contractors with the Government for the portions of work to be done under the contract instead of the original contractors. That is an arrangement which, as the hon. gentleman will see, was absolutely necessary if we expected to invite traffic to be carried over the road this year. It was quite impracticable for one party to operate the road and another to complete the construction. As the time for the completion of the contract was July 1st 1883, and very little work could be done, it was arranged that instead of their providing the plant necessary to carry the traffic for this short period, the Canadian Pacific Railway Company should complete the work and operate it besides.

Mr. BLAKE. I am informed that there has been a re-measurement of the contractors' work on this contract.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There has been a re-measurement. Matters are now being investigated in reference to the exact quantities, and the claims of the contractors.

Mr. BLAKE. Has a report been made as to the result?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; I have not received the report from the Chief Engineer. Some questions arose, and the engineer directed parties to make measurements. These measurements have been made to him, and the matter is now under consideration. No settlement has yet been arrived at.

Mr. BLAKE. I am told that the contractors complain that they have been much ill used with regard to the measurement.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is not at all unusual.

Mr. BLAKE. And there was some question of classification.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes. The matter is now in the hands of the Chief Engineer who is now taking every possible means of arriving at results with reference to it.

Mr. BLAKE. Can the hon. gentleman state what the claims of the contractors are?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; I cannot state definitely. There is a claim as to classification and measurement.

Mr. BLAKE. I believe they have a right to run the road for traffic after construction.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. Has any arrangement been made with regard to the surrender of that right?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No. They claim nothing for that. They were enabled to operate the road until the 1st of June next and then they were obliged to surrender it. They found that in order to handle the traffic which would come after navigation would open they would have to make a large outlay for rolling stock—an outlay which would not have justified them in making preparations for that traffic; consequently they were willing to surrender the right to operate it until the 1st of July, as the proceeds from the traffic would not compensate them for the cost.

Mr. BLAKE. How soon will the steamers be ready which the hon. gentleman spoke of?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. They are now being contracted for, and will be out this autumn and placed on the line of navigation at Algoma Mills for next year.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the character of the work to be done to complete this contract?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The filling up of a portion of it has to be finished. There is temporary tressel work, established sidings have been opened, and there is the completion of the filling and ballasting of the road.

75. British Columbia..... $3,500,000.00

Mr. BLAKE. I am not quite sure that I caught the hon. gentleman's statement with reference to this statement. He gave us a detailed statement last year as to the different contracts, which showed a difference from the original calculation as to these contracts.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say that after another year's experience I have every reason to believe that my calculations will be verified as to the reduced amount.

Mr. BLAKE. As I understand that remark applies not only to the general result, but as to the estimates on each particular contract.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman inform me—for I have forgotten—if that comprises the iron bridges, &c.?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The ironing is provided for. The bridging was let by separate contract and has just been made in England. That is for the great bridge across the Fraser. It will be erected this year. The work is all included in the contract, and the Government find the iron. The rails are all on the ground.

76. Station Accommodation..... $30,000.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is for stations on the line between Thunder Bay and Red River.

77. Subsidy, Canadian Pacific Railway..... $5,500,000.00

Mr. BLAKE. What is the calculation upon which that amount is based?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We shall require this amount, in addition to the $8,500,000 provided to the end of the year. There will be 100 miles opened, I hope, on the 1st of July, running eastward from Prince Arthur's Landing. There will be some sixty miles opened during the season on the eastern end, in addition to the forty miles now completed, and there will be the completion of the line probably to the summit of Kicking Horse Pass—at all events to the Rocky Mountains. These are the principal items which will be covered by this expenditure. On the eastern section there is a gap of 486 miles that remains to be located between Sturgeon River and Wahnipitac River, which is expected to be located during the present season.

PRAYERS.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message, as follows:—

LORNE.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, Supplementary Estimates of sums required for the Service of the Dominion, for the year ending 30th June, 1883; and, in accordance with the provisions of the British North America Act, 1867, he recommends these Estimates to the House of Commons.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,
OTTAWA, 5th May, 1883.

Ordered that the Message and Supplementary Estimates be referred to the Committee of Supply.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. BOWELL, in introducing Bill (No. 121) respecting the Harbor Master of the Harbor of Three Rivers, said:— This is simply to give power to the Harbor Commissioners of the city of Three Rivers for the appointment of a Harbor Master, and to confirm the appointment already made.

Bill read the first time.

INLAND REVENUE ACTS CONSOLIDATION BILL.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved the third reading of Bill (No. 115) to consolidate and amend the several Acts respecting the Inland Revenue.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). There is one matter which I desire to bring to the notice of the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue before the Bill passes. It will have been observed that we have now the Inland Revenue Laws consolidated into one Statute. There has been, on the whole, I think, an improvement in the arrangement in the clauses of that law, as those relating to distilleries are brought together as are those relating to tobacco and other branches of manufacture which are carried on under that law. I would suggest, as I did before—and I think the hon. Minister spoke favorably of the suggestion—that not only the Inland Revenue Laws, but the regulations and Orders in Council pertaining to those laws, should be prepared in a concise form, and then printed and distributed among those who have to work under them. There is another difficulty, however, and it is to that point to which I specially desire to refer. Some of the stipulations are very complicated in their nature, and it is possible that many men, desirous and anxious to do what is entirely right, may not be able to interpret them correctly, so that doubts may still arise among manufacturers as to what their duties may be. It may be said that the revenue officers in the various districts may be applied to. That is true, and I admit that these men as a class are very good men, and, considering the vexations they have to undergo, I believe they are very efficient officers. But the fact cannot be overlooked that, notwithstanding the efficiency of these officers, the law has not been carried out uniformly—that one state of things prevails in one district, and another in another. As the hon. member for Essex (Mr. Patterson) pointed out very clearly the other day, the law is unequally carried out in the different parts of the Dominion, and without casting any reflection on the officers, it is obvious that they are unable to attain to an agreement as to the construction of the law as it is operated in the different districts. Now, it is clear that, if the manufacturers in one district have the laws and regulations, and the stipulations and requirements made more exacting to them than they are made to the manufacturers of another district, they are at a disadvantage in the market as compared with the other manufacturers. I think it is now desirable that the law, or rather the interpretation of the law and the regulations, should be made more uniform—not especially in the matter of the distilleries, because there is an officer especially charged to overlook them, and a very efficient officer he is—but with reference to tobacco manufacture. It is undoubtedly a difficult matter to control, and it is rendered more difficult by the fact that the raw leaf is grown in our country, and, in a measure, enters into the manufacture of our goods sometimes mixed and sometimes in a pure state. That being the case, I think the only way in which the law can be made to work uniformly and equally on all classes—the only way in which the honest manufacturer can be protected—the only way in which he can be relieved from the danger of incurring penalties unknowingly, would be to make one of the inspectors a general inspector of tobacco manufacture, giving him powers over every district in all the Provinces. If he is charged specially with that duty, there will be the double advantage in having a perfect uniformity in the working of the law, and of having all the manufacturers operating under it placed precisely on the same level. No undue advantage will be had by one manufacturer over another owing to a more strict interpretation of the law in one district than in another. It was just with the view of throwing out this suggestion that I rose, and if the hon. Minister sees anything desirable in it, I hope he will take it into his consideration and give effect to it.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I have listened to the remarks of the hon. gentleman, especially to that portion of them relating to the inspection of tobacco in the different Provinces. There is a good deal in what the hon. gentleman says in regard to that subject; and I must say that I myself have felt that it would be an improvement if the inspection of tobacco could be placed under the control of one inspector for the whole Dominion. Of course, the hon. gentleman knows that our present Estimates exceed considerably those of last year, and that was one reason for not adding to the cost of the Department by creating new inspectors. But I can give the hon. gentleman this assurance, that I intend, as soon as possible, to bring about that change. It may be brought about, I think, without any additional cost; but I think before very long that system will be adopted.

Bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee.

198. Salaries and contingent expenses of the several Customs Ports..... $779,140.00

Mr. BOWELL. The increases in the Province of Ontario are caused in some cases by the creation of additional offices, and in other cases by increases in the salaries of officers at the different ports. In the town of Berlin there is an expenditure proposed of $750. That town has been erected into a distinct port, and the salary of the officer, formerly charged to Guelph, is now charged to Berlin, and we propose to increase his salary by $100. Then $50 for contingencies makes up the total item of $750. In the Brantford office there is an increase of $100, caused by a proposed increase in the salary of an officer who acts as clerk and appraiser—that is Mr. McMichael.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). There is another gentleman in a lower position than Mr. McMichael, who, I thought at one time would have an increase of $100, to which I think he was justly entitled; but since the change of Administration nothing has been done. If I remember rightly his salary is only $500, and he is an efficient officer; and, while commending the hon. Minister of Customs for his economy in this matter, there are some offices in which there is more economy than in others. If he will look into the business done by the Brantford office he will find it is done with the least amount of money, the least percentage, I fancy almost—I cannot speak positively—of any port in the Dominion. I mention that case as the circumstances are a little peculiar, and I have brought it before his notice now.

Mr. BOWELL. The gentleman referred to is, I think, Mr. Foster. I do not think my attention has been called to this before, and I am not aware where the hon. gentleman got the idea that there was to be an increase, except, as he says, when the country was so unfortunate as to lose the late Government. That may or may not be the case; but I simply say this: There are a large number of that class of officers, landing waiters, who are receiving no more salary than Mr. Foster. It does not follow that there is a large amount of work at a port where a large revenue is collected. There are many ports where the collections are very much less than at Brantford, and where the labor is greater, such as frontier ports, where the frontier has to be watched, or where the manifesting on railways is very great.

Mr. MACKENZIE. At Windsor for instance.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes, and at Sarnia, and Coaticook, and other places, where there is no comparison between the volume of work done, and that at Brantford, though the receipts may be much less.

Mr. PATERSON. This is a very deserving case at any rate.

Mr. BOWELL. I should judge so from the representative who comes from there.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Will the hon. gentleman give us the proportional additional increase in Quebec on the total increase?

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman will see that by the returns. It is not as much in the Province of Quebec, as a whole, as in the Province of Ontario. I take the hon. gentleman's remarks as indicative of the course they will pursue when they come again before the electors. No doubt then they will not declare that the hon. Minister of Customs has been extravagant, for they are all asking increases of salaries.

Mr. PATERSON. What we are asking is a readjustment, not an increase.

Mr. BOWELL. I am afraid a readjustment does not always suit the hon. gentleman. We heard a great deal about that, not only in this, but during the last Parliament, at the Elections. Although that may have been said jocularly, I say that readjustment is entirely the principle on which I have been endeavoring to administer the Customs Department. As an illustration, in the city of Montreal, although the Estimates show an increase of $83,000 over last year, the total amount expended there is less by one-half than was expended in 1878, and there are about a dozen or fifteen less officers in the port than then. I have been very careful, when opportunities presented themselves, when vacancies occurred, through superannuation, or death, or any other cause, in posts where I thought there were too many officers, not to fill them up, but to increase the salaries of those deserving officers who I thought had earned an increase. I think, therefore, that the word readjustment, suggested by my hon. friend, is the correct one. In Brockville, there is an increase of $3,000 through the appointment of two preventive officers on the frontier, at $375 each, and to provide the difference between $1.25 and $1.50 per day to Mr. Simpson, who has never been put on the permanent list, but was appointed, he holds, by my predecessor. At Granton, I found it necessary, in the interests of the revenue, to appoint an officer, as the railway will soon be open to that point, and it is necessary, in the interests of the revenue and the shipping there, to make that appointment.

Mr. CHARLTON. Any officer at London.

Mr. BOWELL. At Morpeth there is an agent and a preventive officer who was appointed by my predecessor. I think he received only $150 per year, and I gave him an increase of $50, owing to his increased duties, and I gave him also the power of collecting at different ports, so that he will have three or four services to perform. At Clifton there is an increase of $250, and in Collingwood an increase of $75.

Mr. MACKENZIE. To the collector?

Mr. BOWELL. No; we have had to appoint a preventive officer at Spanish River, who receives $100 a year. He is made an officer at the port of Collingwood. In Toronto, formerly Mill Point was an outport of the port of Napanee; it has been created into a port, and a collector is appointed. At Guelph, it is proposed to give an increase of $100 to the clerk—a Mr. Hutton, I think.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). There is a decrease at Guelph.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes; but I called your attention a few moments ago to the fact that Berlin was formerly chargeable to Guelph, and is now made a port. There is an increase of $100 to Mr. McNamara at the outport of Walkerton, attached to the port of Guelph. I propose to send one of the two officers at Dundee from there to Port Erie, because one officer only is required at Dundee. That is another instance of readjustment. There is an increase of $250 at the port of Hamilton. Out of this we propose to give an increase of $100 each to the two appraisers, Mr Wylie, the dry goods appraiser, and Mr. Thompson, the general appraiser; also $100 to an old officer, and $550 as salary to a newly appointed officer who was found necessary on account of the increasing business of that port. The increases are given on the ground of efficiency, and the small amount they receive now for the important positions they hold. I have expressed the opinion in this House before, that I thought the appraisers received too low a salary, and Mr. Wylie and Mr. Thompson received about as small salaries as are paid to that class of officers in any part of the country. Mr. Thompson, the chief of appraisers, is a very old officer, and one of the most efficient in the service, but he receives now only $1,200; and Mr. Wylie receives $1,000. The increase at Kincardine is to provide for the salary of the new outport at Wingham, $300.

Mr. CHARLTON. I see the salaries and expenses for Port Dover are $2,125. What are the outports of Port Dover?

Mr. BOWELL. Port Dover is one of the old ports, where the duties of the collector are not as great as they were twenty years ago; but as he is an old officer it was not deemed advisable to change the port. Simcoe and Port Rowan are outports of Port Dover. At Simcoe the sub-collector receives $500 a year, and the officer at Port Rowan the same sum. Mr. Barrett, the collector at Port Dover, receives the old salary, $875. At Kingston, a new collector was appointed at a salary $300 less than his predecessor. We propose an increase of $50 to Mr. Magher, an old officer of twenty or thirty years' service; also $50 to Mr. Kidd, and an equal sum to Mr. Nugent, and the same to Mr. McMillan. D. J. Rankin, the newly-appointed officer at Collins Bay, gets an annual increase of $50. In Kingsville, the $25 is for rent. In London, the increase is $1,700, and is for an additional appraiser at $1,000, the balance to be given to the present officers. The business of that port has increased about 50 per cent. since 1878, and that is largely owing to the importation of goods. Notwithstanding the increase in business, the proposed expenditure is only $12,500, while the expenditure in 1878 was $11,402. The increase is the same in Brantford, and I propose to give $100 to the gentlemen who have the most work to do there. At Prince Arthur's Landing, there is an increase of $25 for rent; at Sarnia, there is an increase of $550, to provide for another landing waiter, and an increase of $80 to the messenger. There is an increase at St. Catharines, to provide for additional assistance. Mr. Spittal has been appointed at Port Dalhousie to take the place of the officer who died there. At Port Rowan, there is $100 to pay the services of the Inland Revenue officer who acts for us though an officer of the Inland Revenue Department, and that saves the expense of appointing a new officer. In St. Thomas there is a proposed increase of $100 to the salary of Mr. Smellie, for the same reason that I have given for Brantford.

Mr. WILSON. I wish to call the attention of the hon. Minister to the fact that the increase in business at St. Thomas compares very favorably with the increase at London, and I think the proposed increase to the salary of Mr. Smellie, the landing waiter there, is nothing in proportion to the duties he has to perform. During the last nine months the revenue collected at St. Thomas was $15,855 over the same period last year. Now, the hon. Minister must take into consideration the fact that the collector at St. Thomas has been a long time in the service. I have not one word to say against the efficiency of Mr. Dunham. He is an old officer, and was for a number of years at Port Jarvis, where he had very little to do, but he performed the duties devolving upon him in a most efficient manner. He was removed from Port Burwell and placed at another port. Another man was brought from Windsor, Mr. King, whom the hon. Minister well knows, an old man who does his work as efficiently as he is able to do, and as well as might be expected, considering his age. The other man, Mr. Smellie, whom it is now proposed to give a salary of $700, and he has been receiving only $600, is to a very great extent responsible for the whole work of the office. In early life he obtained a knowledge of mercantile business, and this has enabled him to be a very efficient officer in the valuation of goods, and in solving, to a very great extent, the intricacies of the Tariff during the last two years. Not only so, but he has in a great measure to keep the books and prepare the monthly statements and returns. Further, he is an honest officer, always ready to do his work, and one who will not take any advantage of the Government or anyone else, and he is entitled, I think, to more than $100 increase. It is not a matter of economy to keep the salaries of officers who are industrious and efficient, down to starvation limits. This officer has a large family, and it is almost impossible for him to maintain them with any degree of comfort on the salary he receives, and I really think the hon. Minister might have seen his way—in view of the large amount of work performed at the St. Thomas Office, and the rapidly increasing revenue derived therefrom, which is advancing, perhaps, with greater rapidity than any other port in the Dominion—to have increased this officer's salary at least $200.

Mr. BOWELL. No doubt all the hon. gentleman has said is quite true as regards the efficiency of Mr. Smellie. If anything were needed to strengthen my belief in that fact, it would be by the speech just delivered by the hon. gentleman. My attention has been called to this officer very often, not only by the hon. gentleman, but also by his predecessor; nevertheless, it must be remembered that this officer was appointed by the late Government at a salary of $500, and St. Thomas is one of those ports which has been readjusted. When the present Government assumed power St. Thomas was an outport of London, and it had two officers: Mr. Taylor and Mr. Smellie. Mr. Taylor was removed to another part of the service, and Mr. Dunham appointed collector, he being a good officer and a very honorable man, having been stationed at Port Burwell, a port which was formerly of considerable importance in the carrying trade, but whose business fell off with the construction of railways. Instead of appointing a new officer we removed him to St. Thomas, and appointed a preventive officer at $200 per annum for Port Burwell. Last year the Government increased Mr. Smellie's salary $100, and we propose an increase of another $100 this year; and if he receives that increase yearly it will be a tolerably good one, until he reaches the maximum. As to Mr. King, I am not aware he should be superannuated. I saw the gentleman not very long ago, and he certainly appeared quite as capable of doing his work as I am, and he is about the same age. If Mr. King were superannuated the Government would be accused of putting a man out of the service who is quite capable of performing his duties in order to make room for another. I quite recognize the efficiency of Mr. Smellie, to whom we propose to give an increase of $100. I should very much like to place all these officers at higher salaries; but if that principle were carried out all over the Dominion, I should have to come down for $20,000, $30,000 or $50,000 more,

Mr. WILSON. The hon. gentleman was mistaken in his statement that Mr. Smellie received an increase of $100 last year. I think it was two years ago.

Mr. BOWELL. I think it was last year; however, I cannot be sure of it.

Mr. WILSON. The revenue of St. Thomas, for the ten months of last year, was $68,365; for the nine months of 1882, the amount was about $40,000. I should not like the hon. Minister to imagine that I wish to say one word against the efficiency of Mr. King, as far as he is able to perform his duties; but it must be remembered that very few men possess the perseverance and energy of the hon. Minister. I desire further to call attention to a letter which the hon. Minister has received from the town of St. Thomas, pointing out the necessity which exists for a detective officer being appointed in that locality, as considerable smuggling takes place over the Canada Southern Railway. I believe there are preventive officers appointed in other places, and it is nothing but just and right that the people of St. Thomas should be protected against those who are violating the law, almost every day.

Mr. BOWELL. The suggestion is a very good one, and I will take it into my most serious consideration. But St. Thomas is an inland port, and I cannot conceive why more smuggling should take place, except by railway, than at any other inland port of the Province.

Mr. HESSON. I desire to call the attention of the hon. Minister to the case of Mr. Ellison, landing waiter at Stratford. My hon. friend will confess that he is a valuable officer, and though he does not do as heavy work, or as large an amount of it as is the case at many other places, still he is discharging his duty faithfully, and doing all that there is to do at this point. He attends, perhaps, at the arrival of as many trains as is the case at any other port along this line of railway. My hon. friend knows perfectly well that this officer has been there for a great many years, and yet he receives only $400 a year. Complaint is made by an hon. member in this respect on behalf of an officer who receives $600 as landing waiter, Mr. Smellie, while Mr. Ellison only gets $400. The work to be done is very much the same, and he has to be at his post at all times, when trains come in; and whether the quantity of goods delivered be large or small, the duties in that sense are the same. I trust that the hon. Minister of Customs will take this case into consideration, as this is the worst paid officer, who acts as landing waiter, and I would be glad to see him get an increase of $100. The hon. gentleman has partly promised my hon. friend from Elgin, on behalf of a man who gets $200 more than my unfortunate friend, and I hope that he will take this case into favorable consideration also.

Mr. BOWELL. This is a case to which I called attention in my general remarks a few minutes ago, as that of a preventive officer receiving $400 a year. It is true that I have not made a special appropriation for an increase in this instance, but I think it is a case worthy of consideration; and if you look at the Estimates you will find that, in order to meet such cases as that of my hon. friend from Stratford, I asked the House to give me $5,000 to cover any unforeseen charges which it may be necessary to make. In the city of Toronto you will find an increase of between $2,000 and $3,000. This is principally for increases to different clerks, as in that office are to be found some of the best clerks in the Dominion—Messrs. Ardagh, Taylor, Verner, Preston, Patterson, and a number of others, who have for a number of years been receiving only $600. I am under the impression that Toronto is equally an expensive place to live in as St. Thomas, and I propose to add from $100 to $150 increase in the salaries of many of the officers whose names I have mentioned.

Mr. BOWELL.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I see that it is proposed to increase the daily wages in Toronto $3,300.

Mr. BOWELL. That arises from the extra number of trains continually arriving, and the extra business done at the wharves during the summer months, when it is absolutely necessary to put on what we call temporary hands. They are put on in the spring in all the ports, particularly at Montreal, where it is a very large item, and in the cities of Quebec and Toronto. There will be a sum at Toronto for contingencies of $1,000, in addition to the other expenditure. When I inform the House that, in 1878, the collections of the Port of Toronto were $2,151,566, while last year they were $3,836,227, showing an immense increase in duty, as well as in traffic, particularly by railway, it will be easily understood how it is that this increase takes place. In the town of Windsor, there is an increase of only $100, but I anticipate there a much larger increase, which will have to be provided for out of the $5,000, from the fact that the Canada Southern Railway have now established a crossing at Detroit and Windsor, and it will be necessary to have preventive officers to attend at this station. Thus, next year the probabilities are that this amount will be $1,000, or $1,500, more than is provided for here.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). On what principle is the appropriation asked for in respect to the daily wages for extra service? For instance, at Windsor, no such appropriation is asked for, while $5,900 are requested for Toronto, and $780 at St. Catharines. I see other places, such as Prescott, where nothing is called for; but $620 are wanted at Ottawa, and $400 at London; nothing at Morrisburg, nothing at Guelph, and nothing at other sea-port towns which I might name. It is all right enough, I suppose; but I want to know on what principle the appropriation is made at one place and not at another?

Mr. BOWELL. It is for the simple reason that it is required at one place and not at another. I cannot give any other explanation.

Mr. ROSS. This is no explanation at all. The hon. gentleman must know that.

Mr. BOWELL. It is the only explanation that can be given. Guelph, however, is not a sea-port.

Mr. ROSS. But Windsor is one, and Prescott is another.

Mr. BOWELL. Windsor is a port with stationary business, and the duties to be performed there are those of landing waiters, who attend more particularly at the ferry boats, and the trains crossing the river, with goods in bond, going eastward. The city of Toronto is a central depot, and distributing point for the whole of Ontario, or very nearly so. At Guelph, there is nothing particularly of that kind, except in regard to passing trains; and Prescott is in precisely the same position. We must have one or two officers there watching continually the ferry boats and the frontier, but there is no transshipment of any consequence of goods passing from one part of the country to another. It is not a distributing point—for the distribution of goods to other places. It is one of the smallest ports—if you look merely at the revenue collected—that is, it is a place where the collections are not very large; but we require there a large number of preventive officers to be constantly on the watch at the wharves from six o'clock in the morning until night, and they have also to attend to the transportation of the cars from the United States, in connection with the Ogdensburg and Grand Trunk Railroads.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I am glad that the hon. Minister was kind enough to give an explanation, because, if I did not think it was required, I would not have asked for it. It is not, however, a very satisfactory answer to give, just merely to say, blankly and flatly, they are there because they are required, and not there because they are not required. I was looking into the Estimates, and I wanted to see if there was a principle on which each expenditure was made. Perhaps I have got it, as nearly as I could expect to get it, from the hon. gentleman, and I must be satisfied thereby. I would like—though it may not belong to the hon. gentleman's Department, but to the Department of Public Works—to know why Customs houses are provided in some places where it does not seem to me the necessities of the service require them, while at other places there is no such provision. Does the hon. Minister make any report to the Department of Public Works as to the necessities of the service in this relation?

Mr. BOWELL. If the hon. gentleman will tell me to what he refers I will give him an answer. In all cases, I believe, since Confederation, there have been a large number of places at which there has been just as much labor performed, and, perhaps, a larger amount of duties collected, where they have no Customs houses constructed at the public expense, while others, which might be considered to be of smaller consequence, have them. When representation is made to me at the different points, that a Custom house is required, I approve, or disapprove, as the case may be, and send the matter to the hon. Minister of Public Works. That is the principle upon which these buildings are constructed. Perhaps, I might say to my hon. friend what the late Minister of Public Works said to some one on that side, in answering a similar question. He said, that as the revenue would justify him, and as the port warranted it, public buildings would be constructed as required by the public service. I do not know that I can give any better answer to the hon. gentleman than that.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I had no intention of worrying the hon. Minister.

Mr. BOWELL. You are not worrying me in the slightest.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I did not propose to ask any questions but what were necessary and reasonable. I was going to say to the hon. Minister that I notice that he established a Custom house and post office at Gananoque, where the rents and contingencies were $144, and the Customs receipts were $13,838. Then take the case of Sarnia, for example, which is in my part of the country, though not in my constituency, and we find that the rents, &c., amounted to $576, and the Customs dues to $39,367, or nearly three times as much as those of Gananoque, and yet no such provision is made in Sarnia. I was anxious to know whether the hon. gentleman was acting on the principle laid down by the hon. gentleman for East York—that is, when the rents and dues are more than the amount of the interest on the investment, then such accommodation should be provided. I say that the rents here are trifling as compared with the cost of the erection of new buildings, and in Gananoque the Custom house receipts are much smaller.

Mr. BOWELL. I have no objection to answer the hon. gentleman, but I do think that it would be as well to discuss the question of the erection of Public Buildings when the estimates for Public Buildings are under consideration, when my hon. friend the Minister of Public Works could deal fully with the question. After all, however, when the explanation is made with regard to Gananoque, that matter will not appear such a hideous affair at most. In that place the Customs occupied a building near the wharf which was burnt down, and the property was about passing into the hands of others than the man who formerly owned it. It was proposed that $2,500 would repair the building in which the office was held, and purchase the lot, so that all the expenditure connected with that building would be $2,500; and I thought that instead of going to another part of the town, which was less commodious or convenient to the trading public than the present Customs house, it would be better to accept that arrangement. I so advised the hon. Minister of Public Works, and he put in the Estimates the sum of $2,500 to repair the building in which the Customs house had formerly been held, and to purchase the lot on which it is situated. If you calculate the interest at 5 per cent. on $2,500, you will see exactly what the cost is to the country of purchasing that lot and repairing the building.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Of course, as the hon. gentleman has said, it would be better to discuss these items under the Public Works Estimates; but as I understand that he recommended the purchase in this case, it would seem that we had reached the right quarter, and that he was the proper member of the Government to whom to address our remarks. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that he was following the rule laid down by the late hon. Minister of Public Works, that wherever the public interests required such buildings they should be erected or obtained. I will not say that that is not the rule, which the hon. gentleman is following; but I warn him to take care that there should not be too many peculiar coincidences with regard to these public buildings, as they might excite some little doubt as to whether the hon. gentleman was solely actuated by the rule laid down by the late hon. Minister of Public Works. When you find that almost invariably—in fact I think I might say invariably—the appropriations for these buildings are made in the towns and cities which are fortunate enough to send representatives to this House to support the hon. gentleman, some people might be inclined to doubt whether he invariably adhered to this rule. In order to break the monotony, and to prevent such suspicion, I would suggest that occasionally, at very rare intervals, there should be found an appropriation for a town that might happen to have a representative in this House opposed to the hon. Minister of Customs if its claims happened to be as strong as those other towns which are receiving these appropriations.

Mr. BOWELL. No doubt the facetious remarks of the hon. gentleman are very interesting. He discovered what might be called a mare's nest, and if he sets on it awhile there is no telling what the result may be. It is, indeed, a marvellous and a wonderful thing that the collector of Customs should represent to the Minister the requirements of a particular port; it is a wonderful thing that the hon. Minister of Customs should make a recommendation to the Minister of Public Works, and that the hon. Minister of Public Works should go to Council and ask for an appropriation. I wonder if the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor) is a great admirer of this Administration.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). He is individually.

Mr. BOWELL. I am speaking politically now, as the hon. member for North Brant did; and if the hon. gentleman looks at the Estimates he will find an appropriation for $15,000 for a Custom house and other public buildings in his town.

Mr. GILLMOR. Tell us all about those public buildings.

Mr. BOWELL. Certainly I will. I went down to that port and found that there was no suitable accommodation. It was represented to me that it was necessary, in the interests of the town and in the interests of that port, and I represented to my colleagues that these buildings were necessary. The hon. gentleman knows the difficulty of protecting the revenue in the town of St. Stephens. He told us the other day that there were freebooters there by night, and I do not know what by day; at all events, it was necessary to keep watch night and day. So, in the interest of St. Stephens and in the interests of the revenue, without regard to the fact that the hon. gentleman is an opponent of the Government, we made an appropriation for public buildings in St. Stephens. I hope these public buildings will be a credit to the town as well as to the Government, who are always prepared to do justice to every part of the country, irrespective of whether they sent representatives to support them or not.

Mr. GILLMOR. When did you make that discovery?

Mr. BOWELL. As soon as the matter was brought to my attention, which the hon. gentleman never did.

Mr. GILLMOR. The hon. gentleman went down just before an election. He did not know anything about the wants of the people there until that particular time, and I am told that the representative there never presented his claim at all.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman is mistaken, I visited St. Stephens the year before the election, but if the hon. gentleman does not want these buildings we have no desire to force them upon him.

Mr. GILLMOR. The hon. gentleman had never had any desire to force them upon me.

Mr. McCALLUM. I see the hon. gentleman has made a reduction at the port of Dunville of $500, and if I understand him aright he is going to transfer one of the officers to Fort Erie. I would like to understand if he is going to increase the officer's salary in that case.

Mr. BOWELL. No.

Mr. McCALLUM. And I would like to know if he is going to increase the salary of those he has left behind to do the work of the office. I am glad that he has appropriated this sum to increase the salaries of those who are not sufficiently paid. I make a claim now for an addition in the salary of one officer engaged on the outside service of Port Maitland, who now receives, I think, the magnificent sum of $100. I think I may fairly claim for him an increase of $100 or $200. Besides, I think it is dealing rather unjustly with this officer in removing him from Dunville to Fort Erie without giving him an increase of salary.

Mr. CASGRAIN. In looking at these figures, one thing that strikes me is that the great bulk of the Customs revenue is raised in the Province of Quebec. The largest amount of Customs revenue collected at any one port is collected at the port of Montreal; and the Montreal merchant before he can get his goods, is obliged to pay that duty and he has to run the risk of getting that duty returned to him by his customers. Although the Province of Quebec gives a yearly augmentation to the Customs revenue, yet, of all the Provinces, it is the one that shows a decrease in the salaries of the officers employed to collect that revenue. The percentage of the expense of collecting the revenue in 1882, was, in Ontario, 3.07, and in Quebec 2.15, and the rate of Customs duties, per head of the population was, in Ontario, $3.82, and, in Quebec, $6.74, nearly $1 more than the previous year, when it was $5.94. In looking at the Estimates, I find that there is an increase in the expenses of collection in Ontario of $13,000, while in Quebec there is only the small increase of about $2,200. At first sight this seems to be a gross injustice. I am willing to admit that it is less expensive, proportionately, to collect a large sum of money than a small amount, but the difference is such that I think we should have some explanation from the hon. Minister.

Mr. BOWELL. I do not propose to enter into the larger question the hon. gentleman has propounded, as to which Province pays the largest amount of duty. We know that the city of Montreal pays a much larger amount of duty than any other city in the Dominion, and more than any other two; but I do not suppose that the hon. gentleman intends to convey the idea that all the goods that pay duty are consumed either in the city of Montreal, or in the Province of Quebec?

Mr. CASGRAIN. No; I do not say that. I say that the duty is paid first by the Montreal merchant, and he has to collect afterwards where he can.

Mr. BOWELL. We do not deny that. The only point which I think the hon. gentleman should try to establish is that the officers in the Province of Quebec are not paid as well as those in the other Provinces, or that there are not a sufficient number to perform the duties. But I cannot see any reason why there should be more officers in the Province of Quebec or any other Province than are requisite to the duties they have to perform; and when the hon. gentleman says that the salaries of the officers in the Province of Quebec are not increased in the same proportion as those in other Provinces, he makes a statement of which he knows very little. In the city of Montreal, where the largest number of officers of all the ports in the country are employed, there are a smaller number of officers to-day than there were in 1878, although all the vacancies have not been filled, and the salaries of the officers performing the work have been increased. If a man has a sufficient amount of work to do, and he does it efficiently, his salary should be commensurate with the duties he performs, and it is much better that one man should be fully employed and receive a fair salary than that there should be two men with the salary divided between them to do that which one man can do. That is the principle upon which I have acted in every section of the Dominion, and I have found no place that required a greater readjustment in that respect than the port of Montreal. In the city of Montreal, I propose an increase this year over last year of some $3,000; but you will understand why that is done if you examine the collections at that port, and the volume of trade that is carried on there. In 1878, the collections at the port of Montreal amounted to $3,832,140, and the expenditure for the collection of that revenue was $114,311; while the collections last year amounted to $8,128,155, and the expenditure was only $112,921, or nearly $2,000 less than was expended in 1878 for collecting less than half the amount of revenue. I have not yet heard any complaints made on the part of the mercantile community that there was not quite a sufficient number of employes necessary to perform the labors. And I repeat, for the information of the hon. gentleman, that every year we have been decreasing the number at that port, and increasing in proportion, or nearly in proportion, the salaries of those who remain. I have provided for the salaries of two officers, one clerk and one landing waiter at $600 each; and for the salary of an additional hardware appraiser, Mr. Bernard, $1,200. I have increased the salary of Mr. Lavoie, who was promoted, $100; and Mr. Lanthier has been promoted from the position of packer to that of full assistant appraiser, with an addition of $500, for the reason that he was found to be an expert in that particular branch and deserved the promotion. Mr. Bonier is to receive an increase of $100, and the cashier, an increase of $100. There will also be an increase to Mr. Chambers, one of the best officers in one of the branches, of $150, and to Mr. Gabler, appraiser, $200. He received at first $900, then $1,200, and finally $1,400, in view of the fact that he has a large amount of labor to perform of a peculiar character, he being the judge of all German goods imported into the country, and he being a very efficient officer and deserving of any promotion we may give him. Mr. Mercier will receive $100 increase, and Mr. Faulkner $100; and to pay the outside list that have to be employed when the different steamers come into port, night and day, will require between $3,000 and $4,000. This is the full explanation for the increase of $2,620, so that my hon. friend will see that neither the Government nor the Department have overlooked the merits of deserving officers, no matter to what port or to what nationality they may belong. I repeat, again, that though we have increased the salaries of the different officers $5,000 to $10,000, the expenditure last year was $1,500 less to collect $8,128,155 than was expended by the late Government to collect $3,832,140. In New Carlisle a new officer will be appointed, with not quite as much salary as his predecessor, from the fact that the business of the port does not justify it, and that gentleman will have another office in connection with the Inland Revenue Department. In Quebec the same principle prevails. In St. Hyacinthe, as the business of that port increased, we propose to give the collector $600 per year instead of $400 formerly received.

Mr. BERNIER. What was the amount of the increased revenue last year at St. Hyacinthe over the preceding year?

Mr. BOWELL. I have not the figures before me, but I know that the business of the past has increased to such an extent that we would be justified in giving the collector this additional increase. In St. John's the acting collector will receive $100 increase, and the landing waiter another $100; but it may be necessary to appoint an additional landing waiter there, owing to the fact that a number of railways are converging there and the business will be largely increased. In Sutton, there is a decrease of $200, owing to the death of one of the preventive officers whose place we do not propose to fill up. In Stanstead there is also a decrease owing to the death of one of the officers, and his successor being appointed at a lower salary. As far as possible we have adopted the principle that when a new man is appointed he gets a lower salary than his predecessor, and when more efficient the salary is increased.

Mr. SCRIVER. I would ask whether the collectorship of the Port of St. John's has been filled yet?

Mr. BOWELL. No; it has not. Mr. Pichard is acting there, with an assistant, Mr. Wolfe, who has been stationed at that port as assistant inspector.

Mr. SCRIVER. Where is the former collector now stationed?

Mr. BOWELL. He is employed at Napanee in place of Mr. Benson, deceased, formerly collector at Napanee.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I would like to call the attention of the hon. Minister to one peculiarity in the mode of managing the Customs in Quebec as compared with Ontario. In Ontario, I notice that although a very large revenue is collected there, a much smaller amount is paid for daily wages than in Quebec. Last year the amount paid for daily wages in Ontario was $8,101, while in Quebec it was $44,018. Last year the contingencies of office in Ontario amounted to $19,038, and in Quebec to $17,776. The larger portion of this sum for daily wages is spent at Montreal, the sum of $37,000 being taken for the next year, or enough to pay 100 persons the whole year round at $1.25 a day. I remember the time when the number of men employed in the Port of Montreal at daily wages was cited by hon. gentlemen opposite as an instance of gross corruption on the part of the Liberal party, because it was said that a great many additional hands were employed in the Customs at Montreal in view of a certain election that was going on. No election is expected in Montreal this year. The hon. Minister will excuse me for putting the question to him now. Why not employ regularly on the staff a sufficient number of men to do the work and do away with these daily wages, and avoid keeping a large number of men hanging upon the skirts of the Government looking for occasional employment? Is it impossible to manage the Province of Quebec without employing a greater number of people on daily wages than are employed in Ontario?

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman seems to overlook the fact that at the ports of Montreal and Quebec there are brought in immense quantities of goods by ocean-going vessels, and the tonnage and the amount of shipping at those ports are beyond anything of the kind at any of the ports in Ontario. This is the reason why so many men are required in Montreal on daily wages. It often occurs that when a vessel arrives at these ports loaded with goods, it is necessary to put on sometimes thirty or forty men at $1.50 a day, and perhaps $2 at night, in order to check all the goods that come out of the vessels and to watch that none of them are lost or taken to the wrong warehouses. Just in proportion to the amount of shipping and tonnage that frequent these ports during summer is the amount of daily wages required. It will be readily understood that it would be an unwise and extravagant policy to put all these men on the permanent list, because in the winter season some twenty or thirty of them are not required. Another reason why this amount for daily wages is so large is the fact that a very large number of clerks, landing waiters, tide-waiters and lockers, and laborers, are put on the list of what is known as the permanent temporaries—rather a contradictory term, but that is what they are known by—and they were put on that list by my predecessor. They have never been transferred to the permanent list, although under the change which will be made in the Civil Service Act, the Government will be enabled to put them upon it without passing an examination. I must tell my hon. friend that this Government did not inaugurate the system he complains of. In 1873, when his friends assumed office, the total expenditure at that port was about $86,000 altogether, and it was owing to this very list of which he complains that the expenditure was increased some $30,000 or $40,000. And that is one of the difficulties that I have had to combat since I have been in office. I have found men in the employment of the Government there, whether by the month or by the day, or permanently, whose services were not required there; and I do not know anyone who would be more ready than the hon. gentleman himself to say if he dismissed one of these men, it would be for political reasons. Therefore, as vacancies occurred they have not been filled up, except in the higher branches, where it was absolutely necessary to keep the office positions filled. The only place in Ontario where we can apply the same principle of daily wages is the city of Toronto, where there is quite a large sum spent for that purpose, and where you have to put on additional men in the summer. Coming now to New Brunswick, in Fredericton there is $50 increase for contingencies; at Grand Falls it is proposed to give the sub-collector an increase of $100, and to put a preventive officer on the frontier at $50. Among the increases is one of $100 to the salary of an office at Moncton, where the responsibilities have greatly increased. Four or five years ago the collections were covered by a few thousands, but last year they were over $50,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE. That is in connection with the sugar refinery, and will involve very little work.

Mr. BOWELL. On the contrary, all the sugar has to be graded, tested and bonded, and there are only two officers to perform the work, with the occasional assistance of an officer from St. John. At St. John there is an increase of $100; but a comparison of the expenditure with the expenditures four years ago will show a reduction. At Woodstock there is a preventive officer appointed at a salary of $200. Mr. Kearney is the officer.

Mr. IRVINE. The hon. Minister appointed, at Woodstock, a Mr. Jacques.

Mr. BOWELL. I will promise the hon. gentleman that Mr. Jacques will have his salary paid him.

Mr. VAIL. There is a decrease of $1,800 under the heading Nova Scotia.

Mr. BOWELL. Read the various items making up this decrease.

Mr. VAIL. I hope the hon. Minister, at the next Election, will explain to the people of Nova Scotia that a decrease has taken place under this head. It is claimed that the hon. gentleman never superannuated officers who discharged their duty. He has forgotten what took place in the county of Digby a few years ago, when a very efficient officer, who was well able to discharge his duties, was superannuated. I should like to know the reason, as no reason has yet been given. It was said at the time that he was superannuated, or removed, because he did not attend to business very strictly, and allowed smuggling. But that could not be the case, because at the other end of the county the officer at Bear River was removed, because he was too strict and seized property which the Government felt disposed afterwards to return. The Government could not remove one officer because he did not do his duty in regard to stopping smuggling, when they removed another officer because he did his duty in that regard. I do not rise to make any complaint; but it seems strange, as the hon. Minister never acts from political motives in these matters, that two collectors in Digby, who were Liberals, were removed, while all the rest, many of whom were much older, and in many instances not so competent nor so attentive, but happened to be supporters of the present Government, were allowed to remain in office.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman is as much at fault in the statements he has made as he usually is when he addresses this House; and I do not think that it would be to the advantage of the collector at Digby to give the reasons why he was superannuated.

Mr. VAIL. He was not at Digby.

Mr. BOWELL. No it was at Weymouth?

Mr. VAIL. Surely the hon. gentleman knows.

Mr. BOWELL. I do know; he was at Weymouth, and I know that he was superannuated because he was totally inefficient, and neglected to perform the duties appertaining to his office; that is the reason why this gentleman was superannuated.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It was a case for dismissal.

Mr. BOWELL. No; the object of the Superannuation Law is to place gentlemen who prove to be inefficient—I think that this is as mild a word as I can use—on the retired list, either owing to age or to any other cause; and this was the case in Weymouth. He would not have been superannuated, I dare say, had it not been for the reports of the officers, whose duty it is to report to the Department as to the efficiency of the different officers in the Customs Department. The hon. gentleman is mistaken altogether when he says that the sub-collector at Bay River was removed from his office because he too ardently performed his duties. He was removed from office because he allowed merchants to take their goods out of the bonded warehouses without paying the duties; this was the reason, and I explained it to the House before. I have no desire to make these statements, unless they are drawn from me by their over-zealous friends, who compel the Government to give explanations and state the real facts; but when an officer has charge of bonded goods in bonded warehouses, and allows them to be taken out without first collecting the duty, I would like to know what safety there is for the revenue. For no other reason was that gentleman relieved or dismissed from his office. The hon. gentleman says—and this is a new charge certainly against myself—that he made seizures, and I gave them up. I am glad to know that somebody says I had leniency enough to surrender anything to any person; in all cases, I can assure the hon. gentleman, where seizures are made by my officers, and I find that they have over-stepped their duties, and that there has been no guilt, the goods are surrendered at once; but I have endeavored to enforce the law where people have wilfully violated it. If it is any grain of comfort to my hon. friend, I have given the facts, and I am quite prepared to go to the country and leave it to the electors as to the whole management of the Customs Department under his regime and under that of the present Government. I can tell him this: that notwithstanding the fact that we have been increasing salaries at different points throughout the Dominion, the expenditure last year was $709,855, as against $719,711 in 1878-79. The hon. gentlemen who were administering the affairs of this country in 1878-79 collected only $12,939,540, while last year this Government collected $21,708,837, or a difference, as regards cost, of between $719,711 and $723,855. I do not desire to mislead the House. I have deducted from this amount the expenditure for the Board of Appraisers; but adding the Board of Appraisers, how does it stand? This Board cost, last year, $14,058, and I have no hesitation in saying that they have added tens and scores of thousands of dollars to the revenue, still the only increase in collecting $21,708,837 as against $12,939,540, was the difference between $719,711 and $723,913, or $4,202 more, including the expenditure of over $14,000 for the Board of Detectives and Appraisers to collect $21,708,837 as against $12,939,540. The comparisons are not such that we need be afraid of them, if we are to go before the people, and to ask them to judge upon the merits of the administration of the Customs Department now, as when my hon. friend was responsible for the work.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. gentleman might, however, supplement his remarks. I do not want to detract at all from the efficiency with which the hon. Minister manages his Department. I have not hesitated to say—and I consider—that he administers it with a great deal of efficiency; but when he seeks to leave the impression on the minds of the country that there has been about double the amount of work done for a very slight increase in the amount it was done for—and I say that this is the tendency of the hon. gentleman's argument: that there has been nearly double the amount of work done for very little more pay—I say that this is not the correct way of putting it. It is entirely a misleading way of putting it. The hon. gentleman knows very well, in fact he illustrated the point admirably himself a short time ago, in response to the hon. member for L'Islet, when he instanced that they were enabled, at the Port of Montreal, to more than double their collections without any increase in the staff whatever—that it is no more trouble and no more work for the Collector of Customs to take 35 cts. on the dollar on an invoice, than to take 17½ cts. They have not increased work to do; and I only point this out, not to attack the hon. gentleman, because I am not afraid to say as I repeat now, that I believe he does administer his Department with a great deal of efficiency, but to prevent his leaving a wrong impression on the minds of the House, and more particular on the minds of the country, because he is talking about the question being discussed before the country; and he puts the figures in such a way as to lead the people to suppose that nearly double the work has been done for very little increased pay; and this is not, I say, the fairest and most candid way of putting it. The work may be as great as it was under the late Administration, it may be a little more; but to suppose that the work of the officers is anything like proportionately advanced with the increase in the revenue, the hon. Minister know is entirely erroneous, and something that will not bear investigation at all, from the simple fact that where these officers collected, under the late Administration, 17½ cts. on the dollar on invoices, they in a great many cases now collect 35 cts. The calculations to be made by the officers, and the amount of money to be counted over by them, and all that, is very slightly to increase the work, as any man must know. I just think it is desirable that these remarks should go to the country in connection with the statements of the hon. gentleman in order that the people may understand aright, not that the hon. gentleman does not administer his Department efficiently, but that he must not claim or seek to get credit for doing a vastly greater amount of work, with the same number of hands, than was done under the late Administration.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman says there is a very slight increase in the amount of work particularly in collections. Well, I do not know what the hon. gentleman's idea of small and slight amounts is. His business may be of such magnitude that a few millions dwindle into insignificance. The difference in the amount collected between 1878-79 and 1882 is 70 per cent., while the increase in total expenditure of 1882 over 1878 was about $1\frac{2}{10}$ per cent. The hon. gentleman estimates that there is no more work now in connection with the revenue than there was in 1878-79. I did not intend to leave the impression that there was double the amount of work; but any one who will take the present Tariff and go into the Customs House, particularly in the case of Montreal, will see that this Tariff—which it would not be improper to call an intricate Tariff—requires more calculation, a larger number of appraisers, and a greater number of outside officers, from the fact that there are more goods coming into the port. Hon. gentlemen will find, when they compare the expenditure of 1878 with the expenditure of last year, that the latter, less the Board of Appraisers, was not so great by nearly \$10,000, than was the expenditure for 1878. This is a matter for which, I think, any Government may take credit to themselves. The hon. gentleman says that the Government have taken the credit for the fact that they did the same amount of work with the same officers. I say that there are fewer officers in the city of Montreal, to which he referred, than there were in 1878, although the amount of money collected is larger, and the work greater.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The volume of the imports would be a better test.

Mr. BOWELL. Certainly.

Mr. VAIL. I wish to point out that unfortunately for Nova Scotia, in every case she gets a very small share, while the other Provinces get a larger share, so that I do not complain that the amount is too large, but rather that it is reduced. With regard to Weymouth, I do not think the amount collected shows any more deficiency on the part of the present officer than his predecessor, as the amount has really been less.

Mr. BOWELL. The number of vessels seized has been much increased.

Mr. VAIL. Yes; but the amount of money inuring to the Customs Department could not have been very large or it would have shown in the returns. While I am on my feet, it may not be out of place for me to mention the fact that some of the Customs officials are in the habit of leaving their office business on election days, instead of attending to their official duties. I have been in politics a good many years, and I have for a good many years been in a position which would enable me to have officials removed if I chose, but I have never had a county official removed in my life. During the last Election we witnessed the unseemly sight of the late collector going around in his waggon during the day carrying voters to the poll, and then presenting himself at the polling place when he was very much astonished to find that he could not vote. I hope the hon. gentleman will give his officials to understand that their place is in their offices, and not at the polls, on election day.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I see there was a very large increase in Manitoba, which perhaps the hon. gentleman will explain.

Mr. BOWELL. The increase in Manitoba is very large. There is required this year about $25,000 additional to carry on the work in Manitoba and the North-West. The increase arose from this fact: Last summer when the blockade took place, it was utterly impossible to get goods through, and telegrams kept coming in so rapidly to myself, that I sent Mr. Mewburn, the Inspector, to Winnipeg, with instructions to get as many men as were necessary to perform the duties at that port. He at once employed some sixteen or twenty men at from $2 to $2.50 per day, which was the lowest sum at which he could get good and responsible men to do the work. When I tell the hon. gentleman that the number of cars arriving and departing per day by the Canadian Pacific Railway, as I ascertained when I went up, was 600, he will see the absolute necessity of increasing the expenditure at that port.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. gentleman will excuse me. I notice that there was a collector and staff at Emerson, and I notice that the salaries of the collector and the whole staff at Emerson are given in the Public Accounts, but not in the comparative statement in the Estimates.

Mr. BOWELL. That arises from the fact that Emerson was formerly an outport of Winnipeg, but it has been erected into a distinct and separate port with a collector, landing waiter, &c.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I see that this item in the general statement for Manitoba is not correct. The hon. gentleman is asking in the Supplementary Estimates, which were brought down to day, $25,000 additional, which is not embraced in the list of expenditures for the current year.

Mr. BOWELL. These are the expenditures of last year in reference to the old Provinces.

Mr. MACKENZIE. These expenditures altogether for 1882-83 are put at $19,900, when they are really $44,900.

Mr. BOWELL. This $25,000 is to make up the deficiency in the present year. I am glad the hon. gentleman has called my attention to the matter, for in the comparisons which I made just now I did not include the expenditures and collections for the North-West, which are kept entirely distinct and separate. The expenditures for the North-West—in which, of course, is included Manitoba as well—will be about $25,000 more than was estimated last year, and that amount will be required for next year. The same reason that I gave for not putting on a large number of officials on the permanent list at Montreal, applies in the case of Winnipeg. The permanent staff is very small. As we establish ports to the westward, at Portage la Prairie, at Brandon, and at Regina, which we propose to do as soon as the House rises, a certain proportion of the work which is now done at Winnipeg will be performed at those different ports; and as soon as the road is opened from Thunder Bay, a large proportion of the Canadian traffic which now passes into the country through the United States will go by that route, and the manifesting and checking of goods that now takes place will not occur. All the goods that pass into Manitoba through the United States have to be bonded at the frontier when they enter the United States, and have to be checked and entered in precisely the same way as foreign goods, the only difference being that the duty has not to be paid. The officers will be relieved of that labor, to a great extent, as soon as our own road is opened. Last year from $10,000,000 to $12,000,000 worth of goods passed in bond from old Canada to Manitoba through the United States. Every dollar's worth of those goods, whether they were emigrants' effects, or goods manufactured in the country, or purchased in Montreal, had to be bonded and released when they arrived at the port of destination. If they were all foreign goods, the Committee will at once see the immense amount of revenue that would have been derived from them; but all the work pertaining to the bonding, the releasing of the bonds, the making of the entries, and the keeping of the books, is nearly as great as if the duties had to be collected.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). After the establishment of the ports at Brandon, Portage la Prairie and other points, the increased amount the hon. Minister is taking will not be expended at Winnipeg; but it is simply taken under that head for the sake of convenience.

Mr. BOWELL. They will all be outports, and the expenditure in connection with them will be chargeable to Winnipeg. By-and-bye, in case they become of sufficient importance, they will be made independent ports.

Mr. SCRIVER. I see that no provision is made for the increase in the salaries and travelling expenses of inspectors in accordance with the resolutions introduced the other day.

Mr. BOWELL. No; there is no provision. In the Civil Service Act it is provided that the maximum salary of an inspector may be $2,500 instead of $2,000 as at present.

Mr. SCRIVER. Is it intended to increase their salaries in the coming financial year?

Mr. BOWELL. It has not been decided.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). By what way do goods going into the North-West reach Fort McLeod and other distant points, without being entered at some port? Are goods sent to these points in bond? Have we any bonded warehouses at any of these points?

Mr. BOWELL. Not yet. The goods now pass in by way of Fort Benton.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Are any permanent agencies to be employed in the North-West this year?

Mr. BOWELL. No; except that, as I have said, we propose to appoint a sub-collector at Regina, and the two other points I have mentioned. The goods that are entered at Winnipeg pay the duty there, and go westward; but a vast proportion of the goods for the Far West go in by mule trains via Fort Benton, and when they reach their destination they are taken charge of by the Mounted Police, and the duty collected upon them. We propose to continue that practice at all points where the Mounted Police are stationed, except the places where we may appoint sub-collectors. A large proportion of the supplies of the contractors of the Indian Department will, during the present year go by the Canadian Pacific Railway as far as it will carry them, and will then be transferred to ox or mule teams to be conveyed to their destination.

Mr. ROYAL. Is it the intention of the hon. gentleman to appoint any officer at Turtle Mountain?

Mr. BOWELL. Not at present. If, upon investigation, it is thought necessary to do so, we shall be able to appoint one and pay him out of the extra $5,000 that we have taken.

Mr. ROYAL. I suppose there is an officer stationed at Gretna.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes; I have established that as an outport, and Mr. Leslie, who has been there for a number of years, will be appointed a sub-collector. If it should be found that he requires assistance the hon. gentleman will be informed of the fact. In British Columbia there is a slight increase. The business at Victoria is increasing to such an extent that we have to furnish additional help, and we give a slight increase to Mr. Finlay, the Chief Clerk, as well as to Mr. Milne, who acts as an appraiser, and I am under the impression that we shall have to appoint another landing waiter. We also may appoint a landing waiter at New Westminster.

Mr. DAVIES. I should like to ask the hon. Minister if he has done anything with regard to the claim I spoke of the other day.

Mr. BOWELL. I have not had time to look into it yet. It was a claim, I think, on behalf of an officer for work said to have been done in 1878, the man having been put on the staff contrary to the orders of the late hon. Minister of Customs. I think Mr. Gurrie, then collector, was instructed to employ no men without the consent of the Department. One claim came before me in which it was proved that a man had performed the duties for which he was employed; the collector was dead, and unable to pay him, and looking at the matter from an equitable stand-point, I concluded that he ought to be paid. If the officer to whom my hon. friend refers occupies a similar position, we will endeavor to treat his claim in an equitable manner.

Mr. DAVIES. The person I speak of stands in precisely the same position. He was employed at the same time, by the same man, doing the same work, and I hope, that, if the one has been paid, the other will not be left out of court. The only reason I can see why his case was not dealt with is that he is a poor man, and has not the means of bringing it before the Department as Mr. Ferguson had. I want to call the hon. Minister's attention to what I conceive to be a very unfair discrimination made against the officials of the Department of Prince Edward Island, as regards pay, as compared with similar officials in the adjoining Provinces. A great deal of complaint has been made the last year or two on this account, and if the hon. Minister will give the matter his attention, he will find a good ground for complaint. The interest of the public service is not advanced by underpaying officials. These officials in the Customs House at Charlottetown are very good officials, and some of them are clearly underpaid. Although they are political opponents of mine, I must say this good word in their behalf. I find that while the collectors at Halifax and St. John get $3,000, at Charlottetown the collector only gets $1,800. I submit that while these officials must possess the same qualifications and do the same class of work, there should be no discrimination made. The chief clerk in the Department at Charlottetown gets only $350. He is a very excellent official, does his work well, and it is not fair that he should get less salary than the same officials in the adjoining Provinces who are paid $1,500. If he were the employé of a mercantile establishment he would get $1,200 to $1,500 a year. Take the cashier in the Custom House at Charlottetown, he gets only $500. It is absurd to say that a man possessing the qualification necessary to fill that position is only worth $500. In the adjoining Provinces the same officials get $1,200. This is very unfair, and I have no doubt the hon. Minister, if he has time to give it his attention, will remedy it. While the landing waiters in the adjoining Provinces get $900, in Prince Edward Island they only get $500, though they are good men, and have been a long time in the Department, and with the increased cost of living they cannot live comfortably on that salary.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They would be very sorry to resign.

Mr. DAVIES. Possibly they would, for I do not know what they would do in Charlottetown if they did, for there is no other work there for them that I know of. If the hon. gentleman will look into the figures he will find that the discrimination is very unfair, and the salaries inadequate to the work these officials are obliged to do. I would also ask the hon. Minister to look into the salaries paid sub-collectors at the chief outports. He will find that it will be in the public interest that these men should be paid a reasonable sum so that they may be able to give their full time to the country. It is generally believed that our public interests suffer materially because of the small salaries paid these men. I rose particularly, however, to call attention to the salaries of officials in the Custom House at Charlottetown.

Mr. BOWELL. If the hon. gentleman would look a little beyond his own port, he would find that in the city of Toronto, where it is certainly more expensive to live than in Charlottetown, quite a number of officers only receive $600 a year, and at Quebec and Montreal, where the cost of living is also greater, tide waiters receive from $500 to $550 a year. I am not saying that it is too much, but that the hon. gentleman should not have left the impression on the House that landing waiters in other sections were receiving $900, while in Charlottetown officers were paid less. He selected the very highest grade of that class at Montreal, Toronto, and some other places.

Mr. DAVIES. I did not mention Montreal or Toronto.

Mr. BOWELL. That is where you got your sum. Some landing waiters in those ports receive $900, some $1,000, and one or two $1,200, but they are the chiefs, having supervision over all the others. The hon. gentleman says, there is an unfair discrimination between Charlottetown and the other ports. Considering the cost of living in other places you will find that his statement is not strictly accurate. The officials in Charlottetown, in proportion to the cost of living there, receive a proportionate amount to those in other ports. I was discussing this point the other day with a Senator from that section, and I asked him if he would take $800 a year, and live in Charlottetown, in preference to $1,200 a year in Montreal, or Halifax, and he said he would prefer the former.

Mr. DAVIES. He was not fair in doing that. I made a fair statement, taking the same grade of officials in St. John and Halifax where the cost of living is no higher than at Charlottetown. I find that while the first landing waiter in both these places get $1,000, in Charlottetown he only gets $600. I submit that a man in the position of chief clerk or landing waiter ought to get the same pay in Prince Edward Island as elsewhere.

Mr. BOWELL. Halifax is an open port for the whole year, while Charlottetown is closed during the winter.

Mr. DAVIES. Still the Charlottetown clerks have to be at their desks the same hours through the year, and are not permitted to engage in any other business. I am sorry my hon. colleague is not in his place if it is to him the hon. Minister referred as having said he would prefer $800 in Charlottetown to $1,200 in St. John. There is not another man in Prince Edward Island who would take his views, as the cost of living is the same, and the character of the work as onerous, if not quite so heavy.

Mr. HACKETT. I have waited on the hon. Minister frequently with the view to having the salaries of officials raised, and always found that when a good case was made out, that the hon. gentleman was ready to do the fair thing. I agree with the remarks of the hon. member for Queen's, that the salaries are not as high as they should be in Prince Edward Island; and I think that when Prince Edward Island entered Confederation, justice was not done the officials, or they would have been placed on an equal footing with those of the other Provinces. For that we have to blame the friends of the hon. gentleman who fixed their salaries. The Island came into the Union when his friends were in power.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The Island came into the Union when the other side were in power.

Mr. HACKETT. But the hon. gentleman fixed the salaries of the officials and cleaned out every official who was a Conservative. I may say that some of those officers held their commissions from the Dominion, and still the hon. gentleman had no regard to that, and dismissed them. With regard to the chief clerk in the Charlottetown office, I believe that gentleman ought to have an increase of salary. A vacancy occurred a short time ago through the death of the chief clerk, and the gentleman now in office was appointed to take his place, and I consider that in all justice and fair play he should receive the same salary as his predecessor. I hope the hon. Minister will readjust the salary and place him at the same amount that was formerly given. I would also say, with regard to the collector at Alberton, that he is a very efficient officer, and attends faithfully to his duties the whole year round. He cannot engage in any other business, but he only receives $250. I think the hon. Minister did give a small increase not long ago, but that officer should receive a higher salary as well as the officer at Port Hill. I think, as a general principle, the Government ought to pay its civil officers such salaries as will enable them to live without being obliged to engage in any other business.

Mr. DAVIES. I am not going to make any complaint about the dismissals that have been spoken of. My opinion is that the hon. member for East York did not dismiss enough officers when he came in. I do not care under what Government these salaries were fixed; the question is, whether these salaries are just in themselves at the present time. The reason they were fixed so low was this: When Prince Edward Island entered the Confederation, the cost of living there was cheaper than in any other Province, and a man could then live on $1,000 a year, while it would be impossible for him to do so now. I say the hon. Minister has unjustly discriminated in the way he has fixed the salaries in Prince Edward Island as compared with the other Provinces. I trust he will consider, not only the salaries I have mentioned, but those in King's and Queen's counties also.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Under this item I observe $15,000 to meet expenditure in connection with the Board of Customs and outside detective service, including $800 salary of the Commissioner of Customs as chairman of the Board. Is the Chief Commissioner to be paid this $800 the current year by the same rate?

Mr. BOWELL. He is paid out of this $15,000 as chairman of that Board, and this is the third year that he has been so paid.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I do not complain about the amount, for I have not considered it; but would it not be better if the Commissioner was to receive $300 more on his salary as an officer of the Customs Department, and make it $1,000? This is practically evading the question of salary in the office he holds and charging $800 to an outside service. He is really getting $1,000 a year, while his salary is apparently only $3,200.

Mr. BOWELL. That is true, but it will scarcely bear the designation of evasion. The sum is in the Public Accounts, and was last year, so that any member of the House could see what it was proposed to pay the Commissioner of Customs as chairman of the Board. I am sure my hon. friend knows that in connection with that Board this gentleman has a great deal of additional labor imposed upon him. Sometimes he is engaged till 8 or 9 o'clock in the evening, and as at the same time he fulfils all the duties of his Department, he deserves extra compensation. I am not prepared to say, however, that the suggestion made by my hon. friend would not be the best; and as the Civil Service Act provides for granting the salaries of the deputies in proportion to the labor they perform, the suggestion deserves the serious consideration of the Government.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I am glad the hon. gentleman thinks so, because I think it is an evil practice, and it has existed to some extent both under the late Government and the present one, though, I think, we put an end to it in some cases. I see several instances, in the Supplementary Estimates just laid before us, of extra payments made for special services to officers of the Departments. That is not a right method of making payments. If they deserve more salary for special services let them be paid that in the regular way, and let it be charged to the Department properly, and not to the outside service.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. My hon. friend has laid down the correct principle, that as a general rule a civil officer should be paid a salary in any particular Department which covers all his services. However, that rule cannot always be applied. The Deputy Minister of Customs acts as chairman of this Board and as long as this Board is continued he will act as chairman and get an additional salary; but if that Board be dissolved he returns to his salary of $3,200.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

168. Salaries and disbursements of fishery overseers and wardens..... $110,100.00

Mr. BLAKE. With respect to the vote for Ontario, I should like some little information. I observe there is a slight increase here. The experiment of propagating salmon in Lake Ontario has, I understand, been given up. What kind of fish are now intended to be propagated at the fish hatcheries?

Mr. BOWELL. The additional amount of $1,000 is acquired for the readjustment of the salaries of the present officers, and provides for the appointment of a new officer, as well as to meet the increased cost of experiments. The fish breeding in Ontario is confined, I am informed, to salmon trout and whitefish.

Mr. BLAKE. Some suggestion was made, either in a report or elsewhere, in regard to propagating some coarser kinds of fish, such as carp, and that this fish would take the place of salmon. I was not aware that salmon trout was being propagated, and it was the true salmon to which I referred. Has any attempt been made to introduce carp?

Mr. BOWELL. Experiments are now being carried out, but the officers are not in a position to say whether they will be successful or not.

Mr. McISAAC. I see an item of $25,000 for fish breeding, fish-ways and oyster beds. I should like to ascertain what proportion of this vote is expended on the construction of fish-ways, and whether it is expended on building fish-ways or not?

Mr. BOWELL. It is expended partly in building fish-ways. In many cases the parties interested in the different localities contribute a certain amount, or the Government can insist upon their bearing the whole expense where they desire any improved ways, but when the work is considered to be in the general interest of the public the Department appropriates a certain amount to assist in the construction of those ways.

Mr. McISAAC. I wish to bring to the notice of the acting Minister a fish-way on the River St. Marys, in the county of Guysborough, Nova Scotia. I have brought it to the notice of the head of the Department on several occasions, and have laid before him the condition in which it is, and he has promised to see that it shall be so improved as to carry out the object of the law. This is one of the most important fishing rivers in Nova Scotia, and on the Antigonish branch of it there is a mill dam, about five miles from Lake Lochaber, which is five miles long and one wide. It is about twenty-five miles from the mouth of the river, which is navigable for about eight miles. There is only one mill dam in the whole distance to this lake. The fish-way in the dam perhaps fulfils the law because the law may be complied with by a certain model or pattern of fish-way, which as in the present case may be entirely insufficient to carry out the object of the law. The dam is impassible, and, therefore, since its erection no fish have entered the lake, salmon particularly. Before the erection of the dam this lake was, perhaps, the best spawning ground in the whole Province, not only salmon but a variety of fish resorting to it. Since the construction of the dam, however, the river has been deserted by fish. I do not find fault with the Government in this matter, but I believe a subordinate of the Department is to blame, to some extent, for the manner in which this fish-way has been attended to. I find in the report of the Fishery Inspector, Mr. Rogers, an extract from the report made to him in 1881, by the local overseer, who says:

"The fish-ways are in good order as is evident from the number of fish seen ascending them when there is sufficient water."

This is not true, I am myself in a position to say that it is not true. They are not in good order at this dam, the fish-way is altogether impassible, and, as far as I know, there are only two fish-ways in the whole district over which this overseer has jurisdiction. If the Department had not interfered before now, although the matter was frequently brought to their notice, I hope that the acting Minister, in the absence of the Head of the Department, will see that a proper fish-way will be erected in a very short time. I pressed this on the hon. Minister early this Session, and urged that he should send the Provincial Inspector to see the locality, when he would be able to see the exact condition of this fish-way, and have a proper one placed there at the opening of navigation. At this very time salmon and gasperaux and other fish would, had this been done, have frequented it in great abundance and run up along the river and to the lake. I hope this will be attended to at once. I believe, from what I hear from experienced persons, that too much money is expended on artificial fish-breeding compared with the benefits that result from it. This money would be far better expended in keeping open the routes to the natural spawning grounds, such as the best lakes in the different Provinces, and that can only be done by having proper fish-ways placed in the dams. In most places where hatcheries and artificial modes of fish culture are used, this entails very great expense, and are found not so productive of good as would be the case if the same amount of money were applied in making the natural spawning grounds accessible to the fish which are in the habit of resorting to them. I trust that this matter will receive attention.

Mr. FORBES. I see that the grant here is increased by $1,000, and I would like to know how it is to be expended. Whatever is the cause for this increase, I am glad to see it; I only wish it were more; but at the same time I do not know where it is to be applied, as the expenditure in our section for these objects has of late years been cut down. The objects in view are very important, but at the same time I do not think that they meet the ends for which they are intended, because although we might have lots of salmon and other fish there, they are gradually decreasing in numbers all the time. Under the circumstances, I would like some investigation made as to the facilities afforded to enable the fish to reach their spawning grounds. I coincide with my hon. friend in the opinion that the fish-ways do not answer the purpose. The better way would be to permit the fish to ascend the river to the great spawning grounds in a natural way. Some years ago, for instance, a dam gave way, opening the river straight up to the lakes, and the result the next year, and for several years afterwards, was that we had a large increase in the number of the fish. Large quantities of gaspereaux and salmon were then caught. I believe, myself, that the fish ladders do not answer their purpose. Some fish by these means may get over the dams now and then, but, as a rule, the fish are almost entirely destroyed. During something like a month or two months in the year the water comes over the top of the dam with such force and violence that some salmon jump over and get up as far as the lakes, but I have no faith in them whatever. I once thought that they were useful, but during the last three or four years, since I have been there, I have paid particular attention to them, and my own conviction is that these ladders do not accomplish their object. They are not at all efficient. The large amount of $35,000 is to be expended this year, in opening up fisheries, erecting fish ladders and improving oyster beds, and it seems to me that while we have been now for a long time placing these ladders in dams, we ought to be getting some benefit from these exertions; and if we are going to spend so much more money, with no better results, we had better use the money for something else—for instance, in opening the dams in such a way that the fish can go straight up through or under the dams in a natural manner. No more water would be thus lost than is the case in the fish ladders, and the benefits would be greater. It has been proposed by those interested in these matters, and by the officials of the county, that a fish-breeding establishment should be established on this river, as being one of the best places for fish culture in Nova Scotia. There would be very large reservoirs for the fish, large lakes and capital breeding grounds. In years gone by vessels came there and were loaded with salmon and alewives, but now we can hardly get any of these fish for ourselves. The other day several salmon were taken there, and the Indians got for them 50 cts. a pound; and we could just as well encourage fish-breeding and have any quantity of salmon and alewives. I would be greatly pleased if the Government would turn their attention to the location at this point of a fish-breeding establishment. Fish can be got there in abundance. They need not be imported from Halifax and other places. The eggs and the salmon could be plentifully obtained on the spot, and it would be the easiest and best place for raising and breeding salmon in the Province. I would be very sorry to see the project dropped. Indeed, I thought that this establishment would have been in operation long ago.

Mr. MITCHELL. Allow me to say a word about this fish-breeding business for which I assume the responsibility. I will only say that so far as regards Ontario the fish-breeding establishment in Lake Ontario for the production of salmon was always looked upon as an experiment. Indeed, it is a matter of doubt among scientific men whether the salmon which were caught in Lake Ontario ever went to the sea, and after some years of experience, though it has not proved as successful as we had hoped it would prove—the money which was expended upon it has not been entirely thrown away. In regard to the fish-breeding establishments upon the rivers which flow into the Atlantic, and those in the vicinity of the Atlantic, no one can say that they are a failure. I have watched them with considerable interest, and as Minister of Marine I took considerable interest in the encouragement of the example which was set in other countries for the purpose of producing these fish in this country, which is perhaps as well adapted to fish-breeding as any other country in the world. The experiments which we have made I do not at all look upon as failures; on the contrary, where partial failures have occurred they have been due, I believe, to the want of experience on the part of the persons who are in charge of them. It is true that we have not scientists to take charge of these establishments. We had to create the men and teach them their business—in fact it was necessary that these men should learn by practical experience before they could successfully conduct such experiments. Taking the establishments altogether their success has been such as to warrant the Department in continuing what I believe to be a good work. My hon. friend from Antigonish (Mr. McIsaac) has stated that he believed that it would be very desirable, instead of spending the money on these fish-breeding establishments, to spend it in encouraging the protection of the fisheries in other ways. I do not know how my hon. friend would propose to encourage the protection of the fisheries. The records of the Department show that since 1867 very great efforts have been made to protect the fish by seeing that they were not speared at improper seasons, and that the close season was observed as well as possible, considering the extent and character of the fisheries of the Dominion; and the officers of the Department had to assume grave and serious responsibility, and to perform very unpleasant duties in their protecting the fisheries. We all know how the feelings of the people are aroused when they are not permitted to catch fish from the banks of rivers which pass through their property for the purpose of using them as food or selling them on the market to make a little money. I say, after some considerable experience, that in my opinion the fishery officers deserve the moral support of the community, and instead of being found fault with, as they often are, they should receive a great deal of credit for the manner in which they perform their responsible duties. The hon. gentleman suggests that some means should be taken whereby the rivers should be kept free from obstructions, so that the fish could pass up. That is one of the serious questions which the Department has always had to deal with. It becomes a question whether we would not entirely prevent facilities for the prosecution of manufactories by the use of natural water power from one end of the Dominion to the other. The lumbering business is just as essential to the prosperity of this country relatively, at all events, as the fisheries, and it would be very likely to create difficulty and trouble to the Government of any country if we were to say that we were to allow no dams to be placed across rivers which are the natural breeding places of fish. We cannot in this country do away with the local laws which give corporations and individuals power to place obstructions across rivers which are not navigable in the sense designed by the line of demarcation between the power of the Local and the Dominion Governments. When this Department was called into existence in 1867, we found those obstructions existing which would prevent the rise of fish from the sea to their proper breeding places. We could not sweep away those obstructions and have the streams in the condition they were in a century before, but we adopted a mean between the two extremes of sweeping them off altogether, and leaving them as they were—we adopted such means as experience had proved to be successful in older countries. We endeavored to secure the most improved description of fish-ways, and we also interested the mill owners by allowing them a certain proportion—one-third or one-half, I think, of the cost of putting in these fish-ways on an improved pattern which would be approved by the Department. So far as my experience is concerned, the efforts which were made to carry out that policy were at least comparatively successful in this country. I have no doubt that the complaints of my hon. friend from Antigonish may be explained by the fact that the most improved kind of fish-ways have not been adopted, and I know how difficult it is to get a proprietor who goes to an outlay of perhaps $400, or $500, or $1,000, in putting up a fish-way, to make any alteration or improvement. I have no doubt, however, that the attention of the Government having been called to the matter by my hon. friend, it will receive such consideration as will result in the removal of the difficulties which he has stated. It is often said in the counties along the Atlantic coast in which I have been in the habit of travelling, that they do not catch so many salmon as in the old times; but I had the pleasure of being in my own constituency last summer, when I saw 300 taken out of one net in one morning. I asked one of the largest salmon fishermen in my county whether he thought these fish-breeding establishments had or had not benefited the fishery interests of the country. He said: "It is true many people complain that we do not catch as many fish, because there are three times the number of net fishermen that there used to be; they have found the business a profitable one, and instead of having to sell their fish at 2½ cts. to 5 cts. a lb., as was the case for years and years until the Intercolonial Railway gave to our fishermen the markets of New York and Boston, they now get from 25 cts. to 50 cts. a lb." My belief is, and I have great pleasure in stating it, that the fish are as abundant as ever in the second river of the Province from which I come, the river that runs through my county; and looking at the great number of nets, and at the increased number of people who are employed, I think the salmon business is more profitable to the people who pursue it to-day than it was twenty years ago, and I believe quite as many fish are caught to-day as were caught ten years ago, before these fish-breeding establishments were adopted. The whole system of marketing salmon, the great fish of commerce in our country, has very much changed. The immense freezing establishments which have been put up enable the people to freeze their fish for months in a fresh state, so that, instead of being obliged to salt them down and sell them for from $10 to $15 a barrel, they are able to market them fresh, not only from May to July, the time during which the salmon are chiefly caught, but all the way up to February, March and April. If you go into the fish market of Boston, New York, or even Montreal, you will find these fresh fish bringing from 25 cts. to 50 cts. a lb., instead of from 2½ cts. to 5 cts. a lb., which these people had to accept when they were obliged to salt them down. The people engaged in the fishing industry have reason to be thankful for all the protection given to them during the past fifteen years. The Government of Canada—I am not speaking of either party in particular—have faithfully carried out the policy initiated in 1867, of giving a reasonable protection to the fishing interests of this country, with due regard to the expenditure. The Parliament of Canada, by the construction of the Intercolonial Railway, have given a means of marketing our fish, and with the additional railway facilities which are now being created, I have no doubt that the industry will be largely extended in the future. I am very glad to have had the opportunity of making these few remarks, and I trust that the hon. Minister will not feel that I am trenching upon his Department in speaking as I have done, because I feel myself somewhat responsible for the bringing about of these changes.

Mr. KIRK. I do not know whether the results obtained from this large expenditure in fish-breeding establishments have been satisfactory or not. I think, however, that it is a reasonable expenditure; it has been successful in other countries, and I think it is the only way in which rivers which have been entirely fished out can be restocked with salmon and other fish. But I believe that it would be better to protect those rivers in which the salmon are not entirely destroyed; that would be the cheapest way of increasing the supply. My hon. friend from Antigonish (Mr. McIsaac) has spoken of the River St. Mary's in my county, and of one or two dams being on that river, with fish-ways constructed through them. The dams are not on the river itself, but on streams flowing into it. The dam on the Antigonish branch, in which he is most particularly interested, was constructed many years ago, and before there was a fish-way erected in it the salmon were entirely destroyed in that stream. Salmon were known to go up that stream before the fish-ways were erected, and the fish-ways are of such peculiar construction that I venture to say that no salmon will go up them. I suppose they are the same kind of fish-ways that are constructed in other parts of the country. I believe, however, that gaspereaux and trout may go up, if the fish-ways are properly protected. There is no one there who has any authority to see that they are kept open, and it is not likely that mill-owners will be anxious to keep the gates up to allow the water to run. I think it would be well for the Government to appoint some one near the dam whose duty it would be to see that the fish-ways are kept open in the proper season of the year. There are dams on other streams running into the St. Mary's River quite as important as this one. There is one, for instance, a short distance from where I live, in which there is a fish-way, but it is kept in such a state that no fish can go up, unless at the time of the freshets, and these freshets occur when there are no fish in the stream. The difficulty in this place is, however, that the Government officer there is the proper owner of the mill. There is also another dam in sight of my own door which is in such a condition that it is impossible for the fish to ascend it at all. This stream was one of the best for gaspereaux and trout we have in the whole district, but since the dam has been built, or at least since ten years after it was built, not a man has gone to that stream to catch fish of any kind. They have been completely destroyed in consequence of the fish-way not being properly kept. There is another stream I may say a word about—the Stornoway—where there has never been a fish-way at the dam. I believe this used to be a very important stream for catching gaspereaux and trout, but now it is entirely destroyed. It is necessary a fish-way should be erected at this dam that people may have an opportunity to catch a supply of fresh fish during the spring. I believe, with regard to these two dams, that the owners are the Government officers, and consequently they will not look after them. So far, at any rate, they have never done so. The St. Mary has two branches, west and east. On the east branch there is a dam, and I believe a fish-way there is useless also. There is a dam on the west branch where there is no mill; it is built for lumbering purposes. That dam has a proper gate, which, if kept open in the proper season, is all that is required. I am told that it is not, and that it requires to be looked after. I wrote to the Department some time ago stating that the fish warden had left the district, and there was a distance of twenty-five miles without any warden. I asked the Department to appoint some one to see that the fish were protected, and if the Government has not complied with my request it is important that they should. With regard to the laws, I think they are quite stringent enough, and if properly enforced are quite sufficient to protect the fish; but I do not think they are properly enforced, as far as my county is concerned, and I think the Department should see that the local officers do their duty. A number of alterations have been made in the fishery wardens, I fear for political purposes, and to one I wish to draw particular attention—that is at the still water near the forks of the St. Mary, a most important section of the river where the people are poaching, seining, and spearing continually. When the late Government were in power, I succeeded in inducing them to appoint a very efficient officer in that district, and he succeeded in breaking up the poaching altogether; but the present Government dismissed him and appointed in his place an old man who would not venture for his whole salary to go through the district one single night lest these poachers might get hold of him. I do not say this thing was done for political purposes, perhaps it was done in the interest of the fishery, but nevertheless it was done, and the Government should look into it. There are other similar cases, but I will not refer to them, except to say that every fish warden appointed by the late Government during the five years they were in power, in the district of St. Mary, were dismissed and others put in their place, with one exception, and I am sure they did not improve the breed.

Mr. CHARLTON. I beg to call the attention of the acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries to a letter I received from a gentleman at Lake Erie who is, I believe, an authority on matters of this kind. I had written to this gentleman after having received a letter from Mr. Wilmot, offering to distribute a certain amount of white fish and salmon which should be put into Long Point Bay, Lake Erie, and he writes to me evidently much discouraged with the operation of pound net fishing, and says he hardly thinks it worth while to take any fish from the hatchery owing to the destruction of fish by this means. He writes as follows:—

"I am informed by reliable fishermen that for every marketable fish taken in these nets, there are destroyed from 25 to 100 or more of the smaller fish which have become fastened in the meshes of the nets and there remain until decomposed when they fall to the bottom of the Lake covering it frequently to the depth of several inches all over the fishing grounds. So long as such wholesale destruction of young fish is permitted by the hon. Minister of Fisheries there can be no earthly use in going to the expense and trouble of placing other fish here to be likewise destroyed. I am informed that the New York, Pennsylvania, and, perhaps the Ohio State Legislatures have prohibited pound net fishing in consequence of the great destruction of small fish, and have made it a punishable offence to offer for sale, any fish so taken, no matter from whence they come, as they are frequently unfit for food from long confinement in these nets, &c., &c. If you can do anything in the way of abolishing 'pound net fishing' you will confer a great blessing upon the poor fishermen along the Canadian shore of Lake Erie, whose occupation is being so rapidly destroyed. If you can persuade the Governor in Council to abolish pound net fishing you will have done more in the interests of the fisherman than all the hatcheries in the Dominion. The fisherman along our Lake shore are completely discouraged and in many instances reduced to a state of destitution by this destructive system of fishing, which is depriving them of a legitimate occupation.

"Yours respectfully,

"J. M. SALMON."

This is a letter from J. M. Salmon, M. D., of Simcoe, a gentleman of high respectability, and it is a matter which may well engage the Department of Marine and Fisheries. I am aware, from my own knowledge, that it is a very destructive mode of fishing. In proportion to the quantity of marketable fish taken, a very large amount of small fish are destroyed.

Mr. DAWSON. I am very happy to think that the fish hatcheries have been so successful. The hon. gentlemen who have spoken refer principally to the sea coast, but we have lake fisheries also, and I am happy to say that the system pursued there has also been successful. In some cases they reserve fishing grounds, and these are frequently just as good as fish hatcheries, and the result is that when a certain space of ground is reserved, and no fishing whatever allowed in it, the fish breed very fast and spread to the surrounding sections. Now, an instance of this has occurred at Lake Superior, where a large island has been reserved, and the fish have increased so rapidly at that place, where they are not molested, that the surrounding bays for a considerable distance are again becoming stocked with fish. Now, that is a clear instance of the advantage of having reserves where fish are not allowed to be caught. I quite concur with the hon. gentleman who has spoken last about these pound nets. Pound nets are infernal machines, as it were, to the fish, and are very destructive indeed. They have been used on the American side of the waters to such an extent as almost to annihilate the fish in the lakes, and I really hope that they will not be encouraged on our side. They have not been tried to any very great extent on our side, and I hope the Department of Fisheries will keep them out. I am happy to say that I consider this Fishery Department, so far as regards our inland lakes and the waters with which I am acquainted, an exceedingly well arranged Department of Government.

Mr. DAVIES. I may say that I am in full sympathy with all the efforts made by the Department for the establishment of fish hatcheries throughout the Dominion, and for the improvement of the fisheries. But I think that as regards those in Prince Edward Island it is yet too early to say what the results may be. I think the money expended in that direction will produce good results in the near future. I have been at the hatchery a good many times since it was established, and although we cannot say yet that it has improved the catch of fish in the river, the general opinion of those who have fished there very often is that it is improving the stream. But I wish to call the attention of the acting Minister to a statement made by my hon. friend from Guysborough (Mr. Kirk). Theoretically the system adopted is capital, but practically it does not work well, because too much politics are imported into it. The men appointed as guardians of the rivers do not do their duty. There is no use disguising the fact. It is well known and openly talked of. These men receive their pay, but do not attempt to protect the fisheries as they should do. But I rose specially to ask the acting Minister whether the statement of the hon. member for Northumberland, with reference to the establishment of fisheries, is correct? I understood him to say the Department were prepared to pay half the cost. That has not been acted upon in Prince Edward Island, but if it is so I am glad to hear it. I have a number of letters from parties who have been applied to by the Government who has charge of the fisheries of the Island, asking them to establish these fish-ways, and stating that they should do it at their own expense. They demurred to that, and I think it is rather hard. Some of them have been on the river forty years, and they think it is hard to be obliged to build those fish-ways at their own expense. I would also like to ask the acting Minister with reference to the great oyster beds. There is no more important industry in Prince Edward Island than the cultivation of oysters. We have the reputation of exporting the best oysters in the Dominion, yet our beds are becoming rapidly depleted from want of looking after. I am not aware that any steps have been taken by the Department so far for the protection of this particular branch of the fisheries, or for providing the manner in which oysters should be fished. I would like to know whether, with this $35,000 he has asked for, he contemplates the establishment of oyster beds in any part of the Dominion. I know very well that the late Judge Pope of Prince Edward Island, at his own expense, established some oyster beds in Prince county, where the best oysters are grown. Financially it was not a success, but he produced some magnificent oysters, some of the best ever exported. I would like to know whether the Government contemplate taking any steps towards planting these oyster beds. It would astonish hon. members were I to give them the figures showing the quantity of oysters exported from Prince Edward Island from year to year. I am sorry to say that while the figures are very large, the beds are now being depleted and destroyed; and I for one would cordially endorse any regulations issued by the Department for the purpose of protecting these beds or of planting new ones.

Mr. BRECKEN. I cannot agree with my hon. colleague in his statement that the reason why the fish hatcheries in Prince Edward Island have not been more successful, is because too much politics are imported into them. Now, I happen to know something about the appointment of the fishery wardens, and I am not aware that those gentlemen who were appointed by the present Government are at all open to that imputation. My hon. friend will agree with me when I state that when his friends were in power they never would look at an applicant for any office or position if the applicant happened to belong to the Conservative party. Why, Sir, a man would have been looked upon by the Liberals of Prince Edward Island as fit for a lunatic asylum if he attempted anything of the kind. I may state the only charge that is brought against the Conservative party of Prince Edward Island, is, that they do not follow our Liberal friends in that respect; they are a little too good natured, and sometimes they do allow a Liberal to get into office under the Administration of the present Government—a political sin that my hon. friend and his party in Prince Edward Island were never guilty of. I was not in the House this afternoon when my hon. friend expressed his regret that the slaughter which took place among the Liberal-Conservatives in 1878 was not more extensive than it was. I think that my hon. colleague has been guilty of the sin of ingratitude. If he would look back and remember the officials who were retained in office and whose salaries were increased under the Administration of the Liberal Conservative party, I think he would feel himself guilty of the sin of ingratitude. I am glad to say there is one point on which we can agree, and that is, to express the hope that the Department of Marine and Fisheries will see their way to do something to protect and develop the oyster fisheries of the Island. I do not suppose in any part of the world a better quality of oyster can be found than in our Province. In the early history of the Island it was surrounded with oyster beds, but owing to the want of protection and cultivation they have been destroyed. A great enemy of the oyster is the mussel. Mussel mud destroys the oyster, and that mussel mud which we use now, which is dug up during the winter months, and is a very valuable manure, is nothing more nor less than old oyster beds. In Prince county there are still good oyster beds, as my colleague has stated; the late Judge Pope and the late hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries having devoted a good deal of time and money in establishing an oyster plantation, and with some success. But both of those hon. gentlemen had a variety of other occupations, and were not able to devote that time and attention to the matter which the value of the interest would no doubt command from others. The exportation of oysters is very large; and yet with the exception of the oyster plantation which was first started, as I have said, by Judge Pope, in Cascumpec Narrows, there is no place where they have been protected and cultivated. The increase of oysters is something miraculous, if they receive a moderate amount of protection. No shell-fish propagates more numerous than the oyster, and the oyster fisheries are much more valuable than any inland fisheries, even the salmon fishery—of course, I do not allude to seal fisheries. I am very glad my hon. colleague has referred to this matter, and I am sure if the Government and the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and the present acting hon. Minister, were well acquainted with the wealth which that fishery brings to the Island, they would consider it well worth their attention, protection and encouragement, not only to preserve but to increase that fishery. The fame of Prince Edward Island oysters has reached this city, and in no part of the Dominion where an Island oyster can be obtained do connoisseurs care for the oysters from the United States or any other country. I hope the hon. Minister will devote attention to this subject. I can assure him that a very small amount of money expended, and it will not take much, will be productive of great results. Richmond Bay, Cascumpec Narrows and that locality afford good oyster beds. I have spent some days at Judge Pope's plantation, and saw Indians bringing oysters there and disposing of them at $1 per barrel, of two and a-half bushels. That part of the Island is peculiarly adapted to oyster culture. The fish require a hard bottom, and it is advisable to have rocks or brush to which spawn may cling. If every spawn were allowed to live and grow they would block up the harbors in a very short time, but the oyster has many enemies and fish feed on them. The cost involved in dealing with this question would be very small and the benefit very great, and the result would be not only to confer advantage on the Government, but to add a source of great wealth to the people of the Island who live in the vicinity of the oyster beds.

Mr. McNEILL. I desire to ask the acting Minister what is being done in the way of hatching fish, what quantity of the young fish has been distributed, and in what localities? I desire to impress on the Government the advisability of instructing the Fish Inspectors to look carefully after fish-ways. That is a most important matter in connection with the fisheries. It is a matter surrounded with great difficulty, but it is one to which I hope the Government will turn their attention, and also the advisability of instructing the Inspectors to prevent, in every possible way, the destruction of fishing streams by sawdust. No doubt one cause of the enormous destruction of fish is the amount of sawdust poured into the streams, which are thereby poisoned.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne). I observe that over $16,000 are paid for the maintenance of fish works in Nova Scotia. I do not intend to find fault with the present Government in regard to this matter, because the late Government are responsible for the condition of the river fisheries in Nova Scotia; but that expenditure, as now going on by the Marine and Fisheries Department, is a perfect waste of public money. The river fisheries of Nova Scotia are in a most deplorable condition. It is true they have an Inspector of river fisheries, and officers in every county of the Province, but the money expended under that head is simply thrown away. There is not a river on the south side of the Province where fish are able to find their way to the interior of the country in any great quantity. The present Inspector of river fisheries has given some attention to the erection of fish ladders on those rivers; but in many instances the fish have been unable to get up them. There is no more important industry in Nova Scotia than the river fisheries, and on its protection and development depend, not only the river fisheries, but the shore fisheries as well. I desire to obtain some information in regard to this item of $16,000. I desire to draw the attention of the hon. Minister to the fact that there was paid last year $1,400 to Mr. Rogers, who was also paid $1,264 for travelling expenses. An officer receiving that amount should do a great deal of work, and we should be able to see some benefit accruing from his travelling all over the Province inspecting the rivers. I also find there was a salary paid to F. D. H. Vieth, as Inspector. I wish to know who this last gentleman is, what his duties were, and something about him? I cannot understand why the Government, besides wasting $16,000 in the way it has done, have appointed two Inspectors of river fisheries for the Province of Nova Scotia, and I would like the acting Minister to give some information on that point.

Mr. BOWELL. He was appointed to assist the other officer in looking after the river fisheries and in endeavoring to enforce the laws.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne). Do I understand that this officer was appointed because the other officer was incapable of enforcing the law?

Mr. BOWELL. I did not say that. Because there are thirty-five fishery overseers in Guysborough, it does not follow that every one of them is incapable of performing his duties.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Not by any means. That is a different thing.

Mr. BOWELL. It sometimes may occur that an Inspector has more than he can possibly do; and he may have a very large number of officers to assist him in enforcing the law.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne). Has this officer made any reports to the Department?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes; he has made the usual reports.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Why are they not printed, or laid on the Table of the House?

Mr. BOWELL. I am informed that the custom in the past has been to print only the regular reports of the Chief Inspectors unless they are specially asked for. If the hon. gentleman wishes the other reports, I will have very great pleasure in asking the Department to furnish them, and I will lay them on the Table.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I think it is of the utmost importance, as far as I can learn, that these reports should be laid on the Table when they come down, and I wish that the acting Minister would give some attention to them. Will they be laid on the Table before Concurrence?

Mr. BOWELL. Yes; if they can be prepared.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I will then postpone my further remarks until these reports are on the Table.

Mr. BAKER. I see in the vote for British Columbia an increase, I am happy to say, of about 30 per cent. as compared with last year, or $500; and I would like to know whether this is to go to increase the pay of the Inspector of Fisheries for the Province of British Columbia, because he is an officer of great ability. His whole time is taken up with the inspection of fisheries, which necessitates a very great amount of work that is daily extending, and for which he receives the very small sum of $50 a month. I would like—if this is not already down—that provision should be made in the Supplementary Estimates to give this officer a tangible increase to his salary, the necessity of which I beg to strongly urge on the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BOWELL. I am very much obliged to my hon. friend from Northumberland for relieving me of the duty of replying to some remarks which were made by my hon. friend from Antigonish. The hon. gentleman has treated that subject from the personal knowledge which he has himself, and from his long experience as Minister in this Department; hence I am relieved to a very great extent from further discussing that matter. My hon. friend complained of one of the fish-ways in St. Mary's River as not accomplishing the object for which it was constructed; but I am informed that this fish-way is not of the improved character which is now insisted on by the Department—an improvement which, I believe, is patented. This dam may not be of the character which it should be. I believe, that there are two mills on the stream; and if the mill owners have not complied with the law, as they should have done, the Department will see that this great interest is protected in that river. The Department has not lost sight of the difficulties which have arisen, and which have been pointed out by the hon. member for the county, for they have already instructed the Inspectors to make a special report on the subject, so far as it affects the immediate locality to which the hon. gentleman refers. I am informed by the Commissioner that this report has not yet been received; but I think I can safely promise the hon. gentleman, that as soon as the errors to which he has called attention have been pointed out by the Inspector, steps will be taken to remedy these difficulties. The question of fish-ways is one, I know, upon which there is great diversity of opinion. The hon. member for Northumberland has, however, fully dealt with that subject, and I will not dwell upon it. I am also informed that as to the Liverpool River, to which my hon. friend from Queen's (N. S.) referred, the information they have in the Department is, that there are a greater quantity of fish, both of gasporeaux and salmon, now caught in that river, than has been the case for a great number of years, and that they are increasing in number; also that the most important and best fish-ways in the country are in that river. It may be possible, owing to the reasons given by the hon. member for Northumberland, that complaints may arise from the fact of there now being such a greater number of fishermen, than was the case in the past; and every one of them cannot obtain the same quantity as formerly, when there may not have been so many fish and not one-tenth of the number of fishermen. The increase of $1,000 in this service is required to pay salaries and the disbursements of additional fishery overseers and wardens which it may be found necessary to employ in accordance with growing requirements. If the hon. member for Queen's will refer to page 241 of the Report for 1882, he will find that a full detail of the salaries of the fishery overseers and wardens of Nova Scotia is given. My hon. friend from Guysborough called attention to the absolute necessity of protecting the rivers, and particularly those in his own county, and complained that these officers did not do their duty. I have no doubt that there is a very extensive coast, and perhaps the inland waters may be much more extensive than I have any idea of; but I find in the report that no less than twenty-five fishery overseers are employed in that county. I am not sure how many wardens there are on the two branches of St. Mary's River, but I think there are some three or four. I know that in the whole county from the statement I have before me, there are no less than twenty-five officers, and they ought to be efficient, because the head of the list commences with a Tory. It is a fact, and no one knows it better than the hon. member for Guysborough (Mr. Kirk), that it is difficult to protect rivers, and especially the mouths of rivers, from the depredations of those who are constantly poaching at seasons of the year when they should not poach. I have no doubt that he knows also that parties even in this particular river have been arrested, and tried and punished for taking fish at improper times. I quite agree with him that if these officers, and particularly the Inspectors, are to be of any use they should instruct the overseers to carry out the law rigidly. But everyone knows, and especially hon. members of Parliament, the difficulty of enforcing laws of this kind in almost any locality. The moment that anyone violates the law influences are used to get them clear, and I have no doubt that some of the twenty-five cases mentioned by the hon. gentleman were of that description. I notice, at any rate, that one of these men bears the same name as the hon. gentleman opposite, and I am quite sure that anyone bearing that name cannot possibly be a useless officer. The hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) called attention to the destruction of fish on Lake Erie by the use of pound nets. I believe the Department entertains much the same opinion about these nets as the hon. member for Algoma; but the difficulty which has arisen in connection with the use of these nets is the fact that the United States Government allow them to be used, and a great deal of discontent would be produced among our fishermen if we were to prohibit their use. However, the licenses contain clauses to prevent the destruction of these small fish, and if anyone is caught catching and destroying them in the manner described by the hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), his license is subject to be annulled. It is a question to which I have called the attention of the Commissioner, and he will take means in future, through the Fishery Inspector and overseer on Lake Erie, to prevent this destruction. As to the question put by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), regarding the assistance in the construction of fish-ways, the fact is that where the mill owner has complied with the requirements of the law, and it may be considered that the law is not sufficiently broad to enforce the placing of ways of a better character, or in case a freshet carries them away, then the Department assists in the rebuilding of these fish-ways. The law provides that a grant may be made to a certain class of ladders or fish-ways if they are considered to be of sufficient merit to justify the public grant. In such cases they are prepared, when applied to, to give at least one-half of the amount required to construct them, after an examination has been made by the Inspector.

Mr. DAVIES. My question had reference to mill owners who have had dams built for 30 or 40 years. I know of two cases, at least, in which the Inspector required them to build fish-ways. Has the mill-owner in such cases to bear the entire cost, or does the Department assume part of it?

Mr. BOWELL. The law has been in existence since Confederation, and it compels mill owners to construct those fish-ways, whether upon old dams or upon new ones. But in case increased facilities are required to enable the fish to ascend the rivers, and the Inspector reports that they are of sufficient importance that assistance should be given, then the assistance may be granted by the Department.

Mr. DAVIES. I also asked the hon. gentleman a question with regard to the $35,000 which he proposes to vote for oyster beds. Is any portion of that to be expended on the cultivation of oysters in Prince Edward Island?

Mr. BOWELL. The question of the cultivation of oysters is a subject to which the Department has given a great deal of consideration for many years. The system which is followed in the United States is to encourage private individuals to plant these oyster beds by giving them exclusive rights in certain places where the industry can be carried on successfully, and I believe that is the best mode which can possibly be adopted to encourage the industry in this country. Last year two licenses were granted to parties in British Columbia upon this plan, on the condition that when they begin to market the oysters they are to pay the Department 2½ per cent. royalty upon the gross proceeds of their sales. It is not the intention of the Department to plant any oyster beds themselves, but this vote is asked more particularly for the purpose of obtaining all possible information, scientific and otherwise, on this subject. The great difficulty in the past has been in obtaining the services of men who have studied the question, and whose knowledge of it is such as to justify their employment in the cultivation of oysters. I have no doubt that the Government and the Department, on mature consideration, will come to the conclusion to adopt the American system which has already been adopted to a limited extent in British Columbia, of granting an exclusive right to private individuals of sufficient means to carry on the enterprise to plant oyster beds in localities which are adapted to that purpose. I believe that that means will prove most successful in accomplishing the objects which the Department has in view. With regard to the oyster beds in Prince Edward Island, I have no doubt that any person of sufficient enterprise to carry on the industry successfully will get assistance. As to the vote for British Columbia the increase is for the purpose of providing for increases in the salaries and disbursements of the Inspector of Fisheries. There are two officers in British Columbia, an Inspector and an assistant, and the $600 increase is for the purpose of increasing their salaries. My hon. friend from North Bruce asked a question as to the extent of the fish-breeding, and the results that have followed from it. I may state for the information of the Committee that the total number of fry distributed during the spring of 1882, was 56,000,000; the total number of eggs laid down during the fall of the same year was 58,162,000, being an increase over the previous year of over 17,000,000. The only statement I have as to the distribution of the products of this spawn relates to the hatcheries at Newcastle and Sandwich, and shows that 3,200,000 young fish are to be placed in different parts of the country, more particularly in Ontario.

Mr. BOWELL.

Mr. DAVIES. I have not yet received the information I asked for? I wish to ask what portion of the $35,000 for fish breeding, fish-ways, and oyster beds, is to be applied to oyster beds and where it is to be spent. I understood from the hon. Minister that no part of it is to be spent in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. BOWELL. When I spoke, I spoke generally. I did not say that nothing was to be spent in Prince Edward Island or any other Province. What I did say was that I was not aware that any portion of that money was to be expended in the planting of oyster beds by the Government. I have given the hon. gentleman all the information that is in the Department with reference to that subject. The Commissioner of Fisheries, who has given the subject a great deal of attention, informs me that there is no intention, so far as he knows, on the part of the Government to plant these oyster beds; but they purpose obtaining further information from scientific and practical men, with the view of assisting private individuals in the planting of oyster beds, and a portion of this money will be utilized for that purpose; and I have no doubt that any enterprising gentleman in Prince Edward Island who asks the Government for assistance, will receive it in the same proportion as people in other parts of the Dominion. I can only regret, considering the importance of the cultivation of oysters, that the Government do not see their way clear just now to expending any large amount and taking the matter into their own hands.

Mr. BAKER. I wish the hon. Minister would more fully answer my question about the officer of whom I spoke, because if the whole amount of the increase for British Columbia were given to him, he would still be insufficiently paid. I would like to ask what proportion of the $600 is going to this particular officer?

Mr. BOWELL. I am not able to say; but I can assure him that the Department will do that justice to him which he deserves.

Mr. BAKER. I wish to urge the hon. gentleman at the head of that Department to take the matter into consideration, and to pay the officer in proportion to the services he renders.

Mr. VAIL. If I understood the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), he said that there was very grave doubt in his mind whether the Dominion had the power to compel owners of dams to erect fish-ways; but I understood the acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries to say that the Dominion has that power. It is important that this question should be decided, because if the ex-Minister of Marine and Fisheries makes one statement, and the acting Minister makes another, I think the people of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick are likely to take advantage of the statement of the ex-Minister, and say that they are not obliged to build the fish-ways. I would like also to know from the acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries what the results have been of planting these small fish in the rivers of the country? We have had hatcheries now for some four or five years. If I am correctly informed in regard to fish culture, in three years we ought to see salmon of a pretty good size. I would like to know whether these fish have been taken and in what river, so as to ascertain, if possible, where it has been a success and where not? It has cost a good deal of money, and it is time we should know a little more about the result.

Mr. MITCHELL. I simply rise to tell the hon. gentleman that he entirely misunderstood what I said. There was no doubt as to whether the Dominion or the Local Government had the right, but I referred to the erection of dams across non-navigable streams. I did not profess to give a legal opinion. I merely rise to set my hon. friend right, and I do not think any difference exists between the hon. Minister and myself.

Mr. DAVIES. I understood the hon. ex-Minister of Marine and Fisheries to say that when he was in charge of the Department it was customary in every case when a fish-way was required, for the Department to bear half the cost. The acting Minister says it is merely a matter in the discretion of the hon. Minister, and no doubt it will be allowed to friends and disallowed to others. If the statement of the ex-Minister is correct, the rule followed by him was a very good one, that whenever a new fish-way was required in an old dam, the Department bore half the expense. If, however, it is to be left to the discretion of the hon. Minister, very grievous wrongs would occur.

Mr. MITCHELL. What I said was, that, speaking from my recollection of some years ago, my impression was, that the Department allowed either one-half or one-third of the cost where a proper case was made out. I never meant to convey the idea that, as a matter of right, any person could get one-half the cost of putting a fish-way in the dam; but I will say, that whenever a case was made out during my administration of the office, in which parties could fairly claim they had a right to get aid in the putting up of fish-ways in dams, they invariably got it.

Mr. BOWELL. I did not understand the hon. member for Northumberland to say, that upon all occasions it was imperative on the part of the Government to give one-half, or even one-third the cost, but only when cases were made out that would justify the Department in doing so. When my hon. friend from Queen's states that he knows if it is left optional to the Government there will be gross wrongs perpetrated, insinuating that only a certain class of people will obtain assistance, I simply say to him that he should not judge others by himself. The mode of conducting a Government ought to be in the interests of the whole; and in the establishment of these fisheries, I can assure the hon. gentleman that, no matter who the party may be, wherever the river will justify the expenditure of any amount of money, to protect the fish, every attention will be given that river. We will not stop to argue, whether it is the hon. member for Queen's or any other gentleman, but the meed of justice will be dealt out to every one; and until the hon. gentleman is prepared to point out an instance in which this approval on the part of the Government has been abused, it will be time enough for him to throw out his insinuations and make the charge he has made. It was easy for a gentleman representing any particular locality, when he cannot have his particular views carried out, on all occasions to charge a Government with corruption and palpable wrong—whether this question be one that has anything to do with politics or not—simply for the reason that the person who made application belonged to one particular party. That is not the principle upon which this Government has administered affairs, and I am sure that the hon. gentleman who presides over this Department will never allow, as I would not, a feeling of that kind to interfere, when a great interest is at stake, and particularly so great an interest as that of the protection of our fisheries.

Mr. DAVIES. I do not wish to be understood as making a general charge. I only ask for information and wish to make no political capital or charge of any kind. I am very glad to have the assurance of the hon. gentleman that the administration of the Department will be carried out irrespective of politics. I wish to call attention to a particular fish-way in my county which was erected a year or two ago at a mill in Bonshaw, in which the owner of the mill had to bear all the expense. He was a strong supporter of my own, and I came to the conclusion that that probably was the reason why he received no assistance; but after the assurance of the hon. Minister, I have no doubt that an application from him, asking the Government to bear a portion of the cost, will be favorably considered.

Mr. BURNS. My observations will be directed, not so much to the matters which have already been discussed, as to the matter of the fishery bounty. As I understand, this bounty of $150,000 is provided by Statute, therefore, it is not necessary to vote it. The Committee will bear in mind that the value of the fisheries of the Dominion of Canada, as set forth in the Report of 1881, since which time they have largely increased, amount to the sum of $15,000,000.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. That item is not before the Committee.

Mr. BURNS. Then I shall have to go into the question of dams in that country. With reference to this question of dams I will simply say that, in my opinion, the Department should be very careful as to the construction of fish-ways. It is a patent fact to those who know anything of the subject that there are more fish destroyed in small streams on which dams have been erected and on which fish-ways have been constructed, than in any other rivers. As a rule dams are on small streams, and in passing over the dam the fish run great danger of being slaughtered by the settlers. In some cases these streams run through forests, and there it is difficult for the officers to exercise any care or watchfulness over them. I quite agree with the hon. member for Northumberland that fish culture has not been a failure. From what I can learn in my own neighborhood it is quite well known that these fish establishments have been productive of good. I think I am right in saying that in the Restigouche, on which there is a hatchery, the benefits which have been derived from that establishment have already been felt. The hon. member for Northumberland also made a statement as to the value of the salmon fisheries which I am called upon to refute, as it might carry a false impression to the Committee. I have no doubt that the hon. gentleman made that statement in good faith, but he did not go far enough and explain why salmon are now worth from 25 cts. to 50 cts. per lb., as against 2½ cts. to 5 cts. some time ago. The impression he conveyed to the House was that the salmon industry is a very profitable one. While it is true that, sometimes, this fish sell for 50 cts., yet the average price realized does not amount to 20 cts. per lb., and that 20 cts. does not go to the fisherman, but to the persons who buy from him, and who, at great expense of labor and material, cure that fish, after they have kept them for a length of time in what are called freezers. I think the price coming to the fishermen is from 8 cts. to 10 cts. per lb. Now, I desire to draw the attention of the acting Minister of Fisheries to the fact that the salmon fishermen are entitled to some consideration from the Government. While the deep sea fishermen derive considerable benefit from the appropriation, the salmon fishermen do not receive any benefit from it. It is true that they participate in the benefits that accrue from the Treaty of Washington in having the American market for their fish. I wish also to say to the hon. gentleman, that these fishermen are entitled to a reduction of the tax paid on their nets. I should be glad to see the tax abolished altogether, and if it cannot be abolished altogether, to see it reduced one-half. Those engaged in the coast fisheries are subjected to much greater risk and much greater loss than those engaged in the river fisheries. Now, Sir, I have this to say with reference to the fishery officers in New Brunswick, that a more zealous lot of men I never came in contact with. The zeal of the fishery officers in New Brunswick is proverbial, and I must say that their services are not adequately compensated. I rose to address the House on that point, but as I am out of order, I will simply refer to another fish, and that is the smelt. To those hon. gentlemen who know nothing about the fisheries it may be a matter of very little importance, but to those who live by the sea it is one of considerable importance, and should be treated with more gravity by both sides of the House. What I want to do is to call the attention of the Department to the indiscriminate fishing in the rivers to which smelt resort. They are becoming a very important article of commerce; they amount to some millions of pounds, and the catch in New Brunswick, taking the price at 6 cts., amounted in 1881 to the value of $115,000. That fishery is one which demands the serious attention and consideration of the Department; and no better evidence can be brought to bear in support of the statement I make than this: that when those fish are put into the market in limited quantities in the early season of September and October they realize in New York and Boston very high prices, as much as 20 cts. to 25 cts. a pound; whereas when the market is glutted with them, during January, February and March, the price falls to such a low figure that it does not pay the cost of taking the fish and the carriage. The point I want to make is this: To suggest to the Department whether it should not prohibit altogether the taking of smelt by nets, and confine the fishing to hook and line.

Mr. KIRK. I would not ask the indulgence of the House for a moment were it not that the acting Minister misrepresented my remarks—I do not say intentionally, but he misrepresented them, nevertheless. I did not complain against the fishery wardens of the county of Guysborough, as a class, as was represented by the hon. Minister. I believe the overseers and fish wardens of the county are as faithful and capable a class as are similar officers anywhere in Nova Scotia, or other parts of the Dominion. The only parties I spoke of were two who were interested in dams where fish-ways were, or ought to be, and could not be expected to see that the fish-ways were kept in the condition in which they should be kept because their first interest was their mill property, and then came the interests of the public. I pointed out that one man was incapable, because he was old; but I did not find fault with the officer, because he could not help it, but I said the Government were wrong in placing such a man in the position. The Minister says there are twenty-five fishery officers in the county. I do not know whether that is so or not, but if there are twenty-five there are five more than there were when the late Government went out of office, and if those twenty-five were properly distributed through the county I would not ask the Government to appoint another. I simply ask for one additional warden on a certain stream where there is not an officer, and where there is an inefficient fish way. Suppose there are twenty-five officers, I do not say the number is excessive, for in Guysborough there are ten rivers, including four of the most important rivers in Nova Scotia, and upwards of two hundred miles of sea coast. The hon. Minister discovered that there was a warden there having my name. Is he any the worse for that? I might ask how many BOWELLS there are in offices in the county to which the hon. gentleman belongs, and how many office holders there were bearing the name of other hon. Ministers, but it is not necessary. If this officer in question is not efficient the Government should dismiss him and make another appointment. I am not saying, and have not said anything against any officer, except one and therefore when the hon. Minister sought to convey the imputation that I complained of all the fish wardens in my county, he conveyed a false impression.

Mr. McISAAC. I understand the grant for the development of the sea fisheries, &c., $150,000, is not open for discussion, this being a statutory grant, but I am at liberty to ask for information respecting it. The last section of the Act of last Session is as follows:—

“A statement shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament within the first twenty days of the next Session, of the mode in which the said grant shall have been expended, together with copies of all Orders in Council relating to such grant and expenditure; and during the same Session, and each Session thereafter, a statement shall be laid before both Houses of Parliament, of the mode in which it is proposed to distribute the grant in the ensuing year, and the assent of Parliament shall be obtained thereto.”

I desire to be informed when the statement, to which we are entitled under the Statute, will be laid before Parliament. We have arrived at almost the close of the Session, and it is most important that the Order in Council, under which the next distribution is to be made, should be submitted to Parliament. It will be in the recollection of the House, that at about the close of last Session, the Statute was passed providing for the distribution of the money, and subsequently an Order in Council was passed which was most defective. I will read the Order for the benefit of those who are not so much interested in fisheries as we are, and any one who pays any attention will see it is most defective and fails to carry out the purpose for which provision is made in the Statute. The Statute says the grant is for the development of the sea fisheries, and the encouraging of the building of fishing vessels and improving the condition of the fishermen. The Order in Council says:

“A bounty of $2 per ton will be paid to Canadian vessels of ten tons and upwards, having been engaged during three months of the current year in the catch of sea fish not exempted under the Washington Treaty; one-half of such bounty being payable to the owner, and the other half to the crew.”

There is a limitation as to time, that limitation being three months. No matter how the vessels have prospered, if they have been engaged in the fisheries one day less than the three months, they forfeit any right to participate in the grant. I consider that a hardship, and the rule should be relaxed, or made more elastic, so as to reach those engaged in the fishing business without such restriction of time. The second part of the Order is still more unjust. It provides for those fishing in boats, and there is a discrimination against them which makes the operation of the Order in Council more unjust to them than the former provision is to those fishing in vessels. The second provision is this:

“Fishing-boats under ten tons, engaged fishing for a similar period, and having caught not less than 2,500 lbs. of sea fish per man, are also entitled to a bounty of $2.50 per man; one-fifth of which being payable to the owner, and four-fifths to the men.”

We must bear in mind that this class of fishermen is much more numerous in the Maritime Provinces than the class employed in vessels. I find by the last return of 1881 that, in the Maritime Provinces in that year, there were 32,644 men employed in boats, while only 7,254 were engaged on vessels, and the number of the former being so much the larger, the injustice done is so much the greater. The object of the Statute, as I mentioned, is to improve the condition of the fishermen. Now, boat fishermen get only $2 each altogether, and they must be three months actually employed in order to obtain it; and besides, they must catch 2,500 lbs. of fish. When the Order in Council is brought down, it should be so modified as to give the benefit of the bounty to a greater number of fishermen, because it is absurd to say that if a man is out fishing one day less than the three months, or catches one pound less than the 2,500 lbs. although he were out for six months, he shall forfeit the bounty. Can the acting Minister tell us when the Order in Council will be submitted for consideration to the House, under which the $150,000 is to be distributed during the coming year? I hope it will be made to reach the lobster and salmon fishermen, because the importance of these fisheries will be seen when we consider that their combined value in the Maritime Provinces amounted to nearly $3,000,000 in 1881.

Mr. BOWELL. The statement as to the amount expended has not been laid on the Table, for the simple reason that this could not be done, the Department being so busily engaged in distributing the money; and I can promise the hon. gentleman that the Order in Council referring to the further distribution of this money will be brought down at once. I will endeavor to place it before the House on Monday or Tuesday next.

Mr. VAIL. It is stated in the papers to-day, that an Order in Council has been passed, giving boat fishermen $5 instead of $2.50. Is that correct or not?

Mr. BOWELL. The Ministry is not responsible for what appears in the newspapers. If the hon. gentleman will give notice of his question, I will give him an answer.

Mr. KIRK. Why are lobster fishermen not included as participants in this grant?

Mr. BOWELL. The only reason for this is because they are not affected by the Washington Treaty. The basis on which this money was voted, was, that it was compensation for those who were supposed to have been deprived of certain rights under that Treaty.

164. Completion and construction of lighthouses and fog-alarms $40,000.00

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne). In the absence of the member for Lunenburg, I wish to direct the attention of the acting Minister to the fact that the lighthouse at Fox Point, in the county of Lunenburg, to which attention was directed the other day, does not appear to be provided for in the list. Is it the intention of the Department to provide for this in the Supplementary Estimates? I may remind the hon. gentleman that the Government steamer Newfield was sent to that point about ten days before the last General Election; that Mr. Kaulbach, the Conservative candidate, was one of the passengers; and that the commander of the Newfield landed in company of Mr. Kaulbach, and selected a site for which they agreed on behalf of the Dominion Government to pay $80. The Minister promised, when the statement was brought down, to give us information as to whether this lighthouse would then be provided for, or at a later period in the Session. I trust that the Minister proposes to erect this light, and if he does not, I hope that the acting Minister will rebuke the commander of the Government steamer Newfield, for allowing this steamer to be used to advance the interests of the Conservative candidate in the county of Lunenburg. I have that faith in the acting Minister that he would not permit such things to be done. In administering his own Department, I will give him credit for that; and I hope, that in this case, he will rebuke the commander of the Newfield, if he was a party to this, and if he acted without instructions from the Government. I would like to know the reason why the light will not be erected this year?

Mr. BOWELL. There is a lighthouse erected at West Harbor Island, and a report was asked from the officer at Halifax as to the necessity of a light at the point to which the hon. gentleman has referred. As soon as that officer makes that report—which he has not done yet—the question will be decided by the Department, and if it is found necessary, and in the interests of shipping, that a beacon light or a lighthouse should be erected there, the extra appropriation will be sufficient to meet that requirement.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not understand that, because the item is for the completion and construction of lighthouses and fog-alarms, and if it is intended to complete lighthouses which are not now under construction, I fear the vote will be like the Irishman's blanket—it cannot cover all these things. Will the hon. gentleman give us some details about the number of these lights and where they are to be put.

Mr. BOWELL. I am utterly unable to give the hon. gentleman the exact localities, but I suppose, that after the surveys are made, these lights will be put up as much as possible on the parts of the coast where they are required in the interests of commerce. It will be seen by this statement, that a large proportion of this expenditure is for western harbors, the eastern portion having been sufficiently lighted for the accommodation of the commerce of the country. The growing commerce of the western lakes is such as to demand a large expenditure, but I am not able to give the details of the location.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne). At what time, may I ask the Minister, was the officer instructed to make the report to which the hon. gentleman has referred?

Mr. BOWELL. April, I am informed.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne). Then, I understand, that on the 10th of June last, the captain of that vessel had no right to make such an enquiry, and that his action was simply dictated in the interests of the Conservative candidate in Lunenburg. I hope the hon. Minister, with the fairness which characterizes him, will not fail to reprimand the action of the captain, for there is no doubt that his action in that case had the effect of strengthening the interests of Mr. Kaulbach and the Dominion Government. I am glad to know that he was not acting in his official capacity.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Carried.

Mr. BLAKE. The right hon. gentleman says "carried," but this is a matter which should not be passed over. The hon. Minister of Customs has declared that a report was called for last month for the first time on this subject, and now it appears that nine months before that time a Government officer in command of a steamer professed to purchase a site for a lighthouse at the period of an election. I think such a statement made by an hon. member of this House deserves the attention of the Government, and that some statement should be made by the hon. Minister reprehending the unwarrantable conduct of this officer.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think that the bringing up of a question of this kind on the items in Committee of Supply does require reprehension. It looks as if hon. gentlemen opposite were determined wilfully to waste the time of the House.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne). The acting Minister of Fisheries promised us this information on the floor of the House.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. member for Lunenburg (Mr. Keefer), asked a question for information on this subject, and he was told that he would have this information at this particular time.

Mr. BOWELL. I said that I would bring down the papers and give such information as I could obtain.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne). I want to ask information about another matter. I have been trying for some years to get a fog-whistle erected at the entrance to Shelburne harbor. Judging by some remarks that have been made from the other side it is the intention to erect some kind of a fog-whistle at this place, and I would like to have an official statement upon that subject. As the representative of that county, and speaking in the interests of that county, and for the shipping interests of Nova Scotia, I beg to enter my protest against the waste of money which will be involved in the erection of a small fog-whistle at that place. As I have already stated, that harbor is one of the most important in the Province of Nova Scotia, as there are ships coming there constantly from European ports, belonging to Yarmouth and other places in Nova Scotia. A requisition in favor of a fog-whistle at that point was signed by the representatives of all the insurance companies of the Province of Nova Scotia, by the representatives of the Cunard Line, and by Lloyds agents in Nova Scotia. They asked for a good substantial fog-whistle to be erected there, such as the one erected at the entrance of Halifax harbor, at Sambro, or at Cape Forchu, Yarmouth, and others of the most important harbors of the Maritime Provinces. This harbor is a most important one, because it is a port of call, and millions of dollars worth of property seek refuge there for that reason. As I understand there has been appropriated the sum of $3,000 for some kind of special fog-trumpet—not a whistle—at that particular place, and I am told by master mariners that such a trumpet cannot be heard for any great distance, and is not at all suitable for that place.

Mr. GILLMOR. I hope to see an appropriation made for a fog-alarm on the Island of Grand Manan. I brought the matter to the attention of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and I know of no work that is more needed than that. I know that no Government can give every lighthouse and fog-alarm that is asked for, and I think both Governments have contributed a great deal of money since Confederation on the Maritime Provinces and they deserve well of the shipping interest. Some hon. members may recollect that three years ago at this point that the Western Empire, a large ship, was wrecked and several lives were lost. Petitions were got up representing 400 fishermen, and the number could have been increased if they had been circulated among the fishermen in other parts of the Grand Manan. This coast is very liable to fog, and fishermen find it very difficult to make the harbor. I know of no part of the Maritime Provinces in which a fog-alarm is more needed than at this point. I have spoken to the hon. Minister of Fisheries on the subject, and he has admitted the necessity for this fog-alarm, from the information he has received. I am quite aware that the Government cannot build all the fog-alarms that are wanted in one year, but this is more important than any other. I have no object in referring to the matter, except in the interest of a very large class of fishermen, and it is equally important to the mercantile marine. I had hoped that provision would be made for that work this Session. I speak feelingly on this subject, because I myself have seen women there blowing horns in fogs in order to direct their friends to the shore. I do hope, if it is possible for the Government to provide for an alarm there this Session, that they will do so. I am delicate in urging this, because I know that the large number of lighthouses and fog-alarms which have been erected must have produced a great drain on the Treasury. I have no reason to complain, for both Governments have been liberal in that respect; but this is the most important fog-alarm that could be erected along the coast.

Mr. WELDON. I can state, with reference to what my hon. friend from Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor) has said, that when vessels go on that coast in a fog, a large number of lives are invariably lost.

Mr. BLAKE. Would the hon. gentleman state what the system of lighting the river Sault Ste. Marie is, and what is the estimated cost?

Mr. BOWELL. The intention of the Department is to apply the vote of $1,500 to placing small beacon lights along the Sault River. That river is very intricate and winding, and a few beacon lights on the rocks, it is supposed, are all that will be necessary at present. While I am on my feet I might say that I hope the statements of the hon. member for Shelburne (Mr. Robertson) are usually more accurate than his statement as to the tonnage of the port he mentioned. I find that by the official returns, instead of being 100,000 tons the arrivals are 11,224 tons, and the departures 9,850.

Mr. DAWSON. With regard to the lights to be placed in the Algoma district, I may say that there has been a great loss of shipping there within the last few years. Vessels have been burned and lost in different parts of the district, and these lights are exceedingly necessary. The shipping of the great lakes is increasing very rapidly, so fast that

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne).

Thunder Bay has now become the third port in Ontario. There is an immense line of coast between Sarnia and Collingwood and the upper end of Lake Superior, and it is as yet very imperfectly lighted. The putting up of these lights is a step in the right direction; they are to be placed where they are most needed, but it is only the beginning of a system of lighting that will be required with the opening up of the immense North-West trade by way of Thunder Bay. The Sault Ste. Marie River, I suspect, will have to be lighted in conjunction with the United States Government, because it will require a system of range lights to enable vessels to run up the river in the dark. Day beacons will be required on the shores of Lake Superior before lighthouses can be erected; at the entrance of the harbors, especially, these beacons will be very important. With regard to the lighthouses at Algoma Mills and at Manitowaning. It was at Manitowaning that a steamer was burned last year, and a large loss of life took place. Manitowaning Bay is off the main channel, and it is very difficult for vessels to make it out at night; in fact if the night is at all dark, they have to remain till morning. But with this light, a great deal of time will be saved to them. I believe the lighthouse at Algoma Mills is to be in connection with the opening of that harbor by the Canadian Pacific Railway: and it is a necessity. Before resuming my seat, I would suggest to the acting hon. Minister of Marine that the Department should drop at once and for ever the use of that term—fog-alarm, and use some more descriptive term, such as fog-whistle, fog-horn, or something that the people will understand.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne). I wish to correct the statement of the acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries. The statement he made had reference to the vessels that were entered at the Custom House, discharged their cargoes and took other cargoes on board. If the hon. gentleman resided in the Maritime Provinces, and knew what a port of call was, he would know that ships that go to a harbor and take their orders from the pilot broker, without being entered at the Custom House. They are not bound to report, and they do not report; they go simply for orders, and in many instances they do not wait an hour. The statement I made was prepared by Mr. Kelley, one of the leading ship-brokers of the port, and it was perfectly correct.

199. Excise..... $288,380.00

Mr. COSTIGAN. We will have the same number of inspectors of Inland Revenue, one chief inspector and nine inspectors. We had three inspectors last year receiving salaries of $2,400. This year we have four receiving that salary, one who received $2,200 last year having been promoted. This year we have four of a second higher grade and a decrease of the third-class inspectors. The one that has been promoted is Mr. Borden, now in Nova Scotia. There is no change in the fourth or fifth grades. The extra allowance for inspectors of distilleries is $100 less than last year. We have three collectors of Inland Revenue at $1,800, the same as before; we have two collectors instead of one last year at $1,600, and eleven instead of ten at $1,400; these two are by promotion. We have five at $600, instead of four last year, by promotion also. The total number is the same, 37. Deputy and assistant collectors—in the second class we have seven this year, instead of two last year, giving an increase of $16,000; we have at $1,000 four instead of seven, a decrease of three, and an increase of two of the fourth and fifth classes receiving $900—making an increase in the staff of three, or a total increase of $3,650, and a decrease of $4,150. Of excisemen and officers there are twenty, the same as before. In the first class the number is reduced from 29 to 22; in the second class from 34 to 30; in the third class the number is increased by twelve. The number of probationary excisemen is increased by eight, and of unclassified by two. There is an increase of eight accountants. The $5,213.34 increase in the first item is accounted for in this way: The inspectors have increased $300; the collectors $800; the deputy collectors and other officers $3,650; the excisemen $463.34. The largest increase is in the deputy collectors, which is chiefly owing to the reclassification of these officers. The item of $14,000 is brought about as a consequence of the Civil Service Act. The Commission in their report showed that certain classes in the Excise branch were underpaid, and in the framing of that Act their recommendation was acted upon and the following changes took place:—Under the old school the maximum salary that the collectors of the larger ports or divisions could reach was $2,000; under the Act the maximum was raised to $2,200. The maximum of deputy collectors was $1,200, under the Act it was made $1,500. The salary of the special class of excisemen was fixed at $1,000, with an allowance of $200 while on special service; by the Act the salary was made $1,200, and the allowance $200. Of first class excisemen $800 was the maximum; second class $700, and third class $600. The Act changed that without classifying them at all, by making the minimum $600 and the maximum $1,000. In order to carry out the Act as far as the Department of Inland Revenue was concerned, certain regulations were proposed to give effect to it. The divisions have been classified according to the volume of business, and salaries will be based on the volume of business transacted. Collectors and deputy collectors will be graded. For instance, the collectors will receive a salary graded according to the division in which they are placed, and within the limits and provisions of the Civil Service Act, so that a collector in the first division would get $2,000 as a minimum salary, and $2,200 as a maximum. A collector in the second class division would get from $1,600 to $1,800; in the third division, from $1,400 to $1,600; fourth class, from $1,200 to $1,400; fifth class, from $1,000 to $1,200; sixth class, from $700 to $1,000; seventh class, from $500 to $700, &c.; and the Department collectors in the same proportion. As to the excisemen, the Civil Service Act provides that their salaries shall vary from $600 to $1,000, independent of classification. We propose to classify them under three heads, first, second and third class excisemen, and within the limits of the salaries fixed by the Civil Service Act. We define it in this way: third class excisemen shall have salaries from $600 to $750, second class excisemen shall have salaries from $700 to $850, and first class from $800 to $1,000. So we put them in three classes, the lower class of men at the minimum of the Civil Service Act, and the first class reaching to $1,000, five per cent, on the minimum to be added yearly until the maximum is reached. It is upon this system that the estimates this year are based. I will give a statement to the House of the increases generally. We have thirty-seven collectors and twenty-two deputy-collectors; the increase to these fifty-nine officers in all amounts to $4,190. I may explain to the House again, as I did while the Bill was going through, that there is a set-off against these increases. We have taken from these officers their profits and their share in seizures that they had before the passing of the Inland Revenue Act, and it is quite possible that the increase will not come out of the Revenue, as a portion of the seizures which used formerly to be divided amongst these officers, will very likely come back to the Treasury. The increase I wish to account for is $16,513.34, of which I have already accounted for $4,190. We have twenty special class officers. These officers have received an increase of $4,000 by the Act itself, which, as I have stated, is not a Departmental measure at all. The Act has changed their salary from $1,000 to $1,200, making an increase in that item of $4,000. We have twenty-two first class excisemen, who have received an increase of $615. An increase of $900 has been distributed over thirty second class excisemen, and an increase of $450 among forty-two of the third class, which amounts to but very little for each. There are thirty-three probationary officers that must be promoted because they come in under the Civil Service Act and are obliged to serve six months before they can be considered permanent officers. It will require $2,700 to be provided for the increase of salary they will be entitled to under the Civil Service Act as permanent officers. There is an increase of $1,445 distributed among thirteen accountants and book-keepers. There are thirteen unclassified officers of the Department that get no increase at all and have the same salary as before. They will be put upon the permanent list. Then two additional excisemen at $600 each, make $1,200; two inspectors, $300; $200 to the chief inspector, and $100 to the other. That makes up the whole increase of $16,513.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I would ask the Minister for specific information on some of these items. I see the number of inspectors remains the same, with an increase of $300, which he has accounted for. I notice among the collectors that there has been an increase in the case of the $1,400 officers. There are now eleven where there were ten. In the case of the $1,600 officers, there are two where there was one, though the total number remains the same.

Mr. COSTIGAN. If the hon. gentleman asks about the increase from $1,000 to $1,100 last year, I will explain it. I will give the information item by item.

Mr. PATERSON. At first blush it appears from the classification that the amount of revenue derived by the office should be the test of the remuneration that is given to the collector. There would seem to be something fair in that. But there is another aspect of the case. You may have an efficient, painstaking, hard-working officer for collector in the Department, when the revenue will be nothing like what it may be in another. For instance, where you have a large distillery, the officer might not have as much duty to perform as another officer might in a district where no distillery existed, but where there might be several manufactories, or something that does not return revenue. But the specific information I would be glad to get is the name of the officer, in what division he is, that had been promoted to the $1,600—for I take it these are all promotions, as the total number has been increased. I would also like the name of the officer and his division, who has been increased to $1,400.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. Kenney is the name of one; he was sent to Winnipeg, at a salary of $1,600; the additional $1,400, was owing to the salary of the collector at Ottawa being raised to that sum. In the latter case, Mr. Battle is entitled to $1,400, as an old officer, and in order that he may be placed on the same footing as other officers in cities doing a similar volume of business. It is not a high salary compared with other cities, or even with classification. It is not inconsistent with the statement I have already made, taking the receipts at Ottawa.

Mr. PATERSON. Then, salaries will be based, in the future, on the volume of the receipts?

Mr. COSTIGAN. As nearly as possible.

Mr. PATERSON. There is a decrease in the salaries of two of the $1,200 men.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Two $1,200 men were promoted, namely, Mr. Battle and Mr. Kenney.

Mr. VAIL. Can the hon. Minister tell me what salary Mr. Borrodaile received when he was inspector of this district, and what he is receiving now?

Mr. COSTIGAN. When he was removed to Nova Scotia he received $2,200 as inspector; Prince Edward Island was afterwards added to his division, $200 increase was given him. He received $1,800 salary before he left Ottawa.

Mr. CHARLTON. In regard to Inspectors of Inland Revenue, there is an increase of one receiving $2,400, and a decrease of one receiving $2,200. Was that a promotion from one grade to another?

Mr. COSTIGAN. That was the case of Mr. Borrodale which I have just stated.

Mr. PATERSON. There are seven deputy collectors at $1,200, instead of two deputy collectors. Would the hon. Minister state the divisions in which those officers have received the advance? There seemed to be three additional men in the service; will the hon. gentleman state where they are located?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The additional men are Power at Guelph, W. Dustan at Halifax, and Davis at Winnipeg. Two receive $1,200, and one $900.

Mr. PATERSON. Were they entirely new men in the service.

Mr. COSTIGAN. No; they were first class excisemen.

Mr. PATERSON. Then they were put over the heads of assistant and deputy collectors. I understand the position of deputy and assistant collectors to be higher than that of excisemen, and the hon. gentleman tells me, he passed them over to make these promotions; three new men got into this new service; and then that they were not new men, but acting excisemen. Excisemen as I understand it, rank lower than assistant or deputy collectors. If three men were transferred, or promoted from being excisemen to be deputy collectors at salaries as high as $1,200, then I say that the assistant collectors who get $1,000 have been passed over in order to give places to excisemen; but I do not understand this in connection with what the hon. gentleman laid down as the system to be pursued in filling these positions.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I suppose one went to Winnipeg: of course the salary there is $1,200. I think the salaries are a little higher there than elsewhere for special reasons, such as the cost of living, &c.

Mr. PATERSON. Was the exciseman that was promoted to Winnipeg—if I understand the hon. gentleman aright—acting in the capacity of exciseman in Winnipeg, or was he taken from some other division?

Mr. COSTIGAN. He was taken from a division in Ontario.

Mr. PATERSON. Then the hon. gentleman took an exciseman from a division in Ontario and promoted him to the position of assistant collector in the division of Winnipeg, passing over others who rank higher than he did—the assistant collectors in other divisions?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No; there was no higher rank. This man was not only an exciseman but a special class exciseman, who was entitled to that position. It was not necessary to pass over the head of any one, certainly no one was better qualified, for the position carries with it the highest qualification.

Mr. PATERSON. I do not understand the distinction between special class excisemen and deputy collectors. Special class excisemen are put down at $1,000, and here is an exciseman drawing $1,200. There are deputy collectors who draw $1,150, and $1,100, and $1,000. If we leave $1,000 out of consideration, deputy collectors getting $1,150 and $1,100, should certainly not be passed over for the promotion of an exciseman.

Mr. HESSON. If the hon. gentleman goes down the list, he will see that some officers draw $900, and some $600, and he might as well select some of the lower salaries and speak of promotions from them, though they were not qualified to discharge the duties required at that port.

Mr. COSTIGAN.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. member for North Perth does not know.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Special class officers are entitled to receive $1,200, and that is all he gets at Winnipeg. The hon. gentleman will remember, that in sending an officer there to a new division, it was necessary to select a man who possessed special qualifications, and he was sent up there to work the division up, on account of the special qualifications which he possessed for that purpose; and, being a special excise officer, he was entitled by law to receive $1,200. The Civil Service Act fixes the salary at $1,200. I did not say that he was placed over anybody's head.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). If the law fixes the salary of special class excisemen at $1,200, then the hon. Minister gives to twenty men $200 a year less than he should; and he asks us to commit that injustice. Twenty men here receive $1,000 each. None of them obtain a higher salary; but if the Act entitles them to $1,000 each, on what principle is the hon. Minister acting?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman will find that this is provided for in the $14,000 in the Estimates?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What $14,000?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I explained in my opening remarks that, under the old Act, special excisemen were entitled to $1,000, and to $200 additional while on duty on special service. I then stated that the Civil Service Act raised that amount from $1,000 to $1,200, as permanent salary, with the same pay of $200 per year while on duty on special service; so that the salaries of special class excisemen are actually $1,200 a year.

Mr. BLAKE. It seems to me a very imperfect manner of explaining this matter. If the $14,000 referred to provides $200 for each of these twenty men to be an addition to their salaries, surely it would be much more reasonable and sensible to put down special class excisemen at $1,200 and give what the salaries were, instead of our finding the salaries stated in one part of the Estimates at $1,000, and in another part provision for an addition to their salaries for the same year.

Mr. COSTIGAN. That might have been more convenient perhaps, but we had to show what salaries were paid, and I suppose that the intention was to show what changes which were made under the Civil Service Act would be. The difference which the Civil Service Act would make, will be $4,000 with regard to these twenty officers.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes; that would have been shown, if the hon. gentleman's details gave the special excisemen $1,200, which for twenty men would make $24,000, as compared with special excisemen at $1,000, or $20,000 for the previous year. We would have the comparison then, but now we have to eliminate it by explanations.

Mr. COSTIGAN. This is only another way of showing it.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I was asking about the seven deputy collectors who got $1,000 each, while four get $1,000 each now. The others were promoted, I suppose? If so, I would like to know what divisions they were in, and to what divisions they have been transferred?

Mr. BLAKE. Three of the $1,000 men have been promoted, apparently.

Mr. LISTER. I would ask, has there been any addition made to the staff of the Sarnia office?

Mr. COSTIGAN. One vacancy was filled, and it is all I know of.

Mr. LISTER. Who was the person that resigned, or died, or was removed?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Sarnia is a portion of the London Division, and I think that an additional man was asked for there to fill a vacancy in the particular district of Sarnia.

Mr. LISTER. Not to fill a vacancy at all?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Not in Sarnia.

Mr. LISTER. It was a new appointment?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Mr. LISTER. Who was the man?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I think Slattery.

Mr. LISTER. When was he appointed?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Not long ago.

Mr. LISTER. Within the past year?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Mr. LISTER. Within the past six months?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes, perhaps within the past six months.

Mr. LISTER. Will you state his salary?

Mr. COSTIGAN. His salary, I suppose, is $500.

Mr. LISTER. $500 a year?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Mr. LISTER. Will you say who recommended him?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LISTER. Was his appointment asked for by the officer in charge?

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. LISTER. What was the cause of the appointment?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. LISTER. What was the cause of this appointment? Hon. gentlemen opposite are very anxious to rush through these Estimates, but they must remember that they kept us here for nearly eight weeks without doing anything.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The cause of his appointment was that his services were required in that division.

Mr. LISTER. And asked for?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I did not say they were asked for.

Mr. LISTER. So far as the appointment is concerned I believe it was made immediately after the election last June, and the gentleman whom the hon. Minister appointed took a very active part in the elections on that occasion. I have no doubt that his appointment was made as a reward for the services he has rendered to the party which the right hon. gentleman leads in this House. He has generally taken a very active part in these elections, but on this occasion his service mainly took the shape of circulating a very remarkable document known as the Smith, Costigan, O'Donohoe manifesto, and for the very efficient services which he rendered in the distribution of that document he received this office. If the office had to be filled I have no objection to Mr. Slattery's appointment, but the general opinion was that the appointment was uncalled for, and that the man in charge of the office never asked the hon. gentleman to appoint any one to assist him. I believe the inspector of the district never asked the appointment to be made.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Does the hon. gentleman know it?

Mr. MACKENZIE. It was a matter of contract, probably.

Mr. LISTER. Yes.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Does the hon. gentleman know it?

Mr. LISTER. I asked the hon. member if the appointment was asked for?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I told the hon. gentleman that it was asked for.

Mr. LISTER. By whom?

Mr. COSTIGAN. By those who had a right to ask for it.

Mr. LISTER. Probably Mr. Slattery.

Mr. COSTIGAN. No, not Mr. Slattery. The hon. gentleman has assumed that the appointment was made for political purposes, and he says Mr. Slattery circulated some document during the election. I never met Mr. Slattery, I do not know what document was circulated, or what part he took in the elections. I do know, however, that he attended the qualifying examinations and passed them successfully. I know that a vacancy existed, and I know that he was the only man qualified under the law to fill the place. Under these circumstances, I ask the hon. gentleman if he objects to the appointment? I ask him, if he says that he does, should I have passed over that man simply because he was an Irishman, and was the only man who passed these examinations?

Mr. LISTER. There was no vacancy in the office, and there had been none since it ceased to be an outpost. The man in charge never asked for an assistant to be appointed. There is not work enough for one man at even $500 or $600 a year; and though I do not object to Mr. Slattery, I do object that this office should be created and made a permanent charge upon the people simply to reward a political favorite.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. Minister can undoubtedly state whether the revenue derived in that division is greater now than it was before—whether there are less or more officers employed now than there were two years ago. Then we can judge whether this man's services were needed.

