency and in other places. Very often the first question put to me by students in assembly was: how does one go about getting elected to the House of Commons? At that time students were very excited about public life, interested in its challenges, and thought it to be a worthy pursuit.

A few weeks ago I spoke at two high schools in Hamilton. That question, which had not been posed for some time, was turned around and asked in reverse. I asked the students assembled if any of them would like to serve in public life at the municipal, provincial, or federal level of government. In the first high school I could not find one student who wanted to pursue a career in public life. At the second high school I found one student who thought he might take a chance in seeking public office.

I believe the reason for this change in such a short number of years in the attitude of Canadians generally, but especially young Canadians, about public life and a career in politics, has to do with the central theme to which I am referring—honesty and openness in politics, in business, and in our general approach in our everyday dealings with one another.

On the international scene relations between countries are really no different because countries are no more than a collection of individuals. Obviously we have different feelings toward different individuals, and countries have different feelings toward one another. In all of those relations, be they interpersonal on a one-to-one basis, or be they in the international field of economics or politics, there should be certain constant principles. Foremost among them would be that of honesty.

The question facing us tonight is not only what benefit would accrue to Canada and the Canadian people by this bill sponsored by the Minister of Finance. Behind that we should approach it with these questions: does it promote honesty in our relations with other countries? Does it help promote honesty in the business of politics? Does it encourage a belief that there is honesty in international finance, honesty in diplomacy, and honesty and openness in public life?

Regretfully I must conclude, buttressed by members of the Conservative party who have spoken tonight, that the answer to these questions would be no. Rather than open up these central questions in a way that would encourage Canadians to believe that there is a new spirit of honesty in our approaches to international financing and politics, it does the reverse. It covers up. At a time when we most need openness and honesty, it is doing the exact opposite to what we need. That is deeply regrettable.

Mention has been made of Swiss bank accounts. As the hon. member for Dauphin noted, the Swiss authorities themselves are questioning the age old practice of having secret numbered bank accounts in Switzerland. Those of us who sat in the House throughout the scandal related to the payments made to a person or persons unknown using such bank accounts must be especially concerned as to what this legislation will do. It may encourage such practices to continue. I hope not. If that is the case, it is doubly regrettable, and surely no hon. member here would wish to see it passed.

I wish to congratulate those who have put forward in greater detail our reasons for opposing this proposition put before us by the Minister of Finance. I hope he will take our comments to heart, bearing in mind that it is not a case of opposition for personal reasons—during the debate several kind things have been said about him and if he does not find them encouraging he must certainly find them refreshing coming, as they do, from this side of the House. I endorse the remarks made by hon. friends because if we lose the interest of young Canadians in public life because we fail to pursue actively policies of openness in all our dealings at every level, nationally and internationally, there is no future for this country and no future for this institution, because politics will be lost by default, and those with higher aspirations will have lost faith in us. This may appear to be a supplementary issue, but I state it, to use a phrase often employed by another member of this House, with all the sincerity and conviction I can command as being a deep concern of mine.

I hope the minister and his officials, should this bill go forward, given the majority situation in which the government temporarily finds itself, will take these views into account and reconsider the action to which they have committed themselves. I hope we can see the dawn of a new day in which politics will be restored as the high calling I believe it to be, so that all of us can visit high schools across the country and reply without embarrassment when young Canadians ask us why it was we entered public life.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The question is on motion No. 2, and likewise on motion Nos. 2, 20, 22, 24, 26, 28 and 31 standing in the name of the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens).

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

And more then five members having risen:

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is there agreement that we defer this vote as well as the others?

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, pursuant to some comments in the House earlier this evening, there were discussions held regarding the divisions which might be required to dispose of the business this evening. Further to these discussions, I believe there is a general disposition in the House that any divisions which are required should be deferred until next Tuesday at 11 o'clock.

Mr. Paproski: There is no 11 o'clock sitting on Tuesday; it is an opposition day.

Mr. Goodale: If there is no morning sitting on Tuesday, perhaps the most appropriate time would be immediately following Routine Proceedings. If that is agreeable perhaps we could make that an order of the House at this time.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, that is agreeable from our point of view. There will be no sitting in the morning on Tuesday, it being an allotted day. Therefore the first opportunity would be after Routine Proceedings, and we are quite agreeable to having that order made now.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Let me make it unanimous, Mr. Speaker. It is our understanding that there will be no morning sitting on Tuesday, it being an allotted day. I also agree with the others that an appropriate time for these votes would be immediately following Routine Proceedings on Tuesday afternoon.

[Mr. O'Sullivan.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): There seems to be general agreement that votes on Bill C-3 and Bill C-12 be deferred until Tuesday at the end of the question period. Is that agreed and so ordered?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, although I think the rule calls for it, could it not now be understood that the bells will ring on that occasion for only 15 minutes?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it agreed and so ordered that the bells will ring for only 15 minutes?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT AND SATISFIED SECURITIES ACT

MEASURE TO REPEAL SECURITIES ACT AND AMEND ADMINISTRATION ACT

The House proceeded to the consideration of Bill C-8, to amend the Financial Administration Act and to repeal the Satisfied Securities Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Alex Patterson (for Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West)) moved:

That Bill C-8, to amend the Financial Administration Act and to repeal the Satisfied Securities Act, be amended in Clause 1, by adding immediately after line 20 the following new subsection:

"(3) In this section the instrument of release or discharge as referred to in subsection (1) shall be deemed to be a statutory instrument within the meaning of Paragraph 2(1)(d) of the Statutory Instruments Act".

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleague, the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), I should like to speak to his suggested amendment; the hon. member cannot be in the House this evening. I draw the minister's attention to the fact that at the first meeting of the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs held on November 2, 1976, the amendment before the House was substantially discussed, and at that time the minister's parliamentary secretary attempted to satisfy the committee with regard to the point.

In short, the amendment arises from the uncertainty which seems to exist in regard to the impact of the amendment that is in Bill C-8 itself. Hon. members who have read the bill know that the government is asking that the Financial Administration Act be amended in order to give greater facility for the signing of various discharges and other types of releases. My colleague from Edmonton West raised the point that he felt that it had not been clearly defined exactly what the impact would be of these instruments and releases or discharges, whatever you like to call them. The suggestion was then raised that it would be better simply to refer to the instrument as being included within the definition which is found in clause 2(1)(d) of the Statutory Instruments Act. That act was assented to on May 19, 1971. It appears as chapter 38 in the Statutes of Canada for 1970, 1971 and 1972.

For those who are interested, the subsection my colleague has referred to in his amendment is found at page 2 of the act. It is quite a lengthy description, but essentially it clarifies what a statutory instrument is. The thrust of the amendment before us is that, for clarification, the amendment the government is seeking should be added to with the view that it will be clear that an instrument of release or discharge shall be deemed to be a statutory instrument within the meaning of clause 2(1)(d) of the Statutory Instruments Act.

To summarize, I am simply saying we are hoping the minister will accede to this request. It will clarify what we are seeking here in the main amendment which is found in Bill C-8. For greater certainty people would turn to section 2(1)(d) of the Statutory Instruments Act to see what a statutory instrument will include. This point was raised at committee because the government seemed to be very casual in indicating what the releases for the discharges would be for which it was seeking the new found power to give. It stated that it was casual stuff which involved the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, and sometimes mortgages were required to be discharged and other instruments of that type. We are fearful the amendment may be intended to cover that type of thing, but it will be interpreted in a much larger sense in due course. We will find releases and discharges may be given in a rather casual way, as a result of the amendment which the government is proposing, much more casual than is the case of such releases or discharges clearly defined as statutory instruments.

Statutory instruments, of course, would be reviewable by the Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments. It is a proper safeguard for the Parliament of Canada through that committee to have a look at what exactly are the releases and the discharges which are being signed by ministers of the Crown. In truth, it is a tremendous power to be giving to a minister—the right of the minister to sign on behalf of the Government of Canada rights which otherwise might be accruing to the Government of Canada. Why not define it as a statutory instrument so that we have the protection of that act and the reviewability of each of the releases and the discharges before the Standing Committee on Regulations and Other Statutory Instruments which is contemplated?

In order to expedite matters tonight, that is as far as I should go. It would be interesting for members to hear the minister explain why he will either accept our amendment, or if not, why he decides to turn down this clarification we are seeking.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, what we are dealing with here, in the very simplest terms, is the present provision of the Satisfied Securities Act which requires an order in council and a cabinet decision about each discharge of a mortgage—or a lien of some kind taken by the Crown under one of the many statutes which provide financial assistance to various kinds of Canadians. At present the law requires that each one be as a result of a specific decision by cabinet or by a cabinet committee. For a better sense of administration, this responsibility should be transferred from the cabinet level to the ministerial level. This makes good sense in terms of administration. We are talking about the hundreds of thousands of instruments which are delivered every year under the Veterans Land Act and under the various kinds of statutes for which my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Allmand) is responsible. It does not make much sense to have this procedure dealt with at the cabinet level. It is a ministerial decision.

I have some difficulty understanding why the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) would want to have the committee look at thousands of chattel mortgage discharges or lien discharges. It is not the kind of statutory instrument with which the committee was set up to deal. One might almost say that to include this provision, to encourage the committee to look at thousands of such documents every year, is a Machiavellian way of occupying the committee's time and therefore render it less able to concentrate on more fundamental matters.

There are two reasons for not accepting the amendment, and the first is purely practical and sensible. If you are talking about discharging mortgages, you are not talking about law-making statutory instruments. Indeed it is fair to say that we are not talking about statutory instruments at all. The relevant characteristic of a statutory instrument is as follows. I quote from the Statutory Instruments Act, that act cited by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). It is that it is made "by or under an act of parliament by or under which such instrument is expressly authorized to be issued, made or established otherwise than by the conferring on any person or body of powers or functions in relation to a matter to which such instrument relates." It is my view that the proposed section 95.1 of the Financial Administration Act does not result in the creation of a statutory instrument to be issued, made or established but rather confers a power on an appropriate minister to execute and deliver an instrument.

As I say, it is somewhat hard to see the relevance of the issue. The only significance flowing from the fact that an instrument is a statutory instrument would be that pursuant to Section 26 of the Statutory Instruments Act it would stand referred to the statutory instruments committee. I am advised that the practice at the moment is that none of the instruments currently made by order in council pursuant to the Satisfied Securities Act is being referred to that committee. These documents are not required to be published in the Canada Gazette; therefore the position has been taken that they should not be referred. Since it is clear they would only relate to a particular individual and a particular transaction and be of no continuing interest or public concern, there would be no reason to publish and refer to the committee of parliament. Indeed, these relate to routine legal transactions that are carried out innumerable times by the legal profession in Canada.

I have listened to the hon. member presenting his argument, and read on the record what the hon. member for Edmonton West said in support of it. He must have a mistaken impression of what is involved. It does not seem to me that instruments which, under provincial law, are discharges of chattel or real mortgages are the kinds of instruments which should be included under the Statutory Instruments Act. I cannot see the value of that suggestion. That is why my parliamentary secretary and I are not persuaded it is a good argument and suggest that this would not be a useful addition to the work of the statutory instruments committee. I would therefore oppose the amendment.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

● (2220)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: On division.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those in favour will please say yea.

Some hon. Members: Yea.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): All those opposed will please say nay.

Some hon. Members: Nay.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): In my opinion the nays have it.

Motion negatived on division.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Since this report stage amendment has been disposed of, perhaps my friends to the right would agree that we give third reading to the bill and get something out of the way today.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) moved that Bill C-8, to amend the Financial Administration Act and to repeal the Satisfied Securities Act, as reported (without amendment) from the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

[Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale).]

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION (SCIENTIFIC ACTIVITIES) ACT, 1976

MEASURE RESPECTING ORGANIZATION OF CERTAIN SCIENTIFIC ACTIVITIES OF GOVERNMENT

Mr. Faulkner (for the Prime Minister) moved that Bill C-26, respecting the organization of certain scientific activities of the Government of Canada, as reported (with amendments) from the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, be concurred in.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): When shall the bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Faulkner (for the Prime Minister) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to introduce this bill for third reading. It was introduced last December, it has been reviewed in detail in the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates, and it has been the subject of discussion with the university community. I might say that I appreciate very much the co-operation I have had from both sides of the House in proceeding with the bill. I would just like to make some comments on this final stage of the bill.

The main impact of this bill will be on the university community. I believe the reorganization of the granting councils will open the way to a new relationship between the government and universities in research matters. Perhaps I might speak about that for a moment.

The growth of university research over the last 15 years or so has been considerable. In 1961-62 the granting councils provided $26.5 million to the universities; in 1977-78 the estimates for the councils call for $172 million to be spent on research grants.

In the rapid development of the universities in the 1960's, there was strong competition among the universities to gain recognition and status in research. Universities vied with one another in trying to build up schools of graduate studies very quickly. I think it is fair to say that most of them had had little experience in guiding efforts in research, and few had a conscious policy which gave direction to these efforts. The emphasis was on attracting individual researchers of great ability who were then supported in research of their own choosing. Our universities, and Canada as a whole, benefited by bringing into their ranks scientists and scholars of outstanding calibre.

On the other hand, a price was paid. In nearly every university there are some well developed programs of research in certain departments, but generally there is a wide dispersion of research competence spread thinly over most disciplines. One would have to say this has been a consequence of the laissez faire attitude of both the universities and the granting councils to research growth. We cannot be too surprised at this. Priorities for research have not been clearly enunciated by government or the universities, and the councils, reflecting the prevailing view, have judged research or scholarly projects almost entirely on the competence of the applicant and on the scientific feasibility of the project. There has been little, if any, co-ordination of university research objectives regionally or nationally.

Since becoming minister of science last September I have visited many universities and talked to many university scientists and scholars in an attempt to understand what the role of university research should be. Is the main purpose of this role to push back the frontiers of knowledge? Is it to train graduate students to be competent researchers? Should it be helping to solve problems posed to it by governments or industry? These are difficult questions because universities are complex institutions serving many goals and constituencies of our society, but I believe the answer is all three. My perception is, however, that there has been an imbalance in favour of the first two and at the expense of the third. I have reached the conclusion that the universities must begin moving more of their research and inquiry into the mainstream of effort aimed at understanding and solving our pressing national problems.

I am not saying by this that research which is stimulated solely by the imagination of the researcher and whose objective is discovery, nothing more, should not be supported or should be downgraded in any way. Curiosity-oriented research—or discovery oriented, as John Polanyi has said—must continue to receive solid support. Although the last few years have been tough, I believe that an even more selective process is needed, however, which will allow those relatively few individuals whose research is of recognized quality, at least nationally and possibly internationally, and who have shown a rare blend of knowledge, imagination and passionate interest in discovery, to be supported well, perhaps better than they have been in the past.

There are, on the other hand, many individual researchers and groups of researchers whose talents and dedication might equally be challenged by identifiable issues of priority concern to governments and the public at large. It has become apparent to me in my visits that the nature of the research enterprise in universities has been changing. The existence of cross-disciplinary groups—in environmental and policy institutes, for example—and the collaboration that has been taking place on large projects is shifting the attitudes of university researchers. Whether recognized or not, the laissez faire attitude to the support of university research has a much narrower validity than it once had.

What this means is that the time has come for a more activist approach by the granting councils to the determination of research priorities and to the creation of new policies and programs which will give university research an even greater opportunity to respond to national needs. Bill C-26 is important because it creates a new and dynamic framework in which this vital, evolutionary change in the direction of councils can take place.

I disagree wholeheartedly with an hon. member opposite who, quoting a university person, said in the committee "This bill represents an idea whose time has come and gone". I believe its time is very much now. Mr. Speaker, I see that you are agitated.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The time is now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being 10.30 p.m., this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

At 10.30 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Special Order.

PROPOSAL THAT THOMPSON COMMISSION INQUIRE INTO EFFECTS OF OIL TANKER TRAFFIC IN STRAITS OF GEORGIA AND JUAN DE FUCA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity, namely, marine traffic in oil and other hazardous cargo along the west coast of Canada. In view of the fact that Dr. Andrew Thompson indicated yesterday that he is anxious to continue his investigation under the Public Inquiries Act into the marine and environmental risks of west coast tanker traffic, and in view of the fact that the abandonment of the Kitimat proposal may result in substantially higher volumes of tanker traffic in the Georgia Strait and the Strait of Juan de Fuca, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen):

That the Thompson Committee, under the Public Inquiries Act, be instructed to continue its investigations and, if necessary, that the inquiry's terms of reference be amended to permit it to shift its emphasis from the Kitimat area to the Strait of Georgia and the Strait of Juan de Fuca.

Mr. Speaker: The provisions of Standing Order 43 require the unanimous consent of the House for presentation for debate of such a motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

ALLEGED LACK OF OBJECTIVITY TOWARDS SOCIAL CREDIT PARTY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing necessity.

In view of the fact that the Social Credit Party of Canada moved an opposition motion on Wednesday last, an allotted day, about an extremely important matter and that the media, especially the CBC, did not mention it; considering that yesterday the members of the Social Credit Party of Canada moved the adjournment of the House to protest strongly against such discrimination by the CBC, which did not even have the decency to mention the event on the news yesterday, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert):

That this House direct the Secretary of State to assume his responsibilities and to see to it that this Crown corporation refrain from laughing at the elected representatives of the people by suppressing or failing to draw to the attention of the public the activities of the House, especially the days devoted to a particular motion.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CONFEDERATION

SUGGESTED COMMITTEE STUDY OF ALLEGED ACTIONS OF GOVERNMENT WHICH HAVE ERODED TRADITIONAL THINGS OF OUR HERITAGE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a question of urgent and pressing necessity in connection with the tinkering by this government with the things of our heritage by administrative action, as it has endeavoured in the last few years to change the statutory name of the national holiday on July 1 from Dominion Day to Canada Day, and the present anticipated change in the capital city of Canada, which would require an amendment of the British North America Act, which provides that Ottawa shall be the capital. Such actions constitute an affront to parliament and are a denial of the basic principles of the rule of law under the constitution. I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker):

That a committee of both Houses be set up to look into and report on the step-by-step erosive action that is being taken, not by parliament but by the government of Canada, in the whittling away by surreptitious means the traditional things of the heritage of our country and to put a stop to it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, such motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

BILINGUALISM

MEASURES TO ENSURE PRESERVATION OF LANGUAGE RIGHTS OF QUEBEC INUIT—POSSIBILITY OF INQUIRY

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Prime Minister and it arises from the profound concern that the Inuit of northern Quebec have about their right to use freely either official language—a right which is part and parcel of the James Bay Agreement which was passed only last month by this House. Despite extensive negotiation with the Quebec culture minister, Camille Laurin, the Inuit have failed to obtain the written guarantees of exemption from the provisions of Bill One, which I would respectfully suggest they have a right to expect. My question to the Prime Minister is this. Has he or any of his ministers contacted the Quebec ministers and spoken to them directly and frankly about this parliament's determination to ensure that the language rights of native people are preserved?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not taken any such step because it was my understanding that the Inuit had reached an agreement with the Quebec authorities. However, if that is not correct, I will of course consider whether further action should be taken.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): My understanding is that there has not been that agreement. There has not been the written guarantee that they expected. I look forward to hearing from the Prime Minister with regard to his actions once he has checked that out. Yesterday the Prime Minister told us of a special bureaucracy that was set up to investigate the language rights of Francophone minorities outside of Quebec. Is it the intention of the government to establish a similar inquiry into the language rights of Inuit people in Quebec which this government has a special constitutional mandate to protect?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid the hon. member misunderstood the nature of the question and the answer yesterday. I did not talk about a special bureaucracy to go out and do certain things. I said we had received a brief from a certain group such as we receive all the time from all kinds of groups across the country. We have them examined by the bureaucracy and we will do that in this particular case.

[Mr. Speaker.]

LEGAL OPINION ON IMPACT OF QUEBEC LANGUAGE CHARTER ON INUIT—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Perhaps the Prime Minister will advise the House whether it is his intention to make a statement with regard to this very important matter once this examination has taken place. With regard to a statement or an indication given by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development that he would be able to give this House a legal opinion on the impact of the language bill in Quebec on native peoples, to the Prime Minister's knowledge, has the minister obtained this opinion? Will the Prime Minister now tell the House what this opinion is so that it may form part of the evidence to be presented to the legislative committee hearings on the bill about to begin in Quebec City?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I will gladly inquire, Mr. Speaker, and make a report on it.

REASON FOR FAILURE TO STUDY RIGHTS OF ANGLOPHONES IN QUEBEC

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, yesterday in response to a question by the hon. member for Fundy-Royal the Prime Minister said that the interdepartmental study group had been set up to study the rights of multicultural groups, Indian native groups and Eskimo groups, in addition to studying the rights of Francophone minorities outside the province of Quebec. I was astonished that nowhere did he mention the Anglophone minority in Quebec. Will the Prime Minister advise why the government is not devoting resources to make a similar study of language and other rights of the one million plus Anglophones in Quebec and will he rectify this lapse immediately if in fact there has been such a lapse?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I cannot understand why the opposition cannot comprehend my answers and what in fact went on.

An hon. Member: Because you are incomprehensible.

Mr. Trudeau: Perhaps I am incomprehensible. If the opposition will give me time, I will try to spell it out in very elementary language. The federal government receives voluminous briefs from numbers of people throughout the year. Sometimes they are from the Federation of Agriculture, sometimes from the Association of Mariners and other times they might be from the Board of Trade. This time it was from a group of Francophones outside Quebec. It is our duty to look into these representations and study these briefs. We did this once again on Tuesday. We said we received a brief and that we would look into it. That is what happened.

POSSIBILITY INTERDEPARTMENTAL COMMITTEE WILL STUDY BRIEFS FROM MINORITY GROUPS OTHER THAN FRANCOPHONES

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Yesterday in reply to the hon. member for Fundy-Royal the Prime Minister said that they, referring to the briefs, have all been dealt with in a similar manner and parallel fashion. If a minority group submits a brief of this nature to the Prime Minister or any of his colleagues, is it a matter of government policy that such brief shall be referred to the special or ongoing interdepartmental committee to deal with it in a manner similar to that dealt with as a result of the brief from the Francophone group representing Canadians of French-speaking origin outside the province of Quebec?

● (1120)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker. This was a group set up to study this particular brief. If we receive another brief, from another group, we will see in what way it can best be studied. I gave the example yesterday of a very important representation which we received from the native people of Canada. In that case we did not name an interdepartmental committee of officials; we set up a particular group of ministers, and that ad hoc group of ministers, chaired by the Minister of National Health and Welfare, looked after the representations of the natives. If I get a brief from the Anglophones of Montreal, I will see how it can best be dealt with.

PROPOSED REFERENCE OF QUEBEC'S BILL ONE TO SUPREME COURT—NEGOTIATIONS WITH QUEBEC ON RIGHTS OF ANGLOPHONES

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): I will move on to an allied subject. Will the Prime Minister assure the House that it is still his intention that the constitutionality of bill one be tested in the courts, and, in addition, will he tell the House why there are no ongoing negotiations with Quebec, so that the federal government may assist the provinces to protect the rights of the Francophone majority without infringing on the entrenched rights of the Anglophone minority and those English speaking Canadians who, at some future time, may wish to live, work and contribute to the prosperity of Quebec and of Canada as a whole?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I would like to know what suggestion the hon. member is making. Is he suggesting that we should appear before a parliamentary committee in Quebec and make our views known there? I would suggest that perhaps the Tory party could send one of its eminent Quebecers to do this.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You can send Goyer; he is your emissary.

ALLEGED FAILURE TO KEEP COMMITMENTS TO FRANCOPHONES LIVING OUTSIDE QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister on the same subject. In his answer today the Prime Minister has suggested that he has set up an interdepartmental committee to look into the proposals or suggestions that were presented by the Francophone community outside the province of Quebec. In a quotation of a statement attributed to him in the press on Wednesday of this week, he seems to have gone much further than he indicated here today. I quote from the press of Wednesday of this week where he says that the interdepartmental committee will "propose a series of actions", and, related to the Prime Minister's expressed concern for the problem of French Canadian rights outside the province of Quebec, "if we are not to have just French in Quebec and English elsewhere".

The point of these quotations is not to raise some spurious point about a contradiction here but to suggest that the Prime Minister has indicated that the government is prepared to come forward with some concrete proposals, some detailed plans of action. It seems to me that this general commitment would be taken more seriously had it not been for the complete reneging on two specific commitments made by the former secretary of state in a letter to this group dated March 30, 1976. Two very specific commitments were made, not one of which has been acted upon. I should like to ask the Prime Minister, first of all, why the commitment to set up a precise structure in the Department of the Secretary of State to deal exclusively with Francophone rights of the Francophone community outside the province of Quebec was not lived up to.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I do not know in what form this commitment was made and in what way it was delivered. I will inquire.

Mr. Broadbent: Since the Prime Minister is not as familiar with that as I would have hoped, given the expressed concern which would generally exist, I will address my question to the Secretary of State. Could he tell us why the commitment, which was made in a letter dated March 30, 1976 to which I referred just now, was not lived up to, and, related to that, could he also tell the House why the commitment that was made to establish specific bilingual programs in each of the areas in Canada was not lived up to as well, when this commitment was made more than a year ago?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): The hon. gentleman is referring to a letter which was issued before I became Secretary of State.

An hon. Member: Oh, come on.

An hon. Member: Why don't you check with Goyer.

Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, it may be that I missed the first part of the hon. member's reference to the letter. I am not exactly sure to what commitment he is referring. If the hon. member would bring the matter to my attention in the House again next week, I would try to reply in detail. If he could be more specific and give me a more exact description of what he is referring to, I might be able to reply at this moment, but I missed the hon. member's first reference to the letter, which obviously was not issued over my signature since I was not the Secretary of State at the time. I would be happy to try to reply in more detail if I could find out exactly to what the hon. member is referring.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I will tell the minister that the Francophone community outside the province of Quebec is skeptical about the commitment. I will list the promises which were made in the letter dated March 30, 1976 by the minister's predecessor. The first was to establish a specific section within the minister's department to deal exclusively with Francophone rights and programs outside the province of Quebec. That promise has not been lived up to. The second promise was to establish a co-ordinator for bilingual programs in each of the areas involved outside Quebec. That, too, has not been lived up to. The third concern which the community now has is that the allocation of some $5 million in the government's estimates for programs in this area outside the province of Quebec, normally allocated by the first of April, has not yet been made, some two months later, and in spite of the fact the present minister has received two telegrams requesting the date for the allocation of the funds so that the Francophone groups outside the province of Quebec could do something, no response has yet been received by the minister. Could he tell us why?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, there was no mention of these subjects at the meeting I had the other day with the Secretary of State and this particular group. I do not know if the group is now trying to make representations through the Leader of the New Democratic Party or if the hon. member is just being mischievous, but I assure him that there was no reference to this in our exchange the other day. The group asked us to do certain things, and we said that we would do those things. Perhaps the group is now asking for something else, in which case we will consider what it is asking for.

AIRPORTS

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON NEGOTIATIONS WITH QUEBEC FOR IMPROVEMENT OF FACILITIES AT MONTMAGNY

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport.

A few weeks ago, I asked the minister whether his officials or himself had had discussions with the Quebec transport minister concerning improvements to be made to the Montmagny municipal airport. The minister replied then that he would examine the matter and advise the House shortly. Is he in a position today to advise the House whether he has indeed had discussions with Quebec officials and whether they have reached together a decision which would benefit the region?

[English]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I have not had a report on the nature of the discussions between officials of my department and the ministry of transport of the province of Quebec, and I do not therefore know whether that item was reached on the agenda. However, I will check into that and let the hon. member know.

[Mr. Roberts.]

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON SINKING OF "WILLIAM CARSON" AND REVIEW OF RECOMMENDATIONS FOR IMPROVEMENT OF SEARCH AND RESCUE

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Is the minister in a position to give the House details of the sinking of the William Carson? Evidence indicates that the ship went down under near perfect weather conditions and with near perfect night time visibility. The vessel was equipped with all the latest navigational sonar and radar equipment. Is the minister now in a position to give the House details on this near tragedy?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker. We are investigating the matter, and presumably there will be answers to these questions. I am happy to say that the accident occurred without any loss of life, and at the present time we are dealing with the problem of getting the passengers to their destination as quickly as possible. Of course, the investigation will go on.

Mr. McGrath: Mr. Speaker, I presume that there will be an inquiry, and I do not want to pre-judge that inquiry. Before the inquiry is established, however, would the minister personally look into the recommendations on the last sinking that took place off the coast of Newfoundland in 1970 when the SS Patrick Morris sank? A judicial inquiry at that time made three specific recommendations—better dispersal of search and rescue aircraft to shorten the reaction time, a review of reaction and search and rescue procedures and an increase in the number of personnel. Would the minister review the report and see if these recommendations were carried out?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to review the report but of course as hon. members know, major improvements have been made to the search and rescue capability in that area. The search and rescue facilities played a very important part in handling this particular situation.

REASON FOR DELAY IN DISPATCHING HELICOPTERS TO SINKING "WILLIAM CARSON"

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, may I put a supplementary question to the Minister of National Defence. Can the minister explain to the House why it took three hours for the National Defence search and rescue helicopters based in Gander to be dispatched to the scene? The search and rescue request went from St. John's to Gander at 9.10 p.m. The helicopters did not leave Gander until midnight and they arrived over the site at 2 a.m. This meant that a number of the survivors from the ship which sank at 10 p.m. were on the ice that length of time and could have lost their lives.

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, the reaction time was less than was expected for the helicopters to get on the scene. There were not only two Labrador helicopters from Gander but an Argus and a Buffalo aircraft from Summerside, all of which arrived about the same time, plus the helicopter from the Canadian coast guard ship Sir Humphrey Gilbert. There were also six Sea Kings alerted from Summerside, two of which had reached Gander and there was a further Hercules on alert.

The reaction was very fast, taking the flying time into consideration. Forty-two people were evacuated by armed forces helicopters and 80 by the Canadian coast guard helicopter onto the coast guard ship. The whole operation moved very smoothly and was a classic example of cooperation between the various departments, particularly the Department of Transport and the Department of National Defence. I think great credit goes to the skipper, Captain Hinks of the William Carson who handled the situation with calmness and maintained calmness on board. All the rescue gear was in working order and the ship rescue team operated with a high degree of efficiency.

EFFORTS TO FIND REPLACEMENT FOR "WILLIAM CARSON"

Mr. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Transport with regard to the sinking of the William Carson off Battle Harbour last night. First of all, however, I should like to ask the minister to convey to the coast guard and through the Minister of National Defence to the Canadian armed forces, our congratulations and thanks on the very effective way in which the rescue was carried out last night.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rompkey: All the reports reaching me from my riding indicate that a very effective job was done. I want to ask the Minister of Transport, because this is a vital link between Newfoundland and Labrador, what initiatives he is prepared to take to replace that vessel. There are people in Goose Bay waiting to get out to the island and other parts of Canada for various reasons. This vital link needs to be replaced right away and I ask the minister what initiatives he is prepared to take to find a replacement for the William Carson as soon as possible?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I very much appreciate the compliments from the hon. member and I shall certainly pass them on to the people who deserve them. We have been in touch with CN Marine and they are looking at the question of how fast alternative service can be made available by replacing the William Carson.

Oral Questions

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

DATE ON WHICH AGREEMENT ON RESTRAINT EXPECTED PRIOR TO ENDING CONTROLS

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister. Further to the Prime Minister's answer yesterday dealing with the binding agreement that he anticipates among the economic decision-makers in the country for voluntary restraint, which appears to be a contradiction in terms, would he indicate if he has set some deadline, at least in his own mind, for when this agreement is to be entered into bearing in mind that the Minister of Finance indicated that within two months he intends to announce a date to commence decontrols?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I indicated to the hon. member that the understanding we are looking for should be as binding as possible. I used those words precisely because there was the possibility of contradiction in the hon. member's understanding of it. Obviously that understanding or agreement would have to be reached before we remove controls.

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON ENDING CONTROLS IF AGREEMENT ON RESTRAINT NOT OBTAINED

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the statements of the Minister of Finance on several occasions, including the statement before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs, that he will announce a date when the decontrols phase will begin, would the Prime Minister indicate if he has not obtained a sufficiently binding agreement, as he calls it, with respect to these decision-makers, then am I correct in assuming that the decontrol date will not be announced as the Minister of Finance has indicated?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, my recollection of the position of the Minister of Finance is that, as he said in the budget, the date would not be before October 14 unless certain agreements were reached. That is still the mandate under which we are working.

CONFIRMATION OF MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF DECONTROL PERIOD

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question to the Minister of Finance. Would the minister care to confirm the statement he made to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs that he would announce the decontrol date before the end of July?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker, we expect to make that announcement in mid-summer.

Oral Questions

DOMINION DAY

AUTHORITY FOR CHANGING NAME TO "CANADA DAY"

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State. I am very glad that a celebration has been put on for Dominion Day again, something that was inaugurated under my administration but was subsequently discontinued. I would ask the minister on what authority he has sent out notices advertising the fact that on July 1—on "Canada Day" to use the expression he uses—on what authority does he purport to act in changing the statutory name to Canada Day?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): First of all I should like to say how much pleasure it gives me to carry on the good work begun by the former Prime Minister and to expand and develop it to an even greater degree. There has been no indication on my part that I have unilaterally in any way changed the name of Dominion Day. There is of course legislation before the House to change the name to Canada Day. My view is, quite simply, that what we are doing is celebrating the birthday of my country; my country is Canada; I love it very much and that is the name that I intend to use.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I ask the custodian of our heritage, the Secretary of State—because that is actually what he is—what right he had to bring about a change? Administrative lawlessness is the only fitting description of it. I do not ask what his personal opinion is. Was this a Cabinet decision and if so what business does the government of Canada have to make a change contrary to statute?

Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I would assure the right hon. gentleman that he could not find a person less lawless than myself. Perhaps he will be satisfied if I tell him that this year we are celebrating Canada Day on the same day as Dominion Day.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENERGY

SOURCE OF RADON GAS IN HASTINGS COUNTY—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. An investigative group sponsored by his department has been looking into the effects of radon gas in the north part of Hastings County. They recently discovered alarming quantities of radon gas in the Farraday township area. Can the minister say what the source of that radon gas is and what has been done to overcome the problem?

● (1140)

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the survey work to which the hon. member referred is being conducted by the federal-provincial task force formed to identify areas of unacceptably high radioactivity across the country, particularly those affecting work places and places where people live. The survey has already covered about 776 houses in the environs of the town of Bancroft. I think by the end of this month we will have covered about 2,000 homes. So far, only four homes have been identified as having unacceptably high levels of radiation; clearly, ventilation will be necessary, and the owners have been so instructed. A number of other homes will need to be examined again. I am told that the source of radioactivity is old mine tailings, mine waste, used for fill or building purposes in connection with these houses.

RADIATION LEVELS IN HASTINGS COUNTY—SAFETY OF PRACTICES OF MADAWASKA MINES

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I understand that radiation levels are unacceptable in 100-odd houses. Since these radiation levels have been discovered in the area of the Madawaska mines, can the minister say if that mine's mining practices in the uranium belt are safe, and are the miners safe in their work?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am told by the Atomic Energy Control Board that at present there is no safety hazard or health hazard. As I said in my first answer, we shall need to examine again a number of houses in which the radiation level was approaching unacceptable levels. Perhaps the hon. member was speaking of those when he mentioned the 100-odd houses. Those 100-odd will be examined again. I emphasize again that, as I am told, there is no health hazard at present.

AIR TRANSPORT

INCREASED RATES ON FREIGHT TO THE ARCTIC—REQUEST FOR SUBSIDIES ON ESSENTIAL GOODS

Mr. Wally Firth (Northwest Territories): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Is the minister aware that the only air carrier from Frobisher Bay to six communities on Baffin Island has raised its freight rates by about 50 per cent, so that a dozen eggs now cost about $4.30 in Clyde River, of which $3 would represent transport cost. Is the minister's department considering action on this rate increase?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the question had not been brought to my attention.

Mr. Firth: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister consider introducing a general policy of freight subsidies on essential goods such as milk, bread and produce, which must now be flown to certain parts of the Arctic?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I am always happy to consider such representations as we look at ways to assist remote and developmental areas.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

INQUIRY WHETHER CONTROLS WOULD END IF NO AGREEMENT REACHED ON RESTRAINT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Finance concerns the green paper on decontrols. I bear in mind that the green paper discusses three possible methods. The first method, relating to immediate decontrol, refers specifically to the need for voluntary restraint and firm arrangements concerning voluntary restraint. If it does anything, the green paper indicates a clear preference for the third method, which could fix a specified future date for decontrols to commence, but does not mention any agreement relating to voluntary restraint. Are we to assume, for example from what the Prime Minister said, that method three implies the requirement of firm agreement on voluntary restraint and that there would be no commencement under method three, as envisaged in the green paper, without such a firm agreement. Are we to read that into the comments made respecting method three as set out in the green paper?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the whole essence of the green paper is to secure an undertaking from major economic decision-makers in Canada not to engage in conduct which would be the opposite of restraint and start again the inflationary spiral. It can be assumed that that kind of undertaking is essential, no matter what method is used. The principal question the government must decide is, can one accept the analysis of the Canadian Labour Congress and a number of business leaders that there will not be a fresh outburst of inflation if controls are ended immediately, or should we proceed step by step to implement decontrol, preferably by using method three. In that sense, to go back to the specific question, undertakings with regard to restraint, the importance of restraint and the perception by the major decision makers of that importance are essential to whatever method is chosen.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In order to be absolutely clear, I ask this: is it the government's present policy or intention not to commence decontrol under any of those methods unless and until there is a firm agreement, or a firm undertaking of the strongest possible sort, on the part of principal decision-makers of this country to exercise restraint?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, perhaps at some point the Canadian Labour Congress or business leaders will say they do not feel they are in the position to give undertakings, but the country and the government will still be faced with the importance of phasing out controls. Obviously, with the support of those groups it would be easier to take controls off earlier. But if they cannot agree on the question of restraint, the government in the absence of their agreement would have to act on its own.

Mr. Stanfield: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In other words, in the language of Mackenzie King, the government's position is this: a firm agreement possibly, but not necessarily?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, it certainly would be desirable.

Mr. Stanfield: That is no policy; that is a charade, a put-on.

Mr. Stevens: That's nothing but fluff.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR DETAILS ON ADMINISTRATION AND DISTRIBUTION OF MILK QUOTAS

Mr. Claude Tessier (Compton): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture.

In spite of the fact that the administration and distribution of dairy quotas are not a responsibility of the federal government but of provincial agencies, if not of the producers themselves, with the dire consequences that this implies for the producers and the dairy policy itself, could the minister advise the House of the quotas which have become available since the beginning of the year? How were they made available? Under what conditions will they be returned to the producers? And will all producers have equal chances to recuperate the quotas of which they were deprived by their own agencies at the time of the 1976-77 readjustment?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, the Canadian Dairy Commission establishes a national quota for milk, allocated on the historical levels of production within each province, where there are dairy producers in that province. The Canadian Dairy Commission, for whom I answer in this House, does not administer direct quotas for the producers. Last year, when we increased quotas for the national production level by 4 million hundredweight, we tied certain conditions to that increase, saying it had to go to those people in greatest need. If the hon. member has concrete evidence to show that some producers are not being treated properly, we can make representation to the provincial marketing board. But we cannot make any specific suggestions, because this matter is totally under their jurisdiction.

AIR CANADA

REQUEST MINISTER REMIND COMPANY OF LABOUR CODE PROVISIONS ON MATERNITY LEAVE

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, my question, is for the Minister of Transport. I gave him notice of it so that parliament can have a definitive answer. Will the minister remind Air Canada of the provisions of the Canada Labour Code relative to maternity leave, so that when the Canadian Airline Flight Attendants Association engages in collective bargaining with the corporation, the code will prevail?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I do not imagine Air Canada needs to be reminded of the existence of the code. Negotiations on this question are underway at this time and I do not want to comment on their progress. I appreciate the hon. member's having given me notice of his question.

Mr. Fairweather: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps the minister might consider this in the next few days: The provisions Air Canada is suggesting to the Airline Flight Attendants Association are quite unacceptable. They are much more regressive than the 1973 contract provisions. Although Air Canada may be up-to-date with air equipment procurement, its medical advice, if it has any, is of a different age and of a different century. Perhaps the minister would remind Air Canada of this.

● (1150)

Mr. Lang: Again, I would be delighted to join the hon. member in analysing this question in detail in a fair and positive way but I do feel the inhibition of not wishing to comment while these negotiations are in progress.

ENERGY

HEAVY OIL—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH FACILITIES AT LLOYDMINSTER

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It arises out of the decision of the National Energy Board to exempt heavy oil from the export licensing provisions, a move which I am sure is welcomed by the industry and will contribute to its stability. Since the National Energy Board also appears to be in support of the establishment of heavy crude upgrading facilities, may I ask the minister whether he has anything further to report with respect to the setting up of the 100,000 barrels-a-day project which is to be located in the Lloydminster region?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): As recently as yesterday I was talking to representatives of the industry with respect to the upgrading possibilities. I am told this project is being given a high priority by industrial interests including Petro-Canada. There is also considerable interest being shown on the part of the government of Venezuela in joining with Petro-Canada in the formation of a research project. Petro-Canada will be allocating $5 million to such a scheme and I believe the Venezuelans will be allocating a similar amount of money. Both countries are faced with a very similar situation. Each is running out of conventional supplies of crude and each has very substantial reserves of heavy oil. We are moving forward in a positive way. This is an important resource and I hope that in a very short time following agreement between ourselves and the government of Alberta it will be possible to announce something more specific.

CONNAUGHT LABORATORIES

EFFECT ON COMPANY OF REMOVAL OF BLOOD FRACTIONATION WORK

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of what now appears to be a positive decision by the minister to approve the application by the Red Cross to build a blood fractionation plant and since this work is now being done by Connaught Laboratories which is owned by the Canadian Development Corporation—one of whose policies is that the business ventures in which it is involved must show a profit—and in view of the fact that the removal of the blood fractionation work from Connaught Laboratories will place that undertaking in a much less profitable position, even endangering its existence, would the minister explain what he envisages the plant would be for if this particular work were taken away from Connaught?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): The hon. member has reached a conclusion which has not yet been decided either by Connaught or by the Red Cross or by my department or by provincial departments. As I have told the hon. member before, this matter is being studied by both Connaught and the Red Cross and it is being discussed at the political level. It was one of the subjects discussed by deputy ministers recently and it will be raised again, I think, at the next ministers conference at the end of June. But there is still a lot of work to be done and I doubt that a decision will be reached in June. Several months of discussion and examination of this subject will probably still be required and no conclusion has yet been reached that either Connaught or the Red Cross would exclusively specialize in this area.

Mr. Yewchuk: Can the minister give the House a categorical assurance that no action will be taken by him or by anybody in his department which will endanger the continuation of the functions of the Connaught Laboratories in Toronto and which would result in the removal of the biologics industry to the city of Montreal?

Mr. Lalonde: The only assurance I can give the hon. member is that no decision will be reached until full consultations have taken place with all involved parties, and this includes the provinces. I can assure the hon. member that no decision has been reached up to this point. When a decision is taken it will, in the end, be a decision reached either by the Red Cross itself or by Connaught itself. The only other element involved would be the question of the contribution or role or intervention of the provinces and the federal government in terms of supply and support if any is required. But that position has not yet been reached by anyone.

Mr. Yewchuk: Is the minister telling the House, then, that the decision will, in part, be made by Connaught as to whether the Red Cross application will be approved or not?

Mr. Lalonde: Well, the Red Cross can decide some things and Connaught can decide some things. These are two agencies which are autonomous and can make their own decisions. Obviously, though, if those decisions imply support or contributions or co-operation with governments, provincial or federal, each agency will have to make up its own mind, taking into account the good relations it can have with the governments concerned.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

POSSIBILITY OF AIDING IN IMPROVEMENT OF ROUTE 117—NEGOTIATIONS WITH QUEBEC

Mr. Armand Caouette (Villeneuve): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question of the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion.

Further to the question I put to him a few weeks ago to know whether his department intends to grant financial assistance for the improvement of Route 117, could the minister tell the House whether other meetings took place between the Quebec ministry of development and his department and, if so, whether it will take part in the improvement of this highway for which the users have been waiting so long?

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I wish to say to the hon. member and to the House that I indeed met some time ago with the Hon. Jacques Léonard and we discussed the propositions which were under study at that time, including the matter of the improvement of Route 117 in northwest Quebec. The decisions that we will take or which we have already taken will be made public in due time.

SUGGESTION THOMPSON COMMISSION STUDY EFFECT OF OIL TANKER TRAFFIC THROUGH STRAITS OF GEORGIA AND JUAN DE FUCA

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Transport. In the light of the fact that Dr. Thompson is anxious to continue hearings in connection with the threat of maritime oil pollution, and in view of the answer given by the minister yesterday to the hon. member for Perth-Wilmot, would the minister give the House a commitment that the Thompson hearings will continue, especially since the information gained from them would be very useful in the negotiations with the United States?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): I have begun conversations with my colleague, the Minister of the Environment, on this issue. We shall be discussing the matter further and, no doubt, talking with Dr. Thompson as well about the most effective way to deal with the challenges which may emerge from the new circumstances in relation to tankers.

Mr. Friesen: Would the minister consider shifting the emphasis of the hearings to the lower mainland of British Columbia and Vancouver Island, bearing in mind that part of the corporate strategy might be to use the increased public outcry in the lower mainland as a means of making the Kitimat proposal look more attractive?

Mr. Lang: We shall have to look at the whole question, including the aspects relating to the United States section of any proposal. This is why we shall want to consider the matter rather thoroughly before any action is taken.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

EFFECT OF ALLEGED FAILURE OF OIL PRODUCING NATIONS TO AGREE ON NORTH-SOUTH CONFERENCE

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Recognizing the important statement the hon. gentleman made on behalf of Canada, and awaiting the return of the President of the Privy Council, who, I hope, will make a statement on motions at an early opportunity, perhaps the minister could clear up one or two points. Could he tell the House whether the failure of the oil producing nations to agree to an on going energy dialogue with the industrialized nations was in fact responsible for the low level of the offer by the industrialized nations on debt management and the common fund, the key issues at the conference, which in turn led to such a disappointing conclusion?

● (1200)

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think the President of the Privy Council or Secretary of State for External Affairs would be in a better position to answer the hon. member's question next week. I had to leave before the conference finally wound up, and I am not clear as to the precise problem which developed with respect to the oil consultation proposal. I very much regret that it was not possible for the conference to agree on such a proposal.

I should like also to take this opportunity of saying that I think Canada's position and Canada's offer were very well received by the group of 19, by the ldc's and by the OPEC nations, and in particular Canada's very forthcoming offer to write off something in the order of $250 million of debt.

Oral Questions

FINANCE

GOVERNMENT ACTION TO PROTECT ELECTRONICS INDUSTRY

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, in view of the continuing absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, perhaps I could pose my question concerning the state of the home electronics industry in Canada to the Minister of Finance. In light of the fact that the 1976 annual report of Electrohome, Limited showed that the company sustained an $8 million loss in 1976 and is in default under the terms of a debenture agreement, and in light of the fact that the number of production employees has declined from 1,200 in 1974 to 150 at the present time, what action, if any, does the government intend to take to stem the decline of Canada's home entertainment industry; and specifically may I ask the minister whether the statement by his parliamentary secretary on May 18 that "if they will make television sets for low prices in Asian countries, why cannot we have the benefit of those television sets provided we can get something in return, provided Canadians can find jobs worth $6, $7 and $8 an hour" means that the government has given up on maintaining a Canadian home electronics industry?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I think the statement of the parliamentary secretary puts very aptly the challenge which not only the television receiver assembly industry but many other secondary manufacturing industries face in Canada. Indeed, it is because of competition from exterior sources that we have been so concerned about maintaining restraint on the increase in industrial costs in Canada. I know that the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce has been in close touch with the situation facing this particular industry. It does represent an area where there is very substantial foreign competition even at the levels of protection which exist at this time.

One remedy that has been suggested is further tariff protection, which I think has to be balanced against some of the objectives which we have for expanding Canadian export opportunities abroad. Having said that, I think the question might be better addressed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce who has been in specific contact with the situation.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, may I just ask a supplementary question having to do with the specific company and the serious loss of jobs there, which are expected to decline by another third this summer. Are there any short-term actions which are going to be taken by the government in regard to the television industry in Canada, which is located largely within Electrohome, Limited? To the best of my knowledge there is no other company in Canada producing television sets. Does the government intend to take any specific action in the short term to save jobs in this industry?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would not want to anticipate what the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce might want to say.

[Mr. Gillespie.]

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

DECISION OF GOVERNOR OF WASHINGTON TO FLOOD SKAGIT VALLEY—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO OPPOSE

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of the Environment. It concerns the decision of the governor of the state of Washington last week to reverse the position of that state on the flooding of the Skagit valley in British Columbia. Can the minister advise whether there have been discussions between him and his counterparts in the United States or between the Prime Minister and the President concerning Canada's continuing opposition to the flooding of the Skagit valley? The House has gone on record as unanimously opposing that. The government has taken the position of opposing it. In view of the recent decision by the governor of Washington state, what action has the government taken in terms of stopping the flooding of this valley?

Hon. Roméo LeBlanc (Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, I would have to ask for the record to be checked; I have been away from Ottawa for a few days travelling in the prairie provinces. However, if my memory is correct—I could be wrong on this—I would underline to the hon. member that the agreement between the previous government—that is, the government of British Columbia twice removed—and the city of Seattle seems to create some legal obligations which I have asked my officials to check. Until I get information on this matter I am afraid I cannot be much more forthcoming. Certainly, I do not look upon the flooding of any valley as being desirable.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Two days ago there was an indication of some difficulty with respect to distribution. A question was raised concerning receipt of a press release issued by the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Allmand) and a subsequent indication by his parliamentary secretary that there must have been some difficulty in distribution. I undertook to look into the matter on behalf of hon. members and to indicate to the House what had appeared to take place from the point of view of our administrative responsibilities.

My information is that there was, as the parliamentary secretary indicated, some telephone contact with the postal services prior to the actual delivery. Our information is that that telephone contact was about ten minutes past 12 and that at about 25 minutes past 12 the material was delivered to the post office, and that during the following two hours the material was distributed to the post boxes. That is a little longer than it usually takes, which I think is explained by the fact that the distribution had to be made while part of the staff was on lunch hour. Those were the circumstances, but even so distribution was not very far from the normal arrangements for distributing material of this sort in the way it was asked to be distributed.

Members may also have noted yesterday and today some delay and one or two technical problems in regard to Hansard. There has been a difficulty with the computerized operation of the Hansard services. The difficulty has been located and we are attempting to remedy it, but I have to ask the indulgence of hon. members in bearing with us in yesterday's and today's late delivery of Hansard. We are checking especially carefully for any technical errors. We have spotted one or two and are correcting them as quickly as possible.

DOMINION DAY

ANNOUNCEMENT OF CELEBRATIONS

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, in April the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) announced the government's intention to co-ordinate appropriate and festive activities to celebrate and honour Canada's federal national holiday on July 1. The decision was prompted by the growing number of expressions of national unity from groups and associations across the country and the recognition of the impressive number of July 1 projects and activities being initiated by communities across Canada.

[Translation]

We all remember that in 1967, millions of Canadians joined together to reaffirm their pride in their country. Since that time, the federal government's July 1st program has been centered in Ottawa with regional activities being left to the initiative of local groups and municipalities. I want to ensure that the momentum which began in 1967 is revived and maintained in future years. We hope to provide a permanent framework for a well-structured, decentralized national program within which groups and individuals across Canada may express, in their own way, their pride and belief in Canada.

[English]

To date over 1,000 communities have begun preparations for activities which will reflect their recognition and pride in Canada. A national community program is providing all the planning assistance possible to these communities through consultation, promotional support and co-ordination. With the government's co-operation, each activity will be the community's expression of national pride. Viewed together, these initiatives will express the diversity that makes Canada so unique.

• (1210)

We are working in close co-operation with the Council of Canadian Unity, a national association which has organized Canada Week since 1969. When Canada Week was launched in 1969, some 50 Canadian communities participated. So far this year, 1,000 communities have initiated their own special projects.

We have also asked the private sector to participate in this national effort. The response to that has been enthusiastic. Several major companies have come forward with offers to help promote the July 1 celebrations across Canada, and the Canadian Chamber of Commerce has made available its regional offices to assist in the co-ordination of the activities being undertaken.

We have also established two specific programs to support our national effort.

[Translation]

A major campaign will be launched over Canadian radio and television expressing the government's conviction that Canada Day is a day for celebration and pride. The theme of the English campaign is "Canada, I want to shake your hand" and the French theme is "Le Canada, un beau pays, un pays libre". The two themes are appropriate ways of reaffirming the country's size, beauty, and the freedom which Canada allows for self-expression, growth, and diversity.

[English]

We will also assist Canadian celebrities to travel throughout the country with their families to participate in regional events and meet as many community residents as possible. Many well-known Canadians have expressed an interest in participating in this program. Within a few days I should be able to announce a list of their names.

[Translation]

On July 1, the CBC will carry a three hour special television spectacular, in English and French, featuring local and national celebrities in a national view of the Canadian Mosaic. Private network tie-ins will expand the viewing audience to an estimated 6 million people.

[English]

While we are placing our major emphasis on our national celebration from coast to coast, Ottawa will be the site of a special day of festivities, including a parade of original floats depicting Canada's history and diversity. The trooping of colours will be presented the morning of July 1, and beginning at 1 p.m. Ottawa will celebrate the Great Canadian Birthday Party, a giant five-hour festival of folk dancing, music, sports, children's activities and contests. The Great Canadian Birthday Party is being organized by a volunteer citizen's committee with our support and assistance. I know members of parliament from the Ottawa area are vitally interested in it.

The climax to the Ottawa festivities will be a three-hour spectacular on Parliament Hill featuring English and French performers and celebrities from across the country. In keeping with the objective to decentralize the Canada Day celebration, live performances from across the country will be included by satellite in the CBC's three-hour special. The Ottawa Spectacular will be tied in to the CBC television program so that Canadians across the country will be able to enjoy it. A giant fireworks display will follow the Parliament Hill program, bringing to an end what promises to be a most exciting celebration of Canada's federal national holiday.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, members of my party are happy to celebrate the anniversary on July 1. I am anxious to respond without a series of platitudes because these festive occasions bring on the worst in public speaking. I am not accusing the minister. As a matter of fact, I thought his statement was rather happily spared in this regard. I am anxious to avoid the platitudes, the hucksterism and the boosterism. What we want is a happy birthday shared by as many Canadians as possible. I have to be thankful for what we have in our common citizenship.

I do not think we should be disturbed about the preoccupation of the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) concerning the heritage aspects of what others have struggled to give us to celebrate. The technology of television will mean Canadians will celebrate in their own way. The smaller places in Canada to which the minister referred will be drawn together because of the focal point of the nation's capital. I am anxious to see whether the partnership of Radio Canada and the CBC will work out arrangements to celebrate this day together. It would be an interesting test if all Canadians could see the same things on July 1.

