so to speak, as to be able, at this moment, to form an intelligent judgment of the proposals before the House. This observation I make as emphasizing and making more plain the proposition that if the proposals of the hon. gentleman were not to be taken wholly on trust, and on the assurance as to what conclusion Parliament ought to arrive at, the prior information, to which I have referred, should have been submitted. There is one sense in which I have no right to be surprised at any of the proposals which the hon. gentleman might bring down in this direction. I told him, last year, when he brought his proposals, that it was impossible to deny with respect to some of them, at any rate, under whatever cloud of words they might be submitted, that he was, in point of fact, aiding Provincial and local works, and that the door was but opened, and he would find it difficult, if not impossible, to close it. He has found it, perhaps, difficult, or impossible, to open it as wide as he would have desired; others may have attempted to close it, but found it too late; but it is open wide enough to admit the various subsidies which the hon. gentleman has brought before the House. The hon. gentleman dealt in several statements with respect to the results of some of these subsidies, which were somewhat vague, and, perhaps, judiciously vague. We were treated to glowing statements of the importance of securing the eastern terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway on Canadian soil. We were told that the country viewed with anxiety and alarm the prospect that Boston or Portland might form the Atlantic terminus, and that it was important that arrangements should be made whereby that terminus should be on our own soil, and the hon. gentleman pointed out how he proposed to accomplish this result. But I counted as well as I could, and perhaps I omitted some, no less than four eastern termini for the Canadian Pacific Railway in the course of the hon. gentleman's speech—Halifax, St. John, St. Andrews, and Louisburg, all of which were mentioned, one after the other, as the eastern terminus. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman supposes that these various ports will divide the trade. I do not know whether he felt that it was important to soothe the susceptibilities of the members for Halifax, whose call for the winter port has been so loud and long, and who supposed they might be left out altogether in the cold. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman thought it necessary to say a word for the city from which the hon. Finance Minister comes, and, therefore, suggested the probability of St. John becoming the terminus, by virtue of the line proposed to be aided. I was delighted that he also thought St. Andrews would be prepared to take one fourth of the Atlantic trade of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which port included among its property owners and occasional residents, the hon. Finance Minister and Minister of Railways, and they naturally take a very deep interest in the prosperity of that interesting portion of Her Majesty's Dominions on this side of the water. I hope the hon. gentleman's predictions in placing St. Andrews first and foremost as the eastern terminus, may be fully realized in spirit as well as in letter. The hon. gentleman had several good words for the Island of Cape Breton, which I was glad to hear. He referred to Sydney and spoke of Louisburg; and there he used language of judicious vagueness. The hon. gentleman pointed out the importance of Sydney and the importance of Louisburg; and that we were now arranging a connection between the Pacific and the most easterly point at which we had a harbor in the Dominion possessions. Well, the hon. gentleman pointed out, also, how the distance could be shortened between Halifax to various points and Montreal; and said: "True, the distance by land is a little longer, and the distance by water is a little shorter, but there enter certain other considerations, we all know the importance which over-rule in matters of this kind; but the distance between Halifax and Montreal is greatly curtailed, and between some other points is greatly curtailed." These are, no doubt, important facts to those who believe that railways ought to be built in the directest line, but very ill news to the few gentlemen who attend to the traffic on the Intercolonial after this time; and the hon. Minister of Railways in future will make his accounts square on through traffic by the short lines, because if a great loss is to be achieved, it is quite clear, that it is the way traffic alone on which, not the hon. gentleman I dare say, who has made this statement in glowing terms, but somebody else, his unhappy successor, will have to balance accounts, notably at the expense of the amiable Postmaster-General which will no doubt be accorded.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will allow me to put him right regarding a misapprehension under which he evidently labors. I was not in the House when he made reference in this way to the Postmaster-General; but I can tell the hon. gentleman that my hon. friend pays less on the Intercolonial than on the Grand Trunk.

Mr. BLAKE. That is not news; I got that from the Postmaster-General on a late occasion.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Then the hon. gentleman is more unfair than I thought.

Mr. BLAKE. I asked the Postmaster-General what he paid for mail service on the Intercolonial and on the Grand Trunk; and I believe that the hon. gentleman referred to the comparative expenditure on other lines, and stated that the estimate was made on the proportion paid by the Grand Trunk and Great Western system.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. These payments are made according to mileage; you have to haul the train and postal car, and whether there is one bag or two in the postal car makes very little difference as far as the railway expenditure is concerned, and the payments made; and as I said before, my hon. friend pays a smaller amount for the performance of the mail service on the Intercolonial Railway, than on the Grand Trunk Railway.

Mr. BLAKE. We know that the Great Western gets less than the Intercolonial and the Grand Trunk. The Great Western is paid $124 a mile; the Grand Trunk, $160, and the Intercolonial $130. When the hon. gentleman makes a statement he had better make it complete. I was about to say, when the hon. gentlemen interrupted me, with what results we all appreciate, that the hon. gentleman proceeded to point out that he was defending himself on the ground that this was the policy of the late Government. The late Government had old rails to a limited extent to dispose of, while this Government professes to supply the means for obtaining new steel rails. The late Government proposed to Parliament, and Parliament agreed that these old rails should be lent as far as they would go to certain branch lines, supposed to be feeders of the Intercolonial. The hon. gentleman says I vindicate this policy because it was the policy of the Government of my hon. friend from East York; and inasmuch as some old rails were lent by them as far as they would go to feeders of the Intercolonial, with the sanction of Parliament, therefore a general scheme of subsidy to railways is proposed all over the country to the extent of $3,200 a mile. Now, the old steel rail proposition was naturally limited in its character, and the late Government could not lend more rails than they had; but this proposition to furnish new steel rails is entirely different, and is only limited by the extent to which they can find money in the Treasury. Then the hon. gentleman said it was a great advantage to the country to have more railways. Everybody knows that, and agrees that this is a great advantage. It is a great advantage to have new highways and new means of communication; and railways are more and more becoming the main highways of the country. These observations, apart from certain leading questions which may affect the sum of the subsidy, are applicable, sub modo, to highways as well as to railways, and are certainly applicable to every railway which it might be proposed to construct everywhere. It is impossible to build a factory, aye, a dwelling-house, or a railway, making easier the means of communication anywhere in the country, to economise the labor of the people and to raise the price of produce by facilitating transport, or to make any public improvement that will not tend to the advantage of the locality concerned, and if of the locality, then, sub modo, of the country at large; for all of us in that sense are interested in the progress and prosperity of each part of the country—but that is another question. The question with reference to which the simplicity of one form of the Constitution makes it admissible to some gentlemen; but we cannot have both. You have a Federal or Legislative form of Union at your disposal. If you adopt a Legislative Union, you subsidize from the central enterprises, whether they are local in their character or not, but which yet tend to the advantage of all, because they are to the advantage of a part; but if you adopt the Federal system, you have certain advantages and also certain limitations. You cannot get both and combine inconsistent advantages. This attempt is not being made to-day in more directions than this, and it is an attempt which must result in the end in the ruin of the system under which we now exist. Well, then, the hon. gentleman said he need not defend the Napanee, Tamworth and Quebec Railway Company subsidy, because it was to develop a water-power. Well, we have heard a good deal about this company's subsidy, and what went on, notably in Lennox and Addington, in which certain promises and pledges were made during the late Elections. There was an agreement or suggestion made that a subsidy would be given if the Elections terminated in a particular way.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No! You may have heard it, but you have heard what is not true.

Mr. BLAKE. I am inclined to believe that some things were suggested in the way of aiding this scheme. I believe that a surveyor was sent there to survey the country. This went on some time ago, and it was indicated that aid and support would be accorded under certain conditions, expressed or implied.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; this is incorrect.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not think that direct promises were made. Perhaps there was a nod, perhaps a wink.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Perhaps you know how.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not know how, but I heard how it had been done; and I have been informed that certain persons, who were very largely interested in the construction of this road and in this company, were converted or perverted—one side of us would say one and the other side the other—within a very few hours of the Election; and by what means we can very well conjecture. I believe, also, it is said that the auditor of this company has been unable to reconcile the accounts of the expenditure with the vouchers, and that a large portion of the expenditure already made remains unvouched for, as far as is known to those concerned in its affairs. I believe, further, that proposals were made to the company sometime after, under which the work could have been taken over by another company and constructed without this subsidy; but I daresay that value has been received, and where value has been received, of course, a return must be made. Well, then, the hon. gentleman says that he proposes the Callander subsidy. We all agree, I presume, in the importance of this connection; and I made an observation the other night which showed how very willing I was, that what is necessary to be done to secure that advantage in the interest—not merely of the Province of Ontario, but also of the North West in this connection—should be done. Now, it is considered well understood I presume by those who know anything of the subject, that there are two systems of railways which tend towards the point from which the railway is to stretch in a northerly or north-easterly direction—namely, the Midland system and the Northern and North-Western system. Each of those corporations is, I believe, a parent of another corporation which is to construct the intervening link. The infant corporations to which I have referred are chartered upon conditions designed by the Legislature, to secure—so far as legislative provisions can secure—equal rights and privileges to all railway companies which may be connecting railway companies. We can do no more, I suppose, than has been done. I am not personally responsible, but I believe each of the rival companies scrutinized the clauses of the other's Bill; but, as the hon. Minister frankly stated, it is extremely difficult, by legislative provision, to secure equality where one of the companies is in the interest of the other. There is no doubt of that; and what we should aim at is to secure practical, not nominal, equality. You want competition for the North-West and Ontario between these centres of trade. You want real competition which will subsist when each of the railways which strike Gravenhurst and the other southern point approach the neutral link. I believe it is objectionable to give to either of these infant companies, created as they are in the interests of, and to be controlled by, each one of the main railway companies, practically a preference—not a monopoly, but practically a preference—the advantage which arises from the circumstance that it is to be a controlling power. The Northern Railway Company has a line to Toronto and Hamilton—the Midland has a line to Toronto. The North-West between that point and Toronto would, therefore, if you secured perfect equality, have the benefit of competition over these two lines for Canadian Pacific Railway freight, have that benefit. I say this, that in order to save money you might incur the disadvantage of dealing with one or other of these companies, and give $6,000 a mile subsidy; but if you are going to give $12,000 a mile—which is nearly or, perhaps, quite enough to build the road without equipment—the true course would be that you should take care that the country receives the true and full benefit of that expenditure. How? In two ways. First of all by securing the thorough independence of that link, by taking care that none of the railways connecting have a practically preferential rate by virtue of the company running the road in its interest, though nominally on equal terms, but by virtue of an independent contract which would secure equal rights to both; and, secondly, by taking care that the rates and fares charged on that piece of railway were based on the proposition that it was practically constructed at the public expense, as it will practically be constructed under the management proposed by the hon. gentleman. We know what has happened with reference to the subsidies heretofore granted. I do not know whether there has been any case—there certainly have been but few—in which the railway which has been aided, although aided very largely by municipal and Governmental bonuses has not been stocked and bonded “up to the handles,” as they say—beyond the intrinsic value of the land and the cost of construction, beyond the point at which it would sell as a commercial enterprise; and being so stocked and bonded, it is, of course necessary that the rates and fares should be kept up high enough—if commercial contingencies render it possible—to meet the interest on the bonds as well as pay dividends on the stock if it is possible to obtain them. That will be the result. The public will build the road; bonds and stock will be issued, not to make up the deficiency beyond the subsidies, and practically representing their face value; but they will go on the market and be used for other things, and the road will bear the freight, so that the country will have to pay as much for rates over that road as if it had been constructed solely at private expense. If it is worth while for the country to pay $12,000 a mile for 110 miles, an arrangement should be made by which the contract should be really under the control of the Government by which it would not be necessary for the Government to put an engineer on the road, and the road should be worked so as to pay its running expenses, its maintenance and repairs at the cost of the companies running upon it, which should not be entitled to charge beyond the proper haulage rates. I shall not protract these observations at this time. I still hope the hon. gentleman will comply with the suggestion I made last year, that all the papers and documents which might throw light on these various proposals—scattered as they are over a great extent of territory with which some of us are not so familiarly acquainted as himself, affecting as they do three or four Provinces—will be laid on the Table of the House, and that forthwith.

Mr. RYKERT. The hon. gentleman complains that information has not been brought down which would enable the House to judge of the propriety of making these grants; but he must be aware that a notice has been on the paper for some time, stating that on a certain day certain grants would be asked for certain roads, with particulars as to the mileage, the rate of subsidy, and the conditions upon which it shall be paid. So far as I have been able to learn from the hon. gentleman's observations, he makes no objection whatever to these railways; on the contrary, he says that these railways, if built, will be of great benefit to the various sections of country through which they will pass. While I am not prepared to say that I am in favor of granting aid to railways at all, I beg to say there is just as much information regarding these roads, before the House at the present time, as we had before the Local Legislature when railway aid was being granted in that House.

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Mr. RYKERT. The hon. gentleman says “hear, hear,” and I know that he does not desire to have any reference made to his acts while he was in the Local Legislature. On every occasion in Parliament and out of it, I have opposed the granting of aid to railways by the Government, and I have stood almost alone on that question in the Local Legislature, and, perhaps, in this House. I recollect one occasion where the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Wilson) and myself stood up against granting aid to railways in the Local House, and we were almost laughed at by the majority of the House because of the position we took on that question. However, I will not discuss that proposition, but I would like to remind the hon. gentleman who makes complaint against this Government, that he pursued the same course, and perhaps in an aggravated form, in the Local Legislature. We desired to place on record a resolution, declaring it inexpedient that any aid should be granted to railways under Order in Council until such time as the House had proper information regarding these railways—their financial standing, the country to be served by them, &c. We desired to place on record our view that at least five days' notice should be given to the House before it should be asked to decide. The hon. gentleman condemned that resolution, and why? Because he knew right well that it was necessary, in the interest of his party, that he should hold a certain amount of control over the members of that Legislature. Let us see what was the course of the hon. gentleman in reference to that matter. It will be fresh in the recollection of this House that the late Sandfield Macdonald provided a grant of $1,500,000 for railways. The hon. gentleman opposite, by means which I shall not refer to at the present time, induced the House, by a majority of one, to vote out that Government, and with eight seats vacant at the time. A few days afterwards the hon. gentleman stated to the House the necessity of granting $400,000 more, and a further appropriation of $100,000 a year for twenty years, in aid of railways, and that too without having appropriated a single dollar of the $1,500,000. The hon. gentleman was asked: "Why do you not appropriate the $1,500,000 before you ask for $400,000 more? Why do you not do that before you impose on the country an obligation to expend $100,000 a year for twenty years?" The hon. gentleman answered that the money was pledged. To this it was answered that it was not pledged except for some eighty-six miles of road. When I pointed out that this was a bait held out to the House, the hon. gentleman was very indignant. On the 22nd of February, 1872, the hon. gentleman brought down his resolutions, and, without giving any information to the House, without stating that any more would be appropriated, he forced them through the House; and on the 24th of February he introduced a Bill founded on this resolution. On the 28th of February, he carried the Bill through, and during the course of that debate, the hon. Mr. Cameron, the present Judge, and myself, who were opposing him, asked him to tell the House what railways required aid, and the hon. gentleman professed not to know what railways would receive aid. The Bill was passed, and, to the astonishment of the House, the hon. gentleman opened his desk and pulled out ten Orders in Council for granting aid to that many railways. We had no opportunity of ascertaining anything regarding these railways, and the hon. gentleman the next day forced the ten Orders in Council through Parliament to grant aid to these railways. Then we said: "Let us now, for the future, try to ascertain what should be the proper rule of Parliament regarding railway grants; let us lay down a rule so that hon. members shall not be taken by surprise, and so that no Government can force railway grants through Parliament until the House has received proper information regarding them." If hon. members will look at the Journals of the House of the 28th February, 1872, they will see that a resolution was moved to the following effect: "That the country will have just ground for dissatisfaction unless some plan is adopted, whereby, while making all just and necessary provision in aid of railways and other public improvements of provincial interest, provision should be made for municipal obligations, &c." That resolution was voted down, and the Bill was carried. The hon. gentleman then passed his Bill, providing for $400,000 more, on the flimsy pretext that the whole of the $1,500,000 had been pledged; but he did not tell us what railways the money was pledged for. In order to enable us to judge whether these railways were entitled to have aid or not, we asked for delay. "No," said the hon. gentleman, "I cannot grant you delay"; and he forced the resolutions through the House the same day. I am pointing this out in order to show that when the hon. gentleman had control of the Ontario Government he was not so fastidious about the House obtaining information. Now, let us see what resolution was moved in order to establish a rule so that hon. gentleman might know whether or not the Orders in Council were forced through by the Government without proper notice. On February 29, 1872, the hon. Mr. Cameron moved, seconded by Mr. Rykert:

"That the said order, together with nine others, involving an aggregate appropriation of $1,500,000 having been placed on the Table of this House yesterday, and the Government, to repeated requests, having refused to give information as to the undertaking they intended to pass Orders in Council in favor of, till the House had voted an additional subsidy of $400,000, and a further appropriation of $100,000 a year for twenty years, the Government has not given this House sufficient time for the consideration of the Order in Council to enable it to give an intelligent and just judgment upon the claim of the several enterprises, and that in future, Orders in Council requiring the ratification of the House should be submitted at an earlier period of the Session, and should not be taken into consideration by the House until the same has been laid before the House at least four days."

Where was the hon. gentleman then? I find amongst the nays on this resolution the names of Barber, Baxter, Blake, &c., and it was lost by a large majority. I merely point this out to show how inconsistent the hon. gentleman may be. In principle, I am opposed to the granting of a single dollar of aid to any railway company. But we are seized with certain facts, and those facts justify those who are in favor of granting aid to railways, and I am satisfied that the hon. gentleman himself knows right well whether those railway companies are entitled to receive aid or not. I am satisfied that this House is possessed of sufficient information to enable it to judge whether those railways are entitled to this aid or not. If the statements of the hon. Minister of Railways be correct, and no one can doubt them, these railways will help, to a large extent, the great chain which will extend from ocean to ocean. I simply rise to say that while the hon. gentleman attacks the Government with negligence, he himself on another occasion was unwilling to lay down a fixed rule.

Mr. BURPEE (Sunbury). I would like to know whether this short line which is now proposed to be subsidized, will proceed the full length of the line described on the map which is laid before Parliament, or stop at some point short of that; because by the speech we have just heard from the hon. Minister of Railways, it is now going by St. John instead of direct from Moncton to Montreal. Where will it connect with the Intercolonial now, for I presume it will connect at some point with the Intercolonial Railway, and proceed by that road to St. John?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is quite impossible for me to say. The project which was laid before the members of the House of Commons by Col. Snow, General Manager and Chief Engineer of the Great American and Short Line Railway Company, is the project, no doubt, they desire to carry out. The hon. gentleman is aware that the charter for what is called the Central Railway has recently been changed in the Legislature of New Brunswick, in a direct line from Fredericton to Salisbury.

Mr. BURPEE. From a point between Salisbury and St. John?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is quite impossible for me to say. There are several lines by which they propose to shorten the connection that are not provided in these resolutions. In fact the full subsidy proposed to be given to that railway company is $3,200 per mile from the Strait of Canso to Louisburg. These resolutions contemplate—and I thought I had made that clear—the connection by the line, as the hon. gentleman knows has been worked upon, as I may say—that parties have endeavored to work out for many years, or what is called the Megantic line. It is only recently that the Great European and Short Line Railway has struck directly to Houlton from Lake Megantic. That is the line they propose to build, and then ask a subsidy from Fredericton to Salisbury, or some other point near there. They then ask a subsidy from Painsic Junction to Baie Verte, and from Baie Verte to Pugwash, in order to shorten the line from Louisburg to Montreal, the long projected line, to secure which so many efforts have been made in order to shorten the distance between Montreal and the nearest ocean port, St. Andrews, and the next nearest, St. John, and the next Halifax. The hon. gentleman is aware that that line has always been projected to go from the State of Maine, in the neighborhood of Lake Megantic to Matawankeag, on the European and North American line. That is the line that has been projected, and it has this advantage. It not only goes through the great commercial centre of New Brunswick, St. John, but it has the advantage that it utilizes the Intercolonial all the way to Halifax. The hon. gentleman will see that in the one case about seventy to eighty miles more of the Intercolonial Railway by this line would be used than if they made the direct connection with Salisbury. No doubt if that line is constructed, it offers a shorter means of communication from Fredericton, and would be undoubtedly a still shorter and more direct line from Montreal to all these various ports and Louisburg.

Mr. BURPEE (Sunbury). I wish to know whether the Short Line Railway which has been incorporated will continue to be subsidized? The Government have subsidized it now as far as the Gut of Canso. We have no information as to whether it is going to proceed further. If it does not, then it is no short line, or a very short line. Is it going to proceed further, and if further, by what route? Do I understand that it is from the Gut of Canso to Pugwash and thence to the Intercolonial?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Of course, it is going to Halifax, you go through St. John to Halifax, so far as these resolutions are concerned. The line to Louisburg leaves the Intercolonial Railway at Oxford. The line that was subsidized last year runs from Oxford to New Glasgow, and direct from that by the present Eastern Extension Railway to the Gut of Canso, and from that to Louisburg by the line subsidized by these resolutions.

Mr. BURPEE. Then I understand the only part of the short line of railway now subsidized is the line from Canso to Louisburg, because it takes the Intercolonial from there to St. John, and from St. John by a rival line until it reaches MacAdam Junction, so that after all the only short line subsidized is not the "Short Line" of railway at all. But I wish to say further, that I was given to understand that no local railway would be subsidized. There was a railway in which I was interested and which formed a part of this short line railway which has merits, independently of its being a portion of that Short Line Railway, not inferior to any of the railways which I see subsidized, and which are emphatically local railways. Now, I was informed by very good authority, as the hon. Minister knows, that no local railways would be subsidized by the Government, and therefore this Central Railway could receive no subsidy. I now understand that the policy of the Government, as announced at that time to me and others, has been changed, and that local railways are to be subsidized.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Where?

Mr. BURPEE. By these resolutions I see two or three railways that are nothing but local railways.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Name them.

Mr. BURPEE. In fact it is difficult to put your finger upon one that is not a local railway. I take a local railway to be a railway in one Province. An inter-provincial or national railway is defined to be one running between two Provinces, while a local railway is confined to one Province. These railways are certainly local railways, although two or three of them connect with the Intercolonial Railway, and may be considered feeders of it, while others do not connect with any inter-provincial railway whatever. The Napanee and Quebec Railway and the Gatineau Railway are certainly local railways; in fact, all but two or three of them are local railways, and are within the bounds of a single Province. Therefore, I contend that the hon. Minister of Railways should explain why the policy of the Government, as announced heretofore, has been changed; because we were most emphatically told that no local railway would receive a subsidy from this Government, and, therefore, the subsidy for this Central Railway was not pressed further. I do say that this Central Railway for which a memorial was presented to this Government two or three times, and with reference to which members of this House, notably those for King's and Queen's (N.B.), with myself, waited upon the Department, has merits quite as great and more inter-provincial than any of those railways, and its claims would have been pressed had we not been assured that no local railway would receive a subsidy; though I do not pretend that any assurance was given that it would receive assistance if it should be made a portion of the Short Line Railway. But we were advised by the hon. Minister to apply for a subsidy for the Central Railway as a portion of the Short Line through railway. Now, this Central Railway leads from Fredericton to the Intercolonial Railway; it was to pass by the head of Grand Lake and proceed to some point on the Intercolonial Railway, between Salisbury and St. John, leaving it to the engineer to decide at what point it should connect with the Intercolonial Railway, and just there it would form as important a branch of, and feeder to, the Intercolonial Railway as would some of those railways mentioned in these resolutions. I am glad to see that St. John is likely to be made a terminus at last, as it should have been long ago. My material interests are much bound up in St. John, and I am glad to see aid given to St. John; but at the same time there are other portions of the country which should not be neglected. The portion of country through which this Central Railway will pass abounds in resources which require development. It is a good agricultural country, there are good farms fruitful in agricultural products, but it has no outlet except at one point for a portion of the season. During the winter the people are entirely shut up, and have no railway communication, and I think their interests demand some attention from this Government. Then there still remains a large amount of lumber in that portion of the country which could be got out and made available by a railway to the Intercolonial between Salisbury and St. John. Investigations have shown that there are large mineral resources in that portion of the country, together with large deposits of coal, but all these natural riches are useless without a railway to develop them. I contend that the development of these coal mines alone would warrant the Government in subsidizing this road. At present this coal is of no material advantage to the country. There are also in that region deposits of iron and several other minerals which only require development to create a large industry, and I do think that this part of the country has not been developed to the extent its importance demands. It was said by the hon. Minister of Railways, in his speech to-day, when speaking of the Gatineau Railway, that it was important that the country should be opened up in order to keep our people at home. I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, if there is any part of this Dominion which requires attention in this respect it is this very portion of New Brunswick. It is a fact that the people of that part of the Dominion are rapidly leaving it. I do not wish hon. gentlemen to cry "blue ruin" because I state a fact, for it is a fact, and it is well known that that part of the country, instead of increasing in population, has decreased during the last few years, simply because the resources of the country have been neglected. I could point to one school district in New Brunswick where every young man left last winter and went to the United States. I do not say they have all remained there, some have returned, but the majority are in the States to-day. I do say this: That if there is any part of the Dominion which is being neglected, and which demands from this Government attention, so that its resources may be developed, it is this part of the country lying between Fredericton on the line known as the Central Railway. There are some 10,000 inhabitants who would be benefited by a railway, and they are entirely shut out during six months of the year for the want of facilities furnished to almost every other part of the Dominion. I have spoken of people leaving the country. I assure the House it is a fact that in the district to which I have referred, the value of all real estate has fallen during the last ten years from 30 to 40 per cent., and in some instances very much more, for the reason I have mentioned, and that alone. It has resources equal to those of any other part of Canada I know of, but it has not facilities for communication with the outside world. If the Short Line Railway is diverted to St. John and made a long line, this Central Railway has the merits, independent of being a through line and a portion of the short line, that should receive attention; and I can assure the hon. Minister of Railways that had we known the policy of the Government had been changed, and that local lines would be subsidized, the different schemes being considered in regard to the resources with which the sections of the country were endowed, the claims of this road would have been pressed more vigorously. As it is, a large petition was presented to the Governor in Council from that district, asking for this railway to be assisted; I do not know the number of signatures attached, but the petition was a large one. I press the claims of this road, but I am not personally interested in it, and it will not bring railway communication nearer to me than it is at present, in the interest of a portion of my constituents, and portions of the counties of Queen's and King's—the member for King's I see before me, and he no doubt will speak for himself. In conclusion, I beg to say that this railway should have received larger consideration, or at all events some consideration, at the hands of the Government.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I regret exceedingly, as was stated by the hon. leader of the Opposition, that we have so little information before us with respect to the railways to be aided. I think it is very desirable, indeed, that in voting such a large sum as $2,138,000 we should have full information furnished in regard to the various lines of railway to be aided; that we should have a map especially of the Eastern Provinces, so that we could see the various connections to be made. We should also have information as to the nature of the country to be travelled, the traffic to be secured, the resources which the railway is expected to develop so that we might form an intelligent judgment as to the propriety of voting the subsidies. Hon. gentlemen will remember, and particularly the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) will remember, that in the Ontario Legislature before an Order in Council was passed granting aid to any railway, full information as to the cost of constructing the road, as to the cost of working the road, as to the financial status of the company asking aid, as to the resources of the country through which the railway was to pass, and information of a similar nature, was furnished.

Mr. RYKERT. There is a rule to that effect, but it is very seldom adhered to.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I am speaking of the rule, and it is a very important one, because such information is necessary in order to form a proper judgment as to the propriety of voting the money proposed. I think this legislation is very hasty, that these subsidies are to be voted very hastily. I do not agree with the hon. member for Lincoln, that the hon. leader of the Opposition is inconsistent with himself because he objects to voting these subsidies now, having, when leader of the Government in Ontario, passed several Orders in Council through the House to assist different railways in the Province. I do not think the statement of the hon. member for Lincoln is correct. His statement was that the Ontario Legislature voted money without information as to the railways to be subsidized, that legislation was forced upon the House, that the House had no opportunity of judging as to whether the roads to be aided required the desired aid, that the Orders in Council were forced through the House in a night, and so on. The hon. member for Lincoln should know, for he was in the Legislature at the time, that the House was in full possession of all necessary information in regard to every one of the railways to be aided, and had been in possession of information with regard to some of them for a long time. I will give the hon. gentleman the date and then he can make the necessary calculations. On 21st February notice was given of the railway aid resolutions; on the 22nd the debate commenced, and ended on the 23rd; on the 24th the report was received and Bill introduced founded thereon; the Bill was not read the second time until the 27th; the third reading was on the 28th, and on the 29th the Orders in Council were passed. Let us bear that date in mind, and we will see how long the House was in possession of the information on which they were expected to pass judgment.

Mr. RYKERT. Of what year?

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). February, 1872. There were ten railway companies aided. Information respecting the Kingston and Pembroke, the Canada Central, the Montreal and Ottawa, and Grand Junction, was laid on the Table on February 5th, and therefore the House had twenty-four days to consider whether aid should be granted to those four companies. On February 7th information in regard to the Midland, Toronto, Simcoe and Muskoka was laid on the Table of the House, so that members had twenty-two days to consider whether aid should be granted to those lines. On February 8th information was laid on the Table with respect to the Wellington, Grey and Bruce, and Toronto Grey and Bruce, and thus members had twenty-one days to consider whether aid should be granted to those companies. And on 16th February information was laid on the Table of the House as to the Toronto and Nipissing and Hamilton and Lake Erie, so that the House had thirteen days to consider the giving of aid to these railways. Further supplementary information was brought down on the 20th, so that hon. gentleman will see that varying from thirteen to twenty-four days the House had ample time to consider all the information laid before it, as to whether various lines of railway should receive subsidies; and I think that the hon. gentleman must have agreed in that view himself. I said that the House was asked to pass judgment on this matter on the 29th of February. Now, my hon. friend says that the Ontario Legislature had not the necessary information on which to pass judgment, but what did the hon. gentleman do? Without that necessary information the hon. gentleman voted for every one of these subsidies from the very first to the very last. The first Order in Council was moved on the 29th of February, and there were only some nine members of the House who voted against it. The other members voted for it. How many of them did so? Sixty-two voted yea, and seven nay; and among those who chose, without information on which to pass judgment, as the hon. gentleman said, to do this, I find the names of Reed, Robertson, Rykert, &c.; and this runs down through to the tenth Order in Council. But what did my hon. friend do when the tenth Order in Council was proposed? He gets up—no, he did not get up, hon. M. C. Cameron, the leader of the Opposition got up, and moved an amendment as follows:—

"That while this House is willing to make all just provision for railways, and assents to the said resolution, it feels bound to express the opinion that the said Order in Council, together with nine other Orders in Council, involving an aggregate appropriation of $1,500,000, having only been placed on the Table of this House at its Session yesterday, and the Government, to repeated requests, having refused to give information as to the undertakings they intended to pass Orders in Council in favor of, till this House had voted an additional subsidy of $400,000 and a further appropriation of $100,000 a year for twenty years, Government has not given this House sufficient time for the consideration of the said Order in Council, to enable it to give an intelligent and just judgment upon the claims of the several enterprises, and that in future Orders in Council requiring the ratification of this House should be submitted at an earlier period of the Session, and should not be taken into consideration by this House until the same has been before the House for at least five days."

What does this mean? That the hon. gentleman, after declaring that hereafter they should have five days to consider every Order in Council, declared by his votes, that he did not need five days in which to consider Orders in Council at all—that is, after voting for every one of these resolutions and ratifying every Order in Council, then he comes down and says: "We want five days in which to consider any other Order in Council;" and with these votes ten times repeated on the Journals of the Ontario Legislature, the hon. gentlemen gets up here and censures the leader of the Opposition for bringing in resolutions without one consideration.

After Recess.

Mr. ROSS. I complained, in my opening remarks, that the hon. Minister of Railways, in asking the House to vote the large sum of $2,138,000 as subsidies to railroads in different parts of the Dominion, did not furnish us with the necessary information on which to form a judgment as to the propriety of the subsidies which we are asked to give, and of the course which the hon. Minister asks the House to take. I think that I had just ground for making this complaint. The hon. Minister understands that it is no small matter in the face of the large expenditure which is already imposed upon us as a Dominion, to ask us to subsidize railroads to the extent of $2,000,000 more. He is no doubt aware that the expenditure of the Dominion is rapidly increasing—that it has risen nearly $1,000,000 in the last five years; and that every subsidy which we are asked to vote to a railroad, and every expenditure which we are asked to make, are adding to these burdens. I think that my complaint was well founded. We have, however, in the speech of the hon. gentleman a few hints as to why some of these railroads in this list should be subsidized. He tells us that he thinks that the House will be justified in subsidizing the Baie des Chaleurs Railroad to the extent of $320,000, and the Caraquet Railway Company to the extent of $115,200, because it will furnish the fishermen of the Eastern coasts of the Dominion better facilities for sending fish to the Western market. It is a new thing, I think, in the history of Canada, for us to build 136 miles of railway at a subsidized expense of $435,200 for this purpose; these fishermen have ample facilities for sending their fish to the Western markets as things now are. If this was a country into which no railway had ever entered, and it had no facilities at all whereby the fishermen on the Eastern coast could reach the Western market, and the markets in the different parts of the Dominion, then I, as readily as any other person, would most gladly assist the Government in providing every facility for these men, in order that those engaged in that industry might receive the best reward possible for their labor. But, Sir, we have the Intercolonial Railway. Does the hon. gentleman say that the Intercolonial Railway is inadequate to the task? We have built that road at an expense of $39,000,000; that road certainly furnishes ample facilities, it makes the best possible connection with all the railroads of the Dominion, and it is thoroughly equal to the task of carrying the produce of the sea to the western markets of the Dominion. Besides, we have in summer the water facilities necessary for that trade, so that I think the argument of the hon. gentleman in respect to this railway is rather far fetched. Having disposed of the objection which he supposed might be raised to the subsidizing of that road, the hon. gentleman proceeds to discuss the propriety of subsidizing the Gatineau Railway. His reasons are new ones. He has discovered that up in the valley of the Gatineau there is a vast tract of fertile land hitherto undeveloped. There may be some truth in that statement. Ottawa county is one of the largest in the Dominion, though its population is somewhat sparse—a state of things which would undoubtedly be one of the best arguments for the construction of a railway. But I contend, Sir, that this is a purely local work, that it has no claim upon the Dominion Exchequer at all. There is a company already organised for the construction of that road. Has the hon. gentleman informed the House that that company is unequal to the task of developing that country? That its resources have all been exhausted. What peculiar emergency has arisen which renders it necessary that this road should be subsidized? I fear—and I must speak my mind frankly—that there are other reasons besides the hon. gentleman's desire to develop the resources of that fine country. The land may be fertile, but are there not other reasons at the back of all this? Is he prepared to say that that railway is not to be built there for the encouragement of other industries as well as the agricultural industries. Does he not know that one of his strongest supporters is vice-president of that road, that an old supporter is president, and that there are political interests which the hon. gentleman is just as anxious to cultivate as the agricultural interest of that county: Besides, if he could give us a Dominion reason, a general reason for the construction of that road, we would sink all these political distinctions on a question of this kind; but whatever reasons apply to the construction of the Gatineau Valley Railway will apply with equal force to the construction of any road similarly situated in the Province of Quebec; and I think he would find from Montreal to Quebec numerous instances in which claims might be made quite as strong—if political influences are equally strong—as any claims which this road may have upon him. Then he proposes to subsidize a road called the American and European, the particular portion to be subsidized being on the Island of Cape Breton. I think it would be only fair that our Western Provinces should be equally loyal in the development of the Eastern part of Canada as the representatives of the Maritime Provinces have been in the development of the Western Provinces; particularly as every effort for the development of the great North-West has received a hearty support from these representatives. Our great trans-continental railway has received from them an almost undivided support from its inception. But this is not a trans-continental railway; it is a local railway. If it were necessary, in the interest of the Dominion, if it were like the Canadian Pacific Railway intended to bind the different Provinces together and afford facilities for intercourse between them my objections would be immediately removed. Indeed if that were its purpose it should be more liberally subsidized than it is. But this is practically a local railway through the Island of Cape Breton with an area of 748,000 acres and a population of something like 31,000 souls.

An hon. MEMBER. That is only one county, and there are three more.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I am glad the hon. gentleman has put me right; but let us say the Island is four times as large as I stated, and has a population of 96,000. The hon. Minister of Railways used a different argument with regard to this road from the argument he used with regard to the others. He said this was to be the eastern portion of a great railway which is going to shorten the distance from Montreal to the sea, and also shorten proportionately the distance to Liverpool. At first sight that argument seems to be a pretty strong one, as it is very desirable that we should place ourselves in connection with the Old Country by the shortest possible route—that being the argument which was used here a few years ago when it was proposed to construct a railroad on to Newfoundland, with various ferriages. But in proposing to build this road he is proposing to carry out a policy which is adverse to the interests of the Intercolonial, which was built by the people of this country at a very large expense. Though the road is tolerably well managed by the hon. gentleman, still it did not pay running expenses the last six months, and we do not know that it will for the current six months. But we do know that if other roads are to be subsidized to compete for the traffic which rightfully belongs to the Intercolonial Railway, all hope of its paying running expenses will be gone. Is that the policy which the hon. gentleman pursues with regard to the Canadian Pacific Railway? The other day, when asked if he would sacrifice the interests of the other Provinces to the interests of the Canadian Pacific Railway, he said: "Yes," in his emphatic way. He has one policy for the Canadian Pacific Railway, and, to a certain extent, a reasonable one, and another for the Intercolonial Railway. On the one hand, he is going to feed and nourish a great railway monopoly, and on the other he is going to starve, as far as competition can starve, another great railway to the East. That is a policy which, I think, the House will not approve. It strikes me as being a suicidal policy—as being one which the House should not adopt, because it is the beginning of a series of competitions which may result more disastrously than we can foresee. But that is not all, for while he is subsidizing that road to compete with the Intercolonial Railway, he is subsidizing others, as for instance the International, which is to divert the trade in another direction. I cannot state whether it will divert it into the State of Maine, because I do not remember. But if it does, where is the propriety of subsidizing the Sherbrooke Railway to the extent of $156,800? What is the condition of that railway? It is nearly completed at the present moment. The hon. Minister's proposal is to lay that road with steel rails in lieu of iron rails, with which it is laid at present. Now, who is most interested in that road? One of the hon. gentleman's colleagues, the hon. member for Compton (Mr. Pope). He is one of the largest stockholders in that road, and shall we be uncharitable if we say that the hon. gentleman's colleague is going to profit from this subsidy. Not only is it wrong to subsidize a local railway with Dominion money, but this fact of the hon. gentleman's colleague being interested, is in itself a suspicious circumstance. Then going West, I come to a railway in the Province of Ontario, the Napanee, Tamworth, and Quebec Railway. This is of all others perhaps the greatest outrage in the whole list of subsidies. Where does that road lead to? What is the object of the subsidy? The hon. gentleman says to connect the Quebec and Ontario road with the water on the front, as if that road could have no connection without the subsidy. If that principle is to hold good, why not subsidize the Kingston and Pembroke Railway, the road running from Belleville to Madoc, or the road running from Cobourg to Rice Lake? I can find a dozen instances in which the argument of the hon. gentleman will be just as strong as it is in this case. If he could show that he was developing some great industry or the resources of the northern parts of the counties of Lennox and Addington, as he has shown in the Gatineau Valley Railway there would be some ground for assuming that his subsidy is proper; but it is just to connect by a short railroad twenty-eight miles long, the back part of the country with the front part. Are there any local difficulties to prevent the construction of that road? Is there not something a little suspicious in this case also? That railroad had applied repeatedly to the Ontario Legislature for a subsidy; for some reason it was refused. I fancy on the ground that the company could not show that they had the means to build the road and carry it on successfully. Were there not promises made during the last Election that if certain things were arranged politically, that road would be subsidized? Were there not certain rumors that if the hon. the First Minister were elected for Lennox, and certain things were done in the local election, that road would receive all possible consideration? And on the back of these rumors we have this subsidy placed before us for the Napanee, Tamworth and Quebec Railway. Put this and that together and they confirm the suspicion that political considerations have been made to override all other considerations. Going further west, I come to the railway from Gravenhurst to Callander, and I will tell the hon. gentleman that I approve most cordially with that subsidy, just as I would approve of a subsidy to the Cape Breton Railway, if it was shown to be an essential link of our national railway system. I think the hon. gentleman's argument on this point was unanswerable. The argument was that inasmuch as the Canada Central Railway was subsidized to the extent of $12,000 a mile, and that the Canada Central connected the Canadian Pacific with the Quebec system of railways, therefore the Ontario system should be similarly favored. That position is sound. You have a great system of railways placed by two similar subsidies in connection with two other systems of railways; both are treated alike. So far as that subsidy is concerned it is one that this House could not well refuse, for it rests on national grounds; it is not for a local road, but for one for the development of the whole Dominion. Now, after having referred to the different subsidies which the hon. gentleman proposes, allow me to call his attention to the dangerous step he is taking. I was unavoidably called away before the close of last Session and did not hear the argument used in favor of the subsidies for railways then granted; but I notice, on referring to the Votes and Proceedings, that this House granted $1,500,000. This year it is proposed to grant $2,138,000, an increase of one-half a million dollars in one year; and that increase is not the worst feature in the case. What the hon. gentleman began is going on grandly. What amount shall be required next year if hon. gentlemen opposite pursue the same course? The very argument the hon. Minister used to-night in favor of the different subsidies proposed will be invincible in the mouths of the deputations and lobbyists who will come down with demands for railroads in future years. He has opened the flood-gates, and close them he cannot. He has laid down a precedent which too many in different parts in this country will be disposed to act upon. And what is the most dangerous side of the precedent is this: That he has stepped entirely outside of what is purely national and Dominion, into what is purely Provincial legislation, and instead of leaving the Provinces to develop their resources according to their discretion, he takes the surplus of this Dominion and subsidizes local railways with it. What is it but another mode of subsidizing the Local Legislatures, to do for them what they should do for themselves. Every grant to the Province of Nova Scotia, or to the Province of New Brunswick, is an additional subsidy to that Province. We have some 274 miles of railway subsidized in the Province of Quebec. We have heard something of "better terms" for the Province of Quebec. Better terms were refused, so far as I can learn; but we have here another form of "better terms." We know that when the Province of Quebec could not get a subsidy for the North Shore line, the people of that Province built it out of their own resources. They have now exhausted their resources, and the hon. gentleman fearing to give them a subsidy directly, gives them this subsidy indirectly. The same with reference to the twenty-eight miles from Napanee to Tamworth, in Ontario. The other Ontario road I do not look upon as being in a similar condition, for it is not a local but a Dominion road. Since the hon. gentleman has subsidized one railroad in the Province of Ontario, a local road, will he be surprised if deputations from various parts of the Province next year should wait on him and ask him to subsidize their railroads. I will not be surprised if he should be waited upon by deputations by the score, but I will be surprised if he should succeed in resisting their claims, and refusing them subsidies. He has entered on the domain of Provincial legislation, and by a direct process has subsidized the various Provinces instead of leaving them to carry on their own enterprises. Then the basis on which the hon. gentleman subsidizes those roads is very flimsy. If the hon. gentleman, in the course of his arguments, had examined the course adopted by the Province of Ontario, he would find, as I said before, that every railway in Ontario is obliged to show that it has a good financial basis before it can receive one dollar from the public exchequer. I have just had time to look into some of those Orders in Council that were under discussion before the House took Recess. The first one that I came upon was with reference to the demand made by the North Grey Railway Company, for a subsidy from the Local Legislature. They first put in a statement in which they were obliged to show that the line was surveyed and located, how much it would cost per mile, and whether a contract was let, and at what price; also, how much more over and above the local aid and stock would be required to build the road. This was the first representation made by the North Grey Railway Company; but that was not satisfactory to the Government, and they were obliged to supplement it by another, showing the bonuses granted by the various municipalities. That was not satisfactory, and the Government called for a list of the stockholders. They furnished the list, but still that was not satisfactory, and they were obliged to state the amount of money subscribed by each stockholder. Nor was that satisfactory, and further demands were made. The Government required to know the contract price as fixed by a competent railway engineer, and it was not until all this information was given that the Order in Council was passed to aid the North Grey Railway. You see, therefore, how in Ontario the Government guarded itself by every possible means, so as to be sure the money voted would not be lost. Has the hon. gentleman so guarded himself? Is the hon. gentleman satisfied the bonus to the Gatineau Railway will build it, and that when this bonus is spent the company will not call for another bonus? He has no guarantee that it will not. It is the thin end of the wedge, as the hon. gentleman himself stated once in speaking of another subject, that has been inserted, and it is thus that men who are disposed to draw on the Government rather than on their own resources will, when compelled by necessity, feel themselves entitled to ask Parliament for farther aid. And the hon. gentleman will be compelled, in order that the money spent be not lost to the country, to give further aid. The proper way is to help those who help themselves. The proper way is to spend the money on a somewhat similar basis as that on which the Ontario Government spend their money, so as to be assured that every dollar is expended in an investment which will be productive of benefit to the people. The hon. gentleman, in order to find an excuse for those subsidies, said that Mr. Mackenzie's plan was to subsidize local railways. The hon. leader of the Opposition has sufficiently answered that allegation. I remember when we had a discussion as to the loan of iron rails, Mr. Mackenzie declared his policy to be not to subsidize local railways, but to dispose of the unnecessary iron rails of the Intercolonial Railway, in order to assist these roads that might be feeders for the Intercolonial Railway, and not be competing lines. Can the hon. gentleman show a single line assisted by Mr. Mackenzie that was a competing line? As far as I remember they were feeders and not competing lines. I look upon this system of subsidizing local railways—and let it be understood that I am speaking for myself alone—as a dangerous step for this Dominion to take. You will allow me to say so strongly and earnestly. I think the House should pause before we vote any more subsidies, and that the hon. gentleman should at least give us more information than he has given before asking the vote. I trust he will be able before calling upon us to vote this money to give substantial reasons why we should do so.

Mr. BURNS. I rise for the purpose of correcting the hon. gentleman in some particulars with reference to one railway, that is the Caraquet Railway. I was glad to hear the hon. gentleman say that if the fishermen of that or any other locality in the East were deprived of the means of getting access to the western market, he for one would gladly furnish them with that means. The hon. gentleman asked if the Intercolonial were not equal to the task. The particular point with which I desire to make the hon. gentleman acquainted, is, that in order to reach the Intercolonial Railway it is necessary, in the case of the road on the Baie des Chaleurs, to traverse a distance of 100 or 120 miles, and in the case of the road known as the Caraquet Railway, it is necessary to traverse from forty-five to seventy miles. How can the fishermen living at a distance of seventy miles from the Intercolonial Railway have access to that road unless they are afforded facilities by the construction of other railways. With reference to this project it is no new scheme. It has occupied the attention of the House and country for very many years. As far back as 1865, when the question of the Intercolonial Railway was under discussion, the engineer of the Government at that time, Mr. Sandford Fleming, made a very exhaustive report on the various routes, and in that report he made reference to this scheme in connection with a short route to Europe; and this, I may say, is another short route, but it does not follow that it is a competing line. I cannot do better in informing the House with reference to the merits of this road in that particular character, than by reading an extract or two from the report of Mr. Sandford Fleming:

"Under these circumstances, it is too apparent that the International Railway may find in the United States route, a formidable rival for Canadian passenger traffic, to and from Europe, by way of Halifax.

"Fortunately, with a view to counteract this difficulty, a line by the Bay Chaleurs would offer special advantages, which may here be noticed.

"The chart which accompanies this will show that the entrance to the Bay Chaleurs is so situated, geographically, that while it is about as near Europe as the entrance to Halifax Harbor, it is, at the same time, several hundred miles nearer Montreal and all points west of that city.

"Some of the projected lines of railway touch the Bay Chaleurs at Dalhousie and at Bathurst; the latter place is not admitted to be suitable for the purposes of steam navigation, and the former, although in possession of a fine sheet of water, well sheltered and accessible at all conditions of the tide, is, nevertheless, from its position at the extreme westerly end of the Bay, farther inland than might be wished. In order to reduce the steamship passage to a minimum, it is desirable to have the point of embarkation as far easterly as possible, and therefore the existence of a commodious harbor near the entrance of the Bay is of no little importance. A place named Shippigan, on the southerly side of the entrance of the Bay Chaleurs, appears to have many of the requisites of a good harbor. It is thus spoken of in the reports on the Sea and River Fisheries of New Brunswick, published under the authority of the Legislature of that Province.

"GREAT SHIPPIGAN HARBOR.

"This spacious harbor is formed between Shippigan and Pooksoudie Island and the mainland. It comprises three large and commodious harbors: first, the great inlet of Amqui, in Shippigan Island, the depth of water into which is from four to six fathoms; second, the extensive and well-sheltered sheet of water, called St. Simon's Inlet, the channel leading to which, between Pooksoudie Island and the main, is one mile in width, with seven fathoms water from side to side.

"The principal entrance from the Bay Chaleurs has not less than five fathoms on the bar, inside which, within the harbor, there are six and seven fathoms, up to the usual loading place in front of Messrs. Moore and Harding's steam saw mill at the village; from thence to the gully there is about three fathoms of water only. Vessels within the Harbor of Shippigan have good anchorage, are quiet safe with every wind, and can load in the strongest gale. The rise and fall of the tide is about seven feet.

"The noble haven called St. Simon's Inlet, the shores of which are almost wholly unsettled and in a wilderness state, runs several miles into the land, maintaining a good depth of water almost to its western extremity.

"Duncan McNeil, an old pilot, frequently employed on the Government steamers when calling at New Brunswick ports, describes Shippigan as a good harbor, with plenty of water, regular soundings and tough blue clay-holding ground, indeed where vessels would be perfectly secure in any storm. He says that he could take a ship of heavy draught into it in any weather, by night or by day; that in dirty or dark weather he would go entirely by the lead.

"Others describe Shippigan Harbor as unobjectionable. The Admiralty Chart seems to agree in the main with the descriptions above given; it shows that the area of the basin, embracing only the water over the three-fathom line at low tide, is about two and a half square miles; a sheet about double the size of Halifax Harbor between St. George Island and the narrows to Bedford Basin. The only objectionable feature seems to be the channel at the entrance, which is about three miles long, to the basin, a little crooked, and at present without leading marks; it is, however, about half a mile in width, free from all obstructions the depth varying from five to nine fathoms at low water. There is good warning by the lead in the channel and the approaches to it.

"It would appear from the above, therefore, that Shippigan Sound presents a favorable opportunity for forming a traffic connection between the Intercolonial Railway and Ocean Steamers.

"A comparison of distances will now show the importance of Shippigan, in connection with the contemplated Railway:

While at the same time Halifax will be nearer to Montreal and all points west by 300 miles. Therefore, I say that on that ground alone the promoters of this scheme would be warranted in asking this House to aid a railway which in the future, at all events, will be of incalculable benefit to this Dominion at large. But, Sir, the scheme is not put forward on that ground alone, it is put forward, perhaps, with even greater force on other grounds, and that is, the immense trade the road would develop and would tend to build up, not only in that particular locality, but over the Dominion as a whole. By the construction of that road an enormous trade would be given to the Intercolonial Railway; as a feeder of the Intercolonial Railway it is not second in importance to any other road, and because it is a feeder of the Intercolonial Railway I assume that my hon. friend opposite can have no objection to it. As I understand him he is in favor of any road that will feed the Intercolonial Railway. To give an idea of the amount of trade done along that road, and of the population interested in it, I may inform the House that between the point where it is proposed to connect with the Intercolonial Railway and the terminus of Caraquet or Shippigan, a distance of 45 miles, there is a population of 18,000 souls. The whole country from end to end of the proposed road is settled. The value of the products of that section of the country during the past year amounted to some $1,000,000, made up as follows: Lumber, $300,000; fish, comprising canned goods, codfish, salmon, herring, mackerel and oysters, $500,000; grindstone, $50,000; farm produce, $150,000. There are a number of other industries which would contribute to give the road a large trade, and all of which would find its way to the Intercolonial Railway. To the West this road will be a great benefit, inasmuch as it will afford the people an opportunity, which is now denied them, of getting their fish in a fresh condition, and they will have a larger market for their products, as well as the East a larger market for theirs. Another thing I may say in connection with this road is, that notwithstanding the many applications made to the Government of Canada during past years, no aid was given in the shape of steamboat subsidy to promote the trade of the section of country through which the proposed road will pass. My predecessor in this House last Session, a gentleman, Sir, who filled your position for some years, urged on the Government that a steamer should be subsidized in order that facilities might be given to carry on the trade of that locality, but he was unsuccessful in procuring such aid. During last Session, when the matter of railways was under discussion, he called the attention of the House to this particular railroad; therefore, the House is familiar with it and its merits, and I hope it will receive the favorable consideration of the House. In view of some criticism that has been made on the other side, I would remind the House that during the Mackenzie Administration in 1874, a road was surveyed from Bathurst to Shippigan; so I think it comes with ill grace from our hon. friends opposite to say that these railway subsidies are given in order to make political capital. Was it to make political capital for my predecessor that, in 1874, they proceeded to make a survey of that railway? Was it in order to prepare for the Elections that they caused a survey to be made from Shippigan to the town of Bathurst? I will accord to them what I desire to be accorded to ourselves, that they were actuated by the best possible motives in making a survey for this railway. While I think hon. gentlemen, more particularly interested than I am, will be able to reply to the observations of the hon. gentleman with reference to the Louisburg road, I may be permitted to say in answer to the argument the hon. gentleman adduced that the building of that outlet would be an injury to the Intercolonial Railway, that on the contrary, by carrying out the scheme of what is called the Megantic Road, passing from the Province of Quebec through a portion of the State of Maine, tapping western extension and passing through St. John, that same line, in order to get to Louisburg, on the ocean, will pass over the Intercolonial Railway for a great portion of its distance. Hon. gentlemen more particularly interested can substantiate those arguments.

Mr. BURNB,

Mr. WRIGHT. I generally listen with much pleasure to the remarks of the hon. member for West Middlesex. But to-night I have been much disappointed. His statements concerning the county of Ottawa and the Gatineau Railway have not been characterized by his usual accuracy. The hon. gentleman stated that the president of the Gatineau Railway was a member of this House. This statement is incorrect, and the hon. gentleman has been misinformed. The president of this road is Mr. Currier, late M. P. for the city of Ottawa, and an old colleague of mine, whose name is respected throughout the Dominion. With regard to the subject-matter before the House, I can state that the Railway Resolutions introduced by the Government, meet with my hearty and cordial approval. During the last Session of the last Parliament, the Government inaugurated the policy of granting aid to certain railways. On that occasion I congratulated the hon. Minister of Railways for his liberal and enlightened policy, and expressed a hope that that most important scheme, the Gatineau Valley Railway, would meet with favorable consideration when this policy was carried to its natural and legitimate conclusion. I have to thank the Government to-night for the consideration which they have given to my remarks in this connection. I think that the policy of the Government in granting aid to railways throughout the Dominion, is a wise and good one, as, without railways, it will be impossible to develop our resources, and keep pace with the march of progress and civilization throughout the world. I have always been in favor of railroad extension and development. It appears to me that in a young land like ours, they are indispensable to our advancement and prosperity. We have granted aid to many railroads, and in every case the money has, I think, been well spent. We have aided the Grand Trunk, the Pacific, Occidental, and all the main lines. We have the Intercolonial connecting us with the Maritime Provinces; and now, having arranged for the completion of the main trunk lines, we help just the branches which will feed them. In this way only can our railway system be made complete. The hon. member for West Middlesex alluded to, in a somewhat sneering manner, the sparseness of the inhabitants in the county of Ottawa. Well, I can correct him also on that point. It is quite true that the county could afford land for millions of settlers instead of the thousands who now inhabit it. But the hon. gentlemen should recollect that we have spent many millions, and must still spend more millions, to reach British Columbia, a Province that is inhabited by 20,000 white people. I do not underrate that splendid Province on that account. I recognize its importance to the Dominion, and, on all occasions, I have done my best to aid every proposal which would contribute to its development. We are giving millions in aid of enterprises which will benefit that Province. The county of Ottawa has a population nearly approaching 50,000, which is more than twice the entire population of British Columbia; I think, therefore, that my hon. friend must admit that we are not unreasonable in asking for some aid to our railway enterprises. The county of Ottawa has contributed more than any other county in the Dominion to the resources of the Dominion, by means of lumber dues, and has received less in return. The small subsidy which the Government proposes to give is well deserved, and I only regret that it is not larger. I forwarded a memorial to the Government, signed by more than a hundred members of this House, praying that the Government would give $6,000 per mile to the Gatineau Valley Railway, and the Colonization Railway from Buckingham. I regret very much that no grant has been made for the Buckingham branch; the construction of this line would give a vast impetus to the development of the magnificent mineral resources of that region. I must hope that the desired aid will be afforded next Session. The mineral resources of that phosphate region are somewhat marvellous. I am delighted to learn that some arrangement will soon be made by which the iron pyrites of the Eastern Townships, and the phosphates of the county of Ottawa, will be brought into contact, so that that most valuable fertilizer will be manufactured in that county, instead of phosphates being taken over the sea. The construction of those railways will practically add another Province to the Dominion. I said to a member of the Government the other day, in discussing the general railway policy of the Government in connection with the North-West and its ultimate development, that under the very shadow of the Parliament buildings, lying at our very door, was an immense and unknown territory, teeming with mineral and all other kinds of wealth. I also told him that it is only a railroad system which can secure for this its appropriate development. The county of Ottawa extends far into the interior, the Gatineau River runs some 400 miles into this region, and takes its rise in the vicinity of the great affluents of the Saguenay and the St. Maurice. The country lying between these rivers is the one which we are trying to open up, it is literally a terra incognita. This country possesses great mineral, lumbering and agricultural resources. The splendid eulogium passed on this region by the hon. Minister of Railways was well deserved. Its colors were very gorgeous and brilliant, but were not overdrawn, he literally held the mirror up to Nature. Any one who travels on the Occidental Railway must notice a wealth of phosphate; for miles along the line of that railway. We can hardly realize what the effect will be when scientific skill and railway enterprise come to the aid of the hardy miners. The construction of these railways will aid the settlement of the country, and will prove invaluable feeders to the great Dominion railway system; will develop the mineral, agricultural and all other resources of this region.

I am assured that far up in that Gatineau region there is much good land, on which millions of Canadian people could find happy homes. The Lacustrine system of this country is one of the finest in the world. The whole country is dotted with lakes, teeming with trout, and filled with all the fish which abound in our Canadian waters. The construction of this railroad will enable large forests of maple, beech, and other hardwoods, to be utilized for the purpose of supplying the cities of Ottawa, Toronto, and Quebec with valuable fuel. Owing to the number of falls on the Gatineau river, only certain kinds of timber can be brought down it, and consequently much of the timber remains there. I have been assured that immense forests of oak, birch, maple, and all other hardwoods which exist in Canada, still remain there, and cannot be utilized except by means of a railway. It is intended to construct this railway to the River Desert, ultimately to James' Bay. It will pass for a hundred miles through a country somewhat rough, but settled by a prosperous, active, and intelligent people. The way traffic alone would justify the construction of the road. The Gatineau River is a series of water-powers which would drive the spindles of the world. If manufactories could be started in that region, if these water-powers can be used in promoting the development of our mineral, agricultural and other resources, the advantage to the Dominion and the Province of Quebec would be incalculable. Every year we have a great fair at the Pickanock, a place in the township of Wright, which it is proposed to touch with this railway. I attend this fair every year, and I am much pleased with the exhibition. Some of the finest cattle in the Dominion can be seen; chosen specimens from the herds of Senator Cochrane attract attention; the display of cereals is very fine, and the root crops equal, if they do not exceed, those of Manitoba. Mr. Ellard tells me that his Gatineau wheat is used by agents to lure emigrants to Manitoba. Taken altogether the display in that exhibition would reflect credit on any part of Canada. Some of the farmers in that Gatineau country would astonish those who think it to be a poor country. Those of the Messrs. Hall, G. Hamilton, Gilmore and Ellard would be regarded as model farms anywhere. Some years ago I visited Maniwaki, a settlement away near the confluence of the River Desert with the Gatineau. I found this a thriving settlement with a people full of life, energy and activity. I was assured that the future of that section depended on the construction of a railway; as the timber was cut off, the market of the inhabitants receded, and railway communication with the outer world was indispensable to their existence. It was there I met the Rev. Mr. Deleage, the worthy successor of those grand French missionaries who did so much to illustrate the early history of this country. For forty years this priest has resided in the wilderness. For forty years he has devoted himself to the services of the savage tribes who inhabited the Upper Gatineau. He built a splendid church of crystalline limestone, which stood like a beacon light to point the way from the darkness of the forest to the light of Christianity and civilization. He built grist and saw mills, and devoted himself to the temporal, as well as the spiritual, wants of the people. He was beloved and respected by both the Protestant and Catholic. It was from this worthy man that I derived my information concerning this region. He assured me that in that region there was good land on which millions of Canadian people could find happy homes. He described the fertility of the soil, telling me that on one occasion he had reaped sixty bushels of wheat from one bushel which he had sown, and that in all respects the country was a most desirable one. I am much pleased to find in these resolutions a subsidy to Father Labelle's road from St. Jerome to the River Desert; it is desirable that this road should be encouraged in every possible manner. Father Labelle is engaged in a great work of repatriation and colonization. He has already, I am assured, settled 10,000 people within a few years in the new townships on the proposed line of this railway. He is endowed with an ardent patriotism and singular energy and intelligence. He recognizes distinctly the importance of railroad extension and development. Many years ago at a great banquet in Montreal, I heard the reverend gentleman enunciate his faith in railways as promoters of civilization. I think that the policy of the Government is likely to keep the people in our own country, although the great North-West may be all that it is described to be. I for one prefer our own country and should like to keep our people in it. I honestly trust that the Government will be able to give us an additional grant next year, feeling that its policy will meet the approval of the vast majority of the people of the Dominion.

Mr. RYKERT. I desire to place myself right before the House in consequence of the remarks made by the hon. member for West Middlesex. He seems to have the happy faculty of endeavoring to mis-state the facts he presents to the House, and in distorting what gentlemen say on this side of the House. The hon. gentleman has contradicted me on several points. What I did say before Recess was based entirely on my recollection of facts which took place twelve or thirteen years ago. Since that time I have consulted his own organ, the Globe, and I find that everything I stated is entirely correct. In order that the House may fully understand—

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I do not object to the hon. gentleman speaking again, but, of course, he knows his position; I only wish to point out that sometimes an hon. member on this side who takes the course he is now taking, is objected to. I simply wish him to bear that fact in mind.

Mr. BERGIN. I move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. RYKERT. This is a little game that two can play at. Hon. gentlemen opposite do not seem desirous of having the facts placed on record; and inasmuch as they have made the same mis-statements throughout the length and breadth of Ontario, I desire now to set these statements at rest, and to place before the House and the country the facts; and I defy contradiction. I stated before Recess that the leader of the Opposition had, while Premier of the Local Legislature, brought down certain resolutions on the eve of the close of the Legislature without giving opportunity to the members fairly and honestly to discuss them. I stated also that the hon. gentleman had been challenged to give information as regards these resolutions, and the hon. gentleman shook his head, denying my statement. I think I will be able to show before I sit down from his own authority, the Globe, that my statements were correct, and justified what I did state. The member for West Middlesex states that all the information was given to the House in order that the members might come to an intelligent conclusion upon those several resolutions then before the House. The hon. gentleman said that certain petitions were presented in the early part of the Session. Certainly they were, but he forgot the most important fact that petitions are not before the House until they are ordered to be printed; and if the hon. gentleman consults the record he will find that a number of these petitions were not ordered to be printed until the day before the resolutions came down. Now, I have the facts as they are presented on the Journals of the House. There were ten resolutions which I say were sprung on the House and forced through in one sitting. Four of these petitions were presented on the 5th of February and the supplementary papers on the 20th of February: two of them were presented on the 7th and the supplementary on the 20th of February; two upon the 8th and the supplementary on the 23rd of February, that is, one day after the resolutions were carried in the House; two on the 21st of February; four were ordered to be printed on the 6th, two on the 16th, and two on the 21st of February. The resolutions were introduced on the 22nd of February, and carried through Committee on the 23rd; the Bill was introduced founded on these resolutions on the 24th; it was passed on the 28th, and the Orders in Council were presented on the evening of the 28th. The first Order of the Day on the 29th was the resolutions moved by the leader of the Opposition. Now, the hon. gentleman says, I did not state correctly my position regarding these resolutions. I stated distinctly to the House—and I had before me the resolutions he referred to at the time—that I opposed every motion for the appropriation of money in favor of railways, and if the hon. gentleman refers to the Journals of the House, he will find on pages 201, 202, 205 and 206 two motions, on page 228 three motions, and on pages 229 and 230 that I opposed the resolutions at every stage; that when the House had decided to appropriate the funds in favor of railways, and when the Orders in Council were presented I distinctly told the House, as is reported in the Globe, that I offered all opposition to the appropriation of the money, but that it rested entirely with the House to say which railways should have aid. That is what I stated. I have the record before me, and it is just as well that I should set the leader of the Opposition right. When the resolutions were brought down I am reported as having said:

“Having done all he could to oppose the Railway Resolutions he could not raise any further objection, but would lend his aid in carrying out the policy of the Government in good faith.”

Those resolutions were brought down to the House, and one division taken, and I supported them. Eight others were proposed without any division in the House. When the resolutions were read in the House, Mr. Cameron moved, and I seconded, a resolution condemning the Government for bringing them down without giving proper explanations which would enable us to come to an intelligent conclusion. On that occasion I stated my views on the subject, and I am reported in the Globe as follows:—

“The country had not the right to expect such a dangling policy from the leader of the Government. The leader of the Government had ample means of knowing how many of the Railways applying for aid came within the meaning of the Act, so as to be entitled to assistance. The leader ought to be able to show to the House what Railways were entitled to aid, and ought to be able to show it was in the interest of the country that such and such Railways should be constructed. Until this was done, the House had no right to add to the Railway Fund.”

The answer made by the hon. gentleman showed that I was right in describing it as a dangling policy, for his reply was in these words:

“It was utterly impossible for the Government to bring down any complete scheme of all the railways that would require and deserve aid. It would be an injustice to all these enterprises to name which should receive aid until they know what fund the House could devote for railway aid.”

When the motion then came before the House on Concurrency on the report of the Committee, I asked the hon. gentleman to name the railways which he proposed to aid. The hon. gentleman knew what railways were to receive aid, and yet he refused to tell the House; and yet the first thing he did after the Bill was carried was to take the resolutions out of his desk and give them to the House. I said on that occasion:

“The Government had not dared to tell the House what railways they proposed to aid, though they must know what Order in Council had been passed, if any had. The Premier (Mr. Blake) had brought down a list of railways to which he said the late Government had promised to give aid. But the House would find that there were not two promises made without the saving clause, ‘if it comes under the provision of the Act.’”

Yet, Sir, the hon. gentleman refused to give the information until the money was voted; and if the hon. member for West Middlesex will consult the records of the House he will find that the Legislature was not possessed of the information until after it was ordered to be printed, which was on the 21st February. No documents were before the House on the 20th February. Having set myself right on this matter, I beg to add that the Minister of Railways having fully and satisfactorily explained that these roads are entitled to this aid in the interest of the country, and feeling bound to support the general policy of the Government, I shall support the resolutions before the House.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman having made the remarks with which he has just favored the House for about the hundredth time, and having followed the example of the hon. gentleman in bringing up transactions of some ten or twelve years ago, the House will allow me a few words in reference to matters which took place in another Legislature some time ago. The hon. gentleman's claim is an old one, but it is not a valid one. I have always repudiated it, and I am not going to acknowledge it now. I came in power during a Session of the Ontario Legislature, and I was called upon to deal with the question of railway aid under a policy inaugurated by my predecessor, Mr. Sandfield Macdonald, and to deal with it during that Session of Parliament. The policy of the former Government of Ontario had been to obtain from the Local Legislature a grant of, I think, one and one-half million dollars; they took to themselves the power of distributing it as they pleased, without further reference to Parliament, in aid of railways of a certain general description, wide enough to cover any of them. I was called upon when I came in to attend to the election of myself and colleagues, and the whole business of the Session, and amongst others to deal with this question of railway aid, which was a very pressing question, because many companies had been incorporated and arrangements had been made, so that the general progress of the country was, in one sense, in suspense until the question was disposed of. The first duty I discharged before going to my constituents, was to ascertain what papers there were—what information there was on the files of the Departments as to the different railways which had made application, upon which a judgment might be formed either as to the engagements of the Government or as to what should be submitted to the Chamber. I found, as I often stated, everything at loose ends; and I immediately directed that steps should be taken to obtain such information from the companies, including the negotiations which had taken place between them and my predecessor, and all the evidence showing the exact state of the case. As soon as I obtained that information, I came to the conclusion that the fund which had been proposed by the late Administration would not be adequate to discharge the obligations which, it was suggested, should be entered into. That information was given to the House, from day to day, as it was received, pending the further information which I sought as to the ability of the companies to complete their enterprises, as well as other matters needful, in order to arrive at an intelligent judgment on the whole subject. While this was going on I invited the attention of the Legislature to the subject of a further appropriation, and I gave to the House all the information which was then before me with reference to the negotiations of the late Government, their promises and pledges, and the condition of affairs in that regard; and I succeeded in convincing a majority of the Legislature that it was proper that further aid should be given. During the progress of that discussion, as the hon. member for Lincoln has stated, demands were made upon me to state what aid should be given to particular railways. I stated, as the hon. gentleman has correctly informed the House, that it would not be right for me to accede to these demands at that time, and the reason was obvious. The decision of the Government upon the question necessarily depended upon the resources which the Parliament was about to place at their disposal. If the Parliament was indisposed to give more than $150,000, it was quite clear that aid could not be granted at the expected rate, which I think was $3,000 a mile; and until the Legislature should decide the total quantum of resources which it would place at the disposal of the Government, it was impossible for the Government to determine finally and to inform the House what particular railways they proposed to aid, and in what particular amounts. That was my statement to the Legislature, and I have always been prepared to justify it. But it was quite consistent with that, that we should come to a conclusion ourselves as to what we should propose to the Legislature, in case the Legislature would grant us the aid we expected, and we did proceed to come to that conclusion. But the hon. gentleman says he had no information. He has already said that the Bill was printed on the 20th February, and was actually passed on the 28th or 29th of February.

Mr. RYKERT. It was ordered to be printed on the 20th of February.

Mr. BLAKE. It was printed as soon as it was ordered to be printed, I suppose, and the Orders in Council were not passed, I think, until the 29th. Therefore, it was before the general Bill had passed that these papers were printed, and the Orders in Council were brought down at the earliest possible moment, as the hon. gentleman has said, after the Legislature had decided that we should have these resources to distribute, and I did not ask the House, against the will of any hon. member, to take them into consideration. Neither the hon. member for Lincoln or any other hon. member, asked for delay; on the contrary, the leader of the Opposition, Mr. Cameron, wanted me to say on what day prorogation would take place. I stated that there was important business before the House, that I had no desire to hurry its deliberations, and that I would decline to indicate any day for prorogation until it should appear what business was to be disposed of, and what time the House required for deliberation upon it. No demand or request was made for further time. My hon. friend has said, that on the first motion there were seven dissentients, and on the second, three; and these three hon. gentlemen called for no further divisions, and the rest passed unanimously, until the last on which the hon. gentleman proposed a rider, which expressly assented to the resolution, but proposed to tack on this thing, that thing, and the other thing. I have stated that I was called to deal with a very large matter in the very middle of a Session of Parliament; I have stated that I used the utmost diligence to procure from all quarters the information that was necessary to an intelligent decision by the Government first, and the House afterwards; I state that I laid that information before Parliament just as soon as I obtained it; I state that so soon as I had ascertained that more funds would be required to carry out the practical pledges of the late Government with reference to railway aid, I called upon the Legislature to decide whether they would grant a larger sum, and after debate, resistance and division, the motion prevailed; I state that so soon as the Legislature had decided what amount it was proper to grant for distribution, I laid on the Table the Orders in Council, and signified the view and determination of the Government with reference to these very matters upon which every information had been given to the House from time to time, just as fast as it was possible to give it.

Mr. RYKERT. Had not the Orders in Council been in the hon. gentleman's desk before the House had passed the Bill?

Mr. BLAKE. Certainly; I said so already. I said that we decided for ourselves what we would do if the Legislature would grant us those funds, but that we could not propose to the House those grants until we knew what resources the House would place at our disposal, because if the House declined to give us what we wanted, we would be obliged to make a wholly different disposition—either to propose less money for each railway, or to aid fewer railways; and therefore, it was impossible to tell what aid could be given until we knew what money we had. I say again, that no request was made for delay, and no demand for further information. I say I was prepared to accede to any request for further delay that might have been tendered, and no hon. member proposed any motion that this matter should be delayed for an hour; and last of all, the men who now raise this cry against me, and for ten years have raised it, of having unduly hastened the decision of the Legislature, are the same men who persistently insisted that the law and constitution of the country were properly served by their declining to allow the Legislature any power to interfere at all. They are the men who insisted that the fund should be at the disposal of the Executive, independent of the Legislature altogether. They are the men who passed a law declaring that the Legislature should have no control over it. They are the men who went to the country to sustain that proposition; they are the men who got beaten on that issue; and having got beaten upon it, now turn round as the vindicators of popular and Parliamentary rights.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I am not anxious to discuss Ontario politics in the House, but I want to say a word or two in regard to a statement made by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert). He made the astounding statement a little while ago, that matters are not properly before the House until they are printed. As I understand Parliamentary procedure, when papers are laid on the Table they are in the possession of the House, and we have been obliged this Session over and over again to get such information as we could in that form, or do without it; but the hon. gentleman forgets that if there was any censure for the delay in printing, he was a member of the Printing Committee himself.

Mr. RYKERT. No; I was not present.

Mr. ROSS. Yes; and if there were any delay the hon. gentleman was responsible for his share in that delay. The hon. gentleman says he opposed every grant to railways. He is decidedly mistaken. Did he not support the hon. Sandfield Macdonald's resolutions in favor of aid to railways?

Mr. RYKERT. I am not sure about that.

Mr. ROSS. I am sure about it.

Mr. RYKERT. The Globe says differently.

Mr. ROSS. We are not now discussing the Globe, but the hon. member for Lincoln, and I will read from the Journals of the House to show how he voted. The hon. Sandfield Macdonald's resolutions were introduced the 3rd February, and on the 8th February Mr. Blake moved in amendment to the original motion that they be not passed without at the same time considering the settlement of the Municipal Loan Fund. On that amendment the first division on the Railway subsidy resolutions was taken, and the hon. member for Lincoln voted with the hon. Sandfield Macdonald in favor of the railway subsidy of $1,500,000.

Mr. RYKERT. What is the motion?

Mr. ROSS. It is this:

"That the aid granted in the past by the late Province of Canada to railway enterprises, connecting with each of the great centres of population and trade, has been largely instrumental in increasing the development of the wealth and resources of this Province.

"That towards securing these desirable objects, it is expedient that the sum of ——— dollars be set apart from out of the Consolidated Fund of this Province and be designated the Railway Fund; and that railway companies shall be entitled to such aid until they shall furnish proof to the satisfaction of the Lieutenant-Governor in Council, that their railway charters authorizing the construction of a road ———"

Mr. BLAKE.

And so on. These are the railway resolutions appropriating $1,500,000 for building railways in the Province of Ontario. Mr. Blake moved that they be not passed unless the municipal indebtedness be settled. Against this amendment Mr. Rykert voted, and on the 10th of February another amendment was moved by Mr. Blake when the resolutions were brought down:

"That all the words after 'that' in the report of the Committee be omitted, and the following words substituted therefor:—'The report be not now received, but that the said resolutions be referred back forthwith to a Committee of the whole House for the purpose of providing that the decision of the Government to grant aid to any railway company shall be subject to the ratification of the Legislative Assembly, so as not to have so large a sum of money as $1,500,000 to be expended at the will of the Executive without a vote appropriating the same to particular works.'"

Mr. Rykert voted that $1,500,000 be expended by the Executive without the ratification of the Legislative Assembly. On the same day another amendment was moved that no railway bonus be paid in the case where a bonus was heretofore voted by a municipality, in respect to the construction of the road through any part of such municipality, without its consent. Against that amendment Mr. Rykert also voted. A third amendment was moved:

"That the said report be not now received, but that the said resolutions be referred back forthwith to a Committee of the whole House, for the purpose of inserting a provision that any Order in Council, made under the powers proposed to be conferred by the said resolutions, shall be published in the next following issue of the Ontario Gazette."

Against that Mr. Rykert also voted. Thus, then, were four different votes taken, each asking amendments to the railway subsidies, and in those four the hon. member for Lincoln voted with the hon. Sandfield Macdonald in favor of the railway subsidies. When the railway subsidies were moved by Mr. Blake, when he was Premier of the Ontario Government, the hon. member for Lincoln voted for each one of them. Thus he first voted every amendment to the Bill down, and then, when the appropriations came up, he voted for every appropriation—first ratifying the Bill, then ratifying the appropriations. The hon. gentleman can reconcile those statements and facts with the statements of the Globe if he chooses, but I am now curious to see what course he will take. After voting ten times in the Ontario Legislature, and asking for information, some of which he had in his possession for three weeks, I want to know if he will vote for these without a word of information except the statement of the hon. Minister of Railways. If I do not mistake, the hon. gentleman will do it. I believe, in the Ontario Legislature, he wanted more light, because he was in the Opposition; but now, because he is a supporter of the Government, he wants no light, and is willing to go it blind.

Mr. RYKERT. I will vote for anything you will oppose. Motion to adjourn debate negatived.

Mr. GILLMOR. I cannot see what information can be given on this matter more than is contained in the resolution. There may have been correspondence between the companies and the Government in regard to this question. I find on my desk a pamphlet containing a map of the Great American and European Short Line Railway. I am aware that last year a memorial was being signed in this House asking for aid to this line. The gentlemen who were soliciting signatures to that did not press me to sign it, perhaps because they thought my views would not agree with theirs. That memorial was generally signed, and I was led to believe the Government had actually endorsed that scheme and intended to give what aid they could to that line as shown on this map. While I am not pleased that any of my friends should be disappointed, I am pleased, in the public interest, that the hon. Minister of Railways and his associates have not committed themselves to this line. I think this great inter-provincial railway is entitled to aid, and I think the Government are consulting public interest most by not aiding this line as laid down in this plan. It has been remarked by the hon. leader of the Opposition that we have four ocean termini. I think the Government are doing well when they give this company opportunity to use any or all of them. I think, therefore, if they give public aid at all, they should give it to a line that would best serve the public interests, and one by which they could avail themselves of the four ocean termini mentioned by the hon. Minister. The first and best one is the town of St. Andrews; there is no doubt about that; and there is no cost to the public in allowing this company to use that line if it suits the public interest. I think the Government have adopted a wise policy, and I may say that this is about the first measure they have ever introduced that I could endorse. I regret very much that circumstances over which the Government have no control, prevent them from giving very much aid to the International Line. They cannot go farther than the first 49 miles from Sherbrooke to the boundary line. I expected the resolutions would correspond with the plan I have in this pamphlet. I find the hon. Minister of Railways went as far as he could; he indicated that this aid was granted with a view to strike the European and North American Line not further north than Vanceborough, but it may go as far south as possible. In his speech to-day, I discovered that he had the true idea of the public interest. Of course, I do not know that he will be able to control this company when they build across this territory and strike the European and North American Line. Perhaps the company would not be disposed to go further than that, because when they strike that line they are on the European and Western Extension, and they have railway communication then provided already to the port of St. John. But I believe, the company will see that it will be for their interest when they strike the European and North American Line at Passidumkeig. If they cross that line they will only have fifty miles further to build through to St. Stephens. The leader of the Opposition said that the hon. Minister of Railways and the hon. Minister of Finance had invested in property in St. Andrews. Why did they invest there? Because it is one of the most inviting spots in the Maritime Provinces. The town of St. Andrews is very inviting, and as for the bay of St. Andrews even the bay of Naples cannot approach it for beauty. The fishing facilities of this bay are unsurpassed. I have seen more than 200 vessels fishing there at once, not in the spring or summer, but in mid-winter; and the only fish I have eaten since I came to Ottawa, that were fit to eat, came from St. Andrews and were taken out of St. Andrews Bay. Of course, I do not want to speak about the agricultural facilities. Perhaps the district has not got quite so many facilities as the Gatineau district, but I think those who have driven along the shore and seen the tens of thousands of bushels of turnips that are exported to Boston every year, and the comfortable farm houses, would form a high opinion of the agricultural value of that country. My hon. friend, the Minister of Railways, I believe, has a very good farm there himself, and he knows how fertile it is, and what income it has brought him. I may say that the pioneer of railways in Canada resided in St. Andrews, and nearly forty years ago he projected a railway from the town of St. Andrews to Quebec, on the shortest and most direct line; but on account of difficulties connected with the Ashburton Tract and the boundary line, the scheme did not proceed very rapidly, but it got up as far as Aroostook County with some Provincial aid. I am glad the Minister of Railways has taken the course he has; I am not glad that any of my friends on this side are disappointed; but I do not see how he could, consistently with the public interest, have gone in any other direction. It is true it may be a little shorter to Louisburg and Halifax, to take the line projected here, but it serves the public interest most when he gives an opportunity to select the most commodious port on the Atlantic, and he does the greatest amount of justice to the people of the Lower Provinces; and if it is eighty miles longer, I think he has done his duty faithfully with regard to this matter. I am satisfied that if the Minister of Railways had it in his power to establish a line across the territory of Maine, he would endeavor to let it go direct down to Passidumkeig, then across the European and North American Line down direct to St. Stephen, using both ports of St. Stephen and St. Andrews, and then on to Halifax and Louisburg. These resolutions look like a new departure with regard to aid to railways. I am not going to express an opinion about that further than to say that if the people have got to have an enormous taxation from the National Policy, and if it produces a great surplus of revenue I do not know any better mode of dealing with it in the public interest, and if they have got to spend it I would rather see it spent on railways in the older Provinces of the Dominion than to see it all going west. I think it can hardly be said that these resolutions proposed to aid local railways. The fact is, you can hardly aid one railway without aiding another. The history of railways has altogether changed. When we had but few railways in Canada it was quite different, they have become so common that they are all more or less connected with each other, and they all aid each other to some extent. I think the Government have gone much further than their predecessors; I do not think that putting some old iron rails on lines of railway that were supposed to be feeders of the Intercolonial Railway, was going anything like as far as these resolutions are going. With regard to the Intercolonial Railway, I think they are taking the right view with regard to that matter, because that railway was projected years ago under certain circumstances. Is the commerce of the country and the advantage of the people got to be subservient to that road because it was built in a wrong place? The commerce and growing business of the country must be considered first, and the paying capacities of the Intercolonial Railway must be second to the public interest. Whether they obtain Government aid or not, these roads will be built by private enterprise. That shows the folly of building great lines of railway by the longest possible route. They might as well say that we shall have to use the Intercolonial Railway, and go by the longest and most tedious route, and follow all the old practices of former years. Of course we have got to pay for that railway. I do not regret, however, that it was built, because, if we had not got the Intercolonial Railway then, we would never have obtained it under any circumstances. I do not desire to trouble the House further, although I should have liked to have said something in praise of the town of St. Andrews, the shire town of the county which I have had the honor to represent for many years. The Finance Minister and Minister of Railways are among my constituents; they have never supported me; I trust they may cease their opposition.

Mr. McDONALD (Cape Breton). I wish to correct some of the remarks made by the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross), and I regret he is not now in his seat. The hon. gentleman stated that the proposed railway through the Island of Cape Breton was not of national importance and was merely a local line. If that hon. gentleman had looked into the matter more closely, I am sure he would have come to a different conclusion. This railway to Louisburg will bring Montreal 230 miles nearer to that port than at the present time. The distance from Montreal to Louisburg by the proposed line is 764 miles, while by the Intercolonial it is 994 miles, the proposed new road thereby shortening the distance by 230 miles. I think the people of Canada must see that a line of railway which shortens the distance from one end of the country to the chief city of the Dominion by 230 miles, is of Dominion importance. The hon. gentleman evidently intended in his speech to refer to the county of Cape Breton only, and he mentioned the population and area of the county. This railway through the Island of Cape Breton is of interest, importance and value to the whole of the Island, which is composed of four counties, with a population of nearly 90,000, the length of the Island being nearly 120 miles, and its width 100 miles; and I am sure the hon. gentleman must have known this to be the case, for no hon. member in this House possesses more intelligence than he does. I observe also that the hon. member differed from the leader of the Opposition in regard to this matter. I was very glad to hear the former before six o'clock, say a good word for the railway through the Island of Cape Breton, and I thank him for doing so. The hon. gentleman, however, changed the course of his speech after six o'clock for some cause which I do not know.

Mr. RYKERT. He had got his orders.

Mr. McDONALD (Cape Breton). The hon. gentleman stated that the line through Cape Breton would compete with the Intercolonial. Nothing could be more ridiculous than that statement. The Intercolonial is about 130 miles from the western point of this road on the Island of Cape Breton, at the Strait of Canso; the new line will be 130 miles due east of that portion of the Intercolonial and will run due east to Louisburg a distance of eighty miles. It will, therefore, be impossible for the new railway to compete with the Intercolonial; and the hon. gentleman must have made the statement without consideration or without a knowledge of the facts. It is not necessary that I should say much as to the development and impetus which the building of this road through the Island of Cape Breton will give to that Island. We have large coal areas which will benefit by this road; we have iron ore in abundance, we have copper ore in abundance, and vast deposits of manganese, a mineral of great value which has been developed in that Island within the last year or two; and this proposed line from the Strait of Canso to Louisburg, whatever route it may take through the Island, will pass through vast deposits of this valuable mineral. I must thank the hon. Minister of Railways and the Government on behalf of the people of Cape Breton Island for this valuable resolution to vote a subsidy to this road. I am sure the people will be forever grateful to the Minister of Railways for this aid, and that he will always continue to retain their esteem and confidence.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). I have no desire at this late hour to prolong the discussion, but I deem it to be my duty to say a few words in reply to the hon. member for West Middlesex. The hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. McDonald), who has just resumed his seat, has already referred to some arguments used by that hon. gentleman, and therefore it does not leave me so much ground to traverse as I at first intended to cover. I observed, in the course of the hon. gentleman's remarks, that he opposed all the railway subsidies proposed, except that for a line from Gravenhurst to Callander. He declared that all these other roads were local lines, except the one which happened to be in the great Province of Ontario. I cannot comprehend by what line of reasoning he made out that all the lines proposed to be subsidised were local lines, except the one which is in his own Province, which is subsidised to the extent of $1,320,000, including that granted by the Act 45 Vic., chap. 14, and the present Statute. It is just possible that if a larger amount had been granted to other railway companies he would conclude that, instead of their being local lines, they would have been lines worthy of the consideration of the Dominion. The hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross) was under the impression that the county of Cape Breton, one of the four counties composing the Island, was the whole Island, and that it was only the size of a small parish, of one of the counties of Ontario, and he ridiculed the idea of subsidizing a railway through such a small tract of country. However, there can be no doubt that if he studies more carefully the vast resources of that county of the Island of Cape Breton, he will come to the conclusion that in importance it is second to none, and is not even equalled by any county in the Dominion of Canada. The coal exports during last year were not less than 500,000 tons from the county of Cape Breton alone; and the shipping which entered the ports of Cape Breton was greater than that which entered any harbor outside of it in the Dominion of Canada. These facts alone prove conclusively the vast importance of the county and Island of Cape Breton. In 1876, under the Mackenzie Government, a line of railway, part of the Intercolonial from Truro to Pictou, in Nova Scotia, was given as a subsidy for building a railroad eastward; and it was then supposed that this subsidy would be sufficient, aided by subsidies from the Nova Scotia Government, to build a railroad from New Glasgow to Sydney or Louisburg. Unfortunately, with this subsidy and all the aid the Local Legislature could grant, the eastern extension was only carried as far as the Strait of Canso. At that time I held that the Dominion of Canada should assume the responsibility of building this railway out of the Dominion Exchequer. However, a different policy prevailed; and notwithstanding that the line between Truro and the Strait of Canso is apparently a local line, yet it is one in which the Dominion of Canada has a direct interest. The line between New Glasgow and the Strait of Canso was built by a private company subsidised by a railway from Truro to Pictou, and a cash subsidy from the Local Legislature. Local legislation was enacted in 1879 by which the Government of Nova Scotia might, under certain circumstances, assume the ownership of that road; and it is now the fact that that Government have taken steps to assume the ownership of the road between Truro and the Straits of Canso; and under Dominion legislation in 1879, I believe, in the event of the Nova Scotia Government failing to run the line between Truro and the Strait of Canso satisfactorily, the Dominion Government must assume that responsibility. Under these circumstances, in the near future, it is just possible that the line between Truro and the Strait of Canso, instead of being a local line, will eventually become a part of the Intercolonial Railway; and the extension of this line from the Strait of Canso to Sydney or Louisburg will only be a construction of a road which is a Dominion line. It is, therefore, evident that the Dominion Government has an interest in that extension, as a feeder to a road which may, in the near future, become a road owned by the Government; and whether this will be so or not, it is well known that the eastern extension through Cape Breton to Sydney or Louisburg will be a feeder to the Intercolonial from Truro westward. On these grounds, I hold that it should not be considered a local road. Although the subsidy for Cape Breton is not as large as the people of the Island would possibly desire, and although I have no doubt that they would expect and suggest a larger subsidy, still I hold that this subsidy will be sufficient to ensure the extension of the road from the Strait of Canso to Sydney or Louisburg; and that, as soon as railway enterprise will take a firm footing on the Island, it will no doubt ensure a network of railroads over that Island, developing the resources of this important section of the Dominion; and although my hon. friend from West Middlesex seemed to depreciate the great importance of the great Island of Cape Breton, I have no doubt that when he acquires more knowledge, he will come to the conclusion that instead of being comparatively equal to a parish in one of the great counties of Western Ontario, he will perceive that it is the brightest gem in Her Majesty's dominions.

Mr. FAIRBANK. I have to ask the hon. Minister of Railways, if it is proposed that the bonus to the Great American and European Short Line Railway, is to be conditional on the construction of the unfinished portion of the road from Montreal to Houlton? My reason for this enquiry is this: We have not, I think, too much information before us, and a considerable part of what we have is drawn from the map placed on our desks, showing that the distance from Montreal by the proposed line to Houlton is 293 miles, and from Houlton to Canso, 391 miles. The hon. Minister, in urging the claim for this grant, drew our attention to the great advantages which this scheme afforded for providing an outlet to the Pacific Railway, at a Canadian port. He spoke of his regard for the great Republic alongside of us, but said that he loved Canada more—a sentiment in which, I fancy, we will all join. If that is not the condition of this grant—that the unconstructed portion across the State of Maine is to be built—I fail to see how we can be sure that either St. Andrews or St. John is to become the Canadian port as an outlet for our western road. If the hon. gentlemen who come from the sea suppose that we in the West take no interest in matters in the East, they are mistaken; and I can assure those gentlemen that whenever any Western man looks at the plan and sees the line dotted down upon it, by which it is proposed to bring St. Andrews within 385 miles—if the figures are correct—of Montreal, and St. John within 443 miles of Montreal, it is a pleasing prospect, because I believe the most of us know that the closer the commercial relations are between the Provinces, the firmer will be our political bonds. One word with reference to the proposed bonus to the railway from Gravenhurst to Callander Station. The former grant, I understand, added to the proposed one, amounts to $12,000 per mile; and speaking only for myself I certainly hope that in making this grant the Government will endeavor to retain the actual and practical control of that railway. The control which would please me most would be the absolute ownership of the road by the Dominion, and the working of the road by the Dominion. I believe the time is not far distant when the people will again claim the right which they always possessed until the present generation, of owning these public highways. I do not know whether the hon. Minister of Railways is informed as to what would be the cost of grading that road, but I do know that there are many sections in the West in which $12,000 per mile will not only grade a road but will tie it and iron it to-day. Some portions of the route I believe are rocky, and in these it may cost more, but there are many people who would prefer that even a larger grant should be made, if that were necessary, to retain control of the railway. With regard to the 80 miles from Canso to Louisburg, I see by the papers which have been laid on our desks that the total amount which has been asked for is $1,200,000 to complete the road from Montreal to Louisburg; and I am sure that if we can for the small sum of $256,000 accomplish what is proposed to be accomplished by a grant of $1,200,000 we will all be delighted. I fail to see how the granting of a subsidy to the portion of the railway 390 miles east of St. Andrews is going to give St. John and St. Andrews connection with Montreal, unless the building of the wanting links between these places and Montreal is a condition of the grant.

Mr. PICKARD. I wish to make a few remarks with regard to the matter which is now before the House. I am prepared to support the Government in the resolutions respecting certain roads, but I shall not be as selfish as the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor), whose views were purely local. I regret that the Government could not see their way clear to subsidizing the Great European and American Short Line, from Louisburg to the international line, but I am not going to oppose the resolutions because we have not got all we asked for when we signed the memorial to the Government. I think the hon. member for Middlesex (Mr.

Ross) took a sectional view of the case when he said that the line from the Gut of Canso to Louisburg was a purely local road. It was the connecting road from Canso to New Glasgow. We have a river from New Glasgow to Truro, but this Short Line Railway Company are building a line from Oxford to New Glasgow, and an extension of that line was to go by Baie Verte to Memramcook, the junction of the Intercolonial, to utilize a portion of the road as far west as Salisbury, and from Salisbury on to the west. I believe St. Andrews and St. John would have been as well accommodated by the Short Line road had it gone direct to Fredericton, and thence on to the west. But we cannot expect everything we want all at one time; but the commerce and trade of this country seek a port on the Atlantic sea-board, and will not be covered by any sectional roads. The King of the Gatineau, the hon. member for Ottawa county (Mr. Wright), wants me to pitch in because his road has been called a local road. I am satisfied, if the country through which it is to pass is what it has been portrayed by the hon. Minister of Railways, it is one of the best lines in the whole Dominion.