Mr. COSTIGAN. An officer was sent there because his services were required. Hon. gentlemen need not laugh, because we know that in some divisions, especially in the Excise Department, officers are moved about from one division to another to help to bring up the work, but we do not appoint a man permanently because his extra services are required for a certain time. In this case the chief officer reported that another additional officer was required there, and I acted upon that recommendation. I think the hon. gentleman is very unfair, because there are gentlemen in the Department who belong to the party of hon. gentlemen opposite, and who know that they have been as well treated as Conservatives in the Department have been treated. They know that in regard to those appointments I have not been influenced in the slightest degree by political considerations. I have tried to do honestly and fairly by all parties, and I have no more to do with politics in making these appointments than the hon. gentleman has himself.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The question is not so much as to the politics of this officer, but as to whether the duties of this office have really increased?

Mr. LISTER. I do not complain that Reformers have not been as well treated as Conservatives; but my complaint was that an office was created for a man without necessity, involving a charge on the country of $600 a year. There was no vacancy there, there had been no vacancy, and the office had been run by one man for two years; and this additional man was put in for the purpose of giving him employment.

Mr. CHARLTON. The question upon which we seek information is, as to whether the revenues of that office have increased?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have no doubt that my hon. friend will, on Concurrency, furnish information as to what were the receipts last year, and what are the receipts this year, and what his expectations are for next year. The hon. gentleman, in the course of this extraordinary cross-examination, has stated that Mr. Slattery was appointed to this office on the statement of the Chief Inspector of the district that another man was wanted. In answer to the insinuation of the hon. gentleman that Mr. Slattery was appointed for political reasons, the Minister of Inland Revenue says that the Chief Inspector reported to the head of the Department that an additional officer was wanted. The only qualified man he had under the Act was Mr. Slattery, and there was no one else to appoint if there was a necessity of appointing anyone.

Mr. LISTER. The right hon. gentleman has stated that this man was appointed on a recommendation of the Inspector of the district. I did not understand the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue to say anything of the kind. He could not say who recommended him, but he said the recommendation came from some person who had the right to recommend him.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I heard the hon. gentleman make the statement that it was made on the representation of the chief officer.

Mr. McNEILL. I heard the statement most distinctly.

Mr. LISTER. I did not.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. None are so deaf as those who will not hear.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I said that the Inspector asked for an additional officer; and as to the recommendations, he might be recommended by fifty persons with whom the hon. gentleman had nothing to do.

Mr. MACKENZIE. What the hon. gentleman said was, that he was recommended by those who had a right to recommend him. Is it the fact that the Chief Inspector reported that another officer was necessary?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I make no appointment until I receive a report from some officer of the Department. The District Inspector reported that an additional man was wanted, and some time after that I recommended the appointment of this man.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Will the hon. gentleman state whether or not the Sarnia officer is a probationary exciseman?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Every appointment is a probationary appointment. He would be a probationary exciseman for the first six months, at any rate.

Mr. PATERSON. Was he a probationary exciseman at London, and then transferred to Sarnia, or did he discharge all his duties at Sarnia alone?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The only duties he has performed, he has performed at Sarnia. Another officer was required at Sarnia; this man was living on the ground; he had qualified himself by examination, and we appointed him.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I think it is most fortunate for the service that Mr. Slattery was there.

Mr. HESSON. A great effort has been made to-night to waste the time of the House. The hon. Minister was very explicit in the information he gave to the Committee, and the hon. member for Brant came in very late, and was, therefore, unfortunate in not getting all the information. Then it had to be all repeated again, and hon. gentlemen opposite have questioned, and cross-questioned, and mixed up their questions in such a way as to waste a great deal of time.

Mr. PATERSON. If the hon. member for North Perth was asleep on his desk, and unable to see that I was in the House, it is certainly very ill-advised on his part, when he wakes up, to charge me with not being in. He has been wasting a great deal of valuable time. He is guilty of what he has been guilty of on previous occasions, trying to explain something that he knows nothing about. I was on hand, and was anxious to get information on this subject.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Mr. HESSON. I want to say one word. There is not a gentleman in this House who has seen me asleep at my desk. The hon. member for South Brant has no right to make that statement here; I will not permit him. I repeat what I said before—the hon. member for South Brant was not in his seat. He is usually able to understand what is said, and I am sure that he would not have required the Minister to go over the whole ground again if he had been in his place.

Mr. PATERSON. Out of deference to my hon. friend's feelings I preferred to suggest that he was asleep to charging him with being stupid during what ought to be his normal condition. There is no desire whatever to delay the House. Those who remember how the Estimates were criticised by hon. gentlemen opposite when they were on this side of the House, will remember that it was sometimes impossible during a whole sitting to get more than one item passed. If I speak a little more than my colleagues, I do so only in discharge of my duty, and I defy any gentleman to point to any question that I have asked to-night that was not necessary in the interests of the country. My hon. friend from Lambton was quite within his duty in calling the attention of the Committee to this matter; and if it should appear on Concurrence that the hon. Minister is unable to show that there has been an increase of duties at that particular port, and an increased revenue therefrom, he will remain under the suspicion that there has been an increase made when no increase was demanded in the public interest. As to this gentleman being properly recommended, I can quite understand that that is so, for in disseminating that literature, he was sufficiently recommended. With reference to the fifteen supervisors of tobacco who were appointed last year, but for whom no vote is asked this year, I wish to know if their services have been entirely dispensed with, or if they have been employed in other branches? The same question will apply to the five excisemen employed for the inspection of petroleum last year, for whom no vote is asked this year.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Those employed in the inspection of tobacco have been continued wherever their services could be utilized in the Excise branch.

Mr. PATERSON. Have they all been employed?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No; I cannot say how many.

Resolutions to be reported.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and (at 11:50 o'clock p.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Monday, 7th May, 1883.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

The following Bills (from the Senate) were severally introduced, and read the first time:—

Bill (No. 123) respecting County Court Judges in the Province of Ontario.—(Sir John A. Macdonald.)

Bill (No. 124) respecting the High Court of Justice for Ontario.—(Sir John A. Macdonald.)

Bill (No. 125) to make provision for the taking of evidence in relation to criminal matters pending in Courts of Justice in any other of Her Majesty's Dominions, or before foreign tribunals.—(Sir John A. Macdonald.)

CLAIMS OF NARCISSE ANDRÉ PELLETIER, AND OTHERS.

Mr. CASGRAIN enquired, Is it the intention of the Government to pay the claims of Narcisse André Pelletier, and others, of the Parish of St. Roch des Aulnets, county of L'Islet, for damages done to their fences by the fire from the engines of the Intercolonial Railway; and if so, when?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. From the evidence before me, I did not consider the Government were liable; but as the parties thought they had additional evidence, I have referred the case to an official arbitrator for investigation and report. That was done in November last, but the report has not yet been received.

STEAMSHIP NEWFIELD.

Mr. FORBES enquired, Whether the return asked for in March last in reference to services of the steamship Newfield, in aiding the steamship Moravian, and also the tenders, reports, correspondence, &c., relating to the projected breakwater on the west side of Liverpool Bay, will be brought down before the Session closes? I see that the first part has been answered by returns laid upon the Table on Saturday, and I would ask an answer to the second part.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The return will be brought down in reference to the second part.

RAILWAY BETWEEN PRINCE ARTHUR'S LANDING AND RAT PORTAGE.

Mr. SCOTT enquired, Whether the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has obtained possession from the contractors of the line of road between Prince Arthur's Landing and Rat Portage? If so, when will it be opened for passenger traffic, and have the rates of freight been fixed by the Company, and confirmed by the Government?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I supposed arrangements were made with the contractors for the transfer to the Canadian Pacific Railway of the road. I have just this moment learned that some difficulty has occurred in connection with that transfer. The intention was to have the road open for traffic with the opening of navigation.

DUTY ON HEMLOCK BARK.

Mr. BOLDUC enquired, Whether the Government has received petitions from certain tanners and lumber merchants of the Provinces of Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick, and Nova Scotia, praying that an export duty be imposed on hemlock bark? What is the intention of the Government respecting such export duty?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The Government have received petitions from tanners resident in Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick, and Nova Scotia, praying for an export duty on hemlock bark. The Government have considered the matter, and have not felt justified in asking Parliament for the imposition of a duty.

DUTY ON SPRUCE SAW LOGS.

Mr. BOLDUC enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to increase the export duty on spruce saw-logs exported to the United States?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It is not the intention to ask for an increased duty on spruce logs.

THE FISHING BOUNTY.

Mr. RICHEY, in the absence of Mr. FORTIN, enquired, Has the Government considered the question of augmenting the Fishery Bounty on fishing boats, and has it come to a decision in the matter?

Mr. BOWELL. The Government have decided to double the bounty to fishing boats, and to fishermen.

NAVIGATION ON THE RIVER SYDENHAM.

Mr. HAWKINS enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to introduce an Act, in accordance with the prayer of the petition of the Municipal Council of the village of Wallaceburg, to regulate the rate of speed at which steam vessels may be run through the said village on the River Sydenham; also to compel steam vessels using wood for fuel to place wire screens over their funnels or stacks to prevent sparks from flying therefrom, thereby endangering property on the various rivers and streams of the country?

Mr. BOWELL. It is not the intention of the Government to introduce any measure of that character during the present Session; but enquiries will be made during the Recess, in order to ascertain whether any necessity exists for the introduction of a Bill.

OBSTRUCTIONS IN THE RICHIBUCTO RIVER.

Mr. GIROUARD (Kent) enquired, Whether, in accordance with notices, dated the 31st March, 1882, asking tenders for the removal of the obstruction to navigation caused by the wreck of the barque Colonist lying in the channel of the Richibucto River, at Kingston, Kent County, N. B., tenders have been received? If so, how many? Has any been accepted? If not, why?

Mr. BOWELL. Tenders were invited, and were received up to the 20th of April, 1882, for the removal of the wreck Colonist. Two tenders were received, both of which were considered to be too large in amount, and were not accepted by the Department.

BARRACKS AT L'ILE AUX NOIS AND ST. JOHN.

Mr. BOURASSA enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to place in the Supplementary Estimates any appropriation during the present Session for the repair of the old barracks and other buildings now belonging to the Government at Isle aux Noix, and St. John's, County of St. John's, Province of Quebec?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In reply to the hon. member, I may say there is a general vote for repairs for military buildings in the different places in the Province of Quebec. If any repairs are required at the points which he mentions, and if the vote permits of it, there is no doubt these repairs will be made.

INSPECTION OF STEAMERS.

Mr. DAWSON enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to bring forward a further Act, providing for the inspection of steamers during the present Session?

Mr. BOWELL. It is not the intention of the Government to bring forward a measure further to provide for the inspection of steamers during the present Session. The Steamboat Act of last year has but recently been put into operation, and should it be found necessary, after another year's experience, to amend that law, a Bill will be introduced for that purpose.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT.

Mr. COLBY moved that the First Report of the Joint Committee of both Houses on the Library of Parliament be concurred in.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Will the hon. gentleman be kind enough to explain the different portions of the report?

Mr. COLBY. The amount recommended for the annual appropriation is $10,000 a year, which is precisely the amount which the Government has put in the Estimates. There is a recommendation that for five years a special grant of $2,000 a year be made and devoted exclusively to the purchase of books on North America. The Committee considered that as there are many valuable books of that kind almost entirely out of print, they should be procured before it is too late. I think it is recommended that these books should not be used for indiscriminate circulation like the ordinary books of the Library, but kept separately under lock and key, and that access to them should be given only to persons who desire to consult them as authorities. The only other recommendation of the Committee involving the expenditure of money, has reference to a very valuable book about to be published by the Clerk of the House, on the Rules, usages, and procedure of the Senate and House of Commons, a work in the preparation of which he has expended about ten years of his leisure time, and which appears to the Committee to meet an existing want. The Committee recommend that three hundred volumes of this work, at a cost of $5 a volume, should be taken for the use of the members of both Houses.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government generally acquiesce in the purport of this report, but we would rather that the House should not concur in it just now. The $10,000 is, I think, provided in the Estimates. The other recommendations of $1,500 for the clerk's book, and $2,000 for works relating to North America, will, I think, be considered before we bring down the Supplementary Estimates for 1883-84. The hon. gentleman will, I hope, not press the motion to-day.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. Finance Minister indicated that he was about to grant the $2,000, so that that is settled anyway. But as there is one recommendation about which the Government has not decided, I hope the hon. gentleman will not object to accede to the request of the Government.

Mr. POPE. Part of those works on North America, such as are in manuscript, should be placed in charge of the Archivist.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The question to be considered is the best mode of appropriating that vote, and that is the reason why I ask the hon. gentleman to allow the report to stand.

Mr. COLBY. I think the sense of the Committee was that ordinary manuscripts should form part of the Archives.

Mr. BLAKE. I must say that I should be very sorry if any books which are not Archives should be taken away from the General Library and put in the Archive repository. I agree that the manuscripts should go there; and from what I have heard in the Library, I think there are some records there which should not go to the repository. But the vote is not designed for manuscripts at all, but for printed books, and thus printed books should be in the Library.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Copies of documents, archæological or historical, whether printed or in manuscript, should be kept in the Archives of Parliament; but works connected with the early history of Canada should be in the Library here.

Motion allowed to stand.

SIGNAL STATIONS AT NORTH CAPE AND EAST POINT, P.E.I.

Mr. BRECKEN, in moving for copies of all petitions, letters, and other correspondence between the Government and any other parties, relating to the erection of signal stations at the lighthouses at North Cape and East Point, in the Province of Prince Edward Island, and the construction of two short lines of telegraph connecting the same with the telegraph system of Prince Edward Island and the Dominion of Canada, with a view to lessen the dangers of navigation in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, said: I feel it is hardly necessary to offer any remarks in order to impress upon the House the importance of this proposal in regard to the fishing and navigation interests of Prince Edward Island. The extension of the telegraph system to East Point would involve the construction of about fifteen miles of line; while the extension to North Cape would not require more than ten or twelve miles. I suppose twenty-five miles of telegraph line would accomplish what the fishermen and vessel owners of the Island and the adjoining Provinces on the mainland are so anxious to obtain. When we consider how easily the improvement might be brought about, it is matter for surprise that it was not carried out some time ago. The special importance of establishing stations at those two points is obvious. All vessels for Miramichi, Richibucto and Buctouche, on the west side of Northumberland Strait, pass close to North Cape, and it would be a great advantage to ship-owners if they could be informed of the arrival of vessels there. Again, all vessels from the St. Lawrence for ports in Prince Edward Island, Nova Scotia, to the Straits of Canso to the United States, and the West Indies, pass near those points. Last autumn one of Her Majesty's ships, the Phoenix, was wrecked scarcely a mile from East Point, and, although a few miles of telegraph line would have enabled the captain to have communicated for help, he had to wait until the storm subsided before he was able to communicate with the Island. The vessel at present lies a wreck, and the captain has been suspended. This subject is also a matter of importance to our fishing interests, which are carried on very extensively at these points, both of which are among the best fishing stations in the neighborhood; and the construction of such a line as I have asked for, would enable the fishermen to communicate with their owners, and other parties interested in the trade, as to where the fish are to be caught, and also with respect to bait and other matters connected with the supply and price of fish, and a daily fishery bulletin could be arranged. I believe I am correct in saying that the telegraph company would carry out the work at the same cost as has been charged in other parts of the Dominion. I believe it would not cost the Exchequer more than $100 a mile for twenty-five miles, and the keepers of the lighthouses would be able to operate the instruments and to work the signals, and would be willing to do this, if allowed an extra salary of, say $50 a year. Of course, it would be understood that all tolls charged would go into the pockets of the telegraph company. I know there is a question about the monopoly of telegraphs in the Island, but I hope that matter will not be allowed to stand in the way. I hope that this question of relieving distressed and shipwrecked mariners, and of protecting the fishing and shipping interest, will receive the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works, and that he will see the necessity of immediately carrying out this much required work when it can be done at such a very trifling cost.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The petitions and other papers in relation to the establishment of these signal stations will be brought down. The hon. gentleman sees a difficulty should the Government be determined to go on with those works. As the Anglo-American Company have certain special rights, they say, in the Island, the matter would have to be approached with caution. At all events the papers will be brought down, and the petitions will be considered.

Mr. MITCHELL. I merely wish to bear my testimony to the necessity of the works referred to by the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Brecken). I refer particularly to the lights and signals along the shore of Prince Edward Island, more particularly in the Strait of Northumberland. I have had several applications on this question, among others, from owners of colliers plying between Pictou and Montreal, and also from residents in my own county. I can assure the House there is much need of further outlay of public money in order to provide two or three more lights along Northumberland Strait, in the general interest of the trade of the country. The trade of Pictou has, during the last few years, increased to a very great extent, and the policy of Protection has led to the use of the coal of that port to a greater extent than formerly, and it has to compete with the coal of the United States. It is of the utmost importance that the class of vessels now used, screw steamers, should be able to run night and day, as this makes a very great difference in the cost of coal delivered, and affects the policy of Government and Parliament in relation to that particular branch of industry; and I am not going to make any further remarks to confirm the statement of my hon. friend from Queen's as to the great necessity there is for a further outlay to place lights along the shores of the Strait of Northumberland.

Motion agreed to.

STEAM COMMUNICATION WITH PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND.

Mr. BRECKEN moved that the report of the Select Committee appointed to consider the question of steam communication between Prince Edward Island and the mainland in winter and summer, be concurred in.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No. It cannot be well adopted, as it involves the expenditure of money, and as this is so it can only be done by recommendation from the Crown, and on the responsibility of the Government. The report, however, is a very valuable one, and it calls the attention of the Government to all the facts connected with the communication by water between Prince Edward Island and the mainland. The Government are quite sensible of their obligation towards Prince Edward Island, and to carry out the Terms of the Union between Prince Edward Island and the smaller districts of the Dominion, not only constructively but literally and in a liberal spirit. The Government will consider this matter; but the hon. gentleman will see, and has seen, of course, that the report not only recommends that there should be a line of steamers communicating between the Island and the mainland, but it recommends two, and in fact three lines, between the two points. Now, that involves a very considerable sum of money; and the Government will take all these facts into consideration, and come to some decision on it, which, I hope will be satisfactory to both the Island and the mainland. The Government are endeavoring to carry out, and believe they are in spirit carrying out, the arrangement between the two contracting parties. They hope that, ere long, there will be a good line established, crossing, perhaps, between the two railway points, Capes Traverse and Tormentine, which will fully, and ought fully, to carry out the Terms of the Union, so far as the forces of nature are not opposed to the carrying out of those terms. We cannot fight against nature, or against physical impossibilities. The other recommendations, as to keeping up thoroughly independent communication, and more than one, provided for by the arrangements, will be considered as a matter of expedience and of justice to the Island, and as a matter appertaining as well to the general development of that part of the Dominion.

Mr. BRECKEN. I see that the objection is, of course, a correct one, and I will leave the report to the tender mercies of the Government.

Mr. DAVIES. I have already placed my views before the House on this matter, and I shall not repeat them on this occasion; but I listened to the Prime Minister very anxiously to see whether it was the intention of the Government during the present Session, to put any sum in the Estimates to enable them to carry out one portion, at least, of the report of the Committee, so far as it refers to the necessity of constructing a railway to Cape Tormentine and Cape Traverse, and to build piers, and eventually have a ferry across that portion where the two points come very closely together, there being only a few miles between them. This must necessarily take years to accomplish, and if the Government carry it out, this will require a considerable sum of money; so that this year we could not, of course, ask for any grant to cover the entire expenditure. But the hon. gentlemen know that there is a perfect unanimity of opinion—not only among the Island members, but also among the members from New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, who are familiar with the question in which this Committee entirely concur—that as regards summer communication, a very great defect exists, which can be supplied by a small grant from the Government. Now, as to the summer, we have no complaint to make regarding the existing steamers which do capitally until late in the fall; but this Committee, as I anticipated, report, and all are agreed, that there should be a screw steamer, and that the company which has the contract in charge should have an additional subsidy granted to it, to enable it to put on a screw steamer which would keep the harbors of Summerside and Charlottetown open about three weeks longer. I do not know any boon that the Government could confer on the Island greater than this, of keeping communication open three weeks later in the fall and earlier in the spring, for the exportation of our produce. The Committee say that, after examining a number of witnesses, they have come to the conclusion that suitable screw boats could continue crossing about three week later in the fall, and commence running two or three weeks earlier in the spring. I believe, and every practical man believes, that this could be done; and I sincerely hope and trust, that in view of this report and the evidence which the Committee collected, and the statements made by the different members representing the Island on both sides of politics, this Session will not be allowed to pass without some sum being placed in the Estimates for the purpose of carrying out this recommendation; and that this very year the contract which the present company have of carrying the mails and passengers between the Island and the mainland will be changed by increasing the subsidy by a sum which will enable the company to put on this boat. I have had a communication from the president of this company within the last day or two, informing me that the company has purchased, in England, an iron screw steamer for this purpose. I believe that, relying on the statements made by hon. gentlemen speaking from the Government benches, that they had a sincere desire to carry out the Terms of the Union, the company has purchased this steamer, which they are going to put on the route; and I sincerely hope and trust that their enterprise will meet with some response from the Government. I know that the boat has been purchased, and that it is coming out; and, unless the Government refuses to give any larger subsidy, the people will have the benefit of it this fall. There is another part of the report to which I desire to call the attention of the Prime Minister. When I spoke before, I spoke with some little knowledge of the subject, which I had from an examination of the Northern Light, and from what I picked up from the surveyor of the ship and others who have examined her, and this enables me to state that this boat cannot continue for many winters to do the work; in point of fact, it is doubtful whether, owing to her worn-out condition, instructions were not sent down this winter to the captain to be particularly careful as to how he used her. I believe so, and I find that the Committee reports that the Northern Light may not be able to do the work another year, and that a new steamboat must be put on the route with her, or to take her place. Now,

I would like—as the Prime Minister states that the Government are sincerely desirous to carry out the Terms of Union—that he will see his way clear to put a sum in the Estimates now for the construction of a steamboat to take her place. If they do not do so, and next winter comes round, we may absolutely have no communication between the Island and the mainland at all, except by open boats. I have private letters in my possession, which I am perfectly willing to give to the Government—and the Committee's report states the same thing—declaring that the Northern Light is not fit to run next year, and that unless something be done to put a new boat on, we will be then absolutely without any communication whatever; therefore, on these two points, outside of and beyond whatever the hon. Minister may do with reference to the Capes Traverse and Tormentine routes, I hope that the hon. gentleman will see his way clear to put a sum in the Estimates, providing a screw steamer to keep the ports of Charlottetown and Summerside open for three or four weeks later, and a steamboat to take the place of the Northern Light; and if this is not done, there will be just cause of complaint on the part of the people of the Island.

Mr. HACKETT. I just desire to correct a slight error made by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Davies) in his reference to the Northern Light. We examined two gentlemen who were on the Northern Light as witnesses, and one gentleman who is at present employed in one of the Departments at Ottawa. Captain McInery's evidence went to show that the Northern Light was in good condition, and that she was, in fact, as capable of performing her work now as at any time since she has been on the route. Captain Finlayson, the pilot, said that the Northern Light was considerably strained, and that she was rapidly becoming unfit for the service. He did not think she would be suitable for the service for a much longer time than two years. The hon. gentleman has fallen into a slight error as to the recommendations made in the report of the Committee. We did not say that the Northern Light would not be fit for service next year, but we recommended that another boat should be provided. It is of great importance that this communication should be kept up, and I trust that whenever the Government find that the Northern Light is unfit for the service they will provide another boat. With regard to the summer service, after a great deal of trouble, and the examination of several witnesses, we came to the conclusion that the summer boats were also unfit for the requirements of the trade, and we recommended that further boats should be provided, one of which should be a screw boat. I am glad to find, however, that the Prince Edward Island Steam Navigation Company has already provided a screw boat, and I think that the company has given fair satisfaction. I dare say that the Government will see their way clear to give them a subsidy sufficient to warrant them in keeping three boats for the summer service. As a natural consequence of building the railway, and the erection of the piers, a ferry should be established there, and the Committee came to the conclusion, from the evidence which was brought before them, that that would be the better plan to adopt. It may require a considerable expenditure of money, but I am glad to find that the Island railway from Cape Traverse, and the branch line, will be completed on this side, so that during the time this is going on the Government will be able to consider the matter; and when they come to make the expenditure they will be able to make it intelligently, and so as to meet the requirements of the people of the Island. I do not think it is necessary for us again to fully discuss the matter, as the Committee went to a great deal of trouble, and though the enquiry involved some expense, I think the result of their labors will be such as to warrant the expenditure. If their suggestions are carried out the Terms of the Union will be fulfilled so far as steam navigation is concerned. As Chairman of the Committee, I may be allowed to say that I feel thankful to hon. gentlemen from the other Provinces, as well as to those from the Island, for the active services they rendered in the Committee. I am satisfied that these services will be appreciated by the people of Prince Edward Island.

Motion withdrawn.

RELATIONS BETWEEN THE GOVERNMENT AND AMOS ROWE.

Mr. WOODWORTH moved for all correspondence and instructions between and from any member of the Government from and to one Amos Rowe, assumed proprietor of the Winnipeg Times newspaper, having reference to the course the said Winnipeg Times newspaper, or the said Amos Rowe, should pursue in the last General Local Election for the Province of Manitoba, and also the course the said Amos Rowe should pursue in reference to the Tariff, and the charges he should prefer in his newspaper against the hon. Edgar Dewdney, Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Territories.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Explain.

Mr. WOODWORTH. My reason for asking for the correspondence was, that the gentleman owning the Winnipeg Times, or who is assumed to own it, made certain statements publicly which were incorporated in that newspaper as his own utterances in regard to his attitude towards the Government; and as all matters of a governmental nature can be made subject of enquiry in this Parliament, I thought it my duty to place upon the paper this notice of motion asking that these instructions, verbal or otherwise, should be laid before Parliament. I will just refer for a moment or two to the utterance itself. It is a strange utterance coming from a newspaper man, and, of course, he would not make it without being authorized to make it. Being a very strong party man, and a strong supporter of the Government, as may have been seen during the last few weeks, at a mass meeting in Winnipeg to select candidates for the Local Legislature, Mr. Rowe is reported in his own newspaper of November last as using the following language:—

"The Times was the organ in this Province of the Dominion Government, and was supported by that Government in its defence of the hon. Mr. Norquay. Yes, he would go further, and say that it had been advised by the Dominion Government to pursue the policy it had adopted."

Well, that was a very bold statement for a newspaper man to make, and it could not have been made by any sensible newspaper man without his having been, thereto, authorized. He must have known the importance of what he was stating, and the result of the statement was that it was taken up by the press all over the country. But it is a very strange thing that some of the hon. members of this House have been quoting this same newspaper during our debates in Parliament this Session with the view of showing, from their stand-point, that the Government of the country was not a proper Government. But the Times went further, and it made a personal attack on the hon. Minister of Finance. It sneeringly alluded to the Province from which he came. On the 23rd November, Mr. Rowe made the bold statement that he was a sort of head centre for the Government at Winnipeg, and on April the 9th last, we read, in this same Government organ, that:

"Sir Leonard's laugh was ill-timed. This is probably a more serious business than he imagines. Nature, a more potent ruler than any New Brunswick statesman, has placed nearly a thousand miles of rock between us and Ontario."

Now, these articles have been quoted by the Opposition members of the House, and legitimately so, to show that this great Government newspaper has been uttering sentiments which bore them out in the declarations they made here. It is most extraordinary; I do not understand it. I am not in the secret of the Ministry; I am merely an Independent member of this House, and I cannot understand why this correspondence should have taken place, making this man and his newspaper the medium of communication between the Government and the people of the North-West. Whom he will, he sets up; whom he will, he puts down. He attacks the hon. Finance Minister—personally attacks him. Not content with attacking the policy of the Government in a great many respects, this newspaper attacks the hon. Edgar Dewdney, the Lieutenant Governor of the North-West Territories, whom it declares, in the most positive terms, to be guilty of malfeasance in office, to be guilty of a misuse of his gubernatorial powers, in order to promote his own personal aggrandisement. Surely, this is one of the most extraordinary things that has ever happened. I doubt if any hon. member in this House remembers, in the history of Parliament, any other case of a newspaper proprietor stating that it was the Government organ for a certain section of this country, and that he was advised as to what course he should pursue in regard to political matters, and yet attacking the Government of the day and the Governors whom they had appointed, and whom the hon. First Minister ably and eloquently defended. I gave notice of this motion the other day, and I find that this newspaper came out and attacked me again. I had said nothing, and I have said nothing now, that is not legitimate and proper. I have not said anything that could possibly hurt any person's feelings; but it seems to me that this paper occupies an anomalous position, and it ought to be explained. For instance, I see the hon. Minister of Customs smiling and laughing with his usual urbanity and complacency, but rumor says that he is connected with this newspaper. It is most extraordinary. I do not wish the hon. Minister of Finance and the hon. First Minister to think that I am throwing a firebrand, that I am going to send any foxes with tails of fire through the corn to burn up the sheaves and shocks. I do not believe it, but it is said that the hon. Minister of Customs is responsible for sending this man out there to take charge of this paper. We all know how our members have been received by him. For instance, a most gross attack was made upon the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) for a matter of which he was perfectly innocent, and for which he declared he was innocent. Then the paper attacked him again. A more loyal supporter of the Government, and a more loyal and able member of this House, and a more patriotic and industrious Canadian, I do not know. He goes out to the North-West, and he says nothing, and he does nothing that is worthy of condemnation or of unfavorable comment, and this paper attacks him. Yet this man says that it is a Government organ. I am not speaking in a party sense, but as an Independent member of the House. I care nothing for his attacks upon me, for he could not possibly hurt me. No member of the Parliament of Canada can be affected permanently by a false, lying article in a newspaper, if he is not guilty of the charges made. He cannot, in the long run, be hurt; but these charges must redound upon the paper or the individual making them. But they are very unpleasant at the time. I ask that this correspondence between this man and the Government be placed before the House, so that we may know what we are doing. I dare say that the Opposition members are as curious to know what sort of correspondence this can be, and what sort of editorials this man was to write. It is for the Government to explain how they came to send instructions to this man to do what he has been doing, and to have all the power and patronage of the Government in the North-West, with the vast emoluments he has to confer; and it is in the interest, not of the Government, but of Parliament, to know whether this man is bereft of reason, or whether he has good reason to do what he is doing. If he has good reason, it is the first time in the history of Canadian politics that a case like this has occurred; and I think it is due to Parliament that the Government should state whether this man has those powers, or whether he is treading upon the credulity of persons, or giving way to his own imaginations.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. All I can say is this: That there is no correspondence, and there were no instructions "between and from any hon. member of the Government from and to one Amos Rowe"—which, I think, from the way the hon. gentleman has brought the matter up, should be pronounced Row—"assumed proprietor of the Winnipeg Times newspaper, or the said Amos Rowe should pursue in the last General Local Election for the Province of Manitoba, and also the course the said Amos Rowe should pursue in reference to the Tariff, and the charges he should prefer in his newspaper against the hon. Edgar Dewdney, Lieutenant-Governor of the North West Territories." There is no such correspondence, and, therefore, I am sorry to say that we cannot comply with the hon. gentleman's very natural request. This Government, I fancy, like other Governments, are exceedingly glad to have the support of the newspaper press. If the newspapers support the Government, we thank them for it; if they go against us, we are sorry for it. But no Government worthy of the name of a Government can submit to have any organ, and no newspaper worthy of the name of a newspaper can submit to be called a servile organ of any Government. The moment that is understood and known that moment that newspaper is valueless. The general political character of a newspaper, is, of course, known; while it supports one party or the other, it assumes a position of independence with regard to all parties. But we must respect the independence of the press, and the press must respect the independence of the Government. There is no correspondence of any kind. I understand from my hon. friend's speech—I was not aware of it before—that they had been attacking him. Well, I think my hon. friend can afford to dispose of that attack when he knows he is in such good company as the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West and the hon. Minister of Finance; and the very fact that the hon. Minister of Finance is attacked, as well as the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West, shows that certainly it is not an organ having any authority to speak on any subject any more than any Conservative newspaper has that authority, or supposed authority, from the Government. I do not think my hon. friend the Minister of Finance is at all afraid or suspicious of any attack, open or covert, from the hon. Minister of Customs. I fancy they understand each other thoroughly, and will have a good healthy laugh at the speech of my hon. friend in making this motion. They will have a hearty laugh over it, and if they were not both teetotalers they might, perhaps, have a quiet glass of grog over it. There is no correspondence of this kind that I am aware of, or correspondence of any kind. Mr. Amos Rowe and the Winnipeg Times acts on its own responsibility, liable for its own statements, and the Government respect the independence of all papers, Conservative as well as others; and unless they tread very hard on our toes, we do not actually cut off newspapers from anything like Government patronage, because they choose to be independent and occasionally to disapprove of any course or act of the Government. It would be unworthy of any Government to do so, and would reduce the press to what it is, and has been in some countries—thank God not in England, or Canada—the mere servile slave or tool of the Government or party for the time being.

Mr. BOWELL. I think it is just as well that I should give the same declaration publicly to the statement made by my hon. friend, that I gave to him in a private letter, and if he desired to be as fair as I think he ought to be, he should have stated that when the Winnipeg Times was attacking him, that he wrote to me, and I gave him the most positive declaration that I had nothing to do with the Winnipeg Times, directly or indirectly; further, that I had written to Mr. Amos Rowe informing him of the complaint that had been made, that he had been using my name as having an interest in the Winnipeg Times, and asking him if he had made such a statement, and if so, what authority he had for making it. The reply I received from Mr. Rowe, I also forwarded to my hon. friend from —

Mr. WOODWORTH. Somewhere.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes, from somewhere. That letter which gave the most distinct and positive denial that he had made no such statement. After that, I think it was scarcely fair on the part of my hon. friend to have introduced my name, simply because I happened to smile, as every other hon. member did, while he was speaking. I think it is very difficult not to smile when my hon. friend speaks, unless hon. members are a good deal more serious than hon. members generally are. I take this opportunity publicly to give the most emphatic denial to any rumor that may have been put in circulation, either by the proprietor of that paper or any one else, that I had any connection, directly or indirectly, inferentially or any other way, with that paper, outside of the desire to see in all sections of the country party papers, supporting the general policy of the Government of which I have the honor to be a member, succeed. Beyond that I have no interest in the matter one way or the other.

Mr. WOODWORTH. Just one word in reply to the hon. Minister of Customs. As the member for "somewhere" —

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. member should not take me up in that way. I could not, at the moment, remember the name of his constituency,

Mr. WOODWORTH. You used that word.

Mr. BOWELL. I did not use that expression offensively. I tried to remember the hon. gentleman's county, and he said "somewhere," and I repeated it. I apologise.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I think that is the better course, because the hon. gentleman did say "somewhere." I assented to somewhere for I knew it myself. I know this much, that generally that member for "somewhere" has a pretty good recollection of what has taken place within his hearing at least. The hon. Minister of Customs is very unhappy in his laying down of political ethics. He says he wrote me a private letter, and that that should have been sufficient without my mentioning what I did in reference to him. What did I mention? I mentioned that rumor said he was interested in that paper. Could a private letter from him be taken as a public contradiction of that rumor? Could I run round with a private letter and tell the people he had written me a private letter, and show that private letter? No. That is not political, and there is nothing improper or unmanly in the course I took. I gave the hon. Minister the very opportunity which he has seized, and he has ably taken advantage of it—that was to give to Parliament and the country, through the Hansard, a public refutation of that rumor. True, I did write him a letter—a very strong letter—from Winnipeg when this paper was attacking me—and attacking me as it has since—without the slightest scintilla of truth in its attacks. The Toronto Mail the other day—and the Mail, I take it, is to the Conservative party what the Globe is to the Reform party—took that paper to task, and showed that in its attacks it was totally astray; showed that there was not a scintilla of truth in its statements, but that they were entirely erroneous. I shall not speak further on this matter. I am prepared at all times to defend myself, and I have, both in the country and in Parliament, defended myself—how effectually I will leave it to my opponents to judge. But I repeat that I have treated the hon. Minister of Customs most fairly in this matter in giving him the opportunity which he ought to have been, and I think he was, anxious to obtain, namely, to give a denial to these rumors; and I certainly could not do this with a private letter, though the private letter was satisfactory.

Mr. BOWELL. The letter was not marked "private," and, if necessary, I am prepared to bring down all the correspondence.

Mr. WOODWORTH. When an hon. Minister of the Crown rises in his place for so small a matter as an answer, he should be prepared to take the responsibility of the language he has used. When he told the House solemnly this was a private letter I took him to give the full import to the word "private," and he cannot possibly, under cover of the popular sense of the word "private," get rid of the true English meaning. I have not the letter here. He chose to refer to it; I would not refer to it, for I had no right to do so. It was a letter between two persons, one a supporter of the Government, the other a Minister of the Crown. I had no right to refer to it. The hon. Minister of Customs chose to refer to it as a private letter, and, therefore, it does not lie in his mouth to say that letter was public. I take the explanation as fully as he gave it. I do not think it conduces to the harmony of our debates, nor to the popularity of any Minister, that he should cut and pare his words, or give the slightest change of meaning to any reply that he may make to any Independent member of the House. He stands in so high an altitude that he can afford to be generous. As an hon. Minister of the Crown, he is bound to respect members on both sides, especially an Independent member like myself, who does not rouble the House with many motions, and who, unaccustomed to this sort of thing, and almost frightened at the appearance of a motion in his name on the notice paper, rises to make it in fear and trembling. The hon. gentleman says he smiles when I speak. I am glad I make him smile, and I think hon. members who have occasion often to visit his office and do not, during these visits, find that smile on his countenance, will be delighted to see that I have made him smile and shown him in a brighter light. I hope when the hon. gentleman rises to answer a member of this House, that he will use only the language he intends to use, and construe it properly, as I construe it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As there is no correspondence, I would ask the hon. gentleman to withdraw his motion.

Mr. WOODWORTH. There is no Rowe; no Government organ; no Parliament; no attack; no row;—there is nothing.

Motion withdrawn.

PREMIUMS OF INSURANCE.

Mr. LAURIER, in moving for a statement of the total amounts of premiums of insurance against fire collected, and of losses paid, during each of the years 1880, 1881 and 1882, in each of the following cities: Montreal, Quebec, Toronto, Hamilton, Ottawa, Halifax and St. John, N.B., by the several insurance companies authorized to do business in this country, said: I hope there will be no objection to granting these papers, and that the papers will be brought down at an early date. The reason I make this application is, that there are complaints made by the citizens of Quebec concerning the high rate of premium charged by the companies that do business there, under the pretence that the city is not sufficiently protected against fire. The city has done its best recently to improve, and is improving, its system of protection against fire, and it is presumed these papers will show that, in proportion to the premiums received, the losses paid there are not greater than those paid in other cities.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I am not quite sure we have the data in the Insurance Department from which to make this return, and we may have to send to the companies for the information required. Of course, we have the great statement of losses. If we have the details we will bring down the return at once, if not we will obtain the returns from the insurance companies.

Motion agreed to.

OAK ON WALPOLE ISLAND.

Mr. LISTER, in moving for a copy of all correspondence between the Government and one A. Dingman, or any other person or persons, relating to the sale of the oak timber growing on Walpole Island to one Tennant, a copy of the contract of sale, a copy of any offer or offers that may have been made by any person or persons other than said Tennant, to purchase the said oak; a copy of the instructions given by the Government to the Local Indian Agent and to the said Dingman, or either of them, concerning such sale, together with all petitions or letters received by the Government from Indians on the Island, or others, before or since such sale, touching the same, said: Before this motion is put, I desire to make a few observations concerning it. Walpole Island is an Indian reservation situated at the mouth of Lake St. Clair at the foot of the River St. Clair. Upon that Island is growing a very large quantity of valuable oak timber. I understand that on the 27th of June last, that oak, sixteen inches and upwards, was all sold to a man named Tennant for the sum of $10,000. Previous to that date two council meetings of the Indians had been held on the Island for the purpose of considering an offer made by this man for the oak. His first offer was $7,500. This offer was rejected; another meeting was called, and he increased his offer to $10,000, that offer was also rejected; and a third meeting was called specially for the purpose of reconsidering his offer. I may say that, although other offers have been made upon the timber which would have been more advantageous to the Indians, the offer of Mr. Tennant was the only offer submitted to the Indians for their acceptance. I stated, a moment ago, that the first offer made by Mr. Tennant was for $7,500; that was increased to $10,000, at which price he purchased it. The first time the matter was before the Indians $10,000 had been offered by a man named Little, but his offer was not submitted to the Indians, and was withheld by the official representing the Government. At the second meeting of the Indians, Little made an offer of $11,000 for the timber. A special meeting was called for the purpose of considering Tennant's offer. Previous to that meeting being held, Mr. Little had prepared the following offer, which he had circulated among the Indians of the Island in print:

"OFFER FOR TIMBER.

"WALLACEBURG, 27th January, 1883.

"To the Indian Agent and Council of the Walpole Island Reservation:

"GENTLEMEN,—I, Hiram Little, of the village of Wallaceburg, in the county of Kent, and Province of Ontario, Merchant, hereby make the following offer for all the standing white oak timber above 16 inches in diameter, on Walpole Island and adjacent islands, comprising the Walpole Indian Reservation. That is to say, I will pay the sum of $14,500 cash down for such timber, and I will give all the oak tops of such timber to the Indians, to be cut into cord wood, for which I hereby agree to pay 6s. per cord in the bush, and 12s. per cord on the bank, convenient for shipping. And, furthermore, I also agree to build a good dock, fifty feet long, with a warehouse thereon, 14 x 16, in water deep enough that vessels of the largest size may load at John Mokewenah's, the said dock to be completed on April 1st, 1883. And I agree to furnish good security for the building of the dock, and chopping and paying for cord wood, provided I am allowed five years time from March 1st, 1883, to remove the said timber to a place convenient for shipping.

"(Signed)

"HIRAM LITTLE."

That offer was handed to the Indian Agent when the sale was made, but it was not submitted to the Indians; and yet, in the face of that offer, the Indians were called on to vote on Tennant's offer, or not at all, and the consequence was that Tennant's offer for $10,000 was accepted by the Indians. The vote stood sixty-seven to fifty-three, a majority of fourteen in favor of the acceptance of Tennant's offer. On the 30th January a petition was forwarded to the Department of the Interior, signed by seventy-nine Indians, a majority of the Indians of the Island. The petition is as follows:—

"WALPOLE ISLAND, 30th January, 1883.

"L. VANKOUSNET, Esq.,
"Superintendent of Indian Affairs,
"Ottawa.

"DEAR SIR,—We, the undersigned, beg to inform you, that we, the Indians of Walpole Island, held a Council to-day, the 30th of January, 1883, in the Council house.

"We understand that the said Council was to be held for the purpose of discussing an offer made by Hiram Little for the standing white oak timber above 16 inches in diameter, on Walpole and adjacent islands, which we considered was a good offer. The offer is $14,500 cash down. Hiram Little also agrees to give the oak tops of such timber to the Indians, to be cut into cordwood, for which he agrees to pay 6s. per cord in the woods, and 12s. per cord on the bank, convenient for shipping; also, to build a good dock, fifty feet long, with a warehouse thereon, 14x16, in water deep enough that vessels of the largest size may load at John Mokewenah's, east side of the Island, the said dock to be completed on April 1st, 1883. And he further agrees to give or furnish good security for the building of the dock and chopping and paying for cordwood.

"When E. Watson, Esq., Indian Agent, came, and the Council met. Mr. Tennant brought his offer of $10,000, and the tie timber standing on the islands which he still claims, before the Council Mr. Watson took this offer, and did not give any one else a chance, but the said Tennant.

"And we further say, the undersigned Pottawatamies of Walpole Island are not willing to accept the offer that the said Tennant gave for the said oak timber standing on our islands.

"The tie timber which the said Mr. Tennant proposes to give back with his offer of $10,000 are not worth talking about, for he has got about all of them cut or cleared off.

"We would like to accept the offer of $14,500 which Mr. Hiram Little offers, and we most earnestly beg you to give this our petition a due consideration.

"(Signed by 79 members of the band)."

Within two days after the meeting of the Indians, at which the sale was said to have taken place, the above petition, signed, as I have said, by seventy-nine Indians, was forwarded to the Department at Ottawa. No response was made to the petition, as I am informed; and on 23rd March, 1883, or two months after the first petition was presented, a letter was sent to the Department signed by over eighty Indians. That was dated March 28th, and addressed to the Superintendent-General of Indian Affairs. The letter is as follows:—

"WALPOLE ISLAND, 28th March, 1883.

"SIR JOHN A. MACDONALD,
"Supt.-Gen. Indian Affairs,
"Ottawa, Canada.

"SIR,—A meeting was held in the Methodist Mission School House, where a number of the principal men of the Chippewa and Pottawatamie Bands of Indians, of Walpole Island, on the 28th day of March, 1883, where Councillor Joseph Isaac was chairman, for the purpose of again humbly calling your attention to our petition we sent to you, on the 30th day of January, 1883.

"We, the undersigned, do not wish to accept Mr. Tennant's offer of $10,000, when we would lose $4,500 in rejecting Mr. Hiram Little's offer of $14,500. And we wish you to do what is just, and not let us lose the $4,500. You have the matter to decide.

"As you are aware of the fact, Mr. Tennant's agent, Mr. Alex. McKilvey, has begun cutting white oak timber on Walpole Island, having received authority from you, in order that his men and teams might be kept employed. Mr. Tennant has only two teams of horses and one yoke of oxen, and three or four men, at the shanty; but when orders came for to commence cutting the timber, nearly every one of the Indians were employed cutting the timber, and about six teams—that is, other teams that were not employed at the shanty—were hired to haul timber to the banks of the river, and are employed at the present time.

"Mr. Tennant's shanty is not what it ought to be. The law forbids that anything that will intoxicate shall be given to any Indian. Mr. Tennant's men were known to have had whiskey at their shanty, and have given it to Indians that were employed at the shanty, and others. A party was held at the Council House not long ago, where some of his (Mr. Tennant's) men went with some intoxicants, and made a disturbance; in fact they spoiled the meeting. The meeting was held for a benevolent object. This is one of the reasons why we do not wish to accept Mr. Tennant's offer.

"We have known Mr. Hiram Little for a good while. He is an honest man, and one that wants to treat the Indians right.

"We subscribe our names, accepting Mr. Hiram Little's offer of $14,500

"We most earnestly and humbly beg you to give this our humble petition a due consideration.

"(Signed by 79 members of the band.)"

On March 15th, a letter was written to the Department, by one of the Indians, protesting against the sale that had been made. An answer, dated March 21st, was received, as follows:—

"OTTAWA, 21st March, 1863.

"Sir,—In reply to your letter of the 15th instant, I beg to inform you that Mr. Tennant received authority from the Department to go on cutting white oak timber on Walpole Island, in order that his teams and men might be kept employed; but he is not to remove any of the timber from the reserve, until it has been decided whether or not his offer of $10,000 is to be accepted.

"So soon, therefore, as the Superintendent-General gives his decision in the matter, Mr. Superintendent Watson will be requested to inform the Indians thereof, and in the meantime Mr. Tennant may go on cutting the timber.

"I am, Sir, your obedient servant,

"ROB. SINCLAIR,

"For Deputy of the Supt.-Genl. of Indian Affairs.

"Mr. JOHN CHAMBERLAIN, Walpole Island,
"Wallaceburg, P. O., Ont."

That is the only response which the Indians were able to elicit from the Department as to its intention respecting this timber. Mr. Tennant went immediately into possession, and placed men on the Island, and commenced cutting this valuable timber, which is worth at least $20,000; and the only security the Indians have, is, that according to the Department's letter, the lumber is not to be removed until the matter has been decided by the Superintendent-General of Indian Affairs. Now, Sir, I desire to say here, that I do not believe it is just to the Indians, and in their interest, that this timber should be sold by private sale in the way in which it appears to have been done. The Government of the country are the masters of the Indians of this country, who are not accorded any rights which the other inhabitants of this country enjoy. They are not permitted to make contracts. They are not permitted to sell land, or to lease or to sell timber. Everything that appertains to their property must be transacted through the Indian Office at Ottawa; and it is incumbent on the Department to see that the fullest justice is done to the Indians of the country; and if it be true, that in the face of an offer of $14,500, one of $10,000 only was accepted by the Government, then I say that a flagrant wrong has been done to the Indians on this reservation. I hope that this is not true, and that the hon. gentleman at the head of the Department has seen fit to cancel any obligation, because it appears, according to a letter sent to the Department, that the offer was under consideration, but had not been concluded. No binding obligation on the Department existed, and if such be the case, Mr. Tennant bought it in that way; and until the Department has sanctioned the purchase, he has no more right to it than any person else, although it appears that the Government, to a certain extent, have recognized his right, because they have permitted him to go on the Island and cut timber and to haul it on shore. Under these circumstances, it will be difficult to understand, if the Government refuses to carry out the arrangement, how they can put Mr. Tennant in statu quo. As I stated a moment ago, the Indians are wards of the Government, and the Government I have, no doubt, will feel, that it is their duty to see that the Indians are fairly and properly dealt with, that their property when sold, brings the highest price, and that the responsibility of the Government is as great in every extent as that of a guardian would be for the property of his ward. I understand, that Mr. Tennant visited Ottawa two or three times previous to the sale. It is rumored, in the village of Wallaceburg, he stated that he saw the right

hon. head of the Government about the matter, and the directions were sent to the Indian Agent to carry out some bargain. Beyond contradiction at all events the offer of Hiram Little was not submitted to the Indians, although it was there, and they could not vote on it at all. People may ask, why the hon. gentleman should be so favorable to Mr. Tennant. I may say that Mr. Tennant, formerly, was a Reformer, and is the gentleman who opposed the hon. Christopher Fraser at Brockville. He left his party, and, perhaps, for his political apostacy he expected to get something in the shape of this timber on the Island. At all events he is a Reformer, who left his party for the purpose of opposing Mr. Fraser, and this investigation may throw some light on the reason why he opposed Mr. Fraser at the last Election. I bring the matter before the hon. gentleman in the hope that no bargain has been concluded, in the hope that if the timber is to be sold it will be put up at public auction, and that the fullest justice will be done these Indians. If anything less than that is done, I feel satisfied in saying that the people of this country will not approve of what the Government has done in this matter, because if there is one thing above another which they are sensitive about, it is that the Indians of this country, who have surrendered almost everything they have, shall be fully and properly protected by the Government, their guardians in every sense.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman has stated his case in favor of these poor, unfortunate Indians, with all that strong desire which must actuate the mind of every philanthropist, to protect the red man of the forest against any possible injury, or injustice done him by the whites; but I am not at all sure that the hon. gentleman did not, before he had finished his speech, show, perhaps, that there was something else besides philanthropy that induced him to make that motion. He says he hears that Mr. Tennant, the gentleman who is said to be the favored man by the Department, was formerly a Reformer, and that he ran against Mr. Fraser at Brockville, and, therefore, he insinuates that in consequence of his running against Mr. Fraser, he was unduly favored. Now, it occurs to me that a person who is suspicious of other people's honesty must be a little lacking in what constitutes an honest mind. I venture to say that if Mr. Tennant, instead of running against Mr. Fraser, had continued a devoted fellower to Mr. Fraser, and supported him and the party, in which the hon. gentleman is a distinguished, or rather a new member, this motion would not have been made.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). He never got the timber.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We will have a little talk about that matter; and I shall take care that the papers are brought down as soon as they can be copied. I shall not give even the excuse which I am obliged to give in that respect to other matters—that the pressure of business has prevented them being brought down; but I will have them brought down at once, and set the officers at once to copy these papers, so that the House shall be charged with the matter immediately. With respect to the timber on Walpole Island, this Indian timber, it belongs to the Indians, who dispose of their own timber after their fashion, and the Government, which is their guardian, and especially the Superintendent-General of Indian Affairs, which office I hold at this moment, is bound to protect the Indians against their own acts; but still, whenever the Indians take a course which is reasonable, the Government, of course, allow them the opportunity, as they have the right, of dealing with their own property. Now, the hon. gentleman says that Mr. Tennant made a certain offer. Those matters did not even come before me. They are managed by the local agent, Mr. Watson, who is, perhaps, known to some gentlemen on the other side; but Mr. Watson is certainly not known to me personally, though I believe that he is the reverse of being a political friend. As I understand the matter—it came to me after the preliminary question to which the hon. gentleman has alluded, was concluded—an offer was made for this timber on Walpole Island by Mr. Tennant, a lumberman who lives at Brockville; he undertaking to leave the undergrowth of small timber for future growth, uncut; and he afterwards increased his first offer. This is one of those cases in which there is a struggle between enterprising lumbermen—between Mr. Tennant and Mr. Little. The latter, however, did not appear on the stage at all, as I understand it. Mr. Tennant made an offer to the Indians, and Mr. Watson, the agent, summoned a council. He offered $7,000, as the hon. gentleman says, and then, I think, he subsequently offered a larger sum, $10,000. A council was summoned, and the Indians agreed to sell this timber for the $10,000. Mr. Little, anxious to overbid his competitor, his rival, Mr. Tennant, put in another offer, without agreeing to reserve the smaller timber. The Indians were informed at this meeting of Mr. Little's offer. A council was summoned, and you, Mr. Speaker, and the House, can well understand that when a council is summoned for a particular purpose, that particular purpose only can be put to the Indians. They must get full notice of what the subject is for which they are summoned. They were summoned to say whether they would accept this offer; but afterwards it had to come to the Superintendent-General, and it had to come to me. Mr. Watson, without any consent, without any communication with the Department here, or with Mr. Vankoughnet—I never interfere in these practical matters unless they are brought before me as matters of appeal—submitted for the Indians the question: "Will you accept Mr. Tennant's offer?" At the same time they were informed of Mr. Little's offer; and notwithstanding that they had Mr. Little's offer before them, they thought that Mr. Tennant's offer was the best one, and in solemn council they accepted Mr. Tennant's offer, because they thought they would rather get the money for the larger description of timber, saving for themselves the young trees, rather than give Mr. Little what his offer meant, namely, to get the whole of the timber for $14,500. The Indians accepted Mr. Tennant's offer, and therefore the matter went on in the usual way. Nobody knew anything about it, and Mr. Tennant sent up his cattle to get out his timber. Then it came to the notice of the Government—it came before me, that it was alleged by Mr. Little that Mr. Tennant had bribed some of the chiefs to vote to give the timber to him rather than to Mr. Little. Although the proposition to the Indians was: "Will you accept Mr. Tennant's offer or not," still the reasons why they should not accept Mr. Tennant's offer were before them in Mr. Little's proposition. It is quite true that Mr. Tennant came and pressed his case; but, on the other hand, affidavits were produced that Mr. Little had been bribing the Indians right and left, and it was quite clear that it was simply a fight between two white lumberers who should get the timber. In consequence of having these contradictory statements before me, I sent a special inspector up to report upon the facts, and I have lately got his report. In the meantime, there was a solemn vote of the Indians for the sale of the timber, and Mr. Tennant had got his cattle there. It was winter time, and there was no means of taking away or stealing the timber, and instructions were given that he might use his teams to get out the timber as it could not be taken away. But that matter is now under my consideration, and I will not promise to have it decided until after the House rises. I have submitted the papers and the whole of the affidavits on both sides to the Minister of Justice. The Government desire to do what is right with regard to the Indians. The hon. gentleman ventures to insinuate that Mr. Tennant got certain rights because he was going to be a candidate as an old recalcitrant Reformer. But there are some such men who do not require contracts to leave the Reform party. The insinuation is that Mr. Tennant got special rights, but he got no such rights. I sent Mr. Dingman, our agent, there to report upon the matter. I have his report, and I find it is a case of the pot calling the kettle black. I am afraid that both sides have not been considering the rights of the red man, but have been considering only how each could get the best of the other. I refused to decide in favor of Mr. Tennant, although Mr. Watson, who is a very good Reformer, and a very honest man, has reported in his favor, and has reported that on the whole the Indians thought Mr. Tennant's offer a better one than Mr. Little's. Mr. Tennant, under the old contract—for this is an extension of the contract—owns all the small trees, and in consideration of his getting the contract for the heavier timber, he agreed to give up the contract by which he could have swept away all the young trees. The Indians thought that that was the better contract of the two—they thought that it was better to have the $10,000 in hand and to preserve the timber. Whether they are right or wrong I cannot say. I shall sit as a Judge upon that matter; I have got the opinion and the report of Mr. Watson, and I shall bring them down, when the House will see how unjust and how unfair the insinuations of the hon. gentleman are.

Mr. LISTER. I may say, in the first place, that I congratulate the right hon. gentleman on the accession he has got to his party in getting Mr. Tennant, and I trust that gentleman will never wander back into the Liberal fold again. If the right hon. gentleman will read Mr. Little's offer he will find that in every respect it far exceeds the offer made by Mr. Tennant. The Indians would receive an advantage of $4,500 over Mr. Tennant's offer, and in every respect his offer was more advantageous to the Indians than the other. I suppose the inspector whom the hon. gentleman sent up to report on the facts and to adjudicate upon the right of the Indians is Mr. Dingman. If that be the case I can only say that I am very sorry for the Indians.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. And I can only say that Mr. Dingman is an honest man than you are.

Mr. LISTER. I would ask the right hon. gentleman whether Mr. Little's offer was subjected to a vote, because my instructions are that it was not, and that the Indians were told that they could only vote on Mr. Tennant's offer. I am also informed that if the Indians had had the opportunity of voting upon Mr. Little's offer they would have supported it. They may have tried to bribe the Indians, or they may not, but in any case the rights of the Indians should be protected, and what the rights of the Indians are it is the duty of the Government to ascertain. If it appears by the evidence that the Indians have been deprived of the sum of $4,500 by awarding this contract to Mr. Tennant, then a wrong has been done to them which the Government should rectify, and which I believe the hon. First Minister will try to rectify if possible. Some people say he will not, but I have more faith in the right hon. gentleman than to believe that.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I wish to say, in the first place, that the original contract was given by the late Government—the Mackenzie Government—to Mr. Tennant. It was given, perhaps, at a too low rate. The smaller timber, the whole timber, was sold, and, in the meantime, Mr. Little could not make a sale, and Mr. Tennant did; because if Mr. Little had got the contract for the timber instead of Mr. Tennant, he could not get the smaller timber, that belonged to Mr. Tennant under the contract given to him by the Mackenzie Government.

Mr. LISTER. The small timber on the Island had been skinned long ago, and it was not necessary to sell the large timber.

Mr. TAYLOR. I merely wish to correct the impression left on the House that Mr. Tennant is a resident of Brockville. Such is not the case, he is a resident of South Leeds, a township which gave him a majority against me in the last election of 117. The statement has been made that Mr. Tennant had left the Reform party. To controvert that statement I wish to read one section of a copy of his address, in which he says:

"As a life long Reformer my views upon the public issues of the day are well known to the majority of the electors. If elected I will give an honest legislation a cordial support. Should the convention which assembles on Saturday select a candidate from the county I pledge myself to resign my candidature, and in the event of the Liberal-Conservatives bringing out a candidate I will also resign, but with Mr. Fraser as the only nominee I shall remain in the field until the last vote is polled."

Now that township gave 117 majority against me, and gave forty only against Mr. Fraser. So I hope the hon. gentleman's convictions will grow, and if he has left the Reform party he will help me probably in the next election.

Motion agreed to.

MOTIONS FOR RETURNS.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT, 1874.

House again resolved itself into Committee on Bill (No. 85) to amend the Dominion Elections Act of 1874.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BOLDUC proposed the following amendment to section 1:—

And such security shall be given by bonds of the person so suing, jointly and severally with some solvent and sufficient person to the satisfaction of the Judge of the court in which the action or information is brought; or by the deposit of the said sum in gold or Dominion notes with the said clerk, to be applied to or towards the payment of the costs of the defendant; if the case is dismissed with costs, the balance, if any, being returnable to the person so suing, and the whole sum deposited being returned to him if the case is decided in his favor.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

GRADUATES OF THE ROYAL MILITARY COLLEGE.

On the Order for the second reading of Bill (No. 33) to provide for the admission to the profession of Dominion Land Surveyors of Graduates of the Royal Military College, being read,
Mr. TAYLOR.

Mr. CASGRAIN. As I understand the hon. Minister if Militia is opposed to this measure, I do not intend to press of any further this Session. This Bill was not brought in by me on my own responsibility, and I have no personal interest in its subject-matter. My object in bringing in the measure was solely to benefit the institution. It would appear that there is so much competition in that line of education that all institutions desire to be on the same footing; therefore, if this Bill passed it would create some difficulty which I do not desire to raise. I shall ask leave of the House to withdraw the Bill; but before doing so I desire to repel an accusation which was made in the press last Session when I brought in a similar Bill. It was said that I had some personal interest in this matter. Now, I desire positively to state that I have not the least possible interest in this matter; and the circumstance that I have a son in that institution would not influence me to do anything which might be contrary to the public interest. This Bill was brought in by me at the suggestion of some person who had a direct interest in the school, and who thought it was best in the interests of this institution. That is all I have to say on the matter, and, with the permission of the House, I move to withdraw the Bill.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would say that I have not the slightest doubt that my hon. friend was actuated by any other than Parliamentary motives, on introducing this Bill. It is a measure which strikes one at first as being a correct measure; but, on the whole, I think that the hon. gentleman has exercised a wise discretion in withdrawing it. It has caused a complete furore among the Dominion land surveyors, in the first place, and then I have received representations from almost every college institution, in both Ontario and Quebec, against it, stating that it was placing the alumni in a better position, and giving them greater opportunity of forwarding their position than is accorded to any other university or college, and they complain of the inequality of it; therefore, the Government think that they must either oppose this Bill or grant the same privilege to the graduates of all colleges. I am glad my hon. friend has withdrawn the Bill, having called the attention of the Government and the country to the measure. As to my hon. friend having a personal interest in it, I am quite sure he has not.

Bill withdrawn.

CLAIMS TO LANDS IN MANITOBA.

On the Order for the second reading of Bill (No. 109) to amend the Act for the final settlement of claims to lands in Manitoba by occupancy under the Act 33 Vic., chap. 3, being read,

Mr. ROYAL. I would respectfully call the attention of the right hon. head of the Government to the grievances that exist, and which this Bill seeks to remove. I hope the right hon. gentleman will see his way clear to take some means, either by administrative measure or otherwise, to allow those parties who are debarred from filing applications to get their patents to do so. I move for leave to withdraw the Bill.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is a Private Bill, and ought, therefore, to have been proceeded with by petition. I have already had communication with the hon. gentleman on the matter, and it is one that the Government will undertake to consider with a desire of settling immediately all those claims. There are very few of them, and they ought to be settled, and will be settled very shortly.

Bill withdrawn.

ROADS AND ROAD ALLOWANCES IN MANITOBA.

Mr. ROYAL in moving the second reading of Bill (No. 110) to amend the Act respecting roads and road allowances in Manitoba, said: This is an Act to enable the Government to transfer certain powers under this Act to the Provincial Government of Manitoba in respect to certain road allowances. I suppose that the Land Bill will make some provision by which these grievances may be remedied, without, perhaps, requiring a special Bill on the subject.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If my hon. friend would move the second reading of the Bill now, and commit it for to-morrow, I will look into it in the meantime, and if I can I will allow the hon. gentleman to carry it into law.

Bill read the second time.

PENITENTIARIES.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on resolution respecting sums to be annually paid to the warden and the other officers and servants of any penitentiary established under the provisions of Bill (No. 111) respecting penitentiaries.

Resolution considered in Committee and reported.

CANADA CIVIL SERVICE ACT.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 90) to amend the Canada Civil Service Act 1882.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

On section 7,

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I wish to call attention to the fifth sub-section. Attorneys, barristers, engineers, architects, actuaries, and land surveyors are exempt from examination; why is this?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. These gentlemen are employed in the service in the practice of their professions, and, therefore, an examination is not required, as they have already passed technical examination before their admission into the ranks of their professions.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I think that this is nothing more than is due to their professional standing, and I have a suggestion which I think worthy of consideration to make, by which the labor of the examiners might be very much relieved. Other professions, whose examinations are higher than those of the Civil Service, might be well placed on the same footing. For instance, take the teaching profession. No person can hold a Provincial certificate in any of the Provinces without passing a more rigid examination than is required from Civil Service candidates, and would it not be an act of courtesy to this profession to also acknowledge their status. The examinations for almost any, even the lowest grade, are higher than those of the Civil Service; and as concerns the other grades, they are infinitely higher. The examiners by this means would be relieved of a great deal of labor, and I and any person acquainted with this profession would be able to guarantee that those holding certificates in this way, having passed those examinations, would be, from an educational standpoint at least, much better qualified than any person, who is barely able to pass the Civil Service examination. When I make this suggestion, the hon. gentleman will understand that I am speaking for in the neighborhood of 15,000 or 18,000 teachers in the Dominion of Canada. In Ontario we have 7,000, exclusive of high school teachers; in Quebec, 4,000 or 5,000; in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, over 3,000, making 15,000, while the remainder belong to Prince Edward Island and British Columbia. It would be a mark of honor, shall I say—conferred upon this profession to allow these certificates to take rank; and this would be nothing more than what is similarly recognized in Ontario, where a person holding a certain grade of certificate is admitted without examination into certain professions. An intermediate certificate from the high school is equivalent to passing the matriculation examination in medicine, and the College of Dental Surgeons makes a similar recognition. I make the same request with regard to the Civil Service; and I can safely make it, because these certificates guarantee much higher qualifications from an educational standpoint than those which are necessary to pass the Civil Service examinations.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am sorry that I cannot agree with my hon. friend. The hon. gentleman must see that the exceptions here made are in favor of professional men who are employed in the practice of their professions, and, therefore, we are certain that they are qualified to fill these offices; but the same reason will not hold good for schoolmasters or professors, who, if they entered the Civil Service, would be employed in other capacities. If we were to exempt these parties, some, though not all of whom, are certainly learned, further extensions of the principle would be demanded. Of course, if all these persons had the qualifications of my hon. friend, perhaps we might make the exception, but I am sorry to say that this is not the case. I know that gentlemen admitted to certain learned professions experience very great difficulty even after they have passed their examinations, in passing the Civil Service examinations; and it is better after all, that the examinations should be somewhat severe in the beginning, in order that the impression may get abroad that these examinations are only held for fun and pro forma. It is, however, now well known to those outside, that the Civil Service examinations, though not too severe, are serious, and those who are admitted to the service have to show that they are qualified. I think my hon. friend will not insist upon the admission of these parties. I know some of them who have the qualifications, but I have others in my eye whose qualifications would not be sufficient.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I am free to admit that the hon. members of that profession have not the technical qualifications which are required; but as I understand the design of the Bill is that no person is to be admitted into the service who does not possess a certain educational standing. I have here a list of the subjects required for the Civil Service examinations, and I find that they are fewer in number, and more limited, and that the questions are far easier than the examinations required for teachers. As the greater includes the less I should think that the hon. gentleman would be willing to admit a class who are possessed of perhaps two, or three, or four times the qualifications required by the Act, especially as the examiners would thereby be saved a large amount of time and trouble. I think the hon. Minister should graciously concede the point, in the interests, not only of the service, but of the teaching profession to whom it would offer an additional inducement to attain a high educational standard.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman must see that if we concede this to the teachers, we would also have to concede it to many other classes—to graduates of our universities, colleges, &c. The exceptions would be so numerous that very few persons would remain to pass the examinations. Since, however, these persons are so able to pass the examinations I cannot see that any great hardship should be done, and even if it does give the examiners a little more trouble they are paid for it.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I would like to know from the hon. Minister how many of those who passed the examinations have since been admitted into the service.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. About sixty-six or sixty-seven I think. I will send the list across the floor, so that the hon. gentleman may see it.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). That information is very gratifying, but I hope there have been no violations of the Act. I am informed that the hon. Minister of Finance has placed in his Department a Toronto barrister who has not passed the examination. I think the success of this Civil Service Act will depend entirely upon its being carried out in good faith.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman will see by referring to the thirty-fourth clause of the Civil Service Act, that there are powers given to exempt persons from the examinations in certain cases, and if any such appointments have been made such as the hon. gentleman has referred to I am sure he will find, if he puts a question on the paper, that they have been made under that clause.

Mr. PLATT. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman why he has excluded the medical profession from the list of exemptions under that clause?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I may say that the Government are in such good health that we do not require the services of medical men as medical men. When they are required they enter the service like other persons; but if a medical man was required for a quarantine, for example, he would come in under the clause which provides that for special purposes examinations may not be exacted.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I am going to request the hon. Minister to consider the case of the cadets of the Royal Military College, as I think they should be placed among that favored class. When the College was established it was held out as an inducement to enter it that vacancies might occur in the Civil Service which they would be qualified to fill, and these vacancies would be kept as a sort of special reserve. I do not want to give them any special favors, but they are a class of young men who are especially educated at the expense of the Government, and they have a technical education which would make them very useful to the Minister of Militia.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am afraid the hon. gentleman was not present a moment ago when the hon. First Minister, in replying to another hon. member, stated that we could not concede to that principle, for if we granted it to the cadets of the Royal Military College, we would have to concede it also to the young gentlemen who come out of our colleges and universities all over the country, and who receive in these institutions as high an education as the cadets receive at Kingston.

Mr. CARON. As the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross) knows, the education which these cadets receive is so high that I am quite sure that they would not like to be exempted from the examinations which others have to undergo to enter the service.

Mr. BLAKE. Some discussion took place at an earlier stage of the Bill with regard to the appointment of certain classes of officers without examination and without reference to the rules for promotion. I am not disposed to quarrel with that provision, subject to certain limitations. In the earlier part of section thirty-three, the principle is laid down that when an examination is dispensed with, it must be for reasons assigned by the Deputy-Head; and it appears to me that in an Act of this description, in which we are laying it down as a general principle that appointments to promotions shall take place upon examinations and under certain rules, any exception which we introduce we should carefully endeavor to guard it against abuse; and I suggest this addition to the third sub-section:

"Where the public interest requires it, but appointments under this sub-section shall be made only on a report, giving reasons therefor, and such report shall be laid before Parliament within ten days after the commencement of the Session."

I think the rule in the bulk of these appointments should be upon promotion and examination. But as the hon. gentleman says, preventive officers at small ports could not be expected to come up for examination. Still, I think the principle of the Act should be departed from only upon this precaution.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. These city postmasters are not numerous. There are perhaps only twelve or fourteen cities in the Dominion, and the hon. gentleman knows that as a rule these city postmasterships are not given to the ordinary run of officers, but to persons who are not only qualified, but who have rendered service to their country; and I think the hon. gentleman will acknowledge that the same rule in that respect has been followed by all Governments. They are generally men of higher rank than those who are appointed to ordinary offices, and we apply the same rule to them that we do to the deputy-heads of Departments. I would also call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that, in cases of special official or technical qualifications, we exempt from examination. Moreover, this clause is a permissive one, not an obligation, so that the Government may, if they have any doubts about a man's qualifications, subject him to examination the same as other officers. With regard to making a report to the House in the first ten days of the Session, the hon. gentleman will remember that by the Civil Service Act, we are bound to lay before Parliament in the beginning of the Session, a list of the appointments made during the year.

Mr. BLAKE. My hon. friend has taken the same course on this occasion that he did before—he has confined his attention to the case of postmasters. If it is the will of the House that the city postmasterships should be made political prizes, well and good; but the clause is far more extensive. It applies to all collectors and preventive officers in the Customs and Inland Revenue Departments, and my observations were directed principally to them. They stand in a different position in every way from the twelve or fourteen city postmasters. I think that when this clause is allowed not to apply to certain classes, there should be a special report. For instance, a preventive officer at a small salary, and in a remote port, could not be held to pass an examination. I think that when special circumstances exist which warrant a departure from the general provisions of the Act, the hon. Minister should make a report of those cases.

On section 11,

Mr. BLAKE. While I agree that the central duty of an officer is the observance of fidelity to the Government which is proposed to be imposed by this Act—though I am not a very great believer in promissory oaths of any kind—I think the words that are inserted in the schedule are open to some exception. I think if we give the Governor in Council power to say to John Jones: "I call upon you to take this oath," that it is of doubtful expediency, and that it ought either to apply to whole classes of officers, or else the whole service ought to take an oath in that form. I do not think it is right that the Governor in Council should be permitted to exact the oath of any particular officer as proposed in the schedule.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There may be an officer who is away, or who may have been forgotten, and of course there must be some provision by which he may be called upon to take the oath. The clause says these officers will have to take the oath, while if they do not take the oath some one must compel them to do their duty, and the Head of the Department would say to the sub-head: "Call upon Mr. So-and-So to go and take the oath of office before the Clerk of the Privy Council." I think that is a very proper thing.

Mr. BLAKE. The meaning of this clause is to require that the Clerk of the Privy Council, and all the officers of the Privy Council, shall take the additional oath, and then to add that any other officer that the Governor in Council require shall take the additional oath.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. For example, the Privy Council is the most confidential office, and the officers there will necessarily be called upon to take the oath—not that there is any additional reason now why they should be compelled to do so, because they are good officers and fulfil their duty well; they are discreet and do not violate the secrecy of the office. But this rule should apply all round. There may be a good reason, for example, why the confidential clerk of a Minister should be called upon to take the oath; for instance, the Secretary of the First Minister becomes cognizant of very important matters, important papers and despatches pass through his hands, and it is absolutely necessary that these things should not be divulged. The hon. Minister may call upon his clerk to take this special oath, and I think this clause is a very proper thing.

Mr. BLAKE. I am afraid it will not produce the good results the hon. gentleman expects. I believe that if you apply by this provision a separate standard, as it were, of obligation to some officers whom you call upon to take the oath, you almost say to others whom you do not call upon to take the oath that you do not consider them quite so bad as the others; that as the others are sworn to secrecy and these are not, those who are so sworn are not so trustworthy. I almost fear that this provision will do more harm than good. When you call upon a particular officer, and not upon a whole class, to take the oath, you almost imply there is some reason to suspect him. If the hon. gentleman thinks the oath is desirable I would suggest that it should be applied to all officers in that position.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. My hon. friend must remember that there are certain officers now who have always been called upon to take an oath of that kind. The Clerk of the Privy Council, the Assistant Clerk, and all the clerks of the Privy Council, take the oath. Nobody has complained of that. We propose now to continue the provision, and give some latitude to the Government. Should the Government find it desirable to extend the oath to the whole service it might do so.

Bill reported.

THE CUSTOMS ACT.

Mr. BOWELL, in moving concurrence in the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 34) to amend and consolidate the Act respecting Customs, said: The only change is the substitution of the word "whether" in one line, and striking out the word "may" in another; and in the provision limiting the time within which proceedings may be commenced against an officer for dereliction of duty, they add the words "or upon any officer of Customs."

Amendments concurred in.

THE POST OFFICE ACT, 1875.

Mr. CARLING, in moving the second reading of Bill (No. 92) to amend the Post Office Act, 1875, said: The nature of the amendment is to prevent the post office being used for the circulation of letters or information concerning illegal lotteries. The necessity for the Bill has arisen on account of persons having established themselves in New Brunswick for the purpose of forwarding the interests of lotteries in the United States. Under the United States Postal Law they cannot circulate such information through the mails in the United States; but if they are mailed in Canada they are sent there.

Mr. BLAKE. And the only change is the addition of a provision as to lotteries in the existing Act.

Mr. CARLING. Yes. The following words are added in sub-section twenty-seven of section seventy-two:—

Or any letter or circular concerning an illegal lottery, so-called gift concert, or other similar enterprise offering prizes or concerning schemes devised and intended to deceive and defraud the public for the purpose of obtaining money under false pretences, shall be a misdemeanor.

Bill read the second time, considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time, and passed.

THIRD READING.

The following Bill was read the second time, considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time, and passed:—

Bill (No. 94) to amend an Act respecting the offices of Receiver General and Minister of Public Works, as to the powers of the Minister of Railways and Canals.—(Sir Charles Tupper.)

GOVERNMENT WORKS ON RIVERS AND STREAMS.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved that the House resolve itself into Committee to consider a certain proposed resolution (April 19th) respecting the regulations and collection of tolls and dues for the use of Government works constructed to facilitate the transmission of timber and lumber down rivers and streams.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. Minister explain the object of the resolution?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Difficulty has arisen under the present law as it has been found impossible to collect the tolls. It has been established, in the case of the Merchants' Bank vs. The Queen, that after a mill owner has sawn timber into deals and other lumber and piled it in his yard, we cannot follow and identify the lumber as having been cut from particular logs, and are, therefore, unable in some cases to collect the dues. It is proposed to give authority to follow that timber in order to collect stumpage dues on the timber.

Motion agreed to, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BLAKE. It is not proposed then to alter the dues, but simply to render the collection more easy. What is the nature of the provision which it is proposed to introduce?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Clause three of the Bill makes provision to cover the case. Section four provides that if the lumber was manufactured before the dues are collected, and although it becomes mixed up with other manufactured lumber, the whole of the lumber shall be liable for the dues actually owing to the Government.

Mr. BLAKE. Is it intended that this shall take place no matter through how many hands the timber or lumber may have passed, or only is it while the lumber is in the hands of the person who is liable to the Government for the dues?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I do not think it would apply after the timber passes out of the hands of the owner, who so owes the Government. The hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. White) who takes very great interest in these matters, has been communicated with by most of the lumber merchants to watch the clauses of this Bill; and one of the reasons why I suggested that we should take the second reading tomorrow, is in order to afford that hon. gentleman an opportunity of being present and discussing these clauses.

Resolution reported.

Mr. COSTIGAN introduced Bill (No. 126) to make further provision respecting the regulation and collection of tolls on Government Timber Slides and other works constructed to facilitate the transmission of timber, lumber and saw-logs.

Bill read the first time.

PENITENTIARIES LAWS' CONSOLIDATION BILL.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moving the second reading of Bill (No. 111) to amend and consolidate the Laws relating to Penitentiaries, said: I do not propose to discuss this matter to-night, as I have not quite read the brief, and would suggest the discussion be deferred.

Mr. BLAKE. I have no objection to that at all on this understanding, that if after discussion in Committee, I should ask the hon. gentleman to postpone the third reading until the day following, he will do so.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Certainly.

Bill read the second time.

HARBOR OF THREE RIVERS' HARBOR MASTER BILL.

Mr. BOWELL in moving the second reading of Bill (No. 121) respecting the Harbor Master of the Harbor of Three Rivers, said: It is simply intended to change the mode of appointment, and to confirm the appointment of the harbor master of Three Rivers, and to give the Commissioners power to appoint him in future, and to pay him by salary instead of by fees. It is also provided that nothing in this Act shall impair the power of the Governor in Council as to the appointment and removal of the said Commissioners. The appointment of harbor master was formerly made by the Governor in Council, this power is transferred to the Commissioners as is the case at other ports.

Mr. BLAKE. If I remember aright, it was only a very little while ago that we passed an Act touching the harbor of Three Rivers, and I suppose that this Bill alters the provisions of that Act.

Mr. BOWELL. We passed such a Bill last year, I think.

Bill read the second time, considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

183. Canada Gazette $4,500.00

Mr. BLAKE. Why this increase?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. This is an additional expense for notices, I presume.

Mr. BLAKE. But additional notices mean additional payments, do they not?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. This amount has been sent in by the Queen's printer.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). What is the revenue from the Canada Gazette? I have searched for it in the Public Accounts but cannot find it. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will ascertain and let us know.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I notice that the Ontario Gazette nearly pays expenses, and I think the Canada Gazette should give a handsome revenue.

Mr. BLAKE. I always understood that advertisements were the life of publications of this sort; but the hon. gentleman says the more advertisements the more cost.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Perhaps the other expenses have increased in the same proportion.

Mr. COSTIGAN.

184. Miscellaneous printing $12,000.00

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Why this increase?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I notice that the expenditure last year was $11,204, which was $1,204 more than the vote, so it was thought necessary to increase the appropriation.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I think the hon. gentleman should tell us in what direction he expects to expend this large amount of money. Although we have not passed it, there is another item of $60,000 for printing. In the Department of Marine and Fisheries I notice that there is an appropriation of $1,500 for printing the report of the shipping of Canada. Then there is a similar vote for the Department of Railways, and I think there is another vote of the same kind under another head. Then we have here $2,000 more for miscellaneous printing, or, in all, $73,000 in the items which I have named for printing, some of it miscellaneous, and some of it, I suppose, Parliamentary. From information which is in the possession of the Public Accounts Committee, some of the miscellaneous printing would appear to be very miscellaneous indeed. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will explain why he proposes to increase this vote.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I find, under the head of miscellaneous printing in the Public Accounts, Henry Hartney, Parliamentary reports, $13,875.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Does the hon. gentleman propose to expend this vote in the same way as it was spent last year?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I presume so, as it is under this head. There is another item, as the hon. gentleman recollects, which is held in reserve.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Yes; $60,000 for that item. I do not know that it is in order for me to refer to what took place in the Public Accounts Committee, as it has not reported, but I might say that it would be well for the Government to consider whether the printing bills might not be materially reduced by directing that the work so far as practicable should be done by the contractors for the Parliamentary printing. Under the head of Miscellaneous Printing, I find the sum of $732 paid for printing and binding Budget Speech, and $839 for printing and binding it in French. I offer no objection to the expenditure of the money, for that particular purpose, but I say that a smaller sum—perhaps less than half that amount—would give equal results if it were printed and published by the Parliamentary Printers. Perhaps the hon. gentleman does not remember that when work of this kind is done outside it is not only liable to heavy charges under what are called confidential rates, but last year a considerable sum extra was paid for the translation of the Budget Speech. No doubt the Budget Speech was translated by the translators of the Debates in regular form, but I find an item of something like $86 for translating that speech. This is a charge which could be obviated by allowing the contractor to run off the Budget Speech from the same form as the Official Debates.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. With reference to employing a translator of the House to do the extra work, it could not be expected that he would do that work under his salary, as it is outside of his regular business. With reference to this printing and translation I may say that, I believe, I am following the example of my illustrious predecessor. If there is anything wrong I think he will find that it was continued precisely in the same way.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). The translation was not extra service, because he had to translate the speech for the Official Debates, and all he had to do was to hand over the printed sheet to the publisher of the Ottawa Citizen, and put in his extra charge as if he had done extra work, which work he did not do.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman has misunderstood the hon. Finance Minister. What he said was that he was pursuing the same policy as his predecessor; and I think if he refers to the Public Accounts he will find that the Budget Speeches of the late hon. Finance Minister were not published by the Parliamentary printers, but by an independent printing office, and that there was a special and distinct charge for translation.

Mr. ROSS. I do not think so.

Mr. BOWELL. I know it is, because I examined the matter, and I pointed it out to the Committee on Public Accounts the last time this question was discussed; and I think, if the hon. gentleman will refer to the Public Accounts for 1875-76, he will find that there were two charges, one for printing the Budget Speech at outside offices, a certain amount for translation, and a certain amount for binding, and for gilt edges.

Mr. BLAKE. I saw the voucher in this case, and I observed that the Queen's Printer made a special memorandum, calling attention to the fact that the particular translator who charged, I think, $72 for the translation, was the officer who translated for the Hansard, and so it was a double charge for the same service.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I will enquire into that item. My attention had not been called to it.

Mr. ROSS. I would further call the hon. gentleman's attention to a similar item which occurred in the bill sent in for the printing of Sir Charles Tupper's speech on Railways. There is there a charge for translation also of $74, $1 a page, although the same individual had been paid $2.50 a page for translating the same speech for the Hansard. In reply to the hon. Minister of Customs, I would say that there cannot have been a double charge for translating the Budget Speech in 1875, because at that time the speeches were printed in the language in which they were delivered; we had no official translator; and if the speech had to be translated, a special translator would have to be employed for the purpose. The charge in this case is that the translator is paid, not only for translating the speech in the Debates, but for this particular issue.

Mr. BOWELL. I am not sure whether it was in 1875 or in 1876.

Mr. ROSS. Well, the same may be said of 1876.

187. For the expenses of Government in the North-West Territories, including roads, bridges, ferries, and aid to schools $20,000.00

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The vote is only $20,000 but we are taking a further vote in the Supplementary Estimates. I will state the details of this vote. The travelling expenses of Members of the Council are $4,000, against $2,000 in the previous year. With the increased population, the right to elect Members of the Council is extended; I believe there will be three, if not four, elective Members of the Council, in addition to those appointed under the Act. For public printing $1,000 is asked, instead of $600. The Committee will quite understand that with the development of the country, a larger amount of printing will be required. For stationery, telegrams, and postage, $500 is asked, instead of $400; for roads and bridges, $7,000, instead of $5,000; for aid to schools, $4,000, instead of $2,000; for election expenses, $3,000, instead of $1,000. The people are getting all the advantages of representative Government up there; they are going to have elections in several districts this year. For surveys under 43 Vic., chap. 55, $2,000 is asked; for miscellaneous, including fuel and light for Government House, the Council Chamber and Offices, subscriptions to magazines, newspapers, &c, $5,000, instead of $2,000; and an allowance of $500 to provide a residence for the Clerk of the Council at the new seat of Government. Mr. Fortier, the Clerk, has been provided at Battleford with a house, and as his salary is small, it is proposed to continue this provision.

Mr. BLAKE. I think it is time that this vote should be a little more systematized. It embraces a large number of miscellaneous items, and the hon. gentleman's experience of their general run should enable him to put the estimates in a different shape. He proposes to take $4,000 instead of $2,000 in connection with the meetings of the Council; but if I am rightly informed, there have been no meetings of the Council for two years. He proposes for schools, $4,000 instead of $2,000, and for the expenses of Government House, $5,000. I should like to see a little more for schools and a little less for contingencies for Government House, for the Governor is not up there much after all. If the hon. gentleman had proposed a vote for his residence here, I could have understood it. It does seem to me that the division of the vote is a good deal like Falstaff's arrangement between the sack and the bread—too little people, too much Governor.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. But there is very little sack up there.

Mr. BLAKE. I know some one who ought to get the sack.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman has spoken about the Lieutenant-Governor being here. When he is here, he is here at my request and responsibility, and for the good of the service. He is a very good officer, one of the best, I believe, in our service. He has by his resistance to a certain amount of pressure, perhaps, obtained for himself the enviable distinction of being attacked, but I am satisfied—and I have had a long experience in the selection of men—that I never made a better selection of a better man or a better officer than I did in selecting Mr. Dewdney. He has been here arranging with the Government for the future government of that country, both white and red, and I can assure the hon. gentleman that a more efficient head-officer than Mr. Dewdney could not be found. Now, we will take up the different items that have been mentioned. First, travelling expenses of members of the Council, $4,000, instead of $2,000. The hon. gentleman says the Council has not met for some time. That is quite true. That country is in a transient state. The legislation, the by-laws, the ordinances, passed by the Council, which is, I may say, a Town Council, have been under consideration by the Department of Justice. I think the hon. gentleman will admit that Mr. Richardson, who is one of the stipendiary magistrates, is not an expensive man. He is a man of good administrative talent, and we have been consulting him about the ordinances and by-laws of the North-West. Only one man, I think, Mr. Clark, was elected to be a member of this Council. There are going to be three, perhaps four, but three members certainly during the present year, and it is thought better not to make any by-laws obligatory on that country until we had something of a popular element introduced into it. That popular element will be introduced by three this year, and perhaps more next year. Under an Act passed, not by this Government, but by the preceding Government—and a very good Act it was—as the population increased, the General Council will be supplemented by men elected to sit in it. However we are discussing now merely the question of expense and not the question of policy, and I shall merely read from the memo. placed in my hands by the Department. The increase of $2,000 in the travelling expenses of the Council is explained by the larger number of members. In 1882 the Lieutenant-Governor's Council was composed of four members. For 1883-84 provision has to be made for nine members at least—three stipendiary magistrates, ex-officio members of the Council, three appointed by the Crown and three elected. Five may possibly be elected instead of three, should the population warrant it. As to the item of printing, it has increased $4,000. The expenditure under this head during the last twelve months exceeded by $1,000 the vote of last year, and the amount now provided may be insufficient, but efforts will be made to keep the expenditure within that limit. In the postal service the payments for telegraphic communication are included, which makes an increase of $400 or $500. As regards roads and bridges the expenditure increases according as the country becomes settled, and if all the applications for aid towards the construction of bridges and highways were entertained, a much larger amount would have to be granted. As regards aid to schools, the expenditure during 1881-82 was $2,204, and during the first six months of the current year $1,250 have been paid. A larger number of schools have been opened, especially in the eastern part of the Territory, which will of course be entitled to help the same as those existing heretofore. As to election expenses, we ask an increase of $2,000. Under the provisions of the North-West Territory Act of 1880, section 15, several portions of the Territory are now entitled to representation in the Council, and probably the expenses of elections will average $600, or $3,000 to cover the possible election of five instead of three. Statute 43 Vic., chap. 55, provides for highways and trails. In the General Act it is provided that the leading trail should be kept up, and therefore we have to encourage expenditure under this head. The expenses of Government House are of the lightest kind. The Lieutenant-Governor, who is the Indian Commissioner, is quite satisfied with such provision as can be made for him as Indian Commissioner, and a frame house, brought up from Ontario, will be quite sufficient for his purpose for a good many years, unless the country advances in such a degree that it will be necessary the Lieutenant-Governor should have a more important residence. A small allowance is made to the Clerk of the Council for rental, owing to his removal from Battleford to Regina, and consequent deprivation of the fine quarters he had at the other place.

Mr. BLAKE. Are these items the $20,600, or do they include the Supplementary Estimates?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They embrace the additional ones. I think that it will be nearly doubled.

Mr. BLAKE. There will be about $32,000?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think so, about that.

188. For the expenses of Government in the District of Keewatin $5,000.00

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is the same sum as was voted for this service for the current year. It is principally to be expended in the maintenance of insane persons from the district of Keewatin confined in the Manitoba Penitentiary. The Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba is ex-officio Lieutenant-Governor of the district, and the disbursements are made upon his requisition and upon his certificate that the services for which the charges are made have been properly performed. His Honor's private secretary is to receive an allowance per annum as secretary of the Governor of Keewatin.

190. To meet expenses connected with the consolidation of the Dominion Statutes..... $6,000.00

In answer to Mr. BLAKE,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Cockburn was appointed a Commissioner to prepare all the preliminaries for a formal Commission. As the hon. gentleman knows it is almost impossible to effect a Commission unless there be preliminary work in the way of the analysis, indexing and arrangement of the individual Statutes. Mr. Cockburn was appointed for that purpose, and I believe no one is more competent. As every one knows Mr. Cockburn's health is, unfortunately, broken down, and he was obliged to retire from Parliament and from political life where he held, as the hon. gentleman knows, a respectable and estimable position. But his illness was such that while it prevented him from sitting in Parliament, it did not in any way interfere with his efficiency to do legal work of this kind, and with him it is a labor of love. The hon. gentleman knows that Mr. Cockburn's mind is essentially a legal one, and I do not know a better man for the purpose of the consolidation of these whole Statutes than Mr. Cockburn. He is working at it, I have occasion to know, most assiduously, and he has had until the other day a most assiduous assistant as secretary in the person of Mr. Ferguson. I am sorry to say that Mr. Ferguson was obliged, a few days ago, to give up his position as secretary, because his business was so rapidly increasing that he found he could not devote all his time to this work. Mr. Cockburn, I am sorry to say, has been until the last few months under special medical treatment; he is, however, better. He has been at Montreal under the care of the best physicians, where he has still been engaged on this work; and he will be here in a few days and continue his work. I have no doubt my hon. friend opposite will agree with me that his temporary illness ought not to prevent one employing him still in this important work.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course, if the state of things be as the hon. gentleman says, I do not know that any objection can be taken. We all know the circumstances under which Mr. Cockburn left Parliament. The papers which were moved for and ordered last Session, and which were not brought down until this Session, reveal a peculiar state of things in connection with this matter. It appears that some time early in the year an appointment was made by the intervention of the hon. gentleman himself, as well, as I remember from the papers, by which Mr. Cockburn was to do certain preliminary work in connection with the consolidation of the Statutes. But he was to receive no remuneration; he was to receive a certain sum to pay his expenses, and he received, I think, one or two cheques for expenses, of, if I remember aright, $750 apiece. Matters so went on until November, and then a report is made recommending that Mr. Cockburn be appointed as the Commissioner at a salary of $4,000 a year, and that the appointment date back from the preceding month of July upon condition that he refunded the smaller sums he had received for disbursements, and an order is made accordingly and the balance is paid. It is quite clear to my mind what the object of the transaction in that form was. In the first place it was not convenient, I presume, for Mr. Cockburn to resign his seat in Parliament at the earlier period, and so an appointment was made under which he was to perform this duty without remuneration; but so soon as a convenient period arrived for his resignation it took place, nearly in November, and then the appointment is made and the salary is elevated, and he is placed in the position of being a salaried officer for somewhere about six months during which time he had been discharging the duty gratuitously. The announcement was made at the time that his resignation was in consequence of his ill-health, of his incapacity to perform the duties of a member of Parliament, but the Government had before that determined upon his appointment and created the position of Commissioner for him. The information I received was that during a very large portion of the time Mr. Cockburn has, through illness, been incapable of discharging the active duties of that Commission. The hon. gentleman says that has been the case for a few months last past only; but it is obvious that with respect to a gentleman who is in such an unfortunate state of health that it was rather to be expected such a difficulty would arise, and the whole transaction looks to me, I must confess, rather as if the office were made for the man and that an arrangement was made by which Mr. Cockburn, who, unfortunately, was no longer capable of discharging the public duties for which he had been selected, should become a salaried officer in the hon. gentleman's employment. We have not seen very much fruit from this work, as yet; but of course it would be impossible, I admit, to lay on the Table of the House the full details. We have seen a report which indicates the general course of the transactions which have taken place; and as regards the work which has actually been done, we must wait for another year before we are able to form a judgment.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not suppose the hon. gentleman would have objected to this item. It is quite true Mr. Cockburn was obliged to retire from Parliament, after having been a Minister and Speaker. He broke down altogether in consequence of his arduous duties as Speaker. The law at that time was that the Speaker was obliged to remain in the Chair—we have since relieved our Speakers of that onerous duty—but we had very laborious and long-drawn Sessions, and really his devotion to his duty was the cause of his contracting an illness, in consequence of which he was unable to remain in his place in the House for any time. His power for work is, however, as strong, and his desire to work is as great as formerly, and I think the hon. gentleman might have spared the Committee these remarks. I do not like to compare one thing with another, but if any hon. gentleman from Ontario will compare the cost of consolidating the Statutes of that Province with the expense incurred hitherto, and with the expenses which I believe there will be in future, in connection with consolidating the Statutes of the Dominion, it will be found that the latter work will be done for one-half the money, and quite as efficiently, and I believe more efficiently.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). There will be very little work for the Commissioner to do if we continue to consolidate the Statutes as we have done during the last year or two. Last year, the Railway Acts were consolidated, and most of the time this Session we are spending in doing the work which the Commissioner was appointed to do. We are consolidating the Dominion Lands Acts, the Excise Acts, the Penitentiaries, the Superaunuation, all of which would be part of the duty of the Commissioner. If we continue this work of consolidation, what necessity exists for the Commissioner?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We will do the work in one year instead of three years, as occurred in Ontario.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex.) In another year there will be nothing for the Commissioner to do, if we do as well next year as this.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Then we will dispense with his services next year.

Mr. CHARLTON. What progress has been made with the work of consolidation?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. A full report has been laid on the Table. During this Session very considerable progress has been made. I candidly tell the Committee that I am very much grieved, in view of my desire to have the work finished rapidly, that Mr. Ferguson has found it impossible to continue in his position, and I judge we will not easily get so efficient a Secretary. I can assure hon. gentlemen opposite that we are doing everything we can to get a consolidation as quickly and as cheaply as possible, and are at the same time employing a deserving public servant.

Mr. BLAKE. I am not familiar with the mode by which the Ontario Statutes were consolidated, but I believe the work was performed by the Judges, and gratuitously. I think any expense in connection with consolidating the Statutes was in the employment of some preliminary officer, Mr. Langton, I think, at the very modest salary of $1,000 or $1,200, and that the rest of the expense was for the necessary printing involved. I think the hon. gentleman will find that the work was performed by the Judges without remuneration; so I am afraid his comparison was a little unfortunate.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I may be wrong.

192. To compensate members of the North-West Mounted Police for injuries received in the discharge of duty.....$2,000.00

Mr. BLAKE. I think it is a mistake that this item should appear under the head of Miscellaneous. It really is part of the expense of the Mounted Police, and should appear under that head.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman, and we will have the transfer made.

Mr. ORTON. I am very glad to observe that the Government have placed the sum in the Estimates for the purpose of compensating members of the Mounted Police who have received injuries while on service. I take this occasion to draw the attention of the Minister to a case that, no doubt, was brought to his notice, and which it seems to me is one of peculiar hardship. It is the case of Johnston, who was shot in the washroom in the barracks in the North-West by one of his comrades, leaving a widow and child. I understand it is not the policy of the Government to encourage married men to join the service, and there is no provision made for the remuneration of widows; but I certainly think in this case, where the man was shot by a member of the force, the Dominion Government should be, to a certain extent, held responsible for the occurrence. I trust the First Minister will do something for that young man's widow and family. In connection with the Mounted Police I certainly think there is not a body of men in the Dominion which deserves more consideration than that body. The services they have rendered to that country and are rendering, I consider, are invaluable. Their pay is certainly very small indeed, in comparison with the great service they render, not only in keeping the Indians in a peaceful condition, but also in maintaining the peace during the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. We also know that they have very arduous duties to perform in connection with the suppression of the traffic in intoxicating liquors. Many of these men entered the service young and have spent the best days of their lives in it, although they receive very poor pay indeed. The Inspector, I understand, only receives $1,000 a year. There are men in this force who have, as I have said, done immense service to their country, and still they are only in receipt of $1,000 per annum, without any provision for retiring pensions, or anything of that kind. I certainly think that this country can afford to treat the only military body which has rendered every day valuable services to it, in a more handsome manner than is at present the case; for neither the men nor the officers are paid, in my opinion, in proportion to the valuable services which they render.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

193. For erection of Mounted Police Barracks..... $80,000.00

Mr. CHARLTON. Where are these barracks to be erected?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The sum of $30,000 applies to the close of the present year. This grant is being expended in the erection of barracks at Regina and Calgary; and $60,000 will be required during the next fiscal year. The first is for the completion of the barracks at Calgary, and the second for the erection of new barracks at Fort McLeod, where the old building, being in an advanced state of decay, is liable to be washed away at any moment, owing to Old Man's River having changed its course. It so happened that the Fort McLeod Barracks was built of logs in the early days of settlement there, and it is about to disappear, as the river has changed its course, and the force there is consequently in danger of being swept away, because houses are being swept away before their eyes. The buildings at present in use are unfit for occupation; and storehouses are to be erected at Maple Creek. These will be used during the summer to hold stores, which are being drawn to Fort Walsh for that post. If the hon. gentleman remembers the maps, Fort Walsh is directly very near the frontier, and was at one time the chief place where the Mounted Police were stationed; it was close to the frontier, and here the Indians mostly assembled, and here there was the most danger of disturbance. Now it has been found that Fort Walsh is the worst place we can have for a fort. The Indians, especially the loose Indians, those who do not adhere steadily to one point or another, and some bands—I will not mention the names of the chiefs, or of the men, who are creating the disturbance there, because these things are printed and get to the ears of the Indians by some means or other—assemble at this place; and we have been trying for the last three years, and I believe before that time, but, at all events, I can vouch for the last three years—to get the Indians away from the frontier. They are continually causing disturbances across the frontier; but they are, however, more sinned against than sinning. We are trespassed upon infinitely more by Indians from the south than our Indians trespass across the line. Still there are continual complaints from American traders; but these traders have their own purposes to serve in making complaints about our Indians. Of course these complaints go to Washington. The Government there know nothing about them, and send them to the British Ambassador, who sends them to us here; and we have to investigate into an infinity of charges about British Indians trespassing across the line, with the view by those people—not by the American Government—of claiming damages, or of creating necessity for the idea of keeping up a large regular American force, and scouts, and all the machinery requisite in the Western country, along our frontier. In order to prevent that for ever, we, by degrees, have been coaxing the Indians to leave the frontier and go across the Pacific Railway to the reservations in the north. Two or three times we thought that we had succeeded. We had succeeded once or twice, and the Indians had apparently settled down on the reserves last year, but more especially the year before, when a rumor—a false rumor as it proved—spread that the buffalo, which had disappeared, had recrossed our line. The Indians then left the reserves and went back to the United States. There were then all kinds of complaints about the stealing of horses—most of them unjust, and some true—by these Indians, who had invaded the United States territory. They found that all these rumors were false, and they came back without their horses, because the American Indians had taken their horses from them, and got back to Fort Walsh starving. A very considerable portion of the vote asked for last year, was extended to these Indians. We could not allow them to die. They came from the United States without horses, without clothes and without blankets—and there they were. We have to treat these Indians as children. It is not by getting angry with them; not by quarrelling with them, but by coaxing them that we can succeed in our object. They are now by slow degrees migrating to the north; and one or two, or three of the chiefs, the leading men having the most influence with these Indians, whose names I will not mention, and who have been the principal cause of the disturbances along the frontier, have at last come in from the settlement. We have kept them on starvation allowance. We have given them at the beginning of last winter one-quarter rations, but during the winter they could not stand this, and we gave them one half rations; still they were on starvation allowance; but we have promised them very considerable advantages if they will cross the line and leave Fort Walsh, which has been, mind you, a place of assembly for them for very many years, for Indians stick to their own traditions. The last telegram I have received within the last few days, shows that there is going to be a regular movement of the Indians north of the Pacific Railway line on the reserves; and the moment that they leave Fort Walsh it is to be destroyed and razed to the ground, so that there will be no chance of their ever assembling there again with the hope of getting any food or succor from the Dominion Government. That is the position of matters just now.

Mr. CHARLTON. I suppose that the policy of the Government will be to collect the Indians on the reserves and support them, supplementing whatever they may lack in supplying themselves with necessary food.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh, yes; and it has been very successful. I am led to believe from the reports of our agents that this year, 1883, will be the test of all the expense that can be anticipated in this relation, and that after all the Indians are really taking to the soil.

Mr. CHARLTON. I would ask the hon. gentleman whether the sum of $30,000 this year, and the $60,000 we are now asked to vote, will be sufficient to erect the barracks?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We cannot well say. We will put up the barracks wherever we can get the logs. They will, of course, still be log barracks, which are good for a time, but decay rapidly. Of course we must have brick at the principal stations, but we do not propose to have brick until the price largely decreases. We have very good temporary barracks—some put together at Montreal, and some at Ottawa—and the North-West policemen say that they never were so comfortable before. They were sent up in frame and put together there, and though temporary they are really very comfortable.

Mr. BLAKE. $90,000 seems a large sum to spend for barracks and I hope the expenditure will be as temporary as the right hon. gentleman says the barracks will be. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if the Regina barracks are to be paid out of the new vote, or partly out of the old vote?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Partly out of the new, and partly out of the old.

Mr. BLAKE. And how much is to be paid at Calgary, and how much at Regina?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The barracks at Regina will be $35,000, and those at Calgary and Fort McLeod about $25,000 each.

Mr. BLAKE. And how many will they provide quarters for?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There will be 150 at Regina, the headquarters; 100 at Calgary, and seventy-five at Fort McLeod.

Mr. CHARLTON. 325 in all.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Then we have our stations. We have 500 men when the force is complete. It is short by some forty men, who will be recruited this spring.

Mr. CHARLTON. Do you erect palisades around these buildings?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, I do not think so.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is there any truth in the reports we have heard that there is danger of Indian hostilities—that there is dissatisfaction among the Indians of the plains in consequence of the progress of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and danger of an outbreak of hostilities?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I can tell the hon. gentleman, that our latest advices give the most satisfactory assurance that the Indians do not object to the progress of the railway. We were rather alarmed with regard to the Blackfeet Indians as we approached the Rocky Mountains, as to what they might think of a railway passing through that country. But so far we have had no exhibition of discontent, and the officers of the Canadian Pacific Railway, so far as I can learn, have acted with great discretion. We have heard of one, and perhaps two, instances in which a navy or person employed on the road, did not treat the Indians with the consideration which they should have received, but those were the only cases, and they passed without any scalp being taken or any man wounded. This is really a most marvellous thing. It is one of those fortunate things upon which we feel like congratulating ourselves—that while during the construction of railways in the United States there was a very considerable amount of collision and loss of life between the red man and the white man, no such loss of life has yet occurred in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway. We cannot, of course, tell as to the future; the Indians are savages, and the imprudence of a single white man might at any moment cause an unexpected catastrophe; but hitherto there has been none, I am glad to say. I am also glad to bear testimony to the conduct of the North-West Mounted Police. The contractors who are building the road across the prairies, Messrs. Sheppard & Langdon, are experienced contractors, who have built hundreds of miles of railway in the United States, and they state that in consequence of the exclusion of intoxicating liquors from the men, and by the active steady exertions on the part of the Mounted Police, there has not been a single collision between the workmen and the Indians. There has not been a murder or a homicide, when I am almost afraid to say they annually lost men in this way when they were building railways in the United States.

Mr. CASEY. I would like to ask the right hon. gentleman whether the Mounted Police have been supplied with the new repeating Winchester rifles? I was at the barracks at Qu'Appelle at the latter end of August and none of the force there were armed with these rifles. They were armed with the useless Snider rifles, while the Indians of the Piepot Band had the Winchester, and it would have been possible for the few Indians there with these arms to have cleaned out the whole force without any trouble. Another question I would like to ask is, whether the force is really mounted? At the time I am speaking of there were 100 so-called Mounted Police at Fort Qu'Appelle, mounted on twenty horses, so that either five men had to mount one horse, or one man had to mount the horse and the four men hang on by the tail.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. With the assistance of the hon. gentleman we propose to give a liberal vote to the North-West Mounted Police. But the hon. gentleman is quite right. The Mounted Police were supplied with Snider carbines; but we have been by degrees supplying them with Winchester rifles. Every year there has been an increasing number of Winchester rifles supplied to the force; three hundred rifles were delivered the other day. This is a very considerable expense, as the hon. gentleman knows, because each rifle costs at Winchester $15, and to supply these to five hundred men means a considerable sum of money. I believe that there are about 360 or 370 horses, which, it is understood, is a sufficient force of horses, because a number of men are employed in every barrack in barrack duty. But I believe the force is as efficiently mounted as any cavalry regiment in Her Majesty's service.

Mr. CASEY. I think 360 horses to 500 men would not be considered sufficient for a cavalry regiment. There are, of course, a small number of men always employed in barrack duty; but the number not requiring horses is limited to cooks and similar persons, who do not need horses at any time. Every man in the force ought to have a horse, so that he could go out when required. The complaint is not that sufficient funds have not been voted for the Mounted Police, but that the funds have not resulted in giving them their supplies. The complaint last summer, when I was up in the country, was, that the contractors, who had agreed to furnish horses to the Mounted Police, had brought up a lot of scrubs from the United States, a large number of which were rejected by the officers as unfit for the service; and if that were true, they must have the most extraordinary collection ever seen, because the horses accepted were not equal, on the average, I think, to the ordinary Shagganappy pony of the plains.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Let me read from Colonel Irvine's report:

"The total number of remounts taken on the strength of the force this year was one hundred and thirty-three. Eighty-nine supplied by the Stewart Ranch Company; forty purchased by the Department in Ontario and forwarded to Qu'Appelle, and four purchased in the Territory.

"Of the horses purchased from the Stewart Ranch Company, thirty were accepted in July, the selection having been made from a band of one hundred and fifty head.

"The small number accepted was owing to the fact that the band I speak of was too light for our work. Eighteen were afterwards accepted and taken over by Superintendent Crozier, acting under my authority.

"During my recent visit to Fort McLeod, in the month of October last, I accepted from a band driven in by the Company forty-one head.

"This last band was composed of the finest horses ever driven into the country, and the horses taken over by me were of a better class than any hitherto supplied the Force.

"The first small lots taken over by Superintendent Crozier and myself were not in all cases composed of the class of horses we required. But as we were then in urgent need of saddle horses, I accepted them."

Mr. CASEY. That is exactly what I said, I think the Government make a mistake in farming the supply of horses out to contractors. I think the proper course would be for one of the veterinary officers to go down to Ontario and advertise for horses, and he could have the pick of Ontario selected and bought within a fortnight after his arrival, and have them taken up at a vast saving. Excellent horses for the service can be got in Ontario for from $125 to $150, and I venture to say that they could be landed up there at a considerably smaller cost than the miserable scrubs the police have now got.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I forgot to read the latter clause of Colonel Irvine's report:

"I must not, however, omit to mention that when the second band was driven in by the contractors, they most willingly exchanged every horse to which objection was raised, replacing them by others in all respects up to the required standard."

Mr. CHARLTON. With regard to arming the force, it is certainly a false idea to allow the Indians to be armed in a superior manner to the Mounted Police. It seems to me that there ought to be some restrictions to prevent the Indians from having these superior arms. The Government of the United States have lost a great deal of money, as a result of a similar mistake, and I think the Government should adopt stringent measures to prevent the Indians from having these Winchester rifles.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is quite right. The Mounted Police should be armed with the Winchester rifle, and we should endeavor to prevent the Indians getting them or any warlike weapon that we can, and every means is taken with that end in view. The hon. gentleman will understand that with Indians flocking across the border where the traders will sell them arms, it is practically impossible to prevent the Indians getting the best weapons they can. The only limit is their means. The means of the Indians to purchase rifles with skins, I am glad to say, is diminishing annually. So long as they were mere nomads, we had no control over them. Now, the game has all gone; the buffalo has disappeared; the United States have established with us a cordon to prevent their passing from one country to the other, and the Indians must perforce betake themselves to the soil. And they are really getting on very well; it is wonderful what progress they have made.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman says it is difficult to prevent the Indians getting rifles. I recollect a year or two ago the hon. gentleman announced a policy of inducing the agents by negotiation to exchange the Winchester for Sniders. To what extent did that succeed?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am afraid it has not been very successful.

Mr. BLAKE. I observe that there was an attempt made to decoy those unsophisticated children of the plains to go by railway the other day to the reserves, but that they got ditched on the way, whereupon they marched back with their wives and families to the end of the line, and at present insist on the superintendents providing them with oxen and carts, and decline to travel behind a locomotive.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is quite right, the Indians were being carried by train and there was a railway accident. If it had been with whites we would have put up with great philosophy to some of the whites being killed; but no mortal man since this accident can get a red man, squaw, or papoose to travel by train, and we have to undertake the expense of sending them, by the old time-honored system of oxen and carts, to their reserve.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman says it is impossible to prevent the Indians buying rifles in the States and bringing them in. The hon. Minister of Customs should see that every Indian who brings in a Winchester rifle on coming back from a buffalo hunt, should be made to pay the duty. This would be done in the case of a white settler.

194. To cover expenses in connection with the International Fishery Exhibition, London..... $15,000.00

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The International Exhibition has expanded its borders so much that the vote of last year was insufficient. No doubt the hon. gentleman desires that the exhibition should be as creditable as possible, and we will have to pay for the fact of our showing what we are doing in the fishery line.

Mr. BLAKE. I must congratulate the hon. gentleman on the minuteness of this explanation of the expenditure of $25,000 of public money. Does it include the expenses of the hon. Minister of Marine?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No, it does not.

Mr. BLAKE. That will be extra?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, that will be extra.

195. On account of the expenditure in connection with the surveys of Lakes Superior and Huron..... $5,000.00

Mr. BOWELL. This is a proposition for paying the expenses of the Imperial surveyor who, at the instance of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, has been employed to make the survey in order to make a more perfect chart than exists of these lakes. Last year many reefs and rocks were discovered, not laid down on the chart. If we employed one of our own officers to explore the lakes in that particular, the Imperial Government would not recognize them nor mark the reefs on the charts. The assistance of the Naval Department at home was therefore invoked, and they decided to send an officer so that the work may be done under his immediate supervision. This amount is not so much to cover the expenses of the officer, as the expense of the vessel and the survey generally.

Mr. DAVIES. What number of officials is there on the staff? I understood a naval officer who was stationed at Prince Edward Island, was here this winter, and had a consultation with the hon. Minister.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes; Capt. Maxwell, of the Royal Navy, who was stationed part of the year at Charlottetown was here, and had communication with the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries. I do not know the details, but will inform the hon. gentleman on Concurrence.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the extent of this proposed survey, how long will the operations last, and what is the idea of the total cost?

Mr. BOWELL. I will obtain the particulars and lay them before the House on Concurrence.

Mr. BLAKE. Work of this kind is of a most lasting character and may cost an enormous sum. I do not wish to be understood as objecting to the survey; but before Parliament gives an initial vote we ought to have some information of the character of the undertaking, and the time it will take.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman's demand is quite reasonable. He will recognize the importance of this work no matter what the expense may be, as the traffic in the upper lakes is increasing every year, and for the safety of vessels and lives it is absolutely necessary we should have a correct chart, on which all reefs and rocks should be laid down.

Mr. BLAKE. I quite agree that some survey is important, but the talk of laying down all the reefs and rocks of Lakes Superior and Huron is something alarming. It is the reefs that may obstruct the fair ways in the channels, the points by which vessels pass that, I presume, will be noted. Of course to officers devoted to this class of work the importance grows in their eyes, and they are disposed to make a very extensive business of it, just as military men do of the army and naval men of the navy.

196. To purchase Reports, and Text-books for the Library, Department of Justice..... $2,000.00

Mr. BLAKE. I ventured, on a former occasion, to say this was a very doubtful item. There are, in the Department of Justice, a certain number of books of reference, and I do not understand how $2,000 can be usefully expended there. It will not make a complete library, and it is more than is required for a supplement to the books that are in daily use. If an investigation is to take place into any particular legal matter, an officer will have to go down where the whole library is, and make it there. But to attempt to make an imperfect and defective library in one building, when having a good law library in the other, is really a waste of money.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Minister of Justice explained to me the other day when this vote was under discussion, that about the only books he had in that Department were the Statutes, and he thought that they should have at hand a few other books of most frequent necessity. These books are very dear, and this small sum would only be adequate to purchase the most necessary.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not know how complete the hon. gentleman's library is, but all that is required for such a library, circumstanced as we are with a complete library within convenient reach, are a few books of daily reference; some books, for instance, on the interpretation of Statutes are wanted all the time. There might be a text-book or two on Criminal Law with reference to certain questions that arise in the administration of the prerogative of Parliament. I venture to think that a very few hundred dollars would purchase all that is needed, added to what is there now. Then, there is another instance of what I think a very objectionable practice creeping into the mode of preparing the Estimates by the Government: that is, we are entering books in this vote which really belong to the Department of Justice, and ought to be put down in the expenditure for that Department. Heretofore the books required in that Department have been bought as per annual vote, but here they are buried amongst the miscellaneous and the Department of Justice have nothing to show for it. I think both the location of the vote and the amount of the vote are very objectionable.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think there is a good deal in what the hon. gentleman says. I am inclined to believe with him that there is no necessity for having a very large library in the Department of Justice, and that the officers of that Department can go across to the library, as other people do, and there consult the law books. If the hon. gentleman will allow this to pass, on Concurrence I will have that whole question looked into.

197. To pay one-half of the expense of publishing cases decided on the B. N. Act, 1867, collected and edited by John R. Cartwright, Esq.....$1,150.00

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In the absence of the hon. Minister of Finance, I cannot speak confidently about this item. Speaking from recollection only, I think that the cases on the British North America Act were collected by Mr. Cartwright, and it was agreed between Mr. Mowat and Sir Alex. Campbell that the expense should be shared between them.

Mr. BLAKE. I have seen the first volume of this book, and I think it is a very valuable compilation. I have made such enquiry as I could, and I cannot find it is for sale or procurable. How many copies is the hon. gentleman going to get? What is he going to do with them? Two or three people have written to me to know whether they can get the book. I do not see it advertised anywhere. I think it most valuable, and if I had been aware it was in publication, I should have submitted to the Bench of the Law Society to make some attempt to secure copies for the profession. At present I am afraid there has been but a small edition published, that that edition has been distributed, and that really the book is going to be of little general value.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I agree with the hon. gentleman that the book is a very valuable one; the collection is a good one, and the notes are well prepared and show the great care of the annotator. But as to the number issued and the distribution, I cannot tell the hon. gentleman just now.

Mr. BOWELL. Before we leave this class of items, I desire to put myself right in a little matter between myself and the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross). I stated, that in 1875-76 there was a charge in the Public Accounts for translation of the Budget Speech, and my hon. friend replied that he knew it could not possibly be in 1875.

Mr. ROSS. The statement I made was, that there could not be a charge for the translation of the Debates and the Budget Speech both.

Mr. BOWELL. I hold in my hand the charge paid to the Free Press, in the Public Accounts for 1875, for printing and binding; and for translation into French of the Budget Speech $86.25. I merely desire to let the House know that when I made that statement I was making a correct one. I dare say that my hon. friend will be able to put some other construction on it. In 1876, I find that there was paid for the same service, less translation, nearly $1,200.

Mr. ROSS. The hon. gentleman has not explained the matter at all. What I said was, that last year there was a charge made for translating the Budget Speech twice, first for the Official Debates, second for the publication of the Budget Speech in separate form. The hon. gentleman has not shown there were two charges in 1875. If the hon. gentleman had shown that the translation of the Budget Speech was paid for first to an official translator—and that he could not show, for there was not one—and in the second place, it was paid for publication in the Free Press, then he would have made out his point.

Mr. BOWELL. I have proved from the Public Accounts what I said, and nothing more. I said there was a charge in the Public Accounts for translating the Budget Speech, which the hon. gentleman cannot deny.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). The hon. gentleman has brought up a point which no one ever disputed.

201. Weights and Measures and Gas..... $73,100.00

Mr. COSTIGAN. The first increase is $100, being increases of salaries of some of the officers. That does not, however, actually show what the increases are, because we did not expend the whole of last year's estimate. There is a small amount left which, with the $100, will be distributed among two or three officers in the Department. $1,900 is for salaries of Inspectors of Gas, whom we intend to appoint next year where gas inspection has not yet been established.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I notice there is very small increase in salaries of Inspectors, and Assistant Inspectors of Weights and Measures. This is proper, because, judging from the Report of the Department, they deserve only small increases. Speaking for my own district, and I speak from a pretty good knowledge of what is being done now, and what was done formerly, I am able to say that all the weights and measures in Middlesex have not been inspected since 1878. The inspectors have drawn their salaries regularly, and yet the work has not yet been performed. I think the hon. Minister had better call the attention of the Officers of his Department to that neglect of duty and see to it, that the country obtains value for its money. An examination of the Annual Report will show great discrepancy between the fees collected and the salaries paid. Belleville collected $544, and there was expended on salaries and contingencies $2,372. At Hamilton the fees collected were $5,425, while there was expended $1,259. At Windsor the salaries paid were $2,582, and the fees collected, $983. At Sherbrooke the salaries were $3,167, and the fees only $318. At Charlottetown the salaries were $1,395, the fees $372. I mention these as instances where the work seems to have been very much neglected. I notice other places where the fees bear some proportion to the salaries and contingencies. We have invested $70,000 on standards to enable the officers to do their work properly. A complete change was made in the officers in order to cheapen the service. The service has been cheapened to a certain extent. I believe the whole amount expended is not so great as formerly, but gross neglect prevails in the service. Does the hon. Minister know an officer by the euphonious name of Boggs, G. W., in the London Department? If so, is he still in the service?

Mr. COSTIGAN. He is.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I think, at one time, he was suspended. At the last Civil Service examination he wrote for a certificate and failed. Is it intended to keep him in the service, although he has failed to pass the examination?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman is always quite clever with his questions, and occupies a prominent position by putting them. I am not sure that the officer referred to, being in the employ of the Government as a civil servant, was obliged to go up for examination or not. The hon. gentleman has sought to leave the impression in the minds of the Committee that since the present Government have been in power the Weights and Measures Department has been very badly administered, that no work has been done, and that, in fact, the officers have been paid for doing nothing. In speaking of the discrepancy between collections at certain points and the salaries paid, the hon. gentleman has named Hamilton. There is a reason for that. In Hamilton there are one or two large factories from which the receipts are considerable, and that does not occur in the country districts. Let us make a comparison between 1878 and the present time. In 1878 there were ninety-six officers employed under this Act; at present there are sixty-seven. In 1878 the cost for salaries and contingencies was $70,719, and the receipts were $29,838, or a loss to the country of $40,881. Let us take the work they did. If we take the number of weights, measures and balances, and everything in that line, we find that ninety-six officers, in 1878, examined 176,000, at the cost I have given, while we with sixty-seven officers, a smaller staff, which the hon. gentleman would have the House to believe are being paid for doing nothing, have during the past year examined 170,000, which is within a fraction of the amount of work employed by the ninety-six officers under the late Government. The deficit, as I showed before, was $40,881, under the late Government, while under the present Government it has been $29,000; and so I do not think that the hon. gentleman ought to complain very bitterly. I do certainly say, that as far as I can, I will do my best to see that the officers in the different districts attend closely to the discharge of their duties. The hon. gentleman complains of the London division. Well, I must confess, that in the working of the Department some difficulties will be found, as was the case when the hon. gentleman's friends were in power. It will take some time to perfect the system. I suppose the hon. gentleman knows, that in order to reduce the staff, which was found very cumbersome and expensive, an Order in Council was passed providing that no further officers should be appointed until the total number for the Dominion would be reduced to fifty, I think. Well, we could not discharge old officers in some places where they were not doing all that might be required, for if we did, the hon. gentleman would complain of it in the House; and we could not appoint additional men. Take the London division for instance: in the adjoining division, the officers are through their work; but they do not lie on their oars, they are working for their money and they are sent at once into the London division to assist in perfecting and completing the work there. As soon as the work is done in one division, we try to utilize these men in another division; and this is the policy which is pursued by the Department.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). The hon. gentleman has not answered my objections very satisfactorily, I think, after all.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I do not expect to do that.

Mr. ROSS. The position taken by hon. gentlemen opposite, regarding the Weights and Measures Act, was that it was expensive and badly administered, a great loss occurring year after year; and they declared that if they were placed in power, they would reduce the expenditure and make the operation of the Act more successful, and as a matter of course, there would be then little or no loss to the country. That was what we expected from hon. gentlemen opposite; and yet the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue is obliged to admit, to-night, that under his and his friend's administration, the revenue is still considerably less than the expenditure. Now, we hold him responsible for that deficit, that very serious deficit, and, as I said before, while we have this deficit, the Act is badly administered, and the work is not very well done. The hon. gentleman referred to Hamilton, where a large number of instruments were stamped. No doubt a very large number were stamped in Hamilton, and brought a large amount of collections, as I have already indicated; but did he explain why such small collections are made at other places? Take the Belleville district; does he explain the small collections at Belleville? What is the Inspector doing there? I see that J. A. Wilkinson is one of the Inspectors. He draws a salary as Inspector of Weights and Measures; but when an election is going on, he spends his time in election-serving; he did so at the elections in 1879.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He is in favor of good measures.

Mr. ROSS. Yes; he is very useful to the Government. I think that Mr. Wilkinson was up in Muskoka, if I mistake not, at the last local election. I do not know where he has not been, and yet he is drawing his salary as Inspector of Weights and Measures. If this is the way in which the hon. gentleman is utilizing the officers of his Department, it is time that we should know about it. I pointed to a great deficit in that one place, as one instance; and perhaps the deficits in other places can be explained in a similar way, if the hon. gentleman would take the trouble to enquire. This is one instance I know of, and as to the case in my own county, where the weights and measures have not been inspected. Of course, the hon. gentleman gives the explanation that this is going to be done. They have been, for five years, going to do this sort of thing, and it is not done yet; how long is it to take to get around that one county? Perhaps this is the case with other counties; and when is this work going to be done? This is what I want to know.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The work is well under way now.

Mr. ROSS. I suppose that in five years it will be completed. We are paying money for this sort of thing, and the work is not done. The hon. gentleman has an officer on the staff who has not passed the examination.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Who? Mr. Boggs?

Mr. ROSS. He has not passed, although he was obliged, like every other officer, I think, in the Inland Revenue Department, to submit to an examination. The hon. Minister knows that every officer in his Department is obliged to submit to an examination. He did so submit, but he failed to pass, and still he is employed by the Department. Now, I call attention to these cases, and perhaps I will get a further explanation regarding them at a later day. I now come to the expenditure on gas, which comes in very properly here.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Before we leave Weights and Measures I may save time by just mentioning that there would be no deficit at all if we charged the same fees for this work as were charged in 1878. While the country now only loses about half of what it lost under the late Administration, the fees have been reduced to an amount more than equal to the loss.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course, with so many hypotheses and conjectures and proposals, in the course of a quarter of an hour, the hon. gentleman may prove that there is a surplus; but in the meantime, I just wish, before we proceed to the expenditure on gas, to ask a question arising out of his explanation. He stated that while the increase was rather more than $100 in the vote, there was to be a charge to the extent of $200 or $300, or $300 or $400—will he say how much?

Mr. COSTIGAN. It will be $200 or $300.

Mr. BLAKE. Only that?

Mr. CASEY. With regard to the case of Mr. Boggs and some others, I understood the hon. gentleman to say he found, on entering his Department, that some of the officers were not fit for their work, but he could not very well dismiss them because complaint would be made of it in this House. Mr. Boggs, however, replaced a man who was dismissed, and with whose conduct no fault could be found. The latter had also passed his examination, had had several years' experience in the work, and was found to be competent. Mr. Boggs was put in this position at the instance of the hon. member for East Elgin; but how efficiently he performs the work I do not know, though if he gives much attention to it, he is certainly a man of great versatility, as he is doing a great many other things at the same time. He is running the market fees at this particular time; he keeps a greengrocer's establishment, and a market garden, and all that sort of thing; and he does a great many other things as well as the things for which he is paid by the Department.

Mr. BLAKE. No wonder he has not had time to pass his examination.

Mr. CASEY. Besides, I think he is a gentleman of such years, that it would be very difficult for him to learn anything new in that respect. I am glad that my hon. friend from West Middlesex corrected the First Minister as to the necessity of passing examinations. Under the old Weights and Measures Act there were examinations to pass, and no person could act as inspector without having passed such an examination as is required from other officers of the Inland Revenue Department. The officers of the actual Inland part of the service had always been looked upon as having to pass easy examinations; but it appeared that in the case of these new appointments under the Weights and Measures Act, they were to be retained in any case. It is a serious thing that men, in whose hands are placed the character, as well as the profits of individuals engaged in trade, should not have the education and intelligence sufficient to enable them to do their work intelligently.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I should think that if there is one matter more than another of which hon. gentlemen opposite should fight shy, it would be this matter of the weights and measures. If you look back as far as 1872 you will find that the Government passed this Act for the purpose of protecting the people against dishonest traders—against dishonest weights and measures. If anybody will look back to the Hansard of that day—if there was a Hansard at that time—he will find that the Opposition opposed that Bill. They tried to arouse the feelings of the small grocers and traders, the corner tavern keepers, the corner shebeens against the Bill; they inveighed against it as being an oppressive measure, and though it was a Bill intended to secure a correct weight and a just measure, they tried to make capital against us, and perhaps they did make capital against the Government of the day in that matter as in others which they worked against us at that time. But although they opposed this measure while we were in power, the moment they came into power they took advantage of the Act and wherever there was a possibility of a single measure being changed, or a single weight being adjusted, they appointed a man to look after the weights and measures. They expended $50,000 of the hard money of the people by appointing persons as inspectors before the Act came into force; and before there was a possibility of any one of these officers being able to gauge a single quart mug, or weigh a single ounce measure. That was proved—it was admitted to the House. When we charged the Government of that day with this useless and corrupt waste of money, they said: We are only carrying out your measure. We said: The measure is a correct measure—a good measure, but it depends on whether it is well or badly administered, whether it shall be a good measure or a bad one. When we came in power again we took the measure which we had passed, and which hon. gentlemen had used and abused in this way; and what was the consequence? We reduced the number of employes by one-third, and we reduced the expenditure by one-half, and still hon. gentlemen opposite attack my hon. friend with regard to this measure. That measure had been corruptly used by a corrupt Government for corrupt purposes, by taking every man they could find, who was unfit for anything else, and making him an Inspector of Weights and Measures; and we proved by the Public Accounts that they took the sum of $50,000 out of the pockets of the people by the way in which they administered this Act.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Some of the gentlemen who were appointed, and who were afterwards summarily dismissed by the right hon. gentleman, will read with a good deal of pleasure the remark, that because they were unfit for anything else they were appointed Inspectors of Weights and Measures; especially those amongst the number who were admirers of that hon. gentleman.

Mr. CASEY. When the last Government came into power they found that the Act which hon. gentlemen opposite left on the Statute-book was almost unworkable, but they had to work it the best way they could, though it was very hard to make anything out of the material which had been left them. The framework of that Act was objectionable, and for its defects hon. gentlemen opposite must be held responsible whatever they may say of its working. The hon. gentleman makes the point that some men were appointed Inspectors of Weights and Measures before the Act came into force; but does he suppose that the Reform Government would take the course of appointing officials to do this difficult and delicate work to-day and expect them to be ready to do the work to-morrow?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There was at least twelve months.

Mr. CASEY. I do not know how many months they would require for training, but when hon. gentlemen opposite came in power did they take the earliest opportunity of repealing the Act? No, Sir; they only repealed it so far as to enable them to displace the existing Inspectors of Weights and Measures and put their own friends into the places thus vacated. The men he put in office were without the slightest experience, or training, or instruction—they had passed no examination, and without any qualification for the office they were appointed to inspect the weights and measures throughout the country. The fact is that they did not perform their duties, because they could not perform them, and all hon. gentlemen did was to turn out these men to make way for a lot of hungry supporters of their own as soon as they came into power. I say that it lies ill in the mouth of the hon. gentleman to call in question the use of patronage which was made by the late Government, because a more wholesale and unprecedented clearing out of party opponents to make way for a hungry horde of party supporters has never been seen in our Parliament history.

Mr. VAIL. The right hon. gentleman, in speaking of the fact that the late Government put this Act in force, neglected to state that his Government had expended $70,000 for the purchase of standard weights and measures. It became a question with the late Government whether this $70,000 was to be thrown away, or whether they should put the law in force.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. And spend $50,000 more.

Mr. VAIL. After considering the matter for two or three years—and they took plenty of time to consider it—they thought it better to put the Act in force, under the circumstances, rather than throw away this $70,000, and I have no hesitation in saying that there was not a man appointed who was not ready and competent to undergo his examination; and there is no reason why this Government, which is perhaps the most corrupt Government in the world, should have discharged one of these men, except for the express purpose of putting some friend in his place. They boast of a reduced expenditure, and they have reduced it to some extent, but they collect a less amount than their predecessors in proportion to the amount expended; but if those men had been left in office, I believe there would have been no difference to-day between the revenue and the expenditure.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I understand the hon. gentleman to say that because the late Government brought out from the Tower of London the standard of measure, and of weight, which they obtained as a favor at a cost of the enormous sum of $70,000, therefore, in order to save that money, they appointed a squad of men at a cost of $50,000 a year before anything could be done.

Mr. WILSON. Did I understand the hon. Minister to say that Mr. Boggs is still in the service.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Mr. WILSON. Will he tell me how long ago Mr. Boggs was suspended from actual service?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I will enquire and let the hon. gentleman know.

Mr. WILSON. I think the hon. First Minister will certainly know that he has not been engaged in active service for over a year, and I am very much surprised to hear the hon. First Minister denounce the late Government for having appointed men without any duties to perform, while here is a man who has been under suspension and drawing his salary for over a year. I say it ill becomes any man to make an attack upon a party, when he himself is at the very same time acting in the manner which he complains of. I have no hesitation in saying that the other man was removed, and that this man was appointed in his place, for political purposes only. He is an active party politician. When an election takes place, he is on hand to further the interest of the present Government, and that is his only qualification for performing the duties of the office to which he has been appointed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will have to admit to the hon. gentleman that Mr. Boggs is a political partisan, and that he is a Conservative. I will have to admit that he is a straightforward and honest man, which the hon. gentleman will not deny. I believe he performs his duties as well as the gentleman who preceded him and if he was a good Conservative, I think the hon. gentleman will admit that the gentleman who preceded him was not as good a Conservative. I have known Mr. Boggs for many years, and I think that if he were offered the constituency of which the hon. gentleman is a distinguished member, he would command the support of the Conservative party, though he might not be strong enough to defeat the hon. gentleman. I have to admit all that; and I have to admit that Mr. Boggs is drawing $500 a year; and yet the hon. gentleman says that we ought not to object to an annual expenditure of $50,000, because Mr. Boggs could not pass his examination, and because some man has qualifications equal to his. I believe Mr. Boggs is able to perform his duties, and will carry out the Weights and Measures Act. I know he is an honest man, and a fit and capable man. Of course he has the one fault of being a Conservative. It is no fault in my eyes, or in the eyes of the Government, and we are not going to condemn him for that fault.

Mr. ORTON. I am rather surprised at hon. gentlemen opposite drawing the attention of the House to the Weights and Measures Act, for I think that there was no single measure introduced by the late Government which drew more discredit upon them than that Act, not because the measure was bad, but because of the want of administrative ability displayed by that Government in reference to that Act. They required nearly twice as many officials to carry out the provisions of the Act as the present Government. As far as I know, under the present Government, the Act seems to have been administered to the advantage of all traders in the country, and I think the marked distinction exhibited between the two Governments as to that Act is highly creditable to the present Administration. The present Administration did not discharge every officer appointed by the late Government. I know that in the district in which I live a Reformer remained in office, notwithstanding the fact that many Conservatives desired to have their friends appointed.

Mr. WILSON. I wish to refer to the remarks made by the hon. leader of the Government. I might say, with reference to Mr. Boggs, that he is a very able man; he is fit for the position; but I would ask, if he is an able man, a clever man, and fit for the position, why is he left there to draw his salary without doing anything for it? I do not wish to say anything, either directly or indirectly, as to the man's honesty. So far as his popularity is concerned, I should just like to trot out just such a man in the constituency, and let the electors show how popular he is. It does seem rather absurd, that the hon. gentleman should applaud his great ability, when the man is a servant under his Administration, and incompetent to perform the duties for which he was appointed. I speak very light indeed of the selection of a man of that description, when he must be described as a very able and efficient officer—a man who cannot perform his ordinary duties. It shows a very poor selection on the part of the Government to appoint a man of that kind. As to his predecessor, I do not think there is any man who has been acquainted with him for a number of years, but will say he was a very competent and attentive officer, who devoted all his energies to his work. With respect to the challenge that the inspector should be a candidate at the next elections, I should be very grateful if my hon. friend would come down at the next elections, and advocate the interest of Mr. Boggs.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). The boast is made that under the present arrangement the Weights and Measures Act is more economically administered than before. Let me make a few comparisons on this point. In 1876-77, under the late Administration, it cost $2.25 to collect $1; in 1877-78, it cost $3. Hon. gentlemen opposite came into power in 1879, and on the 1st November, or thereabout, an order was issued discontinuing the service, practically suspending the inspectors. For the financial year, 1878, it cost $6 to collect $1; the expenses of the Department that year being $84,004, and the receipts, $13,685. In the next year when they had new officers fully equipped for the service, it cost $4 to collect $1, the expenses being $60,566, and the receipts, $15,372. The following year—the third year under this Government, it cost $2.50 to collect $1; or more was expended to collect $1 of revenue under hon. gentlemen opposite, than during a single year of the four years of the late Administration. And there was the extraordinary expenditure of $6 in one year, and $4 in the second year to collect $1. Hon. gentlemen opposite may, therefore, possess their souls in patience so far as the administration of that office is concerned. The hon. First Minister says that Act was passed in order that we might get a true weight and balance. Very true; but we do not know yet whether we have got that or not, for we do not know that the inspectors have done their work. Can the hon. gentleman show that the inspectors under the late Government were electioneering agents, entered into electioneering contests, as Mr. Wilkinson did in Belleville. The hon. gentleman opposite dismissed ninety-six officers, the number under the old Government, and assured the House they were going to carry on the business with a diminished number, 32. But they appointed sixty-seven, and now we are expending more money than before, while the work is not being properly done. The evidence is most conclusive that we are not getting as satisfactory work as before, while the cost of collection is greater. The hon. member complains that some of the men appointed by us were for a time doing nothing; but if he will read the report of Mr. Brunel, the then Commissioner of Inland Revenue, he will see it was necessary that some men should receive a certain amount of instruction, and they were acquiring that information before beginning the work. An inspector was appointed to visit the various districts and give the men suitable instruction, as the calculations are complicated and the work requires a certain amount of training. If the hon. gentleman is so much alarmed about men being paid salaries for doing nothing, how can the hon. gentleman sanction the payment of $2,000 every quarter or $3,000 a year to the hon. John O'Connor? I would like to know what he does except draw his salary? What does the hon. gentleman say about the gentleman whose case was before us to-night, and who is drawing $4,000 a year, though physically incapable of doing anything except take medicine, which I am sorry to see him oblige to take? If it was a fault for us when we employed men to do a certain work which required training, and paid them while they were being trained, can he explain why he is paying men their full indemnity for not doing any work and who do not require any training? Does he still retain the services of Mr. Egan?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes, he is still on the staff.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I want to correct a mistake I made in reference to Mr. Boggs. It was Mr. Egan who was unable to pass and not Mr. Boggs. I had in my mind the fact that Mr. Boggs was suspended and thought he was the same gentleman who failed to pass his examination, but I find that he did pass and obtained a third class certificate. It was Mr. Egan who was unable to pass.

Mr. SPROULE. The amount of receipts under the inspection instituted by the late Government is no indication of the amount taken from the people. The inspector who passed around our district, kept a man at $5 per day. He did not pretend to do this business of fixing scales, and consequently brought this man around with him. He collected money over and above the amount due to the Department for the correcting of weights and scales and went around on a drunk for several days, during which his man was paid $5 a day. From small villages of 500 or 600 inhabitants he took away from $125 to $130, from the village of Flesherton he told me he expected to draw $125. Yet there was a return made to the Department of very small receipts. It was not the amount of money collected for the Government, but the amount taken from the people that should be considered, and of this we have no return. Parties who had scales that were not allowed could sell them to other parties, to farmers and others, that were using them every day to weigh some kind of produce brought into the villages. Now, this came under my own observation. I saw scales sold, and yet some parties were charged for fixing these small scales, over and above the price of inspection. I paid $2.50 for fixing small scales, and then the inspector turned round and paid his man $5 a day. People had nothing for their money. In a village of my county, he said it would cost $10 or $20 for inspecting and fixing a scale, when the scale was bought for somewhere about twice that amount of money a short time before that. There was a price put upon these things, and if you did not pay it, you had to sell the scales, or loose what you had paid for them. This was the way the inspection was carried on all through the country. An examination of the returns will show that not more than one-tenth of the amount of money taken out of the people went back to the Government.

Mr. BOWELL. Before this debate is closed, I desire to say a word or two; and if the hon. gentlemen who have spoken would act upon the principle of the hon. member for North Norfolk, when questions of comparison are discussed, declaring that he did not care who did the wrong it ought to be condemned, it would be much more to their credit. I understood the hon. member for Digby to say, that before the Government of 1875 went out of office, they purchased standards to the amount of $75,000, and that those standards were to be used as soon as the officers were appointed. My hon. friend from West Middlesex told the House a few minutes ago that when these officers were appointed, there were no standards in the possession of the Government with which these people could be instructed.

Mr. ROSS. The hon. gentleman is not quoting me correctly. I said these people required some time to educate themselves in the use of these standards in order to do their work properly.

Mr. BOWELL. That is what you said additionally.

Mr. ROSS. The hon. gentleman is bound to take my word.

Mr. BOWELL. Of course I take your word. Hon. gentlemen should agree between themselves before they make statements. Now, what are the facts? The facts are that, if these standards were in the possession of the Government—

Mr. VAIL. I did not say in the possession of the Government. I said they were contracted for, and, in fact, purchased; that some were ordered in England, and some were on the way here.