I do not know what it is about the English Canadian psyche which makes them rather reluctant to get emotional about celebrating patriotic events. I am sure it is part of our psyche. Every once in a while we surprise ourselves. We did on July 1, 1967. Suddenly, English Canadians found they were able to be moved by exemplifications of our nation and found themselves caught up on Parliament Hill in what was a very moving and emotional experience. It was an experience which I will never forget because it was a family day. I hope family days will prevail across the country.

A wise Canadian of international recognition from Toronto, Northrop Frye, told us about this endless search in which Canadians are engaged. Occasionally we seem to have the elusive thing we seek. I must agree with what Northrop Frye said, that if we stop the search and look around, we will find the Canada we have. I hope that will be part of our celebration.

Perhaps I will be categorized as being unspirited and Scrooge-like. I do not intend that at all. I hope the birthday will be a tremendous success. We have to face the fact that half the people who have not worked on this July 1 celebration are the young. This is not the time to mention what we are going to do about this. It will be a concern of every one of us as we set off the fireworks and troop the colours. We have to remember that too many young Canadians may be wondering what it is they have to celebrate.

I am looking at an hon. friend across the floor, who will remain unidentified. As Canadians celebrate their birthday, they might recall that years ago it was Her Majesty the Queen who commented upon patriotism in Quebec. I may be considered inelegant because I am going to attempt to paraphrase what the Queen said, which is probably inappropriate. In Quebec, the Queen said that patriotism may take on different dimensions and we should not be surprised if everyone does not have a common expression of patriotism. I thought that was a wise observation. People make lists about the way other people celebrate their citizenship. We do not need any lists, and we do not need any Brownie points for our mutual feeling in regard to our country. It is divisive if we watch others celebrating our national holiday.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the New Democratic Party I should like to express our appreciation of the efforts which are being made for a great celebration on our one hundred and tenth birthday on July 1. It is true that there are times when celebrations and ceremonies can be so much window-dressing. There are times when patriotism is known to be a refuge for certain kinds of persons. However, it is also true that there are occasions when celebrations, ceremonies and expressions of patriotism do something for people such as those who comprise this country.

There is no question but that the efforts that were put into celebrating our centennial ten years ago gave us a lift. Sometimes we are a little unhappy that that experience seemed to die down a bit. Now that we are at the point of celebrating 110 years in the life of this country, I think it is worth while that it be done in the thorough way that has been announced by the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts).

I am sure that we all approve of the two-faceted approach, namely, that celebrations are to take place all over the country in hundreds of different communities, and also that there will be a main, outstanding celebration here in the nation's capital. I note that the Secretary of State indicated certain plans for the celebrations on that day. I particularly support the suggestion of the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) that an effort be made to see that it is a family day. Not only are we a Canadian family, but we are made up of our own families.

It is appropriate that the performers who take part that day in the main represent the two principal groups in this country, French-speaking and English-speaking. However, I would like to suggest, if it is not too late, that the program might also include performers who represent other groups in this country. There are millions of Canadians who are neither French-speaking nor English-speaking in their origin. They should be represented as well, and let us also remember the natives who are descended from those who were here before any of us came. It strikes me it would be a more Canadian program if this mosaic approach were included in that ceremony. I am delighted to see the Secretary of State nodding his head vertically as I make that suggestion.

One other question does get mention from time to time in this connection. I note what the hon. member for Fundy-Royal said about it. May I say in passing that the issue that arises when we seem to be going to celebrate Canada Day and Dominion Day on the same day could be resolved very easily if the government would just call Bill C-30. That bill provides for the establishment of Heritage Day. It also provides for changing the name of July 1 officially from Dominion Day to Canada Day. Two or three members of the Progressive Conservative party have presented their own bills calling for that change. There is a good deal of support for the idea around this House. Surely in the days between now and July 1 that problem could be solved in that way.

Like the hon. member for Fundy-Royal, I feel this is a celebration which should be enjoyed for its own sake. We should be grateful for the things that are part of our heritage. However, I cannot help but feel that a way to make Canadians even more proud to be part of this country is to put much more effort into solving some of the problems that face us at this time.

The previous speaker referred to the unemployed in our midst, particularly the large number of young people who are unemployed and who will have some doubts about their appreciation of their heritage. A way to make sure that Canadians will forever be proud to be Canadians and want to celebrate our birthdays year after year is to deal with problems like unemployment, urban renewal, regional disparities, housing and all those things that are realities in our life.

For the older people there is the whole question of improving the security that we provide for them, as well as providing those who are working with a guarantee that as they get older their security will be enhanced. Obviously, when I get into these few headings I could make full-dress speech on the things that are of concern to me. However, I am satisfied just to mention them at this time. I am glad to see the Secretary of State nodding his head up and down. I trust this means he agrees that the best way to make sure we will celebrate our birthdays with enthusiasm, not just with palaver and ceremony, is by making Canada the kind of place in which we are not only proud to live but in which there is security and freedom as well as the opportunity for fulfilment for all our people.

We are happy to join with other members of the House in expressing our appreciation of the efforts being made to provide a real "bang-up" celebration on July 1 when Canada will be 110 years old.

[Translation]

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, as a French-speaking Canadian, I should like to make a few remarks about the statement of the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts). First of all, I want to thank him for having sent me fairly early a copy of this statement. I would not like my remarks to sound too bitter, but I do feel they must be made if we want certain things that are going on to change. I find it most unfortunate that the French version I received was written in very poor French; the text was full of mistakes, both spelling and syntax, when Parliament has in fact excellent translators, who do terrific work. One need but read Hansard to realize how true what I am saying is. That such a text should have been received from a minister, and more, the Secretary of State for Canada, is unforgivable. I therefore trust that he will attend to that inexcusable anomaly on his part, no malice intended. Once again, I feel things must be brought out into the open if improvements are to be made.

The Social Credit Party of Canada supports the idea of a big celebration for Canada. It will be and must be Canada's day. I insist on this because in these days we must of necessity be proud of the fact that our country bears the name of Canada. So, the name must be repeated very often and I trust that celebration will truly be that of the whole of Canada, from the Pacific to the Atlantic.

We deplore, Mr. Speaker, that the Secretary of State and thus the government, and perhaps also Parliament, have as usual once again waited till the fire is roaring before calling firemen. For 10 years now we have been telling this government that Canada is in bad shape, that the provinces are dissatisfied, that Quebecers are beginning to be fed up with what is going on, that the government is sitting by while the economic and social situation is getting ever more rotten to such an extent that there are now over one million unemployed people in our beautiful and great country, when there is so much to do and all those energies that could be used.

In his statement, the Secretary of State has mentioned that prominent people would travel throughout Canada. He told us a few minutes ago that in the next few days he will announce who those people will be. I think it would be normal that travel expenses be paid not only for prominent people—who could afford to pay their own way—but also for little people, unemployed people and Quebecers who do not know much about Canada. They should be given a chance to travel throughout Canada. It would serve our country very well if more Quebecers could visit the other provinces. This is a suggestion which, I hope, will be considered.

In 1967, there was a great boom for the centenary of Confederation. Then everything was dropped or nearly so because, as mentioned by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) last April, separatism in Quebec is dead indeed. At that time, the Prime Minister thought it was over. By the way, I would like to draw the attention of the Secretary of State to a situation I witnessed on Monday, May 30, in my riding on the occasion of the launching of a book to celebrate the third centenary of a municipality along the St. Lawrence River. The person in charge of the press conference criticized us because the federal government had refused to help financially in the preparations for this event. And of course, as a member of Parliament and as a Canadian, I reacted. I was not very happy to hear that the organizers of the festivities had presented a project under the Canada Works program to try to organize something good and that the project had been turned down. Mr. Speaker, you imagine that a member of parliament who has a heart and whose blood boils in his veins, would propose to bring this to the attention of the authorities at the first opportunity. This is what I am doing, and I would ask the Secretary of State to remember this, because a tricentennial does not happen every day. So there ought to be a policy across Canada to help celebrate those days in all provinces of the country.

Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister stated that separatism was dead in Quebec. I think he must have found on November 15 that his prediction did not quite reflect reality, but something must be done to solve the problem. We must take action, and in taking action, we must do something which will show all Canadians, in any province, that Canada is governed by a Parliament and a government which responds to the needs of all Canadians and want to give all Canadians an equal opportunity to share the wealth and revenues of the country.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion I would say to Parliament and to the government that something has to be done most urgently. I want also to stress the fact that our confidence in the present constitution, as well as that of Canadians at large, will erode progressively. It is urgent that we work out a new one and that we start right now to prepare it so that Canada Day in 1978 be the most beautiful event that has ever occurred in our country. We will thus realize that there are people in Canada who really want to work together, who understand each other whatever the language and who want to make Canada the most beautiful country in the North American continent.

As of December 31 (a) 1968 (b) 1976, what was the number of federal employees engaged to check railroad equipment for safety?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): In so far as the Canadian Transport Commission is concerned: On December 31, 1968 and December 31, 1976, the number of employees of the Railway Transport Committee engaged in the checking of railroad locomotives and cars for safety was 17.

SAFETY OF FOOD AND DRUGS

Question No. 2,172—Mr. Stevens:

As of December 31 (a) 1968 (b) 1976, what was the number of federal employees engaged to check the safety of food and drugs?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): In so far as Agriculture Canada is concerned, the answer is: (a) 981; (b) 1,391. Departmental personnel devote only a portion of their time in the checking of the safety of food and drugs.

In so far as the Department of National Health and Welfare is concerned: (a) 150; (b) 225.

POLICY MAKING—ANIMAL AND PLANT HEALTH

Question No. 2,331—Mr. Stevens:

As of December 31 (a) 1968 (b) 1976, how many federal employees were charged with policy-making, or the interpretation of policies, relating to animal and plant health?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): In so far as Agriculture Canada is concerned: (a) 19; (b) 20.

In so far as the Department of National Health and Welfare is concerned: (a) 10; (b) 7.

NOTE: The formerly decentralized Animal Resource facilities were centralized under the Finance and Administration Directorate, Health Protection Branch, in 1974. This centralization resulted in a reduction in manpower required between 1968 and 1976.

POLICY MAKING—FOOD AND DRUGS

Question No. 2,332—Mr. Stevens:

As of December 31 (a) 1968 (b) 1976, how many federal employees were charged with policy-making, or interpretation of policies, regulating the safety of food and drugs?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): In so far as Agriculture Canada is concerned, the answer is: (a) 19; (b) 20. Departmental personnel devote only a portion of their time in the policy-making, or interpretation of policies, regulating the safety of food and drugs.

In so far as the Department of National Health and Welfare is concerned: (a) 17; (b) 20.

TANKERS CALLING AT PORTS IN QUEBEC

Question No. 2,354—Mr. Forrestall:

1. During (a) January (b) February (c) March 1976, what percentage of the total number of vessels calling at the Port of (i) Quebec (ii) Trois-Rivières (iii) Montreal, to load or discharge cargo, were tankers?

2. How many square feet of National Harbours Board shedded area is currently available at (a) Montreal (b) Quebec (c) Halifax (d) Saint John?

3. For the year (a) 1975 (b) 1976, what was the total volume of general cargo shipped over piers associated with the sheds, excluding facilities used primarily for container handling?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The National Harbours Board advises as follows: 1.

		(a) January 1976	(b) February 1976	(c) March 1976
(i)	Quebec	50 per cent	52 per cent	48 per cent
(ii)	Trois-Rivières	30 per cent	50 per cent	18 per cent
(iii)	Montreal	32 per cent	34 per cent	30 per cent

2. (a) Montreal, 2,870,454 square feet; (b) Quebec, 599,300 square feet; (c) Halifax, 760,604 square feet; (d) Saint John, 813,665 square feet.

3.

	(a) 1975 (Tons)	(b) 1976 (Tons)
Montreal	1,716,772	1,597,330
Quebec	1,800,012	2,269,728
Halifax	455,456	387,382
Saint John	1,012,314	1,016,990

TRANSFER OF AIR CANADA EMPLOYEES FROM PROVINCE OF QUEBEC

Question No. 2,393—Mr. O'Sullivan:

1. How many employees of Air Canada have been transferred from the Province of Quebec to postings outside the province, either in Canada or elsewhere, in (a) 1974 (b) 1975 (c) 1976 (d) the first three months of 1977?

2. (a) How many tranfers were at the request of the employee and how many were granted (b) how many resulted in the employee being transferred at an occupational and/or salary level equal to, or lower than that enjoyed in the Province of Quebec?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The management of Air Canada advises as follows: 1 and 2. Air Canada's records do not contain this information in the form in which it has been requested. As a result, it would take an inordinate amount of clerical time and cost to search for and obtain the information.

ABDUCTION OF VICTORIA STARR

Question No. 2,477—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is the Minister of Exernal Affairs aware that an Iranian citizen, Mr. Mamhoud Kazen, on a one month visit to Canada in August 1976, abducted his eleven year old daughter Vicki, from the home of the child's mother in Canada and that the child was in custody of the mother under Canadian law as a result of divorce proceedings some years ago?

2. Has the government taken any steps on the matter and, if so, of what nature?

3. Were representations made to the government of Iran and, if so (a) on what date (b) in what nature (c) by whom?

4. Is the child a Canadian citizen under Canadian law and, if so, what further steps will the government take in an attempt to have her returned to her mother in Canada?

5. Is the government aware of a court order which gave Mr. Kazen the right to visit his daughter in Canada on the condition his passport be surrendered to a lawyer upon arrival and, if so, for what reason were steps not taken to enforce this court order by any Canadian official?

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): 1. Yes, although we understand the father's surname is spelled Kazem.

2. Since the government learned of Victoria's removal from Canada to Iran by her father contrary to an Ontario Court Order, Canadian officials have discussed the matter with the mother and with Mr. Kazem on a number of occasions, with a view to facilitating a negotiated settlement between the mother and father, and the return of Victoria to her family in Canada. Full details of the case were transmitted to the Canadian Embassy in Tehran which has made representations to the authorities in Iran. In addition, the matter has been raised with the Iranian Ambassador to Canada. Most recently, on March 9, at the request of the Department of External Affairs, consultations were held between Mrs. Starr, her lawyer and officials of that Department. Proposals for new custody arrangements were formulated by Mrs. Starr and forwarded to Iran for transmission to Mr. Kazem. Further discussions took place between Mr. Kazem and the Canadian Embassy. Subsequently, the Department received detailed reports from the Embassy which set out Mr. Kazem's counter proposals, and these have been passed to Mrs. Starr and her lawyer.

3. Yes. (a) From the outset at the time in August, 1976 that Victoria and her father arrived in Tehran, up to the present time, a number of discussions have taken place with the Iranian authorities, and with the father and mother. (b) On August 29, 1976 the then Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Hon. Allan J. MacEachen, wrote to the Iranian Ambassador to Ottawa. Subsequently, officials of the Canadian Embassy in Tehran have on numerous occasions discussed the matter with Mr. Kazem and his lawyer, with Mrs. Starr's Iranian lawyer, with officials of the Iranian Foreign Ministry and with Iranian Immigration authorities. (c) As in (b).

4. Yes. However it is understood that Victoria is also a citizen of Iran. Under Iranian laws the Ontario custody order has no force and effect in that country. Mrs. Starr has obtained advice on recourses available under the laws of Iran. The Government of Iran has taken the position that Victoria is an Iranian citizen, legally resident in that country and subject to the laws of Iran. In these circumstances, and in the absence of any agreement between Canada and Iran for the mutual enforcement of custody orders, it is not clear what further remedies may be available to Mrs. Starr in Iran. While the Government of Canada will continue to assist in any way possible in Mrs. Starr's efforts to have Victoria re-united with her family, prospects do not seem encouraging unless the father and mother can come to some understanding.

5. Yes. The Government was not, however, aware of the Ontario Surrogate Court Order until after Victoria had been taken out of the country.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): If question No. 775 could be made an order for return, this return would be tabled immediately. I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

MANPOWER DISTRIBUTION—POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT

Question No. 775—Mr. Rodriguez:

1. With reference to the heading Manpower Distribution in the Post Office Department annual reports, for each category, what are the figures for (a) Letter Carriers' Union of Canada (b) Canadian Union of Postal Works (c) Association of Postal Officers of Canada (d) Canadian Postmasters Association (e) Public Service Alliance of Canada (i) Railway Mail Clerks (ii) General Labour Trades (iii) other trade groups (f) other specific groups of organized employees (g) out of scope management (h) all other groups for each fiscal year from 1970-71 to the present?

2. For the same fiscal years, in each category of Manpower Distribution, what were (a) the aggregate salaries and wages (b) the (i) names (ii) locations (iii) salaries (iv) positions of all employees earning $20,000 per year or more?

Return tabled.

GOVERNMENT ORGANIZATION (SCIENTIFIC ACTIVITIES) ACT, 1976

MEASURE RESPECTING ORGANIZATION OF CERTAIN SCIENTIFIC ACTIVITIES OF GOVERNMENT

The House resumed, from Thursday, June 2, consideration of the motion of Mr. Faulkner (for the Prime Minister) that Bill C-26, respecting the organization of certain scientific activities of the government of Canada, be read the third time and do pass.

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, last night at the time of adjournment I was discussing Bill C-26, and particularly the impact which it will have on the granting councils and university research. I gave some indication of what I felt lay ahead, some of the directions which I felt were implicit within the bill. I concluded my remarks last night by suggesting that I feel that the bill itself is timely and that it would be a vehicle for some important evolutionary changes within the functioning of the granting council system—a system which, I might add, historically has served this country extremely well.

Now I would like to look at another part of the framework of the granting councils which exists outside granting councils itself but which I have discussed both in committee and on second reading. I am referring, of course, to the role of the Inter-Council Co-ordinating Committee. This committee, as I indicated on second reading, will report to me. It will consist of the Secretary of MOSST, as chairman, and the heads of the three councils. It will be the forum for discussions among the councils and between the councils and the government. It will have as a prime function the job of co-ordinating the policies, programs and practices of the councils, to see that, on the one hand, they do reflect national objectives and priorities, and on the other that they make sense from the point of view of the universities for the development of university research across the range of disciplines. The councils have, of course, final responsibility for shaping their own objectives and supporting policies and programs. This is quite clear. The ICCC will be the sounding-board for discussing their completeness and consistency and their total impact on the university research community. This will be a new and significant element in the federal granting picture.

The ICCC will have other functions. It will advise on the allocation of funds among the councils; it will take an active role to ensure that the needs of interdisciplinary research, both within councils and crossing the boundaries of both disciplines and councils, are met; it will try to see that all disciplines are covered. The committee can invite others to its meetings from both outside and inside the government. As the new councils become established, I can see that the ICCC will be a valuable forum for looking at the interaction and balance among departmental programs of university support and council programs, for example, those of agriculture and the new natural sciences and engineering research council. There has been criticism that the ICCC is not in the bill and, without statutory authority, will lack muscle. In my view that is not so. Its authority derives essentially from the intention the government has for it, its membership and its role. Its scope and action remain flexible and, as with the bill, the concept behind its creation is evolutionary change.

I have laid emphasis on the need for clearer objectives for research support by both the councils and the universities themselves. I noted in my second reading statement the kinds of objectives, in broad terms, the councils might be guided by. I would like briefly to elaborate on certain of these, because I would like the House to appreciate the longer term implications of this bill and the importance of what will be done here today in bringing this bill a step closer to final approval. I would also like to feel I have the support of the House for the thoughts I am putting forward.

The goal of all university research must continue to be excellence assessed by the peer review system, whether it is in unravelling the structure of an enzyme or in developing new techniques for extracting oil from tar sands. I have said, however, that the era of all university research being motivated solely by the desire to expand the frontiers of knowledge is passing. Research in the universities is now multifaceted, and increasingly the stimulus for the research will be coming from outside the university. But we cannot expect, as a nation, that university research will be able to contribute fully to national issues if we do not define what the research objectives are with respect to those issues and what opportunities there are for university scientists and scholars to get involved.

The challenge to the new councils is to develop policies and mechanisms which will encourage the university research community to respond. The problems posed to the community should not only be those of direct concern to governments and industry, as I indicated last night, but should also cover the issues confronting Canadian society in general. The broad objectives or guidelines I described last December provide a context for the definition of these research objectives. To speak in particular of two of them, I think the councils must consider a regional balance of scientific capability and the support of interdisciplinary research in setting out and implementing their objectives. The objective of achieving a regional balance should not be interpreted as meaning that the government wants to see a regional balance within each discipline. This would be unreasonable; we simply do not have the resources. What is intended is a fair distribution of centres of specialization in different disciplines or groups of disciplines across the country. Thus, we should reinforce a regional capability which has grown out of the presence of an outstanding scientist or scholar or a special competence related to the geographic, economic or social conditions of the region.

There will be difficult decisions for the councils here on what to support, and where. The appropriate marshalling of talent and resources in centres of specialization will depend on a detailed knowledge of the state of the art in various fields of research and an understanding of the strengths and weaknesses of the universities, including an awareness of the attitudes to research of the university administrations. The councils must begin to obtain this information if they do not already have it.

The councils should also, I believe, give serious thought to how interdisciplinary research is best supported and carried out. Some success has been achieved by the present councils in supporting scientists and scholars from different disciplines working together in various university institutes which cut across traditional departmental lines. From my own observations, I know, however, that many of these efforts have been tentative and have failed to develop the right kind of institutional mechanism or reward systems which would ensure continuing success. There are obstacles in the way of establishing the mutual respect necessary for good teamwork. These will have to be overcome if the optimum level of research capability in Canada is to be achieved. Future progress in addressing national problem areas will be based on the sharing of knowledge among disciplines, as will the general advance of knowledge, and new policies and programs from the councils will be needed. It is especially in these areas that bright, young scientists would be able to pursue research careers.

It is not difficult to think of areas of national concern where research is essential. The efficient development of our agricultural and food technologies, the management—including both exploitation and protection—of our marine resources, the identification of poisons in our atmosphere and water affecting the health of Canadian society, and the increasing concentration of Canadians in a few urban centres are examples. The councils, bearing in mind provincial and regional priorities, will have the task of translating national issues into research objectives.

What will these research objectives look like, and how will they be arrived at? I am not sure I can answer this question with any assurance. This will be a task for the councils. It has not been done to any extent before, but what is clear to me is that it will require leadership from the councils to see it through. The process of setting these objectives must, I think, have the involvement and support of the scientific and scholarly communities. Without the backing of the community, the response to such new objectives is not likely to be of high quality or quantity. The challenge, as I say, will be for the councils to come up with policies and programs which strike the right note. I would add that universities themselves may also find their research policies have to be re-examined in light of the changing directions of council programs.

Finally, I do not want to leave the impression that the councils will be devoting all their resources to specific issues. The support of free inquiry has a firm place in council objectives and, as I emphasized, will continue to have that place. Basic research has produced much of the knowledge underlying our present prosperity. Canada will go on contributing to that body of knowledge which is the common property of all mankind. To be a parasite on this stock of knowledge is not the government's policy. Our contribution has been distinguished in the past and I hope it will be even more distinguished in the future.

I have not spoken today about the other aspects of the bill. They were discussed previously and it was agreed in the committee that they would be useful and worth-while changes. I would simply like to conclude my remarks by reiterating my thanks to all hon. members of the House who participated in the discussion on this bill. I would cite two in particular, the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling) and the hon. member for Wellington (Mr. Maine) who took a very particular interest in this bill at second reading, through the committee stage and on to third reading. I am very grateful to them and the other members of the committee who participated in the debate on this bill.

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, there are a few remarks I would like to make in this third reading debate. I hope to conclude by one o'clock. The concerns I expressed about Bill C-26 at second reading are in the main still with me. At the time of the second reading debate I said I believed that by putting in place an additional layer of bureaucracy, the net amount of money available for actual research would be less. Given the illusory position of the government with regard to reducing the cost of administration, and given the constraints placed on total budget estimates, we can only conclude that there will be, by the mechanism of this bill, less money available for actual research, where the real work is done. However, as the minister has said, some of this may be redressed by re-examination by the university community of the projects on which they are working.

Further, I was somewhat concerned about the release on April 26 by the minister regarding the contracting out of scientific requirements to the private sector. In effect, that is merely a reshuffling of the deck. The existing policies of the government for industrial research are, in real terms, available to only 5 per cent of Canadian industry, and they really should be oriented to 95 per cent. Only about 1,550 Canadian firms are capable of supporting in-house research and development. Another 5,000 Canadian firms are capable of purchasing research from private or provincial research foundations. The balance of about 24,600 Canadian firms can neither support in-house research nor purchase research on new products from private or provincial research foundations. The basic problem is that the government has never committed itself to the establishment of a strong secondary industrial base in Canada. I see little, if anything, in this legislation to change that.

However, it is not our purpose to frustrate this legislation on that point. We do not intend to prolong the debate on that point. We will pursue it through other legislation to try to effect a change. In his book "The Economics of Industrial Innovation" published in 1974, Professor Charles Freeman said the following:

> No amount of improvement in education and quality of labour force, no greater efforts by the mass media, no economies of scale or structural changes, no improvements in management, or in government administration could in themselves ultimately transcend the technical limitations of candle power as a means of illumination, wind as a source of energy, or iron as an engineering material, or of horses as a means of transport. Without technical innovation, economic progress would cease in the long run and in this sense we are justified in regarding it as primary, although operating in close association with other factors.

The very basis of a manufacturing industry is the systematic application of science and technology. Technology is the key to industrial progress and the key to competitive survival. Appropriate technology is the key to the development of small, regional enterprises in the less developed regions of this country. Much of that appropriate technology should be geared to the resource bases of those regions. Most of our legislation is geared to the development of economies of scale and of specialization agreements and exclusion from monopoly legislation in order to achieve those economies of scale.

The criticism I have is that the base is being continually narrowed and little attention is paid to broadening it. For this reason we were critical of the transfer of the patents and development branch to the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, where we believe it will be lost in the bureaucratic jungle and will wither on the vine. We believe there is a mechanism whereby the patents and development branch could act as a clearing-house for patents from other jurisdictions that have run their course and become public property. We believe these should be made available to Canadian enterprises through the libraries of provincial research foundations. On some of this proven technology, new technology can be built and innovative enterprises spawned that will provide the products of the future.

Canadian industry is suffering from extreme fragmentation such as the proceedings at GATT and the proposal to reduce tariffs generally by 50 per cent across the board, and further fragmentation will take place. I do not oppose tariff cuts if we put in place mechanisms to develop new and appropriate technology geared to regional requirements. Without this commitment, however, the immediate future for industry is indeed very bleak. The future for the 1.5 million unemployed and those entering the labour force in the years ahead looks dark. The possibility of a reversal in our balance of payments deficit is not promising.

Most of the points I have made could have been included in this bill, but they have not. The criticism I have of the bill is not so much on its content but that it could have gone further. It could have incorporated many of the points I have mentioned and taken a bold, new direction for Canada.

I do not view science and technology in any partisan way. It is too important to be pushed into the background by political bickering. The representatives from the scientific and academic community who visited our offices while this bill was being debated brought with them their sincere concern for the future of scientific research. They stressed very conclusively the need for continuous funding so that they could keep their research teams together. They talked sincerely and with conviction about their concerns for future scientific research and the need for long-term funding so that they could continue to attract the best students into this vital field. I can only say to them that we appreciate their concern and will endeavour to address ourselves to it in the months ahead.

I urge the scientific and academic community not to give up because of the constraints on spending we presently face. The short-term future may look bleak, but the long-term future is bright. To those who are being enticed away by promises of higher rewards we say, "Pause and think about the future of Canada". The difficulties we face will be of short duration in the span of an academic life, but we need the very best minds that are available if we are to achieve the promise of the future.

Mr. Speaker, the debate on this bill was spirited, and that is good. The committee hearings were extensive, and that is good. By agreement, we have decided that the bill should pass with a minimum of debate at this stage because of the earlier debate and the depth of the committee hearings. I believe that is good, too. Our desire now is to conclude third reading debate so that the bill may pass through the next stage and be proclaimed. Whatever benefits may accrue to the scientific and academic community should be made available to them as soon as possible.

One of my colleagues said that this bill is one whose time has passed. That is his opinion. An opinion does not have to be right or wrong in order to be valid; it need only be honest. That was his honest opinion and he was perfectly right to express it. That is the nature of debate; that is part of the function of parliament. We endeavour to improve legislation presented to this House so that the final product will be useful and relevant to Canada. Although we have reservations about this bill which we have expressed in debate and in committee, only the passage of time will prove or disprove our reservations and concerns about the effectiveness of the legislation. I, personally, hope that the concerns and criticism I have expressed are wrong. I hope that whatever benefits may flow from this bill will give the direction so desperately needed in this field.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, may I say that we in this party look forward with anticipation to new initiatives that may be presented to this House to enhance and strengthen scientific research and technical innovation in Canada.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, we in this party have no desire to hold up this bill. Being our only speaker, I wonder, in view of the time, if I might call it one o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Goodale: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, I should like to draw the attention of the House to a change in the order of business for this afternoon. Earlier today we discussed moving on to Bill C-13, the legislation dealing with historic sites, after we had passed the legislation on scientific activities. There have been the usual discussions, and it has been agreed that instead of dealing with Bill C-13 next we will deal with Bill S-3, the legislation dealing with insurance companies. When we have finished with Bill S-3, we will go on with Bill C-13 and continue with the order of business as announced.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Hon. members have taken notice, and there does not seem to be any disagreement. Therefore, we will proceed in that order. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until two o'clock p.m.

At 12.58 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Orlikow: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the minister in whose name the bill stands cannot be present in the House this afternoon. Let me say, as I begin my comments, that I support the position the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Symes) took on second reading. Juggling around with the granting mechanism and establishing new granting councils will not solve our difficulties in scientific research. The new granting body may employ more people than the old council, but that will do little good. After all, unless you make more money available for scientific and social research, cutting the pie up into smaller slices will not increase its over-all size.

I was amazed, to say the least, at some of the things the minister said this morning. He said, for instance, that the government does not intend this country to be a parasite on other countries in the field of scientific research; that is not government policy. Also, he said Canada will do its share. That is precisely our position. In a study carried out for the Ministry of Science and Technology in 1975 it is stated:

—major capital stock of any industrially advanced nation is not its physical equipment but rather its body of scientific knowledge and the capacity of its population to use this knowledge.

According to Statistics Canada we are now turning out about 2,500 Doctors of Philosophy a year, the largest number ever. Again according to Statistics Canada it is unlikely, given the policies we have been following in the research field, that as many as half of their number will be able to find gainful employment. That is a disaster for the country and a tremendous waste of our human and financial resources.

What are the reasons for our deficiency in technological capability? It seems to me there are two: first, with the encouragement of the government and, indeed, of four governments since the Second World War, we have been too willing to import prefabricated, American technology. This is primarily the result of Canada having the highest dependence of any industrialized western nation upon foreign controls and ownership of its industry. As many scientific researchers have pointed out, in most multinational corporations the major research and development effort takes place in the country where the head office is located. Although subsidiaries do perform research and development work, a large portion of this work is adapted, consisting of taking products and processes designed by the parent company and adapting them to the Canadian situation and environment. Clearly, if Canada continues to depend upon the scientific and engineering skills of other countries the long-term consequences will be disastrous.

The minister said he did not want us to be parasites. But if he would look at the figures for research and development he would see how far we have fallen behind in recent years. Public support of research and development in Canadian industry, in government laboratories and in universities has been steadily falling off since 1969. In 1975, support of industrial research and development dropped to 87 per cent of the 1969 level. Support of government research and development fell to 83 per cent of the 1969 level, and of university research and development to 67 per cent of the level in 1969. Is it any wonder statements have recently been made by the Royal Society, by medical researchers, by the Chemical Institute and by virtually every scientific body in this country expressing alarm over the situation?

I suppose that because of the close relationship between the medical profession and the people they serve, it is the medical researchers who have been most successful in persuading the government to make up, at least partially, for the mistakes of recent years. These cutbacks, the scope of which I have indicated, were further aggravated by the termination of such programs as the Industrial Research and Development Incentives Act, by cutbacks in the program for the advancement of industrial technology and the elimination of the research granting activities of the Defence Research Board. In contrast, other advanced nations like the United States, Britain and France treated their research and development enterprises in 1974 either as well as they did in 1969 or better. The Royal Society commented in its statement last year that Canada appeared to be alone among the advanced nations in the attitude of its government toward research and development.

The second reason for technical weakness can be traced directly to our poor record of support for university basic research. A significant aspect of this neglect is the apparent deliberate attempt by the government to scuttle university research completely, as documented by the Royal Society in the statement to which I have referred. There has been a dramatic decline in the funding of basic research at Canadian universities. Funding by the National Research Council, in real dollars, in 1974 dropped to 60 per cent of the 1969 level, and by the Medical Research Council to about 80 per cent of the 1969 level. As I say, as a result of representations by medical researchers and others this situation has been rectified to the point at which this year we should be giving about the same amount to medical research as we did in 1969.

The proportion of the gross national product spent by the federal government on basic research through its two main funding agencies has been steadily decreasing since 1969. In that year it was a meagre .10 per cent; by 1969 it was .07 per cent. In contrast, Belgium spent .3 per cent; Germany .3 per cent; France .4 per cent; Japan .4 per cent, and the Netherlands .6 per cent. In other words, Canada spent about one-quarter of the average support level of those West European countries and Japan. We are talking, it should be remembered, about a country which until recently, at least, had one of the highest gross national products of any in the world.

In 1974, Canada's increase over the 1969 support level amounted to between 8 per cent and 10 per cent, whereas in West Germany it was 150 per cent, in France 100 per cent, and in the U.S.A. 50 per cent. In the United Kingdom, which we know to have been suffering serious economic difficulties, the increase was 60 per cent. Unlike Canada, these countries clearly recognize that basic research capability provides the underpinning for future technological development, resulting in a strong secondary manufacturing section with its high growth of employment opportunities.

We have seen a continuing decline in recent years in the percentage of our labour force engaged in manufacturing. We have increasingly become hewers of wood and drawers of water. This is a serious matter because there is evidence that the United States may be revising its strategy of allowing unimpeded export of expertise and know-how to Canada, or to other nations, for that matter.

In a paper to the congressional subcommittee on economic growth in 1975, Robert Gilpin, a Princeton economist, warned of the dangers to American leadership in science and technology and to the American international market position. He said that if one is to acquire foreign technology, one must have technology with which to bargain and trade. If the United States government were to follow the advice of Mr. Gilpin, there is no country in the world which would be more adversely, indeed disastrously, affected than Canada since we depend almost exclusively upon the United States for industrial know-how. To a tremendous extent this know-how is imported into Canada from the United States.

It seems to me that in our present weak position Canada has two choices. We can continue to plead for special status with the United States, or we can begin to move toward being technologically independent. To my mind there is no difficulty in choosing the better policy for Canada to follow. But if we are to follow the objective of becoming more technologically independent, we must recognize the necessity for a strong base for technology and then initiate a science policy which commits this country to the furtherance of this objective.

It seems to me very obvious from the figures that I have quoted, figures which have been made public through the work of all scientific organizations founded in various fields in Canada, that this government has not followed such a policy. Indeed, the government has an anti-science policy. It would be charitable to say that this can be ascribed to the lack of understanding of the value and role of science as a moulding force of society. If anyone feels that I am being too harsh when I say that, I would refer them to the view of a former minister of science and technology, the hon. member for Westmount (Mr. Drury), that all scientific organizations felt that way. Really, nothing has changed since that time.

The Senate committee headed by Senator Lamontagne which studied at great length and over several years scientific research made a number of interesting observations. In the second volume of its report it had this to say:

> A second feature of basic science that justifies financial support is that it is not as pure as it is often alleged to be. Indeed it would be quite easy to show that many important innovations since the first industrial revolution have originated from basic research and scientific discoveries that were not at first viewed as having practical application. The financing of such research can thus be rationalized on the basis that basic science be considered as an overhead charge on applied science and R and D in general.

This government is taking exactly the opposite view. It has taken the view that we have a limited amount of money for scientific research; that therefore cutbacks will be made on pure science and basic research grants. There will be cutbacks in funds for universities and more money will be spent on the practical application of scientific research. As I say, this is the converse of the observation in the Lamontagne report. The Science Council, in their report, had this to say:

> It is generally accepted that research is an indispensable element of a university for the development of both teacher and students. Thus Canadian education requires research in Canadian educational institutions. Research at the universities need not and should not be limited to basic research alone. Nevertheless, the search for new and deep understanding of the world which is inherent in basic research make it particularly important to higher education.

Clearly, the opportunity for original inquiry helps generate new knowledge, is an important adjunct of professional teaching and is central to the education of advanced students.

Today, a majority of new graduates in virtually every scientific discipline in Canada simply cannot find jobs in Canadian universities, in the government service or Canadian industry. The task force on research reported in Science Forum, in one of this year's issues:

—if the current policies and enrolment trends persist we must face the prospect of a period of 20 years during which few posts in research and teaching will be filled by young recruits. Thus the research work continues to be deprived of fresh talent, and would age rapidly (at an estimated rate of 0.8 years per annum). Continuing erosion will lead to a major crisis in the 1990s when the majority of the present researchers will be of retirement age without adequate replacement of their expertise being available from within the country.

That is what has been happening in this country, and we believe it ought not to happen, that it need not happen. I come back to what I said at the beginning, that the restructuring of the granting agencies will have very little effect on what we accomplish in the field of scientific research. The prime reason for our failures has been, is, and will continue to be, lack of adequate funding. We believe we must commit at least four-tenths of 1 per cent of our gross national product to scientific research. We agree that the agencies and the government organizations which are charged with approving scientific research projects and granting money should be simplified. This is why we support this bill as a first step. However, we believe that without a sharp increase in the amount of grants we will continue to fail, as we have been failing in the last ten or more years.

We believe that the agencies need to be charged with the responsibility of sponsoring more of what has been called, in the scientific community, mission-oriented research. This is research which may involve a considerable element of basic research but which nevertheless is directed toward a specific goal or mission. This type of research is most often conducted in a government or private research institute. Many countries, particularly France, West Germany and the Soviet Union, have promoted these research institutes with considerable success. We have experimented with this type of research organization in the establishment of Atomic Energy of Canada, Limited which was largely responsible for the basic research and development which led to the CANDU nuclear reactor which we claim is one of the best in the world. Unfortunately, there are a few other examples in Canada of this type of research organization which might best be called a research and development corporation.

We are facing a dilemma. On the one hand, there is a growing surplus of manpower in the science and engineering fields, with little indication of what we should do with these people; on the other hand, funding for research and development has steadily decreased in terms of constant dollars over the last ten years. Hence, fewer and fewer jobs are available for our graduates.

I am suggesting an institute for the establishment of a solar energy research and development Crown corporation. I understand the United States is in the process of establishing such an institute. Such an institute could not only conduct research on solar heating and cooling of buildings, solar cells, solar fuels, etc., but could also co-ordinate all solar energy research activities in Canada. The world is crying for the use of solar energy. The industrialized countries, and particularly the underdeveloped countries, are not likely in the foreseeable future to have the funds for alternative energy sources or to have the funds to purchase oil, natural gas, coal or any of the other existing sources of energy.

Canada should take the lead in not only meeting its own needs in 10 or 20 years from now through the use of solar energy but in developing a basis for using solar energy in ways which could be exported to the benefit of Canadians and to the benefit of recipient countries. I am referring to a system for tapping the solar energy available. This is one example of the many we ought to be exploring and about which we have done virtually nothing.

As I have indicated, Canada ranks far behind other industrial countries in their percentage of gross national product devoted to research and development. When we look at applied research and development, largely carried out in industry, Canada ranks last out of eight industrial countries in the percentage of the research and development dollar devoted to industrial research. It was less than 40 per cent in 1972. Not only is the quality of research and development conducted by industry in Canada very poor, but also the quality appears to be poor. It has been discovered that of the 110 significant innovations in the world since World War II, which cover a wide range of science intensive industries including electronic components, pharmaceuticals, plastics, computers, etc., none was first developed in Canada. Although this study covers the period to 1970, recent data suggests that we have not been doing much better since then.

Compared to most other countries, industry in Canada provides a higher percentage of the funds for industrial research and development as compared to the United States, for example, where research and development is the most intense and industry provides a smaller proportion of the financing than in other countries. The government must participate with industries to share the financing of industrial research and development through direct grants and cost-sharing programs, particularly in industries which will help build a secondary manufacturing base and allow diversification from dependence on resource-based industries which we have had in recent years. The secondary manufacturing base in Canada has been deteriorating. The success of these shared ventures will depend on clearly identifying projects which are geared to the special needs of the Canadian market. That will not happen as long as this country continues to be dominated, particularly in the manufacturing sector of our economy, by the multinational companies.

The ability of this country to function as an independent nation will depend on our capacity to develop a strong secondary manufacturing industry based on products and ideas developed from a heavy investment in research and development. This must come from the government. It may be too old-fashioned to talk about Canadians being hewers of wood and drawers of water. As one scientist said, the only thing that has changed has been to replace the axe by the chain-saw, and the pail by the water-pump.

In our view, we need a national science policy designed to promote scientific and technological innovations to meet the important economic, environmental and social challenges confronting us and to enhance our daily lives. To achieve this we need a government willing to commit a much greater percentage of our gross national product to basic applied research and development. We need research and development Crown corporations to help these national goals. We also need a firm commitment by the government that we are going to move to regain control of our industry in order to stimulate this applied research and development.

Science is too important to continue in the way we have. While we support the bill we have before us, we do not believe the government really means to do the kinds of things in the field of scientific policies which are required. We foresee much more trouble in the coming years than we have had in the last couple of years, with more unemployment and more difficulties for the thousands of graduates we have been turning out from our scientific institutions.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN AND BRITISH INSURANCE COMPANIES ACT

AMENDMENT TO CLARIFY DEFINITIONS

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill S-3, to amend the Canadian and British Insurance Companies Act and the Foreign Insurance Companies Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the bill relates to three types of companies—Canadian companies, Commonwealth companies, and insurance companies from other parts of the world. The main purpose of the bill is to revise the existing statutory rules concerning the valuation of the liabilities and assets of insurance companies and concerning the presentation of accounts. The objective of these changes is to have the financial accounts of insurance companies presented in a manner that will conform more closely to generally accepted accounting principles than has been the case in the past. These matters have been under intensive study for the past two or three years, stimulated by the accounting profession in Canada and in the United States and also by the Canadian Institute of Actuaries.

The problem of fair presentation of financial accounts of an insurance company is a difficult one. The valuation of a company's obligations involves elements of judgment relating to whether policies will give rise to claims in the future and when these claims will arise. On the assets side, it is necessary to form a judgment concerning the earning power of the existing assets portfolio and whether this portfolio, together with future investment income and future premium payments, will produce the right amounts of money at the right time to pay future claims and expenses. Thus, the valuation of the liabilities and the valuation of assets for an insurance company are closely linked.

A further difficult problem relates to the fact that administrative expenses in connection with the issuance of insurance policies are heavily concentrated at the outset of the policy. It has been traditional in the insurance industry to treat these acquisition expenses as an outright expense as they are incurred. However, standard accounting practice would, instead, spread the impact of the heavy acquisition expense over a period of years rather than concentrate it at the outset. The traditional practice has been conservative in the sense that a company is forced to have sufficient resources to carry this initial expense while it waits for recovery of the expense from future premiums. On the other hand, the standard accounting approach gives, perhaps, a better ongoing assessment of the financial results of a company's operation.

In proposing these amendments, the government recognizes that it is not only desirable to revise and improve the presentation of financial accounts of insurance companies but that it is also desirable to retain sufficient safeguards to protect the solvency of such companies. It is also considered desirable to arrive at one statement form for use by supervisory agencies, as well as for presentation to shareholders, policyholders and the public, if this can be achieved. We recognize, too, that changes from the traditional method of presentation of accounts to methods that are more closely in line with generally accepted accounting principles will take some time. Further thought and development of ideas are certain to take place. The existing bill would amend the present legislative structure in order to permit a revised presentation of accounts and also contemplates some flexibility to take into account results of future and ongoing discussions among the interested parties.

With respect to liabilities, the bill proposes considerable changes from existing requirements. There will be much more responsibility placed upon the actuary of a life insurance company to choose appropriate valuation bases and valuation methods. There will be broader scope than at present to spread the impact of acquisition expenses over the premium-paying period of the policy, thus producing a better presentation of the profit or loss of a company from year to year.

With respect to regulatory control, the bill proposes that the Superintendent of Insurance shall have final control to reject valuation bases that he thinks are inappropriate, and the bill also proposes a maximum limit on the deferral of acquisition expenses.

With respect to assets, the bill proposes that a company be able to present its assets at the book values, less an investment valuation reserve to be determined by regulation. The book values, in general, will be defined at the amortized values for redeemable securities, and the outstanding balances for mortgage loans. For stocks, the book values would be the purchase price together with a special adjustment applied to the whole portfolio, to recognize some portion of realized and unrealized capital gains and losses. Real estate would have a book value equal to the purchase price.

It is proposed to fix the investment valuation reserve by regulation since there is considerable ongoing discussion in the accounting and actuarial professions concerning appropriate methods to value assets for insurance companies. There will likely be further developments in this field from time to time in the future. We would wish, however, to discuss these proposals with the industry before final decision. Draft proposals have been distributed.

For property and casualty insurance companies, although much of the above applies, the bill proposes a change in the minimum capital and surplus requirements now prescribed for this type of company. These changes should help to improve the capacity of existing insurance companies to serve the Canadian market but without any dangerous weakening of solvency standards.

One change of interest is that the bill proposes a change in the definition of "British company" in order to extend this definition to include organizations such as Lloyd's of London. At present, Lloyd's is exempt from the application of the insurance legislation since it is not a "corporation" and the act presently deals only with British organizations that are corporations. Lloyd's has expressed some interest in being registered under federal legislation. In the past, this has not been possible since Lloyd's could not find a way to deposit assets in Canada to cover their liabilities in Canada, as is required of other non-resident insurers. It now appears, however, that Lloyd's has made an arrangement to deposit assets in Canada and, consequently, it seems possible to work out arrangements to give them registered status.

However, some further discussions are needed since the Lloyd's organization has characteristics that are not found in ordinary insurance companies. Consequently, the bill proposes that this change come into force only on proclamation. It also proposes that authority be given to the Superintendent of Insurance to work out special arrangements to meet the special nature of the Lloyd's organization, all within the concept of maintaining assets in Canada to cover the liabilities here.

The bill proposes a modest increase in corporate powers of insurance companies to enable them to transact ancillary business directly, rather than only through subsidiaries as at present. Some additional flexibility will be given to insurance companies to permit them to issue capital stock in classes or series of shares and to subdivide the par value of shares. In this connection I might mention that it is the intention to propose a general revision of the corporate clauses of the insurance legislation as soon as this can be done. In the circumstances now facing us, however, this further revision will probably await completion of the studies of the Bank Act and, perhaps, legislation relating to other financial institutions.

The bill proposes a number of changes with respect to investment powers. The power to invest in government securities other than those of governments in Canada will be restricted to government securities of countries where a Canadian insurance company is doing business, but the bill proposes that the government bonds of other countries may be authorized by regulation.

Since the bill received first reading in this House, the question of depositing foreign pay securities to cover Canadian liabilities has assumed greater importance. Because of certain accounting rules adopted in the United States a number of companies from that country have indicated a desire to deposit U.S. dollar securities in Canada to cover some or all of their liabilities here. It seems necessary, therefore, to have broader control over this matter than was originally thought necessary. Accordingly, it is proposed to amend the bill to make clear that a non-resident company may deposit or rest in trust securities not payable in Canadian dollars only with the consent of the minister and subject to such conditions and such valuation as he may prescribe. The provision now in the bill relating only to government securities of the home jurisdiction would then be unnecessary.

When the bill received attention in the other place there was no objection raised. The insurance industry indicated that it was satisfied with the amendments. However, since that time a number of comments have been received, mostly from the investment community, concerning the revision of the investment provisions. These comments were not critical of the principles involved but sought some revision of technical details to ease the problem of determining eligibility of new issues. It seems reasonable to make changes to accord with such requests. Consequently, some amendments will be proposed in committee to that end. In addition, a few other drafting points have been called to our attention and these also might be corrected in committee.

This is a bill of some technical complexity. The Superintendent of Insurance and other officials will be readily available to the committee for the purpose of considering this revision.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, as the minister indicated, this bill has come to us from the other place where it was passed on March 16. Essentially, as the minister also said, it is a housekeeping bill with certain improvement provisions in it. I want to refer to the proceedings in the committee of the other place for a moment where the bill was referred to by the Superintendent of Insurance as being a formidable looking document, although he pointed out to the members of that committee that it was not quite as bad as it looked. I am not sure that he should be considering legislation on the basis of how it looks, but it is a fact that the bill has essentially three parts with basically similar provisions applying, first to Canadian companies, second to British companies, and third to foreign companies. So it is really only the first 17 clauses that we will be considering as the important part of the content.

I think the minister made the point that the main purpose of the bill is to revise and clarify the requirements for financial reporting for insurance companies. Reference is made in the bill to the use of actuaries and the studies that have been made by the actuarial societies and the accounting bodies, including undoubtedly the Institute of Chartered Accountants in Canada. I am often reminded that most people think of accounting as being an exact science, and I always disagree with that. I think this is a good example to show us that accounting is, in fact, an art. This amendment indicates that there are, in fact, many ways of presenting the accounting story, particularly in the insurance industry, and the bill will try to give some consistency to the presentation of the financial statements of insurance companies. I think we can all be thankful for that because it is not every individual, whether he be an investor or a policyholder, who can pick out the differences in the various shapes of the presentation that are possible at the moment.

I think it is a particularly good idea that the method of writing off expenses will be standardized. It used to be, in the insurance business, that a new insurance company was limited in the amount of business that it could write. On the one hand, most new companies want to do as much business as they can because that is a sign of activity and, usually, profitability. In the case of insurance companies, because of the write-offs that they were required to do, the case was the opposite; the more business they wrote, the more money they lost in the beginning, and they had to wait until the business first on the books had matured and started to produce some revenue before they could carry on and write more business.

It is an illustration that we might compare with the pipeline companies, for instance, or any other manufacturing concern where the initial investment, while it is very large, is set up on the books as a capital asset and is not written off until the revenue is earned. The practice that has been followed in the insurance companies is that the initial expenses of acquiring a business, such as sales commissions, and so on, have been written off, causing early losses on paper.

I note, also, that the proposals in the bill will give insurance companies broader powers in the field of real estate. That may, or may not, be a good thing. I want to examine a few avenues on that score. They have the power now to invest in real estate, subject to certain limitations. The proposals here would make two or three changes. In the first place, the companies would be enabled to invest jointly with other corporations in other real estate projects. I think that is something that would be acceptable—it would spread the risk a little bit.

Secondly, they would be able to invest in any one parcel an amount of 4 per cent instead of 2 per cent, of their total assets. I would like to comment on that in a little more detail because I am not sure that is not one of the areas with which we should be very careful in the House. Legislation such as this is designed to protect the policyholders more than the shareholders, and if these insurance companies, which have vast amounts of dollars to invest but very low shareholder equity, relatively speaking, are enabled to double the amount they can invest in any particular parcel, then the exposure is being doubled to the shareholders—and that is all right—but also to the policyholders because, with the low equity ratio per shareholder, the policyholders are not far behind.

Already the insurance companies have embarked upon practices which I question, and I hope the committee will look at them when the bill gets to committee. That is, they have adopted the practice of buying land for development, and instead of developing it they lease it on a long-term basis to developers. Then the developer needs a mortgage loan, and normally he goes back to the same mortgage company and borrows on the mortgage on the property from the same insurance company. So, in effect, the insurance company has either total, or very nearly total, ownership of that development although it is subject to a leasehold of, usually, 65 years—sometimes longer, and sometimes shorter. There are two objections to that practice. First of all, any loss of equity in a particular project will reflect back on the equity of the shareholders, and if that is not adequate, the loss goes back to the policyholder. The object of the legislation is to protect the policyholders.

The other objection to which we must be alerted is that the insurance companies, by doing this, become the competitors of the ordinary developers and the tendency then, because there are then additional demands made on the purchase price of land, is to inflate the price of land and, once the project is completed, to deflate the rent. Members of the House may say there is no danger in investing in real estate—it is always going up. I would like to remind them of three cases that have been important enough to come to the attention of the House recently involving taxpayers' dollars. They were instances where the government-owned Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation, because of enormous losses in projects, was forced to foreclose and take back possession of these projects. Undoubtedly there will be a tremendous loss—in one case it has already been realized—to the government and, therefore, to the taxpayers.

Those three instances are, first, the Rochdale loan in Toronto which was sold by CMHC at a great loss; second, the Hamilton Place project in Hamilton, Ontario, on which the government has had to commence foreclosure action and nothing has happened to the development for two years and it stands incomplete with something like $7 million or $8 million of taxpayers money invested and earning nothing; and third, right here in Ottawa the Quai d'Orsay which also is under foreclosure by CMHC. So I think that is a danger which we must look at very carefully.

I want to look quickly at the bill. The defintions do not really require any comment. I do not think the minister mentioned the investment by the insurance companies and securities of governments of countries other than Canada and the provinces. I think that when we get into committee we can find out why countries such as Australia and the United Kingdom, to name a couple, are no longer to be allowed as investment securities by insurance companies.

I think the changes in eligibility of common shares are reasonable. Instead of having a complete dividend report every five years, one of the four preceding years can be missed; in other words, four out of five.

There is another matter which I do not think the minister mentioned but which bears some careful consideration. Clause 9 would require certain companies to appoint a valuation actuary. When we get into the committee I think we will find out about that. I suppose the following clause is consequential. It would permit the auditor of a company to rely upon the opinion of the valuation actuary. I am not sure what the present process is, but I think we will have to be very careful with this, particularly because we have had problems with auditors and Crown corporations relying on outside auditors. Complications like that led to the introduction of Bill C-20, the Auditor General legislation, which is presently before the committee.

With those few reservations we on this side are generally in agreement with the proposals before us. We hope this bill will get to the committee quickly and that the committee will give it due consideration.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, this 60-page bill is obviously one of such a technical nature that the best place for it to be considered is in the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs. We are therefore prepared to vote for the motion to send the bill to that committee for detailed study.

