The Ship of doom.

"Now shall the dastard Viking Cower, and meet his doom!
With this right arm I'll cleave him
Yea, till his heart's blood leave him—
No other foeman striking.
Till I have filled his tomb."

So swore the Prince, as gazing
Far in the cold, black night,
Waked from his troubled dreaming,
Waked to see upward streaming Luridly, redly blazing,
Flames from the castled height.

"Ride for the hill as never Men rode before!" he cried.
Fiercely they went, but faster
Yet rode the fire's red Master,
Mocking their vain endeavor,
Till his mad fury died.

Then did the dastard Viking
Go, with his black work done,
Leaving in mingled slaughter,
Henchmen and wife and daughter,
All in his vengeance striking,
Sparing nor saving none.

Fast went the Prince, still faster,
Till he had gained the height—
Vainly the foeman hailing,
For over the wild sea sailing,
He who had wrought disaster
Fled with the fleeing night.

With swift but dim motions,
As swept by demon blast,
Down came the Prince, where lying
And eager to be flying
Over the smoking ocean.
His ship lay anchored fast.

"I'll follow him," he muttered,
"Where wilder tempests blow:
The lightning-flash shall light me
To where he needs must fight me."
Nor any more he uttered,
As sailed he westward ho.

Through nights of fierce commotion
When thunder loud was crashing,
And livid lightning flashing,
Across the stormy ocean
The ship still chased her foe.

Sailed, sailed through nights when brightly
The magic moon did shine,
Her silver beams beguiling
The troubled waves to smiling
Till, by her wand touched lightly,
They followed at her sign.

On, on, when dark and dreary
The sullen clouds hung still,
When sea birds, croaking hollow,
Their leaders track would follow,
With beating wings, unwearied,
O'er lone sea vale and hill.

Still sailed the grim Avenger, Nor ever landward turned;
But on through fears unnumbered,
While worlds awake and slumbered,
Mid calm or storm and danger,
Ever her headlight burned.

And storm-tossed cruisers, drifted
Down lonely tracks of sea,
Oft mark the ship pursuing;
And, while with terror viewing
Her ghostly spars uplifted, Crowd on th' ill sails and lee.

How A WIFE READ HER HUSBAND'S MIND.—That was an interesting exhibition of mind-reading which took place in a certain family in this city. A gentleman and his wife had been reading, in the last issue of the Post, the narrative of Mr. Brown's wonderful feats in reading the thoughts of others, and the gentleman was firmly impressed with the notion that he could do these things himself and so told his wife, when she suggested that he should experiment with her. He accordingly told her to fix her mind intently on some subject, and he took her hand, made the passes between her forehead, and his own, and then, after, as he supposed, fully absorbing her thoughts, told her she was thinking of her sister in Spring Valley. "No," said she, "that's not it." "What were you thinking of, then?" he asked. "Why," she answered, "I was thinking all the while, what a fool you were making of yourself."

NECK AND NECK.

AN IRISH LEGEND.

There's Charlie Culane, now, as decent a man as you'll find in a day's ride, barring he would take a drop or two more'n was good for him, and he was fond of horse racing, rest his soul, for he was a brave rider, that he was; and as for fine saddles, and fine bridles, as every soddler in the country round knew, he was—they said it themselves—the very devil to place. Never a one but honest Mike Twomey could shunt him. And there's no wonder, if ye see, that Michael shunted him; for as Mike used to say himself, he could stitch a saddle better than the Lord Lieutenant, though the English—had he to them—had made him all the same as King over Ireland.

Well, the story's a long one but I'll cut it short—Charlie started one night for home from Tom's house, where he'd been to buy a new saddle bridle. It was a long road he'd got to travel and a rough one. It was a good twelve miles, no less. The rain came down as thick as could be. He rode along the banks of the Blackwater as you go from Ballyhooley to Carrick. Charlie fretted as he saw his new saddle reins getting drenched; but as for himself he was as merry as a harp. Faith, he had a full skin of his own, and niver a shilling to the parliament had the whiskey in him paid. It's little for the wet he cared, baring that he spoiled his new bridle and the rest. He buggered his cloak snugly around him, and away he rode singing, singing all the way as fine as any thrush in Wexford. It's a blithe heart he had, and the whiskey was in the best.

He was trotting along the Kilmomer Hill, past the ruins of the old home of the Templars. Splash! splash! splash! went his horse over the wet and miry road. Drip! drip! drip! fell the rain on the hat and mossy tombstones. "It's a nasty night this," said Charlie to himself, "it's in me own cabin I'd like to be this minute."