Mr. TASSÉ. (Translation). Mr. Speaker: I desire to offer a few remarks on the resolutions which are now submitted to the House. These resolutions have reference to enterprises which are destined to develop the resources and increase the revenues of the entire country. For ten years our statesmen, our Parliaments, have devoted their attention, their energies to create new Provinces. For ten years we have expended millions to construct this portion of the road which will develop the country from one end to the other, and especially that vast region situate west of Lake Superior. I congratulate myself on the sacrifices and efforts that have been made to construct the great Pacific link. No person more than myself appreciates the importance for these new Provinces and new territories of the great route which we have constructed. Moreover, I know that the old Provinces will find in that new country the best outlet for their products, their manufactures. We can judge of that by the fact that in one single year, in this very year, the commerce carried on between Manitoba and the Eastern Provinces has amounted to $12,000,000. Now, that we are certain that the Pacific railway is to be built without costing the country a cent; now that we know that the whole Pacific railway is the most profitable speculation that Canada has ever made since the surplus arising from the sale of our lands will not only enable us to pay every cent of the cost of its construction, but will also leave a surplus in the Treasury; now that we are about to crown this great work, which will be forever the glory of Conservative Governments, which since 1881 have been at the head of the affairs of this country—I say that our duty is to think a little about the welfare of the old Provinces, which until now have borne the burden of the construction of the great Pacific road, and of the creation of the new Provinces. I say that our duty is to consecrate a part of our energy, of our studies, of our capital, to do for the East of Canada what we have done in preceding years for the west. That is what the Government meant last year in asking us to vote $1,500,000 to assist the construction of railroads in the old Provinces, and that is what is understood in asking us to vote $2,000,000 for the same object. Whether this policy be a new departure, as the hon. leader of the Opposition contends is of no consequence, the question simply is whether it is an advantageous one. In reality what is the duty of the Government? What is the duty of the statesmen who conduct the affairs of the country, if not to develop the resources not only of western but of all Canada, whether they be in the east, the west, the north, or the south? I am not in a position to say that I am entirely familiar with all the roads mentioned in the resolutions; but in view of the statements which have been made to-day by the hon. Minister of Railways, and the other hon. members who have spoken on this subject, I am entirely convinced that the Government only came to the conclusion to aid these roads after having made all necessary investigations, and only when they came to a correct conclusion that these roads were calculated to develop the resources of Eastern Canada. But there are some of these enterprises with which I am more particularly familiar. For instance the Lake St. John Railway, the Montreal and Occidental Railway, and the Gatineau Railway. As to the Lake St. John Railway I understand that our friends from the Quebec district attach the greatest importance to it, and in my opinion they are perfectly right, for the Lake St. John Railway is destined to become the backbone of the city of Quebec, and the inhabitants of other parts of the country. We will always be happy to see the old capital flourish, and take a forward step in the path of progress and prosperity. I am happy to know that the valley of Lake St. John is able to sustain a population of from 200,000 to 250,000 souls; that the soil produces wheat in point of quality and quantity as good as in the North-West. As to the Montreal and Occidental Railway, I visited last year a stretch of country more than eighty miles in extent of this road, of which fifty miles are subsidized by these resolutions, and I can say that this visit for me was a revelation. That part which extends in rear of the Laurentian ranges was until this last five years an unknown country, a terra incognita, as the hon. member from the county of Ottawa remarked. But, Sir, during the last five or six years we have been able to locate 10,000 souls, and as the hon. Minister of Railways remarked, the Province of Quebec and the whole country owe a debt of gratitude to that great patriot, to that great apostle of colonization, who is called the Abbé Labelle who for so many years has concentrated his energy to explore the resources of our country and direct colonists to the north. With reference to the Gatineau Railway, I have studied the country through which it passes, and I can entirely corroborate everything which has been said by the hon. Minister of Railways and the hon. member from Ottawa county. The valley of the Gatineau is one of the most important sections of the valley of the Ottawa. It is an immense valley, having a rich soil, great forests and mines of all kinds. At the present time we are all aware of the extensive commerce of phosphates which is being carried on there. Well, Mr. Speaker, these two railways, to the construction of which we are going to subsidize for a distance of fifty miles in a few years, and I trust before long, will reach the Lake of the Desert, and later on will continue step by step and will reach the Hudson's Bay to give a new outlet for commerce for this important branch of Canada. I heard the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross) say that the subsidies given to the railways mentioned in the resolutions were not protected by sufficient guarantees. If my hon. friend will take the trouble to read the proviso which accompanies these resolutions, he would have seen that the Government has taken the necessary measures to see that the expenditure of the moneys which are now asked shall only be expended during the construction of the work. This is the part which refers to these guarantees. All the aforesaid subsidies shall only be paid out of the consolidated revenue of Canada by instalments, according as each ten mile section is completed. Thus it is necessary that ten miles of the road be completed before any proportionate subsidy be given—proportionate to the value of the section thus completed, comparatively, to the total of the work, the value of which will be established by the report of the said hon. Minister. I heard with regret the hon. member from Middlesex oppose the construction of these enterprises, because, according to him, they are of a local character. It is easy to convince myself that the greater part of these enterprises are far from being of a local character. So far our own policy, since we assumed the construction of the Pacific Railway, has been not only to construct this great railway, but also to subsidize the branches and connections of this road. The Gatineau railroad will connect with the Pacific Railway. The railway about to be constructed, starting from St. Jérôme into the interior, and which later on will be connected with the Gatineau Railway, is also an important branch of the Pacific; and I can say the same of the Lake St. John Railway. But, Mr. Speaker, I think that another reason is at the bottom of the opposition of the hon. member. I observed with regret that my hon. friend appeared to allow himself to be guided by sectional prejudices in lieu of the objections which he raised against the measure which is now submitted. For whilst my hon. friend raised objections against the construction of roads east of Toronto, he raised none against voting a much greater subsidy, a subsidy of $6,000 a mile, which is in reality a subsidy of $12,000 a mile, as we voted the same amount last year, making a total of $1,300,000 for the railway from Gravenhurst to Callander. I am far from being opposed to the grant of this subsidy to this railroad, whose object is to place Western Ontario in connection with the great Pacific route; but, on the other hand, I think it is right that the hon. member and the other members who call themselves par excellence the Liberal party—and which it is only in name, for I want no better illustration than that of the hon. member for West Middlesex, who, on the one hand, approves of the subsidy between Callander and Gravenhurst, and, on the other, blames the Government for subsidizing roads East of Toronto—I think that it is well that these hon. members should understand that these roads do not interest the Province of Quebec alone, but all that section, Eastern Ontario and the city of Ottawa, of which I have the honor to be one of the representatives in this honorable House, are also considerably interested in the construction of the Gatineau road. Consequently it is not a question of subsidizing a railway which will merely benefit the Province of Quebec, but a road which concerns several Provinces, and I can say the same of nearly all the other roads. I should also dispose of another pretext of my hon. friend, the hon. member from Middlesex; he says if we adopt this policy it will be a suicidal one. Every time that the Conservative party has submitted an important measure to aggrandize Canada, we always have heard our opponents cry aloud and contend that we were leading the country to ruin and bankruptcy. When the construction of the Grand Trunk was proposed we saw these gentlemen declare war, contending that the Grand Trunk would always be a source of embarrassment and financial disaster. The same objection was made against the Victoria Bridge. In 1872 when the first measures were taken for the construction of the Pacific we saw these gentlemen contending that it would be for Canada a source of ruin, and to-night I am not surprised to see the hon. member from West Middlesex, faithful to the traditions of his party, protest with all his might against the generous and enlightened policy of the Government. If we consider the question from a revenue stand-point, no one is so much interested as the Federal Government in subsidizing the railroads which it is intended to construct, because railways are the best factors for the prosperity of the country. The railway is the most important lever which can be applied to develop the resources of the people of any country. Take, for instance, what has been done in the regions north of St. Jérôme. In the last five or six years the Curé Labelle alone has been able to settle there 10,000 souls! If each person pays $5 of indirect taxes, 10,000 persons will pay $50,000 of taxes annually, or a half million in ten years; and if these people have a railway, what a development will take place. It is certain that no one is more interested than the Federal Government in subsidizing these railroads, which are of a character to increase the population and thereby the taxes and resources of the Government. This has been so well understood that the Federal Government has so far paid and has promised to pay $114,000,000 in the form of railway subsidies, whilst the municipalities have given $13,000,000, the Quebec Government more than $14,000,000; the Government of Ontario, $4,000,000; the Government of Nova Scotia, $3,000,000, and the Government of New Brunswick, $2,000,000. Besides this, if we are to adopt the views of the hon. member from West Middlesex, the Province of Quebec should have no more railroads, for it is a well-known fact that the Quebec Government has contracted very heavy engagements to afford that Province important railways, and for this object it has expended enormous sums. I can say the same of the Province of Ontario, whose treasury, unfortunately, will not likely be long, in such a flourishing condition as it has been in the past, owing to the numerous engagements which she has been obliged to assume in order to construct railways. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, we have taken a broader view, a more generous view, and we are ready to sustain the policy submitted by the Government, which wishes to encourage—in any part of Canada—the principal lines of railroad which have a tendency to develop the resources of the country. Mr. Speaker: the hon. Minister of Railways said that if we assisted the various railroads mentioned in the resolutions, these subsidies would have the effect of facilitating the repatriation of a large number of our fellow-countrymen from the United States. I am entirely in accord with that opinion. Two things we must especially attend to, to facilitate the repatriation of our Canadian emigrants: first, to develop our industries, and that is what we are doing by the National Policy which is producing such admirable results; and, secondly, to develop our agriculture and colonization by the construction of railways, which will open up vast uncultivated territories, east and west. Let us work therefore, energetically, with this object in view, let us continue to adopt a broad and enlightened policy for all parts of Confederation, and before long we will have solved the great problem of repatriation.

Mr. BRYSON. I desire to make a few remarks with reference to the resolution now before the House. I refer to the resolution of the hon. Minister of Railways, subsidizing different railways in the Dominion. If there is one county which more than another is interested in these railway subsidies it is the county I have the honor to represent. I had the honor a few days ago to submit a memorial to the hon. Minister of Railways asking for assistance to a railway running through the county of Pontiac. I asked this assistance for the building of an inter-provincial bridge to connect the two great Provinces of Ontario and Quebec. It was with great pleasure yesterday morning that my attention was drawn to the subsidies proposed to be given to roads in different parts of the Dominion; but I can assure you that I would have felt greater satisfaction had I seen that the county of Pontiac had received the same consideration at the hands of the Government. But I believe there is yet hope, and I have no doubt the hon. Minister of Railways will be in a position to give his reason why assistance to this inter-provincial bridge has not yet been granted. I propose to draw the attention of this honorable House to the position of our railway in the county of Pontiac at the present time. Hon. gentlemen are, no doubt, aware that this road was subsidized by the Provincial Legislature for a distance of eighty-five miles, from the town of Hull or Aylmer to Pembroke, at the rate of $5,000 a mile; but at a meeting of the Executive Council it was decided to change this subsidy into a guarantee of bonds on the property of the road. Operations were begun last June, and twenty-three miles have been graded; and I understand that the contractor who has the contract for building the road from Hull to Pembroke, went to England to dispose of the bonds, and I am informed that he is now on his way back to Canada, and in a position to complete the road, which would shorten the route from Ottawa to Pembroke by about twenty miles, thereby saving immense outlay on through freight from the west, and securing that directness of route, which the hon. Minister of Railways alluded to to-day, as being of such importance on all Canadian roads. I may say, however, that this inter-provincial bridge, for which I ask assistance, must be a high level bridge, which will necessitate a great outlay. I understand that it is estimated to cost something like $500,000, and I approached the Government for assistance because I believed that it was not a work of a local character, but a Dominion work; and, Sir, I contend that if assistance had been granted to aid us in completing this bridge, the county I have the honor to represent would, in a very short time, be in a very favorable position as compared with neighboring counties. This road, when constructed through the county of Pontiac, will be a feeder westward from the Black River, the Coulonge River, and other tributaries to the Ottawa. That county is now a large lumber district; but, with the completion of this railway, mills would spring up, and the lumber would be sawn there, instead of being sawn in the Chaudière mills, as at present. There is no doubt, also, that the county of Pontiac is rich in minerals, which would find an outlet through the town of Hull, and thence to the sea-board. It is of the greatest importance to my constituents that something should be done in this matter. There is not a man in my county but feels greatly interested in obtaining a subsidy for this railway. I may state that the county of Pontiac contributes as much, if not more, than any county in the Dominion to the revenue. Last year the slideage and Crown dues received from the three tributaries to the Ottawa in that county amounted to more than $100,000, and I claim that we deserve some consideration at the hands of the Government; and although we have not at this present stage been favored with a subsidy, I have every reason to hope that ere this House rises, the hon. Minister of Railways may see fit to place a vote in the Supplementary Estimates to aid us to build this bridge this summer. It is a matter of the greatest importance to this whole district, and I can only say that although I shall cordially vote for these subsidies to other roads, I should have had much greater pleasure in voting for a subsidy for this inter-provincial bridge and the road running through the county I have the honor to represent.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If no other hon. gentleman wishes to address the House, I would say a few words in reply to the remarks that have fallen from hon. gentlemen in relation to these resolutions. I may say first, that I regret extremely that the Government were not able to meet the views of my hon. friend from Pontiac in his application for aid for the construction of a bridge connecting the railway in his county with the Province of Ontario. The road is being constructed, but there is some distance to be constructed yet, I think, before it will reach the point where this proposed bridge should cross the river; and as it is an inter-provincial bridge, it seems clear that the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec should both contribute to its construction. I may say that the subject will still receive the consideration of the Government, and I shall be only too glad if, at any future time, it is found that the Government can give any aid to a work of such great importance. There is no doubt that a line of railway which will connect with the Canadian Pacific Railway by crossing the Ottawa, is of great importance; but as the hon. gentleman says, the bridge will be very expensive, as it will obstruct navigation, and must, therefore, be constructed as a high level bridge. I shall be very happy if, at a future day, matters can be arranged so that aid may be afforded. Now, I may say, in the first place, that I have no reason to find fault with the manner in which this important proposition has been received by the House. The hon. leader of the Opposition, whatever may have been his practice in another Legislature, I must frankly admit, naturally took exception to the fact of so important a resolution as this, involving the expenditure of so large a sum of money, being brought down at so late a period in the Session. The hon. gentleman knows very well, for he has had the duties and the responsibilities of a Minister on his shoulders on more than one occasion, that in dealing in questions of this kind, the Government, with all the questions pressing upon their time and attention during the Session of Parliament, find it extremely difficult to bring matters of such importance as this to such a conclusion as to enable them to be brought before the House at an early day. I may say, that in accordance with the suggestion of the hon. leader of the Opposition, I have already given instructions that they shall be copied as rapidly as possible, and I hope by to-morrow or next day to be able to lay upon the Table of the House all the papers that are important in their bearing on these resolutions—the applications, and the sources from which these applications have come, and the extent to which they have received the sympathy, either of the outside public or of members of Parliament. I shall take the earliest opportunity of placing as full information as possible in relation to this matter on the Table of this House. I shall not have much to say in reference to the hon. gentleman's criticism of these resolutions for the fact that I think they were of an extremely moderate character, and I came to the conclusion, before the hon. gentleman sat down, that brief as was the time he had taken for its expression, it was long enough, with the explanations I had been able to make, to satisfy me that in the main he was of opinion the resolutions were entitled to the support of the House. To those who are familiar with the mode in which the hon. gentleman attacks any measure to which he is strongly opposed, his moderate criticism on this occasion is an indication that the resolutions really commended themselves to his judgment, and that, so far as was consistent with his duties as leader of the Opposition, he was prepared to give them unqualified support. I am not surprised at that, because the hon. gentleman must readily perceive the fact that these resolutions are for appropriations of public money for purposes which cannot fail to be of great advantage to the general public and to largely promote the interests of the country. The hon. gentleman said that it was opening a very wide door; but I think he has already learned from the sentiments of some of the hon. gentlemen who sit behind him who have, on this occasion, given an independent expression to their sentiments on this question, that some of those hon. gentlemen would be prepared to open the door a little wider. The most cursory examination of this question is sufficient to satisfy the House that it is absolutely necessary we should look at these measures proposed for the development of our country from a somewhat different stand-point to that from which we have been accustomed to look at them. The hon. member for Middlesex especially takes exception to interference with Provincial legislation. I am under the impression that Provincial Legislatures will be very much obliged to us for coming with our great resources to the aid of the country in its development, let it be in one Province or the other. So far as its being regarded as an interference, the great sentiment of the country will be that where public works of this description are shown to be essentially necessary for the development of the country they should receive the careful consideration of the Federal Government and the Federal Parliament. The hon. gentleman wants to know whether the Provincial resources have come to an end, why it is that all these different Provinces should not have been left entirely to be dealt with by the Provinces themselves. I am sorry to say that, to a very large extent, the resources of the various Provinces have come to an end. I am sorry to say that there are very few Provinces that are in a position, however anxious to give that aid and support to the development of the country it is desirable they should give, on account of the condition of their resources; and I believe they will be only too grateful to find that there is a disposition, when works are of general importance to the whole country, to give their careful consideration and assistance when practicable. I may say that the construction of railways by these Local Governments stands to-day in an entirely different position from that in which it stood while these different Provinces were separate and independent of each other. The hon. gentleman knows that in any one of our Provinces that which would have been perfectly practicable, feasible and justifiable before Confederation could not be entertained at all. The hon. gentleman knows that it was quite practicable for the various Provinces to lend their credit and aid to the construction of railway enterprises when the revenue of the country was going into their coffers; but that it would be impracticable for them in the existing condition of things. Take Nova Scotia as an illustration. Nova Scotia expended $6,000,000 or $7,000,000 in the construction of railways by her Government. Capitalists could not be found to embark their means in the construction of railways there, as it was not supposed, commercially, they would give an adequate return for investment. The Government used the credit of the Province, expended $6,000,000 or $7,000,000 upon the public credit, upon a mortgage of the revenues of the Province in England, and constructed these roads as Government works. Did they pay? No; if they had paid their working expenses it was all they did. Probably a fair adjustment of accounts on the two sides of the ledger would have shown that, instead of having anything to their credit, they had not covered working expenses. Was this an unwise expenditure? No; the increased revenue of the country, and the increased development of the country were more than sufficient to enable Nova Scotia to pay the 6 per cent. interest on the capital invested, and still leave a larger amount in the Treasury than we would have had, had we not spent a dollar. Now all that is changed. Under the existing condition of things, this increased revenue goes in to the Dominion coffers, and the Province in which the expenditure is made does not receive that indirect benefit which, previous to Confederation, would warrant it in incurring such an expense. That is the view which the hon. member for Middlesex has not taken of this question, or he would not have taken the ground he did. The hon. leader of the Opposition felt disposed to have a little amusement at my expense at the divided condition of my affections among these four ports. What is the position I took at the outset? I believe it is a matter of great importance to Canada to find a Canadian port that will be the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I was rather surprised at the hon. gentleman's allusions to a somewhat personal matter connected with my investment in the port of St. Andrews. I have no hesitation in saying, although I am not very fond of talking of my own private affairs, how I came to have a very humble investment in a seaside home in the town of St. Andrews. When I came to re-side in Ottawa as a Minister, I found it was necessary for the health of my family, they should spend the hot season at the seaside, as they had been always accustomed to. I found that by stopping at St. Andrews—the Intercolonial was not then built—that I could have a seaside home for my family, which I could visit and be two days less absent from the Capital, where my duties kept me, than if I had to go to the city of Halifax. St. Andrews was the nearest port on Canadian soil where my family could spend the hot season, and which I could occasionally visit without deserting my post for too great a time. The investment was a very humble one; and I may say to my hon. friend across the floor of this House that if he thinks my object in propounding these resolutions is to improve the character of that investment, that as soon as these resolutions have become law I will make him an offer of my entire investment at St. Andrews at a very liberal margin under what it has cost me, so that the hon. gentleman will find that this circumstance will not be considered a very serious objection to these resolutions. Then, Sir, I say that the port of St. Andrews, by the proposed scheme, will be put in a position to compete with the port of Portland. At present the city of Halifax, with all our efforts, is handicapped with too great an increased distance to enable it to do so; but I do not forget that the city of Halifax will secure, by the construction of this road, an advantage which it does not now possess, because by taking the train through the city of St. John, and there taking the Intercolonial Railway, we will reach Halifax by a line between 100 and 200 miles shorter than we are now obliged to take. The hon. member for East Lambton (Mr. Fairbank), who dealt with this in an independent manner, and who has uttered sentiments with regard to this question that does his independent character, in my judgment, infinite credit, has touched two or three points of great importance, and I commend a consideration of his remarks to the leader of the Opposition. The hon. gentleman says truly that it is impossible to overrate the value to this country of anything that will bring the great commercial centres and the people closer together. I say that that hon. gentleman's breadth of view in grasping that idea, is well worthy the consideration of every hon. member of this House. Everyone knows that one of the great obstacles to Confederation was the remote distance at which we were from each other, that Halifax and St. John were so far from Montreal and Ottawa; and taking that view of the question any means that can be devised that will enable the population of the various Provinces, and the people inhabiting the commercial centres to be brought closer together by a saving of time or a decrease of expenditure, is a means more calculated to cement and consolidate our Confederation than any other measure that can be proposed. The hon. gentleman went so far as to say, in approving the policy of the Government in securing the thorough independence of the Gravenhurst branch, that he for one would be quite prepared, if necessary, to see the road built, owned and operated as a Government work. Now, I do not go so far as the hon. gentleman in my admiration of Government control of railways. There is a great deal to be said from that stand-point; but with all the means I have had of observing the management of railways and their operation, I believe they can be better managed by private enterprise than they possibly can be by Government. But I will go this far with the hon. gentleman: that if, to-morrow, it was found necessary to secure the complete independence of that link, it would be better to do it than to have it constructed at a greatly smaller cost, but without securing the thorough independence of that section of the road. Then the leader of the Opposition wants to know whether this is not bad news for the Intercolonial Railway. Well, Sir, he got his answer from the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor), who told him that if any means could be devised to carry on the commerce and business of the country with greater facility than can be done by the Intercolonial Railway, the better means should be adopted; that he should look primarily at the national development of the country rather than to the maintenance of this or that road. The hon. gentleman got his answer, but I may say to him from my experience as Minister of Railways that if we were choosing a line to-morrow for that railway, I would put it where it is. Notwithstanding its increased length, notwithstanding that by that line the ports of Halifax and St. John cannot compete with the ports of Portland and Boston, I say that I would still select the same route for the Intercolonial Railway, and for this reason: It is not only a source of strength to the country, but it is required by the Imperial Government as giving them confidence in the continued retention of their Canadian possessions on this side of the Atlantic. Its being remote from the frontier gives it value as a military line. If we had not the Intercolonial Railway and were to-morrow seeking a line of communication between the various Provinces, I would not propose to adopt a line that would carry us through a portion of the State of Maine, because I know that at any moment we might, either commercially or in case of difficulty be cut off—one section of the country from the other. The construction of the Intercolonial Railway that the country was able to build and have maintained so successfully, gives strength and security to the country, and it opens up a vast section of the country along the northern shores of New Brunswick that could not have been opened up in the same time by private enterprise, and I believe, that from this time forward it will be no burthen to the people of this country in its operation. I say these resolutions contain the antidote to the bane the hon. gentleman sees in having a rival line to take away the traffic from a certain portion of it. These very resolutions contain the means of opening up branches in connection with the Intercolonial Railway and will bring into our country, through shorter lines, a traffic that we would not otherwise obtain. A vast amount of traffic will be brought over the line from Louisburg to St. John that never would come into our country at all unless we had these shorter lines. Therefore, I say that under these circumstances, so far from any injury accruing to the finances of the Intercolonial Railway, its position will be just as good or better after these resolutions are carried than it is to-day. I will just notice a remark that the hon. gentleman threw out, that the accounts of the Intercolonial Railway were balanced by an increased subsidy from the Postmaster-General. Now, I have seen the General Manager of the road. I thought I was quite right when I stated to the House that the Postmaster-General pays less to the Intercolonial Railway for the postal service performed than he does to any other railway. Having made enquiry of the General Manager, who has gone fully into this question with Mr. Griffin, and taken it up in all its bearings, I am able to disabuse my hon. friend's mind at once of the impression that any advantage has been gained in the arrangement of accounts between the different Departments of the Government, by the Intercolonial Railway. I am in a position to tell the hon. gentleman that the amount I have received from the Postmaster General, is less per train mile than was received under the late Administration, and that I am receiving a smaller payment from the Post Office Department than the late Government received. So far from the accounts having been altered in favor of the road, whatever changes have been made, have had distinctly the reverse effect. I desire to say a word with regard to the Napanee and Tamworth Railway. The hon. gentleman could not understand how it is possible for the Government, and the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross) labored under the same impression, to look at anything except through political spectacles. I cannot blame the hon. gentlemen for taking that view, because hon. gentlemen opposite naturally judge the Government by themselves; they naturally imagine that we will be influenced by like passions with themselves, and they have, I dare say, too much reason to believe that there have been such things as Governments using railway subsidies in such a way as not only to give them power, but to increase vastly their majority and enable them to control the Legislature. I do not intend to go into that matter. But I also heard a rumor with respect to the Napanee and Tamworth Railway. The rumor was this, and it was stated to me by a deputation from that section of the country, who said that, although their road had not received a subsidy, Mr. Mowat was prepared to pledge that a subsidy would be given, provided that they would, at the coming election, elect a supporter to his Government in the Local Legislature. I do not say that is true, but if we are to deal with rumors I give that rumor on the one side to meet the rumor on the other side. If the hon. gentleman heard the rumor mentioned by him it was an unfounded rumor. Those gentlemen came to me a year ago, and I told them the question would be investigated. They came again, and I said I would send down an engineer to report as to whether this line could be brought into the category which would entitle it to Dominion aid. I sent an engineer of standing and character to make the exploration and investigation, and he made a report in which he stated that it was shown not only that this aid was needed in order to complete the road—because I take exception to the policy of the hon. member for West Middlesex that the first thing to do is to find out whether the company has a financial basis, so as to enable it to carry out the work itself—and also to make available great water-power. With respect to that declaration of the hon. member, I have to say that the very reason why aid is granted in some cases is because the companies are unable to do the work themselves. Where there is a financial basis, and the promoters of the enterprise can go into the open market and raise money, there is no necessity for subsidies; it is in cases where we believe general advantage will accrue to the country by constructing the work, that the Government are warranted in coming to Parliament and proposing grants in aid. Not only in this case was it desirable to have this line in order to connect the waters on the Bay of Quinté with the Ontario and Quebec Railway, but most valuable water-powers would be opened up by the construction of the road, which otherwise would be useless, but which now will be converted into a source of profit and national wealth. Under these circumstances I consider a case has been made out; but down to within three days ago no man living could have stated that a dollar would be given. No hon. member connected with the Government, so far as I know, was then aware that one dollar would be given to the work. All he could say was that the matter was receiving careful consideration; and I can say this, in the presence of the House, that I, myself, three days ago, or a week ago at outside, could not have said that one dollar would be proposed, because down to that time it had never been determined to grant aid. It was only on a careful review of the whole circumstances that I considered a case had been made out to warrant the Government in asking Parliament to grant this small amount of aid. The hon. member for West Middlesex said he was afraid the Gatineau Railway was a political railway. The Gatineau Railway a political railway? Is there a man in this House, is there an intelligent man in the country, who does not know the hold which the hon. member, the king of the Gatineau, has upon his subjects, so as to render it utterly unnecessary whether a railway subsidy or not is obtained for the constituents who have so long enjoyed the distinguished honor and great advantage of having his services in this House, and are too proud of that position to make it necessary that a railway subsidy, or anything else, should be given, in order to prove that he has their confidence, that he has a warm place in the affections of the great mass of his constituents, the strongest and most enduring bond that can exist between a member and his constituency? If the hon. member for West Middlesex had wished to show how utterly unnecessary it was to bring in political allusions, he could not have chosen a better illustration than he did in regard to this matter. The hon. member got widely astray in his geography. He took up a hostile position to these resolutions on an entire misconception of what they were. It is true he had not had the advantage of having had the resolutions very long in his hands, but he had had them long enough to have prevented him making such serious blunders. He had doubtless under his hand Colonel Snow's plan for an air line from Louisburg to Port Moody, and he should have learned two things: (1) that the Island of Cape Breton had more than 31,000 inhabitants, and (2) that a line of railway running, not alongside, but at one end of the Intercolonial, could no more be a competitor with the Intercolonial than the line from Ottawa to Montreal is a competitor with that from Montreal to Quebec. But I suppose that when the hon. member for Inverness (Mr. Cameron) informed the hon. gentleman that the Island of Cape Breton was not a little county with 31,000 inhabitants, which was the ground on which the hon. member based his hostility, and the impression that it was a parallel line to the Intercolonial, I thought the hon. gentleman would have taken it all back and would have told us, as the hon. leader of the Opposition did, how delighted he would be to obtain, for a subsidy of $3,200 per mile, a line to the harbors of Sydney and Louisburg. But no; the hon. gentleman, when he found he was all wrong, that this was not a parallel line, but one that must develop a vast amount of traffic, that instead of the Island of Cape Breton being the size of a county with 31,000 inhabitants, it proved to be a great Island with enormous resources, sending five representatives to Parliament—he was still just as much an opponent as before. The basis of his opposition had broken down, but he was still an opponent. He reminded me of a witness in court who was examined with respect to the height of a horse. He said it was fourteen feet high. The Judge asked him whether he did not mean hands. The witness said: "Have you got me down as saying fourteen feet?" The Judge replied, "yes;" thereupon the witness said: "Then, by Jove, I will stick to it." The bottom has fallen out of the hon. gentleman's argument, and the whole basis of his opposition has proved to be wrong, and yet the hon. gentleman still sticks to it. The hon. member for Sunbury (Mr. Burpee) is, no doubt, disappointed, and I am sorry for it. He naturally felt a very great interest in a subsidy being given to the direct line from Fredericton to Salisbury, and there is no doubt that so far as making the very shortest line of communication is concerned, there is a great deal to sustain that view of the case; but there were two considerations—first, that this line will carry us through the great commercial centre of New Brunswick, St. John, a matter of no small importance. It takes us by the most direct route to that fine harbor, and places it in the position of competing with Portland just as well, or on about the same terms and footing as the line which the hon. gentleman himself favored; and with this addition, that we run on the Intercolonial the whole distance from St. John to Halifax instead of over the portion only from Salisbury to Halifax; so that, all things being considered, this selection was made. My hon. friend knows that the Legislature of New Brunswick have subsidized the section of road in which he takes special interest; and I have no doubt that this subsidy will result in the construction of this road at no distant date. Then I may say, I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman in saying that the Province of New Brunswick has been neglected. Where has he found evidence of this? On what does he found the statement to this House that the Province of New Brunswick has been neglected? Will he show me any place on the face of the globe, where a population the same in numbers as that of New Brunswick has a greater number of miles of railway than it has? Will the hon. gentleman show me any other country where this is the case? And when he remembers, that a large portion of this mileage has been constructed by funds provided by this Parliament, the hon. gentleman ought not to stand here, in the face of what has been done for the Province of New Brunswick by this Parliament, and say, that this Province has been neglected. Why, as I told the House before, my predecessor subsidized half a dozen lines of railway in New Brunswick, and founded and established the principle of giving, what is now by a little extension made into $3,200 a mile by furnishing rails to lay the track. My hon. friend from West Middlesex says that that was an utterly insignificant subsidy compared with what we propose? But was it? Why, does the hon. gentleman not know, that these iron rails could have been sold a dozen times since they were used for that purpose for only $5 a ton less than you could have bought new steel rails for; and, therefore, these were substantial subsidies. I approved of it. I sustained that policy, when my predecessor stood here and I stood in Opposition, as a wise one, just as I call upon the hon. gentleman to sustain the policy contained in these resolutions. I have paid him the highest compliment that one person can ever pay to another; that is to imitate him. My hon. friend surely had forgotten that the railway from St. Martin to Upham, thirty-five miles, was subsidized by my predecessor, by furnishing rails for it; that the Elgin Branch, fourteen miles, was subsidized; and that a portion of the Albert Railway, the Chatham Branch Railway, eight miles, was subsidized; and since my predecessor left office, I have carried out the pledge which he had previously given, to subsidize the Kent Railway by furnishing the rails to extend it for twenty-two miles.

Mr. BURPEE (Sanbury). The hon. gentleman misunderstood me. I did not complain that the Province of New Brunswick, as a whole, had been neglected in railway matters. I did not refer to that subject at all. My complaint was that a portion of New Brunswick through which the Central Railway runs has been neglected.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am sorry I misapprehended the hon. gentleman, because I confess I heard what he said with a great deal of astonishment. I am glad, however, that we have obtained the support of my hon. friend from West Middlesex on a portion of the resolutions, if we cannot have it on all. That hon. gentleman in common with some of his friends on that side of the House, gives an enthusiastic support to the proposal to subsidize the Gravenhurst Railway, and that to the extent of $12,000 a mile; so that, I think, if he finds that my friends from the Maritime Provinces and the Province of Quebec are prepared to go on in extending such a subsidy to the Gravenhurst Railway, I think I must ask my hon. friend in return for that to give us his assistance to secure the small subsidy of $3,200 a mile for these various lines to which, in some sections of the country, almost equal importance is attached. Now, I think I have said all that is necessary to say on the present occasion, except to express my gratification at the very handsome and statesmanlike manner in which my hon. friend from York (N. B.) has addressed himself to this subject. That hon. gentleman, of course, in common with my hon. friend from Sunbury was somewhat disappointed that the road in which he naturally takes a more direct and special interest had not received the same consideration, for the reasons which I explained, that some other sections have obtained; yet that hon. gentleman has stated very frankly, that he believes that the whole policy propounded is a useful one, that the country will benefit from it, and that he is prepared, although it does not cover all the ground he would like to see it cover, to give it a handsome and independent support. I thank him for it, and I believe that I may congratulate myself on the fact that no proposal ever submitted of equal importance to this House, has received more general approval from both sides of the House, than the resolutions which I have had the honor to submit.

Resolution to be reported.

THIRD READINGS.

The following Bills were severally read the second time, considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time and passed:—

Bill (No. 129) to amend the Act thirty eight Victoria, chapter fifty-six, intituled: "An Act respecting the Graving Dock in the Harbor of Quebec, and authorizing the raising of a loan in respect thereof."—(Sir Leonard Tilley.)

Bill (No. 130) to amend the Act thirty-sixth Victoria, chapter sixty-two, and the Act forty-third Victoria, chapter seventeen, respecting the Quebec Harbor Commissioners."—(Sir Leonard Tilley.)

INLAND REVENUE ACTS AMENDMENTS.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved that the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 115) to consolidate and amend the several Acts respecting the Inland Revenue, be now read the second time and concurred in.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Are they important?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The first important change is after section 161, where a new section is added by which a penalty is provided. The next important change is in section 185, by which the 2½ per cent. allowance to which they were formerly entitled is restored to the Bill, leaving it as it was before.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman explain why a change was made in the old law, and why that change is now withdrawn?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Under the operation of the Act it was found that the 2½ per cent. rate did not equally bear on all the maltsters, and we thought it would be better to strike out the 2½ per cent. entirely. That, however, was an increase of taxation on the brewers, of which they complained, and under all the circumstances we thought it would be a reasonable conclusion to leave the law, in this respect, as it was. I wish to make a statement for the special information of the hon. member for South Brant. During the discussion upon one of the clauses of this Bill which provided for notices being attached to the packages of tobacco, the hon. gentleman asked me if they would be furnished free by the Department. I think I left him to understand that they would; but I find that such a course would lead to great misunderstanding and difficulty. Cut tobacco is put up in packages of all sizes, and the hon. gentleman can easily see what a variety of labels would have to be struck off. Therefore, we cannot undertake to supply these labels to the trade, and I think it will be no hardship to the trade to get these notices printed on their labels at no extra cost to themselves, in the same way as it is done in the United States.

Amendments read the first and the second time, and concurred in.

On Resolution 308,

To pay the balance of the accounts of L. J. Demers et Frère for printing the first volume, and also the second volume in French, of the Report of the Canadian Pacific Railway Commissioners.....$2,920.88

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I would like to ask the hon. Minister why this work was given to L. J. Demers? The Order in Council stated that the printing of the evidence was not confidential, but that the report was. Why was not this work done by the contractor?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This was a work that was pressing at the time. We wanted to have the volume ready at a certain period. Under these circumstances the work was given to these printers to prepare the first volume, and afterwards, seeing that they had done the work well, we gave them the second volume. The price was fixed by the Crown Printer, and the amount, $2,920, was in accordance with the tariff.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). If the matter was pressing, the Government took the longest way to get the work done. We have not got those reports yet. The French report has not yet reached us.

On Resolution 309,

To pay Mr. A. Audet for translating into French the Report of the Canadian Pacific Railway Commissioners $1,300.00

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I have been asked, in connection with this item, to draw attention to a motion which appeared on the Notice Paper some time ago, calling for correspondence with reference to the dismissal of Mr. A. Audet from the Inland Revenue Office, Montreal.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am not in a position to answer the hon. gentleman on that.

On Resolution 310,

To pay sundry expenses incurred in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway Commission, vide statement of Unforeseen Expenses laid before Parliament $16,821.49

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). The great expense of this Commission is a strong argument against the appointment of similar Commissioners hereafter. Mr. Keefer received $6,928; Judge Clark, $6,917. The payment to a Judge of a County Court for acting on a Commission while drawing his salary as a Judge seems to me a gross irregularity. The system of—I must not use the word subsidizing—permitting a Judge to draw such a large sum, while his judicial duties are neglected, is a bad one. I cannot impress too strongly on the Government the propriety of discontinuing that system. It cannot be possible that the judicial functions of a Judge are properly discharged while he is closely engaged on a Commission, and this supplement to his salary will be an inducement to other Judges to ask, possibly, for some little contract which will enable them to supplement their salaries also. This is in keeping with the system of employing officers in the service overtime at extra pay. Mr. Davin, as Secretary, received $4,483; Mr. Stevenson, $6,646; Mr. Demers, $2,920; Col. Audette, $3,706, making a total of $39,213. The Commission was as unproductive in its results as could well be conceived, so that the $39,000 have been simply thrown away, and perhaps in some respects worse than thrown away, though the Government may feel that a certain portion was well spent in the interest of their friends.

Mr. RYKERT. During 1875 these hon. gentlemen opposite employed no less than 191 extra clerks at a cost of $45,423 and gave thirty-five bonuses to these amounting to $940, which they charged to Contingencies. One-fourth of the whole Contingencies was caused by the employment of extra clerks.

Mr. ROSS. That is a tu quoque argument. I have not checked the hon. gentleman's figures, but, in any case, we are not dealing with the late Government. I object, not to the employment of extra clerks during the Session when there is a rush of work, but to the employing of the permanent staff in working extra hours. I think the effect is demoralizing, and I say so conscientiously. But whether I believe it or not, I have a perfect right, with my increased Parliamentary experience and increased attention to that matter, to call attention to what I believe to be wrong. I take my present position in this matter where I have always stood, and I stand by that. I am willing to be condemned when I am wrong. I think the hon. member for Lincoln has done many things he would gladly not have done, and I think he has given many votes in this House he would not give over again.

Mr. RYKERT. No, no.

Mr. ROSS. Perhaps not, as he reached his maturity years ago. However, I hope he will live long enough to withdraw some of the statements he has made, and regret some things he has done.

On Resolution 326,

Unprovided Items of 1881-82 (vide Auditor-General's Report, page 435) $542,992.32

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I would like to ask a few questions on some of these items, and the first is $20,000 for Contingencies in Civil Government. Could the hon. Minister give me some details of that large amount of money?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I think that is mainly covered by a warrant issued for something like $20,000 to cover the increased Contingencies of the Departments over and above the estimate. That was very largely arising from the number of clerks it was necessary to employ in preparing returns that were asked for the two last Sessions of Parliament. The Session before the General Election there was a general spirit of enquiry on the part of our friends opposite for all kinds of information upon all kinds of subjects, and this Session we have asked for a vote for that express purpose. My hon. friend will remember that down to the present Session, and in the accounts of last year, all these were paid out of the Contingencies of the Departments, and, therefore, increased considerably the estimated sum. In addition to that there is an enormous increase of business in the Department of Interior from the large surveys, applications for lands for settlement, and in various other ways. Under the regulations for the disposal of these lands, every hon. member knows that the duties of that Department were largely increased, necessitating many extra clerks. So, with reference to the Post Office Department, the amount of business was increased by the increased number of deposits in the Post Office Savings Bank, the increased number of accounts, and increased business in money orders.

Mr. ROSS. There was a further item of $2,059 for Contingencies in the Senate.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I regret that I have not the papers by me by which I could give the hon. member the details.

Mr. ROSS. Then the item under the head of Immigration, $1,239.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It is well known that Immigration expenditure was made larger during the close of last year than was expected, and much larger the current year, and the wonder is that, under the circumstances, and considering the calculations of the Government as to the amount of immigration, it was not even a greater amount.

Mr. ROSS. I see a charge of $6,940 for rolling stock for the Pacific Railway.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. There were some open accounts when the transfer took place which were not closed until the end of the year, and I think even the present year there is a small item of a few hundred dollars that is not closed.

Mr. ROSS. Then there is a further item of $96,000 for Dominion Lands.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. That is owing to the increased surveys. It was vitally important that as large a portion of that country should be put under survey as possible, and the Department considered it desirable to push forward the survey with greater rapidity than was provided for by the sum voted. The Government felt that Parliament would vote any extra sum necessary. We are doing the work as rapidly as possible with the sum at our disposal.

Mr. ROSS. There is a sum of $192,920 for Manitoba and the North-West Territory under the sub-head of Indians. We are voting a large sum for Indians, and here we have drawn in advance almost $200,000.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I know we have. We hoped the last year or two that we would be able to keep this expenditure down, and we have approached Parliament with the estimates at the lowest possible sum. But as the time arrives we find it necessary before the close of the year to supply a sufficient quantity of food for any emergency that may arise, as was the case last year when it was found absolutely necessary to supply at an early day an ample quantity of food. It will be found that the expenditure will be about the same, and we have asked about the same sum. In some cases the price is more under the new tenders than it was under the old contracts. Beef, for example, which was 8½ cts. under the old contract will now cost 12 cts. or 13 cts., owing to the increased demand in the United States for animals for cattle ranches; and we have not yet had a supply in the North-West sufficient to meet the demands of the Indians and Mounted Police.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and (at 12:25 o'clock a.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

FRIDAY, 18th May, 1883.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

SITTINGS OF THE HOUSE.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that when the House adjourns this day it shall stand adjourned until three o'clock p.m. to-morrow, and that on that day and the following Monday Government Measures shall have precedence.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. MACKINTOSH. Mr. Speaker: I find, by the Debates of the House, that during my absence last week owing to suffering from a severe cold, reference was made to a matter in which my name was connected with that of Mr. Whitehead, and I think some explanation is due to the House, as well as to the country, concerning it. The only reason I have not brought the matter before the House before this is simply because I was unwell. The evidence given before the Commission on Pacific Railway matters has been published and read by hon. members, and it has been made the subject of an attack on me, and insinuations that, I think, are not only unjust, but absolutely untrue. When the Pacific Railway Commission was formed I was absent from home, and, reading in the newspapers that certain statements had been made by parties—I am sorry to say some of them interested in misrepresenting me—I wrote a letter to the Commission, and the following is the purport of it:—

"To the hon. the Commissioners appointed to enquire into Pacific Railway Expenditure, &c.

"GENTLEMEN,—From reports in Winnipeg newspapers Mr. Joseph Whitehead was examined by you, touching certain business transactions with me in connection with his contracts with the Dominion Government. Garbled extracts from his evidence as well as what must be the hearsay evidence of others have been republished in newspapers of this and other Provinces, these being used by my political opponents, and the political opponents of the existing Dominion Government, for the purpose of making unjust insinuations—if not direct charges against the latter—as well as against myself.

"As my business relations with Mr. Whitehead began when the late Government, to which I was politically opposed, held the reins of power; as I acted as his agent in Ottawa, as all my monetary dealings with him were the result of deliberate agreement, entered into at his request, and of his own free will—I have been unable to discover in what capacity I or my business affairs can be subjected to the inquiry of a Royal Commission appointed 'to enquire into and report upon the acts of the Government of Canada, its officers and servants,' and the conduct of those who have entered into contract and dealings with the Government. Nevertheless, as the Commission has deemed it advisable to examine Mr. Whitehead as to his private and public affairs, outside of the public and official 'record,' I desire to supplement Mr. Whitehead's statement, made as it apparently was without the aid of counsel or of the opportunity of referring to documents and papers relating to this matter—so that the public may be able to distinguish the facts which bear on the conduct of their representatives and servants from those which are personal and private, and, therefore, not to my mind, constitutionally within the inquisitorial jurisdiction of Commissioners, Royal or otherwise.

"Hence I shall be glad to be informed on what day it will be convenient for the Commissioners to give me an opportunity of making my statement.

"I have the honor to be, your obedient servant,

"O. H. MACKINTOSH.

"OTTAWA, Ont., October 23rd, 1880."

Pursuant to that application made by me, I was requested to appear. I was not summoned before the Commissioners, and was not asked to give evidence. I went there, and made my statement. My statement was a very full one, and I was cross-examined very fully also. I showed that my relations with Mr. Whitehead had no connection with the Government; that on no ground, and on no occasion whatever, had I made any application to the Government asking them to do what any former Government had not done. This was established by the evidence. The judgment of the Commissioners was this:

"We concluded, upon the evidence on this subject, that no part of the proceeds of the said notes, or any other money coming from Mr. Whitehead to Mr. Mackintosh, had the effect of or was used for the purpose of obtaining for Mr. Whitehead or for any other person any advantage concerning this contract, or any other matter in connection with this railway. The notes were at first discounted by Mr. Mackintosh. They were subsequently returned by him, and eventually returned to Mr. Whitehead. On other occasions considerable sums of money or notes changed hands from Mr. Whitehead to Mr. Mackintosh under circumstances which we found, on investigation, not to affect the public interests, and we do not think it necessary further to allude to them."

Again:

"We have taken evidence at some length concerning the dealings between the Government and him, while he was carrying on the contract, with the view of ascertaining whether he had obtained any favor by improper means or otherwise, at the expense of the public; and all the evidence on this subject leads us to conclude that since the execution of the contract, no influence had been exercised on his behalf more effective than his own representations were or would have been; and that he has not gained from the Department, or any member of Parliament, or any engineer, or any other person in the Government's employ, an advantage that was not consistent with the best interests of the country."

That was the deliberate finding of the Commissioners upon the evidence which had been given; and that evidence was not alone my evidence—the judgment was given not alone on my evidence, but on the corroborated statements of several other witnesses; and I was able to show, as I think the hon. Minister of Railways will bear me out in saying, that on no occasion, and at no time, did I ever approach him and request him to do anything to compromise his position as the Chief of the Department, or myself as a private gentleman. I can also say this: That so far as Mr. Whitehead's interests are concerned, the fact is that when the matter came before the Commission, and since then, and since it has been discussed in the public press, I never approached the hon. leader of the Government. I never referred to the hon. Minister of Railways, and on no occasion whatever asked what I should do in this matter, whether I should make any explanation here to-day, or as to what I should say when I went before the Commissioners. I may also state, that on no occasion did I ever ask the Government for a favor which I would be afraid to make this honorable House conversant with. I know too well my duty not only as a member of Parliament, but also as an occupant of a position of public trust, even to approach a Minister and ask him what would bring the blush of shame to my constituency. However, my political opponents have deemed proper, with reference to the granting of a certain amount to Mr. Whitehead, to make insinuating attacks on me; and with malignant ingenuity they have endeavored to misread and partially quote as well certain portions of the evidence calculated to be detrimental to me, and this they have circulated through the country, while I had no means of defence against such attacks. When the attack was made on me, the Globe said:

"Soon after the change of Government, it became necessary for him to prefer a large claim, and another thing he wanted was that the engineer in charge of the works, should be superseded by another, who was known to be favorable to Mr. Whitehead's claim in being paid. In order that he might stand well with the Government, Mr. Whitehead employed Mr. C. H. Mackintosh to act as go-between in the negotiations with Sir Charles Tupper. Mackintosh was no doubt employed because he was popularly supposed to have the ear of the hon. Minister, and for that reason Mr. Whitehead thought it would be profitable to pay the go-between a considerable percentage on the claim."

Now, I can inform this honorable House that, so far as I am concerned—as Mr. Whitehead as shown by his evidence, as I also showed, and as was corroborated by other evidence—I was acting for Mr. Whitehead, and on Mr. Whitehead's behalf prior altogether to the change of Government, and it was at Mr. Whitehead's request that I so acted. It is not necessary to go into private affairs, or to make private explanations, or to refer to private business; but I may say I found that Mr. Whitehead was not the victim of a Conservative interest, that it was not Conservatives who were making money out of him, but leading Reformers were the men who were gradually squeezing out his life's blood—and more, I think it could be established, if necessary, that Mr. Whitehead contributed sums of money to supporters of the previous Government. Consequently, when I found this to be the case, I cautioned Mr. Whitehead, and showed him what would be the result; and events proved that I was right, for at the expiration, I believe, of two years, he came to me, and showed me that his position was what I told him it would be, if he followed that course. I am not a wealthy man, and, as may be imagined, have suffered by my connection with Mr. Whitehead. I have not in reality made a dollar out of him so far as I am specially concerned; and, so far as the Government is concerned, I did not get him to contribute anything to the support of the Government, or of their political cause. Mr. Whitehead acted on his own behalf in these matters. In order to meet his notes I had to sacrifice nearly all the property I had. But these matters have been seized upon by my opponents, in connection with unsupported and uncorroborated statements, for the purpose of damaging me. They succeeded for a long time, and they got me down; but I got up again; and I tell hon. gentlemen opposite who are following me to-day, and who are attempting to insinuate wrong-doing on my part, that they were knocked down, that they were down for the second time, and that they will not get up again, if their policy is to be one of slander and abuse. So far as I am concerned, I can assure this honorable House that I have done nothing that could bring disgrace on any member of this House, and that if I had had opportunity and had known that this item was to have been discussed, I would have been prepared to discuss it fully. When the item came up the hon. member for West Durham said:

"I have a sort of suspicion which may be a very unjust and unworthy one, that there were more people than Mr. Mack—I apologize and retract—than Mr. Whitehead interested in this matter. I ask whether this was the contract about which a great deal of evidence was taken by the Canadian Pacific Railway Commission; whether this is the contract which was the subject of transactions between the Department and the contractor, and between the contractor and those who had been going surety for him and assisting him, and intervening with the Department; and whether this is the matter in respect to which divers notes were given by Mr. Whitehead for large sums of money?"

The hon. member for North Norfolk said:

"And I have here a copy of the letter furnished by Mr. Whitehead to Mr. Mackintosh. Now, Sir, it appears from the evidence that Mr. Mackintosh still holds Mr. Whitehead's acceptances for $13,000 and interest and protest, amounting now probably to $14,000. Mr. Mackintosh is in the position of a creditor to Mr. Whitehead, he holds these acceptances and can enforce payment, and I think the circumstances of the case point quite plainly to the supposition, at least, that among the creditors who are to be paid out of this allowance of $88,000 to Mr. Whitehead for profits that he never realized in carrying out his contract, is this same Mr. Mackintosh. I think there is something very peculiar about this matter, something very suspicious about it. I do not think it is in the interest of Mr. Whitehead that this allowance is made. We have this suspicious circumstance, that $14,000 of this money is very likely going to a friend of the Government, and we may fairly infer, if we could lay bare all the transactions, that there are other friends of the Government who are creditors of the same Mr. Whitehead; and I think that the inference the country will draw is, that the notice of the Government in introducing this vote is to reimburse those friends of theirs who are creditors to Mr. Whitehead in this matter."

I can inform hon. gentlemen that I have never filed any claim against Mr. Whitehead. In pursuance of the evidence I gave before the Commission, when I said that if Mr. Whitehead was pressed at any time financially, although I had taken up his notes, I would be the last one to endeavor to collect them. I said that distinctly; and after swearing to it, it is very unlikely after I took the oath that I would file a claim, or approach the Government, and endeavor to induce them to place in the Estimates an item which I did not know to be in the Estimates, until I came in late in the evening and found it there. I never approached the Government in this relation, and I can appeal to the hon. Minister of Railways, and to the right hon. leader of the Government, and ask them whether on any occasion I mentioned this matter to them, or endeavored to induce them to favor me in the least, as far as this matter is concerned. At that time I was not a member of Parliament, and there was no law to prohibit me from making arrangements with Mr. Whitehead in whatever way I wished to do; but I never did anything that was wrong, or in the least infringing on the rights and privileges of this honorable House. But it appears that this item is to be made the subject of an attack on me, and not only on me, but on the Government; although no more unfair, no more unjust, no more unfounded attack was ever made on a Government. In answer to the statement made by the hon. member for North Norfolk, I may say that I have filed no claim; and, so far as I am concerned, since I became a member of Parliament, and, I may add, prior to that, I can challenge any man to state whether on any occasion I have directly or indirectly offered any bribe, or attempted to forget the allegiance and duty which I owe to my constituents. I think the allusions were not only unwarranted, but unfair, because I was not a member of the House when this transaction took place. To say that, now that I am a member, I am endeavoring to induce the Government to put items in the Estimates, in order that I may be recouped for the losses which I have suffered as a private individual, is to make a statement utterly untrue, the fact being that for the last two years I have had to sacrifice a great deal of property in order to pay those acceptances. But so far as I am concerned, those who know my private business are aware of the truth behind all this. They also know that two years ago every newspaper in the country politically opposed to me endeavored to hound me to earth, but they did not succeed. They struck me down for a time, but when I came before the public it was established beyond a doubt that I had the confidence of the people. If these stories had been true—if they had been founded on fact, if there was nothing behind me other than the character of a mere trickster or speculator, I think it is reasonable to suppose that I would not have achieved the position

I have achieved in this short time. I was at that time elected Mayor of Ottawa for three successive years; I conducted the business of the city during that period without a single charge against me of dereliction of duty or of profiting by the office. I went in a poor man and came out a poor man, and should I continue in Parliament, the probability is that I will leave it as poor a man as I entered. When I resigned office, and when my record was before the people of this city, Conservatives and Reformers alike—among the latter many office bearers of the Reform Association and a great many others—united in passing a resolution placing on record the fact that they had the utmost confidence in my integrity. I say that if anyone doubts my position in the city of Ottawa, or the confidence which the people have in me, let him meet me in a contest here where I am known, and he will find that I have friends among all parties who know that I am not the man that I have been painted by hon. gentlemen opposite—a man who for his personal aggrandisement would sacrifice his honor and violate the sacred pledge he made when he became a member of this House. How willing are those who attack me to forget all the misdoings, all the misconduct, of their own friends. When they were in power they found no fault with their own friends for using their public position for individual purposes; they could do what they pleased, they could do wrong in any and every direction, and it was all proper, and they were all perfect. They have one code of political morality when they are in Opposition and another code when they are in power. I do not wish to indulge in recrimination, but I ask hon. gentlemen to take a fair and dispassionate view of this matter. I say it is most unfair to pursue any man as I have been pursued. For these attacks have not only injured me personally, but they have injured me in my business; they have affected my credit seriously. I ask these hon. gentlemen to place themselves in my position, to hold the mirror to themselves, and then I ask them how they would feel if they had been treated as I have been. I say it ill becomes men who have occupied high positions in the councils of the nation, who occupy high positions in the councils of their own party, to attempt to injure a man who has only been in Parliament but a few months, and who is still but a young man in public life. I rose simply for the purpose of making these explanations, and I now repeat with the same solemnity as though I were making them on oath, that so far as the Government is concerned, I never asked them to put an item in the Estimates for my personal advantage, and that since becoming a member of this House I never asked Mr. Whitehead to pay these acceptances, and I made up my mind when I entered Parliament, that I would never ask any friend of mine to disgrace himself by voting for or supporting any matter on the ground that it would be to my personal interest or profit.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As the hon. gentleman has referred to me, I will only say that he never spoke or wrote to me, or had anything to do with me respecting the item in the Estimates to which reference has been made. Moreover, I would say that originally at the time of these transactions, he never approached me, nor did Mr. Whitehead approach me, directly or indirectly, respecting the negotiations, arrangements, or matters of account between them, and he never asked from me anything connected with Mr. Whitehead.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman having referred to me in relation to this matter, it is only due to him that I should state the fact, that shortly after my taking the position of Minister of Public Works, Mr. Whitehead informed me that Mr. Mackintosh was acting as his agent in the city of Ottawa, and requested me to make any communications for him in his absence, through Mr. Mackintosh. It was not an unusual thing—in fact it was the usual rule—for contractors who were carrying on large works somewhat remote from the city, to name some person in the city as their agent, to transact business with the Department from time to time, and to make any arrangements they might desire to make which they could not make in person. Mr. Mackintosh called upon me, and stated that he was acting as agent for Mr. Whitehead, and that he hoped that as Mr. Whitehead had a heavy and arduous undertaking on his hands he would receive every possible consideration from the Government. I told him at once that every contractor received all the consideration from the Government that the course he pursued in relation to his contract entitled him to. I say unhesitatingly, in the presence of this House, that Mr. Mackintosh never uttered a word to me in reference to Mr. Whitehead's contract that I should not be perfectly willing should be overheard by the leader of the Opposition himself; and that he never approached me improperly in behalf of any claim of Mr. Whitehead's in any particular whatever. I may say further, that Mr. Whitehead during the period he was carrying on that contract never received any consideration whatever except the same consideration that the Government accords to every person who has a contract with them. As I have already stated, my predecessor, before I came in, assisted Mr. Whitehead in performing his contract. I do not say he favored him, though it might be so regarded, because they were outside the terms of the contract, though in pursuance of the invariable practice of the Department to give all reasonable and proper assistance to contractors that could be given them in order to carry out their contracts. From time to time the money deposit for security is released in proportion to the advanced condition of the works, and in case of difficulties arising advances are made on the plant. This is not an unusual thing. This remission or release of the deposit money was made by my predecessor, as it was by myself, as were these advances on plant, in order to strengthen Mr. Whitehead's hands in carrying on this work, involving extraordinary difficulties, before any return could be received by the contract. My predecessor considered as I did, that in doing all we could reasonably and properly do in that respect we were not consulting Mr. Whitehead's interest, but the public interest. So far as Mr. Mackintosh is concerned the moment the statement was made in the Globe newspaper that parties were obtaining large sums of money from Mr. Whitehead under the delusive idea that they could assist in promoting his interests with the Government, I said to him that if he was giving any person a single dollar of his money under the impression that it would assist him with the Government, he was throwing it away, and he had better keep it to himself. I repeat that so far as that contract was concerned there never was any communication between Mr. Whitehead and myself or through Mr. Mackintosh that I would not be glad that the hon. leader of the Opposition should have perfect information upon. With reference to this item in the Estimates from the time the Government took that work out of Mr. Whitehead's hands down to the day before yesterday, Mr. Mackintosh never exchanged a remark with me personally or in writing—never made any communication to me in reference to Mr. Whitehead's affairs until he spoke to me regarding what had taken place in the House and his intention of taking notice of it in his place in Parliament. It is due to Mr. Mackintosh that I should make this statement.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider a certain proposed resolution (May 17th) to grant certain subsidies to railway companies.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

To the Baie des Chaleurs Railway Company, for 100 miles of their railway from Metapediac on the Intercolonial Railway to Paspébiac, in the Province of Quebec, a subsidy not exceeding $2,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole..... 320,000.00

Mr. BLAKE. Would the hon. gentleman kindly say whether this is the whole length of the Baie des Chaleurs Railway?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No. I take it that the Baie des Chaleurs is projected from Metapediac, on the Intercolonial Railway, to Gaspé, eighty miles further than Paspébiac. This vote covers the first 100 miles of the railway; for the remaining eighty miles no subsidy is provided.

Mr. BLAKE. Has the hon. gentleman any information as to the character of the country traversed, and the probable cost of the line?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I made that statement to the House, I think, when I made my remarks on the resolution. I may say that after the close of last Session—application has been made for this grant for two or three years—I requested the Chief Engineer of the Intercolonial Railway to have a proper examination made of the country, and to report. He reported to me that the country was of the character I described, and that it was a fair country through which to construct a railway, and giving the estimated cost, which, I think, I stated to the House yesterday was over $2,500,000 for the whole length, including the equipment.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman state whether he has any information as to the financial standing of the company?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have not. I inferred the position of the company from the fact that the Government of the Province of Quebec, where the company is well known, had granted it a subsidy of 10,000 acres of land per mile. I have no means of knowing that this subsidy, together with that which we propose, will secure the construction of the road; but, as the hon. gentleman observes, it is not proposed to pay any of this money until ten miles or more is constructed, and in the proportion which the cost of that portion bears to the whole work, so that he will see that the subsidy is sufficiently secured. The right of way has been obtained as a free grant for the 100 miles covered by this resolution.

To the Caraquet Railway Company, for 36 miles of their railway, from a point near Bathurst to Caraquet, in the Province of New Brunswick, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole..... $115,200.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I lay upon the Table of the House the information asked for in regard to the Gatineau Valley Railway, the Great American and European Short Line Railway, the International Railway, the Petitcodiac and Havelock Corner Railway and the Caraquet Railway.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will make the same explanation regarding this road that I asked as to the other.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This line was surveyed by the Government in connection with the construction of the Intercolonial Railway, Mr. Fleming having brought forward a project to build it as a branch from the Intercolonial Railway to Shippigan, a short distance beyond Caraquet. The Government of New Brunswick has subsidized this road to the extent of $3,000 a mile, covering the entire distance from the Intercolonial Railway to Shippigan. The country is described as a very fair one through which to construct a railway, necessitating no serious difficulties at all.

Mr. BLAKE. Has the hon. gentleman any further information as to the financial position of the company?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; I have not. I have inferred its position from the granting of the subsidy by the Local Government.

To the Gatineau Valley Railway Company, for the first 50-mile section of their railway from Hull Station, in the Province of Quebec, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, not exceeding in the whole..... $160,000.00

Mr. BLAKE. I would like the same explanation with reference to this road.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The Gatineau Valley Railway Company have located their line, and I am told that this subsidy will be sufficient to enable them to secure its construction. It is true they asked for a larger subsidy, but the Government believe that the subsidy given by the Province of Quebec with this additional subsidy, will enable them to complete the work on this portion of the line.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the local subsidy?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Six thousand acres of land per mile from the Province of Quebec.

Mr. BLAKE. And the mileage cost, including the equipment?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. My hon. friend from Ottawa county can, perhaps, state.

Mr. WRIGHT. I think that the estimate was between $18,000 and $20,000 a mile.

Mr. BLAKE. Can the hon. gentleman state to what point this fifty miles will carry the road?

Mr. WRIGHT. It will carry it from Hull station to the River Kazabazua, within twelve miles of the Pickanock River, in the township of Wright.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Would my hon. friend state the point to which the fifty miles will carry the Gatineau Railway from Hull Station?

Mr. WRIGHT. To the place known as Kazabazua, within ten miles of the township of Wright.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is the right place.

To the Great American and European Short Line Railway Company, for eighty miles of their railway from Canso to Louisburg or Sydney, in the Province of Nova Scotia, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole.....$256,000.00

Mr. BLAKE. I would like the same explanations with regard to this road, as to its resources, organization, and prospects. I understand from what I have seen in the newspapers, that there has been a projected line, by which it would go to St. Peter's, and diverge subsequently from there to Louisburg or to Sydney, and also that a place has been suggested by which it will go in another direction, crossing the point called the Grand Narrows. Is this latter place contemplated, and if not, to which point will the road go to Louisburg or Sydney?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The intention is to go about twelve or fourteen miles from the Straits of Canso, on a common line from which you can diverge either east or west, because, as my hon. friend is aware, there was a line projected running through the county of Inverness to Capo North. Of course, nothing would be done on that line until after it would be ascertained whether it was practicable to maintain a ferry on the fifty miles between Capo North and Newfoundland. It is not proposed to give any subsidy to that line. Although some of the projectors of that scheme have been very sanguine as to the maintaining of that communication during the winter season, I always believed they would have to fall back on the harbor of Louisburg or Sydney, the former of which is open all the year, and the latter during a large portion of the year, and both are now connected by railway. It is proposed, therefore, to run for twelve or fourteen miles on a common line which you would pursue in going to Cape North or Louisburg; then by St. Peter's either direct to Louisburg or to Sydney if found more favorable to railway construction, as these two points are not very divergent and are connected by railway. That is the projected line for which this subsidy is intended. I have taken great pains to ascertain the financial standing and position of this company, and I think I am in a position to state that whatever work they will engage in they will carry through. The Government made a contract with them to extend the line from Oxford to New Glasgow, and although they have made great progress with it and incurred large expense, they have not yet called for any portion of the subsidy, so that I have no doubt at all as to their financial ability. Dr. Norvin Gran, a well-known capitalist, and a gentleman connected with a great many railway corporations in New York, who is associated with parties who can command any amount of capital, is the president of this company, which, I am sure, will vigorously carry the work to completion provided they accept the subsidy. They asked for a larger subsidy.

Mr. BLAKE. Has the hon. gentleman any assurance that the company will undertake the work at this subsidy—one-half that amount they demanded for this portion.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have the assurance of the general manager, Colonel Snow, that they will. Previous to his leaving here, I told him, although I knew the work was more costly in Cape Breton than in other sections, I was not prepared to recommend a subsidy of over $3,200 per mile, and I asked him before taking that step, whether he would be prepared to carry out the work, and he assured me they would.

Mr. VAIL. Would the hon. Minister be disposed, in the event of this company not carrying it out in a reasonable time, to transfer it some other company?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We have provided all these subsidies shall lapse unless the works are completed within four years. It would be impossible for the company to organize unless they had the assurance of being allowed a reasonable time to construct the road. If they should fail, I would have no hesitation to ask this subsidy for any company that would construct the road.

Mr. VAIL. I am not at all disposed to object to these resolutions, but I must express my regret that the hon. Minister of Railways could not see his way to providing a larger sum for the Cape Breton road. Being a continuation of the Intercolonial, and consequently part of the road from the Pacific to the Atlantic, and considering the larger grants given to the other line through a portion of Ontario which is also a portion of the through road, we might have fairly expected that the $6,000 per mile asked for would have been granted. However, I suppose there were good reasons why it could not be done; but I hope that before long an additional amount will be given for the extension of the Cape Breton road. The hon. Minister of Railways said the Local Governments were not now in a position, with their limited means, to subsidize railways to any extent. I agree with him and I am glad to hear that the policy initiated last year will be continued, and that the Dominion Government will, in future, recognize as one of their obligations the subsidizing, as far as is reasonable, of railways in the several Provinces. I say I am glad that policy has been carried out this year, and I hope next year it may be further extended, and that the Dominion Government will use any surplus over and above what is required for other important works, for the extension of railways in the several Provinces. In fact I am sorry the Government did not adopt this policy long ago. Nova Scotia had a considerable amount in the public Treasury here, the interest on which would have kept the Province out of debt. They very wisely at that time expended it in subsidies for the extension of our railway system which was inaugurated before Confederation. They have gone the full length the Province is able to go. In fact their means are so restricted in consequence of this expenditure, that I am inclined to think before long they will have to ask the Dominion Government to consider their position, and make an allowance in return for these subsidies. The Province is at present in such a position that it cannot grant further aid to railways without running into debt, and I hope the Government will consider the position of the Province and do something in return for the amount expended in subsidizing and extending these public works. I am glad to acknowledge that the policy of the hon. Minister of Railways is one that he can claim credit for, and I hope when he finds that the $3,200 a mile is not sufficient to extend the line through the Island of Cape Breton, which is a very important portion of Nova Scotia that next year, either he, or some other member of the Government, should he vacate the position he holds, will be able to add another $3,000 a mile as a subsidy to this road and insure its completion.

Mr. BLAKE. Do I understand that the distance from either of these points, Louisburg or Sydney, is about eighty miles?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. About the same.

Mr. BLAKE. I think my hon. friend might be satisfied with the hon. Minister's assurance that $3,200 a mile is, according to the general manager's assurance, a sufficient inducement to enable the company to construct the road; but it would be much better for the Province of Nova Scotia, if the hon. gentleman could save this $3,200 for the eighty miles that are not wanted, and appropriate it to some other Dominion work that is wanted.

Mr. CASEY. It is something new to be told that it is the policy of the Dominion to aid local as well as Provincial railroads, but we are accustomed to surprises from this Government. They are in the fullest sense of the word a Radical Government, because the number of radical changes, the number of reckless changes, they have made in the policy of this country exceeds anything that could have been expected from the most radical wing of the so-called Radical party. But I suppose we must take it for granted that this is the policy of the Dominion Government, and will remain their policy as long as these hon. gentlemen remain in power. If the precedent is once established that local roads are to get subsidies from this Government, then applications for subsidies will come in from hundreds and thousands. But we in western Ontario may have something to say if this policy is to be maintained. We built our road before this radical change of policy took place, before it was understood that the Dominion was to build roads for all localities. We took the other view, and put our hands in our own pockets and bonused these roads largely. It has paid us very well, but if the principle is to be established that local roads like these should be built by the Dominion, I am not sure but we may have a claim for damages. In my own county we have paid out no less than $274,000 to secure the building of the Canada Southern, the Credit Valley, and others. Then different municipalities along the Credit Valley have paid large sums; almost every municipality in western Ontario has paid out large sums to secure the building of railroads, which should have been paid for, according to the present dictum of Ministers, by the Dominion Government. But are we to get any consideration for this? Are we to be reimbursed, or are we to be called upon to build roads in other localities which have no bonuses? If we are to be called upon to do that, then we must ask to be reimbursed what we have paid ourselves. It may be said that the Canada Central is largely bonused. But we in western Ontario are very little interested in that. It may benefit the country, perhaps, as far west as Hamilton, but we can reach the great centres by much shorter connections than that. Radicals are supposed to be logical, and if this Government makes a radical change in favor of building local roads they must carry that policy out to its logical conclusion, and reimburse those sections of the country that have built their own roads.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say to the hon. gentleman that he must not take our policy from a member of the late Government. He must take the policy of the present Government from our statement.

Mr. FAIRBANK. The portion of the railway that is being subsidized lies some 400 miles east of St. Andrews and St. John, and, yesterday, it was spoken of as completing a connection with the western system of railways; and the great advantages of a sea port which would compete with Boston and Portland, were mentioned in support of this claim. I asked, yesterday, whether there was any assurance that, upon the granting of this subsidy, the uncompleted portion of the railway running across the State of Maine would be built, or whether that undertaking would be placed in a better condition to be built?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The great object of this American and European Short Line Railway is to obtain a short line of communication between the Old World and the principal centres of commerce in the new. Its promoters believe that by acquiring certain pieces of railway, using certain railways that are constructed, and constructing certain other portions of railway, a much more direct communication could be obtained between the Old and the New World, between Port Moody, Chicago, Toronto, Hamilton, and the Western States and Liverpool by railway, in contradistinction to the longest line by water. The hon. gentleman knows that between Montreal and Liverpool there is a certain amount of railway to be traversed and a certain amount of water to be navigated. We may fairly compute the speed of the railway at forty-five miles an hour. We often do that between Halifax and Chaudiere Junction, including stoppages, on the Intercolonial Railway, as against fifteen miles an hour by water, and that, therefore, just in proportion as you can cover the distance between Montreal and Liverpool by railway instead of by water you diminish the time occupied in making the journey and voyage. Our aim, therefore, has been to secure a short line of communication between Montreal and the eastern-most port in America, and that port is Louisburg; and our object in constructing these eighty miles of railway on the Island of Cape Breton to Sydney or Louisburg, is for the purpose of being able to carry mails and passengers to that point at greater speed than if they took a steamer to Halifax, which is 200 miles further from Liverpool. The hon. gentleman will see the bearing of the construction of this link of this line in Cape Breton to the port of Louisburg, that is, to enable us to open up this communication; and incident to that, the construction of this short line of communication to St. Andrews, this is the only way the Dominion can compete with Portland, and the distance between Montreal and Liverpool will be shorter by this route through the harbors of St. Andrews, St. John and Halifax, than through Portland or Boston. I hope I have made myself intelligible to the hon. gentleman. The other section of the line runs through the State of Maine, and the cost of its construction will require to be provided for entirely independent of any subsidy from this Parliament; but this scheme will be the means of providing a rapid trans-continental line to Louisburg on the one hand, and for freight in winter to the harbors of St. Andrews, St. John and Halifax, all of which will be brought from 100 to 200 miles nearer to Montreal than at present.

Mr. CASEY.

Mr. FAIRBANK. The point I raised was whether the granting of the bonus for that end of the line would so encourage the company as to lead them to build the unconstructed link across the State of Maine?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. These resolutions provide for the completion of the entire communication between Montreal and Louisburg, excepting 120 miles in the State of Maine, which will have to be provided, and which I believe the parties will be encouraged by this aid to construct.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the estimated cost of the eighty miles to be subsidized?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I should say about $25,000 per mile.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. Minister has not stated whether it is the intention of the Government to make the granting of this subsidy to the short line, conditional upon the construction of the link through the State of Maine, which is necessary to secure the object in view?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The resolutions speak for themselves on that point. We do not propose to make any conditions not provided for in these resolutions.

Mr. WOODWORTH. It is unnecessary for me to say anything in regard to the proposition to contribute $3,200 per mile for eighty miles from the Strait of Canso to Louisburg, as the House has almost unanimously advocated its adoption. I intended to have said something on this question, but the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Vail) has relieved me from saying anything whatever in regard to it. I was gratified beyond measure to find that hon. gentleman advocating this very just measure which solves this crucial question that had baffled the efforts of himself, while he was Provincial Secretary and leader of the Government in Nova Scotia, as it had done other leaders of the Government—the construction of a railway from the Strait of Canso to Louisburg or Sydney through the Island of Cape Breton. This question has been settled through the statesmanlike stand which the Government have taken on it. The hon. member for West Durham has found himself deserted by almost all his supporters, except his Fidus Achates, the hon. member for West Elgin, for the majority of the members supporting him seem to be in favor of the proposal now before the House. The Government have done an able, wise, and most generous act, and we congratulate them; and it is a proud moment when we can vote these subsidies and charge them, not to capital but against the surplus that has been accumulated by the wise, economic efforts of the Government. It is a proud thing to be able to give these subsidies without trenching on capital nor running in debt. The Government has done another thing: They have made it almost impossible to distinguish from either those sitting on this side or on the other side of the House, who are their supporters. Hon. members sitting to the right of the Speaker have generally been supposed to constitute the main body of those supporting the Government, but it seems to me that on these resolutions, and on the Government policy, which was attacked by the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake), and the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross), hon. gentlemen on the Opposition side of the House have not served their party with allegiance, but have given in their adhesion to the Government scheme. I trust this bomb shell which the hon. Minister of Railways has thrown into the House, will not disintegrate the serried ranks of the Opposition.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Did the hon. gentleman say bomb-shell or bon-bon?

Mr. WOODWORTH. I said bomb-shell, but it would have been more appropriate to say bon-bon. It appears that at this, the first Session of this Parliament, a very large number of Government supporters are to be found among hon. gentlemen opposite; so much is that the case that party government can no longer be carried out in this manner, and a third party will become necessary. We find the hon. member for West Durham deserted by his supporters, notwithstanding his able efforts, and he is most skilful in making much out of little. I did not hear the remarks of the hon. member for West Elgin (Mr. Casey), but I think we should listen to his remarks, and answer them. I do not approve of this continual scraping of desks, and noises made to drown a member's voice. We can certainly afford to conduct our debates in such a manner as will conduce to the intelligent discussion of the subjects in question, without making unseemly noises.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid that I am not so grateful as I ought to be to my hon. friend's contribution to the debate. These resolutions are submitted by the Government not as a party question at all. They are resolutions which, in the judgment of the Government, touch the vital interests of the country. They are submitted for the purpose of promoting the prosperity of the country as a whole. They are submitted for the purpose of developing the trade and commerce and business of the country; and I cannot conceive that there is the slightest want of party allegiance on the part of any hon. gentleman in the House who believes that by any one of these resolutions the good of the country is advanced, in giving a hearty and cordial support at the same time to these resolutions one and all, and, at the same time, preserve the most perfect party allegiance to the hon. gentleman who leads them with such signal ability in this House. I do not accept such support as any indication of any disintegration of party. I only accept it as an indication from independent gentlemen sitting on the other side of the House, that when, in their judgment, and in the judgment of any one of them, a measure, in their opinion, conduces to the advantage of the country, they are quite as much at liberty to give it a hearty support as is any hon. gentleman on this side of the House at liberty to support anything proposed by my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition, when they believe that such a proposition will advance the interests of the country.

Mr. IRVINE. As an humble member of this House, I would like to say a few words on this question. Much of what I have heard I entirely disapprove of, and I do not know that I would have attempted to address the House at this time except for some of the extraordinary statements which I have heard. I entirely dissent from most of what has been said by hon. gentlemen who have spoken on the other side of the House, and who have endeavored to congratulate hon. gentlemen on this side on what I would call a right-about-face. I entirely dissent from the proposition laid down by any hon. gentleman on this side of the House, or by any hon. member of the Government, that the Government of this country should so depart from well understood principles as to subsidize local or Provincial railways. I disapprove of such a course in toto; and I say this: That up till last night I defy any hon. gentleman in this House to point to one instance in which the Government of this country, or any member thereof, acknowledged in their place in this House, or out of it, that the Government considered it their bounden duty to take Provincial or local railways under their control; and I believe I am correctly informed on this point, when I say that the hon. Minister of Railways held the same views until a very recent period. Neither he nor any of his colleagues gave the country any reason to believe that the Government of Canada contemplated any such thing as the subsidizing of local or Provincial railways. We have an hon. gentleman—I know his bland smile, if I am not able to mention his county—who spoke just before the hon. Minister of Railways—

An hon. MEMBER. The member for King's.

Mr. IRVINE. The hon. gentleman from King's. He smiles across the House, but I warn him that there are men in Canada to-day who stick to the principles until lately laid down by the hon. gentlemen who occupy the Treasury benches, that local railways should not be subsidized by the Dominion Government; that is, that the people of this country should not be taxed for such subsidies taken out of the revenue collected from the people. This was never contemplated to be done by the Federal Parliament, and never until last night did this Parliament understand the contrary. The hon. Minister of Railways can smile, but I make this broad proposition: That not one of the railways for which $2,000,000 are to be voted in subsidies, can be properly called an inter-provincial and national railway. You commence and subsidize a piece of line in Cape Breton, and another piece of line in the Province of Quebec near the boundary line; and what is that for? We do not know, and we have no guarantee that this road will ever be built one mile farther than the boundary. What is the plain fact? Another line is built to Old Town or Bangor, nearly opposite to Moose Lake, about twenty-five or thirty miles from the boundary, and nothing is to hinder, when that subsidy comes out of the funds of this country, out of the Federal Treasury, a road in which the hon. Minister of Agriculture is deeply interested, as I am informed, being run down to the boundary and for the other road to meet it at that point, Bangor thus reaping the benefit of our subsidy to that line. I ask the hon. Minister of Railways, to-day, if that is the short line that was projected, concerning which the people of this country and members of this House sent a memorial to the Government for a subsidy; and if one mile of this road is contemplated to be subsidized, which members of this House wished to be subsidized on that score? Not one mile of it is to be subsidized. The building of a road to Louisburg is not part of the short line projected, and for which aid was asked from this Parliament; and the subsidizing of the line to the boundary is not part of the line, in the course which was intended to be taken by the company, which asked for a subsidy. It is very well known to every hon. gentleman that there is a lake not far from the boundary—Moosehead Lake. You must either go north or south of this line, and if south, you must intersect the western extension not far from Bangor, or Old Town if you please; and, as the hon. Minister of Railways said, Mattawamkeag. This was the word he used last evening for New Brunswick, but any person knows that Mattawamkeag is fifty miles from the frontier, and the hon. gentleman knows as well as any man living that the line which this company asked to be subsidized, and the line to be built, is not a line running to Mattawamkeag, but a line to Houlton. And when at Houlton you tap the whole system of American railways, and it is not necessary for the hon. gentleman to carry out this proposition. It is not necessary perhaps for the hon. gentleman who sits behind him, because he has two strings to his bow; and the road from Old Town to the boundary subsidized with money voted by the Federal Parliament, will answer the Americans first-rate to complete their line to Bangor. There is no doubt about that. I, as a humble member of this House condemn in toto, in every particular the subsidizing of local lines out of Federal funds. This is a principle which was never acknowledged heretofore until this time. The Government never acknowledged that they would do such a thing. They always disowned it. The hon. Minister of Railways disowned it. I think I am certain in making this statement that until last night we never knew that the Government would take Provincial railways under their care.

Mr. WRIGHT. I think that the hon. gentleman (Mr. Irvine) was in the House last Session when the hon. Minister of Railways brought down his policy with regard to such roads; and I think it was distinctly understood at that time, that this policy, this admirable policy, as I think it was, which was then initiated, and with regard to the effects of which I so entirely differ from my respected friend who has spoken, should be continued. I remember distinctly the address of the hon. Minister of Railways to the House then, and I pointed out the importance of constructing roads in the county in which I was interested. I pointed out that this county contributed an immense sum to the revenue and received nothing in return; and hoped that some aid would be granted in that direction, and I am pleased to find a favorable response in the resolution of the hon. gentleman. I think that the arrangement is exceedingly wise, exceedingly judicious, and exceedingly proper; and certainly it meets with the approval of the great body of the members of this House. Then, again, there was another difficulty which, perhaps, did not strike my hon. friend who has just spoken, and that was the unfortunate position which is occupied by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance. Under the National Policy system, his surpluses have increased to such a marvellous extent that it was a difficult question to solve how they could be diminished; and I think that in this way, perhaps, the money can be better utilized for the good of the country than in any other, I think the policy of the Government is an exceedingly wise and judicious one. I was asked a question in regard to the road in my own county, which I will now take the liberty of answering. This fifty miles to which the subsidy is given will take us to Kazabazua, in the township of Aylmer. It is an Indian name—the name of an old Indian tribe of that vicinity. This place is within twelve miles of the township of Wright. Then twenty miles on we come to Desert. I heartily join in the statements made by the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Vail) that he hoped that the Government would continue this wise policy. I believe, with my French friend, that l'appetel vient en mangeant, and I am sure that this policy is one which will produce admirable results in developing the resources of the country. It is a wise policy to build the main lines and to subsidize the branches; and I may say in regard to this particular road, that it will not only be a feeder to the Occidental, but will connect with that most important and valuable road the Waddington road, which I am assured affords by all means the shortest line to New York. In addition to the opening of the Occidental and affording an outlet to the Intercolonial, this road will also find us a short cut across that country. I think, therefore, the hon. gentleman is mistaken in his views, and I believe the excellent ideas promulgated by the hon. member for Digby will meet with the approval of almost every hon. member in this House.

Mr. VAIL. I thought I understood party obligations as well as hon. gentlemen opposite, and I fail to see, because any hon. member of this House feels disposed to differ from other hon. gentlemen on a question of this kind, that he is to be charged with deserting his party. Hon. gentlemen on this side have not gone to that extent, but some of the Opposition have rather hinted that I favored the Government railway policy, and that that was an unusual course for me to pursue. I believe in every hon. gentleman acting intelligently in matters of this kind, and when he finds a measure coming from either side to which he feels he can honestly give his support he should do it in a manly way. I have never been charged with favoring gentlemen on that side of the House, and I think it is pretty conclusive evidence that this is a good measure for it is about the only measure they have introduced for which I have given them any credit. I am not disposed to recall back a word I said in regard to this policy. I believe it is better for the Government to spend the surplus in this way than in the way we have been asked to approve in the last few days. I referred to the grant on the Island of Cape Breton as being too small; and notwithstanding what my hon. friend from Cumberland (Sir Charles Tupper) has said, I do not believe any company can build a line through that difficult portion of Nova Scotia without a subsidy of at least $6,000 per mile; and I hope if it is not built, and another company should ask for $6,000 per mile, the Government will feel bound to increase the subsidy to that amount.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not often have to differ from my friend from Ottawa County (Mr. Wright), but I cannot allow the impression to go abroad that I agree with his view that this is a mode of assisting my hon. friend the Minister of Finance. I entirely dissent from that view of the case, and for this reason, I gave the hon. gentleman an illustration last night. We expended $6,000,000 or $7,000,000 in the construction of a road in Nova Scotia under much less favorable auspices than apply to many of these roads, and instead of diminishing the revenue we had enough to pay 6 per cent. on all the money we expended, and our revenue was larger than before. So far from affording relief to the hon. Finance Minister by diminishing his surplus, I am afraid we will be more likely to increase it.

Mr. PICKARD. I wish to add a few words to the remarks I made last night. Up to the present time there has been expended in the Province of New Brunswick, or the people have made themselves liable for it, no less than $3,500,000, the whole of which is paid, but the bonds that were issued on the Grand Southern railroad within two years. They failed to carry out what they believed to be a great commercial road, owing to the want of money. That was at the time the Province was entering into Confederation, when they thought the Intercolonial would go by the valley of the St. John. They subsidized a road which to-day is within seventy-six miles of Rivière du Loup; they gave $2,000,000 to this road and $2,936,000 to the Baie Verte scheme. The Province of Nova Scotia has been rather handicapped in aiding local railways, from the fact that it had no money to give them, as they have devoted it to through main lines which would bring the Maritime Provinces near to the wheat fields of Ontario, and unite us together by a commercial bond, which is far stronger than the political bonds of the Confederation. Last year, my hon. friend from Carleton (Mr. Irvine) supported the Government, and asked for a subsidy for a New Brunswick railway from the Province line to Rivière du Loup or Rivière Ouelle. That was a through line, and the only through line on Canadian territory they will ever have.

To the International Railway Company, for forty-nine miles of their Railway from Sherbrooke in the Province of Quebec, to the International boundary line, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole.....$156,800.00

Mr. BLAKE. I did not apprehend from what the hon. gentleman stated, what the mileage is which has been completed, and on which steel rails are to replace iron ones, nor how much remains to be constructed. I should also like similar information as to the probable resources of the company, &c., to that which I have asked for in the other cases.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The International Railway Company have been pushing on their work steadily for some years, and opening up a very valuable section of country between Sherbrooke and the boundary of the State of Maine. I believe there have been very few local works carried on in this country which have had greater success than this has had in developing the resources of the districts through which it passes. There are four miles to be constructed between Sherbrooke and Lennoxville in order to shorten the distance, and sixteen miles to be partially constructed at the other end of the line, near to the bound-dary of the State of Maine. The forty-nine miles, including these portions, it is proposed to provide with steel rails, so as to put it in the same position as the other roads to which subsidies have been given. As to the resources of the company, I may say that its president is the late member for Sherbrooke, the present Judge Brooks, and the company have been making great efforts to carry this road forward, and, as I said, have done an immense deal of good in opening up that section of the country.

Mr. BLAKE. Then I understand the hon. gentleman to say that twenty-nine miles out of the forty-nine miles are in running order, but with iron rails.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That portion has been operated for a long time, but the rails, I understand, are unfit for further use.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman explain how much is saved by the cut-off of four miles, which is to be built between Lennoxville and Sherbrooke?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am not able to say, but it gives the line a more direct course.

Mr. BLAKE. Can he say anything as to the mileage cost of these twenty miles?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I imagine about $20,000 a mile.

Mr. BLAKE. And as to the financial standing of the company?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. All I can say is that the company have made great exertions to push this road, and although not very rapidly, have been steadily prosecuting it. I have no doubt whatever that the equipping of the line at this end with steel rails, and the provision made for the other end of the line to Cape Breton, will secure the construction of the intervening link.

Mr. GILLMOR. I understand that this is the same line for which a Bill was introduced into this House by the hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Colby) some years ago. A delegation composed of the hon. member for Stanstead and the hon. Minister of Agriculture visited my county with the view of laying this matter before my constituents as well as others. They visited St. Andrews and St. Stephens, and we had a public meeting at Calais, to which delegates from St. Andrews and St. George were sent in order to promote the railway, which was then called the Megantic line. We were all pleased to see these gentlemen there, and I was asked to allow my name to go on the charter. Under these circumstances, I cannot offer any opposition to this measure, but give it all the support I can.

To the Miramichi Valley Railway Company for 32 miles of the railway, the Intercolonial Railway at the Miramichi crossing above Wilson's Point, to Moran's near Demphy Village, in the Province of New Brunswick, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole. $102,400.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. In consequence of a telegram I have received, I would like to strike out the words, "crossing above Wilson's Point," so as not to define the starting point on the Intercolonial Railway, and that a point within a short distance of that point may be selected, if it is found to be more available for connecting with the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman explain whether, by the resolution as now altered, the line can join the Intercolonial Railway on the north or the south side of the river as the company pleases?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is precisely what I wish to leave open, and that is the effect of this change.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will give the same explanation as to the probable cost of this railway, and the financial resources of the company?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This railway stands in the same position as the other New Brunswick railways. I presume that the financial standing of the company was considered good by those best able to judge of it, the Government of New Brunswick, who gave the company a subsidy of $3,000 a mile. I presume the cost of the road will be about $20,000 a mile.

To the Montreal and Western Railway Company, for the first 50-mile section of their Railway, out of St. Jérôme, in the Province of Quebec, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $160,000.00

Mr. BLAKE. I would invite the same explanations regarding this road.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This road has also been subsidized by the Province of Quebec to the extent of 10,000 acres of land per mile, and it is projected to run from St. Jérôme to a junction of the road from Hull Station to Desert. The road is projected to run from St. Jérôme to the Mattawan, and it is expected to intersect the Gatineau Valley Railway somewhere about 100 miles north of Hull. The country, as I have already stated, is not only admirably adapted for agriculture, but is rich in mineral resources, and a large population is rapidly crowding into and settling it; and I think we may fairly estimate very admirable results to flow from this expenditure of public money.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the estimated cost?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I presume about the same.

To the Napanee, Tamworth and Quebec Railway Company, for 28 miles of their railway, from Napanee to Tamworth, in the Province of Ontario, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $89,600.00

Mr. BLAKE. I would invite the same explanations as to the probable mileage cost of the road, and the resources of the company.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The resources of the company have been expended largely in grading the road. I understand that it has already been graded a distance of twenty-eight miles, and this subsidy will enable the company to complete it and open up that section of country.

Mr. BLAKE. With reference to the statement the hon. gentleman made yesterday on this subject:

"No hon. member connected with the Government, so far as I know, was then aware that one dollar would be given to the work. All he could say was that the matter was receiving careful consideration," and so on. Since then a paper has been put in my hands, the Napanee Express of the 11th May, which says in reference to this matter:

"If this be the case an explanation will be in order from the Government as to what was meant by the letter written by Sir Charles Tupper to Mr. Alex. Henry, President of the Railway Company, the Friday before the Provincial Elections. The following is a copy of the letter as supplied us by a gentleman to whom it was given to read:—

"ALEX HENRY, Esq., Napanee:

"DEAR SIR,—Your report is not in, but we are satisfied it will be favorable. I will lay your case before the Governor with a favorable consideration. This letter is written in concurrence with the Privy Council."

"(Signed) "CHARLES TUPPER."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is hardly correct, except that I think the terms were for favorable consideration. I told Mr. Henry when he came to me about the subsidy that nothing of that kind could be done until finally ascertained; but that, in the meantime, I had discussed the matter with the engineer sent to examine the road, and from the report he had given me I had satisfied myself this was a road I could fairly recommend for the favorable consideration of the Government; but as I stated before, these parties were all assured that no pledge could be given, nor promise further than that from the information in my possession, my own judgment would be favorable, and I would be prepared to recommend it, but until within the last week when the Government dealt with this, I did not, nor did any member of the Government know a single dollar would be given for the construction of the work.

Mr. BLAKE. The letter written before the Elections declares: "I will lay your case before the Governor"—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Governor?

Mr. BLAKE. I suppose Government is meant. "I will lay your case before the Government with a favorable consideration." That might have been held to express the personal opinion of the hon. gentleman, and not to bind his colleagues, who, on further consideration, might induce him to alter his mind. The letter proceeds to say: "This letter is written in concurrence with the Privy Council," so that there was the assurance that favorable consideration would be given with the concurrence of the Privy Council.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is some mistake. If I was in a position to say the Privy Council had decided to consider the question favorably, the matter was at an end, and I could have told them the Government had decided. But I told them I had not received the report, but from consultation with the engineer I had formed a favorable opinion of the road, and was prepared to submit the subsidy to the Government. The simple distinction between the Government deciding and the Government being aware that I had communicated the fact that I would be prepared to submit the matter for their favorable consideration, gave no pledge, but left the matter to be dealt with entirely on its merits when the case came before us. The whole thing occurred in a very brief period, and I had no means of giving any assurance that aid would be granted, further than that I have generally found, in matters appertaining to my own Department, my colleagues are prepared to give every consideration to my suggestions.

Mr. BLAKE. The letter says: "Your report is not in, but we are satisfied it will be favorable, and I will lay your case."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman had better read the letter itself, and not the report of it. I generally try to write English, and the hon. gentleman will see that is not good English. I know there is a mistake in the report with reference to the term "Governor." I never wrote such a letter as the hon. gentleman has read. The general terms of the letter are, so far as my memory serves, correct, but I have some doubt as to the accuracy of the expression in the last portion.

Mr. BLAKE. I know no more than I learn from reading the paper; but at the same time this Mr. Alexander Henry, whom I know not, would have been disposed, I should judge, to think this letter meant a little more than the hon. gentleman declares it did mean. The substance of the statement is that the hon. gentleman was satisfied the report would be favorable, but could not put the matter finally before the Council until he got the report.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I told the hon. gentleman how I had satisfied myself.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman announces he is satisfied, and then announces he will lay it before the Government for favorable consideration. Then he announces this is written in concurrence with the Council. I think the hon. gentleman—no doubt through a slip—conveyed the impression to Mr. Henry, and then associated with him, that this, though not a pledge, was strong enough:

Sir CHARLES TUPPER,

To the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway Company, for twenty-five miles of their railway, from St. Raymond to Lake St John, in the Province of Quebec, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole..... $80,000 00

In addition to the subsidy granted by the Act 45th Vic., chap. 14.

Mr. BLAKE. Is there any change here?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I stated that there was an error in the appropriation last year of twenty-five miles, not through the fault of the company, and that this covers the subsidy intended to be granted.

Mr. BLAKE. Is the company in a good financial condition?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am satisfied of that. They have $4,000 a mile from the Local Government, and probably $20,000 will cover the cost of the road.

For a railway from the Intercolonial Railway at Petitecodiac to Havelock Corner, in the Province of New Brunswick, twelve miles, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole..... $38,400 00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have no doubt this would be taken advantage of, because for some time application has been pressed on the Government and the representative from that Department, that it would form a corresponding road upon the northern side of the Intercolonial, between St. John and Shediac, to that which was partially subsidized by my predecessor, namely, the Elgin Branch, which runs on the south of the Intercolonial, or the St. John and Shediac Railway. This runs from a corresponding point on the Intercolonial into a very good district to the north, and I have little doubt that the aid proposed will secure the construction of that branch, and thus make a very valuable feeder to the Intercolonial.

Mr. BLAKE. Has the hon. gentleman any idea of the cost?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The country is not difficult to construct a road through, and I should suppose $15,000 or $20,000 would construct it.

For a railway from Gravenhurst to Callander, 110 miles, a subsidy not exceeding $6,000 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole..... $660,000 00

In addition to the subsidy granted by the Act 45th Vic., chap. 14.

Mr. BLAKE. If I rightly understood the purport of the observation of the hon. gentleman the other day upon this subject, the intention is to grant this subsidy to the company which was once known as the Northern and North-Western Railway Company.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is the expectation.

Mr. DAWSON. This is a very important road to the district I represent and to the country at large, and, I think, in no sense can it be considered otherwise than as a Dominion road. There was a grant of $6,000 last year, making with this additional grant $12,000, which, I hope, will induce some company to go on and construct the road. For that road there was a grant of $8,000 made by the Ontario Government in 1877, and it still remains on the Statute-book. It was a grant from the Railway Aid Fund of Ontario, but no company was then induced to assume the undertaking. The grant was $8,000 per mile from Gravenhurst to Lake Nipissing, or in other words to Callander, but it is now to be applied over the whole line from Gravenhurst to Sault Ste. Marie. The other day the hon. leader of the Opposition made a suggestion which struck me at the time as being a very practical and sensible one, and that was that this grant made by the Ontario Government might be made available for the lines through to Sault Ste. Marie—for it is unreasonable to suppose that the Ontario Government will build a line parallel to the Pacific.

