NEW ENTERPRISE DEVELOPMENT BOARD

SUGGESTION BOARD DISCUSS WITH NEWFOUNDLAND GOVERNMENT REHABILITATION OF LINERBOARD INDUSTRY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I, too, wish to move a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity concerning a subject which I have brought up almost on a daily basis. The worsening situation as a result of the impending closure of the Labrador linerboard mill in Stephenville, Newfoundland, demands that every avenue be explored in devising suitable strategies to rehabilitate the economy of the area. I would therefore move:

That this House order the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce to direct that officials of the New Enterprise Development Board initiate discussions with the government of Newfoundland with a view to providing assistance in the rehabilitation of the linerboard industry in line with the program's objectives to make firms more viable and internationally competitive.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion can be made only with unanimous consent. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: No!

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT ON GOVERNMENT POSITION ON CROWSNEST PASS RATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Murta):

That in view of the statement made on national television yesterday by a member of the federal cabinet that the cabinet should accept the recommendation of the Hall Commission in connection with the retention of the statutory Crowsnest Pass rates, this House direct the Prime Minister to make a statement on motions forthwith outlining the government's commitment to this recommendation of the Hall Commission.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: No!

NORTHERN PIPELINE—REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF DEBATE ON ALL RELEVANT REPORTS PRIOR TO DECISION

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns the crucial issue of the necessity for a full parliamentary debate with respect to the Mackenzie Valley pipeline, or a northern pipeline, which the government House leader, who really missed his true calling as an illusionist, has dangled before us without handing us anything of substance with respect to the matter. In view of the statement by the House leader on Friday that all relevant reports must be taken into account, would the Prime Minister assure the House that his House leader meant what he said and that parliament must be allowed to debate all relevant reports, including the Lysyk report, before a government decision is taken?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I think the answer given by the House leader was very clear and I support his position.

NORTHERN PIPELINE—SUGGESTED RECONSIDERATION OF REJECTION OF PARLIAMENTARY CONSIDERATION

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I take that to be a commitment by the leader of the government that parliament will have an opportunity to debate and decide before all decisions are taken with respect to the pipeline. In view of the commitment which has now been given, I have a supplementary question. There was a proposition put forward under Standing Order 43 by the Leader of the Opposition in which he gave a detailed proposal for the examination of the evidence by a special committee which would serve as collator and distiller of the various inquiries which have been made, drawing conclusions from the totality of the evidence and bringing its findings before the whole House. Has the Prime Minister reconsidered the government's rather peremptory rejection of the proposal when the motion was put by the Leader of the Opposition and members on the other side said no? Would he reconsider the objections from the point of view of the government?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not see any argument in the question for changing the position of this side of the House on that matter. We undertake to permit parliament to express its views. I do not know what the suggestion of the Leader of the Opposition is, that we set up a committee. It seems to me that the House itself can express its own views without going to a committee.

ALCAN PIPELINE—POSITION OF GOVERNMENT ON NECESSITY FOR ENVIRONMENTAL STUDY OF ROUTE

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Prime Minister further to those of our House leader. On April 19 the government announced the formation of an environmental assessment panel in connection with the implications of the Alaska highway gas pipeline proposal, which is to report by August 1. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources stated in a CBC interview on May 17, while he was flying over the Alaska highway, that he could not see why there would be any great environment problems about building the Alcan line when a road has already been built. Is the Prime Minister accepting this assessment and dissolving the environmental assessment panel, and if he is, does this indicate that the government has already made a decision to permit a gas pipeline to be built, as suggested by the Alcan group?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Not at all, Mr. Speaker. The Lysyk committee was set up with the authority of the full cabinet, of course supported by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I think his word should be taken at face value. He could not see any difficulty, flying at the height that he was.

An hon. Member: He is a high flyer.

Mr. Trudeau: I am informed that he was flying very low and able to see quite well. This is one man's flying opinion, and it will not detract from the Lysyk committee report.

Mr. Crosbie: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the Prime Minister suggesting that the minister suffers from ozone sickness or Yukon euphoria? Would the Prime Minister agree with a statement made by Mr. Templeton of the environmental impact group who has condemned the minister for being reckless and irresponsible and suggested that he should make an appraisal of what his job is? Would the Prime Minister agree with this assessment of Mr. Templeton and will he instruct his minister to cease emulating the leader of the NDP in prejudging the gas pipeline issue?

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

POSSIBILITY OF NOVA SCOTIA BENEFITING FROM DECENTRALIZATION PLAN

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, who is also in charge of the government's decentralization plans. Yesterday in his announcement concerning the movement of some 15,000 civil servants from Ottawa to Hull the Minister of Public Works said, to quote him, that "this development has accompanied government plans to move some branches of the public service to areas of chronic unemployment in Canada". Since chronic unemployment areas in Quebec, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island and Newfoundland have already benefitted from this federal policy, when is Nova Scotia going to get some of these decentralized clerical jobs?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I take it that the hon. member is making a representation. I can assure him that Nova Scotia has a strong and powerful voice in cabinet and that this voice has already been heard.

Mr. Hogan: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I am sure I can agree with the Prime Minister that at times we have a very strong representation in the minister that he is implicitly mentioning, but I want him to know that the area with the most chronic unemployment in the whole of Nova Scotia is Cape Breton Island. The government promised some jobs but we are not getting them, and I should like to know why.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION

POSSIBLE PURCHASES OF STATION CJBR AT RIMOUSKI

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a question to the Minister of Communications.

Would she be in a position to tell the House whether some new facts have occurred as regards the CBC in Rimouski?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member would like to know whether I am in position to announce the purchase of station CJBR. If such an announcement is made, it will surely be by the Secretary of State who is responsible for the CBC. However, I will be going to the Gaspé Peninsula next week and I fully expect to be in a position to explain to the people of that area that the purchase of station CJBR is a bridge-head for the two French services in the Gaspé Peninsula and northern New Brunswick, and perhaps also the north shore.

IMMIGRATION

QUEBEC PROPOSALS FOR CONTROL—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, in view of the absence of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, I would like to direct my question to the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the scheduled meeting of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration with the minister of immigration for the province of Quebec, and in view of the proposals announced by the Quebec government in which they stated that they would be seeking control of immigration, including the power of selection of immigrants, could the Prime Minister tell this House whether those proposals have been received by the federal government? Second, could he tell this House, if they have been received, what the position of the federal government is on those proposals?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know the Minister of Manpower and Immigration will be meeting with the Quebec minister next week, I believe or certainly in the near future, to discuss the Quebec proposals. I have not been informed whether our minister has received an advance copy of them.

As to our attitude, the House knows perfectly well that immigration under the constitution is a joint and shared area of jurisdiction. It has always been our intent to co-operate with provincial governments, every provincial government, in this field. This will continue to be our attitude with the province of Quebec.

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, in view of the Prime Minister's answer to my question, I would like to ask him: in view of the proposals of the Quebec government in the negotiations which are to take place on May 27, will the federal government insist in those negotiations that the selection of immigrants and the right of entry of immigrants into Canada will be retained by the federal government?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I can assure the hon. member we are not giving up our right. We have in the past and we will in the future exercise that right in co-operation with the provinces, which also have a right under the constitution.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE THAT ANY RIGHTS GIVEN QUEBEC WILL BE GIVEN TO OTHER PROVINCES

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, on the basis of those rights the Prime Minister has enunciated, could the Prime Minister assure this House and Canadians that, whatever agreements will be made between the federal government and the province of Quebec and whatever the transfer of rights to that province will be, they will also be given to all other provinces in Canada?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, of course I can give that assurance. the House knows that as far back as 1969, when Mr. Marchand and Mr. Gabias arrived at an understanding, that was offered to the other provinces. Recently when the present President of the Treasury Board was minister of manpower and immigration, he made an understanding with the province of Quebec. At that time it was suggested that it should be open to the other provinces as well if they wanted to avail themselves of the offer.

TRANSPORT

AVAILABILITY OF REPORTS ON RISK OF OIL SPILL FROM TANKER TRAFFIC

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. A week or two ago in the House several questions were raised regarding the risk factor in connection with offshore drilling, particularly in the far north. In view of the fact we may be in an either/or situation—on the one hand this type of drilling or on the other increased marine traffic by increased importation of offshore oil—and in view of the fact the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment set a precedent by making that risk factor report on drilling public as soon as it was drawn to his attention, can the Minister of Transport tell the House what reports, either commissioned internally or through consultants, are available to him dealing with the risk factor of increased oil tanker traffic, particularly supertankers? If there are any such reports available to him, will they be made public immediately?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there are a number of internal comments on the various factors which are involved. There has been an examination of the reaction facilities we need in order to deal with marine emergencies, including oil spills. In half an hour I am planning to table in the House a report and an analysis of the new coast guard facilities for dealing with these varied emergencies.

Mr. Jarvis: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the minister misunderstood me. I am talking about the risk factor involved in connection with marine traffic as compared to the risk factor in drilling. Perhaps those statistics are not available. If the minister has not already done so, would he contact his counterpart, the Secretary of Transport in the United States and secure from him, if he has not already done so, whatever information is available to Secretary of Transport, particularly reports prepared by the National Academy of Science in the United States.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member re-reads my answer he will see that I dealt with that part of his question in the first part of my answer, indicating that there are a number of internal duties. Of course, the United States is planning to put positions forward in the international meetings that will deal with the over-all question of these risks. I also indicated to the hon. member that we have taken action to deal with emergencies here that may arise from oil spills of all types including those, obviously, that may emerge from tankers carrying oil.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

REASON QUEBEC DEVELOPMENT HAS FALLEN BELOW NATIONAL AVERAGE—SUGGESTED REFERENCE TO COMMITTEE OF ECONOMIC REVIEW

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Bearing in mind the recent Toronto Star poll which demonstrates an overwhelming concern in Quebec for that province's worsening economic performance, especially from lack of jobs, would the minister explain why in his opinion Quebec has fallen so far below the national average in recent years with respect to economic development and which condition is revealed in the economic review tabled by the minister in the House yesterday?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, it really seems to me that that is a very broad question which I could hardly answer in the cryptic terms of question period.

Mr. Stevens: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the minister's answer, would he be willing to have a reference with respect to the economic review itself to the appropriate committee of this House so that there can be an intensive investigation into the various things spelled out in it?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Certainly, Mr. Speaker. I am not sure whether our House leader would agree with me but I would have no difficulty with that.

MEASURES TO RESTORE BUSINESS CONFIDENCE IN QUEBEC

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In the meantime while that is being worked out, would the minister indicate what steps, if any, the government has taken to insure there is no further slowdown in the private sector business activity in Quebec and what steps the government intends to take to restore business confidence there which in turn should help to entice new commercial ventures to Quebec?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman seems to be suggesting some kind of specific control by the federal government over the private sector in Quebec.

Mr. Stevens: No; what enticement are you giving?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I do not think that is conceivable in Quebec or any other province. I would remind the hon. member that the budget provided federal measures of a fiscal nature both in terms of expenditure and in terms of regional tax concessions which will be of significant advantage to firms operating in Quebec. We must recognize, however, that in light of the language bill now before the Quebec legislature there is bound to be some economic uncertainty.

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

DATE OF PROCLAMATION OF SECTION DEALING WITH POLLUTION

Mr. Chas. L. Caccia (Davenport): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that Section 736 of part 20 of the Canada Shipping Act, 1971 which deals with financial responsibility in case of pollution and spills, has not yet been proclaimed, would the minister inform the House whether he has this matter under active consideration? If so, could he tell us the date when this section will come into effect?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, my colleague, the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment and I, have been discussing this question. While there are some complications in regard to imposing financial liability, we are looking at the question actively. Until that examination is complete I cannot give the hon. member a specific date.

TRANSPORT

FREIGHT RATES—POSSIBILITY OF SET RATE FOR PAYMENTS TO FLOUR MILLERS

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport arising out of answers which he gave to questions yesterday. In response to a question that I put to him regarding freight rates the minister replied that the government is meeting the problem of stop-off charges in eastern Canada by lowering the stop-off charges in western Canada and supporting the difference by paying funds directly to the flour millers. Is it the intention of the minister to maintain a set rate for flour millers, which at the moment I believe is 7 cents per hundred? In the meantime other charges have gone up, making the total 18 cents, and the millers are footing another 11 cents a hundred. Is it the minister's policy that where he reimburses a miller or a rapeseed crusher, the amount shall remain at that set rate regardless of what happens to other charges or freight rates?

• (1430)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker, and the hon. member's facts are wrong. The government payment has gone up to 15 cents, which at the present time as I understand it, is the most recent differential between the eastern stop-off charge and the western stop-off charge. We have not assured the millers that we can continue tracking the difference in rate in this fashion because of problems of financial restraint, but up to this point we have done so.

FREIGHT RATES—POSSIBILITY OF EQUALIZED SYSTEM

Mr. Les Benjamin (Regina-Lake Centre): Mr. Speaker, yesterday the minister indicated that hon. gentlemen on this side of the House have been reluctant to say, anywhere but in the west, what they mean by equity. We have been advocating a system of equalized and/or subsidized freight rates since about 1933 all over Canada, and I would like to ask the minister if it is going to be his policy upon termination—because he says he wants in the long run to arrive at a better system than the one he is presently stuck with—to have as a long range policy a system of equalizing or subsidizing freight rates for the regions of Canada which are affected because of distance; for example, the Atlantic provinces and western Canada.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Where very specific developmental purposes can be served by lower freight rates, we have recognized the usefulness of them, as we did in our recent discussions with the Atlantic provinces and in the agreement to aim freight assistance specifically at products where that leads to Atlantic development. I cannot, however, share the hon. member's view—which I understand his party can adopt easily—that somehow there is some magic and beautiful solution in transferring from the person who ships goods to the taxpayer the cost of freight. The fact is that those costs do not go away, no matter how much the hon. member might like to dream and pretend that they do. They are still borne by the taxpayer, and in addition, because they are hidden and not taken into account in our total domestic production pattern, they lead to increases in cost and lower productivity in Canada, which is something we must attack very vigorously indeed.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Benjamin: Mr. Speaker, that is the kind of talk we have been getting since 1880.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Benjamin: I would like to ask the minister if the government intends to fly not just in the face of what I say or what the NDP says but also in the face of what many organizations, and most recently the Hall Commission, have said? In terms of the use of instruments like the statutory grain rates applying to the finished products, whether it be grain or other kinds of products, does the minister intend to ignore the recommendations of the Hall Commission and continue with the 1890 concept he still embraces?

Mr. Lang: The hon. member earlier said 1880, and I felt that with another three years and the 100th anniversary of hearing it, he might understand what is involved. I did indicate the other day my concern about this particular freight rate issue. I have said repeatedly that I do not want that in any way to detract from the Hall Commission, which was set up very specifically to do a major job for western Canada and which I played a part in setting up. The job it has done has been excellent, and we will be implementing a great number of the proposals of the Hall Commission.

In this particular case I did not point out—and I would like the hon. member to register this—that if there is a suggestion that an artificially low rate well below cost be allowed for the movement of meat, I presume even the hon. member would not suggest that this could be done only for western Canada. It would have to apply all across the country, and I simply say to the hon. member that unlike his leader and the Leader of the Opposition, it may be worthwhile to take a statement like that in a report and calculate what it would cost even before he determines that he would want that cost transferred to the taxpayer. At the very least he should know what it costs and what the economic implications of transferring this cost to the taxpayer are before he decides to support it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST FOR SPECIFIC HALL RECOMMENDATIONS WHICH WILL BE IMPLEMENTED

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my questions are also for the Minister of Transport, and they also concern the Hall Commission Report. The minister indicated yesterday and he has indicated again today that the government will be implementing some of the recommendations in that report. Yesterday the minister mentioned that some of the recommendations would be implemented before the end of June. I wonder if the minister would give the House some idea of what recommendations the government will be implementing before the end of June, which is just some 40 days away.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be better to indicate that as we move along with the decisions because while there are some I am sure we are going to be able to implement in that period, there are some others we may very well be able to implement as well, and I would not want to leave them out by mentioning the ones of which we are sure.

Mr. Murta: Mr. Speaker, one of the main recommendations in the Hall Commission Report was the recommendation of a prairie rail authority. Mr. Justice Hall indicated that that was necessary in western Canada if his other recommendations are to be carried forward. I am wondering whether on this specific issue the government will be implementing that recommendation before the end of June.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, my initial reaction to that proposal is very favourable indeed. It seems to me to make a good deal of sense and to have a great deal of potential. However, the proposal of a new authority or body with some very important powers and a very important influence on the structures in the west is a major idea. While some people raised an idea like that in various discussions before the Hall Commission Report, it does not really come upon the prairies as a new idea in its totality, and I would like to hear from the representatives of farm organizations and from farmers themselves before I form a final opinion as to the implementation of that recommendation.

CROWSNEST PASS RATES—MINISTER'S POSITION ON ABANDONMENT

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a question of the Minister of Transport. I listened very carefully to his answers yesterday; I read them in Hansard and I have listened to his answers today, and it seems to me that his answers to questions refer either to processed products from grain or grain consumed in Canada and the movement thereof. I want to ask a clear-cut, concise question. Is it the minister's policy to abandon the Crowsnest Pass freight rate as set out by the statute and as it applies to export grain?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I did not hear that answer.

Some hon. Members: He said no.

Mr. Woolliams: Then, I would like to ask the minister whether he will assure the House and the country that because those rates are spelled out in the statute, the statute will not be repealed and left to the whims of orders in council to be enforced by that method.

Mr. Lang: Well, I think that follows very clearly. I have indicated in the west that I consider this very much a western question and that if the kind of money which is involved in the Crowsnest rate is available, it is important for the west to answer why it wants that money to go only to the farmer who ships his grain in the form of grain, depriving the farmer who ships his grain in the form of meat, the benefit of that very same form of assistance. With a given amount of money that question must be asked by the west, and of course, if the idea is that another $500 million or $600 million can be thrown into the pot, then obviously the representative of people in all parts of the country may want to be concerned about that aspect of it. That is why I indicated yesterday that I would just as soon hear what the official policy position of the various parties is on that issue rather than simply hear these localized demands.

Mr. Woolliams: Mr. Speaker, I have one further supplementary question. How does the minister reconcile his first answer with his answer to my second question, because it is a complete distortion of the facts?

Mr. Lang: No it is not, Mr. Speaker. I indicated quite clearly that I have no policy which would affect the Crowsnest rate.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: What I said in my second answer is that I have been discussing this with people in the west, and I am certainly receptive to conclusions in the west that some different form of distributing the benefit may in fact be advantageous to the west. I say that is an idea which I believe to be of fundamental importance for the long term in the west, and I am going to go on talking about it even though the political parties opposite keep making cheap political hay by trying to distort my position.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: You are in trouble now.

Mr. Paproski: There's got to be an election coming up.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I should like to question the Minister of Finance about the Economic Review, the picture on the cover being the National Research Council's radio telescope dish antenna. I ask the minister if this means he is now searching in outer space for economic policy?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, obviously, we will find sounder economic policies in outer space than in the official opposition.

Oral Questions

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

NETHERLANDS GOVERNMENT REQUEST FOR CO-OPERATION IN INVESTIGATING PAYMENTS BY POLYSAR

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In view of media reports both in the Netherlands and Canada saying that, on the Polysar revelations respecting customers who receive secret rebates, the Netherlands government is expecting the full co-operation and volunteer help of the Canadian government in investigating this matter I ask, has the minister received copies of these press reports or statements from our embassy in the Netherlands? If so, what has been his response? If he has not received them, will he make every attempt to "buck up" some of these embassy people, who should be keeping him informed of this matter?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have not seen them personally but that does not mean they did not arrive during my absence last week. I will make inquiries. Certainly, I have not received formal representation from the governments concerned asking for co-operation, but if we receive it of course we will consider it as forthcomingly as possible. I will inquire as to whether the embassy has reported; I am sure it has. I think the hon. member is being somewhat unfair in view of the considerable work our embassies have been doing on his behalf and on behalf of the committee.

PAYMENTS BY POLYSAR—ALLEGATION DEPARTMENT HAS FAILED TO CO-OPERATE WITH INVESTIGATING COMMITTEE

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question touches on that very point. Some members of the committee think the committee has not had the full co-operation of the minister or the department in keeping it up to date on what has been sent to the minister by the embassies. I understand the minister undertook to co-operate fully and my question is this: Would the minister please examine his departmental files, to make sure that information given to the public accounts committee is kept up to date; because if the minister has those reports and we do not have them, then, as I think the minister will agree, he has been falling down on the job.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, certainly I agree thoroughly. I was not aware until this moment that the chairman of the committee was not satisfied. I have sent to him every telegram and every response, and carried through every request. If some are outstanding, I will look into them.

ALLEGATION UNITED STATES BREAKING AGREEMENT ON WEST COAST SALMON FISHERY—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Hugh A. Anderson (Comox-Alberni): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a question to the Secretary of State for External Affairs? A salmon war is erupting off the west coast of Canada as a result of the United States government breaking the interim agreement by taking unilateral action. Can the minister advise the House what steps he will take to protect Canadian fishermen and Canadian fisheries resources?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the negotiations in connection with this matter are continuing with the United States almost on a daily basis. The interim agreement to which the hon. member referred has not yet been ratified by the United States Congress, I am told, because of delays which we in this House may be able to understand. However, I assure the hon. member that the question is being looked into on an urgent basis.

CANADIAN NATIONAL RAILWAYS

PROPOSED UPGRADING OF GILLAM-CHURCHILL SUBDIVISION—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. Will the minister be encouraging the CNR to upgrade the Gillam-Churchill subdivision, in order to carry out the Hall Commission's objective, namely, that the port of Churchill should handle double or triple its present capacity in order to provide a reasonable alternative to the increasingly difficult situation developing in connection with the use of the St. Lawrence Seaway?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, apart from considering what volume of grain may be involved in the future, I sent a letter to the President of the CNR, drawing to his attention the fact that the designation of the Churchill line as non-grain dependent by the Snavely Commission has no relevance to the issue of whether or not it should be upgraded, since it is in the category of lines presently receiving assistance as a branch line whenever it is uneconomic. I will pursue that matter with the Canadian National. I believe it is one of those lines which should be upgraded in the near future.

PROPOSED REPLACEMENT OF RAIL SERVICE IN ATLANTIC REGION BY BUSES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Transport arises from the study, released last week, undertaken by the federal committee on Atlantic regional transportation. One of its main conclusions was that principal rail services in the Atlantic region should be replaced by bus services. I wonder if, for the edification of the people of Atlantic Canada, the minister can say if he endorses that view, and was the committee putting forward the policy of the government?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the position put before the Canadian Transport Commission is the considered view of the five governments, of the four Atlantic governments and ourselves, as part of the process of attempting to identify where money is being spent in the Atlantic region, and if it can be spent better for the welfare of that region. It is part of the over-all agreement with the Atlantic premiers on a variety of programs with which we will want to move forward for the benefit of the Atlantic region.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, when will the government recognize, in formulating its policies, that Canada begins in Newfoundland and ends on Vancouver Island, not in Montreal? The country does not stretch, either, only from Montreal to Vancouver.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member may know, the report put before the commission the view that rail passenger service should continue from Montreal to the Atlantic as part of a continuous rail route through the country. Of course, in Newfoundland we want to be sure that the existing bus service will be improved.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

MEMBER PUT ON CHARGE FOR COMPLAINING TO MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question concerns a young man charged in a military court with the heinous offence of approaching his member of parliament. Would the Acting Minister of National Defence look into the circumstances in which a serving person in the armed forces, Mr. Smith, at Camp Gagetown near Oromocto, New Brunswick, could be denied the fundamental right of taking a complaint to his member of parliament, in this case the member of parliament for York-Sunbury? The serving member of the armed forces has been placed on charge. I understand that charge, to be proceeded with today or tomorrow, is for placing his case for release before a member of parliament.

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Acting Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as the acting minister in the House I will certainly take the matter as notice. Judging by what the hon. member said, it appears to be a most serious question. I will see that it is conveyed to the appropriate officials immediately following the question period.

DATE OF DECISION ON UPGRADING HIGHWAYS IN ATLANTIC REGION

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is supplementary to that asked by the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East. In view of the disclosures which have been made about Atlantic transportation policy, I wonder if the minister could elaborate on information he gave me two or three weeks ago, namely, that he will make a decision shortly, or an announcement, on the upgrading of highways in the Atlantic region, particularly in Newfoundland?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I expect to be able to make such a statement at an early date.

IMPROVEMENT IN PORT FACILITIES AT PRINCE RUPERT—POSSIBILITY OF FACILITIES TO HANDLE COAL

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, may I, too, direct a question to the Minister of Transport? May I ask if the port facilities at Prince Rupert, on the west coast, will be upgraded and improved soon, in accordance with recommendations made in the Hall Commission Report? I ask this particularly since the government has already considered turning over to free enterprise the elevator system there. Will that process now be accelerated and will that facility be integrated into the system, as one of the key components of the western transportation system?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I certainly accept the Hall Commission's conclusion about the importance of the port of Prince Rupert and the desirability of using it more extensively. The Minister of Agriculture has presently before him several submissions and proposals relating to the use of the terminal. I hope we shall soon reach a decision on that.

Mr. Oberle: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Are plans in existence to create a coal exporting facility, and similar facilities to handle other, major commodities, to be exported to the Far East from the port of Prince Rupert?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, in addition to the terminal facility being completed at Prince Rupert, the question of the port's coal handling capability is being studied. This is being done in conjunction with the British Columbia government, in connection with the development of northeastern coal.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

RECEPTION OF PRIME MINISTER ON VISIT TO FRANCE

Mr. Claude-André Lachance (Lafontaine-Rosemont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the right hon. Prime Minister.

Following the right hon. gentleman's recent visit to France and his meeting with the President of the Republic, Mr. Giscard d'Estaing, and in light of the statement by the right hon. member for Prince Albert as reported by Le Devoir today, to the effect that the Prime Minister was very badly received in the French capital and that we should put an end to our relations with France, since they are pernicious anyway, could the Prime Minister of Canada reassure the House regarding the result and the spirit of that visit and reiterate to the House the importance of our friendly relations with France?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if the right hon. member for Prince Albert was quoted correctly, but if such is the case I can certainly say that he was indulging in wishful thinking because, in fact, my visit was extremely friendly and successful, and as I have had the opportunity to say, the French government and administration have made clear that they do not intend to interfere in the debate among Canadians and that they want to consider Canada as a sympathetic and powerful ally.

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. I would like to know exactly what the Prime Minister did in Paris for three days.

NATIONAL PARKS

TERRA NOVA—REASON FOR CONSTRUCTION OF GOLF COURSE

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the fact the Prime Minister has often expressed grave concern about unemployment in Canada and in view of the fact that Newfoundland is plagued with extremely high unemployment, will the Prime Minister tell the House the rationale or the reason for his government spending $1.7 million to build an 18 hole golf course outside the national park at Terra Nova.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to take notice of the question.

Mr. Rodriguez: In view of the fact that this $1.7 million for a golf course will not create one job in an area of Newfoundland—

An hon. Member: Oh, yes it will.

Mr. Rodriguez: If these yahoos will just be quiet, I will ask my question. It will not create one job in this part of Newfoundland. Will the Prime Minister assure the House he will look into this matter to ensure that the money is not spent on a golf course but spent in other ways to create employment in Newfoundland.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I did tell the hon. member that I would look into the matter. However, it would seem to me there is some obvious advantage to Newfoundland to have people go there because of the beauty of the province and the warmth and hospitality of the people.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: After all, Mr. Speaker, this means that we are encouraging tourists to go to that part of the country. Some of them happen to be golfers. It is not my particular sport, but some of them like to play golf, a sport which has its origins in the north of Scotland and which is enjoyed by many members of this House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

REASON FOR FAILURE TO MODERATE PRICE INCREASES—PROPOSED REVIEW OF COSTS IMPOSED BY INDIRECT TAXES

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. Since figures from the Economic Review of the Department of Finance show that price increases in non-food items were still 8.4 per cent during 1976, I would like to ask why after more than one year of controls there has been no significant moderation in the rate of increase.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, the fact that those price levels remained high reflects the fact that labour costs have continued to be high in the non-food area. Under the Anti-Inflation Program, as the hon. member knows, the process is directed at a gradual reduction on the compensation side. That has indeed been underway, as indicated by the terms of first years of settlement and the terms of contract which have been entered into during the course of the last year. The hon. member's question is a good example, in reply to the NDP and the Canadian Labour Congress who insist that the program has been particularly hard on the workingman. Obviously, in real terms the workingman has not suffered greatly by the gradual de-escalation of the rate of increase.

Mr. Clarke: The workingman pays a lot of taxes. Since the same review shows that indirect taxes have become the next to largest tax factor affecting overall national price behaviour, will the minister instigate a review of the costs imposed on the economy by these indirect taxes?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): As I indicated in the budget, Mr. Speaker, we will be glad to have an extensive debate in the Finance committee of the commodity tax system. I look forward to being able to discuss this further with the hon. member in that context.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

ALLEGATION UNIONS FORCING MEMBERS TO WORK OVERTIME TO DETRIMENT OF UNEMPLOYED

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Labour. In view of the high unemployment level in Canada, may I ask the minister if he is aware of just one of the reasons for this unacceptable level whereby certain unions, including the United Auto Workers, are making it obligatory for their membership to work beyond the number of hours required in a working week, thereby eliminating potential employment opportunities for tens of thousands of unemployed, many of whom are already experienced in their respective fields. If he is aware of this matter, what steps does he plan to take to rectify this unfair practice?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I think it is not an unfair practice. It is not widely resorted to by trade unions in this country. In fact, a resolution was passed by the United Auto Workers in Windsor whereby on their own initiative they are endeavouring to work out some job sharing arrangement for their fellow workers who may be laid off so that all will have jobs.

Mr. Jelinek: Can it be taken that the minister's answer to this question is that he believes this to be a fair practice for the people, and there are many within the unions who do not want to work these extended hours as well as for those who are unemployed and have experience in their respective jobs? Does the minister say that this is a fair practice on the part of the unions?

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member entirely missed my point. I am saying that the trade unions in this country are endeavouring to share the available work with their fellow workers, devising various schemes on their own initiative.

INCOME TAX

CHANGE IN INTERPRETATION OF PROVISION COVERING MONEY ADVANCED BY EMPLOYER—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of National Revenue. Some week or ten days ago I asked the minister about a certain interpretation that had been issued by the income tax section of her department concerning a change of opinion or intention on how to assess individual income tax income earners on the basis of money advanced to them by their employers, either by shares in the company or to assist in home purchases.

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, I have been hoping for some time that the hon. member would put that question to me, but I did not see him in the House. I did, to comply with his request, look into the matter.

My department is responsible for levying income tax on Canadians. We have noticed a considerable increase in the loans, at low interest rates or without interest, being granted by employers to employees. We have therefore decided to revise our last interpretation bulletin to the effect that the difference between the interest rate on those loans and the bank rate will be considered as additional income, for income tax purposes, this ruling to become effective on January 1, 1978.

[English]

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Have the minister and her officials considered that because of the change and because of the fantastic increase in the cost of housing in particular, such a practice has become mandatory in order to secure the movement and transfer of employees? Otherwise, it is absolutely impossible. The matter has become a condition of employment rather than additional benefit.

[Translation]

Miss Bégin: Mr. Speaker, I feel that question could be put to some other minister. My responsibilities are far more limited and do not go beyond levying income taxes on Canadians.

PUBLIC BUILDINGS

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON ENTICEMENT OF QUEBEC FIRMS TO FILL VACANT BUILDINGS IN OTTAWA

Mr. R. E. McKinley (Huron-Middlesex): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Public Works and it has to do with the hon. gentleman's announcement yesterday that as a result of the move of 11 government departments and another 15,000 public service employees to Hull, four million square feet of office space will become vacant in Ottawa which he has encouraged the private sector to get to work to fill. Would the minister have any objection to the owners of this space endeavouring to entice firms from Quebec to fill that accommodation because of the uncertain situation in that province—one, which, I might add, was brought about by the Prime Minister and his government.

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works): Obviously, I do not accept the hon. member's final comment. I hope that firms in Ottawa seeking other enterprises and commercial endeavours would be able to look all across Canada for prospective occupants.

[Translation]

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Champlain on a question of privilege.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, I believe we have asked only one small question and I should just like to put on oral question.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The hon. member for Shefford on a question of privilege.

Mr. Rondeau: Tomorrow, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Does the hon. member for Champlain want to rise on a question of privilege?

Mr. Matte: No, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

Mr. Alexander: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I wish to register my objection to the statement made by the Minister of Labour when replying to a question by the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley. I do not think the minister is quite in touch with his department, because he seemed to leave the impression with me that organized labour was walking around the country looking for work-sharing agreements. I want the minister to know that the CLC has been before the Standing Committee on Labour, Manpower and Immigration and has registered concern about the work-sharing proposal in Bill C-27, the amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act. They take a very dim view of the unemployment insurance fund being used under work-sharing agreements. So all is not pie in the sky. I know the hon. gentleman did not wish to mislead the House. I just want to set the record straight.

Mr. Munro (Hamilton East): I am mystified as to how the hon. member for Hamilton West could possibly take that interpretation from my comment, unless he wishes to display some unique knowledge he has picked up in some standing committee. I was not even talking about unemployment insurance sharing arrangements. I was not even referring to unemployment insurance. I presume the hon. member was not listening. What I said was that many unions in this country are concerned about unemployment and are endeavouring to devise schemes to share the workload, overtime, and so on, among their fellow workers. How the hon. member could take anything out of that, a statement which had nothing to do with sharing unemployment insurance, is totally beyond me, Mr. Speaker.

Order Paper Questions

CITIZENSHIP ACT

MEASURE TO ENSURE CITIZENSHIP NOT WITHHELD BY REASON OF BEING CONSCIENTIOUS OBJECTOR

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher) moved for leave to introduce Bill No. C-420, to amend the Citizenship Act (conscientious objectors).

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to ensure that Canadian citizenship is not withheld from individuals solely on the basis of their religious or philosophical convictions regarding military service or the bearing of arms. At present, the rights outlined in the bill are embodied in the regulations governing the Citizenship Act. Those regulations can be changed by order in council at any time. This bill will guarantee the rights of conscientious objectors, by law.

Motion agreed to, bill read the first time and ordered to be printed.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 1,682, 1,920 and 2,255.

[Text]

OLYMPIC COINS

Question No. 1,682—Mr. Jelinek:

1. How many (a) $5 (b) $10 silver Olympic coins were minted for the Olympic Coin Programme?

2. How many of each remain unsold?

3. What was the seignorage as of January 1, 1977 of the (a) $5 (b) $10 silver Olympic coin?

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): 1. (a) 15,642,554; (b) 16,032,574 as of September 30, 1976.

2. (a) 3,183,143; (b) 3,908,496 as of September 30, 1976.

3. No seignorage accrues to the government from the issue of Olympic Coins. The profits derived from the Olympic Coin and Stamp Programmes are payable to the Olympic Corporation. As of January 1, 1977, $88,000,000 was so paid.

IMMIGRATION—APPEALS AND DEPORTATION

Question No. 1,920—Mr. Schumacher:

1. For each year 1947 to date, how many appeals were made to the Immigration Appeal Board and, in each case, how many were (a) heard (b) allowed (c) dismissed (d) left pending?

2. For the same years (a) how many resulted in deportation (b) what were the reasons (c) what was the destination?

3. For the same years, how many prohibited immigrants were allowed to remain in Canada by (a) ministerial permit (b) other authority and what was the reason for the prohibited immigrant classification?

[Mr. Lang.]

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Prior to 1967, Immigration Appeal Board Statistics are not available.

Appeals Made:		(a)	(b)	(c)		(d)
1968	1382	987	32	955		153
1969	2684	1000	66	934		1723
1970	4046	933	81	845		4750
1971	4908	1179	144	1012		8081
1972	5852	1542	139	1388		11875
1973	14743	8048	1548	6495		18247
1974	743	15405	746	14646		3429
1975	685	3804	1042	2731		225
1976	835	484	23	416		447
Jan. 1977	68	55	2	47	Feb.	456

2. (a) Statistics are not available relating to deportation actions stemming from decisions rendered by the Immigration Appeal Board. (b) See reply to 2(a). (c) See reply to 2(a).

3. Statistics in the form requested, are not available. Section 5 of the Immigration Act describes persons whose admission is prohibited and applied to all persons whether immigrants or non-immigrants. (a) The Minister is required under Section 8 of the Immigration Act to submit to Parliament, within 30 days of the commencement of the first Session of Parliament in each year, a report showing all permits with particulars thereof, issued during the preceding calendar year. The report for 1975 was tabled on November 16, 1976, and this as well as previous reports are available from the Journal's Branch of the House of Commons. (b) Ministerial permits are the only legal means for a prohibited person to enter Canada for the period specified on the permit.

UIC EMPLOYEES REFERRED TO THE DEPARTMENT OF NATIONAL HEALTH AND WELFARE

Question No. 2,255—Mr. Fortin:

1. In (a) 1975 (b) 1976, were employees of the Quebec Region of the Unemployment Insurance Commission referred to the Department of National Health and Welfare and, if so (i) how many from each office (ii) for what reasons?

2. Does the Director of the St-Jérôme Office and Sub-Offices use this practice to intimidate his employees and, if not, for what reason are his offices the most affected?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. Yes. (a) Not available. (b) (i) Offices: Regional, 12; Montreal Northeast, 1; Montreal Northwest, 3; Montreal Southeast, 3; Montreal Centre North, 3; Montreal Centre South, 2; Longueuil, 15; Laval, 1; Montreal Southwest, 7; St-Jérôme, 7; Hull, 2; Quebec City East, 1; Quebec City West, 3; Sherbrooke, 1; Trois-Rivières, 1; Chicoutimi, 2; Lévis, 4; Rimouski, 1; Total 69. (ii) The purpose of a medical examination is to check the physical capacity of employees to perform the duties of their position, in cases where the number of absences for health reasons seems too high.

2. No. The St-Jérôme office, which covers an entire district and has a large number of employees and several sub-offices under its authority, is not the office most affected by the medical examinations. The manager referred seven employees to the department of health, which represents ten per cent of the total for the Quebec Region.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

NOTICE OF MOTIONS FOR PRODUCTION OF PAPERS

COPIES OF ALL CONTRACTS RELATING TO COSTS AND CONSTRUCTION OF TWO TORONTO MAJOR POSTAL PLANTS

[Text]

Motion No. 18—Mr. McKinley:

That an Order of the House do issue for copies of all contracts relating to the costs and construction of the two Toronto major postal plants of Gateway and South-Central between the (a) Department of Public Works and the Project Management Firm (b) Department of Public Works and the Project Construction Firm (c) Department of Supply and Services and the Project Management Firm (d) Department of Supply and Services and the Project Construction Firm (e) Project Management Firm and any Sub-contractor (f) Project Construction Firm and any Sub-contractor.

[English]

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, parts (a) and (b) of notice of motion for the production of papers No. 18 are acceptable on the understanding that only the prime contracts will be tabled. Insofar as parts (c) and (d) are concerned, no contracts have been awarded to the firms mentioned. As for parts (e) and (f) the government has no jurisdiction over sub-contracts which are the responsibility of the main contracting body.

Mr. McKinley: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it agreed that the documents shall be tabled with respect to the parts mentioned by the parliamentary secretary?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Goodale: Would Your Honour please call notice of motion for the production of papers No. 44?

COPY OF CORRESPONDENCE CONCERNING THE MULTICULTURALISM GRANTS INVOLVING MR. ED STRUZIK OF LONDON, ONTARIO

[Text]

Motion No. 44—Mr. Beatty:

That an Order of the House do issue for a copy of any contracts, correspondence, agreements, assessments or papers concerning the multiculturalism grants in 1975 and 1976 involving Mr. Ed Struzik of London, Ontario.

[English]

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, all reports, correspondence papers, etc., received by the department in connection with the project of the Church Council of Our Lady of Czestochowa were submitted in confidence and therefore cannot be produced. I therefore ask the hon. member to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Beatty: That is a typical stall, Mr. Speaker, and I would ask that the motion be transferred for debate.

Mr. Speaker: Transferred for debate. Shall the remaining notice of motions for the production of papers be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED INABILITY OF GOVERNMENT TO PROVIDE EFFICIENT POSTAL SERVICE

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris) moved:

That this House notes with alarm the government's continuing inability to provide Canadians with an efficient postal service, its obsession with secrecy, its illegal use of orders in council to set postal rates, and its chronic ineptness in the field of collective bargaining and industrial relations, and recommends that the operations of the Post Office Department be referred to a special joint committee of the House of Commons and the Senate.

He said: Mr. Speaker, during the past few weeks there have been at least three occasions on which Post Office affairs have been discussed both within this House and by the Committee on Transport and Communications. On each occasion the members of Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition have become increasingly concerned by a drift toward a situation which can only result in final confrontation and complete breakdown in the postal service. It is for this reason we are taking the opportunity today to bring a motion before the House in a conscientious endeavour to get some action before the point of no return is passed.

As I came into the House today I received a press release from the Canadian Union of Postal Workers expressing the same kind of alarm. Coincidentally, I do not know whether some telepathy is involved, but it indicates that the people most concerned with providing a postal service have come to the same conclusion as the members of the opposition. I have been receiving a growing volume of complaints about slow delivery, damaged letters and parcels, lost mail and rapid increases in rates for all postal services, and at the same time decline in service. My mail, when the mail does get through, also includes a growing number of complaints from postal employees indicating a continuing decline in morale. A recent letter from a long-time postal officer concluded with these words, and I can assure the House that this is not an exceptional case:

I actually see a dying Post Office now. I notice more evidence of it every day. I am saddened by it all. I no longer support the policies of the union. They are partly responsible for some of the problems; however, only a small part as most of their foolishness was allowed and seldom even understood by the management negotiations. As an example, the hiring of casuals was a concession that should not have been discontinued; but instead partly discontinued. It should have been pegged to the rate of absenteeism, sick leave, annual and special leave, and maintained at that level.

The disillusionment expressed by this experienced postal worker summarizes what has happened to Canada's Post Office during the past nine years. The high morale that used to characterize the postal service has given way to a growing sense of frustration. The Postmaster General (Mr. Blais), in his remarks to the third Postal User's Conference held in Toronto on November 2, 1976, expressed the same sense of futility. He declared that any further strike action by the CUPW would destroy the postal service. It is reflected, too, in the numerous studies undertaken by the Post Office in attempting to cure the growing malaise, the phrase the former postmaster general, Bryce Mackasey, used to use frequently.

Altogether, some 15 studies have been undertaken. Because they have been highly critical of current trends in Post Office management, administration and labour relations, successive postmasters general have endeavoured to keep a shroud of secrecy around them, thereby denying members of parliament opportunity to engage in informed discussion on ways and means to improve the postal service.

All major industrial countries have been passing through difficulties similar to Canada in upgrading their postal services to meet the demand for modern communications. Denied access to Canadian studies, members of the Conservative party's caucus committee on postal affairs visited the United States and the United Kingdom in search of answers to the Canadian postal dilemma. In both countries we found a refreshing openness and desire to share their problems and experience with us. Just the other day I received volume 1, dated April, 1977, of the report of the commission on postal service from the United States government. In the foreword to the President and Congress of the United States the purpose of the commission is stated briefly thus:

The commission was established to identify and study problems facing the United States postal service and to recommend actions to resolve these problems.

The British are completing a similar study known as the Carter commission report. Our Conservative caucus committee has received the assurance that we will receive a copy as soon as it is off the press. In light of the openness of the United States and British governments, the paranoic secretiveness of the Canadian government is incomprehensible when we view the situation that faces us. This paranoid attitude on the part of the government has influenced and poisoned all relationships in the Canadian postal service. Back in 1969, when Eric Kierans was postmaster general, the decision was taken to move Canada's postal service into the twentieth century by a program of mechanization and automation. Without any prior consultation with the postal unions, the plan was thrown at them as a fait accompli. This was the beginning of the breakdown in labour-management relations which has resulted today in a situation where the CUPW is still boycotting the postal code, an innovation which is essential to the success of the automation program.

In his speech to the Postal Users' Conference in Toronto last fall, the Postmaster General referred to yet another study that has just been completed by the Post Office. It was conducted by a sociologist from the University of Alberta and took the form of video-taped interviews with employees. Here is a summary of some of the complaints given by the PMG on page 9 of his speech:

Management never consults us. They never ask for our "input". They never ask how we feel or think. They never get down to the plant floor and find out what's going on. They bring in machines and they tell us how they work, but they don't say how they affect our future.

Some complained about shift work, some about heat and noise. But many more said they were treated either like army recruits or children. Surprisingly, few complain about the computerized machinery. Morale has dropped among those who do not work machines: manual sorters, mail handlers, people in transportation—older, long-time employees who are the backbone of the Post Office. They see mechanization eroding their jobs, depreciating their skills. They think we lavish too much attention and money on machines.

Too much haste in proceeding toward mechanization has produced a situation in Toronto, which processes 45 per cent of all the mail originating in Canada, that we have outlined in this House in questions in recent days and has been referred to by the Postmaster General as a temporary aberration. Mail is being delayed up to ten days, many letters lost, some destroyed by the sorting machinery, and only 35 per cent being sorted by the mechanization process. This results in the necessity of expensive double-banking, with the new, automated machines having to be backed up by a large staff of manual sorters.

Enough has been said to underline the problem, and other speakers will be raising other matters. Now we must move toward solutions. The British and American experience is enlightening in this respect. Both countries have moved away from direct government control to a Crown corporation set up in the United Kingdom and a semi-private organization in the United States. Both countries were faced with strikes in the initial stages of transition. In the U.K. management made the same mistake that has been made in Canada: mechanization was thrown at the union without prior consultation. The United Postal Workers struck and refused to go back to work until such time as they had been thoroughly consulted on the whole process of mechanization and automation.

Management declared a one-year moratorium on the implementation of the plan. Union representatives were brought directly into the planning process. They came up with some of the best ideas. They now sit on the board of directors of the Post Office with management. I talked with Norman Stagg, the deputy general secretary of the Union of Postal Workers of Great Britain, and was amazed to hear him talk of members of the Union of Postal Workers as part of the Post Office family dedicated to operating the best postal service possible. Oh, that we could have this situation in the Canadian Post Office!

They view mechanization and automation as the long-term solution provided the workers are closely involved in the formulation—and this is important—as well as the implementation stage and share the benefits of mechanization. The position of machine coder has become an elite position in mechanized postal plants, and we had the opportunity to see old-time employees displaying excellent morale as they vied one with another for speed and accuracy with coding machines.

At the present time, plans are afoot to introduce full-scale industrial democracy into the British postal plants. Incidentally, they are coming on stream at a much slower pace than the impulsive pace which has been adopted in Canada, with 18 offices out of a planned 80 on stream, and installations are proceeding at the rate of ten a year. In the United States the experience has been similar. They, too, had a strike in the early stages, even though the right to strike is not given to employees in essential services. Now consultation has been introduced in all areas of the United States postal service and at all levels. Training programs have been established for both management and labour.

As is the case in Britain, supervisors and shop stewards attend courses together to be trained in modern industrial relations skills and sensitized to problems of human relations on the plant floor. Local grievances are dealt with at the local level, thereby avoiding the huge backlog of unsettled grievances, many of them trivial and avoidable, which is poisoning the spirit of good, human relations in Canada's mechanized postal plants. It is interesting to note that the commission which reported recently to the President and Congress included representatives from both the postal workers and letter carriers union in its membership.

During the next few weeks, the Canada Post Office is faced with critical negotiations for new contracts with all its employees. The Canadian Union of Postal Workers, which represents most inside workers, have already expressed their militancy by making 250 new proposals for a one-year agreement, and stating, "We're ready to strike again if we have to. It's second nature to us."

In committee meetings last week, the Postmaster General emphasized that management and labour were still on a collision confrontation course. He pointed out that a no co-operation and fraternization clause is written into the constitution of the union. He said the same in his speech last fall:

> All signs appear to me to point to a breakdown in communications. Each party has been unable to accept the other for what they are. Labels have been used "militaristic", "dictatorial", "Maoists", "separatist" when they failed to accept the reality. Propaganda in its World War II sense has been used on both sides.

This was the situation over which the former postmaster general, Bryce Mackasey, stumbled in his attempts to solve the problems in the Post Office. Mr. Mackasey's growing disillusionments are outlined in a series of speeches published by the Post Office, so they must have considered them important, under the revealing title "What's Behind the Lemming Urge"? In other words, we were all going over the cliff together. His closing sentence is most illuminating in light of what I have outlined today, and I quote:

> We're moving beyond ideology; we're responding to necessity. Our choice, as Buchminster Fuller says, is between Utopia and oblivion.

Everyone is agreed that the strike weapon is not the solution. This is pointed out in CUPW's press release today. The workers in the University of Alberta study state that they were gratified and encouraged to be consulted. They said they would like to take pride in their work; they would like the satisfaction of doing their best; they would like to give service. They said, "If management were on our side, we'd be on theirs". The Postmaster General, too, has stated:

> —with every stoppage of work, the Post Office Department loses more business to private couriers, teleprinters networks, computerized message systems and the long distance telephone. We have to stop the drain or we'll end up like the States, where the cost of service pushes up rates as mail volume goes down, and then volume goes down because mailing rates go up.

He further quoted Jack Jones, the moderate leader of Britain's largest trade union, when he said recently, "What's the use of a beautiful wage agreement if the firm goes bust five days later"? The dialogue of the deaf must cease. Management has already achieved a good relationship with the Letter Carriers Union of Canada. It must now come to grips with the Canadian Union of Postal Workers. The leaders of the union want to be heard and want to be involved. We believe that our motion offers the only solution, and we trust that the government will support it.

May I make a further motion, or suggestion, in view of its timeliness, that the press release and the attached excerpts from the Uberig report, which is a significant report by the assistant deputy minister for the Post Office, be appended to Hansard today as part of the record?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, we all welcome the opportunity of joining this debate and the motion put forth by the hon. gentleman.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) on a point of order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), but my colleague, the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale), made a motion with respect to the appending of certain documents to today's Hansard. I wonder if Your Honour might make a disposition on that matter.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I am sorry, but I did not understand the hon. member's point. The hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale).

Mr. Dinsdale: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, just as the debate began today I was handed a press release from the Canadian Union of Postal Workers. I think it is a very important document which should be taken into consideration in the discussion that is before the House today. It fits directly into the motion put forward by the official opposition this afternoon.

Our motion is to refer the matter for immediate action to a joint committee of members of parliament and the Senate. We put our motion in those terms because this has been the growing practice with reference to investigations of this kind. There is a greater possibility of getting more immediate action from a parliamentary committee than a royal commission.

The CUPW press release has the following headline, "CUPW calls for a royal commission of inquiry into the administration of the Post Office Department". That is a slower process, but it is the route which has been taken in the United Kingdom and in the United States. I am agreeable to either route as long as there is some action on the part of the government before our postal system collapses completely. Because of its importance, I would suggest the press release and the appended excerpts from the Uberig report, a report by the assistant deputy minister of the Post Office, be appended to today's Hansard.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I doubt whether an hon. member can table a document.

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, it is being appended to Hansard, with unanimous consent.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I do not think hon. members are allowed the opportunity even to append it to Hansard. Only ministers can do that with the agreement of the House. The hon. member could have read it into Hansard during his allocated time, but I do not think it can be appended to Hansard.

Mr. Paproski: That is not right.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I think Your Honour must have misunderstood what the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) requested. He is not asking to table something; he is asking the consent of the House for a certain item or items to be appended to today's Hansard. There is nothing new about that. It is not done all the time, but it is done now and then if there is unanimous consent. It is not limited to ministers, although ministers are the only ones who can table something. The right to append something to Hansard is up to the House, and provided there is unanimous consent, it can be done.

● (1530)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I want to thank the hon. member for his contribution. He is quite right: this is in order if there is unanimous consent. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: No.

[Mr. Hnatyshyn.]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): There is not unanimous consent.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

An hon. Member: The government refuses.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I was just about to begin my remarks when the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) rose on this question. I am glad he did. It is one of the few opportunities we have to stand in this House and talk about the Post Office and the way it is managed. I think the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) should be complimented for bringing forward this motion.

Having said that, the motion that has been put is the real crux of the problem. Studies have been made about the management of the Post Office, but there sits the Postmaster General (Mr. Blais) saying "No" to providing parliament and the public with the facts of the situation. This whole matter of the secrecy that operates within the Post Office has been one of the stumbling blocks to any kind of attempt to bring order to it. The Postmaster General cannot claim that the Post Office is a Crown corporation and therefore we cannot interfere. Neither can he claim that it is an entity separate to itself. It is not. The Post Office Department is run by the Postmaster General, and he is responsible to parliament for the postal service in this country. The Post Office Act states that the Postmaster General shall administer, superintend and manage the Post Office, so he cannot hide behind the façade of a Crown corporation or secret documents.

We want to know how the postal service is being administered. There are complaints from one end of the country to the other from people who are supposed to receive the benefit of an extensive service. There are also complaints from the people who sort the mail and deliver it, with respect to the way the Post Office is run. The Postmaster General has avoided providing parliament with the facts about the Post Office. That is a travesty of the purpose of parliament. It is an example of what happens when departments are not held accountable to the people. This minister, like the Post Office, tends to be accountable to no one.

The Postmaster General always has the wisecrack; he thinks this is a great big joke. Mr. Speaker, that is symptomatic of what is wrong with the Post Office. Middle management and top management bureaucrats take the example of the Postmaster General. Six months ago he was saying there was going to be a strike in the Post Office. In January of this year we asked him to open negotiations early in order to avoid problems which tend to become compressed, and sometimes we find ourselves crushed by them when trying to meet a deadline for a strike. He said the rules and regulations did not permit that. Yet out in Vancouver he was smiling like a Cheshire cat and telling us to be ready for a strike. This goes to show the minister's ineptitude when it comes to collective bargaining and industrial relations. So much for the Postmaster General and the incompetence with which he has handled the postal service, Mr. Speaker.

From my experience with the Post Office, I believe the problem lies with middle management. I do not think they have the basic concept of how to direct the work force. They seem to treat the work force in a very childish fashion, talking down to them. They have no idea of how to direct the work force in a meaningful way, with creativity, patience and imagination. Many of the problems which occur in the Post Office seem to revolve around the question of interpersonal relationships between those who are supposed to carry out instructions and those who are supposed to give direction.

A previous deputy postmaster general, Mr. Mackay, attempted to do two things, to decentralize the Post Office operations and to introduce technological change. This has been noted from time immemorial. Mr. Justice Freedman talked about the effect of technological change on the work force of the railways and the right of the work force to ensure that it did not suffer adverse effects from it. He held that there should be some method of retraining or reclassifying the work force to make sure that the effects of technological change did not fall heavily on them. One would assume that would be uppermost in the mind of management.

The Post Office work force did not object to technological change. They were concerned about the effects it might have and wanted to cushion them as much as possible. Those are legitimate concerns, Mr. Speaker. Anybody who has a heart, some common sense and ingenuity with respect to management would recognize that the problem has to be dealt with. It was not dealt with, and as a result we had a strike over the question of technological change.

Sad to say, and to the lasting disgrace of the Post Office, they began to engage in a propaganda fight with the postal union, attempting to get a scapegoat and to blame the workers for the problems in the Post Office which resulted in the strike. Everyone pointed the finger at those who were most visible—the people carrying the picket posters. It was the leadership of the union which had to speak out on behalf of the membership. Time and again the minister said that a technological change clause, and all sorts of things, would be included in the collective agreement. Finally, it was done. Now the problem is with the way it is interpreted. The workers are constantly finding great frustration in dealing with the whole question of interpretation. The Post Office management runs around the end of the clause and the 120-day notice provision. The problem of technological change is still a very serious one for the Post Office, and the Postmaster General seems incapable of handling this very delicate and human problem.

The other thing that Mr. Mackay attempted to do was decentralize the authority of the Post Office. This is pretty difficult when there is not sophisticated management and management seems incapable of exerting leadership and accepting responsibility for decentralization. So we had regional offices operating completely independent of the central administration.

Local post offices were completely ignoring regional office instructions and doing only what they thought they should be doing and what they had always done. We also know—and this is not unknown to the workers, either—that often it became an old boy's club. Middle management brought its own kind into the group, and often this created problems because people who had no knowledge of the postal service got into positions of authority.

The hon. member for Brandon-Souris recommends in his motion a parliamentary committee made up of members of this House and members of the other place. I do not know what the other place could possibly have to say about the postal services in this country.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: They have more time to think.

Mr. Rodriguez: Yes, they have a lot of time to think. We know that, but the Canadian Union of Postal Workers raised a very legitimate point. The Union suggested that the postal service is a bone over which politicians fight. CUPW proposed a royal commission to look into the total operation of the Post Office in this country. To me, that is a common sense suggestion. Quite frankly and personally, I do not have much faith in commissions studying things, because the minister is responsible. The minister has the power, and all we need is a minister with a backbone instead of a wishbone. Then we could get things done and some changes could be made in the Post Office. Instead, we just fumble along. Be that as it may, CUPW has suggested a royal commission. It seems to me that an independent group could study the operation of the Post Office apart from political implications which would be involved with an interparliamentary committee.

What does the minister reply to that suggestion? That suggestion was made to him. Not long ago, before he came into this House, he was told that CUPW suggested this. What was his response? He said that he would be quite prepared to set up a royal commission provided CUPW would be prepared to suspend its collective bargaining until after the report of the royal commission. Well, postal workers do not have that kind of time. They do not have a decade. They have to meet the cost of living—and the minister knows that. Surely the minister should know that there cannot be tit-for-tat in this way. My 13-year old child could understand the mechanics of that.

This minister does not want a royal commission, in spite of the fact that he says he would welcome one. If he really wanted a royal commission to look into postal services, he would not suggest that a group of workers suspend the collective bargaining process while we go through this procedure. We have had royal commissions before. In 1966 we had the Montpetit royal commission. In 1969 we had "Blueprint for Change". Just recently we had yet another important report which was called "Canada Post, 1975".

All these reports said the same thing. They complained about the management of the Post Office; they complained about the paternalism of the Post Office and suggested possible solutions. One possible solution suggested in the past was the creation of a Crown corporation to run the Post Office. But the government would not have any part of that. The postmaster general of that time wanted to run the Post Office himself. Perhaps if a Crown corporation had been set up, the postal workers would have come under the Canada Labour Code. Perhaps, then, the government would have had to stop hiding behind a complicated tangle of conflicting legislation which allowed it to stall, to hide from the issues and to attack the unionized workers of the Post Office. It was not the unionized postal workers who created the mess the Post Office is now in. It was the government of Canada and its management of the Post Office.

Perhaps I might be forgiven if I become a little bit political here. It seems to me that the only difference between the way this Liberal government runs the Post Office and the way a Tory government would run it is that hon. colleagues to my right would use all the power of government to strangle any complaints from workers in the Post Office.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): You'd run into the ground.

Mr. Rodriguez: My friend, under our philosophy on the way industrial operations ought to be operating, the postal workers would sit on any board of directors operating the Post Office. It would not be left to a group of persons who may be very good army people but who have no understanding at all of interpersonal relationships. I suspect that much of the middle and top management of the Post Office comes from the armed services. They are "spit and polish" people. That is good for the army, but it is not good for running a service like the postal service where there are such sensitive issues as technological change and the relationship between those who give orders and those who take orders in the work place. That is not an army setting—and that is one of the problems. I do not quarrel often with colleagues to my right because I like to get along with people in this House and I do not like to raise their ire.

Mr. Blais: It must be frustrating.

Mr. Rodriguez: I referred to the difference between the way the Liberals run the Post Office and how the Tories would run it. That difference is one of reaction to workers in the Post Office.

If hon. members think I am kidding, I will quote a motion under Standing Order 43 which was moved by the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek), seconded by the hon. member for Burnaby-Richmond-Delta (Mr. Reynolds). A finer pair sensitive to industrial relations one would never find in Canada or, indeed, on the face of the earth.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Rodriguez: The motion was moved on November 7, 1975, and it reads as follows:

> That this House instruct the government to incorporate into its anti-inflationary legislative program an immediate back-to-work rule for any striking groups or individuals within the essential services of our economy, and at the same time prohibit any further strikes or walkouts in the essential services for the duration of the controls period.

Mr. Jelinek: About 90 per cent of Canadians want that.

Mr. Rodriguez: The hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield), the former leader of the Conservative party, an hon. member for whom I have a great deal of respect, asked the following questions on October 27, 1975:

> Are the government negotiators no longer taking the position that the union has to accept this wage package before negotiating other questions? . . . Has the government advised the union that a return to work order is a prerequisite to continuing negotiations in good faith?

The only difference between the way the Post Office is run now and the way it would be run by the Tories is that under the Tories there would be total suppression of the workers in that particular work force. I have talked about management, and that is an important part of the Post Office. As I said, I congratulate the hon. member for Brandon-Souris for moving this motion, but let us not forget the real philosophy of many hon. members in his party. I think we ought not to forget that. It seems that the solution the hon. member suggested, the setting up of a parliamentary—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but his allotted time has expired. Nevertheless, he may continue if there is unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Rodriguez: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I would like to thank my colleagues on both sides of the House for their generosity.

Mr. Jelinek: Keep it short.

Mr. Rodriguez: I want to assure the House that I will not abuse its generosity.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Get on with it, then.

Mr. Rodriguez: There are solutions to these problems in the Post Office, and in the past they have been suggested by some postmasters general. However, those suggestions have died as postmasters general have moved in and out of office. In the last few years there have been about four or five postmasters general, and it seems to me that perhaps the government thinks a moving target is hard to hit.

● (1550)

In conclusion, let me read a paragraph from a letter sent on November 1, 1969, by Messrs. Kates, Peat, Marwick and Company to the Hon. E. W. Kierans, former minister of communications. Mr. Kierans also acted at one time as postmaster general. The letter said in part:

> Fifteen studies were conducted over the past 12 months by task forces which were assembled by the Post Office and utilized the services of six consulting firms. From these studies emerged the overpowering conclusion that the Post Office, as a Crown corporation, could better fulfil its role in the future.

Later, the letter said that even if the Post Office were made a Crown corporation, imagination, patience and leadership would be necessary. We know this, Mr. Speaker, and the joint committee proposed by Conservative members on my right will not alter the situation. A royal commission ought to be established, as requested by the workers of the Post Office. The minister ought to concur in that suggestion, without demanding any quid pro quo, that is to say, without saying, "If you stop negotiating, we will set up a royal commission." I say to the government, "You are not dealing with children. These are grown-up individuals who have an interest in the way the Post Office is run and depend on the Post Office for their livelihood."

We are not talking about teenagers, 13-year olds or young children. We are talking about people who have as much interest in seeing the Post Office properly run, as the people of Canada have in receiving good Post Office service. I say to the Postmaster General, in closing, "Appoint the royal commission. Let us get on with the job, without all this fiddle-faddling around."

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add a few words to the present debate. It is quite obvious that if the government changes a procedure without the House's permission, it goes beyond its rights. In that case, I do support the motion before us which points out the government's continuing inability to provide Canadians with an efficient postal service, its obsession with secrecy, and its illegal use of orders-in-council to set postal rates.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot merely talk about democracy, we must put it into practice. And each time we proceed by decrees, we are interfering with that very principle. However, it must be said to the defence of the minister that his department must display increased efficiency and, consequently, some measures have to be taken to do so. But it is not a reason to proceed without the assent of the House. It is quite obvious that a service that could have been not only efficient but profit-earning must undergo some modifications. We have no objection to that but we would like to know first what are the measures being considered. That is the very subject of this motion since the minister could answer us that he only wants to improve the postal service through these orders-in-council. But again that does not alter the fact that if things have to be changed in the Post Office to get better service we should ask the House to pass adequate legislation to achieve that goal. It is the proper way to proceed.

As a matter of fact, it is by getting used to small orders which are apparently harmless that in the end we come to pass monstrosities. We must understand that we should be careful to prevent this. Several years ago, the Canadian postal service was a service we had every reason in the world to be proud of but these last few years it has considerably degenerated to the point where I received yesterday an invitation for an important appointment on May 11. What happens? I checked and I have been told that the invitation was sent on May 1. This is not an isolated case; I often had the opportunity to notice undue delays in mail delivery. How did all this happen? All this happened actually and this is one thing which is mentioned in the motion: the chronic ineptness in the field of collective bargaining and industrial relations. The climate among postal workers has been such for several years that this affects their production considerably. And all Canadians had to bear the consequences of this situation.

Yesterday, to give another example, I went myself to take messages delivered by bus service. I noticed on the premises that the parcel delivery section of the bus service is almost as important as the parcel delivery service of the Post Office.

Some people have found out by themselves that they would be better off with private services such as those. Yet, Mr. Speaker, as I said earlier, we already had in this country an adequate postal service of which we could be proud. Some changes should be made and I believe that the government should make an effort to tell what it intends to do, to create, for instance, within the postal service, a climate that is healthy, that is invigorating, that can make the postal service very efficient if not profitable, since people will be more ready to admit the non-profitability of such a service if it is efficient. But when we see the inefficiency of the service, it is difficult to swallow the fact that it is also non-profitable, especially when we can see the services of private companies, which are sometimes no more expensive and which provide quick and reliable service.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, it is essential that the minister, who seems very willing, because I think that he is doing a good job, realize that it would be his duty to heed the comments we are making today so that he may submit a plan which would show a truly sincere way to bring about the necessary changes within his department. He should therefore stop to administer the postal service by orders-in-council and to authorize rate increases under the pretext that it will make the service more efficient.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to conclude my comments by speaking about one last point. I agree that if we are to keep pace with progress we cannot avoid making changes to replace human workers by machines. We all know that there is such a problem in the Post Office, but I would like to say that we shall never solve this problem if we do not study seriously the suggestions that my party has been making for many years. One day we shall have to decide that we must relate progress, the use of machines, automation and the workers. If the machine replaces man, it will have to be to the advantage of man so that he can continue to live with a sufficient income. And we know that the problem in the postal service is partly caused by this principle of automation. And I insist that we shall not find a solution to this problem of the Post Office because it encompasses all others.

This is an over-all, global problem. And I am sure I do not exaggerate when I say that part of the problems the Post Office and all other departments are faced with result from the government's systematic refusal to transform the basic economic system which is inflicted, yes, inflicted upon us, which explains why intelligent people who can reason and judge reasonably well cannot solve this problem, for when a service like the Post Office is equipped with machines which can do in a few minutes what hundreds of people would require days to perform, one ends up with the following dilemma: what to do with all these employees?

If intelligent men are not able yet to find an answer there is certainly something wrong and it is the result of a systematic refusal to consider appropriate answers, particularly when we make every effort to suggest valid suggestions and God knows that the former leader of the Social Credit Party of Canada, Mr. Réal Caouette, tried during more than 30 years to make people understand that basic principle: Let us not reject progress. If we build machines able to replace men, let us replace men by those machines. Let us not be stupid and let us find the means to give an income to workers and this is why we should change completely our wrong conception of work. We should get to the point where we shall distribute to everyone, without exception, a minimum income that will allow our citizens to live a decent and honest living.

This is the answer to all kinds of problems, particularly in the Post Office department where conflicts have been caused by labour problems and collective bargaining. For 35 years we have been saying in this House that this should be changed because the worst could happen. We wait for a catastrophe to react. Mr. Speaker, we are looking for trouble and we should avoid it.

I say to the minister that he should think not only of his problem with postal workers but also that he will solve that problem by considering the global answers we suggest to deal with general problems faced by workers. Any individual is entitled to a decent income and it is even more true if mechanization can give it to him. We do not need to give money to the machine. It does not need a purchasing power. If a machine replaces hundreds of men why should we not distribute that income to them? It is simple, Mr. Speaker. I am convinced that the minister will understand this and that, being a man of good will, someday he will study social credit to apply our solutions in his department in order to deal with all postal problems.

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, first of all I want to thank the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) for his kindness to me. I was hoping that someone this afternoon might recognize the efficiency I have brought into the department over which I am presiding. So I thank him very much. Then not only do I recognize that the Social Credit Party of Canada holds a monopoly on a principle concerning the industrialization of the Post Office, but I also want to say that I approve that principle which I have largely supported since taking over at the Post Office. As the hon. member for Champlain is no doubt aware, there is in the collective agreement currently under negotiation a guarantee that no employee will lose his job nor suffer any income loss because of mechanization. Indeed, we have taken all kinds of measures to make sure that Post Office employees will not bear the brunt of technological changes.

I would also like to recognize during the next round of collective bargaining the increased productivity resulting from such mechanization. This is a management principle, both very modern and very fair, and I totally agree that it should apply here.

I would also agree that there were problems from the outset with mail delivery. More recent problems are due to the transfer from manual to mechanical sorting, especially in the Toronto area. I have no doubt that the examples of slow delivery brought forward by the hon. member for Champlain involved that aberration in the Toronto area. But I would like to ask him to keep a close eye on his mail in the future, and I shall soon send a letter to his secretary asking to be informed of any undue and abnormal delay. Because we try to correct problems that may arise, we have established a quality evaluation system aimed directly at establishing links across the country and ensuring that the mail will be delivered within the predetermined time. If that deadline is not honoured, I would like to be informed so that we can review the situation. The hon. member for Champlain will no doubt agree that with a 60,000 labour force, of which nearly 20,000 are inside workers sorting the mail or supervising sorting machines, errors will be made. But we want to eliminate them.

It must also be remembered that the Post Office has more than 8,700 contracts with trucking firms moving the mail. Clearly, there may be shortcomings in that system. But I would like the hon. member for Champlain to agree that the system now being implemented is efficient, although it needs constant supervision, and that as a user of the mail service the hon. member is just as much part of that supervision as the people within the department.

[English]

Turning, now, from the very constructive remarks by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) to those of another quality and character, of the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), I would first like to cite that although the hon. member for Nickel Belt made a great to-do about not answering questions, I did not see his puss at any time in the committee on transportation.

I understand he had to attend another committee. I am not speaking of that. We held two very full meetings, as the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) indicated, before the transport committee, and the hon. member for Nickel Belt was nowhere to be seen. There is also the comment he made that I did not have the sensitivity to resolve human problems within the Post Office. Mr. Speaker, I think I have a great deal of sensitivity to be able to stand here and listen to some of the burbling that was bandied about by the hon. member for Nickel Belt.

First of all, when asked this afternoon by reporters about a telegram I had just received from the president of CUPW, my reaction was to tell them that I did not think it was a bona fide offer. The hon. member knows that the unions will be sitting with Post Office representatives tomorrow to begin negotiations on a new collective agreement. Hon. members know it is a constant practice of that union to engage in confrontation tactics. They know the union has taken a militant stand. It is a legitimate one, and I do not object to it. But I say the proposal this morning is one of two things: a move to upstage the hon. member for Brandon-Souris—and I do not think that at all—or an attempt to soften up the management of the Post Office in preparation for the negotiations.

Had it been otherwise, they would have indicated their seriousness in suggesting a royal commission by recognizing the consequences, namely, that while there is such a commission in being the Post Office ought to operate in a normal state, or in a state as near as possible to normal, and that by continuing the negotiations, we are now faced, once again, with a very confrontative situation. Any work which the royal commission might do would be frustrated at the outset. I doubt very much that one could get a royal commission operating at a time when negotiations were being conducted.

Again, when I was chastised by the hon. member for Nickel Belt as being insensitive to labour relations, I called to his attention the fact that one of the unions with which we are dealing, namely, the LCUC, has really come across as far as we have gone across to them. We have met, now, in 11 sessions, as I indicated to the committee, and the hon. member for Nickel Belt would have known this had he attended. We have had very successful results from these sessions. What disappoints me is that CUPW are not only taking a confrontative stand vis-à-vis the Post Office, but are now taking a confrontative stand vis-à-vis the letter carriers by describing the integrated sessions as a "love-in". Perhaps I might quote from a special bulletin issued on May 16 by the LCUC to its membership. It reads:

> The Letter Carriers' Union of Canada has no animosity or dislike for our brothers and sisters in the Canadian Union of Postal Workers because, being trade unionists, we certainly should be able to find more in common than in opposition.
> I do not intend to become involved in a paper war with CUPW and have more important issues to resolve for workers than to engage in a fight over false bulletins published by CUPW. I do, however, feel that our members, who are unaware of the facts, deserve to read them from their union.
> The LCUC has been insulted by various CUPW officers for participating in the problem-solving consultation program, which has proven successful in resolving issues for our members. The CUPW referred to these meetings as "love-ins" and other insulting names in an attempt to downgrade our union and the national executive, realizing that names and insults evolve only from ignorance, agreed to allow the CUPW members to attend. We respected their refusal to participate in problem-solving and merely wanted to give them the opportunity to observe the program so that they could converse or criticize from a knowledgeable position. For this, our union has been condemned.

Then the bulletin goes on to state what happened. In fact, the integrated sessions both in Vancouver and in Halifax were picketed by CUPW because CUPW felt that those sessions might be threatening the legitimacy, in this particular context, of its adversarial stance. So when hon. members opposite criticize the Post Office for being insensitive to what is happening within the Post Office in this area, I cite the progress which is being made according to the testimony of one of the most militant groups in the Post Office, namely, the letter carriers.

Mr. Dinsdale: I mentioned that in my speech.

Mr. Blais: I thank the hon. member for doing so. There is now some pressure on CUPW by virtue of the fact that these integrated sessions are proving successful. This is why I looked upon the telegram today as an indication of their intention to suspend negotiations, to see whether there could not be a similar sort of problem-solving arrangement in their province. The hon. member for Brandon-Souris quoted me, flatteringly, as having said that the Post Office was at a very crucial stage. This is not because I am at the helm. It is because of a series of factors.

An hon. Member: The Post Office has other problems besides you.

Mr. Blais: I recognize that, in all due humility. I am a very modest person. When we look at the history of the Post Office, we find that at one time in Canada the Post Office was the only means of communication in the country, the only means of communicating at a distance. Initially, we used the canoe, and then we used the ox-cart before progressing to the pony express. I hear they still use these in Brandon-Souris. Later we proceeded to use the railways and aircraft. But all the time we were progressing in terms of transportation modes we were facing increased competition, competition in the form of improved technology. Some of the problems the Post Office now faces are the result of the success story represented by the Canadian communications industry. We in Canada have one of the most sophisticated telecommunications networks in the world. Yesterday my eldest child was asking me whether it was true that Canada had launched satellites. I said yes, we were third in importance in terms of satellites being launched in the world. Indeed, we have the best satellite communications system in the world. This is one of the direct reasons we have lost a great deal of business in the Post Office, as well as losing some credibility.

The advent of telecommunications has raised the expectations of Canadians in terms of instantaneous communication. No matter how we use transportation systems which work faster and faster, we can never compete with instantaneous communications over wire, over microwave, and over Telesat or satellite. As a result of that, the telephone, telex and other systems have removed a great deal of business from our particular operation.

When we look at the nature of the business that comes through the Post Office today, Mr. Speaker, we see that 80 per cent of the first-class mail is business mail originating from institutions, from government, from business or other organizations. Only 20 per cent is personal mail. Although that represents an increase from 2.5 billion to 3 billion pieces, it puts us in a very vulnerable position since we have noticed that the progress we have made in telecommunications has resulted in very little intracompany, intramural mail being sent any more. Large corporations and medium-sized corporations, and even small-sized corporations are using telecommunications such as telex, the telephone and facsimile. So in effect what is happening, Mr. Speaker, is that the mail we are getting is mailed created by intercompany communications. We are dealing, as well, with a large increase in our volume because of a little plastic card known as a credit card—Chargex, Bank Americard, Master Charge. As a result, we calculate that about two billion pieces of our mail includes cheques and statements. This makes our business today more and more a kind of one crop affair.

We are now progressing toward what we call an electronic payments system. Most of us make our mortgage payments—those of us fortunate enough to have mortgages—through prior authorization with the bank. These amounts are deducted by the banks. This is done automatically without it going through the mails, so there is no need to mail that kind of communication any more, save and except the private transaction. This practice is not decreasing but is increasing. We are using a payments system which is going, if it is implemented, to save a person having to carry money. If a person wants to make a purchase, all he has to do—

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): What has that got to do with increased mail?

Mr. Blais: The hon. member seems incredulous. What it has to do with increased mail, Mr. Speaker, is that we now have volumes of mail which are vulnerable to changes in technology. I have indicated that we have lost mail volume as a result of improvements in technology in Canada. The hon. member may acknowledge that he uses the telephone now, where previously one in his position would have used the mail. How many of his constituents call him, as opposed to sending him a letter through the mails? This is my point. We now have businesses which are not using the post because in a short period of time we are going to have an electronic payments system which will remove that kind of business from the Post Office. Therefore, this increases our vulnerability. At no time are we more vulnerable, Mr. Speaker, than when we have work stoppages, as the hon. gentleman very well knows.

Last month I received a flyer from an association of hospital pensioners. The government of Ontario was requesting them to authorize the provincial government to pay their cheques directly into their bank accounts in the event of a work interruption. This is where our difficulty lies. When there are work interruptions, we lose business. We are so sophisticated in terms of the use of electronics in order to communicate that lost business never comes back. Once it leaves us, it is very difficult for us to get it back.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Then you must have more business.

Mr. Blais: Yes, but I point out to the hon. gentleman that although five billion pieces of mail a year have passed through the Post Office over the last four years, there has been no dramatic increase in the volume of mail. We are trying to encourage a peaceful situation within the Post Office. We want to integrate the marketplace to a greater extent.

We consider there are two aspects to the Post Office. One is the aspect of public service. That is an aspect the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) really believes in since she represents a number of communities which would not get any service unless it was subsidized. She represents, basically, a number of small communities in her riding which would not benefit from any mail service if it were, let us say, in private hands, because, not being profitable, the service would not be available. So in effect she is sure to approve continuation of that particular subsidization. We also service a number of towns in my riding, small communities which do not generate revenue sufficient even to pay the salary of the postmistress or postmaster, much less pay for the rent, cost of glue on the stamps, and so on. The hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) knows that most of the communities within his area are non-revenue producing in terms of net cost and net profit.

The second aspect of the Post Office is in terms of our being a commercial institution. The Post Office is central to the marketplace. We have always been central to the marketplace. We are trying to a larger extent to integrate the marketplace and provide a better, more reliable and more efficient service. That is one reason we mechanized our operation. We wanted to get an increase in volume from the marketplace. We wanted to be in the position to offer better service and a wider variety of products. Unfortunately, there, again, we face very serious competition from the private sector, not in traditional services but in new services which have been created as a result of higher expectations and greater demands on the marketplace.

People tell me that we are losing business to courier post services. I agree that we have lost a great deal of business to the private carriers. The couriers are now conducting an operation in which the Post Office has never engaged, namely, pick-up and delivery with limited volume handling in between. That has never been something which the Post Office has engaged in, but we are now seriously looking at that particular market. As I said last November, this is one area the Post Office should get into.

Next, we are facing competition in the handling of parcel post, our parcel or fourth-class mail operation. In 1973-74 we dealt with about 76 million pieces. In 1974-75 we dealt with 73 million pieces. In 1975-76 we dealt with 62 million pieces. So our volumes are going down, and they are going down because of the competition we are facing from the private sector. This is why I was a little uptight at the comment made by the hon. member from Winnipeg who objected to our using postpak in order to meet competition in parcel post. Postpak is a profit-making product which we are offering to the marketplace and which we are able to handle.

Whether we like it or not, we are dealing with an operation which is massive in scope. We have 8,600 postal installations in Canada, we have 60,000 employees, and we are dealing with about 12,000 letter carrier walks. You cannot get rid of that tomorrow; you cannot say, "Zap, you are gone".

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You cannot, but you do.

Mr. Blais: You cannot say that. You have got to be "with it" whether your volume increases to eight billion or whether it decreases to three billion. There is no way we can function without the Post Office. There is no way the Post Office can be done away with in Parry Sound, Sturgeon Falls, Owen Sound or Brampton. Whether we like it or not, there will always be a Post Office. The question is: How much is the taxpayer ready to pay to subsidize the Post Office? Our deficit has gone up to $671 million from $70 million of four or five years ago. We cannot afford that sort of money to maintain a postal system.

Miss MacDonald: Hear, hear!

Mr. Blais: We have to make more money with the post office. We are not going to make more money with the post office in Parry Sound. We are going to make more money with the post offices in Toronto, Ottawa, Vancouver and Halifax by going into the Canadian marketplace and offering better service and new products.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss MacDonald: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blais: I notice some chuckling on the part of the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands. That lack of seriousness is one of the problems we are having in the Post Office. She is laughing because she does not know what I am talking about. Not only does she not know what I am talking about, but she does not care.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, I will have to ask the Postmaster General (Mr. Blais) to withdraw if he continues to use language like that.

Mr. Blais: She does not care, Mr. Speaker. The taxpayers' money is of no consequence to her, as long as she can sit here chuckling and reading whatever is in front of her.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blais: The Post Office is at a crucial time because we have to meet competition. If we are going to compete, we have to compete with the co-operation of the work force in the Post Office. Since my appointment I have done everything in my power to get that type of co-operation. We have managed with the Letter Carriers Union of Canada. I point that out to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) and the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow).

One of the unions found it profitable for its membership to deal with us in consultation because they had been persuaded we were of good faith and interested in the survival of the institution. It is an institution which is greater than the Postmaster General and its employees. It is traditional to us and will always be around. We cannot encourage the Canadian Union of Postal Workers to do the same thing as the LCUC is doing. CUPW has adopted a combative stance and an intransigent stance which is non-productive and counterproductive to the advancement of the Post Office. With that sort of attitude, we will never be able to integrate the marketplace sufficiently, we will never be able to introduce new products, and we will never be able to meet the demand which is presently in the marketplace. I am saying that with all due seriousness, because it is do or die.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Why don't you?

Mr. Dinsdale: Do one or the other. We have given you your solution.

Mr. Blais: Well, the solution is very simple.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Do or die.

Mr. Blais: If we have another strike, let us not think about going into the marketplace and attempting to get them to believe in some credibility in the Post Office. They are not going to buy it. A number of them have already gone. As I have indicated to hon. members, we have lost a lot of business in the recent past because of competition outside. There are various sorts of measures which are presently available and are technologically feasible that can accomplish a lot of the present functions of the Post Office. Those things need directives and political will to put them in place. They will be put in place in the event no other service is available.

The effect of a long strike, such as the 42-day strike we had in 1975, will have that consequence. It will put that technology in place and further destroy the Post Office as a viable institution. I would ask hon. gentlemen to put their minds to that problem and try to persuade many of the people in the Post Office and management whom they may know that there has to be flexibility and an acceptable attitude on the part of all. I am not talking about money here, because hon. members know there are severe restrictions under the Anti-Inflation Board. I am talking about matters which are fundamental to the operation of the Post Office and which are presently under negotiation. There has to be seriousness by all parties. I have said it before, and I will repeat it now.

[Translation]

For the benefit of the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) I would say it is true, Mr. Speaker, that the Post Office is in a bad situation. We do have completely unacceptable deficits. In the Post Office, we try to integrate the market in a more serious and competitive way. We offer services that we can provide. We can offer new services. To do so, we need the cooperation of all people doing business with the Post Office and of its users who must be patient about delays due to the mechanization program.

We also need the cooperation of postal employees. Thank goodness, we already have the cooperation of three unions.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we must get the close cooperation of hon. members who must understand the present situation of the Post Office and explain to their constituents, through whatever means they may have, the reasons for the temporary delays which sometimes occur.

[English]

When you are dealing with five billion pieces of mail in a year, there is no doubt that some pieces will be lost or destroyed. The percentage of lost or destroyed pieces of mail is minimal. In total it does not even represent a percentage point of 1 per cent. When the hon. member for Brandon-Souris mentioned mail being destroyed, he agreed, by his silence in this House, which is a nice way to admit things—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Try it.

Mr. Blais: He agreed he had not seen any mail being chewed up.

Mr. Dinsdale: I did not say that.

Mr. Blais: I have visited a lot of the smaller post offices in Canada, and I have never seen a piece of mail being destroyed. I even visited the post office in Parry Sound which had never before been visited by a Postmaster General. I never saw a machine destroying a piece of mail.

Mr. Darling: That is because Parry Sound does not have one of those monstrosities.

Mr. Blais: I thank hon. ladies and hon. gentlemen for their attention.

Miss MacDonald: You should just say "hon. members".

Mr. Beatty: Will the minister permit a question?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. Because the time of the hon. minister has expired, it is necessary to have the unanimous consent of the House for a question to be asked. Does the House allow the hon. member for Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo (Mr. Beatty) to ask a question of the minister?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I thank my hon. colleagues for their consent. I always enjoy listening to my hon. friend, the Postmaster General (Mr. Blais). There is one element of his speech which raised a question in my mind, and perhaps he could elaborate on it. I refer to the question of competition being provided by courier services.

The minister seemed to intimate that the reason they had been successful in taking business away from the Post Office was that they provide a service of direct low-volume delivery. Has the Post Office Department undertaken any market surveys to determine why people are using the courier services increasingly, with the extraordinarily high prices they charge compared to the cost of first-class mail? Has the Postmaster General not been aware, as most hon. members have, that the reason more people are turning to courier services is, first of all, that if they give their mail to the Post Office they have no guarantee that it will be delivered and, second, the increasing delays in the Post Office mean that one does not trust it to deliver urgent mail in time?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that some people have done that. It has been admitted by the private couriers that they are providing a type of service which has never been provided by the Post Office. Some of the changeover from the postal service to private couriers has taken place because of strikes. I suggest there has been a tendency in the business community to expect that priority items would be delivered within a timeframe that the Post Office could not guarantee even at the best of times. If there were a deadline to be met, then they would use the private courier. That is why our surveys indicate there is a market demand for them, and we are looking seriously at ways of meeting that demand and entering into competition.

By the way, Mr. Speaker, I do not approve of the motion that was suggested.

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I want the Postmaster General (Mr. Blais) to understand that the debate which was provoked today, on an opposition day, with this motion is a constructive approach to the problems facing his department and Canada. There is no attempt whatsoever, in any of the actions that I know of with respect to the Post Office, to ridicule or belittle it. It is an attempt to get a service for the Canadian people which they deserve and for which they pay. Unfortunately, a week rarely goes by that I do not have to send letters to the Postmaster General which have reached me from my constituents complaining of the delays they have experienced. I have had delays in my own correspondence, as well. I have here a postcard inviting me to a meeting on May 11 which, by coincidence, arrived the same day. That is unfortunate, but I am sure there must be some way—

Mr. Blais: Did it have a first-class stamp?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It is a postcard with a 12-cent stamp. Another one reached me last night, and I am tempted to send it across to the Postmaster General. It is a package—

An hon. Member: Is it ticking?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): No. As a matter of fact, it ought to be buzzing, but it is not. It is a shipment of queen bees which was delayed in the mail. The bees were dead on arrival. The letter is dated May 11 and is addressed to the Postmaster General from Mr. Wadsworth of Victoria. He had ordered 35 queen bees from Texas, and they were four days in the mail.

Mr. Blais: That is the American system.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, we always walk into that one; there is always somebody else to blame. Why do we not accept responsibility for some of the failures of our own services? In this general connection, I was delighted with the appointment of the Lambert commission to examine accountability in the public service. It may be able to put its finger on the problems and the necessity of accountability. This brings me to the point made by the new chairman of the Public Service Commission when speaking to the International Personnel Management Association in Ottawa on November 17, 1976. It is distressing to me, as a former public servant, to have to agree in large measure with Mr. Gallant when he said:

> Let me turn now to another general area of concern: the pervasive malaise which seems to affect Canada's public service today. We are all sensing that some public servants are losing their sense of purpose, that some have difficulty in strengthening or maintaining their sense of loyalty, that some find it increasingly difficult to understand the ideals, goals and objectives they are expected to uphold and pursue.

I am not directing those remarks to any part of the public service, but it is true, unfortunately, that this malaise does pervade our public service. Somehow or other we have lost the contact between those who serve and those who are being served. Later in his address, Mr. Gallant said:

> The process of personnel management is shared by a number of authorities: The Treasury Board secretariat, the Public Service Commission, the Privy Council office, deputy heads of departments and their managers, and the various public service unions and staff associations. Each of these partners is charged with specific responsibilities and has commensurate powers to carry out such responsibilities. As long as all partners are operating within the same policy context, the process has a chance to work reasonably well. Vibrations throughout the public service today give rise to questions as to whether we still have in the daily decisions of these many partners, the degree of harmony which is necessary for the system to work satisfactorily.

This is a general comment about the public service as a whole. I know that those who are in it, feel it. We dealt with this over a year ago in the special Joint Committee on Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service, and I shall come back to that matter. I want to focus more closely on the Post Office for a moment, and I think it is worth recording a few statistics for that purpose.

I think I am correct in saying the largest single union in the public service is CUPW, with 23,000 of the 320,000 public servants as members. There are 16,500 members in the Letter Carriers Union, 8,200 members in the Canadian Postal Association, and 3,600 in the Association of Postal Officials of Canada. So we are dealing with over 50,000 employees, or about one-sixth of the public service. It is a very important segment, and one that performs a service which the Canadian public expects to receive and is paying for. I think it is important, in this context, to recognize the strike danger which is hanging over the heads of the Canadian people like the sword of Damocles. A public stance has been taken by those entering negotiations to the effect that a strike is possible, so that sword will fall unless we dissipate the distrust and misunderstanding that bedevils relations between employer and employee in the Post Office, as elsewhere.

In these circumstances, it is not only important, but essential, I consider, that we press more and more strongly for the introduction of legislation flowing from the recommendations of the Special Joint Committee on Employer-Employee Relations in the Public Service, usually called the Finkelman report. The report was submitted to the House on February 26, 1976. We are now in the month of May, 1977, and there have been no results arising from the report.

It is not necessary to remind the Postmaster General of the care with which we all dealt with the submissions made to that committee, because before becoming Postmaster General he was a member of that committee and a faithful attender at its meetings. Those of us who were there will testify that he was there in earnest and he shared in the formulation of the recommendations. There are some matters, however, which need to be mentioned just to underline their importance in the public service context. I think it would be worth-while now, 15 or 16 months after that report was tabled in the House, to select some of the recommendations of that committee and cite them to show how directly they are related to the unease in the Post Office.

We will not all agree with these recommendations. We do not all agree that they have to be implemented in their entirety, nor will all the recommendations agree with the very thoughtful presentation made to the committee by the Canadian Union of Postal Workers. However, that is not the point. The point is that from those recommendations a number of legislative measures ought to flow, and with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I propose to cite some of these recommendations so that we can be reminded just how important they are in the present context. The very first one is reminiscent of the motion we have before us. It reads as follows:

> That a special task force be established to review the Public Service Employment Act and the role of the commission in personnel management and employer-employee relations in the public service—

The recommendation in the motion of the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) is that a special joint committee be set up. That is a slight variation of the recommendation I just cited. I do not wish to cite all the recommendations. There are 72 in all and they are all worth reading. However, I am going to select a few in order to indicate how they bear on the situation with respect to the Post Office. Recommendation No. 8 reads as follows:

> That there is a need for additional procedural and substantive amendments to the law governing the collective bargaining relationship, and more appropriate remedies for unlawful activity.

We have heard about unlawful activity. These are matters which ought to be considered very carefully by this House. Recommendation No. 15 reads:

> That the Public Service Staff Relations Act be amended to require the designation of all employees whose functions involve the provision of services which in accordance with this act are to be provided without interruption.

There is not general agreement on that recommendation, and I am not suggesting there is, but some legislative provisions containing the substance of it ought to be before us so we can examine them and see whether we can accept them in the form in which they are presented. Why do we have to wait so long for that legislation? Recommendation No. 16 reads:

> That the bargaining agents and the employers continue to be required to determine, by agreement, the employees in the bargaining units who are to be designated.

This matter of designation was a very important point in the submission which was put forward by CUPW when it presented its brief to us a year and a half or two years ago. Recommendation No. 34 reads this way:

That, having regard to the established jurisdiction of bargaining agents in the public service, bargaining classification standards be interpreted to mean the determination of the relative worth of jobs within an occupational group.

That is a complicated recommendation. We studied the matter very carefully, and that recommendation was the result. Recommendation No. 35 reads:

That provision be made in the law for the bargaining of classification standards following the three-year period after promulgation.

Again, there will not be general agreement with the actual terms of that, but it has to be discussed here and in committee. Why do we have to continue to wait? Recommendation No. 39 reads:

That resort to strike or lock-out to resolve classification disputes be prohibited.

Again there is going to be argument. That is what this House is for. Recommendation No. 41 reads:

That classification grievances which are not resolved in the grievance process should be referrable to adjudication.

All these matters were raised in the CUPW submission. Recommendation No. 42 deals with a matter which is at the core of the present problem. It reads as follows:

That changes in technology, operations, organization or any other dimension of the structure or character of the employer's resources to provide service to the public be recognized as a prerogative of the employer.

That is going to cause argument. Fair enough. Then recommendation No. 43:

That the employer be obliged to bargain the impact of adverse changes on employees which may occur as a consequence of the employer's actions referred to in recommendation 42 above, including the advance notice of such changes and the details to accompany the notice.

These are the matters which are causing our postal workers concern. Decisions are made and implemented, and the worker is faced with them without any consultation whatever. This recommendation underlines the need for consultation before implementation. I would like to cite one more recommendation, No. 65, as follows:

That where a bargaining agent conducts a strike vote, or submits a proposal for a collective agreement to its membership for approval,

(a) The vote should be carried out by secret ballot in accordance with procedures prescribed by regulations of the Public Service Staff Relations Board; and

(b) A breach of the regulations of the board in this respect should constitute a contravention of the Act, and the union or persons concerned should be subject to the appropriate penalties—

Those are important recommendations, and I am at a loss to understand why we should be delayed so long in seeing the legislation we expected to flow from them. There are other recommendations concerning pay research and casuals. I do not need to cite any more because I think the ones I have cited make it amply clear how important these recommendations are and how essential, in the present context, a bill containing these recommendations in legal form would be.

[Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich).]

I think we all recognize that there is a growing desire in Canada to remove the ability to strike from the public service or from parts of the public service designated as essential. This desire is growing because of the number of strikes there have been in the public service. The Postmaster General said that during a strike the Post Office loses some of the business it had previously and never gets it back. The only way to combat this is to make proper provision, under the law, for grievances.

We went through this exercise in committee, and a crippling strike or two could build pressure for the removal of that ability which those contemplating a strike ought to bear in mind. I have heard rumblings suggesting that a strike may not be far off. A strike is a distinct possibility, if news reports are to be believed. I hope they are not to be believed. Therefore, action is demanded. What action should be taken? First, we should establish a joint committee as proposed in the motion of the hon. member for Brandon-Souris. The hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) referred to certain studies, but is of the opinion that further studies are not important. Certain studies were undertaken in the past, but the findings were neither revealed nor released. I say such studies ought to be available to the special committee.

Second, we need to introduce the sort of legislation which ought to have flowed from the Finkelman report. Such legislation could assist in the resolution of the problems of the Post Office and would apply throughout the public service. I ask, when will the government take either one, or both, actions to which I have just alluded?

Mr. Walter Smith (Parliamentary Secretary to Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) for moving the motion before the House and so enabling me, as Parliamentary Secretary to the Postmaster General, to say a few words. He suggested that postal service in Toronto is slow. I do not accept that. The Toronto postal operation, the largest in the country, has just completed the changeover to mechanization. As was expected, there have been a number of problems encountered during this phasing-in process. Some of the problems have been due to the higher volumes of mail than were anticipated, as well as the inevitable disruptions when terminal A in Toronto, the manual sorting plant, was closed and the entire Toronto letter-sorting operation was transferred to three mechanized plants. As well, there were the human problems associated with the training and relocation of several thousand employees.

Because approximately 45 per cent of the mail, or five million letters a day, of both domestic and foreign origin passes through Toronto, there have been delays in not only local mail but also in mail being forwarded through Toronto to other distinations. However, more recent figures for May show that service has improved—66 per cent of mail being delivered the next day and 3 per cent being delivered one day late. The national service has improved correspondingly. I hope the improvement continues. Canada Post is confident that postal service will continue to improve as Toronto overcomes its initial problems. The ultimate success in rebuilding a first-rate postal system will depend on the degree to which this massive mechanized system can be utilized. This, in turn, depends directly on the widespread use of the postal code which Canada Post urges all postal users to promote.

You may recall, Mr. Speaker, that the Postmaster General (Mr. Blais) recently made statements to the effect that the Post Office cannot survive unless its situation improves drastically. The time has come for everyone, in the public and private sectors alike, to work together to improve our postal system. Let us stop blaming one another for the difficult and tense situation that exists at the Post Office and do everything in our power to restore its image. Canada as a whole will be the better for it.

During the next few minutes I will attempt to give the House an outline of two ideas that have been suggested to improve Canadian postal service. Certain people maintain that postal service would improve if the Canada Post Office were to become a Crown corporation. The postal administrations of Germany, Great Britain and the United States have become independent organizations, yet their problems seem to be getting worse and worse. Some critics have what they consider to be the definitive answer to what they see as government bungling in the Post Office: hand the whole thing over to private enterprise. These people will be pleased to know that this, exactly, is going on. The only difference is that the assimilation is a gradual one as private courier services proliferate.

Are those companies really more efficient? Some are; some are not. Their prices and operating costs are much higher than those of the Post Office. They deliver only within or between large cities, where costs are low and profits enormous, and they generously concede the Post Office the right to pick up and deliver parcels in the isolated regions of Newfoundland, in small towns, in crossroads stores and in Arctic settlements. The private courier, of course, measures efficiency by the dollar. He expands only when profitable. He spends only to make more. His only aim—a perfectly laudable one—is to make a buck. But the Post Office has another mandate: to serve, to bind, to unite, to provide a communications web that links Canadians wherever they live. This means that every farmer and every villager can pay his 12 cents and plug into a nationwide communications network—820 domestic air flights, 7,639 contract truck routes, 90 freight and passenger trains, and 12,520 letter carrier routes; and, for a few cents more, you have a choice of 110 international flights to almost every country in the world.

On the day that private enterprise wants to take over this job, on the day it guarantees to deliver mail of all types and sizes to every place in Canada as quickly and as cheaply as the Post Office does, then will be the time to agree with its critics: let them do it. In the meantime, the private couriers are skimming the profitable cream and leaving the Post Office and the public the rest. The Post Office deficit for the last fiscal year soared to $546 million, or $225 million more than for the previous year. Yet a great number of people nostalgically recall the "good old days" when all you had to do was affix a four-cent stamp on a letter and the letter carrier delivered twice-a-day letters which had often been mailed the previous night. As Oscar Wilde once said, the charm of the past is that it is past. The letter carrier no longer appears at your doorstep twice a day, for the same reason that the baker no longer delivers once a day. Gone forever is the era of the four-cent stamp, of the five-cent cup of coffee and of dialling "Ma Bell" to get the correct time. Trains no longer stop in every small town to pick up passengers, just as the sorting of mail is no longer done aboard trains. The Post Office has changed, because nothing is as it was.

In a manner of speaking, the Post Office was a victim of its own success. Cities grew and prospered. Businesses of all kinds expanded, the flow of mail increased, transportation was revolutionized, the public service recognized the rights of unions, and postal service began to lag behind. The Post Office had to move quickly to ensure that the Canadian postal service continued to meet the needs of the population. In addition to other pressing matters, the situation is further complicated by a lack which has preoccupied Post Office communicators a great deal. Somewhere along the way the lines of communication between management and employees seem to have broken down. How can we remedy this situation? One thing that was done a short time ago was to have a National Film Board crew, headed by a sociologist from the University of Alberta, interview rank and file employees at mechanized installations in Vancouver, Saint John, New Brunswick, and Winnipeg. The interviews were extremely revealing and extremely valuable as a management tool. It was found that the average employee's chief complaint is that he feels like the invisible man, working in an environment where his views are neither solicited nor considered by management, that mechanization is being introduced without regard to its effect on his future in the Post Office.

Mr. Dinsdale: Did you write that?

Mr. Smith (Saint-Jean): Regardless of who wrote the speech, it is a good one.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Smith (Saint-Jean): Obviously, it is imperative that some way be found to get their views on the post office. The mechanization program is important to the increased efficiency that the Post Office must achieve if it is to survive. But it will not work without people. Many of those who work for the Post Office believe it has entered a crisis stage in its long and proud history of service to the people of Canada, a crisis which could be termed one of productivity. This crisis is not exclusive to Canada. It is a serious and almost insoluble problem faced by all postal administrations of the industrialized nations of the free world. Chief among the approaches to its problems, the Post Office is looking to automation for a solution; it is replacing men with machines. The young worker now enters the scene, he is better educated, anxious to prove himself and to make a contribution to the organization. He finds it boring to do repetitive tasks. His work is dull and unrewarding. He feels that he is contributing nothing. But what is the solution? Is there, in fact, a solution to this problem? Can the Post Office survive under its present form? Automation can work if workers want it to, and I do not think that professional ethics are dead.

More and more, the Post Office is attempting to ensure the development of its employees as well as that of the postal system. Nowadays, the aspirations of employees seeking development and satisfaction in the job is taken into consideration. Attempts are being made to stimulate their enthusiasm. But this was not always the case. Unfortunately, for a long time Post Office workers were treated as if they were consumer goods and not members of a team. Management let the search for efficiency take over, and employees could not help but think the employer was more interested in the system than in them. But in spite of all that, thousands of workers remain proud of the job they have.

All that the Post Office management has learned in the past few years points clearly to the need for a change in attitude of both union and management. The two sides must find a way to back off from the adversary stance that each has adopted in the past. Only in this way will mutual co-operation, improved employee morale and increase productivity and efficiency be achieved. It is apparent that a mixed participation in the decision-making process could solve most of the labour problems. The challenge is not an easy one.

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to the parliamentary secretary as he read what he said was a good speech. It was the brief of the officials who gave it to him to deliver. There were some interesting parts. He quoted Oscar Wilde. I would like to change that quote saying that the past charm was the post. He talked about the invisible man. I think of the invisible man carrying the invisible mail. The hon. member will agree that there are almost insoluble problems, as there are with any bankrupt organization. This is a bankrupt organization—stumbling, lurching and creaking. Because of its intellectual and physical bankruptcy, there are problems, as there always will be with any bankrupt organization, between labour and management. There is no question about that. This goes to the root of the difficulty. I am sorry the Postmaster General (Mr. Blais) is not here. I understand he has gone out to feed the ponies.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: At the speed at which they are moving, they need to be fed. I want to try and get at the root of the problem. What we see here is a typical case history of what is wrong with this country and this government: rot, decay and corruption—corruption of the dead rather than venal corruption.

Mr. Smith (Saint-Jean): You don't mean that.

Mr. Baldwin: This is so of all levels, from the top to the bottom. As the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) was in Europe preening himself before the television cameras which were compelled to go over there to watch him, I wonder if he thought about the Post Office and how it was degenerating, going underground more and more. He does not worry. The Prime Minister is one of the principal architects of the disunity of this country, the man who created the legion of the condemned of one million unemployed, the man who was going to wrestle inflation to the ground.

[Mr. Smith (Saint-Jean).]

These issues are summed up in what is the difficulty with the Post Office, a once proud institution, dependable, reliable, resourceful, with a good relationship between management and employees and between the institution and the public. That has vanished. Will it come back? I do not know. However, this is prevalent to a greater or lesser degree in every institution of the government of Canada today. There have been many causes. Obviously, staring us in the face is incompetence and maladministration. With due respect to the minister—and I give him the benefit of this doubt—there have been far too many ministers over the past 15 or 18 years that I can recall. When there is a man to be placed somewhere, they either make him minister without portfolio or postmaster general. The hon. member for Crowfoot, now the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Horner), lost in that one. He is the Minister without Portfolio. Whether the Post Office is the beneficiary of that situation, I do not know.

The ministers are there so briefly they become agents and spokesmen for their senior officials. That is what happens. It happens with too many ministers, for a number of reasons. Parliament is being abandoned as a result of the attitude taken by the Prime Minister. It trickles down by a form of intellectual cosmosis, if the word "intellectual" can be applied to this government. It simply disregards this institution.

One of the reasons for the problems which confront us today is the government's arrogance and attempts to bypass this parliament as often as possible. That is part of the motion which the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale) put before this House today and which the minister and the parliamentary secretary have been unwilling to answer. I want to deal with that, if I have time, because it is a very simple indication of what causes the problems to the Post Office and to so many other departments of government.

Just a few days ago, the Standing Joint Committee on Statutory and Other Instruments brought in a unanimous report which condemned the Post Office and, by inference, charged the Post Office with engaging in illegal action by increasing the rate for first-class mail without obtaining approval from parliament. The case was documented faithfully and well. I sat on that committee. It was not a partisan issue at all, as I am not being partisan now. What I say will, I hope, be listened to by hon. members opposite.

The facts which were admitted and the facts which were proved by the committee as the basis for its report are an indication of what troubles us today. We pointed out in that report, which was tabled and is now available for discussion, that on May 21, 1976, the then postmaster general, Mr. Mackasey, stated he was not going to proceed by way of legislation but by order in council under section 13B of the Financial Administration Act. Mr. Speaker, from time immemorial postage rates have been an issue affecting the average person in this country, just as tax rates do. Yet the government has seen fit to take this surreptitious means of avoiding the kind of discussion which should go on in this chamber by raising the rates without coming to parliament and by attempting to rely on the Financial Administration Act.

I have read that act. I was involved in the debate on the amendment when section 13 was brought in in its present form. There was only a passing reference from the President of the Treasury Board to this issue. It was never intended or expected that the Postmaster General, for instance, at the instigation of his officials, would be able to bypass parliament and change first-class mail rates in this way.

Section 6 of the Post Office Act makes the matter plain. It says that the Postmaster General can make regulations for the official operation of the Post Office and that he can fix rates of postage on mail for delivery outside Canada. By that legislation, as it was amended, the Post Office Act fixes the rate for first-class mail. I submit there is very grave doubt as to whether what the government has done is legal. It is certainly improper. It had the result of prohibiting the type of discussion which should take place in this chamber where the people are represented. Surely, an issue which affects so many million Canadians should be discussed here. We might have agreed with the Postmaster General that he had a good case for raising the rates. But I deplore the attempt by bureaucrats to push this institution to one side and carry out these acts by orders in council in the depth of secrecy.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Wars were fought over taxation without representation.

Mr. Baldwin: Yes, and kings lost their crowns; and the Prime Minister will shortly lose his position as a result of things of this kind.

An hon. Member: Not for two cents.

Mr. Baldwin: Two cents is the difference between 6 cents and 8 cents, an increase which was quite illegally brought about by order in council. That is an illustration of what is wrong. This is excessive secrecy. It is discussion, debate, even heated argument which develops sound programs of a kind which make the country work. Here we have a situation where the Posmaster General increases rates without the kind of debate we should have had here. It is no wonder the Post Office is in trouble, and no wonder the government is in trouble.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Baldwin: We talk about secrecy. Secrecy is mentioned in the motion. There were two reports, the Hays report and the Mulligan report. My hon. friend from Brandon-Souris requested the production of these documents. This was refused on the ground that they were internal working papers. Mr. Speaker, if they were working papers containing advice and opinions, there might be good reason for not producing them. But if they were documents, as I understand they were, containing a large quantity of factual and statistical material together with recommendations with regard to certain changes, it is not only the duty of the government to make them available to the House for discussion, but it is the government's responsibility to do so, as it is our responsibility to demand them. It is only through argument, discussion and proposals for change that we make this country work. A government working in secrecy, denying itself the opportunity of hearing the views of the representatives of the people will inevitably get into difficulty.

I am told by my hon. friend from Brandon-Souris that he was invited to go over with other members to see those documents privately. I am glad he refused such a proposal. It is unthinkable that an hon. member representing, as he does, the official opposition and charged with a particular responsibility in connection with the Post Office, should be invited to examine these documents in private and later find himself unable to speak about them. My hon. friend showed good character and strong judgment in not accepting this offer.

I have here a copy of a letter which appeared in the Globe and Mail of March 31, 1976, over the signature of Frank E. Thomas of Willowdale, Ontario. It reads:

> In spite of all that's been said about the federal government for secrecy, it's not abating. On the contrary, it seems to have afflicted a department one would not have suspected of such practices.
> On March 25 I asked a clerk in the Fairview Mall, Willowdale, post office, for a copy of the current postal rates. The answer was: "We haven't received them yet." When I inquired if another rate change had just occurred, I learned that the one effective last January 1 was still in effect.

● (1730)

> On March 26 I made the same request in station B (Bayview Village shopping centre) and was advised that copies of postal rates were not available. When I asked where I might get a copy, I was told, "You'll have to go to Ottawa for it."
> I cannot afford to go to Ottawa. And even if I could, I doubt that the Post Office there would let me have a copy since it seems determined to withhold them from the general public.
> Perhaps the Globe and Mail's Ottawa bureau, which seems to have been able to obtain other confidential government publications, could excel itself and get a copy of this evidently ultra-secret document, for publication in an early issue.

For an ordinary citizen of this country to go to the post office and to ask for a copy of the current postal rates, and then to be contemptuously told to go to Ottawa to obtain this material, is a terrible situation. So long as that kind of situation prevails, Mr. Speaker, the Post Office is going to be in trouble and the country is going to be in trouble.

I suggest that instead of the minister coming here and indicting civilization, which seems to be the basis of his defence of the Post Office—he accuses progress in the world of taking away from his organization the business to which it is entitled, which is a scathing indictment of technological improvement and scientific change in this country—he should be more honest, open and candid with this House. Let him lay first before the committee, and ultimately before this House, the problems which confront him. Let this House into the arena, so it can help. It can only do this if it is made aware of the facts. If this happens, Mr. Speaker, hopefully we can look forward to some improvement in the situation. But it will not happen until this government tears away the veil of secrecy and learns through this parliament that the people of Canada are at least entitled to be junior partners in the business of government.

Mr. Ross Milne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I want to enter the debate not so much to either oppose or support the motion which has been put forward by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale), but more particularly because of the importance of the mail service in the Toronto area, the volume that goes through there and the difficulty which has been experienced with the Gateway facility. I happen, along with the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs (Mr. Abbott), to represent ridings which surround the Gateway facility and we have been involved in this issue for quite some considerable time. I thought I would like to put a few comments on the record relating to the history of this facility and to where I think the mail service in the Toronto area may well be headed.

First of all, Mr. Speaker, I want to defend the decision taken by the government and by the Post Office some time ago to move to three large automated facilities in the Toronto area. It has not been easy to live with the consequences of that decision while the facilities are being introduced, people are being moved and the new machinery is being started up. Probably it would have been much easier for people who are dependent on the mails, and for members of parliament to service constituency problems, if it had not occurred at this point in time. On the other hand, I think it is important that the Post Office do keep abreast of modern technology and make this decision. One has only to look at some of the deplorable postal situations in some European countries which did not keep abreast of technology and allowed the old system to prevail to the point where, as I recall from reading some articles, they simply destroyed large amounts of mail to dispose of it.

In the Toronto area, very close to 50 per cent of all mail in Canada is handled daily in these three facilities. Of those three facilities, I would judge a large percentage, 45 per cent, goes through the Gateway facility at the west end of Toronto. While the point has been made by a number of speakers today that the mail in total is not increasing at an alarming rate, certainly the amount of mail in the Toronto area is increasing, and the Postmaster General (Mr. Blais) said that this is because of the growth in the business community in that area. The high percentage of mail originating from and directed to businesses means that in the Toronto area, certainly in my opinion, the Post Office Department was correct to move to a highly automated facility.

My major criticism would be that this decision should have been taken earlier. There should have been more time to implement this change. Perhaps one of the real difficulties with which the postal people in the Toronto area have been working has been to try to institute the amount of change which is required within such a short period of time. I think that in fairness hon. members should appreciate just what has had to happen in the Toronto area in this regard. Post offices in the Toronto area have been transferred to these three facilities at the same time as the mail has had to be kept moving. If this were a private organization manufacturing a product, I suggest that the company would have built up its inventory to a very large level and then used the inventory to service its customers while shutting down its one plant and starting up its new facility. But the Post Office could not do that; they had to introduce the new facility, new machinery and procedures, at the same time handling the mail on a daily basis.

This could be likened to Ford or General Motors shutting down their major factory and moving to a new location, with no inventory and not missing any production. In this respect I think we should appreciate the enormity of what has been undertaken in the last two years in the Toronto area, particularly in the last 18 months. These three large postal facilities have had to deal with equipment which had never been either used or designed prior to its introduction. It was prototype machinery which had to be designed specifically and on a scale to do functions which had never been automated before. While I suppose a number of start-up problems were anticipated, I do not think that anyone, particularly the Post Office and perhaps the designers of the equipment, ever anticipated the amount of trouble they have had in terms of start-up.

I make that point because not only has it affected very drastically the mail service in the constituency that I represent just north of the Gateway facility, but it has also affected mail service across Canada, since so much of the mail passes through the facility. I think the hon. member who introduced the motion would agree that it has only been in the last ten days or two weeks that intercity mail passing through Gateway has started to move at the efficiency that we want and should expect.

Another matter which I should like to put on the record is that most of the systems within the Gateway facility have been installed and are now in operation. I hope that all hon. members can come to the Gateway facility and tour it. It is an enormous area, about the size of four football fields. You need a guide to take you around because you might not find your way out, it is almost that extensive. When the mail comes in, it goes into a pre-sorting area, and right from the first that facility has worked well. It then goes to the colour phaser canceller, as they call it, and this facility has also worked relatively well. The biggest problem has been that the mail goes from there on to trays which move forward on a computer program for sorting. This has been a real problem in terms of introducing the facility and getting acceptable mail service at Gateway.

These trays were manufactured by one of the largest companies operating in Canada, the name of which is well known to everyone in this House. The plastic composition of the material which was used in them was apparently not correct. It was very brittle. The trays were very, very marginally manufactured too large. As a result, there was a good deal of jamming in the automatic guides. When the trays would jam, they would break.

The Post Office at Gateway has fought this problem for about a year. They finally reached agreement with the supplier as to liability and an agreement was arranged whereby these trays would have to be replaced. There has been some hold-up on that, but I am advised the problem is now being solved. That complete section of the service should go on stream or under test July 1. If that is so, and if it is successful at that date, the Gateway facility will start to operate in the manner in which it was designed. Some two or three weeks ago, I am advised, the last phase was set up for the handling of off-size envelopes and the parcel operation. The many different things which had to be produced there are now all operating. The continuing problem with these trays and the automated computer program associated with it is in the process of being solved.

The problem which was there in terms of personnel should not be underestimated. The theory of these large postal installations in the Toronto area was to transfer functions, which were being carried out in a large number of small post offices, to these big three. Not everyone wanted to follow the transfer of those functions. Many employees chose not to continue to work for the Post Office and commute longer distances. Thus, there had to be many new people hired. The hiring of people was not the problem. It was training and finding enough new supervisors to get the system into operation. That has been largely overcome, and very successful.

Some rather critical comments about Post Office employees and their unions have been raised by previous speakers today. I do not intend to enter into that area because I think it has been sufficiently spoken to by other members. I would like to pay tribute to many of the people who work in the Post Office. Most of my constituents would join me in saying it is remarkable that as many people could be transferred as was the case with the start-up of the Gateway facility. There were a number of new procedures and concepts started there, and we have not had any major labour difficulty.

I do not want to be quoted too tightly on this, but it could well be the union might have a case for argument if they followed the small letter of their contract in terms of automation and the introduction of it. I want to congratulate the unions because they took a bigger view and realized what was required, which was an open attitude involving as much assistance as possible in getting the facility to work. When people are being critical of the postal staff, they should appreciate that nearly all the people in the Toronto area who are handling almost half of Canada's mail have had their place of work transferred. Many of them are now working under new procedures and with new machines. This has been accomplished without a major problem, and that is a tribute to them.

I would like to say a word about many of my friends who deliver mail door to door. There is no question there have been problems in the Post Office about the level of service. Most people complain to the letter carriers. It is not their fault. They have been good ambassadors for the Post Office and we should be appreciative of them. In making those comments, I am not saying all is, or has been, well in the Toronto area in terms of the postal service. I have spent a good deal of time meeting with management at Gateway and dealing with this problem. I have had many letters from my constituents. I have had strong representations from the Brampton Board of Trade and from many individual businessmen. Many of these businessmen have lost substantial amounts of money because they submitted tenders which arrived late and were not accepted. This has been difficult. It had to happen some time during this automation phase in order to handle increased volumes of mail at reasonable cost in future years.

Some six weeks ago I was hopeful because Gateway was up to a point where there was almost 80 per cent of next day delivery. Then two things happened: there was a four-day Easter weekend, and because of the contract with the employees the facility was essentially closed for that time, which generated a tremendous backlog of mail. Then having overcome that to a degree, some of the feed-in mail did not arrive on schedule because of start-up problems which were inherent in the facility on Eastern Avenue in the central core of Toronto. This facility is probably five or six weeks behind the one in Scarborough and the one in Gateway. While they are learning from experiences the other two have had, there are problems there. Many times we blame Gateway, and it is not Gateway's fault. It is just the fact that the mail coming from the core of the city has not reached Gateway and, therefore, letters from downtown Toronto to my constituency are delayed at that facility rather than at Gateway.

There is light at the end of the tunnel. During the last ten days all the mail at Gateway has been sorted and cleared from the facility by 6.30 in the morning. The manager and supervisory staff at Gateway have worked hard. They have been working 18 hours a day. They come in very early in the morning, go out on the floor and look at each of the systems. They make sure any problems are looked after and that the mail is moving through the system. It is encouraging to note the mail has been coming in on schedule, is being processed, sorted and sent back out by 6.30 in the morning for ten consecutive days. This indicates that many of the inherent problems are being solved.

By July 1, when the problems in the downtown facility on Eastern Avenue are cleared up and this automated tray process has been corrected, the kind of mail service we expect, and should have as a result of the expenditure in Gateway, should be forthcoming. No one hopes more than I do that it will be improved. I doubt very many members of the House of Commons have as many constituents who are concerned and upset with the level of service as I have. One exception might be my hon. friend, the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, representing the Mississauga riding. I hope these problems are under control, and I expect they may well be.

It is encouraging to look at the facilities in western Canada, where the same type of automated service has been installed and brought on stream. It demonstrates that this system improves efficiency and mail service. I am talking now about most of the facilities in western Canada. It has demonstrated that the system does improve the efficiency of the mail service. The concept is correct, but the biggest problem has been the mechanical aspect of it and getting this new, highly-automated equipment to work.

I should like to make three points in closing, if I may, Mr. Speaker. While we complain about the mail service, there have been some good things about it and I think we should compliment the Post Office on those and put them on the record. Members on all sides of the House have been fairly strong in expressing the opinion that government should exercise restraint of government spending. In major statements to the House, the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) have given the commitment that government spending will be controlled and, parallel to that, that the growth of the public service will be virtually frozen. In this fiscal year I believe the growth will be less than 1 per cent. While we all applaud that, we have to understand the position of fast growing areas of the country.

I represent a constituency where the population is growing faster than any other area of Canada. That means new streets almost daily. When people move in, there is a problem supplying them with door to door service, when at the same time there is a freeze on hiring additional delivery men. This problem has been handled well by the Post Office. Certainly, many people in my riding have had to wait for door to door delivery; some have been patient and others have made representations to which I have tried to respond.

By virtue of using small vehicles to take mail out to the routes, the same number of men can deliver to more houses than before. They spend less time waiting for lifts to the post office to get more mail or waiting for public transportation. I think we should compliment those men. It is conceivable that the system would be opposed by door to door delivery men because they are being asked to service more doors; but, instead, they have done it well. It has meant that the same number of door to door delivery men in many areas of high growth have been able to deliver mail to a good many more new residents than would have been the case under the old system. I think we should be positive about that.

Mr. Speaker, I see my time is running out. I have two more very brief points, and if the House agrees I shall put them on the record very quickly. I leave it to the Chair to ask whether there is consent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The hon. member is aware that only five minutes are left, and I know the hon. member for Parry Sound-Muskoka (Mr. Darling) wishes to speak. I leave it to hon. members. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent to complete his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Milne: I will be brief, Mr. Speaker. While we complain about the Post Office, I think there is a responsibility on us to look at how we prepare mail by use of the postal code, appropriate envelopes, and so on. Having installed a lot of automated equipment, there is real concern about the low percentage of mail that can be treated automatically.

I want to go on record as supporting the Postmaster General. I think we should be very vigorous in competing for the entire mail service. We should be in the courier business because it is the responsibility of the Post Office to service all areas. This is not an argument about public or private service; this is a matter of being involved in things that are profitable and will bring down the cost that we have to bear if we are to bring this service to all Canadians, as is their right.

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, in the last debate on the Post Office I believe Your Honour was in the chair. I was called on then just three minutes before the time expired, and I see today that I have an extra minute. As a member of the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications, I have been critical of the Post Office Department. I know that my colleague and neighbour in Nipissing, the Postmaster General (Mr. Blais) has great problems to face.

I was interested in the remarks of the hon. member for Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Milne) about the Gateway facilities being the size of four football fields. I thought they were the size of one football field, but I understand now they are the size of four. I was going to speak about slow delivery and various other things, but in my view, Mr. Speaker, the fault with the Post Office is demonstrated by what I have seen here this afternoon. I look in the gallery and see those great officials of the Post Office, and I commend them for being here. Then I look to the far end and there is the great czar of CUPW, Joe Davidson and one of his henchmen. The two parties are as far apart as possible. Why could both parties not have been sitting closer together? I think this is most important.

It was mentioned earlier that everything would be all right by July 1, but then the hon. member for Peel-Dufferin-Simcoe said we might be in a tough spot by July 1. If we are, it will have nothing to do with the machinery or debugging it; what we have to debug is the adversary system that exists between management and the workers. That is the crux of the whole thing.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Darling: I am not saying that one party is to blame more than the other; they are both guilty. Time and again I have said that the people of Canada want them to iron out their differences and get the mail delivered. They do not want a strike. To lay it on the line, they do no want them to be allowed to strike. That is it—one, two, three. I am sure that is unpopular with the union and others as well, but people are fed up with the mail service as it is. The adversary system is no good at all. They should get together. I mentioned this to the Postmaster General in committee. I said, "J.-J., you should sit down with Davidson and company"—and he is a human being; I hear that Scotch burl of his—"Highland Joe." My ancestors came from Scotland. I said, "He has a sense of humour, maybe distorted at times, but surely you can talk to these people as human beings. That is the secret. That is the only way you are going to avert a strike."

Post Office

My colleague, the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale), and I were in England recently investigating the post office there. I learned a lot, but one thing that amazed me was that the union, from the shop steward up to the top official who holds the same job as Joe Davidson, were sympathetic to management. They were proud of the post office and were aware of the competition they faced from couriers and various other organizations that were cutting into their revenue. They felt they had to stick together or sink together.

That is the message I want to get across to the Postmaster General and his cohorts, and to Davidson and his cohorts. It is as simple as that. Once we get that message across, we will not have to worry about automation and the rest of it. It will fit in, and it will be well oiled and greased.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but it being six o'clock p.m., it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 58(11), to announce that proceedings on the motion have now expired. This House stands adjourned until tomorrow at two o'clock p.m., pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At six o'clock the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

NATIONAL CAPITAL COMMISSION

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF ALLEGEDLY UNAUTHORIZED EXPENDITURES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 to propose a motion of urgent and pressing necessity concerning apparent impropriety, misuse and mismanagement of public funds by the National Capital Commission at 12-18 York Street in the City of Ottawa. I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That an immediate investigation be made by the Public Accounts Committee with particular reference to expenditures unauthorized by Treasury Board, a $4½ million law suit against the government by York Development Limited, certain payments to architect Anthony Kemp for services unperformed and, finally, the spending of $50,000 of public money for the purchase of imported French wines, and numerous other scandalous items outlined today on the order paper.

Mr. Speaker: Under the terms of Standing Order 43 such a motion would require unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No!

HEALTH

PROPOSAL THAT DEAF BE GIVEN SPECIAL CONSIDERATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, even if some insensitive Liberal says no to this motion, I hope the Minister of National Health and Welfare, the Minister of Finance, the Postmaster General, the Minister of Labour and perhaps others will take note of it.

I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That this House calls on the government to respond favourably to the requests of the Canadian Coordinating Council on Deafness, it being widely recognized that hearing impairment, though invisible, is a severe handicap and that those who suffer from it deserve special consideration in line with the consideration accorded to other handicapped persons.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed!

Some hon. Members: No!

SUGGESTED IMPOSITION OF RESTRICTION ON IMPORTS OF FOOTWEAR—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to Standing Order 43, I seek the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity.

Considering that 21 footwear factories have closed their doors over the past 12 months, thereby causing the loss of some 2,500 jobs, while Canada is now faced with the highest unemployment rate in 37 years; and considering that the Canadian industry's share of the market is only 44 per cent, since imports have taken over 56 per cent of it, which causes a serious and damaging prejudice to the Canadian industry, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Shefford:

That the House urge the government to take immediate action to remedy the current situation by imposing quotas on imports, because of the serious crisis the Canadian industry is now facing.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The House has heard the hon. member's motion. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

COMPENSATION FOR THOSE ON ROUTE OF TANKERS DELIVERING OIL TO CHERRY POINT FAILING AGREEMENT WITH UNITED STATES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under Standing Order 43. My motion is prompted by the fact that moving through the Strait of Juan de Fuca in the coming weeks will be a new and potential ecological disaster, namely, deliveries of Alaskan oil to Cherry Point. In view of the fact that no agreement on compensation has yet been made with the United States, I move, seconded by the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie):

That this House direct the government to bring in an interim compensation scheme to protect the interest of those who live and work in the potentially affected area until an agreement is reached.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion pursuant to the Standing Order requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES ON DIVERTING TANKER TRAFFIC FROM CHERRY POINT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I also rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under Standing Order 43 to request unanimous consent of the House to my motion. In view of the imminent threat of heavy tanker traffic moving through the Strait of Juan de Fuca, either to Port Angeles or Cherry Point, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Fraser Valley West (Mr. Wenman):

That this House directs the Secretary of State for External Affairs to enter into immediate negotiations with the government of the United States with a view to diverting this traffic to less environmentally sensitive locations.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Such a motion can be presented only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

UGANDA—SUGGESTED ACTION AGAINST PRESIDENT AMIN IN VIEW OF ALLEGED ATROCITIES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, in view of the 170 page report of the International Commission of Jurists submitted to the United Nations yesterday stating that more than 100,000 people may have been killed by security forces in Uganda in the years since Idi Amin took power and the fact that arbitrary killings, tortures, disappearances and other gross violations are still occurring in Uganda, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski):

That the Canadian government change its policy of quiet protests to one of public leadership and express Canadian outrage in a clear message to the international community by stating (1) That Idi Amin should be excluded from the Commonwealth Conference in London, and (2) That Idi Amin will be excluded from the guest list of foreign dignitaries invited to the Commonwealth Games in Edmonton in 1978.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROPOSED ANALYSIS OF EMPLOYMENT PROSPECTS FOR YOUNG CANADIANS ENTERING LABOUR MARKET—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the recent Statistics Canada report on manpower supply trends for the Canadian labour force which predicts that employment prospects for many new labour force entrants with post-secondary education will not be good in the next 10 to 15 years, and since the trend is a national one, and in view of the fact that the present Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) expressed shock at this finding since he had told us in the House that the present new Canada Works and Young Canada Works programs for job creation are based upon an assumption that there will be general labour force shortages by 1980, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman):

That the Minister of Manpower and Immigration immediately set up a study by reputable labour economists to do a thorough analysis of the Canadian labour market on a continuing basis over the next year and a half, so that all high schools, colleges, technical institutes and universities, vocational and guidance directors and counsellors in Canada, will have some realistic ideas of the sectors in which employment prospects are going to be best for our young Canadian adults in the next decade.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

HOUSE OF COMMONS

CONGRATULATIONS TO MEMBER FOR DARTMOUTH-HALIFAX EAST UPON OCCASION OF HIS MARRIAGE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I may be stretching your patience on this 43, but I rise under the Standing Order on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Due to the fact that the ceremony of holy matrimony within the House of Commons is a rare and, indeed, happy occasion, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants (Mr. McCleave):

That this House congratulate in the appropriate manner that long standing member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) on the occasion of his marriage in the Commonwealth Room of the House of Commons last evening at 5.30.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I know the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) will take the warmth of that applause as being the very strongest possible indication of the good wishes which go from this chamber to him for great success and many years of happiness in his marriage which he celebrated last evening.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REASON FOR FAILURE TO INFORM COMMITTEE OF DISCLOSURE OF PAYMENTS CONNECTED WITH SALE OF CANDU REACTOR TO ARGENTINA

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister. I understand the office of the Prime Minister, as well as several of the Acting Prime Minister's ministerial colleagues' attention has been drawn to a front page story from Buenos Aires in this week's Financial Post, indicating not only the amounts paid, not only the dates payments were made, but the name of the actual recipient of $4 million of $5 million worth of Canadian taxpayers' money in respect of the CANDU reactor sale to Argentina. Most of this information, of course, was disclosed in an Argentinian civil magistrate's investigation which was certainly available to Canadian governmental authorities.

My question to the Acting Prime Minister is this: has this information come to the attention of the government? I find it difficult to believe the indifference could go so far that it has not come to the attention of the government. If so, why has this House and the Public Accounts Committee not been made aware of this disclosure before this date?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have not been made aware of this information. I will certainly check into it immediately.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary relates to that very indifference which we have just seen exemplified by the Acting Prime Minister's answer.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: My supplementary question to the Acting Prime Minister is: why is it a Canadian journalist based in Switzerland, of all places, can go to Argentina and produce this type of very relevant information when, in spite of public declaration by some of his ministers sitting in the front row with him, we are met by indifference, stonewalling, absolute evasion and no information from government sources?

Mr. Paproski: Stonewallers!

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED

SUGGESTED SEVERANCE OF RELATIONSHIP WITH ITALIMPIANTI IN VIEW OF ALLEGATION OF CORRUPTION

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The report mentioned by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham refers to the fact that there are legal proceedings in Argentina directly involving Lucien Secouri, the Canadian government's business partner in Argentina, in corruption charges relating to the Alvar Aluminium Company in that country. In light of Italimpianti's obviously corruptive activities, I would like to ask the minister if he can tell the House whether he will now take steps immediately to sever AECL's business relationship with Italimpianti starting with the Rio Tercero project?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I would be very pleased to look into the same allegations to which the hon. member has referred.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: You know what is going on.

PAYMENTS TO AGENTS—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON INVESTIGATION BY ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, while the minister is engaged in this investigative work, I wonder if he would also look into the question of the disposal of the $1 million to the Luxembourg branch of the Belgian Banque Lambert. In view of the close ties between Gelbard, this bank and David Gravier, who has also been involved in a number of spectacular financial collapses, can the minister indicate whether the RCMP has to date unearthed any evidence as to where this money finally ended up, and specifically whether Gravier was involved in any way, shape or form with the $2½ million payoff?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, if the RCMP have unearthed anything on this particular matter, they have not reported that to me. I am in no position to comment on the allegation concerning some gentleman by the name of Gravier who may have been connected. Quite frankly, I am not familiar with the details at all.

Mr. Paproski: You do not want to know.

ENERGY

POSSIBILITY OF REDUCING RATE OF INCREASE TO TWO PER CENT

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources as well. Recently the minister said the United States was following Canada's example in energy conservation. In view of the fact President Carter has committed the United States to an increase in energy consumption of less than 2 per cent per year, whereas the minister's report and the energy strategy report he has referred to commits Canada to a 3.5 per cent increase in growth, would the minister explain to the House how that shows any Canadian leadership in this field whatsoever? Would the minister advise whether he has a report in his own office which says that Canada can have a 2 per cent increase rate and only a 2 per cent increase rate? If he has that report, will he explain why he has not released it, or if he agrees with it?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would read again "An Energy Strategy for Canada, policies for self-reliance," which was issued one year ago, he would see that the target we set was to reduce the growth in energy consumption to 3.5 per cent or less. We made it clear in that report that we hoped to bring the figure down to an average of 2 per cent per year by 1990.

The report to which the hon. member referred, which is the basis of that statement contained in our energy strategy document, should be in my hands shortly. I have not yet seen it but have reason to believe, and have so stated many times, that with strict conservation methods, including many of those already announced, we should be able to reduce our growth in energy consumption to 2 per cent between the years 1985 and 1990.

MINISTER'S PREFERENCE FOR TAR SANDS PROJECT OR HOME INSULATION PROGRAM

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Our figure is well below U.S. targets. Last Thursday I asked the minister about his two projects now under consideration before Treasury Board; one is to bring on stream another tar sands plant; the other involves a home insulation program. According to my information, the government is unwilling to fund those plans, and Treasury Board resists their funding. Will the minister say which of the two plans he prefers? Does he prefer the home insulation plan so desperately needed to the tar sands project?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as I have made clear in the past, I do not see this as an either/or situation. I think that Canadians, clearly, must adopt much stricter conservation practices. I have indicated that, to the extent we can financially, expanding the home insulation program we have already introduced in the maritime provinces to the rest of Canada. I also made it clear that we shall depend on new supplies and a new Athabasca tar sands plant would be an important additional source of supply for Canadians.

REASON FOR FAILURE TO IMPLEMENT HOME INSULATION PROGRAM IN THOSE PROVINCES WILLING TO PARTICIPATE

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, may I ask a final supplementary question? I return to the question of the national insulation program. As a result of the energy ministers meeting of May 11 I understand some provinces are now willing to implement immediately an insulation program similar to that in place in Nova Scotia. I ask, why does the federal government not implement such a national insulation program immediately on terms similar to those available in Nova Scotia with the other provinces of this country which are willing to undertake and participate financially in the program, in order that we may conserve energy in this country?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have made it clear that the problem with respect to a home insulation program is one of finances. I am therefore pleased to hear the hon. member say that other provinces are prepared, according to him, to involve themselves, participate and contribute financially to a home insulation program. I would be pleased to receive some evidence of the correctness of that statement from him.

REQUEST FOR REPORT ON DISCUSSION ON TELEVISING WORLD HOCKEY LEAGUE CHAMPIONSHIP GAMES

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare.

The minister is obviously aware that the two best professional teams in the world, after the Montreal Canadiens, are now playing the final series in major hockey. As the House was asked on several occasions whether the federal government would be in a position to urge the CBC to put an end to the discrimination towards the World Hockey Association, and as this series between the Quebec City Nordiques and the Winnipeg Jets would interest people across Canada, particularly in the Quebec City and Winnipeg areas, could the minister tell the House where we are in the discussions on the possibility of televising the last games in this series?

[English]

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I think the question was addressed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare, but perhaps it falls more appropriately within the confines of the responsibilities of the Secretary of State—

An hon. Member: What about Iona?

Mr. Roberts: —who is the channel through which the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation reports to the House. I hope the hon. member is not suggesting that I or the government should interfere with the programming decisions of the CBC.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Epp: Not a bad idea once in a while.

Mr. Roberts: However, I have brought to the attention of the CBC the many expressions of opinion which I have received from hon. members from all parts of the House as to the importance they attach to this series.

[Translation]

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Perhaps he could skate on this better than the Secretary of State. Would he be aware of the fact that last winter one of the two teams which are playing now has beaten the Russians 6 to 1 and that the federal government seems to have made particular arrangements with a Mr. Eagleson who is apparently leading the minister by the nose, to put us to shame on European skating rinks. This is where discrimination lies. As two Canadian teams are now trying to win a trophy which can become as important as the Stanley Cup, would the Minister of National Health and Welfare tell the House whether Mr. Eagleson prevents him from putting the pressure which is necessary to put an end to discrimination towards the World Hockey Association?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): No, Mr. Speaker.

[English]

INQUIRY WHETHER WORLD HOCKEY LEAGUE CHAMPIONSHIPS AS IMPORTANT AS CANADIAN FOOTBALL LEAGUE

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question of the Minister of National Health and Welfare with regard to this series. Previously I placed a motion under Standing Order 43 before the House, but my motion was not given unanimous consent. In view of the fact that this is an all-Canadian title, the first time in ten years in professional hockey, would the minister give the same concern to this event of importance to Canada as he did when he tried to protect the Canadian Football League?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member does not seem to realize that we have a Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) who is doing an outstanding job in this field.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lalonde: The hon. lady is performing her work in an outstanding way, and I would be very happy to have her answer the question of the hon. member.

POSSIBILITY OF TELEVISING WORLD HOCKEY LEAGUE CHAMPIONSHIP GAMES

Mr. Jake Epp (Provencher): Mr. Speaker, if I may, I will direct that question to the minister mentioned. Have final plans been made whereby this event of importance to Canadians will be televised on the same basis as this government has seen fit to do it through the CBC for the NHL?

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I will be intervening with my colleague the Secretary of State in this matter. However, in response to the previous question, I find it quite offensive that any hon. member of this House would seek to indicate that Mr. Eagleson is leading the government by the nose. It seems inappropriate that this should be indicated in this chamber because hon. members should at least accept the fact that there would be no international contests without this person's intervention, and credit should at least be given.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

REQUEST THAT FINAL GAMES OF WORLD HOCKEY LEAGUE CHAMPIONSHIP BE TELEVISED

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is for the Secretary of State who is responsible for the CBC. As the CBC is subsidized by Canadian taxpayers to the tune of over $500 million a year, and as there have been strong recommendations from the people of the provinces of Quebec and Manitoba that at least the fifth and sixth games be televised, will the minister please use his influence with the CBC and request that the CBC televise those games?

CANADA SHIPPING ACT

POSSIBILITY OF AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE COMPENSATION FOR OIL SPILLS FROM TANKERS ON ROUTE TO CHERRY POINT

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. Since the government has known for five years that tankers would be travelling within a few miles of the international boundary and since even after five years it has not arrived at a suitable arrangement with the United States on compensation and liability conditions for Canadian citizens in the event of a trans-boundary oil spill, will the government amend the Canada Shipping Act to provide compensation for Canadian victims of oil pollution from the TAPS tankers until the United States institutes mutually satisfactory legislation on the trans-boundary oil pollution question?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the government will take note of the hon. member's representations on this important point.

Oral Questions

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES ON AGREEMENT TO PROVIDE COMPENSATION FOR OIL SPILLS FROM TANKERS EN ROUTE TO CHERRY POINT

Mr. Bob Wenman (Fraser Valley West): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the government has yet to conclude satisfactory negotiations on the provisions of compensation to Canadian victims of American oil pollution, will the government send a diplomatic note urging a swift and satisfactory conclusion to negotiations on the comprehensive oil pollution liability and compensation bill and passage through the Congressional-Senate committee system before regular deliveries begin in July to Cherry Point?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows there are certain limitations within this particular situation. The government of Canada has had consultations over a long period with respect to possible pollution in this area. As I recollect it, in certain areas we have made advances in order to minimize the dangers of pollution. On the question of compensation, I will be happy to make a further check and advise the hon. member whether further negotiations or representations to the United States are likely to advance the cause which we both believe in.

SUGGESTION CANADIANS HAVE ACCESS TO UNITED STATES FUND FOR COMPENSATION FOR OIL POLLUTION

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question. In view of the consultations which have just been mentioned by the Acting Prime Minister could he tell the House whether the government is now in a position to assure potential Canadian victims that they will have equal access and rights to the so-called super fund which is in the draft comprehensive oil pollution liability and compensation bill before the United States Senate, in the same manner as their American neighbours? Has the government demanded or made representation to have these rights and if not, why not?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I will check into that point.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): A further supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Failing that, could the Acting Prime Minister tell us whether the government is contemplating specific legislation parallel to that which is before the United States Congress in order to give assurances to Canadian citizens that their interests will be fully protected in the case of an oil spill in this very delicate area?

Mr. MacEachen: Not at present, Mr. Speaker.

INCREASE IN EXPENDITURES ON 12 TO 18 YORK STREET, OTTAWA—REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION BY PUBLIC ACCOUNTS COMMITTEE

Mr. Tom Cossitt (Leeds): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Acting Prime Minister in the absence of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Is the government aware of possible serious improprieties, misuse and mismanagement of public funds by the National Capital Commission at 12 to 18 York Street, Ottawa, and if so, is he agreeable to having an investigation by the Public Accounts Committee into why this project, originally estimated at $700,000, has suddenly skyrocketed to over $5 million?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member is aware, the Public Accounts Committee has the authority to examine these accounts and can do so in its regular operations.

Mr. Cossitt: A supplementary question. With all due respect to the minister, he is correct but I also believe the government could recommend that this be done. Would the minister be agreeable to asking the Public Accounts Committee to investigate why a fee of approximately $4,000 a month was paid for over two years to By-York Development Limited who reportedly only provided the service of travelling to England at public expense to purchase $100,000 worth of antiques, including suits of armour?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Surely that information ought to be obtained by questions on the order paper.

ENERGY

REQUEST FOR REJECTION OF ANY APPLICATION FOR PLANT TO REPROCESS PLUTONIUM

Miss Flora MacDonald (Kingston and the Islands): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and relates to statements attributed to officials of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited that Canada needs to at least develop and probably use plutonium recycled from spent nuclear fuel rods for a thorium fuel cycle. Despite efforts by officials of AECL to pressure the government into moving in this direction will the minister assure the House that in view of the abnormally high risks involved in what could be another step along the road to nuclear tragedy, that the government will reject any application by AECL to establish such reprocessing facilities in Canada?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I cannot give that kind of assurance at this time but I can assure the hon. lady that we will examine the question very carefully. The quotation she was referring to was merely an opinion of scientists within AECL who recognize the enormous value of spent fuel rods and the potential of the CANDU system to use that spent fuel in their cycle. As I understand it, there are other ways of using spent fuel without going through the plutonium cycle itself. This is the sort of question we will be examining.

Miss MacDonald: A supplementary question. Given the curtailment of reprocessing facilities recently introduced by President Carter in the United States, the concerns expressed at the recent summit meeting in London about the dangers inherent in reprocessing nuclear wastes and by officials of the Atomic Energy Control Board this morning about this course of action, will the minister at least give the assurance that no decision will be taken to pursue this course of action prior to a wide ranging public debate on this whole issue?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I can give the hon. lady the assurance that no decision will be taken on this by the government without a good deal of discussion. Whether that fits into her definition of a wide ranging debate, I cannot say. I also want to make it quite clear that the Canadian government will be co-ordinating its views closely with the United States government in respect of reprocessing. If any assurance is needed I think the hon. member should gain some from the fact that the Canadian government has taken the lead with respect to this whole question of nuclear safeguards.

Miss MacDonald: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In considering the question of reprocessing plutonium in this country will the minister give equal weight to the views expressed by the Atomic Energy Control Board as he does to officials of Atomic Energy of Canada Limited?

Mr. Gillespie: Of course, Mr. Speaker.

INQUIRY INTO ALLEGATIONS OF BIASED PROGRAMMING—SUGGESTED REFERENCE OF CRTC REPORT TO COMMITTEE

Mr. Hal Herbert (Vaudreuil): Mr. Speaker, my question could be considered supplementary to those already addressed this afternoon to the Secretary of State. It concerns the activities of the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation and the inquiry being conducted by the CRTC president, Mr. Harry Boyle, who is scheduled to produce the final report before July 1 of this year. Is the Secretary of State prepared to recognize the many and varied criticisms of the CBC by members of parliament and the public by giving his assurance to this House that the report of the CRTC will be referred by the government to the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts for detailed study and report back to the House? If he does not agree to this approach, would the minister be favourably disposed toward a reference to that committee that would permit, in the next session of this House, a review of CBC activities?

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Until both those events occur I really have to classify that question as hypothetical.

MANPOWER

CANADA WORKS PROGRAM—REASON FOR RETAINING UNUSED PHASE I FUNDS IN CONSTITUENCY FOR USE IN PHASE II

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address a question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In a letter sent to my office this week the minister indicated that any funds allocated to a constituency under Phase I of the Canada Works Program which were not utilized would remain in that constituency to be utilized in Phase II. I should like to ask the minister how he can justify sitting on these funds which will only be used to benefit areas with already low unemployment when other areas in the Atlantic provinces and Quebec currently are receiving as little as one dollar's worth of funding for every five dollars' worth of acceptable applications under Phase I?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, it seemed appropriate in certain circumstances to listen to members of parliament from both sides of the House. I received strong representations from members who are supposed to know the conditions in their own constituencies. The fact that we had started a new program and they felt they needed more time to come up with better projects made eminent good sense to do so.

Mr. Hogan: The answer that the minister just gave me goes against his stated policy and that of his government that there would be a special effort through Canada Works to improve the situation in areas of desperately high unemployment in this country and not to be helping other areas. This is not being done. It was done under LIP because the funds were poured back.

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I do not think the analogy to LIP is correct. In this particular instance, we have a second phase of a particular program that we know is going ahead. The representations I have had from members are to the effect that they can make better use of it because they will have more time. Very heavy weight has been given to pouring the money into areas of high unemployment, so it is not fair to say it is not being used in the proper areas.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

POSSIBILITY OF CHARGES AGAINST PRIVATE SMITH FOR COMPLAINING TO MEMBER OF PARLIAMENT—GOVERNMENT POLICY

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the acting Minister of National Defence. Further to the question addressed to the acting minister yesterday by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants of which he took notice. Can the acting minister today advise if it is permissible for members of the armed forces to approach members of parliament for advice or assistance and whether any charges have been laid or are about to be laid against Private J. P. Smith of Canadian Forces Base Gagetown for approaching a member of parliament?

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, as a follow up to the question asked yesterday, I wish to inform the hon. member that no charges have been laid against Private Smith and we do not contemplate laying charges against him for contacting his member of parliament. It has been stated in this House by my minister and his predecessor that members of the Canadian Armed Forces, just as any other Canadian, have every right to contact their members of parliament.

SALE OF CANDU REACTOR TO KOREA—EVIDENCE OF SERVICES RENDERED BY MR. EISENBERG

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources relating to the AECL matter in Korea. Since most of the information contained in the April 5 letter from our embassy in Seoul appeared to rely only on the evidence of Mr. Min Choong Shik, the former president of the Korean Electrical Company about any services actually performed, does the minister now have any further information on any tangible or visible services performed by Mr. Eisenberg or his company in Korea? Is there anything to substantiate this third hand information received from the Department of External Affairs which is now being contradicted by other knowledgeable people in Korea?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, that clearly is the opinion of the hon. member. If he were to examine the situation, he would have to acknowledge that the former president, the person who was there at the time, is more likely to be informed on these matters than people who were not there at the time.

Mr. MacKay: Is the minister saying unequivocally that these people were not there? He also conveniently forgets, as he did in his answer to the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands, this information was based not only on the information of the Korean Electrical Company vice-president, but also information from the vice-president (Power Reactor Engineering) of the Korean Atomic Energy Research Institute and the Commissioner of the Republic of Korea Atomic Energy Commission. In view of his strange nonchalance on the subject, particularly contrasted with countries like United States and Great Britain which appear to take some interest in this sort of thing when it affects their national image, is the minister prepared to go to Korea himself or send someone to do what these enterprising newsmen have done?

[Mr. Howie.]

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I think it has been made very clear in the past that the government has done everything it could.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gillespie: This matter was referred to the Public Accounts Committee. If the hon. member would reflect for a moment upon the requests that were put to the Secretary of State for External Affairs by the Public Accounts Committee and the answers provided by his department using the resources of the department as well as the answers of the Secretary of State for External Affairs in this House, he would see that we have used our foreign representatives to try to provide the answers that the Public Accounts Committee were seeking.

DENIAL OF TAX DEDUCTIONS TO UNITED STATES CITIZENS ATTENDING CONVENTIONS IN CANADA—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce and the Prime Minister, I will direct my question to the acting Secretary of State for External Affairs. In light of the recent decision by the United States Senate not to allow special tax deductions for Americans attending conventions in Canada, a policy that has already cost the Canadian hotel industry at least $16 million to $20 million, what action if any has the government taken to protect the Canadian interests, particularly in view of the fact that the ways and means committee of the House of Representatives will be looking into this matter in July?

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, representations have already been made to U.S. authorities both by the Prime Minister during his visit and by various ministers since. That, again, has been explained to the House. I myself will have in the near future the opportunity to talk about that with my U.S. counterpart.

POSSIBILITY OF REINSTATEMENT OF TAX DEDUCTIONS FOR UNITED STATES CITIZENS ATTENDING CONVENTIONS IF PARTS OF BILL C-58 WITHDRAWN

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): In view of the fact that a number of senators, including Senators Kennedy and Magnuson, explained their decision not to support these tax benefits for conventions in Canada on the basis that they objected strenuously to the effects of Bill C-58 on American broadcasters, does the government consider the objectionable parts of Bill C-58 to be negotiable in exchange for a reinstatement of the American tax benefits for conventions held in Canada?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, to my knowledge, that question is mixing up problems of American domestic policy which have never been dealt with in the discussions between our two countries.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST FOR MEASURES TO ASSIST BRITISH COLUMBIA PRODUCERS

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Agriculture. I am aware that the government has been engaged for some time in discussions and negotiations with British Columbia on programs for the further development of resources of the province, particularly in the industrial and agricultural sectors. Regarding the latter, we are all concerned that the original ARDA agreement is running down with the consequent need for new joint programs. I expect that the Department of Agriculture is involved in examining the possibilities and I would ask the minister to provide assurances that he and his department will indeed support actively and join with the Department of Regional Economic Expansion in introducing new initiatives for assistance to agriculture in British Columbia.

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, discussions are taking place. I do not think I have to apologize for wanting to be involved in any programs that are in effect in British Columbia because of the great things we have done for British Columbia since I have been Minister of Agriculture.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Brisco: Recognizing the fact that the agricultural problems of British Columbia are rather unique in geographic terms, is the minister prepared to accept the fact that the program under ARDA that is sought by the province of British Columbia is in some ways uniquely different from those the minister has for other points in Canada?

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, the agreements that are signed are not all the same between provinces. I recognize that it is somewhat different in British Columbia.

FISHERIES

REQUEST FOR FINANCIAL AID TO HERRING FISHERMEN OF ÎLES-DE-LA-MADELEINE

Mr. Albert Béchard (Bonaventure-Îles-de-la-Madeleine): Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask a question to the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment but in his absence I will direct it to his parliamentary secretary or to the acting minister.

Considering that herring fishing is a disaster for the third consecutive year, which means a complete lack of revenue for the Îles-de-la-Madeleine on top of an unacceptable deficit, could the minister tell the House whether his department is prepared to give a favourable answer to the Magdalen Islands herring fishermen who ask for assistance to offset their lack of revenue and ensure the survival of their families?

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of my colleague who is on an official visit in Newfoundland, I want to tell the hon. member that the moment the minister is back I will forward to him the representations he just made by the hon. member in the interest of his constituents.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

UGANDA—SUGGESTED ACTION AGAINST PRESIDENT AMIN IN VIEW OF ALLEGED ATROCITIES—STEPS TO PROTECT HUMAN RIGHTS

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. The International Commission of Jurists has just reported to the United Nations that 100,000 people may have been killed by security forces in Idi Amin's six years and that arbitrary killings and torture are still going on. Today in the External Affairs committee, Ambassador Beaulne said that the report would not be discussed by the United Nations Commission on Human Rights before next February. Will the government now change its policy on human rights from quiet diplomacy to one of public leadership and express the moral outrage of Canadians by insisting that Idi Amin be excluded from both the Commonwealth Conference in June and the Commonwealth Games in Edmonton in 1978?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member has asked us to change our policy on human rights, inferring we have not already spoken out clearly and forcibly with regard to the violation of human rights in Uganda. Both the Secretary of State for External Affairs and myself have spoken, on behalf of the government, inside and outside the House, expressing our outrage at what is happening, at what has now been proved by the Committee of Jurists to be the situation. We have expressed our indignation in the House. We have made representations to the government of Uganda. We have asked, as I recollect, for an independent inquiry to be made into the situation there. As for the other aspect of the question, I have no intention of commenting today on the question of representation at the Commonwealth Prime Ministers meeting in London.

Mr. Roche: I am sorry the minister did not respond to my specific question concerning exclusion from the games in Edmonton. May I ask him this question? Since the UN Commission on Human Rights has been crippled by the double standard adopted by African states, which are willing to criticize publicly discrimination based on policies of race but are unwilling to denounce publicly violations of human rights in Uganda, what steps will the government take to protest the increasing violation of human rights in the world as President Carter has done?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, I can only repeat what I have already stated. When the question was asked some time ago with regard to statements made by President Carter we in this House made similar statements. They have been public statements. The hon. member was in Winnipeg at the same time as I was there and heard the Secretary General of the United Nations analyze the various courses open to governments to indicate their concern about human rights. It is possible, as the Secretary General outlined, to get headlines by making public statements but sometimes these headlines do not have very much effect. Often they harden a situation and make it more difficult for people who are suffering the loss of human rights. So in each of these cases one has to analyze the likely effect of any course of action.

As the hon. member knows, with respect to the Edmonton games the government is doing everything possible at the present time to make them a success and to get all countries to participate. I wonder whether he understands the implications of his suggestion that at this moment we should say that one member of the Commonwealth be denied admission. It might result in the collapse of the games, which is not our intention.

HALL PROPOSAL FOR RATIONALIZATION OF RAIL LINES IN NORTHERN ALBERTA—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. Have the minister and the government yet come to a decision with regard to the proposal contained in the Hall Report which suggests the union and rationalization of existing railway lines in northern Alberta and the territories. I say "existing" as opposed to the proposal to build a railway line in the Arctic. Has the government yet come to a decision and does the minister intend to get in touch with those whose have responsibility for the operation of the existing lines?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, a conclusion on this matter has not yet been reached but, clearly, we shall be in touch with the persons involved with the existing lines and also with the provincial governments.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I had a question for the Minister of Labour. He was here a minute ago. Perhaps he is behind the curtains.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Selkirk.

CRIMINAL CODE

POSSIBILITY BOOK NO. 4 OF "SEX EDUCATION: A TEACHER'S GUIDE" CONTRAVENES CODE—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Justice and arises from a series called Sex Education: A Teacher's Guide and published under the authority of his colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Would the minister tell the House what he has found as a result of my special request to him that he look at that series, particularly at booklet No. 4, to find out whether it is in contravention of the Criminal Code?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have not so examined it. I think I indicated to the hon. member that I would do so. I am fairly sure of what my answer would be, but in any case it is quite clear that any action called for would be taken by provincial attorneys general.

Mr. Whiteway: In light of the minister's answer that he has not yet looked at this, would he now undertake to consider this matter very specifically and report back to the House at an early date?

Mr. Basford: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will. However, I would reiterate an answer given by my colleague, the Minister of National Health and Welfare, that the series of books referred to was published by his department to provide information on a vital subject for use in schools. As I understand my colleague's reply, they have proven very useful and have been in great demand by schoolteachers across the country as an aid to them in their very important work.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

INCOME TAX

LEGALITY OF INCLUSION OF BENEFITS FROM LOW INTEREST LOANS AS INCOME FOR TAX PURPOSES

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Finance I would address my question to the Acting Prime Minister. Yesterday the Minister of National Revenue, in answer to a question by my hon.

friend from Edmonton West, stated that her department had decided to include in income for tax purposes the deemed benefits from low-interest loans granted by employers to employees. Since the courts have already ruled that there is no obligation to charge a specified or, indeed, any rate of interest on loans, how can the Minister of National Revenue make such a ruling without such a legislative proposal coming before this House?

Miss Monique Bégin (Minister of National Revenue): After the usual consultations with the Department of Justice on this question, Mr. Speaker, I would advise the hon. member that we believe we are following the spirit and the letter of the law.

IMMIGRATION

POSSIBILITY OF REFERRING BILL C-24 TO A PUBLIC COMMISSION FOR AMENDMENT

Mr. Jacques Lavoie (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration.

Given the fact that Bill C-24 is before a standing committee of the House and since it is well known that it is not endorsed by many interest groups across the country and that clause 109(1) does not grant any power to the provinces—and I mean all provinces—except to decide on the number of immigrants, could the Minister inform the House whether or not he intends to send this legislation before a public committee so that interest groups and the general public might make representations to amend a bill which is merely robbing Peter to pay Paul?

[English]

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might pre-empt the Minister of Agriculture here. The bill referred to is, in fact, before a standing committee of the House. The committee is master of its own procedures. They have indicated the number of groups they wish to hear and recommendations for change will no doubt come from these various interest groups. We shall listen with open ears and an open mind.

UNEMPLOYMENT INSURANCE

GUIDELINES TO COMMISSION FOR DISTRIBUTION OF CONFIDENTIAL INFORMATION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I should like to address my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration with regard to the confidentiality of statistical information given to manpower offices. The minister suggested I should look at section 114 of the Unemployment Insurance Act which, he said, went a long way to protect the individual. I disagree, inasmuch as section 114 gives the Commission the authority to give out this information not only to its own employees but to any person providing it deems such a course advisable. My question to the minister is: are there any guidelines or regulations governing the conduct of the Commission with respect to distributing this highly confidential information?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member did not read the whole section into the record. I understand his concern here, however, since I share it. I might tell the hon. member that we are exploring possible avenues by which the provisions governing the privacy of our records with respect to third party request can best be safeguarded. We have followed the letter and the spirit of that particular section and the information has not been made available to outside agencies. We are doing everything possible to strengthen the confidentiality of the section.

Mr. Alexander: I notice the minister did not answer the pertinent part of the question with respect to the rules and regulations. In light of the fact that Bill C-27 is before the House and that the minister has not registered his concern over this awesome power given the commission by the words, if I may quote them, "and such other persons as the commission deems advisable", will the minister now bring in an amendment to section 114 in order to remove those very damaging words? The minister has that opportunity now so will he see to it that that is done?

● (1500)

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I can give that commitment at this stage. However, as I said, the hon. member did not read it all. The act goes on to provide that this information shall be made available only to employees of the commission in the course of their employment and such other persons as deemed necessary for the control or management of the particular department.

Mr. Alexander: It does not say all that; don't stretch your imagination.

Mr. Cullen: I am prepared to look at the section, Mr. Speaker. Having been Minister of National Revenue I do recognize the importance of protecting confidentiality. I have the same interest in this matter as the hon. member.

Mr. Gilbert Rondeau (Shefford): Mr. Speaker, today I rise on a question of privilege which deals with a very important matter.

In a news bulletin broadcast by the CBC French network on Wednesday, May 11, 1977, Mr. Paul Racine, a journalist for that network, stated that according to information he had received from the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) five of our good Social Credit members were about to join the Liberal party; in other words, 50 per cent of the Social Credit caucus. Now, Mr. Speaker, such a statement on the part of a CBC journalist reporting the words of the Minister of Supply and Services deserves to be taken seriously, for it deals a blow to the reputation of each and every one of the Social Credit members in this House. Further to that statement, Mr. Speaker, I therefore want to dispel all the confusion it may have created in public minds: I have never had any intention of joining the Liberal ranks. I was elected under the banner of the Social Credit Party of Canada and the electors of Shefford have given me their trust as a Social Credit member. I must, however, confess that I did allow myself to be misled once, in 1956, when the Liberal party, to get the votes of the Socreds, included in its platform the following social credit principle: That all that is physically possible and morally good must be made financially achievable. Now, that statement from the minister, as reported on the CBC news by Mr. Paul Racine, was intended to discredit Socred members during the by-elections, while trying to create an atmosphere of confidence in the Quebec federal Liberals by spreading the rumor that members of all parties are about to join the Liberal party.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I will conclude by dispelling any expectation the Liberal Party might have about me and I hope Radio-Canada is going to correct the impression it has created and will this time tell the truth instead of spreading mistakes and confusion which affect the credibility of individuals who are not all at the service of Radio-Canada or the Liberal Party.

Accordingly, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte):

That the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) tell the House the names of the five hon. members of the Social Credit Party who, according to him, are about to join the ranks of the Liberal Party, as he gave them to Mr. Paul Racine.

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, I will merely assure the House that the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau) is not among them.

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I raise the same question of privilege of which I gave you notice of yesterday. I think that, even though I am sometimes accused here of all kinds of things, the worst thing I can be accused of is the intention to join my hon. friends opposite. The only thing—

An hon. Member: We do not want you!

Mr. Matte: No, don't be afraid. The only thing they will get from me is to make me red, but only out of anger.

Mr. Speaker, I think that when the Minister of Supply and Services (Mr. Goyer) suggests, without giving any names, that half of the members of the Social Credit Party have been approached and were tempted to go over to the Liberals, it is like a sword of Damocles over our heads, and we bear all the outrages and consequences of it.

So, it is extremely important that the minister have the courage and the honesty to say to the House who are the members in question, so that the privileges of hon. members be preserved.

An hon. Member: If they have names, let them give them! This is dishonest!

[Mr. Rondeau.]

Mr. Matte: That is why, Mr. Speaker, we will make arrangements to get that matter referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, so that we are no longer manipulated by that arrogant party, which is willing to do anything, even lie, to have people believe that we all share their famous views on national unity, whose only result is to create disunity in Canada.

[English]

Mr. Speaker: I am sure all hon. members realize that despite the passion and the very great importance of the subject matter which has been discussed, it would be an unwarranted and rather spectacular extension of the concept of a question of privilege if I were to attempt to include every suggestion that what had been said by a minister of the Crown was in some way inaccurate.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, I am taking this first opportunity to address myself to a matter which I think offends the privileges of the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands as well as the privileges of the House. Obviously inadvertently, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources during the question period led the House and the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands to believe that it is not the intention of the government at the present time to pursue the prospect of reprocessing nuclear waste for the purpose of extracting plutonium to double the efficiency of our reactors. Evidence from officials of AECL given in committee this morning indicated that that company, a Crown corporation, does not only have a mandate to develop, but is spending $8 million this year on developing not only technology but gadgetry for the reprocessing of plutonium.

I should like Your Honour to direct the minister to make a statement in the House as to the government's policy in this regard, and to state why he made this statement knowing full well that this kind of activity is going on within the corporation.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, as I understood the question of the hon. member for Kingston and the Islands, it was, "Has the government taken a decision on whether to authorize AECL to go into the plutonium recycling business?", or words to that effect. I made it quite clear that the government has taken no decision; that AECL has not been authorized to build reactors based on this potential technology. The option is being considered by the government, and no decision has been made at the present time.

• (1510)

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Prince George-Peace River raises a question of privilege which is essentially a difference of interpretation of language. It is perhaps a disagreement, but certainly not a question of privilege.

Mr. Leggatt: Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a matter of privilege concerning the answer given in this House today by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources to the last question I asked. At that time the minister left the impression in the House that other provinces of Canada had not indicated a willingness to participate in a national insulation program.

The reason I am suggesting the minister has misled the House is that the documents I relied upon in my question were documents tabled before the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works yesterday, and those documents were also tabled at the energy ministers' conference on May 11. I would like to refer the House to the second page of that document which indicates that three provinces—British Columbia, Manitoba and Nova Scotia—have implemented a loans program. The federal government has contributed to the Nova Scotia program. Since that time, Ontario has indicated a loans program in a national insulation project. These provinces have clearly indicated their willingness to participate in a national program.

The Minister misled this House in saying that the provinces are not willing to undertake a national insulation program with the federal government. The minister can now proceed with the provinces of British Columbia, Nova Scotia, Manitoba and Ontario by simply providing federal grant funds for national insulation programs in those provinces, and we can begin next week on a national insulation program.

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member has exaggerated and distorted the situation out of all recognition. If he will look at the "blues", he will see I gave him an answer which indicated that if there was further evidence from the provinces that they were prepared to enter into programs of an insulation nature, I would like to receive it.

I am well aware of the initiatives taken by the province of British Columbia, the first province to do so through their public utilities. I have given them a great deal of recognition and have urged other provinces, other provincial utilities, other private utilities, other private companies and other commercial interests as well to follow the lead taken by the British Columbia government in this regard. That initiative on the part of the British Columbia government was not tied to a national insulation program in any way; it was done for their own purposes. In the case of Manitoba, I believe this was done for provincial reasons and it was not done from the point of view of its being a condition of a national insulation program. I applaud that initiative.

The most recent one the hon. member referred to is the province of Ontario. The announcements and the letters I have seen from the premier of the province indicate that the province of Ontario is going to introduce some kind of insulation loans program. It is not conditional in any way upon a national program or a grants program provided by the federal government. Quite clearly, these are loans programs being introduced by the provinces for their own purposes. They are sound initiatives, and I would urge other provinces to follow their lead. They are not conditional upon either a grants program or a national program.

Mr. Herbert: Mr. Speaker, my point of order is to request from the Chair clarification of your ruling today. I was attempting to put a question to the Secretary of State concerning an inquiry instituted by this government which is to be reported by a certain fixed date. The intentions of the government today concerning what it is going to do with that inquiry will have a major impact on committee activities which will take place this afternnon. I say "major impact" because, obviously, whatever happens this afternoon could have an effect on the life of the House. I am, therefore, somewhat puzzled why a question concerning the government's intention in connection with an inquiry, which the government has instituted itself and which is to be reported by a certain fixed date, should be considered as hypothetical.

Mr. Speaker: Of course, the hon. member for Vaudreuil realizes that he asked the minister what he would propose to do with the oil report when the report is received. In its very terms, that is obviously entirely contingent upon an event which has yet to take place. The hon. member also asked the minister if he would be favourably disposed to some kind of examination of the problem in a future parliament. Surely the hon. member realizes, by the very terms of the questions he put to the minister today, that both questions were hypothetical in their language and totally dependent upon an event which has yet to take place. There could be no other interpretation except that the minister's answer would have to be based on a hypothetical premise.

If any committee hearing is dependent upon answers by the minister, it might be incumbent upon the committee, therefore, to invite the minister to answer such questions before the committee. He certainly cannot answer them here.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might ask the government House leader his intentions for the balance of this week, and into next week, in terms of the legislative program, and whether or not he is prepared to allocate an opposition day or days next week; and, if so, what days?

Mr. MacEachen: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. member's question, the plan tomorrow is to continue with second reading and other stages of the Excise Tax Act, to be followed by the Bretton Woods bill, and then we would deal with two transport bills: the aeronautics bill, C-46, and the Air Canada bill.

I would be ready to designate next Thursday as an allotted day. Later today, or tomorrow, I hope I will be able to indicate to hon. members the program beyond the four bills I have mentioned.

REMUNERATION RECEIVED BY EMPLOYEES OF STATISTICS CANADA FOR SERVICES RENDERED OUTSIDE OF OFFICIAL DUTIES

Question No. 1,053—Mr. MacKay:

1. Since April 1, 1970, has any employee of Statistics Canada (a) at the management level, (b) below the management level received any remuneration for services rendered outside of his or her official duties at Statistics Canada from any private organization which at that time had a contract with Statistics Canada and, if so, in each case, what (i) is the name and classification of the employee (ii) is the name of the organization which paid the employee (iii) was the nature of the service rendered (iv) was the amount involved and the date of payment?

2. Since April 1, 1970, has any Statistics Canada employee at the management level, or the immediate family of any such employee, had a financial interest in any organization involved in data processing, storing and/or dissemination and, if so, in each case (a) what is the name and classification of the employee, (b) what is the name of the organization, (c) what was, or is, the extent of the financial interest, (d) on what date was the financial interest acquired and on what date was it terminated, if applicable, (e) did the organization have any financial dealing with Statistics Canada and, if so, what was the (i) date of the transaction (ii) amount involved (iii) nature of the involvement, (f) did the organization engage in commercial activity parallel or quasi-parallel to the official activities of Statistics Canada?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports that as of November 23, 1976: 1. (a) Not to our knowledge. (b) Not to our knowledge.

2. With the exception of the case detailed in the answer to House Question 764, none* to our knowledge. (Tabled on Nov. 3, 1976).

* Since 1970 several employees have reported that they hold common stock, (the value of which exceeded $2,500), in a variety of major corporations. In some cases these corporations or their subsidiaries are probably involved in data processing, storage or dissemination activities, but these activities would not be described as parallel or quasi-parallel to the official activities of Statistics Canada. None of the employees in question has, in the course of their duties, access to the identifiable confidential records of the corporations in which they have invested or the competitors of these firms nor do they have responsibility for awarding or administering potential contracts with these corporations or their competitors.

PUBLIC WORKS—RENTED SPACE IN PROVINCE OF QUEBEC

Question No. 1,634—Mr. Coates:

How much space is rented by the government in the Province of Quebec and what is the estimated total amount to be paid to property owners for the fiscal year 1976-77?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works): As of January 31, 1977 the Department of Public Works was renting 4,579,118 square feet of space. The estimated total amount to be paid to property owners during 1976/77 fiscal year is approximately $33,340,976.

DEPOSITS BY GOVERNMENT AND CROWN CORPORATIONS IN CHARTERED BANKS

Question No. 1,798—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

For each of the past five financial years, what were the deposits by the government and Crown corporations in (a) financial institutions, (b) charter banks, (c) credit unions (d) co-operative credit societies?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): (a) and (b)

CONTRACT FOR MAINTENANCE AND REPAIRS TO COMPUTER AT NORTH BAY, ONTARIO

Question No. 2,327—Mr. McKinnon:

Did the government let contract No. 1EY.1059W-6-1010M in the amount of $718,842 for maintenance and repairs to the computer at North Bay, Ontario and, if so, what would it cost to replace it with a new and modern computer?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): The government issued contract file No. 1EY. 1059W-6-10M in the amount of $718,842.02 on March 9, 1977, for the maintenance of and repairs to the AN/FSQ7 SAGE Computer that is installed at CFB North Bay. The AN/FSQ-7 was provided to the Department of National Defence by the USAF who retain title. The above noted costs are funded jointly by the Department of National Defence and the USAF which pays two-thirds of the costs. The costs for a replacement computer system including peripherals, displays, software installation, training and support is estimated to be approximately $30,000,000.