Splash! splash! splash! went his horse over the wet and miry road. Drip! drip! drip! fell the rain on the hat and mossy tombstones. "Howly Virgin, save us!" shouted Charlie of sudden as he crossed himself and stared in fright at what he saw. "Is it awake, I am? or is it asleep?"

No wonder he doubted the evidence of his senses. For, following quickly after him came a horse's head! Its ears had been cropped and the color of its hair was white. Its big eyes stared out wildly at him. Its nostrils were dilated.

But what was the horse? Nowhere that he could see. Along it flew, faster and faster; it overtook him; it came abreast of him; it began to pass him; his own horse saw it and snorted with terror. Charlie's horse ran faster out of sheer fright; but the horse's head beat it, and was soon out of sight.

Charlie had hardly got over his first fright, than he found himself breast and breast with a horse and rider. He looked around. "I'm sold now forever!" he exclaimed in terror.

For the sight was enough to freeze his blood with horror. There at his side leaped a headless horse, and on it sat the ghost of a man at least eight feet high.

Charlie glanced at the rider, admired his red hunting frock, and then looked up to see his face.

"By the big bridge of Malloy," he exclaimed in terror, "it's no head at all he has!" "Look again, Charlie Culane!"

This advice was uttered in a hoarse tone. It seemed to come from the right armpit of the ghostly rider.

Charlie did look again. Sure enough the sound came from the spectre's armpit. For it carried its head like a parcel under its right arm! Charlie said that it looked for all the world like a big cheese hung round with black padding! It had no more color into it than a hape of ashes. There was no flesh on it at all, at all; the skin was stretched over the bones as tight as a drum; and the eyes of it were wildlike and a rolling round and round; and its mouth, as for its mouth, it was as big as a decent sized pigsty.

He was a bould boy himself, but this was too much for him. For, if ye see the head of the horse, now that the cloud had lifted, was still there, six or eight yards from the neck; and as the horse leaped, the head leaped, but never an inch nearer did they come together—the two. And that head of the man it jogged up and down, that way and this, all the time!

The ground shook under the tread of the headless horse; the waters of the pools trembled as it passed them; but never a sound of its hoofs could you hear!

Splash, splash, splash, went the hoofs of Charlie's horse through the wet and mud. Drip, drip, drip, fell the rain into the river and the pools.

Leap, leap, leap, went the head of the horse; leap, leap, leap, went the horse after its head; but never a sound from the headless horse, and never a word from the headless man!

A roar of thunder in the hill of Cecaune a Mona Finnea made the stillness of the spectre more fearful yet.

Charlie soon plucked up his courage again. He saw that the dreadful rider meant him no harm, and therefore he made up his mind to talk to him.

He glanced—not quite confident yet—at his ghastly comrade. He saw that the legs of the spectre dangled down at the side of the phantom horse.

"Why, then," said Charlie, said he, "it's mighty well yer honor, long life to ye, rides without the stirrups?"

"Humph!" This out of the head and from under the arm.

Charlie didn't think the answer altogether, but he tried his luck again.

"That's a mighty nate coat of yer honor's," he said, with a little cough—"barrin' it's a thrille too long in the waist for the cut now a days."

"Humph!" This out of the head, and from under the arm.

Charlie was dumfounded by this second rebuff. But it isn't modesty that a true fisher boy ever dies of; and a poor opinion of his own gift of gab never hurts a mother's son of them. Charlie soon got over this repulse.

"Well," he said to himself, says he, "it's a sensible head, no less, if it is an ugly one; it's not fond of flattery, that's plain!"

So he tried a third time.

"To be sure," he said, "that's a brave horse yer honor rides!"

"I may say that and yer nigh month!" This out of the head and from under the arm, with a growl.

"Devil take it," thought Charlie; "it's not civil at all. But I've made it spake for all that. And I'll make it again, I'll be bound."

May be, yer honor, resumed Charlie, "ye wouldn't be after racing him across the country?"

The head grinned with delight from Ear to Ear. It was a horrible sight to look at just then; but there was no doubt that it was pleased.

"Will you try me, Charlie?" This out of the head and from under the arm.

Faith, said Charlie, "an' that's what I'd do; only the night being so dark, I'm afraid of losing the old mare, and I've every half penny of a hundred pounds on her heels."

I forgot to say that Charlie was to race the next day, and had bet that sum on his mare against the best horse in the country. So no wonder he was afraid to lose her by racing at midnight over a rough and rocky road in a match with a headless horseman.