Although the two Governments do not pull together in all matters, still the Government of Ontario is composed of practical men, and they might come into some arrangement of this kind. At all events, a line to connect with the Pacific Railway at Lake Nipissing is of great importance, and no doubt the Pacific Railway will eventually be pushed up to Sault Ste. Marie. If it were, it would lead to immense quantities of agricultural produce being brought through this country, because there can be no doubt that the agricultural produce of the North-West, west of Duluth, will be brought down to Lake Superior. Thence it will come over our railway, if once extended to Sault Ste. Marie. I think this is a grant which will be generally approved throughout Ontario.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). As I understand the hon. Minister of Railways, his proposition is to give this aid to the Northern and North-Western and Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company. That company was incorporated in 1881, and in addition to the power given to build from Gravenhurst to Callander Station, power was also given to build from Callander Station to the Ottawa River, and I may say that I look upon that part of the powers given to this company, and upon that part of their line, as being the most important of the whole scheme. A road about forty miles in length, from Callander to Lake Temiscamingue, would bring the whole extent of that lake, some seventy-five or eighty miles of navigable water, within reach of railway communication. I have been told, and I believe it is a fact, that along the shores of Lake Temiscamingue, in both Ontario and Quebec, there are large areas of arable land, which is described as being a clay loam, much of it being covered with heavy oak timber, and admirably adapted for settlement. It is a fact that the few pioneers who have settled along the shores of Lake Temiscamingue have raised most excellent wheat. A mill was erected there a short time ago, under the auspices of the Indian Department, I think, for the purpose of converting wheat into flour, and in consequence the settlers along the lake have gone into raising wheat. I am informed they raise large quantities of wheat equal in quality to that raised in other parts of Ontario and Quebec. I venture to express the hope that my hon. friend the Minister of Railways, will, when he has time to consider the matter, take into consideration the question of granting to this railway company a subsidy upon that portion of their line, as well as upon the portion of the line between Gravenhurst and Callander. I say that, in addition to the agricultural capabilities of that locality, which would be developed by the construction of this line of the road, there are large areas of magnificent timber territory, and large quantities of sawn timber, which could be got out along Lake Temiscamingue if there was any means of getting it to market. The construction of this short line, about forty-five miles, would bring the whole of that large area into almost immediate communication with the railway system of Ontario and Quebec. Something has been said about the Provincial character of these roads to which grants have been given. That part of the Northern and North-Western and Sault Ste. Marie scheme, which runs between Callander Station and Lake Temiscamingue, could be in no sense looked upon as a Provincial road. It would bring a large portion of the Province of Quebec into direct communication, as I have stated, with the railway systems of Ontario and Quebec; and I venture again to express the hope that the hon. Minister of Railways will take this matter into consideration, and eventually grant to this portion of the road the same consideration which is granted to the other portion of the scheme.

Mr. BLAKE Without desiring to say anything more upon the general principle of these resolutions, I just wish to represent that I think it is of the last consequence that the sections of country in Ontario interested in having communication with the North-West by means of this connection, should enjoy the connection as cheaply as possible; and in order to obtain it cheaply it is of the last consequence that there should be free competition in the two lines of railway which stretch towards this point, namely, the Midland system and the Northern and North-Western system. It is also of consequence, now that the Government have proposed—I must confess I do not think necessarily—to pay $12,000 a mile, which is about the cost of the railway, I say I think it is of the last consequence, and reasonable and fair that consideration should be had to the circumstance that the bulk of this cost is being provided out of the public funds, in arranging what the tariff shall be over that portion of the line. I have already suggested what I think to be the true solution in cases of this description when the Government is providing the bulk of the money to build the line, perhaps the whole. It is not a case in which complications involved in running a railway by Government would measurably exist. It is devised in point of fact as a link between these companies, inland companies I called them the other day. There can be no doubt that the company which obtains the subsidy will have a great advantage because it will have the preference, although there may be nominal equality. I have always felt that difficulty. This will be just as applicable to one of the infant companies as to the other, because by any plan you can devise, however fair it may look in clauses of an Act of Parliament, it will be impossible to arrange for equality, but the company controlling the grant will be able to favor that particular country. The argument is that the order in which trains shall be run, terminal arrangements and arrangements with regard to local traffic, and so forth, are matters very easily capable of being arranged in such a way as to favor a particular company. That this observation is correct is proved by what we know in regard to the contest going on for the contract, a control not wider than the Legislature would allow. I do not blame either company for trying to secure the contract, as it is in the interests of their shareholders; but it is for the interests of the country that a company, perfectly independent of other corporations, should control this connecting branch and secure connection with Toronto and points west, with the Canadian Pacific Railway. I will repeat the observation I have made that, in regard to a road of this description, it would be of great advantage were the Government to construct it and to secure absolute equality to all roads connecting with it by undertaking its management, and by imposing such tolls for the use of the road by different companies as would not indeed pay any dividend upon what is proposed to be made a free grant, but to pay the cost of management and all subsequent expenses. I do not think it would be fair or reasonable that the country should be called on to contribute more than $12,000 per mile, the amount proposed as a subsidy. I have already pointed out a method by which, if joint action were taken by the two Governments, we might spend not more than $6,000 per mile; and I wish it to be distinctly understood that I am not suggesting that this road should cost the country one shilling more than the hon. gentleman proposes. My desire rather is that it should cost less, because I desire, if possible, that we should adopt a suggestion similar to one I am about to make when the hon. Minister of Finance makes a motion on another subject, namely, that if the Government supply the bulk of the money the Government should have control of the work in the interests of the country.

Mr. McCARTHY. I think the hon. member for West Durham is mistaken in his statement that the cost of the road will be only $12,000 per mile.

Mr. BLAKE. I did not say that; I do not think it will be much more.

Mr. McCARTHY. According to estimates made, the cost will be about double that, as some portions of it will pass through a difficult country, although towards Callander the country may perhaps be easier. I quite agree that the road should be made as cheap a line of communication between the central part of Ontario and the terminal point of the Canadian Pacific Railway, as it is possible to make it. There are two proposals whose claims I have no doubt will come before the Government in granting this bonus. One will be to make an independent line of communication, commencing at Callander and ending at Gravenhurst. It is a matter of doubt whether such a road alone would really be giving the best means of communication between Callander and Toronto and the western part of Ontario, or whether by means of a connecting link with a road which does connect with Toronto and Hamilton, and further west, and necessarily therefore will compete for the trade of that part of the country, will be more favorable to western Ontario. I do not mean to say at this moment, which is the better course, but I am by no means certain that the construction of an independent line would be the best means of securing the end we all desire. The bonus is not too much, I venture to affirm, notwithstanding what the hon. member for West Durham has asserted, and the other road running eastward, the Canada Central, obtained a bonus for the same amount. For less than $1,200 a mile this connection cannot be built and worked economically and cheaply. The hon. member for West Durham has made a suggestion that the grant, instead of being made wholly by the Dominion, should be divided between the Dominion and the Province of Ontario. I do not know why we, who come from the Province of Ontario, should particularly desire to burden that Province with the payment of half the subsidy when the Dominion is willing to give the whole of it. $12,000 a mile the road should have, and if that be so why should the road not receive the whole of it from the Dominion, instead of half from Ontario and half from the Dominion as the hon. gentleman suggests? I am very glad, indeed, that at last the Government have fulfilled the pledge which, for many years, the people of the West have understood had been given, not merely by this Government, but by the former Government. I think Ontario has thought, at all events western Ontario has thought, it was entitled to have communication with Callander made as easy to its people as it was made to the eastern part of the country, and we are glad to know that the Government have found their way to make the grant which will enable the road to be built, I hope, without great delay. I may state that surveys have been made, that an estimate of the cost has been arrived at, that in certain parts, and especially at difficult points, the right of way has been acquired; and if satisfactory terms to the Government can be made with the company, there is no reason why the road should not be under contract one month after the House rises.

Mr. DUNDAS. The hon. gentleman, in his remarks, has not conveyed his sentiments so clearly to the House as he generally does. I think the Government, in this case, cannot be too careful in maintaining a complete and independent line between these two points, open to all companies who may choose to send their rolling stock over it. A reason for this is to be found in the fact that a responsible company, as I understand, within the past few weeks offered to build this link for $6,000 a mile. It is true that this company which offered to do the work is said to be more or less associated with one of the larger main lines of the Dominion, and it has been the contention of the Government that this line should be independent and free for all other companies. I am not going to find fault in this action with hon. gentleman on the Treasury benches, because I think the Government are in the main correct; but I wish to point out how important it is that in granting so large a bonus it should be given to a responsible and independent company, so that the interests of all concerned may be thoroughly observed.

Mr. FOSTER. Before the Committee rises I should like to say a word or two. It is not necessary for me to say, I think, that with the general policy which has been made apparent in these resolutions I heartily agree. There was a time when I had some doubts as to the policy of the Dominion Government subsidizing railways in different parts of the Provinces; but I have thought the subject over, and, under certain limitations, I think it is a wise and proper policy. When hon. gentlemen yesterday were overloading the hon. Minister of Railways with their congratulations, I did not think it would be well for me to add mine to the number. There has been no item to which I have assented more readily than the last item in this resolution, the item which particularly concerns my own county, that is, the small line of railway which runs from Petitecodiac to Havelock Corner. The merits of that line have been only partially put before the Committee, and I was glad to know that even after the full merits of the object were put before the Committee, there was no dissent to the item being voted. I have one advantage in argument over that of my hon. friend from Ottawa county. His road runs up into what is at present largely a wilderness, but which by-and-bye he hopes may become a paradise, while my road runs into what is already a paradise, but it is separated by intervening roughnesses and difficulties from the great line of road which runs down to the metropolis of St. John. While I am very much satisfied with the resolution as far as it goes, I suppose that I shall league myself with the common run of humanity, when I say that I am not satisfied. The hon. Minister of Railways will know, and the Government will know, that there have been representations for many years made to them with reference to a line of railway running through the central part, or somewhere near the central part, of the county of King's, in connection with what my hon. friend from Sunbury spoke yesterday; and it is for the purpose of adding my word to his, and that of the hon. gentleman from York, that I desire to call the attention of the hon. Minister to the favorable consideration of that route. There are some things in connection with it which scarcely any of these small routes which have been subsidized possess. I want to call the attention of the hon. Minister, and of the members of the House, to one thing, which I think may have some weight with them. There is a sentimental reason, if you may call it such, why this road should be built, at least why it ought to obtain the favorable consideration of this House. When Confederation was first mooted in the Province of New Brunswick—I may state it as a fact—which I think cannot be contradicted, although the general idea of forming part of the great Dominion had much to do with moulding the votes for that great scheme, yet through the central and southern part of the Province of New Brunswick a great and prevailing argument in favor of Confederation was the hope, the deeply grounded hope, that the great Intercolonial line of communication would come down through the Valley of St. John and make its ocean terminus at St. John. Well, my hon. friend from Westmoreland—who is not here—and other circumstances, seemed to have been more powerful than nature; for nature had certainly scooped out that particular route for that railway. However, it was carried around by the north there, and the people were disappointed in their hope of having that great central line of communication built and running through the centre of our Province. After that year passed after year until at last a company was organized and built a portion of the central route between the city of Fredericton or Gibson, just opposite Fredericton, and Woodstock, which was afterwards extended to Grand Falls, and later yet to Edmonston; that was the central part. Last year the Government took into consideration that route, and in their wisdom granted a subsidy to the upper portion, from the Intercolonial near Rivière du Loup, down to Edmonston, thus raising again the hopes of the people who live in the southern and central parts of the country—that this was but a precursor to the completion of the scheme in the subsidizing of the remaining portion from Gibson, opposite the city of Fredericton, down through the counties of Sunbury, Queen's, and King's, until it joined with the Intercolonial. That is the line the merits of which were pressed very strongly by my predecessor in the House, and by hon. gentlemen who are intimately interested in the matter, upon the attention of the Government year after year, and at no year with greater ability and with greater persistence than last year. That is the road which I have been trying, in common with these other gentlemen, to press upon the attention of the Government this year; and I hope, although they have not seen their way clear to granting a subsidy to that line this year, it will not leave their minds, and that the favorable consideration which they promised last year to give it, will be still continued to it. And if at a time in the near future, they can see their way to subsidizing that road, I am sure they would do a great deal to bind to them, to this Government, and to this Dominion, the people, who—out of this hope long deferred, and in fact the disappointment which came to them—have looked upon their lot as not being the most fortunate, or as fortunate as they could have desired. The hon. member for Ottawa county has a large county with immense resources, to which his road goes, and which by-and-bye as it is developed, will make that road a paying road. This is so with the other roads; and the hon. gentleman from Northumberland talked about the salmon fishery, which would be a large feeder to this road. The hon. gentleman from Gloucester talked about the fisheries, which would be a large feeder, and an item in the way of freight to his road; but I have, as has been stated by the hon. gentleman from Sunbury, a still more cogent reason than any of these for an argument why this road should be subsidized to go down to the Intercolonial, and so out towards St. John and connect with the great system of railways. Salmon are here today, and there to-morrow. Fish are very uncertain in their haunts and in their beds. Timber is cut down and the supply from that source fails; but nature has up beyond on the borders of Queen's county, near to the county of King's, in the heart of the country through which this road would go, taken care to put a better argument than any I could think of in my mouth towards urging the construction of this road. She has, centuries and centuries ago, stored up in the heart of the earth these great supplies of coal, full of promise of potency and of power; and that lies there totally undeveloped, and we ask that some means of communication be opened to it. We ask that its resources shall be brought out to help in the civilization, and in the civilization as a fact, of this great country of ours. I want to press that particularly upon the attention of the Government. I know that the change in the charter of the Central Road, which thereby took it to Salisbury as a point farther rather than to a point nearer to the city of St. John, has made it somewhat difficult for me to press this matter as strongly as I otherwise would, or as I otherwise might. I have nothing to say against the building of that link between Fredericton and Salisbury as part of the short line—in fact, I hope that it may be built, but as that does not pass through the county of King's, I had no interest in asking for a subsidy to be granted in its favor. I think it is possible, a road which, from the Intercolonial, will carry its freight and its passengers, will go there, but it is altogether out of the reach of the country through which this line traverses across the Intercolonial and down to our great Metropolis, St. John. I hope that the favorable consideration of the Government will yet be continued to that line; and we hope that at no distant date it may receive the aid so generously given to other and favored portions of this country.

Resolution to be reported.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved the second reading of Bill (No. 127) to further amend the Consolidated Railway Act, 1879, and to declare certain lines of railway to be works for the general advantage of Canada.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not propose, at this stage of the Bill, to say anything at all upon the various amendments to the Railway Act which have been proposed for the consideration of the House; as it is obvious that any observations which may be made upon that subject had better be made when the Bill is before the Committee. Nor do I propose, at this stage, to make any lengthened remarks with reference to the hon. gentleman's proposal of another description, namely, to declare a vast number of railways—by a vague and unsatisfactory definition—works for the general advantage of Canada. The objectionable character of this proposal—for such I conceive it to be—is no reason why the Bill should not be read the second time, inasmuch as the measure contains numerous proposals which are to the public advantage, and the sense of the House upon the other proposal may be challenged at a subsequent stage of the measure. I have also said that the definition of the hon. gentleman—if it may be so described—is vague and unsatisfactory; but in the Committee will be the proper time for ascertaining more particularly what railways it is proposed by this general description to embrace within the jurisdiction of this Parliament by the wholesale measure which the hon. gentleman is now proposing. I may say generally that I regard the proposal of the hon. gentleman, wide as it is, as one calculated practically to destroy the efficiency of the Provincial jurisdiction and control in the important question of Provincial railways. I know of no mode by which this Parliament could more effectually dampen the enterprise and check the energies of the different Local Legislatures, with reference to improvements of this description, than by this measure. As well as I can understand, it practically has an effect upon every railway, because every railway connects, either directly or indirectly, with some of the leading lines which the hon. gentleman names. You cannot have a side line or a concession line in the country which does not ultimately connect with a great road and lead to some town or other; so all the railways with which I am most familiar—those in my own Province—are the same with regard to the main lines as it seems to me, though it is not absolutely clear under the definition of the hon. gentleman. I should like to know what prospects there are, what inducements there are to build a railway which does not connect with one or other of those leading lines, and the proposal is for the future to say that all these roads—not merely those at present constructed, but those hereafter to be constructed—shall be taken in charge by this Parliament. Much has been done by the Provinces, very much by the Province of Ontario, and a great deal by some of the Provinces in the way of the creation of local railways. A vast amount of the mileage of these local railways has been put in practical operation by virtue of provincial charters, provincial aid and provincial and municipal encouragement; and to do what the hon. gentleman proposes doing—to take the whole of these works into the control of this Parliament, simply upon the theory that because they connect with leading lines are therefore to be declared to the general advantage of Canada—is, as it seems to me, to violate the letter and spirit of the Constitution on this subject.

We, it is true, have power to declare that a work is for the general benefit of Canada, and declaring that we assume it to be ours; but we are bound to exercise that power bona fide. We are bound not to arbitrarily declare railways for the general advantage of Canada within the sense of this clause if they are not such works. Now, there is a sense in which any railway you please to construct is a work for the general advantage of Canada, or of two or more of the Provinces; in the sense that it enriches some part of the country—and inasmuch as we are all interested in the property of each, therefore it is for the general advantage. But that is a sense in which the building of a dwelling house, or a highway, or anything in which the industry, the enterprise and the energy of the people may be usefully employed, may be said to be for the general advantage. But that is not the sense in which this phrase is used in the Constitutional Act. It is not because it is a good and useful work—because it enriches the country, because it is essential to the existence of a railway, that it should connect with some other railway, that it is of necessity for the general advantage of Canada. The line may be difficult to draw; it may be shadowy; it may be extremely hard to say at what point we should pause and say that the railway was such that we could not honestly declare it to be for the general advantage of Canada, or of two or more of the Provinces, but there is such a point. Each railway should be taken up by itself—and the general proposition that the simple circumstance that it touches or intersects two of the leading lines of railways, and therefore, it is within the meaning of this clause, should be repudiated by this House, because if you say yes to that proposition, you practically say that the operation of the Provincial jurisdiction over Provincial railways shall be known no more. You cannot point out a railway that is not going to connect with one of these leading lines, and you take away the local stimulus, which local control, local energy, local enterprise, local subsidies, have so greatly evoked in the past. Much has been done by the Provinces, and especially by the Province of Ontario, in the way of aiding local railways, and I say it is a wrong thing to take away the jurisdiction over these properties upon—I cannot call it the principle, but I can find no better word, that the hon. gentleman proposes to apply.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman states that he does not intend at this stage of the discussion to raise any objection to the second reading of this Bill, as a large part of it, I believe, commends itself to his judgment. But he takes exception to that part especially which brings under the jurisdiction of this Parliament a large part of the railways of this country. I listened to the hon. gentleman carefully, as I always do, to learn from him what possible objection could exist to this Parliament having jurisdiction in reference to any railway. The hon. gentleman says it will dampen the ardor of Local Legislatures in reference to granting charters to railway companies who apply for them. Why should it dampen their ardor? What is there in the fact of this Parliament having jurisdiction in reference to a railway to interfere in the slightest degree with the desire on the part of a Provincial Legislature to aid and assist in the construction of such a railway? I can see a great many reasons why it is in the interest of the country that the railway system should, to a large extent, be under the control of this Parliament. The hon. gentleman knows that the attention of this Parliament has been forced to the consideration of the question by applications being made to the Government and the House to remedy known and crying evils in relation to local railways over which we have no control. He knows that that demand has come from the country—from the people; that application has been made to take cognizance over matters over which we have no jurisdiction; and, Sir, if a line of railway is chartered by this Parliament, can any person tell me any reason why all the lines connecting with that line should not be under the jurisdiction of this Parliament, so that we should have power to carry out arrangements in connection with the leading line of railway, with its branches and connections, the same as we have with the railway itself? The object of this Parliament is not to exercise control over the railways for the sake either of the Government or the Parliament; nor is it the object of the Local Legislatures or the Local Governments to retain control of those railways for any Provincial purpose. The object that is sought is the public good. Charters granted by the Local Legislatures, or by this Parliament, are not to benefit the individuals who promote these charters, but the public. We both have a common aim, a common object; we both are free from any influence that would induce us to exercise that control apart from the advantage it has for the general public. Now, with regard to railway crossings. The hon. gentleman knows that railway companies have now to come to the Privy Council to obtain authority to cross one line of railway by another; and if it is found necessary, for the protection of life and property, to throw such a safeguard around the public with regard to the interference of one line of railway with another, I cannot possibly see what injury can result to the country, or any section of it, or any railway corporation, by having the same power retained by this Parliament. The hon. gentleman knows that this Parliament has never erred in the direction of restricting the efforts of parties who desired and were able to construct railways, but has always been ready to afford them every possible facility. The hon. gentleman knows that whoever approaches this Parliament with a sound practicable and desirable railway project, readily obtains the assistance of all parties in Parliament to carry out the project for the good of the country. I have listened attentively to the hon. gentleman's remarks, and I have failed to hear him make one single point. The hon. gentleman says that this measure abolishes local control. It does not abolish local interests in this matter. The hon. gentleman is perfectly aware that companies who have received charters from the Local Legislatures constantly come to this Parliament and ask to be declared railways for the general advantage of Canada; and I have no hesitation in saying that it would be extremely difficult, in my judgment, to point out any railway in Canada of which this Parliament may not fairly say that it is for the general benefit and the general interests of Canada. There is no railway in the country, there is not a mile of railway in operation in this country, to-day, that is not doing something towards, and contributing to, the general prosperity of the country; and if it is contributing to the general prosperity of the country, I say it is contributing to the general advantage of Canada. And I say with the experience that both sides of this House have had of our entire readiness to take up and deal with all these questions on their merits, and to give all the aid and assistance we can to these various railway projects, there is no reason why the slightest injury can possibly flow from the proposal now made to bring the leading lines of railway and the railways that are subsidiary to them—the branches of those lines of railway and the lines of railway that cross them—under the control of this Parliament, and thus to a certain extent declare that the same power that has jurisdiction over the main trunk line should have jurisdiction over the branches and over the lines that intersect and cross them. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that many of the railways we have been dealing with to-day have charters from this Legislature, that many of them are subsidized by the various Provinces, as well as by the municipalities in the various sections of country through which they run. This is one of the subjects, I think, in which all parties in this country are interested. This railway question is one in which the Local Legislatures and the general Parliament have a common interest; they have a pure and single desire to do everything they can to assist these railways and to advance their prosperity. As the House knows, we have been implored again and again, by the press, by the people, and by members of Parliament from all sections of the country, to take such measures as would enable us to deal with this serious question of railway management. The hon. leader of the late Government, as the hon. gentleman knows, pointed out forcibly in this House the necessity of our dealing with some serious accidents that occurred in the vicinity of Kingston, on the Kingston and Pembroke Railway, I think; and it was found that we were quite powerless to deal with them, in the absence of such legislation as I am proposing to-day. I will not detain the House, as the hon. gentleman says he has no desire to obstruct the second reading of the Bill; but in Committee we shall be able to discuss the various clauses.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I have no intention of offering any objection to the second reading of this Bill; but I desire to call the attention of the House and of the hon. Minister of Railways to an amendment which I proposed in a Bill I introduced some time ago, and which, to my mind, is of considerable importance. That Bill passed its second reading in this House, and was referred to the Committee on Railways and Canals. In that Committee it was suggested that it would be better for the hon. Minister of Railways to take up the question and deal with it, if he thought proper; but I find that the amendment I refer to has not been incorporated in the Bill the hon. Minister of Railways has introduced. That amendment provided that a railway company should be liable for accidents occurring on its track, caused by its trains and engines, in places where fences had not been erected along its line of railway—accidents to horses and cattle belonging to neighboring proprietors, whether or not notice had been given to the company to erect the fences. It will be remembered that prior to 1868, under the Consolidated Statutes of the old Province of Canada, the duty of erecting fences, without any limitations, was cast on the railway companies. 22 Vict., chap. 26, provides that "Fences shall be erected and maintained on each side of the railway."

There is no provision as to the adjoining proprietors giving notice; and the fifteenth section provides that

"Until such fences and cattle-guards are duly made, the company shall be liable for all damages which may be done by their trains or engines to cattle, horses or other animals."

The revised Consolidated Act contains these provisions; but in 1868 the Parliament of Canada changed the clause and made it read as it does in the Act of 1879, as follows:—

"Within six months after any lands have been taken for the use of the railway, the company shall, if thereunto required by the proprietors of the adjoining lands, at their own costs and charges, erect and maintain on each side of the railway, fences, &c.: and the second sub-section of that section is exactly the same as section 15 of chapter 66 of the Consolidated Statutes of Canada."

It is not for me to say what motive actuated Parliament in 1868 to make this change, but I may say that up to a recent period it was generally supposed that the duty of erecting fences was still imposed on railways where the land was occupied, and it was not till a very recent decision was given in my own county that the question of this liability was disputed. The circumstances which drew my attention to this defect, as I believe it to be, in the Railway Act, were these: Some time during last summer two animals belonging to a man named McCarthy, in my county, were killed on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway. At the point where those animals strayed no fences had been erected. Very few farmers throughout this country are aware of the necessity of giving notice to railway companies to erect fences, and in the majority of instances such notice is not given. There are difficulties in the way of giving notices of that kind. Ordinary farmers do not know in what manner they should be given, and unless they are prepared to pay some legal gentleman to attend to the giving of the notice no notice is given in nine cases out of ten. In the case to which I refer an action was brought in the Division Court of Renfrew, and was brought before Mr. Justice Sinclair, who held that as McCarthy had not given notice the company were not obliged to erect fences. This contention was set up by the company in their defence, and the Judge sustained it and non-suited the plaintiff. Application was made for a new trial before Mr. Justice Deacon, and he sustained the decision of Mr. Justice Sinclair upon the ground that the second sub-section of the sixteenth section of the Consolidated Railway Act of 1879 must be read in conjunction with the main section. The conclusion of his judgment, which occupies some seven pages, is this:

"After a careful and patient examination of all the authorities I have been able to find, I have come to the conclusion that the decision of the learned Judge is right and must be upheld; consequently, that the application be set aside and a new trial must be refused with costs."

If the judgment, which has not been called in question, is correct, it would be seen that under the law as it stands now, unless notice is given by the proprietors of the land taken by the railway companies, to the railway companies to erect fences, they are not liable for any damage that may be done by their trains and engines. That is a state of affairs which should not be allowed to continue, and I propose to remedy it by the Bill I have introduced, providing that:

"Until such fences and cattle-guards are duly made, the company shall be liable for any damages which may be done by their trains or engines, to cattle, horses or other animals on the railway."

Another question which arises is this: Under the law the companies are obliged to erect fences if, within six months after the land is taken by them, notice is given them to erect fences. The question then arises whether, if notice is given after the six months, the companies are obliged to erect fences. The learned Judge, to whose decision I referred, held that the liability is a continuing one. But it is to my mind a question of doubt as to whether it is a continuing liability or not; and I venture to suggest to the hon. Minister of Railways that this is an amendment which would be of benefit to a large class of people and would not impose on railway companies other duty than that which the law contemplates should be imposed on them.

Mr. McCARTHY. I think the amendment proposed by my hon. friend should be made. The objection, as I understand, against it, is, that it would impose on railway companies an unnecessary expense. I think a little consideration will show that is not really the case. The fences are only required, of course, where the land is settled. Where it is not cleared and occupied, it is not necessary to erect fences, because there are no cattle to fence in. It is a perfectly well-settled principle of law, that unless the cattle escape from the land of the owner, the company are not responsible. But is the farmer whose land has been cut in two by a railway, to be under the necessity of going through the form of asking the company to fence off that land before he can have his land fenced, or for compensation in the event of a fence not being properly maintained? Very frequently it happens that the company put up a fence, and the very fact of their doing so does away apparently with the necessity of giving them the notice. They fail to maintain it, and when an accident happens they set up this defence: True, we have a fence there and have maintained it; but, if you would look back, you will see you never required us to put up one, and you have no claim. In the county which I have the honor to represent, and through which the Northern Railway Company runs, for many years the company were under their original charter, granted in the old Province of Canada, not liable to erect fences unless they received notice, and many just claims were defeated on that ground. Subsequently they became liable, because they brought themselves under the provisions of the Consolidated Railway Act of Canada, and I was surprised to learn that this law had been changed in reference to this question. Most of my profession were under the impression that the law had been continued as it was in Old Canada, and the company were obliged to erect fences without notice being given. The amendment proposed, therefore, ought to be introduced. I have also given notice of an amendment which I may as well now explain, though I propose to move it in Committee, I desire to substitute sub-section 6 of section 17, which is in these words :

“ All and any of the tolls may be in any by-law reduced and again raised as often as desired necessary in the interest of the undertaking; but the same tolls shall be payable at the same time and under the same circumstances upon all goods and by all persons, so that no undue advantage, privilege or monopoly may be afforded to any person, or class of persons, by any by-laws relating to the tolls.”

Now, I venture to say, the last words of this sub-section make all that precedes it unmeaning, and I would draw the hon. Minister's attention to it. The supposition is that it was intended to introduce into the railway system of this country what is known in England as the equality clause; and why not keep that clause which has proved fair and reasonable, and about which there can be no doubt? I have copied the clause from the English Act in the notice I have given, and I will read it when the proper time comes. At present it is sufficient to draw the attention of the House to the apparent absurdity of the clause I have read, and which is now law, and to ask why it is that a reasonable proposition such as the equality clause should not be placed on the Statute-book, so that all can understand it? I am obliged to my hon. friend for making part of his Bill the other clause in the eleventh section. With that clause and the one I propose to add, I think we might have a complete and fair railway law. We will then have a law, and all we will want is a court to administer it, and I think the hon. Minister will find that having granted sub-section 2 of section 11, the reasonable conclusion is that he must have a court by which that law can be carried out.

Sr CHARLES TUPPER. I will discuss the question my hon. friend has made more pertinently when we get into Committee. I may say with reference to the question of my hon. friend from North Renfrew (Mr. White), that I was not in the Railway Committee when he withdrew his Bill under the impression that it would be embodied. It is fair for me to say that when the hon. gentleman communicated to me his intention to withdraw his Bill with a view to its being embodied in the General Act, I stated to him in the most distinct terms that I could not consent to accept the proposal which was contained in his Bill. The hon. gentleman seems to be looking at this question quite regardless of the railway interest. Now, Sir, it is well known that nothing contributes so much to the improvement of the country, nothing confers such inestimable benefits upon the people as the construction of these roads; yet they are very often constructed after a great deal of sacrifice and of struggle on the part of those who find the capital and promote the enterprise. The proposal which the hon. gentleman makes is going to load every struggling company who are risking their money, and who very often never see it again; it is going to throw on those companies responsibilities, and difficulties, and expenses that I say they ought not to bear. The law as it stands now provides everything that any reasonable man, in my judgment, ought to ask for, and that is, that when parties construct lines of railway through a wilderness section of the country where there is no use of having a fence and where a fence would be positively mischievous, are relieved from the necessity of having a fence. In a wilderness fences become dry and sparks from the engine set them on fire, and you have whole sections of country, fine timbered lands through which the road is running, destroyed in consequence of having a dry fence to act as tinder from the sparks of the engine. Now, the law is perfectly plain, and it is in the interest of the land owners, and of the persons through whose property the railway runs. The law provides, not that you shall be compelled to construct fences where there is no necessity, where they can simply be mischievous and dangerous, but the law provides that the moment the owner of the land, through which the railway runs, calls upon the company to put up a fence, from that time until these fences have cattle guards, this company is responsible for any animal that is killed and for all damage caused by the want of a fence. Now, what more can he require? What more can he ask than that the company should be compelled at their own cost to put up a railway fence the moment the proprietor says he wants a fence. He is not obliged to show any reason, he is not obliged to show there is any necessity for a fence. He may ask for it when there is no occasion for a fence, he may ask for it for a distance of twenty miles where there is no settlement, yet the law at present compels the company instantly to put up that fence, or to fail at their own peril of being responsible for all the damage and every accident that can occur. Moreover, I have no hesitation in saying that damages to life and property are involved in the proposition of the hon. gentleman. There are cases of parties who drive their cattle on to the road for the purpose of having them slaughtered and getting a good price for them. I am perfectly aware that it is provided that the animals must go on to the road from the property of the owner, but the property of the owner may be a wilderness, and all the man has to do is to send his cattle into the wilderness and let them be attracted by the grass along the line of railway on to the road, as he knows they will be, in order that they may be destroyed, and that he may send in his bill to the company, or to the Government, if it be a Government road; and very often he gets double value. That is my experience. I say he has not a right to put them on his own land unless there is a fence, or unless he has called upon the parties to put a fence there. The company then has some protection. They have got a notice the fence is required, and they are then responsible. But if there is no notice given, as the hon. gentleman now proposes, a man could purposely allow his cattle to stray on to the road and collect heavy damages if they were killed. But it is not merely the cost of the cattle we have to consider, but you probably wreck the train when it runs over an ox, and perhaps half a dozen people are killed. I believe the proposition of the hon. gentleman is a great injustice and hardship to parties who, in these partially settled districts of country where there is no necessity for a fence, are constructing railways; and it would not only be a hardship to the companies, but a fertile source of danger to the operations of the road. On these grounds I do not hesitate to say that I cannot accept the hon. gentleman's proposition, with the knowledge I have and the experience I have had in relation to this matter; indeed, the law as it now stands gives the owner of the land all the advantage. He is obliged to show no reason; he sits down and writes a letter to the company saying: “I want my land through which the road runs fenced,” and from that moment he has all the protection the hon. gentleman proposes to give him. From that time the company are warned, they are obliged to fence the ground to be in a position to protect themselves. The present law places all the power in the hands of the owner that he requires for his protection, and I think it would be extremely unjust to press it farther and to say that for miles and miles, where there is no necessity for a fence, parties, without any notice, should be in a position to send their cattle into the forest in order that they may stray on to the track and be destroyed, and then be in a position to collect damages.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I regret very much, Mr. Speaker, that I cannot agree with the argument just advanced by the Minister of Railways on this subject. I do not know a subject on which there is a stronger feeling in the rural districts among farmers than on this question of fences guarding railway tracks from the district adjoining. The argument which the hon. Minister advanced is that it would entail very serious loss upon railway companies to compel them to put up these fences. The cost of fencing a railway in addition to the cost of building a railway seems to be so infinitesimal, it can hardly be said to be a question which arises in discussing a question of public policy. The building of fences is a very small matter indeed. But the argument is that farmers sometimes now drive their cattle on the track for the purpose of having them slaughtered, so as to obtain a better price from the railway company than they could secure if selling them in the ordinary manner. It seems to me that the proper way to prevent this is to give public notice through an Act of Parliament to the railway companies to establish sufficient fencing to prevent people sending their cattle upon the track. I am bound to say that I think, in the interests of the railway companies themselves, in the interests of life and property in connection with railway travel, that it is a matter of the greatest possible consequence that railway tracks should be so guarded by fences on each side that by no possibility, without an act of absolute wrong-doing on the part of the farmers, can cattle stray upon the tracks. If you leave railways going through settled districts without fences on each side of their tracks, you jeopardise the lives of the people travelling by those railways. Cattle will stray upon them; and if you lay down the doctrine, as it has been laid down by the Minister of Railways, that it can be prevented by a mere notice on the part of the farmer to the railway company, that he requires fences to be put up, you at once, I think, answer the objection he made in the first instance of the cost to the railway companies. I am decidedly in favor of having a notice put in an Act of Parliament, and I sincerely hope the Minister of Railways will be able to meet the views, as I believe them to be, of an overwhelming majority of the people in the rural districts of this country, in favor of having railways properly guarded by fences on each side of them.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the amendment proposed is a step in the right direction. I cannot understand the force of the argument advanced by the Minister of Railways, that farmers and others interested have only to give notice to a railway company to put up fences. It is well known that farmers are not generally posted in the laws of the country. I have known several instances where damage has been done on account of cattle straying away. The farmers know nothing about the law until they endeavored to obtain compensation for the loss sustained, and then it was too late. If such an amendment as is proposed were made, and railway companies were compelled to put up fences, they would know what responsibility rested on them. With respect to the statement of the hon. Minister of Railways, in regard to farmers driving cattle on the track, it has no great force in many parts of Canada, because, I believe, the experience of private individuals in endeavoring to recover compensation has not been such as to hold out inducements to them to drive their cattle on the railway track for the purpose of endeavoring afterwards to obtain compensation. I know in many parts of the country railways run through large pasture grounds, to the great disadvantage of the farmers, who are unable to use their wild lands as they would wish to do. They have learned by experience that if loss is sustained by cattle being killed on the track there is little chance of obtaining compensation. I would be very much pleased, in the interests of the people of the rural districts, if the amendment suggested should become law.

Bill read the second time; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I desire to insert in the first clause after the word "railway" the words "except Government railways." The House is aware that there is an express Statute providing for the management of Government railways, and it will only lead to confusion if the Government railways were brought under the jurisdiction of the Consolidated Railway Act, because everything is provided for in the Government Railways Act. In the next section, I propose to give three months to make the profile, because the ground plan is deposited for the purpose of expropriating land, and leave them three months after that to deposit the profile. Then I propose to amend the third section, which provides for the avoidance of doubts touching the working expenditure, so as not to charge the company with the working expenses on the leased line, as the rental for the leased line will be borne by the returns from the leased line. This clause is for the purpose of providing fully what shall be working expenses; and for fear that anything will be omitted or left out, it is provided that the above shall be specified in all cases with relation to railway companies, regarding what is usually carried to the debit of revenue as distinguished from capital account.

Mr. BLAKE. I did not understand that this clause was for the purpose of defining working expenses except for one single purpose, and it requires a great deal more consideration, if it has the wider effect which the hon. gentleman has just implied. If I understand the section of the Consolidated Railway Act of 1879, it describes the statistics which railways shall return under the head of working expenses only, and this exposition affects what are deemed working expenses, for the purpose of statistical returns. It will be a very serious thing indeed to define that working expenses should be charged in a certain rank on the gross earnings of the railway, and if the hon. gentleman means that, I say it will be very objectionable. I object to the last clause, regarding all charges, which, in the cases of English railways, are usually charged to the debit of revenue as distinguished from capital account, as introducing vagueness and not precision. Why cannot the hon. gentleman, who has access to the various English railway accounts, and knows what other charges, if any, in the case of English railways, are usually carried to the debit of revenue as distinguished from capital account, state what other charges should be inserted in the Bill. He will find, when he calls upon his railway companies to supply returns, that this will be an element of uncertainty with them. Some will contend that the usual practice in England is to do so-and-so; and others, that it is so-and-so. What is the usual practice? I find that one or two leading lines adopt one, and a good many the other. Where will you draw the line? What will you put in, and what not? If there is one thing important in obtaining full returns above another, it is that all the returns should be based on the same line, and it is quite certain that for comparative purposes, the same elements should be taken into account. Each railway company should make the same returns. I submitted to the hon. gentleman that before the third reading he should cause his officer to ascertain, if he has not yet ascertained, what is usually inserted in English railway companies' returns, as he puts it, to the debit of revenue account, and add in the clause, the further items. There is one case of making the leased lines—I admit the general statement of the hon. gentleman that if a railway leases another line, it pays the toll or rent as a rule, of course, from the receipts—but, of course, none of the working expenses of the road so leased ought to be borne by the main line. There ought to be a separate account with the leased line. But if the company which is working a leased line as one of its own, embraces all the receipts from the leased line, then I am not satisfied at all that the rental ought not to be charged. You are getting revenue and expenditure and if my hon. friend intends that the revenue, which is derived from the leased line, shall be inserted in the gross revenue, then the charge upon that revenue ought also to be inserted on the other side. Even if it is not so intended, and he intends that the revenue derived by the leased company from the leased line shall be kept separate, yet there would be a case in which the rent in part may be properly charged on the working expenses of the main line; and that is this; in which you find you have leased a line at a rent which that line does not pay, and have got to pay a portion of your rent out of the profits of the main line. In that case it is made a charge on the main line and has to be advanced out of the annual profits. It is an unprofitable investment. I invite the hon. gentleman to say whether he intends that in cases of a leased line, the company shall in making the returns, embrace the returns of the whole undertaking in the gross receipts of the leased line. If so, why should not tolls, which are substituted for the interest on the bonds which may be given for the construction of the main line, go to the benefit of the revenue account?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This matter has been carefully considered in relation to both these points raised by the hon. gentleman. With reference to the last point, the reason why interest for the leased line is taken out, is because the statistics of the leased line will appear by themselves. It would be unjust to charge this rental for the leased lines to the working expenditure of the main line, thus showing that it was working at a loss, when perhaps it would be working at a profit. As to the other point, the hon. gentleman will observe that this clause is for statistical purposes. Now, the Department has carefully considered everything that could possibly be found in regard to railway statistics and the operation of railways elsewhere, and everything has been enumerated here that we believed could be enumerated; but lest any oversight should have occurred from any cause, we wish to have the power to add the other points. We send out the forms from the Department to be filled up by the companies, and this clause would enable us the moment our attention was called to anything which should go to the heading of working expenditure, it could be provided for under this authority. It does not enable the companies to exercise their judgment as to what is the usual practice with other railway companies. The Department may, however, change the form from time to time, if we find anything which may be legitimately embraced in the working expenditure.

Mr. BLAKE. I think it would be better to say: "all such other changes as may, from time to time, be determined by the Governor in Council," because questions may arise as to the accuracy of the view of the Department. No doubt uniformity will be one object which will be obtained, as the hon. gentleman says, by this plan. As to the mode by which the statistical return has to be made for the leased lines, there is one point remaining, and that is, if the leased line does not pay its running deficiency, would the charge then be made against the working expenses?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It would appear, on the return of the leased line, that it was not paying its way.

Mr. BLAKE. But would it not appear that the deficiency really came out of the assets of the main line?

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). Not so as to take priority of the fixed charges, but immediately afterwards it would come out of the assets of the main line.

Mr. BLAKE.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). With reference to the remarks which fell from the hon. Minister of Railways in the discussion upon the second reading of the Bill, he is correct in saying that he did not give me any indication in the conversations I had with him that he would adopt the amendment which I propose to make to the Bill, and of which I gave notice some time ago. I am sorry to say that in the conversations I had with him the arguments I offered did not seem to convince the hon. gentleman that the amendment should be made to this Act. I am sorry to say also that his arguments have not convinced me that there is no necessity for this amendment being made. Let me say this—that I think the hon. Minister of Railways misapprehended the scope of the amendment which I propose. I did not intend that the duty should be imposed on railway companies to erect fences in those parts of the country in which they run through wild, untenanted and unoccupied land. I presume that the amendment to the Act that was made in 1868 was for the purpose of giving railway companies power to build portions of their lines through untenanted parts of the country without imposing that duty upon them in those parts of the country where they would be practically of no use, and where the cost of erecting those fences would be added to the cost of building the railway without their being of advantage to any one. I am not conversant with the law, but those who are acquainted with it say—and I believe it is a general principle of law—that no railway company is liable for damages, which may kill cattle which have strayed upon the track from land owned and property occupied by the owner of the cattle, for the destruction of which claim is made against the railway company. But I admit that any gentleman will say that because the proprietor of the land happens to have lands in a particular locality through which the railway runs—happens, as the Minister of Railways said, to have a thousand acres of land in a particular locality, which is not cleared or cultivated—he should not thereby be prevented from putting his cattle there, and the company should not say: Unless you give notice within the time prescribed by law, we are not liable for any damage. It was properly stated by the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), that the duty of erecting fences is not only imposed on railway companies under the conditions prescribed in the sixteenth section, but they are also bound to maintain them. A circumstance occurred in my own county last summer which shows the necessity of imposing that duty on the railway companies, without requiring the adjoining proprietor to give notice, or, at all events, to hold the railway company liable for damages which may occur through the non-erection of these fences. The Canada Central Railway was built through that portion of the country in 1878. The fences were erected almost simultaneously with the grading of the road—in fact, before trains ran at all the fences were put up. No notice was given as required, because the railway company put up fences without the necessity of any notice being given by the adjoining proprietors. What was the result? Last summer a fire occurred; a portion of the railway fences was burnt down; a horse was killed upon the track; an action was brought to recover damages. The defence was set up that no notice had been given the company to erect or maintain these fences. Notwithstanding what the Minister of Railways has stated—and his experience is larger than mine—I think it is manifestly the duty of every railway company that takes lands and fences these lands, to put the proprietors in as good a position as if the railway had not passed through the lands. In view of that fact, I propose to move that the following clause be added to the Bill:—

1. Sub-section two of section sixteen is hereby repealed and the following substituted therefor:—
2. Until such fences and cattle-guards are duly made, the company shall, whether they have or have not been required to erect and maintain the same by the proprietors of the adjoining lands, be liable for all damages which may be done by their trains or engines, to cattle, horses, or other animals on the railway.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I regret that my hon. friend is going to press this motion. I quite understand the disadvantage at which I am placed in resisting a motion of this kind. The population through which a railway runs is very much more numerous than the company who are carrying that railway on; but I do not think that is any reason why an act of great injustice, and one which I believe to be fraught with serious consequences, should be perpetrated. Now, I would like the hon. gentleman to explain to this House, if he can, how it was the law was formerly as he proposes to make it, and that after long years of experience Parliament deliberately changed it and made it as it is to-day. I think the very fact that that was done gives the most abundant evidence that the law was found to work injuriously and unfairly. The hon. gentleman said that I spoke of the farmers. I did not use the term farmers, but I said parties who were the owners of cattle; and I have no hesitation in saying, that there is no country in the world in which, in my judgment, the great mass of the agricultural and farming population possesses a higher tone of morality than in Canada. I do not believe it would be possible to find any country in the world where the agricultural population are animated by sentiments of higher principle or purer morality than in Canada; but there are exceptions to every rule, and there are among all classes of people persons to be found here and there who are not actuated by those principles. There are unprincipled persons in all sections of the country, more or less—I believe a fewer number in Canada than in most other countries—and I do not propose to give these unprincipled persons, though few and far between, an inducement to do a wrong which, I believe, the alteration proposed in the clause would give. It was for that reason that I did not feel warranted in accepting it. I believe our agricultural population are a highly intelligent population, and they perfectly understand where railway facilities have been furnished to them, all that is necessary, in order to accomplish everything they require, is to write a note to the railway company, and from that moment the railway company is liable. Now, Sir, I say with the objections I have presented, and with the facility with which men may surround them with the protection that is urged by the hon. gentleman, there is no necessity for changing the law back again to what it was before the Parliament of Canada deliberately changed it and adopted what is now on the Statute-book. I can understand how the provision got there in the first instance. What does the hon. gentleman tell us? He has had a lawsuit, or somebody he is interested in has had a lawsuit, and therefore he wants a change in the law, just as we find the members of the legal profession in this House, of whom we are so proud, coming here with Bills every Session, with some extraordinary propositions to change the law, because they have had a lawsuit and have lost it, or have a lawsuit pending, and want to strengthen their case. I do not insinuate that my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) has absolutely at this moment a client who is interested in changing this law; but I have known such things in this House as legal gentlemen endeavoring to change the law in the interest of a client. But I say that the Parliament of Canada having tried this provision for long years, and having rejected it, is the best reason why we should retain the law as it is; and not because the hon. member for North Renfrew has been cast in a lawsuit, and very properly so, because it is quite obvious that both of these Judges were strictly right in the judgment they gave. A railway may be losing money; the parties who have put money into it may not have got one dollar of dividend; and yet it is compelled, the instant it gets notice, to go to the further expense of putting up these fences, without any interest perhaps in them. What more should be required I cannot see. I have no hesitation in saying that I speak from personal experience and observation in this matter. I do not want to see any greater inducements or facilities offered by making a slaughter-house of the railways of the country for old and decrepid animals.

Mr. McCARTHY. I am delighted that my hon. friend the Minister of Railways has withdrawn the imputation upon the farmers of this country which I think his first observations were calculated to convey. The hon. gentleman draws a distinction between farmers and owners of cattle. He admits that the former are high-toned, high-principled men, who would not permit their cattle to go on a railway and be destroyed, so that they might make a claim against the railway company; but the man who owns cattle but is not a farmer, is a man who, the hon. Minister of Railways thinks, might possibly do so. The only argument the hon. Minister of Railways, as I understand, has used against the proposed provision, is, that we have not the law on the Statute-book to-day that existed in Old Canada. Now, I venture to say that if any person looks at the land of Old Canada and at this law, he will find that this change has not been made with any great deliberation. What do we find? We find that one clause has been taken, which was clause 19, of the old Act, which was only intended as a temporary provision during the construction of the road, and which provided, in effect, that unless a man made the demand to have a fence put up along his land after the initiation of construction on the road, he had no chance to make it at all; so that the care that Parliament has had for the people of this country has been chiefly with regard to the railway companies. If we had the history of that Act, I think it would be found to be the same as that of many other Consolidation Bills. I do not want to insinuate—although, perhaps, I would be justified after the attack the hon. gentleman has made on my profession—that one or two sections have been left out of this Bill for the purpose of getting it through the House in the interest of the railway companies. I will not say so, but it looks very like it. We have first the clauses omitted which are important, and then those clauses inserted which are wholly unimportant and certainly offer no protection to the owners of lands in the country through which the railway companies are permitted, against their will and without their consent, to carry their roads. My hon. friend says it is a great hardship. Why is it a hardship? The farmers of this country and the property owners are not sufficiently on their guard to give this notice. In ninety-nine cases out of a hundred in which land has been cut by a railway and fences put up, no notice is given. When companies do as they do, put up fences, and when by accident a fence is taken down, the farmer or owner of property is completely off his guard, and has no opportunity of giving a notice, and in all these cases has no resort. Surely that is not proper. Surely Parliament is not going to be so much in the hands of railway companies, that the companies can take land from a farmer without his consent by the law of expropriation, go through it and leave it open on both sides and not be obliged to fence it. The amendment is a reasonable one, but I would ask my hon. friend to make it more complete by putting in the thirteenth section of the old Act, adding to that the fourteenth clause and following that up by the appropriate clauses. The thirteenth section thus reads:

"Fences shall be erected and maintained on each side of the railway of the height and strength of an ordinary division fence, with openings, or gates, or bars therein at farm crossings of the road for the use of the proprietors of lands adjoining the railway; and also cattle-guards at all railway crossings, suitable and sufficient to prevent cattle and animals getting on the railway."

The law says: if the fence is not erected by the person or corporation bound to erect it, on them must fall the damages. The fourteenth clause has merely a declarative meaning.

These clauses will restore the law to what I think it ought to be and would have been had the attention of Parliament been directed at the time to the changes made when the Acts were consolidated. I pass by the observations my hon. friend has thought fit to make about the members of my profession—for cases of that kind, which I deplore, do occur—but if my hon. friend ventures to assert, that in any measure I have been charged with I have been influenced in any way whatever, by any matter of the kind to which he refers, he is completely mistaken. This is not my matter, but that of the hon. member for Renfrew. He has been induced to bring it in by a scandalous transaction, so to speak, which occurred in his own riding—by an injustice suffered in the name of law; and he would have been wanting in his duty had he not brought to the attention of this House the necessity of the amendment he proposed.

Mr. O'BRIEN. A greater injustice could not be perpetrated, on a very large class of people, than will be inflicted if the hon. Minister of Railways refuses to pass this amendment. When the hon. gentleman talks of motives and reasons, they are not far to seek. From the whole course of railway legislation, from the whole manner in which the railway companies carry on their transactions, it is very evident that, if the law was altered, it was altered through the influence of the railway companies; and if the law is not changed to-day, a large section of the people will be placed in a most disadvantageous position. There are large districts of new country where the land may be said to be in common, for every man's cattle is allowed to run loose through the woods; and if this law is not to be altered, those cattle will be at the mercy of the companies. How is a man, living at the end of a township, whose cattle has strayed over a couple of thousand acres, to give notice to a company to fence any particular lot through which his cattle may pass? This would be a great injustice to the people in the new districts through which many of these colonization roads are intended to run. Look at the railways in Muskoka. In the town near which I live, there is not a day in which the safety and lives of the people are not endangered by the culpable carelessness of the companies; and it seems there is no possibility of redress. Remonstrances are frequently made, but without result. They have their crossings on the level in places where it is difficult to avoid danger. The railway legislation of the country has gone far enough, and it is about time the House interposed, and let the people understand there is a power beyond the railways. All this subsidizing of railways is very well, for they develop the country, but that is no reason why the railways should be placed above Parliament, and it is time Parliament should interfere. I trust this House, taking into consideration the remote parts of the country through which these new railways are to pass, and the practical impossibility of obtaining redress, will support the amendment of the hon. member for Renfrew.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I regret exceedingly that, after having sat with the hon. Minister of Railways for so many years, he should to-night cast upon me the imputation of having introduced any measure in Parliament for the purpose of serving my own interests.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I did not say so.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). The hon. gentleman said I brought this measure because I had been defeated in a lawsuit with a railway company.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I said it was because some party in whom the hon. gentleman took an interest was defeated. I should judge, from the warmth with which he spoke, and the familiarity he exhibited with all the details of the case, that he took a great interest in it.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I take a very warm interest in everything that affects the interests of my constituents.

Mr. McCARTHY.

I have no personal interest in the matter. I do not happen to know the gentleman who brought this lawsuit against the Canadian Pacific Railway, but I think I would be wanting in the discharge of my duty if I failed to bring this matter before Parliament under the circumstances, knowing that a gross injustice, from my point of view at all events, has been perpetrated by a powerful railway corporation on an unoffending farmer; and supposing he is a poor farmer, unable, perhaps, to defend himself, I would be wanting in my duty, if I refused to ask this House to remedy this evil which has been brought under my notice. I refer to this case, because it elucidated the point I was endeavoring to present to the House and Committee. I have no interest in this case, nor has any person connected with me, but I refer to it simply because a decision had been rendered in it, that, from my point of view, declared the law to be that which it ought not to be. It was for that reason and none other that I introduced this amendment. Let me say in reference to the question of notice, that notwithstanding what the hon. Minister of Railways may say in reference to the intelligence of the farmers of this country—and I believe with him that they are a very intelligent class, and that they know as much of law generally as it is in their interest they should know; some of them know rather more than it is in their interest they should know—there are many gentlemen who are well educated and tolerably familiar with our Railway Law who do not know this provision exists in the Railway Act, and are therefore liable to be placed at a disadvantage in not giving notice to the companies to erect fences. The hon. gentleman knows that for sixty or seventy miles through the county I have the honor to represent, the Canadian Pacific Railway has not a single mile of fence, and he knows—because he has been, I am happy to say, in that section of the country—that over a considerable portion of that district which is not fenced by the Canadian Pacific Railway, there are occupied lands. Now, Sir, my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) has thrown out the suggestion that my amendment should be withdrawn and that the sections of the old Consolidated Statutes of Canada should be substituted therefor. I am not at all wedded to my proposition, and if anything else could be substituted that would effect the same purpose I am willing to accept it. But the reason the hon. Minister of Railways has adduced against this amendment is the one which induced me to put it in its present form. I admit there are large tracts of country in which there is no necessity to erect fences, but there still exists a necessity for the protection of the lands of adjoining proprietors, and the duty and the obligation of such protection ought to be put on the strong and powerful corporation.

Mr. BLAKE. As the hon. gentleman from North Simcoe and the hon. gentleman from North Renfrew have suggested different modes of effecting the same purpose, I would suggest that an amendment should be framed between them which would best effect the common object they have in view. On the whole I think the hon. gentleman will see that his friends are against him on this occasion.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid that with cannon in front of me, cannon behind me, cannon to the right of me, and cannon to the left of me, I shall have to submit. But I beg the House to remember that the responsibility of this change will not rest upon me. I have discharged my duty to the best of my ability in presenting the reasons why I thought this amendment should not be accepted. My hon. friends, notwithstanding their power, have failed to change my view of the case. I think the course suggested by the leader of the Opposition is the best one, and that a clause should be framed embodying both these propositions.

Mr. BLAKE. I must protest against the doctrine of the hon. gentleman, who says he submits but he will not be responsible. He submits, and therefore he is responsible, so far as he can be.

Mr. POPE. Of course, I do not much disagree with the sentiments of my hon. friend, but upon one or two points I cannot agree with him. As a general rule railways do fence their roads, they are bound to fence them for their own protection. They are exactly in the same position a farmer is in respect to his neighbor; and why should they not be? If I live alongside a neighbor whose land adjoins mine, the only thing I can do is to give him notice that I want a fence made. Nor can I expropriate his land without paying him for it, perhaps two or three times as much as it is worth. But let me tell my hon. friends there are cases where this law will work very great hardship. There are many cases where a railway is running through woods, and has been for years, and where there are no cattle. All at once a man settles down in these woods, near the road; the company know nothing about it; and why should that man, if he wants a fence, not be obliged to give the company notice? Some hon. gentlemen have spoken about our ignorance, saying that farmers know nothing about the Act. I can tell him we know just about as much of what we are about as the lumbermen do, and we will try to take care of ourselves. I think we will compare favorably with the lumbermen, and with the railway men, and, I trust, after a little time and a little further education, we will be able to compare favorably with the lawyers.

Mr. McCARTHY. Is my hon. friend speaking on behalf of the farmers?

Mr. POPE. I am speaking for the farmers. The hon. gentleman seems to forget that there may be a hardship towards the railway companies in a case where the road runs through a forest, and a man settles down there without their knowing anything about it—why should not this man be required to give the company notice, if he wants a fence, in order that they may know of his existence? However, I think railways should build their own fences; but we must take care that in protecting the rights of the farmer, we must not do injustice to the railway companies, as there are cases where a man can take great advantage of a company if he is not forced to give some notice.

Mr. LISTER. I am very much pleased that the hon. Minister of Railways has yielded to the evident wish of both sides of the House, and accepted the amendment proposed by the hon. member for North Renfrew. I was not surprised at the hon. Minister of Railways and the hon. Minister of Agriculture taking the position they did, understanding the subject as they do; I am not surprised they should propose to protect a company that is protected already. When the hon. member for North Simcoe stated that ninety-nine out of a hundred farmers do not know anything about the law, he stated the truth. Railway companies expropriate the lands of farmers throughout the country, and leave them unfenced until it suits their convenience. In my own county a branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway was constructed some years ago, and that branch is still unfenced. The people living along the line of that road have not been able to use their pastures for some years, because if they put their cattle in the fields they ran the risk of having them killed by the railway, and the consequence has been that that land was of no value at all to those farmers. Applications have been made to the company from time to time to fence the line, but no heed has been paid to them. I do think the time has come when this Parliament should assert its power and say to the railway companies that they have been protected just as far as it is in the interest of the public to protect them; and when we seek to throw the protection about them which this Bill proposes, I think we are doing a great injustice to a large proportion of the people of this country. I think the hon.

Minister of Railways, according to the evident wish of both sides of the House, has done what is right, and I hope that when this Bill again comes before the House such amendments will be made as will protect the farmers in the way indicated by the hon. member for North Renfrew and the hon. member for North Simcoe.

Mr. DAVIES. I wish to call the attention of the hon. Minister to the phraseology of the third section. In introducing the Bill he explained that he intended to put in a few words containing the principle of the thirteenth section of the Consolidated Railway Act, 1879, to cover cases where compensation might be payable to persons who had suffered by accidents on railways. It strikes me, in reading this section, that the hon. gentleman has not quite attained the object in view. Certain portions of the Act of 1879 were made applicable to Government railways. The second section of the Act applied to the Intercolonial Railway; but sections from five to thirty-four never were made to apply to any other Government railways than the Intercolonial. By the fourth section, sections from thirty-four to ninety-eight were made applicable to the Intercolonial and all other railways, either built by the Government or acquired by purchase. Section thirty of the Act of 1879, which the hon. Minister proposes to amend, never did apply to the Prince Edward Island Railway. When the Act of 1881 was passed sections two and four of the Act of 1879 were repealed, and that left the law in this position: that no section of the Act of 1879 applied to any Government railway whatever. So this proposed amendment of the hon. Minister would merely go this far—it would compel companies to make certain returns to the Government respecting compensation they paid for accidents, &c.; but inasmuch as the consolidation of Government Railways Act of 1881 repealed all such provisions of the Act of 1879 which applied to Government railways, whatever effect the amendment may have as regards returns being furnished by ordinary railway companies, it can have no possible effect as regards Government railways.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. In regard to railways brought under the operation of the Consolidated Railway Act, the hon. gentleman knows that, under the law as it stands, compensation is obtained against the companies. The hon. gentleman will see that no amendment of the Government Railways Act is required in order to embrace—as I have stated it was the intention of the Government to embrace—accidents to persons, causing either loss of life or injury of any kind in the working expenses of the Government railways. Clause 74 of the Government Railways Act says:

"The Department shall not be relieved from liability by any notice, condition or declaration in case of any damage arising from, and negligence, omission or default of any officer, employé or servant of the Department, &c."

That clearly shows that where damages arise and are due to the negligence of the officers there is a legal liability as against the road. Then section 81 says:

"Any person injured while on the platform of a car, or on any baggage, wood or freight car, in violation of the printed regulations posted up at the time in a conspicuous place inside of the passenger cars then in the train, shall have no claim for the injury, provided room inside of such passenger cars, sufficient for the proper accommodation of the passengers, was furnished at the time."

The inference to be drawn is that if any injury takes place the party is able to secure damages, as liability exists. Section 103 says:

"All claims for indemnity for any damage or injury sustained by reason of the railway, shall be made within six months next after the time of such supposed damage sustained, or if there be continuation of damage, then within six months next after the doing or committing such damage ceases, and not afterwards."

So the hon. gentleman will see that the Government Railways Act applies to the Prince Edward Island Railway as to the Intercolonial, because in the interpretation it is declared that the word "Railway" shall mean any railway property or work under the management and direction of the Department of Railways and Canals. So the entire ground is covered; and in introducing this Bill I took the opportunity of stating that there would be a legitimate charge against the working expenses of the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railways, whenever injuries occurred to passengers.

Mr. DAVIES. I merely wish to call attention to the fact that I took exactly the same view of the law as the hon. Minister takes, and I presented that argument to the Supreme Court of Canada, urging very strongly that under those sections there was no possibility of doubt that there was liability on the part of the Government, provided there was negligence by their employes. But the Court held that the Government were not responsible under the Act. I would, therefore, ask the Minister, as he has expressed his willingness to consider the cases connected with the accident on the Prince Edward Island Railway, if this clause does not cover them, to consider the advisability of placing a sum in the Estimates to meet these cases.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have stated to the House that the Government intend to treat damages arising from accidents as proper charges against the working expenses of the railways. The hon. gentleman does not require anything further, I presume.

On section 4,

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is a clause repealing sections 48 and 49 of the Consolidated Railway Act, and vesting certain powers in the Railway Committee with respect to railways crossing highways on the level; that certain works may be ordered by the Committee, and providing a penalty for non-compliance with the orders of the Committee.

Mr. BLAKE. It appears to me that in this section power should be given to local municipalities to apply to the Railway Committee to act. The clause provides that:

"In any case where any portion of a railway is constructed, or authorized or proposed to be constructed, upon or along, or across any turnpike road, street or other public highway, on the level, the railway company, before constructing or using the same, or in the case of railways already constructed, within such time as the Railway Committee shall direct, shall submit a plan."

Then, of course, the Railway Committee might not act on its own mere motion, and it seems to me important to provide, that local municipalities might apply to the Railway Committee to direct the railway company to do so, and it would then proceed to give directions for the plan to be filed in any particular case.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not see any objection to the suggestion, and I will make a note of it. You do not propose to make it necessary that the municipality should apply to the Committee?

Mr. BLAKE. I would not make it necessary, because there might occur a case where the attention of the Railway Committee might be attracted to it in the public interest. I would leave it in the discretion of the Committee to act, and provide that the local authorities might call the attention of the Committee to such matters.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will look carefully into it.

Mr. McCARTHY. I quite agree with my hon. friend, otherwise it would be every person's duty—and, therefore, no person's duty—to call attention to the dangerous condition in which railway crossings are. I hope the hon. gentleman's suggestions will be adopted.

On section 6,

Mr. BLAKE. I would ask the hon. gentleman to indicate what railway companies are to be left out. This will be shorter than to indicate those which are brought in.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say in a word that the clause is pretty comprehensive, and the suggestion of the leader of the Opposition will save time. The companies excepted are: the Carillon and Grenville, Fredericton, New Brunswick and Canada, St. John and Maine, Waterloo and Magog, the Western Counties, the Grand Southern and the Windsor and Annapolis. As to the last it is in doubt, as I suppose it is embraced really by the term Intercolonial, because the title has not passed.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the bridge arrangement which it is contemplated to assist by the resolution on the paper, take in the St. John and Maine and some others?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I hope so.

Mr. BLAKE. Assuming for a moment that this structure was completed, how many would that take out of the category?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I hope that it would take out the New Brunswick and Canada, the St. John and Maine, and the Grand Southern certainly.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will state the number of railways comprehended; and if he has a list of the names I would be glad to get it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Sixty-four.

Mr. BLAKE. I presume that includes many which are so by the law.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is, roads which are now and will be immediately affected by this Act, or which are now affected.

Mr. BLAKE. But it does not make a distinction between those coming in under the Act and those already in. I think that would avoid a great deal of difficulty if the hon. gentleman would schedule them separately. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman intends by this clause to at once term works for the general advantage of Canada all railways which may afterwards be incorporated by the Provinces and constructed under Provincial Legislatures, and which may happen to be connected with one of the main lines.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. My intention is to apply it if it came within the category of this clause; but, of course, the question of whether that intention is carried out is a question of law which the hon. gentleman can answer better than I can.

Mr. BLAKE. It is difficult to judge as to the point of law, when the same phrase is used for the present and the past tense. For example, this curious consequence would follow: that the very instant a Provincial Legislature passed an Act of incorporation to any railway from a point on one of these leading lines, that instant, however short or Provincial it might be in its character, it would pass out of the Provincial jurisdiction.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Not until it is constructed.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman proposes that the Province shall construct and he shall appropriate. I think, however, he had better consider the wording of the Act before the third reading; and I would also suggest that he should schedule those roads which are affected and which are to be affected.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I see no objection.

Mr. BLAKE. I wish at this stage only to say a few words in answer to the hon. gentleman. In answering me he stated that he did not see any ground at all for my position. He said that any railway at all which was constructed was for the general advantage of Canada, because it increased the prosperity of some part of the country, and the whole country is interested in the prosperity of every part. I told him before, and I repeat, that this is not the meaning of the words "general advantage of Canada, or of two or more of the Provinces," as they exist in the clause which gives us power to assume jurisdiction over these railways. This is obviously something different from the general proposition that any railway constructed must increase the prosperity of the country, and therefore every railway is for the general advantage of Canada, or two or more of the Provinces. It indicates that the railway must be for the general advantage of Canada, that it shall be for the general advantage of two or more of the Provinces, though not for the general advantage of all. It indicates that if you establish either of these propositions, you may assume legislative jurisdiction over it, but it indicates that there may be a third class of railways under this section, which is not for the general advantage of all Canada or of two or more Provinces, but only for the advantage of one Province. There are three classes—first, those which are for the advantage of a Province, and not for the advantage of more than one Province; second, those which are for the advantage of more than one Province; and third, those which are for the advantage of all Canada; and therefore the configuration—the termini, the connections, and so forth, are what we are to consider in each case, when we are to determine whether this railway comes within one category or another. There is another point to which I wish to refer. The hon. gentleman bases his argument upon convenience. He says railways may cross and join one another. Occasionally railway companies apply to us asking for powers which they cannot obtain from the Local Legislatures. They come imploring to be made Dominion railways for their own convenience; and these things point to the proposition we have now confessed, that there is not a single railway which it would not be useful or convenient to declare to be for the general advantage of Canada. We have one kind of Constitution which has its merits and its disadvantages. You cannot combine the merits of two kinds of constitutions in the one. The hon. gentleman considers that it is simpler and more convenient that from this seat of power, this single legislative body, we should control the whole railway mileage of the country, and to that extent have a Legislative Union. Our Constitution says it shall not be so. It says there may be some railways in existence that are not for the general advantage of more than one Province—important, but in one Province, and that with those we shall have nothing to do. The Province shall have sole jurisdiction over them. There may be inconvenience in that. There is an absence of simplicity. There is a certain amount of complication which requires the action sometimes of two legislative bodies to accomplish a particular result. Such things will always be happening. It is not in the case of railway companies alone, that we have corporate entities seeking for particular further powers. How much simpler it would be for us to incorporate every incorporation—that we should do the whole business of the country—in short, how much simpler would it be to have a Legislative instead of a Federal Union. But such is not our Constitution, and the most of us believe that the advantages of our system outweigh the disadvantages. The disadvantages are numerous legislative bodies, divided authority, and increased expense. The advantages are a liberal portion of control over local affairs, and that fuller and more important and satisfactory action which exists, when, within a comparatively limited area, the people deal with their own affairs, in which the rest of the Dominion are not concerned, for themselves acting for themselves by their own power, at their own will, unimplicated with and unembarrassed by the views of others. What the hon. gentleman proposes is to revolutionize our Constitution in reference to our railway system. That is the acknowledged advantage of the other proposals of the Government which are to be matured this Session. The two or three railways remaining are to be absorbed, therefore we get only three or four railways out of the whole sixty-seven railways of the country which are to remain within the Provincial control. I must say that I do not think the hon. gentleman can justify the proposition except by practically saying that the argument for simplicity and convenience in the management of all these roads from one centre is so great that we should practically subvert the British North American Act, and to that extent make this a Legislative instead of a Federal Union.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I think the hon. gentleman omits to take note of one fact in regard to these local railways. It is true, they are local in the circumstance that they begin and end within the Province; but one cannot avoid thinking that the interest in them is a Dominion interest. The Toronto, Grey and Bruce Railway may be taken as an instance. There is no one along the line of the Grand Trunk Railway, or the Ontario and Quebec Railway, when it is built, or on the line of any one of the railways that extend into the other Provinces, who has not a direct interest in the business of the Toronto, Grey and Bruce Railway. That railway is serving a district of country that finds its outlet through these other Provinces, and is, in fact, a part of the other railways. I think this provision does not at all involve the proposition that we are adopting a Legislative Union. Because we choose to say that railways which feed and are tributary to the leading lines of railway should be governed by the same laws and the same rules which govern the main railway, it does not follow that we are going in the direction of a Legislative Union at all; you cannot localize the interest of these railways if they touch the main lines of railways at all; and so far from regarding this provision as an interference with Provincial rights, it seems to me, from my stand-point, that we are simply adopting a plan which will very much facilitate the general business of the country, without interfering with any rights, in the slightest degree, wherever they are maintained in the interests of the Provinces. Those rights are only valuable as they promote the interests of the people of the Provinces; and if you can promote the interests of the people of the Provinces served by these branch lines of railway carrying their traffic to the leading lines, by placing the whole under one jurisdiction, one management, and one set of laws, I think you are promoting the best interests of the country as a whole, and the best interests of each of the Provinces that form part of the country as a whole. I think the country is to be congratulated on this particular clause of the Bill.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). The hon. member for West Durham has referred to the clause as virtually repealing the provisions of the British North America Act. He is, of course, aware that a doubt has always existed in the minds of the profession, and of statesmen also, I believe, as to the proper interpretation of that Act with reference to the railway-creating power, and it is considered by many that, on the true and proper construction of the British North America Act, the Local Legislatures are not invested with the power of chartering railways at all. That question was argued in the Supreme Court, in one case, at great length and very elaborately. The Judges were impressed with the difficulties of the question, but it was unnecessary for them to decide it in that case, as the judgment bore on another point; but one of the Judges, in giving judgment, referred to the question as one regarding which great doubt existed in his mind, and, if I recollect rightly, he made use of an expression showing that his mind inclined to the opinion that the power of chartering railways was vested in this Parliament alone.

Mr. BLAKE. Well, I do not think that this Parliament would venture to act upon any such interpretation of the law. We have for fifteen years acted upon the assumption that there may be Provincial railways. We have acted negatively and affirmatively upon that assumption; we have recognized the existence of local charters as valid; we have not confirmed them; we have not ventured to insult the Provinces by confirming them; but we have considered them as valid, and we have given added powers to these railways, and have declared certain works promoted under local charters to be works for the general advantage of Canada, when they are indisputably so, and when they had bona fide applied. So, all the Provinces, I believe, have, since Confederation, acted on the theory that they have power to charter local railways. For my own part, though I speak with deference regarding those who have entertained doubt, I do not understand how there can be any doubt about this provision of the Constitution.

Mr. McCARTHY. The observation of the hon. member for Victoria is hardly applicable to this particular clause of the Bill, because, however correct may be the doubt to which my hon. friend has given utterance, it is quite plain that we, by this sixth clause, are legislating in the opposite direction, because we are reciting and confirming the power of the Local Legislatures. It appears to me that we must deal with this clause as with all other enactments, upon its merits. Now let us see what roads this clause proposes to place under the jurisdiction of this House. The Intercolonial Railway is already subject to the laws of the Parliament; so is the Grand Trunk; so, I believe, is the North Shore, though I am not sure as to that; so is the Northern Railway; the Hamilton and North-Western, I think, is not, for it has a local charter; the Canada Southern, no doubt, is; so is the Western; the Credit Valley is not; the Ontario and Quebec is; and the Canadian Pacific is, of course. Therefore, we are simply enacting in regard to the Hamilton and North-Western, and the Credit Valley, and possibly, also, as to the North Shore. The Hamilton and North-Western is a road that, I believe, forms part of one of the main lines between Hamilton and the Suspension Bridge; therefore, it may be assumed to be as much as any other line for the general advantage of Canada, as it is, in fact, a section of a through line. So with the Credit Valley. I think these roads are properly brought within the jurisdiction of this House, and I think that it is quite plain that the proposition of the hon. Minister of Railways that the leading lines, with those connecting with them, and their branches, ought to be subject to the same law, is a proper proposition. Nothing could be more unfortunate than that one part of a railway should be under the jurisdiction of the Local Legislature, and one part under the jurisdiction of the Dominion Parliament.

Mr. BLAKE. This provision not only includes branches, but the lines connecting with them and the lines crossing them.

Mr. McCARTHY. It may possibly go further than the argument I am advancing would warrant.

Mr. BLAKE. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that a branch line should be subject to the same jurisdiction as the main line.

Mr. McCARTHY. That is my opinion; and all traffic arrangements, and the fixing of rates and tolls on all Canadian roads, whether chartered by the Local Legislature or by this Parliament, I hold, are subject to the Parliament of Canada. So far as I know, the Local Legislatures have not accepted that doctrine but act on the opposite theory. I think it will be found when the question comes up, and I have never heard it very seriously disputed, that this is the place where tolls and rates and traffic arrangements are to be settled and can only be settled. Notwithstanding what may be done elsewhere, the laws we pass here should regulate rates and tolls. That is the reason why all the important lines, at all events, ought for their own sakes, so as to be represented here in this matter of the settlement of tolls, to be subject to the laws of this House.

Mr. BLAKE.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not think the hon. leader of the Opposition made out his case when he contended there was any violation of either the text or the spirit of the Union Act in this proposal. I do not go into the question at all that has been raised whether any doubt may arise as to whether the jurisdiction, in relation to railways alone, belongs to this Parliament. I take it, as the hon. gentleman does, that the Union Act provides that railways connecting one or more Provinces or connecting us with any other country, are railways necessarily within the jurisdiction of this country. It is quite true provision is made that local railways are under the jurisdiction of the Local Legislatures, but the Union Act goes much further and provides distinctly that this Parliament shall have the power of declaring any railway, when, in the judgment of Parliament, it is felt a wise thing to do for any purpose whatever, shall come within its jurisdiction. Therefore, there is no excess of the power of the Union Act proposed here, but this is simply carrying out the provisions of the Union Act which were intended for this very purpose. As the hon. gentleman from North Simcoe has said, the doubt will be removed, a doubt that certainly has arisen to a very large extent by this proposal, because it would enable us to deal with these lines of communication that run into each other, and by this connection reach other Provinces, and will facilitate the making of such regulations for traffic as are really in the interest of the country.

On section 10,

Mr. BLAKE. This clause will require to be recast if we consent to this proposal. It is an amendment of section 60 of the Act:

Section 60 of the said Act is hereby amended by adding at the end of the first sub-section of the said section, after the word "proxy," the words "and also to the approval of the Governor in Council."

That is all right; it is practically saying that these working arrangements of twenty-one years shall be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, and that notice of the application shall be given for sometime in the Canada Gazette in order that all parties interested may be heard. But the hon. gentleman has tacked on certain other provisos, b, c and d, which are not at all proper to be tacked on to this clause. The main clause contains a provision for the approval of the Governor in Council for twenty-one years, or, rather, it is a proviso the company shall have power to make the traffic arrangements subject to the approval of the Governor in Council. If it is intended that if there is any purchase or lease of any railway or portion of railway there shall be approval of the Governor in Council, that should be done by a separate and independent clause: "Any purchase or lease of any railway or portion of railway shall be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council, &c." And that is a very extensive provision. There may, to-day, be the right of a railway company to purchase a railway. Negotiations may be proceeding, the matter may be all but concluded, yet we would certainly intercept the consummation of the transaction by interposing this new condition. I think it ought to be guarded so as to apply, if it is to apply at all, only to transactions which are entirely in futuro. Then this other proviso c is not properly a proviso to the first sub-section of section 60 at all. It is an independent proviso and ought to be a separate clause, just as b ought. It is a proviso of a very important character. I do not know whether it is intended to withdraw rights which were given, somewhat improvidently, to one of the great railway companies some time ago, or whether it is intended simply to deal with the case of a company unlawfully dealing in the shares or stocks of other companies. I think another of the two great rival corporations, as I am afraid we must call them, with which we are blest, has been dealing considerably in the shares and stocks of other corporations. We have read in the newspapers of the rivalry for the purchase of the Hamilton and North-Western stocks, and of trouble between the Grand Trunk Railway and the Canadian Pacific Railway as to which should get the control of the Northern and North-Western, and as far as we can learn the city of Hamilton held the balance of power in this struggle. I do not remember any clause in the charter of the Canadian Pacific Railway which authorizes it to invest in these stocks; but no doubt it did invest in them. Nor have I heard of any clause authorizing them to invest in St. Lawrence and Ottawa stocks, but undoubtedly it did. I, therefore, can understand the propriety of a clause which emphasizes the penal consequences to a company acting beyond its powers, meddling with others and bringing up stocks and bonds, when it is not authorized to do so. But first of all it must be an independent claim, and secondly, we must learn distinctly whether it is the intention of the Government to withdraw existing powers to buy stocks and bonds, or whether it is intended to deal only with those cases of the purchase of stocks and bonds contrary to the law. I think the clause rather means the latter, because there is a provision in which it is specially authorized to do so, and I presume an authority given by Act of Parliament, though a general authority, would be called a special authority. I could wish that the hon. gentleman had struck out "special" and said "unless authorized to do so no railway company shall," &c.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. leader of the Opposition probably recollects that this was a Bill introduced by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock).

Mr. BLAKE. Only the first part.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That hon. gentleman, having given his attention to the subject, drafted these clauses and submitted them for my consideration; and having given them the best consideration I could, I have embodied them in the Bill; but they were prepared by the hon. member for North York. Now, I propose to make an amendment to sub-section b, by adding these words to the end: "but if such lease or purchase has been authorized as required by the special Act, and after notice as required by law to the shareholders, no notice for such application shall be required." That is to say, that where the shareholders have specially authorized it by law, this notice shall not be required.

Mr. BLAKE. Why, then, make it subject to the approval of the Governor in Council at all?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. For the purpose, as stated by the hon. member for North York, of serving as an additional check to unrestrained action in such cases. Then it provides for a very careful arrangement for the approval to be given, the notice having been published in the Gazette, &c., but that having been done, it does not seem necessary that they should be required to do it all over again.

Mr. BLAKE. There is the danger that the purchase or lease by one railway or another may be against some public interest, and that is why it is proposed to put in this additional check of the Governor in Council. It is not an arbitrary discretion we have exercised. They are not to have power to check this if the law has authorized it; they are not to have power to give it if the Act has authorized it, and if the Act has authorized it, the question of policy would be deemed to be settled. We have refused, Session after Session, to give any railway company power to purchase or to lease in this general way; we have said: State the lines you want the power to purchase or lease, and if we think it right, we will give you authority. Now, why, when Parliament has declared, in reference to these cases, that it is not contrary to public policy, by giving special authority in the Act to purchase or lease railway A or railway B, why are you going now to say this should be subject to the approval of the Governor in Council? Parliament itself has said that the public interest will not suffer by those particular cases.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I agree with the observations of the hon. member for West Durham. It seems to me that b and c, are really unnecessary, because without special legislative authority a railway company cannot purchase or lease another railway, nor can it apply any of its funds to the acquisition of any share or securities of any other company. Those are matters which it can only do in the exercise of special legislative authority. If it has received in the past that special legislative authority, we ought not now to interfere with it. If it has not received that authority, it must come here to get it. Then it will be in the power of Parliament to impose such conditions as it pleases. It therefore seems to me that b and c are unnecessary, and they are certainly inappropriate in the position in which they are placed in the Bill. As to clause d, it is a pioneer clause, but I do not know that it is necessary. But it certainly should not be there, and it should be a separate clause which should simply provide that if a director of a railway was guilty of any act or any misappropriation of the funds of the company, he should be liable to that penalty. If Parliament thinks fit to make a general provision of that kind, well and good, but it should not come in in this place if it comes in at all.

Mr. McCARTHY. I agree with both my hon. friends that clause b should be expunged. With regard to clause a, I think it is a very necessary clause, but it does not go far enough. I think there ought to be a declaration that the agreement referred to in section sixty of the Act should not be ratified unless it was in the public interest; in other words, it is an attempt to incorporate in this law the powers which the Railway Commission in England has, but the powers are to be exercised here by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council, and I would invite the attention of the hon. Minister of Railways to the clauses in the Railway Act of England by which that power is conferred. Clauses c and d are enactments which I am very glad to see in the Bill, but which I also think do not go sufficiently far. Now, Sir, if I can engage the attention of the Committee for a moment I would endeavor to draw notice to the importance of this amendment. We have, as the hon. gentleman from West Durham has told us, repeatedly refused amalgamative and leasing powers; we never did so unless we were satisfied that the amalgamation was in the public interest. But our laws are frequently evaded by the railway managers buying up stock of other companies and practically amalgamating without the consent of Parliament. I submit that that ought to be stopped, and now is the time to do it. We can put an end to that by a legislative declaration that it shall be unlawful for any railway company—I do not care what their power may be—to invest in the bonds or stock or securities of other companies whereby they may obtain control either of that or any other company. We have examples of that all around us. We know perfectly well that the St. Lawrence and Ottawa Railway coming to this city was made part of the Canadian Pacific Railway, not by amalgamation, not by applying to Parliament, not by any power of leasing, but by acquiring a controlling interest in the stock, and, therefore, although still the St. Lawrence and Ottawa Railway, it is part of the Canadian Pacific Railway; and so with the Great Western Railway. An attempt was made by two great corporations to secure the Hamilton and North-Western. They dare not come to Parliament to ask for power to amalgamate, for no Parliament would give them that power, but they purchased the stock, and one of these great railway companies has recently done so openly, by advertising a meeting for the purpose of confirming an arrangement made.

Mr. BLAKE. They have the power.

Mr. McCARTHY. No doubt; and under that power they have acted, and one railway company has invested in the bonds of another company.

Mr. BLAKE. Because Parliament has allowed them to do so.

Mr. McCARTHY. The power does not belong direct to the Grand Trunk, but to the Great Western.

Mr. BLAKE. I think it was given to the Grand Trunk in 1878.

Mr. McCARTHY. Charters have been granted to these companies on the understanding that they would be subject to such alterations as Parliament might, from time to time, think proper to enact. We have similar powers in our Interpretation Act, and we should now say that the purchase by one railway company of the bonds, stock, or securities of another railway company, which is quite apart from the ordinary business of running a railway, is illegal and should be stopped; and I propose to ask the Committee to substitute for sub-sections c and d a clause to this effect, which I drafted before I knew that sub-sections c and d were in the Bill. The clause I will propose runs as follows:—

It shall not be lawful to apply any money belonging to any railway company on the purchase or acquisition of any stocks, shares, bonds, or other securities of any other railway company; and any director, manager, officer, servant, or agent of any railway company who knowingly purchases, or causes to be purchased, or who authorises the payment or is a party to the payment or advance of any money in the purchase or acquiring of any stock, shares, bonds or other securities as aforesaid, shall be guilty of misdemeanor.

I do not think that is going at all too far. We now have an opportunity in this Railway Bill of declaring that this practice shall be stopped. We cannot prevent great railway magnates investing their own money.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. How can we reach the case of railway companies?

Mr. McCARTHY. By preventing the companies investing money belonging to their shareholders in the stock and bonds of another railway company. Why should the Grand Trunk, a company chartered to run a line through the Dominion, be permitted to invest the money of its shareholders in the purchase of the stock of any other road? If it is proper and right that the Grand Trunk should amalgamate with any other company, or lease its lines, application should be made to Parliament.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is just what clause c prevents the companies from doing, and yet you propose to strike it out.

Mr. McCARTHY. If it is in the public interest that some roads should be amalgamated, and I admit that there are some cases, power should be obtained from Parliament. I can see no reason for objecting to amalgamation in the case of a through line, but I can see grave objection to such a course being followed in the case of opposing lines. In the latter case they know well that Parliament will not sanction an amalgamation. Under powers which these companies never should have obtained, they buy up a controlling interest in the roads, and, perhaps, as in the case of the Hamilton and North-Western, they may retain their former names; still they will be operated and controlled by the larger company, and the competition which was supposed to be created by the construction of the railway is completely destroyed. This is a matter of great importance. I do not ask the hon. Minister to state to-night what action he will take in the matter.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Sub-section c provides as to investments in the stock of the companies, and sub-section d provides a penalty.

Mr. McCARTHY. Sub-section c, however, says: "unless specially authorized." That would permit the Grand Trunk, the Great Western and other companies having special authority to continue this system. I say we have power to stop it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Would you repeal part of their charters?

Mr. McCARTHY. Their charters were granted subject to the general laws Parliament may impose from time to time. The hon. gentleman is compelling them by sections 48 and 49 to build bridges or make crossings under the highway as the Railway Committee of the Privy Council may think proper. It is a limiting of their charter rights, because it is in the public interest, and it is urgently in the public interest that railway companies should not be permitted to purchase stock of other railways. Can any hon. gentleman give a reason why a company authorized to build a road in a certain direction should invest the money of its shareholders in some other road? If it is proper that two companies should amalgamate, they can come to Parliament for powers. It is a matter fraught to us all with great importance. I speak feelingly, because, in my section of country, the people deem it of the utmost importance that the neutrality and independence of the Northern and North-Western should be maintained. The people are averse to its being bought up either by the Canadian Pacific Railway or the Grand Trunk. If it has to succumb, they would prefer that it should be obtained by the Canadian Pacific Railway; but it is important, in the public interest, that its independence should be maintained. What is being done? Emissaries of the rival roads are acquiring the stock; we know a great contest is going on in acquiring it, and pressure has been brought to bear on the Hamilton and North-Western, as they are part of the Executive Committee controlling both roads, and it was hoped to be able to force the Northern into accepting such terms of amalgamation as the larger road thought fit. Steps of this kind, according to the amendment which I intend to propose, will amount to a misdemeanor. A fine of $1,000 would simply evoke a laugh; these railway magnates are prepared to pay for stock ten times its actual value. If it is declared to be a misdemeanor, the Judge would have the power to inflict a fine or imprisonment, as he thought fit. I desire to have the penalty one of imprisonment, so that it may be brought within the category of crime, as in no other way can it be suppressed.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Sub-section b provides:

"That the like approval applied for in like manner shall be necessary in order to the validity of any purchase or lease of any railway or portion of a railway."

The only point on which I differ from the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy)—of course I speak under correction, because it is a legal question—is as to how far the general power Parliament possesses, in regard to legislation respecting railways, would warrant the House in attacking a special privilege contained in a railway company's charter, enabling them to do certain things. It was for that reason, I suppose, that it was considered necessary to add the words in sub-section c "unless specially authorized."

Mr. BLAKE. I think, undoubtedly, my hon. friend from North Simcoe was strictly correct. We retain the power, as well as I remember, expressly, and it is expressly declared that it shall not be deemed an infringement on the privileges of the charter, notwithstanding that Parliament—I do not remember any instance when any specific provisions of this kind were removed—has a natural reluctance to act in that sense unless some great over-ruling public necessity requires us so far to interfere with the security once obtained by virtue of an Act of Parliament, on which corporations had acted; that, I think, is the general principle which has animated public men whenever a suggestion of the kind was made; and, therefore, I think that, if we infringe on that principle, we should do so with caution, and consider the case. The hon. member for Victoria mentioned the year in which this power was conferred on railways, and it occurred to me, when he mentioned the year 1873, it flashed across my mind that there was a reason for it, because it was at that time when negotiations were commenced by the Grand Trunk for the acquisition of the Chicago connection. Papers brought down this Session show that this work was prosecuted to completion in 1879-80, largely by the acquisition of stocks and bonds in other intervening lines. It was made up of lines partly purchased and by the foreclosure of railways, and partly by what may be called controlling interests in other sections of lines. It was ultimately completed in that way, and I dare say it may have been in regard to that specific intention of theirs that this general power was conferred. I have this observation to make: I do not think that it would be consistent with the general spirit in which Parliament has acted as to the withdrawal of granted powers to act, without giving notice to the corporation, and to give it an opportunity of pointing out how its interests would be affected with reference to transactions partly completed, completed to a certain extent, and perhaps pending. Take a case in which a company may have the power to acquire the stocks and bonds of a road, to purchase a certain number of stocks and bonds, and perhaps a controlling amount. It would never have entered into the transaction, if it had not relied on legislative authority to complete the transaction as opportunity might serve to work the thing out from time to time as it might acquire the right to stocks and bonds. In what sort of a situation might be placed a corporation if intervening in the very middle of a transaction, commenced by virtue of an Act of Parliament, to get so many hundreds of thousands of dollars' worth of stocks and bonds, this check came? I do not say that we have not the power to do, or that we should not exercise this power; but certainly we should not do so unless some great over-ruling public interest required it, and this with a due regard to the interests of the corporation as far as is consistent with the interests of the public. Therefore I submit to my hon. friend, whether it would be proper at this stage of the Session, and of this measure, practically to repeal a clause which may affect numerous interests. We have the North Shore case before us. I do not know whether the Grand Trunk has purchased all the interest in the North Shore or not, but it has, at all events, a controlling interest; and we have heard of it purchasing the Hamilton and North-Western and several others. I do not think that we should summarily cut off without investigation or enquiry their opportunity for stating their case as to the exercise of this power. By the way, I do not at all pronounce against the abolition of this provision; that, at the proper time and with proper precautions, I would add, does not seem to make much difference. It is pretty plain that other great rival corporations have not got the power of purchasing stocks and bonds too; and for that reason my hon. friends from North Simcoe and North York had good grounds for suggesting this clause, notwithstanding the suggestion of the hon. member for Victoria. These are things which are done, though there is no legal authority to do so; and if they are to be stopped, we must provide some short, sharp penalty, and point out the risks to those who do them. There is remaining the capacity on the part of the stockholding interest—if it is a very wealthy and a great railway corporation—to purchase in that capacity with their funds the shares of a rival company and afterwards work it in harmony, assuming the proprietary, in fact becoming the owners of both lines. For that reason the general funds of the corporation itself may be devoted to this purpose, as they are devoted to this purpose without the authority of law, and which accomplish objects which the Legislature does not desire to sanction. It seems to me reasonable that a clause in some shape or other should be inserted to enforce the law in this regard.

Mr. MULOCK. With regard to the observations of the hon. Minister of Railways so far as concerns sub-section b, it is probably sufficient to allow leasing and purchasing to be conducted under the special provisions of special Acts authorizing such purchases or leases. With regard to the criticism of the hon. member for North Simcoe on sub-sections b and c, I understand his suggestions to be—first, he proposes to restrict their application in the relation to railways generally. When I drafted these clauses it occurred to me that it would not be proper without notice to withdraw power from any company if such power had been acted upon; for that reason, I put in that exception to the general application of the section. It was an unfortunate circumstance, I think, that this House ever granted such a power, and I am glad that, at this late date, the hon. member for North Simcoe, remembering that during all these years he has been in the House when this legislation now complained of was passed, now wishes to rescind what he sees was an oversight in that respect; but I do not think it would be a fair thing for us to withdraw power that may have been acted upon by any corporation. Again he proposes to extend the penalties of fining, as the case may be, to more than the directorate. I think that this is a move in the right direction; I agree with that portion of his suggestion. There is a precedent for it. I refer to the penalty provided under the General Insurance Act, which extends the penalties to the directors and to all agents—that is, in the case of an insurance company not entitled to carry on business by reason of its license having been withdrawn, and the agents carry on its business. In that Act, I think, the provision is made for a penalty, and in default of the payment of the penalty, for imprisonment. I do not agree with the third suggestion of the hon. gentleman, that the penalty should be criminal rather than pecuniary. His suggestion is that the directorate and their servants and employes should not be fined in their estates, but be punished in their persons. There is, then, the question as to what is the best remedy. We appear to be all agreed that a penalty is necessary, but we may differ as to what is the best remedy. My own notion is that if we follow the precedent provided in the General Insurance Act of 1875, we will provide a sufficient penalty to begin with. If the informer is to obtain half the penalty when recovered, I think there is sufficient reason to suppose that where large sums are to be recovered, informers will be forthcoming, and the directors, managers, and servants will hesitate to commit a breach of the law, when they know that their assets will be liable, and that people are ready to call them to account. As to the other suggestion, that the difference should be simply a misdemeanor, we know that the courts have discretion as to what punishment they will award in cases of misdemeanor. The punishment may be trivial, and we know that excuses may be advanced appealing to the clemency of the court. Therefore, I think the consequences of a breach of the law should not be left so uncertain, or to the discretion of the court. The hon. gentleman may, perhaps, accomplish his object by adopting in its entirety the penalty provided in the Insurance Act, which is to the effect that if the fines are not paid, the party liable shall be subject to imprisonment. When I drafted the clause in question, I left out the imprisonment provision, thinking the penalty too severe, and in calling the attention of the Minister of Railways to the Insurance Act from which I took the idea, I understood that he agreed that it was sufficient to limit the penalty to pecuniary liability.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I think perhaps we might get over the difficulty by combining the two punishments which have been suggested, one by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock) and the other by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy). We might provide both for misdemeanor and a pecuniary penalty. The other difference of opinion between these two gentlemen is on a more important point, namely, as to whether the words "unless specially authorized so to do" shall be omitted or not. The hon. member for North Simcoe proposes to omit these words. The effect of putting them in is simply this, that the company to which we have thought fit in our wisdom to give power to apply their money in that way can go on doing so while other companies are to be prohibited.

Mr. BLAKE. They are now.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I do not know whether they are. Of course the Grand Trunk Railway is authorized to do so. Now, if it is the right thing to enact that money should not be applied by other companies in this way, it should be the right thing to repeal the clause which the Grand Trunk Company have in their Act of 1878. It would never do. It would be contrary to all propriety to repeal it in such a way as to affect inchoate transactions—transactions which are commenced or partially completed but—we should make a provision that, in future, that power should be withdrawn and should not be exercised by the Grand Trunk any more than by any other company. That power was given in 1878. At the time that they obtained that legislation it was stated that it was necessary, in order that they might acquire lines in the United States, to make Chicago connection. They put in two clauses in the Bill—clauses five and six—one authorizing them to deal with companies in the United States, the other authorizing them to deal with companies in any part of Ontario, a limitation being inserted when the Bill was before the Railway Committee—at the suggestion of the then Minister of Public Works—that these provisions should not apply to any lines running in the same direction as, or competing with the Grand Trunk, with certain exceptions. That clause virtually allows them to use the bonds and securities of any company in the United States or Canada, except those of a few roads which are mentioned in the proviso of the fifth clause. Now, they did not require that power for the purpose of getting Chicago connection, so far as their lines in Canada are concerned. I think they have exercised their power just as far as the public interest requires that they should, and perhaps a good deal further. I think the hon. member for West Durham admitted on a recent occasion that in his opinion this power has been perhaps not improperly but incautiously given by Parliament; and I think that, at the present time, while we should be careful not to interfere with or prevent anything being done which was authorized to be done by that Act, we should practically repeal that clause for the future, and I believe that in doing so we will be legislating for the public good. But the difficulty remains that, however astute we may be in trying to prevent this evil, the system of the organization of joint stock companies almost renders us powerless to prevent it, and I think that we should at least place the Grand Trunk Company on a level with other railroads in that respect.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman seems to think that by the proposed clause as it now stands, we are depriving some companies of the powers they now have.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). No, no.