Mr. BOWELL. The facts are simply these: that the hon. gentlemen appointed officers from Algoma in the West down to the Labrador coast, some of whom never had any instructions, and never did any work; they received their salary, in certain localities, and they had nothing to do. I find, in the table laid before the House last year, that a Mr. Grenier, appointed at Labrador, had received $1,806; that it was 1,319 days from the time he was appointed until he was removed, but he never had any standards sent to him, and never did any work. In Restigouche, New Brunswick, I find a Mr. Blanchard drew $1,819.39, but he never had any instructions and never did any work; yet my hon. friend tells us that the inspectors went all over this country and instructed these officers what to do. Nearly all the appointments that were made, of this particular class of officers, were in office from six months to a year, and some as long a time as I have pointed out from their appointment till their dismissal, and they never did a single thing; they never were furnished with any instruments with which either to inspect or test weights and measures. Yet these gentlemen attempt to defend an action of that kind, on the ground that it was necessary to appoint the men in order to teach them what to do, before, as they admitted themselves, they had instruments with which to instruct them. The hon. member for West Middlesex was equally disingenuous in the comparisons he made, as he, too, often is when he addresses this House. Why had he not—I will not say honesty, perhaps that would not be Parliamentary—but does he not know that the Government which preceded the present one passed an Order in Council reducing the fees about one-half to be received from parties whose weights and measures were inspected? Now, if the comparison that he made that it cost $3 to collect $1 under his Administration, was correct, and they reduced the fees one-half, then it should cost $6 to collect $1 under the Government that succeeded him. But what is the fact? From his own figures—I have not them before me, and speak from recollection—he shows that it cost now about $2 to collect $1. If it cost $2 to collect $1 under the present system, and the fees reduced one-half, and $ to collect $1 under the old system, then it costs $1 less to collect the fees now, and the people are taxed just one-half what they were previously. The hon. gentleman told the House—and I would like to have it go to the country—that the same amount of fees were collected now that were collected when it cost their Government $3 to collect $1. I leave it to the House to say whether statements of that kind, with the facts before them, are either fair or honest on the part of hon. gentlemen. It is to my personal knowledge that the officer in the city of Belleville is one of the most efficient on the staff; and if the amount collected is not relatively as large as it should be, from appearances, to the amounts collected elsewhere, we must understand that he is at the head of the branch of that district, consequently his salary is larger and the disproportion would be greater. I know further than that, that if the Government that went out of office in 1873 did order these standards, while their successors were in office, they purchased a large number of standards that are now lying in the cellars of the Eastern Block, and were when the present Government came into power—$37,399.49 worth of useless standards purchased by the hon. gentleman's Government, and there they lay. If the hon. gentleman will refer to the expenditure of that Department for 1876-77, he will find that the equipment that year was $22,000; contingencies, $23,382; salaries, $55,025—for this year alone over $100,400 to work the cumbersome machine they had on hand. It is surprising that we find hon. gentlemen getting up in the House and defending the appointment of these officers, from Labrador to Algoma; and keeping them in office from six months to two years, without ever attempting to teach them anything, and if they did, they never furnished them with instruments with which they could perform any of their work. Hon. gentlemen opposite were ready to cheer the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross), when he pointed out the difference in the cost of collecting when the fees were twice as high as they are now, why did they not cheer when the facts contained in the public records, and which every person who reads them can know, were pointed out. I recommend the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Vail) to spend an hour in investigating the matter, and I feel quite certain he will not again rise with the same amount of indignation and talk about this Government being the most corrupt Government that ever existed. It will be well for him when he makes that charge to point out where the corruption is. A mere piece of declamation that any person, or any Government, is the most corrupt, without possessing any evidence to sustain the charge, or attempt to sustain it, is not such a course of action as should be pursued by an ex-Minister of War. I know he is a fighting character, and always ready to throw his large proportions into the breach, but it would be just as well, when he does, so that he should have some ammunition with which to sustain him in any such onslaught in future.

Mr. FAIRBANK. One fact has been omitted during this discussion. A comparison has been made between the work of the officers who executed this law in its earlier stages and those who executed it at a later period. The fact to which I desire to draw attention, and which has been so far omitted, is this: When the officers first came to perform their duties they had something to do. Anyone who is practically acquainted with weights and measures knows that when the officers first entered on their duties weights were largely out of proper condition, many being too light and many too heavy. The work of adjusting the weights was considerable. Those that were too heavy had to be drilled and those too light had to be filled. This work in some large establishments now occupies only a few minutes, whereas in the first instance it occupied hours, and in some cases days; so a comparison between the work then and now is altogether unjust towards those who first did the work. They may have been very incompetent and fit for nothing else, as has been said; but at the same time they did their work, and their successors have very little to do except to reverify what has been done.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The remarks of the hon. gentleman are pertinent to the subject, and therefore it is a pleasure to have heard them. But there is a matter of considerable importance now before the Committee, involving a question of veracity. The hon. member for Middlesex (Mr. Ross) stated that while the expenditure under this Act had increased, the revenue had largely decreased. He quoted the expenditure and the decreased revenue. Now, I would like to ask that hon. gentleman whether he knew or did not know that the Government of which he was a supporter had reduced the rate of fees by one-half. Did he know it or not?

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Did I know what?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Did the hon. gentleman know or did he not know that the Government of Mr. Mackenzie had reduced the charges under the Weights and Measures Act?

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I cannot see what that has to do with the argument.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Then the hon. gentleman did not know. He, a leading member of his party, did not know that the Government of Mr. Mackenzie had reduced the charges by one-half. He did not know that. Does anybody believe he did not know it? Everybody knows he knew it. Everybody knows the hon. gentleman's ability, that he follows closely the legislation and administration of the day; and yet he says he does not know anything about it. The hon. gentleman rose and said there was only half the revenue, or much less revenue collected under this Act than under the late Administration. It is accounted for by the fact that the tariff of fees was reduced by one-half. If the hon. gentleman did not know it, it showed his ignorance; if he did know it, it showed his disingenuousness and want of candor. I leave him to choose either horn of the dilemma, that of being grossly ignorant or of being guilty of want of candor in making the charge that while the expenditure has increased, the revenue has decreased. This is a matter of very considerable importance, because it affects the standing and reputation of the hon. gentleman, and it affects the confidence which this House will place in statements made by the hon. gentleman hereafter. When the hon. gentleman rises in his place and makes an attack on the Government and charges the Department of Inland Revenue with maladministration, because it had not collected so much as had been collected under a tariff which was quite as large, I think the hon. gentleman is bound to get out of this difficulty, because if he does not it will be felt—I state here distinctly in my place—that the hon. gentleman has made a charge which, while it does not, in any way affect the administration of this Department, affects greatly the confidence this House will have hereafter in the hon. gentleman's statements.

Mr. VAIL. In reply to the hon. Minister of Customs, I would say that the hon. gentleman declared that the late Government expended a certain amount in the purchase of weights and measures which are now in a department in the Eastern Block.

Mr. BOWELL. They are useless.

Mr. VAIL. That may be the case or not. If the Mackenzie Government purchased them, the present Government have allowed them to remain unused, and are therefore liable to censure. In respect to a reduction of fees, I do not know whether the Mackenzie Government reduced them or not before they went out of power. I think it is very likely they did so; and if I am not mistaken they reduced them before, and intended to reduce them still further, because they did not want them to be a tax on the country.

If the present Government found the reduction made was too great, and that the amount of fees collected was too small, why did they not increase them? The hon. gentleman has stated that the ex-Minister of War is rather disposed to find fault. I make a point not to attack unless I am attacked. I cannot be acting very wrongly in following the First Minister, who used strong terms. The leader of the Government stated that the Mackenzie Government was corrupt, and that they were actuated by corrupt motives; and I do not think the First Minister, whatever the hon. Minister of Customs may think, will hold that I am acting wrongly in returning the compliment. I think I have a perfect right to do so; and I think it will be acknowledged on both sides of the House that, when a shot is thrown, we have a perfect right to return it, at all events. I do not wish to complain of the present Government in this matter; we have spent a good deal of time over this question, which is important. It is one in which the public is very deeply interested, and I think, that while it is important that all weights and measures should be inspected, I do not hesitate to say that Inspectors of Weights and Measures should be very cautious as to how they proceed with their work, not putting the country to more expense than is actually necessary, or to more trouble in connection with these matters than is actually necessary. I am not prepared to say that the Inspectors in Nova Scotia have all done their duty to the fullest extent; I have no doubt that if enquired into, many of them have been rather remiss in the performance of their duties; but, at the same time, I do not intend to find fault with this; but we on this side of the House must not be charged with dereliction of duty, and be found fault with if we return the compliment.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). The hon. the First Minister has tried to fasten on me the charge that I have been misleading the House. I defy the hon. gentleman to substantiate that position. Let us look at the position of affairs? This is an Act which was first put in operation in the year 1876-77. On the Tariff, which was originally passed, as I remember the facts, in that year, $50,000 of revenue was collected. It was found that this revenue pressed heavily on the people, from whom it was collected. The rates were considered high, and in the following year a reduction was made, and during that year a revenue of about $30,000 was collected.

Mr. BOWELL. What year was that?

Mr. ROSS. 1877-78. Under the high tariff first adopted, when the Bill was passed, it cost \$2.25 to collect each \$1 of revenue. Under the amended tariff, with a reduction of about $\frac{1}{2}$ per cent., as I remember it—and if I am wrong I can set it right on Concurrence—it cost \$3 to collect each \$1. That was the last year that we administered the law in full. The following year, under the same tariff, if I remember aright—and if I am wrong the hon. gentleman ought to put me right, for he ought to know something—according to my information, it cost \$6 to collect each \$1. There is the charge; and how have I been misleading the House? If, by some little lapse of memory, I misled the House the hon. gentleman will surely give me credit in that I was prepared to put the House right again. Five minutes had not passed before the speech made by the hon. gentleman, when here, in my place, I retracted the statement which I then knew was wrong. Can the hon. gentleman furnish better proof of my honesty and candor? I knew that I had misled the House the moment I put my hand on the return which I had marked with the view of using it in this House, and I corrected the return as far as Mr. Boggs was concerned. I fastened the complaint on the proper person, Mr. Egan, and with that fact in the possession of the hon. gentleman, he was fair enough, he was candid enough, he was manly enough, to try and fasten the charge on me that I was disingenuous, and misleading the House. Sir, the record of the hon. gentleman himself is too well known, and his political career is too vulnerable to justify him in making such a charge against any hon. member. I will not make reprisals at this moment, but I say the facts which I have given to the House and the figures in my possession, which I have received at this moment, substantiate the very position that I have taken. The hon. gentleman has not yet proved that I misled the House. He merely asked the question. He queried the matter, and supposed it. He proffered a supposition, which he expected would damage the member for West Middlesex. Sir, I can assure the hon. gentleman, that in no instance have I ever attempted to mislead this House; but suppose that I had fallen short in a point of information, has not the hon. gentleman been short of information frequently? How many trips does the hon. gentleman make from his chair to his departmental subordinates, in order to get information regarding his office. He, the First Minister, he, the highest salaried officer in the Government and in this House; he, with thirty or thirty-five years experience in this House, must trot forward and backward in order to get assistance regarding the simplest matters of detail, which every third class clerk should know, and would be expected to know; and he is the hon. gentleman who charges me with ignorance, he who asks for votes during the same evening, promising to bring down to the House on Concurrence, information regarding matters, which come under his cognizance and notice every day; and yet he, forsooth, must pose as a man who knows everything, while member in this House, who is plodding, as he has to do, week after week during the three short months of this Session, must be sat down upon, forsooth, by the hon. gentleman, who I expected, would be more chivalrous, especially in view of his knowledge and experience of members of Parliament. I tell the hon. gentleman that I have substantiated my position, and every statement which I made I verily believe to be true; and if the hon. gentleman finds it is not true, let him state it on Concurrence, and we will accept the evidence, but let him produce his proof, for we will not accept the hon. gentleman's mere assertions for proof.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Let us have this out with the hon. gentleman; I want to know whether he admits that he made a mistake or not? The hon. gentleman, in the first place, says he may have made a mistake, and that he showed his candor by admitting that he was wrong about Mr. Boggs; and then he says he is right. Is he right or wrong?

Mr. ROSS. In what?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In making the statement he did.

Mr. ROSS. I believe I am right in making the statement.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Did the hon. gentleman know, or not, about the reduction in the tariff?

Mr. ROSS. I certainly knew about the reduction.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. And when?

Mr. ROSS. And when what?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. And when?

Mr. ROSS. I am not in the witness-box, being examined by the hon. gentleman; and I will not be put in the witness box by the hon. gentleman.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Then the hon. gentleman will not be put in the witness-box; and I will not put him in the witness-box. We will not commit him for contempt for not answering the question, because nobody is bound to criminate himself—that is a principle of law; but the hon. gentleman has, I think, in the estimation of this House, and when this is published, will have, in the estimation of the country, criminated himself. The hon. gentleman has done so. He says, I was not very chivalrous in pinning down the hon. gentleman and in fastening him down in his making a disingenuous statement against the Administration of which I am the leader. I had a right to defend my Administration; and I had a right to show that when the hon. gentleman tried to draw a comparison to the advantage of the late Administration and to the disadvantage of the present Government, that the hon. gentleman was wrong, and that he either knew he was wrong, in which case he was disingenuous, or that he was ignorant, culpably ignorant; and I leave the hon. gentleman to say on which horn of the dilemma he should be transfixed—certainly he is impaled on one or the other. You perhaps remember, Mr. Chairman—I do not know whether you are a play-going man—in one of the most charming plays written by the celebrated Richard Sheridan, "The Rivals," Fag-a-Fag was the servant, and in one of the acts he says, when he is caught, or rather pinned somewhat like the hon. gentleman, "Well, I do not mind telling a lie for a friend, but it hurts my conscience to be found out." And that is pretty much, so far as parliamentary comparisons go, the position of the hon. gentleman. I have no hesitation to repeat that, on Concurrence, we will be able to show distinctly the fact of the disingenuousness of the hon. gentleman or of his gross ignorance.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Well, if the hon. gentleman is so very anxious to place himself in the witness-box, will he tell me himself when the reduction was made? in what year was it? and perhaps I may verify my figures with his on Concurrence.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I ask my subordinates to give me information. It is true that I am anxious to make faithful and candid and true statements to the House, and therefore I go to the proper source to get that information. The hon. gentleman, however, trusts to his memory, or rather, in this case, to his imagination.

Mr. ROSS. No.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; rather to his imagination. I have to go to the proper authority to get my information. I go to the permanent officers of the Department, who are the depositories of all the facts in their Department, as permanent officers must be; and I believe that I submit correct statements to this House. The hon. gentleman, not having the advantage of having subordinates, and having a vivid imagination, makes his statement, and, so far as I can learn, the alterations were made in 1877.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). That sustains my contention exactly. In the year 1876-77 the collections were $50,000, or $1 collected for every $2.25 expended. The next year, which was the year 1877-78, the fees have cost $3, and the collections were $1; while the revenue next year, the hon. gentleman's first full year, cost $6 to collect. So that it appears that with the assistance of the hon. gentleman's evidence, which I am glad to get, my own recollection is confirmed, and with the assistance of his subordinates who supply him with the information, I am able to pin him on the dilemma on one horn or other of which he thought he had fixed me—a dilemma which, if it existed at all, existed only in his own imagination. I might make a remark as to what the right hon. gentleman has said about Brinsley Sheridan's play, and to the remark of Fag-a-Fag that he did not tell a lie, but it made him very uncomfortable. Perhaps the right hon. gentleman may have some recollection of an hon. member making some statement in this House with regard to his hands, and afterwards making certain statements on oath which did not quite accord with that statement. Perhaps it did not hurt him, but the opinion of the House and the country was that it was not quite the proper thing to do.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman who last addressed the House has kindly called attention to some statement he made with regard to Mr. Boggs, whose name has so frequently been mentioned in the House to-night. I am glad the hon. gentleman was candid enough to admit that he was mistaken with regard to Mr. Boggs, but I am afraid that he made an equal error with regard to Mr. Egan. I have no doubt that the same spirit of candor which prompted him to correct his former error with regard to Mr. Boggs, will prompt him to rise and say that he did not intend to make any remarks derogatory of the character of Mr. Egan, whom, I believe, to be a respectable gentleman, a well educated man, and a most competent officer. He states that a gentleman who was formerly in the employ of the Department was canvassing for his party, and was in fact a sort of politician while he was under pay of the Government. I think that, on reflection, the hon. gentleman will have to correct that remark.
Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). No.

Mr. COSTIGAN. He resigned his office, and had not been an officer of the Department for some months before that time.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Is he an officer now?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). He is not employed in the Department?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I think the debate for the last hour has largely been the result of a misapprehension. Before the debate assumed the tone which I am sorry to say it has assumed, the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross) stated that he would come to gas.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). We have come to it now.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I am glad to be able to wake up hon. gentlemen opposite, who seemed to have been partly asleep. The hon. member stated that he would now come to the question of gas. The hon. gentleman then made a statement, and persisted in it, which the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue has just shown to be a misstatement, with regard to Mr. Egan. This has all arisen from the perverse disposition of the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross), in not taking the advice of so old and able a Parliamentarian as the First Minister. The hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross), though he had the excuse of suffering under the effects of a severe rasping, did not set as good an example as I think the hon. gentleman in his calmer moments would like to set to this House, when, with uplifted hands and a great deal of excitement, he tried to reflect on the First Minister for consulting his subordinates. The hon. gentleman knows that no man in this House has his information on every point so financially correct as the hon. First Minister, and though he may, as the hon. gentleman says in his classic and elegant way, trot back and forth to his deputy, I should think that his anxiety to give exact information on every point should be considered a subject of credit to him rather than of blame. In point of accuracy the hon. member for West Middlesex is quite different from the hon. First Minister. He has no subordinates, so he does not have to trot back and forth; but I think, when he invited debate on this subject, he should have informed himself, by, if necessary, trotting back and forth to the library and getting a knowledge of facts of which he seems to be ignorant. It is due to himself; it is due to the position he occupies; and it is due to his colleagues in the House that a member occupying his position should verify every statement he makes, and that he should be accurate in every scintilla of evidence. Nor should he, as he has done to-night, lose his temper and give way to the ebullition which the hon. members have witnessed. The hon. gentleman denied the statement that the men who were appointed by the late Government were political partisans. I can only speak from my own knowledge, and I can say of one man in my county who was appointed by the late Government, that political work was his only business—that he was constantly engaged in electioneering, and that when the elections came in 1878 he drove all over the county, and was the loudest-mouthed politician there. A great many statements have been made here which are perfectly irrelevant.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear hear.

Mr. WOODWORTH. Yes; it belongs there. A great many matters have been introduced which are irrelevant. For instance; the hon. member for West Middlesex introduced the names of the hon. John O'Connor and the hon. Mr. Cockburn, an ex-Speaker of this House; and he repeated twice that these men were physically unable to do their duties. It was owing to his sticking to the gas affair that the hon. member for West Middlesex introduced these irrelevant matters. If the hon. First Minister had thought for a moment, he might have seen that the hon. member for West Middlesex started on this track merely for the purpose of cultivating the art of debate. The hon. First Minister must have known that he was quite as far astray, as when he said Xerxes was the man who drove the tide back. I do not think the hon. First Minister should come down on a man when he acknowledges that he did not intend to debate this question within the rules of debate, but to gas a little. This reminds me of the story of a man who fiddled with all his might to a deaf man; after he gets through with all his tunes, he looks to the deaf man and says: "How do you like it?" The deaf man says: "When you are done tuning up, won't you play us a tune?" After they have got through these inaccurate descriptions, and the facts they have not given—perhaps the hon. members of the Opposition will give us a tune upon these estimates, and debate them as they ought to be debated. I hope the Hansard will not be lumbered up with this. I do not want my speech to be in the Hansard. I do not think it tends to the credit of Parliament for these speeches to be made and placed on record; but if they are put in Hansard as they have been delivered here, I want no better punishment inflicted upon some hon. members who have spoken on the opposite side of the House; and let everybody read them, and judge these hon. gentlemen by them. But I think the debates in Committee, if conducted as hon. members opposite have conducted them to-night, had better not be placed in the Hansard but passed into oblivion, so that no record will remain.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I have not the least idea that the hon. gentleman speaks the utterances of his heart, when he says that he desires that his utterances should not appear in Hansard. I think we have heard him twice to-day, and among all the hon. members whom I have seen rise, to speak to the question before the Chair, he was the farthest from approaching it in the slightest degree. I would like to ask the hon. Minister if the Inspectors of Weights and Measures are in all cases the Inspectors of Gas?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Not in all cases. The custom of the Department is, where an inspection of gas is established not to appoint a Gas Inspector, if an Excise officer is already there. The duty is assigned to the Excise officer, and a certain allowance is made to him for that duty in addition to his salary.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). After the candid and courteous advice of the hon. member for King's (Mr. Woodworth), there can but little be said. The hon. gentleman, with his exceedingly pleasant way of putting things, his pleasant fireside stories and amusing illustrations, reminds me of Artemus Ward's account of his monkey, which he described as an "amusing little cuss," and a playful attraction to his "wax figger" show. The hon. gentleman gets up in the most amusing way, as I fancy Artemus Ward's monkey did—or was it a monkey? Perhaps the hon. gentleman, who is more learned than I, can tell to what species he belongs—but in any case the hon. gentleman is quite as amusing a feature in this House.

Mr. HESSON. I call the hon. gentleman to order. He called this House a crowd.

Mr. ROSS. I should be corrected. My early education was neglected, I admit. Before I was called to order, I was talking of the hon. member for King's, but I do not wish to pursue the subject further, though it is very tempting; the hon. member smiles so sweetly when he speaks, is so child-like and bland, his heart is so warm and his sympathies so generous, his language so correct and grammatical, and, above all, his parliamentary experience, which gives him a right to lecture younger members—like myself, for instance—is so extensive, that this rare combination of qualities, seldom found in one individual, makes him, in my eyes, a very pleasant subject for discourse. But, however agreeable the theme, time is limited, and I must proceed to more commonplace details. I wish to ask the hon. Minister a question or two in regard to the inspection of gas. I notice the fees are small and the expenses very considerable—$12,000. The hon. gentleman should consider whether he could not make this part of the service nearer self-sustaining. Ottawa should contribute something in the shape of fees for the inspection of gas. Why not make all the cities where gas is consumed pay more?

Mr. LANDERKIN. I would not say anything on this matter were it not for the attack made by the hon. member for East Grey (Mr. Sproule) on the late inspector of Weights and Measures there, Mr. Campbell, who was appointed when the measure first came into force. Mr. Campbell is a highly-educated man, a gentleman who stands high in the esteem and regard of the people of that county, and who, by his ability and the agreeable manner in which he enforced an act disagreeable in its nature, and imperfect and unpopular at the outset, gained the respect of all with whom he transacted business. I never yet heard any individual make a single charge against Mr. Campbell, and it will be heard with surprise and indignation in East Grey that the representative of that county made so foul, coarse and unfounded a charge against him. As an instance of the esteem in which Mr. Campbell is held I may mention that on his leaving for Manitoba, he was tendered a public banquet, which was attended by not only the leading people of Grey, but by many of those of Bruce county, who were anxious to pay him a tribute of their respect. The course followed by the hon. member for East Grey is unworthy of any man. It was cowardly on the part of the hon. gentleman to rise in this House and assail a gentleman whose character is as much beyond his as day is beyond night; and I could not allow a charge to be made against Mr. Campbell without rising in my place and vindicating his character. Now, it was stated that Mr. Campbell hired a man and paid him $5 a day. What are the facts in connection with the matter? When Mr. Campbell undertook the work of inspection in South Grey, he found the scales in a very defective state. Why, the hon. member for East Grey admitted that his scale was in such a state that it required $2.50 to repair it. Mr. Campbell was not obliged to take a competent smith to repair these scales and have them set in order before he adjusted them, but, in order to accommodate the people, he took with him a competent person to put the scales in order, and afterwards Mr. Campbell adjusted them, and these scales have not had to be adjusted since. The officer who has been appointed since has found nothing to do. I have nothing to say against him, but I am told that he does not much else than to draw his fees. When Mr. Campbell employed this person to go with him, the Government did not pay his fees, but the people were willing, in order to have a competent man to repair their scales, to pay him for his work. Now, it will be heard with very peculiar feelings by the people that the hon. member for East Grey has made this charge against Mr. Campbell.

Mr. SPROULE. Would the hon. member state what were the charges?

Mr. LANDERKIN. I will not repeat them.

An hon. MEMBER. You said he got drunk.

Mr. SPROULE. Yes.

Mr. LANDERKIN. You said other things in connection with him, and it was unworthy of you to make a statement of that kind to this House; it was ungentlemanly in you to make this statement. Mr. Campbell was one of the most efficient and most capable officers in the whole Inland Revenue service. I have this from the very highest authority, and that he should be charged with neglecting his duty is something that I was surprised to hear, and it is very cowardly in any member of this House to get up after the lapse of two or three years and make so gross a charge against an officer whose character was as much higher than that of the hon. member for East Grey as it is possible to be. I say this, and I know the value of what I am saying; I say that in the esteem and respect of the people of East Grey and of South Grey, Mr. Campbell's character is far better and purer than that of the hon. member for East Grey. After Mr. Campbell had discharged the duties so well, and was then dismissed without a single charge being made against him, and now after the lapse of years, a member in this House is found so cowardly as to rise in his place and make a charge against that gentleman, I say I will never sit still and see such a cowardly transaction perpetrated in this House.

Mr. SPROULE. I think if there is any one thing less than another I am entitled to be called, it is cowardly. I think the hon. gentleman knows it to his sorrow before to-day. I have been on platforms with him all over the country, and have had occasions, repeatedly, to analyze his statements, and many of his assertions—not to his credit, I can assure him.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I rise to a point or order.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. Will the hon. gentleman please sit down.

Mr. LANDERKIN. My point of order is this: He says he has met me on many platforms. I deny it; he never met me on a platform in his life but once.

Mr. SPROULE. Did he not meet me one night when Mr. Fahey was candidate in South Grey? Did he not meet me in the Orange Hall, Markdale?

Mr. LANDERKIN. I never met him in my life but once.

Mr. SPROULE. Did we not meet only last June at Markdale on a platform?

Mr. LANDERKIN. I did not meet you at all. You ran away.

Mr. SPROULE. We met on the platform on many occasions. Now, I have scarcely ever spoken in this House when the hon. member for South Grey was present, that he did not get up immediately after and read me a lecture on what I should do in order to fulfil my duty. I want that hon. gentleman to understand that I do not look to him for any information as to what is my duty.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Nor to any other source.

Mr. SPROULE. I shall endeavor to do what I believe to be my duty as the representative of a riding which is, I think, as important as his own. With reference to what has been said about my character, I can only say that those are the best judges to compare our characters to whom we are both known. The hon. member says that I stated the Inspector of Weights and Measures got drunk. I can only say that I helped him out of my own shop over to his hotel, and I had almost to carry him there. More than that, I know another gentleman who assisted him across the country, and yet at the same time his man was drawing $5 a day. The hon. gentleman complains because I said Mr. Campbell was not able to do his work, and consequently had to hire a man. I can only tell him that Mr. Campbell came to me, and I went and got a man to work for him, because Mr. Campbell knew nothing about fixing scales, and I was perfectly right in saying that there was a much larger amount of money taken out of the people by those men who were said to be competent to do the work, than ever went into the Treasury for the Government. I am ready to make these charges every day, and I can substantiate them. As to Mr Campbell's private character, I have nothing to say. I consider him a very agreeable person. I found him a very agreeable person when I was going round with him, but I knew that he had his man with him to do the work, and I knew he took money out of the people to pay him. At present, if a man's scale is not right, he can take it to a mechanic and get it fixed, and pay for it himself; if he gets it fixed for $1, he saves the balance, whereas he formerly had to pay from $2.50 upwards for the same work.

Mr. LANDERKIN. One word in explanation. Mr. Campbell in order to fix the scales—I am quite sure from what I know of Mr. Campbell that he allowed these persons to get their scales fixed wherever they pleased, and that he only took this person with him because it was more convenient for the people to have a man come to their own doors. This was surely a great convenience to persons who lived at a distance from villages, to have mechanics capable of repairing their scales.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member is entirely wrong, because, in my own village where there are six blacksmiths, he hired a man. He took this man to Thornbury, Meaford and other places, and refused to let parties take their scales to mechanics and have them fixed, but said: "I have a mechanic and I have the right to do the work and charge the parties."

Mr. LANDERKIN. I believe Mr. Campbell was willing, in all cases, to allow the people to select their own men.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I am not trespassing, I think, on the Committee by comparison. The hon. member for West Middlesex has spoken sixteen or eighteen times; he has been up very often and seems bound to have the last word. I am quite willing that he should have the last word, but not that he should sit in his seat and leave the House under the impression, which prevails in his own mind only, that he has said some very clever and smart things, and that he should go to his room self-satisfied and self-approved. It is a bad thing and I do not intend to allow him to do it, and I intend to take that pleasure from him unless he has a pachyderm's hide. I had no thought, on entering this House, of saying a word in opposition to anything which the hon. member for West Middlesex stated when he was making one of his set speeches, because he had a reputation, as I thought, for accuracy and plausibility of statement at least, and he was one of those mild-tempered and good men of the House, one of those really good, cold-water, Christian men. I do not insinuate, because their heads are always level, not flat—the water level I mean—and are eminently respectable; but the hon. gentleman started to-night evidently with a set speech and had papers before him. I listened with a great deal of respect and interest, but he departed in a short time from the line I have always seen him adopt, and he assumed another one, and the moment he got off his base I found that the calm, cool, tone was but a veneer, and that under that exterior there lay the hidden character, that he could be as coarse as an old fish-woman, that the Billingsgate employed by them could not be more coarse than the language he could use. I do not intend to be unparliamentary as he was, but I do say that this mantle of respectability, forsooth, has been stripped from his back—by whom? By the hon. member for West Middlesex himself; and he stands here in the character of a mere bitter, coarse scold. He was very respectable for a while and represented Uriah Heap before he was found out by David Copperfield; and then, as he shaking his fist said: "I always hated you, Copperfield," so the hon. gentleman shook his fist at the hon. First Minister. Before he sat down he was humble and wanted to be nothing—and you remember Uriah Heap stuck his finger nails into his flesh. The hon. member has showed himself in his true character. He chose early in the morning, not when the galleries are filled with the elite of Ottawa, for then he would be respectable, and thought he would make a night of it and be himself, and he has succeeded. I gave him a single story with no harm in it. What did he do? He got up here and attempted to be facetious. It was like a man who sat down on the door-step and tried to look pleasant. He looked at my attenuated form and I felt insignificant before the towering presence of the great physical form before me; and he said: "It reminds me of Artemus Ward, who had a little monkey, and he was an amusing little cuss." He looked at me and I looked back at him; a small man was in the presence of a great intellectual and physical giant. He looked very much like a character that I saw in Barnum's when I was there. What was it? Looking at his photograph you would swear that it was the bearded woman. Take his photograph—I am paying back the hon. gentleman in his own coin, and I gave him notice that I would do so—and take a photograph of the bearded woman, and tell me the difference. Yet this hon. gentleman said I was an amusing little cuss. Just think of it. He attempted to say what he should not have said. I think it was Sterne who said: "Never laugh at a man who attempts anything with a wooden leg, unless the man attempts to dance a hornpipe." I had no intention of saying anything back to the hon. member of an unpleasant character, or of a nature to hurt his feelings in the slightest degree; and I do not know, that I hurt them now. But no more than he should fly, should he attempt to dance a hornpipe, and enter into a row with a respectable cold-water Christian man. I hope he will always keep that character. I hope, that this night does not drive him to drink, and in order to keep his courage up, pour spirits down, nor should he attempt a rôle for which nature did not make him. He was out of his element. He was off his base; and no man was ever more completely drunk from intoxicating liquor, than he was completely drunk this night from the bowling over that he got from the First Minister and the Minister of Customs. He made a perfect exhibition of himself, because it was not a set speech. I will not tell him now the rôle he played, but it was not the rôle of calm respectability, which he usually possesses.

Mr. ROSS. Thank you.

Mr. WOODWORTH. "Thank you;" he shall have it. He told me that I was not very grammatical, but I was quite as grammatical as he. I was historical, and I was quite as correct in my instances of history as that great School Inspector of the great Province of Ontario. I have just as much right to go on with the debate in this way, as the hon. gentleman had, in half-a-dozen other things, to show how nice a School Inspector he was. He has as much right—

Mr. ROSS. Go on.

Mr. WOODWORTH. He saved me the trouble, and Nature saved me the rest.

Mr. ROSS. We are discussing gas.

Mr. WOODWORTH. No; you are not discussing gas; but you sit there the personification of it. I am discussing gas; that hon. gentleman undertook to speak about my large Parliamentary experience. Well, I have just as much as he has at all events. I think that possibly my Parliamentary experience is nearly as large as his, clever as he thinks he is; and perhaps I know something about Parliamentary proceedings, and even as much as he does. It is impossible that one small head can know all he professes to know. Why, he is lecturing half his time, somewhere or other, at some tea-meeting; and how in the world, had he the versatile talents of Lord Brougham, could he know something more about Parliamentary science than the youngest member of this House. He cannot. Nature has rendered such a thing impracticable. He could not do it. It is impossible. Therefore, I argue that he cannot know much about Parliamentary experience when he is giving up his time to little tea-meetings, and to little finical things which he so much delights in. It is, however, perfectly proper that he should amuse himself with the idea; but he should not attempt a rôle which he cannot carry out. Let me give him a piece of advice. Of course, being a School Inspector, he will know where it is to be found, and where it comes from. Let him think of it, and when he attempts again, in this House, even at so late an hour as this, to play the buffoon, as he did to-night—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh! Oh!

Mr. WOODWORTH. Mark you, I had an example on the other side of the House, and I did not interrupt, and let this go side by side, as an answer, into Hansard and history, and let the children see the history which he did make, go to the schools, and show how the hon. member for Middlesex conducted himself one evening towards the close of the Session. Let him take this picture home with him to rest, instead of the self-satisfied air which I saw on him a while ago:

"With all his conscience and one eye askew
So false he partly took himself for true,
Whose pious talk, when most his heart was dry,
Made wet the crafty crow's foot round his eye.
Nor deeds of gift, but gifts of grace he forged,
And, snake-like, slimed his victim ere he gorged,
Who never took God's name except for gain,
So never took that useful name in vain.
Made him his cat's paw, and the cross his tool,
And Christ the bait to trap his dupe and fool.
Tho' oft at Bible meetings, o'er the rest Arising, did his holy, oily best,
Dropping the too rough H. in hell and heaven,
To spread the word by which himself had thriven."

How does the hon. gentleman like that?

Mr. ROSS. Encore.

Mr. WOODWORTH. No doubt; you are not in school. The hon. member has not now got pupils in school.

Mr. ROSS. Encore; say it slowly.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I intend to say it deliberately, and I will tell him this much. The hon. gentleman has evidently been in the theatres, to judge from the story which he told here to-night; and I say, that the character fits him, as he appeared when he occupied the floor of this House to-night in delivering himself of the worst mass of medley and contradictions that ever characterized a member of Parliament in the world. I can tell the hon. gentleman something else. The hon. gentleman was ably abetted by his cold water friend from South Grey.

Mr. LANDERKIN. Do not call me friend.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I am sure I did not call the hon. gentleman Grey, I did not make him Grey.

Mr. LANDERKIN. God forbid that I should have such a friend.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I will tell the hon. gentleman he will find the character which he has played here to-night will not conduce to his fame, and hereafter when the children are inspected, and their education and morals are complete, and when they look back at the record which he has made here to-night they will not thank the hon. gentleman for his exhibition. I regret exceedingly that the tone of the debate, unnecessarily as it seems to me, has drifted in this way. I do not think that there was any cause for it. Possibly I may be in fault a little. But I do think the hon. gentleman who has arrogated to himself so much knowledge and so much Parliamentary practice, will find himself much to blame, and I advise him in future cases not to provoke discussions which do not conduce either to the harmony or to the welfare of this House.

Mr. BOWELL. When I spoke a few moments ago I said the hon. member for West Middlesex had misled the House by the manner in which he had given the figures, or rather the comparisons which he presented to the Committee in reference to this expenditure; and that an investigation would result in showing that he did not tell all the truth in connection with this matter, that is, he did not tell all the facts. I find that in that statement I was correct, for I now have the figures before me, which I did not have at that moment, and the Committee will see at once how unfair was the statement which that hon. gentleman made to the Committee in the first instance. In 1876-77 the total expenditure in connection with the Weights and Measures was $100,409; and the collections that year were $51,657. In 1878 the expenditure was $81,992, and the collections were $29,683. During a portion of that year the law applied, which had been passed reducing the fees to be collected, and the tariff of fees had been reduced from 11 per cent. to 66 per cent. by 40 Vic., chap. 15; and on subsequent inspection, only 25 cts. were charged instead of the whole fees. Then came the following year of 1878-79 a portion of which hon. gentlemen were responsible just as much as the succeeding Government. That year all the collections were made under the reduced fees—that is from 11 per cent. to 66 per cent. and a portion of the other year.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). The same as in 1878.

Mr. BOWELL. A portion of 1878 was full fees, and the balance half fees. In 1878-79 the total collections were only $13,222 against an expenditure of $72,054. At that time the fees had been reduced in the proportions to which I have called attention, and in addition to that the second inspection was only 25 cts. in case the scales were found to be correct. This fully accounts for the reduction in the amount in the collections of that year. There had been no change in the law by the present Government, nor had there been Inspectors of Weights and Measures appointed up to that time, consequently the law was administered as it stood on the Statute-book when the present Government came into power with precisely the same officers as the late Government. In 1879-80 the expenditure was $47,518; the collections, $17,080. That was under the new law passed by the present Administration, and the next year the expenditure was $59,995, and collections $34,584. Hon. gentlemen must bear in mind that the inspection under the present law was made only once in two years instead of annually, which fully accounted for the reduction in the amount of fees collected.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That would also account for the fewer number of collectors.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes, and there were fewer collectors, and consequently they did not cost so much as in 1876-77, 1877-78 and 1878-79. With these facts before the Committee, they will justify the remarks I have made that when Mr. WOODWORTH.

hon. gentlemen stated that under their administration of the law it only cost so much per dollar to collect, while under our administration it cost so much more. The House will justify me in saying that the hon. gentleman did not make a fair statement in connection with this matter. My hon. friend from Digby (Mr. Vail) said that the present Administration found certain instruments in the Department and did not use them, and this he called culpable on the part of the Government. The hon. gentleman forgot to state that they were useless.

Mr. VAIL. But you said that they were still there.

Mr. BOWELL. But they are useless; they have been there all the time.

Mr. VAIL. They are part of the instruments purchased by the other Government.

Mr. BOWELL. No; they are instruments purchased in 1876-77 under the Administration of my hon. friend. The hon. gentleman speaks of the Government as being corrupt, and while I do not complain of that I think he should have given some basis for his statement. I said before and I repeat now, that I do not think the hon. gentleman is one of those who should bandy the term corruption in connection with any Government. When the hon. gentleman made an inglorious retreat from this House, and when he met with a still greater defeat in his constituency, I will not say that he was guilty of corruption, but he took advantage of his position, and directly contrary to the Independence of Parliament Act acted in a manner to bring seven or eight of his admirers and followers, and two of his own Cabinet, of whom he was one, under the Act and were unseated. It does not, therefore, lie in his mouth to accuse others of corruption.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I believe the hon. gentleman said that $37,000 of the instruments were lying in the cellar unused.

Mr. BOWELL. I did not state exactly the amount. What I stated was that there were lying in the building, weights and measures, scales and other articles, comparatively useless, which had cost $37,940; and that they were there when we came into office, and a portion of them were there still.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I understood him to say that a portion were purchased by the late Government, and that they are there yet. I do not charge the hon. gentleman with being disingenuous, but I think when he reads such lectures to hon. members on this side he should be a little more careful of his own statement. The hon. gentleman has entirely changed his statement, and though I impute no motives to him, still we have learned by a simple enquiry the fact that his first statement was not correct at all, and that it had to be considerably modified. We know further that the hon. gentleman was possessed of the information at the time which enabled him to modify the statement.

Mr. VAIL. With regard to these instruments, the hon. gentleman will remember that they were purchased under the direction and by the authority of a scientific gentleman, who was deputy-head of the Department, Mr. Brunel, and I do not think that the Government should be held responsible for them. I am not at all surprised that he holds himself responsible to some extent to answer the questions asked from this side of the House. I think I must reply to what the hon. gentleman said with reference to myself personally. He said I was obliged to resign my position in consequence of charges made against me, that I lost my election, and all that. I do not know what that had to do with the matter. There was no charge brought against me to cause me to resign. I did it voluntarily; and when I resigned there were thirty-three members in this House who were in a worse position than I was, and who did not resign. If I am not mistaken, the hon. Minister of Customs received more for public printing than I did, but he had not the manliness to resign, and no enquiry was made into his case, so he retained his seat. That is the difference between him and myself. I lost my election; but I won five elections out of six, with large majorities, which few other men in this House have done.

Resolutions to be reported.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to, and (at 2:20 o'clock a.m.) the House adjourned.

Motion agreed to.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. CHARLTON. I have never been in the habit of boring the House with criticisms on myself that appear in the newspapers. During the ten or eleven years I have been in Parliament this is the first occasion in which I have called the attention of the House to anything of that kind. I, of course, have not escaped criticism, and criticism that has very often been characterized by unfairness, and often by maliciousness, and mendacity; but I do not think it has ever done me any harm. On the contrary, the result, as far as I am concerned, has been beneficial. For the first time in my life, I, however, feel called upon to call the attention of the House to an article that appeared in a newspaper. I do this because the article is not only false, but it is calculated to place me in a false position before my constituents, and before the country, and for that reason I refer to that article to-day. It appears in the Mail of yesterday, in the "Sessional Notes," and it relates to the indemnity question. The portion of the article to which I refer is as follows:—

"The Globe's Ottawa correspondent has a good deal to say about the increase of the indemnity to members, and says, among other things, that the Government party caucus on Friday, was held for the discussion of the indemnity question. He says, further, that the Government supporters are solid in favor of increasing the annual indemnity to $1,500. On previous occasions the Opposition organ has attributed the indemnity increase agitation to the Conservatives. This is not a true statement. Whether the indemnity ought to be increased or not, is a question on which various opinions may be properly entertained. There is a good deal to say pro and con; but whether public sentiment ought to be in favor of, or against the increase of the indemnity, as a matter of fact the Opposition are responsible for the agitation. It may be affirmed that Mr. Charlton is the father of the original scheme, which, as elaborated by him and a few others of the Grits, included the continuance of the franking privilege during Recess. The Opposition have, it is understood, all agreed to ask the Government for an increase of the indemnity, except Messrs. Blake and Mackenzie, both of whom have promised to support the movement. How many of the Government side have agreed to support the agitation I do not know."

And further on:

"It is not often that the Opposition have so much right on their side as they have in this indemnity matter, which they have taken up so warmly, and really seeing how often they are foiled in their movements, one cannot but have a certain degree of sympathy with them on this occasion. The Government watch the public Treasury carefully, and while prepared, with the hearty concurrence of the people, to spend millions on our great national undertakings, and thousands to supply the country from end to end with public buildings, they practice close economy in most of their expenditures. It is, of course, difficult for the Government to resist the Opposition, if supported in this pet expenditure of theirs by a majority of the House; but the country may be sure that the increase will not be granted unless a very strong case in favor of it is presented. No doubt Messrs. Ross, Charlton, Paterson, of Brant, Somerville, of Brant, and others of the Opposition, who have the matter in hand will elaborate a powerful argument in support of the position they have assumed. In the meantime, the Globe has had a hint from the Opposition that in its attack upon this increase, it has been a little too previous."

Well, Sir, in reference to that article—I speak in behalf of myself and myself alone—I have to say in regard to the charge that I originated this scheme, that it is false, and the writer ought to have known it was false, because he had no proof to the contrary. With regard to the assertion that I advocate the scheme, that is not only false, but it is maliciously false, and the writer must have known it to be so because he had no proof that I had advocated the scheme. If he had enquired into the matter he would have ascertained that the contrary was the case, and, consequently, I declare that assertion was maliciously false. I do not favor, as the correspondent says, an increase of the indemnity; on the contrary, I have been opposed to it—I am opposed to it. I have taken a prominent part in opposition to the movement as can be testified to, I believe, by every member of the Reform party in this House; and I think I may venture to say that I am the only member of the Opposition who has declared his intention of dividing the House on this question.

Some hon. MEMBERS. No, no.

Mr. CHARLTON. Others can speak for themselves. I am glad to find there are others who are disposed to divide the House on this question. This correspondent, who, having first proceeded basely, maliciously and slanderously, to place myself and my friends in the position of having originated this scheme, of having advocated this scheme, then goes on to argue in favor of it. I have nothing more to say except to brand the article as false and slanderous, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I suppose, since this correspondent was kind enough to mention me, I ought, also, speaking for myself, repudiate all connection with this matter. I see he says:

"No doubt Messrs. Ross, Charlton, Paterson, of Brant, Somerville, of Brant, and others of the Opposition who have the matter in hand, will elaborate a powerful argument in support of the position they have assumed."

I can say that I have had nothing to do with that. I never signed, and never was asked to sign, a petition for it; had no connection with the matter from beginning to end. How the correspondent of the Mail, or any other person, could associate me with this matter, I cannot understand. The statement is untrue in toto, so far as I am concerned. I just wish to say, in these few words, that if correspondents would attend to other matters than the private affairs of members, they would be quite as usefully employed.

Mr. RYKERT. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will explain why it is that the Globe charged the Ministerial members with having subscribed towards the Ontario Elections, and then having originated this scheme in order to recoup themselves.

Mr. ROSS. I am speaking for myself. The Globe can explain its own charges, and can speak for itself.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Like my hon. friend from North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), I have sat in the House, I think, about eleven years, and during that time allusions have been occasionally made to myself in the press of both parties, and sometimes not very complimentary; but I can recognize the fact that, perhaps, they may see defects and blemishes in me that they are not so able to detect in themselves. Expressions of that kind, of course, we are quite prepared to meet with. I could also afford to let the expressions in the article that has just been read in your hearing pass, too, were it not that I fear that, perhaps, the correspondent who so far forgot himself as to pen what is absolutely and utterly without foundation, might attribute silence on my part as an endorsement of the statement made, without a shadow or particle of foundation for it. I desire to state to you, Mr. Speaker, very calmly—for it is not a very pleasant thing to have to denounce any article as being false in its nature, because that carries with it the imputation that the gentleman who penned it has done an unworthy deed—but I wish to say, in all calmness, that when that article states that the members of the Opposition are all pledged to this scheme, or words to that effect—and I, being a member of the Opposition, am included in the category—that the statement, so far as I am concerned, is absolutely, utterly, and totally, without foundation or shadow of truth. When, further down, he states my intention, along with “Messrs. Ross, Charlton, and Somerville, of Brant,” of advocating the scheme, I have again to give to it the same emphatic contradiction. There is not in the statement one single particle of truth. It is made entirely out of whole cloth. I would have passed it by, only I cannot understand why such a statement should find its way there, unless there was a certain amount of malice in the writer’s mind—why against myself I do not know; but he must have been actuated by that principle, and with a view, if possible, of damaging me in the eyes of my constituents. I am sorry to have troubled the House on such a matter, for the first time in eleven years. I do not know that it is necessary now. My word, when I went home among my constituents, would have been sufficient; but the matter having been mentioned by others, I have not remained silent for the reason I have alleged.

Mr. SOMERVILLE (Brant). My name having been mentioned in connection with this matter, I think it is my duty to make a statement in regard to my position. I would simply join with those who have already spoken, in denying the statement of the Mail, that I intended to ask the Government for an increase of the indemnity. I have no hesitation in declaring that statement to be utterly foundationless. And then, further on, when he says:

“The question would bear investigation, and if a good case is presented the people will not begrudge the members the increase the Opposition have banded themselves together to press upon their opponents.”

Mr. Ross (Middlesex).

This I also pronounce to be utterly untrue; and, further, when he says:

That I also declare to be an utter and wilful fabrication—a malicious fabrication; there is not a particle of truth in it. I may say that my position on the matter has been clearly and well defined and understood by those with whom I associate in this House. Ever since the question has been talked about I have been an uncompromising opponent to the scheme for a further increase of the indemnity. That has been well understood by those with whom I have had any conversation on the subject. I would just say that I have always, from the position I occupy as a member of the press, felt that we ought to have a high regard for that profession. I believe the members of the press, as a rule—the editors of newspapers, and the reporters who are engaged in this House—are men of high moral position, men who are incapable, as a rule, of doing an injustice to a political opponent; men who, as a rule, are incapable of sitting down and wilfully and maliciously penning what they know to be utterly false and foundationless. But there is no rule without an exception, and the exception in this case is the black sheep who wears spectacles, and who has strayed into the Mail’s flock. I say, furthermore, and I say it with perfect deliberation, that this man who deliberately sat down and penned that statement and sent it up for publication in the Toronto Mail, is a disgrace to the newspaper profession in the Dominion of Canada, and to the gallery of the House of Commons.

Mr. FOSTER. I waited until the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross) followed the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), as he very often does; but I forgot for a moment that the third had not followed, and so I clashed a little with my hon. friend from North Brant (Mr. Paterson). I did not know it was the custom when newspaper writers had said anything against you which you did not like, or which was not true, to rise in the House and enter your protest against it. If all the members did that, there would be a great deal of protesting. I, myself, have a little bit of reputation to keep, and I remember, not long since, seeing an item in a newspaper in which it was stated that, although I had been a life-long temperance man, and possessed strong temperance principles, I had gone back on them, and was not now in favor of Sunday closing. But I did not think it was necessary to rise in my place, and say that the newspaper reporter was malicious. I do not believe that; I think he was only hard up for an item, and this struck his imagination, and he put it in. Again, it has been stated, in a newspaper on the opposite side of politics to myself, that I allied myself with a deputation of maltsters, and went to try and prevail on the hon. Finance Minister to give more favorable terms to them. I think that is quite a libel on my character as a temperance man. I thought, however, with regard to the former, that it was done, not maliciously, but benevolently, and that the hon. gentleman who formerly occupied a seat in this House, and who has now gone into the better and nobler work of newspaper editing, did it from a benevolent desire, and not for a malicious purpose. I am glad to understand now that there is one hon. member on the opposite side of the House who has publicly expressed himself as being determined to divide the House on the question of increased indemnity; and that he is the only one on that side of the House. I have a grievance on the indemnity question myself, because it was stated very explicitly in the Globe that at Friday’s caucus all the Government supporters had supported the suggestion for an increase of indemnity, and I am generally known as a Government supporter. I do not, however, say the reporter wrote this maliciously, but, again, that he was hard up for an item, and thought this would do as well as anything else.

Mr. DAVIES. I desire to correct the impression left on the minds of hon. members by the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton), that he was the only hon. gentleman who was opposed to an increase of indemnity, and expressed his intention to divide the House upon it. I had not consulted with him; but my opinion was, that an increase of indemnity was inadvisable, and I resolved that I would divide the House. I am not alone in holding that opinion, and it is within my knowledge that a number of hon. members intended to take the same course as the hon. member for North Norfolk.

Mr. ALLISON. As an individual, I am not at all surprised that those hon. members of the Opposition who were singled out in the article referred to should have taken the earliest possible opportunity to put themselves right on this question under discussion. I think that if they had taken any other course they would not have done justice to themselves. But while I fully believe this, I think there is a good deal of importance to be attached to the remark which was made by the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert), that the newspaper press of both parties is equally to blame; and, perhaps, hon. members opposite would do well to remember that it was the organ of the Reform party in Toronto which first commenced the war, and the attack was made in a more objectionable manner, except that individuals were not singled out, than was that contained in the article in the Toronto Mail. For this reason, it not only made a charge against the supporters of the Government with being in favor of an increased indemnity, but it charged them with supporting this proposal for corrupt purposes, stating that the hon. Premier was going to give them an opportunity to recoup themselves for subscriptions given in aid of the party for the Local Elections. I think it well that this should be borne in mind. When the article first came under my notice, I drew the attention of some Reform members to it, these members being in favor of an increase in the indemnity, and they entirely agreed with me in this opinion, that whoever were the originators, and, up to that time, the promoters of an increase in the indemnity, those hon. members were not supporters of the Government from the Province of Ontario. I think it well, also, to bear this in mind. There is no disguising the fact that this movement, if it can be called a movement, or this discussion, if it be only a discussion, was commenced by both sides of the House; and if I were on a witness stand, and were called upon to testify, I could not say whether, according to the relative strength of parties, there were more in favor of it on one side than on the other side of the House.

An hon. MEMBER. How do you know?

Mr. ALLISON. I think I have had as good an opportunity as the hon. member of conversing with members on both sides of the House on the subject, and such is my opinion. The hon. gentleman has a perfect right to his own opinion, but I think I know what I am talking about, and I am in the judgment of the House. It is a notorious fact that many hon. members on both sides are decidedly in favor the proposal, that others are indifferent, and that others are hostile to the movement; and any newspaper, in connection with any party, which makes statements contrary to those I am making, as far as my observation and the testimony of others go, does so either in ignorance of the facts, or in wilful misstatement of the facts.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would not have risen to occupy the time of the House, but for the fact that the article referred to by the hon. member for North Norfolk stated that the party on this side of the House, the Reform party, was an unit in favor of an increased indemnity. I have to say that this question never was mentioned to me, but that I expressed myself most pointedly and explicitly in opposition to the movement; and I can say, further, that this question was mentioned to me by parties on the Conservative as well as on the Reform side of the House. I will venture to go this far: I say that the first time I ever heard Mr. Charlton express his views on this question, he declared, in the most pointed manner that he possibly could, he would oppose it to the bitter end, and if no other member would divide the House on it he would do this himself; and I think that this is the idea which he intended to convey when he spoke a few moments ago. I say, as far as I am concerned, that I have always expressed myself in that way, and I repeat those sentiments. I believe that the country is paying more for legislation at the hands of this House, and in the Local Legislature, than it really should, and that this expense is as large as the country should be called upon to submit to; for that reason I am opposed to the scheme. With regard to the article which appeared in the Mail, I am not going so far as the hon. member for Brant, and declare that this was a malicious act on the part of the writer; but I would say this, which I believe to be the case, that he has been grossly hoaxed by some person on the Conservative side of the House in order to shift the responsibility of the movement in connection with the matter on the shoulders of their opponents; and now that gentleman has to bear the burden and responsibility, which, I believe, rests on other shoulders. This I consider to be the fact with respect to this official. I simply wanted to make these few remarks, and also to say this: I know that many members on the Reform side of the House take as strong ground on this question as I do myself.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I think that this discussion is undoubtedly irregular; but we are a company, supposed to be, of gentlemen, and I think it important, therefore, that in a matter of this kind, those who have been taking a very active part in connection with this subject should have something to say on it. The statements we have heard from gentlemen on the other side are so entirely different from the statements made by those hon. gentlemen who are generally supposed, in matters between parties, to speak for hon. gentlemen on the other side, that I think one of the whips of the Reform party, the hon. member for Shelburne, should at least explain how it is that so many gentlemen on that side now protest that they are opposed to it, and would divide the House upon it, while he himself ventured to say to persons on this side, he believed that, with the exception of three gentlemen on that side, all were in favor of the increase in the indemnity. We are here as a party of gentlemen, and it is not fair that gentlemen on that side—I can speak on this matter as far as I myself am concerned, having refused to have anything to do with it, and have always been opposed to it, as my friends know—and that prominent gentlemen on that side, who are supposed to speak for their party in matters of this kind, should be permitted to make statements of this kind, to get up one after another as they are doing to-day, and to leave the impression on the public mind that this movement originated on our side of the House, and that their side are all opposed to it; and we should be given the reason why that hon. gentleman supposed that they were practically all in favor of it. As to the hon. gentleman who spoke first, all I can say is this: If he was prepared to divide the House on the question of the increase in the indemnity of any kind, I am very much astonished at that statement. I need not say anything more, for I dare say that the hon. gentleman knows why I am astonished.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). As far as I am concerned this is a little confessional, and we are each making our confession. I remember very distinctly the last round robin which was got up to increase the indemnity from $600 to $1,000. A large number of the members of the House would not sign this round robin; but I remember distinctly—for I made enquiry about it—that these members were the first to take the increased indemnity and go home; and I believe, to-day, the parties who get up and say they do not want the increase want it worse than the parties who have had the honesty to admit that they want it. I like honesty. There was not, out of a House of 200 members during the Parliament when the other increase took place, one single member that did not take it; and now these parties want to get up and say to the country: "We did not want the increase; we want to make a little political capital out of it." So honest, so generous, and so kind hearted are they; and then they get up and say: "We told you not to ask for it;" but if obtained they would be the first to go to the accountant and say: "We want the increased indemnity," and, putting it in their pockets, they would go home. I do not like hypocrisy.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I was, unfortunately, out of the House when this discussion commenced; but I am told that reference has been made, on the floor of the House, and I see also in the press, to a late meeting of the Conservative party, known as a caucus. We had a caucus, the only one we had this Session, the other day. I was there from the beginning to the end of it, and there was not one single word, or expression, or allusion, in the most remote degree, made with respect to the indemnity of members. Quite different subjects were discussed; but not one single member present made one remark respecting the indemnity of members.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT BILL.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN, in moving the third reading of Bill (No. 90) to amend The Civil Service Act, 1882, said: When this measure was previously under consideration, the hon. leader of the Opposition suggested an addition to the third sub-section of the thirty-fourth section, providing that a report should be made on each case, giving the reasons for each appointment. I am sorry that I cannot agree to this suggestion, and I will explain why. I stated, yesterday, when the hon. gentleman suggested that the names of the persons appointed under the third section should be laid before the House within the ten or fifteen first days of the Session, that this was useless, because, by the Civil Service Act, we are bound to lay before the House a list of the parties appointed under this law; and, under the circumstances, this prevented such a provision being necessary. The other provision is also unnecessary, for when an appointment is made, it is done by Order in Council which is there to show the necessity or usefulness of the appointment, and it will be with the others laid before Parliament, in the list of the names of the new appointments made during the year; and if any member then wishes to obtain any explanation respecting any appointment, it will be open to him to ask the reason why it took place. Therefore, I do not see that there would be any necessity to pass a special proviso for that purpose. If these appointments were to be made secretly, if they were not to be known in Parliament, it would be different; but it is stated in the Bill exactly how these appointments were to be made. Further, if an hon. gentleman should wish, at any time, to have the reasons why one, or two, or three of these men have been appointed, it will be open to him to ask the information, and the information, of course, will be forthcoming. Under these circumstances, I am sorry I cannot accept the suggestion of the hon. leader of the Opposition.

Mr. BLAKE. I shall not discuss this question at any length; but I may say that I think it a most important thing that the general rule of the Civil Service Act by which the highest prizes of the service are open to the members of the service, and the general rule of examination and promotion, should apply in these cases as well as in others. My own opinion is that it would be a great encouragement to the service if it were found that first-class men in its ranks could occasionally find themselves at the top of the service, even in the branches which are excepted in the Bill. The hon. gentleman remarks that the city postmasterships, and city collectorships, are few in number, and that their importance will furnish certain checks, by directing public attention to the appointments, does not apply to the numerous collectors and preventive officers all over the Dominion. There are officers which are as numerous, though, perhaps, not so important in one sense, and not so liable to attract public attention to the appointment, and, therefore, in respect of them the responsibility of the Minister is not acted upon with so lively a sense of that active responsibility as in the other cases. As I said, however, I do not intend entering into the discussion of this matter; but in order to put my views on record, I move the following amendment thereto, that the said Bill be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole, in order to amend the same by adding to sub-section 3 of 34, in section 6, the following words:—

Where the public interests require, but appointments made under this sub-section other than those of City Postmasters and City Collectors shall be made only on Report, giving the reasons therefor.

Amendment negatived.

Bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

78. Intercolonial Railway—Increased accommodation at St. John.....$171,750 00

Mr. WELDON. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will explain this vote.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We asked a vote last year for the purpose of providing freight accommodation at St. John, and now it is proposed to provide a suitable passenger station in the same city. The vote is made up in this way: $150,000 for a passenger station; 450 tons of rails and fastenings, $20,250; spikes and track laying, $1,500; all in connection with the new passenger station.

Mr. WELDON. Where is it proposed to put the new passenger station?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. On Mill street.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman has stated enough rails to lay a track for nearly five miles.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is none provided for, except what is required to carry out the arrangement which we began last year.

Mr. BLAKE. What will the freight and passenger station cost together, when complete?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It will be the amount I have mentioned, and the amount voted last year; and there will be a sum in the Supplementary Estimates to provide for the excess of expenditure last year.

Mr. BLAKE. That will be about $360,000 in all?

79. Intercolonial Railway—Halifax Extension $12,500.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The special object of this vote is to provide coal shoots for the purpose of loading coal into ships with the greatest possible facility, and also for a hoisting machine calculated to lift thirty tons; the former will cost $5,000, and the latter $7,500.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman state the cost of the elevator, and the other items in connection with the Halifax extension?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The total expenditure at the Halifax extension, exclusive of this small amount, has been $1,210,361.21. That is the total which has been expended since the year 1872-73. In 1880-81, the amount expended was $33,684; in 1881-82, $173,109, and down to the 1st of February, 1883, $174,139. These expenditures include everything in connection with the Halifax extension, including the purchase of the water side property, the carrying of the track down to it, the wharves, piers, elevator, &c.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the cost of the wharf and elevator?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The cost, I believe, was $113,373.

Mr. BLAKE. When was it completed?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Quite recently.

Mr. BLAKE. How many cargoes of grain have been shipped there?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We were not able to get it completed in time to ship an extensive quantity of grain. In the first place, the contract was not completed at the time at which the contractor engaged to have it completed. Then the difficulty of handling traffic from the West, in consequence of the heavy snow, and the enormous volume of traffic on the Grand Trunk Railway, made it impossible to get large trains of cars sent forward with promptness. The elevator is admirably adapted for the purpose, and I have no doubt we shall do a large amount of shipping through it during the next season; and I am satisfied that this would have been the case this season had we got the elevator completed at an early day.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman state what rates were arranged for over the Intercolonial Railway, and over the Grand Trunk?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The Grand Trunk Railway, in order to offer every facility in its power, made, in the first instance, an exceptionally low rate for grain—something like one-tenth of a cent per ton a mile; that is a through rate over the whole line from Chicago to Halifax.

Mr. BLAKE. What proportion of that was assigned to the Intercolonial?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. An equal rate per mile. From whatever point the traffic came we estimated the amount, and divided it according to the mileage rate from the point of starting to Halifax.

Mr. BLAKE. Was that same rate given by the Grand Trunk Railway, no matter what the point of starting was?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. Was this a permanent arrangement, or an experimental arrangement?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am not able to say that it was a permanent arrangement—it was experimental; and the object was to try it under the most favorable circumstances, with the view of seeing how far it was practicable.

Mr. BLAKE. Was it for car loads or train loads?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. For train loads. It embraced everything.

80. Intercolonial Railway—Rolling Stock $268,650.00

Mr. BLAKE. More rolling stock. It always goes rolling on.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; and always will so long as the traffic goes rolling up.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman explain how this sum is made up?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It includes fifteen locomotives, $14,000; two first-class cars, $5,500; two second-class cars, $3,500; two baggage cars, $2,500; two vans, $1,000; twenty box cars at $700 each; twenty flat cars at $450 each, and twenty at $540 each; and two snow ploughs, $1,200. These are required in consequence of the greatly increased traffic. To give the Committee some little idea of the increased volume of traffic, I may state that the number of tons of freight carried increased from 561,924 tons in 1879-80 to 838,956 tons in 1881-82. I may say that the increased amount of rolling stock purchased and charged to capital account does not exceed the proportion furnished previously upon capital account in relation to the volume of the traffic.

Mr. BLAKE. There is a vote in the Supplementary Estimates for further rolling stock, $400,000. With this vote we have an addition of rolling stock since last year of nearly $700,000, or $1,000 a mile. I presume the other rolling stock is kept up out of the revenue. How does the account stand for rolling stock?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The amount of rolling stock, exclusive of the amounts now asked, for the equipment of the Intercolonial Railway, up to the 30th June, 1882, is $4,616,760, or, including these two votes, about $6,000 a mile for 840 miles.

Mr. BLAKE. Is the stock in existence thoroughly kept up?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; I am able to say, with the confidence any one can have in efficient and reliable officers, that all the rolling stock furnished and charged to capital account from the commencement of the present time is kept in a thorough state of efficiency at the cost of revenue.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Is any part of the new stock chargeable to revenue account?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We are constantly building new cars at the cost of revenue to supply cars that become broken up. It is only in the new rolling stock, necessitated by the increase of traffic, that the amount is charged to capital account.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Will the hon. gentleman furnish a return of the rolling stock chargeable to revenue and that chargeable to capital, since 1878? I remember a discussion arose between the hon. gentleman and the hon. member for East York as to the propriety of charging rolling stock to capital at all, the hon. member for East York maintaining that after the road was completed all additional supply should be charged to revenue.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is utterly impossible to pursue this course in the case of the Intercolonial Railway, for the simple reason that we had a deficit of $500,000 a year, and could not in any case furnish the rolling stock out of revenue. I submitted evidence from the leading lines of railway to show that the course followed by the Intercolonial Railway is the same that they followed. I will bring down the information required.

Mr. ROSS. I am not finding fault with the policy, but simply wish to ascertain the proportion charged to capital and revenue each year. If less be charged to revenue one year than another, the ordinary expenditure will vary, a correct result will not be arrived at.

Mr. BLAKE. While the railway does not give a profit, a vote for new rolling stock must be on capital account; but it should be established that every article of the rolling stock we have bought originally on capital account should be kept up at the expense of revenue. If it is not and cannot be kept thoroughly maintained out of the income for the road for the year, the result is that a deficit is produced in the working, and it appears on the account. An attempt to eke out the deficiency at the expense of capital account would be a dishonest procedure; but as long as we can be satisfied that the rolling stock is kept in an effective condition on the revenue account, then, of course, we know that justice in one sense is being done. When the road has been established and is doing a large and profitable business and making a great deal of money, it is a matter, in the discretion of the directors or managers, if they want any more rolling stock, whether they pay for it out of the income of the year, or whether they will propose an additional charge to capital. That is open to the hon. gentleman. He is in that position. He has not got the income, and he proposes to the House to increase the rolling stock. He has got to take a vote, and it is essential that he should have that sharp line drawn that to the income account are charged all repairs that are necessary and everything that is necessary to keep the road in a state of efficiency; but that if he has not got an income out of which he can increase the rolling stock, then he should charge the increased rolling stock to capital; but the moment we have a surplus income we should increase the rolling stock out of it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I entirely concur with the hon. gentleman in his view, and I would regard it as an act of sheer dishonesty on the part of the officials of the road if they adopted any such mode of maintaining the existing rolling stock under the guise of a charge to capital account. So far as I am able to investigate it, no such thing has been done, and I have the most perfect confidence that the maintenance of the road is fairly and honestly kept up.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course, I did not, for a moment, mean to say that such was not the case.

Mr. McMULLEN. Before proceeding further with this matter, I would like to set myself right, as well as others in the House, with regard to an answer given by the hon. Minister of Railways as to the rate charged over the Intercolonial per ton a mile. I understood him to say it was one-tenth of a cent a ton per mile. I would like to know if that is the rate.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will say to my hon. friend that that only applies to these grain cargoes. That is not the ordinary cost of carriage on the Intercolonial Railway, but that was the rate given by the Grand Trunk Railway for the grain cargoes that were engaged to be sent forward when we expected to have the elevator ready to ship the grain.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would just say that it is hardly fair to the people of this country, whose money built the road, to carry freight at one-tenth of a cent per ton a mile. That will not pay anything like the expenses. Of course, I do not wish to raise a dispute on this question now; but I think it is very strange that a road that has cost the country so much money, and that has been run at a loss, I believe, within the last year—I think, it is singular that it should be permitted to carry the produce of the Western States, shipped from Chicago at such a decided loss as one-tenth of a cent per ton a mile implies. I do not think it is using our own people fairly, the people who built the road, and are paying interest on the money invested in its construction. It is a gross injustice to the people. I can only say—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I can only say that we will not carry a pound, or a bushel of American grain, if we can get it in Ontario. We would prefer very much to take it from Ontario, because it would be a much shorter distance. When we wished to ship grain at Halifax, and applied to the Grand Trunk Railway for a rate, I think my hon. friend should hardly expect me to say that they were not charging enough for carriage over the Grand Trunk Railway. The price over the Grand Trunk Railway, and the price of carriage by the Intercolonial Railway, are precisely the same. The rate is made for cargoes coming forward from the West, it is made by the Grand Trunk Railway between Chicago and Halifax. We applied for them to give us the lowest possible rate—all our efforts with the Grand Trunk Railway are to get low rates. I have never had occasion to check their disposition to make the rate too low, up to the present time, certainly. I appreciate the point the hon. gentleman has made, that it would not be a proper rate for the road as a rule. But there are two questions to be considered. One is, that most of the shipment is grain. The rest is general produce, and things that bear a much higher rate. You sometimes carry a portion of your cargo at an extremely low rate, relying on the balance of your cargo to make it up. But as I have said before, I have no doubt the Grand Trunk Railway was anxious to give us, for the purpose of seeing what could be done, the very lowest rate it possibly could.

Mr. DALY. I am surprised that a voice should be heard in this House complaining of the lowness of the rates charged by the Grand Trunk Railway, and by consequence the low rates of the Intercolonial Railway. Now, the people down by the sea cannot fail to know that it is of great consequence for us to obtain low rates so as to encourage inter-provincial trade; and a proposition coming from the Grand Trunk Railway to carry freight at the low rate which the hon. Minister of Railways has mentioned, is to me a source of the greatest gratification, and I regret extremely that any hon. member of this House should complain of the lowness of the rate. We should look at the Intercolonial Railway, not merely as a Government work, but as a work which helped to bring Nova Scotia into the Confederation; and if freight is occasionally carried over that road at lower rates than would be charged by private companies, we must put it down to the fact that the road is intended to be a public highway, which the people of Canada have agreed to construct, and which confers a benefit, not alone upon Nova Scotia, but upon the West. I believe that the universal sentiment of this House is, with perhaps few exceptions, of which we have just heard an instance, that the lower the rates, within reasonable bounds, charged by the Intercolonial Railway, the more pleased will the general public be, and the more trade will be developed, and that is the purpose for which the Intercolonial is intended. Therefore, I am glad to hear from the hon. Minister that this very low rate has been granted by the Intercolonial Railway and by the Grand Trunk Railway; and I may also call to mind that it is in the interest of Ontario to encourage the development of its trade with the Maritime Provinces.

Mr. McMULLEN. If the hon. gentleman understood me to say that I complained of the lowness of the rate from a Canadian point of view, he is mistaken; I spoke of the rate from an American point of view. What I said was, that I did not think it was in the interests of the people of this country that the money they had invested in the construction of this road should be used to carry the surplus produce of the Western States at a rate that was ruinous to the road, and I hold that point still. I have no objections that the road should be used for the carriage of the surplus produce of the Dominion of Canada at a very low rate, and I should be glad if the Grand Trunk Railway would be so liberal towards the country as to carry our produce at such a rate. But I say it is wrong that a road, constructed by our own people, and for our own benefit, should be used to carry freights from the Western States at such a low rate—that it is virtually ruinous to the road. Now we practice the principles of Protection—at least hon. gentlemen opposite do—with regard to the United States, and I think they should adopt it with regard to this matter also. I have no desire to interfere with any rate so long as it is in the interests of the Provinces, but I am opposed to allowing it to be used with respect to the surplus products of the United States.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will be greatly relieved to know that this grain did not come from the United States, but from Stratford; and I do not think it will lower the value of the grain in Stratford or any other part of Ontario for shippers to be able, during the period of the year when the St. Lawrence is blocked with ice, to get grain shipped to an open Canadian port at a very low rate. Every farmer in Ontario, and every person owning a bushel of grain, are greatly interested in having a low rate obtained, because it increases the value and improves the market for their produce.

Mr. BLAKE. If the same rate prevails over the Intercolonial as over the Grand Trunk I am quite content, because the Grand Trunk is run presumably on commercial principles; and if that rate on the whole, directly or indirectly, pays the Grand Trunk, it should pay our own road. The rate is a surprisingly low one; and I was not astonished to hear the hon. Minister state that it was only an experimental one, and there was no guarantee on the part of the Grand Trunk to continue it. I shall rejoice very much if grain can be carried successfully for one-tenth of a cent per bushel per mile.

81. Intercolonial Railway—St. Charles Branch and Ferry between Lévis and Quebec $13,000.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The Committee is aware that it was proposed to establish a ferry between Lévis and Quebec, and that after some considerable discussion this Government agreed to share with the Quebec Government the expense. At that time the railway in Quebec was owned by the Provincial Government, and we agreed, as I have said, to share with the Quebec Government the cost of the establishment and maintenance of that ferry, and to a division equally of the profits or losses. We agreed that that should apply either to the Government of Quebec, or to the proprietors of the railway. Since that time the railway has passed out of the hands of the Government of Quebec, as the Committee are aware, and no steps have been subsequently taken to carry out the agreement to which the Government are committed for the establishment of the ferry. The St. Charles Branch to Lévis will shortly be completed, and will be open for traffic this summer, and no doubt it will be found very considerably to facilitate traffic on the Intercolonial. We shall bring the passengers through to the Grand Trunk station at Lévis, instead of having long and tiresome delays at the Chaudière Junction.

Mr. LAURIER. Do I understand that the present proprietors of the North Shore have taken no steps to meet the action of the Government with respect to the ferry?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. They have not.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. Minister state what the entire cost of the branch will be, and whether this vote includes any portion for the expenses of the ferry. And if so, what amount, and what proportion of the whole?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This amount, I think, will be required for the branch and the works at Point Lévis in addition to the amount agreed to be provided.

Mr. BLAKE. That is $656,000 altogether?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. Then there is nothing for the ferry in this item?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; it will take this amount in addition to the amounts voted last year, to complete the branch.

Mr. LAURIER. Do I understand that the ferry is to be abandoned?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, I do not say that; but from the appearance of the place when I recently had an opportunity of seeing it, pretty late in the season, it did not look hopeful, to say the least of it.

Mr. MITCHELL. The subject to which the hon. Minister has called the attention of the Committee is one of some importance to the Maritime Provinces. This project which the Government recommended to the House was very acceptable to the Eastern Provinces of the Dominion, from the fact that it proposed to give a connection between the Intercolonial Railway, which runs to Halifax, and the roads running west on the North Shore. From an agreement laid before a Committee very recently we learned that this road had been transferred by the Quebec Government to a private company. I understand, from the hon. Minister of Railways, that no steps have been taken by the Quebec Government, or by this private company, to comply with the agreement entered into by the Dominion Government and the Quebec Government for maintaining the ferry. Am I to understand from the hon. Minister that this scheme has been abandoned?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; certainly not. The position of the Dominion Government was this: We were prepared, whenever the Quebec Government or the proprietors of the North Shore Railway undertook to establish this ferry, to incur a certain amount of expenditure for the purpose of aiding it. We are prepared to do that now; but, under the agreement, the movement was to come from the other parties. The scheme is by no means abandoned, and this Government is committed to the engagement to-morrow, if the parties take it up and prosecute it as originally intended; and I would be very glad to see it prosecuted in such a way as to accomplish what we had in view, namely, to be able to send not only passengers, but freight cars across the river from either side.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am obliged to the hon. Minister for the information. But it does not meet the point which strikes me as presenting a very objectionable feature in the matter of affording connection with the Eastern Provinces. The conditions are now very materially altered. The Quebec Government owned a line between Quebec and St. Martin's Junction, with running powers to Montreal. The people of the Dominion had a right to expect, from the way in which public money was granted by the Province of Quebec, that the road would be maintained as an independent line between the eastern portion of our railway system controlled by the Government, and the western portion controlled by companies. Although the vote to make the Lévis connection was a very large one, we all know that the money was given willingly, because it was considered most desirable that this connection should be made. And yet we find that the company that holds the key to the situation and controls the trade between the West and the East has now, if we are to judge by the agreement which was laid before a Committee the other day, obtained control of the North Shore, and its interests lie in the direction of not having this ferry established. The Grand Trunk, which controls the North Shore, has an interest, not to have the ferry established, but to compel every person to go by the way of Richmond and Montreal. Their interests are in making all the traffic run over their road as formerly, maintaining the road on the North Shore, not as a means of connection with the Lower Provinces, but as a convenience for freight shipped from Quebec, and as a local road for the Province of Quebec.

What I would like to press upon this House, and the Government, is this: It is the duty of the Government to ascertain, and with as little delay as possible, whether the people who control the North Shore road now, whether the Grand Trunk directly, or a company controlled by the Grand Trunk, which I believe to be the fact, intend to carry out the engagement entered into between the Government of the Dominion and the Government of the Province of Quebec, and contribute a portion of the subsidy for the establishment and maintenance of the ferry at Quebec? This is a matter in which every one in the Maritime Provinces, and also, I believe, a large portion of the western section of the Dominion, are interested; and it is of so much importance that I trust we shall get an assurance from the Minister that steps have been taken to see that this arrangement is carried out, or, at all events, to be in a position, before the House rises, to let the public know that it is not to be carried out.

Mr. BLAKE. I would like to know whether any estimate has been made of the cost of this ferry and this proposed arrangement; and if so, what the estimate of the cost may be? I would like the hon. Minister, also, to state what the difficulties were to which he referred—whether they are connected with the locality; whether he thinks, having looked at the locality, it is not suitable for a ferry, or whether, simply, it does not look, as the project advances, practicable? I could not very well make out.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say that the success of the project depends on the ice. This has been an exceptionally hard winter; and when I was at Quebec recently, I was sorry to see that the difficulties seemed to be very great in consequence of the presence of the ice; but the expenditure, I think, on the building of the necessary boats for the ferry, the lifts on both sides, wharves and piers necessary, and docks in fact on each side, will, I think, come to about $250,000. Of course, as to the success of it, at some seasons it might be carried on during the entire season, but during a very hard winter, like the present, there would be more or less obstruction.

Mr. DAVIES. Could a bridge be provided?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. A bridge is possible, but, as the hon. gentleman knows, it would cost a large sum of money, and questions might arise in connection with navigation—a variety of things that would make it somewhat difficult.

Mr. LAURIER. The difficulties no doubt are very great, but the preponderance of opinion seems to be that they can be surmounted.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I know that they are very sanguine respecting the project.

Mr. LAURIER. But I understand that at all events the Government are prepared to make the experiment, and are only awaiting the co-operation of the North Shore Company?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; that is the position. We are quite prepared now, as we always were, to bear our proportion of the expense.

83. Cape Traverse Railway, P.E.I. $183,200.00

Mr. DAVIES. I see the hon. gentleman asks for a vote; and this is the same sum which was proposed last year. I would like to ask whether the Government is determined on the termini of that branch. I understood that a memorial was forwarded—I have not had an opportunity of seeing it, or of knowing what was in it—asking for a change. I do not know the nature of it; but I assume, from the fact that the sum is the same, that the Government has determined to keep to the same points as before.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say, in reply to the hon. gentleman, that after very careful examination the opinion of the Department now is, unless something arises to change it, after all the examination that could be given it, that the Tormentine terminus is the best. The vote was taken for that line before, and it is taken with the expectation of constructing it on that line now, although we are prepared to give the most respectful consideration to the memorial to which reference is made.

Mr. DAVIES. Do I understand that this vote of $183,000 is simply for the construction of the road, and not for piers?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; it covers everything on the Prince Edward Island side.

Mr. DAVIES. And is it intended by the hon. gentleman to commence the construction of the piers this year, along with the railway?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; I think so. I think we will go on with the whole work.

Mr. DAVIES. Can the hon. gentleman state when work will probably commence?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. As soon as the season opens we expect to commence work immediately.

Mr. BLAKE. Is there anything doing on the other side?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; that is in the hands of a private company.

Mr. BLAKE. I know; but is it going on?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is going on.

Mr. BLAKE. As there is a vote on the Prince Edward Island Railway, I presume that the same rule applies to the repairs and the keeping up of the rolling stock on that road, which is observed on the Intercolonial.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; and rather a strong confirmation of the accuracy with which we keep the accounts is shown in that particular, whereas we were able to show a small balance in favor of the Intercolonial. We were obliged to admit a largely increased deficiency, and a very serious one, for the length of the road on Prince Edward Island—I think it was $90,000 during the past year. This account was kept rigorously and precisely in the same way as on the Intercolonial.

84. General—Surveys and Inspections $10,000.00

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Does this apply to Government Railways?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; to all applications made for railway aid, and to everything that the Government feel necessary to employ engineers to examine and report upon, as to proposals made to the Government. This amount covers everything. I may say that it is a nominal amount, and it largely, I think, exceeds the amount expended.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I want to call the attention of the hon. Minister to a claim of Mr. Horetzky, who was once employed as an engineer on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and who still believes that he has a valid claim against the Government for not a very large sum, some $180 I think, as due him on account of wages. His contention is, as the hon. gentleman knows, for he is no doubt familiar with the case, that he should have been paid as much per month as the other engineers who were employed on the same kind of work; that he was not so paid, and that he considers that the Chief Engineer, Sandford Fleming, specially approved of his claim, which the hon. Minister might with very great propriety acknowledge. I have the pleasure of again calling attention to the propriety of considering this claim, which it may be possible for the hon. gentleman yet to entertain.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say, in reply, although this matter does not exactly belong to the vote before the Committee, that the Minister has no power to pay any person a dollar for any service whatever, except certified to by the Chief Engineer. I told Mr. Horetzky, that whatever amount—for I was not qualified to judge as to the value of professional services rendered—Mr. Fleming would state he was entitled to receive, I would cheerfully pay; and Mr. Fleming, after assuring me of his desire to give the most liberal consideration to Mr. Horetzky's views, said he would not be able to entertain the opinion of Mr. Horetzky, that he was entitled to the same salary as engineers of higher standing; that Mr. Horetzky was an able man, and had great ability as an explorer, but he was not what is technically termed an engineer. Under those circumstances—being assured by the Chief Engineer that the most liberal possible consideration had been given to Mr. Horetzky's claim—it was not in my power, of course, to pay anything beyond that.

Mr. DAWSON. I am very glad to hear the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals speak so approvingly of Mr. Horetzky's services. I think I may add my testimony to that of the hon. gentleman. Mr. Horetzky was a very able and active engineer indeed, and did some very good work in the North-West, where he was for a very long time employed. I would be very glad, indeed, if it was possible, to consider his case, as he was a very deserving officer while in the service of the country, and I would be glad if the Government will do something for him.

Mr. BLAKE. When the hon. gentleman was speaking on the subject of the Canadian Pacific Railway the other day, he mentioned that arrangements had been concluded for the transfer of the Thunder Bay Branch to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. He subsequently learned, as he stated, that there was some difficulty in the way. As this is a matter of great public interest perhaps the hon. gentleman will state how it stands now?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am happy to say that the difficulty has been removed, and that the road is now transferred to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, who are making all necessary arrangements for effectively carrying freight upon it.

Mr. BLAKE. On the same terms as the hon. gentleman stated?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; the difficulty did not at all affect the relations with the Government, but was entirely between the contractors and the Company.

85. Railway Statistics..... $1,200.00

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman has stated the difficulty he has found in obtaining these statistics, and it would be interesting to know if he has been able to obtain the information which the Statute requires.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think so.

Mr. BLAKE. And has he matters so arranged that there will be no trouble in future?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I hope, by means of an amendment to the Consolidated Railway Act, of which I have given notice, to bring this matter more under control.

86. To recoup town of Pembroke for change of route..... $85,250.00

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). What is the rate of interest to be paid on this $75,000 of debentures mentioned in the Order in Council?

Mr. BLAKE. I suppose it is 6 per cent.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). Yes; it is 6 per cent.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Then there appears to be an error in the calculation of the interest. Six per cent, on $75,000 for a year would be only $4,500, whereas the amount mentioned in the Order in Council puts the interest at $6,750.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If there is any error it will be carefully looked into, and rectified before the payment is made.

Mr. BLAKE. I notice that another claim made is the sum of $3,500, balance of indebtedness for right of way. I hope the hon. gentleman will include this in the explanations which I hope he deems it necessary to make with regard to this vote.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I can only say that the return has been brought down, giving very full information, and that the matter has been discussed on a former occasion, when I was not here, and, therefore, I should rather weary the Committee if I were to enter into any lengthy explanations to-day. Suffice it to say that this was a claim made by the town of Pembroke, owing to our having been obliged, in consequence of the settled policy of Canada, to carry the railway in another direction. They were compelled either to go without railway facilities at all, or to incur this indebtedness by taking the responsibility for assisting to carry the road to Pembroke. Subsequently the Government changed their policy, and carried the road from Pembroke, so that those advantages that were given to the town of Pembroke were lost. We had the advantage of carrying the line from Pembroke to Nipissing instead of from a point considerable on this side; and after a careful review of the whole question, which was pressed on the Government with considerable persistence by the hon. member for North Renfrew (Mr. White), we came to the conclusion that it would only be just to make the provision which is made in this vote, and to give them the advantage of the money they had expended, and which practically we had saved, an expenditure which would not have been involved had not the policy of the Government been changed, and changed after they were enabled to take advantage of the expenditure.

Mr. BLAKE. I observe that the report of the hon. Minister of Railways is dated on the 3rd of April, 1880, and that no action appears to have been taken by Council until the 19th of May, 1882, or more than two years afterwards. Perhaps the hon. Minister would explain how the matter happened to be delayed in Council for more than two years, and how it happened to be taken up just then?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. All I can say is, that my hon. friend the hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. White) brought this matter under my notice; I went into it very carefully, and gave it the closest attention in my power, and, after careful examination, I came to the conclusions which are stated in the report. I came to those conclusions dispassionately from their merits, that the town was entitled to this relief; and having come to that conclusion, I made the report and submitted it to Council. But my colleagues have not had the same opportunity of having this matter brought to their attention as I have, as it belongs to my Department. As the hon. gentleman knows, during that interim I was incapacitated by illness from attending to public duties, and was absent from the country. The hon. gentleman knows that, not only on account of my health, but in connection with the public business, I was in British Columbia and elsewhere, and I suppose in that way the matter was laid over from time to time, as it was thought to be one of those matters which admitted of postponement. Subsequently, however, I was able to satisfy my colleagues that the claim was a just one, which they would be warranted in paying. I can give no other explanation to my hon. friend than that after the length of these two years I was able to bring my colleagues to see the matter in the same light as I did myself.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). This matter was brought up a short time ago on the motion for papers made by the hon. leader of the Opposition, and upon that occasion I brought to the attention of the House a fact regarding the hon. gentleman's own action in relation to this matter. I presume that the telegram which the hon. gentleman admits he sent to one of his friends in Pembroke just on the eve of the election was not intended to have any political effect. It is true that the hon. gentleman was suffering from a sort of mid-summer madness at that time; he was laboring under the hallucination that the people would return him to power on the following day; and I am glad to see that the fact that the electors were not with my hon. friend, has not prevented him from taking the same view that he would have taken had the hopes been consummated on the 20th of June, which he entertained on the 19th. I need not take up the time of the Committee in adverting to the arguments which have already been adduced; but I would draw the hon. gentleman's attention, and that of the Committee, to one or two points which have not yet been referred to. Prior to the selection of the route in 1874, or rather prior to the confirmation of the Order in Council fixing the route and providing for the subsidy to the Canada Central Railway, a deputation of leading gentlemen, comprising different members of the Government of Quebec, approached the hon. leader of the Government, the present member for East York, and requested that he would give the subsidy to the first route that would reach a certain point, I think the mouth of the Mattawa River. Mr. Mackenzie having refused to accede to that request, and having declared that his settled policy was to aid the Canada Central Railway, for reasons best known to himself, and which, I suppose, were in the public interest, these gentlemen suggested that instead of locating the terminus at Douglas, as stated in the Order in Council, he should locate it at Pembroke. That would have effected a saving, and would have given Pembroke that railway communication which they were anxious to have, without the granting of this subsidy. The road having been brought to Pembroke in 1876, I contended, in the arguments I presented to the Government, that the Government were enabled, through the enterprise of the people of the town of Pembroke, to effect a large saving of public money, a saving which was represented by the construction of twenty miles of railway. The subsidy from the town of Pembroke brought the railway to a point twenty miles farther west than the point it would have reached by the subsidy granted by the Order in Council in 1874. I contend, and I think it would be agreed by every right thinking man, that that advantage to the country was obtained by the sacrifice of the local interests of the town of Pembroke. I do not think there is a single member of this House, who understands anything of commercial matters, who will not admit that to carry a road past a town, making it a way station instead of a terminus, deprives it of very great advantages. My hon. friend draws attention to the fact that the town of Pembroke spent $25,000 in securing the right of way and other advantages for the Canada Central Railway over and above the bonds issued by that company, which it purchased; and he asks the hon. Minister of Railways why that sum of $25,000 was not given to the town of Pembroke instead of the $3,500 mentioned in the return. If the hon. gentleman will look at the petition of the town of Pembroke, he will see that it alleges that while it has given advantages to the Canada Central Railway equivalent to $25,000, it only asks the Government to recoup $3,500 which it paid out in cash to secure the right of way, in addition to the $75,000 for the bonds. The hon. gentleman took exception to the repayment of the interest.

Mr. BLAKE. It was the hon. member for West Middlesex who took exception to it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Mr. WHITE. Perhaps the hon. member for West Middlesex does not reflect the opinion of the Opposition, but as he is the second aspirant to the position of Finance Minister, when the hon. gentleman, fifty-five years hence, comes into power, perhaps his objection to this particular item may be taken as the opinion of that side of the House. If the hon. gentleman looks at the petition he will find that the town asks to be relieved from the payment of principal and interest. The Order in Council was passed in May, 1882; a payment of interest of $2,250 was made on 1st July, 1882; another payment of $2,250 was made on the 1st of January, 1883, and a further sum of $2,250 will be due and payable on 1st July, next; and it is in that way that the charge of $6,750 is made up. It is claimed that the interest paid by the town of Pembroke from the passage of the Order in Council should be recouped to them; and looking at the whole question—at the fact that it was by the action of Parliament that the town of Pembroke was compelled to grant this large subsidy, a subsidy which required it to strain every nerve; at the fact that by that subsidy the town induced the Canada Central Railway Company to bring the line to Pembroke; and at the fact that by that action of the town of Pembroke the Government were enabled to save so large a sum of money as was stated by the leader of the Government in 1878—I think every fair-minded man will admit that the Government have only done tardy justice to the town of Pembroke by asking Parliament to grant this sum.

Mr. BLAKE. Upon the question of interest the hon. member for West Middlesex very properly pointed out that the statement of the Administration as to what they proposed to pay was for one year's interest, while the grant is for a year and a-half. For my part, so far am I from taking the view that that is a correct provision, I hold this view: That if the town of Pembroke is entitled to relief, it ought to be relieved from the period at which the difficulty took place—from the period at which it was placed in that practical situation of loss, which the hon. gentleman says entitles it to relief at all. If at a particular point of time the town of Pembroke was turned from a terminal into a way station, and from that you are to date their loss and deprivation of benefits, it is from that time the recoupment should take place. That is, in my opinion, the true mode of carrying out the principle referred to. But the hon. gentleman takes another view. He says that the interest is for one year and offers one year and a-half interest.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think that is a clerical error.

Mr. BLAKE. All that my hon. friend from Middlesex pointed out was that there was an error.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Undoubtedly there is.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. Minister has given us diplomatic reasons for the delay which took place between the period at which this recommendation of his was made and the action of the Government. He has said the only answer he can give is that he was absent, ill, that his colleagues had to be persuaded—and one thing or another of that kind. The diplomatic answers of the hon. gentleman reminded me a good deal of that diplomatic vagueness of his right hon. leader when I asked him a question—concerning no doubt the hon. Minister himself—with reference to the gentleman who was to succeed Sir Alexander Galt. In fact, I must congratulate the hon. Minister of Railways in having given this specimen of his qualifications for the post of ambassador. He has, however, in this instance, not exhibited proof of having full possession of a faculty very essential to persons who are to occupy the position of ambassador—that is a good memory. Because, as the hon. gentleman has said, he had made up his mind and satisfied himself that the town of Pembroke was entitled to this relief, and having, after a careful and exhaustive examination of the subject, come to that conclusion, he felt it to be his duty to state so to Council, and to recommend that it should obtain relief, and he refers to the report as evidencing that. But the report evidences nothing of the kind. His memorandum is simply a summary of the claims of the town of Pembroke, and contains not a single expression of opinion on his part as to the justice of the claim, or a single recommendation to the Council as to the propriety of granting the claim. It is a simple statement of the facts as set up by the town of Pembroke, without a single attempt on his part to give an expression of his own opinion. That is the way the matter was represented to Council in April, 1880, after having come at that time and so long before to the settled conclusion that the town was entitled to relief, and feeling, as he said he did, that it was his duty to say so. If that is the hon. gentleman's way of expressing a strong opinion, I would recommend him to alter his mode. If he will take this Minute and read it from end to end—and it is quite long enough to embrace any expression of opinion, comprising two full pages of a printed return—he will not find in the two full pages the least clue to his own views, or the least recommendation of any kind to his colleagues. If there came a time when the hon. gentleman was convinced of the necessity of giving the relief, it was evidently not this time. But now we find there is an error there, because if he had been convinced he would have said so.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We do not always say all we feel.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman does not always say what he feels. Perhaps he says sometimes what he does not feel; or, however it may be, he exercised a judicious reticence, and this question was kept in abeyance by the hon. Minister of Railways, who had settled the matter in his own mind, long before, for he did not express an opinion until the 19th May, 1880, and then he expressed it verbally, I presume, and succeeded in inducing his colleagues to pass an Order in Council on the matter. If the matter could have stood over for two years from 1880, and had to stand until the next Session of Parliament, before the money could be paid to the town of Pembroke, why was it attended to at that particular moment? What was the necessity of passing an Order in Council then, pledging the Government to bring down the Estimates the following Session? Why was that which was pressed long before 1880, and placed before Council on the 10th April, 1880, allowed to stand over till the 19th May, 1882? It could not then be dealt with so as to give relief to the town of Pembroke, because the vote had to be taken before such relief could be given. The only reason that can be given was that it was intended to aid the election of the Conservative candidate for Renfrew. At that time, and for that purpose, the recommendation was made, and the public papers informed us of it at the time, though the paper was not yet brought down, that the justice of the claim was recognized; and after the long delays that had ensued in this case one would have supposed he would have used the ordinary means of communicating the decision, but instead he sent, by telegraph, to somebody, the interesting information that the Government had passed an Order in Council recognizing the claim, and declaring their intention to submit a vote for it in the Estimates at the next Session. The hon. member for Renfrew says: "Oh, but Mr. Blake sent a telegram." So he did, and why should he not. I have not proof that the hon. member for Renfrew said anything on the subject; but it has been stated to me that his partisans—and I have seen it stated in the newspapers of the county—made use of this vote. It was pointed out that the people of Pembroke should return the hon. gentleman in order to secure this amount which this Government had been so gracious as to pass by this Order in Council. That was pointed out in the newspapers, and also at public meetings, as I have been informed by those who know and say they heard the statements. I do not charge the hon. gentleman with having pointed it out, as no doubt he is too modest to do so. Probably, like the hon. Minister of Railways, he does not say what he feels, but he allowed it to be implied that this relief would be given. That was all. There are two ways in which a use is made of a procedure of this kind in an election. The first is to show what an excellent Government this is which has at length become alive to the misfortunes of this town, and which is prepared, if sustained in power, to give the required relief the next Session. And see what an excellent man this is who has, by his persistency, as the hon. Minister of Railways says, secured for you this boon. Let gratitude to the Government and the hon. member influence your votes. For it must be remembered that a Government, however charitable, however generous, however kindly disposed, has human feelings, and its feelings may be cooled and chilled if these generous motives which, at such a time, have induced it to come to this conclusion do not receive the proper reward. If, as has been said in respect to other grants, the people of Pembroke do not show themselves grateful, who knows but that these gentlemen, being human, and feeling themselves repelled by any want of confidence shown in them, may say: "Oh, well, we understand the people of Pembroke do not want this thing." Therefore the feelings of gratitude on the one hand, and of apprehension on the other, were powerful elements in inducing the people of Pembroke to support the candidature of the hon. member for Renfrew. There is another mode that was adopted, as I was informed. I received a communication on the eve of the Election, as the hon. gentleman says, not merely that all this was being done, but that it was being industriously circulated that I was opposed to this claim of the town of Pembroke, and that being opposed to it, if my friend and the candidate who was in the interest of the Liberal party were returned to power, that claim would be refused, and I was asked to say that I was in favor of the claim. Now, Sir, I should have been very glad to say I was in favor of the claim if I honestly, and with justice, and upon my information, could have said so. It would have been a very important thing, no doubt, in view of this canvass that was made, and to which I have referred, if I could have been able to say so. But I knew nothing of the merits of this claim one way or the other, I was not acquainted with the facts, I had not received the hon. member's memorandum, or the petition of the town of Pembroke, or the Minister's report, or the Order in Council—I did not know the rights or the wrongs of the matter; but it being stated to me that it was reported in the town of Pembroke that I was opposed to the claim, I felt that, not merely with propriety I could, but that also in justice I was bound to point out what my attitude would be, and I did state simply that which I believed was a proper and honest statement to make. I stated plainly that I was not acquainted with the details of this Order in Council, and, therefore, could not express an opinion upon it, but that I was prepared to do justice to the town of Pembroke. Upon that my correspondent immediately contradicted all reports to the contrary, referring distinctly to these hostile reports which, without any authority, had been circulated—I do not say by that hon. member, for I have no right to say that of him—in his interest, to the effect that I was opposed to this claim upon the merits of which I could not express an opinion. Now, Sir, if the hon. gentleman thinks there was anything wrong, that it was improper, that it contained more than I ought to have stated, what else, I would like him to say, could I have stated under the circumstances? I would like any hon. member of the Committee to say what else I ought to have done under the circumstances. I was already being asked to say more, which would have been highly important and might have affected a vote, but I declined to say more, because, as a public man, I felt I could not commit myself to the support of the claim of the town of Pembroke without knowledge as to its merits. And so I simply repelled the unjust, the unfounded, the improper election story that I had expressed myself as hostile to that claim, that I would not be just to the town of Pembroke, no matter what the result might be. And I take the same attitude on this subject to-day, as I do on all subjects, no matter on what side of the House I may be, or whether I am in a minority or a majority. My desire—I fail often, I dare say, to accomplish that desire—is to find out what is just and right, and having found it, to do it.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I am very sorry to find the hon. gentleman has admitted, to-day, that he does not give to the proceedings of this Parliament that great care and attention which I had always believed he did give to them. If that hon. gentleman had taxed his memory somewhat he would have remembered that a return very similar to the one which he moved for this year was brought down and laid on the Table of the House last year.

Mr. BLAKE. I never saw it, nor heard of it.

Mr. WHITE. That proves what I have just said. If he had taken pains to inform himself of the contents of that return, he would have been in a position to know just as much as he does to-day of the merits of this claim. He would have been in a position to say to his friends in Pembroke: I am either ready to support your claim, or I am not. But he chose to take another course; he chose to adopt that diplomatic manner for which he is so justly celebrated. He has given credit to my hon. friend the Minister of Railways for being a diplomatist; and I think any one who reads this precious telegram must come to the conclusion that the hon. gentleman, whilst not committing himself to anything, did intend that this telegram should have an effect on the electors of the town of Pembroke. Sir, he must have intended it, although, as I stated a short time ago, I was willing to admit that perhaps he did not; yet I think from the statements he has just made that he did intend this telegram should have some effect on the electors. It did not have that effect, and the Government propose now, as I think in justice they ought to propose, to grant the claim to the town of Pembroke; and I think the hon. gentleman himself must, if he had got into office, and if he had given that consideration to the claim which it deserves—he must have come to the conclusion that the town was entitled to the relief that it is now to receive at the hands of this Government, and if he had denied them that relief he would not have been doing them justice.

87. Lachine Canal..... $530,000.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The expenditure on the Lachine Canal up to the 30th June was $5,704,769. The vote for 1883-84 is $530,000, and there is required to complete the work to twelve feet in the canal basin and fourteen feet on the mitre sills, $213,000. That practically completes it to twelve feet; that is to say, irrespective of the second deep-water basin at Point St. Charles, which is not expected to be required for some years, and which is estimated to cost $600,000, and providing for the two additional basins. This vote will practically complete it, leaving only a nominal sum. It is expected to be completed during the next financial year.

Mr. BLAKE. And with that deep water-basin it will be about $9,000,000 altogether?

Mr. BLAKE.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; but that is not expected to be required for some years.

Mr. DE BEAUJEU (Translation). Mr. Speaker: I cannot let this item pass without making a few remarks, not for the purpose of blaming the Government, but to congratulate it and at the same time express the hope that it will not stop in the work of improving our canals, but that next year it will place in the Budget a much larger appropriation in order that travel by our canals may increase and that commerce may thereby be facilitated. It is unnecessary for me to recall all the sacrifices which the several Provinces of Confederation and this House, have made to facilitate our travel by railways. The fact is that we can say with pride that there is no country of our age, which possesses so many railroads as ours, and I do not think I would be going too far in saying that we possess as many miles of railroads as all Europe. But all the money which has been expended by the several Provinces has been given to railroad companies purely and simply without receiving any direct interest from them for the State. The railways which have been benefitted by the subsidies given by this House, have nothing in the shape of money to show, except the Intercolonial Railway which this year yields a surplus for the Government instead of deficits as in past years. It is not the same, Mr. Speaker, with the Canals, and to-day, as according to the very eloquent address of the Minister of Finance, the Treasury has a considerable surplus. I think, Mr. Speaker, I am only speaking the sentiments of all the members of this House, in saying that the Government could not better employ this surplus, than in improving our water communication which not only pays more than an ordinary interest to the Government on the amount expended for their improvement, but moreover their navigation affords transportation at much lower rates, and consequently is advantageous to buyers and sellers. As proof of what I say, Mr. Speaker, concerning the advantages which the Government derives from the St. Lawrence Canals, the following tables taken from the official reports, show the traffic and the receipts from the St. Lawrence Canals, for the years 1878, 1879, 1880, 1881, 1882:—

As to what I said, Mr. Speaker, relative to buyers and sellers, benefiting more advantageously by water communication than by railways, I think I can satisfy you and this clause of it. If we look at the official reports we find the accuracy of what I stated. By a summary which I made and which with your permission I will read to the House, we observe that in 1878, there passed through the St. Lawrence Canals, 537,862 tons of freight; in 1879, 489,636; in 1880, 570,818; in 1881, 659,125; in 1882, 677,450; making a total of 2,934,597 tons. We observe also that in the same time, that is to say, from 1878 to 1882, 352,778 passengers passed through the St. Lawrence Canals. I regret that I had not time to prepare a similar table showing the amount of freight and the number of passengers by railroads at the same dates and during the same lapse of time, because, Mr. Speaker, you would have perceived the immense difference in favor of the canals, and I can make these statements from my observation of these reports. The matter which I forgot to bring under the attention of the House or rather which I did not resume when I gave a few moments ago, the statements from 1878 to 1882, is the amount of dues which the Government received from the traffic on the canals, from June 1878 to June 1882, which dues amounted in 1878 to $68,162.38; in 1879, to $65,775.60; in 1880, $77,159.14; in 1881, to $91,138.14, and in 1882, to $87,828.00, making a total of $390,063.32. The dues collected on the tonnage of vessels during the same period of time was $79,761.38. One thing, Mr. Speaker, which must not be overlooked, is that the St. Lawrence Canals would give much larger returns if we had direct commerce with the west, and if foreign vessels could enter them; for by the official reports we see, that from 1878, to 1882, 44,426 Canadian vessels passed through our canals, and only 7,221 foreign vessels, that is to say, only about one-sixth. I will venture to show to this honorable House, that there has been during the last ten years an increase of traffic, and that there has also been a considerable increase in the number of passengers. In 1778, the number was only 59,439; in 1882, it was 75,221, and if the traffic increases the revenues increase also. I presume to hope, as I said at the beginning, that the Government will continue to give a greater depth to the canals, and that they will not confine their attention to the working of Lachine and Cornwall Canals. They will, I trust, remember that navigation between Lake St. Francis and Lake St. Louis is interrupted by the Cascade, Cedar, and Coteau Rapids, and that consequently a canal of the same depth as that of the Lachine and Cornwall is required. Although, Mr. Speaker, I do not desire to detain you any longer in discussing the question of the construction of a canal on the north shore of the St. Lawrence, in the county of Soulanges, in the precisely mentioned places, in as much as it cannot have any practical result, as no appropriation can be made this year for such an undertaking; nevertheless I wish to invite the attention of the House, and that of the Government to the fact, that according to surveys made by several engineers, the north shore of the St. Lawrence has always been recommended as being the most favorable locality for the construction of the canal. As far back as 1834, Mr. Mills made a report favorable to the construction of a canal on the north shore. In 1839, Colonel Philpott made a report favorable to the construction of a canal on the north shore of the St. Lawrence, in a military point of view, and quite recently, in 1873 and 1874, surveys under the direction of Mr. Baillaigé, the present Deputy Minister of Public Works, whose talents are so well known; and although these reports have not been submitted to the House, they are not less advantageous and favorable to the construction of a canal on the north shore of the St. Lawrence. I venture to hope, Mr. Speaker, that the Government will carefully examine this question, and will soon place in the Estimates, a sum sufficient for the construction of a canal on the north shore of the St. Lawrence, because the construction of a canal on that side, would be an advantage in a military point of view, and would meet the general approval of mercantile men and of those engaged in navigation.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

88. Cornwall Canal.....$230,000.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If you will allow me, Mr. Chairman, before we pass to that item, I desire to say a few words in respect to the speech delivered by the hon. member for Soulanges (Mr. De Beaujeu), who has evidently taken great interest in this matter. When the deepening of the St. Lawrence canals in the manner proposed is entered upon, a very large expenditure will be required to be made on what are termed the Beauharnois canals. A good deal of doubt had existed as to the best place where that work could be constructed, and a good deal of controversy has taken place on points in respect to the two sides of the river, into the merits of one of which the hon gentleman who addressed the House before Recess entered very fully. Surveys have been made and plans are being gradually perfected. They would have been pressed more rapidly, and brought to a conclusion at an earlier period, provided it had been intended to proceed this season with the deepening of that section of the St. Lawrence canals; but it is not proposed this year to engage in that very serious undertaking, because the expenditure on that section will amount to something like $3,200,000 in order to obtain twelve feet of water with fourteen feet on the mitre sills, and an additional $450,000 to give us fourteen feet depth of water, as is contemplated to be attained ultimately from Lake Erie through to Montreal. As my hon. friend will see, it is not intended to propose a vote during the present Session for this section of the work, involving, as I have pointed out, a very great expenditure; in the meantime, the plans will be perfected, and at a future Session the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals, whoever may be occupying that position, will be able to submit the whole case with the judgment of the Chief Engineer of Canals in relation to this subject. It is a very important one, and one which has engaged, and will engage, the most careful attention of the Government. I may add that it is quite obvious that while the county of Soulanges has the advantage of possessing so able and energetic a representative in this House, no Government, whoever may occupy the Treasury benches, is likely to be able to lose sight for a moment of the important interests of that section of the country. With respect to the vote for the Cornwall Canal now under consideration, I may say that it is proposed to expend this money to meet the final estimates on section one. The Committee is aware that a large expenditure was made on a section of the Cornwall Canal in order to obtain fourteen feet of water on the mitre, sills and twelve feet navigation, and this appropriation of $30,000 will complete the works that have been in progress and which were undertaken by my predecessor. $200,000 is asked for the enlargement of the entrance to the locks at the upper end of the canal. In order to provide for the ultimate deepening of the St. Lawrence canals it is proposed that this entrance shall be of the same character as similar works undertaken by my predecessor. The total expenditure on the Cornwall canal works up to 31st last December, was $562,020, and the estimated expenditure up to 1st July will be $13,701 more, making a total of $575,721. The bulk of the work covered by the vote now before the House is for new work.

Mr. BLAKE. Then the total cost, when completed, will be about $9,010,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

89. Williamsburg Canal—For the construction of an entrance and lock at head of Rapide Plat Canal.....$100,000.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This vote of $100,000 is to be expended towards the construction of a lock at the Rapide Plat River, and the total cost is estimated at $200,000. If I remember aright, I took a vote last year for this service of $40,000; and the Committee will recollect, I dare say, that on that occasion I stated that the depth of water was less at this point than on any other portion of the St. Lawrence Canals from one end to the other; and that it was hoped that by a comparatively small expenditure we could secure an additional depth of water to improve navigation at this point, which was the ruling point on the canals. When, however, we came to look into the matter, and to prepare plans for the construction of the work, the Chief Engineer arrived at the conclusion that the expenditure of $40,000 would really not accomplish the work in the way in which it was desirable that it should be accomplished. It was open to the further objection that this expenditure would not be $40,000, as in the case of the Cornwall Canal, towards the enlargement, when we ultimately carried out the whole system; and he arrived at the conclusion that it would be much wiser not to expend the amount voted—and no portion of it was expended—but to ask Parliament to increase the expenditure to $200,000, in order to make it really effective for the purpose for which it was intended, and to provide that all the work thus done should be work which, when the canals were ultimately enlarged, would all be available for the purpose. I think the Committee will agree with me that it was a wise decision on the part of the Government to abandon the immediate opportunity, and to deal with this in a way in which, I am satisfied, will be, in the end, much more economical and satisfactory. All this work will be so much work towards the completion of the system of deepening the canal to twelve feet navigation, and to fourteen feet on the mitre sills.

Mr. BLAKE. What depth of water will be given at this point?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Fourteen feet on the mitre sills. The lock will be constructed precisely as are all the other locks, for the improvement of navigation and the enlargement of the canals.

90. St. Lawrence River and Canals..... $150,000.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This vote is required to meet the expenditure towards improving the channel through the Galops Rapids. To complete the works under contract will cost about $240,000, in addition to the sum now asked, and this will complete a channel 300 feet wide, adapted to fourteen feet navigation. As the Committee are aware, this is a work which has been going on with a chain tug and submarine blasting to obtain a depth of fourteen feet in that section. Of this $150,000, $102,000 is a revote, remaining from the $154,000 taken last year. It is estimated that the probable cost of enlarging the Williamsburg canals to a draught of twelve feet on the lock sills, with locks 70 x 45, the canal to be eighty feet wide and one foot deeper than the top of the lock sills, and so arranged as to give two feet more on the lock sills when required—will be $2,110,000; Farran's Point Canal, $320,000; Rapide Plat Canal, $820,000, and the Galops Rapids Canal, $970,000, making a total for twelve feet, of $2,110,000.

Mr. BLAKE. This vote is entirely for the Galops Rapids?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. And this work will cost $970,000 in all when completed?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; and the ultimate depth of fifteen feet would cost an additional $400,000.

Mr. BLAKE. At the Galops?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Through the whole of the Williamsburg Canals.

91. Murray Canal..... $350,000.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is estimated that an additional amount of $825,000 will be required to complete this work, in addition to the vote of $350,000 now asked.

Mr. BLAKE. That will make $1,175,000 altogether.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes. This canal, of course, connects the Bay of Quinté with Lake Ontario, avoiding a dangerous and exposed route. Presqu'Isle harbor is selected as the terminus on the lake; and as the Committee will remember, although I believe that the point was not definitely settled when the Estimates were carried through last Session, I stated to the Committee I believed, on the part of the Government, that this route would be undoubtedly selected. This canal is to be without locks, is to be eighty feet wide at the bottom, eleven feet deep at the lowest known water level of Lake Ontario, and six and one-eighth miles long. The appropriation for 1882-83 was $200,000; the amount brought from 1881-82 was $1,163; and this makes a total available for 1882-83 of $201,163. The total expenditure from July 1st to December 31st last, was $50,328; and it is expected that there will be expended by the 1st day of July next, $40,834, or in all during the present year, $91,163. There is a revote asked of $110,000; in all required for 1883-84, $350,000. The amount of the accepted tender was $1,440,625. The superstructure of road and railway bridges are estimated at $25,000; land damages, $10,000; superintendence and contingencies, $75,000, or a total of $1,260,625.

Mr. PLATT. I would like the hon. gentleman to give me some information as to the contract—whether the amount which is paid by the cubic feet applies merely to the actual amount of the excavation for the canal, or to the quantity which it may be necessary to excavate owing to the floatable sand?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If there is floatable material they will only be required to make the canal a certain size, and they will only be paid for taking out the amount required to give that size. If more is required to be taken out to accomplish that, I am afraid the contractor will have to do it himself.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the time in which the contract is to be completed?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. July, 1885.

Mr. PLATT. I would like the hon. Minister to give us some idea of the consideration upon which the Government decided in favor of Presqu'Isle route as against Weller's Bay.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That subject was discussed at very great length when the hon. gentleman's predecessor was in this House, upon the fullest information that could be laid before it. The Government, after a careful enquiry into all the facts, and after obtaining all possible information, not only from their own engineers, but from seafaring men accustomed to navigate the waters in that section, decided in favor of the Presqu'Isle route. As the hon. gentleman knows his predecessor entertained very strong views in favor of another route, and though he was a very strong supporter of the Government, and brought every possible influence in favor of his views, his influence was overborne by what the Government regarded as facts which in their judgment were in favor of Presqu'Isle.

92. Welland Canal..... $600,000.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Of this sum $33,000 is a revote, there having been paid last year an equal sum to that which is now passed, less the sum of $5,000, which is now revoted. It is estimated that an additional amount of $750,000 will be required to complete this work, to be expended as follows: Section 27 of the aqueduct, $25,000; section 34, $75,000; land and contingencies, $175,000.

93. Construction of a raceway between the feeder and Chippewa River, Welland Canal..... $24,500.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is to complete the work, the balance of which will be $31,000.

94. Trent River navigation—For construction of locks and the improvement of navigation between Lakefield and Balsam Lake..... $246,000.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This work was entered upon last year. This vote is to be expended towards the formation of the several canals at Burleigh, Buckhorn, Fenelon Falls and Campbell's Point. The estimated cost of the whole work is $391,007; an additional sum of $101,000 will be required to complete it. The expenditure up to the 31st of December last was $9,175, and it is estimated that we shall also expend $34,824 by the 1st of July next, or $44,000 in all.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman state at what time he expects these works to be completed?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The dates for the completion of the contracts are—for Fenelon Falls, July 1st, 1885; for Buckhorn Canal, September 1st, 1884; for the Burleigh Canal, July 1st, 1885.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the depth of the water?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Five feet.

Mr. BLAKE. Has any progress been made in the way of investigation?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; the survey is going on. I am asking a specific vote for that. We expect to complete it this year.

95. Ste. Anne Canal..... $288,000.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This vote will complete the work under contract, that is, the lock 200 feet by forty-five feet, with a depth of nine feet of water on the sills, and with approaches above and below the lock, and also the deepening of the channel above the lock.

96. Carillon—Canal, Dam and Slide..... $260,000.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This vote is divided as follows:—To complete the canal and dam, $82,000; and to form an entrance to the channel above the lock, $178,000. It has been found, since the dam was constructed, that it will be necessary to make this expenditure for an entrance to the channel above the lock, in order to increase the safety of the transmission of boats and rafts. The total expenditure to the 31st December last was $998,398.90, and there has been comparatively little done since. This vote will complete the work.

97. Grenville Canal..... $241,000.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This amount is required to complete the works at the upper entrance, and the two locks at the lower entrance, and to settle two old claims by the contractor, Mr. Goodwin. The total expenditure on this work to the 1st of July next is expected to be $2,123,984.

98. Tay Canal—For construction of works..... $75,000.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is required to meet the necessary expenditure for connecting the town of Perth with the Rideau navigation. The total estimated cost is $240,000, for two locks 126 feet by twenty-six feet wide with five feet of water and a bottom width of channel of thirty feet.

Mr. BLAKE. Is it under contract?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; for this reason: Tenders were invited, but the lowest tender was larger than the estimated cost, and consequently I did not think proper to accept it until this vote should pass the House. The estimate I gave was not very much less, taking everything into consideration. It was supposed some of these works would not be quite so extensive as they were. I estimated the cost at $150,000, and the lowest tender was $186,000. Therefore, although the margin was not very great, I thought it more deferential to the House to wait until the vote would be passed, before accepting the lowest tender.

Mr. BLAKE. But the total expense is $240,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Well, the changes made are estimated at $55,556.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the extent of the navigation?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Five miles. My hon. friend from North Lanark may be able to supply more accurate information of the locality than I can.

Mr. HAGGART. The canal is to supplant the canal which has been in existence for nearly thirty or forty years. The intention of the Imperial Government was at first to build a canal from the Rideau Lake to the town of Perth. It was undertaken by private enterprise, and a canal was built from there to the town of Perth. This is to make navigable the Tay River, which most hon. gentlemen know in this section of the country is the feeder of the whole Rideau Canal from there down to the Ottawa. It supplies the mills along the whole line of the Rideau down to New Edinburgh with water. It is a work of great necessity to that section of the country, and has been built by the private enterprise of the people of the town themselves. They were unable to build anything but wooden locks. It is the first work the county of Lanark has ever asked for, and as the canals through all the other portions of Ontario were built by the Dominion Government they thought the Dominion Government should build this.

Mr. BLAKE. Is it expected that any water power will be created by this canal available for milling purposes?

Mr. HAGGART. No; the canal diverges off from the main river and escapes the water powers altogether which are on the line of the old canal, and the canal empties into the Rideau Lake by the two locks which are being constructed.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the probable extent of the traffic?

Mr. HAGGART. There is the traffic of the town of Perth and smelting works will be erected there which require this canal. In the back section of the country, as we all know, there are the largest deposits of iron ore in Canada, as well as of phosphates of lime. It will also enable freights to be cheapened in the bringing in of coal for the purpose of smelting iron and for other works intended in that section.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

100. Construction of a swing bridge at Valleyfield.... $8,000.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is the Beauharnois Canal on which it is found necessary to erect a new swing bridge. When this vote was taken last year I explained the grounds on which it was asked, and the only change is a change of site for the bridge.

101. Construction of a drain between the town of Cornwall and the Canal $20,000.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The construction of the canal at Cornwall cut off the means of drainage of the town, and it was agreed at the time that a drain should be provided by the canal. A vote was taken last year for this service of $10,000, but it was found that the culvert under the canal was not sufficient for carrying the drain in that direction, and to drain the whole locality. The town itself has suffered very severely from the absence of means of efficient drainage, and strong representations were made to the Government. I had the matter carefully examined by the Chief Engineer of Canals, and he reported it would be wiser to carry the drain in another direction, at a cost of $20,000, and make it thoroughly efficient, so as to remove all cause of complaint or damage on the part of the rapidly-growing town of Cornwall. Consequently, that $10,000 was not expended, and I am asking the House to increase it to $20,000 this year, so as to make this work thoroughly efficient. This sum will carry the drain past the entire town and outside of it, at the mouth of the canal, so as to dispose of the entire question. It completes the whole drainage and carries out the whole sewage.

Mr. McMULLEN. Does the town of Cornwall contribute anything towards the construction of the drain?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; the original agreement was, that drainage should be provided. The town had convenient access to the river, and it was a very simple matter to carry the drainage into the river. The construction of the canal entirely cut off that drainage, and we now propose to remedy the difficulty.

Mr. BLAKE. It seems entirely reasonable.

102. Welland Canal—Cleaning out back ditches ... $6,000.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. These ditches which were cut alongside the canal to carry off the adjacent water, have become filled up, to the detriment of the neighboring lands, which have in consequence been flooded.

103. Burlington Canal—Renewal of piers..... $13,000.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. $4,000 is a revote. We took a vote of $11,000 last year, and we find this will be required to complete the work. It is for the renewal of the east end of the south pier, and replanking parts of the north pier, and to put up cap pieces.

104. Survey of Trent Valley navigation..... $3,000.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say that I called upon the Chief Engineer to give me a progress report, but he stated that he was not in a position to do so up to the present time. The survey has been steadily prosecuted. It covers an immense range of country, and there are a great many very nice and difficult questions to be solved in the selection of the most feasible route out of the different routes that present themselves. The facts have all been collected, but Mr. Page did not feel himself warranted, with the attention he had been able to give to it and the information before him, to give a progress report. We expect this $3,000 will complete the work, and to be able at the next Session of Parliament to lay before the House a report upon the whole scheme.

Mr. BLAKE. Is the hon. gentleman at present able to give any information as to whether greater difficulties have presented themselves than were supposed, or whether the difficulties have diminished on enquiry? In point of fact, I suppose there are so many routes, he is not able to choose between them.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is so; but I am glad to be able to say that the result of these careful surveys have been very greatly to decrease the difficulties and the cost of the work.

106 Chambly Canal—Raising banks, lowering bottom of canal, rebuilding lock walls, &c..... $34,100.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. As I stated to the Committee last, it was found that considerable expenditure would be required in this connection. It is in a very dilapidated condition. Last year the House voted $31,000, but that sum was not expended, and this year it is found that we shall require an additional sum to complete the improvements that were begun in 1881. The principal items are, the rebuilding of two chamber walls of a guard lock, the extension and enlargement of a wharf on the west side of the canal, the rebuilding of the wing walls of locks three and six, and also seven months of dredging.

107. Rideau Canal—Building new office for Toll Collector, Ottawa $3,000.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The $1,200 were taken last year for building a new office for the toll collector at Ottawa. It is now found that the amount of $3,000 will be required for repairs. The construction of a building was postponed so as to have a sufficient amount to erect a proper building, which would compare favorably with the surroundings, to be used also as night quarters for the lock men.

Mr. BLAKE. It seems the gross revenue there is about $6,000, while the cost of the staff and maintenance is about $37,000. In view of the proposition that we should expend $3,000 for a toll-house when the tolls amount to only $6,000 as against an expenditure for staff and maintenance of $37,000, I should think the surroundings, which the hon. gentleman should consider, were the surroundings I have just mentioned rather than architectural surroundings.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman would not like to have a shed put up that would throw discredit on the country.

Mr. BLAKE. I would be disposed to drop the tolls altogether if it is necessary to put up a house to cost $3,000, when the tolls collected amount to only about $6,000.

205. Repairs and working expenses—Intercolonial Railway, $2,500,000.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This vote is the same as the amount expended last year. We asked for $1,900,000, and we were obliged to obtain, in the Supplementary Estimates, an additional amount of $600,000, bringing the amount to $2,500,000, being the sum now asked for, in order to meet the additional traffic on the Intercolonial Railway. Notwithstanding that large increase in the expenditure it was fully covered by the receipts of the road, there having been a small balance of $9,000 at the end of the year. The increase in the number of passengers carried during the year was 148,749.

Mr. BLAKE. On what?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. In 1880-81 the number was 631,245; in 1881-82, 779,994, or an increase of 148,749. The amount received was, 1880-81, $545,114.48; 1881-82, $651,296.94, or an increase of $106,182.46. This was for passenger traffic. The number of tons of freight carried in 1880-81 was 725,557 tons; in 1881-82, 838,956 tons, or an increase of 113,379. The amount received from increased freight traffic was $189,622.79 over the amount of the previous year. The receipts from the carriage of mails and sundries amounted to $23,063.49 over the previous year. The total earnings of the road were $318,868.74 over those of the previous year; the train mileage was 381,843 miles more than the previous year; and the car mileage rose from 32,201,157 to 37,409,379 of miles, or 5,288,219 miles more than the previous year.

Mr. BLAKE. It is impossible to analyze these figures at the moment, but I suppose they will appear in Hansard and some opportunity for discussing them will be given at a later stage. The hon. gentleman indicates increased receipts amounting, I understand, to $295,000 in the two main items, freight and passengers. What were the gross receipts for the previous year?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The gross earnings in 1880-81 were $1,760,393.92; in 1881-82, $2,079,262.66. The working expenses were, in 1880-81, $1,759,851.27; 1881-82, $2,069,657.48, or $9,605.18 less than the earnings.

Mr. BLAKE. The result of the last six months is not quite so favorable, I think.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That does not afford any indication of the results of the year, for this reason: it depends entirely upon the portion of the year in which we do the work required to be done. The autumn was favorable for the progress of the works, and they were pushed, and last season a much larger extent of work in regard to maintenance was done than is usual; but we anticipate quite as favorable results at the end of the present fiscal year as was obtained last year.

Mr. BLAKE. Has any alterations been made in the tariff, or of rates, since last Session?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No material alterations have been made in the rates. Alterations, more or less important, are being made from time to time, but there have been no material alterations made in the rates during last year.

Mr. BLAKE. There is a very considerable increase in the traffic, and it is important to know whether there has been any marked development in any particular description of traffic, or in the development of traffic with new regions.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think it would be more satisfactory to prepare a statement and lay it on the Table of the House, which I will do, or submit it on Concurrence.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman submit it in advance?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will; and I will have it prepared so the hon. gentleman will see exactly what is the operation.

Mr. BLAKE. And perhaps the statement from which the hon. gentleman read an extract, a tabular statement, would be a very great convenience as well.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will give this to the hon. gentleman now with pleasure, and supplement it with the information required, which I am sure will be very interesting.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex) There has been a noticeable increase in the working expenses of the road during the last three or four years. In 1879-80, the working expenses per mile were $1,963; in 1880-81, $2,085; and in 1881-82, $2,453; an increase of $500 per mile during three years, which perhaps the hon. gentleman will explain.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am not quite certain about the hon. gentleman's figures.

Mr. ROSS. I have taken them from the Sessional Papers of last Session, and they are correct.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The cost per train mile in 1881-82 was $64.77; in 1880-81, $62.52; and 1879-80, $63.23; so that the hon. gentleman will see that the variation is very slight, the cost is less now than it was in 1879-80, and very little over that of the previous year. I may at once say to my hon. friend that the cost of everything entering into the operation of the railway has increased; the cost of wages and of labor of every description has advanced, and it has been absolutely necessary to raise considerably the wages paid to all classes of employes on the Intercolonial in order to retain the services of good men and to work the road efficiently, making a considerable increase in the expenditure; then the cost of fuel, oil, and all materials used on the road has increased; and it is very satisfactory, notwithstanding this condition of things, to know that we have been able to so manage the business of the road as to meet this increased cost without making it chargeable to the country, the road paying its way.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). In the report of the hon. Minister, I notice that the number of accidents on the road last year was eighty-eight, of which seventy-seven seem to have befallen employes, thirty-one arising from car coupling; and I just thought that if it were possible for the hon. Minister to give attention to this matter, it would be well. Of course the hon. gentleman knows right well, that it is in the interest of the service, that every precaution should be taken to avoid accidents of every kind, and no doubt this is done; but if it were possible by any forethought to decrease the number of accidents, it would not only be in the interest of the service, but a humane act, which the public would very much appreciate.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I can assure the hon. gentleman that I am very much alive to the point to which he has drawn attention. I think, however, that this very unpleasant list will compare very favorably with other roads; and I am sure that if my hon. friend from Northumberland was in the House, he would be able to show that it will compare very favorably with the road to which he pays a great deal of attention. There is no doubt, however, that the climatic conditions under which railways are operated in this country, necessarily involve a very large addition to the number of accidents. It is quite impossible to operate a road in a cold winter climate like that of Canada with the immunity from accident which will be found under more favorable circumstances in Great Britain; and much as I deplore the number of accidents—and they are very great and very serious—I am sure that they will compare most favorably with those on other lines in Canada and in the United States generally. I cannot be too thankful to be able to say that on the Intercolonial, since I assumed its management some years ago, down to the present hour, not a single passenger has lost his life with one exception, and this was a case in which the road was in no way to blame, because the party attempted recklessly to get on the train while it was in motion. I am quite sure that every member of the House will be very much gratified to learn that so far we have had such a remarkable immunity from accidents in the loss of passengers on the Intercolonial. Series of accidents have occurred to employes, and it is one of the things which it is difficult to understand, but which is familiar to the minds of gentlemen who turn their attention to these subjects, that nothing is so surprising as the recklessness of the risks taken by persons engaged in hazardous employments. It is very well known that when Sir Humphrey Davey conferred such an inestimable boon on the miners as the invention of the safety-lamp, every means of compulsion had to be resorted to to compel the miners to take advantage of its protection to save them from their reckless exposures to inevitable death and destruction. So it is with railway employes. Many of them are occupied in somewhat hazardous employments, and the more hazardous it is apparently the more reckless they become, in reference to the danger to which they are exposed. The difficulty in connection with the coupling of cars has engaged my attention very much, and there is no expense to which I would not be willing to go to-morrow to secure the adoption of a patent or any other means by which that danger could be lessened. The attention of railway men all over the world is being largely directed to this subject, and they are constantly adopting means and devices to give greater security, so that car coupling may be carried on without the loss of life and limb which is constantly occurring on the Intercolonial and other railways. The subject is one which has attracted a great deal of attention on the part of myself and every one connected with the road, and every precaution is being taken to protect the lives of employes of the road as well as the general public.

Mr. DAVIES. I would like to ask the hon. Minister whether he has received any reports of the facts with regard to an accident which happened at Thompson's Station, Cumberland county, to a man named McLeod. I have had several communications from a nephew of this man, asking me to bring the matter to the hon. gentleman's attention.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. How was he injured?

Mr. DAVIES. I cannot give the details, but his complaint is that the accident happened through the negligence of the conductor, in starting the train too soon. He had his feet crushed in some way, and as he is a poor man with a family, I hope his case will be favorably considered by the Government.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I fear that if this case proves to be one in which the accident occurred through the negligence of the party himself, as I think it likely it will prove, we would be doing wrong in encouraging anything of the kind. But if there is any ground for imputing negligence or other wrong-doing on the part of the employes, the case will certainly receive the very careful and the very favorable consideration of the Government. I will have enquiries made, and will be able to give the hon. gentleman some information on Concurrence.

Mr. FAIRBANK. Is the placing of wood in railway frogs in force on all Government railways?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; I think not. We have been giving a great deal of attention to this subject, and we do not think that the putting of wood in the frog has been found sufficiently satisfactory to cause its general adoption.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Will the case of Morin be included in this vote? This is the case in which there has been a favorable decision by the arbitrators?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There will be a vote in the Supplementary Estimates.

Mr. WELDON. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if anything is to be done with regard to Moncton Station? At present it is very uncomfortable, especially for ladies in wet or cold weather.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I expect to have the station lit up by electric light, as I am aware that as so many trains arrive and depart, it is necessary that the station should be almost as light as day.

Mr. WELDON. I alluded more particularly to the necessity of having a covered way for passengers coming from one train to the other.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No doubt that would be an advantage.

Mr. BLAKE. I think a serious question is raised as to what course the Government should take as regards these railway accidents. I cannot at all reconcile myself to the opinion that the people of this country who have to travel on a Government railway, should be without a remedy if they sustain a wrong upon that railway. The Government has undertaken the business of a common carrier in that regard, and, practically, the people must travel by that road if they travel at all. It seems to me that if the decision which was recently given is to be accepted as final, there should be some arrangement or provision whereby the subject would be entitled to sue in the Exchequer Court, in case his claim was not accepted by the Government; for, of course, the Government would act just as a private railway manager would with a certain class of cases, in which it is clear that there was an impropriety of conduct which would render them liable as a private company. There ought, in a word, to be the right to sue, with proper precautions, in some court. It ought not to be a matter of pure grace, or to be settled upon considerations such as those to which the hon. gentleman has referred, of a man being poor and having a large family. I do not care whether a man is poor or rich. If, under the law, a railway company would be liable for damages, it appears to me that the Government or the public ought to be made liable in the same way. If the Government do the work of common carriers, they should not do it on different principles from individuals. Of course, there is always the difficulty which subsists to a considerable extent when private individuals sue corporations, and to a greater extent when private individuals are allowed to sue the public, namely, the lenient view that jurors take of the case. They do not appreciate that they pay a portion of the taxes, or the portion they pay is so infinitesimal that they are liable to think that the stocking is full of money, and that it will not diminish much by the abstraction of a small quantity. But with the precaution that a Judge should decide between the public and the individual, I see no danger in establishing this principle. If the hon. gentleman thinks that the principles of the law on this subject are not adequate, then we ought to alter the law for the companies as well as for this particular common carrier. As long as we oblige other common carriers to incur certain risks and be liable for certain contingencies, I do not see why the same rule should not apply to the Government, if it assumes these risks and these contingencies.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not intend to enter upon the discussion of this question with the hon. gentleman, because he has the great advantage over me, as I am not a lawyer. But I am not willing to be considered a common carrier. I think there is a very great distinction. A common carrier enters upon his employment for gain; he invests his money for the purpose of enriching himself; whereas I do not think any person will pretend that the Government of this country are operating the Intercolonial Railway, or the Prince Edward Island Railway, with a view to gain. Every person knows that the facilities for travel and traffic provided by the construction of those railways, are an immense boon to the people of the section of country through which they run, and are certainly a source of no profit to the Government. In Prince Edward Island we have some 200 miles of railway running in almost every direction, and in a very circuitous way, and furnishing railway facilities for the people all over the country; and under what circumstances? This Government had to pay last year, for the facilities they furnished to the people of Prince Edward Island, about $90,000 over and above all the money that was received from the road. Under these circumstances I do not think that a Government who are spending the public money to furnish the people with facilities to travel and traffic, are to be placed in the same position as a common carrier who invests his money with the view of receiving not only a return for it, but of enriching himself by that return. I am not dealing with the legal aspect of the question, for I am not qualified to do so; but I do not think the cases are at all analogous. With respect to the judgment of the Supreme Court which has just been delivered, and a very important judgment it is, I may say that I intend to-morrow or next day to submit that whole question to the consideration of the Government, and I have no doubt we shall have an opportunity of stating to Parliament what the decision of the Government is with regard to it. I am very much afraid, however, that the adoption of what my hon. friend suggests, that every person should have the right, upon any pretext however slender, to sue the Government of the country in court, and take them before a jury—

Mr. BLAKE. I did not say that.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Or a single Judge, I am not certain, after what experience I have had, that I would not prefer any jury that could be empanelled in Canada to a single Judge. My experience does not incline me very strongly to a single Judge as a means of escape to the country from being mulcted in improper or unwarranted damages.

Mr. BLAKE. I will merely say that it is not a very great compensation to an individual who meets with an accident owing to the neglect of those who are carrying, and who loses a leg or an arm, to be told: Oh, you are carried at twenty-five cents cheaper than you would have been if a private company had carried you; and when you pay the doctor's bills, and limp about for the rest of your life, you will always remember that you got the journey for twenty-five cents less than you would have got it from a private company. Nor do I agree with the hon. gentleman as to the question of gain. We have the Grand Trunk Corporation, which makes great gain, and therefore can suffer its great losses; but I am not aware that the shareholders of that company have ever received a shilling, so that its losses have to be paid out of the deficiency, as well as those of the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. WELDON. The Government occupies an anomalous position in this matter, because a conductor, as a servant of the Crown, has been held liable, and heavy damages have been awarded against him; and there is no responsibility on the part of the Government.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This anomaly must exist, or every Government must cease to own railways, canals or post offices. It is an anomaly which exists in the Post Office ex necessitate. If the Government were responsible for every letter purloined, for every dollar stolen, or for every injury that a mercantile firm may sustain by the carelessness of a postmaster in forwarding a letter, the Post Office could not exist for a year. That anomaly must exist, and all that any Government can do—assuming its decisions to be law—is to consider every case on its merits. Of course, every Government ought to be not only honest, but liberal in the consideration of any injuries that are sustained by private individuals from the negligence of their servants or subordinates. That principle is well understood in England. For instance, in the Admiralty, they do not admit any responsibility for the consequences of any collision between an ordinary vessel and a man-of-war; but I think an annual vote is taken, out of which the Admiralty, in their discretion, can make compensation to persons suffering from such accidents, arising from the negligence of their officers commanding men-of-war. I think that all we, or any Government, can do, or that any Parliament would consider it wise for a Government to do, is to treat these cases liberally, with a just sense of the injury suffered by the party, and the compensation he ought to receive.

Mr. WELDON. With regard to the Admiralty, my hon. friend is quite right; there is an annual vote. But if one of the Queen's ships comes into collision with another vessel, on application to the Admiralty, they appoint their proctor, and the case goes before the court as an ordinary case, and whatever damages are awarded, they pay. I think that New Brunswick was one of the first Provinces to build a Government railway, the line between St. John and Shediac, which is now part of the Intercolonial system; and one of the first things the Government of that Province did, was to appoint Commissioners, to be sued, and to assume the responsibility of common carriers. In case of accidents to goods or persons, actions were brought against the Commissioners and the damages awarded were paid. So far we found it worked well, and instead of working injustice, justice was done to the people. For some ten or twelve years that system has been in force in New Brunswick and no injustice to the Crown has accrued from it.

Mr. BLAKE. It is impossible to put the matter on the basis the hon. gentleman states. If you do not recognize a liability of some kind, the giving of anything in respect to persons or goods injured must be a gratuity; and if it is to be taken as such, the Government must bring down a vote every year for the particular persons who must be compensated. A general principle of action must be laid down, and the application of it to particular cases must depend upon the circumstances of that case. The particulars must be arrived at, some way or other, departmentally or judicially, by which a conclusion is reached, and it may be a matter of favoritism and of treating one case more or less laxly than another. I do not agree that the case of the Post Office is at all analogous to the case of the railway. It is utterly impossible the Government should acknowledge the liability for the losses of letters, as we all know the room there is for fraud in cases of this kind. I do not wish, however, to discuss this matter any further at present. I desire to ask the hon. Minister what is his calculation as to the life of the rails, and what is his idea as to the charge that accrues upon the renewal of the rails?

Mr. DAVIES. I do not wish to discuss the important constitutional question that has just been mooted, as many months cannot roll on without the subject being thoroughly discussed by the lawyers of the House. The hon. Minister, if he looks into the case closer, will find that the policy of this House has been for years back more and more in the direction of making the Government liable in the case of injuries caused by the negligence of employes. In 1871 an Act was passed putting in the power of the Minister, where injury happened to the person or goods of a passenger, and application was made by him for compensation, to refer the assessment of damage to arbitrators. When the hon. Minister of Railways consolidated the Railway Act of 1879, he made a statutory declaration of the existence of liability on the part of the Government, because he declared in so many words that the Department of Railways should not exonerate itself from liability for damages caused by the negligence of employes. I do not propose to anticipate what will be a lengthened discussion on this point, and I am glad the hon. Minister intends to submit to his colleagues the matter of particular damages discussed before the Supreme Court lately, and before the end of the Session to give some information on that point.

Mr. McMULLEN. Will the hon. Minister state to the House what are the gross earnings per ton per mile, or per car per mile of the line for the last year?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will have that calculation made.

206. Repairs and working expenses—Prince Edward Island Railway..... $220,000.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This increase is in consequence of that amount being required over and above what was anticipated in order to put the road in a thoroughly good condition. This expense will decrease after the present year, because the road has been placed in a much higher condition of efficiency than it was before.

207. Repairs and working expenses—Windsor Branch Railway..... $20,000.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is a branch between the Halifax Junction and Windsor, and is operated by the Mr. WELDON.

Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company under an arrangement by which they give us one-third of the earnings and we maintain the line. The expenditure that we are called upon to make covers the outlay.

Mr. DAVIES. Before we pass from the railway vote I would like to call the hon. Minister's attention to the fact that early in the Session a question was asked by the hon. member for Prince county (Prince Edward Island) respecting the condition of the station at Summerside. I think, from the answer the hon. Minister gave, that he was under a misapprehension as to the nature of the question and the danger which the hon. member for Prince county believed existed there. The station at Summerside is built in a triangle surrounded on three sides by the railway track. I wish to call the hon. Minister's attention to the fact that three successive Grand Juries have reported that station as a nuisance, and I believe their report has been forwarded to the Department. There is no protection whatever—no passage-way for man, woman or child to the station without crossing a double line railway track. Cars are being shunted there constantly, and I cannot conceive how it is possible for us to escape serious accidents there before long. I would suggest to the hon. gentleman that he consult with his Engineer and cause a small wooden bridge to be constructed for passengers to go over from the road to the station. Unless something of this kind is done I am perfectly satisfied that before many months are over some terrible accident will happen there.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I can inform my hon. friend that the Government are not responsible for the existing state of things. The hon. gentleman knows that the railway was constructed by the Government of Prince Edward Island, and that this station is now in precisely the condition it was then, so that the difficulty did not arise with us, but with them. I have an impression that the hon. gentleman would know more about that matter than I do. It was contemplated to build a bridge, but the Government of Prince Edward Island sold the land and rendered it impossible for the bridge to be built.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. Minister referred to that in his answer before, but I could not understand him. It is certainly not the fact, there was no land sold there. Originally the station was to have been put a mile back of the town; then it was changed to the town, to the water side, but there never was any land sold there by the Government. I acknowledge the station was built by the Island Government, but that does not lessen the danger that exists. I think one hundred dollars would suffice to build a bridge.

Mr. BRECKEN. I was a member of the Local Government when the station at Summerside was fixed upon. It was at first proposed to put it some distance back of the city, where the dangers mentioned by my hon. friend would not have existed, and if I remember aright, the station was changed by the Liberal Government who came into power afterwards. I think my hon. friend was a member of the Legislature at that time, and supported that Government, and I am not sure but he was a member of the Government himself. However, I quite agree with my hon. friend in all he has stated with respect to the present station. It is a little triangle between a road leading into Summerside and the shore, and it is impossible for passengers to reach the station without crossing a double track railway, and they are constantly exposed to danger. It is quite true that several Grand Juries have time and again presented this station as a nuisance. I think the Minister of Railways would do well to take the matter into his consideration, and if the station here was changed, or a bridge thrown across the track, it would avoid a very great danger for the people. It is a matter of surprise that up to the present time no accidents have occurred.