The spectre gave its word that the mare would be safe, if he would let her race with his phantom steed.

"Done then, and come on with you!" shouted Charlie, as he struck his spurs into the smoking flanks of his horse.

Away they went, helterskelter, hickety-split; over the fences, over the walls; splash, splash, dashing along; leaping the heiges, jumping the ditches, and bounding as if the Old Harry was after them!

"Charlie Culane! Charlie Culane, man!" shouted the head from under the arm. "Charlie Culane, man, stop for your life!"

Charlie had just got ahead of the spectral horse's neck; when the rider's head entreated him to halt.

The head of the horse was still a yard or two in advance.

"You may say that," said Charlie, as he stopped his horse, "but if it was neck to neck I'd beat you hollow. It's that head that troubles me."

He had got over his fear of his fearsome comrade in the excitement of the chase. The last words on earth—I must tell you in the exact language of the Irish historian.

"Charlie Culane," says he, "you have a stout soul in you, and are every inch of you a good rider. I've tried you and I ought to know; and that's the sort of man for my money. A hundred years it is since my horse and I broke our necks at the bottom of Kilmomer Hill, and ever since I have been trying to get a man that dared to ride with me, and never before found one. Keep, as you have always done, at the tail of the hounds, never balk a ditch nor turn from a stone wall, and the Headless Horseman will never desert you nor the old mare."

When Charlie turned round to answer to and behold there was the dead rider's head snugly put away like a handkerchief, in one of the big pockets of the scarlet frock. Lo! and behold up went the horse's head—away up in the air. As Charlie saw it disappear, he turned round, but the headless horseman and the headless horse were gone. He looked up—they were just vanishing as he gazed.

Charlie told his wife and all the neighbors this story. Would you believe it, they only laughed in his face for his pains?

"Ah, Charlie Culane," said one, "Charlie my boy, that's a mighty fine brand of whiskey Mike Twomey kapes—that it is. And it's that what makes you dreme you had a chase with the headless horseman?"

But Charlie to his dying hour maintained that his story was a true one. One thing is certain, he won the race next day and that's the end of it.

The Manteau of Cow Fish.

The manteau, says Mr. Frank Buckland, is one of the rarest and most interesting beasts that has been brought to England for many years past. His external appearance is very puzzling. At one moment he reminds us of a porpoise or herring hog. The home of the manteau is the shallow bays and quiet rivers of Central and South America. He is purely herbivorous, and lives upon the water plants which abound in those tropical regions. Mr. Bartlett, of the Zoological Gardens, London, has discovered that he is exceedingly fond of lettuce and vegetable manure, cut into slices. His limbs are flattened out into a fan, somewhat resembling a porpoise's tail. When he wishes to move forward he gets way on by moving his tail up and down; and as those who unpacked him from his travelling box know—he is able to use this lever-like tail with great force. The manteau is purely mammalian, and suckles its young at the breast.

The manteau is allied to the dugong found in Australia. The dugong has a face ornamented with a big, hooked nose, and when I see the figure of Punch performing in the street, it puts me in mind of the dugong. The dugong and the manteau are without doubt the origin of the fable of the mermaid; either of them, especially the dugong, when coming to the surface of the water to breathe or look round, is very human. The manteau now in the gardens is 7 feet 2 inches long; a full grown beast is from 14 feet to 16 feet long. Unfortunately for this animal, the flesh is very good eating. It has the flavor of pork with the taste of veal, reminding one of that curious relish, "dressed cut with a herring knife." The skin of a manteau is like the skin of a prickly pear; he has stiff bristles inside his mouth; this is really a form of whalebone, as found in the whale's mouth. The animal seems to be a compromise between a pig or porpoise.

They were standing in front of her gate, having just returned from a dance. His right arm was occupied in holding her up, while his shoulder furnished a resting place for her little head. And they were watching the bright and glorious moon. It was the same old moon which had looked down on so many similar scenes, but somehow it had a different appearance to-night. It influenced the young man to such a degree that he said: "With what reluctance does bright Luna shed her rays upon all inanimate creation, weaving worlds, fantastic shadows among the leafless trees, and spreading a silver glory over all. Do you observe the magnificent effect, Mamie?" "Yes, indeed, Henry," she returned; "and did you see that Jon Clements at the dance? She had on, last winter's dress, made over; and she's worn that blue waist ever since I can remember. I never saw such a looking thing." Henry gasped.