Mr. BLAKE. Any company now authorized to buy the stocks or bonds of another company remains authorized, but any company not authorized can complain, because we ascribe a penalty to their doing that which they are not authorized to do. The hon. gentleman says that a company which is not authorized to buy these securities is buying them; but they are buying them in contravention of their powers, because there is no particular penalty to frighten them. We want to be able to say to such a company: Gentlemen, you must keep within your charter, and if you do not, then these sharp penalties shall be imposed.

Mr. McCARTHY. I think there is a great deal in what the hon. member for West Durham (Mr. Blake) has said; and I think it would be a pity if we were to allow this great company for another twelve months to go on acquiring other roads in this indirect manner, for then I dare say it would be too late to preserve a road which I am particularly desirous to preserve. Perhaps the hon. Minister of Railways, who is willing to accept the proposition, would frame a clause by which schemes which are inaugurated or incomplete might be carried out, but providing that, in future, it would be unlawful for the Grand Trunk Railway or any other road—for the Grand Trunk Railway has similar power—to invest in stocks belonging to other roads. In that way I think the views which have been so generally expressed on both sides of the House would be carried into effect. If that cannot be done I dare say the word of the hon. Minister that, if not this Session then next Session, a general law of the kind would be introduced, would be regarded as a promise of a step in the right direction.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We all seem to be agreed that we may amend this clause by striking out sub-section b; but I think we shall have to leave sub-sections c and d substantially as they are. Not but that I agree entirely with all that has been said as to the inadvisability of allowing the funds of a company to be used in that way; but I think that Parliament, having empowered certain railway companies to do certain things, could not suddenly impose such a penalty as proposed, without giving due notice. At all events, before making such a change, I would like to allow the party to whom that power has been given, to come to Parliament and state their case; and I think the suggestion just made by my hon. friend from North Simcoe will meet the case, and I am quite prepared to adopt it.

On section 11,

Mr. McCARTHY. This is the proper place to move the amendment of which I have given notice. It is an equality clause and is intended only to make what I propose to be the intention of Parliament quite clear and explicit. It imposes on railway companies the duty of carrying goods or persons under the same circumstances for and at the same rate, and I do not think any person can object to that. It does not prevent a railway company from carrying a longer distance for less than a short distance. It simply deals with the case of carrying for different parties from the same point to the same point, under the same circumstances, and requires that the same rate shall be charged in both cases. I think it is a provision so just that I have very little doubt the hon. Minister of Railways will accept it and substitute it for sub-section 6 of clause 17 of the Railway Act as it stands.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We will accept this clause, only adding the words "under the same circumstances," after the word "times."

Mr. BLAKE. I notice the eleventh sub-section is changed a good deal from the former one. The words "undue" and "unreasonable" are inserted, which do not exist in the former. Is that borrowed from the English Act? It is certainly very much more elastic than the clause as it existed in our Act. Our Act said: "any preference or advantage;" this says: "any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Any advantage would be unreasonable and undue.

Mr. BLAKE. Why then put these words in? When we take a clause out of an Act and substitute another for it, the courts might look at the old clause and the new one and ask what was the meaning of the change.

Mr. FAIRBANK. Before disposing of this sub-section 2, I wish to say that, before the remarks of the hon. member for West Durham in relation to these words "undue and unreasonable," I thought we could see reason to use them two lines below, where they would apply to the description of freight. There is a reason for discriminating in kinds of freight, some being perishable and others not so; but why there should be any qualifying phrase in relation to persons I cannot see. If these words "undue and unreasonable" had occurred before the words "description of freight," I think they would have been reasonable.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. They are taken from the English Act, and after careful consideration.

Mr. FAIRBANK. There is another matter which has caused great complaint, namely, the delay to local freight, and I believe it does no good to railway companies. Railway companies ought to be relieved from the bad feeling which it creates against them, particularly on the through lines. I could show the hon. Minister letters which give instances of great cause of complaint in relation to local freight having to wait for through freight. Now, it has been suggested heretofore that matters of freight should be interfered with so as to control the companies' tolls in relation to their through freight. I do not see how that can be done. I do not see how, if a railway company choose to carry freight from the western States at a losing rate, we have a right to prevent it; but I think it is unjust to the Canadian producer that our railways should virtually place a farmer in Illinois nearer the market than the farmer in Ontario. The value of products depend on their distance from market, and it is the price of transit that fixes the distance, and it frequently occurs now that the farmer in Illinois, by getting lower freight to the sea-board, is actually given the advantage over the Ontario farmers. Perhaps that is an evil that cannot be cured, but it does seem to me that the Canadian farmer or shipper, having to wait for foreign freight to be accommodated first, is not treated fairly. I think that these roads, protected by our laws, frequently subsidized by our money, Federal, Provincial, and municipal, should not have the power of holding local freight to a time to suit their convenience. They go to the western markets, where there is competition, and get freight, and make local freight wait. I think that is a matter that we ought to look to. I have letters showing instances, on these lines, where grain has had to wait for a period of two months, while empty trains were passing daily to the western States after freight and bringing it back through Canada. Of course I will not suggest the language of the clause which would cover this evil, but it is capable of being covered, and should be covered. One shipper writes me that last season, to facilitate the getting away of produce, he sold it to go over different roads, to New York, Portland, and Boston, but he did not succeed in shipping it until one month after the sales were made. A banker informs me that great disadvantage has been occasioned to his customers, owing to these delays. I do not believe it is in the interest of the railway companies themselves to cause these delays, and that Parliament should express itself on that point by Act. A clause has been introduced to prohibit discrimination in favor of persons or companies, and we should have another clause inserted to prevent discrimination against Canadian freight, and in favor of foreign freight; so far as the time of shipment is concerned, we cannot, perhaps, regulate the relative rate at which it shall be shipped.

On section 12,

Mr. BLAKE. Are there any instances where such a state of things as is here referred to have occurred?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Difficulties have arisen in consequence of an individual becoming the purchaser of a railway company, for there are no means provided by law for the operation of a railway under those circumstances. This clause is to prevent the railway being closed.

Mr. BLAKE. Under the general provisions of the charters such as we are conversant with, there is no power to sell the railway out-and-out under mortgage. In cases where this has been done special Acts have been obtained.

Bill reported.

PENITENTIARIES LAWS CONSOLIDATION BILL.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 111) to amend and consolidate the laws relating to Penitentiaries.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This Bill is in substance a consolidation of six different Acts connected with penitentiaries.

On section 4,

Mr. BLAKE. I do not understand why in a consolidation Bill it is requisite that there should be a special provision with regard to Dorchester Penitentiary any more than as to other penitentiaries. There is no provision regarding other penitentiaries as to what convicts shall be confined in them. Why should there be such a provision as to the Dorchester Penitentiary?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This clause is retained because the word "penitentiary" has always had a different legal signification in the Lower Provinces to what it has in Old Canada. It there has the same signification as in England, where it means a reformatory prison rather than a prison for long-term imprisonments.

Mr. BLAKE. But we are one Dominion, and the interpretation of the law should be the same in all the Provinces.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It stands thus: the word "penitentiary" is a portion of an Imperial Act, the British North America Act. This word has a very vague meaning, as mentioned in England; this clause is to be found in 43 Vic., chap. 6, and it is thought as well to leave it in the Bill until all questions between the different Provinces and the Dominion are finally settled. We have had experience of a change both in New Brunswick and Prince Edward Island, with respect to penitentiaries, and we thought it safer to leave it in.

Mr. BLAKE. I observe that as it stands it would render it impossible for the Government very speedily to remove any persons from the Dorchester to any other penitentiary. It is mentioned not merely as a penitentiary, but as the penitentiary for the confinement and reformation of prisoners in any of the Provinces. We have occasionally removed prisoners from St. Vincent de Paul to Kingston and back again, as the hon. gentleman knows.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will look into that.

On section 53,

Mr. BLAKE. This is a very important clause, and I would like to have some explanations from the hon. Minister upon it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This clause provides for the remission of a portion of the time for which a convict is sentenced, as a reward for good conduct. It was strongly praised in the other House. It is the practice followed in Ireland, and with very good results.

Mr. BLAKE. I agree with the general principle of the proposal. For a long time I was desirous to see something done in this direction and I desire to see more done, but my impression is that this proposal will lead to consequences not altogether foreseen. It may be that sentences for certain crimes will prove inadequate, having regard to a very large increase of remission. I had, when Minister of Justice, elaborated to some extent a plan and was only deterred from presenting it by one consideration—that was, the much larger measure, not in principle, but in degree of the power it gave to the warden. If we provided much longer minimum sentences than now and a greater remission than even now proposed, we would largely increase the stimulus to good behavior; but if the remission be increased, and the minimum of sentences remains the same, the result will be that the penalty inflicted will be less than the crime deserved. I would rather recommend that the minimum of sentences be increased, with the view to a greater remission for good behavior. Of course no change could be made, for it would involve the rearranging of the minimum sentences for crimes, but I merely throw out the suggestion for consideration.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman. The hon. Minister of Justice, in his consolidation does not propose to make it a mere consolidation, but will consider such amendments as have been suggested, and I will take care this suggestion be brought under his notice.

Bill reported.

DOMINION LANDS—SENATE AMENDMENTS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, in moving Concurrence to the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 45) further to amend and to consolidate, as so amended, the several Acts respecting the lands of the Dominion therein mentioned, said: The only amendment is a verbal one, which provides that mining regulations, instead of lying on the Table of the House for one month before they come in force, shall take effect from time to time on being adopted, but they shall be placed on the Table within the first fifteen days after the commencement of the Session. This amendment shows greater confidence in the Administration, and it was moved in the Senate at the suggestion of a leading member of the Opposition.

Mr. BLAKE. I am sorry to say that I cannot accept that amendment here. I beg, therefore, to move that this House disagree with the amendment as to the mining and coal land regulations, for the reason that it is not fitting to abandon the existing measure of Parliamentary control over such regulations.

Amendment (Mr. Blake) negatived on a division.

THIRD READING.

The following Bill was read the second time, considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time and passed:—

Bill (No. 95) further to amend the Interpretation Act.—(Sir John A. Macdonald.)

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock a.m.) the House adjourned.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

SATURDAY, 19th May, 1883.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE DEBATES.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell) moved the adoption of the sixth report of the Committee appointed to supervise the Official Report of the Debates of the House during the present Session.

Motion agreed to.

EXPIRING LAWS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In conformity with the report of the Committee on Expiring Laws, I beg leave to introduce Bill (No. 133) to continue for a limited time the Acts therein mentioned. There are only two Acts, which are connected with the Criminal Laws: The first is an Act passed in the forty-first year of Her Majesty's reign, entitled: An Act for the better prevention of crimes of violence in certain parts of Canada, until the end of the next Session of Parliament; and the second, an Act passed in the forty-third year of Her Majesty's reign, entitled: An Act respecting the administration of criminal justice in the territory in dispute between the Governments of the Province of Ontario and the Dominion of Canada.

Bill read the first time.

SALARIES OF JUDGES.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolutions:

That it is expedient to provide:—

1. That the salary of the additional Judge of the Courts of Appeal for Ontario, for whose appointment provision is made by an Act of the Legislature of that Province, 46 Vict., chap. 6, shall be $5,000 per annum.
2. That if the Chief Justice of the Queen's Bench, the Chancellor of Ontario, or the Chief Justice of the Common Pleas, is appointed to the Court of Appeal for Ontario, the Governor in Council may direct that he be paid a salary not less than that he previously enjoyed as such Chief Justice or Chancellor.
3. That the third section (respecting retiring allowances to Judges) of the Act 31 Vict., chap. 33, shall extend and apply to the Judges of the Supreme Court of Judicature of Ontario, and of the Supreme Court of Judicature of Prince Edward Island.
4. That the salaries of the Judges of the Superior Court for the Province of Quebec, shall be as follows:—

	Per annum.
The Chief Justice of the said Court	$6,000.00
Eleven Puisné Judges of the said Court, whose residences are fixed at Montreal or Quebec, each.....	5,000.00
Thirteen Puisné Judges of the said Court, whose residences are fixed within districts other than Bonaventure or Gaspé, or Saguenay, each.....	4,000.00
Two Puisné Judges of the said Court, whose residences are fixed within the districts of Bonaventure and Gaspé, or Saguenay, each.....	3,500.00

5. That the salary of the County Court Judge of the Eastern Judicial District of Manitoba shall be $2,000 per annum for his first three years of service, and $2,500 per annum after such three years of service, and that he shall be paid such travelling allowance as the Governor in Council may from time to time determine.

6. That the salaries and allowances mentioned in the preceding Resolutions 1, 3, 4 and 5 shall take effect on, from and after the next, and shall be computed and payable in the manner provided by the second section of the said Act, 31 Vict., chap. 33, without an annual vote of Parliament, as shall also the salary of the Chief Justice or Chancellor of Ontario mentioned in the second Resolution.

7. That from and after the first day of July, in the present year, 1883, no travelling or circuit allowances shall be paid to the Judges of the Court of Appeal for Ontario.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On Resolution 2,

Mr. BLAKE. I am sorry to say that I cannot assent to this view. Of course, it is quite reasonable if Justices of the other courts are appointed Puisné Judges to the Court of Appeal that they should retain their old salaries, and it is not upon that score that I object, but I object to the principle of appointing to the Court of Appeal Judges who have practically served out their term, and who, although not at the moment at which they are appointed incapable of discharging further judicial duties, are approaching a term when their judicial usefulness is likely to be at an end. It is not necessary or fitting that particular instances should be given, but those who have practised in the Courts of Ontario will recollect instances which indicate the unfortunate results of the system which the hon. gentleman proposes to take the opportunity of perpetuating. Of course, there are instances in which the Justices of one or other of the courts may be of an age when it is quite fit to translate them to the Court of Appeal, but if they are, they are not likely to accept that translation to a Puisné Justiceship, for it is only at a period when age and infirmities are creeping on a man that he is likely to be in a condition of mind to accept. The difficulty is this: That instead of retirements and the infusion of fresh blood, which are the best things in the public interest, you have the Judges placed in positions in which they may remain for a long time, though they may not be capable of efficiently discharging their judicial duties. I have for a long time entertained these views, and having acted upon them as far as possible, when I was charged with the duty of dealing with these judicial offices, and having seen the mischief which arises under this system, I felt it my duty, though it is not a pleasant duty, to make these amendments.

Mr. BAKER (Missisquoi). I think it is a matter for regret that the resolutions do not propose a readjustment of the salaries of the Judges of the Superior Courts, residing in the principal cities of the Dominion. Since the adoption of the present scale the cost of living has enormously increased, and the general expansion of values has been such that what may have been at that time fairly adequate remuneration for their services is now manifestly inadequate to maintain these Judges in a position of becoming dignity in large centres of population. In reference to existing salaries it is to be observed that most of the Judges of Ontario receive an annual allowance from the Provincial Treasury, of a thousand dollars per annum, the payment of which in defiance of the letter and spirit of the British North America Act, which declares that the Judges shall be appointed and paid by the Dominion, has been for many years and still remains a standing scandal. The discontinuance of this payment by the Legislature, with regard to recently appointed Judges, is an admission that the payment is illegal, and should never have been made. But the action of the Legislature in authorizing that payment, though illegal, may be accepted as an expression of opinion that the Judges were insufficiently paid. If so, they should be paid more and from legal and constitutional sources. In my opinion, Judges of the same rank, other things being equal, should be paid alike in all parts of the Dominion. I sincerely trust that at the very next Session of Parliament this matter will be taken up, and that the Judges of the Superior Courts of Ontario and Quebec will be put on an equality, and the confessedly illegal payment of the former out of money from the Provincial Treasury may be discountenanced by Parliament and discontinued by the Province.

Mr. McCARTHY. I have to express my regret that no provision has been made, by the resolutions the hon. First Minister has brought down, for an increase in the salaries of the Judges of the Superior Courts, and perhaps I might go further, and say for an increase in the salaries of the Judges of the County Courts. It is, I think, at all events by the members of the profession, generally felt, in the Province from which I come, that the Judges at present, both of the Superior and the County Courts, are insufficiently paid. It is the fact, however, the cost of living may have increased, that the emoluments of members of the Bar have very considerably increased, and it is, of course, from the leading members of the Bar that appointments must be made to the Bench. Now, if the best material is to be obtained, and I say that the best material ought to be obtained, to take positions on the Bench from time to time, leading members of the profession, in some of the leading Provinces, at any rate, whose incomes amount to perhaps three times as much as is paid to the Judges, will have to abandon these incomes and accept a smaller remuneration. It is, I think, equally plain that the Judges of the land ought to hold a position entitling them to respect, and however improper it may be, it is certainly one of the necessities of life that a man cannot hold that position, if he is out at the elbows, among the men with whom the Judges usually move; they are paid so small a salary in comparison that they practically occupy an inferior position. The managers of our banks, insurance companies, railway companies, and all large financial corporations, who, certainly, are not on the whole abler men, or possess higher attainments than the Judges, yet receive, as I suppose most hon. gentlemen know, twice, thrice, and, in some cases, four times what is paid to the Judges of the Superior Courts. I, therefore, had hoped that the hon. First Minister would have yielded to the pressure which has been brought upon the Government, and which has found vent to some extent in the press, would have brought down a resolution to increase the salaries of the Judges; and I have ventured, no matter how unpopular it may be, to be the mouthpiece here of the feeling which prevails among the members of the profession to which I belong. I will point out to the House that nothing unreasonable has been asked in this direction. If we compare the salaries of the Judges in the different Provinces of the Dominion with those paid to the Judges of other colonies, we shall find that the Judges in Canada receive less than the Judges of any other colony under the British flag that I am aware of. In the Island of Jamaica, for instance, the Chief Justice receives £2,500 sterling, or, in round numbers, $12,500, while the Puisné Judges are paid $7,500 each, and the District Court Judge, a gentleman occupying a position similar to that of our County Court Judges, receives $5,500; in Bermuda, the salary is not quite so large, but still larger in proportion to the salaries of the Judges in this Dominion; in British Guiana, the Judges receive the same salaries as the Judges of Jamaica; in the Cape of Good Hope, the salary is £2,000 sterling, or $10,000; in New South Wales, a self-governing colony, with a population of 749,000, it is £2,600, or $13,000; in Queensland the Chief Justice receives £2,500, or $12,500; and so on. The circumstances may be, and probably are, different in some of these colonies; perhaps a dollar there does not go as far as a dollar here; but wherever we look we find that the Judges are receiving less in proportion to the other members of society in the Dominion than I think is fair or reasonable, or sufficient to enable them to maintain that position of self-respect which they ought to hold in relation to the public at large. What will be the result if matters remain as they are? Why, any vacancies that occur on the Bench will not be filled, as they ought, from the best men in the profession. The Bench will be degraded, compared with the members of the Bar who appear before them, and this will be injurious to the administration of justice. For these reasons I beg to express my dissatisfaction with the resolution which the hon. First Minister has asked our concurrence in. I trust that my hon. friend will withdraw the seventh of these resolutions, which appears to me to be an unfair interference with the management of affairs in the Province of Ontario. At present, the Judges, besides receiving stated salaries, also receive travelling allowances. I submit that that indirect mode of remunerating the Judges is not a satisfactory mode of paying them. They ought to be paid their salaries as their salaries, and they ought not to be deriving incidental profit from their travelling allowances. By the seventh resolution, it is proposed that some of the Judges are to be deprived of these allowances, though they may be compelled by the Local Legislature to go on Circuit, and to incur expense in doing so. The object of the resolution is a good one, but I think that the Local Legislature should deal with it, and not this House. The object is that the Judges of the Court of Appeal should not go on Circuit, and the theory of the resolution is, that if they are not compensated for going on Circuit, they will not go. For these reasons, I trust that the seventh resolution will be withdrawn, and I should like to hear my hon. friend say that at an early day the subject of the salaries of Judges, both of the Superior and the County Courts, would receive the attention of the Government with the view to an increase. I quite agree with my hon. friend who has just addressed the Committee that the Superior Court Judges in Quebec and Montreal should be placed on exactly the same footing as the Judges of the Superior Courts in the Province from which I come. So far as I know, the Judges of that Province have as onerous duties to perform, and are as capable of performing them, as the Superior Court Judges of Ontario. I do not know whether that will apply, and I believe it does not apply with the same force to the outside judicial districts of the Province. As to that I have no knowledge, but as far as I do know of Quebec and Montreal, the Judges there ought to be placed in the same position as the Judges of the Superior Courts of Ontario.

Mr. BRECKEN. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman's remarks. The position of the Judges in Prince Edward Island deserves an equal, if not a greater, amount of attention. The salary of our Chief Justice is only $4,000; that of the Master of the Rolls, $3,200; and that of the Vice-Chancellor, $3,200. The business which falls to these three Judges occupies the whole of their time, and the cost of living in Prince Edward Island has increased 30 to 40 per cent. This is not owing to the National Policy; and I may say I would like to see the cost of living increased still further, as it will be when we have reciprocity with the United States. I may tell my hon. friend the patriotism of the people of Prince Edward Island is such that they would be willing to pay increased prices for their bread and butter, if the general prospects would thereby be enhanced. Our Vice-Chancellor, who has discharged the duties of Judge to the satisfaction of the entire community, and against whose integrity there is not the slightest suspicion, was obliged, owing to the miserable salary he received, to fill the office for many years of President of the Prince Edward Island Bank, and was further obliged to fill the position of President of the Board of the Charlottetown Steam Navigation Company, of which I have been myself a director for many years. A year ago he retired from the presidency of the bank, but remained one of the Board of Directors, and it was during his supervision of that bank that the bank got into trouble. He was in one way responsible for this. At least, he was above suspicion, the only blame that could be attached to the Board being that they were not sufficiently diligent in watching the course of their officers. Here, therefore, was one of our

Judges brought into court and subjected to a very severe and undignified examination, and compelled to go through this ordeal, all owing to the miserable salary he receives, although he is a man of unquestionable integrity. Again, our Master of the Rolls is a man of independent means, one of the wealthiest men in our Province, and it is on that account alone he has been able to give his valuable services to the discharge of his duties as Judge; but I may say his salary does not cover his annual expenses, although he is not an extravagant man. I tell you, our Chief Justice, who is now an old man, and was, for many years, leader of the Bar in our Province, can barely make both ends meet, though very economical in the management of his domestic affairs. That is not the position in which our Judges should be placed. My right hon. friend is not responsible for this. A few years ago our Chief Justice received a smaller salary than to-day, and our Puisné Judges received smaller salaries. It was I who raised my voice in this House against this injustice three years ago, and it was then, when the Department of Justice was administered by our able and respected friend, now the Chief Justice of Nova Scotia, that these increases were made. If there is one feature in the political reputation of my right hon. friend for which he gets credit on both sides of the House it is this: That no statesman in this country has been more careful to secure to Canada an independent judiciary than he, and I have no doubt that the Judges in our little Province will be placed in that independent position to which they are entitled.

Mr. CASGRAIN. In considering this question we must not forget the public who pay. The remarks of the hon. gentleman for North Simcoe may be correct as regards the putting of the Judges on a footing of equality in the two Provinces; but apart from that we must bear in mind that not long ago we raised the salaries of our Judges to such a point, I think, as is sufficient to enable them to live comfortably and not extravagant. If there is a class of citizens who should set the example of moderation and frugality it is the highest class. Because insurance agents and bank managers pile up money and live extravagantly, it is no reason why we should imitate them. I would like to see ourselves revert to the old economical customs of our fathers, and I know I will be backed by the people when I say they ought to be the guide of this or any other Government in the country. Now what are the salaries paid to men who accomplish the same duties in other countries? It has been said that when Judges are elected they are poorly paid, and that the administration of justice is weak and inefficient. Sir, the fact is the very reverse. I have had occasion personally to meet many of the Judges in the United States, and I say they are the very best men in the country. Now, what are their salaries? The Judges of the Supreme Court receive $10,000 a year, which certainly, in a city like Washington, and occupying the high social position they do, is not a high salary. That is the only court in the United States, with the exception of two States, where the salaries equal those paid in Canada. In California, where the cost of living is very high, Judges receive a salary of $7,500; and in Louisiana the Chief Justice receives $7,500 a year, while the Puisné Judges have only $2,000 a year. In the other States the salaries range from $2,500 to $4,000, rarely to $4,500, and that in a very wealthy country like the United States. Certainly we ought to see that our Judges are well paid, but we ought not to give them the means of living extravagantly, nor to cut a great dash with the money we pay them. I think a Judge would be quite as well respected if he did not drive a fine pair of horses, or give balls; a Judge is respected when he gives good judgment and attends faithfully to his duties. I would also remark that the seven Cabinet Ministers of the United States, who conduct all the Federal business, are paid

$8,000 a year. We have twice that number of Ministers who receive the same salary. Perhaps hereafter we may have a Minister of Foreign Affairs, a Minister of War, and others. I wish it to be understood that I am in favor of giving the Judges a sufficient salary, not more nor less, and after we have settled upon their salaries we ought to abide by it, and I think the salary fixed three or four years ago is quite sufficient.

Mr. CURRAN. Although a member of the profession myself, yet, as I have the honor of representing a very large commercial and manufacturing centre, I think it my duty to add a few words in reply to the observations which have been given by the first and second speakers to-day in regard to the salaries of our Judges. I think it is the feeling of the commercial and manufacturing communities in this country that the Judges in our large centres do not receive adequate remuneration for their services. I think that the Bench is no longer considered a prize by those who occupy a high position at the Bar, and that it is desirable that the salaries of the Judges should be increased so as to enable them to occupy worthily the high position they hold in society, despite the remarks which have fallen from the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Casgrain), and which have, no doubt, been made with a view to manufacture political capital in some county constituencies at some future election. Not to repeat what has already been said, I may simply make this remark, that at the time the salaries of Judges were fixed the duties of Judges were far from being as onerous, far from being as responsible as they are to-day. The great expansion of commerce, the great industries that have sprung up, our powerful telegraph and railway companies, have brought before our courts suits of immense importance; and I think it is only just that men who have to deal with millions in a single suit should receive salaries which would enable them to live as gentlemen, and to be beyond suspicion of being approachable; and I may remark in this connection that we have good reason to be proud of the high character of our Bench, and to put full confidence in those who occupy it, and certainly those gentlemen ought to be remunerated according to their talent and to the high position they occupy in society.

Mr. DAVIES. I quite agree with those hon. gentlemen who contend that the Judges should receive just such salaries as will enable the Government to draw the best talent from the Bar; I do not agree with those who contend that Judges are bound necessarily to be paid salaries which would enable them to live in a style befitting their high social position. I think we have struck the right test when we have to pay them such a sum as will draw from the Bar its best talent. Whether this is the result in Ontario and Quebec, I cannot say; but, so far as my own Province is concerned, I merely desire to say this: That we are peculiarly circumstanced there, and our Judges are paid about $1,500 a year less than Judges who perform similar duties in the neighboring Provinces of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick. I have no hesitation in endorsing what my hon. colleague has said as to the increased cost of living in the Island—and I fear that state of things will continue if this Government remains in power for the next fifty-five years, as one of their friends has predicted; but I will go further than that, and say that with the present salaries paid to Judges, we do not get the best talent at the Bar, nor anything like it, and the Judges who are paid these salaries have to resort to outside means in obtaining a living, which is not creditable to the Judges themselves, or to the Bar, and is not conducive to the interests of justice. I hope that when the hon. gentleman does remodel the salaries paid to Judges, he will see to it that a Judge in Prince Edward Island, who has equal abilities to a Judge in Nova Scotia in the discharge of his duties, shall be paid at least the same salary.

Mr. LANDRY (Translation). Mr. Chairman, if I correctly understand the resolutions which are now before the House, they have not in view an increase in the salary of the Judges, and I cordially endorse them. A moment ago I heard an opinion expressed that we ought to increase the salaries of Judges resident in cities and not those living in the rural districts. I think if it ever becomes necessary to introduce resolutions as above, such a distinction will not be made. The greater part of our Judges residing in the rural districts are obliged very often to go to the cities, and to hear and try cases, and, therefore, are city as well as County Judges. My hon. friend the member for L'Islet (Mr. Casgrain), remarked a moment ago that it was necessary to return to the customs of our ancestors. I think if we returned to these customs, instead of coming to Ottawa by railway we would have to go on foot; instead of coming in here spurred and booted, as we notice some of our colleagues at times entering this House, they would appear in a much more primitive costume. The hon. member is wrong in giving us information about the United States, which is not taken from official documents, but from little almanacks which are given to little children, who buy a bottle of the good Samaritan, St. Jacob's Oil or Soothing Syrup. The hon. member is wrong in giving these documents as official, and the statistics which he furnishes should not receive at our hands more consideration than they merit. In conclusion, I think that the resolutions now before the House, inasmuch as they do not increase in any manner the salaries of the Judges, should receive our support, and when the time comes, if ever, to introduce new resolutions, they will be so rendered as to give justice and satisfaction to all.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I regret that the discussion of this question has been confined to members of the profession, from which it might be supposed that lawyers only were interested in it, and that they were guided by selfish motives. That remark cannot apply to the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Casgrain), because unfortunately for himself, from the present position of political parties in this country, he can hardly anticipate within his lifetime, I presume, to be invited to take a seat on the Bench. He is, therefore, free from any motive of that kind, and, perhaps, that may indirectly account for the fact that the view taken by the hon. gentleman is totally different from that taken by other speakers. He says, in his opinion, Judges should not receive salaries sufficient to enable them to drive horses. He is selfish in that view, for we find him daily on horseback, and I regret very much that the other day he was thrown from his horse—I hope that is not attributable to bad riding on his part. But if the hon. gentleman was fortunately in that pecuniary position which enabled him to ride on horseback every day, surely he should be willing to allow Judges to be paid salaries to enable them to take equestrian exercise, if they consider it necessary for their health. The hon. gentleman referred to salaries paid to Judges in the United States, and the statement he made, was, according to my recollection and present information, somewhat erroneous and misleading. He quoted the salary paid to the Judges of the Supreme Court at Washington, at $10,000, which, I believe, is correct; he also referred to the salaries paid Judges of Louisiana, but he did not refer to any other States of the Union. From my information, I think that the salaries paid to Judges of the highest courts in New York State are from $10,000 to $12,000; and that larger salaries are paid in Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, and most of the leading States than are paid to Judges in any part of the Dominion. But I do think the reference to the United States was a fortunate one, because every one who has had an opportunity of mixing much in American business and legal circles must have, over and over again, heard complaints that the salaries paid the Judges there were not sufficient to secure the best legal talent. We constantly hear complaints of the unsatisfactory character of trials there, arising, in a great measure, from the want of impartiality on the part of the Judges; and the statement is constantly heard that the usual course for a leading railway or business man to adopt is to begin by buying a Judge. I think it is essential that our Judges should be placed in a position where not only they cannot be bought—which, thank God, is the case in the whole of this Dominion—but where there cannot be suggested the probability of their being bought. Until adequate and sufficient salaries are paid to the Judges of this country to obtain the very best talent, which the present salaries are not sufficient to procure, we cannot expect to have the Bench filled with the best men in the profession, who are willing to accept that position. It will necessarily result in this: That vacancies must hereafter be filled either by the old men, who are willing to be placed in comparative retirement at a period of life when they have ceased to be thoroughly qualified to perform the duties of Judges; or vacancies must be filled by young men without experience, and who have not attained such a professional position as would enable them to make the ordinary average income of leading members of the Bar. With the remarks of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) as to Judges salaries in Ontario, I entirely concur; and I agree with him in the expression of regret that the leader of the House has not felt himself able, on the present occasion, to come forward with a measure that will meet the undoubted desire which exists, I think, not only in the profession, but among the public at large, that the salaries of the Judges should be increased. As I said at the outset, I would have been glad to have heard something said by the laymen of the House, because, so far as I know public opinion, there is a desire even in the country districts, to have the salaries of the Superior Court Judges in Ontario increased. I have no doubt the same feeling prevails in other Provinces. I am aware from many communications with gentlemen in Montreal, that it certainly exists there, and the general opinion among the commercial and business classes, is that the Judges in that city are not adequately remunerated. I will be glad to hear laymen speak on the subject, because, as a matter of course, a personal motive will be assigned to professional men, and whether they are open to the charge or not, they will be subjected to it, that they are advocating an increase in the salaries, because they think at some future day they may possibly occupy Judges positions themselves. There are no doubt some of us about whom such remarks will be made; but the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) is far beyond any temptation to accept a Judgeship, at all events at the salaries paid them at present.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have listened with great interest to the remarks of my brethren of the Bar and members of this House as to the deficiency of the amount of salaries paid to the Judges. Those remarks would have had greater relevancy if there was a proposition before the House to raise the salaries of the Judges, because as such increases come from the public Treasury they require justification as to the reasonableness of the amounts proposed. This, however, is not the object of either of these resolutions. However, as the matter has been mooted, I will say that a strong feeling exists in the Province of Ontario that the Judges of the Superior Courts are insufficiently paid, and that in the future the present salaries will not command the best talent for the Bench. Hitherto, I believe, they have been sufficient, and I think the present state of the Bench, the standing of the gentlemen composing the Bench, shows that the salaries were, at all events, sufficient to induce them at the time to accept office. There is a feeling among the Bench and Bar in Ontario that the incomes of leading counsel have so much increased in consequence of the increased wealth of the country, that the salaries at present paid to the Judges are insufficient to induce leading counsel to retire to the quiet and dignity of the Bench. I believe, also, the same feeling prevailed in the city of Montreal, among the professional and commercial classes there, that the Judges are not sufficiently remunerated to secure the best talent for the Bench. I do not hear the same complaint from other parts of the Dominion, except to-day, when it was mentioned by hon. members from the Province of Prince Edward Island. The difficulty the Government have in dealing with this question is, that the moment they deal with the salaries of the Judges in any one Province, there arises a corresponding demand, although the same necessity may not exist, from all the other Provinces. This is the difficulty which the Government felt, and this together with other circumstances of a temporary nature, with which I need not trouble the Committee, prevented the Government coming down with any measure during the present Session. They must carefully consider not only the position of the Bench in Ontario and the district of Montreal, but the position of the Bench in all the Provinces, and reasonable requirements; and this forces the Government, whenever it deals with this question, to consider the whole question as affecting the Bench of the various Provinces. With reference to the Province of Ontario, a similar demand is made for the increase of the salaries of the County Judges, who are very numerous. That also will be taken into consideration. In answer to the suggestions of my hon. friend from North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) I will say that the Government intend to address themselves during Recess with the view of studying the pressure and the reasons of the pressure that exists in the Province of Ontario and Montreal, that is brought to bear on the Government in this relation, and will come down with some general scheme at the next Session. I will, however, say one thing more: That I think the Prince Edward Island Judges ought not to complain so very much, because it was not so very long since it came into the Union, and I think that the salary of the Chief Justice before it came into the Union was £100 sterling.

Mr. DAVIES. It was £600.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No. £400 currency; and it was raised to $3,000, which is a very considerable advance within ten years. The Government will, as I have already said, be ready to consider the matter, and are prepared to consider the matter. My hon. friend and colleague the hon. Minister of Justice has directed special attention to that subject for some time, but has not been really able yet to work out a scheme which he could submit to Parliament. However, if he is spared, and the Government lasts until next Session, we will be prepared to submit a measure on this question for the consideration of the House.

Mr. BRECKEN. Will the right hon. gentleman allow me one moment. I think that, as the law now stands, there is no provision for the superannuation of our Judges.

Mr. BLAKE. It is provided for in this clause.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. With respect to the remarks of my hon. friend opposite regarding the appointment of Chief Justice to the Court of Appeal. Of course at times the Chief Justice or the Chancellor, or the head of the court, may linger too long, the veteran may linger superfluous on the stage; but if that happens it is known, and no Government would transfer a Chief Justice because he was worn out, the head of one court, and put him into the other court, when it was no advantage to him in point of salary, and would be an injustice in the public interests. This resolution provides for the contingency of a retired Judge, evidently and obviously in full possession of his judgment and faculties, and who from age is not so rigorous and active a Judge in the courts of first instance as to go on Circuit, which is the fatiguing operation, and to stand the every day worry of a Justice in first instance, but who may have within their judgment sufficient vigor and health to give a sufficient portion of his time to act as an efficient Judge of the Court of Appeal. We all know that this is the practice in England, where retired Judges are taken and made members of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council; and where retired Judges from India are made members of that Committee. Some of the best Judges we have had in the Judicial Committee have been retired Judges, such as Sir James Caldwell, and Sir Barnes Peacock. Innumerable others have been transferred, in the full plenitude of their judgment, though not of physical strength, to the Court of Appeal, which should be simply a Court of Appeal in my opinion. There they are not subject to be pressed continually, and are not obliged to decide on motions summarily, nor to undergo the continual worry of long and fatiguing jury trials, &c., but to hear arguments in matters of appeal. They have plenty of time to form their judgments on these matters in appeal, and bring to the Bench all their matured judgment for that purpose. At the same time I readily agree with the hon. gentleman, that there may be cases where an inefficient Judge is transferred from one court to another. The worst that could happen in such a case would be that an inefficient Judge would be put into court, while his place would be supplied, I suppose, by an efficient Judge as Chief Justice or Chancellor; but the responsibility of the Government of the day would be very great if they transplanted an inefficient and worn out Judge from one court to the other, when he should be pressed, if he should be worn out, to accept a superannuation. I move the adoption of the second resolution.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I was very glad to hear the right hon. the First Minister say that the Government intended, at another Session, to bring down a Bill for equalization, as I understood him, of the salaries of the Judges.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Not the equalization, but the readjustment.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I trust that it will tend towards equalization as far as the Province of Nova Scotia is concerned.

Mr. BLAKE. Readjustment means increase.

Mr. WOODWORTH. Well, I am satisfied. I know the mind of legal profession who come here from Nova Scotia, of the members who represent the different constituencies from there, who are members of the legal profession. One of them happens to be in the Chair as Chairman of this Committee (Mr. Richey); the other member for Halifax (Mr. Daley) is troubled with a very bad cold, so that he cannot raise his voice at all, and my hon. friend from Cape Breton seems to be out of the House at the moment. However, I am sure that I am expressing their views, which I know very well, when I say that there are no Judges in the Dominion of Canada that are harder worked, and who have harder work, than the Judges of the Supreme Court of Nova Scotia. They are obliged to live in the city of Halifax by law, and everybody knows, who has lived in the city of Halifax, and who has been there for any length of time, that there is no city, perhaps, in the Dominion where the cost of living is greater—or, perhaps, as great. It is a naval station, and as such a great many visitors from the Old World come there; a large number of Her Majesty's ships lie there for the most of the year, and entertainment has to be given by the Judges to the notable persons who come there from abroad. When the cost of living is taken into consideration, and they have to keep up the dignity of their office, they had better stay at the Bar, and practice at the Bar, than take seats on the Bench. The late Minister of Justice, then the hon. James McDonald, now the Chief Justice of the Province, I think got a salary as Minister of Justice, of $7,000. He was placed in the position of Chief Justice, and has a salary of $5,000; and yet he has more to do to keep up the position of his office now, than he had when he was in Ottawa, and Minister of Justice. This is really an injustice to the late hon. Minister of Justice, to place him in that position. The Judges are at work constantly, on Circuit or in Banc at Halifax, and yet the salaries of their respective offices are not at all sufficient to keep up the dignity of their positions. I am quite sure that the members of the legal profession, on both sides of the House, and the laymen, are as much interested as the members of the legal profession in seeing the dignity of this office kept up—

Mr. McCARTHY. Hear, hear.

Mr. WOODWORTH. And wish that these men should not get the starvation salaries which they are now receiving. I have heard it said—but I do not believe it can be seriously said—that because the profession in Ontario is more lucrative than it is in Nova Scotia, that, therefore, the Judges, who are made out of this profession, and elevated from the profession of law, should not receive equal salaries where the grade of office is the same. I do not think that there is any force in that argument at all. They have to go to the same fountains for their law. They have to make the same searches to base their legal opinions upon. They have to go back to the same sources of information that any barrister or any lawyer in Ontario would have to do, except as concerns the Statutes of the different Provinces, which, of course, are different; but I am now speaking of the principles of common law and of precedents. They have to go back to the same authorities, and it might just as well be urged that their salaries should be less than the salaries of corresponding Judges in Ontario, or of any other profession in the Dominion, as to say that because the profession is not as lucrative there, that there is not as much gained from it, or of income from it, as to say that a Minister from Nova Scotia should not receive the same salary as the other Ministers. But we all know that no matter from what Province the Minister comes he receives the same salary as the others, excepting, of course, the Prime Minister. If the argument were true it follows that a Minister from Nova Scotia or Prince Edward Island, or Manitoba, or British Columbia, would have to take a lower salary, give fewer dinners, live at home and bring his lunch here, or take his tea at a second-rate boarding house. I am reminded by one of the ablest members of this House, and a former Minister, that we have as good material in the Lower Provinces as elsewhere—perhaps better, though the hon. gentleman's modesty did not allow him to say so. I am sure the leader of the Opposition, who is known to be at the head of the Bar of his own Province—and justly so from his eminent ability and high legal attainments—will not refuse to equalize the salaries, as I understand that is to be the result of the consultation between the hon. First Minister and himself. I am sure that from his esprit de corps he would not favor giving a brother member of the profession who might be elevated to a Judgeship, a starvation salary, while his brother Judges are placed at a higher figure.

Mr. BLAKE. Both inside and outside of this House, I have always advocated the principle which has been supported by the hon. member for Queen's county (Mr. Woodworth), that we owe it to the country and to the highest interests of the State to have the salaries of the Judges at such a point as will secure men in the first rank of the Bar—I do not say the very first men, because you cannot always get the first men at any salary—but men in the first rank. I do not advocate the equalization because circumstances may be different; but I advocate, in each Province, such a salary as may be necessary for that purpose. I am sorry to hear of the state of things in Nova Scotia. I know that six out of seven Judges who adorn the Bench of that Province have been appointed within the space of seven years, and three of them within about two years. I believe these appointments were all of them from amongst the leading men of that Province, and that they were the best men who could have been chosen. I am sorry that the terrible sacrifice which the hon. gentleman has described was forced upon them. I am sorry that they were obliged to make such an immolation of themselves upon the altar of their country, that he has described in his affecting account of their condition, and I hope that between now and next Session no such calamity may occur as a vacancy in the Bench of Nova Scotia, because I am sure my hon. friend will be utterly unable to fill it:

Mr. WOODWORTH. If rumour be true—and I do not always believe it—the hon. member who has just spoken and who was Minister of Justice in the late Government, had no such complaint from Nova Scotia, and was not under the necessity of forcing a Judgeship upon anybody. Indeed, I think it was he who was approached, and that many telegrams and letters and so on were written, to which he yielded, and he got some of the very best material that could possibly be got for the Bench. But he must not take these instances as proof of the general conduct of the Bar to get on the Bench. In the case of the last three Judges, I know that these appointments were offered to the gentlemen who now fill them without solicitation, and were almost forced upon them from the very circumstances of the case. This is true, as members of the profession know, at Halifax and other parts of the Province.

On Resolution 4,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is an increase of one under this item in accordance with the Act of last Session. If the hon. gentleman looks at the last paragraph of this resolution he will find that there are two Puisné Judges with salaries of $3,500 each. At present there are three, and it is proposed to have these two do the work now done by three, so it will be a saving of $3,500, leaving on the whole an increase of $1,500 for one additional Judge at Montreal.

On Resolution 5,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is a great want of another County Judge in the eastern district of Manitoba, who is provided for by the local law, and there is a great pressure that he should be appointed at once. The salary is the same as the present County Judge. There is a printer's mistake in the third line of the fifth Resolution. Instead of $2,500, it should be $2,400.

On Resolution 7,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This resolution is that from and after the 1st of July, 1883, no travelling or circuit allowances shall be paid to the Judges of the Court of Appeal for Ontario. That, by some error, does not carry out the intention of the hon. Minister of Justice; therefore, I move that it be made from the 1st of July, 1884. We provide the salary, and if the allowance is part of the salary, we should have something to say about it. I know the hon. gentleman opposite held that opinion very strongly when he held that we should supervise the action of the Local Legislatures in appointing new Judges, that as the salaries come out of the Dominion Treasury, the Local Legislatures have no motive in limiting the number of Judges. Being myself strongly of the opinion that the Judges of the Court of Appeal should not go on Circuit, and learning from leading members of the Bar that the business of the Court of Appeal has been allowed to get into arrears, because the Judges of that court went on Circuit, I think it is well that the opinion of the Federal Parliament, which votes the money, should be known on the point. But in order to prevent any immediate discomfort or surprise to the Judges of the Court of Appeal, the hon. Minister of Justice intended that the resolution should not come into effect until the 1st of July, 1884. If there be, as I am satisfied there will be, if no accident arises, comprehensive legislation on this subject next Session, this clause may never come into operation.

Mr. BLAKE. I feel bound to observe that this resolution makes positive provision—delayed in its operation certainly; but if the contingency which the hon. gentleman refers to does not take place, will be put into operation—for a reduction in the salaries of the Judges in the Court of Appeal. It is well known that the Circuit allowances are not consumed on circuits, and considering that very inadequate salaries are at present received by the Judges, it can hardly be wondered at that the Circuit allowances are to a certain extent economised, and this resolution provides practically for cutting off $400 or $500 of the existing salaries of the Judges of the Court of Appeal.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is so; but I think the hon. gentleman will agree in the opinion that if the salaries of the Judges of the Court of Appeal are insufficient, the proper course would be to increase them and keep the Judges in their court; that even if we did not add to the salaries of the other Judges, the Judges of Appeal should get an additional salary in lieu of the Circuit allowances they give up.

Resolutions reported.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD introduced Bill (No. 134) to provide for the salaries, superannuation, and travelling expenses of certain Judges of certain Provincial Courts.

Bill read the first time.

MONTREAL HARBOR COMMISSIONERS.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that on Monday next the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following Resolution:

That it is expedient to authorise the Governor in Council to raise by debentures in the manner prescribed by the Act 36th Vict., chap. 60, (except as to the rate of interest which shall not exceed 4 per cent. per annum), a further sum not exceeding $900,000, to be advanced to and applied by the Montreal Harbor Commissioners from time to time, in meeting the expenses to be incurred by them in completing the dredging and deepening of the ship channel of the River St. Lawrence, between Montreal and Quebec, to the depth of 27½ feet at low water; subject to the payment by the said Commissioners to the Receiver-General of interest on the sums so raised and advanced, at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum: Provided that the said Commissioners shall not commence the said work unless nor until the Governor in Council shall be satisfied by such examination and report as shall be deemed sufficient, that the said work can be completed for a sum not exceeding that above mentioned.

Motion agreed to.

FIRST READINGS.

The following Bills (from the Senate) were severally introduced and read the first time:—

Bill (No. 135) relating to Bills of Exchange and Promissory Notes in the Province of Prince Edward Island.—(Sir John A. Macdonald.)

Bill (No. 136) to amend the Law respecting Lotteries.—(Sir John A. Macdonald.)

On Resolution 342,

For purchase of building and property situated on the east side of the Rideau Canal Basin, required for Military Store purposes at Ottawa $8,000.00

Mr. BLAKE. This vote is inaccurate. The purchase price is $11,000, not $8,000, the difference, $3,000, being rent due the Government; and I do not see there was any proper valuation of this property before purchase. The vote should be for $11,000, and the $3,000 be placed to the credit of the Ordnance Department for rent received.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will bring down a supplementary vote for $3,000.

On Resolution 366,

Canals..... $251,500.00

Mr. BLAKE. I would ask the hon. gentleman to bring down, on Monday, the information which I suppose he possesses on the proposed enlargement of the Williamsburgh Canal. These proposals came down somewhat late in the Supplementary Estimates, and I have had no opportunity of communicating with any localities, or receiving that information I would like in order intelligently to discuss them. But I have received information which I will give the hon. gentleman an opportunity of answering, relating to this matter. It is stated that Mr. Page had always objected to the extension of the pier for the purpose of forcing more water into the canal, because it is not necessary in order to raise the water in the canal, as the canal will fall to the full capacity of the locks at present, and that it will increase the head-fall for certain manufacturing companies. Of course, I know nothing about the matter, but having received that suggestion I thought it due to himself to inform the hon. gentleman of it, and to ask him to bring down the report.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say that the report and the estimate were submitted at the instance, and on the advice, of the Chief Engineer of Canals. I will bring down the report.

On Resolution 336,

Collection of Revenue—Excise..... $1,815 02

Mr. BLAKE. With reference to two of these votes, payments of the claims of P. Durnford and R. Bellemare, $636.67 each, the hon. Minister was good enough to hand me papers which we have perused. I am unfortunately unable to agree with the papers which are there, although there may be statements which are deserving of consideration. But the Head of the Department, who was in charge of it during all these years, does not seem to have been consulted, although he must have rejected, or advised the rejection of, claims upon former occasions. I can only repeat my opinion, that claims so old as these, fifteen years old, ought not to be voted except upon the clearest evidence. My own view of the evidence is that it is not such as to warrant the payment of this money.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER, in moving the consideration of the report of the Committee of the Whole on the resolution respecting subsidies to certain railway companies therein mentioned, said: In presenting papers in connection with railway matters, I will take this opportunity of laying on the Table a copy of a letter to which the hon. gentleman made allusion. It will be seen that what purported to be this letter was a garbled version, and that it was not correctly stated in the newspaper from which the hon. gentleman read. The letter was as follows:—

“OTTAWA, February 24th, 1883.

“MY DEAR SIR,—Mr. Starke, C. E., has returned, but has not yet had time to complete his report respecting the Napanee Railway. I am satisfied, however, that a very strong case will be made by him for assistance to that railway, and as soon as the Estimates for this Session are taken up, I will submit an appropriation for the favorable consideration of the Government.

“Yours faithfully,
“CHARLES TUPPER.

“ALEXANDER HENRY, Esq., Napanee.”

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved to strike out the words “Miramichi Valley” and insert the words “Northern and Western,” as the name of the company had been changed from the former to the latter by a recent Act of the New Brunswick Legislature.

Amendment agreed to; and Resolution reported.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER introduced Bill (No. 137) to authorize the granting of subsidies for the construction of the lines of railway therein mentioned.

Bill read the first time.

CONSOLIDATED RAILWAY AMENDMENT ACT.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved the third reading of Bill (No. 127) to further amend the Consolidated Railway Act, 1879, and to declare certain lines of railway to be works for the general advantage of Canada.

Mr. BLAKE moved in amendment:

That the said Bill be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole, in order to amend the clause transferring Provincial railways to the legislative jurisdiction of the Parliament, by striking out the general provisions affecting independent lines intersecting or touching other railways; and the provision affecting lines hereafter chartered by a Provincial Legislature.

Amendment negatived on the following division:—

Mr. SPEAKER. Shall the Bill be read the third time?

Mr. McCARTHY. It was arranged last night that the amendment moved by my hon. friend from Pembroke should be put in the Bill.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think it was understood that it was to be inserted.

Mr. BLAKE. It was to be framed properly.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have done so.

Mr. BLAKE. You have made it as harmless as possible, I hope.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not undertake the responsibility of it. I move that the Bill be referred back to the Committee of the Whole.

Motion agreed to; and Bill reommitted, amended, reported, and read the third time and passed.

LAKE ST. PETER IMPROVEMENTS.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I think I neglected to state, when I moved the resolutions relating to the expenditure on Lake St. Peter, that the assent of the Crown had been given to them.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, in moving the second reading of Bill (No. 132) respecting the sale of intoxicating liquors and the issuing of licenses therefor, said: The objects of this Bill are accurately prescribed in the preamble, which I will read:

"Whereas it is desirable to regulate the traffic in the sale of intoxicating liquors, and it is expedient that the law respecting the same should be uniform throughout the Dominion, and that provision should be made in regard thereto for the better preservation of peace and order."

The Bill, as the House knows, is the result of a report of a Special Committee appointed by this House to consider this all-important question. While the subject was before the Committee the general line of the Bill, of course, became known to the public more or less through the newspapers, and the Government has received an infinity of representations, some complaining of the undue stringency of the measure, and others, especially the Licensed Victuallers, desiring some alterations and modifications in some of the clauses of the Bill, as they regarded it as unduly oppressing on their branch of the trade. All these matters will be fully discussed in the Committee I have no doubt. The general system is this: That in each license-district, which districts are specified in the Bill, there shall be a Board of three License Commissioners. The first Commissioner shall be: In the Provinces of Ontario, Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Manitoba and Prince Edward Island, the County Court Judge, or the Junior Judge of the County, as may be selected by the Governor in Council; in the Province of Quebec, the Superior Court Judge of the Judicial District, and in the Judicial Districts of Quebec and Montreal, such one of the Judges as the Governor may appoint, except in the cities of Montreal and Quebec, where he shall be the Judge of the Sessions of the Peace; in the Province of British Columbia, such one of the Judges as the Governor in Council may appoint. I may say en passant that I have received some representations from the Province of Quebec, pointing out some practical difficulties in getting a Judge to be a member of the Commission. They have not the County Court system, as it is understood in the other Provinces, and it is alleged that the jurisdiction of the Superior Court Judges is over such a large area that it would include several, and, perhaps, in some cases, many districts, and that, perhaps, they might not be available. But it has been suggested to me by an hon. member that if you want to get independent men, men of standing and of position in those cases where Superior Court Judges are not available, the Registrar of Deeds, who is an officer holding office during good behavior, might be appointed as a substitute, but of course that will be a matter for discussion in the Committee. The second Commissioner shall be the Warden of the county or Mayor of the city. When there is both a Warden and a Mayor, having jurisdiction within the license district, the former shall be second Commissioner. In the cities of Montreal and Quebec, in the Province of Quebec, the Recorder, and in the Province of Prince Edward Island, the Sheriff of the county shall be the second Commissioner, inasmuch as they have not a municipal system as is known and obtains in the other Provinces. Then as this is a Government measure, and the Government are responsible for the carrying out of the objects stated in the preamble, it is proposed that the Government shall have the appointment of one Commissioner who shall hold office during good behavior. This is the governing board which rules the whole system, the whole plan of license regulations, the whole plan of restrictions, the whole plan of punishment. The Inspectors who are to act as the executive under this quasi-legislative body of Commissioners are to be appointed by the Commissioners. The Commissioners being an independent body, being a body of which two members are quite independent of any Government influence or supposed Government influence, it is thought better that the Inspector should be appointed by such a Board, rather than directly by the Government, as in other places, and should act under their general direction. As will be seen by the Bill, the license fee is nominal, the object of the Bill not being for revenue purposes or the increase of the revenue, but for the purposes of good government and the regulation of this trade. Though it is not expressed in the Bill, perhaps it will be provided during the progress through Committee, that, so far as we have the right to assert it, the right of the Provincial Governments shall be asserted to make such legislation as to all such licenses as may be necessary in order to bring in revenue for Provincial, local or municipal purposes. These are the principles of the Bill, and the rest of the measure consists of the machinery. The gentlemen who composed the Special Committee were carefully selected from the different Provinces. There has been, of course, a necessity for a good deal of give and take, because people are very naturally inclined to prefer the system to which they are accustomed, and which has been in force in their own Provinces. Of course, as with every new measure, time will show its imperfections, and it will be the pleasant duty of the Legislature, from time to time, as experience shows the necessity of it, to correct any errors in detail which may be revealed. With these few remarks, I shall move the second reading. Unfortunately, I am not in that state of health to be able to discuss this matter at great length at present, but I have no doubt I shall be ably assisted in the discussion by hon. members on both sides.

Mr. BLAKE. We have now arrived at the hundredth day, I think, of the Session; and it is a curious commentary on what might be supposed to be the improved condition of public business which would be presented by an Administration which had just been invigorated by contact with their source of power, the people, that we should have arrived at that stage of the Session before it is proposed to read for the second time a measure which was promised in the Speech from the Throne as one of the most important measures of the Government. We have already heard of the fate of the other two measures of importance which were promised to us. In order that hon. members may appreciate what the circumstances are under which we are called upon to legislate at this time on this important matter, and remembering that it is only a day or two since the Bill was printed and distributed, and that we have had but that brief period for the consideration of its clauses, I would just draw attention to the duration of our Sessions for some years back. The Session of 1874 lasted 62 days, the Session of 1875, 68 days, the Session of 1876, 63 days, the Session of 1877, 80 days, the Session of 1878, 93 days, the Session of 1879, 84 days, the Session of 1880, 80 days, the Session of 1880-81, 103 days, and the Session of 1882, 98 days. I need not remind those who were members of the late House that the Session 1880-81 was the Session in which the Pacific Railway Contract came under discussion, when we met before Christmas, had a Christmas Recess, and resumed afterwards; and we are now within three days of the duration of that Session. Taking the whole of these Sessions together, the average is under eighty-one days. Taking the last four Sessions together, including that exceptional Session, the average is ninety-three days. Omitting the exceptional Session, the average is eighty-nine days, and we are now called upon to discuss the measure on the hundredth day. The hon. gentleman announced to us in the Speech from the Throne, that this measure was a necessity forced upon the Administration by a decision which had been given some six or eight months previous. No step was taken to carry out the view expressed in the Speech from the Throne until the 16th of March, some few weeks or more after the commencement of the Session, when the hon. gentleman moved the reference of the whole subject to a Select Committee. I need hardly point out, Sir, that had that been the course originally designed to be pursued in reference to this measure, the hon. gentleman would have—ought to have—moved for his Select Committee immediately, so that its labors might have been prosecuted and its results arrived at and submitted to this House within a reasonable space. But, as I said, no step was taken until the 16th of March, when the Committee was moved. Now, Sir, I do not know in what manner, and with what amplitude of discussion, legislation upon this important question of licensing, involving, as it does, so many considerations of various descriptions and so much matter of detail, has been conducted in the Legislatures of the other Provinces than that from which I come; but I do know that in that Province a License Bill, even an amendment to a License Bill, embracing a few particulars, has always been understood to be a measure likely to give rise, and has always justified the expectation that it would give rise, to very ample discussion. That is natural in a measure of that description; and it is the more to be regretted that we should be called upon at this stage to legislate in this regard, because we labor under difficulties very much greater in respect to such legislation, than any Provincial Legislature possibly can in dealing with the legislation of its own Province, because we have to deal with the legislation of the different Provinces, and to consider how far it is possible, as the hon. gentleman has suggested, to harmonize the various views, ideas, and opinions which have been in vogue in the different Provinces, and the various laws to which the people have been accustomed, in one mould, in such a way as to suit us all. I do not propose, at this time, to enter upon a rediscussion of the positions I took at the earliest stage at which it was possible to take them on this matter. It will, I believe—particularly after the announcement of the hon. gentleman that an infinitude of suggestions have been made to the Administration on behalf of various interests, and that improvements will be submitted for the consideration of the Committee, arising out of these suggestions—be for the convenience of the House that I should interpose as little as possible until the Administration can announce these improvements which they propose to make. I am inclined to believe, Sir, that the discussions which have taken place, and the difficulties which have been evolved, have indicated the importance of the view which has been pressed from this side of the House upon the attention of the Government and the House, that this question, above all questions, is one eminently of a local character, and one to be dealt with by the Local Legislatures. But I shall not enlarge upon that either, convinced as I am that we shall advance a decision upon that, as well as upon other points, by as rapidly as possible getting into Committee, so as to understand what it is proposed to do with this Bill. Its merits shall ultimately depend, as it is submitted to this House not upon the form in which it at present appears, but upon the form into which the hon. gentleman will propose to mould it. Maintaining, therefore, the objections which I have expressed to the House on a former occasion as to the impropriety of our interfering at all at this stage with this question; maintaining the position that if there be a doubt cast, as there has been, by a paragraph in the Speech from the Throne, upon the jurisdiction of the Local Legislatures, the best interests of the Dominion and the spirit of our Constitution would be best consulted, not by our legislating here, but by taking steps to remove that doubt. I shall not interpose longer between the House and the question, but proceed to facilitate the giving of that information at once which I had thought the hon. gentleman would give on the second reading, as to the alterations which he proposes to make in the measure.

Bill read the second time on a division.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, in moving that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, said: I would suggest, in order to expedite the Bill as much as possible, that we should take the clauses as to which there is no dispute, and leave over those on which there may be discussion.

Mr. BLAKE. Some of these clauses may be depending on the other clauses.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We will not take up any of the depending clauses.

Mr. BLAKE. We must know what the disputed clauses are first. You cannot deal with the clauses in that way.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 2,

Mr. McCARTHY. I propose to add in the eleventh line after "shall" the words: "unless such interpretation be repugnant to the subject or inconsistent with the text," then the word "board" should come before "district" so as to get it in alphabetical order. It will be found in the third enumerated clause of the interpretation.

On section 3,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This provides:

Nothing in this Act shall apply: 1. To manufacturers of native wines from grapes grown and produced in Canada, and who sell such wines in quantities of not less than one gallon or two bottles, if not less than three half-pints each, at one time at the place of manufacture.

2. To any person who holds a license as auctioneer, selling liquor at public auction in quantities of not less than two gallons at any one time.

3. To any person selling liquor in any refreshment room at the Senate or House of Commons, or the Legislative Council or House of Assembly of any of the Provinces, by the permission and under the control of the Senate, House of Commons, Legislative Council or House of Assembly respectively.

Mr. BLAKE. As we are passing a most stringent law to the rest of the world, why should we permit anybody to sell here?

Mr. McCARTHY. It does not give permission.

Mr. BLAKE. It recognizes the principle of permission.

Mr. FORBES. With reference to the first sub-section, if it would be well to do something which would prevent drinking on the premises, we should insert the words, "not to be drunk on the premises."

Mr. BLAKE. Does that apply to the liquor or the man?

Mr. FORBES. The one follows the other.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Why is an auctioneer to be exempted from the restriction of this Act?

Mr. McCARTHY. He holds a license as auctioneer.

Mr. BLAKE. From the local authorities—but local licenses to sell liquors, it cannot be possible.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). It is absurd to allow an auctioneer to sell at not less than two gallons. It will give him an opportunity to distribute liquors among those attending the auction in order to induce them to rush business.

Mr. McCARTHY. An auctioneer has frequently to sell general goods, amongst them general liquors, and it would be absurd, because he may happen once in twelve months to be called on to sell liquors that he should have to take out a liquor license. He is not permitted to sell in quantities less than two gallons.

Mr. McMULLEN. Supposing a grocer, who has no license, employs an auctioneer to sell for him twice a year. He may sell a large quantity of liquor that way, and allow his customer to take it away in half a gallon at a time. The customer can plead that he bought that under the auctioneer's hammer, and can remove it when he likes.

On section 5,

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I think the fourth sub-section should be omitted, which says that in the event of a tie the chairman shall have an additional or casting vote. As there are only three Commissioners, assuming they are all present, there never could be a tie. If there are only two present and they differ, I think they should be required to let the subject lie over until the third Commissioner was present. It seems to me improper to give one man the votes when on any special occasion one of the Commissioners happens to be absent.

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not agree with my hon. friend. The scheme of the Bill is that these Commissioners should form a court to hear applicants for, and complaints against, the granting of a license in open court. If, from any cause, one of the three is unable to attend, through sickness or otherwise, it would practically render it impossible for the court to adjourn the matter. I see no great objection to a Judge, in a case where a Judge sits, having a casting vote.

Mr. CAMERON. I have a strong opinion on the subject and should like to take the sense of the Committee. It seems to me, in a tribunal composed of only three members, absurd to give one of them two votes in the case of the absence of a third; if there is a difference of opinion there can be no great detriment in letting the matter lie over until the third one is present. I move that sub-section four of section five be omitted from the Bill.

Mr. McCARTHY. If the Judge be one of the two Commissioners sitting in the absence of a third, it would be very inconvenient for the Judge to go back, more especially if, as in some of the Provinces, he may have to attend from a long distance. In the Maritime Provinces and Quebec one Judge sits for more than one county, and possibly may have to sit on two or three License Boards.

Mr. CAMERON. If the matter was of such importance that the two Commissioners could not agree, they could do their ordinary business and wait until the third one was present.

Mr. AUGER. Have we a right to force an officer, acting under authority of the Local Legislature, to act on this Board? The Warden is an officer of the Local Legislature.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; he is elected by the people.

Mr. AUGER. Yes, but he acts under Provincial laws. He is elected by the people, but that election takes place by virtue of a Provincial law. Suppose he refuses to act?

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex).

Mr. HALL. That refers to a subject to which I intended to call the attention of the Committee, and not only to the case of one of these persons refusing to act, but also to the case of the death or absence of one of those consenting to act. There should be some provision for filling vacancies caused either by refusal to act or by absence or death. I quite agree with the suggestion that a Judge of the Superior Court in Quebec ought not to be pressed to act as Commissioner on this Board. I think the Government should retain a certain discretionary power in making appointments. It would not be wise to enact that the Registrar in any case should be selected as the Chairman of the Board. I can easily conceive a case where a Judge might decline to act, and where the Registrar might not be a suitable person; and I would suggest that in the Province of Quebec a discretion should be allowed to the Governor in Council to select either a Judge, if the Judge is willing to act, or the District Magistrate in those counties where a District Magistrate resides, or the Registrar acting in the county. The Government then could exercise a wise choice in filling vacancies.

Mr. CURRAN. A suggestion has been made that the Prothonotary, of whom there is only one in each judicial district, should be the person selected instead of a Judge of a Superior Court, or even the Registrar. In judicial districts there are frequently several Registrars, and the Government in making a second appointment would have to decide which Registrar it should be. Therefore the Prothonotary, who is invariably a man of education and standing, would be an excellent officer in that respect. There is another small change that would need to be made, in Section a where the Judge of the Sessions of the Peace is referred to. In the city of Montreal there are two Judges of the Sessions, while there is only one in Quebec.

Mr. BLAKE. This Bill provides that one of the members of the Board should be the Judge of the county. We know that the electoral districts and the counties do not correspond. The Judge must be Judge of a county of which no part of the district, if it be an electoral district, is composed. The same observation applies to the provision as to the Warden of the county. The Warden of which county is to be president of the Board?

Mr. McCARTHY. There is no necessity for having a license district for every electoral district. Take the county of York in which there are several electoral districts, one Licensing Board would be quite sufficient for the whole county—I do not mean including Toronto—and so with respect to other counties.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Is it not a mistake to appoint a Judge as one of the Commissioners. We hear many complaints about Judges being overworked, and having many duties to discharge. They have to revise voters' lists, do Surrogate Court work, and discharge other duties; and, besides, I notice by this Bill a Commissioner is disqualified, if a Justice of the Peace, to sit on any license trial. A Judge who may be one of these Commissioners, may have a case on appeal tried before him. He will then be sitting on the trial of a person whom he has licensed to sell intoxicating liquors. He will therefore be called on to act in two capacities, which is in violation of the principles of the Bill, and it will be a mistake to overload the Judges with extra duties. I do not think, moreover, it will add to the dignity and influence of the Bench to be so overloaded with these duties, and the Judges are not exceedingly anxious to have these duties imposed on them. I do not mean to say that the Judges are not competent to discharge the duties, for they are very well qualified, if they have time and opportunity, and the circumstances would permit them, to attend to these duties. But there are other officers of high standing and good repute, such as Sheriffs and Registrars, whose duties are not so onerous as those of the Judges, on whom this task could be imposed,—and I would prefer the Registrar to the Sheriff. His time is more at his own disposal, and it would not be at all in conflict with the high position of trust which he occupies, that this additional responsibility should be imposed upon him. I do not object to the Judges per se, but on the ground that they have many other duties to perform, and, further, that they would necessarily be brought into conflict with those parties as License Commissioners, which might, to a certain extent, interfere with the freedom of action of the Judges when called on to exercise their judicial functions.

Mr. McCARTHY. It is most desirable that the Judge should be one of the Commissioners. What we wish to secure is an impartial tribunal, a court which will give to a man a license because he is entitled to it, not because of his politics, and which will refuse licenses in the same manner. I know no person more competent to discharge that duty and who will reflect more credit on the Board of License Commissioners, than the County Judge, and therefore I would like the principle carried out in all the Provinces, and I trust our friends from Quebec will bear this in mind. In outside districts of that Province, I understand, the Judges although Judges of the Superior Court, do not perform duties very dissimilar from those performed by the County Court Judges of Ontario. I have also heard it said that they are not overworked; and, therefore, I hope the hon. members from Quebec will be willing that, outside of the great centres of the Province, Quebec and Montreal, the Judges of the Superior Court shall be appointed Commissioners. In the Province of Ontario, at all events, I think it would be a great misfortune if the Committee should substitute any person for the County Judge.

Mr. BLAKE. I cannot sympathize with the view that it is any degradation to a Judge to accept the office of License Commissioner, which is one of the highest possible consequence to the community. It is quite true that, as regards Election trials, they are open to suspicion of partiality, and so forth; but that has to be met. The office of Commissioner, being one of very high importance and responsibility, I do not sympathize with the view that County Court Judges of Ontario will be degraded by performing the duty. One of the Superior Court Judges of Ontario voluntarily accepted the office of License Commissioner there, and held it for three years; and although it was a very laborious and unthankful task, I believe very considerable good was accomplished in the locality where he discharged the duties of the office. I cannot, therefore, at all agree with the sentiment or view which has been expressed upon that part of the subject. At the same time I must say that I received this morning a letter from a gentleman who has considerable knowledge of the working of the License Law of Ontario, who stated that while it is quite correct that the Judge would be a very proper person to be one of the Board, it had been found in practice that the Board has a good deal to do with directing the instituting of prosecution, not personally, but in connection with the Inspector. They obtain information as to whether the Inspector is slack in the performance of his duties, and people tell them that prosecutions should be instituted against different parties. The machinery is worked through the Licensing Board; and if that is the way this law will be worked, if the Commissioners will have to do, though not by formal order, but still practically with the institution of prosecution, I must say a Judge, if he has afterwards to take appeals, will be placed in a very invidious position.

Mr. HALL. It is true, unfortunately, that the Judges of the Superior Court in the Province of Quebec are obliged to perform the duties imposed on County Court Judges in the Province of Ontario, but these are not their primary duties.

They occupy, in the first place, the position of the highest Judges of our Province; and hon. members from Ontario would be unwilling, I think, to see the Judges of the highest Court of that Province placed in the position of License Commissioners, for that will be the result if they consent to accept those positions. That is the position these Judges occupy in Quebec, and I say, first, on the point of dignity, and secondly, because these duties are added to their other duties, thereby increasing their work, these additional duties should not be imposed on them. Therefore, as regards Quebec, the Committee will see the force of the request which is unanimously made by hon. members from that Province, that our Superior Court Judges should not be asked to take that position. I therefore move:

That in place of the words "Superior Court Judge of the Judicial District" in the seventh line of the first sub-section, the words "District Magistrate, Prothonotary or Registrar holding office in such License District as may be selected by the Governor General in Council," be adopted.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think it is any degradation to the highest Judges of the land to sit on a Board of this kind. This Board is formed for the purpose of establishing order, and regulating and restricting the excessive use of intoxicating liquors. It is a duty connected with the general idea of what a Judge should be—to endeavor by his example, and by putting the law in force, to conduce to good government and good morals. As the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blake) just said, it is not considered a degradation in Toronto for a Judge, and an eminent Judge in the Court of Chancery to sit of his own choice as a License Commissioner of Ontario—and I believe a most successful and active Commissioner. I should be sorry that it should be said it was an infringement of the dignity of any man, however high in official or other rank, or in personal rank, to sit on a Board of such a valuable and efficient character as this; and I would be very sorry also to see any additional power thrown upon the Government in this selection of Commissioners. I think that the Government ought to have one man there. As they are responsible for this legislation they are responsible for its being carried out, as they establish the licenses and license fees, and therefore they must see that such an important portion of the machinery and of local administration should be carried out. They cannot shake off this responsibility, and therefore they should have one person, but only for that purpose—for that reason; otherwise I would be very glad to see the whole Board of Commissioners appointed independent of the Government. If, however, they are not only to have the appointment of their own man, but also the selection of half-a-dozen men, they, in fact, control the Board, and then what would be the consequence—all kinds of political insinuations would be used that the particular selection of a particular individual had been made for political reasons, in order to get control of the Board. I hope that my hon. friend will not press this just now. I hope that he will allow it to pass as it is at present. I intend, as I said a while ago, with the consent of the Committee and of the House, to give every opportunity to hear what hon. members of both sides have to say on an important measure of this kind, and to deal with it in the widest possible spirit of united action in order to produce a good Bill. Whatever may be thought by any hon. gentleman as to the expediency of bringing in the Bill, the bringing in of which the House has sanctioned and which is certain to become law, I invite hon. gentlemen on both sides to go in earnestly in making it as good a Bill as possible, reserving their own opinions as much as they please as to the expediency of introducing the Bill at all; and with that view, I hope the hon. gentleman will not press his motion just now. Hereafter opportunity will be given hon.

gentlemen to move for reconsideration on these important points; and this is an important difficulty, because it affects the successful working of the Bill in the Province of Quebec. As regards the remarks of my hon. friend from Victoria, I think that, on the whole, we had better accept his suggestion. They are inconveniences, certainly, which my hon. friend who sits near me (Mr. McCarthy) pointed out, and business may be obstructed by the absence of one of the Commissioners. This is one of the few cases where there is such a condition of things; but they can be postponed until these parties can be got together; and, therefore, I shall move to have this struck out. I hope that the hon. gentleman will not press his motion in amendment.

Mr. JAMIESON. I feel strongly in favor of retaining the provision for the appointment of County Court Judges. I was a Chairman of a Board of License Commissioners for several years, and perhaps I can give some idea as to the labor which is involved in the discharge of these duties. I think that perhaps half-a-dozen hours in a year would be sufficient—at least that is the result of my experience.

Mr. HALL. As we understand that the matter is to be referred to again, of course I accept the suggestion of the right hon. gentleman and will not press my motion. I think there is a great deal of force in the suggestion made by him, that it would not be wise to trouble the Government with a selection from a number of different persons, and, therefore, to meet that view, I am willing to strike out the names of all the officials with the exception of the Prothonotary—who is an official of high standing—to remove that difficulty. Even as to that, however, I am willing to defer it for the present for further consideration. I think, however, we should not pass over this branch of the subject without consideration of the retention by the Government of the power of filling vacancies, if any occur.

Mr. AMYOT. It must be well understood that the Province of Quebec is unanimous in demanding that the Registrars should be substituted for the Judges. We want it; and I do not see why the Bill should be passed otherwise.

Mr. AUGER. I rise to say that we are not unanimous, because I think that the Judge is the proper person for this position. As to the Prothonotary the member for Montreal Centre said that by appointing the Prothonotary there would be no trouble about the Registrar, as there was only one, but in the District of Bedford we have two Prothonotaries.

Mr. BLAKE. The Minister's observations, in moving the second reading of the Bill, had the merit of brevity, but not in the definition of this clause, of accuracy, because he stated that the Commission appointed by the clause was to hold office during good behavior, whereas I find that it is for one year.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not say so.

Mr. BLAKE. You said during good behaviour.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not intend to say so. It was a lapsus. I read the clause as it stood.

Mr. VAIL. Can the Governor in Council make two districts of one county, as in our Province some counties are divided into separate municipalities?

Mr. BLAKE. It is not elastic enough for that.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, it is.

Mr. BLAKE. You cannot under the Bill take two counties and make one district out of them.

Mr. GIGAULT. In the Province of Quebec, the Judge chosen as one of the Commissioners, has to go through three or four counties in a district. The meetings of the Board take place in March, when he would have to visit three counties to attend the meetings. In some districts, there are five counties, and if the suggestion of the member for

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Victoria is accepted, I am sure that in our Province, the Judge will be absent from the meeting in some counties, and it will be almost impossible to obtain some decisions as to the granting of licenses. I think that this sub-section four is absolutely necessary, chiefly in the Province of Quebec, because the Judge has there to visit many counties.

Mr. CURRAN. I do not think that the last objection holds. If we retain Judges of the Superior Court, the sittings of the different Boards can be arranged and each particular Board can meet at a fixed time, so that one will not interfere with another. My idea in suggesting a Prothonotary was merely this: that it met to a very great extent the idea of the leader of the Opposition with regard to persons having proper relation to the other members of the Board and community at large. In most judicial districts of the Province of Quebec, in the country parts, the Prothonotary is at the same time Clerk of the Peace and Clerk of the Crown, and gives him the position that has been suggested as the proper one for that office. However, I take this opportunity to say that there is no such thing as unanimity among the members from the Province of Quebec, that the Judge of the Superior Court should be set aside. We would prefer, if possible, Prothonotaries, but no decided principle is at stake.

Mr. BLAKE. The measure seems to be declared inadvertently with reference to the second Commissioner, to be without due regard to the condition of things in Nova Scotia, where many counties are divided into more than one municipality, into two municipalities; and according to the municipal system there, there is a Warden for each municipality, and no county Warden. Take Queen's, there is one Warden; Shelburne has two districts, Barington and Shelburne each having a Warden; the county of Guysborough is the same, and also Digby and Hants, as I am told, so that when you say you will make the district coterminous with either the county or the electoral district, and you find two Wardens in the county, now which is king?

Mr. LANDRY. I think the nomination of Judges for this office in the Province of Quebec will be impossible. If you take our electoral or judicial districts, there are five or six counties, L'Islet, Montmagny, Bellechasse, part of Levis, Dorchester, and Beauce, and the Judge would be compelled to assist in the criminal court so that he could not be available. He would be a member of six Boards during that time.

Mr. RICHEY. With reference to the observations made by my hon. friend opposite, I suppose it could be arranged so that where there are two Wardens, one of the Wardens might be appointed.

Mr. BLAKE. Then you would have a Board consisting of different men for each district.

Mr. RICHEY. The Government in Council have the power reserved to them of defining the district.

Mr. BLAKE. Then it amounts to this: that there should be a division of the district smaller than the county, smaller than the electoral district, simply because you have two Wardens. In Ontario we have counties and electoral districts, with twelve or thirteen municipalities, and you are putting them all into one district. There must be some method of defining what Warden shall be a member unless the district is coterminous with the area over which there is a Warden.

Mr. RICHEY. The responsibility is thrown upon the Governor in Council of defining those districts, and they are to be as nearly as possible coterminous with the existing bounds of the county and electoral districts, and if this amendment is made so that either of the Wardens can be appointed, or the district is so divided as to include only one of the Wardens, the difficulty would be met.

Mr. BLAKE. It will be met by giving the Government the nomination of two members of the Board by one way, and in the other way it will be met by cutting up the license districts into a smaller form than is intended by the Bill.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As regards sub-section b, I propose to let that stand over.

Mr. AMYOT. We cannot allow that sub-section a to pass without putting in a protest. We do not want our Judges to be degraded by taking municipal offices. We are on our side unanimous on that point. The Government complains of the burden of nominating those officers. Let them take those who are nominated by the Local Governments, and they will be relieved of that duty. We have one Registrar in each county; why not take them? Why impose on the Judges the obligation of nominating these parties—of being pressed daily and nightly by the petitions of those who want licenses? We want our Judges to remain above the people. They occupy a high position, but that position has been lowered by making them Election Judges. That was a step too far, and we do not want to take another such step. I do not see why the Government, when we all ask that they should not be appointed, should press this system. The Registrars have in their hands the interests of ourselves and our families. They give ample securities for the faithful discharge of their duties, and why not appoint them? Is there some political interest?—some interest of any kind, which will force and press us to appoint them? Therefore, I ask the Government, in the name of my friends, and in my own name, not to press the nomination of the Judges to these positions.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think the hon. gentleman was listening to what was said or he would not have made these remarks. He says the gentlemen from Lower Canada are unanimous, but some of them have risen to say that they do not agree with the hon. gentleman.

Mr. AMYOT. But he is a Grit.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Then, in the second place, the hon. gentleman did not hear the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Hall) taking an exception somewhat like the hon. gentleman has done, and though the clause has been adopted there will at the same time be afforded every opportunity for reconsideration before it goes through the Committee.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Will the hon. gentleman explain why, in the counties of Chicoutimi, Saguenay, &c., the Government may appoint two Commissioners? I suppose it is on account of the size of the counties.

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes, that is the reason. It will be impossible for the Judge to perform the duties of the office in those large counties.

Mr. BLAKE. Although he resides in those districts?

Mr. McCARTHY. It would be impossible for him to do so in the earlier seasons of the year.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I would ask the Government if it is the intention, in those counties in Ontario which extend over a large area of country, and comprise many municipalities, to divide them into districts, or allow the whole county to remain under the control of one Board of Commissioners? The county of Grey is a very large county. There are three ridings in it, and the distance from one end of the county to the other is very great; and if people from different parts of the county should be obliged to go to the place where the Board meets they would be put to a great deal of inconvenience and expense. Under the present system, the Boards are in the different districts, and no difficulty is experienced. I should like to ask the Government if it is their intention to form districts uniform with the electoral districts as they now exist?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman will see that the Government can establish as license districts, either counties, electoral districts, or cities. If a county is too large, each electoral district may be made a license district.

Mr. LANDERKIN. If the electoral districts are made license districts, who will be the Commissioners in them? The same Board as the county?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Judge, as I take it, will belong to the Board, and so will the Warden. The Government may appoint one or more Commissioners, if experience should require them. I have no doubt that the County Judges or the Superior Court Judges can make arrangements so that their ordinary judicial business will fit in with their license business. There need be no difficulty about that, and the Judges, I have no doubt, will gladly accept the appointment. It will be one means of giving them a substantial addition to their income; which is something. We have just had a discussion to-day that shows that in the Province of Ontario, even the Superior Court Judges think so much of the allowances they receive for going on Circuit, that they are very anxious to retain them. So I take it that the Judges will be very glad to accept this appointment. I do not mean to say from sordid considerations alone, although that is an element in all such matters, but from patriotic motives. I judge that they must be travelling over the electoral districts in their counties, so that they will be able to make their ordinary business work in with the special business.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman's statement raises a new question altogether. I did not understand that these were to be paid officers. There is no provision in the Bill for their payment that I know of. I would ask if the hon. gentleman proposes to make the acceptance of these positions compulsory, because there is no penalty provided in the Bill? I would also ask, in case of a vacancy or of absence from any cause, whether he proposes to provide for a succession to a vacant office during the year?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not propose to suggest a penalty just now, because I think it is quite out of the question to suppose that a Judge will refuse to accept; and if a Judge dies, his successor will be appointed. If a Warden dies, his successor will be elected.

Mr. BLAKE. Suppose a Warden declines to act, as I think it is very likely many will do?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think so.

Mr. BLAKE. I think it is very likely, from what some of them have said.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I wish to ask if the hon. Minister has assurances that the Judges will accept. I have reason to believe that some of them will decline—not because they do not sympathize with the object of the Bill, but because they have already, to my personal knowledge, refused to act in a similar capacity.

On section 6,

Mr. BLAKE. Out of what fund are the salaries of the Inspectors to be paid?

Mr. McCARTHY. In the first place out of the fees, and possibly also from the penalties.

Mr. BURPEE (Sunbury). I would like to be informed whether Commissioners will be appointed in counties or districts where the Scott Act is in operation?

Mr. McCARTHY. Provision is made that where the Scott Act is in force there will still be Commissioners and Inspectors to see that the Scott Act is enforced.

Mr. BURPEE. In that case there will be no fund for the Inspectors.

Mr. McCARTHY. Unless from infractions of the law.

Mr. BRECKEN. I take it that there will be no duties for them to perform. While the Scott Act is in force this Act will be inoperative.

Mr. BLAKE. But if the Inspectors are to be appointed to see that the Scott Act is enforced they will not act unless they are paid.

Mr. BRECKEN. In the Province of Prince Edward Island the Scott Act is in force—nominally; and I can say that it has not had the desired effect that the advocates of temperance looked for. I think I am correct in saying that although the Act is in force from one end of the Island to the other, from all the information I can collect there is as much drinking as there was before the Act came into operation. I believe that in the town of Summerside alone, a small town of about 3,000 inhabitants, there are some thirteen places where intoxicating liquors are openly consumed; and I believe the effect of the Scott Act in Prince Edward Island has been to engender a feeling of disregard for the law, and to create deception and hypocrisy. It is true that the Act has been fairly brought into operation under the provisions of the law; but I believe that not one-half of the electors of the Island have recorded their votes, either against or in favor of the Act. The fact is there are many men, fathers of families and respectable men in society, who do not believe in the Scott Act, but at the same time have a feeling of reluctance about going to the public polls to vote in favor of the use of intoxicating liquors, when they remember the misery, the crime, and the trouble that flows from the too free use of that beverage. But I do not hesitate to say, from the experience we have had in Prince Edward Island, that the Scott Act has proved a failure. I may say that my partner in business is a stipendiary magistrate for the city of Charlottetown. I can say he has used every effort to carry out that Act strictly, by imposing fines as far as the provisions of the Act would permit. The advocates of teetotalism established a system of spies, but found it did not work, and I must say I do not believe the vice of intemperance has diminished in the Island, but that, on the contrary, the license law, or the system of local option, we had in operation before the Scott Act, worked much more efficiently in the cause of temperance. One of the effects of the Scott Act is, that respectable people who kept roadside inns, which were absolutely necessary for the accommodation of travellers, have left the business, and to-day you can travel distances of thirty or forty miles on the Island without finding a roadside inn at which you can water your horses or find shelter or receive a meal. Perhaps many who solicited me to return to Parliament may think I am going too far in expressing these views, but they are those I conscientiously hold and which are derived from an amount of information that few men in the Island have had an opportunity of obtaining. This Act will practically be unproductive in the Island. There will be no necessity to have Inspectors there, at any rate to supervise the carrying out of the machinery of the Act. From the experience we have had, I may say that whoever the Inspectors may be, whatever may be the mode of appointing them, whatever class of men they may be elected from, they will have a very difficult, if not impossible, duty in carrying out the Scott Act in its integrity.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I hope we will not be drawn into a discussion of the merits of the Scott Act, but keep within the merits of the Macdonald Act.

Mr. FISHER. That portion of the remarks of the hon. gentleman which bear on the working of the Scott Act, is certainly to my mind, the strongest reason that could be adduced that this Act should also include those districts or counties in which the Scott or Dunkin Act may be in force. It is very necessary that in those districts a Dominion law should be enforced by some Dominion officer, and I am glad to see that, at the end of this Bill, there are provisions by which it will come into force in those districts. When those provisions are before the Committee, I shall say a few words in reference to that matter; but certainly the remarks of the hon. gentleman who has just spoken are confirmatory of the necessity of the clause.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). The question of the salary of the Inspectors is an important one inasmuch as it affects the success of the law when in operation. The last part of the clause says the salary of the Inspector shall be fixed by the Board, subject to the approval of the Governor in Council. As the duties of an Inspector are considerable and he is invested with a great deal of responsibility, it is desirable provision should be made fixing his salary beyond doubt. If he is to depend on the fees he will be placed in a very invidious position. They are not much—$5 on first application and $10 subsequent, or $15 in all for the granting of licenses, besides a share in the fines which contribute to the license fund. There is another point. The power given to the Board of Examiners of regulating the salary of the Inspector, subsequent to the approval of the Governor in Council, may involve a serious charge on the public treasury. Can the Government give us any idea as to what the salary will be?

Mr. BLAKE. I understand there can be no charge on the public Treasury, or the clause will be out of order. I understood it was simply a salary to come out of the funds provided by the Act. These are of two kinds: the fees for the issuing of licenses and the fines. The Inspector will be placed in an invidious position if his salary will depend on the number of persons fined. The whole morale of the Act will thus be shaken.

Mr. McCRAVEY. Where the Scott Act is in force and no fees coming to the Inspector, he will receive no salary, and I trust the hon. Minister will see that provision is made to meet this point.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In the first place this Bill will come into force the 1st January. The Government have not made any approximate calculation of the amount of fees, but between now and the 1st January it will be easy to ascertain the number of tavern licenses, for instance, that are issued, as well as the number of shop licenses that are likely to be issued, so that they can ascertain approximately what sum will be at the disposal of the Commissioners to pay expenses. If it is found insufficient, the Government would not hesitate to come to Parliament next Session—and I may here say, that in accordance with the anxious wish of the House, it is the intention of the Government, if possible, to meet not later than the 15th of January each year—so that we may be able, shortly after this Act comes into force, if there is not sufficient money to work it effectually, to come to Parliament and ask them to supplement any deficiency in that regard either by a direct vote, or by increasing the license fee. With respect to the observation of the hon. member for Halton, I quite agree with him, and the Government will take care that the whole machinery should be appointed in those sections of the country where the Scott Act is in force as well as elsewhere.

On section 7,

Mr. McCARTHY. This defines the number and the kind of licenses. They are divided into hotel, saloon, shop, vessel, and wholesale licenses, and the sub-sections of this section point out what the privileges conferred by these licenses are to be. Hotel and saloon licenses are the same, the only difference being in the accommodation. The shop license authorizes the licensee to dispose of his liquors, not to be drunk on the premises, differing in that respect from saloon licenses. A vessel license permits the supply of liquors only at regular meal hours, and only to passengers. Then I may mention, that in order to carry out the provisions of the British North America Act, which permit the imposition of a duty or a tax upon licenses, I propose to add as a sub-section to this section seven, the following clause:—

All hotel, saloon and shop licenses, and such other of the licenses by this Act authorized to be issued, as to which a Provincial Legislature may impose a tax in order to the raising of a revenue, shall be subject to the payment of such duty as the Legislature of the Province, under the power conferred on it by the ninth enumerated class of subjects in section 92 of the British North America Act, may impose for the purpose or in order to raise a revenue for provincial, local, or municipal purposes.

In other words, the license shall authorize the sale of liquor in the manner pointed out, but in the event of the Local Legislature imposing a duty, the license shall be subject to the payment of that duty before it becomes operative.

Mr. TAYLOR. I would suggest that the words "saloon licenses" should be struck out of the Bill altogether. By the present Ontario Act saloon licenses are not granted in incorporated villages, but by this Act they may be granted.

Mr. DAWSON. I think the clause with regard to vessel licenses is hardly strict enough. In the waters of Algoma steamers at one time used to sell liquor, but, fortunately, of late years they have given it up almost entirely. Although the law does not now prohibit them from selling liquor on board boats, still the owners in many cases find it to their advantage to do so. Fortunately, the Beatty's, who have a line of steamers running from Sarnia, are strict temperance men themselves, and they have adopted the principle of prohibiting the sale of liquor altogether on their boats, and with such good results that others have extended the principle to their lines also. I think this clause gives a little too much latitude. It says:

A "Vessel License" shall authorize the master of the vessel, being a vessel by which passengers are conveyed from one place to another within or beyond the Dominion, to sell or dispose of liquor during the passage of the vessel between such places, to any passenger on board such vessel: Provided always, that it shall not permit the selling, or disposing of any liquor, except at the regular meals served on board such vessel, and then only to actual passengers: and provided further, that it shall not authorize the opening or keeping of a bar or place on board such vessel, where liquors are sold or drunk.

The concluding paragraph I quite approve of.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think we can well proceed much further than this clause. It is a considerable advance on the Crooks Act. Here liquor is only to be sold to parties as a portion of their regular meals. Instead of being too easy a clause, a relaxing clause, it is really a restrictive clause, and so restrictive that there is a very strong protest entered against it by steamboat owners and licensed victuallers, and there is a good deal of force in their argument. The steamers carry immigrants, who, as a rule, do not sit down to table regularly, but carry their biscuits and sandwiches with them on board; and if a lot of English immigrants want a glass of beer at their dinner—and to them it is not dinner without beer—you ought to allow them to have it. Although a man may not sit down to table, if he takes a sandwich out of his pocket and commences to eat it that is a regular meal. The objection to the clause is that it is much more stringent than the Crooks Act and ought to be relaxed.

Mr. DAVIES. A difficulty arises here which will partially repeal the Scott Act in Prince Edward Island, where the Scott Act is in force in three counties. We have a large number of steamers engaged in carrying farmers to and from the city on market days. They pass out of the county, and if licenses are granted on these steamboats it will have a very bad effect on the passengers. That is the very time, above all others, when it is desirable that liquors should not be obtainable, and if licenses can be granted to allow the sale, under such circumstances, any benefit arising from the existence of the Scott Act will be nullified. I do not know whether the Committee had Prince Edward Island in contemplation at the time they introduced this clause; but it certainly will act, to a certain extent, to repeal the Scott Act, and that in a very bad direction. When 100 or 200 passengers are returning home on a market day, and are on board one of the steamers from 6 o'clock to 12 o'clock at night, the effect of the vessel having a license will be very injurious.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If a vessel leaves a port where the Scott Act is in force, they cannot sell within that locality. The moment they get away they are not bound by the law of the locality, and unless there is a clause of this kind providing for taking out a license, they can sell free, without restraint of any kind.

Mr. DAVIES. I refer to vessels going from one part of the county to another where the Scott Act is in force, the vessel being during its progress outside of the bounds of the county.

Mr. FOSTER. Take the case of a vessel going from one county in Prince Edward Island to another, or from Prince Edward Island to Westmoreland county. The license must be granted either in Westmoreland or Prince Edward Island; but all of those places are under the Scott Act, and it is a special provision that no license of any kind shall be granted. So they can obtain no license.

Mr. BRECKEN. This clause will not place us in a worse position than we are now. The Scott Act is in operation in the Island. But any man may import liquor in any quantity from any place where the Scott Act is not in operation. There is nothing to prevent the captain of a vessel, so soon as he gets beyond the jurisdiction of the county, from giving passengers as much liquor as he pleases under the law as it now stands.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. gentleman is mistaken. This Act only prohibits a license being granted within a county where the Scott Act is in force.

Mr. AMYOT. I do not see why, when passengers are on board a steamboat on a river, that they should not be able to go to a bar as if they were on land. It is allowed at meals; but we do not say how many meals there are to be, or how many drinks at a meal. It is perfectly absurd in limiting licenses on board of a vessel. There is no use in being bigots. We know perfectly well what is going on, and if you prevent an ordinary and well-regulated bar on board of a vessel you will have a bar in every state room. That will happen, so we had better allow a properly licensed bar on board of a vessel.

Mr. BLAKE. Does the hon. gentleman want the passengers as well as the ship to be half-seas over?

Mr. AMYOT. I do not catch the meaning of the hon. gentleman; but I am ready to move an amendment asking that licenses on board of vessels have the same liberty as on land.

Mr. AUGER. I have been called a good Grit, but I approve of most of the Bill of the First Minister. I desire to call his attention to the following sub-section:—

An "hotel license" or "saloon license" shall authorize the licensee to sell and dispose of any liquors in quantities not exceeding one quart, which may be drunk in the hotel or saloon in which the same is sold.

This would place the licensee in a very awkward position. Suppose a man went there and obtained a quart of liquor, the proprietor could not prevent him from drinking it there. Having consumed the first quart he might buy another quart, and the proprietor could not refuse to allow him to drink it there. I would suggest that all the words after "quart" should be struck out, because, otherwise, the licensee would not be able to keep order in his house. I think when the liquor is drank the man will be drunk.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is a clause which appears in all Acts of this kind?

Mr. BURPEE (Sunbury). I desire to draw the attention of the hon. Minister to this case, and members from New Brunswick will understand it. The county of St. John is not under the Scott Act. A steamer leaving St. John would pass through three or four counties up the river which are under the Scott Act; she might travel 120 miles up the river, and be under the Scott Act all the way to her destination. The vessel having obtained a license in the county of St. John, will those on board have liberty to sell liquor after they pass outside the boundaries of the county of St. John and through the counties where the Scott Act is in operation.

Mr. McCARTHY. I think they will not have that liberty. They are within boundaries where the Scott Act is in force, and the Scott Act does not permit any license to be granted.