My first look at the bill and my listening to the first words of the minister led me to feel that it was probably a harmless piece of housekeeping, but when he said that Their Honours in the other place found nothing wrong with it, I began to wonder. When the shareholders, the directors and so on, who make up the Committee on Banking, Trade and Commerce in the other place, find nothing wrong with a piece of legislation, the members of the House of Commons who represent the people of this country had better take a good look at it. I trust that will be done.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

MISCELLANEOUS STATUTE LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 1977

MEASURE TO CORRECT ANOMALIES IN REVISED STATUTES OF CANADA, 1970

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (for the Minister of Justice) moved that Bill C-53, to correct certain anomalies, inconsistencies, archaisms, errors and other matters of a non-controversial and uncomplicated nature in the Revised Statutes of Canada 1970 and other Acts subsequent to 1970, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. There have been some discussions about the appropriate way to deal with Bill C-53, and I believe there is general agreement that instead of proceeding in the way set forth in the motion listed on the order paper, we could proceed today in the House to deal with both the second reading and the third reading stages. That, of course, would require a reference of the matter not to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, but instead to the Committee of the Whole House. The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Landers) will be seeking the required consent later in the day to deal with this matter in that way, but I believe it is the disposition of the House to proceed in that fashion.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to dealing with Bill C-53 in that way, and I have no objection to its being called now, but when the order of business is changed, I wish we could be informed. I was told not more than an hour ago that the next item of business would be Bill C-13, then Bill C-6 and then Bill C-53. The government seems to be all haywire.

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, I regret that the order of business for this afternoon has been subject to some revision. Indeed, I should have informed the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that the order of business had been changed. I should point out, however, that it was changed in order to assist some hon. members who wanted to participate in the debate on some of the items of business on the order paper today and who could only be here at some times and not at others. It was done solely so that we could convenience hon. members in participating in debates this afternoon. I regret that I was not able to draw that item to the attention of the hon. member.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Don't do it again.

Mr. Mike Landers (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, unfortunately the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) cannot be here today, so I am going to take his place.

We have before us today a bill which presents itself as a unique and innovative vehicle for law reform. It addresses a problem common to all systems of legislation, namely, the existence of minor inconsistencies, anomalies, and other errors which have developed as a result of the process of passing the 400 or 500 statutes currently in operation at the federal level.

The special quality of this bill is, as I have said above, found in the manner in which it has been developed. Some time ago an announcement was made of this process of non-controversial law reform, and concerned members of the public were invited to submit appropriate suggestions to the Department of Justice. In response to this announcement a number of submissions were received from members of the provincial bars, from members of the judiciary, and from individuals whose positions gave them a working understanding of various acts of parliament. In addition to organizing these suggestions, the Department of Justice also undertook its own study of where this kind of minor change was needed. A draft bill was then prepared, which was given to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs for consideration. As befitting the nature of the bill, the valuable contributions of the members of the committee were made and accepted on an entirely non-partisan basis, and the bill before us today is the result of the committee's unanimous agreement. I might add that the committee also endorsed this special process for efficient enactment.

Before completing my remarks, I should emphasize that although this is the first time such a bill has come before parliament, it is our intention to develop an ongoing process for this kind of reform. To that end in the name of the Minister of Justice I again invite interested parties to forward to the department any other possible amendments of this nature.

In conclusion, I simply ask hon. members on all sides of the House to finalize this commitment to this important technique of law reform, and thereby meet our shared responsibility to provide Canadians with the most accurate legislation we can produce.

As the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Goodale) has mentioned, it is my understanding that there would be unanimous consent to deal with all stages of this bill today. I hope unanimous consent will be granted so that Bill C-53 can be referred to the Committee of the Whole House rather than to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On the last point, Mr. Speaker, I do not know whether a motion can be made that way but if the question were put to the House I want to assure the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Landers) that we have no objection to it. I also want to say, on behalf of the opposition, that the government has our commitment with respect to this kind of ongoing review. It is an essential measure particularly with complicated statutes where from time to time drafting errors have occurred which can cause difficulty. I think it is extremely important that this type of ongoing process, a sort of mini in-House law reform, be fostered where it is possible.

I should like to draw attention to another important aspect of this procedure. A draft bill was presented, the subject matter of which went to a committee of the House and, as the parliamentary secretary has said, it received unanimous agreement from all members of the committee with respect to matters which eventually came forward in the form of Bill C-53. I hope the government will keep that very healthy experience in mind and use the training, inclinations, and interests of all members of the House as an input to policy making. In advance of a bill being brought to the House, where partisan positions are sometimes taken, studies could be made of it by all parties so that the hard positions that are sometimes taken can be dealt with and then parliament can go on to consider the difficulties that arise from the principle of the bill. I think this is a very healthy process, and we agree to the proposal made by the parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we are quite prepared to give second reading to this bill and to have it dealt with in committee of the whole rather than sending it back to the standing committee. I use the word "back" because even before the bill had been introduced in a formal way, a copy of it was sent to the standing committee so that members could go through it clause by clause.

The only comment I want to make is to take exception to a word that both the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Justice (Mr. Landers) and the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) used. Both referred to this as a form of law reform.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): A mini reform.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): I can assure those two hon. members and the House generally that if a bill of this size had any reform in it we would want to look at it much more closely and carefully than is the case today. As I see it, the bill does precisely what its title suggests. It corrects certain anomalies, inconsistencies, errors and so on. I have gone through it rather carefully hoping that I could find something in it that was far out and might give me a chance to hold it up at least for a few minutes, but I cannot find anything. It seems to be a case of simply correcting a number of errors and updating some phrases in a number of places. Certainly to correct things in this way by what we normally know as an omnibus bill is a reasonable and sensible thing to do.

I hate to think what it would do to our imminent recess if we had a separate bill to correct the changes in each of the different acts referred to in Bill C-53. So because it is what it is, simply a case of correcting errors and updating a few phrases, and since this has been looked at in the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs which had the subject matter of the bill before it, we are happy to give the bill second reading and send it all the way through this afternoon.

[Translation]

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Lafontaine-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, I would just like to say a few words to associate myself with the remarks made by the previous speakers and point out the relevance of Bill C-53. I would just like to say a few words on the process that brought the House to consider Bill C-53 today. It is indeed rather important since it will probably be passed quite rapidly.

It must be pointed out that the justice committee held many meetings precisely to consider the clauses, the contents and the substance of Bill C-53 when it was not yet in the form of a bill but rather in the form of a study paper, and that the justice committee through all members and the representatives of all parties carefully made sure that no section, amendment or correction to the anomalies set out amounted to a change in substance or in form. They were only corrections. As I say, that study was carried out carefully, and that is why we have before us today a bill which is not expected to run into any opposition. That is I think an important addition to parliamentary procedures, an addition which is welcomed and which will enable us to update on a regular basis bills which, because of the very complexity of government legislation today, may contain printing errors or other discrepancies. I think it is normal that we should now make provision for a mechanism such as this which will allow us on a regular basis to correct those anomalies and have a set of statutes that will hold up and will not be challenged eventually before the courts on futile grounds. So I too join with my colleagues and I point out that this new procedure now seems to have been ratified by the House today and will in future allow us to have properly drafted and readily understandable legislation.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) (for the Minister of Justice) moves that Bill C-53, to correct certain anomalies, inconsistencies, archaisms, errors and other matters of a non-controversial and uncomplicated nature in the Revised Statutes of Canada 1970 and other acts subsequent to 1970, be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole.

Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Ethier in the chair.

Clauses 2 to 9 inclusive agreed to.

On Clause 10.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Chairman, I do not rise for the purpose of slowing down the process although we are going at lightning speed, but in case anybody reads Hansard and wonders what kinds of changes we are agreeing to in such great haste, Clauses 10 and 12 are good examples.

● (1520)

Clause 10 provides an amendment to the Copyright Act by striking out the words "4th day of June 1921"—I remember that date quite well—and substituting therefor the words "1st day of January, 1924." The explanation is that the date of Royal Assent rather than the date of proclamation got inserted in the act by mistake. What puzzles me is that nobody seems to have discovered this error until now. In any case, it is being corrected.

Clause 12 would make a change in the Diplomatic Immunities (Commonwealth Countries) Act, by changing the word "Ceylon", as it appears now, to the words "Sri Lanka", which is the changed name of that country. This shows that the changes we are agreeing to are to put right errors; they are simply corrections. This is not a matter of massive law reform.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, while we are correcting errors, may I point out an error in clause 12 of the bill as now printed. I suggest that the clause should speak of the United Kingdom rather than the "United Kigdom". I think we might correct that.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 10 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 10 agreed to.

Clause 11 agreed to.

On clause 12.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I move that the word "Kigdom" be deleted from clause 12, line 35 on page 5 of the bill, and the word "Kingdom" be substituted therefor.

Amendment agreed to.

Clause 12, as amended, agreed to.

Clauses 13 to 17 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 18.

Mr. Towers: Mr. Chairman, clause 18 defines a food animal as a, "bovine, swine, horse, sheep, goat—" etc. The amendment would also add whale, bison, domestic rabbit, deer, elk, moose or bird. The change which interests me is the word "bovine". Perhaps there is some reason for including that word. According to the Oxford Dictionary, bovine means of or like an ox, inert and dull. It seems to me that such a definition might have been current at the turn of the century. I wonder why we are reverting to the vocabulary of an earlier period?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): It depends on whose ox is being gored.

Mr. Landers: Mr. Chairman, I can only assume that word was included in order to be all encompassing. I am afraid I cannot answer the question. I am not familiar with the technicalities of the clause, but I will undertake to see that the hon. member gets an all-encompassing answer.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 18 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 18 agreed to.

Clause 19 to 48 inclusive agreed to.

On clause 49.

[Translation]

Mr. Lachance: I want to point out at this stage, Mr. Chairman, because we have come to the last clause, that if it may seem somewhat strange that we should go through 49 clauses in five minutes it is because all those clauses were previously considered in detail by the Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

[English]

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 49 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 49 agreed to.

Schedule 1 agreed to.

Schedule 2 agreed to.

Clause 1 agreed to.

Title agreed to.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall I report the bill?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You forgot the preamble.

Preamble agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): When shall the bill be read the third time?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): By leave, now.

Mr. Roberts (for the Minister of Justice) moved the third reading of the bill.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES ACT

MEASURE TO ESTABLISH IMMUNITIES AND PRIVILEGES

Hon. John Roberts (for the Secretary of State for External Affairs) moved that Bill C-6, respecting Diplomatic and Consular Privileges and Immunities in Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

He said: Mr. Speaker, having first entered the public service 15 years ago as a member of the Department of External Affairs, it gives me nostalgic pleasure to present this bill to the House on behalf of my colleague, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson).

● (1530)

The purpose of the legislation is relatively simple and I think I can explain its essential nature very easily. It gives the effect of statute law to two international conventions—the Convention of Vienna of 1961 and the Convention of Vienna of 1963. The first is a convention with regard to diplomatic relations and the second is a convention with regard to consular relations. The legislation places the existing and customary international law on a statutory basis within Canada. In other words, the provisions which this law places in statute form are already binding on the government as the common law standards of international law. In a sense what we are doing is codifying the existing situation and to some extent elaborating it in greater detail. It will make more specific the existing obligations placed upon the government by virtue of its membership in the international community.

I can assure hon. members that this legislation gives no greater immunity or no more privileges to diplomatic or consular officials than they hold at the present time. It will, however, make it easier for Canada to apply present standards of international law since the material will now be easily available to those who need it in a definitive form. The legislation, then, is not very controversial and I hope hon. members will expedite its passage to committee.

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, just because this is a Friday afternoon and an occasion on which a good deal of business is being transacted does not seem to me a reason why a bill having certain implications should be quickly handled, particularly when the opening statement by the minister is more significant for what it has omitted than for what it has contained.

I wish to spend a few moments discussing the bill. I ask myself: why has it been brought forward at this time? It is true, as the minister has told us, that the bill presents us with nothing new, to the extent that the Vienna Conventions of 1961 and 1963 have been adhered to by Canada as well as by most of the other nations of the world, and that what is now codified in the measure before us does not in any way change the rights or immunities which our diplomats in other countries enjoy or which we ourselves extend to diplomats who come to Canada. The purpose of the bill is to put into statute form certain of the articles in the two Vienna Conventions. I believe we ought to ask ourselves, when the bill goes before the committee, why certain other articles in those treaties have been excluded.

As the minister pointed out, these Conventions reflect the principles of customary international law with respect to diplomatic and consular immunities and privileges. Because the privilege and immunities embodied in the Conventions have the force of international law they also have the force of common law in Canada to the extent the common law incorporates international law. Therefore, while the provisions of the Conventions do not have the force of statute law, a court would probably refer to them for guidance as to what is the customary diplomatic practice. The question which arises, however, is this: if the Vienna Conventions are already incorporated into Canadian law via the common law, why give certain of their articles the force of statute law?

I believe the bill really has its origin in the fact that the government of Quebec brought before the national assembly of that province in 1974 a bill dealing with the privileges and immunities of diplomatic and consular officials in that province, a bill which contained articles quite different from the principles embodied in the Vienna Conventions and one which was, in the opinion of federal government lawyers, outside the competence of the Quebec government. Quebec was duly informed of this and a series of meetings was held on the subject between representatives of the two governments, the last one taking place early this year. The genesis of the bill before us lies, I suggest, in the action which was taken by Quebec.

As it happened, the legislation was not proceeded with following the election of a new government in Quebec which has not yet seen fit to seek legislative enactment of the provisions of the former bill. I believe this move on the part of Quebec caused the federal government to think seriously about this subject and it has apparently decided it would be highly desirable, if not necessary, to embody these diplomatic privileges and immunities in statute law as has been done in other common law countries.

Since the legislation does not represent a departure from previous practice there is no ground for our party objecting to it or delaying it. However, I do believe that certain questions as to the origins of the measure and the reason for bringing it forward at this time should be properly answered, hopefully in this Chamber before the conclusion of second reading or, if not, certainly at the committee stage. The legislation has a desirable consequence in that it states clearly and unequivocally the nature of the diplomatic immunities and privileges which Canada grants, and also the circumstances in which they may be suspended, revoked or reinstated.

The first question which needs to be asked is why certain articles in the Vienna Conventions have been left out. We have chosen to distinguish between those articles which establish rights and obligations between governments and which therefore do not require the force of law for implementation, and those articles which affect the rights of private persons in Canada or afford special privileges and immunities and which therefore do require the force of law for implementation. With this in mind, it is clear why certain articles were selected for inclusion while others were excluded, with the possible exception of Article 26 of the diplomatic convention which promises freedom of movement and travel anywhere in Canada, except for zones entering into which is restricted or regulated for reasons of national security.

This article was excluded from the list of articles to be incorporated into statute law. I think this raises a fundamental question which the minister should explain to us, even on second reading. According to external affairs, persons in Canada already have freedom to move in public places, and as this article neither affects this right nor specifies immunities or privileges, its inclusion was not considered to be necessary.

I think a fuller explanation is required, for members of some diplomatic missions do in fact have their freedom of movement limited. For example, we know that Soviet diplomats as well as Chinese diplomats in our city are restricted to an area within a certain radius of Ottawa. I think we might ask by what means these restrictions are imposed under present circumstances, and which diplomatic missions are so affected. Are these restrictions to be regarded as a permanent feature of diplomatic relations between Canada and these other countries?

In other words, while it is true that Article 26 does not establish a privilege or an immunity, it is equally true that some diplomats do not enjoy normal freedom of movement in Canada. What we are seeking, therefore, is to establish why the principle of freedom of movement should not be included in the new statute.

Of course, Mr. Speaker, restriction of movement of foreign diplomats in Canada is a counter measure imposed by the Canadian government because the movement of Canadian diplomats in certain foreign countries is restricted. In essence, it is a tit for tat arrangement. Certain diplomats of various ranks from a foreign embassy are permitted to go a certain number of miles, which is all worked out on a sort of slide rule basis. I would only say that, as nations are coming closer together in a new kind of world which has grown up since the time the Vienna Conventions were first passed, more attention should be given on a universal basis to increasing all freedom of movement of diplomats in the countries to which they are properly accredited.

In saying that I am thinking, for example, of the restrictions which Canadian diplomats face in China, a country which I visited not so long ago, a reflection of which we find in today's Globe and Mail, in which a scientific team tells us about the effects of the recent earthquake in China which are only now coming to light because foreign diplomats and media personnel were not able to travel to the areas of China which suffered severely from the recent earthquake. Consequently the world at large had not realized the seriousness of the earthquake which struck China. Various measures of aid and assistance were withheld simply for lack of information. When I was in China Canadian authorities pointed out to me that they themselves could do a better job of reflecting the fullness of development inside China were they themselves able to travel more widely.

The same is true of Chinese diplomats who are accredited to Canada. The very idea that special permission is required for ranking members of the Chinese delegation in Ottawa to go out to the west coast or to my own province of Alberta is anathema to me, in the kind of world in which we live. Therefore I think it behooves the Canadian government to make an effort to increase the travel rights of all diplomats in nations to which they are accredited.

I move from considerations of travel to the final point that I want to make in my brief intervention. I refer to abuses of diplomatic privileges. I am going to say a word about Canada but I think I ought to put the matter in proper perspective. We read in a recent issue, March, 1977, The Economist of London that lawlessness is on the increase in Britain, if for no other reason than that the diplomatic community in London increasingly treats yellow lines in the streets as a bit of decoration to brighten the place up. The 32,000 parking tickets which were given to foreign diplomats in London in 1972 had grown last year to 93,000. The article gives a rather impressive list of countries of the world which were ignoring traffic regulations in London.

We can now insert into the picture the Canadian experience. In 1975 some 5,516 foreign diplomats were accused of breaking Canadian laws but, of course, were not charged because they invoked diplomatic immunity. This is a situation which merits attention. The matter has been brought up in the House. Various spokesmen for the Department of External Affairs point out each time it is brought up that foreign diplomats ought to look to themselves to improve their record in the country which has received them, at the same time pointing out that when Canadian diplomats go abroad they are expected to respect the laws of the country which receives them, including the traffic laws. I dare say that any Canadian diplomat who ran up a record of traffic offences in the country which received him would not long be representing Canada. I think there is something out of balance here in the way that we tolerate such excessive violations of our laws under the guise of diplomatic immunity.

I have put on the record the 1975 figures. Let me give the 1976 figures for the city of Ottawa alone, which of course has the most diplomats in Canada. There were 4,788 traffic tickets issued to members of the diplomatic community in 1976. No charges were laid in connection with 13 traffic accidents and 82 traffic violations because diplomatic immunity was involved.

I think the external affairs department ought to be explaining in what way abuses of diplomatic status can be cut down. The country on the list with the highest number of infringements of Canadian law in which diplomatic immunity has been pleaded is Uganda, which topped the list of 1976 violations with 611.

Mr. Prud'homme: That is typical.

Mr. Roche: It certainly is unacceptable, and I think it is also somewhat mysterious in view of the fact that there are only five accredited Ugandan diplomats in our city. This seems to suggest a gross violation of our laws by Ugandans, and I think it is time this country took some action.

In speaking of Uganda in terms of diplomatic immunity and the rights which representatives of countries have in other countries, all of which are encompassed in this bill, and at the same time considering the opening preamble to the Vienna Convention which talks of the promotion of friendly relations among nations, the principles of the United Nations and so on, I cannot conclude my remarks without insisting once more that we should seriously consider whether we should give hospitality to President Idi Amin of Uganda who stands a chance of getting into this country when the Commonwealth Games are held. I believe that the government ought to make very clear that we consider diplomatic niceties go only so far, that in the case of President Amin of Uganda no diplomatic niceties or courtesies will be extended, especially in light of the report of the International Commission of Jurists, a body which Ambassador Beaulne of Canada has said is beyond reproach.

The International Commission of Jurists has reported to the United Nations, in a 130 page report, that 100,000 people have been murdered in the six years of Amin's administration. Therefore I think it is time for Canada to make very clear the limits of our tolerance.

I end with a quotation from the London Times concerning the report of the International Commission of Jurists. I refer to a quote from the Archbishop of Uganda who was murdered a few weeks ago in that country:

> From the Archbishop to his own wife, President Amin knows no mercy. He kills, causes to be killed, presides over a growing apparatus for killing . . .

● (1550)

> The Organization of African Unity ignores the matter . . . The African states protect Amin from criticism in the United Nations. The United Nations Human Rights Commission is quite active in respect of South Africa, Chile and some other countries which its membership agree are inhumanely oppressive regimes. For the Human Rights Commission to live up to its title for a strong resolution, white men have to torment and debase black men or right wing secret police have to maltreat liberals or leftists. No other abrogation of human rights seems to produce any protest. In short, the Human Rights Commission has little or nothing to do with rights, justice or human conscience. It is, or has become, a political and propaganda body. It makes a mockery of human rights, as solemnly written into international conventions.

I conclude my comments on Bill C-6, bearing in mind that I think it is proper to raise a question as to the origin of the bill, to consider the travel restrictions, to talk about the abuses, and to focus once more on the special problem that Uganda presents to the diplomatic community today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, the main purpose of this bill is made clear in the fact that it will repeal the Diplomatic Immunities (Commonwealth Countries) Act and replace it by the Diplomatic and Consular Privileges and Immunities Act. In other words, it proposes to broaden things to deal not only with diplomats but with consular representatives, and that applies both ways. There is also the question of giving a certain status to the two Vienna Conventions. This is a step we should be taking.

The bill, with its schedules, is a complicated one which should be studied carefully in the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. The smart thing to do this afternoon is to send the bill to that committee. I am sure the points raised by the last speaker, particularly with respect to the abuse of immunities, will be dealt with in that committee. The members, generally, will go into this bill and all its provisions very carefully. We are happy to see the bill get second reading and be sent to committee this afternoon.

[Translation]

Mr. Marcel Prud'homme (Saint-Denis): Mr. Speaker, I intended to take part in this debate but we are doing so well with the business of the House today that this bill, which should probably have been taken up next week, is now being referred to our Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence. I shall chair that Committee. To speed up the business of the House, I would therefore prefer to keep my remarks for the time when we study bills in that committee.

That is why I choose to bring an end to my remarks without further delay.

[English]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, in view of the hour, and in view of the good progress we have been able to make in the House this afternoon, rather than beginning the other item of business which we had noted for this afternoon, the Historic Sites and Monuments Act, it might be wise to call it four o'clock and to proceed with private members' business at this time, if the House is in agreement.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we are prepared to agree to calling it four o'clock right away. But before we do so, I wonder if I could raise a point of order with the parliamentary secretary on the question of Monday's business. If he hears me refer to something I have referred to 40 times, I ask him not to laugh at it. I am making the point very seriously. Monday is a long day. We will sit from eleven to one, two to six, and eight to 10.30 p.m. The amount of government business slated for that day is so slim that we could well finish it in the morning session. All we have slated is Bill C-13, and the parliamentary secretary has mentioned Bills C-36 and C-40 to me. Therefore I ask the parliamentary secretary to make the strongest representations he can to his government House leader, and I ask the ministers present to do so as well, that Bill C-30 be brought forward for debate on Monday. That is the bill which has to do with Heritage Day and with the name of July 1.

The government is scraping the barrel because most of the legislation we have to deal with before the summer is still out in committees. Let's not find ourselves adjourning on Monday at one o'clock with nothing to do for the rest of the day, when it would be possible to deal with Bill C-30. I do not expect the parliamentary secretary to say "yes" to me because his authority is too limited. But I ask him and the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts), who is also present, to make the strongest possible representations in order that that legislation will be brought on this Monday.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andre: Mr. Speaker, in view of the representations made by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), and in order that the parliamentary secretary and the government House leader have an accurate picture of the situation, I would not consider it wise to assume that the advice given to him would necessarily expedite the efficient conduct of business in the House.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Let's find out.

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) has noted, we do have Bill C-13 remaining from today's work, the bill dealing with historic sites. It would be our intention to proceed with that item as the first item of business on Monday. As to the order of business later in the day, there have been some discussions with respect to two transportation items, Bills C-36 and C-40, although no conclusions have been arrived at with respect to those two items. However, it might be useful if hon. members could direct their attention to them in case they do come before the House on Monday or later next week.

As far as the specific representation with respect to Bill C-30 is concerned, the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts) is present, and I am sure he and I will convey those representations to the government House leader, as well as the reservation or the caveat which was filed by the hon. member for Calgary Centre (Mr. Andre).

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It being four o'clock p.m., this House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills, and private bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Notice of motion No. 16, in the name of the hon. member for Scarborough West (Mr. Martin). Shall the motion stand, at the request of the government?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Notice of motion No. 17, in the name of the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander). Shall the motion stand, at the request of the government?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

SUGGESTED NATIONAL CAMPAIGN TO PROMOTE HIGHWAY SAFETY

Mr. Sean O'Sullivan (Hamilton-Wentworth) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should initiate, in co-operation with provincial governments and appropriate organizations, a national campaign to promote driving safety throughout Canada in the interest of preservation of human life and courtesy among the driving public.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this week all hon. members of this House welcomed to this Chamber the six victors in the recent federal by-elections. Naturally not all of us were as pleased as they themselves or their respective parties must have been at those victories. Nevertheless, we all congratulate them, welcome them, and wish them well in their parliamentary careers.

Four of those members are new to this House and they will experience the unique feeling, or set of feelings, that only those who sit in this Chamber can possibly know. To sit in the House of Commons of Canada, knowing the confidence placed in you by your respective constituents, knowing of their high hopes and aspirations for our country, is to feel a very special bond with each and every Canadian citizen, and a heartfelt obligation to our wonderful country.

● (1600)

Every time that an hon. member rises to speak in this House, he is mindful of the tremendous privilege which has been given to him. I am certainly cognizant of that privilege every time I sit in this Chamber, especially when I have an opportunity to place before the House some thoughts of special concern to the people of Hamilton-Wentworth and, hopefully, to the people of Canada.

Therefore I appreciate the time and indulgence of the House in being here today and speaking very briefly in support of the motion which I have chosen as my one private member's motion of this session. Perhaps a word of background is in order.

During the last parliament I placed the very same motion before the consideration of this House, on April 29, 1974. Its fate was the one which seems to be common practice in this House, although I am happy to say it is a practice that seems to be growing less frequent, that is, the motion was debated until the allotted time had expired, and therefore no action was taken on the part of the government by virtue of a direction from this House, such as passage of the motion would have given.

During the debate, however, my friend, the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), spoke very briefly and said at that time, and I quote:

Regardless of what happens to the present motion raised in today's private members' hour, the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth has done a service by raising the issue. I join with him in calling for doubled and redoubled effort in all ways that can cut down the loss of life on our highways. I say to the hon. member that he has done well to raise this issue. I call on him to stick with it.

Those words of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre meant a great deal to me, coming as they did from a gentleman who is recognized as one of the leading figures in this House. Obviously he and I have had our political disagreements, and continue to hold some very fundamental differences of opinion both in matters pertaining to political philosophy, current policies, and perhaps approaches to political life. But I have a respect for the hon. member which I believe to be shared in all parts of this House, and his comments to me during that last parliament, my first term in office, were a source of great encouragement and were very deeply appreciated. In this instance I am very happy indeed to take his advice. Moreover, the situation facing Canadians today in the matter of highway safety, driving safety generally, and courtesy on the roads still demands and commands the attention of the elected representatives of the Canadian people.

The motion is in many ways self-explanatory and does not require a great deal of elaboration beyond what it states quite simply. I call upon the federal government to initiate immediately, in co-operation with the provincial governments and appropriate organizations, a national campaign to promote driving safety throughout Canada in the interests of preservation of human life and courtesy among the driving public.

This is not to suggest that I should like to impose upon provincial governments a policy formulated here in Ottawa in an area which is clearly under the jurisdiction of those governments. The intent of this motion is, instead, to bring together the expertise which the provinces and the various safety-minded organizations in Canada have gathered through their own studies and research and driving safety campaigns. Quite simply, I want us to think as a nation in promoting driving safety, in combating the carnage on our highways. I believe that the Canadian people should have placed at their disposal the evidence and experience gained across the country so that we might benefit as a nation. I should just like to cite a couple of examples.

In 1975 the Ontario ministry of transportation and communications published "The Human Collision", which noted in part that during 1973 there were nearly 100,000 people injured and 2,000 killed in traffic accidents in Ontario. Serious accidents are especially frequent among younger people. For people under the age of 35, traffic accidents are responsible for more deaths than any disease and for more deaths than all other accidents combined. The booklet containing this information was prepared by the research and development division of the provincial ministry of transportation. The very existence of this division endorses my motion. It is but one agency studying traffic safety problems in one province. No doubt its aims and functions are duplicated over and over again. It is time to bring all that expertise together and, moreover, to present the details of the combined knowledge and research to the Canadian people.

Similarly, in 1974 the then minister of health and social development for Alberta established a task force on highway accidents and suicides. The Honourable Neil Crawford, who continues to have a distinguished career in provincial politics, belongs to a special fraternity of Canadians who have participated actively in the public life of Canada at various levels, having first gained their training in close association with one of the acknowledged masters of Canadian political life. I refer to those whose careers have included service as assistants on Parliament Hill to the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). That special fraternity includes people as distinguished as Tom Van Dusen, Greg Guthrie, Lee Richardson, and most recently, Keith Martin, to name just a few of the prominent members of that group.

The document, or report, in 1974 to which I referred, was a concise and well-written document. There were a couple of points in it I thought noteworthy to the debate before us. The committee reported that they had assembled a collection of the world literature in their areas of interest and had accumulated a very large number of reference articles in both fields. I think it significant that this committee studying highway accidents should refer to world literature. It is a universal problem, and it seems to me that the important goal of protecting and saving human lives should encourage us to look beyond our limited borders, be they provincial or even national, to take full advantage of the experience of others.

This same interim report referred to a national roadside survey "which had been carried out in many Canadian provinces and which might serve as an opportunity for providing uniform information across the country". And the committee went on to say:

> We feel that anything we could do to co-operate with the provinces and the Ministry of Transport to obtain information about situations on the highway would be worth while.

That we lack effective co-ordination of traffic procedures is clear. One need only look at the prevailing speed limits and statutes regulating seat belt legislation throughout the provinces as easy examples. The speeds vary, as do regulations pertaining to the wearing of seat belts. I do not wish to have this House, as I said earlier, impose its will upon provinces in an area under provincial jurisdiction, but we all share this common aim and goal of protecting the well-being and safety of Canadians. It falls to the federal government to take the initiative, to bring the provinces together, and to ensure that all Canadians benefit from the experience of individual provinces as well as from the expertise of safety minded organizations.

It would be improper on my part to suggest that no action has been taken in this area. In the same year that I first brought this motion to the attention of the House, the first meeting was held here in Ottawa of the officials participating in the federal-provincial co-operative road safety program. Its goal was to reduce the national road fatality rate by 15 per cent over five years. Just this past week a press release from Transport Canada arrived on my desk and I was delighted to note that in the period 1973 to 1976, a 30 per cent decrease in the national road fatality rate was reported at the most recent meeting of these same federal and provincial road safety officials. It is especially encouraging to quote some of the remarks contained in that press release. For example it states:

> The number of highway fatalities in Canada dropped from 6,703 in 1973, an all time high, to 5,262 in 1976. This represents a decrease in the road fatality rate from 6.7 fatalities per million vehicle miles to 4.7, a 30 per cent reduction.
> This downward trend in the number of fatalities, the first ever recorded in Canada's motoring history, occurred when the number of vehicles and the amount of travel on Canadian highways was increasing.
> The federal and provincial representatives recognized that the decrease has likely been influenced by changes in economic and social conditions in recent years, as well as by various federal and provincial measures under the co-operative program.

Nothing could have pleased me more than to read that information from Transport Canada, and I wish to take this opportunity to express, I am confident, on behalf of all members of this House, and all drivers in Canada, deep-felt appreciation to those responsible for bringing about this federal-provincial co-operative road safety program, and for the co-operation obviously extended in its tremendous success. It has brought us closer to our goal, but we are still 5,206 human lives away from our ultimate goal and aim, and many tens of thousands of human injuries away.

Looking ahead, therefore, I want the House, through my motion, to commend and endorse this program so strongly that it will continue, and will be given the fullest possible support by this government and by all provincial governments and safety-minded agencies so that the co-operative program will continue in the coming years, as has been promised.

What sort of national campaign do I want to see brought about? I shall leave the details to those far better versed than I in this special area. But I think that any campaign of promoting driving courtesy, which ultimately results in greater safety on the roads, must, to be successful, be a joint venture that has the support of Canadian governments at all levels, and one that is realistic in its approach to the problem.

We are all aware that the dangers on the road are especially severe in so far as young people are concerned, and statistics indicate that young male drivers are the most frequent victims. Any national campaign to promote driving safety would be off to a good start if it heeded the advice of Mr. J. Lorne McDougall, a former professor and member of the city council of Kingston, who wrote an article published in the Calgary Herald on March 3, 1977. He contrasted the traditional approach of promoting driving safety with the one which he believes, and I share his view, would have much greater success. I quote Mr. McDougall:

> The well-intentioned old want to save young men from themselves. If they are to be successful, they must learn to invite co-operation, and win it, or they will get nowhere.
> Maybe it would help if they would start by trying to state the positive values they wish the young to adopt. They might even learn something about themselves if they would do so.
>
> Forget the prohibitions; they get nowhere. Try being positive.
> See if you can promote respect for life (including one's own), courtesy, and consideration for the right of others.
> From there it is a small step to asking the young to grow in self-respect, and once that point is made, many good things may follow.
> Speak with the voice of force and compulsion and you will speak to deaf ears.
> Invite a discussion of the moral problem and young men may hear you.

That is wise advice form Mr. McDougall which I commend to all officials should they decide to accept the challenge that I hope this House will endorse, of bringing about a great national campaign, supported by governments at all levels, to promote driving safety and courtesy.

It is only natural, Mr. Speaker, that I would be grateful if this House should decide to endorse my motion.

I have already taken note of, and expressed commendation for, the actions already taken by both federal and provincial officials in this field. The adoption of my resolution today would, in my opinion, serve the useful purpose of encouraging those officials to continue and expand their efforts.

The purpose of this motion is quite simple. We, as members of parliament, are sent here by the Canadian people to preserve their freedoms and protect their rights. The most basic right is that of life itself. That is why I introduced this motion in the last parliament and have now brought it forward again at this time. Much has been done. But, as the families of traffic victims will attest, there is much that remains for all of us to do. The protection of this very basic right, the right to life, is surely one of the greatest concerns and one of the highest causes to which a member of parliament can devote whatever time he or she may be privileged to serve in this House.

Many hon. members have, in their own way, advanced and defended this great right, this basic right, of all the Canadian people. I think, for example, that by her courageous action the hon. member for York South (Mrs. Appolloni) has taken great political risks, especially in standing up to very powerful figures within her own party, in her own very dedicated efforts to advance the preservation and protection of human life at all its stages. I cite her as an example of outstanding dedication and moral courage to those new members to whom I referred earlier, and who have joined us in this Chamber in this House of Commons this past week.

As one who came to parliament in 1972, with the same high hopes and the same aspirations as, no doubt, the new members bring, I want to pass along this brief word of advice. Nothing could honour their careers in this place more that to take an active role, whenever the opportunity arises, in advancing the cause of the most basic right and freedom of every Canadian, the right to life.

Perhaps all of us who sit in this House, regardless of the seniority or official opposition given to us, might reflect upon this essential duty of every member of parliament. In thinking about it, in thinking about our duties and reflecting upon our role as the elected representatives of the people of Canada, I recalled a letter which I received in 1966 when I was 14 years old, a student in Hamilton, and very much interested in policital life. I had already been a member of the Progressive Conservative party for two years, having since the age of 12 taken an active part in politics at various levels. I am mindful of the very special opportunities which have been given to me and am deeply grateful to that party and to the people who have made all of them possible. I think of the unique experience which has been mine, such as twice being elected from Hamilton-Wentworth under the leadership of the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield).

I think, as well, that now I am serving in this House, at a time probably more exciting and important than any time in our history, with the possible exception of Confederation, under the leadership of the dedicated Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark), with whom I entered parliament in 1972, and whose compassion, concern, and qualities of leadership are known to all in this House. Moreover, I reflect upon the wonderful experience which was mine prior to election to parliament in serving as executive assistant to the right hon. member for Prince Albert, the person who brought me into political life.

The words which he spoke in this House, and which were contained in his letter to me dated April 4, 1976, reflect an attitude of parliament that I believe would be shared by both party leaders whom I have just mentioned, and with whom I share an esteem for the Dean of this House. Although it is not my practice to make public use of personal correspondence, I believe that he would not mind being quoted in that letter which reads in part as follows:

> I was interested in your comment on the recent events in parliament, and I am sure that you will be in full agreement with the words I used during the debate to which you refer:
> "Mr. Speaker, this institution must not fail. Without it there is no freedom. We are here today not only as the custodians of the present and inheritors of the past but, Mr. Speaker, we are as well the hope of this institution's future. Let us get to work on the many issues facing Canada today."

● (1620)

It is signed, of course, by the right hon. member for Prince Albert. I fully agree with those comments. I hope all hon. members will take them to heart as we pause to recall what a tremendous honour and privilege it is to serve the Canadian people in this House of Commons, and especially to work with people such as the right hon. member.

I am grateful to the House for the time given to me to present this motion, and at this time I too say in a non-partisan spirit, starting with this motion of vital importance concerning human life, this institution must not fail. Let us get to work on the many issues facing Canada today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Ross Milne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. O'Sullivan) for proposing the motion we are dealing with today, and particularly for the very excellent speech he just gave to the House. Every time he speaks I enjoy listening to him. Whether I agree with him or not, I appreciate the sincerity with which he delivers his speeches, and also his ability. I think he makes a real contribution to the Parliament of Canada.

The hon. member has proposed this motion previously, and I agree with him that those who succeed with points of view in this House are those who raise them often and speak to them strongly. Perhaps by doing that the hon. member will achieve his objective.

Surely all hon. members share the concern of the hon. member. In 1973 traffic fatalities reached an all-time high of well over 6,700 people, which is very high when it is considered as a percentage of the Canadian population. Early in 1974 a joint statement released by the federal and provincial ministers responsible for road safety and motor vehicle administration indicated the intention of those ministers to increase safety efforts and to establish a five-year program to improve the road safety situation.

A target reduction of 15 per cent in the traffic fatality rate by 1979 was set. In view of the rapidly increasing number of cars on the road those ministers were very optimistic to think that they could achieve such a goal, but I am pleased to report, as did the previous speaker, that not only has that goal been met, but it has actually been exceeded. In a statement which was issued recently by Transport Canada—I believe last week following the most recent series of meetings of senior officials from the 11 governments—it was noted that fatalities had fallen from 5,262 to a rate of 4.7 fatalities per 100 million vehicle miles driven. This represents a decrease in the fatality rate of 30 per cent since 1973. I do not think any one person or group can take most of the credit; that credit should be shared amongst the many people who have been concerned about this problem and who have done something about it.

Many factors have been involved, not the least of which, I suggest, was the emergence of the energy situation. Perhaps people are now driving fewer miles per person than they were previously, and hopefully they are driving the miles they do drive at a lower rate of speed in an effort not only to reduce the number of deaths on our highways but also to achieve greater energy efficiency from their cars.

The same statement identified a number of measures which have contributed to this decrease, in addition to those I mentioned. Improved seat belts and increased public awareness of the benefits of them have contributed to the decrease. Two provinces have passed legislation requiring the use of seat belts. I think that has been an important factor. Certainly in the late model cars I have driven the seat belts are much more comfortable and more convenient than those used in the past. In my own case, I use them much more than I did previously because seat belts in the past were neither convenient nor particularly comfortable.

I have heard comments from a number of women suggesting that the seat belts in older cars are very uncomfortable for them to use. I think the improvement in the design has meant that many more travelling Canadians now use seat belts. That has obviously contributed to the better road safety record we now enjoy.

We now have stiffer penalties in the Criminal Code for impaired driving. Some of those penalties have been debated in this House during the life of this parliament. Speed limits have been reduced in several provinces. That has been beneficial, but certainly not to the degree it could be. The lowering of the speed limits coincided with concern about energy supplies, yet when one travels on our highways the fact that the speed limits have been reduced is not terribly apparent.

That is not the impression one gets when travelling in the United States. Where speed limits are 55 miles an hour in the United States, that is the rate of speed of most of the traffic. I suggest that on many of the highways in Canada the majority of drivers exceed the speed limit, and a great deal of highway safety could be achieved by an even more rigorous policing of our reduced speed limits.

There has been a systematic removal of road hazards and continued improvement in highway design. I was driving on quite an old highway last week, and I thought about how safe our newer highways are in comparison. That is perhaps one of the things we often overlook. The highways in many parts of Canada have wide shoulders and fairly well designed and banked turns. There are adequate signs to indicate hazards and so on, and perhaps all those things have been very effective as well. Many organizations have initiated programs which weigh on the consciences of people, and that has been effective. I have been impressed by television advertising, particularly that of the Ministry of Transport, in relation to impaired driving. Those advertisements are perhaps the most effective I have seen with regard to almost anything, and perhaps that message is slowly getting across.

As a result of the efforts of the Canadian Safety Council, the automobile industry and the provinces, there has been a good deal of promotional material on the safer use of motor vehicles and also on the training of people who use them. Being an engineer, I am interested in design, and while many people complain that we do not build cars the way we used to, perhaps from a safety point of view it is a good thing we do not because new cars today are certainly much safer than those which were built 10, 12 or 15 years ago. I think that public concern that automobiles are built safely is demonstrated by the number of recalls which take place. It takes very little concern about the safety of motor products to get manufacturers to go to considerable expense and trouble to recall vehicles with inadequacies. I think that is a very commendable thing.

I wanted to participate briefly in this debate to indicate that a good deal has been accomplished but, as the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth indicated, it is only a start. I congratulate him on his statement. We are still exceeding our goal by some 5,000 deaths and we want to strive for a totally fatality-free record of driving in Canada. I hope that all levels of government, voluntary organizations, and all the people concerned, will make a co-ordinated effort to achieve this worth-while goal.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to commend the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. O'Sullivan) for introducing this motion again this session. I thank him most warmly for the kind references he made to me this afternoon, but I thank him in particular for the way in which he has honoured me by accepting my advice. I say to him again, "Stick with it".

I might say a further word of a personal nature to the hon. member and tell him that in the early years of my experience in this House I put forward a few causes that meant a great deal to me, and I stuck with them. I have been sitting here thinking about them and I believe I can say that something has been done about all of them—maybe not as much as I would have liked, but something has been done even if in some cases it took 25 or 30 years. I hope the hon. member will not have to wait that long to see real progress in the matter of increased highway safety.

I do not see any justification for the motion being talked out this afternoon. It is not even a motion that calls for committee time to be taken on it; it is simply a motion that would express an opinion by this House of Commons, an opinion which it would be hoped the government would note. I hope, even if instructions are around that this motion is to be talked out, that the members of the Friday afternoon club who are here—and it is always a pleasure to be with them—will decide to let this motion through.

This is an extremely important issue. It is a tragedy of the worst sort that with all the improvements we have made in transportation, with the technology that we have developed, there is such wholesale slaughter of human beings in our automobiles. I believe this requires the kind of permanent and constant attention that has been suggested by the hon. member who presented this motion which has been supported by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Communications (Mr. Milne) who has just spoken.

Because I would like to see the motion get through I must avoid taking any more time. I shall therefore take my seat momentarily, but I should like to say to the hon. member that in discussing this issue of highway accidents I hope he will not shy away from the question of alcohol. I do not have the statistics in front of me, but we all know that a large percentage of highway deaths stem from the use of alcohol. It is fine to have laws that provide penalties for impaired driving and so on, but I think we must go further than that and support the kind of campaign that the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) sometimes engages in which would call for a changed attitude toward the drinking of alcoholic beverages.

We sometimes think of north American society as a society that has had a love affair with the automobile, but alcohol seems to be in there as well and the two do not mix.

I urge the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth in presenting his case from year to year to include alcohol with the other matters that should be raised. I congratulate him again. I am glad he is sticking with it, and I plead with him to continue to do so until he wins the battle.

Mr. Wm. Andres (Lincoln): Mr. Speaker, in rising to respond to the motion proposed by the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. O'Sullivan) I want to add my commendation for his persistence. As the member for the neighbouring riding I am well aware of his persistence and hard work.

I would stress the seriousness of the road safety problem, if I may, by making a comparison to the costs of World War II not only in dollars but in terms of human lives and suffering. During six years of war, total Canadian military appropriations were $11.6 billion dollars, or an average of $1.93 billion per year. In 1975 the costs to our country in terms of medical bills, car repairs, and loss of productivity as a result of traffic accidents was estimated to be 2 per cent of the Gross National Product, or $2.5 billion. There were 17,682 Canadian battle deaths or persons who died of battle injuries over the six-year period of the war, an average of 2,950 fatalities per year. In comparison there have been 36,113 traffic fatalities in the last six years, or an average of 6,000 per year. These appallingly gross figures attest to the need for a co-ordinated effort by all levels of government in implementing a multi-disciplinary countermeasures program to combat the road safety problem.

Recent accident investigations estimate that 80 per cent to 90 per cent of traffic accidents are a result of human error. It is my opinion, and I am sure this opinion is shared by others, and it was alluded to by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles), that a major source of that error is alcohol, with 40 per cent of drivers killed being found impaired, and 53 per cent of adult pedestrians killed being found impaired, as well. In view of these figures, Mr. Speaker, I will confine my remarks to the Canadian government's research activities and countermeasures programs relating to the problem of impaired driving and the role of alcohol in traffic accidents.

In 1974 Transport Canada conducted a national roadside survey, using an internationally approved methodology, in order to assess the nature and extent of drinking and driving habits in Canada. During a 12-week period 9,700 drivers were surveyed at over 500 sites across Canada between the hours of 10 p.m. and 3 a.m. on Wednesday, Thursday, and Saturday nights. Information on drinking habits, trip origin and destination, as well as demographic information, was collected. In addition, each driver was asked to provide a sample of breath which was later analyzed for blood alcohol content.

Of the drivers surveyed 20.4 per cent had been drinking prior to driving, 11.2 per cent were probably impaired, and 5.4 per cent had blood alcohol concentration at or above the statutory limit of 80 mg per cent. The results of this survey indicate that the chance of meeting a drinking driver more than doubles between the two hours prior to midnight and the 1 a.m. to 3 a.m. time period. Drinking and driving appears to be almost as serious on weekdays as on week ends. The data also reveals that driving after drinking is most prevalent among males, among the middle-aged, among the unemployed, and among the separated and divorced drivers.

I point out that a survey of this nature is important, in that it provides an excellent data base against which comparisons of fatality data for the same population can be made; it also provides us with considerable knowledge about the Canadian public's drinking and driving behavior. Public education campaigns and/or changes in impaired driving legislation can thus be evaluated for effectiveness if we have clearly defined the extent and nature of the problem prior to our particular counter measures program.

As an example of the first use, a non-governmental traffic safety conscious agency was able to compare 1973 driver fatality data for five provinces with the government's national roadside survey exposure data in a collaborative effort, to determine if impaired drivers in certain age groups are over represented in driver fatalities. As a result of this comparison we now know that impaired drivers 16 to 17 years old face a terrible risk on the roads in that they are 165 times as likely to die in an automobile accident as the average non-impaired driver. Youths 18 to 19 years old are 70 times as likely to become fatality statistics when driving impaired. Other persons driving with a relatively high risk when impaired are the 50 year olds and above. They are 39 times as likely to die in a traffic accident when driving impaired, compared to the average non-impaired driver.

The age group with the lowest risk of fatality appears to be the 30 to 34 year olds, but even impaired drivers within this age category are 17 times as likely to be fatally injured in a road accident. Suffice it to say that drivers of all ages are at considerably greater risk of being killed when driving impaired than when driving sober.

One area in which the Canadian government has concerned itself with changing people's attitudes and behavior with respect to drinking and driving is in strict impaired driving legislation. I am pleased to report that further information gathered on the effect of the 1969 breathalizer legislation indicates a drop in traffic fatalities immediately subsequent to its passage. Recently, however, traffic fatality figures have risen, especially for very young drivers. This increase was originally attributed to the lowering of the age of majority between 1970 and 1972 in the various provinces. Recent evidence from a study conducted by the Traffic Injury Research Foundation suggests that the lowering of the drinking age had no substantial impact on this increase in young driver deaths in the provinces studied. Rather the authors more properly attributed the increase to the "rebound" effects of the ".08" legislation in Canada; that is, the impaired driving legislation of 1969 is believed to be less effective now in deterring impaired driving than it was just subsequent to passage.

With this in mind, in January, 1976, when the provisions of Bill C-71 were agreed upon in this House, amendments were made to the legislation which we feel will aid police officers in detecting impaired drivers on the road and result in more fines and convictions for the various Criminal Code offences. Specifically provision was made in the code for roadside breath testing involving the use of a portable device capable of detecting the presence of alcohol on the breath of an apprehended driver. Peace officers can now stop drivers whom they suspect may have been drinking. Previously, law enforcers were restricted by the law to pulling over only those drivers suspected of impairment. That you may argue, is a subtle distinction, but this "reasonable cause" provision should enable peace officers to detect more easily those drivers potentially dangerous to themselves and others, regardless of whether their driving behavior is erratic.

Since before these changes were made a blood alcohol concentration of impaired drivers on average was 170 mg. per cent, or more than twice the statutory limit, the old legislation was regarded as inadequate for the detection of those drivers at or just above the 80 mg. per cent limit. Not only should the new legislation increase the likelihood of detection, but fines and jail terms have been increased as well which should act as further deterrents. It is up to respective provincial governments to proclaim these laws in force, and up to both provincial and municipal authorities to ensure enforcement of the new legislation.

In order to increase the Canadian public's awareness of these legislative changes the Department of Transport has concerned itself with educating Canadians through public information campaigns designed to inform the public of the seriousness of the alcohol and road safety problem. To this end an information package has been developed, consisting of television, radio and newspaper advertisements, an audiovisual slide presentation, a leaflet which contains the major points outlined in the audio-visual presentation, and an information booklet on alcohol and drinking drivers. This information package was made available in February, 1977, to various traffic safety conscious groups across Canada, to be used in conjunction with on-going community programs.

As hon. members can see, we have made changes, have made representations, and have met with success. We are still trying to reduce the figures the hon. member mentioned to lower levels, preferably to zero. I emphasize again the seriousness of the drinking driver problem. Though I represent Canada's grape and wine country, I insist that alcohol and driving do not go together.

Mr. C. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, first, I commend the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. O'Sullivan) for introducing this motion, and the hon. member opposite me—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): The member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): I will get it right, especially if I am here as long as the hon. member has been here. I commend the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I have found the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth to be a most honest, forthright, and dedicated young man, dedicated to proper principles with which this House ought to be associated. He has shown an honest desire to serve the people of his riding and the people of Canada to the best of his ability.

I am glad we are debating this motion. I think we can serve the ends of the motion by discussing its subject matter on the floor of the House of Commons. We have only one hour available for the discussion. I wish a day were available for the discussion of these vital aspects of highway safety. A great deal hinges on effective highway safety measures.

Hon. members have mentioned areas in which improvement has taken place. The hon. member for Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Milne) told the House of improvements which have been made in road building, following discussions with provinces and manufacturers. The hon. member who just resumed his seat spoke of the serious problem of the drinking driver, of young, middle aged and older drivers, and showed how vulnerable are young drinking drivers.

To those hon. members present in this House during this late hour on a Friday afternoon, I wish to speak as a parent and concerned individual who has been deeply associated for many years with some of the questions we are discussing. Before I was elected to this House I had pursued a somewhat varied career, as news editor of a television station, and as a peace officer in Ontario. I can tell you that if there is one thing a police officer hates to investigate it is an accident involving young people. When I say this I note the presence of young people in our galleries. We must involve mothers and fathers and young people in our discussion, for we are discussing a most serious subject, one which can affect lives.

As the hon. member who just resumed his seat said, drinking and driving do not mix. I say to our parents and older people, and to your young people, if they fail to use their seat belts when driving in automobiles they can endanger their own lives. Young and new drivers must be properly educated to the hazards of the road. Although nobody has mentioned it today, one of the important steps taken in the last few years for increasing driver awareness of road hazards is the introduction of school driving courses. Most young drivers in Ontario now find themselves subjected to such courses.

In investigating many of the accidents it was my misfortune to investigate from time to time, I found very often that they involved a young person who had made one mistake. It is that one mistake which we must eliminate. It is that one moment of carelessness while at the wheel of a car. It is that one moment while enjoying good friends and good times, when they fail to realize that that "one last drink"may be just the one last drink that is needed to get them and their friends, and other people they may never have met before, into a situation where death and destruction can result in the flicker of an eyelash.

I am not sure that if we were to complete our discussion and finish our debate on this important subject this afternoon we would really be doing the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth the best of favours. I hope, as the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre has said, that his persistence in introducing this subject for discussion is rewarded. It may come up only once a year, but it is important that all members use these few moments in which to put forward their honest views to show those who are in the press gallery, and others who are with us late on a Friday afternoon, that we are concerned about this important matter.

There has been increased consultation, as the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth mentioned, through the federal-provincial road safety co-operatives. This will be continued. Compulsory use of safety belts has been introduced in the last two years and this has significantly reduced the number of highway fatalities in those provinces where the use of seat belts has become mandatory. Many departments integrate their thinking on the question of safety, including the Ministry of Health, the Ministry of Transport, the Department of the Solicitor General, and the Department of Justice. Individual and group efforts along these lines must continue so as to place before the people the importance of the motion which has been presented to us today.

I believe we must also look to more and better public transit as an element which will relieve congestion on our highways in and around the large cities. It is during the rush-hour that many of the more serious accidents take place. Recently it was my pleasure to visit Germany. Their most serious accidents occur on well-constructed four-lane highways when a heavy congestion of traffic is moving at relatively high speeds. Our own traffic acts provide for legal speeds of 55 miles per hour. In Germany the speed of traffic is almost unlimited on some of the super highways. I believe the provinces have done a considerable service to the driving public and Canadians in general by reducing the permitted speed to the 55 mph mark in most cases.

The recent introduction by the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) of the mandatory breathalyzer concept and the introduction of a system of spot-checks in conjunction with the provincial solicitors general are important steps forward which will give the police forces throughout this country a handle on a very dangerous situation caused by the actions of impaired drivers who would normally go unnoticed and who could not legally be subjected to that type of test.

There are many other things I would like to have said, Mr. Speaker, but I know other members wish to contribute to the debate. I thank the hon. member for putting forward this motion. It is by this type of debate and publicity that the House can best serve the needs and aspirations of the public in promoting safe driving.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Question!

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, in the very short time remaining I should like to add my thanks to the hon. member for Hamilton-Wentworth (Mr. O'Sullivan) for placing once again before the House a motion designed to bring our attention to bear on the subject of road or traffic safety. Few of us have not experienced the tragic loss of a friend or someone we knew through traffic accidents. It is one of the most remarkable and tragic aspects of our civilization that though we have managed to eliminate many of the traditional causes of ill health and death, particularly through infection, we have more than replaced them with self-inflicted evils like road and traffic accidents. This is certainly a situation government should not have to put up with and spend a great deal of the country's resources on. At the present time, it is one the federal government is trying to do a great deal about particularly through programs like the new perspective program and the traffic programs which have been mentioned today, in conjunction with the provinces.

We have heard from the previous speakers about a lot of the causes—alcohol, speeding, the youth aspect, and so on, as well as about many of the programs which have been introduced both by volunteer organizations and by governments. A very full program is going on at the present time and I am sure the hon. member who moved this motion appreciates this.