Mr. HACKETT. I have felt it my duty, on several occasions, to call the attention of the Minister to the fact that the railway station was situated in a very inconvenient part of the town. The fact is, that that station was placed there during the administration of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie). It is not true that that station was placed there by the Island Government before Confederation. The station built by the Island Government was placed in a most convenient position, but the Government of the hon. member for East York, no doubt, thinking they were doing it for the best, changed the site of the station to the position which it now occupies, thus exposing the passengers to great inconvenience and danger in going to the station. It is a wonder that many people are not killed in crossing over that double track to the station. However, I acknowledge that no blame can be laid to the present hon. Minister of Railways, or to the present Government. The station was placed there by the late Administration, and it now becomes the duty of the present Government to do as much as possible to remedy the evil. I think the hon. Minister of Railways, to whose attention the matter has been brought on several occasions, will do everything in his power, assisted, as he is, by an able staff of officers, to remedy this great evil. It has been brought, as the hon. member for Queen's has stated, to the notice of the Grand Jury of the county on several occasions, and they have represented very strongly the facts of the case. But I think the hon. gentleman, in taking special charge of Queen's county, is going outside of his record. The hon. members for the county are quite capable of looking after the interests of the county, and I feel I have not been derelict in my duty, because I have drawn the attention of the hon. Minister to this matter on several occasions, and conferences have been held with the engineers who are considering the subject with a view to remedying evils existing at present.

208. Repairs and working expenses—Canals $429,584.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I regret that there is a considerable increase in the expenditure on the canals. The price of labor has much increased; and in regard to the Welland Canal, there are now two canals instead of one, which involves a very large increase in the annual expenditure.

Mr. BLAKE. Has there been any increase in the traffic?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The traffic returns have not been at all satisfactory, but I think the prospects are that this year the traffic will be much larger than last year. The cost of the staff in connection with the new canal is placed at $93,000, and of the old canal at $14,400.

Mr. BLAKE. Has the number of employes been increased?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, very much, on account of the opening of the new canal, for we are unable to close the old canal. We have considerably reduced the staff on the old canal, but we are obliged to maintain a staff, as the canal is still used for the traffic of vessels, and it is absolutely necessary to keep it open, because of the water-power all along its banks.

Mr. BLAKE. Then we may understand that the expense is as nearly as possible the normal one.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not expect we can reduce it much lower than it is now.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). A considerable decline has taken place in the revenue from the canals. In 1881, the receipts were $339,833; last year they were $304,014, being a decline of about $35,000. The Report of the Minister of Inland Revenue gives details in regard to the kinds of produce on which the decline has taken place. While I call his attention to this point, I wish to ask the hon. Minister whether he considers the policy of reducing the canal tolls has been a success. If I understand rightly, the object was to secure to Canada a class of freight which otherwise would have gone by the Erie Canal, on which there are no tolls. The consequence has been largely to reduce the receipts, and while they have thus fallen off, there has been an increase in the expenditure. There has been spent on canals, $43,000,000 between the Canadian and the Imperial Governments, and the expenditure has not ended yet, but will probably reach $50,000,000 before the canals are completed. Does the hon. Minister believe that by reducing the tolls on the canals this country has received any equivalent in increased traffic or commercial advantages for the loss of revenue sustained? This is a very broad question, and I do not know whether it is fair to spring it on the hon. Minister at a moment's notice, for it is one that requires very serious consideration. I would, however, be glad to hear the hon. Minister's opinion on this point.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There can be no doubt that the question which the hon. gentleman has opened is a very wide question, and one the importance of which can scarcely be overrated; but I am glad to be able to inform the hon. gentleman—and I will furnish the figures so as to show exactly what the result has been—that the decrease in receipts has not arisen from the reduction of tolls; that so far from that being the case, the reduction of tolls has not been attended with any decrease in the amount received from the class of vessels in respect of which the reduction has been made. No doubt the traffic through the canals last year was very considerably less than previous years, but the reduced receipts did not arise from the diminished tolls, the effect of which was rather the other way.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Then, the conclusion we shall be obliged to draw will be that the railways are absorbing the traffic which formerly went by way of the canals. I observe that in 1861 the tolls collected on vessels amounted to $16,417, while last year the amount was only $12,514. Of course, the reduction in receipts may arise from a smaller number of vessels, or from the reduction in tolls, outside, of course, from any amount collected from the produce of agriculture. This was a trade which, I suppose, the reduction of tolls, was particularly designed to secure for our canals. The decrease was from $79,213 to $39,652. I would be very glad to examine the report when the hon. Minister brings it down, and I think this is a matter which the House should not lose sight of. If we are to lose the trade which we expected to receive by the enlargement of the canals, and the expenditure from year to year of a very large amount of money on the St. Lawrence canals and the other inland waters, it becomes a very serious matter. The interest on the investment itself is a very serious item, and it may be necessary to consider whether any means can be adopted whereby the canals can be rendered at least self-sustaining. It is a pity if we lose not only the interest on the investment, but also are obliged to contribute from revenue a considerable amount each year over and above the collections from tolls on our inland system of canals.

Mr. CHARLTON. The completion of railways and their increasing traffic, have led to the tolls being entirely removed from that great water highway, the Erie Canal; and I wish to enquire of the Minister, whether it is not deemed probable, that it will be rendered necessary to take the same course with reference to the Canadian Canals, removing the tolls as on the Erie Canal, for the purpose of keeping the trade we already have.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That subject is engaging the attention of the Government, but I do not think that there is any prospect of a proposal being made to abolish the tolls on the canals. There may be, however, some reductions, and I expect we will be able to state to the House in a very short time what view we take of this question.

209. Salaries and Contingencies of Canal Officers... $33,320.00

Mr. BLAKE. This vote is the same as last year, while there is the considerable increase of $37,000 on working expenses generally; and I think the hon. gentleman stated that a considerable portion of the increase is due to the increased cost of employes.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is not so much on the salaries of officers and staff, as on employes—laboring men.

211. Repairs and working expenses—Harbors and Slides..... $96,250.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The decrease is $4,500. The details will be found on page 93.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the general result respecting these works? Are they self-sustaining?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In some of them more revenue is collected than the amount expended. In the Saguenay district there is a deficit, I think, of $5,000, and in the St. Maurice district, a deficit also exists, due to the building of the new works.

Mr. BLAKE. What is their normal condition?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If these large works had not been required, I think we would have had a surplus in the St. Maurice district. For instance, in 1870, the deficit was only $1,200; in other years it was $6,000, and sometimes $16,000, according to the extent of repairs made and of booms removed altogether.

Mr. BLAKE. There is always a deficit?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There is generally a deficit. In the case of the Ottawa Works, it is different. The net revenue of them for 1882 was $26,000, and for the previous year, $18,000. During the three years previous to that, it was $18,000; in 1878, $32,000; in 1877, $61,000; in 1873, $78,000; in 1874, $68,000; in 1875, $24,000, and in 1876, $33,000, &c. These are surpluses.

Mr. BLAKE. It seems to me that now that we have been so many years in obtaining these works, the aim of the Government should be, at any rate, to obtain sufficient from them to keep up these works and to pay the expense of maintaining them. The Local Governments receive, of course, as proprietors of the timber lands, large revenues from this timber; the timber goes down these streams, and these slides and booms afford facilities for letting the timber down. Under these circumstances, I can see no reason why the system should not be made practically a self-sustaining system. If it is not made self-sustaining, you are either allowing the Provincial Governments by that means to obtain an indirect revenue by charging larger stumpage or other dues than they otherwise would, or you are assisting the lumbermen, not merely by affording them facilities for getting out their stuff, but also by paying them a sort of bonus. If that general proposition should be admitted that we, as proprietors of the navigation, are conducting these enterprises for the benefit of this great trade—the Local Governments and private individuals deriving large profits—why should we carry them on upon a system which, taking a series of years together, involves a loss to Canada? I should not object to an occasional deficit; but when we find that the normal condition, taking one year with another, is a condition of deficits, I think the system is unsound.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman is right and he is wrong. If the normal condition of these works was a deficit, I agree with him that some means should be taken to increase the revenue and make them self-sustaining. But the hon. gentleman will admit that on large works where there are a great many logs and timber passing, the revenue there will be necessarily larger, and the cost of maintenance smaller, in proportion, than in places where there is less timber and logs passing. It happens, therefore, that upon some of these works there may be a deficit, while upon others there is a surplus; but, taking all in all, the result is a satisfactory one, just such a result as the hon. gentleman wants.

Mr. BLAKE. It does not appear to me, that because the works in one region of the country are carried on upon a principle which produces a surplus, that fact compensates for the other fact that the works in other parts of the country are carried on upon a principle which produces a deficit. If this trade is so valuable that the Local Governments derive stumpage dues, and the lumbermen derive a profit, there are two profits made, and a portion of these profits is made out of this Government, which has nothing to do with either, and which is supplying these facilities, not at cost, but below cost.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Once more the hon. gentleman is right and he is wrong. If the principle which he advocates were applied to the post offices in the Dominion, it would require that each post office should be self-sustaining, while the fact is that some have large surpluses, while others in smaller places where the distances are greater, and the population is sparser, are not self-sustaining; but as the country grows and the population increases, new offices are opened and a larger number of offices become self-sustaining. So with these works: as more timber comes down, slides and booms are wanted, and they are built, and for a few years there is a deficit instead of a surplus. Nevertheless, you are encouraging trade by constructing them; and it pays you in the long run by giving the country the benefit of employment for our vessels, and so on. Of course we require certain sums every year for repairs, and though some of the works do not produce a surplus, we have, as I have already stated, on the whole, a large surplus.

Mr. BLAKE. I cannot agree that the analogy which the hon. gentleman has drawn between these works and the Post Office service is an accurate one. If he will take the case of the Toronto Post Office, he will find that the large surplus which it produces is due to the existence of non-remunerative offices, and a large number of letters go from Toronto to these offices without which that great centre would not obtain its surplus. So, independently of the other differences between the two cases, there is an absence of this inter-communication and inter-dependence by which one central office produces a surplus on account of the existence of smaller and non-remunerative offices. But what has the amount of expense with which the lumber trade of the Ottawa is conducted, to do with the system under which a more limited trade in another part of the country is conducted? It has nothing to do with it; the circumstances are entirely different. The hon. gentleman says that you are increasing the trade, and giving larger exports to the country. These are propositions which would have an application if you cut down the tolls whenever it was necessary to keep the business going and get dues. But that is not the fact; and without desiring to protract the discussion, I must say that I do not see any ground for departing from my proposition, that in a series of years each work should be so conducted as to pay its own way.

214. Telegraph Lines—Manitoba and the North-West Territories $24,000.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Of this vote, $15,200 is to be for the staff, and $8,800 for repairs. The control of these telegraph lines was transferred from the Railway Department to the Department of Public Works, by Order in Council. The vote is made up as follows:—From Thunder Bay to Winnipeg, 435 miles, for the staff, $7,000; for repairs, $1,000; and for the line and office, materials, stationery, &c., $2,000. From Qu'Appelle to Edmonton, 537 miles, for the staff, $8,200; for repairs, $1,800; and for the line and office, materials, stationery, &c., $4,000.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman state what the returns are?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot say. The line has existed from Edmonton to Humboldt, which is about 120 or 130 miles north of the Canadian Pacific Railway, but it has been in bad order, and was hardly used. In two or three weeks that line will probably be connected with Troy or Qu'Appelle Station, on the Pacific Railway, and we shall then have communication between Edmonton and any other part of Canada. The staff has been reorganized, in order that the line may be in working order, and that we may obtain revenue at the different stations. It is also proposed to extend a branch line from the Saskatchewan River, between Humboldt and Battleford, to Prince Albert, a distance of something like ninety miles, the people of Prince Albert and the neighboring parishes furnishing the poles.

Mr. BLAKE. Is the tariff fixed?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; because the line was not completed. The Superintendent will prepare a tariff which will be submitted to Council.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman give us information about the line from Thunder Bay to Winnipeg?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That portion of the line during last year has been put in the hands of the railway contractors because it was not in order, and we had not the staff necessary to keep it up. The time is now come when we must take it back, and our intention is to put it in good order with this money. No doubt, during the next two years it will not be self-sustaining, but after three or four years it will be more than self-sustaining.

Mr. BLAKE. It seems to me that the House should invite the Government to study, at an early day, a general policy in reference to the telegraph system of the North-West. Unless we are going to adopt a system of permanent operation of the telegraph lines, I do not see why we should not dispose of our interests in the line from Winnipeg to Thunder Bay to the Canadian Pacific Railway, which must have telegraphic communication from station to station, if some fair bargain could be made by which the interests of the public would be protected. But if the Government adopt the general policy of keeping up a telegraphic system as part of the public service, of course such a source would be out of the question.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman is right. The Government consider the propriety of selling that portion from Winnipeg to Thunder Bay, but the offer was so ridiculously small that we did not think it advisable to do so. We thought it better therefore to repair the line and in a few years, after it had acquired some value, we might consider the question of disposing of it. I am not now in a position to say what course the Government will adopt. The question will be taken up during Recess.

Mr. TROW. Is that portion of the old telegraph from Humboldt to Selkirk still in operation?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It has been abandoned. I understand the line passed through a swampy part of the country, and was most difficult to keep in order. A portion of the wire has been removed, to be used on the line from Humboldt to Qu'Appelle Station.

Mr. TROW. Could not the material of the old line be used in this branch, and go direct from Qu'Appelle to Touchwood Hills, and thence direct to Prince Albert?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Perhaps so. The distance may be shorter, and my attention was called to that lately, but the intention was first to do as I have said, and, of course, we will have to take the shorter route.

215. Telegraph Lines—British Columbia$7,000.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There is an increase of $2,000 in the staff, and of $5,000 in the repairs. We had to increase the salaries of the staff, or the operators would have left us. It is very difficult to keep operators there, except at increased salaries, owing to the high price of labor. The repairs are for new poles, and the renewal of a portion of the wire. The line will prove to be one that will give a good revenue to the Government, as the revenue is increasing largely. There is still a deficit, but that deficit is decreasing yearly.

217. Agent and Contingencies—British Columbia.....$4,000.00

Mr. BLAKE. Could the hon. gentleman state what is the entire salary of Mr. Trutch?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. He receives $600 for the agency of my Department, and if I remember aright he has $3,000 in all. Then the accountant, $1,200; allowance to the engineer employed in the Department of Railways, $300; wages of messenger, $400; stationery, $200; fuel, $200; advertisements for tenders, $200; travelling expenses and contingencies, $840.

210. Collection of Slide and Boom Dues..... $21,210.00

Mr. COSTIGAN. This vote is given in detail on page 92. There is a proposed increase of $650 to the salaries of the six clerks employed in that Department. There is an increase of $15 to the allowance made the slide master. There is a decrease in some items and an increase in others:

218. To meet expenses in connection with the Post Office Department.....$2,238,310.50

Mr. CARLING. The increase for mail service is $134,500; salaries, $57,510; miscellaneous, $27,400. The increases are extra mail service in Province of Ontario, $45,000; in Quebec, $27,000; in New Brunswick, $13,000; in Nova Scotia, $9,500; in Prince Edward Island, $1,000; British Columbia, $5,000; Manitoba, $34,000. The increase in salaries is: Ontario, $27,570; Quebec, $2,823; New Brunswick, $840; Nova Scotia, $2,570; Prince Edward Island, $200; British Columbia, $3,887; Manitoba and North-West, $19,620. The increase in the miscellaneous is: Ontario, $16,000; Quebec, $3,000; New Brunswick, $800; Nova Scotia, $1,000; Prince Edward Island, $200; British Columbia, $500; Manitoba and North-West, $4,900. These are the increases in the different Provinces, and amount altogether to $219,000.

Mr. BLAKE. The increase in the mail service of Ontario, $45,000, appears to be very largely an increased payment to the railway companies, while there is an increase of $10,000 for ordinary land conveyance.

Mr. CARLING. It has been found necessary to have increased accommodation between Montreal and Toronto, and arrangements have been made with the Grand Trunk Railway, by which, instead of having part of one car for the conveyance of mails, we are to have two cars on the road between Montreal and Toronto, for which we pay $5,000 a year additional. $9,000 is for mail service on the Canada Atlantic and the Credit Valley Railways.

Mr. VAIL. I observe, under head of mail service in Nova Scotia, there are $4,000 for steamboat and sailing craft. What routes are these employed on?

Mr. CARLING. There is no change, it is the same as last year. New post offices have been opened and increased facilities afforded. The contracts entered into have been at higher prices than previously.

Mr. PLATT. I desire to interview the hon. Minister in regard to a subject which particularly affects a large majority of the people whom I have the honor to represent. Hon.

members who are acquainted with the geographical position of Prince Edward county are aware that, for many years, we were isolated from the rest of the world, so far as railway accommodation was concerned, and we looked forward with pleasure to the time when we would possess railway facilities, and have our mails rapidly delivered. We hailed with delight the advent of that period, and we heralded with pleasure the day when the Government saw fit to place the carriage of the mails to the western part of the county, in the hands of what was then the Prince Edward County Railway and has since been known as the Central Ontario Railway. During the time the mails were carried by that railway, I heard very little complaint, and no complaint which was directed against the carriage of mails on that railway, but since that time, for reasons best known to the Government, and for reasons which have never been made public, the Government have seen fit to change the carriage of the mails from the railway to the old-fashioned method. As the First Minister said yesterday, we have returned to the days of the old ox-team, and although unlike the Indians, who on being pitched into the ditch, refused to be carried further on the railway train the mails have not refused to be so carried. I am at a loss to know the reason why they have been transferred to the olden time honored system of ox-teams. I suppose the Government will be prepared to state that a slight saving of money is thereby affected. I am not, however, aware that there have been any petitions in favor of the change made on a recent occasion, nor am I aware that any very serious complaints have been laid before the Government with respect to the manner in which the mail service was conducted by the railway. I hope the hon. Minister will be in a position to state clearly to the Committee the reason which induced him to make that change, and make it at that particular period. I may state that, so far as the eastern section of the county is concerned, they are not very materially affected by the recent change, and I have not heard many complaints from the eastern part. As regards the county town there have been very loud complaints against the mail service as it is at present conducted. When the mails arrived by train a considerable time was given for the answer to be forwarded. As a rule, the mail arrived about half-past 9 o'clock, and the afternoon train left at 3:30 or 3:45, giving time to enable answers to be sent east or west. Since the change was made the average time at which the mails arrive by ox-team from the east is between 10 and 11 o'clock during the winter, and frequently not until after 11 o'clock, and the mails closed at 1:30, leaving the people little time to answer correspondence. When we go west from Picton the difficulty becomes greater and the complaints are more numerous. When the mails were carried by railway the people in the western part of the county received two daily mails, and in Picton people who had correspondence with villages west could get a reply the same day the letters left that town, but now two or three days are occupied. If a letter leaves Picton in the morning at 9 or 10 o'clock for the western part of the county, it will cross the mail going in the opposite direction, and there is no possibility of a letter arriving until the following day, and then it arrives too late for distribution, so the parties would not receive it until the third day. This is a ground for very serious complaint. Many people in the villages adjacent to Picton, and on that line, have transferred their post offices from where they live to Picton in order that they may obtain their mail matter more quickly. In the western part I have known packages of letters taken to parties on the railway train, and a quarter of a dollar paid in order to get them taken more rapidly to their destination than the present mail can take them. These are very serious grounds of complaint, and in view of the fact that the public have never been made aware of any reason for the change, and no petitions have been presented to the hon. Minister, the question may fairly arise as to the reasons for making this particular change. The mails which leave Toronto in the morning do not arrive in Picton in time for distribution, whereas formerly we obtained them at three o'clock. Newspapers have to be sent by express, or they will not reach there until the following morning. This, of course, is not the case in the summer time, but I am speaking specially of the winter season. With respect to the eastern section, there are no complaints of the service in the summer, when it is performed by the Bay of Quinté Railway and the line of boats from Desoronto to Picton. This change of system cannot involve a saving of more than two or three hundred dollars; it is said that it will reach five hundred or six hundred dollars. I can scarcely make that out from an analysis of the expenses; however, the hon. Minister will be able to state what the extent of the saving will be. But it is not a question of expense. I know that any hon. member who casts suspicion on the motive of the Government in making such changes is very likely to provoke the displeasure of Ministers, but I cannot be blamed if I run the risk of provoking displeasure by stating what is the impression of the people in that section of the county. The suspicion prevails that some other motive than the welfare of the public service induced the change to be made. I do not say that is my own opinion, but it is the opinion generally entertained by the public in that section, and it would not be fair to the people who entertained that opinion, if I did not state the reasons which led them to come to such a conclusion. Hon. members are aware that at the time the carriage of the mails was given to the railway, it was in the hands of a friend of the present Administration, Mr. Manning of Toronto, owning the road, and the mails were carried by that railway so long as Mr. Manning possessed the control and reaped the benefits from the mails being carried over that road. I wish to state, too, that the people bear in mind, what I state here, that no petitions were presented by the public against the service as conducted on that railway. They likewise bear in mind that the press of the county, with one single exception, have condemned the change in the strongest terms, while the Government press of the county has maintained a golden silence on the subject, and have never seen fit to mention it, favorably or unfavorably. Then we know the season of the year was not most opportune for making the change. It was at the advent of winter, when the disadvantages were greater than in summer, and likewise in the middle of the financial year. I am in duty bound to state that it was not long after the last election; and also during the election threats were made, that if the proprietors of the railway did not see fit to stand by the Government candidate, very great injury to their own interests in this respect would ensue; and I know for a fact that after the election was over, these threats were repeated and made stronger than ever to the effect, that they would actually lose the benefits accruing to them from performing that portion of the service.

Mr. BOWELL. By whom?

Mr. PLATT. I leave the hon. gentleman to infer to whom I allude when I state that the only gentleman who petitioned the Government in favor of the change was the gentleman who made particular threats in this direction; but he was not entirely, though almost, alone in this regard. Then the people have not forgotten, in their own minds, that the owners or proprietors of the Central Ontario Railway, who have lost the carrying of the mails by the recent change, are parties who are not supposed to lay any particular claim to the love and regard of the present Administration; and the people cannot fail to think that if the Vice-President of the road had never been the instrument of causing a cloud to be cast over the First Minister, he might have stood a better chance, perhaps, in maintaining his position in the public service. We know very well that the parties benefitted by the contract since, are those who stand in exactly the opposite relation as far as the Government, and the Government candidate, are concerned. The gentleman who received the contract for the carriage of the mails, just happened to be the man who was instrumental in arranging or organizing an election petition against myself, and who did a great deal of what is vulgarly known as the low or bad work of the party in that respect. His funds becoming low, he saw no method of being recompensed for this work, and through some strange combination of circumstances, he received the contract, although, I believe, it was let out by public tender. By some very curious arrangement of circumstances he received the contract for the carriage of the mails for the first section; and the second portion was given to the unfortunate individual who was the nominee of the Minister of Militia, as the canteen tenant at the late camp, and who suffered so disastrously from that violent attack which was made on what is familiarly known as Fort Heffernon.

Mr. BOWELL. Was that the reason for withdrawing the petition against you?

Mr. PLATT. No; I think the reason was lack of funds. It was for the same reason that these men could look nowhere else than to the Government for pay for his services. These are the two gentlemen who received the contract, and this is why people hold peculiar views as to the reasons which caused the Minister to make the change. Grounds of complaint still exist, and notwithstanding that a long time has lapsed, and summer is approaching, these complaints, I believe, still continue. I am, as well, informed that friends of hon. gentlemen opposite have made most strenuous efforts in order to secure the return of the mails to the railway. I feel that, regardless of the reputation of the Minister, which seems to a certain degree at stake in this matter, for the good of the public service and for the well-being of the people interested in this particular portion of the mail carriage of the country, the mails should be returned to the railway at once. It cannot be denied, if the Government do not see fit to make the change as before, that at any rate the railway should carry the mails for the western part of the county. There is no reasonable excuse to be given for persistence in the present course; and I am sure that the day is not far distant when the Government will, of necessity, treat with the gentlemen who own the Central Ontario Railway for the carriage of the mails. We know it is being extended back into the constituency of the hon. Minister of Customs, who, I am sure, will not allow his constituents in the far and remote regions of the county, to be supplied with their mails by ox-carts or horse-carriages, after the railway reaches those remote districts. I am not sure that the proprietors of the road have any quarrel with the Government. They are thoroughly business men, not politicians, who are doing as much, probably, to open up the resources of the country, as any other railway promoters in Canada; and there is no reason I know of that can be given, why the mails should be carried as they now are. I have asked for the papers on this question, but up to the present, not been able to get them, I am forced to ask the hon. gentleman to give explanations, which I hope will be satisfactory, not any more on my account, than on behalf of the people of the county of Prince Edward, who are daily expecting them.

Mr. CARLING. One of the important reasons for continuing the present system, is, that it gives better satisfaction to the public, as far as I am informed, and it is done at a less rate. The cost of carrying these mails by rail was $3,721, while the present cost is $3,339. A great many complaints were made against the railway for the manner in which the mails were carried during last winter. I believe that, on the average, they only made connection three times a week in carrying the mails from Trenton and Picton, instead of six times; but since the arrangement has been made with the present contractors, the other mails, as well as the way mails, are more regularly carried; and, so far as I can learn, the people are better satisfied with the present arrangement than they were before, because the railway company did not give them their mails regularly, while the cost to the country is some $300 or $400 less.

Mr. BLAKE. Slow and sure now.

Mr. CARLING. Not so slow but sure, because the railway company would not wait for the Grand Trunk when the trains were late, while the present contractor does wait. The people, as a general thing, now get their mails more regularly than when these were carried by the company. That is the information I have from the reports of the Inspectors who have examined and enquired into the working of the present system:

Mr. PLATT. The Minister does not intend to convey the idea to the House, that if they missed the mails from the east, this was any fault whatever of the railway?

Mr. CARLING. I can only say it is reported to me, that on the average they missed the train three times a week during last winter, and since the present arrangement has been made, the people get their mails every day, because the contractor regularly awaits the arrival of the train.

Mr. PLATT. During the winter just passed, allow me to state that although the mails might have been missed from the east by the morning train, they would have been carried to Picton by the afternoon train, which arrived here nearly as soon as the stage from Desoronto during the winter. But so far as the western mail is concerned, which is more important to the town of Picton, it is seldom or ever missed by the downward train, because there are two or three hours difference between the time of its arrival at Trenton, and the leaving of the train for Picton. I am confident that the hon. gentleman has not received information which represents the views of the general public upon this question.

Mr. BLAKE. The vote for salaries has been increased by $6,740, but I have only the total for last year, so that we can make no comparison.

Mr. CARLING. The Estimates are prepared in a different way, I believe; but there are no increases except in the number of persons employed in the service. There are an additional number of mail clerks as well as in the post offices. I cannot state the exact number, but I will be very glad to give the hon. gentleman the information on Concurrence. The only ones appointed are junior clerks at the lowest salaries on the railways and in the post offices.

Mr. CHARLTON. What are the salaries?

Mr. CARLING. In the city post offices, $400, and railway clerks $480, according to the Act.

Mr. CHARLTON. How many grades on the railways?

Mr. CARLING. Three. They commence at $180, and first-class clerks get up to $960.

Mr. BLAKE. Passing on to the next head, Post Offices, Ontario, I find an increase of $27,570, but no details are given.

Mr. CARLING. There are no increases in any of the salaries, except those provided by the Civil Service Act, in any of the city post offices. The other increases are the ordinary increases and the increases for additional help required.

Mr. BLAKE. Then, passing on to the heading Miscellaneous, there have been a number of increases for stationery, printing and advertising, manufacturing of postage stamps, post-cards, envelopes, stamps, &c.

Mr. CARLING. These are the regular increases. Owing to the increase of business, as, of course, we require more postage stamps, more paper and every thing of that kind required for the working of the Department.

Mr. HESSON. I think it is fair to state that the increase of mileage, according to the report of the Postmaster-General, is 1,416 miles over 1881, that the total number of miles of mail travel was 1,023,755 miles greater than the number for the preceding year, and that the total number of letters has increased by about 8,030,000 in the year. These figures indicate a very much larger income, and it necessarily follows that there must be a very much larger expenditure. I am pleased to see that the income has more than kept pace with the expenditure. I see that Ontario is only $31,000 short of paying its own expenses, and Manitoba is in almost an equally good position. The whole record must be very gratifying to the country. I should be very glad if, at an early period, the hon. Postmaster-General could see his way to reducing the rate on letters from 3 cts. to 2 cts. The example has been set on the other side of the line, and I think that example could be followed without loss to the Department, but rather with gain to the whole country, and I am satisfied that the whole country would approve of any change in that direction. With regard to the increase in the salaries, and in miscellaneous expenses, for stamps, &c., I find that no less than 236 new post offices have been opened during the past year, which necessarily increased the expenditure all round.

Mr. BLAKE. I am sure the hon. Minister must be very much obliged to the hon. member for North Perth for undertaking the vindication of his Department. The hon. Minister would, no doubt, have taken advantage of those figures if he had not known that they were behind time. The hon. member has been talking of increases that have already occurred; he has been comparing last year with the previous year. We are talking about the estimated increases of next year. I would recommend the hon. gentleman, before he undertakes the vindication of the Minister, to get a little more abreast of the times, rather than a year behind them.

Mr. HESSON. My figures are from the last Report of the Postmaster-General. I spoke of that which we are in possession of, and I think it reasonable that these increases should be looked for by the House in consequence of the additional mileage and the number of new offices which have been established.

Mr. CHARLTON. I suppose the Postal Treaty between the United States and Canada provides that prepaid letters and newspapers should be carried free to their destination in either country; but I find a vote of $7,500 for transit postage payable to the United States. I should like to know what it is for.

Mr. CARLING. That is for carrying foreign mails through the United States.

Mr. CHARLTON. Another matter which I wish to bring to the attention of the Minister is a question which is frequently raised in the section of the country which I belong to, that is, the carrying of the mails on fast express trains. The Canada Southern Railway runs three express trains daily, but the mails are not carried on these, but on slow way trains, and the service is very bad. Why could not the Canadian Government have a postal car on each of these fast trains, and have the mails delivered at the various stations while the train is in motion as is done in other countries? This would probably require slightly increased expenditure, but the service would be so much better that the small increase would be cheerfully borne by the country.

Mr. BLAKE.

Mr. CARLING. I believe the plan suggested by the hon. member, has been tried, and has not worked satisfactorily. The difficulty is to get the railway companies to stop these fast trains at the railway stations.

Mr. CHARLTON. They do not need to stop.

Mr. BLAKE. They have a system of delivering the mails as they go.

Mr. CARLING. I am told by officers of the Department, who have had considerable experience in this matter, that it has never worked well.

Mr. CHARLTON. When the fast mail train between New York and Chicago was adopted, although it ran at the rate of forty miles an hour, the mails were delivered and received by this fast train at all the small stations. The system has worked successfully there and in England for years, and if we are unable to work it successfully, it must be because we do not understand how it is done. All we have to do is to adopt the plans they have adopted, and we can deliver the mails as they do.

Mr. LAURIER. Can the hon. Minister give us information as to the subsidies, said to have been given to the steamer Folger, for carrying the mail from Murray Bay to Kamouraska during the winter season? I called for the papers two months ago. They are not yet down.

Mr. CARLING. I understand that no money has been paid.

Mr. LAURIER. I understand that the matter was taken up as an experiment. I suppose, the experiment not being satisfactory, no money was paid.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The arrangement was made, subject to the sanction of Parliament, with the Department of Railways. If the experiment had succeeded, we would have submitted an item in the Estimates for that purpose. I understand the hon. Minister of Railways to say the experiment did not succeed, and therefore no money was paid.

Mr. LAURIER. Nor is to be paid?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No.

Mr. LAURIER. I see there is an increase of $9,000 to the Intercolonial Railway for mail services in Quebec; $10,000, New Brunswick; and $5,500 in Nova Scotia. Will the hon. Minister explain that?

Mr. CARLING. I believe it is what the road is actually entitled to, on the amount of mail carried, the same as other railways.

Mr. BLAKE. When did the owners of the Intercolonial Railway complain to the Government that the Government was treating them unjustly? Was it when the balance appeared on the wrong side?

Mr. CARLING. The agreement between the Departments is on the same basis as that with the Grand Trunk Railway.

Mr. BLAKE. Was there very much difficulty between the two Departments in coming to an agreement?

Mr. CARLING. The matter was treated in the same way as if the road was an independent company.

Mr. BLAKE. Which was Peter and which was Paul? When did the hon. gentleman come to the conclusion that the Government, for three years, had been doing gross injustice to the Intercolonial?

Mr. CARLING. I believe the hon. Minister of Railways found that this road was not properly treated, and should be treated in the same way as others.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman bring down the Order in Council referred to in the Estimates? One would like to see it, so as to apprehend how it was managed. It is a good way to make this revenue account of the Intercolonial Railway look better. Does the hon. gentleman propose to make a large show of profits or prevent a deficit by paying money for the carriage of the mails? Have any special payments or allowances been made to the Intercolonial in respect to occasions on which special trains are despatched with English mails.

Mr. CARLING. No special despatch is included in the arrangement.

Mr. BLAKE. Is that the same with the Grand Trunk Railway?

Mr. CARLING. I believe the Grand Trunk does get a small special rate.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I would like to call the attention of the hon. Postmaster-General to the post office in St. John suburb, Quebec, with reference to the increased salary of the present over the former incumbent. The office was filled formerly by a person named Tremblay, whose salary was about $500 a year, without any allowance for rental. I see by the return, on page 24, that the salary of the present incumbent is something like $1,000 over that of the previous postmaster with the allowance for fuel, light and rental. Some information should be given us on this point.

Mr. CARLING. He gets paid in the usual way, by commission for services rendered. If there is anything now allowed for increased accommodation it is because there has been increased business. The salary is altogether regulated by the receipts of the office.

Mr. CASGRAIN. If I am not mistaken, 40 per cent. is allowed?

Mr. CARLING. Yes.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The amount collected this year was $2,384.38. The salary paid him would necessitate the collection of $3,176.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN (Translation). The hon. member may see on page 84 of the appropriations for this year, that five quarters are included in the amount of $1,588; and then there are the arrears which have been granted to the postmaster, whose salary has not been regularised. The whole forms an aggregate of $1,588. This includes, not only the salary for a year, but the salary for a year and a quarter, besides the arrears which were due to him.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation). What would then be the exact amount of his salary?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN (Translation). The amount of salary is not indicated here. The hon. member had better ask the exact amount of salary for the year. Then, if business has increased, it has probably become necessary to give a larger office, and, consequently, to make a special allowance for that purpose. At all events, if the hon. member wishes to know the exact amount, all he has to do is to ask for it, and it will be given.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I prefer to make my remarks in English in order that the whole House may understand me. The former postmaster, Mr. Tremblay, for some cause still unknown, was dismissed, at least his services were dispensed with, and he was replaced by the present incumbent in the office. Formerly the service was performed at a very cheap rate, but now it appears that the present incumbent, Mr. Demers, who is, by the way, a supporter of the present Government, has been lucky enough to get the office and also lucky enough to get a very good salary for it. I would ask my hon. friend, therefore, to give me on Concurrence the exact amount of the annual salary that he has received up to the present time, also the amount of arrears that has been paid to him, so that we may know what his salary is this year, and what has been paid him for the previous year. It is impossible for us to ascertain these two items when they are lumped together as they are here.

Mr. CARLING. I shall be glad to furnish the hon. gentleman with the information before Concurrence.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I wish now to call attention to the St. Roch Division. Speaking only from information I have received, the amount of work done in that office is nearly as large as that done in the St. John's suburbs, and the salary and allowance for the St. Roch department are much less than they should be. I do not see why such an inequality exists in rent and in salaries.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Some time ago two deputations waited upon me asking for the establishment of a new post office in the St. Roch's suburbs, that is to say, in Quebec East. I stated to the deputation that they could not expect to have a second post office in the city of Quebec, where there was already a very good one. I told them they could not expect to have a second post office built at the expense of the Dominion, but if the postmaster there would furnish proper accommodation—because the accommodation he has now is not convenient or proper—with the sanction of the Postmaster-General to whom I referred the matter, that then the question of increasing the amount for rent would be considered by the Postmaster-General, and that this, with the increased rent given to him by the postmaster of the locality, they would have a good post office and proper accommodation. As to the salary, it is the same as in St. John suburbs; it is based on the same principle.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Do I understand the salary is entirely composed of a percentage on the amount collected?

Mr. CARLING. On the receipts and the accommodation of course.

Mr. WELDON. I would call the attention of the hon. Minister to the manner in which the mail service has been carried out between St. John and Digby. As I understood the contract, the parties were to provide a boat in summer, and another one in winter, adapted to winter navigation. During the winter before last a boat called the Scud was put on, but she was lost last year, and this winter there has been a little boat put on called Hiawatha. I am informed, and I know, that she is unable to perform the service on account of being too small. Considerable inconvenience is occasioned from the want of adequate communication between western Nova Scotia and St. John. The Minister's attention having been called to the fact, I trust he will compel the contractors to perform their contract, by having a proper boat placed on the route.

Mr. CARLING. No representation has been made to me on the subject, but I shall be glad to enquire into the service with a view to have any defects remedied.

Mr. VAIL. I am very glad the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) has called the attention of the Postmaster-General to this service, for, otherwise, I should have felt it incumbent upon myself to have done so. Fifteen or twenty years ago, long before Confederation, we had good steamers of five or six hundred tons running across the bay in winter. Last year, however, in consequence of the company having the contract not owning a proper steamer for winter service, they placed on the route a vessel of 120 tons, to run across the bay three times a week. She has been in Digby harbor three or four days at a time, and passengers have been detained from proceeding to St. John to transact important business, and in some cases they made the long railway journey round, rather than cross the bay in that steamer. I do not think the people of Nova Scotia should be placed in a worse position under Confederation than they occupied fifteen years ago.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. We have railways now.

Mr. VAIL. It is true there are railways, but it is hardly worth while for passengers to take a railway journey of 250 or 300 miles, when they should be able to cross the bay, a distance of thirty-five or forty miles, in two or three hours. I hope the Minister will look into this matter, and see that we obtain the accommodation to which, I think, we are fairly entitled.

Resolutions to be reported.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and (at 12:15 o'clock a.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

WEDNESDAY, 9th May, 1883.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

THE CONSOLIDATED RAILWAY ACT.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER, in introducing Bill (No. 127) further to amend the Consolidated Railway Act, 1879, and to declare certain lines of railway to be works for the general advantage of Canada, said: This is a short Bill, and will be printed immediately and put into the hands of hon. gentlemen, when I will offer explanations in relation to the various points that it touches. I may say it mainly embraces the points that have been considered in the Railway Committee, and in which there is a consensus of opinion that the Consolidated Railway Act should be amended.

Bill read the first time.

SUPPLY—ENGLAND'S COMMERCIAL POLICY.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Mr. McNEILL. Before you leave the Chair, Mr. Speaker, I beg the permission of the House to say a word or two upon a subject to which I am almost obliged to refer. Sometime ago, I ventured to assert that England was an exception to the general rule, that, during the last few years, all the countries of the world had been visited by a wave of prosperity. My statement was received by hon. gentlemen opposite apparently with some amusement, it was received with laughter, and at the time I was not exactly certain what the cause of that emotion might be. I was not sure whether at the time hon. gentlemen opposite were laughing at the fact, or were merely laughing because they were in ignorance of the fact. I had observed that early in the Session they had received, with somewhat rapturous applause, the statement that there had been a greater number of failures in Canada this year than last year; and I was for a short time doubtful whether they were not extending the same patriotic regard to the manufacturers and traders of the Mother Country that they seemed to entertain for the traders of their own country, and, therefore, as I said, I was a little doubtful of the exact significance of the emotion manifested by hon. gentleman opposite. But subsequently a speech was delivered upon the National Policy by my old friend the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), and it then became very evident what the meaning of the laughter was on the other side of the House. It was then very clear that the emotion was produced, not because they were enjoying the fact, but because they were in ignorance that such was the fact. My hon. friend, in his speech, thought it necessary to refer for nearly an hour to this matter, and endeavored to persuade the House and the country that the assertion was incorrect that I had made, namely, that England had not been visited by this great wave of prosperity of which we have heard so much. I thought that the speech of my hon. friend, considering the very limited horizon within which hon. gentlemen opposite view this matter, the very low standpoint from which they view the whole subject, was a very good speech. My hon. friend, however, referred to some matters which I thought were not quite in point. He gave us some historical references to the bread riots which had occurred in England some fifty years ago, and he quoted also an extract from Sydney Smith, which I confess I had not met with before, and which I thought was very much in point, as emphasising the fact that England had built up her industries under protective duties as high as 22 per cent. However, he proceeded to prove what I think no one on this side of the House would think of denying or controverting, that since England adopted the policy of free imports she had been very prosperous; we all admitted that. But he ought to have gone a little further, he ought to have endeavored to prove that England was prosperous to-day; his Free Trade principles ought to have carried him a little further even than that, and induced him to prove, not only that England was prosperous to-day, but that she was more prosperous than any other country in the world. We all know very well that England has been the only faithful among the faithless; she is the only country that carries out in its integrity the principle of one-sided Free Trade. I may just remark, before I pass on, that there is no question of Free Trade involved, because trade is selling as well as buying, and we cannot have Free Trade where there is not free selling. However, England being the only country that carries out strictly this policy of free imports, my hon. friend ought to have proved that she was much more prosperous than any of those countries that are weighed down, trammelled, and impeded in the race by this fallacious policy of Protection to native industries. I think that he had a glimmering idea himself of something of that kind, and I thought that he was going to make some attempt in that direction. I must say that he approached his task very gallantly; he hurled hundreds of millions at our heads, and he told us that he would prove this proposition by figures that he triumphantly declared the mind could not grasp. However, he did succeed in proving that England had, as I have said, prospered since she had adopted the policy of free imports. He said, however, that she had prospered more than any other country in the world; that the development of her trade, which had been very great, had been greater than that of any other country in the world, and that it was only in a country which had adopted Free Trade that such development could take place. So far as that proposition is concerned, I must take leave to differ from the hon. gentleman, and I propose to prove that, in making that proposition, he was in error. He took a period of twenty years to compare the trade of the two countries. I think that was not altogether a fair basis of comparison, because, as the hon. gentleman knows, during a very considerable part of that period—I think it touched upon five years—the United States were afflicted with the greatest civil war the world has ever seen. The hon. gentleman well knows, and the House is well aware, that the whole industrial condition of the United States, if I may use the expression, was dislocated by that war, in which some million of lives were lost, and hundreds of millions worth of property destroyed. For years the trade of the country was crippled on account of it, and it has not recovered from it to-day. For that reason I think I may fairly say this is not a fair comparison to make between the trade of the two countries; but I am quite willing to humor the hon. gentleman, and to consider the trade of the two countries during the period he himself has selected. In the first place, I would remind the House that England started in the race with her trade something like five times the volume of that of the United States, £392,000,000 sterling being the trade of England, and $379,000,000 being that of the United States; in other words, England had a start of something like £116,000,000 sterling; and in comparing the relative trade of the two countries during that period, it will be necessary to bear that fact in mind. There is another fact which must be borne in mind in comparing the trade of the two countries during that time. We must recollect that any considerable increase in the volume of the manufactures of England, implied an increase of exports; but in the United States that is not the case, because at the commencement of the race her manufactures were in their infancy, and did not command their own market, and they had to overcome that leeway, so to speak. In order to show how much the manufacturing industries of the United States could advance without there being an increase of exports, I point out that the quantity of Bessemer steel manufactured in the United States in 1871, was only 19,000 tons, while, in 1881, it reached 3,500,000 tons; and yet, notwithstanding this fact, they exported last year only 1,000 tons of rails, showing the enormous development that can take place in the manufactures of a new country like the United States, without any corresponding increase in exports. The reason why this home demand is so great is, first, because they are obliged to meet the needs of their half continent which they have to supply; and, second, because of the great increase in the population of the United States, which increased 14,000,000 in that time more than that of England. That increase in population alone would make an enormous difference in the export trade, even supposing they had not been obliged to expend their energies in developing their country otherwise. With respect to the whole volume of trade, the figures are these: The whole volume of the trade of England at the commencement of this period, was £392,000,000 sterling, and last year it had increased to £694,000,000. The hon. member said £611,000,000, but it was £694,000,000; that is to say, upon £392,000,000, there had been an increase of £300,000,000; in other words, there had been an increase of about 80 per cent. in the trade of England during the period of twenty years which the hon. member selected for comparison. I quite admit that is a wonderful increase; but I deny that it cannot be exemplified and equalled, and I am about to show that it has been very much exceeded by the trade of the United States during that period. The whole volume of the trade of the United States at the commencement of that period was $379,000,000, and if it had increased at the same ratio as the trade of England had increased, it would, to-day, have amounted to $679,000,000. But what do we find to be the fact? The trade of the United States, to-day, is not $679,000,000, as it would have been if the increase had only been in the same proportion as that of England, but it is $1,544,000,000; that is to say, the whole volume of the trade of the United States during the very period which the hon. gentleman himself selected, has increased, not 80 per cent., but about 300 per cent., and that under the blighting influence of this fallacious policy of Protection. Having dealt with the whole volume of trade, and shown that, under Protection, the trade of the United States increased 300 fold in place of 80 fold, the increase of England's trade, I will now refer to the export trade, and I will take again the countries and the time which the hon. gentleman selected, and I will institute a comparison. Now, the export trade of England at the commencement of this period was £166,000,000 sterling, and it is, to-day, £297,000,000 sterling; that is to say, it has increased at just about the same rate as the whole volume of her trade did, because, although during the last decade the increase was much slower than it was at the beginning of the period, during the first decade the increase was more rapid than the increase of imports. The increase in her export trade was at the rate of about 80 per cent. Now, what was the increase in the export trade of the United States during that period? It has been, not 80 per cent., but from $190,000,000 to $902,000,000, or rather more than 400 per cent., in place of 80 per cent., as in the case of the trade of Great Britain. The hon. gentleman may say that a great portion of this increase in trade is in the products of agriculture, and that is true; but with regard to this matter I would just remark, in the first place, that those products have been fortunate enough to be protected in the United States, and, in the next place, that this is proof of the absurdity of the exclamation of my hon. friend, when he said that there were 50,000,000 of people manufacturing in the United States, competing with 35,000,000 who were manufacturing in England. It is very well known to the House, and to every one, that a very much larger proportion of the population of England is taken up with manufacturing than is the case in the United States; so that this objection falls to the ground. I will humor my hon. friend still further with regard to this matter. I will throw away altogether the exports of agriculture and of the forest, and leave out of consideration altogether the product of the labor of the great bulk of the people of the United States. I will compare the exports of the United States, exclusive of the products of agriculture and of the forest, with the whole exports of England; and then let us see what the figures are. Now, the exports of England, as I have stated, have increased 80 per cent., during this period which my hon. friend mentioned, and the exports of the United States, exclusive of agricultural exports, have, during this same period, increased from $59,000,000 to $181,000,000; that is to say, while the whole exports of England have increased at the rate of about 80 per cent., during the period which my hon. friend himself selected, during that same period the exports of the United States, exclusive of the products of agriculture, or of the forest, have increased not 80, but 200 per cent.; and this, notwithstanding the war to which I have referred, the increase of population, and the fact that her manufactures were at the start in their infancy, and had to make enormous strides to overtake the demands of their own markets. Even this is not a fair comparison; and I think I have gone a long way to make it fair for my hon. friend,—and for this reason: That the exports of England that I have spoken of, include her exports to her colonies, and it is very well known that her colonies are her best customers. The products of the country which has been punished by protective legislation during this period has had no colonies to buy her goods; therefore, this was an unfair comparison. However, I am willing to take it as it stands; but I may just show what an enormous advantage to England the possession of her colonies is. The falling off in the export of cotton from England with Germany, Holland, and Egypt, during the last ten years, has been 40 per cent., while with one of her colonies, India, the increase has been, during that period, 70 per cent.; so you see how extremely an unfair comparison this was for the protected country—but it is sufficient, I think, for my purpose. My hon. friend may say that the United States is a new country, and that there is something in that which has been beneficial. I do not desire to treat the hon. gentleman unfairly, and I will just refer to that matter also. If I have made my remarks at all clear, and if, at this late period of the Session, hon. gentlemen have been kind enough to listen to anything I have said, I think it is very clear that the fact of her being a new country is far from being an advantage to the manufacturers of the United States—just the opposite, it was necessary for these manufacturers to overtake the markets of that country to supply the home demand, they being in their infancy at the commencement of this race. But I will take a country which is not a new country, and which has been cursed by this policy of Protection. I will take England's nearest continental neighbor, France, and I will compare the conditions of the trade of France with that of England. Hon. gentlemen will recollect that France, too, has suffered during this period—this same period of 20 years—and has been also afflicted by a very great and destructive war by, most skilful diplomacy forced on France at a time when she was unprepared. Hon. gentlemen will recollect very well that this war was carried into the very heart of her territory, and that the whole country was devastated by it, and what its results were. That country, at the conclusion of this war, found that her armies had been swept away into captivity, that the very flower of her manhood had been decimated, that her fields, as I have said, had been devastated, and that her whole political fabric, if I may be excused the expression, had been shattered like glass; and not only so, but in addition to the sufferings which this war imposed upon her, and all the losses which such a war must necessarily entail upon her, there had been deliberately heaped upon her such a burden of debt, as the wisest statesman in Europe considered must crush her and cripple her resources for fifty years to come. There had been, in fact, imposed on that country a debt of $1,200,000,000, in addition to all the other losses which she sustained. Two of her most fertile and most valuable Provinces had also been torn away from her—and that was not all, because at the conclusion of this great war there was a blight, as everyone will recollect, to the vine in France. The vine was blighted, and in this way one of the principal sources of revenue was cut off from her. This was the condition of France at that time. Now, what is the condition of France to-day—this country which has been cursed by this policy of Protection. She is admitted by friend and foe to be one of the most solidly prosperous countries on the continent of Europe. That is the condition of things which has been brought about—by what sort of a policy? Was it brought about by the sort of happy-go-lucky-do-nothing-fly-on-the-wheel policy—of drift, which hon. gentlemen opposite pursued in their time? Was that the policy by which the statesmen of France produced this effect, and resuscitated and built up the industries of that country, which some ten or twelve years ago were so prostrate? Did these able statesmen say, like the hon. Minister of Finance of the late Government, that a man who said a Government could advance the interests of a country, knew nothing of what he was talking about? I think not. The policy adopted in that country was a strict policy of Protection, and we know, moreover, that it has become still more strict within the last two years, because the statesmen of France have utterly discarded the Treaty of Commerce with England, so that her statesmen, at all events, have not become dissatisfied with the results of a protective policy in that country.

Mr. THOMPSON. I rise to a question of order. I wish, Sir, to draw your attention to a habit which is in vogue in this House, and is sometimes carried to too great an extent. I refer to the throwing of paper. Last Session the hon. the First Minister drew the attention of the then Speaker to this habit, and for a time it ceased. It is again becoming prevalent, and while it may be a source of amusement to some hon. members it may lead to serious consequences. I for one will not hold myself accountable for any mischief that may occur at my hands if I am suddenly struck in this way. My temper may be aroused, and cause me to do something which I would as quickly regret. I trust, Sir, you will exercise your influence, and see that this childish, unparliamentary, and undignified conduct is put a stop to.

Mr. McNEILL.

Mr. SPEAKER. I quite and entirely agree with the remarks which the hon. gentleman has made with regard to the practice of throwing paper in the House. It is a most unparliamentary, unbecoming, and undignified habit, which I have endeavored heretofore to put a stop to, and I have asked hon. gentlemen to desist from that practice. Hon. members who have been in this House for some time will remember that some years ago an accident, which was very nearly being a serious one, happened one evening from this practice; and it is of the utmost consequence that it should not be indulged in. I hope that it will at least be diminished and put a stop to altogether, and I ask hon. gentlemen to assist me in having it put a stop to.

Mr. McNEILL. I am sorry to see that the trade of France is very seriously interfering with that of the Mother Country at the present time, and that at least two large industries, which formerly were very flourishing in England, which gave employment to a vast number of people and produced a great deal of wealth, have been very seriously crippled and almost destroyed by the competition produced under this wretched Protective policy. I refer to the silk industry and the sugar refining industry. I find that the exports of refined sugar from France to England, are to-day, greater than the whole exports of refined sugar from England to all the rest of the world. The whole value of the exports of refined sugar from England are £1,218,000 sterling; from France to England, exports were £1,341,000 sterling; and France, to-day, exports five times as much refined sugar as England does.

Mr. DAVIES. Does that include taffy?

Mr. McNEILL. That includes everything. The silk industry in Coventry has almost entirely disappeared—the looms are silent and idle to-day. I call the attention of the House to some facts with regard to the woollen industry which is one of England's staple manufactures. I find, from the Pall Mall Gazette of the 3rd of March, 1882, that England exported to France £3,000,000 sterling worth of manufactured woollen goods, while France exported to England £4,500,000—that is to say, France actually exports one-half as much more to England as England, sends to France. With regard to manufactured goods, I find that France exports of these goods to England and which directly compete with England's manufactured goods in the English market, £20,000,000 sterling worth, while England exports to France less than £9,000,000. This is a fact which shows the effect of the policy of Protection as compared with the policy of Free Trade between two old countries in Europe which lie alongside one another. My hon. friend said, when he was comparing the trade of England and the United States, that the large figures which represented this trade could not be grasped by the mind, and he said that they might be somewhat misleading, and he would take some particular instances. He referred to the cotton industry, and he said that the exports of English cotton were £70,000,000 sterling, and he said of that £70,000,000 a large proportion went to the United States. I know the hon. gentleman well enough to be sure that he would be the last person in the world to make such a statement, unless he believed it to be the case; but I beg to inform him that he is entirely mistaken, and I will give him an authority which he will not gainsay—I refer to Mr. Chamberlain, President of the English Board of Trade, and the ablest representative of the Manchester school in that country. He said, on the floor of the House of Commons, that the export of cotton from England to the United States was not £70,000,000, and not a very large proportion of £70,000,000, but only £3,500,000. I find, by the Trade and Navigation Returns, so far as I can make them out after looking into the matter very carefully, that the exports for the last year were only £1,750,000. If you allow for the difference of population, you will find there is an export of 1½ millions worth of cotton from the United States to England, against £1,750,000 from England to United States. And if you take into consideration the different circumstances of the two countries, if you recollect that this was one of the staple manufactures of England, while the American manufacturers were in their infancy at the commencement of this period, if you recollect the enormous growth of their population, and that these importations of $1,125,000 were in direct conflict with the manufacturers of England in their own market, while the importation into the United States did not mean anything of the kind, but only that the manufacturers of the United States could not overcome the demand for these goods within their own market, the fact is a very significant one. The hon. gentleman refers to the woollen industries, and with respect to them I shall take him on his own ground. He says that England sends to the United States some £11,000,000 sterling worth of woollen goods. I wish to inform my hon. friend that he is entirely mistaken. Mr. Chamberlin says that from different countries the United States imports about that amount; and according to the Trade and Navigation Returns, the United States imported from England last year only some $2,800,000 worth. Now, during the latter part of the twenty years to which my hon. friend refers, there has been a most extraordinary development in the woollen industries of the United States, while these industries in England are in a very unsatisfactory condition. During five years the importations of woollen goods from England to the United States have decreased from $50,000,000 to $25,000,000; and during that time, while these industries were being so rapidly developed in the United States, prices were diminishing, and the quality of the goods was improving. Mr. Mitchell, one of the members of the Bradford Chamber of Commerce, and one of the judges of woollen fabrics at the Centennial Exhibition, says, of the worsted industries of the United States, that "the manufacture of the United States is of comparatively recent origin, but it has made very rapid progress during the last ten or twelve years, the high Tariff having stimulated its development." That is the evidence on this question of one of the best authorities of England. The condition of things in England, as I have said, is so unsatisfactory that while Germany, Holland, and the United States, in 1872, took £22,000,000 worth of woollen goods from England, in 1880, they took only £7,000,000 worth. The Pall Mall Gazette, in March of last year, said that these industries were in a most unsatisfactory condition, and this year it says the same thing; and you will find, if you refer to any of the trade journals in England, that there is a complaint, throughout the length and breadth of the land, of the unsatisfactory state of the woollen industries there. The imports of woollen manufactured goods are increasing in England under Free Trade, while they are diminishing in the United States under Protection. The imports into England during the three years 1869-71 were £3,500,000, and in the three years 1878-81, when trade was dull, the imports had actually increased to £6,500,000, during the very time that the imports of the same class of goods into the United States had fallen off 50 per cent. Now, at Bradford, the centre of the woollen industries in England, there was, in 1881, a petition signed in the course of a few days by 10,000 people, praying the Government to investigate the whole question of the trade relations of England with foreign powers, simply owing to the miserable condition of the woollen industries and the half starving condition of the working population there; and the Economist, one of the most reliable trade journals in England, referring to the unsatisfactory condition of the linen and jute industries during the last twelve months, incidentally alludes to the cotton and woollen trades, and this is what it says:

"It is, on the whole, better this year than it was last year, but it was still far from satisfactory."

My hon. friend also speaks of the iron and steel industries, and he says that these industries have been in such an unsatisfactory condition in the United States under Protection that they have had to import a great deal of iron and steel from England. Now, if there is any one thing more than another which has proved the beneficial effect of Protective duties, it is the development of the iron and steel industries of the United States. These industries, during the ten years of the period my hon. friend speaks of, have increased 100 per cent. in the United States, and only 17 per cent. in England. The United States are, to-day, the largest manufacturers of Bessemer steel in the world. In 1870, they manufactured only 19,000 tons; in 1877, they had increased their manufacture to 775,000 tons; and, according to the best computation that can be made, it is computed that their present annual manufacture is something like 3,250,000 tons. The capital invested in iron manufacture in the United States has increased 90 per cent. during the past ten years. The competition that the English manufacturers of iron and steel have to endure in the Canadian market, is a sufficient proof of what the effect of the Free Trade policy has been. If my hon. friend will turn to the Trade and Navigation Returns, he will find, notwithstanding the policy adopted by the hon. Finance Minister, notwithstanding the care taken to give every advantage to English manufactures, the United States manufacturers are killing the trade of the English manufacturers in our markets in thirty-three or thirty-four lines of iron and steel goods. The same thing has occurred in Australia; and I have extracts, with which I shall not trouble the House, from statements made by some of the most influential members of the Committee of Judges at the Centennial Exhibition, showing that the United States had at that time become a most dangerous and most formidable rival to England in those industries to which the hon. gentleman referred. In Australia we find the same thing occurring, that the iron and steel manufacturers of the United States are cutting out the manufacturers of the Mother Country there. In the export trade the volume of exports from England to the United States has fallen off in the most extraordinary way during the last ten years. It has fallen off in the matter of woollen goods, to which my hon. friend refers, to the extent I have mentioned; it has fallen off in flax, from £21,000,000 to £13,000,000; in cotton, from £27,000,000 to £10,000,000; in iron and steel, from £46,000,000 to £6,000,000; in silk industries, from £18,000,000 to £3,000,000. Even Mr. Mundella, who, I think, my hon. friend will admit is sufficiently good authority, speaking at Sheffield in 1873, said:

"America is not only supplying her own country with goods, but is exporting her manufactures to such an extent that she has become a powerful rival of England."

Quotations of the same kind could be multiplied indefinitely. On the floor of the House of Commons, Mr. Ritchie called attention to the fact that there had been a decrease in the whole export trade from England of 30 per cent. from 1872 to 1880, and Mr. Hurlbert, whose work I have here, calls attention to the fact that during the last twelve years there has been a decrease in the exports from England to Germany of 33 per cent.; to Holland, 36 per cent.; to the United States, 23 per cent. In the matter of cotton yarns there has been a falling off with Germany from £6,000,000 to £1,500,000. The volume of trade during that time has increased in England, 21 per cent.; while in Holland, Belgium, France and Germany, the increase has been 57, 51 and 39 per cent., and in the United States, 68 per cent. during that time; or, in the United States the volume of trade increased three times that of England. In the staple industries of England, there has been rather a surprising increase in the import of her own staple goods during two years, from 1878 to 1880, averaging from 25 to 30 per cent.

in cottons, 20 to 25 per cent. in woollens, and 30 to 40 per cent. in iron. Now, my hon. friend took exception to my having said that England had not been blest with this wave of prosperity with which all the other countries have been blest; but he quoted not one figure, not one dictum, to disprove the truth of that statement. I will not weary the House with quoting figures on this subject, but I will quote evidence, which even my hon. friend cannot gainsay, to prove the absolute correctness of my statements. I will quote from what Mr. Gladstone, who, I suppose, is a reasonably good authority, said on this subject in 1881, on the floor of the House of Commons, when producing his Budget Speech, he being then Chancellor of the Exchequer. At the very time when hon. gentlemen opposite were talking about the great wave of prosperity from which all countries were benefiting, he said of Free Trade England:

"The revenue is just beginning to recover from a serious depression. The House will perceive from the figures I have made, that the impressions current in some quarters regarding the degree in which the revenue has revived, are more sanguine than the facts have warranted. There is upon the whole a beginning of recovery; but I do not think it will be judicious to describe it as more than a beginning."

Then he makes this remark further on, in the middle of his speech:

"We make ground at such rate and for such a long time that people begin to believe we shall never cease to make ground: but I wish Parliament to understand that we are not making ground at present."

That is 1881.

"I speak of the last few years, and without reference to party differences, and I say we are rather losing than making ground."

What was the condition of Canada then? We all recollect very well when the hon. Minister of Finance came down in 1881 and declared here, on the floor of Parliament, that he had a surplus of some $4,300,000; that the industries of Canada had been raised from the point of depression and despair to a condition of such prosperity as surprised not only this House and the country, but the civilized world. We heard the statements made on the other side that this was merely a result of the great wave of prosperity; but that wave of prosperity was not bearing England on its crest, for, at that time, she was in the trough of the sea. Mr. McIvor, of Birkenhead, said, on the floor of the House of Commons, at that very time:

"He believed that ere long a cry would come from the working classes of the country for a reversal of our present policy."

What did Mr. Gladstone say in 1882? He said:

"With respect to the general financial condition of the country, I will only say that essentially the position of expenditure is that it is a somewhat growing expenditure; and with respect to the revenue, that it is a somewhat sluggish revenue."

This was in 1882.

"It is as much as it has been during the last two years."

We know what it was in 1881.

"It is very remarkable that although employment is generally active and although the condition of trade cannot be said to be generally satisfactory, yet the recovery of the country from the point of extreme depression has been a slow and languid recovery, especially as far as regards the action of that recovery upon the revenue of the country."

That year the hon. Finance Minister declared a surplus of over $6,000,000. And Mr. Childers, in his Budget of 1883, says:

"Although many items of revenue have been for a long time sluggish, they are now rising."

Only "rising!" A little further on he says:

"I am bound to say that, having looked well through the revenue, as well as the expenditure, I cannot find that the Exchequer has as yet received anything in other directions, to make up for the great fall in the revenue from spirits."

Sir Stafford Northcote said:

"It is very satisfactory to find that the condition of the country is not so bad as we had some reason to think."

Mr. McNEILL.

And the Times, on the 6th April, instant, said:

"It was known that the surplus, of which we had to dispose, though fairly satisfactory, as a proof that the country was not unprosperous, was, as a matter of fact, a small one."

The London Times of the next day said:

"Without in the least desiring to take a pessimist view of our national condition, we venture to say that it is not one which dispenses us from strict caution and economy. In some respects it may be described as precarious. * * * Though the volume of our trade remains, the profit has been reduced."

Mr. Rylands, in bringing forward his motion in the House, with regard to the national expenditure, referred to the unsatisfactory state of trade, and enforced his argument in favor of economy by a reference to the unsatisfactory condition of agriculture. Mr. Smith, late First Lord of the Admiralty, also referred to the depressed state of trade and agriculture. I may say that there has been a falling off of the volume of trade of England for the first three months of the present year. Now, I think, that under these circumstances, it is not necessary for me to say more to prove that the condition of England has not been one of prosperity at a time when hon. gentlemen opposite have been declaring that the whole world was prosperous, as an explanation of the fact that Canada was prosperous. My hon. friend knows very well that there has been a great reaction in England against this one-sided Free Trade.

Mr. DAVIS No, no.

Mr. McNEILL. In support of that statement, I will give an authority which I think no hon. gentleman on the other side of the House will gainsay. I will read an extract from a speech delivered by Mr. Gladstone in the House of Commons, on the occasion of the introduction of a motion by Mr. Ritchie, calling for an investigation of the whole trade relations of England with foreign powers. Mr. Gladstone said:

"Unfortunately the knowledge of the fact that proposals for a Committee of Inquiry had been supported by the late leader of the House of Commons could not be confined within these walls or within these shores. They would go abroad, and how would the right hon. gentleman face the consequences of his success (Ministerial cheers.) Did he not know very well that the knowledge of such a vote going throughout England and the civilized world at once became the strong argument in favor of Protection and hostile tariffs? (Oh! and cheers.) The advocates of Protection would then be able to say that the delusion of Free Trade, even in its very stronghold, was shaken to its base, and that one of the great parties in the country by the mouth of its leader admitted that it had become a subject for solemn inquiry. (Cheers.)"

Now, Mr. Gladstone, I suppose, can explain away his own words as well as any other person, probably better; but at all events the fact remains immovable that a proposal for an investigation into the question as to whether the policy of one-sided Free Trade was good or bad for England, was made in the House of Commons in England, and was supported by the leader of one of the great parties of the State; and this fact also remains, that eighty-nine members of the House of Commons supported that motion against 140 who were opposed to it. My hon. friend knows that while he himself was in England, only a few years ago, it would have been impossible for any member to get up on the floor of the House of Commons and suggest such an investigation and obtain a hearing. It certainly proves what the feeling in England is, and that the feeling in England is growing that this delusion of Free Trade is shaken to its base.

Motion agreed to; and the House again resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

175. Geological Survey..... $60,000.00

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. At the time the vote for Civil Government was up, I explained that the whole vote for this branch of the service, last year—some $30,000—was included in the expenses of the Department. By a new arrangement, the cost of the Geological Survey branch of the Department is charged under the head of Civil Government. In consequence of the rapidly increasing development of the North-West, it is thought that we should properly come before Parliament and ask them for a larger sum than has hitherto been voted for the purpose of the survey alone. I think some hon. gentleman opposite asked in what direction the survey was to be made during the year, and I shall lay upon the Table of the House, with all possible speed, a return by which hon. gentlemen may see where the work is to be done. The work proposed to be done during the present year lies in seven different districts: 1. At the Rocky Mountains, starting at the boundary line; 2. On the South Saskatchewan and a little further east; 3. A little to the north of that, and all the western country; 4. The Rainy River district; 5. The Province of Quebec—the Gaspé district and the south bank of the St. Lawrence; 6. New Brunswick; 7. Nova Scotia. I beg to lay on the Table a map showing the progress of the geographical survey. The officers who have charge of the surveys during the coming season are as follows:—Dr. G. M. Dawson, Mr. A. Bowman, and Mr. R. G. McConnell, in British Columbia and the North West; Dr. Bell and Mr. Cochrane, in the Lake of the Woods district and Western Ontario; Mr. Ellis and Mr. Low, in South Eastern Quebec—Schickshock Mountains; Mr. W. Broad and Mr. McInnes, in New Brunswick; Mr. H. Fletcher, Mr. McMillin, Mr. Brunell, and Mr. Faribault, in Nova Scotia.

Mr. CHARLTON. I observe that, out of a total of $64,553, only $18,000 was expended for exploration, the salaries of the staff amounting to $25,627. The most important work of the branch is that of exploration, and the corps seems to be composed much like a company composed of a captain, sergeant, corporal, and two privates. I am glad that the amount for exploration purposes is to be increased.

Mr. CASEY. I am glad the amount of money to be voted for actual field-work is going to be so largely increased. I urged last year, as did other hon. members on this side of the House, that more money should be devoted to exploration work, especially in the North-West. I urged that, although exploration in comparatively well-known parts of Old Canada was useful in a national sense, yet, as the land in most of the districts is now in private hands, explorations were practically an advertisement for the parties who owned the lands and mines; but that the chief energies of the survey should be devoted to exploring and making known to the world the great territory which still belongs to the people of Canada, the North-West. I wish to call the attention of the Minister to still another point, namely, that sufficient attention has scarcely been bestowed to one of the purposes for which this survey was originally instituted. It is called the Geological and Natural History Survey of Canada. Hitherto, insufficient attention has been paid to the subject of natural history. Of course it is exceedingly important to know what is underground, but it is of even more pressing importance, as regards immigration, to know what is on the top of the ground, to know what is grown naturally in every part of our territory. The object of geological exploration is to develop mines and products, such as stone, phosphate, &c.; but as our territory is chiefly agricultural, I think at least half the money and energy of the Department should be devoted to explorations respecting botany and natural history, and it is more important to know what are the fauna and flora than to know what are the minerals. A much wider extent of territory can be explored as regards its natural history than as regards its geology. The latter is a very slow business except in river valleys, but a very large extent of country can be surveyed in a year in regard to its natural history. We have all read the the works of the active explorers of the North-West, and derived such information from the description of the capabilities of the country. When we read, that in the Peace River district such plants grow naturally which we know flourish in Ontario, Quebec, and other Provinces, we can form an idea of the climate and its capability for grain growing. It has been considered that in estimating the grain-growing capacity of a country, it was necessary to take account of the average temperature for the year; but it is now asserted that it is only the temperature during the summer months that has an important bearing in regard to cereals, and I think there is great force in the assertion, and that it is borne out by the fact that in districts of the North-West where the temperature falls to 50 or 60 degrees below zero in winter, cereal plants flourish naturally which flourish here. The inference is strong that if such be the case, cereals, to which we attach so much importance, will also grow. The fauna of the country is also deserving of more attention than it has received. The animal life of new districts should be carefully observed with a view to stock raising in the future. It is reasonable to suppose that when the buffalo and mustang obtain sufficient pasture during the summer, domestic cattle would do so, and the habitat should be carefully studied. I think, hitherto, on account of the great genius of Sir William Logan, who was an eminent geologist, and put so much genius and energy into the work, the second object of the survey, which should not be second in importance, has been too much neglected, and it is time the Department should devote more energy and more money to the study of natural history. In this connection I may mention that I have seen a discussion taking place in the papers with respect to a valuable collection of plants and birds said to be in existence in this country, in the possession of Professor Macoun, and which it is proposed to purchase for the Geological and Natural History Museum. I am sorry to notice from some letters which have appeared in the newspapers that there is some danger of this splendid collection going to the United States, as he has received offers from that quarter. It is stated that this collection contains 10,000 specimens of the birds and plants of the North-West; and we all know what opportunities the Professor has had for studying these matters and collecting such specimens; how far and wide he explored the North-West Territories, and what a collection he had the opportunity of bringing together. If any proof of the value of his services in this connection were required, it might be found in the fact that the collection of 2,500 plants which he sent to the Paris Exhibition in 1878, and were afterwards presented by the Government to the museum at Kew, is said, by Mr. Joseph Hooker, to be the most valuable individual collection of specimens that ever came into that museum. If so, I think it follows that his collection of 10,000 specimens must be something of surpassing value, which should not be allowed to go out of this country at the expense of the paltry consideration of a few hundred dollars, or $2,000 for that matter. Even if it were not of surpassing value, the fact stares us in the face that if it goes out of the country it will almost be impossible to replace it. Certainly to do so we would have to send another explorer of equal ability, having equal opportunities, to make such a large collection. I would strongly urge on the Department the desirability of finding out what Prof. Macoun will take for his collection, which, I believe, is not large. We know that such collections obtain high prices in the States, and I would like to know whether any negotiations, respecting this collection, are on foot. As to maps of the North-West, I do not want to be too critical, especially as to the labors of a scientific department; but it does seem to me that maps published by the Geological Department, regarding the North-West, are too insufficient in detail to be of much practical service. I have seen maps of Cape Breton and Nova Scotia, under exploration, made in the greatest detail for publication, and while it might not be possible to go into such detail with respect to the North-West, more details should be furnished, if this would not entail too great expense. These maps should show not merely the geographical features, but also the natural products as they at present exist, in some detail, such as the kinds of grasses, and shrubs, &c., which grow in each district. This might be effected by means of an index and reference numbers. I infer from the hon. gentleman's statement, that the coal lands are to receive special attention this year. Of course, a great number of these lands have passed out of our hands, and half of them in the railway belt, at least, are owned by the Quebec and Occidental Railway; but still it is of great importance undoubtedly to explore these lands. I hope that the mistake which occurred during the past year, of having a certain number of holes bored at specified depths in certain parts of the country, will not be repeated. A couple of years ago, in the Souris District, holes 200 feet in depth were bored at arbitrary points. At one of them south of the River Valley I believe coal was found, but the next hole though made on the plateau 200 feet above, was only bored to the same depth, and consequently the coal bearing strata was not reached. If holes are bored for this purpose, I hope that they will be put down to the strata, where geologists expect to find coal.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne). Some three or four years ago, the hon. Minister will remember, I, in conjunction with the then representatives of Lunenburg and Queen's counties, in a letter to the Department, urged on him the importance of having the western section of Nova Scotia examined by the officers of the Geological Survey Department, and he then promised that this would be done as early as possible. I notice in this plan, that all the eastern section of Nova Scotia, including Cape Breton, has been examined and reported upon, very valuable reports and maps being prepared. That section has been fully surveyed by the officers of the Local Government during years gone by, when most valuable reports were prepared and submitted to the Mines Departments, and I would urge that, as early as possible, the western section of the Province, which, I believe, will yet be found to possess vast mineral wealth, will be surveyed by officers of the Department. I notice in this plan, that nearly all the Province of New Brunswick has been surveyed and reported upon, while it is proposed this year almost to complete the entire survey of that Province. I think that the officers of the Department in the past, have not done that justice to the western section of Nova Scotia which they seem to have done in other sections, and I, therefore, hope that the hon. gentleman will remember his promise, and have the western section surveyed as soon as possible.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. With respect to the remarks of the hon. member for Elgin (Mr. Casey), it is quite true that we ought to pay, if we had the money, full attention to the natural history of the country, both fauna and flora; but the main object of the Geological Survey, since it was first established, has been to define the geological position of the country, because that is the basis of the further enquiries which we hope to make by-and-by, but which we cannot make all at once. As to the fauna and flora, and the general character of the country for agricultural and other purposes, of course the general direction of the survey, the extent to which it will go, and so on, are left considerably in the hands of Dr. Selwyn, a man of the highest standing in the profession, as the hon. gentleman knows. He is a man of European and Australian reputation as well. When Sir William Logan, of whom the hon. gentleman has not spoken too highly, felt from his increasing age that he could not long remain at the head of the survey, he went to England for the purpose of obtaining the best possible man as his successor, and he was left with almost unlimited discretion in the matter. He consulted the leading authorities, including Sir Roderick Murchison, who was at the head of that branch of science in England, and, perhaps, the first geologist of the day, and on his recommendation, and that of Sir William Logan, Mr. Selwyn, the present Director General was selected. I believe he has fully justified the selection, for he is an admirable officer; and I think it would in some degree interfere with this system, if we were to interpose our own ideas upon scientific matters connected with the survey. The system has been kept up for years thoroughly well considering the limited means of the old Province of Canada at the time it was commenced. It has been followed with a great deal of perseverance and system, and as we are getting richer and the country is becoming more developed, Parliament can from time to time devote a larger sum for the purposes of a geological survey. As regards the further auxiliary duty connected with the natural history of the country, unless Parliament increases the vote very largely—perhaps more largely than the present Parliament would be inclined to vote or the people consent to give. So that we must be satisfied as they have been in the United States to limit in a great degree the duties of the geological survey to that branch only of the fiscal sciences which is the principal and chief object of the survey. By-and-by, I have no doubt, we can increase the vote and increase the area of the survey. I think it would be most likely—though I speak with a great deal of diffidence, because I do not profess to be a man much acquainted with the natural sciences—that, in order to fully carry out an enquiry into the natural history of the country and its capabilities of various kinds, apart from geology in its strict sense, we would have to have another branch. Dr. Selwyn, though an able geologist and a generally accomplished man, could not be expected to be an authority on all the other branches of natural science, or to be able to carry them into the field. I think, however, that a great deal of information has been incidentally obtained on the branches of which the hon. gentleman speaks, and we have also a very considerable amount of information given us on the rough field notes of the surveyors who travel in that country. There is, in these notes, a great deal of information about the soil, the capabilities of the country, &c.

Mr. CASEY. I hope the hon. gentleman did not understand me to cast any doubt on the scientific ability of Dr. Selwyn, who is, without doubt, a distinguished geologist. He certainly, however, could not have become so distinguished in that branch of natural science if he had devoted any considerable attention to other branches. I think that if the hon. gentleman holds the view that the other branches are intended by the Act to be only auxiliary he is mistaken. The Act establishes the survey as a natural history and geological survey, and I hold that for all practical purposes, for the development of the country and the attraction of immigrants, and the advertising of its capabilities abroad, natural history is not inferior in importance to the other branch. And I mean by natural history not merely the animal life of the country, but the investigation of all animal and vegetable products of the country for the purpose of ascertaining what may be propagated or cultivated with profit. The hon. gentleman says if we had money enough we might extend this branch, but at present we must devote ourselves to the geological branch. We are voting a large increased amount this year, and my contention is that a large share of this vote should not be devoted altogether to extending the geological surveys, but to instituting very considerable natural history exploration. The practical importance, or the commercial importance of geological survey is confined to a few districts where minerals are known or supposed to exist. The coal lands of the North-West, or of Nova Scotia, or in the mining districts about Rainy Lake, are all proper places for a geological exploration; but it makes very little difference to the intending settler what stratum underlies a particular part of the great plains of the North-West unless for the purpose of guessing what sort of soil is on top. But the plains of the North-West are very uniform, and a few borings a few hundred miles apart will settle the question of soil for large districts, and, in fact, it is always pretty well settled. We know what kind of soil we may expect a priori in any particular part of a district; but the most important thing for the settler to know is what he will grow upon the soil. He reasons that if plants grow there with which he is familiar in his own country, whether it be Europe or Old Canada, then the grains with which he is familiar will grow there too, and we know by experience that this reasoning is pretty correct. I do not complain of a geological survey being carried on where it is necessary; but I think, at the same time, that explorations in natural history should also be carried on, if we are to know what the country possesses, and what it will produce. We have all felt during the last few years that the lands of the North-West have been sold and given away in various ways, without a due appreciation of their value. Some idea of that value is now beginning to dawn upon all of us; but I do not think we shall have a proper idea of the value of these lands until we have such a survey as I have spoken of, as the law intends we should have, and as common sense dictates. With regard to directing the survey, the hon. gentleman says that he has not interfered with Mr. Selwyn, because he is a scientific man, and it would be like interfering with an expert. That is right enough. As to the other details of the work, he should not interfere with Mr. Selwyn as to the manner of surveying any particular neighborhood; but it is part of the policy of the Government to declare at what places the surveys should be made, and then to leave the director to conduct them in the proper manner which he has done. If it is the practice of the Government to place an expert at the head of the Department, and leave him to do whatever he chooses, the hon. gentleman could secure some land speculators in Winnipeg at very reasonable figures, if he would leave them to do the business of the Department without interference; and the work would be done thoroughly, but it does not follow that it would be properly done. Nor does it follow that because a man is a scientific man, he should know in what part of the country public policy requires surveys to be carried on; on the contrary, if a man is a scientific man, he is not likely to trouble himself about policy so much as about interesting scientific research. It might be a matter of great interest to him to know that Devonian strata existed at a certain place, without caring for the capabilities of the district for agriculture or stock raising; but that is not the interest of the Government, whose duty it is to find out what that country is good for; and I say that it is the duty of the responsible Minister of the Department to direct these surveys to be conducted with that view. It is quite true, if we should decide upon having a natural history survey, that Mr. Selwyn would not be qualified to direct it with the same efficiency that he does the geological branch. That is quite probable; but for that very reason the services of some man who is posted in natural history should be obtained; and I do not know anyone better qualified to conduct a natural history survey than Professor Macoun. If it is necessary to establish a separate branch, and I do not say it is, either Professor Macoun or some other man of experience in natural history, would be a very proper person to conduct it. Where would have been the "boom" in the North-West but for the explorations of Mr. Sandford Fleming, Mr. Horetzky, and others, whose reports advertised the capabilities of the North-West to the world? And it is by such explorations that we are going to learn the value of that country more than by geological explorations. I hope, therefore, that the hon. gentleman will reconsider this matter, and decide to undertake the kind of survey I have suggested.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not say that I left it altogether to the Director to make the selection. I said I left pretty much the direction of the surveys to him; but if the hon. gentleman will look at the work laid out for the year 1883-84, he will see that the Director has selected, after conference with the Government, that part of the country of most interest to the settler in the North-West.

Mr. CASEY. To the geologist?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; for coal and minerals. I forgot to answer the hon. gentleman about Professor Macoun's collection. Negotiations are now going on, and part of this vote is to be applied to the purchase of this collection, and $6,000 to the purchase of Mr. Hirschfelder's collection of the flora in the Indian country of the North-West.

Mr. BLAKE. For a long time I have entertained very strong opinions, which I have expressed in this House and elsewhere, of the importance of some such steps as my hon. friend Mr. Casey has suggested. Some efforts have been made, it is true, but in a desultory and perfunctory way, considering the importance of the question, towards increasing our knowledge of the soil and its products in the North-West. We have had the information contained in the surveyor's field notes; but, of course, surveyors, although habituated to observation from being in the country, are not trained in the various topics which would make their reports much more reliable than those of ordinary land prospectors, and the results so obtained must necessarily be deficient in accuracy and in precision. Professor Macoun was called upon to make a very rapid and necessarily cursory investigation of the country. Our present survey has been very much devoted to the question of geology. I am not saying one word against continuing; on the contrary, I agree in the wisdom of continuing our efforts towards increasing our geological knowledge of the country. What was done before Confederation is no measure of what is required now, because the Province of British Columbia, of enormous extent, and the whole North-West Territories of still vaster extent have been added, and we must make efforts which, compared with our former efforts, would be entirely disproportionate, if we come up to the exigencies of the occasion. So far as the North-West is concerned, that portion of the geological survey which is devoted to the ascertainment of the extent of the fuel supply, is as important as any other object. But I have long said that I believe with very great strength of conviction, that what we ought to do is to go very strongly into a natural history survey. Continue your geological explorations of those parts of the North-West which are attractive to geologists, and afford a fair scope for geological survey—and that geological survey should be thorough and exhaustive if it is to afford a permanent record of very great value—continue your geological explorations in the older Provinces; but let us send out two or three parties for a somewhat rapid, but still practical and thorough examination of the different sections of the North-West with a view to their natural history.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I suppose the hon. gentleman includes botany.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course; the flora and fauna and the physical conditions of the country, which are on the surface, and are important to the general public in learning what manner of land that is; what the barometer says, and the thermometer says; what can be gathered from those who have settled in the Hudson's Bay posts; the story of the past with reference to the cultivation of cereals and other things at these points. By taking up different sections of the country at sufficiently remote distances, and by ascertaining thoroughly what is to be ascertained on this subject, we would do something of note—to tell the world with authority and precision what there is in the North-West. Take the whole of the North-West district; take the Peace River district, that part of which some people think very highly. We ought to know more about it. We ought to be engaged in ascertaining the facts with reference to the duration of the seasons, to the period at which it is possible to sow and reap grain, whether the season is too short, whether the danger of frost is going to prevent the possibility of our cultivating cereal crops in that country, and what there is in it. I learn that of the vote which we supposed was for geological exploration, $6,000, or about one-tenth of it, are to be devoted to the purchase of Professor Hirschfelder's collection. That may be a very proper object. We learn, also, that an indefinite amount is to be devoted to the purchase of another collection. That may also be a very proper object; but the sum required for these two collections will seriously trench upon the amount applicable for the geological survey. No expenditure would be more likely than this to be remunerative and presently remunerative. We want to know what our property is composed of before disposing of the rest of it, and to promote the efficient settlement of the part we have sold. We want to be able to give, as rapidly as possible, more and more exact information as to the natural history, in the extended sense to which the hon. gentleman referred, as to the physical features of the country, than we have yet given. I would very cheerfully take the responsibility of submitting a further proposal for a well considered, thorough and rapid survey by two or three parties in different portions of the country—widely apart as to degrees of latitude and longitude—so that we may be able to say we give samples in different points of what the features of the country are, and what the prospects are for the finding by settlers of a pleasant country in which to settle.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am very much pleased with the tone of the hon. gentleman's remarks in regard to this survey. You, Mr. Chairman, who are an old Parliamentarian, will remember that the general opinion of the country in the old Province of Canada was rather averse to a survey, and that, time and again, we had almost to imperil our existence as a Government to carry the vote for the continuance of the Geological Survey. I quite agree with what the hon. gentleman has said. I know from the information given me by the Director General that this sum of $60,000 will be amply sufficient for the survey that can really be accomplished in the season of 1883. With regard to the more extended operations of this Department, we must rush things. If we are going in to consider how to prepare a methodical, thorough and scientific system of obtaining natural, botanical and atmospherical calculations, climatic changes, and so on, we must do so on a well considered, scientific system; and with the encouragement given me by the hon. gentleman it will be my pleasant duty to work out, with the assistance of men who understand the subject, some system in the enlarged sense of which the hon. gentleman speaks, and submit it to Parliament next Session.

Mr. CHARLTON. The matter under discussion is one of very great importance, and one in which I have taken great interest in the past. In 1873, a motion was moved in this House calling for a geological and geographical survey and exploration of the North-West. That motion was renewed on two subsequent Sessions, and, I believe, if the policy had been pursued that was asked, the country would have been vastly the gainer. The geographical exploration which has been fully explained by the hon members for West Durham and West Elgin, need not be expensive. In fact, it strikes me that geographical explorations should precede a geological survey. Nearly all the knowledge obtained of new countries—for instance the knowledge obtained of Africa—has been acquired in this way, namely, by explorations at the expense of private enterprise. Sir Samuel Baker, at his own expense, explored the Upper Nile, and discovered the Lakes Victoria Nyanza and Albert Nyanza. David Livingstone, the African traveller, on the salary of a missionary—and very low salary at that—explored South Africa during the sixteen years he spent there before his first return to England, and gave us all the information we really possess of that country. He removed the impression that the interior of Africa was a sandy waste, and laid bare the fact that it contained immense plains of great fertility. He discovered the Zambezi, and traversed the continent first to Angola on the west coast and then to the mouth of the Zambezi on the east coast, and afterwards, at the expense of £1,000 sterling per annum from the Royal Geographical Society, he pursued the investigations which resulted in so large an extension of our knowledge of Africa. Stanley, who explored the Congo from its upper waters to its mouth, did so at the expense of two newspapers; the cost of his explorations amounting to $50,000. The United States, at a very early period of its history, adopted this course of ascertaining the character of its new territories. Some fifty years ago an extensive expedition was formed, under the name of the Lewiston-Clark expedition. The staff of this expedition comprised some officers whose training at West Point well fitted them for work of this kind, and with a small force, consisting mostly of trappers, they traversed the country up the Missouri river, across the Rocky Mountains, explored Oregon, and made themselves familiar to a great extent with the geographical features of Oregon and Washington Territories, and what at present constitutes the territories of Dakota and Montana. This expedition cost a comparatively small sum of money. In 1842, the celebrated John C. Fremont fitted out a small expedition of a few soldiers and trappers; he discovered what is known as the interior basin, called the Great Basin, and made very valuable acquisitions to the knowledge of the United States of their great possessions. Now, a policy of that kind ought to be pursued with reference to the North-West. We know a great deal of the country now, a large amount of information has been obtained with reference to it, and the more we know of the country it seems the more we become convinced that we have a valuable possession there. Now, there are various parts of the North-West we want to know something about as speedily as possible. For instance, I suspect we might find that east of Hudson's Bay, the timber line extends much further north in that country than it does on the western side of Hudson's Bay, and it would be a matter of importance for us to know whether we have enormous timber resources in that country. It would cost a few thousand dollars to ascertain it, and I think the Government should lose no time in inaugurating a system of geographical exploration, so that as speedily as possible we should become possessed of a tolerably accurate knowledge of the outlines and capacities of the whole North-West.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I quite concur with the hon. gentleman as to the interesting nature of the region east of James' Bay. A geographical society in Quebec is now undertaking that work, and is engaged in examining, geologically Labrador and the country lying to the north of the Province of Quebec, and extending westward to James' Bay. The Province of Quebec has given a small grant, and we intend to ask Parliament, during the present Session, to aid the society in these explorations.

Mr. CHARLTON. I am very glad to hear the information. I consider that one of the most interesting fields of exploration we have left. It is an unknown land to us, and it is very likely to develop some very valuable resources in that country. Could the hon. Minister state what portion of this vote will be applicable to geological explorations, and how much we are to pay for the collection?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. These are the only purchases; all the rest will be for the geological survey, paying for its equipment, &c. The vote is double what it was last year.

Mr. CHARLTON. Another point is with reference to the publication of the Geological report. I see, in the Public Accounts for the year ending 30th June last, the sum of $11,241.87 for the publication of the Geological report, and I presume the hon. Minister will be in a position to inform us as to where this report is published, and as to the number of copies.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The report has always been published in Montreal. The Geological Department was stationed in Montreal, and as the report contains a great many scientific and technical terms, it was important that the proof reading should be under the direction of competent gentlemen whose interest and character were dependent upon the correct issuing of the report, and that has hitherto been done at Montreal. As to the number of copies, I really cannot tell the hon. gentleman; I will be able to tell him to-night.

Mr. CHARLTON. The necessity of publishing this report at Montreal no longer exists since the Department has been located in Ottawa, and it strikes me that since the Department has been removed to Ottawa the publication should also be done in Ottawa.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not suppose it is a matter of great interest to the House or country where the report is printed. It will be well printed, and printed at a reasonable rate, and I suppose that is all we care for. I am not at all sure that the present printing resources of Ottawa could get up that report.

Mr. BLAKE. The excuse always given for the printing of the Geological Report at Montreal was, that it should be printed where the Geological Survey was stationed, where the staff was, &c. I do not know whether that excuse was true or not, but if it be true—

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It was the excuse the hon. gentleman's Government gave at the time.

Mr. BLAKE. I say I do not know whether it was true or not; but if it was, as I suppose it was, it is impossible for the report to be printed in Montreal now, because the staff has been removed to Ottawa.

Mr. CHARLTON. It is quite evident that the publication of the report in Montreal, with the staff located in Ottawa, is inconvenient and delays the work; because we have not received that report yet, and probably will not receive it for some weeks. It ought to have been in the hands of the members of the House while we were discussing this item.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I may say to my hon. friend that I am very much afraid it would not be expedited by handing it over to all the printing strength in Ottawa that exists now.

Mr. CHARLTON. I understand the Department is printing about 5,000 copies at a cost of a little less than $2.50 each, which is certainly an extravagant price for a volume of that size. I think if we had the printing of that work done in Ottawa, and advertised for tenders and got it done by contract, instead of printing it at confidential rates, and 50 per cent. more than the price we could get it done for, I think the country would be the gainers. We could get the work done just as well, if not better, and we could have the volume in our hands at a much earlier period. This is part of a system that has grown up—I do not say who is responsible for it—of giving out printing without taking the precaution to advertise for tenders and get the work done by the lowest responsible bidder, and at the lowest possible price. It is a system that has cost the country a good deal of money. I do not suppose this book is done by tender; I suppose it is handed out to some printer—he may possibly be a friend of the Government—who does this work in Montreal, and may possibly make a very large sum of money out of it; I should judge that he does if he gets $2.50 for a volume of that size. I would suggest to the hon. Minister that in future he get the printing of this book done in Ottawa by the Government printer, and at contract rates, in order to secure despatch and a large saving of money.

Mr. CASEY. I have always supposed it was because we had a Government printer here that it was necessary to offer any excuse for having this printing done elsewhere. As to the inconvenience, I fancy it must be about as inconvenient to have the work done in Montreal when the Department is at Ottawa, as it would be to have the work printed in Ottawa and the Department in Montreal. It is just about as far from Ottawa to Montreal as it is from Montreal to Ottawa. But I would like to get some information out of the hon. Minister about this collection of Mr. Hirschfelder's, for which he says $6,000 is to be paid. I think he said that collection was made on the Indian lands, by which he means, I suppose, the lands not yet acquired from the Indians.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I really cannot tell the hon. gentleman over what area this botanical collection was made. It was on the recommendation and the valuation of Dr. Selwyn that the collection was purchased.

Mr. CASEY. Can the hon. gentleman say whether it is all botanical, or whether a part of it is Indian curiosities?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is purely a botanical collection. It is not an exactly parallel case to the one I have referred, and the price is four or five times as much as I have heard spoken of as the proper price of such collections. It is an immensely high price for Mr. Hirschfelder's collection. Professor Macoun has been offering his very cheaply indeed.

Mr. CHARLTON. I do not suppose the hon. First Minister can be supposed to be able to answer every question of detail, but there are one or two points on which I would like to get information. I see a sum of $3,795 was paid to G. M. Dawson; could the hon. Minister tell me where his field of exploration was last year? In what part of the Dominion was he engaged?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Dawson was along the Rocky Mountains. As the hon. gentleman knows, he is a most distinguished naturalist and geologist.

Mr. CHARLTON. I observe that Mr. Robert Bell, another distinguished officer, was paid $2,728. Where was he located?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The report is not out, but from my general recollection he has been employed in the Hudson's Bay region. He has given us most valuable reports as to the climatic conditions there, and his report as to the climate and the capability of navigating Hudson's Straits in autumn and winter goes to show, if it is verified—no doubt what he has stated is quite correct as to what he saw, but it might have been an exceptional season—that we have another means of entrance and exit into our North-West.

Mr. DAWSON. I think it is very desirable that we should have a survey of Hudson's Bay. I am glad to hear that my namesakes the Dawsons', although I have not the pleasure of their acquaintance, have so highly distinguished themselves in the North-West.

176. Annual Grant to Supplement the Indian Fund, Ontario and Quebec, and the Maritime Provinces..... $31,880.00

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The two first items are the regular votes. There is an increase of $600 under the item for Indian schools in Ontario, Quebec, New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. That is to provide for the establishment of two additional schools in the Province of Nova Scotia, at Lunenburg and Halifax. This matter has been strongly pressed on the Department, and the officers hold that such additional schools are absolutely necessary.

Mr. SCRIVER. I desire to call the attention of the hon. First Minister to a matter respecting which I had the privilege of directing his attention several months ago, in connection with the Indians of Quebec—the situation of affairs in the township of Dundee, in the constituency which I have the honor to represent. That township is made up of an Indian reserve. The lands were leased many years ago to the persons who now occupy them. The first leases granted were long leases—some for ninety-nine years and some for 999 years, and most of the shorter leases contained the privilege of renewal at the option of the tenant. After the greater part of the lands were leased under long tenures the policy of the Department was changed, and short leases extending over thirty years, mostly without the privilege of renewal at the option of the tenant, were granted to persons now in the occupation of those lands. Most of those leases have expired, some of them years ago, and the tenants are occupying the lands, as it were, upon sufferance. Most of the lands were taken in a state of nature, and have been rendered valuable by the labors of the tenants. Representations were made, I understand, by the Indians to the Department last year to the effect that they were desirous of occupying some of the lands and cultivating them. They represented that the portion of the reserve which they were cultivating was not sufficient, and that they desired some of the farms, the leases of which had expired, and that if such were given them it would be a great boon conferred, and they would cultivate the lands. Last autumn, as I learn from the report of the hon. Minister of the Interior, notices to surrender were served upon some of the tenants who were required to give up their lands on 31st December. These notices, however, have not been enforced. As the hon. gentleman will perhaps remember, I, in company with a delegation from the tenants, represented to him that it was very inadvisable to enforce the surrender of those lands. I took occasion then, as I take occasion now, to represent to him that it would not really be in the interest of the Indians to concede to their demands. It is within my knowledge that they have not cultivated the portion of land which they promised to cultivate, and that there is a considerable extent which has not been cultivated at all. Like their brethren of the Caughnawaga tribe, they devote themselves to other pursuits than agriculture, and their attempts in farming are not such as would warrant the belief that they would make good use of the lands they now desire to occupy if they were surrendered to them. The hon. gentleman, I am sure, knows enough of the Indian character and habits to be satisfied that they would not be desirable neighbors, if they were placed in possession of those lands. They would, in some instances, have white people holding lands under long leases as neighbors, and I am afraid, if they kept cattle, they would not maintain their fences in good order, that difficulties would arise, and in many ways they would prove undesirable neighbors to white people living there. Moreover, I may say that the notices which have been served do not affect lands actually occupied by the tenants; they are in some instances wholly or partially marsh lands, and in a few instances lands which have been cultivated and improved, but not actually occupied; that is to say, they have no buildings upon them. If the Indians were to settle upon them I doubt whether they would be able to make a living, they would certainly not be able to do so on the marsh lands. What I venture to suggest as a much better solution of the difficulty than the one proposed by the Department is, that the Government bring pressure to bear on the Indians to consent to a renewal of the leases, if not on the same terms as heretofore, on some terms which would be reasonable and equitable. I really believe this would be in the interest of the Indians themselves, and it would most assuredly be in the interests of the white people. This certainly if enforced with reference to the lands, notices with regard to which have been served on the occupants, why there is nothing to prevent a similar course being pursued with respect to the lands actually in occupation; and it would certainly be a very great hardship to turn men out of their lands, if this could be done, without compensation for the improvements they have made, and throw them on the world after they have spent a long time in making these lands, as is the case in many instances, valuable properties and homesteads for themselves and their children. I really hope that the hon. Minister will give this matter his attention, that the notices to surrender will not be enforced, and that the other alternative which I have taken the liberty to suggest, and which I am satisfied will be in the real interest of the Indians themselves, will be followed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would say, with respect to the Indians, that, of course, I am acquainted with the subject, because the hon. gentleman made me acquainted with it when he called on me in company of a deputation from Dundee. It is a matter—as, of course, is the case where Indian questions are concerned—which is surrounded with some difficulty. On the one hand, the white settler complains very much of the Indians being bad farmers and bad neighbors in that sense; and then, on the other hand, the Indians say that the land is ours; we have a right to it, and if we do not get the land we must have its value. I was rather under the impression that the hon. gentleman would have introduced a Bill to renew the old Act, for I thought that the hon. gentleman had rather charge of this matter. However, I would say that he presented the case of the settler very strongly and clearly to myself, and he took, I think, a very reasonable view of the matter. I must also say that the deputation, who were all interested, of course, in these lands, took a very reasonable view of it. With respect to the leases for 999 years, these lands are freeholds for all practical purposes. In fact, there was some idea during the early part of the settlement of Lower Canada, that they had not the power to alienate Indian lands in freehold, and they did the same thing by giving long leases. These were considered freehold; and then the ninety-nine years leases were looked upon as given for an eternity, with the privilege of renewing. They must be thus dealt with, of course, under the terms of the leases as perpetual; but there was a change of policy in the interest of the Indians, or in their supposed interests. Long leases were done away with, and thirty years' leases were granted without the privilege of renewal; therefore, of course, like any other lease, at the end of thirty years the land reverts to the owner of the soil. Well, the Indian owns the soil, and if they do not get the soil, they must get the value of it. Or, on the other hand, the settlers have been there, and most likely their fathers before them, for thirty years generally cover one and a-half generations or two generations; and they say it would be very hard to expel them from these lands which were worth very little when they settled on them and that they should be confirmed in the titles in some way. Notices were given in the manner the hon. gentleman has said, with the object of asserting title, of course—the Government being the trustee or guardian of the Indians; and I think that the hon. gentleman may trust to the usual caution of the Indian Department in their dealings with these matters, not to harass the white man. I agree with the hon. gentleman that all the pressure, not amounting to coercion, but all reasonable pressure in the way of persuasion should be used on the Indians to get them to agree to confirm the title of these parties on some reasonable terms, which will give the Indians some compensation, which would be perhaps a more real compensation, if small, than the mere vague right of occupying the land, which they cannot occupy and cultivate, as the hon. gentleman says. I think that something of this kind will have to be done. The matter is in my hands. I have the papers before me, and as soon as I have opportunity I will take up the subject. I will send an inspector down to examine and report upon it; and to see if we cannot come to some arrangement by which the Indians will not be dissatisfied fearing that they have lost their property, and while at the same time the reasonable claims of the white men will be met.

Mr. SCRIVER. I desire to call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fact that the legislation which he spoke of only affects the long leases; and an Act was introduced long ago which provided for the commutation of the rents specially exempting these short leases.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I know that.

Mr. SCRIVER. The hon. gentleman says that he was rather waiting for me to introduce a Bill on the subject, and I may say I was rather waiting for him to do so. I thought it would be a Government measure; and I was rather hoping that the hon. gentleman would introduce an Act to revise and renew the old Act, because I think that now is the time at which the holders of the land under long leases would be disposed to avail themselves of the privilege of commuting. The reason they did not do so before was probably owing to the want of means to do so. When the Act was passed before, the country was comparatively poor, but these men are better off now, and I think that they would be very glad to commute the rents.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have no doubt that we will arrive at a commutation.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would ask, in relation to the item concerning Indian schools of Ontario, Quebec, Nova Scotia and New Brunswick—as a good deal of interest is felt in our community in this regard—what results have followed the establishment of these schools? Can the hon. gentleman tell us what progress has been made, whether the schools are successful or not, whether they are likely to be continued, what good is likely to result from them, and what languages are taught in them?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If the hon. gentleman has not seen it, he will be kind enough to accept at my hands a copy of the annual report of the Department of Indian Affairs for the year ending the 31st of December, 1882, and he will find there a full account of all these schools.

Mr. MITCHELL. My hon. friend has been very facetious; but I wonder if he really expects that anybody ever reads the reports of that Department? For my part I frankly own I do not, and I thought that he might give us a short synopsis of it. However, as I have got the report, I thank him very much.

Mr. COOK. Has the Indian Office of Toronto been permanently removed to Ottawa, and what provisions, if any, are made in connection with the business of the Department on Georgian Bay? It is rumored that Mr. Thompson, of Penetanguishene, has been appointed to a position under the Department; and I see by the Supplementary Estimates an item to provide a salary for a surveyor from the 1st of February to the 1st of June. Is this gentleman the officer that has been appointed at Penetanguishene, and is his position to be called Indian surveyor?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. With respect to the office at Toronto, it has become an anachronism. It was not wanted. In the good old days, when Toronto was the headquarters of everything in the Province, the chief Indian agency was kept there, and all the subordinate agents reported at Toronto; from thence it came here. It was found to be a mere obstruction to business, and the Toronto office has been closed. Mr. Plummer, who was at the head of it, and Mr. Dalton, a subordinate, were brought down here, and their services were utilized at headquarters. This office performed good work in the days of old, but it was of late really in the way of, instead of being an assistance to, the Department. The agents now all report directly to headquarters, instead of through Toronto and around by that way. Mr. Thompson has been appointed the agent at Penetanguishene for the Christian Island Band.

It being six o'clock, the speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

NORTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY OF CANADA.

Bill (No. 93) respecting the Northern Railway Company of Canada was considered in Committee and reported.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria), in the absence of Mr. WHITE (Cardwell), moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. BLAKE. I wish to make a single observation before the Bill is read the third time. I think that some action should be taken to get connection, in a practical, shape between the railway system of Ontario and Callander. The schemes up to this time do not appear to have succeeded in bringing about that connection, but I do not see any reason why they should not succeed. This Parliament, last Session, authorized a subsidy at the rate of, I think, $6,000 a mile from the point of junction, Gravenhurst, I believe, and Callander. The Local Legislature of Ontario, some years ago, authorized a subsidy, I think, of $8,000 a mile, but afterwards by the change of the plans with reference to the Pacific Railway line the destination of that subsidy was changed to the Sault Ste. Marie line to Sault Ste. Marie, and that was the point of connection then, and is now authorized for that subsidy. Now, from the course of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in building the Algoma Branch themselves, and pursuing a more interior course for their main line, it seems not unreasonable to look upon Callander or some point between Callander and Nipissing as the true objective point. Now, I think public policy and the interests of Ontario should look to concerted action between the two Governments and Legislatures, each of which has recognized the importance of this connection, and if a sum even equal to what this Parliament has authorized—and it would be less in point of mileage than that upon which the Ontario subsidy was authorized—were added to the sum authorized by this Legislature, we would have $12,000 per mile available for the purpose of that connection. I regard it as of the greatest interest to Ontario, and the Dominion generally, that this connection should be made with a thoroughly independent line, and I think we might realize the advantage of a real independence, at no additional cost to the country, if the two Governments entered into communication, and an understanding was arrived at for the building of that line. I have no doubt that by the combining of the two subsidies an arrangement could be made for the formation of a thoroughly independent company, and that the road would be built; but I would prefer myself that the people should have the advantages of the subsidies. I believe, there being no great difficulties in the construction of that railway, that if arrangements were made whereby a Joint Commission were established for the building of that line, it could be built probably for the two subsidies; and if $2,000 or $3,000 more per mile were required it could be raised by the Commission on the authority of mortgage of the enterprise. Afterwards a system could be adopted somewhat similar to the one embraced in the Bill passed in 1874 or 1875, called the Neutral Link Company Bill. The Commission could allow either the Midland or the Northern to run on equal terms on the railway, and we could keep the rates of freight, in so far as that strip stretch of over 100 miles is concerned, down to the real point which would cover the running expenses, because the country would have paid practically for the railway, and, instead of the shareholders in the large corporations, the public would get the benefit of this traffic. I throw this suggestion out for the consideration of the hon. gentleman, because I am quite convinced that neither of the plans presented to us—one in the interest of the Midland system, another in the interest of the Northern system, and the still more objectionable plan which was not passed this Session—will accomplish good results, while, with the Provincial and the Dominion subsidy taken together, I believe the road would be built, and the public would get the benefit of an independent line, and equal rates to both companies would be secured for all time.

Mr. McCARTHY. I do not quite agree with all that has fallen from my hon. friend. I think the great object of this connection between Gravenhurst and Callander is to give a means of communication for the cities of Toronto and Hamilton, and the western part of Ontario with the Pacific Railway. The Midland system is now virtually under the control of the Grand Trunk Railway, and forms a connection with the Canadian Pacific, more for Montreal than for Toronto and the western part of Ontario. Of course, I do not mean to say that there is not a connection with Toronto from a point near Gravenhurst by means of the Nipissing road, which is part of the Midland system; but I mean to say that by the Midland system there would be a tendency to divert the traffic properly belonging to the western part of the Province to the eastern part of the Province and Montreal, which is already sufficiently served by the Canada Central Railway. We all remember that a bonus of $12,000 a mile was granted for the purpose of making a connection between Callander and Montreal. What the people of the West desire is that they should also have a connection with Callander, and they believe that that connection can only be satisfactorily obtained by means of the Northern and North-Western system. What I should like to see carried out is the scheme which was suggested in connection with this Bill, but which was thrown out by the technical point raised there, that is, not merely that this link should be a neutral and independent link, but that the Northern Railway should remain independent of the Grand Trunk, which threatens to absorb it, and of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which is bidding in the same direction, and if any scheme could be devised by the Government by which that could be achieved, I believe it would meet with the approval of all parties, and of the people of western Ontario. The scheme as I understood it, and I think it is the only way to secure this object, was to make the subsidy which the Government propose to give, a first charge on the undertaking, in case it should lose its independence. My hon. friend has suggested that probably some arrangement could be made by the two Governments. I do not know whether such an arrangement could be made, but I trust that this Government will not wait for the Ontario Government, who two years ago granted a subsidy for a connection with Callander, but who, owing to their hostility to this Government, when the hon. gentleman who was advocating the through route by Sault Ste. Marie played into his hands by offering the subsidy to any road that went to Sault Ste. Marie. If this Government wait until the Ontario Government revise that policy, they may have to wait a long time. I think means should be taken to secure a speedy connection between the terminal point of the Canadian Pacific Railway and Toronto, and Hamilton and the western part of Ontario. This has been obtained between Callander and Montreal, and we in the West desire to obtain it by this link.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I have listened with great interest to the speech of the hon. member for West Durham, because his scheme, as propounded to the House, is very admirable in theory. It is based on the idea that the present Government of the Dominion and the present Government of Ontario will combine to carry it out. I am afraid that we have not yet reached that Utopian stage of existence when we can hope for these two Governments to unite upon a scheme of that kind. The second point on which my hon. friend's scheme turns is that there should be a friendly or mutual link which all the roads should use.

Mr. BLAKE. I said the two connecting lines.

Mr. CAMERON. I suppose you do not intend to confine that neutral link to these two lines. If any third line were established, it ought to have the same right to use it; and therefore the proposal is that all the railways of the country which wish to use this neutral link should be allowed to use it in common. Well, I have not read or heard, in anything I have come across in reference to railway running, or the practice of railway magnates, of such a thing as two or three or four rival lines using the same lines in common, in perfect harmony. I am afraid that if my hon. friend asks the opinion of any practical railroad man not biassed by this particular question, he will say that the use in perfect amity and friendship of this neutral link by competing lines would be an impossibility. If it could be carried out in practice, I agree that my hon. friend's plan would be the best solution of this difficulty. I think this link ought to be used in such a way that the whole public will have the advantage of it, especially if it be built by bonuses given by the two Governments. When the clauses in question were before the Committee, I stated that I would not have proposed them unless I had been informed and believed that the legal result would be that the Midland system would have free use of this line and have running powers over it, the line being, of course, under the control of one of the companies. Representing, as I do, a county through which the Midland system extends, it would be contrary to my duty, as the representative of that county, if I favored any road which in any way interfered with the rights or even the opportunities of benefiting itself, which the Midland system ought to have. For that reason I stated in Committee that, having understood from a perusal of the clause in the Act applying to the Northern Pacific Junction, it gave the most perfect freedom of use of that road to the Midland Railway system. I stated if it were found that that claim was not sufficient, I should urge on the Committee the adoption of any amendments or alterations which would give the Midland Railway all those rights it ought to have over the neutral link. It being a question whether the ownership and control of the running of the road should be under one company or the other, it ought, from the necessity of the case, to be rather under the control of the Northern than of the Midland, provided the rights of the Midland were preserved. If what I may term the Utopian theory of my hon. friend could be introduced, if this could be made a perfectly neutral link, owned by the Government, over which all railways should have a right to run free whenever they liked—I am perfectly willing to concede that, if railway managers could be induced to work their roads on such a plan; and if such a system could be carried out, it would be the most perfect system. I am afraid, however, we have not yet reached that stage of happiness and perfect harmony in railway matters in this country which would render such a system practicable.

Mr. BLAKE. I have been a little misunderstood by the hon. gentleman. He raised two objections: the one political, the other practicable. I should be sorry to suppose there was any reason why the Governments of Ontario and the Dominion should not co-operate for any purpose which served the public interest. The hon. gentleman says they cannot. I suppose he must speak with authority so far as his friends are concerned, but I do not see why he should suppose it to be so in the case of the Ontario Government.

Mr. CAMERON. Take their stand on the boundary question.

Mr. BLAKE. They took the stand they believed to be in the interest of the Province, and the Dominion Government took the stand they thought to be in the interest of the Dominion. Both on this question happened to be in conflict, but is that any reason why, they should not act together on this or any other question in which the public interest would be promoted by their joint action? It may be the hon. gentleman's view of public duty and interest that they should not, but it is not mine. Then as to the practical objection. I have a little experience—although the hon. gentleman seems to think I have not—with reference to these matters, and I know there is nothing railway companies are more anxious to have than monopoly of a control over railway lines. Every railway manager will tell you it is utterly impossible that other people can be allowed in, or some dreadful damage will happen. I do not propose that all railway companies should be allowed to run wild over this neutral link. The hon. gentleman says each railway company should be secured perfect freedom of action over this link, and this clause provides this: but that one must have control. What I suggested was, that this road should be constructed by the Provincial and the Dominion Governments, whose money is to build it, and that it should go under the control of a Commissioner; and, if it be possible, to adopt a clause by which one company has control, the other shall have full and free access and running powers. I suppose it is probable for the wit of man to adapt a clause by which a Commissioner shall see that each has its fair share of running powers, and does not interfere with the other, to its prejudice. I suppose it will be possible for an impartial authority to do that which is secured to either by the partial authority of the other. If a clause can be adapted to secure, if the Northern gets control, all running powers to the Midland—and I do not think they are secured; or if a clause is adapted to secure, should the Midland get control, running powers to the Northern—and I do not think they are—surely a clause can be devised which will secure to each its fair share of control under the independent management of a Commissioner not subservient to either, but re-securing the country, whose money is building the line.

Mr. O'BRIEN. A merely local interest may perhaps be hardly worth considering, but I would like to call the attention of the Government and this House to the position in which the people I represent have been placed with regard to this railway and the way in which they have been treated. There are 20,000 of them whose existence almost depends on the construction of this line. Year after year promises are made to them, hopes held out, plans formulated, but nothing comes of it all. What between the conflicting interests of the Grand Trunk Railway and the Pacific, and the disagreement between the Ontario and Dominion Governments—what with the strife of party and the interests of railways, our unfortunate local interests are altogether lost sight of. I do not say that they are of very much consequence, but they are worthy of some consideration by this House. There is hardly an hon. member of this House from the Province of Ontario, from as far east as Ottawa and as far west as Chatham, who has not friends living on the free grant lands who have not gone up their mainly on the understanding that the railway would be built, and that they would be given that means of subsistence which at present they have not. They are cultivating lands and raising crops, and have no means of getting to a market. It is very disheartening year after year, Session after Session, to find this thing going on. It is of little consequence to us, particularly, who build the road—whether the Ontario or the Dominion Government—but I must say the people of my county have, on the whole, reason to think they are hardly dealt with. First, we have the Ontario subsidy promised of $3,000 a mile, but for some reason or other the arrangement by which it might be paid under the Ontario and Pacific Junction has been broken through personal quarrels among the managers concerned. Again, we have had various other schemes, and this Session is likely to be as barren of results as any other. The people of west Ontario, especially Toronto, are much interested in this road. At this moment the trade properly belonging to them is now being carried over the newly constructed branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway to Montreal. If the people of Toronto and Hamilton are not fully alive to their own interests in this matter, their commercial interests must suffer. I trust this Session will not pass without something being done toward building this road. I hope that every member of this House from Ontario will consider the position of his former friends and constituents who have gone into the free grant district with the expectation that something of this kind would have been done long ago. I would also take the opportunity of saying that that country is now in an unfortunate position, because, owing to the fact that the North-West holds out so many greater inducements, immigration has almost ceased going that direction. A great many from the older Provinces are going to Manitoba, and the country is really suffering, and the only remedy is the construction of this line. I hope that in this great conflict of railways and connections some consideration will be given to those people who are so dependent on the construction of this link.

Mr. DUNDAS. I think that the views of the hon. member for West Durham are worthy of the consideration of the Government. I think they are not so far different from the views of the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), as they appear to be at first sight, and if they were simmered down closely the difference would be found to be more apparent than real. As I understand this question, it has been the desire of both the Ontario and Dominion Governments to form an independent link between the Canadian Pacific Railway and the systems of railway which centre in Toronto. At the same time the rivalry or strife that exists between the roads who are competing for the control of that connection is so great as to embarrass the Government very much in dealing with this matter. I, therefore, cannot but think, that the suggestion of the hon. member for West Durham is one that will meet the views of all parties and is worthy of the consideration of the Government, and could be carried out if gone about earnestly. There is no question about its being very desirable to have that link built at as early a date as possible. The whole of Ontario is interested in it; and the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) says: "and so also are the different systems of railway which centre there." The people who are living in that district, referred to by the last speaker, are more deeply interested, perhaps, than any others, and the whole stretch of territory which this line of railway would develop, will be found to be valuable both for settlement and for lumbering operations. I, therefore, hope the Government will take the matter seriously into consideration, and see if some scheme cannot be devised whereby this Government, associated with the Government of Ontario, may secure the building of this independent line. I trust party politics in matters of that kind will not enter into a public project like this, but that the views of the hon. member for West Durham will be carried out in a practical shape.

Mr. SPEAKER. My attention has been called to the fact that this Bill was amended by the Select Standing Committee on Railways as being a Bill from the Senate, and must be considered as having been amended here in Committee. Therefore, it has been reported from Committee of the Whole with amendments.

Bill read the third time and passed.

BILL IN COMMITTEE.

The following Bill was considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time and passed:—

Bill (No. 120) to incorporate The Canadian Rapid Telegraph Company, Limited—(Mr. Davies.)

CREDIT VALLEY RAILWAY.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria) moved the second reading of amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 50) to amend the Act respecting the Credit Valley Railway Company.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not intend to trouble the House with any observations with regard to the amendments, but I desire to place on record my views with respect to those amendments which have been introduced into a Bill with respect to a local railway, the Credit Valley Railway, by which it is declared to be a railway for the general advantage of Canada, and by which powers are given to that railway Company to effect a lease to another railway corporation. These are amendments "C" and "D," and I move to disagree with the amendments for the following reasons:—

Because having regard to the facts,—

- 1st. That the Credit Valley Railway Company is a Provincial Company, incorporated by the Ontario Legislature;
- 2nd. That it has received from Ontario Municipalities aid to the amount of $1,165,000, on various conditions;
- 3rd. That it has received from the Local Legislature aid to the amount of $457,500;
- 4th. That this aid has been given on conditions that the Local Government may require the Company to enter into agreements to be settled by the Local Government for running powers, or user, or haulage arrangements, by other companies over its road; and upon conditions for the giving of returns and information to the Local Government; and upon conditions as to the retention of its rails;
- 5th. That the Company is now subject to the control of the Local Legislature, and that its rates and tolls are regulated under Local Laws;
- 6th. That the conditions under which the Municipal grants have been given, can now be enforced by the Local Legislature;
- 7th. That it is within the competence of the Local Legislature to authorize the lease of the Railway to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, on such conditions as it deems just;
- 8th. That no application has been made for that purpose to the Local Legislature;
- 9th. That no notice has been given of any intention to apply to the Parliament of Canada for the legislation contained in the amendment;
- 10th. That no petition has been presented, praying for the amendment, it is not expedient that legislation which will have the effect of withdrawing the Railway from Provincial jurisdiction, and of vesting in the Parliament of Canada its exclusive control should be passed, without the notice required by the Standing Orders of The House, or any notice or petition whatever, and without giving the parties concerned any opportunity of being heard on the question.

Amendment negatived on a division.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria) moved that the said amendments be amended as follows:—

6. If at any time hereafter the Credit Valley Railway Company shall enter into any agreement for amalgamation or leasing, or into any pooling arrangement with the Grand Trunk Railway Company, or into any agreement for the joint use of their respective railways, either directly or through any company leasing or controlling its line, then the powers conferred by sections 3 and 4 of this Act shall cease, and determine.

Amendments, as amended, concurred in.

Mr. DUNDAS.

SUPPLY.

The House again resolved itself into Committee.

176. Annual Grants to Supplement the Indian Fund, Ontario and Quebec, and the Maritime Provinces.....$31,880.00

Mr. DAWSON. I desire to offer a few remarks in reference to the item now under consideration. The Indians in my constituency are numerous; we have 5,200 in Algoma proper, 3,800 on the waters of Rainy River, and 2,000 or 3,000 in the northern sections, making over 10,000 altogether. And I would say that within the last eight or ten years the condition of these Indians has been greatly ameliorated throughout Algoma, chiefly or in great part at least, from the enforcement of the laws respecting liquor. They have not been able to get intoxicants to the extent they once did, and the officers of the Government are performing their duty throughout that wide district in a very zealous and praiseworthy manner; I have great satisfaction in saying in this House, that the condition of the Indians is getting greatly better, many of them are settled on farms; we have as many as 1,700 settled at one place on the Manitoulin, 300 at another, and so on with other settlements. At Sault Ste. Marie and on the north coast of Lake Huron, the Indians are well advanced, growing large quantities of agricultural produce, including wheat. Industrial schools are also established among them; there are industrial schools at Wikwemikong, on Manitoulin Island, where Indians are taught trades of all kinds, to which they take very readily; there is also an industrial school called the Shingwauk Home at Sault Ste. Marie, which has done an immense deal of good. These institutions are sending through the country educated young Indians, and the trades they easily learn are much more to their advantage than would be mere scholastic learning. I am happy to say that this system is gradually having a good effect, and that the condition of the Indians in Algoma, a great many of whom have settled down, has been very much improved within the last few years. I wish to call attention for a moment to those Indians who ceded their lands under the treaty known as the Robinson Treaty, made in 1850, which was for many years very imperfectly carried out. The real purport of the treaty was, that the Indians should get so much per annum; but unfortunately the payments actually made to them fell very far short of what they should have been according to the treaty. They were to get a certain sum then, and if the revenue arising from the lands ever amounted to so much, as to allow them "$1 a head, or so much more as Her Majesty might be graciously pleased to order," in that case additional payments were to be made. The lands yielded a very handsome revenue long before Confederation, such a sum as would have enabled the Government without loss—which is the expression in the treaty—to pay the full amount stipulated; but the matter seems to have been neglected, and it was not paid. For a number of years, the Indians on Lake Superior were paid $1.49½ a head annually only, while the Lake Huron Indians got for a number of years $1.10 a head annually, instead of the $1 a head to which under the treaty they were entitled. When Mr. Laird was Minister of the Interior, the matter was brought to his notice, and he, on investigating the subject, found that as much as $10,484 annually had been kept from the Indians. It was then arranged that they should get the full amount of $4 per head, but this only occurred in 1875, and they have been paid $1 per head ever since; but previous to that date, arrears were due them amounting to a very considerable sum. The Government could have paid them the full amount without loss. In making an estimate, I searched through the accounts of Ontario, and I looked also through some of the accounts at the Dominion office here; and according to a very moderate estimate a sum of over $200,000 is due the Indians without reckoning interest. If interest be added, the amount would exceed $300,000. This is the calculation according to the estimate made by the hon. Minister of Interior in 1875; but he was in error, as I am informed, in reckoning the actual sum due them annually and kept from them; and I am under the impression that a very much larger sum is due to them. I would call the attention of the hon. Minister to these arrears. I believe that the payments to the Indians were to be a charge upon the lands according to the treaty, and this applies to all of the lands which they ceded; but while the lands have fallen to the Ontario Government, the Dominion Government has to deal with the Indians. I believe that correspondence has been going on between the two Governments for some eight years or so; but still no decision has been arrived at; and it is most desirable that some understanding should be soon reached with the Ontario Government regarding this important matter, by which the Indians would get their pay in the meantime. I may say further, that a number of Indians who are entitled to pay, do not get it. They are called non-treaty Indians; but they were as much parties to the treaty as those who were included in it. The land belonged to them as much as to the others, but they happened not to be present when the treaty was made. They are not very numerous, and it would not add a great deal to the annual outlay if they were placed on the same footing as the others. They are an intelligent people; and I may say that a great many of them are not wholly Indians, though treated as such, but descendants of the old French and Indians. There is not in the whole Dominion a more quiet, a more orderly people than the Indians of Algoma.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is really true, as my hon. friend says, that this is very important, as it affects the interests of Indians occupying territory ceded under what is called the Robinson Treaty. It is also true that evidently a sum of money is due them. With respect to the arrears up to 1867 there is a debt due by the old Province of Canada. There has been an attempt made to adjust the matter; but we have never hitherto been able to get the two Governments of Ontario and Quebec to settle the account. It was understood, in fact it was promised, that it should be settled in October last; but the representatives of the two Governments met here without coming to any conclusion, and since that time there has been no action taken whatever. With respect to the accruing rights of these Indians since 1867, there is certainly a balance due them, and it is hoped that, by arrangement with the Ontario Government, this balance will be wiped off. There is a large sum of money due to the Indians, and they have so far been deprived of what is their own. I am not at all sure, however, that it has not been really for the benefit of the Indians, though it was contrary to strict rights that the money was not paid. They are now in an advanced state of civilization, I am glad to learn from my hon. friend, and though they cannot be expected to become thoroughly settled in a generation, still they are taking to the soil, they are making substantial progress. They understand their rights—they understand the object of their funds, and their money is saved instead of being squandered by the Indians—as formerly was the case—as fast as it was paid or got hold of by designing white men. It will be my duty to take the subject up the moment Parliament prorogues, and I think there is no doubt that we can come to a settlement with the Ontario Government, because it is they who are primarily held by this arrangement. Having said so much I would add that this vote is increased by $5,680, and that that addition is made just for the purpose the hon. gentleman has mentioned. There were certain non-treaty Indians who have not come in—I fancy their representatives were not there at the time the meeting was held and the treaty made. But still the treaty covered their land, and whenever they choose to come in they have the right to claim their share. There are 104 persons in that band who will receive their annual allowance, the same as the others when this vote is carried. Besides these there are eleven stragglers belonging to broken bands and not now attached to any band, though they have always been, and their ancestors have always been on the soil, so they have a claim; that makes 115 additional Indians who have a right to these allowances. There is no doubt when that matter is disposed of there will be ample funds to meet the just claims of the Indians—in fact those belonging to the bands covered by the treaty will eventually be wealthy.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Before the item is carried I wish to make a few remarks. Some years ago there was a project started by the Six Nation Indians of Brant with a view to the erection of a monument to one who was a very distinguished chief and leader of these Indians during the time they were the active allies of the British Crown in the war which took place between the Mother Country and what are now the American States. The name of Joseph Brant is one well known to the hon. First Minister, and known, no doubt, to every hon. member of the House. The proposition first originated with the Indians that a monument should be erected to the memory of that distinguished chieftain. They have brought it to the notice of the white people—municipal authorities and others—who are interested in their welfare, residing in the country about them, and notably in the city of Brantford. Their efforts were warmly seconded, and it was considered highly proper, though that chieftain had died so far back as 1807, that there should be such a tribute to his memory. They thought, moreover, that such a movement would be likely to be productive of good results, not only in the feelings which it would engender in the breasts of the Six Nations, but that the movement would not be entirely without influence upon the red men of the West and any Indian tribes we have in the country. I believe it would be the first monument ever erected to the memory of any of the aborigines of this country, and as the Canadian treatment of the Indians has been happily in marked contrast in many respects with that of the American Government, it was thought that it would still further redound to the credit of the people of Canada, if they would be found aiding and seconding a movement such as this. When the Earl of Dufferin was on the Six Nations reserve, some six or seven years ago, they took the opportunity of presenting an address to him, and through him they desired to present an address to His Royal Highness the Duke of Connaught, who, in 1869, when he was in this country, was made by the confederacy one of their honorary chiefs. The address was transmitted to His Royal Highness, who was graciously pleased to express his approval of the scheme, and who signified his desire that his name should be used as one of the patrons. He also announced his desire to give a handsome subscription towards the object in view. The Earl of Dufferin himself subscribed very liberally towards the project. The present Governor-General also subscribed very handsomely, so has the hon. leader of the Government, Sir Charles Tupper, Sir Hector Langevin, and I think most of the hon. members of the Ministry and several hon. members of the last Parliament. The Indians themselves passed a resolution giving $5,000 of their own money towards it, the City Council of Brantford passed a by-law granting $2,500, so that a considerable amount has been raised one way or other. I think the First Minister has been communicated with by telegraph, as it was impossible that a deputation could reach him in time, requesting him to consider whether he could place a sum in the Supplementary Estimates in order to further this project. I am cognizant of the fact that he may have some difficulty, and that the Committee may have some difficulty at the first blush in seeing their way in making such an appropriation. The First Minister may hesitate to take such a step without a precedent, as to whether such a precedent should be established, and upon this point I desire not to press him too strongly. I would suggest, however, that there are features about this movement which might justify the First Minister in acceding to the request made by many of his supporters in Brantford, and others, and the chief of the Six Nations Indians. The character of Joseph Brant shines forth conspicuously. He was not only an educated man, not only a man who was held in high esteem during his lifetime, but one whose loyalty and devotion to the British Crown has not been excelled, I believe, by the loyalty and devotion of any of the subjects or allies of that Crown. During the war that unfortunately prevailed, he, though solicited to cast in his lot with and lend his aid to the Colonists, felt such a spirit of loyalty to the Mother Country that he could not see his way to do so, and espoused the cause of Britain. He and his braves took up arms and fought side by side with the Imperial troops in order to retain the Colonies to the Mother Country. At the end of the war, when the treaty was made, the English Government, by a strange oversight, amounting to culpability on their part, forgot to stipulate in the treaty that the Six Nations Indians should have reserved to them the lands which were theirs from time immemorial; and thus it was that the Mohawk Valley, which was theirs and their fathers, was handed over, and they found themselves left without a home. This was contrary to the express promise of General Haldimand, who, I think, was acting on behalf of Britain. Chief Brant then repaired to Governor Haldimand, at Quebec, and laid the matter before him. The Governor promised to do everything he could in the way of fulfilling his promise, but it was too late to get the land, because that was ceded away by the treaty, but he agreed to give the Indians a larger tract of land on the Bay of Quinté. The Seneca Indians had, meanwhile, settled in the Genesee Valley, and they invited the Mohawks to live with them and offered them a large part of their tract. But this was distasteful to Brant, to the Mohawks, and to the members of the confederacy, because they desired to live under British rule; and, finally, the matter was settled by a grant being made to them six miles in width on each side of the Grand River, from its source to its mouth. That river runs through the county I represent. Portions of their grant have been surrendered to them from time to time until the whole of it has been surrendered with the exception of one township of Tuscarora, 6,000 acres in extent, and a slight reserve extending into the county of Haldimand. The lands have been sold from time to time by the Government and the proceeds invested, and the Indians have drawn the interest from that money ever since. I mention these matters to the Committee in order that they might understand the exact position of the case. We are sometimes inclined to think that the grants to the Indians are a great burden; but, so far as the Six Nations Indians are concerned, the Committee will recognize the fact that they are no charge to the country at all; they draw their own moneys, but none of the moneys of the country. They have, of course, to contribute towards the revenue of the country, as every one living in the country must do, so long as the revenues are levied in the manner they are; but they are without representation on the floor of this House, and therefore, when they desire to be heard in Parliament, they have to avail themselves of the service of someone who occupies a seat in the House. Now, it is not for me to say how much the grant should be. I might, however, suggest that it would be a gracious thing, if the Dominion Government entertain the proposition at all, that they would make it about the amount the Indian Council themselves have granted. If the Government did that they might find their justification in the fact that they have never expended on these Indians anything, while the Indians have been contributing for years and years to the revenues of the country. They might also find it possible to make such a grant without doing violence to any established principle, or setting any dangerous precedent. When other bands of Indians in Ontario are aided, this might be regarded as only a simple matter of right in the case of the Six Nations Indians. Another reason which might justify the Government in yielding to the proposition might be found in the public services rendered by Chief Brant to the British Crown; nay, more, the distinguished services rendered by that Chief, and the good feeling that exists between the Indians and the other people of the country might warrant them in making the grant. There is no fear of any jealousy arising from such a grant, should it be made. The name of Brant stands out so conspicuously among his people that there is not the slightest danger of any shade of jealousy being felt by anyone else. His name is historic; he was a gentleman in every sense of the word—a gentleman of culture, though his skin was red, and he was a true child of the forest. He visited the King, who received him at Court, and he used his influence to further the interests of the British Crown. While he lived he used all the influence he possessed, and it was great, in maintaining good feeling between his followers on the reserve and their white neighbors. His services are known and have been recognized by the people of this country and the Mother Country, but there has been no tribute paid to them that I know of at all worthy of them; and if it is right and appropriate that this should be done, even at this date, by private subscriptions and the subscriptions of the Indians themselves, I cannot see that it would be unwise or unsafe for the Government to aid them. I have not the slightest doubt that the hon. First Minister, if he consulted his own feelings, would accede to my suggestion. He is not personally hostile—the handsome subscription he has given from his private purse is proof positive of that; but I think it would be a prudent act on the part of the Dominion Government, under the exceptional circumstances I have mentioned, to meet the Indian Council with a grant, in order that the work may go on. I am not making this suggestion in order that this grant may give a little prominence to the city in which I live. All will concede that the Indians should be left to select the site. If they are, it will mark a monument erected to a man whose name is known, not only throughout the length and breadth of the Dominion, but in Great Britain as well—a man who, in days when British interests were at stake, was willing to sacrifice, and did sacrifice, all his possessions, and was ready and willing to sacrifice his life and those allied with him, to maintain those interests. They are to-day our allies, as faithful, I believe, as they were in days gone by, and if the hon. First Minister could see his way clear to place a vote in the Estimates for the purpose I suggest, I think it would be a prudent and proper act.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think my hon. friend has made a strong case in very eloquent and very adequate terms. He has spoken of the services of Joseph Brant, and of the sacrifices he and his people made in adhering to the Crown of England during the revolutionary war. He sacrificed everything. They lost one of the most beautiful countries of the world, the beautiful valley of the Mohawk, and were thrown upon the wilderness of Upper Canada, where they showed their loyalty in the war of 1812. They are as ready now to go to the front with as great gallantry as did Joseph Brant and those who served under and with him for the British Crown. Joseph Brant was a very remarkable character. An Indian, without a drop of white blood in his veins, he was still a gentleman of culture. He was before my time, but I, as a young man, remember his children. I remember his son, who was a gentleman of high culture, who sat in the Upper Canada Legislature. His daughters were ladies of education, who, although educated with all the accomplishments of a white lady, were not ashamed of their nation, garb and habits, and they lived and died glorying in the name of Brant. I received the telegram the hon. gentleman speaks of only last night. I have not had an opportunity really of considering it, or consulting my colleagues about it, but I shall submit it to my colleagues, and give the hon. gentleman's representations every consideration. Of course I know the hon. gentleman is actuated by no such feeling as he hinted might perhaps be felt, that it was to get some little kudos, or ornament, or piece of sculptural beauty in his own constituency. I have no doubt he acted solely from the desire to do honor to the memory of a great man. It may be true, as the hon. gentleman said, that it will have a wholesome and beneficial influence on the other Indians. These things spread from tribe to tribe, and I dare say Indians in the North-West, even in British Columbia, may hear—we should take care that they will—with pride that a red man has been honored by their white fellow-subjects in the Province of Ontario. We must be prepared, however, if this is entertained, to perhaps go a step further. I think that, hereafter, if this is granted, there will be an application—and I do not see well, why it should be resisted—that a monument should be erected to Tecumseh, who fell fighting the battles of the British Crown. I must say I have great sympathy with the name of Brant, from the fact of my having been personally acquainted with a great many of the descendants of Joseph Brant, who have more or less mixed blood, but are proud of belonging to that family; and I have a special regard for the name of the son of Joseph Brant, who went home to England, and, after the fashion of those days, resolved to avenge a slight on the memory of his ancestor, cast by Campbell, the poet, in "Gertrude Wyoming," when he called Joseph Brant the "murderer Brant." The false stories told of the cruelty of the Indians in the valley of the Wyoming were perpetuated in the poetical utterances of Campbell, although altogether unfounded.

Mr. PATERSON. Campbell, I believe, placed a foot-note at the end of the poem, stating his disbelief in the story.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He did. He was called to account for what he wrote, and after the fashion of those days, Brant insisted on meeting him in the field if he did not withdraw the slight to the name of his ancestor; and Campbell, as my hon. friend truly says, in the next edition of his poems, placed a note stating he was altogether mistaken. I shall only say further, that I quite agree with the sentiments of my hon. friend and will submit his proposal to my colleagues.

Mr. CHARLTON. How many of the noble red men have we left in the different Provinces?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. On page 260 of the Report my hon. friend will see there is a recapitulation. There is a total of 110,505: of which 17,126 are in Ontario; 11,089 in Quebec.

177. Indians of Nova Scotia, generally..... $4,500 00

Mr. CHARLTON. I see there is an expenditure for education; what progress are the Indians making in learning the art of agriculture?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The reports are favorable rather than otherwise; but they are very slow, and I do not understand why the Indians down there do not take so well to the soil as they do in other parts of the country. The Micmac Indian is rather a nomad; he prefers the water, as we see in the Maritime Provinces. But still they are improving by slow degrees. I fear, however, that in a few generations they will have disappeared altogether or be absorbed by the white population.

Mr. CHARLTON. I should infer that the efforts to educate and Christianize the Indians, and make them good members of society, are not being attended with marked success.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I believe they are very good Christians; they go to church regularly, and are getting a fair education, but they are nomadic in their habits, and will not settle down. The fact of the matter is, that it takes generations for the Indians to get an aptitude for the cultivation of the soil. According to the principle of development, that must be of slow growth, not in one generation. As Tyendinaga once told me: "There is no use talking about it, we are still animal, and you cannot make a deer into an ox."

Mr. CHARLTON. The evolution, I understand, is a very gradual one. Has the hon. gentleman any information as to the number of generations it will take?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am not sufficiently Darwinian to tell that.

180. Indians of British Columbia, surveys and reserve commission..... $12,005.00

Mr. CHARLTON. I see, last year, about $2,000 were expended for medical attendance. What course does the Government take to furnish medical attendance for the Indians?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Fortunately for the Indians there, the Superintendent for British Columbia, Dr. Powell, is a medical man himself. In some places there are allowances made for medical men; in others, medical men are employed, and paid for their special services. The Indian there does not require so much medical attendance as our Indians on the eastern slope of the Rocky Mountains and through Old Canada—whether it is because they are of a different race altogether, or whether, from their being supposed to be mingled with Mongol blood, coming across Behring's Straits, I do not know. But they are strong and hale men; they work like white men, and some are rich and own farms. Except in a few places, where they have been corrupted by being too near the towns, they support themselves a good deal. As the hon. gentleman may know, the Indians had hardly any special reserves in British Columbia before it was joined to Canada. Under the system that was carried on by Sir James Douglas—a very good system it appears to have been—the Indian was treated very kindly, but no right to the soil was practically ever admitted by the Government. Now, however, as the country is becoming settled by white population, it has been found necessary to have special reserves set aside for the Indians. Mr. Sproat, who was appointed, by the late Government, Indian Commissioner, settled a great many Indians on reserves, and, on his resigning, Mr. O'Reilly took his place, the latter having been a County Judge, retired on a pension at the time of the Union with British Columbia. He is acting as Indian Reserve Commissioner, and I hope in three or four years he will have the reserve settled. The reserve is first surveyed by this Commissioner and then submitted to the Governments of British Columbia and of the Dominion for their assent. I am happy to say there has not been any material difference of opinion between the two Governments. British Columbia has always been willing to grant a reasonable amount of land for reserve for the Indians. On the question of education, I fear we must admit, on behalf of both Governments, since 1871, that we have been too much in the habit of treating the Indians as minors and acting in too paternal a manner towards them. I understand the Indians there do not require nearly so much care or expense as we have been put to. What they ask for more than anything else is schools. The great difficulty we have is to get proper schoolmasters for them who understand the Indian character, who will not go in there merely for the sake of pay, but who are philanthropists. The Indians say they are willing to defray the expenses if we can only find the schoolmasters, and we are endeavoring to do so.

Mr. FLEMING. There seems to me to be a discrepancy between the condition of the Indians, as just explained by the Minister, and the large sum for salaries paid out to agents. Of the appropriation of $23,300 last year, $11,895 were paid as salaries to agents. Would the hon. Minister explain the duties of these agents?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman must remember that British Columbia is an enormously large country, and this expenditure has to be scattered over that country down to the boundary line. The Indians are scattered, and from the mountainous nature of that country they are widely scattered. They settle down in the glens, in the valleys, or on the coast. Within a very few years ago they were savage; they are now becoming quite peaceable, except in the outlying stations, such as Queen Charlotte's Island. This Island was a very formidable place for white men to visit, because the natives dealt most summarily with the crews of any vessel that called there. Along the outside coast of Vancouver Island there are a large number of scattered Indians, who are so scattered that they can scarcely be said to live in communities. They are now, I believe, very profitably employed in the canneries and establishments of that kind. Indians are also now employed as miners and they work very well. But it must be remembered that they are not white men, and civilized, and must be strictly watched. They are very suspicious and easily aroused; the white population is sparse, and the Indians feel yet that they are lords of the country in British Columbia, and they are much more numerous than the whites; the officers are not too numerous and are not highly paid, but they are the best preventive police we have.

Mr. CHARLTON. I suppose we must congratulate ourselves at the small vote for British Columbia as compared with the vote for the North-West, and that such a considerable number of Indians in the former Province should give us so very little trouble. I observe an item of $7,700 for surveys. Is the Government engaged in surveying the reserves?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We have a Reserve Commissioner whose appointment was agreed to by the British Columbian Government, and we have a Government surveyor under him, and chain men. This is the usual vote in order to carry on the annual surveys.

Mr. CHARLTON. How many agencies have we in the Province?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Six.

181. Indians in Manitoba and the North-West $791,640.47

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I call the attention of the Committee to the very large decrease on the whole that there is in this vote. There is a decrease, in every item, except that of supplies for destitute, which is increased by $60,708. The decrease on the whole vote is $33,359. The expenditure under this head has been very large, but I believe it will be much diminished next year. The Indians are all moving away from Fort Walsh and going on their reserves, and so soon as we get them there we may hope they will become more and more self-sustaining.