DISPOSAL OF EARTH SCIENCES ISSUE AND OTHER STAMPS BY CROWN ASSETS DISPOSAL CORPORATION

Question No. 2,348—Mr. Gillies:

Did Crown Assets Disposal Corporation dispose of a large quantity of the Earth Sciences issue and other stamps and, if so, in each case, what issue was sold (a) to whom, (b) at what discount from the face value, (c) was it sold by tender, (d) was it offered for public sale?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): No. (a) to (d) Not applicable.

PURCHASE BY GOVERNMENT OF 4 × 4 VEHICLES FROM GENERAL MOTORS CORPORATION

Question No. 2,437—Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse):

Has the government bought 4 × 4 vehicles from General Motors Corporation and, if so (a) how many, (b) at what price, (c) were tenders called?

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): (a) 2,848 1¼ ton 4 × 4 utility trucks; (b) $9,376 (average price per vehicle, depending on options); (c) The contract was awarded February 4, 1975 as a result of Invitations to Tender issued to Canadian truck manufacturers producing a vehicle in the range required.

*NATIONAL DEFENCE—PERSONNEL STRENGTH AND CONCESSIONS/FRANCHISES—CFB BORDEN

Question No. 2,280—Mr. Rynard:

1. What are the names of all the concessions or franchises at CFB Borden, Ontario?

2. What is the procedure used in granting these concessions or franchises?

3. Has there been an increase in rental rates charged to these concessions or franchises and, if so, on what basis are the increases made?

4. What was the cost for each year 1970 to 1976 for (a) maintenance, (b) heating, (c) water, (d) electricity of the building in which the concessions or franchises are located?

5. For each year 1970 to 1976, what was the total (a) civilian, (b) armed service personnel population of CFB Borden?

[English]

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, in view of the lengthy answer I wonder if the House would be disposed to have the answer tabled and recorded in Hansard as read?

Editor's Note: The answer referred to above follows:

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): 1. Bank of Montreal; Bank of Commerce; Dr. Scott, Dentist; Dr. Walasek, M.D.; George's Coiffure; Circled Pine Coiffure; Wright Dry Cleaners; Lancaster Barbershop; Harold's Barbershop; CFSAL Barbershop; Muriel's Taxi; Courtesy Taxi; Essa Taxi; Income Tax, Assistance Office; Jack Rice Caterers; Orangeville Bottling, Vending Service; Simcoe Coin Sales, Amusement Machines; Newspaper Vending, Toronto Sun; Snow Removal, Tom Darnley; Snow Removal, Merv Johnston; Georgian Vending, Catering Service; Cadet Cleaners.

2. Under section 38(1) of the National Defence Act the Base Commander selects the person or company that is most likely to provide the best service to the personnel at the base and the best financial return to the base fund (a non-public fund). Depending on the type of concession desired and on the number and quality of agents or agencies able to provide the service, the Base Commander may advertise, may call tenders, or may negotiate directly.

3. Yes. Increases are based on the consumer cost of living index and on the change in the amount charged to Non-Public Fund activities by the Government for utilities and maintenance.

4. These data are not readily available since charges for non-public fund activities which include concessions messes, and Non-Public Recreational facilities are all based on a rate per square foot, and the accounting system is such that actual separate costs cannot be captured for each location. The rate per square foot is intended to reimburse the Crown for utilities, routine maintenance and basic services such as snow removal, garbage removal and fire protection and is based on a general average.

5. (a) and (b)

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED GOVERNMENT RESPONSIBILITY FOR "ECONOMIC DISORDER"

Mr. Claude Wagner (Saint-Hyacinthe) moved:

That this House holds the Government directly responsible for the present economic disorder in Canada and the disastrous consequences of that disorder upon the spirit and unity of the country.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the debate which we are initiating is timely. It affords us an opportunity to deal once more with the problems confronting Canada at the present time and with the kind of direction which our country needs to come out unscathed and, let us hope, strengthened as a result of the serious crisis which it is now experiencing.

To become aware of the general dissatisfaction in Canada and the concern which is taxing at the utmost our collective energies, we only have to take note of the complaints voiced by the media and to add our personal observations. This is why if we wish to avoid the social disorders now afflicting other countries, we must make a collective effort of reflection and join in a common quest for remedies required under the circumstance. This debate is therefore an opportunity for us to undertake a constructive dialogue through which we could begin to fashion the new society of which we all dream.

However, being responsible for the direction of the country, the government must take special care to restore the economy and satisfy the legitimate political yearnings of various areas of the country. Indeed, Mr. Speaker, the unrest felt in Canada is due to a defective leadership in economic endeavours and a false conception of what the political leadership ought to be at the present time. The outstanding characteristic of that chaotic policy often arising from panic has been disproportion. No other government has so coldly and cruelly left so many workers unemployed.

There is no other example either of a government which, over a nine-year period, has allowed inflation to get out of control and has given it such a strong impetus by increasing during that period its own expenditures by more than 200 per cent. Even its most commendable initiatives have only met with a partial success. I am referring in particular to its policy on regional economic expansion of which the Economic Council of Canada was quite critical recently. I am sure the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard) will forgive me for saying this, because I know that he, perhaps more than any other, knows that the 1968 act did not have the impact that everyone expected. Regional economic disparities remain unabated. It is fair to say, Mr. Speaker, that in economic matters, the government has often started by building the roof instead of the foundations. The best example of this is perhaps the job-creation program.

Although it has its merits, no one can claim that it is an adequate answer to the chronic unemployment which affects so many Canadian regions and provides young Canadians especially with legitimate grievances.

I sincerely hope that Quebec City and Ottawa will play down their political differences and finally agree on a daring development program for the weakest or most promising industrial or regional sectors.

I take this opportunity to urge the government to deal most urgently with the critical situation in the Montreal building industry. Making Montreal a designated area, as it was two years ago, might relieve the unemployment situation, for some 40 per cent of construction workers in Greater Montreal are unemployed. I feel agreements in the areas of urban renewal, housing, water treatment plants and public transport system improvements are called for. They would certainly do more to revive the Montreal economy on a permanent basis than the construction of a giant complex such as Place Guy Favreau, as there is already in Montreal a plethora of office space.

We could discuss at length this problem of regional economic disparities and the government's inability to deal with it alone. The Economic Council of Canada, in the report I referred to a moment ago, rightly observed that the provinces were unduly left out of the implementation of programs designed to give a new impetus to their economy. It cannot be held against them when one of the main complaints of provincial governments is that they lack the financial means required to step up industrial development. Our long-standing tax system has too often compelled them to beg for federal funds. Such requests have resulted in delays and municipalities were the most heavily hit. Much delay would have been prevented if, in addition to a decentralization of taxation powers that has now become urgent, there had been between the federal and provincial governments a body to coordinate their economic policies.

It was to such an agency that I was referring on February 21 last in this House, when I expressed the wish that an economic planning council be set up, or if you prefer, a national priorities council, to determine the joint undertakings of both levels of government in such sectors as industrial development.

Mr. Speaker, federalism cannot be judged solely on its economic profitability. However, every area of the country is still justified in wondering what benefits it derives from its participation in the Canadian confederation. Without relying blindly on figures and taking into account the intangible benefits of a social and especially political nature that the provinces derive from their belonging to a federated Canada, I hope that we will be better informed in the future about the economic aspects of Canadian federalism.

If only to enlighten those who run the country about the impact of certain measures on local economies, this type of study should be encouraged. If we were to discover that, indeed, such and such an area is unduly disdavantaged, it would then be possible to change our course without demanding, like the Péquistes, that the whole house be torn down because it needs repairs.

Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, that is the type of action that should be taken by the special unit set up recently in the Privy Council, supposedly to develop a strategy against the separatist movement in Quebec. We know very little about this group's terms of reference. For my part, I hope that it will not be content to find arguments against Quebec independance or to devise counter-tactics against the referendum. This agency should rise above mere controversy. It should undertake an in-depth study of Canadian federalism, in order to reveal its unquestionable merits, but without hiding its deficiencies or questionable orientations. I do not believe that the secrecy around the activities of this special unit is very healthy from a democratic standpoint. In fact, the government would be well-advised to refer its terms of reference to a parliamentary committee.

I would go even further. In this battle to save Confederation from the anguish of a break up, all supporters of federalism, no matter to which party they belong, should close ranks in a common strategy. The defence of the federative system is nobody's prerogative. This is why I suggest the creation of a parliamentary commission of members from all parties to diagnose the ills from which the present system may be suffering. This commission, which would be one of national conciliation and even reconciliation, could from the outset concentrate its efforts on identifying the causes of the national tensions. Having duly pin pointed them and considered the representations of the parties involved, the commission could submit a vast range of propositions arising from such representations and aimed at solving the difficulties about which we feel justified to complain. This first step would certainly be part of a long process which should eventually lead to the constitutional reform whose necessity no one any longer denies.

That kind of political clearing house might make it possible to better determine what powers remain essential for the central government to keep the country together and what powers could be better exercised by the provinces so as to speed up the development of the various areas without jeopardizing Canada's federal nature.

● (1530)

[English]

As I said a moment ago in French, parliament should be associated more closely with the search for adequate solutions to the present national crisis.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wagner: One way to do so would be to set up a parliamentary committee on a non-partisan basis. Its mandate at the start could be only to identify areas of conflict between the central and provincial governments and to deal in depth with their causes. Having done so, this committee could very well proceed further with substantive proposals of its own. In the meantime, this committee could very well examine the work being done by the special unit in the privy council dealing with the issue of national unity and about which very little is actually known by this House.

[Translation]

In that respect, Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that such a long time after the crisis started this government has not managed to make a greater contribution to the study and solution of the constitutional problem. I know that the Prime Minister will point to the Victoria Charter, but on second thought he will admit that it failed to meet all the claims not only of Quebec but of several, if not all, other Canadian provinces. It is all very well for the head of the government to say he is open to compromise and in the same breath express skepticism about the need for or the chances of success of such discussions. It is also very easy to build up an artificial popularity by denouncing Quebec separatists without considering why they advocate the secession of Quebec. Finally, it is very easy to claim that Canada is indivisible while too often, unfortunately, saying things that are likely to divide it even more. Such behaviour cannot protect Canada for long against the forces that would break it up.

It should be recognized, Mr. Speaker, that we, of the Progressive Conservative party, did not wait until November 15, 1976 to worry about the growing discontent in Quebec with the kind of federalism we have had for at least a decade. For at least a generation we have been cautioning Canadians against the dangers of en excessive centralization and we have in many areas proposed alternatives to alleviate tensions and bring about a better political balance in this country. If one really wants to be objective, it is obvious that our contribution to the constitutional dialogue is great and worthwhile, and that we have no lesson to take from anyone on Canadianism, quite the contrary.

[English]

One should be careful, however, not to confuse, among reforms advocated by the Parti Québécois, those which are specifically of a separatist nature and those which are also demanded by genuine federalist parties in Québec. From Alexandre Taschereau in the thirties, for example, down to René Lévesque, there has been a striking continuity of complaints about the way Canadian federalism has been implemented in such sensitive areas as social security and communications, to mention only those two issues. That the Parti Québécois calls for complete separation in order to solve its differences with Ottawa does not necessarily mean that its grievances are without foundation and that they should be dismissed summarily. It is my hope and, indeed, my deep conviction, that at the forthcoming referendum Quebeckers will reject the separatist solution to their problems.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Wagner: But the yearning for a larger freedom of action at the political level will not die automatically. Ethnic groups naturally tend toward nationhood and statehood, and Quebec is no exception. The only way to avoid the final break-up of Canada in the future is for all of us to try hard to find ways of channelling the tremendous energies of the Quebec revolution into a new constitutional framework in which Quebec would more adequately assert herself culturally and economically.

● (1540)

Mr. Wagner: It is a fact that the Quebec premier's attitude is hardly better than that too often shown by the Prime Minister. Constant use of excessive language is no way to create between opponents a more sober climate, the lack of which might tear the country apart, and Quebec itself might never recover from that. Let Mr. Lévesque prepare his referendum, since he has a mandate to do so, but let him remember in the meantime that as premier he is committed to respect the existing constitution.

Mr. Speaker, when 300,000 Quebecers are unemployed, when investments dwindle and nervousness takes hold of those who could help Quebec get on its feet again, the provincial premier has no excuse to take a rigid, dogmatic attitude which has no factual basis. Instead of behaving as if the people in Quebec had voted for independence, Premier Lévesque would be better advised to use the tools at hand to restore a disquietly declining economy.

In addition, Mr. Lévesque should stop fooling himself on the chances for a mutually agreeable separation. It takes a good deal of naivety to believe in pleasant divorces. If the Quebec premier persists in going his way in the face of Canadian hostility and international indifference, Quebecers will pay the price. And the price will be high in moral prestige, political influence and economic welfare.

But it will not be enough for Canadians to counter separatism. We will have to learn the lesson and amend our political structures in such a way that each province, and especially Quebec, feels at home in a renovated federalism. In that respect, we should clear up a misunderstanding on which the Prime Minister has been relying too long in his attempt to counter secessionist forces in Quebec.

According to him, the general implementation at all political levels of the Official Languages Act alone would put an end to separatism in Quebec. This is a confusion between the aspirations of French Canada to cultural equality and those of French Quebec to political equality. However praiseworthy and necessary a bilingualism policy, it could not replace a constitutional reform. Only that reform is ever likely to conciliate the desire of French Quebec to become a separate political entity and its need to rely on federal structures able to extend its influence and to amplify its action. It is only under that condition that we will save Canada.

But in the meantime our two main linguistic communities must learn to live together and to develop freely in the mutual respect of their culture. Our history is such that our two founding people are united in blood and that modern Canada was born under the banner of war. It would be vain today to resume yesterday's fights in another form. I for one, Mr. Speaker, am prepared to forget the Plains of Abraham but in return I expect I shall not be reminded of them every day.

This is why, when the issue of minorities is more acute than ever, all Canadians of good will should find the answer in the fairness of a language policy and the fraternity of collective relationships.

To do this, we should consider drafting a charter of minorities that would define the linguistic and the educational rights of the English and the French elements of Canada. Time has come to proclaim A mari usque ad mare the equality of our two main national linguistic communities. Time has come to assert that local communities issued from them have the right to live and develop freely under the protection of laws and to the extent permitted by an heterogeneous environment.

I am not thinking, Mr. Speaker, of a mere statement proclaiming the equality of both official languages and the right of the two funding people to obtain from the state the means to achieve it. This charter of minorities should proclaim the basic right of men to belong to the culture they want and the obligation for the administration to allow them to exercise this right without legal restraints or worries. But the achievement of this purpose, Mr. Speaker, is yet a long way ahead. I happen to wish some times that Canadians get rid of the words generosity, tolerance and understanding in their vocabulary and replace them by one term: acceptance. We shall have to do just that if ever we want our country to survive the disruptions which have too often shattered it. Either we shall decide to accept one another with every compromise that our living together requires, and then we shall see the prospect of a tranquil and great future for Canada; or we shall meanly deprive the other linguistic group of its place in the sun, and then the clouds will grow darker still and the storm will roar.

[Mr. Wagner.]

Please God that at the end of the road we shall not be carried away by a swirl in which the very name of Canada would be but a recollection haunting the conscience of those who would have destroyed it. However, I prefer to conclude on an optimistic note. The years to come will certainly be difficult, our public men will have to act with wisdom and judgment and to show firmness to cope with the dangers which jeopardize our country and to funnel off, for the benefit of an innovating federalism, the centrifugal forces which threaten its unity. But our political leaders will be unable to save this country from collapse if Canadians themselves have not enough will to solve their problems in harmony, dignity and equality. They are the ones who, finally, will tell us whether the Canadian adventure is finished or if, on the contrary, revitalized by its experiences, Canada will start again its progress through history and will bear witness to the political genius and the spirit of brotherhood which inspire its citizens.

● (1550)

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, this is one occasion where I do not mind waiting to say my few words because of the excellent address we have just heard and the applause which was richly deserved.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Saltsman: I must say to my friends in the Conservative party that they are not very reliable in the way they put down motions. When this motion was handed to me, I had to prepare some notes in order to respond to it. I thought we were going to be subjected to a rather one-sided attack on the government, holding them responsible for everything from chilblains to snails in the soup. It turned out to be quite a bit different, and I am pleased to acknowledge that.

I listened with a great deal of interest to the remarks of the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner). I congratulate him on his lyricism, passion and concern for this country: it is just the tone of debate that is required in this serious matter facing our society. I wish to respond to the suggestion he put forward about a parliamentary committee, on a non-partisan basis, to look into the causes of dissatisfaction in confederation. Those are not his exact words, but I think that was their intent. My party has discussed this matter but we have not reached a conclusion on it. I know the government has discussed it. I am quite certain, if I judge my colleagues correctly, that should the government propose such a committee, it would be warmly supported by members of my party. In some way, hon. friends to my right are catching up to the NDP. I am glad to see that.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: What a joke.

Mr. Saltsman: I am trying to be nice. Usually, I have something other than nice to say. I am just trying to be nice and I hope they will accept that as a compliment. I am sure that my leader, Mr. Broadbent, would approve the position they are taking, as would Mr. Lewis, Mr. Douglas, who is here, and as would M. J. Coldwell.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I suggest that the hon. member should refer to members of this House by their constituencies and not by their personal names.

Mr. Saltsman: Some do not have personal constituencies any more, so I took a liberty. I apologize for having used their personal names. In the other place, Senator Hazen Argue, if I may use that name, would even have approved of what has been said today.

This debate has been going on for years. It is not a recent debate; it has been going on as long as I can recall, certainly in my readings of the debates of the Commons long before I came here. Concern has always been expressed about holding the country together. It has been one of the cornerstones of Canadian policy. The great question asked by every government when it introduces a policy or takes a position is: What will it do to national unity? Therefore, it is not a new concern. It is a concern that has been around for a long time—the great confederation debate.

Years ago we took the position, I think the correct position, that while culture, language, and people wanting to determine their own lifestyle is important, it is as important that there be prosperity in Quebec as there be in the rest of Canada. We argued. It was called the class argument. There was a great deal of merit in that argument. We said that we cannot keep this country together if we have unemployment, if one part of the country feels that confederation is not giving it an economic break.

Many of the problems we face today in confederation, while not exclusively for this reason, arise directly from the fact that this government and governments before it have not been able to solve the economic difficulties created by unemployment. Unless these difficulties are solved, we are not going to solve the problems of confederation. That is what I was referring to as the lesson that hon. friends on my right have learned from the NDP. We have argued this matter over and over again. I cannot remember a time when we did not take that position. We now see that position being accepted.

It is interesting to look at the timing of the argument put forward in the motion today. Over the last week the Toronto Star has been running a series of articles on Quebec in which they have been exploring the psyche of Quebec to find out what it is that Quebec really wants. Is it language? Is it culture? The outstanding conclusion of what has been a very important survey is that economics are important in Quebec, unemployment is an important factor, and our ability as a federal government to solve the problems of unemployment may be the decisive issue as to whether we can hold this country together. Therefore, if my party talks about solutions which are not laissez-faire, which call for great government intervention and sticking out our necks, it is important that we pay attention to those solutions. There is no easy way of holding the country together.

I want to say something in fairness to the government. I acknowledge that it is not going to be an easy problem to solve. The situation we face today has not been caused entirely by this administration or any particular administration before it. I do not think the problem would have been completely solved had the NDP been the government in Canada. A lot of this has to do with people's attitudes and their perception of our society. To the extent that Liberals and Conservatives have formed the government, it says something of the Canadian perception of their problems and the kinds of solutions they want to those problems. Our society—not only in Canada, but western society—is changing in a very dramatic way. All the evidence that we have before us, such as the studies carried out and the projections made, indicate a number of things.

If we continue on the path that we are going with our laissez-faire, tinkering attitude, unemployment will get worse. We think it is bad now. There are predictions by reliable people who can bolster their predictions with very sound arguments that the situation will get worse. I do not say it has to be worse; I simply say that if we proceed in the way we are, and do not do anything more than we are now doing—which is not very much—unemployment will increase in the future and confederation will be far from secure.

I wish to read a quotation in order to bolster what I am saying. I know that most members would take my word, but for those inclined not to do so I will read a bit of corroborating detail. I quote from an article which appeared in the Executive magazine of April, 1977:

> Work is going to be hard to get for longer than most people have dared to imagine, unless there are some radical changes in work trends.

The very fact that a magazine like Executive would not edit out a word like "radical" indicates that they are a little concerned these days.

> The most optimistic forecast I can make for 1986 is an unemployment rate of 11 per cent, and the worst case—also, unhappily, the most convincing case—is half as much again, around 17 per cent, or almost as bad as the unemployment Canada experienced at the height of the depression in 1933.

There are reasons for this. I am sorry I do not have as much time as I should like to have today to go into those regions. One of them is the falling birth rate. It is very significant. If you look at the past you will find that much of our growth and prosperity has been fuelled by the birthrate. It has been fuelled by cheap energy and cheap food. It has been fuelled because we did not care about the environment; we wrecked the environment and we despoiled, in one generation, what had not been despoiled for years. That cannot go on any more. It simply means that growth is not going to take place in the traditional way and that employment, as a consequence, will not be available in the traditional way.

Let me read from another article which deals with the question of growth in the foreseeable future. The article is entitled "The Growth of Growth" written by Leon C. Martel, executive vice-president and director of the research management council of the Hudson Institute. It is from "Futures", volume 9, No. 2. Might I, as a digression, put in a good word for the library clipping service? Those of us who use that service are grateful for the fact that they cull these articles, the kind of reading we are just not in a position to do, and make them available to us so we can keep in touch with some of the fine thinking which is going on not only in this country but internationally. Let me read from this article. These are excerpts, because of the shortage of time. The point of the article is to make the case that we cannot really count on the kind of automatic growth which has characterized not only our own society but the western world generally since the end of the Second World War. He says:

With insurance, social security and welfare for all, there will be protection against most of the vagaries of life, and this should produce a shift in priorities and values.

I should say at this point that while I have been critical of other parties, all of us, even with the best intentions, contribute to the kind of difficulty we are in. On balance, however, I would say that were it not for the welfare state, things would be much worse than they are. The welfare state itself creates problems, and that is one of the things we are facing. Some of the problems we have arise from the kind of security we build into the system. On the other hand—and this is far more important, in my opinion—were it not for the welfare system we have built in our society we would be in a worse depression than that experienced in the thirties.

Whatever abuses there may be with respect to unemployment insurance, without unemployment insurance, old age pensions, without medicare or hospital insurance, the western world would be in chaos right now. Having said that, we still have to recognize that this change in our society has itself created problems which call for new approaches and new ideas. The article goes on:

While the flower children of the 1960s have faded, the fact remains that a change in values has occurred.

This is a fundamental fact of our times. We are living in a different world, and the old solutions do not apply. They will not solve things. I continue quoting the article:

With mature economic development and the wealth it brings to individuals, there seems to be an increasing desire to leave things as they are, to be satisfied with the status quo. There is a growing emphasis on the protection and preservation of what one has, on health, comfort, safety, and the environment. This in turn spawns attitudes of risk aversion and localism.

In the past, in most cultures, people were taught that happiness was to be achieved as a more or less reasonable by-product of some other activity—a satisfactory job, the recognition of one's achievements, a devoted family, close friends, and so forth. Happiness was not usually recognized itself as an important value. However, today in affluent societies there is increasing emphasis on the direct search for happiness. The result is often a heedless hedonism.

The above trends and tendencies, and others which arise from them, can be found in varying degrees in most developed nations today. As they continue accelerating and reinforcing each other they will slow rates of growth. Already the process is under way and it is unlikely that Western Europe and North America will again experience sustained growth rates at the average annual level achieved in the decades following the Second World War.

Those of us who are close to the people of Canada, because we represent them, know this to be true. Our own personal experience tells us that our world has changed. While it may not be possible at this time fully to understand what we are going through or the way in which the change is taking place, or the rate at which change is taking place, how many of us can say we do not sense the new society which is emerging or that we do not recognize that the old solutions are not working?

To get back to the central theme, the problem of unemployment and its effect on confederation, I want to say that while I give colleagues on my right high marks for learning their lesson today, I am not prepared to give them a full diploma, because while they have learned something from the NDP, it is only part of what we are saying. We are saying something else, and we have said it since the inception of our party. It is truer and more needed today than ever before.

What we are saying is that there is need for equal dignity for all. It will not be enough to provide jobs in Quebec, say, if they are ditch-digging jobs. This is what Quebec is saying and perhaps it is at the heart of the whole problem over language. Unfortunately, in Quebec language and jobs are related. It is an unfortunate fact that the big, important jobs were reserved for those who spoke English.

No self-respecting person can accept that in order to get a decent job he or she must learn somebody else's language. English, to Francophones, is somebody else's language. They are as entitled to their language as are the English. I should not have to state this, but I wish to do so to make clear what I am saying. This became obvious during the air controllers' strike. We talk about opportunity. Again, it is not enough to say we are going to create many jobs. What kind of jobs; and who is to get them? Will they be good jobs? I am sure that during the air controllers' strike a few months ago the question of air safety was an important one and that many of the people who put forward arguments on this basis were doing so with great sincerity. I do not question their motives. But in the way in which it was put forward, it was perceived as a means of preventing those who spoke French from getting jobs to which they were entitled. It was perceived as a way in which the English could continue to occupy positions at the top, to the detriment of the Francophones. Therefore, it is not enough to provide jobs. You have to ask about the quality of the jobs and the nature of the jobs, and there has to be equal dignity attached to them.

Then there is another matter. We have always talked about the need to redistribute income in this country, not only as between the English and the English but between the French and the English and perhaps between Canadians and the rest of the world. That is essential. If new jobs are created, some people will get very good jobs and others will get not such good jobs, and the gap between them will be enormous. Even if the question of language or the question of culture did not arise, we must see that these other matters are taken into account.

As it turns out, according to my calculations, in order to deal with this new world which all of us sense is upon us, and in order to deal with the new problems which are associated with this new world, we must redistribute income. We cannot go on having the disparity of income that exists in our society today. Let me give an example of one incredible distortion which has taken place and for which we are to blame. If people are angry at their legislators for this, then I do not blame them. We encourage people to go to university. To learn, to enlarge their knowledge of the world? No—because university is the passport to making more money. We had the Dennison report, a study we copied from the United States, which related productivity and high income to education. Therefore, we falsely encouraged—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Has the hon. member unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Saltsman: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and through you may I thank my colleagues in the House. I appreciate this opportunity to continue for a few moments, but I will not be too long. This is an important point to me. Looking back, it is a terrible mistake which we made. We should have seen it, but most of us did not. Why did these people go to university? Because it was an "Open sesame". At a time when we needed plumbers, carpenters, machinists, orderlies, all kinds of people with practical skills we encouraged most of our students to get a B.A.

What has been the consequence of this? We are not the only country which has done this sort of thing. Every western country has done the same. We now have people coming out of university faced with fantastic frustration, knowing they have given four or five years of their lives to learn a skill for which there is no opening. They are resentful and bitter. It is hard to say to them "Yes, I know you have a B.A. in political science, but you may have to work side by side in a factory with someone who was a high school dropout".

In some ways we should not feel too bad about this, because having gone to school is not a waste. Anyone who has spent some time at school, whether or not they can apply everything they learned there, has done something to improve himself. If they have to work and get their hands dirty, so what? I do not buy the argument that because someone has a baccalaureate he has the right to go around with clean finger-nails for the rest of his life. We really have to demonstrate that we have respect for labour. We must make sure that a man who leaves home at five or six o'clock in the morning to go to work in a factory has equal treatment and equal pay with the person who leaves for the office at nine o'clock and perhaps returns home at four and never get his hands dirty.

We have had this double standard in our society, this cruel elitism, this aversion toward the blue-collar worker. We are now paying for it. We have forced a whole generation into believing that the road to dignity is the clean shirt. The road to dignity is more than just a clean shirt; it is what that person is and what kind of contribution that person makes. The waitress, the man who works in the factory or the orderly who works in the hospital deserve our praise and recognition, as does the lawyer, the doctor or the MP. We are entering upon a society where equality of income will no longer be some kind of socialist pipe dream where we pat a person on his head and say he is a fine fellow. That is very idealistic, but it will not work. What I am saying is that if that sort of thing happens then our society is not going to work.

There are other matters I should like to deal with, but I do not want to trespass upon the generosity of my colleagues who have granted me extra time. I want to conclude by pointing out some of the things which I think need to be done, aside from the general proposition I have been putting forward about redistribution of income and commitment to full employment. Our society must commit itself to work, not welfare. Welfare must certainly be provided if we cannot provide jobs, but it is a sign of our failure. If a person is receiving welfare or unemployment insurance because he cannot find a job, then that is not his fault. But we can certainly condemn a society that cannot solve the problem of providing jobs for its people. As I have said, we have to assert the dignity of all work; we have to get rid of elitism.

There are many things we can do, Mr. Speaker. We can embark upon capital projects, and to get the money for these we have to learn to tax those who have it. I know the House has been averse to doing this. The government, supported by the official opposition, had done the worst possible thing, faced with the kind of situation we are in. The last budget was essentially a budget which gave more to the well-off than it gave to the poor. At a time when we have to increase purchasing power and when our number one problem is unemployment, the government, supported by the official opposition, encourages savings. This is a good way to put ourselves into an even worse situation.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): We did not vote for the budget. What are you talking about?

Mr. Saltsman: We should also give consideration to earlier retirement. Many young people have come to me and told me that their father or their uncle is working, that he is tired and they wish they could get a job. The uncle or the father, on the other hand, would probably say, "Why should I slug it out? Having worked 45 years, I should like to quit now". I say, let the young people have a job. Certainly, this is one of the changes the government must consider. I know this cannot be done in one fell swoop, but let the government at least work toward lowering the age of retirment. If it cannot be done for both men and women, then let us forget about women's lib and let us start to lower the age of retirement for women.

If the government does not want to do it on a universal basis, then let it be optional. But let us at least move in that direction since jobs will not be available for everyone. Just as we must create jobs, we must also take people off the labour market. If a person does not want to come off the labour market, fine. If a man wants to work until he is 80, I say good luck to him. But a lot of people do not want to do that.

I congratulate the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe on his motion, and I thank hon. members for allowing me indulgence to continue for a few more minutes.

● (1620)

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, I must congratulate at this point the mover of this motion on such an important, essential and urgent matter. We, in the House of Commons, are probably those who, in the history of this country, will have made the most momentous decision.

Therefore, I commend the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) for trying to bring serenity to a debate which could easily become overheated. The fact is, Mr. Speaker, that it is very difficult to remain calm when the government resorts to arrogance, anger and sometimes even blackmail. I say Canadian problems will not be solved in a dispassionate manner as long as we have this government and particularly its leader.

Mr. Speaker, we must accept matters as they are. And when the future of the country lies in the hands of a sophist who is primarily interested in winning an intellectual argument, we cannot expect to solve our economical problems. It is quite normal also when we realize that the leaders of this country were so shortsighted that a few weeks prior to November 15, they were proclaiming all over the world, in Japan particularly, that there were no more separatists in Quebec. What are these people doing, Mr. Speaker? What are they doing now at the head of this country? I say that they are destroying it. And when I hear those same individuals accusing Quebecers in particular of trying to break Canada, Mr. Speaker, I say the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and his cabinet have a real tunnel vision as to what Canadian unity means. They are now obsessed with their own idea of national unity and God knows that is not the answer for this country. We will have to come down to earth, as the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe suggested, and realize that we have to create a climate where we can sit down and discuss, and agree on the best way to achieve Canadian unity.

And why would such unity not be achieved within a common market within which fully independent Canadian entities could develop freely? Why not, Mr. Speaker? Why has it to be this heavy burden of unpopular, costly, harmless bilingualism that the Prime Minister has been trying to establish for years when a majority of Canadians are against it? Mr. Speaker, this is a lack of realism. It is an attempt by someone to destroy the country with his fallacies. He is supported by irresponsible people who cheer him on, such as the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard) who is faced with the following dilemma: he wonders to what extent he should help Quebec, because in doing so, he proves that the Quebec government is right, and to what extent he should not restrain his department's expenditures and let Quebecers know that they had better stay within this obsolete and outmoded federalism which divides us.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

Mr. Speaker, when the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion, on the pretext of being too busy, refuses to meet the Quebec minister Mr. Leonard to finalize a federal-provincial agreement, which shows the goodwill of the Quebec government, when, instead of solving this problem, the minister prefers to campaign for the Liberal candidate in the Témiscamingue riding, I say that he is irresponsible, and this is what causes an unhealthy climate to develop, one which will bring about the destruction of this country. May I add, Mr. Speaker, that for those reasons I have to agree entirely with René Levesque who said lately about this minister, and I quote:

> At present, they are a bunch of bunglers. That is how they behave! Mr. Macdonald went to New York to meet financial analysts and he told them the same old story of uncertainty, and so on.

In addition, Mr. Speaker, and I am no longer quoting, the Prime Minister went to Washington and he dared say a terrible thing—that if Quebec wanted to become independent, to develop freely in its own way, to come to an agreement with the rest of Canada in the best interests of the whole country, it would be a crime against mankind! Does our Prime Minister think he is God himself, Mr. Speaker, to say such nonsense and such terrible things? Well, such are the things which destroy this country. It is not the Quebec separatists only who want to compel Canada to find its own identity.

Mr. Speaker, this partnership that could be created among Canadians of goodwill, this true partnership based upon the absolute respect of sovereignty and the mutual agreements which could cover all the jurisdictions over those areas that can be administered in a comprehensive way, this is, I suggest, a very commendable goal, one which all of us in this House should try to achieve. This is also why you have René Matte, the member for Champlain, who fights for the independence of Quebec, but at the same time is prepared to discuss with everybody this country's future. This is easy to understand, there is no argument against it.

I would rather have a straightforward and honest proposal than pieces of sophistry, flip flops and what not, Mr. Speaker. One should see things as they are, and I go on quoting the Premier of Quebec:

> As for me, I suggest that those people do not do their job as government members for the whole of Canada, which we are still part of, and within which we are quite willing to maintain normal relations which can be discussed among people representing the same kind and the same level of taxpayers. They are increasingly behaving like a bunch of petty terrorists. It seems to me that the majority of Quebecers should realize that. They do not behave as Quebecers and, in a way, at the national level, as good Canadians.

This is the attitude of the Prime Minister and his ministers when they try in every possible way to create a climate of uncertainty by making Quebecers fear their livelihood and their economic future is threatened. They say to them: "Go ahead, enroll in the fight for federalism." One thing must be realized, Mr. Speaker. At the time the men we would now call the "grand-daddies of Confederation" were holding their meetings, they had in mind some unitarian form of government of course, but nothing like Confederation. This has been the source of all sorts of problems, and this is why today we are at the turning point in our history. A solution must be found at all costs. But what is the governments doing? It is simply worsening the economic disorder. Therefore, the consequences of such disorder upon the spirit and unity of the country are disastrous, to quote from the motion.

Mr. Speaker, what is it that will prompt Quebecers to vote for independence at the next referendum? Why? The answer is: Because the people in an industry which has been basic in Quebec for years, as was the shoe industry, which used to supply 95 percent of the Canadian market 25 years ago, have seen that, thanks to the actions of the federal government, the total Canadian shoe production came down from 58.5 percent in 1968 to 51 percent in 1974, 50.7 percent in 1975, 45.8 percent in in 1976 and 32 per cent 1977. During that period, imports rose from 41.5 to 68 percent. That industry was mainly based in Quebec. Did the federal government help Quebecers keep their industry and increase their economic power? Not at all. People are wearing shoes from Sweden, from Taiwan, from Japan and Poland, but in the meantime Quebecers are unemployed. Is there a belief this will lead Quebecers to vote for federalism? Do you think, Mr. Speaker, that Quebec farmers producing 60 percent of the overall dairy production in Canada will vote for federalism, when the government has been systematically allowing increasing volumes of butter and cheese imports over the last ten years? Recently still, there could be seen in Quebec powdered milk bags from New Zealand, while the industrial milk producer was penalized because of powdered milk surpluses. Is that what a federal government is all about? Will Quebecers vote for Mr. Trudeau's kind of federalism? An end should be put to the monstrosities and historical absurdities we are hearing. Even when uttered from the Capitol in Washington, they do not become any more intelligent.

I think it would be better if the Prime Minister tried to cope with financial problems. Had nobody made suggestions we could understand that he has to look for them, but heaven knows our party particularly came up with proposals to settle that economic problem so as to pave the way for our country's unity, but I say a unity which would faithfully reflect the Canadian reality.

Mr. Speaker, we have noted all these things but then we see the government behave in such a way as to prompt businessmen like Mr. Crump, former Canadian Pacific chairman, to state the same sort of nonsense as the leader of the government, and I quote:

I believe that if this bill . . .

. . . speaking about the language bill in Quebec.

. . . is approved in its present form, any national or multinational company which will not move its head office from Quebec—will do its owners a disservice.

Mr. Speaker, why did Mr. Crump say that? That is what the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard) has been telling us for weeks, he who has been seeing head offices heading for the nearest border. He is creating that artificial atmosphere, which is why the economic situation is so disastrous. So I will conclude by saying that it is absolutely important, particularly in this place, that we should come down to earth and stop thinking ill-advisedly that Canadian unity has only one form. We should have open minds and be Canadians enough, I should say, to understand that perhaps the present Quebec government is the one which most wants Canada to continue as a nation, but that it should do so in full respect for its components.

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, first I wish to congratulate the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) for his excellent contribution to the debate on the motion he presented before the House. I also wish to congratulate the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) for his contribution to that same debate. I wish to comment on some points raised in those two very clear and well-balanced statements and although it is, of course, an analysis by the opposition parties, I think it makes a very positive contribution to the solution of economic and political problems that worry all Canadians and of course, all members of the House.

Mr. Speaker, considering the short time at my disposal, I shall not waste it commenting on the ineptitude and the separatist demagogy of the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte).

Mr. Matte: I expected nothing less.

Mr. Lalonde: I shall leave it to someone else. I think that such a contribution deserves only to be ignored in the debate we want to have today.

The motion blames the government for the economic disorder in Canada and deplores its consequences on the spirit and unity of the country. I thought we were going to discuss in length the economic situation but apparently they preferred to place the debate in a larger context and I do not object to this, on the contrary.

● (1640)

I would like to deal with a few points made by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) and make a few comments on some of his remarks. I am pleased to hear and note how his views are akin to the government's in a great many areas. As a matter of fact, some of his statements, and suggestions have been made by the right hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) or some ministers on various occasions. Whether it is the matter of the Francophones' rights in this country, or the importance of guaranteeing the Francophone community not only linguistic but also economic rights and a fair economic role in keeping with their talents, those concerns are exactly those the government has been expressing for a number of years. As for revising our federalism, again this is nothing new, since in 1966 and 1967, this government brought about proposals for a complete review of the Canadian constitution.

Those discussions led to several premiers' conferences and to a proposal known as the Victoria Charter. For historical reasons that are well known, there was no agreement at that time, but it is important to remember that in spite of those failures, over the years, the Prime Minister indicated to the provinces, again in a letter he sent them at the beginning of last December, that he was willing to sit down with them at any time and either discuss a restricted formula for amending the Constitution, in order to repatriate our Constitution, or to make a complete revision of our Constitution, depending on the choice and discretion of the provinces. Until now, most provinces have not seen fit to follow up that proposal. Some of them seem to have indicated they were considering it. Others, particularly Quebec, have repeatedly indicated that their government was not interested in any negotiation whatsoever before the referendum was held. Again last weekend, the premier of Quebec took that position.

It may also be important to recall what the Prime Minister said in this regard in Quebec City not so long ago because, to my mind, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe gave, in his speech, a truncated if not erroneous interpretation of the position of the government with regard to the whole matter. When we stand up for the French language, when we champion the equality of the two languages in this country, we do not do so as if it were the only means of frustrating the separatist tendencies evident in Quebec. The official languages proposal was put many years ago and once again, not for strictly political, immediate, or partisan objectives: it was made to guarantee the Francophones of this country, and the Anglophones as well where they are in a minority the rights to which they are entitled. It is merely a matter of respecting the minorities in Canada. The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe spoke of a charter for the minorities: that is precisely what the government proposed in Victoria when it was suggested that a list of the fundamental rights of the citizens, and especially recognition of their linguistic rights, should be entrenched in the Canadian Constitution.

There again, even if there were absolutely no separatist tendencies in Canada, even if no one was trying to break up the country I am convinced, as well as this government, that it would have been necessary, in all fairness, to enact legislation such as the Official Languages Act which this Parliament adopted. But it is a far cry from that to claiming that the position of the government is based strictly on a linguistic matter, and that it is the opinion of the government that in meeting the linguistic problems we will solve all problems of a political nature in our country; this is surely a false and erroneous interpretation of the stand taken by this government. Moreover, I remind the House of the statement the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made in Quebec City quite recently, when he addressed the Quebec Board of Trade on January 31: He said quite clearly and I quote:

> In the constitution, I think there is only one principle, that is to respect the rights of men and women, the respect of human rights, and probably the respect of the collective aspect of these human rights. I'm thinking of language, the right of regions to exist. And from this principle you can start from the beginning: write a new constitution. We haven't had one in 110 years, we can make one. And I refuse no challenge. All that I ask as long as I am here is that it must be concretely established that such and such a level of power, for example, must be exercised at the federal-provincial level in such a way that the Canadian community will profit by it.

[Mr. Lalonde.]

This, Mr. Speaker, is the position of the Prime Minister, and of this government. We have indicated once again, as recently as in the letter the Prime Minister wrote in early December to the provinces, that we are always ready to sit down and discuss such a basic constitutional review.

Having said that, Mr. Speaker, it is quite obvious on the other hand that there is a fundamental disagreement between the position of this government and that of the Quebec government at this time. And never will my colleagues or myself subscribe to an objective aimed at the destruction of this country and the separation of Quebec from the rest of Canada. However, this does not mean once again that we are for the constitutional status quo or that it is impossible to consider certain rearrangements of powers between the provincial governments and the federal government. The great flexibility of federalism, Mr. Speaker, has been demonstrated by the fact that there are not two identical federal systems in the whole world and that many forms of federalism can be found among the various countries that have adopted that form of government throughout the world. But when once again the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe suggests in his speech that his party has been concerned about over-centralization for years, he is truthfully stating the speeches made by his colleagues in recent years. But what is important to note is not so much the speeches on this matter, but the facts. And what are the facts? Well, the facts are that there is practically not a government in the world today or a country in the world with a federal form of government that has a system as decentralized as Canada. I will only mention, for example, the United States, Germany, Switzerland, Australia, where the central power accounts for a much greater part of the total public expenditures than the Canadian government today.

And this is borne out by the evolution of public expenditures in recent years. Mr. Speaker, suffice to recall that in 1965, after transfers to the provinces the federal government took 53 per cent of the tax base, and that percentage went to 40 per cent in 1975. And in 1977, under the agreement reached at the last conference of first ministers last December, it is expected that the percentage of the tax base accruing to the federal government will represent only 37 per cent as compared with 63 per cent going to the provinces and municipalities. Well, when the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe was suggesting in his speech that the provinces are complaining of a lack of funds to carry out industrial development, I think that is a somewhat limited perception of the situation. In fact, provinces and municipalities have taken an increasingly larger share of the tax basis and the question now being asked by many is whether the federal government will soon be left with a share of the tax basis large enough to be able to truly assume its responsibilities and keep its commitments.

The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe also talked about a national priority council. I would remind the House that we have had a national priority council in Canada for many years and that it takes various forms. It can be found within federal-provincial conferences, where ministers are commissioned by their government to decide to jointly agree on the directions to be given to various areas of government activity. When there is a meeting of either the ministers of agriculture or the ministers of health and welfare, or the ministers of energy, or the finance ministers on a regular basis as we have seen, and finally, when the premiers meet as frequently and as regularly as has been the case in the last few years, on those occasions the provincial and federal governments do in fact sit down together and determine our national priorities, and these priorities are set by the people who are democratically responsible to their constituents for assuming the burden of the decisions which are made during these meetings.

The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe also talked about the need for better information on the economic aspects of federalism. I believe that all governments have become aware of this in the last few years and through the ministers of finance, considerable work has been done by federal-provincial committees on all economic aspects of the Canadian activity. To have considerable statistical information on the taxation situation and the economic situation of the various areas of the country is nothing new. In the last few years, Statistics Canada has made considerable efforts to improve the quality of information in this field so as to truly allow an informed debate among the citizens and the government in Canada to take place, and we are happy to see that more and more information is given to the public in this area.

Unfortunately, some people make reference to it abusively and in a partisan spirit. I am referring particularly to the famous economic accounts that the Quebec government made public recently and which, obviously, backfired on those who thought they had planted a bomb within the federal system. It is quite interesting to see how the Quebec government, and the ministers who were involved in this matter, are now shunning the subject and trying to ignore this sad experience.

I think that it might be a lesson to all those who should be careful not to put words into their mouths, not to distort them for purely sectarian reasons, and in so doing delude and mislead the public, which cannot promote a worthy and healthy democratic debate.

The mover of the motion has also regretted that the opposition seemed to be unaware of the work done by the national unity group. I remind him that the director of this group met with each party leader when the group was formed and he mentioned, on behalf of the government, that he was at the disposal of the party leaders and/or the parliamentary groups of each party and/or the party caucus, and that whenever these groups would like to meet him and have discussions, he would be ready to do so.

Finally, as to the proposal to establish a parliamentary committee that would look into the causes of the uneasiness in our country and would propose means of improving the situation in Canada, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe also knows that this is another question which has been explored by the parliamentary leaders of the various political parties, and we shall have to await the result of those discussions before making a final decision as to the timeliness of such action.

In the few minutes I have left, I should like, Mr. Speaker, to deal with and put on record a number of facts pertaining to the very nature of the motion before us. That motion deals with the situation of the economy, and I think the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) was quite right when he said it was impossible to talk about the political situation in Canada without dealing with the economy, and that it was an illusion to think that Canadian federalism could work if the Canadian economy does not work.

Of course, in the last few years our country has faced and is still facing economic problems. The government is aware of it and is concerned about this situation, and it has taken various steps and measures in order to solve, at least in part, these problems, whether it be unemployment or inflation. Here I should like to quote what an old Franciscan friend of mine used to say: "When I look at myself, I grieve, but when I compare myself to others, I take heart." The same remark could apply to the Canadian economy.

A few days ago, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) tabled in the House the Economic Review for 1976. This review provides us with a most valuable reference work to assess the performance of the Candadian economy not in isolation but in the general context of the world economy. I regret that my colleague the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe, an expert on international affairs, did not deal with this matter within a somewhat broader context.

I shall refer to the fact that 1976 was a year of continued economic recovery following the most severe slowdown in over 30 years. In most of the major member countries of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, the OECD, the upturn happened in early 1975. In the OECD area, the real output increased at the annual rate of 4½ per cent in the second half of 1975, and showed a 6 per cent rate in the first half of 1976. As personal expenditures stabilized and inventories became negligible, there was a 3¼ per cent slowdown in the annual growth rate in the second half of 1976. The slow recovery was due to the fact that the authorities were cautious in stimulating demand, because of the underlying inflation, and to the fact that investments did not take over at the usual stage of expansion. For the whole year 1976, the real growth rate averaged 5 per cent in the OECD area. In the 24 OECD member countries, consumer prices, after an average increase of 11.4 per cent in 1975, showed an 8.6 per cent increase in 1976. With a 7.5 per cent rate, Canada ranked fourth for the slowest price increase, behind Switzerland, West Germany and the United States.

I would like to draw the attention of the House to a recent study prepared by the national bureau of economic research in the United States. The study showed that in comparison with the other six major western industrialized nations, Canada had the best economic recovery from the 1973-75 recession. This country's index of economic performance in March of this year, according to the bureau, was 67 per cent ahead of its situation at the start of that recession.

This reflects the fact that because of the economic policies pursued by this government in the early 1970's, the drop in Canadian economic activity was not nearly as severe as that experienced by other countries. Comparable figures for West Germany, France and the United States show that their recovery was not as strong. It was between 2 per cent and 10 per cent of their pre-recession situation. Italy, Japan and the United Kingdom, on the other hand, have not yet recovered fully the level of economic activity they experienced prior to the recession. This study, prepared in advance of the recent London summit meeting, is based on a monthly index of economic performance which summarizes in a single indicator the more important measures of aggregate economic activity such as income, output, employment, unemployment, and sales.

The authors of the study, which was published in the New York Times, note that reliance on any single measure of economic activity, even such important and frequently used indicators as the index of industrial production and the rate of unemployment, can give erroneous assessments of economic performance. To underscore the fact that persistent high levels of unemployment are an international phenomenon, the study reveals that none of the countries attending the Downing Street summit has yet managed to get its unemployment rate down to the levels prior to the recession.

May I remind the House that this particular subject was one of the topics discussed at the Economic Summit on May 7 and 8. Canada, together with the United States, the United Kingdom, France, Germany, Japan and Italy, took part in the Economic Summit in London. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) and the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) emphasized the critical importance of dealing in a systematic and co-ordinated way with the economic problems facing the western world. This approach was welcomed by all the leaders present and provided the basis for the Downing Street declaration which was issued following the summit conference. I would like to quote a few sentences from that declaration because they summarize the approach being taken by Canada and our western allies to solve the economic challenges before us. I quote:

> The world economy has to be seen as a whole; it involves not only co-operation among national government but also strengthening appropriate international organizations. We were reinforced in our awareness of the interrelationship of all the issues before us, as well as our interdependence. We are determined to respond collectively to the challenges of the future.
> Our most urgent task is to create more jobs while continuing to reduce inflation. Inflation does not reduce unemployment. On the contrary, it is one of its major causes. We are particularly concerned about the problem of unemployment among young people.
> We commit our governments to stated economic growth targets or to stabilization policies which, taken as whole, should provide a basis for sustained non-inflationary growth.
> We will provide strong political leadership to expand opportunities for trade to strengthen the open international trading system, which will increase job opportunities. We reject protectionism: it would foster unemployment, increase inflation and undermine the welfare of our peoples.
> The message of the Downing Street Summit is thus one of confidence:
> —in the continuing strength of our societies and proven democratic principles that give them vitality;
> —that we are undertaking the measures needed to overcome problems and achieve a more prosperous future.

This is the statement to which Canada subscribed. Canada was a very, very active participant indeed in the preparation of this statement.

[Translation]

We share those objectives with the other industrialized countries that participated in the London summit meeting. We want to reach those objectives in close co-operation with those countries. We also want to reach those objectives through the measures we are going to take and implement in Canada. And much as we must get the co-operation of other industrialized countries, so must we get the close co-operation of all provincial governments in this country with the federal government. Our work will be all the more easier if we can depend on that close co-operation and avoid a partisan approach to the economic debates.

Earlier the hon. member for Champlain mentioned my colleague, the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard). Obviously, Mr. Speaker, ministers cannot be at the disposal of another minister on a six- or ten-hour notice each time they receive a telegram. But for the infomation of the hon. member I shall tell him that my colleague is meeting with the Quebec Minister of Regional Economic Expansion and they are having discussions aimed at improving the existing agreements. And I hope that that new spirit of co-operation rather than confrontation shown by that Quebec colleague will reflect on several of his other colleagues as concerns economic development in Quebec, particularly during the coming months and years.

We are not looking for confrontation or conflicts. We have the responsibility to work for the economic advancement of all regions of the country and since November 15, all my colleagues have constantly consulted the economic communities in Canada and abroad to encourage investors to continue their investments in Quebec and Canada during the months and years to come. When the Quebec premier recently made statements comparable to those of the hon. member for Champlain in this House, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Chrétien) was perfectly right to say that the premier "perdait les pédales" as we say in Québec.

Mr. Speaker, those are the brief comments I wanted to make on the important issue raised by the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe. I thank the House for its good attention and I hope that the contributions to this debate will be on a par with those of the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe and of the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the question to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment is as follows: the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie)—Canadian Broadcasting Corporation—Request that final games of World Hockey League championship be televised.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—ALLEGED GOVERNMENT RESPONSIBILITY FOR "ECONOMIC DISORDER"

The House resumed consideration of Mr. Wagner's motion:

That this House holds the Government directly responsible for the present economic disorder in Canada and the disastrous consequences of that disorder upon the spirit and unity of the country.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, it is often said that "plus ça change, plus c'est la même chose". To begin with this afternoon, I would like to congratulate my colleague the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner), the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) and the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde). I think there was not too much partisanship, which shows that my colleague's motion deals with a fundamental problem in this country, quite a debatable motion actually in this House in the way we should have debates and discussions here in the House. This is Parliament, Mr. Speaker, where we express our views. We exchange them eventually. Since we come from various parts of the country, accommodations can be made and it is in accommodation that lies the success of our federation. After all, it is the lesson given during the last century by all federations. They represent various interests, but undoubtedly they realize, and that is indisputable, that the strength of the federation far exceeds the individual strengths of federation members, but once in a while, problems do arise.

[English]

I would like to go back almost a century, to 1878, when the first Liberal prime minister, Alexander Mackenzie, observed that there were three great problems facing Canada at that time: inflation, unemployment, and national unity. Of course. Canada was only 11 years old then. It was not a thrust that came out of Quebec or out of what was formerly Lower Canada which called national unity into question. It was from Nova Scotia. If one bothers to read Canadian history, a subject which is not taught very much in our schools and one in which present-day commentators are not well versed, one recalls that Joseph Howe actually got the Nova Scotia legislature to pass a resolution approving withdrawal from confederation. But such was the good sense of the people of Nova Scotia that they saw this was not the right way. So the little firecrackers we now hear, banging off here and there in certain areas of Canada, not only in Quebec—there are some damp squibs which go off from time to time in western Canada—are nothing new.

There is one further dimension. Today we are seeing far too much confrontation, a sort of dialectic approach to the problem which to my mind contributes nothing to an eventual solution. Some have suggested that our feelings on this question are more tense than they were years ago. Well, Mr. Speaker, I don't know. If we read the important speeches of Joseph Howe and the others of his generation, I am sure we would be persuaded that Canadians of a century ago spoke with as much heat and emotion as people do today. It is true, of course, that this could be appreciated directly only by those who listened to them at political meetings, or, to a lesser extent, read their speeches as reported in the press; there were no facilities for instant communication such as we have today, nor for the almost equally instant editorializing which is done by program producers with regard to the comments of today's political leaders as they appear on radio or television. Nevertheless, I suggest the intensity of emotion was just as great in those days as it is now.

Perhaps our problems are more complex. I do not know whether this is true or not. Complexity is always relative. As to the solutions which might be proposed, in their context they will not be more dramatic. They will certainly not be more untried than those put forward by the pioneers of this country. I do not look upon this motion as being a matter of Canada versus Quebec, or of Quebec versus the rest.

Or of French-speaking Canadians, not only in Quebec but elsewhere, versus the rest of the country. Not at all. What is the text of this motion? I quote:

That this House holds the Government directly responsible for the present economic disorder . . .

It is about economic disorder. We must consider this matter and unfortunately the minister did not go through the question. I think that he evaded this difficulty wisely and carefully because we know that there is economic disorder throughout Canada. And the motion concluded this way, and I quote:

. . . and the disastrous consequences of that disorder upon the spirit and unity of the country.

[English]

Of course, the economic problems of the country must be reflected in the attitudes of Canadians wherever they may live, and they certainly are applying strains on national unity. The media maintain a high profile for the situation in Quebec. But that is only a symptom of the malaise which has existed all along in confederation. The people of Quebec express themselves culturally, linguistically and in other ways because they are a people and they have been affected by regional circumstances. There is no such thing as painting Canada with the same brush from St. John's, Newfoundland, to Victoria. Commentators have always thought in terms of finding a sudden solution to Canada's problems.

Mr. Speaker, we shall always have problems. We have had them for a hundred years. We have them today. We shall have them a century from now, perhaps because there are so many factors over which man has no control, including the fact that he cannot be relied upon always to make the best decision. Let us see where we can go to fight this regionalism. Economic difficulties? We have had inflation since 1968 under the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau). I remember seeing him before the television cameras announcing measures of stringency, restrictions on the hiring of new public servants, and so forth. I happened to be enjoying a holiday on Cape Breton Island on that occasion. I was in Sydney, Nova Scotia, that day and I watched the Prime Minister telling us the government had resolved to deal with inflation. It was not very long afterwards that he told us inflation had been wrestled to the ground. But it continued. Some 18 months ago the then minister of finance quarrelled with his prime minister, resigned and slammed the door. They talk about splits in parties! What was that but a split, and a fundamental split?

We have had inflation, and it is the federal government which is responsible for allowing it to develop and to carry through from 1968 to 1975 relatively unchecked. As a matter of fact, in the early 1970s they were in there fuelling it with the greatest of coal shovels, piling on the heat. We have had nothing but a history of accelerating unemployment. The solutions have been shoved under the carpet. Here and there there has been a mandate, but no fundamental solutions. Or if there were solutions to be applied, the government has failed right across the country to recognize the problems on a regional basis.

We have declining exports on a constant dollar basis. Our trade is in one hell of a mess. We are faced with high cost and low productivity. In what I am saying now I am going after hon. friends to my far left.

Mr. Paproski: They have gone.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): They seem to think they have the sole mandate to speak for organized labour. Within the last three or four years there has developed, somehow, the mistaken philosophy that you can take out of the Canadian economy more than you put in and stuff yourself sick with the money you get out, or with the leisure that you want at someone else's expense. Tie this in with a stupid unemployment insurance scheme which is not insurance at all.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It is welfare.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): A former minister responsible for unemployment insurance, who has also slammed the door on this place and is now in Quebec, said that unemployment insurance was the cornerstone of a guaranteed annual income which he was going to implement. It now appears that one union wants a 30-hour work week and a 10-minute break every hour. Until we decide that we are going to be masters of our own economy, that we are going to produce for our own benefit and for those for whom we are responsible, we will have these kinds of recurring problems.

There is no such thing as the status quo in this regard, Mr. Speaker. Either we improve the situation, or it belabours us about the ears until we are silly. Despite DREE and the hundreds of millions of dollars which have been spent, we have slow-growth economic areas. Are any of the these areas better off as a result of all the money which has been poured into them? I do not think so. For a long time the government resisted having the Economic Council of Canada look at that type of program when it was within the power and the purpose of the council to do so. No, the government is using the old type of snake bite medicine which used to be sold on the carnival circuit, the type of philosophy that cannot stand examination. They would not dare to send it to the laboratory for examination, but it sounded good, and at election time some real IOUs in certain areas were collected as a result thereof. That has been the history of DREE.

The consequences have been disastrous. In western Canada, the premiers have just completed a monumental and most memorable conference in Brandon. They have listed 130 intrusions by the federal government into the activities or spheres of action of the provinces. The provinces of western Canada have been complaining for decades about the transportation policy which has been in place, in the same way that the province of Quebec has been complaining in many fields for decades. We had the western economic opportunities conference in Calgary three years ago, and we saw the Prime Minister, the former minister of finance, Mr. Turner, and the former minister of transport, now Senator Marchand, marching along the road to Calgary in—

Mr. MacFarlane: Calvary?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): They should have marched along the road to Calvary, but I said "Calgary"—marching along the road, in penitence robes, saying that the government of Canada would do much better for the western provinces. They gave a solemn undertaking. I say, mere words, mere puffery, mere hypocrisy. Not one thing has been done for the western provinces. One can see the bitterness and frustration of the western premiers which they expressed in Brandon.

Mr. O'Connell: Are you sure not one thing was done?

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): If one thing was done, then perhaps it was like the pebble on the beach, totally lost.

Mr. O'Connell: More than one.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Since 1974 very little which was fundamental has been done for western Canada, but the point I want to come to is this. I should like to refer hon. members, in the limited time left to me, to a paper prepared by Dr. O. J. Firestone of the University of Ottawa last March. It has been presented, so I may refer to it. I am sorry I do not have the opportunity to make much more reference to it. It is entitled "The Economic Case for Regional Decision-Making" and its historical approach is masterful. I commend it to all hon. members. They can get copies of the paper from me, and in it they will see that Dr. Firestone has hit upon a fundamental truth.

We hear the Premier of Quebec saying that more decisions of an economic nature must be made in Quebec City. Premier Lougheed says more economic decisions which affect Alberta should be made in Edmonton and Calgary rather than in Ottawa, Montreal or Toronto. In other words, the status quo must not continue. This so-called separation reminds me of the married couple where one spouse says, "I am going to divorce you, but I am reserving weekend rights". That is what we are being offered by Mr. Morin and company.

Mr. Paproski: And a joint bank account.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): Yes, a joint bank account. It is similar to a unilateral divorce in which week end visiting rights are preserved.

An hon. Member: With twin beds.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): With twin beds, of course. Our contribution to this debate has to be limited. I cannot cover the whole subject as I would like. I would ask hon. members to study a more flexible approach from a regional point of view, within the Constitution. The Constitution will have to be amended. There is no doubt about that. It is not going to be done by a unilateral patriation. There will have to be general participation. Canadians will have to be more conciliatory. Whatever one area of Canada gains is at the expense of other Canadians. There is no Canadian who will grow in stature by one cubit, one half inch or one centimetre by lopping off the head of another Canadian. We must work together instead of having these tinpot quarrels where power hungry men are out to grab more power. Is it for the benefit of their people? Not at all. It is for their own benefit.

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I want to use my 20 minutes to talk about a single idea. That idea is job creation. In one way or another, the focus of this resolution and the burden of the debate we have been hearing is: if more jobs had been created by the government, if there were more new jobs for young people and more employment in the underdeveloped regions of this country, we would be a more united country and a more prosperous country. We would then be dealing with issues on an entirely different basis. The shortage of jobs for young people, and for people in depressed regions, is an ingredient in the problem Canada is facing today.

I would like to look at some of the solutions proposed by members opposite in this debate today. I would like to see how much better off we would be if they were adopted. I will show that we would be worse off if we adopted some of the suggestions which have been made by members opposite. Before I do that, I would like to set the scene in an international context. The hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) indicated it was the kind of federalism in Canada today that was responsible for unemployment in the province of Quebec and a lot of the unemployment problems we have across the country. It is interesting to say our federalism—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Not federalism!

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, I want to be fair to the hon. member. He indicated it was our kind of federalism.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): It is the way you do it.

Mr. Kaplan: If our kind of federalism is the problem, how does he explain the fact that unemployment among young people and in depressed regions is the single leading economic problem in each of the major industrial countries which went to London for the meeting last week end? If it is the unique Canadian way of doing things that is responsible, why are unitary countries, European countries and the country to the south of ours, all saying youth unemployment, women unemployment, and unemployment in certain regions are the main problems which they face?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Where do we stand in the spectrum? That is the point.

Mr. Kaplan: All right, where do we stand in the spectrum? The hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) did a bit of reading to the House. He selected an article by John Kettle, who is known more or less as a brilliant gadfly columnist for Executive magazine. He certainly does not speak for the magazine. He is perhaps the most interesting thing in the magazine. His point of view is very often that of a gadfly and a provocateur of ideas, as is the Hudson Institute for which John Kettle is a consultant.

I would like to read to you the opening words of a column which appeared in the Financial Times of Canada. This price is not a gadfly column. This is news reporting. This article is addressed to the Canadian audience and is contained in the Financial Times of Canada of May 9. It reads as follows:

> It may seem hard to visualize Prime Minister Trudeau as the leader of the free world's best performing economy. But, judged on the record of the last few years, he is.
> According to a new study prepared before last week end's seven-nation economic summit, Canada ranks as the single economy that has most successfully bounded back from the 1973-74 recession.

Hon. members opposite asked me a moment ago, "Looking at the problems of all these other countries, why is ours so much worse?" Here is a Canadian report on an international study done by the Bureau of Economic Research, and not done by Jim Coutts or Senator Davey. It was prepared by non-Canadian analysts who come to the conclusion, judging the record of the last few years, that Prime Minister Trudeau is the leader of the free world's best performing economy.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): No wonder he is a gadfly. He is also a shadfly.

Mr. Kaplan: The article continues:

For the world's seven largest economies, they have devised a monthly composite index of economic performance which compares some key indicators of economic activity, including personal income, output, employment, unemployment and sales.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): We are good at unemployment!

Mr. Kaplan: The hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro) says, "We are good at unemployment", but that is part of the mix. That was taken into consideration in a national study which produced the result under the headline "Trudeau the Wizard".

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Kaplan: I do not want to create the impression that government is happy with the way today's economy is performing. I do not want to create the impression that the government does not realize the very things hon. members opposite have been saying—it is unemployment which is our most serious problem. Especially unemployment among the youth of Canada and unemployment in the depressed regions are problems. Our performance has been the best compared to the seven countries referred to in that study. I am referring to the countries whose representatives went to London to discuss the performance of the economy. Our economic management has produced results which have been internationally rated as successful. They are not satisfactory to us, but have been rated successful internationally.

What are the alternatives being proposed by hon. members opposite? I was interested in the comments of the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte)— —what the hon. member for Champlain (Mr. Matte) had to say. For him, it was the importation of goods at a lower cost than the cost of production in Canada!

[English]

He is indicating that the villain is cheap imports—cheap shoes from Taiwan and Korea; cheap powdered milk; and various other things. What is the solution? Close the door and give Canadians a protective market for shoes? Let us make all our own shoes; let us make all our own electronic equipment? A lot of people in Canada see that as our salvation. I have no doubt that more jobs would be created in Canada if that were the case. If we required Canadians to buy Canadian-made shoes and Canadian-made electronic goods, and if we only had products manufactured in this country, more jobs would be created. However, there would be some problems, and I will deal with them in a minute.

● (1740)

Mr. Paproski: Shoes would cost $150 a pair.

[Mr. Kaplan.]

Mr. Kaplan: Please, do not give away the rest of my speech. I want to come to the problems which would be created.

Mr. Paproski: A television set would cost $1,500.

Mr. Kaplan: Let us consider the NDP's suggested solution. They say there are enough jobs in Canada. We agree. And what do they say? "The government should create employment." What does that mean: create employment? It means, put more people on the public payroll.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): You are doing pretty well now.

Mr. Kaplan: Certainly, we could do that. We are to spend $465 million in the coming year, more than we have ever spent before, on direct job creation in the regions. The figure could be doubled, tripled, even quadrupled, and there would be lots more jobs in Canada. So there we have two kinds of solutions for the problem.

I listened to the Conservatives with interest. They said there ought to be more intergovernmental consultation in job creation. Joe Clark recently—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Please!

Mr. Paproski: Please refer to him as Leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Kaplan: The Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) in a recent address gave his solution, which is reviewed in the Vancouver Sun, the heart of Conservative country, as "Rubbish, Mr. Clark." His solution for job creation was to provide more stimulus in the economy, which would heat it up faster and faster. We are being asked to look for solutions of that kind.

Some say the solution to our problems is to close our doors to foreign imports or to put more people on the public payroll. Let me deal with one solution I have heard well-meaning people bring forward in my riding as I go around it defending and explaining the government's economic policy. People say to me, "Why was it possible for our economy to produce full employment during the war? No one was looking for a job during the war. We were able to place everybody in jobs, and could have placed even more people. Why cannot we return to that kind of economy? Why cannot we find a way to put all our people to work, to produce all the things we need, as we did during the war? Must we have a war to put everyone to work?" Mr. Speaker, it is true, during the war all our people were working, but Canada was working itself into the poorhouse. If we had gone on fighting the war with our hard work, we would eventually have reduced our gross national product to zero.

When you produce in war, it does not matter what things cost. You don't price things. They must be made. You tighten your belt. It does not matter, if you are producing something which is needed, because the product is dumped, destroyed on the battlefield, lost or ruined. True, people are working, but work alone is not the way to increase the country's prosperity.

You have to be making things that are good value and that people are willing to buy. And I will say the same about the job creation approach of the NDP, and the closed door approach the Socred party advanced in the House today. Those are ways to get people working, but not ways to increase this country's prosperity, which is what we want to do.

We are one of the most prosperous countries of the world. What has been the ticket to our success? Has it been putting everybody on the government payroll?

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Pretty well.

Mr. Kaplan: Has it been taking in each other's laundry, closing the doors, and making this a closed inward-looking internal economy? That is not how we became one of the most prosperous countries of the world. That is not how we attained one of the world's highest standards of living.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): My friend, you have been brainwashed.

Mr. Kaplan: We have reached our present high point by having the resources, the know-how and technology to produce goods the world has wanted, at the best possible price, and selling enough of them to enable us to afford our high standard of living.

If people in Taiwan will make shoes for 35 cents an hour, I want to see Canadians having the benefit of footwear made for 35 cents an hour. If they will make television sets for low prices in Asian countries, why cannot we have the benefit of those television sets, provided we can do something in return, provided Canadians can find jobs worth $6, $7 or $8 an hour; and this, to a certain point, we have been able to do. That explains how we have been able to afford our present high standard of living.

Our economy has worked well for us. Even with high levels of unemployment, with the kinds of programs and adjustments we have put in place, all Canadians more or less have been able to share in our high standard of living and in the prosperity which has resulted from the way in which we have run our economy.

But in the last two or three years we have seen important setbacks in the Canadian economy. We have begun to fall behind, begun to think that the $6, $7 and $8-an-hour-job can be found without harder work, without doing more and without creating more. We have been taking away from each other, and thinking that that is a way to move ahead. This setback has been expressed in inflation and in the changing value of the Canadian dollar. It received its greatest push when international economies, including our own, were threatened with recession, which was more serious abroad but certainly serious in our own country. We reached the point at which we had to take dramatic action to protect our economy, to preserve the kind of economy which has been doing very well for us. Ours is a free enterprise, mixed type of economy.

What action did we take? We introduced the controls program, which has now been in effect for over a year. Our experience in the first year was good. We beat our target, even though lots of people did not think we would. We are moving well through the second year of the program, and at some point between October 14 and the end of the program we will go through a phase-out process by which time, hopefully, we will have put excessive inflationary pressures and exaggerated expectations behind us. Hopefully, the program will have created the realization that you cannot take anything out of an economy unless you put something into it.

We are taking advantage of the period of controls, of this pause, to make a number of fundamental changes.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Name one.

Mr. Kaplan: The hon. member asks me to name one. I will name several. We have taken advantage of the controls program to try to make important structural changes in our economy.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Yes, like Canada Works.

Mr. Kaplan: We are doing this so that we can resume our place, so that we do not have to protect low paying jobs, so that we can move forward into the kind of sophisticated, advanced economy in which all of us can earn a higher income and maintain one of the highest living standards in the world.

What have we done? Perhaps the most impressive thing we have done is something which the Conservative party said we would never do, bring down the rate of monetary expansion to a level which even the Conservative party must consider reasonable.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): It should not have been so high in the first place.

Mr. Kaplan: Perhaps not. Increasing the money supply before the controls program was introduced had an important purpose. It tended to keep the interest rate lower, and it helped us not to fall into the kind of economic recession into which our neighbour to the south fell. In any event, during the controls period the rate of growth of the money supply has been brought down to a level the Conservative party must consider reasonable—although recently the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) said in another place that the expansion is still too high. It is within the target figure which he said two years ago this government could not reach. That is the first thing that has happened during the control period.

The second thing that has happened is the restraint of growth of the federal government. This has been extremely important, not because there were not good reasons for the government service to grow previously, but because there were good reasons for the government rate of growth to slow down during the control period. I do not want to repeat the speeches which have been made by the President of the Treasury Board (Mr. Andras). It is a matter of record that important government restraint has been achieved during this control period, and a commitment has been made by this government to continue to honour restraint even after the controls come off and to keep the growth in the 1977-78 fiscal year well within the growth of the gross national product.

What further has been done? A number of structural changes are under consideration. The competition bill is now before parliament. It will have the effect of making the economy more competitive in areas where market power is considered to be a problem. At the same time it recognizes that bigness is not necessarily bad, and that where bigness benefits the consumer, under the surveillance procedures provided in the bill it will be permitted to continue.

In addition, we are looking at industrial relations. A 14 point program has been put forward by th Minister of Labour (Mr. Munro), aimed directly at improving industrial relations, the temperament of the workplace, the safety of the workplace, and relations between labour and management.

The structure of industrial relations is up for review. A number of proposals have been made. Some of them are so sensible one wonders why they were not implemented years ago. For example, a broader base for collective bargaining is being sought. Why should the total air industry go out on strike when the ticket sellers cannot settle their collective agreement? When the ticket sellers come to an agreement and go back to work and then when the pilots cannot settle their differences, why should the whole industry again go on strike? When the pilots settle their differences and go back to work and then when the air traffic controllers' negotiations break down, why should the whole industry go on strike again. Obviously the broader the base, the fewer days lost there will be within particular industries. I hope provincial ministers of labour will be looking at these proposals for reform in industrial relations. I hope that before the controls come off we will see important steps forward in improving this area of tremendous weakness in the Canadian economy.

We cannot simply follow the example of any other country. We have to find our own way, but we know we have to improve the mechanisms we have. An hon. member opposite asked what has been done. Well, a remarkable new rapport has been reached between two sectors which have always been in confrontation in Canada in the past. Labour and management are talking to each other during this period of controls in a way that they never have before talked. They are looking for a common position which they can put to the government which would provide a basis for removing the controls earlier than would otherwise be possible. They are taking some of the confrontation and hostility out of their relationship and hopefully making it possible for settlements to be reached in the future and for prices to be determined in a way which will not take us back to the kind of inflation we have had until now.

Mr. McKenzie: If you are so good, how did all these things happen in the first place?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member's time has elapsed.

[Mr. Kaplan.]

Mr. McKenzie: You people have been in power all this time, and if you are so brilliant how did all these things happen?

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Speaker, it is very close to six o'clock, and perhaps I might be allowed another minute. I can conclude in one minute.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: That can only be done with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent for the hon. member to go on for a minute or two to complete his remarks, at which time I will call upon the hon. member for Esquimalt-Saanich (Mr. Munro)?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. McKenzie: Give the Canadian people an explanation of what you have been doing for the last 14 years.

Mr. Kaplan: The hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie) asks why, if the economy is so well managed, is it not performing better. Well, it is not performing as well as we would like it to perform, but the hon. member has given me an opportunity to conclude the way I began, by quoting from this Financial Times article as follows:

> It may seem hard to visualize Prime Minister Trudeau as the leader of the free world's best performing economy. But, judged on the record of the last few years, he is . . . Canada ranks as the single economy that has most successfully bounced back from the 1973-74 recession.

We have not done as well as we would have liked to have done, but we have done well enough to indicate that the economy is not being badly managed.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, it is often my fate to be on my feet just at this particular moment. I should like the unanimous consent of the House to call it six o'clock.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is it agreed that we call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 8 p.m.

At 5.57 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

● (2010)

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, I hope that I will not disappoint hon. members, particularly the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman), by a lack of serenity in the remarks I am planning to make this evening. I may very well introduce a note of accerbity into this debate. I am indeed a bit bitter, but I am more angry than bitter.

On occasion we say in English that we speak more in sorrow than in anger. On this particular occasion I speak in sorrow and in anger because of the great disillusion that has been brought about for me, because of the fate that my country is now suffering as a result of the mismanagement by this government. I have always had a vision of Canada. Otherwise I would not have volunteered 36 or 37 years to be sure that that vision could be realized.

I cannot conceal from you, Mr. Speaker, that I am worried and concerned over recent events, particularly the result of the vote taken last November 15 in the province of Quebec. The Liberal party is now ruthlessly campaigning to blame or to put the responsibility for the Liberal defeat by the electors of our neighbour province, on the CBC or on the English-speaking population of the rest of Canada. This campaigning will go on without respite, I am sure, until the by-election and maybe even until the general election. The Liberal party is looking for a scapegoat.

Those who are truly responsible, Mr. Speaker, first examine their own actions and their conscience. Right after a defeat or in an abnormal situation, they do not try to put the blame on others. On the contrary, they question themselves to find out where they made a mistake, where they went wrong. Let me indicate how I interpret the events of November 15: the population wanted to reject a government in which it has lost confidence, a reflection of the government in Ottawa, provincial and federal governments alike. And why has all confidence been lost in the federal government? Just look at the economic situation of the country! I would dearly love to read today's motion:

[English]

That this House holds the Government directly responsible for the present economic disorder in Canada and the disastrous consequences of that disorder upon the spirit and unity of the country.

I support that motion wholeheartedly. Why have the people lost all confidence in the federal government? The economic situation is one explanation. It inspires no confidence in the direction taken by the government. Look also at the atmosphere of confrontation in which Pierre Trudeau's federal government governs. The Prime Minister has decided to govern, through federal-provincial confrontations, labour confrontations, cultural confrontations. That government preaches animosity. As for the respect we owe parliamentary institutions, for instance, one needs only look at the attitude of the present government in that regard.

Recently, to mention but one example, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), within 48 hours, made two statements outside the House of Commons concerning basic changes in railway and maritime transports in Canada. Those statements should have been made in the House, thus allowing hon. members to ask for details or express censure.

This government, Mr. Speaker, wants to govern without consulting the electorate or its representatives, the members of parliament. That is why, in my opinion, the role of Parliament is declining, and as a result the spirit and unity of the country are suffering, which partially explains the results of the vote of November 15. I feel a deep concern over the future of our country. That future will be seriously jeopardized if the role of Parliament is not restored. Our party, the Progressive Conservative party, which is the one that founded our country, is dedicated under the leadership of Mr. Clark to restoring the credibility of our parliamentary institutions by consulting Canadians regularly and thoroughly to identify their wishes.

[English]

When I think in terms of my vision of Canada, I go back to a very famous speech. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I would like to, not paraphrase, but alter the words to the present context. The speech was made more than a hundred years ago and it reads like this in its modern interpretation:

● (2020)

Five score years ago and more our forbears brought forth on this continent a nation dedicated to the proposition that two peoples of differing cultural and linguistic backgrounds could live in harmony together and thrive.

This is my Canada.

Less than five years later that notion was extended geographically from coast to coast, and a bare 20 years later a rail line connected one coast with another thus binding the country from sea to sea with bonds of steel. In less than 20 years a great miracle was accomplished with political and engineering ramifications of tremendous consequence.

Barely ten years ago we celebrated our centennial. That was the year of hope, jubilation and thanksgiving. What happened to the thrill of 1967, the high spirits and the expectation felt at that time? Just ten years later, where have they gone? Where did we go wrong? I submit we went wrong in 1968. We did not lose the way. We all have our vision of Canada and our dreams. The way was lost for us by this government. It was lost for us economically, constitutionally, and in parliament itself. It has been lost for us through the degradation of respect for law and the will to work. These last ten years have done untold damage to our country. I can do no more than sketch in some of the highlights.

In that period the national debt has doubled from $20 billion to more than $40 billion. The size of the public service has almost doubled. The budget increases are almost incredible. It is hard to believe that from a budget of $10 billion, more or less, in 1968, the budget has grown until, in 1977, it is $42 billion. It has quadrupled.

It is instructive to note the failure of the government in the economic field. In terms of promised growth, there has been under performance; in terms of exports, under performance; in terms of foreign direct investment, under performance. The figures are revealing. In 1971 direct foreign investment in Canada totalled $925 million. By 1975 it had fallen to $630 million. By 1976 foreign countries had reduced the value of their holdings by nearly $400 million showing their lack of confidence in this country.

As I have shown, there has been over-performance in government spending. A record job has been done on inflation.

There has been over-performance in areas which leave lasting, tell-tale marks on the economy, and under performance where it would count. In the area of employment opportunities there has been under performance. When it comes to providing proper incentives for investment, there has been under performance.

There is another element which concerns me greatly and it is one which has contributed to the disunity of this country and to the falling off in morale. It is the degradation of our institutions, including the institution in which we now speak. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) has made one speech in this House since October of last year, I think it was. His policy pronouncements are made either in another parliament in another country, in the Press Club across the road, or somewhere out in Saskatoon or elsewhere on the prairies, but not in this Chamber. He is totally lacking in regard for this place. His attitude is one of arrogance. Although not here at the time, I suppose I figure among those he has called nobodies. Members across the floor do not even recognize that they are nobodies, too, in his eyes. I have suggested that they come across to this side of the House and watch the Prime Minister when he is performing. Hon. members over there see the back of his head. I see the disdain on his face. I have witnessed the profanity used by the Prime Minister in this House. It is true he said he regretted it, but what he regretted was that it got on the record. And when he was taxed about it he did not apologize. He just expressed regret and said he hoped he had not caused any inconvenience. And then, when the matter was picked up again he used even more unacceptable profanity.

Mr. Roberts: If you carry on in such a sanctimonious way you will have to join the NDP.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I was proud to be elected to this Chamber in 1972 because I thought I was going to an institution which had a constructive role to play in the development of Canada. What did I find? I found in those four and a half years a government which has no regard for this institution and which has driven our country deeper and deeper into the morass. There are so many instances of abuse, misuse, and arrogance on the part of this government with respect to this House. One can cite the use of public transportation to transport domestic help to this country until it was brought to the attention of the public by the press; then it ceased. In fact the domestic help had to pay part of its way back.

Respect for law has also been downgraded as a result of the activities of this government. It in turn has had its adverse effect on morale and the desire for unity in this country. How can there be unity when this institution has been downgraded and no one respects it, because the government itself has no respect for it? That is our great problem. If we had a core in this parliament of ours which people in Canada respected, we would have a core around which to rally and we would have unity. It is the flight from that which has contributed enormously to the disunity which we are observing in this country today.

As for respect for law, Mr. Speaker, do you remember the judges who were telephoned? I remember one incident which never got on the record and I am determined to put it on the record now. It occurred on June 3, 1976, an interview of the Prime Minister by Gordon Henderson on the Global television network. This was at the time when the constitutionality of the AIB was being tested and the Prime Minister said that the Supreme Court would not decide the Anti-Inflation Act was unconstitutional. He then said, "Why do you ask that question?" The interviewer replied that that was the question that had been put to it, so the Prime Minister replied, "Well, I'm telling you what the Supreme Court is going to decide". The interviewer said; "You are confident then, Sir?" You could not guess the reply, Mr. Speaker. It was, "I phoned a few judges". Then there were titters and there was laughter. That is no laughing matter, Mr. Speaker. Even if it was said in jest it is no laughing matter to degrade, not just this institution but the Supreme Court of this country. It is absolutely incredible that that should happen, but since it has happened it is not so incredible that we should be suffering as we are from disunity and a sagging morale.

Another comment made by a minister which I feel cannot go unchallenged was this—I cannot remember the exact date—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his alloted time has expired. He can continue with unanimous consent. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): I will terminate my remarks with this instance, Mr. Speaker. This was a comment made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) which I caught over the airwaves. He complained that French Canadians have been denied the opportunity to share in the development and shaping of Canada. That is not only mischievous, it is misleading, and is a monstrous distortion of history and the current situation. It just should not stand unchallenged. On hearing this I drew up a list of large corporate institutions, and 16 out of the first 50 of these largest institutions in Canada have their headquarters in the province of Quebec.

We all give due honour to our French speaking forebears who discovered the western regions of our country, whose names are remembered out there, some of whom were martyred. They were saints from that generation. All are revered. That comment by the Minister of National Health and Welfare deserves to go down in history, I think, as one of the most deplorable comments that could be made.

I have many, many other comments to make on this matter since I am deeply distressed at what the government has done to my country and the vision I had of my country. However, I do maintain it and I will go on doing my utmost to make sure that this vision will become a reality.

Hon. Martin O'Connell (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I was preparing a few notes and thought I might come on a little later, but I am pleased indeed to enter into this debate and to make some remarks to my colleagues in the House is an attempt to bridge the two matters which are raised in the resolution before us, namely, economic policy and national unity. I am going to do so in the search for some perspective.

I am going to begin with the suggestion that all regions of Canada have such fundamental economic problems that they need each other in a new way, perhaps in a way they have not needed each other since Confederation; and that it is this convergence of need and difficulty which each region faces which gives us all the possibility of rebalancing Confederation at the level of economic structure and basic economic policy. I include Ontario in this description of the fundamental economic problems facing regions of Canada. I do so particularly because it is often assumed that Ontario has benefited the most from Confederation; that Ontario is so rich and strong that it is this province which is called upon to make concessions, to show some leadership, to concede certain things in order to hold the country together. What I want to fit into my remarks is the notion that Ontario too is in deep economic trouble and in relative industrial decline.

We can cope with this, but to do so Ontario needs all the other regions of Canada in striving for a new economic balance. This is one of the hopeful things which will bring about a new set of compromises suited to our needs, just as the compromises made at confederation established economic destinies, as it were, or vocations for the various regions of our country 110 years ago. This will therefore be is my thesis.

I am going to focus on the prairie provinces and suggest that the grievances of the prairie provinces can be regarded as frustrated industrialism. These grievances can be accommodated. Accommodating them would be more than simple justice for the prairie provinces. It would be more than fulfilment in the economic sense for prairie potentials. Accommodating those grievances would help solve Ontario's pending and present economic problems. Therefore there can be a basis for unity in industrial policy.

The grievances of the prairie provinces with respect to industrial policy come at the same time as Quebec's pre-occupation with language, culture, and a political sovereignty thought to be necessary to protect those objectives. In a sense, therefore, the confederation compromises are coming unstuck. What were they? In a broad sense, as expressed partly in the national policy of Sir John A. Macdonald, they may be summarized as this: in the central part of Canada there would be built a strong industrial heartland. My point is that that heartland is eroding and losing its strength in a relative sense. In the west there would be created a resources vocation. The prairie provinces would be filled up with immigrants and would be linked to the other regions of Canada via railway. The industrial heartland would be protected by a tariff system. The national railway network would be protected by moving goods behind that tariff barrier to the east and to the west, exchanging the products of each region.

The confederation compromises included for Quebec measures which were thought to be sufficient to protect cultural, linguistic, educational, and legal interests. Those are now being challenged as indequate. I will not say that they are being rejected. The prairie provinces are rejecting the vocation of a resources area which was laid out for them in the confederation compromises. Ontario by a series of economic development is no longer the confident secure industrial heartland. Transportation policy is challenged and tariffs are no longer significant to protect it.

I should like to review the evolution of the western economy to support my thesis. The western economy began with wheat. It is based on wheat, minerals, cattle, forests, oil and gas, all moved in bulk as basically raw materials with freight rates which reinforce that vocation for western Canada. They are freight rates which support the movement of raw materials as opposed to processed materials. The clearest example is rapeseed, and it is true in the sense of cattle as opposed to meat. Rapeseed moves to Vancouver and over to Japan at the Crowsnest Pass rates which are very low rates, indeed. They encourage the export of seed. Crushing takes place in Japan and employment takes place in Japan. In a sense those freight rates confirm the west as an exporter of raw materials. The movement of those products to eastern Canada is four or five times more expensive through the transportation system. This economic bias is frequently expressed in hostility to freight rates. What is being frustrated, however, is the further processing of the product in the prairie region. What is being frustrated is the value added, better jobs, higher incomes and more opportunities because the policy system locks the region into an earlier regional destiny.

The prairie provinces feel ready for the next stage of economic development which is further processing and industrialism. They are seeking not only a rearrangement of the transportation rates but a negotiation on tariffs in the United States. These negotiations must be carried on by Ottawa. The negotiations would seek to lower the rapid escalation of tariffs in the United States against the import of processed products. Look for example at the natural gas which is produced in Alberta. It can be exported without tariff to the United States. Ethylene, which is made from natural gas, can be exported without tariff. Ethylene is a building block in a long series of plastic industries and other industries. The United States will take that basic block without putting any tariff wall against it. If the west wishes to proceed to the next stage of industrialism, which would be polyethylene of considerably greater value in terms of incomes and balance of payments, it faces a 20 per cent tariff. If it went to the next derivative which is polyvinylchloride, the tariff would escalate again. How can industrialism come to the west if we do not negotiate downward the escalating tariffs of the United States? Thus, there is not only transportation. There are tariff negotiations and the question of assured markets in Canada for those processed products. One cannot build further processing based solely on exports.

What are we prepared to do in Central Canada to accept processed goods from the prairie provinces? Will we buy meat or will we not? We may buy it if we change the freight rates. Will we buy polyethylene, or will we insist on making it only in Sarnia? Ontario and Quebec therefore have a question to ask themselves with respect to national unity as reflected in the economic policy influencing prairie attitudes. They have to ask themselves whether they are prepared to see a different vocation for the prairie provinces than the one laid out 110 years ago, and reinforced by national policies over which we have control. I am thinking of assurances which may not be of the same kind, but in spirit they are similar to the assurances which were given to the western crude oil market in eastern Canada when it was a question of assuring the development of that industry. Assured markets went only to the crude oil stage. Are we now prepared to alter transportation and other mixes of policies so that industrialism can come to western Canada? If we are not, we are not working at the question of national unity reflected in basic economic policy.

Ontario is in such economic difficulty that it is perhaps prepared to look at that question in a new light. What are its economic difficulties? I do not want to speak in a gloomy way this evening, but there is cause for concern. We hear it said with validity that the central industrial heartland is no longer competitive with the products of the Third World and the United States, which is our principal market. For various reasons we have always been less productive in the sense of value of production per worker, value of production per man hour, and value of production per unit of capital employed.

However one measures productivity, it is generally accepted that Canadian manufacturing is about 20 per cent less productive than U.S. manufacturing. Not all our industries are less productive. Some are more productive. However, on average, it is true to say we are less productive. According to a Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce study which I have before me, our labour productivity is perhaps 18 per cent lower, as measured in 1972 terms. When one combines the productivity of labour with that of capital the picture becomes even worse. For example, according to figures for 1972, the rubber and plastics industry in Canada is almost 27 per cent less productive; the furniture industry 27 per cent less productive; knitting mills 32 per cent less productive; printing and publishing 41 per cent less productive, and so on. It is thus unfair to speak only of the differences in labour productivity, of our productivity levels being 18 per cent lower. When you combine labour with management, whose function it is to use capital and labour in efficient combinations you see that we are 38 per cent less productive on the average in the manufacturiel section. Therefore one can see that there is a real problem in how we employ capital in this country and manage our industries.

Our wage costs are often higher than in the United States. Money used as capital costs Canadians between 15 per cent and 20 per cent more than it costs Americans. Construction costs are higher in this country because of severe weather and other conditions.

Mr. Gillies: And inadequate federal policies.

Mr. O'Connell: As one looks at the total picture, it becomes increasingly obvious that this so-called strong industrial heartland has entered a new phase of non-competitiveness and stready erosion. We have not yet felt the impact of manufactured goods produced in Third World countries. They will sweep over our remaining tariff barriers. In addition, we face non-tariff barriers in our best market. Those kinds of barriers have been erected to protect that market against products of the kind we will allow duty-free entry to Canada, because of our desire to help transfer economic resources to the Third World. Therefore the future of this industrial heartland of which I speak is not bright.

Why do I say that the future of this industrial heartland is tied to the future of western Canada? It seems to me Ontario needs an industrializing western Canada to which it can sell the products of its higher technology. Ontario needs an assured Canadian market for its higher technology products, exactly in the same way as it needed a somewhat assured market in the past to which to sell the products of its standard technology. We can only face foreign competition if we develop our higher technological capabilities; we can only develop these capabilities if there is a market to which we can sell the products of our higher technology. We cannot export all such products; we need a central economic base, or a market for them in this country. Surely an industrialized west will provide us with such a market. For example, it could use a control technology for processing. In exchange, we should accept the products which the west will want to sell to us. By so doing we would not only use our transport system efficiently but, by helping other regions, help to foster national unity. By all this I am suggesting that we need to examine again national economic policies. We must admit we are in deep trouble and need an industrialized west, as much as 100 years ago we needed the primary resources of western Canada.

I am emphasizing Ontario's difficulties, not because I wish to highlight our present difficulties, but because I wish to suggest that if Ontario understands where its own interests lie it will seek a new relationship with western Canada. Our best prospects for hope lie in western Canada. That is where a good deal of our industrial future lies.

I urge hon. members to examine what the Science Council has to say about technological sovereignty, for they will note some startling statements. For example, a summary of a paper presented at a seminar reads in part:

> The paper presents the argument that Canadian secondary manufacturing is trapped in an evolutionary cul-de-sac. Past and extant policies have promoted modest industrialization along with technological underdevelopment and dependency.

The Science Council says that we are trapped partly because we are technologically dependent on others for innovation. Therefore, we must restructure industrial policies in Canada to escape from this trap. I suggest we should look again at western Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but I must inform him that his allotted time has expired. He may continue, with the unanimous consent of the House. Has the hon. member unanimous consent to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. O'Connell: Mr. Speaker, I will be brief, having already made my principal point. Let me continue speaking on industrial policy. It seems to me that we, at the political level, are again called on to make the sort of choice Sir John A. Macdonald made in this House 100 years ago. Perhaps we have depended too much on bureaucratic systems, depended on them to improve our economic performance. That course, I suggest, is no longer acceptable in this country. We need a new economic design, so to speak, rather than merely better performance under existing structures. But producing a new economic design is very difficult politically. It might mean choosing to help those industries in Canada which have some promise of life. We would have to specialize, and help to consolidate some industries. Perhaps government procurement policies would have to support those industries which promise to stay alive, and in trade we must stop acting as boy scouts. That is to say, Marshall support mainly for those industries which are critical for the success of this country.

Mr. Speaker, I did not dwell on the question of Quebec, serious though that is. I wanted to talk about economic policies in relation to unity. What is happening in Quebec is not the only matter of crucial concern to parliament, for we face the challenge of regional disparities. These questions confront us, as they did 100 years ago. All these difficulties, together with the difficulties Ontario faces, must be foremost in our minds today. I feel confident, as I am sure others do, that we will be as creative as the Fathers of Confederation were, and possibly future generations may look upon our generation as a founding one if we understand all our country's problems and come to grips with them.

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, it is always an honour to follow the erudite member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell) in any debate, but I want to say that I listened with interest to his learned comments on ethylene and polyvinylchloride and the complaints he made about the economic policies which have bound this country into its present state, and I would like him to sit there and think about what administration over the years has been principally responsible for those policies about which he now complains.

Disillusionment and discontent with the terms of Confederation are not a recent phenomenon, nor have they been confined exclusively to any part of this great nation. Nova Scotia, for example, has been a province which has, in the 110 years since our nation was formed, reflected the views of the most bitter opponents of Confederation as well as the convictions of some of its most prominent advocates.

A look at contemporary history readily reveals that whenever nations begin to slide into an economic recession or encounter difficulties related to a diminution of common will and resolve, there are various regions or parts of these nations that inevitably begin expressing their feelings as to whether or not they might be better off as independent entities. Perhaps the best example of this is to be found in a nation from which we have received much of our common heritage, the United Kingdom.

When Britain was a dynamic force in world affairs with a strong, vibrant economy, a favourable balance of trade, and was a leader in technology, there was little talk of Welsh or Scottish nationalism. We are seeing now in this country, in times of adversity, the same type of situation which is prevalent in the United Kingdom where national unity is strained and where the sum of the parts of the nation appears greater than the whole. The motion, therefore, of my distinguished colleague, the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner), is a very timely indictment—and a very necessary one—of the government which, by its economic mismanagement, has contributed greatly to the lack of spirit and the disunity in our country.

Since this is the House of Commons and since we are the politicians in it, we all must share some of the responsibility. I know that this probably will not be a popular statement as far as some Liberals are concerned. I am sure they feel that since they have been in control of this nation's destiny for most of the past 50 years, with the authority to make most of the key decisions which have brought us to this crisis, they should be exonerated from any responsibility for it, because that is the way they think and operate, at least recently. Certainly it can never be said that in recent years the Liberal party has ever failed to place the party ahead of the country. Any suggestion that this is not the case, particularly in recent years, will not meet the test of reality.

Can you imagine, Sir, it being said of the present Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau), as it was of some great Prime Ministers in our past—Sir John Thompson, for example, from Nova Scotia—that "he won't even consider whether a thing is good for the party until he is quite sure it is good for the country"?

When the present Prime Minister inherited the leadership of the Liberal party and our country, no one could deny that he acquired problems which have always characterized Canada: difficulties with transportation, problems in satisfying competing regional interests, and so on. He also inherited inflationary trends and a rather high, for those times, unemployment rate. Then, as now, relations with the United States were always an important priority for Canada on the international scene. Canadians have watched and listened to this Prime Minister since the heady days of Expo and have been assured at various times that our traditional problems were well under control. Inflation had been wrestled to the ground, unemployment had been solved, trade deficits had been overcome, the United States and Canada had had a fantastic breakthrough in their relationship, and regional development was under control by virtue of the creation of the great new Department of Regional Economic Expansion, which was going to solve most of the problems of disparity in our country.

Canadians were also told that separatism was dead in this nation, and that latest piece of good news came just about a year ago. Unfortunately, all of these assurances, together with many other statements related to the economy and transportation, were and are demonstrably false, and that is part of the reason for the necessity of debating in this House the sorry state into which our nation has fallen. A little honesty in the past and fewer cliff-top orations would have served this nation much better.

The Atlantic region, like our sister province of Quebec, has suffered from long periods of chronic recession Whenever the regional disparity gap between ourselves and the rest of the country seemed to be narrowed and prosperity was on the way, some problem or other caused the region to have its growth potential blunted and its aspirations once more destroyed. As in other parts of the country, people in eastern Canada are conscious that our efforts to reach our destiny as a great nation are losing their impetus. We are all trying desperately to recapture that sense of purpose which will help us, as history unfolds, to realize our destiny as a truly great nation, and we are confident that, as the competence of governments improves, some of the misleading and untruthful predictions which have been mouthed in recent years may turn out to be true.

It was, after all, a great Liberal Prime Minister from Quebec who said that the twentieth century belongs to Canada. Well, time is running out on this century, and on a far different type of Liberal administration than the one led by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, for us to realize this cherished goal.

The immediate focus of attention in Canada today on the issue of national unity is on La Belle Province, and rightfully so. We in the maritimes are greatly concerned about the course of action now being taken by the Parti Québécois, but we are, as we always have been, proud of our great sister province and of the excellence it has brought to our country in many spheres of activity: in the theatre, the arts, fashion, in sports, and particularly in making it possible for Canada to speak to the international community in two of the world's great languages.

On a lighter note, it is heartening that despite all the rampant Quebec nationalism and current talk of separation, even those zealots in the Parti Québécois have not decided to change the name of the greatest hockey team in the world, the Montreal Canadiens, to les Québécois de Montréal, so all is not lost.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacKay: Separatism, or independence, is not a new phenomenon in this country, nor is it peculiar to the province of Quebec. In 1867, 17 of the 18 federal candidates in Nova Scotia ran against Confederation and, what is more, they were elected. But now no Nova Scotian premier or member of Parliament would ever come to a conference on Confederation, in this, the second century of it, with any suggestion that our province of Nova Scotia would or should ever separate, and so it will be in the future with the province of Quebec.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. MacKay: During the past century Nova Scotia has had many eloquent and able supporters of Confederation, including three prime ministers, and had the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Stanfield) become the fourth Nova Scotian to become Prime Minister, our country today would be well on its way back to true unity and prosperity, because the characteristic of Nova Scotians in Confederation has always been their ability to accept adversity for the common good of the country and to work toward improving their lot and that of their nation.

That philosophy has extended from the early days of Confederation to the present time and has been echoed again and again by people like Angus L. MacDonald, that great Nova Scotian premier and federal cabinet minister, and George Nowlan, another distinguished cabinet minister and great son of our province, who pointed out in many a speech in this place that there were more than bonds of sentiment which bound this country together. He reminded us that we had a private railway and a national railway to span this continent, and a private broadcasting system and a public broadcasting system in the same way. George Nowlan reminded us as well that we could go through our national institutions, examine any one of them, and find that we have made a unique nation, one in which we could take pride instead of one for which we sometimes apologize. He admonished us to stop talking about gloom and doom and to stop taking out our livers, propping them up on our knees and examining then to see whether we had cirrhosis. His advice is as applicable now as it was then.

Our nation is a unique one, and one of which we can all be proud. Its territorial integrity can never be negotiated; however, the position we find ourselves in today is full of ironies. We see the various regions of our country chafing under a government with delusions of adequacy and under the accompanying illusion that central government planning can tinker with the economy, change policies on an ad hoc basis, and apply general measures affecting different and unique regions where specific ones are needed instead.

Jacques Parizeau, the Quebec Minister of Finance, said of his own government's economic approach that he preferred a scalpel to an axe. Our country is too fragile and too unique to be governed with the heavy-handed, uniform policies characterized by this government. We need to be molded into a force collectively, not forced into a collective mold.

In the maritimes there is no antipathy or bitterness to any other part of Canada. There is, rather, the desire not to be a burden, to help and to share in creating a great country, to develop our own resources, fisheries, forests, agriculture, mines and other industries which have shown in the past that they are viable in our own particular economic climate. We can do it, but not under the policies followed by this government, a government which is demonstrating bankruptcy, not only in the area of policy development, but rather in an economic sense as well. It is leading our nation to the point where we are perilously close to not being able to have the financial resources to finance the great capital projects that will be needed to assure the type of sound development and construction of infrastructures and capital works projects of the type that the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) had begun to put into place for this country when he was Prime Minister.

Canadians in the Atlantic Region and in Quebec remember the commitment that he had toward regional development; the steps he had begun to implement to develop the north; the first steps toward plans for a national power grid; his concept of councils of resource ministers and his determination to get rid of hyphenated Canadianism. People remember his commitment to his country. No one could ever say of the right hon. member for Prince Albert that he had any greater priorities than the welfare of his country; with him, politics came second and Canada came first.

We need a renewal of that spirit to get on with the consideration of the ends, not the argument over the jurisdictional means, toward development of our nation. Waste and incompetence in managing our country are a disgrace and a blight on our national psyche.

Consider the sorry state of some of the basic areas of administration and development under this government, such as the position in which the dredging industry now finds itself; a situation concerning which the cabinet had ample warning years ago had they chosen to act.

Consider the millions wasted in hare-brained schemes relating to employment programs—such as when the National Employment Service was disbanded and bifurcated into a Manpower and UIC system in the name of the national manpower strategy—which once more is being changed after hundreds of millions of dollars have been wasted on this administrative abortion.

Consider the monster airports which no one—particularly the industry and the people affected—wanted. Probably between Calgary and Mirabel in the last few years several hundreds of millions of dollars of unnecessary expense has been incurred with negative results as far as the public and the airline industry are concerned. Consider another example, the grandiose public works schemes in Hull which are dislocating thousands of workers and creating more problems, as usual, than they solve. Then there is the miserable and expensive failure in our prison system.

All these things and many other equally foolish projects are causing Canadians to lose heart and to lose pride in their country. They realize that the funds which were wasted, if wisely invested in the province of Quebec, as well as eastern Canada, in sound developments, in housing, in transportation, could have made a great difference in the outlook and in the prosperity of this part of our nation.

Our neighbours to the south are attracting Canadian capital and Canadian talent because they are doing much better as a nation than we are. They are more competitive, more productive and, to our shame, more patriotic. In the process, in some areas, they are even becoming bilingual. Spanish is the second language now in cities like Miami, and in parts of Louisiana French is being actively taught and the use of it is being encouraged.

Make no mistake, Mr. Speaker, if the government of the United States of America and its people decided to have a bilingual nation, they could do it. On the record of their performance compared to the sorry group of incompetents that are leading this country, they would probably overtake us in this field as well, before very many years had passed.

Why is our country in such a sorry state? Mr. Speaker, the main reason is that our government for some years has become obsessed and exclusively preoccupied with its own political future; far more so than with the future of the country. It is very ironic that the bastion of its power in past years is the region of Canada that is causing it the most concern and which is showing the most ingratitude today. There is something ironic in that, and it is perfectly understandable when one considers that not long ago the Prime Minister went to the province of Quebec and made savage mockery of the then Premier, Robert Bourassa.

We, as Conservatives, must bear the blame to some extent because after all we have not provided a provincial federalist party to which the people of Quebec could turn. We must therefore share the responsibility for the fact that people of Quebec, in an attempt to get rid of a corrupt and incompetent government, had to turn to an administration which, while committed to providing good and efficient government, also had a philosophic commitment to divorcing this beautiful province from the rest of us. We are not without blame either.

The remedies for Canada's problems are not simple. It took many years to bring this prosperous and happy nation to the state in which it now finds itself, and it will take some years before some of the scars can be removed.

Encouraging reduction of government powers at all levels is far more timely and more needed than transfers of power from one level of government to another. We need to restore to the various partners in Confederation, the feeling of purpose and of being masters in their own houses. We do not need any further encroachments upon the lives of our people by governments, federal, provincial, or municipal.

We need, as well as encouraging a feeling of independence and pride in our people, a re-assessment of those government programs which were supposed to have some effect in reducing regional disparities. It is becoming obvious, on the basis of independent studies by competent people and agencies, that the regional development program conceived by this government in 1969, is not working. Transfer payments have helped slow growth regions far more than has DREE acting by itself and, often, at cross purposes with other government departments. Regional development has not made much of a dent, if any, in our slow growth regions.

Pride in national unity is not entirely a matter of economics. Our young people, and people generally, must be persuaded to work and not to emulate the Prime Minister's philosophy of exercising their right not to work, as he once expressed it.

Instead of frittering money away on grandiose and useless projects, which in many cases do not meet with the public need or approval, we must, particularly in those areas of Canada where unemployment is highest, get on with the job of constructing power grids, opening mines, building docks, wharves, grain elevators for storage, and all the practical things that can stand us in good stead in future and help us develop our economic muscle.

Let us also, as members of this House of Commons and Senate, begin to work toward restoring a sense of respect for this place and ourselves as elected representatives of our people. Let us devote more of our energies while we are here toward the business of the country and less toward our own, and in the process consider some of the needed changes in our constitution as outlined in part by the distinguished hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe this afternoon.

Let us encourage our people by every means possible, perhaps by subsidizing travel at some periods of the year, if necessary on public transportation, to become better acquainted with our nation and the many ethnic groups in it and the many beautiful regions that many people have never seen. In this way we will not only foster pride in our country but will dispel many of the stereotyped impressions, based on lack of personal contact, that plague our country and cause tensions.

Recently in Toronto a man who had come to this country after the war from Poland approached me, and on the subject of national unity he asked, "What do you say when people make a point of saying to you that they are English or French?" While I was hesitating, not quite certain of his meaning, he broke into a broad grin and said, "I tell them 'Good for you—what part of England or France are you from?'" Then he said, "This is what is wrong with our country. People are not willing to be Canadians—they want to be one sort or another of a particular kind of Canadian."

National unity will never be truly achieved until we are proud to be Canadians first, and while not forgetting our heritage, are not working toward imposing it or flaunting it in the face of others who share origins of which they are just as proud.

Let us remember that it is not where we have been or from whence we came that is primarily important: it is where we are going, what sort of a heritage we can create, and what sort of a future we will leave for our children. National unity is terribly hard to define. Perhaps one picturesque way of trying to do so is to recall the legendary exchange that is supposed to have taken place between Hilter and Churchill some years ago, when their countries were at war. Adolph Hilter declared that "the German Reich was bound together by chains, but that the British Empire was held together only by moonbeams." To which Churchill replied, "Yes, that may be true, but have you ever tried to cut a moonbeam?"

[Mr. MacKay.]

I would prefer to think that the various parts and regions of this country will never be bound entirely together by mere physical bonds alone whether rail, road or pipeline, however important they may seem to be, but will be held together as well by common bonds that are as beautiful and as intangible and everlasting as moonbeams—the concepts, ideals and desires of all in this country to be Canadian.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, before going on to a discussion of the topic before us this evening I should like to congratulate the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell) for what I thought was an extremely thoughtful presentation about one aspect of the problem of Canadian unity and how it relates to the evolution of economic policy. There are certain things I strongly disagree with, but his was a very thoughtful presentation, and those who are not present this evening should read it.

I certainly think that the motion before us today on the government's responsibility for the present economic disorder in Canada and the disastrous consequences on the spirit and unity of the country, is an important one, and I congratulate the hon. member for Saint-Hyacinthe (Mr. Wagner) for introducing it. In beginning what I have to say in general support of this motion, I want to state that I recognize there are, of course, international considerations that have stimulated a good deal of economic disorder throughout the world. However, there is little doubt that the economic mismanagement of the fiscal, monetary, and commercial policies of this country has to be laid primarily at the door of the present government.

As a social democrat I am troubled at the failure of the government not only to produce more needed goods and services for Canada, but also at its general failure to redistribute income as between the lowest 20 per cent on the income scale as against the highest. The amount of unemployment, both measured and hidden, is now the highest since the depression.

Let us first look at the distribution of income. It is a sad but true fact that under this government the poorest 20 per cent of Canadians share only 4.4 per cent of Canada's economic pie, which is technically called our national income or gross national product. On the other end of our income spectrum, the wealthiest 20 per cent of Canadians share 42.2 per cent of it.

These figures have remained almost the same despite the continuous introduction of new income transfer programs and the expansion of some older ones. It is despairing that, between 1969 and 1974, the family income of the poorest 20 per cent of Canadians fell by 7 per cent. This does not say much for the old Trudeau concept of building a just society in Canada.

It is a myth for federal Liberals to be claiming that they are, through their policies, increasingly redistributing away from the rich to the poor. The fact is that these so-called transfer payments, many of which were initiated by the CCF and the NDP, have not led to a reduction in the inequality of income in this country but rather they have held that inequality virtually steady.

There is increasing evidence that Canada's tax system is less progressive now than it was ten years ago. The poor do benefit to some extent from transfer of income through the tax system, but the rich benefit even more. This latter point has been recently documented in a study done by the National Council of Welfare report called the "Hidden Welfare System."

Professor Irwin Gillespie's studies at Carleton University, and Gillespie is an acknowledged authority on how incomes are distributed in Canada, have pointed out that the total public sector does restribute income, but its redistribution is away from the middle and upper middle classes to both extremes of the income scale, to the poorest and the richest.

The net gains to the poor are twice as large as the gains to the upper middle classes, but the gains to a family in the richest income class are largest of all, some three times larger than the gains to the poorest family. In short, as Gillespie shows, the increasing contribution of middle and upper middle income Canadians generates the major gains to rich Canadians; each rich family gained three times more than each poor family and six times more than each middle income family.

It is distressing to realize that because of the loopholes allowed to the rich by this government, and because of the larger negative and regressive impact of federal and provincial sales taxes, as well as property taxes on the poor and low income earners, I repeat it is distressing to realize that the increase of transfer payments and higher taxes have left the poor in this country proportionately worse off in the middle of the 1970's than they were at the end of the 1960's.

It is equally distressing, if not more so, to see clear cut evidence, which the media in this country rarely focuses on, that the relative improvement of the rich has, for the most part, been at the expense of the middle class. Something is obviously wrong with the economic system and the management of it by this government.

Two of the serious implications of what I am saying about distribution of income refer to two groups in our society. The first is the one parent family headed by women. The second is the poor kids that exist in Canada. Let us discuss the question of one parent families headed by women.

In 1974, according to the last official statistics I have seen, 300,000 Canadian families had only one parent. In 261,230 of them, the parent is the mother. This has occurred of course because of the fivefold increase in divorces between 1964 and 1974, as well as because of desertion and deaths. Between 1966 and 1971, the number of single parent families increased at three times the rate of two parent families. The pressures on the women who are heads of these families is almost unbelievable, since studies show that poverty affects 53 per cent of all one parent families.

These pressures particularly affect women on their own. In 1973 the survey of consumer finances discovered that 59.6 per cent of single parent women lived in poverty. This compares with a national average of 12.7 per cent of all families and only 14.1 per cent for single parent males. The reason is obvious. Single men can get a job far more easily than single women, who can seldom get a job paying enough to support their children. Instead, they are forced onto welfare.

In 1974 almost 40 per cent of all Canadian women were working. They made up over 34 per cent of the Canadian labour force. Their earnings, though based on a 1973 Statistics Canada figure, were such that 45.9 per cent of all women heads of families earned less than $2.50 per hour. At the same time, only 11.2 per cent of male family heads earned that little. Of the over 631,000 children of single parent families in Canada, approximately 143,000 are pre-schoolers. Yet in 1974 there were only 50,000 daycare places available in Canada. Now what about the poor children?

The "Poor Kids" report by the National Council of Welfare on children in poverty in Canada, published in March, 1975, showed that there are more than one and a half million poor children in Canada.

I remember my leader asking me to do a short resumé on behalf of our party over the CBC on this. I received ten letters saying it was not true. I sent each of those people who corresponded with me a copy of the report. Except for one person, each of them wrote back saying that they were shocked to see a verification of the poverty in that report.

• (2130)

As the report revealed, poor children are more likely than middle class children to be born prematurely, to be less fit, to have lower IQ ratings, and to underachieve in the school system. It goes without saying that poor children are less well represented in court. One of the striking things about this study is that it reveals that 60 per cent of all poor children in Canada live in Ontario or Quebec.

Let us look at unemployment under this government. Of course we know this is one of our most serious problems. If you count the official figure, which is over 900,000, along with the unofficial figure for the number of hidden unemployed, sometimes referred to as "discouraged workers" you arrive at a figure which is closer to 1,200,000. There is little doubt that with a growth rate in the economy projected at between 3.5 per cent and 4 per cent this year, the national unemployment rate this winter will be as high as 8.5 per cent or 9 per cent. Indeed, it will be much higher still except for a factor referred to as a decline in the participation rate in the labour force, which occurs when there are no jobs available in the economy. In such a situation the percentage of people working and looking for work automatically goes down. This is very true of the Atlantic region. Thus, the official unemployment rate as put out by Statistics Canada misstates the under-utilization of human beings in our economy.

Not only are we failing to produce many billions of dollars worth of needed goods and services which could have been produced had the unemployment rate been, say, 4 per cent, but one must also take into account the loss of hundreds of millions of dollars in the form of taxation of governments at all levels, plus the enormous unemployment insurance pay-outs which are presently necessary. The high unemployment is one of the major reasons why the budgetary deficit is so great.

I know that at the present time there is an attempt being made to rationalize the situation in many parts of the establishment by saying that unemployment is not as hard on people as it was in the thirties. This is little comfort to people who have to bring up families and maintain a standard of living in the seventies. It is said that, given the present rates of unemployment insurance benefits and other social programs, it is mainly the housewives, the young adults and people over 55 who are affected, not primary breadwinners. In other words, it is claimed that the composition of the unemployed has changed and that this makes a significant difference. To my mind, when government spokesmen use an argument of this kind— I recall the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) and the former minister of manpower and immigration, as well as the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald), resorting to it—it is no more than an attempt to rationalize a serious situation. None of us in this House would judge our standard of living, except that we are now getting large salaries, on any other basis but on family income. In other words, if you were a lawyer before you came here you would be judging your standard of living on the income you received as a lawyer and on the income which might be coming from other members of the family. And if this goes for that profession, what must it be like for the average Canadian?

The point I am trying to make is that we have to judge the seriousness of the unemployment among women, housewives, young adults and so on, by what it does to family incomes, rather than using the rationalization that it is not such a serious problem because it falls on the categories of people I have mentioned. We recall what the Minister of Manpower and Immigration said on one occasion about the changes in eligibility for unemployment insurance. It might have been a slip of the tongue, but it was very significant nevertheless. He said it was only housewives and "kids" who would be affected.

We know that unemployment among our youth is very serious, and attention has been called to it in a special way by figures recently released by Statistics Canada. Although I am supporting this motion put forward by the official opposition I was startled to read recently in the Ottawa Citizen about a dialogue which was supposed to have taken place between the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. Clark) and a student at Medicine Hat, Alberta, on this question of student unemployment. The student was asking the hon. member for Rocky Mountain, according to this article, about a guaranteed income proposal he had endorsed during the leadership race last year. The Leader of the Official Opposition told the student he no longer favoured the proposal because recent abuses of unemployment insurance had convinced him it might prove too strong a disincentive to work. According to this report, he added, "The natural instinct to work is not as strong among young Canadians as I had thought." That is not exactly a new view. Nor is it supported by the facts.

While three out of every eight unemployment insurance recipients are under the age of 25, fully half of Canada's unemployed are in that age bracket. As beneficiaries of jobless pay, young people are actually under-represented. There is nothing mysterious about that. It is just that even the eight weeks of steady work needed to qualify for unemployment insurance benefits are hard to come by when job seekers outnumber jobs by almost 20 to one.

In the past two years the number of unemployed young people has grown from 258,000 to 387,000—from 9.6 per cent of those between 15 and 54 years of age in the labour force to a figure of 14 per cent. Some, including the present Minister of Manpower and Immigration, have tried to pin the blame on the education system. The hon. gentleman told a recent conference:

> It is time for us in Canada to reorient our educational systems so that young people get the education and training which will ensure them employment.

Unfortunately the minister failed to explain what kind of education and training would enable the 778,000 then unemployed to fit into the 41,000 jobs which were then vacant.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired. He may continue by unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hogan: In conclusion I should like to make a few comments on the issue of national unity. I thought I would have a little more time to spend on that question.

To the extent that the performance, or lack of performance, of the economy has intensified the Quebec separatist movement, the present government must be held responsible for the unemployment rate of some 10 per cent which exists in that province. At least 40 per cent of the young people in Quebec are suffering the effects of unemployment generated in large part by the failure of the federal government's economic policy. It cannot be blamed on the Parti Québécois.

The government has certainly mismanaged the national economy and we, in the Atlantic region, together with our fellow citizens in Quebec, share the legacy, as I have already noted, in the form of extraordinarily high unemployment. It is little wonder that a tenured, separatist, professional elite at the University of Montreal and other universities in the province, as well as teachers at high school level, find willing ears among young Quebec students as they advocate their separatist ideas. After all, Mr. Speaker, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) comes from that province, and he was telling us last year that separatism was dead. Some death! No wonder we are in trouble as a nation.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I had intended to speak the full 20 minutes, but the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) also has to get in his speech tonight so I will keep my remarks to not more than ten minutes to give him at least a few minutes in which to say a few words.

I should like to congratulate the mover of this motion who, I am sorry, is not here at this point, on the speech he made today. It was a speech that contained a great deal of moderation and thought. Many other speeches have been made along the same line, and in general I think we have been looking for solutions to the problems confronting us.

At a time when the economy has been growing at the rate of 3 to 4 per cent over the last eight or ten years as opposed to growth of perhaps 2 per cent over the last century, when we are fourth or fifth lowest in terms of rate of inflation among OECD countries, when we have created by far the largest number of jobs of any country among OECD countries in the last five to six years, and when we weathered best the recession compared with other OECD countries, it seems strange that there should be such concern and malaise in the country today.

Under normal circumstances, Mr. Speaker, our achievements might be considered a roaring success, but these are not normal circumstances. These are not normal times but very complex times. In order to solve our problems we must look at the future very differently from the way we looked ahead in former times. We must find different solutions because the problems are different.

Most of us in this House grew up and were educated under a regime which told us there were no such things as shortages—if only we could let ourselves go we could have everything in Canada. We were told we had all the resources necessary, and in such great abundance around us that we could consume, consume, consume. That has been the modus vivendi of our society. Then in the past three or four years a very important change came about. Instead of the notion of cheap and abundant energy, we have now reached a point where we are facing shortages of energy. All of a sudden we have a totally new concept; instead of the concept of abundance we have the concept of shortage.

In the last few days we had a report published by the workshop on alternate energy sources which told us that as early as 1985 the world will experience a very serious shortage of oil. By the end of the century this shortage will be such that we will probably have to convert to other energy supplies, and automobiles in their present form will no longer exist. This is a major problem which will require some very serious thought and radical change.

We are also told that in the next 15 years Canada will need $180 billion for energy capital in today's dollars. This means that every family unit in the country will be required to pay out something like $30,000, almost the equivalent of the cost of a home in today's dollars. Last week we had a magnificent report by Mr. Justice Berger which told us about the problems of the north, both environmental and social, which this kind of energy development could cause. We have been told by the President of the United States, and by our own energy minister, that we must change our ways, that we must learn to conserve, that we must move away from a consumption type economy. We must embark upon a wholly new lifestyle. As I say, these are not the times we have known in the past.

Another problem facing us is inflation. Inflation is world-wide and not confined to Canada or to one or two countries here and there. With almost no exception there seems to be a basic inflation rate of 5 per cent no matter what one does. This 5 per cent basic inflation rate was discussed at the economic summit and seems to be an insuperable problem.

Unemployment is also a word-wide problem. Even with a 3 to 4 per cent growth rate there is massive unemployment, not just in Canada but all over the industrial world. Despite more than a 20 per cent increase in jobs in this country between 1971 and 1975, twice the rate of any other country in the OECD group, we have serious unemployment in Canada. Consumer demand is growing at a rate of 5 to 6 per cent a year, despite the energy shortage. In the last few months $2.4 billion was pumped into the economy in terms of demand money. Despite the last budget and indexing, we still have massive unemployment.

Unemployment is a structural problem, not a problem which can be solved by increasing money supply and consumer demand. If you have a 4.6 per cent unemployment rate in Alberta but a 17.4 per cent unemployment rate in Newfoundland and you increase consumer demand, this will mean that most of the benefit will go to Alberta with only a slight lowering of the unemployment rate in Newfoundland. In other words, it is a structural problem which requires a structural answer.

I should like to deal with the regional approach because I think this is the direction in which we should go. For example, I am pleased at the amendments to the Unemployment Insurance Act to allow the act to function differently in the Atlantic provinces from the way the act functions in Toronto.

Young people and women who enter the labour force also face a serious employment problem. During the 1950's about 60,000 young people were leaving schools, universities and so on and entering the labour market annually. Today this figure is around 250,000 a year and is rising, and we are told that the situation will not improve until well into the 1990's. How can we solve this kind of problem?

The thing that bothers me a great deal about the situation is that we are virtually setting up two classes of Canadians. One class of Canadian is employed in the work force permanently. The other class, which I think consists mostly of young people, may very well never be part of the work force. I do not think we can solve this problem by increasing demand or even by government projects. Rather we must look at the total work force and at the amount of work that can gainfully be done, and then somewhere along the line there must be a concept of work sharing, some way in which young people can plug into the labour market and older people can retire earlier. We have to look at new ideas to solve this problem.

In conclusion, these are unique times. I would love to develop that notion, but these are very, very different times, and the solutions are not going to be the standard ones we hear talked about in this House. We must move in new directions and do a lot of new thinking before we come to a successful solution to the problems we have. We must change our lifestyle significantly in the next four or five years.

Mr. James Gillies (Don Valley): Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. McRae) for giving up some of his time to allow me to have a word or two at the end of this important debate today. I am pleased and proud to have the opportunity to be the closing speaker in this debate because I think it is an important one. The parliament of Canada must get involved in an understanding and a discussion of the issues, which have to be the most important issues that have faced Canada since Confederation.

I have been alarmed and distressed, since the election of Mr. Levesque in the province of Quebec, that this parliament has been moribund in not dealing or discussing with any sort of depth the real issues which are facing the nation. If we do not start to face them in the federal parliament of Canada, we will lead to the destruction of the nation we all cherish so much. The party which I have the honour of representing today has done a major service in introducing a motion which asks parliamentarians to look at issues which are important in Canada today. I am referring mainly to the important issue of separation. I am sorry the motion today was not dealt with in a more direct manner.

What has been the fundamental relationship between the development of separatism in the province of Quebec and the operation of the economic policy of this nation as a whole? Historically you will not find any examples where separatism in a country has risen except in response to a very strong differentiation in levels of economic performance.

If you look at the evolution issue in Great Britain today, the problem areas for the British are Scotland and Wales. There have been major differences in levels of economic performance there. If you look at France, Brittany is the area which has been concerned about the operation of the country as a whole. It has been an area of deprivation. The areas where federalism has really worked are areas where there have not been major differentiations in levels of economic performance. If you look at Canada and analyse the economic performance in the province of Quebec, as related to economic performance in other areas of this country, the reality is that the province of Quebec has had a much poorer economic performance than the rest of the country as a whole.

In the province of Quebec the level of unemployment has been consistently high and the rate of investment has been consistently low. The question one has to ask is: why? The national government has the responsibility for economic performance. It has the responsibility for doing something about the differentiation in regional rates of development. It has failed. The issue is very important and must be made clear to the people of the province of Quebec. They have been given a song by the premier of Quebec that they can have political independence and the same standard of living which they have at the present time. It is a song which is very hard to resist. To the terrible criticism of all of us in the Parliament of Canada, it is going unanswered.

The program being offered by the premier of Quebec is going to be irresistible to many of the people in that province because it is based on some very real facts. The people who happen to be members of parliament in Canada at this time will be looked on by their children and grandchildren as having not even responded to these issues. If anyone canvasses around Canada, they will find out that the respect the people of Canada have for their members of parliament has gone down. The reason is very clear. We are not living up to our responsibilities. We are not debating the real issues in the House of Commons of Canada today. We are not raising the questions about which the people of Canada care. They care about keeping this country together. They want this country kept together, and we do not talk about it here. We do not debate it here.

We had an opportunity today to come to grips with this issue. I have great respect for the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell). He did not direct himself to this issue. He spoke about the west, in a debate which ought to be on whether or not this country is going to stay together. He spoke about tariffs. That is not the issue. The issue is: why has not the federal Government of Canada been able to provide for the people of Quebec an economic opportunity equivalent to that enjoyed by the rest of the people of Canada?

Mr. Kaplan: It has not been better in the Atlantic provinces, and they are not leaving Canada.

Mr. Gillies: The statistics are very clear. They show the people of the province of Quebec have been faced with an unemployment rate which has been consistently 20 per cent higher than the rest of Canada. Why is that so when they have the resource base they possess? To mention the Atlantic provinces is irrelevant. It is also unimportant in this context if you look at the resource base in those areas. The important issue to the people of the province of Quebec is whether they are going to stay in Confederation. I do not care whether you are Liberal, Conservative, NDP or Créditiste. That is irrelevant to me. I would like to see this country stay together. That is what I care about.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillies: I do not care about those other things. The people of Quebec know their economic performance has been low. It is our responsibility to have an important debate to show them, if they separate and if they vote for Mr. Lévesque, that their performance will not be improved. They have to be shown that the reasons for their low economic performance are not endemic to Confederation.

If they decide to go with Mr. Lévesque in the province of Quebec, which is a market of six million people instead of 22 million people, with a concern about investment being slowed down because of uncertainty, and a concern about nationalization of asbestos, their standard of living is going to be much less than if they stay within Confederation. Nobody in this parliament or in this country is telling the people of Quebec that story. As federal politicians we are going to find out, because we did not tell them that story—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being ten o'clock it is my duty to inform the House that, pursuant to Standing Order 58(11), proceedings on the motion have now expired.

CANADIAN BROADCASTING CORPORATION—REQUEST THAT FINAL GAMES OF WORLD HOCKEY LEAGUE CHAMPIONSHIP BE TELEVISED

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, with the greatest pleasure I would have allowed the hon. member for Don Valley (Mr. Gillies) some of my time tonight because I will not need seven minutes. I will try to follow on the same theme as the hon. member for Don Valley has raised this evening, which is Canadian unity.

The reason I am on my feet tonight is in regard to the problems we are facing in Canada with hundreds of thousands of people requesting that the WHL hockey finals be televised. We have had very little success with the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation in resolving this problem until today. The hockey finals could be a great step toward Canadian unity. This matter has nothing to do with French, English, or anything else. People in Quebec, in Manitoba, and in the rest of Canada want to see the hockey finals. We have been running into a blank wall, and the matter has now reached the floor of the House of Commons. It has been brought up time and time again over the last number of weeks, and today it took three members of parliament to raise this issue before we could get any action on why CBC will not televise the WHL finals. One of the reasons given is that they show too much sport. It is said that the WHA games are not on the same level as those of the NHL. I do not agree. Today the WHA is on the same level as the NHL. Since hundreds of thousands of people are demanding the televising of this particular hockey final, the least the CBC can do is comply with their wishes.

Mr. Paproski: This government does not care.

Mr. McKenzie: As I said earlier, three members of parliament raised the question in the House, I being one of them, but we got absolutely no answers from the three ministers we questioned. I pursued the question this afternoon in the Standing Committee on Broadcasting, Films and Assistance to the Arts. The President of the CBC, Mr. A. Johnston, was there. Since I raised this question in committee this afternoon, several things have happened. I received three telephone calls from the CBC this evening. Apparently they are prepared to show a couple of these final games live. I am repeating what I have been told by CBC officials. Incidentally, I am pleased to note the presence in the House of the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts) who answers for the CBC. I hope he will confirm what the CBC liaison officer in the House of Commons told me this evening. I am told that the fifth game can be shown live, if that game can be scheduled for the afternoon.

If the WHA cannot schedule that game for the afternoon, the CBC will tape the game and show it after the news on Sunday night. The CBC has also informed me that the sixth game can be taped and shown on Tuesday night, May 24, after the late night news. That tapes game will also be shown in Quebec.

The CBC has presented the WHA with an alternative proposal. The CBC told the WHA that if Tuesday's game could be moved to Thursday, the CBC would be able to cover that game live, and broadcast it live in Manitoba and Quebec, and I presume right across Canada. The CBC also says that, if a seventh game is necessary, if it is played on the afternoon of Saturday, May 28, it could be televised live on the English and French networks.

Apparently we have made progress since this afternoon as a result of previous representations in the House, letters, telephone calls and so on. I hope the minister will confirm what I have just placed on record with regard to the CBC's providing coverage of the WHA finals.

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I listened with considerable interest to the remarks of the hon. member who reminds me of a barnyard cock who firmly believes the sun rises every day because he crows.

The hon. member raised this question today in the House, and he also raised it in committee this afternoon. But the matter was raised by others long before the hon. member showed any interest in it. It was raised by the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Duclos), and by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet). The fact is that such interventions in relation to this question did not begin this afternoon. They began last week. I myself called the parliamentary liaison officer to the CBC on Friday, and there have been continuing contacts between my office and the CBC with respect to this issue for several days. The results which the hon. member has proudly proclaimed as coming from his interventions are actually the results of interventions made by members on this side of the House long before he showed any interest in the matter.

The point I would like to make is that in terms of the intervention of ministers in relation to these matters it is not the Secretary of State who has the power to intervene with the CBC or to direct it to do this or that in terms of its internal management, its day-to-day decisions or its programming. The Secretary of State is a link between hon. members of this House and the CBC, and as such I do bring to the attention of the CBC the complaints which are presented to me by hon. members of this House and the concerns which they express. That is what I have done in this case, and I am very happy to be able to indicate to the House that the interventions which were made by the hon. member for Montmorency (Mr. Duclos) and my colleague, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet), have been successful.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.07 p.m.

AIRPORTS

COMMITTEE STUDY OF OPERATIONS OF MIRABEL AND PROPOSED FACILITIES OF PICKERING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I rise under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. With the Montreal International Airport at Mirabel losing over $56 million per year and with airports such as Logan at Boston actively advertising in Canadian journals their convenient service in contrast to Mirabel, and in view of the fact that in the Toronto area the government has tied up 18,000 acres of prime farm land at Pickering in anticipation of constructing a further white elephant while aircraft movements at Malton have increased only 2 per cent in the last five years, I move, seconded by the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek):

That the government make a suitable reference to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications to investigate and make recommendations on the operation of Mirabel airport at Montreal and the proposed Pickering airport at Toronto.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

IMMIGRATION

SUGGESTION MR. DENEGRI BE PERMITTED TO REMAIN IN CANADA—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of the same order. In view of the fact that Mr. Pedro Denegri has exhausted all avenues of appeal against deportation to Chile, and in view of the evidence that Mr. Denegri has been tortured in Chile previously by the military junta and could face execution if he is returned to that country because of his involvement with the previous Chilean regime, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House directs the Minister of Manpower and Immigration to permit Mr. Denegri to remain in Canada on humanitarian grounds.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

CRIMINAL CODE

ALLEGED VIOLATION OF ABORTION PROVISION BY CERTAIN ADVERTISEMENTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In light of the advertisement appearing in the Ottawa Journal of May 9, 1977 which reads in part as follows: "Legal abortions on demand. Near Ottawa . . . same day . . . on demand (same day by certified gynecologists)", and in recognition that this is clearly in violation of section 251 of the Criminal Code, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie):

That this House direct the Minister of Justice to contact immediately all provincial Attorneys General in order to co-ordinate legal action against such flagrant violations and misrepresentations of the Criminal Code.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

SUGGESTED STUDY OF IMPACT ON OTTAWA RIVER OF ADDITIONAL DISCHARGES OF RAW SEWAGE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In light of reports that the move of 15,000 civil servants to the city of Hull will generate 30,000 more flushes per day of raw sewage into the Ottawa River, and since it is reported that Hull does not have secondary sewage treatment plants, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mrs. Pigott):

MAGI

That this House instruct the Minister of the Environment to determine whether or not Hull has the proper sewage treatment facilities and if not to order a study to determine the environmental impact on the Ottawa River of 30,000 more flushes per day of raw sewage.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House under the terms of Standing Order 43. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

STUDY OF EFFECT ON UNEMPLOYED OF ALLEGEDLY UNFAIR UNION WORK-SHARING PRACTICES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity dealing with the unfair practice within the present work-sharing programs of certain unions. Contrary to the statement of the Minister of Labour regarding this work-sharing program, it has come to my attention that a great number of unions, including the UAW, are indeed making it obligatory for their membership to work beyond the number of prescribed hours in a working week, thereby curtailing considerably potential work opportunities for tens of thousands of unemployed, many of whom already have had extensive experience in their respective fields. Therefore, for the sake of an equitable and fair work-sharing program, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hamilton West (Mr. Alexander):

That this House instruct the Minister of Labour to acquaint himself forthwith with this unfair practice and take any necessary action in order to rectify the work-sharing problem now being faced by a great number of unemployed.

Mr. Speaker: Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House for presentation of such a motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

METROPOLITAN AREA GROWTH INVESTMENTS

REQUEST FOR STUDY OF RQLE OF NOVA SCOTIA IN ORGANIZATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the unsatisfactory and even ludicrous efforts put forth by Metropolitan Area Growth Investments, that hybrid Crown corporation founded five years ago and funded by the federal government and the province of Nova Scotia with $20 million of taxpayers' money, I move, seconded by the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens):

That the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion take whatever steps necessary to investigate thoroughly and report back to the House of Commons before June 30 on the role of the junior partner in this arrangement, the government of Nova Scotia, with respect to the undue delay occasioned by the insistence of Premier Regan on using appointments to the agency as a pork barrel, and the incompetence demonstrated to date by Mr. Scott MacNutt and other executives in, among other things, purchasing for several million dollars a second-hand cruise ship registered offshore to promote the best interests of Nova Scotia.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

HEALTH

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY MINISTER ON POSSIBILITY OF SWINE FLU VACCINATION PROGRAM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the reported probable swine flu death two days ago in South Carolina, and in view of the fact there is plenty of vaccine left over from last year, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Brandon-Souris (Mr. Dinsdale):

That the Minister of National Health and Welfare state on motions whether it is his intention to have another national swine flu vaccination program this year.

Mr. Speaker: For the presentation of such a motion for debate, Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

SALE OF CANDU REACTOR TO ARGENTINA—REQUEST FOR REPORT ON ALLEGED PAY-OFFS

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, again my question is for the Acting Prime Minister. He will remember yesterday I brought up the matter of the media revelations respecting one Jose Ben Gelbard, an ex-minister in the government of Argentina, who is alleged to have been the prime recipient of Canadian taxpayer's money in respect of an AECL Argentine CANDU reactor pay-off.

Almost unbelievably, and I say that most advisedly, the Acting Prime Minister and his cabinet colleagues who were in the House indicated that they knew nothing of that report yesterday. He indicated as well that he would take up the matter immediately and I presume call for immediate reports from his colleague, the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, the Department of External Affairs and the Department of the Solicitor General in regard to the RCMP investigation into this matter. That is what the Acting Prime Minister undertook yesterday in the House. I ask him to fulfil his commitment now. What has been done, what does he know about it, and can he verify these reports?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the hon. gentleman, may I say I have asked for further information on the question. The Department of External Affairs has put into place an investigation in an effort to verify these allegations. On the surface, there appear to be considerable discrepancies in the reports, but I am not in a position to go into any detail. With respect to the Department of the Solicitor General, I understand that the RCM Police are still investigating these matters. I have no further comment to make. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources is in the chamber and he may wish to add to or subtract from that answer.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary has to be to the Acting Prime Minister again in view of the obvious apathy that his ministerial colleague is showing in not rising in his place in this House. Obviously, the government believes or hopes that if there is no further reference to this matter, it will quietly disappear from the scene. I can assure them it is not going to disappear from the scene. Twenty-four hours ago the minister made a commitment to this House that he would indicate what he and the government are doing about this matter and to verify or comment further on these reports. That report has been available to the minister and the government for at least four days. The Financial Post is published on Monday or Tuesday of each week. It has been available here in Ottawa. It has been on the wire services. The continued evasion of the government in this matter is something that is abhorrent to us all.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lawrence: My further question to the minister is simply this. Is he going to make any further comment other than the piddling remarks he has made on this matter today in the House?

Mr. MacEachen: No, Mr. Speaker, not in reply to the rather intemperate outburst of the hon. member.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ENERGY

SALE OF CANDU REACTOR TO KOREA—ALLEGEDLY MISLEADING STATEMENTS ON SERVICES PERFORMED BY MR. EISENBERG

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the seriousness of the possible misuse of millions of dollars of taxpayers' money related to sales of CANDU reactors and with regard to the Korean situation, is the minister now sufficiently well briefed to acknowledge that he has misled members of this House on different occasions by saying that Korean officials who disputed the statements that Mr. Eisenberg and his company did not appear to have performed any tangible services as agents were not, to use his words, there at the time. Now that he has had some time to think it over, does he wish to change his answer?

An hon. Member: Come, on, tell him!

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, we apparently have somebody else who is prepared to answer the question.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, this is an important question. In view of reports from responsible people in the Korean Atomic Research Agency and the Korean Electric Company that there does not appear to be any tangible evidence that Mr. Eisenberg could justify the millions of dollars received, not having hired one Korean national or done anything to justify the moneys which apparently have been transferred to him, will the minister stop evading this important matter, pick up the telephone and call the liaison office of the Korean Electric Company at 282-9680 in Montreal so that he can, at least, satisfy himself how little he knows of what he has been saying in the House?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I think it might be worth making just one comment. There seems to be an effort on the part of members opposite to try to make a major political issue out of the investigation.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Gillespie: I suggest to them they would serve the people of Canada better if they were to look at the evidence and to deal with the people who are in a position to give detailed answers, the people who are appearing before the Public Accounts committee; that is what the Public Accounts committee is for. Second, it seems strange that a former attorney general of the province of Ontario should suggest to us, at a time when there is an RCMP investigation going on, that we should in some way or another interfere with or intervene in that investigation. He knows perfectly well that the investigation is under way, and until the RCMP has something to report we have nothing to report either.

● (1120)

Mr. MacKay: Mr. Speaker, the minister should note that so far this House has received nothing more than the third-hand information of a former chairman of the Korean Electric Company upon which all these high sounding statements are based, and without interfering or doing anything to impede the RCMP investigation will the minister not take the most rudimentary interest in what is going on and tell this House some of the facts which we are entitled to know?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for New Westminster.

ENVIRONMENTAL AFFAIRS

DRILLING IN BEAUFORT SEA—GOVERNMENT'S KNOWLEDGE OF FACTORS LEADING TO UNITED STATES DECISION TO POSTPONE DRILLING

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the government House leader in the absence of the Minister of the Environment. The United States announced this week that it is going to delay the sale of any leases in the Beaufort Sea until 1979. Would the minister advise the House whether he and the cabinet are aware of the factors which led to the delay in terms of U.S. leases in the Beaufort Sea? If he is not aware of what they were, will the cabinet be aware of them before the decision to redrill under our own program is made? Will the House be made aware of the factors which led the United States to delay its decision on Beaufort Sea leases?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. member is making a reasonable request, and I will attempt to see that it is fulfilled.

DRILLING IN BEAUFORT SEA—NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNITED STATES FOR COMPENSATION IN EVENT OF OIL SPILL

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, the United States has expressed concern to the Canadian government about the potential for damage in its own Beaufort Sea area as a result of prospective drilling by Canada. Can the minister now bring the House up to date as to the state of the negotiations or what agreements there are with the United States in terms of compensation to the United States in the event of spills in the Beaufort Sea as a result of our drilling program?

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I know that prior to the first authorization for drilling there was considerable consultation with the United States in an effort to deal with whatever concerns that government had on environmental questions. These were very much in our minds and were taken into account in the circumstances which surrounded the drilling. With respect to the question of compensation, I would have to seek some information on that.

[Mr. Gillespie.]

DRILLING IN BEAUFORT SEA—PROPOSED CONFERENCE OF CIRCUMPOLAR NATIONS ON ENVIRONMENTAL EFFECTS

Mr. Stuart Leggatt (New Westminster): Mr. Speaker, one of the recommendations which was made in the Berger report dealing with the Beaufort drilling program was that Canada call together the circumpolar nations in an international conference. Before we destroy the Arctic we should at least talk to some people about how we can go about cleaning it up. I am wondering if the minister can advise the House whether that particular recommendation in the Berger report is now before cabinet and when we will receive a decision from the government in terms of that specific recommendation, that is, the calling of a circumpolar conference of all the polar nations around the Arctic so that we can make sure we do not do anything to the climate of this planet with oil spills in that sensitive area.

Hon. Allan J. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have already stated on behalf of the government that we have taken and are taking the Berger report very seriously indeed. All aspects of it are under consideration at the present time, but in general we will not be making decisions on the recommendations of the Berger report until further information is available to us, including the report of the National Energy Board, the report of Dean Lysyk, which is expected on August 1, and the findings of the environmental panel. That is the general situation. I have had no indication that the Minister of the Environment has decided to call, in advance of those general decisions, a conference of the circumpolar nations, although it is obviously a matter of interest to the government and may very well be a proposal which can be acted upon.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT OF COMPENSATORY PAYMENTS FOR NON-USE OF FORCE IN QUEBEC—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Solicitor General.

During the first mandate of the Bourassa government in Quebec, the then Minister of Justice, Mr. Choquette, made representations to the federal government with a view to obtaining compensatory payments from the central government in lieu of the services given by the RCMP in the other provinces. Now, with the advent of the new government in Quebec and in view of the news that Quebec intends to have its own service, to be known as the Sûreté Nationale can the minister tell the House whether he has had talks with the Quebec Minister of Justice with regard to that RCMP file, and also tell the House what progress has been made in that connection?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, since the dates mentioned by the hon. member and in the last few months I have had occasion to answer that question as put by some of the colleagues of the hon. member, and I must say there have been no changes in the federal government policy since then. In answer to the specific question as to whether I have had talks with the Minister of Justice on the matter, the reply is no, Mr. Speaker. I should like to point out to the hon. member that a federal-provincial conference of justice ministers and ministers responsible for the penal sector will be held in Ottawa starting on June 27 next. Of course, at that time I intend to meet the Quebec Minister of Justice and discuss a whole series of problems.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, on a supplementary.

As, according to what he says, the minister intends to bring up the matter again at that conference, can he tell the House whether he will have specific proposals to put to the Quebec government in order to solve that matter so that the two parties, Quebec and Ottawa, can be relieved of that burden?

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, I decidedly must have expressed myself poorly in my answer to the hon. member. A federal-provincial conference will be held starting on June 27 next. The matter he mentions is not on the agenda. It has already been taken up at the provincial and federal solicitors general level. No agreement was reached and, later on, the matter was entrusted to the first ministers at their conference. Moreover, the position of the federal government on the matter has been expressed definitively by the Prime Minister of Canada.

EFFECT OF PROGRAM IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND TO REDUCE COST OF ELECTRICITY

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The minister may recall that when he appeared before the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works on March 8 he indicated that he has been trying to cushion the consumers of Prince Edward Island against high energy costs. I think he is well aware of the very great cost differential between Prince Edward Island and say, his hometown of Toronto—something like 300 per cent. Can the minister indicate the extent to which the program introduced around Christmas last year has had any impact in terms of reducing the cost, particularly on those most directly affected on the production side such as in agriculture, especially dairying, where there has been a high demand for electricity? As the minister well knows there is no direct relationship between the electricity costs factor and the insulation program that he announced earlier.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, it is too early to give the hon. member a quantitative response to his question but I can say that inquiries I made as recently as a week ago indicated that the program was an outstanding success.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary question. I hope the minister will be able to back up his self-congratulatory adjective of "outstanding" with some real statistics, particularly in the area of the cost disadvantage of our major industries. Here again I am thinking of agriculture where there is a very real burden in terms of high electrical costs. I wonder if the minister has conferred with the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion to learn in particular of any firms that have been unable to locate in Prince Edward Island specifically as a result of prohibitive electrical costs in that province?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I would be very pleased to take the hon. member's suggestion and talk to my colleague about the inhibiting effects of high electrical cost on industry in Prince Edward Island. Going back to my earlier answer, when I said it was an outstanding success I think any program which has a response of better than 25 per cent of households within six weeks of its initiation has to be regarded as a very successful program.

RELATIONSHIP BETWEEN LOW PERCENTAGE OF HOMES IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND USING ELECTRICAL HEATING AND INSULATION PROGRAM

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I am afraid that the minister is engaging in his old apples and oranges exercise. Could he clarify for the House soon, if he cannot do it today, the actual impact of those insulation programs on use of electricity inasmuch as few, perhaps less than 5 per cent, of all homes on Prince Edward Island use electricity for heating purposes? Can he indicate how those two figures can relate to one another? The relationship certainly is not apparent to those who are directly affected by the highest electrical costs in the country, in Prince Edward Island.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I am sure the hon. member is aware that the government looked at the energy costs of the household and at the best way of cushioning those additional energy costs which are associated with the high cost of electrical generation, and came down in favour of an insulation program, a program which I understand the hon. member supports.

STUDY OF INTEGRATION OF ELECTRICAL GENERATING SYSTEMS FOR MARITIME PROVINCES—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Hon. Robert L. Stanfield (Halifax): Mr. Speaker, I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. My question concerns what he proposed some time ago, namely, that there should be a total revamping of the electrical generation system of the Maritime provinces and particularly that there should be integration and a resorting to large units. How is the minister coming along with this study?

Where is it? When are we going to get answers from the minister as to what is going on, or are we to talk another year about more studies?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think a great deal of progress has been made. As the hon. member knows, the three Maritime provinces joined with the federal government in announcing the principles underlying the Maritime energy corporation. The work being done now is with respect to refining the nature of the role of such a corporation.

Mr. Stanfield: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Work on refining the role of such a corporation will not do much to reduce electric power rates in the Maritime provinces. I ask the minister, when are we to see something tangible, something concrete? When will we see some decisions taken, decisions along the lines the minister suggested should be taken? Can the minister stop talking in general terms about all this progress he sees being made? If it is not appropriate to make a statement during the question period, could he at some other time make a statement on a matter of such vital importance to the economy of the Maritime region? Where are we at? Where is the minister at? Where are the provinces at—quite apart from all this big talk about progress?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, we are at present trying to establish a Maritime energy corporation which will bring significant future benefits to the people of the Maritimes precisely because those who were formerly in positions of power in the Maritimes, provincial premiers in particular, were not long-sighted enough to see the problem which would confront us.

Mr. Alexander: Oh, come on!

Mr. Stanfield: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The minister is showing how little he knows about these problems.

An hon. Member: Right on.

Mr. Stanfield: The integration took place as recommended by the federal government and agreed to by the provinces. Will the minister tell me, frankly, whether agreement has been reached about a further stage of integration, or will the minister try to keep taking us down this long garden path he has been on for the last year?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, if those who were in the position some years ago to form such a corporation thought it was such a good idea, why was the corporation not formed? Clearly it has taken a good deal of time to gain the support of the three Maritime premiers for the formation of such a corporation, and to convince them that such a corporation is important for the future of their area. We have tried to do this in the last year. Clearly, when one deals with three Maritime premiers, each of whom has a slightly different view of what is important, it takes time to work out the details. We have done more in the last six months with respect to this question than was done, I think, during the last 15 years.

FUNDY TIDAL POWER PROJECT—ALLEGATION FEDERAL GOVERNMENT DELAYING PROGRESS—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources relates to the energy resources of the Maritime area and the strong attack made in the Nova Scotia Legislature on Monday on the minister and the assistant deputy minister who is the chairman of the Fundy Tidal Power Review Committee. The premier accused the assistant deputy minister of delaying significantly the progress which he desired in that area. What is the minister's reaction to that? I ask this in view of the comments he has made about the degree of co-operation being developed with the three Maritime premiers.

Mr. Muir: The minister has not been talking to Regan.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member knows that I do not speak for the Premier of Nova Scotia. The Premier of Nova Scotia of course has his own views which are peculiar to himself. I do not happen to agree with him one little bit on that particular view.

DATE OF ANNOUNCEMENT OF PURCHASE OF STATION CJBR-TV

Mr. Eymard Corbin (Madawaska-Victoria): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State.

Since approval and authorization have been granted by the CRTC to the CBC to buy CJBR-TV stations in Rimouski and Edmunston, New Brunswick, and the CRTC decision has been made public three weeks ago, would the minister tell us why the government has not yet approved this decision and when the citizens of the republic of Madawaska will have the first French quality service in television broadcasting throughout the territory, which also allow for the simultaneous inauguration of the intraprovincialization of the French service in New Brunswick?

[English]

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, because he arranged the meeting, I have met with constituents of his area and cannot help being aware of the considerable desire of people in his area to have these services confirmed and extended. I am sympathetic to that view and would like to do everything I can to make it possible. This whole complex question is under study and I hope to be able to give some indication soon as to what the result will be. I share the hon. member's concern but cannot give him a specific assurance at this time.

FINANCE

DATE WHEN BALANCED BUDGET EXPECTED

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. As President Carter's economic adviser, Mr. Charles Schultze, has set for the United States a target of a budgetary surplus between $25 million and $30 million to be reached by 1981, the attainment of which target Mr. Schultze states could lead to reduced taxes, would the Minister of Finance say when he expects this country to reach the position of a balanced budget, bearing in mind that our current budgetary deficit is some $7.2 billion?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have debated in this House and in committee the wisdom of setting long-term goals of that kind since, inevitably, events both external to this country and internal can make them difficult to reach. I would have to say that I would not anticipate being able to bring the budget on a national accounts basis into balance for the next several years. I certainly would not attempt to make any prediction that by a specific year this would come about. It seems to me that the uncertainties involved in the international economy are such that I admire Mr. Schultze's courage in that regard, but perhaps question his judgment in being so precise.

DATE WHEN THERE WILL BE A REDUCTION IN LEVEL OF UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Again to the Minister of Finance. I hope that in reply to this question he will be more precise. As Mr. Schultze anticipates that employment in the United States will fall to 4¾ per cent by 1981 from its present level of 7 per cent in that country, would the minister tell us whether he foresees a similar fall in our own unemployment level, presently 8.3 per cent?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): I anticipate there would be a gradual reduction over the next several years, but obviously the principles governing my previous answer would apply to this question as well.

OBJECTIVE WITH REGARD TO JOB CREATION

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): The United States administration has accepted the challenge which, I take it, was thrown out at the London economic conference, and has established job creation as being the number one priority, indicating it would try to create ten million jobs, mainly in the private sector, by 1981. Would the minister indicate the objective of the Canadian government with respect to job creation? Is there a target with respect to the number of jobs to be created by 1981?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): The hon. member would do well to read both my previous answers.

HEALTH

PROSTHETIC SERVICES FOR VETERANS—GOVERNMENT ACTION TO IMPROVE

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the fact that veteran amputees have expressed the opinion that the quality of prosthetic services in the Department of National Health and Welfare has fallen behind that of private industry in the field of technical advances and new hardware, and since the veteran sometimes finds that the prosthetic device most suitable to his needs is unavailable to him, would the hon. gentleman tell us what assurances he can give to veterans of Canada that improvements will be made?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): For some time now, the Minister of Veterans Affairs and myself have not been very satisfied with the prosthetic services provided by my department in this regard. Discussions have been held with officers of the War Amputees of Canada on this subject. The result of these discussions was a recommendation to cabinet which has been approved whereby the federal government will limit its role mainly to one of co-ordination and consultation; the operational responsibilities will be transferred to other agencies, private or public. Consultations with the provincial authorities will continue regarding health services and workmen's compensation boards. I would be happy to ask my officials to give further details on this subject to the hon. member at his convenience.

URBAN AFFAIRS

AUTHORITY OF MINISTER OF JUSTICE TO ANNOUNCE PROJECTS FOR VANCOUVER NOT COVERED BY ESTIMATES

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Justice. I should like to ask him under what authority he has recently announced the expenditure of $6 million on public works projects for the City of Vancouver and by what authority he has taken it upon himself to allow the hon. member for Vancouver-Kingsway and the hon. member for Vancouver East to make further announcements of public works projects in respect of which we cannot seem to be able to find anything within the estimates of any department now before the various estimates committees.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): The announcements to which the hon. member has referred concerning projects which will be of immense benefit to the citizens of Vancouver—

An hon. Member: And to you!

Mr. Basford: I am interested to hear the comments of hon. members opposite who do not seem to like to hear about improvement in Vancouver. Anyway, they were announced on behalf of the minister responsible, the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, on the authority of the Treasury Board.

Mr. Oberle: In the light of the fact that the projects commissioned by the minister from Vancouver have been subjected to the scrutiny of the ratepayers of the city of Vancouver recently and have not been approved by them, I ask the minister by what authority other cities can apply to the Treasury Board for projects such as fish markets and swimming pools? Does the minister not agree with me that this is a smelly situation and the worst kind of political patronage ever perpetrated on this country?

Mr. Basford: I answered the first question because it was directed to me and had to do with the authority on which the announcements were made. I answered on behalf of my colleague. I think the rest of the question properly relates to the administrative responsibility of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, and he should answer it. Obviously, neither I nor the government can accept the premise of the hon. member's question.

TRANSPORT

REQUEST FOR STATISTICAL DATA INDICATING RISK OF OIL SPILLS AS RESULT OF INCREASED TANKER TRAFFIC

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Transport to whom I put certain questions last Wednesday inquiring what information, statistical and otherwise, he has available to him concerning the risk of oil spills, having regard to increased tanker traffic both to existing ports and to proposed new ports on both coasts. The minister replied that he was that day tabling an emergency plan and a report. Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman has no statistical information indicating the risk factors from spills resulting from increased oil tanker traffic to existing ports and to proposed ports such as Kitimat, how can he judge the value of those reports?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): The hon. member persists in relating the answer to the second part of this question to the first part. I was saying that the information we had was, by and large, of an internal working nature. The hon. member asked whether it was suitable for tabling. I am not at all sure that it is. We are developing positions in anticipation of an international conference on the conditions which might be imposed across the world in relation to tankers. An analysis of risks and costs would obviously be involved in that exercise. But I do not for the moment have this information in a form which can be tabled.

Mr. Jarvis: About two weeks ago the Minister of the Environment made available to us a report which his environmental officials said was the best information available on oil blow-out risks, even though this was a complex and technical subject. Is the minister telling us now that the internal documents to which he referred are so complicated and so far beyond the possibility of comprehension by the public and by members of this House that he is not making them available for that reason?

Mr. Lang: Not at all. As soon as the material can be made available in a form which represents the conclusion of work rather than the middle of work, it will be made available.

INCOME TAX

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF AGREEMENT WITH QUEBEC ON REDUCTION OF DEDUCTIONS FOR RESIDENTS OF ONTARIO WORKING IN QUEBEC

Mrs. Jean E. Pigott (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Revenue. It concerns her recent announcement of an agreement between federal and Quebec authorities to reduce tax deductions from federal employees residing in Ontario but working in Quebec. What form did this agreement take, and will the minister table this document?

[Translation]

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, as promised the subject matter of this agreement was announced to the House and to the general public when I obtained it, given the urgency of the situation and the well-being of all people involved. I do not think it would be necessary to table also internal working papers since the agreement was concluded as an exchange of notes between our respective revenue deputy ministers.

GRAIN

DISCUSSIONS WITH UNITED STATES ON INTERNATIONAL WHEAT AGREEMENT—POSSIBILITY OF AGREEMENT ON PRICE

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, I would direct my question to the minister responsible for the Wheat Board since the Minister of Agriculture is not here today. It concerns an international wheat agreement which the U.S. Secretary of Agriculture was discussing with the minister in Ottawa. I should like to ask the hon. gentleman whether the two governments have reached any agreement or conclusion with regard to the minimum price they would like to see for world wheat stocks. If they have not come to a conclusion as far as price is concerned, what is holding them back and when will further negotiations and discussions take place?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Questions about price are not being discussed now but they will be discussed at meetings of the International Wheat Council to commence on June 27 at which importers as well as exporters will be represented. Discussions among the exporters have been mainly related to the techniques which could be used to ensure that any agreement achieved internationally could be maintained and supported in a way which was not possible under the old agreement.

INTERNATIONAL WHEAT AGREEMENT—METHOD OF AVOIDING DEPRESSING EFFECT ON PRICES OF STOCKPILING

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): One of the most important aspects of this whole question from the point of view of wheat producers is the way in which the various governments administer a stockpile so that supplies will not become a burden and have a depressing effect on world wheat prices. Can the minister enlighten the House as to how the various countries, and specifically the Canadian Wheat Board, view this situation, and what do they hope to use in place of a large stockpile, which would certainly have a depressing effect on western grain prices?

● (1150)

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is my position that the importers must recognize the value to them of security of supply and also must not want an agreement which leads to the exporters paying for that security by lower prices because of that very reserve. This will argue either for payments by importers of part of the carrying costs of the reserve and devices to ensure that it does not affect the market when the market is otherwise relatively weak, or it will lead to such price structures which take into account the carrying of the reserve by the exporting nations. Those are the two basic alternatives. If it is the latter, that obviously also complements the fact that we will likely have to have an understanding about the relative reserves to be carried by the various exporting countries in order that we know how that affects the market share to which each is entitled.

COMMUNICATIONS

EFFECT OF DECISION BY BELL CANADA NOT TO GIVE MESSAGES TO RETURN COLLECT CALLS—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. F. A. Philbrook (Halton): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Communications. In view of the recent decision by Bell Canada to forbid its operators to leave messages to return collect calls, and in view of the need for constituents to have easy access to their MP's, have any alternate arrangements been considered to assure these crucial telephone links between our Ottawa offices and our constituents?

Particularly, does the government intend to make an agreement with Bell Canada to allow calls to members of parliament or to make zenith calls from our constituencies possible?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I was informed of that problem and I have already called a meeting between Bell Canada and the government telecommunications agency and the other transCanadian telephone systems. The meeting will be held this afternoon and I hope we will find arrangements which will meet the needs of members of parliament.

LABOUR CONDITIONS

PROPOSAL TO ESTABLISH INDUSTRIAL SAFETY AND HEALTH CENTRE—REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Labour and it is based on the promise in the Speech from the Throne last October that an industrial safety and health centre would be established to assist companies and workers in their efforts to identify and remove health and occupational hazards. In light of a study released two or three days ago which shows that nickel workers in Port Colborne, Ontario, have abnormally high rates of nose and lung cancer, which underlines the need for this centre which was promised last October, can the minister say what progress his department is making in implementing his promise?

Hon. John C. Munro (Minister of Labour): Yes, Mr. Speaker. We have had many discussions with the provinces since that announcement last October. Generally the provinces welcome the initiative and we have worked out arrangements with them. Many of the provinces are going to utilize the services of the institute.

So far as the business and labour communities are concerned, we have had several discussions with them also. Labour would appear to be now ready, as a result of those discussions, to participate, along with business and government in some type of tripartite arrangement, in the general supervision of this institute, the feeling being that it would not be workable or effective unless all these elements—business, labour and government—got together and in a sense the institute operated under that aegis. In order to achieve several of the things they want to do the co-operation and involvement of these essential elements would be required.

PUBLIC SERVICE

EFFECT OF MOVEMENT OF EMPLOYEES TO HULL ON SMALL SHOP OWNERS IN OTTAWA—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, may I direct my question to the Minister of Public Works. In his statement on May 17 with respect to the movement of departments of the Public Service to Hull he expressed some sentiments concerning small shop and restaurant owners, indicating that negotiations were underway with their association. I wonder whether the minister could tell us what negotiations are underway, what proposals are being made to the business and property owners association in the area, and what studies, if any, were carried out, prior to making the announcement, which he could table in the House as to the effect of this massive move on the small owners of shops and restaurants in the area?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, basically what I have indicated to the Building Owners and Managers Association is that I should like to try to arrange, after the leases have expired—that is what we are talking about; we are not terminating leases—to keep partial occupancy in the buildings so there continues to exist a clientele for restaurants, small shops, and so on. That is our desire.

TRANSPORTATION ARRANGEMENTS FOLLOWING MOVEMENT OF EMPLOYEES TO HULL

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. That is an interesting comment on the restraint program. In the course of his statement the minister mentioned arrangements in regard to interchange of transportation in an area which is already chaotic and inadequately serviced in terms of bridges, roads and other things. What specific arrangements is the minister prepared to make in order to ensure that there is reasonable passage of both private vehicles and public transportation vehicles to and from the city of Hull? Is it the position of the minister that there is no finality in this respect? Are there to be additional bridges built and, if so, when? Are there to be additional transportation facilities provided? If so, when, at what cost and by whom? Can the minister also indicate whether there has been any advance planning with respect to this matter, apart from political input?

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, that is a question I have discussed with my colleague the Minister of State for Urban Affairs; obviously it relates to his jurisdiction and to his responsibility for the NCC.

MANPOWER

CANADA AND YOUNG CANADA WORKS PROGRAMS—REASON CERTAIN PROJECTS ARE REFUSED OR DELAYED

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and relates to promoters of Canada Works and Young Canada Works projects. All those whose projects are accepted receive confirmation, but for those whose projects are rejected, could the minister ask his officials to give the reason for the postponement or refusal of a project, or at least inform those people that their projects are rejected and to thank them for the efforts they put into submitting them?

[English]

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the point the hon. member makes is a good one. It is a question of numbers and degree in regard to our resources. Since these are done on a constituency by constituency basis, we do make very definite efforts to publicize those projects which have in fact been accepted. Sometimes there is further negotiation with a member of parliament or with a project officer himself, and that causes some delay. With regard to the point that the hon. member makes about those projects which are not accepted, we are grateful and we hope the applicants will look at the programs which have been accepted in order to see how they might improve theirs so they are accepted in the second phase and can put to work the people they want. I think that is an excellent representation and I will certainly look at it.

DEPORTATION ORDER AGAINST PEDRO DENEGRI—REQUEST FOR MINISTERIAL INTERVENTION

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. How has the minister responded to the request for his intervention in the case of Pedro Denegri against deportation to Chile?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, in this particular case the first public representations I received were in my own riding from the Coalition for Change group of London. I subsequently met with them again in London, together with Amnesty International representatives. I then met with a reporter from the Globe and Mail who had some additional information which he thought was appropriate and made a specific plea that I meet with Mr. Denegri's lawyer. I met Mr. Denegri's lawyer yesterday. I might say his lawyer put forward an excellent brief. She has obviously done a tremendous amount of work on this. I would like some time to consider that brief, and I would expect to come up with some response next week.

ALLEGED EXTENSION OF CLINICS TO PROVIDE ABORTION ON DEMAND—MINISTER'S POSITION

Mr. S. J. Korchinski (Mackenzie): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. Because of the large number of protests being received, has the Minister of National Health and Welfare reconsidered his position as a result of his announcement of March 4 in which he proposed the further extension of abortion clinics which would provide abortion on demand, or does he still intend to actively pursue his original course and perhaps qualify for the dubious honour of "murderer of the year"?

CRIMINAL CODE

ALLEGED VIOLATION OF ABORTION PROVISION BY ADVERTISEMENT IN OTTAWA "JOURNAL" OF MAY 9, 1977—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Dean Whiteway (Selkirk): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice and has to do with an ad which appeared in the May 9, 1977 Ottawa Journal, a copy of which I have sent to the minister. It is advertising "Legal Abortions on Demand". I had my office check it out and it in no way involves a therapeutic abortion board. The abortions are done in Montreal at a cost of $250. There are no questions asked. It is done on the same day. It takes ten hours. You are delivered, the abortion is performed, and you are brought back home. That is clearly in violation of the Criminal Code. My question is: what is the Minister of Justice going to do about it?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that the hon. member has added to the ad and given it more publicity by referring to it today. It is unclear from the ad whether the abortions are proposed to be performed in Ontario or Quebec or in one of the states of the United States of America.

This matter was raised some time ago by the hon. member for Calgary North at which point I corresponded with provincial attorneys general about advertising abortions to be performed within their jurisdiction. If the hon. member's information is correct, that the abortions are in fact advertised as performed in the province of Quebec, the advertisement will be referred to the Quebec minister of justice.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, a week ago today I asked the Acting Prime Minister, with respect to the ninth United Nations conference on sugar, whether the government was taking a position directly contrary to its earlier one on the tin commodity agreement. I also asked a question with respect to the composition of the delegation. It is of importance now because the conference will end shortly in Geneva.

Over the past week the minister has not provided this information either to myself or to the House. It is important for Canadians to have a full account of it, and I am sure the minister would agree with that. I wonder if he can indicate when that information will be available, particularly so that we can have it before the conference is concluded.

Mr. MacEachen (Acting Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I sincerely apologize to the hon. member for not making the information available. I will try to get it to him today.

STUDY OF EFFECTS OF SECESSION OF QUEBEC

Question No. 1,608—Mr. Howie:

Is the government currently undertaking any studies with regard to the economic, cultural and political effects the secession of the Province of Quebec would have on the rest of Canada in general, and the Atlantic Provinces in particular and, if so, what are they and what are their terms of reference?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No.

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Statistics Canada reports the following:

NOTE: Due to the nature of the available data, the information requested has been presented in two parts—one on fertilizer chemicals and a second on agricultural pest control chemicals.

Table I

Year	Domestic Consumption of Fertilizer Materials and Mixed Fertilizers in Short Tons	Imports of Fertilizer Chemicals Materials and Mixed Fertilizers in Short Tons	Imports Expressed at a Percentage of Domestic Consumption (2 as a percentage of 1)
1975	2,950,243	285,425	9.7
1974	2,875,518	380,747	13.2
1973	2,492,084	287,627	11.5
1972	2,173,892	321,403	14.8
1971	2,110,978	236,354	11.2
1970	1,867,522	140,147	7.5
1969	1,897,622	181,097	9.5
1968	2,292,123	250,725	10.9
1967	2,183,406	319,973	14.7
1966	1,917,864	309,624	16.1

Order Paper Questions

1. The fertilizer year is defined as ending June 30. Imports are presented on a consistent basis.

2. In order to capture the importation of chemicals intended for agricultural application only, Trade of Canada data could not be utilized for most chemicals. Rather, a separate import series on fertilizer chemicals is collected and published annually in Fertilizer Trade (catalogue number 46-207). Although some small importers may be missed, i.e., individual farmers, we do not judge the error factor to be significant. Data on muriate and sulphate of potash were, however, extracted from Trade of Canada.

3. The data presented represent short tons.

4. Imports of phosphate rock are excluded.

Table II

Year	Domestic Consumption of Pest Control Chemicals in Thousands of Dollars	Imports of Formulated Pest Control Chemicals in Thousands of Dollars	Imports Expressed Percentage Domestic Consumption (2 as a percentage of 1)
1974	108,572	65,501	60.3
1973	77,458	45,230	58.4
1972	53,065	30,772	58.0
1971	42,172	23,732	56.3
1970	40,455	17,345	42.9
1969	46,665	43,262	69.1
1968	54,392	28,793	52.9
1967	46,072	20,703	44.9
1966	40,656	15,352	37.8

1. Data are presented in thousands of dollars.

2. Domestic consumption data are based on a year end of September 30th.

3. Import data are based on calendar year.

4. Domestic consumption data may include a small amount of exports which were not possible to net out of figures.

5. Import data includes forestry sprays and home and garden chemicals which cannot be separately identified in the Trade of Canada data.

6. Data are presented for formulated pesticides, herbicides, fungicides only.

USE OF ANTI-SPALLING COMPOUNDS IN THE EXTERIOR CONCRETE SURFACES

Question No. 1,928—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

Is the government aware of reports that exterior concrete construction surfaces treated with anti-spalling compounds will last up to ten years longer and, in some cases, ten times longer than those surfaces not treated and, if so, is the government giving consideration to including the use of anti-spalling compounds as a protection in all construction contracts in Canada and especially those entered into by the Department of Public Works and, if not, for what reason?

Mr. Alexandre Cyr (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Public Works): The Department of Public Works is not aware of any reports by established research or testing organizations on exterior concrete construction surfaces treated with anti-spalling compounds. In normal environments good quality concrete, with scientifically designed ingredients and properly installed, will last indefinitely. It would, therefore, be a waste to treat all exterior concrete with alleged anti-spalling compounds in all construction contracts in Canada. In particularly corrosive environments special precautions are usually taken, but such situations are a small percentage of the overall.

SHRUBS OF EUPHORBIA STRAIN

Question No. 2,398—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

Is the government aware of reports that shrubs of the Euphorbia strain produce a hydrocarbon substance very much like gasoline and estimates are that the plants might be capable of producing between 10 and 50 barrels of oil per acre per year which is practically free of sulphur and other contaminants at an estimated cost of between $3 and $10 per barrel and, if so, what research is the government presently undertaking in this regard?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Agriculture Canada is aware of the reports and is continually keeping watch on all possible renewable resources of oil. The department is not conducting any research into this program. Feasibility studies are being conducted in California and will be reviewed by the Department when they become available.

COFFEE SUBSTITUTES

Question No. 2,400—Mr. Hnatyshyn:

Is the government aware of reports that coffee substitutes can be produced from wheat, bran and soyabeans, which are readily available in Canada at approximately half the price of pure coffee and, if so, what steps is the government taking to assist research in this area?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Yes, Agriculture Canada is aware of research and development on coffee substitutes. However, since the food industry is conducting research on a beverage resembling coffee, the department sees no need for research at this time.

STUDENT SUMMER EMPLOYMENT PROGRAMMES

Question No. 2,425—Mr. Marshall:

1. What additional staff was hired and what was the cost to operate the Student Summer Employment Programme (a) Fisheries and Marine Service (b)

Environmental Protection Service (c) Environmental Management Service under the Department of the Environment?