I should like to underline the point about seat belts. This has been a very strange chapter. The program has been accepted by some and rejected by others. I think it is well on the way now to being a success. I should like to underline the point made by my hon. friend from Bruce-Grey. There is a very real role for public transit to play in this area of road safety. Some of us have spoken up on this issue a great deal recently, and we shall continue to do so. Fortunately in a country as advanced as ours a great deal is being done, both by governments and others.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has expired. It being five o'clock this House stands adjourned until Monday next at 11 a.m., pursuant to the order made Monday, May 30, 1977.

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Special Order.

HISTORIC SITES AND MONUMENTS ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE NUMBER OF MEMBERS OF BOARD

Hon. Len Marchand (for Mr. Allmand) moved that Bill C-13, to amend the Historic Sites and Monuments Act, as reported (with an amendment) from the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: When shall the bill be read the third time? By leave, now?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Marchand (for Mr. Allmand) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

Mr. B. Keith Penner (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development (Mr. Allmand), I am pleased to make a few brief remarks on the third reading stage of this legislation, which is not a very complicated bill. Nevertheless, it is an important bill. It is not complicated in that it only seeks to do one simple thing, which is to add two more members to the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada. That is simple, but it is important because those representatives will come from the two territories—the Northwest Territories and the Yukon territory.

In the course of considering Bill C-13 there have been interesting debates at both second reading stage and when this bill was before the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development. When this bill came forward for debate, many members took the opportunity to talk about historic sites or persons within their own constituencies. Thus, we had an interesting cross-section sampling of Canadiana during the course of this debate.

It was said that we ought to be doing more in the House of Commons to make ourselves aware and to inform the citizens of this country about the very colourful and dramatic history which we have as a nation. Bill C-13 gave members an opportunity to refer to some of the fascinating historic events which have taken place within their ridings, and whether they were or were not properly designated. Where there has been such an important historic event within a province, region or constituency, members would like to have it properly marked in one way or another. That is the function of the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada. It is always pleased to hear from members of parliament or from other Canadians concerning historic sites or historic personages which ought to be appropriately recognized through the work and functioning of this board.

The Historic Sites and Monuments Act provides that the board bearing the same name recommend to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development places, events and persons of historical significance to our country. This board has been functioning since the time of its establishment in 1919. Presently, the board is composed of 15 members, two representatives each from Ontario and Quebec and one each from the other eight provinces. As well, there is one representative from the National Museums of Canada and the Dominion Archivist, and also an officer from the Department of Indian Affairs and Northern Development, a position which happens to be vacant at the moment. The provincial representatives are usually historians or archivists of some repute. Mr. Marc Laterreur is the chairman of the board. He is also a member of the Department of History of the Faculté des Lettres of Laval University in Quebec.

In the past 20 years, on the recommendation of the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada, more than 70 historic parks and major sites have been designated, and almost 700 persons and events of historical significance have been commemorated. Those statistics speak for themselves, Mr. Speaker. Some people may believe, if they are not as aware of the history of our nation as they ought to be, that not much has happened in our past that is of significance or import. In fact, the Historic Sites and Monuments Board, through their work, has proven this to the contrary. There is a great deal in our history which is worthy of recognition. The board which examines these requests has come up with a significant number in the past 20 years: as I said, more than 70 historic parks and major sites have been designated, and almost 700 persons and events of historical significance have been commemorated.

The purpose of amending the Historic Sites and Monuments Act is to have better representation of two important parts of Canada—the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. Up until now, representatives from these northern regions have attended board meetings only as observers, without the right to vote. The fact that there will now be representatives from the two territories sitting on the board is indicative of the government's policy to more and more recognize the place and the role of the territories in our federal system.

There is an evolution of government going on within the territories. In its own small way, this bill helps to recognize that. If this bill is adopted it will have delegates from the Yukon and the Northwest Territories on the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada. They will no longer simply voice their opinions or be there in an advisory capacity. They will have all the rights and privileges which the other members of the board have. The board will then have 17 members instead of the present 15.

In the eyes of all the people of Canada, the north, with all its human, cultural and natural resources, is becoming increasingly important. Therefore, I believe that the members of this House will approve a measure which ensures the participation of these vast regions of Canada on this important board.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I listened with great care to the speech of the parliamentary secretary. I do not intend to unduly delay the passage of this bill. I regard this as a very significant event. The House is about to approve the addition of two more members to the Historic Sites and Monuments Board of Canada. They will represent the Northwest Territories and the Yukon. These two areas are frontier areas of our country, and are very much in the minds of all Canadians as we wrestle with the question of the approach to be taken to their development. All members are aware of the problems of development there and the importance of those areas to Canada. So I think this is a sound bill and one worthy of support, particularly in view of the status it will give to the representatives of those areas, a status equal to that of representatives of other parts of Canada which are in a different state of constitutional development.

The parliamentary secretary said the debate on second reading had given parliament—and, I hope, those who read Hansard—a cross-section of Canadiana. That is an excellent description. Canadians everywhere should be mindful of the work of the Historic Sites and Monuments Board. It has been going on for a number of years. In my own area of Grenville-Carleton, an historic area of the province of Ontario, many sites have been designated. Since I came here in 1972 I have dealt with that board and with those who work with it and with the historical societies which work in such close co-operation with the board, and I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the board and those who work with it are to be commended for the help they have been giving to those within the area I represent and who have been interested in the preservation and the memorializing of our history and of the great events of our times.

I have the honour to be the honorary president of the Grenville County Historical Society which has co-operated completely with the board in terms of designating sites in Grenville county. There has recently been formed a Rideau Township Historical Society which with the work of the interested people of Merrickville is in the process of adding to the lore of what is old Carleton county bordering on the Rideau River. The use of that river as a highway is a story in itself as exciting as anyone could imagine. Recently, an Osgoode Township Historical Society was formed. Osgoode township is an agricultural area of great significance in terms of the pioneer families who settled there; it makes one proud to be associated in any way with that area. This evening, in the township hall in Goulbourn township, they are forming a new society called the Goulbourn township historical society which will cover the old capital of Carleton county, Richmond, Ontario, where Colonel By, who participated so greatly in the development of this area, met his death.

We have in Prescott, Fort Wellington, a magnificent site marking the relationship between Canada and the United States when it was not quite as happy as it is today. There are stories in my part of Ontario, and I am sure each member of the House could find stories—as the parliamentary secretary has said—as interesting as any. If young Canadians want to look to an exciting past, let them look to the past of this country. If there is to be an understanding between the various regions of Canada and the various cultural groups in Canada, I think this kind of preservation and memorializing is more significant than we are sometimes prepared to admit.

We have a lot of difficulties in Canada now. We have misunderstanding—perhaps lack of understanding—from place to place, and I think we can begin the job of erasing these differences by understanding and having a feeling for the roots from which we have sprung and the events in our nation's development which have affected us. If that is the object of the Historic Sites and Monuments Board—and I am sure that is part of it—it should be supported by all Canadians.

I am very pleased to speak for this short period in the debate. I think we should not lose sight of the fact that sitting in this chamber we have a member of parliament who is himself a national historic site. I am speaking of the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles).

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): He happens to be a neighbour of mine. He has made a great contribution to parliament. I would not want this occasion to pass without reminding hon. members that the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) is today in the United Kingdom with the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) preparing to attend the jubilee celebrations of Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II. He has become a legend in this own time. He became a legend because he brought his tremendous powers of oratory and his great powers of perception to the defence of the little man. He had, and has, a view of this country which can only be described as sweeping.

It is important that the House know that what he regards as one of his greatest contributions, namely, placing upon the statute books the Canadian Bill of Rights, will be memorialized in this place by the affixing to the walls of the Parliament Buildings a bronze replica of his bill of rights. I think we could do with a little more of that around here. There was the union of the areas of Canada in 1867. Many men and women before and after that date made a contribution to our country which we ought not to forget and which we ought to be prepared to recognize by the setting up of suitable memorials in these parliamentary buildings.

Lastly, though education is not within the jurisdiction of the government of Canada, most of us are interested in the educational systems of the provinces and the territories from which we come. I hope there will always be an effort by those in charge of the programs to educate young people to pay particular attention to the exciting history of Canada, the development and evolution of its political institutions and the contributions made by its men and women great and small. They are as much a part of the fabric of our nation as the concrete and steel that we see above us now as our country develops. In closing I want to say that I am pleased to have had the opportunity to speak for a few minutes on what I regard as a very important subject.

Mr. Paproski: And here is our historic site!

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, when the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) told the House that he was an honorary president of an historical society, I was tempted to interrupt him to say that he is not old enough. I wish I had done so, so that I could now say I am not old enough to be an historic site. When the reference was made, my good friend, the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) said, "I can just see the pigeons flying over you".

The parliamentary secretary his indicated that we had a very good debate on this bill at second reading and that the committee also had an interesting time with it. Our hope is that the Historic Sites and Monument Board will pay some attention to the many suggestions that were made during the course of that debate. But I agree with him and with the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton, that it is not necessary for us to continue that sort of debate now that we have reached third reading.

There is, however, one reference that I would like to make to the committee. I am sure the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway (Mrs. Holt) will agree with me that the committee did something that was quite historic. It made a very slight amendment to the bill, as the House sent it to the committee, that deals with an issue that is very much with us. The bill, as it was sent to committee, contained a subclause that read in these terms:

A person is not eligible to be appointed or to continue as a representative for a province or a territory unless he resides in that province or territory.

The committee amended it so that it now reads:

A person is not eligible to be appointed or to continue as a representative for a province or territory unless such person resides in that province or territory.

As the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway and some others of us frequently point out, the word "he" and the word "him" seem to appear throughout our statutes. We are asked to operate under the umbrella of the Interpretation Act which says that the masculine includes the feminine. I hope that this is a beginning that can be carried through and that our statutes generally can reflect much more equality between men and women than they do at present.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): As I have already indicated, it is not necessary, in my view, for us to repeat the suggestions that were made at an earlier stage, but I have an additional one that I should like to make and I am encouraged to make it by the references of the previous speaker. The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton referred to known events in history and to persons who might be outstanding in the sense that their names are well known. These are the events and persons who are usually honoured. But I was disturbed a while ago when it came to my attention that a certain request for consideration by the Historic Sites and Monuments Board was turned down, and I would like to mention it briefly.

This is not something that many people will know about. There is a group known as the Parkland Ukrainian Pioneer Association located near Rossburn which is probably in the constituency of my friend, the hon. member for Marquette (Mr. Stewart). People in that area are very conscious of the struggles, the sacrifices and the suffering of their forebears, most of whom in that area were Ukrainians. There is one particular spot in that constituency where there is a mass grave of Ukrainian mothers, children and some fathers who simply perished because of the rigours and the suffering that they went through in the early days.

People in that community think a great deal of that part of their heritage. Their names are unsung, but it seems to me that there is a place for this kind of thing also being remembered by our Historic Sites and Monument Board. Let us not get carried away with the fact that the only events worth remembering are wars, battles, and so on. Let us not get carried away with the idea that we must forever put up plaques or monuments to persons whose names are down in history anyway. This country has been made what it is by a lot of little, ordinary people, and I think that this request that something be done to mark that mass grave of Ukrainian pioneers who, by their sacrifices, helped to get those people settled in western Manitoba is one that should be considered.

Somehow or other it was shunted from the Historic Sites and Monument Board to the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Guay), I suppose because they were Ukrainians. Mr. Speaker, they were Canadians, and this is part of our heritage. I hope that this sort of thing will be reviewed. I ask the board to look at this particular case. But even more, I make the point that as time goes on I hope we will remember not only the well known names but the names of the little people by the hundreds and thousands who have made this country what it is.

I want to keep my word to the effect that I do not think we need to extend this debate, but we are glad to have this opportunity to endorse what the Historic Sites and Monument

Board is doing and to say that anything that we can do to show our pride in our heritage is a good act on our part.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I want to add a few thoughts also, but with no regrets at extending the debate for the next few minutes. I know that the House is disposed to move this bill along and it has proceeded with a good deal of the examination of it in committee. But since the bill involves the Historic Sites and Monument Act, it also involves the whole perception of Canadian history, and like other speakers who have taken part in the debate on this bill I believe that the bill involves our history and how it is taught in our schools, which has been a pet subject of mine.

The teaching of history in our schools is not even required in some school curricula, which is a most retrograde and unfortunate situation. A student is able to go through the whole school system, at both elementary and secondary school levels, and graduate from grade 11, 12, or 13 in this province having had no real exposure to our vibrant history, the history of our country which is just as exciting and dynamic as the history of the country to the south of us. Quite understandably, we are preoccupied with Canadian culture and we have set up CRTC to define Canadian content so that we know what a Canadian is and so that when we see ourselves in the mirror we are able to recognize ourselves and find out who the devil we are.

Having been exposed to education, not as a teacher but as a member of a school board, and then having been privileged to be chairman of a school board in the west, it has never ceased to amaze me how little the Canadian student is exposed to the vital history of this land. Were he exposed more to it, it would give him some pride, in light of some of the problems which we have in this country at present. Maintaining Canadian content in our programs and trying to instil pride in our history, almost after the event, may be fine; but for it to be taught properly in the schools is much more important. A great deal of the legislation we deal with in the House involving Canadian culture is pump-priming and band-aid procedure. It does not get to the fundamentals which must be taught in our schools.

Today I flew in from Nova Scotia and walked into the House as the bells were ringing this morning. This weekend we were involved in the apple blossom festival with the Minister of National Revenue (Miss Bégin) gracing the parade by being the parade marshal and participating in a unity breakfast in which I also participated. I think it was the minister's first venture into the Annapolis Valley. Perhaps that is why I was interested in seeing this bill come forward today and hearing the parliamentary secretary's explanation.

● (1140)

I am sorry that I did not participate in the committee, because I certainly would have got into a more detailed examination of some projects in my riding. The House may be aware that my riding is Annapolis Valley, and I am being quite modest when I say it is literally the cradle of a European civilization in North America. It has the oldest continuous settlement which is still in existence. That settlement dates back to 1604. Because I was exposed to some of this over the weekend I am glad to have the opportunity to make these remarks.

[Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre).]

It was a fellow called Joseph Howe, a tremendous Nova Scotian, who said something like this, "A nation which does not preserve its monuments starts to lose its soul". Considering statements such as that of over one hundred years ago, in the present context I wonder if this is not one of the reasons we try to define what our soul is. We have not paid enough attention to this. There is more than stale, dusty history: Our history is vital and active.

I do not know how many students in our country know some of the interesting things about our prime ministers. No prime minister has not had some facet of private or personal life which was just as fascinating as anything that happens south of the border. We all know the attributes of Sir John. A. Macdonald. Few realize that he had a daughter who was very retarded and sick. He used to walk from this House of Commons every night to what is now the British high commission, his former home, to read to her during the supper hour. Perhaps it was as a result of her affliction and other tragedies regarding his son that Sir John A. Macdonald became a great gourmet of certain liquids. However, he was a great parliamentarian.

The fact that the home of the first prime minister of this land no longer belongs to Canada is testimony to the fact of how retarded we have been as a country. It is now the site of the British high commission. It was a beautiful house, and it still stands. I do not know if the history of that house is pointed out by guided tours. This would never happen in the United States—but it happens in Canada all the time.

The hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) is not in the chamber now, but he has been a consistent spokesman for those who want to have a federal government and the provincial governments recognize some of our historic sites. Three miles from me in my riding there was once the home of one of our prime ministers, Sir Robert Borden, but that house has been torn down. It was an original American planner home. Now the site is barren: there are now just trees and shrubs; the house is not there. At the intersection of Grand Pré there is a little plaque saying that down the road half a mile is where the house once was. When I was knee high to a grasshopper I attended the unveiling of that plaque. Henry Borden, of Brazilian extraction and a descendant of Sir Robert Borden, pulled back the veil; but even at that time, if my memory serves me correctly, the original home was still in existence.

I do not want to take up too much time, but I want to repeat what Joseph Howe said, "A nation which does not preserve its monuments starts to lose its soul". The right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) once said in a speech—and I have used this at every school at which I have spoken—that the man who does not know his history is the same as a person in the hospital who has amnesia. We do not have to become slaves of the past, but certainly an awareness of the past would help define and chart the course for the future.

I am not going to discuss all the areas of concern in my riding. I am proud to be a member of parliament because we are dealing with a bill which extends and enlarges the Historic Sites and Monuments Board by adding to it representatives from the Yukon and the Northwest Territories. Less than two weeks ago I happened to be in the Yukon for the first time. I was 300 miles north of Whitehorse, at the westernmost settlement in Canada. That part of the country reeks with history. That history basically has to do with the gold rush. But history is also taking place today because now we have the Lysyk commission studying the Alcan pipeline route. This is a kind of marriage of the old with the new. We should try to achieve the proper blend of the new with the old.

I became interested in the Yukon and some of its history because, quite frankly, I did not know very much about it. There is a tremendous book entitled "Prelude to Bonanza", written by a well known citizen of Whitehorse, Allen Wright, which points out that long before the gold rush there was quite an active history and quite a lot of development by the Americans and the French in this most westerly region of Canada.

There is one specific matter which I want to mention. There has been a repeated request by the West Hants county historical society. I would like to pay credit to at least one individual involved with that society, Mr. Roland Meuse, its president, who has helped inform me and who has brought to my attention in a most constructive and consistent way various matters of concern to his society. One request of this historical society is backed up by a resolution. It is also backed up by the affiliated boards of trade of the Annapolis Valley. The request is that there be some federal help with regard to Fort Edward, in Windsor. I think I should read the resolution passed by the West Hants historical society. It was adopted December 13, 1976, and reads as follows:

> Whereas, the West Hants historical society and other organizations in the county of Hants, Nova Scotia, have asked federal authorities to undertake an historical redevelopment of Fort Edward in Windsor; and,
> Whereas the society has requested the reconstruction of the simple wooden barracks buildings for museum and display purposes; and,
>
> Whereas Parks Canada has opened the blockhouse for public inspection in the summer season, providing pictorial displays and guides, and has indicated that plans for redevelopment are somewhere in the remote future; and,
> Whereas, the hon. Mr. Warren Allmand, Minister of Indian and Northern Affairs, on December 1, 1976, announced a ten-year program and an expenditure of $20 million by Parks Canada for restoration of the nineteenth century Halifax Citadel;
> Be it resolved:
> That the West Hants historical society approves of restoration work at the Halifax Citadel, but feels that at a time when restraints are being placed on restoration programs elsewhere, the Halifax project is being done to the serious neglect of other sites such as Fort Edward and Annapolis Royal, which were not merely displays of British military muscle, but were involved in more active roles in the historical development of Canada, and had notable influence in the destinies of the French, British and native peoples of this country from a much earlier period; and,
> That before any further projects of the magnitude of the restoration of the Louisbourg Fortress are carried out, to which the Halifax Citadel project was compared by the minister, more visible attention in restoration should be given to the smaller and more significant historical sites in this province.

That resolution has been supported by many institutions in the Annapolis Valley, including boards of trade. The Fort Edward site was constructed in 1750, and the original blockhouse is still there. The request is that there be federal funding for the restoration of the wooden barracks so they could be set up as a display and museum area. We are not talking about hundreds of thousands of dollars; we are talking about some help to develop this site in one area of the valley. The other historic sites and museums—the habitation in Annapolis Royal and Fort Anne in Annapolis Royal—are developed. You can see the Fort Edward blockhouse right from Windsor. From all sides you can see the tides of the Bay of Fundy and the Minas Basin which are the highest tides in the world.

I do not want to prolong the debate, Mr. Speaker, but merely to put on record the request from the West County historical association and ask the department seriously to reconsider its decision. It did not completely reject the application but said it does not fit within the priorities of the programs of the department right now. Perhaps in another year, if there is more money, something might happen. I ask that this be reconsidered in view of the fact that in 1978, Windsor, which is the shire town of Hants county will celebrate its centennial. I cannot think of any more significant recognition from the federal government and the Historic Sites Board to mark the history of this region than a firm commitment of funds. This would help the people who up to now have done things pretty well on their own, as so often happens in small towns.

I agree with the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) that the large projects are often able to carry themselves: everyone knows about Louisbourg, the Citadel in Quebec and the Citadel in Halifax, for instance. It is the smaller projects that require more compassionate assessment by the Historical Sites Board and officials far away in the bureaucracy in Ottawa. These small sites involve the local people much more than some of the national museums.

I certainly do not want to hold up the bill, Mr. Speaker. I have read the resolution. We are talking about something that goes back to the early 1700s which is wrapped up not only in the history of the British and French but also of the Indians of the area, the first Canadians. I cannot think of any better birthday present to the people of Annapolis Valley in western Nova Scotia, and specifically to Hants county and Windsor, than to have a commitment that in 1978 something will be done at the Fort Edward site so that there will be a barracks to complement the blockhouse that is standing there.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I do not propose to take up too much of the time of the House in my remarks on this measure. There is one aspect, however, that I feel should be brought to the attention of the House. It relates to one of the most outstanding navigators and hydrographers of all-time, James Cook, and the commemorative plaques and symbols that ought to be placed in various parts of the country, particularly on the west coast, in commemoration of his work. We are coming very close to the anniversary of that period of our history where James Cook made extraordinarily accurate charts of the west coast of Canada. I think it is time we commemorated those activities with more recognition than has been accorded to them.

When I visited Quebec City about two months ago I was surprised to learn that this same Captain Cook had a great deal to do with the plotting and drawing of the charts of the St. Lawrence River in 1758-59 prior to his explorations on the west coast. I have suggested to the Postmaster General (Mr. Blais) that he should consider that Captain James Cook be commemorated at the appropriate time in 1978 with either a commemorative stamp or a series of stamps which would do what we have been talking about in this bill, that is, commemorate what we owe to those who opened up the country for us.

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) mentioned the need for remembering the smaller people, those who have made contributions but whose names do not appear in the Encyclopedia Britannica. Of course, Captain Cook's name appears there, but we need to be reminded more often than we are at the moment of the dates when all of those who came before us discovered and plotted our lands. I make a plea again to the Postmaster General, which I hope will be picked up and brought to his attention—as he is not in the House today—that Captain Cook be commemorated with an issue at the appropriate time in 1978 and that a series of commemorative ceremonies be organized on the west coast to mark the historic work he did there.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, it would be repetitious to go over, again, the importance today of historic sites to Canadians. I ask the House to be tolerant if I should become a little local in my remarks. Any country which has pride in itself, any group of citizens who has pride in its community and its history should use this pride as the cornerstone of development. History reveals the errors of the past, and as we plan the future it is hoped that we may learn from these errors and go forward with greater confidence in our ability to cope.

In comparison with other countries, Canada has been remiss in exploiting her historic sites. It must be admitted, of course, that we do not have the history of Athens, Rome, Paris or London. But we have our own history. It is a brilliant history, something of which we should, and must, be proud. Our citizens spend billions of dollars abroad absorbing the history of other countries, yet virtually nothing has been done to create attractions which might keep them at home or which bring people from other countries to Canada as tourists.

On the occasion of the Queen's silver jubilee, presently being celebrated in London, it is estimated that two million tourists are in the city enjoying its history. Even if we discount the historical appeal of this bill, we should perhaps examine it for its potential to keep Canadian money at home and attract foreign money to our shores.

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

Not too long ago I was privileged to visit the New England states. I was invited out to dinner, to the house which had formerly been the home of that famous author, John Greenleaf Whittier. That home is an historic site, preserved in all its historic grandeur and recapturing the flavour and life of the era in which the author lived. We do little of that sort of thing.

● (1200)

I appeal to the government to be aware of our significant historic sites and to preserve as an historic site the home Mr. Van Horne built and lived in, in my constituency. Failure to preserve the house as an historic site would cast no credit on the federal government, or on the government of New Brunswick. The site, together with all its artifacts, was at one time available for $100,000, but neither the Historic Sites and Monuments Board nor the provincial government of New Brunswick saw fit to buy the island on which Mr. Van Horne had lived and preserve it as an historic site. The house stands in a community which depends on tourist traffic for its living in the summer. Actually, tourism is the underpinning of the area's economy all year. The local chamber of commerce, the heritage trust, interested people in St. Andrews, the honorable member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) and I, among others, have pleaded with governments to act immediately. All these pleas have met with procrastination.

If we do not act quickly, the site may be lost to the public. We must help the government of New Brunswick which has done its best within reasonable limits to acquire the assets of that estate, an estate of significant historical importance in the development of this country. Mr. Van Horne's first home in Montreal was destroyed to make room for development. Unless we act promptly, Mr. Van Horne's other home in my constituency may not be available to the public as an historic site. I suggest that federal and provincial authorities must co-operate to secure this site for the public.

These sites are valuable as historical records because we have reason to be proud of our history. If economic hard times lie ahead and money becomes scarce, surely it makes sense for the government to take over these premises. I could point to many significant historic sites in Carleton-Charlotte, a constituency settled relatively early in Canadian history. I expect many hon. members know of the articles Dr. George Frederick Clarke on matters of history and on historic objects he has collected over the years. But for his writings Canadians would be unaware of many matters of historical significance. Dr. Clarke has written about at least a dozen sites or places in Carleton-Charlotte which could be classified as historic sites.

Many of the sites he mentioned ought to be taken over. They would be useful for fostering the pride of our citizens and attracting visitors. I urge the government to be cognizant of places of historic interest in this country, that is, of historic sites and of the contributions of the people in our history, people who come from the west, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Quebec, and all other parts of the country. We are spending millions of dollars on the development of Beauséjour. I applaud the expenditure. Let us not lose sight of the importance and value of other sites, equally interesting and equally valuable to Canada today and in future.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order please. Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

FISHING AND RECREATIONAL HARBOURS ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR ADMINISTRATION AND DEVELOPMENT OF CERTAIN HARBOURS

The House resumed from Friday, December 10, 1976, consideration of the motion of Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent) that Bill C-7, respecting the administration and development of certain fishing and recreational harbours in Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is the minister not present?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I was slow to rise because I thought one or two hon. members opposite wanted to speak on the bill. Unfortunately, the minister cannot be in the House this morning because of prior commitments but will try to attend in the House later to close the debate. Although I am on my feet, Mr. Speaker, I do not intend to close the debate. I know that several hon. members still wish to speak on the bill.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Surely such an important bill seeking to confer significant powers of enforcement on officers, under certain conditions, merits a statement from the minister. If the minister cannot be here this morning, perhaps we could put off the introduction of the bill until this afternoon and so allow the minister to explain the bill and why these extensive powers are proposed.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. With respect, we are continuing consideration of the bill. When it was introduced on second reading last December, the minister opened the debate, after which some six or seven members spoke on it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order please. When the House finished its consideration of the bill on December 10, the hon. member for Churchill (Mr. Smith) had the floor. He is not present this morning; therefore, I recognize the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro).

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I have not had the opportunity to read why the minister requires the extensive powers sought in the bill. I find it odd that we should debate a bill of this sort, an important bill, and the sort of bill which we have just finished debating, in order to fill in time near the end of the session. I find this particularly odd since other questions of consequence for this country need debating; for example, the income tax measure which has caused considerable perturbation. I ask, why did the government decide to bring forward for discussion at this time this bill?

I notice that this bill would confer powers on the minister to produce regulations and make definitions. Normally, definitions are written in clear language. According to clause 2, "goods" means "tangible personal property other than vessels." Presumably that definition could include fish on board a vessel, or any other goods or chattels. However, on page 2 of the bill one finds that "scheduled harbour" means "any fishing or recreational harbour included in a schedule prescribed by the regulations". Once more we see regulations rearing their heads. Mr. Speaker, in our history this parliament will be known as the parliament which passed many regulations and which tried at the same time to review regulations and statutory instruments in which are enshrined many of our legislative enactments. This parliament will be remembered for the number of regulations we were obliged to approve. Here we have a definition defined through regulations which are not actually in the bill.

I think of one particular harbour that might very well fall within this definition. It might be prescribed as a scheduled harbour within the regulations. We have had trouble with this harbour before. It is within Indian territory. An attempt was made to create a marina there. The Indian band rose up against the particular movement. The municipality in which the band finds itself also rose up against it. I understand there is a further movement to have a second crack at this particular harbour in order to convert it into a marina. There have been marinas in the area of my constituency. Some have had rather sad histories. This particular one was investigated by a developer, up to a point. He thought it was in the bag until pressure developed to have his project put on the back-burner. I thought it was not only put on the back-burner but out into the woodshed and into the archives. However, I gather there is talk at the moment that it might come forward again. The bay I have in mind is Saanichton Bay. It should be mentioned. We ought to serve warning that developments of this sort should not take place under cover of regulations which we do not see.

There is something else that concerns me in another part of this bill. I will come back to Saanichton Harbour in a minute. Clause 5 reads:

> The minister may undertake projects for the acquisition, development, construction, improvement or repair of any scheduled harbour—

Subclause (2) reads:

The minister may, subject to the regulations, enter into an agreement with any province—

That is fine. However, he may also, as provided in subclause (3)—

The minister may, subject to the regulations, enter into an agreement with any person—

That removes the development of harbours such as Saanichton Bay from the reach of this House. If there are harbours that are being considered as harbours, they ought to be scheduled. A list of those harbours should be brought before this House so that we will know exactly what waters, harbours and bays are being considered. The municipalities want to know, as do the people living nearby. According to my recollection, the Saanichton Bay development occurred about two years ago. Objections were raised by the Indian band community which harbours its boats in that bay. There was going to be a lot of dredging. They were going to completely change the whole estuary or the creek that flows into Saanichton Bay. One of the other objections raised at that time was the industrial development that was going to be attracted by the development of that marina. No thought was being given to the community infrastructure that would have to proceed, or at least be considered hand in hand with the development of that marina project.

The Indian band was very upset because of the parking problem that would arise once the marina took shape. I do not have the file before me, but I believe they were talking of the order of 1,000 boats: once developed, the marina would handle 1,000 pleasure boats. It would, of course, receive pleasure boats from the United States, which is not very far away. Actually, the American islands are within sight of the development that was contemplated.

The municipality was very upset because this operation was to take place at a time when there was a critical water shortage in the peninsula. I have mentioned this before. People in this House find it difficult to believe there is a water shortage in Victoria and in the Saanich peninsula—but there is. There is a very high building development in the area. It is pressing in on the ground resource of the water. This 1,000 vessel marina would have a requirement for topping up the water cannisters before going off. Also, when people came in, their water supplies would be down and they would expect to have pure water available. These matters should be taken into account very seriously before any projects of this kind take place. The minister will be able to schedule harbours in bays and then enter into agreements with the provinces or with individuals. He will have that power under this bill.

Let us suppose this bill had been in place when that previous marina had been brought forward. Would we have been able to stop it as we did? Would the community have been able to stop it? Would the municipality have had an effective voice?

Why are the regulations not available to us? I ask the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) whether he is satisfied with a bill of this sort. I do not ask that because it is a fisheries and harbours bill, but because of the regulations. He has had a lot to do with alerting this House to the dangers of legislation by regulation. At one time I fondly imagined that it was law that prevailed in this country. I now find that the law merely provides the means whereby regulations can be drawn up. Regulations and ministerial discretion used in drawing up and promulgating regulations determine the lives of our citizens—not the law. Therefore, I find it a little too much that such powers are granted to the minister. Without reflecting on the minister himself—

● (1220)

Mr. Alexander: Why not?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Why not? But not in this particular case. I make no reflection on the minister himself, but this whole principle of ministerial power in drawing up regulations stemming from an act must be examined very carefully. I think we should exercise every precaution to make sure that, before we agree to give passage to legislation containing provisions of this sort, the regulations are before us and are appended to schedules to the legislation. There is no denying that this affirms, almost in stone, the regulations themselves. When amendments to the legislation are brought forward, amendments to the appendices can also be brought forward and discussed in the House. We must make sure we are governed less and less by regulation, and on all bills to which I speak I am determined to look into this aspect most carefully.

I cited the Saanichton Bay problem merely as an example of what could happen in any coastal riding in this country. A member may wake up one morning and find that a harbour in his constituency has been designated by the minister and that a developer with whom the minister has made certain arrangements begins to develop the area without first considering the wishes of the community. When we get to committee we must look at this matter again.

We are not finished with regulations in clause 2, because I find at page 11 of the bill there is a clause dealing with payment of fines. Clause 25 provides:

(1) The governor in council may by regulation designate any offence under this act or the regulations as an offence with respect to which—

And so on. So, again, we come across regulations which are to be drawn up by the governor in council. Why are these regulations not available to us? Is it not possible, before we move on to third reading, to have the regulations which are going to designate any offence under the act as an offence with respect to which certain things happen? I would have thought it would not be beyond the powers of those who drafted this legislation to put forward regulations which they feel should flow from this particular provision.

There is one other element which I think ought to be brought to the attention of the House and which I intend to look at more carefully in committee. I refer to clause 14 which provides for removal, seizure and detention of vessels and goods where an enforcement officer has reasonable grounds for doing so. Having looked at the definition of "goods" in clause

2, I presume this could refer to fish catches and that these could be seized and detained. Provision is also made for goods which might be spoiled to be disposed of, the proceeds being subject, of course, to the decision of the court as to whether the act which caused those goods to come on board was an offence under the legislation.

Since this bill deals with fisheries and recreational harbours in Canada, I should just like to mention one happy development which took place a week or ten days ago. I received a call from a community where floats should have been out two or three weeks ago, but because of the breakdown of the departments vessel floats were not in place for the main tourist weekend of May 24. I believe tourist vessels were standing off Sidney pier in my riding, some 500 of them, waiting to come ashore, but the floats had been taken out because of the winter winds and had not been replaced. A couple of calls to me and a couple of calls by me to Vancouver, Victoria and the fisheries interests there turned up the fact that the vessel operated by the Department of Public Works which normally puts those floats in place had broken down and that therefore the floats could not be put out.

However, the Sidney municipality and the Department of Public Works got together—something which should happen more often—and got the floats out for the next holiday weekend. When I came in to land on the Friday morning with a group of Canada-U.S. parliamentarians, the floats were not in place, but they were promised for the Friday night, and they must have been put out on the Friday or Saturday morning because on the Sunday morning the Canada-U.S. parliamentary group went out to do some cruising in the waters of Haro Strait to see what damage might occur if tankers came through those waters, and the floats were in place. I think the officials should be thanked for the speed with which they responded to the request of the local authorities.

When I was making inquiries about these particular floats, I was told one problem was that there was no breakwater and they were exposed to the winds and the waves which come in so readily from the southeast into Sidney harbour. Therefore, the floats have to be taken up during the winter. I do not know why this has not occurred to those who operate small craft harbours, but surely vessels which have come to the end of their floating life could be sunk and act as breakwaters off these unprotected harbours. After all, this was one manner in which the Mulberry docks played a role during the landings in France on the beaches of Normandy, and this could be adapted to our harbours to protect them from the winds. Did we learn nothing from the war? Did we learn nothing from these techniques? As a matter of fact, I have suggested that some of these 250,000-ton oil tankers might be the most appropriate vessels to sink for this purpose. They would be serving a much greater purpose, filled with cement and breaking the waves and the winds on some of our exposed harbours, rather than running around as dangerous vessels under doubtful command on the high seas and in our narrow waters. However, I leave that as a suggestion which might be taken up at some time.

Since we are talking about fishery harbours, I feel there is room for comment on the Canada-United States fisheries relations and agreements on the west coast. I have asked the minister to produce a text of the interim reciprocal fishing agreement. An English text was provided to me, but it was not a complete one; there seemed to be some gaps in it. I suppose that was because of the manner in which it was photostated. The top lines of several pages seem to be missing, but I will endeavour to have that sorted out.

It was the English text of the Canada-United States reciprocal fishing agreement which was sent to me as a courtesy by the parliamentary relations division of the department. In this letter I find the reason the text has not been tabled. It is because the French language text is currently being examined by United States authorities. I should have thought Canada could have been able to provide an authentic French language text of any signed agreement. Of course, a copy would be sent to the other signatory, because both texts are considered authentic. I am curious to find out whether any changes are suggested once it has been examined by our neighbours to the south. In this country of ours, which prides itself on its bilingual character, we should be able to produce authentic texts and authentic translations in both languages before we put a signature to either.

I feel we should have this agreement before us. I heard rumours that there have been exchanges of notes, aides memoires and letters back and forth between Ottawa and Washington concerning the interpretation of this agreement. I should indicate that this agreement has been signed by both countries, but not ratified. I have been told that diplomatic exchanges are privileged documents. This is a matter which the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) has been arguing about for a number of years. The hon. member has urged upon this government and previous governments that there ought to be complete disclosure of documents affecting Canadians. If they affect negotiating positions, certainly that is understandable. The interpretation of a particular clause in an agreement is a matter of public knowledge.

Mr. Alexander: This government plays with public secrecy.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Yes, but it is a cover-up.

Mr. Alexander: Certainly.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It is extraordinary that diplomatic exchanges relating to this particular agreement should be considered privileged documents.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to have an explanation as to what the exchange of diplomatic notes and the signing of international agreements has to do with construction, maintenance and supervision of small craft harbours.

Mr. Alexander: If you cannot understand that, it shows you are not too clever.

Mr. Paproski: Explain it to him; he is not too clever.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I will explain it for the hon. member through you, Mr. Speaker. I am talking about reciprocal fisheries agreements between the government of the United States and the government of Canada.

Mr. Dionné (Northumberland-Miramichi): That has nothing to do with small craft harbours.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Well, fishing harbours are used by fishermen. It is as simple as that. If there were no fishing harbours, there would be no fishermen. This particular agreement is being worked out in a manner which will result in there being no fish, and thus no fishing harbours. Therefore, I suggest the point of order raised by the hon. parliamentary secretary has no relevancy to the present argument.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): It has more relevancy than your referral to diplomatic agreements.

Mr. Paproski: Go back to sleep.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): There is relevancy in the particular line I am pursuing at the moment. We have had little opportunity to discuss the problems of west coast fisheries in this House. There are problems on the west coast relating to the division of fish caught there by Canadian and American fishermen. The United States federal court, in the State of Washington, made a ruling in 1974 concerning certain Indian tribes being provided with an opportunity to take one-half of the available salmon harvest in the United States. These salmon may be brought in to a fishing port or harbour. That ruling of Judge Boldt has led to further rulings which run counter to this particular agreement.

I would like to cite one particular clause of that agreement which can be found in article II(3), which indicates that the fishing by nationals and vessels of each party in the zone of the other shall continue in accordance with existing patterns, with no expansion of effort nor initiation of new fisheries. I mentioned this section in an earlier intervention which I made on amendments to the Criminal Code. One might ask how I got fisheries into the Criminal Code. That occurred as a result of the amendments to the Criminal Code under the Fisheries Act. At that particular time I was concerned, and I am still concerned, that the ruling of Judge Boldt, as agreed to by the United States regional consultative committee on fisheries, should have run counter to the particular clause I have just mentioned. It alters existing patterns and changes the effort—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent of the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Paproski: Did Dionne say "No"?

[Mr. Alexander.]

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Yes, I did. I am glad the hon. member is aware of that fact.

An hon. Member: We all said "No".

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Just as one of your members said "No" to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard) the other day when he was speaking on a very important matter with regard to his department.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): He probably deserved it.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, now we will get back to Bill C-7. The hon. member who has just concluded his remarks is concerned with the regulations governing fisheries harbours and pleasure craft harbours in this country, and that these regulations are not known at the moment. If he will look at section 9 of this act, he will see that the areas in which regulations may be made are very specifically defined. I suggest it would be a great burden to the House if every time the status of a small craft harbour were changed, or every time some measure concerning the supervision or regulation of those harbours were to be introduced, a bill had to be passed through the House of Commons. We would get even less legislation passed, in those circumstances, than we do now.

● (1240)

It is well known that though the government proposes legislation, the opposition disposes—and this opposition has not been disposed to make any great progress in that regard. I invite hon. members to look at clause 9, where we see what may be controlled by regulation. The subjects concern the maintenance of order, the safety of persons and property, the form of tickets which may be issued, and so on. I am sure the House would be excited at the prospect of designing the tickets which were to be issued.

To my mind it is important that the bill should be before the House now. Perhaps it should have been brought in earlier, but it was not. I say this because it is time the small craft harbour situation was rationalized. The coastline of Atlantic Canada is dotted with small craft harbours. They are all important, for various reasons. They are important for the development of tourism and also for the work of the boat construction industry.

As opportunities for leisure increase, increasing numbers of people have the time and the money to take up pleasure craft sports and recreation. There are, as well, the fishing harbours, and these possess an importance to many communities in Atlantic Canada which cannot be exaggerated. These communities grew up around the fishing industries in the early days. In fact, it was the abundance of fish which brought many of the early explorers from Europe to our eastern shores. The communities which have developed on the basis of fishing have a very strong attachment on historic grounds to the sea and to the products of the sea, and these harbours are very much a centre of their activities. They are certainly the centre of their economies.

There is one clause in the bill which gives me some concern; it is the proposition to set up a fee structure under which small fishermen would pay for the use of these harbours. I hope a close look will be taken in committee at this proposal. As hon. members know, most of the fishermen on the Atlantic coast today find a great deal of difficulty in eking out a livelihood from the resources and markets available to them, without being hit by additional fees. I would, therefore, not be in favour of making small, part-time fishermen pay fees at the various wharfs they use.

I also wish to address myself briefly to the proposal to replace the wharfingers, who are now in charge of many of these small craft harbours, by harbour managers. I have no objection to this, as long as the harbour managers come from the local community and are familiar with the needs of the local community and of the people who use the harbours. We do not need so-called experts being transferred to these communities when they know absolutely nothing about the problems or the needs of the people there. I should like to see some form of consultation introduced with the local fishermen with respect to the appointment of wharfingers or harbour managers. I want to see these harbours managed for the benefit of the people who use them, and not by paper-pushers who are more concerned with filing reports than with making facilities readily available.

We have heard criticism as to the timing of this bill. Members have asked why it should be brought forward at this particular point. I would ask a counter question: Why not? It is time there was rationalization of the development of these fishing harbours. Many of them are too small now for the purpose for which they are needed. Also, it is time we gave thought to the nature of the development which is required. In addition, I would hope that as a result of this bill we would continue to attach greater significance, at least from a financial point of view, to those harbours which are used by people for the purpose of making a livelihood rather than for the purpose of pleasure.

I am not downgrading the place of pleasure craft or of small craft harbours in the development of tourism. Indeed, in my area there is a group at work trying to develop a marina both for local use and for the promotion of tourism. I support this effort, but I insist that the fishermen whose lives are completely dependent upon the resources of the sea and upon the related shore facilities must come first in the financial considerations of the department. I have no worries about this as long as the present minister continues to hold his portfolio. He has shown a lively interest in the well-being of the fishermen, and he has done a great deal in a relatively short period to improve their lot. I encourage him in this attitude and look forward to the day when we shall see a rational system of small craft harbours both for pleasure craft and for those who use the sea to make their livelihood.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, I had not originally planned to enter the debate, but the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) did ask a question. Looking through the bill, I find I have five or six points which I should like to make—hopefully, in brief fashion. First, and perhaps most important in my mind from a general standpoint, I think something should be written into the bill to require a separate report on its administration each year by the minister responsible. I believe such a provision has been included in other bills of this kind. It might be regarded as implicit that the minister should include this information somewhere in his annual report, but I do not think it would hurt to give a little backing to this measure and to the important thing which it does by having a report made by the minister. This could be arranged in committee. As a matter of fact, I shall try to get on that committee so that I can pursue the matter myself.

The second point is a constituency one. I look at the potentialities of a series of beautiful little ports along the coast of my constituency—Herring Cove, Portuguese Cove, Catch Harbour, Sambro—all of which qualify for what is intended under this act. But there is clause 3 of the bill which provides that the bill will not affect any harbour, wharf, pier or breakwater under the jurisdiction of the National Harbours Board or any harbour commission established under any act of parliament. This might rule out help for these four communities, either because the definition of the port of Halifax could be so large as to include them, or else the operations of the harbour commission could be such as to include them as well.

Perhaps the adviser to the minister, who is in the gallery, would make a point of doing some homework, which I obviously cannot do this morning since I just started to read the bill, to find out from the National Harbours Board or the Department of Transport what the situation is in that respect. It would mean that the four small communities I have mentioned would not have their day in the sun under this legislation.

Another point which I think is of concern is that "the minister" is not defined in the bill. There is a provision at the bottom of the first page which states that the "minister" means such member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada as is designated by the governor in council to act as the minister for the purposes of this act. It seems to me to be a strange provision to have there. After all, the bill is in the name of the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) and presumably that hon. gentleman would be carrying out the legislation. He might find there is conflict with clause 3(b) which would prevent the minister named to carry out this bill from ever being an acting minister of anything else. I throw that out as a legal technicality, not of any great moment. But I think the act would look a little brighter if the minister responsible for it could be set out there, and I do not see any reason why he cannot.

The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich has questioned the regulatory powers set out in the legislation. It is quite common to have such regulatory powers in any piece of legislation that goes through the House. The hon. member who spoke following him thought that the regulatory powers would be ones that very ordinarily should belong to the governor in council. I cannot make an assessment offhand this morning, although I would, if people were interested, get the best advice I could on the matter of the regulatory process and ensure that that information was shared with the members of the committee who examine the bill.

However, there is one provision for regulatory powers that I think could not only have unexpected results, but might land the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment in difficulty, and that is clause 9(d) which deals with the control of pollution at any scheduled harbour. That might involve the minister in all sorts of regulations that were not primarily intended for the basic purposes of the act, which are to deal with fishing and recreational harbours, but might make him set foot beyond wharfs, piers or breakwaters, in inland topics more properly to be dealt with under some other act of parliament. So I question whether that subclause does not go too far.

Finally, I give a warning: Never fish from a derelict wreck. If you do, and the officials appointed under this act came along and saw you fishing peacefully, they might think that you appear to be in charge of the vessel, as set forth in clause 14(1), and get you embroiled in a long legal process that not only may cause you to spend a great deal of money but may also ruin your whole morning as a fisherman.

Mrs. Holt: That could give lawyers a little business.

Mr. McCleave: Both our hearts are in the right place—it would give lawyers some business, unless they happened to be the persons sitting there peacefully fishing from a wreck in some small harbour and the enforcement officer tapped their shoulders. I am mainly concerned about the need for an annual report, and I hope the government will consider it and we will not get into a protracted row in committee when the matter comes before them. Also, I think there should be an exact definition of "the minister responsible", and I hope officials of the department will be good enough to advise me as to whether the four small fishing communities I mentioned can fit in within the act and not be part of some strange jurisdictional dispute involving the National Harbours Board or the port of Halifax commission.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to participate at this stage of the debate on Bill C-7, but I will not become involved in any protracted debate. As I understand it, the subject matter of this bill was first set out in legislation way back in 1895, and somewhat revised in 1937. Since then there has been no fundamental change in the harbours, piers or wharves administration. So certainly a bill such as this, on fishing and recreational harbours to consolidate and, in the words of the parliamentary secretary, to rationalize many of the problems in the administration of the small craft harbours, is undoubtedly relevant.

I must say that when I heard the parliamentary secretary use the word "rationalize", I thought he used it not glibly but lightly. All bills must have regulations that come forward later and, as the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) suggested, if his suggestion is accepted there will be annual reports stating what took place in the administration of small craft harbours, and unfair and perhaps contradictory regulations can be corrected. What concerns me very much, coming from the area to which the parliamentary secretary referred—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

SUGGESTED INQUIRY INTO ALLEGATION GOVERNMENT ATTEMPTING TO INTIMIDATE NEWS MEDIA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a motion under Standing Order 43. The urgent and pressing circumstances which appear in the motion are particularly prompted by recent alarming events which indicate an intent within the government to intimidate the news media. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn):

That this House, deeply concerned by certain recent dangerous events, such as public comments by the Prime Minister and supporters against CBC in connection with reporting on Quebec, the implied threat by a Cabinet minister to the broadcasting industry that they might be called to account before a Royal Commission and in particular the alleged serious action on behalf of the Minister of Transport to prevent publication of The Canadian Magazine in Saskatchewan last weekend, and a statement by a supporter of the government, the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont, referred to in today's Globe and Mail, that there is "a phobia in Ottawa to domesticate this power of the press . . . to harness it", calls for an immediate inquiry into these events by a committee of this House or under the Inquiries Act.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Presentation of such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

POST OFFICE

PROPOSED INQUIRY INTO OPERATIONS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In light of the continued deterioration in the service offered by Canada's post office as documented by press articles and the increasing flow of letters of protest from constituents to members of parliament, a situation further aggravated by the current breakdown in contract negotiations over a matter that would have been insignificant if the post office management had introduced modern industrial relations practices into the post office department at the time when the decision was made to move rapidly into mechanization and automation, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro):

That the government immediately set up a joint parliamentary committee similar to the committee that studied the 250 recommendations for improvement in employer-employee relations in the Public Service, a situation that has been further exacerbated by the government's failure to act on the Finkelman committee report, to examine in depth the Canada post office and to recommend solutions for the current crisis which has resulted in deteriorating service, a breakdown in labour management relations with the CUPW and the problems with mechanization and automation in the Toronto area that have been playing havoc with mail service throughout Metro Toronto and across Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House for the presentation of such a motion for debate. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

SUGGESTED COMMITTEE STUDY OF POSTPAK PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In light of conflicting information in regard to the Postpak program of the Post Office Department where on the one hand departmental officials have informed the Canadian Trucking Association that Postpak has always been profitable and on the other, the Postmaster General (Mr. Blais) told the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications that it has only been profitable since December 1976,

● (1410)

I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale):

That the whole matter of Postpak be referred to a joint parliamentary committee to examine in depth the Postpak program which is causing serious problems for the Canadian trucking industry and to determine the economic feasibility of this program.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House for the presentation of such motion for debate. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Alexander: The Postmaster General said no again.

PROPOSAL THAT COMMITTEE STUDY EXTENT OF MATERIAL DIRECTED AT CHILDREN—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Since hard core pornography, in particular abusive child pornography, produced in the United States is now entering Canada through several ports of entry in our larger urban centres; since representations have already been made to the Minister of National Revenue (Miss Bégin) which would in effect limit the number of ports of entry; and since the incidence of pornography involving the use of children is increasing dramatically, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That the Prime Minister immediately establish a House of Commons task force that would study the extent of child pornography in Canada and report back to the House of Commons with specific recommendations within 90 days.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43 the presentation of such motion for debate requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF CUBAN DELEGATION, HEADED BY COMMISSIONER A. MARGOLLES, VICE-MINISTER OF FISHERIES

Mr. Speaker: Order please. Before we begin the oral question period may I direct the attention of the hon. members to the presence in our gallery of the distinguished Cuban delegation attending the ICNAF meetings presently underway in Ottawa, headed by their distinguished vice-minister of fisheries, Mr. Commissioner A. Margolles.

POST OFFICE

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO OPERATIONS AND TABLING OF MANAGEMENT STUDIES

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, because of the vital importance of a speedy, efficient and reliable postal service to the well-being of the Canadian community and Canadian business, particularly the small business sector, and in light of the threat once again of a strike by the inside postal workers this summer, would the Postmaster General consider recommending the immediate establishment of a joint, non-partisan parliamentary committee patterned after the joint committee which studied the 250 Finkelman recommendations for employer-employee relations in the Public Service, to examine the Canada Post Office operation and to recommend solutions?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the post office has always been a non-partisan department. It has always received much co-operation from members of the opposition, and I am sure the hon. member advanced his suggestion in that spirit. As the hon. gentleman knows full well, one of our difficulties is this: we have been examined too much. Hopefully, in the immediate future we shall engage in constructive negotiation in order to assure the Canadian people of continuous postal service. As of today we forwarded another invitation to inside postal workers to come back to the bargaining table in accordance with the suggestion of Mr. Brown of the Public Service Staff Relations Board last Friday. We hope the union will see fit to return.

Mr. Dinsdale: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If the Postmaster General will not set up such a committee will he, at least, table the various management studies which the post office has done and commissioned, so that the Canadian public can get a glimpse of why the Post Office Department is in such chaos. Will he also urge his colleague the President of the Treasury Board to table legislation based on the Finkelman report as evidence of the government's intention to improve employee-employer relations in the Public Service?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I am amazed at the hon. gentleman, who in the past has always been helpful to the post office, for alleging—I do not accept his allegation—that the post office is in chaos. Indeed, the hon. member is merely encouraging the confrontationist attitude adopted by the members of CUPW. He knows full well that one of the tactics of that particular union is to attempt to demoralize management in the Post Office in order to advance its own bargaining positions. Surely, the hon. member is not intent on assisting them in that particular tactic.

Mr. Dinsdale: Maybe I can get the point I am trying to make to the Postmaster General in a third question in spite of his belligerency. Is the Postmaster General considering positively the suggestion of the Canadian Union of Postal Workers to set up a royal commission study of the Post Office with a view to involving the postal workers more directly in the planning process for technological change,—they have been left completely out of the planning process—a procedure that has been followed in all other modern industrial nations, as an alternative to the confrontation strike pattern that has brought Canada's postal service to the precipice of disaster or does he feel that his pre-written form letter campaign is all the action that is necessary at this time?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows full well that since my appointment I have attempted to engage the CUPW in consultation. We have invited them to all intergroup sessions we have held very successfully with the LCUC. We have attempted to change the win-lose power struggle that has been in the Post Office for the better part of this decade as a problem-solving mode. We have done that with the LCUC. We have excellent relationships with the other unions. If the hon. member does not know, he ought to know that the CUPW has adopted within its constitution a confrontational stance. It is using nineteenth century union tactics. The hon. member ought to know that. He himself has chastised that particular union for not attempting to cooperate with us in solving those problems relating to mechanization for technological change. As the hon. member knows, article 29 in the collective agreement provides for that. We have been in constant consultation with that union. Because of the stance they have taken constitutionally of not cooperating but confronting, it makes it very difficult for us to do what the hon. member suggests. He is not helping at all by the very destructive suggestions he is putting forward.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

PROPOSAL FOR DECENTRALIZATION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, it is too bad the Postmaster General does not receive any mail. He would then understand that people are truly concerned and disappointed with the type of mail service they are getting and for which they are paying exorbitant prices. In light of the massive and increasing number of mail handling problems referred to Ottawa each day by local post offices in major cities, and I point out particularly Hamilton and Toronto, when is the Postmaster General going to truly decentralize the Post Office so that such problems raised in the local post office can be settled fairly and expeditiously at the local level, thereby eliminating or reducing references to Ottawa which invariably cause undue delays and lowers morale?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the hon. member consult with the hon. member for Brandon-Souris. He would then know of the type of background information I have made available to all hon. members in order to provide them with the information necessary to answer inquiries from their constituencies. The information I have made available is factual. It provides the sort of replies the hon. member ought to have as evidence by the question he is asking.

REASON FOR REFUSAL TO ALLOW UNIONS TO POST BULLETINS ON BULLETIN BOARD

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I ask the Postmaster General to update this action which he says is in effect but which I do no think is in effect. In other words, I do not believe the Postmaster General. With regard to the minor issue of posting union bulletins in post offices about which the Postmaster General has taken a tunnel vision approach, why has the Postmaster General disallowed this, which decision in effect has frustrated and stymied the continuation of labour negotiations with CUPW?