Mr. CHARLTON. I notice that the votes in one or two previous years have been largely exceeded by the expenditures. I think the vote for destitute Indians in 1881-82 was $102,000, and the expenditure $563,000. Will the hon. gentleman give us some information as to the cause of that unusually large increase.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. At the time we took the vote last year I went, at considerable length, into the subject of destitute Indians, the utter disappearance of the buffalo and the action of the American Government which formed a perfect cordon to prevent buffalo from crossing the lines. Formerly the Indians in the North-West, except those tribes which had some little fishing, subsisted on buffalo. Buffalo was their bread, wine, and meat, and that supply utterly and totally failed. I am not at all sorry, as I have said before, that this has happened. So long as there was a hope that buffalo would come into the country, there was no means of inducing the Indians to settle down on their reserves. The total failure of the buffalo the year before last, and last year, caused the Indians to be thrown on the mercy of the Government in the North-West. We could not, as Christians and men, allow them to starve, and we were obliged, no matter what the cost might be, to furnish them with food. It was better to feed them than to fight them. At any time we were liable to an attack, and hungry men will, if necessary, help themselves. Last year we made considerable progress in settling the Indians on their reserves, and we would have made still further progress if it had not been for the rumor that buffalo had crossed the line and were flocking into the country. The moment the Indians heard the report, all the work had to be gone over again. The buffalo did not come in, in any considerable numbers. Some few Indians having heard that the buffalo had crossed the line, went to hunt, in expectation of obtaining their old description of food, but they found they were mistaken, and would have been much better off had they remained on their reserve. I believe the system of watching the country has been made so complete by the Americans that we will not have any more buffalo in our land. The Indians are satisfied of that, and those who have settled down are proving very fair farmers, that is to say, they are self-sustaining, and the accounts given are most encouraging for the future.

Mr. CHARLTON. I notice among the expenditures in the Public Accounts for the year ending 30th June last, that one firm, Baker & Co., obtained a very large sum. Where is that firm located?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. At Fort Benton, Montana.

Mr. CHARLTON. I believe they are Americans?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. CHARLTON. The other night, when I referred to the system of surveys in the North-West, I asked why the hon. gentleman had not adopted the American system in its entirety, and it was said in reply, that I drew all my inspiration from Washington. Where does the hon. gentleman draw his inspiration from in permitting a Yankee firm to obtain $462,000 for supplies, which could have been obtained from our own dealers?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The inspiration from which I drew those supplies, through Baker & Co., was the greatest of all monarchs, the monarch of necessity. There was nobody else to supply the food on the eastern slope of the Rocky Mountains for the Blackfeet and the Bloods. There were no means of getting supplies except from Montana. I may say, though the members of the firm are Americans, they are most satisfactory contractors—fair, honest, liberal and trustworthy. They have fairly competed with other traders, because these contracts have always been put up to public competition, but nobody could tender for the supplies in the extreme West. The Hudson Bay Company tendered for a good deal. Other parties, Captain Howard, who is known, perhaps, to Mr. Watson, tenders; and is the lowest for some contracts this year. By next year we will have the Pacific Railway finished to Algoma, and the supplies for all these posts can then be tendered for from all the rest of the Dominion, and especially from Ontario, I fancy, it being the nearest, with regard to provisions, bacon, flour and all the other articles to which the Indians have a right under the seven treaties that exist, and will be freely competed for by the people generally.

Mr. CHARLTON. I am very happy to hear the excellent character which the right hon. gentleman gives to these American dealers at Fort Benton, Montana. I presume it is fortunate for those gentlemen that they have not resided in Canada for twenty-five or thirty years and become British subjects, when, no doubt, their loyalty would be called into question; but as residents of the United States they enjoy excellent reputations and transact a very large amount of business with the Government. I have been looking through the accounts, and it strikes me that the prices paid are, in many cases, higher than one would suppose was necessary. Flour is charged by the sack. I do not know its weight in the North-West.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. 93 lbs.

Mr. CHARLTON. Barley flour at Edmonton is charged at $6 a sack, and this seems to me excessive. It is on the Saskatchewan River.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We cannot get it there otherwise.

Mr. CHARLTON. Owen McDonald, at Prince Albert whom I understand is in the midst of an agricultural settlement, makes a charge of the same character. Do they not raise barley there?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They do not raise enough.

Mr. CHARLTON. On April 23rd, 1881, Mahoney & McDonald were paid 21 cts. a pound for bacon at Battleford. That would represent a good many cents a pound for freight. Is bacon furnished in this case by contract?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. CHARLTON. I am afraid that there are not many competitors.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. All these articles, along the line of the Saskatchewan, are supplied by the Hudson Bay Company; they are the lowest tenderers.

Mr. CHARLTON. Oats are charged at Fort McLeod at $1.19 a bushel, which would seem a rather large price to an Ontario farmer. Is that reasonable under the circumstances?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is the price of the country.

Mr. CHARLTON. The firm of I. G. Baker & Co., Fort Benton, supplied 160 pairs of cotton overalls at \$1.75 each. I used to be in the dry goods trade; and I sold such an article at about 60 cts. Freight would be a small matter on these, which weigh $1\frac{1}{2}$ or 2 lbs. each. Such prices seem hardly justifiable. One item shows the humanity of the Government, and I can dwell on it with a considerable degree of pleasure. I see charged on the 18th of February, 1881, by J. J. Clarke, at Fort McLeod, \$10 for material for a coffin for Little Drum, furnished because his family were too destitute to supply a blanket to wrap him in. Would it not have been cheaper to furnish a blanket?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We wanted to introduce civilized customs there.

Mr. CHARLTON. I doubt the propriety of going contrary to the traditions and usages of the Indians in matters of this kind. They should be allowed to bury their dead, according to the customs they have hitherto pursued, especially if it is cheaper.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I see you have a fit of coffin to-night.

Mr. CHARLTON. I am perfectly aware of the important functions of the pipe of peace among the Indians. I see an item, under supplies to sick and destitute Indians, of five gross briar root pipes, charged by J. J. Roos, of Ottawa. Might they not have been furnished with clay pipes?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I suppose that those were for the chiefs?

Mr. FLEMING. The large figures relating to the Indians of the North-West, furnish food for very considerable reflection. The policy of the Canadian Government towards the Indians under their charge, has always been one of the greatest humanity. That policy has been endeavored to be carried out by settling the Indians on reserves, and giving them instruction in the ways of civilised life. The policy, a very good one, has been further extended by the present Government, in the appointment of a large number of farm instructors, placed on the various reserves in the North-West. The result is somewhat startling, if the figures and reports of the Indian Superintendents in the North-West, are indicative of them. I find, on looking at these reports, that this very good policy which I commend the Government for continuing to carry out, has been placed to a very considerable extent in the hands of men who failed to carry out the Government's intentions. During the negotiation of the treaties made with the Indians, great promises were made. The Indians were led to believe, that if they forsook their nomadic life and resorted to the reserves, and entered on the cultivation of the land like white people, happiness, and peace and prosperity would result. Some of them were induced by those glowing promises to attempt settlement on the reserves, but these attempts have been to a great extent a failure, not altogether at least, on account of the Indian character, but largely, I think, on account of the character of the instructors, and of the inadequate way in which the policy of the Government has been carried out. When the Indians have so settled, they are promised implements, seed, grain, cattle, &c., but many of the instructors sent up to them were as little capable of entering on farming operations, as the Indians to whom they were sent. I observe that a large number of these men have been dismissed by the Government. I do not know for what reason. but I congratulate the Government on having weeded out a number of these inefficient officials; not only that, but those who were in charge of the distribution of the implements and other effects to the Indians under the treaty, have, to a very large extent, failed to carry out their purposes. I have the testimony, at page 131 of the report, of Mr. McColl, speaking of the Little Forks Band, as to how the promises which were made to them have been carried out:

"Missinawaypenesse, one of the councillors, represents that they are almost destitute of agricultural implements to cultivate their gardens. Their plough and harrow are broken and they are unable to mend them. This band is composed of seventeen families, and it is presumed that all of them are cultivating the ground, as one axe, one scythe, one spade and two hoes, were only given to such according to treaty; and I find upon referring to the records in the office that they received 20 axes, 32 hoes, 2 ploughs, 1 harrow, 15 scythes, 12 spades, &c., consequently they are still entitled to 2 hoes, 1 harrow, 2 scythes and 5 spades. I also notice in the same records, that nearly all the bands within this Agency have received more axes than they are entitled to under treaty, and that only two or three bands have received their complement of hoes, spades and scythes, notwithstanding the representations to the contrary made to the Department as well as to the Indians in reference to this matter."

On page 134 of the same report, it is stated, with reference to the Indians under the agency of Mr. McPherson:

"The agent informed me that although no potatoes had been requisitioned for this year owing to the Indians having, with few exceptions, an abundance of their own for planting, yet 175 bushels were forwarded to his agency, from Winnipeg, on the 27th of May; but before the Indians could be notified of the arrival of those supplies, they were generally through planting, hence only eighty-one and a-half bushels were taken by them; forty-nine were lent to other persons to be returned in the fall; twenty-seven and a-half bushels were sold at Rat Portage for $1.00 per bushel: five bushels given the freighter for taking them to market, and the balance, twelve bushels, rotted."

Now, if we are paying such large prices for the distribution of these supplies in the North-West, as has been instanced before, it is important that when articles are not required at a particular place they should not be transmitted from Winnipeg at this great expense. On page 142 the same officer says, with reference to the Beren's band:

"Two years ago 100 garden hoes were forwarded to this band, but the Agent considering them unsuitable for that rocky, timbered country, left them in the storehouse of the Hudson's Bay Company there, until last summer, when they were ordered to be returned to Winnipeg. The Indians are dissatisfied in not having received any agricultural implements this year, especially the grub-hoes promised to be supplied to replace the garden ones. The only implements delivered by the contractors at date of payment, were six hay forks and six sickles, which the Agent refused to distribute to the Indians, as these articles had not been promised by treaty to them."

So we find that articles are sent to the Indians which they do not require, and there are other instances of the same kind in the report, and instances in which articles which are required, and which have been engaged to be delivered are either not supplied at all, only partially supplied, or delivered only when they are too late for use. On page 146 of the same gentleman's report, I find the following in reference to the Cumberland band:

"Of the 110 grub-hoes shipped from Prince Albert to the agency at Grand Rapids in the spring of 1831, sixteen were distributed to this band last summer, and the balance was distributed to the Pas Indians. John Harcus, one of the councillors, complained that the agricultural implements forwarded by the Department were refused to be given them. Those supplies were generally late in arriving at the different places of payments, but even where they had been delivered on the dates contracted for the Agent objected to give them to the Indians, and also instructed Mr. Factor Belanger to retain them at Grand Rapids, until further orders from him, as he was not authorized to hand them over."

Further on in the same report I find the following:—

"There are also two ploughs, two harrows, two sets harness, and two pairs of whiffletrees lying in the Hudson's Bay Company's storehouse since last year."

So that there appears to be a concurrence of testimony to show that there has been a lamentable failure on the part of the agents of the Government in carrying out the intentions of the Government towards these Indians, and in keeping that strict faith with them which the Indian nature demands should be kept with them. As the right hon. gentleman has stated to-night, the Indian nature is a very jealous one, and if we fail on our part to carry out the engagements we make with them in strict faith, we need not expect the good results from this policy which it is intended to produce. I have read the evidence of one of the most reliable of the officers of the North-West—one who seems to do his duty with a great deal of zeal, and now I would direct the hon. gentleman's attention to some testimony from an Indian source. Before doing so, however, I shall endeavor to give a character to my witnesses. In the report of Mr. Wadsworth, page 180, speaking of the Indians under Treaty No. 6, whom I am about to call as witnesses, he says:

"These Indians are Christians, and it was very pleasant to hear, during the long summer evening, the squaws and children singing 'Shall we gather at the River' instead of the monotonous drumming of the tom-tom so common to Indian camps."

"The 21st, 22nd and 23rd I spent with the Cree Indian Bands, Sampson, Bobtail and Ermine Skin, near Battle River."

I shall quote from a memorial which was published in the Edmonton Bulletin on the 3rd of February last, and is said to have been forwarded to the right hon. Minister of the Interior:

"A condition on the part of the Government is to furnish us with a number of farming implements and cattle proportioned to the number of families of each band. Now, during six years that we have been in the treaty, the officers acting for the Government have robbed us of more than one-half of these things on which we were to depend for a living, and they are not punished according to law. They can break their engagements on behalf of the Great Mother with impunity."

Mr. FLEMING,

"Now, hon. Sir, this is our great complaint. We have never yet been supplied with one-half of what was promised in the treaty. We who send you this letter represent seven different bands. One article promised us was one plough to every three families. Three of the bands have received only one-half the number each—the others less than one-half, and in one case none at all. Harrows, the same way. Axes, hoes, and all other instruments promised have been denied us in the same ratio. Some of us have received all our cattle, some only a portion, and some none at all. Of course, those who have received only a portion or none at all will lose the increase for so many years. We were promised, during four years, all the seed we could put in the ground, and, although many of us have been forced to break the ground with hoes, yet we have on no occasion received more than one-half what we could plant."

"Now, we consider this treatment an outrageous breach of good faith, but, of course, we are Indians. Why does not the head man of the Indians ever appear against us, he whom we call in our language the 'Whitebeard,' and by the whites called 'Dewdney?' He took a rapid run once through our country; some of us had the good or bad luck to catch a flying glimpse of him. He made us all kinds of fine promises, but in disappearing he seems to have tied the hands of the agents so that none of them can fulfil these promises. This is the cause of our dire want now. We are reduced to the lowest stage of poverty. We were once a proud and independent people, and now we are mendicants at the door of every white man in the country; and were it not for the charity of the white settlers who are not bound by treaty to help us, we should all die on Government fare. Our widows and old people are getting the barest pittance, just enough to keep body and soul together, and there have been cases in which body and soul have refused to stay together on such allowance. Our young women are reduced by starvation to become prostitutes to the white man for a living, a thing unheard of before amongst ourselves and always punishable by Indian law."

Now, Sir, we have the testimony of the inspector that the engagements of the Government are not fulfilled; we have also the testimony of a number of Indian chiefs. These chiefs, Mr. Wadsworth says, belong to the Christian bands under Treaty No. 6, and, therefore, I say their word, with the testimony of Mr. Wadsworth, is worthy of belief when it is corroborated by the representations of the inspectors themselves in regard to the way in which the Indians have been treated, and as showing that the humane policy of the Government has to a large extent failed, because it has not been carried out. I recognize the difficulty of the Government in regulating this matter at so great a distance; but, in the failure to keep the Indians on their reserves, I think we have a clearer indication of the reason for the conduct of the Indians than in the Indian character. If we find that the Government policy has been carried out in the way I have shown, that faith has not been kept with the Indians, who were induced by the promises of the negotiators of these treaties to look for large benefits from the Government, what will be the natural result? A number of the Indian bands forsook to some extent their nomadic life, and resorted to the reserves; the Government agents failed to implement the promises that were made to them; and therefore the character of a large class of Indians to-day is less self-reliant than it was when this policy was adopted. I am not finding fault with the policy, which, I believe, is calculated to promote the happiness of the Indians, and to secure the peace and prosperity of the North-West; but what I complain of, is, that those who have been appointed to carry out that policy have defrauded both the Indians and the Government, as proved by the instances I have cited from the report. What influence may such a state of things be expected to have upon the character of the Indians? They find promises broken on the part of the Government, and they are not likely to fail to break promises also. If they find frauds practised on them, they are quick enough in learning the ways of the white man, to adopt a policy of fraud towards the Government; and we find, in looking at the report, that this has been to a great extent the case. Mr. McColl, in his report, on page 113, says:

"The chief, Keezickookal, with as many of his followers as he could influence to accompany him, went away in June to visit the Sioux Indians, at Devil's Lake. The few families remaining on the reserve were most diligently engaged in hoeing an excellent crop of potatoes and corn, estimated at about twenty acres in extent. Mr. David Prince, the local Episcopal Missionary, informed me that he found it utterly impossible to induce parents to send their children to school unless he furnished them with food and clothing. He is about to abandon the situation as a hopeless undertaking, and therefore has tendered his resignation to the Mission. The chief received payment in 1881 for nine of a family, an increase of one daughter by birth over the previous year, according to the Agent's remark on the pay-sheets, whereas I am credibly informed that no such birth occurred, hence he was overpaid five dollars. In the ensuing fall, his youngest child, aged four years, died, reducing the number of his family to seven, whereas he is represented on the pay-sheet as having received payment for eight in 1882. Punheekzee-zicknaba, one of the councillors, having two wives, is represented on the pay-sheet as receiving annuity in 1881 for a family of eleven, including two infant children, whereas at the date of payment only one of these children was born."

Now here we find the natural result of breaking faith with the Indians.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is not breaking faith with the Indians. The Indians play these tricks continually in order to get more than they are entitled to.

Mr. FLEMING. That is the result of breaking faith with the Indians, that the Indians are induced to break faith with the Government. We find that the Indians, when the promises that are made to them are not fulfilled, resort to some means to make themselves square. When we find this state of things existing, when we find that Mr. Graham of Winnipeg reports that in a number of cases the Indians display less self-reliance than they did formerly, we are to some extent prepared for the large increase that has taken place in this item for some years past. In 1877, $250,796 were expended on the Indians of Manitoba and the North-West, of which $10,000 was for provisions. In 1878, $333,503.68 were expended, of which $29,400 was for provisions. In 1879, $403,418.21 were expended, of which $53,771.39 was for provisions. In 1880 the expenditure was $615,041.65, of which $157,572.22 was for provisions. In 1881 the expenditure was $726,575.77, of which $284,482.52 was for provisions; in 1882 the expenditure had grown to $1,090,796.90, of which $523,842.12 was for provisions; in 1883 the expenditure, with the Supplementary Estimates, is $1,030,499.52, of which $337,965.27 was for provisions; and this year it is proposed to expend $791,064.67, including $394,014.68 for provisions. These figures are the natural sequences of the mode in which the agents of the Government have carried on its policy. They are the natural sequences of the breach of the promises made to the Indians. They are, to a large extent, due, it is true, to the non-appearance of the buffalo in that country, but they are also, to a large extent, the natural consequence of the way in which the faith of the Government has been kept with the various bands of the North-West. If a more strict superintendency is not exercised over the carrying out of the promises, under the various treaties, to the Indians, I do not see how the promise of the hon. Minister, that these appropriations in a short time can be reduced, will be carried out. There should be a more strict investigation of the way in which the contractors, or their agents, supply these implements and goods to the Indian tribes. I have shown that the contractors fail to send supplies when they ought to send them and have sent large quantities to places where they were never required, and all these things enter into the large expenditure we are called upon to vote. I do not say the sum ought not to be voted if it is necessary to secure the peace of the North-West, but I do say that this large sum ought to be wisely expended, that good faith ought to be kept with the various Indian tribes, that the treaties ought to be faithfully carried out, and that where promises are made to the Indians the utmost care should be taken that those promises are fulfilled.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I go one step further than my hon. friend who has just spoken.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Take care it is not a faux pas.

Mr. CASGRAIN. There have been many faux pas made in this matter. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will be glad to know my views. However good may be the policy of the Government and its intentions, they cannot go against the natural law relating to Indians on this continent, and that is, that the Indian race is becoming gradually extinct as the white race advances. That is a broad fact. Another broad fact is, that you have not been able to bring one single Indian to the state of civilization reached by the white man. The experiment has been tried ever since the beginning of the colony, and I know of only one Indian who ever became thoroughly civilized, and that was a man by the name of Vincent, who has a mixture of white blood in his veins, and counts his descent from three or four generations. He reached such a stage of education as to go into Orders. I lay down as a principle, which cannot be controverted, that this race is becoming rapidly extinct, and we are wasting an enormous expenditure to attain an object which will never be attained, that is, to civilize these Indians. I have seen myself, at Garden River, the experiment tried by Catholic and Protestant missionaries. A small plot had been cultivated and set out in garden lots, and small houses had been built near them for the Indians, but instead of living in these houses, they built themselves, in front of the houses, small bark wigwams, and there they lived.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Those were their country houses.

Mr. CASGRAIN. As to their plots there was not a root to be found in any of them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You might find some briar roots.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I give this as an instance of the inaptitude of the Indians to enter into civilized life. Now, Sir, I will make an exception in favor of the British Columbia Indians. They are a self-sustaining race, because they have had large fields in which to hunt buffalo, and have been obliged to resort to fishing in order to supply themselves with the necessaries of life. This gave them sedentary habits, and led them to cultivate the soil. But as to Indians of the North-West Territory, they are a doomed race, and it is only a question of how soon they will disappear. This race is extremely jealous, and they do not look to the Government employes that are bound to aid them, but, as they say, they look to the Great Mother on the other side to protect them. Of course, I do not put on the shoulders of the hon. Minister all the responsibility of the misdeeds in his Department, as he cannot know all that is going on at such a distance. But the Indians believe themselves so much neglected that, in their own primitive mode of speech, they call the head of the Indian Department, "Old To-morrow," because they never get what they want. That will give the hon. gentleman an idea of what is going on there; the name characterizes the thing completely. There is no denying the fact that in many of these outposts, agents of the Government speculate on the Indians, and often enormous sums of money voted for their assistance, by no means all goes to the Indians. The hon. gentleman asks for $60,000 additional for supplies for destitute Indians. How many destitute Indians are there? This is to me a plain admission that they had not enough last year, and that you are obliged to keep them alive. We are required to expend this year, $355,000 for the North-West Indians alone, and what this House would very much like to know is, how many Indians will be benefited by that sum?

Mr. CHARLTON. I find in an account here this item: "On the 28th June, 1881, Benjamin Warwick, of Fort Ellis, ten days, self and team, ploughing and harrowing, $7 per day." Is not that rather a high price for a man and team?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I fancy not.

Mr. CHARLTON. I find another item. On the 28th of May, the same year, C. Henderson, Victoria, N.W.T., four days' ploughing and harrowing with his own team, $1.50 per day.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is a different part of the country altogether.

Mr. CHARLTON. If one man is worth $1.50, the other ought not to be worth $7. There ought to be a little supervision exercised in these matters. In another account it appears one Whitcher is feeding Indians on turnips instead of flour. Is that considered good economy?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. When flour gives out, they give them turnips, and when the turnips give out, we must give them grass. Food continually runs out there. Hitherto, all the caution of all the agents, cannot prevent an occasional excess at one point or a deficiency of food at another point. The Indians are migrators, and we cannot avoid that. Then the hon. gentleman knows that the great trouble there is transport.

Mr. CHARLTON. II. Rennie, Fort Walsh, freighting, 8 cts. a lb. What is the distance between Fort Walsh and Q'l'Appelle?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am told about 400 miles.

Mr. CHARLTON. Eight dollars a hundred seems to be an excessive rate.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is almost impossible to get transport there at this moment. The immigrants going in, and the large surveying parties, will give anything for teams, and it is very difficult to get transport at any price.

Mr. CHARLTON. Bacon at Edmonton, procured from Hudson's Bay Company, 25,000 lbs., at 24 cts. a lb. Is not that rather a heavy price for bacon?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It takes the whole season to get it there up the Saskatchewan.

Mr. CHARLTON. Flour $20 a barrel, bacon 30 cts. a lb.; these are high prices. Then, 12th November, 1881, South Branch, B. Bozer, threshing 889 bushels of grain, 14 cts. a bushel. That is about five times the price paid in Ontario. These are specimens of charges that I find in the accounts. These may be all right—I presume they are—but I am glad, in the interest of the taxpayers, that we are going to have that country penetrated by a railroad, and the rates of freight will be very much reduced. Feeding Indians with bacon at 30 cts. a lb. and flour at $20 a barrel, is an expensive mode of keeping Indians. In the United States it is found that the agents who had charge of these matters robbed, with perfect impartiality, the Government on the one hand, and the Indians on the other. Great abuses grew up in that country, that have not been eradicated yet, that lead to Indian wars, and to great sufferings on the part of the Indians. In this respect the experience of that country is one that we might very well profit by, and it strikes me, in looking over these accounts, that possibly we are drifting into the same state of things—not to so great an extent—there are not such glaring abuses, but there are circumstances that require careful supervision. I produce these accounts for the purpose of directing the attention of the Minister to these matters, with the suggestion that it may be necessary to have greater care and closer supervision than in the past.

Mr. WATSON. I would like to call the attention of the First Minister to one particular band of Indians, called the Swan Lake band. These Indians have been a great source of annoyance to quite a number of settlers in my county. They are supposed to live on their reserve at Swan Lake, but the chief claims that the Government have not carried out their contract according to treaty and delivered supplies at the reserve, and consequently they have refused to remain there and have come back to the camping ground on the banks of the Assiniboine River at what is called Hamilton's Crossing. They have been a great source of annoyance to settlers in that locality on account of their habit of turning their ponies loose, breaking down the fences and burning the rails, and allowing their ponies to stray into the fields and destroy the grain. Last summer there was very nearly bloodshed between an Indian and a settler. The Indian claimed the right to live there because it was an old reserve. It was a reserve under the first treaty, but by a subsequent treaty made by Governor Morris, the Swan Lake reserve was set aside. The chief Yellow Quill complains that the farm instructor sent up was not a practical man, and could not show them how to proceed. The chief is anxious to know how to cultivate the soil, and he declared it was because the Government official could not instruct them at Swan Lake that he went back to the old reserve. He claims the Indian gardens which are on the school section at Hamilton's Crossing. The Indians of this band are a fine lot of men, although they are a little troublesome, and Chief Yellow Quill is a finely-proportioned man, and is reputed to be an honorable man, although some of his band took possession of supplies that were going out to other Indians some time ago. Inspector McColl recommends the Government to set aside the school section and give this to the Indians in order to pacify them. On behalf of the settlers in the locality I would strongly protest against this course, because it is a great source of trouble to have Indians settled on a school section. They are rather a nuisance among settlers. I hope the Minister will endeavor to have Yellow Quill and his band placed on their reserve, because, so long as they remain at Hamilton's Crossing they will be an annoyance to settlers. If they should continue to remain there they will quarrel with the white men, and there will be trouble and perhaps bloodshed. I hope the matter will be attended to.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The matter will be attended to. The hon. member has read Mr. McColl's report, and he will remember that he enters very fully into the matter. The Indians refused to go on their reserve and went to Hamilton's Crossing. The hon. member (Mr. Watson) spoke of what he knew, and he knows all about it; but the hon. member who preceded him spoke from the Blue-books, not having the slightest idea of the difficulties which occur in that country. The Indians are well satisfied on the whole, and they should be well satisfied. The only thing the House has specially to consider is the large expenditure made on food for the Indians. Instead of breaking faith with them we have kept faith with them, and they have received large supplies. It is well known that, although the Indians agreed to go on their reserves, they have not gone in many cases. When they go on their reserves they get their cattle, implements and grain; but until they are on their reserves they eat the grain, kill the cattle and sell the ploughs, if supplied with them. It is quite impossible, from the difficulties of transportation in that country, that you can always have a given quantity of goods delivered on a particular day. The Hudson's Bay Company, which fulfil their contracts as faithfully as they can, have, from the breaking down of their steamer, and from the lowness of the water in the Saskatchewan, been two seasons behind, one season certainly. Even Baker & Co., who have had even more experience than the Hudson's Bay Company, have similarly failed, either from climatic causes or from means of transport failing them, to perform their contract; and it must be remembered that contracts cannot be performed in that country as a retail grocer can perform them here, if you buy a pound of tea, and order him to send it home by six o'clock. The report quoted by hon. gentlemen opposite, shows the honesty of Mr. McColl. He was appointed, I believe, by the late Government, and if he was, it was a very good appointment, for he is one of our best inspectors. Mr. Wadsworth is very strict, and perhaps is inclined to find too much fault with every little deficiency of the agents. The agents are but men; they are away in the wilderness, far distant from assistance, and are sometimes bullied by the Indians. The Indians will always grumble; they will never profess to be satisfied. All the Government can do is to see that the provisions of the treaties are carried out in good faith—and they are carried out in good faith—and if there is any error, it is in an excessive supply being furnished to the Indians. But we cannot help it, of course. When once a band of Indians reach a fort or station, they always want to stay there, and want more as long as they can get any food. Why, at Fort Walsh, which was a centre near the frontier, and a place of meeting for the Indians from time immemorial, on the first settlement of the country, a fort was built to keep the Indians in good order and peace on the frontier. It has been found, however, that the Indians will go there, and it being close to the frontier, they go to the States, as they did last year, when they were driven back by the United States troops. They returned to Fort Walsh without horses, which they had sold or had been stolen from them by American Indians, and without food or clothing, actually starving. We could not allow them to starve, and we placed them on quarter rations only; but still, while Indians can get anything to support life, they will not move. We are obliged—and it was intended to have done this last year, only accidental circumstances prevented—this spring to tear down Fort Walsh, and the whole of the stores will be removed north of the Pacific Railway, and when they find no more food there, they will go north of the railway, and settle on the reserves. These things must and will happen, and all we can do is to use the most patient perseverance. It is no use to get angry with Indians. They are idlers by nature, and uncivilized. If they eat the cattle you must give them a good scolding and not shoot them down because they shot down the cattle and ate them. You must coax them to go on the reserves and do better next year. It is only by slow and patient coaxing and firmness at the same time alone that you can manage the Indians. The hon. gentleman read a letter, signed by a number of Indians; some of the names he would not read out—I do not know why—and some he did read. It is evident from the style of this paper that it was written by an uneducated Indian on bark, and in hieroglyphics, and not by a civilized man. It was evidently not written by a white man. It is the plain language of the uncivilized red man in which he complains of his troubles. Well, I know who wrote that letter, and I know that he is one of the curses of the North-West, one of the white men, despised by God and men. He is there living and getting fat upon inciting the Indians to discontent, and I know that he is under the special ban of his own Church for his conduct. He has been again and again excommunicated by his own Church for his unchristian and improper conduct in inciting Indians, for his own base and sordid purposes, to discontent.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is his name?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will not give that.

Mr. GUILLET. I would like to make a suggestion. In my locality there are two very worthy and intelligent young Indian men, who are seeking to educate themselves. They are from the North-West, the Cree band, and they are struggling to educate themselves at their own expense, intending to fit themselves to become teachers among their own race. I would suggest that the Government might adopt some means to afford young Indians of intelligence and good character an opportunity to educate themselves to become teachers among their own people. It is well understood that they cannot get this education in the North-West, and they might be encouraged to attend the Normal and Model schools, or Collegiate Institutes in the other Provinces. This is a very important matter, as they will more likely than whites succeed in educating and civilizing their own people. Of course, such candidates should be recommended and selected for this object and be placed under proper supervision while attending these schools; and in this way, I think, that they might be of great use in introducing the better phases of our civilized life among the Indians. I think that this is a matter well worthy of consideration, especially in view of our great obligations to the Indians, whose lands we have obtained. We have driven them to reserves, and we should make every effort in the way of promoting their civilization. To carry this suggestion into effect would, I think, materially assist in promoting the wise and humane policy the Government are pursuing in order to ameliorate the condition of our Indian population.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. CHARLTON. No doubt the Government experiences very great annoyance in consequence of the improvidence of the Indians, and of their wastefulness; and I can quite understand the difficulty of the situation in this regard; the difficulty of getting them on their reserves, and inducing them to perform any labor, to make use of implements and to work the cattle which the Government gives them with which to put in their crops. I have no doubt that the Government, in managing these matters, does the very best in their power. The last speaker referred to our obligations to the Indians. No man questions the policy; and the duty of the Government is to treat the Indians humanely, to keep them from starving, and doing just what it is doing. The Estimates are being discussed, not in a spirit of consorioness.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I recognize that perfectly.

Mr. CHARLTON. Of course, we take some time on them, but I consider that there is not a single matter of greater importance, and scarcely of as great importance.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I quite agree with you.

Mr. CHARLTON. I have no intention of wasting the time of the House. I see we have schools under the different treaties, for 1882. Under No. 1, the expenditure was $79; under No. 2, $626; under No. 3, $120; under No. 4, $160; under No. 5, $1,239; and under No. 6, $2,281. What is the result of the efforts to educate the Indians in these schools, so far as the measure of success has been attained? Will they be continued and rendered more efficient, and will a larger appropriation be granted?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, I think I may almost ask the hon. gentleman to look into the report on these schools, where he will find their success more or less alluded to. I believe, however, that these schools are fairly successful, especially those under the charge of religious bodies, Catholic or Protestant. These are, I believe, more successful than the merely secular schools, where the schoolmasters, who are honest men and who do their duty, are actuated, of course, by a desire to support themselves and their families. The moral restraints of the clergy, both Catholic and Protestant, are greater. They are actuated by higher motives than any secular instructor can pretend to. Secular education is a good thing among white men, but among Indians the first object is to make them better men, and, if possible, good Christian men by applying proper moral restraints, and appealing to the instinct for worship which is to be found in all nations, whether civilized or uncivilized. A vote will be asked for in the Supplementary Estimates for 1883-84, for a larger description of schools. When the school is on the reserve the child lives with its parents, who are savages; he is surrounded by savages, and though he may learn to read and write his habits, and training and mode of thought are Indian. He is simply a savage who can read and write. It has been strongly pressed on myself, as the head of the Department, that the Indian children should be withdrawn as much as possible from the parental influence, and the only way to do that would be to put them in central training industrial schools where they will acquire the habits and modes of thought of white men; so that, after keeping them a number of years away from parental influence until their education is finished, they will be able to go back to their band with the habits of mind, the education, and the industry which they have learned at these schools. That is the system which is largely adopted in the United States. Out of these pupils you will get native teachers, and perhaps native clergymen, and men who will not only be able to read and write, but who will learn trades. The Indians are more apt to take to trades such as carpentering, blacksmithing, &c., than to the cultivation of the soil. They have not the ox-like quality of the Anglo-Saxon; they will not put their neck to the yoke, but they can become mechanics and work at various trades. That is a scheme which I will lay before the House rather later in the week.

Mr. WATSON. I can testify to the good qualities of Mr. Ogilvy, who distributes the supplies at Portage la Prairie. I am sure that the Indians there get all that is allowed them by the Government. He takes great care of these Indians, and I believe that under his instructions they are acquiring a great deal of useful information. Some of them are very good farm laborers, though a good many of them will only work when they are hungry.

Mr. CHARLTON. I notice that there are quite a number of farms, some twenty-six in all. At Farm No. 1 at Bird Tail Creek, the expenses for salaries last year were $1,922. I would like to enquire of the First Minister, whether these farms are still being carried on, and what the results have been so far as the financial aspects are concerned?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think the results have been, on the whole, satisfactory. Some of the farms have done very well, but it is only in cases in which the man are not only good farmers but had a good deal of tact, and had acquired a knowledge of the Indian character. In such cases—and there are several—the farms were nearly self-sustaining. I may say that, though the Government took great care in getting men who were trained to farming, and though some of them were well acquainted with agricultural pursuits, and were strong, healthy and respectable men, others have shown a woeful want of tact, and others of the most valuable would not stay on the reserves but went to work on their own account. We are altering the system very much. We find that we require men who are not only farmers, but who are accustomed to the Indians, and who know the Indian character—in fact it is more important to have a knowledge of the Indian character than that they should be first-rate farmers. What you want is to get the Indians to plant a few turnips, and perhaps in a rough way which would shock a model school alumnus, and raise cattle and roots, and perhaps by-and-bye grain, rather than that they should receive the instructions of a first-class farmer. The hon. gentleman will see that this vote has been cut down from $40,000 to $8,000. This is one of the economies which experience has shown could be practised.

Mr. CHARLTON. Are large numbers of these farms being abandoned?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; but we find we can get men at small wages who will do better than farm instructors at salaries.

Mr. CHARLTON. I presume some of these men who were sent as instructors were entirely unfit for such duties—men who were school teachers, &c.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think so. I know that we insisted for recommendations from people who were farmers, and upon whose veracity we had confidence in making selections. In some cases men who were selected, decided not to go at the last moment, and those who were sent in their places, did not in some instances prove so successful as the main body who were sent up.

Mr. CHARLTON. It is quite evident that some of these farms have not been self-sustaining, for I find in the report a number of expenditures charged for supplies, for oats, &c.; and I doubt very much, from my knowledge of agriculture, whether the Government will find the experiment of running these farms a self-sustaining one. It might be done, if they could get the right kind of men as instructors, and these men were industrious; but it is very difficult to exercise supervision over them. We shall find it a costly experiment, and, I think, the Government will find it profitable to abandon it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman will see that it is practically abandoned. There was formerly a farm outside of the reserve, and an instructor was put upon it. This has been broken up, and we will get a man, with an assistant, to work on the reserve with the Indians.

Mr. CASEY. We understood, when this experiment was undertaken, that that was to be done; the instructors were to be practical men, working on the farm and showing the Indians; but we on this side of the House were inclined to think that the experiment would be what it has turned out to be—that after a few sums of money had been spent for the benefit of a few favored individuals, the system would turn out a failure, and have to drop. I am surprised to find so sudden a change in the mind of the Government. Last year the hon. gentleman spoke very hopefully of what he expected to be done; but it now turns out that a large portion of this money which has been paid to farm instructors is simply waste. I notice that nearly all the items in connection with agriculture, such as implements, seed-grain, tools, farm maintenance, &c., are reduced. I suppose that the Indians eat the cattle and make firewood of the agricultural implements, so that there is no more stock for their farms than there were when these instructions began. I regret to see that, while these expenses, which should tend, if properly administered, to the civilization of the Indians, are decreasing, the great item which tends to demoralize the Indians is increasing. There is an increase of $60,000 in the item for making paupers of them. The hon. gentleman says that the Indians were destitute and that they will not work so long as they get supplies, and he infers that we must feed them so long as they will not work. You must, however, not only deal with the Indian considerably but firmly. If you supply him with all the means of agriculture, and promise to continue to feed him in idleness, the Indian would be different from the ordinary savage if he did not think it would be better to make his profit out of his cattle and agricultural implements, and allow the Government to feed him besides. Under these circumstances the vote will continue to grow, and in a few years we shall have the whole Indian population of the North-West on our hands to feed. Of course you may occasionally starve an Indian who is really destitute; but I think that discrimination should be exercised by the Government agents between those who are destitute and those who are not. I know that a great deal of this talk about destitution on the part of the Indians is pretence. I happened to be present at a pow-wow between an Indian Chief and Lieutenant-Governor Dewdney, last summer. The Indians came dressed in the worst possible rags, and complained that they were destitute and starving, and had no opportunity of killing game; yet these Indians were in possession of the very best Winchester repeating rifles that could be purchased in the United States for cash. In connection with the same band of Indians, the Pie Pot Indians, I must refer to the misunderstanding which has arisen as to the meaning of these treaties. The band refused to go on the reservations to be paid, and I must say they made out a pretty strong case for the refusal. When confronted with the treaty made with them by the then Governor Morris, binding them to go on the reserve, take their pay there, they stated that Governor Morris, at the time, verbally promised that they might get paid at Fort Qu'Appelle; and white men who were present when the treaty was made, confirmed their statements. It seems certain loose verbal promises were made to induce the Indians to sign the treaty, and it is these promises which have given rise to all these troubles. The same cause led to the difficulties with Yellow Quill's band. The hon. Minister said that Fort Walsh had been pulled down, and the station removed to a point north of the Pacific Railway. I understood the police establishment was removed from Fort Walsh to Fort Regina. The hon. gentleman says, that the police force being removed, the Indians would go to their reservations, but I believe they will simply follow the removal of the fort; and if the policy is to be followed of aiding every Indian who calls himself destitute, the Government will simply have to deal out supplies at the new depot. In this matter of Government supplies, I am astonished to find out how much of the money spent has gone to American sources. It is scarcely in accordance with the National Policy, that $450,000 should be paid to Messrs. Baker & Co., of Fort Benton, U.S. I see no reason why the supplies for nearly all the Indian districts could not have been obtained, even last summer, just as conveniently from Winnipeg as from Fort Benton. In connection with one of these Government farmers, I notice some extravagant expenditures. A herder named Ives, gets $150 a month, or $1,800 a year, and his assistant got $387 for ten months. These are very extravagant rates. The Government have hitherto been very well served by these Indian agents, and it has not become the fashion here, as in the United States, to make fortunes by being Indian agents. I know of one of our agents who returned poorer than when he went out. No proper check can be kept upon that expenditure, and it is impossible to say whether that money has been judiciously spent or not; the agent's word must be taken in every case. In the expenditure of such an enormous sum as $355,000, it is impossible but that the agents will, either now or soon, learn to make a profit for themselves out of it. We have heard it stated that some of those agents kept little shops at which they traded with the Indians, immediately after payment of the annuities, and they may make the profit in that way. It is very common in the States, and I am afraid it will be common here before long. It is not in human nature that these men should handle such an enormous sum without some of it sticking to their fingers, especially when no check can be kept upon them.

Mr. CHARLTON. Upon page 111, part 3, salary of Mr. Dewdney, Indian Commissioner, $3,200. What is his salary as Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West, in addition?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He gets $2,000.

Mr. CHARLTON. Making $5,200. Could the hon. gentleman say what portion of time the last twelve months Mr. Dewdney spent in the North-West?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Since Mr. Dewdney was appointed, he has spent all his time there, except when he was especially summoned, by myself, down here during the Session.

Mr. CHARLTON. He has spent, I suppose, at least two-thirds of his time there?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, he was here a little over two months this winter. Last year he was not.

Mr. CHARLTON. His services were found necessary here in reference to the management of Indian Affairs, not with reference to his duties as Lieutenant-Governor.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Nearly altogether with respect to the Indian Department. I have consulted him as to the future of the North-West, dividing it into electoral districts and things of that kind.

Mr. CHARLTON. I hope the hon. gentleman will succeed in getting the districts into better geographical shape than he did in arranging the districts in one of the Provinces west of us.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It will be judicious gerrymandering, no doubt.

Mr. CHARLTON. I see an item of $1,836, travelling, board allowance and cab hire, E. Dewdney. That applies to him as Lieutenant-Governor and Indian Commissioner?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is there any way of getting these items separately, so as to find out what is for railroad fare, what for board, and what for cab hire?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; I think the hon. gentleman might get all that information.

Mr. CHARLTON. I see that E. T. Galt is down for $1,250, for travelling expenses. What are his duties?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He was Assistant Commissioner, and I am sorry to say we have lost his services. Mr. Elliott Galt, son of Sir Alexander Galt, was appointed originally as secretary to Mr. Dewdney, and he was found so valuable an officer that he was made Assistant Commissioner. He has found more profitable employment in the North-West, and has left the position; and Mr. Reed, a most valuable officer, is put in his place. From the beginning of the spring, and during the whole season, until mid-winter, these two gentlemen, the Commissioner and the Assistant Commissioner, were travelling from one end of that country to the other, at intervals, as much as possible—one remaining at headquarters while the other was travelling.

Mr. CHARLTON. I find, also, A. Macdonald down for $1,709, for travelling allowance. What were his duties?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Angus Macdonald is Indian Agent.

Mr. CHARLTON. H. Reed, $1,857.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He was stationed at Edmonton, and is now moved to Regina as Assistant Commissioner.

Mr. CHARLTON. J. M. Ray, $1,043.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He was assistant under Treaty No. 7. I think, he was Assistant to Commissioner Reed. Mr. Reed having moved down to Regina, Mr. Ray, his assistant, has been appointed in his stead, and is reported one of the best officers we have.

Mr. CHARLTON. E. P. Wadsworth.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He is Inspector and travels all the time.

Mr. CHARLTON. I find quite a list of newspapers having charges for advertising. What did the Department find it necessary to advertise for?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I cannot tell the hon. gentleman. No doubt they are advertisements of land for sale, of coal regulations, mining regulations, land regulations, colonization regulations, various regulations, timber limits.

Mr. CHARLTON. I did not know any of these topics had any particular connection with Indian affairs.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am told those advertisements were for tenders for supplies.

Mr. CHARLTON. I suppose it is the custom to confine these advertisements to the party organs supporting the party in power.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I should think not. I cannot answer that question, but I think the Free Press of Winnipeg has got some advertising patronage.

Mr. CHARLTON. On looking through the list I do not find any. Probably by some oversight the Free Press was overlooked.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. When a paper is wrong in its politics it is generally wrong all round.

Mr. CHARLTON. This system may have been followed by all past Governments, but it strikes me that in the matter of advertising in the newspapers we should turn over a new leaf and advertise for the purpose of making our wants known, as business men do, for the purpose of getting value for our money.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Quite right.

Mr. CHARLTON. I hope, as the hon. gentleman approves my views, he will act on the suggestion.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am afraid I will have to cross-question my hon. friend on that point, when he is my successor and I am sitting over there.

Mr. CHARLTON. I see a charge of $500, expenses of removing Mr. Dewdney's family to the North-West.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; that is quite right.

Mr. CHARLTON. Petty cash disbursements, the same officer, $208. When we get all these disbursements of this gentleman added together it makes quite a formidable sum, although I presume it is all right. E. McColl, expenses of inspection agencies, $1,561.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He is a good Grit and a good inspector.

Mr. CHARLTON. One pair of horses for Sir A. T. Galt, $300. I would ask whether it is at all probable that this is in connection with the $1,500 expended at the time he was looking up that fifty township colonization grant? I observe there was a vote for a grist mill. Where is the mill located?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The grist mill was near Fort McLeod; but the Government have sold the mill and the farm. They made a very good sale.

Mr. CHARLTON. These are all the questions I desire to ask, and I must congratulate the First Minister upon the kindness which he has shown in answering these questions and on his apparent thorough knowledge of the subject he has in hand.

182. North-West Mounted Police..... $416,000.00

Mr. CHARLTON. Baker & Co. figure largely also under this head. I suppose they provided supplies after contracts had been advertised for and their tender proved to be the lowest?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes. I may tell the hon. gentleman that formerly we were obliged to advertise for tenders the season before the supplies were wanted, because the parties who had to furnish the articles required were obliged to make thorough arrangements for transport. Baker & Co. were sometimes unwilling to undertake the contract, and nobody else could supply Fort McLeod, Fort Calgary and all along that country. They have received large sums from the Government, and they have occasionally, when other contracts would have paid them better, helped us. We believe that hereafter it will not be necessary to advertise a year before the goods are wanted, under which plan the contractors must run the risk of possible change of prices next season, and must therefore have a very considerable margin. The contract will run out in

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

August or September, and we will advertise in the spring or summer for supplies next winter, which will go up by the Canadian Pacific Railway by way of Thunder Bay.

Mr. CHARLTON. Baker & Co.'s head-quarters are at Fort Benton; have all their goods been sent across the border from there?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; some of the contracts have been supplied east of that. This firm has the most complete system of ox and horse teams in the North-West. They are now, I believe, sending some teams up on the Canadian Pacific Railway, to the western point, and taking them from there to extreme points.

Mr. CHARLTON. There is an item of $21,481 for provisions furnished by the Hudson's Bay Company. At what points are they so furnished?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Hudson's Bay Company obtained contracts when they were the lowest tender. They never undertook to deliver everything required in one advertisement; but they have supplied pretty much the goods along the North Saskatchewan, all the way from Winnipeg to Edmonton. They have taken some other contracts along the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway; but Captain Howard has now got most of the contracts there, his being the lowest tender.

Mr. CASEY. While the payment of the force has been reduced by $5,000, the item for forage has been increased $8,400; for transport and freight charges, guides, teamsters, laborers and mail carriers, $10,000; and clothing, $7,000.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have already explained that matter to the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton). In consequence of the largely increased survey parties and the influx of immigrants the cost of transport is increased to an enormous extent, and it is very difficult to get any transport at all. For the same reason the cost of forage has increased. I hope by-and-bye that will not be the case; but at this moment hay is higher than it was last year.

Mr. CASEY. At most of the Mounted Police stations it was expected that the men would cut their own hay, and items for mowing machines have been passed on that understanding. I very much doubt the accuracy of the information that hay has risen in price, as it can be obtained for the mere cutting. As to oats, I do not think the price has increased. Last fall I think they were rather less than the year before. I notice that $58,400 are down for the subsistence and forage of 360 horses, which seems to be very extravagant, over $160 a horse. I would ask my friends from Manitoba, whether this is not excessive in the North-West, where nothing is paid for stabling, and you can get hay for the cutting. Oats, of course, are moderately high, but they are not such a very extravagant figure. The statement as to the cost of transportation, has, of course, considerable weight. No doubt the influx of settlers in the older parts of the country, affects this cost; but there has been no great influx to Fort McLeod that I know of, or to other points. It is only in connection with Regina and that neighborhood, that this has had very much to do with the cost of transportation. I do not think that any increase has taken place in the cost of it in the older settlements, that would account for an increase of $10,000, or 33 per cent. over the estimate of the previous year.

Mr. CHARLTON. Has the Police force succeeded in furnishing themselves to any extent with forage, oats, hay, &c?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No. We tried the experiment of conducting a farm, but we found that the two things did not go at all together.

Mr. CASEY. It is very likely that the policemen could not afford to do a good deal of cultivation, but it is absurd to say that forage could not be raised for less than $58,000. They have plenty of land and can hire labor, and I venture to say that the forage could be raised for less than $20,000.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I fancy that if the hon. gentleman became a farmer he would find there was not much money in the operation by contract.

Mr. CASEY. I have farmed all my life and by contract. To farm per acre would not cost over $12 or $15 per acre, and that would be a pretty high figure. At this price $58,000 would easily cultivate from 4,000 to 6,000 acres. Oats will readily yield fifty bushels an acre, and 200,000 or 300,000 bushels could be raised for the amount put down for forage, while hay only costs there the labor for cutting. Regarding medicine and medical comforts and hospital expenses, there is an increase of $3,000, while $5,000 less are required for pay, and $18,000 for food. How is this?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We are fitting up an hospital at Regina; and there will also be a new hospital at McLeod and Calgary. Of course, mind you, we have now 500 instead of 300 men.

Mr. CASGRAIN. How is it that we have $58,000 for forage, which is there only needed for about five months in winter; and even then prairie horses which can find grass under the snow, can be used. These horses can be left out all winter and be caught in the spring. This item under the circumstances is enormous and preposterous. The food of 360 horses should not cost so much, unless somebody else is behind the manger to swallow it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I really do not think that if my hon. friend had to go before the Minister of Militia and stand his examination as captain of cavalry, he would pass his examination. I think he would be plucked. These horses are very hardly worked, and the police are very hardly worked. They are constantly in the saddle; and the idea of turning the horses on the grass, and of getting little prairie ponies to be caught with the lasso when wanted to go off on a hard journey across the country, perhaps with prisoners and perhaps on an expedition to watch Indians, and of their riding on horses which would leave marks wherever they went, and green ones at that, across the country—is absurd. These horses must be kept in the highest state of efficiency and vigor, the same as cavalry horses, and they must be continually fed on oats and on dry food.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Ten lbs. of oats are the ration for an ordinary horse, and 11 lbs. for an artillery horse; and the idea of voting $58,000 for oats and forage appears to me to be entirely preposterous. I know something about horses, and 10 lbs. of oats are the ration for an ordinary military horse in the Army Regulations. On the prairies the horses can be picketed. Unless details are given, for my part, when we come to concurrence, I think that we will have something more to say respecting this item.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I might suggest to my hon. friend from L'Islet that the animal of Artemus Ward, of which we heard something last night, may have some of the rations out of this $58,000.

Mr. CHARLTON. I see that Baker & Co. charged, last year, $13,779 for hay, oats, and bran; and the Hudson's Bay Company, $19,696 for hay, oats, and bran. Will the hon. gentleman inform us as to the prices which are paid for these rations?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The prices vary very much in that country, but the price is from 3 cts. to 7 cts. per lb. The estimate is 400 horses at 40 cts. a day.

Mr. CHARLTON. I see that the expenses last year showed an average of $206 a horse, which seems a large sum.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. A horse's rations when they are stationary at head-quarters is 9 lbs. per day, but when travelling they are 16 lbs., and sometimes when hard worked 18 lbs.

219. Amount required for surveys, Dominion lands... $600,000 00

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Perhaps, instead of making a speech, I may give the information in the more condensed form in which it appears in the memoranda supplied to me from the Department:

"This sum is $150,000 in excess of the vote for the current fiscal year. "During the past season the outlines of 800 townships were run, and about 800 townships more were sub-divided and set out for settlement. This season it is expected that the outlines of 800 more townships will be run, and from 1,000 to 1,200 will be sub-divided into quarter sections and set out for settlement.

"These surveys are being prosecuted chiefly along the main line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and although the sub-division of townships last season was upon a scale having no parallel in history, we were still unable to do more than keep pace with the progress of settlement. The prospects of immigration being this year so promising, it is probable that the history of last year will be repeated.

"This spring has been much more favourable than last. Our survey parties got started much earlier than usual, the state of the roads was exceptionally good, the crossing of the streams was much more speedily and successfully accomplished, operations in the field have been commenced earlier and more auspiciously than ever before, and the prospect is that we shall accomplish not only much more work than last year, but that the surveys, although more remote and less accessible than heretofore, will be made at a comparatively less cost to the country.

"The old settlements on the North Saskatchewan—Edmonton and St. Albert—have been surveyed into river lots. Surveys have also been made of lands granted to Colonization Companies, and these latter will be continued and as far as possible completed this season.

"Sub-division surveys of agricultural lands in the Edmonton and Prince Albert country were also made last season, and Prince Albert region, which is expected soon to have the benefit of railway communication, will receive a considerable share of attention this year.

"The Icelandic reserve will be surveyed also, and detached surveys will be made at other points, as the requirements of settlers necessitate.

"The system of having the sub-division of townships performed by contract, although it has its weak points, is thought on the whole to be the best, and is decidedly the most economical. The work is done very cheaply, and on the whole fairly well."

I will now read the memorandum from Capt. Deville, the Chief Inspector of Surveys:

"The scheme proposed for the surveys of 1883, comprises the sub-division into sections of about 1,000 townships, extending from Regina to the Rocky Mountains, along the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and a few townships in the vicinity of Prince Albert, Battleford and Edmonton.

"The cost is estimated at $450 per township.

"The whole of this work is performed under contract at so much per mile of line surveyed.

"Thirty surveyors, under daily pay, will be employed for running the exterior lines of township. It is expected that they will, during the season, survey the outlines of 1,100 townships. Two parties have been working in the Peace River District for the last twelve months, establishing some main or governing lines from which surveys may be started whenever required. It is proposed to keep those two parties in the same district during the coming season.

"The cost of surveys, under daily pay, is estimated at $250,000.

"For miscellaneous expenses, such as examination of surveys, in the field, examination of survey returns, printing of plans, &c., $50,000, making altogether a total of $750,000.

"Of this amount, $600,000 are placed in the Estimates for 1883-84, and $150,000 will be included in the Supplementary Estimates.

"This is the last year when it will be necessary to prosecute the surveys on such a large scale, as the sub-division of townships will be completed from twenty-five to forty miles on each side of the railway. Future operations may be confined to the localities required for immediate settlement.

"The grant for this year is the largest that has ever been, and probably that will ever be asked. Taking this into consideration, it is gratifying to know that there is every prospect of a very successful surveying season, so that adequate returns may be expected for the money expended. Surveyors, if not already at work, will commence in a few days. In a new country where so many unforeseen circumstances combine to thwart the most elaborate plans, the results obtained so far are a matter of congratulation."

That is all the information I can give with regard to the surveys.

Mr. CHARLTON. I notice one or two items in the accounts in connection with the surveys last year, which I think are a little irregular. One D. B. Billings renders an account for services at $2 a day, $730, and a bill for extra services during the same period at the rate of 50 cts. an hour, $337. These extra services amount, in the lowest month to $10, and in the highest month to $73, or $13 more than his wages by the month. He charges for extra services at the rate of $5 a day, though his regular pay is $2 a day. If this is a practice permitted to prevail in the Department, I think it is not a proper one.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. These gentlemen are not permanent civil servants. They are scientific men, surveyors, and they get $2 a day as temporary officers. When reports come in from the surveyors, it is of the utmost importance that they should be examined and approved of at once, and they have to be submitted to competent officers, who check them. These officers have to be well paid.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I desire to make a suggestion. I am sorry to say that some of the surveyors employed by the Department are not equal to the task. Therefore I would suggest that in choosing surveyors, the Department ought to know their antecedents, so as to know what they are able to do. I have been led to believe that the Government have been obliged to pay large sums of money for work that is entirely useless.

Mr. CHARLTON. I find that N. B. Beattie, who contracted for surveying, charges $5.60 for first class, $9.10 for second class, $13.30 for third class. Will the hon. gentleman explain what the different classes are?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Prairie work is first class, prairie and water work is second class, and forest, the most difficult, third class.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Another suggestion I would make is this. All the surveyors ought to be held responsible for the correctness of their surveys. And to this end, each surveyor ought to be supplied with a small label of burnt clay with his name on it, which he ought to be required to deposit under every picket that he plants. They would then be held responsible for their work, and would be all the more careful to lay down their lines.

Mr. BLAKE. Which of the two statements are we to accept as the authoritative statement? There is a discrepancy between them. The first statement said that the outlines of 800 townships were to be run, while the second stated that the number was 1,100.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I read the papers before me that the House might have every information.

Mr. BLAKE. The Secretary's statement contains the observation that there was a weak point in the system of sub-division of contract.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is in the scamping of work, as every contractor is desirable to do his work as cheaply as he can, but, on the other hand, it is economical. Three or four surveyors have slighted their work, and it is only by experience we can know whether they are fit for the work or not; and these surveyors have not been paid.

Mr. BLAKE. I notice the expenditure of $40,000 or $50,000 entered for the maintenance of horses. Is that a mode of keeping accounts? or are the horses brought in in bulk and distributed among the contractors? or is the amount given to contractors for the purchase and maintenance of horses?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The horses are bought and distributed among the surveyors. An officer was sent up to buy them, and he did not advertise for the reason that you must get horses accustomed to the country; and if advertised for the prices would be raised. They are used only for day work.

Mr. BLAKE. Out of the vote for Dominion Lands, under an Order in Council, provision has been made for the payment to the Hon. John O'Connor of certain sums. The papers brought down do not say what these duties are. I think it is on the recommendation of the hon. Minister himself that, out of the appropriation for Dominion Lands, chargeable to Capital, this money is to be paid. A statement of the payments to a comparatively recent date show a payment of $2,000 a quarter to this gentleman. What are the services for which the payment is made?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Order in Council is down. I will not promise to lay it before the House, but I will lay before the hon. gentleman what Mr. O'Connor has done.

Mr. BLAKE. I know a good deal he has done.

Mr. CHARLTON. I find one W. Beattie, advance on contracts, $2,500. This same surveyor had a contract the previous year amounting to $8,702, and was sent away on the main line. He received an advance on the subsequent season's work of $2,500. I find another, Walter Beattie, allowance May and June, $2,110; no details received. This looks suspiciously like a defalcation. I would like information.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am informed the practice is to make advances to every surveyor when he goes out. He makes reports of the work as it progresses, and during the season he gets allowances from time to time, to be accounted for in the end. With respect to Mr. Beattie, his services are to the north and west of Edmonton, at a great distance, and his reports have been delayed in consequence; but he is a good officer.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I understand they give bonds as security for the advances.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. My hon. friend is quite right. In all cases they give bonds, secured by good persons, for the advances.

Mr. CHARLTON. Has the Government been so fortunate as to avoid any losses from advances made to surveyors last year?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They have done their work satisfactorily, except two, who have not fulfilled their contracts, and proceedings are now going on against the securities of these two.

Mr. CHARLTON. I see an item, E. C. Dawson, awarded $500 damages for withdrawing three and a-half townships from his contract. Why were they withdrawn?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. After this surveyor got his contract the boundary of an Indian reserve was finally settled, and it was found that these townships were included in the reserve.

Mr. CHARLTON. I see Col. Dennis charges $431.40 for travelling expenses. Is the colonel still connected with the Department?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I presume so.

Mr. CHARLTON. There is a little matter here which is suggestive, a matter of cab hire, which has figured rather prominently in our Public Accounts. A Mr. Deville went to Montreal and purchased a return ticket amounting to $7, his meals were $1.50, and his cab hire $4.75—rather out of proportion.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It depends on the quantity of driving he did, I suppose.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not suppose the hon. Minister could recollect that detail; but with reference to these advances a good many of us have recollections of a gentleman who was formerly a supporter of the hon. gentleman. He met with rather an unflattering testimonial from his constituents as to the expensive character of the votes that hon. gentleman had received from him in times past, the result of which was that he lost his election, and I am not certain that he did not commence an action against the hon. gentleman for libel. At any rate, he thought his character had been very much aspersed. That gentleman was subsequently about to renew his suit to his constituency, whose attachment to him had been somewhat impaired, and he was supposed to be in a fair way to success. However, the hon. gentleman became reconciled to him, and the next thing we heard of him was, that he was in the North-West on one of these surveys. I would ask whether the operations of that survey have been satisfactory, or whether this abstention from voting was as expensive as the votes formerly were.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not know how much money went to Jones' Locker.

Mr. BLAKE. I see the hon. gentleman knows it quite well.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I find that the gentleman alluded to got a survey, but he did not complete it. But he owes nothing to the Department; there is no default.

Mr. CHARLTON. I notice a charge for silver chronometers. Are the surveyors provided with chronometers by the Government?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Those are given to the daily pay men who do the outlying surveys. The chronometers belong to the Government and are returnable.

Mr. CHARLTON. I see an account rendered by W. F. King, who had made advances to the amount of $15,484 to the surveyors. Has he charge of the surveys?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. King is Captain Deville's chief inspector of surveys.

220. Dominion Lands chargeable to Income..... $140,419.00

Mr. BLAKE. The Inspector of Colonization Societies Townships is, I believe, a new position created since last Session. I would ask the hon. Minister whether it is intended that the officer's services shall be permanent, or whether the appointment was rather with a view to the initiation of arrangements with colonization companies.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Inspector's salary is $2,000. That officer, Mr. Rufus Stephenson, has been appointed for the purpose of inspecting the different colonization societies' lands. The regulations are rather rigid, the companies being obliged to place so many settlers in the townships each year; and strict supervision will be held over those societies. Besides performing these duties, this officer will inspect school lands, lands where parties have settled upon odd-numbered sections before survey, lands as to which parties claim for improvements—a good deal of that work is being thrown on Mr. Stephenson. He has been appointed also to value improvements and lands within the one-mile belt reserved on each side of the Canadian Pacific Railway, to which there was a great rush, and on which people settled, some with reason, and some without; also lands about Regina; also reserved lands at Broadview and other places, where each case must be judged according to its merits.

Mr. BLAKE. The cost of officers of Crown Land agents has almost doubled.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; and I fancy we shall have to add more next year.

Mr. CHARLTON. There are heavy expenses in connection with Crown Timber agencies.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There have been a great many timber grants made, and we have to watch them in order to secure the stumpage and rental.

Mr. CHARLTON. Under the head of Dominion Lands chargeable to Capital, I find a bill for advertising amounting to $9,149, covering 125 newspapers. This must include nearly all the Conservative papers in Canada; there is one Reform paper on the list, the Free Press of this city.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. These advertisements were those in regard to regulations for the sale of land. They were published in many papers at full length. We have, however, altered that system. We insert short notices and refer the parties to the full text of the regulations which may be seen at Winnipeg and other offices.

Mr. CHARLTON. I would urge on the Government the propriety of adopting the businesslike plan of inserting advertisements in papers having the largest circulation, and not in papers because they are party journals.

203. To meet expenses under the Adulteration of Food Act $12,000.00

Mr. COSTIGAN. There is an increase of $2,000, which is intended to provide for operations in the city of London.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The whole matter of the adulteration of food is of considerable importance. The First Minister was kind enough to let this item stand over in order that I might make enquiries and offer a few remarks respecting it; but the hour is so very late and members are so very tired, that, although my remarks would be very valuable, I will dispense with them this year. In the reports of the different analysts, we see how many different articles of food which we continually use, are adulterated, and some of them with injurious ingredients; and hence we can see that this is a matter which deserves public consideration. I find that various suggestions have at times been offered by these analysts as to steps being taken by the Government to ensure better articles both in the way of food and drink being offered for sale; and I was anxious to call the attention of the hon. Minister to it, and to find out whether any of these suggestions have been considered. For instance, in regard to condiments, I see we have summed up the results of the analysis of 132 samples, of which 56 or 57 per cent. were adulterated. In the Montreal and Quebec divisions, there were very large adulterations in this relation, but in Halifax, the spices are all reported pure. Coffee seems to be a particular article on which ingenuity is exercised, for both Montreal and Halifax report that every sample analyzed was impure. Butter is reported in many cases adulterated, but the adulterants are water and salt, which deteriorate the quality, and no doubt reduce the price very much, as well as our reputation as butter makers and exporters, but they cannot be said to be injurious to health. Out of twenty-nine samples of drinking water analyzed, fourteen are classed adulterated or very impure; and there is rather a long report from the different officers with reference to this matter, while the suggestion is made by Dr. Baker Edwards, of Montreal, that filters should be provided and charged for like gas meters. These are a few of the items to which I intended to call the Minister's attention, but it is repugnant to me to speak on any subject when any considerable number of the hon. members of the House is wearied. I can only hope that, on some future occasion, during next Session, this item may come up at an earlier hour, and that a little more attention will be directed to it, because I consider that it is a matter of very great importance indeed.

Resolutions to be reported.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and (at 1:10 o'clock a.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

THURSDAY, 10th May, 1883.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

On Resolution 23,

Post Office and Finance Departments—Contingencies.....$2,000.00

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I called the attention of the hon. Finance Minister to the sum of $520 paid to Senator Kaulbach in connection with legal services supplied to the Savings Bank Department; and I think that he promised to make some explanations regarding it.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I recollect some enquiry being made about it. This Mr. Kaulbach was employed, I think, by the late Minister of Justice three years ago—about 1879 or 1880—to look after a claim against a savings bank agent, who had failed. It was placed in his hands to look after it, and this was the sum paid.

Mr. ROSS. Of course, the hon. Minister will notice that there is something irregular in employing a Senator by the Dominion Government for services of that kind; and it would be well to see that such a circumstance should not occur again. I do not know that it looks very well in the Public Accounts.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I do not see why a Senator should not be so employed, because he is a Senator.

On Resolution 39,

Salaries of officers, and contingencies of Library..$20,260.00

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I think that the hon. Minister of Public Works promised some information when this matter came up again, as to what disposition he was going to make of the Sessional Papers and Records, in placing them around the walls of the reading room for the greater convenience of hon. members.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is a matter which is much more in the hands of the Library Committee than in my own; but I said, at the time, it was a pity that the shelves all around the reading room were not used. Everybody was complaining that in the Library there was not space enough for the books, that a great many which were piled in the rooms, &c., could not be seen, and that it would be better if they were placed on shelves. Then it was stated by some hon. gentleman, that the Votes and deliberations, the Journals and appendices, and all these books might be put on the shelves in the reading room, which would give space in the Library. The objection to this was, that these books would be there without anybody to look after them, and as so many strangers go into the reading room, who very often are not known to the hon. members, these books might be carried away and disappear. It was also suggested that the books might be enclosed in frames and glass; and I think that the hon. leader of the Opposition suggested that wire screens might be provided in place of glass. I think that this would be the proper thing to do; but in this case, before we go to that expense, it should be understood that the Library Committee would direct the librarian to act accordingly. If not done properly, it had better not be attempted.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, you would take notice of the suggestion. There will be one meeting of the Library Committee before we close, and attention might then be called to this proposition.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

On Resolution 40,

Printing, binding, and distributing the Laws.....$12,000.00

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). The hon. Minister of Finance promised, before Concurrence, to look up the mode of distributing the Laws, and to tell the House on what basis the distribution was made, to whom the books were sent, &c. I called attention to the fact that magistrates complained that sometimes they failed to get what they had, or that they had a right to expect, namely, a regular copy of the Dominion Statutes. In our own town, for instance, our police magistrate failed to get them regularly, and I was ignorant of the mode of distribution.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I thought the enquiry was made especially with reference to the mechanics' institutes. I enquired into it, and I find that they are not sent there except in one or two special cases, when special applications were made. According to the paper placed in my hand, every qualified magistrate receives, or should receive, a copy; also each secretary or warden, I forget which, and the leading Judges and officials of that kind; but they are not sent to mechanics' institutes, except to one or two, at the request of individual members of the Government.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Does the hon. gentleman know how they are sent? Do they go directly, or are they sent through some intermediate officer?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. No; they are sent to the qualified Justices of the Peace.

On Resolution 55,

Immigration$517,721.00

Mr. BLAKE. Letters and announcements have appeared lately in the public papers, some of them under Sir Alexander Galt's signature, stating that a cablegram was received by him, announcing that mechanics and others were urgently wanted in the older Provinces, and that the agents of the Government should use every effort to secure them. I would like to ask whether these letters were genuine, and whether a cablegram was sent.

Mr. POPE. A cablegram was sent. A report was circulated throughout England that working people had arrived in this country, and could not get employment. Sir Alexander Galt cabled us, and I cabled back that agricultural laborers and general laborers were very much required. I said, and I told the hon. gentleman the other night, that mechanics would also get employment if they would turn their attention to farming.

Mr. BLAKE. That is not the cablegram; I am speaking of the cablegram.

Mr. POPE. I said, also, that mechanics would find work in old Canada as well as in Manitoba. But what I have always said to the hon. gentleman I repeat now—that we assist agricultural laborers to come to this country; and I said I did not object, and I do not object now, to mechanics coming over, because they make some of the very best agriculturists that we get, although we do not give them assisted passages.

Mr. BLAKE. I am not criticising the hon. gentleman's policy. I only wanted to know whether, as a matter of fact, the cablegram was genuine which stated that mechanics, as well as agricultural laborers and farmers, were urgently required in the older Provinces, and that it was the duty of the agents of the Government to use every effort to secure them. I am glad to know that there is such a demand for mechanics in the older Provinces.

Mr. POPE. There is a demand for agricultural laborers.

Mr. BLAKE. I said mechanics.

Mr. POPE. I know. There is a very large demand for agricultural laborers; and as I said in that telegram, there is also a demand for a certain number of mechanics, and I have never hesitated in encouraging them to this country, because two-thirds of them turn their attention to agriculture.

Mr. BLAKE. Then I understand that what the hon. gentleman said was an urgent demand for mechanics, and that, not being able to get employment as mechanics, they would have to turn their attention to agriculture.

Mr. POPE. The hon. gentleman cannot get me away from the point by any side issue. There is employment for mechanics, both in the old and new Provinces; but I do not feel that we should give them assisted passages. I have said to that class, in whom the hon. gentleman shows such an interest, that to a certain extent I encourage mechanics to come to this country; and I have told them that, if they were industrious and attended to their business, they will soon become employers.

On Resolution 52,

To meet expenses in connection with Health Statistics.....$20,000.00

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman was to give us some information on this item, as to the plan he was going to adopt.

Mr. POPE. I did not make any memorandum of it. I know that we discussed it, but I told the hon. gentleman that I was sorry my hon. friend the Minister of Railways, who took a great interest in the matter, was not present, as he knew more about it than I did; and now, as he is here, I will ask him to explain the matter.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I did take a very great interest in the subject, and I met a very large deputation of professional and other gentlemen, including the mayors of cities, and the determination arrived at was to use the health officers appointed in the various cities by the municipal authorities, and to pay them a certain amount according to population, in order to obtain for the Department statistics connected with the public health, and in order that the Department might be enabled to consult with the local authorities as to the best means to be adopted for promoting the public health. I think that the House will agree with me that it is a question of very great moment. It is one of prime importance, whether considered in relation to the question of life, or the progress of the country. The statistics connected with public health have a very great influence in determining the opinion of persons who are going to any country, because in proportion as these statistics show that the death rate is low, these localities are regarded as more attractive for settlement. Whether taken in regard to the question of the protection of life and health, or the promoting of the general prosperity of the country by giving confidence in it in regard to so important a consideration as the good health of the community, I do not think too much importance can be attached to this subject, and I believe this small vote may be used in such a way as to be productive of a vast amount of good.

Mr. BLAKE. The general observations of the hon. gentleman are such as we can all confidently subscribe to; but the information which we desire, and which the hon. Minister of Agriculture was not able to give us, and asks the hon. Minister of Railways to supply, is on what system the vote is to be expended. The hon. Minister of Railways has told us it is proposed to deal with the persons in charge of the sanitary affairs of the localities and to obtain from them certain information, but to what extent and in what manner he does not explain. I suppose by the comparatively limited vote, it was only intended to ascertain some of the conditions of existence as they affect public health rather than to attempt obtaining a complete register of vital statistics.

Such a register, unless complete, is utterly useless, and unless carried out with a high degree of accuracy is also utterly useless. Therefore, one does not want to see—with all the appreciation of the importance of the subject which the hon. gentleman suggests we entertain, and which I believe we do entertain—the country committed to that which may involve a very large expenditure beyond what we supposed by the vote will be guaranteed, or which may involve the expenditure of the particular vote for abortive ends. In the lucid explanation of the hon. Minister of Railways we have no information of the details of the system he proposes, or as to the manner in which he expects to attain the results he contemplates.

Mr. FOSTER. I wish to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Agriculture to the criminal statistics contained in his report. A few years ago I had occasion to make some enquiries with reference to criminal statistics, and I found that his report was not very useful in that respect. Take for instance a charge in this report, that of drunkenness with which I am most familiar, and which is, of course, quite out of the comprehension of the other hon. members of this House. I find that in Ontario, there were, according to this report, 7,836 charged with that offence, and in Quebec only 1,690. Now, that either shows a great preponderance of temperance sentiment in Quebec—and I would be glad to believe it did—or it shows that the statistics are not complete.

Mr. BLAKE. It may show another thing.

Mr. FOSTER. In Nova Scotia the statistics are only collected from six counties, and in New Brunswick they are only gathered from a few; so that there must be some defect which makes these statistics entirely useless for the purpose of comparing the criminality of the different Provinces with each other; and I cannot see what great benefit they are, unless they give some data on which a comparison may be founded.

Mr. BLAKE. I have not had the opportunity of looking at this year's criminal statistics, but I hope they do contain comparative statements, both as to former years and as to the Provinces to which they refer. The hon. gentleman says these statistics of Quebec and Ontario, on the subject of committals for drunkenness, show either that Quebec is much more temperate than Ontario, or the statistics are inaccurate. There is yet a third proposition, namely, that the administration of the law may be more lax in Quebec and fewer drunken people taken up there.

Mr. FOSTER. In making up that 1,690 in Quebec, I find that only Quebec, Montreal and St. Francis are included, and one can scarcely come to the conclusion that these are the only places in that Province in which drunkenness exists, or in which people are taken up for it. Again, in Nova Scotia the only places taken into account are one city and five counties. I pretend that these statistics are almost entirely useless unless they furnish a basis for a comparison of the criminality of the different Provinces. I would rather see $4,000 given to some committee of Commissioners to gather statistics carefully from the different institutions, and with regard to the different subjects each year, that we might have something really useful.

Mr. DESJARDINS. I think the hon. leader of the Opposition went out of his way to save Ontario from the responsibility of the number of crimes committed there. If he knew the Province of Quebec better he would see that the statistics are quite correct.

Mr. BLAKE. I am not saying they are not; I am suggesting that they are.

Mr. DESJARDINS. I maintain that we can accept the figures as representing the actual state of temperance in our Province. It is well known that in Ontario there are over 3,000 licences granted where there are scarcely fifteen granted in Quebec; and outside of the large centres we find very few criminal cases arising from intemperate habits. I am glad to say that in our rural districts temperance is well kept.

Mr. PLATT. In the Province of Ontario efforts are already put forth, and public money is being expended for the purpose of collecting vital statistics, and with very good results. I would ask the hon. Minister if we are to have a separate set of officers collecting the same information, or, so far as Ontario is concerned, is this scheme meant to supplement the machinery now in operation?

Mr. POPE. Under this plan we only propose to collect statistics in certain portions of the country, but the plan will embrace mortuary as well as vital statistics. At first, we propose to apply it to eleven cities of Canada, comprising the capitals of the several Provinces and other cities containing 25,000 inhabitants or over. We shall collect mortuary and vital statistics, as well as enumerate all diseases and causes of death, and gather collateral information on the state of the public health. That is not now done by every Provincial official that I know of. Last fall, a conference of medical men on this subject was held in Ottawa, and was composed of fifty or sixty of the foremost physicians of various parts of the Dominion, and these gentlemen drew up a scheme, based on that of 1879, for the collection, tabulation and publication of mortuary and vital statistics. This scheme is made dependent on the organization of Local Boards, and the appointment of local sanitary officers, who are to be the officers for the collection of such mortuary and vital statistics. Upon the strong representations of the gentlemen composing this conference, the Government decided to ask for $20,000 this year, and it is the intention to apply the scheme, after the first year, to the smaller cities and towns of the country. The allotment to the cities from the grant is composed of a bulk sum, which is not to exceed $400 in each case, and a per capita subsidy of one cent per head of the population. Then it was supposed by my deputy, to whose valuable services I am almost entirely indebted in the preparation of this scheme, that the cost would likely be as follows in the several places: Montreal, $1,800; Toronto, $1,260; Quebec, $920; Halifax, $760; Hamilton, $760; Ottawa, $670; St. John, N.B., $660; Winnipeg, $480; Fredericton, $460; Victoria, B.C., $460. My hon. friend must recollect that this is the first attempt to collect health statistics and information that will be of use to the medical profession and the public generally; that we are just beginning the work, and that we cannot make any very clear or positive statement in detail as to the cost. I hope that after the experience of this year we will be able, next year, to give a closer approximation of the cost.

Mr. PLATT. The hon. Minister ought to be aware of the fact—and if not I will make him aware of it—that all the based information which he proposes to collect by his system is already being collected by the Ontario Board of Health, and these mortuary and vital and health statistics, and statistics regarding the various diseases, are all arranged for in Ontario, and a law is in operation for that purpose under which public money is being expended. The question I asked the hon. Minister was whether that portion of the grant belonging to Ontario is meant to supplement the action of those officers already engaged in that work, or will another set of officers be engaged to collect exactly the same class of statistics at an extra expense.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say, in reference to the remarks of the hon. gentleman, that there was a large delegation of highly intelligent and able medical men, and other gentlemen in Ontario, who came to my hon. friend to urge the action that is now being taken. Notwithstanding that a great deal has been done in the way of collecting statistics of this character in the Province of Ontario, it was not felt that it was desirable to supplement the provincial system by the action taken by my hon. friend. As to the agency that is to be used, my hon. friend does not propose to select the officers at all; these officers will be selected by municipal authorities, they are to be the health officers who are already engaged by the local authorities, and the grant will be used by my hon. friend to supplement the salaries they are already receiving as such officers in the various districts, and will be used for the purpose of furnishing to the Department medical statistics of this character.

On Resolution 109,

Public Buildings, Ottawa—Additional Public Buildings, Wellington street..... $200,000.00

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the hon. Minister of Public Works will state the plan by which the Government proposes to expropriate the property.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The amount asked in the Supplementary Estimates, $84,000, will not be sufficient to meet the total sum required. There will be required about $5,000 more. Of course, the hon. gentleman must know that we could not state exactly the amount required. I have obtained the following note from the Department. We have paid to the proprietors for the land $87,849, and then we have settled with five tenants, $1,250, and then there is the case of Mr. Mitchell of the Free Press, whose lease, I think, expires on 1st October. If we require the building before that time, compensation will have to be paid.

Mr. BLAKE. Then the principle is to deal with the owners of the property, and to pay the tenants damages for an early determination of their leases.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We purchase the property, say three months ago, and from that moment the amount of the rental belongs to the Government, and we settle with tenants.

Mr. BLAKE. You purchased the property subject to the leases, and if you want to take the property away from the tenant you make arrangements with him to do so.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That was the only way to do it under the circumstances.

On Resolution 168,

Salaries and disbursements of fishery overseers and wardens..... $110,100.00

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne). I think that the hon. Minister promised us some information with reference to reports under this item.

Mr. BOWELL. I found when I went to the Department that the reports were so voluminous that it was utterly impossible to bring them down. Mr. Whitcher set a man at work to copy them, but I told him to desist; I thought it unnecessary to go to all that trouble and expense as the papers could not be ready in time; but if any member desires to see any one of these particular reports which is not of a confidential character, he may see it. I trust that this will be satisfactory, as it would be utterly impossible to copy them in time.

On Resolution 164,

Completion and construction of lighthouses and fog-alarms..... $40,600.00

Mr. CHARLTON. I think that some further explanations were to be offered regarding this item.

Mr. BOWELL. I am not aware of it; a full list of those proposed to be erected, together with the cost of each, and $5,000 for completion and repairs, was laid before every member of the House. If there is any particular point to which the hon. gentleman refers, I shall be glad to give him any information at my command.

Mr. CHARLTON. The question which was raised was with reference to the definition of the words "fog-alarm" or "fog-whistle," and the propriety of putting up bells, which could only be heard a distance of 200 or 300 yards, in place of whistles.

Mr. BOWELL. I have no recollection of any explanation being asked or promised. I remember that my hon. friend from Algoma (Mr. Dawson) found fault with the use of the word "fog-alarm," and signified that something more was required in the interests of navigation, and he suggested that the words "fog-alarm" should be struck out of the Estimates in future, and something submitted which would convey the meaning more correctly. The principal objection taken by the hon. member for Algoma was to the character of the fog-alarms which were erected on dangerous rocks, and he wanted something which could be heard at a greater distance, and would be more effective. I will, of course, bring that matter to the attention of the Government, with a view to effecting an improvement.

Mr. MITCHELL. The point which has been raised by my hon. friend, I may say has been under the consideration of the Department for a long time. They have abandoned fog-bells and guns, and have adopted a number of what are called fog-whistles or fog-trumpets. There are several kinds in use, and for some years past the Department has been endeavoring to get the most perfect trumpet, or signal, or whatever you may choose to call it, that they could get. They have recently adopted a self-acting one, which I am told combines economy with efficiency, though I do not know much about it myself. I believe the first fog-alarms or trumpets which I have ever heard of were erected in Canada, and I have never heard that anyone could point to our system as being in any particular very faulty. It is certain at all events that both the United States and Great Britain have copied from our system. I quite remember that, in 1871 or 1872, the elder brethren of the Trinity House were specially sent out from England and spent several months on this continent, examining the fog-alarm system, as well of the United States as Canada. I was Minister at the time, and we sent one of the steamers in charge of the Deputy of the Department, to accompany these gentlemen through our whole fog-alarm and lighthouse system along the River St. Lawrence and the Atlantic coast of the Dominion. After spending ten or twelve days making a thorough examination they went to the United States and thoroughly examined the system there, and when they returned to England they made a full report on the lighthouse and fog-alarm system of this country, and gave to Canada a high meed of praise for everything they had seen in connection with that service. I have no doubt that the suggestions which were made by them were carried out, and that the same system we have in Canada was adopted on the coasts of the United Kingdom. If the Departments continue as they have been going on, creating a greater security to vessels approaching our coasts, we will be in no way behind any nation of the world in giving that security which is needed in connection with this particular service. I take occasion to make these remarks because, perhaps, the acting Minister is not so familiar with the earlier history of the Department as I am.

Mr. DAWSON. I agree with the hon. gentleman as to the fog-alarm and coast service of the Dominion—it is improving very fast. What I called attention to before was this: That in making arrangements with the United States Government for putting up a lighthouse at Passage Island, which is in United States territory, though useful only to Canadian shipping, they arranged to put a light there in consideration of the Canadian Government putting one on Colchester reef. In making these arrangements the words "fog-alarm" were used in the correspondence, and instead of putting up a fog-whistle, which is the proper kind of fog-alarm, they put a bell, which cannot be heard at any great distance in stormy weather, even if it is rather a powerful one. What I suggested was, that in carrying out the new arrangement with regard to the building of a lighthouse on Colchester reef, the attention of the United States Government should be called to the matter, and instead of putting up a fog-alarm in the form of a bell they should be asked to put a fog-whistle which can be heard at a distance, and thus conform to the spirit of the understanding.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think it right to say that all that has been said by the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell), and a great deal more that might be said in the same direction, is not only strictly true, but reflects the highest credit, not only on the Government of Canada but upon the hon. gentleman himself. I went with the Vice-Admiral of the Halifax station, Sir James Hope, in a ship of war to test and investigate one of the early fog-trumpets which were placed on the coast at Sambro' by my hon. friend, and the report was afterwards made by the Admiralty to the Imperial Government, stating that it was not only a wonderful success, but superior to anything they had ever investigated as a fog-alarm. I may state that I myself have heard one of the fog-trumpets erected by the hon. gentleman at a distance of thirty miles; and this one on the Sambro' coast to which I have referred, could not only be heard at a great distance, but was so constructed as not only to give the alarm to ships approaching the coast in a dense fog, but by timing the succession of the reports they were able to locate the ship and tell the exact distance the ship would be from the point of danger where the alarm was placed. There is no doubt at all that the attention which the hon. gentleman gave to this very important question in connection with his other exertions in lighting the coasts of Canada, have done a great deal to raise the country in the estimation of all sea-faring people, who are so greatly interested in this and other countries in having the coasts of the country properly protected. I am satisfied that no expenditure of money can be made more valuable to a great sea-faring country like ours, with an enormous line of sea coast, than the expenditure which has been made, and is being made, to light the coasts, and erect these fog-alarms, fog-whistles, and signals of danger in the fogs which occasionally are found upon our coasts.

On Resolution 199,

Excise..... $288,380.00

Mr. COSTIGAN. When this item was under discussion in the Committee, some objection was taken, particularly with reference to the appointment of an additional officer at Sarnia. The statement I made that that appointment was made on representations from the Inspector seemed to be doubted, and I wish, therefore, to read some proofs of what I stated. As far back as November 14th, last, the following letter was addressed to the Commissioner:—

"Sir,—I have the honor to transmit herewith a communication from Mr. Collector Gerald, of London, asking for two additional officers. I consider they should be given him as soon as possible, as the removal of Officer Cameron to Perth, to relieve Officer Mason, who is now on duty at Costicook, and the starting of additional manufactories at Sarnia, where another will be required, thus making it absolutely necessary that two officers be sent to the London Division at once to enable Mr. Gerald to efficiently carry on the work."

On January 15th, 1883, Mr. Davis, the Inspector, reported as to the candidates who had successfully passed their examinations, and in the fourth paragraph of his report he says:

"It is impossible for one officer to do the work at Sarnia properly. Another should be sent to help Mr. Elwood."

That additional officer was appointed, or two more were appointed for the London district, and Mr. Slattery was directed to go to the office at Sarnia, because he had lived there. That, I think, establishes the fact clearly, that the appointment was not made, as the hon. member for West Lambton (Mr. Lister) stated the other night, merely for the purpose of rewarding this man for political services rendered. The appointment was made at the suggestion of an officer, and who should clearly—and I think the House will be satisfied with the evidence—see that the appointment was necessary. I was also asked to give a statement of the increase of revenue, because it was charged that the effect of the appointment was to saddle the country with an additional expense of $500 or $600, to reward a political servant. Now, I will give the House some very interesting information on that point. The receipts of that division have been as follows:—In 1878, $17,602; in 1879, $20,111; in 1880, $29,000; in 1881, $21,000; in 1882, $23,000; and in the ten months of this year, $26,000; or, making a proportionate allowance for the other two months, $31,000 for the 12 months. That shows a very considerable increase in the revenues; but that is not the most important part of the matter. The most important is that Sarnia was formerly a division in itself, in which there was a collector appointed by the late Administration, and a very strong friend of the party then in power, at $1,400 a year, and an assistant at $750 a year; that made the expense of that office $2,150. In 1880, I think the collector died. It was then found that the division was not large enough to justify such a large expenditure, and it was taken into the London division, one officer being appointed to do the work at Sarnia at a salary of $800, so that, instead of increasing the expense of that office, we have reduced it from $2,150 to $800. The work has recently been increasing, and we have sent an additional temporary officer to assist. The principal industry there, subject to Excise, is the manufacture of malt. In 1878 the manufacture of malt then amounted to 175,000 lbs.; in 1879, it was 32,000 lbs.; in 1880, 53,000 lbs.; in 1881, it was, 23,000 lbs.; in 1882, it went up to 473,000 lbs., and up to April 30th, 1883, it has been 510,000 lbs. These figures show the necessity there existed for some help. The number of manufactories has grown from three, which was the number from 1878 to 1881, to seven at present. I think the House will now understand that this was not a political appointment, but was necessary in order that the service of that office might be performed sufficiently, and I think the hon. gentleman who made the charge the other night must feel that it has no foundation whatever.

Mr. LISTER. The hon. Minister states that the revenue has increased to such an extent as to render another appointment necessary. How much more is the revenue of 1882, than the revenue of 1880?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The revenue for this year is about $2,000 more than it was in 1880; but the manufactories have increased from three to seven, which accounts for the increased work more than the mere collection of revenue.

Mr. LISTER. I only know of two manufactories. However, I wish the hon. gentleman to understand that I did not state that the revenue had decreased; I merely asked for an explanation of the case. I stated that, so far as the gentleman who was appointed was concerned, that I had no objection to him on account of his ability or capacity, because I believed him thoroughly qualified; but the objection I took was that the appointment was made, not because it was necessary, but for the purpose of rewarding a strong supporter of hon. gentlemen opposite. I do not object to hon. gentlemen appointing their own friends, for the country expects that, but what I do object to, is the appointment of a man to a position when there is no need of such an appointment. Now, so far as the collectorship of that place is concerned,

Mr. COSTIGAN.

I may say that up to the death of the late collector, which, I believe, was in 1878, the office at Sarnia had been the head office of a division, and London was a separate division; but now the office of Sarnia has been merged in that of London, of which Sarnia is made an outpost. The collector at Sarnia had been appointed previous to the time Mr. Mackenzie came into power, and remained there until his death. A committee was formed in the town of Sarnia by gentlemen who supported hon. gentlemen opposite for the purpose of recommending to the Government a successor to the office when it became vacant. When it became vacant hon. gentlemen opposite were in power, and three out of the four of the committee applied for the place, and, in order to get out of the difficulty, the office was abolished. Since this matter came up before the House the other day, I have received a letter from Mr. Slattery, in which he states that I did him an injustice; and as I would be sorry that any statement of mine would have the effect of injuring his feelings, or of hurting him in any possible way, I hasten to declare that he states he did not circulate the manifesto of the hon. gentleman. I am glad to know he did not. He had a right to do it, but he says he did not, and as he thinks he has been injured in some way, I make this public statement for his benefit. So far as manufactories are concerned, I can only repeat that there is, to my knowledge, only one additional factory in the town of Sarnia, and that is the malt works, which were only started, I think, a year ago. It is a common rumor in that part of the country, that Mr. Elwood, who has been in the office but two years, is quite able to perform all its duties. Of course, the other gentleman has been appointed, and is now in the Civil Service, and that is an end to the matter. But I do not think the work, or the increased revenue of the office, justified the appointment.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman seems to attach a great deal of importance to the difference of receipts in the office between 1880 and the present time. I say there has been an increase of $2,000. He seems to overlook the point that the $29,000 collected in that division were collected by one officer getting $1,400 and another getting $750—a total cost of $2,150. The revenue for 1882 amounted, for ten months, to $26,000, or at the same rate, $30,000 a year which was being collected by one man for $800. Then, not entirely on account of $2,000 increase in receipts, but also on account of the additional work created by the increased number of factories, as seen by the report—and what better evidence could the hon. gentleman want—this additional man was sent, on the representation and requisition of our officers, temporarily to assist Mr. Elwood.

Mr. LISTER. What additional factories are there? I know of only one the malt factory, and I think one man can collect $32,000 as well as $28,000.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I cannot name them, but I take the information I get from the officers of the Department; and, according to their report, there are seven additional places working under the Excise Law.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Possibly the hon. Minister may comprise all the factories that would be included when Sarnia was a division.

Mr. COSTIGAN. In the first place, we are discussing the duties attached to the office held by Mr. Elwood in his division—you may call it the town of Sarnia, or it may include the outskirts, or a portion of the next township—but it is all taken in from the Inland Revenue at London. He is appointed at Sarnia, and all the duties he has to perform is to attend to and look after seven manufacturing establishments in his district.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). What does that district comprise?

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is known as Sarnia. I do not know what its limits are. The hon. gentleman knows the extent of Sarnia.

Mr. PATERSON. It is the town of Sarnia, that is all.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The manufactories at the outskirts of the town may be included in this report. It is stated in the return that there are seven manufacturing establishments within the limits of that officer's jurisdiction. To enable him to discharge the duties, another officer has been sent from London there. That will be the effect of it. If the work became less he could be removed to some other place where his services would be more required; but at the present he is required there, as has been shown by the report of that officer.

Mr. LISTER. One word of explanation. The hon. gentleman has said that the expenses up to the time of the death of the late collector amounted to $2,150, and that on his death an officer was appointed at a salary of $800. Now, at the time it was a division, the hon. gentleman must remember that he had the officer at Sarnia to do the work at Petrolia and other places in that division. Petrolia is as large as Sarnia, and has more manufactories than Sarnia, so that the work done in that office was more than twice—I may say three times—as much as it was from the time it ceased to be a division; and Mr. Wood, when he went into the office at $800 a year, had not more than one-third the work the old collector had to do, so that in point of fact there has been no saving at all.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It was understood that on this matter we should have more latitude, that we were to have a full understanding of the question when it came up. Could the hon. Minister tell us the number of manufactories subject to supervision at Sarnia in January, 1883?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Seven.

Mr. PATERSON. Then at that time there was precisely the same number. The officer runs it along, and is apparently able to run it along, until this gentleman is appointed some months after the election. He had run it for a considerable time, from June up to January, with the same number of establishments, before it was found out that he required assistance. Now, I would call the attention of the House to the fact that the officers do report that two extra men are required for the London division, but the London division comprises a large extent of territory, and when those men are appointed one is detailed to go to Sarnia to assist the officer there—I think one of his officers does mention Sarnia separately. But the hon. Minister himself has told us that Mr. Slattery has been appointed there temporarily. Now, if that is the case—and the hon. Minister gave us to understand that it was—he admits that there is no necessity for placing him there permanently; there may have been for a short time a pressure upon the officer there who was entitled to get relief from the head office at London. But we understood before from the hon. Minister that this officer was appointed permanently, that his services were requisite. With all deference to the hon. Minister I think he has failed to make out just as strong a case as he desired to. Further than that, I may say, though I do not wish to find too much fault with him, that he was not sufficiently explicit in making his statements, as hon. gentlemen on this side of the House—myself among the number—were rather led to a conclusion different from what we have just found to be the actual condition of affairs.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Perhaps I have not been explicit enough; perhaps I have left unsaid a great many things I might have said; perhaps I might have paid the hon. gentleman in his own coin; perhaps I might have wounded them as they would endeavor to wound me; but I tell you, Mr. Speaker, that I care little for the insinuations the hon.

gentleman has let fall. He has entirely misrepresented the statement I made so frankly before the House, he has tried to mislead the House, and I am not disposed to allow the hon. gentleman to do so.

Mr. PATERSON, Say how.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman says that because this man continued to do the work a certain time without an officer, that was proof that he had no necessity for an officer. Did I not state clearly to the House that in consequence of the passing of the Civil Service Act we were unable to make any appointments until examinations took place, and until we had a list from which to choose our men? But he says that the officer reported that two men were required for the London division, but said nothing about Sarnia. The hon. gentleman drew his conclusion from a hint given by the hon. member for Lambton who, I am glad to say, retracted the accusation he made the other night, when he accused me of having made the appointment from a political point of view, and in order to reward this gentleman for carrying certain circulars. I told him I knew nothing about who carried the circulars. He would not accept that; but to-day he has acknowledged that he did make a mistake at the time. Now, let us see what the officer at London did say. I have a letter from Mr. Gerald, collector at London, who says:

"I beg to inform you that two additional officers are required in this division, viz., one to take charge of Slater's malt house, recently supervised by Mr. Officer Cameron, and one at Sarnia to assist Officer Elwood, who will now have more work than he can attend to."

Is that plain enough for the hon. gentleman? This was on November 10th.

Mr. PATERSON. I said that.

Mr. COSTIGAN. This document proves an additional officer was required for that place, and because we could not send one in time, we appointed Mr. Slattery temporarily, before he entered the London division. But Mr. Slattery is not there now, and I gave the hon. gentleman the figures to show that the statement he made, that he had saddled the country with $600 additional, is not true, because the expense of that office has not been increased, and is nothing compared to what it was before.

Mr. LISTER. Nor the work either.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Who was the occupant of the office in 1878? I suppose the hon. gentleman would have had a grievance if he found that, because the receipts of that office at that time did not justify the expenditure, we had removed the officer. But he was allowed to remain in the office, though a strong opponent of the present Government politically. Hon. gentlemen were fond of appointing their friends and finding places for them, and there was a good opportunity of filling that place by a political supporter at $1,400 a year. Surely the hon. gentleman cannot complain because we allowed one of his friends to remain in office and draw that salary. But we did not fill that place by putting in a political supporter, but we brought Sarnia into the London division, and reduced the expenses of that office down to $800. Now, on account of the increase of work, on account of the report of our own officer, and acting in perfect good faith, we have made this change, the hon. gentleman complains of it. The hon. gentleman says, or insinuates, that I ought to send a man there as a probationary clerk; he says I say that this is not a permanent employment. I say that no probationary officer is a permanent officer; every man appointed in our service is changed from one place to another wherever he is most required. If he is required at Sarnia to-day, he goes to Sarnia; if he is required at London to-morrow, he goes to London, but he is not continued there any longer than he is required.

Mr. LISTER. I desire to say—

Mr. BOWELL. Order. I would remind the hon. gentleman that we are not in Committee, and for him to speak several times on this question is certainly contrary to the rule.

Mr. CHARLTON. The discussion should be allowed to proceed, and should not be stopped at this point, when it looks as if the Government were afraid of the matter being further discussed.

Mr. RYKERT. It was not even asked that this item should be fully discussed on Concurrence. The railway policy was the only matter left open for full discussion.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have no knowledge of what occurred in Committee, and it is for the House itself to say whether it will allow its Rules to be suspended or superseded; but it is irregular for the hon. gentleman to speak more than once. It is unfortunate that the discussion was not taken in Committee.

Mr. PATERSON. What I stated was, that it was understood that we were to discuss this item; but when the Chairman of the Committee has stated that there was not any understanding to that effect, I feel it to be my duty to bow to his opinion.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). It is hardly fair, after the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue had made his statement, that the debate should be closed and a reply not allowed to be made from this side of the House.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not recollect any instance on which so many items have been concurred in with so little waste of time as was the case this afternoon. If a few observations are desired to be made by hon. gentlemen it will be conceding the amenities of the occasion by not raising any objections to that course.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Of course, the hon. gentleman is perfectly correct when he says that Concurrence has progressed with much celerity. I think the Chairman of the Committee has stated the fact as it occurred; but, of course, if it is desired, on the other side, that there should be an answer given to the hon. Minister's statement, it is not unreasonable that this should be done.

Mr. LISTER. I only desire to say one word or two, and I can assure the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue that there is nothing further from my thoughts than to wound his feelings by word, act, or deed. I am here as a representative of a constituency, and I conceive it to be my duty to discuss this appointment. So far as the matter relates to Mr. Slattery, I desire to say that representations made by me the other evening that the appointment was made for the purpose then stated were based on information given to me. I do not retract the statement. I accept the explanation of Mr. Slattery; he said he did not circulate the pamphlets, and I have so stated to the House. I could not be asked to do less or more. I have simply discharged what I conceive to be my duty as a man having to some extent, at least, a sense of honor. I have before stated why this vacancy was not filled. Hon. gentlemen opposite would have the House understand that it was not filled out for economical reasons; that on the decease of the late collector the Government, with that economy which has always characterized it, did not fill up the office for the purpose of saving money. I have stated that the reason why the office was not filled up was that three out of the four of a committee appointed to recommend applicants to the Government had been applicants for the office themselves, and that the gentleman who opposed my colleague in East Lambton and who expected to have opposed me, found he could not get over the difficulty, and the office was abolished in order to obviate the difficulty. As I stated before, no saving has been effected, because what has been saved in that direction has been added to the expenses of the London division. If the division had remained as it was before the death of Mr. Glasher there would have been the same receipts, the work would have been the same, and the same number of officers would have been necessary. Since his death one man has discharged the duties of the office up to the appointment of the gentleman whose name has been so frequently mentioned; and the Minister says another appointment was necessary, and had been recommended. If it had been recommended, he should listen to the recommendation of the officer, and, under those circumstances, he probably is blameless; but it is difficult for the people of the county to understand why the appointment was made, they being familiar with the circumstances and the duties of the office, and the manner in which Mr. Elwood performed the duties in the past. I do not desire to prolong the discussion. I make these remarks, believing that what I am stating is substantially correct, and that the Minister is relieved of responsibility, because he has produced a recommendation from his chief officer; but I believe the appointment was not necessary.

On Resolution 183,

Canada Gazette.....$4,500.00

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Were we not to have a statement concerning the revenue of the Canada Gazette?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I find that for the year 1881-82 the Canada Gazette reached 2,246 pages, an increase of 368 pages, and the expenditure a total of $3,828.06, while the receipts were as follows:—The income for the same period was more than double that of the previous year, or $3,084.42. Subscription and sales amounted to $377.84, and advertising to $2,706, making a total of $3,084.72 of receipts against a cost of $3,828.06,

On Resolution 201,

Weights, Measures and Gas.....$73,000.00

Mr. LAURIER. I would like to ask the hon. Minister on this occasion, whether any steps are to be taken with respect to the officers who were dismissed a few years ago, touching their payments into the Superannuation Fund. Many of these officers, when the service was organized in 1879 and 1880, were dismissed, and it seemed an injustice that they should not be refunded their contributions to the fund mentioned. I remember, that at the time I called the attention of the then hon. Minister, Mr. Baby, to the fact, and he promised to enquire into the circumstances; but I am not aware whether anything has been done in that respect since.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The matter has been under the consideration of the Government, and it will shortly be disposed of.

Mr. LAURIER. I am very glad to get this information. This subject cannot require a great deal of attention, and only needs looking into to discover what they contributed to that fund, which sums should be refunded.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not think there should have been as long hesitation as there has been about this matter. Why, a number of men were appointed to different offices; and Parliament thought fit to abolish these offices. They had paid, meantime, into the Superannuation Fund. Now, under the law, if they had been in the service for a considerable time, the Ministry might have added a number of years to their period of service on the abolition of their offices, so as to give them a large superannuation. So favorably does the law consider the cases of those who are removed from the public service by the abolition of their offices, that this is the subject of a provision in the Superannuation Act. Now all that is asked by these persons who were removed out of the public service, because Parliament chose to abolish these offices—I am not now enquiring for what purpose—is, that the money which was taken from them in order that they might be entitled to the benefit of the Superannuation Act, should be returned to them therefore there ought to be no hesitation about it.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. My hon. friend, I think, in answering the question put by the hon. member for Quebec East, stated that the matter had been under the consideration of the Government, and when the Supplementary Estimates were brought down, the hon. gentleman would see that the Government had not lost sight of these cases.

Mr. LAURIER. I do not know whether that statement was made, which I am very glad to learn; but if made, I did not catch it.

On Resolution 81,

Intercolonial Railway—St. Charles Branch and Ferry between Lévis and Quebec $133,000.00

Mr. RICHEY. Whilst expressing a desire to see all possible facilities secured for connections with the Intercolonial, and heartily approving of this item, as conducing to this end, I should like to enquire of the Government whether they have considered the report which has been recently laid on the Table of the House, in connection with the question referred to a Select Committee touching Inter-provincial trade? I may state that the evidence brought before that Committee has revealed a marvellous increase in the trade between these Provinces during the period which has elapsed since Confederation. Still, at the same time, it points to the fact that there is yet room for a very large augmentation of that trade, and that a very great portion of the traffic which would come down our own channels, is diverted through the United States, owing to the inadequacy of the railways at present in existence to meet the requirements of the traffic through Canada. It has been conclusively shown that the Grand Trunk Railway has been utterly unable to overtake the demand upon it in this direction, and that Committee, having heard the evidence which was brought before them, have presented it to this House. It shows that the commercial mind of this Dominion, so far as we have been able to ascertain, is alive to the necessity of securing some further connection with the Intercolonial Railway, and it also points to the desirability of deepening the canals, upon which a very large expenditure has already been made, and which can never fulfil what is required of them in the interests of this Inter-provincial trade without being so deepened, but this done a large amount of traffic would flow West from the Eastern Provinces in coal and other commodities. At the present time freights are very much cheaper by way of New York than by our own railway connection, and though the delays to which I have referred occurred chiefly in winter, still they happen to a considerable extent in summer, and it is desirable to provide better means of communication between the West and East through the great waterways of the Dominion. I would like to enquire of the Government whether they have the matter under consideration, with the intention of asking an appropriation to assist in establishing a line of propellers which would overcome the difficulties to which I have referred? It might be said that this connection should be undertaken altogether by private enterprise. So it would were it not that for a time whatever competition is brought into play in that direction might be choked off by lowering the freights, to be followed, when this had served its purpose, by the restoration of freights to their original rates. I trust that the matter has already engaged the attention of the Government, and if not we would ask them to take it into their consideration with a view of submitting to this House some proposition founded on the evidence presented in the report of the Committee.

Mr. McMULLEN. The hon. Minister of Railways will remember that when the Intercolonial items were being considered in Committee, I put a question as to the freight earnings of the road during last year, and he stated he would give the information on Concurrence.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. In reply to the hon. member for Halifax, I may state that a memorial has been presented to the Government, based on the evidence taken before the Committee, asking that a subsidy be granted to a line of propellers between the western lakes and Quebec. The matter is now engaging the attention of the Government.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. In reply to the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen), I may state that I directed the Chief Engineer and Manager of the Government Railways, to look into the question which the hon. member raised, and the following memorandum has been sent me:—

As the freight business is not kept separate from the passenger business, it cannot be ascertained accurately the exact cost of moving the freight per ton per mile. The tonnage of freight carried one mile last year was 177,835,869 tons. This, divided into the total expense, would give 1 16-100 cents per mile, but inasmuch as this is mixed with the cost of conducting the passenger traffic, it, of course, is not quite correct; but if the tonnage is divided into the freight earnings this gives three-fourths of a cent per ton per mile, and as the road just about pays expenses, this latter may fairly be assumed to be the cost of moving the freight per ton per mile.

Mr. McMULLEN. In order to keep track of the earnings of the line from year to year, and form a correct idea as to whether it is operated at rates which would pay the country, it is necessary that the tonnage earnings per mile should be kept. I notice that the Grand Trunk and other roads in their returns state the tonnage rate per mile; and, in order to come to a conclusion as to whether the Intercolonial is producing the same results financially as the other lines, it is necessary that the calculations should be accurately made each year.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not see how that is possible, for in a mixed train you have a certain number of passenger cars and a certain number of freight cars, and it would be extremely difficult to apportion the exact cost of moving that train to the freight and passengers respectively. If you are moving simply a freight train you can tell exactly what is the cost of operating; but in the case of mixed trains I think it can only be arrived at approximately in something like the mode mentioned in the memorandum. I will, however, draw the attention of Mr. Schreiber to that point, and see if it is possible to keep any more accurate account of the cost of moving freight and traffic as contradistinguished from that of passengers.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The hon. Minister will, perhaps, favor me with some information as to the time when he expects the St. Charles and Lévis branch to be completed. I observed about the end of last summer that the work had ceased, and I was informed that this was because the vote had been expended. I suppose that this vote will be sufficient to complete the work during the coming season. As to the ferry, I understand that some tenders have been accepted for the vessels; if I am not mistaken, I saw the plan of them in the Scientific American. Will the hon. Minister be kind enough to state at what stage they are at present, and whether or not they are to be delivered this season.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The work on the St. Charles branch will be carried on vigorously during the coming season, and I expect that the communication will be opened, not only by the lower valley, but also by the Grand Trunk station at Point Lévis, by the 1st of July. I do not expect that the work will be entirely completed by that time, but it will be sufficiently advanced to allow of the passage of through trains. The contract has not yet been made for the steamers for the ferry. As I stated to the hon. gentleman, this Government have engaged to bear a certain portion of the expense of establishing that ferry, and we are prepared to carry out that arrangement. A certain amount of progress has been made; estimates have been prepared, and very complete designs of the machinery have been prepared. A great deal of care and attention has been given to designing the lifts for removing the cars on and off the boats. A good deal of practical work has been done in that way; and this Government, having pledged itself to co-operate with the Government of Quebec in this work, will be prepared to provide the closest possible communication between the Intercolonial Railway at Point Lévis and the Quebec Railway on the Quebec side of the river. No effort will be spared on our part to carry that project out to successful completion.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. McCALLUM. I was a member of the Committee appointed to enquire into the subject of Inter-provincial trade, and to devise some means for increasing that trade. One of the recommendations of that Committee was that the Government should subsidize a line of steamers to run from the western lakes to Quebec. There is at present almost a railway rage in this country; everybody is in favor of railways; but we must not overlook our waterways. I know that our Inter-provincial trade has been increased from $1,200,000 in 1866, to $22,000,000 at the present time. There is no doubt that that increase has been largely due to the construction of the Grand Trunk Railway and the Intercolonial Railway; but the evidence given before the Committee shows that it could be even further increased; and I, as a member of that Committee, would urge the Government to give the matter their most favorable consideration. In addition to recommending that a line of steamers should be subsidized, the Committee recommended the enlargement of the St. Lawrence canals to the same depth and capacity as the Welland Canal. That would enable vessels from the upper ports to go down to the Lower Province ports, and bring back return cargoes. I know that it may be said that there is a line of steamers running now, without any subsidy, from Chicago and the western ports to Montreal; but they go no further. The object of the Committee is that vessels should go all the way to Quebec, so as to connect with the Intercolonial Railway and increase the traffic of that road, and to give us another route besides the one we have now by the Grand Trunk Railway. The vessels would be able to connect the Intercolonial Railway with the Canada Southern and Credit Valley Railways at Niagara and Toronto. The question we may ask regarding the present lines of steamers running from the west to Montreal, and from north to Quebec, is, are they not under the same control as the railway? I consider it would be money well invested by the Government to give a small subsidy to a line of steamers to run from Quebec to Niagara ports and back. I consider the Intercolonial Railway would make more money than what would have to be paid to the steamers to assist them to run, and that the people would get a large benefit by this in the shape of cheap freights and in the way of increasing Inter-provincial trade. Of course there is another point, the deepening of the St. Lawrence Canals. That cannot, of course, be dealt with in a day by the Government; but this question of immediate relief should at once be taken up, and I trust the hon. Minister of Railways will see that such immediate relief will be given.

Mr. McMULLEN. I put a question to the hon. Minister of Railways a few evenings ago, which I think he must have misunderstood. I asked if he would be able to give the House the gross earnings per ton per mile on the Intercolonial Railway, and the answer he gave me would rather lead me to suppose that he thought I wanted to know the cost per mile of moving each ton. That is not my object. The gross earnings can easily be ascertained per ton per mile on the entire line, by taking the entire tonnage carried over the road and the number of miles it was moved. My reason is simply this: I know the Grand Trunk Railway makes such a return, having seen it in the annual statement of the President, and I would like to find out how far the earnings of the Intercolonial per ton per mile compare with those of other lines.

Mr. McCRAVEY. I wish to corroborate the remarks of the hon. member for Monck. The question he raised, that of cheap freights, is one worthy of serious consideration. I know that the railways have done a great deal to lower freights in carrying produce forward to the east, but in the winter time they have everything their own way; and although the hon. Minister of Finance said that our shipping interest was in a prosperous condition, I must beg to differ with him. Although not largely engaged in the shipping business myself, I know from personal observation, and from persons engaged in that business with whom I am well acquainted, that the tonnage dues and tolls at Montreal are a great grievance and hardship to the owners of vessels on the lakes. If those tolls were removed and the St. Lawrence Canals deepened, vessel owners would be able to compete with the railway system and enable the people of the western part of our country to have cheap freights, at any rate during the season of navigation. I have a table here showing the revenue from our canals in the past ten years, but I think it would be out of place at present to refer to it. I have thought over this matter for some time, and have much desired to go fully into a discussion of it, but at this late period of the Session I should be sorry to occupy the time of the House at any length. I trust the Government will favorably consider the interests of vessel owners in this matter as well as those who have large quantities of freight to forward, and bear in mind that if they drive the vessel interest out of the country, the railways will have a monopoly of the whole trade.

Mr. VAIL. What is the present arrangement with regard to the Pullman cars, the amount charged for which is entirely out of proportion to the regular fare between Montreal and Halifax, and is there any possibility of having any change in that respect?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is not in our power to have any immediate change. The agreement which exists between the Pullman Car Company was made during the time when my hon. friend was a member of the Government, and, of course, we have to carry it out. It was made for ten years, I believe. If we were free now to deal with that question, I think we ought to be able to make more satisfactory arrangements. I cannot say when the ten years will expire, but it will be some time yet.

Mr. VAIL. Is it not an arrangement by which the Government is bound to make up any deficiency from time to time. The Pullman cars are supposed to make a certain amount, and if that is not reached the Government is to make up the difference. I am not aware this contract was made for ten years; if so it would be difficult to alter it. But no matter what Government made that arrangement, the difference ought to be paid from the Public Treasury and not charged to people who travel over the road. Any excess the company might receive I believe they are not obliged to refund. It is a very short-sighted bargain, if the bargain is of this nature, that operates unjustly against the people who travel over the road.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I cannot say what the contract is, but I do not think it is possible my hon. friend would have been a party in any way to a contract of so unreasonable a character as that. My impression is the company allow their cars to run over the road—we haul them—and they receive what is charged to the passengers and nothing else. I think that the maintenance of the cars and the damage resulting in running over the road, is made good by the Government; but I do not think there is such an arrangement as that to which my hon. friend has referred, of our being obliged to make up any deficiency. That seems to be so entirely unreasonable that I do not think it is part of the original.

Mr. VAIL. I may not be correctly informed, but I would like the hon. Minister to enquire into it and see if we can get any relief in that way. I am quite aware that Government is responsible for the acts of its officers, and I am inclined to think that my hon. friend does a good deal himself on the railway without consulting Government in the general management of the road, and it is just possible that his predecessor may have done the same thing. However, with that understanding it is still possible that an arrangement might be made by which members of the Government should know what was being done by their officers.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). When this item was before the Committee last year, I believe the hon. gentleman expected to make an arrangement with the Government of Quebec by which they would pay half the expenses of the ferry between these two points. In Committee the other night some explanations were made, and would the hon. gentleman state further whether it is now the intention to construct this ferry, seeing that the North Shore Railway has been leased to the Grand Trunk Railway?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman may not have been present when I spoke on this matter before Recess. I stated that the Government of Quebec made a proposition to this Government with reference to the organization of a ferry. There was an estimate made on the cost of furnishing the necessary steamers and the tug accommodation on the two sides of the river. The Dominion Government agreed, subject to the approval of Parliament, which approval was obtained, to bear one-half the estimated expense of establishing the ferry and the approaches to the two sides, and to share the operation of the ferry, so that whatever the cost might be it should be divided between the two Governments. The work was to be performed by the Government of Quebec or the proprietors of the then Government railway, the road being then in the hands of the Government. It was provided that in case the road changed hands we were to be bound to carry out that arrangement with the new proprietors. We are in that position now, and if we are called upon to carry out that arrangement we shall have to furnish one-half the means and to share in the enterprise. As I stated before, no contract has as yet been entered into for the construction of the steamers.

Mr. ROSS. You cannot compel them to go on.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

Mr. MITCHELL. Will the changed relation of the Government of Quebec towards that North Shore road affect their liability to fulfil their part of the arrangement, or is there a probability of their shouldering it on to the company?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is not in that shape. There is a contract on the part of the Government of Quebec to do it. The Government of Quebec made a certain proposition to us, we considered that proposition, and stated in an Order in Council what we would be willing to do, and that was communicated to the Government of Quebec, and was assumed to be accepted by them. Under that we were bound to carry out one portion of the arrangement either with the Government of Quebec or with the proprietors of the road, whoever they might be, and that is the position to-day.

Mr. MITCHELL. But if the Government of Quebec choose to say: "We are not now proprietors of the line, having sold it to a company, which company has practically sold it to the Grand Trunk Railway," and they choose not to go on with the ferry, the Government are not bound to pay any money, and the public will be deprived of the advantages of a ferry unless this Government take upon themselves to assume the whole expense, which, I suppose, they will not be inclined to do.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is the position.

On Resolution 104,

Survey of Trent Valley navigation.....$8,000.00

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I was under the impression the hon. Minister was to give us some further information on this matter on Concurrence.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I said the survey was still going on, and that in consequence of the extended range of country and the various lines that were proposed, very nice questions arose as to which would be the best line; that the surveys were being elaborately prosecuted, and I expected them to be brought to a conclusion this year. I stated, further, that the Chief Engineer of Canals did not think it would be desirable to make a progress report until he had had the whole subject placed before him by the surveys.

On Resolution 218,

Post Offices..... $2,238,310.50

Mr. BLAKE. Explanations were promised by the hon. Minister under this head.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Twenty-five additional clerks and letter carriers were appointed last year in the various offices in Ontario. Next year from thirty-five to forty will be required. In connection with the Royal Mail Service, in the Ontario division one additional mail clerk and two additional clerks for the inspector's office were appointed. It is expected that a still larger number will be required during the coming year to meet the exigencies of the service. There were promised details of vote of $4,000 for service by steamboat and sailing vessel, Nova Scotia, for the year ending 30th June, 1882. The following are the particulars: Halifax and Boston, U. S. (half of postage collected) J. P. Phelan, contractor, $400; Halifax and St. John, Newfoundland, Wood & Co., $600; Port Hastings, Port Hawkesbury and Port Mulgrave, Halifax and Cape Breton Railway Company, $1,600; Sydney and West Bay, now Port Mulgrave, and Sydney via Bras d'Or Lakes, G. T. Troop, Agent, $300; Yarmouth and Boston, U. S. (portion of postage collected) E. F. Clements, $202. These items do not cover the exact amount of $4,000, but a small margin must be left for the extension of the system during the year. A statement was also promised with respect to St. John's, Quebec, and St. Roch's post offices. In 1878 the amount of revenue from the former was $662, and the salary paid, $470; 1879, collections $677, salary $471; 1880, collections $1,034, salary $528; 1881, collections $1,453, salary $933; 1882, collections $2,384, salary $1,588. It will be seen that the revenue of the post office at St. John's has been increasing for some years and the salary has been increasing also, and the Postmaster-General has determined that the salary shall not be more than 40 per cent. of the revenue as is the case elsewhere.

Mr. VAIL. Do you apply that to city offices?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; in the large post offices in Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, &c., the salaries are fixed, but in the branch offices, succursales, in the suburbs, the salaries are paid by fees, which we intend to reduce to 40 per cent. of the revenue until further orders, for if any salary was found to be very large under this system, we might make it a fixed salary. In the division of Quebec East, the revenue for 1878 was $1,680, and the salary $712; in 1879 the revenue was $1,847, and the salary $742; in 1880 the revenue was $2,147, and the salary $742; in 1881 the revenue was $2,833, and the salary $742; in 1882 the revenue was $2,933, and the salary $791, while the salary and allowances are now $840. I remarked when the Postmaster-General handed me this statement, that, in accordance with this system, if the salary was to be proportionate, this postmaster should have more salary; he told me that the same rule would apply to both, all would be treated alike by giving them 40 per cent. of the revenue, so that the postmaster of Quebec East will have a higher salary than the postmaster in St. John's suburbs, because his revenue is larger. I am glad to observe that here also the revenue is increasing from year to year—from $1,600 to $1,800, $2,100 to $2,600 and $2,900. The increases are large, and, of course, the postmaster must be paid in proportion.

Mr. LAURIER. As the revenue is increasing so largely I hope that the Government will some day erect a post office in that place.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That matter presents a difficulty. It would be a new principle to erect two Government post offices in the same city, which we have not yet done. I do not know whether my hon. friend was here when I made explanations the other day in this relation, but I will repeat that when the two deputations came to me the other day, as Minister of Public Works, to ask for the erection of a post office there, I gave them the same answer which I have just now made, and I said that if the postmaster sees his revenue increasing his salary must also increase, and if the accommodation is so bad as is represented, if he erects a proper building, which would be accepted by the Government, in a central place, and affords proper accommodation, we will grant him a larger rent for the portion occupied as a post office; and therefore he will thus be recouped for his investment. I understand—in fact I saw a plan the other day for such a building; and it has been sent to the postmaster to ascertain whether it comes from him, whether he agrees to the proposition and what rent he will require;—and if this plan is accepted, I have no doubt my hon. friend will find that a proper building for his constituency; that the public will be attended to and have sufficient accommodation.

Mr. LAURIER. I am very glad to get this information. Of course, I quite understand the difficulty of having two post-offices in the same city; but this geographical division of Quebec is such that there is practically another city beyond the city proper, and for this reason, perhaps, the Government might see fit to carry out the suggestion made.

Mr. BLAKE. I would now like the hon. gentleman to take a trip with me to Belleville, Hamilton, London, Ottawa, Toronto and Windsor, because I specially demanded the particulars as to the increases in salaries at the post offices in these different cities, which ought to have been found on page ninety-seven. The votes are given in detail for 1883-84, but the aggregate sum only is given for 1882-83, the increase being no less than $20,830. The hon. Minister promised to inform us, with respect to the details, whether they were due to increases in staff, and what additional officers were appointed, and how much were the increases in salaries; part of that, I fancy, is found to be due to the fact that in some instances, postmasters have been transferred from being paid by fees to be paid by salary, but I am not sure about that. However it is, we have the staff and details for 1883-84, but no details either for staff or salaries for 1882-83; the increase of $20,830, therefore, is not explained at all, and I would be glad to have an explanation.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think I have already given an explanation of this in the statement which I gave in the first instance. If the hon. gentleman refers to it he will see, that if he adds the salaries, say of these twenty-six clerks, for instance, who have been added to the staff, and of fourteen more who will be added during the year, making forty, at an average say of $400 each, he will find the total to be $16,000, and the remaining $4,000 are left as a margin as I just now stated. The fact is, that we must in this Department keep a good margin, or otherwise the service would be stopped. Every branch of the service is extending with the extension in the settlement of the country, and the opening up of new routes, new post offices, and new railways; and this is the reason the Postmaster-General gave me. Of course you cannot have the figures exactly to the dollar, or even hundred dollars, for there is always a margin kept in all the estimates for the Post Office Department, as can be seen from the Public Accounts when you have the return of the year's expenditure, and compare it with the Estimates, for there is always a balance left, or an excess which is provided for in the Supplementary Estimates for the current year.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman has confined his explanation almost entirely, and I rather fancy, entirely, to the prior item.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is another matter.

Mr. BLAKE. This is the only one touched upon.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I beg pardon, unless the railway mail clerks belong to that division also. There are a great many more, and I stated that there were additional mail clerks and additional clerks in the inspector's office. The hon. gentleman knows that the salaries of railway clerks are higher, and therefore we provide for them. If the hon. gentleman will deduct the amount of $142,720 the excess for last year from the total apparent increase, he will find that the real increase is just $66,000.

Mr. BLAKE. I am at present only dealing with one particular portion of this increase. The hon. gentleman says that there were sixteen clerks added for this year, and fourteen for next year, or forty in all; and, therefore, he says: "I account to you for an expenditure of $16,000." But that is on the assumption that not one of the twenty-six were estimated for in the vote for the current year. Now, it is scarcely possible that the hon. Minister should be so short-sighted as to estimate for not a single clerk when twenty-six were necessary. I assume that the estimate was adequate to the expenditure, but if not, then we want to know how far it fell short of the requirements for the year in this particular vote. I am not objecting to a reasonable margin, and the hon. Minister should say that he wanted to be on the safe side; that is one thing; but unless one understands how far with reference to the city officers, the vote of last year fell so far short of the amount required, we cannot ascertain the discrepancy. I would ask the hon. gentleman, whether some portion of this expenditure was, or was not, caused by the substitution of fixed salaries in one or more cases by remuneration by fees?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; I think not. The hon. gentleman will find, on looking at the report, that the details are given under the different heads for the different Provinces. He will see that the estimate last year was not high enough by $142,000, which we have to make up this year, and he will see also that the real increase for next year is just $66,000. I think the hon. gentleman should be satisfied with this explanation, while reserving to himself the privilege of making enquiry when the vote comes up on the Supplementary Estimates, and when, no doubt, the Postmaster-General himself will be present.

On Resolution 203,

Adulteration of Food.....$12,000.00

Mr. CASEY. Before the item passes I wish to call attention to what I consider some defects in the existing law with regard to the adulteration of food. There are defects in the method of procuring and examination of food supposed to be adulterated. I would not have presumed to have referred to the matter on my own personal responsibility; but at a meeting of the Sanitary Association, held in St. Thomas, I was appointed on a committee to draft some amendment to the law in this respect, but owing to the shortness of the session of the Association, the committee did not meet and nothing was done. I was asked to call attention to the matter in the House. The present method is roundabout and covered with red tape. The man who suspects that he is being swindled by a dealer has to write to the Department in Ottawa, and the Department may give an order to the Government analyst, and if after an examination is made and adulteration is found to have taken place, recourse may be had. Now, I fancy that no efficient inspection of food or articles which should be classed along with food—articles of general consumption—can be carried out until the initiation is left in private hands, or, in other words, that the party should go direct to the Government analyst and insist upon the suspected articles being examined on the shortest notice. Of course it would be impossible to allow any person having suspicions of this kind to have the food examined without giving some security against the cost of the inspection in case the food should turn out to be unadulterated, but that difficulty could be overcome by requiring the complainant to put up a moderate deposit. I am informed that that is the system, or nearly the system, which is in force in England. A person feeling himself aggrieved can go to a public analyst and have the food examined; but he must make a deposit to cover the possible costs of the inspection. If the food is found to be adulterated, the expenses are paid by the dealer selling the article; but if it is found to be pure, the deposit put up by the person making the application applies to cover the costs. I think something of this kind is necessary here. It appears from the reports already made by the Government analysts—which, by the way, are ridiculously few in comparison with the expense of the Department—that certain kinds of food are almost systematically adulterated, such as coffee, spices, teas, &c., sometimes with deleterious or dangerous matter. For example, it is a common thing to make up paste tea from the refuse or rubbish obtained from the Old Country dealers, and which sometimes is deleterious, and is always less valuable than the tea for which it is sold. In these cases the Government should step in and protect those who cannot protect themselves. It is quite impossible for private parties to say, from their own personal inspection, whether an article of food like this is pure or not; and I think the opportunity of settling the question should be put within the reach of everybody who is willing to take the risk of putting up a couple of dollars or so. When I speak of the smallness of the number of cases, I do not mean to say that the Government analysts do not do their duty, but the method of getting them to work is so roundabout and so uncertain that few care to undertake it. I would urge, not merely with the weight of my own opinion, but the weight of opinion of those gentlemen composing the Sanitary Association of Ontario, who are well agreed on the matter, and the weight of opinion of a great many other medical men having a knowledge of sanitary matters whom I have consulted, that the Government should consider, during the coming year, what improvement they can make in the law, with the view of putting a more speedy remedy in the hands of those who are affected.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is no doubt that the statements made by the hon. gentleman are of very great importance. Having gone to the expense of providing machinery for the detection of adulteration of food, we should, of course, take every possible means to make the law effective. Of course it would be necessary to provide against vindictive proceedings which might be instituted, if there were any looseness in the law under which the goods of parties might be seized under suspicion of being adulterated. At the same time there should be machinery by which, whenever there is reasonable ground for the suspicion that food of any kind is adulterated, measures could be taken to bring the matter to a practical test, as early as conveniently and as effectively as possible. I will take care that the attention of the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue is drawn to the observations of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I am glad to see that the attention of the hon. Minister, though not the hon. Minister under whose particular charge this is, has been attracted to this matter. It is of great importance that some steps should be taken, as the hon. Minister said he would take, that the Act should be made more efficient in some way. I do not understand thoroughly the machinery of this Act, but have the same impression as the hon. Member for West Elgin, that it is rather complicated, and I am at a loss to know when samples are found adulterated what penalties are inflicted on the offenders, and whether the offence may be charged back from the vendor to the manufacturer. Judging from the report of the analysts nothing follows, and adulteration has been carried on to a very great extent. It appears from the report that out of 1,122 samples analyzed, 288 were found adulterated and twenty-five doubtful. In some of the articles largely in use, ingredients are used for adulteration that are positively injurious to public health; in others the adulteration reduces the value of the article, but does not lead to serious results to health. When flour, for instance, is substituted for sugar, a fraud is perpetrated, and the value of the article reduced to the innocent purchaser, but no injury is done to health. In the article of canned fruits and canned meats, the analysts have called attention to the fact that no adulteration is made, yet by the action of the fruits and the meats upon the tin and solder, a poisonous adulteration is in process produced. A summary of the report of the Department is, that:

"Although many samples of canned fruits and meats have been found to contain traces of tin and iron they have not been classed as adulterated, though in some cases, they are more dangerous to the public than if they were so. The length of time during which they have been packed will, in all probability, indicate to some extent the degree of danger run by their use, as the solder and tin are acted upon by the contents. Manufacturers would consult their own interests if they caused the packages to be stamped with the year when they were filled and sent out. Buyers could then purchase with some security, avoiding the risk of being taken in by goods packed for several years and re-labelled in order to pass them off. Such goods can only be used at the risk of public health."

With regard to the remedy suggested, my opinion is that the manufacturer will not willingly stamp the date of putting up the goods on the cans, as his main object is to get rid of his goods, no matter when put up and what the risk to the buyers. I see one of the analysts, Mr. Best, the analyst of St. John, New Brunswick, reports as follows:—

"Many kinds of canned goods appear to be very dangerous articles of food. Traces of metallic salts in solution have been detected in samples which I have examined for the Department, and for private individuals. In a neighboring town, several persons were lately poisoned by having eaten canned beef. I am informed that dealers are in the habit of placing fresh labels on cans which have been on their shelves for years. Such goods must eventually become quite unfit for food, as the contents of the cans will, sooner or later, act upon the solder and tin. To prevent this, the date of manufacture should be stamped on the tin cans."

By these reports, it seems imperative, in the interest of the public, that the dates should be stamped on the cans, and I am of opinion that some steps should be taken to compel manufacturers to do this, as they will not do it willingly, of their own accord. In condiments, the report is that the adulteration of that class appears to be going on. You may say that people should know by the prices they pay; but purchasers cannot be supposed to know the value of the goods, or whether they are adulterated or not. A ground article may be sold at one-half the price that the berry is worth; but how is the innocent purchaser to know the relative values of the berries and the ground pepper, ginger, cream of tartar, &c. Through competition in prices dealers have to sell lower grades of goods, and the manufacturers in order to supply the lower grades required, must increase the percentage of foreign matter introduced in their goods, and the adulteration goes on as competition increases. When the adulterations consist of corn meal, flour and articles of that kind, a fraud is perpetrated, but the public health is not injured. But when an ingredient, terra alba, which costs one or two cents is used in the adulteration of goods that are sold at thirty or forty cents the fraud become much more serious, and it is almost impossible to be detected in the taste or in the quality, but, nevertheless, it is there. I think the hon. Minister of Railways, with his medical and chemical skill, knows that articles such as that cannot be taken into the human stomach without producing evil results. The fact that one retailer offering his goods lower than another, and compelling an adulterated article to be still more adulterated in order to enable him to compete with his neighbor, is itself a considerable danger in that respect. When analysts all agree in stating that it is going on to that extent, it seems to be time for the Government to take some steps to compel articles, at any rate, to be branded as 1, 2, or 3, and to have it understood by the purchaser what is the degree of adulteration in the articles he is buying; and to impose penalties upon the adulteration or use of any article that is totally unfit for food, and to entirely prohibit its sale. Of course, when harmless matter is introduced in order to cheapen an article, if it is not injurious to the public health, such an article might be sold without a fraud being perpetrated, the article being plainly marked with numbers, 1, 2 and 3, &c., to indicate the degree of adulteration. As it is at the present time, I am not aware that there are any means of indicating an adulterated article to the unsuspecting purchaser, unless he has personal knowledge of the quality of the article. Now, when we read of the article of coffee, that out of sixty-nine samples analyzed forty-seven were adulterated, and when we read that out of eighteen samples analyzed in Montreal not one was found pure, while Dr. Ellis of Toronto reports but three pure out of eighteen analyzed, it does seem that something should be done to protect the public from the fraud that is manifestly being perpetrated upon them. I know it may be said that what is substituted in the place of coffee is harmless—burnt peas, or things of that kind—still there is a fraud being perpetrated, as the customer thinks he is buying pure coffee. But if he wanted an article adulterated with chicory or roasted peas, the amount of adulteration should be designated by numbers, so that he may know exactly what he is buying. I venture to say that the whole trade would rejoice if some such regulation were made, as I do not believe any one indulges in the adulteration of these goods willingly, but they are induced to do it by competition. My attention has been a good deal called to this matter lately. The honest dealer, one who desires to put pure goods on the market, is greatly disadvantaged, the whole trade is demoralized, the health of the people is endangered, and, to say the very least, a fraud has been perpetrated upon the consumer. I therefore, think the Government should consider this subject, with a view to devising some amendments to the Act which would stop what seems to be a dangerous increase in the adulterations of foods and drinks.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

On Resolution 26,

Dominion Police $15,000.00

In answer to Mr. CHARLTON,

Mr. BOWELL. The Minister of the Interior explained that the increase of $2,500 in this vote arose from the appointment of another chief who receives $1,200, the late one receiving only $750; and by the taking over of four men to guard Rideau Hall, that formerly were paid by the Department of Public Works.

Mr. CASEY. It is rather peculiar that the new chief should be paid $500 more than the old one. Is it because the guard is taken over to Rideau Hall that he is paid more than the late Chief of Police, or is it because he is a gentleman of higher social standing and greater personal consequence?

Mr. BOWELL. Oh, no; we do not pay a man according to his social standing. The late chief received a gratuity—they all do. If any policeman is retired from ill-health or any other cause he receives a gratuity of one month's salary for each year he has served up to a certain amount.

Mr. CASEY. Why was the late chief retired?

Mr. BOWELL. He was retired because it was thought that his usefulness, to a certain extent, was gone, and it was thought better to have a younger and more active man. The new chief has had a great deal of experience in the police force of Ottawa, as well as having been a long time connected with the Sheriff's office in this city. We do not pretend to say that just as good a man could not have been obtained as the present chief; I think that remark would have applied to any man who might have been appointed. He was appointed from his known ability for the particular service which he had to perform; and the improvement which has taken place in the force since he has been acting as chief, justifies the Department in making the change. The estimated expenditure for 1883-84 is as follows:—Salary of Commissioner, $400; salary of Superintendent and 22 men, $12,040.50; uniforms and accoutrements, $1,350; travelling expenses, $200; retiring allowances, $700; sergeant, $60; printing and binding, $50; stationery, $50; revolvers, $75; telegrams, $20; car tickets, $10; ammunition, $40; being a total of $14,995.50, say $15,000. The increase in the estimate over that for the current year is due to the following causes, namely: It is proposed that on the 1st July next, by arrangement with the Public Works Department, the duty of protecting the Governor and Rideau Hall grounds will be transferred from the Public Works Department to the Dominion Police, and men now employed by the Public Works Department, in the capacity of watchmen, to the number of four, will, on that date, come under the control of the Superintendent of Police, and will be uniformed and paid out of the Police appropriation. At present the watchmen employed by the Public Works Department, not having the power of constables, cannot deal summarily with any person found misbehaving on the ground, but have to notify the Dominion Police, by which time the offender has probably escaped and the ends of justice are thereby frustrated; whereas were they constables they could act on the spot and take the delinquent into custody, which would have a very beneficial result. Again, the very fact of the men being uniformed, clothes them with authority, and deters those inclined to misbehave and work mischief. There will also be a saving effected of 25 cts. a day per man, as the present watchmen are paid that much more than the rank and file of the police force. The duties of the force have been added to, and its utility increased, by the introduction of an hourly mail service between the various Departments and branches.

Mr. CASEY. Then, there will be another official besides the chief.

Mr. BOWELL. The Commissioner will have $400.

Mr. CASEY. The total amount to the two officials will be $1,600, and the Commissioner will do part of the work formerly performed by the chief.

Mr. BOWELL. I am not prepared to say whether the duties performed by the Commissioner were formerly performed by the chief.

Mr. BLAKE. I think the duties of the Commissioner were performed by the Deputy Minister of Justice without additional salary. I do not know who the Commissioner is.

Mr. POWELL. Mr. Keefer. The duty was formerly performed by him at a certain per diem allowance; and it is in order to give him more authority that he was appointed at this small salary.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the age of the retiring chief?

Mr. BOWELL. I do not know.

On Resolution 27,

Kingston Penitentiary..... $112,878.23

Mr. BLAKE. Explanations with respect to the grist mill at Kingston were promised.

Mr. BOWELL. In 1880-81, an appropriation was asked for the construction of a grist mill at Kingston Penitentiary. Some discussion took place on that occasion, it being contended by some, that the Government was stepping out of its province in erecting such a building, while others believed that a saving would thereby be effected. A sum was taken for the building of such mill. Orders were given to the warden to go on with the work, and he did so. The grist mill has been constructed at the sum estimated at that time by the warden. It was urged by those who were supposed to possess practical experience, that the estimate would be largely exceeded. The warden informs the Department, that the mill machinery was purchased from Hunter & Ingles, for $2,300, and the steam engine was bought for $700. The mill was fitted up by convict labor under the superintendence of a competent foreman, whose services were paid for by the contractors. The warden concludes his letter by saying:

"The whole cost of mill and engine was $4,158, $642 within the estimate. The mill is first class of its size, and will accomplish all I claim for it, both as to economy and usefulness."

The mill is ready, and will shortly supply the penitentiary.

Mr. BLAKE. They were reaping the harvest then.

Mr. BOWELL. Having sown their wild oats they are reaping the harvest now.

Mr. BLAKE. It is, of course, unfortunate, but it cannot be expected that the Minister of Customs should pay particular attention to the discussion which took place when this vote was in Committee, because it is not in his Department; but the point which was brought before the attention of the Committee, remains altogether undisposed of by the information given by the warden, and is briefly this: a vote was taken for the construction of a grist mill, it was opposed by several members, including among them, a gentleman who was a rather steady supporter of the Administration, whose voice was against this proposal of theirs—and, I think, I never heard before or since, except on that occasion. I refer to the late member for Ottawa (Mr. Currier), the present postmaster in the city. He pointed out as a practical man, that it would not do, and that it would be a mistake to put up a grist mill for the purpose of grinding the flour required for the convicts. However, the vote was taken, but next year there was no account, in the report, or otherwise, of the expenditure of this vote at all. In Supply, I enquired of the then Minister of Justice, hon. James Macdonald, the present Chief Justice of Nova Scotia, on that subject, and he said—I cannot give you the exact words, but they are in Hansard, and they are something like this: No; we have given up the mill. He used a phrase equivalent to that, though I cannot remember the precise words, intimating that the plan had been abandoned; and there was no more discussion about it at all. There was no indication, as I have said, of the expenditure in that report, or of anything having been done, but the next thing we hear about it is, this year, after the expiration of that long lapse of time, when the original vote must have lapsed,—for it cannot have been in existence at all if the mill is only just now constructed and finished—we hear of the grist mill in the Estimates by being called upon to vote the sum of $600 a year for the salary of the miller of the mill; and then I called upon the hon. Minister for an explanation as to how it came about, when we were informed, in Supply, a year after the vote was taken, that it was not going on, and when there was no account of when it was built, where it was built, or how it was built, but we find that the grist mill was actually constructed, and with those consequences which we said would follow upon its construction. If ever anybody supposed that $600 a year can be saved by purchasing wheat and grinding it into flour—that is to say, that the miller's salary can be saved, I think he must be a pretty sanguine man. Now, we have upon this subject no explanation at all. When was the mill built, when was the contract let, when was the money spent, out of what vote was it taken, having regard to the statement and the other matter to which I have referred? Then the other point on which I asked for information was one on which the hon. gentleman's explanation answers, as to the purchases of wheat made, and the results of the experiment; but he says that the mill is not yet in operation, and, of course, the result of the experiment so far, is yet in the future. We are, however, saddled with the mill and the miller's salary; how the thing will work we cannot yet tell, and I think it will be observed, that the explanations which we have a right to expect, have not yet been given.

Mr. BOWELL. I endeavored to ascertain what the exact expression used by the late Minister of Justice was, but I failed to find the answer in the record, in the statements made by the leader of the Opposition.

Mr. BLAKE. It was something like that.

Mr. BOWELL. I am not sure, but I remember distinctly, I did find that the member for Ottawa, the present postmaster for this city, spoke in opposition to this vote, holding that no mill could be constructed under $8,000 or $10,000.

Mr. BLAKE. That was the year before.