Mr. JAMIESON. I want to call attention to sub-sections a and b. It is not, I suppose, the intention to make this Act conform to the Crooks Act; but I desire to point out that the definition of hotel license in that Act is somewhat different from what it is here, and the definition of shop and hotel licenses in the Crooks Act is somewhat different from what it is here. This permits the sale of liquors in quantities not exceeding one quart, while in the Crooks Act, if I recollect aright, the quantity is less than one quart. Why the change should be made, I do not know.

Mr. McCARTHY. What is the difference?

Mr. JAMIESON. It may be said to be a distinction without a difference, but still there has been some object in placing it in the Crooks Act in that way; and I think it really ought to be amended. As far as shop licenses are concerned, in the Crooks Act holders are allowed to sell in quantities not less than three half-pints. I observe that here the quantity is reduced to one imperial pint. I confess I do not like the change; and I think we ought to adhere to the Ontario law. I do not know how the law is in other Provinces.

Mr. BLAKE. I would ask the hon. gentleman why the change was made?

Mr. McCARTHY. It was made at the suggestion of a member of the Committee, who thought that liquor ought to be sold in bottle this way, as it is put in bottles in that quantity, and that consequently it would not be improper to so authorize its sale. For instance, a pint of Bass' ale, a pint of claret, &c. It is not to be drunk on the premises, and there seems no particular reason why this should not be done.

Mr. BLAKE. Ale and claret are the principal liquors to be dealt with.

Mr. CASEY. This will prevent a man, holding a shop license, from selling an ordinary pint bottle.

Mr. McCARTHY. It is as near as we can get to it, at all events.

Mr. BLAKE. It seems to me, if the hon. gentleman framed a clause with reference to ale and claret, he was looking after the anise and cumin, and was not taking charge of the weightier matters of the law. It is the stronger liquors which are sold in different measures, and not with reference to imperial pints; and where a considerable diminution is thus made in the quality saleable under a shop license.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, there is not much difference; and the hon. gentleman knows that, whether wine, beer or spirits, they are now put up in Imperial quarts and pints. The old provision in the Crooks Act relating to three pints means the old wine measure. This is not quite so large a quantity, but is considerably more than one pint, though less than three half wine pints; but it is a convenient measure both for wine, beer and spirits.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I think that this facilitates or rather encourages the sale of small quantities in shops, which I think the Bill should not do. The Ontario law permits the sale of three half-pints; the Quebec, of one pint; Nova Scotia, one gallon; Prince Edward Island, one pint; and Manitoba, one quart; and in British Columbia, the quantity is defined by the Commissioners. I prefer the old law of the Province of Ontario certainly. It is nearer the average standard described by the various Provinces, and I think that it is a retrograde movement to allow so small a quantity as one pint to be sold in shops, encouraging the running to shops for a small bottle on every conceivable occasion, whereas a larger quantity would not be purchased so readily; and perhaps not so much would be drunk, if a larger quantity was the standard.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In other words, we should not allow a person to buy a one-pint bottle of spirits, in a shop, but compel him to go to a tavern, where he can get it.

Mr. ROSS. The hon. gentleman will observe that under his Bill, a man has two chances for getting a pint bottle, while, in the other case, he can only get it at the tavern. Here he can get it at the tavern and shop both. I do not want two temptations to be presented, but only one temptation.

Mr. McCARTHY. Has the hon. gentleman forgotten that three half-pints are afterwards defined in the Crooks Act to be five quarter-pints; so we are fighting over one-quarter of a pint.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. A small pint, that.

Mr. BLAKE. Does the hon. gentleman mean anything else than an Imperial quart; one quart in a and one Imperial pint in b make it rather ambiguous. If he means the Imperial measure in both, he should put it so in both, or omit it in both.

Mr. McCARTHY. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. SPROULE. I think that the law in this respect applies to our standard of measurement, which is Imperial; and it must be meant, as it is the only legal measure. The quantity of three half-pints was stipulated before, I think, because ordinary bottles generally contained three half-pints; but the Imperial measure is twenty ounces in pints, and three and a half wine pints make twenty-four ounces; so there is only a difference of four ounces, and as bottles are usually now made to conform to the Imperial measure, I think it would be better to leave it as it is.

Mr. CASEY. I do not think that the hon. gentleman at the head of the Committee saw the pint clearly. Really, none of the ordinary pint bottles contain an Imperial pint, and if the words "Imperial pint" are left in, it forces a man, who only wants to get a bottle, to buy two, or a quart, which holds about three half-pints. I do not think there would be any objection to altering it to a so-called pint bottle. There is no object in compelling a man to buy more liquor than he wants. If it is taken off the premises to be drunk, temperance men, at all events, ought to reduce the limit as far as possible, and not oblige a man to buy more than he really wishes. It will give rise to a great deal of difficulty if the words "imperial pint" are left in.

On sub-section c,

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I desire to support the motion regarding this proviso. I think that instead of doing any good even to temperance, it will possibly do harm, if it is left in. The result no doubt will be that instead of having drinking going on on steamboats confined to one place as now, at the bar, it will be spread all over the ship, into every state room, into the saloon, and into every place else. People who want to drink, and who now only buy a glass of liquor on steamers at meal hours, will, under this proviso, take a bottle with them, and drink in the state rooms, and in the public saloons, in the presence of ladies; and instead of benefiting the cause of temperance and propriety on board of steamers, it will do positive harm. Moreover, I think it will have another effect. If enforced I have very little doubt that on our lakes and on the St. Lawrence, for instance, where there is competition between American and Canadian steamers, if this rule is applied it would drive the great portion of summer travel, a very important element, and which now comes to a great extent through Canada, to the American steamers, where there is no such restriction. In every point of view I think the proviso should be admitted, and I shall support the amendment.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE. I trust the Committee will not consent to this amendment, for I think it would be a very great mistake to do so. I think experience should teach every hon. gentleman in this House to have a bar on steamboats is certainly a great nuisance, and an encouragement of intemperance to a very great extent. It would not perhaps matter so much if men when drinking would only behave themselves, but unfortunately they drink too much, and when they have drunk so much they scarcely know what they are doing. The result is that in the presence of ladies their conduct is certainly very unbecoming, and the language they use in the presence of ladies, on many occasions, is not fit to be heard. We have decided not to allow liquors to be sold in groceries, the reason being that ladies and children visit these establishments. I think the same rule should apply with regard to steamboats. On these boats there are usually as many ladies as gentlemen, and apart from that how many vessels have we heard of being wrecked or sunk and the passengers lost, and according to report on some occasions through intemperance by the captain himself, or other officers of the ship, becoming intoxicated after leaving port. Probably this would not occur if bars were not allowed on these boats. It seems to me it would not be a very great hardship for persons to abstain from drinking intoxicating liquors for a few hours. It is not very far from one port to another on these river boats, and if travellers were permitted to have intoxicating drinks at their meals that should be sufficient. This system has worked injuriously in the past and I have heard no argument to show that it will not work injuriously in the future.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria, B. C.) I am sorry to dissent from the views of my colleague (Mr. Shakespeare), but I have travelled pretty nearly all over the world in vessels, and I have never seen the master of a vessel drunk on board ship.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE. I have seen many of them.

Mr. BAKER. With all due deference to the hon. gentleman, I think I have had better opportunities of judging than he has. I suppose this clause is intended to apply to vessels trading on the lakes and rivers, because it stands to reason that once a vessel gets clear of the jurisdiction of Canada, gets outside one marine league, its officers can snap their fingers at the whole business and open a bar at their pleasure. I would like to see an amendment providing that the license should be issued to some person under the direction of the master. I do not like the idea of its being issued to him, so that a master mariner is permitted the privilege of peddling these drinks. I think this proviso should be eliminated from the clause, for there is really no good reason for putting it in, because if people want liquor they will get it. The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Cameron) stated that it would be offering a premium to smuggle liquor into all sorts of places on board ship, so that instead of lessening the ill effects of intoxicating liquors on board ship it would have the contrary effect.

Mr. FOSTER. I hope the Committee will not strike out that proviso unless better reasons are given than any which have been adduced so far. One reason given for striking it out, is, that if you do not allow people to go to the bar they will be drinking all over the ship. Another reason is that on our lines of competing travel the Americans have bars on board their vessels, and it is so nice for ladies and gentlemen on these pleasure trips to be where people are drinking, that they will patronize the boats which have the bars instead of the others. There are two things which have not been taken into account. A large majority of persons who drink do not start out with the set purpose of drinking so much as from this cause that they come in contact with constant temptation. One says to the other when they are just in sight of the place where they can get liquor: Let us have a drink; and one drink leads to another. You will find that probably five out of every ten persons who go on these excursions and who drink, would remain perfectly sober all day long but for the constant temptation, and they yield to the temptation by taking advantage of the facilities afforded them for getting liquor. There is another side to the question. I remember, not many months ago, that some very disgraceful and dangerous circumstances took place on a vessel plying between Toronto and Niagara, where large numbers being on the excursion, and the bar being open, persons got drunk, some very disgraceful scenes took place, and the passengers were in the utmost danger. I hope this clause will not be eliminated of what I think is its chief virtue. It may be said in amplification of this, that where you have not bars you take away the possibilities of those who are navigating the vessel, those who have the management of it, and the crew from being in a position to be tempted now and then, and so becoming unfit to manage the vessel. You will find that the great steamship companies which ply between the Old Country and the new, have every year, more and more of them, been cutting off the supply of grog to their crews; and the Cunard, one of the largest and best, has followed in the track of the others. I think there now remains but few of the large lines of ocean steamers that have not adopted that principle, and they adopt it on the ground of safety, rather than another ground.

Mr. CURRAN. I think the great object, with regard to this and every other clause, should be to make it practicable. Now, it is stated here that liquor shall not be sold except at the regular meals served on board such vessels. How is that law going to be enforced? Suppose they keep a table on the vessel, and people sit down to take a meal whenever they feel disposed, is there anything in this law that says that a man shall not eat more than twice or more than three times a day? He can sit down and take his meal as often as he likes.

Mr. BLAKE. I think there is something in the observation of the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Baker). I do not know what is customary, but it does seem to me that it would not be at all a bad thing if some person other than the master of a vessel should serve the liquor to the passengers at their meals.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think that would do. The master of the ship would escape the responsibility.

Amendment negatived.

On sub-section d,

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Why reduce the quantity to be sold by wholesale to two gallons? In the old Statute, the minimum is five gallons.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Two gallons is better.

Mr. BLAKE. Why is it better?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The reason is this: that if a person wants a supply for his own house, it is better that he should go to a wholesale house where there would be no chance of tippling, as it is alleged there is sometimes in a retail store, and where he would get better and cheaper liquor.

On section 8,

Mr. McCARTHY. This clause is copied from the Ontario Act, and it provides under the authority of what Board licenses shall issue.

Mr. ROSS. If a license is issued to a vessel from any port to which the vessel calls, it will be good for the whole voyage, although she may go into a district where the Scott Act is in force.

Mr. McCARTHY. No; the clause declaring that this Act shall not prevent the operation of the Scott Act, will prevent liquor from being sold in a Scott Act territory.

On section 9,

Mr. McCARTHY. This is to give power to the License Commissioners to define the conditions and qualifications requisite for obtaining a license, to limit the number of hotel, saloon, and shop licenses within the maximum prescribed by the Act, to declare the number of licenses that may be issued in any year, and to regulate the hotels, saloons, and shops to be licensed.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). This provides for the defining of the conditions and qualifications requisite to obtain hotel licenses. Why not saloon licenses as well?

Mr. McCARTHY. We will add the words "or saloon."

Mr. CASEY. Are the Commissioners to be allowed to prescribe additional conditions?

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes; not contrary to or inconsistent with the provisions of the Act.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). In limiting the number of licenses, are hotels and saloons to be equally considered?

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes; the Board will decide that so many hotels and so many saloons will be allowed, or no hotels or no saloons.

On section 10,

Mr. BLAKE. Clause 9 provides the Board of License Commissioners may at any time before the 1st of May in each year pass resolutions for regulating and determining the qualifications and so forth. Clause 10 says the Board shall meet some day in the month of March, for the purpose of taking into consideration all applications for licenses. Should not the regulations be determined and made known before considering the applications? The applicants ought to know what conditions and qualifications the Commissioners may impose before making their application, and the Inspector should know them also, so as to make a proper report. The inhabitants of any locality should also know how many licenses will be granted in their locality, so that they may have a voice in the matter.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman puts a strong case, and we will hold clauses 9 and 10 over to settle the point.

Mr. AUGER. I would like to call the attention of the First Minister to one feature in section ten. It says the Board shall meet "some day in the month of March." In Quebec the Wardens are elected on the second Wednesday of the month of March, and if the meeting of the Board in the Province of Quebec could be held after that date, there would be a new Warden. This license question interests the public generally, and very likely the election of the

Mr. Ross (Middlesex).

Warden might turn on that question. If the meeting of the Board for granting licenses took place after the second Wednesday in March, then there would be a new Warden.

Mr. McCARTHY. Practically that must be so, because the meeting cannot take place until after the 14th March.

On section 13,

Mr. McCARTHY. This section requires the applicant for hotel, saloon, or shop license, when he himself has not already had a license, or where he is applying for premises that have not been already licensed, to obtain a certificate signed by one-fourth—but the Committee made that to one-third; one-fourth is a misprint—of the electors in a particular polling sub-division in which the house is situated; that is, he must obtain one-third of the electors in order to be entitled to have his case considered before the Board.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I would suggest that we insert the word "resident" before the word "electors." Those who are resident in the district are those who are particularly interested in the issuing or non-issuing of licenses, and I see that the Bill is framed with a view to meet the wishes of those who will be affected by the issue of licenses. There are quite a number of non-resident electors, and this point should be considered.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I think that as the Bill has been printed and distributed with the words "one-fourth" in, it ought to stand that way, because those interested in the matter have had the Bill before them with that number in it. It seems to me that one-fourth is an adequate number to require the applicant for license to obtain the signatures of.

Mr. BLAKE. It is certainly an extraordinary reason why we should keep it at one-fourth because a mistake has been made in printing the words "one-fourth." I suppose it would be a very much stronger reason for not making any change in the Bill in any respect in which the intention of the Committee has been carried out, if the hon. gentleman says that because a mistake has been made in the printing of the Bill, therefore it should stand.

Mr. CAMERON. The hon. member has mistaken and perverted what I said. I said because it had been published in that way, not because the mistake had been made.

Mr. ORTON. I would ask if there is any provision for granting licenses after the 1st of March, as clause 12 states every petition shall be filed on or before the 1st of March. There are many reasons why some provision should be made for granting licenses after that date, particularly in new counties.

Mr. FOSTER. I notice by this clause that all who at present have licenses on making their application, on the coming into force of this Act, are exempted from getting the signatures of one-third of the electors. Now, if one-third of the electors are to exercise a controlling power over the issuing of the license, I think they should have control over the existing licenses as well as the new ones. The very same regulations should apply to all licenses.

Mr. BLAKE. I understand that the licensee is a licensee under this Act, and not a party who has held a license under some other law.

Mr. FOSTER. That is what it should be in my opinion but on reading over the clause I was not sure it was so.

Mr. McCARTHY. We intended that those already licensed and able to obtain the Inspector's certificate, should not be put to the trouble of securing that certificate; but that those who never had a license, and whose houses had never been licensed, should obtain the certificate.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think it would be out of the question to require old-established hotels to get certificates of good character. This Bill will come into force on 1st of January, and applications for licenses will not be considered until March. If this clause was not inserted, or one to the same effect, the Rossin or Queen's at Toronto, and the Windsor hotel at Montreal, would be shut up. From 1st January to 1st May, there would not be a single licensed house in the country open, and all those in the trade would be compelled to commence de novo.

Mr. BLAKE. That has nothing to do with this provision. The simple question is, whether in an application for a license under this Act, in the first instance, you will regard the license which has been issued under another law altogether as a license under the meaning of this clause; or whether you will require everyone to furnish this certificate of the willingness of the proportion of the electors named to the applicants obtaining licenses. It is perfectly clear that if the latter view is not the correct one, this Act will not be efficacious, and will not apply to ninety-nine out of one hundred of the licenses to be issued under this Act until after the lapse of a number of years when the old licensees will have retired from business and new parties will have come in. As I have said, ninety-nine out of one hundred of the licensees will escape the operation of this clause by the interpretation which, to my surprise, the hon. gentleman has placed on it.

Mr. McCARTHY. It must be remembered that all licenses have been granted under some form of Licensing Board. In Ontario, for example, they have been granted by a Licensing Board. It is true objection has been taken to the Board's action, but not by members on the hon. gentleman's side of the House, but the objection taken was not on the ground urged by him. There has been some decision given by a Licensing Board in regard to the qualification of the parties and with respect to the houses to be licensed. A change having been rendered necessary by the decision given in the case of Russell and the Queen, why should all the people carrying on business, having proved, under the Provincial laws to be proper persons, be compelled to undergo the trouble of securing certificates of character. It does not seem to be reasonable, and although it was discussed in Committee I thought the members were almost unanimous in their decision, and I am surprised that the hon. gentleman did not so understand it.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). If that was the intention of the Committee it seems to me that such words as "under any existing Provincial license law" should be inserted, because the clause, as it now stands, would apply to everyone.

Mr. BLAKE. That is my reading of the clause.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). This Act was passed on the theory that the existing system of licenses is illegal; consequently this word "licensee" should mean a licensee under this Act.

Mr. BLAKE. It is now made clear that the hon. member for King's (Mr. Foster) was right as to what the effect of the clause was.

Mr. McCARTHY. It was my fault; I intended it the other way.

Mr. FOSTER. We may misunderstand each other, but I think we know now what we mean. I cannot see why all should not be placed on the same footing. I spoke of this matter in the Committee and I assented to this as a fair proposition: when once a person had complied with the provisions of this Act and had been licensed for a year and no complaint had been made, then he should not be put every year to the inconvenience of obtaining the signatures of one-third of the electors. But I think it is reasonable and fair that at first all should come under this Act. The hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) has said that licenses have been granted under some conditions by all the Provinces. So they have; but the only Province with a system of inspection is the Province of Ontario, and Manitoba to a certain extent; but in some of the Provinces there has been no Inspector, and the system has been remarkably loose as far as inspection is concerned. An hotel like the Rossin House, or any respectable hotel, will have no difficulty in getting the one-third, and if the house has not been well kept but is a disreputable house, the fact that it has been open for a certain number of years should have no weight.

Mr. GIGAULT. There was some discussion on this provision in the Committee, but at last it was understood that it should not apply to licensees or licensed premises under the present laws. I think we should keep this section as it is; but it would be a good thing to insert one-third instead of one fourth of the electors for all new licenses. In many other countries, the signatures of a larger number of electors are required for new licenses than for licenses for houses that have been inspected and reported upon.

Mr. AUGER. I hope the hon. gentleman will leave the clause as it is. Licenses have been obtained in Quebec on the signature of twenty-five persons, not in the electoral district, but all over the township. It is nothing but right that applicants should be obliged to secure the consent of one-third of the electors.

Mr. McCRANEY. I should be sorry to see any alteration in this clause, for the benefit would be nullified if any change were to be made. I trust no change will be made on it whatever.

Mr. McCARTHY moved that the words "or licensee under any Provincial enactment" should be inserted.

Mr. BLAKE. I think it was published the other day.

Mr. FISHER. I think we ought not to make this amendment. The clause as it stands places all who obtain licenses under the Act on the same footing; but if we adopt the amendment moved by the member for North Simcoe it will give an immense advantage to those who now have licenses in the various Provinces, as they are not forced to go through this crucial test. I believe that in Ontario at present no signatures are required to the certificate of the applicant; in Quebec only twenty-five signatures are required, and those may be obtained in any part of the municipality in question. Under this Act the licensee is obliged to obtain the support of one-third of the resident electors in the polling sub-division where he wishes to carry on business; and it can easily be seen what a very great advantage this amendment would give holders of licenses. The hon. member for North Simcoe has said that these licenses have been granted by competent authorities. No doubt this is true; but at the same time we know that these authorities have in the different Provinces exacted very different pledges; and by the new Act the hon. gentleman seeks to place all the Provinces under the same rules, but all present licensees are not on the same footing. What he wishes to do with this clause will not accomplish what he himself says is the object of the Act. I think that for these grounds, and for others maintained by the hon. member for King's (Mr. Foster), it will be very unfortunate if the wording of the clause is changed in the direction proposed by the hon. gentleman.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Whatever may have been the original law under which these people got their licenses and the liquor regulations, the licenses were granted by competent authority, and those people who have invested their money in this trade, as soon as they come under the operations of this law, are under its regulations. They keep their houses under it; if they offend against it, they lose their licenses as a matter of course. They come under the jurisdiction of the Commissioners, and under the stern eye of the stern Inspector; and the moment that they come under this law, they then, when it is in force, have their licenses. They have a right to commence business, having behaved properly and not broken the law. They have invested their money in the business, and come under the regulation of the law, and they are liable to all the regulations established by the Commissioners, who must carry out the Act under the eye of the Inspector. Therefore, so far as those hotels are concerned, they are under the same restraints against improper conduct, whether a petition is presented in their favor or not; and, as they were not obliged to get any such certificate of character when they so invested their money, I think that it would be a cruel and a bad thing if, by a change of opinion in that particular locality, all their gold should be turned into stones, and that they should lose all their property. I really do think it would be very improper and very hard to do so; and that it would operate against individuals, without at all promoting the cause of temperance.

Mr. BLAKE. I would like to know what the reason for this Bill is, after the hon. gentleman's declaration, for he has first stated that the different regulations under which the licensees obtained their licenses were issued under competent authority?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not say so.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes; the hon. gentleman did say under competent authority.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I said, issued under Provincial authority.

Mr. BLAKE. No, competent authority.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman understood what I said, or he ought to have understood me. We are not here to catch at words, and show our wit; although that is not the particular accomplishment under which the hon. gentleman shines. We come here seriously to discuss this matter. The hon. gentleman understood me, unless he has resolved not to understand me. Every hon. gentleman who heard me, understood me to mean Provincial authority under which these people, believing it to be a competent authority at the time, paid their money and established their business.

Mr. AUGER. There is a good deal of truth in what the Premier has said, as to certain cases; but I know municipalities where they have five and sometimes more licensees. Suppose the Commissioners decide to diminish the number of licenses?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They have that right.

Mr. AUGER. Yes; and suppose they decide to issue only three licenses, how are they to decide what three shall be chosen from the five? But if these persons are obliged to get the support of one-third of the electors in the polling sub-division, then the people can choose three. This difficulty can be met by leaving the clause as it is.

Mr. JAMIESON. As a temperance man I would be quite satisfied with this provision in its present shape. One hon. gentleman has stated that it would give parties who at present held licenses, an advantage over those who wish to procure them, if it is changed as proposed. Perhaps there is something in that; however, I have no doubt, that inasmuch as this Bill will become law in the interest of peace and order, and to some extent for the promotion of temperance, I think that the provision as here is in the right direction; and I really believe that the temperance people of the country will be satisfied with it in its present shape.

Mr. FISHER. The right hon. gentleman, I think, misunderstood the drift of my remarks when he seemed to consider that I thought that the present holders of licenses were less orderly than, and of an inferior character to, those who may obtain licenses under this Act. This was not the intention of my remarks. What I wished to infer was, that as one of the most important parts of the Bill consists in the restriction put on obtaining licenses, those who now have licenses will escape those restrictions, and in that way have an advantage over those who have not now licenses. The hon. gentleman seems to be afraid of interfering with the vested rights of certain individuals; but as my hon. friend from Shefford stated, he is bound to interfere with vested rights in municipalities where more licenses are held than are allowed under this law. How will he be able to decide who shall retain and who shall be debarred from licenses? But if they have to get the support of their electors the matter will be more easily decided. As the regulations of the Commissioners will be declared beforehand, the electors in question will know how many licenses are to be issued, and will only sign the applications of the most deserving. For these reasons, I think that it would certainly be only fair and right to the whole community to leave the law as it now is.

Mr. McCARTHY. I think that the hon. gentleman seems to forget that after the applications are in the Board has to select those to whom they will grant licenses. All that this clause does is to say that a man who holds a license is prima facie supposed to be a fit and proper person to get a license for the next year. He has not a vested right, but comes armed with that position, so to speak; and therefore he is endowed with that title which a man applying for the first time has not. The Board after all has to say to whom they will grant licenses; and they are not bound to grant a license to one person more than to another. It will be granted if they think that the man's house has been properly kept, and if the Inspector so reports they will refuse the new applicant. Here are people, 90 per cent. of those who will apply, put to the trouble of asking their neighbors to sign a certificate in their favor, although they have carried on their business assumedly in a respectable manner, and that does not seem to me to be reasonable.

Mr. McNEILL. It does seem rather curious that it should be an objection to this clause that those persons who have invested money and property in the buildings they have erected, should have an advantage over those who have not invested their money. It seems to me that to a certain extent they have actually a vested right in this property, because while their licenses are renewable, there is a certain tacit understanding that so long as they keep their places in a proper manner, their licenses shall be renewed.

On sub-section 3, section 17,

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I think this sub-section should be amended by inserting the words after the word "school," "in existence before the license was granted to the house for which the license was applied for." I think in the event of an institution of that kind being built after the license was granted, the objection should not apply.

Mr. McCARTHY. It does not necessarily prevail. It is only a ground of petition.

Mr. CAMERON. It should not be a ground of petition.

Mr. BLAKE. To amend it, as the hon. gentleman suggests, would be to recognize that the license should go to the house. It would be practically saying that no neighborhood should be improved by buildings of this description being erected upon them, without their being informed that there was a tavern there which they could not get rid of for all time to come.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). It would practically be admitting that taverns would be of more importance than a place of worship, a hospital or a school.

On section 19;

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I think ten days should be substituted for four in this clause, as four days is not sufficient in the case of a large county, like my own, to go from one end to the other.

Mr. AUGER. The hon. gentleman must remember that four days' notice is sufficient to the licensee to know that a petition is to be presented against his license, but if you give more time to him you just take so much time from those opposed to him, because they have only fourteen days, and they are the ones who have to make the proof.

Mr. McCARTHY. Besides, no injustice can be done, because the Board may adjourn.

On section 25,

Mr. McCARTHY. This clause provides the accommodation required in a hotel for the public. The Committee thought that in cities and towns there should be six bedrooms, and in country places three. The present law in Ontario provides for four bedrooms in cities, towns and country places. I do not know whether the Committee approve of the provision as to six bedrooms. Some gentlemen think the minimum should be four.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. FISHER. In a good many cases the hotels have regular boarders, who take up the whole accommodation, and leave no room for casual travellers. I certainly think it would be not advisable to reduce the number.

On section 26,

Mr. McCARTHY. Sub-section 2 of this clause is to meet the existing practice at sea-board towns. It was represented by the members of the Committee from the Maritime Provinces that both at St. John and at Halifax there were houses where there were no appliances for eating. Of course, we have none such in our part of the country, and we promised we should leave it to the Board to say when this accommodation would be dispensed with.

Mr. FOSTER. As far as St. John is concerned, unless some other person objects, I should be happy to dispense with this. Where you allow saloons to be kept without those accommodations they degenerate into shebeen shops. Although they may be found in some of the Maritime cities, it cannot be argued they are of any great benefit to the persons who frequent them. One of the great dangers to sailors is these tipping shops. I should rather by far they would be struck out.

Mr. BLAKE. I hope the view of the hon. member will be accepted. I view with great alarm this clause. I believe the saloon is one of the worst features of the whole business even if it is a well-appointed eating-house, and I do not think we should give discretion in this matter to the Board, with the varying views of its members and the varying pressure that will be brought to bear on them.

Mr. RICHEY. As regards Halifax, I have already presented to the Committee the views which animate me in adhering to this clause. We have heard a good deal about vested interests, and anxious as we are to promote the cause of temperance, it will not do to play fast and loose in a matter of this kind. In Halifax some years ago, ardent temperance men told us we should separate the sale of liquor from the sale of all other things, and we did so, and granted what are called tavern licenses, under which nothing but liquors could be sold. It was supposed in this way that the cause of temperance was promoted. Our experience in Halifax is that those places are not so injurious to the cause of temperance as saloons, or shops where persons go ostensibly for other things, but really to obtain liquor. Judging by my experience, I feel that I would not be justified in surrendering this clause. It would work great injury to persons who had abandoned all other business, and gone wholly into the business of selling liquor. As it is, there will be a very large reduction in the number of licenses now granted in the city of Halifax. On this point I feel it my duty to say that, in relation to liquor legislation, Nova Scotia has been in advance of every other Province, inasmuch as we have required, before any person could obtain a license for the sale of liquor, he should present a petition signed by no less than two-thirds of the electors.

Mr. BLAKE. While great respect is to be paid to the views of the citizens of Halifax, I do not see why we should bow down and worship the idol of uniformity to that extent that we should accept this, which we do not want in the West. It may work well in Halifax, but it will not work with us.

Mr. RICHEY. This Bill is a matter of compromise, and this section is supported by hon. members from various portions of the Dominion. The hon. member from New Brunswick, who was on the Committee, and the representatives of British Columbia, are in favor of it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We will allow this clause to stand over.

On section 27,

Mr. AUGER. In some of the municipalities the hotels have boarders who occupy all the bedrooms, so that there are none for transient travellers. They should be forced to give accommodation to travellers.

Mr. BLAKE. This difficulty exists, and some provision should be made prescribing so many bedrooms for transient travellers.

Mr. FISHER. County municipalities ought to be placed on the same footing as cities and towns. I do not see that any arguments applying to these may not also apply to county municipalities.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I would like to see it read "the Council of any municipality—may by by-law—to be passed before the 1st day of March, &c." I do not see why the Councils of cities and towns should be specially privileged in this respect.

Mr. JAMIESON. A municipality may mean a county.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not see that any reason has been given for this discrimination.

Mr. McCARTHY. It has been adopted from the Ontario Act, and I suppose it has been found to work well. Speaking generally, I fancy the accommodation that is required by the Bill is quite sufficient, and more than sufficient. However, we will make it read: "the Council of any city, town, incorporated village, township or parish."

Progress reported; Committee to sit again.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and (at 11:55 o'clock p.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Monday, 21st May, 1883.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAYS.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 137) for authorizing subsidies for the construction of the lines of railway therein mentioned.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. BLAKE. I would like the hon. gentleman to make a brief statement with reference to the great American and European Short Line Railway Company's system. I observe, in looking at the papers which have been brought down, that the company's statement is, that considerably the larger portion is already built—some 417 miles. I also observe, on looking at the map which the company have appended to their proposal, that the eighty miles owned by the Halifax Extension Company, from New Glasgow to the Strait of Canso, is among the parts which they expect to acquire. I would like the hon. gentleman to state in what position that line now stands, and whether he is aware with whom the negotiations have taken place, and in what state the negotiations are which the company referred to as having made such progress as to justify them with going on with the links.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The Committee are aware that, under the legislation which has already taken place, the Government of Canada agreed to hand over the branch from Truro to Pictou for the purpose of securing the construction of the line eastward. The Government of Nova Scotia, with an additional subsidy, secured the construction of the line of railway to the Strait of Canso. Under the existing legislation, the whole of that property is, therefore, the property of the Eastern Extension Company; but the Government of Nova Scotia made a contract with that company, which bound the company—in case the Government, by a certain time, paid them their actual expenditure, irrespective of the subsidy which had been given to them—to hand over to the Government of Nova Scotia the whole property. The arbitration provided for in that contract between the company and the Government of Nova Scotia is now taking place. It is expected that in a few days that road from Truro to the Strait of Canso will be in the possession of the Government of Nova Scotia, and the Government of Nova Scotia are anxious to utilize that for the purpose of securing the extension of the railway system to Sydney or Louisburg, in Cape Breton. I understand that negotiations are pending between the company and the Government of Nova Scotia for the acquisition of that line, upon terms that would secure, in connection with the subsidy provided for in this Bill, the prompt execution and completion of the line to Sydney or Louisburg. That is the position. The charter of the Great American and European Short Line Railway provides for running powers over that portion from New Glasgow to the Strait of Canso, independent of its acquisition in another way.

Mr. BLAKE. The Pictou and Truro branch cost about $2,300,000 irrespective of rolling stock, and the Halifax Extension subsidy from the Nova Scotia Government amounts to $600,000; so that the Eastern Extension Company have received generally in money and cost $2,900,000. Do these negotiations on the Great American and European and Short Line Railway embrace the surrender of the Pictou branch as well as the eighty miles, or simply the eighty miles?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think it covers the whole.

Mr. BLAKE. The idea is, that thus, by the machinery through the acquisition by the Nova Scotia of the Pictou and Truro branch and the eighty miles, we will be able to accomplish that for which we formerly agreed to give up the Truro branch, a line through the Island. With reference to the last subsidy, that for a railway from Gravenhurst to Callander, there is not in the papers brought down a single scrap with reference to the application, or claims, or position of the Northern and North-Western Company, except a letter from the hon. member for North Simcoe, written some time last year, which indicates that a memorandum was sent down by the hands of Mr. Brown. That is not down, nor any other paper in that connection, although the engineer's report states that the other company made application for a subsidy of $12,000 per mile.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That must be an oversight. I ordered all the principal papers to be copied and sent down.

Mr. BLAKE. I can only repeat that unless practical, real independence and equality of right over the link be given to the two systems of railways, the interests of Toronto and the West will not be served as effectually as they ought, even with the subsidy of $6,000 per mile, and still less with a subsidy of $12,000 a mile, which embraces so large a proportion of the whole cost. What the hon. gentleman is doing under his scheme is to give $12,000 a mile for the construction of the link. If he puts that in the practical control either of the Midland or Northern and North-Western system, he will not secure the practical competition of these two roads.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What would you suggest?

Mr. BLAKE. I have already given my suggestion. By combining with the Local Government, which has already offered a subsidy, the road might be built by the Government itself and made a neutral link.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The only ground on which we would be warranted applying to Parliament for the additional subsidy would be the necessity for providing a thoroughly independent line of communication. I see the force of the observation the hon. gentleman has made, and I can only say they will receive the fullest consideration. The Government at this moment are not committed to any person—we are entirely free, and our object is to carry out exactly what the hon. gentleman himself aims at, and to do it in the best possible manner.

Mr. BLAKE. The Local Government, when it implemented, to a certain extent, this provision for railway aid some years ago, made a provision which it seems to me would be a useful one to be inserted in this Bill, and that was, that inasmuch as these local aids were largely based upon the same theory as the hon. gentleman's is, namely, to supply steel rails for roads, but steel rails supplied in this way were not to be taken off except for the purpose of replacing them, as when improvements were being made. We know there have been dismantled roads, and inasmuch as we put the rails on we ought to take care they are left there, or replaced as soon as they are taken off. On the third reading of this Bill I will move an amendment in this sense.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I cannot accept that suggestion at the present moment. However, if the hon. gentleman will let me have this memorandum it can be dealt with in another place if found practicable. I am afraid it will militate against the success of the aid that is being offered.

Mr. VAIL. I think one alteration should be made in the provision saying that the road should be commenced within a certain time and completed within a certain time. Four years is a long time, and three years may elapse before any of these works are commenced. We know that railway contractors are very likely to put work of that kind off, and they may put it off for three years so that they may complete the whole thing in four years, and that may prevent another company taking hold of the work.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I see no objection to accepting that suggestion. Of course, the short lines could be completed, but the important lines could not be completed in four years unless they were commenced in two, and for that reason I did not fix the date of commencing. I have no objection to an amendment like this: "shall be commenced within two years from the 1st of July next, and completed within a reasonable time, not to exceed four years from and after the passing of this Act."

Bill reported.

On motion for third reading,

Mr. BLAKE moved in amendment :

That the Bill be recommitted to a Committee of the Whole, to amend the same by providing that in order to secure as far as may be the continued operation of the railways towards which it is proposed to grant subsidies for the purpose of supplying them with steel rails, it shall not be lawful to remove the rails from any of such railways, save for the purpose of replacing them with the other rails as occasion may require.

Amendment negatived, lost on a division ; Bill read the third time and passed.

THE ST. JOHN BRIDGE AND RAILWAY EXTENSION COMPANY.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY, in moving that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider a certain proposed resolution (May 15th) respecting a loan to the St. John Bridge and Railway Extension Company, said : This proposition is one which I am satisfied, judging from the opinions expressed by hon. members in discussing the railway resolutions, will meet with the general approval of both sides of this House. It will be remembered that in the discussion of those resolutions there was a general opinion expressed in favor of completing as soon as possible the railway system from one end of the Dominion to the other, and that we should shorten the distance and cheapen the cost of transit. That seemed to be the unanimous feeling on the part of the House. Now, the difficulties that exist at the present moment are very great indeed, arising from the absence of the competition of the link which this proposition is about to accomplish. It is well known that one of the objects of the promoters of the Intercolonial Railway or European and North American Railway was to induce travellers coming from Europe to America to make Halifax the landing point; and it will be remembered that the project which is spoken of so favorably in the House, the Great American and European Short Line Railway, is a bid for this particular line of business, the conveyance of passengers and mails between Europe and America by the shortest route possible, and in the shortest time possible. That being the case the proposition of this company is that, by the completion of their line, between forty and fifty miles in distance would be saved. The company will be in competition with any line that may be established at Halifax with the same object; but I am led to believe that one of the obstacles to the Great American and European Short Line Railway in going round by Woodstock and Houlton, in the State of Maine, and to the sea-board is the want of a bridge at St. John. They have already a bridge at Woodstock, and, therefore, no delays occur there from such a want. Let us suppose that the company have constructed their railway line and have established their line of steamers, one of the difficulties will be crossing at St. John. To cross by ferry will probably create a delay of an hour and a-half, and that will be practically equivalent to reducing the distance between extreme points of the route by from sixty to seventy-five miles. No portion of the Dominion is more interested in having a direct line from Nova Scotia or New Brunswick to the United States or Montreal than the eastern and northern part of New Brunswick. The fisheries of the northern part of that Province have been very largely developed by the construction of the European Railway, and their value has been largely increased by the company's ability to transmit fish in ice to the American markets. But a difficulty exists there, as will be seen by reference to reports made on the subject, and it is referred to in Mr. Schreiber's report. Suppose a train with a quantity of fresh fish in ice arrives on the western side of the harbor of St. John, and it proves to be too late to be taken across by ferry and make connection with the western road, a day is lost which is of the utmost importance to parties interested in that line of business. Under these circumstances all the eastern and northern parts, and all parts of Nova Scotia, which desire to send fresh fish to the United States as well as to Montreal by a direct line of railway, are materially interested in the completion of the proposed bridge at St. John, because every one is aware of the difficulty, the increased expenditure, and the delay that occurs for transshipment. The importance of building this bridge was brought before the Government of Canada as far back at 1871-72 by the Western Extension Company. That company subsequently got into difficulties, and of late years the trustees of the road have been working the lines, but two years ago a gentleman obtained a charter from the New Brunswick Legislature for the construction of a line and bridge. That company came to the Government and applied for assistance. They have obtained financial assistance from roads running west from St. John, the European and North American, and the Central Maine, equal to $5,000 a year, in addition to payments for freight transmitted. The company approach the Government, having obtained this assistance from roads going west, which is equivalent to $100,000 towards the completion of the work, and asks for a Government grant in aid. The matter was submitted to the hon. Minister of Railways. He asked for a report by the Chief Engineer, and that report was obtained, in which the importance of the completion of the link was pointed out. The Government decided that they would not give the company a money subsidy, but they would give them an equivalent, which, at the same time, would cost the Dominion nothing; that they would grant them 80 per cent. of the cost of the work at 4 per cent. interest, thereby giving the company the benefit of 2 per cent., as they would probably have to pay 6 per cent. interest in the open market. The company have accepted that proposal, and the Government now come to Parliament and ask permission to grant the loan on a lien of the line, and if the bridge is not completed within the time specified, the Government will have the right to take it out of the company's hands and construct it. It has been a question as to whether it would not be proper for the Government themselves to build the bridge, and there is a good deal to be said in favor of that suggestion in view of the importance of the work. But the company have the charter, and the Government could not interfere without constructing it at some other point than the Falls. It can be constructed there so far above the water as not to interfere with navigation. There is a suspension bridge there already, and it is proposed to build this additional bridge a little higher, and the result will be, as I have said, not to interfere with navigation. There is an objection to this proposal on the part of a portion of the inhabitants of St. John, especially those residing on the western side of the harbor. These some years ago took $40,000 worth of stock in the Carleton branch road, which leads from the present terminus of the European and North American into Carleton. Having that amount invested in that branch, they urge that connection should be made by their branch crossing at Navy Island, in the harbor of St. John. When the charter was obtained by the company two years ago, a Committee of the Local Legislature was appointed to enquire into the desirability of granting the charter. The representatives of the western side of the harbor presented all their arguments in favor of their plan, but a large majority of the Committee reported in favor of a suspension bridge as against a bridge at Navy Island. In 1874, a Bill was introduced by the hon. member for York, N.B. (Mr. Pickard), to construct a bridge at Navy Island. At that time a protest was entered—it is on the Table now—on the part of the Corporation of St. John, against it; and the river counties, as a rule, protest against it, because it interferes with the navigation of the River St. John. This is a port, I may say, of the River St. John, where a very large number of vessels ply, conveying to market deals and firewood, and produce of various kinds; and they are very tenacious with reference to interference with the navigation. Therefore, there has been in the past, to the proposition to build a bridge to Long Island, great objection on the part of the people residing in the river counties, and as a result of them it has been occasionally abandoned. I know that as far as I am concerned I would be delighted, because it would gratify a portion of my constituents very much indeed, and a portion to whom I am greatly indebted, if the scheme was not completed; and if, perhaps, in this case if I were only a member of Parliament, individually affected by the proposition, and were I to look solely to my own position towards my constituents, I would hesitate to support it. But public men sometimes have in the public interest to take up propositions and submit them to Parliament in the public interest, though against the views of a portion of their constituency—and that is my position to-day. It is because I feel as a member of the Government, and the Government feel, that our property, the Intercolonial Railway, will be largely benefited by this project—because it gives inter-communication between the different Provinces which is very important, and because our connection with a portion of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and with not only the United States, but all parts of Canada, will be facilitated by its completion—that the Government submit this measure. It will cost us nothing, but will give to this enterprise the assistance which they require and which was asked for in another form; and we feel it is in the interest of the Government and of the country that it should be acquiesced in. Under these circumstances the Government have felt themselves justified in asking that this advance be made of 80 per cent.—the cost of the road not to exceed $500,000—to a company incorporated with a capital stock of $200,000. It had the right, until the last Session of the New Brunswick Legislature, to issue a larger amount of bonds than it has at present. This power has been reduced to $125,000; they have aid given by railways in the West, and they expect they will be enabled to complete the work within the space of time specified in the resolution before the House.

Mr. BLAKE. With reference to the question which has arisen as to the inhabitants and the city of St. John, I ought not to presume to offer an opinion, as it happens that there are various considerations which, of course, I am not master of; but it certainly seems unfortunate that after having incurred an expenditure, which a portion of the city has, in order to procure access by another route, that expenditure should be practically thrown away; or so it seems to me to a very large extent if this plan be adopted.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What other route?

Mr. BLAKE. The route suggested by the petition of the County Council by Navy Island—that is the route by which they suggest to cross. At the same time, we will all concur in that, and, of course, we equally concur that what is paramount, are great engineering considerations, and amongst them considerations with reference to railways in the first place; and navigation in the second. Upon these I do not feel competent to offer an opinion, but merely to say, that the responsibility of the measure, in so far as it involves these results to that portion of the hon. gentleman's constituency to which he has referred, must, of course, devolve upon him and the Government in coming to that conclusion, for reasons which I dare say are just, but on which I am unable to express an opinion. I think it, however, tolerably clear from my point of view that the mode, assuming the bridge at the Falls to be the proper route, which the Government is about to adopt is not the most advantageous.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY.

I have already indicated, in the course of the discussion with reference to the Gravenhurst and Callander line, my view on this subject; but I will add a word now with a brevity due to this period of the Session. The hon. gentleman says that there is considerable difficulty with regard to the Government executing this work. There was a difficulty in the way. This company had a charter, and they could not interfere, but the company has a charter which they cannot carry out without the assistance of the Government. Unless the Government comes to the aid of the company, the charter is of no use; the bridge would not be built. The charter has existed for a good while, but by virtue of the Government's grant alone is vitality to be breathed into the chartered rights of this company. If the company cannot build the bridge without your assistance, they are unable to go on, and if they cannot build it without your assistance and are able to go on they do not want your assistance. If they cannot build the bridge, having a charter which is not living without your aid, would that be a reason why anything, opposed to the public interest, should be done with reference to this particular work? What does the hon. gentleman propose? He proposes to aid this local company which is the creation of the Local Legislature—a bridge company, which, as I understand it, is not now to become a Dominion work; at any rate it is not proposed to make it so by this measure.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes; we will bring in a Bill to make it a Dominion work.

Mr. BLAKE. Which Bill?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. We will introduce a Bill.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not know anything of that. There is no such resolution before us at this time, and as far as I understand it—I have not seen the Acts of incorporation—this company is under the control of the Local Legislature, and it would have no authority to borrow money to the amount proposed. The Legislature has reduced the borrowing power to $125,000, and the hon. gentleman proposes that the company shall be lent $442,000, if the estimate of the Government Engineer as to the total cost of the work is correct—$552,000, on which is lent $442,000, and there is no provision as to the security for this amount under their charter as it now exists. Then what does the hon. gentleman do next. Irrespective of whether it is a local or a Dominion work, he proposes to advance four-fifths of the whole cost, while the company shall obtain the profit. If the company spend $552,000, which the Government Engineer estimates it will spend, they will have spent of their own money about $110,000. It is true you can buy it of them; but to buy it, you must pay 10 per cent. of the money expended, $55,200, or $55,000; so that as a reward for the expending of their own money, $110,000, you will pay them $55,000, or 50 per cent. advance on their own expenditure. According to the hon. gentleman's proposal, this is the sum which the Government is to pay, if at some future time they take possession of this work. Now, 10 per cent. is an ordinary provision for an advance on the payment of a work; but this is when the company has paid the money or raised the money; when its own money is put into the work, or money borrowed, and so made its own. But here a loan is made; four-fifths of the money the country itself provides, and in order that the country may get the work ultimately, it must pay 10 per cent. advance on its own money, and the fraction which the company provides. In a word, as I said before, you vote 50 per cent. on what the company provides, instead of 10 per cent. Well, now, this work is a work which, probably, from what the hon. gentleman said with reference to connection with a railway spoken of, will fall either directly or indirectly under the control of one or more railway companies, of which there are no less than four or five I think which are supposed to be feeders to the railway company on the one side—the Maine, Central, the Eastern, the St. John Line, the Grand Southern, &c., and the Intercolonial on the other side. Now, it seems to me, that the provisions for the equality of tolls and for keeping down the rate of toll on the toll bridge, which is to be a link in connection with important railways and important travel on the one side and the other, are of the last importance, and this provision should not merely be for equal tolls and rates, but for moderate tolls and rates, and it should be a provision not merely for moderate tolls and rates, but for equal advantages for all. I happen to know a little as to the results of one company which owned a bridge over which other companies have to pass; and I am aware that the control, the practical control of this bridge means a very great advantage to the company, which possesses such practical control over all other companies. There must be some priority—some precedence. Somebody has to give way, and that person, somehow or other, does happen to be the person who has not control of the bridge, and if you make it possible that one of the competing companies shall have control, that company will have preference or advantage.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is not the case here—this is a bridge company.

Mr. BLAKE. I am quite aware that this is a bridge company, but I know it is quite competent for a railway company to purchase the stock of a bridge company from its directors. The stock is moderate and it is easy to acquire it, and I know that one of these companies has arranged to pay a special preferential amount of $5,000 a year over its tolls in order to assist the enterprise. I foresee the possibility and the probability of some one railway company obtaining control over this work, and I foresee that there will be preference to one railway company over the other even if you provide for equal arrangements as to traffic. These are matters with which we have occasionally grappled before; but if private enterprise is going to construct the work we take the precaution of seeing that there is fair play, and the rest is as it happens. Here the country is going to four-fifths of the whole expense, and, what seems proper under these circumstances is, that if this work is of the character and importance which it is said to be, you should secure, first of all, low moderate rates, and, secondly, through equality of rates and preferences to all companies, by undertaking the work yourselves instead of handing it over to a company. We are practically building this work, we are paying four-fifths of the cost, and it seems to me it would be very much better that we should build the work altogether, control it, own it, manage it in the public interest so that moderation of tolls, by that means, and perfect equality of advantages might be secured to the various companies that may seek access to the bridge or seek to carry their traffic across it.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. There is a good deal to be said, of course, in favor of the Government taking control of this work. I may say, however, that a Bill which I purpose introducing makes this a Dominion work, and so removes the difficulty of which the hon. gentleman has complained. It is, of course, of the utmost importance—and the Government has appreciated that importance—that this company should be under Dominion control, and, therefore, it is that by the Bill we have placed it in that position, so that it is in the power of the Government to regulate the maximum rate of the freight. I may mention here that the fact of a large portion of the expenditure to be made upon this railway has to be paid in land damages had its weight upon the Government. There is no doubt whatever that the difference between the Government constructing such a road and a private company constructing it, is very largely against the Government on this question of land damages; and it was felt that even if the Government should find it necessary, in the interests of the public and our own railways, to take possession, the probability is that it would take the company $50,000 less to build that road than the Government, a large portion of the difference being in the shape of land damages. But the Government have taken full precaution in that respect, as the hon. gentleman will see. The hon. gentleman says they will have 10 per cent. profit. Well, during the first four or five years after the opening of a road of that kind, before we have opened our connections with the North-West, before these links are completed between Canada and the United States—before the expiration of five years, the company cannot expect the rate to be as profitable. It is, therefore, just possible that during the first five years they may not be able to pay expenses, and that, therefore, they are open to the chances of loss during that time. If there is a loss of 2 per cent. during the first five years, there is no profit, and, therefore, it was that we provided that it should be open for us to purchase the property, and control it entirely with reference to the through business.

Resolution considered in Committee and reported.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY introduced Bill (No. 138) to provide for advances to be made by the Government of Canada to the St. John Bridge and Railway Extension Company.

Bill read the first time.

NATURALIZATION OF ALIENS IN MANITOBA.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, in introducing Bill (No. 140) to legalize proceedings taken for the naturalization of certain aliens in the Province of Manitoba (from the Senate), said: This Bill is as follows:—

Whereas in a number of cases, in the Province of Manitoba, proceedings for the naturalization of aliens have been taken under the Naturalization Act, Canada, 1881, under a misapprehension that the said Act was in force, and whereas the procedure and requirements of that Act are in substantial conformity with the laws of naturalization now in force in Canada, and it is proper to legalize and confirm the said proceedings: Therefore Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:

1. All proceedings for the naturalization of aliens heretofore taken or had in the Province of Manitoba under the Naturalization Act, Canada, 1881, upon which certificates of naturalization have been issued, and also all certificates issued upon such proceedings shall be held to have been and to be as valid and effectual as though the said Act had been and was now in force.

This Bill is intended to apply to the Mennonites. They were promised their patents at the end of three years; but as the law provides that patents shall only issue to subjects, and as they took all necessary proceedings to obtain them under the impression that the Act of 1881 was in force, this Bill is introduced for the purpose of legalizing those proceedings.

Bill read the first time.

MANAGEMENT OF INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, in introducing Bill (No. 139) to amend the Act thirty-sixth Victoria, chapter four, intitled: An Act to provide for the establishment of the Department of the Interior, and to amend The Indian Act, 1880 (from the Senate), said: This Bill is as follows:—

1. The third section of the Act passed in the thirty-sixth year of [Her Majesty's reign, chapter four, intitled: An Act to provide for the establishment of the Department of the Interior and the third section of The Indian Act, 1880, are hereby repealed, and the following section is substituted for each such section respectively:—“3. The Minister of the Interior or the Head of any other Department appointed for that purpose by order of the Governor in Council shall be the Superintendent-General of Indian Affairs, and shall as such have the control and management of the lands and property of the Indians in Canada.”

“2. So much of any Act or law as may be inconsistent with this Act, or make any provision on the matter provided for by this Act contrary hereto, is hereby repealed.

By these two Acts it is provided that while the Department of Indian Affairs should be a special Department, the Minister of the Interior should be an ex-officio Indian Superintendent-General. The duties of the Minister of the Interior have become so heavy in consequence of the opening up and settlement of the North-West, that the Government desire to take the power to transfer, if it is thought requisite, to some other Minister the Superintendency-General of Indian Affairs.

Bill read the first time.

CONTINUATION IN FORCE OF CERTAIN ACTS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, in moving the second reading of Bill (No. 133) to continue to a limited time the Acts therein mentioned, said: The Acts referred to in this Bill are the Act 41 Vic., chap. 17, for the better prevention of crimes of violence, and the Act respecting the administration of criminal justice in the disputed Territories. They are to be continued in force for one year.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman state the reason why the first-mentioned Act is proposed to be continued. It was originally passed as a very temporary Act, but it seems to remain on our Statute-book all the time.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think it may be continued for another year without dispute, and with the assent and support of the hon. gentleman opposite.

Mr. BLAKE. No, no. I always thought some reason should be assigned for it.

Bill read the second time, considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

THIRD READINGS.

The following Bills were read the second time, considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time and passed:—

Bill (No. 134) to provide for the salaries and superannuation and travelling allowances of certain Judges of certain Provincial Courts.—(Sir John A. Macdonald.)

Bill (No. 131) to encourage the manufacture of pig iron in Canada from Canadian ore—on a division.—(Sir Leonard Tilley.)

RAILWAY TRUST AND CONSTRUCTION COMPANY.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, introduced Bill (No. 141) to amend the Act of the present Session, intituled: An Act to incorporate the Railway and Construction Company of Canada, limited.

Bill read the first time.

On motion for second reading,

Mr. BLAKE. This measure has been explained to me privately. It seems that an amendment was made in the Senate to the Construction Company's Bill, by which all the clauses of the Joint Stock Companies' Act are made applicable to this Act. Our Joint Stock Companies' Act contains a clause requiring directors of companies to be resident in Canada, and this clause was applicable to this company. We have given up, practically, this restriction, and I have more than once directed the attention of the Government to the importance of remodelling the Consolidated Joint Stock Companies' Act in points in which our new policy differs from the policy of that Act.

Bill read the second time, considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

DEEPENING THE CHANNEL OF THE RIVER ST. LAWRENCE.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolution:

Resolved,—That it is expedient to authorise the Governor in Council to raise by debentures in the manner prescribed by the Act 36th Victoria, Chapter sixty, (except as to the rate of interest which shall not exceed four per cent. per annum), a further sum not exceeding nine hundred thousand dollars, to be advanced to and applied by the Montreal Harbor Commissioners from time to time, in meeting the expenses to be incurred by them in completing the dredging and deepening the ship channel of the River St. Lawrence, between Montreal and Quebec, to the depth of twenty-seven feet and a half, at low water; subject to the payment by the said Commissioners to the Receiver-General of interest on the sums so raised and advanced, at the rate of four per cent. per annum: Provided that the said Commissioners shall not commence the said work unless nor until the Governor in Council shall be satisfied by such examination and report as shall be deemed sufficient, that the said work can be completed for a sum not exceeding that above mentioned.

Mr. COURSOL. I cannot allow these resolutions to pass without congratulating the Government on introducing them. They will be received with pleasure, not only by the trade of Montreal and the country at large, but by the various navigation companies which ply between foreign ports and Canada. They will be welcomed, because the further deepening of Lake St. Peter channel to 27½ feet is a measure of the greatest concern for the interest of the Dominion. This question must be considered from a high stand-point, and I am glad the Government of the day have done so. They recognized the principle that Montreal must be the port of exchange from river to ocean vessels, not because Montreal thinks this should be the case, not because Montreal asked the deepening of the channel, but because even foreign navigation companies have always made the harbor of Montreal what it is to-day, the port of exchange. As soon as the channel was deepened, large vessels followed in the trail of the small ones which alone years ago could visit our harbors. If these vessels had not considered this inland voyage to be of advantage to them, they would certainly have gone to other ports. The fact of the matter is they would have proceeded further inland, had not nature placed insuperable obstacles above Montreal. These large companies indicate the policy which should be followed—they are not interested in the different harbors of the Dominion; their sole object is their own commercial interests, and as they choose to come to Montreal, putting aside, Sir, all sectionalism, we must admit, and we are forced to come to the conclusion, that Montreal should be in the future what the spirit and enterprise of her citizens have made it now, the discharge harbor from ocean to river navigation, the great port of distribution of trade over a large tract of land. Great sea-ports are not built up simply because some people desire it, but because some powerful general interests require them, just as railway enterprise will go in the direction nature and the want of commerce call them. I hope, however, these resolutions will be carried out, and the works be proceeded with at once. The resolutions state that the work should not begin until the Government engineers have satisfied themselves of the cost of the deepening of the channel, and have been found correct. I hope that the hon. Minister of Public Works will instruct them to report within as short a time as possible, as it is of the utmost importance. The plant is ready, the staff experienced, and, no doubt, under the supervision of the Harbor Commissioners, presided over, as they are, by a gentleman of great ability and energy, this great work will soon be accomplished. Nothing should be allowed to jeopardize the granting of one of the greatest possible boons to the country, an undertaking which is a national one in every respect. I hope these resolutions will pass, and that the work will soon be completed.

Mr. CURRAN. I feel it my duty to add one word to the remarks and congratulations offered by the hon. member for Montreal East (Mr. Coursol). When we take into consideration the vast strides made by the port of Montreal since 1850, when the total number of sea-going vessels entering that port was 210, aggregating 46,156 tons, while last year, 1882, the number reached 645, aggregating 554,692 tons, I think this work should be recognized by the people at large as one of national importance, as one involving the interests, not merely of the city of Montreal, but of the whole Dominion of Canada. This is a step, I think, in the right direction; it is acknowledging the principle which later on, no doubt, will be carried on to its full extent. There is a condition attached to these resolutions, namely, that the money shall not be expended until a report shall have been made upon it by certain engineers. I have no intention at this late stage of the Session, when hon. members are naturally anxious to reach their homes, to detain the House at any considerable length; but I think hon. members will allow me to read the concluding paragraph in the report of Mr. T. C. Keefer, whose eloquent words should not be allowed to lay buried in the pages of the Harbor Commissioners Report, but should find a place in the public records of the country:

"If what has been undertaken, in the past, was warranted by the then condition of things, a fortiori, present prospects and necessities make it imperative that the chief Dominion seaport should be placed upon a par with any American one, as to its accessibility by the largest ocean vessel. Montreal, a fresh water seaport, 250 miles above salt water, and nearly 100 miles above tide, is nearer to Europe, the market, and nearer to the great grain and provision areas of this continent, the sources of supply for that market, than any of her Atlantic competitors in that trade, not excepting New York, the great emporium of the export and import trade of the United States. She is the terminus of the longest inland water communication between the Atlantic and those areas, and has two distinct railway systems of the first magnitude, to supplement and perfect her communication with the interior—the Grand Trunk in full operation, and the Canadian Pacific, an assured reality in the near future, besides the more than probable future extension of the Northern Pacific Railway to tide water by its shortest route, Sault St. Marie and the Ottawa Valley. Nor is it improbable that a Trunk line on the south side of the St. Lawrence will sooner or later connect northern and western New York, Western Pennsylvania and Ohio, and points beyond with the coolest route for grain and provisions and the most favorable one for live stock by reason of the extent of river and gulf navigation and the minimum of ocean transit. With such a position and prospect nothing but poverty can warrant any delay in making the Canadian New York accessible to the largest ocean steamers. I fully recognise the grave objection to burdening the commerce of the port with an expenditure for a work which is as much a public one as the canals and harbors above or below it. The rivers and harbors of the inland waters of the United States are recognized as Federal works, and this is the case in Canada with respect to the St. Lawrence at all other points, the navigation of which is exclusively under Dominion control. I believe, therefore, that the entire assumption of this work by the Dominion is but a question of time (and that a very short time), and there is certainly no national expenditure to which the surplus revenues of the Federal Government can be more usefully devoted than that which brings the largest ocean vessels within the greatest possible proximity to the heart of the continent."

"I remain
Your obedient servant,
(Signed) "THOS. C. KEEFER."

I fully endorse the sentiments expressed in these practical and patriotic words. I hope the day is not far distant when the debt will be assumed by the Dominion of Canada, and then the last link in the great National Policy of this Government will be completed, and our trade and navigation will receive the full benefit and impetus which this act of justice to the great radiating centre of the commerce of the Dominion is certain to ensure.

Mr. OUMET. I shall certainly vote for these resolutions on the principle that one-half a loaf is better than no bread; but I must protest against the assumption in them, that this work from Montreal down to Quebec is a local work which ought to be paid for by the city of Montreal, or by the city Harbor Commissioners. I say that it is not fair to single out that part of the St. Lawrence, and say that it does not form a section of the great highway of the Dominion; that all the remainder of the St. Lawrence River is to be improved at the cost of the Dominion Treasury, but that because this part touches Montreal, or seems at first sight to be more in the interests of Montreal than of the rest of Canada, it must be paid for by Montreal's citizens. This portion of the St. Lawrence, in the same way as the balance of it, belongs to the great highway of the Dominion; and I must protest against the pretension conveyed by the resolutions that this must be viewed as a local work and so encouraged. It was first begun at the expense of the late Province of Canada. Later it was abandoned as a Government work on account of certain circumstances; and I think that the sooner we return to a reasonable position, and consider it as a national and Dominion work the better, because otherwise a flagrant injustice is done to Montreal and to the whole Dominion.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). At this late hour in the Session, I will not take up the time of the Committee further than to say I cannot allow the remarks of the hon. member for Montreal Centre, and my hon. friend (Mr. Ouimet), to pass without an answer. I certainly would feel it incumbent on me to vote against these resolutions if they were not in their present shape, and did I not understand that a Bill in this shape will be introduced—I refer to the granting of a loan; because I think that a great injustice would be done to the western part of the Dominion were we to allow so large a sum as $900,000, in addition to the large amounts already expended there, to be spent for the benefit of Montreal. We, of course, have a very great interest in that city and in its progress; but when a ship reaches Quebec, as far as the rest of the Dominion is concerned, I submit with great humility, of course, that so far as concerns Western Canada, the great object is gained; and, therefore, I merely rise, not to take up the time of the Committee, but merely to enter my protest against any such idea as has been suggested by the hon. member for Montreal Centre, that this work shall hereafter be assumed by the Dominion, or in any way be regarded as a Dominion work.

Mr. DESJARDINS. I have only one remark to offer—that one point conceded by the Government is that the deepening of the channel between Montreal and Quebec is of necessity to be continued to 27½ feet. This is a great concession, but it is the only concession made; in response to the demands of those who are interested in the navigation and trade of the St. Lawrence. In my opinion all the progress is made with regard to what has been the view hitherto, and we have not obtained all that we had the right to expect. The question at issue does not concern competition between Hamilton, Quebec and Montreal, but whether we can compete on fair terms with the American ports? Will the changes imposed along our system of navigation on the St. Lawrence enable us to compete with those ports? I think that according to the authority of those who have studied this question, if we are so placed that the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal will be forced to levy tolls on the vessels coming into that harbor, this competition will be rendered impossible, and, moreover, Quebec will then lose the benefit arising from the stoppage of steamships there, and the whole western traffic of the St. Lawrence route will be lost, passing to American ports. That is the great question at issue, and it ought to interest and attract the attention of those who wish our great national highway made the means of securing the traffic of the best ocean steamship lines which ply between European ports and this continent. If we continue to charge the harbor of Montreal with the cost of improving the channel between Montreal and Quebec, it will, combined with other disadvantages, have a disastrous effect on our trade. The propositions made to the Government on the part of Montreal were very fair. The communications stated that Montreal was ready to pay their own debt and the cost of improving the harbor; but what they considered unfair was, that the cost of the improvements made and to be completed between Montreal and Quebec in the channel, was charged against them. This ought to be viewed as an undertaking of public utility, and not as a mere local undertaking; and it was in this light that they expected the Government would approach this important question. However, at all events, it was concluded that Montreal was to be the head of navigation; and, in common with the member for Montreal West, I hope that the day was not far distant when the Government would see the necessity of taking up the whole work and finishing it at its own expense.

Mr. BÉCHARD. Although I am not a representative of the city of Montreal, I feel somewhat interested in the object of these resolutions, as they concern the Province of Quebec. I rise only to proffer one observation. I have just heard it stated since this debate opened that this should not be considered a Dominion work. It seems to me, however, that this is as much a Dominion work as is the deepening of the canals. Nobody will pretend that the Lachine Canal is not a Dominion work; and the question now before us relates to the dredging of the channel between Montreal and Quebec—which is not deep enough for a certain class of vessels. This dredging is necessary to give greater capacity to the St. Lawrence as a navigable river, and is as much a Dominion work as would be the deepening of a canal. Supposing there were rapids which had to be overcome by deepening the bed of the river, that would be considered a Dominion work; and I cannot see why dredging this channel, thereby making it navigable for a certain class of vessels should not be regarded as a Dominion work.

Mr. LANDRY. (Translation). Mr. Chairman: As a member from the Province of Quebec, I think it is my duty to make a few remarks on this question. They desire to represent me as representing exclusively the Quebec district, because recently when a deputation came to Ottawa, on behalf of the Chamber of Commerce of the city of Quebec, I had the pleasure and the honor of accompanying this deputation, firstly to the Ministers who represent in the Cabinet the interests of the Province of Quebec, and afterwards before the Privy Council itself. On that occasion, as in the present, I took this stand, Mr. Chairman, which I am happy to make known to the House and to the public. Quite recently one of the hon. members of this House, on a question of privilege which he raised, was disposed to treat us as narrow-minded men, at a time when we had not an opportunity of defending ourselves. This being the first chance I had of protesting against the appellation of the hon. member, I avail myself of it with pleasure, and I say, for his information and that of the public, that if they wish to scrutinize the motives which influenced me, they must, in the first instance, establish whether the question which is now before the House, is either a national or a local question. If it is a national question, all local or parish questions must be secondary, and the public good must take precedence of local interests. If it is a local question, then it is our duty as representatives from the Quebec district, to consider the interests of our district, as is likewise the duty of the members from the Montreal district, to first consider the interests of their district; and on this assumption of an accord to the members who represent in this House the interests of Montreal, the right to take the position which they think they should take; on the other hand, they should concede to the representatives from the district of Quebec, the right to take the position which we deem best. With us, this is the question: Is it a national or a purely local question? At the present time it is hard to say. We have not been furnished with all the data necessary to elucidate this question. The Government is likely in possession of all necessary documents which can throw light on this question, and place it correctly before us. On this point we have every confidence in the Government. We know that what they do will be in the general interests of the country and not in the purely local interests of either Quebec or Montreal. I wish to take these grounds and have them made known to the country. When we were admitted to an audience with the Privy Council, we discussed the question from this stand-point: we considered it in a comprehensive light, so much so, that one of the hon. Ministers, who is in the House to-day, and who can give his testimony in corroboration of what I say, stated that he was most happy to observe that, although the deputation came from Quebec, which might excite a certain amount of apprehension among some members that had taken the correct course, to establish a basis for our most equitable demands. If this is a Montreal question, we desire to establish the dredging of the channel between Quebec and Montreal, to obtain means of communication from the West to Montreal; if we really wish to have the commerce of Montreal, I think it is also important, in a national point of view, to continue and complete as soon as possible the dredging of our channels—for what is commerce if not the interchange of our products; if we wish to enable the large vessels which come from the East to ascend to Montreal, we must also enable the large vessels which are able to carry all the products of the West to come to Montreal also. All these vessels, all the large barges from the West, must be able to start from Lake Superior, and arrive at the port of Montreal without being obliged to stop at way ports and unload their cargo in from five or six vessels of smaller tonnage. It is in this light that we ought to consider this a really national question, and that we should open up to commerce not only a part of the St. Lawrence, but the whole country from the extreme West. From this point of view I congratulate the Government on the line of conduct they have adopted, as expressed in the resolutions now proposed. But, Mr. Chairman, we must not in a question of this kind forget the subject of acquired rights. And if I understand the question rightly, it seems to me that when the Quebec Harbor Commissioners loaned from the Government the sum necessary to carry on the works, which are now being constructed at Quebec, and for which it has become necessary to impose certain dues on vessels coming to Quebec, it seems to me that at that time it was agreed between the Quebec Harbor Commission and the Commissioners of the Montreal Harbor, that in future the works which should be undertaken to deepen the St. Lawrence, should not be built at the expense of the Government. If that Convention which was made at the time no longer exists, I think the rights of Quebec will not be forgotten; and if at some future day the Government be disposed to assume the debt of Montreal; if they wish to take off the duties from vessels which might prevent them coming up to Montreal, it will be only justice to place Quebec in the same position, and that they assume also the debt of Quebec, so as to permit vessels to come either to the port of Quebec or to the port of Montreal, and to find in both ports like favorable conditions.

Resolution reported.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY introduced Bill (No. 142) to make further provision for deepening the Ship Channel of the River St. Lawrence, between Montreal and Quebec.

Bill read the first and the second times, considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

EVIDENCE IN RELATION TO CRIMINAL MATTERS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, in moving the second reading of Bill (No. 125) to make provision for the taking of evidence in relation to criminal matters pending in courts of justice in any other of Her Majesty's Dominions, or before foreign tribunals, said: Since the Imperial Extradition Act ceased to be in force in Canada there is no provision for obtaining the testimony of witnesses in relation to any criminal matter pending in any Criminal Court or tribunal in a foreign state in like manner as may be obtained in relation to a civil matter. Our attention has been specially called by Her Majesty's Government to this omission from our Extradition Act. The Bill provides as follows:—

The testimony of any witness may be obtained in relation to any criminal matter pending in any court in any other of Her Majesty's Dominions or before any foreign tribunal in like manner as it may be obtained in relation to any civil matter under the Act 31 Vict., chap. 76, intitled: An Act to provide for taking evidence in Canada in relation to Civil and Commercial matters pending before courts of justice in any other of Her Majesty's Dominions or before Foreign Tribunals, and all the provisions of that Act shall be construed as if the term civil matter included a criminal matter and the term cause included a proceeding against a criminal: Provided that nothing in this Act shall apply in the case of any criminal matter of a political character.

Bill read the second time; considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

BILLS OF EXCHANGE AND PROMISSORY NOTES IN PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, in moving the second reading of Bill (No. 135) relating to Bills of Exchange and Promissory Notes in the Province of Prince Edward Island, said: This Bill explains itself:

Whereas it is desirable to assimilate the laws of the Province of Prince Edward Island to the laws of the other Provinces of the Dominion, as regards the maturity of and the protesting of bills of exchange and promissory notes: Her Majesty, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate and House of Commons of Canada, enacts as follows:—

1. The Act passed in the thirty-fifth year of Her Majesty's reign, chapter ten, and intitled: An Act relating to Bills of Exchange and Promissory Notes, shall, on and after the passing of this Act, extend and apply to the Province of Prince Edward Island.

2. From and after the first day of July next after the passing of this Act, all bills of exchange and promissory notes payable at any place in the Province of Prince Edward Island for the sum of forty dollars and upwards, may, on default of the acceptance or payment thereof, be protested by a Notary Public; and such protest shall, in any action on such bill or note, be prima facie evidence of presentation and dishonor, and also of service of notice of such presentation and dishonor as stated in such protest; for which protest there shall be charged a notarial fee of fifty cents for protest and twenty-five cents for each notice.

LOTTERIES ACT AMENDMENT.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, in moving the second reading of Bill (No. 136) to amend the law respecting lotteries, said: It has been recently decided by a magistrate in Ontario—I suppose properly—that our present law on lotteries will prevent the Art Union, an association of artists, from holding its annual distribution of paintings and drawings. By the payment of an annual subscription fee, a person becomes entitled to draw for the right of first choice from among the pictures contributed by the members. This cannot be held to be an evil, by the most strained interpretation of the law. The Bill is as follows:—

1. Nothing contained in any Statute, relating to lotteries, now in force in Canada, or in any Province thereof, shall be read or construed as making it an offence:—

(a) For any incorporated society, established for the encouragement of art, or for any officer or agent thereof, to distribute by lot among its members or ticket-holders, any paintings, drawings, or other works of art, produced by the labor of the members of, or published by or under the direction of such incorporated society; or

(b) For such member or ticket-holder to share in such distribution.

Bill read the second time, considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 132) respecting the sale of Intoxicating Liquors and the issuing of Licenses therefor.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 29,

Mr. FISHER. With reference to sub-section 7, I should say that the signing of a memorial ought to be sufficient without its being necessary to find the applicant. It might be difficult to find the applicant.

Mr. McCARTHY. I think it is not too much to ask those who sign the memorial to find the applicant.

Mr. BLAKE. It may be quite impossible to find him.

Mr. McCARTHY. This only says a notice shall be given.

Mr. BLAKE. What kind of a notice?

Mr. McCARTHY. A reasonable notice served at his house for instance.

Mr. BLAKE. A four days' notice ought to be enough, describing the objection.

Mr. McCARTHY. It may describe many other things he may not be able to meet.

Mr. BLAKE. He ought to be able always to meet an attack on his character.

Mr. McCARTHY. By the eleventh sub-section a refusal on the grounds of character is final in its consequences, not only for that year, but for subsequent years. The disqualification for three years seems too long. I move that this sub-section be amended by substituting two for three years.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). One year ought to be enough.

Mr. BLAKE. He could not get his license for a year even without the provision.

Amendment agreed to.

On section 32,

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I do not approve of this section because it introduces the principle of petitioning. I have little faith in the virtue of petitions signed as they usually are. I do not think the license should be subjected to the risk of the result of a petition of simply the majority of the electors of a sub-division. I would move to omit section thirty-two.

Mr. MITCHELL. I sustain the suggestion of my hon. friend. We know how petitions are got up. Almost anybody will sign one that has nothing particularly improper about it. Two weeks may be taken to get this done, and a respectable house is closed up under the authority of the sub-section.

Mr. BERGIN. There ought to be some other way of depriving a man of his license than under this system of petitioning. We all know that a petition asking almost to send a man to penitentiary, and probably even that, could be got up and signed by the majority of electors in almost any sub-division, if presented by a respectable man or a man looked upon as respectable; and we know that men taking strong views upon the temperance question would not hesitate at any time to close up houses even upon mere rumor. Besides there is a very great uncertainty as to whether a man, wrongfully deprived by means of a petition of securing a license, could obtain one for many years to come. I am not prepared to suggest a change, but I think a proper way would be to strike out the clause altogether.

Mr. FOSTER. The hon. member for Victoria objected to this sub-section on the sole ground that petitions were very easily got up. He did not say he objected to the principle of allowing the people in a community to be what they certainly are, the best judges in the matter of granting licenses. If he objects to the petition system will the hon. gentleman suggest any better way to which the people may express their opinion? Or does he go against the proposition, which I think is a very evident one, that no person knows the wants of a community so well as he who lives in it. I think there are a great many considerations on the other side of this question as to why this clause should be maintained in principle, whether it be literally retained or not. The chief of these is that the people of a community are the best judges of their own wants. They are the ones who have to support the institution, and to meet the difficulties that are thrown in the way of a community by the licensed shop, and, I think they are the ones who should have something to say in the matter. Already in the city of Montreal, and I think, in the city of Quebec, the people have this power conferred upon them, and in any municipal district may block an application for license by a majority petition. This petition is very well guarded. It has to be attested to on oath and is liable to revision in open court, and that takes away a good deal of the objection to what may be called the general petition system. In the city of Montreal last year they closed some very objectionable places by the exercise of this power; and I think it is hard that a right the people already possess in every municipality in the Province of Quebec, should be taken from them. If hon. gentlemen object to the petition system, let them take the ballot system; but I do plead for the people of every community having the right to say whether one of these institutions should be placed in their midst.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). It is a well-known fact that a petition can be obtained from almost any person; and when we consider the fact that any person can go about, even ladies, and get petitions signed in this way we must be very careful how we give parties the right of petition with reference to this question. But there is another reason. I submit that it is the intention of the Government, as I understand them, that this Bill is not to be, so far as Ontario is concerned, more restrictive than the Crooks Act. Now, the Crooks Act has no such clause as this in it. I know from experience that even politics will be introduced into this petition system; and that because a man does not happen to be of the same politics as the majority of the people who live in that particular section, he will be voted out and not allowed to have a license, although he may be in every way qualified; and although, as in many cases that I am aware of, he has maintained a licensed house for many years, yet, because a sentiment of that kind might arise in the neighborhood, a man's vested rights might be interfered with and his property cut from under his feet. Now, I ask the Government not to press a clause of that kind which goes so far beyond what the Crooks Act has heretofore made law in Ontario. I submit that clause ought to be struck out altogether; it is quite sufficient to have it in the hands of Commissioners who are supposed to be dispassionate persons and who act according to their judgment in each case that comes before them.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I think the hon. gentleman is not the man who should quote the Crooks Act in this House. The Crooks Act was passed by the Ontario Legislature; we are dealing with the question de novo, and if he wants only the restrictions of the Crooks Act, let him support the Legislature of the Province in regard to this matter, and then he will have the Crooks Act restrictions, nothing more and nothing less. I think this is one of the best and most valuable clauses in the Bill. The hon. gentleman says that perhaps ladies may go round soliciting signatures to the petition asking for a reduction of the number of licenses or for prohibition in any case. I do not see why the ladies should not have the right of petition. I think the supporters of the hon. gentleman propose to give the ladies the franchise. Now, if ladies are going to be qualified to vote on this and other questions, qualified to vote on the question of sending my hon. friend to Parliament, why should they not be qualified to circulate petitions? Moreover, not only is this a small proposition in itself, but it is commended in almost all the Provinces except Ontario. As the hon. member for King's (Mr. Foster) has said, it is already admitted in Montreal and Quebec. Now, the Provincial Legislature of New Brunswick has enacted that no license of any kind shall be granted where a majority of the ratepayers petition against it. In Nova Scotia, a license is granted by the sessions in each county on recommendation of the grand jury, concurred in by two-thirds of the number present, and on petition of two-thirds of the ratepayers of the polling district. In Prince Edward Island, a majority of the ratepayers say whether a license shall be granted or not. In British Columbia, a license is granted on petition of two-thirds of the residents to the magistrates to whom application is made; and in Manitoba, outside the city of Winnipeg, sixteen out of every twenty electors, who are resident ratepayers, must support the petition before it is granted. So the proposition in the Bill before us is practically conceded by six out of the seven Provinces. We have then the judgment of six Provincial Legislatures that this is a wise provision. The wholesale traffic is regulated in these six Provinces under somewhat similar provisions, in some cases more stringent. I am glad the Committee have introduced this clause, and I propose to support it just as it stands.

Mr. FISHER. The hon. member for Hamilton objects that under this clause a license might be refused for political reasons. I cannot see, if the general opinion of a municipality is in favor of granting licenses, how it is possible that a majority should try to cut out one of their political opponents when at the same time they must therefore prevent any of their political friends having a license. I think this clause of the Bill will effectually prevent any political considerations entering into the question. The hon. gentlemen said it was the general understanding that this Act should not be more restrictive than the Crooks Act. I have heard no such pledge from the Government of the day; I have not understood this Act was to be modelled upon the Crooks Act nor that the Crooks Act was to restrict this Act in any way. I do not see why the other Provinces should be deprived of the continued benefit of this clause because Ontario has not hitherto had the advantage of it. The people of the Province of Quebec have this clause, not only the people of Montreal and Quebec but also those of rural municipalities, and it will be a source of great injustice to the Province of which I am a representative, if this clause should be struck out, for thereby it will be deprived of one of the many advantages of this new Act.

Mr. ORTON. We have already the Scott Act, which can be used in any part of the country, and we have local option in regard to counties. If you extend that power, the results will be still more disastrous than they have been proved to be in regard to the Scott Act. Any municipality may, by this Act, do away with tavern licenses; the result will be to place the trade in the hands of a very inferior class of men, who will sell impure ardent spirits, instead of beer and native wine, which are now becoming more largely used in the country. There is another objection, that in a small town or village this option clause may be carried, and yet the people who are accommodated by the houses will have no vote on the matter. I think this clause will have the effect of creating disorder and increasing intemperance, instead of diminishing it, for so long as intoxicating liquors are allowed to be sold, and are introduced into, and are manufactured in the country, there will be men who will sell them in spite of all efforts on the part of License Commissioners. We also know that petitions can be got up for almost anything, and a great many persons are induced to sign them, not because they object to licenses being granted, but in order to please individuals who happen to present the petitions. Many are induced, for business purposes, to sign such petitions merely to please extreme advocates of temperance, without considering the effect of such a course. I hope this clause will be struck out of the Bill.

Mr. JAMIESON. I do not understand the provision as being general in its character. The grounds set forth in the petition must be specific. I, therefore, think the provision is a good one, and should be retained in the Bill. The object is to get rid of objectionable houses, and I do not know any better judges than those who reside in the immediate neighborhood in which the licenses are sought to be granted. I was sorry to hear some hon. members state that petitions might be got up for almost any purpose. I think it does not speak well for the electors among whom those hon. gentlemen reside. In my opinion this is one of the most important provisions in the Bill, and I trust the Government will see their way clear to have it retained. If it were a general provision I would, perhaps, in justice to those holding licenses, hesitate before I approved it. When that question comes up I trust the House will be able to deal with it in such a way as will be just to all parties concerned; but in this particular instance, seeing that the charges against the applicant must be specified, I think the clause should be retained.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In dealing with this generally, especially in dealing with a clause like this, we must see that we do not proceed too fast, or go too far. We must take the middle course and not look at this question, or at any of the provisions of the Bill, either from the standpoint of a member of a temperance society, pledged against the entire use of intoxicating liquors; or, on the other hand, we must not look at it from a tavern keeper's point of view. We must consider if we can get a reasonable Bill, because too strict a Bill will defeat itself—we have seen that time and again—and a Bill too relaxed in its provisions will offend the moral sense of the community. I must say I have a strong objection to a person losing his license or his application by a petition behind his back, if it can be avoided. I would infinitely prefer, if there is any objection to a man getting a license, and especially to a man getting a renewal of a license, that the objection should be taken openly or by a vote. There is, however, a good deal in what the hon. gentleman who spoke last stated, that this is not a general provision, but one of specific objections, and people are much more likely to be induced to sign a petition in favor of a license being granted, where it should not be granted, than they are against the granting of a license. At the same time, I do not think that a person should be deprived of his license—for it would have that effect—upon a petition presented by a mere majority, which might be a majority of one. I would propose a compromise, that instead of a majority, a petition signed by two-thirds of the electors should be required against an application for a license. That would be a compromise which would meet the views of the moderate men of the House.

Mr. BERGIN. I would suggest that there should be added to the clause something to show that the allegations in the petition were well founded before the license was taken away.

Mr. BLAKE. The petition has to set forth some grounds, and the Committee would act under a misapprehension if it thought the petition as limited as the hon. member for Lanark stated. Among other grounds are the following: That a licensed house is not required in the neighborhood, and that the quiet of the people will be disturbed if a license is granted. These are questions of opinion. If a majority are of opinion that a licensed house is not required, I think the majority should have the power to decide it, and not have a licensed house forced on them. All the other provisions are more specific. The hon. leader of the Government has very strange notions on this point. The other evening when it was proposed to alter the Bill by adding a provision which would require licensees to obtain one-third of the number of electors, he said it would be wholly unjust and would inflict a great hardship on present licensees. One evening the hon. gentleman who thought it would be exceedingly difficult to obtain one-third, and the next evening he thought it would be an easy thing to obtain a majority, although as the hon. gentleman has repeatedly observed, a minority petition is to be obtained for a purpose for which people's good nature is likely to lead them to concur. He might get a request quite favorable to a man; but to get the majority of the petition as he said, to refuse a favor to a man is most difficult, and, under the circumstances, I have hoped that the Bill which the hon. Minister himself introduced on his own responsibility, may not be marred by his own act.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE. When this question was before the Committee, I opposed this clause—I am certainly opposed to petitions. I have had some little experience in these matters, and I have found them, on more than one occasion, to work injuriously. We very often find the same names on two opposite petitions. I heard of one such case since I came to this House. An hon. member received a petition for a certain purpose, and a second petition with an opposite design, and the name of one person was on each petition. I heard of this only a few hours ago. I think that the principle is wrong. It is true as has been stated by some hon. members, that you can often get petitions signed for anything—almost to have a man hanged. Whilst I am not at all favorable to these petitions, I am at the same time quite willing that the people should have a voice as to who should have a license, and who not; and I think that the proper and more straightforward and manly course would be to give them the privilege of depositing their votes in the ballot box. This is the only straightforward way to my mind in which to ascertain the true feelings of the people. It is a very easy matter to get people to sign their names to petitions. I have seen it done simply to get rid of the applicant, without the petition being read or due enquiry made.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I must say that the amendment proposed is entirely in accordance with my views in the interest of temperance.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. This is no new idea with me, for I appeal to my hon. friend opposite, whether, when I was occupying the position of Lieutenant-Governor of New Brunswick, and a convention was held in Montreal to consider what steps should be taken by way of legislation in the Dominion Parliament for the suppression of temperance, I did not write a letter, which that hon. gentleman quoted on one or two occasions, expressing the hope which was my conviction in this matter, that if any law were passed by which a vote of the people should be taken, the measure should not be carried by a bare majority. I was willing that the vote should be three-fifths of the whole. That was a letter written when I was in a position to express my views without reference to political and party considerations of any kind, and that is my conviction to this day; and, therefore, I urged my friends when moving in the Scott Act, only to move in localities in which the public sentiment would sufficiently sustain it. I did so in the interest of temperance. I can appeal to gentlemen present, who have known that when the Scott Act was carried by a majority and not enforced, that it was not in the interest of prohibition and temperance in many cases, and, therefore, the opinion that I then entertained thoroughly, and still entertain with reference to this proposition: That if you wish it to be beneficial to the cause of temperance, and to show that by shutting liquor out of a locality the effect is good, you will do it where the moral sentiment of the people is sufficient to enforce the law. That will convince the people, and they will say that it is a correct principle, and it will extend from one end of the Dominion to the other; but if you carry it and put it into operation where the public sentiment is not with you, a reaction will follow, and the people will say: "It is a failure," and abandon the whole principle. This position I have maintained now for thirty years and upwards since I introduced into the Legislature of New Brunswick a Bill in favor of prohibition, which was endorsed by almost all the men, women and children in the Province, and we thought from the petitions received—a cartload almost was brought in—we had the public sentiment sufficiently strong in the Province to carry it; but many who signed the petitions the moment it came into force backed down and never lent the least assistance, moral or in any other way, to the measure. And, as "a burnt child dreads the fire," I have always felt since that that it is most desirable in the attempt to get prohibition—which I believe will be carried some day in the Dominion of Canada throughout—to educate the people up to it, and to show that its results are favorable and beneficial to the morals and social condition of the people. If the moral sentiment of the community is not sufficient to sustain it then we will have a dozen grogeries. Take the county of Charlotte in my own Province. I think that in some sections of that county, to-day, there is as much liquor sold as before the Scott Act went into force, and it is sold openly. In St. Andrews there has never been any attempt to enforce it. The moral sentiment of the community is against it; and, therefore, I am quite sure that it is not better for the cause of temperance—though we all felt that it was a triumph to carry the measure—that it was carried. As a matter of sentiment, I would like to see it carried everywhere; but we have to look at the matter with a degree of common sense, and to see whether we can carry the principle to success. That is my reason for favoring this amendment. If I had been a member of the House when the Scott Act was considered, and a division had been taken, I should have voted, that not simply a majority but three-fifths of the whole votes cast should have been required in its favor. More than that, a great deal is to be said in favor of open voting on this question, because when a man goes up and records his vote in favor of the principle, it is a pledge that he will see it enforced; but if he signs a petition, often that will not follow. I would rather have open voting, as it commits a man to it; and feeling ever since this has been discussed in favor of such a majority from every locality as will ensure enforcement if the principle is adopted, I would therefore, myself, rather as between the two propositions for the success of the measure, go for the amendment than for the section in the Bill.

Mr. GILLMOR. Did the hon. gentleman introduce the Prohibitory Bill in New Brunswick thirty years ago? I thought it was Mr. Schooler.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Mr. Schooler introduced the first Bill; but not the Bill which carried—that I introduced as a member of the Government at the time.

Mr. BLAKE. I have always believed a great deal in the adoption of the view, which the hon. gentleman has just stated; and if we were dealing here with a large one, there might be some plausibility in his observations, because if so—if we were dealing with whole electoral districts, or a county, as in the Scott Act, it is quite possible that a bare majority in that county will mean a minority in particular localities; and if you find it carried by a small majority throughout the county, it will almost certainly be that in certain localities there will be a majority against the Act where it will be difficult to enforce it. But that is not the proposition before us, which is that of a small locality, a polling sub-division, where there are only 200 voters according to the law; and in that small locality you have not that difficulty. If you find a majority in a small locality against the introduction of a tavern, I say that the popular sentiment may be fairly taken to be sufficiently pronounced there to ensure the observance of the law in it. This is quite a different case. I have known myself in a county with which I was intimately connected for many years, where the Temperance Act was carried by a very considerable majority; but in particular parts of the county, in considerable sections of it, there were large majorities against the Act—which circumstance rendered it inoperative, and it was repealed almost without resistance; so I was satisfied by experience as I was by theory, that when dealing with a very large area of country, in which a diversity of feeling exists in different parts of it, a bare majority does not ensure you such a moral force as to enable the Act to take effect. But we are dealing with a different state of things, with a locality containing no more voters than there are members in this House when it is full; and as the majority of this House decides what shall be the laws of this country all over the country, I believe the majority of the electors of a polling sub-division can decide fairly for the polling sub-division, whether there shall be a tavern in it or not.

Mr. McCARTHY. I think the hon. gentleman's argument should lead to just the opposite conclusion. In one locality, or village, or town—

Mr. BLAKE. I am not talking of the town, but of the country.

Mr. McCARTHY. But the Bill applies to both town and country.

Mr. BLAKE. There are hundreds of polling divisions in the country to one in the towns.

Mr. McCARTHY. Then there is no difficulty in amending the law to suit the country. The hon. gentleman has requested with great earnestness that the clause should stand; but before any person can get a license he has to get one-third of the signatures of the electors in the polling division, and then the License Commissioners have to deal with the fitness of himself as an applicant for license, the suitability of his house, its situation, &c. The clause says that a majority can petition against the application on one or on other of these grounds. First, that the applicant is of bad character, and if it were confined to that ground I should be willing to have the clause stand as it is. The second ground of objection is, that the premises are out of repair. Now, eight, or ten, or twenty people may say that the house is out of repair, other twenty may say that he is not a man of proper character to keep a hotel, while others may say that a tavern is not required in the neighborhood. The result may be that the applicant cannot even have his case considered, and the matter is practically decided without a hearing. The hon. member for Perth spoke of the town of Stratford where there are no less than three or four hotels about the market place. Now if the majority of the sub-divisions should decide against the granting of licenses, it does not prevent them from being issued in the town, but it does prevent the hotel licenses being issued to hotels in that particular locality. Now, if we want to give the municipalities power to say in a suitable manner that they do not want taverns within the environs of the place, let us say so. But what object is there in 200 voters being able to say that they shall not be licensed in a particular place, though they may be licensed in other parts of the municipality? The effect will be mischievous, and will not advance in the slightest degree the cause which I think we all have at heart—the cause of temperance. If it were only the character of the applicants which should be the ground of objection I would not object, but I do not think it would be right that his premises or the surroundings of the proposed hotel should be decided in this way.

Mr. BLAKE. I am sorry the hon. gentleman thinks so badly of his own Bill.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). The hon. member for South Durham has charged us with inconsistency, because we now object to a decision by a majority, while on Saturday evening, as he said, we objected to one-third as being too large a number for signing a petition in order to obtain the renewal of an existing license. That charge is based on a misstatement.

Mr. BLAKE. I did not say that, on last Saturday evening, objection was made that one-third was too large a number.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). Substantially that was the hon. gentleman's statement—that it was difficult to get one-third of the electors to sign such a petition.

Mr. BLAKE. No, no.

Mr. CAMERON. That was the statement the hon. gentleman made as I understood him. We did not object to one-third, or to any particular number, but we objected to existing licensees being required to get licenses signed by any number at all. When we come to discuss the merits of this clause, I have some difficulty in understanding what it means. If I understood the hon. member for Brome (Mr. Fisher) aright, he understands the clause to mean that a majority of the electors may decide that no license shall be granted in that particular sub-division. I think the hon. member for North Lanark (Mr. Jamieson) spoke in the same sense, and though I think the wording of the clause is rather vague, I do not so understand it. If the grounds referred to in the clause are those set forth in section seventeen as I should judge from the remarks of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), then it is clear that the thirty-second clause simply is intended to provide that a majority of the electors may petition against any particular person and not against any license at all being granted; and if that is the meaning I think the words should be inserted "grounds set forth in the seventeenth section." The effect of the clause is simply that it removes from the Commissioners the right to judge as to the merits of a particular application. If this clause be carried as it stands, the effect of it will be that in the event of a majority of electors signing a petition to the effect described in the clause, then the Commissioners shall have no right whatever to consider whether the charges are well founded or not, but they are compelled arbitrarily to refuse the license. Now, I am content to leave the discretion in the hands of the Commissioners, and I do not think that such gentlemen as will be appointed under this Act will be unfit to be entrusted with that discretion. I cannot believe that if it appears that the applicant is of bad fame and character, or of drunken habits, or has previously forfeited a license, or that the applicant has been convicted of selling liquor without a license within a period of three years; or that the premises in question are out of repair, or have not the accommodation hereby required, or reasonable accommodation if the premises be not subject to the said requirements; or that the licensing thereof is not required in the neighborhood, or that the premises are in the immediate vicinity of a place of public worship, hospital, or school, or that the quiet of the place in which such premises are situate will be disturbed if a license is granted—I say I cannot believe that if a petition is presented to that effect to the Commissioners, signed even by ten persons, they are not more competent to decide that matter than the tribunal which it is proposed to be provided by the thirty-second clause. Moreover, I object to this system of petitioning, as being unsatisfactory and unreliable as the basis upon which action should be taken. I think if anything of this kind is to be done we should accept either the suggestion of the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Shakespeare), or the suggestion of the hon. Finance Minister, that it should be conducted either by open vote or by ballot; and in any event it should be decided by more than a bare majority. There is another objection which I have to the Bill, and that is, that I believe its effect will be to introduce the greatest possible uncertainty amongst the tavern-keepers as to whether licenses shall be granted or renewed, and the effect of that will be to keep out of the business those men who would be most likely to carry it on in a respectable and proper manner, as such men will not be likely to go into the business without some security of permanence being guaranteed by the Act. If they knew that they are to be at the mercy of the bare majority of the electors in any polling sub-division to have their license taken away, you will not get a respectable class of men to embark in the business. And I think it should be the object of all of us, that if taverns are to be allowed, they should be kept by the most respectable men in the community who can be induced to keep them. For that reason, also, I object to the clause. While I think the amendment suggested by the hon. First Minister would, to some extent, remove the objections to the clause, I think it would only do so partially. For my part, I would prefer to see this clause struck out altogether, believing that the restrictions of the seventeenth clause, and the discretion that will be exercised by the Commissioners, will be ample security to the public that no taverns will be licensed in improper neighborhoods or of an improper character. For these reasons, I should like to have the sense of the Committee taken as to whether the clause should remain or not. If it is decided that it should remain, I think it should be modified in the sense suggested.