2. Are any other programmes available for students under the Department?

Mr. Jim Fleming (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Fisheries and the Environment): 1.

Service	Students	Costs
(a) Fisheries and Marine	526	$1,580,886
(b) Environmental Protection	49	145,011
(c) Environmental Management	327	986,965

2. The Summer Job Corps (SJC) Program is also available for students. This is a new program implemented in 1977 and sponsored by the Department of Manpower and Immigration. DFE has been allocated $471,704 to create 213 jobs. The distribution is as follows:

Service	Students	Costs
(a) Fisheries and Marine	46	$ 113,223
(b) Environmental Protection	30	59,275
(c) Environmental Management	137	299,206

MR. JOE MULLALLY

Question No. 2,478—Mr. Cossitt:

1. Is Mr. Joe Mullally, former Special Assistant to the Honourable Member for St. Boniface, employed under contract to, or in any other way working with the government and, if so, what are the details of his work, position and monies received?

2. Has Mr. Mullally been in any of these categories since he left the Minister's office on March 15, 1977 up to the date the answer to this question is prepared and, if so, what are the complete details of work performed, job designation, salary, etc?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): 1. No.

2. No.

[English]

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Mr. Speaker, I ask that the remaining questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Speaker: The questions enumerated by the hon. parliamentary secretary have been answered. Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

The House resumed, from Tuesday, May 17, consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) that Bill C-54, to amend the Excise Tax Act (No. 2), be read the second time and referred to committee of the whole.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, on May 17 the minister made his opening statement with regard to second reading of this bill and outlined in part those matters which are to be handled in the bill this afternoon. I would like to talk about the air travel tax to which there is now an extension so that it becomes all-encompassing. I suppose there is a case that can be made for the imposition of an air travel tax within certain limits in Canada. When the matter first came up, there was tremendous objection across the country to the formula that was proposed, which was on a percentage basis. The formula would have hit particularly people who lived long distances from central Canada.

The formula was going to be based upon the value of the ticket, and it included, at that time, frontier areas; there were no exemptions at all. That just did not wash. Even though I moved a motion at that time which substituted a dollar value which would have yielded the same amount of money, I recall the Chair ruled my amendment out of order. With the greatest respect, I think the Chair was totally wrong. The Speaker indicated that he was not going to introduce any innovations, and in any event he was going to rule against the motion I made.

Be that as it may, we have now had this air travel tax for a couple of years. It is on a fixed dollar basis and is a user-pay tax. This concept of user-pay is dearly loved by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang). That is now being abandoned in a number of sectors, principally on the west coast ferries.

The tax is being applied with equal vigour across the country except in the frontier areas. What is being given back to the travelling passenger who is paying the shot is a long way from even. For instance, in Toronto there are customs preclearance facilities to go to the United States. If you try to get them in Edmonton and Calgary, you are told by the minister and his representatives that the airlines have to put up the facilities; the airlines have to charge the passengers, and therefore Edmonton and Calgary traffic has to pay an extra charge for facilities which are provided for under the $5 tax in Toronto. Is that an even hand in the handling of passengers across the country? Every international airport handling traffic to and from the United States should have preclearance facilities such as Halifax, Montreal, Toronto, Ottawa, Winnipeg, Edmonton, Calgary and Vancouver.

The Minister of Transport can smile. However, if he has been listening he knows that passengers outside of Toronto—I will not speak about the mess in Montreal—are getting the short end of the stick. They should have negotiated and arranged for preclearance facilities long ago. The absence of preclearance facilities in Canada gives the American lines an advantage over Canadian lines on competitive routes.

Talk about dragging their feet in Transport! Preclearance facilities in Edmonton and Calgary have been under discussion for years. The latest answer I have from the Minister of Transport is that when western Canada's "Mirabel" comes into operation in Calgary in September of this year, the facilities will exist for preclearance. For Edmonton, which has an equal demand for preclearance, it may be the fall of 1978, after the Commonwealth Games. That does not bother the minister one bit. The traffic flow into Edmonton will be somewhat less than Calgary as a result. They say that, because Calgary has more traffic than Edmonton, it should be treated differently. That is a lot of poppycock. The dice are loaded. In so far as the utilization of this air travel tax is concerned, the Department of Transport is applying it with an uneven hand.

I have been asking about the facilities in Gander from a revenue and an immigration point of view. Frankly, the minister is content to handle passengers who are flying through on a sort of cattle-pen basis. There are very inadequate temporary facilities. In so far as getting on with the job and putting in permanent facilities, Transport Canada are dragging their feet. All this is done within the comfort of headquarters in Ottawa. It does not much matter to the people who make the decision whether there is delay. If the increase is in building costs, they would not have to pay the shot. Therefore, it is an easy decision to defer. However, from the taxpayers' point of view it is a stupid decision. It costs the taxpayers from 20 to 25 per cent more, and they get less service.

I see the Minister of Transport is leaving the chamber. I just want to say to him that in this particular area there is a justifiable complaint. I hope he will take part in this debate and tell us what he proposes to do about the even application of the airport travel tax which is chargeable to all passengers in Canada. Some will get a dime's service in return and others will get their $5 worth every time they travel. The travelling public in Canada is entitled to a much better break than that.

We sometimes wonder why it is so difficult to have regional contact in Canada. We must contemplate the fact that to travel within Canada, for example from Ottawa or Toronto to Calgary or Edmonton, it costs more than flying to Europe on charter. In winter, the bulk of the Canadian population have greater access to European ski resorts than to the Rockies. Why? Canadians are being stuck, really having it rammed home, with regard to travel within their own country. There is something wrong. This problem must be worked out. This is why there is a sense of bitterness and frustration at times. The ministers should get involved and talk to those who are affected in this way.

The same principle is applied in another area. I cannot condemn it enough. The minister is now trying to even-up the situation with regard to buying tickets in Canada or buying them outside Canada. That part of it is fine. However, I want the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) to understand that in utilizing these funds the Minister of Transport has to be much fairer. The changes being made in the sales tax are not all subject to criticism. The minister has taken one very salutary step. It has taken some time to get there, but I—and, I am sure, members on all sides of the House—thank the minister. I refer to the so-called small business limit which so severely affected philanthropic organizations, rehab centres and individuals partially incapacitated who produced a small volume of goods of one variety or another: they could be handicrafts, or all sorts of other things.

I do not know when the $3,000 limit was put on. One might almost say that the new $10,000 limit has merely taken care of inflation. At least it is a step in the right direction. To that extent, the minister is to be congratulated for his compassion with regard to these people and public service organizations. We hope the minister's officials will keep their minds open to further relaxation in order to get ahead of just the impact of inflation and to encourage these people to do something on their own. It is far better for an individual who has a small business to produce $15,000 or $20,000 worth of goods from which he will not derive that much income, if he can sell them without an impost of sales tax. What is the alternative? Welfare, some form of social assistance. Where does the social assistance come from? It comes from the pockets of hon. members and the taxpaying public. It is ridiculous. There is a wrong social implication to it. It is far better to encourage individuals to go out and wrestle for themselves. As a result, they would have a sense of dignity.

I have had a good deal to do with people in the social services' field in my home city. I have always found it absolutely inconceivable that the so-called principles of equity of taxation have borne down as hard on these people as they have on others. Yet there we were, trying to encourage them to some degree of self-sufficiency through rehabilitation centres to get them back on their feet. After all, one has only to engage in correspondence with the disability section of the Canada Pension Plan to see the rules which are applied there as to whether a person is disabled. It is almost a matter of, if people can breathe or stand up, they are not disabled. That section feels that if people can do some form of work—and it cannot say what form—that is the responsibility of those people, so they are denied benefits under the Canada Pension Plan for which they and their employer have paid. The government pays nothing into the Canada Pension Plan, not one blessed red cent, and the alternative for these people is to seek welfare.

The government is quite prepared to pay 50 per cent under the Canada welfare plan for the support of people who, with a little bit of initiative and some sense of personal worth, are prepared to do something. But no, we have to tax them. I think this is a strong and very compelling case which provides equity to taxpayers generally and to citizens generally. This proposal would not only maintain this type of level of exemption to take care of inflation, but it also would have an incentive, and I suggest to the minister in all sincerity that he should look at that to see if we cannot in some way restore an incentive for partially disabled persons. I refer to blind persons and others in the same category. However, let us consider those who may suffer from heart trouble and who cannot carry on their normal work, but who can engage in some type of small production alone or in conjunction with others. I referred only to heart trouble, but it might be some other crippling disease which handicaps people, such as arthritis. There are all kinds of handicapped people. From a social point of view, I think we could use our tax system to encourage those people and to improve social benefits so they will not just be recipients of welfare, which is so soul-deadening for so many in this country.

There are many points in this legislation which my colleagues will want to talk about. I know they wish to talk about points dealing with gasoline and diesel fuel, but there is one I would like to talk about at this stage. I am sorry I did not have the correspondence I now have at the time we were discussing Bill C-55. I have here an exchange of correspondence with the minister's colleague, the Minister of National Revenue (Miss Bégin). The reply she gave me was quite right, that the way the Customs Tariff is now worded, it would require a minor amendment to let this particular type of equipment through free of customs duty and sales tax. I am referring to spray markers. We have to be very, shall we say, simple here. It is a small matter, but very important.

I am referring to markers for agricultural aerial sprayers. Hon. members might wonder what on earth those are. Well, we have to understand what is done by aerial sprayers and what it means to western agriculture to spray pesticides or fertilizers. It is remarkable how many pilots of these aircraft there are. They have to use markers on the ground in the same way anyone here would when marking out his garden. There is one way of doing this, and that is, of course, to have a couple of persons on the ground walking along the edges of the field and marking out the lines for spraying or for fertilizing. Some people have been killed because, let us remember, these aircraft fly very low. Others, unfortunately, have been sprayed by pesticides, and they continue to be sprayed. The alternative is to use very light, brightly coloured markers.

In outlining the case to the Minister of National Revenue on March 31, I referred to an entry at the port of Red Deer. An Alberta firm was endeavouring to bring in these markers from the United States through the port of Red Deer, but it was charged a considerable sum in customs duty and sales tax. In my letter to the Minister of National Revenue I wrote the following:

> These markers are made of a special form of tissue paper and actually represent a necessary substitute for a human flagman, hitherto used and exposed to vapour spray, etc. In addition, there have been persons killed by being struck by the wheels of the low flying aircraft and there have been many near misses . . . the American firm called North American Industries Incorporated of Walla Walla, Washington have been able to obtain the necessary kind of paper and put these markers on the market.

Canadian paper mills have all been canvassed, but none of them has been prepared to manufacture a similar type of paper in the rather limited quantity which is needed to supply the Canadian market. The market may grow as time goes on, but at the present time there is just no one who is prepared to manufacture this type of tissue paper. However, combining the American requirements and the Canadian requirements makes it a viable operation. Unfortunately, under the Customs Tariff classification there is duty and tax. It seems to me that since this commodity is not manufactured in Canada, and since there is little likelihood it will be because of the limited market, Canadian agriculture again has to take it in the neck.

The costs are higher for Canadian producers. The hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) and hon. members from other areas where large-scale agriculture is the order of the day will readily support me when I say that I think there is a case here for submission to the Minister of Finance for relief from the customs duty on this item. After all, we went through the Customs Tariff the other day and there are some items which are really sophisticated. I think a better case can be made for these aerial markers than for the free importation of frogs legs, for example, and there are a number of other things which are rather sophisticated in the Customs Tariff.

Therefore, a matter of this kind is worthy of consideration, and I submit it to the minister for relief from customs duties. If that is done, then we can make a case for relief from sales tax. That is what is relevant today. They would of course, both be relevant to customs and sales tax. So many commodities in agriculture, because they go into the production of food, are relieved from customs and sales tax, and I think this is a particularly good case.

Mr. Speaker, I think I have spoken long enough. This afternoon other hon. members will be raising various points. We will be able to deal with these matters later in committee of the whole. For those things which have not been done, then, of course, second reading procedure provides the opportunity for remarks or exhortations to the minister. I hope my colleagues will make some good suggestions.

This is not a subject that has the greatest sex appeal as far as hon. members and the public are concerned. They do not realize that often in debates of this kind their pocketbooks are either being relieved of money or, through the representations of hon. members, relieved of an unnecessary impost of taxes. I think this is one of the purposes of discussion of a tax bill. I hope we can carry on and by the end of the afternoon finish with this bill.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, the bill before us, Bill C-54, is often regarded as a rather routine piece of legislation. It is true that with the exception of the air transportation tax, its provisions are more or less technical rather than of a substantive nature. That does not mean that this bill is unimportant or that it will have little impact on the average Canadian. In that connection, I think it is important that we get on the record the amount of money that we are actually referring to as far as revenue is concerned at the federal level as a result of the taxes that are imposed within the act that we are proposing to amend today.

Today I refer hon. members to the publication entitled "Public Accounts of Canada, 1976, Volume 1, Summary Review of Financial Statements." At page 5-3 it is pointed out that under excise taxes the sales tax alone yielded $3,365 million, or 11.5 per cent of the total federal government revenue, in the fiscal year ended March 31, 1976. The next item which comes in the same general category is oil export charges, which amount to $1,062,900,000, or 3.6 per cent of the total federal government revenue. Other taxes that come under the general heading of excise tax amount to $437.7 million, or 1.5 per cent of the total federal government revenue. Special excise tax on gasoline, which most of us are very sensitive to, amounted to $425.1 million, or 1.5 per cent of the total federal government revenue.

Hon. members might be interested in page 5-6 of the same report. We find there that not only is there sales tax of roughly $3.3 billion, but the other excise taxes on such things as cigarettes, tobacco and cigars, yield $369 million; on jewelry, watches and ornaments, $32.5 million; matches and lighters, $2.8 million; wines, $12 million; and sundry items, about $19 million.

I mention those figures because I think it is important in dealing with this bill today that we realize the magnitude of the revenue that comes out of the legislation we are now proposing to question. Even in this bill of only 12 pages and 20 clauses, the government demonstrates a remarkable knack for convoluting reason and for adopting policies that are in many ways almost 180 degrees off dead centre.

In the case of the air transportation tax to which the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) referred, the government has managed to take a regressive step, when bold initiatives are needed. It has somehow managed to devise a tax on tourism at a time when our need for the tourist dollar has never been greater. In this bill the minister is proposing that we siphon an additional $15 million to $17 million from air travellers this year. It is perhaps an understandable, or at least a predictable measure, with Mirabel having lost $56 million in its first year of operation and being projected to lose another $56 million this year.

It is perhaps predictable that the government gets on to this user-pay concept when we realize they have tied up $110 million in federal funds in the still-born Pickering airport project in the Toronto area. In short, it is not surprising that the government would rather covet this form of additional revenue. In its present form, the tax, we understand, generated about $61 million between April, 1976, and February, 1977. This year it is expected that the tax will raise something like $66 million. Perhaps at committee of the whole the minister will be able to give us more precise figures on how much he anticipates in revenue from this tax alone.

Before the proposal becomes law by passage of this bill, I think we have to consider whether it is right to be extending this tax to travellers who purchase tickets outside of Canada. Surely we should be asking that question. Of the 2.3 million passengers the minister says will come under this new tax, more than 2 million are foreign visitors to Canada. That is the number of visitors to Canada who arrived by air last year, according to Statistics Canada. To put it plainly and simply, this tax is a levy on tourism, despite the minister's rather oblique reference to "travellers who use Canadian airports."

That the minister should propose such a tax when our national travel account is in a deficit is myopic indeed. Surely hon. members do not have to be reminded that last year the over-all travel account in Canada registered a deficit of $1.2 billion, 63 per cent greater than in 1975 despite the major attraction of the Montreal Olympics.

It is a dismal record and one which should command the government's concerted efforts to rectify it. Since 1971, our over-all travel deficit has widened five-fold; that is, our travel deficit in 1976 was more than 500 per cent greater than that of 1971. Anyone wishing to confirm for himself this drift from a deficit of $202 million in 1971 to $1.2 billion in 1976 should look no further than table 25 on page 61 of the minister's own "Economic Review" that was tabled recently in this House. I strongly urge the minister to read that report which his department prepared for him and to reconsider his proposal to tax foreign visitors who use our airports. To tax tourism—however marginally—in the face of deficits like these is short-sighted and insensitive. Let there be no mistake about that.

We are not suggesting that the bill will be a direct deterrent to air travellers coming to Canada. At $8 or less per person, this tax, especially when compared to international air fares from Europe and beyond, will however be one further deterrent to such tourism being expanded as far as Canada is concerned. If the bill does little to discourage tourism, it does nothing to encourage it. It is a further deterrent to tourists visiting this country; it does nothing to encourage tourism and will not help us to overcome our deficit in tourism. The bill represents another lost chance to take imaginative, positive action for remedying our critical deficits. In this context, Bill C-54 and the air transportation tax should be viewed as an incomprehensibly regressive measure. We see, here, a small, mean little step backward, whereas vision was required or leaving well enough alone would have been sufficient.

It is interesting to review the government's justification for the airport tax. In the budget brought in on June 23, 1975, former minister of finance John Turner proposed to extend the air transport tax which had originally been imposed in 1974. He said:

The increases, to be effective August 1 this year—

Meaning, 1975.

—are essential to reflect the general policy that those who benefit most directly from facilities provided by the government help to pay for them.

In other budgetary presentations, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) has adopted the user-pay concept with respect to airports. Perhaps it is fair to ask users to pay, but that stops short of the real question, which is this: Has the government been prudent in operating our airports? Has it controlled airport expenditures? In short, if users or others are required to pay, must they pay for the expenditures which have been incurred? I raise this question because I think one should be aware of some interesting figures. For example, I note that in the 1970 fiscal year our airports actually made money. On the other hand, during the last seven years, owing largely to the Department of Transport's inept, incompetent approach to airports, our airports ran up a staggering deficit which the government now asks users to make good.

If the government had shown more foresight, a little more restraint, a little less bureaucratic proclivity to indulge in the building of white elephants like Mirabel and the still-born Pickering project near Toronto, users would not have to pay a nickel and our airports would be breaking even or making a profit. Let me put some figures on record.

After paying almost $20 million in construction costs in 1970, our airports showed a deficit of $2 million. In short, they made about $18 million or more in profits from their operations in 1970. For example, Montreal's international airport, Dorval, after spending $482,000 on construction and acquisitions in that year, actually made a profit of $9 million from operations. Malton, near Toronto, made over $2 million, even after spending $6.3 million on construction and acquisitions. In short, our airports made money from operations in 1970.

Owing to this government's sheer incompetence and mismanagement, that picture changed. According to current estimates, or estimates relating to the 1978 fiscal year, it is estimated that our airports will lose $133 million. That is a colossal turnaround. In seven or eight years our airports, instead of making modest profits from operations have managed to run up enormous losses. As I said, the anticipated loss in the 1978 fiscal year will be $133 million. Therefore, is it not fair to ask if the user-pay concept is justified? Should users be asked to pay for expenditures the prudence of which is open to question? Let me emphasize that much of the $133 million anticipated loss is attributable to operational losses incurred by misadventures in airports like Mirabel.

It is anticipated that in the fiscal year previously alluded to, Mirabel is expected to lose some $56 million, but Dorval is expected to make $1.1 million. Malton makes money on its operations but loses money on construction. This year, Malton will incur a net loss of about $16 million, after having made a profit of $19 million from operations and spending about $36 million on construction. The Pickering project, of course, is a big loser, running up losses of $17 million. In short, people are not being asked to pay the $8 tax to cover the basic cost of running our airports; they are asked to pay the tax in order to make up the deficits which have been incurred by the Mirabel and Pickering developments—and that is the truth.

In our consideration of this bill we should ask this question: Is it fair to make people using Edmonton airport, Halifax airport or, say, Thunder Bay airport pay the airport tax, without making it clear to them that the tax will cover the deficit run up by Mirabel and developments like Pickering? Because that is the purpose of this bill, and let us not forget it.

We suggest the minister should consider suspending the tax in Canada at least during the tourist season, instead of extending it to foreign visitors as is now intended. I suggest such a measure might mitigate somewhat regional disparities in our air fares and encourage Canadians to take vacations in their own country, offsetting that classic rationalization for travel abroad, namely, that it is cheaper to fly to Florida from central Canada than to Newfoundland or British Columbia.

If we choose not to impose the tax, I suggest we could gain a competitive edge, slight though it may be, over those countries which impose such taxes. This factor is especially important when we consider the balance of our travel account vis-à-vis the United States whose citizens are coming to Canada in declining numbers for the third consecutive year. Last year alone the number of United States visitors decreased by two million: fewer visitors came to this country again this year, and please bear in mind that this year we do not have the attraction of the 1976 Olympics.

There are many reasons for this decline. An important one, I suggest, is rising prices in this country. Our travel account with the United States having turned around from a surplus of $132 million in 1974 to a deficit of $610 million last year, it is time for the government to direct its energies to making travel in Canada more attractive and less expensive. We should be pursuing incentives for tourism, not taxes on tourism.

Recently I was talking with some tourist-oriented businessmen in Niagara Falls. Frankly, I was astonished at the difference they were able to show me between taxation on the United States side of the Niagara Falls district and taxation on the Canadian side. They were able to show me why their meals on the Canadian side cost between 20 per cent and 30 per cent more than comparable meals on the American side. It is this type of thing which is causing tourism to fall off. I feel the $8 extension of the airport tax will only heighten this trend.

To those who have read the budgetary papers, it must be apparent that the average Canadian pays substantially more in the form of sales tax, excise tax and what-have-you than does the average American. In the discussion paper which was issued with the June 23 budget of 1975 there is a table showing the relative position with regard to taxes on goods and services in the United States and Canada. Table 3 at page 14 of the discussion paper which lists the incidence of these taxes in the two countries rates Canada in 1972, for example, as having a level of 25.2 per cent. The level in the United States in the same year was 16.2 per cent. This shows, to the extent that the sales tax and the excise tax are regressive, to the extent that they hit the poor person as opposed to the person with relatively higher income, that our tax system is considerably more regressive than that of the United States. The difference is that 16.2 per cent of the revenue of the United States comes from this form of taxation, whereas in Canada it is 25.2 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, sound taxation policies can accomplish two distinct aims. On the one hand, the imposition of a tax can inhibit or control activity. On the other, the removal of taxes can encourage a desired activity. Both of these factors come into play with the air transportation tax. Unfortunately, this government has always been too quick to deter and regulate activity through new taxes, while it is slow to encourage positive action through the removal of old taxes. This is true, of course, with the air tax, and it also true of the sales and excise tax on automobiles. Here, again, the government seems to be 180 degrees off base.

The government, we were told in the last debate on excise tax, has initiated a weight tax and levy on air conditioners as a measure to encourage energy efficient vehicles. However, when we checked, we found that weight alone is not a concise measurement of energy usage as some models, though heavier, get better fuel economy than other lighter, but more wasteful models. The weight tax, as it is set up, would not accomplish its stated aim—to reduce energy consumption—but, rather, would only serve to add yet another source of revenue to the growing excise receipts. These receipts totalled, last year, some $5 billion if customs duty and excise and sales taxes are taken together.

We urged the government to change its tax criteria to fall in line with fuel efficiency rather than mere weight. We also suggested that the sales tax on lighter cars be dropped both as a spur to the economy and as a real incentive for the purchase of energy conscious vehicles. To date, of course, nothing has happened with either of these proposals and the government has once again chosen to pass up an opportunity for positive action in favor of the more regressive use of taxation. The 12 per cent sales tax on automobiles strikes hardest at those least able to afford it. Its removal would give a tax break to those most likely to benefit from it while providing a more direct approach to this nation's energy goals. I repeat, not only would it be in the interest of energy conservation but it would be a spur to employment in this country in that our automotive industry is oriented toward the production of smaller cars, more efficient cars, rather than to the heavier models.

We look forward to discussing this matter again with the minister when this bill moves into committee of the whole. On average today, Canadian automobiles cost between $500 and $1,000 more than their American counterparts. The lion's share of the difference lies in the taxes, and the taxes piled on taxes, extracted by governments. It is worth while to note, for example, that the Americans dropped their excise tax on automobiles in 1971 in order to stimulate the economy. They did this despite the fact that in some states—Michigan, for example—the revenue from the excise tax was greater than that produced by income taxes.

The average sales tax on Canadian automobiles is probably the largest single factor contributing to the higher cost of cars here. It is Ottawa which is the largest beneficiary of the production of automobiles. By this, I mean that if you break down the cost of an automobile, you find it is Ottawa which makes more money with respect to its purchase than anybody else: more than the car manufacturer, be it Ford or General Motors; more than the wholesaler; more than the dealer; more than any provincial government. In short, it makes between $300 and $1,000 on the purchase of every automobile in this country, and then has the nerve to say it would like, somehow, to discourage inflation. Well, Mr. Speaker, one way in which the government could get less inflation is by reducing the excise tax on smaller cars, making them cheaper for the average man who needs them to commute to work.

May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. When the House rose at one o'clock, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) had the floor on Bill C-54.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Before the lunch break I was indicating that we felt consideration should be given by the minister to the elimination or reduction of the federal sales tax on energy-efficient cars. I was pointing out that perhaps the largest single factor contributing to the higher cost of cars in Canada compared with the United States is that Ottawa maintains its excise tax, the United States tax having been removed in 1971. To put the matter in perspective, let me take, for example, a $3,200, four-cylinder Chevette. How many of us realize that the manufacturer makes about $75 on that car, the retailer makes about $100, yet the net take in sales tax alone which accrues to the federal government is $320. In other words, 10 per cent of the final retail price of that automobile actually goes to the federal government.

I suggest that that is not only inflationary in the sense that it causes people to pay that additional amount for a car, but it puts a hardship on the very people who should get relief in this country, namely, the average working person who needs a car to commute to work. Thirdly, it is a disincentive to people to buy a relatively small car, not only the Chevette to which I have referred but other similar types of automobiles.

Another item we will take up in committee of the whole is the excise tax on gasoline. Originally, the government declared that another gasoline tax amounting to 10 cents a gallon was necessary to support oil prices in Canada below the international market price. This tax was to be used, and has been used, to finance compensation payments to offset the cost of imported oil. As has been noted in the House, the 10 cents a gallon excise tax and the export tax levy currently produce revenue which exceeds the compensation payments by something like $300 million. As the domestic price of oil reaches the international market level, the need for this tax disappears, yet the revenues produced by it will increase. Here again, this windfall profit appears to be dropping into the hands of a government which, from its past record, has been irresponsible in the handling of such funds, certainly so far as their own restraint in expenditure is concerned.

In closing, let me add that we on this side of the House welcome the sales tax exemption for businesses with an annual turnover of $10,000 or less. These will now be exempt from the sales tax provisions. This is something for which we on this side of the House have been asking for some time and we are pleased that the government has at last acceded to this request on our part. Incidentally, this provision removes an important obstacle to the small, independent Canadian craftsman and is long overdue.

Your Honour will recall that in the budget address of March 31, when dealing with other tax changes the minister stated:

> Finally, I want to refer to the discussion paper on federal sales and excise taxation. The issue here is whether the tax should be shifted from the manufacturer's level to the wholesale level. The matter requires further consideration. The report of the commodity tax review group will be tabled shortly in the House. I have asked the President of the Privy Council to refer the report to an appropriate standing committee of the House for its assessment.

I am pleased that the minister has not forgotten that discussion paper and that he intends to table it shortly. This will enable us to have a debate and to review the matter in the House. I am not pleased with the fact that there seems to be prolonged study, study and study, with so little activity. As we review the discussion paper and subsequent comments concerning the possibility of having the sales tax changed from the manufacturing level to the wholesale level, there seems to be almost a predetermined government decision. If we refer to the discussion paper the minister referred to in his March 31 budget, we find stated under item 11 on page 7: "Consequently the government proposes to move the application of the federal sales tax from the manufacturers' level to the wholesale level." They have said that and they propose to do it.

The minister made a very brief comment in his budget speech concerning the possibility of a wholesale tax. In the budget document there are almost two pages dealing with commodity taxes. We also find that while the government admits they have received 200 major submissions with respect to their proposals to change the sales tax from the manufacturers' level to the wholesale level, they go through the pros and the cons. They seem to end up in the budget document back to the point where they were in 1975, stating that most of the objections are admitted. They think it was a good idea, in spite of the objections. Surely it is a rather strange thing to have discussion papers issued, invite submissions, acknowledge objections and then turn around and say that in any event it should be put into effect.

If we reach committee of the whole before four o'clock, I hope the minister will make some comments later today. We may accept this coming into the House for further debate, but surely now is the time the minister should be bringing us up to date as to what his current thinking is on this important subject. I know certain of my colleagues wish to speak on this bill. I will conclude, but I do intend to ask questions at the committee of the whole stage on this important bill.

Mr. Bill Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): Mr. Speaker, it was less than four months ago that I rose to debate a bill to amend the Excise Tax Act. That was not Bill C-54; it was Bill C-21. It is interesting to note there has been no change in principle in the amendments which are proposed by this bill. Four months ago, in January, I was complaining about the nature of this tax. I said then, and I would like to say again, that it is an unfair kind of tax because the people in Canada who are paying the tax are not properly informed of it.

Unless one has particular knowledge of law, or particular knowledge of business, one does not have this tax brought to his attention and yet he carries on paying it all the time. Taxes are necessary. Everyone knows that. But it is the duty of the government to be honest and tell people when they are levying a tax and to clearly let them know a tax is being levied. A further inequitable part of this tax is that it, itself, is taxed by nine out of the ten provinces in Canada. Thus, this tax is increased by the percentage charged in retail sales taxes by those provinces.

We have heard a lot of talk about equity and simplicity in tax systems. That should not be only applied to income taxes. There is no reason why it could not apply to this tax. The constant changes the government feels compelled to introduce continually illustrate there is no equity and no simplicity in this tax as well as many others.

I would like to refer to the minister's budget speech at page 16 where he made reference to the discussion paper on federal sales and excise taxation. That paper was introduced by the former minister of finance, Mr. Turner, in June of 1975, approximately two years ago. The present minister, in his budget speech on March 31, 1977, said that the issue is whether the tax should be shifted from the manufacturers' level to the wholesale level and that the matter requires further consideration. At the time that discussion paper was issued there were thousands of representations made from all across Canada about whether the system should be changed to shift the burden from the manufacturers' level to the wholesale level, or not.

With the lapse of two years, with these thousands of submissions which have been received by the government, the government should have been able to come up with some kind of policy. The minister said that the matter requires further study and he went on to say that the report of the commodity tax review group will be tabled shortly in the House. We know what "shortly" means in this House: it means we will be lucky to see it this fall. In his budget speech he went on to say:

> I have asked the President of the Privy Council to refer the report to an appropriate standing committee of the House for its assessment.

That is another delay, Mr. Speaker. A standing committee on something like that is going to take further prolonged time. Goodness knows when we will ever see the results of the discussion paper on federal sales and excise taxation. I suspect it is a change that is not really wanted.

I should like to look at some of the provisions of the bill now before us. I notice the minister proposes to make some changes to sales tax exemptions for small manufacturers. He is going to increase that exemption from $3,000 to $10,000. Knowing the last time that exemption was changed, I am quite sure the increase to $10,000 does no more than keep up with the rate of inflation on manufactured goods. The complaint has been made often enough that the minister should be aware of it by now. This is a tax which is also applied to offices which do a little in-house printing with copying machines, or whatever, if they are above the exemption.

Even the small individual businesses in manufacturing cannot get by without manufacturing more than $10,000 a year worth of goods. When they exceed that and have to start paying the excise tax, in addition to all the rest of their taxes, they have a very difficult time indeed. Further consideration is still warranted on that provision. It is commendable that certain producers of craft products, which are significant to Canadian culture and heritage, are going to be helped out, too, although that does not seem to be spelled out too well.

We can commend the fact that some additional energy-conserving items will be excepted. I notice there has been no specific reference by the goverment to help recycling industries. One or two of them will come in under this exemption because recycled newsprint is now being used in the manufacture of insulation. That will be considered as an energy-conserving item. Other items were mentioned in the supplementary budget papers. I am referring to page 25, aides to the disabled. The minister is certainly to be commended for extending the exemption to wheelchair lifts and allowing power to the governor in council to prescribe by regulation. Although we on this side have often said that government by regulation is bad and should not be encouraged, in the circumstances we can at least say that the motive is good.

With regard to the exemption being extended to vehicles which are designed to carry 12 or more passengers, the minister should again be commended—and I do not like doing that too much, in having discovered a loophole whereby some of these vehicles were being used as individual, private recreation vehicles. That certainly was not the intent. I submit that if the government had been doing its job properly in the first place, the present correction would not be necessary.

The minister said that the aim of the air transport tax is that an equitable contribution will be made toward the upkeep of facilities. More work is needed in this area as abuses are still possible. The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) mentioned the problem of airport funding, in particular where some of this money was going to go and the hardship this tax would impose on the tourist business. It is possible to circumvent this $8 ticket tax by simply buying a single ticket which covers, say, six return trips.

Every couple of weeks or so I fly to my constituency. I pay an $8 tax on a return ticket. However, the system in no way prevents me from buying a single ticket for six return trips and paying only one $8 tax. The minister will probably suggest that there are very few people who will do that. His predecessor said that to me on many occasions, for example, with regard to the Registered Home Ownership Savings Plan. However, whether there are numerous people who will do certain things or not is not the point. The point is that the government should make its regulations to ensure that they are equitable and applied equally.

This ties in with another abuse that is open—the matter of stopovers. When you buy a ticket and travel from one place to another in Canada, you may stop over as many times as you wish. You will only pay one $8 airport tax. The minister says it is for the upkeep of the facilities in the airports. The stopover passenger uses the facilities just as much as a passenger coming from outside the country, or any other passenger. The use is equal in all cases, but the demand is not. It would be a very simple matter for the government to correct this situation.

I will give an example. The airlines, including the government-owned Air Canada, charge sector fares when there are stopovers during a longer trip. Even though they are able to increase their revenue by charging sector fares, the government has ignored the possibility of collecting this extra tax which the minister says they need in order that travellers who use the facilities pay for them on an equal basis.

Many of my colleagues have commented on the gasoline tax. I will make only one or two comments. I understand that it is to be adjusted, but I am not clear on the purpose of the adjustment. This is a good time to ask ourselves why the government continues to levy the ten-cent per gallon tax which penalizes Canadians who must drive. I am not referring to those who are entitled to a refund, but those who must drive and do not get a refund. Considering the size of Canada, the lack of public transit and the fact that the government allows the price of oil to rise toward world levels, those who need to move about for business and other purposes are penalized by this tax.

Comment has been made on the concessions for smaller cars. The hon. member for York-Simcoe referred to the contrast in prices of automobiles between Canada and the United States and how the content of prices in Canada is largely made up of the extra sales tax that Canadians must pay.

Although it has been suggested a number of times, the government has not yet given any consideration to concessions with regard to the length of time a vehicle might last. The considerations of the government are strictly with regard to fuel economy. While one cannot argue with that, we should keep in mind the energy consumption required for the production of motor vehicles. Consideration should be given to encouraging Canadians to make their cars last longer.

One place where it could make a start would be in the capital city of Canada, right here in Ottawa. We have a very expensive commission—the National Capital Commission—that seems to be in control of things in Ottawa. Enormous amounts of salt are put on the streets in winter. It is not as though this were the only place in Canada that has a lot of snow. Many places on the prairies have a lot of snow and cold weather, but they get along without extensive use of salt. Obviously, the automobiles last a lot longer. In my city of Vancouver, the use of salt is almost unheard of. Cars last a very long time.

I wish to make some final comments on the remarks of the hon. member for York-Simcoe. He stated that this is a regressive tax, that further exemptions are needed to give relief to low-income Canadians. I certainly support that. I have called for this before. There should be exemptions for all food, housing costs, clothing and other necessities. It is clear that a wheelchair, which is exempt, is no more of a necessity to a crippled person than the other basic needs of a society.

While I find much to agree with in this bill, I think the government has again failed to give the needed deep consideration to the major changes of principle that are needed in the application of this legislation.

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, I wish to follow the lead of the hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) in his complaints about the application of the airport tax as it is being handled by the Ministry of Transport. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) is not with us this afternoon. Perhaps the message will get through to him, although I have to admit it is difficult to get any kind of message across to that minister.

I feel that I have a grievance, along with several thousand other people who are required to use the terminal facilities at Toronto international airport. People seem to be getting used to terminal 2 which is there. It was a badly designed and misconceived building. Nevertheless, it is there. In order to make the whole complex a little more workable, several million dollars were spent to connect terminal 1 with terminal 2 by means of an underground tunnel.

This would be a useful thing if it could be used, but I find that it is difficult to use unless you happen to be travelling without any form of luggage, because if you check your luggage through in order to get a reasonable connection, you cannot expect to find your luggage when you arrive at your destination beyond Toronto. If a reasonable arrangement could be worked out for the use of that tunnel, whereby a person could carry his luggage with him through it, then we might be getting something for this added excise tax on travel.

It is bad enough to have to wait for the luggage to come off, but what makes it impossible is the fact that people have to run upstairs and wait for that little bus to carry them across to terminal two with their suitcases. I think that machine comes around about every 15 minutes, and if a person misses it, as is normal, he has to wait half an hour. By that time it is too late to catch the connection over to the other terminal. We have a facility which cost several million dollars, and it has not been useful on any occasion on which I have used it. When I have left my luggage behind, I have found nobody in the facility, and it has been something like a mausoleum.

It is high time the government became a little more efficient with the taxes it handles, and in this connection we are dealing with amendments to tax legislation which raise about 25 per cent of the total revenue of the government. Many taxes are hidden and people do not realize they are actually paying them. Nevertheless, they do account for a tremendous source of revenue for the government. The government should account for the way it handles that money because at the present time it is just not handling it properly.

The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke) and the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) mentioned the discussion paper which was issued by the previous minister of finance two years ago. I wish some headway could be made in this area. Speaking for myself, I am little discouraged to find that the government and its advisers are moving toward shifting taxation from the manufacturing level to the wholesale level. As a matter of principle, I think the government should be more accountable for its taxation policies. I think there should be a shift to the retail sales level. If that were done, the amount the government is taking would be out in the open. If we keep it at the manufacturing or the wholesale level, it is a hidden tax and in many cases adds to the apparent cost of everything. Retailers generally fix their mark-up on the basis of the wholesale cost, and then take a percentage on the amount of sales and excise tax they have to pay to the federal government.

This may not be a politically easy move to make, but I think an effort to make governments more accountable is necessary. It should be harder for governments to raise money and this source of revenue should be moved out into the open. Then there would be more accountability on the part of the government.

I agree with what my hon. friends have said about delay. An improvement should certainly be made in the form of taxation, and I urge this government to move past the wholesale level to the retail level. This would probably be fairly difficult in the province of Alberta, a part of which I represent. At the present time in Alberta there is no direct sales tax. My proposal would mean the imposition of a sales tax, and if I were on the government side I probably would not want this. However, as a matter of principle, these things should be out in the open.

I join in congratulating the Department of Finance for increasing the exemption with regard to small manufacturers. I believe this measure is aimed toward benefiting people involved in voluntary social activities. I believe it is unfortunate that the government has got into so many areas of social welfare. People are beginning to expect everything to be done by the government in that area and volunteer activities are falling by the wayside. That is much to the detriment of the basic nature and fabric of our society. This is a small step to encourage voluntary movements, and I hope the government will not let it lie here but that it will take other steps to encourage people to help themselves and others through voluntary activities, rather than having massive government programs to solve everybody's problems—which the government has not been very adept in doing, in any event.

I wanted to make another point with regard to the Toronto airport and the cost of living. The fare for that little bus to which I referred used to be 10 cents. It took people from one terminal to another. Now it costs 25 cents. That is quite an increase, percentagewise; and there is no fee at all for the use of that multi-million dollar tunnel. It seems strange to me that we cannot better utilize facilities which have already been installed and, therefore, make us a little more efficient.

Mr. Clarke: In Vancouver, the bus is free.

Mr. Schumacher: It will not be for long, if we have the Minister of Transport and his user-pay concept around here much longer.

I would like also to comment on the business of car taxes. I am astounded that this government persists, in this area of high taxation, to increase those taxes. I can see some point in using taxation to encourage the use of energy-efficient automobiles, but the government's approach seems to be to increase taxes on large cars, which are already too high, and to leave the tax on smaller cars at the same level. I would rather see the government do something to reduce its total taxation "take" by removing, or reducing, taxes on energy-efficient models; and if a tax must remain on the other ones, they should be left at their present level.

Reference has also been made to the excise tax on gasoline. I agree with the government's state policy of increasing the price of petroleum to world levels, but the government should practice what it preaches and reduce the excise tax in the same proportion as applies to the price of oil, from which gasoline is extracted, because the stated objective is to reduce imports, and as that gap narrows the stated reason for the tax narrows. The government has an obligation to the people of Canada to refuse a tax that no longer has a reason for being.

In summary, Mr. Speaker, I feel that the government is asking us to amend legislation that accounts for a major source of its income. Numerous examples have been given to indicate they are not using this income properly. Because of that, I feel, as a general principle, they should be made more accountable and the public should be made more aware of this type of taxation. It should be out in the open. This would force the government to be more efficient with the money they take from taxpayers in this country.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I should like to take just a few minutes of the time of the House to present to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) an appeal which I readily admit has been made to me by only two persons. I suspect, however, that their view represents that of many others, and I hope the minister will give it consideration or at least ask some of his experts to look at it. The two persons who wrote me in this vein are from different parts of the country and I see no reason to think they were acting in concert. In each case the person is about to become an old age pensioner and retire. To use the language in one of the letters, this man and his wife have looked forward to their retirement for a long time.

Mr. Clarke: We look forward to yours.

[Mr. Schumacher.]

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): My hon. friend says that he and some of his friends are looking forward to my retirement. They will have to look forward to it from somewhere else, because they will be gone from this place long before I am.

This man and his wife had planned their retirement for a long time, he writes, and would like to see Canada. They have a car and a small trailer and had planned to make a trip and see Canada in the first year of their retirement. But he says that the tremendous increase in the price of gasoline has just about put that plan out of the picture.

The argument he makes to me is that he did not know 5, 10 or 20 years ago what was going to happen. Surely some concession might be made to such persons. I am not standing here making an appeal that all persons aged 65 and over should not have to pay the gasoline excise tax. After all, that would include me—and I am in a position to pay it, being a member of parliament. I put it to the minister, however, that as there are already some exceptions—farmers, certain invalids, and so on—in terms of the excise tax on gasoline, I wonder if a way could not be found to assist senior citizens, especially those who are not employed, who do not have other income and who might have to meet any other conditions the minister or his officials would work out. I am not trying to give the details. I am honoured that there are eight or ten of the minister's top officials in the gallery, so I am sure they could work out the details.

As I said, this appeal has been made to me by only two persons but I make no apology for taking the time of the House in regard to it. It is a reasonable, human appeal and I hope the minister and his officials will take a good look at it.

Mr. Ron Huntington (Capilano): Mr. Speaker, I will take this opportunity to offer a few comments and express a few concerns I have about the air transport tax proposed in Bill C-54. There are some conflicts in what is happening in Canada today that bring me to my feet to offer these remarks. Canada is at a low ebb in its economy and its ability to employ its people, but here we are moving in with another obstacle toward creating some energy within the travel market in the country. This air transport tax is a double taxation when considered with the tax in the United States. If you purchase a ticket in New York to go to Montreal and return, you are subject to a $3 U.S. tax—which, by the way, is sent into a trust fund that the federal aviation authority operates for expenditures on airways and airports. Then you have to pay another $8 tax to Canada.

The Canadian tax apparently goes to the administration of air transportation or the airport revolving fund, which in 1976 received $29.7 million in air transport tax—a substantial increase over the $5.7 million received in 1975. It is not practical to collect this tax at the other end.

The Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) and his staff are aware how the system works in Europe. There, half of all tickets are sold by interline airlines, one-quarter by travel agents and one-quarter by the carrying airlines. How could the collection of this tax be co-ordinated in a market like Europe when we are trying to attract some of their tourist dollars to this country? What we seem to be doing is imposing bad attitudes on tourists; on the one hand we welcome them, and on the other hand we send them off with a scowl.

In order to collect this $8 tax from foreign tourists we will have to accost them as they leave Canada and it will have to be done by the airline. In the United States, if a visitor refuses to pay his $3 tax the airline has the passenger sign a slip which the airline turns over to the government, which then has the responsibility of collecting. Where the tax is only $3, it is unlikely that the government will try to collect it.

Let us take the case of a family of four departing from Montreal. First, there is the bus ride from downtown to the airport—four times $5, making $20. If the airport tax was not collected at the European end of the trip—which is most unlikely—it has to be collected by the clerk at the airline counter. So four times $8 is $32. What a farewell for a family that has come to enjoy Canada. Of course, they could refuse to pay, which would give rise to all kinds of problems. It would hold up business at the counter and queues would lengthen.

Then there is the problem of handling the cash involved in this transaction. Most tickets are prepaid or purchased by credit card, so the visitor might have to join another queue in order to pay this tax that the airline is asked to collect on behalf of the government. What a way to build a travel industry! Why do we risk people leaving the country with a sour attitude?

It was suggested that the tax be collected through the customs and excise officials at the airport, but they pointed out that it would involve them in union problems. What will happen with the airlines if they are landed with this problem on top of their already onerous duties? I say this because, at this time in our history airlines can only cut costs and balance revenues with expenditures by cutting down on personnel. I suggest we are applying unnecessary pressure.

Consider what would happen to a person visiting Canada who bought his ticket in Europe. Since the carrier has brought the passenger only one way, from Europe to this country, the contract of carriage has only been half fulfilled. Let us suppose that the passenger will not pay the tax. What could happen? The airline could choose to break the contract of carriage, could choose not to collect the tax and be liable to penalties under the act and, perhaps, in the process, be responsible for that passenger missing his departure flight. The airline would then face the prospect of paying for the overnight accommodation. As you can see, Mr. Speaker, this position would add burdens to the industry already severely burdened with problems.

Largely because we insist on passing measures like Bill C-58, other countries are retaliating against us. The United States government will not allow U.S. citizens attending conventions in Canada to deduct their convention expenses for purposes of income tax. So in the United Kingdom there has arisen the question of retaliation with respect to security costs against Canadian airlines, because United Kingdom airlines are forced to pay security charges in Canada, whereas such services are provided in England by the British equivalent to our Department of Transport. This kind of retaliation is starting to build up against us—and we do not need it, especially at this time.

No doubt the government will claim that the collection of the transport tax in other countries is a step in the right direction. They say it is an equitable step, for, if Canadians must pay, why should not others? I suggest that if we welcome others to this country we should not involve them in the sort of hassles which could be in prospect for them. Really, this awkward tax which could create unnecessary problems would not have been necessary if the government had paid more attention to the management of the revolving fund set up to finance the construction of airports and airport facilities. I suggest the Taj Mahal syndrome, to quote the Minister of Transport, has made this tax, or this source of revenue, necessary.

In 1969 we set up the revolving fund for operating the two eastern airports. Then the Vancouver airport was included. According to what I learned in the public accounts committee, the revolving fund seemed to be working well and was actually generating a surplus. What happens under this government? The revolving fund was working well, apparently, the idea underlying it conforming to the user-pay policy of the Minister of Transport, when, without warning, the government absolutely ruined it, decimated it. It used the revolving fund as the burying ground for a whole series of unnecessary costs. First, it buried the some $500 million cost of Mirabel in that revolving fund. These days, when you ask how much Mirabel cost, it is difficult to obtain a truthful answer. The government will not say how much Mirabel cost it.

Mr. Clarke (Vancouver Quadra): It doesn't know.

Mr. Huntington: It does not know, and there is no way for it to find out. The government has used DREE for these purposes, the airport revolving fund, the Department of Public Works—it has used every little basket, so to speak, available to it to hide the cost of that airport. As well, the cost of the bridge from Vancouver to Sea Island has been hidden in that revolving fund. The government put the $130 million for the Calgary airport under the revolving fund, as well as the Pickering land purchase. Mr. Speaker, by so doing it is destroying the user-pay concept. By so using this revolving fund, that concept will be shattered. The government has really turned the fund into a coffin for its extravagance.

I have been a principal supporter of the user-pay policy which was put forward by the previous minister of transport and continued by the present occupant of that portfolio. But as I note the waste and extravagance of the government, and the unnecessary burden it is forcing our revenue-generators to bear, I cannot continue to support the user-pay concept. Our revenues in this regard should be solidly based, and sound. I think the opportunity to persuade people to accept the user-pay concept in this country has been destroyed by this kind of abuse of government structures.

I have not much more to say, except that this tax is being rammed through the House without justification. The Minister of Transport and his staff are aware of the points I have made, but they are not listening to the industry. You would think that the minister, after his experience in withdrawing the northland subsidy on the west coast, would stop persisting in being arrogant and begin listening to suggestions which could have a positive effect in Canada. To me, this airport user-pay tax is contrary to the spirit of the user-pay policy the government has tried to promote in this country.

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I rise to bring to the attention of the minister a problem not new to him, since the Minister of National Revenue (Miss Bégin) drew it to his attention about a month ago. The question relates to the excise tax on potting soils and mixtures which has suddenly been resurrected. The question was brought to my attention by a constituent, Hillview Farms Limited, who 10 or 12 years ago realized there was a market in Canada for potting soil and potting soil mixtures. The company had to choose between two types of product, a mixture of various inert materials which, by themselves, could not support vegetable life, or a mixture composed partly of soil and partly of inert materials.

It learned from federal authorities that if it used a mixture of soil and inert materials it would not need to pay the manufacturer's sales tax, but if it mixed a number of these inert materials mechanically, in an admixture, sales tax could be charged. On the basis of that information the company consulted an agricultural expert who said that if the company wished to do a service to the Canadian horticultural industry it would opt for the second alternative, a mixture of true soil and certain inert ingredients which would foster the growth of plants. Having the best interests of the consumer and the country at heart, that company started a small operation in which it employed one or two people part-time. It has now grown, employing some 18 or 20 people full-time, and extra help in the summer.

Lo and behold, they were informed this winter, about two or three months ago, by the income tax officials that the income tax people had apparently just woken up from some kind of lethargy or sleep and had just discovered that some ten or twelve years ago legislation had been provided under the Excise Tax Act which called for a manufacturing sales tax on these products. This was news to them, of course, because they had been advised otherwise, and they consulted us about it. We, in turn, informed the Minister of National Revenue. The hon. lady took the matter under consideration and decided that something should be done about it. No concessions could be allowed in this area and I was so informed by her.

At the same time, the minister brought the matter to the attention of her colleague, the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald), who I see is in his place today. We are pleased he is here and are interested to note that he has at least a dozen of his experts sitting in the gallery. I am sure the hon. gentleman will be able to give us an answer later today or next week, because from such a large batch of experts I am sure he will be able to obtain a good explanation of this problem.

[Mr. Huntington.]

One wonders why the income tax people suddenly found this section of the act when it had been completely ignored for so many years. One wonders whether it was a case that somebody just woke up and realized it was there. On the other hand, it may constitute evidence that there is in Canada a fairly large corporation, a subsidiary of an American corporation, which happens to import into Canada these inert products which are then sold on the market. Because they do not contain any soil they therefore, in accordance with the act, incur tax, and this is as it should be. If this is the case, they may be having difficulty competing with our own Canadian companies which produce a superior product. Perhaps the minister can confirm that pressure has been brought to bear, if not on his department then certainly on the Department of National Revenue, with a view to taxing this particular product, which is now available in Canada, in order to give a better chance to the American corporation with its Canadian subsidiary.

One wonders on what basis the Minister of Finance determines when a tax will apply on products such as soils and soil mixtures. It appears to have something to do with the term "manufacture". I have experienced difficulty in finding out what the ministry means when referring to manufacturing as it applies to soil mixtures and potting soils. These mixtures are nothing but mechanical mixtures. Soil is put with some of these inert materials and they are mixed together. No chemical reaction takes place. Any of the products used in the mixture remains unchanged, and yet for some reason the interpretation placed on the product by the Department of Finance is that the material has undergone a manufacturing process. On the other hand, if ordinary soil is taken and is treated with radiation or some other treatment which changes the soil, removes the bacteria from the soil, or may change it in some other way from its original condition, we then find that no tax applies. It is not considered, in that case, to be manufacturing. Therefore it is very difficult to know precisely what definition is used to arrive at the term "manufacturing".

A fundamental premise also exists, I understand, in the philosophy of the Department of Finance when they are trying to categorise products such as this. If you have a naturally occurring product in bulk and package it for use by the consumer in a smaller, more acceptable form, tax is not incurred. This makes sense, and when ordinary soil is packaged in this way no tax is incurred. But try to do the same with a bulk quantity of soil and add a few inert materials to it. For some strange reason tax is incurred when this mixture is repackaged.

This is not a minor matter, Mr. Speaker. It is one of major significance to many firms across Canada because it is my understanding that not only is Hillview Farms Ltd. concerned about it but that increasing concern is being expressed by the industry as a whole. Organizations such as Flowers Canada, Landscape Ontario, and Landscape Canada are most concerned about this sudden imposition or re-incarnation of a tax which has been on the books for years but which had never been implemented. This may signify the efficiency of the government when it has taxes on the books for years but fails to implement them.

There are a number of inconsistencies, anomalies, inequities, and absurdities which relate to this problem, one which itself is something of an absurdity. First of all, it is interesting to note that these materials which are now about to be taxed in Canada can be imported tax free from, say, the United States if they come in containers with a plant or a flower in them. It is an odd situation. One can deduce that a person in Canada who needs potting soil has only to import it from the United States in containers.

There is a second inequity here. We are, in fact, faced with a hidden tax on food. I do not think the Minister of Finance really believes food should be taxed. But this is the situation. If you want to grow some tomatoes yourself, or if you want to grow some cabbage plants or some cauliflower plants, anything like that, for food for yourself you will be obliged, from now on, to pay a tax on the potting soil mixture you will need. It will be an added cost to be considered by all who grow food for themselves.

A third point which should be mentioned concerns discrimination. As we debate this tax bill, meetings are going on in one of our standing committees in relation to discrimination in relation to human rights legislation. Here we have a government which is trying to get away from discrimination in the field of human rights now reintroducing discrimination in another form. In Canada at the present time we have roughly 250 companies manufacturing potting soils of one kind or another. To the best of my knowledge, of those 250 companies the income tax officials have decided to nail only three of them. This is discrimination. They have said, in effect, that these three companies, presumably because they are a little more successful than the others, will be the guinea pigs and will have this reincarnated tax tried out on them. Instead of being fair to all the industries and agencies manufacturing potting soils or soil mixtures, we find the tax department has picked on three and is demanding the tax from them.

To illustrate how ridiculous the situation is and to show how inconsiderate the government is being in the way it has handled this matter, we will, for the sake of argument, concede that the tax is a proper one. We do not believe it is, of course, but let us just concede that for the moment. We have a situation where, in January or February of the year, in midwinter, the income tax people challenge the manufacturer of potting soils and say, "Starting now, you must pay 12 per cent manufacturing sales tax." They do not seem to realize the problems faced by these manufacturers. They do not seem to recognize that they issue catalogues, and plan for months in advance. All their prices are already catalogued, their invoicing and billing are done by computerized systems, and it takes at least three months to change them and costs about $8,000. Some of these companies deliver their soil well in advance, and often do not require payment until many months later. There are many complications, all of which the Department of Revenue has decided to ignore.

One further anomaly which I did touch on earlier refers to the fact that you can take ordinary soil and sterilize it, or subject it to radiation, but that does not seem to incur any tax; that does not seem to be interpreted as manufacturing. Take, for example, medical equipment. That is prepackaged, like soil, and does not incur any tax. But if you take ordinary soil and put a little bit of peat moss or vermiculite or fertilizer or other ingredient into it, you end up with what is called a manufactured product, and for some reason you then have to pay tax.

There is also what is known as spent soil. Nurserymen, market gardeners, and mushroom growers use a type of soil which, after a certain amount of use, becomes known as spent soil. For some reason spent soils are not taxable. I have before me a letter from the Minister of National Revenue under date of April, 1977, in reply to a question I put to her, and she has this to say in regard to soils:

> Soils in their natural state are not taxable, even when packaged. In the same vein, spent or surplus soils sold by nurserymen, market gardeners, and mushroom producers are also not taxable. These soils have not been processed nor have new characteristics or qualities been added to them prior to their sale—at least to the extent that they could be regarded as being manufactured or produced.

There seems to be something of a caveat there, but who would believe, Mr. Speaker, that a nurseryman, a mushroom grower or market gardener using these special soils had not added something to them? They may have added fertilizer or peat moss or vermiculite, yet according to the way the minister interprets the Excise Tax Act this soil is not manufactured. If a constituent of mine takes the natural products and puts them together, for some reason the end product is called manufactured. I do not know how the minister can explain that anomaly but possibly we will hear from him on the matter later today or sometime next week.

Having described these half dozen anomalies in the interpretation of the Excise Tax Act I should like, in conclusion, to put three questions to the minister to see whether I can bring the matter to a head and obtain some explanation from him. First of all, I presume it will not be the responsibility of the minister, but someone will have to monitor this beastly tax which has been uncovered. It is pretty difficult to decide just what is in soil, dirt. If there is vermiculite or perlite in it, that will be easy to identify, but I challenge anyone to say that soil with a little bit of peat moss or fertilizer or manure in it is different from soil you get out of the ground which has not been so-called manufactured, as the minister says it is.

In other words, how is the minister going to tell when soil has actually been mechanically mixed by some process compared with when it has been taken from the ground and bagged and is thus not taxable? I think the minister, or perhaps his colleague, has opened up a real bag of worms here, which is an appropriate metaphor. I suggest the department will have difficulty deciding whether a given soil mixture was taken naturally from the ground or mixed together by some mechanical means.

Secondly, supposing a manufacturer of these soil mixtures, instead of combining them together as they are currently in a manner which is helpful to the consumer—obviously this service has been popular in view of the growth from two employees to 20—decides to package each ingredient in his soil mixtures separately so as not to incur tax, or puts all these little packages into one big package, presumably it still would not incur tax. I suggest it is ludicrous to think a manufacturer would have to do that in order to avoid this rather absurd and inane tax.

My final question to the minister is this: would he study the question of potting soil and potting soil mixtures from the point of view of all the inequities and anomalies to which I have referred? A very small amount of money is going to be raised from this resurrected tax and difficulty will be caused many businesses in Canada, and undeservedly so. I ask the minister to give consideration to including a clause in the bill to exempt from sales tax potting soil mixtures, top soil, top dressings and other similar products.

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to have this opportunity to enter the debate on excise taxation. It strikes me that the Departments of Revenue and Finance are still a little too imbued with some of the philosophy which appeared in the Carter commission report some years ago. There is a little too much tendency to say a buck is a buck is a buck, and for the federal government to demand money by way of taxation, as the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) suggested was the case with the airline tax, rather than look at ways in which to restrict federal spending, in which case the need to be quite so rapacious in taxation would not be there.

I also hope that in the next budget there will be a thorough-going review of federal excise tax, which has been promised us. I hope it will include a move to make the federal share of sales tax a visible, open tax, which the public could recognize each time it makes a purchase. I realize that the Constitution is clear on this point and that the federal government has the right to impose a hidden tax, whereas the provincial governments have not and must, if necessary, impose visible sales taxes. Nevertheless, the practice is detrimental not only to national unity but to the economy of the country.

While this tax review is ongoing I trust that coincident with it an attempt will be made to reconcile the whole sales tax picture with the provinces. Nothing is more detrimental to national unity than varying levels of sales tax imposed, and necessarily imposed, by provincial governments across the country. This problem is particularly acute in British Columbia where the sales tax has risen to 7 per cent, with no sales tax existing in our neighbouring province. The hon. member for Palliser (Mr. Schumacher) made reference to this in his speech. I know the long standing opposition of that province to the imposition of any sales tax, but the distortions which are brought into the economy of the province of British Columbia on its eastern border are so great, and the damage to business so serious, that a conference between the national government and the provinces should be convened to try to even out sales taxes applied across the country. The federal share of it should be made visible so that the provincial government would not stand out the way it does now when the federal government can escape without the general, daily, every purpose recognition of the sales tax.

I hope the minister, in conjunction with his colleague in the Revenue Department, will instigate a thorough review of the role of the revenue office in retailing within Canada. This is particularly so when it is possible to use zenith numbers to phone, without charge, south of the border to order goods which may well be purchased at a discount price not available to a normal importer who is expected to pay the fair market price. To have those goods landed in a town in the interior of British Columbia and then hand them out on collection of the 12½ per cent excise tax, but with no collection of the 7 per cent provincial tax, would be an automatic bargain. That may be an additional bargain in lieu of the original purchase price. The competition from the United States to small business in a province with a large provincial sales tax is very, very real. When you have a province that has two undefended borders in terms of the retailing community, it leaves a great deal of discontent amongst those people.

I suspect the Revenue Department is in many ways a long way behind the times in assessing the type and extent of excise tax which should be collected, when it seems quite possible that a manufacturer in the United States can control the wholesaler and can control the retailer and may well own the discount house as well. Thus they are able to discount their own product by dumping it abroad into Canada, which the Anti-Dumping Act does not take into consideration at the present time.

The other area I am concerned about is the area which shows up in regard to crafts. I have had a considerable amount of mail over the last year from people interested in crafts. Certainly the areas I represent in British Columbia tend to have a fairly long tradition of hand made and hand crafted articles which rise to the level of art as well. I am very much concerned about the proposed changes.

I would like to illustrate this with an example that was given to me by a constituent who creates highly original articles which are hand crafted, one of a kind, and which he calls sculpture. I notice he is not alone. I have here a copy of the Architectural Digest for May-June, 1977. It is the international magazine of fine interior design. I see an advertisement in that magazine for functional sculpture, signed originals by Gary Gutterman, and sold through a company called Axius in New York City. I do not know how the American excise tax department would categorize functional sculpture, but it certainly exists beyond the mind of the constituent who approached me.

An officer from the Revenue Department approached him at one of the craft shows in my constituency and informed him that he was a manufacturer and hence not an artist. He was also informed that he should be paying the federal government sales tax on his items. He objected to that because he felt it was sculpture. Thus, an appeal was made to the customs division of the department with respect to tariff item No. 69515-1.

The Dominion customs appraiser advised my constituent that had these articles been imported they would not have been classified as sculptures under tariff item 69515-1. That misses the point a little because they were not being imported. They were being hand crafted, individually made, one of a kind, and created inside Canada, if you want to use the artistic expression. Why they should automatically fall under any definition for articles being brought in from elsewhere, I do not quite know. They are made within the country, so there is no question of duty. Why this particular suggestion was made about the treatment they would receive at the border if they had been made somewhere else, I do not know.

There is suggestion that some relief is on the way. That suggestion is contained in the statement that was made in the ways and means motion on March 31 of this year. I have the communiqué from Revenue Canada which sets out two provisions. It somewhat bothers me because it is ambiguous and I am sure the craft industry has not been reassured by what is here.

Before these matters are unchangeable and beyond anyone's power to revoke, I hope the minister will hold the most careful consultation with the people involved in the craft and art industry of Canada. The communiqué reads as follows:

> The Minister of National Revenue, the Honourable Monique Bégin, announced today that the regulations prescribing "Small Manufacturers" under the Excise Tax Act, will be amended to increase the annual sales value to $10,000 from the present $3,000. Persons who manufacture goods for sale or for their own use, valued at $10,000 or less annually will no longer have to be licensed or have to account for sales tax.

It continues as follows:

> The minister also announced her intention to classify as small manufacturers, craftsmen who personally manufacture or produce by hand various kinds of handicrafts that reflect an aspect of Canadian culture or heritage. There will be no restriction as to annual sales volume for this group.
> "Small Manufacturers" as a class are exempt from paying sales tax on the sale price of their finished products, however tax remains applicable to raw materials and components.

I suggest to the hon. minister and his hon. colleague that they will both be in endless trouble if they have two categories of small manufacturers, one being treated more generously than the other but considered a class. That makes no sense at all. It seems to me they need to change the category for small manufacturers, or they will need to introduce a third one which will deal with the artist who creates a sculpture or whatever it is which falls into the category of art. It should not be difficult to set up a board which would be able to distinguish that. It certainly would not be advisable to select the board which has approved some of the recent purchases for the National Gallery because there are some very utilitarian objects on the top floor of the gallery which have been raised to the category of art.

I would suggest the Finance Minister and the Revenue Minister should have very close consultation with the Secretary of State (Mr. Roberts) in this regard, because their views of what constitutes art are far more stringent than the views which have been held to by the purchasing board for the National Gallery.

I suggest that the second paragraph in this category of small manufacturers—no capitals and no punctuation marks—is going to be unacceptable to the people who regard themselves as true artists or even craftsmen. To find themselves listed as a simple manufacturer does utter violence to the work in which they are engaged.

There should be some consideration of what these people are trying to do. They are trying to fulfil themselves as artists who work with the art that they have chosen as their means of expression. At the same time most of them would like to work exclusively at the art they have chosen. They do not like to be something else such as college lecturers, school teachers, service station attendants or whatever they have to be in today's inflationary society to stay afloat.

These people would like to devote their life to art. If they are lumped as manufacturers the threat will always be there that the change could very quickly be made. Given the government's need for ever-increasing sums of money, it would be very simple to change the regulations with regard to excise tax. Manufacturers would not argue the question at all as to whether it was taken off or not.

I feel that both ministries should be prepared to accept the challenge of defining what can be categorized as a living, earned, true artistic production. Whether it be pottery, sculpture or functional sculpture, there should be room for this. Otherwise these people are forced into the job market, forced to compete at a time of high unemployment, and what looks to be a period of high unemployment for some time in the future.

These people do not want to compete. They do not want to take a job that does not interest them. They do not want a job that deprives them of the opportunity of working in their chosen field. However, sheer financial necessity forces them to do that.

The $10,000 annual sales value is of utterly no help to them. If there is any question here of the amount, it should have something to do with what it costs to live in this country today, because nothing can be made from nothing. All of these people must purchase materials in order to start their creations. Their costs will continue to rise. Very likely they will have overhead costs. Fuel is needed to fire the kilns, and electricity is needed to operate the polishers.

If they sold directly, they might have a hope of making a little. However, if they have to work through a gallery or dealer and pay a percentage, the hope of the craftsman or artist receiving a large share of the $10,000 is virtually nonexistent. It is not easy to live on $10,000. If it were all profit, that would be one thing, but it is not profit. It is sales to the value of $10,000.

By this measure we are forcing virtually every craftsman and artist well below the poverty line, yet taxing them on it. There is some hope in the second paragraph, but it will have to be redefined. Customs officials will be endlessly confused as to what is a small manufacturer and what is not. If a category is capital letters and quotation marks, there is not much criteria there on which they can make their decision. It will end up as in the example I quoted.

The customs officers will apply to the Revenue Department for a definition to determine what they should do with it as it crosses the border. The decision will not have anything to do with the appreciation of the craft and certainly nothing to do with the artistic merit or judgment as to the individuality of the true worth of the art as a contribution to Canada.

There is further hazard with various kinds of handicrafts being exempted if they reflect an aspect of Canadian culture or heritage. I am amazed to see that from this government which, for some time, has had the policy or slogan that this is a great multicultural country. Any attempt to define Canadian culture or heritage will be almost impossible. I suspect there will be a different deal for the native Indians of North America or the Inuit people than for anybody else. To define something as having a Canadian cultural or heritage aspect will be very difficult indeed.

These are my concerns about this bill. I urge the minister to have most careful consultation with his colleague, the Minister of National Revenue (Miss Bégin). There should be a thorough study of the wishes, concerns and opinions of the people involved in arts and crafts, particularly those involved in creating original objects that have to be looked at individually. There must be room for appeal for the artist who is unique, rare, and individual. In Japan, artists of that nature are classified as national treasures. However, in Canada we seem to have a policy of hoping that our artists will contribute to the national treasure, and there is a world of difference between those two approaches.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 37(3), I must advise hon. members that if the minister speaks now he will close the debate.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, we have had a wide ranging debate during the day on a number of issues. Some of them ran not only beyond the bill but beyond the responsibility of this particular department, such as the questions of airport administration, the energy conservation program, and the oil import compensation program. Interesting and important as they are, I do not propose to deal with them this afternoon because, as I say, they run beyond the bill.

The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) raised a number of points. I appreciate his comments with regard to the increase in the small manufacturers' exemption. The point was made by him and several other members with regard to the level to which it should be raised. I should advise the House that while it has the support on one side for the notion that the level of the exemption should be increased, I and my department have received considerable representation on the other side of the issue.

There have been objections from other small manufacturers whose volume may be above that of the groups we are talking about here. They regard it as unfair that someone who may, to a degree, be in competition, is exempt from this particular administration. That, of course, is the inevitable problem of trying to line up between what is a reasonable area of operation and what is an undue exemption in this regard. I think we can agree on the fact that at the $10,000 level we are exempting from this kind of administration a very small annual product, one which should not have to bear these costs of administration.

On the question of disability, an important and vexing question, I listened with care to what the hon. member for Edmonton West said. This matter was raised with regard to the Canada Pension Plan. It was raised in relation to the provincial administration, to which the federal government contributes through the Canada Assistance Plan. The question of disability is difficult, and disability is very painful to define with any clarity. However, I take note of the comments of the hon. member, as I took note of the comment he made with regard to marker papers for agricultural aerial sprayers. That question, perhaps, should be considered, as the hon. member mentioned, in connection with the customs tariff. I undertake that it will receive that consideration.

With regard to the air transport tax, there were a number of hon. members who made comments on the tax and on the question as to whether the imposition of this tax or a further extension of it to people who buy their tickets out of Canada and who may be engaged in a flight which causes them to deplane and to depart again from Canada, is going to operate against tourism and against the impact of more travel to Canada.

In general terms one can say that when a person is contemplating a trip by air, which is obviously going to cost several hundreds of dollars, the additional potential maximum of $8 added to the cost of that trip is obviously not going to be a disincentive. If one compares the experience with the first application of the air travel tax in 1975, after the tax was implemented in December of 1974, trans-border air travel by Canadians, which was taxable under the new tax, increased by 11.7 per cent, and other international travel by Canadians increased 9.4 per cent, so obviously questions regarding personal taste, the state of the economy, and other questions will have quite an impact on tourism, but the air tax in itself will not have that impact.

One problem which was very validly raised and which should be a matter of concern is the fact that there is a tax, for example, by the United States government on trans-border travel, and there might be an element of double taxation involved. We recognize that problem and the necessity to try to come to terms with it. Indeed, my officials have arranged with United States officials to discuss this particular question in the very near future.

I think the problem is recognized on the United States side, and there is some hope that we might be able to achieve some kind of compromise between the two tax systems which will be of a beneficial nature.

I would like to put one other interesting statistic on the record in connection with United States visitors travelling to Canada. While there may have been a decline in the number of visitors to Canada in the recent past, that has not been so in the case of air visitors from the United States. For example, in the first quarter of 1977 the number of air visitors from the United States to Canada increased by 3.9 per cent. That indicates that use of this particular mode of travel has been on the increase, although there may have been a plateau of the increase in other areas.

On the broader questions of the Excise Tax Act, of the sales tax and of commodity taxation, there was some reference to the statement in the budget that we proposed to have a discussion in the committee of the commodity tax review which was tabled by my predecessor in his second last budget and which has been the subject of much representation by members of the public.

The hon. member for Vancouver Quadra (Mr. Clarke) stated, as his position and his party's opinion, that they were against too much administrative discretion and administrative action in the course of the application of tax laws in Canada. That is just exactly the problem to which the proposal to shift the sales tax from the manufacturing level to the wholesale level was directed. The proposal is an attempt to try to move to a different level of the productive process which would enable the administration to be carried forward with less administrative discretion. I wish to point out to the hon. gentleman the difficulty we have had with the public response which came back. The greater proportion of it was an objection to going to the wholesale level rather than directing ourselves to the problem, which we and other hon. members have mentioned over the years, of the necessity for administrative discretion at the manufacturing level. Therefore we hope to have the follow on documents from that commodity study available for tabling by about the middle of next month. It is obviously not a question which will or even needs to be resolved in the immediate future, but it is the kind of important question as to the administrative application of our laws and fair taxation upon which I am sure the finance committee would like to dwell.

I would like to deal for a moment with an argument which was repeated at several points, and that is with regard to the desirability of moving the sales tax right through to the retail sales tax level so that the public would know what it was paying in relation to that particular taxation. The first comment to be made is that it would be difficult in general terms to meet the objective of having all taxes hanging out there so the public would know what is involved. For example, corporate income tax, employer contributions to UIC, Canada Pension Plan or Quebec Pension Plan, property taxes and so on are wrapped up in the price of products, and I suppose one would have to wonder why it is necessary to have this particular commodity tax identified. What is so desirable about that when many of the other taxes are going to be hidden in the price of products?

There is in addition a practical difficulty in moving to the retail level. At the present time there are 58,000 licensed taxpayers under the manufacturers level excise tax. Going to the retail level would, it is estimated, increase the number of licensed taxpayers to about 250,000. In other words, it would involve a very substantial increase in the administrative burden which would be involved in carrying out that particular task.

That is a question about which I am sure hon. members will want to think, and I am sure we will have an opportunity to discuss it further when the commodity tax review goes to the committee.

The hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday) raised a question with regard to potting soil. I can inform him that that subject is, as he requested, now under review. I will look at his contribution to this debate again and bring it to the attention of my officials to see if it might be possible to bring about some relief, for the problem which the hon. member has raised, which would be equitable and fair on all sides.

I think that covers many of the principal questions involved. There were a number of specific points raised, such as the point raised by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles). I interpreted his remarks as being representations to consider rather than as invoking a specific response at this time, but I can undertake that that will occur.

The Acting Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stevens: On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and the House went into committee thereon, Mr. Ethier in the chair.

On Clause 1.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Chairman, on previous occasions when this type of bill was presented to the House, I made requests that there should be some consideration given to certain agricultural requirements which are not considered to be production costs. For instance, the requirements of ventilation and heating, and temperature and humidity control have not been considered as farm equipment. Since this is a very vital part of the farming operation and is essential to sending good produce to the market, what consideration has the minister given to this matter? Has he agreed that it should be characterized as agricultural machinery, or is it still in the category where it is taxable and dutiable but subject to refund after considerable difficulty?

● (1550)

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I would have to seek guidance. I do not know whether I should respond to that now. Clause 1 deals substantially with the air transportation tax so I wonder whether, in the context of relevancy, I can go on and talk about the other commodities that may be dealt with in the Excise Tax Act.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: I think the hon. minister has a valid point and we should address our questions to Clause 1.

Mr. McCain: Mr. Chairman, you are ruling, then, that the subject matter is not excise tax but is the specific areas of excise tax with which the clause deals. According to the title of the bill I thought the subject matter was excise tax, but you are disallowing any question on any subject which is not specifically mentioned within the confines of this clause?

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: In committee all questions should be relevant to the clause we are addressing. We are on Clause 1 so I do not think there should be questions that would apply to other clauses of the bill.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, I am rather surprised at the narrow interpretation the minister has chosen to insist on as far as my hon. colleague's question is concerned. Certainly when the customs tariff bill was before us a fairly wide ranging group of questions was answered by the minister, and with our co-operation the minister got the bill through that day. For some reason he seems to have turned quite technical.

I should like to ask the minister what the tax on air travel actually produces. Could he give us some up-to-date figures on what the tax will produce in revenue? I should also like an estimate of what this additional extension will mean in revenue for the federal government.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, for the year 1975-76 the revenue was $53.7 million; for 1976-77 the estimated revenue is $66 million, and the estimated revenue resulting from the amendments would be, on a full year basis, $15 million.

Mr. Stevens: During my general remarks on second reading I pointed out that while this is being presented to us on a user-pay basis is something that should be required from those using the airports, were it not for the fact that there has been an increase in expenditures on airports, particularly Mirabel and to a lesser extent the Toronto area airports, this tax would not be needed. Unfortunately, it is somewhat of a deterrent to tourists who want to come to the country.

Could the minister indicate what steps he has taken in his deliberations in cabinet to try to ensure that airport expenditures be restrained so that whatever revenue is produced by taxes such as this will not simply be eaten up?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, it has been the function of Treasury Board in particular to review proposed expenditures by the Department of Transport in the area of airport administration. On the broader question, such as the acquisition of capital properties for further expansion, individual matters will be brought up for cabinet consideration. The scrutiny of expenditures is a Treasury Board process.

Mr. Stevens: In suggesting that we accept this tax I wonder if the minister could indicate what comparable taxes there are in the countries that give us our main tourist business such as the United States, the United Kingdom, and European countries, where this tax is presumably to be inflicted upon people using the airports?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The most relevant country would be the United States where there is a $3 specific tax plus an 8 per cent ad valorem tax without an upper limit. With regard to the EEC countries, there is a whole range of airport taxes imposed at the point of departure, so it is difficult to make a general statement.

Mr. Stevens: In the case of the United States could the minister indicate what the proceeds of the $3 tax plus the percentage are used for? Does it go to the federal government and, if so, what do they use the money for?

I am sorry, Mr. Chairman, I missed the minister's reply.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): They are used for airport assistance programs.

On Clause 17.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, it is a little difficult to be sure that the questions I want to put are exactly relevant within the precise limitations the minister has indicated. I should like to get the minister's response to the suggestion that has been put by this party several times that consideration be given to the reduction or elimination of sales tax on energy efficient cars as an inducement and a conservation measure, in the hope that such a reduction would speed production of these cars which are mainly used in Canada. It would be a very welcome thing for people who use them for commuting to work and who like the much cheaper cars.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, we dealt with this previously. The view we have taken is that the purchaser of an automobile should bear some of the cost of government through a sales tax. That is why we feel this is the kind of commodity which should be expected to bear some sales tax. The question is whether we should favour the small car owner by exempting a family who perhaps require two small cars from some kind of tax, or put a penalty on those with an extra large car. We take the view that it is the extra large vehicle which is the problem so we put a penalty on them. We have been interested to note that the United States administration is following our example.

Mr. Stevens: I wonder if the minister could indicate what evidence his department has that this is a deterrent. I have had several examples cited to me where people are willing to buy relatively big cars and could not care less about the extra tax. If they want the car they buy it. On the other hand a $300 difference on a relatively small car means a lot to a man on low income.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Of course with the affluence in our society there are some people to whom the extra $300 is not important. For this reason we put forward this proposal which is now being discussed about an increasing severity of scale against automobiles that are not energy efficient. For reasons I mentioned earlier this year, this question is now being discussed with the manufacturing industry. We expect at some time to put in place an additional deterrent which will be a not negligible factor in the acquisition of energy-using cars.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: It being four o'clock—

Mr. Kaplan: Mr. Chairman, I rise on a point of order. I suggest that we may consider during private members' hour a motion standing in my name and I would be prepared, if the committee agrees, to postpone consideration of my motion for a few minutes, if that would help the committee to complete its consideration of this bill and perhaps secure its passage on third reading.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Is it agreed that we shall not see the clock and continue in committee of the whole?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Excise Tax

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, could the minister give the committee figures for the aggregate revenues produced by the automobile sales tax in Canada?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, the sales tax on automobiles runs at between $475 million and $500 million.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 17 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 17 agreed to.

On Clause 18.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, could the minister furnish an explanation with respect to subclause (4) on page 10 of the bill; I refer to language reading:

... Coin of any metal, of authorized weight and design, issued for use as currency under the authority of the government of any country.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, prior to 1975, Revenue Canada extended these provisions to classify all foreign coins free of duty and sales tax exempt. In 1975 Revenue Canada ruled that foreign coins, other than gold coins, were dutiable and subject to sales tax.

Under the International Monetary Fund articles of agreement, the government has undertaken not to impose restrictions on transfers for current international transactions. Duty and tax on imports of coins in current circulation would seem to constitute such a restriction and could be considered a disguised exchange control. As a result, in December, 1976, order in council P.C. 1976-3019 was passed which remits duty and sales tax on foreign coins. The purpose of this amendment is to deal with this sales tax relief in a more formal manner.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall Clause 18 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 18 agreed to.

On Clause 19.

Mr. Stevens: Could the minister say, Mr. Chairman, if the effects of the changes set out in Clause 19 will be to add to or subtract from revenue, or does the government think that the changes as set out in Clause 19 will preserve revenues accruing to the government under the gasoline excise tax?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, the tax levels will be left exactly as they were when they were imposed in March, 1977; therefore these figures should have no effect at all on revenues.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, may I ask a related question about the ten cents a gallon gasoline tax, which is governed by the Excise Tax Act but is not being changed? Can the minister say what is the total this tax generates, and how much must be spent? In other words, what is the current revenue accruing to the government under this tax, what is the total expenditure made under it, and what is the surplus or deficit, as the case may be?

Excise Tax

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, in the 1975-76 fiscal year, the net total of refunds was $425.1 million. Of course the total expenditure cannot be categorized if the funds are paid into the Consolidated Revenue Fund. They contribute both to the oil import compensation fund and to the financing of the various energy development projects which the federal government has undertaken.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Chairman, could the minister indicate what is the refund portion of the expenditure which has been claimed by Canadians?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Chairman, I am sorry, I do not have that figure available today.

The Assistant Deputy Chairman: Shall clause 19 carry?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Clause 19 agreed to.

Clause 20 agreed to.

Bill reported.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): When shall the bill be read the third time?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): By leave, now.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) moved that the bill be read the third time and do pass.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Mr. Paproski: On division.

Motion agreed to and bill read the third time and passed.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I understand, from discussions held earlier today, that there might be some disposition to allow me to make my second reading remarks on the Bretton Woods Agreement Act. I believe my colleague, the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), would be agreeable to that. Am I mistaken?

Mr. Fairweather: You have done pretty well today.

Mr. Paproski: Have a good weekend.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, notices of motions, public bills, private bills.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

Mr. Paproski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe there is a disposition to consider motion No. 29, in the name of the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), and allow the other preceding motions to stand at the request of the government.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Is this agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It is so ordered.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSAL COMMITTEE EXAMINE UPHOLDING OF HUMAN FREEDOMS UNDER PROVISIONS OF HELSINKI AGREEMENT

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance) moved:

That the Helsinki Agreement be referred to the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence to obtain evidence of the extent to which States signatory thereto have observed their obligations contained in basket 3 (human freedoms) and that the Commission have power to travel from place to place within Canada to hold public meetings on this matter.

He said: Mr. Speaker, in August, 1975, an historic agreement made by European and North American powers was signed at Helsinki, Finland, settling some questions of security and co-operation. A number of political issues were resolved at Helsinki dealing with questions which remain highly contentious so far as some Canadians are concerned. Some states were not represented by governments of their peoples, or by what we, in our democratic country, consider as governments.

I did not place this motion on the order paper in order to discuss the validity of the Helsinki agreement on those grounds. Actually I am not rising to object to the Helsinki Agreement. On the contrary, I shall address my attention this afternoon to the implementation of the Helsinki Agreement.

In signing the Helsinki Agreement, the Government of Canada has often stressed how important it considers assurances given by other countries of their co-operation in humanitarian and other fields. The undertakings with respect to such co-operation are often referred to as the Basket III provisions of the Helsinki Agreement. In a moment I shall examine some of the issues relating to Basket III to the Helsinki Agreement. Before I do that, let me remind the House of the importance of the issues I intend to raise. Their importance is this: on June 15, 1977, a conference is to be convened in Belgrade, Yugoslavia, to deal with the implementation of the issues I intend to raise. Their importance is this: on June 15, 1977, a conference is to be convened in Belgrade, Yugoslavia, to deal with the implementation of the Helsinki Agreement. I have a copy of the agreement with me and will note and refer in detail to specific undertakings given by states signatory to the Helsinki Agreement as to follow-up. They agreed, on June 15, to declare their resolve, in the period following the conference, to pay due regard to and implement the provisions of the Final Act of the conference unilaterally, in all cases which lend themselves to such action; bilaterally, in all cases which lend themselves to such action; bilaterally, by negotiations with other participating states, and multilaterally. I want to emphasize the agreement which was made that beginning in August, 1975, the members would unilaterally, where they could, implement the undertakings contained in the Helsinki Agreement.

Less than a month from now there will be a meeting in Belgrade, as called for in this document, to review, among other things, the extent to which states have unilaterally implemented the measures and the promises they solemnly made in Helsinki in 1975.

The resolution I tabled last November called for the external affairs committee to travel across Canada receiving briefs from witnesses who would give evidence about the extent to which these undertakings had been observed. If my resolution had been accepted, these hearings would have taken place and the ground work would have been well prepared, but at this point, with less than a month to go, it is hard to imagine that even with the support of the House for the resolution the external affairs committee could carry out such a mandate. Nevertheless, I wish to defend this resolution because I assert that if it had been passed in time, and if that tour had taken place, we would be in a much better position at Belgrade in June to deal with the question of the extent to which member states had implemented their undertakings. I wish to refer particularly to the countries of the Soviet Union and the extent to which they have honoured their obligation to carry out unilaterally the promises they formally, solemnly, and in writing agreed upon in Helsinki.

Canada is a country made up of immigrants. I understand that since the Second World War one tenth of all the immigrants who have come to this country have been refugees, often leaving their families. It is typical of immigrants to Canada that they leave members of their families in other parts of the world. So it is proper, totally to be expected, and very Canadian, that this parliament should be concerned about the important question of the reunification of families. In the limited time which I have, I propose to deal with only one small provision in the third basket, the undertaking of the Soviet Union to promote the unification of families, and its agreement that it would unilaterally implement such an undertaking.

If we had inquired across the country we would have learned a great deal. We would have been able to go to Belgrade with many, many cases of both compliance and non-compliance with its undertakings on the part of the Soviet Union. I have many cases before me, partly because I have the honour to represent a very large number of landed immigrants who have come to these shores from the Soviet Union, many of them in the last five or six years. A large number of these have families still living in the Soviet Union and they are asking for the benefit of the Helsinki Agreement.

What is the specific provision to which I should like to draw attention? It is the provision which envisages contacts and regular meetings on the basis of family ties. There are two parts to this. One is an agreement about visiting—family members visiting each other across boundaries. The second has to do with settlement—the right of families to be unified. Let me deal with that briefly.

The Helsinki Agreement provides that in order to promote the further development of contacts on the basis of family ties, participating states will favourably consider applications for travel for the purpose of allowing persons to enter or leave their territory temporarily, and or on a regular basis if desired, in order to visit members of their families. Then there is a reference to the reunification of families where families wish to be reunited permanently. The provision is that the participating states shall deal in a positive and humanitarian spirit with the applications of persons who wish to be reunited with members of their families, with special attention being given to requests of an urgent character.

Dealing with these matters in a positive and humanitarian spirit might, indeed, result in reunification in particular cases. But even with good faith being shown by a government, reunification might not be able to take place. However, the language used there—"dealing in a positive and humanitarian spirit" is quite different from the language used in the case of travel. The participating states say they will favourably consider applications to travel for the purpose of temporary visits.

Let me, then, confine myself to the undertaking of the Soviet Union to consider favourably applications to travel for the purpose of family reunification. In my office alone—and I am only one member of parliament—I have notes of more than a dozen cases of elderly relatives in the Soviet Union who have applied to visit temporarily their relatives in Canada and who have been turned down, in spite of the fact that the Soviet Union was prepared to undertake solemnly that it would favourably consider applications to travel.

I should like to tell the House about just one case, the case of Freda Schafirovich who lives in the Ukraine. She is a widow, 70 years old. She lives alone. Her husband was a war veteran who died defending the Soviet Union against fascist invaders in the Second World War. Not only was her late husband a veteran who served actively and with distinction, but she herself was a war veteran who was wounded in the defence of her city and was honoured for her valiant participation. Perhaps I should say, parenthetically, that the Schafiroviches were Jewish. When they were defending their country against the fascist invaders they knew what they were defending it against. Perhaps there was never a moment in history when Canadians, Americans, and all free people around the world felt a closer bond than in those terrible days when the Schafiroviches and hundreds and thousands, even millions, of Soviet citizens were rebelling and helping defeat the forces of fascism.

Mrs. Schafirovich, 70 years old this year, has been trying unsuccessfully for five years to visit her children who live in my constituency in the city of Toronto. Five years ago she received a visa from the Canadian government giving her permission to come to Canada as a temporary visitor, which was all she was asking. She intends to return to the Soviet Union. She applied under the normal procedure for permission from the Soviet authorities to leave that country temporarily. She did not receive a written reply or have anything she could show her son. She was called in and told to forget it, that she would not be allowed to be reunited with her son in Canada.

I have seen Mr. Schafirovich a number of times. I saw him before I went to the Soviet Union. When I went to the Soviet Union I had the opportunity of meeting with Chairman Podgorny, Chairman of the Supreme Soviet in the Soviet Union. I asked him about Mrs. Frida Shafirovich and when she was going to be allowed to come and visit her son who is living in my constituency, and said she had applied for a temporary visa. He said he would look into it. I understand that Mrs. Schafirovich was called in again. This 70 year old woman, a widow and wounded war veteran, was told to forget it, that she would not be able to visit her son.

Recently a friendly delegation of Soviet parliamentarians came to this country. The son, Arkady Schafirovich, came up to Ottawa and I took him to the Speaker's dining room and introduced him to three or four members of that delegation. They spoke together in Russian and he asked them to see what they could do to get permission for his mother to visit him temporarily in Canada. They took down the details and said they would look into it. They returned home, called in this 70 year old woman and, I understand, told her that she was not going to get to visit Canada to see her son.

I am not a supporter of communism; members of the House know that. But I do know there are many supporters of communism in the world, particularly in the Soviet Union. I should like to know, what does it do for the cause of communism, for socialism as they see it, for the kind of society that they want to establish, to tell a 70 year old Jewish lady, a veteran who fought in the Second World War, that she cannot make a temporary visit to her son?

Since the Schafirovich incident began, a meeting was held at Helsinki. I have referred to this one case but there are hundreds, maybe thousands, of Canadians who look to the Helsinki accord for assistance. They do not like the politics of it or the idea of boundaries being drawn around people who were not being democratically represented at the bargaining table when this agreement at Helsinki was settled, but nevertheless, they know about Basket III and they know that the Soviet Union put its signature to an agreement providing that the Soviet Union would favourably consider applications for travel for the purpose of allowing persons to enter or leave their territory temporarily and on a regular basis, at the option of the citizen, in order to visit members of families.

I have told hon. members about the Schafiroviches. I could have told them about a dozen elderly people in the Soviet Union who are seeking permission to visit their children in my constituency. There are others who wish to visit their children in other parts of this country, and still others who want to come and settle here, as is also provided for in this agreement. I do not know what the communists are trying to prove. I do not know what possible credit it does to the great revolution which they see themselves as leading when elderly people are now not allowed to be reunited with their children.

I suppose the most noble and powerful concept I have heard of is the notion of the family of man. We are one family on this planet. We have a responsibility to each other. I believe that the notion of the family of man, this dynamo in the world of ideas, calls upon us to condemn actions like this. I will not be satisfied if the Canadian government goes to Belgrade and fails to bring forward the dozens, indeed hundreds of cases of people who want to visit this country to see their children. I will be very disappointed if the Canadian government goes to that conference and fails to raise the Schafirovich case, as well as the hundreds of other cases where individuals are asking the Soviet Union for permission to visit relatives.

Let us forget about the declaration of human rights, Mr. Speaker—an impressive document, but perhaps it is too stale for the Soviet Union these days. Let us just talk about the Helsinki Agreement and the simple black and white undertakings made at that time to recognize the nature of the family of man.

I cannot say that I will be disappointed if the government prevents this resolution which I have proposed today from coming to a vote. I understand the difficulties it would entail at this late date to launch a parliamentary committee across the country to hear from all the Schafiroviches, not just the ones in my riding but those right across the country. I wish the government had of its own initiative, when this idea was first raised, organized that kind of participation by the Canadian people. But I am not going to criticize the government for that decision because I want to wait and see what it does at Belgrade when the Helsinki Agreement is reconsidered. I want to see what kind of evidence is put forward of the extent to which the signatory states to the Helsinki Agreement have observed their undertakings. I see my time has expired, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. R. Gordon L. Fairweather (Fundy-Royal): Mr. Speaker, I was glad to be asked to speak for my party on this motion. It says something about parliamentary time, as the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) has said, that events have caught up with the purport of his motion. However, I am not quite as discouraged as he seems to be about the Department of External Affairs and the list within that department of people who have been brought to the department's attention by members of parliament, and by families from one end of the country to the other. As a matter of fact the department gave a most extraordinarily frank statement to the external affairs committee on Basket III and the monitoring system that has been set up as a result of the Helsinki Agreement.

The particularly moving story that our colleague has reported concerning the mother of a constituent of his and his question about why the might of the Soviet Union should be brought to bear on a 70 year old widow seems to me a matter that we must continue to raise. We can all cite examples of this sort of thing.

The Soviet Union and its government is frightened by the concept of freedom. It is frightened by the concept that mothers can visit their sons in other parts of the world. It is frightened by the concept that a journalist can go to and fro within that country. Its satellite countries are busily locking up journalists, including Canadian journalists, who dare report on the move toward freedom. We cheer, as freedom lovers all over the world cheer, when we learn about the catalogue of heroes coming forth to speak out against totalitarian regimes. This is the antithesis of the Soviet system, that huge country known as the super power. It has, as senior officials of its government, parliamentarians who are the sycophants of that government. They are elected from a list and know no dissent. That group is unable to cope with the simple act of family reunification. I do not mean to be self-righteous, and God knows we have our difficulties, but it would not take a group of members of this House to see to it that sons can visit mothers and mothers visit sons, or families have an opportunity to get together.

I feel rather hopeful about Helsinki, if we keep the truth in front of the world. I think the human rights basket was made a condition of the eastern bloc being able to institutionalize the boundaries of the Second World War.

Members of parliament and agencies of government have to keep on monitoring occasions when undertakings in Basket III are not fulfilled by the signatories to this treaty. I am sad to think there will be many such occasions. Our hon. friend has given us an example and he has said there are many others. Parliamentarians from all parties have raised this from time to time. We should have the opportunity to think beyond the boundaries of our country occasionally. This is an illustration that we can do this once in a while.

We think of names like Valentyn Moroz, a man who is being held now because the Soviet Union cannot stand having a Christian preaching the gospel. Imagine the whole engine of the state of the Soviet Union quivering, and putting a man in jail because he professes his belief. I am somewhat optimistic about Basket III. We do not need, in espousing the cause of human rights, to overstate the case. The case is well stated in hundreds of precedents through the United Nations and other times in history when men have espoused the cause of human rights.

The Belgrade meeting next month is embarrassed by Basket III. The Soviet bloc do not want to discuss the things which our colleague has been discussing today. They would rather forget the people within their boundaries who cannot see their sons, and forget the people they have put in jail because of their beliefs. I am anxious for us not to get into the language of the Cold War, which was a particularly trying time for freedom lovers. I know we all have the perspective of looking back, but it seems to me some things were done in the western world which echoed the intolerance of the Soviets. It was not echoed in totality, but they did echo some of the statements and techniques which are now being used in the Soviet Union and its satellites. We should keep telling the truth.

Our hon. friend has introduced sections of the Helsinki Agreement into this debate. There are examples of human beings who have suffered because the agreement was not lived up to by others. We cannot continue stating the case without trying to roll back communism and going to the brink, and some people are prepared to go to the brink. We should not use the outlandish phrases of the fifties. The brink I am referring to is not only in intellectual terms but the brink of their thinking. Perhaps I have not put that too well. What I am trying to say is that we have the case on our side in the sense that the document is there. If the document is not fulfilled, we should tell the world so.

When the departmental officials and the minister go to Belgrade, they should take the entire Helsinki Agreement with them. We should never consider going to Belgrade without it. We cannot be selective in the western world and agree to look at parts of that agreement. We have to look at the complete agreement.

Despite Berlin walls, despite all the boundaries, and despite the suspicion of the eastern bloc, mankind's ingenuity in technological terms is soon going to surmount this in freedom of information. Whether the Soviet Union likes it or not, we are on the threshold of developing a system of receiving information via satellites. That is going to confound boundaries and confound suspicious people who head totalitarian regimes. Although families may not be reunited, in the future there will be information about the west—how the west lives, and how we care very deeply about the thousands of cases which are caught under the basket of the human rights provisions. People who want to find out the truth can get the truth in technological terms. We are in a curious situation because some technology seems to be the antithesis of humanity. However, humanity is well served in this case because all people do inhabit a global home, and technology is going to make this known to all the inhabitants of the earth. The inhabitants of the earth are going to know when a super power is unable to let a 70 year old woman visit her son.

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, hon. members will probably recall that the Final Act of Helsinki was signed on August 1, 1975. It is a unique document in many respects. It is the result of a process which, from the outset, the Soviet Union only meant to be a simple effort to obtain international recognition of the status quo in post-war Europe, but which led to a conference dealing with much broader problems: the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe. Not only did that conference reiterate established principles which acknowledged the possibility of changes in inter-state relations, but it also gave a humanitarian scope to those relations. It considered human rights and each state's treatment of its own citizens as issues which are not only negotiable, but also likely to influence international relations.

In the first basket of the final agreement, principle VII of the "Declaration on Principles Guiding Relations between Participating States" is particularly enlightening in that regard. I quote:

> The participating states recognize the universal significance of human rights and fundamental freedoms, respect for which is an essential factor for the peace, justice and well-being necessary to ensure the development of friendly relations and co-operation among themselves as among all states.

This principle was agreed upon thanks to the perseverance of the western nations, as well as the provisions contained in the third basket on "Co-operation in humanitarian and other fields", which deal with some specific aspects of human rights, as for example the free circulation of persons and the free diffusion of information. Hon. members will undoubtedly recall that the Canadian delegation in Geneva put forward the proposition which is the basis for the provision contained in the third basket about the reunification of families. One must not wonder why Canada is interested.

I wish to draw hon. members' attention on the content of the third basket, which is the subject of the motion before us. It does not contain the basic declaration of the final act, respecting human rights, which is to be found rather in principle VII of the first basket, as I already said.

As for the third basket, it deals with certain points which I enumerate in detail to avoid any confusion with the provisions of a more general nature contained in the first basket as far as human rights are concerned:

1. Human contacts namely:

(a) contacts and regular meetings on the basis of family ties;

(b) reunification of families;

(c) marriage between citizens of different states;

(d) travel for personal or professional reasons;

(e) improvement of conditions for tourism on an individual or collective basis;

(f) meetings among young people; and

(g) sport.

2. Information, namely:

(a) improvement of the circulation of, access to, and exchange of information (not only oral but also printed, filmed and broadcast information);

(b) co-operation in the field of information; and

(c) improvement of working conditions for journalists.

3. Culture, i.e. contacts and exchanges in the fields of cinema, theatre, music, opera, ballet, plastic and graphic arts, books, copyrights, translation, etc.

4. Education, i.e. fields of activity like science, foreign languages and civilizations, and teaching methods.

In view of the large interest those aspects of the final act have for the Canadian public, it is important to know what are its views on them. In fact, it is essential that the Canadian delegation to the meeting subsequent to the CSCE, to be held in Belgrade later this year, be fully aware of the Canadian public's position with regard to the CSCE and the third basket, and have all the factual information which can be provided to them by individuals as well as organizations.

The government has been receiving mail on that matter for quite some time already. Almost every letter relates to the way countries of Eastern Europe are behaving. In some cases, they do not provide for any precise information and they even go as far as accusing some countries of violating sections of the final act of Helsinki which do not even exist. What the Canadian delegation needs is precise, accurate and well documented information.

During a meeting with leaders of the allophone communities in Toronto held February last, the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) invited them to express their points of view and to meet senior officials in his department. Some verbal statements and written briefs have already been presented not only to high officials but to the minister himself. We are expecting some more.

The views of the allophone communities represent, of course, only a part of a larger group and the Department of External Affairs is open to any kinds of contributions. Incidentally, he has recently invited some representatives of the university community in Ottawa in order to hear their views on the application of the final act of Belgrade.

The department also receives on a regular basis some information on the compliance with the final act by other countries from other Canadian departments, from its missions abroad and from all those, including high officials, who took part in what is in fact a continuous process of consultations between the signatories to the CSCE and the final act. One can say in that regard that process was initiated right after Helsinki and was followed up since then on a continuous basis.

Right in our department, a small section was established a few years ago to get ready for the CSCE and co-ordinate the activities of various governmental services in that area. It also dealt with the way Canada is itself complying with the provisions of the Final Act.

[English]

In view of the extensive activity already being carried out by the government, there is some question whether there might not be a certain duplication of effort in having the standing committee take on a similar activity, especially at this time.

The motion under consideration should be considered in the context of the present heavy workload of parliamentary committees and the responsibilities they are already called upon to discharge before the end of the current session. I have been informed that at least 12 bills must be considered by six or seven committees in the next month. With such a load on hon. members' time and committee resources, a thorough and useful investigation by the standing committee would be difficult to hold in Ottawa, and next to impossible to hold in all parts of the country. I feel that the aims of the motion are laudable, but pragmatic questions of logistics must be considered.

Preparatory meetings begin in Belgrade in less than one month, on June 15, and the main meeting is scheduled for October of this year. We are dealing with very serious issues here. There is a real danger that committee hearings at this time, and within these time constraints, would be hasty, incomplete, and superficial.

The preparatory organization of the committee's work, the actual hearings, the verification of information, the follow-up work, and the necessary co-ordination with the Department of External Affairs—all these essentials steps make it doubtful that hearings envisaged under the motion could make the practical, positive contribution to our representations at Belgrade at which we should be aiming.

There is another very important point which I have not yet touched on, and that is the limited scope of the motion. I fully appreciate the reason why attention has been focused on Basket III, but it should be borne in mind that there are many subjects covered by the Final Act, and just as Canadians may be interested in only certain aspects of the document, others will be interested in different parts. We cannot afford to ignore those other parts. All the principles have to be read in conjunction with each other, and the three substantive baskets of the Final Act have to be read together, particularly as the commitment of the Canadian government is to the whole Final Act and not just to Basket III.

Hearings which concentrated only on Basket III would fail to come to grips will all the problems which will have to be faced at Belgrade. At the same time, if the standing committee were to do a proper job on the whole Final Act, the task it would have to take on would be an enormous one to try to accomplish within the time frame allowed. I put these thoughts forward for the consideration of the House.

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I shall take only a moment so that the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell) can still make his contribution. I should simply like to say that even though events since last November may have overtaken the precise suggestions contained in the motion put down by the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan), I want to join in congratulating him for having presented this motion and making possible the discussion which has taken place this afternoon.

Human rights everywhere in the world are of deep concern to all of us. It is a subject about which we must speak out when those rights are violated, and on behalf of my party I support very strongly the spirit and the intention which led the hon. member to put this motion down for debate today.

Hon. Martin O'Connell (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I shall be equally brief, and I thank the hon. member for allowing me to have a few moments. I see that the hon. member for Trinity (Miss Nicholson) would also like to speak.

I want to congratulate the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan) for bringing forward this motion. I regret that time has telescoped on us so much, but this Belgrade conference was only one of what surely must be many, and I think the idea that a reference be made to that committee is a sound one. I think too that we ought to state in this House that the Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) should include in the delegation going to Belgrade some representatives of the House of Commons so that we at the political level will know what is going on there, and so that we can assess the progress of our own efforts to pressure for progress in that respect. I think too that we should have representatives at Belgrade from non-governmental organizations, and that they in turn should include Canadian citizens who have come from those countries which are denying family reunifications and visits: the U.S.S.R., Czechoslovakia, Poland and others.

We are having our noses rubbed into the Helsinki Agreement, principally by the U.S.S.R. but not just by it. Why can we say that? Well, our government signed the agreement. That agreement included pledges that Canadian citizens would receive visits from their relatives behind the Iron Curtain and that those visits would be facilitated. I too have dozens of such cases in my office. I have not had one success as a result of my representations. We are having our noses rubbed into the agreement which we signed. We were party to it, and therefore I think it is in our interest to negotiate criteria at Belgrade which would ensure that we can respond to citizens. Therefore, I think we ought to be represented at Belgrade.

Mr. Speaker, I will yield to the hon. member for Trinity.

Miss Aideen Nicholson (Trinity): Mr. Speaker, since there are only a few minutes left before the time for this debate ends, I just want to say very briefly that I support the intent of the motion of the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Kaplan). Because the inclusion of Basket III in the Helsinki Final Act was a Canadian initiative, we have a particular responsibility to monitor it. Like other hon. members who have spoken, I hear daily from my constituents of countless examples of people who cannot come here for a simple family visit, about elderly and sick people who cannot be reunited, although that was a specific recommendation in the Final Act and about unconscionable interference with the mails, with gifts and with these simple matters which help families to keep in touch.

The hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) in his usual thoughtful way reminded us of the importance of conducting our negotiations at Belgrade in a way which is not counterproductive, which does not involve unnecessary confrontation, and which keeps the emphasis on the whole agreement, not just on Basket III. I think his point is well taken, but I also think Canadians know a lot about how to make a point firmly but politely. We can keep the door open for negotiation, but we must also state very clearly the cases and examples of blatant interference with the rights of people in their own countries which we know.

Some of the worst abuses of human rights now are perpetrated by governments against their own nationals, and while we cannot interfere with the internal matters of other countries, in the Helsinki Final Act some 35 governments have voluntarily taken a position and made a commitment. With this important agreement we can continue to expect governments to be accountable for that to which they have committed themselves.

Another important factor is the continuing involvement of parliamentarians, and I would like also to support the recommendation of the hon. member for Scarborough East (Mr. O'Connell) that members of parliament be closely involved with all the negotiations.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The time allotted for the consideration of private members' business has expired.

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I believe there would be unanimous agreement to revert to "Reports from Standing and Special Committees."

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY INTO ALLEGED BLACKLIST OF EMPLOYEES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to raise a question of urgent and pressing necessity. Having regard to the reports over the weekend in two Toronto based newspapers alleging conspiracies to obstruct the natural course of criminal investigation and justice, and in light of the multiplicity of unanswered questions relating to the various aspects of the extra parliamentary opposition concept, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That this House require the Prime Minister forthwith to initiate a full inquiry under the Inquiries Act.

And that such an inquiry shall be conducted allowing for the fullest disclosure to the judiciary of all documents or other pertinent evidence relating to this matter including such evidence which, under the Federal Court Act, has occasionally been withheld by the government for such reasons as national unity and Privy Council secrecy.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43, such a motion can be presented only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

PROPOSAL TO PROVIDE AID TO THOSE SUFFERING DAMAGE IN COBALT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, in view of the fire which swept through the town of Cobalt yesterday and considering that hundreds of people have been left homeless and without food and other necessities of life, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House urges the government to provide immediate relief within the terms of the existing federal-provincial cost-sharing arrangements to the people of Cobalt.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Presentation of such a motion, pursuant to Standing Order 43, can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

SUGGESTION GOVERNMENT UNDERTAKE STUDY OF SITUATION OF FRANCOPHONES OUTSIDE QUEBEC—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move a motion dealing with an important matter of pressing necessity.

Considering the alarming conditions of the French-speaking minority outside Quebec; considering the detailed report made by the association of that minority in its paper entitled: The Heirs of Lord Durham; considering that the government has remained silent following the cry of despair uttered by some 600,000 French Canadians outside Quebec who have already seen within a century 900,000 of their fellow-men irrevocably Anglicized; considering that the Prime Minister and other French-speaking ministers of Quebec ignore that small French-speaking minority to become concerned with the fate of an English-speaking minority in Quebec which is in no way threatened among 250 million English-speaking individuals, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier):

That the government undertake a detailed study of the conditions of French-speaking Canadians outside Quebec to grant them, through the various provincial governments, the same rights and privileges given pursuant to Bill 1 under consideration at the Quebec National Assembly.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

MULTICULTURALISM

SUGGESTED RESEARCH INTO THIRD LANGUAGE BROADCASTING—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Gus Mitges (Grey-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, I, too, rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the fact that there is widespread interest among ethnic groups all across Canada in contributing in a more positive way to our multicultural society, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski):

That research studies be undertaken by a group comprised of representatives of the CBC, the CRTC, the Secretary of State and the Minister of State for Multiculturalism to determine a formula for a much greater input in third language broadcasting in Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I have reservations as to the urgency of this matter. However, the provisions of Standing Order 43 would, in any case, require unanimous consent before the motion could be put. Is there unanimous consent?

MINISTER'S KNOWLEDGE OF ALLEGEDLY ILLEGAL ACTIVITIES OF SECURITY SERVICE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43 arising from the current investigation into the role of the security service of the RCMP in relation to the burglary and fire on the premises of Praxis Corporation in Toronto, and, as well, the burglary of the premises of the Quebec Newspaper L'Agence de Presse Libre du Québec in connection with which an RCMP officer has now been charged after, initially, having been put in charge of the investigation. I would therefore move, seconded by the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle):

That the Solicitor General make a statement on motions informing the House clearly and unequivocally whether or not activities such as these were carried on with the knowledge and consent of the responsible minister at the relevant time or whether actions of this type by the RCMP security services were, and are, carried on without the knowledge, guidance and consent of the Solicitor General.

In either case, Mr. Speaker, an explanation is owed to the House.

Mr. Speaker: In order for such a motion to be presented the unanimous consent of the House is required. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No!

PUBLIC SERVICE

SUGGESTED COMPENSATION TO THOSE IDENTIFIED AS BEING ON BLACKLIST—ALLEGED ADDITIONS TO THE LIST

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. In the light of the revelation of the identity of 21 persons who were named by the former solicitor general as being subversives actively engaged in planning the overthrow of the government with the object of replacing it with an even more radical alternative, and in the light of the Prime Minister's previous statement that none of those persons has suffered from being on the EPO list, will the right hon. gentleman now set in motion a process designed to prevent further hardship and harassment, and, as well, offer these persons, now publicly exposed, some form of restitution and redress. Further, Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister undertake to ensure that in situations similar to that of Mr. Walter Rudnicki, immediate reinstatement into the public service is offered?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I believe I dealt with that question in previous weeks.

Mr. Oberle: The Prime Minister had not dealt with this question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. My impression is that in fact the question, in almost exactly the same words, has been answered previously. However, I am prepared to listen to the supplementary question.

An hon. Member: He did not answer; he avoided it.

Mr. Oberle: I should like to ask the right hon. gentleman if he is sufficiently familiar with all the aspects of the black list, with which he was not previously familiar, and all the matters relating to the EPO scandal, and is he now prepared to place on the record of the House of Commons those names which were not part of the raw intelligence supplied to a former solicitor general but were added to the list by someone in the solicitor general's office?

An hon. Member: That's a new one.

Mr. Trudeau: That is a new one, Mr. Speaker, and I will have to see if these facts are as fanciful as were the others.

Mr. Oberle: Mr. Speaker, could I ask the Prime Minister whether he is expecting us to believe today that he has not yet been briefed about this whole matter, that he has not looked at the list of names which was exposed over the weekend in a Toronto publication, and that he has not firmed up the position of the government on how to address itself to this very grave and serious situation affecting the lives and careers of some very innocent and unsuspecting Canadians?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

MINISTERIAL RESPONSIBILITY FOR OPERATION OF SECURITY SERVICES—KNOWLEDGE OF MINISTER OF ALLEGEDLY ILLEGAL ACTIVITIES

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I should also like to address a question to the right hon. gentleman and try to elicit from him whether or not he takes the position that the Solicitor General or his government should take the responsibility for the activities of the security services of the RCMP, or is it his position that this organization operates on its own, acting on its own discretion, without any obligation to the government to keep it informed of their operations?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the principle of ministerial responsibility applies in this case as in all others.

Mr. MacKay: I am reassured by that answer, Mr. Speaker. I should like to ask the Prime Minister if he has been made aware of whether or not the then solicitor general has been briefed and was fully aware of some of the activities of the security service of the RCMP and if in fact he was, that is one thing, and if he was not, that is equally serious. Can the Prime Minister give us some more information on the knowledge of the responsible minister pursuant to the doctrine of ministerial responsibility at the time?

Mr. Trudeau: Would the hon. member care to indicate to what particular incident he is referring? I could tell him then whether the minister has been briefed.

Mr. MacKay: I would like to refer the right hon. gentleman to two incidents which have often been discussed in the House, the burglary into l'Agence de Presse Libre in Quebec, and as well the incident which is now under investigation in Toronto where the Metropolitan Police are reportedly on the brink of laying charges against the RCMP for their activities there?

Mr. Trudeau: In the latter case I do remember having information some weeks ago that the RCMP had received information from a newspaper editor and that they were in no way involved in the break in. I believe the Solicitor General gave that answer in the House. In the first case, if my memory serves me, the Solicitor General indicated that he had been briefed about the subject some time subsequent to its occurrence but the matter was before the courts. I do not know whether it is still there. If it is, I feel justified in not commenting on it at the time. I will see where the matter is now.

MINISTER'S POSITION ON DEPARTMENTAL FORECAST OF LEVEL OF UNEMPLOYMENT IN QUEBEC IN 1978—FORECASTS FOR OTHER PROVINCES

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): My question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration and it arises from the publication called "Manpower and Immigration Review, Quebec Region" which has recently come out and in which a forecast is made for the province of Quebec that the number of new jobs for 1978 will be less than the number of people coming on the job market, and for increased unemployment at an average of 9.4 per cent for the year 1978. I should like to ask the minister, since this is the first time, to my knowledge, that his department has made a public forecast on unemployment levels for a region, whether he would confirm that he stands by this forecast of increased unemployment for the province of Quebec for 1978 and if so, what does he plan to do about it?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, before I confirm or deny anything I think I should read the report to determine its authorship and its authenticity, and to determine what is the gist of the report put out by that group.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I can attest to its authorship. It comes from the minister's department, but given some of the answers of the minister in the House, I am not at all sure of its authenticity. However, I would like to ask the minister most seriously to look into this and to report back to the House why forecast unemployment figures were given, to my knowledge for the first time publicly, which show an expected increase in unemployment in the province of Quebec. Related to that, if we are now going to have this information made available about one province in Canada, will the minister assure us that forecasts for other regions will be made public, and will the minister produce the figures in relation to that soon?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, I will look into the matter.

MANITOBA'S REQUEST FOR FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL MEETING ON ECONOMIC PROBLEMS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary question is for the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister tell the House if he has responded to the telex he received from Premier Schreyer on Friday in which the premier of the province of Manitoba requested the Prime Minister to organize a meeting of the first ministers of Canada in the month of June to discuss all the problems facing the national economy, but in particular to co-ordinate efforts on job-creating programs for the coming fall and winter?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker.

BILINGUALISM

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON REPORT ENTITLED "THE HEIRS OF LORD DURHAM"

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister.

Is the Prime Minister aware of a report made by the Association of Francophones outside Quebec entitled: "The Heirs of Lord Durham"; if so, what steps does he intend to take to remedy the alarming situation which is described in this report and in which this very minority finds itself?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, yes, I have had the opportunity to get acquainted with this document and I indicated my intention to meet this group at a time convenient to the two parties; I hope it will be before the end of June. I should add that several government members have spoken to me about this and they are very much concerned about this problem.

POSSIBILITY OF OTHER PROVINCES TREATING FRANCOPHONES SAME AS QUEBEC TREATS ANGLOPHONES

Mr. René Matte (Champlain): Mr. Speaker, would the right hon. Prime Minister be willing to press the various provincial governments to give their respective French-speaking minorities the same rights and privileges granted the English-speaking minority in Quebec by Bill 1, which is now under study at Quebec's National Assembly?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I take the liberty of reminding the hon. member that a great number of initiatives have been taken by the federal government in that area. The hon. member should remember, for instance, the proposal we had submitted to all provinces in 1971, at Victoria, under which the provinces themselves would be forced by the constitution to respect the two official languages as the federal government does. The hon. member seems to be stroking his beard as if he were perplexed! If he wants, I can send him that document and he will see that the federal government had foreseen that situation as far back as 1971 and had made extremely courageous proposals, which were not accepted by the provinces, as the hon. member knows.

Mr. Matte: Mr. Speaker, with all due respect to the right hon. Prime Minister, from time to time my beard is a source of inspiration to me; that is why I should like to put a third question to him. I feel he is evading the point of my question. He knows full well that the proposed Victoria charter dealt with federal administration. Now, I was asking the right hon. Prime Minister if he would be willing to exert pressures on the provinces to bring their governments to give Francophone minorities the same rights that are being granted the Anglophone minority in Quebec by Bill 1 now before the Quebec National Assembly? It has nothing to do with federal administration but deals with a matter of provincial jurisdiction.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I see the hon. member has somewhat forgotten the 1971 Victoria document which proposed specifically to the provinces that they have constitutional obligations just as the federal government wanted them for itself, through the constitution, so that all levels of government would be obliged, by the constitution, to put both languages, English and French, on an equal footing. The hon. member should study that document: he might then join us in our efforts.

INQUIRY OF THE MINISTRY

Mr. G. W. Baldwin (Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I should like to pursue with a reluctant witness opposite the issue raised by my friends the hon. members for Prince George-Peace River and the hon. member for Central Nova. In light of the exchanges between them and the right hon. gentleman, and in light of the fact that the Prime Minister told me last February that he was not particularly interested in how the RCMP got its evidence, may I ask if he accepts the philosophy of Richard Nixon as reported in a newspaper last Saturday, that burglaries and other crimes are not illegal if approved by the administration?

ALLEGATION SECURITY SERVICE RECEIVED DOCUMENTS CONNECTED WITH BURGLARY AT PRAXIS CORPORATION—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I should like to follow on the questions put to the Prime Minister. In answer to the hon. member for Central Nova the Prime Minister said that he had been briefed some weeks ago regarding documents from Praxis Corporation and he had been told that they had come into the possession of the RCMP through a newspaper editor. Yesterday in the morning newspapers, more than 30 hours ago, a very serious accusation was published to the effect that the security services of the RCMP had received original documents from a source other than that newspaper editor. Is the Prime Minister telling the House of Commons that even though this very serious accusation against the security services of the RCMP was made and published more than 30 hours ago, he has not looked into that accusation? If he has looked into the accusation, can he tell the House whether the facts as published are verified by his own investigation?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I have been informed that the Solicitor General's office has looked into that allegation by the newspaper. I have not had a report from the Solicitor General's office but I think perhaps the Acting Solicitor General may have something to add.

Hon. Ron Basford (Acting Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, as Acting Solicitor General I can report that the RCMP was not engaged in the break-in or in the theft of records from that corporation and as the press reports indicated, the Metropolitan Toronto Police are investigating the matter and the RCMP is co-operating with them.

Mr. Clark: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question for the Acting Solicitor General or the Prime Minister. Did any document come into the possession of the RCMP that is related in any way to Praxis Corporation from a source other than the newspaper editor?

Mr. Basford: Yes, Mr. Speaker, but because that matter is under investigation by the Metropolitan Toronto Police I cannot report further.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE GOVERNMENT WOULD NOT CONDONE OR AUTHORIZE ILLEGAL ACTIVITY BY SECURITY SERVICE

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question for the Prime Minister. Would the Prime Minister tell the House now, unequivocally, that his administration would not condone or authorize any illegal intelligence activity by the security service of the RCMP or any other federal agency?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker.

POST OFFICE

EFFORTS TO AVOID STRIKE—PROPOSED PUBLIC INQUIRY OR COMMITTEE STUDY OF OPERATIONS

Hon. W. G. Dinsdale (Brandon-Souris): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Postmaster General. Now that an impasse has developed in the contract negotiations with the Canadian Union of Postal Workers when negotiations have hardly begun and it is apparent that the post office management and the CUPW are on a collision course that will lead to yet another paralyzing strike that will seriously damage an economy that is already in a fragile state, will the Postmaster General inform the House what action he is taking to diffuse the issue rather than shouting across the barricade in a continuing dialogue of the deaf?

Mr. Hees: What are you telling them?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, the interpretation the hon. gentleman has placed on the state of relations is inaccurate. I hope we will not have a postal strike. There is provision in the Public Service Staff Relations Act which permits a third party determination of the causes for the impasse and we are trying to accelerate that hearing so that we can resume negotiations.

• (1430)

Mr. Dinsdale: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Will the Postmaster General consult with his colleague, the President of the Treasury Board, the minister responsible for Post Office employees, in an attempt to bring order out of the present chaos of the Post Office's industrial relations? Would he also give sober second thoughts to neutralizing the conflict, by accepting the motion proposed by the official opposition to resurrect the type of committee which dealt with the Finkelman report on employee-employer relations in the public service; or at least will he accept the CUPW proposal to have the whole matter considered by a royal commission?

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. gentleman had been serious about his motion, perhaps he would have attached a vote to it.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Paproski: Surely you can do better than that.

TRANSPORT

CROWSNEST PASS RATES—ALLEGATION MINISTER SAID HALL EXCEEDED TERMS OF REFERENCE BY RECOMMENDING RETENTION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker,—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am glad I have the attention of the Minister of Transport, to whom I wish to direct my question. What was the basis on which he made a statement to the effect that the Hall Grain Handling and Transportation Commission, in recommending retention of the Crowsnest Pass rates as they affect producers, exceeded the terms of reference under which the commission was set up?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I thank the right hon. gentleman for giving me the chance to clarify that press report, as I did not indicate that any such reference to grain rates was beyond the terms of reference of the commission. I was asked the direct question, whether I thought the commission had referred to anything which was beyond its terms of reference, and I said I found it difficult to include the Arctic railway in those narrow terms, and perhaps the people appearing before the commission might have canvassed the question of freight rates more fully if they had known the breadth with which the commission was approaching those questions. But that reference did not apply to the grain rates themselves. I must say that on every occasion I have emphasized that nothing in comments about matters being outside the terms of reference should take away from the fact that I placed great confidence in the Hall commission on its appointment, and that the commission on the basis of many public hearings across this country has brought forward a fine report, from which we shall be able to work effectively in future.

Mr. Diefenbaker: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I feel sure that the semi-judicial approbation of the minister will be widely accepted and approved. I suggest that, in the questions and answers which appeared in the press, there was no reference to the railroad running to the north. Has the minister not read the prepared statement of Mr. Justice Emmett Hall, to the effect he was surprised that the minister stated he had exceeded his jurisdiction in making recommendations about the Crowsnest rates? Does the minister now say "I did not criticize the recommendation; I was misunderstood. I did not use the proper language in referring to the northern railway and I never intended to carry on the vendetta against the Crowsnest Pass rates as I have in the past."

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Yes or no, Otto.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in my earlier answer, there was an erroneous press report published, and I made no statement in relation to the terms of reference or the Crowsnest rates. I make that statement flatly and clearly. If Mr. Justice Hall reacted to the press report, I can understand his reasons, but I am sure he will know from the answers I have given today to the right hon. gentleman that there was no basis for that report.

ENERGY

AVAILABILITY OF SEISMIC DATA ON OIL AND GAS FIELDS OFF COAST OF LABRADOR

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I direct a question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. The magazine Canadian Petroleum in its issue of May, 1977, states that detailed seismic data which could reveal substantial oil and gas fields off the east coast of Labrador and Newfoundland is being withheld from Canadian oil companies and that this data fills a large room at the Shearwater armed forces base near Halifax. The data was allegedly obtained through the surveillance of our coast line by long-range Argus aircraft using avionics equipment of the Department of National Defence. My question is this: Can the minister state whether this report is correct and if there is such valuable data available, gathered as a result of defence patrols, why has it not been made available to the oil and gas industry and to the provinces?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have neither seen nor heard of the report to which the hon. gentleman refers but will be pleased to look into it.

DATE ON WHICH ARCTIC GAS MUST BE BROUGHT ON STREAM—MINISTER'S POSITION—EFFECT OF ARCTIC GAS ON PRICE OF ALBERTA GAS

Mr. Cyril Symes (Sault Ste. Marie): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Since the National Energy Board has not completed its report on whether Canada will need natural gas from the Arctic in the next ten years, does the minister still hold to his opinion, as expressed on the CTV network on Sunday, that Arctic gas must be brought on stream in the next decade?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member is referring to a National Energy Board report updating the natural gas situation, he is referring to a report I have not seen.

Mr. Broadbent: Listen to the question, Alastair.

Mr. Symes: Mr. Speaker, I was referring to National Energy Board deliberations, not yet published, on different proposals for pipelines from the Arctic. I suggest that the minister was anticipating the report in saying that in his opinion the gas would be needed within a decade. My supplementary question is this. Since gas from the Arctic will be at least 100 per cent more expensive than existing domestic supplies and since it is unlikely that Alberta, to moderate future gas prices, will agree to blend the price of Arctic and southern gas, does the minister not agree that if Arctic gas is brought south, Canadians will in the next decade more than likely pay double the price they now pay for existing Alberta gas?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, as I explained to the hon. member in the standing committee this morning, work is at present going on with respect to what options concerning a roll-in arrangement would be open to us if gas from the north were to be brought to southern markets. That work has not yet been completed. The whole question involves, I suppose, the difference between Alberta and northern gas wellhead values on the one hand, and the transportation tariff as between the north and the south on the other.

HOUSING

POSSIBILITY OF INCREASING FUNDS FOR RRAP PROGRAM FOR QUEBEC TO ALLEVIATE UNEMPLOYMENT

Mr. Adrien Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct a question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

In view of the fact that unemployment in the province of Quebec is rising sharply, and that the construction sector is very important this time of the year, as it generally provides a great many jobs, could the minister advise the House whether all the funds made available by his department to the province of Quebec under RRAP have been used up and, if so, whether additional funds will be made available to meet the constant demand in the housing construction and rehabilitation in the province of Quebec?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Nearly all the funds made available have been used up. As I indicated in the House, RRAP proves very popular and most beneficial not only in Quebec, but also in all the other provinces. As to whether more funds should be made available, I should like to remind the hon. member that within the budgetary restraints of the Canadian government, this would be difficult, as the total for this year is already three times greater than last year.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask a supplementary question.

Since the minister has given a positive answer, would he tell the House whether or not the province of Quebec informed him on the number of additional municipalities which have filed requests under the program RRAP from April 1, 1977 and, if so, do these additional requests represent considerable expenditures on the part of the federal government so it has to consider them before giving its approval and would the minister recommend to his cabinet colleagues that more funds be granted in answer to those requests because it would be a tremendous step towards job creation and to satisfy housing needs in the province of Quebec?

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, in reply to the first question of the hon. member, I must say that I got no information from the government of Quebec to designate other municipalities in that province. In that regard, there were no additional applications from Quebec authorities. As to being prepared to urge my colleagues to increase funds for RRAP, of course I am, Mr. Speaker. However, such an application has already been made and that is why the budget allocated this year for RRAP is three times higher than last year's. Since that program is so exceptionally popular and in view of the urgent need for rehabilitating certain homes in Canada, I am confident that again next year we will be able to increase the budget to meet urgent needs in Canada.

FIRE

REQUEST FOR AID TO THOSE SUFFERING DAMAGE IN COBALT—POSSIBILITY OF PROVIDING PORTABLE HOUSING UNITS

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. With the possible exception of the Ontario Liberal member for Bruce-Grey, who was the only member in the House to refuse to give unanimous consent to a motion a little while ago—

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please.

Mr. Lawrence: I am sure members on all sides of the House would have liked to extend a warm hand of sympathy to the people of Cobalt for the tragedy that occurred there over the weekend.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lawrence: Can the Prime Minister indicate if, under the existing federal agreement with regard to tragedies and disasters of this scope, there was any federal initiative or leadership this morning to put into full force and effect the terms of that agreement?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of that arrangement, as the hon. member knows, the federal government has set the criteria under which federal payments will be made when a request has been received from the provincial government. As far as I know, there has not at the moment been a request from the government of Ontario in this regard. The point has been made to me by several members from northern Ontario. I will follow this very closely.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary is to the Prime Minister. Because the real human element in the Cobalt area is the loss of hundreds of homes and the subsequent homeless plight of at least one third of the population, will the Prime Minister take under consideration an immediate inventory of all of the federal departments and ministries, their agencies and the contractors for the federal government with respect to portable housing units? My understanding is that there are numbers of these in northeastern Ontario that might be available to be used for emergency housing in the area. If he has not already acted on it, will the Prime Minister take that suggestion into consideration?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, events like this are always brought to the attention of the cabinet by members on this side. Indeed, as with the Minister of Finance, it has been raised with me by members of the area.

Mr. Alexander: Why did your members say no to the motion?

Mr. Trudeau: I asked that we consider every possible action. Here I must reiterate what the Minister of Finance has said. There is a formula whereby the federal government is prepared to assist provinces where this type of event occurs. It would be normal for the province of Ontario, if it is as interested as the hon. member, to make a request to the federal government for assistance in this particular case.

Mr. Lawrence: I am sure, as the Prime Minister and his minister appreciates, that agreement covers only financial arrangements. We are dealing here with something more than money. They are badly in need of housing and badly in need of manpower. There are National Defence units available. My question to the Prime Minister is simply this: Will he take a personal, close look at the whole situation to see what else the federal government can do in terms of this human tragedy in the town of Cobalt.

Mr. Trudeau: I already indicated, Mr. Speaker, that this is being done by the government.

MANPOWER

FIRE DAMAGE IN COBALT—ACTION TO PROVIDE AID

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Possibly the minister responsible for housing would care to listen. I wish to ask either minister whether this particular matter is within their knowledge. In particular, is the Minister of Manpower and Immigration seeing to it that his whole department, together with the department of the minister responsible for housing, is involved with this extreme tragedy? Can he advise whether he is even interested in this matter. If so, what has he done about it?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, as one who spent considerable time in northern Ontario, and I am familiar with this particular community, I had a particular interest when I read the press reports. I immediately instructed my officials to look into the possibility of using the emergency fund under Canada Works. There is money that is already committed there for Canada Works projects that we may reroute under the emergency program. There is no shortage of concern on this side. The Postmaster General this morning raised once again with me, being a former native of northern Ontario, what my department is doing in this field.

HOUSING

FIRE DAMAGE IN COBALT—STEPS TO PROVIDE HOUSING UNITS

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Mr. Speaker, I will direct my supplementary question to the minister responsible for housing. I believe he heard my question. I know he is concerned about the fact that countless hundreds of people are now without housing as a result of this tremendous tragedy. What steps has he taken in order to see that the suffering has been relieved considerably?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I can report that Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation North Bay manager has been in contact with the chairman of the local housing authority to ascertain what can be done. There is a possibility of helping with temporary housing. Our CMHC men will be on the temporary housing committee. I can assure the hon. member that everything that can be done by CMHC will gladly be done.

AIRPORTS

MIRABEL AND DORVAL—REASON REVENUE NOT RECEIVED FROM HOST RENT-A-CAR

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister of Transport. Can the minister inform the House whether his department is receiving revenues on a monthly basis from Host Rent-a-Car at Quebec, Mirabel and Dorval airports, and if not, why not?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in several cases there are problems of the holding of a licence from the provincial authorities that have not been cleared up at this point.

Mr. Mazankowski: In light of the minister's answer, may I ask whether the reason that the revenues are not being received at this particular time is the fact that this particular company failed to comply with the licencing requirements of the province of Quebec?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I did not use the expression failed to comply. I would say, "has not yet received a licence".

ENERGY

ACTION TO EXPEDITE SECOND REPORT OF BERGER COMMISSION

Mr. Alan Martin (Scarborough West): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the importance of having all significant evidence before the government prior to making a judgment on the northern pipeline matter, will the minister do all that he can to ensure a speedy delivery of a report on the second phase of the Berger inquiry which will deal with the conditions that should prevail in the event a pipeline is to be built down the Mackenzie Valley in the immediate years ahead?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I understand the hon. member's concern about this matter. I am not at all sure that I am in a position to in any way accelerate the work of Mr. Berger. Mr. Berger, of course, is not reporting to me. He is reporting to my colleague, the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development.

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION

NEWFOUNDLAND—PROPOSAL TO EXTEND SERVICES TO VARIOUS PARTS OF PROVINCE—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion. Last week in the House the minister indicated that he will be making a decision soon with regard to extending some services by having offices of his department opened in other parts of the province. I am referring particularly to the disastrous situation which will occur as the result of the impending closure of the Labrador linerboard mill. Has the minister made that decision? Will he keep in mind the urgency of the matter and give me some information?

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, I am keeping in mind all the suggestions that I have been receiving from members of this House. I am aware that there should be an extension of our services in different provinces. However, I have not reached a decision.

MANPOWER

CLOSURE OF LABRADOR LINERBOARD MILL—ACTION TO AID AFFECTED EMPLOYEES

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I wish to direct my supplementary question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Some time ago the minister indicated that in addition to putting into effect the emergency response part of Canada Works program that his officials would deal on an urgent basis with the situation which will occur as a result of the impending layoff of some 2,100 people. I wonder whether the minister could now report something positive in this regard.

● (1450)

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, all of the facilities of both CMC and the UIC were put into operation. We have a temporary on-site CMC registration outfit which was put into place on May 16. Our mobility programs are in fact also available. Meetings are being held with company, union and provincial officials to see whether we can dovetail some operations to help individuals who have been laid off.

CHARLOTTETOWN—REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT ON NEW TERMINAL

Mr. Heath Macquarrie (Hillsborough): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the Minister of Transport whether he can advise if discussions between his department and officials of the P.E.I. government regarding the over-all plan for the Charlottetown airport have now been completed, and can he indicate the present pattern of progress on the construction of a new terminal and other essential ingredients in this important air transportation element?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, discussions have been going very well according to my last report. I will get an up-to-date report today to see where we stand and I will let the hon. member know.

SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY

VICTORIA ASTROPHYSICAL OBSERVATORY AND HERTZBERG INSTITUTE—POSSIBLE APPOINTMENT OF MR. VANDENBERGH AS DIRECTOR

Mr. Donald W. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed, with your indulgence, to the Minister of Science and Technology or possibly to the President of the Treasury Board. I wonder whether either minister would be prepared to say if a Professor Sidney Vandenbergh has been or is about to be appointed director of the Astrophysical Observatory in Victoria and/or the Hertzberg Institute?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Minister of State for Science and Technology): Mr. Speaker, I would have to look into that for the hon. member.

Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. While the minister is looking into that matter would he inquire whether there is any possibility that Professor Vandenbergh has made it a condition of his acceptance of this appointment that he might bring with him an American astrophysicist rather than employing a Canadian one?

HEALTH

SACCHARIN BAN—REASON PURE SACCHARIN NOT USED IN TESTS—POSSIBILITY OF CHANGE IN BAN

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. A press release from the minister's department recently has thrown into question the credibility of the previous research study on saccharin which led to the banning of saccharin from the point of view that it is now not clear whether it was saccharin or impurities in the saccharin which caused cancer in the bladders of rats. Can the minister indicate to the House why it was not ensured that pure saccharin was used in the first place; and secondly, can he now clarify what the position of the saccharin ban is and what work is being done to determine whether it was indeed the saccharin or the impurities which caused the problem?

[Translation]

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, to conduct an adequate scientific study the saccharin which is presently put on the market by various manufacturers had to be used. Those tests indicated that a determining factor seemed to be the impurities in the saccharin put on the market. The hon. member knows that the elimination of impurities from a product is not a simple and easy task. I am informed that it is undoubtedly impossible to eliminate completely such impurities and at the same time manufacture and put on the market a product which is competitive in terms of prices with other products already on the market.

[English]

Mr. Yewchuk: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the new findings, I wonder whether the minister will clarify for the House whether he intends to make any changes in the recently imposed saccharin ban?

[Translation]

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, no new factor would justify changing the policy formulated in this regard.

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

EXCESSIVE SALARY INCREASES GRANTED SOME EXECUTIVES—REQUEST FOR REPORT

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. A week ago yesterday I asked his parliamentary secretary some questions about reports to the effect that a number of top executives had had salary increases last year, some ranging from $10,000 to $22,000 a year and one as high as $60,000 a year. In my question I asked whether the government would take serious steps to see that the policy of restraint applies to those at the top the same as it does to wage earners and others in the middle and lower income brackets. I was promised a report within a few days; does the minister now have that report?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Yes, Mr. Speaker. This matter was discussed with the Anti-Inflation Board immediately after the hon. member's question and the board pointed out that under its instructions from parliament it could not, of course, reveal the details of any particular individual but that, in general terms, it had scrutinized the increased executive compensation. The board pointed out that the executive group in a corporation is treated as a single unit and that the average is taken for the unit as a whole. Therefore, I was reminded that if a particular individual received a substantial increase, such increase would, of course, mean a much lesser increase on the part of others in the particular firm.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Would the minister ask the Anti-Inflation Board specifically whether, in a case where one executive received a $60,000 increase, all the other executives had such low increases that the average was not over $2,400?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I could reconfirm that but my understanding is that that would be a criterion that the Anti-Inflation Board would apply.

[Mr. Lalonde.]

AIRPORTS

OTTAWA—INQUIRY AS TO PLANS FOR IMPROVEMENT

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, my question is asked in all political innocence of the Minister of Transport, and he would know what innocence is all about. With regard to airports, is there any plan within the next 10 or 15 years to bring the Ottawa international airport up to some of the standards which existed at other airports across Canada at least 10 years ago?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, there has been a good deal of planning done in connection with the Ottawa airport. I have been looking closely at the question, although obviously issues of fiscal restraint are present in this regard as well. At least I suppose it is some consolation to those of us who have constituents arriving here from other parts of the country that they sometimes appreciate the fact that they have better facilities at home than we have here in the national capital.

TRANSPORT

POSSIBILITY OF MEETING WITH WESTERN PREMIERS ON HALL REPORT

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the right hon. Prime Minister. In view of the importance of the recommendations of the Hall commission report and its significant consequences to the economic well-being of western Canadians, has the right hon. Prime Minister had any discussion or contact relating to the report with western premiers and, if not, is it the intention of the government to meet with them shortly?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this matter has been dealt with by the Minister of Transport, and I intend to let him continue dealing with it in conjunction with his opposite numbers in the provinces.

POSSIBILITY OF DANGER TO PERSON WHO GAVE INFORMATION ABOUT DOCUMENTS FROM PRAXIS CORPORATION

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct my question to the Minister of Justice who apparently has briefed himself with respect to the break-in in 1970 of the Praxis Corporation. In light of the minister's response to the Leader of the Opposition, namely that information was in the hands of the RCM Police who received it from a newspaper editor, may I ask the minister whether or not the informant in question who gave the information to the RCMP is concerned about his identity being revealed? Because apparently he faces the possibility of being killed if his identity is in fact publicly revealed.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I have not been briefed on that particular point.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker, which I will direct to the Prime Minister, who was not originally briefed but who apparently had an interview with the Minister of Supply and Services, the former Solicitor General. In view of the fact that the Prime Minister has now spoken to the Minister of Supply and Services, does he want to change any of the answers given to questions earlier on?

Would the minister use her good offices to expedite the processing of a formal application made by the CBC to her department to erect an antenna near Vernon, B.C., in order to bring full CBC radio programming via FM to the north Okanagan?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, may I thank the hon. member for giving notice of his question, which I am able to answer straight away. I understand a proper location has now been found and we will be able to process the application very soon.

AGRICULTURE

DATE OF DECISION ON ESTABLISHMENT OF CHICKEN MARKETING BOARD

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture and relates to the status of the proposed national chicken marketing board. Can the minister indicate today whether a final decision has been made, and if so, when will the announcement of this board's establishment be made?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, if I heard the question correctly, the hon. member asked whether a decision has been made about a national broiler marketing board. There has been no final decision made.

Mr. Wise: Mr. Speaker, was this matter not to be considered today by cabinet committee?

Mr. Whelan: Soon, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Alexander: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Far be it for me to single out any member from either side of the House when it comes to yeas or nays with respect to Standing Order 43. At this time my only question is that I was listening very carefully—

Mr. Whelan: You are making politics.

Mr. Alexander: The Minister of Agriculture said that I am making politics. He has not even heard my statement yet.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Alexander: Just take it easy. I am trying to find out what the procedure is around here. Mr. Speaker, with all due respect, I was under the impression that one would have to hear either the "Yeas" or the "Nays". I did not hear a thing, so I would have to assume a person, or persons, nodded their heads in the affirmative or in the negative. In order that we on this side of the House will know what is happening in this place, would Your Honour kindly give a ruling as to whether a nod of the head in the affirmative or in the negative is the same as saying "Yea" or "Nay"? I think we must be apprised of Your Honour's ruling in this regard.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Bruce-Grey on a point of order.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

Some hon. Members: Order!

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I will deal with the point of order first. The hon. member for Hamilton West has raised, by way of a point of order, whether or not the Chair ought to hear a negative voice in respect to an application pursuant to Standing Order 43. As I understand it, the application of that rule is that any person may ask the unanimous consent of the House, pursuant to the Standing Order, that the House set aside whatever other business there is and debate some other motion. The presentation of a motion for debate, pursuant to that Standing Order, requires unanimous consent. When the Chair finds the application is within the terms of the order, I put the question. If I hear—and I repeat the word "Hear"—a negative voice, then I consider unanimous consent has been withheld. I must hear a negative voice.

The hon. member for Bruce-Grey.

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege which pertains to the accusation made by the hon. member for Northumberlnd-Durham that I was the one who gave a negative voice. I do not believe I did. I was talking to—

An hon. Member: You are not sure?

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): I was talking to the parliamentary secretary to the House leader at that time. I certainly would not indicate that, because I believe the people of Cobalt should receive every possible assistance at this time.

Mr. Paproski: Who was the culprit?

Mr. Douglas (Bruce-Grey): It has been mentioned by the Minister of Finance that no application for assistance has been received from the provincial government, which is the proper route for such an application to take.

Mr. Goodale: Apologize.

Mr. Paproski: Never.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege. I distinctly saw the hon. member shake his head very vigorously, in a negative fashion.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lawrence: If the hon. member for Bruce-Grey says it had nothing to do with the motion before the House, I unreservedly accept that. Out of the corner of your eye, sir, you saw, or heard, the hon. member do the same thing. Therefore, you may have been under the same misapprehension as me, that the hon. member for Bruce-Grey was putting a negative point of view to that motion.

Mr. Paproski: Let us put the motion again.

Mr. Lawrence: If the hon. member says that he was not objecting, and I am sure there was no one else objecting, the motion should be put again. My feeling is there was no negative objection from any member on either side of the House to the motion put.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: I never heard a thing.

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege. I, as the mover of the motion, indeed thought the hon. member for Bruce-Grey was the person who said "No". I welcome, and entirely accept, his answer. But I should respectfully like to suggest, if there is unanimous agreement, that we revert back, and I would be delighted to move the motion again under the circumstances. I would also hope we would get unanimous agreement for this very important concern to the people of northern Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: For the benefit of the House, I would like to clarify the fact that I did not, and I never do, accept a negative voice on a motion unless I hear it.

Mr. Alexander: The Liberals said "No". Let us have the motion again.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. On this occasion, or on any other occasion, I am not able to identify the location of a negative voice when I seek unanimous consent. Quite frankly, I am not so sure that that is not all to the good as far as the Chair is concerned. I simply put the question as to whether or not there is unanimous consent. The House knows very well there can be many reasons, having nothing to do with the substance of the motion, why a member or members on either side of the House may not want to set aside the regular business of the day to give unanimous consent. If I hear any negative voice, I consider unanimous consent has been withheld. I must always do that, at any time. If I do not hear a negative voice, I always put the question. Today I heard a negative voice, and I cannot say where it came from. I could not identify it, but I do want the House to know that I did not act upon anything less than an audible negative voice.

Be that as it may, the nature of the motion is such that the suggestion has been made that if there was a voice which was unintentionally withholding unanimous consent, or if I may have been in error in hearing—

Mr. Alexander: Let us have the motion again.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Bearing in mind the hon. member who raised the point initially, I wonder if I might be able to pursue it.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Alexander: I am sorry.

Mr. Speaker: It has been suggested that the House should revert to motions in order for the motion to be put again. For the House to do that would require unanimous consent to revert to that stage. Is the House agreed that we should revert to routine proceedings pursuant to Standing Order 43, to hear solely the presentation of the motion of the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is the House agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

PROPOSAL TO PROVIDE AID TO THOSE SUFFERING DAMAGE IN COBALT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I will require a five-second delay because I sent a copy of the motion up to you.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: This is just like a by-election.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Blais), the acting House leader.

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, on that point I would like to save the hon. gentleman the time required to get the motion back. We on this side of the House are ready to accept the motion and to provide consent. Lack of communication was probably one of the reasons—

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, in effect, I have been personally involved in this matter as one who has been interested in the Cobalt situation for some time.

Some hon. Members: Order.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: No wonder we have trouble in the Post Office.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent).

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That this House urges the government to provide immediate relief, within the terms of the existing federal-provincial cost-sharing arrangements, to the people of Cobalt.

Earlier, reference was made specifically to food and housing arrangements.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43, presentation of such a motion can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): You fellows should apologize.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: You got caught this time.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Bellechasse on a point of order.

Mr. Lambert (Bellechasse): Mr. Speaker, considering that I have not had the opportunity to be heard on the question of privilege which has just been raised, and which is very interesting, I would like to draw your attention to the fact that Standing Order 28 provides that every member desiring to speak is to rise in his place and draw the Speaker's attention if only to say no. Now, I often pointed out to the Chair that when a member brings forward a motion under Standing Order 43, we would be very pleased to see the hon. member opposing the motion identify himself, not only by moving his head but also by uttering an audible no, rising in his place, so that his answer is put on the record for the following day and that Canadians be fully satisfied with our deliberations. I rose on a point of order for that reason, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. This is a point of order which has already been raised on several occasions by the hon. member for Bellechasse (Mr. Lambert) and by some of his colleagues. According to Standing Order 28, every member desiring to speak in the House is to rise in his place. However, Standing Order 43 provides a completely different procedure since it is a matter of asking for the unanimous consent of the House. In our previous practice in this House, unanimous consent has been described and accepted as being the expression of a dissenting voice that has to be taken into account by the Chair; the "no" means opposition to unanimous consent. It is one thing to rise under Standing Order 28, but quite another to give or refuse unanimous consent.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

(Questions answered orally are indicated by an asterisk.)

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, the following questions will be answered today: 1,419, 1,453 and 2,461.

INTRA-PROVINCIAL FERRIES

Question No. 1,419—Mr. McCain:

1. Has the government made any contributions to the capital cost of any intra-provincial ferry in any province in the past ten years and, if so (a) were the contributions a direct or indirect expenditure through arrangements with provincial authorities (b) what are the ports of call for each such ferry (c) in each year, what amount was paid to each such ferry (d) what is the projected amount of capital contributions to be paid to each such ferry for each of the next ten years?

2. Are any such capital cost contributions being considered for any intra-provincial ferry in any province for the next ten years and, if so (a) what are the ports of call for each such ferry being considered (b) in each year, what are the projected amounts of capital contributions being considered for each such ferry?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): In so far as the Department of Regional Economic Expansion is concerned: 1. DREE has made contributions to the capital cost of intra-provincial ferries in the following provinces: (i) Under the Canada-Nova Scotia subsidiary agreement for development of the metropolitan Halifax-Dartmouth area, there is a project for design and construction of two new ferries to carry pedestrian traffic across Halifax harbour, plus design and construction of new terminals and docks. (a) Costs of this project are shared 80/20 by DREE and the province, respectively. (b) The ferries can be considered part of the urban transit system and will link downtown Halifax with downtown Dartmouth. (c) Not applicable. (d) The total cost to design and construct the new system is estimated at $5.7 million. Of this amount, the capital cost of the two ferries is estimated to be $1 million each. DREE's share of the $2 million will be $1.6 million, to be spent as follows: $800,000 in 1977/78; $800,000 in 1978/79. (ii) (a) DREE is also contributing in direct expenditures through the Fund for Rural Economic Development Act with the province of Quebec. (b) Matane; (c) 1975-76: $163,725; 1976-77: $75,000. (d) 1977-78: $300,000; 1978-79: $949,020. (iii) (a) In Saskatchewan, contribution is being made in co-operation with the province to the Wollaston Lake Fishermen's Co-operative, on basis of 50 per cent of total cost $49,240. (b) the ferry will call at the road terminal at Rabbit Lake and Wollaston Lake village. (c) in 1976-77 the DREE contribution was $7,808. (d) the projected expenditure toward capital in 1977-78 is $16,812. (iv) DREE contributions are being made to three ferries in Manitoba under the Canada-Manitoba Northlands Agreement, and are based on 60 per cent of the approved capital costs. (a) Split Lake Ferry—barge; (b) Ports of call: Split Lake Community and Odei River Landing located on road terminus 45 miles northeast of Thompson; (c) 1976-77 approved budget—$97,200 (d) 1977-78 approved budget—$385,200. (a) Cross Lake Ferry—barge; (b) Ports of call: Cross Lake Community and Jenpeg (c) 1976-77 approved budget—$88,200; (d) 1977-78 approved budget—$369,000. (a) Norway House Cable—ferry; (b) Ports of call: The vessel is a cable ferry across the east channel of the Nelson River and linking road portions that are to provide access to Norway House. (c) Nil. (d) 1977-78 approved budget—$162,000.

2. No further capital expenditure is being considered.

In so far as Transport Canada is concerned: 1. Yes, the Transport Canada has made contributions. (a) They were direct contributions. (b) (i) Quebec—Lower St. Lawrence; (ii) Ontario—South Baymouth—Tobermory. (c) (i) Quebec—$3.0 million capital grant 1972/73; (ii) Ontario—$3.0 million capital grant 1972/73. (d) No amounts are projected.

2. No firm amounts are presently being considered. Discussions are underway with several governments. Buy out arrangements could result which would be much similar to the arrangements which resulted in the contributions detailed in No. 1 above in which the two provinces took over operating responsibility for a number of ferry services.

OLYMPIC COINS

Question No. 1,453—Mr. Clarke:

1. What was the total number and value of coins (a) minted (b) sold under the Olympic coin programme?

[Mr. Goodale.]

2. Does the difference in the number indicate how many will have to be melted down and, if not, how many will be melted?

3. (a) What is the salvage value of a melted down coin (b) what was the production cost for an Olympic coin?

4. What was the total number and value of scupltures (a) minted (b) sold under the Olympic stamp sculpture programme?

5. Does the difference in number indicate the number which will have to be melted down and, if not, how many will have to be melted?

6. (a) What is the salvage value of a melted down sculpture (b) what was the production cost of an Olympic stamp sculpture?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): I am informed by the Department of Finance and the Post Office Department as follows: 1. (a)—Silver, 31,675,128 valued at $153,765,784; Gold, 921,545 valued at $42,715,980; as at September 30, 1976. (b)—Silver, 24,583,489 sold for $274,515,794; Gold, 860,404 sold for $96,817,653; as at September 30, 1976.

2. No. The program is not yet completed.

3. (a) The salvage value would depend on the price received at the time of sales for the bullion recovered from the coins. (b)—Silver, $4.86; Gold, $46.35; as at September 30, 1976, and including the cost of bullion.

4. 101,251 sculptures, yielding a gross revenue of $8,849,108 were minted and sold under the Olympic metal stamp program. In addition, a nominal number of display sets for use at point of purchase in advertising, etc., and damage replacement sets, were minted.

5. No metal stamps, except for display sets and damaged sets, were, or will be, melted down.

6. (a) The salvage value of a melted down sculpture is the value of the metal, i.e., gold, silver and bronze. This value will vary daily, depending on the daily market value of these metals. (b) The production cost of an Olympic stamp sculpture varied from series, and ranged from: $8.50 to $13.04 for sets of 3 bronze sculptures; $18.82 to $26.92 for sets of 3 silver sculptures; $404.66 to $509.18 for sets of 3 gold sculptures.

ECONOMIC SECURITY EMPLOYEES' NATIONAL ASSOCIATION IN QUEBEC

Question No. 2,461—Mr. Fortin:

1. Did the National President of the Economic Security Employees' National Association (ESENA), during the last week of March, 1977, or thereabout, meet with the Quebec officials representing the administrators in charge of the UIC-DMI merger, officials of the Unemployment Insurance Commission and of the Canada Manpower Centre and, if so, was the Quebec Union representative invited and, if not, for what reason?

2. Was the matter of Quebec workers wanting to dissociate from the National Union and requesting separate certification from that of ESENA raised during the meeting?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration):
1. (a) No. (b) Not applicable. (c) Not applicable.

2. Not applicable.

QUESTION PASSED AS ORDER FOR RETURN

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, if question No. 1,515 could be made an order for return, that return would be tabled immediately.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the parliamentary secretary would explain why this particular response has to be made an order for return. The question has been answered on previous occasions and the answer has been published in Hansard. I am very interested in it, and I wish to use it for comparative purposes.

Mr. Goodale: I should have pointed out that the reason for answering the question in this way is the bulky nature of the answer. As hon. members may have observed while the return was being taken to the table, it is a thick and bulky document.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It was printed last time.

Mr. Speaker: Is it the desire of the House that question 1,515 be deemed to be made an order for return?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BRETTON WOODS AGREEMENTS ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE SUBSCRIPTION TO INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND AND INTERNATIONAL BANK FOR CONSTRUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance) moved that Bill C-18, to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Bretton Woods Agreements

He said: Mr. Speaker, the legislation before us today to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act aims to ratify the recently proposed amendments to the articles of agreement of the International Monetary Fund and to make them part of Canadian domestic law. The proposed amendments constitute the first major reform of the articles of the fund and represent a significant step in the evolution of the international monetary system. The bill also provides for acceptance of Canada's quota and subscription increases in the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, or the World Bank. This is an important further step in the efforts which have been undertaken over the past six decades to try to work out in the international market an effective replacement for the role the gold standard played in monetary exchanges before the First World War.

Before that war was over, the first move in this direction was made with the publication of President Wilson's famous 14 points. At the Versailles conference which followed, an attempt was made to arrive at an international legal order which would govern economic relationships between states, but neither the treaties of Versailles nor of St. Germain-en-Laye were effective in bringing about the desired general improvement in the world monetary system. Indeed, the main feature of the interwar period with regard to international payments was, of course, the reparations question as it affected Germany, though in those decades the system was modified to some extent for instance, by the Dawes plan. With the worldwide depression in 1929, attempts to arrive at some collective world order in the economic field came virtually to an end and the period up to the beginning of the Second World War was one of economic autarchy.

After the conclusion of the Second World War there was, of course, an attempt—and a far more successful attempt—to create a number of institutions on the international scene for the purpose of establishing international economic order. There was a revival of the International Labour Organization, the only one of the League of Nations functional organizations which survived the war. Also, of course, there was the founding of the United Nations itself and the establishment of such specialist bodies as the World Health Organization and the Food and Agriculture Organization. The impetus with regard to a better world economic order was founded on the joint Anglo-American statement which emerged from the Atlantic Conference of 1941 between Prime Minister Churchill and President Roosevelt. At that time, the two leading countries on the western side in the Second World War sought to achieve a definition of multilateralism which would be useful in postwar reconstruction. The fourth and fifth paragraphs of the Atlantic Charter reflect this particular effort.

Out of that initiative, institutions such as the International Monetary Fund and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development came into existence, as well as initiatives or the creation of the International Trade Organization, which was stillborn but which was followed by the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. The two prime architects of the Bretton Woods Agreement were the famous British economist, Maynard Keynes, and his American counterpart, Harry Dexter White. Richard Gardner, one of the leading students of this period, has written that the two men joined in their aim to promote a system of multilateral payments in which external equilibrium could be maintained at levels of domestic full employment. Their purpose was to provide members with additional international liquidity which would provide a protective cushion against temporary economic disturbances and make unnecessary the resort to illiberal internal or external policies.

The fund's articles of agreement have provided a legal and financial framework, just as the architects of the system had hoped, based on fixed exchange rates or par values, and these arrangements have continued to guide the international monetary system since the agreement was signed at the Bretton Woods conference in 1944. However, in recent years, particularly since the onset of the decade of the 1960s, it has become more and more evident that the par value system, as well as some operations of the fund, were no longer in tune with present-day international economic reality and with the needs of modern states. Canada in particular experienced difficulties in adhering to the rigid and anachronistic code. These difficulties led to the floating of the Canadian dollar in the 1950s and, again, since 1970.

As these problems surfaced, it became clear that the international monetary system as constituted by the articles of agreement, as well as the financial operations of the fund provided for by these articles, would have to be reformed and brought up to date. Thus, starting in the early 1970s the fund began to take a long and hard look at how such a fundamental reform might be achieved. A ministerial committee of 20 was created to seek a global reform of the monetary system. However, rapidly changing events such as the energy crisis and worldwide inflation made it impossible to achieve that aim. Accordingly, an evolutionary and more pragmatic approach to reform was adopted through the successor of C-20, the interim committee which, through much of its early years was chaired by my predecessor, the Hon. John Turner.

A reform package was finally agreed to at the interim committee's meeting in January, 1976, in Kingston, Jamaica, and this is the reform package which is now included in these amendments. Before the amended articles of agreement can come into effect, they must be ratified by 60 per cent of the fund's member countries with 80 per cent of the voting power.

These amendments to the Bretton Woods Agreements Act will, in addition, accept the increased quota of Canada in the fund, and increase it from special drawing rights $1,100 million to SDR $1,357 million as part of a general increase of subscriptions to the fund, from SDR $29 billion to SDR $39 billion which was proposed along with the amendments of the fund's articles. They represent, as well, an increase in Canada's subscription to the other Bretton Woods organization, the World Bank from U.S. current $1,136 billion to U.S. $1,342 billion. As only 10 per cent of our subscription to the World Bank is paid in cash, this will represent an out of pocket contribution of about $20.6 million in Canadian dollars at this time.

The highlights of the new amendments are the new provisions on exchange rates which allow members to choose the arrangements which they wish to apply, the abolition of the official status for gold and the broadening of the scope of the IMF's surveillance powers to cover all policies that affect the external sector and not just exchange rate practices. In addition, some of the amendments improve the fund's operating structure and financial viability while others simply clarify the meaning or bring the wording up to date.

According to article I of its articles of agreement, the fund is charged with facilitating the expansion and growth of world trade and payments as a means of raising world standards of living and of fostering economic development. The fund is to promote and ensure stability and order with respect to exchange rates as well as to establish mechanisms for balance of payments assistance to enable member countries to correct temporary imbalances with a minimum of disturbance to the international monetary system. Accordingly, its assets are available for short and medium term financing to members faced with temporary balance of payments difficulties.

The general objectives of the fund are unchanged in the amended articles, although the means by which the fund and its members are meant to co-operate to achieve these objectives have been changed in key areas, particularly exchange rates, the role of gold and the financial operations of the fund. The fund's ability to enforce such co-operation with an international code of behaviour is based on its power to grant short and medium term credit under appropriate policy conditions to members.

Originally, the fund's membership consisted of 45 countries, as recognized in article II, section 1 and set out in schedule A of its articles of agreement. Provision was made in article II, section 2, for other countries to join, and currently its membership is made up of 128 countries, 100 of which are classified as developing countries. With the quota increase now proposed, total subscriptions to the fund through the years will have been increased to SDR $39 billion, which is about U.S. $45 billion at current rates of exchange, from original subscriptions totalling U.S. $8.8 billion; that is to say, in 1944 dollars. The bulk of its funds are obtained through quota subscriptions, although the IMF may borrow to help finance its operations.

The system as envisioned under the old articles required a member to declare and maintain a par value for its currency in terms of gold and to convert foreign official holdings of its currency into gold or the currency of the holder at the latter's request. When payments imbalances between countries produced a supply and demand situation that was not in balance at the existing exchange rates, governments intervened in the exchange markets to defend the par value. These interventions, in effect, financed the payments deficit or surplus. Although each country holds its own official reserves of gold and foreign exchange for this purpose, the members also draw upon the pool of other countries currencies in the fund.

The fund's financing operations take the form of a transaction. A member drawing on the fund uses its own currency to purchase foreign exchange from the IMF. It can purchase an amount equal to the gold part of its quota virtually automatically, and can purchase additional amounts, known as credit tranches, under progressively stronger policy conditionality and stiffer service charges. Borrowers must repay their loans by repurchasing their currency from the fund within three to five years.

This question of conditionality has been one of the questions that has excited considerable attention and concern at meetings of the interim committee. There is concern that the IMF bureaucracy in its application of the articles of agreement may fail to take account of the social and economic pressures which are weighing on the member countries, making applications for further balance of payments assistance under the fund. I, for one, share the concern which has been expressed by a number of ministers of finance in other countries that in the administration of its new powers the fund should seek on every occasion to remain sensitive to the difficult circumstances which member countries, and particularly developing member countries, are facing at present in an era in which there has been a dramatic increase in energy prices, and at the same time for some of the same countries a drop in export earnings. On the question of exchange rates, a new provision on exchange rates creates a general obligation for members to pursue policies conducive to a stable system of exchange rates.

Members must collaborate with the fund and with other members in this regard by pursuing domestic and external policies that are internationally responsible. Members are otherwise free to choose the exchange arrangements that best suit their circumstances. The fund has been given a new legal framework for the surveillance of the variety of exchange agreements that members adopt.

The exchange rate article also provides for a possible return to a par value system. If an 85 per cent majority in the fund believes it appropriate, the fund can enact a new system of fixed, but adjustable, exchange rates. However, the provisions clearly give a country the right to continue with any other exchange arrangement or to opt out of a reinstated par value system while still fulfilling the general obligations of good conduct. It is that exception which is of particular relevance from the standpoint of Canada, for Canada, as I have already said, is a country which, under the circumstances of our economy, has preferred to follow a floating exchange rate system.

There has been, in the international community, widespread experience with floating during the oil crisis, and the ability of the financial system to operate efficiently and viably in this atmosphere has helped support confidence in the arrangement. Canada was in the vanguard of the movement to float currencies and has naturally been a strong supporter of the swing back to greater flexibility, which is indicated by these amendments.

The provisions of the new article on exchange rate arrangements is therefore very much in line with Canadian thinking and Canadian interests. As I have said, the amendment is fully satisfactory from the Canadian point of view. It gives the fund an appropriate role in monitoring financial practices, yet allows any government to pursue a responsible exchange rate policy suitable to its own circumstances. Necessary adjustments of exchange rates now have the potential of taking place swiftly and relatively smoothly, and thereby of absorbing the impact of payments deficits without forcing governments to intervene massively.

Among the important provisions in the amendment is a provision with regard to gold. The abandonment of par values, plus the problems of reserve creation and control, pointed to the need to phase out gold progressively from the monetary system. The provisions of the comprehensive amendment and the associated agreements on gold will greatly reduce the role of gold by removing its official status and allowing it to be traded like other commodities. The new articles eliminate the function of gold as a common denominator of par values. They abolish the official price and give members the authority to buy and sell gold at market prices. They eliminate all obligations on members to make payments of subscriptions, charges or re-purchases in gold to the fund. Thus, gold will no longer have a favoured role at the heart of the international monetary system, although it will still retain a monetary role for as long as nations hold it as part of their reserves. Through the new collaboration clause, members must undertake to ensure their policies with respect to reserve assets, including gold, better to serve international liquidity objectives. Finally, by an 85 per cent majority the fund may choose to dispose of its gold holdings.

As part of the agreement on these changes, the fund is to dispose of one-third of its gold holdings, half of this 50 million ounces being returned to members at the old official price of SDR 35 per ounce and half being sold on the market for the benefit of the least developed countries. So far, starting in June, 1976, the fund has held three auctions of its gold for the latter purpose. Profits from such gold sales will be used to assist the poorest developing countries meet their balance of payments needs. The fund has been pressed by Canada to make certain that the auctions are carried out with a minimum of disturbance to the regular production and sale of gold and with a minimum disruption to the market.

The reduction of the role of gold in the international monetary system has been in line with a position which Canada has consistently advocated, and the reduction of the role of gold seems to us a necessary step toward bringing liquidity creation under international control. We are satisfied that the arrangements in the new articles will lead toward this end.

In addition to those specific measures, the amendments now before the House contain quite a number of technical amendments with regard to detailed problems of application of the articles and in particular they confer upon the fund greater responsibilities with respect to the surveillance of balance of payments and other problems. On these matters I would be more than happy to engage in a full examination and study with the committee when the bill receives second reading.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in speaking to this bill I must say that I find it remarkable that our minister has indicated how much the government endorses the amendments which are before us today with respect to changes in International Monetary Fund activities. For example, I believe the minister stated that the amendments—he was referring specifically to certain fixed rate exchange amendments—are fully acceptable to Canada. In short, without giving very many reasons as to why we should be asked to accept these amendments today, the government is obviously satisfied in its own mind that the amendments should be rubber-stamped and expedited through this House as quickly as possible.

While many of us may be overwhelmed by the subject matter before us today which is covered by Bill C-18—that is, amendments to the Bretton Woods Agreements Act—I suggest it is imperative that all hon. members of this House participate in a meaningful debate on this matter. In this connection I think it is regrettable that not one Liberal member chose to participate in the debate which dealt with the Customs Tariff revisions which were before the House last week. Not one Liberal member—other than the minister in each case—chose to join in the debate with respect to the excise tax amendments which were before this House, and I think it will be most regrettable if not one Liberal member chooses to speak on this bill which is before us today.

Surely hon. members opposite have some views as to what is the proper international monetary stance for Canada to be encouraging at the present time. Surely, if they are completely in agreement with the minister and with the other members of the cabinet, they could at least indicate to the House the nature of their agreement and why they feel we should be asked to support the amendments before us. There is little point talking domestically about how we intend to control inflation, how we intend to lessen unemployment, how we will ensure meaningful real growth in our economy, what is the proper fiscal and monetary stance for our country, whether the AIB is really needed, what course we should be following with respect to the GATT negotiations in Geneva, whether it is right for us to be borrowing so much exernally and, finally, why we have the trade deficit we have today in end products, for example, which has widened to a startling $10 billion, without first taking a good, hard look at Bill C-18 and its effect with respect to proposed amendments to the IMF.

There is little point debating these subjects unless we first debate what type of international monetary system we live with, how it should be changed to our advantage and, specifically, how any change in the international monetary system should be made to ensure that it is in Canada's best interests. Before we ask the nation to endorse these amendments, we owe it to our constituents to have a full debate first in this House and in committee with respect to the matters before us.

In leading off on behalf of the official opposition, I suggest there are ten points that we should be considering before we report this bill back from committee. First, since the establishment of the Bretton Woods Agreements 33 years ago, our international monetary system has attempted to free itself from any form of discipline. Unfortunately, Canada, both domestically and internationally, in the last ten years has been one of the most irresponsible partners in shedding such traditional constraints. As a result of this international lack of restraint, we find that the western industrialized world is being subjected currently to the highest interest rates since the middle ages. Let me reiterate that: I believe sometimes we grow accustomed to such things as 9, 10 or even 12 per cent interest rates without realizing that the phenomenon of high interest rates is truly an abnormal phenomenon and that we have not had, in the western civilized world, such high rates for the past 600 or 700 years. That is the first point I wish to make. Historically there is very little doubt that the fall of interest rates such as occurred in the western world from the thirteenth century onward reflected a healthy growth in our civilization and denoted a real growth for all concerned. I would point out that there are a number of phases where interest rates have gone up—not to the present height, but higher than normal. This has always been associated with unstable political and economic conditions. Likewise, rises in interest rates denote a civilization in trouble as occurred in Roman times and earlier. With interest rates, particularly in Canada, at such record heights, somewhere in the 9 per cent range, I think it is important that we compare that 9 or 10 per cent range with the 4 per cent range of interest rates in the world's nine strongest nations, Canada included, over the past 200 years. I believe we should accept such high interest charges as a red flag indicating danger, certainly for this country and, secondly, for the western industrialized world.

Second, in our participation with respect to the International Monetary Fund the impression has been left that in Canada we do not have an independent mind. I believe the speech of the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) today brings this out most vividly. There is no questioning; everything is acceptable that has been put before us as far as the proposed amendments are concerned. There is no uncertainty in the minister's mind about whether the amendments before us are totally acceptable to Canada. He does not give the pros or cons. In short, it appears that we have simply followed the lead of the United States: if it is good for the United States, the assumption is that it is good for Canada. This is unfortunate, in that in dealing with this matter there is no doubt that the interest and objectives of the United States are often quite different from ours. It is true, we share this great continent together, but this does not mean that automatically what the United States wishes to change with respect to the International Monetary Fund is necessarily good for us.

We should remember, for example, that the United States is one of the most efficient producers in the world. It is, therefore, natural, being such good producers, that they want an open world so that they can sell their produce. This, if allowed to happen, and coupled with the equal production efficiency of Japan and Germany, would devastate this country as a manufacturing nation. This trend is reflected in the economic review tabled by the Minister of Finance last week, where it is pointed out on page 60 that our trade deficit in end products rose from $3.6 billion in 1971 to over $10 billion—the figure I referred to earlier—in 1975 and 1976. In sharp contrast, the United States, Germany and Japan had surpluses in their comparable and product accounts.

Third, the government has chosen a policy of relative secrecy with respect to negotiations which have led to the amendments before us. Unfortunately, they have chosen to be secret about our GATT negotiations in Geneva as well. This shroud of secrecy surrounding government activities is contributing to the lack of business confidence so prevalent today. How can we expect labour, small businessmen and farmers to co-operate if we do not take them into our confidence with respect to the government's targets and objectives? Only last Friday we had an example of the government's tendency to be non-committal with respect to our future or the future the government hopes to chart for us. When asked during the question period if the government would follow the lead of President Carter's chief economic adviser, Mr. Charles Shultz, and announce a target date for bringing the Canadian budget into balance, the Minister of Finance only stated that he admired the courage showed by Mr. Shultz but he, himself, did not care to be so precise.

For years the Americans have published their long-term objectives with respect to inflation, unemployment, interest rates and the like, while our government officials merely dodge the issue, leaving the impression that the Americans know where they want to go and what they want to achieve, while our officials are totally bewildered.