Mr. BOWELL. I find, also, in 1881, that in reply, to a letter of the warden of the penitentiary calling his attention to the vote passed by Parliament for the construction of this mill, in a memorandum on the side of the document, in the Minister of Justice's own hand: "Instruct Creighton that he may proceed with the grist mill." However, it refers to the construction of the grist mill, and I think that those are the words. Then the warden writes on the 28th of last April, stating what he had done in connection with the mill; and I believe, that this will be better than any explanation I can give. He says:

"Having pointed out on several occasions the pecuniary and other advantages of having a small grist mill to grind flour and feed for this institution, I was encouraged to place in the Estimates for the fiscal year 1880-81, an item of $4,200 to buy the same, and build a steam engine to work it. A good deal of opposition in Parliament was offered to this item when the Estimates were under discussion, but the item was carried; hence it was from that appropriation voted by Parliament, that the cost of the grist mill was paid. Two subjoined letters will explain what took place as to the purchase after the appropriation was made. The first letter is from myself to the then Minister of Justice, the hon. James Macdonald, and the second is his reply, and my authority for going on with the grist mill. I may add, that the mill machinery was purchased from Messrs. Hunter & Ingles, of Toronto, for $2,300, and the steam engine was also paid for, $700. The mill was erected under convict labor under the superintendence of a competent foreman, whose services were paid for by Messrs. Hunter & Ingles, the contractors. The whole cost of the mill and engine was $4,158, $342 less than the estimate. The mill is first class of its size, and will accomplish all I claimed for it, both as to economy and usefulness."

Now, as to the work of it, if the hon. gentleman will look at the Estimates he will see that there are some guards, four, dropped out of the Estimates for this year, and one of these guards has been utilized to take charge of and to run the mill. I presume he was formerly a miller, and knows the business, or he would not have been selected for the purpose; so that really, if the expense of the miller is added to the running expenses of the mill, it has been saved in the way of a guard. If we have not put on an additional guard, of course we save in that way.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman will be pleased to observe that the number of the convicts is very much diminished. We reduce the guard when we reduce the convicts.

Mr. BOWELL. I am not sure about that. Of course the hon. gentleman has had experience in this Department, as Minister of Justice, and will know; but I am not so sure that the diminution of the number of prisoners in the penitentiaries would necessarily lessen the number of guards, than it would be requisite to keep to place on the walls and at other places.

Mr. BLAKE. Within certain limits it does.

Mr. BOWELL. It does not strike me as being the case. I have a memorandum, sent me just now by the Deputy Minister, saying the mill was bought about March, 1881; and I suppose it was allowed to remain in abeyance until the Minister told him to go on and construct it.

Mr. BLAKE. Well, then, if the mill was bought in March, 1881, and is only just now finished, as I understand in May, 1883—

Mr. BOWELL. Excuse me. The note says, "The vote did not lapse. The mill was bought about March, 1881."

Mr. BLAKE. Yes; perhaps it was, I suppose it was, but I do not know what they have been doing ever since. It is hardly finished now, or it is just finished, and yet it is all taken out of this vote; but how this vote was kept alive in the Estimates of 1880-81 down to 1883, and that payments were made out of it until within a very few months, is a mystery to me. The law is strict on this subject, and I think it would be found that this money must have been chequed or taken out in some way or other for the purpose of keeping it alive. With reference to the late member for Ottawa, and in vindication of his supposed estimate, I think at that time it was imagined by us and by him, that the mill would be built as the hon. gentleman says, and I presume the necessary shell of the structure was included in the $3,000. We have since learned from the hon. Minister who has taken charge of these votes that the mill has been placed in that very appropriate place for such a mill—at the end of the asylum. Perhaps the hon. Minister will at some future time get a memorandum with regard to how the money was paid.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes.

On Resolution 196,

Reports and text-books for Library Department of Justice..... $2,000.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There has been a statement put in my hands explaining this $2,000, and I will read it to the House:

The Department has for a great many years subscribed to the English Law Reports and the Reports of the various Provincial Courts, and with the exception of a few volumes which will need to be replaced, we have a very good library in that respect. We have also quite a number of text-books, many of which are of old editions. We wish to sell the old editions and buy new ones.

Mr. BOWELL.

In regard to text-books and those works which are needed for daily reference on some subjects, and especially in regard to those which relate closely to Crown practice and the prerogatives of the Crown our library is very incomplete, and a considerable expenditure is needed in order to make it what it should be in this respect. We are also deficient in Digests and Abridgments.

Besides completing the Library in the respects referred to we wish to purchase the English Reports from the first of this century down to 1836, at which date the Law Reports commenced. This of itself will not be a very large or extravagant expenditure.

While it is quite true that in order to make an exhaustive brief in a case we would have to go to a library which would be more complete than the one we have, yet we would have one which would facilitate our every day work.

You will understand that outside of dealing with cases into which we have to go exhaustively, we have a large legal correspondence, and when a correspondent says that it is so decided in such and such a case in Harlstone and Norman or Weeson and Welsley for example, it is a great waste of time to go to the Supreme Court room to see whether the correspondent has rightly interpreted the case. The fact is the English Reports are almost as necessary for reference as ordinary text-books.

In a word, we want just such a library as a private gentleman who is doing business in a city where he has access to a large library would have for his daily and active work and reference. It is not proposed in the future to ask any further grant for this service. The library will then be a reasonably good one, and by the expenditure of the amount which the Department has been accustomed to expend each year out of Contingencies for the purchase of law books the library will be kept up.

It has happened that you have sent from Council to our library for reference works which, owing to the incompleteness of the library, we have been unable to supply.

On Resolution 197,

To pay one-half the expense of publishing cases decided on the British North America Act, 1867, collected and edited by John R. Cartwright, Esq. $1,150.00

Mr. BOWELL. Upon application from the Premier of Ontario the hon. Minister of Justice agreed to pay the amount now placed in the Estimates, as our proportion. The work is to consist of two volumes, costing $8 per volume. Thirty copies will be furnished to the Dominion Government, and will be distributed by the hon. Minister of Justice among the library and other public institutions. Mr. Mowat, I understand, will also distribute the work among the law libraries of Ontario and various other public institutions. The balance are to be sold by the Ontario Government at the price I have named and the proceeds divided between the two Governments. The whole management has been left to the Premier of Ontario, who has promised to divide the profits.

Mr. BLAKE. Does this vote cover our share of the whole expense, or does it apply only to the first volume? and what number of copies does the edition consist of?

Mr. BOWELL. I understand that this covers the full amount asked from this Government. The edition is 250 copies only, of which the hon. Minister of Justice receives thirty.

Mr. BLAKE. I can only repeat my very great approval of the work itself, so far as its execution is concerned, and the utility of such a work, and my regret that some arrangement should not have been made for the publication of a larger edition.

Mr. BOWELL. I think I can say, on the part of the Dominion Government, that they did all they were asked to do, and they gladly acceded to the request.

Mr. McCARTHY. Perhaps it is not too late to have a larger edition of the second volume. There may, and probably will be, a continuation of these volumes. I quite agree that this is a move in the right direction, and something might be done towards the publication of a larger edition.

On Resolution 48,

Patent Record..... $8,500.00

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I desire to ask for explanations in regard to the Patent Record.

Mr. POPE. In 1878 an arrangement was made with the predecessor of Mr. Burland to publish a pamphlet for $2.50 a year. Sometimes, at that rate, the amount appropriated by Parliament was not all used, but at other times it was exceeded, this being due to an additional number of patents having been taken out. In 1874-75, under the Administration of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), the price was increased to $3.50, and at that rate it has remained. The increased amount asked for is due to the enlarged number of patents issued.

SUPPLY—DRAWBACKS.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I desire to take this opportunity of making a few remarks on a subject which is of some importance to myself, and I think of general importance. I moved some time ago for a return of drawbacks that were paid on manufactured goods exported to foreign countries. That return was laid on the Table of the House a day or two ago, and I have only been able to look at it to-night. The House has heard me speak on previous occasions of a difficulty that has been experienced by certain manufacturers in getting the drawback they are entitled to from the Department. The hon. Minister of Customs and myself have had one or two tilts in reference to the matter, and at times he has been willing to say that I have been pressing claims that were not proper, and that the difficulty lay there. I have endeavored to point out that the difficulty lay in the regulations; the claimants who were unable to get their drawbacks being unable to comply with those regulations. Now, Sir, I find by this return that there seems to be one regulation for one manufacturer, and another regulation for another manufacturer; and I find that the very difficulties which have stood in the way of certain manufacturers obtaining the drawback, have been waived in the declaration made by other manufacturers. I confess that I am a little surprised at this; but it is the fact, as evidenced by this return. In the motion I made, I moved for one copy of each of the declarations made by the exporters of manufactured goods. I am told, in the remarks accompanying the return, that the Order of the House has not been fully carried out, but that the name of one party to the declaration is given. For instance, the Order of the House was to bring down the copy of one allowed claim of each exporter of sewing machines, boilers, or other manufacturers of iron, with the sworn declaration attached thereto. The Department have taken the liberty of varying from the Order of the House somewhat; in sewing machine companies, they give the affidavits of one exporter, and say, that the affidavits required from the sewing machine manufacturers are identical. Now, Sir, the difficulty that was experienced by the parties whose cases were brought before the Department, was the difficulty of being able to comply with the regulations of the Order in Council that insists on their specifying the particular entry made at the Custom House of goods on which duty was paid, which entered into the manufacture of the article exported; and these manufacturers found it impossible for them, as honest men, to make a declaration that the iron, for instance, that entered into the construction of a certain machine passed the Customs at a certain day, or was included in a certain invoice, for the reason that they buy iron from different countries and throw it into the common heap, and it is impossible for them to keep track of what particular invoice the iron was taken from which entered into the construction of a particular piece of machinery which they export to a foreign country; and I have, time and again, pressed upon the hon. Minister that he should so arrange the matter that they would be relieved from the necessity of making that sworn declaration. The hon. Minister took some larger powers to himself, quite with my concurrence, if not at my suggestion, when the Customs Bill was passing the House, in order to enable him in a measure to overcome this difficulty; but the explanation I want from the hon. Minister now, is, how he came to allow certain manufacturers to make declarations, and allowed them their drawback, while he refused other manufacturers their drawback, or did not give them the privilege of making a declaration in accordance therewith. In my motion I did not move for a copy of all the Orders in Council, but I did move for copies of all the regulations in the Department; but I am told in this return, that regulations are not made by the Department, but by the authority of Governor in Council, and as I was unfortunate enough to say, orders of the Department instead of Orders in Council; the Department did not this time, as on a previous occasion, when I moved in precisely the same words, send me the Order in Council, and I presume that it is the same Order in Council that was passed in 1881. If I am mistaken in this, as I can only surmise, then there has been a deviation in the Order in Council in the case of certain manufacturers, while there has not been the same deviation in the case of other manufacturers. Let us, for instance, see the affidavit that is required, and that was made by the Dominion Barb Wire Fence Company. The declaration is:

"I, Frederick Fairman, of Montreal, do solemnly and truly swear that I am a member of the firm of Cooper, Fairman & Company, the proprietors of the Dominion Barb Wire Fence Company, an establishment for the manufacture of barb wire fencing, situate at Montreal, and the claimant for drawback of duty paid on wire, used in the manufacture of the thirty-nine coils of barbed wire fencing, weighing net 4,579 pounds, exported as per copy of export entry as over, and described in the bill of lading attached, signed by the agent of the Credit Valley Railway, consigned to H. Luban, at Guayaquil and shipped for the foreign port of Guayaquil, and that part thereof is intended to be re-landed in Canada; and further, that the said coils of fencing were wholly manufactured in the Dominion of Canada, and that in the manufacture thereof there was used wire which was imported into Canada, and on which duty was paid at the port of Montreal, as follows, viz.: 4,579 pounds, net weight, being a part of the 1,922 bundles entered on the 1st day of September, 1881, as per entry No. 9,043, on which a drawback is claimed on $160, original value as entered, and on which duty was paid at said date at the rate of 13 per cent."

Now, there is the affidavit made by Cooper, Fairman & Co., with reference to this, and that affidavit is in accordance with the regulations which require that they shall specify the invoice, the particular Customs entry, and the material on which the drawback is claimed. But when I come down to look at the return of Charles Raymond, for instance, a sewing machine manufacturer, what do I find? Do I find a declaration setting forth the invoice, and the date of entry, and the number of the Customs entry on which the duty was paid, and on which his claim was made and allowed? No; but I find the following:—

"I, C. F. Leonard, Attorney of Charles Raymond, of Guelph, do solemnly and truly swear that the following named articles of British or foreign manufacture, viz.: Iron gun wire, brass, needles, thread and screw-drivers, were used as materials wrought into, or attached to the sewing machines named in the accompanying claim for drawback, and that they are of a kind not manufactured in Canada; and that no other articles are manufactured in Canada that could have been substituted and used in the place thereof; and the said articles of British or foreign manufacture so used, were imported into Canada, and duty was paid thereon, at the Port of Guelph, within two years from the date of the exportation of the said sewing machines."

Neither the number of the entry, nor the date, nor the particulars that are required from other manufactories, and that were required from the manufacturer whose case I have brought before the hon. Minister time and again, were required here. They are scored out entirely, and the affidavit is simply that the duty was paid within two years. In the case of the Bell Organ Company an affidavit of the same kind was made, while in all other cases I find here—and the printed form is the same used on each occasion—they are required to do what I understand the Order in Council requires them to do, viz., to give the date and the number of the Custom House entry. I find no fault with the hon. Minister at all, for I fancy he has guarded himself with the oath required and the declaration made, if he gave the drawback consistent with his duty and had authority to do so; but I do complain of the hon. Minister's refusal to grant the drawback to other gentlemen who complied with the regulations, when he had the authority to do so, which he evidently had. I make no charge, but I am entitled to an explanation in reference to that matter, and I hope he will give it to me.

Mr. BOWELL. I do not propose to discuss this question at any great length, for, as the hon. gentleman has just said, we have already had two or three tilts on this subject. I may state that my desire has been, as far as possible, in every instance, when a drawback was demanded, to go to the very extent to which the law would permit the Department to go, and upon every occasion when I had the slightest doubt as to the power given departmentally to act, I have gone with the recommendation to the Treasury Board, and obtained the necessary authority. In the case of Fairman, Cooper & Co., they have complied with the Order in Council that was previously passed, and with the regulations which pertained to the paying of the drawback on the tin used in the canning of fish and other articles, by stating distinctly and positively the invoice upon which the entry was made and the duty paid. In the case of sewing machines, to which my hon. friend referred, we found a very great difficulty in carrying out that regulation, from the fact that the drawback is a very small amount, as my hon. friend will see by these figures, as also in the case of the drawback upon organs. Having gone into a most minute calculation as to the actual drawback upon the actual amount of duty paid upon the articles which go into the manufacture of these articles, a report was made to the Treasury Board, which was adopted by the Council, saying that they should have a sum which would cover the amount of duty paid on each of these articles. That is the whole explanation I have to give on this question. I concur in the remarks of my hon. friend as to the necessity of making regulations to govern the paying of drawback more liberal than they have been. I was afraid—I may almost use that expression—to ask the power that was suggested to be given to the Minister of Customs, when the Act was before Parliament, a short time ago; under that amended law, the Department will be able to draft such resolutions as will cover all cases of manufactured goods which are exported without confining them exclusively to the invoices upon which the entries were made. It must be borne in mind that the case to which my hon. friend refers is not at all analogous to either of the other two to which he has referred. As I have already pointed out on previous occasions, it is not one in which a drawback can possibly be made until these gentlemen have amended their demands. For what reason they have not done so it was not my particular business to enquire, but they were told distinctly that no drawback could be put upon an article which went into the manufacture of another article which had not been imported, but which was the production of the mines of this country. In the claims made by the firm to which the hon. member for Brant has referred, was included pig iron, and I am not sure but there were other articles, but of the pig iron I am sure. Now, it may seem strange to the House when I say that, having pointed that fact out to this firm, they have never attempted to amend their demand for a drawback upon the articles manufactured by them and which have been exported. I have repeatedly called the attention of the officers of the Department to the fact that the hon. gentleman who has just spoken has frequently reminded me of it, and asked if any amended claim had been made by that firm. Omitting the articles to which I have referred,—for without which it is clear that even under the amended law I should have no power to pay,—if the drawback is to be based upon the amount of duty paid on articles that go into the construction of a machine, then there must be an affidavit to the fact that the article was imported and used in the manufacture of the article that was exported. Until that is done the door for—I will not say fraud—but certainly a misappropriation of public funds, would be opened and there would be no safety in carrying out the principles of drawback at all. I quite agree with a great deal of what my hon. friend has said, and I think, that with the power given to the Government under the present law he will have no excuse to complain of the regulations in future. The difficulties in coming to a correct conclusion as to the amount to be paid back, have arisen in regard to the manufacturers, particularly of barbed wire, and also in the case of the manufacture of nails, in which I have every reason to believe a very large trade would grow up with foreign countries by having a judicious and proper mode of paying the drawback. They import the iron at one season of the year and it is put into their sheds, and portions of it may be used at a later period; another importation may arrive and be placed in the same racks along with the other, and they have pointed out to me that it is impossible for them to make the necessary affidavits, and it is the intention of the Government so to frame the regulations in future that an affidavit, when importations have taken place, that the duty has been paid and that the article has been exported, will justify the payment to them of the drawback of the duty, less a very small percentage of it to cover ordinary expenses. Under the law as it existed, we had grave doubts as to the power of the Department to adopt such regulations. I saw the difficulty in making the affidavits, and before it was done authority was obtained through the Treasury Board and the Governor in Council to pay the drawback, upon the calculations that had been made, and that portion of the affidavit was omitted. The hon. gentleman may very properly ask why we do not adopt the same rule in reference to all manufacturers. I frankly state that I had some little doubt as to our power under the law of doing that, but in order to encourage the exportation of the manufactures of this country, I think the Department and the Treasury Board went to the very extreme limit when they adopted the regulations I suggested to them, and, in the future, I think my hon. friend and the House, and the manufacturers will be quite satisfied with the regulations we propose to adopt. But you must remember that when these claims are made, they must cover claims upon goods upon which duties have been paid, and if it be pointed out to any manufacturer that he is making claim for a drawback upon an article used in the manufacture of any machinery that has never paid duty, then he must understand that he cannot receive that drawback, and if he refuses to make an amended entry, we cannot, and I do not think my hon. friend himself would say that it would be the duty of the Department to make it for him. I hope the explanation will be satisfactory to my hon. friend, and that his friend when he amends his entry under the present law, will receive all the drawback to which he is entitled. But at the same time, the House must understand, and so must the manufacturers, that every safeguard must be established by the Department to prevent anything like an approach to fraud. I have no doubt the manufacturers to whom my hon. friend refers are honest men, but the regulations have to be so framed as to meet dishonest men; we have very little trouble with those who conduct their business properly, and who have no desire to obtain from the Government that to which they are not entitled. Hence the apparent strictness of the regulations to an honest man, who claims nothing more than he should have. When my hon. friend comes to administer any Department of Government, he will find that it is absolutely necessary to make all these regulations as restrictive as possible, so as to enable him to protect the revenue, and at the same time to carry out the spirit of the law.

Mr. PATERSON. The hon. Minister invariably, in speaking on this subject, brings in outside matter. The difficulty with this firm was not, as I understand it from them, at all with reference to anything that needed to be put into their entry; the difficulty was the requirement of the Department that they should specify the particular entry that was made of iron or other material that entered into their machinery, and that would not be relaxed by the hon. Minister for them. But that is not the only case, for there is another case in my own constituency, where the same difficulty occurred, and the Minister has not told us that he wished to vary the Order in Council. The Orders in Council stand there in regard to Mr. Raymond and Mr. Wanzer. It is clear that they had the Order in Council varied for them, and that when other manufacturers have had to specify the particular entry, the day on which it passed in port, and the whole price, we find the Minister saying that he went to the Treasury Board for authority—and he suspected that he was stretching his power a little in doing it—but he did give these men this latitude, that instead of having to specify the very day and the very entry that was made, they are allowed to take an affidavit that there was duty paid on those articles some time within two years. And this is refused to others, and it is an unfortunate thing for the Minister that two sewing machine manufacturers, for whom this concession was made, and that was refused to others, happened, for the first time in their life, to cast in their lot politically with the hon. gentleman opposite. When I spoke to the parties who pointed out the difficulty, that they could not make the affidavit that was required, I told them: "Well, I found in the returns that came down to the House, that Messrs. Wanzer, Raymond, and other manufacturers, have received hundreds and thousands of dollars in drawbacks, and they must experience the same difficulties, precisely, as you do;" and they said: "If they are honest men we do not see how they can take the affidavit that the Department says we must take." I said: "I will move, when I go down to Ottawa, for copies of allowed claims and the declarations made by the parties, in order to see whether there is one rule for one man and another for another man." I did not believe it, but when the return came down I found it was so. I find this has been done in the case of one individual, whereas the law has not been relaxed in the slightest degree to others. That being so, it will not avail the hon. Minister to say that they had some foreign matter in the claim. That has not been the difficulty. It was pointed out that they had made a mistake; they admitted it themselves, and wrote down saying that such had been done, and voluntarily amended it before the Department found it out. It was not the difficulty of putting in other matter, but the making of a declaration that caused the difficulty. That was the difficulty with the Waterous Company to whom no favors extended, and with Wanzer and Raymond, in whose cases favors were extended. All the declaration they had to make was, that the duty was paid in two years, while other parties were compelled to carry out the strict letter of the law. I hold that such a proceeding is wrong, and that the facts vindicate the position I have always taken in regard to this matter, that business could not be carried on under the present regularizations; but, at the same time, regularizations should never have been waived contrary to the Order in Council, in favor of one individual, while the law was not relaxed in the slightest degree to others. The whole matter was kept hidden until I was led to make the motion, because many of the firms asked others how they were able to make such affidavits as were required, when they replied that they were not required to make them; and the documents brought down by the hon. Minister of Customs carry out what I have said.

Motion agreed to; and the House again resolved itself into Committee.

222. Customs Department—To provide for increase of salary for the month of June, 1882, of the Chief Clerk in Statistical Branch, promoted from First Class..... $16.67

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I desire explanations by the Minister in regard to this vote.

Mr. BOWELL. This Chief Clerk was promoted and an estimate taken to cover his salary at the last Session of Parliament; but the appropriation was not available until the 1st of July. The promotion took place in June, and the appropriation not being available to cover the extra amount of salary for that month, or portion of the month, of course the Auditor-General was not empowered to pay it, and it is necessary to ask for this amount of $16.67. This vote was explained last Session, under which Mr. Barry, head of the Statistical Branch of the Customs Department, was promoted to the position of Chief Clerk.

Mr. BLAKE. No. I should judge that this was open to the same explanation which the hon. Minister of Customs gave as to the previous vote.

Mr. BOWELL. I am satisfied that it is for the same reason precisely.

Mr. BLAKE. What about Mr. Doucet?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. He was an officer at headquarters, but the work there being prejudicial to his health, I understand that he was transferred to the post office in Ottawa, and after being there for a year, he was re-transferred to the Post Office Department, and then the question was to give him the salary to which he would have been entitled if he had remained in the Department; and therefore this vote is to give him that salary.

Mr. BLAKE. I suppose that during the year he was there, he got the salary which it was stipulated, or understood which he was to receive during that time?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It was a lower salary. His health was not good, and as the work in the office was prejudicial at the time to his health, we thought he should not on that account be deprived of the ordinary increase to which he was entitled.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman explain why he was not paid if he was entitled to it?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Because in the post office where he was, if he had got that pay while there, of course this would have created a precedent for other officers in the office, while returning to headquarters he receives only what he would have been entitled to if he had remained there all this time.

Mr. BLAKE. It seems to me, as explained, that this is an arrangement by which an officer, for his personal convenience, or owing to his health, is placed in a certain position for a year, and having returned to his former vocation, is paid a higher salary, or enough to make up what he would have received, if he had remained in his former position. This is what is called, putting the devil around the stump.

Mr. BOWELL. No, no. You should say: "Flagellating the venerable old Nicholas around the remnant of a decayed stump."

227. Department of Inland Revenue.—To pay E. Chateaubert for performing duties of Mr. Doyon during the latter's illness..... $336.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Mr. Doyon was and still is a permanent officer in this Department; but unfortunately he was struck, I think, by paralysis, and under the circumstances, he was wholly unable to perform his duties. The Minister required some one to do this work, and employed Mr. Chateauvert; and we now ask for authority to pay him, $538. If we had deprived Mr. Doyon of his pay, he would have been deprived of the absolute necessities of life; and as he was so afflicted while he was in the public service, it was thought better and more humane to allow him his salary and to ask Parliament to give an additional salary to Mr. Chateauvert.

Mr. BLAKE. Has Mr. Doyon recovered?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Not yet; and I am sorry to say, I think he is sinking fast.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course we must speak with reserve regarding a case which involves affliction. I knew nothing of these parties, and never heard of them until now, but it shows that the function which the Executive discharges in this case, is of a very delicate character. Suppose an officer falls ill, and so ill as to be incapable to discharge his duties, this illness may be of a very lingering description, and last a long while. Now, the provisions for superannuation or retirement are properly applicable to such cases. When a person becomes infirm and incapable of carrying on his duties, and if we are to make extensive use of a provision, which, I confess, I viewed with some jealousy and dislike when it was inserted in the Act last Session, the provision practically to retain officers at salaries, and employ some one else to discharge their duties, I think it will be looked upon with considerable disfavor by the public. I am not criticising adversely this particular instance, but feel it my duty, on the first occasion when the Parliament is called upon to sanction a vote of this kind, to point out, as I have said, that this is a very delicate action, which ought to be exercised very rarely, and in every case where it is exercised, this should be done with special regard to the circumstances. If a man is incapacitated by severe illness, from which it is hardly probable that he may recover, of course we do not want to throw him out of the Department, but as far as I know, the character of the illness referred to, it is a kind of illness from which recovery to perform such duties, is not generally the rule. A severe attack of paralysis generally ends in one way, and is met that way ordinarily. Was Mr. Chateauvert in the service, or was he brought in simply for the purpose of being a locum tenens, for this person; and is the salary received by him up to this time, at the same rate as the incapacitated officer whom he replaced?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, so I understand. Mr. Chateauvert receives the same salary which Mr. Doyon was paid. I will add this, Mr. Doyon was appointed in the time of my hon. friends on the other side of the House, and the time he has been in office would not allow us to give him a superannuation; he would have received only seven or eight months salary once for all, and, under these circumstances, it was considered such a grave case, we thought that Parliament would not refuse this grant.

Mr. BLAKE. Was Mr. Chateauvert introduced into the service just to do this work?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No. He was in the Department for four or five years, and was perfectly au fait with his duties.

228. Department of Agriculture—For allowance for Secretary of the Department for performing, from March, 1882, the duties of Deputy-Head, absent through illness, as provided in Sec. 11, Canada Civil Service Act, 1882. $875.00

Mr. POPE. My hon. friend (Mr. Blake) knows that Dr. Taché is not able to be in the office, and this sum is, under the law, allowed to Mr. Lowe, who has been acting for that gentleman during this time.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

Mr. BLAKE. Is this allowance the same amount as his salary?

Mr. POPE. It is not quite as much. My hon. friend will see that this is intended to apply up to the 1st of July, before which time Dr. Taché cannot possibly get here.

Mr. BLAKE. Is it intended to apply to the 1st of July coming? At what rate will that be?

Mr. POPE. I think his present salary is $2,500.

Mr. BLAKE. It approximates to the taking up of his salary to the salary of a Deputy Head?

Mr. POPE. Yes; I think it makes it $3,000, while that of a Deputy Head is $3,200.

231. To pay to the widow of the late Judge Mackenzie the amount paid by her husband to Judge Boyd for performing his duties while he was unable to attend to the same..... $834.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Judge Mackenzie asked for leave of absence on the ground of ill-health, but it was supposed that his illness was not a very severe one, and that he would be able to return to his duties. When it was found that his illness proved fatal, it was not considered a proper thing that his widow should be called upon to pay the amount which he had paid to Judge Boyd for performing his duties while he was laboring under what was supposed to be a temporary illness.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course it always looks invidious to discuss particular cases, but I wish to point out to the hon. gentleman, that the precedent which is about to be established—for this is the first time to my knowledge in which this principle has been adopted—is likely to prove an extremely dangerous one. I cannot myself understand the difference between those degrees of severity of an illness, which, on the one hand, would induce the Government to repay the cost of taking a leave of absence, and that in which it would devolve on the Judge himself. I had occasion to advise as to numerous leaves of absence, some years ago, applied for by Judges, and there was no occasion whatever that I could find out, upon which any County Court Judge had any assistance for the discharge of his duties at the expense of the Government. On the contrary, the condition invariably insisted on, was, that provision for a substitute should be made at the expense of the Judge. Ordinarily that discharge is effected at a very moderate, and very frequently at no expense at all. One of the barristers of the county in which the Judge is, is generally found, perhaps partly from motives of friendship, perhaps partly from the local distinction which filling a Bench of Justice confers, to supply the Judge's place. I have, of course, no positive knowledge of the nature of the pecuniary arrangements which existed, but I know that they have not been of an onerous character as a rule, because I endeavored at one time to prescribe what I thought a very wholesome rule in these cases, if it were feasible, namely, to provide that the supply should come, not from the county in which the Judge was, but from another county. You, Sir, will perceive the importance of such a rule. If it were possible to place barristers who, up to the instant of their temporary promotion, were practising in the county, on the Bench where they might have to decide cases for clients to whom they might have stood a few months before in the relation of a professional man, it would not be considered a very proper proceeding. I was met by the statement that this would render it impossible for the Judges to obtain leave of absence at all, from another county to come to theirs, that the result would be that they could not afford to do it. I was obliged to yield and to return to the old practice of sanctioning the supply of respectable barristers even from the county in which the Judge was. I mention this to show that the invariable rule has been that the public service was not to be called on to meet the expenditure of money in consequence of a leave granted to a Judge, and that whatever might be required to supply that leave was to be supplied by the Judge himself. With reference to the Judges of the Superior Courts, I believe that almost invariably that supply has been obtained, as it ought, from the goodwill and kindly feeling of his colleagues remaining on the Bench. The extra work is cheerfully undertaken by those who are well, knowing, as they do, that their brethren will deal with them as they have been dealt by. The sum, in the present case, is not large, as we vote money—not, indeed, worth the few minutes I have spent in discussing the question; but I feel sure that this $834 will be the fruitful parent of a great many other demands of the same kind. Grant this, and where will you draw the line? In this particular instance, I know that the former Junior Judge of the county of York has been hard worked for many years, and that he performed, it seems from this paper, during the illness of Judge Mackenzie, the additional duties of the Senior Judge, involving a considerable amount of labor. Whatever arrangement was made, however, was made between these two judicial persons; but I must repeat that the precedent which is about to be set is one which will be productive of considerable inconvenience to the Government in the way of pressure, and considerable demand, from time to time, on the public purse.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not think that this case is quite so objectionable as the hon. gentleman would seem to infer. Why should you deal with Superior Court Judges in a different manner from County Court Judges.

Mr. BLAKE. You do not.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman knows that it is the invariable practice, when persons holding the highest judicial positions in the country require, in consequence of failing health, a change of air or rest, to give them leave of absence, and they are not called upon to devote their salaries to the provision for the discharge of their duties in their absence. I have known particular instances myself, in which, I think, the hon. gentleman himself gave lengthened leave of absence to the Superior Court Judges without their being taxed, or their salaries reduced in the slightest degree.

Mr. BLAKE. I have explained how.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; but that does not affect the case between man and man. I can understand that a County Court Judge, who desires to have a little rest or change, should provide for the services of a Judge to take his place; but the cases will not be very frequent in which leave of absence is asked by a person whose illness proves to be a fatal illness, and whose case, I am satisfied, if placed before the hon. gentleman, as Minister of Justice, would not be met by him with the remark: Before you can get this leave of absence you must make provision for the supply of your place. I fail to see why so broad a distinction should be made between those who are receiving larger salaries and the Judges of the County Courts. Looking at the matter as a simple act of justice, I do not think this precedent is likely to be a dangerous one.

Mr. BLAKE. The course pursued in my time, and I presume now, with reference to Superior Court Judges, was, that the opinion of the Chief Justice of the court was taken as to whether or not leave could be granted without detriment to the business of the court. That resulted in an arrangement among the gentlemen of the Bench themselves, by which the administration of justice was fully attended to. The Government had nothing to do with that arrangement, and paid nothing for it, and I believe it was agreed to by the Judges without pecuniary payment. Instances have occurred in my own time in which I have been obliged to postpone the leave of absence for a considerable time, until I should receive a favorable report from the chief of the court. Therefore, there is no distinction whatever; the leave of absence is granted in both cases with the understanding that the administration of justice is to be provided for. I make that explanation in order that it should not be inferred from the hon. gentleman's remarks that I am favoring one rule for the rich and another for the poor. That, of course, would be a totally unjust thing.

232. To supplement vote for contingencies of the Supreme Court of Canada by the amount paid for books purchased from Mr. George Duval..... $620 00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is for the purchase of 562 volumes from the library of the late Chief Justice Duval, selected by the Judges of the Supreme Court and delivered to the Supreme Court library.

231. To provide for the payment of expenses incurred in the case of Russell vs. Woodward, before the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council of the United Kingdom on appeal from the Supreme Court of New Brunswick, revote, $5,500..... $8,500 00

Mr. BLAKE. I am glad this account has come in, so that hon. gentlemen who are so enamoured of the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council may see that it is a pretty dear blessing. Can the hon. gentleman say how this sum is divided?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot give the exact figures, but about $600 were the expenses of the liquor interest, and $2,000 the expenses of the temperance interest.

237. Library..... $2,607.15

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Why are so many of the Annual Register purchased? thirty copies costing $90.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. They are for the purpose of exchange.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). That is a bad precedent. Only official documents should be exchanged.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This vote is the annual one.

Mr. ROSS. Besides, the publisher of this book is in the service drawing $2,000 per annum, yet I see every year, since 1878, he draws a large sum for this work, 300 copies for the use of members, and so on.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. He uses his leisure time in this work, and I think such men deserve encouragement.

Mr. CASEY. All the leisure time that Mr. Morgan gives to the work is to put his name on the title page, and he pays others to compile it, and I must say the Department in which he is engaged cannot lose much of his services on this ground. I think almost invariably Mr. Morgan's works have been published by somebody else, and he has only compiled and edited them. I think it is a bad precedent to pay a public servant $1,000 a year for books which have been compiled in his name while he is in the public service.

Mr. ROSS. There is another question of exchange that comes up here. I notice ten copies of the debates of the Legislature of Quebec paid for, $50. Now, why not exchange the debates of the Parliament of Canada for those of Quebec?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. These debates of the Legislature of Quebec are published by private enterprise, and the Legislature of that Province have subscribed for so many copies. I think ten copies is a moderate number for us to subscribe to and put into our library.

Mr. BLAKE. That is all right. But the number of copies of Garneau's History of Canada is much in excess of the number taken of these other books.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. When the first edition was published, some time ago, the Parliament of Canada took 250 copies. I think that fifty copies is a very moderate number for us to take now, of this great work. It has been very carefully revised by Mr. Garneau, jr., and will be a great acquisition to our library.

Mr. CASEY. I think the purchase of books for our library should be done through the ordinary channels—either by the Librarian or by the Committee, and that to choose a certain number of books by Order in Council has the appearance of favoritism.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Library Committee could not purchase these books on account of the money put at their disposal being insufficient to purchase all the books they want. Therefore, when a book of that kind comes out, and the Librarian desires to have it, he writes to the Secretary of State, asking that a certain number of copies be purchased.

20. To pay the Winnipeg General Hospital for patients, not being residents of Manitoba, between 8th April, 1880, and the 31st March, 1883 $14,387.10

In answer to Mr. BLAKE,

Mr. POPE. We made an arrangement by which we paid 60 cts. a day to Manitoba for the care of those people. Our agents enquire carefully into the matter of where these people come from.

21. To provide for further expenses to 30th June, in view of the large increase of immigration not estimated for..... $25,000.00

Mr. POPE. I think this amount will all be required during the year. The increase of immigration to this country is expected to be very large during the coming year. The expenses are very heavy in England in one way and another.

22. For payment to Mrs. Edward Duckett, the amount short paid to her late husband on account of superannuation..... $1,200.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This matter has long been a subject of controversy between this Department and Mrs. Duckett. Mr. Duckett was in the service of the Customs Department and was superannuated, and in the arrangement made for the amount that he was entitled to on account of superannuation this sum of $1,200 was in question. On careful investigation of the whole case it has been found that she was entitled to this amount, over that which she had previously received.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course we have no proper information as to how this sum is arrived at. This is not a grant. As the hon. gentleman has put it, it is a claim of rights, that the officer was short paid, and that restitution was a simple act of justice. Under these circumstances the Government will be obliged to pay his estate and not pay his widow.

Mr. VAIL. In this case there will be no creditors, and I hope the Committee will not refuse to grant it to the widow.

Mr. RICHEY. In making the allowance, which was done by the late Government, they overlooked the arrears. The superannuation allowance was based upon $600 instead of $1,200, which was the right amount. That was explained by the hon. gentleman who preceded me in the representation of Halifax, but there was a mistake in following it up.

23. For pay and maintenance of a guard at Government House..... $3,000.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is an exceptional vote, and it is not intended to continue it.

Resolutions to be reported.

Mr. BLAKE.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and (at 11:55 o'clock p.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

FRIDAY, 11th May, 1883.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE DEBATES.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell) moved the adoption of the fourth and fifth reports of the Committee appointed to supervise the Official Reports of the House. The fourth report relates to the appointment of four gentlemen as French translators of the Debates, which hitherto has been done by contract. It is thought better by the Committee to have the translation done by a body of translators, directly responsible to the Committee for their work. The four gentlemen named, are Gelinas, Beaulieu, Tremblay and Vanasse, and their salaries are based upon the cost of the translation last year, so that the assumption is that there will be no increase in the cost of translation, while the arrangements made will allow the work to be more efficiently performed. The fifth report relates to the purchase of caligraphs whereby the Debates may be transcribed in a more legible manner than is at present generally the case. The suggestion has been made that the reporting staff should be increased; but the Committee think that they can accomplish the same object practically, by not increasing the number of reporters, but by affording greater facilities for the transcribing of the reports. At the present time, each reporter is permitted to employ an amanuensis, and the presumption is that the amanuensis will write out each note taken at the table before the reporter goes in again; but experience has shown that, owing to the very hurried work, the reporter is unable to read over the copy before it goes to the printer, and for that reason the suggestion is made by the chief reporter, based upon his own experience, and on that of one of the other reporters during the present Session, that if caligraphs are obtained, the report could be written out, and still leave time enough for the reporter to revise the reports, by reading over the manuscript—and it gives this additional advantage, that perfect copy would go to the printer. One of the great difficulties in the past has been due to rapid writing, and to the carelessness of the proof reader, I am bound to say, and consequently the reports in many cases have not been at all up to what they ought to have been. I believe that under the arrangement made, or proposed rather, we shall be able to overcome this difficulty, and afford very much better and more accurate reports in the first sheets presented to the House. The other part of this report relates to the resignation of his position on the staff of Mr. Lumsden, who, I believe, proposes to go, like many other young men, West. The gentleman named in his stead is well known to the House. He was formerly the head of the reporting staff, and, in fact, had the contract for Hansard at one time. His skill as a reporter, is I think, thoroughly known to every member of the House—I refer to Mr. Richardson. These are the two reports, the adoption of which I have the honor to move.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman has stated that the arrangements made for the French translation of the Debates will not increase the expense beyond the existing expenditure, and I would ask whether the Committee has been able practically to carry out with reference to the French edition of Hansard, the suggestion which was thrown out at the time that a second French reporter was authorized, namely, that the services of the French reporters should be partially utilized in effecting the translation, because it is very obvious that they have a great deal of leisure time on their hands, and that it would be an economy, a very considerable economy, if the skilled shorthand writers kept only for the purpose of being used when French speaking was going on, were so employed, as they must have a great deal of slack time. I am very glad to hear that the hon. gentleman believes that the result of these labor-saving machines will be to produce increased efficiency on the part of the reporters, and more accurate reports than those which at present—I will not say disgrace—but which at all events do not adorn the pages of Hansard. I would ask him to say—after all this has been done—after getting caligraphs, and adding to the reporting staff, and altering the system and giving an increased number of copies to members—what the hon. gentleman thinks will be the cost, say of next year's Hansard, supposing that it has no more than the average number of pages?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I should have mentioned that there is a recommendation in one of the preceding reports of the Committee that the French reporters should be employed in assisting the translators of the Debates. It was absolutely necessary that there should be two French reporters. We could not get along without them, although, taking the volume in the aggregate, there is not really anything like work enough for one; but if a debate takes place in French we must have two reporters—the measure of the efficiency of the French staff being the ability to meet an occasion of that kind. The French reporters are to be employed in assisting the translators, the intention being—as the translators' room is near that of the reporters—that they can be sent for to the Table at any time when they are required. As to the other point, my impression is that the cost of Hansard next year, with the additional number of copies, will probably reach about $25,000—I do not think it will go beyond that. A report was adopted providing that five copies should be given to each member, and I am, perhaps, somewhat to blame for not explaining that point when I moved the adoption of the report. On consideration, however, I am bound to say that I am not, myself, very much enamored of that provision, and for this reason: That if each member has five copies of the bound Hansard, he will be enabled to give one to each of four influential constituents, or he may put them in the libraries of his constituency, if there are any libraries in it. But the misfortune I see is, that if there are no libraries and you give a copy of Hansard to a few influential friends and not to others, the chances are that there will be a disposition to impute favoritism.

Mr. BLANCHET. There are the colleges and academies.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Yes; and, of course, there will be no difficulty where there are academies and colleges. It has occurred to me that it would be better on the whole if, instead of giving five copies to each member, we were to send copies to each of these colleges and academies, or to libraries where libraries exist, direct from the distributing office.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if the subject of condensing the reports has been brought before the Committee. With the exception of the few members of this House who use refined and correct language, it is very difficult for the reporter to put down precisely verbatim the language of the speaker so as to get what you may call a photograph of the speech, though it may be given in substance. Very often when a speaker speaks very correctly, as some of us do, you will find his language very correctly reported. There are very few hon. members who would care to sit down and write an article, and have it as correct as he would wish to have it without afterwards revising. The hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White), who is himself a very able writer, would very often desire, after he has written an article, to have the opportunity of correcting and revising it, and it is not to be expected that hon. members, who speak, I may say, ex abrupto, would be able to exercise such oversight over their language as would fit it for reproduction in Hansard. Therefore, I maintain that it is impossible to give the exact words of the speaker, and therefore that the substance only should appear in Hansard; and that the form should be reduced as much as possible to the form of the English Hansard by eliminating any repetitions that may occur. I think, if this suggestion were acted upon, it would improve the quality of Hansard and reduce the size of the volume.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I would ask the Chairman of the Committee if he has deemed it worth while to consider a suggestion which I made when this subject was under discussion before, namely, that the sheets supplied to the newspapers throughout the country should be the revised sheets, instead of those first issued. Though the work of the reporters is very well performed, indeed, by the present staff, taking into account the difficulties under which they labor by frequently being unable to hear the remarks of speakers, owing to the other noises in the House—though as I say the work is very correctly done on their part—yet as it has subsequently to pass through the hands of the printers who are liable to make errors, the advance sheets received by members are not such, on the whole, as they may implicitly trust. Even if the reports were such that they might be implicitly trusted, and no errors could be found such as the dropping of a figure making hundreds of thousands instead of millions, there is the difficulty that the daily sheets are not paged consecutively, and those who receive them are unable to pin them together, and so they are worthless for future reference. It seems to me that there might be some scheme whereby the revised sheets could be sent to the different newspaper offices consecutively numbered, so that at the close of the Session, after receiving the index, they could have the volume bound at their own expense, and thus have a book which it seems almost impossible to get otherwise, and quite impossible to get otherwise, without great expense.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). As to the suggestion of the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Casgrain) with regard to the condensation of the reports, I am afraid that would be impossible. The difficulty would be that the reporter would be left to judge of the merit and value of the speeches he reported. The press does a good deal of condensing, and from the nature of things it almost condenses out of existence the speeches of all but the more prominent members of Parliament; and the misfortune of attempting to condense in Hansard would be simply that the same process would be repeated in the Official Report, so that I fear we can only manage to have the Official Report by having a full report. I can understand that occasionally, indeed always, a speaker is very much indebted to the reporter; and the difference between the skilful reporter and the unskilful reporter, consists in the fact, that the skilful reporter anticipates what the speaker desires and means to say, and puts it in the best possible form. That really is what distinguishes good reporting from the process of nearly photographing a speech. As to the suggestion of the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson), it is well worthy of consideration, and though it would involve extra expense, I do not think the additional expense would be very great. It would mean that one copy would be sent to each hon. member to correct; that the corrected sheets would be sent back within twenty-four hours; and then, that three copies would come to the hon. members and be sent to the press all over the country. In that case, of course, the sheets would be consecutively paged. I think this is a suggestion which we may be able to carry out, and at all events I will bring it to the attention of the Committee at the meeting we purpose holding before the Session closes.

Mr. AMYOT. I have no intention of presenting an amendment to the report; but, in justice to my language, I ought to say that I do not believe the number of translators will be sufficient. We will be exposed to the inconvenience of having our French copy issued five or six months after the Session closes. I think the experience of next Session will prove that I am correct. As to the suggestion of the report that the French stenographers should be employed as translators, I strongly protest against it. We have a right to have our stenographers here, always ready, when we choose to speak in French; and if they become wearied by the work of translating, they will not be fit for their regular work. They are very able stenographers; but they are not translators; and I do not think, in justice to them, that we should put that suggestion into practice. This year the translation of the Hansard has been done very well; it is very creditable to Mr. Gelinas, the chief, and I am glad to see that he is to be steadily employed in that work. As to the other translators, I know one of them, Mr. Beaulieu, to be very well qualified; I do not know the others. As to the number of translators, I believe they are not sufficient, and as to the stenographers being employed as translators, I think all the French members object to it.

Mr. BÉCHARD. In reply to the hon. member for Bellechasse, I would say that the question he has just raised was discussed in the Committee, and the opinion unanimously expressed there was that four translators would be sufficient with the assistance of the French stenographer. As has just been said by the Chairman of the Committee, the hon. member for Cardwell (Mr. White), there is but little work to be done, and at long intervals, by the two French stenographers; and it was thought proper, in the interest of the House, that they should be employed otherwise during their moments of leisure. The reporting will not suffer on this account, for it has been understood that one of the reporters should be here at hand, at the sitting of the House, so as to be ready to take any speech that might be delivered in French; and if the presence of the two should be necessary, then the services of the other could be secured. By this new system of translating, we think that it will be done more perfectly than it has been since our proceedings have been reported; and I think every French member of the House will support me when I say that the translation in the past has been very poorly done. It has certainly not been such as to bring glory to the French members or to our language. The Hansard is a monument, designed to pass to posterity, and it is in our interest, and in the interest of the whole Dominion, that the work should be well done. To that end, we have come to the conclusion to recommend to the House the appointment of a permanent staff of translators, who, having always the same work to perform, are likely to acquire great efficiency; and we, therefore, think that the translating will be much more satisfactory in the future than it has been in the past, under the contract system. The contractor did not always employ the same men; each year there were new hands to help him, and as they had not always sufficient training in the work, it was not always well done. The hon. Minister of Public Works last year complained, and I think with good reason, that a speech he had delivered in the House sometime in the previous Session had been very poorly translated; and to obviate such difficulties we have thought proper to recommend a change of system. Now, I would say to my hon. friend from Bellechasse, that we had better wait and try this new system. We have four experienced men; they are all competent men, because we have taken care to nominate men known to be very competent, who can do more work than double the number without experience; and we think that, with the assistance of the two French stenographers, they will be sufficient for the work. At all events, let us try the system, and if, in another Session, experience proves that the number is not sufficient, it will be easy to remedy that deficiency.

Mr. CASEY. I merely rise to urge still more strongly the suggestion of the hon. member for South Brant (Mr. Paterson) in regard to having the corrected sheets, instead of the uncorrected ones, sent to the press. I do not speak so much on my own account, because I do not suffer very much from the condensation that some hon. gentlemen complain of, for the simple reason that I do not make very long speeches. I may make them oftener than the House sometimes cares to listen, but I speak more on behalf of the public generally who are interested in getting, at the earliest moment, the most correct reports of the long and important speeches delivered in the House. Under present circumstances it is necessary occasionally for a member, or some one for him, to go twice over these long speeches—once for the bound volume of Hansard, and once for the press, which involves a vast amount of labor. The consequence is that many of these speeches have to be published in the crude form in which they first appear.

Motion agreed to.

GOVERNMENT BUSINESS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that Government Orders have precedence on Monday next.

Motion agreed to.

SUPPLY.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee.

Mr. CHARLTON. In reference to the expedition east of James' Bay, can the hon. leader of the Government give me an idea as to the expenditure proposed, the proportion to be borne respectively by the Government of Quebec and the Dominion Government, and the field and duration of operations?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This subject is not yet before the House in the way of an estimate. It will only appear in the Supplementary Estimates for 1883-84. As I understand it, the Geographical Society of Quebec have undertaken the exploration of that important division extending north of Quebec and James' Bay, and north-east to the Labrador coast. The Government of Quebec has granted $300, and it is proposed to ask this House to vote $300 more. Before asking the vote we shall be prepared to lay all necessary information before the House.

Mr. CHARLTON. A grant of $300 by each Government would be totally inadequate, unless the resources of the Geographical Society of Quebec are so considerable as to render them independent of aid. If this exploration is to be taken in hand, I hope greater liberality will be shown than that indicated by the hon. Minister.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Will the hon. Minister of Public Works give the information promised me as to the place in the Estimates in which Mr. Fabre's salary is to appear, and the kind of work he is called on to perform?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I was right, yesterday, in saying the item there was not to be found in the Estimates before the House. When the Supplementary Estimates for 1883-84 come down there will be something in them for this, and then will be the time to answer the hon. gentleman's question.

Mr. CASEY. In regard to the exploration of the territory east of James' Bay, does the Government contemplate making any exploration of Hudson's Straits with the view of ascertaining how many months of the year they are navigable? This will be a work of some cost, and I think the Imperial Government ought to contribute to it, as it is of great importance to them that they should have access to the Dominion independent of the River St. Lawrence and Intercolonial Railway, in case of any complications with the United States. The Government might well ask the Imperial Government to assist by a grant of money, and, perhaps, by sending out some naval officer or scientific man to accompany an expedition of that kind. The whaling vessels of Newfoundland would be the proper vessels for the exploration, as they are specially fitted for navigating amongst ice, and the whaling season is over about the time this exploration should begin.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government are not insensible to the advantages of ascertaining finally and thoroughly what that route is, whether it is available for commercial purposes for the North-West. I agree with the hon. gentleman that it is right the Imperial Government should, for various reasons, share in the cost of the enquiry. The hon. gentleman knows there have been two railways chartered to run from the North-West to different points on Hudson's Bay. These two companies have amalgamated. The Government offered some inducements in order to get these companies—both promoted by men of rank, standing, and wealth—to amalgamate and unite their forces, and build one railway through this new country. All new countries are supposed to be more or less inhospitable, but it may prove, as it has proved in other places in the North-West, that on more thorough exploration that country will be found to be not so inhospitable as general rumor will lead us to believe. Those two companies have united in a strong representation to Government as to having a thorough examination of the Hudson's Bay, and the Hudson's Straits especially, to see whether that country can be opened up for commercial purposes and navigation by sailing vessels, and by steamers principally. Before the amalgamation the Government had opened negotiations with Her Majesty's Government, which are now going on, and subsidies in the way of a grant of land to carry out this project will be submitted to Her Majesty's Government immediately, and we will endeavor by every means to induce members to join in promoting the schemes. Perhaps the most advantageous way in which the Imperial Government could assist us would be by giving us a ship thoroughly equipped and manned by men accustomed to Arctic navigation, and who thoroughly understand the various phases and appearances which the ice takes under the various circumstances of currents, winds and alterations of temperature. At all events, the Government will press on Her Majesty's Government the importance of this subject, and will state the earnest desire of the people of Canada, as represented to this House, to have this exploration take place; and that they are willing to make a very liberal grant of land for the purpose. We hope that during this summer we will be able to induce Her Majesty's Government to aid us in the matter. If we fail in that, then we will have to consider how far we can ask Parliament to take that burthen on its shoulders.

Mr. VALIN. I did not understand the hon. Minister to state what kind of vessels would be required to navigate Hudson's Bay during the winter months. I believe that in Hudson's Bay the winter is six or seven months long, and the question is, what kind of vessels would be required in view of the ice existing there? I am afraid that the cost of establishing such a line would be so great as to render it a question of some importance as to whether the Government should undertake it.

Mr. CASEY. I did not speak of establishing a line of steamers, but merely of having an exploring expedition to navigate the Straits. I am very glad to hear the Government have opened negotiations with the Imperial Government in the matter, and I think, with the right hon. Minister, that there is a probability of them granting a ship or something of that kind.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not go so far as to say there is any probability. We will press the matter on the Imperial Government.

Mr. CASEY. I still adhere to the opinion that the Newfoundland sailing vessels, which are accustomed to navigate those waters every season, would be the most fit for the purpose, and in case negotiations with the Imperial Government should fail, this is a matter which the Government would be justified in taking up in the interests of all the Provinces of Canada. There are great portions, not only of the North-West, but also of Ontario and Quebec, that could be opened up if Hudson's Bay were found to be navigable. It was stated this Session, before the Immigration and Colonization Committee, that there was a strong probability that these straits have been more navigable in winter than in summer, as being more clear of ice, on account of the floating ice being tied up by the frost.

Motion agreed to; and the House again resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

244. Canadian Pacific Railway—Georgian Bay Branch $3,000.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This item is for the purpose of paying legal expenses in the suit of Smith & Ripley, in the Exchequer Court. The amount is not known, but it will take at least this sum. There is an Order in Council for a special warrant for $750 on the 19th August, 1882; for $750 on 26th December, 1882; and for $251 on 21st January, 1883. Of course, no more will be expended than is absolutely required.

Mr. BLAKE. That seems to be a very objectionable way of doing business. There is a vote for the same matter in Miscellaneous, and here is another vote under the Georgian Bay Branch. There is no system. Either the whole costs should go under Miscellaneous, or the whole under Georgian Bay Branch.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is a mistake. This is the only vote, and when we come to the other it will be dropped. Part of it has been paid already, and it is well to include the whole. The Order in Council was to place it in the Supplementary Estimates.

Mr. BLAKE. How does the case to which I have referred stand; has it been adjudicated upon?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Judgment was given against the Crown in the Exchequer Court, and we have appealed to the full court. The amount of damages is placed at $271,000.

245. Canadian Pacific Railway—West of Red River... $4,000.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will explain this item in a moment; but I wish to take advantage of the consideration of this vote relating to the Canadian Pacific Railway, to make a very brief statement to the House in connection with a point in the speech which I delivered a few days ago with respect to the Canadian Pacific Railway. I find, upon looking carefully into the question, that the hon. leader of the Opposition had some reason for stating that the ground I had taken with respect to stock was rather obscure, that, as stated by me, the matter was treated as a question of bonds, rather than as a question of stock. I take this opportunity of saying that, upon looking at that point in the hon. gentleman's speech, and in my reply, I feel bound to say that I concur in the soundness of the view taken by the hon. gentleman. I think where a company are obliged to raise any portion of the amount required to construct the railway by the issue of bonds, and they sell their bonds in the open market and obtain the highest price they can, it should be regarded as a legitimate charge to capital account, to charge the discount as well as the amount they receive, provided all the amount is honestly placed in the work. I believe the hon. gentleman is correct in drawing the distinction he did draw between stocks and bonds. I think the hon. gentleman is quite right in his statement that, whereas a company are obliged to pay par for the bonds, whatever bonds they may have issued, irrespective of whatever amount may have been received, the case does not stand in the same position in regard to stocks, and they are not entitled to charge discount, but simply the amount of money received by the sale of the stock, and absolutely placed in the work. I take this opportunity of admitting that the view which the hon. member propounded was a sound and correct view, and one that, upon reconsideration, I am satisfied is the position which the Government must hold in relation to this question, especially taken in connection with the fact that it is upon the capital put into the work by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, over and above all the subsidies they received, that the 10 per cent. profit on their capital must be calculated.

Mr. BLAKE. I receive with very great gratification the statement of the hon. gentleman, for I felt, as I expressed at the time, very great apprehension in regard to the statement he made on the former occasion. I cannot join in the ill compliment which he paid himself, that his statement was obscure. It was very clear, but, as he agreed to-day, it was very wrong. The hon. gentleman will have observed that I also called his attention to a defect, the importance of which is now admitted, in the return which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company made to an Order of this House, in compliance with my last demand. They entirely omitted to give a statement with respect to the increase in capital stock, and the amount realised from it, and so forth. They left the return incomplete in that particular, and did not afford any explanation. It is of great consequence that we should contemporaneously with the creation of the stock, obtain a record of the result of these transactions, because at a later date, as has been shown by the experience of the United States, it will be impossible to obtain it. In treating this subject, I treated it as if the stock had been issued at 60, but later advices confirm a rumor, which I had heard before, that the stock had really been issued at 50, and it was a syndicate, composed to a considerable extent of members of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, which issued it at 60, their gross profit being the intervening 10 per cent.—and a very handsome profit it is—and any profits they may make from selling it at a higher price than 60. The first information which was endorsed by the hon. Minister with great confidence, thus proves to be incorrect; and the stock, so far as the Company is concerned, represents half its nominal amount. I also call attention to the desirability of obtaining a return, which is now considered to be important, in respect to the acquisition of eastern branches, in order to ascertain whether they were paid for out of the Canadian Pacific Railway stock, and also to the extent to which the holdings of the original proprietors were enlarged in order to place them on a par with outside proprietors who might be acquiring stock at the rate of 50 per cent. Suppose the original proprietors had $10,000,000 paid up, and the Company issued other $50,000,000 at 50, the first thing the original proprietors would do would be to double their own stock, or they would be at a disadvantage, as compared with those entering the

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Company who were taking stock at 50; and operations of that kind have probably taken place. At the opening of this Session a return of this kind was moved for, and the hon. gentleman stated that he had the authority of the Company to state that they would furnish information fully and early, and yet we have not got it up to this time. I think it is of great consequence we should know what the inner history of the Company is, so far as the public interests are concerned.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may say I do not remember stating to the House in very positive and exact terms what the hon. gentleman has just placed in my mouth, pledging the Canadian Pacific Railway Company with reference to these returns. The House passed a resolution requiring certain returns from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, but it is only down to a certain date, and the House has no authority, no grounds, and no means of compelling the Canadian Pacific Railway Company from day to day to give information with reference to their business that is not required from any other company with which we have anything to do. What I stated to the House was, that I would endeavor to obtain from this Company as full information as I possibly could, and I may say that they have expressed great readiness from time to time to supplement the wishes of the House in furnishing returns which they are not obliged to furnish except at stated periods in the year. It is quite impossible to expect any company to constantly give voluminous information with reference to all the transactions with which they may be connected. I may say, however, that I drew the attention of the Company to the absence in the returns they made of the information that was asked with reference to this particular point, and expressed the desire that we should have as full information as they could possibly supply and would furnish. Now, I may say with reference to the point which the hon. gentleman raised—he is dealing I presume with rumor, for I presume he has no authority for saying that the price which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company receive for their stock was only 50 per cent.—if the hon. gentleman has any authority for that statement he is in possession of information of which I am ignorant. I do not hesitate to say that I have no such information, although I do not at all think it unlikely that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company should have resorted to the means commonly resorted to, and most important means, to secure the best possible price for their stock, and that is to get it under-written by a certain number of parties who would secure, when they put stock upon the market, the realization of a certain amount for it; that I believe to be not only a common proceeding, but a very wise proceeding, and that it is in the public interest as well as in the interest of the road, because it was desirable that they should secure and take the best possible means that lay in their power of realizing as large an amount as possible, and of securing themselves against the possible contingency of having great discredit thrown upon their enterprise by a very low price being offered by the public for their stock when placed on the market. I can truly say that the hon. gentleman has more information than I have if he has any authority for stating that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has only received 50 per cent. on the stock they have issued.

Mr. BLAKE. I may say I have heard of it; and as I stated to the hon. gentleman, it has appeared in the papers. It has appeared in a New York paper, and the statement is practically this: Confirming the information circulated and which I suppose has reached the hon. gentleman and the Committee—that a syndicate composed of J. Kennedy & Co., one of the houses incorporated in the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and another house whose name I forget at this moment, had a contract for $30,000,000 of stock, in three blocks of $10,000,000 each; the first $10,000,000 firm at 50, the rest at options, to be taken at a time to expire not long hence, and the other a little later on. The first issue at any rate is at 50, which Kennedy & Co. have paid for the first $10,000,000, which they place with the public at 60, or at as much more as they can get. The statement does not give details as to the price of the other two blocks of $10,000,000, which has been agreed to be given at the option of the syndicate to the Syndicate.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may now say, with reference to this vote now before the Committee, that this amount of $4,000 is to pay for a claim for land taken in the parish of St. Clement's, Manitoba, and other lands, in very small amounts, connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway west of Red River, when it was in the hands of the Government.

Mr. BLAKE. These were lands which were expropriated, I suppose?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. On the line which has been located?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; not on the line. This was expropriated when we expected to cross Red River at Selkirk. There was an expropriation then made of Mr. Taylor's land, which has been the subject of a long dispute.

Mr. BLAKE. This is the old Taylor claim.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is the old Taylor claim; that is, a portion of it, and other small matters, land claims, connected with it; but the bulk of it is the old Taylor claim.

Mr. BLAKE. And how was the amount ascertained for the Taylor claim?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Perhaps I had better read the Order in Council, a copy of which I hold in my hand:—

"Certified Copy of a Report of a Committee of the Honorable the Privy Council, approved by His Excellency the Administrator of the Government in Council, on the 23rd January, 1883.

"On a report dated 18th January, 1883, from the Minister of Railways and Canals, submitting that in June, 1875, certain lands, the property of Mr. James Taylor, forming part of Lot No. 65, in the parish of St. Clements, county Lisgar, Manitoba, and lying on the west side of Red River, opposite Selkirk, were expropriated for the purposes of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that this land in anticipation of the passage through it of the main line, Mr. Taylor had had surveyed for town lots, and in subsequent negotiations for a settlement claimed the sum of $20,300 for the property,

"The Minister represents that the Government Land Valuers' report, under date the 28th September, 1878, the value of the land at $1,155.26, and that in March, 1880, a special agent appointed for the settlement of right of way claims, reported that the sum which should be paid to Mr. Taylor was $1,737.50; and Mr. Taylor having by a letter, dated 18th November, 1880, intimated his willingness to accept this sum, an Order in Council authorizing its payment was passed under date 25th of November, 1880.

"The Minister observes that the policy of the Government in respect of the line having, thereafter changed, and the land being no longer required, Mr. Taylor was notified accordingly, under date, 20th July, 1881, but the Minister deeming it but just that some compensation should be made him for the prolonged retention of his land, had certain claims advanced by Mr. Taylor, amounting to $4,160.79 referred to the full Board of Official Arbitrators for examination and report, and their report, received on the 28th of November last, awarded the sum of $1,498.60 together with interest at the rate of 6 per cent., from the 1st of October, 1882, until the time of final settlement, upon a certain item of $783.00.

"The Minister concurring in the above award, recommends that the Order in Council of the 25th of November, 1880, be cancelled, and that authority be given for the settlement of these claims upon the basis laid down by the Official Arbitrators, and that an amount to cover this item be placed in the Supplementary Estimates for the year 1882-83, to be laid before Parliament at its forthcoming Session."

Mr. BLAKE. $4,000 are not required for that.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; but it includes other land claims that require to be dealt with, and which were disposed of at the lowest rate which could be obtained.

Mr. BLAKE. Then as I understand it, the land is relinquished to Mr. Taylor?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. And the other claims included, were they settled by arbitration or by convention?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. They were settled by valuation.

Mr. BLAKE. Are they cases in which the land is also abandoned or retained?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think that they are principally abandoned.

246. Canadian Pacific Railway—Dawson Route: to pay James Dick the Official Arbitrators' award...$4,423.92

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This claim is on the part of Captain Dick, who was a contractor with the Government of Canada, with the Railway Department, for the construction of steamers for the Dawson route, between Thunder Bay and the Lake of the Woods. Captain Dick undertook this work, and lost heavily, owing to his having gone to a large expenditure to carry it out, when he was obliged to abandon it in consequence of the Indians interfering with the operation in which he was engaged. This claim has been pressed on the Government for many years, and finally one of the Official Arbitrators, Mr. Buchanan, was instructed to investigate the matter and report upon the claim. The following is the conclusion of his report:—

"I think that the evidence shows that the case of Captain James Dick deserves consideration, unless it be held not to be the duty of Government to furnish the means of enforcing law and order wherever public works are going on. But I think that even if the principle for which he contends is admitted (which, of course, it is not my business to decide), he will be sufficiently remunerated by the payment by the Government of $4,423.92, being the first and fourth items of his claims, $5,533, less $1,109.08, the balance against him in the account current made up, as it has been, on the strict terms of the contract taken by Messrs. James Dick & Co. In all the circumstances, however, I do not see that he should be entitled to interest further back than the date on which Government decides on the principle."

That report was referred to the Board of Official Arbitrators, consisting of Mr. Buchanan, Mr. Simard and Mr. Cowan, and a majority of the Board gave their award in favor of Captain Dick for the amount mentioned in Mr. Buchanan's report.

Mr. BLAKE. Who were the majority of the arbitrators?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Simard and Mr. Buchanan. Mr. Compton was absent. They made the following award:

"In this case we have the honor to report: That the Board having heard read in the presence of the counsel for the claimant and Government the evidence taken before Mr. Buchanan, and having also heard the arguments of these gentlemen, take the same view as that contained in Mr. Buchanan's report. They, therefore, recommend the case to the favorable consideration of the Government to which they infer that Captain Dick is fully entitled in justice, inasmuch as this loss sustained by him in the execution of his work was caused by the absence of any organization or protection, either civil or military, which Captain Dick should have expected from the Government during the execution of his contract."

As I said before, the men were intimidated by the Indians, and driven out of the country, and the stores which Captain Dick had accumulated for carrying out the contract were destroyed, and the only course the Government could take was to refer it to arbitration.

Mr. BLAKE. When did this occur?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. At the time the Dawson route was being carried out under the late Government. The claim has been steadily pressed by Captain Dick from that time, until it was decided that it must be disposed of in some way or other. At the Board of Arbitration, the Government was represented by counsel, and every pains were taken by the Department to place the position of the Government in the most favorable light; and the majority having found that Captain Dick was entitled to the money, this sum was placed in the Estimates.

Mr. BLAKE. I think it is extremely to be regretted that the Supplementary Estimates for the service of the current year, brought down at a late period of the Session, and discussed in its dying hours, should contain these old, stale claims. It appears that payment of this claim has repeatedly been refused, we cannot tell whether justly or unjustly, but importunity affects—I will not say the unjust Judge—but it affects the Judge, and an arrangement is made of some kind or other, and instead of Parliament being supplied with the papers early in the Session we are told that if we want information we can dig into the large pile of papers which the hon. gentleman has before him. In the extract which the hon. gentleman read from Mr. Buchanan's report, it was stated that there was a question of principle, and the recommendation of the report is based upon the settlement by the Government of that question of principle. The Government did not refer this question of principle to the full Board, but they referred the report which was dealing with an amount which should be paid to Captain Dick assuming the principle to be decided in his favor. Now, there should not have been much difficulty a long time ago in deciding this question of principle. Whether or not Captain Dick, under the peculiar circumstances of this contract, is entitled to be supplied with military or civil protection we cannot now discuss, because we have no information about it. Is this matter connected with some actual building of steamboats?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There was an attempt to build them.

Mr. BLAKE. There were some boats built there.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Captain Dick's attempt failed.

Mr. BLAKE. There were some boats built there.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Later on—yes.

Mr. BLAKE. That must have been in 1868, or thereabouts, because there is a large expenditure on boats up in that region which hon. gentlemen have, since that time, made famous.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will give the hon. gentleman the date of the contract and other particulars on Concurrence.

Mr. BLAKE. We understand from recent experience what that means. I find, from the Public Accounts, that in the years 1869-70, 1870-71 and 1871-72 there was an aggregate sum of $286,000 expended for boats for mail service, and I believe they were constructed principally upon the waters which pertain to and are closely allied to the famous locks which hon. gentlemen have at a later day been impugning as works which should not have been attempted. I do not know where the hulls of these boats are, but I presume it is in connection with, or as the hon. gentleman now says even prior to these years which resulted in the spending of $286,000 for steamboats in these waters that Captain Dick's contract took place. If so, I say that a claim of that kind demands from the hon. gentleman a most searching enquiry. These stale claims I am afraid of; and if this claim has been before successive Governments for the last fourteen or fifteen years, and they did not find that there was a principle under which they could assent to it, it is extraordinary that at this time of day that principle should be sanctioned and recognized; and I do not think, without further information as to the facts, and as to what occasioned Captain Dick to invoke this principle which for fifteen years has been ignored, that we ought to be called on to pass this item. Although the amount is small we are dealing with a principle, to establish which may lead to very serious consequences. The basis of the item is the recognition of the proposition that in an unsettled and unorganized country in which everybody knew there were no white inhabitants and no police, a contractor who undertakes to perform a work there is entitled to demand that the Government with whom he contracts will place a civil or military force to protect him in the fulfilment of that contract. I am not yet prepared to assent to that principle in ten minutes, which it took the hon. gentleman fifteen years to recognize.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not think the oldness of the claim is any ground for ignoring it. I would remind the hon. gentleman that there is an older claim than that in connection with the same work—a claim against the old Parliament of Canada, which since Confederation has been pressed upon both Governments, and which both Governments have resisted. I am referring to Mr. Moffat's claim. Although every Government since Confederation has refused to pay him a single dollar, he got leave to bring his case into the Exchequer Court, and that court has given him judgment for a very large amount, notwithstanding the fact that his claim was a great deal larger than this one, and was not supposed to be nearly so strong. I may say that we rejected this claim when it was pressed upon us before; we took very much the same ground that the hon. gentleman and former Governments have taken, but we did not feel warranted in refusing to allow the claimant an opportunity of substantiating his claim, if he could, by testimony under oath; and, under these circumstances, I do not think the hon. gentleman will say that we are wrong to appoint an official arbitrator with power to take testimony under oath. That arbitrator came to the conclusion that the Government honestly owed Captain Dick this amount of money. Still we refused to pay it, although the report of the arbitrator set forth what I think will be regarded by most members as good reasons why we should pay it. A person contracted with the Government of Canada to do a work which they considered to be very important, however mistaken they may have been, in the interest of Canada; the contractor entered upon his work in good faith, and spent his money in purchasing supplies and employing a force of men, and in taking them into a wild, inhospitable wilderness; and he found that the place where he was to build a vessel, under contract with the Government of Canada, was in the possession of Indians, and he was driven out of the country, and his stores taken from him. Suppose he had no legal claim; suppose you take the ground that he had entered into a contract to do a certain work, and did not do it; after this matter has been enquired into under oath, the Government taking care to have engineers and counsel to carefully scan everything; after it has been substantiated under oath that this loss was really incurred in an effort to carry out a contract with the Government, and only failed because the Government had not provided due protection to life and property; after the whole question has been submitted, not to an arbitration in which Captain Dick was represented, but to an arbitration appointed wholly by the Government—I do not think the hon. gentleman himself, if a member of the Government to-day, would refuse to pay, or submit to the Parliament for payment, such a claim. I do not think we had any other course, as honest men, desirous of doing justice between man and man, between the weak and the strong, than to come down to Parliament and ask them to pay this claim as one which we have satisfied ourselves is an equitable one.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman having made a great deal about having submitted this matter to the Board, I would just say that Mr. Buchanan is a very respectable old gentleman; but I do not think a person at his time of life is likely to be very highly qualified to decide a matter of this kind.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We did not pay it on his report, but on the report of the full Board.

Mr. BLAKE. Mr. Buchanan first decided in favor of the claim, and then the Government referred it to the Board. Of the three before whom it came, Mr. Simard took one side and Mr. Cowan the other, and it was left to Mr. Buchanan still to decide it. So the full Board part of the case does not add very much to its strength.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We did not refer it to the three, but to the full Board. As the hon. gentleman knows it constantly happens that one man may not be available; he may be a thousand miles away; and then we have to send the claim to the majority.

Mr. BLAKE. I am not objecting, but when the hon. gentleman places great stress upon the circumstance that it is the decision of a full Board, I state, as a matter of fact, it was a decision of the majority of the three members of the Board present, and not of the full Board, as one member was absent. Out of these three, of which Mr. Buchanan was one, one dissented, so that really the decision was simply Mr. Buchanan's own judgment. I do not know whether the dissenting member gave his reasons or not; but I say the circumstance, as stated by the hon. gentleman, throws doubt upon, instead of adding strength to, his views. The hon. gentleman says that because it is an old claim is no reason for rejecting it. I never said it was, but that it should be carefully scrutinized.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. You would not ask us to look back longer than fifteen years.

Mr. BLAKE. No; but I would ask the hon. gentleman to look at it fifteen years ago, when it arose, and decide the question of principle which these judicial investigators did not decide, which they expressly say they remitted to the Government to decide. Supposing that relief should be given, the hon. gentleman's duty was to have come to that conclusion long ago, and having come to that conclusion to have remitted the question of fact to those competent to investigate the facts. The difficulty of investigating matters of this kind becomes very much greater as years roll on.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That would go against Captain Dick.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not think so—not before an arbitration, according to my slight experience of these things. The difficulty of sifting facts and of getting at the bottom of the stories told by witnesses, the color that may be placed upon matters by those who come forward to aver that there was such a loss and who are generally friendly to the claimant, grows greater and greater by the lapse of years. The hon. gentleman makes rather a virtue than otherwise, of having listened so late to this call for justice. However, the hon. gentleman said that he would bring down all information before Concurrence. We should see the claim that Captain Dick made, the dates of the transaction, the evidence of the contractor, Mr. Buchanan's report and the evidence on it, that was referred to the Board of Arbitration and their report, so that we may have some opportunity of dealing with this matter with more knowledge than we now possess.

Mr. CASEY. I understood the hon. Minister to say that the principle of the case is that the Government was liable to damage to the contractor for damage caused him through the lack of protection on the part of the Government. That was decided by the Government itself, and not by the Dominion Arbitrators.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I did not say that. I do not want to say that; I do not want to go any further than is absolutely necessary. I have stated the facts as they existed—the report of Mr. Buchanan and that of the Board of Arbitrators—that the contractor failed in carrying out his contract through the lack of that protection. But I do not think it is at all desirable to pronounce what may not be at all necessary, in order to deal with this case and establish a principle which, it appears to me, is not absolutely necessary in the case.

Mr. CASEY. Then it appears that the arbitrators decided that the contractor had lost a certain amount of money in trying to carry out his contract on account of the Government not protecting him. The question whether he should be paid was referred to the Government, and the arbitrators reported it was only on the ground the Government was responsible for such lack of protection that the amount should be paid. Subsequently the Government decided to pay the money, but the hon. gentleman says he does not want to commit himself to the principle. At all events, the Government have agreed to pay an amount which the arbitrators held could not be paid on any other facts than the basis of that principle. Whatever reservation, mental or otherwise, the hon. gentleman may make, this action of the Government will be taken as establishing that principle. The hon. gentleman asked the House whether they would insist on sticking to the legal technicalities of the case, and deprive this poor man of the money he had lost in attempting to carry out his contract. I do not know that this House is disposed to insist on that. I do not know but what the hon. Minister has made a very strong case in this respect, but I do not see that he is very consistent in putting such a case to the House. I do not think it is at all consistent with his treatment of other cases in which damages have been suffered owing to lack of protection by the Government. He says it is the duty of the Government to protect the life and property of all its subjects, especially of contractors in the wilderness as in this case; but it was only the other day, in the Supreme Court here, that the Government—I presume by the advice of the hon. gentleman—took advantage of the legal technicality, in which the court sustained them, that the Government was not responsible for damage inflicted upon the life and property of persons whose money they had taken for carriage on a public railroad belonging to the Government—that the Government were not responsible as common carriers. The hon. gentleman who is almost pathetic now in urging the claim of this contractor, because the Government did not keep the Indians away from the place where he was conducting operations was then in a different mood, and resisted the appeal of this man who was maimed for life, rendered useless for life through the carelessness of Government officials conducting the Government railway, on the ground that the Government were not liable for damages as common carriers. Was the hon. gentleman pathetic then? Did he say this was a case between the strong and the weak, between the Government and an individual, and that he should not stick too strictly to the law? No, Sir; but he said: "I will insist to the last on the legal technicality. We will not give this man any damages for the hopeless injury that has been inflicted upon him through our carelessness; we will insist on the technicality, and vote this man nothing." Is it only in the case of contractors that the Government is to be merciful? Is it only in the case of political friends, such as Captain Dick, that they are to be considerate and look at the case as between the strong and the weak, between the Government and an individual? On what other ground does the hon. Minister draw a distinction between these two cases? Here he has set up a purely technical ground for reimbursing a contractor who suffered loss in carrying out a contract with the Government; in the other case he set up a purely technical ground for refusing to pay damages to a man who was admittedly and seriously injured through the inefficiency of the Government road.

247. Canadian Pacific Railway—To pay Joseph Whitehead, contract No. 15, the difference between cost of work and contract prices.$86,200.00

Mr. CHARLTON. Can the hon. Minister give us some information in regard to this case?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may state, in reference to this matter, that it is a somewhat unusual case, I think, to come before Parliament. Mr. Whitehead was a contractor on the Canadian Pacific Railway. He made a contract to perform certain work for a certain sum of money, and in the progress of that work he became incapable of carrying it on vigorously; he incurred heavy liabilities and became financially embarrassed, and ultimately it was found that serious loss to the country was going to take place and a great obstruction to other contracts, as well as the completion of the work on which he was engaged, from his inability to carry on this work. Under these circumstances, Government interposed and took the contract out of Mr. Whitehead's hands, and completed the work directly by the officers of the Government as the law provides. The result was that the work was vigorously prosecuted, the Government having the means for doing so, and the work was not only completed, but it was found that, contrary to most cases of this kind, it was completed largely within the amount of the contract price for the work. Then the question arose as to what course should be taken as to the contractor. It was not simply a question of furnishing the contractor with the amount he would have been entitled to if he had been able to carry his work vigorously to completion, but it was a question whether the parties from whom he had obtained the money, and whose money had gone into the work, and by whose means the work had been carried on and placed in a position that enabled it to be completed at a profit, should be allowed to remain unremunerated. The Government came to the conclusion that it would not be right, as the country had got the advantage of the money that had been expended at the sacrifice of the creditors of Mr. Whitehead, and, under these circumstances, they determined to ask Parliament to pay the amount of money that Mr. Whitehead would have been entitled to at his contract prices if he had been able to complete the work. The cost to the country is no greater than it would have been had Mr. Whitehead been able to carry out his contract to completion. I am afraid his liabilities exceed the amount that will be provided for by this vote; but the Chief Engineer of the Canadian Pacific Railway having reported that the work, if completed at contract prices, would have cost the country this $86,200 more than it has cost, we have decided to ask Parliament to vote that money in order that the creditors of Mr. Whitehead may be, at all events to that extent, repaid the advances which they had made to him, and the money which they had really contributed to the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. BLAKE. Was any intimation made, when the contract was taken off Mr. Whitehead's hands, by which, if it cost more than contract price, the Government would be reimbursed the excess?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No. There was this: That if it cost more we had the security taken by the late Government—by whom the contract was made—of, I think, over $100,000, all of which would have been liable, as my hon. friend knows, for the amount that it would cost the country in excess; and that security, of course, has been released. But it would have been held, and the Government would have been entitled to use that if the work had cost more than the contract price.

Mr. BLAKE. When was the application made on behalf of Mr. Whitehead for payment of this sum of money—for which he has no claim, that I can see at all, either legally or equitably—and when was the decision arrived at by the Chief Engineer?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Whitehead made the claim at the time the work was taken out of his hands. Mr. Whitehead was constantly claiming that we should give him the benefit of the contract which he surrendered, to a certain extent.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Mr. BLAKE. What answer was made to him?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. He was informed that under the contract he would not be entitled to it, but that it would be a subject for future consideration by the Government and by Parliament, as we have no power.

Mr. BLAKE. When was it considered?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This matter was reported upon by the Chief Engineer on the 13th March, 1882, after the completion of the contract—because, of course, until that we were unable to say what position the work would stand in.

Mr. BLAKE. This is the 11th of May, 1883, the paper on the Table says.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am giving the hon. gentleman the facts as they are stated. The report of the Chief Engineer gave the facts, showing how much remained to the credit of the work at contract prices, and this report of the Chief Engineer I have in my hands.

Mr. BLAKE. When was the Order in Council made, or the decision arrived at?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The Order in Council was passed on the 24th July, 1882, and a report to Council on this case was made by me on the 22nd of March, 1882, and the Order in Council was passed on my report.

Mr. BLAKE. Why was this not brought down in the Supplementary Estimates last year?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Because a decision was not arrived at. My report was made to Council, but a report of a Minister often remains a long time in abeyance before the Council take it up and deal with it, and that is especially the case during a Session of Parliament where there is so much pressing business to be attended to. I have given the hon. gentleman the dates just as they occurred.

Mr. BLAKE. I have a sort of suspicion which may be a very unjust and unworthy one, that there were more people than Mr. Mack—I apologize and retract—than Mr. Whitehead interested in this matter. I ask whether this was the contract about which a great deal of evidence was taken by the Canadian Pacific Railway Commission; whether this is the contract which was the subject of transactions between the Department and the contractor, and between the contractor and those who had been going surety for him and assisting him, and intervening with the Department; and whether this is the matter in respect to which divers notes were given by Mr. Whitehead for large sums of money? Is this the same contract?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is the same contract; and I can only say that the hon. gentleman has the sworn testimony in relation to this matter, taken after the most exhaustive examination in every shape and form, under his hands. He has the report of the parties who made the investigation; and I can assure the hon. gentleman that I am quite prepared, if he wishes to throw out any insinuations, to meet him, and, with the sworn testimony obtained after the closest investigation into every matter relating to the contract, to discuss the matter here or elsewhere.

Mr. BLAKE. I did not throw out any insinuations against the hon. gentleman.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Not against myself; but the hon. gentleman, by implication, by the very way in which he asked the question, showed he intended to convey an impression that the Government were influenced by the connection of certain parties with Mr. Whitehead.

Mr. BLAKE. In what?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. In connection with this matter—in bringing down this vote,

Mr. BLAKE. I am afraid the hon. gentleman is chargeable with that. I thought the hon. gentleman believed I had insinuated that there were some improper dealings between Mr. Whitehead and the Department. Such was not the fact. I said nothing to indicate that such was in my mind. But that there was impropriety on the part of others appears by the testimony, speaking from a memory of it, which is not so fresh as it would have been if I had known this item was coming up, and would be vindicated, and that it would be said that it was for Mr. Whitehead's creditors the money was being voted. I must say that, according to my recollection, there was a very considerable amount of impropriety, a suspicious mass of dealings with respect to certain persons who were intervening between Mr. Whitehead and the Department, and there is a good deal of not very edifying reading in the evidence upon that phase of the transaction; and if the proposal of the Administration is based upon the view that the country ought to very favorably consider some of the claims which have been mentioned in the course of that evidence, it is in order that Mr. Whitehead may be able to recoup demands which have been obtained against him in the course of these transactions, I think we will be very much indisposed to vote the money, much less disposed than we otherwise would be. It is impossible at a moment's notice to engage in these enquiries without having referred to the two volumes of evidence and ascertained what parties engaged in this particular transaction; but this once again shows the impropriety of bringing down a vote for a very large sum of money, not $4,000 or $5,000, but $86,000 in this instance, to be voted at this stage of the Session. And upon this scanty explanation, I would ask if any request has been made on the part of any of Mr. Whitehead's creditors; if so, what creditors; if any arrangement has been made as to the disposition of the money; if the money is to go unreservedly into Mr. Whitehead's hands; has the order in Council been made available; are we going to pay Mr. Whitehead or his creditors; and if so, what creditors?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Every possible care the Government can take that any money coming through the hands of the Government should go to the creditors of Mr. Whitehead, whose money had been put actually into the construction of the work, has been taken. When we took the contract out of Mr. Whitehead's hands, as the hon. gentleman knows, the Government took all the plant, and they disposed of a very large quantity of it as it was disengaged and could be disposed of, and I made a report to Council recommending that the then deputy Minister of Justice, Mr. Lash, should be the party to designate how the money should be expended, and into whose pockets it should go. Not a single dollar of money which came into the hands of the Government in connection with the sale of a very large amount of plant—and which, under the contract, Mr. Whitehead was to have the benefit of—was disbursed by myself or the Department. I looked upon it as important, under the circumstances, to have the matter thoroughly guarded, so that the parties whose capital and credit had been used to furnish the plant necessary for the construction of the work, should be reimbursed, and no possible grounds for supposing at any future time that there had been the slightest misappropriation; and I asked the Government to pass an Order in Council directing Mr. Lash to designate who the parties were who should receive anything. The whole papers and claims were placed in his hands, and down to the period that gentleman left the service of the Department, he alone was the party who gave the instructions under which the Department of Railways and Canals has acted and through whom alone a single dollar was given. I am not aware of any money having been expended. Mr. Whitehead has made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, and everything the Government can do will be done, in the event of this vote passing the House, to see that the money goes, not to Mr. Whitehead to be squandered by him, but to those whose money was placed in the work, and the benefit of whose money has been received by the public, shall receive the payment so far as the vote will go. I am a little surprised at the ground which the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blake) has taken in connection with this vote. When was there a case where stronger ground could be shown for the appropriation of public money? A contract was let, and the country was bound under it to pay a certain amount of money for the construction of this public work. That work, which was one of very great magnitude, has been completed, and the country has not been called on to pay, as is the case in ninety-nine cases out of 100, a large sum over and above the contract price. Mr. Whitehead became hampered with liabilities, and incurred hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of debt, and yet was unable, with all the Government aid—and I do not hesitate to say that the Government went as far as a Government was justified in going in strengthening Mr. Whitehead's hands—to complete the contract. I found when I came into the position I now occupy, that my predecessor had again and again advanced large sums of money to Mr. Whitehead for the purpose of enabling him vigorously to carry on this important work. I adopted the same principle, and while I had reason and hope to believe, that by being sustained and supported in the strongest way in which we could sustain and support him, he would be enabled to carry on the work to completion, it remained on his hands. It was only when the time came that he was so hampered by his creditors and obstructed in the prosecution of the work, that it was likely, not only that the contract would break down, but that unless it was taken hold of at that particular time, a year would be lost and we would have been a year later in opening up the road from Thunder Bay to Red River instead of having it opened now for traffic, as it is to-day—that this would have been the position, and that not only would we have been obstructed there, but we would have very large contracts beyond him obstructed and embarrassed, and that it would be utterly impossible to complete their work, that we took the work off his hands. In fact a claim has been made as it is—I do not say that it is well founded, but the hon. gentleman knows how these claims are made. Contractors assume the contracts made by the Government will be carried out, and that they will have access, which the completion of a previous contract will give them, to get to their own work; and every person knows that the success or failure of a contractor often depends upon the facilities which he may have to reach a work of that character and difficulty—an important work in a remote section of the interior of the country, and in an inaccessible section—until this work is finished. Under these circumstances, I think my hon. friend will see that the Government exercised a wise discretion when they found that this contract would inevitably break down, and that unless they took hold of it at once, a year would be lost. In taking hold of it and securing its prompt execution, and it is a very rare thing—in my experience as a public man, I hardly know of an instance—in which the Government have, under these circumstances, taken the work out of the hands of a contractor who has broken down, and been enabled not only to complete it within the amount which the Government were bound to pay and had agreed to pay, but as in this case to come out with $86,000 on the right side. I have no hesitation in saying that had it not been for the vigor and energy thrown into the work by the Chief Engineer, who made it specially his business to vigorously prosecute this work, and for the able assistance which he had the good fortune to obtain for its immediate supervision, I do not believe that any such result could have been obtained. This work was promptly and rapidly pushed to completion, with the advantage, as I say, of finding that instead of being out of pocket, as is usually the case under such circumstances, and being called upon to pay a large sum of money in addition to the contract price, we had the good fortune of finding that the account footed up $86,200 on the right side to the country, which we had saved by taking the work out of the hands of the contractors. Now, I say I do not know what the hon. gentleman's sentiments are. He says that this money ought not be asked for, and ought not to be voted; but I ask the hon. gentleman whether he thinks that the Government of Canada would be entitled—knowing as they do that these $86,200 have been contributed by men who in good faith took money out of their pockets to furnish the contractor, Whitehead, with it to carry on this work, and having saved this amount under the contract price—to withhold that sum? and if he thinks it would be equitable and fair, and just for them to keep this money in their pockets and out of the hands of the men whose money enabled the work to be completed under the circumstances in which it has been finished? I do not think so; and if those are the hon. gentleman's ideas of what is just, and honorable, and fair on the part of the Government, I can only say I differ from them. I believe there was no stronger claim placed before this or any other Parliament in the world, than this, when we come here and ask that this money, which has been saved to the country by the Government, in taking hold of the work and finishing it themselves, should be appropriated so far as this profit goes, not to enrich the Government of Canada, but to repay the men who honestly and in good faith lent their resources and money to this contractor for the purpose of enabling him to carry this work to completion.

Mr. CASEY. There is no doubt that the hon. Minister is correct in one point. It was no doubt good policy, or it appears so at least on the face of things, for the Government, when they found this contractor unable to finish this contract, to take it off his hands and finish it in a shorter time, and cheaper than would otherwise have been the case. There is no dispute, as far as I can see; but when this is done and we save $86,000 made, as the hon. Minister correctly states, by the efficient care and attention of the engineers in charge of the road, perhaps through a little saving here and there, &c., the hon. gentleman stands and contemplates something unheard of, unexpected and unendurable. He says: here is a saving; we have actually got the road done for less than the contract price, something which never occurred before and something we never expect to occur again, and which should not occur; and we will take these $86,000 saved to the Government by the care of the Government's own officers, and hand it over to the creditors of the man who was unable to carry out the contract. I do not know that this is very good reasoning, but it seems, perhaps, the readiest way to dispose of something which unexpectedly came into the Government's hands. The idea of a surplus arising in the conduct of a Government work, and of having something unexpected in their hands, is a matter with which no tradition deals. The Department of Railways has no tradition whatever bearing on the case of a surplus remaining on hand after the construction of a work. They do not know what to do with it. It would occur, perhaps, to some people to put it into the Treasury and to save it, as the saving was due to the efficiency of the officers of the Department; but no. The first thing that occurs to the hon. Minister of Railways is to give it away to somebody, and he gives it to the creditors of the contractor. Well, he says, it seems the most natural thing to pay it to those who were honestly out of money by this contractor. Why, since when did the Government of this country constitute itself an assurance company for the creditors of contractors? Since when has the principle been established, that anybody lending money to a contractor—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will give the hon. gentleman case after case—in which my hon. predecessor took the public money and paid it—where there was nothing saved, to pay the honest and just claims of men who had put their labor and money into public works.

Mr. CASEY. No doubt the hon. gentleman's predecessor had to pay money which was payable to contractors, if it was not paid to their creditors; but he never took money in this manner to pay it to the creditors of contractors. The hon. gentleman cannot show such an instance at all; and he knows very well that he has introduced a totally new principle: that when the Government takes a contract off the hands of a man who admittedly could not carry out his contract—with assistance advanced from the Department—and it is shown that the contractor was wholly useless and inefficient and not up to his business, then in that case having taken the contract off his hands and by the efficiency and care of trained servants of the Government made a saving, the Government shall take the money which has not been earned at all, and for which no work was done on the road, and hand it over to the people who made the mistake.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The work was done.

Mr. CASEY. Not the work for these $86,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; for the $86,000, and it was done by the money of private individuals, who had given Mr. Whitehead their money to put into the work;—and it was there.

Mr. CASEY. No. The work was done on the hon. Minister's own statement, without using these $86,000; and this is just the point—without spending these $86,000 at all. So the work was not done for the $36,000. The creditors in question merely advanced money to Mr. Whitehead on the faith of his business reputation and ability as a contractor to make money out of a job and pay it back. They took, then, risks of his being able to pay, and it turned out that he was unable to pay—at least it is assumed that he was unable to pay them, and so the country is asked to pay them. I say again since when did the Government make itself an insurance company for the creditors of contractors. This new precedent; this unheard of precedent, will make it extremely easy for Government contractors to borrow money. They will be able to say to those from whom they borrow, you will never lose anything by lending to us, because no matter whether we are good business men or bad, no matter whether we complete the contract or not, no matter whether it is taken off our hands or not, we will get the money from the Government. This precedent the hon. gentleman asks us to adopt, on the ground of simple justice. Well, Sir, it may be justice, but it is not simple justice; it is the most complicated justice I have ever heard of. He says there was a security for $100,000 taken for the completion of the contract, and this security was released. Why was this security released? What was the security taken for unless to indemnify the Government? Why did they not keep the security in existence?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. They did.

Mr. CASEY. I do not understand that the Government kept the security alive until the contract was finished. They found that it was not necessary to collect the money from these sureties, or to confiscate the security if it was not of a personal nature, but $86,000 they have saved to pay the creditors of the contractors. Now, if they had to pay the creditors at all would it not have been more reasonable and more rational to recoup them out of the security than out of the money which the Government had saved?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The security did not belong to us—it was not ours. The only ground upon which the Government could have a dollar of the security was provided the work cost more than the contract price. The moment the work was done within the contract price the Government had no claim to a dollar of it.

Mr. CASEY. That is true, provided the work was done under the contract price by Whitehead; but if he turned out to be unable to complete the work, as was the case, if that security was given on the terms on which security is ordinarily given, the Government were entitled to claim it the moment they took the work off his hands. Whitehead turned out to be unable to complete the work at any price, and that is the ground upon which they took it off his hands. This security was a security that he would be able to perform the contract within a limited time, and at the stipulated prices; but he did not perform it at all, therefore the security was forfeited to the Government, but the Government threw it away as they threw away the saving they afterwards made in the work. The hon. Minister said the Government would take such pains as lay in their power to see that this money would be paid only to such creditors as advanced money to go into the actual construction of this work; but I do not know how they are going to distinguish these creditors. How are they going to tell what Whitehead did with Jones' money, or Robertson's money, or anybody else's money—how are they to tell which money went into Whitehead's pocket, which went into other speculations, or how much he may have had on hand? The creditors could not tell anything about it, and I know of no one else who could, except Mr. Whitehead himself. The fact that the hon. gentleman says that the money shall be repaid only to those whose money went into the work would seem to leave it open to the supposition that there are other claimants, and we do not know whether this amount would satisfy all the claims of those whose money went into the work or not, or whether there will be a balance to go to Mr. Whitehead after these amounts are settled. I think we should know the names of these creditors, when the debts were incurred, and whether there was any guarantee given by the Government to them that they would be recouped. We want to know when the money was advanced, and whether this amount will satisfy them or not. If the item passes in its present shape I do not see how they can take any pains of that kind. The item is to pay Joseph Whitehead and not these creditors, and I do not see how the Auditor-General can, under this vote, pass a cheque to pay any of the creditors of Joseph Whitehead, and you will simply have to trust Whitehead to pay that money himself. If it is to pay the creditors it should be so expressed in the vote. In short, it seems to me as if either this money will go to Whitehead, or else there is an arrangement between him and those who have worked up influence on his behalf with the Government to get the money to pay them and pay the other creditors. It would seem that there was a little angel perched aloft, and perhaps two or three of them to look after poor Jack—to look after his interests and bring them before the great potentate who rules the Railway Department. And perhaps these little angels may have some interest in the disposal of these funds. If the hon. Minister will tell us who are the creditors we will be able to see whether this is so or not. It may seem a little uncharitable to assume that there was any such influence used with the Government; but when so extraordinary a proposition is made, when so new a precedent as this is laid down, it is certainly open to people who are not particularly uncharitable to suppose that there must have been some strong pressure on the subject before the hon. Minister of Railways could have been induced to take such an unusual step.

Mr. BURNS. It is quite apparent that the hon. gentleman who has just spoken knows very little of the subject under discussion, and that in order to cover up his lack of knowledge on the subject he has found it necessary to indulge in all sorts of suppositions. To my mind the matter is very clear. In reply to the hon. gentleman's statement as to the vote being to pay Mr. Whitehead instead of the creditors, it is sufficient to say that if the Government could or should avail themselves of the security in the event of the non-fulfilment of the contract they are quite justified, by the same rule, in handing over to Mr. Whitehead any amount which they could save in the execution of the contract. It was not at all necessary to hand it to Mr. Whitehead directly, because by means of an assignment they would be made just as much entitled to the money as he would be. The hon. gentleman wants to know when the Government of the country became underwriters or insurance agents against losses made by persons making advances to contractors. I beg to remind the House that under the late Administration when certain sections of the Intercolonial were taken out of the hands of the contractors the Government of the day paid the liabilities which had been incurred in connection with those sections. The Government of that day paid the liabilities on that section when it was handed over to them, and it cost them a large amount of money to complete it, over and above the contract.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I do not at all approve of the principle upon which this payment is to be made to this contractor. The amount is the full amount of the contract, which represents the profit that would have accrued to the contractor if he had done the work himself. This is preposterous, because the Government are substituted for the contractor and are doing the work in his place, and, therefore, if he is to get anything, he should not get the total amount of the contract. There might be a certain sum allowed to him, but the value of the work done by the Government, as representing the earnings of the contractor if he had done it himself, should be deducted.

Mr. McCALLUM. There has been a good deal said about this vote, but it appears plain enough to me. The hon. Minister of Railways says that Mr. Whitehead would have been liable in case he could not have finished the work at contract prices, and if his securities should suffer all the losses he ought to have all the benefits. If the Government took the contract off Mr. Whitehead's hands they did so at their own risk; if they thought he could not complete the work in time they were perfectly right to take it out of his hands; but if he had done the work he would have been entitled to receive this amount. The Government could pay the money on Mr. Whitehead's order, and I do not see why there should be any discussion on the question. The country has received value, and we would not have paid any more if Mr. Whitehead had completed the work.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. Minister did not state what the stipulated time for completing this contract was, and the time when it was actually completed, and who the contractors are who are making claims for losses by reason of delay.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The contractors who are making a claim for losses on account of delay are the contractors on section B. The grounds they urge are the impossibility of reaching their work, and the cost at which they were obliged to carry their supplies in consequence of this contract not being earlier completed. Of course we do not recognize any such claim, for the simple reason that we had not undertaken that the contract would be completed at a particular time; but it was of vital consequence in our judgment, that, in order to enable them to carry their work to completion, the work which provided the access to it should be pushed, and should not be allowed to remain in the position which it was. In order to show the House the ground on which this money was asked, I will just read a portion of the Order in Council authorizing the placing of this vote on the Estimates. After showing the state of the account, it says :

"That by the fourteenth clause of the contract the Government retained the power of assuming such works. That the contractor is indebted to various parties to a considerable amount of money which has been put into other works to the benefit of the Government. That the Order in Council of the 5th of April, 1880, authorized the immediate assumption of the works comprised in Mr. Whitehead's contract. This course was rendered necessary through the fact that the laborers were on strike for arrears of wages, and that the Government supplies in store were in danger of being seized. That the importance of obtaining the completion of the works on the earliest possible date, and of avoiding their collapse then imminent compelled the Government to take this prompt action without according further delay to the contractor for the adjustment of his affairs. The hon. Minister, under the circumstances, recommends that the powers conferred by the aforesaid clause of the contract be not exercised, but that Mr. Whitehead and his creditors be allowed the benefit of the amount, which in the certificate of the Chief Engineer would have been payable under the contract, had the work been completed by the contractor, measures being, however, taken to secure the payment of the money to the parties who furnished the means of executing the work.

"The hon. Minister further recommends that the security held by the Government for the due performance of this contract be released."

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

Mr. BLAKE. Have you the answer to the question I asked before Recess?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have not the information, but I think I am quite safe in saying, from memory, the contract was not completed for a very long time after the period provided in the contract. The date at which the works were taken out of Mr. Whitehead's hands was very long after the time provided for the completion of the work.

Mr. BLAKE. The impression also is that in arranging for the letting of some of these other works, tenders were submitted, in one or two cases, based upon the proposition that this particular section would be built at a particular time, and that there was difficulty in consequence of its not being certain whether it would be completed in that time.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think the hon. gentleman's memory is confounding that contract with the letting of this identical contract. When tenders were asked for this section fifteen, the Whitehead section, tenders were put in by parties who required that the Government should undertake that the preliminary section to that would be completed, as the hon. gentleman says, at a certain time, and my predecessor properly refused to guarantee that the other work would be completed within the time stated in the contract; but I do not think there was any such stipulation in any of the tenders in relation to this work being completed within the time provided.

Mr. BLAKE. I suppose a considerable delay ensued in the completion of the other works, in consequence of the delay in this work.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The other work would have been completed earlier, certainly, but it is practically completed within the time stated in the contract.

Mr. CHARLTON. We are told by the hon. Minister of Railways that the Government, in this matter, are actuated by a desire to pay certain creditors of Mr. Whitehead. Some of these creditors may possibly be in a position to exercise influence on the Government in securing the payment to Mr. Whitehead of $86,200, the sum saved by the Government in taking the contract off his hands. This is undoubtedly a most unbusinesslike transaction. If Mr. Whitehead was not able to complete his contract, and the Government took it off his hands, he has no claim on the Government for any sum the Government might have saved in the completion of this work. I find, on referring to the evidence taken before the Canadian Pacific Railway Commission, some evidence which I think has a bearing on this case, and I will take the liberty of reading some extracts from his reports. This is the testimony given by Mr. Whitehead with reference to certain transactions between himself and a gentleman who had aided him in various ways with the Government in reference to this contract. Mr. Whitehead was asked :

"3673. Have you at any time had any negotiations with the Government, or with any of the Departments of the Government, in which you paid other persons for their influence or assistance?—No; I do not know that I had. I assisted Mackintosh in the paper. He was my security in one instance or two in making tenders, and getting my other tenders along with myself, and I assisted him with his paper or he would have gone down. That is all the influence I paid for in Ottawa, or in the Government, or to anybody else.

"3674. Do you mean that you assisted him with money?—Yes.

"3675. In supporting the newspaper do you mean?—Yes; he was in very difficult circumstances, and he was likely to burst up. He had been very kind to me, and got me assistance once or twice in securities in making up tenders; and I was a stranger there, and did not know any person, and he got them for me, and that is the way I assisted him.

"3676. Was it ever understood between you and him that you were to compensate him for any influence that he had used with any member of the Government?—No; not at all. Whenever I was wanting anything he used to see after it for me in Ottawa.

"3677. Did you ever make any gifts or payments of money to any one connected with the Departments of the Government?—No; not one that I know of in any shape. Mackintosh is the only one that I ever assisted in Ottawa that I know of."

I have then the evidence of Mr. C. Whitehead:

"5004. Did you at any time attend to work for him at other places; at Ottawa, for instance?—I did not do much for him at Ottawa.

"5005. Did you have any transactions for him at any time with Mr. Mackintosh, on his account?—I do not know anything about the Mackintosh affair, only from hearsay. I do not know anything of my own knowledge.

"5006. Did you assist in dealing with Mr. Mackintosh as to the return of any money or paper, or anything of that kind?—Yes; I did not go to Mackintosh myself, but I had my father's attorney go to him.

"5007. Who was that?—Mr. Bain.

"5008. Was Mackintosh here?—No. Mr. Bain was in Ottawa.

"5009. Was that Mr. Bain of the firm of Bain & Blanchard?—Yes.

"5010. Did you know Mackintosh personally, at that time?—Yes, I have seen him. I think I saw him when I was down there, but I never mentioned about the transaction to him.

"5011. Was it done entirely through your attorney and Mackintosh?—Yes; it was done with Mr. Bain.

"5012. What was the result of the transaction?—I think he got back my father's acceptances for about $11,000.

"5013. Did you see those acceptances?—I think I have, but I would not be certain.

"5014. Where they got back by Mr. Bain at the time that you were there?—Yes; they were got back in December last.

"5015. Had they matured before that, or were they running?—I would not be sure, but I think they were running.

"5016. Did you say you do not know whether you saw them then or at any time since?—I think I have seen them here at Mr. Bain's office, but I would not be sure; I know he got them.

"5017. Who was it retained Mr. Bain at that time?—I think it was a great deal through myself.

"5018. Did you take any part in the instructions to Mr. Bain?—Only in this way: I felt that my father had been— I do not know how to put it exactly. He went and got the acceptances back. I knew that the acceptances had been given in this way: when my father was away some of those acceptances would come up here; some of them I would pay, but others I would allow to go to protest. I wanted to know from my father if Mackintosh had other acceptances, and he said he had, but he did not know how much. Mr. Bain and I had talked the matter over as we would say of my father's business transactions, and Mr. Bain, as well as myself, thought it was only right that we should endeavor to get the acceptance back. I do not know that my father said that we were to get them back. Those were matters I very frequently said nothing to him about until I got them made right.

"5019. Then you did what you thought was in his interest, sometimes without his authority?—Yes, when I felt that he had been swindled. That is the idea.

"5020. Did you say that those acceptances would sometimes come up to be paid by you?—Yes, when my father was away; otherwise I would never know of them at all.

"5021. Can you say what all the acceptances given by him to Mackintosh would amount to, judging from what you have seen?—I would not be quite positive; I should say over $30,000.

"5022. Have you any means of knowing how much of them has been paid from your knowledge of your father's business?—I could not say how much has been paid, but I think something over $20,000 in round numbers. I may be mistaken; it may be more, it may be less, but I have that idea from what I have seen.

"5023. Do you know, or have you any reason to believe, that any gift, or promise, or advantage, was promised or made by your father to any one, on account of this transaction: the contract for section 15?—I do not know of any. Remuneration do you mean?

"5034. It may have been a bonus; I am speaking of gifts as well as remuneration, or any kind of advantage?—I do not know. I cannot say that I do.

"5035 You are aware that he has given something to Sutton & Thompson and something to Charlton?—Yes; from what he tells me.

"5036. And 'his amount to Mackintosh?—Yes; from what he tells me I know that he has given to Mackintosh, and from those acceptances coming forward to him when I was acting for him.

"5037. Did you ever have any conversation at all upon the subject with Mackintosh?—No; I did not wish to have. The only conversation I had about the matter would be with my father, and that was not of a very pleasant character, as I was exasperated at him doing anything so silly.

"5038 Was there anything else about this matter upon which you wished to give evidence?—No; I do not know that there is."

Then upon page 614 we have testimony of Mr. Bain who states that the book-keeper of Mr. Mackintosh had visited Winnipeg for the purpose of collecting certain acceptances, and returned to Ottawa. Mr. Bain afterwards had an interview with Mr. Mackintosh at Ottawa, and the result was that Mr. Mackintosh agreed to return these acceptances if Mr. Whitehead would sign a letter exonerating him from all charges in this matter with reference to improper transactions and improper use of influence. Mr. Bain's testimony was that the letter was sent to Mr. Whitehead and signed by him, and returned, and that then the acceptances were returned by Mr. Mackintosh to Mr. Whitehead. But Mr. Mackintosh, when he is called upon the stand, gives a testimony of quite a different character. He goes on to make a written statement, and in that statement he informs the Commission that he was to have a certain share in the profits of this contract by virtue of his services to Mr. Whitehead; and with reference to the balance of the acceptances, Mr. Mackintosh gives this testimony:

"I returned him $11,000 undiscounted, and have retired from the bank $13,000, and paid interest charges and other costs and discounts, closely approximating $750, leaving a very small remainder as representing the total amount received by me in excess of the sums returned or repaid by lifting the discounted paper; I paid the protested draft—I do not know exactly when it was protested—of $4,082.

"13041. Is that part of the $13,000?—Yes, part of the $13,000. I paid in January last, $3,950.

"13042. Was that also part of the $13,000?—Yes, part of the $13,000. I paid in February, $2,500.

"13043. Still part of the $13,000?—Yes, still part of the $13,000; and on March 16th, $2,500, making $13,034, I think.

"13044. Do you hold these notes now against Mr. Whitehead?—Well, I have never given that consideration. I have held the notes. I had to hold the notes. If Mr. Whitehead is not able to settle them in any way, of course I will lose. I had no intention of proceeding against him.

"13045. Do you mention this retiring of paper amounting to $13,000, to show that it is entirely given up as a claim against Mr. Whitehead, or merely its transfer from the bank to you of the sums mentioned?—Its transfer to me to show I never got the money.

"13046. You still hold the notes?—Yes.

"13047. And you still hold that as his liability?—Yes; it appears so on the face of it, but I told Mr. Bain when he was here I would not press him unless he was able to pay.

"13048. It would not be wise to do so if he could not pay it; but you mean if he could you would collect it?—I did not say I would.

"13049. We only desire to know if the amount still remains a liability?—It is in every respect a liability on his part. I only mention that, of course, because I retain the greatest friendship for Mr. Whitehead, and would assist him if I could.

"13050. But with this friendship you retain his notes?—Yes, I told Mr. Bain to use the notes as he pleased. I would like to state, Mr. Chairman, that this agreement with Mr. Whitehead with reference to releasing, given for an agreement entered into with me, has been in my possession ever since that time, and the date there is the date he gave it to me."

And I have here a copy of the letter furnished by Mr. Whitehead to Mr. Mackintosh. Now, Sir, it appears from the evidence that Mr. Mackintosh still holds Mr. Whitehead's acceptances for $13,000 and interest and protest, amounting now probably to $14,000. Mr. Mackintosh is in the position of a creditor to Mr. Whitehead, he holds these acceptances and can enforce payment, and I think the circumstances of the case point quite plainly to the supposition, at least, that among the creditors who are to be paid out of this allowance of $86,000 to Mr. Whitehead for profits that he never realized in carrying out his contract, is this same Mr. Mackintosh. I think there is something very peculiar about this matter, something very suspicious about it. I do not think it is in the interest of Mr. Whitehead that this allowance is made. We have this suspicious circumstance, that $14,000 of this money is very likely going to a friend of the Government, and we may fairly infer, if we could lay bare all the transaction, that there are other friends of the Government who are creditors of this same Mr. Whitehead, and, I think, that the inference the country will draw is that the notice of the Government in introducing this vote is to reimburse those friends of theirs who are creditors of Mr. Whitehead in this matter. I think we must condemn this transaction as a very peculiar one, a very unjustifiable one. As my hon. friend from West Durham pointed out, if the Government, in taking this contract from Mr. Whitehead and completing this work, had been unable to complete it within the limits of the contract price, they would have been the losers. In taking this work off Mr. Whitehead's hands the Government assumed all the responsibility of doing the work and relieved Mr. Whitehead from all responsibility, and Mr. Whitehead certainly had no claims upon the Government. And now a vote of this large sum is something that I think this House should not agree to, and if it does I believe the tax-payers of this country will condemn the action, and justly condemn it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think the hon. gentleman is laboring under a very mistaken view on several important points. He says that the Government assumed all the responsibility of finishing this work, and that if it had been finished at a loss the country would have had to bear it. The hon. gentleman knows that that is in direct contradiction to the statement I made. The hon. gentleman knows that my predecessor took security to the extent of what he supposed to be $100,000 from Mr. Whitehead, and that we held that security down to the time of the completion of the contract; therefore, if there had been any loss we had that security, and we were bound to make the country good out of it. In the face of that statement, the accuracy of which the hon. gentleman does not venture to question, he declares to this House that we assumed all the responsibility, and that if there had been any loss Mr. Whitehead would have been entirely exempt. Now, I give that to the Committee as a specimen of the candor of the hon. gentleman, and as an evidence of the position in which the hon. gentleman finds himself; that in order to make a case at all he is obliged to assume that to be true which he knows to be untrue, and to base his argument entirely upon a statement of that kind. I do not think I need to say more upon that point; but there is another very important point in relation to this. How were we enabled to save the money to close this contract? Has the hon. gentleman given that a thought? Does he know anything about the letting of contracts, and as to the condition of section 15 in 1877, when he (Whitehead) took that contract? If he does he will know that Mr. Whitehead was obliged to expend tens of thousands before he got an estimate for $5; he had to expend his own or other people's money, and it appeared that he had not his own money to spend, in order to obtain plant. He expended an enormous sum of money in constructing roads in the wilderness, as he was called on to pay $100 to carry a ton of material a few miles, and he had to encounter difficulties which hon. gentlemen, who know nothing of such work, would be appalled at the mention of. The result was that considerable expenditure had been made by him with other people's money in order to be able to get an estimate. The result was that when the work passed into the hands of the Government every yard of the work carried out was covered by the contract price and the margin of profit there was in it; but that would not have been the case if there had not been this enormous expenditure of money made in order to obtain an estimate. The hon. gentleman must know that, and, therefore, there was a distinct equitable right that Mr. Whitehead should be recouped $86,200, which he expended in order to obtain plant for the work, to construct roads and carry in supplies in the face of great difficulty, and get the work into a condition to be proceeded with. Everybody knows that the cost lies in the initial operations. Assuming you have a price that will pay as applying to the whole work, you are only able to obtain an estimate by expending enormous sums at the outlet, in order to prepare for construction. The hon. gentleman must be aware of that, and he must therefore see that, to take advantage of all the preliminary expenditure made, not with Mr. Whitehead's own money but with other people's money, was to place the Government in a position by which they could complete the work at the contract price, but this could not be done if the preliminary expenditure had not been made by Mr. Whitehead with his own and other people's money. It is not possible to present a stronger case in which the parties who had in good faith invested their money in the work. If this vote were to be applied in the way in which the hon. leader of the Opposition has insinuated, for the purpose of repaying parties who had not bona fide put their money into the work, then I should say at once the case would stand on a very different footing; but the amount proposed, I am informed, is not sufficient to pay 50 per cent. of the just legitimate claims of parties who advanced money, and without which he would not have been able to have carried on the work at all. So far from there being the slightest ground for imputing any influence on the part of any friend of the Government, the evidence which the hon. gentleman had under his hand shows the very reverse. The hon. gentleman has been running his eye over the evidence. I have not seen it since it was first taken, but if my memory serves me, the hon. gentleman will find that I, under oath, stated to the Commission that the moment I learned Mr. Whitehead was advancing money to parties under the impression that they could aid him with the Government, I told him he was a fool, and that he was throwing away his money; that all he had to do to secure all the favor and support desired from the Government was vigorously to push on the work and carry out the contract, and that every dollar he expended on any person was wasted. There could be no doubt that what his son said was to some extent true, that he acted in a very foolish manner, and he was led to believe that by expending money in certain directions he would advance his interest with the Government. But I went out of my way, as Minister of Railways, the moment I learned from Mr. Whitehead that he was using money that way—the statement was made in the newspapers—to say to him: “you are throwing money away; every dollar you spend under the impression that it will assist you with the Government, is money wasted; you require no such expenditure; all you want is to get sufficient financial backing, either from a bank or some person who is able to assist you, in order to enable you to carry out the contract and relieve you from your embarrassment.” The Government comes before the Committee with an honest desire to recoup the persons who have honestly put their money into the work. Does the hon. gentleman suppose that, had the object of the Department and the Government been to favor our friends and repay them, the first step I took would have been, when I was able to place my hand on Mr. Whitehead's money arising from the sale of plant—always obtaining his consent to the same, but not allowing the money to go into his hands, not to have met the claims of friends—to have recommended to Council that Mr. Lash, the late Deputy Minister of Justice, should be entrusted with the expenditure and payment of every dollar of Mr. Whitehead's money? Why did we adopt that course? Because the principles of law and justice should be brought to bear, and the undoubted and unqualified claims should have the sanction of a man of high station and acknowledged legal attainments. I say that, in the face of facts of this kind, the hon. gentleman is not justified in making the slightest insinuation, which I pronounce as baseless and foundationless as it is possible for any insinuation to be.

Mr. McMULLEN. I would like to ask whether the contract was for a lump sum, or by quantity?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. By the yard.

Mr. McMULLEN. What percentage of money was kept back for the completion of the contract?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is usual to keep back 10 per cent.

Mr. McMULLEN. Then that was retained.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I cannot say that. When a contractor makes vigorous efforts to carry out his contract, the Government strengthens his hands as much as possible; and in this case, before the present Government came into power, my predecessor advanced a considerable sum, and, I think, properly so. Advances were made on plant, and everything was done to assist Mr. Whitehead. It was ascertained almost at once that he was obliged to borrow capital, and that his friends were pressing him for money; both the late and the present Government did everything they could to strengthen his hands, so long as there was a hope that he would push the contract through, because it was feared that, what usually occurs when contractors break down, the work could not be completed except at an increased price.

Mr. McMULLEN. Did the Government take possession of all the plant?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; everything.

Mr. McMULLEN. Has that been sold?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. And the proceeds handed over to him?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Not a dollar of the money was handed over to him, but to Mr. Lash, the Deputy Minister of Justice, to be paid out to the people whose money had been borrowed to carry out the work.

Mr. McMULLEN. Was the balance of the percentage handed over?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think I am safe in saying that he did not himself receive, directly or indirectly, a single dollar.

Mr. McMULLEN. Was it under the supervision of the same engineer who located the work that the work was completed?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

Mr. McMULLEN. It was finished under another engineer?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. McMULLEN. Had this engineer overseen the completion of the work, the original survey, and the field notes, &c.?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; and everything belonging to it.

Mr. CASEY. Then, the supposed saving of $86,200 is a mere saving on the original estimate of what the work would cost?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman knows he is stating the very reverse of what I have stated to the House. It has nothing to do with the estimate. It is the margin between the contract price, at which the work was let, and the cost of it; it is not upon the estimate at all.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman has stated exactly what he said; and I am stating exactly what he stated.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Not at all.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman stated that the contract was let at so much the yard.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I did.

Mr. CASEY. It was not a lump sum; therefore, the only way to arrive at the amount is to estimate the number of yards.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is mistaken again. It is accomplished by measuring the work when it is done, not by estimating the work, but by measuring every yard of it. It is not an estimate, but an actual ascertained fact. The contract contains the price to be paid. There is no reference to an estimate, and when the work is done, we proceed to measure, and the money is paid on the result. This is something which has nothing whatever to do with an estimate, but it has merely to do with the contract price of so much per yard, and the work actually performed.

Mr. CASEY. I understood that some things were to be completed in this section yet. Are not some fillings to be done? Is everything completed?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, everything.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. Minister then means to say that no changes have been made in the quantities, in the gradients, or in the alignments. The hon. Minister has stated very correctly that advances had been made to the contractor, out of the drawback and out of other funds. He said that this was done because he understood that the contractor was pushing on the work as energetically as possible, and needed the money at the time. In his evidence he states the same fact, and goes on to state in the next paragraph:

"The money we gave him in his estimates we found he was compelled to use to pay off pressing creditors. We found he was heavily involved in debt, that his creditors were pressing him, and that he was, therefore, unable to apply the money received for the work for the purpose of carrying it on. He came to me for a further advance, and I said: 'No, Mr. Whitehead, we have given you every possible aid and assistance while we found the work was vigorously proceeding, but it is obvious to me that you have a heavier load on your back than you can conveniently carry, and I do not think it safe to go on asking the Government to make further advances under the circumstances. What I think you will be obliged to do will be to either get some bank to come to your support and strengthen your hands financially, or you will be compelled to get some contractor of ability and resources to come in and share your contract with you. It is impossible for the Government to become your banker. You have got a good contract, and I will give you every assistance in my power. It is financial strength which you require. Get a bank to come to your aid and give you the financial strength, without which, in my judgment, it is impossible for you to carry on the work.' Mr. Macdougall came with Mr. Whitehead to see me in relation to the matter—the Hon. William Macdougall. I told him exactly what I had told Mr. Whitehead, that for the purpose of facilitating Mr. Whitehead, to get the assistance of a bank to give him the financial strength he required, I would give him a statement of Mr. Whitehead's position, which I considered a very good one, and one that would warrant a bank in coming to his assistance. Mr. Macdougall subsequently telegraphed to me to say that if I would communicate that the Ontario Bank, with which he was negotiating for Mr. Whitehead, would give him the assistance he required and enable him to go on. I gave him a memorandum showing the amount of the drawback we still held in our hands, showing the amount we had advanced to him which at that time was reduced by his payments (both these advances were reduced to $45,000) and showing the way the account then stood we had only advanced on his rolling stock and plant $45,000, all the rest having been repaid, and that there was so much drawback. I don't remember now how much, but it was about $20,000 of drawback then due him. On the representations I had made, Mr. Macdougall or Mr. Whitehead was able to make an arrangement with the Ontario Bank, which went on for a short time, and then the bank refused to continue to sustain him."

So that it really appeared as if there was then a very shaky condition of things, during which the advances were continued. At that point the advances stopped, or very soon afterwards, when it was found that Whitehead was in a very shaky position; and I find that they came to this conclusion: after stating a few sentences above, that Whitehead was heavily involved, that his creditors were pressing him, and that he was using money advanced to pay off pressing creditors and he was still prepared to represent to a bank that his position was a good one;—but all this does not bear on the question of these creditors, and I would ask the hon. gentleman if he would tell us who these creditors are? Does he know? I am not asking for the names, but whether he knows who they are.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I know a great many of them; I know that a number of gentlemen have filed in the Department a statement of claims. A large number of people have done so.

Mr. CASEY. Against what might be coming to Mr. Whitehead?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. CASEY. In that case the Government, of course, would be able to give us a statement of who these claimants are, that the Government knows, that their claims are for money which actually went into the construction of the work. The hon. gentleman bases his whole argument, mind you, on the statement that the money advanced by these gentlemen has gone into the construction of the work. Has he a record of it, or has he asked any proof of this fact from the gentlemen who filed these claims?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; and I have Mr. Whitehead's own statement, confirmatory and explanatory of how the money was obtained and for what purpose.

Mr. CASEY. It rests then really on Mr. Whitehead's statement that the money furnished by these gentlemen was put into the work. Of course, creditors cannot know for what purpose their money was used. They only know they advanced it to Mr. Whitehead, and that he did something with it afterwards. I suppose the Government will be able to give us a statement of what these claims amount to, on Concurrence, and will also inform us as to whether this $86,000 will cover them or not. It has been stated that Mr. Whitehead may have made an assignment, but I do not see how he can assign money which has not been paid to him, and if he makes it afterwards he could assign money to such creditors as he might choose.

Mr. BLAKE. A statement was made that Mr. Whitehead had made an assignment for the benefit of his creditors, and I gathered the impression that the money was to be paid to the assignee on trust.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Whitehead deposited with the Department a document to say that he had appointed an assignee to whom, if any money was voted, it might be paid, and applied to the discharge of his debts.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman kindly put us in possession of the papers, across the floor—the Orders in Council, the engineer's report, and the memorandum he has now mentioned.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

248. Canadian Pacific Railway—To pay Messrs. Purcell & Co., for Rolling Stock transferred to Government, under the terms of their contract.....$93,400.00

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman explain this vote?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is an amount required to pay Messrs. Purcell & Co., the contractors on section "A," the sum of $93,337.80, the value of their plant. When the contracts were let for that section, it was provided, as was usual in these contracts, that the plant should be taken over at a valuation at the conclusion of the work. The Government were engaged in the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and it was believed that a large amount of money would be saved if they provided—seeing that a large sum had to be invested in obtaining plant for the construction of this work—that the rolling stock, at the conclusion of the contract, should be taken over at its value. This has been done in some instances, and this contract contained such a provision. When the contract was completed the locomotives, flat cars, tools, materials, and plant on hand was valued by the Chief Engineer, as provided by the contract, and he selected Mr. Heney, under whose immediate management section 15 had been completed—a very able and intelligent man, who had previously been employed by the Government in the valuation of the plant and property transferred by the Government to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and with whose knowledge and integrity we were quite satisfied—to make this valuation, the contractors also agreeing to accept his finding. There were six locomotives, valued at $42,985; 97 flat cars, $43,972; tools and materials, $6,397; or in all, $93,337.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman mentions tools and materials, whereas the vote speaks of rolling stock.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The tools and materials are in connection with the rolling stock.

Mr. BLAKE. What is to be done with this valuable property; and when was it taken over?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The engineer's report is dated 13th March, 1883, and the Order in Council ratifying the valuation and giving authority to pay the amount is dated 27th March, 1883. We expect to sell the property to the Canadian Pacific Railway if we obtain what we consider it is worth.

Mr. BLAKE. This is not considered to be embraced in the original agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway as to what they were to hand over?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No; that was the rolling stock and everything connected with the Pembina Branch and the line west of the Red River.

Mr. BLAKE. Have any negotiations been opened with the Canadian Pacific Railway for the disposition of this stock?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We are now discussing that question.

249. Intercolonial Railway—Increased accommodation at St. John..... $37,150.00

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman explain this vote?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This vote is for the following works:—Over-expenditure on works under execution, $22,000; grading yard, $750; lowering the grade, $1,800; repairing the wall, $4,000; extension of the flour shed, $8,600. This vote is taken because the vote of last year has been exceeded.

250. Intercolonial Railway—Halifax Extension.....$74,000.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This money is for the following works:—Over-expenditure on works under construction, $4,500; rebuilding dock-yard wall and gates, which we obtained from the Imperial Government, $10,000; building boat-landing from the sea, which was also part of our engagement with the Imperial Government, $2,500; removing a mass of boulders, $15,000. These are the details of the vote, with the exception of $40,000, which is to build an arch over the track. The late Government, when carrying the line from Richmond into the present station at Halifax, undertook, in consequence of the line running through a portion of Imperial property, to protect the powder magazine, when required, by building an arch over the track, and this is an estimate—no expenditure has been made yet—of the amount of money that will be required for that service. We are now called upon to carry out that part of the contract.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

251. Intercolonial Railway—Construction account (old) to pay Intercolonial Commission, staff and other expenses..... $20,000.00

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman give us some details of this vote?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is, as the hon. gentleman knows, to meet the expense of the Commission which is now sitting upon the Intercolonial Railway claims. I explained to the House last Session, I think, the circumstances under which this Commission was appointed, and this vote is for the payment of the Commissioners, the Secretary, legal expenses, witnesses, and all expenses that are connected with an investigation of that kind, extending over a number of years, and involving a number of very large and important claims.

Mr. BLAKE. Can the hon. gentleman give us some idea of how long that Commission has been sitting, and how long it is likely to be engaged?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This estimate is to provide for seven months which have been occupied this year, and we shall ask in the further Supplementary Estimates for an equal sum for the coming year, which I hope will be the outside of what will be required.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman state the scale of salaries paid to the Commission.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. $300 a month to each of the three commissioners, Judge Clarke, Mr. Broughton and Colonel Belton; and the Secretary, Mr. Jones, who is a first-class clerk in the Department, receives $3 a day in addition to his salary.

Mr. BLAKE. This salary of $300 a month is continuous all the year round; it is, in effect, $3,600 a year, paid monthly?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The Commissioners are supposed to be continuously at work—to be either sitting or engaged in the investigation, wherever they are.

Mr. BLAKE. I have to make an objection, which I conceive to be a very grave objection, to the course which has been pursued with regard to one of the members of both the Pacific Railway Commission and this one. I allude to the plan of taking a Judge from the discharge of his judicial duties, and appointing him to continuous and long-enduring work of this description. I hold that to be objectionable, from two distinct points of view. First of all, I hold it to be an objectionable relation to subsist between the Executive of the country and the judiciary of the country, that there should be a plan by which a sum so very large as this should be placed at the disposal of a Judge by favor of the Executive, who determined whether they shall appoint him or not, and how long his commission shall continue. This Judge, when first appointed, was a Junior Judge, if I remember rightly, at $2,200 a year. His remuneration as Pacific Railway Commissioner was $3,600 a year, or half as much again as his judicial salary, for which the public expected his whole time and service. After concluding his duties on the Pacific Railway Commission, and after no long time, he is appointed on the Intercolonial Commission, upon which the hon. Minister says there has been one year's work. For the current year the grant is now being voted, and the hon. gentleman proposes subsequently estimates to be voted for the future year. The hon. gentleman said seven months in the last year and seven months in this, and he pointed out that these were the actual sittings, for the Commissioners were supposed to be continually engaged. Thus you will find the whole term for this year and a smaller vote to be taken for next year, making two years more for the occupation of a Judge. You find a Judge depending for an occupation involving a remuneration much larger than his judicial remuneration, on the will of the Executive. That is not in accordance with the principles which should regulate the relations of the Executive to the judiciary. If I remember rightly, there is in the Provincial law of the Province of Quebec a statutory determination which prevents the Executive from appointing Judges to any office at the will of the Executive. When we passed our Supreme Court Act, we inserted a clause expressly precluding the Executive from appointing members of the Supreme Court to any other paid employment. If that was thought a proper course to adopt with reference to the highest Judges of the land, of how much more consequence is it that, with reference to members of the Ontario Judiciary, the Government should not place themselves in such relations as that. There is no office in respect to which it is more important to the people of Ontario that the judicial duties should be thoroughly and efficiently discharged, than the duties of a County Court Judge. The counties of Northumberland and Durham comprise a population of between 80,000 and 90,000 souls. It is well known that the late senior Judge of these united counties was a gentleman of very advanced years, who could not take a very active part in the discharge of his duty, and of whom it was thought by many that the time had arrived when he could, in the interests of the public, accept a retiring allowance. At that time the Junior Judge, of whom I have been speaking, and who is a man of considerable capacity and quickness for work, discharged the bulk of these judicial duties, but he was taken off for the Pacific Railway Commission. On the retirement of the Senior Judge the Junior Judge was appointed to his place, and another very estimable gentleman from the town of Port Hope was appointed Junior Judge. A better appointment could not, I think, have been made. But that appointment was proper to be made under the circumstances, or it was not. It was not, if a Junior Judge was not required; it was, if the services of two Judges were required. And if they were, it was not fitting that continually for this long period to which I have referred, the Senior Judge should have been removed from his proper sphere of operations. I have received statements from persons in Cobourg complaining of this matter, and have no doubt that some sort of arrangement will have to be made; but it is utterly impossible that the county seat can be without a resident County Judge for so long a time, without great inconvenience being caused to the community. It is an evil example, an unfortunate relation between the Executive and the judiciary, and is productive of public loss and inconvenience. I deem it my duty to protest against it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Perhaps this is not the most proper period to bring up this question. As far as the Commission is concerned and the payment, I take the question to be whether the Commission was a well-selected one and did their duty, well worth the money they received. As to the question of the propriety of employing Judges, this is the first time I find this question raised on any constitutional or legal principle in England, Ireland or Scotland.

Mr. BLAKE. On paid Commissions?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; and I will call the hon. gentleman's recollections to a Commission in which a very high Judge in Ontario—a man in whom I had the greatest confidence—was selected specially as being a Judge to sit on the Post Office Commission, on which he was paid.

Mr. BLAKE. He was a retired Judge.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Not at that time.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. At all events, I was very glad to support the appointment of that Judge. I say the same thing has been done in England continually, and I see no objection to it when public interests are to be considered.

In appointing a Commission of this kind, in which evidence was to be taken and weighed, it is necessary we should have a person of judicial standing as a member. Objection might indeed be raised in the case of a member of the Bar, who was in a fair way of promotion as a Judge, and might be influenced by a feeling of that kind; but such an objection cannot be raised if a Judge is employed. It is of the greatest importance in the public interest, as regards the Public Treasury, that all these cases should be sifted, and I do not know what better expedient could be found in this end than to appoint a Judge on the Commission—a man of integrity and legal experience. On the Commission are also two experienced railway men. This body was carefully selected, and I hope they are doing their work well. In England, from a Chancery Judge down to a Judge of the lowest rank, Judges are continually employed on Commissions and some on permanent Commissions. The very important duties of managing the British Museum, calling for continuous life-long watchfulness, are performed to some extent by Judges. You will find in Ireland and in England—on all the great questions connected with the Land Laws and with amelioration of the condition of Ireland—Judges sitting on these Commissions. I grant the hon. gentleman that if there was any proof, any foundation, for the allegation that the judicial business of the counties of Northumberland and Durham were permanently injured by the appointment of Judge Clarke, then there might be something to say about it. But I have not heard any objection, any complaint that has come to the Department of Justice. Judge Clarke, as Senior Judge, can well sit on a Commission, as it is well understood that the Junior Judge does the Division Court work, the smaller business which requires a Judge itinerant in the county. The Senior Judge sits in the chief courts of the county and attends to the work generally. It is true that he lives in Cobourg, and Mr. Benson, the other Judge, lives seven miles off, but a railway runs between the two. There is no difficulty, no delay, no trouble, that I have heard of in consequence of the appointment of Judge Clarke. In the meanwhile I would say that it would be extremely unfortunate if we had not on this Commission, as a protection to the public interest, a gentleman of the judicial ability and discretion which the hon. gentleman admits Judge Clarke possesses.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman says this is not the opportune place to discuss this; but I do not know of a more opportune time than when we are called upon to vote a sum for a Commission and the salary of the Commissioner. The hon. gentleman next referred to cases of the appointment of Judges on Commissions. I did not choose to bring in the name of Chief Justice Draper, to whom he has referred, because I did not wish to say anything deprecatory of the appointment. I had not forgotten the precedent, and the hon. gentleman remembers very well that public opinion was divided on the question of this appointment. I suppose the hon. gentleman has not forgotten that the man who was leader of the party in Upper Canada, and who was a life-long and unswerving supporter of the hon. gentleman, felt himself called upon, in his place in Parliament, to denounce that appointment and condemn it. I refer to the late John Hillyard Cameron, who denounced it as a thing improper to take a Judge from the Bench to act on a paid Commission like that. There was a divergence of opinion, irrespective of party lines, and that prominent supporter of the hon. gentleman felt himself constrained, by a sense of duty to the public and of regard for the judicial office, to condemn the precedent which the hon. gentleman set. The other precedent the hon. gentleman alluded to was that of a Judge who was retired at that time and had nothing to do with the administration of justice. Now, the hon. gentleman alludes to English and Irish cases,

But they do not at all apply. These are not paid Commissioners; they are not paid employments. These high functionaries, if they have leisure at their disposal, occasionally surrender a portion of it to the public service in gratuitous trust. We know the trustees of the British Museum comprises one or more of these persons, and we know that occasionally Commissions are issued with reference to improvements in the law and other things upon which we find a Judge or two sitting. But this is quite a different thing. If the hon. gentleman could show that the Lord Chancellor of England, with his salary of eight or ten thousand pounds a year, had been employed on a Commission for three or four years—but I will not take the Lord Chancellor, because he is a political officer, he holds his place as a political tenure, but I will take one of the other Judges who holds office upon tenure of good behavior, a Judge of the Court of Common Pleas, or the Queen's Bench, with a salary of from £2,000 to £5,000 a year—if the hon. gentleman could show that for two or three years continuously that Judge had been receiving a salary of several thousand pounds a year in addition to his salary, for serving on a Commission, performing extra judicial functions at the will of the Executive, then he would bring forward a precedent that would apply. But a casual discharge of a gratuitous office, quite capable of being performed consistently with the discharge of the judicial function, and without any emolument, is brought forward as a justification for an appointment which the hon. Minister of Railways has acknowledged exhausts the time of the Judge for the whole year round, for which he is paid at the rate of $300 per month for the whole year round, while his judicial salary is still going on. There is no analogy, no precedent, no justification. If Judge Clarke can be employed for five months in the year in an investigation like this Commission, and the judicial business of the counties can be effectually discharged, then it is quite clear that those two counties do not want two Judges. If Judge Clarke is able to devote a considerable portion of his time to the discharge of his judicial duties, then it is clear that he ought not to be getting $300 for every month in the year for other services, while he is paid $2,600 a year for judicial services which are supposed to take up his whole time.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the hon. gentleman has rather changed his ground. He commenced with an attack on the impropriety of employing a Judge in the public service at all.

Mr. BLAKE. I said a paid office.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman cannot get out of it that way. The hon. gentleman stated that the relations between the Government and a Judge, who attended to such matters, were altogether unconstitutional and inconvenient. He was attacking the independence of a Judge; and when I mentioned that in England, and Ireland, and Scotland, and elsewhere Judges were thus employed, the hon. gentleman says, "but they are not paid."

Mr. BLAKE. Certainly, that is what I said before.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. What difference does that make? The question is, whether a Judge shall be employed or not, whether there is any inconvenience or unconstitutionality in employing him. The public interest should be thought of first; and if it is the opinion of the Government that without constitutional impropriety Judge Clarke could be employed here to guard the Treasury to the extent of hundreds of thousands of dollars, and absent himself during the time he was so employed in a very high and important trust, when the work was being done in the county sufficiently well, and without complaint, I think the Government were quite right in employing him. The hon. gentleman says, that the Chancellor of England is a political officer, and therefore, ought not to be counted. Sir Alexander Cockburn was not a political officer, and he settled the Alabama claims.

Mr. BLAKE.

Mr. BLAKE. Was he paid?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will venture to say he was paid.

Mr. BLAKE. No.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, we will see whether he was or not.

Mr. BLAKE. I will venture to say he received his expenses.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, and the hon. gentleman will find that these expenses were paid to him, as well as a very substantial addition to the high salary of the Chief Justice of England. The hon. gentleman knows that the infallible Government of Ontario employed Chief Justice Harrison on the Boundary Award. Was that a political question? Why, how the independence of the Bench of Ontario was shaken!—shaken to its very foundation, by employing the Chief Justice in that matter. Was that not a most inconvenient relation between the Government and the Judge? I will venture to state, speaking on the nonce, and without an opportunity of reference, that the Judges in England sit, without any objection, and have to sit, on important Commissions, and that the allowances of so much a day that are made to them, are substantial allowances, so that they can keep up the dignity of their office, and the dignity of the special office as well.

Mr. BLAKE. I have not changed my ground at all on this subject. I stated in the first instance that the objection was to the paid relation at the will of the Government, and I gave statutory instances. I cited the prohibition in the Statute of Quebec against the paid relation; I said the provision in our own Statutes constituting the Supreme Court was against the paid relation. That was the gist of my argument. The hon. gentleman said: "What difference does the question of money make?" It makes all the difference. If a Judge accepts a gratuitous commission and discharges a duty towards the public without reward or hope of reward, he adds to the burdens of his duties without receiving any consideration, except the consolation of having performed a public duty. But if a Judge receives an amount half as large as his judicial salary, he occupies quite a different position. The hon. gentleman says the public interest should be thought of. It is because I believe that the public interest demands that no such relations shall exist between the Executive and the judiciary, that I object to this item as not being in the public interest. Then the hon. gentleman says: "Look at the Government of Ontario, who appointed Chief Justice Harrison to be a Commissioner." Perhaps they did. He says they paid him. Perhaps they did. But it neither makes this transaction right or wrong. It must be remembered that the Ontario Government did not appoint Chief Justice Harrison, they did not fix his salary, they could not remove him, and the Ontario Government had not such relations with the Chief Justice as would bring his case within the application of this principle.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Let us consider the facts. The hon. gentleman tries to get out of the difficulty by saying that Chief Justice Harrison was not appointed by the Ontario Government. True, but when he was appointed, it was during good behavior; he was quite independent of the Local Government or of the Dominion Government. The Dominion Government have no control over the Judges of the Superior Court, or over the County Court Judges; and, therefore, the hon. gentleman's argument has no force or weight. The hon. gentleman said he cannot defend the conduct of the Ontario Government.

Mr. BLAKE. I did not say so.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He said, whether it was right or wrong, it was a matter of no consequence.

Mr. BLAKE. Exactly.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will quote another case with respect to the Ontario Government. It may be said that Chief Justice Harrison, on a great issue like the Boundary question, might be allowed to sit upon a Commission; but there is a County Judge in Ontario, a gentleman of Reform proclivities, and appointed by the Reform Government, who neglects his county to the extent of two, three or four months of the year, to take part in a long and protracted litigation between Mr. John Elliot of Brantford and the Province of Ontario, which is going on now, and has been going on for some years. The hon. gentleman must either condemn the Ontario Government for employing Judge Senkler, or Judge Senkler for accepting employment in connection with the arbitration.

Mr. BLAKE. I know nothing about the case referred to. If the Ontario Government be right or wrong, it has nothing to do with the case under discussion; but it must be remembered that Ontario did not appoint this Judge, cannot remove him, did not fix his salary, and cannot increase it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Ontario Government have given some Judges $1,000 a year extra. I refer to the Superior Court Judges; and they were alleged by some outsiders, who do not know the independence of the Judges, to be influenced by the fact that the Ontario Government added $1,000 to the salaries voted to them by the Dominion Government.