Mr. GIGAULT. I would like to make another proposition, by way of compromise. In some countries more stringent measures are adopted with reference to new licenses than with reference to old ones; and I would suggest that against an old license, a petition signed by two-thirds should be required, but that against premises, which have never before been licensed, a petition signed by a majority should be sufficient. We often hear a good deal about vested rights, and when once certain premises have been licensed, it is very hard to get the license withdrawn. I see that in New Zealand new licenses are granted, subject to the vote of the ratepayers; in Victoria, a new license cannot be granted without the consent of a majority of the ratepayers; in South Australia, it is necessary to have a petition signed by two-thirds. I think we should adopt some rule which would not be so stringent upon premises which are to be relicensed, as upon premises which have never been licensed.

Mr. BLAKE. I wish to point out one or two things which have been omitted from this discussion. We have already provided, at any rate in the case of a new license, that a petition must be signed by one-third of the electors in favor of it. The hon. First Minister now proposes that there must be a petition signed by two-thirds to prevail against it. It is, therefore, necessary that the voice of every elector, resident or non-resident, in a division must be pronounced. The hon. Minister of Finance spoke of the necessity of something more than a bare majority; but we all know that a bare majority of the votes cast is a very different thing from the majority of all the electors on the roll, which is provided for here. In how many elections is an absolute majority polled? We know that the majorities given are only relative majorities; we know that an absolute majority of all the electors is a very decisive majority—a greater majority than you usually find in a Parliamentary contest.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). This only applies to polling sub-divisions.

Mr. BLAKE. I am speaking of the general effect of a majority such as we understand it, as compared with a majority of all who can poll; and I say that if it is the case in an electoral division that you do not poll an absolute majority of all the voters on the roll, one side or the other, to demand that you must obtain two-thirds of the voters on the roll, in order to prevent the issue of a license, is to demand practically the abrogation of the clause.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The hon. gentleman who has just sat down says that the effect of one-third of the electors being required to sign a petition for a license and two-thirds being required to prevent it, would be to require the whole electoral vote to express itself, in order to affect the Act. But, as I understand it, the petition of one-third is required for the first granting of the license; the vote of the two-thirds, or whatever fraction may be determined upon, is a continuous power, and may be exercised at any time afterwards, when, I understand, the petition of one-third is not required. It is only required in the first instance; and after that the Commissioners still have to make their enquiry. That being the case, it seems to me that it stands to reason that a majority of two-thirds should be required to prevent a license being renewed; and instead of this provision being an anomaly, it is the legitimate conclusion of the other provision. For my part, I have no hesitation in saying that I think the principle of the petition is an unfortunate one, although I know it may be necessary in some cases. One case occurred in the city of Montreal, in which a person sought for a license for a saloon in the residential part of the city, in the vicinity of most of the churches. The whole community in that neighborhood were against the granting of the license; but notwithstanding that, the Commissioners granted the license, and the place was looked upon as a decided nuisance in the neighborhood. The sense of the people was urged by an overwhelming majority, which was considerably more than two-thirds—aye, than three-fourths, or even five-sixths of the entire residents in that sub-division. It seems to me, therefore, that if a place is of such a character, that it fairly becomes a nuisance to a locality, there can be no difficulty whatever in obtaining the signatures of two-thirds. If we make it a mere majority, it will place a man who has a license at the mercy of any majority that may be obtained at any time for any reason. It has been stated that the argument has been used as to the effect of politics in connection with the matter. One of these objections—in fact the only objection, so far as I am concerned—to the Crooks Act in Ontario, is that it has been used in some localities for political objects, and has been administered in a political sense. It would be very unfortunate if, in passing a law which will, I think, free the licensing system altogether from that kind of political influence, we were to leave in a clause of this kind which required no preliminary proceedings, no notice to be given, no holding of a poll of any kind, nothing in fact which is equivalent to a reasonable and serious expression of opinion on the part of the majority, but which simply gives to any one person the power of going round a sub-division, and by arguments used behind the back of the man against whom the petition is urged, inducing the majority to sign it. Just imagine a contested election going on—take the very case we had last year—when we had the General Elections for this Parliament in June, and those for the Local Houses of Ontario, in the February following, when political feeling ran very high. In a polling sub-division where there was a majority of one side or the other in politics—it makes no difference which, in a matter of this kind—if a tavern keeper held political opinions opposed to those of the majority, he would be placed under this section, entirely at the mercy of that majority. The local canvasser could tell him: "If you do not vote with us, we will get a majority to petition against you." There is no process provided for any serious action of the people, no responsibility except the signing of a petition declaring a particular place as not required. It need not declare that no taverns are wanted in that particular sub-division, but simply that this particular house is not required, that this particular individual should not get a license. It would be most unfortunate if, in passing a measure, which, we hope, will have the effect of removing the licensing system from the political arena, we were to leave in a clause placing this question in a worse position than that in which it stands under the Crooks Act. A two-thirds majority is more difficult to obtain. That might, at least, be said to be a clear expression of the opinions of the people and would, at any rate, lessen very much, if not remove altogether, the objection I have just urged to the adoption of the system itself. Personally, I have no hesitation in saying I would prefer to see this local option made by the process of voting instead of by petition. I think the amendment of which the hon. member for Rouville has given notice would be infinitely better than the process of petitioning; but residing as I do, in Montreal, and knowing the particular difficulties that the west end of that city has labored under in connection with this matter, I am quite in favor of some plan, whatever that plan may be, whereby a decided majority—say two-thirds—of a particular locality could prevent the imposition down there of a tavern of any kind when the majority are opposed to having one in their midst. For that reason, I am in favor of some process of local option being adopted by which a two-thirds majority would be required, if the amendment of the hon. member for Rouville be not accepted.

Mr. WOOD (Brockville). I am in favor of prohibition upon a large scale; but I believe the result of all prohibitory legislation, when confined to small localities, has invariably been followed by bad results. The effect of this section would be that in a sub-division, where the temperance sentiment was very strong, the best hotel in the place—a hotel erected at very large expense for the accommodation of the public—would be closed; while in other adjoining sub-divisions, in which the temperance sentiment did not prevail to the same extent, smaller hotels which, perhaps, ought to be closed, would be allowed to continue their business and not receive the benefit of this section. For that reason I am opposed to the clause, although believing, as I said before, in prohibition as applied to countries.

Mr. AUGER. I do not understand the logic of hon. gentlemen opposite. They are opposed to this system of petitioning against the sale of liquor. They are willing to give the man who wants to sell liquor the right to petition and to make his petition valid on his obtaining only a third of the voters to sign it, while they are opposed to allowing a majority of the temperance men among the electors of a division to make their petition good, on obtaining the support to it of a majority of the voters. I have heard the hon. Premier say both parties should be put on the same footing. I think so too. I do not believe in obliging the temperance men to get two-thirds of the voters while the liquor seller need only have one-third. Compare the position of the two. On the one side, you have a man who makes money by selling liquor, and has an interest in obtaining signatures to his petition; on the other hand, you have temperance men who do not make a cent by their action, but give up their time and neglect their business for the sake of morality. Is the temperance man then to be put in a worse position than the liquor seller, because the latter makes money, while the former works solely for the good of his locality? The getting up of a temperance petition cannot be done in the dark. Sometimes it is the priest, sometimes the minister, or other men who are interested in the morality of the locality, who are instrumental in having it signed. The liquor seller goes around with his bottle and influences those who are susceptible of such influence, to sign his petition. I think it would be telling the temperance people: "You must have a hotel whether the majority is willing or not." I do not believe that licensing a hotel is in favor of temperance; I have been a temperance man all my life, and I have learned that the best way to make men temperate is to keep the bottle away from them.

Mr. FAIRBANK. By the amendment it is obvious that petitioners are divided into two classes: If the petitioners are for the license, one-third will do; if against it, two-thirds are required. The amendment proposes to say that one man who votes for a license is as good as two men who vote against it. We are constituting a new court, and the rule of that court is to be that it will take one-third of the Judges to enter a verdict for the plaintiff, but it will take two-thirds to enter a verdict for the defendant.

Amendment (Sir John A. Macdonald) agreed to on a division.

Mr. CAMERON moved that the thirty-second clause, as amended, be struck out.

Motion negatived on a division.

On section 40,

Mr. McCARTHY. I desire to move the following as a sub-section to section 40:—

Provided always, that in any Province in which, in order to the raising of a revenue for provincial, local or municipal purposes, a duty has been imposed under the authority of the British North America Act, 1867, on any license, before the license issues the person entitled thereto shall establish to the satisfaction of the chief inspector, that he has paid or tendered such duty.

Mr. BLAKE. That clause would appear to reaffirm the incapacity of the Provincial Legislature to pass a law as to the raising of a revenue. As I understand it, the Local Legislatures are acknowledged to have a right, of themselves, to legislate as to the issue of licenses for the raising of a revenue. The hon. gentleman seems to indicate they have no right to issue licenses for the raising of a revenue.

Mr. McCARTHY. They can issue licenses if they please in order to secure the payment of a fee. But this provides that before an applicant can get a license he has to show that he has paid or tendered his money to the local authorities; otherwise they would have to take other means in order to collect the revenue.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is a third admission and assertion of the right of a Provincial Legislature to impose a license duty in the matter of revenue for provincial, local and municipal purposes. In order to aid them in collecting their revenue, it provides that the Dominion authorities cannot issue a license under this Act without producing a certificate that the party has paid to his own provincial authorities the license fee that has been imposed by the provincial authority.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course, under the most restrictive interpretation of the Act, it would be impossible, if the Local Legislature did issue a license on condition of paying a certain sum, that the party could legally sell, no matter how many licenses this Parliament might authorize. Therefore, I do not think this is much protection.

On section 42, sub-section 1,

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). I do not understand why the proportion should be different in this Act from what it is in the Crooks Act. The section under discussion says:

In cities, towns and incorporated villages respectively, according to the following scale, that is to say, one for each full two hundred and fifty of the first one thousand of the population, and one for each full five hundred over one thousand of the population.

Under the Crooks Act it is provided that the number shall be 400. In the city of Toronto alone—I have not got the returns for Hamilton, but no doubt they will be in proportion—if this Act goes into force no less than forty persons who are now carrying on business respectably will be deprived of their licenses. I submit that this Act should not be for the purpose of depriving persons of their licenses, if, in the opinion of the Commissioners, they are qualified in other respects. I, therefore, move that 400 be inserted instead of 500 in this section.

Mr. BLAKE. It will be a great blessing to the city of Toronto to have the reduction made.

Mr. BERGIN. If this section will work mischief in Toronto it will also work mischief in all the other towns of the country. It will prove a very great injustice to men who have invested their capital in the business, and are keeping creditable houses. In the town from which I come it will work great mischief, for it will deprive of their licenses some men who for many years have kept highly respectable houses, without giving them an opportunity to relieve themselves from their property. Why should they not be placed on the same footing in this respect as they at present occupy, and one license be allowed for every 400 inhabitants? It is not intended, I presume, that this Act should be used as a means of persecuting people engaged in this traffic, but it is intended to be a protection to the public generally. I do not think it is going to forward the cause of temperance; I am a temperance man and a teetotaler, but I do not see why I should force my opinions down the throats of people in a manner to injure them. It is not in the interest of temperance that we should make this law so oppressive; we should endeavor to be just and not injure people in regard to their property. I will ask for the Committee to be divided on this question as between 400 and 500.

Amendment negatived.

On sub-section 3,

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman explain the exceptional provision regarding the city of Victoria, B. C.?

Mr. McCARTHY. One of the members from that Province on the Committee desired this exception to be made, and perhaps he can explain it better than I can. The figures 7,000 are a clerical error; they should be 8,000.

Mr. GORDON. I was going to ask that this be struck out. I cannot see why this exception should be made. The same principle applies to every other city and town in the Province; but it is so refreshing to find such a clause in the Bill, that I feel obliged to move that it be struck out.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE. As a representative of that city, I know better its requirements than any outside member. It may appear strange to find any difference made with regard to Victoria and not in favor of any other part of the Dominion; but I may say that the temperance question has never been prominently brought before the people of that city, as before many other parts of the Dominion, and hence this accounts for the fact that we ask this exception to be made. We have now in Victoria some sixty-one licensed places for the sale of intoxicating liquors. I am sorry to say so, but it is the case for a population of 7,000; and the law would work a most radical change in that part of the Province. The number would be reduced about one-half, and I think that this would be a greater reform than will take place under the Act in any other city in the Dominion. I am a total abstainer myself and have been so for a number of years. Not only so, but with regard to the temperance cause, I do not propose to take a back seat with regard to any member of the House in this respect. At the same time I think that there is reason in every question, there are two sides to everything, and I believe that in matters of this kind we should move cautiously and be sure that the ground on which we stand is good. I know that there have been many false steps taken by temperance men with regard to the temperance cause, where they have tried to push ahead of the moral sentiment of the people. This has, in many instances, worked injuriously; and I believe that this clause will work a great deal more good to the interests of temperance, than if we placed that city on the same footing with all other places. When this matter was before the Committee, I only spoke for my own constituency; and I think that we know better than any other members, the requirements of our own Province. I sincerely trust that the clause will remain as it is.

Mr. BAKER. I quite agree with my hon. colleague in this matter. Nanaimo and New Westminster were not considered in this relation, because the members for those constituencies had told us that this Act would not seriously affect them in reducing the number of licensed places.

Mr. GORDON. But it does.

Mr. BAKER. I understood you to say it did not.

Mr. GORDON. You could not have so understood me.

Mr. BAKER. At all events, I was under that impression; and these hon. gentlemen can now move amendments to the clause if they like; certainly we know better what we want in our constituency than anybody else. If this Act went into force as it is, it would reduce the number of licenses from sixty-one to sixteen, which would be a very material change, and it would not be appreciated by the people in that constituency. It must be borne in mind that this is not an inland or country constituency; but essentially, a seaport, the initial point for the Province where all the large mail steamers come. All descriptions of vessels, of every class, tonnage, and nationality drop anchor in the Royal Roads of our harbor, and since it has been in the wisdom of the License Board of Victoria to grant an exceptional number of licenses, which are now fixed at sixty-one, I think such a wholesale reduction as would take place if this clause were not introduced, should not be made, and I therefore hope the hon. members of this House will be good enough to allow the clause to pass.

Mr. GORDON. I am sorry that I was misunderstood as to the effect this Bill would have on my own town. The effect will be to reduce the number from eleven to five; and notwithstanding that these six may suffer, whoever they may be, still in the interest of the cause which this House has taken seriously to heart, I could not have the effrontery to ask that a special clause be inserted in order to relieve the town of Nanaimo from the general effect of the Bill. Whatever effect it may have amongst my constituents I believe I am acting rightly in supporting the general propositions of the Bill, and allowing it to apply to my own Province and town as it applies to all the other Provinces and towns. I have frequently noticed that the House has opposed the principle of making special exceptions at the solicitations of hon. members, and I hope this principle will be adhered to with regard not only to British Columbia but every other part of the Dominion, unless in my Province the matter is left to the Local Government.

Mr. HOMER. The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Shakespeare) spoke to me when the Bill was printed, and I told him I was in favor of it. In British Columbia we have a large Indian population—about the same number that you have in the North-West, and while the sale of liquor to Indians in the North-West is strictly prohibited we shall be giving almost free trade in liquor to our Indians. One of the best things that this House can do will be to restrict or prohibit the sale of liquor to the Indians. I believe that the striking out of this clause will confer a benefit upon the whole Province and especially upon our Indian population. It is said that Victoria is a seaport town, so is Montreal, and Halifax, and Quebec, and St. John, and I do not see any exception made in favor of them. As a representative from British Columbia and feeling some interest in the credit and representation of that Province I hope the House will not allow such a stain to remain upon it.

Motion, to allow the clause to stand, negatived.

Mr. McCARTHY moved that the following be substituted for sub section two: "In incorporated villages, being county towns, five licenses may be granted notwithstanding that according to the population that number may not be issued."

Amendment agreed to.

On section 44,

Mr. GIGAULT moved that the words "township or parish" be inserted after the word "village."

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the county councils ought to have the same right to limit the number of licenses in the different parishes in that county, as the council of any city, town or village. In New Brunswick our counties are municipalities, but our parishes are not.

Mr. RICHEY. The position taken by the hon. member for King's (Mr. Foster) is perfectly correct. So far as I am aware, outside of the cities in New Brunswick, there are no municipalities, except the county municipalities. There are no township or village municipalities.

Mr. DAVIES. We have no municipal organization or anything approaching it, so that the clause as it now stands will not apply to Prince Edward Island. The only thing we have is the School District.

Mr. McCARTHY. Then this clause cannot operate there.

Mr. DAVIES. But you take away from our people the right enjoyed elsewhere of limiting the licenses, and a right they enjoyed before.

Mr. FOSTER. That is not taken away, because if you look at section 46, that gives to the municipality or parish this right, and that may be extended to the School District in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman supposes that the majority of all the electors resident in the parish is equivalent to the majority of those present at the meeting in a school district. The hon. gentleman has only run one election or he would know better.

Mr. FOSTER. If the hon. gentleman who last spoke will never be more clear or definite in his facts than he is now he will be but one-half in the truth and one-half in error. I ran two elections.

Mr. BLAKE. I should have said only one valid election. I thought you would have liked the other to have been forgotten.

Mr. DAVIES. What do you propose to substitute for our present system?

Mr. McCARTHY. I leave it to the ingenuity of the hon. gentleman to devise that.

Mr. WALLACE (York). I beg to move the following amendment: "The Council of every municipal organization not embracing more than one municipality may, by by-law," instead of the "Council of any city, town or village."

Amendment agreed to.

Mr. TAYLOR. By the present law no saloon licenses are allowed in incorporated villages. I would, therefore, move in amendment: "That in incorporated villages, townships, and parish municipalities, no saloon licenses shall be granted."

Mr. FOSTER. That does not quite meet our case in New Brunswick. Our parishes are not municipalities.

Mr. ORTON. I think that is provided for in section 26, which provides that there shall be no saloon licenses except in cities and towns.

Mr. BLAKE. That to which the hon. gentleman refers merely allows in cities and towns to be granted a certain number of saloon licenses without the accommodation which the law prescribes. As the clause stands, I hope it will not pass. A saloon is required to have the accommodation of an eating-house, but the sub-section of this provides that you grant license to a saloon without the accommodation of an eating-house, that is to say, you grant it to a grog-shop.

Mr. McCARTHY. We will accept the amendment of the hon. gentleman (Mr. Taylor) and make it sub-section 6, clause 42.

Mr. JAMIESON. I would like to know whether any town will be affected by this? In 1869 we prohibited the sale of liquor in shops by vote of the people, though that law is not now on the Statute-book. I apprehend that it would require a vote of the people to repeal the law.

On section 45,

Mr. McCARTHY. I propose to leave out all from the word "except," to make a special exception for the Province of Quebec.

On section 46,

Mr. McCARTHY. I understand my hon. friend opposite (Mr. Gigault) has a much better local option clause, if the opinion of the Committee is that there ought to be a local option clause at all.

Mr. BLAKE. When did the hon. gentleman become convinced of the superiority of the local option clause of which the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Gigault) has given notice?

Mr. McCARTHY. I have been opposed to a local option clause all through, but I had to submit to the voice of the Committee, and a majority of the Committee were in favor of such a clause.

Mr. GIGAULT. I beg to move that section 46 be struck out, and the following substituted therefor:—

46. No license shall be granted by the Board for the sale of liquors within the limits of a town, incorporated village, parish, township or other municipality (save and except counties and cities), when it shall have been made to appear to the Board in manner hereinafter provided, that the majority of the duly qualified Parliamentary electors therein, who have voted at a poll, taken as hereinafter specified, have declared themselves to be in favor of a prohibition of the sale of intoxicating liquors in their locality, and against the issue of licenses therefor.

2. When a requisition shall be presented to any License Commissioner from one-fifth of the Parliamentary electors of any town, incorporated village, parish, township, or other municipality (save and except counties and cities), requiring a vote to be taken as to whether or not such license shall issue or be granted therein, it shall be the duty of such License Commissioner or Chairman, upon the receipt of such requisition, to scrutinize the names of electors of such requisition, and being satisfied that the said electors, whose names are attached to said requisition, are duly qualified and registered, and after the person or persons, who have witnessed the signatures to the said requisition, shall have sworn before a Justice of the Peace or a Notary Public, that he the said witness or they the said witnesses, were present and saw the said electors sign the said requisition, and that the signers constitute one-fifth of the Parliamentary electors of such municipality, to command the holding of a public meeting of the said electors, to ascertain whether or not such licenses shall be granted, and the taking of a poll to that effect. The License Commissioner to whom the requisition has been presented shall, by an order inserted in the Register, (1st) appoint the license inspector or other person to preside at such meeting and act as returning officer, and (2nd) fix the place and day at and in which the poll shall be taken. "The returning officer, in accordance with the order, shall give public notice of such meeting in some newspaper within the Municipality or District, or if there be no newspaper within the District, then in some newspaper as near thereto as may be, the publication to be continued in at least one number of such paper each week for three successive weeks, and also by posting up such notices, or copies of the same, at the polling places within such Municipality fixed in the order, and also at two or more of the most public places in the Municipality. This meeting shall be held in the month of January next ensuing, on such day as shall be most convenient, and not less than four weeks, and not more than seven weeks, from the date of the first publication of such notice, said poll to be taken between the hours of nine A.M. and four P.M. of the day so appointed. Should any riot or disturbance take place, so as to disturb polling, such poll shall be continued on the next succeeding lawful day.

3. On the day appointed for taking the poll the license inspector, or person appointed as returning officer, shall preside over the meeting, and such officer shall have all the powers for the preservation of the peace which are by law vested in a returning officer at any election of a member of the House of Commons of Canada, and shall have the powers of appointing and swearing constables.

4. The returning officer and the election clerks whom he shall employ, shall subscribe and swear to the oath for the due and proper performance of the duties of their respective offices according to the forms mutatis mutandis prescribed in the Schedule to the Dominion Elections Act, 1874, before the nearest resident Justice of the Peace or a Commissioner for taking Affidavits, and shall be subject to the same penalties for the neglect or improper discharge of their respective duties as are imposed on similar officers in case of any election of a Member of the House of Commons.

5. The Clerk of the Municipality shall furnish the returning officer with a correct list of the qualified electors within the municipality for which the poll is to be taken; and such returning officer shall, in case of doubt, have the power to administer to voters the oath as to qualification required in cases of the election of a Member of the House of Commons.

6. Each elector, desiring to vote, shall come forward in turn to the person presiding, and shall give his vote upon the question put to him by the presiding officer: "Shall licenses be granted for the sale of intoxicating liquors in this town, village, parish, township, or municipality, as the case may be; "yes" or "no," the word "yes" meaning that he votes for the granting of licenses, and the word "no" that he votes against the granting of the same, and every vote given shall be recorded in a poll-book by the person or persons appointed to act as election clerk or election clerks, and all votes shall be taken under the same restrictions, regulations and penalties with regard to the eligibility of the voter, and as to bribery, as exist under the Dominion Election Acts.

7. If, at four o'clock in the afternoon of the first day of the poll, the votes of all the electors present have not been polled, the meeting shall be adjourned to the hour of nine in the forenoon of the following day, for the purpose of proceeding with the polling of such votes.

The election must be closed at four o'clock in the afternoon of the second day.

If at any time after the votes have commenced to be polled, either on the first or on the second day of the said election, one hour elapses without any votes having been polled, the presiding officer must close the election.

8. At the close of the poll the returning officer shall count the "yes" and "noes," and ascertain and certify on the face of the poll-book the number of votes given for or against the granting of licenses, respectively. The certificate must also be signed by the poll clerk. The certificate, with the poll-book, shall be deposited in the office of the Board within two days after the close of the poll.

9. Objections to any act or proceeding under this section must be made in writing and filed in the office of the Board of License Commissioners, within eight days after the certificate is deposited in the said office. These objections shall be considered and adjudicated upon by the Board at their next regular meeting. The decision of the Board shall be final, and in the event of the objections being maintained, they shall have the power to cause another poll to be taken on the question whether or not licenses shall be granted.

10. Nothing in this section shall be construed as permitting any of the proceeding had, or paper writings filed, or notices required therein, to be vitiated or set aside by reason of any mere want or defect of form, or any irregularity in the drawing up or execution of the same.

11. The decision of the majority of the electors against the granting of licenses as declared at the poll, shall come into force on the then ensuing license year, beginning on the first day of May, and such prohibition shall continue in full force for such year and any future year until repealed.

Mr. BLAKE. Does any member defend the Committee's clause?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman who moves this amendment was one of the Committee.

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon. member insisted on this clause in the Committee.

Mr. BLAKE. But he was not able to secure a majority.

Mr. RICHEY. Before the amendment is considered I should like to enquire whether the hon. gentleman would not specify all the municipalities which he wishes to include within it, because there is a possibility of the same difficulty cropping up under this section as we endeavored to dispose of under the other section. I would ask that any other municipality, or village, or parish, or township might be named.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). That is a question of detail. I think it objectionable on principle to adopt the clause in toto. As far as I understand it, it seems to be an application of the Scott Act, to minor municipalities, towns and villages. If that be so, I think that on principle, it is objectionable—at any rate for introduction into this Bill. If it be thought desirable at a future time to amend the Scott Act in the direction my hon. friend proposes, that can be done in the proper way by amending that Act. This is introducing into this License Bill a provision of the Scott Act, extended to villages and townships. It was considered, when we were passing the Scott Act, that to apply it to counties as a whole, was going as far as the best interests of temperance rendered advisable. The effect of passing a clause of this kind and having it made law in particular villages or townships, and of not having it enforced, would undoubtedly do more injury and harm to the cause of temperance, than if it had never been passed at all. For these reasons, I will vote against its adoption.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I think that the best thing to do is to accept the clause of the Committee, clause 46. I notice that my hon. friend, the Chairman, has lost all confidence in the report of the Committee which he submitted to the House, and fails now to come to time; the proposition of my hon. friend is exceedingly complicated and open somewhat to the objection raised by my hon. friend from Victoria. We have the Scott Act applying to large areas, its machinery is somewhat extensive and the cost of it somewhat expensive, and let us leave the turmoil and confusion of the Scott Act to the larger areas, and as to the smaller areas, let us adopt this simpler and equally effective machinery, which I think will be productive of very good results. The Committee acted very wisely in submitting a report containing this clause, and although unable to support everything which they have proposed heretofore, I support this provision.

Mr. JAMIESON. Although I will go as far as the hon. member for Middlesex for prohibition and vote for it at any time, I am not prepared to insist on this provision, clause 46. I think that we ought to approach this question in a spirit of fairness to all interests concerned. When we come to legislate on prohibition, it will be another matter; but we are now legislating in the direction of the regulation of the liquor traffic. Objections have been urged against the principle of petition, and perhaps a good deal is to be said against it. All I think we are entitled to now, however, is to have restored to us the provisions which were taken away by the Scott Act. It will be remembered that the old Dunkin Act of 1864, permitted electors in minor municipalities to vote in favor of prohibition; but under the Scott Act of 1878, this right was taken away and prohibition was confined entirely to county municipalities. I think that the temperance people of the country are entitled to have restored to them, either in this Bill or by amendment to the Scott Act, what the latter took away; and it would be better that we should either adopt the amendment of the hon. member for Rouville, or receive some guarantee from the Government that they are prepared to accord it either at this or at next Session, by amending the Scott Act. This seems to me to be a fair proposition; and I think it will meet with the approbation of the House, both of temperance men and of those who represent the licensed victuallers. The hon. member for Victoria made some reference to the evils which flowed from the enforcement of prohibition in minor municipalities; but in my constituency some years ago two townships adopted the Temperance Act, and since then have successfully resisted all efforts to repeal that Act, so that it is still there the law. I saw the gentleman in charge of the Bill smile a moment ago at the remark I made with regard to the by-law in force in my own town. I would just refer to it here, because I will ask for an amendment to prevent the issue of shop licenses under this Act. It will be remembered that the Ontario Municipal Act of 1866, irrespective of the provisions of the Dunkin Act, permitted Municipal Councils to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in shops, if they so thought proper. Under it, the municipality in which I live took action, and in 1869 the sale of liquor in shops was prohibited, and this has never been repealed. When we come to subsequent sections we will be able, I think, so to amend this Bill as to prevent the issuing of licenses in this municipality, which is perhaps the only one in the Province where such a state of things exists.

Mr. GIGAUT. I have no objection to vote for clause forty-six, as reported by the Committee; but I heard some supporters of the Government and others say that they had some objections against the petition system, and that is why I gave notice of the amendment I have moved. It has been said that the right hon. Premier promised—I do not know whether this is true or not—that none of the restrictions enacted by the Provincial Legislatures would be removed. We know that in Quebec that our local councils have always had the right to prohibit the sale of liquors. Since Quebec has existed, this right has always been given to municipalities. Even cities have a special clause in their charters, declaring that their councils had the right to prohibit the sale of liquors. This principle has been admitted into our Statutes and has there remained. The Scott Act was adopted in 1878, but the Quebec Legislature has never thought of amending the local law I have mentioned. We have the Scott Act in force, I think, in very few of our counties, but practically we have it—under the local law—in many municipalities. I think that one of the great defects in the Ontario law was that the people did not sufficiently control the granting and renewal of licenses. That is not my affair. The Ontario members can keep their law to suit themselves; but I think that the people of the Province should have more control in this matter. This it was what they complained of in England, and we saw that on the 22nd of April last a motion was carried in the British House of Commons, recognizing the principle that the persons mostly interested were the inhabitants themselves, and that consequently they should have some control over the granting or the renewal of licenses. The following is a motion which was moved in the House of Commons by Sir Wilfrid Lawson:—

"That the best interests of the nation urgently require some efficient measure of legislation by which, in accordance with the resolution already passed and reaffirmed by this House, a legal power of restrain-ing the issue for renewal of licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors may be placed in the hands of persons most deeply interested and affected, namely, the inhabitants themselves."

The system which we have had in the Province of Quebec has worked well, so that there have been no complaints against it; and since we have been dealing with this matter in this House I have received a great many letters from different portions of the Province of Quebec, and they all say that if in the legislation which we are now proposing there is no disposition to give to a majority in the municipalities or to the local councils the right of prohibition, it will be the most unhappy law which was ever enacted for the Province of Quebec. Public sentiment in the Province of Quebec is strongly in favor of the Bill just as it has been reported by the Committee. At a meeting of grocers held in the city of Montreal, when one of the grocers of Toronto tried to urge those who were present to get the French members to vote against this Bill, the Secretary of this meeting, who is a grocer himself, said he was sure that the great majority of the Province of Quebec were in favor of the Bill as reported, and that the members who would vote against this Bill would have great difficulty in being elected again. This local option may not have worked well elsewhere, but in our Province it has worked exceedingly well. During the discussion on the Local Option Bill in the English House of Commons, Mr. Hill a member of that House, spoke of the Province of Quebec. He said:

"A few words with reference to the condition of things in countries where prohibition existed might guide the House in coming to a conclusion as to what the effect of the resolution of the hon. Baronet would be if it became law in this country. The first place he would mention was in North America, where, after going up the St. Lawrence and crossing the Charles River, they would in proceeding shortly pass through the parish or town of Beauport, where the old inhabitants of French extraction were completely under the influence of the clergy. The priests have brought their influence to bear so strongly that not only was no intoxicant of any kind sold there but none was kept by any person. All were agreed to banish it; and throughout the length and breadth of either the Eastern or Western hemisphere not a better conducted, more happy, or more moral set of persons could be found than they were."

This is true, and I am happy to say, that in a great many parishes and counties in the Province of Quebec the greatest sobriety prevails, and the population of those parishes are very happy. But I may say, that if you have not local option, if our parishes and municipal councils have not the right of prohibiting the sale of liquors, then the inhabitants of those parishes may bid adieu to that happiness which they have enjoyed heretofore; and if drunkenness prevails in those parishes they will have just reason to make strong complaint against the legislators who have enacted such legislation as to force liquor shops and public-houses upon the municipalities, against the wishes of the majority of the electors. The House must remember, that in the Province of Quebec we have only about 1,300 tavern licenses, while in the Province of Ontario they have more than 3,100 licenses, which is a proof that in a great many parishes we have no licenses as the result of local option. We know that the best license law which was ever enacted, according to authors who have dealt with this subject, is the one enacted in Sweden. We know that in Sweden drunkenness was prevailing to the highest degree, and the people appealed to their legislators, and asked them to adopt such legislation as would lessen the evils of intemperance. One of the Kings of Sweden said that he would give the finest jewels of his crown to any legislator who would find some means of lessening the evils of intemperance. The Legislature began to study that question, and the result was that in 1855 the License Act of that country was adopted. What has been the result?

"As already stated, the Act allowed of local prohibition; and under it the traffic in spirits was not licensed at all in certain parishes, and greatly restricted in others."

The British Consul, in a letter to Mr. Gladstone, says:

"So vigorously have the people outside of towns, used their permission to limit and prohibit, that among 3,500,000 there are only 450 places for the sale of spirits."

Further on he says:

"The social condition of Sweden, as in Scotland, England and Ireland, and indeed everywhere else, proves that just in proportion as you limit the number of houses for the sale of intoxicating liquors you improve the morality and social well-being of the district; and in like manner as you multiply the facilities for drinking, you increase drunkenness with its never failing attendants of crime, beggary, and irreligion."

He states further:

"One result of the passing of this Act was the reduction of the number of distilleries from 44,000 in 1850, to 4,500; and with the aid of auxiliary legislation to 457 in 1869, and a reduction of the annual product from 26,000,000 to 6,900,000 gallons."

In Ontario, the Crooks Act was adopted, and according to the report of the License Commissioners, I see that under that Act the number of licenses in 1874, under the old law, was 6,185, and which been reduced under the operation of that Act by 2,247. I find also that the consumption of spirits was also reduced, there having been consumed in 1874, 4,566,609 Imperial gallons, and in 1876, after the number of licenses had been reduced by more than 2,000, there was a consumption of only 3,441,125 Imperial gallons—a reduction of more than 1,125,384. Some persons may say that there was a crisis in 1876, but we had good times during 1879, 1880, 1881, 1882, and yet during any one of these years there was a reduction in the consumption of spirits, compared with the year 1874, by more than 1,000,000 Imperial gallons. So that we see that legislation may have a good effect, and consequently we should have the greatest interest in adopting a law which would tend to reduce the number of licenses, and consequently, to reduce the consumption of liquors. When we go electioneering, we always tell the electors that they are very intelligent and well acquainted with the administration of the affairs of the country. With what face shall we meet the electors if we say here that we cannot trust them even in the matter of granting a hotel or saloon license? Now, I say that the question is one of the most important which has been discussed in this House. It is far more important than the building of the Canadian Pacific Railway or any other question which we have dealt with; and I am sure, if we adopt a License Act at this Session, without inserting a local option clause, it will be one of the most unpopular measures which could be enacted, at all events in the Province of Quebec. I think we should deal with the matter in a very serious manner. We say that we wish to promote temperance; we say that we wish to pass legislation which will render the homes of our countrymen more happy and comfortable. If we wish to do so, we must be taught by the experience of other countries; and when, in everything else, we recognize the right of consulting the people, we should try in this Dominion the same legislation that has produced so much good elsewhere.

Mr. BLAKE. I am very glad, Sir, that this poor little legislative wail and stray, this little bantling, which has been disowned by all its putative fathers, is to receive the support of my hon. friend, while those who ought to be its natural guardians are prepared to cast it out upon the world. The hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Gigault) has told us why he proposes his alternative. It was not that he was dissatisfied with the clause; but he thought he would get more support for this long parable than he would for three or four sections in the Bill. I think he is mistaken. I think the hon. gentlemen who found fault with his clause were gentlemen who did not want local option at all; and the objection is often made in the same way to the form in order to get at the substance. We have already agreed to the principle of the hon. gentleman's amendment. We have agreed that a petition signed by one-third of the electors should be entitled to apply for a license; we have agreed that a petition signed by two-thirds of the electors should be favorable to the granting of a license, and having agreed to that mode of deciding, it seems to me reasonable that we should agree to the same mode of deciding that there should be no licenses at all in a district. If we oppose this proposition we should go back, and decide against admitting the clauses allowing certain portions to be decided by the people. The form is a rigid form—a form, as I pointed out before, not merely requiring a majority of all those who go to the polls, but an actual majority of all the electors in a division. The hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Cameron) objected, because, he said, it had been proved by experience that prohibition in minor districts is a bad thing. I do not think it has been proved by experience. On the contrary, my belief is that, if anything is more established than another, with reference to the plague of drink, it is that, the fewer the facilities, the less the plague, and that, if you can limit the number of drinking places, you will have less drinking. It is quite true that, if your law be such that it is a dead letter, and your ostensible limitation means an increased number of drinking shops, then you do not limit the drinking facilities. But you have already adopted the proposal that two-thirds of the electors in any polling division may petition, and with absolutely fatal effect, against the granting of any licenses in that division; and so, by adopting that cumbrous procedure, the people may prohibit in that division. Now, why not permit those in a larger area—those of a municipal organization, which the present proposition deals with—if they please, to declare, by an absolute majority, that there shall be no licenses within their municipality. It is quite true, that will not be so perfect a protection against the plague of drink, as if the people were enabled to effect the absolute prohibition within a larger area. It is quite true, it would be much more advantageous if instead of one township having no liquor sold within its limits, you had a large area of township in which there was no liquor sold. It was that that the advocates of the Temperance Act sought to accomplish, and it is that that they will accomplish in those cases in which there is a diffused popular sentiment within the area—a sentiment prevalent in the different parts of the district in favor of their view. We are now dealing with the case of a municipality in which an absolute majority of all the electors signify their desire that there shall be no licenses within that municipality; and I say it is a good and wise provision which secures a very decided preponderance in favor of prohibition within the municipality, and it will produce good results. It is quite true that the drunkards in the municipality will go outside and get drink; but they will not get so much as they would if it were sold in the municipality; and those who live in it, and are liable to be tempted—the young men—will be less liable to wrong when they have to go outside of the bounds of the organization to get their liquor. Therefore, I regard it as a most valuable thing to secure prohibition in a small area if you cannot get it in the larger area. To say in the face of what we know exists in the Province of Quebec, where we have heard from time to time from hon. members of there being two or three or four townships or municipalities within their counties in which no licenses were sold, because the people did not choose there should be any issued, and that good results have flowed from that—to say in the face of that you are going to do away with the right of the majority of the people in a municipality to prohibit the sale of liquor, is to tell us the most precious part of the Bill you proffer to us is to be blotted out by your own act.

Mr. McCARTHY. We have listened with pleasure to this temperance address of my hon. friend, but we are not here as a temperance meeting. We are here for the purpose of giving practical legislation for the people. If there is one thing we ought to be careful of, it is not to legislate in advance of public opinion, not to put a law on our Statute-books which will be disregarded. Whatever may be the state of public opinion in Quebec, I hold this law is to be a law for the whole Dominion, and we have endeavored in the Committee to so arrange this measure that it would be acceptable to the people at large. I was opposed to the forty-sixth section from the first, and am perfectly consistent in opposing it still, but it is a different thing to say I should be opposed to the proposition of my hon. friend in amendment. What is the proposition in the Bill, and how does it compare with the law? My hon. friends opposite who are so eloquent in favor of temperance, took from the people, when in power some five years ago, the right to have the sale of liquor suppressed in local municipalities. They professed to speak in the name of temperance when they contended that the law would be ineffective in smaller municipalities than counties and cities, and substituted for the Dunkin Act the Scott Act which only allows prohibition in large places, because they believed that to be the only practical measure that could be given effect to. My hon. friend had then not one word to say against this, but was dumb when the Dunkin Act was repealed and the Scott Act substituted for it. To-night he asks that, by simple petition, without an opportunity being given of hearing both sides, it shall be decided in a place whether liquor shall or shall not be sold. We know now, that where the Scott Act is in force, a large petition has to be presented; we know that after that petition has been presented and the question debated, frequently the majority of the voters, on hearing what has to be said on both sides, do not support the law, and the people who signed the petition are found, as my hon. friend told us they were in his own case, turning their backs on their presentation and not giving that moral support to the law without which no law can be effective. If we are now to restore the power to have prohibition in local municipalities, let us know what we are doing and do it with moderation becoming to the House. I do not believe any of us would be satisfied with a prohibitory law simply enacted by the vote of a majority which might at the very next opportunity declare themselves, in the same way, opposed to the law. We ought without hesitation to reject the clauses in the Bill I have presented, and consider then the other question suggested by the hon. member for Rouville, and see whether that can be a proper measure or not. Is this question which has been raised by the hon. member for Durham germain to the matter before the House? We are not here dealing with a prohibitory law. The Committee was not struck for the purpose of passing a minor Scott Act, but for the purpose of regulating the trade in intoxicants—not for the purpose of saying that in particular localities there should or should not be prohibition. That does not appear to me to be at all germain to the Act. I would much prefer to see this question brought up in connection with the Scott Act. I want to see the Scott Act made as effective as possible. I desire that in those places in which Parliament thinks the people ought to have the power of determining whether there should or should not be prohibition—prohibition, if decided on, should be made effective beyond measure; but if in one village there is practical prohibition, while in the neighboring localities there are licensed houses—if a small area is to be deprived of licensed houses, while they are allowed to exist on the border, what practical prohibition have you got? That was the reason which induced Parliament to say prohibition could not be effective, unless enforced in places as large as a city or county. If prohibition should be restored, it ought to be restored by amendment to the Scott Act. What does the amendment of the hon.

member for Rouville propose? It proposes that upon a petition by a limited number, presented to one of the Commissioners, and on his being satisfied—as the Governor in Council would be under the Scott Act—that the requisition has been signed by electors duly qualified and registered, he will call a meeting of the electors to vote for or against the prohibition, and upon the result of that vote, the law will be determined in that particular municipality. I see no objection to carrying out that proposal. If hon. gentlemen opposite were serious, if they were not simply attempting to embarrass those who are endeavoring to make a good license law—

Mr. BLAKE. In maintaining the decision of the Committee.

Mr. McCARTHY. My hon. friend is actuated by the express purpose of embarrassing those who have endeavored to give, and have given, the best liquor law ever given to any House. His friends have been in power in Ontario for years with a large majority, and whatever view may be taken of this Bill, it is a great step in advance of anything adopted in that Province. My hon. friend was in power for four years, and the result was the Scott Act, which has proved wholly inefficient. He is now endeavoring to embarrass those people who take a different view from him, but who are as true friends to the cause of temperance as he or any of his friends. What we have to decide is, whether we shall accept the amendment. If the Committee believe it is wise we should pass an insufficient prohibitory law of this kind, I have no objection to allow these areas to be made smaller than by the provisions of the Scott Act. The question is whether it is wise, at this late hour, to attempt to pass a law which, no doubt, will require amendment and be dealt with thoroughly at the next Session.

Mr. DESJARDINS. I do not wonder that in a Bill of this kind, we must meet with difference of opinion. For my part, I am afraid that if the amendment be adopted, it would create so much difficulty and expense in the municipalities that it would be effectively doing away with the clause altogether. As far as our experience in the Province of Quebec goes, local option has worked much better than the Scott Act. We find that local option has worked better than the Scott Act, because where local option was adopted, public opinion was strong enough to sustain the law to its fullest extent, while it has often happened that where the Scott Act was adopted, the law has been a failure, because it was in advance of public opinion, so that the good effect we expected from a vote in a large area was practically nullified. In view of these circumstances, I think the 46th clause ought to be accepted, more especially as we have accepted the same principle in the 32nd clause. If it is found that such a provision would not be beneficial to temperance, I would suggest that instead of a majority, the petition should be signed by two-thirds of the electors. Since we have adopted the principle for a single license, I think we should adopt it for the whole; it reflects the same opinion and it ought to have the same weight in one as in the other. I would, therefore, move as an amendment to the amendment: "That no license shall be granted for the sale of liquors within the limits of a municipality or parish, if there is deposited in the office of the Chief Inspector a petition signed by two-thirds of the electors."

Mr. FOSTER. This is a very important question, and I do not think it is any reason, because it is late in the night and late in the Session, that we should pass this over without first discussing it as fully as the case demands. The question of local option with reference to licenses for the sale of liquors, is now a recognized one in almost all Anglo Saxon countries. If we look at Great Britain, as has been said by my hon. friend opposite, we will find that local option principles have made great progress within the last few years. In 1864, Sir Wilfrid Lawson first brought up the idea of local prohibition. The fight has been carried on, and the first victory was won in 1880, when the British Parliament passed a local option resolution, by a majority of 26; in 1882, the resolution was carried by a majority of 46, while in 1883 it passed by a majority of 87. In 1883, there was no counter motion in direct opposition to it, and the mover of the resolution, as well as many who spoke upon it, laid down the doctrine, from which they would not depart, that the people in certain areas—and these not very large areas—ought to be the supreme and ultimate arbiters as to whether they should have any liquor shops in their midst, how many they should have, and the character of them. I think that is something which may guide us as well in our deliberations. In New South Wales, in Sydney, and I think in Victoria, they have a local option clause in their local Acts. I know of very few Liquor Acts in the United States which have not this local option clause, giving to the small municipalities the right of prohibition within their areas. But I put the strongest argument for the recognition of the principle of local option upon what we already possess in the Dominion of Canada. We have heard a good deal about vested rights, we have heard a good deal about putting violent hands upon vested rights. Now, my hon. friend who has charge of this Bill, stated here in Committee, that he differed from other members of the Committee with reference to this clause, and, as I differed from him, I may also state my views in this Committee. I was strongly in favor, in Committee, of the local option principle being applied. When the so-called Scott Act was passed in 1878, it was made applicable simply to counties, but at the same time it did not take from Quebec, nor from Nova Scotia, nor from any other Province in the Dominion, any power which they possessed by virtue of their existing laws, and it was a good argument and could not be impugned—that these other laws that then existed, and about the validity of which there was no question, should remain for the smaller municipalities, and one would be given which was fitted for the larger municipalities, for the county, and for the city. That makes quite a difference in this matter. Now, if we look at vested rights, what do we find? Down in Nova Scotia at this moment, no man can obtain a license unless he gets two-thirds of the ratepayers to sign his application, and unless this is endorsed by two-thirds of the Grand Jury, and then it goes before the Sessions, which may ultimately refuse to grant the request. By the License Law of New Brunswick, if the majority in any municipality petition against licenses, no license can be granted. If you go to Quebec, you find that in the cities of Montreal and Quebec the majority petitioning against any single license may block it. In municipalities, a majority sending in a petition may block a license, while the municipal councils have also the right to prohibit within their areas. If we go over to Manitoba we find still greater restrictions; a man has to get sixteen out of twenty of the nearest resident householders to sign his certificate before he can get his license, and if five put in a petition against it, the license cannot issue. In British Columbia you find, outside of Victoria, that two-thirds of the persons over twenty years of age have to sign a certificate before the license can be granted. Now, what I wish to impress upon this Committee is this: that these are vested rights, and they are just as dear and precious rights as are the financial or nominal vested rights of any person who keeps a hotel and sells liquor across the bar. We must look at these facts, and I think it would be a very harmful thing, a very monstrous thing—if you will permit me that expression—that we should legislate these rights away from these six Provinces and not give them a fair equivalent in return. Now, I am not wedded to the manner in which this return shall be expressed. What I want is to have the principle acknowledged and embodied, I do not care very much whether it is by petition or by open vote. Some prefer one and some the other, but I am most anxious, not only for the cause of temperance, but for the goodwill afterwards of the public to this Bill, that it shall not disturb those long-continued vested rights which are held very dear by the people who have them. I tell you that it is something after a country has through fifty years of struggle and difficulty risen to the height of this social legislation, of being able to prevent a license being granted unless two-thirds of the electors sign a certificate for it in any small area. In the county represented by my hon. friend from Yarmouth, I think there has not been a license granted for forty years. I think in those districts and in the smaller places which have the right under Provincial legislation to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors, it would be too bad if we were to take those rights from them and give them nothing in return. "Oh, well," but says one, "you have the Scott Act and can apply that." But there is this difficulty: the Scott Act only applies to counties or cities, and not to small municipalities. "We must have a majority," says one, "in order to carry out the law." This very provision then is to ensure a majority in favor of prohibition, otherwise it cannot be carried, and a majority has to be got in the district where the law has to be carried out, which is very different from having a majority over a county and in portions of which county where there is no majority in favor of the Act. All these difficulties arise with respect to local option and the Scott Act, and I beg hon. members to bear them in mind and be perfectly fair in considering the question. It is asked by some: Why are these laws not enforced? Why? Because no machinery is provided to enforce them. It is more than any Legislature can expect that any people will, even after years of long-continued conflict, themselves carry the law into execution. Take the Canada Temperance Act. If it is adopted in a county, there is no machinery by which it is to be put in force. I know hon. members will be fair enough to say that, before you judge the merits of an Act, and of the principles embodied in an Act, adequate machinery must be employed to enforce the law, and if it does not work well, then, and not till then, can you find fault with the Act, because before that you have not given it a fair trial. I wish to call attention to some of the parties who have asked for this. Not only is there this strong demand with respect to vested rights, but there is coming up a strong demand in favor of the principles contained in this measure. One thing is significant: I have never seen a measure brought before Parliament or legislation discussed in the country, treated by the press of different parties with so much unanimity of sentiment as this measure now before the House. There have been differences of opinion as to Provincial and Federal jurisdiction; but after those differences the ideas expressed have been almost unanimous—an acclaim of sentiment that this is a good Bill; and one of the features most favorably commented on, more favorably perhaps than any other, is that which strikes the popular heart, which appeals to the popular mind, and which we can never erase from it, and never should—that in the ultimate analysis the people of the district who have to support the taverns and bear the brunt of all the evils that may come from them, are the proper persons to say whether they will have them or will not have them. I want to say something in regard to the licensing power. I believe this Licensing Board is almost an ideal Licensing Board, and I do not think hon. gentlemen will find fault with the Board as appointed, as compared with any other licensing authority there is in this Dominion. But I want to say this as well: it is not perfect and is not balanced until you place over and against that somewhat irresponsible authority the will of the people as well; and when you place the veto power of the people in connection with that somewhat autocratic Board which gives the licenses, you will have a proper balance, and then you will have an ideal license-granting power. And I do hold and argue for this in order to make a balance in this respect. We have it stated on one side of the question that it may be hard for a man who has been engaged in business for a number of years to be by the will of the people prevented from any longer carrying it on. But will any hon. gentleman deny this proposition: that there never is a bar opened in any community and continued for one year, but some home had to feel the danger, anxiety and evil results that come inevitably from the opening of that bar. That is another side of the question. Financial injuries on the one side must be balanced and weighed against social injuries on the other side. We must look at the matter fairly, and if there comes a period when the majority of the people in a community feel that their morals will be better, the order and happiness of society will be increased, in the name of all that is democratic in the Government, all that is good in social life and in morals, do not let us put them outside of the power of being able to gain that for which they ask. Why is it that this traffic fears to face the people? Is it for fear of condemnation? If that be so, I say no legislation of ours will ever avail in the long run to keep alive a traffic which fears the public voice, and which does not care to have the public will expressly declared without any intervention or subterfuge in regard to it. We must recollect that there is an advancing tide in the opinions of this country, and of England and other countries as well. The Legislature which legislates on the liquor traffic to-day dare not retrograde on the legislation of yesterday, but by every impulse of public opinion, growing and increasing daily, it is inevitably forced to a higher tide-mark than it reached yesterday in its legislation. So it is not sufficient to say that this Bill goes just as far as the most stringent legislation we have. In order to meet that rising public opinion it must go a little further, and this Bill does go further, and I, as a member of this party and of this House, hail the day when this Bill will have passed through Parliament with its principal provisions undamaged. It shows to me not only that temperance sentiment is increasing in this country, but it shows also that the public mind of the Parliament of the country holds itself, as it always ought, somewhat sensitive to public opinion, and determined to go as far as that public opinion would carry. That it should go further, I think, no legislator and no wise man would assert; but that it should come up to that point, I think, every legislator and wise man would assert. I say, let us heed the representations of men who have much to do in connection with this matter. We, moving about in our technical and professional pursuits, having little, comparatively, to do with the work of society and the world, do not know all the evils going on in every grade of society as do those who are doing the work—for what? Not for their own interest, but in order to make public morals better, and to carry out the principles of the religion which they profess. I hold in my hand a petition which, I think, is of very great importance. It is a petition from a number of the clergy of the Province of Quebec, the Catholic clergy, the Church of England clergy, and the Protestants as well. It is signed by the Archbishop of Quebec, the Bishops of Three Rivers, Rimouski, Montreal, Sherbrooke, Ottawa, St. Hyacinthe, Chicoutimi, Cethère, and clergymen of other denominations; and that petition contains among others a provision embracing this request, that in any legislation here no retrograde step should be made as regards privileges enjoyed under Provincial legislation, and that in the Bill there should be a clause that every certificate necessary to obtain a license should be signed by one-half of the ratepayers, or that at least the signatures of at least one-half the ratepayers against the application should prevent the license being granted. I ask attention to that petition which has been laid before the House from another large body in this country, the Dominion Alliance, a body which has an organization in every Province in this country, men who are not engaged for any selfish purpose, men whose expenses have to come out of their own pockets, and whose time is given to this cause, and who work in this cause. This petition embodies the request, the best request of the temperance sentiment of the country, praying that this provision be inserted and the local option for these localities be given as a right which the people hold dear, and a right which if exercised will do much towards the betterment of the country in respectability in every municipality, and so I think that this request should have some weight as well. I will not tire the House by speaking longer on this question. I will only say this in conclusion, I do want this principle of local option; I want it to be embodied, and embodied in a workable way in this Act; and I believe that if we do it, as I believe we shall do it, that it will meet with the approval of the country, and that it will be a decision and conclusion which the people of this country will carry out. I know something of the opinion in the Province of Ontario as well, and I have no hesitation in saying that it is my firm belief that if to-morrow you could poll the Province of Ontario and give a decision with reference to this matter, you would poll a majority in favor of giving to the people of these localities a veto power upon the liquor traffic in their localities.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am sure that the whole Committee must have listened with great pleasure to the speech we have just heard from my hon. friend behind me; and it must be satisfactory to the Committee who have framed the Bill, that in his opinion—and he was one of the powers of it—it deserves his laudations. However, we are now discussing the forty-sixth clause of the Bill and the amendment; and the question now before the Committee, is, whether the principle of petition is to be adopted, or the principle of open voting as suggested by the hon. gentleman in the amendment. As I have already stated during the discussion of this Bill, I am opposed to the petition system; and I hope that my hon. friend from Hochelaga will reconsider his expressed opinion in that regard. The hon. member from West Durham said: "Oh, but this Committee has already committed itself—twice—to the principle of petition; first on the application for a license, and then on the question of depriving a person of his license, or in refusing a license for a specified purpose;" and therefore he said they have committed themselves in these two cases and should carry out the principle of petition here. Why, there is no similarity between these two cases and this one. This is a license system for the purpose of regulating trade in intoxicants. The whole aim and end of the Bill, with the exception of this single clause, is for the purpose of the regulation of the sale of intoxicants and not for the prohibition of it. Why, in the first case, it is merely to give a prima facie color to the claims of the party to get a license, and that petition does not decide the matter. This merely gives the applicant a prima facie right to go before the Board of Commissioners and ask for his license—there is the governing power. The first petition only opens the door by which the applicant to keep a tavern can come before the governing, the licensing power; and therefore there can be no comparison, no similarity between that case and this, because this petition is the governing power. If this clause passes as framed, then there is no appeal. The petition is prepared; it is final; it decides whether a party is to get his license—

Mr. BLAKE. The petition decides whether there shall be any license or not.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Or rather, as the hon. gentleman has said, this petition prevents the possibility of a party getting a license. The petitioners in signing the petition are placed by this clause in the position of authority, and with the power which is ultimately in the other case of granting a license vested in the Board of Commissioners. I shall not ask the question with respect to the action in the carrying out of this clause by petition. I am strongly opposed to it. I believe that it will not meet with the approbation of the country. I believe that the country will not agree to it. I believe that the country will prefer the system which now exists under the Scott Act, and which is to be carried out under the amendment of my hon. friend. But my hon. friend from Hochelaga says it will be very difficult to carry it out, and expensive. Why, not so very expensive as are the annual elections in every county and municipality. There is a little trouble and a little expense, but that goes on from year to year, and every year in every county, and in every township, where there are municipal institutions, and the people do not grumble at the expense, or at the difficulty experienced in that way. They decide, they meet every year, and they form their whole municipal organization; and why will they not meet for the purpose of settling a question like this? I shall, in the first place, vote for the amendment as against the present resolutions; and I really hope that the majority of the Committee will vote for the amendment. It is a very serious thing to interfere with vested rights. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman who spoke so eloquently last, that there are two sorts of vested rights. The people have vested rights in good Government in the same way that the people who have invested their fortunes in a particular trade, have in it vested rights, and under the protection of the law. When parties have invested their money and gone into a trade, and their wealth, their position, their future, and perhaps the future of their families, depend upon their being protected in that trade, I think that while individual rights must yield to the public good, yet you should take care that in the over-anxiety to press what you think is the public good, you do not ruin the individual or prejudice the individual, if there is any mode by which he can be fairly protected. Now, the great objection to this system of petition under this clause, is the utter uncertainty which must exist in the mind of every publican, every inn-keeper, every hotel-keeper, as to whether he may not at any moment be deprived of his means of existence, and whether his property and his house, in which all his means have been invested—the whole of that may not be swept away and he be ruined; and it is not for the public advantage that this uncertainty should exist. What is the public advantage with respect to hotels?—that they should be large, commodious, and respectable. How can you expect, is it reasonable to expect, as we all know that capital is very timid and easily frightened, that we will have Windsor Hotels, Rossin Houses, or Queen's Hotels put up, and have large sums invested in them, when at any moment they may, by petition signed behind the back of the proprietor, be obliged to close their doors and their houses, thereby rendering them actually valueless. The consequence will be, so long as the uncertainty exists as to whether this clause may be put in force at any time, people will not invest their money in these buildings, and you have all over the country an inferior class of hotels and inferior accommodation. If parties keep these houses upon such an uncertain tenure as the casual feeling of the municipality they will not invest in large, expensive buildings, but rather in an inferior kind of buildings, so that the loss may not be so great if at any time local option should decide against hotels altogether. This feeling that they will be ruined if they erect large and respectable hotels will spread through the country, and a feeling of dread will be produced that the whole business will be destroyed, and this in turn will produce the consequences which I have mentioned. On the other hand, if there is to be a solemn vote taken, if the people come forward and vote on their responsibility, if the will of the people is thus publicly declared in the eyes of the world, then, if these parties suffer it cannot be helped. Then comes in the doctrine that the individual must yield to the public good, and you have, at all events, given the individual whose interests are affected the opportunity of seeing the people and meeting them before the election, and at the election, and presenting and urging his case. As between the two questions I shall support most strongly the amendment, and I hope it will be adopted by the House.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I regret exceedingly the course taken by the hon. leader of the Government on this question. I understood, from the public press, and statements made on various occasions, that the proposition of the Government was not to relax any of the restrictions placed on the liquor traffic. I think he has stated that himself, in this House, in the debates which have taken place upon this matter, and, at all events, it has been stated for him in the public press. Now we find that these restrictions are to be seriously relaxed. We have had it stated, over and over again, that in the Province of Ontario, for example, where the majority can veto a license, and where they have vetoed them year and year after year, there shall be no relaxation, but unless this clause is adopted, that privilege will be relaxed. The same remark applies to Nova Scotia, New Brunswick, Prince Edward Island—in fact, to every Province in the Dominion—so that the proposition of the hon. gentleman is a very great relaxation of the restrictions which are at present imposed on the liquor traffic. The hon. gentleman says that people will be ruined if this petition system is adopted. What did the hon. member for Hochelaga (Mr. Desjardins) say? It has prevailed in the Province of Quebec for many years, and has the hon. gentleman shown that people have been ruined by that system? Not at all. The hon. gentleman says the people will be ruined by the system of petition, but if the electors are allowed to go forward and cast their solemn vote, they cannot be ruined—in other words, they can be ruined by petition, but not by vote.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Where is the relaxation?

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). The relaxation is that instead of the simple and inexpensive process of option which prevails in that Province, the hon. gentleman proposes a more difficult and expensive one. He says we will have no respectable hotels if this prevails—we will have no Windsor House, no Rossin House. The Windsor House of Montreal, I believe, was built where this right of petition prevails, so that we have the example of one of the largest and most respectable of the hotels of the Dominion erected in the very teeth of the system which the hon. gentleman condemns. He says that the petition system is uncertain—that petitions may be presented without the other side being heard. We have in this country a very good understanding on both sides of that question. The people understand thoroughly well the effect of the liquor traffic in communities and the effect of prohibiting it. This is not a question upon which there is any necessity of arguing, for every person in Canada who has arrived at the age of maturity knows that the effect of increasing the facilities for drinking is to increase the amount of drinking, and the effect of limiting these facilities is to reduce the amount of drinking. The hon. gentleman says that vested rights must be respected. Does the hon. gentleman protect vested rights in every instance? In clause 42 the hon. gentleman proposes practically to reduce the number of licenses that can be issued, as compared with the number that can be issued in Ontario under the Crooks Act. As the hon. member for King's has pointed out, the various Provinces of the Dominion have a vested right in the legislation which has been conceded time after time, and the hon. gentleman now proposes to set aside the vested rights which sober and temperate communities have in that legislation in favor of the vested rights which a few hotel-keepers have in a few hotel buildings. I think the common sense of the people will be in favor of the vested right which the community has in that legislation which prevents the increase of intemperance and the evil consequences which arise from it. The hon. gentleman says that this is a Bill to license and not to prohibit, but assuming that it is, we have prohibitory as well as license enactments in this Bill. The very principle of limiting the number of taverns or hotels, is a principle of prohibition. You limit it in certain respects by requiring that there can be only so many hotels to so many inhabitants. We propose to go a little further and to say that if a majority of rate-payers declare that there shall be no hotels, then there shall be no hotels. The hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) stated that this is one of the best License Bills ever submitted; but if he eliminates this clause, will he be able to say that? I say that it will not be as good a Bill as the Bills they have in Nova Scotia, Manitoba or Prince Edward Island. It is destroying one of the most valuable concessions which were made to the temperance community when the Bill was drafted.

Mr. McCARTHY. Not at all.

Mr. ROSS. I say it is. It is reducing the effectiveness of this Bill so far as these various Provinces are concerned, and it is extending to Ontario the privilege which we have not now. We are charged with embarrassing the hon. member in his Bill, but we are only assisting him. He submitted a Bill and we want to help him carry it out—we are loyal to the measure. To use a common expression, the hon. gentleman is going back on his own Bill; he is embarrassing himself by taking a retrograde step, and we come to his support in the hour of his weakness by voting for the Bill in its integrity. I trust that the House having listened to this discussion so patiently at this late period of the Session and this late hour of the night will now be prepared to vote for the Bill as it was reported from the Committee.

Mr. McCARTHY. I wish to correct a mistake which I think the hon. gentleman who has just spoken, and my hon. friend behind me, have in regard to what are called vested rights in this law. It is quite true that the provision they speak of exists in the Province of Quebec. If that was the law before Confederation, nothing we are proposing to do in this Bill will alter that law. We are not taking away any rights; we are dealing with this question, because, according to the decision of the Privy Council, the laws passed in the Provinces since Confederation are unconstitutional; but if these laws were in force before Confederation, as I understood the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Gigault) to say, we do not intend to take away anything from the effect of that law, and a saving clause may be introduced to that effect. In New Brunswick there is a similar law; but my hon. friend behind me, unintentionally, no doubt, misled some of us by stating that it was the same in all the other Provinces. Neither in Ontario, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, British Columbia, nor Manitoba, nor in any of the Provinces except the two I have mentioned, is there a local option clause such as is mentioned here.

Mr. DAVIES. Yes, there is.

Mr. McCARTHY. No; there is power in these Provinces to petition against the granting of a license to a particular man.

Mr. BLAKE. In Nova Scotia no license can be obtained, unless two-thirds petition for it.

Mr. McCARTHY. Exactly; but that is not local option, as my hon. friend knows.

Mr. BLAKE. I know that it is local option of the most effective character.

Mr. McCARTHY. The hon. gentleman may quibble about the words, but that is a different thing from the law of local option, and my hon. friend knows it very well.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). In Prince Edward Island, if two-thirds of the people petition against it, no license can be renewed.

Mr. McCARTHY. Yes; and we have made that very provision in this Act. But what we are now dealing with is, in point of fact, an extension of the Scott Act. We are dealing with the question whether it is wise and prudent to extend the Scott Act to a smaller area than a town or city; and hon. gentlemen say, why should not the Scott Act be carried out? The hon. member for West Durham spoke about the majority governing this and governing that. I ask, could a law be passed by the majority of this House signing a petition in favor of it? No, we would want to hear it discussed, and decide openly in this House by our votes. So, the question involved here is whether the people shall decide by petition, or by recording their opinions by their votes at the polls. There are local option laws of many kinds, but everyone of them contains a provision for voting. If I am not mistaken, the hon. member for Rouville has taken his amendment from one of the Australian laws; and I would like to know where, in any British colony or British country, any law is made by petition. That is the question before us—whether we are to adopt a petition as final, or whether a vote must be taken. But I do not stand here without authority, and I have an authority which I hope hon. gentlemen opposite will accept. In the Globe of to-day the system is condemned in unmeasured terms, and it is pointed out that the proper way is to submit the question to a vote of the people:

"The clause respecting the exercise of the power of local option on the larger scale provides that where a majority of the Parliamentary electors of a municipality petition against licenses, no licenses shall be granted, and that if they petition for a limitation in the number the Commissioners shall not exceed the limit. Each petition is to have effect until superseded by another indicating a change in the popular will. It is open to serious question how far this system will be at all workable outside of the smaller municipalities, as there is a provision that each petition shall be accompanied by the affidavit of two electors stating that each of the signatures or marks at the foot of the petition is that of the elector indicated by it, he being a Parliamentary elector. Whether this is the intention of the framers of the Bill or not, a strict construction of this clause would make it necessary that the same two electors should swear to the genuineness of every signature on the petition, which would render this method of procedure a practical impossibility in a much smaller city than Toronto. If it is simply the intention that each signature shall be duly authenticated by two electors without its being necessary that the same witnesses should identify all the signatures, the wording of the clause should be changed. It will be a sufficiently arduous undertaking to secure a majority of the electors by the clumsy and cumbersome fashion of getting signatures to a petition—without throwing an insuperable obstacle in the way by requiring the same two witnesses to swear to every man's signature and identity."

And a little further down:

"The Local Government has the municipal machinery in its hands. As an addition to the Crooks Act, local option in the form of a veto, either upon all licenses, new licenses or licenses above a fixed number, would be easily worked. The electors could cast their ballots on this issue at the regular municipal elections, at a very slight additional trouble and expense, as under the Massachusetts law."

And again:

"That such an awkward and cumbersome system should have been adopted to carry into effect the local option principle, is another evidence of the difficulty of dealing with the matter at all."

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). The hon. gentleman did not read that rightly:

"That such an awkward and cumbersome system should have been adopted to carry into effect the local option principle, is another evidence of the criminal blundering of the Dominion Government in attempting to rob the Provinces of their appropriate and constitutional functions."

Mr. McCARTHY. My hon. friend insisted on that "criminal blundering." I think I have said enough to show that these hon. gentlemen ought to read the Globe newspaper.

Mr. ROSS. I want to read another sentence:

"If properly worked in connection with the municipal electoral mechanism, the extension of local option to the limited area of the polling sub-division would be a beneficial reform."

Mr. BLAKE. I do not suppose it is of much consequence what the opinion of the newspaper article is.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. BLAKE. Or of all the newspapers together. We have to decide upon our own judgment, and not upon what these Mentors of the press tell us. But I may say to the hon. gentleman, that if he reads that article as justifying his present action, it certainly is a severe condemnation of the Committee that brought forward the Bill. But I do not so understand it. I understand the last sentence read to mean that the principle of voting provided by that Government which has charge of the municipal machinery could be inexpensively and conveniently applied to local option. We have an annual municipal election at which the electors of our municipalities are called on to vote for the election of their municipal officers, their reeves and councillors, for the year, and those governments—for they have all that portion of the functions of a government—could arrange for the application of the principle of local option by a vote without any additional expense or inconvenience; and I understand the writer to point out—I believe with propriety and justice—that this is a very good reason, in point of convenience, at any rate, for the proposition, that the question of the regulation of licenses should remain with those who have the control of the municipal institutions of the country. I believe that it would be a better plan that a vote should be polled than that it should be decided by petition, if you can procure the polling of a vote without inconvenience to the people and expense.

Mr. McCARTHY. Tell us why we cannot arrange that a vote should take place at the municipal elections.

Mr. BLAKE. I say first of all that the hon. gentleman has not proposed that. He has declared this thing ought not to be dealt with by the Act at all, that it ought to be stricken out and nothing established for it; that it is alien to the Act altogether, that we ought to throw it on one side, and trust to some happy day when the Scott Act, which we have tried without success to have amended in those practical details, should be amended to cover this thing up; and he whose attitude towards the adoption of the principle of local option in this Bill is one of hostility, and his hon. friend beside him, are now endeavoring, under cover of a preference for the amendment of the hon. member for Rouville, to accomplish this object—to spew out of this Bill that which they say is foreign to it, the principle of prohibition altogether. They both tell us it is for the regulation of licenses, not for prohibition, but that they very much prefer the proposition of the hon. member for Rouville, and believe this provision in the Bill is an abominable proposition. It is a most awkward thing, it is such a dreadful clause that those who support it are embarrassing the promoters of the Bill. It is such an atrocious specimen of stupidity and bungling, such an instance of legislative incapacity, that no friends of the cause could sincerely stand up and advocate that it should be retained in the Bill. This clause which, after six weeks' incubation, was formed, and which the hon. First Minister brought into Parliament, is a clause that no sincere man can support. What was the character of the man who brought it forward? And we who maintain the clause, are to be told that we are embarrassing the proposers of the measure. When did they change their minds and come to the conclusion it is an evil clause? My hon. friend from West Elgin says they were converted by the deputations. I believe the difficulties with reference to the proposed amendment are expense and confusion. There is one point, no doubt, in which it is better than the provision in this Bill—that only a majority of those who vote at the poll—if there be a poll—that is required to prevent the license being issued. Therefore, as one desirous to see the opinion of the majority prevail, if I held that the clauses of the hon. member for Rouville were such that in their practical operation they would be carried out by the people, that [particular would do much to recommend them in my eyes; but I am satisfied they are too complicated, and require so much legal expense, that this amendment of the hon. member for Rouville would not be acted upon. I am the more satisfied of that, because I find the foes of local option altogether in favor of it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman has just asked when my hon. friend was converted. We were converted at about the same time as the hon. gentleman was to give his support to the Bill. He is suffering under the keen pangs of remorse. The hon. gentleman is held up in the press to the criticism of his own side, and the Conservative side—he is even shown by his friend, Mr. Bengough, in that great paper, Grip, as weeping—over what? Because this Bill was introduced without his assistance, and really it is a good Bill. He did not wish this introduced, nor Parliament to interfere in any way in this matter.

Mr. BLAKE. Nor do I now.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He did not wish to have any legislation. He has found out that he made a great mistake. Never did a man make so great a political blunder, never did a man show himself so wanting in political sagacity as when, to back up the pretensions of Mr. Mowat, for the mere purpose of backing up his own party in his own Province, he chose to oppose a great measure of reform. He cannot deny it. He is playing the cheap game of patriotism. He does not want a Bill that will redound credit to this House and the Committee, and this measure will redound credit to Parliament. His first speech against the measure showed his true sentiment, and that was to stand by his own party, and his own Province. That was the principle that actuated him, and he now calls us the foes of the temperance cause. Why, I wonder that, notwithstanding all the training and his long experience in Parliament has given him, he would not blush at getting up and throwing that taunt across the floor. A man, who, when he was asked to sit on the Committee declined to go, because he thought that by playing that little game this measure would be thrown over, and he might taunt the Government, as he has tried to do about the Franchise and the Factory Bill, that this was a mere pretence and the Government never intended to carry it out. He kept away and kept his friends away from sitting on that Committee, and now taunts us with not being sincere. The country will know whether we are sincere or not. When the country gets this measure, with or without local option, they will say the Government fulfilled its pledge by bringing down a measure, by taking the best means of getting a good measure, in choosing men of experience in every Province to sit on the Committee, and that we did not desire to get the miserable satisfaction of having it called a mere party measure. On the contrary we invited the hon. leader of the Opposition and my hon. friend from Middlesex, who has been an apostle in the cause, to attend the Committee. We invited the leading members of the Opposition to join in making this a good measure. They stayed away, they would not come, they hoped we would fail, they hoped no measure of this kind would pass; and when they find they are disappointed and that the whole country has declared against them, the hon. gentleman has tried to draw back, to make violent speeches for temperance to make up and atone to the Dominion Alliance, to the Temperance cause in the whole Dominion, for his lack of wisdom, his lack of prevision, his lack of patriotism and his sacrificing the interests of the country and of morality to the miserable spirit of party jealousy.

Mr. BLAKE. Trying to atone to the Dominion Alliance, am I? Has not the gentleman read the resolution of the

Mr. BLAKE.

Dominion Alliance deprecating action of this Parliament on this question?

Mr. McCARTHY. No, no.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes.

Mr. BOWELL. It was before any action was taken.

Mr. BLAKE. Deprecating any action, I said, this Session of Parliament, after the Speech from the Throne had been delivered, after the announcement had been made that it was intended action should be taken. Does the hon. gentleman not know, that sitting here under the shadow of this building, that Alliance pronounced itself against interference with Provincial rights? Make atonement to the Dominion Alliance! Whether I act for or against it, in this or in any other question, I have no call to offer an atonement to the Dominion Alliance, or any other body. I have acted throughout on my conviction; and for the hon. gentleman to tell me that I am trying to atone to anybody, or to make up to anybody, when I am simply endeavoring to persuade him to hold fast by all that is good in this Bill! Am I opposed to amending the Act? Am I proposing a change? Am I proposing something different? I say, stick to what is good in the Act. If the country has received his measure in any respect with pleasure or satisfaction, why is it? Has not the hon. member for King's (Mr. Foster) told him that it has been received upon its merits, as a measure of great merit, and that the clause which has most induced that view is the clause which he proposes to obliterate?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Mr. BLAKE. I understood the hon. member for King's to speak in that sense, and a good many other gentlemen on this side of the House understood him to speak in that sense.

Mr. FOSTER. I think the hon. gentleman is probably right, and the House is right. I did say that amongst all the clauses in the Bill, there was none that called forth a more unanimous acclaim of public approval than the one providing for local option. The hon. gentleman is right so far as that is concerned, but he is not right when he says that the right hon. gentleman who leads this Government has expressed himself as being determined to vote against that principle in this House.

Mr. BLAKE. I was not at the moment asking the hon. gentleman to vindicate my views of what the First Minister said. I was confining myself to the hon. gentleman's own utterances, and if he will attend to himself, I have no doubt the hon. First Minister will be able to do the same. Now, Sir, we have heard here a discussion of whether I was guilty of an act of unparalleled political stupidity and want of prevision in the course I took at the commencement of this Session. I am inclined to think that, under these circumstances, events will justify me rather than the hon. gentleman. I am inclined to think that what the country will look at is not what the hon. gentleman has proposed, but to what he will do; not what he has brought down, but what he carries, and that the House will look at his action in this light. It must be remembered, in reference to what is called the Scott Act, that it has been found almost impossible to procure the needed amendments to carry that Act into practical execution, and that those who are interested in the Temperance cause were told: "It is dangerous to appeal to Parliament to amend the Scott Act, because you will find that something will happen to destroy it altogether." Something of that nature was tried, and when the amendments came down, there were tacked on to them clauses which would destroy the Scott Act practically. And at this very Session a suggestion was made for amendments to the Scott Act. And the question was whether an attempt should be made to amend it, unless the Government would consent to take the matter in hand, and I believe an appeal was made to the hon. gentleman, and I believe that the hon. gentleman, after taking time to consider it, declined to interfere; and I presume those who were chiefly interested in the Scott Act thought it was imprudent for him to bring it again before Parliament. And so you find that even the peculiarity of the Act that is proposed to-day in this Parliament, the question that you relegated it exclusively to the jurisdiction of this Parliament is placed in the position in which that Act might be impaired at some future day, and so would be beyond remedy by those who would have abandoned it to Provincial jurisdiction. Now, it has been made clear in the discussion to-night that there is a different state of progress on the question of temperance in the different Provinces. Different modes of action on this matter have been adopted in the several Provinces. Have we not heard suggestions made as to the impolicy of obliterating in one Province what has worked well in it, and have we not heard deprecations of doing away with these local provisions in our effort to attain uniformity. An hon. member says that there is no principle of local option in Nova Scotia. I say there is a principle of local option in Nova Scotia of the most satisfactory character. The hon. gentleman says it is not one general local option, because it is applied to any particular license. But, Sir, with a law such as that which provides that no license can be granted to any individual unless he produces a petition signed by two-thirds of the ratepayers of the district, you have the most satisfactory provision for local option that can be conceived—one far more satisfactory than this, because those who are against the granting of the license have not to move at all in the matter, and the man who wants the license has to go to the trouble of securing the two-thirds. In Prince Edward Island, I understand, there is the vote of a majority; in Manitoba, 16 out of 20 are required to sign the certificate; and in New Brunswick it has been conceded by all they have a thorough provision for local option. In Quebec, reference has been made to the provision for local option in cities. But because, in these respects, many of the Provinces are in advance of Ontario, the Province from which I come, are we to run them all down to the point at which it is supposed the law will be satisfactory in our Province? Not at all. I believe we are ready and willing to advance. I believe we are prepared to go onward, and not deprive the other Provinces of that which they have got. I was rejoiced when I saw this clause in the Bill. We are told that I could not acquiesce in the clause with sincerity. Those who brought it in, brought it in, no doubt, in all sincerity, though now they oppose it, decry and condemn it. But I, in my innocence, supposed that it was a good clause, and, for holding that opinion still, I am condemned as insincere, as acting only to embarrass the Government. I was amazed at the action of the First Minister. He told us, when he moved his resolution, the other day, for the introduction of this Bill, that the House would not be asked to concur in the report of the Committee, that the Government would act upon their own responsibility, that they would bring in such a Bill as they thought fit, and when I asked him for some information, he would not tell me anything about the Bill, he introduced his Bill, and the Bill contains the clause. This Bill contains the clause, and yet the hon. gentleman says it is wrong for me to support the clause. I admit that there is a prima facie case against me when I support anything coming from the hon. gentleman, but I hope to be relieved from that position, because I now find he is opposed to it himself.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). The propositions before the Committee are, first: the amendment of the hon. member for Rouville, in favor of a bare majority of the voters given at an open vote deciding the question; and the proposition of the hon. member for West Middlesex, that the petition should be signed by an absolute majority of the qualified electors. I am not in favor of either of these proposals. I do not approve of the principle of local option as applied to minor municipalities; but if I may judge from the remarks made by various speakers, it is probable that a majority of the House now is favorable to a local option clause, and if that be the case, I think it should not be determined by open voting but in accordance with the usual system of voting adopted in Dominion Elections and in nearly all Provincial Elections, by ballot. I think on a question of this kind, especially, it is proper and necessary that the voting should be by ballot. In matters of this kind we cannot trust to open voting, but under the ballot, judging from our Parliamentary experience, men vote according to their honest belief; whereas under open voting they vote according to the influences surrounding them at the time. I, therefore, beg to move, as a further amendment, "that the voting be by ballot, and that instead of a bare majority being required, two-thirds of the duly qualified electors be necessary." If a vote were taken in this way we should not be passing a law against the general sense of the community, which public sentiment would not favor, and therefore could not be administered. The experience under the Dunkin Act warrants me in saying that when a majority was able to carry the law the Act became inoperative, and the cause of temperance, instead of advancing, retrograded, because there was no license and no restraint on the improper sale of liquor, and it was sold indiscriminately.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would ask the hon. member not to press his amendment just now. The question before the Committee is open voting, or voting by petition. Let the first be determined, and motions in regard to details can afterwards be considered.

Amendment (Mr. Gigault) agreed to.

On section 55,

Mr. METHOT. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill, where, in districts where no licenses are granted, the fund is to come from with which to pay the salaries of the Inspectors and the expenses? In the county of Nicolet there has been no licenses issued for thirteen or fourteen years, and in that county there were no funds to pay these officers, simply because every time one came in we always succeeded in throwing him out. That county is a license district, but I do not see how they will have funds to pay the expenses.

Mr. BLAKE. You will have to issue licenses.

Mr. METHOT. That is what I am opposed to, and I am sure that if the principle of local option is left out the Bill will be received with great disfavor in my county.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman now says that the License Commissioners shall be paid out of the license fund. I say that the Commissioners will thereby be placed in a most invidious temptation, and that they will be under great temptation, which, whether they yield to it or not, they will be suspected of yielding. These gentlemen should not be put in the painful position of its being said or suspected that they give licenses to Jones or Smith or somebody else for the purpose of increasing the fund, or otherwise they would not have been paid their salaries.

Mr. SPROULE. When the Dunkin Act came in force in our county, it was said that there would be no machinery to carry it into effect, but it was found that there were still prosecutions to be made, and that the funds arising from these prosecutions was sufficient to pay the Inspectors salaries. With regard to this question of local option, I may say that while the Dunkin Act was carried in our county by a majority of something like 900, we found, after our experience with it, that there was not a man who voted for it the second time to every fifty who voted for it the first time.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I agree with the hon. member for West Durham, that it would be unfortunate to have the Commissioners in any way dependent for their salaries upon the results of the license fund. I believe that whether the license fund be large or small, these men should be paid, as the public is willing to pay those who perform public service. This Bill was reported from the Committee, and though it is true that I took the responsibility of adopting it; still, as I stated, my adoption of it was subject to the full consideration of it by both sides of the House. It will not come in force until the 1st of January next, and by the next Session the Government will be prepared with a measure for the reasonable remuneration of the Commissioners. Whether that measure will make the license fund a Dominion fund, against which will be charged the expenses or not, I am not prepared to say.

Mr. BLAKE. In that case would it not be better not to include the provision proposed by the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy).

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We wish to provide for this fund now.

Mr. McCARTHY. What I understand is this, that the payment of the Commissioners and the Inspectors is not dependent on the amount they collect. Their remuneration will be a fixed sum, and what they collect will go towards it; but if there is any deficiency, it will be made up. But the mischief the hon. gentleman speaks of is to be avoided.

On section 65,

Mr. McCARTHY. This is a new provision: that during meal hour on Sunday liquors may be sold to be used at table, but not otherwise. The clause states from 12 to 2 o'clock p.m. and from 5.30 to 6.30 o'clock p.m. I should suggest that it be left to the municipality to fix the hours, or else from 1.30 to 3 p.m. and from 5.30 to 7 p.m.

Mr. FOSTER. On this question I do not think there is one on either side who believes the implications and allegations which have been so freely made about my position with regard to the matter. The statement was made by Mr. Hodge that in Ontario saloon-keepers were obliged by law to furnish their guests with liquors at any hour of the day between 7 p.m. Saturday and 6 a.m. Monday. I saw his statement shortly before I went into the Committee, before which I presented the opinions of the Alliance. My own observations in Ontario led me to the conclusion that on Sundays, in the principal hotels, there is a constant supply of liquor at least to guests. When I went into the Committee, the Chairman spoke about this matter of restriction. There was certainly no idea by any hon. member of the Committee, certainly not by myself, that there was to be any provision for the indiscriminate sale of liquors on Sunday. The only sale of liquor talked about was to bona fide guests and lodgers. In that Committee, I stated my preference decidedly to having no liquors sold, even for that purpose on Sunday, as I thought it would not be a great hardship for the guests to supply themselves on Saturday night. Then came the option as to whether there should be sale on all hours of Sunday to bona fide guests and lodgers, or for a restricted number of hours; and as between those two, I chose to have it restricted to three hours, rather than have it spread over the day, and this I spoke about as a step in the right direction. That is exactly my position on the question. With reference to newspapers who say this and that about me in connection with this matter, I have nothing to say in this House, but I thought it necessary to make this simple explanation of my position.

Mr. CURRAN. I think this clause makes rather a sweeping change in the law of the Province of Quebec. There for some time the hour for closing on Saturday night was eleven o'clock, but it was subsequently extended to twelve o'clock, and all the year the hour fixed for closing hotels, and bars generally, is twelve o'clock at night. Now, this clause compels all bars to close at seven o'clock in Quebec as well as elsewhere. I do not doubt that a great deal of good will be effected closing the bars earlier on Saturday night, but I think it should be left to the City Councils to determine the hour at which drinking-places shall be closed on Saturday night.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman who suggested some changes in this proviso, spoke of drink being sold to bona fide guests to be used at table. The clause is more extensive, it is to be drunk or used in their private rooms or at the table. Now, I believe this law is extensively evaded as it stands. I must confess I have some doubts as to the consequences of the provision which the hon. gentleman proposes. I believe the result will be that in many places you will have some bona fide guests or lodgers, who is a bona fide guest or lodger for the purpose of having his private room turned into a bar room.

Mr. McCARTHY. I agree with the hon. gentleman and we will strike out private room.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I think if this clause were made so that the sale of liquors on Sundays in hotels were confined to meal hours and to meals alone, the clause would be better than it is. But the second proviso I hope will be struck out altogether—that is, the one that relates to the sale of liquor at any time on Sunday at railway stations. We had a debate here one night concerning the sale of liquors at some railway station where the trains stopped over the whole of Sunday, and the passengers had nothing to do but to loaf around the railway station and drink all the time. Apart from that it is most desirable that the sale of liquor at railway stations should be prohibited altogether. It is a cause of annoyance to respectable passengers and the cause of serious risk and danger to the service of the railway.

Mr. BLAKE. It is a fact that some years ago the Grand Trunk Railway Company paid £5,000 to lessees of the stations on their line who had the right to sell intoxicating liquors in them, in order to curtail that practice in the stations on the line. There is no doubt that where liquor is sold in railway stations and when conductors and engineers and brakemen come in on cold nights, they are subjected to a very strong temptation to drink; and I really think that if the travelling public on the whole would exercise a little self-denial and consent to the abolition of bars at railway stations, they would much conduce to their own safety and to the benefit of the railway employes.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We must remember this clause only applies to Sundays. I would have considerable objection to the suggestion of the hon. member for Cardwell if it applied to the whole week, because people going into a station for dinner or supper might like to have a glass of beer. But we ought to have as little Sunday traffic as possible. In regard to the time for sale on Sunday in the hotels, I really think the proposition of my hon. friend is a good one. I do not think it is advisable that people in a house who, in order to have what they want to drink on Sunday, should be obliged to fill their rooms with it on Saturday night. Whatever the law is, we know, as a matter of fact, when persons are traveling, liquors are used during the whole day, and I believe that respectable hotel-keepers desire to stop that, and to meet only the reasonable wants of their guests; and if this clause is confined to the two periods mentioned by my hon. friend, with the further limitation that it shall only be at table meals, I think the case will be met. It is suggested that liquor should be allowed to be sold from 1 until 3 o'clock, and from 5.30 to 7 o'clock, which would cover the meal hours at the various city and country hotels, and during all the intervening period the bar should be absolutely closed.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). The clause should be struck out. Let liquor be totally prohibited on Sunday, as it now is in New Brunswick.

Mr. FOSTER. Not all through it.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). That is the general law of the Province; there may be special cases, however. The difficulty in fixing the time during which liquors may be sold shows the utter futility of attempting to meet the wants of the people by this clause. What is one man's dinner hour is not another man's dinner hour. If a man was somewhat late to dinner he would be deprived of his grog, and thus the clause does not meet the necessities of the consumers of intoxicating liquors. I think absolute prohibition would conduce very much to the proper observance of the Sabbath, and would tend to lead people's minds in a proper direction. I move that the clause relating to Sunday selling be eliminated.

Mr. COURSOL. If this clause be adopted a large number of citizens, especially in Montreal, will be deprived of common rights which the people of other cities may enjoy. It is well known that a large number of families board permanently at the Windsor House, St. Lawrence Hall, and other Montreal hotels. At the first named, lunch is from 12:30 to 2 o'clock; dinner is not before 7 or 7:30 and is often not taken until 8:30; and thus, under the provisions of this clause the parties would be prevented from having their wine or what they wish. The clause should be extended to the meal hours of those hotels.

Mr. FOSTER. With regard to the hours of sale I hope there will be no change made, and that hope is joined in by many others. In the petition from the Archbishop and Bishop, the thirteenth point they make is this:

"That it may be expressly forbidden for all saloons, taverns, and restaurants to remain open, and for all licensed places to sell intoxicating liquor by retail, on Saturday after seven o'clock at night, or until five o'clock on Monday morning."

That is asked for by Quebec, and by a competent authority. It already prevails in Ontario, and no change is desired. With regard to Sunday sale, I would prefer to see total prohibition on the Sabbath. It would relieve the stomachs of many people who drink too much, and they would enjoy the liquor better on Monday. It would be, no doubt, some hardship on those accustomed to having drinks at their meals; but, on the other hand, if you once open the door, a great many will take advantage of that clause, and will importune the bar-keepers, and tempt them so much that they will actually sell to them during all hours of the day. But if you say there shall be no sale of liquor on Sunday, and you impose a heavy fine, and provide for the withdrawal of the license, the law will be observed. So I say I am in favor of closing up the saloons all day on Sunday. However, if the sense of the Committee is otherwise, I would restrict the sale to a certain number of hours.

Mr. GIROUARD (Jacques Cartier). I believe this clause will change a great deal the customs of the people of the Province of Quebec. In Ontario taverns are closed at seven on Saturdays, but in Quebec for many years the taverns have not been closed until twelve o'clock. I believe we should fix our law between these extremes, say nine or ten o'clock. Leave that as a matter for the police of municipal councils to deal with, even for Sunday. I do not think that this is altogether a matter of regulating the liquor traffic. It is more a matter of police, and the municipal authorities are very likely the best judges in this respect. If we do not leave it in the power of the authorities, we ought not to adopt the rule which prevails in Ontario, to which our people are unaccustomed. We have found our regulation in this respect in our Province no great grievance. I think that twelve o'clock is too late. A man has no business in a tavern after ten o'clock. The hour of seven o'clock was adopted in Ontario to prevent the laboring classes taking too much liquor on Saturday evenings, and this was supposed to be pay-day. But this custom has changed; laborers and mechanics are now paid very often on Friday and Monday, and there is no reason why there should be so great an exception for Saturday. The laboring classes leave the factories about six o'clock, when they reach home it is almost seven, and it would then be impossible for them to get a drink on Saturday evening. Business men close at one o'clock, and have the whole afternoon during which to indulge in a little drink. I do not see why the common classes should not have a like advantage in this respect, until nine or ten o'clock. I would suggest ten o'clock; but if not accepted, the hour should not be fixed later than nine. I have not much to say about Sundays. We have been accustomed in Quebec to have the taverns closed on Sunday; but this Saturday night close would be a great change.

Mr. FISHER. I think that the objections of the last speaker have been very fully met by the petition to which the hon. member for King's (Mr. Foster) alluded. It was signed and sent here by representatives of the Province of Quebec, and certainly it ought to bear weight. It is true that heretofore Quebec people have been able to obtain liquor up to twelve o'clock on Saturday night—but Saturday as pay-day has been to a great extent done away with—but that is not the only reason why those who wish to spend their evenings in taverns ought to be defended from this temptation on Saturdays more than on other evenings. Sunday following Saturday, and people being then at leisure, many are tempted to indulge in more liquor on Saturday night than any other night during the week. I think this is a very wise defensive proposition, the taverns should be closed earlier on Saturdays than any other nights. The sale of liquors in Quebec on Sunday is forbidden, and it is very unfair that we should be now asked to pass a law permitting Sunday selling. The question of hours gives great difficulty, and I am quite sure that these hours would lead to almost continuous selling on Sunday. If, on the other hand, Sunday selling were absolutely forbidden, the person in charge of that bar would have an absolute holiday and be able to enjoy his rest, and not be tempted to break the law, as would be the case under this Act. It is true that liquor is only proposed to be sold to bona fide guests who reside or board in the house, but we can easily understand that in many cases people would make arrangements to spend this day practically drinking in these places in clubs, and the result would be, instead of on Monday there being comparatively little drinking, there would be more on it, probably, than on any other day of the week. For all these reasons, the difficulty of closing at suitable hours, &c., it will be very undesirable to pass the clause as it stands. I trust that, at any rate, the suggestion of the hon. member for Durham, which seems acceptable to the hon. member for Simcoe, that liquor be not allowed to be drunk in private rooms, will be adopted.

Mr. FOSTER. To clear up a point, I will read the Quebec Sunday closing provision:

"The present Act shall not apply, in any case, to keepers of hotels and houses for the lodging and entertainment of travellers, &c., who are hereby authorized to sell and supply the same at every hour or every day of the year, Sundays included, to their bona fide boarders or to travellers sojourning at such hotels; but, on Sundays, not elsewhere than in the rooms of such boarders or travellers, or the dining-rooms of such hotels."

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). That is a sensible and reasonable law; and, if embodied in this Bill, it will be just and right. I do not believe in the doctrine that, if I happen to arrive at an hotel on Sunday, I shall not be allowed to drink in the hotel during that day. I do not believe in that kind of social tyranny. If we are to have total prohibition, say so; but, otherwise, if I want a bottle of wine on Sunday, why should I not then have it as well as on any other day. This is all cant, which we have heard on some occasions—I will not say to-night—and hypocrisy, from people who set up to be uncommonly good and virtuous, because they do not drink a drop of spirits or wine, when perhaps there is none other of the known virtues in their disposition. I do not know of any better law than the Quebec law. I think it perfectly right that bars in public-houses and in hotels should be closed on Sunday. No such drinking should be permitted, and I quite agree with my hon. friend from Cardwell, that the last clause in the Bill should be struck out. Bars and drinking places in railway stations, as well as elsewhere, should be closed on Sunday. No legislative exception should be made in favor of stations; but so far as allowing a person who chooses and wishes to have a glass of wine or spirits in his own room, or at the table in his hotel on Sunday, he ought to have it, if he chooses. I think the law in Quebec is proper and reasonable, and if any hon. gentleman will move it in lieu of the present clause, I will cheerfully support it.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I move that the whole proviso with respect to the sale of liquors on Sunday be struck out.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think we cannot allow that. We have fully discussed the measure, and I think, by a sort of mutual consent, we have succeeded in getting a very reasonable clause. We have considerably increased the restrictions of the law in both Quebec and Ontario, and I do not think the hon. gentleman should now propose this amendment.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I admit that the clause has been very much improved, but still I do not believe in the sale of liquors at all on Sunday, and I think it would be better to strike the clause out altogether than to allow it.

Mr. McNEILL. I should like to say, that if you limit the hour to seven o'clock, you run great risks of inducing attempts to violate the law. You cannot expect, in these large hotels, that a man who comes in and sits down to dinner at seven o'clock, will be prevented having his bottle of wine, while the man who finishes his dinner at seven will be allowed to have his wine.

Mr. GIROUARD (Jacques-Cartier). I understand that under the Provincial law of Ontario all taverns are to be closed at seven o'clock. I have been told that in almost every case that law is violated, and that the people drink from seven until later hours. If so, why not make a law that would be respected by the people—a law that would make the hour nine or ten o'clock, or whatever hour could be observed?

Mr. MACMILLAN (Middlesex). With reference to the remarks of the hon. member for Jacques-Cartier (Mr. Girouard) they are entirely incorrect. There is no part of the Dominion of Canada in which the law is more strictly observed than in the Province of Ontario. I visited the city of Montreal, and I have been able to assist in violating the law there on many occasions, but so far as the Province of Ontario is concerned it is almost impossible to do anything of the kind there. In fact, the liquor dealers there positively refuse to give anything after seven o'clock on Saturday night until Monday morning at six o'clock.