A STUNNER.—When the "spelling match" was in full blast in a certain city in New Brunswick, last year a prominent ship broker left the hall where one had taken place, and stepped up to a certain hotel, before going home. There he met several friends, who "sat him up" drove several, and he reached home about midnight, with a confused brain and very demoralized pair of legs. Then he swore that somebody had stolen the key-hole, but his wife, with a fearful scowl on her face, admitted him.

"Drunk," she exclaimed.

"Drunk (hic) drunk. Thaz ozyun?"

"Brute!"

"B-o-o-t (hic) Givus ha der oze."

"Idiot!"

"Thaz harter (hic) but I can spell um."

Id—id—id—id—id. Now Givus a stunner (hic). She picked up the poker of the stove and gave him a "stunner," and the spelling match adjourned sine die.

A WISIL.

May the blessing of God rest upon thee; may the Sun of Glory shine around thy head; may the gates of plenty, honor, and happiness, be always open to thee and thine; may no strife disturb thy days; may no sorrow distress thy nights; may the pillow of peace kiss thy cheek, and the pleasure of imagination attend thy dream; and when length of years make thee tired gently close around the last scene of thy existence, may the Angels of God attend thy bed, and take care that the expiring lamp of life shall not receive one rude blast to hasten its extinction, and finally, may the Saviour's blood wash thee from all impurities, and at last usher thee into a land of everlasting felicity.

In the East river, New York, on Tuesday, a sea gull went swooping down for a fish, which its keen eyes discerned swimming near the surface of the water, just in front of the ferry-boat "Mineola." The bird caught the fish in its talons and essayed to rise; but the prey was too heavy, and it could only flutter on the surface of the river. The gull, however, pertinaciously clung to his burden, and was dragged beneath the waves. Another struggle brought the bird above the water just in front of the bow of the boat, but it would not relinquish its hold, and the vessel swept over both, drowning the greedy gull and freeing the fish from its captivity.

"Broke, broke, broke. Neither greenback nor gold do I see. And I would that my tongue could utter The thoughts that arise in me! Oh, ill that the grocery man's boy has been told to dun for his pay, Or the milkman with sonorous 'Hi?' old man, can you settle today?—Let the stately ships go on to their haven under the hill. Don't I owe, owe, owe, on every hand, And have many a cent in the till? Broke, broke, broke, I'm a beggar in rags; ah me!—And three day's grace on my notes unpaid Will never come back to me!"

Gold 113.

Stanley.

Cameron and Nordenskjold.

The year 1875 will ever be a memorable date in the history of geographical discovery. Within the twelvemonth two of the most important questions of African geography have been settled; and in the far north the demonstration of an open water way between Europe and the countries drained by the great Siberian rivers is perhaps the most important addition to geographical science that could be made in polar regions. Certainly there remains for no future year so many first rate problems to solve.

The source of the Nile! For twenty centuries it has been the goal of the explorer's ambition. The boldest spirits have essayed its discovery, only to be turned back by insuperable obstacles. Its conquest waited for the plucky energy and restless push of Stanley.

Starting from Zanzibar in November, 1874, with 300 soldiers and carriers an important part of whose luggage was the open boat Lady Alice, in sections, Stanley had before 700 miles of unknown country—part forest and part desert—much of it swarming with hostile savages. By dint of resolute marching and fighting, he accomplished in a hundred days what in the usual course of African travel would have taken as many weeks, though at the cost of half his command; and on February 27, he caught his first glimpse of the great lake with which his name must hereafter be inseparably associated.

Speke and Baker had traced the Nile to the Victoria Nyanza. What was the compass of that great freshwater sea, and whence came its supplies? Thanks to the Lady Alice, which was soon set up and aloft, these questions had not long to wait for solution. Within the next sixty days its shores and numerous islands had been mapped, and its tributaries noted. Of the ten considerable streams which feed the Nyanza, the largest and most important proved to be the Shimeon, in probability the ultimate source of the Nile. The details of the discoveries begun we shall not consider here, nor the importance of the region now for the first time opened up to geography. It is enough to note that, through Stanley's daring energy and genius for command, the question which more than any other has vexed geographers and challenged explorers for two thousand years has been substantially settled.

In the meantime Cameron has taken up the unfinished work of Livingstone, and—spurred on no doubt by a determination not to be forestalled by his Yankee rival, as he was in the search for Livingstone—he has overcome the obstacles that baffled the veteran explorer, and accomplished perhaps the longest journey ever made by any adventurer in that benighted continent. And its results are as brilliant as the passage was heroic. No other explorer ever crossed the continent so near the equator; and none save Stanley ever achieved so much in so little time. His path lay through the most difficult and dangerous part of Africa, from Tanganyika to the mouth of the Congo; and when the story of the passage is made known, it will, nay, it must, present some of the most stirring chapters of dashing adventure in the history of African exploration.