● (1420)

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I wish the hon. gentleman would inform himself prior to putting questions to me. There has been no stymieing at all in regard to bulletins being put on the bulletin board. All we have said is that, in accordance with the collective agreement which is in force, a request has to be made of supervisory personnel before material is posted on the bulletin board or otherwise distributed. Surely, we are still in charge of the post office.

ENERGY

THREAT BY OIL COMPANIES TO STOP DRILLING IN MACKENZIE DELTA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and it has to do with the announcement by Gulf Oil and Mobiloil, who have followed the example of Shell Oil, that they will do no further drilling in the Mackenzie valley delta until the federal government approves a pipeline and sets out new land regulations. They have also decided not to stockpile at their northern bases any of the equipment and supplies necessary for drilling this coming winter. What action does the minister propose to take with respect to this threatened strike by the oil companies, which has all the appearance of being an attempt at blackmail to influence the government to make a decision which is in the interests of these particular oil companies?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think as the hon. member has suggested the oil companies have left themselves open to the charge that they are attempting some form of blackmail. I would regret that interpretation. Perhaps the real reason is that they place greater importance on the views of the New Democratic Party with respect to the need for a pipeline.

OIL—POSSIBLE SUSPENSION OF PRICE INCREASE IN VIEW OF SUGGESTION COMPANIES WILL STOP DRILLING IN MACKENZIE DELTA

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, that is a pretty tame answer which is not going to frighten the oil companies very much. In view of the fact that when the minister announced that over the next 12 months there will be an increase of $2 a barrel in the price of oil he gave as a reason the need for the oil companies to be able to accumulate a larger cash flow to carry out exploration in Canada, and since it is apparent that the three companies in question do not intend to carry on a certain amount of drilling or any drilling at all in the Mackenzie valley delta, does the minister intend to drop the idea of an increase in the price of oil until such time as the oil companies agree to spend this additional money on oil exploration in Canada?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No, Mr. Speaker, there is no intention of dropping that proposal. As the hon. member must realize, the choice of where a corporation spends its exploration money is that of the corporation itself. We have made it very clear that we believe that cash flows are important in order to ensure that that exploration activity does take place and is funded by cash flow. The hon. member knows that at the present time a bill has been introduced in the Senate dealing with the monitoring of such cash flow and its application to exploration in Canada.

OIL—SUGGESTED LEGISLATION TO FORCE COMPANIES TO SPEND MONEY ON EXPLORATION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the government's own monitoring survey shows that cash flow by the oil industry has increased from $1.3 billion in 1971 to over $3 billion in 1976, while at the same time the percentage of cash flow which has gone into exploration in Canada has dropped from 87.9 per cent to 78.4 per cent and the amount of money which these companies have spent in exploration outside Canada has gone from $34 million to over $231 million, is it not apparent that merely monitoring what happens to cash flow is not sufficient? Is he now prepared to consider mandatory legislation which would require the companies to spend their cash flow, which they get out of the pockets of Canadian consumers, on exploration in this country?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member were not so selective in his figures, he would have understood that there has been a substantial increase in exploration activity and a significant application of the cash flow for exploration purposes. He has taken the year 1971. If he were to take the next year, 1972, as I pointed out to him before in this House, a year before the major increase in prices, he would find the percentage of funds which has been allocated for exploration and development. When comparing 1976 to 1972, the last year before the price increase, in percentage terms they compare very favourably.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Not at all.

Mr. Gillespie: He will also find out that there were very substantial sums of money devoted to exploration and development in Canada. I am referring to an increase amounting to billions of dollars. As the New Democratic Party would hope, the government does not intend to tell the companies where they should drill. We believe the corporate sector is the best judge of the risks involved and the best judge of where they are likely to find oil and natural gas.

POSSIBLE DISCOVERY OF OIL IN EASTERN CANADA—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It also deals with oil, but in another area.

In the May edition of Canadian Petroleum, there is an article signed Martin Kelly where we can find data on important oil and gas fields in Labrador and Newfoundland. These data have been established by the Canadian Armed Forces but they are kept secret on the Sherness base, near Halifax. Therefore I want to ask the minister whether it would not be more advantageous for Canada to invest in an eastern project where it is possible to extract 15 billion barrels according to Gulf Oil and Imperial Oil, twice as much as the potential for both the Mackenzie delta and the Beaufort Sea. Moreover, can the minister tell the House whether these data will be made available to the Canadian industry in the near future?

[English]

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is talking about information which has been obtained from avionics equipment on overflights by the Argus plane with respect to the areas, that information is available. It is not information which would indicate the presence or non-presence of oil and gas. I checked into that particular question a week or two ago when a similar question was put. I was satisfied that that information is not the kind of information which can be used to determine the presence of major hydrocarbon deposits in the offshore. The major reason activity is not going on, at the present time, is that the government of Newfoundland adopted a very intransigent position with respect to the permit rights of the EastCan group. I suspect that was largely because of the influence of the former minister of energy and mines for that province, who now sits as the energy critic for the Tory Party.

[Mr. Gillespie.]

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

ALLEGED MISREPRESENTATION IN POST OFFICE ADVERTISING—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I want to assure him that I ask this question with great seriousness and I hope he will take it under consideration. It deals with the misrepresentation of facts applied by the assured mail program of the Post Office. In view of the fact that studies done by a number of people including Alderman Ying Hope and organizations such as the Toronto Globe and Mail show without doubt that mail posted one day is not delivered the next day, will the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs take action against the Postmaster General to ask him to cease and desist from this misleading type of advertising?

● (1430)

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): I will be happy to take seriously the point the hon. member has raised and will consult with my colleague.

Mr. Gillies: Is it, then, the minister's policy that when actual evidence is brought to bear that misleading advertising is taking place in this country, that his department will do absolutely nothing about it and that private corporations which are involved in misleading advertising need not worry because it is the policy of the government to allow the Post Office to get away with misleading advertising when they will not let it happen in the private sector?

Mr. Abbott: I am sure the hon. member realizes that legally and technically there is no way in which one arm of Her Majesty's government could prosecute another, even were the grounds for doing so to exist. So, when he makes an allegation of misleading advertizing about a government department the best I can do, and I have undertaken to do so, is to sit down with the minister and examine the advertizement about which he is speaking and take the matter into consideration.

Mr. Gillies: When will the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs report that he has taken this action, one which I consider to be completely inappropriate; he should be talking to the Solicitor General and finding means by which to cause the government to live up to the things it has promised to do. When will the minister report to the House? Will it be tomorrow? The operations of the Post Office in this nation are disgraceful.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

POST OFFICE

POSSIBILITY OF REORGANIZING INTO CROWN CORPORATION

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): I, too, have a question for the Postmaster General. In view of the successes achieved by the United States and United Kingdom post offices after their reorganization into semi-private and Crown corporation types of organizations respectively, is the Postmaster General considering either option for resolving the present chaos in the Post Office which is making delivery by Pony Express seem fast by comparison?

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF STUDIES SHOWING PROFITABILITY OF POSTPAK—REPRESENTATIONS FROM TRUCKERS

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Postmaster General. In the light of the hon. gentleman's assertions that Postpak became profitable last December, despite the fact that his officials have been claiming that it was always profitable, will he table the studies which show its profitability?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Postmaster General): I am very pleased the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre has drawn the attention of the public to one of our very successful programs, Postpak, which is making the Post Office an even more competitive enterprise and is, in addition, providing extra revenue, thereby reducing the obligations upon the taxpayers of Canada.

Mr. McKenzie: I suggest the Postmaster General should read his mail from the trucking organizations. Has he studied the claim of the Canadian Trucking Association that the only reason Postpak is profitable is the cross-subsidization which is forcing many truckers out of business because of unfair competition from the Post Office—as if unemployment in this country is not already high enough?

Mr. Blais: Yes, I have read the brief and I am very pleased that they are feeling the rub of competition. We are in competition with private enterprise in a number of ways in the Post Office and we are competing very effectively indeed.

INCOME TAX

POSSIBILITY CASH ADVANCES ON FARM STORED GRAIN WILL BE TAXED

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of National Revenue. In view of the recent indication that her department will be levying income tax on cash advances on moneys which are given where interest is not paid, may I ask whether this is to include cash advances on farm stored grain and other agricultural products, or are these to be excluded?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Revenue): I will look into the matter and report to the House or directly to the hon. gentleman as soon as possible.

TRADE

PROPOSAL TO BUILD RAILWAY IN VENEZUELA—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Yvon Pinard (Drummond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Having returned from South America, can he tell the House about the results of his representations in favour of Canada with regard to the construction of a railroad in Venezuela?

Hon. Jean Chrétien (Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Yes, Mr. Speaker. Last Friday, I met the president of Venezuela, and as a result of that meeting Canada has been invited to form a consortium with Spain to build a railroad in Venezuela. We have been chosen as main contractor for the construction of a 700-kilometre railway which should cost about $1 billion. As you know, that is the first phase of a 3,000-kilometre railway which will mean a lot of work for the locomotive, track and car industry in Canada, as well as for Canadian technology since the railway will depend on North American technology and will be designed by Canadian experts.

POST OFFICE

LEGALITY OF SALE OF NON-PHILATELIC MATERIAL—USE OF FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT TO RAISE RATES

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Postmaster General. In view of the failure of the Post Office to heed the recommendation of the Auditor General to bring forward enabling legislation to sell non-philatelic material, a recommendation made because of the Auditor General's belief that the Post Office is acting above the law, does the hon. gentleman still claim that section 13 of the Financial Administration Act gives him the power to raise postal rates by regulations?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Postmaster General): I fail to see the connection between the two aspects. Yes, I do feel that section 13 of the Financial Administration Act permits us to raise the rates by order in council. In answer to the first question, we have reviewed this matter, we have examined the recommendation and legislation is being prepared. But we still feel we are entitled to sell a limited number of non-philatelic items which, of course, include postage within the transaction which is being made.

I should like to indicate, as well, with reference to a previous question involving the assured mail program that the term "assured mail" has not been used since 1976. If the hon. member for Don Valley has some allegation he wishes to make I wish he would make it to me because I have not seen any advertizing of the type he mentioned used since 1976. But the proportion of this mail delivered the next day is 85 per cent on the national average and delivery by the next day but one is short only 2 per cent, so it is 98 per cent for the next day plus one.

FINANCE

POSSIBLE USE OF FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT TO SET TAX RATES

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): In light of the minister's positive response to my last question I would like to direct my supplementary to the Minister of Finance. Section 13 of the Financial Administration Act states a minister can prescribe a rate for any service by regulation and since the government provides many services to Canadians, could the hon. gentleman tell the House if he intends to follow the trend set by the Postmaster General and bring in future tax provisions by regulation?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): The opposition makes an interesting recommendation but I do not think I could accept it.

ENERGY

POSSIBILITY OF TRANSPORTING ALASKAN OIL BY PIPELINE OR RAILWAY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): May I address a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, Mr. Speaker? It concerns the continuing threat of pollution to the southern offshore waters of British Columbia following the decision by Kitimat to withdraw its application for permission to construct a pipeline. Can the minister tell us whether his department has given any serious consideration by way of a study into transportation by Canada of Alaska oil overland either by pipeline or by rail? Would he advise us whether the decision by the Hall Commission to recommend rail as a form of transportation in these circumstances and the Queen's University study which similarly recommended rail have been co-related into a study of an alternative route for Alaskan oil over British Columbia or thereabouts so that we might avoid the hazards of water transportation in our coastal waters?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): When the United States government made the decision to go the Alyeska route, as far as Canada was concerned, it ruled out the possibility of moving Prudhoe Bay oil across Canada.

Mr. Leggatt: So that the minister might understand more particularly, might I say that a rail connection to Alaska would connect the whole of northern British Columbia and Alaska with both the Canadian trans-continental system and the United States trans-continental system and would also complete the British Columbia railroad to the north.

● (1440)

The reason I ask whether serious consideration has been given to this is that the government has known for a very long time that the risk of pollution as a result of the presence of oil tankers off our shores is great. What I want the minister to advise us is whether he or his department have made any positive proposal to the U.S. government, either in terms of an alternate oil port or in terms of land transportation. What have we proposed to the Americans to avoid the dead certainty of pollution of British Columbia waters so that they would have an option that would be acceptable to Canada?

Mr. Gillespie: As the hon. member knows, the government is not in a position to make a proposal to the United States with respect to an oil pipeline from Alaska through British Columbia, if that is the suggestion he is making. The National Energy Board was set up by parliament to consider, upon application from various companies, as to whether or not a certificate of public convenience and necessity could be issued. Clearly the initiative with respect to such a move would have to come from a group of corporations in the private sector, which application would then have to be heard by the National Energy Board to determine whether it is in the national interest that a certificate be issued.

POST OFFICE

MEASURES TO ASSURE SERVICE IN VIEW OF POSSIBILITY OF STRIKE

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to the Postmaster General. In very combative replies today, without giving much information, the Postmaster General has refused to publish studies that have been conducted into the effectiveness of the Post Office; he has rejected either a joint parliamentary inquiry into the operations of the Post Office or a royal commission, and he has publicly attacked CUPW. We know what he is against, we know what he is not prepared to do, but what we are interested in knowing is what he is doing and what he intends to do to ensure that Canadians receive mail after June 30 and that there is an improvement in the Canadian postal services now. Can he tell us positively what he is doing, and can he give us a guarantee that there will be a new contract signed before June 30 or on June 30?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, surely that last request is not serious, or else the hon. gentleman is showing a greater naiveté than has been attributed to him. I would simply indicate to him that we are doing our best, notwithstanding questions from the opposition today, to stress the positive in the Post Office. Going back to the bargaining table and inviting CUPW back to the bargaining table, so that indeed we can have a collective agreement signed before June 30, is what we are trying to do. Judging from the very negative questions that have been directed to me by the opposition, I do not believe they are being very helpful at all.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

REASON FOR REFUSAL TO TABLE MANAGEMENT STUDIES OR HOLD INQUIRY INTO OPERATIONS

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): The matter of having the mail delivered on time or at all may not be serious to the Postmaster General, but it is serious to a number of Canadians who might be looking forward to receiving pension cheques and to a number of Canadian small businesses which might be looking forward to having their businesses carry on. Would the Postmaster General, who claims he is doing the best he can do—we all know the results of that—tell us why he refuses to publish the studies that have been made into the Post Office, and will be tell us why he refuses to consider seriously the proposal to have a joint parliamentary inquiry into the operations of an agency of the government of Canada which, despite his defenses in the House of Commons, obviously to every Canadian who tries to get his or her mail is not working today?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Postmaster General): Very simply because negotiations with a very combative union that I have described as exercising nineteenth century union tactics, are very difficult at the best of times, and we can only complete successful negotiations when there is no undue publicity. What the hon. gentleman is suggesting is completely counterproductive to achieving that particular end.

Some hon. Members: Why?

An hon. Member: Let us have Finkelman's legislation at least.

INFORMATION

ALLEGED INTIMIDATION OF NEWS MEDIA BY GOVERNMENT—ATTEMPT BY TRANSPORT MINISTER TO SUPPRESS PUBLICATION OF "CANADIAN"

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): My question is for the Acting Prime Minister. Will the government take steps to discontinue its policy of intimidation against the news media so that the public can receive facts and information which it refuses to disclose and, in particular, will the government dissociate itself from the alleged action of the Minister of Transport in suppressing or attempting to suppress the publication in Saskatchewan of the weekend magazine Canadian?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, on the first point, obviously there is no such policy of intimidation either on the part of the government or the opposition. If there were such, it is obviously very unsuccessful and should be abandoned.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacEachen: On the second part of the question, I must say that I have only heard fragments of information that might provide the basis for an answer to the hon. member's question, and with that fragmentary information I hesitate to provide any answer at all. I hope that tomorrow I may be able to answer it in more detail, or the Minister of Transport may be present.

Mr. Baldwin: May I try, with some success I hope, to increase the minister's knowledge? Will the government cooperate in holding an inquiry by a committee of the House or under the Inquiries Act into this question of intimidation as illustrated by statements of the Prime Minister and others in respect of CBC and the broadcasting media and, most important, the alleged action by the Minister of Transport to prevent publication of the Canadian magazine in Saskatchewan, and the statement by the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont, which are plainly indicative of improper pressure by the government on the news media?

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR INQUIRY INTO ALLEGATION SINKING OF "WILLIAM CARSON" CAUSED BY POOR DEPLOYMENT OF ICEBREAKERS

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Acting Prime Minister. It is in connection with the sinking of the ferry William Carson last Thursday. Is the Acting Prime Minister aware of the statement of the hon. member for Gander-Twillingate, the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue, that the sinking would have been avoided had there been a proper deployment of icebreakers off Newfoundland and Labrador, that the present deployment is scandalous and the sinking of the William Carson a prime example of this deficiency? Does the Acting Prime Minister agree with these comments of the parliamentary secretary, and if he does not will he have an immediate investigation carried out and a report made on icebreaker deployment and its relationship to the sinking of the William Carson, and will he have the results of this inquiry made public as soon as possible?

Hon. Ron Basford (Acting Minister of Transport): Without commenting on those reports which I have not seen, as acting Minister of Transport I will inform the hon. member that an investigation by the Department of Transport is continuing and of course the matter will be investigated.

Mr. Crosbie: The Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Revenue, who is part of the ministry, has said that there is only one icebreaker for Newfoundland and Labrador and that the other is on lease, that four or five icebreakers are sitting idle at Dartmouth, and that has contributed to the sinking of the William Carson. Will the minister have these allegations investigated and will he report to the House? What is the situation with respect to the propriety of a member of the ministry making these statements which indicate a scandalous lack of knowledge and scandalous behaviour by a government minister?

Mr. Basford: Before responding to the hon. member I would like to check the statements first to make sure they are free of exaggeration. With regard to the shortage of icebreakers, should that be the case, the hon. member will be happy to know that Her Excellency, Madam Leger and I launched a New Class III Arctic icebreaker in Vancouver last Friday night.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

AGRICULTURE

POTATOES—IMPACT OF FREIGHT RATE INCREASES

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. With respect to the announcements last week by the railroads of an increase in the rail rate on the movement of potatoes from Prince Edward Island and New Brunswick of 20 per cent on September 1 and of 12 per cent next January 1, and the subsequent meeting which took place in Charlottetown of those representing various aspects of the potato industry including federal representatives, a meeting at which, I understand, the Department of Agriculture was not represented, can the minister indicate whether his department has had a chance to analyse the impact of that announcement on the potato industry, particularly with respect to next year's sales in central Canadian markets? Second, in view of the regular increases over the last five years of something like 10 per cent each year, has any explanation from the railroads been requested?

● (1450)

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I want to put the record straight. I am sure the hon. member did not mean to suggest that I did not meet with the potato marketing board. I did meet with the Prince Edward Island Federation of Agriculture, and I received a brief from that federation. I have discussed this with my colleagues here in Ottawa. The premier of Prince Edward Island is coming here on, I believe, June 17. Unfortunately, I will not be here that day because of another commitment. I have to be out of the country. However, he will know what my feelings are because I have discussed it with him personally. He knows what my intention and the intention of the government is at the present time. I have not made this intention public, but I think potato growers will be satisfied with our decision when it is made.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be useful if the minister would put some of the views of his department on the record, inasmuch as he was fairly forthright earlier in terms of the necessity of establishing a new fleet of refrigerated cars for potato growers in those two provinces. With respect to the statements which were made by the railroads concerning the necessity of this rate increase because they were going to bear the cost of these new cars and with respect to the misleading information that no significant increases had occurred before the two which were to be announced for this fall and for next January, has the minister taken steps to correct that seriously misleading information provided by the railroads, and can he give us some information because of the urgency of having some decision made in terms of having these cars available for next year's season?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, I had a discussion with my officials this morning, and we discussed this very topic. As I said, we will be discussing it further with those of my colleagues who are concerned with this. I have very strong views on providing equipment, etc., and I realize the importance of having that rolling stock for this year's crop when it is harvested.

POTATOES—EFFECT OF SUPPLYING ROLLING STOCK TO RAILROAD ON RATE INCREASE

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister if the supplying of the rolling stock as proposed by him will be enough assistance to the railroad that it will be able to withdraw any request for any increase in rate whatsoever for the forthcoming season.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, that depends on the progress we make on my submission.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

CONFERENCE ON INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC CO-OPERATION—REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON RESULTS

Mr. Andrew Brewin (Greenwood): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Acting Prime Minister. I believe the Acting Prime Minister has just returned from an extremely important conference in Paris known, I think, as the North-South Conference in which trade relations between the developed and the developing world were discussed. I would like to ask the Acting Prime Minister if he will make a statement to this House on the outcome of the conference and on any obligations Canada might assume as a result of the conference.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillies: Why are you applauding? It was a failure.

Mr. MacEachen: The Conference on International Economic Co-operation in Paris has concluded. Twenty-seven nations were represented. The conference concluded with an agreed joint statement by all 27 participants in which all participants acknowledged that this had been a useful exercise in terms of broadening their understanding of international questions, and they committed themselves to continuing the dialogue.

Mr. Gillies: It was a failure.

Mr. MacEachen: In my estimation the conference achieved substantial results in very important fields, although there were disappointments on both sides. In my view the conference had a very positive result, and that analysis is shared by other leaders on both sides of the conference.

Mr. Gillies: Have you read the reports about 21 items of disagreement?

Mr. Brewin: I wonder if the minister could make a statement to the House, which could be commented on, as to the points on which there was success and as to the points on which there was no success, because this is a matter about which all the people of Canada are concerned and about which they should be interested. We would like the fullest possible explanation from the minister.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I intended to tell the hon. member, in direct response to his question, that I have under consideration making a lengthier statement to the House on this question so that hon. members can comment, and in this way I might be able to answer in more detail those questions which are raised. I did use this occasion to make a brief reply, if only to counter what I consider to be highly irresponsible interjections by the hon. member for Don Valley.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

CONFERENCE ON INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC CO-OPERATION—REASON FOR DISAGREEMENT

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister, and it relates to the disappointments to which the minister himself referred in connection with the North-South Conference. Inasmuch as the final communique listed 20 points of agreement but 21 points of disagreement, which led to the appropriate interjection of the hon. member for Don Valley, were these disagreements brought about by the intransigence of the oil producing nations to enter into an energy dialogue with industrial countries so that the price of oil over the next few years could be stabilized?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member referred to items at the conference upon which there was agreement and upon which there was disagreement. That, of course, reveals that there are still differences of opinion between the two groups on quite a number of issues, but there has been agreement on some very substantial issues, issues upon which the position, for example, of the industrialized countries has moved rather dramatically in the last three months.

The disappointment on the side of the industrialized countries, referred to as the group of eight, was basically at the failure of the conference to agree that there ought to be a continuing dialogue on the question of energy. The hon. member asks me to identify the cause of that failure. Certainly the total group of 19 took that position—the OPEC oil producing countries and non-oil producing, developing countries—and even to the present time some of the aspects of the dynamics of the negotiations are still obscure to me, even though I was there, but I do believe that the leadership against that dialogue seemed to come from a certain element of the OPEC countries. That is the answer I would like to give.

CONFERENCE ON INTERNATIONAL ECONOMIC CO-OPERATION—POSSIBILITY AID OFFER REVIEWED IN VIEW OF DISAGREEMENT

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, following the disappointing conclusion of the conference last week the Secretary of State for External Affairs told the press that Canada's offer which was made at the North-South Conference may have to be reviewed. Can the minister state whether it is the policy of the government to review the aid offer which was made at the North-South Conference upward or downward?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I noticed a press report which attributed such a statement to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. It was a press report which obviously came prior to the conclusion of the conference. It was open to the industrialized countries to withdraw the rather substantial commitments they made in the early stages of the conference, in the face of the refusal of the developing countries to agree to a continuing energy dialogue. However, after careful consideration by all members of the group of eight it was decided that in the interest of a positive conclusion and in the interest of continuing this very important dialogue, we would live up to all the commitments we had made, including the special action program of $1 billion which had been put on the table by the eight countries as a way of ameliorating the condition of the developing countries. To my knowledge there is no intention on the part of the government of Canada or any other government to withdraw from positions which they have taken at the conference itself.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE

CO-OPERATION OF PROVINCES IN CONTROLLING PORNOGRAPHY

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): A supplementary question for the Minister of Justice. Can the minister inform the House whether he is receiving full co-operation from all provincial Attorneys General in his efforts to control pornography and is it his intention to continue discussions with provincial representatives?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Generally yes, recognizing of course that the primary responsibility for prosecution under the Criminal Code lies with the provincial Attorneys General. A number of them have shown great interest in taking such prosecutions but none have made suggestions to me about amendments to the Criminal Code which might be appropriate in the circumstances.

Mr. Towers: A supplementary question. Could the minister tell the House whether the government intends to exercise its full powers in this field?

Mr. Basford: We have federal authority in this regard under the provisions of the Customs Act which are administered by the department of Customs and Excise and which I think have been fully exercised.

PORNOGRAPHY

SUGGESTED ESTABLISHMENT OF TASK FORCE TO STUDY MEASURES TO CONTROL

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister. Can he tell the House whether the government intends to act on the specific recommendations that have been given to the Minister of National Revenue, namely, to restrict the ports of entry and to make changes to the Criminal Code? Could he also inform the House if the government would be disposed to set up a parliamentary task force to look into all aspects of pornography with particular reference to pornography directed at children and the increase in this aspect?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, that idea which I heard when the motion under Standing Order 43 was moved earlier, does not at first sight seem to answer the problem of pornography in Canada. When members of this House on both sides have not been able to make up their minds to question the legal provisions and when the opposition House leader can state publicly that "pornography is both harmless and harmful," I do not understand where we are to go.

I think the question of abuse of children in the preparation of pornographic material is a serious problem. Most of such material is printed outside Canada, however, and we are back to the question of the use of customs mechanisms to control pornography.

I should like to draw the attention of my colleagues to the real problem of hate literature and magazines promoting violence which are also distributed to our population. I would like to be equipped with the proper legal tools to fulfil my responsibilities. If I can express a personal opinion I think it is time for this House to reassess a legal provision which goes back to the last century.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Speaker: In accordance with Standing Order 40 and our modified practices for the month of June, may I inform the House of the questions to be raised at six o'clock p.m. upon the motion for adjournment which are as follows: The hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald)—Supply and Services; the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie)—Administration of Justice; the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche)—Commonwealth Games.

I cannot rule on the point of special procedures during this month of June without touching on the aspect of the order which relates to the hours of sitting on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays. The order reads as follows:

> That, commencing May 31, 1977 and continuing to June 30, 1977, notwithstanding any Standing Order:
> (1) Any Standing Order that establishes a forty minute limit on speeches shall be deemed to establish a thirty minute limit;

The areas of concern at the moment, however, are subparagraphs (2) and (3) which read as follows:

> (2) Except on days allotted pursuant to Standing Order 58, on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays, the House shall continue to sit until 10.30 p.m.;
> (3) On Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays, the House shall sit from 11 a.m. to 1.00 p.m. to consider Government Orders other than the business of supply, provided that proceedings pursuant to Standing Order 15(2) and (3) shall be taken up at the usual time;

The difference in the language between subparagraph (2) and subparagraph (3), upon careful consideration of the order, gives the impression that subparagraph (2) specifically excepts allotted days pursuant to Standing Order 58—that relates to the provision of sitting an extra half hour between 10 p.m. and 10.30 p.m.

Subparagraph (3) does not use that language and would invite the conclusion that even though tomorrow is an allotted day pursuant to Standing Order 58, the order on the face of it would provide for sitting between 11 a.m. and 1 p.m. to consider government business. I am open to discussion on whether that was the intention of the order and the discussions which led to the order, and I think for the benefit of hon. members the sooner we clear this up the better.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, this matter has been questioned by the various parties. I expect that we will have a meeting in early afternoon and I can possibly come back to the House with a solution.

Mr. Speaker: Perhaps the matter could stand for an announcement at five o'clock or six o'clock this afternoon.

PRIVILEGE

MR. BALDWIN—ALLEGED ATTEMPT BY GOVERNMENT TO INTERFERE WITH NEWS MEDIA

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, as required by the rules I have given Your Honour notice of a question of privilege and if you find there is a prima facie case I shall move a motion at the conclusion of my remarks. I do not think it will have escaped Your Honour's attention that in a motion under Standing Order 43 I raised a matter which in my submission is a very important area of privilege affecting every member of the House.

Your Honour is aware, as are members on both sides of the House, that we have been very careful not to restrictively define "question of privilege", leaving it to be modelled and to conform to situations as they may arise. It is my submission that the inalienable right of members of the House to discharge their responsibilities would be seriously interfered with if the free flow of information about what goes on in this House and in government were restricted by what I consider could be characterized as improper actions on the part of members of the government. It is on that basis that I think it is for the Chair to be bold and to find reasons to bring the rights of members of the House into conformity with modern day technology. It would be an assault on reality not to realize that in this day and age not to communicate what goes on in government to the public is a rejection of an essential privilege of the public, manifested through members of this House.

I have indicated several areas of complaint to the House and I will not go over them in detail again. There is the question of the abrasive actions taken by the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his supporters in connection with the CBC. This has been a matter of discussion in the House and the subject of questions and motions. I will deal briefly with the allegation of the suppression of the June 4 weekend supplement in the two daily newspapers in Regina and Saskatoon. The Canadian carried an article entitled "The Unhappy Landing of Otto Lang". The Acting Prime Minister (Mr. MacEachen) indicated that he would make some inquiry into this and report back to the House. For that reason I will not pursue it any further at this time but I suggest the very fact that the Acting Prime Minister is prepared to do this is a prima facie indication that there is substance to the allegation.

● (1510)

I should like to quote from the article appearing in today's Globe and Mail, headed, "Liberal MP says party in panic since PQ win." Some statements in the article are in quotation marks, obviously indicating statements taken verbatim by the reporter reporting what the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont said. This is how the Globe and Mail puts it:

> He told a group of journalists attending a seminar that the federal Government is deliberately and systematically trying to strip the courts of their power to interpret the laws of the country.
> It is also trying to 'domesticate' and 'harness' the press in Canada because it fears the press and hasn't been able to control it.

> Mr. Joyal said the government is changing the rules of the democratic game without the knowledge of most people. 'The very foundations of our society are involved," he said.

The article goes on to say:

> Mr. Joyal said it is not simply coincidence that the federal government has introduced three pieces of legislation in which the court is no longer the final recourse to the interpretation of the law.

He went on to mention Bill C-42, the telecommunications legislation, the new immigration bill and the recently introduced bill relating to the question of privacy.

According to the article, the hon. member's position is as follows:

> The government is also very much afraid of the press because 'the only opposition in Ottawa right now is the press' he said. He said it is the press that takes the case to the government, that digs up the contradictions and inaccuracies of cabinet ministers.
>
> 'There is a phobia in Ottawa, a fixed idea to domesticate this power of the press, to harness it', he said . . .
> 'There's often been criticism of the press before but never as much since Nov. 15. There is a feeling of panic about the press. We had to feel assured we wouldn't get a trick bounce out of the press' he said.

The article reports further comment along the same lines. I submit that almost any one of these incidents standing alone could be cause for concern; taken together, they constitute far more than a prima facie case that this government is moving to restrict the inalienable right of this House to see that the public is informed of the processes of government. The public must be informed both of what goes on in the House, and what goes on in government circles. The hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont suggests that what the government is doing is related to legislation before this House and before parliament, and indicates the government's motives. That in itself suggests that the government has made certain that more is included in its legislation than meets the eye of this House; that these legislative proposals are intended to restrict the rights of the courts to hear and interpret legislation this House passes.

I suggest in addition that this House has a vested interest in connection with the people involved in reporting what goes on in the House and the actions of government and parliament. I am referring to the press gallery, and the reporters, a group with which this House has had a longstanding and traditionally sensitive relationship. I suggest that any act, any proposal or any suggestion, as conveyed by the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont, that the government is involved in attempting to control the free flow of information strikes at the heart of the rights of members of this House.

Finally, it is suggested that the government is involved in diminishing the powers of the courts, to which parliament entrust the interpretation and judicial implementation of legislation enacted by Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons. That is a further blow at the powers of this House, and at the rights and privileges of individual members.

I will not continue at length. It is a simple case. I think the Chair must look carefully at the allegations, to see if there is not a course of conduct involved in these actions by which the privileges of all members of the House and the inalienable rights of all members to function on behalf of the public of Canada are being curtailed. If the government has nothing to fear, let it accept the motion I am about to move. If Your Honour finds there is a prima facie case of privilege I would move:

That the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections inquire into the statementes alleged to have been made by the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont, which appear in today's edition of the Globe and Mail, and into related or other incidents, which indicate that the rights of parliament on behalf of the people to have full and unabridged reporting of the actions of government are being threatened.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As a minimum I would accept the earlier indication of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) that an aspect of the presentation he has made on the alleged question of privileges relates to allegations concerning the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) in respect of certain journals in one or two provinces. That being the case, it is only appropriate, I think, that the matter should stand over until the Minister of Transport is in the House, so that we may see if he wants to make a contribution on this subject. That would be in line with the earlier, brief comments of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen). However, there may at this time be other hon. members who may wish to contribute on this question of privilege.

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) and in particular refer to these words of his motion, "... inquire ... into related or other incidents, ..." I wish to speak particularly on one of these "related or other incidents".

It seems to me that the basic duty of this House is to protect the freedoms of the Canadian people, not the least of which, indeed one of the most important of which, is the freedom of the press. This House must protect the right of fair comment on any matters whatsoever, including the conduct of those elected as members of this House.

Last weekend the "Canadian Magazine" failed to appear in Saskatchewan. It was alleged that this failure to appear was attributable possibly to interference or pressure exerted by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) or those acting on his behalf. If this is so, that action contravenes parliament's right to protect freedom of the press—

Mr. Speaker: Order please. Is the President of the Privy Council rising on a point of order?

Mr. MacEachen: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I rise on a point of order. Surely there is some sense of justice left in the House of Commons. A question of privilege has been raised concerning the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), and another question of privilege is based on statements alleged to have been made by the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Joyal). Neither person is in the House, and debate is proceeding on the question of privilege. Where is the sense of fair play and justice of this House?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order please. That is why, after the hon. member for Peace River had explained his position in raising the question of privilege, I suggested the matter might stand over. However, I was not able to determine if the contribution which other members wished to make ought to be made in the presence of those other hon. members. I really think that it is in keeping with our practices if the presentations on this kind of motion could take place in the presence of those who are accused. I see the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) rising.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I listened carefully to what Your Honour said, and I thought in fact that you had invited comment without limitation. If we are to ensure compliance on the point the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) raised, I suggest it is incumbent on him to ask the two members, whose names have been mentioned in connection with the matter, to attend in this House so that the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt) and others who may wish to contribute on this matter may do so, without being fettered, except to the extent that Your Honour may fetter them. If that is agreeable to you and to members of the House, any member who wishes to participate in the debate on the matters raised by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) particularly in his motion, ought to be able to do so then. I think there is a duty on the President of the Privy Council to rise in his place to ensure that the Minister and the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont will be here so that the matter can be settled rather than straggle on for a number of days. This is a very important issue.

• (1520)

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, it is not my fault or that of the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin) that the other two members are absent from this House. As the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) has pointed out, it behooves the government House leader to guarantee us not just that they will be here some day, but when. Those of us on this side, just as those on the other side, have other plans, obligations and things they must do. I do not feel it is fair that if a member wants to raise a question of privilege he should be curtailed from doing so by the mere absence of someone opposite who probably is not here because he knew this would be raised.

Some hon. Members: Shame!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Whether it be done voluntarily, as has frequently been the case in the past, or whether those who wish to participate are not prepared to do it voluntarily, I should insist that at least on an initial basis, particularly in the case of a minister—I know it will be argued that hon. members are on an equal basis, but it is difficult to expect that a minister's schedule can be changed on a moment's notice to permit him to be here because he has been the subject of some question over a particular news article—that the courtesy be extended of indicating in a preliminary way that a question of privilege will be raised, particularly one that concerns two members, and that their ability to be present at the earliest possible moment be explored. The matter should proceed at the earliest possible moment in the presence of those two members. Therefore, the matter perhaps ought to stand over for at least one day. I will call the question tomorrow at three o'clock.

MR. McKINNON—ALLEGATION MINISTER MISLED HOUSE CONCERNING ADMIRAL BOYLE'S RESIGNATION

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege goes back a few days. I indicated to Your Honour on May 16 that I intended to raise a question of privilege on the first occasion on which the Minister of National Defence (Mr. Danson) and I were simultaneously in the House. That occasion is now with us.

As I mentioned briefly on May 16, my reason for raising this question of privilege, my first in over four years as a member, is the difference between the answers given to me in this House by the minister and the statements made by Vice-Admiral Boyle. With your permission, I will quote from excerpts from Hansard and some of the statements of Vice-Admiral Boyle.

On May 13, I asked the Minister if he would enlighten the House as to the reasons for the early retirement of Vice-Admiral Boyle. The Minister replied:

It reflects the normal rotation of commanders which has taken place throughout the armed forces with the appointment of the new CDS.

I asked a supplementary question:

Does the minister deny that Admiral Boyle was asked to resign—

The Minister replied:

Mr. Speaker, I can absolutely deny the allegation of the hon. member.

I asked the minister a second supplementary, and I quote the second half:

Is it not true that after he declined to resign he was offered a position which would have removed him from any participation in naval affairs for the rest of his service?

The minister replied:

Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman is still suggesting that the admiral was asked to resign.

That tells us what the minister had to say about the resignation at that time. The Globe and Mail came out with a CP release from Halifax dated May 19, and I quote:

Admiral Boyle was asked to resign his post here but when he refused he was offered a position in Ottawa which he originally declined.

The Montreal Gazette came out with a story on May 14 headlined "Admiral was asked to resign". I quote from the story:

Vice-Admiral Douglas Boyle was asked to resign as a commander of the navy by military brass, he said yesterday.

The Globe and Mail of May 14 stated, and I quote:

I was asked to quit Admiral Boyle reveals . . . Vice-Admiral Boyle confirmed yesterday he had been asked to resign . . . Mr. Danson invited Admiral Boyle to Ottawa to hear his side of the story and was embarrassed to admit yesterday that he did not know about the Falls-Boyle confrontation.

There are many more statements that could be quoted to show the contradiction. I find difficulty in believing that all of these members of the press gallery were individually and collectively misled into believing something that was not true. I will summarize briefly.

The minister claimed that Vice-Admiral Boyle had not been asked to resign and that his resignation was a normal routine retirement. Anyone accepting Vice-Admiral Boyle's statements would have to conclude that the minister has indeed misled the House.

I have never said, or indeed thought that the minister did so deliberately. It is my opinion that he did so through being uninformed or ignorant of what was going on in the Department of National Defence in the weeks prior to the resignation. Why else would the minister be embarrassed by what he found out from his discussion with Vice-Admiral Boyle on the afternoon of the 13th of May, shortly after he had stated unequivocally that Boyle was not asked to resign. He would not be embarrassed by any misunderstanding between two senior officers. No, Mr. Speaker, he could only be embarrassed in this instance by finding out that he had unwittingly misled the House.

The Minister did not in any way qualify his remarks in the House on May 13. Had he prefaced his remarks by the usual cautionary remarks such as "to the best of his knowledge" or that "he couldn't be expected to know everything that took place in private conversations between senior officers", it would have been understandable and forgiveable, but no, he stated quite flatly, definitely and unequivocally that Vice-Admiral Boyle had not been asked to resign and that this was a routine retirement.

If this were only a matter of disagreement or debate between the minister and myself, believe me, I would not consider it important enough for my first question of privilege in this House, but the reputation of a third person is at stake here. If the minister's statements were to remain unchanged and unchallenged, it would mean that the statements of Vice-Admiral Boyle are considered by this House to be fabrications.

Two things should be considered here. First, Vice-Admiral Boyle and not the minister was present at the meeting Boyle had with the senior officer or officers at NDHQ when his resignation was allegedly requested. Second, the reputation, and a very good reputation it is, of the senior naval officer in the Canadian forces has been or will likely be tarnished if the hearsay evidence, unfortunately placed by the minister in Hansard is allowed to stand, and it should not be overlooked that Vice-Admiral Boyle has no opportunity to defend himself in the same forum in which he has been accused. You are no doubt aware, Mr. Speaker, that an opportunity for him to present his side of the case to the Standing Committee on National Defence was vetoed by the government majority on the steering committee.

I sincerely hope that the minister will now rise and admit that he was either ill-informed, misinformed or uninformed when he made his misleading remarks on May 13 concerning Vice-Admiral Boyle's resignation, and I hope he will withdraw them. If he is the gentleman and parliamentarian I have always considered him to be, he will do so. In the unlikely event that the minister is not willing to do so, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie),

That the matter of the Minister of National Defence misleading the House concerning Vice-Admiral Boyle's resignation be referred to the Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections.

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as a result of the allegations made by the hon. member, I have reviewed the correspondence exchanged between Admiral Boyle and myself and with other officers of the department. I have inquired about discussions as well. It would be normal in reading the correspondence that Admiral Boyle would construe that one of the alternatives available to him was that of resignation. In my view, the manner in which the question of resignation has been raised is a legitimate misunderstanding. I am aware that the option of his resignation was privately discussed with him as would be normal between senior officers under similar circumstances.

I very much regret that Admiral Boyle, who has served Canada well for the past 38 years, apparently interpreted the discussions and the exchange of correspondence as a request for resignation, when in fact it was only another alternative open to him, as it would be to any other senior serving officer.

● (1530)

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, may I take part in this matter?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Halifax-East Hants.

Mr. McCleave: Mr. Speaker, I have spoken to Admiral Boyle on this. He did not want to release the correspondence himself but he did say that he hoped, for the sake of his own reputation, the minister would be good enough to release the correspondence the minister has mentioned. Therefore, I make that request on behalf of Admiral Boyle.

Mr. Danson: Certainly, I have no objection, Mr. Speaker, as I have indicated earlier. However, since it is personal and confidential correspondence I would really want to have the assurance of Admiral Boyle himself. Then, I would have no hesitation in tabling the correspondence that ensued.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: Order. It is extraordinary to allow a member to participate twice in discussion on the same subject. Unless there is a specific way in which the hon. member for Victoria might be of assistance at this time, I would have to have some indication of the nature of the contribution he wishes to make.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I simply wish to say that, in view of the sterility of the reply of the minister, I wish my motion to stand.

[Mr. McKinnon.]

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. In the circumstances the Chair would certainly like some time to review the matter and consider the precedents. In particular, I would like to review the previous contribution of the hon. member for Victoria and to examine the contents of the minister's answer carefully to see whether or not there is a difference of opinion or a difference of interpretation, either in the answers given by the minister in the House or leading up to those answers, of the events now described by the minister occurring between Admiral Boyle and the minister. In any case, I should like to reserve on the matter to study these answers very carefully and see to what conclusion they lead me. Therefore, I will reserve my opinion on the question of privilege.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I just want to give notice that I may have a question of privilege to raise tomorrow as a result of an answer given by the Minister of National Revenue (Miss Bégin) to another member which unfortunately I did not hear but which has been related to me. I should like to take a look at the matter but I thought I should serve notice on you now, sir.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, in connection with the point of order raised on the question of privilege raised by the hon. member for Peace River (Mr. Baldwin), I should have said earlier that I have a statement I wish to make tomorrow when the subject comes up, and that I do not want anyone on the other side saying that they had no notice. It has nothing to do with the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) and it has not anything directly to do with the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Joyal); it is another illustration of what we feel to be a dangerous situation in connection with interference with the media and the free flow of information from parliament to the people. It relates to the situation in radio and television communications in Newfoundland, to the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) and his position. I will be making a submission on the matter tomorrow, Mr. Speaker, but I wanted to give notice so that I do not hear any member crying out "unfair" or whatever. It is a serious point that I have to raise.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, can the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council inform the House what he intends to deal with today in terms of government business and for the balance of the week which is allotted to the government?

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, I can give an initial indication at this stage of the order of business. The next two days, of course, are allotted days. For the balance of the day, we will be proceeding with the legislation relating to small harbours, which we are in the process of dealing with at the moment. We will then move on to Bill C-23, the metric legislation and, depending on our progress, our intention at this stage is to move then to Bill C-36, relating to motor vehicle safety.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): On the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I ask what happened to the representations that I made to the parliamentary secretary on Friday? Since we are scraping the barrel, it might be a good idea to deal with Bill C-30.

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, I undertook to my hon. friend to raise this item with the President of the Privy Council upon his return to the House. Unfortunately I have not personally had an opportunity to do that yet but I will take it up at the first opportunity.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): So shall I.

VETERANS AFFAIRS

THIRTY-THIRD ANNIVERSARY OF D-DAY LANDING IN NORMANDY

Hon. Daniel J. MacDonald (Minister of Veterans Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to inform hon. members that today is the 33rd anniversary of the D-Day landing in Normandy. Thirty-three years ago today men of Canada joined with their British and United States allies to breach the wall of darkness and oppression which for four long years had lain like a millstone on France and the low countries. It was D-Day for freedom, the start of the northwest European campaign which culminated, 11 months later, in the complete surrender of the enemies of freedom.

The cost in lives was high. On D-Day alone, Canada suffered almost a thousand casualties, of whom 340 were killed or died of wounds. The men who fell on the beaches and in the bitter bridgehead battles are buried in Beny-sur-Mer Canadian War Cemetery and today officials, both miliary and civilian, from our Canadian Embassy in Paris have laid wreaths at that site in memory of those courageous soldiers. Those wreaths were placed there today in the name of all Canadians, a significant reminder to the free world that Canada, and every province in Canada, played a major role in obtaining the way of life we enjoy today.

June 6, 1944 is an important day in the history of our country as a nation—the D-Day landing in Normany—and if we still believe in Canada as we did when that belief called for sacrifice, we will again commit ourselves to the task at hand, to preserve the integrity of Canada as a nation from sea to sea.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, with all members of this House who are veterans of the Second World War, I want to join with the Minister of Veterans Affairs to mention the anniversary which is celebrated in memory of millions of Canadians and which will remain for all of us, I would say, one of the most shining memories of our lives.

[English]

If I make a personal reflection at this point, Mr. Speaker, I recall being a prisoner of war in Germany following the Dieppe raid, and I am sure that those of us who had access to clandestine radio at that time had no greater surge of hope than the June 6 landing. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, that by that time the western nations had had four years of very bitter experience and despair in World War II, but then we had this glorious day, June 6.

I had been an ocular witness on many of the beaches where colleagues of other regiments landed, some to give up their lives, others to be wounded, but all as Canadians fighting for the protection of Canada against disintegration from outside. That generation knew what was going to happen to Canada if the enemy prevailed. To repeat what the minister has said, millions of Canadians were enrolled in Canada's armed forces during World War II. Thousands upon thousands died and many more thousands were wounded. This country went through a great sacrifice in order to take one more step in the welding of a nation. We have no intention of seeing that welded nation dismembered at any time by anyone.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, we of the New Democratic Party believe it is highly appropriate that the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) has made the statement which he just delivered to the House on this thirty-third anniversary of the D-Day landing at Normandy. The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) has given us his recollections of the day from a vantage point which we appreciate and respect. I recall that it was a very solemn day here in this House of Commons. We had a statement from the then prime minister, the Right Hon. Mackenzie King, of what was developing. I also recall for a portion of that day we gathered as members across in Room 16 to listen to a radio broadcast from London which included a message from His Majesty King George VI. We were aware of the great significance of that day.

I find that on that day it fell to me, as it has on a number of occasions, to speak on behalf of our party. I used words on June 6, 1944, that I can use again and perhaps keep it very brief. This was my concluding sentence:

We associate ourselves not only with what has been said but with the spirit which rightly pervades the House at this historic moment.

Sir, 33 years later we associate ourselves with what has been said by the Minister of Veterans Affairs and by the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), and we join with members in a determination to preserve the integrity of Canada as a nation from sea to sea.

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my party, I want to join with the Minister of Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) in commemorating the 33rd anniversary of that famous battle. I never served in the army, but some of my relatives came back from that battle, having lost some of their limbs. They related to us the famous battle of Normandy. I believe it is a duty for all Canadians to remember each year those soldiers who, I hope and I am convinced, fought for a good cause when they responded to the S.O.S. of the people of Europe.

SUMMER EMPLOYMENT PROGRAMMES

Question No. 1,712—Mr. Howie:

For the year 1976, did the Department of the Solicitor General have any student summer employment programmes in (a) Canada (b) New Brunswick and, if so, in each case (i) what were they (ii) how many persons were given direct summer employment and what were the wages (iii) what was the cost?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Yes. (a)(i) The ministry was responsible for a Summer Student Employment and Activities Programme across Canada in 1976, made possible through Manpower and Immigration's Summer Student Employment and Activities Programme (SSEAP). Activities in this programme included regular patrol duties with the R.C.M.P. and a variety of surveys, research projects, and community liaison projects. (ii) 208 Students were given direct summer employment. The breakdown by Agency was: R.C.M.P., 55; C.P.S., 56; N.P.S., 66; N.P.B., 5; Secretariat, 26. All of the students (except those in the R.C.M.P.) were paid on the basis of years of education successfully completed. The pay scale ranged from $3.10 per hour for qualifying university year, Technological College, C.E.G.E.P. to $6.60 per hour for students who had successfully completed eight years university. The R.C.M.P. students were paid a flat rate of $4.99 per hour in accordance with the R.C.M.P. acts and regulations. The average total salary (including 4 per cent vacation pay) for the students employed in the Ministry during the summer period was $2,974.04. (iii) The total cost of the programme, including salary, travel costs, and administrative costs was $700,000. (b) (i-iii) As part of the ministry's summer programme outlined above, 18 students were employed in the province of New Brunswick. This number is included in the total of 208 above. The projects in New Brunswick did not form a programme of their own; they were part of the overall Canada program. Costs are included in the costs of (a) above. Of the 18 students in New Brunswick, seven were employed with the R.C.M.P., two with C.P.S., two with N.P.S., and seven with the Ministry Secretariat.

MR. J. C. DOYLE—ACTION FOR ARREARS OF TAXES

Question No. 1,749—Mr. Crosbie:

1. Has the government received any monies from Mr. John C. Doyle of Canadian Javelin Limited in connection with an action taken against him by the government for arrears of taxes and in connection with a judgement of Mr. Justice Hugh Gibson in the Exchequer Court of Canada and, if not, what is the amount now owing under the judgement for arrears of taxes, penalties and interest?

2. On what date was the judgement of Mr. Justice Gibson delivered?

3. Did Mr. Doyle appeal the judgement of Mr. Justice Gibson and, if so, on what date?

4. Has the appeal been heard by the appeal court and, if not (a) for what reason (b) what is its present status (c) will it be set down for a hearing and, if so, before what appeal court?

5. Has the government a lien registered against all shareholdings of Mr. Doyle in Canadian Javelin Limited and an attachment registered against Canadian Javelin Limited for any monies that might be due and owing by Canadian Javelin Limited to Mr. Doyle?

6. Is the government aware that Canadian Javelin Limited is making payments to a subsidiary in the Bahamas, Javelin Export Limited, so that the said subsidiary can pay consultants salary and expenses to Mr. Doyle and, if so, what action is the government taking to stop payment of such monies?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): 1. There were two judgments delivered by Mr. Justice Gibson involving income tax assessments concerning Mr. John C. Doyle. These judgments were not rendered following an action taken by the government for arrears of taxes but as a result of appeals by the taxpayer from income tax assessments. The government of Canada has not received any monies from Mr. John C. Doyle as a result of these judgments relating to these appeals from assessments. However, prior to these judgments of Mr. Justice Gibson, action was taken which secured the Crown's claim against Mr. Doyle. It should be noted as a result of a decline in the market value of the security held, the Crown's claim is now only partly secured. The amount of income tax and interest owing as of December 31, 1976 in relation to the judgments of Mr. Justice Gibson was approximately $3,483,412.

2. Both judgments of Mr. Justice Gibson were delivered on June 29, 1970.

3. Mr. Doyle appealed both judgments of Mr. Justice Gibson on October 15, 1970.

4. The appeals from these two judgments have not yet been heard by the Supreme Court of Canada. One of these appeals was set down for the winter session of the Supreme Court of Canada but an application was made by the appellant and agreed to by the Department of National Revenue and the Department of Justice to the removal of this case from the winter session, provided that it be reinscribed again for the spring term of the Supreme Court of Canada. This was the only occasion where consent to an adjournment was given by the government of Canada. The other appeal will be heard as soon as possible, but not before the Fall session. It was delayed by consideration of a procedural question as to whether this appeal can be dealt with before another case respecting the same taxation year is heard and decided by the Federal Court. The latter case is one of seven appeals involving John C. Doyle and Javelin Foundries and Machine Works Limited which are presently before the Federal Court. Extensive discussions have been had since the institution of these appeals with regard to their disposition and the payment of the tax claimed to be owing by both taxpayers. All of these cases are to be brought forward to be disposed of by the Court as quickly as possible.

5. 1,009,526 shares of Canadian Javelin Limited have been attached by way of a seizure on the books of the transfer agents. In addition, a Writ of Extent was issued out of the Exchequer Court on July 8, 1963 for the sum of $3,410,-130.90. Other action has been taken, but this must remain confidential under the provisions of section 241 of the Income Tax Act.

6. The government is aware that certain payments have been made by Canadian Javelin Limited to a subsidiary in the Bahamas, Javelin Export Limited. Because of the provisions of the Income Tax Act, a more specific reply cannot be given to this question. This matter is being actively considered by officials of both the Department of National Revenue and the Department of Justice.

MEDICAL FACILITIES IN MAXIMUM, MEDIUM AND MINIMUM SECURITY PRISONS

Question No. 1,862—Mr. Yewchuk:

1. What medical facilities are present in each maximum, medium and minimum security prison?

2. Do prisons and penitentiaries give physical examinations when admitting prisoners and, if so, how many prisons and penitentiaries?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): 1. In maximum and medium institutions, Health Care Centres are staffed on a 24 hour basis by Health Care Officers. Physicians are available on a full-time or contractual basis and visit two to five times per week, depending on need, and are on call at all other times for emergencies. In minimum institutions arrangements vary depending on size and location. For example: Forestry camps are equipped with first aid room and equipment. During regular hours the attending physician usually visits once a week or the inmates go to outside clinics, hospitals or physician's office for treatment. In emergency situations and during silent hours, inmates go to outside clinics, local hospitals or physician's office for treatment. Farm Annexes: During regular hours the Health Care Officers from the parent institution visit and look after minor needs or refer the inmate to the parent institution for care by the staff or contract physician. In emergency situations and during the silent hours, the parent institution provides the services.

2. Yes. Regulations provide for every male and female inmate to be given a preliminary medical and dental examination within 24 hours of his initial reception in a penitentiary and a complete medical examination within seven days. Physical examinations are given to male inmates on entering the penitentiary system at the Regional Reception Centres in: Pacific Region (British Columbia Penitentiary); Ontario Region (Kingston Penitentiary); Quebec Region (Archambault Institution). In the Prairie and Atlantic Regions, the physical examinations are performed at the receiving institution as designated by the National Parole Service. Physical examinations are given to female inmates at the Prison for Women, Kingston, Ontario.