Mr. GIROUARD (Jacques-Cartier). My experience at the Queen's Hotel in Toronto and other hotels in Ontario last summer was not what has been mentioned by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). Hon. gentlemen can state what is their experience in the city of Ottawa, which is in the Province of Ontario. I do not know that there is any strict observance of the Saturday night law here.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. GIROUARD (Jacques-Cartier). I would propose nine o'clock instead of seven o'clock for closing on Saturday night.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria).

On sub-section 2,

Mr. SMALL. I would suggest that the hours for closing taverns on polling day be from nine o'clock in the morning until six o'clock in the evening. I never could see any reason why taverns should be closed except during polling hours.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). If hon. gentlemen wish to pass a law that will never be evaded they had better pass a law that there may be drinking on polling day until twelve o'clock at night. I have been in good many elections in Ontario, and I have never seen one yet at which there has been any pretence of obeying the law after polling is closed. On an occasion of that kind it is impossible to prohibit drinking; people will have liquor under excitement such as exists during election day and after the poll has closed, the reason of the prohibition is at an end. There is just as much excitement at an election meeting the night before the election as there is on the night of the election, and yet the taverns are allowed to be kept open on that night. I, therefore, support the proposal of the hon. member for East Toronto (Mr. Small) to make the law as it will be obeyed.

Mr. McCARTHY. The reason the Committee inserted this provision was that an impression has existed that the moment the poll is closed, the bars may be opened, and that is probably the reason of the violations of the law of which my hon. friend speaks. So it is proposed that they shall be closed from six o'clock on the morning of polling day until six o'clock on the following morning.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). I am not in favor of amending the clause. I think it better that there should be no drinking on election day, from twelve o'clock in the morning until twelve o'clock at night. I do not see much objection for shortening the hours for Municipal Elections, but I think that there should be no open bars on the day of a Parliamentary Election. We all know that the successful party is very much excited and exhilarated, and there is an inducement to indulge in intoxicating liquors, which may lead, before the night is over, to disturbance. Therefore, I am in favor of the law being left as it is in Ontario under the Election law, that no liquor shall be sold during election day, which means from twelve o'clock in the morning until twelve o'clock at night.

Mr. GUILLET. I wish to point out a defect in the provision with regard to the requisition that may be made to medical practitioners for certificates. I have known that to be abused by medical men granting certificates very freely. I think it should be provided these certificates should be in the shape of blank forms and charged for at the rate of 25 cts. apiece.

On section 66,

Mr. GIROUARD (Jacques-Cartier). This is a most extraordinary provision. It will prevent people who take a drive into the country from having a dance at a hotel.

Section dropped.

On section 75,

Mr. JAMIESON. I have very serious objections to sub-section 2, permitting the sale of liquor in shops where other goods are sold until the year 1890. In the case of hotels, where the proprietors have spent some money for the purpose of accommodating the travelling public, there might be some reason for so long a delay, but in the case of shops, I think we ought to fix a period much earlier, at least during the lifetime of the present Parliament, and I would suggest that instead of 1890 it be made 1886. I do not see any necessity for shop licenses at all. In my constituency, with a population of 20,000, we have one shop license, and I think we could get along very well without that. We ought not to encourage the sale of liquor in shops. If there is any profit to be derived from the sale of liquor, it should go into the pockets of those who are accommodating the travelling public, and not for the benefit of those who carry on a business simply to make money out of it. I think that section is very objectionable, and that the sense of the Committee will be taken upon it, and the time greatly reduced.

Mr. BENSON. I have numerous letters from all parts of my constituency asking that shop licenses be done away with. I am sure this sub-section 2 will give them great dissatisfaction. I can easily conceive that in large cities, where they have made great preparations in the way of vaults, and have laid in large stocks of wines and spirits, it may be necessary to give them some time to get rid of their stock without loss. But I am satisfied that in small towns and villages they might as well give up at once as at any future time.

Mr. PAINT. I approve of this clause, and, as there are considerable financial interests involved, I think it only proper that parties should have until 1890 to make their preparations. It is a very difficult matter to deal with, and there ought to be ample time afforded.

Mr. McCARTHY. The reason of the Committee in adopting this, was, that in their opinion it was unfair to the men who were in the trade, a deputation of whom appeared before the Committee, representing they had leased in some places establishments which would not be required if they had to separate their business, and asking, at all events, that some time should be given them in order to make their arrangements and that leases might terminate. What have we done? We have gone much further than any law in any Province but one, and we have enacted that it is improper for the sale of liquor to be carried on with the sale of any other goods, and we give people a delay within which they can arrange their business so as to go out of it without loss.

Mr. KIRK. There is no necessity of giving them so much time.

Mr. McCARTHY. Some have been in the business twenty years, some have leases for seven or eight years, and some have built houses for the purpose.

Mr. TAYLOR. I have no objection to this clause being adopted, but I think the next sub-section should be made more stringent where it provides a penalty for persons having a shop license who gives or treats. Then it should be provided that if any person sells or allows to be sold in quantities of less than one quart, he should, on conviction, forfeit his license. The great objection to shop license is that they allow liquors to be sold by the glass.

Mr. BLAKE. I would suggest that there is no need, with the utmost liberality of treatment towards those persons, that this clause should pass in its present shape. In the first place as to large investments is to be taken with a great deal of allowance, because, now under the present law, these persons that did so did it at the risk of being refused their license in any one year. In the second place, the suggestion that there has been large sums invested in stocks is not applicable to the bulk of the holders of shop licenses; it is applicable, I presume, only to holders of shop licenses in cities and towns. Those who hold shop licenses in the country could very easily run off their stocks within a much shorter period than within now and 1890. In their case, therefore, a line of distinction could be naturally drawn between licenses in cities and towns and those in other parts of the country. Once again, in cities and towns there are probably numerous holders of shop licenses, and there will, therefore, be a certain amount of competition even if the licenses continue to exist up to 1890; but in the country shop licenses are issued to fewer persons in each locality, and it is extremely likely that some will go out of the business, and others may die long before the expiration of the period, and you have left few or no holders. You will practically be giving a great advantage to holders of shop licenses in the country up to 1890 over all fresh comers into the trade. At all events we might shorten the time allowed as regards the country. There is a very strong feeling in the country against shop licenses; and under these circumstances there is no reason to extend the limit to 1890.

Mr. KIRK. In Nova Scotia where holders of shop licenses are not allowed to sell other goods, will be permitted under this law for seven years to engage in the two businesses.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). In Ontario municipalities may by-law, separate the liquor from the grocery business at any moment.

Mr. McCARTHY. That is a matter of doubt.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). In Woodstock such a by-law has been in force for some years, and in my own town a similar by-law has worked very well, and no complaint has been made. I am quite willing to allow a little time to those in the business to adjust themselves to changed circumstances. The time might be extended to 1886.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There are many persons doing business in groceries and liquors in Ontario and Quebec, at all events. If we were commencing ab initio, it might be better to separate the two businesses, but I have my doubts on it. My opinion is, that in towns persons having shop licenses to sell liquors are almost compelled to keep their stores respectable; whereas when dealers are selling spirits only, there is not sufficient check on them, and less chance of the houses being kept respectable—in towns at least; I do not speak of the country. However that may be, firms have established businesses, and have erected large buildings for the purposes of the double business. They have been encouraged to enter into the business, and there is no reason why, because in some cases it might be considered advisable to sever the businesses, a sense of injustice should be extended to those engaged in the grocery or liquor trade throughout western Canada. In order to prevent such a sense of injustice being felt, it is proposed to extend the time to seven years, and I do not think it is too long a period. No doubt the moment this Bill passes into law, grocers will look ahead and see how to make arrangements to alter their business.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman looks at the question from a different stand-point from many hon. members, for he holds that no particular injury accrues from the two businesses being united. As regards the country at least, a shorter time might be inserted than is provided in the Bill.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (Oxford). A by-law prohibiting the sale of liquors with groceries has been in successful operation in Woodstock. Instead of difficulty being caused in enforcing the law, the law has worked much better. The establishments are much more respectable and the duties of the Inspector are made easier. I would suggest that a clause be inserted by which the provision under discussion might be extended to large cities, but not to towns and smaller places.

Mr. McCARTHY. I feel there is a good deal in what the hon. member for West Durham has said, but it is difficult to understand why a man in the village should not be protected as well as a dealer in the city.

Mr. BLAKE. It must be remembered that the country merchant can close up his business much more rapidly than the city merchant.

Mr. BOWELL. Why should you have one measure of justice for one, and another for another. It may be true that a man carrying on a combined liquor and general business in a country village, may have greater difficulty in succeeding if the business be separated, than in a town; but the argument of the leader of the Opposition is this:

If a man invests a large amount of money in a city, he is to be allowed to go on for a longer time in business, than the man who has invested a smaller sum. It may be that one business is the larger, and the other the smaller; but because a man is poorer is he to be crushed earlier than the richer? This is a measure of compromise in very many respects; and the Committee desired to have a law uniform in its character. There are many provisions in the Nova Scotia law, that many members of the Committee, myself among the number, would have readily incorporated in the Bill, but they were opposed, and as every member of the Committee felt it incumbent to make the law workable for the whole Dominion, they conceded their individual opinions. It was better to concede and give a little. I have grave doubts as to the propriety of including this clause at all, in the law. There are many others holding different and very strong views. I do not see any justice in saying that a man who invests his all in a country grocery shop, in which he sells both articles, shall have only three years in which to wind up his business, while the man in the city shall have seven; let us have both alike. All the representations which I have had from the country, outside of cities, are the opposite to those received by the leader of the Opposition. I am told that it will shut up and ruin a large number of those engaged in this trade, if this is made applicable to the country, but by all means let it be enforced in the city, because a man can separate the businesses and succeed in the city, while greater difficulty in this respect is experienced in the country. I am under the impression that in cities and towns, at the end of the period, you will find people gradually adapting themselves to the circumstances, as provided for in this Bill, and there will be less difficulty and trouble, and less discontent and violation of the law, if all are placed on the same footing.

Mr. BLAKE. I would be sorry to be guilty of any unintentional injustice to the poor as compared with the rich. I heard a good deal of long leases, of extensive buildings erected for the purpose of carrying on the combined business, of vested interests of that description, which required time for turning round, and of great establishments, and in deference to those who have enquired into the matter and received representations concerning it, I was not indisposed to accept the view that a considerable number of years was needed in this relation, for the large transactions, large investments, long leases, &c.; but this is not the way in which things are done in the country.

Mr. BOWELL. I beg pardon. In rural places there are stores in which $7,000, $9,000, $10,000, &c., are invested with leases of five to ten years.

Mr. BLAKE. I know; but grocery stores are not there much larger on account of the liquor trade which is done. It is not the liquor trade which makes the difference; and these smaller transactions, these smaller establishments, and these smaller investments are easier wound up than the great ones. The latter might require seven years; but now the hon. gentleman proposes a longer period for the smaller than for the larger establishments, because if the greater ones are separated the businesses will still be profitable, while with the smaller ones the difficulties are greater. That is the reason for making the term longer than seven years, for they must then share. I understood that the time was extended in order that they might get out of the business without loss.

Mr. FARROW. I entirely agree with the members for West Durham and Oxford. I know there is a desire in my section of the country that the liquor establishments shall be separate from the grocery stores. I am glad to say that this is the case in the town of Wingham and in the village of Blyth. When liquor was there sold with other goods, customers were treated as an inducement to buy, and there was more drinking often done in these places than in hotels; and, therefore, I think it very proper that these businesses should be separated as soon as possible. As to the cities the year 1890 is quite right; but in incorporated towns and villages, three or four years would suit the majority of people in Canada.

Mr. ROSS. I would move in amendment that in cities the term be fixed at the 1st of May, 1890, and in towns and villages, at the 1st of May, 1886.

Mr. BOWELL. You take a city or town of 9,000 or 10,000 and another town made by Act of Parliament with 10,000; and you give to the city with the same population as the town an advantage.

Mr. ROSS. I will place cities and towns together.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Let us make a compromise. Instead of 1886 make the year 1887.

Mr. McCARTHY. It can be managed by adding to the clause "or elsewhere prior to the 1st of May, 1887."

On section 89,

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I think that this clause, which provides a penalty for drinking liquor in a house to which a shop license applies, should also apply to drinking in contravention of the law, in a licensed tavern. The offence of the purchaser who obtains liquor at a hotel contrary to law, is just as great as the offence of the seller. I want the law to be made applicable to the informer. The misfortunes of these prosecutions is that vagabonds are engaged as informers, who try to induce tavern keepers to sell liquor frequently under false pretences. A case appeared in the press of an informer who sent a boy to get liquor, on the pretence that he wanted it for his mother, who was taken ill at a railway station; and it turned out this boy was in the employ of an informer, who went, on receiving the liquor, and informed against the tavern-keeper.

Mr. BLAKE. It is true a very untrustworthy class of men are those who give evidence in these cases, but I cannot see how you can alter that system.

On section 92,

Mr. HALL. Some discretion should be given to the Inspector. The complaint may be untrue, or upon trivial cause, and I would suggest that these words be added:

The said Inspector, if satisfied the statement made to him is correct and the requirement a reasonable one, shall thereupon serve a written notice on the person or persons holding license, forbidding such sale to the person in said notice designated.

Mr. BLAKE. From what was this clause taken?

Mr. McCARTHY. It was taken from the law of the Province of Quebec, the only change being that third parties are allowed to give notice.

Mr. BLAKE. There is no objection implied in the words, "may require."

Mr. McCARTHY. It was not deemed well to make it imperative upon him. The reason for the change was, that the woman, or wife, might, perhaps, have delicacy in going herself to the tavern-keeper and forbidding the sale of liquor, and might prefer to go to a third person. The notice, also, would come with more force from the Chief Inspector. I think we cannot accept the suggestion.

On section 96,

Mr. McCARTHY. I propose to amend that, by leaving out "License Commissioners" and adding "Chief Inspector or Inspectors." We can hardly subject a Judge who is one of the Commissioners, to a penalty of the kind, nor suppose him guilty of an offence.

On section 5, sub-section a,

Mr. McCARTHY. I propose to amend the clause by inserting in the eighth line, after the word Quebec, "the Judge of the judicial district, a Judge of the Session of the Peace, a Prothonotary, the Registrar of the county or registration division, as the Governor in Council may appoint."

Mr. HALL. I think the district magistrates should be included, because, though they are not numerous, they would be very valuable officers for this purpose.

Mr. GIROUARD (Jacques Cartier). I quite agree with the hon. gentleman on that point.

Clause amended by inserting "Stipendiary Magistrate of the district."

On section 26,

Mr. CURRAN. Formerly in Montreal, the law prohibited any but restaurant licenses. Now saloon licenses are allowed. The experience there was that if the saloons were dispensed with, it would give rise to unlimited selling without license. It was the temperance people who first sought to isolate altogether in the city, the liquor traffic by stating people would go into a restaurant to get a drink who would not go into a saloon. After the experience of a great many years, the establishment of saloons was agreed to on the grounds of public policy.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). This is to dispense with the accommodations of saloons established under some other clause. I move that section 2 be struck out as the opening of mere groggeries in our docks and seaport towns will be a source of mischief.

Mr. DALY. I do not see the force of the hon. member's objection. The Board is supposed to exercise a judicious discretion, and we can leave this to their discretion.

Bill reported.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and (at 4:40 o'clock a.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

TUESDAY, 22nd May, 1883.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

FURTHER SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message, as follows:—

LOBBE.

The Governor-General transmits to the House of Commons, further Supplementary Estimates of sums required for the Service of the Dominion for the year ending 30th June, 1884, and, in accordance with the provisions of The British North America Act, 1867, he recommends these Estimates to the Houses of Commons.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,

OTTAWA, 19th May, 1883.

Ordered, that the said Message, with accompanying Estimates, be referred to the Committee of Supply.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. LANDRY. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to correct a statement made in the last issue of the Montreal Gazette, with regard to the deepening of Lake St. Peter. This paper said:

"The only opposition to the resolution was made by Mr. Robertson of Hamilton, and Landry, the one representing the jealousy of Montreal entertained in Western Ontario, the other the jealousy of Quebec city; the ground of objection by these gentlemen being that the expenditure on the channel is solely in the interest of Montreal."

Mr. SPEAKER. I never took such a position. I did not discuss the matter from a sectional point of view, and I deny in the most emphatic manner the statement of the Montreal Gazette.

Mr. BLAKE. We are now at the end of one Session, and I hope we shall commence another Session with a practice of careful abstinence from any references to what the newspapers say of our Parliamentary action. It is very difficult to keep them all right. They will make mistakes, and we had better understand that, and not attempt to correct them here.

FISHING BY FOREIGN VESSELS.

Mr. DOWELL, in introducing Bill (No. 143) to extend to British Columbia the Act relating to fishing by foreign vessels, said: My reason for introducing this Bill is that the notice of the Government has been called to the fact that foreign fishermen have been encroaching upon the British Columbia in-shore fisheries; and as the British Columbia fishermen are not entitled to any advantages arising from the Treaty of Washington, not being allowed to take their fish free into the United States, and as this Act has never been applicable to that Province, it is advisable that the Act should be extended to British Columbia, in order that the Government may be enabled, as far as possible, to protect the in-shore fisheries of that Province.

Bill read the first and second times, considered in Committee, reported and read the third time and passed.

ST. JOHN BRIDGE AND RAILWAY EXTENSION COMPANY.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved the second reading of Bill (No. 138) to provide for advances to be made by the Government of Canada, to the St. John Bridge and Railway Extension Company.

Bill read the second time, considered in Committee, and reported.

On motion for third reading,

Mr. BLAKE. I made some suggestions as to the defects of the Bill, which I am sorry to see were not adopted. I only wish to record my own view, and beg to move in amendment:

That the Bill be recommitted to a Committee of the Whole, to amend it by providing that the advance to be made by the Government, shall be a first charge in the undertaking; that the tolls to be charged shall be equal to all companies and persons using the bridge; that all persons and companies shall have equal rights of user, without any preference or advantage to any one over any other; that the tariff and tolls and the regulations for the user of the bridge shall be subject to the approval of, and to revision by the Governor in Council,

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The Bill contains an equality clause, by which all companies connected with it are to be treated alike; therefore, that part is met by the provisions of the Bill.

Amendment negatived on a division; and Bill read the third time and passed.

SUPERANNUATION.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved the third reading of Bill (No. 91) to amend and consolidate the Acts relating to the superannuation of persons employed in the Civil Service of Canada.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). At this late hour I will not inflict on the House the speech I would like to have made at an earlier day. I did wish to review the arguments for and against the system of superannuation, for I think the time has come when we should change the mode of superannuating and, place the whole Civil Service system on a new basis. However, at this late hour of the Session, I will not trouble the House with any remarks, but submit the following amendment:—

That the Bill be recommitted to a Committee of the Whole, to amend the same, so as to provide (with due regard to the rights of those who have been already admitted to the Superannuation List) for the abolition of the present system, and the substitution of a plan whereby a percentage of the salary of each Civil Servant shall be retained, and placed to his credit, and shall be payable to him with interest on his quitting the service, or to his family in case of his death in the service.

Amendment (Mr. Ross, Middlesex) negatived on the following division:—

On motion for third reading,

Mr. McMULLEN. I do not intend to detain the House but a few minutes. It will be remembered that when this Bill was introduced, I made some remarks and presented to the House a statement, the accuracy of which was challenged by the hon. the Finance Minister. I stated there were fifteen on the Civil Service list that had served for six and two-thirds years, and the hon. gentleman replied that there was no person on the list who had not served ten years. I promised when the Bill came to the third reading that I would supply the House with the names. The hon. First Minister also, on that occasion, challenged the correctness Mr. Ross (Middlesex).

of my statement. I will now read to the House a list of the fifteen names I referred to :

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the third reading of Bill (No. 132) respecting the sale of Intoxicating Liquors, and the issue of Licenses therefor.

Mr. OUIMET. I desire to submit to the House an amendment, to preserve a right which was enjoyed by municipal councils in the Province of Quebec, to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors within the limits of their jurisdiction. It will act as a further restriction on the sale of intoxicating liquors, and will be an improvement to the Bill; it will aid the cause of temperance, and at the same time will be a recognition of the rights which municipalities enjoyed before the passing of the British North America Act. The Municipal Council, according to the laws in force in 1867, that is, before Confederation, had the right to prohibit within their jurisdiction the sale of intoxicating liquors and to pass by-laws to that effect. As was stated by the hon. member for South Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) last night, those powers and privileges which were enjoyed before 1867 by the different municipalities could not be affected by any law passed by this House; that is to say, that no municipal privilege or franchise could be restricted by any legislation passed since 1867, as under the Confederation Act those municipal institutions were placed under the protection of the Local Legislatures. This is the constitutional view and the temperance view of the question, and the adoption of my amendment will give another lever to temperance apostles to assist them in prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors when deemed advisable. I beg to move the following amendment thereto:—

That the Bill be recommitted to a Committee of the Whole, in order to amend the same, by adding thereto the following clause:—Section 44 (a). No provision in this Act contained shall affect the powers conferred on the municipal councils in the Province of Quebec, of each county, city, town, village, parish and township, by the laws in force in the said Province on the 1st July, 1867, to restrict or prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors in the limits of their respective territorial jurisdiction, and these powers and the by-laws now in force, passed under the authority of the said laws, are hereby confirmed (confirmés).

Mr. DESJARDINS. I am in favor of the principle of this amendment. I would like to see it inserted, if it is not already covered by the amendment made to section 140:

Nothing in the foregoing provisions of this Act shall be construed to affect or impair any of the provisions of The Canada Temperance Act, 1878; and no hotel, saloon, or shop license shall be issued or take effect within any county, city, town, incorporated village or township in Canada within which the second part of the said Act has been brought into force as by the said Act provided, or within which any by-law for prohibiting the sale of liquor under the Temperance Act of 1864, or any other Act, is in force.

Mr. OUIMET. The Act of 1864 is no longer in force.

Mr. MCCARTHY. It seems to me that the amendment is all right with the exception of the word "restrict." If confined to "prohibit" it retains what my hon. friend and his Quebec confrères desire. This would leave to municipal councils, under the law of 1864, the power which they have exercised, of prohibiting.

Mr. OUIMET. I cannot make out the precise meaning of section forty-four. What is it?

Mr. McCARTHY. A certain maximum is provided, but the Council may reduce the number to anything they please.

Mr. OUIMET. That is where the word "restrict" comes in.

Mr. McCARTHY. It is not necessary, as this is already provided for in section forty-four.

Mr. OUIMET. I wish to retain all the powers which we had before.

Mr. McCARTHY. Every power is expressly given in this Act.

Mr. BLAKE. What the hon. gentleman wants, is, that it be not given by this Parliament, which may also take it away; but that they have an inherent right to have this power retained within local jurisdiction.

Mr. McCARTHY. Oh, no.

Mr. OUIMET. I want to retain all the powers which we had before 1867; and I find that not only the power of entirely prohibiting, but the power to limit jurisdiction was given to us by the Consolidated Statutes of Canada.

Mr. McCARTHY. Carried.

Mr. LESAGE (Translation). Mr. Speaker: Before voting on this amendment, I beg leave to give the reasons why I seconded the amendment moved by the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Ouimet). We from the Quebec district are in a somewhat exceptional position. Some of our municipalities have the advantage of possessing no licensed taverns. Now, we consider that, if in certain districts it is deemed advantageous to limit the number of licenses, in certain others, especially where there exist no licensed taverns; supposing the amendment of the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Gigault), which has been substituted for clause forty-six, be not applied, we shall be left to the mercy of a few ill-minded individuals. These, after having got a certain number of signatures, will simply go to the Commissioners' office, whose duty it will be to grant the license, unless a counter-petition, signed by two-thirds of the voters, be filed, showing that the parties applying for a license are not qualified to hold one. This question is a very important one, and I call to it the attention of the hon. members of the Quebec district, where the present state of things has been for years in existence. Municipal councils, acting often under the influence of the priests, and even of Protestant ministers, think it their duty to enact every year prohibitory by-laws against the granting of licenses in their districts. Now, this present law takes away from the municipal councils the right of refusing the granting of licenses within the limits of their municipalities; and this provision of the law, if it were adopted, would, I believe, be unfavorably received in the district of Quebec, for I may well add that a very small number of votes, in any electoral sub-division, will take the trouble to register their vote in favor of a prohibitory law; and unless a large number do, once a hotel keeper will have recorded in his favor one-fourth of the voters, all he will have to do will be to say: "I did fulfil the conditions of the law," and he will get his license. You may reply that the majority of the voters will have the right to prevent this by filing a counter-petition to the effect of preventing such party from getting his license. But to do this the majority will have to give some reasons against him personally, stating that he possesses a bad character, or that he is deficient in that which the law requires. The case becomes a personal one, and the question of prohibition goes to the background. I myself, Mr. Speaker, live in a rural district. I practice as a doctor in eleven large parishes where not one licensed tavern exists. In my district the sale of liquor is now carried on according to our Provincial Act, ratified by the Bill now before this House. If this clause be not inserted in favor of our municipal councils I believe this law will not prove, for my district, one of prohibition and temperance, but one of intemperance. For my part, I raise my voice asking that the rights of the municipal councils be maintained. You will never succeed, in our parishes, in inducing the farmers to vote in favor of prohibitory laws. Each one will say: "Let them settle those matters among themselves; I have no time to be bothered with them;" and the ends of the law will be eluded by the fact that it will be impossible to get up a petition to prevent the granting of licenses. I am aware, in my district, that a great number of Protestant ministers, and all the Catholic priests, have united in demanding that the existing laws in favor of the municipalities be maintained. And why? Because they can, from the pulpit or otherwise, notify the council that, at a certain date, a prohibitory law must be enacted in order to prevent the granting of licenses. While if you make it obligatory for each council to vote in favor of a law of prohibition, you will never be able to get the number of votes necessary to establish that law. Consequently, I am very glad I have been called upon to second the motion of my hon. friend the member for Laval. As to the question of constitutionality, I am not competent to decide; but as to the moral question, and as to the rights of our municipalities, I insist that the existing laws be maintained, and I will therefore press with all my power the adoption of this motion.

Guilbault.—1.

Bill recommitted and reported.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I beg leave to move that the Bill be not read the third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole, with instructions to strike out clause sixty-five, which permits the sale of intoxicating liquors on Sunday.

Mr. DAVIES. I think the hon. gentleman should describe more accurately what the resolution means before it is put. I do not think that the motion describes the object of it fairly. This is a proviso which regulates that the sale of liquor shall take place on Sunday only at meal times. I am in favor of this principle, and I do not wish to be recorded as voting apparently in favor of the indiscriminate sale of intoxicating liquors on Sunday. It would be better if the hon. gentleman would describe the provision of the Bill more accurately in his motion.

Mr. ROSS. I have not the slightest objection to insert in my amendment the words of the proviso, and move that those words be struck out. Some amendments were made in this proviso last night in Committee. The Bill had been reprinted, or I would have inserted the proviso. I am quite willing to amend my amendment to that effect. Of course, any person who wishes to understand the full force of the amendment, can do so by referring to the Bill, which contains the objectionable provision that I desire to strike out.

Mr. SPEAKER. The motion cannot now be changed without permission of the House. Shall it be adopted?

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think that the nays have it.

Mr. BLANCHET. I think that the hon. gentleman ought to withdraw his amendment, and put it in another way.

Mr. BLAKE. The House has declined to allow the hon. gentleman the courtesy of withdrawing it.

Mr. BLAKE. A few moments ago, by an almost unanimous vote, we reserved to one of the Provinces the municipal powers to restrict the sale of intoxicating liquors which that Province enjoyed at the time of Confederation. I move in amendment thereto:

That the Bill be recommitted to a Committee of the Whole, to amend the same, by adding to Clause 46 (a) the words following:— And nothing in this Act contained shall affect the powers conferred on the municipal authorities of any other Province by the laws in force in such Province at the time of its Confederation with Canada, to restrict or prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors within the municipality; and these powers are hereby confirmed and continued.

I have paid my hon. friend the compliment of adopting his language.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Will the hon. gentleman state what law was in force in Ontario at the time of Confederation.

Mr. BLAKE. I cannot name them all, but amongst them was the following:—

"The council of every township, town and incorporated village, may pass by-laws for prohibiting the sale by retail of spirituous, fermented, or other manufactured liquors in any inn or other house of public entertainment; and for prohibiting totally the sale thereof in shops and places other than houses of public entertainment, &c."

Mr. McCARTHY. My hon. friend has read only a portion of the section.

Mr. BLAKE. I said "and so forth," but I will read the remainder:

"Provided the by-law before the final passing thereof has been duly approved by the electors of the municipalities in the manner provided by this Act."

Mr. McCARTHY. We should consider the portion of the clause which we have extracted from my hon. friend—and which I hope he did not intentionally desire to conceal—and how it will agree with the local option clause which we have put in the Bill. If it disagrees, to put it in will be only to confuse the whole Bill. While I think we should consider what its effect would be upon the Bill, for my own part I have no objection to accept it, so far as it does not render the present clauses of the Bill with regard to local option wholly nugatory. We have already defined the manner in which this local option, if desired, can be carried out. If there is any conflict between the two, doubts and difficulties will arise in connection with the Bill, and I think we should accept either one principle or the other, seeing that there is no substantial difference between them, as in each case the question has to be submitted to the vote of the people, and they have to obtain under this section an actual and positive majority. I shall say no more until I hear the further discussion of the question, as I merely rose for the purpose of drawing the attention of the House to the importance of the amendment which was sprung upon us without, I think, a very full, fair, or candid explanation.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The object of the hon. gentleman must be obvious to every supporter of this Bill—to everyone who desires to see a good License Act made operative throughout the Dominion. The amendment is introduced for the purpose of destroying this measure; but I believe the majority of this House are not so blind to the interests of the country as to play this little game for the hon. gentleman.

Mr. DAVIES. It seems to me that this amendment is simply a logical consequence of the one which has been adopted. The same difficulties which the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) said might arise with regard to Ontario are just as liable to take place in the other case. I wish to point out, however, that this is a matter which is not confined simply to Ontario and Quebec, because there are other Provinces in this Dominion, and if the Bill passes in its present shape it will produce chaos in the License Laws of some of these Provinces. For instance, in the Province of Prince Edward Island there is no provision in the Bill to regulate the licenses there—no provision by which the voice of the people can be obtained in any way. The amendment of the hon. member for West Durham amounts to this: That inasmuch as Parliament has failed to make any provision for that Province or other Provinces the laws which were in force when we joined the Confederation, and which gave universal satisfaction, both to those engaged in the traffic and to the temperance people, shall remain in force.

Mr. BRECKEN. I have simply to say this: That I am afraid my hon. colleague is trying to make a little cheap popularity. The Scott Act is in force in Prince Edward Island from one end to the other, and this law cannot possibly have any effect upon the temperance people or upon the grog-drinking people of Prince Edward Island until this Parliament meets again.

An hon. MEMBER. Suppose the Scott Act is repealed.

Mr. BRECKEN. The Act must be in force for three years. There is not the slightest chance of its being repealed. There is no action of the kind contemplated in the Province.

Mr. DAVIES. I beg your pardon. In Prince county there is a petition to repeal it now.

Mr. BRECKEN. There is not the slightest chance of its being repealed; and even if this Act can possibly have any bearing on Prince Edward Island, the Dominion Parliament will have the opportunity of making any provisions for Prince Edward Island that are not included in this Bill.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I think the answer the hon. member for West Durham gave to my question, and his omission of the most important part of the answer he ought to have given, was hardly creditable to him, and was certainly not satisfactory to this House. The gentleman's amendment may appear on its face to be a logical sequence to that which we have already adopted by a practically unanimous vote; but the difference is as manifest as it can be. In the Province of Quebec, there are laws in operation at this moment, passed before Confederation, under which the municipalities are regulating the liquor traffic to-day, which, by this law, if it had passed without the amendment of the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Ouimet), would have been repealed; and as a consequence of that repeal, powers which these municipalities at this moment possess, and are exercising, would have been taken from them. The full significance and effect of the amendment of the hon. member for Laval was simply to continue these powers to the municipalities in the Province of Quebec. Now, what does the hon. gentleman propose to do with regard to Ontario? To revive laws which have been repealed by the Acts of the Legislature of Ontario.

Mr. BLAKE. No.

Mr. WHITE. To revive laws which are not in operation. The Crooks Act, of which hon. gentlemen boast so much, is an Act of the Province of Ontario to-day. They tell us, when this House undertakes to deal with the license question, that we are going to do away with the wholesome restrictions of the Crooks Act; and yet the hon. gentleman asks us to revive laws which the Legislative Assembly of Ontario have practically wiped out of existence, and which the municipalities are not at this moment exercising powers under. That is the distinction between the two cases. In the one case, the effect of this law would have been to repeal Acts now in operation, to deprive the municipal councils of Quebec of powers they now exercise; in the other case, there is an attempt to revive laws which are not more restrictive, but less restrictive than this Act, and which, if revived, would simply have the effect of giving greater freedom for the sale of intoxicating liquors. But I think we may fairly infer that the hon. gentleman was not candid, at any rate in this House, when he deliberately made—

Mr. BLAKE. I rise to order. I ask you, Sir, whether it is in accordance with the Rules of the House that I should be charged with want of candor?

Mr. SPEAKER. I do not think it is exactly right that an hon. member should charge another with want of candor.

Mr. WHITE. I said the hon. gentleman was not candid. Surely, Mr. Speaker, that is not unparliamentary.

Mr. SPEAKER. Want of candor is an imputation against a member of wanting to mislead the House, against which I ruled the other day.

Mr. WHITE. Then, Mr. Speaker, all I can say is this, accepting your decision entirely, that the hon. gentleman was not fair to this House when he deliberately, as a lawyer, read portions of that Statute, and left portions of it out—if that was fair to this House, then I do not know what fairness is, coming from the hon. gentleman occupying the position which he occupies on the floor of this House.

Mr. BLAKE. I trust that I may be allowed to say, Sir, that if I had the slightest impression that I should mislead this House by not reading the whole of a clause—of which I distinctly said that I was not reading the whole—I distinctly said, "and so forth"—

Mr. WHITE. No, no.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman denies it; but once again he is out of order. I repeat that I did say "and so forth." I was perfectly aware that the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), that dozens of hon. members in this House, knew what the Municipal Act of Ontario of 1866 was, and what I was wanting to show was that there was a clause in it for restricting the sale. It would have been a ridiculous and absurd thing for me to suppose that I could mislead a large number of hon. members of this House, even if I had been disposed to do it by such a paltry attempt as reading a portion of a clause instead of the whole of it. I am surprised that the hon. gentleman should have such a low notion of the acquaintance of the members of this House with the Statute Law of the country as to say that I could mislead them. The hon. member for Cardwell asked what clause I was reading, and I read enough to show that it was a prohibitory clause. I did not want to waste time reading the whole of it, but I was perfectly willing to read the rest if he had asked for it.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not intend to make a speech on this matter, nor to discuss what the legal effect of the amendment may be, and the only reason I rise now is to place myself right in relation to my own Province. It might be inferred that, in supporting the amendment of my hon. friend from Laval (Mr. Ouimet), and opposing the amendment of the hon. member from West Durham, I should be voting to support the local rights of the Province of Quebec; while voting the other way, not only with reference to my own Province, but all the other Provinces of the Dominion, it is well that I should put that matter right. I intend to vote against the amendment of the hon. member for West Durham; and I shall do it on this principle: I cannot say that I have any faith in the results of the working of this Bill; but the Government of the country, having taken upon themselves the responsibility, not of drafting this Bill, but of fathering it and placing it before this House, and this House having spent a great deal of time in endeavoring to make it as workable as possible, I have arrived at the conclusion, whether correctly or not, from some objections which have been raised during the passage of the Bill through Committee, that there is a very strong desire in this House to make the Bill as unworkable as possible. I am not one who has much faith in the working of the Bill; but I intend to do nothing, by my vote or voice, to impair the efficiency and workable character of this Bill. The Government having assumed the responsibility of placing it before the House, and of making it, as I trust they will, the law of the land, I think it would be very unfair to introduce such a clause as that moved by the hon. member for West Durham, the effect of which would be, if I rightly understand the law, to give co-ordinate powers to the Provinces and the Dominion, which might lead to the defeat of the harmonious working of this Bill, and to immense litigation throughout the different Provinces. Taking that view of the case, I felt it necessary, as a New Brunswick representative voting against a resolution which gives powers to the Local Legislatures on this question, to make these explanations, which I hope will be satisfactory to this House and to my constituency.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I do not wish to delay the House, but I think the remarks of the hon. member for Cardwell ought to be alluded to. I think he will require rather more time than was at his disposal this afternoon to leave the impression on the House, even on his own side, that there was any attempt on the part of the hon. member for West Durham to mislead the House. Was any insinuation cast out by the hon. member for Cardwell last night, when the hon. member for Simcoe, reading an extract from a newspaper, closed with a sentence which was not in the paper at all, and for which he was brought to task by the hon. member for Middlesex? There was no censure then, no imputation, no insinuations thrown out by hon. gentlemen opposite; and yet the hon. gentleman thinks it not beneath him to attempt to cast doubt on the good faith of the hon. gentleman who leads the Opposition in the House. On this side of the House we have unbounded confidence in the hon. gentleman, and I believe that, in the country, the people have unbounded confidence in his honesty and integrity; and I beg leave to say, I believe there is not one hon. member in this House—and I would hardly except the hon. member for Cardwell—who has not the same confidence.

Mr. OUIMET. I really find myself in a very awkward position. Indeed, I am very grateful for the compliment that was paid my motion, and the principles involved in it, by the hon. member for West Durham. I hold this Parliament has no power to restrict, or take away from any Province any privilege or jurisdiction it may enjoy under the British North America Act. But if we have no power to take away anything from a Province, have we the power to give it anything? If this Act were in force, I would be the first to vote against any motion preventing to carry it into effect; but if it has been repealed by the Crooks Act, have we the power to revive it, to say that a law Ontario has repealed should be re-enacted?

Mr. BLAKE. May I ask my hon. friend whether, upon the theory of this Bill, the Local Legislature can have the power to repeal—whether their repeal would be valid?

Mr. OUIMET. No; the point is this: As I understand it, in my humble opinion, anything that belongs to the municipal institutions belongs to the Local Legislature to legislate upon; and, of course, in this way the Legislature of Ontario had the right to deprive the municipalities of a power given them. If my vote could give the municipalities that right I would give it to them; but the Legislature of Ontario, led by the friends of the hon. member for West Durham, have taken upon themselves to take that away from the people of Ontario—that is the power to give or to control the giving of licenses in that Province. What their reason was, I do not know, but I suppose they had good reason for so doing. Now we are asked to give back to the people of Ontario that power which was taken from them by their own Legislature. Why? Because, they say, it was taken from them wrongly. But we in this House cannot say that. The Legislature of Ontario have passed upon it, and we have no power to go over any legislation they have thought proper to make. I say we have no more power to revise any law which is no longer in force—that would be an infringement on their rights—than we have to legislate to take anything from them.

Mr. LISTER. I will detain the House only a few minutes in order to set my hon. friend who has just spoken right. This Act is based on the assumption that the Local Legislature has no right whatever to restrict or control the sale of liquor within the Province, and there can be no doubt that the Act to which the hon. member for West Durham referred was in force in Ontario at the time of Confederation. This Bill now before the House is based on the assumption that a Local Legislature has no right to interfere with the Acts in force in 1867 relating to the sale of liquor. Such being the case, this Act existing in 1867, to which my hon. friend referred, could not be repealed, and the Act repealing it was nugatory and void, if the contention of hon. gentlemen opposite is correct. The repealing of it, on their contention, was an act of usurpation on the part of the Ontario Legislature. The hon. gentlemen from the Province of Quebec have been assisted by hon. members on this side in maintaining which we contend to be Provincial rights, which existed previous to Confederation, and we have a right to expect from them to set aside all party considerations, and stand with us on this question.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. LISTER. The hon. gentleman says "hear, hear." It was that unfortunate speech the hon. gentleman made at Yorkville, under such remarkable circumstances, last June, that caused this legislation to be introduced. We would never have been asked to legislate on this subject if he had not made that unfortunate speech; and he comes into this House with this Bill, not in the cause of temperance at all, but simply to do battle with Mr. Mowat. The way this Bill has been brought up shows it has been bungled; and while we are willing to protect the rights of Ontario, you are taking away from every Province in this Dominion rights which they heretofore enjoyed. You are invading those rights, and I believe when you come before the people they will bring you severely to account for this.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex). I deny that the hon. gentleman is justified in attributing to the hon. First Minister that he was actuated by such motives; and I contend he would be fully justified, in any case, in taking away from Mr. Mowat and his corrupt Administration the charge of the liquor traffic in Ontario. It is well known in Ontario, and throughout the Dominion, that the Administration of Mr. Mowat have used the licensing machinery to coerce the tavern-keepers. The hon. gentleman is aware that in his own county, and in every county where they could, they have utilized their corrupt power, which they took purely for party purposes. That, in itself, is a justifiable reason why this House should take away from men, who are merely the tools of a corrupt so-called Reform Administration, this power, and place it in the hands of independent men who will exercise it for the good of morality instead of making it an instrument to serve party purposes.

Mr. VAIL. I do not think it necessary, in discussing this question, that we should show any party feeling in the matter at all. All I ask on the part of Nova Scotia is that the members from Quebec should treat us in the same way that we treated them. We have voted with them on this question, and all we ask now is that they shall return the compliment, and allow us the same provision they have asked for themselves.

Mr. AMYOT. I have heard with a great deal of attention the call that has just been made upon the loyalty of the members from Quebec in relation to this question. I am thankful to the members of this House who so unanimously acceded to the desire of the members from Quebec. We must remember that there is a clause in the British North America Act that provides for special laws for the Province of Quebec, and for uniformity of some laws in the other Provinces. To-day we came unanimously before the House, and asked for a special provision for the Province of Quebec; it was granted us, and we are thankful for it. Now, in reference to the other Provinces, we find there are two parties: We find a majority on one side, and a minority on the other side; and we, from the Province of Quebec, considering the principle that the majority should rule, think we will have to vote with the majority from the other Provinces.

Mr. ORTON. I desire to endorse the utterances of an hon. gentleman on this side with regard to the manner in which the Crooks Act has been administered. Two important cases recently occurred in my county which show how necessary it is that this Parliament should take action in this matter. In the village of Arthur, the chief hotel in the place, which had been in existence for a great many years, and was situated in the centre of the business part of the town, was refused a license, and the license was given to another house in a side street, with only two or three bedrooms in it, and without suitable accommodation such as should be possessed by a hotel. Another similar case occurred in the same village. Now, Sir, I am of opinion that a good License Act is the best Temperance Act that can be adopted in any country. Only the other day we had evidence given to this House that the sale of spirituous liquors had decreased in the Province of Ontario since the Crooks Act came into force; but that Act has fallen into disrepute by the partisan manner in which it has been administered by the Mowat Government. Another instance was given by the hon. member for West Durham, to show that a partial prohibition, such as the Dunkin Act, is a failure, and was proved to be a failure in many instances in Ontario. That Act was in force in the county of York, and the hon. member stated that in that county it was an entire failure.

Mr. McCARTHY. I only rise for the purpose of giving a denial, in as emphatic language as I can give it, to the statement made by the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Pater-son). I do not know whether it is Parliamentary to say it is untrue, but in as strong language as I can put it, I desire to express my sentiment in that direction.

Mr. WOODWORTH. It was not my intention to speak upon this question; but the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Vail) made some remarks, the drift of which I cannot understand. He says we should look at this matter in no party sense, but should give to Nova Scotia the same rights as we have given to Quebec. Most decidedly, there is not an hon. member in this House who would not say Amen to that. But if he wishes to be understood, that in Nova Scotia we should go back to the laws prevailing before Confederation, which means almost no License Law at all, it would excite the temperance people of that Province almost to rebellion. If that is the meaning of the hon. gentleman I can understand it, but on no other grounds is it comprehensible. I understand that in the Province of Quebec, the laws have been altered very little since Confederation, whereas in Nova Scotia, at almost every Session of the Legislature, the License Law is amended in some particular; and yet the suggestion is made that we are to sweep them all away and go back to the Acts before Confederation.

Mr. PATERSON. I just wish to say, in reference to the observations of the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), any remarks I made I believed them to be perfectly true; but if I have done an injury to the hon. gentleman in saying what was not true, I should very much regret it. But I must still say that was the impression on my mind, that it is still my impression, and though I am anxious not to misrepresent the hon. gentleman—

Mr. McCARTHY. I rise to order. The hon. gentleman made a charge against me, and I simply give it a denial. I did not enter into any detail, but simply gave it a denial. The hon. gentleman may accept it or not as he pleases—I do not care; but he has no right to go into it again and make a speech upon it without my having an opportunity to reply.

Mr. SPEAKER. If the hon. gentleman has any personal explanation to make he can do so. He made a statement which the hon. member for Simcoe said is not correct, and there is an end of it. He cannot go on and argue the question again, and say that it was correct.

Mr. PATERSON. I think the hon. gentleman need not have gone further, and made the statement that he did, and then prevent any reply being made.

Mr. BOWELL. Why?

Mr. PATERSON. He went the length of saying that he did not know whether it was Parliamentary to say that it was untrue.

Mr. McCARTHY. Precisely.

Mr. PATERSON. And the statement I made, if I remember what I said, was, that he, last night, in reading an article from the Globe—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. PATERSON. I am speaking to the motion for adjournment.

Mr. SPEAKER. There is no motion for adjournment. It has not been put; I have not heard it.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne) moved that the debate be now adjourned.

Mr. BOWELL. There is no motion before the Chair. All motions must be in writing.

Mr. BLAKE. That has not been the practice in motions for adjourning a debate.

Mr. BOWELL. It may have been the practice through courtesy to allow verbal motions; but in every instance where the attention of the Speaker has been called to the fact that a motion was not in writing, it has been ruled out.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne) moved the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. SPEAKER. It is true, the practice has been to make verbal motions for adjournment; but there is no necessity for making this motion, as the hon. member for Brant cannot put himself in order on this motion by referring to the personal question again, which has already been ruled out.

Mr. PATERSON. Perhaps Mr. Speaker will allow me to try whether I cannot put myself in order on this motion.

Mr. SPEAKER. Speaking to the motion to adjourn will not enable you to refer to the previous debate.

Mr. PATERSON. I think it would be unwise to adjourn this debate until there has been a little understanding as to what has been said in the course of the debate.

Mr. SPEAKER. Of course, I am under the control of the House in my judgment as to whether I am correct; but if the hon. gentleman is going again to refer to what has taken place, he is not in order on this motion to adjourn.

Mr. PATERSON. I desire entirely to be guided by you, Mr. Speaker, and do not desire to place you in any false position at all. I was saying that I thought it inexpedient that this motion to adjourn the debate should prevail until there was an opportunity of replying to a remark that has been made in the course of this debate. I think before the debate is adjourned that that remark should be attended to, and there should be some explanation in reference to it—a remark that was made during the present debate, which is now moved to be adjourned; and I think it is expedient that the debate should be adjourned until that is done. The remark to which I refer was a statement made by the hon. member for North Simcoe, who, in replying to a remark that I addressed to the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White) when I said the hon. member for Simcoe, last night, in reading an article from the Globe, had done precisely what the hon. member for West Durham had done, and which the hon. member for Cardwell characterized as being unworthy of him, that he was reading an article and that he did not read the whole article, but threw down the paper, and the hon. member for West Middlesex rose and finished it. That, Sir, was what I said, that is what I believe, that I reiterate, and leave that to the judgment of this House, whether it be true, or whether it be not true.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think it is the judgment and regulation of the House that the hon. gentleman went further, and that he stated that the hon. member for North Simcoe had read in that paper what was not in the paper at all.

Motion to adjourn debate withdrawn.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. VAIL. I do not rise to reply to any observations made by any hon. gentleman, but I desire merely to read one or two clauses from the License Law which was in force in Nova Scotia previous to Confederation. The third clause runs as follows:—

“Licenses may be granted by the Sessions upon the recommendation of the Grand Jury, except in the city of Halifax, where they may be granted agreeably to the Acts incorporating the same; but such recommendations shall be rejected in whole or in part by the Sessions, who shall have power from time to time to determine the periods at which licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors shall commence and expire; but no license to sell liquors shall be issued or granted to any person who now does or hereafter shall keep a brothel or house of ill-fame; but in any county in which the majority of the Sessions may be disposed to grant licenses to sell intoxicating liquors for beverage purposes, they shall nevertheless withhold such license in any polling district when a majority of the ratepayers petition the Sessions against the granting of such licenses, and such decision shall remain in full force and effect until reversed by a majority of the ratepayers upon real or personal estate in any polling district where such action shall have been taken.”

Here is another very important clause in the Nova Scotia law, which is not contained in the Bill. It is as follows:—

“No license shall be granted to any person who shall reside or have his place of business within the limits of the railway, nor to any person who shall reside or have his occupation within any proclaimed gold district, and all sales of intoxicating liquors within such limits, or within such proclaimed gold districts, shall be deemed as made without license, notwithstanding the seller may hold a license, and he shall be liable to all penalties and forfeitures incurred by those who shall sell without license.”

That I consider is a very important clause, and I should like to see it inserted in this Bill before it is finally passed. We find it is absolutely necessary in Nova Scotia for the proper working of the mines.

Mr. RICHEY. If the amendment which we are now called upon to consider is intended to embarrass the legislation which we are endeavoring to pass through this House, or if it were conceived with the intention of embarrassing the hon. members of this House who have been engaged in the draughting of this Bill, and those who have voted in all good faith for it in the promotion of the interests of temperance, then I am willing to concede that, to a very large extent, perhaps, it may be calculated to effect that object. I will not attribute such intentions to the hon. gentleman who has presented them—I will give him credit for all of that conscientiousness which I claim for myself in dealing with this question; but I would desire to draw his attention, and the attention of this House, to the fact that whilst with those two amendments before us; that which we have already passed touching the Province of Quebec, and that which we are asked now to enact with respect to other Provinces, it is just one of those cases where a very great distinction may exist, while the words embodied in the amendment may be very similar. There may be, with regard to sentences as well as to words, an appearance of similarity in sense, while the significance of the sentences as of words is altogether different. If I cannot demonstrate this in the course of a two minutes' speech, I shall have to be content to labor under whatever implication of unfairness any hon. gentleman may be willing to charge us with. Let us look at the position as it presents itself before us at the present moment. Constrained by the interpretation of the law, by the highest tribunal to which an appeal could be made, the Government of the Dominion have been called to the task of providing an enactment to regulate the traffic in intoxicating liquors, with a view to restrain that traffic and to prevent it from being carried to an undue extent; and this guiding principle has been before us in our effort at legislation in this particular: It is to embody in the Act which is to be passed by this House, as far as possible, whatever restrictions already are found to exist in the different Provinces of the Dominion, yielding only so far as may be necessary to effect the great object which we have in view by some degree of mutual concession in order to the attainment of the necessary uniformity. Animated by that principle when the hon. member for Laval presented his amendment and fortified it by the argument that we were withdrawing from the Province of Quebec restrictions existing at the present day, and which existed prior to Confederation, and still continued in existence; to maintain as far as possible the restrictions in the various Provinces, this House yielded. When the amendment which the hon. member for West Durham proposed is submitted to the House, it is, it is true, couched in the same phraseology; the text is the same, while the commentary is altogether different. Whilst we were told by the hon. member for Laval that these restrictions and these powers conferred on the municipalities to further restrain the traffic in intoxicating liquors, had been continued up to the present moment and existed at this day, there has not been, so far, an attempt to show that the powers conferred on municipalities before Confederation, were in the other Provinces continued and were existing to this day. The hon. member for Digby has come before us as the champion of Nova Scotia in this particular, and has cited an Act by which the traffic in intoxicating liquors was regulated prior to Confederation; but does he not know that, in 1873, five years after Confederation, all those enactments were repealed, and that a new enactment was passed contained in the fourth series of the Revised Statutes of Nova Scotia, chap. 75, by which the legislation of the Province before Confederation, and down to 1873, was swept away, and an enactment generally controlling this subject and affecting this traffic was passed in 1873. What, then, would be the position of this trade in Nova Scotia and in the other Provinces—for I find that the same fact applies to them all—if the amendment were adopted? I have before me the License Laws of the various Provinces. In New Brunswick an Act regulating this traffic was passed in the forty-first year of Her Majesty's reign; in Nova Scotia, such an Act was passed—as I have said—in 1873; in Prince Edward Island, an Act was passed in 1876; and we know, of course, as regards Manitoba, that the law there has also been brought into being since Confederation—so that now we are called upon, with regard to all the Provinces outside of Quebec, not to maintain existing laws, but to overleap them, as passed by the people's representatives, declaring their sentiments with regard to this trade since Confederation, and to go back to anterior legislation, which would work confusion throughout the whole system which we are endeavoring to inaugurate. I think we cannot place ourselves in that position, and that whilst there may be a semblance of unfairness in rejecting a resolution which is identical almost in phraseology with one which has been adopted, it is only a semblance of unfairness. There is the very essence of consistency in it, because we are endeavoring to maintain throughout the Dominion the same order of legislation. We have endeavored to embody in this Bill every material clause, and to apply to the whole Dominion all that we have found in the various Acts in force at the time it was submitted to us. The hon. member for Digby has gone further, and referred to the powers given to the Sessions; but how will this amendment touch that? It refers to municipalities. It is true that they may be the heirs of the Sessions, but here will come up the question of construction and interpretation. This is one illustration, still further that by adopting this amendment, we should work confusion in our whole system. The Sessions were not municipalities; which have since been formed, and are altogether a distinct organization. He has also referred to another enactment with regard to the sale of intoxicating liquors within the limits of railways; that is an enactment of the legislature, not a power, I take it, conferred upon the municipalities to restrain. This is one of the clauses which may be introduced into this Bill if we think proper; but it does not come within the purview of the amendment before the House. I trust that this explanation is sufficient to satisfy hon. gentlemen that in voting against this amendment as I feel bound to do, in maintaining the very principle of the Bill before us, we are not at all guided by a disposition to do one thing towards one Province and another with regard to the other Provinces, but as far as possible to have the same system applied to all.

Mr. ROYAL. I do not rise to speak on temperance, for which I have, moreover, no inclination; but, as we are to vote on this amendment, to state that if I vote against it I am not voting against the rights of the Provinces. Appeals have been made before six o'clock by some hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, to members from Quebec, not to vote down the amendment moved by the hon. leader of the Opposition. Now, Sir, I do not believe that the Opposition constitute the Province of Ontario. On the contrary, I believe that the opinion of the Province of Ontario is represented by the majority of the hon. members from that Province in this House. Nor do I believe, on the other hand, that we have the right to revive a piece of legislation which has become defunct or has become superseded after a lapse of time by an Act of the same Legislature. I am a member of the Committee which prepared this Bill, and though no doubt the larger share of the honor in connection with the Bill will fall to the lot of the Chairman of the Committee—so much so, that I believe that this Bill will be known in the future as the McCarthy Act—but I say as we have all been engaged in the preparation of that Bill, I believe it is our duty to save it from the confusion which would result if co-ordinate powers were established. We have already a plebiscite organized by which the municipality may decide on the question of whether liquor shall be sold or not. That plebiscite will work very well, but if the amendment is adopted another plebiscite will be established less perfect and less complete than this one. For these reasons I will vote against the amendment.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell) moved:

That the Bill be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole to amend section forty-six by expunging the words "the majority" in line four thereof, and inserting the words "a majority of three-fifths" instead thereof,—and to amend sub-section eleven, by expunging the words "the majority" and inserting instead thereof the word "three-fifths."

He said: The effect of this amendment would be to provide in what is ordinarily known as the local option clause which was introduced last night, that instead of a bare majority of voters three-fifths of the number of the voters who vote shall cast their votes in favor of the local prohibition in order to bring the clause into effect. The amendment is practically the same thing as the clause was in its original form, for I think it will be admitted that three-fifths of the votes polled will be about the same as a majority of the voters' list; but I think the expression of opinion which was given in this House last night as to the danger in the interest of temperance itself of allowing a mere accidental majority of voters polled, to make prohibitory enactment operative, will cause this amendment to be adopted.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria) moved :

That the Bill be recommitted to a Committee of the Whole, to amend the same by providing that sub-section 6 of section 46 be expunged, and the following substituted therefor:—

The votes of the electors shall be taken by ballot in the manner provided by "The Canada Temperance Act, 1878," and the several clauses thereof under the headings "The Poll"—"Scrutiny"—"Penalties"—"Preservation of the Peace"—"General Provisions"—"Prevention of Corrupt Practices"—and "Penalties and punishments generally" shall be read and construed as part of this Act, except where inconsistent with any of the provisions herein contained.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman explain whether all these clauses will harmonize with the clauses contained in the Bill.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I have looked carefully over the provisions of the Scott Act or Canada Temperance Act which are embodied in the motion, and I see nothing inharmonious in them or that cannot be properly worked by adopting all the provisions of the Scott Act which I have enumerated, and which cover all the machinery for taking a vote by ballot and all the other accompanying safeguards. I have embraced in that amendment everything in the Scott Act which is applicable, and I see nothing which cannot be worked satisfactorily.

Mr. BLAKE. It does not conflict with any of the remaining provisions.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I have added the words "where not inconsistent with anything in this Act." There is nothing inconsistent that I am aware of, but if there should turn out to be any different machinery in any respect provided—inasmuch as this clause introduced by the hon. member from Rouville to some extent provides for the appointment of a returning officer, and so forth—if there is anything inconsistent, the provisions of the forty-sixth clause would prevail.

Bill recommitted and reported.

On motion for third reading,

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex) moved:

That the Bill be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole in order to amend the same, as follows:—

Provided that when under colour of any Provincial Law there are at the time of the passing of this Act more licenses issued, than by the limit provided by this Act is permitted, the same number of licenses may be issued until the 1st day of May, 1886, the limit not to exceed one for every full four hundred beyond one thousand of the population.

Mr. McCARTHY. I think if the hon. gentleman would accept the limitation to those municipalities in which more have been issued, so as not to make it general for the two next years, that it would not be unreasonable. We have recognized with regard to shop licenses the principle that the law would not go into force so as to destroy the property of people who have invested under the authority of the existing law. Now, for several years in Ontario, the law has been that for every 400 of population beyond a thousand there might be one licensed house. We thought one for every 500 was enough, and I think in the long run it will be found that our principle is the better one. But if my hon. friend would say that in those municipalities where more than the limited number of licenses prescribed by law is now issued, just as with regard to shops, I do not think it would be unreasonable to say that after two years they should continue to issue within the judgment of the Board of Commissioners.

Mr. FOSTER. Before this goes to a vote I would like to make one or two observations. If this passes, especially on the ground on which it has been urged by the mover of the amendment, it will recognize the principle and doctrine of vested rights, and hereafter it will be impossible by any authority to lessen the number of licenses already existing without taking into account the vested interests of the persons who have been engaged in the traffic. If you go back to Great Britain, where the idea of vested rights is probably as deep seated as anywhere, you will find by a decision which was given not long since in the Court of Queen's Bench—

MEMBER INTRODUCED.

The following member, having previously taken the oath according to law, and subscribed the roll containing the same, took his seat in the House:

Hon. JOSEPH ADOLPHE CHAPLEAU, member for the electoral district of Terrebonne, introduced by Sir John A. Macdonald and Sir Hector Langevin.

Mr. FOSTER. I was proceeding to state that in Great Britain, where, perhaps, this idea is as deeply rooted as anywhere, by the latest decision given by the Court of Queen's Bench, the opposite to that idea was very forcibly brought out. The case was that of the Over-Garven Licensing Board. At the last session of that Board it was decided to strike off thirty-four of the licenses that had already been granted. There was nothing against the character of the persons or against the houses, which were properly kept, but on the ground of public utility these thirty-four licenses were struck off. An appeal was taken against the magistrates' decision, on the ground that it was interfering with vested rights, and the decision rendered by all the courts was that the Licensing Board had a perfect right, on the ground of public utility, to strike off those licenses. I say it would be attaching an unfortunate condition to the future action of Parliament, to declare that, although it might be held desirable in the public interest that the number of licenses should be reduced, that the number could not be reduced except with regard to those limitations and conditions. I hope this will not be the decision of the House, and that we will not have this precedent before us to harass us in respect to future legislation.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I think the hon. gentleman's motion is directed more particularly to Ontario. The operation of this law in some parts of New Brunswick, take my own constituency as an example, will be to reduce, by one half, the number of licenses granted, and the result of adopting this amendment would be to make the law inoperative until 1886.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex). I observe in the Bill reported by the Committee, of which the hon. member for King's (Mr. Foster) was an active member, that sub-section 2 of clause 75 reads as follows:—

No shop license shall be granted to any person to sell liquors in any store, shop, place or premises where groceries or other merchandize are sold, or exposed for sale, or in any store, place or premises, connected by any internal communication with such first mentioned store, shop, place or premises: Provided always, that this sub-section shall not apply to any licenses having a license at the time of the passing of this Act, prior to the first day of May in the year one thousand eight hundred and ninety.

I should like to know on what principle the time for shop licenses has been extended to 1890, and the time for hotel licenses should not be extended to May, 1886. I think the case of hotel-keepers is a much harder one than that of holders of shop licenses. The latter are engaged in other businesses, but the hotel-keeper has only that to depend on, and his property is not adapted to any other purpose; and I submit, that these considerations should be duly weighed by the House. I think the principle recognized as applicable to shop licenses should be applied in a modified degree to the case of hotels.

Mr. ORTON. I see nothing unreasonable in the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Patterson). I do not think we should press hardly on persons engaged in this business, and it must be remembered that the law heretofore existing in Ontario practically encouraged men to engage in that business to a certain limit; and I think it is not unreasonable, when a certain principle has been extended in regard to shop licenses, that the same principle should be extended to those keeping houses of public entertainment. It is only asking two years grace for those individuals. Parliament should not act in a spirit of persecution, but in the cause of temperance it should act with leniency.

Mr. McNEILL. We have already recognized the principle of compensation with regard to shop licenses, and we should recognize the same principle in regard to the matter covered by the amendment. I supported the resolution of the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Baker) because I felt that a great number of persons would otherwise be driven into poverty. We should act in this matter as mercifully as possible, and there is no reason why we should put this Act into operation as cruelly as possible. Many people will be very much injured as regards their property if some such provision as this now proposed is not inserted in the Bill. I will, therefore, vote for the amendment with much pleasure.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I hope that the House will not adopt this amendment. We have declared ourselves adverse to this principle in the case of Victoria, British Columbia. We are trying to frame a law which will apply uniformly to the whole Dominion and be based upon principle; and now we are, instead of retaining that principle, continuously seeking to evade it and shirk it by various amendments and compromises. I hope that the amendment will not prevail.

Amendment (Mr. Patterson, Essex) negatived on the following division:—

Mr. GIROUARD (Jacques Cartier) moved :

That the Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be referred back to the Committee of the Whole, to amend clauses ninety-eight and ninety-nine, so that the offences therein defined shall subject the offender only to the payment of a penalty not exceeding $20.

Clause ninety-eight is as follows:—

Any person who, having violated any of the provisions of this Act, compromises, compounds or settles, or offers or attempts to compromise, compound or settle the offence with any person or persons, with the view of preventing any complaint being made in respect thereof, or—if a complaint has been made—with the view of getting rid of such complaint, or of stopping or having the same dismissed for want of prosecution or otherwise, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction thereof shall be imprisoned at hard labor in the common gaol of the county or place in which the offence was committed, for the period of three calendar months.

And clause ninety-nine:

Every person who is concerned in, or is a party to the compromise composition off settlement mentioned in the next preceding section, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and, on conviction thereof, shall be imprisoned in the common gaol of the county or place in which the offence was committed for the period of three calendar months.

Now, I believe that these clauses are too severe, especially when we consider that section ninety-one declares that any person who sells liquor without a license or otherwise than under the provisions of this Act, shall be subject to a penalty not to exceed $50. I therefore move that clauses ninety-eight and ninety-nine be amended, so as to subject the offender only to a penalty of $20. I think that the penalty ought to be less than that of a person who sells without a license. I must say that clauses ninety-eight and ninety-nine are most extraordinary indeed. Today, under the Criminal Law of England, which is the law of this country, a man may compound a misdemeanor without committing a crime; but here, although the offence compounded is not a crime, still the compounder, whether the principal or not, is guilty of a misdemeanor.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. $20 is a very small penalty.

Mr. GIROUARD. It is small, but we must consider that the principal can only be fined at the outside $50, and he may be fined 50 cts. or $1. It is most extraordinary that a party compromising an offence which is not a crime, is guilty of a misdemeanor and may be sent to gaol for three months. It seems to me that in a case of this kind, the second party should be subject to a penalty about one-half of that of the principal offender.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Make the penalty the same as in the other case—not to exceed $50.

Mr. GIROUARD. Very well.

Mr. SPEAKER. Shall the motion be amended by adding the amount of the penalty shall not exceed $50?

Bill recommitted and reported.

On motion for third reading,

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex) moved :

That the Bill be recommitted to a Committee of the Whole, in order to amend it by expunging sub-section 5 of section 42, and to substitute the following therefor:—The Board may authorize the granting of two additional hotel licenses beyond the number limited by this Act, in a locality largely resorted to by travellers or visitors.

He said: I think that in the case of towns like Windsor in which there is a large visiting population, the principle which applies ordinarily in deciding the number of hotels should not be enforced. I do not think that in estimating the hotel population for a town of that kind you should only include the actual number of resident inhabitants. I believe that, at all events, it would be perfectly safe in such cases to leave the matter to the discretion of the Commissioners.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I fear that in passing this amendment in its present form, we will open a door to all sorts of applications for an additional number of hotels. Special provision is made in the Bill for Niagara Falls, which is, of course, an entirely exceptional place; and also for watering-places during six months of the year, but I do not think that such exceptional circumstances apply in the case of Windsor.

Mr. BLAKE. I think the amendment is entirely too vague in its terms. Besides, who is to decide what places are largely resorted to?

Mr. McCARTHY. Perhaps the matter might be decided on by adding in the second sub-section after the words "Niagara Falls," "two hotels at Windsor."

Mr. FOSTER. I do not see why, because you make an exception in the case of Niagara Falls, which is one place in the world, we should make also an exception for Windsor. If we do, we will find other hon. members asking for similar exceptions.

Mr. PATTERSON (Essex). I think the position of Windsor, which is the Canadian terminus of two great railways, and opposite a city of between 200,000 and 300,000 of a population is so exceptional that it could not be made a ground or precedent for other amendments of the same kind. The principle adopted by hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches seems to be not to allow any amendment they can prevent. I do not see that there is any consistent temperance principle carried out in the matter. I think some allowance should be made for these very exceptional cases.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Hamilton). I wish to move an amendment, merely for the purpose of making the Bill workable. The amendment of the hon. member for Rouville (Mr. Gigault) provides for prohibition on a vote of the majority, but there is no provision made for repealing the prohibition in case it should be required. I therefore move, seconded by Mr. Gigault:

That the Bill be recommitted to a Committee of the Whole, to amend sub-section 11 of section 46, by adding thereto the following words:—And each and all of the provisions of this section shall apply to the proceedings to be taken in reference to such repeal, and that the words "or February" be added after the word "January" in sub-section 2 of the said section 46.

Bill recommitted and reported.

Mr. McCARTHY moved:

That the Bill be recommitted to a Committee of the whole, in order to amend the Bill, as follows:—That all the words in section 39 after the words "at their discretion" in line 34 down to the words "and such License" in line 37 be expunged, and that a new Clause be inserted as follows:—

On the trial of any information or complaint against the provisions of this Act, the person charged, or husband of such person shall be competent and compellable to give evidence as a witness in the said matter;—That the following changes be made in section 46: "The word "Parliamentary" shall be expunged wherever it occurs; the words "or Chairman" "and registered" shall be expunged in sub-section 2; the words "Chief Inspector" shall be substituted for the words "License Inspector." The word "five" shall be substituted for the word "four" wherever it occurs in section 46;—as to the hours named for polling and voting days the word "qualified" shall be expunged in sub-section 5.

Bill recommitted and reported.

Mr. FOSTER moved:

That the Bill be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole, to amend section 74 by expunging the words "to be consumed on the premises," and by adding to section 82, the following:—

When any Inspector, policeman, constable or officer in making or attempting to make any search under or in pursuance of the authority conferred by section 81 of this Act, or under the warrant mentioned in the last named section, finds in an unlicensed house or place, any liquor which in his opinion is unlawfully kept for sale or disposal contrary to the said Act, he may forthwith seize and remove the same, and the vessels in which the same is kept, and upon the conviction of the occupant of such house or place, or of any other person, for keeping liquor for sale in such house or place without license, the Magistrate making such conviction, may, in and by the said conviction, or by a separate or subsequent order, declare the said liquor and vessels, or any part thereof, to be forfeited to Her Majesty, and may order and direct that the said Inspector, policeman, constable or officer shall destroy the same or any part thereof, and the Inspector or other person as aforesaid shall thereupon forthwith destroy the same or part thereof as directed by such conviction or order.

He said: Section eighty-two is to provide for the destruction of liquors in connection with the search clause. That has been omitted and a new section substituted. Section seventy-four reads in this way:—

Any licensed person who allows to be supplied in his licensed premises, by purchase or otherwise, to be consumed on the premises, any description of liquor to any person apparently under the age of sixteen, &c.

You will notice that limits a person to selling or supplying to be consumed on the premises, but that would defeat the whole object of the clause against selling to minors, and it is to amend that as well. I propose to strike out the words "to be consumed on the premises." The other is a very important one in connection with places where a prohibitory law prevails, and where some person is appointed to sell for medicinal purposes. It is found that some physicians of a not very respectable class make a traffic out of selling prescription certificates and in a sort of league with the person who sells, dividing the profits annually, and defeat the purposes of the Act. This is to provide a penalty for the physician who shall traffic in certificates in that way, on conviction at the proper tribunal.

Mr. DAVIES. As clause seventy-four now reads it forbids the sale of liquor to any person under sixteen years of age, if that person is not a resident of the premises, or a lodger or traveller; but it does not prohibit the sale to minors who may be living in the tavern. The hon. gentleman proposes to strike out the words "to be consumed on the premises." That will prevent any young man of fourteen or fifteen years of age being sent to a liquor store to buy for his master. I think the hon. gentleman would meet his object better if he strikes out those words which allow liquor to be sold to a minor if he is a boarder, lodger or traveller. I do not know why it should be right to sell to a lad of fourteen if he lives in a tavern. I think the whole system of selling to lodgers is wrong.

Mr. FOSTER. As the clause now stands it allows a licensed person to sell to boys or girls under sixteen years of age indiscriminately, provided they do not consume it on the premises. I think that is a very strong objection and ought to be removed. With reference to being able to supply it to those who are residents on the premises, there is an objection to that, the hon. gentleman says, too. That is obviated to a certain extent by the fact that those who are residents in a hotel are probably under the supervision of parents or guardians.

Bill recommitted and reported.

Mr. GIGAULT moved:

That the Bill be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole, to amend the same by adding to section 7, as sub-section (e) the following:—The Board may in granting a license to an hotel-keeper, authorize him to sell liquors in quantities exceeding one Imperial quart, and not exceeding one Imperial gallon, at any time to any person, said quantities not to be consumed on the premises.

He said: In the Province of Quebec there is no limitation as to the quantities of liquor which may be sold by hotel-keepers. In many of our municipalities we have only an hotel and no store, and if we adopt the Bill as at present claimed and not give the right to the Board to authorize hotel-keepers in certain cases where there is no store, to sell liquors in quantities exceeding one quart, it will be a very great injury to the cause of temperance.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. FLEMING moved:

That all the words after the word "that" in the said motion, and to insert the following instead thereof:— "The Provincial Legislatures have since Confederation exercised Legislative powers in the regulation of the issue of licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors, and the hours and certain other incidents of the sale.

That the Appeal Courts of Ontario and Quebec have each decided in favor of the exercise by the Provinces of the Dominion of the Jurisdiction, and this Appeal Court has further determined that the judgment of the Privy Council in Russell and The Queen does not decide that the Provincial Legislatures have not this Jurisdiction.

That the questions involved are now under the consideration of the Supreme Court of Canada, and will shortly be brought under the consideration of the Privy Council.

That the Parliament of Canada should not assume jurisdiction as proposed by the said Bill until the question has been settled by the Court of last resort.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne) moved :

To leave out all the words after the word "that" in the said motion, and to insert the following instead thereof:—

The general understanding since Confederation has been that under the Constitutional Act the Provinces have jurisdiction over the regulation and restriction of the issue of licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors, the hours of sale, and certain other incidents of the business.

That the local character of the questions, and the use of the local machinery and institutions in dealing therewith, show that the public interest will be best served by the continuance of Provincial jurisdiction over these matters.

That a question as to such jurisdiction having been raised in the Gracious Speech from the Throne, the action of this House should be in the direction of procuring the removal of doubts by the establishment of the Provincial jurisdiction, instead of assuming jurisdiction as proposed by this Bill.

Amendment negatived on same division as the last.

Bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. DAVIES. I had hoped that the hon. Minister of Railways would have seen his way clear in conjunction with the Postmaster-General, to put an item in the Estimates to carry out the contract with Prince Edward Island concerning the carriage of the mails. I had all along hoped that something would be done, during this Session, in this connection. Water-boats for next season would cost only $2,000 or $3,000; and we know that, this season, a dozen persons really lost their lives from want of a water-boat. I thought that the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury benches would be quite satisfied to carry out the agreement, but I see nothing for it in the Estimates. We also need water-sheds, which can be built with the sum mentioned. I understood that, in connection with summer communication, something would be done to give an additional subsidy to the steam-boat company to induce them to put an iron steamboat on the route. I hope that the Government will not forget these matters. As far as the winter service is concerned, I think that a universal wail of complaint will go up from the people if something is not done to place this service on a better footing next year. Another season should not be allowed to pass without carrying out the contract with Prince Edward Island.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say, with reference to this matter, that we have already stated to the House that, pending the construction of the railway connecting the two capes on both sides, the contract has been extended, or the existing contract continued, for steam communication with Prince Edward Island, and it was not proposed to interfere with that communication until we were in a position to take up the whole question in connection with the new and altered circumstances under which the Government will find themselves after we have these means of communication with the Island. So far as the sheds are concerned, for the protection of people at the capes, I think they will be provided in connection with the construction of the Prince Edward Island Railway to Cape Traverse. I think there will be no difficulty in providing the wharf accommodation on that side, and probably in the meantime some similar provision may be made for the other side. The question of improved communication in the meantime by means of ice-boats is engaging the attention of the Department of Marine and Fisheries, and will be considered in connection with the arrangements for the future mail service on the Island.

Mr. BRECKEN. Water-boats have been provided during this last season. The ice-boats are not more than sixteen or seventeen feet long, and when they are laden with mail bags and passengers they are not quite safe. Late this season the Postmaster-General placed a water-boat at the service of the mail carriers, when the matter was represented to him. These water-boats are open boats of twenty-five feet keel, perhaps, involving a cost for construction of perhaps $4,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. How did they succeed?

Mr. BRECKEN. Very well, I believe, though if there is a rough sea, there is occasionally some danger of their being swamped.

Mr. BLAKE. I have no doubt the Minister will continue this service, for it is obvious that while these hardships have to be undergone they should be mitigated as far as possible.

Motion agreed to: and the House again resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

372. North-West Territories.—To provide for the establishment of Indian Industrial Schools. $44,000.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The intention is to establish three Indian industrial schools in the North-West. The Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West has sent a memorandum upon this question, in which it is stated that in order to educate the Indian children it is necessary to have these schools. They have succeeded very well in the United States, and it is quite likely that they will succeed here as well. The fact is, that if you wish to educate these children you must separate them from their parents during the time they are being educated. If you leave them in the family they may know how to read and write, but they still remain savages, whereas by separating them in the way proposed, they acquire the habits and tastes—it is to be hoped only the good tastes—of civilized people. The intention is to have three of these schools, one at Battleford, another about Qu'Appelle, and a third in another portion of the territory, I believe in Treaty No. 6. The industrial school at Battleford will be a Protestant school, and the two others being amongst Indians belonging to the Roman Catholic faith, will be Roman Catholic schools. Some of the buildings which are now erected in Battleford will be appropriated for the purposes of the industrial school at that point. At Qu'Appelle we think that the sum of $6,000 will be sufficient for the present for the building to be erected there. Then, at the other place, we think that by putting the school near the river we may get the timber down the river to make the building of logs which would be sufficient for the present until the country is more opened. There will be a principal to each of these schools who will be paid say $1,200 a year, an assistant $800, matron $400, farmer $60 per month, and a cook $240, or altogether $3,360. Food and clothing for say thirty children will be about $450, and for equipment, &c., there will be from $1,500 to $2,000 more. The three schools will cost about $43,000 or a little more, and it is intended to devote $1,500 of the balance for the encouragement of the industrial school which has been established by the Bishop of St. Albert, Monseigneur Grandin, who has done a great deal for the civilization of the Indians and who has been left entirely on his own means for the support of an industrial school, some other educational establishments and an hospital. The sum of money that will be given to that industrial school will be at the rate of $30 or $40 per pupil.

Mr. BLAKE. Then the permanent establishment of each of the schools will cost about $9,000 a year?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Perhaps a little more—about $9,500.

Mr. BLAKE. And that is for thirty children?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. For thirty children, as a beginning; but the same staff would do for forty or fifty. With the three schools, however, together with the Bishop's establishment, 120 children altogether will be provided for. We think that is a good beginning, and if we succeed in educating these, there will be an inducement for others to go to the schools.

Mr. BLAKE. The cost of maintenance seems to be extraordinarily large—$150 for each child. It is quite obvious, from their station in life, that it would be not a kindness, but a cruelty to provide for these children for other than the simplest manner, both as to food and clothing.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That covers everything—food, clothing, light, fuel, and so on.

Mr. BLAKE. But still it seems a very large sum. What is the hon. gentleman's general scheme of education for these children? Is it proposed to educate them in some particular handicraft, or the cultivation of the soil? And are both sexes to be taken into the school?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. As I understand, these schools will be for male children, and the principal occupation taught them will be the cultivation of the soil. For instance, at Battleford there are 30 acres broken, and 160 acres fenced. The intention is to have a larger reserve for these schools, where the boys will have every opportunity to learn the art of agriculture. They will also be taught the rudiments of education.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the minimum age of admission, and the general length of a course?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot state the minimum age. It will be, I suppose, about ten years, and, as in the industrial school of the Bishop, they will remain until they are sixteen or eighteen, or perhaps twenty. They are taught then, as in the ordinary schools, to read and write, and arithmetic, as well as a trade of some kind—generally the cultivation of the soil; and when they leave the school, they receive a small sum of money to enable them to buy implements and to engage in agriculture on their own account. I have no doubt that we shall find it proper, when these boys come out of the school, to give them a homestead, and try to settle them and make them good citizens. The civilization of these Indians will, no doubt, become rapid, as they will see the new settlers establishing themselves around them. If these schools are to succeed, we must not have them too near the bands; in order to educate the children properly we must separate them from their families. Some people may say that this is hard, but if we want to civilize them we must do that.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course, this is a very interesting experiment. I have not read the account of what has been done in the North-West, and I do not happen to know what has been done in the United States. But the hon. gentleman ought to remember that the Indian, as the white man, is likely to have a better half when he becomes an adult. If the hon. gentleman is going to leave the young Indian girl who is to mature into a squaw to have the uncivilized habits of the tribe, the Indian, when he marries such a squaw, will likely be pulled into Indian savagery by her. If this scheme is going to succeed at all, you will, unless these Indian bucks are to be veritable bachelors all their lives, have to civilize the intended wives as well as husbands. I have known in my early life two Indians who were at the Upper Canada College—the place where I received my early education—for a number of years and were as civilized, apparently, as any of the white people I am now addressing, but the wild blood was in them and both of them ultimately, after a number of years of civilized life in Toronto, went back to the habits of the tribe, showing how difficult it is to eradicate that hereditary taint.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No doubt the Government will have to provide for the education of the girls as well as the boys. The experiment of Bishop Grandin's industrial school is complete, because he has also here a large school or convent where girls are educated, so that when the young men come out of the industrial school, say at twenty or so, they marry the girls from the convent and settle on lands in that neighborhood; and the bishop told me these settlements are all thriving, and the success is complete. Having that example and the report of Mr. Dewdney of similar success in the United States, we must expect that, with a little attention, we will succeed in this.

Mr. BLAKE. We ought to have at once a capital and an annual account opened, so as to see how the experiment succeeds; and we should see that this interesting experiment is accompanied by full and detailed reports.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I recognize the fact, that the Indians have a claim on this continent, and that a Minister dealing with votes of this kind must be treated in a generous manner. In my county there are 3,000 Indians, and they have among them a large industrial institution and ten or eleven schools. For twenty-five or thirty years the experiment of educating them has been carried on with a varying degree of success; but what I desire to call the attention of the hon. member to is, that according to the experience in my county, after receiving a good education, these boys are taught handicrafts, to till the soil, and some are to be found in the medical profession and among the clergy—their after life on their reservation is not calculated to enable them to take full advantage of their training. Girls are taught house work, they are taught to sew and knit, and while some have left the reserve and gone out and have taken a very creditable position in society, the fact has been that many of them, I dare say a great majority, when they leave the industrial schools, go back to their own lands. Others are settled so thickly in this one township, all the lands being held in common, the tribal relation existing, no man owning his own land in fee simple, that the energies the white people feel, and that the red man would feel if he possessed the same liberties of the white man, become dwarfed. There is no stimulus to energy, there is nothing to incite them to go forward and upward in life under their present condition, and the only way in which they can hope to do that is to strike out for themselves and go out into the world. But our Indian law comes in and entails a penalty upon them for so doing—and I may be allowed perhaps to refer to that point in our Indian law.

Our Indian law has been improved, in my judgment, somewhat. It is not so many years ago that the Indian law on the Statute book was, that if any Indian woman lived in a state of adultery with a white man and had issue, all her children were upon the pay-roll and received their share of the annuities; whereas, if she married according to the laws of God and man, our law stepped in and cut off her children, and said they should not receive their money. I had occasion to raise my voice in that behalf, and am glad to say that that law does not exist in its full vigor at present. Another clause is that an Indian possessed of more energy and educated at these establishments, and wishing to find scope, and development, and better chances of success, if he went to the country to the south of us, as many of our young men do, our Indian law still comes in and entails a penalty upon him for going away, and forfeits his annuity moneys, which are his moneys and belong to the tribe. I am not sure but that even yet, if they leave the reserve and go to another part of Canada, our Indian law cuts them off. But it still remains that if an Indian woman marries a white man she now can receive her share of the annuity moneys, but the issue are not allowed to participate, our law entails a penalty upon them; and I for one do not hesitate to say that instead of being in favor of keeping the Indians as Indians, of keeping the Indians to themselves, and so framing a law that if an Indian steps outside the reserve or tries to find a white man or a white woman with whom to mate, I for one say the law should throw no obstacle in their way at all. Some of the finest specimens of manhood are what are known as half-breeds. Why, under our Indian law, they should have a penalty entailed upon them, I have been unable to conceive. I think the only solution of the Indian problem of this Continent is this: that the sooner you can bring the Indian up to that standard which would warrant you in giving him all the rights and liberties that are enjoyed by his white brethren, and entrust him with all the responsibilities of citizenship, the sooner you will solve that problem. I see no solution of it in shutting them up in reserves and maintaining the tribal relation for all time to come. I am glad to hear the Minister say—I gather that from a remark he made—that he contemplates that the Indian of the North-West, if he proves himself fit, may have a homestead given to him. It seems to me that is the right direction. I am very much inclined, I dare say more than other members of the House, to support the hon. Minister in that step. It is expensive, no doubt, but it is expensive to feed Indians, it will be expensive to feed them for years to come, and I for one believe that we must not enter upon a policy of the extermination of the Indians. They are here and they must be treated in that way. I believe a step in the direction of relieving ourselves of the support of these Indians is to give them facilities such as they shall not feel themselves forced to go back again into that condition out of which they were taken.

Mr. DAWSON. There are quite a number of Indians in my constituency—as many as 10,000, I believe,—but they are not quite so thickly settled as they are in the constituency of the hon. member who has just spoken. We have had some experience with these industrial schools, and they have been successful so far. On Manitoulin Island and at Sault Ste. Marie there are schools both for boys and girls that have been exceedingly successful. With regard to what my hon. friend says of the tribal system, however badly it may work in his constituency where the Indians are probably further advanced and more thickly settled, its abolition would not certainly work well among the Indians in Algoma, and I do not think it would work well in the North-West. The tribal system is, in my opinion, the true protection the Indians have against the encroachment of the white man. If they had the fee simple in their own hands they would not be able to protect it and it would be taken from them. I think it would probably help the civilized Indians a great deal if they had the franchise conferred upon them. The Indian, even though he lives upon the reserves, should have his own ground separate from the others, and if he becomes a good citizen and industrious, there is no reason why he should not have the franchise. It would tend to elevate him in his own esteem, at least, and there is a great deal to be said in that respect.

373. To provide the salaries of two additional Indian Agents in British Columbia.....$2,400.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. These are two additional agents for the north-west coast of British Columbia, including Queen Charlotte's Island and up as far as the American settlement.

375. Consolidation of the Dominion Statutes.....$10,000.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is in connection with the consolidation of the Statutes that has been begun by Mr. Cockburn. We think that preliminary work will be advanced far enough to allow the Commission to be appointed during this year. I understand from the hon. First Minister, that the intention is to appoint three Commissioners, one speaking the French and two the English language.

Mr. BLAKE. When a vote is asked for the creation of a Commission of this description, it is proper that we should be informed as to what is the intended scale of remuneration. At the present time there is a Commissioner who is being paid at the rate of $4,000, and a Secretary being paid $1,500.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am not in a position to give this information at present, but will do so to-morrow.

379. To aid the Geographical Society of Quebec in their explorations of the St. Lawrence, Labrador and James' Bay.....$300.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I saw the president of this society, Colonel Rhodes, to-day, and he explained to me that the society expected a much larger sum than $300. I explained that we had seen that the Quebec Legislature had given $300, and that we accordingly recommended the same amount. He explained that for that small sum only limited explorations could be made, and that if explorations were to be undertaken in the country north-west of Lake St. John, and towards Lake Mistassini, which is reported to be as large as one of the great lakes in Ontario, and on to James' Bay, it would be a very important work, and a large sum would be required. The Government, however, ask Parliament to vote only $300 this year.

Mr. BLAKE. While it may be a very good plan to assist a society, yet, if a large sum is to be voted by Government, the exploration might as well be conducted by Government.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I told the president of the society that if a large sum was ultimately to be expended, it would be questionable whether the Government should not undertake the exploration themselves.

380. To provide for an annual allowance to the widow of the late Sir George E. Cartier.....$1,200.00

Mr. BLAKE. Is this intended to be a permanent amount?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes. The fact is, the position of Lady Cartier and her daughters is such that we thought it necessary to ask Parliament to vote this sum.

381. To provide for a gratuity of six months' salary to the widow of the late Frank Shanly...$3,250.00

Mr. BLAKE. I should like an explanation of this item?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is known that the late Mr. Frank Shanly was appointed for the purpose of adjusting a large number of important claims connected with the construction of the Intercolonial Railway, and while so engaged he suddenly died. He died on his way from Toronto to the seat of his duties here, and I regret to say that, being cut off very suddenly, in the prime of life, he left his family quite unprovided for. Under those circumstances, we thought we might properly ask for a grant of six months' salary for the benefit of his family.

Mr. TROW. How long was he in the employ of the Government?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Not very long, but he was in the employ of the Government at the time of his death.

Mr. BLAKE. We all regret the sudden death of Mr. Frank Shanly, and if this matter is to be disposed of mainly as a matter of sentiment, not a word would be said. But Mr. Shanly was City Engineer of Toronto, with a salary of $3,000 a year when the hon. Minister transferred him to the service of the Government at a salary of $6,500, and his son was his private secretary for a portion of the time, and drew an additional salary. Now, I can understand no principle on which, in that respect, a gentleman who was transferred from a salary of $3,000 to $6,500 and who filled the position for two or three years, we should be called upon to disburse the public funds to the extent of $3,250 as a gratuity. I do not know whether the usual two months' allowance considered proper in such cases, was payable to the family.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It has not been paid.

Mr. BLAKE. I suppose, because he was not considered to come within the regular Civil Service, if this case is not thought to come within that provision, it is a fortiori that does not come within a six months' allowance of this kind. The precedent which the hon. gentleman is setting seems to me to be attended with the greatest inconvenience. Here is an officer who received a very large salary, and it is proposed in this particular case to pay six months' salary to the family. We have been losing officers by death at the rate, perhaps, of fifty or sixty a year in the Civil Service; and we have been giving to those entitled to it under these rules the two months' allowance. We have not heretofore departed from this rule. On what principle should we depart from it now in the case of an officer whose salary was $6,500, and not depart from it in the cases of the vast mass of officers whose remuneration is so much less, and whose capacity in consequence, for leaving their families provided for, is so much worse than that of an officer earning this amount of money. It seems to me that there is really no justification for this expenditure of the public funds.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. At this late period of the Session, and in the absence of so many members of the House, I do not feel disposed to press this item against the opinion expressed, and will withdraw it.

383. To refund to the Merchants Bank, in accordance with the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in the case of Merchants' Bank vs. Regina, amount of dues paid by that bank under protest.....$2,109 21

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It will be remembered that a vote was taken in former resolutions to pay these costs. This money was paid under protest against the decision of the court in that case, which concerns Skead's timber.

384. To provide for the payment of Mr. Fabre's salary and contingencies of his office..... $2,500.00

Mr. BLAKE. Is this permanent?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The appointment is for three years altogether; one year has elapsed and this is the second year.

Mr. CASGRAIN. According to the returns on the Table, it appears that Mr. Fabre is confided with certain duties; and that he was required to report on what he has done, but he has done nothing at all during the past year. He has not even complied with the instructions which he has received. I do not think he ought to be continued in office.

Mr. BLAKE. Did he not draw his salary?

Mr. CASGRAIN. Oh, yes! He was paid a portion of his salary in advance, and is now paid monthly. He is also engaged by the Government of the Province of Quebec, who give him $3,000 a year; so he obtains $5,500 per annum to live in Paris. But what has he done? Well, he has done one thing: he has procured what we may call, one immigrant for the Province of Quebec, although this person proved not to be an immigrant. He was taken in by an individual from Montreal, who asked for a passage; and Mr. Fabre advanced him money to return to Montreal, where he boasted of having taken in Mr. Fabre. This is the only service which, to my knowledge, he has furnished the Province of Quebec and the Dominion. Under these circumstances his services might easily be dispensed with. If he were present I would say much more, and something which is very true, and which is too true for his reputation.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will explain, after this statement, what Mr. Fabre ought to have done, and what he has done?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Three months salary was advanced in order that he might reach his destination and settle down there. I have no doubt that it took him nearly a month, after his arrival, to settle down, and in making the advance we ran a slight risk of his life. Mr. Fabre went to Paris not only to look after the business of the Dominion, in giving information to intending immigrants with reference to Canada, but also to Canadians who visit Paris; and he is also employed by the Quebec Government. Were it not for this fact $2,500 or $2,000 a year would not induce him to go to Paris in that capacity. Mr. Fabre is to report to us as to his doings in Paris, whenever this is required or may be useful to Canada. He is already in communication with the Government; and I have no doubt, from what I have heard, that he has performed his duties as well as could be expected under the circumstances. When he went there first enquiries about Canada were not so numerous as they are now, and I have seen several Frenchmen who came from Paris and who obtained information at Mr. Fabre's office; and I have no doubt that this will increase. You could not expect that at the beginning he would be as useful as he must be in the future. At all events, this experiment is to be tried for three years. The first year has passed, and I am confident that the second year will give us still better results, while I hope that the third year will be so satisfactory as to induce us to continue this position. If we find we do not get value for our money, we can abolish the office; but I think it is only proper, that in the capital of France we should have an agent. We have agents in other countries, and it is only due to that portion of the population of Canada who speak the French language and whose origin is such that he is enabled to give to his compatriots on the other side of the ocean all possible information about Canada, the French Canadians, and the institutions and lands of that Province, modes of communication, and so on. All this information Mr. Fabre is in a position to give, and gives.

Mr. BLAKE. There is one position which the hon. gentleman takes in which I think he is most secure, and that is that more is likely to be done the second year than the first for the simple reason that it would be very difficult to show results less than nothing at all. Of course we all rejoice that something is being done in the direction which the hon. gentleman mentions, but still I do not think that the choice was a wise one. Mr. Fabre is a very pleasant companion, but he is a very brilliant and versatile writer, and in the times gone by I have read with great pleasure the articles he wrote for his newspaper in which he gave me undeserved praise as well as subsequent articles in which he gave me, as I thought, undeserved condemnation, though of course that may have been a mistake on my part. Though I have enjoyed his pleasant companionship and society as well as the products of his brilliant pen, I never heard or read anything in particular from him to induce me to believe that he was exactly the sort of person who should be appointed to perform the duty which the hon. gentleman says he is expected to discharge. I rather suspect that he is perhaps a little fond of Parisian society, and I should fancy that he may share the notion of some Americans that Paris is the place that Americans go to when they die. I rather think that there is perhaps one person who will be gratified by this joint offer, and perhaps only one, and that is Mr. Fabre himself. For my own part I do not join in the expectations of the hon. gentleman as to the results which will follow Mr. Fabre's appointment. I have no doubt we will have a brilliant report, but I fear it will be full of nothing.

Mr. BERGERON. I saw Mr. Fabre in his office last summer, and was strongly convinced of the necessity of having such an office in Paris, as nearly every day I was there gentlemen were calling to get information about Canada. Mr. Fabre has a large office, he has large maps of Canada on his walls, he receives all our newspapers, and he is in a position to give every possible information about this country. Not only is his office useful to enquirers about this country, but it is a very convenient and useful place to French Canadians who may visit Paris. In fact, while I was there, I thought that his salary of $6,000 was not near large enough. I have no doubt that the expectations of the hon. Minister of Public Works will be fully realized, and that the services of Mr. Fabre will be worth a great deal more than $6,000.

392. Additional amounts required for land guides, &c. $7,500.00

Mr. BLAKE. What is the reason for the employment of these additional guides?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It is on account of the large number of immigrants who are going into the country, and the necessity of having guides to convey them to their destination.

Mr. BLAKE. How many more are to be employed?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Six or seven.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the present staff?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I could not say, but I think about eleven.

393. Legislation—To pay to F. Houde, M.P., the amount of his Sessional indemnity..... $1,000.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Mr. Houde came here the first day of the Session, and was sworn in, but, after a few days' attendance, he had to go to his lodgings on account of sickness. He returned to the House again, but he had to leave altogether and seek a milder climate, in order to try to save his life. Under these circumstances, we thought we might ask Parliament to do as had been done before in similar cases, and pay the full amount of his indemnity.

Mr. BLAKE. I am sure we all sympathize with Mr. Houde in the serious illness I am sorry to hear he is suffering, and I do not rise for the purpose of objecting to this vote under such painful circumstances. But I know there are other instances of members who have been similarly attacked by serious illness, and who, I believe, were not dealt with in this way. That is the difficulty in this class of votes, though it is impossible for me to do otherwise, feeling as I do about Mr. Houde, than to express my acquiescence in the vote.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I knew of no other case than that of Mr. Houde's or I should have been happy to have included them in the vote. There was one case, but unfortunately, the gentleman in question was absent at the beginning of the Session, so that he did not take the oath and therefore was not entitled to the indemnity. It was only later that he came here and was sworn in, and since that I understand there is no difficulty about his indemnity down to a late day.