One thing is certain: The theory of Livingstone has been disproved; and not the Nile, but the Congo, receives the drainage of the great interior basin of the continent. And Africa hides no other secrets to compare with the two which Stanley and Cameron have within the same few months, manfully wrestled from her jealous keeping.

Less significant geographically, but of far greater promise commercially, is Professor Nordenskjold's discovery of an open passage by sea between Europe and Northern Asia. The tract of country thus brought into economical communication with the rest of the world is a vast and largely fertile region, much of it splendidly timbered, traversed by navigable rivers, and only waiting for a suitable outlet for its productions, to become densely peopled. According to Professor Baers the valleys of the Obi Irtysh and the Yenisei exceed in extent the combined areas watered by the Don, Dniester, Nile, Po, Rhone, Ebro, and all the other rivers flowing into the Black Sea, the Mediterranean, and the Sea of Marmora. The entire region made directly accessible to commerce is estimated by Dr. Petermann to embrace an area one fourth greater than all non-Russian Europe.

The attainment of the pole would give greater renown to the explorer who should succeed in reaching it; but the consequences to humanity would be insignificant compared with those quite certain to flow from this much needed waterway to the heart of Asia.

The Dominion Parliament is to meet on the 10th February.

The new Fugitive Slave Circular issued by the British Admiralty causes much dissatisfaction.

De-ious to make all things square at the commencement of the new year, the accounts of those indebted to this Office are made out and will be forwarded to each subscriber, and it is expected that those persons who are indebted from one to five years, will make payment and save expense. Those generous patrons who have paid promptly, will accept our thanks.

THE VALUATORS for this County have concluded their labor for the present year, and a most difficult, arduous, and laborious task they have had; visiting each Parish and nearly every property, deciphering in some instances lists that would puzzle a Philadelphia lawyer, correcting errors in addition, and supplying omissions. In fact their duties were very onerous, but with steadiness of purpose, intimate acquaintance with the value of property and knowledge of business, they have accomplished all that could be expected in the short time allotted to them after receiving the assessors' lists; and their returns are in course of publication and will shortly be posted.

This leads us to remark, that the present system, of electing Assessors, is open to several objections, and has led in instances to injustice and difficulty, owing to the lax manner in which the work is done, and frequently the incompetency of the persons elected; indeed the time is fast approaching when the people will demand a change; the majority would now prefer that the appointment of Assessors and other Parish officers should emanate from the Sessions, than from those far-off Parish meetings. We know of cases where men have refused to serve after being elected, in consequence of the incompetency of those with whom they were associated. It is not surprising that complaints loud and deep are daily made at the excessive taxation for County and Parish purposes; many threaten and probably some will, leave the country in consequence.

DEATH OF JAMES THOMPSON, Esq.—Many in this County will regret to learn that letters received last evening from England, conveyed intelligence of the death of Mr. Thompson, the first Manager of the N. B. & C. Railway. The late hour at which the news was received, prevents our giving particulars; it is supposed he died from heart disease, as he dropped dead at the door, after returning from a walk with Mrs. Thompson.

P. E. I. RAILWAY.—Among the employees of the Prince E. I. Railway, we notice in the Times, the name of a St. Andrews boy, Mr. JOHN BRENN, who is Locomotive Foreman. We can endorse the following from the Times, which says: "Mr. John Brenn, Locomotive Foreman is an excellent mechanic, and ably second the head of the department by his close attention to the work under his charge."

The St. Andrews Band commenced a series of Social Assemblies on Friday evening last, which are to be continued weekly. They made a good beginning, as we learn those who attended were pleased.

The Annual School Meeting will take place on Thursday next, 13th inst., at 10 A. M.

GROSS CARELESSNESS.—It is not a pleasant duty at any time, to annul upon the negligence, not to say indifference, of public servants; but when the public are inconvenienced, perhaps suffer loss, by the want of proper attention to duty, it should not pass unnoticed by the Press. We recently had occasion to notice the mail for St. Andrews having been taken to Woodstock, and it was not the first instance of the mails having been sent to the way offices. Only last week a trunk belonging to a lady who was passenger for St. John, which had been checked for that city, was sent to Fredericton, and after considerable annoyance, and four or five days delay, was forwarded to St. John. Officials who understand and perform their duties, commit no such mistakes, but we regret to remark that they are the exceptions. Were Railways mulcted in damages for such acts of carelessness they would be of rare occurrence.