Fourth, this government likes to cite the energy pricing crisis as being troublesome in Canada. It is true that the oil producing countries as a whole had current account surpluses of about $46 billion in 1976. But today and earlier it is interesting to note that the Minister of Finance forgot to point out that we are an energy producing nation and that every year since the so-called crisis in pricing we have produced a trade surplus in energy by selling at high prices. Last year, for example, our surplus was about half a billion dollars on energy trade alone. How strange that we are constantly told that energy pricing is creating domestic problems in Canada, when in fact we are the beneficiaries, as far as trade is concerned, in high-priced energy that is being sold throughout the world.

I suggest that energy pricing has a minimum effect as far as trade is concerned, that is, whether we are doing well or poorly in terms of world trade rather than ending up as we did in 1975 with the highest current account trade deficit of any of the seven major industrial nations; and then rationalizing the situation. It is time government supporter recognized the degree of severity of that deficit. Canada, in short, had the highest current account trade deficit of any of the seven major industrial nations, including the United States, Japan, France, Germany, Italy, the United Kingdom and ourselves. In 1976 we were the second highest in our deficit, trailing only France.

Fifth, I would like to suggest that the world's real growth expansion in the past few hundred years has been subjected to monetary discipline. First it was gold that was the agreed standard, but as it shackled those who wished to spend, it was downgraded until now, in the amendments before us today, gold has been downgraded to virtually no role. Let us face the fact that the chief reason those who are proposing our present monetary system have discarded and downgraded gold is that they do not like to be disciplined by the effect gold has when our monetary system is related to it. I noticed that in his earlier remarks the Minister of Finance, in effect, endorsed the downgrading of gold as far as our international monetary system is concerned. As the world's third largest producer of gold, are we right in accepting this relative abandonment of a world standard that has been with us throughout history?

The more the world depends on the United States dollar and the use of the SDR, the more the world leaves itself open to the irresponsible expansion of money. The amendments to the Bretton Woods Agreements being debated today will in many ways leave the world's monetary system open to domination by the United States monetary approach. If the United States inflates, the world will tend to inflate. If the United States restrains, the world will tend to be restrained. In short, international monetary leaders can print money, but they have not learned how to produce gold, which is why recourse to gold is resisted.

We in Canada must ask ourselves if this system best suits our interests. Is the complete abandonment of gold in Canada's best interests? It is not that gold is so important. Its importance, rather, is that its use involves a built-in element of restraint. One asks, given the new, liberalized use of SDRs and other forms of international currency, what will impose a tolerable degree of restraint on governments? Given the opportunity, most governments will sidestep restraint, as our own government has. You will recall that it doubled this country's money supply in the six-year period ending last October because it found that course politically beneficial.

Sixth, while we have been referring to the structuring of the international monetary system and to the fact that world leaders appear to be seeking relative freedom to "gimmick" the monetary system at will, I suggest it is important for the government to indicate to the House how it plans to act responsibly in the midst of possible world irresponsibility. By being restrained in this country, by running our own system prudently, we can turn international irresponsibility to our advantage, as Switzerland has done, for example. Swiss currency has appreciated in relation to other major currencies, while ours has depreciated. In short, to the degree other nations choose to create inflation domestically, we in Canada can improve our position by deliberately containing inflation which, in turn, will be of benefit to us internationally.

It is absolutely erroneous to say that a nation must inherit inflation created outside its boundaries. The fact is that Canadian inflation was manufactured by the Bank of Canada under the instructions of the Canadian government. There is no doubt about it, although the government likes to confuse the issue. Such inflation need not be imported. Actually, it will only be imported by a government which chooses to avoid fiscal and monetary responsibility, as the minister well knows.

Let me put it this way: If the minister goes to the local pub and sees some people who have drunk too much and are, therefore, in a state of drunkenness, that does not mean that he, himself, must get drunk. But that is the idea he wants us to accept when he talks about world inflation, or inflation in other nations. When the minister speaks of inflation, which is only another form of a binge at the local world pub, the minister likes to pretend that if other countries are giddy, we, somehow, must become giddy too. That is not true. Unfortunately, the minister has not said today what steps he intends to take to make sure that despite any inflationary tendencies which may develop internationally we shall curb inflation in this country.

Seventh, not only has Canada tended to acquiesce in the world's credit explosion, but we have reached the peak in foreign borrowings. I wish to read three passages from the Economic Review to which I have referred. The parts I shall quote are relevant to Canada's present-day position in the international world. The first passage reads:

> The substantial increase in Canada's current account deficit has been matched by an increase in net over-all capital inflows, particularly through an increase in new issues of long-term Canadian securities abroad. This resulted in a rise in the book value of Canada's balance of international indebtedness (including increases in earnings accruing to non-residents) from $29 billion at the end of 1971 to $48.5 billion at the end of 1976.

Mr. Speaker, to sum up, according to the minister's own economic review figures our total foreign debt increased by almost $20 billion between 1971 and 1976 over the previous $29 billion level. It took Canada 104 years to run up a foreign debt of $29 billion, but in five years—between 1971 and 1976—the government, through sheer irresponsibility, increased that foreign debt by $20 billion. I continue quoting the first passage:

> As noted earlier . . . the increase in indebtedness has caused interest payments to non-residents to increase at a rapid-pace during the past five years, thereby making turn-around in the current account more difficult to achieve.

The second passage I wish to quote reads as follows:

> The net capital inflow of $4.9 billion in 1976 was marginally higher than in the previous year, reflecting a steep rise in long-term capital inflows and an off-setting decline in the balance on short-term capital. The net long-term inflow of $7.5 billion was up $3.4 billion from the previous year—

To summarize, that passage refers to the inflow of long-term capital, capital which will not be repaid for 5, 10, 15 or more years. Such capital inflows of $7.5 billion last year increased by $3.4 billion over the level of the previous year. The final paragraph I wish to quote reads in part:

> —net new issues placed abroad, including both foreign currency and Canadian dollar issues, accounted for 60 per cent of all net new marketable issues by Canadian borrowers, compared with 45 per cent in 1975.

[Mr. Stevens.]

I emphasize that these are not our own figures or the figures of some outside group. They represent the government's own admission of the extent of this country's foreign borrowings. The impact of this borrowing binge will be felt for generations in Canada. It will be felt in particular as the money has been substantially used to finance consumer purchases rather than capital projects which might have been used to improve our international trading position in years to come.

As we know from Canadian history, initially we borrowed large sums from Great Britain and certain other nations. But we did not borrow to cover current account trade deficits, which is now the case. We borrowed money to build our railways and to build power installations which in turn helped develop our country. The prosperity which resulted gave us the wherewithal to pay back the debt. That is not happening now. We are not doing this with respect to the debt we are now incurring internationally.

Eighth, the drift to non-fixed exchange rates has been encouraged or at least supported by the International Monetary Fund, as the minister said today. We in Canada have been in the vanguard in asking for free exchange rates as opposed to the traditional fixed approach. This, coupled with our tendency to borrow so extensively to cover our inadequate trade position, leads to interest rate crunches. Already we have had our first run on the Canadian dollar. Hon. members will recall last November. We were lucky. The minister covered up and we were sheltered from the true impact as to what actually occurred in November and December of last year. Here, again, the Economic Review discloses that in November of that year our United States dollar reserves fell by $758 million. That, Mr. Speaker, is a tremendous fall for our reserves in any one month, bearing in mind that our total reserves are less than $4 billion. The review points out that the rise in December was roughly comparable to the decline in November. They state at page 65:

> The Canadian dollar was under heavy downward pressure in November but recovered in December.

When we get to committee, I hope we can be furnished with sufficient information so that the Canadian public will be fully apprised of exactly what happened in November and December during that mini-crisis. If we can get that information we may be better prepared for future runs on the Canadian dollar which will certainly occur if the Canadian government persists in their "Alice in Wonderland" approach to international finances. With our resources, which on a per capita basis are greater than the resources of our rival industrialized nations, it is inconceivable that we should some day have to be bailed out by the International Monetary Fund like the United Kingdom has been. However, that is certainly what will happen if we continue on our present path.

Ninth, the minister has not given us today, and certainly has not earlier given any indication whether the International Monetary Fund or any other international agency has given guidelines to this nation or any other nation which are to be followed domestically by member countries with respect to monetary increases. In Canada the increase in our monetary aggregates went on virtually unabated in 1975 and 1976 when, we are told, we were in a period of so-called restraint.

Here are the facts: M-2, which is currency and privately-held Canadian deposits, jumped 17.5 per cent in 1975 and 17 per cent in 1976. With such expansion, and with our rapid expansion in the government sector, the Anti-Inflation Board activities have become an exercise in futility. Worse still, the AIB appears simply to be a convenient scapegoat to allow the government to pretend to the Canadian public that they are doing something meaningful about inflation.

Surely we are entitled to get from the minister some indication as to whether such monetary increases are within, or without, suggested word guidelines. Is it in the current thinking of the International Monetary Fund, for example, that a country such as Canada should expand its most basic supply of money by approximately 17 per cent in a year? Is it really being fair to the Canadian public, with such expansion, to be stating that somehow restraint is the order of the day?

The tenth point I would like to make is that while we have already cited Canada's high interest structure, perhaps the most ludicrous thing of all is that we, a high-interest rate country, is in the vanguard of making low-interest loans directly or indirectly throughout the world. In the World Bank annual report for 1976, which of course includes funds from this country, billions of dollars are listed as going out to various countries or organizations at interest rates substantially below the rates that we must pay when Canadian identities borrow abroad. In appendix H to the World Bank annual report for 1976 records are shown for hundreds of countries. The loans I would like to refer to are those listed for the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development which, of course, is a World Bank, International Monetary Fund activity. They indicate that the current rates in the year under review were 4.5 per cent to 8.85 per cent. The countries they list include, for example, Bolivia, Chile, the Congo, Fiji, Peru and Turkey. Virtually any country that you want to think of is listed as getting loans in the range of 4.5 per cent to just slightly under 9 per cent.

Perhaps the minister can explain how we have gotten into a system where such countries are entitled to credit at those rates when, at the behest of the federal government, our provinces have to borrow abroad at interest rates of 9, 10, and even 11 per cent. Perhaps the minister can also explain why, in this international context, our Export Development Corporation makes loans amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars with interest in the 8 per cent range, yet we are told there are no funds available to allow the government to meet their election promise of supplying $290 million to help urban transit in Canada. Why the double standard?

With one of the highest interest rate structures of any of the industrialized nations, why do we feel there is nothing inconsistent about giving loans with interest rates substantially below the rates we are requiring Canadians to pay domestically?

It is perhaps axiomatic that the needs of international commerce change more rapidly than our ability to cope with them. In the past few years, for example, we have seen massive and, as I have said, disproportionate shifts of wealth away from the industrialized nations and into the coffers of the oil exporting nations. As I have already mentioned, let us not forget that we are an oil exporting nation.

It is estimated that in 1976 the OPEC countries may have sustained a combined surplus as high as $46 billion, while the OECD nations stumbled along with a current account deficit of $20 billion. May I again remind hon. members that of that $20 billion sustained by OECD countries, over 20 per cent is Canada's deficit, that being the $4.3 billion that we ran up in our current account trade deficit last year. It is within this context of a rapidly changing world order that the amendments to the Bretton Woods Agreements were drafted. It is within this context that we, in dealing with Bill C-18, must attempt to determine just where the world is heading today and where Canada will fit into any new order.

There is growing concern that our international monetary system is faltering today and that increased flexibility in exchange rates may be partly at fault. If I judged his remarks correctly, the minister almost takes credit for the relative free floating of exchange rates in the world. I would point out to him that Dr. F. Leutwiler, president of the board and general manager of the Swiss National Bank, had this to say about the current state of international monetary conditions:

> The breakdown of the formerly stable monetary system was not caused by inadequate rules as may perhaps be presumed, but eventually by the inability to live up to the disciplinary constraints of the parity system . . .
> It is therefore in no way surprising that the monetary reserves of the western world increased in 1974 by no less than $37 billion; at the end of 1975 they amounted to a total of $230 billion. This is roughly 2½ times as much as in 1970.

● (1610)

Let me repeat, that, Mr. Speaker—by 1975 international monetary reserves went up 2½ times what they were in 1970. To continue with Dr. Leutwiler's quotation, he states:

> Thus, apart from inflationary domestic money creation as a seemingly easy means of evading the constraints of stability policy, international money creation—no less inflationary—was also practised.

He concludes:

> It is obvious that deficit financing via borrowings is not practicable over a prolonged period of time.

Theoretically, Mr. Speaker, there are many advantages to flexible exchange rates. They dispense with the necessity of keeping large exchange reserves. They allow changes to take place gradually and they make speculation more difficult. But that is theory, Mr. Speaker. In practice, many of these advantages fail to materialize. We have had rather violent changes in a number of currencies, such as the lira and the pound, and there is a danger that a growing number of weak currencies, our own potentially included, may have further crisis periods to go through.

A greater flexibility in our current system of floating exchange rates has not led to the gradual lifting of controls, as many had hoped. Rather, it may have contributed to the breaking up of the world into currency blocs. Economists such as France's Michel Lutfulla envision four evolving currency blocs: the United States dollar zone, the Japanese yen zone, the European snake centred around the Deutschmark, and possibly an Arab oil-producing bloc. Rather than facilitate the expansion of worldwide trade and investment, these blocs may indeed herald an age of trade within, rather than between, the major zones. The implications for Canada are surely obvious. Where will we belong? Will we be aligned to the United States currency bloc, largely as a result of our substantial trade with that country, or are we to develop the so-called third option and align ourselves to Europe and Japan?

There is also growing concern in many quarters over the ability of the International Monetary Fund to meet the tremendous demands that are made on it. The United Kingdom recently received $3.9 billion from the IMF. Mexico, too, negotiated a loan of nearly $1 billion, causing many analysts to speculate on whether the IMF has enough reserves to cover even these loans, much less meet the demands of the future. Will Canada be called upon to make increasing commitments to the fund? I suggest that this is something we must explore more fully in committee. On this point we must ask ourselves to what extent, and to what lengths, we are prepared to bail out other countries. Hon. members should bear in mind that fluctuating currencies and supernational currencies, such as SDRs, lend themselves quite handily to camouflaging the true cost of foreign assistance.

It will be especially difficult for us to determine the extent to which our so-called aid to the companion bill to Bill C-18, Bill C-5, would remove from parliamentary scrutiny the Auditor General's report on the foreign exchange account. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that that bill that is C-5 contemplates that that report will now go to the Minister of Finance, as opposed to the parliament of Canada.

Even if we can determine the extent of our assistance, the question remains, how far should we go? Does it make any sense, for example, that we borrowed abroad, as I have indicated, in 1976 at record levels and at record interest rates, and we then turn around and lend $300 million to Peru at greatly reduced rates? The World Bank annual report to which I have referred states that in the first half of 1976 Canada borrowed abroad $5.3 billion, fully 42 per cent of that taken down by all the world industrialized nations combined. Let me re-emphasize that. According to the World Bank, in the first six months of 1976 Canada's borrowing was 42 per cent of all the world's external borrowings combined. We borrowed 3½ times the amount borrowed by the second largest borrower, France, and more than Austria, Belgium, Denmark, Finland, France, Germany, Iceland, Ireland, Italy, Liechtenstein, Luxembourg, the Netherlands, Norway, Sweden, Switzerland, the United Kingdom and all the multinational corporations combined. We borrowed nearly 29 times the amount borrowed by the United States in the first half of 1976.

Those figures are to be found in the World Bank report to which I have referred. Last year, Canadians took down more than $8 billion abroad in long-term debt alone. At an average rate of 9 per cent, we added to our national service charge more than $700 million. This is in addition to our total foreign indebtedness, which in 1975 totalled $43 billion. The service payment on this amount alone costs Canadians about $2 billion, according to recent estimates made by the C.D. Howe Institute. This is a record for Canada, and possibly even for the world, as we accounted for approximately 20 per cent of all new international bond issues in medium-term Eurocurrency credits last year. This year it is estimated that our borrowing will be down to perhaps $4.5 billion or $5 billion, but based on current increases in foreign debt costs, Canadian exporters must increase their trade surpluses by about $500 million each year just to keep our over-all current account deficits from getting worse.

Here we are caught in a vicious dilemma. We have been mortgaging our future at such an alarming rate that we are getting to the point where there is no easy way to extricate ourselves. The competitive ability of our Canadian manufacturing industries, already reeling from high labour costs, low productivity and other disadvantages, can hardly afford the added penalty of a Canadian dollar kept artificially high due to such large influxes of foreign capital. Yet if our dollar were to depreciate by any substantial amount, our soaring foreign debt costs would increase all the more, making it that much harder to reverse the large current account deficits of recent years. In fact, one official of the C.D. Howe Institute has warned that if we were to continue borrowing at recent levels we would eventually be facing such bad balance of payments problems that the IMF would have to become involved in Canada, as I have already said.

In dealing with this general subject, Mr. Speaker, I think all members would be interested in a speech given by J. Anthony Boeckh at the Financial Analysts Federation annual conference held May 1 to 4 of this year. Mr. Boeckh listed for the conference five symptoms of what he called a "secular malaise". The first was price inflation; the second, public sector deficits; the third, balance of payments deficits and weak currencies; the fourth, foreign debt; and finally, high interest rates. Those were the five headings set out by Mr. Boeckh, and I suggest that we have inherited all five problems in Canada. On the subject of price inflation, Mr. Boeckh had this to say:

> It is now over three years since the big OPEC oil price rise and the peak in global money and price inflation occurred, yet only Germany, Switzerland and the U.S. have brought price-inflation down to 5 per cent or less . . . In countries such as Canada the inflation has been held to around 8 per cent only by wage-price controls and an overvalued currency.

On the subject of public sector deficits, Mr. Boeckh stated that public sector borrowing as a percentage of the gross national product is currently around 8 per cent in Canada, in contrast to Germany where it is about 4 per cent, and the United States and Japan where it is about 3 per cent or less. Dealing with balance of payments deficits and weak currencies, he said that a third common characteristic of those countries in the most serious trouble is massive balance of payments deficits. If the currency of a financially troubled country is supported by restrictive monetary policy and high interest rates, as in Canada's case, unemployment must rise and the balance of payments remain huge. Dealing with foreign debt Mr. Boeckh stated that a fourth characteristic of the malaise is a progressive reliance on foreign debt to finance balance of payments deficits, and from an internal point of view, to finance excessive consumption both private and public. Mr. Boeckh also stated that Canada is, again, a classic example, having borrowed some $9 billion abroad last year to finance a $5 billion current account deficit as well as major capital outflows.

Our capacity for further borrowing is in serious question. The experience of Italy and the United Kingdom is a classic example of countries which borrow massively abroad. Such is the fate of all countries which borrow to finance excessive public and private consumption at home, as opposed to borrowing to build plant and equipment and finance other investments which produce things which can be sold and which have a rate of return sufficiently high to provide funds to eventually liquidate the foreign borrowings that originally took place. Those countries which continue to run large budget deficits, balance of payment deficits, and borrow heavily abroad to finance them, must at some point suffer a major domestic financial crisis. I emphasize that I am again quoting Mr. Boeckh.

Finally, dealing with interest rates, Mr. Boeckh stated that for a country suffering the symptoms I have mentioned, high interest rates are an inevitability: they are essential to restrain liquidity, to finance large balance of payments deficits and to prevent currency depreciation. Countries that have inflated heavily must necessarily have very low levels of liquidity and very high inflation premiums built into the level of interest rates. One can virtually rate the financial and economic health of nations by the level of their interest rates. He compared corporate bond rates in Italy, the United Kingdom, France, and Canada, with Switzerland, Germany, Japan and the United States. In truth, the discrepancy is most remarkable. Generally speaking, the intensity of the symptoms roughly corresponds to the rate of growth of the public sector relative to the private sector. As government spending, transfer payments and subsidies to the public sector and to private corporations expand, there must necessarily be a structural crowding-out of the private sector which actually produces goods and services that can be sold.

Mr. Speaker, this is the point. We are not suggesting that we should, in any way, ignore our responsibilities abroad, nor are we advocating that we shrink from our real responsibilities as good international citizens. We are merely suggesting, in order to be good world citizens, that we must first put our own financial house in order. As one British banker told the conference board recently, one would emphasize to those responsible, within their capacities as national statesmen and officials for domestic finance, that the instability in the international relationship of currencies reflects the depreciation at different rates of the internal value of those currencies.

The more they are able to do to control inflation at home, the easier it will be to devise and operate an international system not subject to periodic crises. More flexible or fluctuating rates of exchange should not, above all, be considered as a soft option to governments wishing to avoid balance of payments constraints respecting the adoption of inflationary policies. In other words, we cannot rely on the world to bail us out if we mismanage at home.

There is a growing need for the reintroduction of self-discipline in our international monetary order. As the demand for fair international liquidity has increased in the post-war period, the more inelastic features of the Bretton Woods Agreements have fallen by the wayside. Self-regulation maintained a reasonable equilibrium in the system until about 1966 when Great Britain and the United States, under the Kennedy influence, began to introduce, bit by bit, irresponsibility into the international system. Today, 10 or 11 years later, the system is so precarious that we find one central bank rationalizing for another what is, in truth, irresponsible behaviour.

We have witnessed the ludicrous spectacle of officials laying the blame for domestic ills in other more international corners than their own—and none does this more than this Trudeau government. We are now paying the bill for such short-sightedness. In the early 1970s there was an almost universal stimuation of the world economy which, together with the attempt to maintain 1971 exchange rates, led to the rapid inflation of 1972-74. On the other hand, West Germany and Switzerland resisted the global temptation, and today remain relatively sound.

History teaches us much, but it also teaches us that we cannot necessarily know what is coming in the future. The course of the International Monetary Fund is uncertain, and in the years ahead it may be even more troubling with the mounting debt of the Third World. Other colleagues of mine will be speaking about the mounting debt of the Third World. That is why we are proposing to take an overview of our economic relationship with the world. We hope, in committee, to take a good, sober look at the future.

I would like to close by simply referring to history, and in particular to a history of interest rates written in a rather monumental report by Sidney Homer in 1963. He was a New York financial house executive who had kept track of interest rates throughout the world since 2000 years before Christ. He stated that the health of a country can virtually be identified by the level of interest rates. He pointed out that a study of nine European and North American countries over the past two centuries clearly demonstrates that relationship.

Amongst those commercial nations, long-term yields have tended to be low or lowest in those countries which have been politically, commercially and financially the strongest. I would like to conclude by simply saying: Let us take heed. If we feel we have certain instability in this country at the present time, and if we feel we have certain groups who are advocating separatism, let us bear in mind the fertile ground through the insecurity of wrong financial management has been laid by this government in Ottawa, and unfortunately we in Canada must now reap the whirlwind.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with great pleasure over the years to the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), and I have always known that sooner or later he would blow a fuse in the House of Commons. He managed to do that today. We have had this little light trickling down in the course of a great intervention. We have three official languages in the House of Commons. We have French and English, of course, but we have a language called "hustings". I think we were subjected to that language, on both sides, today.

I would like to start with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) because I tend to agree and support the amendment, the concept of the International Monetary Fund and the Bretton Woods Agreements, with all the ramifications associated therewith. I think the minister does a disservice to this extent: he talks about "subscription" as though we are dealing with an ordinary bank where you make an investment and as time goes by your equity increases or you recover your investment. It would be more frank to point out that any money we put in under the Bretton Woods Agreements and into the IMF is a gift: we are never going to get it back. There is no way we can get it back with inflation going the way it is and the dire circumstances of the people who are doing most of the borrowing.

It is a gift. We should not back off from saying that because we have a responsibility to do something to help other parts of the world. In the short run, I do not think Canada really needs to be associated with the Bretton Woods Agreements. It is of no benefit to us in the short run, because the world is not just short run. There is a much bigger picture than that. In the long run it is in Canada's interest to have a stable world economy and a stable world generally. To that extent, any of the international agreements we enter into are important and will serve us in the future.

When I say "in the short run", the one occasion I can recall on which we had to go and get assistance—I think it was during the 1962 campaign when another party formed the government—I could never understand why in the world we ever put ourselves into that kind of a position with the International Monetary Fund. To have to go on our knees, as we did at that time, to beg and plead for support, and then, as a humiliating condition of that support, to be locked into a fixed exchange rate, was the worst possible position for Canada to be placed in. Why we did not simply allow the dollar to depreciate and find its own level, without accepting that kind of external discipline, I do not know. It took us a number of years to break out of that fixed exchange rate position and finally get back to a floating exchange rate. I presume those events took place because the debate was in that third official language—"hustings"—and that people were just scared out of their wits at the idea the Canadian dollar would drop below par and slip from its high of $1.05 U.S. to around $0.92 U.S.

That was exactly the remedy which was required for the situation Canada found itself in at that particular time. So when we are talking about this "hustings" language, it is not just hon. members on my right who use that language. Hon. members opposite used it during that campaign and I think it was very unfortunate and unfair way which added nothing to the solution of Canada's problems.

It is true, as the hon. member for York-Simcoe said, that one of the effects of the amendment to the Bretton Woods Agreements will be to do away with the standard, with the discipline. But in my view it is time we did so. There is more than that involved, to this extent: what bothers me as much as anything about these international agreements is the weight we give to the form of an agreement. We think that because we have entered into an agreement of some sort, we have in fact solved a problem. That is just not true. No matter what kind of an agreement we make—and some agreement is better than no agreement—I support international agreements. But we have to be realistic. What serves the world is not agreements, but an understanding of economics and a willingness among countries to play their role in world economics.

I would just like to give one example. Probably the greatest outstanding success in terms of a country raising itself from nowhere and pulling itself up is China, which is not a signatory to any of these agreements. It does not benefit from the Bretton Woods Agreements; it does not benefit from the International Monetary Fund; it did not receive Marshall aid. No matter what you name, China did not benefit from any of it. The great success of the Chinese Republic is in its determination and its leadership which set out to do something.

What I am saying is that simply to set up these organizations and simply trying to be internationally good citizens—and I think we have to do that even at the risk of failing—does not solve anything. We should not really place too much reliance on that. What the world skirts by placing this emphasis on formal agreements is the kind of problem that the Chinese did not skirt. Just as in our own country we are not going to solve the problem of unemployment or the problem of inadequate purchasing power by passing legislation or setting up boards of one kind or another, we cannot do it internationally, either.

If we are to solve our problems here in Canada, the only way I can see at the moment of doing so is to ensure a substantial redistribution of income—and this is equally true internationally. No matter what few dollars we put in—I should not say "few dollars" because I do not want to be charged with saying $27 million or $28 million is a few dollars—but in relative terms, compared to the wealth of Canada, the amount of money we are to contribute to the IMF and to our responsibilities under Bretton Woods is not going to put a dent into the problems of the Third World or those countries which need our assistance. Unless there is redistribution of income between the rich of the world and the poor, there is no solution either in Bretton Woods Agreements or in the International Monetary Fund. However, it does give the opportunity of freeing us from the restriction and discipline of gold.

I would like to deal with some of the ten points which the hon. member for York-Simcoe raised. In many ways I feel I should compliment him because, although I do not agree with him, as he would expect—he would be horrified if I did—I do want to compliment him on giving a lot of thought to explaining his position. I would also like to congratulate his ghost writer, who I am sure had a substantial role to play in preparing the extensive notes which the hon. member used in his speech. I do not say this to denigrate in any way the important and substantial contribution the hon. member has made. I recognize, however, that to dredge up all those Cassandra-like utterances requires more than the work of one man, no matter how energetic he may be.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): That's an "out"!

Mr. Stevens: Perhaps that was the problem—no ghost writer.

Mr. Saltsman: If the hon. member for York-Simcoe had his way, he would be applying the Milton Freedman theory to international economics as I think he tends to apply it to the Canadian domestic economy.

An hon. Member: That's not a bad idea.

Mr. Saltsman: One hon. member says that is not a bad idea. Let us just look at that. There is a tendency for all these monetarists to say that the problem of inflation is just a mechanical one—a too large money supply. How, then, does one explain what is happening in Canada at the moment, when the Bank of Canada, even severely restricting the money supply to the natural growth, cannot give the money away? It cannot even increase the money supply to the point to which it said it wished to increase the money supply.

The reason is that the economy is so flat that there is no reason to increase the money supply, because it has nowhere to go. If, indeed, it is the increase in the money supply which causes inflation, we should surely be down to zero inflation, because if we look at the money supply it is the lowest it has ever been with the kind of inflation to which we are subject at the moment. I am not discounting the fact that the money supply does play a role in this. Almost everything plays a role in inflation, but it is only those who really do not want to think about the economy but who live to latch on to some particular aspect who give the money supply situation such weight. I do not really want to be like Switzerland. The hon. member for York-Simcoe was holding Switzerland out as a model. As admirable a country as it might be, and as admirable a people as the Swiss may be, I really do not fancy Canada having the kind of laws and tax havens which tend to look the other way when it comes to money or when it comes to bank accounts and say, "It is not our business what happens to them." Money has certain connotations attached to it, connotations which cannot be disregarded.

I do not really see this as a model for us. I would like to deal with some of the ten points that the hon. member for York-Simcoe put forth today. I must say, in fairness, that I did not catch all of the ten points—two of them eluded me completely. Points 1 and 5 were, I found, merely repetition. But 10 is such a goodly number, and amongst my people we place a lot of importance on 10 of anything. I presume the hon. member for York-Simcoe was trying to emulate that in some fashion, although I must say he did not emulate one thing, because it would take an awfully big rock to carve all the words that he mouthed today, and I do not know that we have quite that much marble around or that much time to put all the engraving on it.

The great point that was being made by the hon. member for York-Simcoe was that the world should subject itself to discipline. This is an argument that I have heard and perhaps one of the arguments that induced me to become a socialist and certainly to take a part in politics, that is the idea of discipline. I think discipline is important, and certainly self-discipline and national discipline are important, but all too often it is a euphemism that is applied to the poor when one says, "If only you were disciplined, you would be all right".

I am tempted to say that we must have some discipline in some of these poor countries, but to say that they are poor because they do not have discipline is to ignore everything else such as history, gifts of nature, and all the other things that distinguish between the rich and the poor. That somebody is born rich, better off, or clever is no example of their own self-discipline, only of their good luck and fortune—and it is the other way round as well. Who are we going to discipline by staying with the gold standard and saying that gold shall be the basis on which you get credit or you do not get credit? You will not discipline the rich, because they have gold, but the poor who do not have gold.

What we are trying to do in a small way—and I entered my reservations about the Bretton Woods Agreements and the IMF—is to move away from mercantilism, the international mercantilism of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries where gold was thought to be the answer, where the accumulation of gold by a nation was supposed to be a measure of wealth. What Adam Smith said—and I am quoting a good conservative economist, yet one who seems to be terribly misunderstood—is that the wealth of nations does not consist of gold but of their ability to produce and to do the kinds of things that human beings are capable of doing.

Why, then, do we have to restrict the world to using gold as the criterion, to going back to a mercantilist world, a world in which the poor will never have a chance because they are not lucky enough to be born on a gold mine? We certainly do not want that. If risks attend this—and I pointed out that there are risks associated with what we are doing and that in fact we may not succeed in what we are doing, and if we do, we may not succeed in any great way—it is certainly worth trying. It is certainly better than sticking to a standard which the poor have no hope of even coming close to and which deprives them of any hope at all. At least this way there is some kind of chance.

We should have an independent mind in this country. What is an independent mind? Is it that charity begins at home, to heck with what happens in the rest of the world, let us look after ourselves first, let us solve our own problems before we deal with somebody else's problems? Are we ever going to solve our own problems? Are we ever going to have enough for ourselves? I think the answer must be "no". We are better off now than most countries of the world, yet many of us say, "Oh, well, we are still not well off enough and we cannot help anyone else until we are better off than we are now".

We will never get to a point in human history where society has every single thing it wants. At some point, regardless of the problems that are facing society, you have to be prepared to help other people as well. In the long run—and I think history will bear this out—the poor and the rich cannot live side by side: sooner or later the pressure of the poor on the rich will destroy the rich, and the only way of averting that is to ensure that the world is not divided into those two camps and at least an attempt is made to move one closer to the other.

I do not know whether the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche) attends the same caucus meetings as the hon. member for York-Simcoe, whether they talk to each other, whether they have the same leader, whether they are in the same political party. One would certainly not know if they were. Everything the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona has ever said about foreign aid has been repudiated and denounced by the hon. member for York-Simcoe. Which is the voice of the Conservative party? Are we to collect all the words and just cut them down in the middle? Is it the voice of the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona, or that of the hon. member for York-Simcoe?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Is it progressive, or conservative?

Mr. Saltsman: The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona looks like a positive progressive compared with the speech we heard today from the hon. member for York-Simcoe. With all these progressives and non-progressives, we are getting mixed up. It is not surprising when we have to put both these speeches in one context. The Conservative party cannot have it both ways. It is nice to send the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona around the country and to have him make speeches at Third World conferences or at the Couchiching conference. One would get an impression from those speeches that they are more progressive than the most progressive party in this country. Sometimes, when I listen to the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona, I wonder how we missed having him in the NDP, but obviously since he is able to sit very comfortably with the hon. member for York-Simcoe he does not belong in the NDP.

Mr. Lambert (Edmonton West): We don't all have the same uniform philosophy.

[Mr. Saltsman.]

Mr. Saltsman: It is true, and I appreciate that. There have been occasions when I have differed slightly from my colleagues; when I have strayed from the narrow path. But the fair question is: Who speaks officially for the party? What is the position of the Conservative party in this matter? Are we going to listen to the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona and say what he says represents the view of the Conservative party on international affairs, how we should be treating Third World countries and how we should be handling distribution of national income?

Mr. Stevens: There are no inconsistencies.

Mr. Saltsman: Even the fuse in the House of Commons could not accept that, and it blew. It was an act from above. Very seldom have I seen something like that happen. But surely it must be seen as some kind of repudiation of this position, as some kind of message.

I would like to deal with another question. Hon. friends on my right have a way of converting a program. A considerable number of the previous speaker's intervention was concerned with a recital of the balance of payments and the great gap in our manufacturing account that had to be offset by the importation of capital.

● (1650)

I certainly agree with the facts. He was not incorrect as far as the facts went, and I agree that this in fact is taking place. But what I waited for during that intervention was one sentence, two words, three words or at least a bit of an analysis of who contributed to the borrowing. To listen to the previous speaker one would think only the federal government contributed to this borrowing and only the federal government went to foreign markets. A breakdown of those figures would show that the bulk of that borrowing was done by provincial governments or their agencies.

Mr. Stevens: Because the federal government pushed them out.

Mr. Saltsman: The hon. member for York-Simcoe says it is because the federal government let them.

Mr. Stevens: No—pushed them.

Mr. Saltsman: All right. There is no doubt about it. The federal government has a way of doing that, but I would like to ask the hon. member for York-Simcoe some questions. If he can answer them now, fine. If he chooses to answer on some other, more suitable occasion, I will wait for that, because my questions are important. If he were minister of finance—

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Oh, oh!

Mr. Gilbert: You've just made me sick.

Mr. Jarvis: He couldn't be any worse.

Mr. Saltsman: The hon. member has all the necessary attributes: fine appearance, very nice voice, excellent writers.

He can put together all kinds of figures which have no meaning whatsoever, so he is highly qualified to be a minister of finance. I am sure he can wear a pair of new shoes as beautifully as our present Minister of Finance, or as the former minister of finance who graced that office and who is honouring the House today with his presence. If the hon. member for York-Simcoe were minister of finance, and if he were to see the provinces and their agencies going to the American market for borrowings, would he institute capital controls? Would he tell the provinces, "No, you cannot go"? Would he say to Hydro Quebec that it could not go to the American market? Would he say to the Manitoba government that it could not borrow for its projects? Would he say to the government of Ontario—and he might be listened to in this case—that Ontario could not borrow for hydro purposes in the American market?

Would the hon. member for York-Simcoe say to Arctic Gas Pipe Line Company that it could not borrow money in the United States to build any more pipelines in Canada? Or would he go further than that and say that no more pipelines could be built in Canada because there are not enough domestic savings? Even if we were to give everything the hon. member has suggested to the business community, we still would not have enough money to build pipelines, and we would have to import that capital.

On the other hand, does the hon. member not see that much of the foreign capital which is brought into this country is brought in because of the high value of the Canadian dollar and high interest rates? One does not offset the other. I think that because money is brought into this country our dollar tends to stay up. If the hon. member were minister of finance, would he set up a foreign exchange board, and would he say that from now on a province or provincial agency cannot borrow more than $50,000 outside the country without his approval or without the approval of a board which he would reluctantly set up because he does not like boards? Would the hon. member do that? Unless he is prepared to do so, while there may be some valid criticism directed toward the federal government, that is not the total picture of what is wrong with the economy. I do not think the hon. member's argument really adds in any substantial way, beyond its political connotations, to solving the problems of this country.

My time is drawing to a close: I have a few more minutes left and I want to deal with another question which always arises in these debates. There is no doubt that the present government has been inept. There is no doubt that this government has made all kinds of mistakes and is still making them. This government has its priorities all wrong and its social values all screwed up. But something else should be added to this debate, and that is that when something goes wrong in the country, it is not the fault of just the government. In fact, we have to look at the people who took the advice of the government and elected it, because the government certainly did not steal its way to power. It was voted in and it continues to maintain a fair amount of support. Part of the responsibility rests with the ordinary people of Canada. Problems are not created just by governments, whether they be provincial or federal. Problems are not created just by political parties, whether it be my party, my hon. friend's party or the government party. As a nation we are not doing well. Part of the reason is that we are badly governed, but another part of the reason is that people are not responding to the call to harder work.

We have had it pretty soft in this country, and we have been far too prone to keep blaming the other guy instead of looking at ourselves and admitting that part of the responsibility is our own. Perhaps what ultimately must be said is that this kind of malaise should never be ascribed to the people but, rather, to political parties. The government has the chief responsibility because it is the governing party and it is supposed to assume leadership. It has a responsibility to speak out and to call upon people to do the kinds of things necessary to get this country running again. The official opposition also has a responsibility to speak. It should not merely attack the government on this issue or that, or use selected facts to make it look as though nobody else is involved. I touched on that when I referred to the provinces.

My party has a responsibility which I think it is trying to live up to. That responsibility is to try to put the whole thing into some kind of perspective and to argue the morality of the situation, especially when it comes to something like the Bretton Woods Agreements, which is more than just a technical agreement or a technical document. We need to have a moral look at the world in order to understand the significance of the agreement and to argue the points involved.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard)—Health—Geriatric research—Request for support; the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall)—Regional Economic Expansion—Measures to provide alternative employment for those affected by closure of Labrador linerboard mill; the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle)—Public Service—Suggested compensation to those identified as being on blacklist—Alleged additions to the list.

It being five o'clock, the House will now proceed to the consideration of private members' business as listed on today's order paper, namely, public bills, private bills and notices of motions.

Income Tax Act

PRIVATE MEMBERS' MOTIONS

[English]

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I have discussed with my hon. colleagues on all sides of the House the matter of private members' business this afternoon and we have agreed that instead of dealing with bills this afternoon, the House should deal with a motion standing in my name, motion No. 33.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is it unanimously agreed that notice of motion No. 33 be discussed during the private members' hour today?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

INCOME TAX ACT

MEASURE TO EXEMPT INTEREST ON MUNICIPAL BONDS

Mr. J. R. Ellis (Hastings) moved:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act to exempt the interest of municipal bonds from income tax.

He said: Mr. Speaker, first I wish to thank hon. colleagues on all sides of the House for unanimously agreeing to make the change which was made this afternoon and to allow me to present a motion standing in my name rather than the bill which has been standing in my name for some time. In fairness, I must say that I intend to leave the bill to die on the order paper since the government has undertaken, through legislation brought into this House, to cover the majority of the points I had requested. It would seem to me, therefore, that there would be no purpose in leaving it on the order paper.

● (1700)

The motion that I propose this afternoon has just been read, but I am going to read it again. It is very brief and I think it carries a lot of weight. It reads as follows:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should consider the advisability of amending the Income Tax Act to exempt the interest of municipal bonds from income tax.

I want to begin by quoting from remarks made by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) in a speech to the Canadian Federation of Municipalities in Toronto on May 18. I am, of course, quoting out of context but I am sure the excerpts are capable of standing alone. He said:

I am deeply concerned about the high level of taxes—of all kinds—that the individual Canadian pays to school boards, municipal, provincial and federal governments. To this end, I stand prepared to press for meaningful reform of the municipal finance situation.

Later in the same speech he said:

As an immediate action, it is my intention to ensure that federal programs will be better able to respond to the needs and concerns of Canadians living in all types of municipalities, large and small, rural and urban, and that federal programs will be more flexible in taking account of the fiscal circumstances of municipalities.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner).]

Also, given the way I perceive the problem, I am prepared to consider any reasonable suggestion to bring forward a reform of the municipal finance situation.

In a very interesting speech to an important group of municipal representatives the minister said he was "prepared to press for" in one case, and in the second case, "to bring forward a reform of the municipal finance situation." That is what my motion is about, Mr. Speaker. I suggest that taking away the federal tax on the interest on municipal bonds will make a major change in the municipal finance situation.

I have to be slightly critical of a couple of the minister's comments, however. He referred to a statement he had made in Alberta in February of this year where he raised three possible avenues of assistance to cities in order to keep pace with providing adequate municipal services. He listed these as follows:

(1) increasing federal assistance programs for such projects as home rehabilitation, neighbourhood improvement and sewage treatment;

(2) transferring funds to the provinces under the condition that the money be passed along to municipalities; and

(3) establishing a direct tax rebate system to reimburse Canadians for some of the heavy tax load they now bear.

The problem is that in the first of these items the federal government would envisage taking funds they have already taken from the taxpayers and turning them back to taxpayers. Everyone is aware that the federal government takes something like 40 per cent along the way in overhead. I suggest that leaving the tax money where it is would make more sense than taking it with one hand and giving it back with the other.

The second proposition of transferring funds to the provinces with a condition that they be passed along to municipalities is very similar to a grant that municipalities used to receive from the provinces with strings attached—providing the municipalities did certain things. The government of Ontario did away with that kind of grant many years ago simply because grants with strings attached have never been very successful.

This motion is a major change and a major improvement. It is not entirely radical; the United States has been doing it for years. It is forward thinking, however, and in my opinion would be supported by all municipalities in Canada. Let me outline what I think the five aims of my motion are. First, it would reduce municipal costs; second, reduce municipal taxes; third, reduce the Canadian balance of payments; fourth, provide excellent investment for Canadians in all walks of life and, finally, increase federal taxes. I will deal with these one at a time.

The first is in regard to reducing municipal taxes. In his speech the minister referred to the debt costs of municipalities ranging from 10 to 20 per cent of their total budget. If we could cut back by removing the taxes on interest, of course, the interest would be much lower, probably ranging between 5 and 7 per cent instead of the 10 or 11½ per cent it has been running at. The savings compounded as the interest is compounded now would amount of half the debt service charges in time.

The second thing is the reduction of municipal taxes. Many members of this House have been involved with municipal councils over the years. I have spent more time on municipal councils than in this House. Members know that municipal taxes are only raised to meet costs; the municipal field does not have the ability to raise taxes for such extravagant programs as Canada Works, Local Initiative Programs and such things as that. Municipalities can only raise taxes to meet their obligations and do those things which are absolutely necessary. If the cost to municipalities by way of interest on their debentures could be reduced, they would turn that money back to the taxpayers either in reduced taxes or extended services. Just recently the city of Belleville passed its annual budget, and after much discussion added an extra quarter million dollars for repair to roads because it was found they were much below the standard for the province. That quarter million dollars could be doubled or tripled if their debt service charge were cut back.

What I have said so far is primarily the concern of municipalities. I hope my motion will be considered by the federal government, and therefore I must show there is some merit in it. One of the things that I think is most important is the reduction of our balance of payments. In discussion of Bill C-18, my colleague the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) expressed serious concern about the balance of payments. I would like to repeat many of the things he said, but I do not have the time. He made the point that countries with a high inflation rate, such as Canada, face high interest rates. That has been the case with municipalities, in their recent issues of debentures.

I have found from my research that municipalities, because they face large capital requirements and high domestic interest rates, have relied increasingly on foreign capital markets to meet their financing requirements. I have also found that a substantial proportion of net new issues are met with United States dollars. At the risk of boring the House I shall mention some statistics. Their source is the Bank of Canada Review, February, 1977, table 32, page S.71. I shall begin with 1973 figures, then quote figures pertaining to the last four years.

In 1973, the total gross issue of debentures amounted to $738 million, of which only 15 per cent was to be retired in other currencies. The figure in 1974 increased to $870 million, of which 27 per cent was to be retired in a foreign currency. The figure in 1975 increased to $1,417 million, of which 38 per cent was to be retired in a foreign currency. In 1976 the figure increased to $1,568 million, of which 52.5 per cent was to be retired in a foreign currency.

If one examines the foreign currency figures, one finds that in 1973 only 7 per cent of such obligations were to be retired in the currency of the United States. The figure jumped dramatically in 1974 to 29 per cent. In 1975 it reached 43 per cent, and in 1976 it reached 59 per cent. Clearly, the interest which flows to the United States returns not one cent in taxes to the Canadian federal government. Therefore, the Canadian federal government would lose nothing if it did not collect taxes on the interest paid by municipalities.

I was speaking of gross issues just now. My figures show that in 1976, 67 per cent of all new issues, almost $478 million worth, were in United States dollars. Let me make a point to my colleagues from Quebec. Naturally I, being from Ontario and having been involved for many years in the Ontario municipal system, am familiar with that system. I point out to my colleagues from Quebec that the situation in Quebec is even worse than it is in Ontario. I refer to the table "Net new issues of municipalities by provinces" compiled from the banking and analysis section of the Bank of Canada. In 1973, of the total $398 million-odd in net new issues, only 27 per cent was for Ontario, whereas 59 per cent was for Quebec. Of that, 20 per cent was a foreign issue.

Although I do not have all the latest figures before me, I point out that this figure has increased dramatically. Quebec's share of total Canadian new issues in 1974 increased to 63 per cent, of which 45 per cent was in U.S. dollars. That proportion in 1975 increased to 67 per cent, of which 44 per cent was payable in U.S. dollars. Although the figure dropped somewhat in 1976, I point out that 34 per cent of the Quebec issue was in foreign issue. From Quebec, $195 million went to foreign sources in 1976 to cover Quebec municipal financing. The federal government received absolutely no return as tax from that distribution of funds.

I return to my five points. Many Canadians are looking for safe ways to invest their money. We talk of "Mother Bell" as issuing safe, blue chip stocks. I suggest that the municipalities of Canada are equally safe investments. If one could buy their bonds without having to pay tax on the interest one receives such investments would be most attractive to all types of people.

This brings me to my last point, that such a tax exemption would actually increase federal taxes. When the former minister of finance heard of this idea, he turned it down flat on the ground that the benefit would accrue only to the wealthy in Canada. I refute that contention. Handled properly, this kind of investment would be available to unions, retirement funds, insurance companies and private individuals, rich or poor—in other words, to a cross-section of Canadian life. Further, the money paid in interest would stay in Canada and not go to some foreign country. While no tax would be levied directly on the interest paid, the money spent in this country would indirectly generate taxes. The people who are paid interest by the municipalities would spend the money on goods and services. The federal government could levy a tax on these goods and services. If a municipal government decides to provide more services with the money it saves, it is clear that the money will be spent on labour, with respect to which the government would levy income tax and on goods and services on which the government levies a sales tax of approximately 12 per cent.

If hon. members are not yet convinced that the federal government would actually receive more money if it decided not to tax the interest on municipal bonds, I could reinforce my argument with many more details and figures. Unfortunately, I do not have much time remaining. In the few minutes remaining I wish to quote a passage from Douglas Fullerton's book, "Provincial and Municipal Financing". On page 293, Mr. Fullerton quotes a Mr. Calvert who, speaking of the United States, wrote:

> The tax exemption for interest on municipal bonds is essential to state and local government, not only to obtain a much lower rate of interest on these bonds than would be obtained without such tax exemption, but more basically to protect their independent sovereignty under our dual state-federal system of government.

That point must be borne in mind. I also quote the words of Mr. Patrick Mahoney who, writing on the role of the Canadian government in municipal finance, said in part:

> There is no easy way that the federal government can intervene directly to improve sources of municipal finance. The British North America Act gives the federal government authority to raise taxes by any means whatever. Provincial governments can levy direct taxes only and can, of course, delegate to municipal governments all or part of that right. The federal government can delegate nothing directly to municipalities.

My motion suggests a legal and attractive way for the federal government to give the municipalities a piece of the federal action. Our municipalities desperately need such relief, which would be of benefit to overburdened municipal taxpayers who pay, with residential taxes, about 45 per cent of all municipal taxes. Our municipalities desperately need the relief which the federal government could provide without interfering with the rights of the provinces. They merely have to back off of one form of interest. I suggest it would do all of those many things that I have outlined.

I want to close with a very brief comment to my colleagues on the other side. Over this past year it has been my privilege and my willingness to allow a number of private members' bills and motions to pass through this House. I have personally made sure that consent was given. I have not lobbied on this matter one bit. I have not asked anyone that it be given consent. However, I suggest through you, Mr. Speaker, to those who are responsible that this is the way in which the federal government can make an excellent contribution to municipalities in all of Canada. I suggest to them that they might reciprocate.

Mr. Max Saltsman (Waterloo-Cambridge): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Ellis) for raising this most important matter. If the hon. member's bill were worded in a way that asked that this matter go to committee to investigate various ways and means of assisting the municipalities, I would be very much in support of it. However, since the bill restricts itself to only one rather unhappy method, I am not in the position to support the bill, as admirable as the intention of the hon. member for Hastings may be. I will give my reasons for that.

I have been a municipal councillor. I realize that some of the things the hon. member brings to the attention of this House are so. However, as a municipal councillor it has been my experience that the greatest benefit that people receive from their taxes is at the municipal level. I cannot think of any kind of tax that people pay for which they receive more services. I realize that taxes are quite high. However, we must realize what we get for them: education, police protection, fire protection, sanitary services, roads, welfare and social services, recreational services and housing services. I could go on. I do not know of any area of government in which the benefits are greater for the taxes paid.

There is one essential problem with municipal taxation. Of all taxes, including sales tax—because there are exemptions in sales tax—the most regressive are at the municipal level. If this measure were put into effect, would it reduce the regressiveness of the municipal taxes? It would not. It would lower the whole level of municipal taxes but the essential regressiveness would still remain. We would increase the total regressiveness of the system if taxes were not collected on municipal bonds. I will come to this matter of who collects it and the kind of revenues they get from it. I argue, in fact, that it would be transferred to the income tax. What we would be doing is taking this tax and making it a larger burden on someone else. I do not think it would be done, because the income tax is not as progressive as it should be.

The other point I would like to make is that the small bond buyer is already allowed a deduction of $1,000 a year. I do not know of very many people in the lower and middle income levels who collect more than the $1,000 in interest to which they are already exempt. The chief beneficiaries would be the very wealthy.

I am not suggesting that the hon. member for Hastings is doing it for that reason. I know him well enough to suggest that he is not. I know that his genuine concern is to find some way of helping the municipalities. However, I suggest this is the wrong and most costly way of doing it. This would help the very rich. In the United States, municipal bonds are a favourite tax haven of the rich. The suggestion made by every tax lawyer and tax accountant—

Mr. Ellis: And the big international unions.

Mr. Saltsman: It may to the extent that they are rich, too. I will not quarrel with that. I merely say "the rich", without singling out whether they are an organization, individual or whatever. Nevertheless, the point is the same. It is regressive.

If we are going to help the municipalities, surely we can find a better way than bringing in a regressive measure. There are ways of helping the people in municipalities. We are not talking about some coat of arms, as lovely as that may be: we are talking about the people who live in a city. The greatest help we ever provide to people in the cities is when we encourage senior citizens's housing and public housing. You can be selective in the sense of who you want to help. Not everyone in the city finds the taxes onerous. Wealthy people in the city are quite well off compared to poor people in the city. If we are to provide assistance, we should be more selective.

In view of the arguments the hon. member's party have made over the year about selectivity and helping, I thought he would have stayed away from these broad-axe approaches.

While they would be of some benefit to people in middle income groups, they would have a tendency to transfer their liabilities. Instead of the municipality having the tax to pay, the individual would have to pay it in some other way, probably in a more heavy way.

I want to deal with the central point of the hon. member's intervention. He stated we would not deprive the federal government of any revenue because, as I understood him, the money is raised externally. That would be true if the investment supply were totally elastic; in other words, if you had an investment supply that did not have any limits. We know that the investment pool is roughly of so many dollars. To the extent that you invest here, you do not invest somewhere else; you do not increase the pool of investment funds by providing additional investment opportunities. To the extent that you encourage one kind of investment by granting tax advantages, you simply shift from other sources.

At the moment, municipalities find it more advantageous to go to the American market in order to float their bonds. If it were more advantageous for the Canadian taxpayer to buy the municipal bonds, what would they do? They would buy them. There is no doubt that if you offered this kind of an advantage, there would be a flood into municipal bonds. Where would they get the money? They would take it out of other investments, investments in industry. The money is invested, no matter where it is. Even if it goes to a bank, the bank invests it. There is really no such thing as putting money in a mattress. There is really no money there. Most money is employed in one way or another.

To the extent that you provide an attraction for one kind of investment, you take it from another investment. Does the hon. member want to take investment out of industry, and thereby have all of our industry go to the United States, giving up ownership of our industry as well? If we have to go to the United States to borrow funds, the best thing to do is borrow in debt rather than sell out our industry as equity. That would be the consequence.

The argument that the federal government would not be disadvantaged from the tax point of view is only true if there is an unlimited supply of investment funds. However, there is not an unlimited supply of investment funds. What you get is a transfer of funds from one type of investment to another, depending on where the tax benefit is the greatest.

There is something else I want to argue against. We went through, and are still in it to some extent, this business of distortions in the tax systems. There are so many distortions and loopholes which encourage the government to move from one kind of investment to another.

What the Carter commission reported essentially was that a buck is a buck; that all income should be treated the same for taxation purposes. One important argument which they used, aside from the equity argument—which is a fair argument because from the equity point of view the people who benefit are the rich, not the poor—was that economically you set up distortion in capital markets. We have this distortion now. Some of it is deliberate. For instance, the government creates distortion through the tax credit system to encourage Canadians to invest in Canadian equities. There is distortion in the sense that some companies are encouraged to invest in mining, such investment being written off as a result of the last budget. Our whole tax system is riddled with this kind of distortion, and all of it is bad.

This kind of distortion over the long term is bad because when you channel money into one area you tend to say, "Instead of removing this distortion we must give higher bonuses in some other area to attract more money". Who suffers as a result? The federal government is the main sufferer, but provincial income tax also suffers. To the extent this revenue is diminished we have to take one of two courses; either we increase taxes or we reduce services.

It has been argued that many services can be done away with, and usually the example of Information Canada is given. Now we have got rid of Information Canada we do not hear very much about what kind of government services we are going to eliminate. In truth the really costly government services are in the form of transfer payments to individuals, rather than bodies like Information Canada. I do not think any political party, regardless of what is said on the hustings, would be prepared to dismantle the social welfare system in Canada today, with our old age security, family allowances and all the rest.

Therefore it seems to me that while the intent of the bill is admirable, and I welcome it because it would instruct the committee to look at ways and means whereby municipalities could be assisted by this form of tax exemption, I think the hon. member for Hastings would create, were the bill to receive approval of the House, very serious distortions in investment patterns, great inequity in terms of who gets the benefit, and ultimately the bill would be of no help to people in municipalities in that the money saved would go to the wrong people.

[Translation]

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, it is both a duty and a pleasure for me to support the motion of the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Ellis). I must congratulate him for having brought the attention of the House to the serious and urgent problem which most, if not all, Canadian municipalities are facing.

The hon. members for Hastings and Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) have made worthy efforts without however suggesting solutions or adding anything new. They seem to be quite complacent about a dead end, or to be going in circles, or robbing Peter to pay Paul, till such time as both Peter and Paul will find themselves destitute.

Mr. Speaker, several times my party and myself have drawn the attention of the House to the troublesome financial problems of municipalities. Obviously, at the rate municipalities, governments and school boards are going deeper into debt, the day will soon come when all taxes of every kind will no longer suffice to pay their debts, on the municipal as well as the provincial and federal levels.

Mr. Speaker, one only has to open a paper to read that such or such a municipality is forced to cut down on its staff, dismiss its police department, delay sewer and water works, and what not. So it is absolutely necessary and urgent that the central government take the bull by the horns and twist its tail hard enough so it will charge into the sacred precincts of the Bank of Canada to make it understand that it is high time it played the real role given to it by the Parliament of Canada, namely issuing the necessary credits for the development and expansion of this country by making loans at administrative cost to all levels of government.

It is a known fact that most municipal administrations find it very difficult to pay back their debts, and they must pay interest rates varying from 13 to 14 per cent. I have here before me an article of the La voix gaspésienne of last week, and I quote:

—Reduction in projected staff by the city of Chandler to reduce its budget deficit

—Difficult situation in the city of Gaspé, forced to reduce services because of lack of special aid

Mr. Speaker, all across Quebec you have the city of Montreal, the city of Quebec, my own town, Rimouski, where a water purification system and a new water system would be needed. It is always the same thing. Borrowing powers are limited and they can no longer go to borrowing markets because taxes would have to be raised and I think that taxpayers are currently overtaxed. So what do you do?

I think, Mr. Speaker, it is the duty of a government that calls itself fair and democratic to put an immediate stop to the debt orgy and usurious interest rates to allow both municipal and other organizations to reduce their debts and meet adequately the needs of the people.

Mr. Speaker, those are the few remarks I wanted to make on motion No. 33 introduced by the hon. member for Hastings. Once again, I think that all members should come charging back more often to bring the government to take its responsibilities and, as I suggested earlier, stop the hemorrhage, because tomorrow might be too late.

[English]

Mr. Maurice Harquail (Restigouche): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to enter this debate on private members' motions this afternoon. May I first of all join the hon. members for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) and Rimouski (Mr. Allard) in congratulating the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Ellis) on bringing forward this most interesting motion respecting tax exemption for interest on municipal bonds. I suspect my interest results from my having served for eight years in municipal government.

However, I also noted that in his opening remarks the hon. member for Hastings acknowledged that this government—in its usual dynamic way—had already implemented many of the points which he had to bring forward; that the ideas and views he had embraced in his original motion had indeed to quite a large degree already been not only considered but acted upon by the government.

● (1740)

Mr. Ellis: Mr. Speaker, just briefly on a point of order, may I point out the bill to which I referred, and upon which the government had taken action, had to do with drunk driving and not municipal financing.

Mr. Harquail: That is an interesting point. I am glad he has clarified exactly what he meant.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): They are not the same thing.

Mr. Harquail: Obviously not. With respect to comments made by members on the other side, I noticed this afternoon their financial critic, the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), had some disparaging remarks to attribute to members on this side of the House with respect to our not taking the opportunity to participate in debates generally in respect to fiscal matters brought before the House recently by the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald). One has to consider the cancellation of the Standing Committee on Consumer and Corporate Affairs as a result of non-participation by an appropriate number of members, particularly from the opposition, and the cancellation of two finance meetings because of lack of interest and members from the official opposition not showing up.

An hon. Member: Shame!

Mr. Harquail: One must also consider the man in the official opposition responsible for financial matters, the hon. member for York-Simcoe. He made remarks but failed to pay attention. He did not make sure his people carried out their duties and were present at these meetings.

The exemption of interest on municipal bonds from income tax would convey benefits which would vary greatly among provinces. Once it is noted the municipal debt per capital is lowest in the Atlantic provinces and highest in Alberta and Ontario, the distribution of benefits from the exemption can be seen as a measure which would increase the level of fiscal imbalance and work in the opposite direction to the principle of equalization.

I am confident the hon. member for Hastings did not have that in mind, albeit he represents a constituency in the province of Ontario. He would not want to be one who would suggest we do anything further to cause imbalance with respect to equalization for all Canadians across this country. Because of the variety of financing arrangements for local governments within the Canadian federation and the nature of the market for municipal debentures, this exemption would benefit, in general, the governments of higher income provinces and larger urban centres, more than those of the low income provinces and small or rural communities. Neither of these results commend themselves as part of an equitable response to any financing problems which municipalities may have.

In addition, a significant part of the benefits would flow to higher income individuals and larger corporations in the form of reduced taxes. I certainly go along with the comments made by the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge when he spoke about the rich becoming richer, or of this particular measure assisting people in that way. Neither of these results would commend themselves as part of an equitable response to any financing problems which municipalities may have. The provisions of such a means of tax avoidance is clearly not a desirable addition to the Canadian tax system. Because part of the benefit would go to individuals and corporations, the revenue loss to the federal and provincial governments is significantly greater than the value of the subsidy to the municipalities. It is thus an inefficient form of financial assistance.

With these brief remarks, I would like to point out that the member who brought in this type of motion should be commended. However, I had hoped he would go a bit farther and also consider some limitations, rather than just leaving it wide open in a give-away situation to the people with higher incomes, the larger corporations and the larger municipalities. I had hoped for something similar to the Canada Savings Bonds limits up to $20,000, $30,000, $40,000 or $50,000, so that it would not be a complete runaway situation.

Mr. D. M. Collenette (York East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to add my words to the debate on the motion of the hon. member for Hastings. It is a very worth-while motion, but one that must not be dealt with in isolation. In this sense I follow the prescription as outlined by the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman).

I will be brief because I know there is not much time left, and the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Finance (Mr. Kaplan) is most interested in this subject and would like to make a comment on it. Looking at the motion in the context of federal-provincial fiscal arrangements, it is implicit in the speech of the hon. member for Hastings that since the war provincial and municipal governments have been asked to take on an ever-increasing load of responsibility. I am referring to social responsibilities, and they need the financing to discharge their responsibilities.

In the 1960's there was a movement afoot, prompted by the social revolution in Quebec, toward more decentralization of federal taxation power to the provinces. Mr. Pearson, the prime minister at the time, acquiesced in the face of very strong demands, not only from Quebec but from Ontario and other provinces, and allowed more taxation revenues to go to the provinces to pay for increased social commitments. Ten years later, in 1977, we see across this country a popular movement, which is not a movement on behalf of the general public, but one stemming from provincial politicians and provincial public servants who say, "Look, the only way to keep this country together is for us to decentralize more, for the provinces to have more taxation revenues and more powers". As far as I am concerned, this kind of approach and direction toward Canada's future is fraught with danger.

The hon. member for Hastings talked about municipalities having to go to New York and overseas for finances. In Ontario, his colleague, who is seeking re-election, Mr. Davis, has been to Germany and Italy to get money for the province. We have seen a trend where municipal and provincial governments have borrowed money outside of the country. I agree it is a harmful thing for the Canadian economy.

Coming back to my theme in terms of federal-provincial relations, before we agree to a motion of this kind, the federal government and the provinces have to sit down to determine if borrowing by municipal and provincial governments abroad is in the best interests of Canada, before we talk about the general expenditures themselves. In the last couple of years Canada has become the most indebted nation in the world in terms of foreign borrowing. Implicit in the motion of the hon. member for Hastings is the fact that he wants us to continue in this vein. I am saying no. Before we take a piecemeal approach, as he is indicating, we should sit down at a constitutional conference to tidy up our Constitution and to eliminate the overlapping where the federal government intrudes on provincial jurisdiction. We should cut the costs and the waste there. We should not look only at transferring money to the municipalities, but we should say to the provinces and the municipalities, "Don't you think there are some fields of social policy and governmental policy where it would be better to divest authority in the federal government?"

I would like to refer to the example of education. It is unrealistic, at this moment, to think the federal government, by agreement with the provinces, could gain a greater role in education. I am not talking about post-secondary education; I am talking about lower education. This is relative to the motion, because in the province of Ontario and throughout Canada education costs are borne by the municipal taxpayers. I suppose we should go back to 1867 and the Fathers of Confederation. They gave jurisdiction over education to the provinces. In retrospect, some of the problems in this country with respect to national unity, the lack of understanding, the continuation of the so-called two solitudes, may have arisen from that decision. Before we take a narrow view as taken by the hon. member for Hastings we should look at areas in which the federal government can assume powers, presently given to the provinces, in the national interest. Obviously, I do not want the federal government to run the education system of the country. But we must adopt a system similar to that which we developed in medicare in which the federal government sets national standards.

There is a degree of portability attached to medicare plans and we should make similar provisions in the field of education. At the present time, if parents must travel from one part of the country to another their children suffer serious dislocation because of changes in the education system from province to province. A federal presence in education would alleviate the extent of this dislocation. It would also help the cause of national unity.

I am afraid my remarks have been somewhat disjointed. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for allowing me to inject some of my concern about constitutional matters in the debate on the motion put forward by the hon. member for Hastings. But I believe a case can be made out for saying that motions of this kind ought not to be discussed in isolation but in the context of federal and provincial fiscal arrangements. Notwithstanding the hon. member's intentions, and I am sure they are sincere, I believe that sending this motion to a committee or acting upon it at this time would be premature.

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, there is not much time left to me but I am glad to have an opportunity to contribute to this discussion because I wish to put some figures before the House, but before I do so I should like to extend congratulations, as others have done, to the mover of this motion. It is obviously an important subject. Many members on our side wanted to speak, and there has been participation from all parties.

The question of municipal financing is an extremely difficult one. Although we have been elected to a level of government which does not have direct control over this area, we nevertheless represent people and we come from cities, towns and municipalities: we cannot help trying to use the authority of this level of government to lessen the burden borne by the municipalities in one way or another.

The hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Ellis) referred to a speech by the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet). I read that speech with interest and I noted that three or four suggestions were made regarding ways in which the federal fiscal power might be used to alleviate the burden on the municipalities. I must say, with respect to the minister, that I disagree with his approach. I do not think the federal government ought to alter its fiscal policies so as to support municipalities. I say this with a great deal of regret.

For the federal treasury the cities and municipalities of Canada are a great source of revenue. I have not looked at the figures but it would not surprise me to find that the bulk of the revenues of the federal government come from taxpayers, corporations and individuals, within the larger municipalities. Why is it that the federal government is able to find these corporations and individuals such a rich source of revenue while the municipalities cannot? What is it that the municipalities lack which prevents them having the same access as the federal government to the incomes and fortunes of Canadians? To ask that question is to answer it. They do not have the power to tax in the way the federal government does. Who can give them this power? Is it this parliament? It is not. It is the legislatures of the provinces which possess the authority necessary to give the municipalities the jurisdiction which would provide them with a proper tax base. But for one reason or another they have not done so. They have left their creatures, the municipalities, starved for funds.

Hon. members may ask themselves what is the reason for this inaction. I think it is because the provinces are afraid to see the municipalities possessed of an adequate tax base. That is why we in Ottawa are under such pressure to help them out. But we are in a level of government which cannot do it in any effective way. It is the provinces which can do it.

It we do allow exemptions from income tax on municipal bonds to individuals and various enterprises we shall only produce the kind of situation which has existed for many years in the United States. It certainly results in a lower interest cost to the municipalities. But what is the over-all effect? A number of hon. members have called attention to some of the results—the regional inequities inherent in such an approach, the bias in favour of individuals with high incomes, and so on.

Mr. Ellis: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the parliamentary secretary is taking a very interesting approach, but he mentioned some interesting statistics he wished to put before the House. I wonder whether he would do me the courtesy of providing me with those statistics privately?

Mr. Kaplan: I would be glad to do so. They come from one of the studies done for the Carter Commission. They are not very recent but I would refer to one year, the year 1968-69.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. It being six o'clock the time set aside for private members' business has now expired.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

BRETTON WOODS AGREEMENTS ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE SUBSCRIPTION TO INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND AND INTERNATIONAL BANK FOR CONSTRUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) that Bill C-18, to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Mr. Speaker, I now refer to the 1966 debate when we considered some major amendments to the Bretton Woods Agreements Act. I have here this evening the official report of the debates. Second reading was pro forma. The main debate on the resolution was held in April 1966. At that time, for any legislation entailing some expenditure by the Canadian government there was a resolution, first reading, second reading, then consideration of the bill in committee and finally third reading.

[English]

Well, Mr. Speaker, it is very interesting to see why, going back to the debate of 1966 in which I participated on second reading. That debate was very short. A good deal more was said at the resolution stage. I would like to go back to that particular era in talking about this bill because I think that, notwithstanding that there have been changes in times, certainly there have been changes in the world situation.

I know there are some who believe that the Bretton Woods Agreement was written or inspired by the devil. To me that is totally false. Those of us who had the experience of pre-World War II monetary exchanges recall the absolute chaos, the dog-eat-dog atmosphere. As a matter of fact it was symptomatic of what was to come in 1939. It was just one of the symbols of one nation doing it to another as part of the so-called economic nationalism that came out of the economic depression of the 1930's. The world suffered as a result of World War II, there is no doubt about it, but then I would say that over the years 1933 to 1938 or 1939 as much human misery was inflicted on the world populace as a result of this international monetary warfare as was inflicted by the horrible ravages of war from 1939 to 1945. That latter part was measurable. At least one could put a finger upon it and seem to identify. At least there was a scapegoat for the suffering.

In 1937 I was a high school student travelling in Europe, and it was almost a daily joke to determine the value of the franc, the mark, the pound or the dollar as each tried to out-manoeuver the other. One of the hopeful lights of 1944 was the determination of men the world over, as they established the United Nations Charter and as everybody got hold of his good resolutions and put them back on the table, to start out with the Bretton Woods Agreement. Its original concept was modest, and I do not suppose under the circumstances—it being 30 years old—that one can quarrel with the decision that the United States dollar would be the primary reserve currency and that the pound sterling would be the second reserve or joint reserve currency. It worked for some considerable time. Oh, Canadians did not like it too much because our dollar was at a considerable discount to the United States dollar for a period. Then there were subtle changes. Of course they would be subtle changes; there is no such thing as a static situation in world international trade and commodity relations. Even the monetary market experience had some influences which, I think, by and large in the whole picture were wholesome effects of the checks and counter-checks to the excesses of a too rigid system dictated by men whose motives were not altogether altruistic.

We saw some changes in the 1950's. I remember in 1958 and 1959 being a member on the government side when there were minor changes in the levels of the membership subscriptions for Canada, and then in 1966 there was a wholesale change. Circumstances had changed considerably. By then we had seen the emergence on an independent basis of many of what we call today the developing nations. The colonial system had started to come apart, I suppose through the impetus of the United Nations, and then because of any number of reasons. It may have been a calculated move on the part of the Soviet Union and the United States in their already apparent conflict over domination. Even today the United States attempts to impose North American style democracy on people who are not suited to it. If only they could make up their minds that what is good for Washington, Los Angeles, Chicago and New York is not necessarily good the world over!

Over the years there has been a great deal of strife. Western Europeans and North Americans have been trying to impose their brands of democracy on all the peoples of the world. Let them be a little bit humble. Let them realize that people will achieve their potential, possibly under a modified system of their own choice, but let us not have North American leaders trumpeting about the world saying that all countries must assume a North American brand of democracy, because that will only fail.

On the other side, the Soviet Union has been very eager to obtain recruits for its views in the United Nations. So therefore we had a great rush in the 1960's and early 1970's to foment independence in many countries which were not ready for independence. Their economies and the development of their peoples have actually retrogressed as a result of this too hasty run into the so-called world economic race.

I remember the Commonwealth Parliamentary Association Confederation in Wellington, New Zealand, in 1965, and subsequent conferences, and I particularly remember when the Bretton Woods Agreement was amended formally to establish special drawing rights. Special drawing rights were on the International Monetary Fund side, but the mechanism for loans at low rates of interest to developing countries—in other words, that effort by developed countries to assist those who, in many instances, were pitchforked into the post-mid-twentieth century—was the World Bank.

However, immediately many of these countries looked upon special drawing rights as the teats on a prolific sow, another source from which to draw. Never mind that this in itself was doing damage to some of the countries concerned and that the funds that they might thereby draw would not be destined for the general improvement of their people, the Bretton Woods Agreement established one base reserve currency. Incidentally, there is not one comma, not one dot on an i nor one bar on a t which this parliament can change with respect to that agreement as presented in this bill. There are changes to the limits of Canada's qualifications, and this time there is formal inclusion in a bill rather than using a one dollar item as was done in 1970, and again in 1972, with regard to special drawing rights. There is an increase or change in the level of Canada's subscription, and also the determination of the value of the U. S. dollar as of July 1, 1944. These things are all now being crystalized and formalized in this particular bill.

We see the extent of Canada's commitment in the amendments to proposed new section 5 of the act. In proposed new section 6 there is a method whereby at a particular date Canada's commitment to the International Monetary Fund, its subscription, the value of its special drawing rights and any other commitments it may have—I can spell them out, for instance from the specification to the $1 item in the Appropriation Act No. 1, 1970, Vote L37b. This item reads as follows:

To authorize the Minister of Finance to provide for payment out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund to the International Monetary Fund in the current and subsequent fiscal years, in addition to the amounts authorized by the Bretton Woods Agreements Act, a sum of money equivalent to the increase in Canada's quota of $360,000,000 (U.S.) of which $90,000,000 (U.S.) shall be in gold, $3,600,000 (U.S.) in Canadian currency and $266,400,000 (U.S.) in non-interest bearing non-negotiable demand notes in Canadian currency, in such form as may be determined by the Minister of Finance, and to authorize the Minister of Finance to provide for payment out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund in the current and subsequent fiscal years, in addition to the amounts authorized by the Bretton Woods Agreements Act, a sum of money equivalent to $149,800,000 (U.S.) for the purchase of 1,498 shares of stock of the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, being in addition to Canada's subscription as a member thereof, of which a portion may be paid in cash, a portion in gold, and, pending cash requirements by the Bank, a portion in non-interest bearing non-negotiable demand notes, in such form as may be determined by the Minister of Finance.

Incidentally, Mr. Speaker, the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development referred to was the precursor of the World Bank.

That excerpt refers in part to what we are ratifying tonight.

The minister indicated in his remarks this afternoon that more and more there is a non-reliance on gold. Since 1966 when I participated in the committee hearings and in the debates at all stages of Bill C-144, which Bill C-18 purports to amend, there have been some changes. First of all, I think there was a fudamental change in the Bretton Woods Agreement in the effectiveness of the U.S. dollar as the base currency reserve because of the problems of 1970-71 in the United States. At that time the United States government was faced with the dilemma of unemployment and a run on its dollar. In order to stimulate its dollar the United States economy would have had to lower the interest rates. There were hundreds of millions, if not billions, of Euro-dollars chasing around Europe and elsewhere, arising out of Marshall aid and the continuation of the United States generosity in the rebuilding of Europe and Japan. This money, which had been invested in the United States at the then higher interest rates, of course took flight when interest rates were lowered to stimulate the domestic economy and was chasing higher interest in other parts of the world.

The picture repeats itself here in Canada. It repeated itself in Australia. It is such a familiar picture to those who understand a little bit about international monetary relations that it has become somewhat dreary—not only dreary but distressing to see the same mistakes repeated time and time again.

We saw the United States abandon the fixed price of $35 per ounce for gold. As a result of certain pressures from South Africa, the Soviet Union, France and others, the price of gold went crazy. It went to $170 per ounce and possibly higher. Some people paid $200 per ounce. That bubble burst, although the price is still well in excess of $35 per ounce, but then so it should be considering all the factors. It is much closer to reality than it was two years ago, however.

We have the unsolved problem of Euro-dollars chasing Euro-dollars and ending up in the pockets of a number of OPEC countries.

This whole situation has been turned around. The agreement to which reference is made in Bill C-18 does not in any way represent the situation today. The agreement was arrived at after a great deal of patient work and concessions. It had to apply all over the world and some people had to have their arms twisted behind their backs—there is no doubt about it. Cognizance had to be taken of countries, like Canada, which wanted to belong to the club, signed the request for membership, and then stepped outside. Since 1970, instead of being a regulated current account, we have applied ourselves to maintaining a fixed relationship with a base currency. For the second time Canada has said, "This does not apply to us. We belong to the IMF, but do not think we are going to be caught as we were in 1962, trying to maintain a fixed relationship."

Of course we have gone through crises. In 1962 there was a crisis. The Canadian dollar had been away over-priced and the world suddenly came up with the definitive answer, abetted by the then Minister of Finance who knew that our trade could only recover if our dollar came down. Certain aspects of that, I found, related to the economic nationalism of 1935 and the years before that.

In 1968 we had an even worse crisis, if the truth be known. It is only apologists for the then Liberal administration in the media who have failed to tell the people of Canada this true state of affairs with regard to that financial crisis of 1968. There was a deliberate suppression of information. It was available to the then Leader of the Opposition who, like the statesman he was, refused to engage in certain tactics which, while they might have been of some advantage politically to him and those of us who were his supporters, would have meant but a pyrrhic victory in so far as the Canadian economic system was concerned. It would have gone flat broke.

During the last year we saw a drive against the Canadian dollar, undertaken for certain reasons. Incidentally, I am not a great lover, a great admirer, of the Bretton Woods Agreements. I think it is too rigid. I think a creeping average was called for, an average outside the limits where it would have been possible to make money from arbitrage. At present such fixed limits for people involved in arbitrage are merely a licence to print money. We are on a so-called float right now, but few people in the world can afford to go back to the jungle of the 1930's.

How many people can adjust to measures for preserving order? When you introduce such measures some immediately say, "We are not going to abide by the rules." We have seen some highly questionable devaluations motivated purely by economic advantage and the thought of doing your neighbour "in the eye." To me that is distressing, far more distressing than some of the regulations it has been necessary to impose on some developing countries which think capital and revenue are merged in one and can be eaten at the same meal.

When this bill is before the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs I hope we shall be able to have the kind of discussion we had in March and April, 1966, with Department of Finance specialists in international relations. Let them explain to us the exact meaning of some of the terms we are discussing, because I do not think any member of this House is expert enough to say exactly what is meant by the term "International Monetary Fund," or by "the Bretton Woods Agreements," or to explain the terribly complicated system of international exchange, the workings of commodity accounts, or how exchange funds are manipulated for the purposes of earning an income.

How can one explain Canada's present shortage of development capital when Canadians and Canadian companies are investing $5 billion in the United States? Because of this government's restrictive measures, Canadians are investing in other countries. Their investments are welcome in the United States. You can see Canadians investing in New York skyscrapers, in buildings in Dallas, Fort Worth, Denver, Minneapolis—you name the place and you will find Canadian investment there. Our people are not only investing in property; they are investing in the production of goods. Why? The reason is obvious.

We, in Canada, have indulged in self-delusion on an enormous scale for the past couple of decades. We have built up huge social programs, inflated wages, shortened hours, and indulged in plain dodging at all levels of industry, from management to the floor sweeper. Apparently some have not learned that you cannot take more out of the economy than you put into it. Consequently, what do we have in Canada: excessively high unit costs of production, low returns, and Canadian individuals and corporations seeking to invest in the United States. Why are they investing in that country? They do not have to face the hassle of government there as we do here. There the government is not hell bent on hassling business and individuals to provide the economic base with which government can take care of the less fortunate.

Somehow or other, anyone who does something constructive in Canada is immediately fingered as a victim, as one who must be cut back to the level of the lowest common denominator, to the level of sheer mediocrity. That is what we have in Canada. Does that thinking extend to our international relations? It is one of the problems underlying our concept of the International Monetary Fund. These things must be examined in greater detail in committee.

I have nearly used up my time. I do not think I have changed my views greatly in the last ten years about the Bretton Woods Agreement. By and large it has worked well. It was never designed for the protection or enhancement of any one currency or group of currencies. It was designed for the well-being of the currencies of the world. There are pluses and minuses to the agreement, or, as some would say, to the agreement there is an upside and a downside. I hope the committee will find the time to consider this legislation, althought it has a surplus of other legislation it must consider. I hope officials will explain to us the workings of the international monetary system because, really, no individual member is qualified to add one cubit, one inch or one centimetre, to use modern parlance, to this bill.

In conclusion, I raise a point on which my party will insist. Bill C-18 is related to Bill C-5, and Bill C-5 is to be considered at the report stage. I have set down an amendment to Bill C-5, and I and my colleagues are adamant. There is no way the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) is going to receive reports from the Auditor General of Canada, to deal with as he sees fit. Those reports are going to be made to parliament, and on that point the Minister of Finance will find us absolutely insistent.

[Translation]

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Thank you, Mr. Speaker, for this opportunity to say a few words on Bill C-18.

Canada is about to make an important amendment to the Bretton Woods Agreements so that the contribution of our country could reach 1.357 billion dollars in special drawing rights. That initiative, Mr. Speaker, is certainly commendable because it shows unquestionable concern on the part of this country for the fight against poverty in the world.

Indeed, that amendment will allow an increase in Canada's subscription to the International Monetary Fund and to the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. However, that is not the purpose of my intervention tonight but rather the merits of the Bretton Woods Agreements. It will be remembered that that international agreement was initially intended to provide for the establishment of privileged trade relations designed to put the economies of war-tried countries back on their feet. That was in 1944. Two drafts were submitted at the Bretton Woods conference at that time, one called the Keynes draft prepared by the world renowned economist, John Maynard Keynes, and the other one by Harry Dexter White, special adviser on monetary issues to the Secretary of the U.S. Treasury. The conference passed, after discussion, the White draft. However, the author of the White draft cast a shadow over the Bretton Woods Agreements because he was later identified as a Soviet agent. So now we have to deplore the fact that the agreements did not bring the results hoped for.

Indeed, they had more of an accounting effect in the international play of the balance of payments than of fulfilling the hopes of socio-economic development they had given rise to at the outset. It is being realized today, Mr. Speaker, that the agreements allowed rather the richer countries to increase their wealth and the poorer countries to increase their poverty. There was a desire to protect European countries from the communist threat. However, we see that several Common Market countries must now face a stronger threat that could reduce the influence of those belonging to the free world.

That brings me to say that the Bretton Woods Agreements should perhaps be rethought after 20 years to allow, among other things, a real fight against inflation in all countries. All countries of the free world are complaining about inflation today. And, on the other hand, we see third world countries reducing considerably their borrowing or purchasing power. Money costs more and products have risen in price, so Third World countries are not advantaged.

In fact, we might say that the Bretton Woods Agreements have been more benefit to highly industrialized countries reducing more and more their geographic number while reducing also the number of the beneficiaries of those agreements. Of course, the states benefit from it as their balance of payments becomes positive but their enterprises do too. So, indirectly, multinational corporations are the most privileged.

Mr. Speaker, the danger is that so-called free countries lose some of their freedom because such agreements create the feeling that the freedom, the independence and the power of countries are too intensively related to the survival of their multinational corporations. It is dangerous to think that the failure of an enterprise might someday reduce the value of the national currency at the international level.

If South American countries got together tomorrow and nationalized American companies without any compensation, it would significantly reduce the value of the American dollar. It would be so if some countries refused to supply some American and Canadian processing industries.

The Bretton Woods Agreements did not deal with that issue and only provided for the creation of a monetary fund ensuring the stability of currencies and they also help countries with economic problems. However, we might wonder if those agreements with their lists and their statutes, are not killing very slowly our democratic system by encouraging development through big corporations. The communist countries have always followed the philosophy of Karl Marx who said that in its logic, the capitalist system was going to destroy itself. If you consider the inflationary spiral which benefits of course those who are rich and are not prepared to accept a reduction of their income, and if you consider that richer countries increase their wealth and that poorer countries are unable to recover, we seriously doubt the spirit of those agreements. According to the logic of the capitalist system it might have been better if those agreements had a social dimension paralleled with an economic or monetary dimension. It might have given less importance to the notion of profit and balance of payments which, I think, would have been more advisable.

It should be recalled, however, that our capitalist system is certainly the only one that allows the individual to express his creativeness and organization spirit. But such systems should not be allowed to promote the rising up of state movements in various countries, if there is no other way than state interference to cope with foreign business takeover. We must find a way in which countries will not have to become entirely dependent upon foreign businesses to restore their economy, thus depriving themselves in a non-independent or sovereign manner from their natural resources. The North-South Conference which is to start new sessions in Paris should bring about new hopes. This co-operative spirit between rich and poor countries did not exist in the original Bretton Woods Agreements. We hear a lot about a new economic order which will finally bring about peace among the people of the world.

I hope we shall be wiser this time and rather than moving in a direction which means 30 extra years of broken promises and expectations, we shall opt for an approach that will enable people to enjoy the benefits derived from our resources without being continuously threatened. The Bretton Woods Agreements have done nothing to solve major economic problems; they were simply the product of professionals and experts who are more interested in balancing international accounts than feeding the world populations. I wish to repeat, Mr. Speaker, that the willingness of this government to increase its contribution is not wrong in itself but the organization referred to should reflect for a while upon its true role and its importance to the promotion of a democratic living system. I suggest that the Bretton Woods Agreements have had more impact on accounting procedures than on social considerations. That was not their purpose but if the agreements had had a social impact, they would not have been too bad after all. Our democratic life style at the international level will probably be improved.

[English]

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, I want to begin by complimenting the minister on bringing forward Bill C-18 at this time in view of its important subject matter. We know that the intent of the bill is to ratify the IMF amendment to provide for an increased Canadian quota for the IMF and the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development. The purpose of my intervention is to make some comments concerning a passage in the minister's speech this afternoon in which he suggested that all of us ought to remain sensitive to the difficult circumstances developing countries face through higher energy prices and a drop in export earnings.

I want to make some comments of a constructive nature about the ramifications of the Bretton Woods Agreement and the revision of the IMF which has now come about and has led to Bill C-18, but before doing so I have to deal with the comments of the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman). This afternoon he made some comments which I thought displayed a somewhat myopic view. He spent considerable time responding on behalf of the NDP and trying to drive a wedge between myself and the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) who had replied to the minister on behalf of our party.

The hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge made what I consider to be a rather silly attack when he offered, first of all, a premature judgment on the alleged differences between the hon. member for York-Simcoe and myself. I say that because I had not yet spoken when the hon. member attempted to drive his wedge between us. I suppose he did so on the rather spurious ground that the hon. member for York-Simcoe was taking a domestic view of Bill C-18 whereas I would be looking at its international implications.

I suggest to the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge that when the hon. member for York-Simcoe and I are talking about a stronger Canada being necessary in order to fulfil international responsibilities, we are talking about the same thing. The hon. member for York-Simcoe made a very strong attack on the economic performance of the government, an attack which I share. The hon. member was warning against high interest rates, trade imbalances and secrecy of negotiations, and he concluded his speech by saying that he does not want Canada to be bailed out by the IMF in the same way the U.K. has been bailed out.

When I look at the performance of the government, and particularly at the way we signed our name to the London communiqué which issued from the Downing Street summit a couple of weeks ago, it is a matter of great concern to me that when we espouse rather high flowing concepts about how aid to developing nations ought to be improved through international conferences, we do so without at the same time recognizing that we have been unable to solve unemployment in our own country. That is the point that the hon. member for York-Simcoe was making and the nuances of the point seem to have been missed by the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge.

I find the hon. member's attack rather silly, as mine would be were I to attack the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge for a point that he made toward the conclusion of his speech. He made the rather interesting point that part of the reason why we are not doing well in this country is that people are not responding to the call for harder work. His own leader travels around the country making telling points about how hard it is to get work in this country, and I wonder whether his own leader would agree with that kind of comment. However, I am not going to attack the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge since I recognize that he brings a perspective to Bill C-18 which might be different from that of his own leader and the two of them can work out their own approach. I say only that I think it is very unfortunate that the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge attempts to imply that the Progressive Conservative party is talking out of both sides of its mouth in regard to improved relations with developing countries.

If the hon. member wants to know what our policy is, I can tell him what it is, in a nutshell. Our policy, which is the basis for my remarks tonight and I know is fully shared by the hon. member for York-Simcoe, is that international co-operation is now a prerequisite for peace and stability. The primary purpose of economic growth should be to ensure improvement of conditions for all so as to allow every individual on earth to fulfil the basic right that he has to food, shelter, health care, education and employment. These are the things for which we stand. We believe that it is high time we should stop talking negatively about the problem of the rich-poor gap in the world and should start talking positively about the structural changes which are coming into play and which will lead to an improvement, in human dignity right around the world.

We share the view offered by the Secretary General of the Commonwealth, Mr. Shridath Ramphal, who pointed out to the sub-committee on international development meeting here in parliament a few weeks ago that the improvement in the living standards of developing countries is not only consistent with, but necessary for, the preservation of high standards of living and continued improvement in the quality of life in the "have" nations. In other words, improving the purchasing power of people in the developing regions will lead to increased markets for goods from the developed countries.

Unlike the NDP, we are not advocating merely redistribution of a static world income; what we are advocating is that the higher incomes sought by the poor through commodity arrangements and better access to rich country markets will signal the potential for significant growth in world economic activity. That is the basis for the realistic policy which our party offers on international development.

It is against that background that I now consider Bill C-18 and return to the comments made by the minister in connection with his deepening sensitivity, and those of other members through ministerial representations at the IMF, about the deep problems of the developing nations which now constitute the great majority of the membership of the IMF. The IMF now has 128 members, of whom more than 100 are classified as developing nations.

In considering Canada's role in the revised IMF agreement, I think Canada has a new opportunity to direct our international efforts toward accelerating the process of what I call structural transformation in developing nations. The need for this structural transformation has been made very clear by the final report of the Commonwealth experts group entitled "Towards a New International Economic Order", which was issued on March 14, 1977. As the House knows, the Commonwealth experts group, including the distinguished Canadian, Mr. L. A. H. Smith, Canadian High Commissioner to Barbados, has been meeting now for two years and has published the third and most definitive of its reports on what needs to be done in order to make some structural progress in improving the self-reliance of developing nations. We must remember the Commonwealth experts' report is of particular significance to this House because of our own role in the Commonwealth and also because the Commonwealth contains 80 per cent of the one billion people who live in the Fourth World, that is, one quarter of humanity—people who live with incomes under $200 a year. The ten Commonwealth experts have emphasized that if present trends continue the balance of payments situation of developing countries will become progressively unmanageable. Even under optimistic assumptions prevailing growth rates will not result in any reduction in the income gap between the developed and the developing countries by the end of this century.

I would like to interject here by pointing out the seriousness of the growing gap between the rich and the poor, despite 25 years of foreign aid which is now outmoded in its concept completely. The significance is revealed in the report of the subcommittee on international development. That is the report which was tabled in this House last Thursday. It makes the very telling point that the debt of the developing nations has now increased to $165 billion. That is the total debt of developing nations toward the developed nations. Over a ten year period that is an increase from $35 billion. The situation is getting worse as a result of the increased debt which the developing nations are accumulating. I will speak about the causes of that in a moment.

Structural transformation requires many changes in the relationship of developing and developed countries concerning commodity agreements, transfer of technology, and renewed access to capital, which is the most important, by the developing countries. Structural transformation requires a policy framework within developing countries which encourages high levels of productivity and innovation. It is not enough to talk about the responsibilities of the developed nations to move toward better international arrangements. That would only be a rhetorical exercise, unless those changes are accompanied by internal efforts within the developing nations. These efforts should lead to a widespread commitment to the development effort aimed at the whole of society rather than the privileged few. It is a two-pronged attack on closing the gap that is at the heart of the United Nations' message to the whole international community through the series of forums which are going on presently.

The international community has a primary responsibility to find ways and means of ensuring developing countries get the necessary resources they need from outside for their development. These structural changes will require modifications to existing international arrangements. That is what we have before us tonight. Only in this way can minimum levels be reached in all countries. As the Commonwealth experts insist, this represents a precondition for the achievement of greater stability within the international community and of world peace.

We need to adopt more pragmatic approaches in assessing the developing needs of individual countries. One of the tasks to which industrialized countries have addressed themselves is the alleviation of the foreign exchange constraint in developing countries. I have spoken of the immensity of the problem the developing countries are facing with their international debt now up to $165 billion. We ought to view these problems in positive terms, rather than just negative terms.

We must remember what Mr. Ramphal said to the subcommittee on international development. It is essential for developed countries to take part in improving self-reliance within the developing countries in order to expand the buying power within those countries, thereby providing very large and new markets for the people in the developed countries. Thus, it is very much a self-interest argument we are advancing. We know a number of steps have already been taken in international forums such as UNCTAD IV and now SEAT, which is coming to a conclusion in a week or so.

[Mr. Roche.]

Without going through the wide spectrum of measures which are before international forums now, such as commodity agreements and the transfer of technology, I want to concentrate on the field of finance, which is proper under the terms of this bill. Commonwealth experts have said that decisions were taken by the interim committee in Jamaica, the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank, which sought to reconcile the positions of the developed countries on financial questions.

Given a very brief review of what has gone on in the past year or two, it is important for the members of the House to consider Bill C-18. We will note that floating exchange rates have been legitimized, and countries have been given the option to adopt any exchange system they wish. The official price of gold was abolished and the principle of making SDRs the principle reserve asset was accepted. The conditions of access to the IMF compensatory financing facility were liberalized, and the oil facility was discontinued. The trust fund, which is funded from the profits of the sale of one sixth of the Fund's gold and from voluntary subscriptions, is expected to accumulate $1.5 billion over four years and will be used to provide balance of payments support to the poorest countries. That action probably led to the minister's use of the word "sensitivity" in his address this afternoon. Moreover, the quotas in the International Monetary Fund were increased by approximately one third, and marginal changes were agreed to in the voting pattern of the Fund to give a greater voice to oil producing and exporting countries.

The capital of the World Bank was increased by $8.3 billion, and the decision was taken to freeze the bank's growth lending at $5.8 billion and to increase the cost of loans made by the bank. Agreement was reached on the fifth replenishment of IDA of $7.6 billion which would just maintain the real value of IDA lending over the next three years.

However, there are many areas where decisions and action are still required. One of those areas is the decision which still remains to be taken on the proposal to liberalize the IMF compensatory financing facility in a way which would stabilize, around a growing trend, the real export earnings of developing countries from commodities. That is the heart of my message to the minister tonight. I would ask him to consider the improvements which need to be made in the way the Commonwealth experts have suggested. The existing scheme still restricts drawings under the facility, both in respect of annual amounts as well as in the aggregate, to percentages of a country's quota in the fund.

The international community has not yet addressed itself to the problem of how to deal with the change in the balance of payments needs of developing countries in the new circumstances which the non-oil developing countries face. Moreover, attention has not yet been given to increasing the supply of development finance to these countries on the scale required by the capital investment which they must undertake if they are to satisfy their basic needs in an acceptable period of time.

The Commonwealth experts are critical of the fact that internationalization of control over liquidity creation has not been advanced. I will quote a sentence from their report to indicate the way in which they would like it to move forward. It reads as follows:

Measures to increase the access of the developing countries to the credit facilities of the IMF on a scale, and under conditions which would have regard to their balance of payments needs, and the establishment of a link mechanism between SDRs and development finance, remain in abeyance.

In other words, consideration is asked for linking SDRs and aid. For a long time we have played around with that concept. As one who studies the developing field, I cannot understand why progress has not been made on the linkage between SDRs and aid. The movement of the IMF in the agreement before us is a step in the right direction. We need the support of industrialized countries to take another step forward.

On the question of debt, decisions still remain to be taken on the adoption of guidelines for a generalized solution to the problem of alleviating the debt burden of the non-oil developing countries.

I would therefore ask the government to give serious consideration to implementing the financial recommendations made by the Commonwealth experts, and particularly to consider the principle of building up the SDRs as the principal reserve asset and one which can be a new instrument in the structural transformation of developing countries. SDR allocations on a link basis rather than the IMF quota basis would require smaller aggregate allocations, since countries with adequate reserves would not need to be provided with additional SDRs. In this way the application of SDRs to developing countries could be enhanced. Improved access to existing fund facilities is only part of the larger package of measures needed for dealing with the problems of disequilibrium in the developing countries. Other measures in that package, the Commonwealth experts note, would include traditional capital flows such as development assistance and private investment, all being required to finance the establishment and fuller utilization of the needed production and infrastructure facilities.

We have had a lot of experience in ways of trying to help developing countries, and when the Commonwealth experts offer us some of the lessons of that experience we ought to listen. The first of these lessons is that as long as developing countries depend predominantly on primary commodity exports the gains from resource transfers will be substantially offset by falling and unstable earnings from commodity exports. Arrangements for the stabilization of primary commodity markets are therefore a necessary condition for realizing the fullest advantage from resource transfers. It is in this spirit the suggestion is made for increasing capitalization flows in the developing countries so as to help them become self-reliant and halt the apparently never-ending cycle of increasing aid which, in the end, only makes the problem worse since most of the aid which must come from other countries includes a servicing factor which compounds the debt.

I believe we ought to increase the momentum of development beyond the merely holding operation so far achieved. For example, the Commonwealth experts look to structural transformation to finance works on a scale which some find it difficult even to envisage at present. For example, programs to arrest the southward movement of the Sahara Desert in the Sahial area, flood control and protection against typhoons in Bangladesh, rural electrification and the provision of pure water supplies in many areas of the world. The experts believe that this would require both a substantial stepping up of bilateral efforts and further strengthening of multilateral and regional institutions. Of course this means maintaining ODA for the time being and recognizing that, instead of going ahead, the industrialized countries are falling behind in commitments. Developing countries not only need an increase transfer of resources but the assurance of a continuing adequate flow in automatic ways.

I want, for a few moments now, to complement the findings of the Commonwealth experts by drawing attention to the report of the sub-committee on international development which has now produced its second report—the first was issued last year. This report, which was tabled in the House last Thursday, deals with the debt problem. The debt problem might not sound very interesting, but as we get into it we realize that the debt I spoke about a few minutes ago is a manifestation of the need for structural changes to be put into effect, changes which were never anticipated when Bretton Woods was set up following the Second World War, for one reason because most of the nations which were members of the IMF were not even in existence at that time.

As we consider what the sub-committee has reported—I might add that this report carried the unanimous support of all parties which participated in its preparation—I might say that the debt picture is complicated to the extent that most of the debt is owed by countries which are in the middle to upper range of the Third World, that is, countries which have a growing capacity to repay their debt. The debt is not held in large measure by the least developed countries, the reason being that they do not have credit or reputation to justify creditors extending large amounts of funds to them, certainly not in commercial or private terms.

The debt which the least privileged countries have accumulated comes in large measure from international development assistance. It is certainly no concern of mine that the developing nations have difficulty in paying that debt. I think they will repay it eventually though I believe some rescheduling arrangement will have to be made. It is in the interest of the private institutions which hold this debt in the developing world to put pressure on the industrialized countries, probably at CIEC as well as in other international forums, to reschedule the repayment provisions, possibly on a case by case basis so that there will be no defaulting. But, as I say, that is not my principal concern.

I am concerned about the way in which the nations of the developing world are piling up debt because they cannot find ways to industrialize their structure or to acquire capital in the manner in which the Bretton Woods Agreement was originally meant to make possible in the case of countries which are very much in the driver's seat in the world. The developing nations need access to capital if they are to achieve any form of self-reliance. There arises, then, a debate between the developed and the developing countries. It began in terms of polarization with demands of a somewhat impossible nature being put forward by the group of 77—it now numbers more than 100 nations. For example, they wanted the cancellation of the whole of the ODA-related debt or its total rescheduling. These were steps which it was totally impossible for the developed nations to accept. The developed nations, for the most part, turned an unsympathetic ear to the message which was coming through, namely, that there would have to be changes which would go far beyond aid.

I believe Canada has shown its good faith by writing off the debt owed by Bangladesh, a country which is perhaps at the lower end of the Fourth World scale. But perhaps we have not felt, because we are not contributing to the horrendous figures of international debt, that it is our responsibility to take any leadership role in finding a solution. It is there that I find government action or, to be more correct, inaction at fault. First of all, it is in Canada's interest to note that, of the total debt picture, $9.8 billion is owed to Canada through commitments made through the Canadian International Development Agency, the Export Development Corporation, as well as private banks, and therefore Canada's involvement in the solution to the debt problem indicates that we ought to be more aggressive. That of course was the finding of the subcommittee on international development. The subcommittee report states:

The government does not look favourably on debt relief in the form of a cancellation of debt, conversion of loans to grants, or waivers of payments.

That may be all very well, but I think it would be better if we, as the subcommittee has noted, supported and promoted the creation of multilateral mechanisms designed wholly or in part to provide balance of payments support for the developing countries, notably those mechanisms connected with IMF.

This brings us to the obligation to take initiatives. I will indicate one or two initiatives which the subcommittee thought it would be useful for the government to take. I think, now that we have Bill C-18 before us, it is certainly the moment to give consideration to these views. The first is as follows:

Canada should press for the establishment of a mechanism and procedures for the multilateral renegotiation of debt which will ensure balanced representation of the legitimate interests and needs of both debtors and creditors.

Canada should advocate an international agreement on a set of flexible guidelines concerning how the mechanism would be activated, the factors which would be investigated and taken into consideration and the broad types of policy measures which might be proposed for the debtors and the creditors.

In other words, this is a specific way in which Canada would press an international forum for a mechanism that would, first of all, deal with debt as it is now constructed and, secondly, lead to a way in which there would be a better allocation of existing capital in the world in the manner that the IMF is beginning to talk about. This will, of course, mean our involvement with an increasing number of multilateral, development oriented institutions, such as the World Bank. As we do that, I hope we will press for an international agreement on a set of flexible guidelines concerning how such mechanisms would be activated and the factors that would be investigated and taken into consideration in each case.

In summary, what we see now—and certainly the subcommittee made this point clearly—is a need for improved and expanded multilateral balance of payments support, specifically in the IMF. While the IMF was not originally concerned with developing countries, as was noted by the subcommittee, access to its facilities was roughly proportionate to the national wealth. Now we know it is changing. In recent years it has paid them increasing attention, for example, through the establishment of the compensatory financing facility and the oil facility, and in discussions of the proposal for an SDR link. What is more, through the route of the subcommittee on international development we came to the same conclusion that the Commonwealth group of experts arrived at, namely, that the time has come to advance the idea of an SDR aid link. The subcommittee said it welcomes these developments and urges the further expansion and liberalization of such facilities.

Before I put the report of the subcommittee aside I must note one of its recommendations because it is of such importance as the House begins to consider not only Bill C-18 but the work of the north-south conference that is bringing together such an array of complex instruments which will have to be brought into play to close the rich-poor gap, instruments such as commodity agreements, trade liberalization, transport technology, and improvements in the IMF.

What the subcommittee states is that there is a very urgent need for some central body to gather and report information on all important aspects of Canada's economic relations with developing countries. Such information would include debt, both public and private, as well as aid, trade, and other relevant statistics.

I find a great amount of difficulty—the minister may not because he has a lot more help than I do—as I try to bring together in my mind the various ways in which our government is responding to the whole development question in the developing world, as we try to reconcile the various policies of the government implemented by aid through CIDA and the spending of $1.1 billion, and the problems it has with trade liberalization and industrial adjustment programs that we are beginning to talk more and more about, and international financing agreements. I think it is in the interests of the government to reconcile those policies, not only with an interdepartmental committee that may be meeting on an ad hoc basis, but in some formal instrument.

That is why I think the time has come for the appointment of an advisory committee on international development to be made up of representatives not only of the House but representatives of business, labour, the academic community, churches, those main bodies in our country, particularly NGOs who have a constructive interest in bringing together the policies of the government, so that if we are at least going to take a pragmatic view, and if we are going to spend $1.1 billion just on CIDA, we should try to have all our policies harmonized so that we could get better value for the money we are giving. Only in this way can parliament and the general public begin to understand the interrelationship of issues, problems, and performance of Canada's response to the UN's call for a new economic order. That is the thrust of the subcommittee's report.

I conclude on that note and ask the minister, when he closes the debate, to give me a response as to whether or not the SDR aid link is a realistic policy which should be given serious consideration at this time inasmuch as serious bodies are bringing it before us. The ultimate goal should be the evolution of IMF into institutions performing functions in the international sphere similar to those of a central bank in a national economy. That is the way the world is going and I think it is in Canada's interest to advance in that way.

We need to stress a more balanced participation in the decision making process of the Fund by all groups of countries, including the developing countries. The present serious imbalance between the developing countries in the control and management of international financial institutions is a consequence of transplanting to the sphere of these institutions the principle of voting rights being proportional to financial contribution. I am quoting from the Commonwealth experts' report which states that this principle, which may be appropriate in the corporate sector in an industrial society, is not necessarily valid in relation to the purposes of international institutions. For this reason, the capital structure and voting rights in the regional development banks which were established later are different. We could learn from the original Bretton Woods Agreements. A similar approach needs to be adopted in the case of IBRD and IMF.

That is my approach to Bill C-18. I hope that when we get to committee, some of the details of the bill can be worked out, but I want to rest my case finally as I restate it again, because I want to make clear the thrust of my view that we should consider developing countries should have a priority call on SDRs through some form of linked mechanism. We can see that there are no insurmountable technical difficulties to the establishment of such a link, and its inauguration need not await the completion of a comprehensive package of further reforms in the international monetary system.

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to take part in this complex debate this evening on the very esoteric subject of international finance. I have an historical interest in the debate. In my first term in parliament I resolved at one point never to let an opportunity to debate the subject of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank to go by without saying something.

I have been moved to study Hansard for December, 1945. That is when the original debate on the Bretton Woods Agreement took place, and I found it very interesting to read some of the speeches which were delivered at that time. There is one conclusion which can be drawn from reading those speeches, and that is that anybody who said anything derogatory about the Bretton Woods Agreement, whether living or dead, has become a minor prophet, because all of the predictions have come true.

Whether there is a direct casual relationship between the predictions and the Bretton Woods Agreement is hard to say, but I can give examples. "In the end it will mean the dissolution of the British Empire." That was said by a former member of parliament for Broadview, not the present member for Broadview by any means, as the hon. member would be quick to point out. Those words were spoken by a Mr. Church. Certainly the British Empire has dissolved, and the prophecy has come true.

Mr. Church said later in that same address that, and I quote, "It will cause dearer money". There is just no doubt about that, as anybody who has tried to borrow from any lending institution lately knows. It was described as "a scheme to put United States gold to work." We can recall that at the end of the Second World War there was great concern about the amount of gold amassed by the United States over the years. That prediction was made by a former member for Lethbridge, Mr. Blackmore, and of course it also came true. What he did not predict at the time was that we would see the United States transferring a great deal of its gold to France, for example, but it certainly has been put to work since the original agreements. Mr. Blackmore also said that the agreement was "a mechanism for binding the moneys of all the nations to the United States dollar," and that certainly came true.

The hon. member for Edmonton West (Mr. Lambert) has spoken at length about the Euro-dollar and the role it played in the years between then and now. He too was a prophet in his time.

Another speaker in that debate, a Mr. Quelch from Acadia, said, "Nations will be forced further and further into a state of unpayable debt". The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche), who preceded me, reminded us of that prediction and how terribly true it was.

Mr. Quelch also said the agreement was "an act of treachery against the British Commonwealth of Nations", which echoed the original statement by Mr. Church. Again one suspects that the Commonwealth of Nations is not now in the shape it was at the time of the original debate.

Forecasts were gloomy, and the results have not in many ways been good, save in allowing a large part of the world to trade more freely and for the standard of living of a great part of the world to rise. One suspects that the stabilization of currencies had something to do with freeing trade, but again we have reached something of a crisis point. I have a feeling that anyone in this debate who is prepared to make a gloomy prophecy could probably find, given 30 years' time, that he would turn out to have been rather prophetic as well.

The setting up of the International Monetary Fund and the World Bank was fought by the then Social Credit members in the House. In fact they launched something of a filibuster while denying all the time that that was what they were about, and they held up the passage of the original bill. I was a little disappointed this evening when I was listening to the Social Credit member who preceded me in this debate because the old fire did not seem to be there.

In the statement which was read to us there were actually words of praise for the International Monetary Fund and for its role in present trade. There were some rather optimistic forecasts as well. I should think that if some of the people who spoke in that debate in 1945, wherever they are, were to get word of this, they might be readjusting themselves slightly in their graves.

However, one thing they would all recognize is that in addition to the International Monetary Fund there is now a Special Drawing Right. That was just being considered during my first term in parliament, and in reading the material which was being made available at that time describing the Special Drawing Right I recognized pure Social Credit, and one can find confirmation of that in articles written much later. The Economist of July 6, 1974, for example, talking about the re-evaluation of the Special Drawing Rights, said, and I quote:

> When SDRs were first created in January, 1970, as reserve assets, literally out of thin air, a unit of SDRs was given the weight of gold equivalent, at the then official price, to one dollar.

The reference to thin air is true because here we have for the first time money which is created and value which is created out of nothing. The same article from which I quoted goes on to illustrate dramatically the basket in which the value of SDRs is set now. It is made up of U.S. dollars, 40 cents; the South African rand, 0.8 cents; the Austrian schilling, 22 groschen; the Spanish peseta, 1.1 pesetas, the Norwegian krone, 9.9 oere; the Danish krone, 11 oere; the Australian dollar, 1.2 cents; sterling, 4.5 pence; the French franc, 44 centimes; the yen, 26 yen; the Canadian dollar, 7.1 cents is our proportional share; and a few other currencies are listed as well. I always look a little suspiciously at graphs like that. It is described as a basket.

The hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona knows how, when one comes into international terminology, whether it be with regard to aid, to the international fund or whatever, people love to use the word "basket". I always find it amusing and wonder why it is used. I presume it has to do with Little Red Riding Hood and the basket she carried to her granny, because there was an air of innocence about all that and perhaps a bit of solidity too. I suspect that part of the reason for shaping up the SDR with all these currencies involved is to suggest to the public that it is not really made out of literally nothing but is solidly based, which is, I suspect one of the reasons why it has not been terribly useful in solving the problems of the Third World.

[Mr. Johnston.]

It is still a rather difficult concept to grasp, and various speakers in the debate have mentioned how difficult it is to wrap one's mind around this whole monetary business. I do not claim to be an expert on it. One goes along rather intuitively, guessing and grasping at it and trying to bring it within some kind of scope of reason, but it is not easy.

● (2140)

Writing about the Special Drawing Rights in The Conference Board Record, John Hein puts this proposition:

> Suppose someone offered to give you, for free, ten blue $10 bills to put in your savings account alongside your "regular" money ("greenbacks"), provided you agreed to abide by some rules. First, your "bluebacks" could only be used to buy "greenbacks", and then, only when you needed to balance an overdrawn checking account; second, you must be willing to exchange your "greenbacks" for the "bluebacks" of the overdrawn person when you have a surplus in your checking account. Would you take the deal? You would probably answer, "Yes"—if you thought everyone would work together and no one would abuse his privileges.

It seemed to me that might be a sort of handy guide, but even so I agree with the article in the publication World Financial Markets for August, 1975, which states, on page 11:

> The IMF SDR is still surrounded by too much mystery and obscurity to gain quick acceptance as an international currency and standard of value.

That is part of the problem that we wrestle with in this debate this evening.

Another area that we have to be concerned about is the Third World debt reaching $165 billion. Six per cent of that is owing to Canada, according to the report already mentioned of the subcommittee on external aid of the Standing Committee on External Affairs. It is a rather disheartening account when we realize that such a vast sum of money is debt owed by the Third World and that a greatly increased proportion of that is owed to private banking interests—51 per cent in 1976 compared to 31 per cent in 1967. This would strongly suggest that the Special Drawing Right has not really been serving its role as fully as it might.

The business section of almost any newspaper reports on the problems that some nations have. The "Report on Business" section of the Globe and Mail of a couple of days ago referred to the staggering oil import bill of Greece which topped $1 billion for the first time last year. Greece is a rather small country which has almost reached its take-off point industrially but has not quite got there yet.

Another newspaper report talked about Egypt's problems and the fact that the International Monetary Fund was pressuring that country to make some basic reforms in the way it spends its money, a good part of which comes from the Arab world.

I find it rather interesting that in that basket I mentioned earlier there is no country from the Arab oil exporting world, and no currency from the communist bloc is there either. As long as there is trade between the communist bloc and the free world it seems to me that the whole business of international trade and aid will continue to be complex.

The Egyptians are constantly in trouble because they spend $1 billion on food subsidies. I spent six days in Egypt quite a few years ago and I can well understand why a food subsidy would cost that much now.

One wishes that the International Monetary Fund might move toward easing the tensions in the Middle East whereby a nation like Egypt could spend a little less on defence and a little more on its people. I think this is one avenue that needs to be explored by the International Monetary Fund.

We find the same problems in Nigeria where planning estimates for the next year total $15 billion and the current projected revenue is slightly more than $8 billion. There is going to be an enormous deficit and the situation is not going to improve.

I should like to make a reference to an extraordinary article in The Economist for May. It is entitled "Two Billion People. A Survey of Asia", and comments on what is needed in a good many of the countries of Asia. The author is Norman Macrae, Deputy Editor of The Economist, who visited the area and put together a rather unconventional report, and dared to take some rather unconventional approaches. Some of his words will be startling to a few hon. members. I know the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona would not agree with everything in the article, until we come to the end. If I have time to get around to that he might find we are not that far apart.

I am sorry the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) is not here this evening. I listened to him this afternoon with some interest when he spent a great deal of time inquiring about speech writers for the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens). I found that a little strange because as I listened to him there was no doubt about who his speech writer was. It was the hon. member for York-Simcoe because his entire address was given over to taking apart what had been said. The thoughtful discussion and discourse of the hon. member for York-Simcoe supplied all the substance of the somewhat distorted argument of the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge. I found that a little disappointing because one would have expected some original thought and preparation on such an important subject as this. I hope before this debate ends we will have at least one more spokesman from the New Democratic Party because someone must fill the gap and provide some constructive contribution to the debate. There is no point in moralizing endlessly if no thinking has been done on the topic.

The article I referred to is lengthy so I shall only read excerpts. On page 8 the article states the intention of the survey as follows:

> It will argue that government-to-government aid from rich to poor countries (which all worthy people in rich countries most especially want to increase, because it makes them feel worthier) should probably be abruptly reduced, because it now sets both politics and investment into tragically the wrong directions.

I realize those are rather strong words, but the more I think about it the more I feel he has a point. He claims that the survey will delineate some of the things that are necessary in order for successful development and industrialization of undeveloped countries. First of all, he says, establish a rural total employment, then have the introduction of cost-conscious technology, and finally find some way of making big business beloved and getting small government out of its way. Those are ideas that we might all consider as we look at this bill that deals with some hope for the Third World.

At page 17 of the article he offers four steps to take as follows:

> Go for total employment in the countryside, at just the moment when unsuccessful poor countries are usually industrialising.

There is sense in that. Next:

> Put a lot of money into the hands of rural landlords, at just the moment when "progressive" poor countries are usually expropriating them.

There is no comfort for the socialists in those words, and yet there is some wisdom there. He continues:

> Then go through a period of exploiting urban workers (i.e., paying them wages below their marginal productivity), in order to increase industrial profits.

That is heresy for most people these days, but he has a point. Next:

> Then, but generally at this late stage only, with annual GNP over about $300 a head, tactfully overthrow the rural squires, by a land reform that transfers agricultural production to entrepreneurial small farmers, but without causing class bitterness.

And then there are two other essential steps to development:

> . . . introduce cost-conscious technology, and make big business beloved and get government out of its way.

● (2150)

The article goes on to elaborate. I commend its reading to hon. members of the House. The author examines several countries in some detail and says that important lessons are to be learned from the Japanese. The Japanese have much to teach the developing world. They can show Third World countries that development in a non-European type of society is possible and that such a society can produce a modern nation. It is clear that Japan has retained its own culture, which is not a copy of the western world. Anyone who thinks it is is making a grave mistake.

The author quotes the directive given by the United States government to General MacArthur, who was put in charge of Japan after the war. The plight of post-war Japan was as desperate as that of any undeveloped nation. The country had been absolutely flattened. The directive issued to General MacArthur said:

> You will not assume any responsibility for the economic rehabilitation of Japan or the strengthening of the Japanese economy. You will make clear to the Japanese people that: (a) You will assume no obligations to maintain, or have maintained any particular standard of living in Japan.

The author of the article goes on to say:

> This unlovely doctrine of malevolent non-interference helped to spark the fastest advance of any industrial economy in history.

It seems to me there is a lesson to be learned. The author congratulates the Japanese for concentrating on the right approach. They concentrated first on the health of all their people and, second, on their education. We, in this country and the rest of North America, have fallen down sadly in recent years in the way we educate our people. Whereas other countries have maintained an educational system of rigour and vigour, we, following the lead of Dewey and other United States philosophers, softened our education along with that of the United States. That is why we have encouraged so many problems in this nation.

Japan's was probably the first industrial revolution during which, despite large migration to the cities, crime rates went down. We waste much of our natural resources in fighting crime.

The author of the article has some advice for China, as well. He says big enterprises in China should compete with each other. Much of the article will give small comfort to socialists. The author says that it would probably be sensible for Chinese industry, including the towns, but especially industries outside them, to run the sort of welfare services the big Japanese companies run. That would accord with the spirit of the communes. It should be the responsibility of big enterprises to take care of people. I realize that in North America such an attitude would be called paternalism of the worst kind, but it has its merits.

The author considers Korea as well. All these points relate to the bill, to the Bretton Woods Agreements and to the Special Drawing Rights. He says in the article:

> The coming economic growth in east Asia, including China's, will not be as export-led as Korea's has been. This will create some balance of payments problems, including for China. I do not think these should be met by government-to-government aid, which has had all the wrong economic effects (encouraging cost-unconscious technology), the wrong anti-freedom effects (because it increases the power of governments against their people in Third World countries, in each of which it is much more desirable to increase the power of the people against their governments instead), and which would fortunately be regarded as insulting by countries like communist China anyway.
> Instead, there should be a return to the original ideas behind SDRs and other devices of the International Monetary Fund. When a country is developing at a good annual rate of growth without excess inflation, then its growth should not be stunted by balance of payments problems. A sufficient number of SDRs should be created—

Note the word "created". I continue:

> —to tide it over such deficits. It is unlikely that the excess creation of SDRs would have to be over $30 billion a year. This would add only a fraction of one per cent to the world's internal money supplies and would not be excessively inflationary.

I doubt if that advice will be followed because the Third World owes $165 billion. The money has been lent for a long term, some of it at good, high rates of interest. Lenders will want to collect their interest, and there is the suspicion that there will never be a default. I suspect that we, in this country, and the people of other developing countries will pay the debt in full, if there is not a total collapse. We run the risk of a collapse. If it does come, we will wind up paying for a portion of that $165 billion of debt.

If we continue to run the sorts of deficits which Liberal ministers of finance of the last several administrations have shamelessly run up, we shall find ourselves in a situation where it will be difficult for us to meet the requirements of the bill we are considering. We should know that the difficulties are there to confront us. Let us take note of the sums involved, and realize that they are separate and apart from the $1 billion which we will spend in direct aid through CIDA. We should study the article alluded to and ask ourselves if we should not separate these funds. If we are contributing funds to the International Bank for Reconstruction and Development, we should ask ourselves if that contribution should not be our commitment. In exchange should we not demand that the International Monetary Fund or the World Bank assume responsibility for those things which Special Drawing Rights were designed to handle? I am thinking of the financing of development in countries which cannot possibly repay money lent under the present system.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Speaker, may I call it ten o'clock, in order to permit me to continue when this bill is again brought forward?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is that agreed?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Martin: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order at this time, bearing in mind certain important events which have today taken place in the country. I wish to mention for the record that in today's by-elections there were five Liberal victories and one Créditiste victory.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Goodale: The Tories are leaving.

Mr. Paproski: We have just begun to fight.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

HEALTH—GERIATRIC RESEARCH—REQUEST FOR SUPPORT

Mr. P. B. Rynard (Simcoe North): Mr. Speaker, on March 8 I drew to the attention of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) the growing aging population of this country and certain research findings which suggest that keeping people working beyond age 65 would be a partial answer to the problem. The minister promised to consider my representations, but I have heard nothing from him.

The number of senior citizens in this country is increasing, and our low birth rate means that this country's work force will be smaller in the years ahead. If present trends continue, in the next 20 years an ever larger proportion of our population will consist of senior citizens. Let me cite the experience of England. It is estimated that 21 per cent of the English population will soon be 75 years old or older. By 1995, 25 per cent of the population will be 85 years old or over. Canada runs about two decades behind the U.K.

In the last century there has been a 30-year increase in lifespan, and the number of retired persons has increased greatly. I point out that the number of people alive today at the age of 65 years represents in total one third of all those who in the past 2,000 years reached that age. This is a great tribute and compliment to science and the medical field.

Today there are almost two and a half million people in England over 75, and in that country's universities there are ten geriatric chairs. Do you know how many there are in the whole of Canada? We have one whole geriatric chair at the University of Western Ontario, from where Your Honour comes. And we had to go to England to get that fellow. We did not have any of our own trained.

More than half the hospital beds today are occupied by old people. This is a great problem. We must do more research to prevent disease so that it will be possible through this research to keep these people in their own homes. There must be geriatric chairs in all universities across Canada, with proper training for those who can be oriented into this field.

Home care should be fully developed to treat these patients adequately and in many cases as well or better as in a hospital bed costing $150 a day. Sometimes people are better off in their own homes.

There should be early diagnosis and care, keeping the patient out of hospital with all its expenses and strange surroundings. This means that the federal government must spend more on preventive medicine which often gets the mouse's share, while spectacular proceedings, surgery and the like, grab the limelight and the money. This is the problem now, getting the money into the field of preventive medicine.

We must remember that the rate of learning varies little with age, as long as you have kept at it. Grandpa may be more keen mentally than you are, even though you may jump higher.

Work hurts nobody. Some people thrive on stress. Churchill, Bernard Shaw, De Gaulle and Ford were at their best and thrived on stress. They lived on it, the stress of accomplishment. People must live. They must have objectives. They must have purpose. They must be useful in this world.

I met a lady in church the other day. She is 101 years old. She went to church in the morning and to church in the afternoon, which is probably more than you and I did. It was a hot day. Afterward I saw her sitting out. She was a real inspiration to everyone; 101 looking hale and hearty. That is the kind of thing we must have, not poor people lingering in their beds in hospital, uncomfortable, suffering over the years, with few people caring or looking after them.

This is why I went after the minister for more care. He said he was going to do something about it. I hope he will because Dennis Timbrell, Minister of Health of the provincial government in Toronto took the lead, saying he will have more home care. Therefore, there can be no excuse from the federal government for not going ahead and doing something now.

Mr. Ross Milne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the hon. member for Simcoe North (Mr. Rynard), has spoken further to his concern. It gives me an opportunity to hear the discussion and to reply on a subject in which I am also quite interested. I do so in the absence of the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. McRae).

An hon. Member: Where is he?

Mr. Milne: As a matter of fact he is not far away. I think he is participating in a pretty exciting event.

The number of people 65 and over will increase significantly. The present absolute number is not expected to double until the first decade of the twenty-first century. The "aged dependency ratio", expressed as the number of people 65 and over per 1,000 people 20 to 64, is expected to increase from 155 to about 190 by the year 2000. In the same period the number of people under 20 per thousand people 20 to 64 is expected to decrease from 665 to about 420. Combining these two figures gives a net decrease in the over-all dependency ratio of from 820 to about 610. Therefore—I think this is a key point—the percentage of people in the working and taxpaying age groups will rise somewhat over the next 25 years rather than fall, as is the popularly held belief.

I want to assure the hon. member that the department is engaged in continuous demographic analysis, including the analysis of future labour force participation of the population 55 years of age and over. There is no doubt that pressures toward general earlier retirement could quite substantially increase the dependency ratios I mentioned earlier, both for the reasons the hon. member for Simcoe North spoke about and also from the point of view of this whole question of retirement pensions. On the other hand, greater flexibility in respect to the present almost mandatory retirement age of 65 could prove to be a very strong counterbalancing force, considering the proven interest of people over 65 to continue part time or full time employment, and considering the likely trend toward tighter labour markets in the future.

I see my time is rapidly drawing to a conclusion, but I want to tell the hon. member that the department is continuing its ongoing study into this matter. I think that on one of the days when we are debating health matters it would be well for either the minister or for his parliamentary secretary to speak on this subject at length, since there is a great deal of material which has been prepared by the department in which I think the hon. member would be very interested.

Adjournment Debate

REGIONAL ECONOMIC EXPANSION—MEASURES TO PROVIDE ALTERNATIVE EMPLOYMENT FOR THOSE AFFECTED BY CLOSURE OF LABRADOR LINERBOARD MILL

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): Mr. Speaker, I am sure hon. members will not be too surprised at the topic that I am going to raise tonight, not the least of whom will be the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lumley). I should like to inform the minister, through him, that this is not the last time I am going to raise the matter either. I am going to continue to bring it up until I get some realization of the disastrous situation which exists in the western part of Newfoundland, and hopefully I can bring forward a couple of points tonight in addition to those I have previously brought forward.

The minister realizes, as does the House, that some 2,100 jobs are affected, either directly or indirectly, by the proposed closure of the Labrador Linerboard Mill, which is one of the most efficient and modern in existence, built at a cost of $200 million, but which is now going down the drain because of passive interest by levels of government.

I was looking at some statistics, Mr. Speaker, and discovered that besides the 2,100 jobs that are threatened, if we use the multiplier effect referred to by Statistics Canada, there is an effective ratio of three to one. In other words, rather than 2,100 jobs being affected, the true total is over 6,000. If you extend this to the payroll at the Labrador Linerboard Mill, which amounts to $24 million a year, this multiplier effect means that some $70 million is being lost to one part of Canada which cannot afford such a loss, since this is the second disaster which has occurred in the province.

I realize full well, Mr. Speaker, that responsibility for the operation of the mill lies with the provincial government of Newfoundland. But I have to say to the parliamentary secretary, for the attention of his minister, that if this closure becomes a reality in four to six months, the cost to both levels of government in terms of UIC benefits, severance pay and welfare, will be enormous and at least as much as, if not more than, they are going to lose by meeting the losses which occur.

I would also point out that the minister has a responsibility from the point of view of the infrastructure support provided by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, particularly under the special areas agreements with the province of Newfoundland in the Stephenville special area. I mention a few of these which justify in great part the work done under these agreements, and the programs completed under the agreements, due to the infrastructure support for the establishment of this particular mill.

I will refer to the 1971 figures when the mill was about to begin. There was a loan of $2.2 million by the department to the municipality for water supply. They spent another $213,000 on reconstruction and paving of highways and roads because of the need to provide access from the wood resource. There was the construction of two very large bridges, again to provide access to the wood resource, amounting to $1.2 million. For the influx of population, the students and the children, they built a DREE access school amounting to $1.7 million. That is a total of $5 million under the first agreement. I have no fear in saying that since then another $5 million was spent on harbour facilities and more schools by the Department of Regional Economic Expansion to support the creation of that mill.

[Mr. Milne.]

The minister must consider the cultural and social effects, as well as the economic impact. I would like to list at random some of those: the relocation of workers and families which will occur; the relocation of businesses, started as a secondary industry as a result of the establishment of the mill; the creation of new businesses, including a massive shopping centre, hotels and apartment complexes with CMHC and other federal funding; the federal government's establishment of an adult training centre; the establishment of four high schools by local entrepreneurship's, provincial government help or by local school boards and local population; the massive undertakings in federal funding of housing programs; the investment in real estate, both private and public; and the commitments made by local municipalities in loans which have to be honoured and will not be honoured because of the economic destruction which will occur.

All this massive funding to support the mill will go down the drain because everybody is only given "pass the buck" interest and passive interest by saying it is not their responsibility. When the axe falls in four to six months, the minister must remember it will be his responsibility, along with the responsibility of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen), to provide the funding and the administration to help revitalize and rehabilitate that part of Canada.

I can only ask the parliamentary secretary to pass these items along to the minister. Originally back six or seven months ago when I saw the threat, while others did not, that was the time to plan through all the expertise available in the federal government—through the Canada Development Corporation, the Export Development Corporation, the Canadian Commercial Corporation, the Enterprise Development Corporation and CIDA—to find markets, with the aid of the Department of Transport, to support the needs of a four year old mill. This is a brand new mill which is not being given a chance to operate because of bad management and the lack of realization and common sense at the time the political decision was made to put the mill where it is located now. With the expertise available here in Ottawa, the mill can still pay. I hope the minister will take a more active interest in it for the benefit of some people in Canada, thus preventing them from losing faith in what government means.

Mr. Ed. Lumley (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in response to the hon. member's series of questions on the pending closure of Labrador Linerboard's operations in Stephenville, I would like to place again the role of our department, in so far as the disposition of this matter is concerned, in perspective for this House.

The announcement by the government of Newfoundland of its decision to close the operation of the provincial Crown corporation, Labrador Linerboard Limited in Stephenville, is understandably viewed with great disappointment by the people of Stephenville and of Newfoundland generally. That decision was clearly based on the information provided to that government from its experts, including an independent advisory board established in November of 1976 to investigate the viability of the mill. Our department has no reason to question the integrity of that difficult decision. All of the evidence at hand indicates that continuing the mill operation would only increase the level of operating subsidy required, without any real expectation of a turn around in the profitability of the company.

We very much sympathize with the position of the Newfoundland government, which would be faced with substantial continuing deficits if the mill were to continue operations. However, we must emphasize that the mill is owned and operated by a provincial Crown corporation, and it is the prime responsibility of the provincial government. The unavoidable human problems of unemployment and loss of personal income resulting from that decision by the province will, in the short run, be addressed by the application of the full range of manpower and unemployment assistance programs available through the Department of Manpower and Immigration. A joint consultative committee has been established by the province and the Department of Manpower and Immigration to identify alternative employment opportunities and other assistance measures needed for workers displaced by the mill closure. Representatives of the union involved and the community are members of the joint consultative committee.

I understand that the government of Newfoundland and Labrador is continuing to investigate any realistic alternatives which can be identified to secure the continued operation of the mill on a viable economic basis. I can assure the people of Newfoundland that if a means can be found to secure the reasonable likelihood of viability for the mill, in contrast to the very substantial level of operating subsidy presently contributed by the province, we will seek to have all relevant programs of this government immediately directed to the support of the provincial government.

I would like to remind the hon. member for Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe (Mr. Marshall) that the mandate of our department is specifically for the reduction of regional economic disparities through actions to develop the natural opportunities and to build the inherent strengths of each province. We are working toward structural improvements based on the comparative advantage of each region's economy. In the case of Newfoundland, our national programs have been tailored to lead to the greater utilization of that province's resources and the further processing of resource products, diversification of manufacturing and processing activities, and improvements in the efficiency of the business sector. One instrument which the department has adopted to pursue these objectives in Newfoundland is the Canada-Newfoundland General Development Agreement signed in 1974. Since then a total of 13 agreements have been negotiated with the province under the GDA. I can assure the hon. member—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. I regret to interrupt the parliamentary secretary but the time allotted to him has expired.

PUBLIC SERVICE—SUGGESTED COMPENSATION TO THOSE IDENTIFIED AS BEING ON BLACKLIST—ALLEGED ADDITIONS TO THE LIST

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, on October 13, 1976, during the question period, the term "extra-parliamentary opposition" was first introduced into the records of the House. The then minister of state for urban affairs was questioned about the existence of a blacklist connected with this term. He asserted that the blacklist charge was very serious. Fortunately though, he added, it was without foundation.

On January 24, 1977, I questioned the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) about the list. He responded by saying, "I have not the slightest idea what the hon. member is talking about." The very next day the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) said he had never heard or seen such a list. The President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) also pleaded total ignorance. On January 26 the Solicitor General (Mr. Fox) said no such thing existed, nor did it ever exist.

On that day I arranged a meeting in the Opposition Lobby beween the Solicitor General, the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay), and myself. I produced for the Solicitor General's inspection the letter and the list which I had in my possession. I asked the Solicitor General to give me and my colleague an indication within 24 hours, or by noon of the following day, of the way in which the government proposed to deal with the matter. I told him I would prefer to keep the matter confidential in order to protect the mostly unsuspecting and innocent persons named from further harassment. The Solicitor General informed me through his secretary at noon the following day that he would only answer questions which might be raised in the House. That, Mr. Speaker, was the day on which I read the letter into the record , omitting the names from the letter and the list.

Why was I so concerned about this matter? In order to understand this, one must understand the seriousness of the allegations which are contained in the letter identifying 21 persons, as well as an additional three whose names were included in the text of the letter as being members of the New Left.

May I quote a short paragraph from the letter?

> The EPO concept, in the context of the New Left, does not mean legitimate pressure group activity but rather the creation of counter or parallel institutions within society but opposed to it and to the electoral process. Through such institutions the New Left seeks to organize and radicalize the "under classes" of society and mold them into a revolutionary force capable of overthrowing the present socio-political system.

I quote further:

The radical EPO program of the Left is, in short, a movement strategy predicated on a total and unequivocal rejection of representative democracy, its destruction and the creation of radical alternatives.

Several of the people named in the letter had their public careers rudely interrupted. In the case of Mr. Walter Rudnicki, dismissal did not take place until several years later. Some people on the list have clearly suffered as a result of being labelled subversives and revolutionaries. One of the more notable examples is Rudnicki who was dismissed from CMHC on what has been demonstrated to be a drummed-up charge. Rudnicki has also documentation to prove that the blacklisting had the effect of cutting him off from access to cabinet documents which he needed to do his work as an executive director of policy planning in CMHC; denying him access to French language training in Quebec City which, after 18 years of public service, he had earned and for which he was eligible; denying him promotion in the new urban ministry, in which he played a leading role in conceptualizing and getting established; prejudicing his relationship with senior staff in the system and with ministers for whom he worked. Most other cases are similar.

My concern tonight is over the fact that the Prime Minister and several of his colleagues still refused today to offer any comfort to any persons on the list which has now been published in several major newspapers in the country. We are asking for the setting up of a tribunal through which these people, if they so desire, could clear their names and lay claim to redress. I consider it incredible that the government should again today stonewall any attempt to gain information with respect to the inquiry which led to the compilation of the list in the first place. Again the government is suppressing the truth. It has been accused of deliberately misleading the House previously, and the charges which are laid here in the House were never answered. The House and Canadians in general deserve a public inquiry now. The sooner the government complies with this request, the less embarrassing it will be for the Prime Minister and his colleagues.

In 1939, Joseph Stalin had something which was called an EPO list, which was the enemy of the people list. In 1970 the Prime Minister conceived an EPO list, which is the extra-parliamentary opposition. I ask, opposition to what? What is parliament in opposition to? Is it in opposition to the social political system of our country, or is it an opposition to the Trudeau super group that sits across from us? The Canadian people and this House deserve and need some answers.

Mr. Art Lee (Parliamentary Secretary to Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Prince George-Peace River (Mr. Oberle) has made reference to a letter written almost six years ago by the then solicitor general to certain of his cabinet colleagues which expressed concern that some government employees might deliberately release classified government information without authorization:

The letter read into the record, on January 26, by the hon. member suggested that steps be taken to ensure that these government employees be fully advised and briefed as to their responsibilities for ensuring the security of classified government information.

As the current Solicitor General (Mr. Fox) has stated on more than one occasion, the letter of his predecessor and the names that were appended did not constitute a black list, and the term black list did not originate on this side of the House. Names of the individuals concerned were given to the ministers responsible for the departments and agencies concerned. The letter was written in confidence and was transmitted with the utmost discretion.

Although great care and discretion were exercised in the transmission of the letter to ministers in order that it would not be harmful to the reputations of the individuals involved, not everyone shares the government's concern for the right to privacy of individuals.

The letter was written almost six years ago. Since that time, some of those mentioned have left the government service, others have stayed, indeed have been promoted. Circumstances change, and while there may have been cause for concern in 1971, at the present time the RCMP security service has no interest in any of the persons or organizations mentioned in the letter written by the then solicitor general of the attachment, and this has been so for some years now.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 2 p.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.26 p.m.

SUGGESTED INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO COMPEL PROFESSIONAL LEAGUES TO CONTRIBUTE TO THE DEVELOPMENT OF TALENT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43 I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that yesterday the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) said that the government had failed in trying to mediate a truce between major junior hockey teams and professional leagues regarding the payment of development fees because "the federal government has neither the legislation nor the jurisdiction to resolve the dispute", and since this same government has in fact established a precedent in introducing legislation dealing specifically with professional sports, namely by intervening in professional football, for the sake of preserving a healthy continuation of our national sport as well as the development of other amateur participation I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski):

That this House instruct the Minister of State responsible for sports to take all necessary steps for legislation to be introduced whereby all professional teams, leagues or shows, including the NHL and WHA, contribute realistically toward the development of their respective sports, in accordance with such legislation.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate pursuant to standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ANTI-INFLATION BOARD

SUGGESTION BOARD NOT APPLYING RESTRAINT TO SALARY INCREASES FOR EXECUTIVES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Stanley Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I ask leave to move, seconded by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas):

That this House, noting that if one executive receives an increase in compensation of more than $60,000 a year, as in the case of Kaiser Resources Limited, 24 other executives in the same group or company would have to receive a zero increase to produce an average increase not in excess of the $2,400 a year limit provided in the anti-inflation guidelines, finds it difficult to believe that the Anti-Inflation Board is applying restraint to the incomes of those at the top the way it is holding down the incomes of those in the lower and middle income brackets, and this House calls on the government to correct this situation forthwith.

Mr. Speaker: The provisions of Standing Order 43 require for presentation of such a motion for debate the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

FINANCE

REQUEST FOR LOANS TO MUNICIPALITIES AT COST OF ADMINISTRATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the terms of Standing Order 43, I request the unanimous consent of the House to present a motion for the discussion of an urgent and important matter.

As most municipal administrations are now having tremendous difficulties in paying back their debts, which results, on the one hand, in making it very difficult for them to borrow money on which they have to pay 13 and 14 per cent interest, without increasing their taxes and, on the other hand, in making it impossible for them to meet their expenses; as there is an imbalance between their income and their needs because land and property taxes, their sole source of income, are really inadequate to meet their financial responsibilities; and also because the interest on their public debt affects greatly their respective budgets; and also because municipal governments are the very foundation of our democratic system and, as a consequence, are the level of the government which is closest to the citizens, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Richmond (Mr. Beaudoin):

That this House order the government, and through it the Bank of Canada, to authorize loans to municipalities, at cost, so that they can finance non-profitable public development projects such as hospitals, schools, roads, etc.; and this, to enable municipal administrations to reduce their debts and meet their needs adequately.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Pursuant to the terms of Standing Order 43, presentation of such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Yes.

PUBLIC SERVICE

ACCESS TO FILES FOR THOSE NAMED ON ALLEGED BLACKLIST—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, my motion is under Standing Order 43. The urgency of this matter relates to a report highlighted by a Toronto news publication over the weekend, and the exposure of a list containing the names of 21 Canadians who were placed under suspicion by a former solicitor general of conspiring to overthrow the government and replacing it with an alternative alien to the present socio-political system. Because of the fact that these persons were subjected to procedures which offended the most basic civil rights adhered to in our country, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay):

That the government be required to set up a tribunal through which these individuals can gain access to the files compiled about their personal and private lives and kept by the security section of the RCMP and that they be given the opportunity to respond to the allegations and to clear their names.

Mr. Speaker: Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

RESOURCES

ALLEGED PREMATURE ANNOUNCEMENT OF SIGNING OF AGREEMENT WITH ATLANTIC PROVINCES ON OFF-SHORE RESOURCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the admission yesterday by the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources that legislation to confirm and ratify an alleged agreement announced on February 1 between Canada, Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick concerning off-shore mineral resources cannot be introduced since important points have not yet been agreed between the parties, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Whiteway):

That this House regrets the premature announcement by the Prime Minister of the signing of an historic document now "unhistoricized" and the statement by Premier Regan that this was the finest example yet seen of co-operative federalism in that there is as yet no example to be followed and thanks the minister for his unusually frank admission.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

POSSIBILITY FORCE IN POSSESSION OF PROPERTY OBTAINED THROUGH ILLEGAL BREAK-INS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: That was a lot better than yours, Pierre.

Mr. Clark: Let me begin, Mr. Speaker, by extending to the Prime Minister et le Parti Crédit Social du Canada my congratulations on the success of their candidates in the six federal by-elections yesterday.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: I should like to direct a question to the Solicitor General. The minister will be aware of news reports attributing to Superintendent Venner of the security service of the RCMP the information that documents in relation to the Praxis Corporation have been destroyed by the RCMP. I would like to ask the Solicitor General if he can confirm to the House of Commons newspaper reports that the security service of the RCMP either confiscated or is in receipt of property obtained through illegal break-ins.

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, the hon. gentleman's question refers to activities with regard to the Praxis facilities a few years ago. The RCMP was not involved in any form of illegal break-in with regard to the Praxis facilities. As far as documents relating to the Praxis incident are concerned, those documents were all turned over to the metropolitan Toronto police in the middle of last February.

Mr. Clark: Just so we might be clear, the Solicitor General is telling the House of Commons that no documents related in any way to the Praxis Corporation were destroyed or are now in the possession of the security service of the RCMP. When the minister is up, would he also tell us how those documents, if they are now in the possession of the metropolitan Toronto police force, came into the possession of that force?

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated in my first answer, all the documents in our possession were turned over to the metropolitan Toronto police department. The documents came into the possession of the RCMP through a variety of sources, but the RCMP did not participate in any illegal break-in, nor did it obtain the documents in question in any illegal manner.

POSSIBLE USE OF ILLEGAL ACTS TO OBTAIN SECURITY INFORMATION—MINISTER'S AUTHORIZATION FOR CERTAIN ACTIVITIES

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister could tell the House whether it is standard operating procedure for either the security service of the RCMP or the police security planning and analysis group or any other group associated directly or indirectly with the government of Canada on occasion to obtain security information through covert activities or illegal acts.

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): No, Mr. Speaker. The standing instructions given to the RCMP in general and to the RCMP security service at the same time is that all the activities of the RCMP, be they on the criminal side or on the intelligence and security side, are to be conducted in accordance with the law of this land.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Clark: Perhaps by accident the Solicitor General omitted reference in his answer to the police security planning and analysis group. I would like to know whether that stricture applies to that group as well. I would like also to ask a policy question of the Solicitor General so that we might be clear. When the security service of the RCMP or the police security planning and analysis group or any other group decides that it is in the national interest to obtain security information by way of covert activities, is it a matter of policy that those activities require the minister's personal authorization?

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, the police security planning and analysis group does not obtain information through covert activities.

Mr. Clark: Would the minister advise us whether as a matter of policy in any instance when any security apparatus of the government of Canada decides that it is in the national interest to obtain security information through covert activities those activities must be approved by the minister himself or by some other member of the cabinet?

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated before, all activities of the RCMP security service are carried out in accordance with some of the laws passed by parliament, including the Official Secrets Act, which requires that I approve in a certain number of cases the operations of the RCMP security services, and in order to carry out these obligations in accordance with the law, they have to report to me.

MINISTER'S KNOWLEDGE OF ALLEGED ILLEGAL ACTIVITIES BY FORCE AT "L'AGENCE DE PRESSE LIBRE"

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I have a brief question for the Solicitor General. On the basis that he has now had ample time and opportunity to consult departmental records and so on and also on the basis that he does not wish to see officers in the security service carrying the can for activities for which they are not directly responsible but were carrying out orders from some higher authority, what was the basis upon which the Premises of the Quebec newspaper L'Agence de Presse Libre du Québec were bugged and as a result of which certain officers, including an RCMP officer, find themselves under criminal charges? Was this particular scenario known in advance by the then solicitor general, and if not, when did this first come to the attention of the then solicitor general or the present incumbent?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, this whole matter to which the hon. member refers is presently before the courts in the city of Montreal. During the course of the prosecution we were asked to furnish documents and related evidence to the judge who was hearing the matter. We co-operated fully with the judge. The judge decided to send the matter to trial a week ago. The trial is set to start tomorrow so I believe I should not make any further comments at this stage.

Mr. MacKay: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I am not asking for details about this matter that is before the court. What I am trying to find out from the Solicitor General is the basis on which operations like this are carried out. Is it the case in this particular instance that the then solicitor general had knowledge about this before it took place? If he did not, would the Solicitor General tell the House at what point in time he learned about it?

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated, the general standing directions are that the RCMP security service operates within the confines of the criminal law of Canada. The whole matter was referred to the courts by the Attorney General of the province of Quebec.

An hon. Member: That is not the question.

An hon. Member: You are evading the question.

Mr. Fox: The relevant information was brought to the attention of the judge and he was charged with investigating the matter.

An hon. Member: That has nothing to do with it.

An hon. Member: Answer the question.

An hon. Member: Come clean and answer the question.

An hon. Member: You did it before and you are at it again.

Mr. Fox: We happen to have an independent judiciary in this country.

Mr. Clark: Except when you phone them.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Until you telephone them.

Mr. Hees: Independent until you dial a judge.

Mr. Fox: If hon. members opposite are interested in the answer to the question—

An hon. Member: Let us have one.

Mr. Fox: —it is that the presiding judge, after having looked at the evidence in camera, decided that charges ought to be laid against three senior police officers, one of the RCMP, one of the Quebec Provincial Police and one of the Montreal Urban Community Police. It was up to the judge to decide against whom charges ought to be laid in that case.

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

SUGGESTION SENIOR OFFICIALS GO TO COBALT TO PLAN REBUILDING OF AREA DESTROYED BY FIRE

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. In view of the unanimous support of the House yesterday for relief for the residents of Cobalt where 65 to 70 houses and businesses were destroyed by fire and in view of the fact that the Ontario government has declared Cobalt a disaster area and has pledged financial support, will the minister indicate his willingness to have senior Central Mortgage and Housing officials go to Cobalt to plan the rebuilding of the disaster area and insure that the normal red tape is eliminated so that rebuilding can start with CMHC support within the next few weeks?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I answered similar questions yesterday in the House and indicated CMHC's willingness to co-operate fully.

Mr. Peters: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. They always co-operate fully; what I am asking is the elimination of red tape. One-third of the town has been destroyed. They are anxious to rebuild and can only do so if we get rid of the red tape. If CMHC really wants to help it will send in senior officials to look at the situation and advise the council and others on what steps can be taken so that there will be no delay. If we are to rebuild it has to be done this summer. They will be living in tents during that period. We are not interested in the normal co-operation, we want something special.

[Translation]

Mr. Ouellet: Mr. Speaker, I can report to the House that my colleague the Postmaster General will be there tomorrow to see what can be done by federal authorities. Then I can assure the hon. member that there will be cooperation on the part of officials in my department and if my talents as an organizer can be of any help, I will certainly be available.

NATIONAL DEFENCE

REQUEST FOR EQUIPMENT TO ASSIST RESIDENTS OF COBALT FOLLOWING FIRE

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, a further supplementary question to the Acting Minister of National Defence. I wish the government would not play politics with this important matter.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

[Mr. Fox.]

Mr. Peters: The Postmaster General cannot handle his own department never mind handling the problems at Timiskaming.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Peters: May I ask the minister if it is possible for the Department of National Defence to supply some of the necessary equipment such as beds, tents and other mobile equipment that should be supplied to these people so that they can move into one area and be handled by the municipality over the next three or four months while this proposition is being considered? I hope the minister will go into that area, to indicate his support, instead of sending the Postmaster General who cannot even look after his own department.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, that would constitute aid to the civil powers, which is one of the responsibilities of the Canadian Armed Forces. That—

An hon. Member: Who are you?

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): If you don't know now we will let you know after the next election.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): That would require an official request from the Attorney General of Ontario. If such a request is made to the Department of National Defence, the department will respond in its usual manner and do everything in its power to see that the necessary assistance is supplied to those who were so unfortunate. We will probably ask the Postmaster General on his return for his assessment of the situation as well.

POST OFFICE

POSSIBILITY OF ISSUING STAMP TO COMMEMORATE ONE HUNDREDTH ANNIVERSARY OF LIONEL GROULX

Mr. Eudore Allard (Rimouski): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Postmaster General.

Since January 13, 1978 will mark the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of one of the most distinguished men in our history, the great historian Lionel Groulx, and since Quebecers are generally proud of this great Canadian, could the minister tell the House whether or not he would consider issuing a postage stamp to commemorate this anniversary and thus revive the memory of this eminent Canadian?

Hon. J.-J. Blais (Postmaster General): Mr. Speaker, I am grateful to the hon. member for Rimouski for his representations. I have received many from government members who believe Canon Groulx would be an appropriate subject for a 1978 postage stamp. I would consider him as a most serious choice because of national unity and the influence of Canon Groulx on that matter. Of course, I cannot announce today what decision is to be made but I can tell the hon. member and others who have made similar representations that I am giving full consideration to their request.

BILINGUALISM

POSSIBILITY OF AMENDMENT OF POLICY AS RECOMMENDED BY OFFICIAL LANGUAGES COMMISSIONER

Hon. George Hees (Prince Edward-Hastings): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. In view of the statement made yesterday by the Commissioner for Official Languages, that the government should go back to square one and produce a language policy more in keeping with the needs of those who require a second language in the work place, I ask, does the Prime Minister intend to heed the suggestion of the extremely able Commissioner for Official Languages and institute a policy consistent with what he recommended?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker,—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Trudeau: —I was unaware of the statement made by the Commissioner for Official Languages and would hesitate to accept the enjoinder to go back to square one, when one remembers that the Official Languages Act was adopted with the support of all parties in this House. I think it would not be in keeping with the wishes of parliament, and probably not with the wishes of the official languages commissioner, if we were to go back to square one. As mentioned in the Speech from the Throne, we will obviously go forward and improve the application of the act. This is what we suggested in the Speech from the Throne that we were prepared to do.

• (1430)

Mr. Hees: I was simply quoting the form used by the Commissioner of the Official Languages Act. I remind the Prime Minister that although all parties did support this languages act in the House and still do, it does not mean that the languages act cannot be working adversely to the needs of those who would use it, as the commissioner has said. I simply ask the Prime Minister if he is going to have enough sense to follow up the excellent suggestion that obviously is very necessary.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, that is a different matter than going back to square one.

Mr. Hees: That is what he said.

Mr. Trudeau: If he said we should go back to square one, obviously the hon. member is not supporting him. Indeed, the hon. member is suggesting that we bring some improvements to the application of the act. I repeat, this is what we said in the Speech from the Throne that we intended to do during this session of parliament. We are prepared to discuss this whole matter. If the opposition wants to move a debate on this subject on any of the opposition days, we will be happy to put our position on the record and to hear what the opposition has to say in terms of improving the application of this act. I do not think it is worthy of the hon. member for Prince Edward-Hastings not to have thoughts of his own on this, but to hang on to the skirts of the official languages commissioner.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hees: Is it that difficult for the Prime Minister to comprehend a very simple statement by the commissioner in which he is dealing with teaching techniques, suggesting that the teaching techniques employed in the carrying out of this act can be greatly improved. We are not disagreeing with the principle of the act. We are simply suggesting great improvements that can be made following the commissioner's suggestion for making the teaching techniques more effective.

REQUEST FOR NAMES OF OFFICERS WHO DEALT WITH PERSONS WHO BROKE INTO PREMISES OF PRAXIS CORPORATION

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, the Solicitor General seems to have left the House.

An hon. Member: He is getting briefed.

Mr. Oberle: I apologize. It seems that the Solicitor General may now be in a better position to answer some questions since he has just received instructions.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Oberle: With regard to the situation relating to the break-in at Praxis Corporation or institute in Toronto, in light of the statements yesterday by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Justice that the RCMP has been required to fully co-operate with the metropolitan Toronto police and in light of the fact several legal people are now assessing the posture and the interests of people named on the extra parliamentary opposition list, will the Solicitor General undertake to co-operate with those people who are acting on behalf of the 21 and give them or the House the names of the two officers who dealt with the agents who actually committed the crime? Can he also provide the House and these legal people with the information with regard to the agents who are acting on behalf of the RCMP.

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I am not too clear on the question the hon. member is putting to me. Is he asking me whether we have information as to people who committed the break-in at Praxis Corporation? If that is the case, we are co-operating with the metropolitan Toronto police force. Any information at our disposal is being made available to them. My understanding is that all we have in our possession are the documents which were turned over to the metropolitan Toronto police force sometime in February.

Mr. Oberle: My question relates to facts that are already known and have been exposed by the RCMP, namely that two RCMP officers were involved in the investigation and that there are agents whose lives are in danger if they are named. It is terribly important that the names of these people are known to those who are assessing the legal position of the people on the list. Is the Solicitor General prepared to provide us with the names of the two RCMP officers directly involved in the investigation and the name of the agent who turned over the original documents to the RCMP, if that was not an officer as well.

Mr. Fox: Perhaps I should ask the hon. member if he would be willing to turn over to the RCMP the name of the person who gave him the alleged letter that he read—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Oberle: I ask the Solicitor General what good that would do because I turned over to him the list and the letter containing the names one day before it was exposed in the House. Will the Solicitor General tell me to what agent he wants me to turn over the rest of the information that I have, since he obviously is not prepared to receive it from me because he has chosen consistently not to have it aired.

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, I of course am more than willing to receive from the hon. member any information he has in his possession which may lead to stopping the dissemination of classified information.

TRANSPORT

QUEBEC-WINDSOR RAIL PASSENGER SERVICE—DATE ON WHICH IMPROVEMENTS COMMENCED

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Transport. If I might beg the indulgence of the House, on behalf of my wife and myself I want to thank Your Honour and the House for the warm wishes on the occasion of the Standing Order 43 motion of Thursday of last week.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Forrestall: I will now move to some of the matters with regard to the Quebec-Windsor corridor. In light of the minister's statement of May 20, 1976, on the government's proposal to begin a program of improvement of rail passenger service in the Quebec-Windsor corridor, will the minister advise whether they are about to begin this? He stated that construction would begin in the spring of 1977. May I ask the minister whether improvements on this line have in fact begun. If not, is there a reason for the delay?

[Mr. Fox.]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, some work is being done on the line. However, I will have to obtain further details for the hon. member. We are proceeding with the evaluation of the bids which have been received with regard to the new equipment. I hope later in the summer to be able to announce decisions in that regard.

QUEBEC-WINDSOR RAIL PASSENGER SERVICE—REASON FOR DELAY IN ACCEPTING TENDERS FOR EQUIPMENT

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): The minister stated in February that the Ministry of Transport had received and reviewed the tenders for three to ten sets of trains for the Quebec-Windsor corridor service. As it is now May, some three months later, why is it that the department has not yet made its evaluation of those tenders and taken some action?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, that date is not accurate. The tenders were received in that time, but the evaluation is a fairly extensive procedure. A preliminary conclusion has now been reached. Certain further refinements of the analysis are taking place. At that point the government will have to make a decision about the extent of the order to be placed. All of those decisions will likely be taken by the later part of the summer.

Mr. Forrestall: Because of the interest of those who use rail passenger commuter services in that corridor, may I ask the minister about the numbers of the train sets. I feel almost as though I am promoting Mattel toys. How many train sets is the minister in fact considering? He has indicated all the way from three sets up to ten. Can he tell us whether it is three, four, five, six, seven, eight, nine or ten?

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, bids were received in the range essentially of three to ten train sets. That is a decision the government will take when we have finished the analysis of the bids. We will decide at that time whether to complete an order for the lower number or the higher number.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

ALLEGED GOVERNMENT DECISION TO CONTINUE POLICY OF HIGH UNEMPLOYMENT TO ENSURE SUCCESS OF DECONTROL

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance arising out of a very disturbing government document which has been brought to my attention. Will the minister confirm to the House that his department has indicated to the provinces, in relation to the green paper on decontrols, that in order to have a successful decontrol process it is necessary to continue deliberately a policy of high unemployment and extensive slack in the economy? Furthermore, will the minister tell the House the specific reasons which led the government to adopt in this straightforward way this very callous economic policy?

● (1440)

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): No, Sir. That is not the purport of the message which was communicated to the provinces.

Mr. Broadbent: The minister says that is not the purport of the document. I should like to quote from the document, one which came out of his department on April 27 of this year. I shall ask the hon. gentleman whether it reflects government policy. The quotation reads:

> The most important factor conducive to successful decontrol is the restriction of wages and prices provided by the current degree of slack in the economy.

In the same document it is asserted that the government expects the continuation of this slack for another year or two. In the light of these statements in the document produced by a very senior official in his department I should like to ask the minister whether this represents government policy.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It does not represent policy. It is a recognition of the fact, one which I have stated many times in the House, that it will be difficult to bring about a more rapid rate of growth in the economy. The document also states—and I am surprised the hon. member did not refer to this—that the conditions of extreme demand which existed in 1973 and 1974, and which was so conducive to inflation, are not present at this time.

Mr. Broadbent: I should like the minister to deal specifically with the categorical assertion in the document that the most important way of containing prices in a period of inflation is the maintenance of the government's full unemployment policy, that is, of maintaining a situation where there are a million and a half people unemployed. Is this not the central contention of the document and would this explain the government's total failure to introduce measures in its most recent budget to stimulate the economy?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I suggest to the hon. gentleman he had better wait until the green paper is made public on Friday. I do not think the House should have to rely on the rather selective readings of the leader of the New Democratic Party.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF PROTEST TO SOVIET UNION CONCERNING DENIAL OF HUMAN RIGHTS TO IOSEPH BEGUN

Mrs. Simma Holt (Vancouver-Kingsway): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In consideration of the Helsinki Accord and the commitment between Canada and Russia to guarantee human rights and fundamental freedom for all people, my question relates to the case of Ioseph Begun who has been refused permission to emigrate to Israel since 1971, who since then has been unable to obtain any employment in the Soviet Union although he has the equivalent of a Ph.D in technical sciences and who has been charged, because of his unemployment, with parasitism and is to be tried in Moscow on June 8, 1977. Has the Canadian government, through the Secretary of State for External Affairs, made representations on behalf of this man, Ioseph Begun, so unjustly persecuted in absolute violation of his fundamental rights and in contempt for the terms of the Helsinki Accord?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): As I have said in the House previously, it is not the practice of the Canadian government to make representations on behalf of individuals of the type to whom the hon. lady refers when immigration to Canada is not involved or when persons in Canada, such as relatives, are not involved. However, as the hon. lady is aware, we have made a number of general representations to the Soviet Union and to other countries urging that the maximum degree of freedom be permitted with regard to the flow of immigrants. I will make some inquiries into the particular case the hon. lady mentioned to determine whether any of those representations might relate to the gentleman named, and I will respond to her later.

PUBLIC SERVICE

REQUEST FOR INVESTIGATION OF DISMISSAL OF JIRVAN SHAH

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. I have given him notice of the question. Has he had an opportunity to investigate the unfortunate case of Jirvan B. Shah, a public servant dismissed by the Department of Transport?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): I shall have to look into that matter and give the hon. member an answer later.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): In view of the fact that a review committee composed of public servants of considerable ability concluded that Mr. Shah was, in fact, a competent metallurgist and recommended that he be provided with alternate employment, and that this recommendation has not been carried out, resulting in a loss of $8,000 in severance pay, not to mention professional damage, would the hon. gentleman undertake to investigate this matter as quickly as possible with a view to rectifying what I believe to be a deplorable situation?

Mr. Speaker: That is, really, a representation.

IMMIGRATION

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON QUEBEC PROPOSAL

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): A question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, Mr. Speaker. I am sure the minister has now had an opportunity of considering a very significant proposal from his counterpart in the Province of Quebec where, as I understand it, they regard a certain amount of control over immigration as being necessary. Would the minister confirm he has had an opportunity to consider this proposal and, if so, what will his reply be when he meets with his counterpart in Quebec some time this week, perhaps on Friday?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I appreciate the courtesy of my opposite number, the Hon. Jacques Couture, in attending at my office in Ottawa to discuss areas of mutual concern, primarily francophone immigration to Canada. He has extended that courtesy one step further by inviting me to Quebec to discuss subjects included in a letter which he has made public. His concept is a very interesting one. Implicit in the new bill is the assumption that provinces should perhaps be given an opportunity to make more input into the process. The points system is not engraved in stone; the new approach is one which I believe has some merit but it seems to me that in order not to be discourteous to Mr. Couture I should give my response to him before I make it here or to the press.

Mr. Alexander: The minister does, however, have a responsibility to this House and since he has probably made up his mind I will ask him a specific question: as I understand it, out of 100 points available to an applicant the Province of Quebec wishes to control 55, leaving 45 to the federal government. Given the fact that an applicant must acquire 50 points I believe the hon. gentleman owes it to the House to disclose his position with regard to this unique and interesting proposal. In other words, does he agree with the proposition that Quebec should control 55 of these points?

Mr. Cullen: The hon. member hits the nail on the head when he says this is a unique proposal. I am, frankly, resisting some suggestion made to me that the points system should be incorporated into the bill. There must be some flexibility there. I want to keep an open mind on the subject. I want to draw attention to some of the strengths and some of the weaknesses in the suggestion made by Mr. Couture and, as I say, the points system is not engraved in stone. However, as I say, out of courtesy to him I ought not to go further at this time. I am keeping an open mind and I am ready to discuss the matter.

Mr. Alexander: Would the minister not agree that in the event that any particular province controls 55 of the points the federal government would have lost control over immigration?

HOUSING

POSSIBILITY OF BUYING LAND OCCUPIED BY ANGUS SHOPS ON WHICH TO BUILD HOUSES

Mr. Jacques Lavoie (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

[Mr. Alexander.]

Since the land occupied by Angus Shops and owned by the Canadian Pacific covers quite a large area in the riding of Hochelaga, can the minister tell the House whether he intends to initiate early negotiations with the Marathon Company, a subsidiary of Canadian Pacific, for buying that vast tract of land through the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation or through existing non-profit corporations to build a housing complex of about 2,000 units and a co-operative shopping centre, for which I already have a plan and for which I am convinced the mayor of Montreal would accept to change zoning regulations to accommodate such a project?

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, in answer to the hon. member's question of which he gave me notice, I must say that preliminary discussions seem to have been held between the city of Montreal and the Canadian Pacific relating to possible changes in the use of the land of Angus Shops, but there is no official plan at this moment. The hon. member's proposal seems excellent to me and of course I will be glad to follow it up and see if it can be done.

DATE OF SIGNING AGREEMENTS WITH BRITISH COLUMBIA

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the minister responsible for DREE. Now that the minister has had an opportunity to turn his mind away from the ceremonial sinking of Mercator One, I would ask the minister if he could give us an indication as to how his ministry is progressing with the signing of the remaining subagreements with the province of British Columbia? Are we looking at a timeframe of days or weeks?

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, we have in fact announced last week the signing of a third subagreement with the government of British Columbia regarding the development programs and the assistance to be offered to the native population. I have been told that we have completed some discussions with the B.C. government regarding an agreement which would allow a more orderly development and perhaps foster the industrial growth of this area. Therefore we hope to be able to conclude an agreement in the next few weeks and to make an announcement, with all the details it implies and the hopes it can raise among the population of this province.

COMMUNICATIONS

OPPORTUNITY FOR CITIZENS TO EXPRESS VIEWS ON PAY TELEVISION

Mr. Benno Friesen (Surrey-White Rock): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. The minister has apparently determined that pay TV is inevitable for Canada. In view of the enormous social implications for the future of Canadian thought and life; and in view of the fact the Ottawa hearings, incidentally temporarily postponed at great expense and inconvenience for some who wish to participate, at best are open mostly to members of the industry itself and to local residents, are there now any plans or will the minister consider initiating plans to conduct public hearings on the subject of pay TV across Canada, thereby permitting rank and file Canadians concerned about the social implications to express their views?

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, we have proceeded in as comprehensive a way as possible. The first phase of our consultations were in the form of briefs which were received from the industry and people concerned. Subsequently, I asked the chairman of the CRTC if he would consider conducting public hearings, which have not been postponed incidentally. Those public hearings are taking place. A report will possibly be available around mid-October.

Mr. Friesen: Mr. Speaker, my question to the minister was precisely as to whether those public hearings will be extended across Canada and not only within the urban area of Ottawa. Since other federal departments conducting hearings and forums within their ministries are helping to defray expenses of those who want to participate—for example the Kitimat hearings, the Berger report and so forth—will the minister do the same for those individuals across Canada who feel very strongly about the social implications of pay TV and want to participate in the hearings but cannot do so because they cannot afford to do it?

Mrs. Sauvé: Mr. Speaker, the procedure for the public hearings is a matter which the chairman of the CRTC decides. He has established that he will have a number of hearings in Ottawa, which is probably in response to the kind of need he thinks exists at the present time. People have had occasion to send their briefs to the CRTC and express their views on pay TV. If some people felt that they have not had sufficient access to public hearings, I am sure the chairman of the CRTC will take the necessary measures to allow anyone, with something to say, an opportunity to express his views.

TRANSPORT

CREATION OF JOBS BY IMPROVEMENT OF RAIL, ROAD AND AIR FACILITIES IN ATLANTIC REGION—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. William Rompkey (Grand Falls-White Bay-Labrador): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. In view of the great need to improve rail, road and air facilities in the Atlantic area—and I am particularly thinking of the need to upgrade the Trans-Canada highway in Newfoundland—and in view of the high unemployment rate in the Atlantic area and the need to create jobs there, can the minister say what initiatives he is prepared to take in his department to upgrade those rail, road and air facilities thereby creating those very necessary jobs?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I am happy to say the decisions have been made in connection with the Atlantic transportation program. Yesterday I was able to telex the information to the four premiers. Therefore, we will be ready to go ahead with the highway strengthening program and the rearrangement of freight subsidies to be more selective for development in the Atlantic of certain air and bus improvements as well. We will be having discussions immediately with the Atlantic provinces in regard to this. I will be tabling the background details on this as soon as possible.

NATIONAL PARKS

TERRA NOVA—SUGGESTION FUNDS ALLOCATED FOR CONSTRUCTION OF GOLF COURSE BE USED FOR OTHER PURPOSES

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, my question is somewhat supplementary to the previous one, and it is directed to the Acting Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development. In view of the fact the government has budgeted $3.6 million for a golf course outside the Terra Nova national park, and in effect the bulk of this money will be used to build a new access road to some very exclusive summer homes owned by ministers of the provincial government of Newfoundland on the Eastport Peninsula, and in view of the fact at the same time a new golf course 30 miles away is being put in by the people of Gander, can the minister tell the House what he is doing, or what his government is doing, with respect to renegotiating the original agreement so that the people of that particular area and the people of Newfoundland can obtain better value for the $3.6 million which is being proposed for this purpose.

Hon. Judd Buchanan (Acting Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development): Mr. Speaker, I must admit I am not current on this problem. I will be happy to draw it to the attention of my colleague when he returns.

Oral Questions

URBAN AFFAIRS

DEPARTMENTAL POSITION ON SUSTAINING OR REPLACING OLD NEIGHBOURHOODS

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, this is a good riding to recognize at a time like this. May I pose this question to the Minister of State for Urban Affairs? It arises from the recent demolition in the south end of Halifax of many houses, all structurally sound, within a "put", of a street with houses which qualified for a Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation grant for improvement and which received a CMHC reward for the same—so much for local enterprise. The demolished houses will give way to a high rise apartment building.

Could the minister say whether his department has resolved the philosophical dilemma of either supporting improvement of old housing to sustain old neighbourhoods or supporting urban destruction which will destroy parts of old neighbourhoods to replace them with high rises?

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I find the question of the hon. member quite interesting, but it requires a very long answer I would not be able to provide during the oral question period.

RESOURCES

SIGNING OF AGREEMENT WITH ATLANTIC PROVINCES ON OFFSHORE RESOURCES—POINTS ON WHICH AGREEMENT LACKING

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Prime Minister. On February 1 the Prime Minister, Premier Regan of Nova Scotia, Premier Campbell of Prince Edward Island and Premier Hatfield of New Brunswick had a meeting here in Ottawa and made an announcement of the signing of a memorandum of agreement concerning the question of jurisdiction over offshore oil and gas resources in those provinces. The Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources yesterday informed the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works that legislation could not be introduced yet because there has been no agreement on certain important points. Could the Prime Minister tell the House why such a fuss was made about this alleged agreement of February 1, and what the points of differences are which still have to be agreed to?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, this agreement was signed several months ago. All the premiers and I agreed it was a very important step forward in indicating the principles on which we would co-operate. We all recognized that the very short document we signed did not contain all the details of the eventual agreement to be embarked upon between the provinces and the federal government. There were clear indications by the premiers and myself concerning the lines which should be followed in working out these administrative details. I understand it is in accordance with the wishes of the premiers and myself that these administrative details be worked on down to a final position.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, would the Prime Minister explain, if there were gaps in this agreement, why he called the document an historic one? Has that historic moment gone forever, or why did Premier Regan say it was the finest example of co-operative federalism ever seen in this country, when there is no agreement as yet?

Mr. Clark: That is a typical Liberal statement.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I am afraid the hon. member misunderstood my previous answer. It was a very important agreement entered into between governments of provinces of different political stripes. Everyone agreed it was an important step forward. I am indicating to the hon. member that you cannot merely legislate general principles. It is important to legislate the actual operating administrative aspects of the agreement, and that is what all parties are constructively working toward now. I hope the hon. member will consult somebody in the provinces to confirm what I have said.

TOURISM

POSSIBILITY OF UNITED STATES WITHDRAWING TAX DEDUCTIBILITY PROVISION CONCERNING CONVENTIONS IF PARTS OF BILL C-58 WITHDRAWN

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. In view of the loss of American conventions amounting to tens of millions of dollars due to section 602 of the United States tax reforms act, and in view of the raising of the matter by the minister with Mr. Blumenthal, as it was raised by the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce with commerce secretary Krips, has there been any indication from these U.S. officials that if the tax provisions of Bill C-58 relative to broadcasting are withdrawn, an accommodation might be reached?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would have to confirm whether or not that has been the position of the United States officials. Personally, I do not regard the two issues as being connected. I regard Bill C-58 as being important to Canadian cultural development, and in that sense in no way comparable to the relative tax treatment of conventions on both sides of the border.