FISHERMEN—BAY OF FUNDY

Question No. 1,909—Miss Campbell:

1. For the year 1976, what amount was spent by the government to assist the seiners of the Bay of Fundy?

2. What assistance was provided by the government to the Bay of Fundy Herring Co-operative to buy and sell fish to the Polish fishing fleet?

3. Did the government make any payments to any Canadians for the buying and selling of fish to the Polish fishing fleet?

Mr. Jim Fleming (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): 1. No direct assistance was paid to the Bay of Fundy seiner fishermen for herring caught in 1976.

2. Two fishermen and one consultant under contract assisted the Co-operative not only to sell fish to the Polish fishing fleet but assisted the Co-operative in its entire operation. They also helped the department in the development and implementation of the new management regime. The total cost was $80,000.

3. No.

STUDENT SUMMER EMPLOYMENT PROGRAMMES

Question No. 2,423—Mr. Marshall:

1. What additional staff was hired and what was the cost to operate the Student Summer Employment Programme (a) Non-medical use of drugs (b) Health Activities (c) Community Agencies under the Department of National Health and Welfare?

2. Are any other programmes available for students under the Department?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): 1 and 2. Please refer to the reply to Question No. 1,713 answered on May 10, 1977, Hansard 120, page 5462.

Order Paper Questions

COST OF STUDENT SUMMER EMPLOYMENT PROGRAMME

Question No. 2,427—Mr. Marshall:

1. What additional staff was hired and what was the cost to operate the Student Summer Employment Programme—Public Service Employment under the Public Service Commission?

2. Are any other programmes available for students under the Department?

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): I am informed by the Public Service Commission as follows: 1. The Public Service Commission administers the Post-Secondary Student Recruitment Programme (previously known as COSEP*). For the 1977 recruitment programme, 1.7 additional man-years were staffed by the Public Service Commission. The total cost for conducting this summer employment programme is six man-years (including the above mentioned 1.7 man-years) and 7,000 non-salary dollars (including publicity, printing of application forms and necessary staffing documents).

2. None.

* COSEP (Career Oriented Summer Employment Programme).

STUDENTS HIRED TO ACT AS CUSTOMS OFFICIALS AT BORDER CROSSING POINTS

Question No. 2,447—Mr. Alexander:

1. By province and territory, how many students were hired, or will be hired, to act as customs officials at border crossing points this summer?

2. How many are related to fulltime customs employees, either as a son or daughter, niece or nephew, cousin or in-law?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Revenue): 1.

Province	Number of Students
Nova Scotia	12
New Brunswick	27
Newfoundland	2
Quebec	87
Ontario	256
Manitoba	26
Saskatchewan	9
Alberta	27
British Columbia	106
Yukon Territory	4

2. Statistics not available. Students are not asked to provide this information, nor is it contained in their Public Service Application for Employment form.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—USE OF COAL AT CFB GAGETOWN

Question No. 2,530—Mr. Fairweather:

1. Will coal from the Minto-Chipman area be used at CFB Gagetown and (a) if so, how far are the coal fields from Gagetown (b) if not, how far from Gagetown is the next available source?

2. Are the boilers at CFB Gagetown specially designed to use Minto-Chipman coal?

[Mr. Lalonde.]

Hon. Barney Danson (Minister of National Defence): 1. No. (a) Not applicable. (b) Sydney Cape Breton Area—approx 450 miles.

2. No.

FRESHWATER FISH MARKETING CORPORATION—TRANSCONA—PROPERTY TAXES

Question No. 2,536—Mr. Whiteway:

1. How much did the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation at Transcona, pay in property taxes, or as a grant-in-lieu-of-taxes in (a) 1975 (b) 1976?

2. For the same years, what was the cost for utilities for the Transcona plant?

Mr. Jim Fleming (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): 1. The Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation paid the following property taxes as grants in lieu of taxes:

	May 1, 1974 to April 30, 1975	May 1, 1975 to April 30, 1976
Property taxes	$105,927.00	$123,974.00
Business Tax	41,160.00	41,160.00

2. In the same period the utility costs were as follows:

	May 1, 1974 to April 30, 1975	May 1, 1975 to April 30, 1976
Sewer and Water	$37,370.00	$ 52,809.65
Hydro	81,764.00	100,326.90
Natural Gas	16,954.00	26,501.20

[English]

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Cossitt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order with regard to questions Nos. 29, 30, 41, 44 and a few others too numerous to mention on the same subject. I hesitate to rise on this because I have done so before on approximately half a dozen occasions without any success in finding out why these answers are not forthcoming. The questions have been on the order paper since the first day of this session, and they were on the order paper in the last two or three months of the last session. All of them concern flights by cabinet ministers on government-owned aircraft, the cost thereof, where the aircraft went and the purpose of the flight, whether it was government business, personal or of a political nature.

Even though the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) is absent, I feel this is a legitimate question to raise because I have raised it many times before in his presence and have received no response. Without referring to the matter of privilege, which was deferred until tomorrow, I would like to refer to the article entitled "The Unhappy Landing of Otto Lang" which appeared in the June 4, 1977 edition of the Canadian which quoted the Minister of Transport as saying that he would continue to use government aircraft whenever he wanted and that he had used government aircraft since the time he gave the answer to the House that he had spent three-quarters of a million dollars on his own flights. Therefore, if he is being so forthright in admitting the cost of his own department and his use of aircraft, and since he is the minister responsible for all ministers who use these aircraft for flights of a personal nature, then I think he should be just as open and just as free in giving information to the House about the Minister of Agriculture, (Mr. Whelan), for example, who has made 32 flights, and maybe more, on government aircraft for private visits with members of his family at the expense of taxpayers.

In conclusion, having raised this matter on a number of occasions, rather than being told these things are going to be answered soon, some time or probably never, I think the parliamentary secretary should now have the decency to rise and tell this House when we are going to receive answers to questions which have been outstanding for over a year.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Orders of the day.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

FISHING AND RECREATIONAL HARBOURS ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR ADMINISTRATION AND DEVELOPMENT OF CERTAIN HARBOURS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent) that Bill C-7, respecting the administration and development of certain fishing and recreational harbours in Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, just before the noon adjournment, I was speaking about some of the comments made by the parliamentary secretary and the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne) regarding the plans, thoughts and philosophy behind Bill C-7, the Fishing and Recreational Harbours Act. The minister pointed out earlier that this bill is really a culmination of several studies within the department. It flows from the original government harbours and piers act, which was fundamentally the bill back in 1895 and was revised in 1937. Obviously, there is some necessity to give some legislative framework to the order in council which has gathered the administration of small craft harbours under the Department of Fisheries and the Environment from the two previous departments which looked after it, the Department of Public Works and the Department of Transport.

The parliamentary secretary used the word "rationalization" rather freely. This is one of the areas of real concern to those of us from coast areas which have small craft harbours in their constituencies. Many of us have heard before the phrase "rationalization of rail services". We all know that the potential rail line abandonments in smaller places in the west and in the east have caused a good deal of concern in the rural or smaller areas of the country. Prior to that we had a rationalization of postal services under the then postmaster general, Mr. Kierans. All across the country from coast to coast under the logic of a cold efficiency and obviously, I guess, a dollar economy of rationalization, small post offices in the rural areas were wound down and closed out.

• (1550)

While I admit freely that this may be more efficient—although now in view of some of the activities of the Post Office Department we do wonder about that—what you can never put on an economic chart, Mr. Speaker, is the social distress that closure of a small post office in a rural area creates when a common meeting place, a place where you see your friends when you get your mail at a certain time, is eliminated. A little part of the heart and soul of that community is eliminated with it and you have a conflict going on, a paradox. The new social order gives lip service, anyway, to trying to broaden the urban base but, especially among the young people of this land, there is a very definite migration from the urban areas to rural areas. In terms of lifestyle, getting back to the land and to nature, you do not only have to eat granola in the morning, wheat germ in the afternoon and celery sticks at night-time to appreciate that there is inherent in an awful lot of Canadians a desire to move out of the concrete jungles and get back close to the land. Yet, when you get close to the land, you have a problem with post offices and in many areas of the country—and the Hall Commission reported on this not too long ago—you have a little problem with rail lines which have a potential to give rapid transit to people, let alone goods, wheat and raw resources, that no other mode of transport possesses.

So we come to this bill and we hit the word "rationalization" with reference to small craft harbours. Mr. Speaker, my riding in large measure runs along the Bay of Fundy in Nova Scotia. We all know that the Bay of Fundy has the highest tides in the world, which makes maintenance of wharves and piers that much more difficult. Members are surely by now aware of fantastic power potential there is in the Bay of Fundy tides. We are still talking about a review of the review of the review of the task force as to whether there is to be a Fundy tidal power project. This is a renewable resource, a free resource, and we still have not got too far off dead centre on it. But that potential power, especially in the storms, creates fantastic havoc with the facilities in these small ports.

Thus, I can see the reason why there has to be some reorganization in the administration of small craft harbours to involve, now, the recreational boater, which was certainly not a feature back in 1895. It was not valid, perhaps, in 1937. But I do caution those who will be implementing this Act not to use just the cold broad yardstick of efficiency and economy in deciding where facilities are to be maintained and/or built anew because we all know in Nova Scotia that under a policy of benign neglect fewer and fewer villages along the shore have any wharf facilities.

Again, from the standpoint of economics and cold efficiency officials, albeit sincerely, can say: Well, Mr. Nowlan or Mr. Jones or Mr. Smith, you really cannot support a wharf or a pier there because the landed value of fish does not justify that type of support. Of course, it is easy to say that after three or four years of benign neglect when the facilities are in such a state of decay as to involve in many cases the erection of a brand new wharf. As I said earlier, the Bay of Fundy has the most difficult waters that the minister has to worry about in terms of tides which are over 50 feet high and a coastline which really does not give any protection from the northeast or northwest gales so the cost of building the facilities is rather heavy in terms of the landed value of fish. But the removal of those facilities—and this is an old story in my part of the country as I am sure it is in that of the parliamentary secretary and of the hon. member for Northumberland-Miramichi (Mr. Dionne)—it is a little more important than the closing of, say, a Post Office which destroyed the social heart of a community. Once the wharf facilities go, even if they are not all fishermen in the village, you are taking away really the last economic justification for that community.

I could take you along the shore today, Mr. Speaker, and show you pictures of how it used to be and you would be amazed and horrified at the way in which inshore facilities along the shore of the Bay of Fundy have really gone downhill. Now, I have to compliment some officials. Just before the transfer of Fisheries from the Department of Public Works and the Department of Transport, there was a very enlightened official in the Department of Fisheries or the Department of Public Works in Halifax and through his efforts and mine, we were finally able to organize an integrated approach to some of the facilities along the Bay of Fundy shore. With regard to the need for public involvement the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave) mentioned the necessity for an annual report so that we would know how this Act is being implemented.

The Act gives tremendous power to the minister to make discretionary decisions as to where a wharf is to be maintained, where fees are to be charged, where the wharfinger is going to be, and so on. Many people in this House probably don't even know what a wharfinger is—likely they think it is some bird which travels from north to south in the winter and from south to the north in the summer. Sometimes. Mr, Speaker, some people on the shore would like to see the wharfinger as elusive as a bird which migrates from season to season, because if the wharfinger isn't there to assess fees then that's a little easier on them from time to time. But in this Act we are giving the minister a power to determine the life of an awful lot of small communities in this country.

I would hope that rationalization is not carried to extreme because if it is carried to extreme, Mr. Speaker, we are going to see even more small communities closed out, people forced away from their livelihood, forced away from their historic life pattern; the sequence is there sociologically as one of the reasons social welfare rolls and social assistance payments have increased. You get an outflow from the small communities and often that outflow has only one way to go—it is drawn to the magnet of the urban area, often creating more urban and social decay which increases the rolls. It is a bad pendulum. So, I hope there will be a little more explanation, once this measure gets to committee, as to how the minister intends to interpret the legislation. This, of course, is something my hon. friend talked about this morning. How is the minister going to interpret, for example, this word "rationalization" which in theory sounds so fine. I certainly recognize there has to be some type of rationalization and readministration of the various departments from a practical point of view. The Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) is bringing the legislation up to date. But, certainly, rationalization should not be the only test when you are dealing with the livelihood of so many communities across the land.

There is another matter which I hope the committee will consider. But before I leave the subject of rationalization, let me say that it is because of that suggestions were made here earlier this morning about public involvement, perhaps even before rationalization occurs, so that the communities will know where they stand in the pecking order of priority or survival, or priority in the maintenance of the facility, and so they will have some input.

You do not want to alienate the person you are trying to help by letting him learn from the newspaper or hear over the radio that the facility in his community is doomed and there is no hope of repair. That is the type of alienation that has been going on. I do not say it is any great plot. More often it is a case of omission. Certainly, if you are dealing with the fundamental lifeline of so many of these small areas, or even areas which are symbolic of a lifeline in the past, those small communities need a better deal and need to know where they fit under the planner's pen. That can come only with public involvement. Members of parliament and officials should have the guts, for lack of a better word, to meet with those who will be affected and to discuss the problems with them before a decision is made.

I was going to digress just now by recounting a situation in my own riding where, because of the courage of one of the officials of the Department of Public Works and the assistance of the boards of trade, the public was involved in what was called the Bay of Fundy harbour tour in which all communities were visited by the various officials, so that at long last the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) could not say it was the responsibility of the Department of Public Works, nor the Department of Public Works say that they would like to take care of it but it was under the jurisdiction of the Department of Transport.

We were able to bring them all together and, after a whole day of preparation, we went across 60 miles of the coastline into all the areas, even some areas where we all knew there was no hope for fundamental assistance because the tides had wreaked such damage. A public meeting was held involving spokesmen from all the communities—one of the hottest meetings I have ever had the pleasure to attend—and I give full marks to some officials who had the intestinal fortitude to expose themselves to the public in that way.

That was two or three years ago, but as a result of the meeting and the tour we were able for the first time to get some decision so that at least five Fundy areas were selected and funds were allocated to them so that work could be done, in some cases fundamental repairs and in other cases a better maintenance job for the existing facility to protect it. But even with that effort made two to three years ago there have been at least three other small ports in my area that have lost their wharfs, and in one case in Harbourville the department says it will cost over $1 million to put a similar facility in place because not only the wharf but the breakwater has gone.

I am prepared to admit—the officials do not have to tell me—that in many of the cases you cannot justify the expense by the landed value of fish. I say there has to be something more than the landed value of fish when you try to assess the life of a small community. I hope we will be able to explore this matter in committee. I do not know whether there is sufficient power under the bill before us, but I believe there is power for the minister to become involved jointly with the province in enterprises where not just the landed value of fish will determine where a facility goes. I hope a joint program can be established with the province to integrate the landed value of fish and other considerations in that community.

I admit that many inshore communities are not as vibrant today as they were years ago. We have just extended our shore line by 200 miles, and fish is a renewable resource. Let me say to hon. members that if they do not eat fish, they should start doing so because it not only gives you brains but it gives you protein. It is a lot better to eat fish from the sea than to eat fish from our polluted rivers inland. But that is a digression. I can see a situation where it would be in the interests of the federal government to contribute to a program linked and merged with recreation, tourism and highways. In several areas in my constituency the road into the community is dependent upon the maintenance of the breakwater, because when the breakwater goes, the road goes.

That has already occurred in some parts of my area. Yet you get the department of highways saying, "Good gracious, we cannot maintain the road because we have lost the breakwater, and that is a federal responsibility". The federal people responsible for the breakwater will listen to the complaints and say, "we cannot rebuild the road because that is a provincial responsibility". The upshot is that regardless of whose responsibility it is, the reality is that the persons in the community do not have a road.

I hope that with the powers under the bill, and using a little imagination, an intergrated approach can be developed, merging the fish function with recreation, tourism and highways. I do not know, Mr. Speaker, whether you have been privileged to drive along the shoreline in my constituency, but if you have you will have seen that there is quite a difference between a fishing community with an even small wharf facility, with recreation boats and a few trawlers, and another small community farther down the shore where you do not even have to look to see whether they have a wharf because you can tell by looking at the state of the houses and the fact that the one store they have is closed to know that it does not have a wharf. So I hope there will be some discussion of that matter in committee.

There is one further matter regarding the allocation of funds that I would like to mention. I am not sure how much time I have left, and I know that our time is restricted. I say this in an inquisitive way and I hope that we will have an explanation of this in committee. When you speak about rationalization and the life of communities along the shore, whether it is on the east coast or the west coast, I would like to know what formula will be used for the allocation of funds, and I hope the minister can explain it in more detail.

Some hon. members who have been here longer than I have always been suspicious about how funds are allocated. Is it really the landed value of fish that determines it, or is it sometimes the landed value of votes? I think that in the past, to be fair, the landed value of votes was a much more realistic factor than the landed value of fish. But if you could carry both, if you had both fish and votes, you were guaranteed your wharf facility. To be fair, I think that fortunately this was more the case in bygone days.

Now, in Nova Scotia, different zones and regions are allocated different funds. There are budgets for certain zones. You try to work with that budget to do something within your area. But then there are larger zones. I do not know how many hon. members appreciate the fantastic value of fish in Nova Scotia. We hear about Newfoundland all the time, and about British Columbia and their romantic salmon, which certainly catches the imagination more than the basic Atlantic fish that we catch in Nova Scotia. A couple of years ago I was surprised to hear that in 1971 the report of the department of fisheries for Nova Scotia stated that Nova Scotia had a higher landed value of fish than the province of British Columbia. Taking all the Atlantic provinces together, the landed value of fish far outranks that of British Columbia.

For a couple of years Nova Scotia was the leader in the land in that respect. It was ahead of British Columbia. It is not number 1; it is usually number 2. I am talking here about $60 million plus, compared with $58 million for British Columbia. So we have a fantastic potential value for the economy. It is also part of the export trade. But I will not belabour that. Two years ago I was very interested in trying to get funds for the restoration, maintenance and erection of wharf facilities in my area, and I found that department officials would admit privately, and show me on charts, that we were not getting our fair share in terms of the landed value of fish anywhere in Nova Scotia. That was in 1971-72 and 1973-74.

I want to put this on the record in the hope that the minister will have a chance to review this matter and give us a more detailed explanation in committee. I would like to know what the formula is. I have before me figures regarding allocation of funds for harbour development programs. These figures are for three base years, 1973-74, 1974-75 and 1975-76. They are for the maritimes as a group.

In 1973-74 we got $3.2 million. In 1974-75 the amount went up to $10.2 million. Then, under the general restraint program of last year, it went down to $7 million. Those figures are for the maritimes generally. In Nova Scotia, in 1973-74, the amount was $1.6 million. In 1974-75 it was $5.8 million, and in 1975-76 it went down to $4.6 million. The amount was reduced in 1975-76. We all know what an absolute reduction means in this kind of inflation. Hon. members can imagine the adverse affect there is when in these times of inflation figures are reduced. We are not getting as much as our dollar used to buy, so there is almost a double-whammy effect. I put figures for Nova Scotia on the record to segregate it from the maritime region because of the value of fish to Nova Scotia, let alone to Atlantic Canada as a whole—and Atlantic Canada far outranks B.C.

The only province which had an increased allotment in those three base years was Quebec. In 1973-74, the amount for Quebec was $800,000. In 1974-75 it was $4.3 million, and when every other province or region got less in 1975-76 because of restraint, Quebec's allotment increased to $10 million. In Quebec there was a steady rise and a graphic jump. The amount was doubled from the last base year.

I would like to know what the minister says about this. He will have a chance in committee. Perhaps the amounts increased so significantly because there were not many facilities in Quebec before these three base years. I do not know, but in terms of the landed value of fish, which is supposed to determine the allocation of funds, I hope the minister will give us some explanation with regard to Nova Scotia and the maritimes where the landed value has gone up. In those areas the allocation of funds for wharf facilities went down, and the only area in which the allocation went up consistently for those three base years was the province of Quebec. I want to see how that relates to an increase or decrease in the landed value of fish so that I can get some idea of the consistency or equity in this important policy of allocation of funds.

I admit that in any program there has to be flexibility, reflecting the definite and distinct regions of this land. Certain regions demand almost different policies from time to time. The Bay of Fundy, with its peculiar hard shoreline and high tides, is one of the most expensive places at which to maintain any wharf facility. There is no protection from either the sea or the rise and fall of the tides. Even B.C. does not have the tides we have. Thus, different policies will have to apply under an over-all umbrella. However, to be flexible you have to be fair or you might build up alienation.

The allocation of funds must be dependent upon rationalization, but we must make sure that rationalization does not become elimination, and we must make sure the flexibility in a program is also fair so that there is an opportunity for some of the most independent people in the world to maintain the existence they choose to maintain. That existence gives them a certain amount of internal freedom which, frankly, has my respect. It is a standard of independence which I think many Canadians might like to have.

I was glad to participate in this part of the debate on Bill C-7. I am looking forward to this bill getting into committee and hearing the minister explain some of the matters I have mentioned. Because the value of other things has gone up, perhaps the value of the inshore fishery in my area is not as high as it once was. In my old constituency of Digby-Annapolis-Kings which I had the privilege to represent, the county of Digby was one of the most prolific areas for fish in Nova Scotia, and there are still very meaningful communities there which depend upon fishing.

Extending our shoreline to the 200-mile limit helps deep sea trawlers, but with proper administration of wharf facilities and proper policies from the Department of Fisheries we could see a restoration of the inshore fishery. It may not be as big as the offshore fishery, but there is a place for it. It would be like an ostrich putting its head in the sand, if a renewable resource which contributes vitally to the economy of many small areas was forgotten. It would be unfortunate if we did not have the capacity to help those areas. I pray that we will have the capacity to develop constructive policies which will maintain them.

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased to have an opportunity to participate in this debate, not that I am a man of loquacity or one who hastens to get a chance to talk, but I have never noticed that too much attention has been paid in this chamber or, indeed, in the country to the people engaged in the fishing industry. I therefore think it is worthwhile that we are concentrating, through Bill C-7, on the problems of a group of people who in the last decade or two have had extremely difficult situations with which to cope.

Problems have been brought on because of actions or non-actions of our government, because of intrusions as a result of the activities of other countries, and at times, it would appear, from the very forces of nature itself. This group of people, the fishermen of Canada, have had a very difficult time in the last 15 or 20 years. The hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan) has spoken about a number of matters and I did not find anything in what he said with which I disagree. He used the expression "benign neglect", and as I move about the coast of my province—I do not have to travel very far to get to the coast of Prince Edward Island; it is not an enormous journey—I see the very thing to which my hon. friend has referred, a benign neglect. However, in the case of P.E.I., as I hope I can demonstrate in a few minutes, the neglect has been something more than benign. It has been a planned neglect, and it has brought about a very regrettable situation which stems from an agreement between the provincial government and the dominion government.

Although the hon. member for Annapolis Valley boasted a bit about his province, he was quite right in referring to the seriousness of the loss of a community sense of identity. We have overorganized, integrated our schools and brought about large units of administration. We have done the same thing with churches. We have tried to rationalize everything into bigger units, worshipping stupidly and foolishly at the temple of largeness and forgetting that you do not have to be big to be great or to be good. I think that in Atlantic Canada, where in a very real sense this country began, the decline of the community, the loss of its schools, the loss of the community hall, the loss of fishing centres and all these matters have done things to our way of life which have not been improvements but, indeed, have been quite the opposite.

Down in eastern Canada, where the fisheries industry used to be king, to have it declining and shrinking is something that everybody, whether engaged directly in the fishing industry or not, should be deeply concerned about. We have lost that sense of common interest and have become depersonalized. That is not good for a society like ours which should underscore the closeness of the relationships between people.

● (1620)

I thought of this as I compared my residence in Ottawa with my residence in the little fishing centre in the very beautiful seaport of Victoria, Prince Edward Island. Some months ago my home in Ottawa was burglarized, quite extensively for an impecunious person like myself, and no one saw what happened. In my little home in Victoria, if I sometimes inadvertently leave a light on in the attic or the basement, my 95-year old neighbour will let me know right away. This is the kind of concern that I cherish. But in my street in Ottawa, just the summer before last, someone looted one of the houses, taking away all the furniture in a big truck. No one knew about it, because there is no sense of community, no personal contact. That is the kind of thing which made the little community so important: it was centred on the church, the school, the town hall, the wharf and places where the community got together. We have lost that.

I agree with my colleague that in recent years it has been difficult to get to a centre of authority in terms of harbours. If you approach the Department of Transport you are told that the Department of Public Works has jurisdiction over certain areas, and then you find that in matters pertaining to small harbours it is the Department of Fisheries that has authority. I think the hon. member for Annapolis Valley was correct in saying that the people who work in the departments are conscientious. I do not think that most public servants are bad or stupid; I think the majority are pretty good folk, trying to do the job as best they can. There is always a little bit of runaround, however.

I have been concerned about a particular matter for some months and have come to the conclusion that every time I write a letter about it to the Department of Transport a copy will be sent to the Department of Public Works and to the Department of Fisheries. In that way they will all hear the same story at the same time—and so far they are all performing with the same lack of activity. In relating the ancient fishing industry to tourism, a fairly modern industry, this bill has recognized a development. We have had the story of Nova Scotia, and I should like to say a word or two now about Prince Edward Island, another important fishing centre. My hon. and reverend colleague, the hon. member for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald), planned to take part in this debate, but we decided that the chamber could probably tolerate only one Prince Edward Islander at one sitting. What I say today in general terms expresses the concern which he shares. Of course, I will not be able to express myself in the ecclesiastical language he could use, being, as Anthony said, "a plain, blunt man".

Mr. Speaker, I do not like to read things into the record, and very seldom do so, but I should like to refer to the annual report of the Department of Fisheries for 1976 which begins as follows:

> The fiscal year 1975/76 could have best been described as a year of retrenchment for the Canadian fishery, a year when government bought time for the industry while it carried out an in-depth study of its complexities in an attempt to determine the reasons for its lack of stability and ability to sustain itself as a viable part of our Canadian economy. Meanwhile, fish stocks continued their decline, management procrastinated and the foreign fleets continued their systematic harvest offshore. At this time we are still making polite gestures at the ongoing Law of the Sea Conference, the U.S. government now having declared their intentions to establish a 200 mile limit. Surely, if for no other reason than the fact that our neighbours have beat us to it we will follow suit.

If I may interpolate, that is very prophetic and timely, as meetings are now going on. It continues:

> On the provincial scene, with our 1976 fishing year about to begin, we are told that 80 per cent of the Gulf redfish quota has been taken by those who should be fishing offshore, and the gulf cod fishery doomed to a similar fate unless some positive steps to curtail these fisheries are taken. Gulf based fisheries which rely heavily on the greater portion of these quotas will have to settle for what is left and undoubtedly will have a lean year in '76.
> Obviously, our ability to manage our fishery considering the interests of those Canadian fishermen who totally depend on the Gulf of St. Lawrence has much to be desired. There is no doubt in the minds of those of us who rely on this fishery that while we are aware of the need for a 200 mile economic zone and what it may do for the Canadian fishery, we are more aware of the need for some intelligent management of our fishery here in the Gulf.

I could talk about the problems of a fish not mentioned by the preceding speaker, the mackerel. It may not have flesh the colour of the salmon, but it is one of the finest, most delectable fish we have in this country. I should like to commend the minister for a program he began—though I fear he may have dropped it—to promote across the country that important, highly nutritive and tasty fish, the mackerel. It is a terrible situation when we find that mackerel in our supermarkets comes from Norway, Japan, Portugal or Spain, and often it can be taken in the Atlantic Ocean. I have been horrified when I have bought fish which I thought was packed in New Brunswick or Nova Scotia and then found it labelled, in small print, "Product of Japan". When I check with fishermen in my own area I am told that in a given year they throw out a couple of thousand pounds of mackerel because there is no market for it.

It is time the country was educated on the nutritive value of fish, and it is time the fish plants were furnished with the best equipment available so that they can compete in the marketplace. We must also learn not to discard portions of the fish and, instead, to put them to use in making fertilizer and other ingredients important to agriculture.

The Canadian fisheries industry needs to be upgraded. There is tremendous scope for leadership here by the minister. I do not think we have a bad minister at present. Last week a member from Newfoundland was almost embarrassed: he said the minister was the best ever. Then he remembered there had been quite a few Liberal ministers, and he said he was one of the best. I think the minister is capable of doing a good job because he has the basic interest and has the capacity to reorganize this long-ignored industry.

I should like, now, to say something about a situation which has developed in Prince Edward Island and which in my judgment is wrong constitutionally and in my conviction is wrong in the interests of the fishing industry. The government of Prince Edward Island and the government of the dominion of Canada have made an agreement, under the wing of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, whereby only some of the ports of Prince Edward Island are to be maintained while the rest fall into decay and decrepitude, as was mentioned by the hon. member for Annapolis Valley.

● (1630)

As I read the British North America Act—and I read it only a few years after I learned to read the Bible—section 91 gives the government of the dominion responsibility for certain specific areas of jurisdiction, beacons, buoys, lighthouses, and Sable Island, navigation and shipping; and, under No. 12 of section 91, sea coast and inland fisheries. There is not a port in Prince Edward Island for which the government has not responsibility under the basic, written portion of our constitution. Any agreement whereby the province takes over the maintenance of only 15 or 20 harbours and ports is an affront to the constitution and dereliction of responsibility to the fishing industry. The agreement has not worked well.

One of the most important ports in Prince Edward Island is in the Prince Edward Island national park, a place so beautiful that it receives perhaps one million visitors a year, though the population of the entire province is but 112,000 persons. Sitting in the midst of that park is an active fishing port, a port from which tourists embark on deep sea fishing and have the joy of hauling in the beautiful mackerel, cod, and if they are lucky enough, haddock. But we cannot get improvements made in Cove Head because we are told, "It is not a designated port. It is just too bad. It can go hang." Its pier is crumbled. It is allowed to go neglected and its fishermen can be inhibited from fishing because "we don't care how it looks to the tourists. We are not going to jazz it up with a nice paint job because it isn't a designated port."

Another beautiful port on Prince Edward Island's south shore is Victoria, from where my late father used to sail out in sailing ships. It is the port from which he left to join the Royal Canadian Navy in the first war to join that great aggregation of fighting strength called the "Tin Port Navy". For years we have had tourists coming from all over this continent and Europe to see that beautiful place. But today no substantial ship can enter Victoria harbour, the port which has been used over 200 years, because it is not dredged. To make sure nobody comes in, they turned out one of the range lights. Therefore you cannot make it in. You might make it halfway in but, as any seaman knows, half safe is not safe at all. Again, Victoria does not rate for improvement because it has not been selected as a designated port.

I would say to the minister, if he were here, and to his parliamentary secretary, if I could find him, that the department is derelict in its duty by hiding behind the agreement the province made with the dominion government. It is responsible for the maintenance of that harbour, and its responsibility is no less now than it was when the fathers of confederation laid it down. I say, further, that here we see an example of neglect, made possible by a cozy arrangement which has been deleterious to our people. This is no time for the government of Canada to be narrowing its interests in the ports of Canada. With our fisheries assailed from without and undermined from within, it is up to the dominion government to take positive steps to strengthen the ports, not to weaken them; to encourage our fishermen, not to discourage them. These people have sustained far too many reverses already.

I think in my 20 years in this House the best parliamentary question I ever heard was asked by a member from Newfoundland no longer with us, Mr. Peddle. One day he stood and asked the minister of fisheries of the day, also no longer with us, if it was the government's policy to let the Russians take one-half of our cod, and the seals eat the other. Of course, to a question like that no minister can reply satisfactorily, and Jack Davis was wise enough not to try. But the question typified the troubles through which this particular sector of society is passing. They are engaged in seasonal activity. Lobstermen on Prince Edward Island, in some parts this year worked a short season. They lost a week at the beginning owing to ice conditions. They had difficulty establishing claims for unemployment insurance because the season was so short.

How can you criticize a man for not working all year, if the government says he can only fish for a number of weeks? If the fishermen are not beset by government regulations, they are beset by problems of mercury and heaven knows what else which prevent their taking the harvest of the sea. I hope we will look carefully at this bill and determine its degree of usefulness and how much help it will give to an industry too long neglected, much overburdened but still an ancient and important sector of our community, namely, our Canadian fishery.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Hillsborough (Mr. Macquarrie) portrayed in graphic terms the plight of the fishermen of Atlantic Canada. The plight of fishermen of his constituency is also the plight of fishermen all over Atlantic Canada. What he said about Atlantic fishermen and the port of Victoria could be applied with equal force to other Atlantic fishermen and other ports.

The government has made proposals to our fishermen, proposals which will not work. Let me allude, for example, to the matter of centralization raised by the hon. member for Hillsborough. It was suggested that instead of our people having one port in every village or town, there should be one port for each ten or 20 communities on the coastline. That proposal was socially unacceptable. Nevertheless, the Department of Fisheries in the past ten years has been instrumental in implementing this proposal as part of the policy of the government. What has been the result? One finds, for example, that large ships cannot enter Victoria Harbour because it has been neglected. The government has not said it will abandon the port. It denies any such suggestion, but its design is insidious. I want people in the Ottawa offices of the department to know they are causing unnecessary hardship for our fishermen along the coasts of Canada.

Let me tell the House of the effect of certain regulations. I am thinking of certain economic opportunities relating to fish landings. Mr. Speaker, in one instance the department recently recommended that no DREE grant be given to a certain area because no fish were landed in that particular area. Technically, the ministry was right: fish were not landed there. Why? The reason was there was no processor to receive them. But fishermen brought in the fish which were sold as salt or smoked fish. When someone wanted to enlarge the operation to process the fish the fishermen had brought in for themselves, it was held that no fish were landed in that area, and therefore the Department of Fisheries recommended that no DREE grant should be made available.

Mr. Speaker, fish processing facilities have been established near that point along our coast. By virtue of the regulations, without any consideration whatsoever for the health of the consumer of that product, the ceiling was too low, the vats were too shallow, and they were not properly vented. One processor after another spent his means improving his facilities, only to find that a further regulation made him still inoperable. He could not continue to function. The regulations which came out of Ottawa with regard to the fishing and processing industry have been utterly and completely without any awareness of the facts of life along our shores.

In one harbour in my constituency in the last three years there were three prospective plans for the improvement of that harbour by construction of a breakwater. One was totally unacceptable to the fishermen, one would have been of moderate help to the fishermen, and one would have made a beautiful harbour out of that location. The one that was totally unacceptable was not built. The one that was partially acceptable was built. Fishermen are still suffering, while expecting protection from the construction of that combination pier-breakwater.

I submit there is little justification for the present allocation of public funds as it relates to the maintenance, replacement and improvement of fishing harbour facilities along our coasts. The bill before us offers very little hope that there will be any particular change.

I would first like to deal with the appointment of the wharfinger as mentioned in clause 4. The collection of wharfage fees from fishermen and small boat owners has been the subject of very serious contention. It has been a point of conflict between fishermen and the department for quite some time. So that it will sound more authentic, I wish to quote the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson) as he spoke in the fisheries committee on February 28, 1975:

—on the west coast of British Columbia we have different sorts of harbour facilities. Some have wharfage managers, some have not. Although these wharves are built by the federal government through federal funds, because of the fact that some of these wharves are isolated and are only used at certain times of the year, we do not put someone on them.

I will not bore the House by reading a quarter of a page of a committee report, but the hon. member went on to say that the wharfage fees are collected in some ports on the coast of British Columbia, not collected in others, and that it is a discriminatory policy as far as the government of Canada is concerned. It must be authentic, because the hon. member for Comox-Alberni does not belong to an opposition party. I wish to quote from the proceedings of the Fisheries committee of March 4, 1975. In recognition of the remarks of the hon. member for Comox-Alberni, the minister, in the introductory remarks to his estimates, said:

I believe the hon. member for Comox-Alberni referred to the discrepancy of wharfinger and harbour fees collected from some fishermen and not from others. I should explain that the new act relating to the development and use of fishing harbours and marine facilities is in the course of preparation by the small craft harbours branch of the fisheries and marine service.

That was the promise of the minister. The minister, prior to the 1974 election, promised the House that wharfinger fees would be levied and assessed on a basis which was fair to all users of all port facilities. He promised he would put an end to the argument by the fishermen that if they docked at port A the wharfinger caught them; if they docked at port B, the wharfinger did not catch them; and that fisherman X never paid wharfage fees no matter where he docked. That may sound difficult to believe. However, in answer to a question by myself on November 17, 1976, among the facts given to me was the statement that 1,128 facilities have no wharfingers. That means that in 1,128 ports along the east coast of Canada no wharfage fee is collected from those who use the facilities. From the answer of the minister I find it extremely difficult to understand how a government can impose charges on some who use the facilities, and totally ignore the rest. It is not fair.

The question was also asked as to how a wharfinger is paid. For the information of those who may not know, the first $100 which the man collects is his. he keeps 90 per cent of the next $300, 50 per cent of the next $300, 25 per cent of the next $1,800, 15 per cent of the next $13,500 and 5 per cent of the remainder. This means that of the first $2,500 collected, the wharfinger keeps $970. From that point on there is very little incentive for him to do any further work. This seems to be the pattern of work performed by wharfingers. They collect a little and they quit shortly thereafter. I abhor this system of charges. We have had the word of the minister that this will be corrected. We presently have a bill before us in which no correction is made. It is discrimination in a vile form.

I ask that the parliamentary secretary inform the minister in the strongest possible words that the hon. member for Comox-Alberni and members from the east coast of Canada ask that this discrimination come to a halt forthwith, without any excuses whatsoever. It has been said that those presently employed by the department have so many duties that they cannot collect wharfage fees. If that is the case, add someone to the staff or add a little extra duty to those already there. However, let us not continue this discriminatory structure in perpetuity against anyone in Canada.

I am also concerned by the fact that this bill suggests there shall be an assessment of harbours. I presume that means a classification of harbours that will be done by members of the department. If it is deemed to be unimportant, what happens to that harbour? The measurement is to be assessed by the measurement of fish landings. In that case, there are many ports on which we will never spend another dime. The fishermen in the seining fleets may never land a fish in the port which they call home. The seining fleet will deliver its large catch to concentrated areas for processing, and return home. They will not land at the port from which they operate. Therefore, if we assess some of our ports on that basis, they will disappear.

● (1650)

As for the lobster fishing industry, lobsters are deemed to be landed when they are brought ashore and put in the pound. There are a dozen lobster pounds along the shores of the Atlantic Provinces which would have provided proper measurement for making a large expenditure. However, the lobster fisherman would be given no protection, no improvement of his facilities, if the lobsters are recorded as landed when inspected by the department's inspectors. This is no guide. These coastal fishermen are not equipped to travel 10, 15, 20 miles along the coast to fish lobsters or any other kind of fish. They live in an area with which they are familiar and which they are capable of fishing, and that is the area which must have the port facilities to accommodate their fishing fleet. A harbour cannot be assessed by virtue of fish landings; that is not an accurate measurement in any way, shape or form.

A schedule of harbours is to be promulgated by regulation. Fishermen are not competent to keep up with regulations as they are changed or replaced by new ones. Will the Department of Fisheries undertake, for instance, to submit to every licensed fisherman along the coast each regulation with respect to harbours which he uses in advance of its being enforced so that these fishermen have the chance to ask their lawyer to read it? Because I cannot read some of these regulations, and I do not think some fishermen can read or understand them either. Or is it the case that we are going to continue to operate ports and our fishing industry by regulation emanating from Ottawa or some other cavernous place where regulations are made by someone who has no knowledge of the industry and their legal effect on the industry?

There are certain aspects of the bill regarding which the Minister of Fisheries, and provincial departments, can co-operate; but in this bill I detect another attempt not to co-operate with the provinces in regard to fishing harbour facilities but, rather, to transfer the national expense of such facilities to a provincial treasurer. This is not what Ottawa should be all about. The idea suggests to me that if the department does not want to fix up a port—perhaps tourism is a little side issue here—it will make a deal, say, with the province of New Brunswick, or with an individual, or with a corporation. It is the government of Canada's responsibility to provide these facilities for the use of the public, not to avoid providing facilities required by the public or to transfer the expense of such facilities to a provincial treasurer. I think this is what is implied in clause 5—that the government may make a deal with a person, a corporation or a province—and I deplore that. It is definitely in keeping with the way the department has been operating over the past few years, when there has been great neglect. If the government can transfer this responsibility, they may also transfer the blame for this neglect.

I suppose it has always been the right of the government of Canada, under the law, to lease a harbour or part of a harbour, but I would feel very much happier with this bill if in clause 8 the government would undertake to have consultations with people living in the area of the harbour who have used it traditionally for any purpose. But there is no obligation under this bill upon the government to consult the public prior to the leasing of a harbour to an individual or corporation. I think this presents a danger to the area I come from. I would ask the government to reconsider this provision to the extent that this can be done only after proper public hearings are held in the area concerned—not in the ivory towers in Ottawa.

Clause 9(b) gives me great cause for concern. I am as concerned about the environment as any member of this House, but I am more concerned at the fact that there are already three other pieces of legislation under the direction of the minister governing the people of Canada in respect to pollution of waters and lands. We have legislation concerning inland waters pollution, coastal waters pollution and offshore waters pollution. We now have clause 9(b) which is another piece of legislation giving control over the environment. The provinces have regulations. The municipalities have regulations. The federal government has a multitude of acts overlapping one with another, of which the general public, and certainly the fishermen, have no adequate knowledge. On top of all this, the government now proposes clause 9(b) further to control the environment. I say it is superfluous in view of all the other legislation having to do with the environment which is presently in place.

Let us put these things under one canopy, Mr. Speaker. Let us not have them spread around. We do have spreaders for certain items used on the farm, and it looks to me as if one of those must have passed through the Department of the Environment when the department was framing control of the environment legislation, because they have sure spread it all over the statutes of this country to an extent that nobody could be expected totally to understand. If offences are created by this legislation, a schedule of penalties should be appended to the act. We are going to be pretty much subject to regulation, with the exception of one offence involving a very minor fine.

There is also one other very harsh provision in this bill. There is no question that if a corporation commits an offence under the legislation, it should be punished. But under clause 21 a member of a firm may be penalized whether or not his employer is charged with certain offences. Under certain conditions this is acceptable, but this looks like a basket clause to me. It lays down no guidelines as to when a corporation is responsible; it leaves the responsibility with the person himself, and the opportunity is there for the department to pick on a person rather than on a corporation.

My I call it five o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions and private bills. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) on a point of order.

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, you will recall the question as to the possible interpretation of the special motion on extended hours of sitting, particularly with regard to what the regime would be on allotted days. I suggest, and I believe I have the approval of hon. members, that we interpret the motion to mean that the House will sit at two o'clock on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays when such days are allotted days. If it is necessary to have a House order to that effect, then I suggest we should have it.

● (1700)

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I suppose we can agree that the words of the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) could constitute the House order, if that is agreeable to all members. That is the essence of the agreement we have dealt with. As I understand it, on allotted days the House will sit at two o'clock in the afternoon, unless it is a day when the House normally commences at eleven o'clock, that is, Friday; and under the order which is presently on the order paper we would finish at the normal time as a result of a combination of what the President of the Privy Council has said and the existing order as amended.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, if I add a few more words, I hope I do not extend the ambiguity. What the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) has now proposed as an interpretation of the special order of May 30 corresponds precisely to what we agreed to when we met in the minister's office some time prior to May 30. I agree with the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) that perhaps we could now have a House order that that motion of May 30 is to be interpreted as indicated by the President of the Privy Council: in other words, we meet on Monday, Tuesday and Thursday, when it is an allotted day, from two o'clock to six o'clock, we have the ten o'clock "late show" at six o'clock, and then we meet from eight o'clock to ten o'clock, and go home.

[Translation]

Mr. Béchard: I do not rise on the same point of order, Mr. Speaker, but on a separate one.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It would be better to clarify the first point of order.

[English]

Am I correct in understanding that when the House is sitting on an allotted day the normal hours of sitting will be from two o'clock until six o'clock, with the adjournment motion from six o'clock until 6.30, and then from eight o'clock until ten o'clock on Monday, Tuesday and Thursday.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Vous avez raison.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: In order that this may be clear to all members, on allotted days the House will start sitting at normal hours. The hours of sitting will be from two o'clock to six o'clock, and eight o'clock to ten o'clock, with the adjournment motion taking place from six o'clock until 6.30 on Monday, Tuesday and Thursday. May it be so ordered?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is so ordered.

[Translation]

The hon. member for Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine (Mr. Béchard) again on a point of order.

Mr. Béchard: Mr. Speaker, as was pointed out to the House a few moments ago, today is the 33rd anniversary of the landing of Canadians in Normandy. As hon. members ought to know, and if they do not they will momentarily, the annual meeting of the Canada-France Parliamentary Association is held in Canada this week and tonight at 7.15 p.m., as a tribute to Canadian soldiers who went to Europe to defend our liberties, French officials will lay a wreath at the cenotaph. I should like therefore that there be as many members as possible. So I invite them to attend that short ceremony, if they can, which the Minister for Veterans Affairs (Mr. MacDonald) will also attend.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I am sure hon. members do appreciate the information being given to them by the hon. member. Of course, this is not a point of order, but nevertheless I hope that as many members as possible will respond to that invitation.

SUPPLEMENTARY RETIREMENT BENEFITS ACT

SUGGESTED AMENDMENT OF RETIREMENT FORMULA

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I believe there has been disposition to allow notices of motions Nos. 16, 17 and 26 to stand at the request of the government and to debate Notice of Motion No. 30 in the name of the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker).

Mr. Goodale: That is agreed, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is the House agreed that we stand, at the request of the government, notices of motions Nos. 16, 17 and 26 and proceed to the consideration of motion No. 30 in the name of the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker)?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. G. H. Whittaker (Okanagan Boundary) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act to provide for the reduction of the "Magic 85" formula to 70 and the indexing of the new formula to the cost of living.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is with a great deal of pleasure, and some apprehension, that I bring my motion to this House today under private members' hour. The motion reads:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act to provide for the reduction of the "Magic 85" formula to 70 and the indexing of the new formula to the cost of living.

I am proposing this motion in order to establish a more equitable escalation formula for armed forces and RCMP personnel pensions. Requests for such action have persisted since Bill C-220, some three years ago, created the anomaly between public service pensions and those paid to ex-militia and RCMP. The redress which was proposed for the original anomaly affected a mere 4 per cent of the pensioners. This redress, the "Magic 85" formula, has since been under constant attack by those who find themselves, through a combination of rank structure and index formula, left holding the short end of the stick.

The nature of the comment and criticism indicates that there is a lot of misunderstanding regarding the situation. It is not really the formula which prevents a retired serviceman from having his pension indexed as soon as he retires, but the rule discriminates as among retirees within the forces. The terms of the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act itself provide for the indexation of all pensions at age 60, with certain exceptions, one of these being the "85" rule. The structure of the armed forces is what ultimately causes the discrimination. Canadian forces members generally retire between the ages of 44 and 55, as opposed to public servants who generally retire between the ages of 55 and 65. The "Magic 85" formula affects the Royal Canadian Navy the most. Petty officers are not permitted to serve for more than 25 years, so there is no way that a retired petty officer can get that increase before the age of 60.

I would point out that one other thing equally distasteful is that compulsory retirement age for corporals in the armed forces is 45. A corporal of that age will presumably have about 25 years of service; but he, too, will have to wait until the age of 60 to get the increment. However, if you are a lieutenant or a captain, the age rises to 47. If you are a major, it is 49. If you are a lieutenant-colonel, it is 51. If you are a colonel, it is 55. If you have served to the age of 55, you have a very good chance of having 30 years, service and you can immediately qualify for pension.

Understandably, Canadian forces annuitants claim that they should receive escalation immediately when they retire. They are forced to retire in the interest of maintaining an armed force which is also a fighting force. Established arguments for early retirement are applicable especially in the armed forces. Early retirement allows an employee suffering from ill health in his final years of service to retire in decent circumstances before normal retirement age, while sparing the employer the costs and inconveniences of such personal misfortunes as low productivity, high absenteeism, double-manning to overcome delays and disruptions in operations, and so on.

Another element of unfairness is that most of those who retire at age 55 or more will have a correspondingly larger pension than those who retire earlier. A person who retired on an unindexed pension will, when he reaches age 60, begin to receive a pension which compensates him for the increases in the cost of living between the date he retired and the date he reached 60. His pension will have been indexed on paper from the time he retired, and when he reaches 60 his pension will increase by whatever percentage the cost of living increased in the intervening years.

But to sustain any standard of living they would have to endeavour to continue in the work force until age 55 at least. Surely people who are forced to retire have the right to have their pensions protected. The rest of us who are working get increases every year, we bargain for them or we shop around until we get a job in which we can get a better rate of pay. People who are retired do not always have the choice. Ex-servicemen have found that employers are not at all appreciative of the varied training and skills that a service person may have acquired. They often do not get to the interview stage, with their qualifications.

The government has deemed that the need for an extra pension is not as acute for those in the age 45-55 group. That may be valid for regular civil servants. Although they are allowed to retire at age 55, not many do so. People in the armed forces, as I have pointed out, have no choice. Moreover, inflation rates have cut the real value of pensions considerably, and will continue to do so. In this day and age, when government resigns itself to the fact that we have 944,000 unemployed, and openly admits that the figure will go up in the near future, it is socially irresponsible to thrust retired servicemen into the labour market, thereby creating greater competition for existing positions which are at a premium.

The standard argument used when refusing pension increases is the cost factor. Closely analysed, the figures show that there is a margin for accommodation of indexed pensions for them. The government pension plan is a combination of employer-employee contributions coming close to 20 per cent of the payroll. Very few private plans have anything like this rate of contribution. Half of the private plans existing in Canada have no contribution by the employee at all, and the contribution of the employer is comparable to that made by the government of Canada.

While higher rates of inflation build up pressure for the inclusion of indexing provisions in pension plans, it can also provide higher pension fund earnings which may be used to compensate for the depreciation of retirement benefits. The fact that interest yields tend to move in the same direction, and at more or less the same pace as the general price level, does indicate that the net cost of introducing indexation provisions in pension plans, or inflation-induced improvements in basic benefits, need not be as high as one might at first surmise.

Generous plans are not the exclusive enclave of the public employee, either. One major private employer provides pensions of 2 per cent for each year of service. This is multiplied by the average salary received during the best five of the last ten years of employment. Its plan allows early retirement with full benefits as early as age 50 as long as the employee's combined age and years of service are equal to 75. It also provides for an automatic cost of living indexation up to 10 per cent a year, and for further indexation beyond that percentage at the employer's discretion. What is more, Mr. Speaker, the employee makes absolutely no contribution toward the financing of the plan, so that pension costs are assumed in full by the employer. What can, and should, be done is to transfer some funds, by an act of parliament, from the Canadian superannuation fund to the supplementary retirement benefits account. Alternatively, the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act could be amended to provide for the payment of indexed pensions. Furthermore, I believe this action should be taken without delay.

The Canadian Forces Long Service Pensioners Association have already indicated that were it not for the government controls program it would have asked for indexation to begin the year after retirement, regardless of age or number of years served. Even this government cannot be contemplating keeping the controls on forever. I would hope the government would agree with this motion, but in anticipation that hon. members on the other side will not agree but intend to talk it out, I trust we shall be able to pursue our discussion for the full hour of private members' business even though some seven minutes were taken up at the beginning with points of order.

Mr. Robert Daudlin (Kent-Essex): Mr. Speaker, the motion under discussion this evening concerns a broadening of the provisions of the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act as they apply to former members of the Canadian Forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. However, before proceeding to discuss this issue I think it might be helpful to the House if I were to recount some of the history of this legislation and explain why the existing provisions read as they do. The Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act was introduced in March, 1970, to provide pension increases to persons receiving pensions or allowances under some 16 acts ranging from the Public Service Superannuation Act, the Canadian Forces Superannuation Act, the Civil Service Widows Annuities Act, to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Act and the War Veterans Allowance Act. It also provides pension increases for benefits paid under some ten sets of regulations made pursuant to some of the acts I have just mentioned.

This legislation was not the first pension increase legislation. The Public Service Pension Adjustment Act had been enacted by Parliament in 1959 in recognition of the difficulties faced by retired persons in face of the declining purchasing power of their pensions. Under that act, supplements to pensions of up to 32 per cent were made in the cases of those who retired before January 1, 1953, subject to the limitation that the pension of a former contributor could not be increased beyond $3,000 and beyond $1,500 in the case of a widow. Maximum supplements were limited to $640 and $320 respectively. The percentage adjustments were made on a series of sliding scales which depended on the date of retirement and the pension formula applicable to the pensioner. The actual adjustment was related to one-half of the increase in the cost of living since the years over which the average salary used in the pension formula was calculated.

One distinction to be drawn between the earlier legislation and the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act is that the former provided for a single increase whereas the latter provided for continuing and cumulative increases as the cost of living rose. Another important distinction lay in the manner of financing these benefit increases. For many years prior to 1970, the government had been considering the possibility of increasing pensions in relation to changes in the cost of living after retirement, but did not feel justified in doing so solely at the expense of the taxpayers.

The present act was finally introduced only after the government decided to propose, after consultation with the unions, that the cost of pension increases for present and future pensioners was to be shared between the government and active contributors under those pension plans. The contribution-benefit relationship for public service employees was proposed by the advisory committee on the Public Service Superannuation Act and was subsequently endorsed by the national joint council of the public service of Canada. The way in which those proposals were extended to the Canadian forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police was developed in consultation with the Department of National Defence and the commissioner of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

These pension increases were to be financed by contributions of one-half of 1 per cent of salary by the present members of these groups. This cost-sharing approach was the government's justification for the introduction of pension escalation on a continuing basis which it had been requested to introduce for several years. It was recognized that on what now appear to be conservative assumptions the contribution rates for this group might prove to be inadequate by 1976 and other means of financing would have to be developed.

● (1720)

In the case of the pensions paid in respect of former members of parliament, the Canadian forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police it was impossible to finance these increases with this total contribution of 1 per cent after the first two years unless the age of commencement of escalation were delayed to age 60, if the former member was not disabled. Accordingly, the original Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act provided that escalation of pensions for those groups would only commence at age 60 unless the pensioners were disabled earlier. It was this factor which was responsible for that feature of the law which was generally supported at first but has been the subject of requests for change.

On the introduction of the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act, immediate increases were paid in April, 1970, in all cases where the person in respect of whom the basic pension was paid had ceased to be employed or serve in office before January 1, 1970, provided the former member was disabled, deceased, over age 60 or in receipt of an actuarially reduced annuity prior to age 60. The maximum increase of 42 per cent was paid to those who had ceased to be employed or hold office in 1952 or earlier. The minimum increase of 2 per cent was paid to those who had ceased to serve in 1969. Provision was made for future increases of up to 2 per cent each succeeding January 1, on the basis then provided in the Canada Pension Plan. This act was deliberately worded so that there would not be an automatic change in this 2 per cent ceiling if the Canada Pension Plan ceiling was to be subsequently raised.