THE WEATHER for several days was Spring like. On Monday morning the regular January thaw set in with rain, towards evening the rain ceased, and the wind veered round to the north west, and on Tuesday evening everything bore an arctic feeling—in fact an old fashioned cold snap, calling for larger fires, and heavier wraps for travelers. The sleighing is tolerably good.

Our friend of the Farmer appears to lay the blame of drunkenness in Fredericton to the large number of licensed taverns which he says are "fifty," and he jocularly adds, "are about equal to the number of houses in St. Andrews." It is so long since he was here, that he has forgotten, and perhaps did not refer to the census returns, or he would have known, that St. Andrews has some hundreds of houses all inhabited, and that in proportion to its population, has a larger number of licensed taverns than Fredericton; the people generally use, but not abuse the privileges they possess. They are temperate, but the majority are not total abstainers. As we said before they enjoy themselves without going to excess. We may add that some of the oldest and staunchest teetotallers in the Province reside here.

CALIFORNIA AND THE WEST.—It will be seen on reference to our advertising columns, that Mr. C. M. LAMB, is prepared to furnish tickets by Rail to any part of the Dominion, to the West and to California. Mr. Lamb is prepared to give the desired information to parties requiring it.

DRAWING ROOM ENTERTAINMENT.—In another column appears a notice of a parlor entertainment to be given by Mr. Young. We have been informed that this young gentleman has a decided histrionic talent, and that he acquires him admirably in the various characters he impersonates. The selections are chaste and pleasing; and his audiences speak highly of his abilities as a reader and actor. We trust as a native of the County and from his talents he will have a full house.

MR. HANSON has removed to his premises corner of Water and King Streets, and we are informed has several men at work in his Boot and Shoe Factory.

(From the Canada Times.) The Breadalbane estate.

The following we are surprised to find in the Scottish American Journal, a paper which is generally very correct in the information which it imparts:

A foolish story has been circulated recently through several newspapers, to the effect that the heir to the Breadalbane peerage had been discovered in St. George, N. B., and that he was now on his way to Scotland to enter into possession of the family estates. A reference to any peerage might have shown the concocter of the story that no heir to the title or estates is wanted at present, and both are firmly enough in the hands of the Glenfalloch family, whose claims have been thoroughly sifted and found valid by the British court.

The Scottish American Journal is entirely in error in relation to this estate. We are aware that "reference to any peerage record" will show that the title and estates are in the hands of the Glenfalloch family; but it is not true that no heir is wanted. The present earl is in possession only until the rightful heir is established, for whom search has long been made, and who was only recently discovered in the person of Mr. Peter Campbell, of St. George. Mr. Campbell will proceed to Scotland and present his claim to the title and estate at the next Court of Sessions. It was his intention to have appeared at the last term, but failure to do so carried his case over for three months. So clear and just are Mr. Campbell's claims, that it creates great surprise in Scotland that he is so slow to present them. It is widely known throughout Scotland that the true heir was not holding the estate, and it will be remembered by some that it was a recent vagary of Robert Dalziel that he was "the lost Earl of Breadalbane."

Had we space we could give the whole history of this peerage, having the facts in our possession, and explain to the Scottish American Journal the complications which arose from the fact that the great grand-father of the late George, heir cut off the entail to the estate, and the circumstances which led to the discovery of the inheritance. Suffice it to say that the story, as originally published in the Times, is not one of ingenious concoction, but is founded in truth, as will be ascertained when Mr. Peter Campbell of St. George, is required to his full rights in the course of a few months. The Scottish American Journal should write the lawyers in Scotland that "no heir is wanted" to the title and estates of Breadalbane. It would, perhaps, save them much labor, and would certainly save Mr. Campbell the trouble of crossing the ocean. Moreover, it would be an inexpressible relief to the gentleman now known as the Earl of Breadalbane, to be informed that he is not in immediate danger of relinquishing that title and his $600,000 a year.

Shipping of Yarmouth.

We publish to-day our customary List of Shipping belonging to Yarmouth at the beginning of the year, together with other statistics which show the steady growth of the mercantile marine of Yarmouth for more than a century.

It will be seen that during the past year there were lost 6 vessels, amounting to 2,771 tons; sold, 27 vessels, amounting to 5,229 tons. Total lost and sold, 33 vessels, aggregating 8,000 tons. After striking off these, the list shows an increase at the commencement of this year, as compared with that of Jan. 1, 1875, of 10,757 tons—a very remarkable increase when it is considered how dull a year it has been for the shipping interest. It is gratifying to perceive that the losses have been fewer than usual.