Mr. Ritchie: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Is the minister saying that under no circumstance will Bill C-58 be changed in order to reap any benefit from withdrawal of the convention tax by the United States?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the U.S. treasury should dictate our cultural policy.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for St. John's West on a question of privilege.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CROSBIE—TERRA NOVA GOLF COURSE

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, my question of privilege has to do with a question just asked by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez), which contained a slur and an imputation against certain cabinet ministers of the government of Newfoundland in connection with the Terra Nova golf course. Either the hon. gentleman should produce some information or he should withdraw the implications of his statement. The question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. I fail at the start to see how it is possible that any slur, intended or otherwise, by a member here of a person outside this House can in any way constitute a question of privilege. There may be remedies which can be taken in many other ways, but privilege would have to be extended to take into account representations which may adversely affect members of this House. Even if privilege could in certain circumstances be extended that far, surely it could never be extended to persons outside the House. I would have to be persuaded by the hon. member or others that this in any way constitutes a question of privilege.

Mr. Crosbie: Then may I advance argument on that point, Mr. Speaker. I am referring to members of another legislative assembly in this country who, as a group, are being slandered by the hon. gentleman. They are former colleagues of mine. The hon. member alleges in his question—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. If there is any alleged connection with the privileges of this House I would be glad to hear what it is. If there is an alleged slur cast by any member of this House then remedies can be taken in other ways. They may be taken by the member in other ways here, if he so wishes, or in fact by those ministers who feel themselves aggrieved by anything which has been said in this Chamber. However, I am not aware that there is any definition of a question of privilege in our precedents which in any way extends to any such representations against any persons outside this House.

Mr. Robert McCleave (Halifax-East Hants): Mr. Speaker, as I understand the circumstances—and admittedly I have not been exactly zealous in following them up—some of the money involved reflects on a vote that was taken in this House to support this particular development at a national park within a province of Canada. I believe here we are within the area of federal and provincial decision making or participation, and in that sense it is probably a reflection on the members of this particular Chamber, even though we may not have been aware, at the time when certain votes went through parliament, that this was where the money was going to be spent. In any event, I suppose we would have to be considered responsible for setting that particular spending in motion, and in that sense I think the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) has founded a case.

The hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) is, in effect, saying to us, as well as through us to other people, that he is reflecting on decisions which were taken. I gather that he did not, at the time our decision was taken, raise any objection whatsoever to it. Therefore, I cannot see how he can now come late in the day and make the kind of remarks he did.

Mr. John Rodriguez (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege. Any agreement that was reached between the federal government and the provincial government of Newfoundland was reached prior to my being a member of this House. Agreement was reached that a golf course would be placed inside the Gros Morne national park in Newfoundland. Subsequent renegotiations placed it in another national park, Terra Nova.

The golf course is not being built inside the park; it is being built outside the park on land that has to be acquired. Prime farmland, 100 acres of it, has to be acquired from private individuals on which the golf course, 18 holes of it, is to be placed. That decision was made in 1972 or prior thereto.

The situation in Newfoundland with respect to unemployment has since changed; it has now become more serious. We have discovered that the municipality of Gander has already constructed three holes and six more holes of its golf course are to be completed this summer at a cost of $500,000. The Gander course is 30 miles away from Terra Nova national park.

There are priorities in the east port peninsula which every member from Newfoundland recognizes. We know that in three communities, Burnside, Salvage, and one other, the well water is polluted because sewage is seeping from septic tanks into the well water.

I have not maligned any cabinet minister in the Newfoundland legislature. I have simply stated the facts, namely, that the wife of Mr. Morgan, the minister of transport, has just turned over the Loyal Orange Lodge, which she purchased, to a private club three miles away from the golf course.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I am sure all hon. members realize that, whether technically any of this comes within the definition of privilege in our House, there is a very grave danger here. When any member either puts forward a question or deals with any other matter which is within the competence of this Chamber we must confine ourselves in every case to matters which are in fact within the competence of this Chamber. If this House has taken decisions—the point raised by the hon. member for Halifax-East Hants—which, as is quite frequently the case, might have implications for co-operative effort with provincial authorities, that is certainly not extraordinary. But surely when we are discussing this matter in this Chamber the aspects we should concern ourselves with are those which occupy the attention of the responsible people in the federal parliament under our administrative jurisdiction. As soon as we begin to introduce, by way of preamble or other side comments, the actions or potential actions of those whose administrative responsibility lies beyond the control of this parliament, we invite this kind of difficulty. I think that, regardless of whether it forms an objection within the four corners of the very strict definition of privilege within the precedents of our parliament, we would all be well advised to confine ourselves to discussions which we know are within the competence of the federal parliament.

Mr. Rodriguez: I appreciate your comments, Mr. Speaker. May I conclude by saying that if there is any member in this House who can claim he has been maligned, there is the fact that the Newfoundland legislature passed a unanimous resolution condemning me for having raised this whole question in the Standing Committee on Indian Affairs and Northern Development, as well as for daring to raise it in the House of Commons. If the hon. member for St. John's West has any complaint, then he ought to complain that his own province's legislature has maligned one of his own colleagues in the House of Commons.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again with the admonition I just made, I think all members can see the difficulty into which we get when we attempt to extend comments that we make beyond the jurisdiction and the administrative responsibility of the House.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Nickel Belt has put on the record certain things which may or may not be facts. The facts are that the Government of Canada agreed many years ago to put a golf course in Newfoundland in one of its national parks. Since a golf course could not be put in the Gros Morne national park, it was agreed three years ago it should go to the Terra Nova national park where the people want a golf course as an attraction for tourists.

The hon. member mentioned Mr. Morgan's wife and this kind of thing. I consider it to be a piece of arrant cowardice and contemptible. I want to make that point to the hon. gentleman now. It is not a question of privilege, it is a question of what is fit and proper, and I do not think this kind of imputation sneaked into a question is fit or proper, or anything that I or any other member of the House should have to put with. It is contemptible, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Again I say that there is no motion attached to the potential question of privilege. I really think that this discussion ought to conclude. I am sure all hon. members will realize that as soon as they begin to make comments about the actions of those persons who do not come under the umbrella of administrative responsibility or ministerial responsibility within this House, we are inviting these kinds of difficulties. The matter does not fall within the definition of privilege as raised by the hon. member for St. John's West, to which a contribution has been made by other members. Since it was raised as a potential question of privilege and does not qualify as one, the matter is now concluded.

Mr. Rodriguez: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege. My question of privilege deals with the last remarks made by the hon. member for St. John's West. I think they are uncalled for. He accused me of being cowardly in my performance of duties in the House as a member of parliament. I think his behaviour here this afternoon is indeed contemptible and he should withdraw his remarks about me. I suggest, with all humility, that the Chair should rule that the remarks of the hon. member for St. John's West about a member of this House are uncalled for, ungentlemanly, and certainly unconservative. He should be asked to withdraw from this House.

Mr. Nielsen: His remark was not unparliamentary.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. As in any previous circumstances, reading the context and the full text of the remark that has been made by the hon. member for St. John's West, if I find that his latter remark does in fact fall within the category of unparliamentary language, I will indeed, after proper reflection, ask him to withdraw it. I will have to examine the record to see if that is in fact the case.

BRETTON WOODS AGREEMENTS ACT

AMENDMENT TO INCREASE SUBSCRIPTION TO INTERNATIONAL MONETARY FUND AND INTERNATIONAL BANK FOR CONSTRUCTION AND DEVELOPMENT

The House resumed, from Tuesday, May 24, consideration of the motion of Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale) that Bill C-18, to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, in rising to speak on Bill C-18, an act to amend the Bretton Woods Agreements Act, let me say that I believe it is salutary at this time to discuss the international financial situation, particularly as the whole thrust of the Bretton Woods Agreement has changed over the years so that now we are called upon to deal primarily with underdeveloped countries demanding loans and financial support, which was certainly not conceived of when the first Bretton Woods Agreement was achieved.

I think it is wise to take a look at what was the purpose of the 1944 Bretton Woods Agreement. It was to keep different currencies of the world in a stable relationship with one another and to provide loans with which the war devastated countries could finance their reconstruction and future development. The representatives at that time drew up plans for a fund with which to stabilize currencies, and for a bank to make loans. The fund was to be an international monetary fund to be made up of deposits of currencies, of gold, and of securities of all member nations. This $9 billion fund was to be divided among the nations in accordance with the size and wealth of the various countries making contributions. The fund was to be used by nations when needed, and a comprehensive set of rules was worked out according to which the fund was to be put to use.

The second proposal of the International Bank for Construction and Development was to set up a $10 billion capital which was to be funded from the purchase of shares by various nations in accordance with their ability. The bank was to lend money to governments and to guarantee private loans to them in order that reconstruction of the devastated countries and the development of the less advanced countries could be facilitated. The purpose of the fund was to keep world currencies in a stable relationship with one and other and thus to stabilize world trade.

The International Monetary Fund has been of considerable value. It is a currency pool into which member countries may dip when they are short of foreign currencies. Amounts which a needy country can take out are limited to the amount which the country has put into it.

The International Development Bank is somewhat different in that it has become a borrower of last resort. When a government or a private firm is unable to borrow on its own resources, the IDB steps into the breach.

Since 1944 the whole character of the economic problems facing the world has changed. War ravaged Europe and the Far East have been reconstructed. Germany and Japan, the defeated nations, have become extremely strong, even stronger in many ways than the U.S.A. which was the original main contributor to the Bretton Woods Agreement. These two countries are now involved in providing equitable and financial aid to underdeveloped countries and in rectifying the weaknesses of the key currency systems. These developments have changed the direction of the Bretton Woods Agreement. The introduction of the Special Drawing Rights by the IMF was designed to supplement and supply the other components of international resources, such as gold and U.S. dollar liabilities, but in effect the Special Drawing Rights really increase the liquidity of the entire international monetary system. They are no more like owned reserves than borrowed reserves.

The problem with the SDR scheme is to determine the amount of SDRs to be created. The proposal is that the IMF play an important role in resolving these conflicts through the creation of further allotments of SDRs. It is to do this through the managing director of the IMF after consultation with members who would recommend the amount of SDRs to be created.

The United States and the bloc of Common Market countries will have effective veto power because 85 per cent of the affirmative vote by the board of governors of the IMF is required to ratify the managing director's recommendation. It is to be hoped that this new departure will allow the IMF to continue to play a stabilizing role in the evolution of the fund. Some of the advantages of the fund, it has been argued, are that it has enabled an international monetary system to evolve in a number of different ways, including the deliberate creation of SDRs and increased co-operation amongst central banks. However, the fund seems to have been much less successful in dealing with the exchange rate problems and techniques of adjustment.

The World Bank has introduced two agencies, the IDA and the International Financial Corporation. The IDA was formed in 1960 to provide very soft loans to the poorest of the less developed countries. This was to reduce the strain of payment, and loans were on a 50 year basis. However, the funds were certainly small and did not cover the small loans needs of underdeveloped countries. The International Financial Corporation was to provide venture capital to the private sector of the economy, and private companies were to assume control as soon as possible.

The international monetary system did not evolve as was foreseen by the architects of the Bretton Woods Agreement. Perhaps keeping in mind the disasters of the thirties, they considered that gains from the international trade integration would be far greater than from those of international financial integration, and therefore allowed controls on capital flows as opposed to merchandise flows, a situation which, incidentally, we are approaching now with our demands for trade controls. This increase in international trade has created a demand for payment which has largely been met by the American dollar. An extensive international credit system has evolved so that the American dollar has emerged as the vehicle currency of the world. As might be expected, this dominance of the American dollar has not met with uniform acceptance. Many countries have objected to this extension of the American dollar.

In any case, in the foreseeable future the American dollar will be extremely dominant. It will have the effect of being a sort of world currency. Some would argue for this; that the United States would have to give up a large part of its domestic power; and that American monetary policy would have to be in tune to international needs rather than to American needs.

This brings up the role of the United States in the world, that of the other developed countries of the west and their relationship with the Third World. The debate is now proceeding. Over the past 20 years the western world has given in increasingly to the idea that, at all costs, Third World needs must be supplied. Some have the idea that the standard of living in black Africa is low because the standard of living in the western world is high. It has always interested me that, in our discussions of our obligations to underdeveloped countries, while the western world must give money, services and goods, the communist world is not called on to give anything, and indeed, it usually gives soldiers and guns to foment revolution.

President Jimmy Carter was quoted in yesterday's Globe and Mail as saying the following:

> Our policy must reflect our belief that the world can hope for more than simple survival and must help shape an international system that will last longer than secret deals.
> We are now free of that inordinate fear of communism.

It is difficult to feel that we do not need to be afraid of communism, particularly when the Russian navy is immense, when our own Admiral Boyle has suggested there could well be a war with the communists by 1980, and when no one has disputed the enormous building up of Soviet military power. This certainly makes one realize that communism is certainly still a force in the world.

President Carter also seemed to feel that there was decreasing importance in the United Nations, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the World Bank, which he felt had been part of an international system which had worked well for a quarter of a century. However, I thought he added other significantly desirable policy solutions. President Carter also said:

> That system could not last forever unchanged. Historical trends have weakened its foundation. The unifying threat of conflict with the Soviet Union has become less intensive, even though the competition has become more extensive.

President Carter went on to say:

> It is no longer possible to separate the issues of war and peace from those of justice and human rights.
> We can no longer have a policy solely for the industrial nations as the foundation of global stability, but we must respond to the new reality of a politically awakening world . . .
> Now, the policy must close the gap between rich and poor nations and encourage all countries to rise above narrow national interest and work to resolve the formidable problems facing the world.

The speech of the President of the United States seems to be an attempt to seek further compromises with the world, to reaffirm U.S. commitments to human rights and, in effect, to qualify support for Israel after the recent election of the right wing Likud coalition, whose leader, Mr. Begin, has taken a harder line with the Arab world.

President Carter seems also to have written off southern Africa, so it may come under the domination of the left wing world. We can, however, applaud this statement by President Carter:

> We know that a peaceful world cannot exist one third rich and two thirds hungry.

However, it is doubtful that a peaceful world will come about easily.

Because most of the debate on the role of Third World countries will take place in the United States, it seems important that we know what is happening in the United States. The oil embargo of March, 1974, rudely brought home to the Americans the power of the Third World, and the public debate on the new international economic order takes place when the U.S. public is more aware of the Third World than it ever was previously.

As usual, in a debate such as this there are two broad positions. One tends to accommodate the Third World, and the other tends towards resistance. Soft liners argue for accommodation on the grounds of both expediency and justice, whereas hardliners contest the argument on the same grounds. Softliners, looking ahead, perceive an increasingly interdependent world in which there must be a new order which takes cognizance of the interests of all nations, including the poor ones. However, many question the optimistic consequences of the softliners. In the minds of many, interdependence is likely to diminish conflicts. The opposite is more probable. An example might even be found in our own country. The modern world has brought about more interdependence, but we have become more disunited. Interdependence in itself is not conducive to order. Rather, power, political and military, has been the foundation of order both within and between nations.

Softliners promote the view that the interdependent nations of the west are very vulnerable to disruptions by less developed nations, and therefore it is in the interests of the interdependent nations to adopt a policy of accommodation. The hardliners would argue that power is as important as it has ever been, and certainly the Russian and Cuban expansions in Africa have been based on the use of power. In recent years the western nations have been unwilling to employ their power, which makes interdependence so vulnerable.

Furthermore, there are two different viewpoints on egalitarianism in the world. Third World countries, nearly all dictatorships, are interested in greater equality amongst states. The western elitists, enamoured of the new egalitarianism, are thinking of the equality of individuals. In other words, the moral appeal of the new international economic order is based on a confusion between domestic and international realities. I suggest there is a profound difference between equality between states and equality between individuals.

There is no real evidence that giving in to Third World demands will have the effect of toning the Third World down. Indeed, policies of accommodation are likely to whet appetites. Nor does it seem to be true that either greater equality or greater order among nations would be the likely outcome even if the entire world became a system of socialist states.

There are probably two credible views of the way ahead. The world could be a much more disorderly place or, more likely, a new power similar to the Roman Empire, the Great Britain of Victorian times or the United States of the last 25 years could emerge. The Soviet Union appears to be a likely candidate for that role.

I do not believe we should give some kind of reparation to the Third World because of past or present exploitation. Certainly western imperialism has bestowed a period of economic and social benefits on the Third World.

To me there are other aspects of this problem which those who want to give large amounts of aid to the Third World have not adequately considered. The fundamental problem of most Third World countries has not been that they have not been able to increase their output of goods and services but that the burgeoning birth rate has meant the increase in goods and services has been eaten up, and so the individual is no better off than before. While control of the birth rate seems possible some way ahead, it shows little sign of making much of a dent in the immediate future.

● (1530)

The transfer of vast amounts of aid from the western world may well prop up the nation states such as the one headed by Idi Amin, but it does not do much to aid the individual citizen. In the future will we remain—"we" being Canadians as well as Americans—unmoved by mass starvation shown on our evening television news? Can we find a middle road that will not be hard-hearted but will be morally sensitive without being sentimental?

I am glad to have had this opportunity to say a few things on the Bretton Woods Agreement and the way ahead, dealing particularly with the Third World which I think is very important to Canadians as a whole.

Bretton Woods Agreements

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, I should like to make a few short remarks on this bill. What disturbs me most is that it is being put forth and its quick passage sought by the same people who have given us record inflation, record unemployment, record trade deficits, record budget deficits, record bank interest rates, record mortgage rates, record high energy prices, the highest level of foreign borrowing of any western nation, low productivity, the highest cost of government in our history, the worst track record in recent history, the Sky Shops affair, dredging scandals—this bill is put forward by a government that has no discernible energy policy, no discernible foreign policy, and no discernible industrial strategy.

This same government is negotiating in secret at the GATT conference. This bill is put forward by a government that has no known targets that we can see regarding the money supply, and no national objectives for industrial growth other than the reference by the President of the Privy Council (Mr. MacEachen) in this House recently when he said he hoped some of the growth in the United States economy would splash over the border and spur on our economy. I think that is a deplorable record for any government.

In presenting this bill the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) said, as reported at page 5888 of Hansard:

> According to Article I of its articles of agreement, the fund is charged with facilitating the expansion and growth of world trade and payments as a means of raising world standards of living and of fostering economic development.

I think it is obvious to everyone that the government is in violation of Article I of the International Monetary Fund articles on its own domestic policy. How can we sit on international boards and committees and talk about the expansion of world trade while our share of trade is shrinking? How can we be perceived as a credible nation when there is so much disorder within the Canadian economy? How can the government be perceived to be serious about expanded world trade when it is negotiating with GATT in secret? How can our industries expand when they simply do not know what is going on at the GATT conference in Geneva? How can we continue to assist the Third World countries when inflation in this country is continuing to sap our vitality and growth?

If you look at the growth of the money supply in Canada over the past 15 years there is one real lesson: with moderate monetary growth there was no inflation in Canada, with the expansion of monetary growth there was a relatively mild inflation, when the growth rate fell inflation fell, and when the monetary growth rate reached the sky, of course we had double-digit inflation.

The Bank of Canada Act in Section 14.(2) reads as follows:

> (2) If, notwithstanding the consultations provided for in subsection (1), there should emerge a difference of opinion between the Minister and the Bank concerning the monetary policy to be followed, the Minister may, after consultation with the Governor and with the approval of the Governor in Council, give to the Governor a written directive concerning monetary policy, in specific terms and applicable for a specified period, and the Bank shall comply with such directive.

What I am saying is that we cannot slough off this matter of growth of money supply on the Governor of the Bank of Canada; it falls on the incumbent minister of finance and the cabinet.

Speaking in Halifax in 1975 the Governor of the Bank of Canada said:

> If the ultimate goal—the restoration of a completely stable price level, that is zero rate of inflation—is to be achieved, this will eventually require the maintenance of an average rate of growth of the money supply no higher than the long-term average rate of growth of the production of goods and services in Canada—that is a rate of about 5 per cent a year.

Bill C-18 merely broadens the base. It is similar to a businessman who finds himself at the limit of his line of credit while running his business at a loss. Instead of putting his house in order and effecting a turn-around, to a break even and a profit position, he merely gets a further extension in his line of credit and pushes the inevitable consequences into the future.

Had the minister come to this House, as he could have, at the time of his budget and announced a set of economic goals, a target date for a balanced budget, and a disciplined step-by-step monetary policy, then we could have looked at Bill C-18 in a different context.

It is well known that we have a record balance of payments deficit. Balance of payments deficits may be removed by internal economic and industrial policies, or financed by borrowings. The government has chosen the latter route and has mortgaged the country so far into the future that it is frightening.

Deficit financing by borrowings is not a practicable way to stabilize an economy over a long period of time. In the last nine years we have had one surplus and eight deficit budgets. Surely it is evident to the minister and his officials that they are on the wrong track. Through their taxation policies they have taken away the ability of the people of this country to accumulate wealth that is expressed eventually in investment in industrial growth. Lacking industrial growth we are now on a course toward lower tariffs that will further distort our balance of payments deficit.

The realities of our financial problem are evidenced in the flight of investment money from Canada. The outflow in 1976 exceeds the inflow of funds by $1 billion. Our financial plight is continually clouded by over-playing internal social policies. You simply cannot pursue gradual monetary goals when overall confidence in the economy is lacking. When you tighten the money supply the difference can be taken up by the velocity of the money already in circulation. This will only occur when there is confidence in the economy.

We are not really happy with this bill, Mr. Speaker. We are not happy with the government and its inability to deal with the economy of Canada. If we continue on our present course, Canada will be numbered among the Third World countries and be a net recipient of aid from others. We do not have to accept inflation. If we want to help Third World countries, we should do it by encouraging them to be self-reliant. If we are to do that, we must become more self-reliant in this country.

The tasks confronting all governments of the western world surely are these: assuring stable growth, maintaining full employment, avoiding inflation, keeping the balance of payments in equilibrium, and maintaining the integrity of national currency. Those are some main objectives. The government has failed miserably to meet these vital objectives, and the evidence of its failure is apparent.

When this bill is considered in committee we shall question the minister and the officials. That the economy of Canada is being handled so badly is tragic. The minister has had numerous opportunities to introduce fiscal and monetary policies which would improve our position in the world. Today we face the prospect of a Canadian dollar dropping in value. I hope it will not happen, but if the views of many pessimists in the money markets prevail, the Canadian dollar will drop a considerable amount in the next few months. I hope it will not happen, but the signs that it will are there to be seen. I do not think the agreements we are debating will do much to stop that trend. We are part of the western world, are considered a developed country, and must support agreements of this kind. If we are to play a significant role in the world economy, the government must accept the challenge confronting it and act with urgency.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The Chair recognizes the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald). I must warn hon. members that if he speaks now he will close the second reading debate.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, let me say two things in response to the hon. member who has just resumed his seat. First I deal with the GATT negotiations and his statement that they are being carried on in secret. I would have to regard that observation as being either ignorant or stupid. If he is saying that we should lay out in advance of negotiations our negotiating position so that the people with whom we are negotiating can look at our hand, or that we should act as a card player would if he were to lay out his hand for other card players to see, I can only say this: anybody who has ever been involved in negotiations would recognize that as being a pretty stupid suggestion. If he is saying, on the other hand, that the government has failed to inform and consult with Canadians on the question of the GATT negotiations—

Mr. Stevens: He is correct.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): —then, that is just plain ignorance.

Mr. Stevens: Not at all. He is correct.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): That is ignorance, the same kind of ignorance the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) demonstrated in his speech. The fact of the matter is, the Canadian tariffs and trade committee for the last two years has been in close consultation with the various Canadian firms interested in multilateral trade negotiations.

Mr. Stevens: Tell that to the businessmen. They sure don't think so.

Mr. Kempling: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Perhaps the minister could explain to the House and to numerous industries of this country why representatives of industry are writing to their members of parliament, asking what is going on at the GATT negotiations because they, themselves, cannot find out. Can he explain why Americans and other countries act on legislation—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Surely that is not a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I suggest to the hon. member for Halton-Wentworth (Mr. Kempling) that his remarks are not a point of order but part of the debate.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I point out to the hon. gentleman that for two years the Canadian tariffs and trade committee has been in close contact with Canadian industry, just for that particular purpose. I regret that he is not well enough informed to tell his correspondents that they should be in touch with that committee, if they have not already got in touch with it.

The hon. gentleman made another interesting comment in saying that he disagrees with present monetary policy. The Governor of the Bank of Canada has set some guidelines for the increase of the money supply.

Mr. Stevens: Of M 1.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The increase of the money supply has been below those guidelines. If the hon. member is advocating higher interest rates for Canada and a more regressive monetary policy, he ought to have had the courage to get up and say so instead of criticizing the government.

I turn to the hon. member for York-Simcoe. He rose in this House and repeated something he has said many times in the House and in committee. He thinks that M 2 rather than M 1, rather than demand deposits, the policy which the Bank of Canada is following, is the appropriate method by which to measure the money supply. I give hon. members this choice: it is between Mr. Bouey and the hon. member for York-Simcoe. From which of those two men would you take advice in this regard? Would you take it from the Governor of the Bank of Canada, or the former chairman of the Bank of Western Canada?

Mr. Stevens: You are wrong again. Why don't you get your facts right?

Mr. Paproski: What a performance. John Turner couldn't have done it better. We are going to call you baby face Macdonald.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I deal with some of the other remarks made by the hon. member for York-Simcoe. In making his ten points he alleged that Canadian policy makers, in relation to the valuation of the Canadian dollar, had shown no independent mind as to what course should be followed.

I cannot think of a more badly informed statement.

Mr. Stevens: Try Donald, try.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Canada was the pioneer in establishing a floating rate. Indeed, for the better part of the life of the International Monetary Fund Canada has been taking the lead in maintaining a floating rate. The interesting thing about the amendment contained in this particular proposal is that the lead established by Canada has now become the orthodoxy of the International Monetary Fund. If that is not an independent, leading policy I do not know one that is.

Mr. Stevens: Stick to the truth, Donald.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member for York-Simcoe said we are a net exporter of energy and therefore there should be no problem with overseas energy costs.

Mr. Stevens: That is not what we said.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I suggest that is exactly what the hon. member said. Only, he forgets that the Conservative party, of which he presumably was a supporter outside this House, by specific design made half this country depend on overseas petroleum for energy supplies. He knows that. The party he represents knows it. We have done our best to reduce that dependency, for example by building the Montreal pipeline. Parliamentary restraint confines me to describe as "disingenuous" the hon. gentleman's comment that we have no problem with regard to the supply of energy. As a result of the former Conservative government's energy policy, eastern Canada is very much dependent on foreign imports, and foreign imports have to be paid for at going world prices. That has an inflationary effect.

Mr. Stevens: Show me any passage in Hansard which indicates I said what you say.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): It would be difficult to improve on the comments made by the hon. member for Waterloo-Cambridge (Mr. Saltsman) with regard to the adherence of hon. members opposite to gold.

Mr. Stevens: You are both socialists.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): The hon. member for York-Simcoe said he wants more discipline. He wants people of this country to be subjected to more discipline. He quoted all kinds of statistics and figures attributed, I think, to a Mr. J. Anthony Boeckh. The hon. member contended that we ought to run this country in accordance with the kinds of statistics and tables economists of that kind have prepared. The only trouble is, economists of that kind and the hon. member for York-Simcoe leave out an important element, the human element. The hon. member is interested in tables and statistics. We are interested in mankind, in Canadian people.

Mr. Stevens: With one million Canadians out of work, boy oh boy, where is your heart?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): If the hon. member for York-Simcoe had his way, we would have many more out of work than we have at present.

Mr. Stevens: No, we would put people back to work. With one million people out of work, you are a great humanitarian.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, most of the ten points the hon. member for York-Simcoe made were false, and many of them were silly. I will devote no further time to them.

Mr. Kempling: Tell us about our high unemployment.

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): There is the voice of ignorance and stupidity over there, again.

I should like to direct attention to the constructive remarks made by the hon. member for Edmonton-Strathcona (Mr. Roche). He talked on the question of transferring funds to the developing world and the problems of liquidity which less developed countries are encountering as a result of the world-wide increase in energy prices. As I said yesterday, in many cases it is as a result of the drop in export prices of primary exports from these countries. The hon. member asked me to make some comment on the possibility of linking the further creation of Special Drawing Rights with special discriminatory advantages in favour of the developing countries. Probably we would have to take some disagreement with that as an approach.

Contrary to what the hon. member says, the IMF is not truly a central bank, although it is true that there are some similarities in their functions. It is also true to say that the SDR is a form of international money. We have supported the increase of the SDR. It is gradually taking the position as the central element in the international monetary system. However, we think that proposals to link future SDR allocations to direct income redistribution to LDCs would be counter-productive. The goal of making SDRs the central monetary asset would be undermined and the LDCs would likely not receive any net increase in resources from the developed world.

The hon. member also talked of the role of the World Bank and of the IMF. I should emphasize again the distinction in function between these two organizations. The IMF has the responsibility basically for the short-term balance of payments problems of members, both developed and developing countries. The World Bank has been responsible primarily for financing developing countries and development in the developing world. In this regard, through its two subsidiaries, the International Development Association and the International Finance Corporation, the World Bank has already extended in the case of IDA grant assistance to the developing world, and in the case of IFC assistance to equity investment in the same area.

One of the difficulties we have recently talked about in international forums has been the immediate balance of payments problem. In this regard the managing director of the International Monetary Fund, Mr. Witteveen, has come up with some proposals with regard to helping to meet the short-term balance of payment problems of many other countries. His efforts with regard to establishing the so-called Witteveen facility have been very progressive efforts.

It is very useful that the OPEC countries—Saudi Arabia, Kuwait, the United Arab Emirates—have offered to come forward along with developed countries for the purpose of establishing this additional fund. However, I do not think either the countries involved or this House should lose sight of the fact that the facility is at best a temporary financing solution and that both the OPEC countries and the developed world must continue to assist on an increasing scale the developing countries through official development assistance.

Over the long run, funds drawn out of the Witteveen facility will have to be paid back. They can only be paid back if official development assistance continues to flow into those countries, making it possible for them to meet these other obligations.

There were a number of points raised by other members. They could more effectively be dealt with in detail before the committee. I would say again that with the officials we would be quite prepared to discuss in detail both the operation of the proposed amendments to the International Monetary Fund and take the occasion at the same time to talk about amendments to the Currency and Exchange Fund Act, the Canadian and domestic legislation, and also to discuss forthcoming policy with regard to the continuing financing of balance of payments problem, both in the developed and developing world.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is the House ready for the question?

Some hon. Members: Question.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs.

AERONAUTICS ACT

AMENDMENT TO PROVIDE ACT BINDING ON HER MAJESTY IN RIGHT OF CANADA OR A PROVINCE

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport) moved that Bill C-46, to amend the Aeronautics Act and the National Transportation Act, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is a short but important bill. It raises several fairly narrow questions. I will be quite brief in dealing with it.

The purpose of the bill is to deal with the issue that arose after the Supreme Court decision in connection with some issues before it arising out of the purchase by the Alberta government of Pacific Western Airlines. The Supreme Court in particular dealt with the issue of the Crown in right of the province and its obligations in relation to the general regulatory framework over which the Canadian Transport Commission has jurisdiction.

The finding that Her Majesty in the right of a province was not properly before or bound by the regulatory framework, raised for us immediately the question of changing the law in that regard. It seems a fairly obvious proposition that it would defeat the broad overview which the Canadian Transport Commission and similar administrative agencies must have over a transportation function if important aspects of that function in interprovincial and international transportation particularly were not within the ambit of regulations.

The bill before us changes the situation. It makes it clear that the Aeronautics Act is indeed binding on Her Majesty in right of Canada or a province or an agent of either one of them. That is the simplest legal change being made.

In addition, there are changes being made which provide for certain procedures to be followed in the event that such interests or involvements are in fact undertaken by provinces or their agents. It is implicit in the policy in the bill that it may be generally unwise to have a provincial government in ownership of a body controlling transportation which is federally regulated, particularly if that transportation is interprovincial or international in its nature.

The problems which arise are essentially two. The first is the problem for the administrative tribunal if it is dealing with an applicant which is essentially a provincial government. This arises from the fact that while a province may hereby be made a person, it really will not be a person like other persons which may be involved in transportation. Indeed, the question arises of whether a controversy may arise or rage about an administrative tribunal in a way which would endanger its over-all jurisdiction and responsibilities.

Second, there is the problem that in interprovincial services, and indeed in international ones, certain issues may arise where the provincial interest may be in conflict with the provision of service to other provinces also being provided with service by the entity in question. There the question of fairness may be very difficult to assess. It may therefore be better to leave the position where generally a province is not in a position of ownership. I use the word generally because of the fact that certain circumstances may arise where a particular operation does not give rise to these considerations.

• (1600)

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I do not see a quorum in the House. I call for dissolution or adjournment.

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): You have to count, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Forrestall: I am afraid we must have some ruling from you, Mr. Speaker, before we permit the minister to carry on. I must say I wish our learned friend far to the left of me would rise on this particular point. We cannot allow an observation which somebody, sitting in his seat, made to you some moments ago to interfere with a decision which should have been taken by the Chair at the time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. In accordance with Standing Order 2(3) the presence of 20 members of the House, including Mr. Speaker, is necessary to constitute a meeting of the House for the exercise of its powers. Is the hon. member requesting a count?

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Yes.

Mr. Forrestall: Mr. Speaker, the time at which the intervention was made by the hon. gentleman was the time at which the count should have been taken, not some time later. I raise this as a serious point of order and reserve the right to deal with it at a point later in time.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): I will reserve judgment. The hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) on a point of order.

Mr. Stevens: At the time I observed there was no quorum, three of us had counted the number of members present. It was 18, and I would request Your Honour to ask those who were not in the Chamber at the time I raised the point of order to retire. A count should then be taken.

Mr. Gilbert: A terrible waste of time!

Mr. Lang: I would observe, in passing, that hon. members are frequently behind the curtains and moving around and I am a little surprised that the hon. member for York-Simcoe, having received a strong verbal dressing down, well deserved, from the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald), should have shown a childish reaction by trying to disrupt the proceedings of the House. But that is a matter which his constituents in Toronto ought, in due course, to judge.

Mr. Abbott: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I think it is regrettable that the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) should raise a point of order of the kind he did at a time when there are fewer than eight members of his own party in the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: There may be situations in which provincial ownership might make some sense, and we particularly wanted to leave the possibility open for that to happen in relation to intraprovincial transportation facilities where the facility is essentially or totally within the province in question.

I should say that after the first reading of the bill I had an opportunity of discussing the subject with a number of hon. members, particularly with the hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall). Some submissions which I have received from the air industry are correct, and one change may be made during the committee stage. I wish to give members now an early indication that I wish to see one matter placed before the committee, that is, where loans are involved it should be possible to obtain certainty with approval of the governor in council that there will be no difficulty in relation to the licensing in issue. At the present time the loan would have to be made and then the licence might be forfeited and that would clearly present a problem. I will certainly be glad to see that situation corrected.

Hon. members will note that the bill is not made retroactive; it is not made to apply to transactions which have taken place before this date, and particularly it is not made to apply to the purchase by the Alberta government of Pacific Western Airlines. Arising out of discussions with Alberta, it seems to me it might very well be possible to reach an arrangement whereby that situation is progressively corrected. Certainly the Alberta government has no philosophic hang-up about seeing an airline in the private sector and this may be the better way of treating that particular airline. In the meantime it was my view that Pacific Western ought to be treated as normally as possible and not be impeded in its orderly operation and development by the difference of view as to the wisdom or merits of its ownership. That is the purpose of the bill. I hope to discuss further aspects of it with hon. members in committee, and I commend it now for second reading and reference to the committee.

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, I shall not be too long, particularly since the minister has now indicated clearly with respect to this bill, which does correct certain oversights which are of some concern to all of us in this Chamber with respect to the rights of the provinces to act outside of or independent of certain regulations set down by agencies which are in fact integral parts of the federal government structure and which are designed to maintain some order and some discipline not only in the air industry but in other industries as well, that we can all anticipate other amendments similar to this with respect to other modes of transport and other areas of activity which fall within the ambit of the federal regulatory authority. In fact the government has moved in the right direction today to correct an oversight.

All of which is to say that I do not think there was in the minds of any of us any intent to be critical or to suggest that the province of Alberta in moving into this very vital area of transport had intended anything untoward with respect to the regulatory agencies.

If I understand correctly, the minister intends at a later stage to introduce an amendment which would permit extension of loans in such a way as to protect loans that might have been made prior to the awarding of a licence which could have been cancelled under existing regulatory authority. If that is the intent of the amendment then, Mr. Speaker, with just one or two more comments we are quite prepared to let this bill go to committee for perusal. I trust the standing committee will give this bill fairly rapid consideration.

Any carrier must be subject to an over-all regulatory authority. Good laws should be applied to the interprovincial and international movement of goods and passengers. This is necessary for the sake of the industry as a whole and the proper and good order of the development of the movement of passengers and goods interprovincially and internationally. It must be subject to some over-all national regulatory authority, as well as being subject to agreements entered into by Canada with other nations with respect to the passage of goods and passengers from one country to another.

The minister has tended to over-complicate the situation a little bit. On the other hand the intent of the bill is clear. It is a good one and one we are prepared to let pass. As we read the bill and understand it, we hope there is a capacity for provincial governments to act singularly or in concert with adjacent provinces. I am referring to movement in a loan, debt or equity situation to assist a regional air carrier or a third level air carrier, a feeder air carrier, should they be faced with hard times. The uppermost question in my mind now is the question of the degree to which the federal government itself is an appropriate and proper vehicle, as opposed to provincial authorities, to move in the direction of assistance to Atlantic regional air carriers; to move into third level carrier service; and to strengthen and sustain its position as a regional air carrier in the country, with some stature and importance.

I hope the minister's statement embraced the principle of the right of the federal authority and the responsibility of the federal authority to move, before it becomes necessary for a collection of provincial authorities to move toward lending monetary support and assistance to a regional air carrier. I trust this bill does not interfere with that principle. At this point in time we do not see it, although it might be hidden, and we look forward to more in depth examination of it in committee. With those few comments, we are prepared to let the matter go through now.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, on April 4, 1977, the minister issued a press release in connection with this bill from which I would like to quote as follows:

> Transport Minister Otto Lang today introduced an amendment to the Aeronautics Act that would prohibit the purchase of an airline by a provincial government without federal permission.
> This new amendment is in addition to Bill C-40, introduced last month, containing amendments to protect federal airports and airport sites from urban development encroaching on their boundaries.

The press release continues as follows:

> Mr. Lang said the amendment, introduced today, "makes clear this government's intent to ensure that the purchase, scheduling and operation of air carriers in this country remain within federal jurisdiction."

Mr. Lang originally proposed such legislation following a decision by the Supreme Court of Canada to uphold the purchase of Pacific Western Airlines by the Alberta government.

The new amendment will prohibit the transfer of shares or the issuing of a licence to an international or interprovincial air carrier without approval of the federal government.

The amendment also gives the Canadian Transport Commission the authority to suspend or cancel the licence of any air carrier allowing the transfer of its shares or the acquisition of its debt by a province.

In introducing the bill today, the minister talked about difficulties regulatory agencies would have in dealing with an airline owned by a provincial government at arm's length, as it deals with the private carriers. We have a number of regulatory agencies that deal with issues which are of concern to provincial governments and on which provincial governments make representations. There is no hesitation on the part of these regulatory agencies to hear from provincial governments. Obviously they do not feel very threatened by hearing from them. Usually they do not listen to the provincial governments. This is a poor excuse for limiting the right of a provincial government to buy into or take over a privately owned airline if the provincial government believes it is in the interest of the people of its province to have such public ownership.

Had the minister had this power when the Conservative government of Alberta moved to take over Pacific Western Airlines, this minister and this federal government would have prevented the Alberta government from taking over PWA.

I would like to give two illustrations of government regulatory agencies which have heard from provincial governments on issues of importance to the people of those provinces. Those agencies have not felt intimidated, threatened or anything else by those representations. The CTC, until recently the CRTC, has to rule on applications for rate increases made by Bell Canada for telephones in Ontario or Quebec, and it has to rule on applications for rate increases in British Columbia made by B.C. Telephone. They have had representations made to them on behalf of the citizens of their provinces by some of the provincial governments, in which they have objected to the size of the rate increase asked for, or have objected to any rate increase. After the CTC has heard from those provincial governments, it has made decisions based on their independent findings. Similarly the CTC has repeatedly dealt with applications for freight rate increases by the railways, increases to which the provincial governments of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta have objected. There has been no difficulty on the part of CTC in studying the questions and making decisions. Usually it permits increases far greater than the provincial governments have agreed to, and yet it has not felt threatened.

It is a completely spurious argument on the part of the minister that the federal government needs to have the authority to stop provincial governments from doing things which they feel are in the best interests of their people. A provincial government which owns an airline or part of an airline would still require CTC approval for changes in rates and changes in routes. There is no reason why the CTC, the regulatory agency, could not deal with an application made by an airline owned by a provincial government in the same way as it deals with applications made by airlines owned by private industry.

We have had no explanation from the minister or any other minister of what policies are being followed. What are the principles upon which the government bases its desire to prohibit provincial governments from getting into the airline business?

I know the minister was amazed and shocked, as I am sure were Conservative members, by the action of the Alberta government in buying all the shares of Pacific Western Airlines. I can just imagine what would have happened if that purchase had been made by the former NDP government of British Columbia. The government of Alberta apparently decided it was in the interests of the people of Alberta to have control of the service which PWA was providing, that the province was not going to be bound, I presume, purely by whether or not a given route made profit or showed a loss. The province wanted to provide the best possible service it could to the people of Alberta. If the minister had any logical objections to that purchase by the Alberta government of Pacific Western Airlines, he has certainly never made them known in this House or, to my knowledge, explained them publicly.

There are a number of other regional airlines in addition to PWA. For example, Transair operated in Manitoba, Ontario and the Northwest Territories. It was a privately owned airline which got into difficulties, I suppose caused by the cost of fuel mainly, which has increased so substantially that the airline found it could no longer make a profit. From what we read in the newspapers, apparently a proposal was put forward that PWA, now owned by the Alberta government, should buy Transair. I do not think the Minister of Transport discussed the matter with the premier of the province of Manitoba, in whose province the overhaul base for Transair has been located for many years.

The Leader-Post for May 6, 1977, carries a news story which in part reads as follows:

The CBC says Pacific Western Airlines, owned by the Alberta government, is expected to announce shortly that it will acquire Transair Ltd.

A deal has been made, and I think only a few details remain to be ironed out before it is concluded. The news story continues:

The report says the acquisition of the Winnipeg based regional airline will have the blessing of the federal government.

I wonder why it has the blessing of the federal government when the federal government was opposed to the purchase by the Alberta government of Pacific Western Airlines.

The report says Pacific Western will take over Transair for about $5 millions... Transair has lost about $6.5 million in its last two fiscal years.

CBC says it is understood that the federal goverment approached PWA to consider takeover of PWA. The government tried to prevent the Alberta government from buying PWA in the first place.

The report continues:

One of the most important aspects of the acquisition is the routes PWA would pick up. It could serve the whole of western Canada from Winnipeg to Victoria.

The report says that as part of the deal, Transair will lose its Winnipeg to Toronto run, which will be assumed by Air Canada. But Transair will pick up additional routes in western Canada, giving the airline inter-city service between Winnipeg, Regina, Saskatoon, Calgary and Edmonton.

The report says Air Canada will give the takeover its blessing as will the government of Saskatchewan. Manitoba is expected to follow suit, as long as it is guaranteed that maintenance facilities will remain in Winnipeg.

I understand that the government of Saskatchewan is, to say the least, not enthused by this deal, and that the government of Manitoba is not happy with the deal either. In any case, I see no reason for giving this government, parlicularly this minister, this kind of power. The minister has moved to take power—which he does not need—to do things which he has never explained, to take power to do things regarding which he has never enunciated the basic principles, to take power which, in our view, he wants purely for political reasons. We certainly cannot agree to that.

As we understand it, Mr. Speaker, this bill amends several sections of the Aeronautics Act. Basically it is aimed at prohibiting the purchase of an extrapovincial—interprovincial or international—airline without federal permission.

The Aeronautics Act is divided into three parts. Part I deals with the duties of the minister and regulations that the minister may prescribe regarding safety and inspection. Part II of the act, sections 9 to 19, deals with the Canadian Transport Commission and its role in civil aviation. The main role of the Canadian Transport Commission is licensing air routes and supervisions of rates. Part III deals with the hiring of personnel to administer the act and Department of Transport documents. The relationship between the ministry and the CTC is basically that the CTC grants a licence to a carrier to operate an air service and supervises the rates, and the ministry takes steps to ensure that the aircraft is operated safely.

This bill, along with Bill C-40, prohibits the transfer of the shares of an extraprovincial air carrier to a province without the approval of the governor in council. The new subsection 16(2) would prohibit the issuance of a licence to an extraprovincial air carrier in which a province is in the process of acquiring a debt or equity interest without the approval of the governor in council, which means without the approval of the minister. This subsection would apply only to applications for new licences; it does not affect existing licensing. In other words, the minister is not prepared to take on the government of Alberta for its purchase of Pacific Western Airlines.

This bill adds a new subsection 16(8.1) which directs the commission to suspend an existing licence of a provincial air carrier where the carrier allows a transfer of shares without the approval of the governor in council, or where the carrier allows a province to acquire a debt interest.

The complementary bill, Bill C-40, also has an amendment to section 16 of the Aeronautics Act, which is the section at which Bill C-46 is aimed. Bill C-40 provides an amendment to 16(3) and 16(8) which would enable the issuance of licences for non-scheduled air services upon proof of public interest, rather than proof of public convenience and necessity as now required.

This provision may be detrimental, depending upon the definition given to "public interest". Under the old rule of public convenience and necessity, an applicant must prove that his service would add something. Under the public interest rule, if the public interest is to be defined as section 3 of the National Transportation Act, then the public interest is defined in terms of competition and the economic well-being of Canada. However, if the public interest is to be defined as section 3 of the amended National Transportation Act after Bill C-33 is passed, then the public interest is defined in terms of competition and commercial viability of the carriers.

Since the tabling of the Hall report we have heard the minister say several times how pleased he was with the main provisions of the report and that he was going to move to implement them. If the Hall report made one thing clear, it was that commercial viability is not a good way of judging what is needed in terms of transportation.

● (1630)

Let me quote from an article by Nicholas Hills which appeared in the Montreal Gazette on May 18 of this year, dealing with the Hall report. It reads:

Hall has gone almost all the way to meeting the arguments of the western premiers that the railways and Ottawa are the barriers to a new economic future, based on fairer tariff, tax and freight rate policies . . .

He has said, like the western premiers in every political strife, that the raw materials should be processed here, and not in central Canada.

He has inferred, again like the western premiers, that the railways engage in duplicity—for having settled the west originally they now want to settle its future, again to their advantage.

In another article on May 18, which I will not quote but the headline of which reads: "Hall Flies in Face of Lang Philosophy", Nick Hills makes precisely the point. The minister wants this authority because he does not want the provinces to go into the airline business because they may not be interested in just commercial viability and just in making profit. They may be interested in giving service to the people of their provinces. That, of course, is anathema to the Minister of Transport. He continues, despite all the nice things he says about the Hall report, with his basic philosophy that all that counts is making a profit. We oppose that.

We think that if a province wants to go into the airline business to provide a better service for its people, it should have that right, and it should not have to come cap in hand to the minister or to the government to ask for permission to do it. That does not mean that the other provisions in the Aeronautics Act and the other acts which apply to the present or future private operators of airlines will not continue, that the provinces will not have to meet the standards with regard to the safety of the service and everything else, but we see no reason why this government should prohibit any provincial government, regardless of political stripe, which wants to go into the business, from doing so. There is more than Pacific Western Airlines involved in this question.

There are a number of regional carriers. There is Eastern Airlines which provides service in the Atlantic provinces, there is Quebec Air which provides service in Quebec, and there are some regional carriers in Ontario. Given the increased cost of fuel and of parts, it may be that one or the other of these regional carriers would decide that they can no longer make a profit, in spite of subsidies on profitable routes which the federal government is sometimes persuaded to provide. It may be that they may want to go out of business and that one of the provincial governments will say, "This service is so important to Nova Scotia, Newfoundland or northern Quebec that we will take over this airline and we will run it, not to make a profit but to provide service". What this bill would say is that they could not do it without satisfying the federal government of the day, the Department of Transport or the Minister of Transport, that they have a valid reason for doing it.

We see no reason why the federal government needs that authority; we see no reason for putting these restrictions on any provincial government, and we will oppose this bill.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Is it the pleasure of the House to adopt the said motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: On division.

Motion agreed to, bill read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

AIR CANADA ACT, 1976

MEASURE RESPECTING REORGANIZATION OF AIR CANADA

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport) moved that Bill C-17, respecting the reorganization of Air Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

He said: Mr. Speaker, it is 40 years since parliament gave authority, in the Trans-Canada Air Lines Act of 1937, for the establishment of our national airline. We may all, I think, take satisfaction and indeed pride in the work done by our predecessors in the House and by the directors and officers of the company itself in providing for and developing one of the world's great airlines.

In the early years of its development, Trans-Canada Air Lines mainly carried mails while it expanded its fleet, trained its staff, and provided advice on the airfields and aids to navigation which were required for the introduction of passenger services across the continent.

By 1939, TCA had expanded to the point where it employed 500 people and in that year carried 21,000 passengers on domestic services. Its fleet was comprised mainly of Lockheed 14H aircraft which could accommodate 11 passengers and 2,700 pounds of cargo, and could cruise at 200 miles per hour over typical stage lengths of 350 miles.

By way of contrast, after four decades of operation in peace and war, Air Canada by the end of 1975 had over 20,000 employees. In that year it carried 10.4 million revenue passengers, roughly one quarter of whom travelled on international routes. The corporation's fleet consisted of 120 aircraft, ranging from 365-seat Boeing 747s to 95 seat DC-9s.

The employment of jet aircraft, starting in the early 1960's, permitted very rapid rates of growth in the airline's productivity. Cruising speeds rose to the region of 550 miles per hour over stage lengths of up to 4,000 miles.

This increase in the speed of air transportation, combined with the increases in productivity which allowed airlines to hold back on price increases and even to make price reductions while paying increasingly higher wages and salaries to their employees, brought about dramatic changes in travelling patterns. Travel for pleasure or personal reasons has gradually replaced business travel as the main source of business in many markets. This in turn has led airlines to become involved in many new types of associated activities such as hotels, vacation package tours, and computerized teleprocessing systems.

Despite this rapid pace of change in the air transport industry, the original Trans-Canada Air Lines Act was changed only slightly over the years, the key amendments being in 1945 and 1953, and in 1964, when the name of the corporation was changed to Air Canada. The change of name was symbolic of the wider horizons in which the airline had come to operate, not only in the national but increasingly in an international sphere.

The act incorporating the company, enacted when a transcontinental flight was itself a major undertaking, has become less and less appropriate to the evolving needs of the day. Therefore we have thoroughly revised the old Air Canada Act to enable the corporation to respond quickly and effectively to the challenges of the future.

Underlying Bill C-17 is the fact that Air Canada is no longer a fledgling airline and no longer needs the special protective measures which are incorporated in the present act and in the Aeronautics Act. The corporation, nevertheless, faces new challenges and must be able to adjust to changing conditions. The bill seeks to put Air Canada on a footing similar to that of the airlines with which it competes.

First, there is the matter of ownership. In 1937 it seemed appropriate that organizations with experience in transportation should be asked to organize a trans-Canada airline, and after exploration of various possibilities the Canadian National Railway became the sole shareholder. It provided not only the share capital but also the first president of the airline and the administrative services required to support him in running the operation. As it has grown over the year, Air Canada has become less and less dependent upon the direct support of the Canadian National Railway. Therefore the bill provides for the cancellation of the shares now held by the CNR. All Air Canada shares will be held directly by the government.

Associated with this change, the present arrangement whereby the auditors of CN are by legislation also the auditors for Air Canada should be discontinued. Therefore, the bill provides for the appointment of Air Canada's auditors by the governor in council, and generally brings the provisions associated with an outside audit into line with other recently created Crown corporations.

The bill contains no reference to the Air Canada contract nor to the airmail contract except inferentially. The 1937 act described the trans-Canada contract in some detail, provided for a conterminous mail contract, and stipulated how the airmail rates in each year should be adjusted according to whether the corporation recorded a surplus or a deficit during the preceding year. That latter practice was discontinued following the revision of the act in 1945.

In 1953 the section describing Trans-Canada Airlines' contract was shortened. To be specific, references to a schedule of services to be maintained by the corporation under the contract and to the payment of a subsidy equal to any deficit at the end of the year were deleted. The present Air Canada Act also contains clauses dealing with what is now called the Air Canada contract and the Air Canada mail contract. Provisions for payment of subsidies are included in the act only with regard to contracts containing terms ordered by the governor in council into which the minister may enter with subsidiaries of Air Canada.

It is my view that there is a better way to arrange these particular relationships between the government and Air Canada. Accordingly, the Air Canada contract and the airmail contract would be cancelled, and no provision for the payment of subsidies to Air Canada directly, or to any of its subsidiaries, is contained in the bill. Instead, Air Canada would be required to comply with directions from the governor in council. We will in the later stages, following discussions we have had within the government, introduce an amendment which will qualify the text as it now appears so that the directions which may be given by the governor in council will be directions of a general nature.

This is designed, as I will mention later, to emphasize the fact that it is not the intention nor the purpose of the government to give directions in relation to the day-to-day operations of the airline. It is our view that the airline ought to make those judgments on its operations as a part of its own management decisions and that we ought not to interfere with that.

In the bill we are providing compensation to the corporation if compliance with the directions given to it results in losses to Air Canada. This is in line with the 1975 transportation policy statement that where the government requires certain services to be performed at a certain cost, that cost ought to be known, and it ought generally to be borne by the treasury rather than be passed on to the users of the transportation service.

The discontinuance of the Air Canada contract has another consequence which should receive our collective attention. Under the Aeronautics Act the CTC is now compelled to issue licences to Air Canada for services provided pursuant to the Air Canada contract.

It is now proposed that Air Canada should apply to the CTC for new licences in the same way as other carriers do.

[Mr. Lang.]

This change is in line with the emphasis that the government and, indeed, the board and senior management of the corporation place on the need for Air Canada to compete on a similar footing with other airlines.

I remarked earlier that changed circumstances have created new needs as well as removed the necessity for old safeguards. The present act contains a list of the business and powers of the corporation which, although long, is not sufficiently comprehensive in terms of the new activities which have now become associated with air transport. Whereas the provisions of the present act are quite specific and narrow, we have taken a much broader approach. This bill provides more flexibility for businesses and activities in areas associated with the operations of major airlines while retaining control by the government over Air Canada as a Crown corporation against entry into areas not related to the airline business. There always remains a risk in any enumeration of powers, no matter how broadly drafted, that some future legitimate activity is not provided for in it. To ensure that Air Canada does not become the prisoner of that kind of situation, the governor in council would be given power to authorize the corporation to engage in activities which are not specifically provided for in the bill.

Under the present act Air Canada's authorized equity capital has an upper limit of $25 million. The actual issued capital is $5 million, whereas the corporation's current balance sheet lists total assets in excess of $1 billion. The present arrangement forces Air Canada to obtain most of the financing it requires in the form of long-term debt. This, in turn, has three undesirable effects. First, it makes it difficult to compare Air Canada's performance with that of major airlines which have debt equity ratios over a wide range, but none so extreme and debt-laden as 97 to 3, which is currently the case with Air Canada.

Second, since nearly all of Air Canada's financing is in the form of debt which carries a charge against current operations in the form of interest payments, Air Canada can swing very quickly between a profit and a loss on the basis of very slight changes in the market or in operating conditions.

Third, lenders in the long-term debt market apply certain tests before supplying funds, and one of these tests involves a satisfactory debt equity ratio.

Under present circumstances Air Canada stands little chance of being able to borrow in the market without government guarantees. Since the intention of Bill C-17 is to pave the way for a more commercially oriented corporation, Air Canada must have a more normal debt equity ratio to pass the test applied in the money market.

Therefore Bill C-17 makes the following provisions: The authorized capital of the corporation would be $750 million. There may be available to Air Canada up to $750 million in direct government loans or government guaranteed loans obtained in the open market. In addition, over and above the $1.5 billion just mentioned, the corporation would have the power to borrow money in the market on its own credit. For long-term debt—that is to say, debt which exceeds 18 months in term—prior approval from the Minister of Finance would be required, but short-term borrowing, to accommodate cyclical short-term cash needs, would not require that approval. The existing debt can be rearranged by converting some of the existing government debt to equity, some of the existing CNR debt to equity, or a combination of these, but the bill puts a limit on these conversions of $600 million. If the corporation's debt to CNR were converted to equity capital, CNR's own debt to the government would be correspondingly reduced in an offset against the reduction which was made in that manner.

These provisions do not establish a specific debt-equity ratio that would be maintained indefinitely. Instead, they provide a framework within which a healthy debt-equity ratio can be maintained by the performance of the airline or by provision of new capital on the analogy of private companies seeking new equity or debt. The mechanisms for infusions of up to $750 million each for equity capital and government debt were based on that premise. The statutory appropriations are balanced by the dollar ceilings which may not be exceeded.

To arrive at the $750 million figure, estimates were made of Air Canada's probable capital requirements over the next five years and these data were combined with existing long-term debt and equity and a safety factor was then applied.

I would like to add that Air Canada would be allowed to borrow on its own credit without limit. If Air Canada is successful commercially, and I believe it will be, the corporation should be in a position to borrow on the open market within a very short period of time.

Here I wish to add a note of emphasis. It is the intention both of myself and of the board and senior management of Air Canada that its performance will be equal to or better than the performances of the world's top airlines. That means that it must be competitive in every way. It is possible, for example, for an airline virtually to assure on-time departures of all its flights if it is prepared to pay the cost of over-capacity in its fleet. Equally it is possible for an airline to return profits by combining under-capacity with a monopoly. It will be the responsibility of the board of Air Canada, to me as minister, to parliament and to the people of Canada, to achieve the maximum possible efficiency in all aspects of the airline's operation, and not to favour one aspect at the expense of the others. One measure of their success will be the financial results of the company, and it is the intention of the government that Air Canada will conduct its operations in contemplation of profit.

I have of course referred earlier to the power reserved to the governor in council to give directives to the corporation, and for compensation, subject to appropriation by parliament, to be paid for losses incurred in giving effect to such directives. This gives the government power to ensure that any tendency to concentrate on profit at the expense of necessary but loss-creating services can be countered. But it will also ensure that such services are clearly identified and the social benefits achieved will be at the cost of the treasury and not of Air Canada.

As I said earlier that is consistent with the principle we have been applying in other areas to railways as well as to Air Canada. We ought to know specifically what it costs if a particular social obligation or other obligation is imposed upon an entity like this and we ought to identify and pay that cost so that the airline or railway in question is not left in the position of either being short of cash to perform its necessary functions or of having to charge more for other services it provides in order to make up the loss on the services to be performed.

The inquiry conducted by the Hon. W. Z. Estey in 1975 resulted in a number of recommendations for changes in the present Air Canada Act. Some of these recommendations have been taken into account, as I have indicated previously, and are in the bill. The bill also addresses the matter of capacities and activities of the corporation and provides for direct government ownership and government directives to which I referred.

In addition, the bill reflects a careful consideration of recommendations contained in the Estey report, such as the expansion of the board of directors to 15 members and their appointment by the governor in council. Here I may say that it will not be our intention to move to fill all these positions immediately but to do so progressively over a period of time. Further recommendations of the Estey report were that the chairman and president be appointed by the government after consultations with the board; bylaws passed by the board to be subject to government approval; and power to the board to delegate duties to an executive committee which must be established.

In addition, the bill contains an innovation which would allow Air Canada to create subsidiaries, subject to the approval of the governor in council. Under the present act, it is the governor in council who, upon petition by Air Canada, can create companies whose shares are subsequently acquired by Air Canada.

Finally I should say a few words about the legal framework of the bill.

Basically, Air Canada would continue as in the past to be a "special act" corporation, but certain provisions of the Canada Business Corporations Act would be incorporated in the special act.

For example, the bill has adopted the "natural person" concept which says that Air Canada can do all things that a "natural person" can do, but with the qualification that this "natural person" power is confined to activities listed in the bill.

Due to the fact that Air Canada's permitted activities are set out, and that its "natural person" power is restricted to these permitted activities, the doctrine of ultra vires would continue to apply to Air Canada. In order to protect third parties from finding themselves in a position in which Air Canada has acted beyond its capacities, thus rendering a transaction null and void, the bill expressly provides that such ultra vires acts by the corporation may not be used against third parties which have acted in good faith.

The bill also contains a number of "housekeeping" clauses. Generally speaking, they describe the relationship between this bill and other statutes.

I have had discussions with Air Canada and others since first reading of the bill and I shall, in the standing committee, propose certain amendments to the bill. Some are intended to ease and facilitate the workings of the corporation, some are intended to be clarification if there is any possibility of doubt about the meaning of a clause, but in its essence the bill remains the same as it is now at second reading.

In committee some substantial amendments will attempt to give the assurance of greater commercial flexibility to Air Canada in order not to impede it in its operations and its competitiveness with other airlines. Changes will be suggested to bring some greater correspondence between the special act and the terms of the Canada Business Corporations Act. In some cases it is a matter of removing doubt about the meaning of a clause in the special act as drafted.

More important, as I indicated earlier there will be the intention to narrow the directive power which is set out in the bill so that it is limited to directions of a general nature. Again I emphasize that is designed to underline the fact that Air Canada should be run essentially by its management and its board of directors who are accountable to the shareholders and to the minister for the people of Canada in the same way as the management of other corporations is, but not subjected to day-to-day interference in those operations. It is not the intention of the government to get into the day-to-day management but rather to leave that to the best management possible for Air Canada.

We also propose to clarify the legal status of Air Canada. While not really believing there is much doubt about it as the special act is written, to resolve any possible doubt we will be prepared to have an amendment put before the committee which will make it clear that Air Canada is not in law or in fact an agent of Her Majesty. That will perhaps serve to further emphasize the nature of the airline as we see it and our objective that it continue to be a first-class world level airline; that it be competitive; that it apply good business principles and that it serve the people of Canada by operating effectively and efficiently and, one hopes, with constantly improved attitudes by all who serve and work in it.

I should like to add some comments on that very point, Mr. Speaker. Air Canada, like any other company, will so often provide good service or better service depending on the total attitude of those who work in it. I pay tribute to the men and women who work in the company, to top management and to all other levels, and express the hope that with the new attitude being shown to Air Canada and its future, and the new approach of its present management, to whom I pay special tribute, there will be constant improvement in the morale and attitude of those who work within the corporation.

● (1700)

While one hopes, as a member of the government or of the travelling public, for efficient service from any air transport company, one may be permitted to have special reasons for wanting it in the case of Air Canada, the shareholders of which are all the people of Canada. I look forward to full discussion on the details of this bill in committee and commend this bill to hon. members and its reference to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

[Mr. Lang.]

Mr. J. M. Forrestall (Dartmouth-Halifax East): Mr. Speaker, if I had known this bill was to be discussed so soon, I suggest I would be in a position to make more co-ordinated and lucid comments on it.

More than 12 years ago members spoke in this Chamber on the necessity of separating Air Canada from Canadian National Railways. This bill does that and it is an historic, significant occasion in this the 40th year of Air Canada operations. The airline has finally come of age. It has groaned and moaned for 40 years. In the next 40 years I hope Air Canada will get up off its knees, walk, run, and ultimately fly. Let it provide a service of which Canadians will be proud, and which will bring us prestige as international operators of air carrier service. Of course when I speak of Air Canada service I speak of the total package of services which must be associated with air service.

The bill gives Air Canada the right to enter into activities not directly related to flying, activities such as catering to the tourist trade. I hope we can not only be proud of Air Canada service, but that its service will grow constantly better. The people of Canada still own the airline, and I prophesy they will own it in years to come.

The airline's debt ratio at 97 to three is poor. We are about to reduce that ratio; that is a good and necessary step. If the airline is to enter the market place for financing, its debt ratio should be in the order of 60 to 40, or 50-50. I suspect, from the way the airline has operated in the last ten or 15 years, that the government will come to this House from time to time to suggest methods for injecting more equity capital into Air Canada, in order to sustain its debt-equity ratio. That ratio must be adequate if the airline is to enter the market place to secure the finances for its operating needs. I hope it will not happen, and I do not intend to begin my remarks in a negative manner.

This House and the standing committee will need to consider in depth some of the proposals contained in the bill. Perhaps I might mention some of the ways Air Canada is to be reorganized under Bill C-17. Basically, the bill would separate Air Canada from its parent, Canadian National. It contains four fundamental proposals. First, it would authorize Air Canada to engage in a wider range of activities. Second, it would separate Air Canada from the CNR; the airline would be an entity unto itself. I remind the House that, to the best of my knowledge, it has been the policy of my party for at least 15 years to separate Air Canada from the CNR. We first heard this might happen when the present Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson) was minister of transport. We heard nothing after that one-line comment made years ago in a budget debate.

Third, the bill would authorize Air Canada to increase its capital stock. This we consider to be necessary. Fourth, it would authorize Air Canada to seek debt financing in the market place. All these points relate to the question of management, on which the minister touched, and to the necessity of improving Air Canada's debt-equity ratio in order that it may go to the market place for its operation funds. Each of those points is worth exploring in detail.

First, let us consider the question of broader powers. Air Canada is rather restricted by the terms of the present act in the type of activities in which it can engage. The proposed act broadens the capacities and activities which the company may undertake, both within and outside Canada. Aside from operating the business of an air carrier, there are references to hotels and other accommodation, surface vehicles and facilities for the transportation and housing of persons, goods and mail; services, facilities and equipment for organizing and conducting tours, catering and providing other passenger-related services, including reservations for transportation and accommodation; and computer and tele-processing systems and technical, advisory and consulting services.

Perhaps in committee we shall discover how far those powers extend. Hon. members no doubt are aware of the events which preceded Judge Estey's examination of Air Canada activities, and know how close Air Canada came to breaking this country's law, and know how some officials in the not too distant past stopped Air Canada breaking the law.

As well, the new act permits the company to establish or invest in subsidiary companies, provided authorization of the governor in council, which means the federal cabinet or the minister, is first obtained. These changes will enable the company to offer a greater range of services and to engage in other activities which may be deemed finanially beneficial. This provision would put right that which Air Canada officials were doing which was wrong. I do not mind doing that. I am confident that most members of this House believe as I do. If Air Canada is to operate successfully, it must operate in areas broader than the simple carriage of passengers and goods. It must engage in other activities. There is general agreement on this side of the Chamber with regard to that.

We will want to look very closely at Judge Estey's suggestions with regard to this expanded authority. That will be done here in the Chamber and in greater detail in committee.

With regard to ownership of the capital stock transfer envisaged by this bill, up until this time all of this stock has been held by CNR, a Crown corporation. What is envisaged here is the establishment of a Crown corporation, albeit subject to the business act, business practices act and so on. Nevertheless, we are establishing another Crown corporation.

This House could well spend a day of its time in the not too distant future looking at the role of Crown corporations and the use to which the government puts the concept of Crown corporations with regard to transportation in Canada. There is VIA rail, if it ever gets any money and gets off the ground.

CN is in an unhealthy position as a result of Air Canada. I do not mind it being a bit of a whipping boy. These things are relatively important as CN, the principal shareholder of Air Canada, has been saddled with enormous debt ever since the birth of Air Canada.

We established VIA as a Crown corporation. We are looking at Canadian National Marine Transportation as a Crown corporation. Now we are looking at Air Canada as a separate Crown corporation with what might be considered as extraordinary authority and power.

The minister undertook this afternoon to deal with the authority implicit in this bill, in the VIA arrangements, in the arrangements for Canadian National Marine Corporation and, indeed, extended to communications.

In the new Communications Act there is implicit clear authority for daily intervention on the part of the minister to ensure that policy and policy guidelines are being followed, not by the boards of directors of these corporations, but by the day-to-day executive of these corporations.

We on this side of the Chamber have argued for many years that there has to be greater political control in the sense of ensuring that the will of Canadians with respect to these tools of all Canadians is the will of the government and parliament, and is being followed. Never did we suggest that that authority go so far as to permit the minister to intervene on a day-to-day basis with the nuts and bolts operation of any of these Crown corporations engaged in transportation matters. That is one matter that will be looked at very closely.

I come back to the ownership and position of Air Canada, that position being one of a wholly owned subsidiary of Canadian National. CN, exercising its proper right and authority, appointed five shareholders to the Air Canada board of directors while the governor in council appointed four.

The proposed act stipulates that shares of Air Canada shall be held by the Minister of Transport in trust for Her Majesty in right of Canada and that the shares are not transferable. It further provides that the corporation shall be under the management of a board of directors comprised of a chairman and president and not more than 13 other directors. What a pork barrel that will be. All of them will be appointed by the governor in council.

As long as the Minister of Transport holds in right of the Crown all of the shares of Air Canada and maintains the right to appoint the chairman and board of directors by order in council, anything to the contrary will be opposed by us if there is an exercise capable of demonstrating an authority to intervene at other than the directors level.

If the minister and the government want statutory authority to intervene and interfere, it is and will remain our position, until we see and are satisfied with the amendments promised a few moments ago by the minister to clarify this, that that is where there shall be ministerial intervention with respect to "policy guidelines". That is where the minister should do it, not at the day to day working level of Air Canada. These are areas we have to look at closely.

We have to look at the authorized share capital. There is a concern in the industry. Indeed Air Canada is concerned with regard to the minimum authorized share capital presently held by it. I think it amounts to $25 million. This amount, together with the accumulated net profits of the corporation, labelled retained earnings, an interesting chartered accountant's view of a damnably high debt the taxpayer has to pay, represents the shareholder's equity. On December 31, 1975, the balance sheet totalled $31.4 million.

I repeat to the minister that we had hoped that the standing committee would have an opportunity to examine the annual report of Air Canada before dealing with Bill C-17. The failure of the government to refer the annual report of Air Canada in each of the last three years is reprehensible. Indeed it could be argued that CN by its association acted illegally for several years. It was not until quite recently that we bothered to obey the law by approving certain of the annual acts that came before us with respect to this.

The same balance sheet shows that the company had long term debt of $1,011.4 million. That is already out of date. There is no question about it. These figures are mentioned because it is in this way that you get the relationship between the $1,011.4 million and the $31.4 million shareholders' equity, comprised of some loans and retained earnings. This puts Air Canada in the desperate situation of a debt ratio of 97 to 3. This means that 97 per cent had to come from borrowing while only 3 per cent represents the shareholders' original investment, plus accumulated net profits.

Someone like myself from the Atlantic provinces who watches this government cannot forget that we have massive debt in rail passenger service in the Atlantic provinces. My God, a desperate debt! If we ran rail passenger trains at the current rate of debt we would never get anywhere with this kind of debt. Yet they are going to write this off. They are going to take our trains away from us; we are going to get buses. We are going to ride from Saint John to Montreal on a bus so we can catch the transcontinental train. I wonder what Joe Howe would say about that if he were here today.

● (1720)

Bill C-17 authorizes Air Canada to issue common shares up to the amount of $750 million, if I read it correctly. It provides for the conversion of part of the existing debt to common shares which, of course, can only be sold to the government. If I understood the minister correcty, $750 million, in that sense, is the upper limit. This may not necessarily be issued with the passage of the bill before us, but in combination with the use of other methods of accepting other debt instruments of Air Canada it will at some point in time virtually absorb the debt of $1 billion or more that is there. I hope I understand this correctly because it is important that I should tell the minister that this is the position in which we are in general agreement. Indeed we cannot see any other way of approaching this problem caused by the existing and mounting debt of Air Canada.

[Mr. Forrestall.]

Over the years Air Canada's need for capital has virtually been met in entirety by borrowing from the government. The proposed act would provide Air Canada with a much greater flexibility in raising funds. We welcome this. In addition to the substantial increase in common shares which can be issued to the government, the company is permitted to borrow from the government. But most important is the freedom to borrow from the long term capital account provided approval has been obtained from the minister of finance. I assume this approval has to be transmitted to Air Canada through the Ministry of Transport. We suggest that this is a form of monitoring which should continue to take place. I suppose that is the only truly logical way for this to happen. We assume it will take place by way of a single resolution before the House which would either be approved or rejected—in the latter case the department would have to find some other way in which to operate.

There is no limit to the amount of borrowing into which Air Canada can enter. We have some concern about the method to be employed by the government, and particularly by the minister, in exercising control over this very broad authority. This is the second area of major concern to those of us on this side. Again, we shall be dealing with it in some depth as the debate continues. Unless the minister is optimistic enough to think that this bill is going through this afternoon, or tomorrow, or Friday, or Monday, I caution him that there are a lot of my hon. friends over here who are concerned to deal with this measure in some depth.

Air Canada is this year celebrating its fortieth anniversary. Yet since 1937 there have been no fundamental amendments to the Air Canada Act. The minister has dealt with Judge Estey's report and has given us some indication of his intention to move with respect to certain of his recommendations which are referred to in the bill itself. Also, he has indicated that there are others which are not dealt with in the bill, and we shall be seeking clarification of the position taken by the minister toward them.

A number of the recommendations in the Estey Report continue to cause us considerable concern, especially those relating to Air Canada's management structure. For example there is the recommendation which states that the position of the board of directors as the ultimate authority should be improved by enlarging the board and forming an executive committee of the board. It is further stated that the independence and stature of the members of the board should be assured by giving statutory tenure and ensuring standards of appointments. In this connection it occurs to us—and I am referring to the last sentence—that it is incumbent upon us to make sure that attention is directed to this area and that an amendment is made accordingly. I say this because it seems to me that standards of qualifications of directors are just as important, when it comes to directors, as the maintenance of the government's right to appoint, arising from the fact that it is the principal shareholder.

Apart from statutory tenure and standards of appointment, we want qualification for appointments to be spelt out clearly. This is not the case at the present time. We want to know, and I believe the travelling public and those engaged in the transportation industry want to know what the standards of qualifications for appointments are. They should be spelt out very clearly, in the bill. Further in his report, Judge Estey stated:

> The independence of the board in its role as the ultimate internal element of corporate control should be implanted securely and obviously in the statute.

I come back to what I was saying earlier about implicit authority in Bill C-17 and other bills which have been and which will be before us, giving power to the minister and to other ministers to intervene directly in the day to day operations of Crown corporations. This is somewhat repugnant to us on this side. On the other hand, we shall support and encourage his position with respect to his ministerial right to intervene at the board level. The minister has already indicated he is prepared to go further in this regard by way of certain clarifications.

I quote again from Estey. Indeed, Glassco in earlier reports touched on this aspect.

> Finally, the method of appointing directors should be examined. The operation of the Corporation has now attained such proportions as to be a top-ranking national asset. Thus the board performs a fiduciary role of such importance that consideration should be given to its enlargement and to some prescribed standards of qualification or experience, prohibited interests, tenure, etc. etc. to ensure in the future a high level of board competence and independence. There seems no longer to be the original need to have a majority of the directors of Air Canada chosen from the membership of the CNR Board. Certainly the office of the president should be placed on an articulated basis or abolished. If retained he should be a member of the board.

● (1730)

Estey in no way meant to insult the board of directors. Those who have read that particular statement, I am sure, have also read his clarification. The point he is making, with respect to clarification and qualification of the role of the chairman of the board, is that the qualifications for appointment, reappointment and tenure should be clearly known, articulated, and spelled out so that all Canadians would have the trust and faith they richly deserve in this new corporation in order for it to operate in the manner the minister has described. Without it we could have some doubts as to whether it would survive.

Judge Estey's recommendations in this respect are fairly important. I would like to cite the following, which will be the last one, although I would like to go on for another hour or two:

> The Air Canada Act should provide a channel for the government or the responsible minister to issue to the board of directors of the corporation policy directives where the national interest from time to time requires.

That indicates to me Judge Estey was saying there is an institutional responsibility, a parliamentary responsibility, a ministerial responsibility, and a government responsibility. If we interpret this recommendation and its translation into the act correctly, then I think we understand something which will be welcomed by all members in this Chamber. I am referring to the vehicle to pose questions to the minister, which he may not answer simply by saying, "I will bring your representation to the attention of the appropriate Air Canada board or authority". That was never enough for this institution and will never be enough for this institution in the foreseeable future.

We require the right to examine the minister with respect to the degree to which he maintains a capacity to ensure that the board of directors is on top of his guidelines and policies and that they are in fact being implemented by the day to day corporate and executive management. It is through the board the minister must get his assurance, and it is through the board, with the ultimate passage of this particular bill, this Chamber will have the right to seek information, to make inquiries, to understand and to question without the minister being able to say "I cannot do anything with respect to it because it is out of my hands and I cannot touch it". When the minister becomes the holder of those shares and has the authority and governor in council approval to appoint directors, then let him tell me why it is we eat fried chicken every Friday from here to Halifax—cold, stale, sometimes fried chicken. Then let him stand up and tell me why we do not have the seats we richly deserve in the Atlantic provinces. Do not let him tell me then that he cannot tell me because he has no right to interfere. This is the type of interference we welcome and want. He knows the outlet of expression and the difficulties which arise when a minister does not feel obliged to respond to questions with respect to the carrier.

I am sorry this bill came up for debate today. I think the minister is going to get a little light-headed and start feeling big because various things are happening in his favour today. He gave $125 million to the Atlantic provinces. I publicly thank him for that. The sum of $100 million will go a way on highways for us. Perhaps Ponderosa Drive will be paved so that I can drive home over a paved road rather than a muddy one. We also welcome the $25 million which is ear-marked for bus and air support. I hope that $25 million will largely go into air, because this is an area where Air Canada has not been good to regional air carriers. I am not only referring to EPA, but other air carriers with respect to scheduling, paralleling of service, and the related problems this has caused particularly in the last 12 to 18 months.

We hope the minister's bill will get the fullest possible scrutiny. We hope he will respond frankly to us on the question of joint auditorship. We hope he will find the vehicle to name the Auditor General as a joint auditor, not only for this bill but for other Crown corporations dealing with transportation. The result of this would be that members of parliament would have a legitimate vehicle by which to examine the activities of Crown corporations such as Air Canada, Via Rail, Canadian National, Marine Transport and so on.

I will conclude by reminding the minister that the role of Crown corporations in transport relates to the realities of the day and the realities of the need to move our people comfortably and as economically as possible, and to move our goods and freight from one part of the country to another. It must operate in areas where the private sector cannot function as a tool of the economic stability of a region or as a tool of the economic development and growth of a region by way of having to maintain, because of federal regulatory authorities, routes which are unprofitable. Unprofitable routings must be the responsibility of the people of Canada.

There is a will, not only in this Chamber but among the taxpayers of Canada, to ensure that best possible transportation modes are maintained and developed as need demonstrates. Where it is unprofitable and where there is a clear need for an economic stabilizing capacity or an economic development capacity, it can only be done by Crown corporations in my judgment. To that end I wish the minister well with his bill. There are three years of history waiting to be touched upon. I suggest the minister dust off his pants, sit down and listen. We will be here in July or August discussing this piece of legislation. I think it is worth it. When we are finished, I hope the minister has a good piece of legislation, and I hope Air Canada has a piece of legislation by which it can achieve the desired ends the minister mentioned in his concluding remarks.

To that end, the members of the opposition will lend the support they can. We hold out no promises of swift passage but rather, to the degree to which the minister is prepared to amend the shortcomings in the bill, to bring forward amendments that will overcome our difficulties with respect to it—to the degree he is able to do that and is prepared to do that, we will be prepared to support him in the passage of this legislation, and I look forward to speaking on it again at a later date.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, members of the New Democratic Party, and CCF members who preceded the NDP, always supported Air Canada and always supported the concept of a publicly owned and operated transcontinental air carrier.

If all that this bill did, Mr. Speaker, was to split Air Canada off from the CNR and permit it to operate independently and more efficiently, we would have no objection to the bill. The bill itself is rather simple, providing for the setting up of Air Canada as a separate Crown corporation split away from CNR, which presently owns all the outstanding shares, and for some rearrangement of financial matters made necessary by this split. In addition, clause 8 makes the corporation directly liable to "comply with directions given to it in writing by the governor in council".

The other important change in this legislation is the modification of the system under the old Air Canada Act whereby the government contracted with Air Canada for the provision of services such as access to remote areas, passenger and freight services on sparsely populated runs, and so on. Clause 9 of the bill authorizes the government to modify this payment arrangement with Air Canada so that the former contract arrangement is replaced by government order, accompanied by a subsidy to cover the amount of loss incurred in carrying out the order.

We are opposed to this bill not because of what is in the bill or because of anything the minister said in his introduction today; we oppose it because of certain sections of the throne speech of last October and statements made by the minister outside the House regarding what he sees as the future of Air Canada. Let me quote one passage in the throne speech:

> In a further effort to reduce the size of government as well as expand the range of opportunities for private enterprise, all federal programs will be reviewed to identify those government activities which could be transferred to the private sector without reducing the quality of service to the public.

In January of this year the minister sent a letter to the chairman of the CNR indicating his intention to see this policy implemented. To this end he said he would like to see the CNR broken up into identifiable profit centres which could be auctioned off as units to the private sector. This very cogent critique of the situation was referred to in a column by Geoffrey Stevens which appeared in the Globe and Mail for January 20, 1977, and I should like to quote a few parts of his article. Mr. Stevens wrote this:

> In the first eight years after the National Transportation Act came into force (in 1967), these subsidies totalled $646 million (compared to $334 million for the rival CPR).

He goes on to say that the CNR seems to have turned the corner so far as operating expenses are concerned and is in a position where it will shortly be making a small profit. He then asks a very simple question, one I think the minister should answer on some occasion, perhaps in closing this debate. Mr. Stevens asks:

> If CN is going to start making money, why should private investors and stock market speculators reap the benefit? Why shouldn't the general public get something back for carrying the freight all these years? There's no law that says the taxpayer may only own enterprises that lose money.

I think Mr. Geoffrey Stevens makes a very pertinent comment. The splitting off of Air Canada from the CNR is the first evidence of this splitting off of these profit centres. The minister has admitted in interviews with the press that its purpose is the eventual privatization of Air Canada. To this end, the replacement of the old contract for a services relationship between the airline and the government has been replaced by a system of direct subsidization of unprofitable services, with the intention of putting Air Canada in the position of showing an accounting profit in order to make it more attractive to the private sector as a purchase.

The Minister of Transport has suggested that this relationship is the first step to the opening up of all of the former contracts for services routes to competitive bidding between Air Canada, CP and other airlines, which would have the effect of putting Air Canada on a completely commercial basis identical to that of CP, and increase the possibility of its being sold off as a unit to the private sector.

According to a CBC report on October 29, the minister said that he saw Air Canada eventually becoming a private corporation. He said that routes that now have to be operated by Air Canada whether it makes a profit or not, will not have to be operated by Air Canada whether it makes a profit or not, but will be open to competitive bidding and that the successful applicant will get the routes and the subsidy that goes with them. The minister said the reason behind the move was that he wanted Air Canada to be as profitable as possible so that it will be in a position where private ownership of the airline might be possible.

Simply put, what the minister wants is the money making routes identified and separated so that private investors would be willing to take over Air Canada—that is, the profitable part. This would mean that ultimately we would have a private airline operating the profitable sectors, such as transcontinental routes of which 75 per cent are now operated by Air Canada, and private carriers would operate losing routes with government subsidies. I come back to the question Geoffrey Stevens asked: where is it written that governments can only operate losing routes and should leave to the private investor, those who can afford to put money into making money, the profitable routes?

In an article on October 16 the Financial Post gave some indication of how the new legislation could affect this changeover. While the article was written before the first reading of the bill, it appears to have predicted the legislation as it is. According to the Financial Post of that date, a relatively small section of the bill sets out new operating rules for the airlines. Any additional operating instruction, such as new activities in air routes, would have to be spelled out by the Minister of Transport.

We have tried to check Bill C-17, Mr. Speaker, and it seems to us that what the Financial Post was referring to was the powers granted under clauses 8 and 9 of the bill. Clause 8 provides that Air Canada shall comply with directions given to it in writing by the governor in council. Clause 9 provides:

(1) The Governor in Council may

(a) direct the method of calculation of any losses incurred by the corporation as a result of compliance with section 8;

(b) direct that an audit be made of losses calculated pursuant to paragraph (a), and

(c) determine the manner of payment of compensation to the corporation for losses verified pursuant to paragraph (b).

It seems to us that by this method money losing services will be identified and compensated for, and this would then fulfil the minister's objective of making Air Canada attractive to private investors. If that is true, Mr. Speaker, then we certainly cannot support the bill.

The minister keeps on talking about commercial viability and profitability. In the debate we had earlier on another bill I referred to how contrary that is to the basic principles enunciated by Mr. Justice Hall in the report which was tabled some days ago and with which the minister supposedly agrees.

The whole idea of commercial viability and profitability was attacked by the former minister of transport, Mr. Marchand. In June of 1975 he made a statement, and I should like to quote a few sentences from that statement to show how much the then minister was in opposition, at least according to the statement he made, to this whole concept, which this minister has enunciated since taking over this portfolio. Let me quote from that statement by the then minister of transport, Mr. Marchand, who said:

● (1750)

If you look at the size of this country and the distribution of its population you will see that you cannot have a transportation network which is economic everywhere; you cannot have an economic system of transportation to service the north, for example, or to service those regions of the country where the population is very thin. You cannot have an economic system for regions which are remote from the centre.

Then he went on to say as follows:

In central Canada, for example, many transportation services and facilities are highly developed and competitive, with shippers having a choice as to rail, truck, ship or plane. In some parts of Canada, however, while the facilities and services may be well developed, there is a lack of competition . . . Still other parts of the country, such as the north, are undeveloped in terms of transportation facilities and services and it is unlikely, in many cases, that there will be much competition because of the nature of the products or the geography over which they move.

Transportation policy must therefore recognize the fact that there is a wide range of facilities and services, operating under different degrees of maturity and competition. It must enable each to be treated in an appropriate manner, and not, as is now the case, as exceptions to a policy which relies principally on competition.

Having made that statement on behalf of the government in June of 1975, we have the Minister of Transport doing everything he can to destroy the whole concept on which the former minister based his statement of June, 1975. This minister is again talking about commercial viability, and instead of a transportation policy which would take into consideration all the modes of transportation which are available in Canada, that is air, rail, bus, ships, and the private motor car, and evolving a policy under which each would be used to the maximum efficiency and at the least cost, we have the minister bringing in a bill to do with the railway, a bill to do with ships, a bill to do with airlines, each one separate, each one devised apparently without thought of what the effects of the proposals would be on the other modes of transportation.

The announcement of transportation policy in June, 1975, included a statement on the responsibility of government to attend to the provision of an efficient total transportation system involving all modes of transport. The Minister of Transport is using a fragmentary approach to transport instead. How can we look at an over-all policy with bits and pieces? By studying the various modes in isolation?

The minister uses the word rationalization a lot. How can we be rational by making cutbacks here and there without eliminating the inefficiencies and waste in the over-all system? For example, this summer there were 56 daily departures of public transport between Montreal and Ottawa, 14 of them commercial aircraft. What about the waste and duplication of having two major airports in Montreal? We have not had a rational discussion about that.

It is not rational to consider operating costs without regard to infrastructure investment. The actual investment in each mode is just as important as subsidization of costs. The implications of transport investment upon employment and energy conservation must also be considered and have never been considered by the government.

Our present transport system does not serve us very well. It is a patchwork of competing modes rather than an integrated complementary system. The result is that we have an unbalanced transport system with congested roads, high energy requirements, and lack of integration between modes.

Support for civil aviation infrastructure has grown from $120 million per year in 1954 to $354 million in 1973. Only 25 per cent of infrastructure costs of air travel are covered by charges to the air traveller. The average Canadian does not receive a fair share of this investment benefit. In 1973, 70 per cent of those using air service over long distances had incomes over $10,000, and of these some 65 per cent had incomes in excess of $15,000. The CTC inter-city transport study 1970 found that over 60 per cent of all air trips are made by the segment of society whose income exceeded $13,000 per year. Conversely, the same study found 64 per cent of rail and 73 per cent of bus trips are made by people whose income is less than $11,000 per year.

Yet, federal rail policies have not encouraged growth of rail usage. The hon. member for Dartmouth-Halifax East (Mr. Forrestall) when he spoke earlier talked about the proposal of this government virtually to wipe out rail transportation between St. John's, Newfoundland, and Montreal. Railways are the only mode which attempts to finance all infrastructure out of operating revenue. The type of financing improvement needed to expand and improve the service has not been provided.

Bus travel has stagnated. No operating subsidies are paid to bus operators. Over 80 per cent of inter-city movement has been by automobile. Road costs have increased from $1 billion in 1955 to $3 billion in 1973. The net loss after revenues was $1.15 billion for roads in Canada in 1973, according to an interim report on inter-city passenger movement in Canada by Transport Canada.

The real costs of transportation must also include costs of accidents, pollution, land use, travel time, and energy usage. Those transport systems such as rail and bus which are most efficient in the use of fuel should receive priority in transport planning. Transport consumes about 25 per cent of all energy in Canada. The minister is quick to tell us that we cannot afford to subsidize rail service and that we must cut back on rail service. Yet the minister continues to increase the subsidies that are given for air travel—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It being 6 p.m. this House stands adjourned until 2 p.m. tomorrow.

At 6 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Thursday, May 26, 1977

CONFEDERATION

REQUEST FOR STATEMENT BY PRIME MINISTER ON PLANS TO MAINTAIN NATIONAL UNITY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Paul Yewchuk (Athabasca): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity. The Minister of National Health and Welfare has claimed in an interview that the separatists in Quebec voted Liberal in the by-elections two days ago. This clearly implies that the separatist voter in Quebec has decided that the quickest way to achieve his aims of breaking up the country is to keep the federal Liberals in power in Ottawa. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Lambton-Kent (Mr. Holmes):

That the Prime Minister state on motions what new initiatives he plans to take in view of this interesting development.

Mr. Speaker: Is there unanimous consent to the presentation of that motion?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED

PROPOSAL TO PROHIBIT ESTABLISHMENT OF FACILITIES FOR PRODUCTION OF PLUTONIUM—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43, which arises out of information made available yesterday that AECL, a federal Crown corporation, has established a co-ordinating committee with Ontario Hydro in order to develop detailed plans to establish a nuclear energy facility for the production of plutonium, a substance extremely dangerous both to produce and to maintain. It is precisely this substance with its dangerous possibilities that President Carter in the United States recently decided to ban from production, concluding that such critically radioactive fuel could lead to devastation on a massive scale should a major nuclear accident occur. Grave doubts have also been raised on precisely this matter by the government of the United Kingdom. I therefore, move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources take immediate action to prohibit AECL from continuing with its plans with Ontario Hydro to establish a nuclear energy facility for the production of plutonium.

● (1410)

Mr. Speaker: The presentation of such a motion for debate pursuant to the Standing Order can only be done with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

ALLEGED DISCRIMINATION AGAINST SOCIAL CREDIT PARTY—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, under the provisions of Standing Order 43, I ask for the unanimous consent of the House to move an important motion of pressing necessity.

Considering that last Sunday evening the English network of the CBC on its program News Magazine dealt with the by-elections during which the Social Credit Party of Canada was completely ignored while the leaders of the other three federal political parties were introduced, considering that last Tuesday evening the French network of the CBC did likewise, interviewing the leaders of the other three parties, two of which did not even have a single member elected and wilfully refraining from interviewing the leader of my party, who was in the Témiscamingue constituency with the new Social Credit member, Mr. Gilles Caouette, and considering that such a situation is not new but well established, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Abitibi (Mr. Laprise):

That the House of Commons severely criticize the CBC for its discrimination against the Social Credit Party of Canada.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The House has heard the motion of the hon. member. Under the provisions of Standing Order 43, this motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there such consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

URBAN AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED RESUBMISSION OF APPLICATIONS FOR DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provisions of Standing Order 43 to raise a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. Now that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) has revived the concept of the urban demonstration program with the help of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) in order to finance some of his pet projects in Vancouver, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Surrey-White Rock (Mr. Friesen):

That other municipalities be invited to resubmit the more than 200 applications that were returned to them on the collapse of the original urban affairs program, projects more suited as demonstrations than a renovated swimming pool.

Mr. Speaker: Standing Order 43 requires that before the presentation for debate of such a motion the unanimous consent of the House must be given. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

ERECTION OF SCAFFOLDING FOR TELEVISION LIGHTING

Mr. Speaker: Before beginning the question period, although it is probably not necessary, I might draw the attention of hon. members to the presence of some scaffolding equipment in the chamber. This equipment will remain, pursuant to the mandate of the Special Committee on Televising and Broadcasting the Proceedings of the House, for two days so that some lighting tests, which will be of invaluable aid to the committee in its work, can be carried out. I hope hon. members are not unduly inconvenienced.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ANTI-INFLATION PROGRAM

DATE ON WHICH CONTROLS ABOLISHED

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Prime Minister. I will give him an opportunity to get back to his seat.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): He is consulting the Solicitor General.

Mr. Stevens: In the Paris newspaper Le Monde the Prime Minister was quoted as saying in an interview: "It would be folly in my view to abolish controls before the general election". Would the Prime Minister indicate to the House whether this quotation accurately represents his views?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, accurately with a slight hyperbole introduced into the language. I have always felt that there is a very strong argument for keeping controls as long as possible, except and until we have agreement from the main economic decision-makers in the economy on some kind of voluntary restraint. That is the idea I was developing, and I feel it would be folly just to remove controls without any kind of agreement, whether it be before or after an election.

REQUEST FOR PROGRESS REPORT ON VOLUNTARY AGREEMENT ON RESTRAINT BY BUSINESS AND LABOUR

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Would the Prime Minister indicate what he feels is the present state of the voluntary agreement that he may be seeking so far as labour and business are concerned? Is there progress? Can the Prime Minister announce that in fact there will be such an agreement in the near future?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, we do feel we have made substantial progress in both bilateral and trilateral meetings. The next step as far as we are concerned will consist in the tabling tomorrow by the Minister of Finance of the green paper he mentioned in the budget debate. That green paper will put forth in more detail the kind of national consensus we would like to see develop before controls are removed.

Mr. Stevens: A final supplementary question arising out of those two answers. Is it fair for the House to assume that in fact the government has not arrived at a date that they think would be suitable to commence the decontrol phase of their anti-inflation program?

Mr. Trudeau: Yes, Mr. Speaker. The matter was dealt with by the Minister of Finance in his budget speech. He indicated it would not be before such a date unless certain things happened and of course the possibility that it could be after that date is always a real one but one we hope will not materialize. We would still prefer an earlier decontrol date than December 1978 but once again, we want to achieve the maximum degree of voluntary restraint before that takes place.

REASON MINISTER OF FINANCE WILL NOT CONSULT PROVINCES FURTHER ON DATE TO END CONTROLS

Mr. Bill Kempling (Halton-Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance. It concerns the minister's rather high-handed statement that he, without any further consultation with the provinces, intends to make an announcement on the termination date of the controls program. In light of the support which many provinces have given the program and in view of the risks that they have run in doing so, will the minister tell the House why he does not feel any necessity to meet further with the provinces on this matter?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, that was the conclusion arrived at in the meeting I had with the provincial ministers of finance some weeks ago. I think the fair consensus to be drawn from that particular meeting was that, in the first place, there was no preferred time by all of the provinces as to when the controls should be brought to an end and, secondly, that the ultimate responsibility in this regard would have to be taken by the federal government.

Mr. Kempling: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. If the minister knows when he will announce a decision it would appear that he also knows what the decision would be. Will the minister tell the House why he will not avoid the damaging uncertainty that two more months of vacillation about controls will certainly cause and inform the House of the government's decision tomorrow?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, neither of the assumptions made by the hon. member is accurate. He has just made the criticism that we are going to make an announcement without consultation and then he criticizes me for engaging in further consultation with the community.

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED

PLANS FOR ESTABLISHMENT OF PLANT TO PRODUCE PLUTONIUM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. It concerns a meeting of federal government agencies in regard to nuclear policy which took place on February 28 this year at which senior officials of AECL, including both the chairman and the president, presented their plans for extending Canada's current nuclear program into the extremely hazardous area of fuel recycling. These plans call for the acquisition of a site during the fiscal year 1977-78 for the location of a waste disposal area and for a recycling plant which would be on line in 1985-86. Can the minister tell the House whether these plans, prepared by a Crown corporation which reports to him, represent government policy? If not, does he approve of representatives of that corporation entering into close co-operation with other levels of government to develop and encourage nuclear recycling before this is in fact government policy?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is referring to an old report. If he checked Hansard he would see a question was put to me in the last two weeks. My answer stands. There is no new development. The government has not taken a decision to build or have built plutonium or nuclear recycling or reprocessing facilities.

POSSIBLE APPROVAL OF EXPENDITURE FOR ACQUISITION OF SITE IN ONTARIO FOR DISPOSAL OF NUCLEAR WASTE

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In an interview given since then the President of AECL has said that the federal government is unabashedly pro-nuclear and that he expects approval for the project to be granted in stages, starting later this year. Will the minister comment on that opinion of the president of the Crown corporation which reports to him; is this opinion accurate? Will a decision on nuclear reprocessing be made by the end of the year and more specifically, does he foresee approving the inclusion in his department's estimates for the next fiscal year of a $4.1 million item that AECL says it needs for site investigation and acquisition?

• (1420)

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, of course, the president was speaking in his personal capacity when he stated his opinion about the views of the government. Answering the second question, on whether we will make a decision by the end of the year on the reprocessing facility, I can hold out no hope that we will. We may make our decision by then, or make it much later. As the hon. member knows, we have agreed to concert our policies with those of President Carter. That, clearly is an ongoing matter. To answer the question on research, the expenditure of $4.1 million to which the hon. member referred for a nuclear disposal site seems to be prudent. AECL, in co-operation with the Ontario government and Ontario Hydro, should be looking at potential storage facilities in which to put waste from the nuclear reactors operating in Ontario. Those nuclear reactors produce more than 95 per cent of all nuclear waste in Canada.

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY INTO NUCLEAR PROCESSING

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary question relates to the need for a broader, more comprehensive inquiry into nuclear policy. The minister has previously said in the House that an additional public inquiry into nuclear processing is not necessary at this time because other provincial public inquiries are examining this precise-nuclear question. I ask, does the minister know that the provincial inquiries to which he referred said reprocessing is a federal matter, therefore not for inclusion in their hearings. If he did not know this will he now say if he will change his mind on the need for a public inquiry before approving nuclear reprocessing?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I remind the hon. member again that I have encouraged the standing committee dealing with natural resources to direct its attention to this question.

Mr. Broadbent: Come on!

Mr. Gillespie: I hope it will find an opportunity in its schedule to consider this question, and other nuclear questions.

Mr. Broadbent: Do you expect this to happen in committee?

REASON FOR CONSIDERING ESTABLISHMENT OF PLUTONIUM EXTRACTION PLANT

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Prime Minister? In view of the previously expressed government policy, expressed by the Prime Minister himself in this House as late as May 17 last, relating to the undesirability of having in Canada or anywhere in the world plutonium reprocessing plants, I ask, why is the government permitting AECL, a Crown corporation, to engage in an expensive study for the building of a $1.5 billion plutonium extraction plant in Ontario?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, the position on reprocessing plants was one we were still defending in London as recently as two weeks ago. I must ask the minister to advise me about the building of a plutonium extraction plant.

Mr. Lawrence: Mr. Speaker, my final supplementary question to the Prime Minister is this. On May 12 last he said, "Much of our safeguards position centres around the undesirability of having reprocessing plants. President Carter was stating the view we had already stated many times." We now hear news about a secret meeting on February 28 last, involving AECL officials, respecting very advanced plans to build a $1.5 billion reprocessing plant.

Mr. Broadbent: With the Ontario government.

Mr. Lawrence: These facts do not jibe. Could the Prime Minister please reconcile the two obviously contradictory points of view? I wonder if the Prime Minister could do it, because we have already heard from the minister.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I just told the hon. member I would ask the minister about it. I am asking him to answer publicly in the House, but if the hon. member would rather have the minister not answer, I will have him give me the answer outside.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Why are they buying land?

Mr. Trudeau: That's what I want to know.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): In this government the right hand does not know what the left hand is doing and that is the problem.

[Mr. Broadbent.]

MINISTER'S KNOWLEDGE OF ABSENCE OF CAMERA CREW AT ROUYN-NORANDA

Mr. Léonel Beaudoin (Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Secretary of State.

Is the minister aware that the Canadian Broadcasting Corporation was not in attendance with a camera crew at Rouyn-Noranda last Tuesday night on the occasion of the election of a new member of the Social Credit Party of Canada when the national leader of the party was present?

[English]

Hon. John Roberts (Secretary of State): Mr. Speaker, I will take the hon. member's remarks as a representation and certainly try to reply to his question as directly as possible.

[Translation]

Mr. Beaudoin: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary question.

Can the Secretary of State explain to the House how the CBC, a company that belongs to us since our taxes pay for it, succeeded in arranging for live coverage of all the Liberal candidates elected Tuesday night, as well as all the party leaders, except, of course, the new Social Credit Party member, Mr. Gilles Caouette, and the leader of my party?

[English]

Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, I cannot give the answer immediately, but I will certainly provide the hon. member with a reasonable explanation as soon as possible.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

BREAK-IN AT L'AGENCE DE PRESSE LIBRE—POSSIBLE AUTHORIZATION BY MINISTER—CONSULTATION PRIOR TO GUILTY PLEA BY OFFICER

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Solicitor General. It follows up on questions asked in the House yesterday. In a rather surprising development that occurred following the investigation of a break-in by the police of L'Agence de Presse Libre du Québec in Montreal, three senior police officers entered a plea of guilty, namely Chief Superintendent Donald Cobb, Inspector of the Quebec Provincial Police, Mr. Coutrille and Inspector of the Montreal City Police, Roger Cormier. Can the Solicitor General tell us today whether there was any consultation between him and these three senior officers, particularly the officer of the RCMP before they entered the guilty plea. Can he tell us today whether there is anything that can be construed as authorization by his department before the break-in was conducted?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, on both accounts the answer is an unequivocal no.

DESTRUCTION OF DOCUMENTS FROM PRAXIS CORPORATION—PRIOR CONSULTATION WITH MINISTER

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): I accept the Solicitor General's answer. It takes me back to the situation with regard to the break-in of the Praxis Corporation in Toronto. The Solicitor General said yesterday that the Official Secrets Act required the RCMP in such cases to consult with the Solicitor General before certain investigative procedures are implemented. That was in response to several questions regarding the destruction of certain documents by the RCMP, documents belonging to the Praxis Corporation. Can the Solicitor General tell us whether there was any consultation between him and the RCMP before these documents were destroyed? Was there any consultation between him and the RCMP before the documents that were not destroyed were returned to the Praxis Corporation?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, as to the destruction of the documents that the hon. member refers to, there was no consultation whatsoever. I am not clear at what point the documents the hon. member refers to would have been destroyed. I am sorry, but the second part of the question seems to have slipped my mind. Perhaps the hon. member can repeat it.

Mr. Oberle: I will repeat that part of the question. Inspector Venner has now admitted that certain documents were destroyed. The documents were kept illegally by the RCMP for seven years and were not returned to the rightful owner in that period of time. Were these illegal acts indeed perpetrated with the consent of the Solicitor General's office?

Mr. Fox: No, Mr. Speaker. The hon. member refers to documents being returned. They were returned after the matter was brought up in the House following questions raised by the hon. member. At that time I was informed by the RCMP that they still had some documents on hand. At that point, at the request of the Commissioner, the documents were returned to the Toronto police who were conducting an investigation into the matter. That jurisdiction will have to decide whether any further steps will have to be taken. The hon. member is prejudging the issue when he states in this House that the RCMP committed an illegal act.

ALLEGED ILLEGAL ACTIVITIES OF SECURITY SERVICE—REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY

Mr. F. Oberle (Prince George-Peace River): I will direct my final supplementary question to the Prime Minister. I ask this question in light of what happened in Montreal and in light of all the questions and answers in this House in January and now with regard to certain activities of the security section of the RCMP. In the light of the fact that these activities are clearly identified, now as being not in conformity with the law, can the Prime Minister enter a plea of mea culpa—

● (1430)

Mr. Paproski: That is German for I am guilty.

Mr. Oberle: —and offer the House a judicial inquiry under the Inquiries Act into all aspects of the extra parliamentary concept, particularly the break-in and arson at the Praxis Corporation office in Toronto?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would begin by recognizing that the hon. members questions are perfectly legitimate. I would be as worried as he is if I did not know all the facts. I do not know all the facts—

An hon. Member: Then you are worried.

Mr. Trudeau: —but I do know that in both instances the government was in no way involved. Second, that the police action in the Montreal case is before the courts—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): They pleaded guilty.

Mr. Trudeau: And in the Toronto case there is an absolute denial by the federal police that they were involved in any way in breaking in and illegally obtaining documents. A police investigation is presently being conducted by the Toronto police and if this does not bring the matter sufficiently to light I will consider an inquiry. But I have indicated on previous occasions my preference, and that of the government, is to follow due process. If the courts cannot seem to get to the bottom of this matter I will consider an inquiry.

SUPPLY AND SERVICES

REASON FOR FAILURE OF DEPARTMENT TO MAKE A FAIR PERCENTAGE OF PURCHASES IN ATLANTIC REGION

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Supply and Services. It relates to the procurement policies of the Department of Supply and Services. Although the Atlantic region contains 9.5 per cent of Canada's population, of the $1 billion spent on commercial supply by the minister's department only 6.3 per cent went to the region and of the $1.9 billion spent on science and engineering procurement only 2 per cent went to benefit Atlantic Canadian industry. Since these percentages, which underline the minister's negligence with respect to regional development needs—they are well below any proportion based on relative population and in one case involve a reduction by as much as 50 per cent compared with expenditure in the previous year—can the minister explain why he is following policies which, in effect, cause greater regional disparity in the Atlantic region and which seem to fly in the face of action taken both by his colleague, the Minister for Regional Economic Expansion and of the government's overall commitment?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, my department is not responsible for the industrial base within the various regions of our country, but it must see to it that businessmen everywhere in Canada have equal opportunities to do business with the government. It is with this in mind that, together with departmental officials, I visited Canada from coast to coast to meet businessmen and indicate to them how they can contact and do business with us, how they can submit to us their grievances for possible settlements. As a matter of fact, very shortly, that is in mid-June, I shall go with my officials to Nova Scotia to meet the businessmen of the province and instruct them on how to do business with us, within the "Operation Access" program.

[English]

KNOWLEDGE OF PRIME MINISTER OF EFFECT OF DEPARTMENT'S PURCHASING POLICIES IN ATLANTIC REGION—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. David MacDonald (Egmont): A supplementary to the Prime Minister—I am not sure whether the right hon. gentleman heard the response given by the Minister of Supply and Services. Might I say to him that as a result of declining expenditures on the part of the Ministry of Supply and Services a greater degree of disparity is being brought to the Atlantic region resulting in a loss this year of at least $122 million by reason of the present procurement policy of the department. Has the Prime Minister been made aware of this serious reversal and of this substantial shortfall on the part of the department? What action is being taken to correct this situation? Specifically, has the Prime Minister issued any instructions to the Minister of Supply and Services with a view to overcoming what must be, at the very least, a ghastly error which contradicts and undermines any attempt to achieve regional equality in this country?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I apologize to the hon. member. I did not hear the answer given by the minister. But I can assure him that it was made a matter of policy some years ago that, as far as possible the department would ensure that regional considerations and the concern for greater equalization were taken into account in the purchasing done by the department. I know that the minister has travelled around the country a great deal, meeting businessmen in every part of Canada so as to facilitate access by them to the services of his department.

Mr. MacDonald (Egmont): I hope the Prime Minister will have a chance to look at the facts. Not only has there been a decline in absolute terms, there has been an even greater decline in percentage terms. Would the right hon. gentleman make himself aware of this situation and consult with the governments of the Atlantic provinces and with the federal department concerned to reverse this serious trend, one which is undermining the effort toward lessening regional disparity and which must surely be running counter to the policy commitment he mentioned.

REASON FOR FAILURE OF WESTERN CANADA TO RECEIVE FAIR SHARE OF SCIENCE AND ENGINEERING PROCUREMENT

Mr. Bob Brisco (Kootenay West): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question, also directed to the Minister of Supply and Services. The minister remarked that various areas have equal rights, but I question whether they have equal opportunity. My question relates to the minister's statement in Moncton recently that his department was genuinely concerned about regional disparity. Why is it that in terms of science and engineering procurement for 1976-77, western Canada received only 3 per cent of the total purchases and in terms of commercial supply only 20 per cent?

[Translation]

Hon. Jean-Pierre Goyer (Minister of Supply and Services): Mr. Speaker, as I said before, necessarily the regional industrial base generates governmental contracts for these areas. It is a matter of not indulging in discriminatory policies towards any area, but rather to help businessmen in remote areas of the country to do business with us. The more successful the administrative decentralization policy of this government will be in setting up public service work units throughout the country, the more we will be able to generate contracts in these areas and to help small and medium-sized regional undertakings. This is the policy we are going to implement.

[English]

Mr. Brisco: That was indeed a strange statement from the minister on the subject of regional disparity considering that the facts have already been disclosed in the House. How soon can he assure us that there will be an upward revision and a more appropriate balance in the purchases made by his department both from the Atlantic provinces and from Western Canada?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

IMMIGRATION

WILLINGNESS OF MEMBER TO ENFORCE POWERS GRANTED PROVINCES UNDER BRITISH NORTH AMERICA ACT

Mr. Gilles Marceau (Lapointe): Mr. Speaker, my question, which is directed to the right hon. Prime Minister, relates to the document submitted by the Quebec Minister of Labour to the federal Minister of Manpower and Immigration on the subject of immigration.

The Prime Minister mentioned that if additional powers were given to the province of Quebec, they would also be given to the other provinces. In order to find a conciliatory solution, is the Prime Minister willing to take into consideration the provisions of the British North America Act section 95 which gives the federal government a latitude of power which could help find a solution?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I thank the hon. member for bringing this section to my attention. I shall reply that, as a matter of principle, the federal government has already made particular arrangements with some provinces at the administrative level. In answer to a question asked by the opposition, I gave recently several examples of those arrangements. The hon. member is asking me if such arrangements are possible at the legislative level. Without attempting to give legal or constitutional advice, I believe the hon. member is right to suggest that such legislative arrangements would be possible with one province. That being said, the trend of the federal government remains not to seek special arrangements and, as a general rule, if we made legislation on behalf of one province, I would say we would do the same on behalf of any other province.

TRANSPORT

RAIL SERVICE IN ATLANTIC REGION—EXTENSION OF SUBSIDY TO ALL RECOMMENDED PASSENGER SERVICES

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Mr. Speaker, my question is addressed to the Minister of Transport. In view of the fact that the CTC railway transport committee has just begun its public hearings on rail passenger service in the maritimes, was it fair for the Minister of Transport to prejudge those hearings by making a statement which implies there will be only one passenger train a day from Montreal to Halifax and no passenger service to Cape Breton and other parts of the maritimes; and in view of the urgent importance of rail service to all parts of the maritimes, will the minister agree to extend the 100 per cent subsidy to all rail passenger service recommended by the CTC?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, it is, of course, our stated policy to extend the 100 per cent subsidy and the over-all improvement program to those rail services which are identified and will remain following the process in which we are engaged. What was fair, to use the hon. member's word, was what we did, which was to place before the commission, by agreement among five governments, the four Atlantic governments and ourselves, the study paper and work which had been done by the governments together under the auspices of our transportation joint committee, which analyzed the situation and the cost and benefit advantages of using dollars more wisely for the over-all benefit of the Atlantic region. The very extensive $125 million transportation package for the Atlantic provinces which was announced yesterday is evidence of our intention to use money more effectively for the Atlantic provinces. We intend not to save dollars but to have a far better Atlantic transportation system by spending dollars where they do the most good.

POSSIBILITY NOVA SCOTIA AND NEW BRUNSWICK WILL NOT BENEFIT FROM MOST EFFICIENT FORM OF SERVICE

Mr. Andy Hogan (Cape Breton-East Richmond): Well, Mr. Speaker, I should like to debate that with the minister at some time but obviously I do not have time during the question period. In the minister's memorandum outlining the expenditure of $125 million over a three year period there is no mention made of improving equipment and facilities, such as passenger trains, locomotives, rail beds and so on. Would the minister agree that it is likely that this agreement will mean that the maritime provinces, and especially the two which depend upon railroads, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, will be gaining in the railroad industry the technology of the 1940s and 1950s, while other provinces across the country are opting for increased, more efficient, rail passenger transit systems?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, yesterday's announcement did make clear that the Atlantic region, as other regions, would benefit from the previous statements which had been made by this government. We believe that the upgrading of rail passenger service is essential and that the old system of 80 per cent subsidy coverage has to give way to 100 per cent subsidy coverage. That, of course, is coupled with our view that where taxpayers' dollars are involved we have to make some tough but sensible judgments about which services can indeed be afforded.

AGRICULTURE

REQUEST MINISTER FILL VACANT VETERINARY POSITIONS

Mr. Gérard Laprise (Abitibi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Agriculture.

Can he tell the House whether there are vacancies in the group of veterinaries who are assigned to meat inspection in Quebec? If so, can the minister tell us whether he will act soon to have these vacancies filled to prevent the slaughter of unhealthy animals and the sale of tainted meat, as was the case in Quebec a few months ago?

[English]

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, all federal food plants have to have federal veterinaries and if that is not the case they cannot slaughter meat under our inspection. Positions are being filled from time to time. I am not in a position to say whether or not they are all filled at this time but I will check.

[Translation]

Mr. Laprise: Mr. Speaker, as a supplementary question, I would like to ask the minister if he can make an inquiry to determine whether there are no vacancies at all and whether inspectors are not given unusual responsibilities which should be left only to veterinaries.

[English]

Mr. Whelan: Mr. Speaker, in view of problems which existed some time ago in the province of Quebec in regard to meat inspection, which was not under jurisdiction, there has been a large number of requests for federal meat inspectors. They recognize we offer a superior service to anything they have and they want our service in Quebec. We are trying to provide it as fast as we can.

Oral Questions

COMMUNICATIONS

POSSIBILITY OF GENERAL INQUIRY INTO PUBLIC BROADCASTING—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Joe Clark (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. On March 4 the Prime Minister, at the instigation of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, wrote to the chairman of the CRTC. In that letter the Prime Minister asked Mr. Boyle to consider the establishment of a royal commission for a general review of public broadcasting services. As I understand it, Mr. Boyle will submit his recommendations on the royal commission when he completes his inquiry into the CBC in July. However, last night the Secretary of State endorsed a wide ranging inquiry into public broadcasting. In light of the remarks of the minister, could I ask the Prime Minister whether the government is now committed to a general inquiry into public broadcasting, or will the government wait for the recommendations it sought from Mr. Boyle before making a final decision?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Well, Mr. Speaker, I should not like to give credence to the preamble to the question, which was to the effect that this letter to Mr. Boyle was sent at the instigation or at the demand of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. It was a cabinet decision, including my own, to write that letter. In precise answer to the question, no, a decision has not been made as to the need for a royal commission. Yes, we will wait until Mr. Boyle's report comes to us before making such decision. Indeed, the fact that those final lines were in my letter to Mr. Boyle is an indication that the matter was raised in cabinet and that some ministers, including I believe the Secretary of State, argued that this might be a necessity. I felt that if indeed it were a necessity we should wait to hear the opinion of Commissioner Boyle, and that is what we will do.

Mr. Clark: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the matter has been before cabinet and has led to the letter to Mr. Boyle, I wonder whether it is the view of the government that any inquiry that might be undertaken into broadcasting in this country should be undertaken by a regulatory agency, such as the CRTC, or is it the view of the government that an inquiry of that kind should be made by an independent body which could look into the regulatory agencies as well as into other questions relating to broadcasting, communications and cultural policy?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, the government has not yet made a decision on that, but offhand my inclination would be to indicate that it should be by an independent body, preferably a royal commission kind of body. But this is the very kind of recommendation or suggestion which we may be hearing about from Commissioner Boyle.

Mr. Clark: A final supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since the request to the chairman of the CRTC was limited to broadcasting policy, I wonder whether it might also be the inclination of the Prime Minister or the government to have such inquiry made sufficiently broad that it could consider the general cultural policies and programs of the government of Canada, since it has now been a quarter of a century or more since the report and implementation of the Massey commission proposals?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I will certainly give serious consideration to that suggestion. It might make it a more difficult and lengthy task to try to include the question of cultural broadcasting. The hon. Leader of the Opposition will remember we had the Massey-Lévesque Commission on culture and we had various other commissions, including the Fowler Commission on Broadcasting. The future course might be to follow this double route or indeed join them. I will have to take the matter into consideration.

URBAN AFFAIRS

SUGGESTED RESUBMISSION OF APPLICATIONS FOR DEMONSTRATION PROJECTS

Mr. Howard Johnston (Okanagan-Kootenay): Mr. Speaker, I would have liked to ask my question of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs; but instead I will direct my question to the Minister of Justice who seems to have been working in close co-operation with the Minister of State for Urban Affairs recently. Now that the Minister of Justice has revived the concept of the urban demonstration program in order to finance certain projects in Vancouver, which had apparently been considered for urban demonstration, has he invited, along with the Minister of State for Urban Affairs, other municipalities to resubmit the more than 200 applications which were returned to them on the collapse of the urban demonstration program?

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I think that question lies within the administrative responsibilities of the Minister of State for Urban Affairs.

An hon. Member: The six million dollar man.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That is known as bionic patronage.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

PROPOSAL IDI AMIN BE BANNED FROM COMMONWEALTH GAMES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Douglas Roche (Edmonton-Strathcona): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Secretary of State for External Affairs. In his absence last Thursday, I asked the government House leader whether the government intended to ban Idi Amin from attending the Commonwealth Games, which will be held in Edmonton in 1978. Last week a 170-page report of the International Commission of Jurists, stating that more than 100,000 people in Uganda have been killed during the six years of Idi Amin's administration, was handed to the United Nations. Ambassador Beaulne told the Standing Committee on External Affairs and National Defence last week that this report, filed by the International Commission of Jurists, was beyond reproach. Therefore, I now ask the Secretary of State for External Affairs if he will give this House an unequivocal statement, that the government of Canada will not invite or accept the presence of Idi Amin at the Commonwealth Games in Edmonton in 1978?

Hon. Donald C. Jamieson (Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I have no problem indicating, in so far as I am personally concerned, that I would be just as happy if the gentleman in question were not invited.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He is a member of the basketball team.

Mr. Jamieson: I am not sure if the inviting capacity rests with the government of Canada or with the Commonwealth organization. I will look into it in more detail and find out what our responsibilities are. I think our objectives are common. It is just a matter of finding out which is the best way to proceed.

SPORTS

SUGGESTED INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION TO COMPEL PROFESSIONAL LEAGUES TO CONTRIBUTE TO DEVELOPMENT OF TALENT

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport). May I first compliment the minister on her worth-while report and recommendations, based on her recent trip abroad?

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jelinek: My question is further to my motion put yesterday regarding the government's admitted inability to solve the problems dealing with development fees between professional and amateur hockey interests. In view of the fact it now seems certain this matter will end up in the courts, I wonder if the minister would consider introducing legislation which would make it obligatory for all professional teams, leagues or shows to contribute fairly toward the development of their respective sports which would, among other things, reduce increasing costs to the taxpayer in this regard? If the minister is not prepared to consider such a proposal, could she explain to us why not?

Hon. Iona Campagnolo (Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport)): Mr. Speaker, I have no intention of introducing such legislation on this matter at this time because progress is still continuing. The hon. member seems not to have taken notice of the fact that progress was made through the mediator, the President of Hockey Canada, in whom I have confidence. There is a disposition, on the part of the National Hockey League, to provide the type of services which the hon. member is requesting. Thus, I do not intend to provide legislation at this time.

AGRICULTURE

REASON FOR DELAY IN ESTABLISHING CHICKEN MARKETING BOARD

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Agriculture. On Tuesday, in response to my colleague from Elgin, the minister stated that no decision had yet been made on the formation of a national chicken marketing agency but that he expected a decision would be announced shortly. May I ask the minister, now that another cabinet meeting has come and gone, whether he is now prepared to announce the formation of a national chicken marketing agency, and if not, why has he met with such little success in getting the central part of his agricultural policy past the cabinet?

Hon. E. F. Whelan (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, I hope the hon. member is speaking with authority from his party and is presenting his party's position on marketing boards. He totally endorses the principle of marketing boards, and he is expressing the concerns of the total party caucus.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Answer the question.

Mr. Whelan: The private producers themselves are partly at fault. They did not go through the system as they were supposed to do. They went ahead with hearings; they came up with an unsatisfactory plan; they went ahead with other hearings, and now it is our fault that we are not moving that fast. The other day I said to the hon. member that it would be soon, and it will be soon.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

MINISTER'S POSITION ON ESTABLISHMENT OF CHICKEN MARKETING BOARD

Mr. Perrin Beatty (Wellington-Grey-Dufferin-Waterloo): Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is directed to the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs, who is also directly involved in this issue. Does the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs support the formation of a national chicken marketing agency?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): He is a chicken, too.

Mr. Paproski: He is a turkey.

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the matter is still to come up for discussion.

HEALTH

POSSIBILITY OF CONTROLLING USE OF TOBACCO

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of National Health and Welfare. In view of the known dangers of smoking to health, is the minister considering the possibility of controlling tobacco under the Food and Drugs Act?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Not at this time, Mr. Speaker.

CRIMINAL CODE

PROPOSED REVIEW OF PROVISION COVERING SEARCH FOR RESTRICTED WEAPONS

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Justice. It arises out of the murder of one police officer and the wounding of another in the city of Calgary, and is with reference to section 103 of Martin's Annual Criminal Code (1976) under which police officers stop the person in question and find the person in possession of a restricted weapon as defined by the Code. The police officer who was killed was shot through the head. I would ask the Minister of Justice to seriously review section 103 in reference to the right of a peace officer to search certain people. As he is aware, the section reads:

> Whenever a peace officer believes on reasonable grounds that an offence is being committed or has been committed against any of the provisions of this Act relating to prohibited weapons or restricted weapons . . .

I would like the Minister of Justice to review that, in light of the fact that police officers can be criticized for making illegal searches and yet are subject to situations similar to the one which led to the murder of this police officer, who was the third police officer in two years to be murdered in Calgary.

Hon. Ron Basford (Minister of Justice): Mr. Speaker, I am unfamiliar with the particular case to which the hon. member refers. However, I am familiar with the provision of the law to which he is referring, which has caused both peace officers and police officers considerable difficulty when faced with situations of imminent danger or imminent hazard. I think the suggestions he makes have been corrected in the proposals now before the House in Bill C-51, relating to the amendments to the Criminal Code and gun control and specifically relating to the provisions on search and seizure of weapons and firearms. However, in light of the question, I think both he and I will examine those provisions in Bill C-51 very carefully when it reaches committee, hopefully next week.

CANADIAN EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION

REASON FOR REFUSAL TO CONFIRM TRANSAIR AS PRIME BIDDER FOR UNITED STATES AIR FORCE CONTRACT

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce, I will direct my question to the Minister of Transport. Transair in Winnipeg has made a bid for a contract with the United States Air Force to overhaul 97 Boeing 707 tankers over a three-year period. The work would entail modifying the wing structures. But, Transair has been discouraged by the Canadian Export Development Corporation which will not give written confirmation that Transair is the prime bidder for the $42 million Air Force contract. Transair cannot bid until they have this written confirmation. I would like to ask the minister if he would make immediate inquiries of CEDC as to why they will not give written confirmation to Transair in Winnipeg?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, essentially my understanding from conversations with Transair is that the difficulty which had existed in connection with this bid, which may have prevented the bid from being successful, will not be repeated in the course of successive bids.

Mr. McKenzie: Mr. Speaker, do I understand the minister to say that Transair is still in a position to submit a bid? They are ready to go because of their $5 million line of credit. This is a tremendously important contract to Canada, as it will involve 500 jobs over the next three years and possible future contracts.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, my understanding is that there may not be a possibility of a bid in relation to those particular aircraft, but there are many hundreds of others which will be coming along.

PRIVILEGE

MR. CROSBIE—TERRA NOVA GOLF COURSE—RULING BY MR. SPEAKER

Mr. Speaker: Yesterday the hon. member for St. John's West (Mr. Crosbie) put forward a question of privilege with reference to remarks made by the hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Rodriguez) during the course of the question period. I indicated initially that the remarks pertained to persons who were not members of the House and that, indeed, their competence in the administrative sense was beyond the parameters of the House and that we were on dangerous ground.

As the argument developed, in the course of contributions to the argument, discussion and subsequent points of order, both hon. members made remarks about the contributions of each other. Each one indicated that actions or remarks by the other fell into certain categories which they described in language which has in the past been included in the definition of unparliamentary language or offensive language within the practice of the House, and on occasion in the past has been ordered withdrawn. However, I indicated, as I usually do, that in the circumstances I would examine the transcript and see exactly what was said and determine whether unparliamentary language had been used to such an extent that I would ask for an apology or a retraction of the remarks made.

The fact is that upon examination of the transcript and of the precedents that have governed this kind of conduct in the past, I have come to the conclusion that if I were to apply the regulations and the precedents strictly, I would have to ask both hon. members to withdraw their remarks about each other. That does not seem to me to be a very productive course of action. As I indicated yesterday, we are on dangerous ground as soon as we begin to introduce into our discussion items of business which are extraneous to our responsibilities here. Therefore, I feel that the matter should be closed at this point.

[Translation]

Mr. Jacques Lavoie (Hochelaga): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege.

I shall be very brief. I rise on a question of privilege today because I feel that my rights and privileges were not respected by a Crown corporation, namely the Canadian National. Let me explain myself.

Last Friday, May 20, I took the CN train for Montreal at 4.30 p.m. I was sitting with the son-in-law and daughter of the hon. member for Shefford (Mr. Rondeau), and behind me sat the hon. member for Lachine-Lakeshore (Mr. Blaker), all of whom can bear witness to the following facts. When the train controller went by asking for tickets as usual, I showed him my MP identification card with a photo of myself instead of the official green card issued to MPs bearing the signature of the clerk of the House of Commons which according to the law entitles all hon. members to travel free of charge on all railways in Canada. On that official card one can read that, under the law, the hon. member can travel on all trains in Canada. That card certifies only that I am a member of parliament. Yet, my MP identification card also testifies to the fact that I am a member of parliament. The controller refused to accept my official MP card and unfortunately a heated argument ensued. There were other people around which of course annoyed me tremendously. The controller insisted on my buying a ticket, which I refused to do. In addition, Mr. Speaker, I made an attempt to speak English to him—and this I say without wanting to discriminate against anyone—because he did not speak a word of French. It is only later that he called for the help of a French-speaking colleague of his.

In a word, therefore, I feel frustrated in a right conferred upon me under legislation as regards travel by train and furthermore this controller did not speak French, whereas the Official Languages Act states that all services provided by government agencies must be offered in the citizen's language. I hardly think the train would get off the track should someone aboard speak French.

Sometime ago, Mr. Speaker, I happened to be travelling along with the hon. member for Maisonneuve-Rosemont (Mr. Joyal). He did not have this green pass and yet he identified himself with the same card as I and nothing happened. Everything was in order. I have checked with Mr. Smith of the Canadian National who was in a way very negative in his answer. I have also contacted the Clerk of the House who told me I was right to present this card. Therefore, I ask the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) to solve this problem concerning the Montreal-Ottawa or Ottawa-Montreal line and in addition I want the Canadian National authorities to make formal apologies in order to mitigate the prejudice that was done to me under those circumstances without, however, taking any corrective action against this controller. I had to draw the House's attention to this unfortunate incident which could happen to any one of us in this Chamber and I think it is important that we may avail ourselves of our privileges on those trains which are run by a Crown agency.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member has not put forward a motion along with his question of privilege, but he raised a very important and serious matter. His question relates, first of all, to a member of Parliament's privilege to travel on a train with an identification card, even if it is not precisely the pass which entitles him to travel free on the train. Second, the hon. member draws our attention to the fact that there is no staff member, no bilingual controller, who can speak French or communicate in either of the two official languages on a train run by a Crown corporation. Those are important issues. I will inquire into the circumstances.

I understand very well that the hon. member has not put forward a motion relating to his question of privilege, but I can assure him that I will consider this matter which is of primary importance.

[English]

Mr. Brisco: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I recognize the fact that during the question period questions addressed to ministers do not necessarily have to be answered, particularly, as Your Honour points out, when they are of an argumentative nature or when a representation is made. I asked a supplementary question of the Minister of Supply and Services, a straightforward question requiring a simple "yes" or "no" answer. I asked whether, in light of the statistics quoted by my colleague, the hon. member for Egmont, and the statistics quoted by me, the minister was prepared to give assurances to the House that his department would address itself to the restoration or removal of the inequities that evidently and obviously exist.

I simply sought from the minister his assurance that he would make every effort to remove these inequities. The minister, during my supplementary question, removed his earpiece. Perhaps I failed to identify him as the person to whom my supplementary was directed. In any event, because of the remarks I have made to you at this time, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the minister would now be prepared to respond.

Mr. Speaker: Even if the minister were prepared to respond at this time, it seems to me that by the use of a point of order to elicit a response we would be not only giving the hon. member for Kootenay West a special privilege, which would perhaps not be too serious if it happened this time only, but it would concern me were it to be an implicit invitation to hon. members to use a similar point of order when they were in any way dissatisfied with the performance or answer of a minister during the question period. I thought the hon. member made a clear and precise representation to the minister, and I think we have all treated it as such. Even if the minister now wanted to give a further answer to the hon. member, it would be unfair to extend to the hon. member or to the minister that privilege at this time.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

WEEKLY STATEMENT

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to ask the acting government House leader the government's business for the balance of the week. While he is on his feet, would he be able to designate Monday, May 30, 1977, and Wednesday, June 1, 1977, as allotted days in accordance with some discussions we have had?

Mr. Goodale: Our business for today is an opposition motion. Tomorrow we will resume consideration of Bill C-17 relating to Air Canada. I will be pleased to make the designation of the allotted days which the House leader has recommended; that is, Monday, May 30, and Wednesday, June 1. On Tuesday of next week it is our intention to resume debate on the Air Canada legislation if it is not completed before that time, and then we will proceed to legislation dealing with the Economic Development Corporation, Bill C-47, followed by, subject perhaps to review at the beginning of next week, the Judges Act, Bill C-50, and the human rights legislation, Bill C-25.

● (1510)

Mr. Knowles (Winnipeg North Centre): Mr. Speaker, I realize it is a technical point of order and I do not wish to downgrade the hon. member, but does not that designation have to be requested by a minister of the Crown?

Mr. Speaker: That designation can be taken care of, perhaps, when we deal with motions.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I did not want to be screwed up by that technicality.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand today.

Mr. Beatty: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This is the second straight day on which the parliamentary secretary has not answered any questions on the order paper. I would like to bring to his attention the fact that I have 14 questions on the order paper dating back to October and November of last year. Some of those questions dated October were first placed on the order paper in the first session of this parliament.

Mr. Goodale: Cossitt wouldn't let us answer them.

Mr. Beatty: I refiled the questions which were on the order paper prior to the summer recess. I filed them in exactly the same form, but I dated them in such a way that it would be possible for any answers which were valid for the questions I filed in the previous session to be answered in exactly the same form in which they were prepared. I cannot understand, for the life of me, why, for example, a question I asked about the cost to taxpayers of a visit to London, Ontario, by the previous secretary of state last July has not as yet been answered. Since then there has been a cabinet shuffle, and we have a new Secretary State, I think if the parliamentary secretary wants to do his job properly he should try to ensure that questions which have been outstanding for some months receive priority.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Goodale: Mr. Speaker, hon. members opposite may not have been keeping track of the progress of business in this House, but it is interesting to note that for the past several weeks the rate of answering questions in this House has been running well in excess of 70 per cent. That percentage rate has dropped back only in the last couple of days because hon. gentlemen who are particularly prone to place extensive lists of questions on the order paper, one in particular, have added as many as 60 or 70 questions. I think it is relevant to point out that we have been prompt in answering questions in this session, and I can assure hon. members that there is no effort at all to delay the answer to any particular question which should be forthcoming.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I asked question No. 1,397 on December 17. I have only 19 questions on the order paper. I have not tabled hundreds. My question has to do with the Secretary of State for External Affairs and his visits to St. John's, Newfoundland, over six weeks last fall during a certain strategic period. I want to know whether the cost of those visits was charged to the Liberal candidate who ran against me. That question is a very simple one. The answer can be ascertained in half an hour or an hour.

On February 15 I asked several questions having to do with the Canadian Radio-Television and Telecommunications Commission and with the Secretary of State for External Affairs. That question was placed on the order paper almost 100 days ago, and it has still not been answered. There is to be a CRTC hearing in St. John's on June 21 dealing with questions which will be relevant. I want the parliamentary secretary to get me the answers to those questions. I do not table questions lightly, and those answers are not hard to find. I want to know what representations have been made by the Secretary of State for External Affairs to the CRTC in connection with matters affecting the Newfoundland Broadcasting Company in Newfoundland, and I want to know before shares are transferred, before the CRTC approves transfers of shares or before conflict of interest questions come up.

I am asking the parliamentary secretary, as politely as I can, and I advise him not to be a pseudologist but to get on with the job and to answer some of these questions.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the remaining questions be allowed to stand?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—GRAIN HANDLING AND TRANSPORTATION

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert) moved:

That this House agrees in principle with the recommendations of the Hall Commission on Grain Handling and Transportation.

He said: Mr. Speaker . . .

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I am always pleased to hear applause from the government side of the House, particularly from ministers of the Crown. I think it was Walpole who said, "They ring bells now, but they wring hands later".

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Speaking on this resolution, I cannot cover very much ground because of the limitation of time. I will simply begin by referring to one or two highlights of the Hall report. One of them is the question of abandonment, and I say immediately that as far as that is concerned, having examined some of the representations made, I hope that in areas on the prairies which have been pioneer settlements, the removal of the rails from those areas and the creation of desert towns and villages will be proceeded with carefully. I will deal with the construction of an Arctic railway a little later.

The Hall Commission report recommends the retention of the Crowsnest, or statutory rates for hauling grain, with the difference between those rates and the actual cost of transporting grain to be paid directly to the railways by the federal government. The report recommends assistance for Churchill, it suggests changes in connection with freight rates and recommends the use of CPR facilities in order to increase the amount of wheat shipped that way. Those references are general.

As far as the Hall commission is concerned, it constituted a blow to the solar plexus of the government, if not lower, and some of the observations made by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang), subsequently diluted in order to meet the exigencies of criticism, indicated that he was greatly surprised at the nature thereof. Indeed, it reminded me of an occasion in earlier days when there were Progressive members from western Canada—"Progressive" being the name of the party—and Prime Minister King had promised a degree of free trade never before seen or felt. One member was greatly exercised over the fact that there was no inclusion of any free trade items and, being a man of classical knowledge and wisdom, said, "Mr. Speaker, when Pandora's box was opened, out stepped the Trojan horse." In this case, as far as the government is concerned and judging from the reaction of the Minister of Transport, there are several Trojan horses in the Hall Commission report. It is a remarkable document. I am glad to say it was my recommendation that made Mr. Hall a Superior Court judge and at the same time set him up as a commissioner of repute.

● (1520)

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: What does the report do? It buries the government's concept of the user-pay philosophy of the minister. User-pay, presented by the minister as a rationalization of transportation services, was little more than a transparent attempt, in the opinion of many, to reduce the benefit to farmers of western Canada under the Crowsnest pass rates.

It is with these matters that I am going to deal at some length. I am very happy to see here today, following a crusade to the Pelly constituency where a by-election is going on and where drought has not affected the area, the new Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Horner). I am happy to see him here. Then there is the Minister of Transport. I understand he is in charge of political organization there, which leads everyone to hope that the Liberals will come in third.

As far as the royal commission report is concerned, covering as it does only the western provinces and the north, I think a commission should be set up now to do justice to the maritimes and to go into the whole problem of transportation, freight rates, etc. Otherwise, the provinces by the sea will continue to be denied, as they have been under this government, a reasonable degree of economic equality.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: One of those who has constantly pressed for action in this regard is the hon. member for Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates). During my period of administration as prime minister tremendous changes took place in the maritimes. I recall some of the approbation given to what we did by the Minister without Portfolio before he occupied that distinguished portfolio.

Now, sir, I shall immediately start on the subject of the Crowsnest pass report. I am glad to see the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) here. A moment ago I thought he was going into flight. He put his arms out like the beginning of a flight into fancy when he endeavoured to explain the delays in answering questions which has become virtually beyond anything that has ever been seen in this House.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I find him an interesting individual, Mr. Speaker. He sits by his mentor and philosopher today, and he is being misled. I find it very interesting that he has become the "No, no" man of parliament. There he sits; he does not hear what the motions are that come before the House under Standing Order 43, but he invariably says "No".

Mr. Goodale: I listen very carefully.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I have some very good examples in regard to which he has been identified. I have watched him with that interest one applies to an individual who apparently does not want to speak out loudly but simply says very low, sotto voce, "No".

Mr. Goodale: But very effectively.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I suggest if he is getting his training from the Minister of Transport as to parliament, he ought to change his mentor. On May 18 the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn) moved the following motion under Standing Order 43:

> That in view of the statement made on national television yesterday by a member of the federal cabinet that the cabinet should accept the recommendation of the Hall commission in connection with the retention of the statutory Crowsnest pass rates, this House direct the Prime Minister to make a statement on motions forthwith outlining the government's commitment to this recommendation of the Hall commission.

What was wrong with that motion, Mr. Speaker? Why did the hon. member for Assiniboia say "no"?

Mr. Goodale: Did I?

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is from a Saskatchewan constituency which depends on agriculture to a considerable degree: "No, no, no" has been his attitude throughout.

Mr. Goodale: It does not say that in the record.

Mr. Diefenbaker: It is very obvious that I have penetrated the epidermis of the hon. gentleman. The truth hurts. Now I go on to the next one.

Mr. Goodale: Your fantasy is amazing.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Does the hon. gentleman know anything about the truth, if he denies this? On May 17, the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar moved:

> That this House commend the Hon. Emmett Hall for the work he has done and the recommendations he has made for retention of the Crowsnest pass rates—
> MR. SPEAKER: Order, please. Pursuant to Standing Order 43 such motion can be presented for debate in the House only with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?
>
> SOME HON. MEMBERS; Agreed.
> SOME HON. MEMBERS: No.
> MR. PAPROSKI: Ralph Goodale said no.

Mr. Paproski: And he did.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Is the hon. minister seeking the floor on a point of order?

Mr. Lang: Yes, Mr. Speaker, on a point of order I think the record should show that Mr. Paproski, thus named, is notorious in this House for saying someone said "No" very frequently when it is totally false to say so.

Mr. Diefenbaker: That is exactly the type of credibility that the minister regularly exhibits, totally disregarding the truth.

Did the minister step in and say that Mr. Paproski, as he is described here, was wrong?

Mr. Lang: He is always wrong.

Mr. Diefenbaker: "No, no, no". I say to the hon. member for Assiniboia, when he makes statements to the effect that he did not say "No", I wonder how "Yes" is pronounced. I must say, however, that he does not discriminate between Her Majesty's Loyal Opposition and the New Democratic Party. On the same day, May 17, the hon. member for Regina-Lake Centre (Mr. Benjamin) moved a motion under Standing Order 43. He moved, in part:

—in regard to the report of the Hall commission tabled in this House yesterday which contains a recommendation that the statutory grain rates be retained . . . I would move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow):

That this House calls upon the government to immediately implement the recommendation of the Hall commission on Statutory rates.

Then follows the familiar entry.

MR. PAPROSKI: Ralph Goodale again said "No".

I want the hon. member's constituents to know what his attitude is in parliament. He has become the puppet of the Minister of Transport. There are other examples, and if he would like to hear them I would be glad to indicate them to him. No matter what comes up that would be of benefit to agriculture in Canada, the hon. member says "No".

Mr. Goodale: Nonsense.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

● (1530)

Mr. Diefenbaker: I suggest it would be simpler if he installed a gramophone in this House saying "No, no, no", and save his larynx. I have watched him day after day. He is an intelligent fellow, as you must admit. But he shows little intelligence when he prevents the House of Commons discussing questions of prime importance to western farmers. I have said over and over again that this government opposes the Crowsnest rates. The minister denies this, in an uncertain way. Let me read some of his observations, equivocations, qualifications and the like. On May 18 he was asked a question in the House concerning this matter. He replied, as reported at page 5758 of Hansard:

—my initial reaction . . . is very favourable indeed. It seems to me to make a good deal of sense and to have a great deal of potential . . . While some people raised an idea like that in various discussions before the Hall commission report, it does not really come upon the prairies as a new idea in its totality—

That is a good word, "totality". I continue:

—and I would like to hear from the representatives of farm organizations—

Time and again the minister has played havoc with those who have endeavoured to stand in support of the Crowsnest rates. I remember when Conservatives opposed them. In the election of 1925 Right Hon. Arthur Meighen said freight rates should not be fixed by statute. I took strong objection. He was defeated. The Liberal party said that the magna carta of the western farmer could not be changed without creating serious fissures in confederation. I go on quoting from Hansard. On page 5759 the following exchange is reported:

MR. WOOLLIAMS: Mr. Speaker, I have one further supplementary question. How does the minister reconcile his first answer with his answer to my second question, because it is a complete distortion of the facts?

MR. LANG: No it is not, Mr. Speaker. I indicated quite clearly that I have no policy which would affect the Crowsnest rate . . . What I said in my second answer is that I have been discussing this with people in the west, and I am certainly receptive to conclusions in the west that some different form of distributing the benefit may in fact be advantageous to the west.

There are loopholes large enough in the minister's position for—

An hon. Member: A horse and wagon?

Mr. Diefenbaker: —an aircraft to go through. All the way along the minister has been playing with facts and endeavouring to lead people to think he has taken a stand not against those particular rates. One could go on almost indefinitely in this regard. If the minister denies it, I call as a witness one whom, ever since he was a little boy, the minister regarded as a friend. I refer to the Minister without Portfolio.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: He was younger on September 1, 1966, when he said, as reported at page 7997 of Hansard: "It appears that the government wants to ruin the Crowsnest pass rates." That was an interesting and obvious observation.

Mr. Paproski: Oh, Jack!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do not want to be unfair, but I call the Minister without Portfolio as my chief witness. When the credibility of the Minister of Transport comes into question, I am prepared to accept his views. I now quote a report carried in the Globe and Mail of November 27, 1976, as follows:

Mr. Horner accused Mr. Lang of "careless disregard of the public trust as Minister of Transport."

Has there been any reformation? Has the minister changed? Is he a chameleon? I could quote further passages. Has the minister without transport—

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, that was a lapsus linguae, but most prophetic. You should have seen the Minister of Transport as I saw him here in all his attractiveness and sartorial perfection. But I never saw the minister look more disturbed than when the Minister without Portfolio crossed to that side of the House. He has recovered now. They are getting together. Nonetheless, as the Ukrainian proverb says, "What is written cannot be drawn out, not even by a team of horses".

An hon. Member: Isn't it Polish?

Mr. Diefenbaker: The Minister without Portfolio said the Canadian dollar had slipped below the level of the United States dollar because the Liberal government had deliberately held interest rates four percentage points above those in the United States. They are still higher now. Who changed—the minister or the government? He went on to make one of his kinder statements, saying the government is guilty of gross mismanagement of the economy. High unemployment rates in central and eastern Canada are proof of government bungling. He is reported to have said that in November last, and conditions are worse now. I look forward to the explanation of the Minister without Portfolio. I understand he intends to speak. I hope I can stay, although I must leave by an early flight. I do not have the same facilities as the Minister of Transport.

I could go on. I do not intend to say anything of a critical nature. What did the Minister of Transport say when the Hall Commission report came out? The Saskatoon Star-Phoenix called it a sensible report. That newspaper has always shown a high regard for the minister. In its issue of Wednesday, May 18, it said this:

> In fact, so far it is the singular exclusion of the Minister of Transport from the collective endorsement that inspires speculation on the future of the Hall report.

Why was the minister silent? He is not noted for his silence. He has an unusual capacity for language and articulation, but remained silent. The editorial goes on to say:

> Surely Ottawa will notice a golden opportunity to make friends in the west, and thereby strengthen the unity of Canada.
> The Hall report's lack of equivocation on the statutory Crowsnest pass freight rates, and the recommendation to extend them to processed grain products and livestock has settled fears once raised by Mr. Lang with his calls for reassessment.

He raised this in the House the other day. I have already read that portion which says, "We have to look into the cost." Did he look into the cost when his aircraft ran up a $750,000 bill in three years? Did he consider cost then? Mr. Speaker, there is no greater repentance than that of the unrepentant. Has the minister changed? I await his answer. But everywhere one notes the same equivocation in which he indulged the other day in this House. He went on to say he had been misreported—everybody out of step but the hon. gentleman—in the Saskatoon Star-Phoenix by Canadian Press. I heard the minister over the radio. Despite any difficulties I might have with hearing, it was very clear he was equivocating about this question, at the same time saying that anyone who contends he is against the rates is not telling the truth. However, he did not say he was for them clearly, definitely and finally. It was always subject to equivocation.

● (1540)

I have high regard for the minister. I remember at one time I criticized him. I asked, "What does he know about marketing wheat?" I was right. Today we have 750 million bushels piled up higher than the pyramids that existed when we came into power in 1957. Outside the House the minister made the statement, "Apparently the right hon. member does not know I was born on a farm, almost in the centre of a wheat field." I would point out to him that so were gophers.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Diefenbaker.]

Mr. Diefenbaker: We do not want any more equivocation. We want a definite, clear and undiluted statement that there is going to be no tinkering with the Crowsnest pass rates. That is all we ask for.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: I do know why the minister decided to bring about this "at and east" rate. It would have cost the western farmer six cents a bushel more to transport his wheat at Atlantic ports. Why would you expect a minister representing the province of Saskatchewan to be in favour of that? He stood; he fought; he said, "This rock shall move as soon as I." The Conservative party also stood; they fought, and they got a withdrawal. The hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) fought on and on.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Finally, the minister capitulated. Why did he want to bring in new freight rates for the Welland canal, again hooking the western farmer? He thought he could do it unilaterally. However, the United States made it perfectly clear to him they would not stand for that. The only thing that saved the western farmer from that extra tariff, and that is what I call it, on western production was the fact that the United States refused to follow. It decided it would give further consideration to the matter. I have covered this matter as succinctly as I can. I simply ask the minister to stand and say, "All my past is forgotten. I am for the Crowsnest pass rates now, without evasion, equivocation or mental reservation whatever." When he does that, I will believe him, because he will not be able to do anything else if he gives that undertaking.

We now come to another matter. The Hall commission rather disturbed the government in connection with its recommendation of a railroad into the north. I have been dealing with that matter for several years. I am not going to quote what I have said on previous occasions. On February 24, 1973, I dealt at length with the benefits that would flow from a railroad built into the north. Beside opening the north, it would deny all those dangers that follow the building of a pipeline. It would create employment for thousands of Canadians.

The Hall commission described the plan it had in mind for opening the north as the "northern dream". I remember when I uttered the expression of the "northern dream". It was ridiculed by the Liberal party. Then when it turned out all right, those who condemned it became its projectors. They laughed at the idea of a railroad to Great Slave Lake and Pine Point. They said it would be two streaks of rust and a roadbed going nowhere. Mr. Pearson said the Conservatives were going to build highways and railways from igloo to igloo. That shows how up to date the Liberal party was, because they said the same thing in 1873 when Macdonald had his dream—only then they said "from wigwam to wigwam". The philosophy is still there.

I raised this question the other day. Somebody in the press said I must have known in advance that it would be in the Hall report. I had no indication, but I knew the report was coming in so I raised the question in the House. I endeavoured to bring the matter before the House in a motion on May 10, and I quote:

In view of the strong views expressed by the hon. Mr. Justice Berger in connection with a gas pipeline from the Yukon and that a railroad was commended and approved by the Canadian Institute of Guided Ground Transport in 1972 following an engineering, economic and environmental feasibility study of a railroad to carry Arctic oil and liquefied natural gas to markets in central Canada, and as the institute agreed with an earlier preliminary analysis which concluded that a railway is technically and operationally feasible and appeared to be financially attractive, with unanimous consent of the House, I would move:

That a committee of the House be set up to examine this question without delay, as the conclusion of the Canadian Institute was that 360 locomotive units and 11,000 tank cars of 94 ton capacity with 20 trains per day could move the necessary requirements of oil and gas.

Furthermore, having regard to the unemployment situation, the report agreed that such a railroad would require 5,000 workers to build over a 5½ year period, and it would employ, on completion, some 4,600 people in the Yukon and Northwest Territories, and there would be very little disruption to the environment.

You, Mr. Speaker, asked whether there was unanimous consent, and that voice which went unrecognized said "No." Why? What was the reason for that? All I have to say in that regard is that this parliament is being emasculated by the kind of thing that we witness here day after day. Regardless of whether a motion is in keeping with the kind of Canada we want to bring about, that silent "No" denies parliament the right to speak.

Some hon. Members: Shame.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I raised this in the House of Commons many years ago. On March 20, 1973, I went into full detail. I felt it deserved consideration. I asked the minister about it in the House the other day. The Minister of the Environment (Mr. LeBlanc) who is lost in his environment, said, "We cannot do it." Mr. Speaker, were all those scientists and leaders in the universities, and technical individuals who comprise the Queen's University group, nincompoops and nonentities? That is the way they were treated by the minister. "You cannot do it", he said. "It would be dangerous to the environment". When I questioned him further, he said, "Well, I take the advice of my experts". I should like to hear those experts. He went on to say, "I seek out the best information on the environment I can get". All I can say is, he does not understand it. If he would reflect on his figures concerning the numbers of trains per day which would be needed he would see that his figures are not inconsistent with mine: they are just double what mine were—and mine were authentic.

● (1550)

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Diefenbaker: Much would depend, the minister said, on how many cars there were in each train. Now, there's a thought. That takes unusual perception. It would depend on the number of cars. He was not wrong there. Clearly, he recognized that trains going at 60 or 70 miles an hour every hour and twenty minutes are likely to pose a greater environmental hazard in the north than "a quiet, subterranean pipeline". Quiet, yes. But destructive of the environment and of the rights of our native people throughout the north. He went on to say:

I can assure the right hon. gentleman we took this consideration seriously. We looked at it and thought it did not seem to stand up.

Why, if they thought it would not stand up, was my motion to permit its discussion and consideration by a committee of this House turned down? It would seem to me that the Minister of the Environment is a prisoner of his environment. Whatever they tell him, away he goes, asserting it as his own. I have quite a regard for him. He is good looking, attractive and articulate. But when it comes to what will happen to the environment, I prefer Mr. Justice Berger.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the right hon. gentleman, but his time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Diefenbaker: I shall take only two or three minutes more. I do not wish to deny the Minister of Transport his opportunity. After all, he is going to nail his ideas into Hansard today, and I look forward to hearing him explain the unexplainable, unveil the heretofore concealable, and unscrew the inscrutable. I wait for this to be done. I know he will do all those things with that capacity, that knowledge and, above all, that sang froid which characterizes him at all times.

In all seriousness, through you, Mr. Speaker, I say to him, "You represent a Saskatchewan constituency. Until the recent appointment of the Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Guay) and the recent acquisition of the Minister without Portfolio from Alberta, upon you, and you alone, rested the responsibility as the minister from Saskatchewan to put forward the case for western rights and the western economy, while at the same time recognizing the national responsibilities which are yours". I ask him to assure the west that all the equivocation in which he has indulged has simply been camouflage designed to cover up the fact that ever and anon he comes up with this idea: I have to find out, first, whether the recommendations of the Hall commission are going to cost too much. I wish the minister would say to the rest of his colleagues, "Physician, heal thyself."

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lorne Nystrom (Yorkton-Melville): Mr. Speaker, first of all I would like to say I am very pleased to follow our senior colleague from Saskatchewan, the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) and I want to congratulate him on the statesmanlike way in which he dispatched the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale). Not only did he dispatch the hon. member for Assiniboia, whom he scared out of the House, while the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) is still here, but he also scared out of the House the Minister without Portfolio from Alberta (Mr. Horner).

Hall Commission Report

I am happy to have the opportunity to take part in this debate initiated by the right hon. member for Prince Albert. I support in general the principles of the Hall Report. I think the report was a very good one. In style, it is similar to the Berger report, also referred to by the right hon. gentleman. In the course of his study, Mr. Hall took his commission into about 77 different communities on the prairies. He talked to about 15,000 people who attended the hearings. Many of us, as members of parliament, myself included, made presentations to the Hall commission. A large number of community leaders, farm groups, and so on, presented their briefs to the commission. I hope the government acts, and acts quickly, on the recommendations in the report because some of those recommendations are vital to small towns and villages across the prairies.

The question might be asked: Why was the Hall commission appointed in the first place? I want to go back over history and consider what motivated the government to appoint the commission a couple of years ago. First, there was the question of the future of some 6,300 miles of railway across the prairies. The government had decided that 12,450 miles of railway on the prairies would form what they called a basic network guaranteed until the year 2000. Then they classified another 6,300 miles as "B railways", on which operations were frozen until January 1, 1975, following the WEOC conference in Alberta. Then, after the commission was appointed, the freeze was extended until June 30 of this year.

The commission was also to study the port utilization question, grain rates, economic development on the prairies, agricultural processing and the Arctic railway, something which was also referred to by the right hon. member for Prince Albert. Let us consider the situation which existed on the prairies and which led to the setting up of the commission in the first place. Those of us who come from the prairies know that over the last few years there has been an increase in what is known as "western alienation". People are more than ever concerned as to whether or not the west is playing its full role in Canada and getting its full share from this great country. One of the major causes of complaint on the prairies is the transportation system and the way it is set up to benefit, not the people of the prairies, but in the main the vested interests which live in what is called the "golden horseshoe" of southern Ontario.

Many people in the west are also very upset that much of our raw material is shipped to central Canada for processing and we, in turn, have to import the finished products back to the prairies, losing economic opportunity and potential jobs for our people. Another area of great concern to us is the tariff structure in Canada. We seem to see a generous attitude taken toward manufacturing in this country. The average manufacturing tariff is around 30 per cent. Most of the manufacturing, of course, takes place in central Canada. The tariff on agricultural goods is about one half of 1 per cent. This, again, appears to be discriminatory toward those who live on the prairies. People from my area who go down to Minnesota or North Dakota ask me why they are able to buy manufactured goods so cheaply just a few miles south of the border. The answer is that although we give industries primarily in southern Ontario tariff protection, our farm goods produced by our own people have no tariff protection whatever.

• (1600)

I come now to the question of rail line abandonment. I have already said that possibly 6,300 miles of rail line are going to be abandoned on the prairies. A study has just been released by the University of Regina, commissioned by the government of Saskatchewan, of the economic and social impact of the abandonment of rail lines on the prairies. This study, which was released to the public on Thursday, May 12 last, found that 47 per cent of businesses and 28 per cent of the population will leave towns and villages along rail lines which will be abandoned. This study focused on 26 communities with a population of more than 100 people, selected from 374 centres served by rail lines which the government is considering abandoning. The Hall commission is as important to people on the prairies as is the Berger inquiry to the people of northern Canada, and it is why the Hall report must be taken seriously by the government.

People in my area also have a great deal of concern about some of the proposals to build huge inland terminals and to close down country elevators which serve small towns in my own province and my neighbouring province. They are also concerned about statements, made by the Minister of Transport—my right hon. friend from Prince Albert put it very well this afternoon—to the effect that the government is equivocating on the Crow rates, that it is not coming out squarely in favour of retaining the Crow rates but saying that farmers should instead receive the benefits of the Crow rates in some other way. I want to know, in what other way. I want to know whether the minister will tell us in a straightforward manner that he is standing firmly behind the Crow rates and will not change them as recommended in the Hall commission report.

My constituents are also concerned about the user-pay philosophy of the Minister of Transport. This is a concept which would hurt people on the prairies. If it were applied literally, it would mean that farmers and businessmen on the prairies would pay the full cost of transporting their goods and materials across this country. That in itself would discriminate against regions like the prairies, the north and the maritimes which are a long way from the markets of this country.

These are the circumstances which led to the Hall commission inquiry on the prairies and to the establishment of a study which I think is one of the most worthwhile we have seen in a long while. A number of recommendations were made which I support in principle and which I believe should be acted upon as quickly as possible. Let me take them one by one. First is the very important question of rail line abandonment. The Commission took a look at the 6,300 miles of B rail lines across the prairies which were going to be abandoned. They held hearings across the prairies and then recommended that some 1,800 miles be incorporated into the basic rail network, the existence of which will be guaranteed until at least the year 2000. That is a good recommendation, Mr. Speaker, one that the minister should immediately agree to when he takes the floor in about 15 minutes' time. By doing so he will give towns, villages and delivery points along those railways some certainty of their future, and thus enable them to plan their communities and economies in the years ahead.

The report also found that some 2,165 miles of line should be abandoned between June 30 of this year and 1981. We all agree that some rail lines must be abandoned. In fact, some 600 miles of line have not been used for the last two years. However, I suggest the Minister of Transport take another look at some of the proposed abandonments. I can think of 200 or 300 miles of line which perhaps should not be abandoned. For example, in my own riding, Jedburgh and Colmer, both little places, deliver a fair amount of grain and depend on the railways. Perhaps they should be given a second chance and the railroad retained.

The third recommendation in regard to rail line abandonment is to put 2,340 miles of rail lines under the authority of a new Crown corporation to be known as the prairie rail authority. This is a new idea. The Hall commission says it is not really sure that these lines should be abandoned and that 2,300 miles of rail line should be examined very thoroughly by a new federal Crown corporation and retained until the year 1990. By that time a decision must be made whether to abandon or retain them.

In some ways, Mr. Speaker, I think that is very unfortunate, because uncertainty will continue to exist in many communities along those rail lines. There will be uncertainty as to whether or not the Wheat Pool and other grain elevators should upgrade their facilities or build new elevators. Just the other day the president of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool announced that one new elevator planned for a certain town would not now be built. After all, what is the use of building an elevator if the rail line is abandoned in 12 years' time? What is the point of setting me a new business in a town or village on the rail line if the line is to be abandoned? Therefore, if the government accepts this recommendation they will, in effect, be telling a whole series of towns with significant populations that they will face long-term uncertainty.

In face of this de facto uncertainty over a long period, Mr. Speaker, the rail lines will indeed be abandoned. If the elevator companies do not upgrade their facilities, if businessmen do not expand, and new plants are not set up owing to this uncertainty as to the existence of the railway after 1990, then the CTC, the government, or the prairies rail authority, or whichever body will make the decision at that time, will decide the railway is not needed and will abandon it. I do not want to see a large number of these towns put in this situation of continuing uncertainty over the next 12 or 13 years.

Some of these towns are quite big places. For example, in the riding of the hon. member for Assiniboia, the shadow minister of transport, there are towns like Radville, with a population of 1,024, Bengough, with a population of 650; Willowbunch, with a population of 482; Gravelbourg, with a population of 1,428. All of these towns are recommended for inclusion under the prairie rail authority and will face a state of uncertainty for the next 12 years. I do not think there is going to be much development or progress in those towns unless the government decides to keep those rail lines and place them in the A category, maintaining them until the year 2000.

Other towns which will face continuing uncertainty are places like Cudworth, with a population of 800; Leroy, with a population of 435; Naicam, with a population of 711; and Wakaw, with a population of 1,009—all towns within the minister's riding. I think I am right in saying that the right hon. member for Prince Albert started his law practice in Wakaw a number of years ago, and I am sure he would not want that beautiful little town to face uncertainty until 1990 in regard to whether or not the rail line will be retained, new communities can be built and the farmers can be served by rail transportation.

When the minister speaks today, I would ask him to say something about the future of towns like Preeceville, in the riding of Mackenzie, with a population of 1,018 people, and the town of Kelvington, with a population of 1,053 people. These are large places, not tiny hamlets with 20 or 60 people. In many cases, over 1,000 people live in these towns and there are hundreds of farmers in the surrounding area. There are also several hamlets and villages between the towns, such as Preeceville, Kelvington and Porcupine in the Mackenzie constituency. Those areas are thriving and should not have to face continued uncertainty for several years. I hope the Minister of Transport is able to give them new hope when he rises and makes his statement later today.

● (1610)

The second recommendation contained in the Hall report is to retain the Crow rate. Our party has always been in favour the Crow rate. We think it is a rate which the farmers deserve. I hope the minister speaks categorically and strongly in favour of that rate. The commission also recommends that the difference between the Crowsnest rate and the cost of the railway be paid to the railways themselves and that the benefits of the Crow rate, to use the words of the Minister of Transport, not be given in some other way to the farmers. In fact, the Hall commission report, at page 337, reads as follows:

The very idea of sending out cheques to 160,000 farmers is appalling.

The Minister of Transport has talked about extra benefits to the farmers or to municipalities which resulted in that being contained in the report. The third thing they recommend is with respect to the whole area of economic development in western Canada. I would like to refer to the report once again where it is stated that freight structures for the processed product in its concentrated form should cost no more to transport on a ton-mile basis than the same product in its raw state. In other words, they are saying that in western Canada we should be able to process our goods and materials and ship them out at the same rate on a per ton-mile basis as raw materials. They are saying that the processing of the goods should be done where they are produced. For example, rape-seed should be crushed and processed in the prairies where it is produced and should be subject to the same freight rate as the raw rapeseed. If the Minister of Transport wants to do something significant for the prairies and for western Canada, that is something that should be done.

The fourth item in the report deals with the retention of the decentralized system of country elevators. That is a system which the farmers have fought for over the years, and the Hall commission is saying that it be the basis of our grain handling system in the prairies. In effect, in their report they reject massive centralization of huge inland terminals, which some people in this country have been talking about for the last few years. As the hon. member for Prince Albert stated, the report refers to a northern railway rather than a pipeline in northern Canada. That is one suggestion which merits further study, because you can move many things on a railway that you cannot move in a pipeline, including many things people need, such as raw materials which may have to be shipped down some day from northern Canada.

The Hall report also deals with ports and improving the port facilities we have in this country by dredging the port at Thunder Bay and by improving the utilization of the port at Churchill so that it will be used to a much greater extent. The port at Churchill should be utilized to a greater extent, not only for the people of Churchill but for the people of the prairies generally. The report also recommends an inland cleaning facility in my home riding of Yorkton capable of handling and cleaning 25 million to 30 million bushels of grain every year. That is a suggestion which has a lot of merit and should be looked at seriously by the minister. They are also recommending a greater utilization of the port of Prince Rupert in British Columbia. There are a number of other recommendations one could talk about when debating an issue such as this. The report has more than 500 pages. It is an excellent report and one the government should be acting upon very quickly.

At this stage I would like to move an amendment to the motion which is before the House that will, hopefully, draw the government's attention to some of the more important parts of the Hall commission report. Therefore, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles):

That the motion be amended by changing the period at the end thereof to a comma, and by adding immediately thereafter the following words:

"particularly (a) that the Crowsnest statutory rates be maintained, (b) that the principle of the Crowsnest rates be extended to agricultural products processed in western Canada, and (c) that the utilization of the ports of Churchill and Prince Rupert be increased".

I hope the Minister of Transport and his colleague, the Minister without Portfolio from Alberta, and other ministers in the cabinet will make some quick decisions on the Hall commission report which is before them. I hope they will end the uncertainty that literally hundreds of prairie towns and villages are now facing as to whether they will have rail facilities in the years ahead. Once and for all, those of us in western Canada will have our chance to share equally in the development of this great country of ours.

[Mr. Nystrom.]

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, in beginning this afternoon I want to pay tribute to the members of the Hall commission who performed a great piece of work for the transportation system in Canada and for people who are engaged in producing and distributing grain. Mr. Cowan, Mr. Stewart, Mr. Forbes and Mr. Lehr from the prairie provinces travelled far and wide throughout the prairies and elsewhere in Canada in order to obtain the views, opinions and reactions of all people interested in the handling and transportation system. In carrying out their appointed task of examining the future of some 6,000 miles of branch lines in the prairie system and the over-all question of the handling and transporting of grain, I believe they did a superb job. They listened and attempted to come to grips with many of the problems which have vexed us for a long time.

I am pleased to see the words of the resolution as proposed by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) and his statement of support in principle for the recommendations of the Hall commission. I was also pleased to hear the comments of the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), in terms of his general support of the recommendations of the Hall commission. Perhaps it is somewhat better to put it in that form, since it is a little difficult to agree with some of the recommendations in principle. You have to either agree or disagree with it, rather than adopting it in principle and finding out later what it is all about, determining what it costs and whether you really like it. That is the phraseology this House sometimes uses, and I think we all understand it.

The Hall commission did not come out of the clear blue sky. It was a result of a great deal of work which had been done in connection with the grains industry. That work really began in 1969 with the appointment of the grains group and consolidation within the government of a special effort to come to grips with all the problems affecting our grains industry. What is astonishing in looking at the record of accomplishments since 1969 is to compare that in contrast with the practical absence of progress, change and alteration in the preceding period, and particularly the practical absence of changes and improvements in connection with the grains industry, whether handling, transportation, marketing or any of its policies, during the time when the right hon. member for Prince Albert was prime minister of this country.

There is one major exception to the record of very little being done, and that is the introduction during that period of the idea of cash advances on farm-stored grains. That was accomplished in the first months of that government, but then it seemed to run out of steam in coming to grips with any of the difficult problems. The reason why as a party it is unable to gain solid strength with people throughout this country is that it is so unwilling to take practical and sensible approaches and, indeed, to do anything for fear that someone might not like what it is doing. The Conservative party falls back on the traditional idea that if you do nothing, no one can attack you for your mistakes. That is the philosophy of that party, both in government and in opposition, and we have seen its record. We have seen this most recently, again, in relation to the problem facing the beef industry. They criticize ideas to solve the problems, but they themselves have no ideas to put forward.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Lang: The work of the Hall commission was not the beginning of the study of the problem of grain handling and the transportation system. That began in 1969. One of the first tasks which we launched then, with the firm intention to be thorough, was the exhaustive study of all aspects of the problem. There was production of many documents which are available, of course, and were made available for a greater understanding of problems concerning elevators such as rail cost problems and their impact upon communities of having elevators or rail lines. All these studies which were accomplished over a period of several years were very important contributions from leaders within the grain industry as well as from many government officials who worked zealously on these. I wish to pay tribute, for instance, to the managers of two of the pools in the prairies, Mr. Mumford and Mr. Wally Madill, who, together with Mr. Searle who just then retired from another elevator company, worked with us in connection with many of these studies. At that time we began to assess the information to develop an understanding of the technical questions involved which were eventually to form the basis for the work of the Hall commission. When the work was over, it appeared to us that it was right to have two commissions to bring the work to a conclusion. We appointed then the Snavely commission to examine the technical questions of how much it really costs to move grain and to analyse these technical questions with the provinces and with the companies involved. Also, we appointed the Hall commission.

I was delighted when Mr. Hall accepted to be chairman of this commission, with his strong reputation for being able to listen to the public, to analyse problems and to present views in a sensitive and sympathetic manner. We appointed that commission to hear the public views, to bring together the knowledge, the analysis and the work that we and others had done, and to draw conclusions upon which to act. I was delighted to hear the reference of the right hon. member for Prince Albert to his original appointment of Mr. Hall to the bench in Canada. I think it is a well known and well recognized fact that in all of his work, whether on the bench or in the many commissions he has served so well, his strong liberalism has shown time and time again in his approach and in his conclusions in relation to problems.

That is why I believe it will be possible to act quickly on many of the Hall commission's recommendations and to use them as the basis for the development of solutions to problems in the grain industry. Indeed, to pick up the challenge of the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville, I can say that as soon as I saw the recommendations in the Hall commission report I began work on the initial question dealing with his first and principal recommendation that a particular 1,813 miles of track which were part of his study should be transferred to the basic rail network. I put that proposition to my colleagues for consideration, and this morning the order in council was passed to transfer those 1,813 miles recommended by Mr. Hall to the basic rail network. They will be protected from abandonment in the year 2000, which applies to the other branch lines which were first put into that basic network system. We have, therefore, already on the tenth day after the publication of the Hall report implemented its major feature.

Also, today by order in council we extended protection to 2,344 miles of line which the Hall commission recommended be put in the hands of the prairie rail authority. We have extended their protection to January 1, 1979, so that we may take immediate steps and, at the same time, deliberate action in relation to this recommendation to consider all its implications and to see what formal action must be taken before parliament can carry out that recommendation.

I noted the cautionary words of the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville, expressed previously by some of the representatives of farmers in the prairies, with regard to some aspects that raise concern. I propose to begin immediately discussions with representatives of farmers and, of course, to hear the farmers themselves on the problems, the merits and the difficulties of this recommendation. This with the view to saying, as I said earlier in the House, that I like the report in general and in principle. I hope we can find a way to solve the dilemmas which are seen to exist in it and to get on with it in accordance with the spirit of the Hall commission report.

I propose to meet tomorrow in Regina with the leaders of many of the farm organizations and representatives of the elevator companies, or at least the key ones, and representatives of others involved in the grain industry, including the Wheat Board, we hope, in order to move forward on this and other recommendations in the Hall report. It will not be possible to say of this government, in relation to this problem concerning the grain industry, that we have been slow in moving. We will continue to do here, in relation to this great industry, what our record shows we have done since 1969, that is, to tackled the problems one by one and many together in order to make progress and in order to put the prairie farmer, who is the producer of our Canadian grain both for domestic and export use, into a sound position in his operations, in his marketing and in his income. Since 1969, the things we have done—

Mr. Malone: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. Could the minister indicate to the House whether he intends to implement the whole report of the Hall commission by order in council, as he is now implying, or will he keep the report away from the committee, as he has the beef program ever since it has been implemented?