Mr. TROW. I know that one hon. member, the hon. member for Digby, started to come to the Capital, was taken ill by the way and had to go to Florida, where he remained for several weeks, and then returned to this House.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I was not alluding to the hon. gentleman. I was thinking of another with regard to whom it had been observed to me that he had not been sworn in, and, therefore, under no circumstances could he receive the indemnity. However, if it was the desire of the House that the member in question should be paid, the matter might be taken up.

Mr. DESJARDINS. If the hon. member for Digby started from home to come here, and was prevented by illness from arriving, I think that should be taken into consideration by the House.

394. For a branch of the Intercolonial Railway to Dartmouth, provided the municipality of Dartmouth undertake the payment to the Government of the amount of $4,000 per annum for twenty years, or so much of that amount as may be required in addition to the net revenue to pay 4 per cent. per annum on the sum expended$110,000.00

Mr. BLAKE. Explain.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There has always been a very great desire on the part of the inhabitants of Dartmouth that they should have connection with the Intercolonial Railway. Dartmouth is an enterprising town on the eastern side of the harbor of Halifax, opposite the city. It is the point where Major Robertson, who made the survey for the Imperial Government, located the terminus of the Intercolonial Railway. It is the point which Peto, Brassey & Betts selected as the terminus when they were expected to construct the railway. The terminus was located, however, by the Government of Nova Scotia, on the westward side of the harbor. The result is that the town of Dartmouth has had no direct communication with the Intercolonial Railway. Various means have been devised for carrying a line of railway from the Intercolonial Railway to Dartmouth; and the syndicate which contemplated taking up and consolidating the Nova Scotia railways, proposed to build a branch, for which the town of Dartmouth agreed to provide a certain amount of aid; As is known to the House, this arrangement fell through; and it is now proposed to project an extension from the Intercolonial Railway at Richmond to Dartmouth, by the construction of a bridge across the Narrows. The municipality of Dartmouth have obtained legislation, by which they are enabled to pledge $4,000 a year for twenty years, or so much of that amount as will be necessary to pay 4 per cent. on the cost of extending the line over the net profits from the operation. Under these circumstances, taking into consideration that there is a large water side at Dartmouth, that there is an enterprising town, that it possesses a very extensive water-power, that there are already a number of factories there, and that a large sugar refinery, involving the expenditure of a large amount of capital, is about to be constructed by a body of British capitalists—we believe that the extension of this branch into the town of Dartmouth will not only be attended with very great benefit to the town, but will furnish a volume of traffic that will be highly remunerative to the road. My own opinion is that this arrangement will be a very good one for the Government, because, practically, the cost of constructing the road will be borne by the municipality of Dartmouth, and I believe the trade and business sent from that town over the Intercolonial Railway will make it one of the most profitable portions of the road. I have no doubt that this vote will meet with the hearty approval of any gentleman who is acquainted with the circumstances.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the length of the mileage?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The proposal is to spend the $110,000 which will cover the extra expenditure to a point called Black Point, two miles in length, and three miles more will be constructed as sidings to the sugar refinery by the parties who build the road, as was done on the Halifax side for the cotton factories.

Mr. BLAKE. Then, it will cost about $55,000 a mile?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

397. Harbors and Rivers, New Brunswick, for extended railway wharf accommodation at Carleton, St. John, N. B. $10,000.00

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman explain this?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. This is to afford increased facilities at the railway terminus at Carleton, on the western side of the harbor. There are two railways connecting there, the Grand Southern and the Carleton Branch, which is connected with the Western Extension of the European and North American Railway, and this is to afford increased facilities for the discharge of freight in the river.

Mr. BLAKE. Have these railways no wharves?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. They have a small wharf, but it is not sufficient for the extensive business expected there.

Mr. BLAKE. Why do they not build their own wharves?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. We think the public have an interest in providing accommodation there as on the opposite side of the harbor.

Mr. BLAKE. That is where your own railway is. Is this on account of that $40,000?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Not on account of it.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes, I see. It is a composition of the hon. gentleman with his indignant constituents which he pays—at least what we pay.

399. { Midland Harbor $10,000.00
Consecon 3,000.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Very large sums are being expended at Midland Harbor by the Midland Railway Company, in making piers, &c., but the harbor requires deepening and we ask for $10,000 for that purpose. In Consecon dredging was begun, and unless we continued the work, the money expended would be of little use. In Midland Harbor, the depth of water is 14 feet, I think.

401. To meet costs of litigated matters..... $5,000.00

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. We thought it best to have a vote of this kind. There may or may not be any such expenditure, but it was thought better to have this vote than to require a Governor-General's warrant.

Mr. BLAKE. Cases which may arise out of transactions connected with particular works should be charged to them either as part of Capital or Revenue Account. We ought not to create a new branch of Miscellaneous, which may absorb some portion of the expenses which heretofore have been placed against the works to which they belong.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Some of these costs are not connected with works. We have had several to meet, and which I have had to ask special votes for; but the intention is not to separate the costs from the works to which they apply.

402. To make good to those merchants of Prince Edward Island, who were British subjects, the amount of duties paid by them to the United States Customs on fish and fish oil in the year 1871, under the arrangements entered into in advance of the legislation necessary to bring the Treaty of Washington into force, by which arrangement United States fishermen were granted liberty to fish in the territorial waters of Prince Edward Island, on the understanding that the President of the United States would ask Congress to refund these duties, which arrangement the President subsequently declined to carry out, on the ground that the proposal contemplated the united action of all the British North American Colonies, which was not had, and that it would not be practicable to separate the colonies or carry into effect for one what the President was willing to effect for all, it not having been deemed advisable in the general interest of the British case to put forward and press the claim of these merchants before the Halifax Commission..... $30,086.10

Mr. DAVIES. Will the hon. gentleman give the names of those merchants?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I do not remember them, and the hon. First Minister is not present. There must be twelve or fourteen of them.

Mr. DAVIES. The man who has the largest claim has been omitted from this vote.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. He may be a United States citizen. The injustice was done by the United States Government, and to that Government United States citizens should look.

Mr. DAVIES. Mr. Hall and Mr. Merrick are American citizens who have done more to develop the fisheries than any other merchants, and have given employment to more men.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I think Mr. Hall's name is in the list.

Mr. DAVIES. The statement "it not having been deemed advisable in the general interest of the British case to put forward and press the claims of those merchants." That is absurd. There was no claim which could have been put before the Halifax Fishery Commission, because that Commission was to establish what damages were payable by the United States to us for the right to fish in our waters from 1873 to 1885, whereas this claim for refunding the duties dates from 1871. They do not come within the purview of the arbitrators at all, and we would have been ashamed to ask them to be so considered. Therefore, it ought not to stand here in the record that there was a claim which might have been put before the Commission, but in the public interest was not pressed. There was no such claim which could have been put before the Halifax Fishery Commission. It was not kept back, and it did not come within the purview of the award at all. Those gentlemen have a good claim against the United States, there is no doubt about that. They have violated a solemn compact on the grounds, as it is alleged, that because Prince Edward Island came into the arrangement and joined Canada, they did not consider themselves bound to carry out the compact with Prince Edward Island. I do submit that if you are going to acknowledge the claim, if you are going to pay these people, it would be a manifest injustice to pay some of them and not the others; at any rate, I would like to know who they are.

Mr. BLAKE. I really think this is most unsatisfactory. Here is a vote for a very large sum of money brought down the last working day but one of the Session. The hon. gentleman has not given the name of a single individual; he has not told the means by which this sum is assessed, and he has given no information why Canada should pay a shilling of this vote. My hon. friend who has just spoken, was one of the Canadian Council at the Halifax Commission, being specially retained as one familiar with Prince Edward Island, and my hon. friend informs the hon. gentleman that this statement of a reason for this vote is totally impossible, and the dates are enough to prove it. The earliest point was at a date two years subsequent to the period of the supposed accrual of this claim. The claim could not be brought before them, as the arbitration began long before this claim had arisen. Anybody will know who remembers the arrangement and the treaty, that the claims for damages which were prescribed for investigation, could not possibly include this. My hon. friend says that this claim, which was a claim against the American Government, could not be pressed, because it was inadvisable in the public interest. My hon. friend says that he, as one of the Council, and the Canadian Commissioner were both agreed, it was not a claim that could be pressed, because there was nothing in it as against the United States Government under that reference. This claim is ten years old, and yet the hon. gentleman is not in a position to inform us on any of the points on which the House is entitled to have information. Under these circumstances, I think it would be better to withdraw this item, make further enquiry upon it and present it to Parliament at a subsequent Session, if upon further enquiry it be deemed fitting to present it to Parliament at all, but with data which would enable us to vote it intelligently. Why was this claim not brought forward before? Why was it not submitted for consideration earlier? If it was to be done at all, surely it ought not to be done in a corner at the last hour of the Session and without any explanation. If it is a claim at all, it is a claim to the fair consideration of another foreign power, the United States, on the part of certain inhabitants of Prince Edward Island, by virtue of certain arrangements made between the Island and the United States before ever the Island joined the Confederation. If, then, there was a claim against the Island Government itself, it might be said: "Oh yes! Charge that to the Island; we are bound to pay all the obligations of the Island." But it is not pretended this is any obligation against the Island. It is said it was not advisable in the public interest to press this claim before the United States Government; therefore, we are bound to put these parties in as good a position as if we had pressed it. Now, that statement is entirely without foundation, for it is clear there can be no new claim under the Halifax Commission and the Washington Treaty. Therefore, since we have not the names, since we have not the amounts, since we have not the principles of calculation, since we have not a single statement to indicate to us that this claim, which was so long deferred, should now be presented, I must repeat the suggestion I made, that the proper course would be to withdraw this item for the present and bring it forward at another period.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I very much regret that the state of health of the leader of the Government was such that he had to leave the House, shortly before this vote came up. The whole subject has been very carefully considered by the hon. Minister of Justice, and this memorandum was prepared in order to give full explanation on the position of the matter after the consideration of the whole question. He may have had special reason for inserting the last three or four lines, because it was alleged by the Nova Scotia Government that this question was considered in the claim. Now, the Chief Commissioner, Sir A. T. Galt, says it was not considered. He takes exactly the same view as the hon. member—it was not considered desirable or advisable to bring it up there, but the hon. member from the Island knows that some parties who were there as witnesses had claims and interests and were very anxious to press the matter. But Sir, as the hon. member from the Island is familiar with this whole matter, was employed by the Government to look after the interests at the time, and as he expresses a doubt about the propriety of pressing it, and as the leader of the Government is not here to-night to give the explanations he might be able to give, I will withdraw the vote for the present.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. gentleman must not understand that I request him to withdraw it—I merely want information. If it is a claim which the Government can pay I want to see the parties all paid equitably; I do not want to see one-half paid and the other left out in the cold. It is well known that some of the parties are influential supporters of the Government, and it is equally well known that some of them are influential opponents of the Government; and it has been intimated to me that the one class are to be put in and the other class to be left out. The information may be wrong. I am not pressing the hon. Minister to withdraw the claim, but to tell me who he is going to pay.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The parties have presented the amount of the claim which they suppose is legitimately due them, but there are American citizens who have claims nearly equal to the sum of those put in the Estimates; but after consideration the Government arrived at this conclusion, that American citizens, fishing in Canadian waters, should not be paid out of the funds of the Dominion Treasury a debt which should have been paid by their own Government, and the hon. gentleman objected, in his first statement, to the payment of this amount, unless Americans were included in it. The insinuation of the hon. gentleman that certain politicians who are supporters of the Government, were to be paid, and those who were opposed to the Government, were to be left out, was unworthy of him. I do not know anyone, except Senator Howlan, who is a claimant, and who would come in under the vote. I never heard such an idea before intimated, that a gentleman belonging to the Island, who is a British subject, having a claim which was held to be a just one, and which the Government decided to pay, should not be paid the amount due on account of his politics. Such is an unwarrantable assertion.

Mr. DAVIES. I did not make that assertion; I said it was intimated that such was intended to be done.

Mr. BOWELL. That is a Parliamentary way of making a statement, as everyone understands.

Mr. BRECKEN. I happen to know a little about this matter, because I brought it to the notice of Parliament, I think, in the Session of 1879. With respect to the American gentleman, I would be very sorry to say anything which would prejudice the claim of anyone; but he was an American citizen engaged in the fishing business in the Island, and I know him well, and I quite agree with my colleague that he is a gentleman who did a great deal to develop its interests, and put a good deal of money into circulation. He was an American citizen so much, that during the winter his family resided in the States. He has ceased to do business at the Island, and resides across the lines. Mr. Merrick, his partner, is doing business at the Island; he has a fishing station at Rustico, and a fish market at Charlottetown; but Mr. Hall never lost his American citizenship, and he and his family have left the Island. With regard to the other claimants—I am now speaking from memory—Senator Howlan is one, and the present Postmaster-General is another.

Mr. DAVIES. The present member for King's (Mr. Macdonald) is one.

Mr. BRECKEN. His brother, the Postmaster-General of the Island, is one. I am not sure whether Senator Carvell is one or not; but at the time I urged the claim, I urged it on behalf of all. I am not sure whether Senator Carvell is one or not; but the Postmaster-General and Senator Howlan are two of the largest; I believe there are several other small claimants, but I am not prepared to mention their claims. I believe the amount mentioned in the report will cover all the claims, with the exception of that of Mr. Hall. When I urged the claim objection was taken that it was a compact. I was in the Island Government when the proposition was made by the Americans. At that time our codfish was liable to a duty of $2 a barrel, and a distinct understanding was arrived at with the Washington authorities that this duty was to be returned; but that Government subsequently objected to carry out the contract on the ground that it was made with the Dominion and they were unable to deal with separate Provinces. I never heard, and I would be very unwilling to believe, that this sum is intended merely for a few political partisans.

Mr. BLAKE. It was I who objected to the vote passing upon the information furnished; I suggested that the hon. Minister should withdraw it, and I am quite prepared to take the responsibility.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. You were not alone.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) asked for information and stated his view. I stated my opinion to the House that it was not proper for the Government to ask the House on this information to pass the vote; and the hon. gentleman said he could not give further information as the hon. the First Minister was absent, and the hon. Minister of Finance proposed to withdraw the vote for the present. Early next Session, earlier than the hon. gentleman brought down the Estimates this year, he will be able to bring down the necessary information which will enable the House to form a judgment on the matter.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). In regard to these claims, I may say, that while there are only perhaps a dozen gentlemen in whose names they stand, these gentlemen represent a number of the fishermen of the Island. That season the fish was bought from the fishermen on the understanding that when the duty was returned the fishermen would receive that refund, and the shippers of the Province are still held accountable by the fishermen for every dollar should the amount be returned. I dare say the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), who represented Prince Edward Island at the Halifax Fishery Commission, knows the names of those gentlemen better than I do, because a list was handed to him at the time, and he would therefore be conversant with the names. At all events he seems to have met, although the claims for the refund of duty were not admitted, still they were presented at the Halifax Commission, and the United States Government now comes forward and says they were considered at that Commission; and as the money has been received by the Dominion, I think it is nothing but simply justice to those who paid the duties on the good faith of the American Government that the money would be refunded, that the amount should be repaid. I consider it would be a very great hardship if this were not done; I do not speak from personal interest but from a sense of justice to the fishermen, and I think a very great wrong will be done if this matter is left over for another year. I must say, further, that I think it is very improper on the part of the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) to try and insinuate that this vote is to be handed over to political supporters; it is a most unworthy assertion, and I would not have expected it from him.

Mr. DAVIES. I did not know when I rose what the names were. The hon. gentleman says they were handed to me in connection with the Fishery Commission. That took place many years ago, and I did not take special notice of the names. When I rose a few moments ago it was for the purpose of asking information, which I was desired to ask by an hon. gentleman, and which I would have asked, at all events, on my own account. The hon. member for King's (Mr. Macdonald) has told us that these gentlemen are only to act as the medium through which the money is to be paid to others. Who are those who are going to receive the money ultimately, for we must not vote money in the dark? I do not think I offered any unfair or unjust opposition to this vote. I do not think it fair for him to lead the House to believe that I wish to withdraw it. The only part I objected to was the statement of fact from what came within my knowledge, and I thought it right to bring this to the notice of the hon. gentleman. It was not considered in the public interest to place that claim before the Fisheries Commission. I am aware of Sir A. T. Galt's opinion on it; but, as a lawyer, I could not stand up and contend that this claim should form part of the damages against the United States. I think that the claim of these merchants against the United States is a thoroughly good one, morally, but there is no legal mode of enforcing it. It is too bad that, simply because I asked for the names, I should be taunted with unjust motives. Why does the hon. gentleman withdraw it? He says that it was thoroughly well considered and advised on by the Minister of Justice. Then why is a mere question asked by me sufficient to enable him to withdraw it?

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman went a great deal further than asking a question, because he said that one of the items was entirely preposterous, and should not be here; and he went on to say why.

Mr. DAVIES. I said that a statement of fact should not be here, because it was not a fact.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman said that one item should not be here, as he knew about it; and I think that there are few gentlemen in the House who did not so understand him. He objected to it because he believed there was no claim; and if there was no claim, there was no reason for voting this money.

Mr. MACDONALD (King's). Will this matter be laid over until next Session?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It will be withdrawn for the present Session.

Mr. MACDONALD. Will the Government allow the parties holding these claims to go before the courts with them in the meantime?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. If they ask this, I think the Government would not object; but I am surprised that the hon. gentleman should make this proposition. All I can say is, that objections have been taken to this vote at this particular time, and complaint is made that the American citizens should have been included. This does not affect the position of the Government towards these parties, unless they think proper to go before the courts, instead of leaving the matter in the hands of the Government.

Item withdrawn.

453. Amount required to provide for the salary of Inspector of Tobacco Manufactories. $800.00

Mr. BLAKE. Is this a new officer?

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is a new office. $500 are required to increase the salary of the Collector made Inspector from $1,200 to $1,800, and $200 to increase the salary of the man who replaces him from $1,000 to $1,200. It is considered necessary that we should have a uniform system all over the Dominion in relation to carrying out the changes recently made in the law. We merely change the positions of two officials but do not increase their number. These men will not be replaced, and this will be a saving.

FISHERIES ACT AMENDMENTS.

Mr. BOWELL. The Senate in its wisdom has made three amendments to Bill (No. 101) further to amend the Fisheries Act. In the first clause, after the word

"vested" in the fifteenth line, they have added this proviso: "provided that in case of individuals who are riparian owners no fee shall be charged for such license." In the second clause, after the word "apparatus" in the first line, they have added, "other than rod or line;" and in the twenty-fifth line the same words are added after the word "apparatus." I intimated originally that the intention of the Government was to include rod and line fishing. I propose to accept the latter two and to disagree with the first amendment, for the reason that there is nothing compulsory in the second clause which places riparian owners, or those who have fisheries under grants originally from the French Crown, respecting the taking out of licenses. All that we provide is in case of riparian owners, or the owners of the fisheries to which I have referred, that it is desirable that they should come under the provisions of the Fishery Act, by which their individual property could be protected, and I think that those who take out licenses should pay a small fee for contributing that amount for the protection of their own property. If that proviso be accepted then it lays down the principle that they demand a license fee, and at the same time if the revenues or such of them as may be necessary, are used in the protection of their property there is nothing to prevent the owners of these fisheries, whether of the one class or the other, from fishing at any time except the close season. The Government or the Department does not propose to interfere with that right, but it was thought proper that they should take out a license and thereby come within the meaning of the Fishery Act and receive all the protection they did give them in the preservation of fish. I, therefore, move that the amendments be now considered.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. BOWELL moved to disagree with the first amendment, for the reason that the taking out of a license is not compulsory on riparians, or special grantees of the French Crown, whose interests will be protected under the Fishery Laws as the holder of said license.

Motion agreed to.

BILL INTRODUCED.

The following Bill (from the Senate) was introduced and read the first and second times, considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time and passed:

Bill (No. 144) to amend an Act of the present Session respecting Booms and other works constructed in navigable waters, whether under the authority of Provincial Acts, or otherwise.—(Sir Hector Langevin).

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock a.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

WEDNESDAY, 23rd May, 1883.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

ADDRESS TO HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR GENERAL.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I rise to propose a motion without having given previous notice of it, but when the House learns what the motion is, I have no doubt they will gladly support it without any previous intimation. When

Mr. BOWELL.

I tell you it is an Address to His Excellency the Governor General, expressing our regret at his early departure this season, and our regret that we will not have the pleasure and happiness of meeting him as Governor General at our next Session, I am quite sure the House will cordially respond to the call. When we heard that Lord Lorne was appointed to hold the great office of representative of Her Majesty in Canada, we rejoiced that the selection had fallen on the scion of so illustrious a race as that of Argyle; and I, with every countryman of mine, rejoiced that the son of McCallum More should be here to represent the Queen. That pleasure was increased by the knowledge that he was to be accompanied by Her Royal Highness the daughter of our Sovereign. Though our expectations were high, I am glad to believe that the country, and this House as the representative of the country, believe our expectations have been fulfilled. From the time he first assumed office until now he has devoted himself with great industry, energy, and ability, and, I am glad to say, with great success, in forwarding all the interests of this country, not in a mere dilettante perfunctory way, but in a searching manner, earnestly enquiring into the position of the country, its capabilities and resources, and the best way of advancing all its interests, material, intellectual, moral, and artistic. He has not spared himself. He has visited every Province of the Dominion, not as a mere traveller, but as one anxious to make all enquiries fully to inform himself of our wants, wishes, and aspirations. Now that he is leaving us, we must express our regret at his departure. We regret extremely to lose, also, as a matter of course, his illustrious consort. During the short time her health has enabled her to be with us, she has endeared herself with everyone with whom she has come into contact by the kindly and sympathetic manner with which she has viewed both men and things in Canada. We must not forget that although we have been deprived of much of her presence, and of the light such a presence casts around the metropolis, the accident which caused her absence was occasioned by her attending to her duties as the wife of the Governor General, in coming to be present at one of the official ceremonies, the duty of presiding at which was cast upon Lord Lorne and herself as his consort. Without further praise, as my present indisposition prevents me from dwelling longer on this subject, I shall move, seconded by Mr. Blake:

That an humble Address be presented to His Excellency the Governor General, expressing the desire of this House, on behalf of those whom we represent as well as on our own, to give expression to the general feeling of regret with which the country has learned that His Excellency's official connection with Canada is soon about to cease; and that we are, however, happy to believe that in the Councils of the Empire in the future, and wherever opportunity enables him to render her service, Canada will find in His Excellency a steadfast friend with knowledge of her wants and aspirations and an earnest desire to forward her interests; and that His Excellency's zealous endeavors to inform himself by personal observation of the character, capabilities, and requirements of every section of the Dominion have been highly appreciated by its people, and that we feel that the country is under deep obligations to him for his untiring efforts to make its resources widely and favorably known; and that the warm personal interest which His Excellency has taken in everything calculated to stimulate and encourage intellectual energy among us, and to advance science and art, will long be gratefully remembered, and that the success of His Excellency's efforts has fortified us in the belief that a full development of our national life is perfectly consistent with the closest and most loyal connection with the Empire; and that the presence of His Illustrious Consort in Canada seems to have drawn us closer to our beloved Sovereign; and that in saying farewell to His Excellency and to Her Royal Highness, whose kindly and gracious sympathies, manifested upon so many occasions, have endeared her to all our hearts; and that we humbly beg that he will personally convey to Her Majesty the declaration of our loyal attachment, and of our determination to maintain firm and abiding our connection with the Great Empire over which she rules.

Mr. BLAKE. I have great pleasure, in the discharge of my duty as representing those who sit on this side of the Chamber, in seconding the motion of the hon. gentleman, and in concurring entirely both in those words of compliment and expression of kindly feeling which the hon. First Minister has asked us to express towards His Excellency on the occasion of his approaching departure. Hon. gentlemen opposite, of course, have, from their connection with His Excellency as our responsible advisers, the opportunity of speaking with a greater knowledge as to the discharge of his political duties than those who have not that opportunity. But viewing His Excellency's conduct from the position we occupy, we can cordially concur in the sentiment that he has been a good constitutional Governor, and that, so far as his public conduct has enabled us to judge, he has fully realized and acted upon those great principles of responsible Government which are so dear, equally in this and the Mother Country, and which form, in the opinion of both, the vital element of their system of Government. It was my good fortune some years ago, in another place and capacity, to present an Address of congratulation to His Excellency, in which he was reminded, by the corporate body I was representing, that it was to the Duke of Argyle, one hundred years or more ago, that we are indebted, as history relates, for the first assertion in the Legislative Council of the Empire of the great principle that no act of State could be performed except by some person who is actually responsible to the representatives of the people in Parliament—for that was the essence and vital principle of responsible Government—and in which was expressed the opinion, since fully realized, that His Excellency's administration would be carried on, on the principle expressed by the representatives of the great and illustrious title which some day or other His Excellency will be called on to assume. The Governor of Canada has, as this Address indicates, many important duties to perform. Those duties His Excellency has assiduously attended to; and, in the spirit the hon. gentleman has expressed, we have every reason to believe that he has devoted his time, his energies, his ability, his intellect, to the thorough understanding and comprehension of the situation of this country, to an attention of its physical and moral position, and to enabling himself, as far as his high position would permit, to give fit expression to what our wishes, wants and aspirations are here, during the discharge of his high duty, and hereafter in the councils of his country, to which he will, no doubt, shortly be called, and in that expression which will be of great use to us—not an expression of indiscriminate praise, which we do not want, but the judicious expression of such a measure of praise and approbation as may convince the public whom he addresses that they are the sentiments of his heart based upon a thorough comprehension of all the circumstances of this country. The hon. gentleman has alluded to His Excellency's illustrious consort, and to the representative of the Queen, by office and by birth, to her illustrious daughter. We are glad to send this Message back. We are here in a democratic country, where the throne is not supported by those arrangements of society which are supposed, in other lands, to be essential to a monarchy; but there exists here in the minds of the people a firm, thorough and fervent—because a reasonable—loyalty to that system under which, if they do not entirely regulate their affairs, at any rate they have the most perfect measure of self-control and of self-government. Sir, I heartily concur in the motion which, I have no doubt, will be unanimously adopted by this Chamber.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation). I will take the liberty of expressing, in French, the sentiments which have been so happily expressed in English by the two hon. gentlemen who spoke before me. Their sentiment towards the Governor-General and Her Royal Highness the Princess are in conformity with mine, and I make it a duty to add, with those of all the French-Canadian members in this House.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN (Translation). Mr. Speaker: It was my intention, after you had moved the adoption of the Address just laid before you, to say a few words on the subject when my hon. friend on the other side of the House rose. The Governor-General, who is about to leave us, will, I believe, see with pleasure the special representatives of 1,500,000 of French-Canadians, long since brought, in consequence of political events, under the British rule, unite with their fellow-citizens belonging to other nationalities in the expression of the sentiments just uttered by the leaders of the two great political parties of this country. French Canadians do appreciate, as well as any other race, the benefits of the British Constitution by which we are governed. And when we behold the representative of our Sovereign in this country, our Governor-General, abiding strictly, during the five years of his administration, by the true principles of the English Constitution, it becomes a duty for us to join with the hon. members who have just now spoken, and say that we wholly approve of his administration, and deeply regret to see him depart from among us. We regret it the more because he is accompanied by the daughter of our gracious Sovereign. The Princess, who lately came a stranger in our midst, will leave, on her returning home, as many friends as there are women, and I may well say, as there are men, in Canada. We have all regretted to see her absent for so many long months; but we know that she also regretted to be away from the country at the head of which the Queen had placed her husband. When we saw her come back, her health perfectly restored, to resume the lofty position she occupies, we all felt rejoiced at it, and the only shadow that marred our joy was the thought that she would ere long return to the country justly endeared to her. But we are all aware that she and her illustrious husband have made Canada their home of adoption; and if there lives a Canadian who loves Canada, it is surely His Excellency the Governor-General. I will add nothing more, Mr. Speaker. I merely wish to convey, in the name of my fellow-citizens of French origin, the expression of our deep regret at the departure of Lord Lorne and of Her Royal Highness the Princess Louise.

Motion agreed to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the resolution be referred to a Select Committee composed of Mr. Blake, Sir Leonard Tilley, Sir Hector Langevin, Sir Charles Tupper, Mr. A. C. Macdonald, Mr. Vail, Mr. Casgrain, Mr. Barnard, and the mover, to prepare the draft of an Address in accordance with the said resolution, and report the same to this House forthwith.

Motion agreed to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, from the Select Committee, reported the draft of an Address, as follows:

TO HIS EXCELLENCY THE RIGHT HONORABLE SIR JOHN DOUGLAS SUTHERLAND CAMPBELL (commonly called the Marquis of Lorne), Knight of the Most Ancient and Most Noble Order of the Thistle, Knight Grand Cross of the Most Distinguished Order of Saint Michael and Saint George, Governor General of Canada, and Vice-Admiral of the same, &c., &c.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY:

We, Her Majesty's dutiful subjects, the House of Commons of Canada in Parliament assembled desire on behalf of those whom we represent, as well as on our own, to give expression to the general feeling of regret with which the country has learned that Your Excellency's official connection with Canada is soon about to cease.

We are happy, however, to believe that in the Councils of the Empire in the future, and wherever opportunity enables you to render her service, Canada will ever find in Your Excellency a steadfast friend with knowledge of her wants and aspirations and an earnest desire to forward her interests.

Your Excellency's zealous endeavors to inform yourself by personal observation of the character, capabilities and requirements of every section of the Dominion have been highly appreciated by its people, and we feel that the country is under deep obligations to you for your untiring efforts to make its resources widely and favorably known.

The warm personal interest which Your Excellency has taken in everything calculated to stimulate and encourage intellectual energy among us, and to advance science and art, will long be gratefully remembered; the success of Your Excellency's efforts has fortified us in the belief that a full development of our national life is perfectly consistent with the closest and most loyal connection with the Empire.

The presence of your illustrious Consort in Canada seems to have drawn us closer to our beloved Sovereign; and in saying farewell to Your Excellency and to Her Royal Highness, whose kindly and gracious sympathies, manifested upon so many occasions, have endeared her to all hearts, we humbly beg that you will personally convey to Her Majesty the declaration of our loyal attachment and of our determination to maintain firm and abiding our connection with the Great Empire over which she rules.

The Address having been read the first and second time,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the said Address be engrossed, and sent to the Senate for Concurrence.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. GIGAULT. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to rise to a question of privilege. I see that in the Minerve, and in almost all the newspapers, it is reported that I voted against the motion made yesterday by the hon. member for Laval (Mr. Ouimet). That is not correct, as I voted for the motion, and it was the hon. member for Joliette (Mr. Guilbault) who voted against it.

SALARIES OF MESSENGERS.

Mr. ROYAL. Last year, at about this time of the Session, I was requested to lay before the House the claims of the messengers. I did so, and the Government very kindly assented to the expression of opinion given by many hon. members, and granted, if I am well informed, a bonus of $25 each. This year I have been requested to bring the same matter before the attention of the Government, as the bonus was only for that year alone. It is needless for me to dwell on their zeal, activity, and attention. While the messengers of the Senate, I suppose on account of the august dignity of their masters, are paid $250 a Session, our messengers, in consequence, I suppose, of our democratic position, are only paid $200, although their services are much more onerous, and they are compelled to work longer hours. As we had shown such a great degree of disinterestedness in not increasing the sessional indemnity by $500, I think the least we could do would be to perform this act of justice to the messengers. I hope the Government will not only give a bonus this year, of from $25 to $50 each, but that the salaries of the permanent messengers will be increased to $250, and thus place them on the same footing as the messengers of the Senate.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). My general disposition during the Session has been to oppose all increases in expenditure. When the matter of the salaries of the Senate messengers was before the House, I called attention to the fact that they were paid $250, while our messengers received only $200, and that this position was not only an anomalous one, but an unjust one. If any discrimination should be made, it should be in favor of our messengers, as they do more work and are employed longer hours. If the Government could see its way clear to equalize the salaries in proportion to the duties, I think a very great act of justice would be done to the messengers. And while holding myself at liberty to criticise unnecessary increases, I will not express censure at any reasonable increase given to the messengers.

Mr. CASEY. I have pleasure in adding my testimony to the good work performed by the messengers, whose salaries for a Session of this length are too small.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE. I would suggest that when the Government are considering the increases of salaries, they should consider that of an increased indemnity to members.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I quite recognize the fact that our messengers do more work, are up later at night, and probably earlier in the morning, than are the corresponding officers of the Senate. The messengers of the Senate have greater dignity; they belong to a more dignified body than this, and I suppose that they ought to get more pay. However that may be, I am democratic enough to put usefulness before dignity, and if our men are harder worked and are of greater use to the community than their comrades in the other House, their case ought to be considered. The Government will take it into consideration. It is not worth while for us to open a discussion now on this subject and take a vote on the matter; but if the House will leave it with the Government, they will see that these people are properly remunerated, and ask the House to cover the expenditure by a vote next Session.

ONTARIO HIGH COURT OF JUSTICE BILL.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, in moving the second reading of Bill (No. 124) respecting the High Court of Justice for Ontario said: This Bill, which is from the Upper House, affects the High Court of Justice of Ontario. Some portions of it, in my opinion, are an infringement on the jurisdiction of the Provincial Legislature. That portion of it, however, which affects or relates to proceedings in criminal cases, I will ask to be struck out. I believe that this has been communicated to the Attorney-General of the Province of Ontario, who has assented to it. I move the second reading of the Bill.

Bill read the second time, considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

THE FACTORY BILL.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY, in moving the discharge of the Order for the second reading of Bill (No. 117) to define certain offences against persons employed in factories, said: I do so for the purpose of stating a few amendments that are proposed to this Act, and which will be disputed during Recess and taken up on the reassembling of Parliament. One amendment is to provide that when not more than twenty persons are employed in a place the law will not apply to it. There has been some little doubt as to the powers proposed to be given to the Inspector, unless under some regulation, as to right of appeal to some party; and, therefore, it is proposed that the Governor General in Council may make regulations under which it will be lawful for the Inspector in case an accident occurs, &c. It has been suggested that this Commission should be placed under the care and direction of some one of the Ministers, and that an appeal should be had from the Inspector to the Minister, and an amendment will be made in that direction. The Bill also provides that if any accident or fire occurs in a factory and causes death to any person employed therein, or serious bodily injury, whereby any person employed therein is prevented from working for more than forty-eight hours, &c. It is proposed to extend that time to six days. These are the amendments that are proposed in the Bill that will be introduced next Session. They will be printed and sent to hon. members, with the documents they refer to.

Mr. BLAKE. The Bill as reprinted was sent to hon. members a day or two ago, and I have only been able to look at it hurriedly. I will not attempt to enter into a discussion of the original Bill, or of the alterations. I will only say that I believe the original Bill to have been very defective indeed, and I believe that every one of the alterations to be made are not improvements in any shape or way. It is quite clear that these alterations have been made in one interest, and in one interest only.

Order discharged and Bill withdrawn.

INDIAN AFFAIRS.

Bill (No. 139) to amend the Act 36 Vic., chap. 4, intituled: An Act to provide for the establishment of The Department of the Interior and to amend The Indian Act, 1880.—(Sir John A. Macdonald.)

NATURALIZATION OF ALIENS IN MANITOBA.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the second reading of Bill (No. 140) to legalize proceedings taken for the naturalization of certain aliens in the Province of Manitoba.

Bill read the second time; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BLAKE. I do not see why the provisions of the Bill should be exceptional for the Province of Manitoba. If the same difficulty has been experienced in other Provinces, I do not see why the Bill should not also be applied to them. No harm could result.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am afraid that would confuse matters. This Bill is to meet a specific evil in a particular locality. Perhaps the hon. gentleman is quite right that it might be extended to other Provinces; but I think that might be left over until next Session.

Bill reported.

On motion for third reading,

Mr. BLAKE moved:

That the Bill be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole, to amend it by making its provisions applicable to all the Provinces.

I will not take the trouble to divide the House on the motion.

Amendment negatived, and Bill read the third time and passed.

THE ELECTORAL FRANCHISE.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, in moving the discharge of the Order for the second reading of Bill (No. 107) respecting the Electoral Franchise, said: Since this Bill was distributed, after full consideration it has been decided to considerably enlarge the franchise. It has been represented, for instance, that the clause in the Bill, as originally introduced, providing that tenants in cities and towns should have an annual lease, would affect a great number of voters among the working classes and others, as a large number rent their houses by the month. The clause is therefore amended to give the franchise to a tenant who pays a monthly rental of at least $2, a quarterly rental of at least $6, or a half-yearly rental of at least $12, provided that he has been in occupation for one year. Then the real property qualification in counties has been reduced from $200 to $150. It has been strongly urged upon the Government that in the Maritime Provinces a great many fishermen would be excluded by this Bill, owing to their property consisting principally of boats, nets and tackle. So I propose that a clause be inserted to include in the franchise every fisherman who is the owner of property, such as a boat or tackle, of the actual value of $150. These are the enlargements on the Bill as it now stands. The Bill will go before the country, and will be submitted next Session.

Mr. BLAKE. I am glad to observe that, without public discussion, this Bill has been found so very defective as it was originally. I believe that in the city from which I come, from 6,000 to 8,000 voters would have been disfranchised if it had passed as it was originally proposed.

Order discharged and Bill withdrawn.

PENITENTIARIES.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the Order for the third reading of Bill (No. 111) to amend and consolidate the laws relating to penitentiaries be discharged, and be recommitted to a Committee of the Whole to amend clause fifty of the said Bill. He said: I propose this amendment in consequence of the objection of the hon. leader of the Opposition, who objected very strongly to convict labor. The answer was that there were several contracts, but I find there is only one we know of, and that will exist for three and a-half years yet.

Mr. BLAKE. I am glad the hon. gentleman has adopted my suggestion, but I am surprised at his statement that there is a contract made for three and a-half years. This is most improper. When last the subject was before Parliament it was understood that no further contract would be entered into of long endurance, and I am astonished that this contract should have been made. When was it made?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I was unaware of the fact until I heard the discussion when this Bill was up before. It is a contract in writing for five years, of which three and a-half have yet to expire.

Mr. BLAKE. It is extraordinary such a contract should have been made without notice being given to the Government, or to Parliament.

Bill recommitted, amended, reported, and read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

On Resolution 375,

Consolidation of the Dominion Statutes.....$10,000.00

Mr. BLAKE. It was promised we should receive further information on this subject on Concurrence.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The idea is to issue a Commission, of which the hon. Minister of Justice shall be head, and there will be a gentleman of the Bar from Lower Canada. The Deputy Minister of Justice will be on, or be Secretary, of the Commission; he has consolidated the Statutes of New Brunswick and is conversant with those of Nova Scotia. There may be another on it; that is not settled. As regards the payment to the Commissioners no decision has been come to. It will have reference very much to what the Special Commissioners have done in Ontario.

NATURALIZATION ACT OF CANADA, 1881.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. On the 2nd of March last Mr. Weldon enquired: "Whether it was the intention of the Government to issue a proclamation putting in force a Naturalization Act of Canada, 1881, and when?" My reply was: "I may say that the proclamation has not yet been issued, because correspondence has been going on with the Imperial Government, and we expect shortly an answer to the last communication." My answer was based on information I got from the Department of Justice which I now find was erroneous. I now find that the answer had arrived, but it had been mislaid, and, therefore, an erroneous communication was made to the House. I may say further, that probably the proclamation will shortly be issued.

SERVICES OF THE LATE JUDGE FISHER.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. When the vote was taken for $2,400 to pay the widow of the late Judge Fisher for extra services rendered by him to the Government, under commission from 1870 to 1881, the question was asked as to the number of cases which had come under his consideration, and I could not give the information. I telegraphed to Fredericton to get the information, and received for answer that there were thirty-two cases before the court, and decrees were granted by Judge Fisher in twenty-five cases.

WAYS AND MEANS.

The House again resolved itself into Committee of Ways and Means.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved the following resolutions:—

1. Resolved,—That towards making good the supply granted to Her Majesty for the financial year ending 30th June, 1883, the sum of $3,163,591.61 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

2. Resolved,—That towards making good the supply granted to Her Majesty for the financial year ending 30th June, 1884, the sum of $31,181,836.15 be granted out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

Resolutions reported.

SUPPLY BILL.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY introduced Bill (No. 128) for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the public service for the financial years ending respectively the 30th June, 1883, and the 30th June, 1884; and for other purposes relating to the Public Service.

Bill read the first time.

On motion for second reading.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I desire to take this opportunity to say a few words, more particularly addressed to the hon. Minister of Customs. I have, at different times, brought before the hon. Minister and the House the necessity of some plan being adopted whereby our manufacturers, who are exporting goods to foreign countries, may be able to receive drawbacks a little more regularly than has been the case in the past. Now that the House is about rising, and I may not have the pleasure of seeing the hon. Minister until another Session, I desire to enforce on him the necessity of taking such steps as he can to make the system workable, consistent with maintaining the interests of the country and preventing everything in the shape of fraud. I have pointed out that the hon. Minister, on several occasions, was obliged to relax the resolutions, and upon consideration he will find that the system operated in the same way with respect to other manufacturers. I press this subject on the attention of the House more particularly, because I think we have a right at a period when our manufacturing industries are being very largely developed and increased. We have engaged in these industries men of great enterprise and possessed of a considerable amount of capital, and we can readily understand that in a country with four millions of people there may be danger from undue stimulus being given in the direction of over-production, which would prove unfortunate if a time of depression should occur. It is, therefore, desirable that our manufacturers should be able to enter foreign markets and compete successfully with other nations. I am happy to say that has been the case with Canada in the past, and I hope it will be still more in the future. I know with respect to manufactured goods shipped to foreign countries, Canada, considering her population and wealth, may well be proud of the position she has occupied, and when it is remembered that she has already her manufactured products selling in thirty-two different countries, the House will see that it is possible for our manufacturers to enter into competition with those of other nations. But in order to do so, they must have as fair an opportunity as other countries have, and it is to that point I desire to address my remarks. If our manufacturers are hampered with duties on raw materials, which their competitors have not to pay, and with a system of drawbacks, designed for the purpose of placing them on an equality with the manufacturers of other countries, it is of the first importance that it should be so arranged that the drawback system can be given effect to. I believe we may look for an extension of our foreign trade—I am sorry, however, to observe that during the last two or three years it has not equalled that of former years. Many firms are laboring under great disadvantages, to some of which I desire to draw attention. We have no consular agents in foreign countries, and when our manufacturers attempt to open up trade with such countries, as a firm in my own city has opened up trade with Chili, Russia, Austria and Hungary, they have not the advantage the American manufacturers have in having a consular agent there whose special business it is to promote those manufacturing interests and take the representatives of American manufacturers by the hand. True it is that we have English consular agents there, but it is hardly to be expected that the same attention and time will be bestowed by them in promoting the interests of Canadian manufacturers as of British manufactures, and the answer is sometimes made, I have been informed, that Canadians have erected a tariff against British manufacturers; and while Canadians are British subjects in one sense, yet the consuls consider it to be their duty more particularly to promote the interests of British manufacturers. I believe, however, in many lines of manufactured goods, to-day, notably in machinery, the portable saw mill and machinery of that class, which have been introduced into many countries, our goods are far superior for the purpose for which they are designed than any goods produced either in England or the United States, and which can be sold—if our manufacturers are placed on the same terms as others, notwithstanding disadvantages from enhanced cost of freight, and the fact that they have not strong friends at court, if I may use the expression—at less price. I feel that if there is anything which stands in the way of our manufacturers being able to compete on fair terms with the manufacturers of other countries it is our bounden duty to remove them, if possible. We know that the task is a difficult one, that the whole drawback system is difficult, but we must address ourselves to the task. I feel sure, from conversations I have had with the hon. Minister, that he will devote himself to the task; and I believe that if he does devote himself to the task, he will find himself enabled to place them on an equality with other cases in this respect without opening the door for any fraud which he might fear might be occasioned by the relaxation of the rule. I need not point out the difficulties in the way. They are known to the hon. Minister. I have just taken this opportunity, when a wide latitude is allowed hon. members, &c., to speak on any subject, which they may deem important at all—deeming this, as I do, a very important subject, to enforce once more for the last time this Session the importance of this matter.

Mr. BOWELL. The Government fully appreciate the importance of the subject brought before the House by the hon. gentleman. It is a question which has occupied the attention, not only of my Department but also of the Government, and nothing will be left undone within the law to encourage our manufacturers in this country. I am very much pleased to see the changed and altered tone that characterizes the speech of my hon. friend to-day, compared with the tone which has characterized the speeches of those who have preceded him during this Session. It is gratifying to know—

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Not my speeches surely.

Mr. BOWELL. I did not say yours, I said those of your friends. I stated that I congratulated the House on the changed and altered tone of the sentiments uttered by the hon. member to-day contrasted with those which have been uttered during this Session by those who are sitting on the same side of the House with himself. We have heard, whenever the question of manufactures has been discussed, a deprecation from those gentlemen not only as to quality but as to the worth and capacity of our manufacturers to supply the wants of the Dominion. Neither do I think it advisable to go into the general question. I repeat that the question of drawbacks is one surrounded by a great many difficulties, in endeavoring to protect the revenue from the dishonest trader; but with the power given in the law at present, I have no doubt that we will be able to adopt some system which will meet the views of those who are desirous of assisting the export trade of our manufacturers to foreign countries. Having said this much, I take this opportunity, also, not of setting myself right, but of setting the hon. gentleman right in the statement he made, while delivering his annual speech on this question of drawbacks: That the parties to whom I alluded had applied to the Government for a change in their demands for drawbacks upon articles which I contended, and contend to say, had no right to a drawback. At that time the hon. gentleman contradicted me by saying that they had made application from that time—or at least he was so informed, as he qualified it afterwards—and no information had been given them as to the change in the Order in Council, which enabled a wider range to be taken with regard to the matter of drawbacks with that particular locality. I was under the impression, from enquiries which I made, that I was quite correct in that statement, for this reason: I knew that my hon. friend had a watchful eye on the Department, and particularly with respect to drawbacks; and when I inform the House that on the 19th of May, 1881, the Order in Council was changed opening the door still wider by which we could meet the demands to a certain extent of this particular manufactory, in which articles upon which drawbacks could be granted, that were wholly manufactured out of the country but which were used in the completion of any article in this country, and that on the 27th of the next month the following letter was written to the gentlemen who are interested in this particular industry, this matter will be placed in a new light:

"CUSTOM'S DEPARTMENT,
"OTTAWA, 27th June, 1881.

"The House will bear in mind that on the 19th of May, 1881, the Order in Council was changed."

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Can I trouble the hon. gentlemen to read the Order in Council first.

Mr. BOWELL. I will read a portion of it.

Mr. PATERSON. Read the whole of it, if you please.

Mr. BOWELL. I do not propose to read the whole of it, but I will send it over to the hon. gentleman. That is not the point. It is not what the Order in Council contains, but what I contended as to the demand made by certain manufacturers for a drawback on articles, among others pig iron manufactured at Londonderry; and that never, after we pointed it out, had they made any application to change the form of the request to enable us to pay the drawback to which they were then entitled; that is the only point to which I desire to draw the attention of the House. I do not propose to discuss the whole question of drawbacks, but merely the matter on which my hon. friend said he was informed I was not correct.

Mr. PATERSON. If the hon. gentleman will allow me—I think what I said was, and the whole contention was on this point, that the Order in Council in all cases required claims for drawbacks to be made on the day when the goods were entered, and the number of Customs entry had to be sworn to by the claimants; and that this was the trouble—that they could not do this, that in two cases this had been varied, while in other cases it was not varied; and what I ask the hon. gentleman now is, whether the Order in Council waives this statement of the day that the goods are passed and the number of the entry—that is the difficulty.

Mr. BOWELL. I do not propose to be led away from the point to which I desire to call the attention of the House.

Mr. PATERSON. What I mentioned is the point.

Mr. BOWELL. It is not the point, with all due deference to the hon. gentleman. In reply to the hon. gentleman, I said that his friends never made an application for a drawback after their attention had been drawn to the fact that they were claiming that to which they were not entitled. The answer he made to me was that he was so informed,—that they had made application, and changed their claim in order that they could receive certain portions of it. I then stated that we had never any such communication with that firm; and what I wanted to point out was, that after the change was made by Order in Council, they were specially notified of it by letter from the Department which I addressed to that establishment. This letter runs as follows:—

"CUSTOMS DEPARTMENT,
"OTTAWA, 27th June, 1883.

"The Manager
"Waterous Engine Works Company,
"Brantford.

"SIR,—Adverting to yours of the 20th instant, re drawback claimed on boiler plates and tubes used in the manufacture of boilers exported.

"Until the amendment to the Act and passing of the Order in Council of the 19th ultimo, a copy of which I enclose, drawback could not be paid on manufactured articles like boilers tubes, which are complete in themselves and only attached to the boilers exported.

"Under the regulations in force, as you will see, an additional affidavit will be required (the form of which is given) before your claim, which I herewith return, can be allowed.

"I am, Sir,
"Yours, &c, &c, (Signed) "W. G. PARMALEE,
"Accountant."

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That addition makes it worse, if I understand the matter rightly.

Mr. BOWELL. That is the change of the affidavit to which my hon. friend referred; and he knows that in the cases to which he called my attention, the Department had changed them by omitting certain portions of it. Had this firm made its applications in the manner in which they were notified by the accountant to do so, and intimation having been made to them that the affidavit would be changed, it would have been so liberally interpreted and altered as to meet their case. The hon. gentleman should not try to make the matter appear still worse for them.

Mr. PATERSON. That was my impression after what you read.

Mr. BOWELL. It is not in your interest to misrepresent this question. I then asked the accountant whether he had received any reply to his letter of June 27th, 1881; and he writes me this note:

"OTTAWA, 11th May, 1883.

"SIR,—With reference to claims of the Waterous Engine Company for drawback, I beg to state that though they were furnished with a copy of the Order in Council, under authority of which drawback on manufactured articles attached to goods exported is payable, yet they never complied with the requirements thereof, nor in any way intimated their intentions with regard thereto. In fact, I have seen nothing from them on the subject since.

"As the tubes undergo no process of manufacture at their hands, but are simply adjusted and attached, the affidavit in form given in the Order in Council would be required; and had any claim been made on such tubes, accompanied by the necessary affidavits and evidence of exportation, it would have been paid without question.

"I have the honor to be, Sir,
Yours, &c.,

"W. G. PARMALEE,
Accountant.

"Hon. M. BOWELL, Minister of Customs, &c.

"With reference to claims of the Waterous Engine Company for drawback, I beg to state that though they were furnished with a copy of the Order in Council, under authority of which drawback on manufactured articles attached to goods exported is payable, yet they never complied with the requirements thereof, nor in any way intimated their intentions with regard thereto. In fact, I have seen nothing from them on the subject since."

The House will see that everything was done that could be done under the law to meet that particular case. With regard to notifying these gentlemen, when it was not particularly our duty to do so, particular pains were taken to keep these gentlemen informed on the changes that had been made, and to meet their views and requests to the fullest possible extent. I was anxious that this should go to the country, and upon the official records—that there was no negligence on the part of the Customs Department in respect to this case; but I did think that these gentlemen had become so wealthy under the National Policy that the question of a drawback of a few hundred dollars was of much less importance to them than keeping the question in abeyance in order that my hon. friend might make his annual speech on the drawback question, and that they would much rather have the grievance than obtain the money.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I can only say that the hon. Minister of Customs has failed altogether to make out his case. I did not want to speak to-day, and only spoke with the view of having this matter settled. I did not want to refer to the matter I brought up the other night at all, as we went into that very fully; but the House will observe that the hon. Minister does not touch the point of the difficulty at all.

Mr. BOWELL. I did not propose to enter into that. I proposed to put myself right as to giving them notice.

Mr. PATERSON. I did not contradict that. My statement was that while certain manufacturers were required to specify the very day on which an entry was made, and the number of the Customs' entry, that regulation was waived as to other manufacturers, and all the affidavit they made was that the goods had paid duty within two years; and in order to prove conclusively that that was the case, I showed that, attached to the very returns that came down, and at a date subsequent to the alterations in question, were the affidavits of other firms in which they were complying with the strict regulations as to the entry and its date.

Mr. BOWELL. That is not the question.

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. Minister did not say that the Order in Council relieved them.

Mr. BOWELL. I did not say to the contrary. What I say was that within a month after the Order passed a change was made, and they never complied with that.

Mr. PATERSON. What I complain of, and what they complained of, was that they cannot make an affidavit as to the particular date and the number of the entry; and the hon. Minister will not say that he ever wrote to them saying that this regulation would be waived in their case as it was in the case of others. Only last night I received a letter from that firm, in which they say: "Your contention in the House in reference to that matter is true. There never has been any proposition to us to waive the regulation as to giving the date and the customs entry;" and there is where the whole difficulty lies—and it is insurmountable. I don't find fault because the regulation was waived in the case of the two sewing machine manufacturers, but because it was not waived also in the case of others: I think the hon. Minister, when I brought this matter up in the spirit I did, and with the object I did, need not have referred to the question of the National Policy, and the views expressed upon it by certain gentlemen. So far as my attitude towards the manufacturers is concerned, I challenge him, or any other hon. gentleman in this House, to find an utterance of mine in which I have not stood by the manufacturers of this country and rejoiced in their success as much as any other man could. And I think it was scarcely necessary for the hon. gentleman to close his remarks by saying that men who are making so much money should not think of such a small matter as a few hundred dollars of drawback, and that the grievance complained of would be more valuable to me than a few hundred dollars to them. Nothing of the kind. There are plenty of opportunities for a man in Parliament to air his eloquence without taking up a matter of this kind. My complaint does not affect one individual firm merely. There are other firms in my county, who are doing a trade with Russia, that are in precisely the same position. The hon. Minister's remarks made it necessary for me to state what I have done.

Mr. BOWELL. I want to draw the attention of the House to this fact—the hon. gentleman has not mentioned the point I raised in reading these letters. It was simply a question of statement as between the hon. gentleman and myself, as to whether the firm to which he alluded had received notice of certain changes in the Order in Council, and whether they had complied with it. The hon. gentleman said that they had complied with it, and that they had offered to change the mode in which they made their claim. I said that I had no knowledge of it, and that is the whole question I wished to refer to. Yet, on the strength of that, the hon. gentleman has gone into the whole question of drawbacks in order to draw the attention of the House away from the real point at issue. There is great difficulty in arriving at the correct amount to be paid back in cases in which the duty is ad valorem; but I do not desire to go into that question, I desire to confine myself expressly to what I said; and it was because the hon. gentleman did not touch that point that I made use of the expression that I thought he rather preferred a grievance in order to be able to make an annual speech.

Mr. PATERSON. You scarcely believed it at the time, did you?

Mr. BLAKE. I do not think this subject should be complicated by the hon. Minister of Customs and the hon. member for South Brant, which the hon. Minister wishes to limit to the one issue, whether notice was given to the firm in question, while my hon. friend contends, and with justice, that there was a practical impossibility of complying with the requirements of the Department, and complains that the Department relaxed these requirements in favor of one manufacturer, while the requirements for the general mass of manufacturers were kept at the old level. The proposition of my hon. friend was stated in that way, and I did not hear the hon. Minister, at any time reply to it. On the contrary, he said he would not take that occasion to reply to it; but he has not taken any subsequent occasion. The hon. Minister made an observation which, I think, had better not have been made. He said he supposed these manufacturers were making so much money under the operation of the fiscal policy, that they would not care much about a few dollars drawback. I consider it is of the last consequence to the interest of the country, in so far as they are connected with manufacturing, that we should not hamper the export trade of the manufacturers. We have got a sparse population, a naturally limited home consumption, and manufacturing enterprises stimulated by the present tariff; and if you do not give all the freedom you can, under this tariff, to the extension of our trade beyond our limits, you will inflict serious injury on our manufacturing interests. We have contended, on this side, for the advisability of keeping at the lowest possible rate the duties on the raw material manufactured. That applies both to the domestic and the foreign trade of these manufacturers; but while the duties are kept at their present rate it is still of greater consequence that the system of drawbacks shall be such as is consistent with the avoidance of fraud in order to give what facilities can be given to foreign trade. I agree with the hon. Minister of Customs that the subject is one of great complication and difficulty, and requiring the exercise of great caution particularly in order that the revenue may not be injured. But those difficulties must be grappled with as far as they can, and the export trade which has been going on for some time so fortunately in several branches of manufactures must not be crippled further than avoidable under the influence of the fiscal policy. That export trade is important from another point of view. It gives an opportunity of expansion and stability to the trade, and also the fullest benefit that can be given under our system to the influence of competition and to the re-development of the energies and the workmanship of our manufacturers. It is of great importance that we should be able to show, as I believe we can in several important branches, that we can hold our own with our neighbors. I have not underestimated the difficulties of the present system, but believe they can be grappled with, and that it is not a question of small consequence which people will not care about.

Mr. BOWELL. I did not say that.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman said manufacturers were making so much money—

Mr. BOWELL. I was simply referring to one firm. I know the contrary.

Mr. BLAKE. You see the difficulty caused by complicating a large general question with a small personal controversy. I am glad to hear that the observation of the hon. gentleman was not a particular, but a general one; and I hope efforts will be made, on the part of the Government, to diminish the disadvantages under which manufacturers labor as regards the extension of their foreign trade.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The importance of the export trade of the Dominion is fully appreciated by the Government. It is quite true that, under the existing policy, our manufacturers are not driven in many cases to seek for a market abroad as they were previous to 1879. There are other industries for which we have had a foreign market, and continue to enjoy it to the present, and which we were not in a position to keep successfully in competition against the manufacturers of similar articles in the United States and Great Britain. But the question is surrounded with difficulty in many cases. If we have erred at all, in many cases we have erred in favor of the manufacturers. Take the question of cut nails and other articles on which we gave a drawback to the manufacturers. We have made a liberal calculation as to the amount of duty on the raw material which enters into those articles, so that these manufacturers have had a full return of the duty. With reference to sewing machines, we have carefully analyzed the iron and other material used in the different classes, so that we pay a certain sum to the party exporting according to the class of machine; but in the case referred to by the hon member for Brant (Mr. Paterson) the question was not quite so clear as in others. The desire of the Government has always been to deal liberally with the manufacturers. If my memory serves me, the parties made application, in the first instance, for a drawback on the manufactured brass that was used in an engine. The difficulty arose here that arises in the case of other articles that may be imported into the country and pay duty, while the same articles are manufactured in the Dominion. If a drawback was given on those it would interfere with the Canadian manufactures. That was the one principle which actuated us in refusing some of the applications. I think that the firm referred to had not made any application after they received the letter from the hon. Minister of Customs. They, or any other firm engaged in the manufacture of articles for export, may rest assured that the Government will do all it can to facilitate their operations.

Bill read the second and third times, and passed.

PROROGATION.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honor to inform the House that I have received the following letter from the Governor General's Secretary:

OTTAWA, 23rd May, 1883.

SIR,—I have the honor to inform you that His Excellency the Governor General, if the state of the public business will permit, will proceed to the Senate Chamber to prorogue the Session of the Dominion Parliament, on Friday, the 25th instant, at 3.30 o'clock p.m.

I have the honor to be, Sir,
Your most obedient servant,

F. DE WINTON, Lt. Col. R. A.

Governor General's Secretary.

The Honorable
The Speaker of the House of Commons.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As the business on the Order Paper has been disposed of, I would suggest that the House should meet here at nine o'clock to-night, to receive communications from the Senate. I understand the hon. leader of the Opposition leaves town to-night, and most likely he would like to know what will be done during the remainder of the Session. Of course, we shall have to remain in Session until we hear what the result of the deliberations of the other House is. I may say at once that the Government will not allow any other business except what results from communications from the Senate. We will not introduce any measures, or discuss any, before prorogation, except as occasion may require in communications from the Senate. I mention this for the benefit of hon. members on the other side who desire to go away, and who would not like to forfeit their standing as careful watchmen over the Government.

Mr. BLAKE. These observations are well understood to apply always to the "other side." All public virtue is concentrated in the hon. gentlemen opposite, and I am well aware that it would be impossible for those hon. gentlemen, even under these circumstances, to tear themselves away from the Capital until after the last gun is fired.

Mr. LANDRY. I have a question on the notice paper can I put that question now?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Leave it till to-morrow.

Mr. LANDRY. I have also a Bill on the Order Paper; will the Government name a day to consider it?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If the hon. gentleman has got a bill, he had better pay it.

Mr. BLAKE. I think the Statute of Limitations bar this Bill.

House took Recess till 9 o'clock p. m.

After Recess.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that when the House adjourns, it do stand adjourned until Friday next, at 10 a.m. Motion agreed to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and (at 10.25 o'clock p.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

FRIDAY, 25th May, 1883.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Ten o'clock.

NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN THE DOMINION AND BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I had hoped, on behalf of the Government, to have laid before the House during the present Session the state of the negotiations for a settlement of all matters between British Columbia and Canada. These negotiations have been going on up to this time, but I am sorry to say that we have not been able, so far, to bring down a measure this Session. I may shortly, however, state the position in which this matter now stands, for the general information of the country. In order finally to settle all matters in dispute between that Province and the Dominion which existed, in fact, almost since the time of the Union—at all events, since the expiration of two years afterwards—negotiations were entered into this winter, and Mr. Trutch, who has acted for the Dominion as Government agent, came specially here, after having previously communicated with the Government of British Columbia, in order to frame some arrangement by which all these matters should be finally settled. The chief cause of complaint in the Province of British Columbia was the failure to carry out exactly, literally, the Terms of Union, quoad the commencement of the Canadian Pacific Railway. One of the Terms of Union was that within two years the Canadian Pacific Railway should be commenced, and should be finished within ten years. I will not trouble the House with a restatement of all the various circumstances which caused the delay. It has been a source of irritation and annoyance, very natural in some respects, in British Columbia, that all the advantages of the expenditure on the construction and the use of the road after completion should be lost by that Province. In order to settle that question it will be remembered that when the late Canadian Government was in power they made a very vigorous effort to settle that question, and there was a proposition made to British Columbia to give them $750,000 as a compensation for the non-performance of the contract. The House will remember how that arrangement failed. Besides this question there was another question—a money matter—connected with the construction of a graving dock at Esquimalt. By the Terms of Union, Canada became liable, to a certain extent, to assist that enterprise; and the Legislature here, in order to meet the wishes of the Government of British Columbia, went considerably further, and instead of guaranteeing the interest as under the original treaty, they agreed to advance the sum of $250,000, and the British Admiralty agreed to give £50,000 sterling on the completion of the graving dock. These are two questions to be settled. Now, we consider it of the greatest importance that for once and all time, these burning questions shall be allayed and the fire extinguished. It was therefore agreed, that on getting a receipt in full from British Columbia, by Act of the Legislature, that on getting a receipt for all claims for non-performance of the conditions of building the railway within a certain time, and for real or supposed obligation on the part of Canada, against the Government as a Government, to construct the Island Railway, that we should contribute to the construction of the Island Railway the sum of money offered by the late Government, to the extent of $750,000. With regard to the Esquimalt Graving Dock, it was found that from a variety of circumstances, that work was not successfully progressing. The financial state of affairs in British Columbia was not encouraging, and the work was going on very slowly, and, consequently, with a great waste of money; and it was important that this work should be finished, and it is more important now than ever, in view of the early construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the fact that the graving dock most likely will be brought into active use. All this is, of course, subject to the approval of Parliament. It has been arranged that we should take the Esquimalt Graving Dock off the hands of the British Columbia Government. They have expended $250,000 on the work, which we propose to repay them, and complete the dock. The money subsidy therefore for those two objects will be $1,000,000, $750,000 in aid of building the railway, and $250,000 as purchase money for the graving dock. The subsidy for the construction of the railway was to be given to an incorporated company, the company to be composed of men of good credit, standing and means, who should give security to the Dominion Government, and we propose that they should submit that security and obtain an acknowledgment from the British Columbia Government, that the security is ample—in other words, that the security should be satisfactory to both Governments. In order further to enable the construction of that road the British Columbia Government agree to transfer the lands which had been reserved originally for the construction of the road, to the Dominion Government, those lands being held for the purpose of aiding, additionally, the construction of the Island Railway, and the Dominion Government would act in regard to the Island Railway as they had with respect to the Canadian Pacific Railway, that is, as the work proceeded land and money would be given in the proportion as was given to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in the construction of that work. Then, as regards the land question, the House will remember that the British Columbia members agreed in the Terms of Union, to reserve twenty miles of land on each side of the Canadian Pacific Railway in British Columbia on the mainland, in order to aid in the construction of the railway. Now, it is provided in the Terms of Union that all existing rights, such as squatters' rights, should be protected. The British Columbia Government could only give the Dominion Government twenty miles on each side of the railway which was in their power to give, and the Act of Union further provided that any deficiency in the lands lying on each side of the railway, should be made up by lands contiguous to this railway belt. The railway passed along the gorge of the Fraser River; there is not a wide valley there, and twenty miles on each side of the railway would include a large portion of mountain land of no value for agricultural or other purposes, and of the valley itself, a large portion has been already appropriated for other purposes, by other parties, under various titles, or otherwise, as not to render it available for a land grant for building a railway. In order to make up the deficiency, and render it an inducement for the Dominion Government to enter into the fullest, these arrangements for taking the graving dock off the hands of the British Columbia Government, it was agreed to supplement the land grant along the railway, by conveying to the Dominion Government 3,500,000 acres of land in the Peace River country, and contiguous to our own North-West, that land to be located by the Dominion Government in a rectangular block. There is reason to believe that the land is of good quality, and fit in every way for agricultural purposes, but as the land lies on the eastern slope of the Rocky Mountains, far away from the main resources of British Columbia, it is of more value to us than to them. This is a valuable grant to the Canadian Government, and is really no sacrifice on the part of British Columbia, on account of the remoteness of the land from the centres of trade and population. This seemed to the Government to be a satisfactory arrangement in every respect; the Government thought so then, and it thinks so now. The negotiations would have gone on without check, and the Government would have taken the responsibility of asking Parliament, this Session, to pass an Act confirming the arrangement. In order to carry out this arrangement, the British Columbia Government, in good faith, submitted, late in their Session, a proposal; it was late of necessity, because they were awaiting for the return of Mr. Trutch, after having concluded this arrangement, and it could not be proceeded with until he had returned after completing the whole matter. I say that the British Columbia Government introduced an Act in good faith, for the purpose of carrying out this arrangement. They had passed an Act which we received by telegram a very short time ago. On looking over that Act, however, we found that by error—a very natural one—I suppose the British Columbia Government, or the draughtsman of the Bill, did not reflect that in its terms it materially altered the arrangement, because it provided, in fact, that the Dominion Government should build the road, and in order to enable the Dominion Government to do so, it passed an Act of incorporation, to be brought into effect in a manner satisfactory to the Canadian Government; and the Act itself says, that in order to enable the Canadian Government to build the road, it incorporates this company. Now, it was no portion of the agreement that the Canadian Government should build it. We agreed, in fact, to see that the incorporated company that should build it, should be a satisfactory company, and give ample security. We pledged ourselves not to give a charter to any body of capitalists or persons who could not give ample security, while we agreed to see that there was such ample security given, and while we had money in our hands and the land in our hands only to be given to the company as the work progressed, and therefore there was no reasonable probability of the road not being finished. Yet we have in no way pledged the faith of the Canadian Government to the building of that road. Now, although in substance there appeared to be no great difference in this matter, the Canadian Government could not but reflect that the obligation to build the Island Railway had been solemnly repudiated by the Canadian Parliament, and we had to inform the British Columbia authorities that we had no hopes—even if willing—of successfully carrying such an obligation through the Canadian Parliament—that we should not, under all the circumstances, pledge ourselves to build it as a Government work. This is the way in which that matter now stands. There was another clause of the Bill which was also contrary to the agreement which has been entered into, and which I fancy was inserted in the British Columbia Bill under the idea that we would not object to it, and that was that all the lands which had been appropriated in aid of the building of the Island Railway, except coal and mineral lands, should for the next four years be sold at the price of $1 an acre. Now, as that grant of lands was to be in aid of the construction of the road and was to be given to the contractors as they built the road, we felt that we had no right to diminish the value of the aid by making limited prices. That was not part of the agreement. I believe that $1 an acre is considered the normal price of land now in British Columbia, and, therefore, it was supposed that we would not object to it, and that the contractors to build the railway would not object to it; but it remained to be seen whether the contractors would object to it or not; and we had to inform the British Columbia Government that without the assent of the company who were to get this aid, we could not agree to fix a maximum price. There is, of course, matter of regret that this difference between the Act which was passed in British Columbia and the agreement recently made between the two Governments has prevented us coming here now to ask the Canadian Parliament to supplement this agreement and confirm it, but I do not believe that there will be any deadlock in the matter. Still, it is the cause of some little delay. The British Columbia Legislature consists of twenty-five members. They have recently prorogued, and it will be some personal inconvenience to the representatives in the Legislature to re-assemble; but I have no doubt that they will re-assemble within a reasonable time for the purpose of amending their Act, so as to make it in conformity with the agreement which was recently entered into between the Governments. That once done, we will take the responsibility of making all kinds of provisional arrangements for the organization and incorporation of the company and for taking security, so that when our Legislature meets next winter, the Government will be able to submit a measure confirming the agreement so made. There will practically be little, if any, delay, because even if we had passed an Act this Session confirming the legislation in British Columbia we would have been obliged then to look for a company, a body of men willing to accept the charter and undertake the construction of the road. That company would have to have been organized; its capital subscribed; its first instalment, or the first call, paid up under our general railway system, and then that company would have been obliged, after being fully organized, to organize their staff before they could commence the construction of the railway, before they could turn a sod, so that it would absorb nearly all this summer before that could be done. Little time will be lost, because we will, in the meantime, proceed as if to a certain extent a measure had been passed here. I have no doubt that we will be able to get a company of capitalists who will undertake the work, subject, of course, to the approval of the Parliament here. They will be satisfied with the assurance that the Canadian Government will do what they can to carry that measure next Session in this Parliament, so that I think, practically, there will be little or no delay. And then another question which is considered of great importance in British Columbia, is the opening up of all the lands for settlement on the mainland on each side of the railway now rapidly in course of construction. Immigration, I am happy to say, is now flowing from the south into British Columbia; immigration has gone in there this year, I believe, to a larger extent than has been the case for a good many years; and these lands are sought for eagerly by intending settlers and by the navvies and persons employed in the construction of the road, from Yale up to Kamloops, on the Onderdonk contract. There need be no deadlock or delay in the matter. The intention of the Canadian Government is to instruct Mr. Trutch to confer with the British Columbia Government, to organize at once a land office for the purpose of putting the lands on each side of the railway into the market immediately, and to open them for settlement on liberal terms. It is part of the agreement which is to be carried out that the terms should be liberal. I presume—I speak approximately—that the lands will be put into the market at the nominal price there—say, $1 an acre, or thereabouts; there can be no settlement as to the exact figure, as a great portion of these lands have been squatted upon. The Canadian Government has also agreed that the squatter settlers on these lands shall have a prior right to them at the ordinary price of unimproved land. There will be no objection to the settlement on each side of the railway, in consequence of the postponement of the carrying out of the works on the Island. These are the circumstances, and I thought it right to mention to the House, for the information of the public, the facts exactly as they are. I could not do it earlier, because telegraphic messages have been going on—until yesterday I may say—between the two Governments, and between our agent, Mr. Trutch, and myself. These are the facts, and I desire them to go to the public, so that the public will be fully advised as to the responsibilities the Canadian Government have undertaken under this arrangement, and that the country may have an opportunity of considering them between now and next Session.

Mr. TROW. Assuming the great responsibility of leading the great Reform party, I may say that my followers are not as numerous as we expected in proportion to our friends on the opposite side of the House, and I question very much whether it would be necessary or proper on my part, to ask for a vote on any question that may come before us to-day. I think it is proper that some arrangement should be made for better terms to British Columbia, for various reasons. In the first place, as the hon. First Minister has just stated, the lands were not generally known, nor was the route of the railway fixed a year, or even six months ago. As regards the lands on the Peace River, I think the exchange would be a very good one; for, judging from the reports of Professor Macoun and other gentlemen who have traversed that country, there is no doubt that there are large quantities of land in that region which are valuable for the settlement of an agricultural population. The proposed exchange will also render any provinces which may be carved out in that country much more compact than they otherwise would be, and will be decidedly advantageous for the Province of British Columbia. It is the only Province in the Dominion in which I have not yet travelled, more or less, although I have made several attempts to visit it; but from all I can learn with regard to it, it is not an agricultural country, and the available lands in the valleys along the line of route are very limited, because the valleys are exceedingly narrow, and cannot be expected to maintain a very large population. No doubt these lands are very fertile, but the mountains, which differ from all other mountains almost on the face of the globe, run, not parallel, but at right angles to the valleys, and thus render communication between them very difficult. There are great engineering difficulties in the way of the construction of the railway, and the expense before the line is completed, will, in all probability, form an enormous tax on the Dominion. I think it is high time that the First Minister and his Administration should seriously consider these matters, and not enter into any scheme that would be likely to enhance our indebtedness. I heard, quite recently, from the floor of the House, that we have in the valley of the Gatineau, adjoining the Capital, a very fertile section of country that remains undeveloped, and in which not a mite of construction has yet been undertaken, but in which it is proposed to undertake a line of railway under the general scheme of subsidies which the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals has brought down. I think there are many parts of the old Provinces—the Eastern Townships, the Chicoutimi Valley, the Lake St. John district, and many other districts—that require development as well as British Columbia. The country has already undertaken the construction of over 200 miles of railway in British Columbia, and the Island Railway will be an additional expense. It is true we are to receive some compensation, but it is questionable whether the lands can be sold to any advantage, above the cost of survey. They are not as valuable as the lands of the North-West. There is some object in constructing a railway in the North-West, because there are lands on each side of the railway which are valuable for settlement, and from which funds can be realized to aid the construction. It is hoped that the adjustment with British Columbia will not be altogether in the interests of British Columbia, but in the interests of the Dominion at large. I do not know that for one particular Province—one so remote, at all events—we should incur enormous expenditure, while we are in our infancy. We have not the unbounded resources that the people of the United States have, and yet a railway mania in that country a few years ago brought on a financial crisis. We are not prepared to say that we shall be blessed by Providence with as good crops as we have had during the past three or four years. Failures of the crops may overtake us; and I think it is the duty of the Administration to study economy. It is true that the hon. Finance Minister has taxed the people so excessively as to accumulate a very large amount of money; but the people will not always be willing to be so heavily taxed, even if they are able to pay. These are times of prosperity; we may have adversity in two or three years; and now is the time to husband our resources.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria). It appears to me that the hon. gentleman who last spoke is laboring under a delusion. Neither the British Columbia people nor the British Columbia Government want any better terms. All British Columbia wants is that the terms upon which she entered Confederation should be faithfully carried out, and that some compensation should be made to them for the delays which have been occasioned. I understood recently that these matters would not come up this Session, and consequently I am not prepared fully to discuss them at the moment. But, as a representative of British Columbia, I must urge upon the Government the duty of carrying out as quickly as possible the terms of Confederation, more particularly in regard to the construction of the Island Railway as a part of the trans-continental railway between Ottawa and the capital of the Pacific Province, the completion of the dry dock at Esquimalt, and the throwing open to settlement of all the railway lands that have been reserved for the purpose of its construction—more than this British Columbia does not ask. It has been urged upon the Government of the day from time to time to have these terms carried out; unfortunately, during four or five years, there was a Government in power who was, to say the least, inimical to British Columbia. I am happy to say that those gentlemen are not now in power, but that those are in power with whom the terms were made with British Columbia, and I hope they will long continue there, and that within a short time all the Terms of the Union will be faithfully carried out.

Mr. TROW. One word in reference to the Terms of Union. It strikes me forcibly that they were not for the construction of a railway, but to provide for some means of communication between the older Provinces and British Columbia.

Mr. BAKER. I beg your pardon.

Mr. TROW. It was utterly impossible to do anything more. The hon. gentleman from Victoria seems to blame the previous Administration for not sooner proceeding with the work—the same work having been condemned by the Senate which the hon. First Minister proposes to-day, and it strikes me that the Senate did right in not passing that measure. We are not in a financial position to spend $10,000,000 for the sake of a few thousand inhabitants. We must proceed gradually and progressively, according to our financial circumstances.

Mr. BAKER. The hon. gentleman makes a great mistake when he says there was no railway contemplated. It was essentially a railway that led British Columbia to come into Confederation at all. What advantage would British Columbia have had in coming into the Union if she had not been connected with the East by a railway? I do not know what the hon. gentleman means by some method of travel—perhaps he means a pack-mule train, or something of that sort? But I repeat, the main inducement that led British Columbia to come into the Dominion was the construction of a railway from the sea-board of British Columbia to connect with the system of railways in Canada, to be commenced within two years, and completed in ten. That agreement was made on the 20th of July, 1871; we have passed the 20th of July, 1881, and two years beyond it, and still this part of the contract has not been completed. In fact, it is only barely commenced. I do not blame the hon. leader of the Government or his Administration, but I do blame the Administration of the party which the hon. gentleman who last spoke has the distinguished honor of representing in this House; and if they had carried out the agreement, we would now have a railway between Ottawa and Victoria by which we could make the journey in eight days, instead of sixteen, as at present.

Mr. HACKETT. As I am the representative of a Province, the terms upon which it entered Confederation not having been carried out, I may be pardoned for making a few remarks on this occasion. With regard to the proposition of the hon. First Minister, I think it is a reasonable one; I consider there is no parallel between it and the building of the railway as contemplated by the Mackenzie Administration. The proposition of the hon. First Minister is that $1,000,000 be given to British Columbia for the purpose of building this railway in Vancouver Island, while the scheme of the Mackenzie Government contemplated the construction of that railway as a Government work at a cost of from $3,000,000 to $4,000,000. I think it very desirable that good faith should be kept with each Province. If we are to make of this Dominion a great country there must be no disaffection on the part of the people of any Province, and if $1,000,000 will satisfy the people of British Columbia so as to make them look upon the Dominion Government as a paternal Government, I think it will be money wisely expended. More than that, I look upon British Columbia as being one of the finest Provinces of this Dominion. It has great and undeveloped resources, and every person knows that it is possessed of a beautiful climate; and I have no doubt, that before long, it will be considered one of the finest Provinces of this Dominion. The First Minister has spoken of the large number of immigrants going in there this year, and I think it is desirable that the lands of the Government should be open for settlement, so that those people who go there for the purpose of becoming agriculturists, may have their expectations realized. Coming now to another Province, I would just say, that the terms of Confederation have never been faithfully carried out with Prince Edward Island. It was agreed that a continuous communication should be kept up between that Province and the mainland in winter and summer; as every one knows that the want of that communication is a great drawback to the Island. Prince Edward Island has a population of 110,000; these people are large consumers of Dominion manufactures, and, I think, I am only stating what is correct, when I say that not less than $1,000,000 per annum worth of manufactured products of the Dominion are consumed in Prince Edward Island. It is most desirable then, not only in the interests of Prince Edward Island, but of the whole Dominion, that the terms of Confederation should be carried out, and that this continuous steam communication, both in winter and summer, should be fully provided. Now, it may be said that the representatives of Prince Edward Island in this Parliament are too exacting, that they are asking the impossible, but that is not so. We know that for three or four years after Prince Edward Island came into the Union, scarcely any attempt was made to carry out the agreement. From 1876, until the present time, the Northern Light has been the only means of steam communication between Prince Edward Island and the mainland, and it is well known that that vessel cannot be considered in any degree as answering the needs of the Island, or as fulfilling the Terms of the Union. This year a vote has been taken for building a branch railway connecting the Prince Edward Island Railway with the outlying portion of the Island called Cape Traverse. While the Government are going on building this railway, I hope they will not neglect the means of providing satisfactory communication by water, and until this is done Prince Edward Island must have recourse to the old means of crossing by ice boats. A very great improvement may be made at Cape Traverse even under the old system of ice-boat crossing. We only want boat-houses to be erected at the Cape for the convenient accommodation of passengers and crews, and that additional ice-boats be placed there for the purpose of keeping up communication—that is to say, whenever a crossing is possible, boats may leave the mainland and the Island simultaneously and cross in opposite directions. At the present time, there can be only one crossing a day. The crew leave the Island and row across to the mainland during the day, and they are so fatigued on arriving there that they are unable to return on the same day, and if, in the meanwhile, a storm arises, they are not able to return on the following day, and on several occasions they have been obliged to remain a whole week on one side or the other. All we look for, while the railway is in process of construction, is the construction of these boat-houses and additional facilities for crossing by means of ice-boats, which I think is a very moderate request, and one to which the Government should accede. Referring for a moment to the report of the Committee, the hon. Finance Minister stated that we were asking for three lines of steamboats. What we did ask for in that report was that the present steam service be continued, that a company be subsidized for the purpose of keeping up the summer service, that a ferry be established at the Cape, and that the Northern Light be maintained at Georgetown. We are not asking, however, for three lines of steamboats. The summer service extends during only six months of the year; the Georgetown communication is maintained for only a month or two, and then we have to fall back on the crossing at the Cape. As it is the policy of the Government to foster the industries of all the Provinces, and as the Government has deemed it expedient and wise to subsidize lines of steamers for promoting trade between the Dominion and foreign countries, it is only right that the Government should subsidize a line of steamers for the purpose of keeping up communication with Prince Edward Island during the summer. I have already stated that the Island takes $1,000,000 worth of the products of the other Provinces of Canada each year; and in view, as I have said, of the subsidies granted to lines of steamers sailing for foreign ports, I think it just that a line should be subsidized for the purpose of keeping up communication with the Island, and enabling the people to buy the products of Canada as cheaply as possible, and creating a market in our own Dominion for the products of the larger Provinces. This, then, I take it, will be done by the Government. The Steam Navigation Company of Prince Edward Island have placed an additional boat on the route this year. It is an iron screw vessel and will prove a valuable boat. The company have kept up communication for some years by means of two small steamers, and as they have added a first-class iron steamer, I think they should obtain an additional subsidy of $5,000 a year. I approve very heartily of dealing liberally and fairly with British Columbia, and while doing so towards a people who have been a little persistent, and have looked forward with great anxiety to the carrying out by the Dominion of the Terms of Union, the people of Prince Edward Island have remained very patient, and something should be done for them now.

ADDRESS TO HIS EXCELLENCY.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I move, on the part of the Commons, that the Address to His Excellency the Governor-General be presented to His Excellency by those

hon. members of this House who are members of the Privy Council.

Motion agreed to.

At 11.20 a.m. the Speaker left the Chair.

The House resumed at Three o'clock.

LICENSE BILL.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Whilst we are waiting for a summons to another place, I desire to say that several members have expressed the desire that a large edition of the License Bill, as finally adopted, should be printed, in order that a pretty general circulation of it might be made. Its provisions interest so directly the general public, that it is most important, much more so than in the case of other measures, that it should be placed as early as possible in the hands of the people. I am sure that I speak the general sense of the House in suggesting that a sufficient number should be printed to permit of a hundred copies being furnished to each member.

CONGRATULATIONS, &c.

Mr. WRIGHT. Before the Usher of the Black Rod gives his three knocks, before that pleasant little raven from the Upper Chamber comes tapping at our door, I have been requested by a number of the members of the House to say a few words concerning the manner in which you have discharged the important duties devolving upon you during this Session. It must be confessed, Sir, that the proceedings of this Parliament have been of a somewhat monotonous character, indicative somewhat of the approach of our political millenium; and, Sir, as it is said that a nation is happy that has no history, when we consider that no important measures have been brought before us, except perhaps, the License Bill, and that the affairs of the country have been as well administered by the Government conducting them, I think we have been happy in having so monotonous, if indeed, not so very pleasant a Session. I have been requested, Sir, by many members of this House, to express their gratification at the manner in which you have performed the important duties devolving upon you. When we heard you read the solemn service with which we begin our proceedings, we thought a great mistake had been made when you devoted yourself to the law instead of the Gospel, to the evil instead of the good. But, Sir, we had to bow to the inevitable, and born as you were, under the shadow of the old fort of Frontenac; born, as you were, under the shadow of that great penal institution, where justice presents its malevolent rather than its benevolent aspects, we all felt assured that when you were selected by the Commons to perform the important duties of the office you hold, you would perform them with a singular grace and a wonderful charm—and I am free to confess that our expectations have not been disappointed. I am sure both sides of the House will agree with me that in all respects you have performed your duty in a manner to win commendation from all sorts and conditions of men; but while you have not been guilty of any sins of commission, I fear we must charge you with a sin of omission. We had reason to expect that the monotony of our Parliamentary life would have been relieved by a pleasant charm and an agreeable change. We thought that we would hear the rustling of divinity, the fluttering of angelic wings, and the odor of violets and orange flowers in our passages and corridors; but, Sir, a word to the wise is sufficient; and as an eminent writer says, it is never too late to mend, and we trust this matter will be mended before we meet again another Session. Sir, you have occupied a very distinguished position. You remind us of that picture by a great French artist which depicted the deluge. On a vast rock in the midst of a great expanse of waters, was seated a noble and distinguished figure, not unlike your own, who looked down on the struggling swimmers below. You have seen the struggles of the two parties; you have seen the ebb and flow of political life; the fierce assaults of my hon. friends of the Opposition on the serried ranks of their opponents, and you have heard the cry of many a strong swimmer in his agony, who went down in the terrible gulf—who, commencing his political life, found that in this arena, above all other, the principle of the survival of the fittest prevails; and I think, Sir, you have borne the criticisms of your friends as well as your enemies, which proves always the existence of the highest statecraft. In all respects, Sir, you deserve the highest commendation at the hands of your fellow-citizens, your colleagues and your countrymen; and we trust that when the period arrives, which comes to Speakers as well as to meaner organizations, when you will be exalted into the political arcana—we hope then when you will be transferred to another sphere, you will pass your time in studying, patiently, Parliamentary problems and curious constitutional questions so that you may enjoy the utmost happiness consistent with the state of things here below. And I am sure I express the opinion of every member in saying we trust that when that time arrives, you will have so comforted yourself that we will be able to join in saying: "Well done good and faithful Speaker, enter thou into the new governorship, collectorship or the judgeship prepared for you from the beginning of this Parliament."

Mr. TROW. I entirely coincide in the views expressed by the hon. member for Ottawa county, and regret exceedingly that my respected leader is not here, because I know his views towards you, Mr. Speaker, are of the kindest nature, and I know the universal feeling of respect which my hon. friends on this side of the House entertain with reference to you as a gentleman who occupies the honorable position of Speaker of this House. In reference to the remarks made by the hon. member for Cardwell, I think it very desirable that a large issue should be in circulation. The Bill to which he referred is one of vital importance, interesting the whole community—

Mr. SPEAKER. I must interrupt the hon. gentleman. I have received an informal Message from His Excellency asking myself and the House to go to the Senate Chamber in order to present the Address to him.

The House accordingly repaired to the Senate Chamber.

On their return,

Mr. TROW resumed his remarks. "I do not know," he said, "any Bill that would require so much consideration on the part of the public; nor do I know that it has been passed in such a hurried manner." It was remarkable to notice so many amendments made precipitately without nine-tenths of the members knowing what they were. Quite a number of professional men—I do not wish to say anything disparaging to the profession—but quite a number seemed to take no interest in making amendments to the various clauses; and it struck me forcibly that there was no reason why our laws should not be made so simple that one member of the legal profession need not go to another to ask his interpretation of certain clauses."

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have the honor, on behalf of those members of the Privy Council who waited on His Excellency with an Address, to lay before this House the answer of His Excellency the Governor General, as follows:—

Honorable Gentlemen:

No higher personal honor can be received by a public man than that which by this Address you have been pleased to accord to me. In asking you to accept my gratitude, I thank you also for your words regarding the Princess, whose affection for Canada fully equals mine. It will be my pride and duty to aid you in the future to the utmost of my power. Now that the pre-arranged term of our residence among you draws to its end, and the happiest five years I have ever known are nearly spent, it is my fortune to look back on a time during which all domestic discord has been avoided, our friendship with the great neighboring Republic has been sustained, and an uninterrupted prosperity has marked the advance of the Dominion.

In no other land have the last seventeen years—the space of time which has elapsed since your Federation—witnessed such progress. Other countries have had their territories enlarged, and their destinies determined by trouble and war, but no blood has stained the bonds which have knit together your free and order-loving populations. And yet in this period, so brief in the life of a nation, you have attained to a Union whose characteristics, from sea to sea, are the same.

A Judicature above suspicion; self-governing communities entrusting to a strong Central Government all national interests; the toleration of all faiths; with favor to none; a franchise recognizing the rights of labor by the exclusion only of the idler; the maintenance of a Government, not privileged to exist for any fixed term, but ever susceptible to the change of public opinion, and ever open through a responsible Ministry to the scrutiny of the people;—these are the features of your rising Power.

Finally you present the spectacle of a nation, already possessing the means to make its position respected by its resources in men available at sea or on land. May these never be required except to gather the harvests the bounty of God has so lavishly bestowed upon you. The spirit, however, which made your Fathers resist encroachments on your soil and liberties, is with you now; and it is as certain to-day as it was formerly, that you are ready to take on yourselves the necessary burden to ensure the permanence of your Laws and Institutions.

You have the power to make Treaties on your own responsibility with foreign Nations, and your High Commissioner is associated for purposes of negotiation with the Foreign Office.

You are not the subjects, but the free allies of the great country which gave you birth, and is ready with all its energy to be the champion of your interests. Standing side by side Canada and Great Britain work together for the commercial advancement of each other. It is the recognition of this which makes such an occasion as the present significant. Personalities, however dear to individuals, are of no public moment. These may be happy or unhappy accidents. But the satisfaction experienced from the condition of the connection now subsisting between the old and the new lands, can be affected by no personal accident.

I therefore rejoice that again it has been your determination to show that Canada remains as firmly rooted as ever in love to that free union which ensures to you and to Great Britain equal advantages. Without it, the maintenance of your Institutions and national autonomy would not be allowed to endure for a twelvemonth; while the loss of the alliance of the communities which were once the dependencies of England, would be a heavy blow to her commerce and renown.

I thank you once more for your words which shall be dear treasures to me for ever; and may the end of the term of each public servant who fills with you the office which constitutes him at once your Chief Magistrate and the Representative of a United Empire, be a day for pronouncing in favor of a free national Government, defended by such Imperial alliance.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE, OTTAWA,
25th May, 1883.

Mr. TROW. I suppose I may resume my remarks, even if I have to give them in instalments. I was just going to refer, when interrupted, to the length of the Session. Had the Government been fully prepared with its measures, one-third of the Session might have been saved. The Ontario Election and Easter holiday may have had something to do with the length of the Session; but, at all events, it has been unusually long—over fifteen weeks—and two out of the three important measures proposed by the Government have been abandoned.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Deferred.

Mr. TROW. Perhaps deferred is the better word. For the first five weeks of the Session there was very little done. I must give, however, several members of the Administration credit for the manner in which they prepared certain measures, and it is gratifying to know that great courtesy was shown by the hon. Minister in explaining the various items in the Estimates. I regret extremely my respected leader is not here, and I think the Government and every hon. member of this House is under a debt of gratitude to him for the manner in which he has scrutinized, analyzed and perfected the various Bills that have come before the House.

Mr. BRECKEN. I listened with a great deal of pleasure to the very eloquent speech of the king of the Gatineau.

He is generally very accurate as well as poetical, but I think I have found him out in an inaccuracy. He said your occupation was rather an incongruous one, because you had belonged to the Bar, and still had distinguished yourself as Chaplain to the House. The hon. gentleman forgets that the law and the Gospel are handmaidens.

Mr. LANDRY (Translation). Mr. Speaker: In the absence of my hon. friend the member for L'Islet (Mr. Casgrain), who makes it a habit to address this House in the name of the French population, even when it behooves him the least to do it, I deem it my duty to add my compliments to those that have just been paid you by my English speaking colleagues. I am convinced you have performed your duties to the best of your ability, as it is also the duty of each and every hon. member in this House. We all have admired the progress you have made in the French language, and it is a great consolation for our souls to hear you say your prayers in French. I believe, Mr. Speaker, if the current rumors are well founded, if an event, not ignored by us married men, and not by yourself neither, is about to be renewed, that this House will be delighted to hear that you are leaving the Speakers Chair to take possession of another chair in the domestic sanctuary. In such an important move, the knowledge of the two languages may be of some help to you. Allow me to repeat the fact that the French speaking members of the House of Commons feel proud with the manner in which you have accomplished your duties of Speaker. It is true that, for my part, I might have some slight exception to take, for on a certain occasion when I thought I could deliver a speech, I was, through your intervention, prevented from bringing before this House a motion which I had not prepared, but which I had the intention to prepare. At all events, let us leave this aside, and allow me to join in the concert of praise which is being addressed to you by this House, and hope fervently that next year you will say your prayers in French, not only on Mondays, but also on every second day of the week.

MAY IT PLEASE YOUR EXCELLENCY,

The Commons of Canada have voted the Supplies required to enable the Government to defray the expenses of the Public Service.

In the name of the Commons, I present to Your Excellency a Bill intituled: "An Act for granting to Her Majesty certain sums of money required for defraying certain expenses of the Public Service, for the financial year ending respectively the 30th June, 1883, and the 30th June, 1884, and for other purposes relating to the Public Service,"—to which I humbly request Your Excellency's assent."

To this Bill the Royal Assent was signified in the following words:—

“In Her Majesty’s name, His Excellency the Governor General thanks Her Loyal subjects, accepts their benevolence, and assents to this Bill.”

After which His Excellency the Governor General was pleased to close the First Session of the Fifth Parliament of the Dominion with the following

SPEECH :

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

I desire to thank you for the diligence and earnestness with which you have performed your duties during this protracted Session.

The large sums which the buoyant state of the Revenue has enabled you to appropriate in aid of the construction of railways and the great works of internal improvement will be carefully applied and economically expended, and must contribute in a large measure to the prosperity and progress of the Country.

The Dominion Lands Bill which embodies the results of the experience acquired during the last two years will, it is believed, greatly assist and encourage settlers now flowing in such unprecedented numbers into Manitoba and the North-West Territories.

The amendments to the laws respecting the Militia will tend to improve the discipline, training and military education of that invaluable force.

The consolidation and amendment of the Statutes relating to the management of the Customs, while protecting the honest trader against fraudulent and dishonest competitors, will free the commerce of the Country from some of the restraints imposed on it by the previously existing laws.

The readjustment of the Tariff and the reduction of duties on the raw materials used in our manufactures, together with the bounty granted on the production of pig iron, must aid in the further development of Canadian industries.

It is gratifying also to know that the financial position of the Public Treasury has enabled you to lower the pressure of taxation by more than a million of dollars.

The Bill for the regulation of shop, saloon and tavern licenses must have the effect of preventing the unrestrained sale of intoxicating liquors in every Province of the Dominion, and affords an efficient system for its successful operation freed from the suspicion of political bias or control; while at the same time it will not unduly interfere with the rights of those who had engaged in the trade under the authority of Legislative enactments.

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

I return you my thanks for the Supplies you have granted for the various public services.

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

I desire to thank you for the great honor conferred on me by the presentation of a Joint Address. The Princess and I have both been profoundly touched by your words; and the Message of which you make us the bearers comes, as we personally know, from a people determined to maintain the Empire.

The severance of my official connection with Canada does not loosen the ties of affection which will ever make me desire to serve this country.

I pray that the prosperity I have seen you enjoy may continue, and that the blessing of God may at all times be yours to strengthen you in Unity and Peace.

The Speaker of the Senate then said :

Honorable Gentlemen of the Senate :

Gentlemen of the House of Commons :

It is His Excellency the Governor General’s will and pleasure that this Parliament be prorogued until Wednesday the Fourth day of July next, to be here holden, and this Parliament is accordingly prorogued until Wednesday, the Fourth day of July next.

The Parliament of the Dominion of Canada was then prorogued to the 4th day of July next.