There are now building, or under contract to be built, seventeen vessels of a large class, their aggregate tonnage being about 19,400 tons—or an average of over 1100 tons each.

The exhibit is a highly satisfactory one. It speaks for itself, and affords the best proof of the undaunted, indomitable spirit of enterprise of the shipowners of Yarmouth.—Herald.

The Charlottetown Examiner lifts up its voice for a provincial reform. It calls attention to the fact that legislation costs in Prince Edward Island nearly double as much per head of the population as in Nova Scotia, more than double as much as in New Brunswick, over a third more than in Quebec and nearly three times as much as in Ontario. All this is little to be wondered at when it is remembered that the number of representatives is about three times as great according to the population as in Nova Scotia; double as great as in New Brunswick, four times as great as in Quebec and five times as great as in Ontario.

Turning from the legislation to the Civil Service, the Examiner assails the economy of the Registry office. It holds that the office should be self sustaining, but instead of this being the case, it points out that nearly $2,000 per annum are paid out of the public treasury to enable persons to register their documents, $3,566 being paid out for salaries and contingencies, while only $1,542 is received in return from fees.

BALLOON MONTHLY MAGAZINE FOR FEBRUARY.—The February number of this magazine is issued, and is full of good things as ever. There is a sea story, a continuation of M. Quail's great tale of "That Taylor Boy," and several domestic stories of absorbing interest, and these in connection with the illustrations, the contents of the February number are as follows: "Scenes on and near the Thames;" "Miss Anderson's Right Hand;" "Memory's Harp;" "A Lucky Mistake;" "My Metamorphosis;" "The Maid of Stenay;" "A Night Brush with the Sepoys;" "Miss Chick's Fortune;" "A Pretty Young Lady;" "The Fairy in the Smoke;" "Trifles Light as Air;" "Jennie's Pocket;" "Shadow on the Snow;" "Through the Suez Canal;" "How I went to Richmond;" "On the Fate of one of Stoppard's Raiders;" "Seventy Miles an Hour;" "One Rose;" "Margaret Garloch's Beauty;" "The Frat Crusade;" "Climbing the Leaning Tower of Pisa;" "Our Young People's Story;" "The Tale of 'That Taylor Boy'"; "The Haunted House;" "Ruthven's Puzzle Page;" "Curious Matters;" "My Experience at Church;" "The House-keeper;" "Our Announcement for 1876;" "Dreams of Life—(Humorous Pictures)"; Published by Thomas & Salt, 23 Hawley Street Boston, and for sale at all the newsdealers in the country.

A FAT LEGACY.—An Irishman of Portland Maine has just been adjudged the heir to a property in Dublin, Ireland, valued at $90,000. It appears that Philip Clancy, eldest son of James Clancy, the eldest son of Charles Clancy, the grandfather, Charles left the above-named property. A second son of Charles, named Patrick, who was also an uncle to Philip, claimed and took possession of the property. Philip was a high flyer. He went to Texas and drove cattle. He was blown up on a torpedo boat during the war, but escaped alive. He was arrested in Portland for assaulting his sister with a hatchet. The family were low enough there, and his sister was in the almshouse. Philip heard of the death of his grandfather, and Messrs. Bradbury & Bradbury of that city undertook the case. Depositions were taken and members of the family sent to Ireland to prove his identity, which Patrick disputed. Mr. McGowan foreman at the rolling mills, went out, and his testimony proved convincing, and Mr. Philip Clancy comes into his property.

ON DIZ.—That a young New Brunswicker in Boston, a member of a prominent legal house, and son of an esteemed official of the Dominion Government in St. John is shortly to lead to the altar a rich and beautiful lady, the daughter of a prominent merchant of Boston, and widow of a titled gentleman of the German Empire. The gentleman's many friends in St. John hear of his good fortune with much gratification.—Globe.

At 11.30 on Sunday morning 26th ult., the little steamer Simcoe which has been lying at Carley's wharf during the past two months, left Barrie for its final destination, the Muskoka lakes, where she is intended to ply on Lakes Muskoka, Rosseau, and St. Joseph. She had been raised on blocks to the proper height to load upon the cars, under the superintendence of Messrs. W. Graham and John Carley, and when landed appeared to occupy her position with perfect solidity, the locomotive moving along at a slow pace. The little craft, which weighs about fifty tons, with all her machinery on board, is of light draught, and will doubtless be of great utility in the region for which she is designed. She reached her destination with perfect safety.