Mr. Lang: Obviously, those things which can be done by order in council, if that is the appropriate method, as it is indeed in this case since we have the authority to protect certain rail lines from abandonment, will be done in that way. I hope the hon. member is not suggesting, like a typical Conservative, that we should have delayed action here. Of course, there are a number of recommendations in the Hall report which can only be brought into existence by legislation. I am thinking in particular of the full form of the prairie rail authority which would clearly be an issue for legislation since it would affect a number of other legislative matters.

Mr. McIsaac: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I wonder if my friend has any objection against the minister proceeding immediately to move in this regard. Is he concerned about that?

Mr. Malone: I would like the minister also to accept immediately the continued guarantee of the Crowsnest pass rates.

• (1630)

Mr. Lang: I will get to the important subjects to which the hon. member referred. I would just like to put into perspective the actions which have been taken, because hon. members opposite are apt to forget them. They do a disservice to this country by suggesting that the government of Canada is not capable of acting to protect the interests of the west. They do a disservice to unity. They do a service to cynicism and separatism with that kind of talk and allegation, and it is unfortunate that they do forget these things. Meanwhile, their colleagues who are not from the west do a further service to cynicism and separatism by going to other parts of the country and arguing that everything is being done for the west and citing things like the hopper car program as prime examples. Hon. members opposite deny that that is their tactic. If they want to know why they are the party of disunity both within their party and within the country, they should look at that record of performing differently in different regions and accusing the government of different things in those regions.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Mazankowski: Cut the lectures; get on with the Hall report.

Mr. Lang: Since 1969—

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. To set the record straight, we should point out that any government which has had 11 cabinet ministers resign in three years is a party of disunity.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I presume you are making due allowance for the extension of my time because of these interjections.

I refer to the formation of the Canadian Grains Council and also to the expanded credit facilities and long-term federal guarantees which allowed the Wheat Board to pursue new markets for grain. I refer to the new and vigorous efforts to break into world barley markets where we had really never been in a big way for many years before 1970. Again, if we look at the record, while the government of the right hon. member for Prince Albert was in power we find there was little and seriously dwindling attention paid to the feed barley market of the world. After 1970 we determined that we should be in that market in a big way. We set initial prices which encouraged the growth of barley so it would be available for export. We set targets of 200 million bushels fo exports as a basic target the Wheat Board should go after, and in some of the years since then when it has been produced and available that amount of grain has indeed been sold. That is why in the past several years we have had record sales which have exceeded any of the levels which were achieved at any time before 1965.

We set in place a program which put $10 million annually into a new market development fund. We have developed new research facilities such as the new crop science division at the University of Saskatchewan and the protein, oil and starch plant which will be opened in July at that university. We introduced the two-price wheat program, which in a permanent way had never before been seen although it had been talked about by prairie people for many years. We did that at a time when it cost many million dollars each year to finance. We brought in a new quota system, which hon. members opposite attacked but which now allows the smooth and easy flow of grain into the system instead of bringing grain into the system willy-nilly and helter-skelter without regard to market needs and to what the transportation system can handle. We introduced a system for the early announcement of quotas, guaranteed deliveries and initial prices before seeding so that farmers would have that additional information. We improved the timing of final payments by the Wheat Board. We introduced the deferred cash ticket system on grain deliveries.

We introduced a separate pool for malting barley. The block shipping system helped tremendously in the grain handling and transportation system with which Mr. Hall and his commission had to deal. We helped with the grain trucking program, which provided some valuable information to the commission. We introduced government financing for the bringing in of grain so it could be dried. We introduced such things as further consultations with producers, and the election of the advisory committee to the Canadian Wheat Board. We held a poll among rapeseed producers to determine their marketing preference. We now have before the House a proposal for a voluntary system of pooling rapeseed.

Over these past years, while we knew that further study on the grain handling and transportation system was needed and that the Hall report was needed, we decided that there were some things we could do in advance of the report. Such things that everyone seemed to agree would be consistent with any possible combination of grain delivery systems they could imagine. The hopper car program is a prime example of that. In addition we introduced the boxcar repair program to keep extra cars in operation for grain. We have now completed the construction or ordering of 8,000 hopper cars for grain at a cost of $240 million to $250 million.

Hon. members opposite who are from the west ignore and do not mention the things we have done for this important western industry, while their colleagues from other parts of the country point to these iniatives with criticism, saying that the government shows a preference for the west. I ask hon. members opposite to try to bring about unity amongst themselves so that their party can be a party for unity for this country as well.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Lang: The list is long, and I will not continue it, but the Hall commission report and the Snavely commission report fit into and complete this work, which is very important.

An hon. Member: What about LIFT?

Mr. Lang: In its way, the LIFT program also provided many millions of dollars. It was needed to change the system of clogging elevators which the right hon. gentleman's government had left in existence. That government should have understood the west and should have understood that piling up grain on August 1 every year until the elevators were full, and that encouraging wheat production under a quota system, was wrong. That government had favoured wheat over barley and forgot to sell barley in the world market because it did not seem to show any interest. All these things made no sense, and we needed a system which would work like castor oil in changing the system, but this involved $70 million of government money.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Why is the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Horner) not applauding?

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I rise again on a point of order. I am sure the hon. minister did not intend to mislead the House, but he should know there is more congestion in east central Alberta and west central Saskatchewan this year than in past years. He ought to know that because of the movement to Thunder Bay and to other ports.

Mr. Lang: The hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Malone) is wrong, as usual, in suggesting that any of the congestion now is anywhere as great as it was at the time about which I was speaking. Of course, this year there is somewhat more grain to handle because of the record volume of production of last year.

Mr. Mazankowski: It's on the farms.

Mr. Lang: The hon. member should recognize that at this point in time we are already ahead of last year's exports, and by the time this crop year is over, this particular crop year we will have exported very much more grain than we did last year. The only reason there will be additional grain on the farms—which there will be—is the record production which we all should welcome and the build-up of supplies which were already at that point fairly high. It is a welcome build-up of supplies in terms of security of supply for the world.

Hon. members opposite asked me to refer to the Crowsnest rates on grain, and I am certainly glad to take this opportunity to do that. The Conservative party, through its spokesman, the right hon. member for Prince Albert, and the New Democratic Party, through its spokesman, the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville, have both said that essentially they agree with the recommendations of the Hall report. As with the Berger report, they were ready to agree unanimously to those recommendations the very day the report came out and before they had much chance to read it. Notwithstanding the fact that the official opposition should have been somewhat alerted to the dangers of that—because the Leader of the Opposition immediately supported the Berger report in total and then had to vote the other way in this House—on reflection perhaps a little bit of weighing of the evidence is desirable. I have also said that about some of the individual recommendations, but it would be useful to know what they cost. Even if one is willing to pay the cost, it is useful to know what it is before one decides to proceed.

Hon. members opposite support the recommendations of the Hall report in general.

M. Mazankowski: Have you not supported them in general? Make up your mind.

Mr. Lang: On the question of the Crowsnest rate, the Hall commission says this:

> Regardless of what rate may be set for the transport of grain to export position that rate must be statutory, not variable.

I have no hesitation in saying that I have never had any thoughts to the contrary in relation to that particular rate on grain. The commission report goes on:

● (1640)

> How the difference between the new rate and the Crowsnest rate will be apportioned between the government and the producer is, of course, a matter for government decision. This commission feels that the government must continue to subsidize the transportation of export grain and that the full cost, as deemed by the commission on the costs of transporting grain by rail, must not be imposed on the producer.

In supporting that recommendation in general, as the two parties opposite have done, it should be noted they did not go as far as I have gone in the past in my assertion that I believed the whole of the benefit of the Crowsnest rate for grain should be reserved for western producers. They do not go as far as I have gone in suggesting that. Indeed, over the years my only qualification about the preservation of the whole of the benefit of the Crowsnest rate for the west has been to tie it in principle and theory, as it was tied in national policy almost a century ago, to the existence and creation of tariffs and their burdens on the grain farmer and the agricultural sector. I have suggested that any diminution in the benefit of those rates to the prairies could only come about if benefit was being conferred on the prairies and on the grain sector in particular by improvements and movements toward freer trade.

If the world were to move toward freer trade, then I could see that the particular historic benefit which was tied in many ways to the development of a tariff structure should be varied as well. That is the only comment or qualification I have made, whereas here the commission suggests perhaps there should be greater movement away from the statutory rate. I say that the statutory rate should remain in that statutory form. I will be having discussions with my colleagues about many other issues in the Hall report in connection with improvements in the grain handling and transportation system.

Surely, in our total examination of freight we have to bring some sense of the principles to bear in regard to the handling of products and the impact of one product upon another. The Hall commission seems to me clearly to support the statement that we ought to have equity in freight rates between grain and meat. That is something I have said emphatically over and over again, particularly in connection with the development of the feed grains policy for Canada. I have spoken of the need to have access to feed grain for all farmers in all parts of the country for the purpose of freedom of trade and proper development of products according to natural advantage. I have spoken, as well, of the need to have equity in freight rates between the two products. In many ways, in principle, the people throughout the prairies appreciate the importance of that and realize it is a problem that has to be grappled with. The recommendation to upgrade the railways will cost a great deal of money. That is also a matter that this government will have to grapple with in the near future.

I spoke about the record of this government in relation to many other grain programs, without mentioning them all. I did not mention what is perhaps the greatest of all government programs in the past eight or nine years, the western grains stabilization plan. This may well prove over the years to be the greatest bulwark and mainstay of prairie grain producers at any time where downswings occur. In the light of history, there are reasons to believe that those downswings will occur. This great grain stabilization plan commits the government, in essence, to 4 per cent annually of the value of grain but guarantees whatever amount is required from the treasury to pay the difference between what the cash income of prairie farmers has been over five years and what it is in a current year. That may well prove to be the greatest monument to the action of this government in regard to the grain industry.

Mr. Speaker, that plan was the result of years and years of hard and determined work on the part of the few of us on this side of the House from the prairies, with the co-operation of members of the Liberal party from every province in the country—from Quebec and Ontario, from the Atlantic provinces and British Columbia as well as the Liberals from the prairies. It triumphed over the struggle and time-wasting and time-consuming efforts of members opposite from the prairies who were doing a disservice by working against a plan because of only one thing—that they did not want a plan so good to be brought in. That kind of narrow politics I cannot understand, even from members opposite.

The government has a record of performance in relation to the grain industry which is recognized by members of that industry, farmers and farm leaders alike. They know the problems and know that we have taken action with programs like the change in the quota system which in its time was unpopular but which has proved to be what was needed. People across this country who have seen that know they can have confidence. So much of what is in the Hall commission report is the culmination of the work done in the grains group and the culmination of the hearings we asked the Hall commission to undertake. Those people know that we will take very serious steps to implement those recommendations which will benefit the prairies, the grain industry and the grain farmer.

It will be said after these eight, nine or ten years of performance that this government has acted forthrightly at all times—has acted quickly and decisively for the benefit of the grain industry and its systems. We will do so again in connection with the Hall report. That is my pledge, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I welcome the opportunity to make a few comments on today's motion, although I am somewhat surprised to see how quickly we are deciding on the Hall report. I am sure it is not a mistake to say that most of us did not have time to read it because we just got it; yet we are simply requested to agree in principle on the recommendation of the Hall commission.

I think it is only an agreement in principle because it is impossible to study such a voluminous document in two, three or four days. After reading the first few pages of this document, we realize that it concerns primarily the interest of the western provinces, the grain production, as the minister just said. It concerns all the provinces of Canada because I think that the evolution of a province has an impact on the whole country; it concerns us all the more, as the minister also said, that the change will not be made with nothing but with money; we are then much more interested because we will also be asked to pay for this change.

Therefore I congratulate all the members of the Hall commission. The minister said that this commission had travelled a lot. I would add they have written a lot as well, because judging from their first volume of almost 600 pages we have just received, let alone those to come, I believe we can say these commissioners have done a lot of work. I am very pleased for western farmers who must also benefit from the effects of the progress taking place in this country.

If we go back to the time when the grain transportation system through the Prairies was just beginning, we find that what was modern then is entirely obsolete today, like the agricultural production which is quite different, much more mechanized and more rapid than at the time when they farmed with horses. This is why we can still see all these things from the past, that is those hundreds of local elevators, many of which are now completely abandoned. The same applies to railway tracks. The Hall commission was supposed to undertake a study of the situation in order to make constructive recommendations to Parliament. Appointed in 1975, this commission was assigned the task of studying the needs of western farmers in terms of railway transportation, to make a full assessment of requirements relating to regional transportation in order to analyze the impact of the over-all grain handling and transportation system.

Finally, it was to make recommendations which today affect about 6,283 miles of railway tracks throughout the Prairie provinces. As regards those lines which are to be abandoned, I believe many western producers will have a lot to say, and we shall not voice any objection about it because they have common interests to defend. It is quite similar to what is happening in our province where we fight in an attempt to modernize our railway system. We share almost the same problems, passenger services, freight services, and we must at all cost deal with transportation experts. We must take their advice, but especially study their recommendations. I suggest this is what the Prairie farmers are trying to do with this motion today.

We shall deal also with the maintenance of statutory rates and handling but I wish we would refer to storage as well.

In a summary of his first volume, this is what Mr. Justice Hall had to say:

The grain handling and transportation commission asserts that this report is the result of a two-year study. During those two years, about 120 hearings have been held and the commission has received over 1,600 briefs. In addition, more than 15,000 people have attended the commission hearings.

Mr. Speaker, I insist on quoting that paragraph. People often say: They set up that commission, but now we will hear no more about it. I shall quote that excerpt to show the people that those commissions do work efficiently, for I think that if the people were aware of the number of hours of work, of miles covered, of visits out in the field, they would appreciate the work of this commission far more:

During its inquiry, the commission encouraged all those who are interested in the future of western Canada to express their views, both orally and in writing, at its hearings. Most of them were held in the towns and cities along the railway lines the commission was to assess and about which it was to make recommendations.

So, the commissioners did not work haphazardly; they did not write that volume sitting in their offices: they went out into the field, to see first hand what is going on.

The recommendations of the commission should serve as the basis for rationalizing the grain handling and transportation system in the future. In addition to recommending the early abandonment of the lines which are no longer needed, we also recommend the creation of a new body whose function would be to make a permanent assessment of future needs in the field of railway transportation. The commission concludes that 1,813 miles of branch lines in the Prairies, which have proved very useful and important on a regional basis, should be reintegrated into the main railway network, and that their existence be guaranteed until the year 2000.

The commission therefore recommends the abandonment, pure and simple, of over 2,000 miles of branch lines which have not been used for some time. I know that some years ago I had occasion to visit the Prairie provinces two or three times, and I was amazed to see all those abandoned lines. At the same time, there exists a whole new system, more modern and much quicker, of getting to the elevators. As I said a while ago, the years of the small industry, the small farm in the west are over, and the means of transport must, of necessity, be adapted to the evolution of agricultural production. We always hear that the west is Canada's granary, and I think this is true as far as grains are concerned. It is absolutely necessary to have this wealth shipped as soon as possible instead of leaving it in the fields. It is also necessary that all the provinces benefit from this. Those who are called upon to pay must also benefit from the future modernization in the western provinces.

This leads me to the question of storage. It is all well to take the grain from the land of the Prairie provinces and bring it to the elevators, but it must also be redistributed in the other provinces. I draw particularly the minister's attention to this point, namely that we will have to rethink the matter of grain storage in each and every province, and in Quebec—I speak for Quebec because that is where I live—it will be necessary to double the number of elevators either in Quebec City or in Montreal so that we do not have to send the grain by train in winter, when it is 50 per cent cheaper by ship.

If we had the necessary storage for a 12-month period, consumers, farmers and producers would benefit from the savings instead of being forced as they are now to fill western elevators and even municipal elevators right up. It would be so easy, before the close of the shipping season, to forward to Quebec and Maritime elevators the necessary stocks to guarantee to the consumers of each of those provinces the grain they will need during the 12 following months.

I think the government must show leadership and anticipate and we should forecast for at least 12 months to avoid those transport shortages. There are not enough engines and cars to carry the grain in eastern Canada when it would have been so easy to try before the close of the shipping season to fill up the elevators and thus the surplus alone would have to be carried in case of emergency during winter. Those are the comments which I want to make for now. I am pleased once again with the work done by the commission and I am convinced that it will benefit Canada as a whole.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[Translation]

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order. It is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters)—National Defence—Request for equipment to assist residents of Cobalt following fire; the hon. member for Winnipeg South Centre (Mr. McKenzie)—Canadian Export Development Corporation—Reason for refusal to confirm Transair as prime bidder for United States Air Force contract; the hon. member for Oxford (Mr. Halliday)—Health—Possibility of studies on effects of saccharin on humans—Reason for failure to consult medical associations prior to imposing ban.

GOVERNMENT ORDERS

[English]

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—GRAIN HANDLING AND TRANSPORTATION

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Diefenbaker:

That this House agrees in principle with the recommendations of the Hall commission on grain handling and transportation.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I wish the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) had stayed to hear what I am going to say, because I would rather say these things face to face. This motion was moved today to force the government to declare where it stands on the principles of the Hall report. There is nothing new in the principles enunciated in this report. They have been talked about and proposed in western Canada over the past 50 years. The essence of this report is that it puts all these things that we have asked for for half a century into one volume. Second, it puts it into plain English that even a government can understand.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): What does the minister do in the face of this challenge by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker)? He brought in a long list of achievements of his government and attacked the record of the Diefenbaker administration 15 years ago. Why does he take this stance? The reason he avoids the challenge of the right hon. member for Prince Albert is that he knows the record of his government. The philosophy of his government is not the philosophy of western Canada. If the minister has done so much good, why is he so feared all through the west?

In Saskatchewan we are in the process of fighting provincial by-elections. A party which had nothing two years ago, relatively 15 or 20 per cent of the vote, is now winning these by-elections. It is not so much because of dissatisfaction with the government in Saskatchewan, but with the fact that the issues are being fought on federal issues. The person who, above all, the farmers want to send a message to when they vote in these provincial by-elections in Saskatchewan is the Minister of Transport. They want him to know their philosophy is one of expansion in the west. Their philosophy is one of using the great productivity that they have to help feed the whole world. All they get from this government is restriction, restriction, restriction. They know that this man has to be removed from the decision-making of the government of Canada. We know what he is doing.

When the minister brought in the LIFT program in 1970 it was not an isolated act by a government. It was part of a philosophy that came out of an agricultural task force report in 1969. It said that all across Canada there were three times as many farmers as there should be, and we should deliberately, with government policies at the federal level and the provincial level, cut that number down to one—

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier).]

Mr. Lang: That is not what it said, and you know it.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): That policy of the agricultural task force said that as far as the prairies are concerned, we should reduce the acreage to half. The next year the minister and his government brought in four bits of legislation to help carry out that principle. The LIFT program was number one. Look carefully at the LIFT program recommended by the farm organizations and accepted by the government because the men who wrote the agricultural task force report tried to tell the farmers that they had too much wheat productivity and that they should cut out wheat. They had a program called the small farm program to get rid of farmers. They set up a land bank. I was in Saskatchewan in Pelly constituency the last two days, and 20 per cent of the land is owned by the government. It is all part of a policy to take over the control of the individual and the decision-making on the farms of this country.

The Minister of Transport brought out the key question of the Crowsnest rate. He said he was for the Crowsnest rates and for putting them into a statute. Who is not? They have to be there. However, what he does not seem to face up to is the significance of what Hall has said about these Crowsnest rates and what the minister and his government intended. The minister wanted to change the Crowsnest rates from what they are, charge the farmers two or three times more and then come back and reimburse the farmer for the extra cost. He wanted to pay it back to the farmer as an individual farmer, either in acreage or by bushels. Hall saw the danger. Hall is from the west. He knew the deep fear in the hearts of western farmers when he wrote this, and I quote:

The commission recommends that the difference between the Crowsnest rate and the rate determined through costs found by the commission on the costs of transporting grain should be paid directly to the railways, and not to individual farmers. The very idea of sending out cheques to 160,000 farmers is appalling.

It is not appalling to the Minister of Transport. He knows that is how you can control the votes. He, the great Santa Claus of all times, wants to send out 160,000 cheques to individual farmers. We remember under the LIFT program before the election in 1972 the cheques that came out for the summer fallow, land which should have been in wheat. After the 1972 election they said, "You were overpaid, and we have to get it back." Before the 1974 election they came along and made payments for grassing.

Mr. Lang: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Yes, Mr. Speaker, at the end of my speech. Then they came along and said they had overpaid them, and they had to get it back. All this was done so overtly that members of this House, the hon. member for Red Deer (Mr. Towers) and the hon. member for Swift Current-Maple Creek (Mr. Hamilton), were able to report to the Auditor General that things were going on that did not seem right. The Auditor General went in and photographed the documents of the organization carrying out that program.

We turned our information over to the criminal fraud squad of the RCMP. It is pretty hard to get guys who are into the pot to give evidence against themselves, but five did. One was charged, the head man. When the evidence was put before the judge, he said there was enough evidence to have this man stand trial for criminal fraud. In plain terms, that meant stealing money from the farmers and trying to persuade them to vote Liberal. That case has never been heard. Why? That will be the issue one of these days. We questioned the Minister of Agriculture on the same subject because beside the criminal fraud there was the political fraud. The minister stood in the House and said, "Well, they burned the records". When a matter is before parliament affecting the repeal of the PFAA, and when a matter of criminal fraud is before the courts, a government which would allow these guilty people to go in and burn the records of PFAA has a purpose in mind beyond just burning the records. The Minister of Transport has one purpose in mind—

● (1710)

Mr. Lang: On a question of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member seems to be implying that I had some connection with the acts he was describing. He has heard that that is not true. He should withdraw any such suggestion or imputation. He has gone further than that and referred to "those guilty persons"—I believe those were his words—in relation to people who are not here to defend themselves and who are thus imputed by him to be guilty before court process has been completed. I think he ought to refrain from that kind of conduct even though he is protected in this House by long-standing privileges accorded to members of parliament. These are privileges which ought not to be abused and the hon. member ought, therefore, to avoid making statements of the kind he did. I say this without having connection with the individuals concerned, but out of a regard for a sense of fairness. I come back to my original remarks, that if he was imputing any connection between myself and any wrongdoing, I ask him to withdraw.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): What I am going to say, Mr. Speaker, is going to be loud and clear. The man who is charged with criminal fraud by stealing money from the farmers was an appointee of the government opposite, of which the minister is part. The hon. gentleman can make what he likes of that. Second, it was a colleague of his, the Minister of Agriculture, who stood up in this House, as the record shows, and said the documents were burned. When this subject goes before a committee, as one day it will, we shall ask the government why those women were dismissed just before Christmas. Why did they keep a director there who was fully paid but never allowed to go into his own office? There is no question of privilege there. The minister knows exactly what I am saying, and exactly who is responsible for putting that man, who is now before the courts on charges of criminal fraud, in his position.

Now I want to return to my speech. The minister has tried to obscure the fact that the Hall report strikes a body blow at him and all he has tried to do in western Canada in the last eight years. It is obvious that members on the government side do not like this message. But it is a message they have got to hear. People in this country do not want corrupt government, whether they live in Quebec or in Saskatchewan. They want vrai gouvernement, good government, true government, honest government.

Let us take another issue. In Bill C-33 the government brought in a measure to amend the Transportation Act. All the work parliament did from 1964 to 1967 in transferring the power to control railways, pipelines, airlines, trucking, everything involved in transportation, out of the hands of the minister and the civil servants—who were doing nothing with it, anyway—and into the hands of a board of 17 members of the transport commission—a board which did nothing with it, either—was brought to nothing. At this very moment there stands upon our agenda a bill to take all that power away from the commission which, as I say, did nothing with it, and put it again into the hands of the minister and the civil servants around him. When we see a political machine being built up in western Canada, sure we are going to fight. We had that under Gardiner for 25 years, and we are not going to tolerate that type of dictatorship any more from people who are expressing philosophies which are foreign to our western views and, I think, foreign to those of the whole country.

In conclusion, I want to say a word about the amendment put forward by the NDP. I do not think there is any question but that it is acceptable. But why did they limit their amendment to two specific principles—the Crowsnest rates and the utilization of Churchill and Port Rupert? What about the most important principle in the whole report, the rationalization of the grain handling system? There is no mention of the fact that we have five great inland terminals out there, owned by the people of Canada, standing empty and unused. Why? Because to use them would be to provide competition with existing grain companies. Why did the NDP not put that into their program? Why don't they talk about the rationalization of the grain handling industry? No longer will they be allowed to build where they shouldn't, and to abandon where they should not. They will come under the control of the prairie railway authority, if the Hall recommendations are accepted. They will come under the control of the Board of Grain Commissioners and of the Canadian Wheat Board.

One of the great failures of the last 15 years has been the unwillingness of the grain companies in western Canada to modernize. The minister says the Diefenbaker government did nothing. The only person who will believe that statement is his wife. In 1962 I went to a meeting in Regina and in a public speech, speaking as a minister of the Crown, I asked the delegates of the Saskatchewan Wheat Pool to support me in two proposals. One was that they set aside 2 cents a bushel on every bushel they put into their elevators to help their own companies modernize their elevator systems and get rid of the inefficient, costly and wasteful system they had. The second thing I asked them was to join with their rivals, the UGG, and go into operation with the Alberta and Manitoba pools and form a selling agency to sell Canadian wheat abroad, instead of just sitting there collecting money out of storage and handling.

The price I paid for making those two proposals was this: the leader of the official opposition at that time, Mr. Pearson, attacked me in the House, supported by the leader of the NDP, the present member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas). The position they took was that one should not ask farm organizations to do anything for themselves. To do so is Conservative philosophy; their philosophy is to allow nothing to be done and continue to allow farmers to face those heavy costs. Yet after five days of debate in that farm meeting in Saskatchewan, those farmers voted 100 per cent in favour of my proposals. The question then arises: Why was nothing done? Their delegates supported it, but nothing developed. Only in the last five or six years have the grain companies begun to modernize under the threat of other companies coming in and building big elevators. Why is that not mentioned? Cannot the minister stand in the House and say, "I support the rationalization of the grain handling system"?

Then there is this business of not allowing farmers to haul their grain to CPR railway lines, barring them from sending their grain to Churchill or to Prince Rupert. All our northern grain at CPR points had to be hauled hundreds of miles south to the east or the west to avoid CP cars travelling over CNR lines. What a crime against the farmers of western Canada! Hall recommends that this be stopped. There is no mention of that in the amendment. The minister could have said, "I will accept that immediately". He does not need a statutory change; he passes an order in council that lines already abandoned can be abandoned. Then he puts in another order in council today, when he knew that this motion was coming up, which says, in effect, that the 2,000 lines which are considered marginal and will be put under the prairie railway authority will not be decided upon until January 1, 1979. That only tells me one thing, that we would not—

● (1720)

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Has the hon. member unanimous consent to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): I will not take too long, Mr. Speaker. I want to conclude with a rapid summary. It is the minister who is under attack here. He has failed to respond today to the challenge of the Crow rates. This report is not to be used for political monkey-shining; it is to be used to put the railways into a rational and profit-making position. In this debate today the minister has failed to support the principle of the rationalization of the railways—getting rid of lines running parallel, of cases where grain is hauled 100 miles to the east and 100 miles to the west, so that the railways not run over each other's lines.

The minister should have supported rationalization because it would mean less cost to the taxpayer and more money to the railways. There has been no response from the minister in regard to giving the prairie rail authority power to direct, which is key to the success of the Hall proposals. The minister has failed to mention the inland terminals' 50 years of crime against the farmers. This is now a clear recommendation in the Hall report. They belonged to us as a government.

Let me give the House one example. When you ship grain to the coast from these big new terminals at Thunder Bay or Vancouver there is a certain kind of tonnage which we call screenings. When you ship, say, to Vancouver the farmer pays the cost of shipping the screenings. Then it costs the grain company money to pelletize and sell the screenings. There are about 28 million bushels of screenings a year, and in marketable form they cost about $16 a ton. The price of the screenings, when sold to the poultry producer on the west coast, is $80 a ton. In other words, $64 profit goes to the grain companies, value that belongs to the farmer. By running the inland terminals, what you are saying to the farmer is that the screenings should be taken out in the west and utilized in the beef industry, with the value going to the people who produce the grain.

The minister has failed to see the significance of the Hall report and what it means to the development of Churchill and Prince Rupert, not to hinder and hurt but to help the ports of Vancouver, Montreal and those in the Atlantic region. The minister has failed to see that the whole thrust of the Hall report is not to add great extra subsidy costs but to run the railroads and the grain system rationally, so that costs are cut and the railways begin to make money.

This is why a northern railway was added, Mr. Speaker. The minister said that the northern railway was beyond the commission's terms of reference, but Mr. Justice Hall shot that down; he read the actual terms of reference. The minister does not even realize what Hall is talking about. He is talking about hauling more commodities by rail, such as gravel, mineral concentrates from the north, finished beef products, processed rapeseed, and so on. The cries of the west for the last 50 years have been answered by this report, yet the minister turns, twists and deviates, all to avoid saying it is a great report and that the government can accept every single principle which will be implemented as fast as humanly possible.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, if these principles are not in the statute books of this country and enshrined in some form of regulation when the government call the election, then they had better watch out. We have spent 40 years now waiting for some action. The government scuttled away from taking action on the MacPherson report. Are they going to scuttle away again? This is the issue in the west. If action is not taken, then hon. members opposite will have no further chance to say "No" all the time.

Incidentally, I heard the interjection of the hon. member for Assiniboia (Mr. Goodale) today. I was in the House watching the hon. member for Assiniboia when the motion of the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar was moved. I saw the hon. member for Assiniboia say "No". I simply say to members from Saskatchewan, Manitoba, Alberta and B.C., "Vote for these principles. The people are not going to stand for any more delay. They want action. This report will not cost the taxpayer any more money. It will reduce subsidies. It is a good report".

I could make five suggestions which would improve the report, but they are all additions of principle. However, that is not my purpose here today. We have asked this parliament to accept the principles contained in the Hall report and to do those things that he recommends before we go to the country. Then we will know the government really means what they say. We do not want any more orders in council to the effect that the government is going to consider the matter on January 1, 1979. The government does not need any more information. We have had more reports on the subject over the last ten years than we need. I tell the government to act now so that hon. members opposite can stand up before westerners and tell them they were not betrayed when the chance came.

Mr. Cliff McIsaac (Battleford-Kindersley): Mr. Speaker, it is always a real pleasure to listen to and become involved in debate with my hon. friend from Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton). Let me assure him that the government will undoubtedly follow his suggestion in terms of moving forward with the report of the Hall commission. In listening to my hon. friend I always have the feeling, when he recites the tremendous aims and goals that he and his party have for Canada, particularly western Canada, that he is suffering from deep frustration which goes back to the time when he and his party did have the opportunity to put forward blueprints for agriculture, for transportation and other vital areas, not only in Canada in general but in western Canada in particular. I can only conclude that this frustration stems from his difficulty in coming to grips with the problems, and particularly with the solutions, to those problems.

I want to thank the right hon. member and others opposite for the opportunity to debate this matter today and for putting the subject of the Hall commission report on the order paper. I think that a little bit of history might be in order in so far as the Hall commission report is concerned. In the early pages of the report it is pointed out that there have been 12 similar commissions or studies on this entire field over the last 60 to 70 years. I am sure that the essence of this report will not take as long to implement as the MacPherson report and the legislation which followed. I think there was a time-frame of nine years from the time that commission was established in 1959 until we saw legislation in 1966, 1967 and 1968, some of which has not yet been proclaimed.

Now, less than 20 years later, we are again looking—as well we should as a parliament—at transportation needs and particularly at the grain handling system in western Canada. Only two years have gone by since the establishment of the Hall commission. It was established by a Liberal government through the auspices of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) in charge of the Wheat Board and his predecessor, the former member for Langelier when he was minister of transport. Therefore, two years have elapsed already since the commission was established. I know we are not going to have to wait another seven years, as was the record with the previous Conservative government commission.

The Conservatives' record in transportation is almost an enviable one because it is almost totally clean. The one accomplishment they had was to establish and appoint that MacPherson Commission. In their period of government, they never got around to doing very much about transportation, other than that one single step. Thus it is pretty difficult to go back and criticize that record, because it is so clean in that regard. They have done nothing; they have suggested nothing; they have proposed nothing; and, generally speaking, they have turned a blind eye to the economic facts of life in the country, as time has gone on and changed those economic facts.

The Minister of Transport pointed out in his remarks that they want greater subsidies in the east and greater subsidies in the west, and all the while they want reduced government expenditures—it is not supposed to cost any money. They do not want user-pay, and they do not want the user to know what is going on and what the economic facts of life are. It is not going to be difficult for the government and for the Minister of Transport to surpass the record of the opposition in transportation. It has already been done a number of times over.

The hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom) made reference to the history and the story behind the Hall Commission—where did it come from, why was it set up, and for what purposes did they go out and hold the tremendous series of hearings that they did across the prairie region? I would like to point out that it was two Liberal ministers and this government that established that commission, which did a fine job and gave us the finest report we have ever seen in transportation in the grain handling field. The report not only combines those aspects of it, but it also combines other social and economic aspects of western life. I am sure this report will be a blueprint for government action in that respect.

There was reference made to a number of the recommendations contained in the report. Some of the statements made and the recommendations deserve review and inclusion in the record to some extent. It is difficult to cover all of the things alluded to in this very comprehensive report. The commission members were to inquire into the rail needs of communities, and were to receive evidence from any person, interested agency, group or corporation. That was their mandate, and in that respect Chief Justice Hall and his fellow commissioners certainly carried out their mandate to the fullest. They had something like 15,000 people present at a wide variety of hearings, not only in the prairies but on the west coast as well. They did an excellent job in seeking opinions from western people concerned with every phase of the industry, from communities, from grain companies and so on.

Specifically they were to deal with the question of 6,283 miles of branch lines which had been proposed for abandonment. This followed designation by the Minister of Transport in December 1974 of 12,000 miles of rail network in western Canada as a so-called basic network. The idea was to set those lines out as being a permanent network regarding which there was no need for people, communities or grain companies to be concerned about their futures. The commission was established to look into the rail needs of communities on that 6,000 miles which was proposed for abandonment. It became operational; it did a very thorough job; it heard many, many people; and it heard many suggestions—indeed suggestions which have been made frequently in the past. Now we have them all compiled and built into the Hall Commission report.

It is a blueprint of the concerns and aspirations of western people, not only in the field of grain transportation but in other aspects as well. What did the Hall report say? It covered a wide variety of recommendations. Before looking to any great extent at what the Hall Commission said and what it recommended, we should briefly look at the conclusions of the previous royal commission, namely, the MacPherson Royal Commission.

The deterioration of the railroads took place as a result of the deficits which were the plague of the railroads. The MacPherson Commission concluded that railway deficits were due to three factors: the collective burdens of uneconomic branch lines, the unprofitable passenger services, and the insufficiency of the Crowsnest pass grain rates. Those factors prevented them from upgrading the system and updating the system.

I would like to look at some of the points made by the Hall Commission, as they conducted their work and wrote their report. When you look at the branch lines and the railway network in western Canada, you are not only looking at the railroads and grain movement, but you are also looking at the effect the abandonment of these lines will have, might have, or could have on the life of various communities concerned.

I would like to quote from page 79 of the Hall Commission report which reads as follows:

It is the people and the spirit of the people which gives the community viability, not the railways nor the elevators.

The commission does not doubt the psychological effect that the removal of the railway will have on many residents. Many of the inhabitants of affected communities will have already experienced the loss of such things as the livery barn, the steam train, the school, or the telephone exchange. Whether we deem the phasing out of these elements of community life to be signs of progress or not, it is a fact that these facilities were the victims of our developing technology and social change, unrelated to rail abandonment.

I believe that is a true statement and a rather strong statement. There are communities, however, which will be affected by abandonment and might not believe that statement. It has been one of the things which has caused a great deal of concern in western Canada to people in all walks of life, and not only farmers, when we discuss, debate or look at this whole question of rail rationalization—whether to abandon or not to abandon; on what terms to abandon; and so on. It was one of the questions which was difficult to resolve with respect to the 1967 act, when criteria were set out by which the CTC would judge whether or not to abandon a railway line. I am referring to the whole question of social and economic cost—how do you define it and how do you put a handle on it? The Hall Commission report stated that, as a group of people out there, we over-emphasized that particular aspect of this whole question of abandonment.

There are other aspects and quotes in the report which should be discussed. I notice the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain referred to the question of screenings—where those screenings are, what could happen to them, and where they should be. The report covers that particular subject. That has a relationship not only to the grain industry and the transportation industry, but also to the livestock industry. Referring to the cleaning of grain and screenings, the Hall Commission report at page 153 reads as follows:

Considerable discussion ensued at some hearings regarding the cleaning of grain and the use of screenings.

The report continues as follows:

On the average one out of every 40 cars of grain shipped is screenings. Whether this represents a loss of cheap feed to the prairie livestock producer or a windfall to the grain companies is open to question.

● (1740)

The report goes on to say at page 155:

Screenings represent a large quantity of product, the 28 million bushels produced is equivalent to the total record Churchill throughput of 1976.

I think that is a pretty interesting observation. It goes on to read:

These are hauled from the prairies at a cost to the transportation system and represent no return to the producer except as an unknown reduction in handling tariffs and as patronage dividends.

Again, with reference to the point made by the hon. member for Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain, the report states:

The interior government terminal elevators at Moose Jaw, Saskatoon, Edmonton, Lethbridge and Calgary have a combined cleaning capacity of 205 million bushels per year. These facilities are in place and it is a waste of existing resources if they are not fully utilized.

As I said, this report makes a number of observations in a great variety of areas that have been discussed before, and it is to be hoped that steps can be taken not only to recognize these facts but to try to do something about them.

A little later the report goes on to discuss further the aspects of the screenings. At page 158 and 159 it states the following:

6. All of the screenings produced in western Canada could be utilized in western Canada for livestock feed.

7. The screenings will be used for feed on the prairies when available and economics dictate.

8. In light of the alternatives presented, the cleaning of grain at inland facilities equipped to do so appears to offer the greatest flexibility of exploiting market opportunities.

Western grain and livestock producers are in an improved position and will realize maximum returns if grain cleaning is carried out at a location with free access to all markets.

Screenings now constitute a hidden tariff as far as the grain producer is concerned. This should not be so.

Equity between the handling of products from both the grain and the livestock industries has been a sore point with me for many years. I am aware of the reasons for the situation being as it is today, with the grain companies doing the cleaning with the facilities they have built at the ports, but it certainly seems to be one of the trends that has developed and that has not worked to the advantage of the western livestock industry.

With respect to livestock, the report sets out at page 277 two important principles. With respect to the economic development of the prairie region it states:

. . . the commission subscribes to the following principles:

(1) The prairie region of Canada is basically an exporting region, and hence a major contributor to Canada's favourable balance of payments position.

That is a point which needs to be stated and restated. The report goes on to read:

Current and future transportation policies should not detract from disposition but should recognize its importance in the national interest.

(2) The production and processing of agricultural products should take place in regions which enjoy natural locational advantages for such activities. Freight rates and other transport related policies should not destroy these natural locational advantages.

Again these are two points which certainly have the endorsation of all the western members and, I am sure, of members from other parts of the country, on both sides of the House.

On the question of livestock and equity between the livestock and grain industries, we find the following statement in the report at page 309:

The commission recommends that freight rates on livestock and meat be set at levels which do not discriminate against the natural locational advantage of prairie livestock producers and processors.

Then the report goes on to discuss malting plants, flour milling and so on with respect to the processing of western products.

At page 336 of the report there is another reference to statutory freight rates, and we find this statement:

How the difference between the new rate and the Crowsnest rate will be apportioned between the government and the producer is, of course, a matter for government decision. This commission feels that the government must continue to subsidize the transportation of export grain and that the whole cost, as deemed by the commission on the costs of transporting grain by rail, must not be imposed on the producer.

That recommendation will have the support of western members in any party.

As to how it will be implemented to bring equity between the livestock and grain industries—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that the time allotted to him has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

An hon. Member: Two minutes.

Mr. McIsaac: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I shall only take two or three minutes more.

I want to say in conclusion that I am very happy indeed with the recommendations contained in the report. I am particularly happy with the number of rail lines that were proposed to be transferred to the permanent network. There are some in my part of the province, and I can assure the Hall commission of the satisfaction with which those recommendations were received.

The establishment of a prairie rail authority is another recommendation that will serve to bring to western Canada some authority. Whether it is still linked with CTC or not remains to be decided, but certainly the authority and responsibility for those lines should be placed in western Canada.

I wish to express again appreciation to the official opposition for moving this motion to endorse the Hall report, and to say that this resolution certainly has my full support.

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, together with other members of the House I am indeed eager and happy to take part in this debate on the Hall Commission report. Coming from a riding such as mine where perhaps 75 per cent of all the agricultural grain products are exported, the recommendations of the Hall Commission are very important to me.

As I mentioned previously the problem of the rationalization of the grain handling industry is very real. One has only to go to the Palliser wheat growers' conventions or other such conventions to realize that, in comparing the ability of Canadians and Americans to move grain in approximately the same conditions, most experts would say that we are probably ten years behind the Americans. While this does not necessarily impair our ability to export grain, until we make the necessary rationalization and expenditures, western farmers will be at a disadvantage in comparison with their American counterparts who are their main competitors, particularly in periods of good crops and high production and a depression on world markets, which is the case at present.

I would like to confine my remarks primarily to the port of Churchill as an added outlet for prairie grain. Although I believe the most important part of the report deals with rationalization, I must say that in my part of Manitoba the outline given by the Hall report seems to be particularly good.

● (1750)

The export of grain is vital to the farmers of western Canada, and there are really four main avenues by which the grain can be exported to the world. The first and oldest has been via Thunder Bay-Montreal and through the St. Lawrence ports and the port of Halifax. That route still takes 55 per cent of export grain.

Another main avenue has been through the west coast ports of Vancouver and Prince Rupert. There have been problems with the mountainous terrain, snowslides, and general congestion caused by superimposing on a system built some years ago the burden of a flow of grain that has become much larger due to the increase in trade with the Pacific Rim countries.

A third route has been through Churchill, the oldest route by which trade reached the prairies from Europe. It is one that has not been exploited to its fullest.

The fourth route is to the south through the Mississippi River system. Many feel that perhaps that route would be the best, if not the cheapest, if politics had not cut off its use. I think a small amount of exports go that way; exports of flax, malting barley and, of course, more might go that way.

Events in Quebec have brought much more sharply into focus the possibility of exporting grain shipments through Churchill, should there be any change in the outlook in that province on the export of grain. Certainly the major grain companies have large installations on the St. Lawrence, but the premier of Quebec has indicated that he would attempt to use all the leverage possible to extract from the grain trade as high a toll as could be levied. He regards the St. Lawrence Seaway as being very important for his province in dealing with the rest of Canada with regard to trade and other problems.

The port of Churchill has never had a fair shake from the transportation autorities of Canada. It is obvious that transportation interests in Montreal have never wanted the port of Churchill to become an important shipping centre or to develop in even a modest way so that it might provide a reasonable alternative for the export of prairie grain, and one cannot particularly blame them for this.

Churchill was one of the first areas in western Canada which was a prominent base for Europeans. They established a port there in 1689, and a route from York Factory to Winnipeg flourished until the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is to the credit of western farmers that they recognized early the great mileage that could be saved by the use of this route. It is closer, incidentally, than Thunder Bay is to most of the prairie region areas. The saving from Regina to Liverpool via Churchill is 1,000 miles over the Thunder Bay-Montreal route.

As early as 1885 expeditions were sent to investigate the building of a railroad, and finally Sir Wilfrid Laurier promised the Hudson Bay Railway. The railway from The Pas to Churchill, interrupted by the war, was started in 1911, and finally reached Churchill in 1929. The weight of the steel originally used was 80 pounds, but this was upgraded to 100 pounds, and work to upgrade this is expected to be finished by next year.

At Churchill the capacity of the grain terminal is five million bushels. Due to ice, the navigation season is restricted to approximately three months, from mid-July to mid-October. In recent years other bulk commodities such as sulphur have been added to the list of exports.

The proximity of the port of Churchill to the many producers of northern Manitoba and Saskatchewan has led prairie people to push for greater utilization of the port. Indeed for many producers the port of Churchill is not much more than half the distance to Thunder Bay. The Hudson Bay Route Association has been instrumental in promoting greater use of Churchill, working, generally speaking, against the great indifference of the government, which is interested in preserving the port of Montreal.

The port of Churchill has certain disadvantages. One is that it is served only by the CNR and that there is no interchange of grain traffic to CP rail lines, although CP Rail is in the area. Studies undertaken by the two railways seem to indicate that there would be no savings brought about by the use of inter-rail exchanges. However, this seems to be doubtful, and one wonders if the railways conveniently found a way out because they were not interested in providing a true statement of what the situation was.

The Dominion Marine Association, based in Montreal, also strongly stated that the utilization of Churchill had reached its limit and that funds should be directed elsewhere to improve the efficiency of western Canadian grain shipments. However, I think they were definitely biased.

There are several pluses already going for the virtues of Churchill grain shipments. First, the CN rail line is in position and will soon be able to accommodate 100-ton hopper cars. Second, the Churchill terminal, with a five million bushel capacity, and almost as large as the largest anywhere in the country, is in good condition. However, it needs improved gallery belt capacity. In the 1976 season it handled 28 million bushels of grain, or a ratio of 6 to 1 in a three-month period. Improved technology could further eliminate the risk of ice. Furthermore, increases in Seaway tolls, or shipping disturbances in Montreal would make the Churchill route an attractive proposition.

Better sales planning by the Canadian Wheat Board and the filling of the terminal with clean grain would aid grain movements. Furthermore, the CP Rail study indicates that a saving of 762,000 loaded car miles over Thunder Bay is possible through interchanges, one at Tisdale and one at Yorkton, that is, interchanges between the CN and the CP.

There are some constraints. Cargo and haul insurance is still the same as that charged since 1956, even though technology has improved immensely since then. There are also constraints on the delivery system over the CNR, with the need for sidings on the Herchner and Thicket subdivisions, and a long track at Churchill. This would seem to indicate that with the use of hopper cars the rail capacity could be increased to 55 million bushels annually.

There was a great deal of dismay in western Canada when it was announced that the CN would not upgrade its work this year. That work had been planned for this part of the track. Obviously CN management, based in Montreal, has no concept of the needs of the western region, and I think CN did a great disservice to western Canadians when the management in Winnipeg was transferred to Montreal some years ago.

Furthermore, handling capacity could be increased by the use of pre-cleaned grain. The tight shipping schedule has limited the type and variety of grades to one or two. Also, some dredging and increased gallery conveyor capacity would accommodate considerably more use of the port of Churchill.

All of these are improvements which could be carried out with relatively small expenditure increases, when we consider some of the expenditures which are now undertaken. From the western Canadian point of view the administration set up—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It being six o'clock I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock.

At 6 p.m. the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

Mr. Ritchie: Mr. Speaker, before the dinner recess I was about to mention the difficulties of the Port of Churchill having to make representations to the National Harbours Board through the same persons as those responsible for Montreal and Thunder Bay. Obviously Churchill will get short shrift.

The great port of Churchill which is very important to the autonomy and the independence and stability of exports of western Canadian grain, could also be used for sulphur, potash and other commodities. With the cost of transportation rising—and probably it will rise more steeply than other factors in the years to come—every effort must be made to ensure that our transportation resources are applied in the most effective and efficient manner. It should not be possible for the interests of the port of Montreal to hamper increases in transportation of grain that could be brought through the Churchill route.

Furthermore, the general feeling is that coal and other bulk products will overload the railway system in the next few years so that it may not be possible to ship all grain needed on the railway lines, at least when it is most opportune. Western premiers at their recent conference in Brandon called for the increased use of Churchill.

It seems important also that the provincial government of Manitoba, either by itself or in conjunction with the province of Saskatchewan, should proceed with the road to Churchill. The highway is already in place for much of the way. I understand that, from an engineering point of view, construction of the highway for the last 200 miles or so would be fairly easy.

The grain growing area, starting at The Pas in Manitoba and some of the Interlake country, would be less than 500 miles away, and when it is considered that trucking in the United States carries grain 800 to 1,000 miles in competition with the railways, a highway would make some good sense. Further, due to the long winter months and the freezing of the ground, the restraint factor on truck loads would not be nearly as great as it would be farther south. No doubt the shipping season at Churchill could be extended substantially. According to the most modest forecasts it could be increased 27 per cent. If icebreakers could be used, as in the St. Lawrence Seaway where the port of Montreal is, all year round, it seems likely that the shipping season could last six months.

The use of the port of Churchill has not been without its problems. CN rail lines have provided the port with its only rail service. This has meant that grain has been retained in northern Manitoba and north eastern Saskatchewan until the opening of the Churchill shipping season. The result has been that many farmers have been unable to deliver their quotas of grain until almost a year after their harvest and this has created hardships.

The Hall Commission seems to have worked out a logical solution to much of this problem. The idea of shipping precleaned grain to Churchill has much to commend it, and the use of Saskatoon and a new facility at Yorkton for carrying clean grain to Churchill would make a great deal of sense. It is estimated that the throughput of grain could be increased so that between 55 million and 60 million bushels could be put through with very little trouble.

The plan would also mean that CP rail blocks in the area would contribute to the total quantity of grain available for shipment. It is estimated that the area served would produce 240 million bushels so that, even if 60 million bushels were shipped from Churchill, the inconvenience of delayed quotas would be restricted. As well, the Saskatoon government terminal for cleaning grain is presently underutilized and the Hall Commission feels it could provide 30 million bushels of clean grain for Churchill during the season.

I am most intrigued by the possibility of Yorkton elevators providing another 30 million bushels of clean grain. It would have been nice to have the facility in Dauphin; I appreciate that that locality perhaps is not the most advantageous spot for it. Both railways would serve the Yorkton facility. In addition, the Hall Commission suggested that the use of screening in the general area of livestock feeding would be of advantage. The present situation has always seemed rather ridiculous. Dockage for which farmers are not paid is hauled to market and farmers are penalized for added weight. That is ridiculous.

I believe one of the factors militating against the enthusiastic use of Churchill has been this: if the grain handling companies send grain to Churchill, they deprive their terminals at Thunder Bay of revenue. Perhaps some way may be found whereby grain handling companies could have a share in the revenue accruing from the use of Churchill.

It also occurs to me that, instead of the Canadian government building the new elevator at Yorkton, one of the grain handling companies, private or co-operative, or even, hopefully, a consortium of both could build it. Although some resist hauling the grain long distances, many farmers would be happy to haul to a central terminal in Yorkton, say, particularly if the added efficiency of the handling system were compensated for in the prices received for haulage and convenience of delivery.

The use of Churchill is a symbol to the grain growers of the eastern prairies. Mr. McMillan, a farmer, had this to say at the annual meeting of the Hudson Bay Route Association:

If I am to increase my production, as I am being urged to do for moral and humanitarian reasons, and in the process, maintain a viable farm enterprise, it is essential that I have adequate port outlets to accommodate this increased tonnage. The Port of Churchill has the potential and strategic location to be such an export outlet.

A further indication of the thinking of many westerners on the value of the Churchill route can be noted in resolution 6, passed at the 33rd annual convention of the Hudson Bay Route Association held in Regina on June 21 and 22, 1976. It states:

WHEREAS a successful movement of 30 million bushels of grain through Churchill during the 1976 shipping season, could mean an extra 3 to 4½ million dollars for western grain producers and the western economy, and

WHEREAS the imposition and increase in tolls on the St. Lawrence Seaway soon to be imposed, will make the strategically located port of Churchill the most advantageous, competitive and rewarding eastward facing port for the export of western Canada grain.

THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED THAT this 1976 convention of the Hudson Bay Route Association go on record as requesting the Government of Canada, its agents, grain merchants and others involved to prepare and execute action to maximize grain shipments through Churchill over the longest possible season.

I hope the government will soon put that resolution into effect.

Hon. Jack H. Horner (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in the debate on the recommendations of the Hall Commission on Grain Handling and Transportation. First, however, may I say how pleased I was this afternoon to hear the right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) speak. I was greatly pleased because I saw a revival of spirit within the Conservative party. It was a grand old party, a party I once upheld greatly. I have been feeling somewhat sad lately because the present leader and the party seem to be in such a shambles. This afternoon the party seemed to rally around that grand Canadian who addressed the House on the question we are debating. That pleased me greatly. I think the House saw a little of the old form which Mr. Diefenbaker used to show in this House.

Some hon. Members: Order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I suggest that the minister should refer to members of this House by riding, not by their personal names.

Mr. Horner: Mr. Speaker, I stand corrected.

Mr. Mazankowski: This is the minister's maiden speech from the opposite side of the House.

Mr. Horner: The right hon. gentleman spoke in many debates; this afternoon we saw him in his old form again. For a minute or two I saw a little glimpse of the spirit of the Conservative party which has not been evident in recent months, or even recent years. Apparently the Conservative party, not having been able to develop policies on anything, are greatly pleased because they discovered in the last weeks two reports they could endorse. Someone is making policy for them. That, too, has enhanced their spirit. Finally they have found someone who can make a policy for them.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): How are you getting along with your new buddy, Otto Lang?

Mr. Horner: As I listened to the right hon. gentleman and the hon. member from Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain (Mr. Hamilton) I wanted to hear some suggestions for solutions, or some suggestions regarding the Hall report, but neither of those hon. members dealt with the Hall report to any great extent.

Mr. Whelan: Shame!

Mr. Horner: The right hon. gentleman from Prince Albert mentioned the railway to the north. It will not move much wheat for a year or two to Hay Lake. But you never know; it might. Really, I do not think Mr. Justice Hall went very far outside his terms of reference. He heard briefs from all over the prairies. Prairie people have always been interested in all parts of Canada and in developing Canada. No doubt some of them suggested building railways to the north, and no doubt Mr. Justice Hall examined the 13-volume study on that question.

No speaker opposite really dealt with the Prairie Rail Authority, or the 2,165 miles of track which is to be abandoned immediately. Nobody said that that was too much or not enough. I suppose, since 90 per cent of the track up for abandonment in the province of Alberta is in the constituency of Crowfoot, I could be excused for being vitally interested in the track which will be abandoned between the present and 1980. Actually, I am interested in the 2,344 miles of track which is to come under the Prairie Rail Authority. I wanted to hear the opposition speak on this. Is that enough track, or too much? Should the Prairie Rail Authority be a self-liquidating board? Should it go out of existence in 1990 as Mr. Justice Hall suggests? Should it have only a term life of some 12 years? The opposition does not know, although Mr. Justice Hall himself suggested that. The opposition has not directed its attention to that question. My opinion on that question is yes, it should have a term life. However, other speakers may express their views on this question.

Should that rail authority be a three-man board, as Mr. Justice Hall suggests, appointed by the federal government, or should some provinces have some representation on that board? It would have to be worked out with the provinces as to whether it should be other than a three-man board and whether there should be some provincial repesentation on it. Hall suggests that when a main track in the 2,300 miles is up for abandonment a provincial representative should sit in on those hearings as well as a municipal representative. You do not develop expertise in railroads in that way. You do not get a continuing knowledge being carried from one abandonment to the other. If that were the case, it would happen in the next 12 years with regard to the 2,344 miles. I do not think that is the best solution.

It would be better to have a larger board to start with, which has some provincial representation on it. I say that because much of the duties of the prairie rail authority will be to direct funds to either a highway, railway, railway maintenance or, as Hall says, the upgrading and rehabilitation of a railway track. It would be better to have knowledgeable people continue to sit on the board.

● (2020)

While the Hall Commission report is terrific and may well become the bible for prairie transport problems, it is not the absolute answer to all questions. It leaves many questions unanswered. I have mentioned a few with regard to the prairie rail authority.

I say to my friends in the Conservative party that the government does not have all the answers. We would like them to assist by offering suggestions rather going back to the year 1962.

Mr. Mazankowski: What is the role of the opposition, Jack?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Where is the speech you used to make in opposition?

Mr. Horner: Some members of the official opposition tend to live in the past.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Horner: The hon. member for Dauphin (Mr. Ritchie) referred to the port of Churchill. I concur in much of what he said in that regard. The Hall report suggests a terminal elevator at Yorkton to clean the grain. That is a good suggestion, one that is worthy of a great deal of study. I can assure prairie producers that the government will take a long hard look at that suggestion.

The suggestion that there be a CP hook-up for CP rail cars to go to Churchill is good. If any saving can be made in the transportation of grain, it should be looked at.

There has been no mention of the Hall report suggestion of a northern development authority in Alberta. That is a very novel idea. I believe it agrees with the thinking of the Alberta government. Therefore it is worthy of a great deal of merit.

I would like to see the northern development railway have a hook-up with the BC railroad. It should be used primarily to feed the Prince Rupert port which could then be used to greater extent.

The Hall report suggests a greater utilization of cars. His findings with regard to car utilization and the car cycle have been clearly evident for some time. The railroads, the government and the grain industry would welcome any constructive suggestions to speed up the car cycle. The cars sit on the railway track 25 per cent of the time empty, and 27 per cent of the time full. The report says that while they are sitting, they are not working. The complete cycle takes too long. The cars ought to be moving in some direction.

The fundamental problem of getting grain into Vancouver has long been known to me and to many prairie people. There is a very interesting recommendation in the Hall report, at page 223. It deals with the Fraser River Bridge problem. It is owned by the government, but the controller of the traffic on that bridge is a despatcher out of Seattle. If what Hall says at page 223 is true, a lot of improvements could be made in that direction. It would improve the car utilization problem a great deal.

Mr. Hall dealt with the Crow rates. Many members spoke about them. Anyone who knows anything of my political history knows that I have defended them throughout the 19 years I have been in this House. I will, of course, continue to defend them.

The Hall report does not really give an answer with regard to what should be done about moving finished products. At page 309 he says they should move at the same rate, but he does not say how a railway should be provided with the revenue and what effect this will have on the finished products. At page 309 the report states:

> The Commission recommends that freight rates on livestock and meat be set at levels which do not discriminate against the natural locational advantage of prairie livestock producers and processors.

What do the words "natural locational advantage" mean? How do you arrive at that? How do you maintain that? If the opposition has any solutions to offer to that problem, they would be welcomed on this side of the House.

The report refers to a terminal rail authority. However, Mr. Hall tends to reject the terminal rail authority, preferring a controller with power. There is really a very fine difference indeed. I would think that a permanent rail authority directing traffic into and out of Vancouver would have some power. A controller with power might well turn out to be a terminal rail authority. He really does not define how that power should be exercised, whether it would have authority over all commodities going into Vancouver, or just grain.

The report talks of a railway to the north, something that is particularly pleasing to me. The hon. member for Kingston and the Islands (Miss MacDonald) and the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) agree on one thing at least, a railroad to the north. I find it interesting to see them agree on that.

There are many other questions that arise out of the Hall report. There is the whole question of the malting barley business and how to develop the processing business in western Canada without some kind of subsidy. The report does not go into that.

This is a very good report on railway problems in western Canada and on the movement of western Canadian goods to export markets. However, there are still many questions yet to be answered. I will be particularly pleased to help answer some of these problems when they come up.

I am pleased that the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) has said that he is prepared to accept the abandonment of the 2,165 miles, and that the other 2,344 miles will be safeguarded until January, 1979. That gives the government ample time to discuss with the prairie governments the feasibility of setting up a Prairie Rail Authority, and whether that rail authority should handle the abandonment or upgrading of the 2,344 miles which Hall leaves in a state of limbo until 1990.

● (2030)

These questions will come up, for example, whether or not that rail authority should have the right to restrict the location of elevators along those lines. Some of the elevator companies are not too happy about that, and I note that members opposite have not given any clear expression of their views with regard to it. I believe the rail authority should have a great deal to say as to the location of these elevators on that 2,344 miles, but I have some reservations as to whether it should be the final authority.

In any case, I want to say that Mr. Hall has done western Canada a great service. He has produced a document which will enable the government to move forward with a transport policy which will greatly help the region. If we can iron out some of the difficulties which we see and which Mr. Hall sees, I believe the west will be well served.

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, I, too, welcome the opportunity to enter this debate on the motion of my right hon. friend from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) whom I commend for his excellent presentation.

I am pleased to follow the maiden speech of the latest addition to the Liberal cabinet, the Minister without Portfolio, my hon. friend from Crowfoot (Mr. Horner). I was most interested in his comments about certain policy positions taken by the Progressive Conservative party. I have in mind particularly his reference to the absence of policy within this party in the area of transport. Most members of the House recognize that the hon. gentleman himself had a lot to do with the position taken by this party in the area of transport, and if there is any absence of policy it should be pointed out that in that area the blame rests squarely on his shoulders.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Mazankowski: I must say we probably learned more about his reaction to the Hall Commission Report than we did from the two previous speakers for the government. I am not sure whether he was expressing the government's view, but at least we know from his presentation that he finds some good points in the report as well as some bad points. It is hard, though, to determine whether he is for or against the principal recommendations in the report. Indeed he raises more questions than he answers. Possibly, for clarification of the points raised both by him and by members on this side, what is required is a reference to a committee where some of these questions could be examined further.

I wish to associate myself with other members who have spoken in commending the work of Mr. Justice Hall and his fellow commissioners on what I consider to be a thorough and comprehensive analysis of grain handling and transportation in western Canada. In addition to examining those particular fields the Commission has gone further by taking into consideration certain fundamental social and economic questions. We have learned from the report that in spite of the attitude taken by the government to western Canada there is still a sense of optimism there, and faith in the future of the region. This document may well become a charter for the economic development of western Canada founded upon our most important industry, that of agriculture. It might even be described as a "Way Ahead" for western Canada. That future depends primarily, of course, on government actions with respect to the major recommendations in the report.

We in western Canada realize that the aspirations of westerners in seeking redress with respect to transportation inequities, fairer treatment within Confederation, and increased potential for economic development, have for too long been based upon hope followed by a series of letdowns. There have been nothing but raised expectations followed by disappointments and frustrations. One of the most recent of these disappointments was the Western Economic Conference which was conceived as an act of political necessity. Many of the promises made at that conference remain unfulfilled to this day and we see in this very report which we are debating tonight a repetition of commitments which were made at WEOC, for example, the importance attached to the increased utilization of the port of Churchill. This was agreed upon at the Western Economic Opportunities Conference.

Then there is the recommendation for increased utilization of the port of Prince Rupert. Again, this was agreed upon at WEOC and repeated in the Hall Report. Hon. members will have seen the recommendation with regard to the Ascroft-Clinton rail link. This was not only agreed to at the conference but had been promised by the former minister of transport in this Chamber, in committee, and on the hustings on various occasions. We now find it in the recommendations contained in the report of the Hall Commission.

It was agreed at the conference to identify and remove discriminatory freight rates, for so long the plague of Western Canada. Once again this is the subject of a recommendation in the Hall Report. The establishment of freight rate groupings was another promise made at the conference. It was a recognition that freight rates have a direct effect on the economy of western Canada especially with regard to the processing of agricultural products. This was one of the commitments made by the government at the Western Economic Conference and it is summarized in a document called "A Report on the Western Economic Opportunities Conference." This is what the premiers of the western provinces said:

> In our judgment the greatest single impediment standing in the way of development of Western Canada's full potential is transportation freight rates which discriminate against the West. That discrimination is occurring at present under the National Transportation Act and we seek a change in that Act to remove discrimination against the West. We believe the federal government agrees with us that freight rate discrimination against the West should be removed and we believe we have received an undertaking from the federal government to do that.

Well, new transportation legislation has been introduced this session. Some will say that it provides a mechanism by which to overcome the anomalies and inequities mentioned. But if we are to believe the words of the Minister without Portfolio there is really little hope that this will be the case. Speaking on that bill as a private member from this side of the House he said:

I believe this legislation takes the government from the mess it was in and puts it in another mess.

If that is an accurate description of this piece of legislation we really do not have much to look forward to.

If the government had fulfilled the commitments it made at the Western Economic Opportunities Conference the Commission's report would have been altogether different in terms of its contents and its recommendations. I believe very profoundly that if the major recommendations of the Hall report are implemented it could very well serve as a catalyst to propelling the west into its mature stage of economic development. This is why we on this side feel so strongly about this report and have brought it forth for debate. It is an important issue and we feel there should be no delay in the implementation of this report.

● (2040)

We believe there is a time for decision and a time for action, and that the action should take place here in the House of Commons. We do not need any more conferences, studies, task forces or other groups. We have had Snavely, Hall, and WEOC. The time has now come for action. It is not the responsibility of the opposition to initiate that action; it is the responsibility of the government to take action to implement the recommendations of the Hall report. I want to reinforce that contention as strongly as I can.

In his contribution to the debate this afternoon the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) made quite a political speech. He cited all the so-called good things which he has done for the west, and then he turned around and blamed the Conservatives for the fact that western Canada is mad at him. He spoke about a number of things, but he also omitted to mention a few others. He failed to mention the LIFT program. He failed to mention that his government followed a bible of agricultural policy known as the "Task Force Report on Agriculture," which was written by a group of economists, professors and accountants, and did not include one farmer. The major thrust of the agricultural policy of the former minister of agriculture came from that document. Out of it came the LIFT program, the stabilization program, and the marketing bill which caused a great deal of consternation across the country. The minister also failed to recognize that the second stabilization program which was brought in was a much improved version of the first one which he tried to ram through the House, attempting to buy off the western farmers using their own money in doing so.

The minister did say something positive and concrete, however. He announced that 1,813 miles of the 6,283 miles of line up for review will be transferred to the basic network, and that the freeze on 2,344 miles has been extended to January 1, 1979. We welcome that announcement.

We might ask, Mr. Speaker, why did we have a royal commission on this particular issue in the first place? The fact on the matter is that the commission was set up essentially to review and to sort out the 6,283 miles of branch line which were placed in the questionable category. The decision had to be made which lines should remain as part of the basic network and which lines should be abandoned. It was not an easy task. Because it was not an easy task and because it was an issue which was politically too hot to handle, the government decided to choose a royal commission to do the job. This royal commission has now brought forth its recommendations, among which is the recommendation that 2,165 miles of line be abandoned.

There is no question that the abandonment of these lines will cause a great deal of hardship to a number of communities and producers. There is no question that some areas have been dealt with rather harshly. But we have to recognize that rationalization on the part of the elevator and grain companies was taking place anyway, so that the blame cannot be laid solely upon the railways.

I am also concerned about the continuing uncertainty regarding the 2,344 miles of line which will be administered by the Prairie Rail Authority. Here too the grain companies will have a very large part to play in the success or failure of those particular lines.

Be that as it may, I think the commission approached this whole problem of abandonment in the most humane way possible. They tried to minimize the pain, distortion, and disruption which will take place as a result of the abandonment of these lines. The minister expresses concern about added costs. It should be pointed out that, as a result of the abandonment proposed by Mr. Justice Hall, elimination of these lines will result in a considerable saving to taxpayers. If I may quote from the Western Producer of May 19:

The elimination of some 2,160 miles of branch line railways in western Canada will save the Canadian taxpayers about $400 million, Chief Commissioner Emmett Hall told a May 16 press conference in Saskatoon following tabling of the grain handling and transportation commission report—

Rather significantly, the Western Producer goes on to say:

Regarding the federal government's proposal to build an additional 2,000 grain hopper cars at a cost of $80 million, Mr. Hall said while these may be needed some time in future, they are only "make work" projects for eastern industries and do not represent one additional dollar of revenue for western Canada.

We get the impression that it is all right to spend taxpayers' money in eastern and central Canada—the minister concurs with that—but he is very worried about subsidization of the Crow rate as it applies to western Canada. It is a very strange way for a minister from western Canada to react. More important, the report has come forth with some very positive proposals to improve and rationalize the grain handling and transportation system, a system which has deteriorated and become antiquated over the years. Certainly rationalization and improvement are long overdue.

Some will suggest that the commission went beyond its terms of reference. As a matter of fact the Minister without Portfolio, who has just spoken said he did not consider that the Hall commission went beyond its terms of reference. The Minister of Transport suggested that perhaps it did. Whatever opinion we choose to listen to, the fact of the matter is that as Canadians, and particularly as parliamentarians, we should be extremely grateful for the work Mr. Justice Hall and his fellow commissioners carried out. Unlike any other commission, this is probably the first time that we have had a grassroots opinion documented in such a comprehensive way. Perhaps it is the most democratic report ever documented. But because it is a grassroots report which has been prepared in the most democratic fashion possible is no reason why the report should be suppressed or smothered by politicians or bureaucrats.

In large measure the major contents of this report clash with present government policy. The report alludes to many important aspects of the grain trade, and furthermore it covers many important aspects of the potential economic future of western Canada. As has been pointed out previously, the report reaffirms the principle of statutory rates. I should like to place on the record a passage in the Hall commission report at page 545 which states this recommendation in very clear and concise terms:

The Commission recommends:

(1) The retention of the Crow's Nest statutory rates.

Not the "statutory rates", Mr. Speaker, but the "Crowsnest statutory rates".

(2) That the difference between the statutory rate and the cost of transporting grain be paid directly to the railways.

The wording is clear and concise and beyond question.

Secondly, what this report does is destroy what I refer to as the "Lang user-pay concept". I think it knocks that concept full of holes.

● (2050)

The report has exposed the failure of the Canadian Transport Commission to hold the railways responsible in the maintenance of their branch lines and in the administration of their subsidies. It has pointed out the fact that the Canadian Transport Commission has failed to compel the railways to carry out repairs and to provide the kind of service which was their responsiblity under the provisions of the Railway Act. It also points out that the Canadian Transport Commission refused to provide certain pertinent information to the commission. I think the minister should take a very close look at that because I believe the Canadian Transport Commission is not only compelled to provide this information, but it agreed to do so. That was a commitment which was made by the president of the Canadian Transport Commission before a committee of this House of Commons.

The Commission cites the failure of the railway to discharge its responsibilities. I would like to quote page 23 which reads as follows:

The Commission views with concern the action of the railway to render service in keeping with the convenience of the carrier rather than service as required by the public and in keeping with the intent of the laws of the land.

There is nothing new in that. It has been stated over and over again in this House and in committee. That is another area which needs some quick and serious attention. The Commission confirmed the fact that transportation must be a tool for economic development. In my view, regional disparities will continue to grow, unless deliberate efforts are made to reduce them. One of the logical tools for achieving a reduction of those regional disparities is by providing a fair and equitable transportation system—efficient, effective and safe.

I want to emphasize the fact that the commission made specific reference to the treatment of the malting industry, the flour industry, the rapeseed industry, and the livestock processing industry. I am not going to quote the pertinent sections because at page 534 of the report it is clearly documented. In all cases the commission emphasized the fact that the production and processing of agricultural products should take place in the regions of this country which have a natural geographic advantage for such activities. It is rather odd that the Minister without Portfolio finds that unclear. It simply points out that if you are going to process rapeseed in Canada it should be processed where it is grown. That is what Mr. Hall was saying. He is suggesting the same thing with the flour industry and the same thing with the malting industry.

I am not sure what the minister intends to do with one particular recommendation. Perhaps it is an area that can be considered by the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications. I am referring to the very important recommendation having regard to the Prairie Rail Authority. This body will be a very important mechanism in determining the future of the 2,344 miles which are still under review—whether they will fall into one class or another. The unfortunate part of the 2,344 miles is the fact that there will be a period of uncertainty as to whether the line will stay or whether it will go. As the minister who spoke before me indicated, it may very well be logical to establish a prairie rail authority which has continuing powers similar to the CTC.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. He may continue with unanimous consent. Does the hon. member have the unanimous consent of the House?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I shall not abuse the courtesy of the House. I appreciate being given the opportunity to conclude my remarks.

The recommendations having regard to the improved rail car utilization are very valid and could be acted upon very quickly. Utilization of the inland government terminals is certainly a very valid and worthy consideration. A controller with power, as described at page 222, is another important consideration. An improved co-ordination of the rail operation in the port of Vancouver, which has become a serious bottleneck, is another important consideration.

The commission points out that railways must be compensated for delivering reasonable service, but in turn the railways must accept their responsibility in ensuring that service is provided with all reasonable dispatch; that lines are maintained and upgraded in a safe and functioning condition; and that the basic infrastructure remains solid and on a good foundation. This is certainly an area we must act upon because most of us who come from western ridings will realize railways have not discharged their responsibilities as they are obligated to do under the provisions of the Railway Act. Someone must be in a position of authority to ensure that that service is carried out on behalf of the western farmers, and indeed on behalf of all Canadians.

In summary, this report in many ways highlights the failure of the government to come up with feasible and equitable policies for western Canada to achieve its legitimate aspirations. The report suggests, and in fact may even demand, that it is time we in this House realize it is the responsibility of the government to take the initiative. I am sure it will find support on this side. It is time the government recognized the shortcomings which have plagued western Canadians and set out to establish and proclaim a new industrial strategy for western Canada based upon the recommendations of the Hall Report.

Mr. Speaker, we have the report. It is the responsibility and the duty of the government to respond, to act, and to do this without political motivations. I would hope it would do this as required and not simply for political maximization. It is time for decision. The report should not be allowed to gather dust. The government must not procrastinate. It is a grass roots report. The Commission has patiently and diligently sought out all those who wanted to be heard, and now it is the duty of the government to act. I am sure if it acts it will find this side of the House will support it in overcoming the barriers, the inequities, the discriminations, and the shortcomings of the transportation system which is so vitally important to the future and the economic lifeblood of western Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, the report of the commission headed by Mr. Justice Hall dealing with grain and rail in western Canada is similar to the earlier report of the commission headed by Mr. Justice Hall which dealt with health services. The report's recommendations will play an important role in the life of western Canada for generations to come.

We in the New Democratic Party support the basic principles which Mr. Justice Hall and his commission recommended. That is why we support the motion put down by the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker). Realizing the complexity of the many recommendations made by the Commission, we have singled out three particular aspects of the recommendations: first, that the Crowsnest rates be maintained; second, that the principle of the Crowsnest rates be extended to agricultural products processed in western Canada; third, that the utilization of the ports of Churchill and Prince Rupert be increased.

I believe that the Hall Commission has laid down a new socio-economic charter for western Canada. It has told both the federal government and the railways what their responsibilities are and what is required to redress the wrongs which have been done to western Canada over almost a century. What has the Commission said? It has said that it wants the retention and even the expansion of the Crowsnest freight rate. I know that there are some members of the House, and certainly many people in Canada, who do not know what the Crowsnest agreement was. So, for their information, let me summarize what that agreement says.

The agreement, made in 1897 between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the Government of Canada, had three main provisions. First, the company agreed to build a railway line from Lethbridge to Nelson, B.C., crossing the Rockies through the Crowsnest pass. Second, the government agreed to subsidize the line to the extent of $11,000 per mile, which worked out to a total of $3,400,000. Third, the company agreed to reduce freight rates on certain specified commodities between eastern and western Canada, the most important of which were grain and flour eastbound to the lakehead for export and farm implements westbound to the prairies. In return, the company received a land subsidy from the government of B.C. for building part of the line, and the deal with Ottawa made it possible for CPR to take advantage of that deal. The CPR estimated before the MacPherson Commission some years ago that the revenue it received from Cominco, which was on land which the CPR got as a result of that deal since Cominco was formed as a company in 1906, amounted to almost $250 million. If you calculate what they have taken in since then, you arrive at a figure of over $350 million.

So anybody who thinks that the CPR got taken is, of course, completely wrong, and we see no reason why the CPR, having made a deal from which they did very well at the expense of the people of Canada, should not be required to continue with that deal. We think, therefore, it is reasonable that the statutory rates be continued. My colleague, the hon. member for Yorkton-Melville (Mr. Nystrom), dealt with that earlier this afternoon.

The commission also said that the responsibility for the future use of prairie rail lines should be taken away from the railways and the Ottawa based Canadian Transport Commission and given to a separate prairie based organization. We support that. We have been, to say the least, critical of the somewhat incestuous relationship which we believe has continued for far too long between the railways and the CTC.

Lastly, the Commission recommended that western Canada get a better opportunity to diversify and expand its economic base. I want to spend most of the time which I have left dealing with that last recommendation, but before I do that I think we should get something clear. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) and the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Horner) have spoken about how they agree with the recommendations made by Mr. Justice Hall. It is pretty obvious, as one reads the report and its recommendations, that the commission is against the user-pay transportation policy which has been enunciated and argued for by the Minister of Transport since he took over that portfolio. The commission is saying that grain is such an essential key to the country's future prosperity that its transportation must be subsidized by the people of Canada as a whole.

It is interesting to compare the recommendations of the Hall Commission with the recommendations made by the four western premiers, coming from different political parties, which they made after the Western Economic Opportunities Conference a few years ago. Those recommendations, despite early endorsement by the then minister of transport who said publicly that transportation in Canada was a mess, have been almost completely ignored by the present Minister of Transport and the government. I think it is ludicrous for the Minister of Transport to be saying now that he accepts the recommendations of the Hall Commission when in fact he has been ignoring those same recommendations which have been made by the western premiers.

As I said, I want to deal in the main with one aspect of the recommendations made by the Hall Commission, that is, the recommendations made in the field of economic development. The key recommendation is summarized in Mr. Justice Hall's report on page 277, and I want to read just the paragraph in which he summarizes the principle in which he believes and which he recommends. Then I want to give some of the reasons and some illustrations of why he came to the conclusion which he did. This is what he said at page 277 of the report:

(2) The production and processing of agricultural products should take place in regions which enjoy natural locational advantages for such activities. Freight rates and other transport related policies should not destroy these natural locational advantages.

It is not surprising to me that in a country as large in geography as Canada ministers of transport who were elected from other regions of Canada, particularly those who came from Ontario or Quebec, should not understand the needs of western Canada or indeed of Atlantic Canada, and should not promote policies which would be helpful and advantageous to western Canada. But it constantly amazes me how this Minister of Transport, coming as he does from the province of Saskatchewan, should have consistently, and almost from the day on which he took office as Minister of Transport, enunciated and put forward policies which have been and are detrimental to western Canada. One needs only to read quickly through this chapter of the Hall Commission report on economic development and to compare what he says with what the minister has been doing to see how correct I am in what I am saying.

Mr. Hall pointed out that an analysis of the freight rate structure confirms that the prairie provinces have been victimized by discriminatory freight rates from the beginning. It goes on in this chapter to show in detail how that discrimination has continued right until today. He says:

Since early development the thrust has been to move raw materials to industrial central Canada for refinement and consumption . . .

The continuous shift of an ever increasing proportion of the population to urban central Canada has been aggravated by the retention of policies which favour maintaining the west as a source of raw goods, and carrying out processing next to the populous centres of the east.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

• (2110)

That population drift has continued for generations in western Canada, certainly in the three prairie provinces, with the exception of the period since the discovery of major oil and gas in the province of Alberta. It has continued at a slower or faster rate in the last 25 or 30 years regardless of what parties formed the governments of the provinces of Manitoba and Saskatchewan. In the last couple of years there has been a slight increase in population in each of these provinces, but in fact we have had a continuous movement out of Saskatchewan and Manitoba because of this discrimination against the west with regard to freight rates.

Mr. Justice Hall found that the application of certain government programs, Canadian Wheat Board selling practices and ancillary rate charges have offset the natural geographic advantage which western flour mills should enjoy. One of the natural or locational advantages of locating a flour mill near the source of wheat is the reduced need for storage, Mr. Justice Hall points out, yet despite that the flour milling industry has increasingly been located in eastern Canada. So the commission recommends that the flour milling industry in Canada be permitted to enjoy the natural geographic advantage of locating in western Canada.

The Commission also recommends that railway policies and Wheat Board policies which discriminate against western Canada be discontinued. The Commission was referring to policies which have been continued all during the time that the present Minister of Transport has been in office.

Then the Commission goes on to analyze what has happened with regard to the processing of rapeseed. At page 287 of the Commission's report we learn that the cost of moving 100 pounds of rapeseed from Lethbridge to Montreal is 70.5 cents per hundred pounds and that the cost of moving the equivalent amount of oil and meal is calculated to be 90.2 cents. This difference of 19.7 cents makes it advantageous to move the rapeseed before it is processed. I could go on and on. The Commission recommends that freight rates on rapeseed and its derivatives be set at levels which do not discriminate against the natural locational advantage of prairie rapeseed crushers.

Then the Commission deals with the question of livestock and with the subsidies on moving feed grain. It points out that the feed grain assistance program has consistently been to the advantage of eastern Canada and British Columbia and against the interests of prairie grain producers. It points out that transport subsidies such as the feed grain assistance program encourage the shipment of feed grains rather than livestock or livestock products from the prairies to eastern Canada and British Columbia. That is what Mr. Justice Hall was talking about when he suggested that the processing of agricultural products be encouraged to develop near where the agricultural products are grown.

Then the Commission talks about the shipment of livestock and the advantages of shipping live cattle compared with the disadvantage to western Canada of first processing the meat.

Then the Commission goes into the question of the malting industry, and it recommends that the malting industry be permitted to enjoy the natural geographic advantage of locating in prairie Canada.

What Mr. Justice Hall says in this report is what western Canadians from all parties have been saying for more than 50 years. Western Canadians do not want to be subsidized by other areas. Western Canada has resources; it can produce a great deal more than it has been producing. Its people can live well with the resources they have. Western Canada cannot develop if the Government of Canada adopts policies which help move raw materials to central Canada for processing.

Mr. Justice Hall has laid down a policy which I think all western Canadians, regardless of where they live and regardless of what party they belong to, can support, and they will expect the government to implement that policy.

It may be that the Minister of Transport really means it when he says he accepts and supports the basic proposals made by Mr. Justice Hall in his report. As I have said, I find that difficult to believe because everything Mr. Justice Hall has recommended the minister has been working against since he became the minister. However, I accept his statement that he accepts the basic recommendations in the report. I hope and expect that he has really changed his mind and that, having read the report, he realizes that the recommendations are indeed worth-while, that they will improve the conditions of life for people in western Canada, and that he will implement those recommendations. To the extent that he does he will have the support of members of the New Democratic Party in parliament. To the extent that he fails we will continue to criticize him and to point out the differences between what he is doing and what he says he will do, and we will continue to urge him and the government to implement the report of the Commission, which the government in fact appointed.

Hon. Martin O'Connell (Scarborough East): Mr. Speaker, I am very pleased indeed to have this brief opportunity to participate in this debate. I want to say at the outset that I was very impressed with the possibility of favourable response as outlined by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) in his clear exposition of the situation as it now exists after the Hall report. I was also impressed with the statesmanlike character of the remarks made by the Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Horner) and with the constructive remarks of the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), both of which I found extremely interesting because I think we have passed the stage of dealing with freight rates and questions of that kind in terms of rhetoric, and in this House this evening and today we were getting down to practical specifics and a willingness to deal with these questions as they ought to have been dealt with for some time. But we now have more knowledge.

Many in this House are far more qualified than I am to discuss the specifics of the Hall recommendations. I tend to think that the recommendation of a Prairie Rail Authority is an appropriate one, but I do not profess to have been able to study these questions in depth.

Over the past six months I have had the opportunity to attend a number of conferences in western Canada. I attended a series of conferences known as the Meat-Grain Interface Conferences, and at those conferences I came to realize how complex indeed are the interwoven factors of transportation, processing, community development and so forth. Those conferences, sponsored by the University of Saskatchewan in Saskatoon under Professor Red Williams and Professor Grant Devine, were an eye opener for me, and I wish more people could have attended them.

I thought it might be useful for someone from central Canada to make a few remarks about the attitude with which people in Ontario and Quebec will approach the questions that the Hall Commission raises. I think it is true that, as the hon. member for Vegreville said, we too want action. We are fatigued with the rhetoric that we have heard for so long about discrimination and victimization. To the extent it exists, we want to see an end to it.

I think it is fair to say that in Ontario and Quebec there has never been a time when there was a more positive attitude toward prairie economic development and the resolution of these grievances. I personally am very pleased that the Hall Commission considered the social and community aspects whether of abandonment of rail lines or of the consolidation of elevator systems. I think we in Ontario and Quebec, and indeed in the rest of Canada, understand what is going on in the minds of people in the prairie provinces. After all, it was people from Ontario and Quebec who went west 75 years ago to build that region. They are ready now to face the developmental needs of the second wave, which I take to be not only reorganization and rehabilitation but development in the sense of industrialism. People came also from all over the world to the prairie region. They built it and became Canadians, settling along those branch lines, hauling grain to those elevators, many of which are now old and need rebuilding. Many of the branch lines also require expensive rehabilitation as a result of lack of maintenance.

I recall Mr. Snavely, the commissioner who looked into the cost of moving grain in the west, saying in an aside, not in his report, that in a few years trains would be derailed, standing still on those branch lines. We appreciate the need for rehabilitation.

I want to say again that I think the time for rhetoric is past but we want to make sure in very specific terms what is required and what would be useful. It seems to me that after WEOC meetings four years ago there was a decided cooling of the rhetoric. After WEOC there was full disclosure to the provinces of railway costs. There was a systematic attempt to look into those grievances which are simply referred to as freight rates by many. When one gets down to specifics, for example, the movement of rapeseed oil to Vancouver, or the anomalies between the short-haul and the long-haul charges, or the discrimination apparent between the costs of moving raw material and finished goods—when one gets past the generalities as was done after WEOC, then it is very hard to document specific cases in proof of discrimination. I think we therefore feel cautious about a generalized approach that is not worked out in specific detail so that, after what might appear to have been a response, those grievances were still there as if untouched.

I suggest we should deal with the Commission report on the merits of its recommendations but enlarge the context into a social and economic developmental approach to the prairie region. By doing that we will go beyond transportation and be obliged to bring in the Department of Regional Economic Development and the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, and we will be obliged to consider the trade initiatives that ought to be taken, for example, to sell meat in Japan, or in the Pacific northwest, and the tariff negotiations that will be required to sell polyvinyl chloride in the United States. We will be compelled to go beyond transportation because, unless we do we will not resolve the problems.

We may well need massive freight rate changes, rail rehabilitation, a remodelled grain handling system, new port facilities, and better labour-management relations at the ports throughout the system. Yet these things will not be enough as they are only one set of elements in the total developmental package needed for the prairie region.

What we require and are ready for now is a selective development strategy to undertake all of the best recommendations in the Hall report and reinforce it with policies setting a taxation environment for the prairie region, policies for DREE, as well as tariff changes and redirected government procurement policies. We need this plus greater assurance of markets in central Canada for the processed products of the west even as the west was an assured market through national policies for the manufactured products made in the central industrial heartland.

What we need therefore is an industrial policy which starts with the strengths of the prairie region, which starts with the primary manufacturing already based there on the existing resources, and find the policies which will aid that manufacturing to integrate backwards and forwards as it were—to integrate backwards to include more of regional inputs into the manufacturing process—to make compressors for example for the pipelines—and forward integration as well to make more and more end products as one goes down the processing stream. Those policies will not be easy to find or effect.

Reading the Hall Commission report I feel that the references to natural geographical advantages, or locational advantages as the hon. Minister without Portfolio put it, are not clearly defined and ought not to mislead us. There are very strong economic advantages to processing near the market. They are stronger than the economic advantages of processing near the raw material. Thus it will not be enough simply to change freight rates or change the transportation system. It will require a complete mix of development policies and a long-term convergence of those policies, together with the will to maintain them until these primary manufacturing industries can move up the economic chain into further processing. It will require a good deal of inter-regional understanding.

The main point I am trying to make is that such regional understanding is already there so far as central Canada is concerned. We too want, as the hon. member for Vegreville said, a charter for western economic development. We too want to see a "way ahead" for the prairie region. Mr. Justice Hall and his commissioners have set us on course with this report.

● (2130)

In conclusion, I suggest that if I am right about the need for something more comprehensive than freight rates, better elevators and rehabilitated grain lines, all of which one accepts, we will need at the federal level some means to co-ordinate our responses, some means to go beyond the Department of Transport and include all other departments of government which have a vital role to play in that economic package. I am thinking of the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, the Department of Agriculture which has a central role to play, the Department of Finance, and so on. Do we not need to set up a task force? Let us not be blasé about task forces. There must be a mechanism for co-ordinating the federal approach.

Second, we need a commitment from the federal government, which I am sure will not be difficult to get, that it will sit down with the three prairie provinces, and with each separately within the next few weeks, and seek to identify specific recommendations in the Hall Commission report which could be usefully implemented with early action.

Mr. Speaker, I have made my few points. I have tried to talk constructively in this debate about the real opportunity existing in the prairie region for dynamic economic development. This opportunity comes, oddly enough, at the very time when the dynamism of central Canada is perhaps declining. Central Canada therefore needs the development of the prairie provinces now more than it may have needed it in the past. Constructive responses to this shift in economic vocations, futures or possibilities, may indeed involve us in the very unifying activities into which we all now want to enter.

Mr. Bert Hargrave (Medicine Hat): Mr. Speaker, I will begin by saying this is a timely debate for western agriculture, western Canada and, indeed all Canada. I was privileged to present a personal brief in my Medicine Hat constituency at the hearing held in Schuler, Alberta, on March 23, 1976. Schuler is a small Alberta town, very close to the Alberta-Saskatchewan border, and about 40 miles northeast of Medicine Hat. The town is located at the end of a branch line to a branch line which runs to a third branch line.

To me one of the highlights of that particular hearing, and I am sure to the Schuler community, was that all high school students were given the day off to attend this particular hearing, which was conducted by commissioners Reiny Lehr and Bob Cowan. I point out that Mr. Lehr is a near resident to Schuler and Medicine Hat, where he produces grain and cattle.

It seems to me that there is, and should be, broad general support for the recommendation dealing with the abandonment within five years of some 2,165 miles of branch lines. Though there may be a few cases of inconvenience on these lines owing to abandonment, the need for such action seems both apparent and necessary. One such example is a 21-mile rail line from near Cardston to Whiskey Gap, in South-Western Alberta. It serves four elevators at only two points. Incidentally, it is interesting to note that the original line was built initially by the St. Mary's River Railway as a narrow gauge railway; later the line was taken over by the CPR. I also single out the Bassano to Leader line, which it was recommended should be added to the basic network. I concur with this recommendation, since it is part of an important alternate rail route to the main CPR line connecting Swift Current and Bassano, Alberta.

My remarks today will be specifically directed to the sections in the Hall report on statutory rates and economic development.

With respect to the question of the Crowsnest rates and/or statutory rates, and I think those terms are often used interchangeably, it seems quite probable that after the conclusion of public hearings and just before writing the report, the six commissioners must have agreed at the outset that the Crowsnest rates were too touchy a political issue and changes should not be suggested. They responded accordingly and built the remainder of their recommendations on this base, that the Crowsnest rates should remain. Having been a member of this House over four and a half years I can now understand this approach. At one time I might not have fully understood it. It also seems probable that most of the representations made to the commission hearings must have indicated a similar response.

Let us look at the actual recommendations of the report of this item. I am referring to pages 336 and 337 of the report. It states:

> Regardless of what rate may be set for the transport of grain to export position that rate must be statutory, not variable. Anything else would be a violation of promises made to the producers of western Canada. If the government considers that the railways should have the amount suggested by the Commission on the Costs of Transporting Grain by Rail to transport grain, that amount, according to the findings of that Commission, will be in excess of the Crowsnest rate. How the difference between the new rate and the Crowsnest rate will be apportioned between the government and the producer is, of course, a matter for government decision. This Commission feels that the government must continue to subsidize the transportation of export grain and that the full cost, as deemed by the Commission on the costs of transporting grain by rail, must not be imposed on the producer.

The Commission goes on to make the following recommendation:

> The Commission recommends that the difference between the Crowsnest rate and the rate determined through costs found by the Commission on the Costs of Transporting Grain by Rail should be paid directly to the railways, and not to individual farmers. The very idea of sending out cheques to 160,000 farmers is appalling.

Please note the specific recommendation for payments made to railways not to farmers. Also note that in the passage quoted the phrase "export grain" is used twice when grain is referred to. I can only assume that this recommendation includes domestic feed grains which move by rail in western Canada, because this is the case now.

I now turn to pages 534, 535 and 536 of the report, to that part entitled economic development. It relates specifically to four agricultural processing industries, all directly involved in prairie grain production. I draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the four similar statements which follow a more general opening statement. I quote:

> The production and processing of agricultural products should take place in the regions of this country which have a natural geographic advantage for such activities.

With respect to the flour milling industry the Commission recommends that the flour milling industry in Canada be permitted to enjoy the natural geographic advantage of locating in western Canada.

With respect to the rapeseed crushing industry the Commission recommends that freight rates on rapeseed and its derivatives be set at levels which do not discriminate against the natural locational advantage of prairie rapeseed crushers.

With respect to the livestock processing industry the Commission recommends that freight rates on livestock and meat be set at levels which do not discriminate against the natural locational advantage of prairie livestock producers and processors.

● (2140)

Finally, with respect to the malting industry the Commission recommends that the malting industry be permitted to enjoy the natural geographic advantage of locating in prairie Canada.

I suggest these four statements are deliberately vague and leave much to conjecture as to how these statements are to be implemented. My personal impression is that there is a clear indication in these statements that statutory rates should apply not only to domestic feed grains, but to products of domestic feed grains as well. These products are flour, rapeseed and rapeseed oil, livestock and meat, and barley malt.

By obvious implication, the report also suggests that the difference between statutory and compensatory rates be made up by government for all commodities and processed agricultural products from the prairies.

I suggest that if these assumptions are correct, there are some very serious consequences that until now have hardly even been mentioned. I will name only a few. What would these changes in rail freight do to the trucking industry? How would our two way agricultural trade with the United States be affected? Of course, there is the obvious question of what these costs will come to, including the cost of extending statutory rates to all sectors of agriculture in the west. The future of western Canada's feeding industry, especially cattle feeding, could be very well decided by how these questions are answered and what policies are evolved for our domestic feed grain industry.

The west's feeding industry for both cattle and hogs is in serious trouble now because of two factors relating to freight rates. First, statutory rates now tend to increase the western domestic price of feed grains by the difference between the costs of statutory and actual rail costs by about 27 cents a bushel. Second, cattle and beef, hogs and pork are at the full compensatory rate when moved by rail.

The results of these two factors were almost predictable. Our western hog industry has shifted to the United States. We have seen a drop of about 40 per cent since 1941 and a near corresponding increase in Quebec, but the shift is really to the United States. We are now importing pork in substantial quantities from the United States.

Western cattle feeding could be headed the same way. This spring for the first time in years significant numbers of feeder cattle are moving south to the United States from western Canada and we can expect fat cattle to flow back north from the U.S. corn belt into central Canada, probably this fall or next winter. What a tremendous loss there is here in value added enterprises.

How can the natural comparative advantages, or as the report says the natural locational advantages, be assured for those value added agricultural industries like livestock and meat processing? To suggest a partial answer, let us go back to the recommendation that the difference between Crow and actual cost of moving grain be paid to the railways. I suggest this will continue to distort the natural comparative advantage of western value added industries. If such a subsidy is to be used, let it be paid directly to grain producers on an acreage base, not a bushel base. Existing permit books could be used quite readily for this purpose. I quote the Commission's comment or reason for not doing this:

> The very idea of sending out cheques to 160,000 farmers is appalling.

It just does not make sense in this computer age when millions of cheques are being sent out, such as initial and final wheat board cheques. Direct payment of the difference to grain producers would eliminate that price inequity on domestic feed grains in the west, but payment to the railways would merely continue this inequity on western feed grains.

If this suggestion relative to the Hall recommendation on who should receive the subsidy cannot be agreed to by the government and parliament, all I can say is that there has to be some other way devised to return the benefits of the Crow rate to grain farmers, particularly domestic feed grain farmers, in order to remove price distortion from the market.

Cattle and hog feeders in no way want to eliminate the Crow benefits to grain producers. They are simply suggesting that these benefits be returned in some other neutral manner. Western Canada does indeed have a natural locational advantage, not only for wheat production but feed grain production, especially barley.

Western barley production is a big crop every year, usually around 500 million bushels. It is disbursed as follows: 200 million bushels are exported, 66 million shipped to central and eastern Canada and British Columbia, and the balance, the biggest amount, fed in the west. Not mentioned there is the barley produced on a farm and fed on that farm, and never goes to a market as grain.

The point I want to emphasize is that our western market for barley is our most important market, and it is right at our front and back door. Ways must be found, either through recommendations by Hall or by parliament, to ensure that this domestic market has a chance to operate in a proper natural advantageous climate.

There is a noticeable sense of expectation in the west now that is linked to the Hall Commission report. While there are many important details missing from the report, the opportunity is now here for parliament to bring about meaningful solutions to grain marketing and rail transportation problems for the first time this century. It is up to us to act now.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, this has certainly been a momentous day for Canada. We have heard much of the debate as it has taken place. The Hall report is a tremendous report for western Canada. As many westerners would say, and as my good friend opposite has said, when any one section of the country has increased in its strength, the whole country reaps the advantage.

I was pleased, as was my colleague who just spoke, to attend a local hearing when the Hall Commission was meeting. I attended a hearing in Stettler, Alberta. I spoke principally in terms of the importance of the prairie community system and the importance of the railway to that community system.

Because time is running short this evening, and there will be far more comments to be made than one opposition day will allow, or the short ten minutes I will have to speak this evening, I want to get to the heart of what the previous speaker has said, the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave).

The motion put before the House today reads:

> That this House agrees in principle with the recommendations of the Hall Commission on Grain Handling and Transportation.

Those general principles of agreement go without any question. However, we must take a sincere look at specific aspects of that recommendation because there is still, depending upon interpretation, the possibility for great jeopardy to western Canada.

I want to put forward one submission on some advantages and disadvantages, to the prairies. I quote from a gentleman in the beef industry in a very big way, Mr. Chris Mills, as follows:

> "It virtually spells the end of the livestock feeding business in western Canada. Within five years the cattle industry will go the same way as the hog feeding industry has in the last two years," he said of the Hall Commission's recommendation that the Crowsnest rate be retained.

● (2150)

We are not talking simply about the retention of the Crowsnest Pass rates but also about the methodology. There is no question in anyone's mind that these rates are the Magna Carta of western Canada, part of the way in which we are linked together. The whole rail system on the prairies is as vital to national unity in the eyes of the west as other aspects may be to different parts of the country.

I cannot help noting considerable opposition to the position taken by the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang). We note a headline in one of the papers, "Lang Upset." The report says:

Lang contended the commission's conclusion is unsubstantiated. He said the implied suggestion by the Commission that freight rates on processed commodities be brought into line with the current export grain rates would be a "very, very expensive solution."

I should like to remind hon. members of what Commissioner Emmett Hall stated in response to the argument put forward by the Minister of Transport. He said, and I am quoting:

I reject it in grain transportation because I consider grain so fundamental to the fiscal well-being of Canada that the national interest does not justify the user pay principle.

The Minister of Transport is quite willing to take the position that the recommendation is too expensive for Canada. But Mr. Emmett Hall has pointed out that grain exports have consistently, over the years, reduced the deficit in Canada's balance of payments. In other words, it was a great national advantage, not just a western advantage, and to think of this, in the words of the Minister of Transport as being a western issue rather than a national issue is to fail to understand where Canada starts or ends. It is a great shortcoming that the minister does not see this question in its international context. As Emmett Hall stated:

The contribution which grain makes to Canada's balance of payments position demands that a substantial part of any increase be borne by the federal government in the national interest.

I want to speak this evening about the "order-in-council government" we have at the present time, a government which has issued more than 3,000 orders-in-council during the past year. Speaking on this motion, the Minister of Transport told us earlier that the government had today put out yet another order-in-council. A couple of days ago an order-in-council was issued dealing with the Hall report. What makes me nervous about these orders-in-council is that they make an impression that the government is actually doing something, that it is implementing the Hall recommendations, while in fact it is not. By acting in this way it fails to give the prairie system the solid feeling of security which will come from parliament taking action by statute, passing legislation which could not be changed at the whim of ministers—any change would have to be made subject to public debate.

I deplore the fact that we are moving by order-in-council in the absence of the kind of debate on this subject in which we ought to be engaged. If the minister were really sincere about implementing these recommendations by order-in-council he might take some of the more fundamental recommendations of the report, such as the following:

The retention of the Crowsnest statutory rates. That the difference between the statutory rate and the cost of transporting grain be paid directly to the railways.

He might have considered enacting that by order-in-council. I am not suggestion he should, though. What I am saying is that this is not a new debate. As my right hon. friend from Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) said, it has been going on for 50 years.

Had the government followed the recommendations of the Western Economic Opportunities Conference in 1973, the Hall Commission would not have been required. That conference put forward a manifesto for the west giving the kind of guarantees we are seeking here today. All that we are asking, and all that the report purports to do, is to give the prairies the same kind of natural economic advantages which are enjoyed and exercised by other parts of the country.

In its recommendations with regard to the rationalization of the grain handling system the report mentions the fact that at the present time five major government-built inland terminals are empty and unused. On our side we recognize there is a need for the rationalization of the system in order to make it efficient. We do not need another study.

The Minister of Transport told us today that studies have been going on since 1968. He went on to list ad infinitum the studies which have been conducted over the years. The people of the prairies do not want to hear of another study. One of the things we know about this report, even though we agree with it, or at least with its major principles, is that it offers nothing new, nothing which the farmers, the small businessmen, the industrialists, have not been saying in the western provinces over the years. Today we have trains which chase east to haul grain west, which chase north to haul grain south, all because we lack a rational system of train exchange on different tracks. I have in my constituency a line which must carry grain a hundred miles to the east before turning around and bringing it west again to Vancouver. That is a nonsensical situation, to say the least.

One of the fundamental things this report does is give fair warning to the government that it had better not plan to call an election before implementing some of these vital recommendations. If the government were to dare to call an election without acting on this report after 50 years of protest by the prairie farmers, it would be a snub to the people of the west. As for the Minister of Transport, I am not in any way persuaded that he is giving a full or firm commitment. That ought to be underscored.

We also need to take a look at the fact that in east central Alberta and west central Saskatchewan grain is shipped to Thunder Bay when ports have been frozen up during the past winter, as they are each winter. It is a nonsensical position if they do not empty the prairie elevators in the fall of the year and have the terminals at Thunder Bay emptied also. The minister today sought to leave the impression that there had been an improvement in the movement of grain under his administration. The fact of the matter is that in east central Alberta and western Saskatchewan there has been the highest congestion on both tracks ever experienced in recent years as a result of ill-conceived policy.

I see you are about to rise, Mr. Speaker, and call it ten o'clock. I just want to make it clear that it is the time which has run out, not the issues, and that there is a lot more to be said about this subject.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. It being ten o'clock it is my duty to inform the House that, pursuant to Standing Order 58(ii), proceedings on the motion have now expired.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

NATIONAL DEFENCE—REQUEST FOR EQUIPMENT TO ASSIST RESIDENTS OF COBALT FOLLOWING FIRE

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, on Monday of last week a catastrophe happened to the people of the town of Cobalt. Most people know Cobalt as a small mining community in northern Ontario. It is surprising how many people have come to know the town of Cobalt over the years. Very few people you meet have failed to hear of that small community. At one time it consisted of 20,000 people, but has now quietly dwindled to a town with about 2,000 residents who are very devoted to the community and proud of the efforts they have made to maintain it over the years in the face of great adversity.

The fire that struck Cobalt last week was a disaster. It started in a building which was being torn down, and with a 60 miles an hour wind it spread rapidly to other parts of the town. As many as five or six houses were burning at a time. I was there and observed the great efforts made by fire departments from the area. They came from the towns of Haileybury, New Liskeard, Latchford, Temagami, and as far away as Lorrainville and Ville Marie in Quebec. They fought very diligently, but against that wind not even the three water bombers which were sent in by the Ontario department of natural resources were able to help. The town lost about one quarter of its residences. There were 152 buildings burned. About 70 to 80 of these were dwellings, some multiple dwellings, which means that a very large part of the town has been destroyed.

It is almost impossible to imagine the kind of fire that we had in Cobalt. I have been through a number of fires, Mr. Speaker, and I have seen many forest fires, but I have never seen one of the intensity of this particular fire. The municipalities in the tri-town area met and offered assistance in the form of billets. Surprisingly 300 billets were available in the rest of Cobalt, 300 in Haileybury, and 300 in New Liskeard. Many larger towns would be proud of that kind of support. Interestingly enough, I sat in on council meeting the morning after the fire. The mayor had lost his home and was left with absolutely nothing, apart from his clothes. Another councillor was in the same position. A third councillor saved his house which he recently built, but the house he lived in previously went up in flames. Three councillors, including the mayor, lost everything they owned.

The provincial government came through with help. The cabinet met and sent in two ministers who offered immediately half a million dollars and other assistance which would allow the town to raise money which would be matched by the province. I understand that the federal government was asked by my leader for unanimous consent to recognize that this was a tragedy regarding which everything possible should be done, but consent was not given. The former attorney general of Ontario did ask the Prime Minister a number of questions and, to summarize the Prime Minister said that everything possible would be done.

The other day I asked the Minister of State for Urban Affairs (Mr. Ouellet) if he would send in senior officials of the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation to sit down with the officials in Cobalt, the provincial officials and others to help iron out the difficulties, because the people want to rebuild Cobalt—they want to rebuild the houses they have lost. The Postmaster General (Mr. Blais) has political responsibilities in that area, but he does not have ministerial responsibility for CMHC. I think it is unfortunate that politics should be played at a time like this.

I am well aware the Minister of State for Urban Affairs was still enjoying the fruits of efforts he had been making elsewhere in another field at that time. If he were to go to Cobalt to look at the situation, he would also be more interested in getting rid of the red tape. If we are going to rebuild Cobalt, all the help that is possible must be given to those people. They must be encouraged to rebuild and to make their lives as they were before.

It is necessary for us to cut through the red tape in the Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation and other federal departments, including National Defence, which may be able to play a role through the Emergency Measures Organization by providing temporary housing. If that is all that is required, surely we are not going to play politics with it. The Minister of State for Urban Affairs could well have taken a ride on the same airplane in order to have a look at the situation. He could have been accompanied by some of his officials so that red tape would not be the bane, as it has been in so many other tragedies which have occurred in this country.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I find myself in agreement with at least the first part of the hon. member's remarks. Today I visited the town of Cobalt along with the Postmaster General (Mr. Blais), who has regional responsibility for that area.

Mr. Peters: Only politically.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): We were accompanied by the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Portelance) and the Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lumley). As well, we were accompanied by officials from these departments and from Central Mortgage and Housing Corporation. I agree with the hon. member when he says that the people there are devoted to their community. It was indeed encouraging to see the spirit of co-operation, the dedication to their town, the dedication to one another, and the absolute total dedication to efficiency of the mayor and his council.

There is a method by which the federal government assists in tragedies, and I believe the hon. member is aware of that. The federal government has committed itself to assist in any way possible through the disaster fund, and it will do so. I discussed with the mayor, and some of his people working in this disaster, possibilities for aid from the Department of National Defence. The others who were along discussed the possibility of aid from their departments as well.

I find it rather unfortunate that the hon. member decries what he calls the politics of the federal government playing with it, and he is the only one I have seen playing politics with it so far. I do not know what he expects from the ministry. As I mentioned, the Postmaster General is responsible for that area in his regional responsibilities. The hon. member says that it is only political, but the fact is we are all politicians here, as far as I know. The government makes decisions with political input, and it seems to me the minister responsible for that region is the obvious minister to deal with the people. I would like to point out that the minister dealt very effectively with them today. The federal government is not shirking its responsibility and its duty, and it will not do so.

CANADIAN EXPORT DEVELOPMENT CORPORATION—REASON FOR REFUSAL TO CONFIRM TRANSAIR AS PRIME BIDDER FOR UNITED STATES AIR FORCE CONTRACT

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, this afternoon I posed a question to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) with regard to a bid that Transair had made for a contract with the United States Air Force to overhaul 97 Boeing 707 tankers over a three year period. This work would entail modifying the wing structures.

Since my question this afternoon to the Minister of Transport I have been informed that it is the Canadian Commercial Corporation which has refused to write a letter of endorsation for Transair which must accompany the bid to the U.S. Air Force. There is still time for the CCC to give written confirmation that Transair is a prime bidder for the $42 million contract as bids do not close until July 1, 1977. I hope that the parliamentary secretary to the minister will get on to this tomorrow morning first thing and will have this letter of confirmation transferred to Transair so that they can apply for this bid, as the signing of the contract is to take place on July 1, 1977.

The first plane is to be delivered for overhaul on September 15, 1977. U.S. Air Force officials visited Winnipeg around November 1, 1976, and approved the new $15 million Air Canada hangar as the proper facility to do the overhauls. They have all the facilities to handle the overhaul contract for U.S. planes.

This afternoon when I raised my question I received a very unsatisfactory answer from the Minister of Transport who said "Essentially, my understanding from conversations with Transair is that the difficulty which had existed in connection with this bid, which may have prevented the bid from being successful, will not be repeated in the course of successive bids."

We do not get $42 million opportunities for Canada every day. Transair is the only company in Canada that has submitted a bid, and the U.S. Air Force is looking seriously at this contract submitted to Transair in Winnipeg. We want to remove the roadblocks, never mind putting road blocks in front of Transair. We have record unemployment in this country, we have economic chaos. Remove the road blocks, have this letter submitted to Transair tomorrow, and let us get this $42 million into Canada.

I received also another mundane, secondary answer from the Minister of Transport when he said this afternoon, "My understanding is that there may not be possibility of a bid in relation to those particular aircraft, but there are many hundreds of others which will be coming along next."

There are no $42 million contracts coming daily. They only come once in a lifetime. I have been informed tonight that the Canadian Commercial Corporation which will not submit this letter to Transair, has stated that it is incapable of handling this bid. This bid is only to rebuild the wing structure of the 97 planes. In the past Transair has completely rebuilt the Canadian 707s from top to bottom—it was not only the wing structure but the engines and everything else. Therefore this is nothing but a phony report from the CCC which says it will not submit this letter.

This has a two-fold impact on the Canadian economy. On May 23, 1974, the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made a flying trip to Winnipeg at which time he said he would give us a $15 million hangar. In the meantime we have embarrassed the Prime Minister into building this $15 million hangar for Air Canada, but Air Canada says it does not want it, it has no requirement for it. However, it is being built with federal funds and paid for by the Canadian taxpayer. Air Canada, I repeat, has stated that it does not need this hangar, and it does not know what to do with it. If this contract to overhaul these American air force 707 tankers comes into Canada, the work will be done in this new $15 million hangar, and Air Canada personnel will be involved in working on this particular contract, so it is particularly important that we do everything we possibly can to get this contract into Canada. Otherwise we would have this $15 million hangar just sitting there. It would just be an absolute and complete white elephant, so we have a two-fold impact here.

It has been stated earlier that with this $15 million hangar Transair will start doing some work, and it will lease part of the hangar facilities, but there is to be a merger of Transair with Pacific Western Airlines. If this merger is completed, there would be no more overhaul work done in Winnipeg. All the Transair and PWA overhaul work would be done in British Columbia and Alberta where their overhaul facilities are now. They would not be doing any work at all in this new $15 million hangar, so it is obvious that we must make every effort to assist Transair to obtain this contract with the American air force. Otherwise Canada will lose $42 million and 500 jobs.

It would require 500 people to overhaul the American air force planes over a three year period, and there is a possibility of other contracts later. If we lose this contract, we lose $42 million and 500 jobs, and we would be stuck with this huge monstrosity which the Prime Minister said in an election promise that he would build for us. We must make sure that this facility is used. We must make every effort to assist Transair to obtain this $42 million contract.

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, under the Canada-U.S. defence production sharing arrangements entered into in 1956, the U.S. Department of Defence requires that generally, all purchases in excess of $10,000 from Canadian suppliers, shall be made with the Canadian Commercial Corporation. In order for Canadian contractors' bids to be considered for contract award by the U.S. defence department, CCC is required to give its endorsement on each bid submitted. This endorsement by CCC is, in effect, a guarantee to the U.S. government that all commitments and obligations of the bid and any resulting contract will be met. To determine if any bid will be endorsed, CCC, through its products centres, examines both the bid and the contractor to ensure that the financial, management and technical capability exists to perform the required work.

If a Canadian bid is selected by the U.S. for contract award, the contract is then made with CCC, which in turn sub-contracts 100 per cent to the Canadian supplier.

In response to a U.S. Air Force request for proposal, Transair Ltd. prepared a bid for the replacement of the lower wing skins of KC-135 aerial refueling tanker aircraft for the USAF. The work was to be a three year project involving some 97 aircraft, with further options of 36 aircraft in each of the following two years.

The company's response was sent direct to Tinker Air Force Base at Oklahoma City; a copy of the bid was also sent to CCC. In order for CCC to consider the Transair bid for endorsement, the company was asked to provide the corporation with comprehensive evidence of its capabilities in terms of facilities, manpower and technical skills and necessary financing.

The company had arranged to rent a hangar from Air Canada and had requested support from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce on tooling. The basis of costing estimates was examined and judged to be reasonable. On March 31, 1977 Transair informed CCC of last minute difficulties in presenting satisfactory evidence of availability of working capital. As the bid closed the next day, it was certified to the U.S. Air Force subject only to determination that adequate management, financing and physical facilities were available to perform the work.

The U.S. Air Force advised CCC on April 5 that the Transair proposal was found to be non-responsive and could not be accepted for further evaluation because of information contained in the Transair bid and CCC's partial endorsement.

Although in this case the bid was not accepted by the U.S. Department of Defense, the Canadian Commercial Corporation has, in the fiscal year 1976-77, received contract awards from the U.S. defense department totalling in excess of $100 million.

HEALTH—POSSIBILITY OF STUDIES ON EFFECTS OF SACCHARIN ON HUMANS—REASON FOR FAILURE TO CONSULT MEDICAL ASSOCIATIONS PRIOR TO IMPOSING BAN

Mr. Bruce Halliday (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I rise tonight as a result of the rather inadequate and almost irrational response by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde) as reported at page 4285 of Hansard for March 24, to a question I asked on the subject of saccharin. I asked the minister if he would indicate to the House what retrospective and prospective studies he has authorized or has done on the effect of saccharin on humans. I will quote the minister's reply in full. He said:

> Mr. Speaker, decisions have been made in that field following studies which have been confirmed by international and American authorities. I would suggest to the hon. member that he not be overly impressed by a decidedly American lobbying organization which has more than $1 million at its disposal to rally public opinion against this decision.

I cannot see what that had to do with the question of studies of a retrospective and prospective nature regarding saccharin.

Before I continue my comments I would suggest to the parliamentary secretary who is here to answer for the minister that he lay aside the prepared speech given to him by his officials. I see he has a pen in his hand so I would encourage him to jot down the eight or ten questions I will ask so that he can reply briefly to them.

My questions will be in two parts. The first part will be a request for some indication of the policy of the department relating to decisions regarding research projects such as in saccharin, and the second part will inquire to what extent the department followed through on this policy.

My first question is what the policy of the department would be when dealing with research of this kind. Do they consult the Medical Research Council before they proceed and as they proceed with the program? In the case of saccharin did they consult with the Research Council before they initiated the project and as they proceeded?

My second question concerns the policy regarding research projects and the execution of retrospective studies. When checking food additives and so on, does the department have a policy of doing retrospective studies on human beings, no rats, when they have something of significance to contribute to the medical community? If so, what was done on human beings in respect of this particular experiment on rats?

My third question relates to prospective studies. Does the department have any policy regarding prospective studies in situations where they are studying a potentially harmful product consumed by humans? If so, have they initiated prospective studies on human beings in the use of saccharin? It should not be difficult to do for either prospective or retrospective studies. Certainly retrospective studies would be easy because saccharin has been used for 98 years and there are three or four generations that could be checked.

The fourth question refers to consultations. I am not sure the minister knows what a consultation is. I believe he thinks a consultation is a briefing. Before an announcement is made such as the one on saccharin, or previous ones on the swine 'flu virus vaccine or cyclamates, all of which have been catastrophic as far as the medical community is concerned, does the minister or his department make a point of engaging in consultation as opposed to briefing? I understand consultation did not happen. I ask, did they consult, not brief, professional associations like the CMA, the Canadian Dental Association and other, similar professional groups?

Fifth, and this question is also about consultation, is it the policy of the ministry to consult lay groups interested in that field? Specifically, did it consult with the Canadian Diabetic Association, the Canadian Cancer Society, the Canadian Heart Society, weight reducing organizations, and so on?

My sixth question is this: what is the minister's policy regarding consultations with manufacturing groups? Did he discuss saccharin with manufacturers of diet drinks, diet foods, and so on? Did he consult the grocery products manufacturers of Canada? That association ought to have been consulted. Did he consult the Calory Control Council of North America, which is interested in these matters?

Seventh, what is the government's policy on releasing partial information before all tests are completed? Almost two months after the minister banned saccharin, he announced that subsequent tests showed that the problem may have been caused by impurities in saccharin. I am referring to the Ames test.

Since the minister knew perfectly well that those tests had not been completed, why did he not wait two months before announcing the ban?

I direct three more general questions to the parliamentary secretary. First, I wish to quote part of the minister's reply to the hon. member for Winnipeg North Centre (Mr. Knowles) as reported on page 3836 of Hansard of March 10, 1977. Hansard reports the minister as saying in part:

> We proposed the establishment of a committee, in co-operation with the industry and medical experts, to make a complete review of the role of saccharin in the diet of diabetics.

Has that been done?

Finally, since my time has almost run out, I make one last comment. The American Cancer Society publishes an excellent journal twice a month. In a recent article entitled, "The Environmental Time Bomb That Never Went Off" the editor of the journal, Arthur I. Holleb, wrote one particularly significant sentence, as follows:

> Hasty judgments are a disservice to the serious study of environmental cancer.

I would welcome the parliamentary secretary's response to my questions.

Mr. Paul E. McRae (Parliamentary Secretary to the Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, I find it difficult at present to answer the hon. member's specific questions. The answers will have to be provided, for I cannot say who talked to whom in each case. I cannot answer the hon. member's eight or nine questions in three minutes. I point out that all hon. members have had the opportunity to be briefed. I think it would have been possible to raise these questions in the presence of officials responsible for the studies mentioned. I do not recall many questions having been asked when the opportunity for briefing arose.

The hon. member raised the question of the Medical Research Council. I would not venture to say yes or not to his questions. The information will have to be provided.

I must make a strong point on the question of retrospective and prospective studies. As the hon. member knows, it is not possible to use human subjects in the study of carcinogenic agents. It would be unethical to attempt to induce cancer of the bladder in a human being.

The other point is that saccharin has been used for 90 years, but used extensively only for the last eight years. In two cases there is evidence to suggest that saccharin may have caused cancer, although that is not positive.

I come to the question of consultation. The department has consulted with officials of CMA, the Canadian Diabetic Association and the Canadian Dental Association, but the department itself had to make a decision. Certainly there was a discussion with the industry, the bottling industry and groups like that.

● (2230)

With regard to testing for the possibility of impurities, there are two problems. First, it would have to be proven that the impurities were causing the trouble. Second, it would have to be proven that a form of saccharin could be formed which did not have those impurities or other carcinogenic impurities. It is a problem.

If we had said we were not going to do anything about it, the Canadian Medical Association and the opposition would be telling us to ban that particular substance from our foods. That would have been the case if we had found strong evidence that it produced carcinogenic results. The department acted right away. Some changes may have to be made. I cannot say whether consultation has started with the Canadian Diabetic Association. I hope it has. If not, as the minister indicated, I am sure it will in the near future.

REQUEST FOR JUDICIAL INQUIRY INTO BREAK-INS AT L'AGENCE DE PRESSE LIBRE AND PRAXIS CORPORATION—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise to move a motion of urgent and pressing necessity under the provisions of Standing Order 43. In view of the recent revelations of government evasion on the serious questions raised about the Department of the Solicitor General in the last few days, I move, seconded by the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek):

That this House directs the government to institute a full judicial inquiry into the matter of the Agence Presse Libre and Praxis Corporation break-ins.

Mr. Speaker: The presentation for debate of such a motion pursuant to Standing Order 43 requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

HARBOURS

DREDGING OF CHANNEL AT BRANCH, NEWFOUNDLAND—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I rise under the provision of Standing Order 43 to move a motion on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. This year the inshore fishery on the grounds off Cape St. Mary's shows signs of being very successful as the early catches in St. Bride's and Branch are encouraging. Further, Mr. Speaker, the fishermen of Branch must move ten to 12 miles to the fishery grounds in their inshore draggers and longliners but they cannot gain access to their harbour and the new fish plant because of sand in the channel.

I move, Mr. Speaker, seconded by the hon. member for Medicine Hat (Mr. Hargrave):

That this House direct the Minister of Fisheries and the Environment to cause the dredging of the channel at Branch immediately and to have the necessary repairs made so that this problem is solved on a long term basis.

Mr. Speaker: Pursuant to Standing Order 43 presentation of such a motion requires the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ENERGY

MEASURES TO IMPLEMENT EFFECTIVE CONSERVATION POLICY—REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF MINISTER'S STATEMENT ON ENERGY BOARD REPORT "OVERLY CONSERVATIVE"

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I will address my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the findings of the National Energy Board that the export levels for light crude oil should be phased out by 1980-81, that our own crude oil will no longer be sufficient to meet our requirements between 1981 and 1983 and that we will need net imports of 450,000 barrels a day by 1985, that lack of action on the tar sands project means that the next tar sands plant will not come on stream until 1987 and in light of the lack of effective steps being taken for conservation through developing the tar sands, solar energy or hydro energy, will the minister tell the House when the government will adopt and implement effective energy policies and how they plan to meet this grim prospect outlined in the latest National Energy Board report? Would the minister also explain what he meant when he said that the National Energy Board report was "overly conservative"? Did he mean that the National Energy Board estimates were overly truthful rather than Liberal?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I think the National Energy Board took the right approach when it assessed Canada's oil supply and requirements. The perspective is a conservative one and properly so for a regulatory agency. It is not in a position to build into its estimates of supply the sorts of things that I hope will happen and believe will happen, such as an upgrading facility for heavy oil. There is no mention of that in the report. There is mention of only one new tar sands plant. I hope we can get another going before then. That is why we have been in such active discussion and negotiation with the province of Alberta. There is no assumption with respect to the lessening of the demand for oil as a result of such matters as provincial initiatives and conservation. There is nothing in there for higher insulation standards for new housing. There is nothing in there for greater gas consumption in the province of Quebec, for example, replacing foreign oil. I am saying that this is a conservative approach to the next ten years, and I believe quite properly so, but I believe that with the assistance of the provinces we can assure there will be a greater supply than forecast by the National Energy Board.

Mr. Crosbie: Mr. Speaker, the public of Canada cannot heat their homes or drive cars on the minister's hopes and beliefs.

SUGGESTED FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE ON CONSERVATION POLICY—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. John C. Crosbie (St. John's West): Mr. Speaker, I should now like to address a question to the Prime Minister in view of the minister's lack of serious response to my question, would the Prime Minister call together the ten provincial premiers for a conference open to the public, to television and the media, to discuss with them effective conservation policies in the energy field leading to a more efficient use of our energy resources and a reduction of the increase in demand? Would the Prime Minister take that action because if we cannot get our solutions on the supply side we must take strong action on the demand side. Would he call such a conference?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): I thank the hon. member for the suggestion, Mr. Speaker, and I will consider it.

CONTINGENCY PLANS IF IMPORTED OIL NOT AVAILABLE—DATE OF IMPLEMENTATION OF NEXT TAR SANDS PROJECT

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources relates to the National Energy Board's prediction which seems to be based largely on this government's past performance in energy, that by 1985 this country will be importing nearly half a million barrels of oil per day. In view of the highly authoritative report from the workshop on alternative energy sources which suggests that there may be a world shortage of oil by 1985, will the minister tell the House what he plans to do if the half million daily barrels of imports are not available by 1985 and is his alternative to ration oil supplies for Canadians?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member would refer to the "Energy Strategy for Canada, Policies for Self-Reliance" published one year ago, he would see that we fully anticipated these sorts of difficulties. Indeed, we set up a number of responses for increasing supplies. The hon. member may know that for many months we have tried to negotiate a different set of fiscal terms, to provide incentive for the development of the yet underdeveloped leases of the tar sands and the heavy oils of Alberta. I believe it will be possible to produce close to a million barrels a day of oil and heavy oil from the tar sands by 1990.

Mr. Malone: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. Since, according to the predictions of the National Energy Board, continued delays will slow down the development of the heavy oil sands in Alberta, may I ask the minister how quickly he expects the next development plan to be implemented and what is being negotiated at present to ensure that by 1985, not 1990, we will have another oil development project in the tar sands?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I think the chances are pretty good. Indeed, the energy minister of Alberta said, after the energy ministers meeting three weeks ago at which we discussed what the price of oil for Canada should be, that, given the scenario the majority of energy ministers accepted, Alberta would be prepared to develop aggressively—I think that was his phrase—the tar sands and heavy oils of Alberta. If we can secure the co-operation of the province of Alberta in this national task and reach the one million barrels a day production to which I referred, instead of the close to 500,000 barrels a day the National Energy Board set out in its report, we shall approach the target we set.

My figures indicate that we should be able to reduce our dependence on foreign oil to a lesser figure than we mentioned in the Energy Strategy one year ago. That will require considerable effort on the conservation side. It will require the implementation of measures which the government has already taken and will be taking, and considerable conservation measures on the part of the provinces. Some provinces think energy conservation is purely a provincial responsibility. It will require a much greater degree of urgency on the part of the government of Alberta with respect to the development of the tar sands.

RECONCILIATION OF CONTINUED HIGH EXPORTS TO UNITED STATES WITH ENERGY BOARD REPORT

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, may I direct a supplementary question to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In view of the depressing report the National Energy Board brought down indicating that by 1985 our oil deficit will be at least 450,000 barrels a day and by 1990, some 600,000 barrels a day, how does the minister reconcile this serious situation in which Canadians find themselves with his offer to Mr. Schlesinger, the energy czar of the United States, at their meeting on March 4, that in certain circumstances he would be prepared to continue our export of crude oil at the rate of 250,000 barrels a day, for a period not exceeding five years. I ask this, since at present we export only 180,000 barrels a day, and the National Energy Board has recommended reducing such exports to 137,000 barrels a day. Why does the minister think we are in a position to offer the United States 250,000 barrels a day for not more than five years?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, the hon. member was selective in his figures. He tried to leave the impression we only export 180,000 barrels a day.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Of light crude.

● (1120)

Mr. Gillespie: If he had looked at the figures a little more closely he would have known that we are exporting considerably more than that. He used the phrase "in certain circumstances". I think it is important that those circumstances be understood. They include such things as a surplus to Canadian needs, swapping arrangements and protection to Canada in the event of some kind of embargo or interruption of supply.

REQUEST FOR CLARIFICATION OF OIL SWAPPING ARRANGEMENTS

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Would the minister explain what he means by swapping arrangements? Is he telling the House that what the government proposes is that we should send to the United States 250,000 barrels a day of light, sweet crude oil in exchange for Prudhoe Bay oil which is sour oil brought by pipeline from Kitimat to Edmonton, which no oil refinery west of the City of Quebec is able to refine without a major overhaul involving heavy expenditure? Is that the swap the minister has in mind?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): No, Mr. Speaker. I have not talked about any arrangement involving a continuation of the export of light, sweet crude at the rate of 200,000 barrels a day. I have indicated that in certain circumstances we might be able to provide 250,000 barrels of crude oil but the major proportion of that will be in the heavy oils field. The allocation right now is roughly 140,000 barrels of heavy oil a day to the United States.

On the specific question of the surplus, I do not see the Prudhoe Bay swap as something which will happen very shortly. Maybe it will, I don't know. I feel the swap arrangements are more likely to be in other parts of the United States serving the eastern Canadian markets rather than one which would involve Prudhoe Bay oil coming to Canada from the west coast of the U.S.

POSSIBILITY OF ADOPTING HOME INSULATION PROGRAM AS CONSERVATION MEASURE

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): The minister stated that he thinks the National Energy Board was too pessimistic in its report and that it had over-anticipated the demand, a situation which he hopes will be rectified by some type of conservation program. In his discussions with Mr. Schlesinger on March 4, according to the minister's memorandum to file of March 7, he said "The United States appears to be fully committed to reinsulation; we must take a further look at this". I want to ask him whether he and the government have, in fact, taken another look at this and in view of the fact that several provinces have indicated willingness to make loans with respect to insulation costs, is the government now ready to embark on a national home insulation program, particularly since such a program would save Canada $1.25 billion a year and $750 million annually in oil imports, and would save us about 40 per cent of the oil we are now having to import at world prices? Is the government seriously prepared, now, to embark on a national home insulation program?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): The hon. member has asked that question before and I have answered it before. Yes, the government is looking at such a proposal, but as I have explained to the hon. member this is an extremely expensive undertaking, probably of the order of a billion and a half dollars. Clearly this is a major stumbling block at a time when the government is trying to hold its expenditures down.

SUGGESTION HOUSING MINISTRY MAKE LOANS FOR HOME INSULATION AS CONSERVATION MEASURE

Mr. Jack Marshall (Humber-St. George's-St. Barbe): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In regard to the figures the minister mentioned concerning the cost of home insulation, I am sure that the minister is aware that there is a program in existence now under residential rehabilitation assistance whereby all Canadians can borrow up to $10,000 and have $3,750 forgiven. The problem is that there is not enough funds. Is the minister prepared to recommend to the minister of housing that there be a direct thrust toward this type of program, which is already available, to provide insulation so as to extend it to many more Canadians who are in need of it, particularly those on low incomes?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I know that the Minister of State for Urban Affairs is very interested in and concerned about the problems to which the hon. member refers. He and I have had a number of discussions about how we can extend insulation programs to Canadians. As the hon. member knows, CMHC is administering the successful insulation program in P.E.I. and Nova Scotia.

DATE ON WHICH MINISTER KNEW OF BREAK-IN AT L'AGENCE DE PRESSE LIBRE

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the Minister with respect to the matters raised in this House involving the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I should like to refer to what he said yesterday at the press conference. To quote the transcript, he said:

As soon as the ministers were apprised of the reality of the fact of the illegal break-in, they took action to make sure that the case was brought to the attention of the Attorney General of the Province of Quebec, which resulted in the trial being before the courts.

We now know that the three people charged in the province of Quebec all plead guilty. One of those unfortunately was an officer in the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. It seems to me an attempt is being made to cast some measure of ministerial responsibility on the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I ask the Prime Minister whether he could tell us now—he could not yesterday at the press conference—on what date was the Solicitor General informed of the break-in, and which Solicitor General; and secondly, would the Prime Minister be able to assure the House categorically that the Minister of Supply and Services, who was at one time Solicitor General of Canada, knew nothing about this break-in?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): First of all, Mr. Speaker, I would take exception to the suggestion that the government is trying to transfer the blame to the RCMP. It seems to me that that has been the object of most of the opposition's questioning in the past several days, to blame the RCMP for these actions.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Not true.

Mr. Trudeau: Then, if it is not true they should get together and make sure that they are not attempting to convey that impression. As far as ministerial involvement is concerned, I have ascertained that before the break-in there was absolutely no ministerial knowledge that there would be a break-in. That much is clear in my mind.

I said at the press conference yesterday that as to specific dates I would not be committed to them because I did not have them before me. I have since talked to the Solicitor General who feels that it is desirable, and I support him completely, to make a statement giving all the dates and all the facts as he has ascertained them. He has chosen, I think wisely, to do this after judgment has been rendered on the plea of guilty by the persons accused in Montreal. I am informed that this will be in a couple of weeks from now, and at that time I think it is his duty to make, and it is his suggestion that he make, a statement.

I understand the opposition's anxiety to get to the bottom of this. In order to make sure that the minister's actions are quite clear in the public mind, I myself am anxious that he make this statement. I hope the opposition will understand the desirability of not making it until the case is finally closed, which will happen when the sentence is given.

REASON FOR FAILURE OF MINISTER TO HAVE PRIOR KNOWLEDGE OF BREAK-IN AT L'AGENCE DE PRESSE LIBRE

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I am happy to hear that there is going to be a statement with respect to the matter, but could the Prime Minister inform the House whether in the course of his statement the Solicitor General, who is going to be making the statement for the government, will be explaining how two former solicitors general, both in the cabinet, were so incompetent as to have no inkling of these activities? Would that be part of the statement that would be made in the House?

• (1130)

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it seems to me there is a value judgment there about competency. I think the point will have to be dealt with. I do not think the hon. member should prejudge that there was incompetency. There may be another sequence of events which might explain the failure of the police to inform, at the right time, their superiors and the Solicitor General himself.

REQUEST FOR JUDICIAL INQUIRY INTO BREAK-INS AT L'AGENCE DE PRESSE LIBRE AND PRAXIS CORPORATION

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I moved earlier, seconded by another member of the House, that there be a judicial inquiry with respect to this matter. I moved it in good faith because I believe it is extremely important, not only from the point of view of the government, but certainly from the point of view of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Is it the intention of the government to have a ministerial statement in this House which will take the place of a judicial inquiry? Is this announcement this morning by the Prime Minister an indication the Prime Minister has decided today that there is no possibility and no need for a judicial inquiry with respect to this matter, and only a statement would suffice?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): No, Mr. Speaker, I am not saying that. It may be entirely possible or desirable that a judicial inquiry follow. To be perfectly candid, I discussed this very matter with the Commissioner of the RCMP when the facts first came to my attention about the laying of charges against one of their former officers for illegal break-in and entry. I came to the conclusion then, and I have stated it to the House on many occasions, that I prefer, through due process, a judicial procedure to follow its course. If the opposition can, with absolute justification, claim all the facts are not known, then I will certainly consider setting up a federal inquiry.

My position in this House has always been that we do not set up inquiries if due process can bring the facts and the guilty persons to light. I do not see any reason for making an exception for the RCMP and to start an inquiry on them if the judicial process, which is operating in Montreal and in Toronto on the two cases in question, is going to bring the facts to light.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Can I assume the Prime Minister has in his mind the limitations on the judicial inquiry in the face of a plea of guilty, when facts are not brought out in the course of a hearing, as opposed to the carrying on of a case from the beginning through the calling of witnesses? That is one limitation. Does the Prime Minister have that in mind, and will he bear those limitations in mind, in terms of the judicial process, when he is considering the question of a judicial inquiry which has a much broader scope?

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, I can take that into consideration, and I hope the House would, too. I fail to see exactly the point the hon. member is making. If the police make an inquiry and if the Attorneys General lay charges both in the Montreal case and the Toronto case, one assumes they lay charges against whom the facts seem to incriminate. If they do not lay charges against other people, presumably it is because the police have not found any evidence of involvement or guilt of other people. If the people accused then plead guilty, it seems to demonstrate the police have done their work effectively and have traced the accusations to the proper people.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): It is the difference between criminality and impropriety.

Mr. Trudeau: It is difficult to follow the logic that we would be better off, somehow, if these people had not pleaded guilty and had forced the Crown to go through the whole process of proof by witness.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF VETERANS OF WORLD WAR I FLYING CORPS

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Before recognizing another question, I wonder if hon. members would join with me for just a moment in calling attention to the presence in our gallery of a very distinguished and very unusual delegation in the form of some extremely distinguished Canadians—a group of members of World War I flyers. All of these gentlemen served with either the Royal Flying Corps or the Royal Naval Air Service and were the forefathers of the Royal Air Force and hence the Royal Canadian Air Force. They are here for a reunion. They are in the ladies' gallery now, and I would ask them to stand because I am sure all hon. members would want to wish them a very pleasant reunion here this weekend.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE OF GOVERNMENT CONFIDENCE IN FORCE AND NON-INTERFERENCE IN DISCIPLINARY PROCESS

Mr. Erik Nielsen (Yukon): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Prime Minister arising out of his weekly press conference yesterday. There are two unfortunate inferences which have been left as a result of the answers of the Prime Minister. First, there is the inference that the RCMP is somehow guilty of a cover-up vis-à-vis passing on information to the government; and second, there is an inference that it might be the government's intention to consider interfering with the disciplinary processes which are now in force in the RCMP. I would like to obtain from the Prime Minister assurance on his part, and on behalf of the government, that the RCMP still enjoys full confidence and faith of the government as a national police force, and that there was no intention by the Prime Minister to leave that inference of cover-up on their part, and no intention on the part of the government to interfere with their disciplinary processes.

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, that is the most absurd question I have heard from a man who asks a great many absurd questions in this House. If there were any inferences, they were either in the hon. member's mind or perhaps in some form of questioning by his own members or by the media. There was no inference made to that effect by myself.

Mr. Nielsen: Mr. Speaker, may I quote for the Prime Minister from page 5 of his press conference the answer to a question put to him by one of the members of the press where he is referring to the RCMP which reads:

> . . . some disciplinary action was taken. That is my information. The extent to which that was enough . . .

That is questionable. Now, if that does not raise an inference that the government is considering looking into the disciplinary processes of the RCMP, I do not know what does. I am being very bona fide in asking for the government's assurance that there is no intention to take that course. My more important question is: I am asking for the assurance of the government, through the Prime Minister, that the RCMP enjoys the government's full faith and confidence in their function.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, for the past several days the government has spent its full time defending the RCMP against insinuations coming from the other side.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): That is not so.

Mr. Trudeau: That is why I felt the question is preposterous.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

MEASURES TO REDUCE LEVEL OF UNEMPLOYMENT IN QUEBEC

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, I have a question for the Minister of Finance. On Tuesday in the House I indicated that the Department of the Minister of Manpower had prepared a forecast showing unemployment in the province of Quebec would rise again in 1978 to an average of 9.4 per cent. I would like to ask the Minister of Finance the following question: considering that this forecast simply indicates a worsening of the unemployment situation in Quebec, which has already experienced more than half of the new unemployment in Canada as a whole during the past two years; and considering that in a recent comprehensive survey in that province some 40 per cent of Quebecers under the age of 30 have indicated they are prepared today to vote for independence and give as their principal reason economic dissatisfaction with the economic policies of the federal government, particularly unemployment, I would like to ask the Minister of Finance if the government does not recognize now that the unemployment situation in Quebec is a principal cause of disunity and is reaching crisis proportions. Is the government prepared to come forward now with a comprehensive program to deal with this situation in Quebec?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, in the budget and under the programs which are under the responsibility of my colleague, the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, we have come forward with programs specifically directed at the slow growth areas of Canada, and Quebec in particular. I refer to the substantial funds being expended for special job creation, weighted as they are in favour of areas of high unemployment, and as well the fiscal policy put forward in the budget which favours investment in the province of Quebec. The hon. gentleman makes some reference to the separatist sentiment. One of the difficulties our efforts are meeting, in terms of stimulating further economic progress in the province of Quebec, is the uncertainty created by the Parti Québécois government in that province.

POSSIBILITY OF STUDIES OF LEVELS OF UNEMPLOYMENT IN ALL PROVINCES FOR YEARS, 1977, 1978 AND 1979

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Beyond all that rhetoric there is still the revelation that the government, in terms of another department represented by a minister who, for whatever good reason is not here today, has still forecast an increase in levels of unemployment in the province of Quebec, so there will be a worsening of the situation which the government must acknowledge and, one would hope, come to grips with. I should like to ask the minister also whether, with reference to other provinces, would he confirm that studies have been done in Canada for the years 1977-78 and 1978-79 which also indicate in a majority of all the other provinces in Canada there will be a worsening of the unemployment situation in the next two years.

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): I would be glad to inquire of my colleague whether his department has done that, if there is any truth at all in the allegation of the hon. member.

Mr. Broadbent: I can tell the minister there is truth in the allegation and I will be happy to produce the figures prepared by the government. Given this alarming fact that unemployment will get worse in the country in the next two years, would the Minister of Finance assure the House that he will produce the tables and the reasons for the forecast for members of parliament but, perhaps even more basic than that, will he ensure that provincial premiers in Canada be given those forecasts for their provinces in at least the hope that some of them will take their responsibilities seriously about creating jobs for Canadians?

[Mr. Broadbent.]

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): I think that the most appropriate thing is to find whether or not the hon. gentleman is honestly in possession of the documents which confirm the allegations, or even dishonestly in possession of them.

NATIONAL REVENUE

ALLEGED PRESENCE OF MOUNTED POLICE OFFICER IN OFFICES OF DEPARTMENT

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of National Revenue.

Could the minister tell me about this case. Lately, I phoned the Department of National Revenue (Taxation) and to my great surprise, I was answered by an officer of the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I would like to know from the minister whether it is usual for the RCMP to have a permanent office at the department. I asked that guy what he was doing there, and he told me it was none of my business. He was right, it was probably none of my business. But it was his business to answer me decently on the phone.

I want to ask the minister whether she called on the RCMP lately to manage income tax offices.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, perhaps it was during lunch hour or coffee break. In any case, it shows that the public service is not as fragmented as some members of the opposition claim, and that people do cooperate. That being said, I think that the hon. member, who has been sitting in the House of Commons for many years, ought to know that the Income Tax Act allows for a certain degree of cooperation between a department such as mine and the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I also assume that the hon. member dialed the right number and did not call the wrong office.

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): I have a supplementary question, Mr. Speaker.

First of all, I wish the minister to know that it was not during the lunch hour, but at 10 o'clock in the morning. It was the switchboard operator of the Department of National Revenue who received my call and who directed it to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. I was quite surprised, because the RCMP has been tailing us for a number of years. I am afraid we shall suffer the consequences of this one of these days.

FINANCE

SUGGESTION METHOD OF FORECASTING RATE OF INFLATION BE CHANGED

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Minister of Finance and has to do with forecasting procedures related to the consumer price index and inflation. Since some weeks ago the Minister of Finance said the government's forecast was that it could live with a 6 per cent annual inflation rate and subsequently the minister had to revise it to 7 per cent and then to 7½ per cent and now we are informed that for the first four months of this year the annual inflation rate has skyrocketed way above these figures, is the minister now prepared to scrap the forecasting methodology in his department for inflation and the consumer price index and come up with something new and more reliable, given what just happened?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): The hon. member is perhaps not stating the situation correctly. The 6 per cent he referred to is the guideline which is set out in the anti-inflation program and represents the level that we would propose to apply at the end of the second year of the program. Indeed, the fact is that because of the impact of both the depreciation of the Canadian dollar and the increase in imported food prices, the hoped for levels were not attained. It seems to me that any intelligent use of the forecast would have to take into account that there will be external events of that kind which, from time to time, will make it difficult to meet the projected figures. I do not think it is a legitimate basis for criticizing those who prepared the forecast.

CONSUMER AFFAIRS

POSSIBILITY OF MINISTER REQUESTING FINANCE DEPARTMENT TO CHANGE METHOD OF FORECASTING LEVEL OF CONSUMER PRICE INDEX

Mr. Heward Grafftey (Brome-Missisquoi): I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs. I cannot accept the premise in the answer of the Minister of Finance and since latter day prognostications regarding inflation and the consumer price index have proved to be very wrong—6 per cent, 7 per cent, 7.5 per cent, and for the first four months of this year going right beyond that—and in view of the fact that this forecasting procedure in the Department of Finance creates great instability among Canadian consumers—it is important at least to have proper forecasting procedures—has the minister, on behalf of the Canadian consumer, made representations to the Minister of Finance to correct his forecasting procedure so there can be a little stability in this regard?

Hon. A. C. Abbott (Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs): Mr. Speaker, I cannot accept the hon. member's assertion that the forecasting procedures are erroneous and until I am persuaded of that, I do not see that I can properly make suitable representations.

FINANCE

REASON FOR GRANTING TARIFF REDUCTIONS WITHOUT CONCESSIONS IN RETURN

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Finance. Since in the past the federal government has granted universal tariff reductions on a large number of horticultural products and recently, that is in the past year, it has granted them on processed pork, and since the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade is essentially a bargaining exercise, why has Canada granted tariff reductions without—and I emphasize the word without—securing concessions in return in a good many of these cases?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Ever since the introduction of these reductions for the purpose of restraining inflation in Canada we have made the point that they are of a temporary nature. Canada's bargaining position proceeds from the standard level provided in customs tariffs and that will be the basis on which we negotiate. So, in no sense should any negotiating party under GATT or any Canadian believe that the temporary tariff reductions are more than temporary or that we are negotiating anything more than on the customs tariff basis.

BILINGUALISM

POSSIBILITY OF FEDERAL AID TO FÉDÉRATION DES FRANCOPHONES HORS QUÉBEC

Mr. Roch La Salle (Joliette): Mr. Speaker, I should like to direct a question to the right hon. Prime Minister.

In view of the fact that the Fédération des francophones hors Québec had submitted a brief on April 13, that its president regretted this week that the government had kept silent about the submission of its first report; that this organization urges in its second report the establishment, through new arrangements, of a coherent and final policy aimed at helping French-speaking Canadians wherever they may live; and that the Prime Minister has agreed to meet this organization next week, on May 31 to be exact, could the Prime Minister or the minister responsible advise the House whether, under the present circumstances, the federation will be provided with the means to achieve its goal?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, no other date has been set for meeting the group. I indicated quite some time ago that I was willing to meet them, that their first brief would have to be studied, as well as the second which was to be published. Unless I am mistaken, that brief was published only a day or so ago. I then asked the hon. member for Ottawa-Vanier to study it for me; he told me that he had been unable as yet to get a copy of it. I am surprised that the hon. member for Joliette already has a copy of it.

Mr. La Salle: Mr. Speaker, on a supplementary.

I feel that I am bringing up a very important matter, and the Prime Minister, I am sure, is willing to listen seriously to the claims of the federation. I am referring to documents which were given the minister last April 13. This week a second volume was handed over. I am merely asking the Prime Minister if he is willing to provide the means required by the federation to achieve its goals, namely a coherent act providing the necessary mechanisms to help Francophones living outside Quebec. That is all I am asking the Prime Minister.

Mr. Trudeau: Mr. Speaker, may I repeat my answer. The federation is producing a brief in two volumes. The second volume has yet to reach us, or in any event has not reached me. I cannot therefore give the hon. member a theoretical answer. As soon as I have examined that second volume, I shall meet the group. I feel that the date set for meeting them, namely next Wednesday, is really very early, but that is the date I am discussing with the Secretary of State. If there is enough time to study the brief and do it justice, the group will be seen Wednesday; otherwise that meeting may have to be postponed.

MINISTER'S KNOWLEDGE OF LETTER FROM L'AGENCE DE PRESSE LIBRE FOLLOWING BREAK-IN—REQUEST FOR TABLING

Mr. Allan Lawrence (Northumberland-Durham): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask one more question about the unfortunate matter involving the break-in at L'Agence de Presse Libre simply because the judicial proceedings and the sentencing of the police officers will have no bearing whatsoever on ministerial responsibility or ministerial knowledge of this matter, which I think the House has every right to know about now and not two weeks hence. My question is, therefore, to the Solicitor General. Has the Solicitor General's investigation within his own department turned up a letter sent immediately after the break-in by L'Agence de Presse Libre people to the then solicitor general, the present Minister of Supply and Services, complaining about the break-in and accusing the RCMP of involvement in it? If so, would he now table the letter and inform the House and the people of Canada what the minister did about that allegation made to him immediately after the break-in?

[Translation]

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, as stated by the Prime Minister in the House, I shall be prepared to make a full statement on all the events which occurred at that time once the judgment is rendered by the court. Personally, Mr. Speaker, I think that legal proceedings include the right for the accused to have a full and complete defence, and when we consider this full and complete defence, it seems to me that it includes the right for the defence of the accused who have now pleaded guilty to make the fullest representations possible before the court at the time of the sentence. I have the impression that it has been understood almost implicitly among all hon. members of the House since March 31, 1976, when the then solicitor general stated that the case had been referred to the attorney general of the province of Quebec, that we should let justice have its full course before making any statement which could affect the rights of some individuals who are still before the courts now.

[English]

Mr. Lawrence: I need no lecture about the rights of the accused from the minister. In my mind the minister and the Prime Minister are confusing two essential elements here, the rights of the accused with regard to the actual break-in and the whole question of ministerial and perhaps even governmental and cabinet knowledge of this matter.

An hon. Member: Cover up.

Mr. Lawrence: Right now there can be no possible reason for not revealing this letter to the House and to the Canadian public. Does the minister know of the letter addressed to his predecessor, can he table it for us and can he tell us what the result of that allegation to that minister was at that time?

[Translation]

Mr. Fox: Mr. Speaker, if I were to accept the premises of the hon. member, I would go from question to question and make my statement right now. I believe we only have to wait a few days, that is until June 9, before the court makes a definite judgment. At that time, I intend to make a complete statement on the whole matter and the hon. member will surely be able then to ask any question he might have in mind.

ENERGY

HOME INSULATION PROGRAM AS CONSERVATION MEASURE—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a supplementary question to the Prime Minister with regard to the insulation of homes. The Prime Minister is no doubt aware that it costs about one third as much to save energy as it does to produce it. This matter was mentioned earlier by one of my colleagues. The housing department, through RRAP, does provide loans for insulation, but I am asking the Prime Minister if he will recommend to the cabinet that it take an over-all look at this matter and grant special moneys to all people who insulate, in view of the great energy saving involved. This morning on "Canada A.M." it was suggested that over $1 billion per year could be saved if every home were properly insulated.

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, if I may answer, I have already indicated that the government is considering the whole question of extending the program which was introduced in Prince Edward Island and Nova Scotia. I have made it very clear that such a program would involve a very large sum of money, on which at the present time it is not possible to put one's finger. In the meantime, I recommend to those who are contemplating insulating their houses that they go ahead and do so because, as the hon. member has pointed out, it is in their interest to do so.

PROPOSED REACTIVATION OF PRIVATE HYDROELECTRIC COMPANIES—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Stan Darling (Parry Sound-Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, the minister is well aware of the tremendous cost of producing energy. I am wondering if the government will consult with the provinces with a view to reactivating some of the private electric companies which used cheap water power and which were phased out. Granted, they would probably produce only 1,000 horsepower each, but if 100 of them were reactivated, energy would be provided, and it would probably pay the government to give X number of dollars to the provinces if they were to look into the feasibility of this. Has the minister thought about that?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): I am not familar with the details of the hon. member's proposal, but I would very much like to consider it. If the hon. member would put this proposal in writing in some greater detail, I would take a look at it. I feel this is something to which the provinces might be able to respond, and I would certainly send the proposal along.

MARITIME POWER CORPORATION—DATE OF DECISION BY FEDERAL GOVERNMENT ON TAKING EQUITY POSITION

Mr. J. Robert Howie (York-Sunbury): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. Has the minister yet made a decision on taking an equity position in the contemplated maritime power corporation?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, discussions are still going on, but it is quite clear that the federal government does contemplate taking a position.

TAR SANDS—CO-OPERATION OF ALBERTA IN DEVELOPMENT

Mr. Gordon Towers (Red Deer): Mr. Speaker, my question is also for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. In answering a question related to the development of a further project at Syncrude a few moments ago the minister said: "If I can get the co-operation of the province of Alberta". Would the minister state what he meant by that and whether the government is giving co-operation to the province of Alberta?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, the province of Alberta owns the resources of Alberta. That is the jurisdiction which decides on royalty rights, on the rate of removal of the resource from the ground, on what projects will go forward and so forth. We are trying to work out with that province arrangements which would provide greater financial incentives for a new group to develop a new tar sands plant. Under present royalty arrangements I do not think there is any likelihood that a new tar sands plant will come on stream. We are trying to negotiate with the province of Alberta a system under which there would be reduced royalties, in return for which we would consider changes in the income tax arrangements with regard to the return from such a project.

POLAR GAS PIPELINE—POSSIBILITY OF GIVING PRIORITY TO ROUTE THROUGH MANITOBA

Mr. Dan McKenzie (Winnipeg South Centre): Mr. Speaker, my question is to the same minister. Last month Mr. John D. Houlding, President and Chief Executive Officer of Polar Gas, stated that Polar Gas will file the necessary applications for permission to build a pipeline through Manitoba in September of this year. The completion of the proposed project is to be achieved within a five year period. The premier of Manitoba has stated that he does not believe such a pipeline through Manitoba would affect native people. The proposed pipeline would be up to 100 miles away from any of the communities in northern Manitoba. Is the government giving serious consideration to making the Polar Gas route the number one priority now in light of all the problems the Mackenzie Valley pipeline would present to the people of that area?

● (1200)

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I do not think the hon. member can be serious with that question. He knows there is no application before the National Energy Board at the present time with respect to a polar route. There is no question that the resources of the high Arctic are very important and one would hope that in the future it will be possible to bring them south for the benefit of Canadians. At the present time, however, there is no application before the National Energy Board upon which the government can act.

THE CANADIAN ECONOMY

UNEMPLOYMENT AMONGST GRADUATES OF UNIVERSITIES AND COLLEGES—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, I would direct my question to the Minister of Finance in the absence of the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. In view of surveys made in all parts of Canada by the CBC and newspapers which indicate a very high rate of unemployment amongst new graduates of universities and community colleges in fields such as education, social work and many others for which there has been a real demand in the community colleges, could the minister tell the House if the government is giving consideration to helping find suitable employment for these young people who are amongst the best educated this country has ever had?

Hon. Donald S. Macdonald (Minister of Finance): Mr. Speaker, I would have to confirm this in discussion with my colleague, but in general terms the government is not specifically seeking to find employment for school teachers or the particular groups mentioned by the hon. member. Most of them have looked for employment at the provincial and local level. I think this is a recognition of the fact that governments in Canada have been putting their expenses under some considerable pressure and for this reason there has been a reduction in programs. I would have to confirm with the Minister of Manpower and Immigration, however, whether the specific functional groups the hon. member has mentioned are the subject of a special examination.

Mr. Orlikow: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. In view of the fact that the university and community college programs are funded 50 per cent by the government and in view of the fact that we have spent hundreds of millions of dollars in the last six or eight years for these programs, will the minister, in co-operation with the provinces, initiate a very serious investigation into what lies ahead in these fields and whether we should be reconsidering the kind of program on which we have been spending so much money and also investigate the alternatives?

Mr. Macdonald (Rosedale): Mr. Speaker, I would have to confer with the Minister of Manpower and Immigration on that aspect.

ENERGY

DATE OF ISSUANCE OF REGULATIONS GOVERNING OIL AND GAS EXPLORATION IN THE ARCTIC

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources. I am sure the minister is aware that Mr. Fraser Allen, president of Amoco Canada Petroleum Limited, in an interview with the Globe and Mail on May 14 said that Amoco would very much like to be back in the Arctic but the circumstances are not right. Among the circumstances that are not right are the absence of firm rules governing oil and gas exploration. Mr. Allen stated that his company just cannot go back to the Arctic or anywhere without firm land regulations being enforced. May I ask the minister when he is going to present to the House the new federal tenancy and royalty regulations and legislation? Is it true that these regulations and legislation are not now expected until 1978?

Hon. Alastair Gillespie (Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, I have already answered a question with respect to that matter and indicated that I expected it would be in 1977.

[Mr. Orlikow.]

Mr. Elzinga: A supplementary question. Does the minister realize the urgency of an acceptable set of new federal land regulations in view of the fact that even if they were brought down this year Mr. Allen states that it would be 1980 or 1981 before Amoco could resume drilling oil and gas prospects in the Mackenzie River valley or the Arctic islands?

Mr. Gillespie: Mr. Speaker, I am not prepared to accept the premise of the question.

QUESTIONS ON THE ORDER PAPER

Mr. Maurice A. Dionne (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of National Defence): Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. This is the third day in a row that the government has decided not to answer questions on the order paper. Some statistics were given on the second day about their exemplary record—in their own minds—with respect to answering questions on the order paper. The questions are there because they raise certain matters in the minds of hon. members about the operations of the government, or seek information on behalf of constituents as part of the representative capacity of a member of parliament. This business of putting off answering questions for three days running is intolerable. It makes a mockery of order paper questions.

There has been a tendency on the part of the Parliamentary Secretary to the President of the Privy Council (Mr. Goodale) always to blame the hon. member for Leeds (Mr. Cossitt) for the delays. A long time ago the hon. member for Leeds exercised a right with respect to certain matters because he wanted questions answered properly in the House of Commons. Some members may object to the way he took objection and to his reasons. I am sure there are some members who would object to anything the hon. member for Leeds does. But he had a right to have his questions answered properly, and all members of parliament have a right to have their questions answered properly today, the last day we called this matter for routine proceedings, and the day before that. However, we still have not received answers to those questions. Mr. Speaker, this makes a mockery of the system.

While I am on my feet, I want to mention something else that is important, and that is the matter of starred questions which has caused some difficulty. I think it is important that all hon. members consider the possibility of changes in our Standing Orders so that starred questions which require an oral answer in the House, and therefore must have some importance, be answered within a particular period of time and that there be some rule about the length of such questions. In the event that it is impossible to give an oral answer because that would take up a good part of the House of Commons day, then the government should be made to indicate much more than that the question is a long one and therefore cannot be answered.

There should be some procedure whereby members are assured of an answer in the House and that the question is not tabled for return and forgotten. The question should not merely be answered in writing, but answered in the House by a minister or parliamentary secretary. This should be done within a particular period of time except when there is legitimate excuse beyond the fact that the answer is complicated. I appreciate the position of the parliamentary secretary. He is handed a piece of paper on which is written: "Mr. Speaker, I ask that all questions be allowed to stand." The reason is there are just no answers that are proper. I am sure members on the other side of the House, as well as on this side, have had questions on the order paper month after month after month.

Mr. Beatty: Jack Horner's go back to November.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Someone just said that the questions of the new Minister without Portfolio go back to November. I should like to see some answers to his questions. It is important that we develop this kind of procedure. I want to make it clear that I do not blame the parliamentary secretary personally. I know his position. I fault the government for putting the parliamentary secretary in the position of requesting, three days in a row, that questions be allowed to stand.

● (1210)

I suggest the government has been negligent. We are entitled to know why the parliamentary secretary has asked that these questions be allowed to stand. Are the questions too complicated to answer? Is that why some were not answered yesterday, the day before, and today? We are entitled to know. I can understand this happening once, but when it happens three days in a row we are entitled to an explanation. Many of the questions are neither long nor complicated. As I have said, the parliamentary secretary should explain why he is asking for the questions to be stood.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order. I support what my colleague has said about questions not being answered for three days. I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) yesterday why question No. 749, which deals with his department, was not answered. It was set down last October. The minister indicated he had signed the question. It was sent to the Privy Council office where, presumably, it has remained. I urge an end to this practice. If an answer to a question is available, it should be tabled. The Privy Council office should not hold up the tabling of answers. Also, questions 750 and 754, set down in October, have not been answered. Surely the answers to these questions are long overdue.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same point of order and support wholeheartedly what both my colleagues have said. May I suggest something constructive? If the government fails to answer a question within a specific time, say within two weeks or a month of its being set down, the parliamentary secretary should explain the reason for the delay. I say this for a particular reason. Constituents often ask members of parliament to raise such questions because information furnished in the answers influences business decisions. I have had experience of this.

If the government does not release the information or is tardy in answering questions, the end result may be that business opportunities are lost. If the parliamentary secretary, after two weeks or one month, could explain why the question has not been answered, the member or his constituent could seek other channels of information. If the government cannot answer an order paper question within a couple of weeks, say, I suggest someone in authority should immediately communicate with the member of parliament asking the question and say why the question cannot be answered within a reasonable period.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The suggestions put forward today ought to be directed to the Standing Committee on Procedure and Organization. Suggestions have been made about the use of starred questions and the responses to them, and about the response or reaction to such questions if they cannot be answered within a few days. I am sure those worth-while suggestions will be borne in mind.

The practice is that the parliamentary secretary asks that questions be allowed to stand. It is improper to seek any explanation of that from any member of the government or to permit any member of the government to explain it. The Standing Order requires all such questions to be dropped from the order paper if they are not allowed to stand. Therefore, with the consent of the government they are allowed to stand, which means they are not dropped from the order paper. That procedure is followed each day for the benefit of the questioner, not for the benefit of the government. Therefore, I think the matter ought to stand, with suggestions for improvement to the procedure committee as outlined today in valid contributions.

AIR CANADA ACT, 1976

MEASURE RESPECTING REORGANIZATION OF AIR CANADA

The House resumed, from Wednesday, May 25, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lang that Bill C-17, respecting the reorganization of Air Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. David Orlikow (Winnipeg North): Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday last we discussed two bills to do with air transport, the aeronautics bill, which we passed, and Bill C-17 dealing with the reorganization of Air Canada. As I said on Wednesday, this government's approach to transportation policy is fundamentally wrong. One week we discuss freight rates, another week a bill on railways, and another week a bill on airlines. Clearly, this country needs a comprehensive transportation policy which will promote the most efficient way of moving people and goods, encourage the conservation of energy, reduce pollution and make the most efficient use of manpower. We must use our airlines, railways, trucks, buses and private cars in the most efficient manner. This we have not done. By introducing bills of this sort the government is putting off, perhaps for years, the time when we can draw up the necessary and comprehensive plans which will enable us to use most efficiently all modes of transportation.

As I said on Wednesday, this simple bill will change the structure of Air Canada. On Wednesday we gave second reading to Bill C-46 to amend the Aeronautics Act. I suppose we shall today give Bill C-17 second reading. This bill merely changes the organization of Air Canada. Mr. Speaker, we are considering this legislation in isolation, as it were, ignoring the tremendous changes taking place, particularly in the field of air transport. Those changes have taken place without sparking any discussion in parliament. So far as I know, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) has not made a single public statement on what is happening or what is the government's position. Obviously, some changes could not take place if the government did not approve. We do not know the basis for some changes or what their effect will be.

In this regard I direct the attention of hon. members to an important change taking place in the field of air transportation. Hon. members who read today's edition of the Montreal Gazette no doubt will have noted that Pacific Western Airlines has completed a deal to purchase Transair. I mentioned on Wednesday that had the minister possessed the authority which he will possess when the aeronautics bill is passed, he would have prevented the government of Alberta from purchasing Pacific Western Airlines. That is a power he will have when we complete the passage of the aeronautics bill to which we gave second reading on Wednesday.

I am not opposed, as the minister for some considerable time said he was, to the idea of a provincial government getting into the air transportation business. I find it interesting that the minister should now have agreed to the expansion of Pacific Western Airlines, although it is owned by a provincial government, and I wonder what his response would have been and what the response of members of the official opposition would have been had it been the NDP government of British Columbia which had purchased PWA instead of the Conservative government of Alberta. However, that purchase has been made and, as I say, we are not opposed to provincial governments being in the air transportation business. But now Pacific Western Airlines, owned by the Alberta government, is proceeding to complete a deal through which it will purchase Transair. Transair is a company based in Winnipeg. It has a route into northern Ontario, a route between Winnipeg and Toronto, a route into the Northwest Territories. Suddenly we find that the Minister of Transport, who was long opposed to the government of Alberta purchasing PWA, approves and encourages the deal. Apparently he has given some commitment, verbal at least, that there would be sweeteners to Pacific Western Airlines if it put this deal through. One newspaper story said that PWA was purchasing Transair for less than it would cost the company to purchase one new DC-10.

It is interesting they should be able to do this and that they should be doing it with the approval of the Minister of Transport. According to the Winnipeg Free Press of May 10, the Premier of Manitoba, in which province the airline has its business office and overhaul facilities, was not shown the courtesy of being informed by the Minister of Transport of what was taking place or what had been agreed to. The Winnipeg Free Press reports that at the sitting of the legislature, when the news had become public, Premier Schreyer said he would raise with the federal minister some disturbing questions about the merger. The news story goes on to say:

He told the legislature he had tried in vain to reach Lang Monday because he intended to speak to him that day.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): He was probably flying around.

Mr. Orlikow: He was probably flying around in that $750,000 jet aircraft of his. The report continues:

Schreyer said he was told by federal officials that the merger hung on whether Transair would give up its Toronto-Winnipeg run in return for some of Air Canada's viable western routes. He told the legislature this raised some disturbing questions about why such routes were not offered to Transair previously.

Mr. Speaker, surely when we are discussing a bill about Air Canada, the Minister of Transport could have used his time while introducing the measure to tell us which western routes Air Canada would be turning over to Pacific Western Airlines. Surely the minister could have given some information to the Premier of Manitoba who, according to the Prime Minister

(Mr. Trudeau), has been more willing to think as a Canadian rather than as premier of one province than any other premier in this country. Yet he did not even show him the courtesy of telling him what kind of deal he was making behind his back. This is a deal which is just completed, and it is one about which we ought to be given a good deal of information.

Today's Montreal Gazette carries a story on the front page of its business section, the headline of which reads: "Sale of CP Air to Pacific Western under discussion: federal official". Let me quote a couple of paragraphs from the story by Nicholas Hills.

Pacific Western, the Alberta government-owned airline will next take control of CP Air, the money-losing subsidiary of Canadian Pacific Limited, industry sources say.

The story goes on:

Rumour or not, good airline or not, there is one inescapable fact: Canadian Pacific is fed up with its airline losing money. The losses of $9.8 million in 1975-76 and $6.4 million in 1974-75 are a drag on the giant's corporate image, let alone its books.

With its recent acquisition of Transair Limited of Winnipeg, PWA is now the second airline in the country. It basically controls regional air travel in the west and runs head-to-head against CP Air on many DC routes including those into Prince George, Terrace and Prince Rupert.

It may make some sense to have competition on those routes, but if PWA purchases CP Air it will be in direct competition on the transcontinental route with Air Canada. So you will have the strange position of one airline owned by the federal government which carries passengers from Victoria to St. John's and another airline, PWA, owned by the Alberta government which will be moving passengers from Victoria to Montreal, both of which, in the last couple of years, have been losing money.

Hon. members to my right cannot say everybody knows that a government-owned operation cannot be run efficiently so we should not be surprised it is losing money. Here we have a privately-owned airline which has lost money in the last two years. There are several reasons for this. First, there is the tremendous increase in the cost of fuel, an increase in the neighbourhood of 300 per cent. Every airline in the world is in trouble, and virtually every airline, whether owned by its government or privately, is now being subsidized. That is part of the reason. The other part of the reason is the cost of air travel. Most planes flying in Canada and in other countries have substantial excess capacity, to the extent of having 30, 40 or even 50 per cent of their seats unfilled. This raises another question which we should examine.

● (1230)

The original decision of the Conservative government, which was expanded by the Liberal government, was to have competition, to have two airlines operating on transcontinental routes across Canada. We wonder whether this was a wise policy or whether we would not have been better off to follow the policy elaborated under a Liberal government by that great businessman and free enterpriser, C. D. Howe, where one transcontinental airline owned and operated by the people of Canada would operate in Canada for service and not for profit.

The acquisition of Transair by PWA will have vital consequences for the people of western Canada, regardless whether PWA is privately owned, as it was until a few years ago, or publicly owned, as it is now by the government of Alberta. The possible acquisition by PWA of CP Air will also have tremendous consequences for the people of Canada. I suggest that the least the people of Canada have the right to expect from the Minister of Transport is that he should tell them what is happening and explain the decisions that have been reached. If consideration has been given by CP Air to sell the company to Pacific Western Airlines, then what is the position of the government of Canada, and what are the reasons for the sale?

We have had not a word from the minister in this regard. He does not want discussion of public issues. He wants to make decisions in consultation with a few senior bureaucrats in his department, who have been consistently wrong on many of the most important decisions which have been made, as well, I suppose, as in consultation with some of the big business executives with whom the minister is obviously much more comfortable than he is with members of parliament or members of the public.

These are matters which need to be discussed now but which should have been discussed long before. This minister should have given us an explanation when he introduced the bill on Wednesday, rather than non-committal chatting concerning a few details. Until we have this kind of discussion of transportation and air policy, the members of this party will oppose this bill and any others which the minister brings forth.

Mr. Sinclair Stevens (York-Simcoe): Mr. Speaker, in joining in this debate on Bill C-17 I am rather compelled to repeat what I said in the House during debate on Bill C-54, the excise tax bill which we discussed last week. At that time I said that this government has shown a remarkable knack for bringing legislation before the House the provisions of which, for reasons known only to the government, end up 180 degrees off course.

The bill before the House today says, in effect, that Air Canada has what Air Canada's management feels is an uncomfortable weight of debt and somehow Air Canada should be restructured so as to relieve the corporation of the carrying charges of that debt. That is a nice way to express it. As we know, Air Canada officials have often come forward in committee and said they feel that if they were freed from the debt load they would be able to show relatively better earnings.

Having made that point, it is interesting how those who believe in state-run enterprises like Air Canada and love to posture this type of activity also love to cloud the issue and to disguise the mismanagement which is usually found in most state-run operations. The hard fact is that the reason Air Canada has such a heavy debt, which is owing to the government of Canada through the CNR, is that they have been running substantial losses. They are now comparing their operation with comparable airlines in the United States, and they say that the capital ratios in the United States so far as debt is concerned are higher than their ratio; that somehow this should be adjusted almost magically by the government's accepting the capitalization of the debt owing to them.

The point the minister does not make clear, and the point the officials of Air Canada do not make clear either, is that the capital ratio they refer to in respect of private carriers in the United States was not something given to those concerns by a government. It was not something that was even paid in in the main by the shareholders of those concerns. It was the accumulated earnings which those airlines were able to build up over the years which gave them the wherewithal to be effective, viable entities in sharp contrast to Air Canada.

Later in my remarks I want to draw a contrast, for example, between Air Canada and Northwest Airlines, which is a very similar operation run, of course, as a private concern in the United States. In these two cases roughly the same revenue pours into the companies, roughly the same number of air miles are flown, and roughly the same number of aeroplanes are owned by the two companies. But Northwest Airlines made, in the period to which I shall be referring later, a profit of about $100 million, whereas Air Canada lost $20 million.

The number one point which stands out in contrast when you compare those two companies is the number of staff of the two airlines. Air Canada, with an approximate revenue equal to that of Northwest Airlines, has almost double the number of employees Northwest Airlines has. To me, that, in a nutshell, is the problem with state-run enterprises. Profit is not a motive. They realize they have government coffers to fall back on, so if it is a question of hiring a few more people, why not? The fact is that when a bureaucrat sees evidence of profit in a Crown corporation, he almost gets into a state of hysteria in making sure expenses increase fast enough so that the profit will not continue.