Mr. BLAKE. It is quite true that in the earlier life of the Ontario Legislature, the Government of Mr. John Sandfield Macdonald introduced a measure of that kind. It is quite true that it was opposed by myself and my friends. It is also true that, in the first instance, it was disallowed by the hon. gentleman, now the First Minister, on the ground that it was beyond the purview of the Local Legislature to take such action, and indeed, the hon. gentleman disallowed the Supply Bill, because it contained this obnoxious clause. But the Judges were granted this additional salary in another form. "A rose by any other name may smell as sweet." Mr. John Sandfield Macdonald carried the Bill through the House, also against my protest and opposition, and the hon. gentleman, now the First Minister, did not oppose the establishment of this improper precedent, so far as to disallow the second Bill; but by that Local Government this Act was committed, which the hon. gentleman now says some people outside have been bold enough to declare to have unduly and improperly influenced the Government.

Mr. GUILLET. I wish to refer to the complaints mentioned by the hon. member for West Durham. I wish to say that the residents of the riding which I represent have not made any complaints in my hearing with respect to Judge Clarke, and I believe the hon. gentlemen associated with me in the representation of the other portions of the counties will also testify that no complaints have come to their ears in regard to neglect of duty by that Judge. It is very remarkable that complaints did not come from his own riding to the hon. member for West Durham, but that he only heard them as coming from a riding which he does not represent.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am told that Judge Senkler is also employed in enquiring into the defalcations of the Treasurer of Molton, for which he receives $30 per day from the Ontario Government. The hon. gentleman said, with respect to the additional payment made to Judges by the Ontario Government, that the Government of which I was a member disallowed the Bill, and very properly so. I am very glad to have the admission that on some occasions it was proper to disallow a Bill. In that case, at all events, there was no attack on Provincial rights. The hon. gentleman further mentioned that subsequently a Bill was passed, and that I waived my opposition. He insinuated that it was for the purpose of assisting the Government of the day that the second Bill was disallowed. Such was not the case, because it could not properly have been disallowed. It was admittedly a means by which the Government of Ontario could pay the Judges additional salaries, to appoint them to perform special duties under the Ontario Land Act, which they could not be forced to perform; but the hon. gentleman will see that if we had disallowed the Act we would have acted improperly. If we had done so the hon. gentleman would have declared that we were interfering with the independence of the Ontario Legislature.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I desire to ask the First Minister how long the services of the Commissioners will be required. I think that sometime ago, early in the history of the present Administration, Mr. Shanly was appointed to adjudicate on these claims, and he was enabled, I think, to settle all the claims submitted to him, during his lifetime. Now, we have three Commissioners appointed to do the work which I think Mr. Shanly was engaged upon, and I have very great fear that those Commissioners, receiving the handsome salary of $300 per month, will prolong this agreeable task beyond reasonable limits. It seems to me as if the present Government were disposed to carry on a large proportion of their Executive functions by Commission. We had the Canadian Pacific Railway Commission employed for nearly two years, at an expense of something like $35,000, and various items composing the bill indicate that the Commission was used for the purpose, not only of getting evidence, which, I suppose, the Government required, but was made the occasion of contributing to deplete the Exchequer for the benefit of some friends of the Government in more than one instance. I do not think that the present Commission is going to be used for that purpose; but if we are going to have Government by Commission, it is well to know how long this parallel adjunct of the present Administration is going to continue its functions. These men, I am told by the hon. Minister, were appointed seven months ago; and it may last seven or seventeen months, for aught we know. The expense is going on, evidence is taken, witnesses are examined, reports have to be printed, and the expense, which looks so innocent in this item of $20,000, may be doubled or trebled before the Commission closes its work. I think it is well that the House should give attention to this form of carrying on the Government. Why cannot the Dominion Arbitrators do this work? Perhaps it is beyond their sphere and a weightier responsibility than the Government wish to impose on them. Perhaps they have so many other claims to settle, that they cannot divide their time between those other claims and these; but I must ask the attention of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to this adjunct to his Department; and, no doubt, it will become, not a little modest item of $20,000, but $40,000 or $50,000 before the work is completed. How long will the Commission sit?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am, of course, unable to state how long, but I expect that the $20,000 which will be asked for in the Supplementary Estimates for the coming year, will entirely cover the expenditure.

Mr. ROSS. We have a little hint in advance from the Minister that this $20,000 to be voted now, is a first instalment.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I stated so at the outset.

Mr. ROSS. $20,000 are yet to be voted?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. ROSS. I am not sure that next year's Supplementary Estimates will not contain $20,000 more.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I hope not.

Mr. ROSS. And I too. This is not the only Commission. There is the Civil Service Commission besides, and there may be a great many more, before the Government sees fit to vacate those benches and leave them to other occupants, who, perhaps, may manage our affairs without employing so many Commissions. This is a serious matter.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We have resisted so far the pressure of the leader of the Opposition to appoint another Commission.

251. Intercolonial Railway—To refund to Mr. H. G. C. Ketchum, amount of an over charge for the conveyance of rails, &c., in 1866-67-68, over what is now a portion of the Intercolonial Railway $1,637.70

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This claim comes under the category of old claims. Mr. Ketchum was a contractor for the construction of a railway in New Brunswick to the boundary of Nova Scotia, previous to Confederation; but this railway was not completed until after Confederation. The contract that the Government of New Brunswick made, bound them to carry materials for this contract at cost. The railway was owned and operated at that time by the Government of New Brunswick, and at Confederation it came into our hands. The contractor complained that a portion of this contract had not been carried out, and that he had been charged more than cost, entering this claim. It was pressed upon the Government of New Brunswick, who virtually admitted it, but said, that as the receipts of the road had gone into the Dominion Treasury, this charge ought to be paid by us. This claim had been pressed and discussed for some years. I referred all the papers to Mr. Shanly, who found that Mr. Ketchum was entitled, under the contract, to the amount stated, the payment of which he recommended. This report I referred to the Chief Engineer, Mr. Schrieber, the manager of Government Railways, and he confirmed Mr. Shanly's conclusion, considering that this amount ought to be paid, being an over-charge, and consequently it has been placed in the Estimates.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman state the date of the reports of Messrs. Shanly and Schrieber?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Shanly's report was made on the 5th of May, 1882.

Mr. WELDON. When was the claim made?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It has always been made since, and immediately after the work was performed.

Mr. WELDON. I believe that Mr. Ketchum was a sub-contractor.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I said that Mr. Ketchum was the contractor who constructed the road.

Mr. WELDON. Of course he was a contractor, but he was a sub-contractor.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The contract virtually passed into his hands, and the settlement took place between him and the Government of New Brunswick.

Mr. WELDON. The Government of New Brunswick had nothing whatever to do with him, in my recollection. Clark, Major & Co. had the contract, and they sub-let it to Mr. Ketchum. Clark, Major & Co. settled with the Government of New Brunswick; and the latter made a claim in this connection on the Dominion Government. I think that, as far as my recollection goes, I never heard of such a claim as this being made on the Government of New Brunswick in any connection; nor did Mr. Ketchum have any connection whatever with the Government of New Brunswick. He was simply a sub-contractor on account of Clark,

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Major & Co., who had to pay him, while the New Brunswick Government settled with them. This matter was finally and conclusively settled between Clark, Major & Co. and the Government of New Brunswick.

Mr. BLAKE. It is utterly impossible for the Minister to expect us to pass an item of this kind with this information. Why is this matter brought forward in the Supplementary Estimates without having previously laid all the papers on the Table? Here is a claim, which he says has been made ever since the work was constructed; that is, ever since Confederation, since 1867-68. It has been pressed on the Government for fifteen years, and yet it has never been communicated to Parliament.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I did not say that. I said it arose out of a contract made before Confederation.

Mr. BLAKE. But to the hon. gentleman who has just sat down, the hon. gentleman said it had been pressed ever since the work was done.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It was not done until some time after Confederation.

Mr. BLAKE. Well, I find the statement here to be 1866-67-68—that is, partly before, partly during, and partly the year after Confederation. Here we have a claim of that age which, according to the statement of an hon. member for New Brunswick, was a contract made with the Province of New Brunswick by a particular contractor other than the one whose name appears in the vote, that his contract was settled and now we have it started up in this Parliament while no correspondence is before us. Why was this claim not made against the Government of New Brunswick?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It was, and the Government of New Brunswick practically admitted the soundness of the claim. But meantime the road passed into the hands of the Dominion, and they thought this Government should pay.

Mr. BLAKE. That is a cheap admission, and I dare say we would all be willing to admit that our neighbors should pay our debts. When did they turn over Mr. Ketchum to the Dominion Government with this valuable admission, and how long has the Dominion Government had the matter under their consideration, and how is it that it comes up now? We now learn that in a particular instance, a portion of the Intercolonial Railway was run at a large profit, because it appears that this claim arose out of the fact that the contractor stipulated that these rails should be conveyed at cost, and it turns out that they were conveyed at a profit of $1,637. Of course no more was charged for them than for other freight, and therefore the whole freight of the road was carried at a great profit. I think perhaps it would cheer us, and perhaps teach the hon. gentleman how to make money out of the road to-day, if he would give us the particulars of how it was managed that the Intercolonial was run at so large a profit in those good old days, when this gentleman was charged so much over cost for transporting his rails. I never heard so old a claim brought forward before, or a claim having such slight foundation as this one. The hon. gentleman admits that it was the New Brunswick Government which was liable, but he says we have taken over the property, and therefore we should pay the profit. Not so. We took particular railways at an understood price from the Province of New Brunswick, and having done so we had the right to run them at our own terms; and if there was some opposition on the part of the New Brunswick Government to Mr. Ketchum, though, as I understand from the remarks of the hon. member for St. John, there was none,—but if there was such an obligation it was an obligation which the Government of New Brunswick had to implement themselves,—and if that Government chose to charge more than the regular rate, it should be settled by those who made the bargain and not by this Government. Surely if this claim had a foundation at all it would have been made long ago; surely we have had Mr. Ketchum remonstrating at the time.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. So he did.

Mr. BLAKE. Then, why were the rates charged—if they were; and how is it that only after fifteen years have elapsed we find out, for the first time, that there was an over charge? If he did not convince you then, how does he convince you now? This is just another instance of these claims being brought forward after they have become antiquated, and the Government bringing down votes for claims which I do not think will commend themselves to the good sense of the people or the good sense of the country; and I repeat that, if these claims are to be brought forward at such a period of the Session, the least the House can expect is that they should have all the material documentary evidence upon which they could form some opinion, and arrive at some judgment, upon the bona fides and merits of the case, laid upon the Table.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I can only say that I considered this case was so plain and clear that it was quite unnecessary to take any such course, and if the hon. gentleman had, on the day when the Estimates were put in his hands, asked for these papers, they would have been on the Table now. The contract was made between the Government of New Brunswick and the contractor previous to Confederation, for the construction of a portion of railway, which is now a portion of the Intercolonial. In that contract it was provided that the materials used by the contractor should be carried at cost price. That is a very plain, simple matter. In the meantime Confederation takes place, and the fixing of the charge for the carriage of these materials passed into the hands of this Government, and Mr. Carvell, then manager of the road over which the materials were carried, fixed the rate. He was remonstrated with, but he insisted on the particular charge which he made. The sub-contractor made his contract on the basis of the original contract, which was that the materials were to be carried at cost price. He brings forward his charge, and it is presented to me as Minister of Railways. I cannot say that it is too old to entertain; I cannot plead the Statute of Limitations; I am obliged to deal with it in a businesslike manner. I ask the hon. gentleman, if he had been in my place, what he would have done. The Government had appointed Mr. Frank Shanly Chief Engineer of the Intercolonial Railway, and they appointed him to deal with all claims connected with that road. I said, here is a man of experience in railway matters, an able engineer, a most capable man in every respect; let him take this claim, get the evidence, ascertain if the charge is well founded or not, ascertain what is the cost of the carriage of these materials, and whether it is due to the rights of Mr. Ketchum that the money should be refunded to him. Mr. Shanly was charged with those duties. I hold his report in my hand, and having it in my hand, and having referred it to the manager of the Intercolonial Railway to verify Mr. Shanly's figures as to whether the claim that an over charge had been made, was well founded or not, what could I do? Mr. Shanly made a report that we owed this gentleman so much money, and that, after taking all the evidence that could be obtained on the subject, that, I think, would have been considered sufficient by the House; but I was not satisfied. I placed the report in the hands of the gentleman in charge of the Intercolonial Railway, and asked him to state whether or not he coincided in the statement that there was an over charge, and he said there was. Consequently, what could I do? I could not do anything else than I have done—recommend to the Council that that amount should be put in the Estimates, and that Parliament should be asked to vote it. These papers were placed in the hon. gentleman's hands on Wednesday last, when he could have seen the date of the claim, and if he had then asked for and seen the papers, he would not have seen any reason for disagreeing with this vote.

Mr. BLAKE. This does not state that this was an old claim of the sub-contractor. I saw that it was an ancient, stale, and fish-like smelling thing; but I supposed that the Intercolonial Railway had been carrying rails for somebody, and had charged too much. Once again he says the claim cannot be rejected because it is old. But the claim is fifteen years old. During ten years of that time hon. gentlemen opposite have been in office; the rails were carried while they were in office; if it was so clear and plain and distinct, I want to know why it was not paid during all those ten years—why it was not settled in a businesslike manner? Is it businesslike to allow a plain, clear and distinct claim to remain unpaid for fourteen or fifteen years? No, Sir; the very circumstance that it has been pressed ever since the time of the conveyance of the stuff, up to this time, is an indication that it could not have been, in the words of hon. gentlemen opposite—a plain, clear and distinct claim; but that they must have thought that there was nothing in it until this time, when something was conjured up and it was put in the Estimates.

Mr. WELDON. My recollection of this matter is that the Government of New Brunswick had nothing whatever to do with Mr. Ketchum. Messrs. Clark, Major & Co. were the contractors, and Mr. Ketchum was a sub-contractor under them; and if Mr. Ketchum has any claim, it is against them. But before the work was finished, a dispute arose between Mr. Ketchum and Clark, Major & Co.; and in order to get that property into their possession, so that it might be sold to the Dominion Government and made part of the Intercolonial Railway, Clark, Major & Co. made a complete and final settlement with Mr. Ketchum and finished the work. I, therefore, contend that Mr. Ketchum has no claim either on the New Brunswick Government or the Dominion Government. Assuming that he has, eighteen months of the claim would be against the Province of New Brunswick; and I ask the hon. Minister if he intends to make this a charge against the Province to that extent, and whether he has had any communication with the Government of New Brunswick to ascertain whether or not this is the case. If there is any claim against the Government of New Brunswick, or against the Government of the Dominion as the assignee of the Government of New Brunswick, it should be by Clark, Major & Co., or by their creditors, whose money was put into that road and has not yet been paid.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If the hon. gentleman is extremely anxious that we should make the charge against the Government of New Brunswick, I shall be very glad to consider that question on the special pressure of the hon. member for St. John. As I stated before, Mr. Shanly examined the entire question and found that the money was due to Mr. Ketchum; therefore, I took it for granted it should be paid, after taking the best means to arrive at the facts. But, as I said before, if it is found that we can do so, I shall be glad to meet the wish of the hon. gentleman, and make it a charge against the New Brunswick Government.

Mr. WELDON. I did not ask the hon. gentleman to make a charge against the Government of New Brunswick. I simply say that if Mr. Ketchum has a claim against the Government of New Brunswick, the Province is prepared to meet it, but not to make a settlement with a person with whom they have no contract whatever.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. Minister of Interior, a few moments ago, pointed out the importance of having a high judicial authority to conduct these investigations, and to see that the Government are not improperly mulcted. There are several important questions—the question whether the Government of New Brunswick should pay, if anybody should pay this claim; the question whether the Government of New Brunswick should call for indemnity from this Government; the question whether there is any claim of any person against this Government, and the question whether it is a claim of Mr. Ketchum or Clark, Major & Co. The hon. gentleman says he submitted the claim to Mr. Shanly, who, he knows, was not a lawyer; he says he submitted it to Mr. Schreiber who, he knows, is not a lawyer either. Did he ever submit it to the hon. Minister of Justice or any legal officer of the Government, or was any legal opinion obtained on any of these questions of law which are mixed up with the facts, and from which the facts derive their importance?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am not aware, but I presume that Mr. Shanly had the assistance of the Department of Justice, and that whenever he was in any doubt upon a legal point, availed himself of that assistance, on this occasion as he did on others.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman has no knowledge, however, of any opinion having been obtained, and the matter was not submitted by him to any legal officer?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will not say that, because I do not remember.

Mr. BLAKE. Well, I must say, I think further information on this subject should be put into the hands of hon. gentlemen before they are asked to concur in this vote.

Mr. WELDON. Was the Government of New Brunswick furnished with a copy of the Commissioner's report?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will promise the hon. gentleman to supply it with the claim when we make it.

Mr. McMULLEN. Was Mr. Shanly charged with merely deciding whether Mr. Ketchum was entitled to the money here asked for, and who should pay him?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman ought to know that I have again and again stated—I cannot find intelligence for the hon. gentleman to appreciate the plainest possible statement. If he paid any attention to this discussion he would know that I have said again and again that the whole question, with all the papers and the whole discussion between this Government and that of New Brunswick as to who shall pay and what shall be paid, should be referred to Mr. Shanly. It is somewhat irritating to find, after a statement has been reiterated again and again, that the hon. gentleman should still wish it to be repeated.

Mr. McMULLEN. I did not hear it before; I have heard it now.

253. Intercolonial Railway—Land and other claims. $10,255.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is a vote for paying claims arising out of the construction of the Intercolonial Railway, which continually arise and require to be dealt with, and are only paid after a most full examination as to their character.

Mr. BLAKE. Are these not old claims?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. They are claims some of which are in connection with the original construction of the road.

Mr. WELDON. Are any of them on the portion between St. John and Shediac?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, on every portion of the road.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not think we can agree to vote this money on that statement. If these are old claims in connection with the original construction of the road, some in connection with the European and British North American road, we ought to know what they are before voting the money.

Mr. BLAKE.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will give the hon. gentleman every information on Concurrence.

Mr. MITCHELL. I can give the hon. gentleman some information on this subject. I have had several claims from my county to present and cannot say I met with much satisfaction. Several claims have been made by parties, arising out of the construction of the Intercolonial, for damages, which have only arisen, probably, within the last few years. Under the Mackenzie Administration, I know from experience, that but little attention was given to such claims. I recollect in the instance of the poor widow's cow, it took me a whole month before I could prevail on that Administration to pay her loss. I find great difficulty in getting claims for damages caused by the Intercolonial, considered, but in several instances in which the hon. Minister has given his attention to them they have been referred to the official arbitrators. I was flattering myself that this $10,000 for railway and other claims, was intended to cover these just claims, not of much account, but yet claims which I know to be correct. I have no doubt the official arbitrators will shortly report to the Government, and I hope it will then be dealt with, and that the result will be as satisfactory in getting out of this Government the just payment of these small amounts, as was my attempt in getting out of the late Liberal Government the claim to which I referred. If there is any money paid improperly on these accounts, we will have an opportunity of investigating them before the Public Accounts Committee next year. I believe the arbitrators are now on their way to enquire into a number of these petty claims that have arisen out of the construction of the Intercolonial Railway. In the case of one of these claims, a farmer's land is overflowed every spring from the want of sufficient drains to carry off the water. I know this is a just claim, I have pressed it for some time, and at last the Minister has very properly stated that he would refer it to the official arbitrators. Another claim is about a mill property, the approach to which from the river has been very seriously interfered with. It is difficult to get logs to it, because the gravel pit which was dug out let the water from the ditches flow into the mill dam, and filled it up with gravel and sand. I presented that claim when I represented Northumberland in the former Administration, and subsequently it was presented by my successor, but with no better results than I had met with. I hope, now that those gentlemen have come to Parliament, and asked for a sum of money to cover these claims, that we will not refuse to grant it, so as to enable them to pay the claims without delay, if the arbitrators report favorably. I take this opportunity of coming to the rescue of the Minister of Railways, and at the same time to impress upon him the desirability of making prompt payment.

In answer to Mr. CASGRAIN,

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have a vote of $2,000 for the Rivière du Loup Branch, to pay land claims awarded by the arbitrators, and among these is that of Lucien Morin. In addition to the full amount allowed him by the arbitrators, there is also the amount of his costs as taxed by the hon. Minister of Justice, $244.21.

Mr. CASGRAIN. That is a mistake, because the Judge has taxed the bill himself at $444, according to the Statute.

Mr. WELDON. Are there any claims now before the Department for lands on the European and North American Railway?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. WELDON. I hope those claims will be examined with great caution. I have reason to believe that some of these claims were satisfied by the original Commissioner, Mr. Robert Jardine, and I think they were all settled. Some of these claims are now ten years old.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Although the late Government set the bad example of entertaining these old claims, I am systematically refusing them.

255. Intercolonial Railway—To pay legal expenses in the matter of the Western Counties Railway Company and the Attorney-General of Canada, vs. The Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company.....$589.90

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is the legal expenses for contesting the case against the Crown, on the petition of right which was granted to the Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company.

Mr. BLAKE. It seems to me to be an extraordinary charge to be made.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman must know that the Windsor Branch forms no part of the Intercolonial Railway. It is not in our hands, the property is virtually out of the hands of the Government, and yet we are in that position, that we are obliged to defend the action brought against us by the Windsor and Annapolis Railway Company. I could not charge this to the operating expenses of the Intercolonial Railway.

Mr. BLAKE. I did not venture to suggest to which road he should charge it; that is another consideration. I venture to suggest that this has nothing to do with the Capital Account of the Intercolonial. It is a suit which is brought against the Government in regard to the Windsor Branch. Why should it be charged to Capital Account?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Because the Windsor Branch is technically a part of the Intercolonial and there are no operating charges.

Mr. BLAKE. I never heard of such a proposal as this, that the costs of law suits, occurring long after the construction of the railway, should be charged against Capital Account.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not know that technically, it is properly charged. But I say this, that if a party claimed a foot of the Intercolonial Railway to-day and we were obliged to resist the claim, under what head should it be charged? I say, to Capital Account. We own the road and have built it, and such a charge would have to be placed against Capital Account. In this case it cannot be placed against running expenses, and I am not particular under what other heading it is charged.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman is particularly anxious that amounts should not be charged against the running expenses of the Intercolonial. In the Tichborne case a special Act had to be obtained to charge the cost of the defence against the estate because money could not be obtained in other quarters. The Intercolonial Railway, however, is not in such a deplorable condition.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The late Government took the Windsor Branch out of the hands of the Windsor and Annapolis Company, by force, and handed it over to another company. The first-named company has filed a petition of right. This money is paid for the defence, if damages, to the extent of $100,000, are given in consequence of the action of the late Government. I ask the hon. gentleman whether it could legitimately be charged to the working expenses of the Intercolonial, of which the Windsor Branch technically forms a part.

Mr. BLAKE. As the Windsor Branch belongs to another company, according to the statement of the hon. gentleman, what has it to do with the Intercolonial?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Because it is still, technically, part of the Intercolonial.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman has said it was handed over to another company. Then, it was not part of the Intercolonial.

256. Intercolonial Railway—Rivière du Loup Branch —Repairs and improvements, land claims, &c...$2,000.00

Mr. CASGRAIN. I have repeatedly demanded that a small station be built at Elgin for the accommodation of the travelling public. The only accommodation there at present is furnished by a private house, the Government paying for the use of part of it for the use of passengers. The owner is licensed to retail spirituous liquors, and it is understood that on the railway the Government are anxious that liquor should not be sold at any of the stations. Some abuses have occurred at this place on account of persons being drunk at the station. Suitable accommodation should be provided for from $800 to $1,000. This expenditure is necessary in the interests of travellers, and should be made without delay, especially in view of the fact that no less than $420,000 have been voted for accommodation at other points of the road.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will be very glad to make the closest enquiry into this matter, and will be only too glad to find that the traffic of the locality will warrant the expenditure necessary to provide the accommodation which the hon. gentleman desires.

Mr. LAURIER. Does this include anything connected with the expropriation of land for the St. Charles Branch?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

Mr. LAURIER. Is it the intention of the Government to take an appropriation for that object?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We have done so already.

Mr. BLAKE. How does this come out of Capital Account?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is a provision to pay accounts constantly coming in, with relation to work that was done, when this road was put in order. It is not for any current repairs at all, but for old accounts that were incurred under an appropriation for that purpose.

257. Intercolonial Railway—To pay claim of C. H. Mann.....$3,162.19

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is to settle a claim arising out of a contract with Mann, for the construction of snow-sheds and fences along the line of the Intercolonial. On the 12th of May, 1881, the arbitrators awarded him $3,821, which included $829.23 as interest for six years; but the hon. Minister of Justice stated that, according to law, interest could not be paid, and Mann accepted the principal by letter, dated 4th of August, 1882. An Order in Council, August 25th, 1882, recommends the placing in the Supplementary Estimates, of the principal, $2,895.60, and interest at 6 per cent. from the 4th of August, 1882, the date of Mann's letter, notifying his acceptance of the offer to the date of payment; say eleven months, $166.59.

Mr. BLAKE. When was this contract finished?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. At the end of 1875.

Mr. BLAKE. How came it to be so long unsettled?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is not so very long for such matters. These claims are pressed and resisted until finally, as the hon. gentleman sees, they are disposed of by being referred to arbitrators. The latter made an award, and, of course, there is nothing but to pay it.

Mr. BLAKE. I admit that it is not so very long in connection with a Government, but if money were owing to you or me, we would think it a very long time. For seven years it is pressed and pressed, and resisted and resisted, until it is at last referred, and then paid.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Sometimes these claims are referred and refused. I may take this opportunity of saying, that I have watched very closely the awards made by the official arbitrators, and I believe it would be impossible to find any board or any officers who will scrutinize more closely and resist more determinedly any extravagance in payments. I think that these gentlemen do their duty, and discharge their duty very efficiently in scrutinizing with the utmost care all payments of public money. I have taken a good deal of pains to examine the testimony upon which they find their awards, and I do not think that they err on the side of being over-liberal towards claimants.

Mr. MITCHELL. Hear, hear.

258. To pay Mr. B. Walsh, of Halifax, for damages to his property..... $525.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This claim arises out of the construction of a double track, provided in the Estimates of last year, and a deep cutting made for the line separating one portion of his land from the other; and the amount is arrived at by the valuation of the officers, who considered that it was reasonable and wise to settle on that basis.

Mr. BLAKE. There seems to be a difference of opinion between the hon. gentleman's view and the opinion of the newspapers, regarding the official arbitrators. I saw the other day that the Government offered $100 for property for which $19,000 were claimed, and the arbitrators awarded the sum of $72; so certainly they are just towards the public.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think that this confirms my statement.

Mr. BLAKE. I say so. I give it as a remarkable instance.

259. Railways—General..... $25,000.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This arises in this way: The House will remember that an appropriation was made for a bridge at Emerson at the last Session of Parliament—an ordinary passenger bridge; and the Government agreed, in case that it was made into a railway as well as a passenger bridge, to ask Parliament for an appropriation of $20,000 additional. There was a great deal of anxiety in that section of country to obtain an extension from the Canadian Pacific Railway Junction, and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company agreed to construct this branch of some twenty-two miles, provided that the towns of Emerson and West Lynne would build a bridge. These towns agreed to provide additional expenditure to construct a bridge, if we would raise our grant from a common highway to a railway bridge—from $20,000 to $50,000; and these $20,000 are to supplement our former grant.

Mr. BLAKE. What is it expected that the whole cost of the bridge will be?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I would not be certain, but I think about $150,000.

Mr. BLAKE. So much?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is a large amount, I know.

Mr. BLAKE. What will this bit of railway, twenty-two miles, cost apart from the bridge?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Well, it is a very expensive section, I think. The approaches to the bridge involve a large amount of expense; but I am not able to say at this moment how much. I should imagine, however, that the cost will be something, at all events, like the average.

Mr. WATSON. Who will own this bridge?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The towns of Emerson and West Lynne. I understand they agreed to construct and furnish the roadway through those places.

Mr. WATSON. I suppose they also bind themselves to keep the bridge in repair?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I presume so; but I do not know what arrangement is made under this head.

Mr. BLAKE. This additional allowance makes the salary of Mr. Schreiber, $6,000 for the Intercolonial, and $2,000 for the Canadian Pacific Railway, or $8,000 in all.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is only $6,000 in all. All Mr. Schreiber received as Chief Engineer of the Canadian Pacific Railway, in addition to his salary as an officer of the Department, as General Manager of Government Railways in Operation, and as Chief Engineer, was $1,500; and this is raised to $2,000, or $6,000 in all.

Mr. BLAKE. And what is his salary exclusive of the Canadian Pacific Railway?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It was $1,000 originally, and has been that since 1873.

260. Grenville Canal—To pay award in favor of Heney, Stewart & Co., contractors, for works at Greece's Point..... $17,270.00

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman explain this vote?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is the award of the arbitrator. The contractors were not making sufficient progress with the work and the contract was taken out of their hands. They put in a claim for the amount of work performed and the materials on hand, and it was agreed that this should be referred to Mr. Page as sole arbitrator, and this was his award.

Mr. BLAKE. Were they entitled to a claim of this kind under the terms of the contract? Had they originally claimed some sum?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman knows that it has always been the practice with regard to the canals, that when the work was taken out of the hands of the contractors they should be paid for the work done and the materials on hand at the time.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the contract be completed having regard to Heney, Stewart & Co.'s tender or not?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid not. Their prices were too low, and that was the reason they broke down.

Mr. BLAKE. Had they given security?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. They had made a deposit.

Mr. BLAKE. And that has gone too?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. The deposit has gone, the Government has got nothing, and the execution of the work costs more than if the contract had been completed. When was the work taken out of their hands?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The 1st of November, 1881.

Mr. BLAKE. What was the contract sum of Heney, Stewart & Co.?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I will be able to give the hon. gentleman that information on Concurrence.

Mr. BLAKE. I would like to get the amount of the contract, the security given for the contract, the amount and nature of it, the payments made on account of Heney, Stewart & Co. during the progress of the contract, the disposition of the deposit or other security, and the estimated loss to the Government upon the completion of the works by the new arrangement. It seems to me that this is hardly an illustration which the hon. gentleman would quote in the arguments he was addressing to the Committee in an earlier portion of the evening.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. With reference to that, in my judgment it is not possible to get public works constructed at the cost of private individuals. The hon. gentleman will not find, in the management of contracts under the Government of which he was a member, any evidence showing that to be the case. He will not find that that Government was any more successful than the present one in securing the construction of public works at private expense. I believe it is simply impracticable to do it, and yet our system of letting contracts is such that if parties come forward, however unable to do the work, however little confidence we may have in them, the hon. gentleman knows the difficulty of refusing the lowest tender, provided the party is prepared to make the deposit.

Mr. BLAKE. If his cheque is properly marked.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. If it is not properly marked I do not think we would make a great deal of public money by letting the contract to parties whose prices would not enable them to do the work. These parties took the contract; they were not skilled contractors; they carried it on for a time, but their prices were not high enough, in the judgment of the chief engineer, to enable them to perform it at all and the simple fact was that the work was being impeded, the time was being exceeded, and there was no chance of their completing the contract. They stated that the price of labor and material had risen so greatly after the time of taking the contract as to make it utterly impossible for them to go on—and it was quite true that they had advanced—and under these circumstances they surrendered the contract. The chief engineer made an estimate of the work, but they were dissatisfied and they applied to the Government. They made a claim for $20,382, and it was agreed that the claim should be referred to Mr. Page as sole arbitrator, and he arrived at the conclusion that it would be right to pay them $17,370.

Mr. BLAKE. I shall not enter into a discussion of the question of whether it is possible to obtain money from sureties under public contracts. The reason I made the remark I did make, but which the hon. Minister seems to have misapprehended, was, that in the earlier part of the evening he laid great stress on the fact that the Government had a security with respect to the Whitehead contract, which would have been available had the work cost more than the contract price. Now he says the work cannot be constructed at the expense of private individuals.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I said, and I repeat, and I will sustain it by evidence which the hon. gentleman cannot confute, that the Government of which he was a member settled a score of large contracts in which they took the work out of the hands of the parties and paid a large sum of public money over and above the amount of the contract, and yet they were not able to obtain a single dollar of the securities. If that is the case, why should the hon. gentleman raise this question as a question of impropriety on the part of the Government; why should he wish to intimate that there has been an injustice to the public, if we have only followed the policy of his Government, though I believe they acted from a sincere desire to promote the public interests, and conserve the public money. But no fault was found with them, either on account of their contracts on the canals or their contracts on the Intercolonial Railway; and I think the hon. gentleman will not find one dollar in the Treasury of Canada placed there by taking the security which parties had given when it was found that the prices were inadequate. That would simply have been taking the money of private individuals.

Mr. BLAKE. If that is the invariable rule, why was it said this afternoon, that if the Whitehead contract had cost more than the contract price, the Government could have recovered it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I said they could do so.

Mr. BLAKE. And would. I do not suppose that the hon. gentleman would say that they could do a wrong thing if it would not be done.

261. Williamsburg Canal—To pay to the owners of the titles of certain lands taken for the construction of the Rapide Plat Canal $1,434.59

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman explain this?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is to pay for the titles of certain lands for the lock of the Rapide Plat Canal taken in 1844, and not yet paid for.

Mr. BLAKE. It is hardly time to vote that money ye'. Will the hon. gentleman not want half a century more?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think, after these people have had to wait so long, it would be very unreasonable to ask them to wait any longer.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman explain how it comes that this very ancient claim was not pressed, and if it was, why it was not satisfied, and how he has ascertained the value of these lands as they stood thirty-nine years ago?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I had better, perhaps, read the Order in Council, which contains the information, and as it was sufficient to satisfy the Government of the justice of the claim, I have no doubt it will satisfy my hon. friend. The Order in Council is dated October 28th, 1882, and states:

"On a memorandum, dated 24th October, 1882, from the Acting Minister of Railways and Canals, representing that, in the year 1844, certain lands were taken for the construction of the Rapide Plat Canal, being parts of lots Nos. 4 and 5 in the first range of the Township of Matilda, also lots 1, 2, 3 and 4 in the sixth range of the Village of Mariatown.

"That, owing to the fact that rival claims have been set up by Mrs. Isabella Findlay Farlinger, and Mr. Samuel Nash, for the ownership of title to these lands; and that, up to the present time, neither claimant has been able to show satisfactory evidence of title, no settlement has been arrived at.

"The Minister states that, recently, upon renewed application from the parties interested, a further submission of the case was made to the Minister of Justice, who advised, under date the 18th instant, that authority should be obtained for the payment to Mrs. Farlinger, or to such other person as may be found entitled thereto, for the parts of the lots 4 and 5 in the first range of Matilda, and for lots 1 and 2 in the sixth range of Mariatown; and that payment should be made to Mr. Nash, or to such other person as may be found entitled thereto, for the lots 3 and 4 in the sixth range of Mariatown."

Mr. BLAKE. I should think that this, if it be a debt, is due by the late Province of Canada, and ought to be charged to it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I quite agree with the hon. gentleman.

262. Culbute Canal—To complete $23,100.00

Mr. BLAKE. Is this under contract?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes. The delay was caused by the failure of the contractors to complete one of the dams in the time specified in the contract, which rendered necessary the maintenance of an engineering staff. A portion of this vote is to be applied to making good the materials carried away by the breaking of a crib.

Mr. BLAKE. Is this expected to cover the whole cost?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes. This vote also embraces the damage done by the flooding of lands, which is estimated at $8,000. The other items are engineering and other expenses, $3,000, and the amount by special warrant required to complete the work, $12,100, making $23,100 in all.

Mr. BLAKE. What would be the total cost of the canal, including this vote? The hon. gentleman stated that $12,100 was by special warrant. If the money has been paid, I do not think it should be included in this vote, because we understand that every shilling that is voted is yet in the public treasury.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The total cost of the canal is $312,577.

263. Cornwall Canal—Enlargement $15,000.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This is for the purpose of paying the percentage to the contractors on Section No. 1, also for lock gates and other necessary outlays on the works now in progress.

264. Welland Canal—To compensate R. D. Dunn, Paymaster, for services in connection with the enlarged Canal..... $1,000.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Dunn, who is paymaster on the Welland Canal, applied to have his salary increased on account of increased duties. The application was a reasonable one, but we thought it better, as these duties were temporary, to give him this compensation instead of an increase.

265. { Welland Canal—Compensation to Mr. John Page, Chief Engineer of Canals, for special services as sole arbitrator upon several claims in dispute with contractors..... $5,000.00
To pay Mr. Page, for disbursements made by him in connection with the awards..... 105.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I believe it has been a great advantage to the country that Mr. Page's services has been utilized in this way. So long ago as January, 1872, he was called upon to act as arbitrator in the cases of R. McGreevy, contractor for the Parliamentary buildings, and Charles Garth, contractor for the heating and ventilation of the Parliamentary buildings. He stated very properly that this was no part of his duty as Chief Engineer, and did not wish to take the responsibility of performing these services. He was urged by Sir John Rose to perform them, and told that he would be well paid for these extra services. Since that time he has been charged with the same duty at a great saving to the Government, as, were the usual course of having three arbitrators appointed followed, a great expense would be caused. It has been estimated, the cost would have been something like $20,000, and under these circumstances we ask the House to vote this sum to Mr. Page.

Mr. BLAKE. Last Session the hon. member for East York, referring to this matter, expressed great confidence in Mr. Page. I have had the pleasure of knowing Mr. Page for many years, and have the highest possible opinion of his integrity. His professional capacity is better judged and is well spoken of by those who have a better right to speak of it than I. I shall not criticise this proposition of the hon. gentleman, except to say that I think it would have been more satisfactory if some understanding had been reached, by which, from time to time, as these transactions took place, the remuneration would be adjusted.

266. Welland Canal—To purchase a steam-pump.....$5,000.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. A good deal of difficulty has occurred in cases of wrecks in the Welland Canal, and the obstruction to navigation caused by sunken vessels. On the report of Mr. Page and the Superintendent we intend to buy this pump, so as not to be obliged to depend upon the use of steam pumps owned by private individuals.

267. Telegraph Lines—Manitoba and the North-West Territories—To pay balance due contractors, Oliver, Davidson & Co., for lines between Thunder Bay and Winnipeg.....$16,000.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. On the 5th February, 1875, a contract was entered into by the Department of Public Works, as then constituted, with Oliver, Davidson & Co. On the 5th April, 1882, an Order in Council was passed transferring this to the new Department of Public Works, then separated from the Department of Railways and telegraph lines in connection with railways. On the 28th August, P. J. Brown, the head of the firm which maintained the telegraph line from the date of its completion, presented a claim for instruments, materials, &c., amounting to $27,949. They stated that as they were in want of money they would settle for $22,000. This offer was accepted, and an Order in Council, passed on the 23rd September, 1882, authorizing the issue of special warrants by His Excellency for $16,000.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Out of this $30,000 transferred from the Department of Railways to the Department of Public Works, there was still $6,000 in the hands of the Department, which, with the $16,000, made the $22,000 to pay this claim. The Government obtained, besides that, 65 miles of wire, 22 sets of instruments, batteries, repairing tools, &c., which together will make another sum of $2,500.

321. To pay general charges in connection with railways.....$5,500 00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The first item is $400, to be paid to Mrs. A. A. McInnis, re compensation for the death of her husband. Without prejudice to the defence of the case, I may say in reply to the hon. gentleman from West Elgin (Mr. Casey), that he very much misunderstood what I stated to the House on a former occasion, when he charged me with want of sympathy for the victims of the terrible accident which occurred on the Prince Edward Island Railway. The question of whether the Government is liable as common carriers, is quite distinct from any question of sympathy and the deepest possible regret for the sufferers in that accident. I stated on that occasion that the judgment of the Chief Justice, supported by almost the unanimous Supreme Court, was, that the Government stands in an entirely different position from that of railway companies, who are common carriers. The distinction was drawn in that judgment in an emphatic manner by the Chief Justice, when he stated that the Government had constructed and operated the Intercolonial Railway and the Prince Edward Island Railway for the purpose of benefiting the public, as a matter of public convenience, and that the construction of the Imperial Act providing for the Union of the Provinces, and that by the Terms of the Union with Prince Edward Island, the Government were obliged to operate that railway. As the House knows, the Prince Edward Island Railway is still operated at a large excess over the receipts of the road. But assuming that the Government are common carriers, and that the law applies to us precisely as it does to any railway company, that would not necessarily involve us in the payment for compensation in case of death, or serious accident, to passengers carried by rail. The law, I believe, draws a clear distinction between accidents that are inevitable, and accidents that arise from negligence on the part of the employes, or any failure in the condition of the road. With reference to that point, the report of the officers of the road clearly established that the road was in good condition, so far as the Department could learn the fact. But the Judge who tried the case, subsequently arrived at a different opinion. Still, everything that the Government could do to ensure the proper condition of the road had been done. The gentleman who was acting as Superintendent and Chief Engineer of the Prince Edward Island Railway at the time of that unfortunate accident, had been employed by the late Government, and placed in charge of the Intercolonial Railway. His salary was advanced by the late Government in that position to $4,000 a year, a much larger salary than that he was receiving at the time he occupied the same position and before the Intercolonial was finished. He was a gentleman, therefore, in whom I had every reason to place the most implicit confidence as to his ability to maintain in a thoroughly efficient manner the railway on Prince Edward Island. The evidence taken at the time of the accident seemed to be conclusive that the railway was in a thoroughly good condition. However, as I stated, the learned Judge who tried the case found differently. I think the observations of the hon. member for West Elgin were still more uncalled for, because the hon. gentleman knew, if he was in the House at the time, that when this subject was under discussion, I stated that before the House rose I intended to submit the decision of the learned Chief Justice to the consideration of my colleagues, and to draw their attention to the fact that while he had found that the Government could not be held legally liable, yet it was a case that he commended to the Government as one worthy of their consideration, and upon which he seemed to think they would be warranted in invoking Parliament to make compensation. But when claims, which I had reason to believe from the evidence were extravagant and inordinate, were made against the Government, of course, they were resisted; we could do nothing else but resist them; the Railway Department have no power to pay a single dollar of public money in any case in which the law authorities of the Government declare there is no liability. My hon. friend the leader of the Opposition will agree with me that if any money is to be paid where the hon. Minister of Justice declares there is no liability, we must come to Parliament and ask for the money. That course was taken. The whole evidence in relation to these claims, was submitted to the Department of Justice, and that Department decided, in view of the evidence taken, that there was no legal liability, and we were not, therefore, to pay any public money. The case, as I have stated, was taken to court, and the Judge found certainly in the one case a very large amount as due; he not only found the Government were liable, but in estimating the damages he allowed the claim of $23,000 made by the sufferer to be increased to $35,000, and subsequently during the trial, to be raised to $50,000 and awarded the amount of $35,000 to Mr. McLeod, who was a very severe sufferer. There can be no doubt that this was a most distressing case, and the gentleman was subjected not only to great personal suffering, but for a considerable time his life was supposed to be in danger. There has never been a disposition to under-rate the character of the accident or the great sufferings experienced by Mr. McLeod. However, as I have stated, the Court having found that the claim was not one that could be established against the Government, it became necessary to consider what course should be taken. Mrs. McInnis is the widow of the captain of a vessel, who was on the train at the time this unfortunate accident occurred, and, although an invalid at the time, Dr. Hobkirk, his medical attendant, stated that he believed he would have recovered. Mrs. McInnis approached the Government in a letter which was in no manner complimentary to the Department, and she stated that her means were entirely exhausted, that she was unable to obtain bread and clothing for herself, and was, in fact, entirely destitute; and under these circumstances I recommended to Council that the Government should, without prejudice to the case, advance $400, in order that Mrs. McInnis might be maintained until final action was reached. I have submitted this matter for the consideration of the Government, and I may take the opportunity of stating that it is not proposed to ask for any particular sum to be appropriated for the purpose of meeting these cases; but in a Bill which I now have on the Table of the House, and which I will take the earliest opportunity of pushing forward, accidents, whether to person or property, are included in the running expenses of railways, and we hold ourselves, therefore, in a position to treat every case on its merits, that wherever there is a case of injury to the person, whether the liability is strictly legal or not, the Government will be in a position, from the appropriation provided for the operation of the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railways, to take such a sum as will, in the judgment of the Government, furnish proper compensation to those who are concerned. It will become my duty to take up the consideration of these very serious cases, and from the appropriation made for the operating expenses of these railways, to submit to the Government from time to time, what, in the judgment of the Department, is considered an appropriate amount to meet injuries or loss of life, in the same manner as has been applied to the loss of property. I trust this explanation will be considered sufficient as showing a determination on the part of the Government to pay damages, irrespective of the opinion of the Judges, as expressed in this case, and to satisfy hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House, that there was no desire to avoid any fair and just conclusion in dealing with these unfortunate cases.

Mr. DAVIES. I do not quite understand the proposition which the hon. member intends to submit to Parliament in regard to these unfortunate cases. If I understood the hon. gentleman he proposes to authorize the head of the Department in some manner which he has not clearly defined, to ascertain, in each case, the amount of damages to be awarded. It is not intended to bring down in the Estimates any definite sum to be paid to those sufferers. That certainly will be very unsatisfactory in many ways, unless the hon. gentleman comes to the conclusion, as I hope he will, to accept the decision of the Supreme Court as to the reasonableness of the damages. I had hoped the hon. gentleman would, in the Supplementary Estimates, as he rather intimated he would do, take an amount for each case on the Island Railway. I must take exception to one or two statements made by the hon. Minister. He said that the road was in good condition, as reported to the Government. I am aware that it was in good condition, as reported to the Government, and that the action of the Government was justifiable on the report which the Chief Engineer presented to them; but I have no hesitation in saying that the evidence given in court, before the Judges, and the concurrence of judgment on the part of the six Judges of the Exchequer Court, went to show that the report made by the officer in charge was not based on truth. There was much excitement in the Island at the time. The gentleman in charge of the railway became in a very nervous condition; he held a court of enquiry with closed doors. He took down the statements of employes of the road, and forced from them statements at the point of the bayonet, or under peril of losing their situations; which statements they repudiated when on oath, and under cross-examination. Those facts were reported to the hon. Minister of Railways. Any person reading the statements of the Chief Engineer, as forwarded, would come to the conclusion to which the hon. Minister arrived, namely: that the Island Railway road-bed was in good condition. But it is not the fact. I remember about two weeks prior to this terrible accident, the cars ran off the track at the western end of the line. A number of passengers were slightly injured, nonseriously; but the road-bed for a distance of 200 yards was torn up, and the sleepers were found to be in a thoroughly rotten condition. There was a good deal of talk. Some gentlemen made enquiries into the facts and found, as I have stated, that the road-bed was in an unsafe and unfit condition, and one of the chief newspapers of the Island, having collected these facts, published them, and warned the gentleman in charge of the railway that unless he took immediate steps to remedy the state of the road-bed, a very serious accident must inevitably happen within a very few weeks. It was publicly stated, and reiterated in a daily newspaper there day after day, that the road-bed was in such a shockingly rotten condition that an accident must happen, causing loss of life; and the newspaper went further, and told this gentleman in charge that if such an accident did happen, now that the fact of the condition of the road-bed having been brought to his knowledge, he would be held liable criminally in case of loss of life. Yet he took no such steps, and the fact of the matter was simply this: he was an over-worked man. When appointed to the position he had to perform the duties of three men, and he broke down under it. He became nervous, and the result was that the country has had to superannuate him at an expense of $1,700 for the rest of his life. He was over-worked and unfit for the position at the time, and the consequence was, that when this unfortunate accident happened, he had taken no precautions, although warned that the road-bed was thoroughly rotten. The hon. gentleman went on to say—and I was sorry to hear him make the statement, if he read the evidence—it was proved conclusively that the road bed was in good condition at the time of the accident. I would call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that out of thirty-seven or thirty-eight witnesses examined, some of them residents of the Island, and some passengers who happened to be on that train from the United States and from other parts of Canada, there were one universal consensus of opinion on this point as to the condition of the road-bed; that the condition of the sleepers was disgraceful, the sleepers were absolutely rotten, and the only wonder was, how trains were enabled to go over that part of the road in the morning of the day when the accident happened, and for the few days previously; and there were but three witnesses to controvert that statement. One, the section foreman, who was responsible for the condition of the road, and two of his undertrappers. As was very well pointed out, when the Chief Justice heard the case up here on appeal, it was impossible for any impartial man to give credit to the testimony of two interested witnesses, and to throw over the testimony of thirty-six or thirty-seven disinterested witnesses. Many of these gentlemen had no earthly interest in the matter whatever, they were not even Canadians, but travelling as passengers. I myself may say—and have no hesitation in doing so—that personally I went there and examined the state of the road right after the accident; and I know from my own personal knowledge, that the statements of the thirty-seven gentlemen were true. I took myself with my own hand the ends of a dozen of these sleepers, just at the point of the accident, and without the slightest exertion broke them off at the rail. They were a mass of pulp, absolutely rotten. There is no escape from it. I wish to point out to the hon. gentleman as to damages, it was found by the learned Judge who tried the case below, that the evidence of the thirty-seven witnesses was true, and the evidence of the foreman and the men under him was not true. When we came to the Court of Appeal, the whole of the Judges unanimously held that on that there could be no question. They held that the accident was caused by the culpable negligence—I use the word employed not once but several times by the Chief Justice in the course of conversation during the argument—of the Government employés. I would ask the hon. gentleman if he can point to any tribunal from which we could expect a fairer, a more impartial, and a more honest judgment, or a tribunal more capable of giving a fair, honest and impartial judgment than the Supreme Court of Canada? There we have on that material point the unanimous opinion of the Judges, without one dissenting voice; it was clear beyond all argument, so clear that they told the gentleman who appeared on behalf of the Crown, after reading the evidence there, that he would only take up time by argument, that this accident was caused by the culpable negligence of the Government employés. That being the case, we went on to discuss the question of damages; and on that point I would also call the attention of the Minister of Railways to the decision and declaration of the Judges. The amount of damages awarded to Mr. McLeod does seem at first sight to be a very large amount. I would undertake to say there is no man in Prince Edward Island—and I will hazard this assertion—who knows Mr. McLeod, and who saw him during the first six or twelve months after the accident, who will tell the Minister of Railways that those damages were excessive. Language fails me, at any rate, to describe that man's condition after the accident. Before that a young man in the prime of life, exceptionally well trained and holding the position of bank manager. He formerly received a very large salary in New York, and was then in receipt of a large salary in Prince Edward Island; and he had the promise of a large increase to his salary. He was also the agent of a large insurance company, from which he derived a very respectable income. He was an athletic man, accustomed to take a great deal of exercise. He was a very strong and powerful man, and in the prime of life; but after and since the accident he has been a wretched wreck. I myself was present when he was carried in from the train. I was there to see him day after day for six or eight weeks, while he lay without moving, being fed with a silver tube. His whole face was smashed, most of his teeth being carried away; and I suppose he suffered more during six or eight weeks than human imagination, or at all events than the language which I can command, can describe. He was for months and months unable to go near business at all, and was only retained in his position, not because he was capable of fulfilling his duties, but to a large extent from the kindness of the directors. He has been for many years the manager of the bank, and they were loath to discharge him. He went home to England, on the advice of his doctors, to take the advice of some of the most eminent surgeons, and they told him that by taking a fair amount of outdoor exercise, and by declining to or abstaining from continuing to give up his time to the duties of his profession, he might prolong his life some years. He was a man in a good position, with a good income before then; he had to give up $1,000 which he received from the insurance company, and he remains in the bank more from the kindness of the directors than from anything else, discharging in a very perfunctory way the duties of cashier. I do not know any man in Prince Edward Island, at any rate, his equal, or anything like his equal, as a bank cashier. I know he has held very high offices abroad, and he had a right to look forward to a long life, and a very large salary for life, as bank cashier. We had evidence taken before a Commission there of gentlemen from abroad, who were acquainted with Mr. McLeod, as to his qualifications, and the prospects of obtaining a large salary. The facts are, that after all this evidence was heard, the Judges assessed the damages, and the hon. member complains that the Judge at the final, admitted the claim to be increased, and, I think, I ought to explain why that was. When the accident occurred, the chief injury suffered was a facial injury. After three or four months had gone by, he was able to communicate with his attorneys, and a claim was made on the Department. It was not known at that time that he received injuries beyond his facial injuries, because he had not attempted to walk about or take any physical exercise; but after the claim was forwarded to the Minister of Railways, it was found that he had received very serious injuries to his spine—injuries so serious that his medical attendants peremptorily insisted that he should take no physical exercise whatever, but merely walk down to his office and back. When the trial came on, the evidence of five or six of the leading doctors of Charlottetown went to show that the facial injuries were nothing in comparison with the effects to the spinal injuries he received. It was shown that these injuries were more or less paralyzing him, and that in all human probability his life would not be prolonged for more than three or four years.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. gentleman says "hear, hear."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I say the hon. gentleman is making the strongest possible case against his client.

Mr. DAVIES. Why?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It was shown in the evidence given before the Judge that it was likely that this man's life would terminate in three or four years. Now he is able to discharge his duties of cashier of a bank, and the evidence given by the medical men is shown to be entirely mistaken.

Mr. DAVIES. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. I hope the dogmatic statement he has made may be true.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is admitted to be true. The medical men themselves admit that they were mistaken, and I am afraid the hon. gentleman is not promoting the interests of his client.

Mr. DAVIES. Whether I am or not I am simply stating what the facts are, and I think the hon. gentleman should not have stated that the evidence of the medical men was not true.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I did not.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. gentleman has made the statement which I cannot allow to pass unchallenged. He says that the evidence given by the medical men was untrue.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I said nothing of the kind, and the hon. gentleman is stating what is untrue in saying that I did. I said that they were mistaken in their evidence.

Mr. DAVIES. I am not going to allow myself to be worked up into a state of excitement. The hon. gentleman made the statement that the doctors had now stated that they were mistaken in their statement that the man would not likely live more than three or four years.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. They admitted that.

Mr. DAVIES. I challenge the hon. gentleman to bring forward any evidence to show that they made that admission.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The facts show it. They cannot help but admit it.

Mr. DAVIES. The facts show nothing of the kind.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is not one of them but will be compelled to admit it.

Mr. DAVIES. That is another thing. But I understood the hon. gentleman to say to the Committee, that these doctors now admitted that they were mistaken.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. So they did.

Mr. DAVIES. It would be improper on my part to make a statement which would prejudice my client, but, at the same time, I think it but right that I should place the House in possession of the facts. I say that the doctors swore that from their examination of Mr. McLeod, it was doubtful whether his life would be prolonged more than four or five years. He went home to consult some of the first doctors in England.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. After the trial?

Mr. DAVIES. Yes. He went home by the advice of his medical men, and Dr. Ericsson, one of the most prominent authorities on spinal disease in the world, told him that as he had survived so long he might hope that his life might be spared. I know myself that Mr. McLeod dare not raise his arm to engage in any exercise whatever. I have known him as one of the best athletes in Charlottetown, a cricketer and one accustomed to horseback exercise. Now he goes around a weak, helpless man, shambling from his office to his house. Two years have elapsed since the accident occurred, and I trust that that may prove a sign that his life will be spared longer, but he can never be more than a sad miserable wreck. I had hoped that I would not get into a controversy with the hon. Minister of Railways, but I trust that he will not allow his mind to be carried away by the ex parte statements made by the man then in charge of the Prince Edward Island Railway. I frankly acknowledge that when I heard these statements first made by him, and supposing they were addressed to a jury, I thought the hon. Minister of Railways was not justified in saying that the case of Mr. McLeod should go to trial instead of arbitration. But when the trial came on, and I read these statements, I admit that I justified the decision of the hon. Minister of Railways, because it appeared to be a pure accident not resulting from negligence. But now it stands on a different footing. A Judge of the Exchequer Court has heard forty or fifty witnesses, and they thought that the ex parte report first made with regard to the case was untrue. But what occurs to me is the fact that when they came to argue it before the Court of Appeal, they unanimously determined that the verdict found by the Judge, that this accident was caused by the culpable negligence of the employés of the road, was true. Under these circumstances I think that the hon. gentleman should not hesitate a moment as to what he should bring down to the House. I am aware that those Judges have held that, technically, an action would not lie against the Queen in this case, and, of course, at present we are bound to bow to that decision. But when the hon. gentleman says that he will deem it to be his duty to propose some sum as compensation, I ask him what better basis could he take than the judgment rendered by a single Judge, and afterwards ratified by the unanimous judgment of the court above. I hope that the hon. gentleman will not allow the Session to go by without bringing down a vote to meet this claim. I hope that the hon. gentleman will see that the fairest and best mode of dealing with it, and of doing justice to the public and the parties, is to accept the damages as they have been assessed by the Judges of the land. Nobody can impute to them partiality. Even if the hon. gentleman was prepared to argue that one Judge had taken a wrong view of the evidence, it cannot be held that the whole Supreme Court of Canada took the wrong view. You cannot appoint any board of arbitration that possesses better qualifications than they possess. They are not a jury carried away by their passions; they read the evidence carefully together, and came to a unanimous conclusion; and I hope and trust that, upon all the facts of this case, the hon. Minister will see it to be his duty to bring down a vote covering the damages they assessed.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not intend to prolong this discussion further than to say that Mr. McLeod may very well say, "Save me from my friends." The hon. gentleman has put himself in the witness-box, and has undertaken to offer his testimony; and I have no hesitation in saying that that testimony will be regarded as worthless by any intelligent man who knows anything of railways. The hon. gentleman has given his evidence that the sleepers were perfectly rotten, in the condition of pulp, and yet he knows that around that sharp curve trains were running every day at a considerable rate of speed.

Mr. DAVIES. The accident did not occur at the sharp curve, but after the train went around the sharp curve, and it was beyond the curve where I said the sleepers were in a state of pulp.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Everybody knows that the accident occurred on account of the train going round the curve, and the hon. gentleman must not suppose that he can escape by a suggestion of that kind. The statement of the hon. gentleman can only result from his having been the paid advocate of the gentleman whose case is under examination; and this has blinded his judgment and destroyed his discretion, that he does not hesitate to commit himself to a statement so extravagant that no person could believe it if he desired, and as to render every statement he makes utterly valueless and worthless. When the hon. gentleman got up, he took the position that the amount assessed by the Judge would be the proper amount to pay; but he had not gone very far until he proved to the House that the Judge had been entirely misled by the medical testimony given on that occasion. He says that four or five skilful medical men of Charlottetown went on the stand and swore that this man's life was gone; that his spine was injured; that he was an utter wreck; that he would be a helpless paralytic for a short time and would then die. Dr. Hobkirk, the surgeon who attended Mr. McLeod, took that view. These medical men were men of high character, and the Judge took their evidence, as he was bound to do, and on that evidence he assessed the damages. But the gentleman went to England, and I rejoice to know that he came back, having learned that the very serious view of his case taken by the doctors, was not the correct view, and with good hopes of attaining a good old age. And what is he doing to-day? Why, he is vigorously discharging the duties of cashier and manager of a bank, and showing that he is not only in the enjoyment of all his faculties, but physically so strong that he is able to maintain his position in a responsible and onerous office, and he is receiving as large a salary to-day as he ever received in his life. The hon. gentleman has done everything, in my judgment, to destroy the claim as it stood before he got up and informed the House of the true state of the case. I will not say more about that. I do not intend that the hon. gentleman shall prejudice the case of his client by the indiscreet and extravagant statements which he has made to-night; but I will not allow the hon. gentleman to reflect upon the Government or upon myself, as having been the cause of this accident. The hon. gentleman says that Mr. McNab was not equal to all the work put upon him, and that that is the reason the road was not in a better condition. I can produce Mr. McNab's letter written to me, stating that the engineer was entirely unnecessary, and that it was so easy for him to perform all the duties he had to perform, that he was astonished that the change was not made before. I put that against the statement of the hon. gentleman that Mr. McNab was overworked. My predecessor paid that man $4,000 a year as Chief Engineer of the Intercolonial Railway, with the whole distance from Rivière du Loup to Halifax and Windsor and Pictou under his charge, and responsible for the condition of the road; and Mr. Brydges, a man as well qualified, I believe, to judge of the capacity of a man in that position as any man on this continent, declared that Mr. McNab was so able and efficient a man that he had asked Mr. Mackenzie to largely increase his salary. Now that gentleman has been charged with the maintenance of 200 miles of railway in Prince Edward Island. Mr. McNab, who had for years experience in a much more difficult position on the Intercolonial Railway, went upon the stand and swore that he had gone over the ground after the accident, and that the accident was not caused by any defect in the road. I put his sworn testimony against the statement made by the advocate of Mr. McLeod on that occasion. What more? Mr. Houle, who had been track master on that section of the road from the day it came into the hands of the Government, down to the time Mr. Mackenzie, then Minister of Public Works, left office, and who has continued in that position since—a man of undoubted skill and experience—a man best able to speak of the condition of the Prince Edward Island Railway, for his whole time was occupied in examining the road, swore the road was in first-class condition, and that the accident was not caused by any defective condition of the track. I put that sworn testimony against the statement of the hon. gentleman, that the sleepers were nothing but pulp. The hon. gentleman said a lot of people said that. So they did. They gave such testimony as the hon. gentleman gave, and which so excited the public—people who knew nothing about the maintenance and condition of the road—that one witness swore it was murder. No man was killed, no man had died; yet, just as the hon. gentleman stated to-night the sleepers were rotten as pulp, this man swore it was murder. How could he, when no man was killed or had died, swear it was murder without perjuring himself? Yet the hon. gentleman got his witness to swear that. I give that testimony as an evidence of the excitement which was worked up in the country. The hon. gentleman got another witness to swear to the condition of the road—a railway man. What was his position? He had been driven out of employment, he had been dismissed by the Government, I think, for drunkenness and misconduct.

Mr. DAVIES. No—drunkenness?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. For misconduct, at all events.

Mr. DAVIES. What kind?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not, at the moment, remember. I know he was dismissed by the Government.

Mr. DAVIES. By whom?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. By Mr. McNab, I presume; but, at all events, he was dismissed and he went to the United States, where he was starving because he could not get employment. They sent for this man, and put him on the stand, and he swore the road was in the condition stated by the hon. gentleman. When his own evidence was put before him and he was asked: "Did you not say the road was in first-rate condition when you had gone over it that day?" He said: "yes." "Did you lie when you made that statement?" He said: "yes; but I was then in the employment of the Government, and am not now." I did not intend to go into this question, but the hon. gentleman provoked it. So far as the hon. gentleman could damage the position of his client in the case, he has done so, and Mr. McLeod may well say: "Save me from my friends." But we will not allow the hon. gentleman's indiscreet and injudicious statements to prejudice Mr. McLeod's case. We will do what is right in the premises. With regard to the decision of the Judges in refusing to allow the testimony to be entered into, my theory is this, and I ask the hon. gentleman to contradict me if I am wrong. When the counsel for the Crown asked the Judges to allow them to place the character of the testimony before the court; when Mr. Hodgson, who was familiar with the whole case, and who placed in my hands abundant evidence to show the utterly fallacious character of the testimony, asked the court to hear him in reference to the question of damages, the court refused. Why? Because Mr. Lash, who was also a counsel for the Crown, had already exhausted the argument in relation to the legal liability. No doubt the Judges, having decided in their minds against the claimants on the ground that they had no legal claim against the Government, did not want to have their time taken up by going into the question of damages and assessment, or any other matters. That is the only ground on which we can understand their refusing to allow the counsel for the Crown to show the character of the testimony, and the discrepancies of the evidence on the other side.

Mr. DAVIES. I am not going to lose my temper as the hon. gentleman seems to have lost his. Whether my statement impaired or advanced the cause of Mr. McLeod, I know not, but I think this House will prefer I should make a plain statement of the facts, even if it injures Mr. McLeod, rather than that I should make a varnished statement of facts. I do not want to mislead the House, and should be sorry to make this a political question. It never was a political question.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is making it one at this moment. The hon. gentleman made it so by his gross and unwarranted attack on the Government.

Mr. DAVIES. Argument, in the face of a statement like that, is useless. The hon. gentleman says I made a bitter attack on the Government. Why, if he desires to give a fair, impartial hearing to my statement of the case, the words I used must still be ringing in his ears when I said: Having the ex parte statement in his hands rendered to him by Mr. McNab, I do not blame him for his action.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Did you or did you not state that the cause of this accident was that Mr. McNab was so over-worked by the Government, he was not able to do his duty?

Mr. DAVIES. I did say so, and I call to bear testimony to that statement the hon. Minister himself, who, within a very few weeks after the accident occurred, acting upon a certificate produced by McNab's doctor that he was unfit to discharge his duties, recommended that he be superannuated at $1,600 a year for the remainder of his life. I want to know if that is a political statement. Does the hon. gentleman remember that, when he was a Minister of the Government, he recommended Mr. McNab to be superannuated because he was physically unfit to discharge his duties? Does the hon. Minister mean to say that that physical unfitness was caused within two or three weeks after the accident, and that I was not justified in assuming that it was caused when the accident occurred? The hon. gentleman says that we ought not to make statements of facts here that are contradicted by two men. I tell the hon. gentleman, with all respect, that he has not latterly read Mr. McNab's statement, because Mr. McNab did not state the facts as he put them to the House to-night. Mr. McNab had not visited the scene of the accident before the accident occurred at all.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I did not say so. I said he went there immediately after the accident.

Mr. DAVIES. Mr. McNab stated he did not arrive at the scene of the accident until after the sleepers had been taken up, and he was unable to say what state the sleepers were in.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

Mr. DAVIES. I will take occasion to submit the facts to the hon. Minister privately. I want to make no advantage out of this. I will submit Mr. McNab's evidence to him upon that point, but I have not got it before me now. The hon. gentleman says that Houle swore so and so. I can tell him that the fact that Houle swore so and so was submitted to the Judges of the Supreme Court by Mr. Hodgson, counsel for the Crown, and the Chief Justice did not decide that point, because they did not want their time taken up by having to decide a point of law. They stated expressly: "We have already carefully read the evidence, and we cannot believe that Mr. Houle, who was the man responsible for this accident, is telling the truth, when thirty-seven respectable witnesses swore to the contrary."

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Did they allow the counsel to state the whole case, or did they put him down and refuse to hear him?

Mr. DAVIES. They allowed him to speak partially, and they told him that if he was going to argue that they should accept the statement of Houle as against the sworn testimony of thirty-seven witnesses that they might save him the trouble of making the argument. I can tell the hon. gentleman that it is customary in courts of law when a case is so clear that it does not admit of argument, for the Judges to interpose and say so. I would be prepared, if the hon. gentleman was not prejudiced, to argue it before himself, and to appeal to his sense of justice and to his common sense. The hon. gentleman has said that there was political feeling in this question. I can tell him there was no politics on one side or the other. He will find upon enquiry that there were more Conservatives who swore to the state of that road than Liberals. I tell him care was taken to exclude politics from that case entirely. The counsel on behalf of Mr. McLeod were not politicians outside of myself; some of them were the leading lawyers of Prince Edward Island who take no part in politics. I tell him frankly if he chooses to ask the hon. gentleman who came from Prince Edward Island and supported the case of the Government, they will tell him that whatever political effect the newspapers may have sought to make, there was no politics in the testimony given by them. There is no man in Prince Edward Island outside the small clique of officials who will deny that it was the rotten state of that road which caused the accident. I challenge the hon. gentleman to produce a statement from any reliable man in Prince Edward Island outside the narrow clique of politicians connected with the railway, who attribute it to any other cause. Let him take the testimony of the gentleman he formerly sent to inspect that road, and ask him what was the cause of the accident and he will learn there was no politics in this matter whatever. The newspapers made political effect out of it afterwards in this way: They said that Mr. McNab had been solemnly warned from day to day that if he did not pay attention to this road-bed some serious accident would happen, and if death was the result he would be indicted for murder. That charge was made against Mr. McNab a fortnight previous to the accident, when they were calling his attention to another accident not far away where the cars went off and ground up the road bed to powder for nearly 100 yards. They pointed out that he was carrying people over that road when the sleepers were rotten, that they had called his attention to it time and again, and that if another accident happened he would be held criminally responsible. And if the hon. gentleman will go down to Prince Edward Island and enquire of the people there, irrespective of politics, he will find the facts just as I have stated them. I did not want to be entrapped into a warm discussion on this matter, but the hon. gentleman has challenged it, has provoked it, and I could not, with self-respect keep silent after the statements he has made. I am sorry to learn—I hope I have been mistaken—from the remarks that fell from him, that the statements I have made here to-night will prejudice the cause of the man in whose behalf I am speaking. I sincerely hope it is not so. I hope, not only for the cause of my client, but for the honor of the hon. Minister himself, that he will not allow a cause of this kind to be prejudiced by anything I may say. If the man is entitled to damages, let him have them; let justice be done him. I hope the hon. gentleman is not going, if I have transgressed in his opinion, to let my shortcomings or my failings prejudice the case in his own mind in connection with the claims of these unfortunate sufferers. Apart from Mr. McLeod, there are others—poor women—who have suffered. The very one for whom the hon. gentleman has proposed a vote to-night, probably lost her husband from this cause. There is no doubt that that accident contributed almost directly to his death from the shock it gave to his nervous system, and I hope that the case will be dealt with, and dealt with generously. The poor woman is left without a friend or protector in the world—I had not the honor to be her lawyer. Hon. gentlemen must not suppose that I was counsel for all the applicants; I was counsel for some, not for others. I hope, in dealing with the whole question, the hon. Minister will not allow himself to be governed entirely by the official statements, but that he will look at the sworn testimony, at the opinions of the Judges, and will consult men on his own side of politics who are not mixed up in the case, and he will find the statements I have given are correct statements, and are not exaggerated.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman has again discounted all he said by another indiscreet expression. The hon. gentleman, after making a violent statement of the case said, I hope you will not go to your lawyer for an opinion. What does he mean? That a retained advocate is an unsound authority to go to for an opinion. I am quite certain that those who have listened to the hon. gentleman will come to the conclusion that the last source to which to look for an unbiased and judicial opinion upon any question is to a retained advocate in the case. I do not want to prolong the discussion further than to say that I am prepared to answer in the most explicit manner the only point which the hon. gentleman has named, and that is with regard to the superannuation of Mr. McNab. I have told the Committee the ground on which Mr. McNab was entrusted with the important duties which were placed in his charge; that having been entrusted for long years with vastly more important duties for the Government they were quite safe in placing the maintenance of the Prince Edward Island Railway under Mr. McNab's control. The facts were these: In order to reduce the expenditure we considered it unnecessary to have an engineer, a professional man on the 200 miles of the Island Railway. And what is the fact to-day? To-day the chief engineer of the Intercolonial in addition to his duties, makes a rapid trip over the Island Railway (Mr. McNab was engaged as a man of high standing knowledge and large experience), and yet hon. gentlemen opposite will not state that the Island Railway is not in a better condition to-day than at any time since its construction.

Mr. DAVIES. I said nothing about the bad condition of the road.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. And yet there is no engineer on the road, but it is only occasionally visited by Mr. Archibald of the Intercolonial. With respect to Mr. McNab's superannuation, the party press of which the hon. gentleman gave us an illustration, when he declared it was hounding Mr. McNab with the statement that he was to be arraigned for murder, made the management of the Island Railway the principal political topic of discussion in the Island.

Mr. DAVIES. No.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes. I tell the hon. gentleman that not only was that so, but when this accident occurred a brutal press—I do not hesitate to say so—taking advantage of this unfortunate and terrible accident, hounded Mr. McNab nearly out of his senses. I say that Mr. McNab, an able man, an engineer of high standing, an engineer to whom Mr. Brydges, after five years experience, gave a large salary on account of his worth and ability, was struck down by that press of Prince Edward Island which daily accused him of murder in the most foul manner, and aroused the population against him until Mr. McNab went to a doctor and said: Give me a certificate, I am unable to sleep.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Hon. gentlemen laugh; I say Mr. McNab, who had been an able man was stricken down and became a child. His doctor found him completely wrecked mentally on account of the violent assaults made upon him, and Mr. McNab brought that certificate to me and stated that it was absolutely necessary, if his health was not to break down utterly and become destroyed, that he should have one year's rest from duty. What could I do? Leave the Island Railway for one hour in the hands of a man who brought me a certificate from an able physician to say that he was utterly prostrated and incompetent, that his nervous system had collapsed and that it was utterly impossible for him to attend to business without danger to his life. What did I do? I said to Mr. McNab, I will relieve you to-morrow. Mr. McNab went back to the Island and in three weeks he implored me to put him back in his position, saying that he was as well as he ever was. I had all the evidence a man could desire of Mr. McNab's ability to hold the position; and he wrote a letter just before the accident stating, not that he was overworked, but that he was able to perform the duties with the most perfect ease, and was astonished to think that the chance of doing away with an engineer in addition to a superintendent had not occurred long ago. I desire further, merely to correct a statement of the hon. gentleman's that I had insinuated that the observations which had fallen from him would prejudice the case; but we will not permit the hon. gentleman's indiscretion to have that effect in any way whatever.

Mr. BRECKEN. I think it is my duty to make a short statement in regard to the subject before the Committee. I am not acquainted with the details of the case as is my hon. friend (Mr. Davies) because he was counsel for some of the parties, and I have not been engaged professionally in any way in connection with it. I should be very sorry to allow any remark made by me to in any way prejudice the claim, if it is a claim, which Mr. McLeod and others may have on the clemency and grace of the Crown. But I must say this, that Mr. McLeod may say: "Save me from my friends." I do not hesitate to say that this very unfortunate accident was made a political hue-and-cry. I recollect when this accident took place, that two gentlemen, both in their graves now, one of whom was my political opponent in 1878, and for whom I had personally the greatest respect, and the other was a violent politician, went out to survey the debris of the accident. I agree with the language used by the hon. Minister of Railways, that the attacks made on Mr. McNab were atrocious, and I was intimate with that gentleman, and those attacks had a great deal to do with upsetting his nervous system and placing him in the state of nervous depression in which he was when he came to Ottawa. He was an exceedingly sensible man, an honorable man, a kind-hearted man—not one of that class of men who, if he escaped from an accident, would laugh at it. That man felt it as keenly as these men, who made their attacks upon him. He was an able man and very conscientious, and he believed he was doing his duty faithfully. He believed that this railway was in a good state. I am not prepared to say, because I was not out there, whether it was or not; but I saw two or three rotten sleepers exhibited by ardent politicians on the opposite side, and looked upon with as much curiosity as portions of the willow tree that drooped over the grave of Napoleon, on the Island of St. Helena. They were exhibited as one would take a specimen brick to show what a building was like. Little bits of crumbling railway sleepers were exhibited to prove the incapacity and worthlessness of the right hon. Sir John A. Macdonald's Administration over the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. DAVIES. Where did the hon. gentleman see those exhibits?

Mr. BRECKEN. Well, I can hardly tell you, but I saw them where they had a right to be. I am stating what is the case. Two violent politicians, who were just as well qualified to judge of the efficiency of this road as any two of the first men you might meet out of the Parliament buildings, went out there and filled the papers with atrocious attacks on this man. I know where I saw some of the specimens, however. It was where they had a perfect right to be—in a court of justice.

Mr. DAVIES. Did the hon. gentleman ever see them, except in a court of justice, in the hands of a sworn witness?

Mr. BRECKEN. Those you had I saw, but I do not know what pieces you had in court.

Mr. DAVIES. Did you ever see any other? I know you did not.

Mr. BRECKEN. Yes; I know what I am speaking of, and how dare the hon. gentleman say I did not see them. This little game of bluff of which the hon. gentleman has been accused time and again, is now practiced in this House. I do not want to bring in names; but they were brought in by hon. members now dead in their graves. The hon. gentleman knows, that two of our most violent opponents—if they were not heaven-born engineers, what took them there—went out and made a great ado about this matter. Another thing reached my ears. A man who was fortunate enough to escape, lying at the Nun's Hospital ill, told me, that when it was thought he was going to die, the man who filled the office of coroner said: "I will be the man who will hold that inquest;" before he was acquainted with the evidence, in his political zeal to help his party, and to help his opponents, he was prepared to hold an inquest upon that man, and whether the hon. Minister of Railways, or Mr. McNab was to be indicted for murder, I suppose, was a matter of perfect indifference to him if he could thus help his political cause; that is the fact.

Mr. DAVIES. Who was that?

Mr. BRECKEN. I will mention no names. The hon. gentleman can very soon find out. I do not know what the hon. gentleman said of Mr. McNab, but I admired his colleague during the campaign last June.

Mr. DAVIES. I said nothing against Mr. McNab.

Mr. BRECKEN. I went from hustings to hustings, and I observed that at every one of the meetings the hon. gentleman never opened his lips against Mr. McNab, but his colleague (Mr. Laird), did. I know when the political machines went down to Prince Edward Island, I was ill at the time, and had not the privilege of hearing their speeches. The leader of the Opposition, Mr. Huntington, and Mr. Anglin, those gentlemen who were so secure in their own seats, certainly possessing the confidence of the people, that they need not look after their own constituents, became a commission to look after other people's constituencies, and the burden of the song of Mr. Anglin was the superannuation of Mr. McNab. I state that as a fact. I am not going to say what the cause of the accident was. I do not know. I saw specimens of sleepers, which were certainly very much decayed. I recollect this much about it: There was a car laden with coal, and some material was taken up to a factory. This was laid across two cars and lashed to them. And I know where the accident took place—at the foot of a grade at the commencement of a curve—after that trains—and I may be told, and that very properly, that this was on account of negligence—passed over this track the day before, and the day before that, and daily for years. And therefore, not professing to be a heaven-born engineer, I take that as sufficient proof, at any rate, that there was no malice prepense with which Mr. McNab was charged; and that the road was not in a deplorably rotten state, though, it is true, it is the last straw which breaks the camel's back. It was in evidence that new sleepers were put in there. It might have been, and probably was. The sleepers were left there in a state of decay; and if that was so, it was a very great misfortune and ought not to have been. But is that little circumstance to be made so much of? Why, if Mr. McNab had secretly instructed one of his employes to put a sleeper there and throw the train off the track, he could not have been attacked more vehemently than he was, as is well known. I cannot speak about Mr. McNab's superannuation, I know nothing at all about it, I had no right to know, my late colleague, Mr. Pope, was then in the Government, and I supposed, that this superannuation was based upon certain calculations; and I venture to say, that there is no Government official in Prince Edward Island, who found it necessary to be superannuated, that would not have made as big a claim as he possibly could. I do not know Mr. McNab's political claims, but I lived in Charlottetown while he was a resident there, and my hon. friend will agree with me, that he was a most estimable and honorable gentleman.

Mr. DAVIES. I have not said anything against him.

Mr. BRECKEN. I do not know that the hon. gentleman could. No man grieved more sincerely than that poor man owing to the terrible accident that occurred; and I think, to say the least of it, that my hon. friend's closing remarks might have been just as well reserved. I believe that the press particularly should watch public works of this kind, where the lives and the limbs of the travelling public are every day at risk, and I am sure that the Minister of Railways, a humane man, I am confident, is as anxious as any hon. member on the other side of the House to have this work efficiently carried out. I will go further: Although I heard every particle of the evidence, perhaps the statement I am about to make will cause me to be told that I ought not to make it, because I do not give names, but I pledge my veracity for it, and hope that since I have been in the House, no hon. member has found me deviate from it; but I may say that not a fortnight ago, I was in conversation with a gentleman in Charlottetown, as intelligent as my hon. friend, and as well acquainted with the facts and circumstances of this case as almost any man not professionally engaged in it, and he said to me: "Brecken, that evidence was fearfully exaggerated." He gave me an instance of it; but it is a piece of information that I cannot, as an honorable man, in justice disclose, and he said he had the evidence of himself, having heard two statements from the same man, when he came into court. He stated that this evidence was frightfully exaggerated and was not up to the evidence which, he had stated, a few days before, he was prepared to give. Mr. McLeod is a gentleman for whom I have the greatest respect; he sustained fearful injuries, and I hope that the Government will see their way to make some compensation to him, as well as to several others. I believe that Mr. McLeod conducted this matter upon business principles, and that he had too much discretion to be inclined to join in a political howl. But I do say, Sir, and I know it, and I do not know where my hon. friend's ears could have been when he did not know it, that it was treated as a political question and almost wholly as a political question in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. DAVIES. I never heard it.

Mr. BRECKEN. I have heard it a hundred times. The Minister of Railways sent out a professional engineer, a gentleman who once had charge of works on the Intercolonial railway, to take charge of a small road 200 miles long on Prince Edward Island. The hon. gentleman will not deny that a more conscientious man does not live in the Dominion of Canada. But supposing one of these men were negligent, does it follow that the Minister of Railways is responsible for the conduct of the thousands of men he has employed in the Dominion of Canada whom he has never seen and never will see? Supposing a track-master improperly lays the track and passes by three or four sleepers which are rotten, is that to be charged against the head of the department? If the hon. gentleman will look at the charges which have been made in the newspapers against the Minister of Railways, he will see that these charges could have had just as much foundation if they had been made against me; and I do not wonder that the Minister of Railways, looking at the animus found in these attacks, should not have come to the conclusion to which he came. I say this, that the indiscreet conduct of my hon. friend will not be allowed to prejudice the case. I know that that man suffered fearful injuries, and I for one would be sorry to take his injuries for damages the judges awarded. I hope the Government will see their way to make some compensation, because his injuries, as well as those of Mr. Stewart, were very severe, indeed. I say this, however, that the attacks which emanated from the Opposition were not prompted entirely by their feelings of humanity, or a desire to see this man compensated, but like everything else they have tried to turn the matter to political account. These attacks were tintured and permeated by that bitterness and acrimony which has always distinguished the political conduct of these gentlemen in Prince Edward Island.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. gentleman who has just sat down has endeavored, so far as in him lay, to destroy any possible claim that McLeod or Stewart might have on the Government, for if his statements are true I cannot see how the Government can possibly give it any consideration. The hon. gentleman says that he has private information to show that the evidence given was frightfully exaggerated, but I think he might at least have had the generosity, and the fairness to have given the name of his secret informer in order that we might ascertain whether his statements were true or false—whether he was credible or not. I think that he might have been generous enough to have taken this course instead of giving it to the House haphazard, without knowing whether the evidence was exaggerated or not. The hon. gentleman says that this question was made a political hue-and-cry in the Island, but he knows himself that I never opened my lips during the whole campaign about this question. He knows that in a thousand and one discussions which took place there, I might have made political capital of this matter, but as it was sub judice I never mentioned it.

Mr. BRECKEN. I did not say that the hon. gentleman had done so. I never uttered any such statement, because I do not know.

Mr. DAVIES. You were there every time I spoke.

Mr. BRECKEN. When the hon. gentleman speaks of my want of generosity he says nothing which surprises me, because I am so accustomed to hearing him speak in the same way. I have just as generous and disinterested feeling towards McLeod as he has, although he is politically opposed to me. But I repeat that political prejudice and political bias permeated the case, as it was managed by the Opposition outside the courts of justice, from beginning to end. With regard to the statement which I made before, I can only say as an honorable man and a gentleman, that if he doubts my word, let him come to me to-morrow and I will convince him of the truth of what I said, by a man who heard the statement from the lips of the man who gave the evidence, and I know the man's name. I said to my informant that that man was a Conservative. He said, you are wrong, Brecken, he is a renegade Conservative; he is no judge of railways. But I heard that man give a statement of the matter, and I heard his statement in court.

Mr. CASEY. I would just say that my knowledge of this case has been acquired chiefly, but I cannot help discussing a few of the points that have been raised. The hon. Minister of Railways has made a strong point of the agitation which existed in the Island on account of the state of the Railway. He said it went so far that, what he calls a brutal press, threatened to arraign Mr. McNab for murder if an accident occurred, and the hon. Minister of Railways asks us to believe that this tremendous agitation was got up about nothing. Why, Sir, he was too clever, when he made that statement; he proved a little too much when he talked about the agitation that existed in regard to the state of that road; he proved that there must have been cause for the excitement. If he expects us to believe that the press of Prince Edward Island were excited without cause, he wishes us to believe a statement that is "too thin," even from the Minister of Railways. Now, Sir, in opposition to the unsupported assertion of the Minister of Railways, that that road was in good order, we have the decision of a Court that the road was in bad order; and we are naturally inclined to believe the decision of these Judges, who heard the evidence, and who are better qualified to decide whether that evidence was perjured than the hon. Minister of Railways himself, who is an interested party. He says we should not believe the statements of my hon. friend from Queen's (Mr. Davies), because he was a hired advocate in the case; but if we are not to believe the statements of a hired advocate, what are we to think of the statements of a principal? If the weight to be attached to his statements depended upon the loudness, the temper, the anger, the vehemence with which they were uttered, they would certainly bear great weight. We are asked to put out of sight the decision of a judicial tribunal and accept the frothy, vehement statements of one of the principals, who was interested in securing a verdict against the plaintiff, just as much as the plaintiff was interested in securing a verdict against the Government. Suppose we do accept the unsupported statements of the defendants in this case, and admit that Mr. McNab was as efficient a man as could be found; we have the fact that, with an efficient manager, an accident occurred on the road. Now, an accident does not occur without some reason; it does not occur if everything is in good order. The inference is perfectly clear that the road must have been out of order; and whose fault was it, if not the fault of the manager? It was the fault of the hon. Minister of Railways himself. He has described in touching terms, the state of mind of this poor Mr. McNab, when he thought that life was lost as the result of mismanagement. I can appreciate his feelings when he thought that the responsibility of this accident rested upon his shoulders, when the real responsibility rested on the shoulders of the hon. Minister of Railways, who, by his mean policy, was starving out the Intercolonial Railway and the Prince Edward Island Railway, in order to produce a false appearance of economy. The hon. gentleman said that a political agitation arose out of this matter. I should not consider it unlikely that there would be a political feeling against the Government, which held the lives of the people so cheap, as to leave that road in the condition they did. That was bad enough; but when the Government descending to the meanness of refusing to acknowledge their responsibility for the accidents that occurred, there will be a political agitation, and I can assure the hon. Minister of Railways, that it will not be confined to Prince Edward Island, but will ring through the whole Dominion. He will find it even cheaper to have acquiesced in the judgment of the court and paid the damages than to bring such a hornet's nest about his ears as he will by the course he is now following. Since he has appealed to a technicality, and that appeal has been successful, there is no judge of what should be paid in cases of this kind except the hon. Minister himself. The hon. Minister of Railways is the judge of what is right; and what a judge! Have we not heard his judicial remarks here to-night? Have we not heard with what impartiality and fairness he has declared that witnesses had been got to perjure themselves in order that the case might go against the Government? He said that the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies) had got a man to perjure himself. We can understand with what confidence the friends of those whose lives are lost or those whose limbs are broken on the Government railways will feel in a man, who speaking in his judicial capacity, can use language such as the hon. Minister of Railways has used to-night. Sir, if anything were needed to convince the House and the country that it was absolutely necessary to remove such obstacles as appear to exist to making the Government liable, as it is in justice and decency in matters of this kind, it would be the remarks of the hon. Minister of Railways, for they were remarks which no man, who wishes to act honestly and decently in matters of this kind, would have ventured to address to the House. I cannot conceive of any reason for those remarks except the reason he has imputed to his opponent. I cannot conceive that he has any spite against the poor people who have been injured on Government roads, but I imagine that he has some spite against those who have pleaded the cases of these people, and he has allowed political animosity to influence him in a matter of compensation for a hopeless case of disablement, caused by the carelessness and inefficiency of his own officers.

Mr. BRECKEN.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman explain the item of $5,000 for the Windsor Branch and $500 for the Canadian Pacific Railway?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The $5,000 is required for the maintenance of the Windsor Branch. By the arrangement with the company the Government receives one-third of the gross receipts of the road. This expenditure will be covered to a large extent by the amount received from the third of the receipts. The item of $500 is to pay some accounts incurred while the line was operated by the Government.

322. Canals..... $34,745.14

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There are $20,930 required for maintenance of the Welland Canal, over and above what is required for the year to the 1st July, and the amount taken by the vote for that service. There are other amounts required similarly on the other canals to make up the balance. I have all the particulars of this proposed expenditure, and they are simply those incidental to the maintenance of canals.

Resolutions to be reported.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and (at 1:20 o'clock a.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

MONDAY, 14th May, 1883.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

REPORT.

The following Report was laid on the Table:

General Report of the Minister of Public Works, from the 30th June, 1867, to the 1st of July, 1882, accompanied by balances of Appendices to said Report, from 1867 to 1882. —(Sir Hector Langevin).

THE CASE OF MR. HÉBERT.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I desire to know whether the Government has had a report from the hon. Minister of Justice, in the case of Hébert. Since that time, the Government will have learned that Mr. Hébert has been found guilty and condemned to $200 damages and costs; and, therefore, as he is in the service of the Government, on the Intercolonial Railway, I hope the Government will take notice of the fact, and give Mr. Hébert the same treatment that he has received from the court of justice. I do not think he ought to be retained in that position any longer.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will see the hon. Minister of Justice, and give the hon. gentleman an answer to-morrow.

ORANGE DEMONSTRATION AT OTTAWA.

Mr. LANDRY (Translation). Mr. Speaker: Before the Orders of the Day are called, I wish to call the attention of the Government to a matter which is considered especially important to those members who do not belong to the same religion as the hon. member from Hastings (Mr. White). Friday or Saturday last a large meeting was held in the city of Ottawa, and at this meeting the following address was presented:

"ADDRESS:

"John White, Esq., M.P.,

"DEAR SIR AND BROTHER,—Your friends in the Ottawa district, comprising the counties of Russell, Ottawa, Carleton and city of Ottawa, cannot allow you to leave them without expressing to you their heartfelt admiration of the noble stand made by you in your place in Parliament in defence of their rights while the Orange Incorporation Bill was under discussion. We would have felt deeply mortified had the Bill been withdrawn (as was the desire of some of those to whose charge the Grand Lodge had entrusted the matter), and we owe it to your steadfast adherence to the will of the Grand Lodge, as expressed by resolution, that such a mortification was spared us. It will be always a source of the greatest satisfaction to us that the said Bill was brought to a vote, and that thereby we were enabled to ascertain who our friends are, and to prove the want of sincerity of the professions of toleration of those of the Roman Catholic faith, and who have always been treated with so much moderation by members of the Order. It will ever be a proud remembrance for you to look back to the exciting occasion and to feel that by your forbearance and moderation, in the face of the ravings of bigotry, intolerance and ignorance, that you spoke no word that could be tortured to appear as injurious to the cause of which you were the honored champion; that while you undauntedly upheld our rights, you were careful not to attack the principles of any others. We know that though for the moment we have been denied the commonest rights by an intolerant and ungrateful combination, that the great principles of which the Orange Order is the exponent are eternal and must prevail.

"The glorious principles of the Revolution of 1698 are too thoroughly imbedded in the hearts of Orangemen for them ever to sanction the attempt to deprive any body of men of their rights; but while we are careful not to encroach upon the rights of others, we will not suffer any tampering with our own, and we will teach our intolerant maligners that our sainted ancestors did not shed their hearts' blood in vain at the battle of the Boyne. To us the memory of the heroes who defended the walls of Derry, and who smote the minions of Rome at Aughrim, shall be as an example, and we will emulate their deeds, not in shedding blood, but by the arts of peace, in demanding our rights and taking such a stand on political questions as will enable us to obtain these rights respectively of party. While our sympathies have hitherto been largely with one political party, we shall hereafter be more independent towards both of the great political parties, and give our support only in favor of those who are willing to emancipate us from the thralldom of Rome. We shall ever remember that we are Protestants first, and that no party can secure our support that will deny us our rights.

"It being the duty of every true Orangeman to aid and defend the loyal subjects, of every religious persuasion, in the enjoyment of their constitutional rights, we have been ever ready to grant to the Roman Catholics such measures as they deemed necessary for the freedom of the exercise of their religion and the education of their children. We have, in many instances, exhibited our moderation in electing them in purely Protestant constituencies, and in all ways have sought to live together in amity and peace. And how have we been met? By a display of bigotry and intolerance that is a disgrace to this enlightened age. From the proceedings in Parliament on the Orange Incorporation Bill we have learned a bitter, but salutary lesson, and one that will bear fruit in due season. While we disclaim an intolerant spirit, we declare that henceforth the Roman Catholics must be prepared to reap as they have sown, and that if we are such disturbers of the peace as they declare us to be, we will for the future abstain from voting for them, and so deprive them of the power to mortify us by refusing to grant to us the same rights that we have always cheerfully accorded to them. Trusting that you may long be spared to take a foremost part in the council of our beloved Order, and that it may always receive the benefit of your sound and mature advice, we subscribe ourselves on behalf of the brethren.

"Yours in the bonds of faith, hope and charity."

Among the signatures he who has displayed the most charity is one named Edward C. Barber, who, I am informed, is an employé of the Government.

Mr. WHITE (Hastings). Read all the names.

Mr. LANDRY. I do not know them all. I know one of them, and, if I am well informed, he is an employé of the Government.

Mr. SPEAKER. The reading of extracts from newspapers is not in order, unless the hon. member is to follow it up by some motion, and then the practice is to have these papers read at the Table by the Clerk. The mere reading of newspapers by hon. members is not a practice that ought to be encouraged.

Mr. LANDRY. I will make a motion.

Mr. SPEAKER. The motion must be pertinent to the matter read from the newspaper submitted to the House.

Mr. LANDRY. The motion will be pertinent.

"After the cessation of the most vociferous cheering, Mr. White replied as follows:—

"WORTHY SIR AND BROTHERS,—It is with much pleasure, upon all occasions that I meet with my Orange brethren in this or any part of Canada; but I can assure you that I am unworthy of this grand reception. This is not the first time that I have been so kindly received by the Orangemen of this section of the country. But a few years ago I met with you, when I was presented with a most handsome

Orange collar and address. To-night I meet you again, but under different circumstances, and I am glad to meet you. In speaking of the Incorporation Bill and the influences that were brought to bear with the view of withdrawing it, he said no, he could not disgrace the Bill and the Orangemen by such a proceeding. He came from the wrong part of Ireland to be so easily led away from so important a duty. He was born in Donegal, and had sprung from a family that had stood the siege of Derry, and had proved their determination by enduring the hardships of one of the most terrible battles ever recorded, by living on horse flesh, rats, &c., sooner than surrendering. They had to blame themselves for not having the Act of Incorporation. It was the duty of all to stand true to their church and families. There is no use finding fault with members of the House of Commons. He asked them 'Had they been true to themselves?' As far as the Bill was concerned, he refused to take hold of it at first, because he was not a speaker, and thought it should have been given to others better qualified; on that account he refused, but was subsequently encouraged to take hold of it as the committee felt it would fall through if he did not. He then made reference to the postponements of the measure while before the House; he said he was not to blame for it. The Most Worshipful Grand Master, Mr. Merrick, M.P.P., had, after its first reading, asked him to withdraw it, but he (White) would not. He asked the members to not censure the Grand Master yet, till he had an opportunity of giving his reasons for so doing, which opportunity would be afforded at St. Catharines this summer at the Grand Lodge meeting. He (White) had been offered in the House of Commons another Bill, but he was determined at the outset to accept no compromise. The Orange Bill had been put into his hands, and he would have that second reading, so as to know who were his friends and who were his enemies. He asked where was the Bill—the compromise—which was promised them, in the Commons to-day? He alluded to Sir Alexander Campbell's Bill introduced in the Senate to relieve the disabilities of Odd-fellows, the Orange Society, &c., in the Province of Quebec. A Committee of seven Roman Catholics and five Protestants had been put on that Bill, and he asked, why did it fall through? Also that other Bill of Mr. McCaul's had been laid on the shelf. Had he (the speaker) given way to the intrigues of those persons, where would they be to-day? Their enemies would have laughed at them and sneered at them, and said John White had taken the dirty shilling. He said they had got along well without incorporation, and he for one would never surrender the word 'Orange' from the Bill if they were never to get incorporation. (Loud cheers.) Speaking of societies and their secrecy, he said no church or society under the sun was so secret as the Roman Catholic Church. One of its members could take a life, rob, destroy or commit any crime, and then go to his priest and confess without fear of the law being informed. It was a disgrace to Quebec Province to claim that a loyal and religious society like this was illegal. He drew their attention to the fact that they (the Orangemen) had received no support from a Roman Catholic excepting friend Hawkins, who is now slurred at in consequence. Every Orangemen and Protestant should respect Mr. Hawkins. He spoke of the dissatisfaction prevailing in Toronto and the rumored formation of a third party. He said there could be but two parties in this country, and for Orangemen to stand true to those men who stand true to them, and never mind his party. Speaking of the proposed abolition of the French tongue from the House of Commons, he said Orangemen always adhered to the laws of the country. That right has been acceded to them by the Treaty of Paris, and was therefore law. The French-Canadians love the French language as taught them by their mothers, and let them have it. Again their Orange brethren in Toronto proposed a new party to do away with the Separate Schools. Separation from the Public Schools have done the Protestants good, therefore he would let them stay as they were, and would assist them to get educated in that manner, sooner than have none at all, which would be the case had they not separation and were compelled to contribute to the Public Schools. Going back to the Bill he defended some of those M.P.'s who abstained from taking part in the debate because they were not speakers, but did all they could with their influence and their votes. He here narrated a little anecdote of an old lady in the South during the war, who came out with a broom stick on her shoulders, and upon the officer informing that he could cut her in pieces for so doing, said: 'Yes, but I want to show which side I am on.' It was the same with some of their friends in the Commons. He spoke of Mr. Langevin, and said he favored the church of Rome more than the prosperity of the Dominion of Canada. He appealed to the young men present to be loyal to the flag of Britain. Referring to friend Curran, of Montreal, he said it was all that he could do to keep himself on the floor of the Commons from using harsh language in reply to the unbecoming, ungenerous, unmanly utterances of Curran. He said that if the Battle of the Boyne is to be fought over again in Montreal, he believed it would be, as lately expressed by the Rev. Dr. Wilde, in Toronto, with the same results—right against wrong. He said he and other Orangemen had made mistakes in the late and former elections, and cited one mistake as being that of opposing Mr. Bethune when running against Dr. Bergin. He believed that had Mr. Bethune, although a Reformer, been in the House during this Session, the Bill would have been carried to-day. He said Mr. Bethune was one of the truest friends they had in this country, and they well knew him to be one of the most able and eloquent. Many Conservative members had asked and begged of him not to ruin them, but he told them he would stand by the Order first. Another mistake was that of assisting to elect a Frenchman in Russell and an Irish Roman Catholic (Mr. Baskerville) in Ottawa city, and said he was now ashamed of his actions; he hoped the Orangemen would forgive him for asking them to vote for Baskerville. There are very few Hawkines. One Roman Catholic member of the House whose name he did not wish to mention, said to him privately: 'How can we vote for this Bill when the priest says he has power from the Pope to damn those of his constituencies who dare vote for a candidate for parliamentary honors who would support such a measure.' If the Conservatives would not stand true to us, then let us be Reformers. He likened them, at the present day, as being between the devil and the deep sea—the Roman Catholics and the Reformers. He kindly praised the Reformers who supported the Bill. He believed Mr. Blake had made a mistake in voting against the second reading. It was, at that time, within his grasp to have the united Orange vote of Ontario. Speaking of Orange loyalty, he defied the world to say that they were disloyal in any country in which they lived. He thanked God they could not say they (the Orangemen) were disloyal in any country, and asked: were they Orangemen who were creating disturbance in France, Italy, Spain, the United States, or in any other country? No. He exhorted them to band together more closely. In his first election he received two Roman Catholic votes, next seven, and at last it stretched up to thirty-five. All liberal-minded Protestants were satisfied they should have this Bill. He would always be true to the Orange society, and related some touching little incidents in his young days by way of advice from his mother. He was under a deep sense of obligation to the Ottawa brethren, and hoped at some time to meet in that Grand Lodge above which the Rev. Bro. George preaches about.

"BAND—'PROTESTANT BOYS.'

"The chair hoped the brethren would remember the remarks of Bro. White, and at future elections vote for the man. Roman Catholics hated Protestants, but he thought they hated the Orange a little more.

"Mr. Scott, M.P., then addressed the brethren, and made mention of the formation of the first Orange lodge in Manitoba, it being organized in an old schooner by the officers and men of the 1st Ontario Rifles. He believed that within the space of ten years, through the progress of the Anglo-Saxon race, that the French language would become extinct in Manitoba. He was glad to hear the brethren had won the case at the Court of Appeal.

"Several other brethren addressed the meeting in response to the toasts made, among them being Messrs. F. Clemow, W. Porter, Dawson, Jas. Clarke, E. C. Barber, &c.

"The meeting came to a close about 1:30 a.m., with cheers for Bro. John White and the Queen, and all joining in singing the National Anthem."

I want to call the attention of the Government to these facts. I know the Government is not at all—

Mr. MITCHELL. Partisan.

Mr. LANDRY. Not at all responsible for the utterances of the hon. member for Hastings, nor for those of the hon. member for Winnipeg; but one thing strikes me, that which was delivered by one of the employés of the Government, and really we want to know what are the views of the Government on the question. I remember in a similar case, when Mr. Huntington made a speech in Argenteuil, the matter was brought before the House, and different members gave their views on the subject with great satisfaction to all parties. I suppose in this case a similar thing will be done. We want to know whether the sentiments proffered by the hon. member for Hastings are those which should find place in this House.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman proceeded to read the extracts after I called his attention to the fact that the reading should be followed by a motion founded on the matter he brought forward. These papers, if they should be read at all, should have been read by the Clerk at the Table. It is an inconvenient practice that extracts and papers should be read by members. When there are any extracts to read containing any observations or reflections on any members of this House with regard to their action, they should be read by the Clerk at the Table, and then followed by a motion. As there is no motion in this case, I must call the Orders of the Day.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I think the dignity of the House has been infringed on. The hon. member had declared his intention to propose a motion.

Mr. SPEAKER. There is no question before the House.

SUPPLY—ROYAL ACADEMY OF ARTS.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee.

Mr. JAURIER. I beg to call the attention of the House to the following memorial, presented to the Government by the Royal Canadian Academy of Arts.

"TO HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL IN COUNCIL :

"The memorial of the Royal Canadian Academy of Arts respectfully sheweth :

"That the meeting of the Conference at which the foundation was laid of the Confederation of the Provinces constituting the Dominion of Canada, is an event of such importance in the annals of the country as to make it desirable that it should be commemorated in a painting which would present not only the assemblage, but authentic portraits of the distinguished statesmen who took part in the deliberations.

"That such a painting would not only be a work of present interest to the people of Canada, but that the interest will be an ever increasing one, as the fabric of Confederation, the very foundation of which the picture will commemorate, continues to assume still larger and grander proportions, in the extension and consolidation of British North American nationality.

"That every year which is allowed to elapse adds to the difficulty of executing such a work. Already, in the sixteen years since Confederation, several of the actors have passed from the scene.

"That an opportunity now offers for the execution of this work in the presence here of Mr. Harris, a Canadian artist of ability, who has returned from prosecuting his studies and practising his art in Europe, and who is fully competent to paint such a picture.

"The entrusting of such a commission to a Canadian would be an encouragement to the whole profession of Art in Canada. Such encouragement is needed ; for the want of it our country has repeatedly been denuded of its most promising artists, who have been drawn away by the recognition of their merits abroad, and other countries are now enriched by the product of their labor.

"Wherefore, we humbly pray that a commission may be entrusted to the artist named for the immediate prosecution of this very desirable work.

"Signed on behalf of the Royal Canadian Academy of Arts.

"L. R. O'BRIEN,
"President.

"OTTAWA, April 28th, 1883."

This memorial, as I am informed, has been in the hands of the Government for some time past ; but the Royal Canadian Academy of Arts have not so far received any answer from the Government. We can all well understand that, perhaps, His Excellency would feel some delicacy in supporting the request for financial aid to a project in which he has himself taken so prominent a part. But believing, as I do, that the idea expressed in this memorial is a good one, I will now beg to bring the matter before the House, with the hope that the prayer set forth in the memorial will receive the unanimous approbation of the House of all shades of opinion. Last year we commenced in this city what we were pleased to call the Canadian Art Gallery, and which we intend shall become in time our National Picture Gallery. Everyone of us will agree that on the walls of that gallery it is very desirable to have pictures illustrating Canadian history—the whole Canadian history—from Jacques Cartier's time to the epoch of Confederation, at all events. Confederation is the last of our great historical events, and a great event it certainly was, for this country. In fact, it is no extravagance to say it was a revolution, a peaceful revolution, but no less effective for all that. Now, it is well known that that measure, as well as two or three other changes of a similar nature, did not at the outset receive the unanimous support of all the people of this country. It was attacked and resisted in many quarters ; and I am free to say that in the Province from whence I came, the men with whom I have been associated were at first hostile to Confederation—not hostile to the principles of Confederation—but to the scheme as it was then proposed ; but hon. gentlemen in this House know that those men after that scheme had become law, submitted with good grace to what had taken place, and loyally contributed to make it a success. I am sure that many hon. members of this House will remember, and fondly remember, that one of the men who most heartily and cheerfully accepted the new order of things, though he had been just as sincerely opposed to Confederation while the question was a debatable one, was our late lamented friend the hon. Mr. Holton. Now, in the same spirit, not only to be faithful to the principle of Confederation, but to give it all the illustration in our power, it seems to me that the painting of that historic scene at which the basis of Confederation was laid, would be a highly desirable and very popular work, and it is for that reason that I bring this question before the House. It is not simply because I approve of this project, and think that the event which gave birth to Confederation should be commemorated, but because I think it should be commemorated by a Canadian artist, that I take great pleasure in bringing this matter to the attention of the House and Government. I am anxious to give to our Canadian artists all the encouragement we can give them as individuals and as a Parliament. We are not deficient in artistic talent, I believe ; on the contrary, that this country is extremely prolific of artistic talent. Unfortunately, too few of those talents bloom into full development, because of the obstacles which they encounter, and the little encouragement they receive in this country. But, notwithstanding all the obstacles which beset them, we are proud to remember that in almost every branch of art we have distinguished artists whose talents have been consecrated to the best uses. I understand Mr. Harris, who is named in this petition, is one of them. Mr. Harris has prosecuted his studies for some time in Paris, where, I believe, he stands very high in his profession. We have seen some of his pictures exhibited in the Library, and although I am not myself a competent critic of paintings, they have been pronounced of great excellence by men who are capable of judging. We have also all been glad to hear that four Canadian artists have had their works admitted at the Paris Salon, and of those four one is a young lady who bears a name already illustrious in this country ; two others are also young ladies, daughters of a gentleman who was formerly a popular and respected member of this House. In another branch of art, that of sculpture, all those who have seen the model for the statue of Sir George E. Cartier, have been glad to know that it was the work of a Canadian artist, who carried off the palm of success against competition all over the world ; and everyone of us must come to the conclusion that the achievement of Mr. Hébert is certainly one of which all Canadians may feel proud. In another branch of art, in music, it is a source of pride to us to remember that one of the three great singers of the age is a Canadian lady. Now, these are not the only artistic talents we have amongst us ; I am sure we have many others who would make their mark if they had the same opportunity. We all know, doubtless, of some young gentleman endowed with artistic talents, but who, for the want of encouragement, has been obliged to devote himself to some other employment in order to earn his living. Now, I, for one, am desirous to give all possible encouragement to young artists, and for this reason I have a peculiar pleasure in bringing this petition before the House. There is one paragraph which seems to me to be sadly true ; it is this :

"Such encouragement is needed ; for the want of it, our country has repeatedly been denuded of its most promising artists, who have been drawn away by the recognition of their merits abroad, and other countries are now enriched by the product of their labor."

Mr. Harris has finished his studies abroad, and has come back to our shores, and I, for one, am anxious to give him such encouragement as we can. If the Government, under these circumstances, think it desirable to bring in a small appropriation of $3,000 or $4,000 for carrying out the idea here expressed, I have reason to believe that it will meet with the unanimous approval of this House.

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker: It is with much pleasure that I second the proposition of the hon. member for Quebec East. That hon. gentleman has placed his case before the House in such a graceful and appropriate manner that little remains to be said concerning it. But I have been requested by a number of gentlemen, both inside and outside this House, to say a few words on this matter, which they conceive to be of importance to the inhabitants of this Dominion. It has been suggested that in the youth of this country, under the very spring-time of the life of the Canadian people, some attempt should be made to perpetuate the memory of an event which may be called the birthday of the Dominion. It has been suggested that a Canadian artist should be selected to preserve and embalm, in an historical picture, the very form and appearance of the men who, animated by a lofty patriotism and a far-seeing statesmanship, conceived and carried into execution the idea of building up, on the northern part of this continent, a great British power, which, while cherishing Canadian sentiment and aspirations, would preserve the laws, traditions, and institutions of the Empire, and be animated by an undying love for the old lands beyond the sea. The event which it is proposed to perpetuate is the meeting of that Quebec Conference, which was held on the 10th of October, 1864. On that occasion the foundation of the Dominion were broadly and deeply laid and cemented with the love, loyalty and affection of a gallant and generous people. We have the actors and the theatre on which was performed this great historical drama. We want to delineate and preserve them, so that they may be held in everlasting remembrance. Perhaps I may be permitted to give a brief historical resumé of the events which preceded this meeting. I entered political life in 1863, and I well remember the fierce political conflicts which were of almost daily occurrence. There were giants in those days, and the picked men of the Canadian people were selected to lead the assault and maintain the defence. Nearly every week witnessed a vote of want of confidence. So evenly were the great parties balanced, so skilled were the leaders in parliamentary tactics, that constitutional Government seemed almost impossible. You can imagine how gallant was the attack and how desperate the defence, when George Brown, Sandfield Macdonald, A. A. Dorion and Wm. McDougall, and many other gallant gentlemen and able statesmen, held the fort; while John A. Macdonald, G. E. Cartier, A. T. Galt and D'Arcy McGee led the stormers. In the main, the warfare was conducted on generous and chivalrous principles. It was at times like the contest between the French and English Guards at Fontenoy: "Messieurs of the French Guards will please fire first!" At other times, I am free to confess, a more irregular and guerilla system of warfare prevailed. But when the battle was over our bugles sang truce, and we smoked the pipe of peace and passed about the wine cups, as did the French and English soldiers at the battle of Busaco. This state of things could not last, and it became absolutely necessary that a change should take place. It was under these circumstances that the great coalition between the Liberal and Conservative parties took place. At this time the idea of a great Confederation of the Provinces of British North America loomed up as a possible solution of a very difficult problem. This idea originated with the statesmen of the Maritime Provinces, who held a meeting at Charlottetown for the purpose of forming a federation of the Provinces on the sea-board. The leading Liberal and Conservative Canadian statesmen attended this convention, and the result was the great meeting of Provincial delegates at Quebec, on the 10th of October, 1864. A writer of this period tells us that the place of meeting was one of historic interest—the time, the men, and the circumstances were peculiar. Beneath the shadow of Cape Diamond, on the ruins of the old Castle of St. Louis, with the broad St. Lawrence stretching away in front, the Plains of Abraham in sight, and the St. Charles winding its silvery way through, seems replete with the memory of Old France. It was at this grand old fortress that the toilers of the sea and the toilers of the land made their solemn compact—a compact which bound them to stand shoulder to shoulder, and hold this lone outpost of the Empire against all odds. It was on the ruins of the old Chateau of St. Louis that the Englishmen and Frenchmen struck their hands together, not in deadly, but in friendly rivalry, to decide the destinies and mould the future of the northern part of this continent. Ninety years before, when the first Congress of the thirteen States met at Philadelphia, it was in defiance of the authority and of the country from which their people sprung. Now, the delegates from the British North American Provinces met with the full sanction of their Sovereign and the Imperial Parliament. In their deliberations, and the forming of their Constitution, they would have the benefit of the experience of the working of that Constitution, which, under conditions somewhat similar to their own as to country, institutions and people, had carried the United States through half a century of triumphant progress. It would be for them to avoid those causes of dissension which had created the then existing troubles of the United States. This great scheme was at last fully realized; Nova Scotia and New Brunswick joined the Union, the Great Lone Land and British Columbia became parts of the Confederation, Prince Edward Island threw in her fortunes with the Dominion, and at last Newfoundland was the only colony without the pale. Lord Monck opened the first Dominion Parliament at Ottawa, November 8th, 1867. In his speech on the occasion His Lordship gave utterance to the following remarkable words: "I congratulate you on the legislative sanction which has been given by the Imperial Parliament to the Act of Union, under the provisions of which we are now assembled, and which has laid the foundation of a new nationality that, I trust and believe, will ere long extend its bounds from the Atlantic to the Pacific Ocean." Well, the prophecy of His Excellency has been realized; the Dominion of Canada extends from ocean to ocean. The Minister of Railways, in his speech the other night, assured us that at no distant day the railway system would unite with an iron band the Atlantic and the Pacific. Well, the New Jerusalem, the North-West, dawns upon our vision. If one side of the statements concerning that El-Dorado of the North-West be correct, we have in that country what Dr. Johnson said of Threal's Brewery: "The potentiality of wealth before the dreams of avarice." But we have also in the older Provinces, notably in the county which I have the honor to represent, agricultural, mineral, lumbering and other resources, which will compare favorably with those of any part of the Dominion. And I trust that while we will do all in our power to advance the interests of the younger members of our political family, we will not forget the older Provinces. Who can forget that first meeting of the Dominion Parliament? It was composed of the foremost men, the very flower of the Dominion. In the front rank, literally the head and front of the offending, stood the right hon. the leader of the Government, who then, as now, stood first in the Councils of his Sovereign, and foremost in the hearts of his countrymen. I am certain that we are all pleased to see that, after an arduous Session, he still maintains that singular statecraft and political prescience which characterized him in the days of yore. Next to him stood his colleague and brother-in-arms, the gallant Sir George E. Cartier, who represented so well the gallant and chivalrous race to which he belonged, and whose memory will always be cherished by a large majority of the Canadian people. There stood, also, the hon. Minister of Public Works, who was then, as now, the indefatigable worker, the kindly and genial gentleman, and the able statesman. Nova Scotia sent us a magnificent contingent. First was the hon. Minister of Railways, who came to us with no supporters from his native Province; he was backed up only by his own matchless eloquence and dauntless courage. We all remember how he was ringed round by his abler countrymen, and how sternly he fought the fight and kept his faith in the cause of Union and progress, until Union perched upon his banners. There was also that grand old statesman, Joseph Howe, of whom Canada and Nova Scotia may well feel proud. He came to us in the evening of his days, somewhat broken by his long services in the cause of constitutional Government. New Brunswick sent us men of great ability, among them the hon. Minister of Finance, who by his practical ability and profound knowledge of economical questions has done so much towards developing the resources of the Dominion. There also came the hon. member from Northumberland, Peter Mitchell, the leader of a great party, destined, perhaps, at no distant period, to exercise a vast influence, but which at present is more distinguished for intelligence and genius than its numbers. That hon. gentleman, as we are all aware, built up a magnificent department, which has been of incalculable benefit to the country. It is to be regretted that, while always foremost in the fray and fight, he was always late at the division of the spoil. Then, we recollect the gallant Irishman, the brilliant orator, the true poet, and great statesman, the late lamented D'Arcy McGee, who went out from the light of this room one night, after delivering a speech replete with patriotic sentiments, into the darkness to his doom. We had also many other able men, some of whom I see before me, but many of whom sleep that sleep that knows no waking; and I think it would be well that the appearances of those men should be perpetuated by a Canadian artist. Therefore it is that I have most earnestly supported the proposition of the hon. member from Quebec East. We have been told that there are certain ideas which preside over the human intelligence. These are the ideas of industry, justice, religion, the beautiful and the true. In a young land like ours, where nearly every man is engaged in the fierce race for wealth, or the active struggle for existence, we have little time to study the beautiful. Lord Roseberry said the other day that this was the age of the bees, and not of the wasps. The whole land is teeming with life, energy and activity. The hot lava of youth courses through the veins of industrial and social bodies. Under those circumstances, it is very pleasing to find some men who step aside out of the dust and turmoil of political and commercial warfare, and devote themselves to the study of the good, the true and the beautiful. I believe that our Canadian artists are worthy of all honor and respect. I am satisfied that there are among them men of genius, whose works will reflect credit on their native land. I think that those men deserve every encouragement which the Government and general public can afford. Even if they were not men of marked ability, as a Canadian I would be disposed to stand by and encourage them, saying, as Touchstone did of Audrey: "They are all our own." I have much pleasure in seconding the proposition of the hon. member for Quebec East.

Mr. MITCHELL. Might I ask the hon. gentleman, as I asked the hon. member for Quebec East, to speak little louder. I myself, in common with most of the hon. gentlemen around me, failed to be able to understand what motion he was making. May I ask now what motion is before the Chair? And I take this opportunity of saying, I do think that when I ask any person addressing the Chair on an important motion before the House to speak a little louder he should do so, in order that we might know and intelligently consider any proposition made to the Chair.

Mr. SPEAKER. The motion now before the House is that I do now leave the Chair, and that the House go into Committee of Supply.

Mr. MITCHELL. A very proper motion. I second it.

Mr. LAURIER. I am sorry that I could not be heard by the hon. gentleman. I regret that I cannot speak any louder, as I am suffering just now from an affection of the throat, which prevents me speaking louder.

Mr. PATTERSON (Brant). I want to say one word. I suppose that my hon. friend from Ottawa county in enumerating the principal characters which took part in this great scheme has omitted to mention the name of one of these gentlemen, which I at any rate hold in very high regard—one who sleeps the sleep that the hon. gentleman spoke so nicely about with reference to another gentleman. I am sure that it was simply an oversight on his part, as he was one of the most prominent actors in that matter—I refer to the hon. George Brown, of course.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is really one of those occasions in which the asperities of politics are forgotten, and the amenities of social and political life are remembered. I think that the House must have listened with great pleasure and satisfaction to the remarks which were made by the hon. gentleman who sits opposite to me, and by my hon. friend from Ottawa county, who so gracefully seconded his proposition. It is true that this subject was laid before the Government a little while ago, and that no answer has been given to it; but I take it, from the remarks made by those hon. gentlemen and from the general consent which their suggestions have received from the House, that we may conclude that it is the desire of the House that this commemorative painting should be prepared by a Canadian artist, and should adorn, or, at all events, be present in the halls of the country. My hon. friend from Quebec East has truly said, that Confederation was, in fact, a revolution—peaceful it is true, but still a revolution, and it is one of the gratifications which Canadians in the future will have, when they read the history of their country, to know that so great a revolution, altering the Constitution, and changing the position of four scattered and separate Provinces into a position of a proud and strong Dominion, was carried without a blow being struck, without a drop of blood being shed, and without life being endangered. It was my pleasure to call attention in the first Confederation meeting at Quebec, to the marked difference between this revolution in Canada and the one which took place in the thirteen colonies. In 1864, we had nearly the same population as the thirteen colonies, had when they severed themselves by force from the Mother Country; and it was a remarkable thing that, approaching to 4,000,000 inhabitants living under the same Government, under the descendant of the same Sovereign—the first resolution which was adopted at Quebec was this: That the four Provinces should be one united country under the perpetual Sovereignty of Her Majesty and her descendants. Of course, as in every other great change, we were not unanimous in arriving at the present Constitution in all its details. Of course, it would be impossible to suppose in a free-thought country like this, that we should have been unanimous—unanimity would have been a proof of want of freedom. I cordially appreciate the remarks of my hon. friend from Quebec (Mr. Laurier) when he says that those who opposed Confederation had cordially and loyally accepted the decision of the majority of the people of Canada, or the Parliament of Canada, and of the Parliament of England. As he truly said, one of the leaders of the opposition to the new Constitution in its details, and in some of its principles, was a distinguished statesman from the Province of Quebec, my great friend, though always my political opponent, Sir Aimé Dorion, the distinguished Chief Justice of the Province of Quebec. No man acted more loyally under the new Constitution which was adopted than he did, as was shown on his entering into the Government and assuming the responsibilities of Government under the new Constitution, and, whether on this side of the House or on the other side of the House, doing his very best, exercising his great abilities to carry out loyally and faithfully in practice, the principles of the Constitution which was laid down in the British North America Act of 1867. I am sure it was a mere accidental omission on the part of the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Wright) that he did not allude to the merging of all political parties, of all political dissent, of all political asperities for the good of the country in 1864. No man entered into the scheme more strongly, more zealously, and more earnestly, than the hon. George Brown; and everybody that remembers that hon. gentleman, must remember that whatever he did, he did with all his might. He entered into this scheme with all his great energy—then at its height—with all his physical strength, and all his mental and intellectual power; he entered into the work manfully, and he associated with him two other gentlemen of the Liberal Party, the present Premier of Ontario, and the hon. William Macdougall; and I must say that I never had three colleagues belonging to my own party, of the same political proclivities as myself, who worked more honestly or manfully carrying out at Quebec those resolutions which formed the basis and foundation of the Confederation under which we now live. Sir, it was a great event, for good or for evil. Here were four Provinces to be formed into one, in the first place, and, with statesmanlike provision, the conference entered into the work, not for the purpose of only uniting those four Provinces, not for the simple purpose of curing the anarchy—the almost perilous, hazardous anarchy which existed in the Old Province of Canada—but they entered into it with the far-seeing design of raising on this continent an auxiliary England, similar to all its principles, and in most of its practices, to the Mother Country; to unite the whole British race, and those whom circumstances had made British subjects—and who were among the most valuable of the British subjects on this continent—to unite them altogether, and form under one constitutional monarchy, the whole of the British possessions, from the Atlantic to the Pacific. We have been successful so far in bringing together, I may say, that portion of the continent, for Prince Albert Island is so close that it may be considered a part of the continent. We are all united into one Dominion, in an auxiliary England; and if the same moderation, the same desire to perpetuate the present Constitution continues, I am sure that our best hopes will not be disappointed, and that years and years hereafter, though every man who now hears me shall have disappeared from the stage of action, this painting when it hangs on the wall will be looked upon by our children's children with the same admiration as being the portraits of those who were instrumental in laying the basis of a great country—an allied country to the grand old nation to which, as the hon. member for Ottawa said, we happily now belong. So far as this painting itself is concerned, I quite agree with the hon. gentleman that it is fortunate for us that in Mr. Harris, the gentleman named, we will have a Canadian artist who has already attained celebrity in Europe, and who, if he is spared, will do honor to Canada. We cannot expect, Mr. Speaker, to keep all those Canadians who will distinguish themselves in art and science; we cannot expect them to remain in Canada. The great centres of arts and science and civilization, like London and Paris, will, to a certainty, attract a great portion of these men; but whether in Canada, England, or France, still they will do honor to Canada and illustrate Canadian genius and Canadian ability; and wherever they make their habitation, they will be known as Canadian artists, and we will be proud of them, just as the people of the United States are proud of their Story and their Hosmer, though from their artistic tastes they may reside altogether in Italy. So with others, like Thomas Walden at Rome; they may be taken away in order to pursue their art, in order to be on the great fields of science and art; they may leave their country, but if they are Canadians they will be Canadians still, and we will be proud of them. As regards this particular painting I can have no personal objection to have another artist try his hand upon myself. There is another Canadian artist who draws me with power and graphic skill; and I think under the principle of wholesome competition, I may hope that Mr. Harris, whose paintings I have not seen, may, by slow degrees, rise to the artistic skill and perfect accuracy in portraying my countenance that my friend Ben-gough possesses. I take it from the kindly manner in which the proposition made by the two hon. gentlemen has been received, that it accords with the general sense of the House, and the Government will take care that a sum shall be placed in the Estimates for the purpose of carrying it out.

Mr. WRIGHT. I have to thank the hon. member from South Brant, for calling my attention to an omission in my remarks which certainly was accidental. I did not intend at all to eliminate the fact that prominent Liberal gentlemen took a most active part in the proceedings relating to Confederation. My relations with those gentlemen have always been of the most agreeable character. I well remember the singular energy with which the late lamented Mr. Brown, and also the present leader of the Provincial Government of Ontario, entered into those proceedings. I remember also the prominent part taken by the late hon. leader of the Liberal party, the hon. Alexander Mackenzie; and for that gentleman, and all the gentlemen concerned in that great scheme of Confederation, belonging to the Liberal party, I have the most extreme and profound respect.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

223. Civil Government—Department of the Interior. $10,713.54

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman explain these items?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As I have had occasion to mention already during this Session, the Government in order to make the land granting Department as efficient as possible, have ventured to come to Parliament and ask for a considerable addition to their staff. They believe the House will quite appreciate the importance of a prompt and efficient administration of matters connected with the settlement of the North-West. We not only desire to increase the staff numerically, but to secure as much practical ability as can be obtained; we find it especially necessary that we should retain in the land granting Department all those men who, by their previous conduct, have shown themselves valuable officers. The Department has already suffered very considerably from the loss of some of our most valuable officers, who were offered higher inducements elsewhere than we were able to offer; and we find it necessary to endeavor to stop this depletion. We have also found it necessary to take from the other Department some men most fit to carry out the policy of the Government in actual practice. Therefore, we have not hesitated to come down and ask the House for this vote. The first item of $200 is to provide for the increase in the salary of Mr. A. M. Burgess from $1,800 to $2,200 per annum; and I need scarcely say to those who know Mr. Burgess that that is no higher salary than that a man of his proved ability, earnestness, and wonderful industry deserves. He is in effect, carrying on in the office what the deputy-head, Mr. Russell, is carrying out over the whole Department, interior and exterior. The increase of salary to Mr. Hall to $1,800 was caused in this way. Mr. Hall was an officer in the Department of Justice, and a very valuable officer, and the hon. Minister of Justice was very unwilling to lose him; but Mr. Hall had arrived at the head of his class, and not being a lawyer, had no further hopes of promotion. As Mr. Burgess, who formerly acted as secretary to the whole Department, was performing the duties of deputy-head, a competent officer to take his place and assist him, was absolutely necessary. After very careful enquiry, we found that Mr. Hall possessed all the qualifications, and we stole him away from the Department of Justice for the purpose of placing him in the position he now holds. Then we wanted to get a first rate officer, a short-hand writer, and especially acquainted with correspondence; and we procured the services of Mr. Pereira, who for many years was connected with the press of Canada, and who is now acting as secretary to the hon. Mr. Macpherson, who is assisting me in the work of the Department, and, as I have already had occasion to say, without whose assistance I do not think that particular branch of the service could be so well attended to as it is at present. Mr. Chisholm was an officer highly prized in the Department of Marine and Fisheries. We induced the hon. Minister of Marine, also with great unwillingness, to allow his transfer from that Department to the Department of the Interior, and he was especially selected by the deputy-head of the Department of the Interior. Mr. Grignard is a draughtsman and lithographer. He invented a process for producing plans of townships directly under the supervision of the Surveyor-General, which reduces the expense of the work to one-half, and enabled the Department to throw open a township for entry within a few weeks of the receipt of the surveyor's return. Mr. Grignard was formerly employed on the Geological survey. Mr. Wallis was transferred from the Post Office Department. Mr. Brough was brought from the Inland Revenue and was selected for the Department of the Interior on account of his qualifications as a precise writer. Mr. Bonfellow is an excellent draughtsman. He was a member of a leading firm of surveyors in Toronto, and was brought into the Department to take charge of Colonization grants. Mr. Brooke, unfortunately, cannot benefit by this vote to the full extent, because he died a few weeks since. Mr. Billings has been for ten years in the Government service and seven years in the Department of the Interior, and was placed on the permanent list in 1882. His duty is to examine the surveyors' returns and prepare the plans for the lithographs. His work is delicate, requiring great integrity and ability. Mr.

Sherwood has been in the service four years as extra clerk. He was made permanent last June. Previously he had received a thorough business training at one of our banking institutions. Mr. Rauscher is a Dominion Land Surveyor and Civil Engineer, and was in the employ of the Government on the Canadian Pacific Railway until incapacitated from outdoor employment by rheumatism, contracted in the service. He is specially valuable in the draughting room. Mr. Ardouin is a young man who was examined at the first examination under the Civil Service Act. He passed with the highest honors in the ordinary examination, and in his optionals he carried everything before him. His was by far the best examination of all the candidates who presented themselves before the Civil Service Commission. On account of the really distinguished qualifications proved before the Commissioners, he was appointed at once at a salary of $750, with the avowed object of showing all candidates for the Civil Service what they might expect if really they passed an extraordinary examination, as this young gentleman did. Mr. Pope, who was transferred from the Department of Marine and Fisheries, is now my private secretary, and a very good officer he is. I could not desire a better. Mr. Voyer is clerk in the timber and mining branch.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course we cannot estimate the cost of the business of a Department of this description or the real demands made upon it. The increases and proposals to appoint clerks at salaries which are higher and grow more rapidly than the Act provides, are entirely subversive of the principle of the Act. The hon. gentleman says that it is necessary in some cases to advance salaries more rapidly to secure continuance in office of the clerks and prevent their depletion. But the hon. gentlemen seems to be setting a bad example himself, and while he steals clerks from other Departments he blames the public for stealing clerks from him. There are men freshly put on in the third class grade whose salaries are increased at once. For example, I find Mr. Brough is brought in on first of June, 1882, and it is proposed to increase his salary by $300 from the 1st of January, 1883, after he has been only six months in the service. The same observation applies to Mr. Bonfellow. He is brought in on the 1st of June, 1882, and after he has been six months in the service there is a proposal to increase his salary from $700 to $950. If the rates at which they were first engaged were proper rates, how is it that after six months time it should be proposed to add 50 per cent to their salaries? Then in the case of Billings, a third class clerk, there is an increase from $700 to $900 from 1st January. Then, another, there is an increase from $700 to $800 for one Sherwood; and an increase from $700 to $850 for Rauscher, another third class clerk. On the next page I find four new creations proposed by the hon. gentleman from 1st March to 30th June, to commence at $750. Now, this would appear to indicate either that the scale of salaries proposed by the Civil Service Act for third class clerks is wrong and ought not to exist, or that the salaries are too high. It appears to indicate a general proposition to raise the salaries of third class clerks beyond the sums which the Act prescribes, and beyond that which third class clerks have obtained in the other Departments. Either there is some specialty in this Department which ought to be explained, or the salaries are too low generally in the other branches of the service. Of course, in the other branches of the service, application for similar increases must follow from such a serious violation of what I understand to be the practical provision of the Act. We passed the Act only last Session, and already we are beginning to violate its limitations.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not think this is a violation of the law of last Session; on the contrary, it proves that we are respecting the law. The Government thought these men were entitled to a higher salary, but they could not give it to them without a vote of Parliament, as we could not do so under the law. The law allowed us to give these officers only the minimum salary of $700, and as we desired to give them more, we have come to Parliament for a special vote. The Government have found that these officers, from their qualifications and the work they were doing, deserve a higher salary than we could give them under the provisions of the Act, and Parliament, being above the Act, is the only authority that can give them this increase; therefore, we are not at all violating the law. If we gave them the minimum salary of another class, we would have to give them a much higher salary than we propose to give them here, and more than they are entitled to. When we found that the Auditor-General would not allow these increases to be paid because it was against the Statute, we came to Parliament for a special vote.

M. BLAKE. Of course, the hon. gentleman did not violate the law, because the Auditor-General stood in the way of its violation.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I beg the hon. gentleman's pardon. We wished to give these men the same salary as the officers of the same class and qualifications had. The Auditor-General said: "We cannot do that because it is against the Statute;" and the Auditor-General is here exactly for that purpose, to see that there is no addition to any salary which is not authorized by Statute. Therefore we come to Parliament and ask for the desired increase.

Mr. BLAKE. What I complain of is that you establish one Session a standard of salaries, a system for the whole service, and propose the following Session to alter that plan, both with reference to the number of offices that you have appointed and with reference to the salaries provided for under the Civil Service Act for persons of that rank. Thus you are practically altering and modifying the law in a manner which renders its provisions nugatory. I see two or three of these clerks were appointed on 30th June last, at $700; that was the salary which was thought fit to appoint them at. Now, I see that from January last up to the next June, it is proposed to take a vote for $300 more for the man who was appointed at $700 and served six months at $700. Now, I say here is a proposal advancing far beyond the provisions of the Civil Service Act which prescribed the first appointment at $700 and a gradual increase.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. With respect to the four third class clerks from 1st March to 30th June, at $750 per annum, the hon. gentleman would remember that, under the Civil Service Act as it stands now, the minimum salary for that class is $450, but the law says that the salaries may go up to $1,000. If we require a third class clerk with special qualifications, who is not a mere copyist, who has qualifications that would fit him in a higher class, he deserves more salary than you can give him in that class, but you come to Parliament to get authority to pay him a higher salary than the Act allows in that class.

Mr. BLAKE. I understand that perfectly, but I say that the general scale provided by the Act is being departed from entirely in these proposals. It is not among the high class clerks, who have become valuable, but it is in the lowest class, and almost immediately after their introduction to the service, that it is proposed to depart from the Statute.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The rule is well observed in the Departments. The hon. gentleman will recollect that we had two classes, a junior second class and a senior second class, instead of which we have now a third class, which may go up to $1,000, while the minimum is $400. Such clerks will not come into the service at $400, and must be paid a higher salary. Instead of placing them in the second class and giving them $1,100, we ask that they shall be placed between $400 and $1,000, the maximum of the third class.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I observe by the statement of the hon. First Minister that some officers have been promoted from other branches of the service to that of the Department of the Interior. The Civil Service Act provides that in the event of promotions being so made they should take place only after examination. By this system of transfer an officer may be able to obtain a larger advance than he would have done if he remained in the Department in which he was employed; but I do not know that this has taken place in these cases. I am exceedingly anxious that we should observe very strictly the provisions of the Civil Service Act. It is of the first importance that this should be done, otherwise we will demoralize the service and do what the Minister of Public Works mentioned the other day—place Ministers at the mercy of officers in the Departments and their friends, to be importuned for increases whether the officers are meritorious or not. The Minister of Public Works mentioned that, although the Department could not make such increases, Parliament may do so. The Government have no right to come to Parliament and ask it to violate the Civil Service Act, and to ask it to do what they are not willing to do themselves. I am not objecting to these proposed advances, for some of the officers, speaking from what I know of some of them, are deserving of the increase; but it is given in violation of the law, and will form a precedent which will give Ministers themselves much trouble.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. What is proposed is according to law and not a violation of it, because the law says that no higher salary than the amount specified shall be given to the officer unless voted by Parliament. In this case a number of officers were taken from other Departments where they had shown ability and capacity, and transferred to the Department of the Interior.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). At higher salaries.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; we could not give them without Parliament voting them. We now come to Parliament and say that these officers are required, and that the work requires men possessing more ability than that of mere clerks, and we therefore ask the House to vote the necessary money.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). How many are new appointments?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Burgess was in the Department, and an increase is proposed. Mr. Hall was in the Department of Justice; Mr. Pope, in the Marine and Fisheries Department; Mr. Wallis, in the Post Office Department; Mr. Pereira is a new appointment; Mr. Chisholm was in the Department of Marine and Fisheries; Mr. Brough was in the Inland Revenue Department, receiving $850 a year. He was transferred and only paid $700, and this is an increase to his salary. Mr. Bonfellow, draughtsman, and clerk, and Dominion Land Surveyor, was specially appointed to look after the business of Colonization Lands. He was not in the Department before. Mr. Billings, Mr. Brooke and Mr. Sherwood were in the Department. Mr. Ardouin is a new appointment. Two third class clerks at $400, and three third class clerks at $600, and four third class clerks at $750 are all required in the Department. This is a thorough reorganization of the Department for the purpose of making it efficient. It is of the highest importance that at this time the work should be thoroughly and speedily done with as few errors as possible, and it would be false economy to secure inferior men with a view to saving a few dollars. We do not want untried men, but men who understand their business, and who can at once enter on their work the moment they put their foot in the Departments, and perform it with some intelligence and with as much experience as possible.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I quite agree with the hon. Minister, it is quite possible that there has been a large increase in the work; I have not the slightest doubt in regard to that; but as to this item of an increase of eighteen additional clerks, that is a very large increase to be made in one year. The increase has been constant. I know that when Mr. Mills left the Department there were only thirty-six clerks in the whole Department.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There was not anything like the work then to be done.

Mr. ROSS. I know that the work was not then to be compared with what it is now; but that was the number, and they did considerable work in the Department. Lands in the North-West were being opened up then, though not much progress was made; but I merely call attention to the danger of the hon. gentleman overloading the Department with clerks, and the public service with the expenses of maintaining their salaries. The hon. gentleman has not said anything about the necessity for the increase, except the mere general statement, that an increase was desired; and I suppose that this is all the explanation which he can give. With regard to third class clerks who are about to be admitted, they are certainly of the class which has passed the Civil Service examinations, no doubt?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh, yes.

225. Civil Government.—Department of Indians Affairs:
To provide for the salary of a Surveyor, from 1st February to 30th June, 1883, at 1,600 per annum $666.65

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think I explained this before. It stands thus: Originally the Indian Department had a surveyor who prepared the plans and looked after the surveys of Indian reserves and Indian properties, and their sub-division when they were going to be sold.

Mr. ROSS. He was paid out of the Indian Fund?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh, yes. This surveyor it was thought proper, for some cause or other, perhaps to get rid of him, though, I do not know what for, to do away with, and the late Surveyor-General's Branch did the surveying business for the Indian Department; this has gone on for a while, but it has been found not to answer, and on the authority of both the permanent heads of the Interior and Indian Departments, it is stated that this caused great delay. The draughtsmen of the Interior Department are continually employed, and we have to have a number of supernumerary men doing work there just now. The Indian surveys are delayed, and so it is necessary to return to the old system.

Mr. ROSS. Is it intended to use the surveyor to survey the Indian reserves, when they are laid out?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He is to be generally useful, to supervise the whole business and to attend to Indian surveys, where he can be employed. He is also to examine the returns of the surveyors employed elsewhere.

Mr. ROSS. I observe that some districts of Indian lands are parcelled out in small lots for convenience of management and disposition, in which local surveyors have been employed; am I now to understand, that this Departmental surveyor will do the work previously done by local or resident surveyors whose politics were right?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, this surveyor will be so employed so far as one man can do it; but if a surveyor whose politics are right is employed, that is of course, I think, in his favor, as the hon. gentleman will admit, for I am quite sure he would never appoint a man whose politics were wrong.

Mr. ROSS. I may also call attention to the fact that the officials of the Indian Department, are rapidly increasing in numbers. We cannot certainly blame the hon. gentleman for economy in managing his Department, for besides the Indian Surveyor, he has appointed an Indian Agencies Inspector to travel throughout the Dominion, Matitoba excepted, of course. This item is not in this vote but it is germane to the question. The hon. gentleman might, perhaps, explain the necessity for the employment of this inspector, Mr. Dingman?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Dingman is selected for his qualifications.

Mr. ROSS. And his politics.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I hope that his politics are right; at all events, he is a good officer, and the hon. gentleman will quite understand that the number of agencies requires an inspector. In Western Ontario, we had Mr. Plummer, until the Toronto office was moved here; and so Mr. Dingman has been appointed not only to inspect the agencies in Ontario, but also those in the other older Provinces.

230. Civil Government.—To provide for contingent expenditure of the High Commissioner of Canada in England $2,000.00

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The memorandum placed in my hands is as follows:—Cost of Sir A. T. Galt for removal and expenses of his family to England, $950.00; and it is expected that it will cost the same for the return of his family and himself. The income tax is £50 sterling, and Sir Alexander made petty payments for £48 sterling; and to complete the year including telegrams, it is not safe to ask for less than £100 sterling more, the whole making under $2,000.

Mr. BLAKE. Were not his removal expenses to be taken out of an old vote?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Oh, no. A separate vote was taken for that purpose.

Mr. BLAKE. They are not included in this vote?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. No.

Mr. BLAKE. This is to pay his way back again?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. And telegrams?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. And telegrams, and the income tax, as well as the expenses to which he has been at in Paris recently. There will be expenses connected with that trip.

Mr. BLAKE. These items are not the items which heretofore have been included in the annual $4,000?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. No.

Mr. BLAKE. They are extra?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Last year we paid much more than $4,000 connected with the High Commissioner's office; I think nearly $6,000.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. We had his travelling expenses to Madrid.

Mr. ROSS. And $2,000 more.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The $4,000 covers all expenses at London, house rent, &c.; but when he goes to Paris or Madrid, that is extra.

Mr. ROSS. This balance is voted to bring the Commissioner home?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes; he leaves England on the 24th of this month.

Mr. ROSS. And the next vote will be to send him somewhere else?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It is not in the Estimates yet.

Mr. ROSS. He is a very expensive officer. He has cost $18,000.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Oh, not $18,000.

Mr. ROSS. Well, it was nearly $18,000 last year.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It was $14,000.

Mr. ROSS. We paid $10,000 for his salary; $4,000 for house rent, &c.; nearly $2,000 for travelling expenses, not including $1,500, which, I think, was charged to Capital Account on Dominion Surveys; and now $2,000 more to get this expensive officer back again. I hope that the hon. gentleman will keep him still when he gets back, and not send him to Manitoba on another tour, the expenses to be charged to Capital Account. The hon. gentleman should really give him a rest, and us a little rest too; but then I suppose, we have to pay somebody else in his place, to get him there and to bring him back again. I think that the next time we get a High Commissioner we will have to get the hon. gentleman to make arrangements for him to stay there.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. We will have to make arrangements with the hon. gentleman when he goes there.