SMOKING IN THE BARN.—The following timely advice is given by the N. Y. Tribune: "No smoking" is posted in most decent factories—it ought to be posted in every barn. There is not much difference between having a horse-thief around the stables, and a man cleaning off horses, attending cows, or working in a barn, with a pipe in his mouth; and there is no bidden man much means, than the one who, when his employer comes round, slips his pipe into his pocket or holds his hand over it as if it were a little bird. All such fellows should be paid off, or started off, and kept off.

AN AMERICAN OPINION.—The Alta Californian, referring to the Pacific Railway arrangement with British Columbia, calls it "a Canadian fraud," and says "it was a trick of false pretence from the first," and that the Government is "convicted by the logic of facts, of having promised more than it could reasonably be expected to perform."

Everybody seems to be coming to the conclusion that the bargain alluded to was one of Sir John's greatest mistakes. It provided, however, for an enormous public work which promised the "sinews" of political war and success for himself and party and it was entered into. It is the duty of the present Government to get out of it.—Advance.

MILITARY.—An Ottawa journal makes the announcement that when the British troops were withdrawn from Canada in 1870, an agreement was entered into by the Dominion Government, with the Imperial Government to spend one million dollars annually in keeping up a defensive force of militia for five years. As that time expired with last month, it is probable that the Dominion Parliament will have to consider the militia question at the approaching session.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE, OTTAWA:

Friday, 7th day of May, 1876

PRESENT:

HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GEN-ERAL IN COUNCIL.

WHEREAS it is provided by the 15th Section of the Act 31 Victoria, Chapter 6, intituled,
"An Act respecting the Customs," that the import of any cattle or swine may slaughter and be sent pack the same in bond, under such Regulations and restrictions as the Governor in Council may from time to time make for this purpose.

And whereas it has been found expedient to give effect to the said section 38, in so far as regards the importation of swine, and to alter the terms of the Regulations for this purpose, adopted by Order in Council of 22nd of May, 1869:—
His Excellency, on the recommendation of the honorable the Minister of Customs and under the provisions of the said Act has been pleased to order, and it is hereby ordered, that the said Order in Council of the 22nd day of May, 1869, and the Regulations thereby established be and the same are hereby repealed, and that the following Regulations be and are hereby adopted and established in lieu thereof—this is to say.

1. Upon the importation of swine for the purpose of slaughter, the Importer shall enter the same for Warehouse, upon the usual form of such entries, stating upon its face, the number and value of the herd, and also the quantity of pork bacon, lard and tallow, which the Importer shall produce when slaughtered and dressed at 13 pounds weight for each live hog so imported, and the amount of duty to which such produce is or may be liable under the rate prescribed by the tariff in force at the time being as the proper duty on most of that kind. Such Importer shall then execute a bond to the Queen, in double the amount of such duty, the condition of which bond shall be, that upon the date of exportation within one year of the said products of the swine so imported and converted into pork, bacon, lard and tallow, or payment of the duty secured by the said bond, then the said bond shall be and become null and void, otherwise shall remain in full force and virtue.

2. Upon the receipt into the Bonding Warehouse, the swine shall be regarded only as meat, and it shall not be lawful to remove any of them from such Warehouse alive; nor shall any part of the produce of such swine be removed therefrom, for any purpose, without a permit from a Collector, or paymaster of Customs, as in the case of all other bonded goods.

3. Swine imported in the carcasses to be cured and packed in bond, may be entered in the usual way for Warehouse, and be placed in the premises established as a Warehouse of this class for the special purpose of curing and packing. The weight of such carcasses to be duly ascertained by the proper Officer of Customs, and the Importer shall give bond to the Queen in double the amount of duties accru thereupon, under the tariff then in force, conditioned for the due exportation of the same, or payment of duty within two years from the date of first entry.

4. The packing, pen, curing and packing house, and all casks, stores or other apartments included in such Warehouse, shall be accessible at all times between sunrise and sunset to the Inspection and survey of the Collector or Inspector of Customs, or any Officer of Customs to whom the duty of such inspection may be assigned by them or their clerks.

5. The produce of swine imported alive and warehoused for slaughter, at the rate of 13 pounds for each hog, and the meat of the swine imported in carcasses for curing and packing, at the actual ascertained weight at first entry, shall be subject while in bond to all charges in the tariff rate of duty, and when entered out of bond for home consumption, shall pay the rate of duty in force at the date of such entry.