One of the things I am concerned about in the bill before us is that if we capitalize this debt, which is really notional, there will not even be notional charging of interest by the government to Air Canada from now on. In short, if this notional debt of Air Canada stands at, say, $70 million, just think what a boon it will be to Air Canada. If that is capitalized, they will no longer have to reflect that interest cost and, in short, they will be given a $60 million to $70 million subsidization by the government of Canada. Mark my words, if Air Canada is allowed to continue with no further restriction and no attempt to privatize it or somehow make it more conscious of the need to earn a profit, that subsidization will be used up in a matter of years and they will be back into a deficit position with some new rationalization as to why they are not viable.

Having made those few preliminary remarks, I would like to state that in the excise bill I have referred to we saw where the government somehow managed to devise a tax on tourism. I am referring to the air transportation tax. They devised that tax at a time when our travel accounts are in critical deficit. I am pleased the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) is in the House. I notice he is reading his green paper—I hope not for the first time—on the decontrol mechanism which he is intending to explain at a press conference later this afternoon.

Is it not odd, when we have run up a $1.2 billion tourist deficit in this country and when the Financial Post estimates if the trend continues it could be a $10 billion deficit some time in the 1980s, that the government chooses this time to bring in a foreign air transportation tax to cover what they say are the user costs of the airport facilities? As was raised at the time the excise bill was before us, the fact is that the costs they refer to are in many ways costs we do not have to incur in this country. Airports could run on a profitable basis if there were better direction at the Ottawa level.

As far as the government's actions are concerned, we saw their refusal to abolish or decrease the sales tax on smaller, more energy-efficient cars. That was a measure which we felt would spur the economy and provide a direct and positive incentive to energy conservation. We saw this 180-degree turnaround as far as the government is concerned in this bill which is now up for debate at second reading. This is a bill which is supposedly designed to put Air Canada on a viable commercial and financial basis competitive with privately-run airlines. In essence, it would bring Air Canada under increasingly direct government control. It is an anomaly, I would suggest, of this administration which can be so successful at drafting legislation totally and completely opposed to the very spirit and aims which produced the legislation in the first place.

Few, if any, in this House wish to see Air Canada limping along with its wings clipped back by continuing losses. They have even given up their peanuts on certain of the flights which I have been on. I do not know whether it was because they were being called internationally the "peanut airline" or whether this is another measure of restraint on their part.

An hon. Member: They were American peanuts.

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): They are mad at Jimmy Carter.

Mr. Stevens: My colleague from the other party says they are mad at Jimmy Carter. That may be so, but I am not sure. Be that as it may, I do not think anyone wants to see a state-run operation such as Air Canada in a loss position. That is not a good advertisement for the nation. The losses Air Canada is referring to have grown in the past three years from $9.2 million in 1974 to $13 million in 1975, and last year the loss was down a bit, to $10.4 million. All of us, with the possible exception of the socialists to my left, want to see Air Canada operate on a sound, efficient and profitable footing. In this connection, at least, we support those provisions which would reduce Air Canada's staggering debt equity ratio and reduce its cost of financing.

Having said that, I would emphasize that hon. members should take a good, solid look at why that debt structure has been allowed to arise in Air Canada and should not assume it was something which could not have been avoided. What is astounding is that the government would pursue these laudable goals in the framework of the legislation before us today, that is, the framework of Bill C-17 which has the laudable goal of trying to put Air Canada on a more viable basis. I would say the framework is not suitable for what the government claims they are attempting to do.

At present we have in this country an estimated 1,200 state-owned and operated concerns. Few, if any, of these are models of efficiency or sound financial management. One need only read the Auditor General's report to confirm what I am saying. Yet the government is proposing today that we get Air Canada to straighten up and fly right by removing it from the control of the Canadian National Railways and placing it firmly under the control of the Minister of Transport. In our minds, this is taking our national airline from the frying pan and pitching it squarely into the fire. Hon. members must remember who it is that is proposing to run Air Canada.

An hon. Member: The Post Office.

Mr. Stevens: Yes, Mr. Speaker, it is the same people who run our Post Office. Perhaps that is the best evidence of how inefficient they are at running a business. It is the same government which has demonstrated such acumen in developing mammoth airports that no one wanted or even needed. It is the same people who have master-minded such massive blunders as Pickering, where they have tied up $110 million in a stillborn airport. What is even worse is that they have taken 18,000 acres, 90 per cent of which is class one agricultural land, and have virtually put it into disuse as far as farming activities are concerned. Take Mirabel—and I wish somebody would: surely that is a classic white elephant so misconceived that airports in the United States are now using it as a drawing card for rerouting business.

I hope hon. members have noticed the ad which is now being run by the airport authority in Boston. It is openly advertising in Canadian magazines that Canadian travellers should use the Boston airport because it is more convenient than going to Mirabel.

Mr. Fox: That is balderdash, and you know it.

Mr. Stevens: Well, the Solicitor General (Mr. Fox) may call it balderdash, but the fact is that it is a clever ad. It shows the Simpson family thanking whoever was responsible for the 1½-hour trip through scenic Canada, but they say they thought they were on their way to Europe. The airport authority in Boston is simply saying, "There is no need to waste time travelling for an hour and a half, whether you like the scenery or not. If you want to get to Europe rather quickly, come through Boston and we will expedite your trip to Europe".

Mr. Fox: The moral of the story is wrong. They could have stayed in Canada and had a good time.

Mr. Stevens: Yes, they could have stayed in Canada and had a good time. It is kind of hard to follow this government sometimes. We have the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) who tells people who are out of work to go to another country to find a job, and then we have the Solicitor General who says that somehow they should be controlled and contained in Canada so they can have a good time here. How dictatorial can you get? It is rather bewildering. The Solicitor General tells us that Mirabel is in his riding. I understand why he feels he really has troubles. I thought his current problems with certain of the operations in his department were enough to trouble him, but if he has Mirabel as well, my heart goes out to him. Maybe we should take it a little easier on him in the House after this.

• (1250)

An hon. Member: Pickering is in your riding.

Mr. Stevens: To continue what I was saying, let me point out that the Mirabel fiasco led to the loss of $56 million in the operation of that airport last year. I am simply citing these examples of these wizards in business who now say, "Give us direct control of Air Canada and we will whip it into shape". Let me cite another example. This is the same government that is putting together the de Havilland Canadair so-called aerospace rationalization in the country. We were told in committee that they have approximately $150 million tied up in the purchase price of de Havilland, plus the various grants and loans they have made to de Havilland to produce the Dash-7. They are now at the point where they have to sell 250 of those Dash-7s just to break even. They have sold one at last count—

Mr. Blais: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I thought we were dealing with the Air Canada bill. I looked at the provisions of the bill and I do not see that the takeover of de Havilland has anything to do with the bill. I hope the hon. member will keep to the principle of the bill, which is usually what is debated on second reading.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. I happened to be looking at Beauchesne's and perhaps I should read the appropriate citation to the House. I know it is the responsibility of the Speaker to insist that members keep their remarks relevant to the subject matter of the debate. However, citation 119(3) reads:

> Relevancy is not easy to define. A wrong comprehension of it may have a serious effect on the freedom of speech. Members are often deprived of their right to speak on pretext that their remarks are irrelevant when as a matter of fact they refer to matters perhaps remote but yet related, even indirectly, to the question under debate.

I have been following the comments of the hon. member, and I hope he will contain his remarks within the confines of the bill.

Mr. Stevens: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I do not doubt that the Postmaster General (Mr. Blais) is a little touchy. I cited his operation as a classic example of mismanagement so far as business is concerned, and as he has to live with his $700 million deficit—which, incidentally, used to be a profit back in 1970—I can well understand that he does not like to hear about another such Crown corporation or similar agency. But I am quite in agreement that it is relevant to cite examples of government mismanagement.

Mr. Blais: I rise on a point of order, Mr. Speaker. I suppose that the hon. member should cite, as well, the operations of the Bank of Western Canada as being an example of a properly managed private enterprise.

Mr. Stevens: If the Postmaster General would like to have a debate in the House on what he calls the West Bank, by which, I presume, he means a bank in Canada as opposed to one in the Middle East, I would be willing to have that debate. In fact, I would welcome it to show the contrast between the minister's operation and the operation of that entity.

I was citing the government's mismanagement in various activities, their colossal blunders, and I can only conclude that portion of my remarks by saying that I do not think it shows they have the credentials to run Air Canada directly. One can only guess at the outcome, but if this reorganization of Air Canada is in line with this administration's track record in urban transportation, interurban rail service, airport development and management, or any other facet of the government's transportation policies, then the first 40 years of Air Canada's history may well be its last.

Hon. members will recall that the government, in the Speech from the Throne and again in the white paper entitled "The Way Ahead", promised increased reliance on the private sector. It was stated in the throne speech:

In a further effort to reduce the size of government as well as expand the range of opportunities for private enterprise, all federal programs will be reviewed to identify those government activities which could be transferred to the private sector without reducing the quality of service to the public.

Later in the speech the government again promised to "promote greater freedom and efficiency in the marketplace." Still later, in defence of its so called "middle road" between complete reliance on the free market and socialist intervention in the system, the government stated:

—that choice also implies that the working of the market must be improved and that less costly, less interventionist ways must be found to pursue social goals.

We welcomed these words, hoping they signalled a return to sanity, a recognition that the economy could sustain no more excessive government flab and grab. Subsequently, when successive news reports indicated the minister was investigating means of turning over Air Canada to private hands, we thought this would be the logical place to begin a constructive diminution of government control. Frankly, we were interested to see what would be the government's suggested method of making Air Canada a private enterprise. After all, the minister himself stated in his opening remarks to this bill: "Air Canada is no longer a fledging airline and no longer needs special protective measures". We had hoped that by preparing Air Canada—now 40 years old—to fly on its own, the government was setting the pace for other divestment of unnecessary state ownership. But we were wrong, for when we examine this bill we find that Air Canada has been merely shifted to ministerial management. We have only the minister's word that such direct government management will result in sound commercial and financial viability. As I said, given the track record of this minister and his government, that word is not enough.

May I call it one o'clock, Mr. Speaker?

[Mr. Stevens.]

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order, please. It being one o'clock, I do now leave the chair until 2 p.m.

At one o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 2 p.m.

Mr. Stevens: Mr. Speaker, before lunch I was stating that I felt in some ways members must be quite sharp in their observations concerning the bill before us, in that I think it is once again the type of rationalization that the government likes to go through to cover mistakes in the operations of one of the Crown corporations, in this case Air Canada.

I should like to state, also, that I believe the provisions of Bill C-17 are so wide and encompassing that the cabinet will have virtually complete control over the board of directors of Air Canada if the legislation goes through in the form in which it is now before us. Cloaked in language that purports a new era of Air Canada competition with private airlines, the bill, in its very broadness, merely points the way to massive interventions in the operation of Air Canada. In the minister's own words, the bill "provides for direct government ownership"; and, again, "Air Canada would be required to comply with direction from the governor in council." This direct ministerial control over Air Canada is unfortunate. It is businessmen, not bureaucrats, who know how to run a commercially successful enterprise.

The specifics of this new arrangement as far as the bill and the minister's speech are concerned are to come at a later date. But given the fact that the government has failed to bring the annual report of Air Canada for each of the three previous years before committee, we can only surmise that it will be even harder to scrutinize the airline's operations under the cloak of ministerial privilege. Clearly, the government is playing a game of monopoly again and, as usual, it spells out the rules only as it suits them and only when it suits their timing. It is playing monopoly with billions of taxpayers' dollars, secure in the knowledge that a multimillion blunder here or there will not break them as it would private industry. Being government, it can simply send taxpayers digging deeper into their pockets to cover government mistakes.

The government is playing big business with all the assets of what will surely be one of the world's most lavishly capitalized airlines—and I emphasize this. It will not have the risk, as far as operation is concerned, that most of the world's airlines have to accept as privately-run companies. It will be one of the world's most lavishly capitalized airlines, as I have stated, if this bill goes through. Frankly, we cannot find another airline that will have such naked capital to work with as Air Canada will if the amendment proposed by the minister sees the light of day.

It is an approach we have seen all too often in this House. The government, with their fondness for Crown corporations—as we know, they are planning two more in VIA rail and marine transport—are acting as would-be "captains of industry" with someone else's money. Too often these experiments go sour and prove to be wasteful and expensive exercises in bureaucratic bungling. Frequently, they are counterproductive and even hurt the industries they are supposed to be helping and, in some cases, spearheading development—PetroCan, for example. Sometimes they are even swollen and flabby retreats for party faithful: an incorporated pork-barrel of incompetence and privilege. Our experience with these state-run companies in the past clearly shows that what is needed for Air Canada is not another Crown corporation but systematic and phased conversion into a private concern. Free market competition and management by those who have a personal stake in the enterprise would get our national airline off the ground again and back into the profit column.

I referred earlier to the comparisons that can be made between the operational losses of Air Canada and the profits being made by private carriers in North America. Some time ago I saw a report that Northwest Airlines had a net profit of some $60 million in 1974. What struck me was not that Northwest had made a profit—that is fairly common among the privately-run American airlines—but, rather, that on closer examination we see that Northwest is similar in size and operation to Air Canada. Both operated in 1975 with revenues of under $1 billion. In Air Canada's case it was $957 million, and in Northwest's case it was slightly more than $800 million. Both operate the same size fleet, covering similar route distances. Air Canada ran 120 aircraft in 1975, while Northwest ran 113. Both pay, with two major exceptions, similar operational expenditures, including rental expenses which in 1975 were $10.4 million for Air Canada and $10.6 million for Northwest Airlines. Where they differ, however, is in profit—and they differ there in a shocking way. Northwest made more than $100 million in two years, while Air Canada incurred net losses of $22 million in the same two years.

Why is that, Mr. Speaker? Surely, when considering Bill C-17—which in a sense is a cover-up of the previous loss Air Canada has been incurring—we must ask ourselves why this airline has so consistently been in a loss position. No doubt there are several reasons, but chief among them is the fact that Northwest Airlines operated with a staff of slightly more than one-half that of Air Canada—11,268, compared to Air Canada's 21,293. Second, Northwest was faced with long-term debt financing amounting to $271.9 million in 1975, while Air Canada was saddled with more than $1 billion.

The 1975 Air Canada annual report drives home the importance of these two operating expenses. On page 3 we find that "wages and benefits rose by $45 million that year or 13 per cent and accounted for 45 per cent of the increase in operating expenses in 1975." On page 4 we find that "long-term debt increase rose by more than $8 million or 11 per cent". Page 5 of the report says that "if Air Canada had a more conventional debt-equity ratio the company would have reduced expenses by more than $30 million and would have shown a net profit of about $2.9 million." Mr. Speaker, these two excessive expenditures, bloated payrolls and astronomical debt, are commonplace among Crown corporations and this, I believe, is the real story behind Air Canada's plight.

I referred to Northwest Airlines, and some may think I singled out a certain airline in the United States for unfair comparison. But I could refer equally well to other American air carriers, either bigger or smaller than Air Canada. In Moody's reports I cannot find a scheduled airline in the United States operating at a loss.

Mr. Gilbert: Tell us about the Canadian Pacific.

Mr. Stevens: Yet here Air Canada is telling us that it needs to convert its debt in order to make a profit. Consider the position of American Airlines Incorporated. It made a net profit of $56 million on total revenues of approximately $2 billion. Interestingly enough, American Airlines have retained earnings of $263 million. Their capital, incidentally, is $28 million and they have a paid-in surplus in addition. American Airlines in past years earned enough to pay taxes, pay dividends and retain earnings. Its retained earnings position at the end of last year was $263 million. Consider Air Canada's balance sheet. As of December 31 last year, Air Canada had retained earnings of $18 million. Contrast those retained earnings with the $263 million in retained earnings of American Airlines. In addition, Air Canada borrowed extensively from the government of Canada. It needed to borrow money, not having accumulated retained earnings.

Now it says to the government, "Do not ask us to pay interest any longer on the debt. We will be better off if you increase our capitalization and do not ask us to pay interest." There is an important contrast in all this. American Airlines has been able to accumulate capital, whereas Air Canada has not. American Airlines has followed the free enterprise approach, not the socialist or bureaucratic approach. Operating under principles of private enterprise, the airline competed, earned money and accumulated capital, which in turn will permit it to be more profitable in future. We can do the same. More profits will mean more jobs for Canadians. Unfortunately, few state-run operations have the incentive to drive for profits and earnings.

Let me mention other airlines. Eastern Airlines, in the year ended last December, made a net profit of $46 million on total operating revenues of $1.8 billion. Let there be no doubt: the company must pay interest on its debt; it borrowed from the general public, not from Washington. It went for its funds to the open market. I touch on this point to emphasize that the loss figures of Air Canada show only part of the story.

Air Canada, the largest air carrier in the country, is the biggest user of our airports. Our airports are subsidized and to that extent the airport subsidy is a subsidy for Air Canada. Air Canada benefits from the subsidy to the extent it uses subsidized airports. I suggest, in this regard, the government hides from Canadians the true cost of Air Canada operations and the misoperation of our airports.

I said earlier that the Post Office was marginally profitable in 1970. Apparently it is running a deficit of about $700 million. The same is true of our airports. Our airports were run profitably in 1970, but they are currently being run about $100 million in the red if you include the Mirabel loss of $56 million a year. This must stop. We, as members of parliament, must press the government to be more prudent with Canadian taxpayers' money. I say this because when the government gets into difficulty, it tends to favour its Crown corporations, or it requires Crown corporations to bail it out, so to speak. Let me give some examples. Not long ago, for reasons still not clear, the Department of Transport built terminal 2 in Toronto. Please remember that Air Canada and other carriers had used terminal 1. The department built terminal 2, expecting international carriers to use it. When the terminal was completed and the international carriers learned how expensive it would be to use terminal 2, they told the government they would not use it. There was no way American Airlines, KLM, Lufthansa and other international carriers were going to use terminal 2, because it was exorbitantly expensive.

What happened? The government turned to Air Canada, a Crown corporation, and told it to use terminal 2. That terminal is probably the most unsatisfactory terminal of its kind in North America, and Air Canada is forced to use it because it is a Crown corporation. Therefore, because the other carriers refused to use terminal 2, Air Canada was forced to use that white elephant. I could give many examples to show the unfortunate relationship between government and Crown corporations. Let me give a second example to show how effectively and efficiently airports are used in the United States. In that country all airports come under the jurisdiction of local authorities. For example, the New York airport authority has jurisdiction over Kennedy international airport, LaGuardia and Newark. Those airports all make money, and the reason is simple. Before an airport is extended or a new airport built, the local authority seeks the assurance of carriers who will use the airports that the airport will generate sufficient revenues to retire the debt to be incurred for carrying out the improvements or extensions.

We do not do this in Canada. The government of Canada, operating in a centralized way, hands down a decision from Ottawa to Montreal, Vancouver, Toronto, Calgary, Edmonton, and so on. The government makes up its mind as to what facility should be built, finances the building of the facility and is surprised when carriers say, "We cannot make a profit from the new facility" and refuse to use it. The next step is to turn to the Canadian public and say, "Now you must pay user tax to make up for our mistakes". Why should we be ending up with the largest airports in North America being financed at the cost of the taxpayers or of those using the airports? The Chicago airport authority told me, for example, that they do not intend to build additional facilities in Chicago, as far as they can see, until 1990 or 2000 because they do not think they will need them. Here we are speaking of O'Hare airport in Chicago which is handling seven times the number of passengers that are using Malton. But the Department of Transport is saying a new airport is needed in Toronto, notwithstanding the fact there is only one-seventh of the activity there is in Chicago, where they say frankly that they cannot afford a new airport.

● (1430)

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I am sorry to interrupt the hon. member, but his time has expired. Is there consent to allow the hon. member to complete his remarks?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Stevens: I thank hon. members for their courtesy. I shall be brief. It is a common trend, I would suggest, for companies such as I have been referring to—Air Canada, for example—to run up huge expenses. They go heavily into debt and eventually they come to us saying, "Let us off the hook". One need only compare the poor performance of Air Canada with that of Northwest Airlines or, for that matter, any other U.S. or privately-run airline such as North Central, Braniff, Southern Airways or Eastern Airlines, to see the difference which private control makes.

Leaner operations, smaller staffs, more efficient management—these are the trademarks of private enterprise, as opposed to enterprises run by public agencies commonly known as Crown corporations. I stated earlier there are now more than 1,200 federally-owned concerns in Canada, and we are still counting. To date we have poured more than $21 million into these enterprises, including hundreds of millions of dollars sunk into Air Canada. I suggest it is time to stop counting and to start subtracting. It is time to begin divesting ourselves of some of these Crown corporations, rather than creating new ones.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, the last statement made by my hon. friend from York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens) is a significant one not only in terms of the present number of Crown agencies and corporations but in terms of suggested approach to national problems. If you look at developments in the last few years, Mr. Speaker, I believe you will agree with me that whenever there is a problem, whether it involves a certain field of business, transportation or whatever, governments everywhere, and this government in particular, appear to have decided that the only answer is an approach by way of a different from of the public service, namely, the Crown corporation.

I am not arguing that there is no place within the structure of a nation for government agencies, but there has been a growing temptation to look toward the public sector as an easy way out. I cannot believe that a country as vibrant as ours is supposed to be, or could be, a country as rich in human and material resources as ours, must go back to what I call a bottom line position, one which suggests that business does not have the initiative or the spark or the trustworthiness to secure the desired objectives. Unfortunately, this is an attitude which is easy to promote.

This morning we heard the hon. member for Winnipeg North (Mr. Orlikow) trying to justify the operations of a Crown agency by saying that even airlines in the private sector are finding themselves in difficulty today.

Mr. Gilbert: Canadian Pacific.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): This afternoon he had the opportunity to hear a speech by my hon. friend from York-Simcoe who clearly showed that generalization to be untrue. Now that the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) has decided to interject by mentioning Canadian Pacific, I would remind him that the article to which the hon. member for Winnipeg North referred contained an interesting passage. Talking about the position of CP Air, that article had something to say which is of particular relevance to this argument. Perhaps the position of a private airline trying to compete against an airline whose operation is controlled by the government is an unique one. I quote from the article:

Apart from the fact that it is only allowed a quarter of the domestic market, CP Air finds itself on the outside looking in on many fat international routes. And even after it has won a lucrative service, Ottawa often dilutes the economic effect.

The Vancouver-based airline's service into the San Francisco, Los Angeles area is a case in point. This was a good money-maker for CP Air until the Liberal government allowed Air Canada to fly into the same region from Alberta thus syphoning off all those passengers who used to fly from Edmonton and Calgary to Vancouver and then take CP Air into California.

I am not standing here as an advocate of CP Air. They can be the advocates of their own cause. What I am saying is that the hon. member's remarks ought not to mislead us because, as the hon. member for York-Simcoe mentioned, many of these privately-owned airlines, enterprises which do not have unlimited funds upon which to draw, which have payrolls to meet and which pay taxes, federal, state and municipal, are making a profit. It is folly to say it cannot be done. It may be the case that CP Air finds itself in a little difficult position when it must compete, even on the level I have mentioned, with an airline operated by a government which has an all-pervading authority in regard to where that carrier may operate.

I started by saying that I had listened very carefully to the speech of my colleague, who I think has put his finger on one of the problems, namely, the belief there is in this country that only the government can carry out operations efficiently. The bill under consideration separates Air Canada from the Canadian National Railways, something for which the Progressive Conservative party has asked for over a period of many years. There is nothing at all wrong with the attempt being made to diversify the operations of Air Canada so it can pursue related areas of endeavour. But what concerns me is the demonstrated inefficiency of this government to manage its business enterprises, on the one hand, and, as the Auditor General has pointed out, the inability of this government to operate in an efficient accounting way.

This proposed diversification will be carried out under the aegis of a board of directors which will be appointed by, and subject to the direction of, the very group of men and women in this country who have been castigated by the Auditor General as among the most inefficient administrators in the history of this country. That is the tragedy of this piece of legislation. I look upon it as something we will have to watch. We will have to see that this board of directors does not become merely a convenient burial ground for the party faithful.

The Minister of Transport has said that diversification is a good thing, and I happen to agree. But if Air Canada is going to diversify, if it is going to change its share structure so it can compete equally in a financial way with other corporations, if it is to be subject to the same licensing provisions and its objects are to be broadened, and if, as someone said earlier in this debate, it is going to get off its knees and start to run instead of walk, and perhaps to fly, then I do not think the public of this country are going to stand by and watch the same failure of management which has befallen other Crown corporations and government operations.

Is there anything in the proposals in this bill which indicates that all of a sudden, because of a restructuring of Air Canada and its objects, there is going to be a different check made of its operations on behalf of the people of Canada, who will have to carry the freight for the present deficit, or for deficits which are to come—because there is no indication that the government is going to change its operation, except on paper?

Is there any indication that this parliament is going to be treated in any different way in terms of its being able to call upon this Crown corporation, to a large extent operated by public funds, to account? Can we be assured by this bill that it will become the rule of both law and tradition that this Crown corporation will automatically have its annual reports and financial statements sent to a committee of this House to be questioned, persued and examined? Is there any provision in this bill providing that Air Canada officials will be any more subject to scrutiny under the rules of this House than they are today? Not one word, not one whit, Mr. Speaker.

There is nothing in this piece of legislation which in any way gets at the heart of the operations of this Crown corporation and others. So do not let anyone think that this bill is the last word. It is far from that. There is some question that it is even the first word regarding what has to be done about the operations of this government in a field which is successfully occupied in North America by the private sector. Let not one member sit back and think that things are going to be any different.

What else does the bill provide? Is there to be an independent board of directors? No, Mr. Speaker. The board of directors will be the creature of the government. The Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) will be able to stand up, like the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) and other ministers, and say, "I have nothing to say about this; it is in the hands of the board of directors of Air Canada". Therefore, he will be able to slough-off ministerial responsibility for the corporation, as is the case with a whole host of other corporations. All of us have had questions answered in this way in the House.

In terms of the auditing provisions of the bill, when the minister made his speech in the House on May 25 he said, as reported at page 5945 of Hansard:

Associated with this change, the present arrangement whereby the auditors of CN are by legislation also the auditors for Air Canada should be discontinued. Therefore the bill provides for the appointment of Air Canada's auditors by the governor in council—

What assurance to the House is that in terms of financial accounting? Auditors for other organizations have been appointed by the governor in council, but no annual reports from some of those organizations have been before the committee. In spite of this kind of appointment, what did the Auditor General say about it? He said that the financial accounting of this government and the use of public funds—these are almost his words—has amounted to a breach of public trust. What assurance does this bill give that there will be any change? None whatsoever.

Those are some of the questions which will have to be examined in a much broader way when this bill goes to committee. I do not believe the people of Canada any longer believe that with respect to management of business affairs which could be just as well left to the private sector the government has done as well, or that any government could do as well, as properly motivated people in the private sector.

As a result of the movement of governments at all levels toward becoming involved in what was normally the preserve, reasonably regulated of course, but nevertheless the preserve, of the private sector, legitimate profit has become a dirty word. Reasonable profit has become a dirty phrase. It is now improper for a businessman to say that it is reasonable for him to make a profit. The party to my left are always attacking the large multinational corporations and seem to forget that the business people of this country, in terms of employment and generation of jobs, are not the large multinational corporations but men and women who are prepared to put their life savings, what they can borrow, their hopes and reputations behind an enterprise. That kind of philosophy ought to be fostered in this country, not subjected to pressure. It is important that we put out of our minds the concept that the truth is that government by itself has all the answers to all the problems and challenges facing this country.

We consider it is the job of government to create the atmosphere where men and women who so desire can run risks, make reasonable returns and from time to time losses, in order to realize their capabilities. It is this kind of philosophy which seems to be overtaking governments—the easy way out, the unlimited treasury and the unlimited deficits, which have sickened this country and weakened it. There is a whole host of problems, not just the ones which afflict us in the private sector.

● (1450)

This bill is going to be examined very carefully in committee. It is a reflection of a continuing sickness in terms of the attitude of governments generally. This government has been in power for a long time. During that time Crown corporations have not gone down in number but have increased, and Crown agencies have not diminished but have increased. Why? It is because this government has decided that is the direction in which it will go. It will intervene, instead of asking the question: Is there some other way the job can be done just as well, and not place the burden upon the taxpayers of this country? This House and this country should examine that attitude and not just this bill.

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words on this bill entitled An Act respecting the reorganization of Air Canada. The main purpose of this bill is to select means of transport properly. We have already done it by selecting Via Rail, an independent body for freight transportation, which is a great improvement within the CNR system. Today the government introduces a bill providing that Air Canada becomes a Crown corporation separate from the CNR. I think that after 40 years, Mr. Speaker, it is time for Air Canada to become an adult company that will manage its own affairs.

The first few years will not be easy as it is already burdened with over a billion—and then some hundred million—dollar deficit; fortunately, Air Canada will be able to get, in addition to the $25 million in share capital and the $750 million in authorized capital provided for under the current legislation, a direct loan of $750 million guaranteed by the state. Finally, if necessary it will be allowed under the new legislation to borrow on its own credit. Air Canada will enter areas of operation which are related to air transport, like tourism. We shall remain the true owners of Air Canada, with everything this entails, and I refer immediately to the expected deficit. We have learned through experience that Crown corporations are very difficult to administer. They are more expensive to operate than private corporations, but our system is made up of public and private firms and we are faced now with the need to re-organize transports, something which I feel is most necessary in Canada today. Still I am very glad we had to deal with this bill today.

Besides, we all would be happy if Air Canada were for once to belie the saying that private companies are always more profitable than state-owned ones. The corporation will be under the management of a board of directors comprised of a chairman appointed pursuant to subclause 5 and at least thirteen other directors to be appointed for a term not exceeding three years.

We are anxious, Mr. Speaker, to know the successful candidates to find out whether the minister will abide by his government's bilingualism policy. I happened to check the bill to see which qualifications the directors and board members should have. Here is what it says about those qualifications:

(2) No person is eligible to be appointed or to continue as a member of the Board . . .

That is the first qualification: to continue as a member.

Here is the second:

. . . who

(a) is not a Canadian citizen ordinarily resident in Canada; or

(b) has attained the age of seventy years.

I thought it was sixty-five, but we read "the age of seventy years".

I remain somewhat puzzled because nowhere is there any reference to language requirements in the choice of those people, and yet that would be very important considering the bilingualism policy advocated by the government. There should at least be a short clause requiring the majority of directors to be bilingual. That is my criticism. I say that to the minister so that the question might be raised and discussed in committee because when the matter of bilingualism is not included in a legislation, we are likely to face many difficulties. Everyone is aware of the difficulties we had about the application of bilingualism and the use of French in this Crown corporation over which the government seems to have lost control. All members surely recall the notorious case of the Gens de l'air, CATCA and CALPA, which is not yet solved, as we are still waiting for the decision of the various courts because the government cannot apparently decide anything by itself; they have to have this decision made by a court.

Today we see that there is still much room for improvement as far as bilingualism in Air Canada workshops is concerned, both among air traffic controllers and aircraft servicing personnel. Air Canada has certainly not shown much enthusiasm to try at least to submit to the will of the government. I see that the government is willing to force Air Canada to act but I think they do not take the means to do so. Again, I hope that the committee will discuss the possibility of including this matter of bilingualism in the bill once for all. We have been talking about bilingualism for years. I think this matter will remain a dead letter, as long as we talk about it, as long as it will not be included in a piece of legislation requiring that this or that group is bilingual or unilingual, or that it should at least try to learn the other language.

I think we have had enough problems, and the air pilots issue has still not been settled. We have had all the trouble in the world to solve that bilingualism problem, and all we got was the threat by the pilots' union to prevent French Canadians in Quebec from using their language in the air. Everybody said it was a scandal, and they were right. I think we have a good opportunity to discuss it here, while we are dealing with this bill to transform Air Canada into a Crown corporation independent from the Canadian National. If we miss this opportunity to insert in the law what the present government advocates throughout Canada, we will again postpone the settlement of the bilingualism issue and permit certain associations to quarrel between themselves and make the Canadian people suffer because they are too stubborn. I therefore hope to see this obligation included in the bill, because if it were the other way around, if English were at stake, if the survival of the English language were threatened, I am sure the problem would have been solved a long time ago.

In the meantime, we are told that both languages are recognized in Canada, and the government has launched its bilingualism campaign. I do not see why this would not be included in the new legislation, to oblige employees of Crown corporations to abide by the law. If they refuse to do so, they can just go work elsewhere. The least we can ask is that laws be clear, so that people stop feeling insecure like today.

I was just saying, Mr. Speaker, that we have found evidence in the services and I believe it was quite conclusive. I read an article this morning which proves once again how the CBC neglects, not to say despises, this appeal from the government. And just to quote one case, I have here an article published in La Presse of May 26 and written by Mr. Raymond Laplante, a consultant announcer for the CBC. I mention his name lest some ministers accuse him of being a separatist. Yet he is not a separatist; he merely pleads in favour of the French language. This announcer was returning from a trip to Vancouver. I quote what he says:

Last May 13, a Friday, defying all superstitions attached to that fatal date, I was aboard Air Canada flight 150 from Vancouver to Montreal. Except for a few clouds above the Rockies . . .

—and so on. Further on he says:

Is there no one among your French-speaking customers who enjoys classical music? Do you think it would be too lofty for French Canadians?

Because all he heard on board was English, English songs, English music and all.

Once the classical music concert over, I switched to French songs, presented in French, naturally. But what a French! Something horrible with lot of nonsense at such a pace that you would need six hours more of flight to note them properly.

That is why he headlined his article, and I quote:

Lousy French at Air Canada. And that is not all! How many times during my numerous flights on Air Canada did I seethe inwardly on hearing some of your hostesses and stewards speak broken French in such a way you cannot even manage to decipher the message. What would happen during an emergency landing, when information has to be clear and precise, particularly in such situations where nervousness makes it more difficult to communicate?

That is the point I want to stress, Mr. Speaker. If CATCA and CALPA were making a plea against bilingualism, while we cannot even get a single word in French, what would happen in an emergency? That is what is called working towards safety.

Mr. Speaker, I will not read the whole article because it is rather long but I hope the remarks which were made about bilingualism have been noted and, as I said before, I want this question to be referred to committee, included in the legislation and made mandatory. Mechanics, hostesses and management should not forget that Air Canada is a Crown corporation and, as such, the property of a bilingual country. They must try to get used to the idea that Air Canada is owned by a bilingual country. We are all paying for it and we are glad to do so as long as it is providing good service to the whole population. This service must necessarily be bilingual.

Mr. Stan Schumacher (Palliser): Mr. Speaker, I suppose it is appropriate that we should be discussing this bill now as Air Canada enters its forty-first year of operations. Maybe after 40 years of operation it is time for any organization to be reorganized, but I would have thought that the real reason for the existence of Air Canada or, as it was then called Trans-Canada Air Lines, was to provide a national air service for this country in the absence of any initiative by the private sector to provide such a service at the time.

Back in 1937 there was a great economic depression in the world and there was not a great deal of investment or development anywhere. I suppose there was clear justification for the establishment of a national air transportation service under the aegis of the Government of Canada at that time. I just regret that now, after 40 years of operation, many of which have been very successful, we are not moving toward a more independent type of operation which would give some incentive to this part of our air transport service to make a profit and to operate efficiently. This is a very important field of endeavour in Canada, and unfortunately, because of the way it has developed in the last number of years, it has not been particularly profitable for the people it is meant to serve. There have been examples of increasing deficits. We are being assured now that Air Canada is turning things around.

● (1510)

My friends in the New Democratic Party have suggested that losses have not been confined just to Air Canada but that other airlines have also suffered losses. They referred to the experience of Canadian Pacific Airline. I suggest that the reasons for the losses of Canadian Pacific are much different than the reasons for the losses sustained by Air Canada and relate primarily to the fact—which is a matter of government policy—that Canadian Pacific is restricted to 25 per cent of the available seats allotted to the national carrier, and Air Canada has the remaining 75 per cent. That puts Canadian Pacific at a disadvantage, and I personally think that the government should be trying to promote more competition with a view to making Air Canada more efficient and profitable rather than maintaining this protective mantle over Air Canada, as the government has done and seems to be persisting in doing.

Apart from that restriction we had the example last year of the bilateral routes. Canada obtained 20 new routes, 19 of which were assigned to Air Canada. I do not see any equity or any encouragement to Canadian Pacific there, and in my view that is one of the reasons why Canadian Pacific has not been doing very well recently. In particular, Canadian Pacific made a big investment in the west coast traffic to San Francisco and California generally. It developed that traffic, but what happened when these bilateral agreements were entered into? Air Canada was assigned new routes into California at the expense of Canadian Pacific. I think that was a very unjust and inequitable way for the Government of Canada to proceed.

Nevertheless, we are faced with Bill C-17, which is supposed to re-organize Air Canada and put it on a more businesslike and efficient footing. The bill affects all the major air carriers in Canada, but in particular it affects the protected flag carrier, Air Canada. Because it affects more than one carrier, I think something should be said about the Canadian air industry in general. In 1975 commercial air carriers in Canada transported more than 20 million passengers. That came very close to moving the entire population of this country, and that only serves to point up the cardinal importance of air travel in Canada. In addition to that, three million travellers arrived in Canada by air from abroad. After having paid their air fares they spent half a billion dollars here. That accounts for a significant contribution toward a net gain in the economy of Canada.

On the whole, air travel has grown safer, faster, and more efficient. It has tried to maintain reasonable fares when the cost of living has continued to increase. It has reached out to serve isolated communities. It crosses oceans and continents in a matter of hours. However, there is a real fear that current government policies are severely damaging the industry. We hear a great many complaints about service and about delays in air travel. In our own travels to and from our constituencies we experience such annoyances and inconveniences ourselves. We certainly do not like being subjected to these situations, and we can fully understand and appreciate the feelings of vast numbers of other Canadians who complain about the inefficiency of the operations of Air Canada. Of course Air Canada tends to take the brunt of this because, as I pointed out, it is allotted 75 per cent of the transcontinental business through government policy.

In 1975 Canadian air carriers lost $18.8 million. Regional air carriers lost more than $750,000. It seems to me, from the information I have, that Air Canada's losses have been higher than any of the other carriers. The explanations of Air Canada have never satisfied me. Air Canada has been able to obtain the best routes. It has left the short hops and short hauls to the regional carriers, but nevertheless the regional carriers seem to be able to make a better go of this small potatoes type of business than Air Canada can with the cream of the crop.

It is quite clear that something needs to be done. The basic question is whether this bill will accomplish anything. In the ten years prior to 1975, that is, from 1965 up to 1974, air revenues increased four times. But net income fell to less than half, while the number of passengers carried increased three times, and revenue per mile went up three and one-half times. At the same time operating costs went up four times and wages doubled. However, there appears to be some hope.

The Ministry of Transport now says that no more airports will be built without the airlines being consulted first. That is a very refreshing attitude, and it is nice to see some common sense being injected into the operations of the government. I just wonder what would have happened to Mirabel if the airlines had been consulted in any way, shape or form about the construction of that massive boondoggle which was, in my view, built strictly for political reasons at the expense of the whole economy. They probably will turn out to be the wrong political reasons, and it is likely that nobody will be satisfied with what has happened there. Thank goodness the political situation which developed two or three years ago stopped a similar thing happening at Pickering, and we hope that the new found reason of the Ministry of Transport in consulting the major users of these facilities will be lasting.

In the case of the airport at Calgary it looks as though we are going to have a wonderful facility. The difficulty is that as a result of design costs which have been built into it—which are the complete responsibility of the Ministry of Transport—most of the prospective users of that facility are unsure whether they will be able to utilize the facility at the cost being mentioned by the Ministry of Transport.

The key to operating any business successfully is profit, and I think that certainly should apply to Crown corporations as well as to any other type of corporation. Unfortunately Crown corporations seem to be insulated from that imperative more than corporations funded by individuals with their own money. Profit is important to any airline because of the cost of replacing aircraft, among other things. In 1970 a Boeing 747 cost $24 million. In a couple of years from now the same aircraft will cost between $45 million and $50 million. I must ask whether this bill will allow Air Canada to make a profit more readily, or if it will further hamper the airlines money making efforts.

I think at this stage we should look at some of the provisions of the bill. The most significant proposals are, first, authorization for Air Canada to engage in a wider range of activities; second, ownership would pass from the CNR directly to the government; third, the amount of authorized capital stock would be increased; and fourth, Air Canada would be permitted to seek debt financing in the market place and not be compelled to apply to the government for any future financing.

With respect to broader powers, Air Canada is rather restricted by the terms of the present act in the type of activities in which it can engage. The proposed act broadens the "capacities and activities" which the company may undertake, both within and outside Canada. Aside from operating the business of an air carrier, there are references to hotels and other accommodation; surface vehicles and facilities for the transportation and housing of persons, goods and mail; services, facilities and equipment for organizing and conducting tours; catering and providing other passenger-related services, including reservations for transportation and accommodation, computer and tele-processing systems, and technical, advisory and consulting services. Furthermore, the new act permits the company to establish or invest in subsidiary companies, provided authorization of the governor in council is first obtained.

On the question of ownership it will be noted that up to the present Air Canada's capital stock has always been held by the CNR—itself a Crown corporation—which meant that Air Canada was in effect a CN wholly-owned subsidiary. As shareholder, the CN was authorized to appoint five members to the Air Canada board of directors, while the governor in council appointed four. Of course cabinet appointed the board of directors of CN so it was pretty well able to control the appointment of all directors. The proposed act stipulates that shares of Air Canada will be held by the Minister of Transport "in trust for Her Majesty in right of Canada", and that shares are not transferable. It further provides that the corporation will be under the management of a board of directors comprised of the chairman and the president and not more than 13 other directors, all of whom are appointed by the governor in council.

I think the words "governor in council" are the key to this bill and the dilemma in which the government finds itself. On the one hand it wants an airline operation that is set up under the guise of a Crown corporation and which should have some degree of independence. Because of the history of bad management in Air Canada, however, largely as a result of actions of people the government itself appointed to run the corporation, it did not want to give it too much authority to act on its own. On the face of it the bill gives Air Canada broad powers, but like so many Liberal ideas, appearances are deceiving. While it appears the reorganized company can do almost anything, the hooker in this situation is that nothing can be done without the approval of the governor in council.

As the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) pointed, out, Air Canada which is supposed to be an independent Crown corporation, cannot even appoint auditors without the approval of cabinet. As far as auditors are concerned I think all Crown corporations should be subject to audit by the Auditor General of Canada. I do not want to slander the auditing profession of this country, but I have seen some rather strange certificates issued by auditors of government agencies and Crown corporations. I suggest the reason they are strange is that the auditors want to hold the accounts. We need a truly independent auditing service of government agencies if we are to get the best value for our dollar. I think it is very strange indeed that the government can use the appointment of auditors as patronage. That should not be involved with Crown corporations.

When this bill goes to committee I hope very serious consideration will be given to the appointment of the Auditor General of Canada as auditor of this organization.

I believe that Air Canada is being transformed into an agency of the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang); it is going to join his fiefdom. This bill is not a step toward making the corporation compatible with normal commercial enterprise as should be done. I think the philosophy of this bill and the reason why so many possible objects of the corporation have been listed, is that anything that is not listed is totally beyond the power of the corporation. In itself that is a restriction on the flexibility the government says it is trying to give Air Canada in the management of its day-to-day affairs but, because of what is being done here making Air Canada an agency of the government, we are to have continuing troubles with language.

The hon. member for Roberval (Mr. Gauthier), who spoke before me, complained that Air Canada was not living up to the requirements of the government's bilingual program. I think part of the cause of the sense of alienation that has developed in the west is the fact that Francophone cabin crews—which the hon. member says are inadequate for use in Quebec—are operating there. A lot of passengers complain of inadequate service because the crews do not understand English very well. That shows a lack of flexibility, or a breakdown of some kind. We find crews who cannot understand French operating in Quebec and ones who cannot understand English operating out west. It is not a good situation. I do not think the company's being closely identified with the government in its day-to-day operations will help the situation.

● (1530)

I use this opportunity to complain about the procurement policy of Air Canada, particularly with regard to meat. When I asked back in 1971 why Air Canada was not using Canadian beef exclusively for in-flight meals, I was told there was not enough to go around. That answer was not satisfactory then, and is even less satisfactory now, considering what our livestock industry has been through in the last three years and its present state.

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. I wonder if the hon. member would permit a question to clarify something he said about the linguistic capacity of Air Canada staff.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Schumacher: Mr. Speaker, I permit the hon. member to ask a question and will do my best to reply.

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, if I heard the hon. member correctly, he suggested that Air Canada crews on duty in Quebec, in aircraft, and western crews working out west have difficulty in communicating in one or both of the official languages. Is the hon. member saying to this House that some Air Canada crew or staff out west cannot speak English?

Mr. Schumacher: Mr. Speaker, it has been my experience that a good number have a limited capacity to speak English, in the same way as the hon. member for Roberval complained that crews operating in Quebec have a limited capacity to speak or understand French.

Mr. Mazankowski: Is that clear?

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, was the hon. member stating his opinion or stating a fact? I should be interested to know the basis for his statement. I wonder if he could give us that.

Mr. Mazankowski: Read Hansard.

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Could the hon. member table his facts, or was he only giving his opinion?

An hon. Member: One cannot table a stewardess.

Mr. Schumacher: One may like to table a stewardess; I don't know.

[Mr. Schumacher.]

Mr. Mazankowski: When did the hon. member last table a fact?

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): I just want the facts.

Mr. Schumacher: I know my hon. friend does. Perhaps he feels this is not the place for opinions.

Mr. Mazankowski: This is not the place for debate, I suppose.

Mr. Schumacher: I remember the former member for Red Deer, Mr. Thompson, saying we must be careful because this place might turn into a political arena.

Mr. Gauthier (Ottawa-Vanier): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. If the hon. member is stating a fact, I will accept that; or if he is stating his opinion, I will accept that; but I want to be clear if he is stating an opinion and not a fact.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

Mr. Schumacher: Mr. Speaker, in my opinion it is a fact.

Mr. Roberts: In your opinion it is a fact that what he says is a fact is an opinion.

Mr. Schumacher: Perhaps we can best resolve this question by leaving it in that spirit. I have concluded my remarks on Bill C-17 and thank hon. members for listening.

Mr. James A. McGrath (St. John's East): Mr. Speaker, there is a distinct possibility that we may become involved in a debate this afternoon.

Mr. Mazankowski: That would be terrible.

Mr. McGrath: Heaven forbid that we should so spoil the tranquillity of a Friday afternoon in this House, the afternoon of the most productive day of the week. I hope hon. members will pay their usual, studied attention to the remarks I am about to make.

I will take advantage of the opportunity afforded by the debate on Bill C-17 to raise some questions about Air Canada and the service our national air carrier provides in my part of the country. It is appropriate that I should do so because we are considering what will probably be the most fundamental change affecting Air Canada since its founding 40 years ago.

I find that my position is somewhat different from that adopted by some of my colleagues. I come from a part of the country in which Air Canada enjoys a virtual monopoly in air transport. Consequently the provisions of this bill which would make the airline more accountable to government and hence parliament are all the more meaningful and relevant.

It has been somewhat difficult to raise questions in the House about Air Canada and the quality of Air Canada service, because of the ambiguity of Air Canada's position vis-à-vis the government and its parent Crown corporation, Canadian National Railways. Given the inflation which has overtaken our economy and the higher price of fuel, it is true to say that air travel is being restricted to fewer and fewer people. Unless the government recognizes soon the importance of Air Canada and of air travel in this country, only members of parliament, senior civil servants, and businessmen on expenses allowances will be able to fly.

Mr. Malone: Shame!

Mr. McGrath: That may be all very well in the corridor regions of central and western Canada where, because economies are buoyant, people can afford air travel. But the situation is somewhat different in my part of the country. Many people of my area depend almost exclusively on aircraft for travel to Montreal, Ottawa or Toronto. The hardships and restrictions arising from the present situation should therefore be obvious.

The crisis in energy prices is affecting the attitude of the airlines. I suppose one can hardly blame Air Canada for its attitude. It must pay the same inflated price for fuel and the same wages as its competitors must pay. Consequently the company has sought to reduce the number of its less profitable runs. That policy has reduced the frequency of air service available to people resident in my constituency. As I said, for many of my constituents Air Canada proves to be the only efficient way of travel to other centres of this country. Let me demonstrate what I mean.

Last year we were served by an L-1011. Because of the large number of empty seats on the flight, I felt the use of such equipment was not justified. That aircraft was supported by three DC-9s and one DC-8. That provided adequate service. Indeed, as a result of the L-1011 there was a surplus of seats. I knew this situation would not be tolerated for long. I made the point before hearings of the CTC on regional air transport that we did not want the big equipment, that the L-1011s could be taken off and replaced by DC-9s—in other words, increase the flight frequency. This would result in increased economy in terms of utilization of seat capacity because more flights would be available throughout the day. That situation merely resulted in the present schedules. We have no L-1011. The number of flights has been reduced even further to the point at which, at the present time, we have only four flights. This has to be viewed with concern.

I began my remarks by saying I supported in the main the principle of this bill which, it seems to me, would make Air Canada more accountable to parliament and give us a better opportunity to monitor these arbitrary changes which are made from time to time by Air Canada in the interests of economy. After all, the people who depend on Air Canada, since it enjoys a monopoly position, are the ones who bear the burden of these economies.

I should like to lay before the House the situation which prevails at the present time. There are no direct flights from St. John's though it has a catchment area of approximately 250,000 people. Air Canada is the only national carrier coming in there apart from the regional carrier about which I shall have more to say later. Air Canada has no competition on this run from St. John's to Halifax, Montreal and Toronto.

In the past we always enjoyed the privilege of a direct flight to Montreal. Now we have to go through Halifax, sometimes necessitating expensive stop-overs. On Saturdays there is only one flight to Montreal even via Halifax, so the situation at weekends is even worse than it is during the week. There is now only one direct flight to Toronto. Here is a market which depends solely on Air Canada.

My hon. friend made reference to EPA. EPA does not at this moment enjoy the right to carry traffic direct from St. John's through Halifax to Montreal. If it did, that would constitute a different situation entirely. Pending before the CTC at the present time is an application to provide such a service. Should it be granted, there would be some element of competition, and I submit it would result in some improvement in the service. The present service provided by Air Canada shows a marked deterioration the further east one gets. By the time it reaches my part of the country the service has deteriorated considerably.

If the CTC rules favourably on this application the situation will be changed not only in terms of better service but in terms of the financial viability of our regional carrier, Eastern Provincial Airways. This is a matter which is of vital importance because EPA has to cope with the same conditions as other airlines when it comes to equipment, fuel supplies, and personnel. Under its licensing conditions it has to provide service on uneconomic runs within the region, and unless it has access to profitable runs to offset the losses incurred, something obviously has to go. Either the service goes or flight frequency has to be reduced. In any case, the travelling public is the loser.

I can understand the importance of utilizing the substantial facilities which now exist at Halifax International Airport but I submit that a market with a catchment of 250,000 is sufficient, especially at this time of the year, to warrant special consideration. Why cannot we have a direct flight from St. John's to Montreal? Why cannot there be a direct flight from St. John's to the national capital, terminating in Toronto? We are the only major city in the country, indeed the only provincial capital in this part of the country, which does not have a direct service to the nation's capital. As I see it, there is not likely to be any substantial improvement. We will get an extra flight as of the latter part of June and this is supposed to handle a volume of traffic which is increasing annually as tourism grows.

In all this we have to consider the increasing importance of St. John's as a convention centre. This year a number of major national conventions are taking place in our city in addition to the Canada Summer Games. This is bound to mean a substantial increase in tourist traffic.

I take advantage of the second reading of this bill to put forward these complaints. I could spend time talking about the cancelled flights for which the excuse of adverse weather forecasts is given. Later it usually turns out that the flights had been cancelled because, in the opinion of dispatchers in Montreal, there was not enough traffic to warrant putting in the equipment. So the 15 or 20 people who have booked flights and who are depending on Air Canada are suddenly stranded. This happens frequently. I know it happens. I have established beyond any doubt that it happens, but I cannot prove it. Moreover, I have no means of redress open to me because the annual Air Canada report no longer comes before the Transport Committee as used to be the case.

I hope that some of the measures being taken in the bill will make the airline more accountable to the representatives of the Canadian people because, after all, we are in the position of being shareholders. It is our airline and it ought to be accountable to us.

Reference has been made to the provisions having to do with the board of directors. I should like to see some statutory term set for these directorships to give the directors greater independence and greater ability to respond to the needs of the airline while at the same time remaining accountable to parliament. This raises a question which was touched on by my hon. friend who just resumed his seat.

It is proposed to change the structure of Air Canada in such a way as to make it a separate Crown agency. I would draw the government's attention to the recommendation of the Auditor General with regard to the auditing of accounts of Crown corporations. Last year the airline got into difficulties over illegalities in connection with its transactions with a travel agency. As a result of some of the measures proposed in this bill, Air Canada will now be able to engage in necessary transactions of this kind without resorting to the methods which came under such criticism earlier. But if Air Canada were accountable to the House financially through the Auditor General it would be an even greater safeguard.

Getting back to the board of directors, I should like to see some kind of statutory term for people appointed to represent the interests of the taxpayer. I should like to see some account taken of regional representation, not in terms of one representative on the board for the Atlantic provinces but representatives of peak traffic areas where the airline is vitally important as the single carrier. For example, there is no other way at the present time out of my province, unless one wants to hazard a 600 mile drive along the trans-Newfoundland portion of the trans-Canada highway and then cross the Gulf of St. Lawrence, which takes at least two days, than to use Air Canada. I believe that representation on the board should take into account this kind of regional situation. Each province should be represented on the board of directors instead of one individual representing the interests of all of the Atlantic provinces, including the Gaspé region of Quebec, and several members representing central Canadian provinces like Ontario.

I could go on to outline the complaints I have received. Not a month goes by when a complaint does not come over my desk about the quality of service of Air Canada in my constituency. But I must say this about Mr. Taylor, the new president of Air Canada. I have noted a much more receptive attitude to complaints. In his responses I have noted a much more positive approach to customer complaints raised through members of parliament. I congratulate him on the excellent job he seems to be doing. He has certainly succeeded in restoring morale, which had sunk to an all time low and which itself seriously adversely affected quality of service. I believe it was an enlightened appointment by the government of a man who had worked his way up through Air Canada from ticket agent to the top. He understands the people who work within the airline, and as well has had direct experience of dealing with people over the counter. He understands the problems encountered on a day to day basis by the travelling public.

With his comprehensive experience we have at the head of our national airline a man who is able to make a positive response to problems and to handle them in a most constructive way. I believe he has brought about a 1,000 per cent improvement over the former ambivalent situation where the chairman of the board had executive authority and the president of the company had administrative authority and you did not know with whom you were dealing. Not only that, but middle management and the operating personnel were having difficulty over what the line of command was within the airline.

I look forward to this bill proceeding to committee and to the government providing us with explanations as to what exactly is intended by some of its provisions, especially with regard to the appointment of directors. I should like to know what are the intentions of the government with respect to establishment of schedules and timetables. Surely the public has a right to give some input to the scheduling of Air Canada, although not so much in competitive situations because there the competitive factor has to be uppermost. The company must be allowed to compete on an equal basis with the private commercial carriers. But in areas where Air Canada enjoys a monopoly, of which there are a number, including my own province, the public should express its views through various organizations such as boards of trade and chambers of commerce. Air Canada can also hear what the public has to say by coming to parliament every year. There should be this kind of conduit, if you like, to provide direct public input into the scheduling of the airline.

With those few words I look forward to the bill going to committee and to hearing from the minister. I look forward to hearing what the transportation committee will encounter as it visits the Atlantic provinces. It begins to tour the Atlantic provinces on Sunday, and one of the areas it will look into is the role of regional airports and regional air traffic within the Atlantic provinces. This is something which has a direct bearing on Atlantic Canada because it raises the whole question of a regional air policy, one which will make it possible for regional air carriers to continue.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for Battle River (Mr. Malone).

An hon. Member: Four o'clock.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I hear "four o'clock" from someone on the other side of the House. If they want to call it four o'clock I would not argue with that, but I will leave the decision to you.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): The hon. member for Battle River.

Mr. Malone: Mr. Speaker, it is a privilege to speak on Bill C-19, even though it is not much of a privilege to see what is in the bill. Once again this is a bill which attempts to give the government of this country more and more control of things which ought to be left, if not to the private sector, at least to the sense of initiative of the people who operate within the confines of the private sector.

Let me look at the track record of the government's socialization of Canada. I do not mean in terms of human relations but rather in terms of our economic structure. One thing that becomes readily apparent is that we are fast losing what we would call an enterprising mentality in this country.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please.

[Translation]

It being four o'clock, the House will now proceed to private members' business as listed in today's order paper, namely, public bills, notices of motions and private bills.

CRIMINAL CODE

AMENDMENT RESPECTING ISSUANCE OF DISHONOURED CHEQUES

Mr. J. Larry Condon (Middlesex-London-Lambton) (for Mr. Turner) moved that Bill C-230, to amend the Criminal Code (presumption from cheque issued without funds), be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs.

● (1600)

He said: Mr. Speaker, I feel compelled to speak in support of this bill both out of friendship and respect for my colleague, the hon. member for London East (Mr. Turner). I share his concern for the effect of cheque frauds, as much for the sake of the consumer as for the sake of the businessman and the merchant, in particular. The bill proposes an NSF cheque is, in itself, sufficient reason to presume that something of value was obtained by false pretence, unless the accused pays his dishonoured cheque within 30 days of its presentation at the bank.

As a rule I am reluctant to speak on any matter which touches upon the Criminal Code. Since I am not a lawyer by profession I find myself at some disadvantage when it comes to understanding the full impact of changes in the Code, especially as they might affect the incomes of lawyers and the economics of practising law. I notice the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson) is nodding his head.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): He blushed.

Mr. Condon: I would not want to cut into the livelihood of anyone in that noble profession, but it does seem to me that the clause under consideration, in its application and its operation if not in its wording, puts businessmen and merchants, in particular, through a great deal of unnecessary legal expense in order to recover payment for bad cheques.

It may seem that nothing could be more satisfactory than the law as it is presently worded. At present there is a presumption the accused has obtained something of value by false pretence, if he has passed an NSF cheque, unless the court is satisfied by evidence indicating when the accused issued the cheque he had reasonable grounds to believe that it would be honoured, if presented for payment within a reasonable time after it was issued. It seems to say that there is a presumption of intent to defraud whenever an NSF cheque is written. The law places the onus squarely on the accused to prove his NSF cheque is not what it appears to be and that there was no attempt to obtain something of value by false pretence.

Let us admit there are a good many reasons for writing a bad cheque. In cases of honest error, the maker or drawer, as he is called in the banking trade, will redeem his worthless cheque promptly, after having been notified that his cheque was dishonoured. Payment in such cases, or even arrangement to pay, is sufficient evidence to indicate the cheque drawer did not intend fraud, as it might otherwise appear.

Even if this allows the drawer the benefit of a large doubt in many cases, all the merchant wants is the payment he thought he had received in the first place. Truthfully, payment is the only completely satisfactory evidence that there was no intent to defraud. According to the wording of the present law, although the bad cheque writer is required to prove he thought his cheque would be honoured, he is not required to honour his cheque in order to satisfy the courts his intentions were honourable. In practice, and quite contrary to the wording of the existing law, the prosecution is required to prove the drawer obtained his goods under false pretence. Experience has shown chances for the prosecution to obtain a conviction are quite slim, I suppose because fraud is rightly considered a serious offence and the courts would rather err on the side of the accused.

In its operation the present law is so inequitable it sometimes seems even to conspire with other laws against the honest businessman, as in the case of a landlord who recently complained he was unable to obtain the assistance of police in prosecuting a tenant for fraud, even though the tenant had issued not one but several NSF cheques for rent which was now in arrears. The police explained the tenant's location was known to the landlord, with whom he was in a contractual relationship. There could, therefore, be no criminal offence. The tenant felt secure under Ontario's Landlord and Tenant Act, at least until spring. The courts would rather look upon this tenant as a bad debtor and assume that writing NSF cheques for rent is just another way of not paying the rent on time.

The landlord in this case did not specify whether the cheques were postdated. If they were, I might agree with the courts in preferring to look upon this as a bad debt. It ought to be made clear a bad cheque is not the same as a bad debt when it is written and delivered, that is to say, issued by the drawer in payment for something of value, whether to buy a camera, a car, or to pay the rent.

I do not have to remind hon. members present that a personal cheque, like a bank note or dollar, is a piece of commercial paper, payable at sight or at the time it is presented for payment by the payee. Like the bank note, it is issued on the faith that there are funds to cover it; but unlike the bank note it is not legal tender and does not have to be accepted by a businessman. The personal cheque is a convenience and a protection to the consumer, but under the operation of the present law against cheque frauds it is nothing but an expensive risk to the merchant. When a merchant accepts a personal cheque, he does not intend to extend credit. He is not expecting payment at some future date. He accepts a personal cheque as a substitute for cash, usually banks the cheque with his cash the same day, and immediately receives payment from his bank.

When a cheque is returned to the merchant because of insufficient funds, it is charged back to him, and only then does he discover that, contrary to his expectation, it was not a cash sale. If the personal cheque he accepted represents a line of credit to his customer, or some vague promise to pay, the merchant could at least have verified the credit standing of his customer so as to determine the likelihood of his ability to pay, given the status of his present obligations and the record of his credit dealings in the past, not to mention his income. Instead, the merchant asks for identification, considering quite rightly his principal obligation at the time of sale is to verify his customer is whoever he says he is. After all, the law does presume an intent to defraud on the basis of an NSF cheque. This should inspire the merchant to have some confidence in the personal cheque as an alternative to cash payment.

As we have seen, the operation of the law does not live up to its wording. One of the inevitable results is that personal cheques are being refused everywhere by merchants who have been disillusioned by a law which does not mean what it says. When someone passes counterfeit bank notes for cash, not even restitution will save him from the slammer. When a customer deliberately passes an NSF cheque, a counterfeit cheque in other words, restitution or payment is not even required in order to show good faith and to clear him of the presumption of false pretence, which the law says his worthless cheque represents.

What kind of justice is this when the merchant must take all the risk; when the law requires nothing from the cheque counterfeiter by way of payment, but prefers to look only at his bank account and his circumstances in order to determine his guilt or innocence of fraud; when the merchant must then assume the cost of civil prosecution in what is most often a fruitless effort to recover payment for something of value, which the court thinks of as a debt, as though the merchant had somehow extended credit at the time of purchase? Having stolen the merchandise in the first place, the white collar thief is then confirmed in possession of his goods by the frequent misapplication of law by the courts which prefer to call the thief a borrower. Shoplifting may now be considered theft, but pay for your groceries with a worthless cheque and the courts will call you a bad debtor.

The advantages of writing a bum cheque are nowhere more striking than in the application of the present law whereby the cheque counterfeiter is, in practice and in contradiction of the evidence which his rubber cheque provides, presumed innocent until proven guilty of doing it deliberately. The criminal law offers no satisfaction to the merchant. It does not provide for repayment, nor does it deter others from committing the same kind of crime.

According to Sgt. Lewis Coray of the London police department, fraud division, one of the reasons for the 150 per cent increase in bank frauds since 1972 is the lack of risk in committing white collar crimes. Sergeant Coray agreed with a number of other participants at a recent seminar on fraud, sponsored by the Canadian Banker's Association, who found the courts at fault in not imposing fair sentences on the relatively few who are convicted of fraud. Cheque thieves, he said, too often "Get off with a slap on the wrist."

When a cheque thief is convicted and sentenced for his fraud, the crime is usually spectacular, and the conviction makes headlines, as it did in the London Free Press of February 3 this year, when one woman, unable to make restitution for 53 bad cheques, amounting to almost $5,000, was reported to have been given an indeterminate sentence not to exceed 18 months. Perhaps she has learned the lessons of successful cheque fraud. Keep the number of your bad cheques, and the individual amounts, to a minimum so that the courts will not feel obliged to slap your wrists and the merchant cannot afford to sue.

In passing sentence on this woman, the judge said:

It's no wonder law-abiding citizens encounter problems when they try to write a cheque. The stores have been taken already by too many persons like yourself.

But despite her conviction, any stranger who has spent much of his time reading our criminal court records would come away with the impression that Canadians, while rarely found guilty of fraud, are plagued with an abundance of bad bookkeepers.

There is no need to ask: what is the effect of the increase of cheque fraud on the use of personal cheques? The acceptance of personal cheques depends not so much on the credit of the issuer as on the confidence of the businessman in the value of the paper he is offered. Because there is so little risk involved in writing bad cheques, and also because the cheque counterfeiter knows he will not have to pay up in order to avoid conviction for false pretence, business confidence in personal cheques has been so badly eroded under our existing law that this type of commercial paper—the only ready substitute for cash—faces extinction as a method of payment for goods purchased.

The merchant who accepts a personal cheque—even from a known customer—is becoming as rare as the corner grocer who accepts telephone orders and lets you charge them.

The only alternative to cash for consumers is the credit card. The risk of this form of credit is assumed by the bank or department store which issues the card, and the cost of that risk is paid by us all, whether we use such a card or pay cash. Nor has the merchant been slow to see the advantage of Chargex and Mastercharge. He has learned that credit customers buy 33 per cent more than cash customers because credit customers, unlike those who write personal cheques, are not compelled to determine whether or not they can cover the cost of the purchase from available funds. Credit customers are merely mortgaging their future income.

For the sake of counterfeit cheque writers, therefore, we are forcing the ordinary consumer to purchase on credit, to become a debtor, and too often a bad debtor who gets in over his head. Is this what we want, or are we prepared to put some teeth into the present law against cheque frauds before cheques disappear altogether?

Cheque counterfeiters in this country should be grateful for having been born in Canada. In France, cheque fraud is a little more risky. French law treats the NSF cheque as an offence. The severity of punishment depends on the amount of money involved, but the fraud is considered serious if the NSF cheque amounts to $200 or more. The convicted person becomes subject to a penalty of one to five years in jail, and a fine of $720 to $7,200.

But, no matter what the amount of the cheque, the elements of the offence are the same: first, issuance of the cheque, which excludes post-dated cheques; second, lack of funds at the moment of issue; and, third, bad faith of the author of the cheque.

And just what is bad faith, you might ask? Bad faith does not suppose even the intention to cheat or defraud. It does not necessarily mean that the person who wrote the cheque knew there were insufficient funds. French courts assume that a person writing a cheque has the duty of knowing the state of his account and, therefore, bad faith may be proven in the case of a person who, in doubt of his situation, writes a cheque without taking the precaution of verifying the state of his account. I do not think that is too hard to accept.

If the amount involved is less than $200, the offence is considered a breach of regulations. Not only is the punishment less severe, but the bad cheque speaks for the bad faith of the author of the cheque, and off he goes to jail for writing a cheque without checking his balance.

I understand that penal legislation concerning cheques was temporarily altered in 1972 because the courts were clogged with NSF'ers waiting for their turn in the pokey. Since then, at least until last year, in order to clear up the backlog, a period of ten days was allowed the author of the bad cheque from the time of the issuance of the cheque during which he could make the repayment. The person who paid up was able to escape jail but was still liable to the payment of a fine.

By contrast, the present bill allows the cheque counterfeiter and bad bookkeeper alike 30 days to pay what they owe as evidence that they did not obtain something of value under false pretence. Anyone who thinks this to be too harsh should state why a Canadian crook deserves to be treated better than a French thief.

For the sake of every consumer in the market place and every merchant with whom he deals, I cannot urge too strongly upon the members of this House the need for a simple and effective law which would identify and eliminate the cheque counterfeiter by prosecution by the Crown without requiring the merchant to weigh the cost and the benefit of trying to collect payment for bad cheques. In my view, the proposed bill will provide such a law and I heartily recommend its passage.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I listened with an abiding interest to the hon. member who has just spoken and put forward this bill on behalf of the hon. member for London East (Mr. Turner). Because of the high position which the hon. member for London East holds in the House he is prohibited from presenting bills, and I understand that is the reason why he did not do it himself.

I want to commend the hon. member for Middlesex-London-Lambton (Mr. Condon) as a non-lawyer, as he identified himself, for the presentation which he made. If I should disagree with some of the things he said, I do not want him to feel that I am disagreeing in any way with the motivation behind the bill because it is indeed true in this country that we have to find a method of dealing with the increasing incidence of bad cheque writing and a whole host of other things that have afflicted me and other members of the House, and indeed, and in particular, business people throughout the country. We have to find that way. Listening to the hon. member elucidate on the problem—and I agree with the ramifications and the extent of the problem—I had to ask myself whether this was the way and whether we ought to depart from a principle of justice in Canada to meet a problem which we might be able to meet in another way.

The existing law as contained in the Criminal Code and as set forth in the fly sheet of the bill reads this way:

Where . . . it is shown that anything was obtained by the accused by means of a cheque that, when presented for payment within a reasonable time, was dishonoured on the ground that no funds or insufficient funds were on deposit to the credit of the accused in the bank or other institution on which the cheque was drawn, it shall be presumed—

That is the law at the moment, a presumption.

—to have been obtained by a false pretence—

There is a presumption now existing in the law of a false pretence, and if the accused who has drawn the cheque cannot rebut that presumption, then certain consequences flow.

[Mr. Condon.]

The Criminal Code then goes on to say:

—unless the court is satisfied by evidence that when the accused issued the cheque he had reasonable grounds to believe that it would be honoured if presented for payment within a reasonable time after it was issued.

The court is instructed to look into the mind of the issuer of the cheque, to consider the time of presentation and to consider the accused's circumstances. The bill which is proposed and which has been discussed in an able way by the hon. member who just sat down, changes the conditions. The proposed amendment would repeal the section, but it reads the same until it gets down to these words:

. . . unless the accused pays the amount of the dishonoured cheque to the payee thereof within thirty days after the bank or other institution on which the cheque was drawn notifies the accused by prepaid mail that the cheque was dishonoured.

If we stop to think about it for a moment, there is an element in this proposal which I do not think is intended by the drafter of the bill. The element is that it really allows 30 days' credit which could be used by the unscrupulous in a way in which I am sure the hon. member for London East never intended when he prepared the bill. A person could write a cheque knowing full well that his account had no money in it and would not have any money in it within a period of 30 days, and that cheque could be honoured.

What this bill really does is establish in the Criminal Code a rather unique line of credit, and what is lost is the opportunity for an accusation to be made, and information to be issued, and a person to be tried, whether or not the cheque is paid later on. As the section now exists it says that if anybody tries to use the existence of the Criminal Code to give himself a line of credit by issuing bum cheques, even though he should pay those cheques before he comes to trial, he is still guilty of an offence. He is subject to be examined with respect to that, and the circumstances of paying the cheques go only to the mitigation of sentence, but they do not take away from the case, at least at this point, the sanction of a penalty. I do not think the hon. member for London East intended that, but that could well be the effect of his bill.

I do not want hon. members to think that by saying that I am unmindful of the problems of business people, but I am also not unmindful of the problems of some people in the community. I carry no brief for the fraud artist, but I am prepared to carry a brief for people who are accidentally caught within the provisions of the Criminal Code. This has happened under this section, and it has happened within my experience.

A few years ago I was asked to defend a man who was engaged in a plumbing business and who subsequently went bankrupt. This person issued a series of cheques. For some reason or other some cheques were presented in time and were paid. One cheque, I suppose because of the negligence of the person to whom it was directed, the payee, was not presented in time, and when it was presented there were not sufficient funds in the bank because of the difficulties into which my client had got himself. Under the bill as proposed a person like this would have 30 days to raise sufficient money to pay the cheques, but in my client's circumstances there was no way on God's green earth that he would ever be able to raise the money.

This man was not a dishonest man. He was a foolish businessman, but he was not fraudulent. He did not try to conceal or withhold. He was married. He had two children. He lost his car, his home, and everything he owned as a result of this, but he was not dishonest. He was unfortunate, but had the bill which is being presented today for the approval of this House been the law of the land, this man would have been branded a criminal merely because he could not pay. He would not have had a chance to defend himself against a charge of criminality.

As a result of these circumstances we appeared before a magistrate, I think it was, in the city of Cornwall, which is represented by the hon. member for Stormont-Dundas (Mr. Lumley). We now call magistrates provincial judges. We advanced evidence at that time of the state of my client's bank account, his circumstances and the circumstances of his business, and we were able on that occasion to rebut the presumption which is set forth in the Criminal Code, the presumption that he issued the cheque knowing that it would not be honoured. The court found that this fellow had issued a bad cheque, that he had obtained goods on the basis of a bad cheque but that he did not do it on false pretences.

If that poor fellow had been found guilty, he would have been fined, and if he could not pay the fine, he would have spent time in jail. We would have resurrected, had this bill been the law of the land, the old debtor's prison. I know there are some businessmen in the country who would like there to be debtor's prisons. It would be a great place. That in effect is what would happen in a case like this, and I do not think my case is unique. My practice was never unique. These cases came up time and time again. The businessman is as much inconvenienced by cheque-bouncing artists as he is by the innocent, I suppose, but I think it is our duty with respect to the criminal law to ensure that it is administered in such a way that the truly innocent do not suffer, and that is the matter which concerns me about this bill.

The other thing about cheques is that they involve an element of volition. Cheques are volunteered by people who issue them, and they are accepted. When cheques are used, there is a certain amount of risk which a businessman has to take. That is why, as the hon. member said, a cheque is a different kind of instrument. That is the reason why I think the bill ought not to be supported. I say that with some regret because I know the motivation of the hon. member who advanced the bill, and I listened with great care to the hon. member who presented it for him. If the bill were approved I think it would bring something into our criminal administration that was taken out of it many years ago, and for good reason.

The courts of the country are equipped to look into these matters. Appointments to provincial courts in all the provinces are made with great care. Those are the courts that usually deal with this kind of matter and I think we should trust them. I am not going to argue that the lists are not crowded, because they are; cases take some time to be heard, but it is within the hand and mind of man to change the procedures, to appoint more judges, or do a host of other things that would help the situation. I do not think we ought to undo an inconvenience by removing from our criminal justice system a protection that has been built in over a period of time for good reason.

There are two elements to consider in this matter. There is the element represented by the businessman who is angry because his goods have gone and all he has for them is a rubber cheque. But there is also the other aspect, the element of innocence. If anyone in our community, when he faces a presumption of guilt, does not have the opportunity to prove himself innocent, not just so that somebody gets paid but because of his own reputation in the community, his standing in his family, or his view of himself—if that is removed from the Criminal Code then I think it would be a tragedy. I do not think the hon. member for London East intended that by his bill, but unfortunately that is the effect of it. I therefore say with some regret that I do not believe the bill ought to be supported in its present condition.

Mr. John Gilbert (Broadview): Mr. Speaker, I should also like to commend the hon. member for London East (Mr. Turner) for presenting this bill, as I have great respect and friendship for him. I appreciate his concern with regard to the passing of bad cheques.

I should like to direct my attention to the remarks made by the hon. member for Middlesex-London-Lambton (Mr. Condon) who made an able presentation. He said that in London there has been an increase of 150 per cent in bad cheques passed since 1972. Mr. Speaker, you do not have to be too old to appreciate that at one time we had a cash society; everything was paid for in cash, and some of our parents adhere to that principle. Unless they can pay cash for goods they do not buy them. The second phase was cash plus cheque, and the third phase, which we are now experiencing, is cash plus cheque plus credit card.

The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) was at one time a Crown attorney in Ottawa. He knows as well as I, from my experience in criminal law, that the police are wary of laying a charge with regard to a cheque. Once the Crown authorities assume responsibility with regard to such a charge they may be exposing themselves to an action for false prosecution. My experience in Toronto was that Crown counsel were very reluctant to proceed with regard to cheques. They quite rightly said it was not a criminal matter but a civil matter, and advised the person who received the bad cheque to use civil proceedings.

The hon. member for Middlesex-London-Lambton said that the nub of the matter is that the person who received the bad cheque wants payment for the goods or services. We have therefore to determine whether the amendment would achieve that purpose. Mr. Speaker, I feel it will not achieve the purpose the hon. member seeks. It does not help the ordinary businessman to tighten the criminal law, and it does not help the ordinary person who receives a cheque for rent, say, to bring an action in the criminal courts. What will happen is not that the payment will be made to the person who received the bad cheque but that a penalty or prison sentence may be imposed on the person who passed it.

The hon. member for Grenville-Carleton picked up an important point very quickly when he said the effect of this bill will be to extend free credit for at least 30 days to the person who passes the cheque. In other words, that person would have 30 days in which to honour it; if he does that, then the case is at an end. He would not only have credit for 30 days but, according to the bill, for 30 days plus the time the bank took to notify him.

You can appreciate some of the things that could happen, Mr. Speaker. Someone could think he has certain moneys in the bank, present a cheque for payment for goods and services, and then go away on a month's holiday or be confined to hospital. This might far exceed the 30 days and the presumption of false pretences would arise immediately. I do not think most of us want this. What we want is what the hon. member who introduced the bill said: we want payment. I think we have to find ways and means of getting moneys to the person who accepted the cheque.

Again I give full credit to the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton for saying there is a certain risk when a cheque is presented as payment for goods or services. The person who accepts it has to be very careful about the person who presents it. At times people are foolish about accepting cheques and they have to accept the consequences. They have to accept that they should take action in the ordinary way through the civil court to receive their money. I do not think the criminal court should be cluttered with cases of false pretences concerning small cheques.

Once a person gets a criminal conviction it is very difficult to expunge it. This would impose a very heavy burden on a person who did not pay within the 30 days or the 30 days plus the time it took the bank to inform him.

That does not mean we should not study this matter. It seems to me that the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford) should pick up this idea with regard to bad cheques and refer it to the Law Reform Commission for study, or to the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs, where bank officials and consumer associations, police, lawyers and others could be called for an opinion.

I could not help but smile when the hon. member for Middlesex-London-Lambton presented the bill and said that it may deny lawyers some form of income. The average lawyer thinks these cases a nuisance and makes little money from them as I am sure my colleagues, the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton, and the hon. member for Toronto-Lakeshore (Mr. Robinson) will agree.

● (1640)

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Especially if he is paid with a cheque.

[Mr. Gilbert.]

Mr. Gilbert: Although the proposed change in the law would lead to no great loss of income for lawyers, it would not solve the problem confronting us. We must consider ways and means to adopt the principle on which the mover of the bill spoke, the principle of repayment of bad cheques. It seems to me that the present law is preferable to the proposed amendment.

At present the law says that the accused must show he had reasonable grounds for believing that if the cheque were presented within a reasonable time after issue it would be honoured. But the amendment would impose a time frame, and the time frame would give the cheque writer extended credit for 30 days, plus the time it takes the bank to notify the issuer of the cheque. Although I have deep respect and affection for the hon. member for London East and was pleased to hear the presentation of the hon. member for Middlesex-London-Lambton, I cannot accept the proposed amendment in its present form, and I hope the Minister of Justice will refer this question to the Law Reform Commission for study.

In law, there are federal cases and civil cases, for the most part, and in law presumption is a rarely invoked principle. In a criminal case the onus is almost always on the Crown to prove beyond a reasonable doubt mens rea, the guilty mind, or the intention of the accused to commit the offence. There are some narrow exceptions in which presumption is invoked. This proposed amendment would set up a presumption with regard to cheques. In the Criminal Code there is a presumption concerning the possession of stolen goods. Few other such presumptions exist in the law. Because a presumption shifts the onus from the Crown to the accused, and that onus is not light, I oppose this bill in its present form and hope the Minister of Justice will take steps to look into the matter.

Mr. W. Kenneth Robinson (Toronto-Lakeshore): Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the hon. member for London East (Mr. Turner) for introducing Bill C-230, "an act to amend the Criminal Code (presumption from cheque issued without funds)." The explanatory note to the bill reads:

> The purpose of this bill is to amend the Criminal Code to provide that the issuance of a cheque returned NSF shall raise a presumption that anything obtained thereby was obtained by false pretence, unless the maker of the cheque satisfies the debt within a period of thirty days after being notified that the cheque was dishonoured.

The explanatory note quotes the wording of subsection 320(4) of the Criminal Code, which at present reads as follows:

> . . . Where, in proceedings under paragraph (1)(a), it is shown that anything was obtained by the accused by means of a cheque that, when presented for payment within a reasonable time, was dishonoured on the ground that no funds or insufficient funds were on deposit to the credit of the accused in the bank or other institution on which the cheque was drawn, it shall be presumed to have been obtained by a false pretence, unless the court is satisfied by evidence that when the accused issued the cheque he had reasonable grounds to believe that it would be honoured if presented for payment within a reasonable time after it was issued.

According to this provision there is a presumption of guilt, that is to say, the onus is upon the accused to provide proof that at the time he wrote the cheque he sincerely believed he had sufficient funds in his bank account to cover the amount.

It would appear that this is in direct violation of the time-honoured presumption of innocence until guilt is proven.

I realize that we are dealing with a very complex issue here. Proving the intent to defraud is a very slippery matter. Intent is not necessarily a component of the proof of guilt. In this case unless someone actually said "I am going to write an NSF cheque" it would be extremely difficult to have actual, hard evidence. Canadian law is not alone in its demand that intent be proven. In England, for example, the law requires proof that the accused person acted dishonestly. Similarly, Australian law demands proof of the intent to defraud, although in this country the burden of proof lies with the prosecution rather than with the defendant to disprove. In the states of California, Maine, Michigan and New York a person can be found guilty of passing a bad cheque if, and only if, actual intent to defraud the victim can be found.

The solution to the acquisition of evidence proving the intentional writing of an NSF cheque would be some type of application of a test of intent. Bill C-230 provides the means for that test. If after 30 days a cheque was not honoured it could be assumed that intent had been proven by non-payment.

This bill is designed to rectify a deficiency in the current law governing commercial transactions. As we all know, the law dealing with bad cheques is plain in its intent, but difficult at best and impossible at worst to enforce. The law allows the accused to use as his defence the claim that when he issued the cheque he had reasonable grounds to believe it would be honoured if presented for payment within a reasonable time after it was issued. This is fine as far as it goes.

I am sure that many of us have inadvertently and innocently written an NSF cheque at one time or another. The present law rightly recognizes the possibility of making a legitimate error. But the law should also recognize the rights of those to whom the cheque is issued. I believe that this bill helps to right the balance between the cheque issuer and the cheque recipient, for we should recognize that the Criminal Code, as it stands, has opened not a crack but a superhighway through the law as it now exists. By failing to provide for restitution to the victim, it seems to me the law has missed the point.

I think the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) and the hon. member for Broadview (Mr. Gilbert) know how reluctant police are to lay charges in these cases, and how reluctant justices of the peace, magistrates, or provincial judges, as the case may be, are to deal with them. It is often the case, as the police, magistrates or provincial judges know, that a charge is laid in an attempt to use the criminal courts as a collection agency. I think the suggestion of the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton has merit, namely, that part of the sentence should call for the restitution of the amount of money for which the cheque is issued.

The benefits of this change in the law will affect us all. The cost of bad cheques has been twofold. It has been added on to the prices the rest of us pay. It also increases the storekeeper's reluctance to accept a cheque, any cheque, as a means of payment. How many of us have been in stores recently and seen the increasingly familiar "We do not accept cheques" sign? How embarrassingly familiar is the current ad for one of the credit card syndicates that asks, "Will that be cash, or—?" By lessening the risk to the merchant in accepting a cheque and decreasing the proportion of bad cheques, the mark-up on merchandise may be lowered. At least some of the merchant's reluctance to accept a cheque will be reduced.

Lest my colleagues think I am exaggerating, allow me to illustrate my point. A local Ottawa merchant stated that in 1976 his company lost $100,000 owing to bad cheques. A clothing chain store controller reported that his chain no longer accepted cheques as a form of payment. They will accept cash or credit cards. The reason? One cheque in ten issued to his firm bounced. Some retailers have found that up to 10 per cent of their annual revenues have been wiped out because of bad cheques.

● (1650)

The London Free Press reported in February that one woman was convicted this winter of defrauding 19 merchants of more than $3,500. In fact she passed 53 "bad cheques" totalling $4,925. In sentencing this offender the judge stated:

> It is no wonder that law-abiding citizens encounter problems when they try to write a cheque. The stores have been taken already by too many persons like yourself.

I received, this February, a letter from a woman whose husband has been a victim of NSF cheques and I would like to take the liberty of reading it.

> Dear Sir:
>
> May I say how much we appreciate your bringing the NSF cheque issue to light. My husband is a small businessman—he has a franchise for selling snap-on tools. He accepts cheques from customers in good faith, then, when a cheque "bounces", there is not a thing we can do about it. I can telephone day after day, and where they have moved to another location this costs us extra for long distance calls, but to no avail. We offer to take the tools back, but don't get too far on this very often as they need the tools for their line of work. We have paid for lawyers' letters, but to the type of person that writes NSF cheques a lawyer's letter doesn't mean a thing. They know there is no penalty so they can go on writing cheques. Nobody can prove that they didn't know the money was not in the bank.
> As with most other small business people, we have to pay for the tools within the week. My husband works many more hours than the fellow who writes the NSF cheques.
> It would be a fair ruling, that if the cheques are not honoured within 30 days, goods should be returned. That is a fair enough bill and should be passed.
> Thank you for supporting the bill.

The benefits of the hon. member's bill to the shopkeeper are obvious. By attaching the international dishonouring of a cheque to the Criminal Code, the merchant will have recourse to the Crown attorney. This is particularly important, for this bill is aimed at helping the retailer who has lost $200 or less in the transaction. Often the cost of implementing private proceedings outweighs the value of the items lost. If my hon. colleagues see fit to approve this amendment the merchant will no longer have to bear the burden of instituting proceedings himself, the cost of which must be measured not only in dollars, but in time and energy spent before the legalities begin. The retailer would have a specific time frame to operate within; after 30 days, legal action could be taken.

The unfortunate person who, through miscalculation, has written an NSF cheque would not be subject to harassment by the retailer or a collection agency for both would know that there was a 30 day limit for repayment. The innocent offender could make quick restitution, and the shopkeeper be assured that the law was on his side after the 30 day limit had expired.

Obviously the honest customer will also benefit. He will be less suspect when he wants to write a cheque for merchandise. He will likely also benefit through reduced price tags.

The 30 day time limit will allow the police and the judiciary to determine real intent to defraud. If restitution has not been made within that time, it is likely that it will not be made. In Ottawa alone, last year the police recorded that in 1,372 cases of cheques and credit card fraud, involving $420,000 worth of goods, only 128 arrests were made. Guilt through intent is difficult to establish. While the 30 day limit is not the only measure that can be taken, it would allow an easier determination of guilt by the police and would consequently provide for stricter enforcement of the anti-fraud laws.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, let me say that I do not believe that this amendment is the ultimate solution. Certainly some less scrupulous individual is likely to make use of the 30 day grace period to purchase items by cheque knowing full well that there is no money in his account, but counting on his U.I.C., pension, family allowance, or income tax return cheque to come before the expiry date. However, I also believe these incidents would be few and far between and that the benefits of this amendment will outweigh this drawback, which could, incidentally, be overcome by the simple imposition of a percentage charge, as is done on overdue accounts.

I would therefore urge my colleagues to support this bill of the hon. member for London East in his efforts to correct the injustices suffered by merchants and honest cheque writers alike.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I too would like to join with those who have complimented the hon. member for London East (Mr. Turner) on his initiative because there can be no doubt that the intent of the bill he has put before us today is a good one. Any person who has been engaged in business would probably expect that each one of us here had at one time or another received an NSF cheque.

Mr. Gilbert: But have we ever passed one? That is the issue.

Mr. Malone: I have received them. I do not know whether they came from Liberals or not. But we have never passed them.

An hon. Member: Are we getting our money's worth now?

Mr. Malone: If the hon. member is placing a value on my speech I should like to have it in cash rather than by cheque. I know what side of the House he sits on.

I should like to reiterate a couple of thoughts which have already been put forward this afternoon. The first is that the bill has the effect of giving 30 days' grace, or licence. I know that the hon. member who has just taken his seat made a reference to this. He said that innocent offenders would have 30 days in which to make restitution. But if the innocent can do this, so can those who are not so innocent. It is unlikely that 100 per cent of our population is composed of innocent individuals with the same high motives as the supporters of this measure. And there is no doubt that people without high motives would be in a position to abuse the privilege or loopholes which it provides.

There is another part of the bill to which I take exception. If the 30 day requirement is not met, an offence automatically becomes a criminal one.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The hour provided for the consideration of private members' business has now expired. It being five o'clock this House stands adjourned until Monday at 2 p.m. pursuant to Standing Order 2(1).

At 5 p.m. the House adjourned, without question put, pursuant to Standing Order.

GOVERNMENT'S INTENTION WITH REGARD TO IMPLEMENTATION OF MARIN REPORT—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, relating to the Royal Canadian Mounted Police. Since the Marin Commission Report on internal discipline and other aspects of the RCMP procedures has been in the hands of the government since January 1976, and since the need for its implementation is clearly illustrated in an incident such as L'Agence de Presse Libre burglary which involved an RCMP officer assigned to the investigation of this burglary for which he had some responsibility, as pointed out on page 15007 of Hansard last July, who was disciplined by the RCMP, then promoted by the RCMP, and finally it became necessary for him to enter a guilty plea respecting the said burglary, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn):

That the Solicitor General, without any further delay, make a statement on motions outlining the government's intentions with respect to the implementation of Judge René Marin's report which will be to the benefit of the vast majority of the RCMP.

Mr. Speaker: Presentation of such a motion for debate pursuant to Standing Order 43 can only be done with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

REQUEST FOR PUBLIC INQUIRY INTO BREAK-IN AT L'AGENCE DE PRESSE LIBRE—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity pursuant to the provisions of Standing Order 43, on the matter of the RCMP involvement in the break-in at the premises of a Quebec newspaper. Since on June 2 of last year as reported at page 14071 of Hansard, the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) and the hon. member for Fundy-Royal (Mr. Fairweather) respectively made a motion that information be conveyed to the House concerning this serious matter, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Edmonton Centre (Mr. Paproski):

That the Solicitor General, prior to his promised statement to be made on June 9, indicate why it took a change of ministry and elapsed time of one year to produce even the promise of a statement and further that he direct the government to institute an inquiry under the Inquiries Act.

Mr. Speaker: The provisions of Standing Order 43 require the unanimous consent of the House for the presentation of such a motion. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Paproski: Francis Fox said no, and Bud Drury said no.

IMMIGRATION

GOVERNMENT POSITION ON CONTROL BY PROVINCES—MOTION UNDER S.O. 43

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I rise to make a motion under Standing Order 43 on a matter of urgent and pressing necessity. In view of the fact that the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) developed a new deal respecting immigration to Canada with the province of Quebec without consultation with the other nine provinces or the parliament of Canada, I move, seconded by the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. Ellis):

That this House request the Prime Minister to make a statement on motions indicating whether such actions are acceptable to his government and outline if this is a precedent for a new trend in federal-provincial relations wherein Canadians can expect more unilateral negotiations between the federal government and one province and the deal then offered to all provinces.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Presentation of such a motion for debate pursuant to Standing Order 43 can be done only with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: No.

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

ORAL QUESTION PERIOD

[English]

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

DATE FORMER SOLICITOR GENERAL BECAME AWARE OF BREAK-IN AT L'AGENCE DE PRESSE LIBRE

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General. I wish to raise a question or two concerning newspaper reports of the break-in in 1972. Since my colleagues and I have been asking questions about this matter, as the Solicitor General knows, for well over a year and only recently has anything concrete emerged despite the repeated promises of a former solicitor general who, on March 31 and June 8 last year, promised this House further information, I wonder if the Solicitor General can simply and without prejudice to current legal proceedings with respect to sentencing, say precisely when the solicitor general of the day became aware of the situation. I am speaking of the solicitor general of the day. Was it in 1972, 1973, 1974—when was it?

[Translation]

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I must say in reply to the question of the hon. member that, as he is aware, an official inquiry was launched as soon as my predecessor was advised of the break-in or presumed break-in at the offices of the APLQ. That judicial inquiry is still under way, Mr. Speaker, and as I indicated to the House during the oral question period last Friday, as soon as sentence is passed, that is as soon as the legal process has been completed, I shall make as complete as possible a statement to the House on all circumstances surrounding the case of the APLQ.

[English]

IMPLEMENTATION OF MARIN REPORT

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. I gladly accept the minister's answer and will not ask more about the precise date on the understanding he will cover that point in his statement on the ninth. In view of circumstances involving one of the participants in this incident, and keeping in mind that I and some of my colleagues have often raised incidents in this House concerning RCMP officers who, owing to the arbitrary disciplinary procedures to which they are subjected, find themselves in difficulty, will the minister implement some of Judge René Marin's recommendations in the near future in order to put right inequities which, as I think the minister will agree, have caused the force much dissatisfaction within its ranks?

[Translation]

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, of course it is most unfortunate that doubtless because of his many preoccupations the hon. member was unable to attend the sitting of the Standing Committee on Justice and Legal Affairs which studied my budget last Thursday, because he could then have asked all those questions in detail. In any event, Mr. Speaker, I can assure him that following really intensive consultations with the RCMP, consultations which ended at the end of last November with representatives of the constables and other non-commissioned officers of the RCMP, an internal committee of my department composed in part of RCMP representatives made a complete review of the recommendations of the Marin report. Since that time, several of Justice Marin's recommendations have been accepted by the RCMP; as for the others, Mr. Speaker, I am expecting a report from my department before the end of June and hope to be able to introduce appropriate legislation to the House during the next session of Parliament.

[Mr. Speaker.]

[English]

DATE MINISTER WAS INFORMED OF INVOLVEMENT OF FORCE IN BREAK-IN AT L'AGENCE DE PRESSE LIBRE

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, my question is also addressed to the Solicitor General. I bear in mind what he said about a statement, and the hope expressed by the hon. member for Central Nova with respect to a precise date, but I still want the Solicitor General to answer a question or two. When was the Solicitor General of the day notified of the RCMP's involvement? Specifically, can the minister tell us in advance of his statement if he was first notified of the matter by the hon. member for Central Nova, or did he find out about it before my colleague, the hon. member for Central Nova, brought it to the Solicitor General's attention in the House of Commons?

[Translation]

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, I think it would be really dangerous for me to embark on making incomplete answers or to consider only parts of the whole APLQ question. For example, there is some confusion in the question asked by the hon. member about which solicitor general he is talking about. Before continuing this line of questioning, it would be wiser and more advisable to wait for the completion of legal procedures so that the accused are not prejudiced in any way in their rights.

[English]

MATTERS TO BE INCLUDED IN MINISTER'S STATEMENT CONCERNING BREAK-IN AT L'AGENCE DE PRESSE LIBRE

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, can the Solicitor General undertake to the House that the matter raised by the hon. member for Central Nova will be included in his statement. Can he also undertake to the House that the matter raised by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham, namely the question of a letter sent by L'Agence de Presse Libre to the Solicitor General, will also be dealt with in the statement. These are two things that are very important to the investigation of this matter, both in the House of Commons and in the country.

[Translation]

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): Mr. Speaker, obviously the answer to the question of the hon. member is yes.

MANPOWER

REQUEST FOR TABLING OF FORECASTS OF LEVEL OF UNEMPLOYMENT IN EACH PROVINCE—MEASURES TO REDUCE LEVEL

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Last Tuesday I asked the minister if he would confirm the existence of unemployment forecasts that were made by members of his department for the province of Quebec and other provinces. At that time the minister said he would look into the situation and report back. My question today is, will he now confirm that such forecasts were made by his department for the province of Quebec and other provinces? Will he table for the observation and scrutiny of members of this House the truly alarming figures that come out of those forecasts? Related to that, will he also advise if his department is planning any initiative to improve the unemployment situation in the next few years?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I can confirm that projections of various trends in the economy, including employment and unemployment, were recently published by the regional economists in Quebec. My understanding is that there was no authority to make this kind of information public. It is not our business to do that kind of forecasting. There are competent organizations, such as the Economic Council of Canada and the Conference Board of Canada, which make these projections. All of these sources are used by the department. We do not intend to make it a practice to publish these figures in the future, either for Quebec or other provinces.

REQUEST THAT COPIES OF FORECASTS OF LEVELS OF UNEMPLOYMENT IN THE PROVINCES BE APPENDED TO TODAY'S "HANSARD"

Mr. Edward Broadbent (Oshawa-Whitby): Mr. Speaker, the people of this country, particularly the provincial governments, have a real concern about these forecasts even if the minister does not. They are already available. I have copies of the figures which show that in six of the ten provinces between now and 1978-79 there are going to be alarming increases. There is a forecast increase in unemployment in Newfoundland from an average 14.4 per cent to 17.4 per cent, in Nova Scotia from 10.4 per cent to 11.3 per cent and in the province of Quebec from 9.0 per cent to 9.8 per cent. Given these truly deplorable figures in terms of their impact on the ten provinces in Canada, will the minister and the House unanimously agree to these figures being appended to Hansard so that they become part of the record? If there is agreement I would like to ask the minister if he plans to come up with any specific programs this summer, either after consultation with his colleagues or the provinces, to do something about the alarming situation his department is forecasting.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the information available from our sources or others indicated the difficulty that we are in fact having, the problems in the economy. That is why the budget was introduced by my colleague the Minister of Finance. That is why Industry, Trade and Commerce has taken initiatives in this field to increase the export trade, doing what it can to enhance that particular position. That is why in my own department we are endeavouring to fund training through the bill which is presently before the committee. There are other projects to deal with the situation, in so far as the government is able to cope with that and give the kind of initiative and incentive to business which it requires.

● (1420)

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, before I ask my final supplementary, I would like to ask Your Honour if there is unanimous agreement of the House to have these figures attached to today's Hansard?

Mr. Speaker: If consent is to be sought, I think it ought to be sought at some other time.

Mr. Broadbent: I will do that on motions, Mr. Speaker. My final supplementary is to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. The Department of Manpower and Immigration has prepared a serious forecast for an interdepartmental committee of the federal government. Is the minister saying that this should not be made available to the provinces of Canada and should not be made available to members of the House of Commons so that we can understand how serious the situation is? Is he saying the budget, which was brought down a couple of months ago—and which the Minister of Finance acknowledges primarily deals with inflation, is going to be the main instrument we will rely upon for the creation of jobs over the next couple of years?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, as the hon. member knows, all of this information has been published and is available to the general public. I indicated the budget in itself was one of the areas we would be pursuing to deal with the economy, as it is at the present time. I make no bones about the fact the Minister of Finance has to walk on a tough tightrope at this particular time, so as not to mushroom up inflation in the interests of creating employment, which would have a detrimental effect on the whole economy. Thus, it is a very tough role he has had to play, and I think he has done a marvellous job with the budget he introduced.

REASON CERTAIN OFFICES REFUSE TO PAY TRANSPORTATION FOR STUDENTS TO WORK ON FARMS IN ONTARIO

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, my question is also directed to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. It relates to students aged 16 or more who go to the fruit and vegetable harvest in Ontario and who can work very hard. I would like to have this matter settled once and for all, Mr. Speaker. Can the minister tell the House whether manpower offices can arrange for the payment of student transportation to the working place? If so, could he say why an office in my constituency refuses to pay for these students while another agrees to do so?

[English]

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, the procedure followed by the individual Manpower offices is to employ, wherever possible, students who live in the particular local area, who are familiar with the particular farming conditions, the crop and the people with whom they have to work. That kind of initiative or priority is in fact given. If students cannot be found in the local area to play that particular role, then we look elsewhere. I would be happy to look into the hon. member's representations. I am not sure we are doing that, at the present time, but I will certainly look at it.

[Translation]

Mr. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, I should like to put a supplementary question.

For the information of the minister, I would like to say that those students are required by Ontario farmers. I would like to ask the minister to make an inquiry at those offices. There is something wrong because those students are expected there. It is a simple matter of transportation, one provides it and the other does not.

[English]

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, the decision is not, in the first instance, left to the department; it is left to the individual Manpower office. If there are students available at the local level and on the scene, it seems appropriate that they should be given the first opportunity to work at these jobs. As I have indicated, I have heard the hon. member's representations, and I will look into the situation to see if there are any farmers who are suffering as a result of not being able to bring in students from Quebec.

ROYAL CANADIAN MOUNTED POLICE

POSSIBILITY OF PUTTING FORCE UNDER JURISDICTION OF MINISTER OF JUSTICE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Solicitor General as well. It is along the same lines as the questions by the hon. member for Central Nova and our House leader today. It concerns the incidents in Montreal and Toronto, which have raised continued questions about the relationship between the Solicitor General and the RCMP. In view of the fact the RCMP in many areas of law enforcement, such as the administration of the Official Secrets Act and the Narcotics Act, depend heavily on the expertise of the Attorney General of Canada, has the Solicitor General discussed the matter with the Minister of Justice, and indeed the Prime Minister, to consider placing the RCMP administration duties under the Attorney General and the Minister of Justice of Canada, as it was in the past before this difficulty arose?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): I am not sure what the hon. member means when he refers to the relationship between the RCMP and the Solicitor General. As to his suggestion, I have not pursued it with the Prime Minister or with the Minister of Justice but I believe the appropriate course of action was taken by the government back in 1966 when the Department of the Solicitor General was set up. I think that, on the whole, it has proven to be a very satisfactory way of administering this function.

Mr. Woolliams: That is not what the RCMP has had to say.

An hon. Member: Explain!

SOURCE OF INSTRUCTIONS ON BREAK-IN AT L'AGENCE DE PRESSE LIBRE

Mr. Eldon M. Woolliams (Calgary North): It is in the newspaper, if the minister cares to read it. Perhaps I could ask this question: in the light of the fact that the Solicitor General is not able to make a statement today, and is going to wait to tell the House whether the solicitor general of the day knew of the break-in of the Quebec newspaper prior to the break-in, would he be prepared, in that statement, to tell us what the general practice is? Does the Solicitor General, the minister in charge of the RCMP, give those instructions or do those instructions come direct from the Commissioner himself?

Hon. Francis Fox (Solicitor General): As far as the Solicitor General is concerned, and as far as the Commissioner of the RCMP is concerned, the only actions the RCMP can take are actions which are consistent with the law as enacted by this parliament. Perhaps the hon. member missed some of the answers given in the House by both the Prime Minister and myself. We have indicated quite clearly on a number of occasions that the solicitor general at the time had no prior knowledge of the break-in.

REASON FOR FAILURE TO CONSULT OTHER PROVINCES PRIOR TO AGREEMENT WITH QUEBEC

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct my question to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. Without having any prejudice as to the recent discussions the minister had with the minister in Quebec, I should like to ask him on what basis and what was the justification for making a new deal with the province of Quebec on immigration without first consulting the other nine provinces and the Parliament of Canada?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, let me first say there is no new deal with this particular province. We were talking about the selection of immigrants to Quebec and our discussions were based on section 95 of the British North America Act which indicates that this is an area of shared jurisdiction. It permits the co-determination of both levels of government in the immigration selection process. When I was asked, in dealing with one province, whether this was something which was available to all other provinces, the answer was yes. At the present time we have two agreements with the province of Quebec. Similar opportunities have been made available to other provinces but they have not seen fit, for their own reasons, to take them up. The Bienvenue-Andras agreement was, as Mr. Couture indicated, a good step forward, but it seems now we can do more with respect to sharing or codetermining immigration designated for various parts of the country. We agreed to the establishment of a joint working group which will look into all the options available. This will be available not only to Quebec but to any province which wants to participate.

REQUEST FOR ASSURANCE FEDERAL CONTROL NOT RELINQUISHED TO PROVINCES

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): I trust the minister will have full respect for freedom of mobility in Canada. Would he give an assurance to the House and to the Canadian people that the federal government will exercise majority influence over immigration rather than release it to provincial jurisdiction and thus threaten the opportunity for a sensible, rational immigration policy throughout Canada?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Both Mr. Couture and I share that concern. As a matter of fact, Mr. Couture suggested, if I may use his words, that at the federal level we ought to have a common denominator in order to preserve and protect that vital element of immigration policy in Canada, namely, a person's ability to move throughout Canada despite the fact that he might originally have been designated to go to one province. There was no suggestion of any breakdown in that regard.

Mr. Malone: I am not sure whether the minister stated this categorically, but I just wanted him to state, in front of the House of Commons, whether the federal government got the say in more than 50 per cent of immigration policy? That is the simple question I would like the minister to answer.

Mr. Cullen: More important than getting into semantics over percentages, what we must look at is codetermination and the determinate role. Percentages are not going to make that amount of difference in numbers. It is a question of making sure that we maintain a common denominator and do what is necessary to encourage Francophone immigration to Canada as well as ensure the ability of the immigrant to move throughout the country.

● (1430)

QUEBEC REQUEST FOR CONTROL OF POINTS GIVEN PROSPECTIVE IMMIGRANTS—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): Let me ask the minister a brief supplementary question. His counterpart in the province of Quebec has put forth to the minister his position in which he indicates he wants control over 55 per cent of the points given to immigrants coming to Canada. I want to know from the minister whether he said no to that request and, if he did not say no, what did he say?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Couture indicated he was interested in selecting the best formula that would meet both our requirements. He said he did not want to be hung up on figures or become involved in statistics. If there is a better system, even beyond the pointage system, such as a sponsorship system or some other role that province might play, he wanted to look at all the options. That is why he agreed with me to establish a working group so that we could look not only at the options suggested by him but at others that we might wish to propose.

POSSIBILITY OF DIVIDING SELECTION CRITERIA

Mr. Lincoln M. Alexander (Hamilton West): I take it from the minister's answer that his counterpart in Quebec has now abdicated with regard to that particular proposal. The minister can answer that question when I ask him my second question. I understand that in the minister's statement he advised his counterpart that the selection process can be divided into two parts, one affecting social, cultural and demographic aspects and the other concerned with economic and labour aspects as well as market conditions, the latter being the responsibility of the federal government. Was there any discussion with respect to that type of thinking on the part of the minister and, if so, what was the reply in that regard?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I am not certain what the hon. member means in the first part of his question about abdicating or backing off.

Mr. Alexander: I meant that he does not want 55 per cent control.

Mr. Cullen: We agreed to look at that option along with others that have been suggested to him. This group was set up because the question is a little more complex and it may well be that, as is the case with shareholders in a company, a 30 per cent interest may very well be the controlling interest. We want to look at all the options and have an open and free discussion on them, and to that extent we agreed to look at it, so there was no backing off or backtracking. It was a question of examining not only that option but all other options that have been suggested.

Similarly with respect to the second part of the hon. member's question, we pointed out that in those areas at the federal level we should play a major role and in other areas the provinces could play their major role. That again is one of the several options that would be considered by the special working group.

Oral Questions

AVAILABILITY TO OTHER PROVINCES OF POWERS GRANTED QUEBEC

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): Would the minister tell the House whether he has indicated to the minister from Quebec that the same considerations would be offered to the other provinces, or would there be a mix or a variant of that formula offered to each of the provinces of Canada at their option; in other words, that there would be ten bilateral negotiations between the government of Canada and the provincial governments with regard to the national immigration policy? Was that disclosed to the minister from Quebec and, if so, what were his comments?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): He felt that he had met his responsibility as the provincial minister in a federal system to indicate to the federal Minister of Manpower and Immigration where Quebec had a role to play and that it should have a codetermining role, if you will, in selecting the flow of immigrants. When I mentioned to him that these options would of course be available to other provinces, he said that it would be up to them to take their own initiatives; he has his responsibility as the provincial minister in a federal system to do what he can to enhance the flow of immigration to Quebec. So he is certainly aware of it.

POSSIBILITY OF RESTRICTIONS ON MOBILITY OF IMMIGRANT LABOUR

Hon. Marcel Lambert (Edmonton West): With regard to the second aspect referred to by my colleague, the hon. member for Hamilton West, would the minister indicate whether any restriction was to be imposed on the mobility of immigrant labour entering any particular geographic area of Canada and, if so, if the restrictions were breached by the immigrant, what might be the result?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): I indicated that one of the strengths of Canada was the fact that people in Canada, both immigrants and Canadians had mobility and should be able to move from province to province and it was essential that that mobility be maintained. That was when Mr. Couture used the expression that there would of course have to be a common denominator so that an immigrant who was accepted by Quebec, for whatever reasons, would be able to move and settle in Ontario or another province if that would be his or her wish.

CP AIR

POSSIBILITY OF SALE OF AIRLINE

Mr. Jack Murta (Lisgar): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Transport. A federal official quoted in a Montreal Gazette report of last Friday said that high level discussions between the premier of Alberta and the president of CP Air Limited concerning the sale of CP Air had taken place. Can the Minister of Transport say whether that report is correct and at what stage of negotiations the two principals find themselves?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, I suppose it is always difficult when the press purport to report some high level source to say whether it is true or not that the source knows anything. Let me say quite plainly that no source that I seem to know as knowing anything about it knows anything about the subject. I have now checked a number of sources both outside and in the government, and I believe there is nothing to it at all.

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED

ALLEGED STATEMENT CONCERNING ESTABLISHMENT OF PLANT TO PRODUCE PLUTONIUM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, may I direct my question to the Acting Prime Minister because the matter I want to raise has to do with the government in general. Last Thursday in the House the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources stated that the government had made no decision with respect to the construction of a reprocessing plant to extract plutonium from radiation waste and to use that plutonium with thorium to provide electric energy for Ontario Hydro. I want to ask the Acting Prime Minister if the government's attention has been drawn to a press conference last Friday at which officials of AECL stated that it would be inappropriate to scrap the plans for a plutonium plant even if the government is opposed. May I ask the Acting Prime Minister also if he thinks it is appropriate that officials who are hired to advise the government on the nuclear energy policy should be publicly advocating a course of action on which the government itself has allegedly not yet made a decision?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Acting Prime Minister): Until the hon. member raised the question, to the best of my knowledge the attention of the government had not been drawn to the press conference. That is in answer to the first part of the question. If the story, as alleged by the hon. member, is correct, I will most certainly want to see the government question the propriety of any agency making a statement indicating its opposition or contradiction to or its disagreement with what appears to be the government's stated policy. But I would like to check what the hon. member has quoted, which he probably got from the press as well.

ENERGY

SUGGESTED PUBLIC INQUIRY INTO USE OF NUCLEAR ENERGY

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the fact that modern science has given us tremendous powers which can be used for the benefit of or the destruction of mankind, and in view of the fact that the nuclear advisers to the government are engaged in the business of selling nuclear reactors and technology, I want to ask the Acting Prime Minister whether the government is now prepared to consider the fact that the time is long overdue for Canada to follow the example of other countries, such as the United Kingdom which appointed a royal commission under Sir Brian Flowers, to assess the dangers and the benefits of nuclear energy and to come up with recommendations upon which Canada could base the same nuclear policy that would be in the public interest?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (Acting Prime Minister): I would point out to the hon. member my own view that the government is totally aware of the potential dangers and it has these constantly under examination. In fact it is taking measures to make sure that the proliferation and sale of reactors is carried out under a sound and sane policy, as the hon. member suggests. As to whether it would be necessary for a royal commission to be struck to do this, that is a different question indeed, and I take that as a representation which no doubt will be noted.

● (1440)

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): In view of the answer of the Acting Prime Minister I would like to point out that the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources said last Thursday that he had asked the Standing Committee on National Resources and Public Works to look into this matter, but, as every hon. member in the House knows, that committee has neither the time nor the expertise to examine a problem of such magnitude. I wonder if the Acting Prime Minister would undertake to discuss with the Prime Minister and his colleagues the fact that a reprocessing plant is not immediately necessary, and in light of that whether it would be preferred—because this has not been dealt with in any of the government's guidelines regarding the export of nuclear capacity—to examine the whole question of reprocessing plants by appointing a commission consisting of qualified scientists with no commercial bias in the hope that we might be able to establish guidelines for our domestic nuclear policy before we embark upon a course of action which could have disastrous effects not only on ourselves but also on future generations.

Mr. Andras: Mr. Speaker, obviously the hon. member is registering his concerns, and we should be listening to him. The hon. member made a representation which I will certainly ensure is carried forward for consideration. Beyond that I cannot give the hon. member a definitive answer.

GOVERNMENT ADMINISTRATION

DATE OF APPOINTMENT OF COMPTROLLER GENERAL

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the President of the Treasury Board. Now that the government has announced the creation of the position of comptroller general, would the minister bring the House up to date on the progress he is making in acquiring a suitable candidate to fill that very important position, and can he tell the House when we might expect that appointment to be announced in the House?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, the search for a qualified person to fill that position is underway with vigour. The search involves the examination of potential candidates from within the public service and from outside the public service. It is proceeding. I cannot give the hon. member any specific date by which the decision as to who will get the appointment will be made except to express my keen interest in proceeding as quickly as possible. I hope it will be before very long because there is considerable organization and reorganization which must accompany that appointment which begins with putting a competent person into the job.

POSSIBILITY OF CHANGES IN FINANCIAL ADMINISTRATION ACT AS RESULT OF APPOINTMENT OF COMPTROLLER GENERAL

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, the minister has stated today, and on previous occasions, that the creation of this position will require a major restructuring of the Treasury Board Secretariat. Will this involve amendments to the Financial Administration Act, and if so, is it the intention of the minister to introduce legislation before the summer recess to accommodate those changes in the Financial Administration Act?

Hon. Robert K. Andras (President of the Treasury Board): Mr. Speaker, I am advised that the appointment of a comptroller general at the deputy minister level reporting directly to the President of the Treasury Board would probably be best carried out by a minor in terms of quantity amendment to the Financial Administration Act. I have had some discussions with representatives of the other parties to see how quickly that might be done because if we could get the time to do it quickly, my own view is that that would be desirable. However, as the hon. member knows, there are some plans for more extensive amendments to the Financial Administration Act which might not be possible to place before the House before the fall. This really is still a question of negotiation, and frankly I have not yet received an answer as a result of my discussions with hon. members opposite.

IMMIGRATION

SUGGESTION GRANTING OF POWERS TO QUEBEC SHOULD BE DEBATED IN HOUSE

Right Hon. J. G. Diefenbaker (Prince Albert): Mr. Speaker, my question arises out of the initial questions to the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. If I understood him correctly, he agreed that arrangements could be made between the federal and any provincial government—and other provincial governments would have the same right—to determine the question of immigration into their respective provinces. That to me is a proposition which is a denial of any concept of "one Canada". Would that not lead to a situation whereby any one province could say that whatever the other provinces said, "We do not want any French people migrating into this province; we do not want any English people migrating into this province; we do not want Jews in this province"? Is this not an outrageous proposition which will balkanize Canada? I suggest to the minister that this is too serious to leave to this government to come to an arrangement with the P.Q. government in Quebec. It is a matter which should be brought before the House of Commons so that we can find out the views of Canada and Canadians as a whole. Balkanization may meet a situation which exists today, but in the future it would be a denial of any expectation of greatness in the destiny of this nation.

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, I might agree with the right hon. gentleman if the points were being awarded on the basis of the criteria that he is suggesting. That might have the impact of balkanizing the country. I feel that we are dealing here with section 95 of the British North America Act, which makes provision for a co-determination of the landing of immigrants in this country. This has worked to the benefit of this country since it became a nation. I do not think anyone would deny that. We are attempting to live up to the spirit of the British North America Act, section 95, by saying to the provinces that it is conceivable that in the past the federal government has acted almost in a unilateral way by setting out the points system, by saying who would be allowed to come in and by letting immigrants settle wherever they please. Quebec and other provinces—

Mr. Diefenbaker: What other provinces?

Mr. Cullen: Manitoba for one—have indicated that they, too, would like to have a say in either the points system or in finding some other formula whereby there could be a codetermination of the movement of immigrants into the country. I think this is something we should discuss, and we should live up to our responsibilities as a federalist state under section 95.

Mr. Diefenbaker: Mr. Speaker, I know the contents of section 95, but does the minister not admit that it was never contemplated that a proposition would be advanced by any government which would place the government of the provinces in the position of being able indirectly or directly to control immigration into their provinces? Consultation, yes, but not outright acceptance of the viewpoint of the provinces. The minister believes discussions should take place, but does the minister not agree that the discussions should be held here in the House of Commons so that this matter can be determined as a result of the views of Canadians as a whole rather than those of the Prime Minister of Canada and the Premier of Quebec, who in the past were as close as two peas in a pod?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, I think the right hon. gentleman and I share the hope of the minister of immigration for the province of Quebec that we do in fact maintain a Francophone immigration into this country. We have come up with suggestions and ideas in the past which have been adopted, and in two agreements entered into by predecessors of mine we have in fact recognized that. The Bienvenue-Andras agreement is a good example of that. The fact that we spend money on advertising only for Francophone immigration was recognized, and in the interest of doing that which is good for Canada we are authorized under the statute to enter into individual agreements. Mr. Couture has no desire to indicate that people should flow only into Quebec. That would not be acceptable. He has used the expression "common denominator", and I think we must maintain that not only in the best interest of Quebec but also in the best interest of Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Diefenbaker: This is a question of more than political and partisan argument. This is a matter which affects the future of Canada. Has the government become too self-satisfied to permit it, or would the minister agree that this matter should be brought before the House to find out the views of parliament rather than the views of two who in the past have been close and who are desirous of coming to some arrangement today, regardless of any consideration?

Mr. Cullen: Mr. Speaker, if the two leaders to whom the right hon. gentleman refers could keep Quebec in Confederation, I think it would be time well spent.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

METHOD OF AGREEING ON COMMON DENOMINATOR IN ESTABLISHING CRITERIA FOR PROSPECTIVE IMMIGRANTS

Mr. Gordon Ritchie (Dauphin): Mr. Speaker, I have a supplementary question for the Minister of Manpower and Immigration. May I ask him if the so-called common denominator will not have to be agreed upon by all provinces, so that any immigrants acceptable to one province will also be acceptable to others? If this common denominator is agreed upon, how will it be negotiated?

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): Mr. Speaker, that is precisely why we set up this particular group, to look into the kind of situation that the hon. member envisages and also to see to it that we do not focus only on a points system but look to other avenues that might be more effective. I can see for example a dual operation and dual officers being delaying and counterproductive to what Canada wants and the best kinds of immigrants for Canada. We are going to do everything we can to see to it that we maintain that particular stance.

Mr. Ritchie: The newspapers report that a group of officials will be negotiating this in the coming summer. May I ask if other provinces will have representatives at these meetings?

Mr. Cullen: No, Mr. Speaker. As I indicated the provinces are showing their individual initiative as to what extent, what level and in what numbers they want to participate. We have made provision under the new immigration bill to solve the problem. We have done demographic studies on numbers and before any numbers are announced in this House, we must have more full and frank discussion with the individual provinces. This is one area where some initiative has been taken by the province of Quebec. We have had correspondence from one other province that I am aware of today.

CENTRAL MORTGAGE AND HOUSING CORPORATION

BASIS ON WHICH FUNDS DISTRIBUTED TO PROVINCES

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of State for Urban Affairs. Would the minister be kind enough to explain to the House on what basis the capital budget commitment for funding CMHC is disbursed to the provinces? Is this funding disbursed on a per capita basis or on the basis of expanding housing needs in the various provinces? I ask this question in light of the fact that the Minister of Housing and Public Works for Alberta has suggested that Albertans have been treated less than equitably in past funding.

[Translation]

Hon. André Ouellet (Minister of State for Urban Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the allotment of funds is made in accordance with programs established under the National Housing Act and it is obvious that all provinces would like to obtain more. However, I think that Alberta receives its fair share in that allotment.

[English]

Mr. Elzinga: A supplementary question. I find it rather hard to understand how the minister can say Alberta is getting its fair share when on a per capita basis—

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The hon. member has begun on a subject that is probably too wide for the question period and which really ought to be dealt with when the minister is before the standing committee with his estimates. He is now carrying on what is only the logical conclusion but which regrettably is argument rather than questioning.

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED

STATEMENT CONCERNING ESTABLISHMENT OF PLANT TO PRODUCE PLUTONIUM—GOVERNMENT POSITION

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, my question is directed to the Prime Minister. It concerns the plutonium reprocessing plant and the Prime Minister's statement in the House last Thursday and also at his weekly press conference. The day after, officials from Atomic Energy of Canada Limited held a press conference at which they stated it was their opinion it was inappropriate to drop plans for this pilot plutonium plant despite the government's position. I want to know whether the officials from Atomic Energy of Canada Limited were stating government policy?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the statements made by the officials. If in fact they made the statements they are quoted as having made, it does not seem to me there is a great contradiction between their position and ours. We have not drawn up any definite plans for a reprocessing plant. I reported to the House last week and in the press conference that the matter was under study and that at the summit in London we had agreed to set up a 60-day study. I indicated that this group was already planning to meet early in June or late in June and that no decision has been taken.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: A supplementary question, Mr. Speaker. The position taken by the AECL officials was that the policy accepted by Canada at the international meeting referred to was out of kilter with the need to extend uranium resources by recycling the spent fuel through plutonium which could then be used with thorium to generate more power in existing Canadian reactors. What I want to know is whether the AECL position is that of the government, being completely contradictory to the position put forth by the Prime Minister and the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources and who makes the policy with respect to this very important area—the AECL officials or Senator Keith Davey?

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member for Perth-Wilmot.

NORTHERN AFFAIRS

DRILLING IN BEAUFORT SEA—DATE OF DECISION ON APPLICATION OF DOME PETROLEUM

Mr. Bill Jarvis (Perth-Wilmot): Mr. Speaker, I wanted to put a question to the Minister of Indian Affairs and Northern Development who left the Chamber so I will therefore direct it to the Prime Minister. Some weeks ago I directed a question to the minister regarding the delay in the application of Dome Petroleum and their drilling company Canmar for their five-year drilling permit for the Beaufort Sea and the minister indicated the delay was caused by the investigation into the circumstances surrounding the oil spill in the North Sea. May I ask if the investigation into the North Sea incident has been completed and if the Prime Minister can indicate to the House when the decision will be made with respect to the drilling application for the Beaufort Sea in this season and the next four seasons?

Right Hon. P. E. Trudeau (Prime Minister): Yes, Mr. Speaker, the minister has completed the review and consultation with his colleagues. I believe he will be in a position to make an announcement very soon.

Oral Questions

SOCIAL SERVICES

REQUEST FOR INCREASED ALLOWANCE FOR PARAPLEGICS AND QUADRAPLEGICS

Mr. Robert Muir (Cape Breton-The Sydneys): Mr. Speaker, my question to the Minister of National Health and Welfare relates to increased allowances for paraplegics and quadraplegics in this country. I realize the legislative aspect of the question at the moment. Can the minister inform the House if any special studies are going on at the present time in his department with regard to a special allowance for these people who are unfortunate enough to be confined to a wheelchair without the added cost of catheters and medication as well as the frustration of facing a wheelchair every day?

Hon. Marc Lalonde (Minister of National Health and Welfare): Mr. Speaker, first of all, I am pleased to advise the hon. member that I hope to introduce in this House very shortly a new piece of legislation called the social services act which will have as one of its highest priorities the improvement of services to the handicapped in this country. That legislation, however, will provide for a cost-sharing program and the initiative, as with all other social services, will be the responsibility of individual provinces. As far as specific payments are concerned, such payments are authorized for cost-sharing under the Canada Assistance Plan but the provinces must take the initiative in deciding the level of payments with the federal government paying 50 per cent of what the program costs as determined by the provinces. Unfortunately, the government has no constitutional or legal authority to provide for direct payments to the handicapped of this country.

Mr. Muir: A supplementary question. I thank the minister for his reply and I appreciate the information he has provided. As one who spent many, many months in a wheelchair and who had to learn to walk all over again, may I ask if the minister would make special representation in regard to the Canada Assistance Plan to his provincial counterparts to ascertain whether things could not be arranged on a better basis than under that particular act. As it is now, the poorer provinces cannot cope with the 50-50 arrangement.

Mr. Lalonde: Mr. Speaker, this matter was investigated at great length with the provinces when we discussed the establishment of an income support and supplementation program. On the whole the provinces recognized that the system whereby the federal government finances roughly 50 per cent of the cost is still the one that is most acceptable all around.

TELEGLOBE CANADA

ALLEGED INCREASE IN PERSONNEL—PROPOSED CONSTRUCTION OF SATELLITE STATION NEAR MONTREAL

Mr. Lloyd R. Crouse (South Shore): Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Communications. There is a report of tremendous growth in the bureaucracy during recent months at Teleglobe Canada in Montreal, the company that used to be known as the Canadian Overseas Telecommunication Corporation. Would the minister inform the House of the reason for this tremendous increase in personnel and at the same time would she indicate whether it is the plan of Teleglobe to build a new satellite station north of Marion Heights near Montreal and if so, how much will be expended for this new station?

[Translation]

Hon. Jeanne Sauvé (Minister of Communications): Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any tremendous growth in the personnel of Teleglobe Canada during recent months, but I will ask the president and be able to give the information to the hon. member.

As for the new earth station, I know it is under construction. I could give the specific reasons for it later, but for the moment I believe this is to give more services.

EXTERNAL AFFAIRS

REASON CANADA ABSTAINED FROM VOTING ON ARTICLE TO EXTEND RIGHTS OF PRISONERS OF WAR

Mr. Allan B. McKinnon (Victoria): Mr. Speaker, in the absence of the Secretary of State for External Affairs, may I direct my question to the minister responsible for answering. A committee of the conference meeting in Geneva to update the 1949 Geneva Convention recently voted for a draft article which appears to blur completely the distinction between soldier and murderer, and to extend the rights of prisoners of war to guerrillas, terrorists, skyjackers and hostage takers. Canada, the great abstainer, abstained again on this matter. I should like the minister to explain why we abstained instead of voting against the draft article?

Mr. Fernand E. Leblanc (Parliamentary Secretary to Secretary of State for External Affairs): Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this conference is to extend the protection afforded by the 1949 Geneva Convention to those affected by armed conflict. While Canada has actively supported the humanitarian aims of the conference, we abstained on this question, along with a number of other western delegations, since the terms of the article were highly ambiguous and could be interpreted to adversely affect the protection which is to be afforded to the civilian population during times of war.

Mr. McKinnon: Mr. Speaker, I thank the parliamentary secretary for his answer. May I direct this supplementary question to him: Is he aware that this amendment would have enabled such people as the murderers of Mr. Laporte to claim legal immunity from prosecution as criminals? Is he prepared to table the draft amendment and also prepared to assure the House that, before Canada ratifies any new Geneva convention, the House will be given full opportunity to debate it?

[Translation]

Mr. Leblanc (Laurier): Mr. Speaker, the answer given is rather complete. However, we will consider the new items mentioned by the hon. member and give him an answer later.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

PRESENCE IN GALLERY OF PRESIDENT OF MAURITANIA

Mr. Speaker: Order please. In closing the oral question period, I will take a moment to call attention to the presence in our gallery of a very distinguished guest, His Excellency Moktar Ould Daddah, President of the Islamic Republic of Mauritania.

[English]

Mr. Broadbent: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Last Tuesday I asked the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen) a question about certain unemployment figures his department had produced. He cast doubt on the accuracy of the question, but said he would look into it. He confirmed in the House today that such figures were produced for the province of Quebec.

I asked the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) if similar horrendous figures had been compiled for other provinces, and he, too, doubted the existence of such figures. He questioned the correctness of the allegation, then alluded to further inquiries on his part. The Minister of Manpower and Immigration admitted in the House today the existence of such figures forecasting significant unemployment increases for the next two years with respect to six of ten of Canada's provinces.

I should like to clear up any doubt about the veracity of the figures. It has been admitted that they exist. Earlier, the Minister of Finance doubted their existence. In order to clear the issue, I think it might be useful if members of the House would agree unanimously to the tabling of such figures submitted by the Department of Manpower and Immigration to a short-term task force interdepartmental committee on employment development. If there is unanimous agreement, I ask that those figures be appended to today's Hansard.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. It seems to me that the hon. member for Oshawa-Whitby (Mr. Broadbent) has already accomplished what he wishes by the reference to the matter during the question period and by his request now that such figures be printed in Hansard. However, he asks unanimous consent. This is required, of course, if such figures which were referred to earlier during questions are to be appended to Hansard. Is there unanimous consent to table such figures and append them to Hansard?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Some hon. Members: No.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is not unanimous agreement.

Mr. Broadbent: Someone on the government side said no.

PRIVILEGE

MR. PAPROSKI—PROCEDURE IN DEALING WITH S.O. 43 MOTIONS

Mr. Steven E. Paproski (Edmonton Centre): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of privilege concerning something I have just read in Hansard, and I raise the question at this time. I refer to page 5968 of Hansard for May 26, 1977, and to an exchange between the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang). The right hon. gentleman had been talking about a certain procedure relating to Standing Order 43, when the minister rose on a point of order. Hansard reports the appropriate passage as follows:

MR. LANG: Yes, Mr. Speaker, on a point of order I think the record should show that Mr. Paproski, thus named, is notorious in this House for saying someone said "No" very frequently when it is totally false to say so.

Sir, I know of no rule which does not allow me, when I see a certain hon. member on the other side of the House mouthing the word "no" after Mr. Speaker has asked if there is unanimous consent for the acceptance of a motion under Standing Order 43, to say that an hon. member is saying no. As Hansard reported on page 5968, I did say, "Ralph Goodale said no." I regret the minister raised that point of order, but it did happen. I think the minister opposite should withdraw that statement. He might as well have said I am lying.

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Mr. Speaker, the occasions when I have seen the hon. member who just spoke allege that a certain member shouted no when it was clearly not true to say so are numerous indeed, and they have even involved me. I should like it to be known that I classify this statement, as I presume he classifies his own actions, with the nature of his humour or his sense of humour. I do not think it is an appropriate practice; indeed, I think it is a deplorable practice. In future I will try to identify occasions when he makes wrong allegations, and particularly when they are reported in Hansard, with regard to any particular member's saying no, when he has not done so.

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I rise on the same question of privilege. I suggest the minister misinformed himself. That is understandable. He does that periodically. From my experience, most of the time members behind him shout no, and unless he has eyes in the back of his head, which I doubt, he cannot tell who is saying no.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. There is apparently a desire on the part of those contributing to the discussion to contribute more than once. Members on both sides of the House have contributed to discussion of the point. There are, I am sure, many explanations on both sides with respect to statements which have been made. It seems to me that all made reference to situations which are somewhat inaccurately described as having occurred in the past. They will probably recur in the same way somewhat frequently in the future, which should give the parties who want to test the validity of these questions ample opportunity to do so, and it should not be necessary to go further this afternoon.

● (1510)

Mr. T. C. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): Mr. Speaker, it seems that the difficulty which has been encountered in this case and encountered before could be remedied by the committee studying the rules and procedures of this House if it were provided in the Standing Orders that any member who wants to say no when a motion is introduced under Standing Order 43 be required to stand up and be recognized so that he is recorded in Hansard.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Paproski.]

Mr. Douglas (Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands): That is the only way we will prevent this difficulty of some relatively anonymous person with his head behind a book saying no, the record showing that the House has refused consent and nobody knowing who it is who has refused to give consent. If any member wants to refuse to give consent to the debating of a motion introduced under Standing Order 43, he or she ought to be willing to stand up and be recognized.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. The suggestion made by the hon. member for Nanaimo-Cowichan-The Islands (Mr. Douglas) has been made on numerous occasions in the past by other members. There are, of course, other aspects of it that ought to be considered by the Committee on Procedure. There are occasions when members, even if they support the subject matter of a motion, are reluctant to see the business of the day set aside for debate. Perhaps it might be useful to have the procedure committee consider that, if a member is to be identified as withholding his or her consent, they ought to be given the opportunity to explain their reasons. There are all kinds of considerations involved.

I think all members are aware that the Committee on Procedure has been requested a number of times by other members to examine this matter. It is hoped that if there can be improvements in the manner in which we handle these motions, the procedure committee will move to do so and examine reasonably soon to see if there are any recommendations that might meet the approval of all sides of the House.

OCEAN MANAGEMENT

Question No. 1,226—Mr. Forrestall:

1. With reference to the answer to Question No. 1,327 of the First Session of the 30th Parliament, has there been consultation between industry and government on the identification of a series of priorized and integrated ice excellence research and development programme requirements and, if so, what was such consultation?

2. Did such consultation result in identifying specific programme requirements and, if not, for what reason?

3. If the programme requirements have been identified, have they been presented to the appropriate Ministers and (a) if not, for what reason (b) if so (i) what do they require of each of the responsible Ministers (ii) what has been the response of each of the appropriate government departments or agencies?

4. Is there a panel on Ocean Management and, if so (a) what is it (b) what are the names of the members and who does each represent (c) how often does it meet (d) what are its responsibilities (e) what input has it made with respect to the implementation of the "New Oceans Policy"?

5. Does the government fund or support research in oceanography and ocean engineering at Canadian universities and, if so (a) what is it (b) which universities have received such funding and how much has each received each year since 1972?

6. Have bilateral agreements been signed between Canada and other countries in the area of Ocean Science and, if so, what are Canada's specific responsibilities under any such agreements?

7. (a) Which departments and agencies are involved in the implementation of the "New Oceans Policy" (b) what is the responsibility and duties assigned to each?

8. (a) Do foreign companies, operating off the Canadian East Coast obtain information relating to ice/weather conditions from the government (b) does the government know if these companies are conducting their own studies into weather and ice conditions in the area and, if so, does the government have access to any resulting information and, if not, for what reason?

Hon. James Hugh Faulkner (Minister of State for Science and Technology): In so far as the Ministry of State for Science and Technology is concerned: 1. Consultation between industry and government on the identification of ice excellence research and development programme requirements was in the form of two workshops arranged by a consultant retained by the Ministry of State for Science and Technology. The first workshop was devoted to Arctic commercial activities, primarily in the petroleum and transportation sectors, and was attended principally by industrial representatives. The second workshop, primarily involving government participation, focussed on the fishing industry and government support services for Arctic waters operations.

2. The workshops produced a very large number of recommendations and suggestions with respect to the development of ice covered waters capabilities. Through extensive interdepartmental consultations these recommendations were developed into a series of programme requirements with respect to: weather forecasting (Department of Fisheries and the Environment), ice forecasting (Department of Fisheries and Environment, Ministry of Transport), hydrography (Department of Fisheries and the Environment, Ministry of Transport), communications (Department of Communications, Department of Fisheries and the Environment, Ministry of Transport), navigation aids (Ministry of Transport), arctic vessel research (Ministry of Transport, National Research Council), arctic engineering research (National Research Council), icebreaking (Ministry of Transport), search and rescue (Ministry of Transport, Department of National Defence, Department of Fisheries and the Environment), and oilspill detection, containment and clean-up (Department of Fisheries and the Environment, Ministry of Transport).

3. (b)(i) and (ii) The programme requirements developed cooperatively by the responsible departments have been presented to the appropriate Ministers. Specific plans for implementation will be formulated by departments, as noted in 2 above, in the context of their existing activities in these service areas, and in conformity with the development of new demands for the services and the availability of funds.

4. (a) The Panel on Ocean Management is an interdepartmental committee with representation from all departments and agencies having responsibilities and interests with respect to the management of the ocean and its resources. (b), (c) and (d) Responsibility for the Panel has recently been transferred from the Ministry of State for Science and Technology to the Department of Fisheries and the Environment, which has been given lead department responsibility for ocean matters. The Panel's membership, terms and reference, and activity plans are now under review following this transfer. (e) The Panel has reviewed ocean management functions in the light of changing jurisdictional responsibilities, priorities and technologies as a basis for continuing interdepartmental consultations on ocean policy and departmental operations and plans.

5. (a) and (b) Since 1972, grants for the support of research in oceanography and ocean engineering have gone to the following universities from the National Research Council, Department of National Defence (Defence Research Board), Department of Fisheries and the Environment, and Department of Energy, Mines and Resources:

6. Canada has signed bilateral agreement for cooperation in science and technology with four countries: Belgium, the Federal Republic of Germany, France, and the USSR. In all four cases ocean science has been identified as a potentially fruitful area of cooperation. Canada's responsibilities, as outlined in the agreement, involve the exchange of relevant scientific and technical information, exchange visits by research scientists, and joint cooperation on ocean science projects.

7. (a) The following departments and agencies are involved in the implementation of the "New Oceans Policy": Fisheries and Environment; Industry, Trade and Commerce; Energy, Mines and Resources; Transport; the Ministry of State for Science and Technology; Indian Affairs and Northern Development and the National Research Council. (b) In consultation with other interested departments and agencies, the departments in (a) have the following responsibilities: Fisheries and Environment—renewable resource management (fisheries and other renewable aquatic resources) in order to maintain the long-term viability of these resources.—protection of the marine environment including the detection, containment and clean-up of polluting substances.—improvement of capabilities for weather and ice forecasting.—participation in international meteorological and oceanographic projects. Industry, Trade and Commerce—the development and support of Canadian ocean industry. Energy, Mines and Resources, Indian Affairs and Northern Development—non renewable resource management involving the regulation, development, production and transportation of hydrocarbon and mineral resources of the seabed. Transport—the development and control of navigation including the supervision and control of vessel and other traffic on and under the ocean. Ministry of State for Science and Technology—continuing review of oceans policy, particularly its science and technology aspects. National Research Council—support of research in marine science and technology in Canadian universities.

8. (a) Companies operating off the Canadian east coast essentially receive the same level of information relating to ice/weather conditions from the Atmospheric Environment Service that is generally available to all individuals and companies, if they provide their own means of access to the telecommunications system. Special services can be provided on request if the company provides regular observations from the site and if the company pays the incremental cost of such special service. A special service was provided for a company during the summers of 1975 and 1976. (b) As far as is known, companies operating off the Canadian east coast are not conducting studies into weather and ice conditions.

FORMER DEPUTY MINISTERS OF FINANCE

Question No. 1,449—Mr. Herbert: (Supplementary)

Since April 1, 1968, what are the names of all persons who have occupied the position of Deputy Minister of the Department of National Revenue and, in each case, what was the date of appointment?

Mr. Ralph E. Goodale (Parliamentary Secretary to President of the Privy Council): Taxation: McEntyre, J. Gear, July 6, 1954; Sheppard, David H., November 2, 1966; Cloutier, Sylvain, March 1, 1970; Armstrong, E. B., September 1, 1971; Hodgson, Dr. J. S., December 28, 1974.

LOTO CANADA

Question No. 1,924—Mr. Munro (Esquimalt-Saanich):

Did the head office of Loto Canada, or any of the regional or branch offices, mail unsolicited order forms for lottery tickets and, if so (a) in what volume and to what extent, (b) what is the annual cost and who bears the cost, (c) on what date did such a practice begin and will it continue?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Loto Canada has sent out one mailing of order forms. (a) 4,850,000 in all provinces except Quebec. Marketing research determined that the market in Quebec was much closer to saturation than were the markets in the other provinces. In addition, for the other provinces as a whole, there is a higher proportion of population in low density areas which is more difficult to reach with the normal distribution system. For these reasons, the cost-benefit ratio of a mailing to the other provinces was superior. (b) $315,432. The cost of this mailing is borne by Loto Canada. (c) Mailing took place on January 21, 1977. There are no plans at the present time for another mailing.

SALE OF MASSEY-FERGUSON TRACTORS TO RUSSIA AND/OR ARGENTINA

Question No. 1,957—Mr. Halliday:

Has any department or agency sold, or arranged for the sale of, Massey-Ferguson tractors to Russia and/or Argentina and, if so (a) what are the model numbers (b) what extra equipment was on the machines (c) how many were sold (d) what was the price per unit?

Mr. Hugh Poulin (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce): Massey-Ferguson Limited does not manufacture tractors in Canada. The Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce has no knowledge of any federal department or agency having sold or arranged for the sale of Massey-Ferguson tractors to Russia and/or Argentina.

STUDIES ON CONSTRUCTION OF PROTOTYPE OF ELECTRICAL VEHICLE AND SOLAR ENERGY VEHICLE

Question No. 2,311—Mr. Fortin:

Has the government undertaken studies on the construction of the prototype of (a) an electrical vehicle (b) a vehicle that uses solar energy and, if so, in each case, what were they?

Hon. Otto E. Lang (Minister of Transport): Transport Canada advises as follows: (a) Yes: Reviewed the latest technical advances in electric vehicle and battery research and development; and feasibility study of a limited range electric vehicle principally a utility delivery van and an urban passenger car. (b) No.

ACTION TO DEVALUATE THE CANADIAN DOLLAR WITH RESPECT TO FOREIGN CURRENCIES

Question No. 2,413—Mr. Howie:

Is the government contemplating any action which would, either implicitly or expressly, have the effect of formally devaluating the Canadian dollar with respect to foreign currencies?

Mr. Bob Kaplan (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Finance): The government is not contemplating any action which would have the effect of formally devaluing the Canadian dollar with respect to foreign currencies.

UIC—BCO QUOTA

Question No. 2,457—Mr. Fortin:

1. Do benefit control officers of the Unemployment Insurance Commission in (a) Quebec, (b) each of the other regions of Canada, have a specific number of claimants and percentage of exclusion to respect and, if so, what is this quota?

2. If control officers reach their quota sooner than expected, are they off duty for the rest of the week or month?

3. During the training programme, are the benefit control officers taught from the beginning to consider all claimants as cheats and to do all they can to prove them such?

Small Business

Hon. Bud Cullen (Minister of Manpower and Immigration): 1. (a) and (b) No.

2. No.

3. No.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—NEEDS OF SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. Otto Jelinek (High Park-Humber Valley) moved:

That in the judgment of this House the Government has failed to respond effectively to the needs of the small business sector, has made negligible progress toward the implementation of a small business policy, has neglected to introduce a Small Business Act, and has not freed the productive potential of small business to create jobs for Canadians.

He said: Mr. Speaker, at the outset may I extend my sympathies to the Minister of State (Small Business) (Mr. Marchand) on the death in his family. We all know the sadness that is felt when losing loved ones, and we share that sadness with him today.

It has been roughly one year since the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) appointed a member to his Cabinet who would be responsible for looking after the interests of the small business community. At that time a glimmer of hope arose within this vast and major sector of our economy, a hope that at long last specific action would be taken to reduce the maze of bureaucratic regulations, controls, directives, and the general paper work onslaught would be replaced with a meaningful incentive oriented program.

Unfortunately nearly a year has passed and the small businessman still must look to a government that has no small business policy whatsoever let alone a small business act. He must still look to a government lacking meaningful incentive programs, and he must look at a minister who is attempting to work in a policy vacuum without any terms of reference with which to set his sights for the future.

That reminds me of a statement made by the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), who unfortunately is not in the Chamber today. When faced with the possibility of creating a language ministry, the minister refused such a proposal because the terms of reference were not worked out. One must wonder what the difference is between that proposed ministry and the appointment of a Minister of State responsible for small business when the terms of reference of that portfolio had not only not been worked out, but the minister has to work in a policy vacuum of sorts.

In any event one must begin to wonder about the actual intent of the appointment. I had hoped that the government had at long last realized the necessity of dealing with small business as a separate entity, and that it was finally following in the footsteps of other industrialized nations that had been committed to the betterment of the small business community for some time. Consequently, their over-all economies are far healthier than our own.

Be that as it may, it is a fact that since the appointment of a Minister of State responsible for small business, the government's own attitude toward the small business sector has not changed. The government still does not have a small business policy. The government still does not have a small business act.

What is totally unbelievable and incredible is that the minister still does not have a definition of small business as it relates to his portfolio. How can you expect a government to deal with a specific sector of our economy when the government does not know exactly what sector it is dealing with?

There are a number of departments which deal directly or indirectly with small business. No wonder they are not helpful. No wonder they create bureaucratic paperwork and burdens, and impose all sorts of restrictions on the small business community. The departments cannot know where the line is drawn between large multinational corporations and small business. How can the government continue to pretend, and that is all it is doing, to be interested in this vital sector of our economy, small businesses, when it does not know who it is dealing with?

The minister just recently had the second reading of the Small Businesses Loans Act passed. I look forward to taking part in the committee stage debate on that bill tomorrow. However, it is nothing new. The act was implemented in 1963. This is just a continuation of that act. Hon. members know that act would have expired July 1 had amendments not been introduced.

The amendments do not go far enough. They simply keep time with inflation. Nothing has been done by the government to stimulate the small firms sector. No incentives programs have been established to extend the sector into secondary manufacturing. No effort has been apparent in utilizing this small business community for make-work programs, yet small business, which is responsible for over 50 per cent of the labour force in Canada, is the largest and least costly sector of potential employment opportunity within our economy as a whole. I want to emphasize that. Incredibly this is the one sector that the government continues to overlook when pretending to deal with unemployment.

During my recent trip to Tokyo where I held various discussions with officials of the small and medium size enterprise agencies, what hit me most vividly was the difference in priorities between the Japanese government and that of our own. In Japan, as in the United States, West Germany and elsewhere, governments have been catering to the well-being of the small business community over the past 20 years or so. As a result their economies are far more advanced than ours, especially when it comes to unemployment where, for example, Japan has close to zero unemployment in a population of 110 million people while we have reached the frightening figure of one million unemployed in Canada. One of the main reasons for this imbalance in statistics is that we are not taking advantage of this, the best and cheapest potential job employment opportunities in a mixed economy—I keep referring to small business, of course.

Unfortunately the philosophies of the government over the past decade or so have tended toward centralization, with bigger and costlier governments, stronger and more powerful unions, and larger and fewer multinational corporations. It is my deep concern that unless this trend toward centralization does not reverse itself within the very near future, our system, the free market system upon which this country was built, will slowly but surely disappear to be replaced by what I can only describe as corporate socialism.

Let us remember that small business is the umbilical cord of free enterprise. The fact remains that our governments, despite this, continue to consult with large business and, as a result, most of the legislation is geared solely toward that sector. This forces small business to accept various laws which were not based on their problems in the first place. There is no question that the needs of the small corporation are largely different from those of the large multinational.

I turn to another subject, that of secondary manufacturing. We sometimes tend to forget that Canada is the richest nation per capita in natural resources, and even with that wealth, look at the state of our economy! One of the reasons we are doing so badly is that the government does not provide an incentive. It does not offer an incentive to industry to develop secondary manufacturing. We need the United States, as I have said in the past, to help us develop some of our natural resources.

But what concerns me, what should concern every member of the House, is that instead of continuing to sell our natural resources abroad where we help create employment, in Japan, for example, where we help the economies of foreign nations to develop on the basis of our natural resources as they develop secondary manufacturing to produce the final product, we lose that potential, that opportunity for employment in this country. Then we turn around and buy those finished products back from Japan, though very often they are made out of our own natural resources, at much higher cost. This is a situation which has to be faced by all Canadians and this trend of depending on foreign countries to develop and build their economies from our natural resources must be reversed because one of these days we are going to run out of natural resources, and then where are we going to be, with no secondary manufacturing?

If we want this trend to be reversed we must surely come up with an incentive program to assist the development of these vital secondary manufacturers, and instead of strangling the small business community with bureaucracy and all kinds of restrictions and controls it is time the government initiated forms of incentive, be they through the tax system, research and development, or a number of other ways where incentives can be introduced. This would encourage the growth and development of small firms, thereby creating employment at the lowest possible cost. This simply is not happening.

To my mind, incentive is the key word and one which has disappeared from the political vocabulary of the government sitting across the way. Instead of incentive programs we are now in the midst of the greatest give-away era in our history. One must remember that the higher the number of direct grants or give-aways the less incentive there is for realistic productivity, just as the higher the number of unemployment benefits, the less incentive there is for long range employment.

This is not to say that less effort should be geared to the well-being of big enterprises and large multinationals. More often than not, however, these are able to fend for themselves. Indeed over the five years I have spent in Ottawa it has become obvious that the effect of a big business lobby on cabinet ministers and their departments can be compared to a tiger in a monkey cage. Whenever big business lobbies for its cause, ministers do back handsprings in an effort to be of assistance.

Unfortunately the small businessman does not have the clout or the resources to make himself heard effectively. Whatever ear-bending has been accomplished must be credited to such organizations as CFIB, the CMA and a few others. Unfortunately whatever success these groups may have had, or whatever success the opposition may have had in proposing realistic recommendations in this regard—and I say "proposing realistic recommendations" because we have done this on a regular basis ever since I have been here, especially in this field—has gone for naught. It is meaningless unless the government commits itself wholly to the betterment of the small business community.

Some of the recommendations we have made in the past were debated on March 28 of this year in connection with a private member's motion in my name. We talked about this subject at length. I shall be very brief. I shall simply call attention to the four points which were included in this motion; first, that tax credits should be allowed in respect of investment in small business. We have been pushing for this since 1972, and not only the small business community but Canadians at large would accept it. But the government is dormant. It has a one-track mind, a preoccupation with bigness, big government, big unions, big labour. This is why unemployment is so high. This is why our economy is suffering. The second point was the need for assistance in the formation of small business export consortia. The third was the need for changes in government tendering practices so that small business would supply an increased proportion of government purchased goods and services. A program to this end has been most effective in the United States. The fourth point concerned the need to reduce the government paperwork burden imposed on small business.

With regard to the last point I must give credit to the Minister of State for Small Business. He has, finally, listened and taken some steps in this direction, though to date they are very hesitant. For example, the government has gone some way toward reducing the reporting requirements to Statistics Canada of certain firms in the construction, transportation and manufacturing industries. We look forward to further developments in this field and we look forward, as well, to the promised amendments to the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act which will exempt further firms having to report under that law. But this is barely scratching the surface. Each time the minister opens his mouth, on the other side he develops a bureaucratic maze with which small business must try to cope.

The government does not realize that whenever it introduces a piece of legislation dealing with business it places an unfair burden on smaller firms which very often have no relation to what is happening. I will give one example. Quotas are undoubtedly needed to assist the textile industry in Canada. But in introducing the measures it did, the government gave no thought to the little corner store which, for instance, was marketing Mexican novelty goods and was in no way trying to compete against the large textile manufacturers. Operations such as these are the ones which suffer from the kind of legislation to which I have referred. Their owners go bankrupt and employment is lost. This is happening on a daily basis. There are more bankruptcies taking place today in Canada in small business than ever before in our history. All of this indicates that the government does not care, does not understand, or does not want to care about implementing specific programs for large industry or planning specific programs for small business.

• (1530)

The minister himself cannot be blamed personally for attempting to deal with this issue.

Mr. Paproski: Yes, he can.

Mr. Jelinek: For example, prior to the last budget he advocated the removal of capital gains tax on transfers of a business from one family member to another. He recommended that suggestion publicly and he said he would discuss it with the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) in order to have it included in the budget, but nothing materialized. The government is either not taking this cabinet minister seriously or, more probably, the government has not committed itself to dealing with the problems and the potential solutions of the small businessman by initiating and developing an over-all small business policy.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: It is window dressing.

Mr. Jelinek: It is window dressing, because no action has occurred since the Minister of State for Small Business has taken his new position.

Mr. Paproski: He took a trip to Russia.

Mr. Jelinek: As my hon. friend says, he took a trip to Russia. Can you imagine that—the Minister of State for Small Business in a democracy where free enterprise is supposed to be alive, goes to Russia to study capitalism and to study the free market system?

Mr. Poulin: He accompanied thousands of small businessmen.

Mr. Paproski: Monique and Hughie should have gone with him.

Mr. Jelinek: I would like to point out that he was not at the small business symposium in Washington, D.C. I did not see him there. All of the industrialized nations had representatives there. He was not in Tokyo where I met with the small and medium size enterprise agencies. He was not in West Germany where I met with the small business administration.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: He was probably in East Germany.

Mr. Jelinek: The minister said that he travelled across the country and talked to small businessmen during his travels. I give him credit for that. I think he followed in my footsteps, because it was three or four months after I made my national tour that the small minister made his tour.

An hon. Member: That is a Freudian slip.

Mr. Jelinek: One does not have to do that in Canada because the concerns, problems, and potential solutions of the small businessmen are the same in Ottawa as they are in Vancouver or Halifax.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Or Vegreville.

Mr. Paproski: Or London, Ontario.

Mr. Jelinek: Or Edmonton Centre. That is one of the unifying forces small businessmen have. All these concerns, problems, and solutions are the same right across the country.

I am sure I do not have to remind hon. members of the importance of small business to our economy. Without a small business policy and a government commitment, by way of a small business act, this importance is being slowly but surely eroded and is perhaps damaging the free market system for good.

I would like to take this opportunity to quote from a report by the Select Committee on Small Business in the United States Congress. I keep referring to the United States because I feel this is one area of our economy where we can learn from something which has been successful, and we can learn from something which has existed for the last 30 years. It is unfortunate, but the government does not seem to want to learn. I would like to quote from page XI of the Permanent Select Committee on Small Business of the House of Representatives of the United States, which reads as follows:

Importance and Place of Small Business in U.S. Economy.

The contributions of small business to the American economy and society are many and the following points merit special attention:

1. The existence of a large number of small, independent businesses helps to preserve competition, thus ensuring increased efficiency and high quality and reasonable prices for consumers.
2. A large number of small independent businesses decreases the likelihood of excessive economic and political control.
3. Small business offers an opportunity for the expression and growth of personal initiative and individual judgment.
4. Small business is frequently the source of new products and new methods.
5. Small business constitutes a large and diversified source of employment opportunities.
6. Certain services essential to the economy can be performed best by small business.

I wanted to quote from this report just to emphasize the importance of small business within our economic way of life. We have been calling for a government small business policy for years. We have been calling for the government to commit itself for the betterment of the small business sector for years. We have been calling for positive and specific programs, and none have been forthcoming. We have recommended in detail, on a number of occasions, specific proposals for the betterment of the small business community. Mr. Speaker, all of this was to no avail. Instead of acting positively in this regard, the government has ignored the needs of the small business sector. It has refused to implement a small business policy, let alone consider introducing a small business act. The resulting factors can be judged by the shape of our economy as a whole, which goes hand in hand with the deplorable level of unemployment in this country.

The time has come for specific and positive action. Therefore I am calling on the government through this motion today, as emphatically as I can, to introduce a small business act which would fall within the confines of a small business secretariat responsible for initiating and consequently updating, on a regular basis, a specific small business policy dedicated to the betterment and well-being of small and medium size enterprises in Canada.

The motion today records the failure of the government to present or even consider such a small business act. Mr. Speaker, I advocate such an act. After just speaking previously of the weight of government intervention upon small business, it may now seem strange to ask for what appears to be more regulation of small business through legislation; but the two goals are not inconsistent and are not contradictory. They are complementary, because one of the major goals of a small business act would be to remove, as far as possible, the weight of government upon small business and to assist small business in coping with government. I will make some more detailed suggestions in a moment.

First and foremost there must be a definition of what a small business is. If government is to prepare and implement any coherent program for small business, then it must first know, with some exactitude, what a small business is. The government talks about small business but does not know what small business is, because it does not have any government policy with respect to a definition. That does not seem very difficult, but so far the government has not come up with a definition that makes any sense to a small businessman.

The government definition of small business is based on size, the total assets of the firm or its gross sales in a year. Conceptually this definition is inadequate because it fails to capture the most important feature of a small firm—that the owner of it is the manager and that the manager of the firm has a deep personal stake in its future. The inadequacy of the definition, in its practical application, is easy to illustrate. Let me take one definition of small business which is based on size. That is contained within the Small Businesses Loans Act as it is proposed to be amended by Bill C-48. In that legislation a small business enterprise is defined as one which has an estimated gross revenue of $1.5 million in a year. According to this legislation, a small business is a firm having less than $1.5 million in sales.

Let us apply that definition to a few firms in Canada. I am not suggesting any of these firms which I will mention have applied for a small business loan or do not fall under the definition of this act specifically. Consider a company called Nordex Explosives Ltd., based in Montreal. Their sales in 1975 were $433,000. This company is safely under the small business sales limit of $1.5 million. Is this company in fact a small business? I would argue that it is not, and I think the major shareholder of the company, which happens to be the Dow Chemical Investment and Finance Corporation of Michigan, would be rather surprised to hear that a company they control is considered to be a small business by this Liberal administration. Dow Chemical's gross revenue exceeded $5.6 billion in 1976; it is twenty-fifth on the list of the top 500 U.S. corporations compiled by Fortune magazine.

I have a great number of other such examples where the government defines a so-called Canadian company within its own definition under the Small Businesses Loans Act, a company which is in fact held by multinationals from abroad or in Canada. The list is long. It is sufficient to show that the definition of a small or medium size business based on size alone does not always describe the most important feature of a small business, namely, that it is owner-managed.

Therefore the first thing our small business act must do is to define small business as an enterprise that is owner-managed. That is the main component of the United States small business act definition, and it seems to be workable. One may then want to apply a size limit to the companies identified by the owner-managed definition so that large owner-managed operations, such as Eaton's of Canada, are excluded, or to be more flexible one may choose to qualify the owner-managed definition with the requirement that the firm not be dominant in its field of operations or its market. The degree of dominance may seem to be a vague criterion, but it is one which in effect will be used in the proposed revisions of the Combines Investigation Act, Bill C-42. The precise qualifiers used are not as important as the main feature of the definition, that the enterprise be owner-managed.

Having made the definition workable in my view, as it has certainly been workable in the United States for some time, let us look briefly at the proposed act. The small business act would create a small business secretariat which would function independently of its parent, the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Currently the small business responsibilities of the department are treated like a blemish on its plans for large scale operations, big plants, huge capital costs, and large scale exports. The concerns of small business are both different in quality and quantity from those of big business, so different, I would argue, that a small business secretariat could never be comfortable under the suffocating umbrella of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. The secretariat's job would be to help small business cope with government and compete with big business.

I am not proposing government intervention in the affairs of small business, far from it. What I am proposing is a mechanism through which the weight of big government can be removed from the shoulders of small business.

The secretariat would have an advocacy role. By this I mean the secretariat would put forward the interests of small business to other government departments and agencies. I mentioned how many departments and agencies there are that touch on small business interests, or rather I would say that do not touch on small business interests because there is no department that is reorganized—

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member but the time allotted to him has expired. He may continue with the unanimous consent of the House. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I thank hon. members for allowing me to conclude my remarks. I shall try to be brief.

For example, when Statistics Canada is preparing yet another statistical form which requires a lawyer or an accountant to fill it out, the secretariat would try to force StatsCan to exempt small businesses from being required to complete it or, at the very least, would try to have the form simplified and streamlined. Another thing the secretariat might do is to make representations to the Department of Finance to try to prevent the implementation of budget proposals harmful to small business. This happens quite often without the knowledge of the top department that the legislation that is being proposed for the big multinational corporations is in fact harming small businessmen. I touched on that previously.

The secretariat also could make representations to the Metric Commission to ensure that conversion costs are not an undue burden on small business, or to the Export Development Corporation to ensure that small business gets a fair share of EDC financing and insurance contracts. The secretariat could make representations to any other department the actions of which affect the small firms sector. I could go on and on, but this will not work in Canada until such a policy is brought in under an act which would commit the government to deal specifically with the interests of small businesses rather than dealing with small businesses in a roundabout way through the various departments.

It has been proposed in Bill C-42, for example, that there be a competition advocate, so really I am not setting a precedent in recommending an advocate because the government itself has recommended an advocate under Bill C-42. The job of such a person would be to make representations to federal departments, agencies, and corporations whose actions affect competition in the market place. This is exactly what I am proposing for the benefit of the small businessman. All I am asking for is a small business advocate who may find it necessary, as part of his duties, to make representations to the competition board.

The secretariat will assist small business in forming export consortia. Such assistance will not only include the maintenance of files on businesses willing to form consortia, but will also include assistance in sales programs abroad. The secretariat will advocate, and perhaps institute in co-operation with other departments, a program whereby a certain portion of government purchased goods and services is supplied by small business—the set-aside program as it is called in the United States, to which I referred in my previous private member's motion in the House a month or two ago.

The small business act would transfer the administration of the educational function of the Federal Business Development Bank to the secretariat. The improvement of managerial skills is not something that is only needed when a small businessman needs to borrow money. It is a continuing need and should be a service available cheaply from the secretariat.

The small business act should amend other legislation. For example, it would be made perfectly clear that small business would be exempted from the sections of the new Competition Act dealing with specialization agreements, export specialization and mergers. Small business would be free from these rules and thus free from the fear of expensive and time consuming experiences before the competition board. Small business would not, of course, be exempted from the provisions dealing with misleading advertising or other unethical trade practices. In general, the small business act would exempt small business from regulatory statutes wherever consistent with other national goals. Small business has enough problems without bearing the weight of government.

Because time limitation will not permit me to deal with taxation proposals in this regard I will not speak about them at this time, but I hope that some of my colleagues will have an opportunity to touch on this subject. Let it not be said that we seldom make specific proposals and recommendations. I have been hinting at the need for a small business policy or act for some time, but the government obviously has not been interested in assisting the small business community. I had hoped that when the Minister of State for Small Business was appointed nearly a year ago, some action would be taken by the government, and some commitment made to deal with the problems of small businessmen, to come up with solutions. This has not happened.

On a number of occasions this year I put on the record some general proposals in this regard. For example, on March 28 of this year, as reported at page 4395 of Hansard, I said, and I quote:

Instead of the ad hoc, band-aid approach this government has taken in respect of small business, as indeed it has on a great number of other issues, a definite small business policy, or better still a small business act along the lines of that existing in the United States, Japan and elsewhere, must be established at the earliest possible date in order to replace the existing air of confusion, with potentially long-range programs.

I have made these recommendations on a number of other occasions both before and after March 28. Support for such action is not promoted simply by the Progressive Conservative Party. As a matter of fact I believe such action would be welcomed by a majority of Canadians. In fact the most effective voice of the small business community today, the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, utilizes the front page of its latest issue of Mandate to promote and thereby endorse our recommendation for a Canadian small business act.

I wish to quote briefly from the May issue of Mandate.

Mr. Dionne (Northumberland-Miramichi): Do you realize that you are on overtime?

Mr. Jelinek: I will be very brief in closing, if the hon. member will bear with me. I thank him for his indulgence.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Otto is the mover of the motion.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Jelinek: Mr. Speaker, I will be brief.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. The hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek) has the floor for the purpose of making his speech.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Jelinek: Before I conclude I want to refer to another quotation to show hon. members that this proposal for a small business act is widely accepted. I am glad to see the Minister of National Health and Welfare back in the Chamber. He is the minister who at one time did not know whether a new ministry should be formed. I remember very distinctly when not too long ago the minister supported the appointment of the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport) (Mrs. Campagnolo), but a year or 18 months ago when I made that recommendation he said it would be impossible, and he jokingly said there would have to be a minister of ballooning, a minister of pole vaulting, a minister of horse racing, and so forth. Yet a few months later the minister supported the appointment of the Minister of State (Fitness and Amateur Sport), so I am not quite sure what his stand is, and I am not sure he is sure of his stand as to secretariats, ministries, portfolios, and what have you on his side of the House.

The quotation to which I would like to refer came after we made these recommendations publicly in this House and outside this House. It reads as follows:

> In the United States, a national small business program has existed for almost three decades. Because of the Small Business Act, one third of federal spending for goods and services goes to small business. Since the United States has a program to benefit small business, it can hardly object to a similar Canadian program. Imagine what a larger small business sector would mean to Canada: more jobs, less need to import, retention of profits in Canada, and accumulation of valuable technological know-how. There's really no question. Canada must pass legislation committing the federal government to building domestic enterprises using the same wording and definitions as the U.S. Small Business Act. It seems to us that it's time Canada adopted something from the U.S. that makes sense for a change.

It went on to say, "The point is simple. We need a small business act now". We can see that the Canadian Federation of Small Business supports our recommendation.

In closing I would like to repeat what I have said often in this Chamber, something which I believe is imperative if our democratic way of life is to survive. If we want the small business firm sector to survive within our society, as I am sure we all do, then immediate action must be taken by the federal government. The small business community is what the free enterprise system is all about. It is what this country is built on and what this country can prosper by. Other countries which presently are more fortunate than Canada with respect to unemployment, inflation, productivity, and other areas by which the standard of success is judged, have all concentrated their economic energies toward their small firms sector within their industrial way of life.

My concern is so genuine regarding the problems of small business and freedom of enterprise that I hope the seriousness of these problems can be dealt with on a non-partisan basis. We cannot wait any longer, the small business community cannot wait any longer, and Canadians cannot wait any longer for the government to move in a positive direction in this regard. I hope hon. members will realize the seriousness of the situation and consider some of the proposals which we are outlining today. Opportunities still exist in Canada, but they are diminishing very quickly. Let us not lose them completely.

Mr. Arnold Peters (Timiskaming): Mr. Speaker, I listened with fascination to the remarks of the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek) concerning small business because, in my opinion, we cannot have capitalism and free enterprise as we have it today without having monopoly corporations, chain stores, and the largeness of industry which is supported by both the Liberals in Ottawa and the Conservatives in Ontario, without the elimination of small businessmen. I was fascinated because in the last few months I have been listening to the representatives of the Conservative Party in Ottawa talking about the need of additional funds for business. What they are talking about is big business. They are talking about the seven sisters in the oil company field. The Conservatives want to give them more money, and say they can develop because they are the only ones which produce jobs.

It is a fact that capitalism is no longer a free, competitive enterprise in Canada. The small businessman is affected by monopoly capitalism. It seems to me that while smallness is not necessarily beautiful, bigness is obscene.

I agree that this country was built by small businessmen, but they were competitive. They did not believe in monopoly capitalism. In my opinion the Federation of Independent Business is totally misdirected. I would have been more sympathetic to the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley if he had not cited the Federation of Independent Business to buttress his remarks. This federation has spoken in Mandate about every free enterprise exercise which has taken place for a long time, but in my opinion it is not in the least sympathetic to the small management operated business.

The Conservative Party here in Ottawa and in Ontario have recently been talking about the needs of the consumer and damning agriculture for its adherence to marketing legislation. Farmers are small, independent businessmen who have to get together to sell their products, but this is being attacked as being a very detrimental tool as far as the consumer is concerned.

The expression "free free enterprise" has been used. This seems to work for very large companies but never for the small ones. Let us consider an example. I am in total agreement with the remarks of the hon. member with regard to this country having been built by free enterprise. The businessman got an idea, he worked hard to sell it, he supplied a product, and in this way had people buying his "better mouse trap". That is not true anymore. Today if a businessman gets a good idea, somebody buys it and may use it to the advantage of the country or to the advantage of industry. On the other hand they may just shelve it because they already have a similar product, and so they eliminate the competition.

● (1600)

It is my opinion that free enterprise was intitially competitive enterprise. I should like to ask the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley what competitive enterprise he sees in the remarks made by the Federation of Independent Business? They no longer believe in competition; what they believe in is big conglomerates, with complete control. This control filters down to the small businessman. A little grocery store may order five or six cases of coke, and because of their low overhead, be able to sell it at less than other stores. This is fine. But they will find it impossible to get a second shipment of coke. If they do not sell at the right price the first time there will be no more deliveries of coke, Kraft products, or any other major commodities. That means there really is no competition.

What happens, say, to a small trucker in Ontario who finally can afford two or three trucks? He immediately finds that he comes under the control of the provincial government which will make it very difficult for him to expand. No protection is provided to the small free enterpriser to allow him to grow. He is regulated so that the competition factor limits his ability to expand because of government intervention.

Mr. Ellis: That is a lot of nonsense.

Mr. Peters: The hon. member says that is nonsense. There was a trucker in northern Ontario recently who had a small business. The government intervened and created a new class "A" licence. With the exception of the provincial government there have been no newly created class "A" PCV licences in my part of the country for the last eight or nine years. The recent one was a political move, and it may or may not be successful.

Small businessmen are the basis of our nation and they should be able to compete. In many cases they can only compete if they form a relationship with their neighbours. This is true in agriculture and in many other endeavours as well. It seems to me that governments are not very friendly to the relatively small businessman. It is much easier to deal with large gasoline companies than it is with the local service station, for instance. It is very easy to make arrangements on a provincial or federal basis with the seven sisters of the oil companies, but very difficult to make arrangements with the individual gasoline pump operator. So we see a diversity of prices across areas, that are quite often arranged prices. This happened in my area, particularly in Timmins which falls in a different zone than the rest of northern Ontario and has a different price base. It is not that the dealer has raised his price beyond what his overhead requires; it is that the price he pays for his product is different from what his neighbour pays in another zone in the same area.

The small businessman always gets it in the neck. Those who are considered small businessmen in agriculture are now faced with as much red tape as would be involved in running a major corporation. When they hire help they have unemployment insurance red tape, compensation red tape, income tax red tape and all the other forms of red tape, but there is no assistance available from the government. That is why many members of parliament get involved with the small business in their area; people are unable to cope.

In my area a number of people began to hire two or three employees but they found so much difficulty with the red tape that they got out of business. In New Liskeard two or three people got together and set up a small business—some were in the appliance business, some in television and radio—and together they hired one employee. They might as well have hired 100, Mr. Speaker. They were immediately involved with income tax, filling out forms, and shortly afterwards they dissolved the partnership because it just was not worth while. They are operating individually again, but they wanted to build a business that would have been an asset to the community and would have been advantageous to them because they had intended to share many facilities that are expensive to maintain individually.

Then there was a carpenter who decided to hire three or four people and build houses. The results were disastrous, not in terms of the buildings but because of the paperwork.

Any government that is really interested in helping small business—and I suggest the Conservatives in Ontario are not, and neither are the federal Liberals—should establish a bureau which would supply assistance in coping with red tape. As I have shown, when a small business wants to hire extra employees it would need the assistance of tax advisers and accountants.

I would say that small business should not go beyond the owner-manager category. It should be a stage between the private employer or contractor who is self-employed and the firm that goes into contracting and hires employees. Whatever bureau is established provincially or federally should be geared toward eliminating red tape. In every area of Canada it is essential to have an owner-managed grocery store or a hardware store operated by a local family. Our butchers must be allowed to run small or independent meat markets.

Our small businessmen are essential for the life of our communities. They are part of our way of life. It is no good paying lip service to small business; we must be prepared to help it. We should establish in the appropriate ministry a bureau which could help small business in exactly the same way as other government agencies help big business. If we are not willing to do it, we had better stop paying lip service to our free enterprise system.