The 2 per cent ceiling in the annual increase in the original Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act was the same as the ceiling under the Canada Pension Plan and the Old Age Security Act when indexing was introduced. While that ceiling was accepted initially as a reasonable one to apply, the removal of the same ceiling on the cost of living increases in benefits under the Old Age Security Act and the decision of the Quebec government to raise the ceiling under the Quebec Pension Plan from 2 per cent to 3 per cent effective January 1, 1973, led to many requests in parliament and elsewhere for a removal of the ceiling under the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act or that it be raised at least to the level of 3 per cent as was provided under the Quebec Pension Plan.

These requests were considered by the government with the result that the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act was amended with effect from January 1, 1974, to provide for an escalation feature that more closely reflects the real changes in the consumer price index commencing with the change in the period on which the pension increase to be paid in 1973 would normally have been based. In making these amendments, the government recognized the continuance of the principle of maintaining the cost-shared basis of the fund established under this act from which the pension increases are paid and the need to ensure the fund's continuing viability. A contribution rate of one-half of 1 per cent by public service employees and by the government was estimated to be adequate for at least seven years to provide the increases for former public service employees on pension. As I said earlier, in order that the same method of financing could be applied to members of parliament, the Canadian forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, it was found to be necessary to limit the age of commencement of escalation to 60 unless the former member in each category was disabled to the extent of being "incapable of pursuing regularly any substantially gainful occupation." The same limiting provision applied to escalation of benefits generally under all the other plans involved, except in two relatively infrequent instances under the Public Service Superannuation Act and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police Superannuation Act where the pensioner was receiving an actuarially reduced pension payable from age 50 at the earliest. It was agreed that it was equitable to escalate these reduced pensions before age 60 and not to escalate the full pensions of others who had the advantage of drawing those larger pensions, often for many years before the reduced ones became payable.

The fact that members of the Canadian forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police could retire on a fully-earned pension before age 50 also put those who do so at a considerable financial advantage over other public service employees who, when the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act was passed, were unable to retire before age 60 on a fully-earned pension. This was another argument which supported the deferment of escalation of military and Royal Canadian Mounted Police pensions to age 60 in the interests of generally equal treatment of all groups under the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act. Moreover, many of those who had gone on pension from these forces before age 60 were employed elsewhere. So it was held to be inappropriate to ask present members to pay more for increases in pensions being paid to those under age 60, who were often in receipt of combined income from pension and salary greater than the pay of those present members. Although it was considered, there was no desire at the time to introduce a means test approach to identify those pensioners most needing increases because of lack of other income.

The position of long-service public service employees relative to members of the Canadian forces, however, was improved as a result of the new benefits made available on early retirement under the Public Service Superannuation Act which was amended by part VII of the Government Organization Act of 1970. These provide that a public service employee may retire on a fully-earned pension from ages 55 to 59 if he has 30 or more years of pensionable service or if he is involuntarily retired at those ages after ten or more years of employment in the public service, and the Treasury Board waives the reduction of up to 25 per cent in the pension which would otherwise be made.

It was immediately apparent that because of this earlier commencement of public service pensions and escalation of these benefits under the Public Service Superannuation Act, the other plans required re-examination. As a result, a method whereby the normal escalation age below 60 could be lowered for pensioners under plans other than the Public Service Superannuation Act was sought. Various alternatives for achieving this end were considered, bearing in mind the cost to the government and to the active members of these plans. Accordingly, when the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act was amended in 1973, it provided for immediate escalation for armed forces or RCMP pensioners who met the following combination of age and service. From thence comes the "Magic 85" formula referred to by the hon. member, 55 years with 30 years of service; 56 with 29 years of service, and so forth, up to an age of 60 with any number of years of service. Immediate escalation for those who were disabled and for those receiving survivor benefits continued.

Mr. Speaker, the question of removing the age and service qualifications for the receipt of escalation payments has been raised in the House on a number of occasions since these provisions came into effect. Hansard will indicate that in reply to such questions, answers have been given to the effect that the government could not see its way clear to changing the basis on which the benefits for retired members of the armed forces and the RCMP were escalated. Assurance has been given that consideration would be given to the matter, and I repeat that assurance at this time. Members are aware of the fact that comprehensive studies of pensions have been initiated by the government and are now under way. Firstly, there is a comprehensive review of all aspects of the government's pension policy and the pension situation in the private sector which is being carried out jointly by the Department of National Health and Welfare and the Department of Finance. Secondly, the government has engaged an outside actuarial study of the pension issues of the plans covering its employees. As the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) has explained in this House, the results of these studies will assist the government in determining what the various alternatives respecting the pension plans will be.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, may I say that although the alternatives suggested by the hon. member appear, on their face, to be acceptable and palatable, I suggest he should perhaps await the studies that are being carried out before recommending that this particular action be taken.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I listened with a great deal of interest to the speech made by the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker) in introducing the motion before us today. I likewise listened with a great deal of interest to the historical summary just given to us by the hon. member for Essex-Kent (Mr. Daudlin). I am delighted that my friend, the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary, has put himself, by the statements he has made today, on the side of the escalation of pensions; and I take it from the position stated by the hon. member for Essex-Kent that he is on that side as well.

• (1730)

As everyone knows, this is an issue which is of concern to some sections of the community, and it is good to know that spokesmen for the major parties in this House believe that the escalation of pensions after retirement is a justifiable and desirable practice. I feel very strongly that a pension is not a pension unless it is escalated to enable the pensioner at least to keep up with the cost of living. Actually, I think pensions should be escalated to enable pensioners to keep up with the increase in the gross national product or, in effect, the rise in the cost of living.

I listened very carefully to the history outlined by the hon. member for Kent-Essex, and I have no quarrel with it, I am speaking as one who first raised the question of doing something about the pensions of retired civil servants back in 1944, and it was with great pleasure 25 years later that I heard the then president of the treasury board, the hon. member for Westmount (Mr. Drury), announce that that decision in favour of escalation had been reached.

The hon. member across the way is quite correct in saying that originally the age limit of 60 was put into the legislation for those not covered automatically. In other words, since for most public servants 60 was the retirement age, it did not have to be specified for public servants generally, but it did have to be specified for members of the armed forces, RCMP personnel, members of parliament and others. But as time went on, members of the armed forces and of the RCMP felt that because of the nature of their employment, namely, that early retirement is forced on them, it was not fair to delay escalation in their case to age 60. A little later came the instance when public servants were given the right to retire at age 55 and draw full pension and immediate escalation provided that at age 55 they had 30 years service, 56 and 29 and so on, and then, of course, that was given to the members of the armed forces and of the RCMP.

The difficulty, as has been pointed out by the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary, is that the terms of service—the years during which members of the armed forces work—are such that in a great many cases it just is not possible to reach that requirement of 55 years of age or over and 30 years of service. I understand the popular reference to this as an 85 formula. That is hardly its exact meaning because it is no use being 54 years of age and having 31 years of service. You have to be 55 years of age or over to get the escalation at all.

It is also quite correct that this has been dealt with a great deal since escalation was put into effect. The last time it was examined in close detail by members of the House of Commons or by members of a committee was in the latter part of 1956 when we had a bill before what was then a special joint committee of the Senate and the House of Commons on employer-employee relations. On that occasion the officers of the Canadian Forces Long Service Pensioners Association appeared before us, as did the members of the Federal Superannuates National Association, pressing this point, and quite frankly I thought we were going to get a modification of it and that at least the requirement that those two things add up to 85 would be reduced to 80 or 75 or even 70.

Even though the hon. member for Kent-Essex can argue that there has been some parallelism produced in that the same rule applies to members of the armed forces as applies to senior public servants, it is the old story of one horse and one rabbit, or the rich and poor both having the right to sleep under the bridge. There is such a difference in the terms of employment that it does not turn out to be as equal as the hon. member suggests. Therefore I think what is asked for in this motion should receive favourable and active consideration.

I believe that the members of the Canadian Armed Forces Long Service Pensioners Association are to be complimented on saying that they will settle for something less than they originally requested. Originally their request was that escalation begin the year following retirement, no matter what the age, but they are taking the position now that at least a formula which adds up to something below 85—80, 75 or 70, which was what was discussed when the committee dealt with this in December of 1976—is a responsible and reasonable proposal.

Because we are in private members' hour when time is of the essence, I must not carry on. I saw two or three others wanting to get to their feet. I hope they will all be on the same side and that they will be brief. Escalation of pensions is a good idea, and the thing to do by way of resolving the issue out in the country these days is not to take it away from those who have it but to see that it is extended to everyone, and that being the case I think we should take this step of improving the escalation of the pensions of those in the armed forces and in the RCMP.

I was glad to note the reference several times by the last speaker to the fact that this is a shared cost proposition and that the money which goes into the fund out of which escalation is paid is contributed 50-50 by the employees and the government. I would just like to emphasize that the government in that case is making that payment as an employer, not as the government, which I suggest makes quite a difference.

Sir, I stand, as I have for these many years, a strong supporter of the idea that people in retirement should have their incomes maintained at a level which enables them to keep up with the cost of living, or better still, to keep up with the standard of living, and I think we owe this to those in the RCMP and the Canadian Armed Forces whom we call on to retire early. Therefore, I am in full support of the motion which is now before the House.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, Canadian Armed Forces pensioners are protesting waits of up to 15 years for their first pension payments. Under the current system, forces employees must retire in their forties if they have served 20 to 25 years.

Eligibility for pension payment is decided in the same way as in the public service. Retired persons must wait until their age plus their years of service equal an arbitrarily chosen figure of 85. Canada's 50,000 retired servicemen want that arbitrary figure lowered to 70 so retired personnel can use the retirement fund when it is most needed, soon after leaving the forces. Retired servicemen must often take lower paying jobs after leaving the forces in early middle age, at a time when their children often are about to enter university.

Mr. Frank McNeil, the national director of the Canadian Forces Long Service Pensioners Association, has stated that each year $130 million is paid in forces pensions, that lowering the age of eligibility for pension payments would cost an additional $8 million per year, and that this could be taken from the $210 million earned annually by the fund in interest. It would not cost taxpayers a cent, so I fully and wholeheartedly support the motion moved by the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker), which is as follows:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act to provide for the reduction of the "Magic 85" formula to 70 and the indexing of the new formula to the cost of living.

I suggest that we close the debate at this time, let this motion be considered by the government, and that the government take immediate action to change the formula from 85 to 70.

Mr. Ross Milne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to speak for a few minutes on this motion. I want to congratulate the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker) for bringing it forward.

I represent a large number of military people, many of whom have reached pensionable age and some of whom have been retired for varying lengths of time. Some have made representations to me on the very point the hon. member opposite raises. I would guess that most members of the House are supportive of doing this when it can be afforded and at the time that the survey which is under way is in and analyzed. Certainly my first step was to try to understand the rather complex question of pensions as they apply to employees of the Department of National Defence as well as to public servants. The pensions are calculated on a quite complex formula. I spent some time reviewing the situation and I should like to offer a few comments on it.

As a general rule when I speak in the House I use only limited notes, but in this case, like the hon. member who proposed the motion, I should like to follow my notes very carefully. Even after investigating this quite thoroughly I find it a rather complex subject which requires a great deal of attention to detail.

My colleague, the hon. member for Kent-Essex (Mr. Daudlin), has gone over the background of the present indexing arrangements very extensively and has outlined the format for members of the Canadian forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police, that is, the so-called "85 formula". The formula is now calculated with reference to the consumer price index.

I should like to reiterate that the pensions of former public servants, many members of the armed forces and the RCMP, as well as of persons covered under the numerous other pension schemes are and have been fully escalated to the cost of living since January 1974, pursuant to the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act as amended in 1973.

Perhaps, it would be helpful to give some detail on the method of determining escalation applied to the pensions of the people I have just mentioned, as of January 1 each year. The method is almost identical to that which is applied under the Canada Pension Plan.

In order to understand fully how the pension indexing under the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act works, it is first necessary to appreciate the meaning of the terms "benefit index" and "pension index". Briefly, the benefit index for a given year, as I understand it, is determined by multiplying the benefit index for the preceding year by the ratio of the pension index for that given year to the pension index of the preceding year. For example, the formula is:

$$\text{Benefit Index for 1977} = \text{Benefit Index 1976} \times \frac{\text{Pension Index 1977}}{\text{Pension Index 1976}}$$

The pension index for a given year is equal to the average of the consumer price index over the period from October to September of the previous year. For example, the pension index for 1977 equals the average of the consumer price index from October, 1975, to September, 1976.

The total increase paid over and above an individual's basic pension in a given year is determined by the ratio of the benefit index for that year to the benefit index for his/her year of retirement. For example, the increase payable in 1977 to a person retired in 1972 equals the basic pension multiplied by the benefit index for 1977 divided by the benefit index for 1972.

When the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act was introduced in 1970, the benefit index was set at 100 for that year and the benefit indices for previous years back to 1952 were determined accordingly. At that time the benefit indices for subsequent years could not be more than 2 per cent greater than the benefit index of the previous year. However, effective January, 1974, this ceiling was removed. The benefit indices for the years 1971, 1972 and 1973 were re-calculated to take this change into account, so that in 1974 persons who retired in 1973 or earlier received a pension increase in line with the rise in the consumer price index since their year of retirement.

The benefit index for 1977 is, I understand, 158.02, so that, for example, in 1977, a person who retired in 1970 when the benefit index was 100, would receive an increase of 58 per cent.

In the fashion I have outlined above, then pensions payable under legislation to which the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act applies are already escalated to equal the increase in the cost of living. The motion under discussion would therefore only have the effect of applying full indexing of the pensions of former members of the armed forces, Royal Canadian Mounted Police and, in fact, members of parliament, at an earlier date.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That is the issue; that is what the motion is about.

Mr. Milne: That is exactly what I said. For example, an individual who retires from the armed forces at age 45 with 25 years service, presently must wait until age 60 to receive pension escalation, although at age 60 the increase paid takes into account all of the increases granted since his/her year of retirement. I think that is a rather important point which was not emphasized in the comments of either of the two members of the opposition who spoke. Under the proposal before us, the pension increases would be payable in January of the year immediately following retirement.

I do not propose to go over all of the arguments pro and con that have been raised in connection with this issue, or indeed many that I have researched myself. I would, however, like to speak about the financial implications of an extension of the pension increases payable under the present legislation.

One needs only to look at the annual reports on the administration of the Supplementary Retirement Benefits Act since 1970 to see that the amounts involved in paying for full pension escalation are sizeable. For example, in the three fiscal years since full indexing was introduced, the pension increases payable under the act have been as follows: 1974-75=$58,878,000; 1975-76=$90,768,000; 1976-77=$131,000,000 approximately.

I am sure other members of the House have had representations from many constituents and organizations about the level of government spending. While we all support this motion I do not think the financial implications can be totally overlooked when related to government expenditure of that magnitude.

Although I do not have any over-all estimates of the cost implications of the proposal before us at this time, I can present a single example of the cost involved in this motion. Let us take the case of the 45-year old serviceman with 25 years' service who retires on a $7,000 pension. If we assume a 5 per cent rate of inflation between his year of retirement and the year he reaches age 60, the granting of a full indexing immediately would mean additional payments between ages 45 and 60 of about $46,000, or 6.57 times the basic pension.

As illustrated then, the potential cost of instituting the proposed change would be significant. A further indication of the cost of pension escalation can readily be seen if one refers to the last page of the "Basic Facts" paper tabled by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) on October 18, 1976. That page outlines the projected cost of the public service plan, and it can be seen that based on certain economic assumptions the cost of pension escalation will eventually equal the cost of the basic plan itself.

In drawing these points to the attention of the House I would not want it to be construed that I think most members do not support the intent of the motion, but I think it is fair to ask that we look at the cost as well. I am sure all members agree that the whole question of pensions has become an issue in the past year. Many people write to us with a point of view that is perhaps not based totally on fact regarding public service pensions and pensions for members of the armed forces.

● (1750)

The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) made a valid point when he said we should consider this subject objectively. He suggested that before anyone says that current pension benefits should be reduced we should review pension benefits made available to the public service and armed services. Indeed most people from my riding who have written to me about the cost of indexing seem worried about the open ended nature of these commitments. They fear that future costs may be so high as to create financial difficulties for the federal treasury, and pension benefits could be much higher than those the private sector could provide. Surely there should be some relationship between pension plans which can and should be provided by the private sector and the public sector.

The coupling of indexing with the early retirement provisions of the public service plan, not to mention the even earlier retirement provisions of the armed forces and Royal Canadian Mounted Police plans, has led to widespread criticism being levelled against the pension plans of federal employees, to the effect that "fat" and "exorbitant" pensions generally place those employees in a privileged position relative to other Canadians, at the expense of taxpayers. I was glad to see that in response to these criticisms the President of the Treasury Board prepared certain information.

I was one of the members who asked the minister to compile certain factual information on pension plans and made it available to all members of parliament so that we could render some mature judgment on the validity of the charges which had been made, instead of agreeing or disagreeing without information to temper our judgment.

I think the paper "Basic Facts" concerning pension plans helped to set the record straight. Though that paper was tabled, the debate on the question of pensions has continued and various groups in the community have levelled charges and made counter charges. As the paper pointed out, federal public servants have made consistently high employee contributions over the years. I think hon. members ought to remember this and comment on it more often. The plan was begun many years ago and the paper emphasized the actuarial soundness of the plan. That document also commented on a number of developments which would give the government the opportunity to reassess public service pension plan benefits and financial provisions in the near future. While referring specifically to the pension plan for public servants, needless to say any reassessment would also involve the pension plan for members of the armed forces and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police.

The first development concerns the current work in progress within the Treasury Board secretariat to establish a comprehensive framework within which the total compensation paid to federal employees can be measured with greater accuracy and related more systematically to total compensation rates in other sectors of the economy. This is important. I certainly do not support the argument that public servants should be paid less than their counterparts in the private sector. Surely the same responsibilities should be rewarded with the same pay, no matter if the work is done in the public or private sector. The new framework is designed to facilitate Treasury Board's continuing efforts to ensure that all elements of compensation for federal employees, including pension entitlement, are maintained in an equitable relationship with compensation levels in comparable areas of the private and public sectors.

A second development will be the next actuarial valuations of the public service, armed forces and Mounted Police pension plans scheduled to be conducted over the next two years. These valuations will assess, among other things, the financial impact on pension accounts and the implications for the future of the recent experience of high inflation. This is a key point, because our high inflation rates have made people concerned about the indexing cost of pensions. They would also provide the government with reliable information on which to base a reconsideration of any aspects of its pension policies for its employees which may be required. Indeed, I hope we shall have an opportunity to debate these questions in the House and to make representations to the governement on this issue which is of interest to many Canadians.

A third development concerns the government's general study of the pension situation of all Canadians. As reported last fall by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald), officials of the Departments of National Health and Welfare, Finance and Insurance, with the co-operation of interested federal departments and agencies, including the Treasury Board secretariat, have been laying the technical groundwork for this study by carrying out basic research, studying and analysing statistical and other information, and assembling the suggestions and comments of interested individuals and organizations. The review, I understand, will include comparisons of the features of retirement plans in the private and public sectors.

As the President of the Treasury Board mentioned, the government is well aware that pension policy for the public service cannot be considered in isolation from the pension situation of other Canadians, or without reference to the needs and capacities of other sectors of the economy. I think the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre raised a good point when he said that the result of this may be a review of where the private sector stands in providing adequate pensions to its employees. That question may be even more important than the analysis of pensions in the public sector.

A further major development was the announcement on March 14 this year by the President of the Treasury Board in an address to the Canadian Pension Conference, a reading of which I commend to hon. members, of the appointment of an outside consulting firm to conduct an independent study of the public service pension program. In announcing the study the minister mentioned a number of questions about pensions which had been brought to his attention. They were: what are the net costs associated with indexing pensions to the cost of living? Do they vary between the federal public sector and the private sector and, if so, why? Second, what roles have interest earnings and other pension investment returns played in the financing of pensions in the public and private sectors? Do these roles vary and, if so, why; and what are the implications of these variations?

Mr. Paproski: Question.

Mr. Milne: Mr. Speaker, surely members of parliament are entitled to use all their time to make their remarks, if they so choose. Outside professionals are saying more frequently that indexing costs are influenced less by inflation rates than by inflation-interest-wage differentials. Is this a valid conclusion and, if so, what differentials are likely to prevail in the years ahead?

In conclusion, though I support the motion, I do not think we should act on it until the studies I mentioned have been completed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, on two grounds. First, his time has expired. Second, the hour appointed for the consideration of private members' business has expired.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point order. As I recall, we were six minutes late in getting started.

An hon. Member: Seven minutes.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The point of order raised by the government House leader are into the time available for private members' hour, reducing it by either six or seven minutes. Perhaps Your Honour could take this lost time into consideration.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The Chair recalls the remarks of the hon. member for Okanagan Boundary (Mr. Whittaker) and also the point of order which took seven or eight minutes to consider. I agree that it was raised after the beginning of private members' hour and therefore took up part of the time allotted for the consideration of private members' business. But hon. members know that the point was raised after the announcement of the beginning of private members' hour.

If the point of order had been raised before the Chair announced the beginning of private members' hour, I do not know what the Chair's decision would be. Perhaps on another occasion such a point of order will be raised before the beginning of private members' hour. Of course points of order may be raised at anytime during private members' hour, and their consideration takes up some of the time available for private members' business. We have to consider points of order as they arise. This particular point of order was raised after the hour started.

Standing Order 15 provides for a one-hour period for the consideration of private members' business.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES—REASON FOR FAILURE OF DEPARTMENT TO MAKE A FAIR PERCENTAGE OF PURCHASES IN ATLANTIC REGION

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, I want to return to the matter I raised on May 26 with the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer). As I understand it, the minister is out of the country at the moment. I believe he is in Africa. That will give him time to reflect on the answer he gave the other day. I regard this a very serious matter, as I am sure whoever will be responding for the government also does.

It came to my attention a couple of weeks ago that, along with other aspects of federal policy which may be continuing or exacerbating regional disparity, particularly in the Atlantic region, the purchasing or procurement policies of the Department of Supply and Services seemed to have particular significance. I raise this because recently we received figures on two aspects of the Department of Supply and Services, their procurement policy with respect to science and engineering, and with regard to commercial supply.

With regard to commercial supply in 1976-1977, the year that has just concluded, there was a purchasing power of 6.3 per cent from a total budget of $1,009,486,000. This 6.3 per cent represented purchases made in the Atlantic region. That was a reduction from 7.9 per cent in the previous year, 1975-76, both in terms of over-all expenditures and absolute reduction $66,584,000 to something like $64,227,000 in 1976-77. That is a serious decline from 7.9 per cent to 6.3 per cent when you realize that the population in the Atlantic provinces is roughly 9.5 per cent of the national population.

When you look at the other area, that of science and engineering, the total is much larger, $1,862,722,000. We discover there is a shocking situation. There has been a decline because of the increase in the budget in that area in proportionate terms from 4.1 per cent in 1975-76 to 2 per cent in 1976-77, and an absolute decline from $41,305,000 to $37,563,000.

When you look at the fact that only 2 per cent of purchasing under science and engineering is directed to the Atlantic provinces you realize that we are in a very serious situation. On a proportionate basis the Atlantic provinces are not receiving their fair share of federal contracts through the Department of Supply and Services.

More important, the direction with respect to purchasing seems to be creating greater hardship and reducing, both on an absolute basis and in absolute terms, the amount of money expended in the Atlantic provinces, this at a time when we have the highest unemployment ever in the Atlantic provinces. I was shocked by this revelation. Added to that shock was the answer I received from the Minister of Supply and Services. He said that his department was not responsible for the industrial base within the various regions of our country. Further, in response to my colleague, the hon. member for Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco), the minister said that "it was a matter of not indulging in discriminatory policies towards any area, but rather to help businessmen in remote areas of the country to do business with us".

It seems that the minister is virtually unaware both of the impact of his department's billion dollar expenditures in terms of exacerbating the problems of regional economies across the country and, equally serious, he is not aware of even the Prime Minister's own dictum and instruction, because in reply to a supplementary from me the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) said he could assure me that it was made a matter of policy some years ago that, so far as possible, the department would ensure that regional considerations and the concern for greater equalization were taken into account in the purchasing done by the department.

Where is the recognition on the part of the minister? I know he has difficulty sometimes facing up to reality. He admitted as much in his terse note before he left the country in regard to another incident which I will not refer to in this question period. If the Prime Minister has issued to the minister—indeed, to all members of the cabinet—the instruction that he has a basic responsibility with respect to the impact on regional economies of a department which enters into billions of dollars worth of contracts, why does he say his department is not responsible, that this policy does not take any cognizance whatever of regional variations in the country? In fact he says it is not a matter of indulging in discriminatory policies.

Would the minister suggest that the recent innovation by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) in his latest budget in regard to the variable tax rate, which rises to 10 per cent for the Atlantic provinces, is a form of this regional discrimination in which the government should not engage? Would he suggest with respect to the attempt to vary freight rates across the country in order to make various producers equally competitive that this is a form of discrimination in which the government should not engage? Would he suggest that the millions of dollars worth of tariffs which have been imposed over the years is a form of discrimination which should not be pursued?

Quite frankly, Mr. Speaker, I think all members of the House recognize the fact that the federal government has a responsibility to ensure, as much as possible, that it takes overt and effective action to offset the various regional problems which we in this country face. For the minister to accept no responsibility and to ignore the declining interest in this department—in fact an overt attack on a regional economy such as that in the Atlantic provinces—through a declining budget commitment, is simply unacceptable. I hope that the minister or his parliamentary secretary will give us some effective answer and some redress on this matter.

[Mr. MacDonald (Egmont).]

Mr. Mike Landers (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I should like to respond to questions posed on May 26 by the hon. members for Egmont (Mr. MacDonald) and Kootenay West (Mr. Brisco) concerning the distribution of DSS contracts in Atlantic and western Canada.

First, I would like to point out that it is not the government's policy to allocate contracts for federal government requirements on the basis of the distribution of the Canadian population. Such a policy would be neither reasonable nor practical, as it is based on the assumption that the structure of economic activity is the same throughout the country. Our aim, as indicated by the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) on May 26, is to ensure that all Canadian businessmen who wish to do so have an equal opportunity to compete for federal government contracts. The minister has already described the work being done to inform suppliers of how to do business with government in order to increase the volume of contracts going into the industrial base in both the Atlantic and Pacific regions.

Within the government's over-all policy of competitive bidding, it is DSS's policy to employ a regional preference policy for local requirements where possible and practical. That is to say, we purchase federal government needs for goods from sources of supply close to the point of use when reasonable competition can be obtained among local suppliers. This policy, plus the general practice of acquiring goods and services on a competitive basis, has resulted in a considerable number of contracts being placed in Atlantic and western Canada. In fact our analysis shows that the federal government buys substantially more in Atlantic and western Canada than it consumes in those areas.

The hon. member has noted a sharp decline year over year in certain of our regional statistics. He will understand that a substantial part of our business relates to the acquisition of large value capital equipment which is bought infrequently. Consequently the value of business placed can fluctuate widely from one year to the next. A case in point would be the "R" class icebreaker which was contracted for in British Columbia last year. This one contract amounted to $108 million. Naturally the annual contracting values will decrease significantly in the year following such an acquisition.

• (1810)

I am sure hon. members will recognize that the total benefits accruing to any given region are not reflected in DSS's own contracting statistics. For example, the foreign prime contractors for large equipment purchases for the Department of National Defence are required to place business in Canada, as a result of contract conditions negotiated by DSS. Two contracts were recently placed as a result of such arrangements with firms in Amherst and Dartmouth, Nova Scotia, for requirements potentially totalling $13.5 million.

We share hon. members' concern about increasing the amount of contracting done in Atlantic and western Canada. We intend to continue to work to increase this level of business, while continuing to recognize our over-all responsibility to spend the taxpayers' money in a judicious, fair, and reasonable manner. Members must, however, realize, as we now do, the real constraints we face in achieving this objective. The Department of Supply and Services buys a large amount of goods and related services. However, the economies of the west and the Atlantic region do not always produce the type of goods we are asked to buy. In a few cases we may be able to integrate our purchasing with the industrial development plans of the regions. In most cases, however, we will have to continue to rely on existing facilities to meet our needs.

ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE—REASON FOR FAILURE TO PURSUE CASE AGAINST JOHN DOYLE UNDER INCOME TAX ACT

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, on May 4 I asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) a question about a case of gross negligence, wanton and wilful misconduct in the administration of the laws of this country, which had to do with the Department of National Revenue. It was a situation where a taxpayer, one John C. Doyle, was re-assessed for taxes in 1950 and 1954. It was 27 years ago in one case, and 24 years ago in the other. They were eventually brought before the Income Tax Appeal Board and were lost there. They were appealled to the Exchequer Court of Canada and lost there in 1970. There was another appeal entered in October, 1970, and these two cases are still unheard as I speak in this Chamber now.

On February 8 I tabled a question here about the same matter, and it is still unanswered. I wrote the Minister of National Revenue (Miss Bégin) and the Minister of Justice on March 23, and I got no response from them. I finally spoke in the House on this matter on April 21. On April 22, I wrote to both ministers and sent them a copy of my speech. I still have had no response from them. I asked the question again on May 4 in the House, and I spoke on May 5 in the House concerning this.

The Minister of Justice has made some extraordinary excuses. In answer to my question on May 4 he said that these appeals were proceeding at a pace the rules of the court allowed, and seemed to suggest that it was somehow the fault of the Supreme Court of Canada that this matter had not been concluded; whereas it is the negligence of the Department of Justice and the Department of National Revenue which permitted this thing to drag on as it has.

In the debate on the Judges Act on May 5, the Minister of Justice suggested that I should accept his statements, that there was no negligence on the part of the minister or his officials in this 27 year fiasco. Having said that once, he expected me to accept his statement instead of challenging it. That is a new principle of parliamentary immunity, Mr. Speaker, that if a minister says there has been no negligence on the part of a minister or any of his officials, that must be accepted and no one dare challenge that statement. Of course that is quite untrue.

If the minister says he is now instructing his officials to proceed with all deliberate speed and haste to have the appeals heard, I would accept his word; but when he says there has been no negligence, I do not accept that statement. In my opinion there has been gross negligence and misconduct in this matter for the last 27 years. How could appeals involving millions of dollars in public funds be left to lie fallow for several years without any action by the department, not to mention the fact that the department consented when the appellant asked for the matter to be postponed last year?

I have still no answer to my question of February 8, although the minister wrote me on May 13, gave me the information and said it would soon be tabled. It has not been tabled as yet. I do not know what is happening. I do not know whether someone is preventing this information from being tabled.

Mr. Landers: On a point of order, I believe the answer was tabled today, according to my information.

Mr. Crosbie: Even if the answer was tabled today, it certainly took a long time to have it tabled. I am glad it has been tabled. If it was tabled today, I say "hear, hear". I have received no copy of it as yet.

It is agreed by the Crown that on these judgments there was owing in interest and taxes as of December 31, 1976, $3,483,-412. The Crown states that it has attached 1,009,562 shares of John C. Doyle in Canadian Javelin Ltd. on the books of the transfer agents, and that it did this some years ago. In the intervening period these shares have declined in value to $1.50, if they are worth anything. Thus the Crown is not adequately secured, if indeed this attachment has any validity.

On July 8, 1963, a writ of extent was issued on Canadian Javelin Ltd., directing them not to pay over any moneys to John C. Doyle which were allegedly owed by Canadian Javelin, Ltd. We know that for ten years Canadian Javelin Limited was allowed to ignore that writ of extent and that, by their own admission, they paid out $525,065 to John C. Doyle in complete disregard of that writ of extent, and the Crown did nothing about this.

We know further that Mr. Doyle set up a company in Nassau called Javelin Export Limited, a Nassau company, and that this company contracted with Canadian Javelin for his services, and that in 1974, by the company's admission, $100,-600 was paid to Javelin Export which paid it to Doyle, and that in 1975 $118,750 was paid by Canadian Javelin to Javelin Export who paid it to Doyle in defiance of the writ of extent. The Crown has done nothing about this, either. Everywhere you look, it is negligence.

We know that John Doyle has been a fugitive from justice in the United States since 1965. We know he was allowed to leave Canada about two years ago. He is in Panama now, and it is unlikely he will be back here because there are a number of criminal charges to be faced if he returns, both in connection with fraud in Newfoundland and in connection with "wash trading" in Canada—over 400 charges.

The government knows all about this and about what has been going on in connection with these companies for years, yet it has taken no action to prevent him voting the shares it says it has attached. If it has attached these shares, how is it that Mr. Doyle has been allowed to vote them at meetings of Javelin and retain control of the company through his 18.4 per cent interest? There is more here, Mr. Speaker, than meets the eye, much more. I have never heard of any such tender treatment given to a taxpayer in Canada before. The ordinary law-abiding taxpayers do not get this kind of treatment.

One of my own acquaintances, at this very moment in British Columbia, is being harassed and dragooned for $23,000 by the Department of National Revenue, the officials of which say he cannot enter an appeal until he first pays them the cash they say he owes. Yet a man with the reputation of John C. Doyle, owing sums of this magnitude, has been allowed to go year after year without putting up adequate security, without paying his taxes, without paying interest, and was allowed to leave the country with his debt not properly secured. Before we are finished, Mr. Speaker, we shall discover this is the grossest maladministration of the revenue law.

I must say this for the present Minister of Justice. He has given me some information and some co-operation. From the Minister of National Revenue I have received no co-operation. I wrote asking her what cases from her department were pending before the Supreme Court. She did not give me the information I was seeking. There are ten cases pending. I want to know from what years they date. This is an unsatisfactory state of affairs. The taxpayers of Canada demand equal, impartial treatment, and the proper administration of the law. I want to see those appeals brought before the court and heard. I want to see these irregularities corrected, and I am calling upon the minister to do this.

Mr. Mike Landers (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, in his question the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) asked the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) what action he and his colleagues were taking to collect millions of dollars of income tax interest for the taxation years 1950 and 1954 owing by one John C. Doyle, and whether there had been an appeal pending before the Supreme Court of Canada for the last seven years without any action being taken by the government to pursue it.

With regard to the first part of the question, 1,009,526 shares of Canadian Javelin Limited have been attached by way of a seizure on the books of the transfer agents. In addition, a writ of extent was issued out of the Exchequer Court on July 8, 1963, for the sum of $3,410,130.90. Some other action has been taken and other measures are contemplated, but they are of a confidential nature.

• (1820)

With regard to the second part of his question, I must state that there are two appeals pending before the Supreme Court of Canada since 1970 which have not been heard. One of the appeals was inscribed for the winter session of the Supreme Court of Canada, but an application was made and agreed to by the Department of National Revenue and the Department of Justice for the removal of this case from the winter session provided that it be reinscribed again for the spring session of the Supreme Court of Canada. This case was accordingly reinscribed for the spring session in the Supreme Court of Canada and, because of its place in the Supreme Court of Canada list, this appeal will likely be heard in October, 1977.

The second appeal involves a complex procedural question as to whether this appeal can be heard by the Supreme Court prior to another case respecting the same assessment being dealt with by the Federal Court. Both the appeal before the Supreme Court and the case before the Federal Court will be dealt with as quickly as possible.

COMMONWEALTH GAMES—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO AVOID AFRICAN BOYCOTT

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, for many months I have been urging the government to take every step possible to ensure the success of the Commonwealth Games in Edmonton in 1978. We are all worried about national unity today. I can tell you what would be a magnificent boost for unity—both in Canada and the Commonwealth—and that would be the complete participation by every Commonwealth nation. In other words, no African boycott.

The fact that the possibility of an African boycott is on the agenda of the Commonwealth conference next week is proof that the Canadian government has so far failed to resolve this matter. And the government has failed because it has not exerted enough muscle. It has been too timid. It has not been tough enough with either New Zealand or the African states.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, the problem revolves around New Zealand's sporting links with South Africa. In the view of the black African states it is not good enough for New Zealand to have severed official sporting links with South Africa because of its apartheid policies. The black states want New Zealand to ban teams even from unofficial sports contests in South Africa.

For its part, New Zealand's Prime Minister, Mr. Muldoon, said recently that the Commonwealth Games are "not sufficiently important" for New Zealand to stop its teams. That was when the Canadian government should have made it abundantly clear that it would not tolerate such a cavalier attitude by a sister country. The games are an essential instrument in the development of relations between every member of the Commonwealth. The government took this snubbing by New Zealand because it did not have the courage to fight for our rights. It relied on the customary mode of quiet diplomacy when it should have acted to urge New Zealand to wake up.

Similarly what is the Canadian government doing to put some pressure on the African nations? What right do they have to penalize Canada because of the obfuscations of New Zealand? Canada's record on race relations is one we can be and are proud of. This country has helped black African nations politically and economically to attain their independence and maturity.

And speaking of economic help, how can the African states call for Canada's help in improving the health of developing nations through such instruments as the just-concluded North-South Conference in Paris if, at the same time, they hurt us economically?

It is time the African nations also woke up and realized that we live in an interdependent world. Pulling out of the 1978 games and hurting Canada is not a very good way to develop public opinion in Canada concerning the needs of the developing countries.

So, Mr. Speaker, there are a lot of hard-headed attitudes at the root of the Commonwealth Games problem. And the Canadian government has taken too soft a stand.

Edmonton has done a superlative job in preparing the facilities, which are acknowledged to be the finest ever built for the Commonwealth Games. Good management by the Edmonton organizers has kept the planning on budget and ahead of schedule.

The total cost of this great effort is under $50 million, including capital and operating costs, a truly remarkable achievement when we consider $1.416 billion spent on the 1976 Montreal Olympics. We are preparing for 24,000 visitors from around the world who will be in Edmonton for each of the ten days, August 3-12, 1978. They will all receive a royal welcome. The members of the news media will total more than 1,300.

All of this is more than just a great community effort of 3,000 volunteers brought together by a great Edmonton team headed by Dr. Maury Van Vliet. It is a vital national event, and it cannot be allowed to fail or be crippled by an African boycott.

I want a response from the government tonight that will tell me more than just the amount of federal money contributed. I want to know how a boycott can be avoided, since efforts have so far failed. The Commonwealth conference appears to be the last hope. If that conference is not successful, Canada ought to bring the issue to the United Nations, for the issue is not the politics of sports; the issue is the development of good relations in a global community. That is an issue for all nations and all colours of people, and Canada can no longer remain silent.

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the question which the hon. member has raised is a very difficult one which has concerned the government for many months. The government is committed to the success of the Commonwealth Games in Edmonton, both as a sporting event and as a symbol of what the Commonwealth means as a harmonious association of peoples. We are, therefore, concerned that there be representation from all parts of the Commonwealth; indeed we are concerned that lack of such representation would be a severe blow to the fabric of the Commonwealth.

We have been working closely with the Secretary General of the Commonwealth and with other Commonwealth countries to bring about a successful resolution of the points at issue between New Zealand and the African members of the Commonwealth. We believe there is a good chance that the issue can be settled at the heads of government meeting in London, and we are working to set the stage for a constructive discussion of the issue at that time. We believe that it is possible for a compromise to be achieved on the basis of the opposition of all Commonwealth members to the system of apartheid.

What we envisage is a statement by all heads of government reaffirming their opposition to the practice of apartheid in sport and to contacts with South Africa by Commonwealth sports bodies and individuals. The Secretary General has been charged with finding a suitable formula for discussion, and the exact content of the statement will no doubt be a matter for debate among heads of government.

Mr. Speaker, I understand of course that the hon. member is interested in this problem since he comes from a constituency in Edmonton, but he should understand that in three minutes it is impossible to give the answers to all the points that this very complex problem might raise and I am sorry not to be able to give him a more complete answer, but the discussions are still going on and it would be presumptuous to give more complete answers at this moment.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been withdrawn.

Motion withdrawn.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

FISHING AND RECREATIONAL HARBOURS ACT

MEASURE TO PROVIDE FOR ADMINISTRATION AND DEVELOPMENT OF CERTAIN HARBOURS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. LeBlanc (Westmorland-Kent) that Bill C-7, respecting the administration and development of certain fishing and recreational harbours in Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

Mr. Fred McCain (Carleton-Charlotte): Mr. Speaker, I earlier mentioned my concern about wharfage. In the interim I have had an opportunity to look into the subject a little deeper, and there are some matters I should like to put on the record.

The first is an exchange between myself and the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) which took place at the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry on May 30, 1975, when I put the following question:

. . . let us resolve this wharfage business. Let us wipe it out and start over . . .

And the minister replied:

I will say amen to that.

Every member present at that committee meeting was under the impression that the minister had given his approval to the principle of eliminating wharfage as a fee against fishermen and other boat owners.

On May 27, 1975, a group of fishermen from the Fundy coast of New Brunswick appeared before the committee and the subject of wharfage came up again. I questioned Mr. Andrew Matthews, who was appearing for the second time, as follows:

MR. MCCAIN: When you were here before the subject of wharfage was brought up. Has this problem been corrected for you?

MR. A. MATTHEWS: No, it has not. People are still getting wharfage bills and summonses. There are some fees and they will not give them foreign clearance.

MR. MCCAIN: What is your principal complaint about this wharfage?

MR. A. MATTHEWS: I cannot see that it is any good. It is this way: we will go into the wharf and tie up. I have a 42 foot boat and my neighbour has a 40 foot boat. I will have to pay wharfage and he will go scot-free but we are both taking up the same space at the wharf. If it is compulsory for one man to pay wharfage, regardless of the size of his boat it should be compulsory for everyone.

The subject was also raised in committee on March 13, 1975, by the hon. member for Comox-Alberni (Mr. Anderson), when he put the following question:

I have a second question, Mr. Chairman. Has your department made any investigation into the charging of fees for the use of federal small-craft harbours when there is no wharfman on duty due to the size of the wharf?

THE CHAIRMAN: Mr. Reid, that is yours.

MR. REID: Mr. Chairman, in the new act which we hope to introduce very shortly, we have examined this whole area of user charges and the wharfinger system. We hope to be able to introduce a system of fees whereby a fisherman, or even the recreational boating public using federal facilities, will pay one fee a year which will give them the opportunity to dock at federal government facilities, so that it will no longer be the duty of the wharfinger to collect the fees from people as they are docking at federal government facilities.

Perhaps it would be wrong of me to ask if the Minister of Fisheries has any idea of the number of boats that go in and out of certain of those small craft facilities in a day, or a week, or even a season.

● (2010)

Is the government prepared to pay to the person responsible for collecting wharfage a proper amount of money, and so induce him to exercise surveillance over the port or harbour throughout the year, in order to assure its equitable use? Or, is it the government's policy to continue the patronage system, of appointing friends to collect money from those from whom they wish to collect? I raise one more question.

The question I placed on the order paper on November 17 asked if there is a standard wharfage structure in eastern Canada. I was always under the impression eastern Canada included the five eastern provinces, in all of which there are opportunities for fishing and fish industries. If there is a wharfage structure in the province of Quebec, it is not listed in the answer. If fees were collected, they were not listed. If there is a charge system in the Quebec area of eastern Canada, that is not listed. I presume all this may be due to an oversight. But if it was not an oversight, I want the government to explain why my question was not answered adequately.

In the main, the present wharfage system is obnoxious and improperly managed. I see no indication in this bill that this will change. Apparently it will be perpetuated. That will be a perpetuation of wrong-doing.

Virtually the longest clause of Bill C-7 deals with the government's regulation making powers. It permits the government to make regulations with respect to the classification of harbours, payment of wharfage fees, penalties, and pollution. Subparagraph (d) of Clause 9 says that the Governor in Council may make regulations "not inconsistent with any other act of parliament or regulations made thereunder, for the control of pollution at any scheduled harbour."

There are already three acts in place on the statute books concerning small harbour facilities. Now a fourth statute is to be added. That this bill does not specify more clearly the minister's responsibility concerning non-fishing boats, pleasure craft and other boats is improper. It gives the harbour authorities no authority to reserve particular fishing facility for fishing boats. It will not resolve fishermen's complaints that pleasure craft using a harbour interfere with the fishermen's use of the harbour.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but must inform him that his allotted time has expired. He may continue if he has unanimous consent. Has the hon. member unanimous consent to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, I shall be brief. I appreciate the generosity of hon. members. It is imperative to maintain small pleasure craft harbours along the coast. It is also imperative for the government to consider the tourist oriented potential of these harbours, a potential relating to the arrival and departure of small boats. Consequently proper facilities should be provided.

[Translation]

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise this evening to discuss Bill C-7 respecting the administration and development of certain fishing and recreational harbours in Canada. I do not intend to linger on that legislation, except to say that it is somewhat late this year. Indeed, it will no doubt be difficult if not impossible to benefit from this legislation this year, because the summer season has already begun. In spite of that fact, I must say that the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) will give rise to many hopes with that bill, since it will enable individuals and corporations to take advantage of the financial and technical assistance of the department.

In my constituency, Marina régionale de Rimouski Inc. have been trying for several years to obtain assistance to build a marina in the port of Rimouski on a location recognized as being propitious to such an operation while not hindering any traffic of heavy tonnage. Environment Canada did receive a report from that organization requesting financial assistance to carry out its project. It now has 90 members waiting for the assistance of the federal department in this project.

Rimouski has a strategic position: it is located on the south shore of the St. Lawrence, 180 miles east of Quebec City and 345 miles northeast of Montreal. The average width of the river within the quadrilateral formed by Rivière-du-Loup and Matane on the south shore and Godbout and Tadoussac on the north shore, of which Rimouski is the centre on the south shore, is about 30 to 40 miles. With the variety of services it provides, Rimouski could easily become the main centre for sailing and recreational activities in the eastern part of Quebec, an important halt for tourists coming from the Saguenay area, Quebec City, Montreal, the Richelieu Valley and the United States, and an open gate on ocean navigation for travellers heading for the Gaspé Peninsula, Anticosti Island and the Magdalen Islands. Rimouski is proud of the stretch of water it offers and conscious of its exceptional position as we can see by the number of boat owners, maritime and nautical sport clubs as well as the number of oceanologic institutions it harbours.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out in passing all the bodies interested in the development of Rimouski harbour. The town of Rimouski has its own school of maritime navigation affiliated with the college course of the education department. It also owns an oceanographic research centre affiliated with the University of Quebec at Rimouski; the group GIROQ, a provincial body for oceanographic research; a squadron of the Canadian Power Squadrons made up of 40 members, which for several years has been giving courses in maritime navigation and nautical safety; a sailing club of 125 members whose aim is to promote sailing and teach its technique. The sailing club is also greatly responsible for the only off-shore sailing regatta in the province of Quebec; this regatta is supported by the Fédération de la voile du Québec and the winner is awarded the Lieutenant-Governor's trophy. Rimouski also has a 100-member scuba-diving club and 10 boats from 20 to 45 feet long, a nautical club with 300 members and 100 yachts 12 to 20 feet long.

Mr. Speaker, I do not know if you are aware of that, but a few years ago, the highway department built a road that stretches about three miles along the shore of the St. Lawrence River. A retaining wall was also erected. Unfortunately that wall has the effect of breaking the waves which now causes a lot of damage to pleasure boats and even bigger ships during storms. I would also like to mention damages caused in recent years since the construction of the retaining wall. Damages have been caused to boats and their owners since 1972, the year when the retaining wall of Highway 132 was built. This list is not exhaustive and is only given to indicate the urgency of the situation: a 30-foot whaler sank; a visitor boat from the United States a 35-foot sloop, and a 40-foot school-ship from Montreal were damaged. More than twenty ships of all sizes, local and visitor, suffered various damages.

The summer of 1974 was particularly fertile in unfortunate events: one wrist fractured, one rudder broken, two stem galleries wrung, one chain plate torn off with part of the deck, one stay tightener twisted and one mast broken in three parts. Unfortunately, to this list we should add long hours of watching, smashed fences, gunwale rails ripped off and countless damages to fibre-glass hulls or painted surfaces.

Mr. Speaker, for all those reasons and many more to which we will come back during another debate, we believe it is at least abnormal if not unjust that Rimouski could not benefit from the necessary facilities to protect small crafts and visiting boats. Rimouski residents can only offer the federal harbour in Rimouski East to local sportsmen for the protection of their craft. Moreover, this relative security is granted to them only through simple and gracious permission of port authorities and it can be removed at any time because it is not part of a contractual negotiation as such. Although partial, the protection owners enjoyed before was acceptable. As I said earlier, the construction of a retaining wall is required for Highway 132 in front of the Rimouski-East wharf, and it has transformed this relative security into a real danger. This retaining wall is in fact dangerous and bounces the waves formed by the north and northeast winds directly back into the harbour where the boats are berthed. Those waves, with the Bernouilli phenomenon caused by the bottleneck shape of the wharf, are quite amplified and cause really disastrous and highly dangerous situations, especially since the foreign visitor, knowing nothing of the above mentioned phenomenon, is deluded by the apparent security of this haven.

This situation is not extraordinary, as it could be easily believed, and it is not necessarily accompanying unusually bad weather. Every time the wind blows from the north-northeast or east, and that the tide is rising, the worst can be expected and the worst usually happens. When referring to serious works in meteorology for the Rimouski area concerning prevalent winds for normal navigation, and reading in regard the data of the 1975 tide tables, if we synthetize those parameters even summarily, there is no point in mentioning the apprehension felt by vacationers concerning the opening of the next navigation season. If we add to all this the narrowness of this harbour where over 39 local boats were berthing last year, most of them in double, this year there will be some 15 additional boats. The situation is not only dangerous but catastrophic and it becomes intolerable.

As long as the present harbour is not extended and protected by at least one north-south breakwater on the east side, it will remain illusory to develop navigational tourism on the St. Lawrence and farther east all around the Gaspé Peninsula. As long as visitors will not be protected, it will always be a bit ridiculous to organize, at the regional level, off-shore boat races which would supposedly be of international levels. Yet it is the status which can be expected for the lieutenant-governor classic. The success met by this competition in the last few years as to the number of participants is yet quite surprising if we consider there are no appropriate shelters and no services. That surprise could some day change into concern and lead to tragedy should there be an overly great number of competitors.

The economic input brought about by such a touristic attraction as those annual races could never be hoped to have some importance without the minimum requirement of building the breakwater previously referred to. Any event of this kind in our area will be doomed to failure and disappearance purely and simply more or less shortly. Mr. Speaker, in eastern Quebec as anywhere else in the country, summer is very short, and the department's efforts to develop tourism, promote with all Quebecers the taste for outdoor life and develop environmental resources will never be qualified as excessive.

The St. Lawrence is a prime ecological resource and the importance of rationally operating that unique stretch of water to the benefit of all citizens in the province without any distinction could never be overemphasized. The development of a recreational harbour in our area would have the immediate effect of extending by at least two months the sailing season on the St. Lawrence and, consequently, allowing more people to enjoy the healthy pleasures provided by a rationally and democratically operated ecological site. The tourist orientation of the Lower St. Lawrence and the Gaspé area was stigmatized on more than one occasion in past years; the host of various reports and studies on this conclude in the same affirmative sense. The positive steps taken by the department to make that important economic activity viable will always be favourably viewed by the whole population.

The trends that are growing each year within the Quebec community will in the next decade give the Department of Tourism increased significance. The higher average purchasing power, the ever stronger appeal of outdoor life and sports, the increase in leisure time will soon turn Quebec into a pivotal table for Canadian and world tourism as long as we take the time to develop properly the strategic tourist sites. Mr. Speaker, no one can deny the obvious attraction the Gaspé Peninsula and the Îles-de-la-Madeleine have for Quebec, Canadian and international tourism, especially since the recent creation of provincial and federal parks, and we do not think it is being bold to say that that trend will increase over the years.

The Anticosti Island recently acquired by the department will only confirm that trend and further stress the need for the strategic development of recreational harbours on the shores of the St. Lawrence above those attraction centres. So it becomes quite obvious that a service city like Rimouski becomes a new neuralgic stop over on the route of sailing tourists when one recognizes the enormous distances involved in such trips. So we want to point out the urgency of proceedings with the preliminary works and the construction of the breakwater this very year, another step in the progress of this country. So Mr. Speaker, I think it is urgent that the department get on with the job and meet the wish of a very important group in the Rimouski area.

Quebec certainly looks like a late starter in this area, with barely 25 to 30 marinas, compared—I am not saying this out of jealousy—with the more than 2000 which Ontario has, at least 500 of which have been built with the financial assistance of the federal government. I think it would be very wise, if not fair, for the department to do something for the isolated groups who have spent over 10 years trying to obtain the financial backing they need to carry out their marina projects.

On the other hand, Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the minister who introduced this bill will advise all parties interested in this marina project for the metropolitan city of the Gaspé region and that he will give a favourable reply to this group of Quebec taxpayers. I hope the minister will listen favourably to the wishes of all those who have been seeking for many years the building of a marina in Rimouski. I also hope this bill will make it possible, as I was saying a while ago, for the brave people of the lower St. Lawrence region to benefit from Bill C-7.

[English]

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to participate in this debate, particularly since Bill C-7 meets, in general philosophical terms, with the approval and has the consent of our party and the opposition generally. Discouraging, however, is the fact that the minister himself is not as keen as we are in advancing this bill through this stage of discussion in the House and he is conspicuous by his absence tonight. This is something we do not greet with as much enthusiasm as we do some provisions in the bill.

We have to be delighted that it is now the intention, as the minister said in his opening remarks, to amalgamate the many sections of departments and agencies which were formerly responsible for small harbours and recreational facilities on lakes, oceans and rivers, which now fall under the purview of the Department of Fisheries and the Environment.

As we know, Mr. Speaker, this was not always so. When one used to apply under this act either for assistance to construct small harbours or facilities on shores, or one attempted to make deals or enter into agreements with individuals, municipalities or provinces, by the time the department acknowledged the request, the responsibility for small harbours had been shifted to some other department. The Department of Transport has several times had responsibility for this particular marine activity. Ministers of Public Works have had responsibility on several occasions, and then sometime in 1973 responsibility was shifted to the Department of Fisheries and the Environment.

We are all a little worried over one clause in the bill which provides:

Nothing in this Act applies to or affects

(a) any harbour, works or property under the jurisdiction of the National Harbours Board or of any harbour Commission established under any Act of Parliament;

We know what the distinction is. These are main port facilities on both coasts which are managed by special commissions or regional agencies. The clause continues:

(b) any harbour, wharf, pier or breakwater under the control and management of any member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada other than the Minister;—

Now we are getting confused. How many other agencies are still putting their fingers in the pie? Is this really an amalgamation, or will the whole question be referred to other ministers? Are there other jurisdictions? In this regard the bill leaves us in the dark.

Then finally the clause provides:

(c) Any of the powers or duties of the Minister of Transport or the Minister of Public Works under any other Act of Parliament or regulations made pursuant thereto.