To me, free enterprise means competitive enterprise. It means the world beating a path to the door of the man who builds a better mouse trap. I say this country's two major parties have not supported the builder of the better mouse trap for a long time. They have supported monopoly capitalism, have given concessions to large corporations, even in agriculture, where large business has secured monopoly control through vertical integration, and paid lip service only to the ability of the individual, of the small businessman, to compete effectively in the market place.

The small businessman thinks that he can compete only if he joins some larger organization which would allow him entry to the market place. With whom is the small businessman competing? A small businessman can go into the hardware business reasonably easily, but will find it difficult to stay afloat, if one of the large chain hardware stores opens business across the street. The large store can offer loss leaders, buy supplies in carload lots cheaply, and offer retail prices below those the small businessman must pay his supplier for the same goods.

I believe in the free, competitive enterprise system, but do not believe the Federation of Independent Business serves free enterprise. It serves big business or monopoly capitalism which allows no competition or squeezes or eliminates from the market any existing competition. When competition is eliminated we all become the victims. When most of us think of free enterprise, we think of competition.

I am sure most members of the House are aware of the problems besetting small business. I am sure lawyers, accountants, and others who deal with small business are aware of many problems our small businessmen must surmount in order to survive. Mr. Speaker, our small businessmen are important to our country. They are part of our way of life and we must support them. We must make sure our small businesses loans legislation works effectively.

If the newly appointed minister responsible for small business does his job properly and helps small businesses survive, perhaps small business will be given the sort of help the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce and other agencies of government have given big business in the last few years. At present if a small businessman cannot borrow money from the bank under the small businesses loans legislation, he cannot borrow it anywhere. That is not good enough. I suggest we should involve the Federal Industrial Development Bank. At present I believe it is involved with those in medium-size enterprises.

Small businesses are labour intensive, community oriented, and make life for people in rural Canada and small communities more tolerable. Frankly I am surprised at the number of small businessmen who have joined the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, for as I see it the federation represents big business. It interests me to read reports published by the federation and compare the size of some of its member organizations. On the one hand you may have a plant employing up to 500, and on the other a small business with two or three employees. I often wonder why small businessmen think they are in the same category as the large corporation and why their sympathies are not with the independent people in their areas who support them.

[Translation]

Mr. C. A. Gauthier (Roberval): Mr. Speaker, we are dealing today with a motion concerning assistance to small business. I am pleased that such a motion has been tabled in the House and I congratulate the Progressive Conservative Party for having instigated that debate today. Someone said a while ago that it was small business which first took part in the birth, as it were, of the regions but in my opinion, it is the middle term between the state corporation and the great monopolies which I define as state capitalism and private capitalism.

● (1620)

It is not enough to establish a department for trying to protect small businesses. In fact this department has been in existence for one year and we have not heard of anything yet. In the past before this department was established, we tried our luck with the Minister of Regional Economic Expansion (Mr. Lessard) who was doing his best, I want to believe, trying to offer some help to small businesses, but I think too much emphasis was laid on helping large businesses.

Specially in our region we realize millions were given to large businesses, whether for research or for launching some large industries. Well, millions were sunk in large businesses, and small businesses were completely forgotten, to such a degree that I myself often worked with some people in my riding trying to gain acceptance for small businesses which would have been very profitable in a given town or sector, but we never could meet the blessed criteria specified by technocrats. And I believe it is at this stage that it is difficult for a small business to survive among the monopolies I mentioned a while ago. Today, of course, we are living in an era of monopolies and someone who has been in business for about forty years as I have has to realize that approximately 80 per cent of all businesses which were very viable forty years ago have been swallowed up by big monopolies.

For instance, about fifteen bakeries were in operation in my area some thirty years ago and they were all doing good business. Today there is only one bakery which is almost a multinational so that we must drive 125 miles to get bread. This whole bakery monopoly has paid the high price to get all those local bakeries closed and, after paying this high price, everybody said that if there were a larger market the retail price would improve. But the monopoly sets retail prices so no wonder everything is increasing, no wonder we have run-away price inflation. The main reason is monopoly control which is exercised in both industrial and commercial fields, as well as in the service area. Today, we even have all kinds of monopolies. The employment monopoly will be a reality within a few years, I believe, and we shall continue to live through this war of monopolies. The government must move immediately in an attempt to revive private enterprise which acts as a kind of screen to protect the consumer against these big monopolies which can overnight indicate the price they will impose on the consumer.

I think it is the duty of governments, not only the federal government but every government, to help small business not only through the creation of a ministry but also by passing legislation that will protect and encourage the small business sector. Some time earlier we mentioned small business loans. Those loans are not interesting for small business because of their high interest rate. For instance, the Industrial Development Bank, the Federal Business Development Bank is there to help enterprise.

But I have realized that this bank was there to help small business to die. We know that this bank helps small businesses only when they have been refused a loan by all other banks, all other loan institutions. When they must go to the Federal Business Development Bank they have to pay prohibitive interest rates when this bank, if it really exists to help small business, should ask only 50 per cent of the current interest rate. We might say that it would help small business but precisely because that small business, and I might give you some concrete examples, has been refused a loan by all other banks and loan institutions its credit gets a poor rating. It is the same for a business as for an individual. Today, someone who has a bad credit rating is going to pay 2, 3 or even 4 per cent more than someone with a good credit rating. That is sheer nonsense! Because an individual has more difficulty to pay than his neighbour he will be charged double interest. He has difficulties to earn his living, he has a small salary and this is because of our legislation, Mr. Speaker. He is charged 4 or 5 per cent more than the borrower with a regular job because his credit is bad.

If we really had legislation to protect consumers, we should charge the family head, that worker with a small income, 4 or 5 per cent less than those who can pay. It would be logical.

And to show you how we can live in illogically thinking we are in the best of worlds, that is in the legislation and regulations concerning financing plans, loan institutions and banks. It is the same for small industry: because it cannot benefit from large financing programs to obtain discounts, it has to pay 2, 3 or 4 per cent more than the medium-size industry which finds it easier to face those disbursements. This is why, Mr. Speaker, I am pleased we are discussing this matter today.

Indeed, I have before me a brief submitted to the Standing Committee on Miscellaneous Estimates by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, in which it is stated:

> In submitting these representations, our aim is to refute any concept that small industries are less important or productive.

Small industry is praised for being the biggest employer, but the way things are now going, very soon it will no longer be so because it will be left to die. The brief goes on to say:

> In view of the fact that small and medium factories account for 80 per cent of Canadian secondary industry, there is no doubt that this sector deserves serious consideration. In the context . . .

—because the brief was submitted to the committee that is scrutinizing Bill C-26 to give technical or other help to Canadian industries—

> In the context of Bill C-26, the apparent theme is that universities alone are capable of creative theoretical research.

And as far as small industries are concerned, big corporations are given millions and millions of dollars for research. But often a fraction only is spent on actual research, and the government is not in a poslition to inspect those corporations' books. Small industries on the other hand would need help for research or administration or orientation, they could use a few thousand dollars to modernize, to stay afloat and face competition, but to my knowledge not a penny has been going their way in respect of research. I submit the government is at fault there for not giving small industry at least as much attention as it is giving big industry, because big industry, monopolies can look after themselves. I am still trying to figure out why the government keeps on giving grants for research or environment protection, let us say to forest industries or manufacturing industries that polluted everything. After they did the damage, the taxpayers' dollars are used to clean their mess.

If the government has millions of dollars to give large companies to repair the damage they have done to the environment, it should use this money to help our small industries and our small businesses which have a hard time surviving compared with supermarkets which can dictate their own conditions to the producers. I have often seen potato producers sell to a supermarket for 30 per cent less than the price they would have asked retailers because the supermarkets had the capital required and controlled all the local supply. They simply gave the producer the price they wanted to pay for his products.

That is what is wrong with those large monopolies. The ordinary retailer buys from the producer at the market price and, if you figure it out, he often still sells at a lower price than the supermarket because he does not have to pay all the publicity and the additional salaries that the supermarket must pay to promote its products and pay for its packaging. Consumers should go around the small, well-organized grocery stores or well organized butcher shops. People are talking nowadays, especially in Quebec, about closing the small slaughterhouses. I for one believe that those small slaughterhouses should have a "Canada Approved" federal license and should stay open. I have been buying meat from a small slaughterhouse for 30 years. That is where you can find the meat and the quality you want, because you cannot find it in a supermarket and even less in regional slaughterhouses where you do not know what is going on or what kind of meat you are buying.

When there was all that talk about tainted meat, it was not in the small slaughterhouses that this meat was found, Mr. Speaker, but in the large ones. Today, because of the influence of these large monopoly slaughterhouses, the small slaughterhouses, that have always respected the life of the consumer, may finally disappear. Mr. Speaker, I am quite pleased that this problem should be discussed today and I hope the government will soon introduce legislation, not legislation to give strict directives to small businesses but legislation to protect them against those big monopolies, and I hope that legislation will be introduced by the next government as soon as possible.

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

SUBJECT MATTER OF QUESTIONS TO BE DEBATED

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. Before I recognize the minister, it is my duty, pursuant to Standing Order 40, to inform the House that the questions to be raised tonight at the time of adjournment are as follows: the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski)—Airports—Mirabel and Dorval—Reason revenue was not received from Host Rent-a-Car; the hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn)—Atomic Energy of Canada Limited—Statement concerning establisment of plant to produce plutonium—Government action.

BUSINESS OF SUPPLY

ALLOTTED DAY S.O. 58—NEEDS OF SMALL BUSINESS

The House resumed consideration of the motion of Mr. Jelinek:

That in the judgment of this House the government has failed to respond effectively to the needs of the small business sector, has made negligible progress toward the implementation of a small business policy, has neglected to introduce a Small Business Act, and has not freed the productive potential of small business to create jobs for Canadians.

Hon. Monique Bégin (Minister of National Revenue): Mr. Speaker, it was with great surprise that my colleagues on this side read the motion put forward today condemning the government in relation to what is taking place in a particularly healthy sector of the Canadian economy, namely, small business.

Hon. members opposite could have chosen to debate great issues. They could have spoken about ways in which to create more employment, or addressed themselves to the question of the incentives which ought to be left in the private sector to help the unemployment situation and fight inflation. Instead, they surprisingly choose to speak about the eventual creation of a small business act which I cannot let my colleague who just spoke before me believe will take place, since it is not necessary.

[Translation]

My colleague the Minister of State (Small Business) (Mr. Marchand) was appointed eight months ago. He has since travelled across Canada, meeting systematically and with a great deal of seriousness and concern representatives of small and medium-size businesses of the world. I personally joined him on several of those meetings in Ottawa when official groups representing those businesses were down here voicing problems covering all the difficulties small and medium-size Canadian businesses can be faced with and which, surprisingly, can include matters as varied and as absent from the speeches of those who spoke before me as the problem of inequities in the tax law which for the moment does not allow partners in small unincorporated businesses—usually the wife—to receive a salary from her husband. I am making efforts with the help of my colleagues to correct that situation. I would have liked indeed to hear the opinion of the opposition on this obvious anomaly.

● (1640)

[English]

A foremost concern of the government, and of my colleague, the Hon. Len Marchand, who has had a death in his family and could not be present today—

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Order, please. The hon. minister should refer to the Minister of State for Small Business (Mr. Marchand).

Miss Bégin: —was to seek out from the small business community the real facts on what the small businessman and woman need and do not need from government.

Mr. Jelinek: I would like to know about that.

Miss Bégin: Your speech was particularly boring. Nobody said a word during your speech. We listened patiently for an hour. Maybe you can extend that courtesy to me.

Mr. Jelinek: My speech was over your head.

Miss Bégin: I have explained to the hon. gentlemen and women in the House that I will do my best to be the voice of my colleague, the Minister of State for Small Business (Mr. Marchand), who is unable to be here this afternoon. Thanks to him and to groups in the country representing small business, I am becoming more and more familiar with their problems. I often consider I am the minister of paperwork. I have decided to do my utmost to cut that down.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Bégin: Maybe I should have spoken in English so that the hon. gentleman opposite would have understood better. I am committed to trying to correct the inequity of the tax act, which does not permit a partner in a small unincorporated business to receive a salary from the other partner, which usually means the wife from her husband. I would have liked to hear his views on it, if he had any. He may take another day, or even take the trouble of writing me a letter. I would really appreciate his views, if he has good views, which would mean my views.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Miss Bégin: I would like to hear the comments of his colleagues as well. I doubt whether they could oppose such a sound correction of an inequity in a law passed a long time ago by this parliament. The opposition talks of the creation of a small business act, and other opposition members have spoken about the creation of a separate department. Although I am not a specialist on structures, I know added bureaucracy usually does not help the people for whom it was intended. Therefore I do not think the views of my colleague are directed toward the creation of a separate department, for added man-years are not going to solve the real problems faced by the small business community in this country.

Just before being interrupted, I was saying consultations have taken place from St. John's to Victoria between my colleague and representatives of small or medium-size business all over Canada. As a result, the policy of the federal government toward small business is being created, not just in Ottawa but in meeting rooms where small business people sit down together with federal ministers and officials to come to grips with the real issues.

In social as well as economic terms, small business is too important not to get a fair share and a fair shake from government. In the Speech from the Throne last September small business was described as the backbone of the economy. Small business is in many ways the backbone of our society and a key part of the very fabric of the Canadian way of life.

We have a history as a frontier nation. In the days when this country was rising from its colonial status to achieve independence, we were a people possessed of the spirit of individual enterprise and accomplishment. That spirit, which is the foundation of our country, is exemplified today by the independent entrepreneur, the man or woman with a dream and the will to realize that dream in the face of any obstacle. We honour that spirit. It is the aim of this government to see that it flourishes and prospers. The small business operator must be allowed to exercise his spirit of free enterprise to increase production and provide employment.

The government has taken some immediate steps since the Speech from the Throne to benefit the small operator. The recent budget contained a package of measures directed at encouraging small enterprise. We have begun to cut down the mass of paperwork which federal bureaucracy, in conjunction with provincial administrations, imposes on small business. Hon. members will know that there is a bill currently before the House to extend and increase the provisions of the Small Businesses Loans Act. The incentive and adjustment programs of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce have been amalgamated and redesigned to make them more accessible and more useful to the small business community.

The officials of the small business secretariat within the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce have been accumulating and studying the data on the state of small business in Canada today, in preparation for the over-all policy which my colleague, the Minister of State for Small Business, will be presenting to the government in draft form this summer. It is too early to state now what the elements of that policy will be. But I would like in these remarks to outline some of the basic directions in which our research into the small business community's present status has led.

First, however, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say clearly that the facts show that small business in Canada is not in bad shape, despite what some hon. members on the other side of this House would have us believe. The entrepreneurial spirit is alive and well in Canada, and it is making strides. Anyone who says that it is not is downgrading the ability and enterprise of Canadian small operators. Canada's small businessmen and women are holding their own in comparison with their counterparts in other countries. In our large cities and in our small towns Canadian entrepreneurs are showing that, given the chance, they can make the grade. It is the government's intention to give them that chance.

Some of the past and present initiatives of the federal government have been helpful to small business. The Federal Business Development Bank has made current commitments for $1.5 billion in loans to small and medium-size firms. At an average of $46,000 per loan the FBDB has helped a lot of businesses which would not otherwise have found the financing they needed. Some, but not enough, small Canadian Manufacturers have benefited from innovation and adjustment assistance programs of the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. Now that we have amalgamated many of these programs into one enterprise development program, I expect that even more assistance will be available to smaller firms.

The lion's share of assistance under the "alphabet soup" programs, such as PEP, IDAP, and the like, has too often gone to big companies. To give a giant corporation a government grant of $300,000 for innovative research is not the most effective way of using that money. To a company that size, $300,000 is just peanuts. If they contemplate a research project, that contribution from government is not going to be the deciding factor in whether they go ahead or not. From observing the city of St. Leonard in my riding, which has a huge, new industrial park, a grant of $20,000 to a small firm can be the difference between trying something new or killing the project. If we took that $300,000 and broke it up, we could give $20,000 grants to 15 small firms, which could really stimulate some development and some jobs. This is the rationale behind the new enterprise development program: to redirect the assistance to small firms and get the most value out of federal funding for the small business community and for the country as a whole.

The program is to be administered by enterprise development boards in each province. These boards will have decision-making power on projects of up to $200,000 in federal assistance. To make sure that the boards are responsive to local business conditions, and to give them closer ties with the business community, their membership contains strong representation from the private sector, and the chairman of each board is a businessman, not a public servant.

At this point let me just correct one of the assertions of the hon. member who spoke before me who stated that a separate department and special act are needed to protect small businessmen and to give them better representation. This is not so. That would be to ghetto-ise them, and none of us want that. Instead, at the instigation of my colleague, the Minister of State for Small Business, several of us have started to review the composition of the various advisory boards and councils attached to our respective departments, and I for one have already directed my department to include representatives of small businesses on the advisory board counselling the two wings of my own department.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Miss Bégin: Among other recent measures beneficial to small business are those which the Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) brought down in the budget of March 31. The budget contained a package of measures designed to improve the climate for small business.

We propose changing the tax laws that govern employee stock options. Under the old system the difference between the market price of shares in a company and the price that the employee paid was immediately taxable as income.

This was quite a disincentive for employees to accept stock as part and parcel of an employment agreement. But under the new system in the March 31 budget, the difference between market price and the option price will be taxed as a capital gain—and not until the employee actually sells the shares. This will allow small firms to offer stock as an attraction to first-rate, skilled people they would like to get into their businesses. It will give the smaller firms a better competitive edge in being able to get good management and skilled help of people who might otherwise go for the larger salaries that bigger companies and government can offer. If the employee has a direct stake in the firm he works for, he is more likely to put out his fullest effort in the interest of the company.

Another feature of the budget which will help small business has to do with the treatment of gains on certain Canadian investments under the Income Tax Act. An investor, when he puts his money into a Canadian firm, will now be able to notify my department, Revenue Canada, that he wants any return on his investment to be treated as a capital gain rather than treating it as straight income.

The investor will be able to exercise this option once in respect of all his investments in certain Canadian securities. This is a lifetime option that, once exercised, is permanent.

This will aid small business by attracting more small, ordinary taxpayers as investors. Having the return on investment taxed as a capital gain rather than as income represents a considerable tax advantage. I think it will encourage a lot of venture capital firms to get behind Canadian small business. Of course this provision is not available to banks, credit unions, dealers in securities, or similar interests.

The tax regulations are also being changed to make it easier for one company to invest in another. The aim of this move is to encourage joint ventures between small firms. They will be able to get together to tackle larger projects which they could not handle on their own.

Another item in the budget which will benefit small business is the tax deferral on the voluntary sale of a firm's assets when they are being sold as part of a relocation. If a small firm closes down its operation in order to relocate in a better area, for example, there would be a deferral of capital gains tax on the sale of the firm's assets if the proceeds were invested somewhere else, in a similar business.

I have often heard small operators complain that they would like to move closer to sources of supply or relocate to take advantage of a better market, but they are held back by the penalty of taxes. These new provisions in the budget will help.

Apart from the items in the budget directly aimed at helping small business, there are some general measures which will indirectly benefit small firms. Retailers, for example, will like the change in tax regulations regarding inventory adjustments. In calculating business income, three per cent of the opening value of qualifying inventories—which means stock on the shelves on January 1—will be an allowable deduction. This benefit is available to unincorporated as well as incorporated businesses.

As well, the 5 per cent investment tax credit is being extended, and increased in slow growth areas. Current and capital expenditures for scientific research and development will be eligible for this credit. Many small Canadian firms are now doing good work in developing new technologies, and we want to encourage them.

Many of the measures contained in the budget respond to concerns expressed by small businesses themselves. They have also expressed other concerns and problems with the federal government.

It is often said, for example, that small business cannot get close to government. It cannot find out what programs exist to benefit the small operator, because there are too few channels of communication. We want to improve communications and get the small entrepreneur into closer touch with assistance he could be getting from the federal government. I am hopeful that the Federal Business Development Bank, which has demonstrated a great deal of flexibility and creativity in its relations with small business, will be able to assume a substantial role in achieving that goal.

A good example of the kind of useful service the FBDB can offer to small business is the CASE program. CASE stands for counselling assistance for small enterprise, and it is basically an effort to provide small business with expert management and financial consulting services at a nominal cost. Many small business operators do their planning and accounting on the back of an envelope. And they make mistakes. They over-extend themselves. Or they leave out some important factors in their calculations. By the time they come to the FBDB or some other agency for help, it is often too late.

The CASE program is aimed at preventing that kind of business tragedy. CASE has a roster of hundreds of retired business people—those who have been through the whole routine and know the ropes. For a nominal amount of $20 per day, these retired business experts will come in and look over an operation and give a full report and advice on how to deal with any problem the business is facing.

These retired business people have an enormous collective expertise and business know-how. They volunteer for CASE because they really just want to stay involved with the business world. They like to keep in touch, and they like not having their accumulated expertise and experience go to waste.

Small business needs more risk financing from the FDBD. The bank therefore has been advised to provide more money in equity and loans to firms willing to take a risk on a good idea. Innovation always entails some element of uncertainty, but that should be no penalty to the small operator who wants to create something new.

Small business people have said that they would like an expansion of the provisions of the Small Businesses Loans Act. That act was passed in 1960 as a means of providing small business with loans from the chartered banks guaranteed by the federal government. Unfortunately, although the intention was good, the program has not worked as well as small business, the banks, and the government hoped it would. Fixed interest rates, often below the bank's prime rate, did not encourage the banks to lend under the act. It was costing them just as much to service these Small Businesses Loans Act accounts, but they were not getting as much return on their money.

Many small business people have said that they were not even aware of the provisions of the Small Businesses Loans Act. Their bankers simply never mentioned the program to them. I do not think the banks were at fault. Rather, it was the program which was not working.

This very week the Standing Committee on Finance, Trade and Economic Affairs will consider Bill C-48, which was referred to the committee on May 6. The committee will consider this bill, which is to amend the Small Businesses Loans Act and two related statutes governing farm and fisheries guaranteed loans. The amendments reply directly to many of the concerns raised by small business people. They have asked that the eligibility limit be raised from its present ceiling of $1 million in annual sales. We are therefore proposing to raise that limit to $1.5 million.

Small business people have asked that the limit on individual loans be raised from the present $50,000. We are therefore proposing to raise that limit to $75,000. We are also increasing the pool of money available for guarantees to $600 million from $300 million, doubling it.

We want to change the interest rate so that it floats with the banks' prime rate. Interest rates for these loans will be a little higher than prime, which will encourage the banks to start using the provisions of the program. We have discussed this matter with the chartered banks, and they have assured us that once these provisions will go through they will be happy to start making money available to small business under the terms of the act.

The Canadian Federation of Independent Business, chambers of commerce and the Canadian Manufacturers Association have all supported the proposed amendments. Once these changes in the legislation are in place, I think that the financial picture for small business people looking for risk financing should be brighter.

One of the complaints frequently heard from small business people is about the sheer volume of paper work which the small operator has to contend with for the federal government. We have made progress in reducing this volume of government paper work by getting the departments to share more information among themselves and by changing the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act. Because of these changes we will be exempting some 350,000 firms from at least one of their present reporting requirements by the end of 1981. We still have a long way to go, but our officials have calculated that the total dollar value to small business of the time saved in filling out these forms will be more than $40 million. Cutting back on paper work in this way, as I stated rather impatiently earlier on this afternoon, is a way to save money. These obsolete forms no longer have to be handled by programmers and clerks, and they do not have to be processed through expensive computers.

These are just some of the things we are doing right away, in advance of the policy paper to be considered by the cabinet this summer.

I should like to outline roughly some of the observations the government has made in studying Canadian small business with a view to shaping a federal policy toward the small entrepreneur. A primary observation is that small business makes an essential contribution to the social and economic health of the country and, of course, of the various regions as well. I would like to point out that 98.6 per cent of all Canadian corporations—all those with assets under $5 million—are small or medium sized businesses. In the service industry, which has been the fastest growing sector of our economy in the past 30 years, small outfits overwhelmingly predominate. In construction, 99.5 per cent of all corporations are small, and together with unincorporated firms—individuals working on their own—they account for a very large share of the profits made.

In terms of employment, 91 per cent of all Canadian firms have 100 employees or fewer. Small business people and their employees account for one half the corporate wage bill in Canada.

Another observation is that social and economic changes in our country and in the rest of the industrialized world are making smaller units of production in the manufacturing sector increasingly more attractive. This process should result in more sub-contracting from larger firms to small companies, or it could mean more decentralization of larger firms.

Earlier this afternoon I was reading a very interesting speech which was made by the Minister of State (Small Business) to the Vancouver Board of Trade on March 21 when he was touring the country and meeting with as many representatives of the small business community as he could. He spoke at length about the decentralization of larger firms. I think he referred to the model which we are borrowing from Japan.

When we observe how the small operator relates to government, we find that existing government efforts to assist him may not suit his style. The entrepreneurial spirit and the kinds of attitudes which predominate in the public service do not always blend together well.

Another observation is that there is room for improvement in the way programs are delivered to the business community from government. All the various programs can be confusing to the businessman, particularly to the small operator who does not have expensive consultants to sort out things for him. I hope we can develop more federal-provincial co-operation in this area.

Whatever these preliminary observations on the state of small business may lead to in terms of the policy paper which will be brought to cabinet, they do tend to show that any government programs specifically intended to assist the small business community should be very decentralized and should have a major degree of participation from the private sector.

Through the forthcoming policy on small business in Canada the government intends to meet its responsibility to the small entrepreneur so that the best of free enterprise will flourish and prosper.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Walter Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I listened very carefully to the minister, and perhaps it might be a good idea to remind the House of what is contained in the motion brought forward by the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek), which I had the honour to second.

It is obvious, judging by the minister's remarks—which I suppose were prepared by the same speech writer who prepared the famous $1,900 speech of the Minister of National Health and Welfare (Mr. Lalonde), and which said just about as much—that she neglected to read the motion. It is obvious that she did not see the order paper because she did not address her remarks to the terms of the motion. At the beginning of her remarks she said she could not understand why we brought forward such a motion; I will read it so that she will understand. The first part of ministerial understanding is to understand what she is talking about.

● (1710)

The motion begins as follows:

That in the judgment of this House the Government has failed to respond effectively to the needs of the small business sector . . .

If the minister goes out into the street and talks to business people she will learn that the government has indeed failed to respond effectively. People are not going to be satisfied with all that ministerial pap we heard just a few moments ago, which was canned somewhere deep in the bureaucracy and regurgitated here in the House of Commons.

The motion continues:

—has made negligible progress toward the implementation of a small business policy . . .

That is what the Canadian Federation of Independent Business has been saying about the government for years—that its policies have not been related to small business which provides 50 per cent of the employment in this country, but have been related to the needs of the large conglomerates and others. The minister would know that if she had read anything published by that organization, because that is the message they have tried to get through to the government. The motion continues:

—has neglected to introduce a Small Business Act . . .

And that is true. The Canadian Federation of Independent Business made representations to the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs on May 26. I do not think the minister can have read the minutes of that meeting before she made her speech today. They pointed out that a small business act had not been introduced by the government and that it is a very serious omission. Before the minister speaks in this House again on the subject of the needs of small business she should read the testimony of Mr. Bulloch who appeared before that committee and set forth the desires of small businessmen.

The motion ends with the words:

—and has not fed the productive potential of small business to create jobs for Canadians.

That is obvious. Surely the government owes more to parliament and the people of this country, to the one million unemployed, to the Economic Council of Canada who predicted that, to the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, to the Board of Trade and others to which she gave lip service, than to have the minister stand in this House and attempt with nonsense to defend the policies of this government which are indefensible.

The minister talks about the "entrepreneurial spirit" in this country. It is there, Mr. Speaker. But it is there in spite of the government and not because of it. It tends to fight against the movements of the government rather than to work with this government, and the minister knows that. If she does not know it, certainly her colleagues do. Certainly the Canadian Federation of Independent Business knows it and the small businessman knows it; the army of unemployed knows it; the army on welfare knows it and those who rely on short-term government programs for short-term employment know it. They all know that the government has neglected the problems of the nation in the fields which are the subject of the motion. The minister owes this House a lot more than to come forward with that canned pap, that bit of fluff which she tried to pass off as government policy.

Let us examine the efforts the government has made on behalf of small business. The minister mentioned the throne speech, so let us see what several of them have said. On October 8, 1970, there was nothing in the throne speech about small business. On February 17, 1972, there was nothing, but then all of a sudden the government woke up. On January 4, 1973, it said there would be aid to small business with three new initiatives to strengthen management, consulting services, and to improve access to financial facilities. Nothing came of it. On February 27, 1974, the throne speech said that measures would be proposed to aid small business both financially and by providing better consulting services through the creation of a federal business development bank.

The Federal Business Development Bank has been created and the minister gave us the statistics on it. In this House we were promised that the bank would act differently than the Industrial Development Bank but we find it is the same bureaucratic mess. It has not acted like the ordinary banking institution that the then Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce told the House it would.

On September 30, 1974, in the throne speech the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) promised to increase economic activity and give greater financial and other support to small business. Is anybody over there proud of the economic support and the increase of economic activity in this country? They must be blind if they are, and it is about time someone told them so.

In the last throne speech on October 12, 1976, the Prime Minister said that the government was going to improve local access to financial assistance and other services provided by government departments, the Federal Business Development Bank, and federal institutions to the private sector. That promise is relatively new, but like the others it has not been fulfilled.

What are the problems of small business in Canada? Just last week in its submissions to the Senate committee the Canadian Federation of Independent Business set out its goals as achieving low inflation, low unemployment, more balanced geographical development, a maximum feasible standard of living, a balance between owner-managed and professionally managed enterprises, and efficient use of resources.

Is anyone opposed to that, Mr. Speaker? If they are not, then the government that has to appear to move in that direction should start supporting those goals. Perhaps the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters), who spoke out so violently against the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, ought to consider whether he supports those aims.

The president of the Federation of Independent Business has made a study of the problems perhaps more deeply than the Minister of State (Small Business) (Mr. Marchand), who unfortunately cannot be here because of a personal tragedy in which we all sympathize. As reported in a press interview the Federation president, John F. Bulloch, said that current strategies were oriented toward large firms and that the complex of monetary and fiscal policy, economics of scale, specialization, rationalization, increased productivity, innovation and commercial policy under the existing socio-economic model, lumped small firms and professionally managed enterprises together.

That is one of the problems. Governments have given lip service to the problem just as they gave lip service to multiculturalism in Canada. What did the government do with regard to multiculturalism in Canada? The government made the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Haidasz), that distinguished member of this House, minister of state for multiculturalism. The announcement was made with great fanfare. The government was to embark on a new multicultural program and pay attention to our ethnic communities the like of which they had not before experienced. Everybody said what a marvellous thing the government had done. The government accepted those plaudits; but what did it do?

● (1720)

When the political reason for the creation of that new ministry no longer existed, the government put the hon. member for Parkdale among its bank of rejects at the far end of the House and said multiculturalism was now to come under another department. The program was forgotten. And the extent of the government's neglect of multiculturalism was underscored by the appointment of the new Minister of State for Multiculturalism (Mr. Guay (St. Boniface)). What have you got against the multicultural movement in this country?

Miss Bégin: What are you talking about?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): I suggest the Minister of National Revenue (Miss Bégin) was not delivering a speech she had written. It was not her speech. She is much too sensitive, sensible, and alert politically to make that kind of speech. I am sure she was not making her own speech. She was regurgitating.

Miss Bégin: I was not regurgitating.

[Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton).]

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): The minister denies she was regurgitating. Be that as it may, the Minister of State for Small Business is in danger, in exactly the same way as the hon. member for Parkdale was in danger. It is now convenient for the government to promote a ministry of state for small business. It is convenient to send a man across the country making speeches. It is convenient for the government to have the minister make his speeches about the strides the government is supposed to be making toward the solution of small business problems. Unfortunately those problems persist. When the need for the ministry of state for small business is over, that ministry will suffer the same fate as befell multiculturalism. It will be swept under the rug, for that is how the government works.

It is important to pay more than lip service to small business. These days, when we are suffering from vicious unemployment, when a generation of Canadians is growing up to rely on welfare and become increasingly disillusioned with our institutions, the government should pay more than lip service to small business. I regret that the minister paid only lip service.

I wish the government would listen to the small businessman. He is hemmed in with forms the number of which has not been reduced significantly. We all know that. The small businessman is hemmed in with discriminatory taxes. The minister talked a few minutes ago about the new tax provision which will allow businesses to be transferred within a family. That is a great innovation, of course, but discriminatory, since it applies only to transfers of business interests in incorporated businesses. I point out that hundreds of thousands of this country's businesses are not incorporated and they, too, should get the benefit of that provision. All is not well with our small businesses.

I say—perhaps because of the nature of my background—that we must promote policies which will help the development of small business, because such policies will help not only the small businessman but the country itself. For how long are we prepared to rely on government to satisfy some of our needs for employment? For how long must we rely on short-term government programs lasting three years or five years, and so on?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: They are but a finger in the dike.

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): As my colleague says, they are but a finger in the dike, and he is right. How are we to improve our economy and the position of small business unless we strengthen the productive element of the economy? In order to do this we must restrain the growth of the government. That does not mean necessarily that we must fire public servants willy-nilly. It means we must give emphasis to the private sector, must allow it to develop, and must allow it to retain a greater proportion of the gross national product. At present governments take 42 per cent of our GNP, and there is the danger that the proportion may rise to 45 per cent, even 47 per cent. Can we tolerate that, or should we not seek to reduce the percentage of GNP governments take?

We have asked the government to cut federal spending and to pass the savings on to the taxpayer through the tax system. We have asked the government time and again to give emphasis to Canadian investment, but it has only paid lip service, as was evident in the minister's speech. That is the problem. The government has not tackled that difficulty. We have asked for a sales tax cut on building materials and on machinery and equipment used by pseudo-municipal corporations to stimulate development. The government did not listen. We have asked the government to implement a tax credit or rebate scheme which would encourage Canadian industry to invest in research and development. What is happening in this country in research and development is pitiful. We borrow, borrow, borrow from every country in the world. We do not innovate ourselves, as the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Young) knows. We have asked the government to examine the possibility of introducing long-term fiscal or tax contracts for companies investing in Atlantic Canada, Quebec, or other parts of Canada.

Mr. Caccia: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order. Before the hon. member misleads the House any further, can he mention one case to support his allegation of a moment ago that the federal government is borrowing abroad?

Mr. Hnatyshyn: That is ridiculous. Why don't you listen?

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member had raised a relevant point of order, I would answer it. I suggest he was busy reading his mail in the House of Commons and not listening properly. If he were to listen perhaps he might learn something, or perhaps not.

Some hon. Members: Oh, oh!

Mr. Baker (Grenville-Carleton): As I said, we asked the government to consider introducing long-term fiscal and tax contracts for companies investing in Atlantic Canada, Quebec and elsewhere. Why, Mr. Speaker? The Canadian Federation of Independent Business people asked the government time and time again to tie the development of small business to the question of regional economic expansion. There are opportunities for this government if it would only advance some ideas apart from the pap ministers mouth on opposition days. They wonder on the one hand why we moved the motion, and tell us on the other of all the problems of small business. If the government would advance some ideas, we would support it. Because it has advanced no ideas, I say it is not fit to govern. It has done little for the small business community, and that community knows it.

Mr. Lloyd Francis (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, I have listened with interest to the debate this afternoon and cannot help but feel that much said was beside the point. We recognize the contribution small business makes in Canada. In the Federation of Independent Business, in particular Mr. John Bulloch, its chairman, we have an articulate spokesman for this sector of the Canadian community. I had the opportunity of listening to Mr. Bulloch at a Liberal party conference held in Malton not too long ago. He made a very substantial presentation which attracted the undivided attention of those present.

● (1730)

In many ways I can understand the reaction of the hon. member for Timiskaming (Mr. Peters). I regret that he is not in the chamber. That hon. member finds this kind of point of view very disturbing. It runs directly counter to the socialist dogma to which he is committed. From the small business community we hear this kind of talk about productivity. We hear the protest against paperwork. We hear the extreme desire of that group to get freedom to initiate, to conduct research and permit them to do a number of things to expand in a sector which we recognize as increasingly important.

The hon. member who just spoke, my good friend on the other side, thought the ministry of small business was a sham and would disappear. Nothing could be further from the truth. They tell us, depending on how the figures are compiled, that something like two thirds of employment and over half the payroll of this country come from small business, the expansion of the service sector, that part of the economy where people have to rely on their own efforts to produce, earn a living and get the satisfaction out of life for which they are looking. We are all aware of this.

This is an expanding sector. The government is increasingly aware of it. I am sure there will be a major contribution in the period ahead on behalf of small business, because we recognize that if we do not do something for small business in this area, we will go down the path of the United Kingdom economy. We will suffer from the "British disease". There will be a continual erosion of those things that contribute to the increasing standard of living we have come to expect.

Unlike the hon. member, my good friend who just resumed his seat, I noted a number of measures in the budget specifically designed as part of the policy for small business. I listened to the Minister of National Revenue (Miss Bégin) outline some of them, such as the credits that are available, the Federal Business Development Bank program, the expansion of loans, the measures to permit a number of small businesses to be associated in risk ventures without suffering tax penalties.

I would like to speak about one or two other measures which are in the budget. They are of particular interest to myself and some of my friends. The measure to exempt crafts from sales tax is long overdue. I have a hobby which is a matter of a great deal of interest to me. I cut and polish semi-precious stones for my own personal satisfaction. From time to time I have been associated with a very good friend who has much more talent than I will ever possess. She is a silversmith and sculptress. Occasionally when she has a problem with a stone, she comes to me. Sometimes in the periods I have not been a member of this place it has been my pleasure to work with her, trying to choose something to suit her design, purpose and cut.

She continuously complains to me about the very deadening effect of the sales tax on the craft and creativity of a group of people associated with her. Some years ago they prepared a brief which they presented to the then Minister of Finance. When the Hon. Walter Gordon was Minister of Finance, I went to him with this problem. He said "Lloyd, I am dealing with income tax at the moment. Sales tax is another problem. I am going to get around to that. At the moment I just physically cannot do it."

We are now looking at the administration and application of the sales tax. I was particularly pleased to see this one measure which means a great deal to a group of craftsmen and craftswomen in this country, if I may coin a phrase—I am always a little timid about how I unconsciously use "man" in the language of today. This is one contribution which will assist a number of small merchandisers.

I was particularly happy to see the total exemption proposed for those whose sales do not exceed $10,000 a year. It may be a very small item, but it is an item which exempts craftsmen and women who contribute to our quality of life. They make something in terms of their own standard of living, not usually a very generous standard of living, but the combination of the work they like to do and sufficient reward to encourage them to do it is an object of which we all approve.

I note one other matter in the budget. I can appreciate that members in the opposition did not talk about this. It attempts to do something about inflation. Anyone who has worked in the business sector and made their living from private business knows of the problem of sitting down with the accountants and seeing a profit appear at the end of a year that is not a true profit. It is an inflated profit that comes from the fact that the inventory went up in value as the general level of prices went up.

The government proposes that something like 3 per cent of the opening inventory at the beginning of the year be deductible off the top. That is a first step in recognizing that the profits that many corporations are reporting today are inflated profits. If the hon. member for Timiskaming and any member of his party were in the House, they would be thumping their desks and saying that corporation profits are far too high. They think that profit is almost a bad thing in itself. They want to increase the tax in the way their party has continually advocated.

I submit that the hon. member's party will have to face the problem of small business just like any other party in the House of Commons. This is an area where we are getting new employment, innovation and productivity increase. These are things we should never forget.

I read this motion very carefully. It talks about the failure of the government to respond effectively. I have listened carefully to the speeches that have been made thus far. We have heard about a few things that could be done which will no doubt be considered. However, in terms of a basic policy, philosophy and outline as to what we can do to assist, I submit that the government is certainly doing as much as any other government at any level in Canada.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. Francis.]

Mr. Francis: I cannot help but contrast the speeches that have come from the other side with the budget that was brought down by the same party in the province of Ontario not very long ago. Where were the bold, innovative measures? Where was the bold, new striking out on behalf of small business that hon. members say we should be making? Evolution of policy will be a consistent matter. We will listen to the articulate spokesmen which that community fortunately has at its disposal. We will have to listen and innovate. We have just started the policy. However, we have made a reasonable start, a start which I am prepared to defend.

Mr. Peter Elzinga (Pembina): Mr. Speaker, I listened to this debate with a great deal of interest. I commend the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek) and our House leader for introducing this motion. It shows an effort on the part of this party to attempt to further the opportunities of the small business sector in Canada.

It is interesting to note that the first debate on small business in the history of Canada took place in the House of Commons on March 28. It was initiated at that time by our critic, the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley. I want to share with the House the motion moved at that time and what we put forward in the way of positive policy which we felt the government should implement with regard to the small business sector. Our motion, at that time, read as follows:

● (1740)

That in the opinion of this House the government should consider the advisability of implementing programs to assist the development of small business in this country, consisting of such positive initiatives as (a) allowing tax credits for investment in small business, (b) providing assistance in the formation of small business consortia, (c) changing government tender practices so that small business supplies a portion of government-purchased goods and services, (d) reducing the government paperwork burden imposed on small business.

These are areas in which the small business sector have been pushing for many years. It is interesting to note that when the president of the Canadian Association of Small Business appeared before the Senate Committee on Foreign Affairs he stated that Canada's economic future relies on the strength of its small businesses and it was time the government recognized this to be the case. I believe it is evident that the government has failed to do so. The federation's president, Mr. John Bulloch, told the committee that Canada has lagged one or two generations behind the rest of the world in aiding the development of small, owner-operated businesses. On May 26, according to an article in the Citizen, he further told the committee:

This country should have the largest small-firm sector in the world because of its geography yet Japan and Europe have far surpassed us. We do not even have a definition of what a small business is.

The article goes on:

Bulloch said developing a small business sector in Canada would mean more jobs, a more competitive economy and less reliance on the United States for imported manufactured goods. He said fostering local small businesses was particularly important in combatting regional disparities.

It is an obligation upon the government of the day to foster a climate which encourages small business. But the present government has fostered a trend whereby the public sector has been playing a much greater role in our society. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) made a major mistake recently when he condemned the free enterprise system. The truth of the matter is that the government violated the principles of free enterprise and then blamed the system for its failure. At a time when restraint was required, the government printed more money. When economic restraint was required it bragged about the country's wellbeing and encouraged the good life. Recognition of the time lag between the performance of the U.S. and Canadian economies was not considered. Now we are paying the price for these mistakes and we face high unemployment thanks to the present government, not to the free enterprise system. Today, we need decision and action but we are faced, instead, with indecision and inertia. The government is hoping the American recovery will pull us out of our economic recession—hoping that some of their positive responses will spill over into Canada.

What we look for most is overall policy and economic guidance. All the government can do is talk about economic diversification, but it has no overall program by which this can be achieved. It has not stated its policies and does not know what the economic consequences of its actions may be.

One specific area of failure has to do with DREE grants and similar incentives. Government incentive programs of some kind are a necessity in this day and age but they should be the exception rather than the rule. How often has government provided enormous incentive funds to encourage industries to locate in particular areas, only to find the money wasted? Short term subsidies in many cases encourage economic inefficiency of the kind which arises, for instance, as a result of a lack of reasonable transportation facilities. These factors are not taken into consideration, causing subsidies to be retained on a more or less permanent basis to keep companies in operation. The effect of such government welfare programs is to increase the tax load borne by industries which are viable in themselves, thus further reducing our ability to compete in world markets.

I feel confident that we as Canadians would like to get back to the basics. I do not believe we expect something for nothing; indeed, our history has shown this to be true. What we do want from government is leadership and guidance.

Members over on the other side should have their record exposed every now and then. Consider what they have done. They have given us record inflation, record unemployment, record trade deficits, record budget deficits, record interest rates, record mortgage rates and record high prices. Also, they have contributed to a situation in which Canada is responsible for the highest level of foreign borrowing of any western nation.

So overall, the government has the worst track record in recent history, and all this without considering the revelations which have been made from time to time since I first came here, including the Sky Shops affair, various dredging scandals and so on. The government has driven our country so far into debt it is frightening. Deficit financing is not an acceptable way of stabilizing the economy. In the last nine years the administration opposite has come forward with eight deficit budgets out of nine. I do not understand how any government could feel proud of such a record.

What we are looking for on this side, as has been so well stated by our critic in this House, the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek), is a balanced approach to the problems of the small business sector. We should like to hear a set of economic goals; we should like to see a balanced budget without a budget deficit together with a disciplined monetary policy. An overall economic policy is required not only by the small business sector but by all sectors.

The government should consider itself fortunate, also, that the election in Quebec on November 15 turned out the way it did, because now it has an issue which it can grasp. It hopes the national unity debate will overshadow all the other issues which face Canadians today, such as the state of the economy, unemployment, inflation and the subject we are debating today.

The sad part of today's debate is that the majority of the constructive proposals put forward by my hon. friend will once again fall upon deaf ears. The economic record of the government makes many Canadians aware that unless drastic changes take place in overall economic policy we shall not have a country worth saving. As I say, looking at these matters in perspective it is obvious the government have the worst track record of any in recent history. I would hope that this government does not play with the national unity issue to the extent they will regain power, but that they will deal constructively with areas such as small business, unemployment and regional diversity.

I conclude by paying tribute to two individuals who are sitting in the gallery. They are two constituents from Pembina, a Mrs. Vicky Wirschke from Athabasca and Mrs. Pearl Baker. They have travelled several thousands of miles.

Mr. Mark MacGuigan (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I am not sure I will have enough time to finish my remarks this afternoon, but I would like to at least make a beginning. I am sorry the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton (Mr. Baker) is not here because I wanted to tell him how sympathetic we on this side are to the plight in which he finds himself. In light of the small number of Conservative members present this afternoon, I know it is the duty of the House leader, when no one else is available to speak, to step into the breach himself. That was very obvious from the content of his remarks and the fact that he had to fill up his speech with excursuses on multiculturalism in Canada, even reading a rather bad lecture to the minister on the motion which is before us this afternoon. When things like that happen, it makes all of us in parliament sad. We do not like to see anyone in parliament being worked as hard as the hon. member for Grenville-Carleton obviously is, judging from his speech. It is a pity more of his colleagues are not here to shoulder the burden, which he should not have to carry entirely alone.

I would like to comment on the fact that there are two opposition parties which are non-existent here at the moment. I would like to comment also on the attitude of the New Democratic Party toward small business, which has been revealed in the last day in the Ontario election campaign. The front page of the Toronto Globe and Mail this morning indicated that the provincial party leader has promised to jump the minimum wage in Ontario from $2.65 an hour to $4 an hour over a space of several months.

This was such a startling proposition when it was first raised that Mr. Lewis himself said he thought it might be a bit much. To quote the words of Mr. Lewis, as they appeared in the newspaper article, he said: "The $4 figure might not be unreasonable." After taking counsel with the party, whose policy this is, he said: "The minimum wage is inadequate and should be $4 an hour." He was asked directly how this wage boost would affect small businesses in Ontario. He replied with an old chestnut by saying, "—the effects of increases in the past have always seemed to be dire but never turned out that way." That is only because we have never had an increase of that magnitude in such a short time as has been proposed. I do not think any responsible party should be proposing that kind of change in that short space of time. We agree the present minimum wage in Ontario is inadequate, but it is not so inadequate that it needs to be almost doubled overnight.

The provincial Liberal Party of Ontario has been following a much more enlightened role with respect to small businesses and has been making this the centrepiece of its campaign. They have undertaken to create a large number of new jobs in the economy, 100,000 in fact, in very large part through assistance to small business. I indicate this to remind the House that this party has been dedicated to the interests of small business for a long time. This is shared by our party at the provincial level as well.

I should take the time to refer to the motion which is before us, but not to read it since the hon. House leader of the opposition did. Of the various things mentioned in the motion by the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek), the only clause which the government has not fulfilled is that it has not introduced a small business act. As the minister said this afternoon, the government has not reached a decision on that question. This is one of the questions still to be decided.

With respect to that clause, it can be said that the program the opposition is pushing has not been followed by the government. Having a small loans act is not the only way of dealing with the problems of small business in this country. It is a matter of interpretation as to the degree of progress which the government has made toward a small policy and toward harnessing the productive potential of small business. Those of us on this side would contend that the government has been moving very rapidly in the direction of an adequate small business policy, aided and urged on by the backbenchers on this side of the House.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

[Mr. MacGuigan.]

Mr. MacGuigan: We are cognizant of the fact that small business is the backbone of our country's economy. Something like 90 per cent of the businesses in our country employ 100 people or fewer. In my own constituency, which is often thought to be more remarkable for the presence of the big three of the automotive world, who are the largest employers, there are hundreds of small businesses even in the automotive field. They contribute a great deal to the economy of my city of Windsor and the country as a whole.

I think I had better call it six o'clock, before it gets any closer to the hour, Mr. Speaker.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. Is it agreed that we call it six o'clock?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): It being six o'clock, I do now leave the chair until eight o'clock p.m.

At six o'clock the House took recess.

AFTER RECESS

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

● (2010)

Mr. MacGuigan: Mr. Speaker, in the time that I have left I would like to deal with some of the aspects in which the government program with respect to small business appears to be succeeding and some of those in respect to which it does not appear to be succeeding or at least has not yet been sufficiently developed.

Of course, we are all aware of the accomplishments which have been mentioned by some of my hon. colleagues this afternoon: the changes in the Farm Improvement Loans Act, the Fisheries Improvement Loans Act and the Small Businesses Loans Act. Those are matters which have already occupied the House during this session of parliament.

The changes in the budget this year were of particular importance from the viewpoint of small business. It was a very major theme in the budget address, perhaps almost the major theme. It was very much welcomed by backbenchers on this side who feel they were in large part responsible for the inclusion of those measures in the budget. One of the measures in the budget proposed a change in the treatment of employee stock options for employees of Canadian privately controlled companies, and this will give small firms a better competitive edge in being able to get good management and skilled help who might otherwise go to large corporations.

The election of tax treatment on investments will encourage more investment in high-risk ventures. The change with respect to refundable tax will encourage joint ventures between small firms. The elimination of federal sales taxes in certain areas and the provision for assistance with respect to metric conversion will also be of considerable assistance to small business, as will the deferral of tax on voluntary sales of assets, which will make it easier for a firm to move closer to sources of supply or relocate to take advantage of a better market or to expand in newer facilities. Many of the other measures in the budget, although not directly aimed at small business, will be of great assistance to small business as well, such as the extension of the investment tax credit and the increase in the dividend tax credit. All these measures are very welcome. They are an indication of the fact that the government is very well aware of the necessity of assisting small business in Canada.

Another development which is very encouraging both as a reality and as a symbol of the recognition of the role of small business is the reduction in paper work. We have made progress in getting government departments to share information among themselves, and the changes in the Corporations and Labour Unions Returns Act will exempt some 350,000 firms from at least one of their present reporting requirements by the end of 1981.

However, it has been estimated that this reduction in paper work is only about a 10 per cent reduction over-all. The change which has occurred to this point is indeed a welcome one and, indeed, in the policy paper which the minister will be presenting to the cabinet this summer, there will be further reductions planned in this area; but this is one of the places in which there is a great deal yet to be done because the burden placed on small business with respect to paper requirements is out of all proportion to the difficulty which is created for large firms. We all recognize that in order to keep adequate records of business so that the government will know where to allocate its resources it must have information, but surely there are better ways to get it than to impose many of the requirements which have been imposed upon small businesses. That, then, is one of the areas in which we would like to see further policy development.

Another area in which we would like to see further development is with respect to innovation by small corporations, and here I am indebted to the brief before a Senate committee which was presented recently by the Canadian Federation of Independent Business, which has already been referred to several times. The brief has very interesting American statistics to the effect that a very large proportion of the innovations and inventions which have occurred in this century has come from individuals or from small businesses, and that even when a similar thing could be done by a large corporation, the cost to a large corporation of making the same kind of change is much greater. A small chemical company in the study which was referred to in that brief with 50 employees was able to develop a new product for $1400. A competing firm with 20,000 employees required $11,000 to accomplish the same result. I believe this is an indication of the economic value of government assistance to small businesses which can, with much fewer resources, accomplish equal and often larger results.

Of course, we are aware as well of the necessity of the availability of financing for small businesses. This is a matter which has been before the public for quite some time, but I think from the experience I have in my constituency office and from dealings with my constituents, it is not one which has yet been solved by the government. As long as Canadian banks and other lenders are as cautious as they are—at least in comparison with the similar institutions in our neighbour to the south—I think we will need government assistance to make sure that risk taking continues to be carried out in Canada and that those people who have good ideas and new ideas have an opportunity to develop them.

In the time remaining I would like to concentrate on one particular kind of small business because it is one which is of peculiar importance to the constituency I represent, which is an automotive constituency. We have slashed our over-all deficit with the United States under the auto pact from almost $2 billion in 1975 to $1 billion in 1976. That is a great improvement indeed. Over-all our performance under the auto pact has been extremely good. We have 11 per cent of the employment in the automotive industry in North America, although we have only 9 per cent of the market, and that is something of which we can be rightfully proud. I think no city has benefitted more from the auto pact than Windsor, but at the same time there is a down side and I submit that that is much heavier than it need be and certainly much heavier than desirable.

The deficit in auto parts continues to increase. It increased only slightly in 1976 over 1975, but the fact that it has increased is in itself an undesirable feature. It has been going up steadily. In addition, the increase in auto parts during the years the automotive trade pact has been in existence is a very large one indeed, far too large to be acceptable as a continuing feature of the auto pact. This is very relevant in the present context because the automotive assembly side, which is the side on which we are doing so well, is the domain of the large companies, the big three and to some extent their fourth competitor as well.

However, the auto parts industry is composed of many small companies, and I submit that it is very important to the future of small business in this country in general that we assist these particular small businesses in the automotive industry. I am not satisfied that the present level of financial assistance which is available under the Enterprise Development Board is as good for the automobile industry as that which existed some years back when there was a separate administration and a separate fund which operated very actively to assist companies which were involved only in the automotive business. Given the importance of this industry on the Canadian manufacturing scene and the importance of small businesses generally, it is too bad that particular form of separate assistance to small businesses in the automotive industry was dropped.

That makes it all the more important that the enterprise development board have the mandate and budget to assist small firms in the automotive business. With the kind of competition these firms face they have to be assisted in those years in which the market is not as good as they would wish it. Moreover, quite often when the market is good the sourcing of auto parts, which is controlled largely by the big three in the United States; is not favourable to Canada.

Some years ago at a time when the automotive parts balance was beginning to veer toward Canada, people in my city felt that the United States government put pressure on the automotive companies in the United States—it was usually silent pressure that would be hard to establish by evidence in a court of law, but nevertheless real—to make sure that they sourced most of their products in that country. That makes it important that the Canadian government apply pressure to the automotive companies in Canada—and to the extent possible to those in the United States—to make sure that we have a fair share of the market in automotive parts. It is unfortunate that there has to be government pressure of that kind, but we cannot allow ourselves to be put in a position where pressure is being applied by only one side.

In addition, there is the necessity of a review of the auto pact. Just recently the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Chrétien) said that the trade deficit on auto parts in 1976 was too big to swallow. It certainly is for my city which has suffered many of the consequences. Over all the balance is in our favour but when the balance in auto parts is against us, not only does it affect the situation of small businesses in Canada but it also affects the skilled trades, because the skilled workman plies his trade in the parts industry more than with the large companies. We are increasingly finding ourselves in the situation where, although we have large numbers of jobs, we have less and less skilled employment. That situation cannot be allowed to continue.

I would therefore strongly support the view that has been expressed in this House before that the Arthur report should be published so that all of us, especially those from automotive constituencies, can have all the latest facts with respect to the automotive trade pact, the deficit in particular. The government must adopt a vigorous position with respect to the automotive companies and the United States government in regard to the effect on small businesses in the automotive industry.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to say that the kind of contribution small businesses make a country is impossible to measure. It is an omnipresent contribution, but it can be indicated by the fact that when people have visited an area it is not normally the large corporations they remember but the small places that have given excellent service—the kind of service that is not always found with large corporations. That kind of character of our society which has been a very important part of our development in the last two centuries is too important not to be encouraged and given every assistance by the government.

I think my colleagues on this side of the House would wish me to say that, while we welcome the progress that has been made by the government in assisting small business, there are still some steps to be taken. We would strongly urge the government to take those steps.

[Mr. MacGuigan.]

Mr. John Wise (Elgin): Mr. Speaker, I welcome this opportunity to join with other hon. members in this debate on the motion before the House regarding the small business community. I want to compliment my colleague the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek) not only on his motion today but also on the sincere interest he has taken in the problems of the small business community. Indeed, if it were not for members on this side of the House and for the hon. member in particular, this government would probably have forgotten altogether the small business segment of our economy. It is widely acknowledged that if it were not for members on this side continually giving attention to the problems of small businesses and pointing to the neglect of this government, a Minister of State (Small Business) would probably not have been appointed. The mere appointment of a minister is certainly not sufficient, however. What is needed and needed now are legislative measures, tax changes and incentives designed to assist this segment of our economy.

With the ever increasing rate of unemployment in this country I find it difficult to understand why this government has not recognized that the state of small businesses in Canada is an extremely vital factor in the health of our economy and of society as a whole. Nor can I understand why the government has not acknowledged the significant contribution which small businesses have made to the economy and work force of this nation.

Small business establishments are without question the very lifeline, lifeblood and backbone of our communities, our provinces and our country. They are an important segment of our economy. Small businesses, by their very nature, provide a very high degree of diversity and this diversity adds much needed stability to our communities and our country. Yet bit by bit they are slowly being phased or forced out of business.

Far too little consideration is being given to such an important group—a group which not only individually but collectively has contributed much to our economy and social well being. Small businessmen and their employees represent half the wage bill of corporations in Canada, and when you consider how many small firms are not incorporated you can see what an important segment of our economic strength we are dealing with.

I have a great deal of respect for these business people, men and women who have shown substantial managerial skills, efficiency, determination, dedication and initiative over the years that has often surpassed that shown by the leaders and management of some of our larger corporations. Many of these people who establish their own businesses over the years, unlike many larger firms today which receive billions of dollars in the form of assistance or grants from the government, received very little from their governments but built their businesses on hard work, long hours, faith in their communities, faith in themselves and faith in Canada.

Unfortunately, due to the philosophies of the present day federal government, there has been a tendency toward centralization, bigger and costlier governments, stronger and more powerful unions and larger multinational corporations. If this trend does not reverse itself in the very near future, the free market system which built this country will continue to suffer and perhaps even eventually disappear.

Generally speaking, governments continue to consult only with large business and unions and as a result most legislation is geared to those sectors. Small businesses, which employ two-thirds of the country's work force, must thus accept laws which were not designed to deal with their problems in the first place.

● (2030)

No segment of society is more vulnerable to the red tape of bureaucratic power than the small and medium sized business sector. They do not have the manpower to handle the massive volume of government demands for paper work for various purposes. Too many of the small businessmen fall victim to the uncoordinated leap-frogging by government departments in their demands for more statistical information. Their productive effort is swamped by the increasing demand for completing and filling in forms and questionnaires. Laws and regulations of governments designed to regulate the activities of large corporations fail to heed small and medium sized businessmen. They often find themselves defenceless in a jungle of conflicting regulations, unless they have available the services of corporate lawyers, tax consultants and government relations men; and people of that calibre serve larger firms.

Even regulations which at first glance seem innocuous, such as the federal government's labelling act, can put many prosperous companies into financial difficulties. In this case the labelling act's requirements for products to be labelled in both official languages has led to severe problems for some small businesses, particularly importers who cannot afford to relabel many of their product lines. It is grimly ironic to these small businessmen that often as not the imported products are marketed solely in one particular linguistic region. Certainly, Mr. Speaker, the government should show a greater measure of common sense in many of these cases.

For some reason or other the government does not realize in any meaningful way that the survival of small business is inescapably linked to the survival of the mixed economy; as a result, we are now witnessing more bankruptcies in Canada than ever before. The government should be making every effort to reduce the considerable existing bureaucracy which is strangling the small business community, while at the same time providing incentive programs which by way of the tax system would be based on research and development, increased employment, productivity, export sales and expansion.

The government should also be conducting an all-out plan to reduce to the bare minimum the amount of form filling that small businesses are required to undergo. The Minister of State (Small Business) (Mr. Marchand) stated in an address in Maniwaki on May 19 that officials in his department calculated that the present move within the government to reduce the amount of form filling will save the small businesses, in dollar value, more than $40 million. If that admission on the part of the minister is not evidence in support of the case we, on my side of the House, are making, I do not know what is. I have seen no stronger evidence. If the government has used more insight in the first place before they initiated their complicated form filling program, the $40 million they are now going to save the small businessman could have bolstered various sectors of the business community in dire need of assistance, and prevented many a bankruptcy. This is just another example of the waste of taxpayers' money caused by our complex government bureaucracy.

Credit for small business enterprise creation and expansion, including that of an agricultural nature, is becoming increasingly difficult to obtain. There is a general lack of credit. I feel too many banks are turning away too many applicants. It is the government's duty to instil a more positive attitude in this regard and to promote and guarantee such loans more aggressively. I suggest as well that the incidence of inflation and greatly increased building and operating costs should lead the government to consider seriously increasing the ceiling of these much needed loans.

The government has contributed to the small businessman's appalling plight by being unable to manage the Post Office properly and establish good working relations with the postal unions. At present the working relationship is poor. Apparently the government and unions do not remember that small businessmen in Canada bear the financial brunt of lengthy and unnecessary strikes. Small business people in Canada are in the worst position to cope with this recurring situation. These strikes affect many small businessmen. When many of them are forced into bankruptcy, they must dismiss their employees. This throws those Canadians into the ranks of the unemployed, and unemployment is already at one of the highest levels Canada has ever experienced in her history. The financial losses of many small businesses, and consequent increased unemployment, loss of productivity, loss of sales, and so on, contribute further to depress an already sagging economy.

Judging from recent reports we may experience another costly postal strike in the near future. Despite these financial losses and despite some bankruptcies, the small businessmen generally supported the government's stand during the last postal strike. Surely such fine private and corporate citizens, our small businessmen, deserve a better break than they are presently receiving. Small business and agricultural interests are not identical, although basically similar. As I said, the average farmer is very much a businessman in his own right. For years members on this side of this House have asked the government to change the tax structure in order to create a more workable atmosphere for the agricultural community and small businesses and, more importantly, to preserve those segments of our economy.

My remarks refer particularly to the small family farm. Only in the recent budget did the government finally move in this general direction. The Minister of Finance (Mr. Macdonald) is to be commended for introducing measures providing for a deferral of capital gains tax arising from the voluntary sale of land, buildings and certain other productive assets, to the extent that the proceeds are reinvested in similar assets.

Let me say again in the House that this provision should apply to all forced sales as well. This one small provision is not enough. It will not, and should not, satisfy the needs of the small business community. We still face the grossly unfair situation whereby the farm wife or family member cannot be reimbursed for labour unless the farmer incorporates his farm. The government well knows that if this is done, if the farm is passed on to the next generation, the tax free provision is lost. It is in fact a form of blackmail designed by a government obviously bent on destroying the small family farm as a viable enterprise.

As some of my colleagues on my side of the House said earlier today, this same provision applies to small business. The government's attitude seems based on the mistaken belief that the small farm or private business enterprise, if given an equal chance, is less productive than the larger enterprise. I challenge the government to prove the truth of this with facts and figures. I submit it cannot do it. Bigger does not mean better.

The wife and family of the small businessman must suffer the same fate since, basically, the same rules apply. Salaries paid to family members cannot be deducted from income tax unless the business incorporates, thereby incurring the same disadvantages. I call on the government to end this sort of discrimination.

The Canadian Federation of Independent Business suggests, accurately, that the government's apparent theory of bigger is better is wrong. Despite the current concentration of corporate power, we are experiencing high inflation and record unemployment. Government intervention so far has proved unsuccessful; obviously, more business incentives are needed.

One of the basic problems is that everyone has income but little wealth. Too many people cannot afford even their own homes. Wealth makes possible a shift in investment, not income. There is wealth in Canadian society, but much of it is concentrated in the hands of large corporations and other large enterprises, not in the hands of individuals. I refer to individuals like average Canadian men and women who provide the foundation of our Canadian society and who day after day utilize their human resources in the face of government neglect and indifference and struggle for survival in the small business community.

There is nothing wrong with big business. Nor is there anything wrong with big profit. Indeed, both are necessary and desirable. However, we need to take steps to ensure that small business and moderate profit is not completely engulfed by the corporate giants. So far the government is failing miserably in this regard.

Incentives to small business are almost non-existent and any measures that are taken are usually of an ad hoc nature, often too little and too late, rather than part of a well organized plan designed to promote prosperous growth in the small business and agricultural communities.

[Mr. Wise.]

Clearly, a more constructive policy is required and required now. This government has failed to provide that policy and the climate and atmosphere for the small business community to exist, to grow and, particularly, to expand. The economy of Canada has therefore suffered and Canadians have suffered. I am certain that Canadians, given the opportunity, will register their full support of this very excellent and timely motion put forth on behalf of our party by the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek).

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have the opportunity to speak today on this very important motion put forward by the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek). In view of the present economic situation in Canada, there is no matter we could speak on that would have greater importance than the small business community.

In order to have a perspective on the small business community, what it means to Canada in terms of employment and jobs and what it means in terms of adding to the economic strength in this country, it is important to point out that small business in Canada provides more than 55 per cent of all the jobs in this country. It accounts for more than 50 per cent of the dollar value of business in Canada.

Taken as an economic unit, the small business community is the single most important community in Canada. It is most important to underscore the fact that a number of nations in this world have recognized that, have yielded to the obvious and provided strata and structure in order to give incentive to small business, something Canada has not done.

Before going further, I wish to comment on some of the remarks of the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. MacGuigan). He stated that the most recent budget was a real thrust to small business and that the government had given an incentive to the small business community. In truth, a wide survey of small business people across this country revealed that the vast majority felt that the most recent budget did not offer small business any substantive advantage that would allow reasonable encouragement of initiative.

If we want to be very candid this evening, we have to lay out at the start that this government today has no integrated policy related to small business. There has been a ten month period absolutely void of policy since the government established a ministry in charge of small business. The Minister of State (Small Business) (Mr. Marchand) is still unable to define for the Canadian public what he means when talking about the small business community. That minister has not in any way put forward what might be called a small business policy.

We are lacking a number of things. The minister has not issued a policy. He has not even issued a definition of what he calls the small business community. That underscores why the minister's first trip abroad after being appointed minister was to the Soviet Union.

If we look at the international scene, we see that the United States, Japan and West Germany all have extensive policies that are aimed at the small business community. Japan has recognized that it is the private small business community that relieves unemployment. It is important that we look at the community in Japan. It is a nation with some 110 million people. It has, by our standards today, zero unemployment. By contrast, Canada, a nation we like to think of as one of the greater nations in terms of human and natural resources, has one and a half million people looking for work. The reason we have such high unemployment in Canada today is that the government has been totally incapable of recognizing that unemployment by and large is solved by incentives given to the small business community.

There is a myth that Japan is a nation of big business producing products such as Toyotas, Datsuns, Kawasakis, Sonys, Hondas and many others. In truth, most of the people employed in Japan are associated with family and small business enterprises. That is why that nation has been able to achieve such a very high rate of employment or, by contrast, such a very low rate of unemployment.

In Canada, we have a ministry which has done little to alleviate the unemployment situation in Canada. After ten months of operation, we still have from that ministry no definition and no policy flow to give the kind of credibility to the small business community that this country thirsts for in a very longing way.

Governments are particularly susceptible to regulatory overkill. Michael J. Trebilcock, a University of Toronto law professor, revealed in his paper, "Winners and Losers in the Modern Regulatory State—Must the Consumer always lose?" that the federal government alone has created more than 100 regulatory agencies.

Last winter the Canadian Federation of Independent Business conducted 3,264 interviews amongst businessmen. It asked this question: "What is the single most important problem your business is facing today?" Heading the list: Government regulations and paperwork. As one businessman complained, "I am expected, inspected, disrespected, suspected, dejected, examined, re-examined, commanded and compelled until I provide an inexhaustible supply of money for every known need and desire or hope of the human race."

That underscores the plight that this highly regulatory government has imposed on the small business community. We have the situation well illustrated by the anti-inflation control program where the government focused on big business and organized labour. There has been a disrespect for, and a dissociation from, the small business community, from the entrepreneur, from the family life-style business that is so prevalent and so much the backbone of the Canadian fabric of our economy.

No segment of society is more vulnerable to the mechanics of bureaucratic power than the small and medium sized business sector. Carl Beigie, executive director of the C.D. Howe Research Institute, agrees that we have passed into the land of negative returns. In 1975 he wrote:

—a proliferation in the government regulatory apparatus may have produced windfalls for the accounting and legal profession, but at the expense of the growth and efficiency of the overall economy.

● (2050)

Nothing could more underscore how government has imposed rules and regulations on the small business community so as to have a stifling and straitjacketing effect upon that very major and important sector of society. This is to say nothing about the tremendous social effect of over-regulation. There is an inverse relationship between individual liberty and government control.

I should like to take the opportunity this evening to read into the record a complaint I have just recently received from a constituent, Mr. Fossen from Killiam, Alberta who has a feed and farm supply operation. That business hires two people on a full time basis and during part of the season hires extra part-time help. It recently received from Statistics Canada a 14-page small print questionnaire with the demand that it be completed in 60 days or legal action would be taken. When you stopped to take a look at what that would require, by the owner of this company's own admission it would require that he shut down his business and work on his books for nothing short of 10 to 15 days. The form had such questions on it asking for the quantity of everything on hand—grain, concentrates, bran, oat flakes and so on. They wanted to know the amount of micro-mixes of all vitamins, the amount of macro pre-mixes for cattle and swine, the amount of all of the feeds they process—that is, all grain and how much of each individual one. They wanted a breakdown of all the concentrates, all the bags, all the electricity used, all the gas, all the office supplies, all materials used in production, equipment used by own labour force, and purchases of all goods from other sources for resale in same condition as purchased. They wanted a list of all complete foods purchased and sold, all reserves of animal and pet feeds, whether for birds, rabbits, dogs. The list goes on for 14 pages. This is an example of the way in which regulations are imposed on small business which does not have the wherewithal or the capital to be in a position to respond.

The owner of this small plant said that had the request come at a time of the year when he normally did his yearly inventory it would not have been difficult to have complied because the information had to be assembled for tax purposes anyway. But this insensitive government is now, twice a year, imposing such requirements as these on small business simply because one department or another decides it needs information. I submit that this is the kind of attitude which is endangering the small business community to the extent that it may wind up as an extinct species.

Now let me take a look at metric conversion. I am not opposed to it in principle but certainly this program has been put forward without any consultation with the farm community. Anyone who was a representative of a farm community would have known that three prairie provinces produce the bulk of the grain in this country. There is a road grid across Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta one mile east to west by two miles north to south. The grid is divided equally, then, into acres. The hectare will simply not fit in with the units which are already there. The government has not suggested the prairies be resurveyed. Obviously the farmers were not consulted before these changes were made.

We have read in the propaganda put out by the government that 95 per cent of the world lives on the metric system. What the government does not recognize is that there is no pure metric system which exists throughout the world. There is the Japanese metric system with all its differences relevant to Japan. There is the German metric system with its own differences relevant to Germany. There are the metric systems of almost all the countries in the world with their exceptions. But somehow the government felt they needed to take it in its pure form and impose it on Canada irrespective of the damage it might do to some sections of society. If there is to be any real feeling for the Canadian people there has to be a reversal of attention in terms of how we employ the concept of the hectare and the kilometre as opposed to the acre and the mile.

I turn now to another point. I was very pleased that the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Wise) brought it up earlier today because I think it is an important one. I refer to the way we treat the family unit in small business today. I speak particularly of the husband and wife combination. Coming, as I do, from a farming constituency, I know what an insult it is when we witness the farm wife for a very large part of a year in a good many families working like a hired man, side by side with her husband, operating farm equipment, tending the cattle and other livestock, lifting heavy loads and then in the spring of the year being written off as a tax deduction for $1,418. What an insult it must be when those are her wages—simply a tax deduction. She knows her husband cannot pay her a salary because, if he does, she is taxable on that salary too. He also knows that he cannot do it unless he incorporates as a family business.

Incorporation for many farmers is not a practical alternative. We are in a situation today when that farmer can go out and hire a hired man to help him and write the hired man's expenses off as a tax deduction. When his own wife helps him, all he can do is write her off as a tax deduction. I think that is a scandal, not only in the farming community but in any small business such as a corner grocery store when two partners work side by side. Greater attention has to be given to this kind of system so that the entrepreneur who has initiative, ambition and the inspiration to get ahead is able to have incentive provided by government.

What we are witnessing today is the focus of government on the two major forces I mentioned earlier, big business and organized labour. No attention is paid to one really important sector of our society, the small business community. It has been demonstrated around the world that countries which have been able to keep a buoyant economy have provided incentives for small family businesses.

While talking about the small business community I should like to deal for a moment or two with the subject of labelling and how the present requirements act as a disincentive to the small entrepreneur for many reasons. The labelling legislation makes a lot of sense in terms of business which is conducted nationally. But consider the fact that some of the finest western boots made in Canada are made in Quebec, or that some of the best kayak paddles obtainable in this country are made in Quebec. Here is an example of where the labelling legislation might well apply. It applies equally in other areas of production such as the canneries at Lethbridge which see their products across Canada. But it does not apply to those industries either in English Saskatchewan or in French Quebec which are totally local. In these circumstances, to have to comply with the labelling regulations means another capital investment simply to get their ideas on the market.

One of the things that should not happen in Canada is that you have to pay an extra price in order to take some initiative. If you want people to have incentive, you ought to reward people for that, rather than pile up the bureaucratic overkill of paperwork which is imposed upon small businesses by the rigid, over-regulating government which we have at the present time. There are many small businesses which would very much appreciate an opportunity to get out from underneath all of the paperwork which is presently imposed upon them. Small business has a very different set of needs from the multinational organizations. We do need tariffs for protection from the giant textile industries, but they need not apply to the small speciality shops.

In my own constituency there is a store which sells only western shirts and clothing. By the laws of Canada, that store cannot buy any tariff-free shirts except from eastern Canada; it cannot buy western shirts because they do not make them. They have to compete with their neighbours down the street who can buy the tariff-free goods. On the other hand, we find the people who are importing these shirts getting them from the western United States and from other countries who are making western clothing. They have to pay tariff on them, and that acts as a disincentive to them.

The survival of the broadbased middle class is vital to democracy. Likewise, the small business community is an integral part of the economic mix of this country. However, securing risk capital at the present rate of loan interest in Canada makes a good idea too expensive. In the final analysis, Canada as a nation has to be the loser.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. gentleman, but his allotted time has expired. Nevertheless, he may continue if there is unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Malone: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would also like to thank my colleagues and friends in the House for giving me an extension of time. Before concluding, I have a few more comments to make.

Even after a decade of rapid inflation, the ceiling on small business loans of $50,000 should be readjusted upwards so as to account for the inflationary trends of this past decade. If we are going to have a situation where small business entrepreneurs can establish themselves, get their feet on the ground and offer viable alternatives in Canada for employment, then we have to think of businesses capitalizing themselves somewhat in excess of a rate of $50,000. Presently the government's approach to unemployment is to give the people of Canada make work programs through such concepts as LIP, LEAP, Young Canada Works and Canada Works. If the state has no business in the nation's bedrooms, then it has no business frustrating the basement offices of its homes either.

The government is hoping that by some kind of make work programs it can solve unemployment. All that it does with its make work programs is to shift from make work during one half of the season to unemployed people during the other half of the season. In other words, in Canada today we have a coin which has on one side heads—make work—and on the other side tails—unemployment. Either way Canada is losing, because on that kind of a flip of a coin you cannot come out a winner.

If we had more incentive for the small business community, we would have ongoing employment such as would match West Germany, Japan and the United States. All three of those countries have specialized departments and incentives to give encouragement to small business groups. There should be a tax credit incentive for small businesses which would do more for free enterprise than the current focus on organized labour and the multinationals. It would do more for free enterprise than would all the make work programs this government can dream of. Make work programs are merely an extension of unemployment, except with a stop gap. It is a band-aid which does not cure the ailment but simply hides it and puts it away.

I will conclude by saying that the small and medium-sized businesses, managed by the small or medium-sized operations, hire 60 per cent of Canada's labour force. That is a fact we have to address ourselves to, and that is a fact which the Japanese, the West Germans and the Americans have addressed themselves to. Their economies reflect their governments' sensitivities to the needs of their people. I hope this government will see fit to adopt the motion being put forward here today.

Mrs. Jean E. Pigott (Ottawa-Carleton): Mr. Speaker, I am very grateful to have an opportunity to speak today. It is only seven months ago that I left the business world, and I feel I still have a strong sense of what should happen to small business.

It was in December 1971 that F. H. McNeil, President of the Canadian Bankers' Association said:

> Confidence is low among Canadian businessmen because they believe many government attitudes and policies are either irrelevant or fundamentally detrimental to Canada's interests . . . Businessmen are frustrated and disenchanted.

The federal government, if it is interested in small business, must either play a role in providing the financial capital required for expansion or legislate changes in the Bank Act to provide the incentive to the financial community to generate a larger proportion of the monetary needs of small business.

However, there is a need for more money. Managerial talent and organizational restructuring are also very important and key to the life and survival of small business. Government could increase support to the provinces to improve the quality of education in business schools, MBA programs and the wonderful programs which are happening in community colleges.

The situation facing Canada today is critical. The problems of small businesses do not only mean an increase in bankruptcies and resulting unemployment, which is serious enough on its own, but by failing to support and basically hindering small business in Canada, the federal government is denying an important resource to our struggling economy.

The catalogue of difficulties facing small businesses in Canada is complex and lengthy. I would like to explore some of them now. One problem which many small businesses have to cope with is the enormous volume of red tape existing in Canada today. A study by the Law Reform Commission reported in 1975 that federal statutes have now created some 20,000 criminal or quasi-criminal offences. Provincial statutes account for another 20,000 such laws. This has meant an ongoing transfer of decision-making powers and economic resources from the private sector to the state. The situation led to complaints such as "governments are increasingly hostile to business" and "the bureaucracies are apparently anti-business".

I am afraid the worst problem is here in Ottawa, because it has become so remote, because it is so vague and because it appears inbred. In some of our large public service emporia they are only interested in talking to people who come from equal size broadloomed offices. Small business must have consultation with all levels of organization, especially with senior officials and ministers who are out of touch with small business.

I recommend the story of an Ontario cabinet minister who, in the last two years, has taken two Winnebagos and travelled the length and breadth of Ontario to talk to tourist industry owners right in their own homes and travel agencies. What has happened is that Ontario has begun to design the right kind of incentives and programs for the travel industry.

Another problem for small businesses is in the area of government tenders. There is a need for change in government tender practices so that small business supplies a portion of government purchased goods and services. As has been stated here earlier today, Canada lacks a small business act. Under small business legislation in the United States, however, one third of federal spending for goods and services goes to small business. Imagine a third of all purchases of our federal government going to the small business community. What a lift that would make!

In 1950 cash spent by governments amounted to 28 per cent of our national income; now it is 46 per cent and rising. In order to collect this money, the government has evolved an intricate tax philosophy and tax policy. The whole area of taxation is another government induced problem faced by small business. The corporate rip-off in Canada is that half of our profits are going to governments which put in little capital, man hours, or risk in order to benefit from business. It is not uncommon, for example, for governments to encourage business through tax allowances. The businessman then risks his capital, time and in many cases forgoes income for a number of years—at which time government calls the tax allowances "loopholes" and closes the tax gap. Where have we heard that before?

Any new venture requires planning, research and development, financing, staffing, the construction of production facilities and marketing. Even in a successful program, there is a long waiting period between the initial outlay and a return on capital. Any change in a tax law without notice is unfair; such changes are now being complicated by retroactive tax laws.

Taxation should be designed not to produce revenue but as a device to influence the economy. Governments frequently tax at the wrong time, at the wrong place and in order to gain immediate funds. The Canadian economy is often compared to a pie, and we argue about how the pie should be divided. Forgive me if I bring a note about the bakery industry into my speech. We argue about how the pie should be divided. Instead, we should worry about first making the pie. The major ingredient in this kind of baking is real wealth, and our taxation system should aim at increasing it.

The Canadian taxation system should work to motivate people to greater production. Our taxation system is now frequently aimed at punishment when it should encourage productivity and efficiency. Government should attempt to keep taxation simple and the cost of collection at a minimum. That Chinese expression "Do not remove a fly from your friend's head with a hatchet" is a motto which I believe our taxation department officials should have on their wall.

Decision-making in business is now being turned from factors of economic efficiency to considerations of taxation. The best efforts of many small businesses are now towards bending the best principles of sound business practice to fit an unsound taxation policy. Our incredibly intricate and therefore expensive collection system, coupled with a high rate of taxation, is producing disastrous side effects and undesirable changes in our economy for which our citizens never voted.

So that you do not think I am just being negative or critical, let me point out that our party has proposed some sound changes. One of the more recent comprehensive statements on taxation came from the hon. member for York-Simcoe (Mr. Stevens), in his reply to the March 31 budget on April 4, 1977. He proposed a tax credit for small businessmen investing in research and development. As the small business sector is already one of the most innovative groups in the Canadian economy, these efforts to advance the technological capability of this country should be rewarded. The Progressive Conservative proposal would form an alliance between the goals of increased research and development, a reduction in regional disparities and the encouragement of small business—a fortunate coincidence of goals.

Under the proposal, a small businessman could obtain a tax credit for investment in research and development. The credit would be on a sliding scale, depending upon whether the project was taking place in an area of regional disparity. The amount of the rebate could range from a high of, say, 75 per cent in the Atlantic region and Quebec to a low of 25 per cent or less in the more prosperous areas of the country. A substantial proportion of the tax revenue lost by such a credit would be regained as a result of the new employment opportunities created. Such investments in R & D will result in increased economic growth over the long-term and a more stable basis for the Canadian economy.

Another proposal is for long-term fiscal or tax contracts for companies investing in areas of regional disparity. This proposal would be of particular benefit to the medium sized owner-managed company which would be willing to take the risk of investing in a slow growth area. The purpose of the tax contract would be to provide some degree of tax certainty for a company willing to undergo the financial uncertainty of investment in an area of regional disparity.

The sort of contract our party is thinking of would be of the following kind. A company thinking of investing in, for example, Newfoundland would sign an agreement exempting the operations of the new investment until, say, 150 per cent of the investment had been recovered or until ten years after the plant begins production. Both of these tax proposals are designed to assist both in fostering the small business sector and reducing regional disparities. They are grouped together because the goals of a strong small business sector and of regional development are complementary—in fact, they are so complementary as to be mutually necessary.

Several unfortunate experiences in the past, such as the Shaheen Come-by-Chance Refinery, Bricklin, etc., should show us that big business may not be the answer to regional development. You cannot build an adequate, large scale industrial infrastructure from scratch. Without infrastructure, large scale industry cannot survive. Without large scale industry, there is no need for an industrial infrastructure. Further, because small business is more labour intensive than capital or energy intensive, a predominantly small business economy in areas of regional disparity will escape many of the problems associated with high energy and transportation costs. Small and medium sized firms are far more likely to make permanent contributions to regional development than are world scale plants, and that will be a benefit conferred by our proposals for small and medium sized business.

Another positive suggestion is that small business feels the weight of government regulation and paperwork far more than larger companies which can afford the armies of lawyers and accountants required for compliance. This administration has announced its intention of reducing the burden of regulation upon business. There is even some scant evidence that an effort is being made to reduce the paperwork burden. But in the meantime, government imposes costs upon business—costs which fall most heavily upon the owner managed sector.

Our party has proposed that there be a tax rebate for small businessmen who must cope with federal government paperwork. The rebate would only be a token amount in terms of the costs imposed, but it would involve a financial recognition of the costs the public bureaucracy imposes upon small firms, and, more importantly, it would provide a financial incentive for the federal government to reduce its paperwork.

Another point is investment incentive credit. All Canadians should be encouraged to invest in small and medium sized business. Larger corporations can afford to pay interest on bonds or dividends on equity. Those who purchase these instruments can take advantage of an interest income deduction or a dividend tax credit. No such treatment is available to investors in a small business, simply because the average small business is in no position to sell stocks or issue bonds. Anyone who has seen what is required for that kind of thing knows that small business cannot handle it. A small businessman gets his money from his own resources, his friends, his neighbours, local lawyers, doctors or often from his mother-in-law, but those creditors may not get their money back for years, if at all. Why should these people who invest in Canada's future—not people who buy stocks or bonds—not get a tax break as well? Our party suggests that they should and that at the very least the investor in a small business should get the same tax break as an investor in a large corporation.

Since 1972 our party has pressed for an investment credit scheme. An investment credit should be available to any Canadian citizen who makes a direct investment in the equity of a Canadian owned, small owner-managed business. The credit, which could amount to 50 per cent of the value of a qualified investment up to a maximum of $5,000 per year, should either be offset against an individual's income tax for the year or rebated directly to him. Qualifying investments should include direct participation in proprietorship or partnership as well as investment in the new equity offerings of medium sized corporations. I cannot help but feel that this last proposal would have a profound effect on small businesses, especially in the outlying areas of the country.

If the small businessman had unlimited funds, there would be fewer tax problems for him to worry about. He could indulge in investment in multiple corporations, offshore vehicles, sophisticated annuities and capital reorganizations. He could set aside days to confer with tax assessors, supervisors, and valuators of Revenue Canada, locally and in Ottawa, only to find that simple solutions are no longer available.

The small businessman or woman fights survival in an age of technocracy where the majority of politicians do not comprehend the complexity of the laws they pass. Today if you enter into any unusual business deal without advice, you are often in very heavy tax trouble. Getting advice brings the realization that a person involved with small business must have lawyers, C.A.'s and insurance people who specialize in tax laws and that the general practitioner in these fields can no longer provide all the answers. The small businessman finds that soaring professional costs, because of the increased time which now must be spent on these things, have no return.

Above all, the small businessman finds uncertainty. He is asked to make certain decisions with regard to his future and that of his family, to reorganize, to pay out fees, and pay out thousands of dollars for insurance, valuations and trust companies, all essentially costly and nonproductive. He has no guarantee that solutions will work, that the government will agree or that laws mean what they seem to mean, let alone that laws will not radically change in future years.

It is far easier in tax planning for him to remain with as simple a structure as possible and to sacrifice tomorrow's future tax advantage for today's uncertainty. So he puts off adding that addition to the factory. He puts off buying that piece of equipment which would employ four or five more people. He decides it is just too complicated, and his business stays the size it is. A company which is not dreaming and growing begins to fall back, and hon. members know the end of that story.

In spite of the fact that a number of brilliant specialists, in government and in the professions, revel in their ability to think of long words and legalese, the majority of tax advisers as well as Revenue Canada and the Department of Finance would prefer a simpler and more comprehensible law. The entire act should be rewritten so that it can be comprehended by the taxpayer. I am afraid that the laws today are framed in ambiguity and absurdity, which will continue to confound both judges and practitioners until corrected.

From the point of view of small business the administration of tax laws has become as critical as the laws themselves. Solutions have been suggested continually by the joint Bar-CICA taxation committee and organizations of business, but there seems to be no outward indication that the problems are being dealt with. Instead of leadership, I am afraid we have musical chairs. We have had Mr. Benson, the Minister of Industry, Trade and Commerce (Mr. Chrétien), Mr. Côté, the hon. member for Windsor West (Mr. Gray), the hon. member for York-Scarborough (Mr. Stanbury), the Minister of Justice (Mr. Basford), and the Minister of Manpower and Immigration (Mr. Cullen); and now, with all due respect, perhaps it will be different because we have a lady, the Minister of National Revenue (Miss Bégin).

Whether the problems are philosophical or whether there are problems in communications, lack of policy is critical at this point. I only hope that the government will begin to see that two things are needed. The first is a change of attitude within the tax department, and the second is an over-all long range policy for small business.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mrs. Pigott: I am going to end on a hopeful note. In April, just a month or two ago, the Minister of State (Small Business) (Mr. Marchand) spoke to the western regional newspapers' annual meeting at Banff, and in that speech he said:

> I intend to do what I can to get government off the backs of small entrepreneurs, so that they can get on with running their businesses and making a profit. Profit is not a dirty word with the federal government, and small business is too important not to get a fair shake and a fair share from Ottawa.

Those are wonderful words. I urge the minister and his colleagues to make that statement a reality.

Hon. Alvin Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): Mr. Speaker, I have listened to the debate from the very beginning today on this peculiarly opportune motion by the opposition relating to small business, and I do not think any person listening and wondering as I have been today would hesitate in saying that the latter part of the remarks of the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mrs. Pigott) put the finger on the solutions more succinctly and aptly than any other speeches made today.

Some hon. Members: Hear, hear!

Mr. Hamilton (Qu'Appelle-Moose Mountain): One of the weakest parts of the policy making of all parties in this House for 30 years has been in the field of small business, and this motion today, which focuses on this question, does a great service. There is no question that despite the federal government and all the provincial governments this is still primarily a private enterprise country. Over 50 per cent of the labour force of this country works for incorporated small businesses, and an additional percentage—the figure we never know for sure—works for unincorporated small businesses. We have that amount of the labour force working in incorporated or unincorporated small businesses—it is well over half—and we have this combination of inflation and unemployment which the economists do not know how to resolve because, according to them, it has never happened before.

The economists know nothing about history. The only thing they ever learn is what they are told by their economics professors at university. They think all wisdom came from Adam Smith, Ricardo and perhaps Keynes and, if they are "with it", from Galbraith. The fact is that economists do not know the first thing about the problems of inflation and unemployment when they arise at the same time. These subjects are so important that we cannot leave them to these people who look at the world through a long pipe.

It is obvious that the government is willing to help small business, but it is equally obvious that the government does not know how to do it. The answer, which I think was suggested better than anybody else by the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton, is that taxation is the key. Our taxation system is based on the philosophy that you have to be big to be good and that the only thing that works is economy of scale. That is what it says in the economics textbook.

The agricultural field is a small business field where literally 95 per cent of the operations are owner managed. The greatest growth in Canada since the war has been in the field of agriculture. Whereas growth across the country has averaged 2½ to 3 per cent, agriculture has maintained a growth rate of over 7 per cent.

● (2130)

The government under Mr. Pearson collected all the brains in the economic field from government, universities and private business, and all agreed that in Canada there were three times too many farmers and that the way to get efficiency was to reduce the number to one-third. All these economists agreed there was too much land in production and that the thing to do was to reduce the productive land in the prairies, the great agricultural area of Canada, to half. That was true not only in connection with farms. They had the same attitude toward small business—that there were too many of them and that we should have big business.

Every speaker on this side of the House today has brought into his remarks the characteristic of government tax law—that everything is in favour of largeness. In the case of agriculture we have the Vulcan study in Alberta and the Ontario government's study on agriculture which demonstrate beyond any argument that productivity comes at its maximum in these owner-controlled enterprises with two pairs of hands. A man and his wife, a man and his son, a man and his daughter or a man and his hired man, give the highest level of unit productivity. Because the ownership and the management of our farms are usually under one person, we have attained a growth rate in productivity of 7 per cent per year for 30 years when all other business has only averaged 2½ or 3 per cent. We have the studies to prove this in agriculture, but of course the government does not read such studies.

This government accepts the doctrine of the economists that business has to be big, so the tax law reveals how to get exemptions by adding to cost. The more people you employ, they say, the more you can deduct from income; the more expenses you incur, the more you deduct. As a result, as the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mrs. Pigott) pointed out the small businessman cannot compete because he cannot hire the accountants, tax advisers and all the other people to figure out ways to use the complicated tax laws to add to the expenses of the company so that it pays less tax. Therefore, the businessman, ipso facto, is discriminated against in the tax burden.

Now I want to say something on the positive side as well, Mr. Speaker. It is not only in agriculture or in the small business enterprise that you get innovation and productivity. Let us examine so-called big industry—the oil and gas industry. We have all heard of Imperial Oil; it is a little subsidiary of Exxon. It gets the credit for discovering Leduc in Alberta in 1947. It was not the big brains of Exxon or Imperial that discovered oil at Leduc. One lonely geologist for years fought the big boys at the top who all believed the same textbook and were wrong. He pleaded with them to look at the reef structures beneath the surface in Alberta. Because this was the last well of all, the companies that had been drilling unsuccessfully in Alberta for 20 years, as a kindness to one of their junior geologists, agreed to put a pipe on the reef field. That was the beginning of the discovery of the 50 billion barrels of oil that have fuelled Canada since. That happened because of one individual, a man who could think and who had the vision you must have to make changes. I think our whole oil and gas industry should be a monument to this man. His name is not known. Even the president of Imperial Oil, Mr. Twaites, who retired two years ago did not know about it. This man's name is forgotten except by old timers in the industry.

Now let us look at farm machinery. We have big companies that produce machinery worldwide. How many of the new improvements put on the cultivators, the ploughs, the combines, the seeders come from the big companies? Almost invariably they come from a farmer who has figured out the answer to a problem. The farmer designs the hydraulic system that makes each of his cultivator teeth stay at the same depth in the soil regardless how hard it is. Individual farmers have figured out the answer to their problems. Usually a local manufacturer tries to produce the item that makes the implement work better. Only then do the big companies come in to buy up the idea and incorporate it in their machinery.

I could go through almost all the types of things used in the productive machinery of the large corporations in the resource field across this country, whether it be mining, oil and gas, farming or the forest industry. Almost invariably it is the man who has to grapple with the problem of handling the big tree on the side of the hill who figures out how to do it. They call these people "hay wire farmers" but these are the men who are giving Canada productivity in the forest industry, the agricultural industry, the mining industry and the oil and gas industry. These are the men who develop machines to crawl across the muskeg. They are not from some foreign country but are Canadians and, I might say, most are from the farm.

This is our genius—the ability to adapt; this is our genius—the ability to work out a solution, both practical and economic. We do not have to back down one step to any nation in the world in translating fundamental scientific and engineering ideas into practical, workable machinery. Our scientists and engineers have not let us down, but there is a tremendous gap between what they do and what scientists and engineers at the government level and at universities do because we have not got the means to translate that into applied operations. Usually it is a farmer or a man working close to nature in the forest or mine who finds out something about these theories—and sometimes even without finding out, produces a new idea.

I should like to wind up my remarks with a few words about opportunity, Mr. Speaker. Never has Canada had a greater opportunity in the area of small business than today. I am not talking about the merchandising field which has been well covered today; I am talking about the small entrepreneur who produces new ideas. It is obvious that over the next 30 years we have to shift from our practice of producing raw materials without consideration for recycling or using renewable forms of raw materials. It is in this field that Canada leads the world.

If we look around to see who has done most to make it possible for us to shift smoothly to cheaper ways of producing heat and energy, we find Canada is in the lead. We owe this to our universities, the National Research Council and the practical people in the field.

A good example is the National Research Council. In Ottawa it developed a vertical windmill that runs silently. All you have to do is put an induction motor on the bottom and plug it into any outlet which will turn those two blades. Because it is in motion, a wind at two miles an hour will reverse that induction motor into a generator. This cheap little $60 motor that you could take off the bottom of your washing machine will transform that two-mile per hour wind into one of 12 miles per hour, giving three or four times more power than your house would need. Obviously it will not work when there is no wind. It produces more power than you need when there is wind but when there is no wind it does not produce enough power.

Who would be better able to produce this than the small Canadian businessman? Yet there are only two Canadian firms producing this windmill because most are only interested in producing large windmills costing $1 million or $2 million that the government will buy. The farmer, or person living on the windy hilltop or beside the lake is interested in buying one for about $3,000 with which to produce power for his home or farm. He can sell the surplus back to Ontario Hydro, Saskatchewan Hydro, B.C. Hydro, or even the Hydro Commission in Nova Scotia. Farmers understand this, because 40 years ago they all used windmills. When hydro came along and gave the farmers an alternative to the noisy, straight line propeller-driven windmills, people in rural communities began using hydro power. On windy days farmers could sell their surplus power to hydro. If the wind dropped, hydro could turn on one of its water generating plants to provide power until such time as the wind picked up again. In this way, hydro could stand by with extra generating facilities for a calm day.

This proposal could apply to between 50 per cent and 60 per cent of all Canada. I could apply to much of Quebec, parts of Ontario, certainly those communities next to lakes and rivers, and to all of the west. In the west we have more wind then you can shake a stick at. This sort of power could be cheaper than conventionally generated power, but big business will not build the facilities. It is interested in selling the machinery it is already producing.

What programs are there in Canada for encouraging small business to become involved in this enterprise? The design work has been done and prototypes of the equipment are in place. One piece of equipment has been running for years on top of the National Research Council building. Another piece has been operating for the last two years a mile or so west of Regina. The demonstration period is over. The equipment has been brought back to Ottawa. Why can we not institute a positive policy whereby Canadian business will be encouraged to produce such equipment? It is simple to reproduce. Let us make it available to the half million, or even two million homes and farmers who could use it in this country—I am not sure what the number is. But you can only do it if you accept the sort of proposal the hon. member for Ottawa-Carleton (Mrs. Piggott) made, namely give to small business some of the advantages you give to big business. Let us give small business a tax write-off. Let us give them some power of leverage, which involves part of the cost of equity and part of the cost of financing. Mr. Speaker, we lend farmers hundreds of millions of dollars and lose nothing. Farm credit is amazing. No business can meet the credit rating of a farmer on repayment. The same would hold true with regard to power generating equipment.

Second, I raise another farm-related subject, methane production. People have been producing methane for lighting and heating their homes for 6,000 years. Methane is produced mainly in warm countries. Why can we not produce it in a cold country? It is produced in universities, but I have seen only one farmer using it full time. Why cannot we encourage methane production, especially on the farm? If a farmer can raise hogs or cattle and thereby make $10,000 a year, I suggest he could make $20,000 profit with the methane produced from those animals. If he removes the methane from the animal waste, he can increase the value of its fertilizer component fourfold.

Since one ordinary herd in western Canada could produce enough methane to heat four homes, I should think the government should consider giving tax advantages to encourage methane production. They can produce methane in universities, and methane is used in a project in southern Manitoba. Of course, someone has to keep track of costs. A farmer must know what it costs him to produce methane. He, himself, will need to do much of the work, because help on the farm is hard to come by. I would think it would be a good idea to give some incentive for the production of methane.

As well, we could use the protein content of waste material. I read an article the other day saying that 21 cities in the United States are using their garbage to make money. If we could only use the protein contained in animal waste on North American farms, my God, we could generate hundreds of millions of dollars of income. The figures are in the scientific records, and they show that one ton of cow manure—if I may mention it in this august place—is worth about $3 if it is just dumped on the land. If you take the methane out, you increase its value as fertilizer—and have the benefit of the use of the methane—to $30 a ton. That same ton of manure, if it is recycled by chemical means and turned into absolutely pure cattle food meeting all the standards of the FDA, the Canadian Department of Agriculture, is worth about $140 a ton. Mr. Speaker, such enterprises ought to be under way in Canada in 500 places, and all could be making a profit. All should be paying tax on that profit. And only small business can do it, because only small business people can handle, say, the 50 tons of manure a day involved in the operation.

I tell the House all this to show that private enterprise is not dead. Private enterprise has a tremendous future. If the government thinks private enterprise consists only of very large firms and tailors our tax laws to suit these enterprises, that future cannot be ours. The men who guide the destinies of this government and believe that bigger is better on the farm, better in industry and better in merchandising are dead wrong. I believe the task force report of 1969 was dead wrong. I believe the report was monstrous and did an injustice not only to the producers of Canada but to those who want the food they produce. Yet we are ruled by a government dedicated to the proposition that we must reduce the number of farmers, and get rid of small businessmen and small farmers to boot. I say without hesitation that we are right to criticize the government for not acting as quickly as possible on the question of small business.

[Translation]

Hon. Marcel Lessard (Minister of Regional Economic Expansion): Mr. Speaker, in the remaining few minutes, I would like to comment this evening on some statements that were made today. I have had of course an opportunity to look at what was said by some members here about the federal government's small business policy. Of course they enjoyed referring to what should have been done rather than what has been done. It is quite normal that the opposition criticize the government, especially of course on allotted days.

But if we examine the subject of today's debate and the wording of the non-confidence motion, I suggest we find little there of real substance. The hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek), who was responsible for today's debate, did not deem fit to remain very long in this House to hear what his colleagues had to say, or what other opposition members would add to his remarks. I submit, Mr. Speaker, that he did not put forward proposals that could bring any change for the small business community.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to differentiate as far as small businesses are concerned. There are two kinds of firms in my view: Those that produce goods as such, and they alone add real value. On the other hand, there are firms that deal in trade as such, and they also are headed by businessmen. The latter of course are needed, and I recognize the value of their services to the community, but there is a basic difference in that they add no value as such to the goods they handle. They add to the cost, of course, because their services in warehousing and merchandizing goods made by the other sector, the manufacturing sector, entails costs, and those costs are passed on to the consumer.

Admittedly, their services are needed. But there is a difference, Mr. Speaker, because what is adding actual value to the goods is the small processing, manufacturing industry in Canada. That is the one we must help the most. Of course, we need the one that is active in the commercial aspect of business, but it can easily take off and prosper when the market and the demand exist, when the consumers exist and they have the money to spend; but, with production, the matter is much more complex, Mr. Speaker, because it requires initiatives; the risks are greater, it takes more capital and technological know-how. And that is not easily found everywhere.

That is why the government must, through its policy, preferably encourage those people who are in the manufacturing and processing industry. That is why we have a plethora of government measures, under the Departments of Industry, Trade and Commerce, of Finance, and ours, the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, and also the new one entrusted to the hon. member for Kamploops-Cariboo (Mr. Marchand), Minister of State for Small Business. Those are four government departments which help small businesses specially, among other responsibilities, of course.

Take the Department of Regional Economic Expansion, for instance: 80 per cent of all companies we help are small manufacturing or processing industries, which get financial assistance either through direct grants or loans, or loan guarantees to help them start out in business, to expand or even modernize their operations. The government has several programs. There is the technological research program, which provides various forms of help from the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce. When I hear hon. members of the opposition say those are not good enough, I would appreciate their being much more specific about what new forms of assistance there could be. They talk of help through tax exemptions: we have had, for years, what is known as investment tax credit.

Small businesses, large businesses and even farms are eligible for tax exemption, assistance plan or tax credit which is available to help them in their investments. I cannot understand how members of the opposition can stand up in the House and state categorically that the federal government does not help small business. We also consult small businessmen, we have consultations and meetings with them, and they tell us what they need, what is wrong with the present system, what they would like to see changed in our laws and regulations. For instance they told us that they would like to see better consistency between the various programs of the government, a reduction in the number of forms and reports they have to fill in, and we are doing that now, because it meets their needs. We have made funds available to them.

There is the Small Businesses Loans Act, research is available to them, there is also assistance to prospection for foreign markets, one federal agency gives them credit guarantees and export credits. Here in Ottawa, we have devised a variety of schemes offered to all businesses, small, medium or large, to help them do business and I cannot see why it should be necessary to add any others as it has been suggested. Our economic system is going through a difficult time. The demand is not as strong as one would hope, because in Canada during the last few years, due to a feeling of uncertainty, people have chosen to save more, and reports that we regularly receive each month indicate that Canadian savings are highest ever. One can therefore predict, Mr. Speaker, that with the return of a certain degree of confidence within the public at large, purchases will increase, the general demand will grow and manufacturing businesses will regain those customers they had lost, and this will necessarily put them in a position to make greater profits.

One could elaborate on this, Mr. Speaker, but I would rather say a word about what our department has been doing lately particularly towards helping small businesses. We had been told that there were a lot of talented people in certain areas, numerous individuals with no lack of initiative who had excellent projects which they could not launch because they did not have the necessary funds with which to get those small units started. During the past few months our department started a special experimental program designed to assist the kinds of entrepreneurs who did not have the wherewithal to get their small businesses off the ground. We have offered them direct subsidies, additional financing and some technical assistance. This program seems to be making a headway and encountering a lot of success particularly in New Brunswick where it has literally been extended to all that province. Mr. Speaker, within the coming months I am definitely planning on trying this program in other parts of Canada, in other provinces, because this is a way of helping those small entrepreneurs rich in ideas and creativity who have been able to determine certain needs in the market and who have a keen feeling for innovation, mainly in order that they be able to create new products, new types of goods which will answer the needs of consumers, be they Canadian or foreign consumers likely to import their products.

I would like to conclude by saying that the government is well aware of the need of small businesses for constant support. We are ready to consider any serious and substantial suggestion likely to help small businesses, but it is certainly not during a debate of this type, it is surely not by reading the speeches made in this House that small businesses will feel reassured because even though the speeches made today contain many ideas, they contain even more contradictions. I do not think that this is the way to reassure small businesses.

Mr. Speaker, I see that your patience is at an end. I shall not abuse it any longer except to say that the opposition did not necessarily gain anything today by attacking the small businesses assistance policy of the government. I believe that results speak for themselves. The government has the support of small businesses and small businessmen and this is why it will long continue to have the confidence of Canadians.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. It being ten o'clock, it is my duty to inform the House that under the provisions of Standing Order 58(11), proceedings on the motion of the hon. member for High Park-Humber Valley (Mr. Jelinek) have expired.

Adjournment Debate

PROCEEDINGS ON ADJOURNMENT MOTION

[English]

A motion to adjourn the House under Standing Order 40 deemed to have been moved.

AIRPORTS—MIRABEL AND DORVAL—REASON REVENUE NOT RECEIVED FROM HOST RENT-A-CAR

Mr. Don Mazankowski (Vegreville): Mr. Speaker, on May 24 in reply to a question I directed to the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) he confirmed in his own indirect way that his department was not receiving revenues on a monthly basis from Host Rent-a-Car at the Quebec City, Dorval and Mirabel airports due to the fact that Host, to quote the minister, "has not yet received a licence from the province of Quebec". That is reported at page 5880 of Hansard. The car rental concession contracts have been in effect since November 1, 1976 but in the case of Host at these airports no revenue has been coming in. To go back to this fiasco of the ministry's handling of car rental concessions at international airports, we note that included in the tender package which the departmental officials gave the applicants at the time tenders were called there was a section dealing with terms and conditions which included, under "Licences, permits, etc." the following:

● (2200)

The lessee shall procure and maintain at the cost and expense of the lessee such licences, permits or approvals from federal, provincial, municipal or other government authorities and such private permits as may be necessary to enable the lessee to furnish the services and to conduct the operations provided for in this agreement.

The car rental concession operators at the departments airports in Quebec must by law obtain a licence from the Quebec government in order to operate their cars outside the confines of the airports. I am informed that Host Rent-a-Car applied to the Quebec transport board for a licence in January of 1977. It is interesting to note that Host was awarded the tender in October, 1976. On June 6, I am told, there will be a hearing or a roll-call at which a date will be decided upon to hear Host's application. It has been challenged by several existing operators at the Quebec airports on the basis that the entry of Host into this limited market will increase competition unduly.

Several questions arise as a result of this particular contract. First, why did Host apply so late for the Quebec licence? Assuming the Host contract was signed and is to be valid for three years, one must ask whether the department's legal branch was aware that paragraph 13 of the agreement which I quoted earlier was not complied with. One might ask whether the legal branch was aware of all the activities in this area undertaken by the department's marketing branch.

Assuming the contract was not signed, which one would doubt, one must ask what is happening in the present situation. We know that Host, which is ranked third at all airports where it won the tender, came in first place in the domestic category and in third place in the overall ranking. The three divisions are open, domestic and local. It now sits empty at these airports in Quebec. Tilden, which is now in fourth place, sits beside an empty counter and it is no secret than Tilden covets third place at the Quebec airports. Since the minister announced the details of the new airport car rental policy on June 13 the situation has been a total fiasco. It is certainly indicative of the incompetent and shabby manner in which the government has dealt with other issues. It has certainly not handled this policy in a competent way.

A number of questions have been raised in the House by supporters of the government as to the manner in which these particular contracts are awarded and administered. There was an appeal from the Committee for an Independent Canada, for example.

[The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier).]

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. I regret to interrupt the hon. member, but his allotted time has expired.

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, on listening to the question from my colleague, the hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski), I think he has answered in part his own question by explaining in detail the regulations for obtaining a licence to operate a rent-a-car business in the province of Quebec. He asked why the application to the Quebec Board was made in February and not in January. This question could be put to Host Rent-a-Car because they should have known, before submitting their application to the federal agency, that they should go to the provincial transport commission to obtain a permit from the province of Quebec. They did not do that, it seems, before February.

Mr. Mazankowski: Why was the contract awarded, then?

Mr. Dupras: It is up to the applicant to make sure he has such a permit.

Mr. Mazankowski: It is up to the Department of Transport.

Mr. Dupras: It is not up to the transport board or the department to ascertain whether an applicant has a permit or not. It is up to the applicant to make sure he has such a permit. They failed to do that before February. The hon. member has answered his question. Host Rent-a-Car have been unable to obtain a licence as yet, but nevertheless they have executed their concession agreements for these airports. As a result, they are responsible for the payment of all concession fees.

Mr. Mazankowski: What was the Department of Transport doing all this time?

Mr. Dupras: They are also reponsible for the rentals required by the terms of these agreements. Actions are being taken to ensure that Host Rent-a-Car complies with these agreements.

Mr. Mazankowski: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of order.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): I regret to inform any hon. member that at this time no point of order can be accepted.

Mr. Mazankowski: I wanted to indicate to the House that I was only allowed five minutes and 48 seconds to present my case.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The hon. member for Saskatoon-Biggar (Mr. Hnatyshyn).

ATOMIC ENERGY OF CANADA LIMITED—STATEMENT CONCERNING ESTABLISHMENT OF PLANT TO PRODUCE PLUTONIUM—GOVERNMENT ACTION

Mr. Ray Hnatyshyn (Saskatoon-Biggar): Mr. Speaker, in the seven minutes I have available to me—

Mr. Mazankowski: And not five minutes and 48 seconds.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: —I wanted to raise a question this evening with respect to a rather strange difference of opinion, according to reports which we are receiving both in the House and outside the House, which exists between Atomic Energy of Canada, Ltd. and the government of Canada. Today I asked a question of the Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) with respect to statements by senior officials of AECL. Questions were raised by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham (Mr. Lawrence) and questions were raised in the course of the press conference which the Prime Minister holds on a weekly basis. The Prime Minister in his answers appears to take the position that no commitment was made with respect to the construction of a plutonium reprocessing plant in Ontario.

I would like to refer to the debate on the question which was raised by my colleague on May 26, 1977, as reported in Hansard at page 5958, which reads:

> In view of the previously expressed government policy, expressed by the Prime Minister himself in this House as late as May 17 last, relating to the undesirability of having in Canada or anywhere in the world plutonium reprocessing plants, I ask, why is the government permitting AECL, a Crown corporation, to engage in an expensive study for the building of a $1.5 billion plutonium extraction plant in Ontario?

The Prime Minister in his response indicated, in effect, that the matter was still under consideration; but he was pressed by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham who quoted the Prime Minister as saying on May 12 last:

● (2210)

> "Much of our safeguards position centres around the undesirability of having reprocessing plants. President Carter was stating the view we had already stated many times".

That is the Prime Minister's statement quoted by the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham. Subsequently he was asked by the same hon. member whether or not the news we hear about the plant are true, and the Prime Minister said he was going to check with the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie) to determine exactly what was the situation.

At the press conference later in the day the Prime Minister was asked the following question by one of the participants:

> You seemed a bit taken aback in the Commons today when you were asked about reprocessing of nuclear wastes in Ontario. Have you now got clarificaton and can you now give a clear statement that there will not be reprocessing of nuclear material and the making of plutonium in Ontario?

The Prime Minister sloughed off that question by simply saying there was misinformation, that the question was not an accurate statement of the facts and that the matter is still under consideration.

After all this has taken place, we have the unusual prospect of senior officials of AECL coming forward at a press conference called by themselves and stating that they think it would be inappropriate to draw plans for a pilot plutonium plant despite government opposition. As quoted at this press conference the officials said:

> . . . this policy was "out of kilter" with the need to extend uranium resources by reclycling spent fuel into plutonium, which could then be used with thorium to generate more power in existing Canadian reactors.

I go along with my colleague, the hon. member for Northumberland-Durham, that there seems to be a distinct contradiction between the position taken by AECL and taken by the government both inside and outside the House.

What I would like the parliamentary secretary to tell us tonight is precisely what is the government's policy with respect to this matter, why is there a contradiction, and what is the responsibility of the minister with respect to the position taken by AECL, a Crown corporation which has been in the news quite a bit recently with respect to unilateral decision-making, without cabinet or ministerial consultation.

I need only talk about the question of the payment of agent's fees in foreign countries for the sale of CANDU reactors. So far as I can make out, the cabinet was completely oblivious to what was going on, not considering it to be a type of policy worthy of cabinet consideration. That seems to be the tendency in this government. They think that by virtue of the delegation of responsibilities to Crown corporations in important policy areas they are somehow absolved of any responsibility on matters of great importance to present and future generations of Canadians.

In my view this is an untenable position for the government to take. If they are not on top of the issues, they are simply being derelict in their duties. I think the parliamentary secretary has the responsibility to tell us whether these officials in the Crown corporations consult the government on policy decisions or whether this government simply allows them to make our nuclear policy without any responsibility or accountability. We know what the examples have been when the AECL has come before the Standing Committee on Public Accounts to answer questions regarding what has happened in their foreign transactions involving CANDU reactors. They have not co-operated as they should have in a committee of the House. I think the parliamentary secretary should give us some explanation of what the relationship is between the minister and officials of AECL with respect to policy in this important area.

Adjournment Debate

Mr. Maurice Dupras (Parliamentary Secretary to Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources): Mr. Speaker, that is exactly what I will attempt to do. I will attempt to give my hon. colleague an answer which I hope will satisfy him.

AECL held a background briefing for the press on May 27 for the purpose of releasing a document commenting on the brief presented earlier that day by the Coalition for Nuclear Responsibility to the Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources (Mr. Gillespie). At the AECL briefing questions were asked regarding news reports of the February 28 AECL seminar for federal government officials. To clarify the position, the following facts were made clear to the reporters present.

The "once through" cycle in today's CANDU reactors uses natural uranium which is not a weapons usable material. When the fuel is taken out of the reactor, it contains plutonium which is a weapons usable material, but this is widely dispersed throughout the spent fuel, and in the dilute form it presents no risk of diversion and is in any event so radioactive that theft is impossible.

It has always been recognized that uranium supplies are limited and that, if full use of the fission process is to be made, other cycles than "once through" must be employed. Most of the countries with advanced nuclear programs therefore have embarked on programs to extract the plutonium from used fuel and re-use it in a fast reactor; for example, one which burns plutonium and at the same time generates more plutonium which can be extracted and made into more fuel. The United States has now deferred further work on the commercial development of this system on the ground that the existence of weapons usable material in quantity and in numerous places could lead to misuse for weapons purposes.

Canada has no need ever to develop a plutonium fuelled fast breeder reactor, as the CANDU reactor in its present cycle makes more efficient use of uranium than the other types of reactors in use and also has the ability to utilize a thorium cycle with a near breeder capability. Thorium is even more abundant than uranium in the earth's crust. It cannot be used directly for fuel as uranium is, but it can be made into a fuel by putting it into a reactor along with a few per cent of enriched uranium or plutonium which then energizes the thorium to make it a nuclear fuel.

There is a misconception that the U.S. government has withdrawn all support for fuel cycle development. At his press conference of April 7, 1977, President Carter laid down the following policy:

> We will continue research and development, but shift away from plutonium, defer dependence on the breeder reactor for commercial use.
> We will direct funding of U.S. nuclear research and development programs to accelerate our research into alternative nuclear fuel cycles which do not involve direct access to materials that can be used for nuclear weapons.

One such cycle which is attracting the attention of the U.S. is the CANDU thorium cycle. We expect to be working closely with the U.S. to examine ways of exploiting the benefits of this new resource, thorium, while minimizing the potential for diversion of weapons usable material.

I hope I have reassured the hon. member on the use of plutonium and thorium.

Mr. Hnatyshyn: Regretfully, no.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Ethier): Order, please. The motion to adjourn the House is now deemed to have been adopted. Accordingly, this House stands adjourned until tomorrow at 11 a.m.

Motion agreed to and the House adjourned at 10.20 p.m.

AIR CANADA ACT, 1976

MEASURE RESPECTING REORGANIZATION OF AIR CANADA

The House resumed from Friday, May 27, consideration of the motion of Mr. Lang that Bill C-17, respecting the reorganization of Air Canada, be read the second time and referred to the Standing Committee on Transport and Communications.

Mr. Arnold Malone (Battle River): Mr. Speaker, I began speaking on Bill C-17 on Friday, May 27, and I consider the present opportunity to continue my remarks a privilege. I am pleased to speak this morning, but was not pleased to note the contents of Bill C-17 dealing with the reorganization of Air Canada. The bill would give the cabinet almost total control of Air Canada, and this raises some serious questions. Since many of us doubt this government's capacity to govern, we must ask, what will be the future of Air Canada? One could not ask this question at a more appropriate time, since this year Air Canada celebrates the fortieth year of its founding. Now the government, as precipitate as an unguided missile, wants to remove Air Canada from the control of CNR. It is on a false course. The government says it will rid Air Canada of its debt load; in other words, it is responding to what Air Canada officials have not been saying, that the airline could make a profit if relieved of the burden of debt. But that is the song of many Crown corporations: they say, "We could make a profit if only we could be free of the rules governing private industry". They want the taxpayer to assume their debts, or their interest charges. They say that if only they were relieved of those burdens, they could make a profit. I shall put before the House figures to show that Air Canada is operating at a loss, and at the same time operating under rules and conditions not available to any other private air carrier on this continent.

Bill C-17 is designed to relieve Air Canada of its debt carrying charges and to give the governor in council direct control of the airline. It is the opinion of Air Canada officials that the airline could show a profit if it were relieved of interest charges on debt. This is just another example of a Crown corporation telling Canadians it could compete with private industry if only it were not forced to abide by the rules governing the private sector. In truth, Air Canada has a heavy debt load for one good reason, gross mismanagement. The former minister of transport, Hon. Jean Marchand, surely must have had Air Canada in mind when he said the Department of Transport was in a mess.

Air Canada has been awarded the most lucrative routes in this country. I am thinking, for example, of the Toronto-Ottawa-Montreal triangle. Many members of parliament fly one of these routes almost weekly and they cannot help observing, I suggest, that flights in the Toronto-Ottawa-Montreal triangle are virtually filled. Yet on those very flights Air Canada managed to lose almost $19 million last year, for some unknown reason. The aircraft were full, but the airline managed to lose money. I say without hesitation that Air Canada robs one of our major private airlines, CP Air, of the opportunity for lucrative runs in this country. Air Canada lost $19 million on the Toronto-Ottawa-Montreal triangle. CP Air also lost money in the last two years. But we should note two things. The amount of loss was not nearly as significant as Air Canada's. Also, CP Air has been awarded less lucrative routes in Canada, whereas Air Canada has been awarded more lucrative runs from which it should show a profit, not a loss. It lost more money than CP Air.

Compare Air Canada's performance, Mr. Speaker, with that of any major United States airline. What will you find? You will note that virtually every major United States airline made a profit last year. By contrast, Canada's national airline last year ran up some $20 million of debt; and that debt does not include losses incurred with respect to the operation of our airports. If you add our airport debt to that incurred by Air Canada, lump the two together and call them Canada's national air debt, you will arrive at an astronomical figure. Mirabel alone lost $56 million last year. This country lost $110 million on that abortion at Pickering, on that project which put public money through a paper-shredder. The authorities attempted to build an airport where one should never have been built. Our airports have lost millions of dollars. That raises this question: If the government has not the capacity to run airports, has it the capacity to run an airline?

Bill C-17 would vest control of Air Canada in the government. The intention is to sever the airline from its parent Crown corporation, CNR, and place it under the direct control of the Ministry of Transport. Mr. Speaker, a decade ago this country's Post Office showed a profit. Last year the Post Office spilled public money, running up a deficit of $700 million. If one compares the record of Crown corporations, of government administered businesses, with that of corporations in the private sector, one thing becomes clear: their performance is in no way comparable. In almost all instances Crown corporations have run up losses. They have been an albatross around the neck of the taxpayers.

If a private company loses money for an extended time, it goes out of business or is taken over by a competitor. The Post Office managed to turn its previous profit into a loss last year of $700 million. The question is: Do we want the mentality which runs the Post Office to run the operation of this nation's airline? Is that how we want our airline administered? At present, the prospect of an ugly Post Office strike looms like a shadow over the public. There is also the prospect of a Post Office deficit larger than last year's $700 million. In years to come the Post Office could lose much more money. We have in this country some 1,200 state-owned businesses which cost this country's taxpayers $21 billion. Since our population is around 23 million, it is fairly simple to calculate how much it costs the average Canadian to run these state-owned businesses in Canada.

While Air Canada is a malignant debt on the public, the United States airlines south of the border operate at a profit and with better service. It is also interesting to note that in the United States luggage usually arrives on the same plane as the person. Northwestern Airlines, a privately-owned United States company with a similar amount of capital, a similar number of planes and a similar number of miles flown on routes as Air Canada, earned a profit last year of $100 million. By comparison, Air Canada in that same period showed a net loss of $20 million. As I said before, it is simply an albatross around the neck of the Canadian people.

The big difference between Air Canada and Northwest Airlines in the United States is that Air Canada has almost double the staff. That reflects the crux of the whole issue. When you think of the psychological mentality of the civil servants, or the staff in the Crown corporations, you see that their reward is quite different from that of the private sector. When you work in the public service you are rewarded for dreaming up a new idea. If that idea means that somehow more money can be spent, you are rewarded. That is how you get to go from a clerk 1 to a clerk 2 to clerk 3 to clerk 5. That is the way you go up in the branch from supervisor to director to associate deputy minister and on through the chain of command.

In the private sector, there is a very different kind of reward. In the private sector you must demonstrate some form of efficiency in order to work your way up. So it is that on one hand we have an airline virtually the same size, with the same capital investment, the same number of miles flown, and the same number of planes as Air Canada, with a $100 million profit while the state-owned Air Canada has a $20 million deficit hanging around its neck.

This makes us wonder about the whole question of government getting more and more deeply into the private sector, which Bill C-17 intends to do with Air Canada by putting it under direct control of the cabinet. One truly has to ponder the wisdom of that when you look at the $8 billion committed to the PetroCan nightmare. Imagine the full intent of the government of Canada running the grease-racks of this nation, intending to be a gasoline jockey. It is another example of an exorbitant imagination run wild with the taxpayers' purse. What they should be doing is giving incentives to the search for new sources of hydrocarbon energy. While that is necessary in this country, they established a company called PetroCan which has the capacity to go all the way to the street level, setting up service stations called PetroCanada.

We now have the potential of government-owned gasoline stations operating the corner gasoline service bars. The simple question is often put: Will gasoline stations now be run like the Post Office? The fundamental question has to be: Does the government, by the very nature of its claim of motivation, have the capacity to be able to operate something in an efficient and jurisprudent manner? When the government thinks up a new airport, it in fact thinks up a new debt. Pickering ran up a $110 million debt and ran it through the paper-shredder. We look at Mirabel and Pickering airports which are, respectively, 88,000 and 18,000 acres of prime agricultural land that have been destroyed in this country. This is simply because of a lack of foresight by those in the transportation department who plan the airport sites. I cannot pass by that comment without mentioning that virtually all across Canada, wherever an airport has been set down it has destroyed large tracts of agricultural land. The airport in Edmonton, Alberta, is built on some of this country's highest quality soil.

As a smaller example, but a very important one, for the satellite airport north of Edmonton, at Villeneuve, there were three sites chosen as being acceptable. They narrowed the three sites down to two. In one of the remaining two they noted that the 4,145 acres recommended for the airport site was on class five and class six soil. I might add that class six soil implies non-improvable, permanent pasture. The other was 45 per cent class one and 50 percent class two soil. In other words the finest classes of soil that we have in this country. The only difference was that one site, the one with the better class soil, was three miles closer to the city. As can be imagined, the Department of Transport, in its wisdom, opted for the site with the highest quality soil, regardless of the fact that Canada today is a net importer of food, coupled with the fact that there are only two sources of food in this world, soil and water. It should be pointed out that today in Canada we are very rapidly destroying our agricultural land. One of the prime sources of that is airport development, industrial development, much of which is linked to transport systems, and certainly airports and airport byways.

The highest growth rate of Air Canada has to be its debt load. If you look at an analysis of the statistics on various bits of information that come out of Air Canada, you will see that nothing in recent years has had a higher percentage increase than the debt and debt interest load of that particular business. We have a bill before the House now asking us to free the debt charges and to put Air Canada under more direct control of the Department of Transport. We have to question very strongly the wisdom of such a move in view of the past record of this government. Almost any Crown corporation we want to examine shows that the net result is a net loss.

If we compare the Crown corporations with the private sector in not only this country but in the United States and other countries where there are industries of comparable size and capital input, we see that in virtually every case the Crown corporation operates at less profit or—and this is so in the majority of cases—at a net loss. The Prime Minister (Mr. Trudeau) something in excess of a year ago told the Canadian people that the market place no longer works. I suspect there is probably some degree of truth in that statement because he has interfered with the rules of the marketplace.

When speaking on Bill C-17, the Minister of Transport (Mr. Lang) said that this bill will allow for more direct government control over Air Canada. Naturally we are not going to have the situation where the marketplace is going to work. The government is moving more and more into direct competition, stealing the routes from the private sector such as CP Air.

I heard the voices of the NDP shouting across the chamber a few moments ago when talking about CP Air. It is true that CP Air did operate at a loss. One of the major reasons was that Air Canada stole the most lucrative routes, leaving the shavings for the private sector. That is the major reason we do not have a profitable airline industry in this country such as we see in the United States.

We have to wonder about how the government can run an airline, when we do not even have the respective efficiency coming from the minister. The Minister of Transport did not mind spending $750,000 a year for private jets "Lang Air" tripping across the nation. This is the same minister who wants to run the whole airline, picking up the debt for the airports, for the airplanes, the whole works.

● (1130)

We note the story in the Montreal Gazette that Canadian Pacific may have to sell its air operation. One of the reasons it may have to sell that air operation I have already alluded to, and that is the fact that by the very way in which the Transport Commission in this country establishes air routes it is a known fact to any one who has investigated this situation that CP Air does not operate on the same kind of lucrative routes as Air Canada. If anyone doubts that, I challenge them to travel the triangle from Montreal to Toronto to Ottawa and note that virtually every time you board a plane those planes are running at full capacity.

If any other private sector airline were to operate at such a lucrative capacity in such a lucrative region, they would turn an enormous profit. Yet in that very region just a year ago Air Canada lost $19 million of the taxpayers' money. It goes back to a comparison between Air Canada and Northwest Airlines, two airlines of similar size, and what do we see? On the one hand we see a private sector airline operating at a $100 million profit, and Air Canada operating at a $20 million deficit. That is the kind of difference we have because in Canada the distinguishing fact is that Air Canada has double the staff. That is the nature of the public service. The public service has a tendency to have a malignant growth upon itself. As a new person develops a new idea, it requires another person to develop the idea, who in turn develops a new idea. The first thing you know, you have a staff out of control. That is true of the whole bureaucracy here in Ottawa; we have witnessed in the past eight to ten years something like a 360 per cent increase in federal government expenditures for the staffing of the public service.

I concede that part of the reason for loss is that we have had some major increases in fuel costs. But that does not take away from the fact that there are airlines companies in the world with the same increases in fuel costs which are operating at a profit. I think what it does point out, however, is that if fuel costs is one of the excuses Air Canada is going to use for its loss situation, then one of the things the government ought to be doing now is coming forward with a program for the discovery of new sources of energy so that we do not have to have the high debt overload on transportation. The other fact that should have been woven into this whole scheme of things is that the government, in its lack of wisdom, chose to toss out support for urban transportation, something that had it gone ahead with in its 1974 election promise to such cities as Vancouver, Toronto, Montreal and other major cities, there would have been a great step forward in terms of fuel economy and fuel saving. In the long run, this would have left more hydrocarbon fuel available for those instruments of transportation that in fact require that kind of fuel, such as airlines and so forth.

Air Canada, then, we see, has twice the staff of its counterpart airlines. While we have used the one example of Northwest Airlines, a similar comparison could be made with numerous other airlines throughout the world. I would simply say that if Orville and Wilbur Wright were here, they certainly would be aghast to see what is happening to the airline industry, noticing that it has been requested to go under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Transport which really, in its lack of wisdom, has not had the capacity to manage anything and show an operational profit.

In conclusion, I think the one thing we can say about Bill C-17 is that its only sure guarantee is that there is going to be an ever-increasing tax burden upon the Canadian public for flight services in this country, because it is not going to be possible to operate an airline to demonstrate efficiency as long as it comes under the direction of governor in council kind of direction, because it will have a lack of direction in its policies, and I think the government is moving in precisely the opposite direction to where it ought to be going. It is diametrically opposed to what it ought to be doing. Air Canada was previously under the jurisdiction of the CNR and, if anything, what it ought to have been told to do was to get even a step further remote from government and to demonstrate it could operate its lines at an efficient cost.

That does not mean, of course, for a single moment, should someone on the other side intend to respond by saying that would mean that certain communities are not serviced, because we know that previously there have been airlines in Canada, not Air Canada, servicing Frobisher Bay and all parts of the Arctic. These have been privately-owned airlines. More recently, while PWA has been taken over by the province of Alberta, the fact remains that that airline operates very much on business principles, is much more remote from government itself and has in fact demonstrated, and continues to demonstrate, that it is an airline which can operate at a profit.

Air Canada, it is now being suggested, should come under the direct thumb of government, and all we are about to witness is a guaranteed loss of taxpayers' funds because the whole modus of government is different from that of the private sector. It is just another example of running at full speed 180 degrees in the opposite direction to what a sensible policy should have been. The government will not, in the years to come, be able to look back and show any kind of benefit at all from this most unfortunate bill which has been placed before the Commons.

Mr. Lang: You did not read my speech.

Mr. Malone: I have read your speech, sir. It was tough reading, but I got through it. It does not make very much sense. We will let the minister speak now, because he has some challenges he needs to respond to. I shall be pleased to see whether he has the courage to do so.

Mr. J. P. Nowlan (Annapolis Valley): Mr. Speaker, I am glad to participate in the second reading debate on Bill C-17, the Air Canada Act. It is most appropriate that at long last we should have before us a bill dealing specifically with Air Canada, particularly in view of the fact that this, I gather, is the fortieth anniversary of the creation of Air Canada. So it is a sort of birthday present, in a sense, to Air Canada or to the taxpayers of Canada; I am not sure which.

When I had birthdays years ago, before I stopped counting them, there was always a glorious cake with icing and, sometimes, little tokens in the cake. Sometimes you bit your teeth on them, but you hoped to get a token or a trinket. In view of the fact that we are debating this bill today under the rule which restricts the length of speeches and, ironically, at a time when the Transport Committee is on tour in Atlantic Canada dealing particularly with ports in Atlantic Canada, it may not be possible to get far below the frosting on the cake to see what the trinkets and tokens are in the cake until the measure goes to committee.

I understand there is some disposition to move this bill on to committee, and I also understand from my hon. friend from Battle River (Mr. Malone) that the minister earlier, vaguely in public but perhaps more substantively in private, gave some assurances that amendments will be made in committee which hopefully will take care of some of the objections raised to this bill.

Bill C-17 represents really the first fundamental change in the structure of Air Canada since 1937. Perhaps more relevant than this is the fact that the officials of Air Canada have not appeared before the transportation committee since 1973, which is another reason why this bill should move quickly into committee. Many matters should be ventilated. We are all aware of the recent royal commission on the financial arrangements of Air Canada and the report of Judge Estey, which raises many questions which have to be answered and which this bill fails to answer. In fact, in some areas the bill seems almost to avoid definite recommendations made by Judge Estey.

As many have said, this is the fortieth anniversary of Air Canada, the national flagship of this country. In the past, Air Canada has earned in a most objective way more praise and kudos than any objective observer can claim it earns today. A few years ago, when I was almost knee high to a grasshopper, I heard it said that Trans-Canada Airlines, as it was then, was one of the best airlines in the air but often was the despair of those on the ground in regard to personnel relations and service. For example, it was said you could not get information from the airline, and there were many other areas of customer and personnel discontent. Its safety record has been one of the best in the world. Any debate about Air Canada either in the House or in committee must acknowledge that tremendous credit is due and tribute should be paid to the professionals in Air Canada who have maintained this fantastically high safety record which, as I say, compares most favourably with that of any other airline.

Perhaps one of the dangers I see in the bill is that it almost contradicts some of the recommendations made by Judge Estey to alter the structure of Air Canada so as to make it more independent and more professional. As others have said, rather than make Air Canada more professional this bill potentially could make it more political. I do not think any hon. member would agree that the professionalism of Air Canada should be subordinated to political matters which could affect adversely the enviable record of professionalism which Air Canada has in the air.

I am not going into some of the topical questions which have to be debated and assessed. I am not going to talk about control of Air Canada, a matter which this House will eventually have to deal with. I am talking about the very structure of Air Canada in terms of its management and administration. One can trace on a graph just what happened when the present government changed the administrative structure of Air Canada. Although we were very conscious of the bicultural nature of Canada, almost out of the blue the government decided to appoint not only a chairman of the board but a president-executive officer of the company. Prior thereto one officer, in effect, directed the affairs of Air Canada. Although there must always be ministerial responsibility in terms of definition of national policy, he was the person to whom we looked to run Air Canada, just as we knew who was running Canadian Pacific. Today Air Canada is one of the major corporations in the country.

As I say, only a few years ago Air Canada's structure was changed and two executive offices were created. I would suggest—and I do so objectively—that some of the problems of morale and confusion in transmitting directions to those further down the totem pole can be traced to those appointments, let alone some of the events which occurred afterwards when there was almost a housecleaning among a lot of competent senior officers in Air Canada. In the result, a whole pyramid of vice-presidents of this and vice-presidents of that was created which diluted the central executive command which theretofore had pretty well been under the control of one man who ran a corporation Canadians were proud of.

Looking at Bill C-17, Mr. Speaker, I am afraid that we are now compounding the problem. Instead of having just the chairman of the board—whatever his duties will be, frankly, is somewhat vague—and/or the president-executive officer of the company, whatever his duties may be, it is clear from the bill that you are adding a third party, the governor in council, who is really the minister.

You and I, Mr. Speaker, and other members of the chamber are not that far removed from the period when a few years ago the United Nations tried to change its structure. At that time a fellow called Khrushchev came from Moscow, banged his shoe on the table and wanted to create a troika. He thought that was the way the United Nations should be run so as to represent the people of the world. Instead of one executive officer of the United Nations, the secretary-general, he suggested a troika.

I am apprehensive that under this bill, in the absence of any definition or amendment, in effect there will be a troika consisting of the chairman of the board, the president-executive officer, and the minister who could very well give directions as to the day to day operation of the airline. I think that this would be a retrograde step. I do not want to deal in personalities, and the minister has certainly shown expertise in the use of aircraft. However, I do not think there is any member on either side who has the expertise or competence to start meddling, even indirectly, in the day to day operations of the airline.

This underlines what occurred a few years ago when the government appointed the two officers to whom I have referred. Up until that time Air Canada had been headed by one officer. We are now adding a third in the form of the minister. Although three horses draw sleds in the steppes of Russia, I do not think in organizations troikas have ever worked effectively, certainly not in a complex and complicated undertaking like the national airline of Canada. I am hoping that either in this debate or in committee the minister will give an indication of the kinds of amendments he intends to move so that my apprehensions about this three-headed monster will be removed. The cabinet, in terms of national policies, directives and roles, obviously has to give direction. Almost in any bill there is power for the governor in council to define national goals to which any Crown corporation should adhere.

● (1150)

In its present form, this bill takes Air Canada away from the umbrella of the railways. It is a healthy step toward giving it some identity of its own in a structural way and in a legislative way, but I seriously question removing it from the over-all umbrella of Canadian National and its legislation. In effect, it is being set up as a true Crown corporation and you are not giving it the independence and confidence which the Glassco commission recommended. In effect, you are not giving it the independence and the confidence which Judge Estey recently said the board of directors of Air Canada should have. It is being put into cabinet and right on the minister's table. That is a retrograde step which has to be corrected, as far as I am concerned. I mentioned the troika in terms of executive control. It is a fundamental contradiction when you have three people with executive control. Executive control is non-existent in that situation; you have executive confusion or you have executive dilution to the point where there is no direction. Every person in Air Canada, from the lowest generic flight attendant to the top of the totem pole, wants direction from the executive officer and wants a structure which those persons know who are running Air Canada.

I will not continue ad infinitum, because this House will be debating Bill C-33, the bill amending the National Transportation Act, as well as Bill C-43, the bill amending the communications legislation. I will not repeat here what is obviously going to be said ad infinitum at that time. Under the MacLean commission on transportation in 1903, the railway rates commission was established. At that time it said that transportation and the railways were getting a little too complicated and complex. It recommended that railway rates had to be removed from the variable, unstable atmosphere of the politician who comes and goes at election time or in terms of cabinet ministers. At this time that is obvious in the present cabinet, where ministers come and go in terms of cabinet shuffles. In other words, a minister is giving directions on a day to day basis in terms of something as complex as Air Canada; then comes a cabinet shuffle and he changes to another portfolio; his executive assistant changes to another portfolio, and invariably the deputy minister changes after one or two years. That is no way to run a railway or an airline.

Judge Estey said, in more legalistic terms than I am prepared to do, that Air Canada's board of directors is long overdue and it is just a politicial plum handed out to friends of the party in power. This was also said by the Glassco commission. Judge Estey also said that the directors should have their duties defined and should be appointed for fixed terms under statute, so that they could not be removed by an angry government which did not like what they decided. He also said that they should have some prescribed qualifications because it is a very complicated and complex business. One only has to read the stock pages of the newspapers to realize airlines in the private sector, let alone airlines in the public sector, are having to hustle for every client dollar. Yet they do not have effective hustling because their boards of directors are appointed in the same manner as in Sir John A. Macdonald's days. It is just a ministerial or cabinet plum, with no relationship whatsoever to knowledge or expertise in any facet of transportation, let alone any facet of the airline industry. I am not in a position to make many comments about the red chamber, but as far as I am concerned there is no way I want the board of directors to be another form of the Senate under this bill, whereby political considerations outweigh any other consideration in those types of appointments.

The hon. member who just spoke before me mentioned the debt structure of Air Canada which is higher than any other airline. I know the hon. member for Central Nova (Mr. MacKay) will be making a few comments later in the debate about the auditing practices and the financial situation of Air Canada. Through persistent questions of his in this House, the government was forced to appoint a royal commission, the Estey commission, to assess and define some of the financial and audit arrangements of Air Canada.

I do not have to waste time now speaking about the freedom of information and the paradox of Crown corporations being financed by taxpayers' money. A member of parliament has difficulty getting information on any phase of the operation, but any member of the public can get that information at a Canadian Transport Commission hearing. If it had not been for the persistent questioning of a fellow by the name of Andrew Roman at the Canadian Transport Commission hearings on the 1974 annual report of Air Canada, none of us would have known.

The hon. member for Vegreville (Mr. Mazankowski) put questions on the order paper to find out the breakdown of the $20 million deficit of Air Canada in 1974. He was answered by the minister to the effect that that information could not be disclosed because it had a proprietary interest, and since other airlines did not have to disclose such information this would put Air Canada in an adverse position and poor Air Canada would not be able to compete. That was, in effect, the answer that was given.

An hon. Member: Shameful!

Mr. Nowlan: The words were along those lines, ad infinitum, ad nauseam. As my hon. friend says, that was a shameful answer from the then minister. I am not sure which minister it was because they have been playing musical chairs and ring around the rosey so much. Of course, the next game of musical chairs will occur in July, when this minister will most likely be shunted out. I do not know whether he will be given a wheat bin to sit in, but I am prepared to prognosticate that there will be a new minister of transport. I have the greatest personal admiration for the present Minister of Transport in terms of ministerial responsibility.

I heard some of the strange announcements by the minister the other day when he was making policy statements in the deep east. This was at a time when a parliamentary committee there was studying transport, when the CTC was studying transport and when the Sullivan commission was studying transport in all of Atlantic Canada. Suddenly out of the blue, like pulling tablets out of the sky, this minister, from on high, makes policy statements which sound fairly interesting until they are really looked at. In terms of information, I cannot see why a member of parliament cannot get what the commissioners will tell counsel before the Canadian Transport Commission by putting a proper question on the order paper.

• (1200)

That is how we found out that $19 million of the $20 million Air Canada lost in 1974 was lost between Montreal, Ottawa and Toronto. One might think that is the most lucrative run in Canada. A further breakdown of the figures showed that on the prairies Air Canada made a profit of $20 million. This examination took place before the Canadian Transport Commission; this knowledge did not become known through answers in this House or before the committee. Even in the Atlantic area, which is supposed to be a depressed area, Air Canada broke even. The $19 million loss occurred right here in the heartland between Ottawa, Montreal and Toronto. Thank goodness we had a persistent counsel before the commission hearings who got that information. That was an insult to parliament. The minister should never have signed the order saying that that information was not to be given to the hon. member for Vegreville.

I know my time is running out quickly because of the rule which shortens the time for speeches in order to expedite the business so that we can get this log jam over with and so that we might have some type of summer recess before different activities begin in the fall. I would like to talk very briefly about Air Canada and Atlantic Canada. Just because we produce sardines in Atlantic Canada, I do not understand why we should be treated like sardines when it comes to Air service. I refer to trips from Atlantic Canada to upper Canada and to the west.

I do not have the figures for this year or last year, but I think it was three years ago in the committee—without divulging cost figures—I was informed by officials of Air Canada that in Atlantic Canada, and I can understand this because of our geographic location, there was a higher density of passengers per air mile than in any other region of Canada because, frankly, more and more people were taking Air Canada. That was the only airline which effectively connected with upper Canada until Eastern Provincial Airlines started to give service into Montreal. However, if you want to go to Toronto, Ottawa or further west, you have to use Air Canada.

I cannot fly from Halifax to upper Canada without being jammed into a DC-9 for almost every flight. They land in Montreal before they get down to day to day operations. I was accusing the minister of perhaps not getting involved in day to day operations. As a member of parliament, I do not mind bringing up some of the practical problems which I as a member of the consuming, flying public, as well as thousands of others have experienced.

To me it is a complete paradox that we fly from Halifax in a DC-9 which is jammed tighter than any sardine can from Blacks Harbour. Blacks Harbour is where sardines are canned. People are shovelled and shoe-horned into these DC-9s, and they fly to Montreal, if that is the way they are connecting to another flight westward. They fly to Montreal, but they do not land anywhere close to the terminal. They always land at the international section, gates 48, 49, 50, 51 or 52.

Mr. MacDonald (Cardigan): Or 56.

Mr. Nowlan: I know that the minister from Prince Edward Island has gone through this, as I have. To connect to Ottawa you have to trundle off from the international gate—I forget where the numbers start, but it could be anywhere from gate 46 to gate 56—and you get on the conveyor belt and go all the way to gates 1, 2 or 3. It is usually gate 5 or gate 6 where you get the Ottawa flight. I suppose the customers in Montreal find it difficult to walk out to gates 45, 52 or 56. All the passengers coming in with baggage, and all the senior citizens wanting to see upper Canada for the first time to have their eyes opened to the grand vista of upper Canada, get tired by the time they land at the international section of Air Canada and stagger through the treadmill. Usually, the conveyor belt underneath the tarmac is on the blink. That is not Air Canada's fault; the position of the aeroplane is Air Canada's fault.

Five years ago I travelled with the former Lieutenant-Governor of the province of Nova Scotia who had trouble walking because of a leg problem, and he said to me, "Good gracious, Pat; do we from Atlantic Canada always have to be treated as foreigners when we land at one of our own airports?"

Mr. Paproski: Air Canada doesn't care.

Mr. Nowlan: I do not think Air Canada cares. It is ironic that as you stumble off the conveyor belt and go up two flights of stairs to get to the terminal so that you can get back to gate 6, you walk by something called Express Air, and you wonder whether there really is something fast in this system. Express Air travels between Montreal and Toronto on the hour, every hour. You look out and see a DC-9. Anything bigger would not be needed on the hour, every hour after rush hour. Surely it is not that busy. You also see a stretched DC-8 sitting there. I have been on a stretched DC-8 when there have been 10, 20 or 30 passengers, at most, expressing from Montreal to Toronto or from Toronto to Montreal on that fast, vital service. That is one of the reasons $19 million of the $20 million deficit of 1974 was created by Air Canada while other parts of the country did not even receive minimum service. I have a long frame, and sometimes I can tuck into a DC-9 seat, but I do not see why we could not have more DC-8s. That would help. More scheduling is also needed.

I must, however, give Air Canada credit because fortunately there is now—at least in the off-season—one regular flight from Ottawa to Halifax, and vice versa. In the summer season there are two flights, and I cannot complain about that. I appreciate it very much and I know other people who fly quite a bit also appreciate it. However, this business of always flying the DC-9 and this problem with regard to the landing positions in Montreal could mean that many passengers will try to avoid Montreal like the plague. These things could be corrected with a few little administrative changes. As I say, just because we produce sardines, Air Canada seems to think we should be treated like sardines and I think that is too bad.

There are many other things that could be said about Air Canada. I could refer to the allocation of routes. Perhaps this bill will have some effect in that regard. The minister is from the west, and he is a man who makes speeches about the west from time to time. I would like to be fair to him, but I would like to have a look at the chronology of the last allocation. I think Senator Marchand was the minister at the time. The last allocation of routes between Air Canada and CP Air was based on one thing in terms of objectives in the communications industry, and that was to make sure CP Air would start to have deficits. There are many things which could be said about that.

I forget the numbers, but what happened to Air Canada when it got the plums is very graphic. CP Air got very few, and even the plums CP Air had were cut into by the alternative routes which were given to Air Canada. This cut into the markets which prior to that had been CP Air markets. I am sure some hon. members of the House will not agree, but I think it was a very progressive step—and I would like to see it extended in Atlantic Canada—when the right hon. member for Prince Albert (Mr. Diefenbaker) and the minister of transport of those days used some imagination and initiative and extended CP Air into many areas of Canada.

The Acting Speaker (Mr. Turner): Order, please. I regret to inform the hon. member that his allotted time has expired. He may continue, however, with unanimous consent. Does the hon. member have unanimous consent to continue?

Some hon. Members: Agreed.

Mr. Nowlan: Mr. Speaker, I will cut through all the other things I could have said. I appreciate the good manners of the House and I will not abuse this privilege. I have not been overly critical or political today. The minister knows that. But I would like to summarize what has happened to Air Canada compared with CP Air. I hope this bill will start to correct the situation. In the most basic human terms, I ask the minister perhaps some day to avoid taking a special plane and to get on the morning plane from Ottawa to Toronto. I am referring to the 7.10 a.m. or 7.20 a.m. flight. If the minister flies Air Canada he will get an expanded continental breakfast. He will get a little more than a soggy, heavy croissant. He will get rice crispies or perhaps cornflakes in a plastic cup, and sometimes there are two or three grapes. You get a little cup of juice and cornflakes with three grapes. What dietetic emancipation and imagination there is in some kitchen, putting in those three grapes! They must have an agreement with Caesar Chavez of California to help the grape industry. That is the only explanation I can find for the addition of those two or three hormones of fruit. You have the small cup of juice juice, cornflakes with the three grapes, and then the stewardess comes by and pours coffee and tea.

● (1210)

I cannot explain the reason for the difference, but when you fly by CP Air on the morning flight at about the same time—and the plane is full as anyone who has taken the flight knows—you get a full breakfast, as good a breakfast as you would get in any hotel. You get juice, fresh fruit, scrambled eggs, bacon, sausage, and tea or coffee. You have the whole thing.

I should like to conclude with some generalities with which I opened my comments. Years ago, and still today, fortunately, Air Canada has been and is recognized as one of the best airlines from the point of view of air safety and air service, but ever since the change took place in the executive command of Air Canada three or four years ago, when they appointed two officers to reflect the bilingual duality of the land, a chairman of the board and an executive officer, the service to people on the ground has deteriorated. I am most apprehensive that when we add the third element, which this bill does, in effect, by giving direct cabinet control in the day to day operations, thus creating a troika, service will go down further.

Let me say, in conclusion, that this would perhaps be a precedent and I do not know how the minister would respond to it—frankly, I do not know whether there is a statutory prohibition—but we just had the Estey royal commission, the report of which was filed when this bill was introduced not too long ago. This bill was given first reading in October, 1976. The taxpayers paid for the royal commission which came up with a very good and objective report. Of course, the written word does convey certain things, but it seems to me that if we are to come up with the best form, organization and structure for Air Canada, perhaps the minister, the House and the committee when it is dealing with the bill should consider seriously calling in Judge Estey. He was a commissioner, now he is a judicial officer. He has made his report, and frankly I think that that study could give us a much better charter for Air Canada than does Bill C-17 at present.

Mr. Robert C. Coates (Cumberland-Colchester North): Mr. Speaker, I would like to follow on the comments of the hon. member for Annapolis Valley (Mr. Nowlan). I am sure we will all discover as the day goes on that many maritime members of parliament will want to participate in this debate because of the deep concern they all have over the deteriorating service that is presently made available to people in Atlantic Canada by Air Canada which is the base commercial airline available to our area and, unfortunately, because of government decision, the only airline that is available to our area to move our people between the Atlantic region and the rest of the nation. I have been having a running battle with officials of Air Canada in Altantic Canada over the rotten service—it could not be described in any other way—that is presently available to the patrons of that airline in our part of Canada.

Today, from the closest air terminal to my constituency in Moncton you either have to get up in the middle of the night in order to get to Ottawa or, if you do not take that flight or cannot get on it, you have to wait until the middle of the night again in order to catch another plane that will move you to this part of the country. I live some 40 miles from Moncton. The morning flight to Montreal and Ottawa leaves at 7.15 a.m., which means that in Amherst I have to get up at 5.30 in the morning in order to catch the plane. If I do not want to take that flight, then I have to wait until 7.20 p.m., a full 12 hours, before I can get another flight. If I have to come to Ottawa, I leave Moncton at 7.20 p.m., which is 6.20 p.m. Ottawa time, and I do not arrive in Ottawa until 10.30 p.m. If I am lucky and the connections are as they are supposed to be, I do not get into the kind of mix-up that I seem to experience every time I try to make the connection from Montreal to Ottawa.

It is nothing short of scandalous. It is the worst service that I can recall being made available to our area by Air Canada in any schedule, and especially during the summer months when there is the greatest demand for seats on the airline. I cannot imagine how Air Canada can co-ordinate its present flight schedule with the extra demand from people who want to go to the Maritimes at least in the summer time to enjoy the recreational facilities we have available to all Canadians which are second to none in North America. Yet Air Canada does absolutely nothing to give any kind of service that would assist in any way the tourist industry in our part of Canada which is so vital to our over-all economic prospects for the future.

There seems to be some kind of syndrome in the Air Canada head office which determines that schedules for Atlantic Canada are like the tail on the donkey. You pin it on after you have prepared timetables for everywhere else to everybody else's satisfaction. It is almost like the case of blind-man's-buff. You never know now where the tail will be pinned or what kinds of atrocities they will commit against the travelling public which happens to be located in Atlantic Canada either permanently or as travellers.

I do not understand the philosophy of Air Canada nor the government's philosophy. If we are to assist in overcoming regional economic disparity, then surely we must develop a system which will make it easier for our businessmen to move between Atlantic Canada and the central region of this country as well as other parts of the country. Yet they put every kind of roadblock in our way in getting our businessmen out of the region and other businessmen into the region. Therefore, the degree of frustration toward Air Canada, and indirectly toward the government, that results from this is hard to imagine unless you happen to live in Atlantic Canada and have to put up with the inconveniences that seem almost like a conspiracy against our area so far as air travel is concerned.

A few years ago I attended commission hearings at which Canadian Pacific made an effort to try to secure a line between eastern Toronto and Halifax or Montreal and Halifax to give some competition to Air Canada. Unfortunately, this was denied. I say "unfortunately" because what happened as a result of Canadian Pacific Airlines being denied even one flight into and out of the region was that Air Canada was given virtually a monopoly to do what it wanted, whether we liked it or not. Every time a complaint is made we get a put down from the airlines as a response. In effect, they are saying, "You take what we give you, like it or not. We could not care less, because we are in command. You are going to fly with us or not fly at all."

• (1220)

The only half decent service that is available to the Atlantic provinces is provided by Eastern Provincial Airways, but unfortunately the schedules they are forced to use make you feel like a yo-yo: you go up and down all the time. They do not even have time to serve tea or coffee. Direct routing between the Atlantic provinces and Montreal has been denied the airline. At the same time, Air Canada incurs multi-million dollar deficits which it uses as an excuse for not allowing any other airline to compete. So we have to put up with EPA, with its up and down schedule, or with Air Canada that only flies in the middle of the night, between midnight and 7 a.m. or between 7 p.m. and midnight. Nothing happens through the day at all. That is a terrible schedule to inflict upon an area. It makes me wonder what the employees of Air Canada do. In Moncton, for instance, there is nothing to do between 7 a.m. and 7 p.m. because there are no flights.

I must say, however, that the Air Canada employees give every assistance with the flights that are available. I have nothing but good to say of my contacts with them. Their public relations are very good because they really have nothing to sell. They have learned how to say no very nicely. I must also give credit to Air Canada for their baggage handling. I have seldom encountered a problem in this respect when travelling with Air Canada, which is amazing when you consider the amount of baggage that is moved. I think they deserve special commendation for the efficient way they do the job.

I must say, however, that it is significant that in Atlantic Canada we are the last to get new planes. I have not seen anything but a DC-9 for so long that I wonder if Air Canada has any other kind of aircraft. Atlantic Canada suffers from the central Canada syndrome that the best must be used between Montreal and Toronto, and nowhere else. The L-1011 was used for a little while in the area, but suddenly it was removed and the DC-9 put back in service. Sometimes I wonder that they do not send us back to the Viscount. Everything else in Air Canada's service has gone backwards in our area, so we will probably end up with aircraft that are in mothballs at the moment.

I would like to remind the minister that there is no time like the present to make Canadians feel it is worth-while to be part of this country, but so long as Air Canada provides the kind of service we have at present we will always feel neglected. It is only after everyone else is served that we can hope for improvement. Mr. Speaker, I want to point out that the air terminal at Charlottetown must be the worst in Canada. For a long time there has been talk of a new terminal, but nothing has happened. It is nothing short of a national scandal that one of our provincial capitals has such a lousy airport. But that is the kind of treatment we have come to expect.

It is hard to believe that the government is serious about ever providing us with something that is comparable to the rest of the country. We face a tourist season, but we still have terrible schedules and a rundown terminal. I would ask the minister to do something to improve conditions and provide us with a schedule as good as that in any other part of the country. The present one is the worst we have had for 20 years. We are almost back to the days of Lindbergh. It is time the government stepped in and told Air Canada to provide Atlantic Canada with air service comparable to what is available in other parts of the country.

• (1230)

Mr. Elmer M. MacKay (Central Nova): Mr. Speaker, I listened with interest to speeches made in this debate and have read, as well, what my colleagues said in this House. The government is bringing forward a constructive measure, in principle. Many of the things I want to say have already been said by others, perhaps better than I can say them. However, I was troubled about the government's delay in bringing this legislation forward.

Now that the Bill C-17 is before the House, neither I nor my party intend to delay passage to committee. It seems to me that Parliament has already wasted a number of years. The former minister of transport who is now Secretary of State for External Affairs (Mr. Jamieson), said in March, 1972 that we needed this legislation. Since then much has happened in the country and to Air Canada, but it is good to see this bill at last dealing with some of the questions which in the opinion of members of parliament ought to be dealt with. The need to deal with them has been apparent for a number of years.

When I first read the bill I was impressed with it and thought that it incorporated many of Chief Justice Estey's recommendations. But the number of references to the governor in council concerned me. It seemed to me that the bill would give the minister power to wield an inordinate amount of control, perhaps at the expense of the airline's management. I was reassured to hear the minister say that at some later stage, as a result of discussions, amendments will be introduced which will qualify the text of the bill as it now reads. He was speaking of that part of the bill providing for the giving of directions. According to the minister, as he is reported in Hansard, the directions to be given by the governor in council will be directions of a general nature. He went on to say that it is not the intention or purpose of the government to give direction in relation to the day to day operation of the airline. If the minister meant what he said and his words can be translated into proper amendments in committee, many of the concerns of members of parliament on this point, particularly in my party, will be laid to rest.

In the past, Air Canada has been one of our better Crown corporations. Only in the fairly recent past, when people with non-airline or non-transport experience were appointed to senior positions in the airline, have some of the airline's difficulties become apparent. Many of those difficulties are now in the process of being eliminated. As my colleague from Cumberland-Colchester North (Mr. Coates) noted, no corporation, Crown or otherwise, has a more dedicated and capable work force than Air Canada. Given good, sound financial direction and a minimum of government interference, I think Air Canada can again reach the heights of efficiency and goodwill it enjoyed a few years ago. In my opinion, it is on its way to regaining its former position.

Many constructive suggestions have been conveyed to the minister by Air Canada, members of parliament, and I hope from other sources. I should like to deal positively now, with some points which I am sure the minister has heard before. Nevertheless, I think they should be put on record. Also, since I will not neglect the negative side of the bill in my remarks, I shall make some suggestions for improvement. I shall also deal with one activity in which Air Canada has participated and for which it ought to be condemned. I refer to the company's involvement with the de-icing facilities at Mirabel. I shall come to that later.

The minister said in his speech last week, as reported in Hansard, that he feels it is his responsibility to achieve the maximum possible efficiency in all aspects of the airline's operation. I think the minister would also agree that if possible Air Canada's profitability ought to be kept in the forefront. The airline has always striven to make a profit if that was possible. Only in recent years has it begun to show an alarming pattern of operating deficits. Personally, I should like to see an express provision in the bill saying that the government intends Air Canada to be profitable. That would be consistent with the minister's statements and would be valuable in boosting employee morale.

Such a provision would also give potential investors the confidence of knowing the company is commercially oriented. This point is important, since this bill deals with changes to the company's capital structure. I should like to see some language inserted, perhaps in the preamble or in clause 6, in that clause under the title "Capacities and activities of the corporation", spelling out tersely but explicitly some definite commitment for making the airline a profitable operation.

It is obvious, from a reading of the bill, that the airline may engage in a number of activities which are over and above its paramount purpose. I think some definitions in this respect could be improved in committee. Those activities not listed by implication are prohibited. Perhaps we should examine the legislation carefully and see if we cannot indicate with more precision exactly what Air Canada can and should do. I do not think for example, we should give it carte blanche to do anything it wants or compete unfairly with other like enterprises in the private sector.

I mentioned earlier the matter of directions. The bill says that the corporation shall comply with direction given to it in writing by the governor in council. Such directions are unqualified. Since the minister mentioned them in his speech, I think one can assume he is well aware that, taken literally, such language would enable the government to interfere in the day to day operations of Air Canada. I understand the Air Canada management thinks the government ought to confine itself to policy direction. Obviously, Chief Justice Estey had this in mind when he raised the point in his report, and I agree.

I now raise the question of Air Canada service. Obviously, for various reasons in the past Air Canada has been directed to provide service on routes which no private airline could have flown profitably. Clearly, clause 9 empowers the government to compensate Air Canada for losses arising from the provision of that type of uneconomic service. I believe the committee should consider making such compensation mandatory. Such language should be spelled out in the act clearly, in order to show management, the public and employees of Air Canada that the airline shall not suffer financially as a result of such direction to provide unprofitable services to remote areas domestically or internationally.

I also believe that the method of calculating such losses ought to be in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles. Some procedures should be spelled out, so that the department itself will not have power to say how large the losses are. If there is any dispute, the matter ought to go to some sort of arbitration procedure.

We are now considering a different type of capital debt structure for the company. In order to ensure that Air Canada can market its future securities at the lowest possible rate of interest, in order to attract potential investors and encourage investment, I suggest the bill should be amended to make Air Canada securities a legal and eligible investment from any point of view. Certain Canadian companies such as insurance and trust companies may not, under the legislation governing them, invest their funds in the securities of another company unless the latter meets certain tests specified in the governing legislation qualifying it as a "legal for life" investment. That is a term in use in the investment world. It seems to me that the committee ought to consider this point when considering.

● (1240)

The borrowing power of Air Canada is covered in clause 15 of this bill. This power becomes immensely important when you consider that only a few years ago, at the end of the war, you could buy a pretty good aircraft for passenger service for around $1 million. Today's wide-bodied jets cost $30 million or $40 million together with spare parts. The financing of these very important and necessary showcases of Air Canada's fleet is a major undertaking and it is much more complicated than it used to be.

The bill provides that the approval of the Minister of Finance must be obtained before the corporation can borrow any money. This is not entirely necessary nor desirable from Air Canada's point of view. It extends the government's control too far into the day to day operations of the airline and its management. In other words, the corporation's financial plans, including the need to raise funds externally, would be apparent in its annual budget which requires approval by order in council on the joint recommendation of the Minister of Transport, the Minister of Finance, and the President of Treasury Board. If the budget and resulting external financing requirements are approved, further government approvals related to implementing such plans introduce what any company would believe to be overcontrol by the government, detrimental to the effective and efficient implementation of approved plans by the management.

Approval of long-term financing action is a normal prerogative of a corporation's board of directors. It should not be through unnecessary, complicated scrutiny by people who in the normal course of events would not find it necessary to do this with other corporations of Air Canada's stature, as is the case with our national air carrier. The need for government approval of post-budget action and decisions covering unspecified terms would adversely affect the company's flexibility. I hope the minister will be receptive to taking a look at this in committee as well.

There have been a lot of problems in the past with Air Canada's auditing. Without opening old wounds, it is only necessary to remind the House that these complications arose because of arbitrary action taken by the government which did not meet good business principles and were not satisfactory under the circumstances. This bill which indicates that auditors will be appointed annually by the governor in council should be modified so that management of the corporation will be consulted. There was a totally unnecessary occasion of embarrassment to the airline in the past when we had the ridiculous situation of three sets of auditors—one going, one coming, and one in the process of leaving. We do not want to get into that sort of era again.

The bill requires an audit to be done of the accounts and financial transactions of the corporation and requires that the auditors report on same to the minister. As is the case in the private sector and under general corporate law, the board of directors of Air Canada should be entitled to an audit report on the company's financial statements and affairs before it approves the accounts and financial transactions for the fiscal year. Again, there ought to be more consultation and more options available to management. Just because Air Canada is a Crown corporation is no reason why it should be penalized through the extent of having excessive control exerted over it. On its record, it deserves far more trust and confidence than, for example, AECL. That should be kept in mind.

Clause 18 provides that the governor in council may request reports of any kind at any time as it deems appropriate from the corporation, and the corporation shall comply with any such request. I would suggest that Air Canada must take a pretty dim view of any such proposal. It is unnecessary and could tend to abuse.

Members of parliament must ensure that this airline is not converted, either advertently or inadvertently, into some sort of government agency rather than a normal commercial enterprise under the broad direction of government. Air Canada, on its record, has been one of the great airlines of the world. It is only in recent years, as mentioned before, that it has run into any difficulty. Something we must be careful about in trying to give Air Canada the type of flexibility and capacity it requires is that we do not allow civil servants, who to some extent are going to follow their natural tendencies, to try to exert a type of control that is going to take away from Air Canada's ordinary initiatives.

I would like to talk about the board of directors of Air Canada for a moment. Rather than having the civil servants lurking in the background, if it is deemed desirable it would be better to have one or two on the board of directors where they can speak out freely and their actions can be assessed and judged—take away that anonymity.

In considering the qualifications of the board of directors it would be very desirable that they have some expertise in transport-related matters or in business. As far as possible, they should be representative of certain areas of the country. When Air Canada is considering factors that are regional, these people can speak with some knowledge and authority of the situation. They will not simply be holding seats based on political or other prerogatives that have earned their being appointed to the position. The minister will be aware of this, and I am sure he will try earnestly to keep this from happening so that Air Canada's board of directors are not redundant or merely holding down their positions because they have earned them in some way that is not related to the type of expertise they are expected to provide.

As an example of something that Air Canada and Transport have collaborated on recently and completely messed up, to show the other side of some of Air Canada's activities, I want to talk very briefly about the de-icing facility at Mirabel. This has interested me for some time and the minister and I have had some correspondence about it. The taxpayers of Canada are now the proud owners of a de-icing facility, through the Department of Transport. It cost the taxpayers a lot of money, between $7 million and $10 million, and that may be a low estimate.

Initially, as I understand it, Air Canada decided that it wanted to control this de-icing facility. They felt it would be in the company's best interest to do so. In 1973 the company suddenly came to the realization that it lacked the money and expertise to accomplish this. Transport decided it should step in and provide some assistance. Also, there were people in the private sector who showed an interest in this particular facility, which made Air Canada uneasy.

Air Canada first decided that they wanted it. Second, they felt they could not handle it. They then did an about-face and decided that they, together with people from Transport, would design this de-icing facility at Mirabel. From that point on, things went from bad to worse. Millions of dollars were spent. Committees were formed, at the initiative of Transport and Air Canada, which involved at various times representatives of major air carriers, ATAC, and so on. Proposals were invited and cancelled; tenders were called and cancelled in an irregular way.

This House will recall that questions were asked last year about some of the circumstances under which a de-icing facility, and for some unknown reason the tenders were cancelled at the last moment without proper notice. Allegedly, a telex was sent, but to this date it has never been found. In any event, the first winter's operation was a disaster. The facility was shut down in December and remained closed until well into the new year.

On some occasions there were delays due to de-icing for as long as five hours, causing all sorts of complications to major air carriers, and to passengers. KLM had occasion to complain, as did CP. As I understand it, some of the correspondence the minister has probably seen is so hot that it virtually singes the paper, as the airlines detailed some of the incompetence and some of the complications occasioned by this not so fortuitous blending of Air Canada and the Department of Transport.

On May 26 of this year, for example, in an effort to deal with this continuing problem resulting from Air Canada's refusal to permit anyone else but themselves to participate in this de-icing project, and the failure to call tenders, Transport asked the current ATAC committee, which is the second one which has been formed, if they would like to have representatives from IATA attend the meeting, and if my information is correct they were told they did not want representatives of IATA to watch them wash their linen in front of the world in trying to come to some sort of reasonable conclusion to get out of this demonstrable fiasco.

I have mentioned this rather detailed example to illustrate that if Air Canada is to be given increasing authority—and I, for one, feel that they should be given that authority and flexibility—they must not use this increased flexibility and authority to get into areas where they either lack the capacity or other means to compete and do a good job. At the same time, it must be made clear to Air Canada that as a Crown corporation, while they should have every occasion to do those things which facilitate their main object, that is to say, transporting people and participating in enterprises related to transportation, they should not necessarily be allowed to get too far afield, because I think it is pretty clear that even the most efficient Crown corporation has yet to demonstrate that it is a match for a well-managed private corporation which has to sink or swim on its own merits. It should be noted in this connection that the private sector corporations are in a far better position to make a contribution back to the economy in terms of tax dollars, and so on.

I want to make my feelings clear. Air Canada, despite the increased powers contemplated under the bill, should be watched closely to make certain that it does not expand too rapidly, and in areas such as de-icing where so far it has shown itself to be unqualified to do the job which some other company, maybe General Aviation, maybe some other private company, could have done better. Coming back to the de-icing operation for a moment, I hope the minister will consult with his colleagues in Treasury Board bearing in mind that, as I understand the situation, it is government policy that, publicly-owned facilities such as this unit at Mirabel should in every possible sense be open to public tender. This is the only way in which taxpayers are going to be able to decide whether this very expensive de-icing capability which has been bought with their money is a success and can be operated, or whether in the final analysis cement must be poured over it and a new start made.

[Mr. MacKay.]

Coming back to the question of the employees of Air Canada and the labour difficulties which have plagued this company, I should like to see the minister consider whether or not in the process of the capital restructuring of this company it might not be feasible to make provision for some of the employees of Air Canada, and there are many thousands of them, who would wish to invest in their company, to do so. It would be very interesting to see what sort of response the government would get to this type of initiative.

I also think that, just as in the case of civil servants having some legitimate function to perform, it should be out in the open where people can assess their decisions and input, as has been mentioned before, and in the case of this Crown corporation it would be very useful to get a policy input from some of the people who work for the company in technical areas particularly. As far as some of the decisions are concerned which, with the benefit of hindsight, seem less than wise, I believe that if some of the maintenance people of Air Canada and some of the pilots and flight crews had had a consultative role to play, we would not have seen Air Canada buy the L-1011.

I have been told repeatedly by pilots that this is not a well-balanced or particularly satisfying aircraft to operate. It was designed to have a stretched model later on, and as a result it does not fly perfectly level in the air. I was told it is very difficult sometimes, as a result, for the stewardesses to serve food on this aircraft because the pilot has, as is often said, to fly it a bit up on the step with the nose elevated one or two degrees in order to compensate for its lack of balance. This information may or may not be sound; I don't know. But when you have an airline like Air Canada with approximately 20,000 employees, many of them highly trained and competent people who are watching closely their competitors and who have to be conversant with the latest types of equipment, the servicing and operations, and the merits of different aircraft, it seems to me a waste that some of their knowledge and capability cannot be utilized in an organized way, perhaps through a representative on the board of directors or on a consultative basis through their unions. Advice from the employees might well help the airline improve the quality of some of its operational decisions.

It is far better for this type of input to be available to Air Canada from its own employees than to have that type of suggestion as to what type of aircraft they should buy, or how they should finance them, made by mandarins in government who have never had the occasion to fly an aircraft or to worry about meeting a payroll or servicing the sort of equipment the airline uses. I hope the minister will consider some sort of innovative approach on this basis.