The minister tells us that small recreational and fishing harbours now come under one jurisdiction, and in the same breath he tells us through this bill that the Department of Public Works, the Department of Transport, and a whole series of other departments may also have jurisdiction; that this legislation, which is to be identified as the Fishing and Recreational Harbours Act, may not be under his jurisdiction at all as we move along and try to identify the various parts of the legislation. This leaves me, my colleagues and, I am sure, all Canadians confused as to who has responsibility in this area.

We are also confused over the fact that the minister has identified his new responsibility as having within its jurisdiction at the present time some 2,300 facilities. I would like to point out that 1,500 of those are fishing harbours and 800 are recreational facilities or installations. That does not take into account the hundreds of applications the minister and his department have received to install new facilities in some critical areas on both coasts and in inland water systems as well. What confuses us about this whole business is that we do not find any reference to the minister's new responsibilities in the estimates. He will be spending $35 million this year. That is all we see in the estimates. Having regard to the magnitude of this department and its responsibilities, we find this figure inadequate and not at all in tune with what the minister has identified his responsibilities to be.

● (2040)

Having regard to the most critical nature of this matter on both coasts, one wonders whether there is any way that the minister can address himself to the real need of inland water systems, one of which I will be making particular reference to in my remarks later on. There are many recreational facilities which receive no federal subsidies, and in fact there has been no federal involvement in them at all. We have known these facilities to be productive. They generate income in the national and regional interests. One wonders where the government's priorities are. We have to compare the $35 million which was channelled into a most critical area, fisheries, with the money which is spent on Mirabel every year. We saw fit to subsidize the installation at Mirabel by $45 million in one year. No revenue will be generated out of that white elephant. It will take away from some other airdrome which has served us well thus far.

We can also refer to the $500 million which is being put into the CBC every year. Instead of unifying our country and achieving a form of recognition of the difficulties in various regions, we have compounded the misunderstanding with the horrendous bumblings which this institution has perpetrated on Canadians over the last few years.

What about vital industries like fisheries and tourism? Tourism in some provinces is number one. How can we justify spending a mere $35 million? These comparisons have to be made because $35 million is not a very big amount in modern context. What is $35 million in comparison to the Canadian National Railways subsidy of $200 million a year, $500 million to the CBC, and $45 million to Mirabel?

This bill does not offer any comfort to our constituents on the west coast who have recently suffered a phasing out of a transportation subsidy which served 100 communities along the waterways of the west coast. My colleagues and my friends should be able to think back and realize that was a very critical issue in the House of Commons, and still is. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) announced the subsidy and claimed the support of his west coast colleagues on that side of the House. He said that they all had input into this new policy which was called user-pay, and they were serving the best interests of their constituents. One of his friends immediately rectified that by saying he had nothing to do with this monster and wanted to disassociate himself from the minister's comments. That was said in the House publicly. Then there was the Minister of State for Fitness and Amateur Sport (Mrs. Campagnolo) who could not master the emotional fitness required to carry out the threat which she issued to the Minister of Transport, namely, that she would resign from the ministry and from the House if this whole question were not reconsidered.

This bill holds out very little comfort to those people. These people will be faced with not being able to go fishing or not being able to take their friends fishing. They will also be faced with a serious situation as to the movement of vital commodities to their shores. I am referring to the small communities on the coast of British Columbia.

I would like to make reference to the situation in my own constituency. In the mid-sixties Williston Lake was created as a result of the construction of the Bennett Dam in central and northern British Columbia. We have a situation now where we have an inland water system which encompasses 680 square miles of water and 1,000 miles of shoreline. There are several native communities which were completely isolated from the mainstream of life by that new water system. These people used to communicate with the outside world along rivers or roads. Several native communities were totally dislocated and had to be moved when the lake was formed.

It was the wisdom of the department responsible for those particular people to move them close to civilization. When they discovered they could not cope with this new-found society, they moved back into the bush. The type of craft they were using to communicate with the outside world in order to get their mail, bread, butter, salt and sugar, were little canoes and boats. Then they found the little canoes and boats, which they had traditionally used, were no good for this lake which formed, if the wind was right, 20 foot waves. It was an ocean to them. There was no one who offered them any help in acquiring the skills necessary to traverse these waters or in acquiring equipment necessary to traverse these waters. Thus they are totally isolated from the mainstream of life.

The Minister of Transport tells us it is to be user-pay, and if they want to get sugar from across the lake they can buy themselves a $40,000 or a $50,000 ship, hire themselves a crew, and see what they can come up with. At the present time I do not know of any single installation in respect to a harbour, wharf, pier, breakwater, slipway, marina or any part thereof on this lake. There are a number of private installations which would have to be brought in by industry, and they would have their normal access to resources cut off and impaired. They had to adopt a whole new system. They used to be truck loggers, and now they take their logs, pile them on the ice in the winter time and, when the ice melts, the logs sink into the water. They had to buy big ships of an ocean-going type to move their goods and raw materials around this waterway. There was no assistance from anyone. The federal government, the Minister of Transport, and the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. LeBlanc) knew they had to buy their own boats. All of a sudden, communities around these lakes were totally isolated, yet no one offered any assistance.

There are other areas in which the Minister of Fisheries should have been involved in this whole mess, as some people call it, in central British Columbia. There were no environmental studies of the sort we talk of now in relation to pipelines and projects such as the James Bay project even though the ministry claims responsibility over several acts, including the legislation designed to protect the environment, notably the Navigable Waters Act. However, from recent inquiries directed to the department I learned that when the minister is asked to make comments or pass judgment, he may express his views with regard to any of these developments such as the Peace River power development, but there is no need for him to issue a licence, and he has no power to hold up such projects if they are discovered to be harmful to the environment. This is critical.

The dam project on the Peace River, as we now know, has changed the temperature in central British Columbia and in some of the northern regions by as much as five degrees. The temperature has moderated to that extend. On the surface one might think that the people living in the northern areas would greet this change with some enthusiasm. After all, it gets pretty cold up there—40 below in some places. But that is not the whole story. Humidity was also affected. And while we shall not know what the situation really is for another 25 years—officials to whom we have spoken say, "Well, the weather has been bad everywhere; this alteration in the level of humidity will also have repercussions in the region."

I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, what it has done to the farmers. The fact that temperatures are not as cold as they were does not affect them greatly, but it does bother them in the summertime because the humidity detracts from the fast ripening of No. 1 wheat in a region which was a choice area for growing this commodity. Since the lake was created the farmers have yet to raise a decent crop, and many of them are saying that the dam may well be responsible.

Then there are the loggers who, in the middle of November, build their roads into the bush and carry on activities in readiness for their main work which takes place in the winter time. The area is not very accessible in the summer by virtue of its swampy nature. They, too, found there was increased snowfall and insufficient frost in the ground to enable their heavy equipment to be moved in the normal way. They are still improvising and wondering how they will be able to adjust to these new conditions. I am not saying this is all negative. I am pointing out that some of these things were not considered before this project was undertaken, and that the Minister of Fisheries had some responsibility for expressing a judgment with regard to such a massive intervention but failed to take steps to protect the interests of a greater variety of people than those whose interests were considered by the provincial government.

This bill enables the minister to enter into agreements with the provinces and with individuals. I should like to ask him what agreements have been considered with the province of British Columbia in connection with Williston Lake. Certainly, the province is responsible for building this hydro project and I suppose it should have some responsibility for ensuring that the people whose lives have been disturbed, the people who have been isolated, the people whose freedom has been interfered with by this scheme, should at least be given some compensation in the area of transport and so on.

The Findlay River is one of the prime tourist areas in my country. Thousands of people go up that beautiful canyon to find enjoyment and fulfilment during the summer in pursuit of their favourite sport. There are two native communities there. First there is the community of Fort Ware, formerly totally self-sufficient. Today, not only can they not get up the river, because at most times the river is flooded and choked with debris, but they cannot even get access to the lake. They have talked to British Columbia Hydro but there is no comfort there.

The forestry service, which is interested in the lake, has undertaken to do what it can to clear the debris from the waterway but no substantial help is in sight, certainly not from the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development

(Mr. Allmand), who surely should have something to say about the alienation of this particular community and the way in which its traditional rights and lifestyle have been affected.

Then there is the community of Inginika, the one actually displaced by the lake. These people found it impossible to cope with the pressures of the society into which they were moved. They moved back into their old area and are now completely isolated without the equipment or the means of carrying on their old activities. Every year, in the middle of winter as food runs out and fresh vegetables are not obtainable, I find myself making appeals to emergency organizations to fly in vital commodities to keep some of those people alive. Usually it is too late, malnutrition among the children having already taken its toll.

It is absolutely incredible that we should get this kind of document before us without any indication as to the means by which the minister intends to find the money to carry out his mandate. Of course there has been no lack of representation from the people affected by this lake. I have a letter here sent in response to an application originating from a group in Saint John called the River Rats. These people are carrying on a recreational endeavour along the great mountain rivers of the interior. They were affected, along with all the others. They wrote to the minister and asked him whether it would be possible for him to help them to carry on their activities. They wanted to build themselves the kind of equipment which could be used to go out on the lake. There are fish in the lake, and there is even a potential for commercial fisheries that some of the native people could carry on there.

● (2100)

On August 29, 1975, the response from the minister's department read as follows:

Our potential allotments for the next two years are fully assigned already and the funds for the ensuing years are under heavy demand as well. Thus, there is very little likelihood that we would be able to support the construction of several launching ramps in the Peace River in the next few years.

In view of your apparent willingness to proceed on your own with minor assistance only—

This is typical. When there is an application from the kind of people I represent, the government is always backing it up with either a solution or a suggestion as to where some of this money should come from, or else it says, "Look, if you give us 50 cents, we will gladly do another 50 cents worth of work and we will make the facility available not just to serve our own selfish interests but for the public in general."

The letter goes on to read:

—I suggest that you examine the opportunities available to you through the Local Initiatives Program—

I wonder if that is not one of the agencies to which the bill makes reference under paragraph (b) which states:

. . . any member of the Queen's Privy Council for Canada—

I say so because the minister has hidden behind LIP on many occasions in the House when we have asked questions about these facilities. He has said that maybe if there is all this unemployment they can apply through LIP and that that would be one of the areas in which the government could help. Needless to say that would not be one of the areas for which he is responsible.

The letter goes on to read:

You can determine your chances of assistance by contacting the representative in your closest Canada Manpower Office.

Here is the critical sentence. He is very generous and charitable when he says:

I would be prepared to endorse your application. The deadline for replying is September 12th but I would urge you to apply as soon as possible.

How generous of the minister to say that he would endorse the LIP application because he knows best what the local priorities are. I asked him what his priorities are with regard to small harbours and recreational facilities. I found this rather comical, and followed it up. I explained to his officials precisely what I am saying here tonight.

Here we have a complete new waterway, a giant inland ocean totally alien to the environment of the area, and there is no federal involvement or assistance to establish any kind of facility. Experts from the outside will have to build it for us because we do not know how to cope with a water system of that type. So an official in the minister's department told me the following in his letter, which is a couple of pages longer but says as much:

The demand on our small craft harbours funds has been extremely heavy lately necessitating that we put up for consideration only those projects which show the greatest potential for service to the general boating public. Our funding for the next five years will support only about one quarter of the requests which we have on file to date.

The minister is now responsible for 2,500 facilities. He is four years behind in processing the applications he has, and there is nothing in the budget that would support him in his new responsibility of looking after wharfs, piers, waterways and harbours, particularly on some of the inland waterways. The estimates are totally inadequate—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but the time allotted to him has expired. He can continue, nevertheless, with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Oberle: Who said no?

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I would certainly be willing to wait another five or ten minutes to give my colleague an opportunity to complete his remarks. It is regrettable that members opposite will not extend that courtesy to my colleague. His speech was dead on.

Mrs. Holt: If he cannot say it in 40 minutes, he should not say it at all.

Mr. Whiteway: The hon. member is wrong on two counts; first, he did not have 40 minutes.

Mr. Lalonde: You are losing your time—the clock is turning.

Mr. Oberle: I'm ashamed you come from British Columbia.

Mr. Lalonde: You have already lost three minutes.

Mr. Whiteway: This government introduced the legislation on December 10. I think that that is indicative of the priority the government gives to this legislation. The legislation was introduced in December and the government waited through January, February, March, April, May, and now four days into June.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Can you count to two?

Mr. Whiteway: If the hon. member could count half as well as he pretends he can, we would have a lot more than $35 million for the harbours of this country.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Oberle: Right on!

An hon. Member: He should talk; he has one of the maritime constituencies.

Mrs. Holt: And you wonder why the legislation does not go through parliament!

Mr. McCain: They don't put gags on us here.

Mrs. Holt: That's the trouble.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Hon. members are reminded that they should address the Chair.

Mr. Whiteway: We passed Bill C-37 in one day. Members on this side of the House are prepared to support good legislation, but we are elected to scrutinize the legislation presented to the House and I will not forfeit that right for any member of the government. If you insist on bringing in legislation such as this, then you better not expect to get it passed in one day. If it were half as important as you think or postulate it is, you would not have waited six months to put it back on the order paper, so do not stand up in your self-righteousness—

Mrs. Holt: I did not stand up; I am sitting.

Mr. Whiteway: That is the problem with you. You very seldom stand up in the Chamber and say anything. You Liberal backbenchers speak from your seats. Stand up in your places and explain to the people of Canada why there is only $35 million for the small craft harbours in this country.

Mr. Oberle: You cannot serve your constituency if you hang on to the coattails of the six million dollar man.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. Again I must remind hon. gentlemen that if they wish to take part in the debate they should rise in their places and be recognized, either on points of order or points of privilege, but at present I have recognized the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway).

Mr. Whiteway: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. There is the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) again debating from his chair, again debating from his seat.

Bill C-7 deals with the administration and development of certain fishing and recreational harbours in Canada. At present the legislative authority for the administration of our small craft harbours is provided by the Government Harbours and Piers Act and its accompanying wharf regulations, as well as orders in council drafted in 1895 and revised in 1937. I think this is the proper time to have the government bring in some revision.

• (2110)

The present law certainly does not address itself to present day administrative needs of fishermen and recreational boaters, and it does not provide for the development of harbours. It was in June of 1937 that the responsibility for the administration of small craft harbours was transferred to the Department of Fisheries from the Department of Public Works, and the minister's authority has suffered over the years because the administration has been under orders in council.

In the minister's speech on this matter back in December of last year he pointed out that there are some 2,300 government facilities which are affected by this legislation and which come under the definition of small craft harbours. Fifteen hundred of these are primarily used to service fishermen, and some 800 are for recreation. I have already pointed out that the budget this year for capital costs to repair and to construct new docks for boats, whether they be recreational or used for fishing, is $35 million. This is obviously grossly inadequate.

Let us consider Lake Winnipeg. I have spoken about Lake Winnipeg in this Chamber many times. It is the largest inland fresh water body which is totally within Canada. I was about to say it has a thriving fishing industry. It was thriving until the government opposite got hold of it. I wish the Minister of State (Multiculturalism) (Mr. Guay) were in his place because I am going to talk about something very near and dear to his heart, that famous processing plant located in the wheat fields of his riding. I will get to that in a minute. However, the docks and the maintenance of dock facilities on Lake Winnipeg have deteriorated.

Mr. Oberle: There's the hon. member for St. Boniface.

Mr. Whiteway: The minister has just arrived. I will get to the FFMC in a minute.

Mr. Lalonde: Hurry up.

Mr. Whiteway: The entire budget of the Minister of the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc), who is responsible for fisheries, this year is $261.016 million. Let us compare for a moment the total budget of the minister—particularly the $35 million directed toward the construction and maintenance of docks—with the budget of, for instance, the CBC.

The subsidies Canadian taxpayers pay to the CBC amount to $416 million.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): A very valid comparison.

Mr. Whiteway: To subsidize this year's operating expenses of the National Art Centre will cost $8 million. Most of my constituents will never in their lifetime see the Art Centre, let alone ever be able to see a round of productions. I am not arguing, as hon. members opposite who have some great fears might, against arts and culture in this country. I am categorically saying that the government has its priorities all screwed up.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whiteway: One of the government's priorities is to spend half a billion dollars in Mirabel. It is not quite the disaster we feared. It is not doing too badly. In the last fiscal year Mirabel lost only $46 million. That was not quite as bad as hon. members on this side had anticipated.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): That must have disappointed you.

Mr. Whiteway: The hon. member from New Brunswick ought to have been with me last week with the Transport Committee—

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): New Brunswick was well represented.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whiteway: Come the next election—

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): You'll not be back.

Mr. Whiteway: If hon. members opposite and ministers on the Treasury Benches are so certain I will not be back, why do they not issue a writ?

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I suggest that the hon. member get back to the bill under discussion.

Mr. Whiteway: Mr. Speaker, as I develop my point you will clearly see that the attitude of hon. members opposite is a reflection of their inability to understand my argument.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): You are the only one who understands it.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member for Selkirk has the floor.

Mr. Whiteway: It is interesting that the hon. minister opposite interjects before I develop my argument. He is characteristic of small fish which bite before the hook is even baited. My friend from New Brunswick left because he could not stand the heat of my argument.

Mr. McCain: The Mickey Mouse from Miramichi.

Fishing and Recreational Harbours

Mr. Whiteway: I was talking about capital expenditures for small craft harbours. The attitude opposite is to laugh this matter off. To them it is not a serious matter. They spend countless millions of dollars on everything else but not on things which are valuable to people who want a return on dollars invested. The Minister of National Health and Welfare cannot control his laughter. That is the attitude of the government which is being displayed tonight. Let us compare the $35 million I have spoken about with the expenditures of the National Capital Commission, of $53 million. I could go on and compare this pittance, this tokenism of this government for small craft harbours, with other expenditures.

An hon. Member: Give us the punch line.

Mr. Whiteway: If the hon. member wants the punch line, perhaps the government should issue a writ. The Canadian people would issue the punch line.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): That is not what Gallup says.

Mr. Whiteway: I am coming to the part which might be of interest to the Minister of State (Multiculturalism). I have already mentioned that the condition of the docks and the piers on Lake Winnipeg is deplorable, and that is part of his responsibility.

Lake Winnipeg is now going to be administered under this legislation, Bill C-7. Lake Winnipeg accounts for one third of the total production of the Freshwater Fish Marketing Corporation, and in order for that production to get to where it was before this government got hold of FFMC, back up to 70 million pounds or 75 million pounds—we are now harvesting only 30 million pounds from the lake—

An hon. Member: This sounds like a fish story.

Mr. Whiteway: —we need to maintain our harbours and docks in good repair. I will give the hon. member a good fish story.

Historically the dock at Selkirk, which is located on the Red River some 12 miles from the lower end of Lake Winnipeg, always had a fish plant. It has always been the centre for the processing of fish from the lake. The fishermen would pick up their supplies there and go back up the lake for another trip. This government, through political expediency rather than sound judgment, has robbed Selkirk of its historical and geographic advantage in the FFMC.

● (2120)

These political vandals have plundered the birthright of the town of Selkirk. What did they offer in its place? Instead of offering a fish plant, improved docking facilities, new piers, and the kind of vital industry that has made the town viable, they offered a federal maximum security penitentiary. They took the fish plant from Selkirk, and where did they put it, Mr. Speaker? I grew up on the south shore of Nova Scotia and I know that in the Maritimes a fish plant is put by the harbour where the boats can dock, unload the fish, process it and send it off to market. But on the advice of the Minister of State (Multiculturalism) from St. Boniface this fish plant for Selkirk was built right smack in the middle of a wheat field, ten miles from the nearest water as the crow flies—a monstrosity which has lost money in every year of its operation.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to say to the hon. member that not only did I get the fresh fish plant but I got the Royal Canadian Mint and a tax centre. There will be other things to come, and I hope people will support a good member who will probably get a lot more done than the people in his party.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I would suggest to the hon. minister that this is not a point of order but rather a point of debate.

Mr. Whiteway: The minister takes credit for the FFMC. As far as the mint is concerned, I suppose he and Jim Richardson will fight about—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member will refer to members of the House by riding and not by name.

Mr. Whiteway: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Of course everybody will recognize the former minister of national defence, who resigned because of differences with the government and the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), as the hon. member for Winnipeg South (Mr. Richardson), and I shall so refer to him.

The Minister of State (Multiculturalism) wants the people of Winnipeg and Manitoba to know he has taken credit for that monstrous—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): I will be proud if you tell them. I hope you have the guts to tell them.

Mr. Whiteway: Mr. Speaker, that is one thing the minister does not have. I have the guts to get up in the House of Commons and make my position very clear.

I cannot help but comment in passing that some months ago the Prime Minister said he intended to strengthen multiculturalism. I should like the minister to explain how his appointment is in any way compatible with that stated objective.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I should like to ask the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway) if he and his leader are in favour of multiculturalism.

Mr. Whiteway: Mr. Speaker, now the minister has got his role straight. I have been waiting for three years for him to ask questions so that I may give him some answers. If he would not get so excited and would listen to members on this side of the House he would get a lot of answers—more answers than he could dream up questions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Whiteway: The seals are yapping in the back.

[Mr. Whiteway.]

Mrs. Holt: That side has nothing to yap about over there.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. Standing Order 12(3) reads as follows:

When a Member is speaking, no Member shall pass between him and the Chair, nor interrupt him, except to raise a point of order.

I suggest that members look at the Standing Order.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Whiteway: Mr. Speaker, perhaps hon. members opposite, including the Minister of State (Multiculturalism) would address themselves to the question of how the administration of this act can be compatible with the user-pay principle espoused by the Minister of Transport. Certainly the fishermen on Lake Winnipeg should not have to bear the capital cost of maintaining the docks and piers which have been allowed to deteriorate because of this government's lack of recognition of the priority of this area. The government has allocated $35 million for capital construction, most of which has gone to the coast rather than to service inland small harbours. That is something upon which hon. members opposite and even the minister should reflect.

I have one serious misgiving about this bill, Mr. Speaker, and that concerns the power given to the minister to institute regulations by order in council from time to time. We should take careful note of this because the regulations are very wide. On page 4 of the bill under the heading "Regulations" the following appears:

9. The Governor in Council may make regulations

(a) prescribing schedules naming the delimiting or describing the fishing or recreational harbours that are under the control and administration of the Minister for the purposes of this Act;

(b) for the maintenance of order and the safety of persons and property at any scheduled harbour;

(c) not inconsistent with any other Act of Parliament or regulations made thereunder, for the control of mooring, berthing, loading and discharging of vessels at any scheduled harbour;

(d) not inconsistent with any other Act of Parliament or regulations made thereunder, for the control of pollution at any scheduled harbour;

(e) prescribing standards for the accommodation and services provided or to be provided at any scheduled harbour;

(f) prescribing charges for the use of any scheduled harbour;

(g) prescribing the duties or functions of persons appointed or designated under this or any other Act of Parliament—

I shall skip to the final clause which is a sort of basket clause and reads as follows:

(p) generally for carrying out the purposes and provisions of this Act.

I have some fears that the fishermen, particularly those on Lake Winnipeg and all those covered by FFMC, are going to be burdened with officials and bureaucrats who will descend on them with more regulations than could be memorized or understood by a Philadelphia lawyer. If those officials, bureaucrats and civil servants learn that a poor fisherman, or even someone who owns a recreational boat, is in violation of any of these regulations which are made by order in council rather than by act of parliament, he could be fined a maximum of $50. To hon. members opposite and bureaucrats in Ottawa $50 may not seem like much money, but it is a great deal of money to the fishermen of Gimli, Riverton, Arnes, and Camp Borden in the Winnipeg Beach area. This provision is significant to fishermen who seek to earn their living in the area. They must use an FFMC centralized processing plant located in the middle of wheat fields, in the riding of the Minister of State for Multiculturalism.

• (2130)

On top of the demoralizing effect of the quota system operating with respect to Lake Winnipeg, and the host of regulations almost too great to enumerate, there looms over the heads of our fishermen the prospect of regulation upon regulation dreamed up by bureaucrats. These regulations would not be passed by parliament, where members could debate, scrutinize, and possibly amend them. No, they will be made by bureaucrats, and fishermen will be bound by them. These regulations will be imposed on the fishermen fishing on Lake Winnipeg; they will be imposed on those operating small recreational boats, on those who want to do a little sailing in order to forget the provincial government's high taxation policies.

Mr. Oberle: They want to get away from it all, especially from the hon. member for St. Boniface (Mr. Guay).

Mr. Whiteway: As my colleague says, they want to get away from it all. I know ministers must be granted certain powers. We do not require ministers to use up the valuable time of the House of Commons in order to introduce regulations governing small craft harbours in Canada. However, Mr. Speaker, Bill C-7 is open ended. It is a no holds barred, a "no recourse for people" piece of legislation which offends my concept of democratic procedure and representative government.

Some hon. members opposite say that the member for Selkirk, myself, has not the ability to represent the people of Selkirk. Of course as a member of parliament I am fair game; I always like a good debate in the House of Commons. Seriously, it is my right and responsibility to represent to the best of my ability my constituents and to give voice to their hopes, dreams, and anxieties. The hon. member for St. Boniface is under exactly the same obligation, which he discharges conscientiously, as I know. I cannot neglect my right and responsibility. Although in principle and for the most part I accept this legislation, I must point out with the greatest of reluctance that the basket clause, the all-encompassing provision of the bill which allows the minister to bring in regulations by order in council, to bring in regulations which could change the very nature of the act, is not acceptable. A regulation can be as binding as an act of parliament.

There is a host of bureaucrats who day after day, in their ivory towers in Ottawa and Hull, draft regulation on regulation; some are reasonable and logical; some are not. But all can affect the fishermen who use the docks, piers, wharves and facilities of Lake Winnipeg. To those fishermen some of those regulations are an imposition by an awkward government. In the view of fishermen, many regulations are not intended to help fishermen and the people of Manitoba who seek to eke out a living with fishing. They see these regulations as part of the centralized process, which includes the fish processing facility located in the middle of a wheat field in the riding of the hon. member for St. Boniface.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but I must inform him that his allotted time has expired. The hon. member may continue if he has the unanimous consent of the House. Had the hon. member unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I do not often debate questions concerning harbours; however, having read this dictatorial piece of legislation I enter this debate without hesitation. I just returned to Ottawa, after touring the maritimes with the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. The committee listened to the problems of the good people of Newfoundland, New Brunswick, and Nova Scotia. I witnessed the standing committee going through the charade and farce of listening to the problems of the people of an area. Members of the CTC were also in the maritimes, holding hearings with regard to port and harbour problems.

Almost every day, as the committee listened to the people of the maritimes talking about their problems, you could pick up a newspaper and read about the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) having made a policy announcement concerning transportation. And all this time at the expense of the taxpayers of Canada, the committee was travelling around that part of the country trying to give the impression it was listening, studying briefs, and paying attention, in order to make a report. We read in the newspapers about the Liberal government's policies, while stupid committees travel around the country and listen to people talk about their problems concerning wharves and roads. They can't get a potato bin in New Brunswick, but the government is willing to spend millions of dollars for stupid air terminals in Quebec, and this sort of thing.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Oh, oh!

Mr. McKenzie: The hon. member says, Oh! You are a real Grit. You aren't fooling me, and I told them at these committee hearings—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I suggest that the hon. member return to the subject matter of Bill C-7.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, I will return to Bill C-7. I point out that legislative authority for administration of small craft harbours is provided by the Government Harbours and Piers Act, its accompanying government wharves regulations and various orders in council. Because it was drafted in 1895 and revised in 1937, the act does not focus on the present day administrative needs of fishermen and recreational boaters, and does not include provisions for the development of those harbours.

Further, when program and administrative responsibilities for these harbours were transferred to the Department of Fisheries from the Department of Public Works and the Ministry of Transport in June, 1973, it was done by order in council. When the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications visited the maritimes recently, we read almost every day in the newspapers about some government policy pronouncement concerning this field. The Department of Fisheries claims that the minister suffers because his authority over small craft harbours has been derived from an order in council rather than a legislative enactment. For example, one transport official on the west coast refused to acknowledge the transfer and refused to send his files to fisheries until September, 1976.

The budget of the small craft harbours branch in fisheries is $35 million for the fiscal year 1976/77. Most of the money is used for repair and modernization of the government fishing and recreation wharves on the east and west coasts. There are approximately 2,300 government wharves, with twice as many fishing as recreational wharves, covered by the branch. These facilities are valued at three quarters of a billion dollars.

● (2140)

One of the major criticisms of the bill is the widespread powers being granted to the minister in Clauses 5 and 8. Clause 5 reads:

> The Minister may undertake projects for the acquisition, development, construction, improvement or repair of any scheduled harbour or any fishing or recreational harbour to which this Act applies.

Clause 8 reads:

> The Minister may, subject to the regulations,
>
> (a) lease any scheduled harbour or any part thereof to any person;
> (b) grant a licence to any person for the use of any scheduled harbour or any part thereof; and
> (c) enter into an agreement with the government of any province or any agency thereof for the occupancy and use of any scheduled harbour or any part thereof.

According to the branch, Bill C-7 is wide enough for the minister to do it alone or in concert with the provinces and the municipalities. This is especially true in the area of recreation where existing legislation is not clear. Bill C-7 seems to allow the minister to build recreational harbours or wharves wherever he chooses, regardless of provincial or municipal desires, at a time when that party has been advocating greater provincial responsibility and rights. This bill goes against that sentiment. Therefore we urge that it be amended so that the minister will have to work in concert with the provinces.

Mrs. Holt: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. In view of the fact that the hon. member's colleagues, the hon. member for Athabasca (Mr. Yewchuk) and the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert), make such an issue in this House about reading speeches, I suggest that if the hon. member is going to read his speech he at least read it in a manner that is not a mumble.

[Mr. McKenzie.]

Mr. McKenzie: As a minimum, the minister should be forced to announce his intentions concerning recreational harbours. The government has been becoming more and more involved in the financing and construction of these harbours. Recreational harbours have been increasing while fishing harbours, for example government wharves, have been decreasing in numbers. As a result one might ask whether recreation will supersede fishing in importance in the Small Craft Harbours Branch. To further emphasize this point, if you have a government wharf that is in need of repair in your constituency, that might be pointed out as a glaring example of government disregard for our fishermen.

Since Bill C-7 is partly concerned with financing recreational harbours, one might question one aspect of the government's marina assistance program which was established to encourage the construction of new marinas by local municipalities and private developers.

Mrs. Holt: Are you talking in your sleep?

Mr. McKenzie: The federal government pays for the construction of a breakwater and for dredging while the municipality and/or developer pays the other costs, plus upkeep. Government participation is limited to 50 per cent of the total cost. However, despite paying up to 50 per cent of the project, the government receives no future compensation for its contribution. Why should the government help private developers line their pockets with taxpayers' money? Does the government at least ensure that the marina will be open and available to all boaters at reasonable cost?

The branch would like to abandon or destroy about one half of its fishing and recreational wharves because they are either not being used or they are in utter disrepair. For fishing, it would like to have an area served by one central government facility. Since many of the government fishing wharves are essential to the livelihood of many small fishing communities, will the minister announce his intentions regarding the future of government fishing wharves so that the affected communities can react?

Mrs. Holt: Which official language are you using? We cannot tell from here because we cannot hear you.

Mr. McKenzie: Tune in. Don't show your ignorance. You made your point. I have a bit of a cold. I have a husky throat. If you ever get to speak with a husky throat, I will shout you down good and clear.

There are presently wharfage charges on the books. However, as there are only about 200 wharfingers to collect these charges, out of the 2,300 government facilities, most fishermen have become used to paying nothing for the use of these wharves. Under Bill C-7 the government plans to appoint zone managers to look after these government facilities and it plans to institute a licensing program for the use of these facilities. The plan now being discussed would require a fisherman to purchase a licence based on the length of his vessel, $1 per foot. This would be an annual licence and it would allow the fisherman to use any government facility. Fisheries expects opposition to this proposal because, as said before, most fishermen have not been paying a docking fee.

The general intent of the bill should probably be supported, but there are many areas for questions.

This bill, on the surface, would appear to be nothing more than a housekeeping bill, a bill which transfers from the Department of Public Works and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) administrative responsibility to the Department of Fisheries and the Environment. However, upon close examination I cannot help noting that this bill adds still further financial burdens to an already over-burdened fishing industry. I understand—and I am supported by the minister's statement of this morning—that legislative authority for administration of our small craft harbours was provided by the Government Harbours and Piers Act and its accompanying wharf regulations, as well as various orders in council. Because it was drafted in 1895 and revised in 1937, the act does not focus on the present-day administrative needs of fishermen and recreational boaters and does not include provision for the development of these harbours.

It is interesting to note that when programs and administrative responsibilities for these harbours were transferred to the Department of Fisheries from the Department of Public Works and the Minister of Transport in June, 1973, the transfer was brought about by order in council. Obviously, our fisheries interests have suffered because the minister's authority over small craft harbours has been derived from an order in council rather than from a legislative enactment.

I am informed, as I pointed out earlier, that some of the Transport officials have refused to comply with the order and were late in filing with the minister.

It can readily be seen from the wording of the bill that the minister has been granted wide powers, and although we are not opposing this legislation, we would be remiss in our duty if we failed to register our concern over the wording of some parts of this bill. For example, the budget for small craft harbours this year is in the order of $35 million. Some of this money will be used for repair and modernization of government fishing wharves on the east coast.

As the minister has stated, there are some 2,300 government facilities covered under the small craft harbours legislation. Of these, approximately 1,500 are used for fishing and some 800 for recreation. From the figures we can readily see the number of people who are affected by this legislation, yet the minister gave no indication either in his remarks this morning or in the bill as to the government's intentions with regard to increased sums of money to be made available for needed improvement of the many facilities which this bill places under his care.

If we look at the estimates for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1977, we find that the total budgetary amount for the fisheries and marine program under the heading of "Environment" comes to $261,016,000. There are many comparisons that can be made with that figure and the amounts allocated to other government departments: namely, the CBC, $416 million; Atomic Energy of Canada, a department which we are hearing quite a bit about these days, $97 million; the National Capital Commission, $53 million; the National Arts Centre, $8 million. We spent something like $50 million on erecting the building, and now it cannot operate without a subsidy of $8 million just so people can see the show.

I believe the minister is working hard. He is making an honest effort. He is trying. I believe he is hoping for a better future for our fishermen. I give him credit for that. However, many of the people in the area covered by this legislation have survived for many years on hope. But that hope, I say to the minister sincerely, is now turning to despair. At the present time, on the Atlantic coast there are approximately 39,000 fishermen of whom only about 3,000 are on the offshore fleet. The rest are all inshore fishermen, dependent on small craft harbours as a base for landing their craft. They hope to have security for their ships and fishing equipment when high winds and heavy seas force them from the fishing banks.

Under this bill, the Minister of Fisheries (Mr. LeBlanc) is given a sacred trust. He is being given a responsibility to ensure that adequate facilities will be provided for the safety, lives and equipment of some 36,000 inshore fishermen in Atlantic Canada alone. Since fishing markets are mostly external to Canada, it is essential, indeed, vital that this nation keep its fishing industry as efficient as any in the world. Up to this point I have been speaking only of the inshore fleet. However, our offshore fleet also requires consideration by this government.

At the present time, some 12 companies, owning approximately 50 plants, of which some 25 are served by the offshore fleet, account for approximately 80 per cent of Canada's fresh and frozen groundfish production and about 45 per cent of the total fishing production of Atlantic Canada. This fleet is struggling today. The captains are struggling to find the large volumes of raw materials required for 12 months of operation on a mass production basis. What does this bill do for them? If they increase their costs, it will knock Canada out of the highly competitive world markets it presently enjoys as a seafood supplier. Both our inshore and offshore fleets are vitally important to the Canadian economy. However, I say to this House that our only chance to exploit the fisheries resources to the extremities of our 200-mile zone and beyond this area is with a modern, efficient fleet working on a 12-month basis.

We have the expertise; we have the know-how in Atlantic and Pacific Canada. We need only a management team interested in the recovery and harvesting control of our resource to give Atlantic Canada a restored and thriving fishing industry. As the resource recovered, we could triple our present volume without adding appreciably to the number of ships in operation today, thereby assuring steady employment for our fishermen and plant workers.

Here I mention a very important adjunct to the fishing industry, our plant workers. Shore plant workers in our east coast fishing plants are facing economic hardship today due to the mismanagement of our fisheries resources by this government over the past ten years. Recently, a weekly newspaper printed a cheque stub from the pay cheque of an average wage earner in an east coast plant. The cheque stub showed 34.25 hours worked at regular time, $3.90 per hour, and 12 hours of Saturday overtime at $5.85 per hour. The gross earnings were $207.53, while the net earnings were $171.43. Even you, Mr. Speaker, might say that is not bad for a week's work. However, you would be adopting the wrong premise because the figures I have just quoted cover a two-week work period. It works out to $85.71 per week. Out of this amount, he or she has to pay the rent, or mortgage, food, fuel oil, clothing, electricity, operate a car to and from work, plus gas and all the rest of a family's expenses. This, I say, is about average for plant workers as a whole.

This is a dismal record even in the Atlantic provinces. As I said earlier, during my trip with the transport committee the shabby way these people are treated by the government was confirmed, not only in the fishing industry but also the potato industry.

When there are no fish to process, the work force is sent home as the employees are paid only for the hours worked. The Anti-Inflation Board obviously did not take that factor into consideration when it made decisions about wage levels. The Minister of Fisheries and his officials obviously did not take it into consideration when they established fisheries quotas for 1976 and 1977, quotas which force the fisherman to limit his fishing activities, quotas which force him to spread out his fishing effort over a longer term. This action will in the long run spread out the economic and social hardship for shore workers over a longer period.

Recently the Minister of Fisheries was asked a question in the House about discussions he was having with the industry concerning quotas. He replied that he was hopeful that he could spread the quotas for the next year over a 12-month period. That, I know, was not an intentional statement by the minister. It could not have been. It shows a gross lack of knowledge of what happens when you encourage men who want to go to sea, men who want to work to the best of their capability to catch the biggest catch available to them, telling them to spread out their capability, spreading out the fishing quotas so that they will only land smaller quotas per trip. Think of what this is doing to the shore plant worker. I just gave a classic example of what is happening at present and has been happening throughout 1976, yet this year they are not promised more of the same, but even a little less of the same. The minister is, in effect, saying that $85.71 a week is enough for a shore worker. Surely we can do better than that.

We are establishing a 200-mile limit, hopefully for the benefit of Canadians and not entirely for the benefit of foreign nationals. Hopefully, it will be for the benefit of shore plant workers in Atlantic and Pacific Canada. However, this is the ultimate result of the minister's action when he says we will spread out quotas. He is simply spreading out inefficiency. It is not encouraging initiative. It does not encourage people who are ambitious and want to work. This is making it more difficult for our people, both ashore and afloat, to earn an honest living. The fishing industry of Canada obviously requires a higher profile. It needs a spending priority equal to or higher than that of the CBC, since the fishing industry directly and indirectly affects the livelihood of so many Canadians. Unfortunately, Bill C-7 gives little or no recognition to the validity of many of the points I have raised. It does, however, grant the minister wide powers.

May I call it ten o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): It is 10.30 tonight.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. Under previous arrangements the House sits until 10.30, the late show being from six to 6.30.

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Carry on reading.

Mr. McKenzie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. As I was saying, this bill does grant the minister wide powers, far too many powers.

Clauses 5(1) reads as follows:

> The minister may undertake projects for the acquisition, development, construction, improvement or repair of any scheduled harbour or any fishing or recreational harbour to which this act applies.

Clause 8 provides:

> The minister may, subject to the regulations,
>
> (a) lease any scheduled harbour or any part thereof to any person,
> (b) grant a licence to any person for the use of any scheduled habour or any part thereof, and
> (c) enter into any agreement with the government of any province or any agency thereof for the occupancy or use of any scheduled harbour or any part thereof.

Knowing the character of the minister, and knowing the character of various members on this side of the House—one of whom, I believe, will be the minister of fisheries after the next election—I am sure these wide powers will not be abused. However, this does not mean they should remain on the books. I was always of the opinion, for example, that our harbours belonged to the public. I cannot understand how any minister could believe he had the right to lease harbours or any part of a harbour to one person. Surely, limits should be set on the application of Clause 8 when the measure is sent to committee.

• (2200)

Under this bill, the minister can build recreational harbours wherever he chooses, without regard for provincial or municipal desires. What has happened to the view that the provinces should be consulted on matters which affect their interests? I say to the minister most sincerely that lack of consultation over fisheries matters with provincial ministers is a major criticism of him, and that it is advanced not only by Conservative provincial ministers but by Liberal provincial ministers as well. The government is becoming increasingly involved in the building of recreational harbours. It has taken the path of shared-cost programs with the provinces; it pays up to 50 per cent of the cost, but only for breakwaters and dredging.

Provincial and municipal governments pay the other costs, as well as the cost of annual upkeep.

Unfortunately, the number of recreational harbours is increasing while the number of government fishing wharves is decreasing. I am not opposed to recreational harbours being established, since they are beneficial to the tourist industry, to visiting yachtsmen when they come to Canada from the United States or other countries. However, I submit they should not be built at the expense of our fishermen or of our fishing industry which is presently being denied adequate facilities in many parts of Canada.

In any town there is a desperate need for further docking space for our scallop fleet. In Vogler's Cove, Nova Scotia, the inshore fleet requires another 60 feet added to the present wharf in order that the longliners may have adequate protection. There was a recent article in the Halifax Chronicle-Herald under the heading "Smithville Fishermen Still Waiting For Wharf". As I travelled with the Standing Committee on Transport an Communications last week, I found out about all the fishermen and the potato growers waiting for wharfs and potato sheds. They are still waiting today.

> Four years after being promised a new wharf by the federal government to replace the existing decrepit structure which is the focal point of fisheries activities in this small Atlantic coast port, fishermen are still forced to operate from the same primitive facility which has been in existence for many years.
>
> "Any good storm or even a high tide could easily wash this wharf out tomorrow and then where would the fishermen tie up?"

A veteran fisherman of the area and an operator of a small handling plant by the wharf said:

> "Conditions here are unbelievable. Several years ago one section of the docking facilities completely collapsed under the weight of a hundred lobster traps. Although recovered by their owners, the traps were damaged beyond all recognition."

The fisherman went on to say that instances like this have not been uncommon and, as a result, fishermen in the area were notified five years ago that a new wharf was on its way.

Prior to the five by-elections in Quebec, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) announced that another $231 million would be poured into the province of Quebec for more federal public buildings in Montreal on the leftover property at Mirabel. I notice the hon. member for Battleford-Kindersley (Mr. McIsaac) is smiling. He thinks it is a big joke. He should have been down there with this committee listening to the fishermen and the potato growers. Everything is a big joke for the Liberals. He should have come down there and explained Mirabel and the $231 million which is going into Quebec. He could have also explained that white elephant in Winnipeg, the $50 million hanger that is not required. He could have explained all the other boobs which his party has pulled off. I hope the minister will put this in his little black book when he starts his duties—

Mr. Guay (St. Boniface): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I would like to go on record as saying that I am very pleased with the construction of the hangar at the Air Canada base in Winnipeg. The people of Winnipeg also wanted it. I am surprised to hear the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) saying that it is a white elephant. He was the one who was pushing to get it, and now he is talking out of the other side of his mouth tonight.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. We have been sitting around today listening to a debate and making our contributions. Your Honour has pointed out on a number of occasions that these matters which have been raised, particularly by the minister responsible for multiculturalism, are specious and facetious and are not points of order. If the minister insists on carrying on his irresponsible attitude by interrupting on spurious points of order, we are going to ask him a question during the question period.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I suggest to the hon. member that he, now, is engaging in debate. That is not a point of order.

Mr. McKenzie: Thank you, Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The time allotted to the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) has expired. However, he may continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. I should like to point out that if the parliamentary secretary is rising to speak on behalf of the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment he will close the debate.

Mr. Jim Fleming (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): Mr. Speaker, to begin with I should like to pay tribute to the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) who, with his exciting and scintillating comments in the last few moments, has kept us all on the edges of our seats. But if we were on the edges of our seats on this side of the House, I cannot imagine how close to the edge of his seat the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse) must have been on the other side since the speech of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre so closely resembled the speech given by the hon. member for South Shore some months ago.

An hon. Member: A summer rerun!

Mr. Fleming: I should like to describe this bill as a housekeeping bill. It is an important bill, and there are controversial matters in it which I should think all hon. members would wish to discuss in committee. This can be done on the basis of the assurances which the Minister of Fisheries and Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) gave when he opened this debate several months ago—late last year, in fact.

You know, Mr. Speaker, that for the House to have 18 speakers on a bill passed in the late 1800's and amended to a moderate extent in 1937 and now, finally, being brought into order, stretching it out not only over a full day last December, but for a full day today, with twice as many speakers from the official opposition as from the other parties, indicates the extent of some of the problems we face in the House of Commons these days.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fleming: We have heard from members today who have never before expressed themselves on small craft harbours and, frankly, I do not think they have ever stepped in a boat before. Today, they are experts. Some are experts and others simply espouse the words of other, thoughtful members among their colleagues who did make contributions earlier in the debate. Mr. Speaker, I am parliamentary secretary to a minister who is thoughtful, who works hard, and who has respect from both sides because of the way he discharges his responsibilities, which does not mean hon. members will not offer criticism, sometimes severe criticism, in areas of concern which relates to their own ridings. But I must say I find myself terribly disappointed when, after that kind of respect, members, for whatever reason get up and speak in such a silly manner with regard to legislation brought forward by the department. I am sorry, I cannot find words more honest than that.

For instance, I find the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) suggesting my minister is hiding behind the Local Initiatives Program. What absurdity! The fact is that during a period of restraint, when there is very heavy pressure on all branches of government to cut back on expenditure, or to hold the line—

Mr. McKenzie: You are spending $231 million in Quebec, don't forget.

Mr. Fleming: I did not interrupt while the hon. member was reading another member's speech. I am making my own speech and I would appreciate it if the hon. member would not interject.

I find members like the member for Prince George-Peace River accusing my minister of hiding behind the Local Initiatives Program, when in fact he has fought hard to provide assistance to our fishermen in a time of restraint, even though it was not as much as he would like.

● (2210)

When in turn that minister is helped and, with the assistance of the parliamentary process, has made LIP work to the extent that an additional $5.5 million is going into small craft harbours, I find I am disappointed in the hon. member who, from my experience, is not widely experienced in this subject when he says something as silly as that. I do not want to be angry, but I have had to sit through this for a long time and I find the debate on a bill as fundamental and as basic as this one to be long. This is a measure of the seeming degradation our process faces today, because some of us on all sides realize that if we want parliament to survive, if we want the most free democracy in the world to continue and progress, we will all have to be a little more responsible in the process.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Fleming.]

Mr. Fleming: Now, Mr. Speaker, I want to talk on a particular subject.

Mr. McKenzie: Tell us about unemployment.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The parliamentary secretary has the floor and I suggest we all listen to him.

Mr. Fleming: I wish the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre had been as original in his thoughts as he is now in his interjections. Various hon. members opposite have been critical of the amounts of money being spent on small craft harbours and have discussed this in the debate on the bill. In its responsibility for this program, the expenditures of the Department of Fisheries on small craft harbours varied from a low of about $8 million a year to a little over $13 million a year. The average annual expenditure for these years was $11,789,000. That is in sharp contrast to the expenditure levels in recent years. In 1973-74 the government spent over $22 million, in 1974-75 nearly $31 million, 1975-76 nearly $29 million, and this year we expect the total to be about $40 million. The money for this year includes special funding of $5 million for commitments under the Canada-Quebec agreement and $5 million for the federal labour intensive program. I believe that the record speaks for itself.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Fleming: We hear from particular members in the opposition about the concerns in their ridings. Surely that is their right and obligation as elected members. But I wish that collectively they would have some common sense, some priorities. I wish the official opposition could tell us how they would set their priorities. There are many demands for better facilities for small craft harbours, especially for our fishermen. But also I know from colleagues on my side and on the other side of the need for facilities for pleasure craft harbours. In my own province of Ontario I see immense pressure for better facilities with the growing number of pleasure craft, but I wish hon. members opposite would tell us what their priorities are. On each bill they rise in the House and demand heavy increases in expenditures, and yet they criticize us for government spending. They must make up their minds. They are speaking from both ends, and that is very difficult to do.

Mr. McKenzie: Who commanded Mirabel?

Mr. Fleming: I do not think any of us were brought to life by the speech of the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre, although it was better received last December when delivered by another hon. member. The hon. member for South Shore in his statement to the House last December said that under this bill the minister can build recreational harbours wherever he chooses without regard for provincial and municipal desires. In all fairness let me say that I believe the statement is misleading because Clause 5(2) of the bill makes clear that that is not the case. The earlier statement by my minister introducing Bill

C-7 also mentioned that recreational boating programs will emphasize joint planning and co-operation with the provinces.

Some hon. members opposite have expressed concern that expenditures on recreational harbours might be made at the expense of our fishermen. An examination of the record shows that since the transfer of responsibility for small craft harbours to the Department of Fisheries and the Environment, priority has consistently been given to commercial fisheries rather than to recreational boating in the way of wharves and facilities. This has been the policy of my minister, and when he led off this debate he made it clear that that will continue to be the emphasis. As his parliamentary secretary and as a member from Ontario I should say, however, that I am particularly aware of the concern of those hon. members who do not come from wealthy ridings and who are very concerned about the provision of facilities for pleasure craft harbours in Ontario and, to some degree, in B.C. as well.

My minister has made it clear that his priority must be operational harbours to assist Canadians in the fisheries business. Pleasure craft harbours are where a viable operation can be developed in the private sector. Pleasure craft harbours must also be encouraged. However, I do want to note that my minister and his officials are aware of the concern of hon. members who are worried about attention not being given to pleasure craft harbours, but again his emphasis must be where the greatest deprivation and the greatest need exists, and that is with our working fishermen.

One of the speakers earlier today expressed concern about just how figures are arrived at and what moneys are put toward the development of small craft harbours. I believe it was the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan). I think he suggested that there might be—if not so much today, in yesteryear—favouritism according to votes and that this was based on the number of votes landed, as he put it. He said sometimes it was argued that it was based on the landed value of fish. I simply want to point out that the landed value of fish is only one of many factors considered in the allocation of funds. The department also considers the state and number of wharves in a particular area, the number and size of fishing vessels in that area, the harbours, the volume of landings and the potential for the future of the resource in each location.

Social and community factors are also given due consideration. It is not as easy or as simple as the hon. member would make it. I believe if we were to break it down according to members and political parties, we might be led to believe that the allocations are based on the number of votes garnered by opposition parties and not by us, because in fact some of the opposition parties do very well compared with our members in the maritime regions.

I should also mention that our marina assistance policy is under review in light of Bill C-7, and we will be making some changes. The hon. member for South Shore asks why we should spend money on this type of project and receive no direct return from the developer on the federal contribution. The department is presently examining this matter and would welcome suggestions from the committee.

Several hon. members opposite have expressed concern that under this bill the government intends to appoint zone managers. Nowhere in the bill is there a reference to zone managers, nor do we presently have plans to establish this type of management. I am sure that hon. members can recall complaints about disarray, neglect and unsupervised wharves, and they will therefore agree that a modest degree of proper wharf supervision is essential. That is what this bill is all about. It would bring to order things which have grown to disorder over the years. This is what the bill proposes to introduce, and the minister looks forward to more discussion of it in detail in the committee.

There has been a misstatement of fact which should be corrected for the record. It relates to Clause 25(2) and a fine of $50. That is a maximum and not a minimum fine, as has been alleged by the hon. member for South Shore. Perhaps the wording of this clause is not too clear, with all respect to that hon. member, in which case we might consider an appropriate revision in committee.

I know that some hon. members on both sides of the House who have been concerned about this particular legislation are concerned that at this point in time when there is an awful lot of economic duress, especially in our maritime areas, and particularly on the east coast, that the introduction of a fee structure such as that proposed in this bill might be very unfair and detrimental to our fisheries workers. The minister has asked me to asssure those hon. members that he realizes this is a difficult time, and he assures them he will go very cautiously in this matter. He looks forward to hearing from them on this matter in the committee.

There are some other minor points which hon. members have raised and which will be discussed in the committee. I appreciate the opportunity to speak on this bill. I am sorry if I was a little angry and strident at the beginning. I want to close by saying that there have been contributions from both sides of this House by thoughtful members who are knowledgeable about the problem. I am sure we will have the best possible legislation when it comes back to the House after going to the committee.

● (2220)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Would the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment (Mr. Fleming) accept a question from the hon. member for South Shore (Mr. Crouse)?

Mr. Fleming: Certainly, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Crouse: The hon. parliamentary secretary referred to a comment I made when addressing the House on this bill on December 10 to the effect that the minister can build recreational harbours wherever he chooses, as being somewhat misleading. I should like to ask the hon. member if my interpretation of Clause 5(1) is incorrect. The clause reads as follows:

5. (1) The Minister may undertake projects for the acquisition, development, construction, improvement or repair of any scheduled harbour or any fishing or recreational harbour to which this Act applies.

It does not state that this will be done with the consent of the provinces. If I have misread the bill it was not my intention to mislead the House. I submit, however, that as long as the present wording stands that "The minister may undertake projects" for the construction of recreational harbours, etc., without saying that this must be following consultation with the provinces, then the bill gives the minister wide powers to build recreational harbours wherever he chooses. I should like the hon. parliamentary secretary to clarify that clause. It is one to which we on this side took exception in the belief that it granted wide powers to the minister.

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier in my comments, as I understand it from our officials, other parts of the bill reassure that it will work on a co-operative basis. I want to assure the hon. member, because of his deep concern, that I will take the matter back to the department and see that they are either prepared to defend that clause as being fair and equitable or have it changed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Would the parliamentary secretary accept a question from the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain)?

Mr. Fleming: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Speaker, in view of the vast amount of evidence to indicate that the wharfage system is not an equitable system of collecting fees at the harbours would the minister, through his parliamentary secretary, give consideration to the elimination of that clause from the bill and to establishing an equitable system of fee gathering?

Mr. Fleming: Mr. Speaker, I do not profess to have the expertise of the hon. member for Carleton-Charlotte (Mr. McCain), and I say that sincerely because of the nature of his riding. My understanding is that we want to straighten out many of the inequities. We appreciate that wharfingers operate in some areas and not in others and that is inequitable. In turn we do not want to introduce a system which brings hardship to people already suffering hardship by levying some heavy fee against them.

One reason why I am anxious that this bill go to committee is that we may hear the contributions of thoughtful members from ridings that have this kind of situation so that we can seek a solution that will be equitable to everybody. I agree with the hon. member that it is not entirely equitable now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Fisheries and Forestry.

STATUTE LAW (METRIC CONVERSION) AMENDMENT ACT, 1976

AMENDMENTS TO WHEAT BOARD ACT TO FACILITATE CONVERSION TO METRIC SYSTEM

Hon. Len Marchand (for the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce) moved that Bill C-23, to facilitate conversion to the metric system of measurement, be read the third time and do pass.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers).

Mr. Towers: Mr. Speaker, may I call it 10.30 p.m.?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): It being 10.30 p.m. this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock p.m.

At 10.26 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Special Order.