Mr. ROSS. I am not open to a communication of that kind—under this Government, at any rate. The next High Commissioner we send to England, I think we should send him there forthwith, and it is to be hoped that he will stay there for a long time for the cost of peddling these men backward and forward to England is a source of considerable expense.

233. Administration of Justice—To pay S. Richards for holding certain assizes in Ontario..... $461.50

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Richards held these assizes in Hamilton in 1872. Part of the time he held them for the Judges' convenience, but for another portion of the time it was not, as for fourteen days of the time no Judge was available, and for twenty-nine days he was paid nothing. He also held the Guelph fall assizes in November, 1875, sixteen days, no Judge being available for the work. It was held that though it was proper, as a general rule, that barristers should not be paid for performing these judicial services, yet as no Judge was available, Mr. Richards, should be paid this amount.

Mr. BLAKE. As I stated the other day, when the question of another Judge was being discussed, the rule was not to pay for the holding of assizes for the performance of judicial work by other persons in lieu of the Judges. This work is never done by barristers, except only when no Judge is available, in which case a Queen's Counsel is asked to do the work, and does it. I suppose several Queen's Counsel have, at different times, done that work to oblige a Judge. I know I was asked once myself to do it, and I did it, but I never thought of either taking the circuit allowance or making any claim upon the Government for it. If you once begin the plan of paying barristers for doing work which would ordinarily be done by arrangement with the other Judges there will be no end to accounts like the present. It is a wholesome arrangement which we have now, namely, when a Judge demands a leave of absence the Judge or Chief Justice has to see that efficient arrangements are made for the administration of justice in his absence. These things are managed by mutual arrangement, the Judges undertaking the work as far as possible or a Queen's Counsel is engaged, and always I believe gratuitously, or, as it would appear from this case, on his obtaining certain allowances. Now for the first time since Confederation it is proposed that we should pass a vote paying a Queen's Counsel for doing the work of a Judge upon circuit. As some of the circuits are long and some are short, a stated sum of $100 is allowed for each. It is given on the supposition that there will be an average compensation all around; but if the suggestion is made that the barrister, when the Judge is away, shall do the heavy work while the other Judges shall receive the light circuits, and the allowances it will follow, of course, that we will have a vote of this kind on every occasion when a Judge leaves in future. If you allow the principle that if the Judge is not available, and that the expense of the barrister who acts on the Bench is to be paid, not by the Judge who gets the leave of absence, but by the country, you will find that Judges will not be available and we will have these votes frequently brought before us.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I believe, as a general rule that these amounts will not be claimed; but in this case the application was made, and I did not see how we could well refuse to pay it. I think, however, that the Department should let the Judges know that unless when special permission is given, or a special request made by the Minister of Justice, counsel who perform the duty of a Judge must look to the Judge for his share of allowance.

Mr. BLAKE. This gentleman did not perform the work at the request of the Department, and we have no contract with him whatever.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, that is true.

235. Penitentiaries—Prince Edward Island..... $4,075.20

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is a claim made by the Province of Prince Edward Island for the accommodation of penitentiary convicts. There is no penitentiary on the Island, and long-sentenced prisoners were confined ex necessitate in the county gaol at the expense of the Province. The Province made a demand of some $12,000, but on the report of the Inspector, only this sum was allowed. Perhaps I may as well read the report.

The undersigned has the honor to report that on the 15th instant he instructed the Inspector of Penitentiaries to proceed from Halifax to Prince Edward Island to examine the claim of the Prince Edward Island Government against the Government of the Dominion for expenditure in respect of gaol extension, and expenditure for the accommodation of Penitentiary convicts, from the 1st July, 1873, to the 31st December, 1879.

That the Inspector has made the examination, and reports as follows:—

"I have the honor to report that I had interviews with the Clerk of the Executive Council of Prince Edward Island, the Prothonotary and the Gaoler of Queen's and Prince Counties, and that these officials, although instructed by the Attorney General to give me all the information they possessed, were unable to throw any further light upon the matter than appears in the papers which formed the basis of my report of 10th March, 1880. With reference to the extra cost ($20,108.60) in connection with the Prince County Gaol at Summerside, no new fact or circumstance has come to my knowledge that could lead me to deviate from my former recommendation that this portion of the claim be disallowed.

"It is quite true that a new gaol was positively needed to properly accommodate the debtors and short-term prisoners of Prince County, many years before the one was provided for the construction of which the Government of Prince Edward Island now asks the Dominion Government to pay a proportionate share of the cost. It is also true that a new gaol has been built, but there is nothing to show that the average of one convict from the 1st July, 1873, to the 31st December, 1879, rendered it more necessary to build a new gaol between 1873 and 1879, than it had been between 1870 and 1873, when there was the same average of one. So far as I have been able to learn, a new gaol for the safe-keeping and accommodation of debtors, short-term prisoners and convicts of Prince County, was as much required in 1870 as when the building was actually erected.

"I consider, therefore, that the allowance made for the average of one convict imprisoned in Prince County gaol, from the 1st July, 1873, until the 31st December, 1879, and included in the sum of $16,589.25, the amount recommended by me in settlement of the whole claim of the Prince Edward Island Government, is an adequate indemnity for the gaol accommodation supplied to the convicts of Prince Edward County.

"Respecting the claim of $12,539.10 for providing gaol accommodation from 1876 till the 1st December, 1879, for criminals sentenced for two years and upward to Queen's County Gaol, at Charlottetown, I find that, whereas there was only one convict in that gaol on the 1st July, 1875, the number increased to eight by the 31st March, 1876. On the same dates respectively, the total number of all classes of prisoners in confinement was sixteen and sixty-six. Before the enlargement of this gaol only thirty-two prisoners could be suitably lodged in the eight rooms it contained. Between the 1st July, 1873, and the 31st March, 1876, when, as I have already stated, sixty-six were confined—the largest number of prisoners on the return is shown on the following dates—thirty-eight on the 1st January, 1874; thirty-one on the 1st July, 1874; and thirty-seven on the 1st January, 1876.

"Thus it will be seen that the increase both in the number of convicts and other prisoners from the 1st July, 1875, to the 31st March, 1876, was so great as to compel the Government to make the enlargement which like the new gaol at Summerside had been very much wanted, even before the 1st July, 1873.

"The enlargement added forty more cells to the gaol, thereby giving accommodation to a total of 72 prisoners.

"There were nine convicts transferred from Charlottetown Gaol to Kingston Penitentiary on the 15th December, 1879.

"Had the Queen's County gaol afforded sufficient accommodation for the convicts confined there, without any expense for enlargement being incurred, I contend that the amount ($16,589.25) already paid by the Dominion Government, beyond year or nay, amply compensates the Government of Prince Edward Island for every expense connected with the maintenance of all the convicts, including prison lodging, from the 1st of July, 1873, to the 31st December, 1879. But as the convicts were left in the hands of the Provincial Government to take care of and provide for, as the gaol appears to have met the requirements of the Local Government until 1876, as the number of convicts and other prisoners suddenly and largely increased, and as the enlargement of Queen's County Gaol has been on the part of the Prince Edward Island Government, avowedly made to meet the demand for increased accommodation for convicts whose maintenance and safe-keeping are the concern of the Dominion Government, I am of opinion that this particular part of the claim is entitled to favorable consideration.

"I deem it proper to add that I have failed to learn whether the Prince Edward Island Government notified the Dominion Government of their intention to claim compensation for the enlargement of Queen's County Gaol before the work was commenced."

In regard to the proportion of the expenditure incurred in the extension of Queen's County Gaol, which the Dominion should bear, the Inspector reports as follows:—

"I beg leave to report that in view of the fact, as stated in my report, that between the 1st July, 1875, and 31st March, 1876, the number of convicts increased from one to eight, and of the other prisoners from fifteen to fifty-eight, and that the total new accommodation provided by the extension was forty cells, and that the gaol as extended is the property of the Government of Prince Edward Island, I am of opinion that if the Government of the Dominion should pay to the Government of Prince Edward Island one-fourth of the total expenditure incurred for extension, with interest at five per cent., they will be assuming their fair share and proportion of the expenditure."

The undersigned, therefore, recommends that nothing be paid on account of the Prince County Gaol at Summerside, but that upon the Prince Edward Island Government giving a full discharge of all claims in connection with gaol extension as aforesaid, there be paid to them the sum of four thousand and seventy-five dollars and twenty cents, being one fourth of the sum of $12,539.10 certified as the cost of the extension of Queen's County Gaol, and interest thereon for six years at five per cent.

That is the report of the Minister of Justice. This sum closes the whole account.

Mr. BLAKE. Do the Island Government accept this settlement?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

263. Public Buildings—Ottawa..... $84,000.00

Mr. FAIRBANK. I have waited in the hope that some member of the Government, or some older member of the House, would call attention to what I believe is almost a universal feeling of dissatisfaction on the part of hon. members with the condition of this Chamber, in some respects, and I believe it is a subject proper to introduce in connection with this item. It is the general feeling that the room is not suitable in its present condition in many respects for the purposes for which it is used. It is forced by the rooms surrounding it away from the outer walls, and windows are rendered impossible except at an elevation some 30 feet over our heads, and particular pains seems to have been taken to prevent the coming in of the slightest ray of pure sunlight by stained glass. Not a solitary ray of the light of heaven is admitted here until it is so changed as to become unrecognizable, in flagrant violation of that very ancient command: "Let there be light." It is certainly not carrying out that command to light gas, as we have to do here for three or four hours before sundown. The necessity of sunlight to successful vegetable life, or vigorous animal life, is admitted on all sides. A short time ago we heard in one of our Committees the statement that the fruits of the North-West were unusually sweet owing to the unusual amount of sunlight there, and perhaps the occasional undue acidity of our debates may be attributable, to some extent, to the want of sunlight. A Bill for the admission of sunlight, duty free, would, I believe, be passed without amendment. Air, no doubt, we have in abundance, but the manner in which it is distributed is very unequal, and, at times, too vigorous at the back benches. Those upon the front benches have, perhaps, not experienced the disadvantages of this to anything like the extent they would if they occupied the rear benches. Indeed it is questionable whether the proper outfit for members on the rear benches would not be an over-coat, a night-cap and an ear-trumpet.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. And a blanket.

Mr. FAIRBANK. I believe it is not putting it too strongly to say that one-half the hon. members do not know one-half of what is going on at the time it transpires. Now if the object is that the hon. members should take a practical part in legislation, it is almost entirely defeated by the miserable acoustic properties of this Chamber. If the object be to have the rank and file know but little and do but little, except answer the division bell, then this Chamber might be considered nearly a perfect success. It is no uncommon thing to see the hon. gentlemen occupying the front seats use their hands as ear-trumpets on asking for a question or an answer to be repeated. If this is the case on the front benches, in what blissful ignorance must hon. members on the rear seats remain as to what is transpiring. The practical result is that hon. members coming here anxious to learn and to serve, for a time, exert themselves to know what is going on. After a time they find this is impossible and they surrender at discretion, and consequently we see that nearly every day a great many of seats are vacant. Now, I believe it is a matter of no small consequence that the 200 men who assemble here should know more of what is going on, that they should be more educated in the system of Government. If we were to introduce military tactics here, I believe this evil would soon disappear. Suppose we placed the skirmishing line in front, and the occupants of the front benches, the heavy artillery, the great guns, in rear, obliging them to fire over the heads of the light infantry in front, I think that very soon there would be a change in the battle field in this respect. Nothing but guns of the greatest calibre could stand the strain for any length of time. Ten years ago a Committee was appointed to consider the difficulties which then existed to a greater extent than now. They called to their assistance four experts, of whose assistance the Committee expressed their high appreciation. But their appreciation was not so obvious in practice, as very few of their suggestions were adopted. In relation to air they said:

"It is allowed to fail to the exhaust flues, along the windows and sides of the walls, producing a dangerous cold current upon the heads of those in proximity thereto."

This evil still continues to an extent that has rendered quite a number of members unfit for duty a considerable portion of this Session. The report also suggested that "to get pure air it should be taken from above the surface of the ground by letting down galvanized iron tubes into the present hot air vaults;" and "to take the air for the fan from the sky-light above instead of from the puddle below." The air is still brought from one of the most shaded localities surrounding the grounds. It was suggested that the "glass in the casing of the ceilings be brought down to the under level of the casings," as traced in the plan. These suggestions have not been carried out. The report goes on to say:

"The Committee having called our attention to the want of light in the House, we beg to say that the only change to admit more sunlight without altering the building, would simply be to substitute plain for the stained glass in the windows above."

On the subject of acoustics: "They could be very much improved with comparatively small expense." But it is not my province to point out the remedy; I wish to call attention to the defect. Certainly the matter referred to by the Committee in relation to sunlight could be very easily remedied. The general site of the building perhaps is surpassed by that of no capitol in the world. This location is one that commands the admiration of all visitors. Standing as it does upon a cliff some 200 feet above the river, its location is particularly well adapted to obtaining any amount of pure air and all the sunlight that we can desire. It cannot be claimed that the science of acoustics is lost when we know that rooms are being constructed in which from ten to fifteen thousand people can hear an ordinary voice. It is not beyond the science of the day to provide a room in which some two or three hundred persons can hear comparatively well. I think it is the duty of the Government to place this Chamber in a condition in which it would be possible for members to perform their duties. I may be met with the answer that it would be attended with cost; but we have few things without cost. There are two kinds of expenditure—those which are finished when they are made, and those which only begin when they are made. An expenditure in this direction will be made once for all. If it is considered impossible to place this Chamber in a suitable condition for the purpose for which it is designed, then, I believe, the question is of sufficient importance to warrant us in considering whether we should not use this Chamber for Departmental purposes, and build another suitable for our use.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Every year we have had complaints about this Chamber. Of course, we cannot make it perfect, but, I think, it has been much improved. As to the stained glass, that was put there before my time; but I am sure that if it were replaced by plain glass, we would very soon have complaints from hon. members that they were troubled by the sun upon their heads, and they would be asking to have the curtains drawn. The hon. gentleman complains that we have not fresh air, that it is too warm. We must have fresh air from some quarter, but it must be remembered that we cannot have fresh air in this room without producing more or less draught; I think, however, that these draughts are much less this year than previously. But we shall always have more or less draughts, as long as we have doors that are being constantly opened and shut. The hon. gentleman has said that we, on the front benches have not felt much the draughts that have been felt by occupants of the back benches. We must have draughts in the middle of the Chamber, due to the passage of fresh air through ducts and so forth. I lately saw an account of an experiment made elsewhere by which the foul air of the room was carried off and fresh air brought in by means of a sort of jet placed in the corners of the room. That might be used perhaps in the upper portion of this building; but, at all events, that cannot be done this year. The hon. gentleman has also stated that a great many of the members cannot hear what is going on and the remarks of the members. I must say, without any reflection on any hon. members, that this is greatly their own fault. I am perfectly well heard and I do not force my voice; but I am in the habit of speaking to the last row on the other side. But if hon. gentlemen will speak to the

Mr. FAIRBANK.

Table they cannot, of course, be heard throughout the Chamber. The hon. gentleman has mentioned that in warfare skirmishers go in front and the big guns follow behind. In this Chamber, however, the big guns are in front and the others behind. If, however, the hon member had been in the House for some years he would have recognized the fact that a great improvement has taken place during the last few years. We have tried to make hon. gentlemen as comfortable as we can, and if there is anything we can do to improve the Chamber as regards its acoustic properties, or in other respects, we will be most happy to do so. If hon. members have any suggestions to make I shall be glad to receive them and submit them to the Chief Architect.

Mr. BLAKE. The points referred to by the hon. gentleman are of great consequence. The hon. Minister, I think, has undervalued the importance of sunlight. I have always admired the stained glass windows, but I have always wished that plain glass should be substituted. I agree that provision would have to be made for curtains or blinds, because during a portion of the day the direct rays of the sun would fall, for a short time, however, on members. That is no reason, however, why we should not have the light, for the greater part of the day, when the sunlight would not be direct. Another reason why there should be plain glass substituted is, that means would be afforded for rapidly ventilating the chamber by means of the windows as well as by the other methods that at present exist. I admit that the arrangement for the door behind the Speaker's chair has proved more satisfactory than I expected. Members of the back benches complain that they are subjected to a direct draught. I do not know whether it is impossible, instead of having broad gratings to have narrow openings; at all events, if the present arrangement is to continue I think there should be occasionally change of position between the occupants of the front and back benches. With respect to the acoustic properties of the Chamber, while there is much force in the observation of the hon. Minister, much difficulty is due to the fact that the speaker addressing the House is not the only speaker, for there is sometimes fifty or a hundred also engaged in conversation. There is no doubt, however, that the Chamber is a dead failure as regards its acoustic properties. We have adopted, and I do not say we should depart from it, the English system, instead of the system which prevails in many assemblages, of having a tribune. In conducting business in Committee, no doubt the system of speaking from your place is a most convenient one; but there is no doubt that it involves all sorts of difficulties as to hearing. Although the hon. Minister of Public Works is determined to be heard, I am afraid a good many hon. members behind him fail to hear him. These difficulties will always exist more or less in any Chamber where a large portion of the audience is behind the speaker; and whether, in making improvements, some plan should be adopted whereby in set debates the speaker could address the House from such a place as a tribune, if such a place here could be found, and could thereby contribute to the ease and comfort of his audience, which tends very largely to the ease and comfort of the speaker, I do not know. But in carrying on our business as we do, it is of the utmost consequence that the Chamber should be constructed, as far as possible, with respect to obtaining reasonably good acoustic results, and I believe the corners and recesses have a great deal to do with it. I do not mean to say that the hon. Minister can effect any important change in this Chamber; on the contrary, my impression is that we will never be able to conduct our business here in such a way that three-fourths of the members present will be able to hear more than half of what takes place. It is very well, when one is making a speech to raise one's voice, and the very context bridges over the difficulties of missing occasionally a word, &c., but a great deal of business is conducted conversationally. My hon. friend from Northumberland, who does not happen to be here now, and who is very constantly saying that he does not hear, is only telling what is going on all the time. It is not because my hon. friend from Northumberland does not hear as well as anybody, but he has chosen to make audible and vocal, a complaint concerning which other hon. members are silent. Discussions and answers to questions, returns and the arrangement of business which naturally cannot be carried on in a high tone of voice—it is impossible they can be, for a man cannot raise his voice to its highest pitch, when he has only five words to say—cannot be heard by hon. members generally; therefore it is really a serious question, whether for all time to come, the business of the House of Commons of Canada shall be discharged in a chamber so constructed and arranged, that, as I have said, half of the members cannot hear half of the business that is going on. For my own part, I think it is really a serious question, whether we ought to attempt to construct a Chamber, not extremely expensive, for it need not be very expensive, and this apartment could be used for other purposes no doubt—designed to discharge these duties, and to give us fresh air, sunlight during the day while sunlight can be admitted to the Chamber, and the power above all and beyond all things, of being able to hear what is going on in the Chamber—for I believe that the difficulty of hearing conduces very largely to the circumstances, occasionally—of course I make no personal reflection, as the House is full—to the House being rather empty.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I must say that there is a great deal in what the hon. gentlemen has just said. This is a matter, of course, in which both sides are interested, and we have all the same object in view, which is that hon. gentlemen should be able to hear, and that we should have as much comfort as can be obtained in a House of this kind. I must say to the hon. gentleman that these recesses, that, as he says, these galleries and this ceiling, must prevent necessarily the room being what it should be; there is no doubt about that. The room, as the hon. gentleman must remember, as to the disposition of the seats of hon. members, was changed some fifteen or eighteen years ago. Then the Speaker's chair was at that end, and hon. members' seats were just in a different direction from what they now are. Then about one-half of the House could hear, and those in the lower portion of the House could hear nothing at all; the change to the present condition of affairs was an improvement, but as the hon. gentleman says, a number of hon. members cannot hear, as a rule; I suppose three-quarters of the hon. members cannot hear as they should. It would be very difficult to change this room so as to meet the wishes of hon. gentlemen; but I think that in view of the remarks made from both sides of the House, that this is a matter which should be studied by the Department of Public Works, during Recess, which I will have done, and next Session we will be able to say whether a new Chamber should be built outside, and have an estimate of the cost, and then we may be able to meet the wishes of hon. gentlemen. I know that some have spoken of changing this room into the library, and of using the library to meet it; this might be done, but of course, it will have to be studied during Recess. This room might advantageously be used for a library; but could the library be used for our purposes? I have grave doubts about it. We would require galleries for the public, fresh air and ventilation. I only call the attention of hon. gentlemen to the position of the library; they must see this and what changes would be required. That might be the best and most feasible thing; but, at all events, it will be my duty during Recess to have the matter placed in the hands of the Chief Architect of the Department, and have it studied, not only by him, but also by some other skilled architect, in order to see whether we could not either use the library or have to build an outside chamber to meet our requirements. Hon. gentlemen may say I would favor the latter, because I am Minister of Public Works, but I think that if we make a change which would cost a large sum comparatively, we should, at all events, get the value of our money; therefore, I say to hon. gentlemen that I will have the matter studied during recess.

Mr. FAIRBANK. I do not wish it understood that I seriously proposed that the Ministers should go to the back seats, but merely that if they did they would find what the difficulty was and take steps to remedy this great evil, which cannot be over-estimated. If this can only be accomplished by building a new Chamber, I believe that the hon. gentleman who does it, will confer upon Canada a blessing which neither he nor his posterity will ever be ashamed of. Of course, I must admit, that very many hon. gentlemen have acquired parliamentary distinction in this Chamber, but in doing so, they are under obligations to their physical endurance, as well as to their mental ability; and while many have succeeded, I believe that many also have perished in the attempt from this cause. I am very glad indeed to hear the Minister say that the matter shall receive his serious consideration. Of course, it is not for an unprofessional man to point out how this should be done. I have no doubt that to some extent it can be remedied, but to the full extent desired I do not believe it possible. I believe the remedy is to appropriate this room for some other purpose and to construct a proper Chamber upon well-known acoustic principles.

269. Additional compensation to Mr. Calvert Vaux, for the plans submitted by him for the embellishment and arrangement of the Parliament grounds, Ottawa $500.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This relates to the time when plans and schemes were proposed for the embellishment of these parliamentary grounds. On the 6th June, 1873, the Chief Architect was instructed to proceed to New York and to consult with Mr. Vaux as to plans for the laying out and embellishments of the grounds. Mr. Vaux was an architect who had a great reputation there, and I think he had contributed largely to the embellishment of the parks, &c., of New York. The arrangement was, that Mr. Vaux should receive $500 as a preliminary fee, and one per cent. on the outlay in carrying out his designs if they were adopted. On the 9th of May, 1874, Mr. Vaux received $500 on the supposition that his designs would not be carried out, he stating that if the Government should finally adopt his plans, he would expect the one per cent. on the amount. In September, 1876, Mr. Vaux wrote, stating that he had been informed that the suggestions in his plan had practically been adopted. The Chief Architect, to whom the matter was referred, considered that Mr. Vaux's plan had practically been adopted, and that he was entitled to an additional recompense. Under those circumstances, it was arranged that he should accept $500 in full of all claims, instead of one per cent. on the outlay.

290. Public Buildings—Nova Scotia: Pictou Marine Hospital..... $6,000.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. A certain amount of the appropriation in this case was allowed to lapse, and we had to get the Governor's warrant to cover that amount, $3,000. The balance is required for contract work, Clerk of Works' salary, &c. The total amount to be provided for in Supplementary Estimates is $5,130. The total balance required will be $2,000 to complete. The total cost will be about $11,000.

Mr. DAVIES. I have been unable to find an amount in the Estimates for Charlottetown Marine Hospital. Charlottetown is a large marine port, many sailors coming there from ships trading in all parts of the world.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The annual expenses of that hospital do not come within my Department, but I will take a note of what the hon. gentleman says, and my colleague will give him an answer to-morrow or next day.

Mr. DAVIES. I would like to mention that there was a good deal of conversation in Charlottetown about this matter, and I understood from the public press that the Medical Superintendent had resigned, or had been notified that his services were not required. I do not know whether a successor has been appointed, but it was rumored that the patients had been put under the treatment of the general hospital, which is managed by Sisters of Charity. This is an admirable institution, doing good work; but it is questionable whether the class of patients requiring to be treated in a marine hospital, and the diseases from which they generally suffer, could be properly treated in a hospital managed by Sisters of Charity.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I only know that the Sisters of Charity have been entrusted with the care of the patients at the rate of, I think, $5 per week.

271. Public Buildings—New Brunswick: Sussex Post Office, Custom House, &c..... $4,000.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The whole estimate is $13,945, and an additional amount of work to be provided for, $4,000; estimates for 1883-84, $3,826, or say $9,000. This $4,000 for the current year, with what is in the Supplementary Estimates for next year, will cover the whole amount. The cost will be, I think, $13,000, which includes land, I believe.

272. Public Buildings—Quebec.....$67,095.35

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There are four items under this head, the first being Montreal Dominion Building. On the Montreal Custom House, by an inadvertence $6,029 provided for in the Estimates of 1881-82 were not carried forward. Therefore, we have to provide for it by a warrant. The remainder of the vote is for the construction of two additional hoists in the Montreal Examining Warehouse, costing $1,600. We also ask $57,000 for a wharf, a site for an immigrant building at Lévis. In the large fire which took place there, our emigration buildings were destroyed. These were on Grand Trunk property, and we have thought it better that the Government buildings should be on its own site, and consequently more isolated and less exposed to fire than it was formerly. The building will be about midway between the ferry and the Grand Trunk property.

Mr. BLAKE. Does this estimate include the cost of the building?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, both the site and the building. The building will cost about $15,000.

Mr. BLAKE. Is the hon. gentleman going to build a wharf or buy a wharf?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We are to buy a beach and build the wharf.

Mr. TROW. Is there any necessity for such a large expenditure there? Emigrants, as a rule, leave there immediately on landing.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is an absolute necessity.

273. Public Buildings—Ontario.....$9,750.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The $4,000 for the erection of immigration buildings at Hamilton, is required to cover a special warrant for the sum expended, by the recommendation of the hon. Minister of Agriculture, who reported that the necessity for proceeding with the work was urgent. The next item is $2,500 for an immigrant building at

Mr. DAVIES.

Sarnia, also on the recommendation of the hon. Minister of Agriculture, that it was required.

Mr. ROSS. I think the Government should see that these immigrant buildings are, in all cases, built near the main railway station. I notice that there is an immigrant building in Ottawa, not hard to find, but very far from the station. In Toronto the immigration office is a very poor affair.

284. Public Buildings—Manitoba..... $14,650.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The first item is for an immigration building at Brandon, $9,150. That is to pay the contractors for additional work performed by them in accordance with their contract. The total amount expended will have been $17,350. The next vote is $5,500 for additions, alterations and fittings in the Winnipeg Post Office. These were required to provide accommodation for the public, as many complaints were made that the postoffice was too small, and that many people had to remain for hours before they could get their letters. A building will be erected temporarily, so that the public may be attended to and the service properly performed. This, with the city boxes, will, no doubt, be sufficient until the new postoffice is built on the site of the present one. The temporary building will be put up in sections, so that it may be taken to pieces again and shipped wherever required.

276. Public Buildings—Immigrant Buildings at Prince Arthur's Landing.....$6,000.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We expect a large immigration out there, and will have to provide a shed for their accommodation. $6,000, under the circumstances, is very moderate. We have not yet selected the site.

277. Public Buildings—Repairs, Furniture, Heating, &c.....$39,610.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The first item is an addition to the amount voted last year. Among other items are the salaries of engineers and firemen for 1882-83, which were unprovided for. The second item is the heating of the Public Buildings, Ottawa. Fuel was dearer this year, and having new buildings a greater quantity was required. The same thing may be said of the gas, $750. With respect to the next item, the custom that has been followed for years has been to have the water rates for the last quarter to be paid the following year; and we thought it better this year to pay the last quarter, when due, so as to begin the new year clear. I have been informed, by the Chief Architect, that new hose was required. In the Department of Indian Affairs on Wellington street, Ottawa, we had to provide for improvements and for rent, plumbing, gas fitting, electric bells, &c., $2,000. In the Department of Interior, Dominion Lands Branch, we had to provide for the construction of a gallery and a supply of cupboards and doors, $1,080. In the Assistant Receiver-General's Office I ascertained that the vault doors were not burglar-proof and had to be replaced by others. This amount was authorized to be expended, and we now ask authority from Parliament for the expenditure, which was urgent. Heating the Dominion Buildings: this amount was not included in the appropriations of the different Departments. The fact is, there is a misunderstanding about it. It was thought that my Department would provide for this service last year, but the Council thought it was too late at the time to do it and the matter dropped. But for the following year it has been determined that this service for the large Departments shall be provided through my Department. Then, finishing rooms in attic, furniture and so forth, Winnipeg Land Office, $2,300. It has been found that this building is too small for the service, and this amount is asked for in accordance with the requisition of the hon. Minister of Interior.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I would call the attention of the hon. Minister to the extraordinary amount we pay annually for furniture, repairs, &c. We voted, last year, $165,000; now the House is asked to vote $10,000, or $175,000, for furniture, repairs, &c., for Public Buildings at Ottawa. I fail to see where this annual expenditure goes. The offices seem to me, when I visit them, to be very comfortably furnished, and they have been so for years, yet every year we are asked to vote an increased sum for still further repairs. Then we have an extraordinary bill for heating; $40,000 has already been voted, and now $6,000 more are required. Then $11,000, in another place, which no doubt occurred in last year's estimates in another form, making, in all, $57,000 for heating these buildings. I think if the hon. gentleman would revise the system of heating, it is quite possible the expenditure might be reduced. Why have we increased expenditure now? Where is the increased necessity? Is there an increase in the price of fuel? Perhaps the hon. gentleman will tell us how the fuel is supplied. The gas bill is very large, $20,000. I am quite satisfied the offices in the Departments do not use much, as they are not seldom opened after sundown. And these figures do not include fuel and light for Rideau Hall, amounting to $8,000 more. I think we ought to get some details of this expenditure. Where are these buildings required? What is the report of the Architect thereupon? Then we have the Department of Indian Affairs, Wellington street, $2,000. How is that going to be spent? It does not contain more than seven or eight rooms, and there is considerable furniture there at the present moment. We are coming near now to an expenditure of $16,000 more on public buildings. If we are going to add, year after year, to expenditure for fuel, light, repairs, &c., it will cost us, in a short time, $200,000, or $250,000, to keep our public buildings in repair. I think the Minister ought carefully to scrutinize the expenditure on these points before he asks us to vote this large sum of money.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. As to the heating surely the hon. gentleman does not think for a moment that I would leave him in the cold. The heating is done by contract. We call for tenders for wood and for coal and we accept the lowest. As for the feeding of the furnaces, that is left entirely to the firemen. I can assure the hon. gentleman that item is as low as we can make it. Now, about the rents, repairs, furniture, &c.; the hon. gentleman must not think that this amount is for these buildings only—it is for all our public buildings from British Columbia to Prince Edward Island. We have new buildings every year that we have to heat, furnish and repair. I may say to the hon. gentleman that our expenditure for this item is not nearly as large as it has been. In 1877, it was $182,000; in 1878, $202,000; in 1879, $226,000; in 1880, $220,000; in 1881, $149,000; in 1882, $173,000; in 1883, we have expended $165,000 up to the 1st of May, the balance for the remaining two months being for standing account, &c. This is for all our public buildings throughout the Dominion. The abolition of the workshops here reduced this expenditure, otherwise instead of $175,000 we would be asking for $250,000. As for the gas, the hon. gentleman knows there is a contract with the Gas Company, and the whole amount is in accordance with the contract, which I consider a very moderate one for all the public buildings in Ottawa. The water is provided by the city, and is of a very much better quality than that we formerly used. On Concurrency, if the hon. gentleman desires, I will bring down a statement of the contract rates paid for cordwood and coal.

Mr. BLAKE. I observe the hon. gentleman has taken into his own Department the supplying of fuel and the payment of furnacemen and others required in the public buildings throughout the Dominion. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will explain why the change is made?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The reason of the change is that formerly each Department had to pay its share of the cost, and difficulties arose with regard to amounts, and so forth. The whole of this grant has, therefore, been placed under the Public Works Department. I think economy will be secured in regard to fuel, as contracts may be let for large quantities.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). What is the mode of purchasing furniture and articles of that character?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. When only small quantities are required, the sub-head of the Department has an estimate made by the proper officer and sends a circular to ten, twelve, or fifteen firms in this city, calling on them to send in tenders, and the lowest is accepted. When we furnish a new building at Hamilton or elsewhere we call for tenders.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I understand that the practice of sending out circulars is to send them only to those men whose politics are right, while those generally engaged in the trade know nothing about it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; that was done five years ago.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Then the worst features of government five years ago are continued.

279. Harbors and Rivers—Quebec $13,200.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is to meet payments due on timber contracted for continuing the works at Etang du Nord on the opening of navigation. The timber was contracted for during the winter, when it is better and cheaper. The $4,000 for New Carlisle are to continue the pier contracted for there some two years ago. At Lake Megantic, the pier is to be completed.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Was the timber at New Carlisle furnished by contract?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

280. Harbors and Rivers—Ontario $3,781.79

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. $784 for Cobourg are to make payments for materials used in the construction of works there. At Owen Sound $1,776 are to pay the award of the Dominion Arbitrators, on a claim of $2,967 preferred by Mr. Larkin, contractor for improvements there; and also to defray legal expenses connected with the arbitration. These works were contracted for on the 15th of June, 1881.

Mr. BLAKE. I would like the hon. gentleman to explain the understanding between the Government and the Corporation of Owen Sound with reference to the Owen Sound works, and as to the condition of the enterprise generally, and what is to be done upon it. There has been some misapprehension I am afraid, or misunderstanding, or at any rate, I know from some correspondence I have seen, that there is a feeling up there in this relation; and it is said an arrangement or understanding has been arrived at on which certain specified payments the Department has agreed to produce certain results in the harbor—I forget how much water; the result has not been produced as yet, and steps require to be taken, but we are really in suspense as to what the nature of the arrangement is.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think an answer will be given to-morrow, while we are on the Supplementary Estimates.

281. Harbors and Rivers—British Columbia..... $2,804.40

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. $300 are to remove snags from Fraser River; the balance is as represented.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria, B.C.) I would like to know whether $2,504.40 are the balance of the original contract, after deducting the amount expended in completing the work by day's labor under the Public Works Department, irrespective of any claims made for excess of rock removed over and above the amount included in the contract?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes; the total was $9,445.60; $6,941 have been paid; and the balance due the said representatives is $2,504.

282. Miscellaneous—To pay a gratuity of $250 to each of the widows of the late James Meharg and Patrick Cooney, who met with death accidentally, 19th February, 1882, while discharging their respective duties of engineer and fireman of the Montreal Examining Warehouse.....$500.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This accident occurred last year. One of the deceased was the engineer in charge of the heating apparatus or engine, and the other was his assistant. When the accident took place, one seeing his companion injured and in great danger, went to his aid and met with such injuries that led also to his death. Under these circumstances we thought it proper to give this small sum, $250, to each of the widows.

283. Miscellaneous—To pay O. Dionne, for detailed statement showing expenditure incurred for construction, maintenance, repairs, &c., in connection with the Public Works of Canada, by the Departments of Public Works and Railways and Canals, 1st July, 1867, to 30th June, 1882.....$1,500.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. For some two or three years the Public Accounts Committee has been asking for a statement showing the expenditure incurred in the maintenance of repairs, &c., connected with our Public Works, for each year, and also during a number of years; it has also requested the amount expended in each previous year. Well, it was impossible for us to have that work done in the time. It would have required two or three years of work, but I found that there was an officer in my Department, Mr. Dionne, who for years back had devoted his nights to this work for himself. I asked him to hand it to me, in order that I might show it to the proper officers as well as to Council. After ascertaining that the work was accurate, and exactly the work required for Parliament, I asked him to give us the work, and, I think, under these circumstances, it is only proper that he should be remunerated.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I remember when this schedule was asked for by a Sub-Committee of Public Accounts, and I see that it covers about seven pages of the Public Accounts. But I cannot understand the fact that if any little extra work is required in the Departments, some clerk has to be employed and paid extra for his services. I think this mode of expending money should cease, for I cannot conceive that the staff of the Department is so worked night and day, that every little extra return of this sort must be specially paid for.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman would be right in this case, but for the fact that this work could not have been done in ordinary hours, and that it engaged this officer during his after hours for several years. I think that if an officer, instead of wasting his time by loafing about, or perhaps doing worse, chooses to spend his evenings in performing a useful work like this, it would be a poor encouragement to him for the Government to oblige him to hand it over without remuneration.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I cannot see how an officer could be engaged for several years on a work which we only asked for last year.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. He had been engaged on this work for himself for years before.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). The hon. gentleman's clerks must be very acute if they can anticipate work which shall be required by the House in this way. What I object to with regard to this extra work, is, that though ostensibly it is done outside office hours, my experience has been that in nine cases out of ten, the clerk manages to do a considerable portion of it at least during his office hours. Let a man be paid a full value of a working day for the services of a working day, but let him understand that this is all that he is going to be paid for that particular work.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman says, that so and so happens in nine cases out of ten, but I beg to inform him that this is the tenth case.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). And the others belong to the nine.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am sure that if the hon. member for West Middlesex had had the experience of some hon. members on both sides he would not have made the remark he has made with regard to the Civil Service. I can say from experience that there is a vast amount of work done by the clerks in the Departments after hours. I have been told, on information which I have received, and which I have reason to believe, that in some of the Departments a great deal of work has been done this Session after hours in the way of preparing papers which have been asked for by the House. I know that this has been particularly the case in one of the Departments to which my attention has been called by parties connected with it, and that not by one clerk, but by a dozen clerks. When you have statistical work to be done, or work involving the compilation and the copying of figures, no stranger can do that work so well as the persons in the Department who are accustomed to do it, and I can see no reason why discretion should not be given to the Chief of a Department to employ these men after hours instead of engaging outside men, especially as many of these officers have great difficulty in keeping up their increasing families on their salaries. If help is to be employed, the Minister should be allowed to employ the public servants to perform that work; and I am sure they do not get too well paid for anything they do. I know my hon. friend would not willingly do any injustice to any of the public servants, or to any of the Ministers, in the inferences that may be drawn from his remarks, and I am sure if he were informed on this point, he would know that better service can be performed by those gentlemen than by any outside persons.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I do not think the Government employés are overworked—beginning at ten o'clock in the morning and working till about a quarter to four, with an hour for lunch. Moreover, I think the time of the Government employés should be devoted exclusively to their Government duties; and if they have any time to spare, I do not think it should be employed in any other work. In the present instance, I have my doubts as to the value of the work for which the Government pays so bountifully. I can say that the time of Mr. Dionne has not been entirely occupied in his office, or compiling that work, for I recollect very well that, during election times, I had the pleasure of meeting that gentleman in my county. He had plenty of time to spare for electioneering. I remember that that gentleman turned me out of my room one evening. He took my bed one evening.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He did not take your seat.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Perhaps he would have filled it more satisfactorily for the hon. gentleman than I do. He went from my county to other counties; and he had time to go on an election tour, not only himself, but his brother also. If that gentleman found so much time to devote to the interest of the Government, I am not at all surprised that at this late hour he should receive a little salary for the work he did.

Mr. BLAKE. I cannot agree with the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) in the view he takes, and I am glad to be supported in my opinion by no less an authority than the hon. member for Northumberland as a Minister, for the law passed while he was in the Administration contained the wise provision that no clerk should receive extra remuneration for work performed in his own Department. It was felt that such a practice would be open to abuse—that the clerks might be continually asking for extra work, and that, perhaps, the work of the day would include the extra work that would be paid for extra, and therefore the law prohibits it. The hon. gentleman speaks of over-hours. As I understand, during the Session of Parliament, the ordinary rules as to the evening hours are suspended, and it is well understood, that at that period, when returns and information are required by members, it is part of the duties of the clerks to put in over-time to perform those duties. They are not over-hours, but are part of their contract. The discretion possessed by the deputy heads under the present law, is, I think, a very wise provision, and the repeal of it would lead to great abuses.

Mr. MITCHELL. I was aware that the practice of requiring the clerks to put in extra time without remuneration prevailed, but I hardly remembered that such a law existed. But, whether the law exists or not, it does not alter the force or effect of any argument I advance. I know nothing about this particular case; I was speaking generally in reply to the hon. member for Middlesex. I know, for a matter of fact, that there is one Department of this Government, in which the clerks have been employed for upwards of a month up to ten or eleven o'clock at night. If the law is as the hon. gentleman states, the sooner the law is altered, in my opinion, the better. We ought not to exact from these gentlemen any such extraordinary hours of work as some of them have to put in; and while I am free to admit, that the heads of Departments might be open to great importunities, I trust that they have firmness and determination to resist these importunities, and to decide when extra services should be performed. I take issue with my hon. friend as to the contract that exists between the civil servants and the Government. They are obliged to work from ten to four, and when required to perform extra services, they are bound to do that; but while they are bound to do so, they are not bound to do it without extra remuneration. That is the position I take, and if the law is different from that, it ought to be amended.

Mr. ROSS. I hope I am not to be understood as casting any reflection on the service, as the remarks of the hon. member for Northumberland might lead one to infer.

Mr. MITCHELL. I do not mean them to bear that inference.

Mr. ROSS. I know many of them too well as able, courteous gentleman, to accuse them to be guilty of offence in the respect alluded to. I do not mean that all the members of the Civil Service are equally able and valuable. I am speaking my mind freely and frankly on this subject. The hon. member is allowing here not only a violation of the law, but is establishing a very bad precedent, the natural effect of which is to lead the civil servants to neglect their duties in the day in order that extra work might accumulate which they might do in the evening and get extra pay for it. Human nature in the Civil Service is the same as anywhere else. If three or four of them put their heads together and agree to loiter away their time during the day in order that work might accumulate, and when there is a plethora apply for the extra pay for the extra work accumulated, their conspiracy—I call it a conspiracy—under this system would succeed. As to the hours of the service, the clerks are not taxed more or as much as the members of any other profession. My hon. friend from Northumberland puts in a greater number of hours, taking the year round, than any member of the Civil Service; and take any professional man, a bank clerk or dry goods clerk, the same thing will be found, while their average salary is not so large. I have made an estimate of the average salary of the service from the deputy head down, including third class clerks and messengers, but excluding packers, and I find it to be $1,120 a year. That is a salary that would gladden the hearts of members of some of the learned professions and of many other individuals in this country which is so prosperous. If we ask civil servants to put in a little extra work, occasionally, we do not ask too much. True, some of our officers are paid very small allowances. The messengers that wait in our lobbies are paid very small allowances. They are the worst paid class in our service. The hours of our Civil Service clerks are from ten to four, and they have two or three weeks' holidays in each year, so that they are not so badly paid for the work they do; and I am not to blame if I insist, not only that the law should be observed, but that we should not be asked to vote this money again and again. I know of four officers of the House, besides Mr. Dionne, who have been away at the elections. I could name other officials who were similarly engaged. If these men are so severely taxed to perform the work assigned them, how is it they can leave their business and go electioneering to the various counties where they can bring political influence to bear? Take the case of Mr. Dionne; not only did he oppose the hon. member for L'Islet, but he was one of the most active canvassers in Ottawa during the last campaign, and was noted for his exertions in seeing that his own political friends, and nobody else, got a hearing. Was he working extra hours during that time and is this his extra pay?

Mr. BLAKE. These are a part of Public Works.

Mr. ROSS. No doubt these are the public works that Mr. Dionne did, that he was employed upon. They were the public occasions upon which he was employed, and this $1,500 is no doubt to compensate him for the noise he made at various public meetings, and the assistance he gave to candidates of the Government. Do these little duties turn up in the Estimates occasionally? I hope not. I am not satisfied, taking this matter on its merits, that the seven pages I notice in the Public Accounts are rendered value for the $1,500. The principle is wrong from top to bottom. This man should not be so employed or any other man, contrary to law, contrary to the duty of the Administration, and detrimental to the morale of the service.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We are departing from the practice of Parliament in discussing in Committee of Supply "all round my hat," going over the whole subject of the public administration of affairs. My hon. friend wants to know if Mr. Dionne is to be paid for howling at different elections. If the hon. gentleman will look at the paper, he will see that it contains a detailed statement of the work Mr. Dionne is to be paid for. The information is thorough, and therefore he cannot for a moment suppose the payment is in any way connected with crying out at elections. There is nothing contrary to law in this. The Minister of the Department in which Mr. Dionne has been engaged asks Parliament to vote the money. The law says, the employé of a Department should not be paid for extra work. My hon. friend did not pay him, but he asks Parliament in its omnipotence to do so. Now, what is the work? As a clerk in the Department Mr. Dionne was not obliged to prepare this elaborate compilation.

Mr. ROSS. Only seven pages.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is a valuable work containing a detailed statement of all the expenditure on every public work from 1867. We are in the habit, and have been properly in the habit, of voting remuneration to a clerk when he applies himself to some useful work outside his office hours. If the Clerk of the House of Commons prepares a work on constitutional practice, we pay him. If our Librarian writes a good book on constitutional history, we do not say to him: You ought not to have done it and you will get nothing, for you must have stolen your time to write. If the late Fennings Taylor wrote a book on constitutional law, whether we were a Parliament or a Legislature, he should not have got any consideration. Sir Erskine May, Clerk of the House of Commons, was stealing his time when he wrote his valuable books. Mr. Alfred Todd, who is now no more, the brother of our Librarian and the Clerk of Private Bills, compiled two magnificent indexes of all the Journals of the old Province of Upper Canada and the Provinces of United Canada, a very valuable volume without which you cannot thread the maze of the Journals of the Province, should not have been paid for his work. Mr. Hartney, in the same way, a very valuable officer, lost his time when he prepared his work on Private Bills. The hon. gentleman's theory is absurd on the face of it. Mr. Dionne did the work without being asked to do it, and without being under any obligation to do it. Being fond of statistics it was a labor of love for him, and for years he kept his record from day to day and from year to year. We have no right to steal his brains or his work, and I have no doubt he performed his work faithfully, thoroughly and honestly, during his office hours. But this book is his own and not ours, and if we want it we must pay him for it. But if we do want to get this valuable book concerning all the public expenditure on all the public works in united Canada since Confederation, how are we to get it? We cannot steal it; we cannot force him to give it to us. We cannot threaten to stop his salary, but we must pay him for it. There cannot be a more valuable book prepared than a classified analysis of all expenditure on all public works of Canada since 1867.

Mr. CASGRAIN. The book has only seven pages.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman has no idea of the amount of labor required to produce this result. It is very easy to write down four or five figures in a line, but sometimes it requires an enormous amount of labor to ascertain what figures to write down. This gentleman worked hard and well, and performed his work with great accuracy. The hon. gentleman knows that during the last two years we wanted this book for the Public Accounts, and could not get it.

Mr. ROSS. I hope the hon. gentleman will not leave the House under the impression that seven pages from the Public Accounts constitute a book. I would like to say in reply to the hon. First Minister, since he has mentioned the names of some of the officers, are we to understand that they are not to be paid for the services they render? Take one clerk for instance. I believe, there was a vote of $1,500 for purchasing a very valuable work which he has prepared. I do not know that that gentleman has been paid $1,500; I think that money has been expended to supply hon. members of this House with that valuable work. The same with Mr. Todd the Librarian. I remember seeing the sum in the Estimates for a certain number of copies of his work, but I have no recollection that he received any of the money personally.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. What about Mr. Bowles?

Mr. ROSS. That is another case. Mr. Bowles profited by that. That matter was discussed in the Printing Committee, I think, and I agreed with that vote myself, because I could not see any other way of getting that service rendered. Mr. Bowles had charge of the Index of the Sessional Papers, and of the Votes and Proceedings, from day to day, and he had peculiar facilities for the discharge of that duty. There was no other man, in the House or out of it, that was as competent as Mr. Bowles to do that work.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD,

Mr. BOWELL. The Librarian had formerly been paid for the same work, but when Mr. Bowles presented his book to the Printing Committee, though it was much smaller, the hon. gentleman thought that he was entitled to the amount.

Mr. ROSS. I believe Mr. Bowles prepared the book at the suggestion of the Committee, and I was one of the Committee who made the suggestion. But, after all, the officers named by the hon. Minister of the Interior are not officers whose time is engrossed the whole year in the performance of their official duties, but only during the sitting of the House.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You are much mistaken. Ask the Clerk, and see what he will say.

Mr. ROSS. I know what his main duties are during the Session; the balance of the year his duties are comparatively light. I am sure, as a member of this House, I am delighted to know we have an officer who is capable of preparing a book that commands the commendation of the House.

Mr. LANDRY (Translation). Mr. Chairman: I have only a few words to add in reply to the remarks of the hon. member for L'Islet. I must, first of all, express my surprise that the work which has been prepared by one of our fellow subjects should receive any opposition in this House, and that this opposition should come from the hon. member from L'Islet. It is true that the hon. member, at this moment, sees all kinds of phantoms. Not long since he raised his voice relative to another gentleman, who, if I may use a popular expression, gave him something to attend to in his own county. To day he desires to attack Mr. Dionne. Mr. Dionne had some leisure, and I do not think he could have employed it better than in opposing the hon. member from L'Islet. There is no reason why the hon. member should seize this occasion to declare war without reason against one who produced so praiseworthy a work as the one in question. When one wants to be considered the first in Israel, I think he should display much broader views, and not walk in the mist of personalities.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation). I am not aware whether my hon. friend refers to a certain gentleman named Hébert; if he speaks of him I am in a position to inform him that I have just received a telegraphic despatch informing me that this Mr. Hébert has been fined $200 for the little affair in which he took so much interest a short time ago.

Mr. LANDRY (Translation). For the information of the hon. member from L'Islet, I may inform him that I received a despatch saying the decision has been appealed from.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation). It cannot be appealed.

Mr. LANDRY (Translation). The hon. member ought to know that the same Judge recently ordered a Mr. McKenzie, of Bellechasse, to pay a fine of $200; and that the case having been appealed the judgment was reversed. If the hon. member says the case cannot be appealed not only he is not a good member but he is not even a good lawyer.

284. Miscellaneous—Surveys and inspections..... $5,000.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is because the vote last Session was not large enough. I might have said that this vote was for new works, or for unforeseen works; but that is not the case.

287. Fish ries—To provide for payments for extra services to officers of the Marine and Fisheries Department, and for printing and other expenses in procuring information and making payments in connection with the Act granting bounties to fishermen..... $3,000.00

Mr. McISAAC. Perhaps the hon. acting Minister will explain this vote.

Mr. BOWELL. It is to provide for the payment of clerks, principally clerks in the Department, who were employed after hours in preparing the statements on which the fishery bounties were made, they were paid at the rate of $2 for each five hours' work performed under the superintendence of an officer of the Department. The vote is also to cover printing and other outlays consequent upon making these payments. I might mention that no less than 13,000 claims have already been received and disposed of. The reason why clerks in the Department were employed, was, that if clerks from outside had been engaged, a couple of men would have been required to teach them what to do.

Mr. McISAAC. I should like to know from the acting Minister why lobster and salmon fishermen are excluded from participating in the bounty?

Mr. BOWELL. Because they were not affected by the Washington Treaty. This payment was given to fishermen who, it was presumed, had suffered by the Treaty of Washington, and it was to compensate for loss. As I understand it, the lobster fisheries were never affected by that Treaty.

Mr. McISAAC. I would admit the truth of a portion of the hon. gentleman's argument, if the Act authorizing the appropriation had been passed in 1880, instead of the resolutions introduced by the hon. First Minister and supported by a large number of hon. members. The argument would then have had some force. The resolution to which I refer, ends with these words:

"The portion of the Fishery Award paid over to Canada, constitutionally and of right belongs to the Dominion of Canada."

Speaking to this resolution the hon. First Minister said:

"The coasts of the Maritime Provinces of Canada belong to every British subject; and a man living in the centre or any other part of Ontario or the Dominion, if he chooses to go, has the same right to fish within these three miles of coasts of Nova Scotia, New Brunswick or Prince Edward Island as the people of those several Provinces have; he has precisely the same right; it is no exclusive right."

Further on he said:

"So, when Confederation was consummated, when the several Provinces consented to surrender their entities, and to be merged in the Dominion, the coasts of Nova Scotia, of New Brunswick, and of Prince Edward Island ceased forever, for they became the coasts of the Dominion of Canada; their waters became the waters of the Dominion of Canada, and their fisheries became the fisheries of the Dominion of Canada."

According to the doctrine laid down by the hon. First Minister, and supported by a majority of the House, the sea coast and fisheries are the domain of the people of Canada generally. The fisheries belong to no particular province or class of the population, and therefore, we cannot say they belong to any particular class of the fishermen. If this doctrine was sound in 1880, I cannot see why it is not sound now. It being sound then, there is no reason why any particular class of the fishermen should be excluded. It is true that our lobster and salmon fisheries are not affected by the Washington Treaty, but the Act authorizing this appropriation makes no exception. The Act says, and it is not in conflict with the doctrine enunciated by the hon. First Minister in 1880:

"The object of the appropriation is the development of the sea fisheries and improvement of the condition of the fishermen."

And then it says:

"Such grant to be appropriated for said purposes under orders to be made from time to time by the Governor in Council."

The money is for the improvement of the condition of fishermen and the development of the sea fisheries. No distinction is made between classes of fishermen. Neither is any distinction made in the resolution, nor in the speech of the First Minister, in 1880. I, therefore, contend, that the order for the distribution of the money for the coming year, should be made so as to include lobster fishermen and salmon fishermen; that is to say, salmon fishermen who fish along the coast of the Atlantic, and those who fish in the Straits of Northumberland and in the St. Lawrence. These are very important fisheries. The lobster fisheries of the Maritime Provinces in 1881 amounted to about $3,000,000. The reason given by the acting Minister for excluding these classes is no reason at all, because they are entitled to the bounty, independent of the Treaty of Washington and the Halifax Award, after the resolution passed by this House in 1880, just as much as iron manufacturers are to the bounty they are to receive. I must also complain that the Order laid on the Table the other night was not what I expected it to be. There is only one amendment, and that I admit is an important one. It doubles the money allowed to fishermen in boats, but it makes no change as regards fishermen in vessels. But the other objectionable features in the last year's Order still exist. These features are the smallness of the sum allowed and the conditions to be fulfilled in order to entitle a fisherman to participation—I mean the condition of three months' actual fishing, and the condition of 2,500 lbs. catch imposed on fishermen in boats. These conditions, I venture to say, exclude one-half of the boat fishermen of the Maritime Provinces. In 1881—I have not the returns of 1882 before me, as they are not yet published—there were 7,254 vessel fishermen, and 32,644 boat fishermen in these Provinces. It appears from the memorandum submitted the other evening that the number of boat fishermen who succeeded in getting the bounty last year is 19,392, and this number includes the successful applicants in the Province of Quebec as well as those in the Maritime Provinces. I can safely assert that now we have some 40,000 boat fishermen in the Lower Provinces alone. That number added to the same class in the Province of Quebec, it becomes evident that more than one-half are entirely shut out by one or the other of these conditions. It is absurd to argue that a fisherman is not entitled to a share because he does not catch 2,500 lbs., and does not take three months catching the quantity especially as the money is voted to improve his condition. The man who meets the worst luck needs the aid more than the man who is more fortunate in his catch. I may be told that the money is not in the nature of aid or relief—that it is a bounty. It is not a bounty in the sense that a bounty means a premium given according to the quantity of fish caught. This also is evident from the fact that a fisherman who may catch even tons, unless he spends three months catching the quantity, is entirely excluded. I hope when the Order in Council is laid on the Table for the assent of Parliament, it will be so changed as to admit a larger number of fishermen into sharing in the bounty. Let the condition of the quantity caught be removed in case of boat fishermen, as it is not applied to vessel fishermen, let the condition of time be also modified by shortening the period. The exclusion involves a greater loss now as the amount awarded to each is increased.

Mr. BURNS. I may be permitted to make some observations in reply to the hon. gentleman. Under the Treaty of Washington, I do not think it was contemplated that the shore fishermen should get any share of the award. As everyone knows the difficulties that prevailed for a number of years between the Canadian and American Governments, with regard to the rights of American fishermen to the share in the fisheries within a certain distance from the shore, led to the appointment of a Commission. This Commission led to the admission of our fish duty free into the American market. I may remark here, I do not think the United States treated us very well in evading, to some extent, this provision, by imposing a duty of 1½ cts. on the tins in which the lobsters are packed. The award of $4,500,000 was paid for the right of the Americans to share in our deep sea fisheries, within a certain distance from the shore, and on account of this concession, it was deemed proper to give some compensation for a recognition of the competition to which our fishermen were subjected from the Americans; but no such argument would apply to the shore fishermen. I do not think the hon. gentleman will dispute the fact, that the salmon and lobster are shore fisheries; and as the Americans are not allowed to share in these fisheries, unless they reside or do business in this country, no particular injustice is done to this class. This, to my mind, is one reason why the bounty granted is only distributed to deep sea fishermen. The hon. gentleman argues, that according to the reading of the resolution, this money is only paid to develop the fisheries; but I ask the hon. gentleman and the House, would it be likely, if it were not for these $4,500,000, that we would give this recognition to the fishermen in the shape of a bounty of $150,000 a year? I think not, and, therefore, maintain that it is to the deep sea fishermen that it is really due. I took occasion some time ago to refer to the grievances under which I thought the salmon fishermen are laboring, and I asked the Department to give their attention to the tax which is now imposed on their nets, with a view to having it reduced. That tax is imposed largely for the purpose of registration, and I think it might be reduced one-half, if not entirely abolished, and thus confer a benefit on these fishermen. A word or two with regard to the distribution of the bounty. It is distributed in this way: A certain amount, equal to $2.50 is given to each fisherman in a boat, and as a boat's crew consists of four, the amount given to each boat would be $10. But if my recollection of the regulations is correct, it does not follow that if each man of the crew did not catch the quantity prescribed by the regulations he would not get his proportionate share. The hon. gentleman endeavors to make a point by saying that in proportion to the total number now engaged in the fisheries, the boatmen do not get a sufficient share of the bounty. He argues that the regulations are oppressive, inasmuch as one of the conditions imposed on the fishermen is the necessity of fishing at least three months in the year. Any person who does not fish for three months in the year cannot fairly be called a fisherman, and I do not think it would be desirable to encourage, by giving a bounty, the farmers of the county living along the sea shore, to devote part of their time to fishing. This bounty is exclusively for the benefit of the fishermen, and I do not think the amount which should be paid to the fishermen, should be lessened by giving it to the persons who go from the shore and catch a few quintals during the time which they can spare from their farm operations.

Mr. McISAAC. Increase the subsidy.

Mr. BURNS. Though the subsidy is a very respectable one, no one would rejoice more than I would to see it increased. I wish to call the attention of the acting Minister to one fact in relation to the boat fishermen. Under the present system, as operated in my own county, at all events, the fishermen do not get what I think that they should get, namely, the whole of that bounty. I think it is unfair to give to the owner of the boat any portion of what is earned by the fishermen. Under the operation of the present regulations, one-fifth of the amount goes to the boat owners, and I will tell you how that operates in the county of Gloucester, which is a large fishing county. A great number of the boats are owned by the supplier—the merchant or the man who advances the supplies, and buys the fish. The fisherman pays to that owner a certain sum, $25 or $30 as the case may be, for the fishing season which is supposed to close on the 25th of August. It is unfair to the fishermen that, in addition to paying the owner of the boat a rent for it, they should also pay a share of their earnings. It would be all very well if it reduced the amount which the owner of the boat charges to the fishermen; but the practical working of the regulations is not in that direction, as the money which was intended to go to these toilers of the sea practically goes to increase the rent which they pay to the owners of the boats. It is argued that in some cases that one of the men in the boat is the owner. If such is the case the other three pay him a proportionate amount of what would be a rent for it, and he should not be placed on a better footing than themselves or the supplier or the merchant who supplies the boat.

Mr. BRECKEN. Last year the forms which are necessary to be signed, did not reach Prince Edward Island until the crews had dispersed, some of them leaving the Island, and others living at a considerable distance from the officer who has these matters in charge. If possible, these papers should be sent before the season is over, so that they could be signed before the fishermen go home, for if a fisherman who is entitled to receive $5, has to spend considerable time or money in travelling, it amounts to a tax upon his bounty, especially in the case of those who have to leave the Island.

Mr. VAIL. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman if some of the bounties are still to be paid?

Mr. BOWELL. There is a large amount to be paid yet, as is shown by the fact of the Order in Council having been changed, doubling the amount to the fishermen.

Mr. VAIL. I may say that I agree with the opinion expressed by some hon. gentlemen that this money in a strictly legal sense belongs properly to the Dominion. But then we must consider what the money was received for. It was received from the United States Government for the privilege of allowing American fishermen to come on our coasts and catch fish, which, of course, means participating in the same advantages which our fishermen have with regard to the three-mile limit; consequently, every fisherman coming on our coast to catch fish interferes with the rights and privileges of our fishermen, not only by catching fish, but in many instances they have injured the fishing grounds by throwing their gurry overboard, and as we had no control over them, and no supervision of the fisheries, of course there was nobody to prevent it. Now, while I quite agree with the view that the money paid in that way belongs to the Dominion of Canada, at the same time if this grant of $150,000 was made to the fishermen as a bounty, it was made for the reason that a certain amount of money was collected from the United States Government in return for the use of our fisheries, and that, therefore, a portion of it—I contend the whole—belongs to the fishermen; and I consider that the Government have granted only a portion of what was due to the fishermen. The Government of Canada received that money in October, 1878; and having used it for the four years up to October last, the accumulation of interest would add nearly $1,000,000 to the principal. The amount received from the United States Government after paying Newfoundland was something like $4,498,802, which was reduced by the deduction of expenses incurred to $4,350,531. The accumulation of interest for the four years would make the fund at the credit of the fishermen $5,400,000. I agree with the hon. member for Antigonish when he says, that the fisherman is as much entitled to a bounty on the fish he catches as the manufacturer of iron is on the iron he manufactures; but as this bounty was given for another reason, I contend that the fishermen should have the benefit of the whole amount, and that the Government, instead of paying them $150,000 annually, should pay them about $240,000 annually. I hope the Government will see their way clear to pay over the difference between $150,000 and $240,000. If the money belonged to the fishermen at all, the principal belonged to them; but if the Government keep the principal, they should pay over the full amount of the annual interest.

Mr. BLAKE. I would like to ask, what proportion of this money is for extra service, who are the officers paid, and how much is paid to each?

Mr. BOWELL. I am not able to give the hon. gentleman the information at present, but I will obtain it on Concurrence. I have but few words to say in reply to the hon. member for Antigonish, with reference to the distribution of this fund. He sets out with the declaration that the money belongs to the whole Dominion, and that that was the argument used by the hon. Premier, when the question was first brought before the House in 1880. At that time it was not decided that any portion of this money should be given to the fishermen, or distributed in any other way than forming part of the general revenue of the Dominion; but after due consideration, and after having adopted the policy of assisting all branches of industry in the country, it was deemed advisable—as it was alleged that the fishermen had lost a certain portion of their trade—that an amount equal to about 4 per cent. of the award should be divided among the fishermen. It is quite true that they have not been granted the full amount; but the hon. gentleman must remember that a large amount of expenditure is incurred every year in the protection of these fisheries in different ways, and by that means it is completely absorbed. If the theory laid down by the hon. member for Digby (Mr. Vail) be correct, that because an award was obtained, under the Washington Treaty, in connection with our fisheries, it belongs exclusively to one branch of industry in the country, that, I fancy, might apply to a great many other industries which we are encouraging. The hon. gentleman objects to the principle upon which the bounty has been paid, and he objects to it on the ground that the Premier, in 1880, in discussing this question, stated that the fund belonged to the whole Dominion, and not to any one class of fishermen. That is quite true; but, in 1882, when it was decided that $150,000, a sum nearly equal to the interest upon the amount of the award, should be distributed among the fishermen, the manner in which, so far as possible, the money was to be distributed was distinctly stated. I will read a short extract from the speech made by the hon. Minister of Finance at that time, which is the best answer I can give to the hon. gentleman who has just spoken. The hon. Minister of Finance said:

"The proposition is to reimburse the fishermen of that portion of the Dominion who have had taken from them, by the Treaty, exclusive privileges which they formerly enjoyed. It is to compensate them for the competition which they are now meeting with from American fishermen. A number of communications have been received, through members of the House representing fishing districts. There have been propositions to pay on the fish exports. It was felt that the amount would not reach the parties engaged in the business. Another proposition offered was that every man engaged in the fishing business should receive a certain sum per head. That, however, would be a difficult undertaking, although from a political point of view, it would be advantageous. But there are two objects in view in the proposition submitted: first, to encourage the construction of a class of vessels that is much needed; second, to compensate the fishermen. It is the intention of the Government to use the fishery officers for the purpose of granting licenses and looking after the matter, but it would be a difficult matter to distribute the amount according to the number of men in a boat. The point with respect to which there is at present some difficulty is as to the size of the boat, but we may arrive at that by the length of the keel and the dimensions of the boat."

I find also on this subject, in answer to a question by the then hon. member for Gloucester, that the hon. Finance Minister said:

"The law, I think, speaks of registered vessels of ten tons. Any smaller vessels are not registered, and there is where one of the difficulties lies in reaching a decision."

I read these extracts to show that the intention of the Government at the time was to confine the distribution to the fishermen who were deprived of certain privileges, and the reason for paying a certain proportion of the bounty to the vessels was a desire on the part of the Government to encourage, as much as possible, the building of that class of boats. It will readily be understood that if it were open to all classes of fishermen, as pointed out by the then hon. member for Gloucester, any farmer taking his row-boat and spending a few days or weeks fishing would be able to claim a certain portion of the bounty. That was not the intention either of the law or the Government. The intention was to reward those who had lost certain privileges and to encourage as much as possible the construction of vessels in our own country for fishing purposes. I assure hon. gentlemen it has been with no little difficulty that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries has arrived at the decision at which he did arrive in laying down some practical basis on which to act. He has carried out almost to the letter the declaration made by the hon. Finance Minister at the time, and the only object the Government can have in view is to carry out the law and give the bounty to those who are engaged in the deep sea fisheries and who are deprived of those privileges to which the hon. Finance Minister alluded, and to encourage in our own country the building of vessels to be used in fishing operations in the Gulf and the deep sea.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne). From the Order in Council which I find was passed on the 7th November—of course, it was simply impossible for the Government to collect any information and pay the bounty before the close of that year—I think if the hon. Minister had undertaken to obtain the information earlier, the Government might have been in a position to pay the bounty before this time. Fishing voyages are always settled for on or about the first of the year. On the 4th or 5th of January, fishermen are always settled with and paid off; and I trust the hon. Minister will see that the returns are collected before the end of the year, and the claims paid as soon as submitted to the Department. The hon. Minister says this money was given in lieu of the privileges of which our fishermen were deprived by the Washington Treaty, and in the next breath he says it was given as a sort of protection to the fishing industry.

Mr. BOWELL. A bounty.

Mr. ROBERTSON. As a part of the so-called National Policy. It was but right the Government should extend a fostering influence to this industry, for the simple reason that, by the high tariff on all the articles used by the fishermen, the cost of carrying on that industry was largely increased; and it would be but right and fair that bounties should be paid to lobster and salmon fishermen as well. Will the hon. gentleman give me some information as to the position occupied by Mr. Ogden, of Nova Scotia, in connection with this service—what his duties are and how he is paid?

Mr. BOWELL. I am not in a position to give the particulars now, but will ascertain them and lay them before the House.

Mr. WELDON. In regard to the principle laid down by the acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries, it is altogether different to that adopted in regard to the drawback given to ships. The latter is for the purpose of returning to ship-owners in that shape the duties they have paid. In this case the fishermen are still to pay the duties, but this amount is given as a compensation for certain privileges taken from them by the Washington Treaty. If that be the principle, it is ignoring the principle laid down in the resolution of the First Minister in 1880 in regard to the right of the Dominion to the Fishery Award. What was contended then by the Maritime Provinces was, that the fisheries were their property, held in trust for them by the Dominion, and the fact that Newfoundland received her share of the award was proof positive of that contention. If the principle is to protect the fishermen against foreign competition, the lobster and salmon fisheries have the same claim, more particularly when the hon. Minister of Finance placed an increased duty on cordage and nets.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria, B.C.) As this debate seems to have taken a wide range, perhaps I might be permitted to ask whether, in view of the fact that the Province of British Columbia is also a Maritime Province, any provision is to be made for her fishermen. We have there no lobster fisheries, but we have there salmon fisheries and crabs. I know we have been in some way overlooked in the Reciprocity Treaty with the United States, as regards the free entry of fish and fish oil; but in this matter of the fishery bounty, I think it is pertinent for me to ask why British Columbia should not be included in the disposition of that $150,000?

Mr. BOWELL. I think I cannot do better than read a short extract from the speech of the hon. Finance Minister when the same question was put by the late member for Victoria, Mr. DeCosmos: "British Columbia does not come within the terms of the Treaty, and American fishermen are not competing with them." As the object of this appropriation was to pay those who were affected by that Treaty, British Columbia not being affected by it, it was not considered correct to pay them the bounty in the same manner as it was paid to the others.

Mr. BAKER. The hon. gentleman is mistaken in saying we are not affected. For the past six or seven years large American schooners have come up to our coast and taken part in our deep sea fisheries, and we have no safeguards against that.

Mr. BOWELL. I am aware of that fact, because during the short time I have been acting for my hon. colleague that question has been brought under my notice. American fishermen, I am informed, come into our waters almost unimpeded, but they are acting in direct contravention of the law, and I instructed the officer to warn them off, and if they do not obey that warning some other steps will have to be taken in order to prevent them poaching upon the fisheries of British Columbia, where they have no rights.

Mr. KIRK. I do not intend to take up the time of the House at this late hour of the night in discussing the points which have been so ably discussed by my hon. friend from Antigonish and others on this side of the House, further than to say that I entirely agree with them that lobster and salmon fishermen are as justly entitled to share in the bounty as other fishermen, and that the bounty, instead of being only the interest on $3,000,000, it should be the interest on $4,500,000 annually. There is another question which I wish to bring to the notice of the acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries in connection with this matter, and that is in connection with the close season for lobster fishing. I would like to enquire whether it is the intention of the Government this year to allow lobster fishing in the fall of the year. As it is now the fishermen are only allowed to fish for lobsters practically for three months in the year, because they cannot fish during the month of April, and it is the first of May before they are able to fish for lobsters; consequently, the above season confines them practically to three months in the year. This appears to me too short a time to allow fishermen to engage in lobster fishing. It is impossible for them, unless the business is more than usually profitable, to earn enough during those three months to support their families during the remainder of the year. You are expecting a little too much from their business. Therefore, I am of opinion that this close season is an imposition on the lobster fishermen of the Dominion. The lobster fishing industry is a very large one and employs a great many men. I think in the county I have the honor to represent, there are eleven or twelve lobster canning establishments that employ a great many men, and I would like to see the Government allow them to fish in the fall of the year, and I can see no good reason why they should not. I can see a reason why there should be a close season for lobster fishing, because there is a certain season of the year in which that fish is not in fit condition for human food, and during that season they should not be allowed to be taken. But from information I have received from those engaged in the business that season extends for only about four or five, or at most six weeks, and that is the only time during which the season should be closed—that is, at least, the opinion of the fishermen themselves. Some two months ago I obtained an Order of this House for petitions and correspondence on the subject, which, I am informed, are in the hands of the Department, but which have not yet been brought down. I, therefore, take this opportunity of urging the Government to bring down that information and to take this matter into their early consideration, and, if possible, permit fall fishing for lobsters.

288. Scientific Institutions..... $1,750.00

Mr. BOWELL. This sum is to cover the deficiency in the sum voted last year on account of extension of the service. Full details of the expenditure will be found on page 162 of the report. I think the increase may be considered a permanent one.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the condition of the Toronto Observatory?

Mr. BOWELL. The cottage formerly occupied by the observers having been claimed by the University as their property, it was ceded to them, and it was necessary to provide another residence. The item of $250 is to pay rent.

289. Steamboat Inspection..... $2,000.00.

Mr. BAKER. I desire to impress on the acting Minister the necessity of appointing a steamboat inspector in British Columbia, with as little delay as possible. It is utterly impossible to expect to obtain a man capable, scientifically and practically, to perform the duties incident to that position unless he is paid a respectable sum. For $750 a year, the Government will never be able to secure a man who can satisfactorily perform the duties expected from such an officer, and the Government have been without an officer for one year now.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne). I desire to draw the attention of the Department to a matter of considerable importance. We have, of course, a Steamboat Inspector for Canadian vessels plying between the Dominion and the United States. I do not know whether the acting Minister is aware of the fact, that the United States Government have passed a most stringent measure, providing for the inspection of foreign steamboats. Steamboats owned here, and plying between Canadian and American ports, no matter if they have been inspected by our inspectors, are compelled to undergo a rigid inspection in the United States. I trust the Dominion Government will look into the matter, and pass a law the same as that of the United States. There are steamers plying between the United States and Canadian ports, and I am informed, by men familiar with steamboats, that those boats, in some cases, and at certain seasons, are unsafe, but they are passed by the American Steamboat Inspectors. The subject is one to which the Government should give their immediate attention.

Mr. BOWELL. The vote was taken for the purpose of providing for additional expenses connected with the Inspection Act. Three inspectors were appointed, one for Quebec, one for the Maritime Provinces, and one for Ontario, and the expenses attending their work have been greater than are anticipated. We have also found it necessary, particularly at the present season, to give assistance to the Inspectors, the additional officers being selected from among those who had passed the necessary examination. For about a month or six weeks, the Inspectors have a great deal more to do than they can possibly accomplish, and all the shipping is practically stopped, owing to the fact that these officers cannot possibly overtake the work they have to perform at the opening of navigation. Only two days ago we appointed two additional inspectors to assist the regular staff. I have no note of an inspector having been appointed for British Columbia; but inspectors in Ontario, Quebec, and the Maritime Provinces, receive $1,000 a year and travelling expenses. I will make enquiries and ascertain what appointment has been made in British Columbia, and whether it was under the Steamboat Inspection Act, or the Act relating to the inspection of hulls.

Mr. BAKER. The members for British Columbia have already urged on the Minister of Marine the appointment of an inspector of hulls in addition to, or in connection with, the inspection of steam-engines and boilers. We had a disaster the other day, by which seventy or eighty lives were lost. It is no use locking the stable door after the horse has been stolen; and so we want to take time by the forelock and have the appointment made without delay.

Mr. DAWSON. This year many vessels have been sent up to the lakes which are very old, and are used at points where new lines have been established. It is very desirable that a change should be made next year, and that strict regulations should be enforced.

290. Lighthouse and Coast Service..... $9,451.25

Mr. BOWELL. The House is aware that the lighthouse at Cape Race belongs to, and is maintained by, the British Government; but in order to prevent light dues being charged on vessels coming to the Dominion, this amount is required to provide for the payment of such dues. $7,000 is required to pay the Montreal Harbor Commissioners for maintenance of buoys and beacons during the season of 1882. This is the second year in which this amount has been voted.

Mr. VAIL. Is this $451 paid to the British Government.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes; and the other $2,000 are expenses incurred in connection with the survey to which the attention of the House was called a few nights ago, on Lake Huron, Georgian Bay and other portions of water in the West.

Mr. BLAKE. What are those expenses?

Mr. BOWELL. I only know that $2,000 are required to cover them for the current year.

Mr. BLAKE. They must have been incurred already.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes, by vessels. I will give the particulars on Concurrence.

291. Indians—New Brunswick: To compensate the Rev. Mr. Bannon for services rendered to the Indians of Big Cove, N.B., during the two past years, 1881-82, 1882-83..... $150.00

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Bannon has been acting there for some time as chaplain for the Indians of this band, he is now acting as their missionary, and this is to pay him for his past services. In the future he will receive $100 a year.

Mr. CASGRAIN. How many Indians are there here?

Mr. MITCHELL. I may say, that the number of them is very considerable, and this missionary has attended them at all times very faithfully. I know that his services are arduous, and I consider his remuneration very small.

292. Indians—Manitoba and the North-West: To supplement the amounts voted for expenditure on various sub-heads in Manitoba and North-West..... $200,000.00

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is in addition to the vote of last year, which was insufficient. There has been an over expenditure on tools, cattle, seed, and provisions for destitute Indians of $46,000; and then a sum is required for future expenditure under Treaties 7 and 4, for destitute Indians, and it is calculated that there will be an over-expenditure on annuities of some $10,000. We think, however, that during the present fiscal year, we will not have to pay more than $200,000, although this will be most likely overrun after the 1st of July.

Mr. BLAKE. How does the hon. gentleman account for such an enormous over-expenditure under Treaties 7 and 4?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will give the particulars on Concurrence.

293. North-West Mounted Police—Additional amount required for this service..... $50,000.00

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Owing to the large requirements of the Canadian Pacific Railway survey and constructing party in the North-West, prices have generally increased, and, in addition, the duties of the Mounted Police are of such a nature as to necessitate a larger expenditure than during the previous year. Small detachments have been placed at convenient points along the line of railway, and on various trails by which liquor might be brought into the country via the United States. There will be required for forage and for more field work than was anticipated, $20,000. The fuel item has increased owing to the unusual severity of the winter, by an over-expenditure of $5,000; repairs and renewal of equipment, $3,000; transport of troops to the North-West, $2,000; increased rates for provisions, $5,000; and to complete, arms, clothing and accoutrements for the increased strength of the force to 500, making $15,000.

Mr. BLAKE. I hope the forage will get cheaper up there.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; but the consumption on the railway, and owing to the influx of immigrants, has been so great, that forage is dearer, much dearer than it was during the previous year.

295. Miscellaneous—To provide for the expenses incurred during the journey of His Excellency the Governor General and suite to British Columbia and return:..... $10,841.39

Mr. BLAKE. Does this cover the whole cost of the journey?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I am quite sure that it does.

Mr. BLAKE. This journey was not all connected with the journey to the North-West?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. No. It was to British Columbia. This is for the expenses while in British Columbia, except for the eastern portion of the trip, which was borne, of course, by the Governor General himself. The expenses incurred in going out there and in returning, and the expenses up into the interior.

315. To provide for the expenses in connection with the International Fisheries Exhibition..... $15,000.00

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman give us the details?

Mr. BOWELL. I hope the hon. gentleman will not ask for the details of the expenditure. I may say that $10,000 was voted last Session and this is an additional $15,000, and it is likely that another vote will have to be made making the whole appropriation $40,000. This money has been expended, or is to be expended, in the collection of all the different varieties of fish and other articles which have been sent to the exhibition. I may say that I have no details of the expenditure—that is to say, as to the parties to whom money is to be paid. If the House desires it I will give a detailed statement of the expenditure on Concurrence. I have a list here, giving the different headings of the articles for the exhibition, such as pickled fish, smoked fish, frozen fish, fish in alcohol, shell fish, specialties, &c., the food upon which the fish live.

Mr. BLAKE. I think, however, when we are asked to vote a sum which will be in the aggregate the hon. gentleman tells us $40,000, it would be reasonable to know in general terms what proportion of the vote is going in salaries, what is the plan adopted for collection, how much has been paid for the various articles, &c. There is a way of spending a sum of $40,000 in which you can pay a great deal of money to the individuals for services and very little for the articles.

Mr. BOWELL. I will endeavor to get that information for the hon. gentleman, but I may say that I happen to know that the amount spent in salaries and otherwise for these collections is as moderate a sum as it was possible to cover the work, and I think when the particulars have been read to the House the hon. gentleman will find that there has been no extravagance whatever. I may say that in conversation with the Minister of Marine I know that he has been as economical as possible consistent with making the exhibition one which would be creditable to the country.

Mr. BLAKE. I am not charging the hon. gentleman or the hon. Minister of the Department with extravagance, but I think he would hardly expect the heads of the Department to say to him. "Now, Bowell, I am really very extravagant in all these expenditures."

Mr. BOWELL. On the contrary, the fear was expressed that he would not spend as much money as was necessary to make an exhibition which would be creditable to the Department and to the country.

Mr. DAVIES. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will let us know what is the proportionate amount spent in the different Provinces in connection with this work.

Mr. BOWELL. Do you want to see if you got your share?

Mr. DAVIES. No, I do not ask the question from any such low ground, and I hope the hon. Minister will give us some information on this point.

Mr. BOWELL. I will endeavor to do so.

296. Miscellaneous—To provide for a retiring allowance to following members of the Dominion Police Force: Superintendent O'Neill, Sergeant-Major Connor, and Constables Kane, Purcell and Jones; and a gratuity to Mrs. Egan, widow of constable Egan..... $2,656.95

Mr. BLAKE. Were these men incapable of further service?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The practice of the Department is to allow the rate of one month's pay for every year's service. Mr. O'Neill was about sixty years of age, and had served ten years and 27 days. He was afflicted with asthma which incapacitated him for the discharge of his duties. Mr. Connor suffered from rheumatism, particularly while he was on duty in the police rooms of the Eastern block. He had been on service twelve years and six months. Mr. Kane was sixty-three years of age, and there were otherwise sufficient grounds for retirement. Mr. Purcell was short-sighted and could not read or write. Mr. Jones could neither read nor write, was fifty years of age, and for other reasons it was held that his retirement was necessary.

Mr. BLAKE. When was Purcell and Jones appointed?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In 1874 and 1873, respectively. Constable Egan was reported to be in ill health, and before the Order in Council was passed he died, so that it is proposed to pay the gratuity to his widow.

Mr. BOWELL.

Mr. BLAKE. Each allowance is calculated on the basis of one month's pay for each year's service?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

297. Miscellaneous—To pay the legal expenses incurred in the defence of Mr. John Burgess, steamboat inspector for the district of Montreal, who was tried for manslaughter in connection with the explosion of the boiler of the steamer Richelieu..... $743 50

Mr. BLAKE. What is the meaning of this vote?

Mr. BOWELL. Mr. Burgess was indicted by the Grand Jury for manslaughter in connection with the explosion of the boiler of the Richelieu. He was placed on trial and acquitted, and the Government assumed the costs of the defence which have been taxed by the Minister of Justice.

Mr. BLAKE. On what principle did the Government assume the cost of the defence?

Mr. BOWELL. Because it was thought that he was improperly prosecuted, as the explosion was not his fault, and the Government believed that he, having performed his duty, should not be put to the expense of defending himself. As has often been the case, he was prosecuted for having ostensibly neglected his duty, and it turned out that he had not neglected his duty, and the Government did not deem it advisable that he should be put to the expense of his own defence.

Mr. BLAKE. I think the statement that the Government assumed the cost of the defence is a very unfortunate statement. When a Grand Jury brings in a true bill against a man for a criminal offence, I do not think the Government have a right to form a judgment for themselves as to whether the officer performed his duty or not. That is to be decided in the ordinary courts, and the Government should not be on one side prosecuting and on the other side defending. If after the trial, a case is made, it is possible, though I do not see why, for the Government to say that they will reimburse the officer for the costs of his defence. I am afraid, as a result of this, that the defence of public officers will be conducted at a very large cost. If it is found that the Dominion Government are at their back, the expenses will be charged in a much more lavish manner than if their defence is at their own expense. When I had charge of the Department, several of these cases came up and I do not remember any case on which I recommended that the Government should assume the costs of the defence of any officer. We are all exposed to the risks of indictments in the course of our business, and it appears to me that the Government are setting a dangerous precedent in assuming the defence in this case.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Can the hon. gentleman tell us who was the counsel retained in that defence?

Mr. BOWELL. I do not know. Perhaps I did not make myself well understood; but the position of the Government is precisely that which has been indicated by the hon. leader of the Opposition. The memorandum placed in my hands states that he was placed on his trial and acquitted, and that the Government then assumed the expense, which was properly taxed by the officer.

Mr. BLAKE. Then are we to understand that in every case in which a Government officer is charged with a criminal offence, and is acquitted, the Government assume the cost of his defence?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the principle is well known, both in this country and in England, that each case is to be judged according to its merits. It rests upon each Department to protect its deserving officers, in the performance of their duty when they get into any difficulty. This should be done with great care and caution, and not without a thorough examination of the case; but if the Government want to have efficient officers, they must stand by them. I do not think this has increased the number of these cases. I do not think the people will get themselves indicted because the Government will pay the expenses of their trial. I do not know anything of the case in question, but I would be sorry to have the rule stated by the hon. gentleman laid down in all cases. For instance a Customs officer in the performance of his duty, might come into collision with smugglers, and through the caprice of the jury, or the failure of the evidence, a verdict might be given against him. If the Department were satisfied, notwithstanding the finding against him, that he was really acting in the discharge of his duty, and that there was a conspiracy to get an indictment against him, I think the Department should defend their own officer. The Government have always done that in England, and I do not think there have been any heavy votes in Parliament in consequence.

Mr. BLAKE. The case cited by the hon. gentleman is an unfortunate one. This is not a case in which there was a conspiracy against an officer, but it was decided by the Grand Jury that he should be indicted, because he had neglected his duty, and gave the certificate without a proper inspection. In the case of a wrong conviction, it would be better for the Government to take proceedings to have the verdict set aside, than to set it aside themselves by indemnifying the officer.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In this case, I understand, the Steamboat Inspector certified that he had examined the boiler, and that the inspection was sufficient, and the vessel was seaworthy. An explosion, however, took place, and he was indicted for it. He was tried, and he must have satisfied the jury that the certificate was a true one, and that he was not guilty of negligence or of misstatement in giving the certificate. If so, it appears to me he should be sustained. A poor man may be found guilty through inability to raise the funds to produce witnesses in his defence, and it would be very little satisfaction to him to say, we believe you are innocent, and to hand a sum of money to his family. If the responsible officer is satisfied the man is innocent, he should be protected.

Mr. MITCHELL. I would like to ask on what evidence the Government arrived at the conclusion that Mr. Burgess was entitled to be recouped for the money he paid out. It would not do to act simply on the ground that he was acquitted by the petty jury, but the fact should be ascertained irrespective of any decision of the petty jury.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No doubt the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries examined into the facts.

300. Miscellaneous—To provide for the payment of damages and costs in the suit Phair vs. Venning $707.50

Mr. BOWELL. Acting under the Order in Council of 11th June 1879, Mr. Venning seized the rod and fishing tackle of Mr. Phair while in the act of fishing from his own land in the Mersey River, which had been leased to Mr. Robertson. Mr. Phair claimed the right to fish as a riparian, and the case of the Inspector was dismissed. Mr. Phair then took action for trespass, and got judgment to the extent of $511, which with costs made $707.50.

Mr. BLAKE. No doubt if the Department, under misapprehension of the law, instructed the officer to take this course they must protect him from the consequences, but an officer is bound to use discretion, and from what I learn there are more actions than this one against him. The proper course would have been to take one case as a test case, and not give occasion for a number of cases. If his instructions were to take the course of laying the Government open to a number of actions, his instructions were not what they should have been.

Mr. WELDON. The hon. gentleman says the officer was instructed by the Department to take these actions, but one case would have been sufficient, because it was well known the right of the Government was to be contested. Since these Estimates have been prepared the verdicts in the other cases have been sustained, and votes, no doubt, will have to be brought down to meet those cases as well. In one of the cases the damages were reduced from $3,000 to $1,500.

Mr. BLAKE. If this gentleman was instructed to take steps against three or four different persons, which involved the Government in damages of $500, $1,500, $1,200, and $1,000 the Department should pay the damages, but if not the officer should pay them.

Mr. BOWELL. You will find the instructions in the papers laid before the House, given to the different fishery officers. Whatever fault there was in the matter lay with the Government and not with the officer, because he acted under the Order in Council passed in 1879. That is the principle on which the Department has been conducted for the last six or seven years. I do not desire to enter into the riparian question, but the late Government carried the principle of the right which they declared the Dominion held over these fisheries, further than their predecessors. When the hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) presided over that office he took great care not to interfere with what he considered certain rights which the owners of these fisheries had; but his successor taking a different view of the constitutional question, issued orders far beyond those which had been issued by his predecessor, and it was carrying out in 1879, the principle which had guided the Department from 1873 up to that time, that this Order was passed. Whether the officer exceeded his duty, as the hon. gentleman says, I am not prepared to say; but my recollection of the transaction is this: that this inspector of New Brunswick was acting under instructions from the Department, that he seized these rods and endeavored to enforce what he believed to be the law, as he had been directed. Whether he went further than he ought to have gone, or used that discretion which should characterize all officers when there is a dispute, particularly as to the rights of the people, is a question that I am not prepared to answer at the present moment. There is another vote to pay damages obtained against Robertson vs. The Queen, in which the question of the right to lease these fisheries was decided against the Crown.

Mr. BLAKE. The late Government did not carry out this principle, whatever it was, with reference to the riparian rights so far as to bring down in the Estimates votes to pay for large damages recovered against their officers. I should not complain of a test case, I should not complain of the Government deciding to take a proper opportunity of assisting the principle which they thought was right; but I do say—that when it was known that this was a disputed question, when it was known that the riparian proprietors took a different view, when it was known that all that was wanted was an opportunity of testing the case—to make three or four seizures of implements and to make them in such a manner as resulted in such heavy damages, was an act of gross indiscretion on the part of the officer, unless it was warranted by instructions from the Department, and if there were such instructions I would like to see them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have just learned that the case was in this wise: the officer found Phair, Hanson and Stedman on the fishing ground. He stopped them, and as regards Hanson and Stedman the interruption was merely nominal. Phair resisted and there was a scuffle and the verdict was heavy in his case. You can imagine the spirit of the officers who were anxious to prevent unlimited fishing. The jury found a verdict for Hanson for $1,000, and for Stedman for $3,000, afterwards reduced to $1,500, for the nominal offence, they having been merely stopped, and I am informed those two cases will go to appeal.

Mr. WELDON. I think Phair and Hanson had previously brought an action against Robertson, or the lessee, who had endeavored to enforce the law, and that question was then pending before the courts. The jury felt that the Government, or its officers, were endeavoring to set the court at defiance, and I believe that is the reason the heavy damages were awarded. Another case is that of a man named Spur. Spur was willing to take a license from the Government, and on making application the answer was, to show his title, and what was he willing to pay for it. The next, the Inspector of Fisheries came and took his rod from him by force and then brought him before the Magistrate. At the very time that was done, there was an injunction in the Court of Equity, confirmed by the Supreme Court of Fredericton, prohibiting the lessee from fishing in that river. Now, on the whole question was pending the case of Robertson vs. The Queen before the Court of Appeal. This action on the part of these officials was very unwise.

Mr. MITCHELL. The hon. Minister has correctly stated what the real cause of this trouble has been. When we came into Confederation, we found diverse laws existing in the several Provinces. I endeavored to harmonize these laws, and in carrying them out I gave such instructions to the officers in my Department as to prevent any great outrage of the feelings of any of the persons engaged in the fisheries in either of the Provinces. I may say that for the seven years I administered the existing laws of the land in relation to Fisheries, I do not recollect a single case in which any difficulty arose between the Department and the fishermen. The hon. Minister has correctly stated the position I took at the time he commenced issuing these leases. I claimed there was a right in the land bordering on the river, and in the very lease to Mr. Robertson, out of which this litigation has arisen, I put in a saving clause that the proprietors along the river should have the right of fishing off their lands. A warm discussion subsequently occurred in this very place between Sir Albert Smith, late Minister of Marine and Fisheries, and myself, in which I claimed the right of the proprietors to fish off their own lands. It was then contended by Sir Albert Smith that I was wrong in my law, and the report of that debate I hold in my hands. The court has since sustained the view I took in relation to that matter. Of course it was a question that any gentlemen might differ upon; there are very nice legal points involved, at all events. I was so convinced that I was right, that I inserted in that very lease, a clause reserving the right to fish off the banks. After 1873, when the then Minister came into the Fishery Department, a different rule was adopted, and instructions were issued to the fishery officers—I will only speak of my own county—which led to a state of ferment and excitement, which has never to this hour been allayed. The present Department is as active on the policy which they found existing, and it is, I hold, by the decision of the Court, the fact that the position assumed by myself in 1867 was proved to be substantially the correct and sound one. As to whether this special officer performed his duties with moderation or not, I cannot say. All I speak of is from what I have heard that he had the direction of the Ministers, both the predecessor of the hon. gentleman representing the Department of Fisheries in this Government, and the hon. gentleman who represented the Department in the Mackenzie Government, to carry out the law, and being a very zealous officer he was, perhaps, somewhat injudicious at times, and adopted means which have led to decisions for damages. But he was carrying out the orders of the Department, and the House is bound to supply the means to pay damages incurred by him in carrying out the instructions of his superior officers.

Mr. BLAKE. If it be correct that the question had been tried in Robertson and the Queen, and would ultimately be definitely determined by an appeal in that case, and an injunction actually existing at the time, what necessity existed under those circumstances to take the rods of three other gentlemen who were fishing? This was to make other test cases, whereas one would have been sufficient. The question having been determined in the case of Robertson and the Queen, I am not surprised that a jury should give heavy damages when they found the Government acted in defiance of what had, up to that time, been laid down as the law.

Mr. WELDON. I do not think the late Government took any active steps. With respect to Robertson, who was a lessee, he undertook to enforce his rights. An action was brought, and the first time the question was tried was on a special case in which the title to the river was admitted to be vested in the Crown. He succeeded, and the case was carried no further. Subsequently an action was brought and the question was then decided by the Superior Court of New Brunswick, that the lease was void. I applied immediately afterwards, in April, 1879, to the Department of Marine and Fisheries, stating that I would carry the case to the Supreme Court if the Government would give a certain undertaking. Instead of doing this, they issued an order, in June, 1879, to the effect that no person should fish in any stream, with rod and line, except by license of the Department—and that is the notice which has created all the trouble. Actions were subsequently brought. The Robertson case had been decided, but the case eventually went to the Supreme Court. While all these cases were pending, instructions were issued to Mr. Venning, and seizures were made.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am not defending the Government, who are perfectly able to defend themselves, but I rise to show the accuracy of the facts I have mentioned in connection with this case. The hon. gentleman suggests that the difficulty has arisen in consequence of acts done by the hon. Mr. Pope, the late Minister of Marine and Fisheries, but he omits to state that the hon. gentleman was carrying out the policy of his predecessor. There is this fact in favor of the action taken by the Minister, the hon. Mr. Pope. The case of Robertson, which was the first case, was the strongest possible case that could be brought against the Government, because his lease contained special provisions, and the hon. gentleman acted wisely in not taking that case to appeal.

301. Miscellaneous—To provide for the publication of the proceedings of the Royal Society$5,000.00

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Royal Society, as is known, has been established for the same purpose as the Royal Society of England, for the promotion of science, and especially natural science. It has commenced under the most favorable auspices. I believe that all Canadians of science and high standing have taken up the subject very warmly, and many of them have already read very valuable papers, which, if they are sustained, they will continue to do in all branches of natural science. That high scientific gentleman, Dr. Dawson, the head of McGill College, is the President of it; and he and the Society assure the Government that their transactions will do no discredit to Canada, nor would they discredit any country in the world. We are fortunate in having within our bounds, men of high scientific attainments, who have already taken the matter up, and promised in the various branches of science to prepare and publish papers; but as the House will understand, there is no object in their preparing these papers, unless they can get them published; and it is proposed, with the sanction of Parliament, to aid them in the publication of their transactions, and to ask that this sum be voted for three years, in order not only that the papers now being prepared, and which have been read, should be published, but also that there should be an assurance given that they would be published in the future. In order to strengthen the case of the society to assistance of this kind, I received from Dr. Dawson, and also from another source, a memorandum of what was done with reference to the societies in England and the colonies. I will read this memorandum; it is as follows:—

In England the Royal Society has free quarters for its meetings, library and offices in Burlington House, and receives an annual parliamentary grant for researches and publications of £5,000.

In the United States the National Academy is to have its publications paid for by the Government, but I do not know to what precise amount. The Smithsonian Institution receives large public aids. In its report for 1880, I find grants by Congress to the amount of $164,000—for accumulation and preservation of collections, $47,500; for buildings, cases, &c., $88,500; and for researches and publications, $28,000. This is in addition to the income of the institution from its own investments, and the very large sums spent in Geological Surveys.

The Institute of France is maintained by the public treasury, and pensions or salaries are given to its members, but I have not been able to ascertain the amount.

The old Province of Canada gave subsidies, ranging from $1,000 per annum to smaller sums, to several scientific and literary societies, and, I believe, these are continued by the Local Legislatures. They cannot, however, provide for the work which a Dominion Society might accomplish.

I am informed that money aids are given to Scientific Societies in Australia, but cannot learn the amounts.

It may be stated as the result of general experience that a National Scientific and Literary Society cannot be really successful and useful without public aid; and in the institution of such a society in a country so widely scattered and with so little of scientific and literary life, this would seem to be peculiarly necessary.

GRANTS MADE IN ENGLAND AND CANADA TO LITERARY AND SCIENTIFIC SOCIETIES.

England—

In the year ending 31st March, 1882, the Imperial Parliament voted £17,600 sterling in aid of "Learned Societies and Scientific Investigation," being an increase of £550 over a similar vote in the previous Session of Parliament.

Of this amount, there was allotted to the Royal Society, "to defray the expenses of Scientific Investigations," £1,000. This has been for many years an annual grant.

Similar societies in Edinburgh and in Dublin, as also the Meteorological and the Geographical Societies and Academies of Music, including the Academy recently founded, have been assisted out of the main grant above stated.

Canada—

Previous to 1867, grants were annually made by the Legislature to Literary and Scientific Associations in Upper and Lower Canada.

Since Confederation, the Legislatures of Ontario and Quebec have continued to assist societies in those Provinces. For instance, the Legislature of Ontario makes annually the following grants:—

Mechanics' Institutes	$26,200
Ontario School of Artists	500
Ontario School of Art and Design	1,100
London do do	1,000
Canadian Institute	750
Institut Canadien, Ottawa	500

The Legislature of Quebec makes the following annual grants:—

Natural History Society	$ 700
Montreal Historical Society	350
Numismatic and Antiquarian Society	100
Quebec Literary and Historical Society	750
Geographical Society	300
Académie de Musique	100
Towards publication of "Le Naturaliste Canadien."	400
St. Patrick's Literary Institute	300

These are the evidences of what has been done elsewhere; and I really cannot believe, that we can in any way more promote scientific study and encourage and develop physical and natural science in all its forms, than by encouraging this society, and by giving it this support. Of course everyone knows, that philosophical transactions are not like popular novels; they are not generally interesting, and the publication of their transactions would not yield sufficient to pay for the cost of it. This is not done in older countries, and certainly it would not be so here; for these reasons, the Government take the responsibility of asking Parliament to give this vote.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Is it intended to have these publications printed by the Parliamentary Printer?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh, no. They will print them and do as they please in this respect. The papers will be philosophical and very technical, and therefore, they will be issued, I take it, under the supervision of Dr. Dawson or Dr. Sterry Hunt, or of men of that kind, most likely at Montreal; but all we will do, will be to give the vote.

Mr. ROSS. There is no reason I can see why Parliament, which votes the money, should not say that the papers should be printed like parliamentary documents, and by this means a larger edition could be obtained for the same sum of money. Besides there would be the prospect of distributing them among the members of the House like other documents. These papers would be very valuable judging by the indications I have seen of those which are likely to be read. It would be very well, I think excellent, to cause a certain number to be published, and the hon. gentleman should see if they are not printed by the Parliamentary Printers—which, I think, should be done—that, at least, a certain distribution is made among the members of the House. In fact I see no reason why we, who give the money, should not say that these papers should be printed by the Parliamentary Printers, who are quite competent to do the work, which is nothing peculiar but what is done in any printing office.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will state the number of volumes to be printed and distributed, and how far the vote covers the cost of printing, and how far, of superintendence, &c.?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am not able to do that. The statement made by the deputation, the committee of the society, that communicated with myself and the members of the Government, was, that it would take almost this sum to enable them to bring out their transactions for each year. I take it, as with any other society, that we must trust to them to use the money economically and well; and of course, they will publish the transactions as far as the money will go. We must leave that to them, and I do not see how we can avoid it.

Mr. BLAKE. I am sorry that the proposal is brought before us in so vague a form, and no information is furnished, so that the Committee may know for what object the money is required. For my own part, the statement which the hon. gentleman has made as to the grant formerly given, and now continued, is a sufficient indication of the difficult path on which it is now proposed we shall start. It is true there were grants for various literary institutions by the old Province of Canada, which was a legislative union, and it is true that these grants, to a larger or smaller extent, have been continued and developed, in some instances, by each of the two Provinces. This is a sort of system of higher education; it belongs to the literary and educational element; but if, to the Provincial assistance, there is now to be superadded a Dominion grant, I fear the true interests of these institutions will suffer. I must say that I have more confidence in the real vitality of an institution of this kind which sought for its support by subscription from those all over the Dominion who feel interested in its object, and was supported mainly in that way, than an institution which begins by proposing that the public shall become its dry nurse. The Canadian Institute of the old time, which is still subsisting, still enjoys a small grant from the Government, and they have been able to carry on for many years the publication of their transactions in a more limited area than is proposed for this society, because they had a constituency who were willing to subscribe for the purpose of getting their transactions published. If you are going to tell the public at first that they are not going to subscribe enough, but you will take it out of their pockets by taxation, I say that you will interfere with the interests, you will not advance the true progress of the society, which must depend for its real vitality, not upon the interest of a few eminent literary or scientific men, who have their lucubrations published in their transactions, but in the widely diffused interests of those who read and do not write, and unless that stimulus on the part of the promoters of the society—which you are now taking away—is maintained, the society will not succeed in the true sense of the term. The hon. gentleman says that the English Government gives £5,000, and he proposes that we should give $5,000, or one-fifth of that sum. If our resources or our income were one-fifth of those of England, I could understand such a proposition; but our circumstances are not the same. I think, if the hon. gentleman had been able to show a large subscription list on the part of this society, or that there were a large number of persons sufficiently interested in its objects to take these transactions, there might have been some color for his asking Parliament for a supplement to these other funds; but we are to do what the public should have done in its individual capacity, and the public in its individual capacity is to provide the supplement.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If the hon. gentleman's views were taken before Parliament, we might bid adieu forever to the hope of any scientific society publishing its transactions. When the United States, with fifty odd millions of inhabitants, and England with 33,000,000 of inhabitants, cannot support its scientific institutions by subscriptions, what chance would we have here? The hon. gentleman says there should be sufficient intelligence among the people to subscribe for these books. He might say that there should be a sufficient degree of political curiosity among the people to subscribe for Hansard, but he knows that we could have no Hansard without Parliamentary assistance; and so we cannot have the transactions of these societies published without Parliamentary assistance. He says there should be sufficient philosophical enquiry in the country to induce subscriptions to these publications; but we must invite the people by letting them know that we have scientific men publishing scientific papers and societies publishing their transactions. They must see these volumes in our public libraries when they go to look into particular subjects in which they are interested, and by degrees there will be generated, even in this young country, a strong desire for the dissemination of science. Persons of scientific tastes who are desirous of pursuing scientific pursuits or studies will have the opportunity of doing so by finding these volumes in our libraries. It is also to be remembered that this is the only subscription which has been given to any society, and if this country desires to have anything like a publication to the world of how much physical science or study exists in Canada, they can only have it by the publication of the transactions of these societies.

Mr. CASEY. It seems to me that if we are to pay for the publication of these transactions, the Government should have a considerable number in their own hands for free distribution.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am not prepared to say. But we may make such arrangements as we can without crushing out the energies of the society.

Mr. CASEY. The object of the publications is to get them circulated. I do not understand that they are going to sell them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Of course, they are going to sell them. Every society of that kind sells its publications.

Mr. CASEY. The argument used was that we should assist in the publication because these books could not be sold.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; but the sales would not pay the cost of publication. I have no doubt we will get a considerable number.

Mr. BLAKE.

302. Miscellaneous—To meet payments to extra clerks for services rendered in preparation of returns ordered by Parliament..... $20,000.00

Mr. BLAKE. What is this?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Earlier in this Session, when all kinds of returns were being asked for, I said that the returns were very large and numerous, and that they involved such a large amount of work that Parliament must be prepared to pay the cost of those returns. Formerly they were paid out of Contingencies, but the amount of labor and expense involved is so enormous that no Departmental contingencies could stand it. In my own Department alone there has already been paid upwards of $3,000, and the returns are not one-fourth through yet. They are working with a heavy staff of people put on specially for this work.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the estimate?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is impossible to say what it is going to cost.

Mr. BLAKE. This is a guess.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is simply a guess.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman knows that there were always extra expenses for returns, but they were paid out of Contingencies.

Mr. CASEY. If this sum is simply removed from the Contingencies, it ought to be entered as taken from the Contingencies. I would ask whether any part of the duty of preparing returns is expected to be done by the staff of the Departments?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Of course.

Mr. CASEY. And this is for what the staff could not do themselves?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is quite impossible to take any considerable portion of the permanent staff and employ them exclusively in making returns. Special copyists must be brought in for the Session.

Mr. BLAKE. That is true; but there are two observations to be made in this matter. One is that the hon. gentleman is transferring to another head that which is and ought to be part of the Departmental Contingencies; but instead of this item being placed under that head, we find the Contingencies as large as ever, and this vote is smuggled into another portion of the Estimates. It is not a satisfactory way, either as to the absolute or relative expenditure, to place under Miscellaneous that which should be part of the Contingencies of the different Departments. The other observation I have to make is this: It must be perfectly palpable to the hon. Minister that Parliament will require information under certain heads; certain returns are moved for every year; and I maintain that a well administered Department would look ahead, and that preparation would be made beforehand to meet the demand of Parliament for these obvious returns. Information is demanded for the proper consideration of public measures. When we have these Estimates, many items of which we are asked to pass and to concur in almost immediately, without sufficient information, it does seem to me that the material for an intelligent judgment upon all these matters ought to be prepared by the Ministers and brought down with the proposals. The newspapers tell us that the Legislature of British Columbia has passed upon some proposals of the Government; and it is rumored that we are to have before us some measure relating to them. I hope that we shall not have to move for the papers, but that the Government will bring down the papers indicating the conclusion of the negotiations which have been going on from year to year. If there has been any conclusion to these negotiations this Parliament should have been the first to know it; but the British Columbia Parliament knows it, while we do not know any more than is contained in four or five lines of a telegram. I mention these only as examples. It appears to me that intelligent provision should be made for the demands of Parliament in these respects, so that we might be relieved of much of our present difficulty, and would be supplied with the material for a more intelligent discussion of public questions.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It may be all right to introduce a new practice; but I do not know that any Government since Confederation has followed the course the hon. gentleman suggests. A Minister bringing a measure before Parliament should, of his own motion, bring down the necessary papers in connection with it. But I do not agree with the hon. gentleman, that the expenditures for preparing Departmental returns are properly part of the Departmental Contingencies. The Contingencies of a Department are the contingent expenses of that Department. If Parliament wants to get information, the expense should not form part of these Contingencies. On every political platform they will say: Look at this extravagant Government and at the enormous contingencies in every Department. If hon. members take the responsibility of making motions which we know cause great expense, the responsibility should be put upon them individually, and on Parliament as a whole.

Mr. BLAKE. It is very well to adopt a new practice now, but the other one has been in existence since ten years ago, and this will enable the Government to show not a reduction, but an amount the same as last year for Contingencies, when they should really show a large increase.

303. Miscellaneous—Factory Commission, advance to Mr. Blakely.....$300.00

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Mr. Blakely was employed to visit Massachusetts, and report before Parliament met, the results and operation of the factory system there.

Mr. BLAKE. There are valuable reports of this issued by the State of Massachusetts, which would have given the hon. gentleman all he required.

306. Miscellaneous—500 copies of the "Parliamentary Companion".....$1,000.00

Mr. BLAKE. This book is getting smaller and dearer every year. I remember when it only cost $1.50 and was considerably larger, and, besides, this year I have heard many complaints that it contains a great many inaccuracies. I would like to know what are done with the 200 copies in excess of the 300 required to supply the members.

Mr. CASEY. They cannot be required in the Departments, for a division sheet would give the Departments all the information they require, the names and counties of hon. members.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This volume is rather a flattering biography of each of us, but I do not know that it will give much information to the public if every member of Parliament keeps his own volume to himself. In order to make the publication of any value each member should give it to some intelligent supporter in his county. I really cannot tell what is done with the other two hundred. They are not burnt or locked up—I think they must be in use in the Departments. I have not seen the volume this year and cannot speak as to its appearance or accuracy, but I am inclined to think that $2 a volume is rather a high price. Of course, it depends altogether on whether it is paying or not; if it is not paying the publisher will drop it.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not object to the grant for the "Parliamentary Companion" if it was properly prepared. When I was at the head of the Department of Justice fifty copies were taken in that Department. I thought that was unreasonable, and we cut the number down to four copies, which was amply sufficient.

311. Miscellaneous—To pay damages awarded in the case of Robertson vs. the Queen..... $2,794.32

Mr. BOWELL. This is to cover damages to C. A. Robertson under the fishery lease which the Provincial and Exchequer Courts, and subsequently the Supreme Court, declared to have been illegally granted by the Crown. I am informed this was a test case between the Minister of Justice and the counsel for Mr. Robertson.

Mr. BLAKE. How much of that was damages and how much costs?

Mr. WELDON. The costs recovered by Hanson against Robertson were about $1,600, the costs in the Supreme Court having been about $1,100.

312. To pay the Merchants' Bank the cost of suit in the case of Merchants' Bank vs. Regina..... $1,205.42

Mr. COSTIGAN. This is in consequence of a suit brought by the Merchants' Bank vs. The Queen, for the repayment of slide dues collected on timber that had gone through the slides. I think I stated a few days ago, in introducing a Bill on the subject, that the Government had been unable to force the payment of those dues—not that they were unable to enforce the payment of the dues on the lumber, but in this case, dues had accrued for several years, and an arrangement was made between the parties and the Department that they should pay the highest rate of dues, that is, $2 per thousand, on the timber that had passed through, until the whole amount was paid off. They paid $2 the first year after the arrangement was made. They held afterwards that they had paid it unwittingly, not knowing it to be an excessive charge. The second year they received payment, but the Department enforced the full payment of $2 per thousand. The case went to court, and the Judges took the ground that all that the lumber was liable for was the charge due upon that particular quantity, and that it was not liable for stumpage due on the previous years' cut. Therefore, the case was given against the Crown, and the money paid in under protest had to be repaid.

Mr. BLAKE. Was the Merchants Bank the original defaulter?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. Skead was the operator.

Mr. BLAKE. Then the default still exists for those back dues?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The case having failed, the Government will lose that amount. It was almost impossible to collect dues on the passing of timber through the slide. In 1873, 1874, 1875, when the times were hard, no steps were taken to collect those dues. There is no difficulty when one year's dues are alone to be collected, but two or three years' dues had accrued in the case I have mentioned. By an arrangement made between Mr. Skead and the Department, he agreed to pay a higher rate of dues in order to cover his arrears. For the first year the amount was paid, and then the Merchants' Bank stepped in.

313. Post Office..... $142,720.00

Mr. CARLING. A large portion of this amount, no less than $33,720 is to pay the Intercolonial Railway an additional rate of $20 per mile for post office service. There is something like $45,000 additional for services in Manitoba and the North-West, and other amounts for an increase of business in all portions of the Dominion, especially in the Province of Ontario.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman state what was the previous rate on the Intercolonial?

Mr. CARLING. It was $100 a mile; this year it will be $120, and next year it will be $130. The rate paid on the Grand Trunk is $160; Great Western, $124.

Mr. BLAKE. It appears as if the increase is made more for the purpose of enabling the Intercolonial Railway to show a balance.

314. Charges on Revenue—To provide for amount required to complete Customs service in the Province of Manitoba.....$25,000.00

Mr. BOWELL. This is to provide for the extra amount of work devolving upon the Customs Department in Winnipeg, as well as Emerson. In 1871-72 the amount collected was $433,500. The revenue already paid up to March this year is $1,236,770, and from information I have received it will reach at least $1,750,000 for the present year. When it is considered that there have been from $10,000,000 to $12,000,000 worth of goods imported, on which no duty is paid, but which pass through the United States, and consequently have to be entered and bonds cancelled in the same way as if they were dutiable goods, with the exception of not collecting duty on them, the Committee will see the amount of extra work devolving on the staff. When in Winnipeg last year I learned that over 600 cars entered the city in one day, and this will give some idea of the work devolving on the officers.

Mr. BLAKE. Is the hon. gentleman able to inform us whether the indications are that the importations will continue to be concentrated at Winnipeg?

Mr. BOWELL. As soon as the spring trade opens and we establish offices at Portage, Brandon and Regina a large proportion of the trade will go to those different points, and a large proportion of the business will go direct from old Canada to Thunder Bay, and by the Pacific road to Winnipeg.

315. To provide for the cost of obtaining stamps and for the stamping of imported and Canadian Tobacco, under the provisions of 43 Vic., c. 19 $13,000.00

Mr. COSTIGAN. This is required to make up an actual deficiency in the estimate of last year, when $12,000 were voted; but it seems that this year, the actual cost will be in the neighborhood of $25,000. During the first two months of the year, the expenditure was $10,540.23, but this year 1882-83 is not properly chargeable with the whole amount, because some payments of 1881-82 ran into last year. One reason I have for only asking the usual vote this year, is, that we expect it to cost very much less. The denominations of stamps—which, of course, we propose to change—used up to the present, were over 250 or nearly 300, and it is now proposed to reduce them at the outside to thirty-six. The House will see that there will be a very large reduction in the cost; and I think it is quite certain, that the estimate for the present year will be quite sufficient under this head.

317. To pay F. G. Wainwright for extra services in Halifax Office, from 14th October to 20th December, 1881. $40.00

Mr. COSTIGAN. These extra services were rendered while the Committee was at Halifax. He engaged Mr. Wright to do the work at night and certified that it ought to be paid.

318. To pay H. H. Grant, difference between his salary and salary of his predecessor, as Collector of Inland Revenue, at Halifax, from 1st January, 1882, to 30th June, 1883..... $300.00

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. Grant was appointed to take the place of an officer named Mr. McLeod, a defaulter, I think, and on a lower salary, with a promise that if he proved capable, he would get the salary of Mr. McLeod. He proved to be a thorough officer, and this $300 is to make up the salary. Mr. McLeod received $1,400, I think, and Grant was receiving $1,200.

Mr. BLAKE. If competent, he should have got his predecessor's salary, and if incompetent he should not have been appointed at all.

Mr. CARLING.

Mr. DALY. I think he was in the office previously, and it was merely a matter of promotion, and of his qualifications to fill the office. I am glad to see that he has done so to very great satisfaction.

319. To pay J. Griffith, Collector of Inland Revenue, Sherbrooke, difference required to increase his salary to $1,000 per annum, from 1st July, 1881, to 30th June, 1883..... $1,000.00

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. Griffith has been Collector at Sherbrooke since 1871. He was appointed at a salary of $400, which, of course, was low then, but the collections of the office at the time were $1,932. There has been since a steady increase in the collections, and the business of the office, from $1,900, in 1871, to $58,416, at the present time. No increase was made in his salary until a year ago, when $200 more were given him. Of course we recognize the principle in the Civil Service Act, and, by the policy we have pursued, the salaries should be based, to a certain extent, at any rate, on receipts, and volume of business done; and this division seems long ago to have reached the point where this man's salary should have been raised. I dare say that, if the matter had been brought to the attention of the Department, this would have been recommended. This $1,000 is to bring his salary up to $1,000 for the last two years, making up the difference between that figure and $600—to which, I think, he is justly entitled.

Mr. BLAKE. It seems to be a very mysterious way of acting. In the first place, the attention of the Department was not called to it, and therefore the Department did not call for more money. In 1882-83 the salary was increased from $400 to $600, so either an application was sent in or the Department took the case into consideration, and it was decided that he was entitled to $600, and to ask Parliament to vote it. But now it is not merely an increase to $1,000 a year in the future, but to make it up for the past two years to $1,000 a year. Well, it seems to be a very extraordinary proposal. If no application was made by or on behalf of this officer until last year, and if last year the Department considered the case, and themselves thought that to $600 he was entitled, how is the salary now raised to $1,000, and even for two years previous? Besides this is a very inconvenient precedent to increase a salary for two years gone by. Once again you open the door which you will find is very difficult to shut, and by agreeing to this proposal, when we were asked last year to increase this man's salary to $600, we are now to be told that we were wrong last year, that then a wrong proposal was made. What we ought to have done was to increase the salary to $1,000, and more, to increase it to $1,000 a year for two years gone by, and therefore, we are just in the same position as if we had done him what is now deemed an injustice in the earlier years. Under what misapprehension was the hon. gentleman? Under what circumstance did the hon. gentleman or his predecessor propose what is now said to be wholly inadequate, the increase of 1882-83? Who misinformed him? Did the officer make that proposal, or somebody else on his behalf? How does the hon. gentleman now come to increase this salary in the future, which may be all right; I have not analyzed the accounts. I say nothing adverse to it—but judging the Department and the Government by its own proposals, and the salary assigned, I think a little more explanation is required before we should be called upon to adopt a very inconvenient precedent, of a lump increase to an officer's salary for two years back.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is not quite two years—last year and this year.

Mr. BLAKE. From the 1st of July, 1881, to the 1st of June, 1883, appears to be somewhere about two years. Of course, the individual case may be all right, and I do not condemn it, but I say you could not set a more dangerous precedent than to say to the Civil Service that you can make a claim to-day if you think you have been underpaid for a number of years, and Parliament may allow you a grant of $1,000.

323. Inspection of Petroleum—To payment to Martin Battle for extra services performed by him for the six years preceding 1st July, 1882, in connection with the establishing of an uniform method of inspecting petroleum.....$400.00

Mr. COSTIGAN. Mr. Battle was a collector of Inland Revenue at Ottawa. He was employed for several years by Mr. Brunel to assist him in perfecting the mode of inspecting the oil, and Mr. Battle rendered valuable services in that direction. The claim would have been settled long ago only that Mr. Battle always insisted that he was entitled to $100 for each year that he had done this extra work.

334. Public Works—Maintenance and Repairs: Telegraphic lines, British Columbia.....$3,000.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The service has only been for the daytime, and as there was no communication at night for the convenience of the press and business men, petitions and letters were forwarded to me asking for a night service.

Mr. BLAKE. This will add $5,000 a year to the cost? How does this service work?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The revenue is $33,000, instead of $1,000 or $5,000 as it was a few years ago. The lines have all been put in good order, and they do not require a large amount to keep them up. The salaries are larger, of course, because the number of stations is greater. But we expect that the service will be self-sustaining before very long.

Mr. BLAKE. I think the hon. gentleman should consider, though, of course, not in a close or churlish way, whether there is a reasonable ground for continuing this night service.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is my intention to do so.

345. Dominion Lands—Chargeable to Capital..... $150,000.00

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I took a vote in the Estimates of 1883-84, and this is for surveys up to the 1st of July. I may say that the date of making up the estimates for this service depend entirely on the time surveyors reach the scene of their operation, and, as I stated to the House the other night, this promises to be an exceptionally favorable season in that respect.

346. Unprovided Items.....$542,992.32

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). There are so many items in this aggregate that perhaps the hon. gentleman will allow us to discuss them fully on Concurrence if the vote passes now.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

THE ORANGE DEMONSTRATION—EXPUNGING FROM THE DEBATES.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Before you adjourn the House, I desire to call your attention to an incident which took place this afternoon. The hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Landry), contrary to your ruling, continued to read to the House some newspaper extracts which, I think, would have been better left aside altogether. As his address was not concluded with a motion, I think the whole matter, which may not appear in our Journals, but which may appear in the Hansard, ought not to appear at all. I think that your ruling ought to be followed, because if the hon. member for Montmagny did not make a motion, I think the subject to which he drew your attention ought to be dropped, and ought not to appear at all.

Mr. DALY. I think, in justice to the hon. member for East Hastings (Mr. White), who may have desired to make some explanation of the report read in this House, that the suggestion my hon. friend has just made should be listened to. It is quite possible that the report which was read was not an accurate report of what was said, and no opportunity was given for the explanation which I really hoped the hon. member for East Hastings would have been able to give. I believe, in justice to that hon. gentleman, that the proceedings should not form any part of the Debates of this House.

Mr. BLAKE. It is quite impossible that you, Mr. Speaker, can give any direction to the reporters what shall or shall not appear in the Hansard. The Hansard is a report of what is said in this House. We may use disorderly expressions; but what has been said must be left there. A motion made may be removed from the Journals of the House, though the formal expunction of a motion from the Journals is very rarely done. I remember one case in the Senate of the United States, where they were about twenty years at the task, and one in England, in which a motion of Sir Robert Peel was removed at the instance of Mr. Cobden; but I do not know of any others. But to expunge the report of those proceedings from the Hansard is out of the question. I think it must remain there, although I am very sorry for it.

Mr. SPEAKER. Without some direction from the House, I cannot take action.

Motion agreed to; and (at 2 35 o'clock a.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

TUESDAY, 15th May, 1883.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

ST. JOHN BRIDGE AND RAILWAY EXTENSION COMPANY.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that the House, to-morrow, resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolution:—

Resolved,—That it is expedient to authorize the Governor in Council to advance to the St. John Bridge and Railway Extension Company from time to time as the work of constructing the undertaking of the company progresses, as certified by the Chief Engineer of Government Railways, sums of money by way of loan not exceeding 80 per cent. of the amount expended for such construction, and not exceeding in the whole the sum of $100,000, such loan to be subject to the following conditions: The company to pay interest annually on the amounts advanced at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum, and to execute a deed of mortgage to the Crown constituting the loan hereby authorized a first charge upon the undertaking; the company to be entitled to pay off the loan with interest at any time within fifteen years from the making of the first advance; the Governor in Council to have power within five years from the same date to assume possession of the undertaking, on payment including advances already made and interest thereon, of the sum expended, and 10 per cent. in addition thereto; and also to assume such possession in the event of the Company failing to carry out the undertaking as provided by their charter, on payment to the Company of the difference between the amount advanced and interest and 80 per cent. of the outlay on the works when the same are assumed by the Governor in Council.

Mr. BLAKE. Explain.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The resolution explains itself. I will go into particulars when it comes up for consideration.

Mr. BLAKE. I am sorry the hon. gentleman does not offer some explanation of this resolution. Of course, the wisdom of the various stages for money resolutions which Parliament has prescribed is entirely thwarted if the explanations are put off to the later stages. I should like the hon. gentleman to inform us at the earliest time, if he cannot now, what the chartered power of this company is, what its capital is, what its borrowing power is, and whether it has power to execute a first charge of the description proposed in this resolution. It is a local company, and we have no means of knowing anything about it, from our own reports.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I may say that the assent of the Crown has been given to this resolution. Some legislation has recently been had by the company in amendment of their powers. I shall be able, to-morrow, to state what the amendments were, and to lay on the Table various information with reference to the company.

Motion agreed to.

THE FISHERIES ACT.

Mr. BOWELL, in the absence of Mr. McLelan, moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 101) further to amend the Fisheries Act.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. WELDON. This clause, read with the new subsection 6, practically prohibits fishing in private waters without a license from the Government, and it is a question whether that is within the powers of Parliament. The section which proposed to repeal that section provided that the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries had the right to grant licenses where the exclusive right by law already existed. Under that section leases were issued for nine years on various rivers, giving the lessee the exclusive right to fish. Under these leases arose disputes between the owners of land and the lessees. Under the old Statute fishing by nets was prohibited, and certain regulations were made with regard to a close season, fishing with a rod and line being allowed. But the effect of this section is to prohibit a person from exercising his right of fishing on waters of his own land. Now, I consider the principle upon which the right of fishing exists is an incident of property and resides in the land. Although it comes under the head of property and civil rights, that right can be interfered with by the Dominion Legislature in so far as necessary for the purpose of carrying out the regulations of coasting and inland fisheries; beyond that it is not within the power of this Parliament to interfere with that property. I am not opposing the Bill generally, because I am well aware that riparian proprietors in New Brunswick are rather desirous to further the views of the Government with regard to the fishing regulations. We believe it will eventually make their properties more valuable. At the same time there is no doubt the difficulty has arisen with respect to the fisheries, which sprang from the unfortunate order in June 1874 with regard to fishing. Now, my view is that the right of private fishing is a right incident to the property in the land. If a man owns the banks on both sides of the stream he has the exclusive right of fishing in that stream during the time the fish pass. If, on the other hand, he only owns the bank on one side of the stream he is entitled to one-half the stream for the same purpose, and his neighbor on the opposite bank has the same right with regard to the other portion of the stream. This is an incident of property which goes with the soil and which passes with the grant of the soil. It may be covered by a separate grant, but without the separate grant it passes with the rights of the property. That doctrine has been very clearly established by the decisions which have already taken place. The question, then, amounts to this: Whether prohibiting a person entirely from using that stream without a license is not simply an appropriation of his property. The Government may define a close stream within which he may exercise his rights, and may prescribe the manner in which he may exercise it; but to say that he shall not exercise it at all except under license from the Government is in effect an appropriation of his property. Then the question arises whether that is within the powers of this Parliament, because the principle laid down is that where the regulation of a particular thing is left to Parliament, that body can only interfere with the power of Local Legislatures in so far as is necessary in carrying that principle out. I would call the attention of the acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries to the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of the Queen vs. Robertson, when this matter was fully discussed. I know that the riparian proprietors are very desirous that this question should be settled so as to prevent any more difficulty. There is no doubt that the decisions of the court have established the rights of the riparian proprietors, and the only question is whether this is a matter within the powers of Parliament. The learned Chief Justice, in the case of the Queen vs. Robertson, on page 110 of Supreme Court reports, says:

"In construing the British North American Act I think no hard and fast canon or rule of construction can be laid down and adopted by which all Acts passed, as well by the Parliament of Canada as by the Local Legislatures, upon all and every question that may arise, can be effectually tested as to their being, or not being, intra vires of the Legislature passing them. The nearest approach to a rule of general application that has occurred to me for reconciling, apparently conflicting legislative powers, under the British North America Act, is what I suggested in the cases of Vanin vs. Langlois, and the Citizens' Insurance Co. vs. Parsons, with respect to property and civil rights, over which exclusive legislative authority is given to the Local Legislatures: That, as there are many matters involving property and civil rights expressly reserved to the Dominion Parliament, the power of the Local Legislature must, to a certain extent, be subject to the general and special legislative powers of the Dominion Parliament. But while the legislative rights of the Local Legislatures are in this sense subordinate to the rights of the Dominion Parliament, I think such latter rights must be exercised so far as may be consistently with the rights of the Local Legislatures, and, therefore, the Dominion Parliament would only have the right to interfere with property and civil rights, in so far as such interference may be necessary for the purpose of legislating generally, and effectually, in relation to matters confided to the Parliament of Canada."

That is the general principle which the Chief Justice laid down in the case. Applying that principle, we may ask, is it necessary for the purpose of legislating generally and effectually in regard to matters entrusted to the Parliament of Canada, to adopt such legislation as is proposed. The Chief Justice further says at page 119:

"Previous to Confederation many enactments were passed by the Legislature of New Brunswick for the general regulation and protection of the fisheries in that Province, but no Act, I will undertake with confidence to assert, can be found in the Statute-books of New Brunswick, from the date of the erection of the Province to the day of Confederation, taking away or interfering with (except as such general regulations might interfere with) the private rights of the individual proprietors of lands through which such rivers run, still less to take from them the enjoyment of their rights of fishing and to authorise the leasing of the same to others to the exclusion of the owner."

"Such being the state of matters at the time of Confederation, I am of opinion that the legislation in regard to 'Inland and Sea Fisheries' contemplated by the British North America Act was not in reference to 'property and civil rights'—that is to say, not as to the ownership of the beds of the rivers, or of the fisheries, or the rights of individuals therein, but to subjects affecting the fisheries generally, tending to their regulation, protection and reservation, matters of a national and general concern and important to the public, such as the forbidding fish to be taken at improper seasons in an improper manner, or with destructive instruments, laws with reference to the improvement and increase of fisheries; in other words, all such general laws as enure as well to the benefit of the owners of the fisheries as to the public at large, who are interested in the fisheries as a source of national or provincial wealth; in other words, laws in relation to the fisheries, such as those which the Local Legislatures were, previously to and at the time of Confederation, in the habit of enacting for their regulation, preservation and protection, with which the property in the fish or the right to take the fish out of the water to be appropriated to the party so taking the fish has nothing whatever to do, the property in the fishing, or the right to take the fish, being as much the property of the Province or the individual, as the dry land or the land covered with water. I cannot discover the slightest trace of an intention on the part of the Imperial Parliament to convey to the Dominion Government any property in the beds of streams or in the fisheries incident to the ownership thereof, whether belonging at the date of Confederation either to the Provinces or individuals, or to confer on the Dominion Parliament the right to appropriate or dispose of them, and receive therefor large rentals which most unequivocally proceed from property, or from the incidents of property in or to which the Dominion has no shadow of claim; but, on the contrary, I find all the property it was intended to vest in the Dominion specifically set forth. Nor can I discover the most remote indication of an intent to deprive either the Provinces or the individuals of their proprietary rights in their respective properties; or, in other words, that it was intended that the lands and their incidents should be separated and the lands continue to belong to the Provinces and the Crown grantees, and the incidental right of fishing should belong to the Dominion, or be at its disposal. I am at a loss to understand how the Dominion, which never owned the land, and therefore never had any right to the fishing as incidental to such ownership, without any grant, statutory or otherwise, without a word in the Statute indicating the slightest intention to vest the rights of property or of fishing in the Dominion, without a word qualifying or limiting the right of property of the Provinces in the public lands, can now successfully claim to have a beneficial interest in those fisheries, and authority to deal with such rights of fishing as the property of the Dominion, and claim to rent or license the same at large yearly rents and appropriate the proceeds to Dominion purposes."

He also says, at page 123:

"To all general laws passed by the Dominion of Canada regulating 'sea coast and inland fisheries' all must submit, but such laws must not conflict or compete with the legislative power of the Local Legislatures over property and civil rights beyond what may be necessary for legislating generally and effectually for the regulation, protection and preservation of the fisheries in the interest of the public at large. Therefore, while the Local Legislatures have no right to pass any laws interfering with the regulation and protection of the fisheries, as they might have passed before Confederation, they, in my opinion, clearly have a right to pass any laws affecting the property in those fisheries, or the transfer or transmission of such property under the power conferred on them to deal with property and civil rights in the Province, inasmuch as such laws need have no connection or interference with the right of the Dominion Parliament to deal with the regulation and protection of the fisheries, a matter wholly separate and distinct from the property in the fisheries."

Justice Strong, at page 133, says:

"The question next presents itself, did the British North America Act either directly effect these vested rights of property, or did it authorise Parliament to interfere with them by legislation? There is no pretence for saying that the Act contains anything in the slightest degree derogating from the rights of fishing belonging to the proprietors of the beds of non-navigable rivers. By the thirteenth enumeration of the ninety-second section the exclusive right to legislate concerning property is conferred upon the Local Legislatures, to whom also by the sixteenth sub-section are granted similar powers concerning matters of a local and private nature. The provisions must necessarily exclude the right of the Parliament of the Dominion to legislate to the prejudice of the rights of fishing vested in the proprietors of beds of rivers and streams, unless we can find in section ninety-one, defining the powers of Parliament, some exception to the general effect of the word 'property' as including such a proprietary right. The only words in the last mentioned section which it can be suggested may have such an operation are those of the twelfth enumeration 'sea coast and inland fisheries.' It is a sound and well recognised maxim of construction that in the interpretation of Statutes we are to assume nothing calculated to impair private rights of ownership, unless compelled to do so by express words or necessary implication."

At page 135, the Judge says:

"Again under this provision Parliament may enact laws for regulating and restricting the right of fishing in the waters belonging to the Dominion, such as public harbors, the beds of which have been lately determined by this court to be vested in the Crown in right of the Dominion, and also for regulating the public inland fisheries of the Dominion, such as those of the great lakes and possibly also those of navigable non-tidal rivers. There is therefore no unreasonable restriction of the power of Parliament in constraining the twelfth sub-section as I do, as not including a power to legislate concerning the right of property in private fisheries."

Again he says:

"These fisheries, although often in practice not conserved by the Provinces, are certainly not public fisheries open of common right to all who may choose to avail themselves of them, as is the case with regard to the fisheries in tidal waters and the great lakes, but the Provincial Governments may, without special legislation, and in exercise of their right of property, restrict their use in any manner which may seem expedient just as freely as private owners might do. In short, the public have no more right in law to take fish in non-navigable rivers belonging to the Provinces than they have to fell and carry away trees growing on the public lands; in the one instance, as in the other, such interferences with provincial rights of property are neither more nor less than illegal acts of trespass.

"This being so, it seems very clear to me that no well-founded distinction, as regards the power of legislation by Parliament, can be made between fisheries in rivers which, at the date of Confederation, were the property of private owners under grants from the Crown and those which remain the property of the Provinces as part of the public domain. In both cases the right of fishing is a profit of the land, an incident of the proprietary right in the soil, and is as much property in the hands of the Province as in that of a private owner."

I have called attention to these opinions of the learned Judges, opinions which were concurred in by Justices Fournier, Henry and also Gwynne in the Exchequer Court. The section of the proposed Bill reads as follows:—

"2. The Minister of Marine and Fisheries may issue, or authorise to be issued, fishery leases or licenses for fisheries and fishing where-ever situated or carried on, but leases or licenses for any term exceeding nine years shall be issued only under authority of an order of the Governor in Council; and provided that where an exclusive right of fishing exists by law, no lease or license shall be issued other than a license to fish at a certain time, or in a certain mode, and then only to the person in whom the exclusive right is vested."

That is, no person entirely by implication can fish on his property until he obtains a license from the Government; and then there is this difficulty: Suppose there are five riparian proprietors on a stream, by a whim of the inspector, or of a subordinate, licenses might be granted to three and refused to two, the result being that three persons, not by virtue of their right as owners of the soil, but of licenses from the Government, would have the right to fish there, while the other two who owned the soil would be excluded. Therefore, this at once conflicts with the powers of Local Legislatures and the rights of property, beyond what is necessary for the preservation of the fisheries in the Dominion. Prior to this, and by the law of 1868, angling was allowed upon our streams, and the use of nets was prohibited, and under the seventh sub-section of the old Act, salmon could not be caught in New Brunswick between the 15th of August and the 1st of March. The effect of the amendment is to do away with the exception of the rod and line; but we know, so far as fishing in New Brunswick is concerned, that fishing with the rod and line is not destructive to the salmon fishery. In fact, the class of persons to which this relates, is interested in protecting this fishery and in associating with the Government to a certain extent in this regard. It would be well that the question I raised with respect to it being impolitic to deprive riparian owners of the privilege of fishing with the rod and line, and whether this exception should not be allowed to continue is worthy of consideration. This is a matter of very great importance as far as New Brunswick is concerned, and, also, I may say the lower portion of Quebec, because the wealthy Americans who come to these places every year to enjoy fishing, are a large source of revenue to the people of the Province. But practically if they are to obtain their rights as riparian proprietors, they are obliged, under this Bill, to take out a lease and license, and to have their rights made subordinate to and entirely dependent on the pleasure of the Department, or, perhaps, of its subordinates. The effect would be to interfere very much with this privilege, because, as is well known, the rod and line are simply used for pleasure, and not to make large captures for the purpose of business as is the case with nets and other instruments. Many of the large riparian proprietors are extremely anxious that the Government regulations should be enforced, and they are perfectly willing to aid the Government to protect the fisheries, to be preserved for the uses of sportsmen and visitors. I know of a case which actually occurred to a gentleman owning an interest with others in a New Brunswick river. Some two years ago, in 1880 or 1881, he endeavored to comply with the regulations of the Order in Council of June 14th, 1879, and applied to the Government, although a riparian proprietor, to give him a license, stating that he was willing to observe the regulations—he was also a great friend and supporter of the present Government—but the only answer he received, was to furnish his titles to the Government, and to state what he was willing to pay to fish on his own property. This having actually happened, they naturally fear that this clause will be used unfairly and unjustly, and to their disadvantage. I fear that the only result of the present clause, if left as it is, will be that we will not get rid of the litigation, which has already been too large an extent increased in consequence of the manner in which the fishery regulations are carried out. The four subsections of the third section gives great power, and reverses the general rule of law, that a man is presumed innocent until proved guilty, the burden of proof in case of seizure being thrown on the accused, and this in case of seizure, not only by a fishery officer, but by any other person. With regard to the sixth clause, I have a very strong opinion that this is also beyond the powers of this Legislature. It provides:

"6. No action, suit or proceeding shall be brought against any fishery officer or person employed for the prosecution of contraventions of the Fisheries Act or regulations made thereunder for anything done in the exercise of his office, or by virtue of his employment, unless within three months after the act committed, and upon one month's previous notice thereof in writing; and the action shall be tried in the county or judicial district where the cause of action arose; and if upon the trial of any such action the defendant shall be condemned, but the Judge shall be of opinion, and, in case of a trial by jury, shall certify, that the defendant acted upon probable cause, the plaintiff shall only be entitled to recover the actual value of anything of which he has been deprived by the defendant and not any vindictive or general damages or any costs of suit."

This is civil procedure; and I take it that when an action is brought in the courts by the course of civil procedure, it is purely within the powers of the Local Legislature. My legal friends on the other side of the House will recollect that in the case to which I have referred, Cushing vs. The Queen, which was before the Privy Council, in referring to the question of bankruptcy and the effect of procedure on bankruptcy, as it interferes with that section, it was stated that only so far as was necessary for the purpose of carrying out the requirements of the law, the only procedure in civil rights was necessarily implied, but beyond that it was not. It was not necessary that they should set out where, or when the action should be brought, or where it should be tried. I think, however—and I may say I speak for the riparian proprietor—that section should be looked at with great care as to the powers of Parliament in that direction. While I am anxious to have the latter satisfactorily settled, I know that these parties are prepared to comply with all the regulations, and that so far they find no fault with the regulations with regard to the season for the mode of fishing, only that the provisions with regard to fishing in tidal waters might be more strictly enforced than they are. I think if the Act passes as it is, we will find ourselves in a greater difficulty than ever.

Mr. FORTIN. I am not going to make any remarks on the legal question, because I think it is beyond redemption, the Supreme Court having decided that the rivers above the tide wave are the property of riparian owners. I am very sorry that that judgment has been rendered, because the salmon fisheries, that is to say the commercial fisheries, those which give food to the people and furnish an important article for export trade, will be liable to disappear. But this law is enacted in order to prevent their destruction. How will the new order of things act? As there are some hon. members in this House, and many people in the country, who are not well acquainted with the salmon fisheries on our Maritime coasts, perhaps I may be allowed to say a few words with regard to those fisheries. We have the salmon fisheries there as in other parts of the world, where the fishermen toil hard day and night to catch the salmon with nets, in some countries they catch them with seines, to supply food for this country, and an article of exportation which goes into several foreign countries, and for which a large sum of money comes back for the benefit of the fishermen. The fisherman who inhabits the coast, and gains his livelihood by this occupation, must be looked to and protected. In order to protect the salmon from the net fisheries, we oblige the fisherman to set his net in such a particular way, we oblige him to leave all the main channels open, and to raise his net on Saturday night and not set it again until Monday morning. These men are restricted as much as possible, in order to allow a sufficient quantity of salmon to go up to their resting places, where the important function of reproduction has to be performed in quietness, instinct giving the salmon power to go hundreds of miles, perhaps, to go up rapids, and even falls, fifteen or twenty feet high, in order to restock the rivers. That is the commercial side of the salmon fisheries. When the salmon has escaped the net and a lot of them gone up the rivers, the females full of eggs, and the males full of milt, they are exposed to encounter another class of fishermen, who catch them by means of flies for sport or pleasure. They do not catch them for the purpose of food, and when caught they do not make an article which is worth $1 for exportation. The sport is carried on in those parts of the rivers which by the judgment of the court fall to the riparian owners or to the Local Government, where there are no riparian proprietors, and, therefore, the danger to the salmon is augmented a thousand-fold, because what does the riparian owner care for preserving the salmon for the benefit of the net fishermen who may be many miles distant from him. What he wants is either sport for himself, or he may rent his property for $100 or $500, or, perhaps, $1,000. I know that in one of the rivers of Gaspé, a gentleman who had this stream for a few hundred dollars made $1,000 by sub-letting it. The danger is that the riparian owners or the Local Governments will be so anxious to make money by renting these places for fly-fishing that the rivers will be depleted of salmon in ten or twenty years and the net fishermen will be obliged to abandon their present fishing places, and, perhaps, have to go to a foreign country to get their living. I understand that the purpose of this Act is to prevent the destruction of salmon in the upper parts of rivers by giving the following power to the hon. Minister of Marine:

"The Minister of Marine and Fisheries may issue, or authorize to be issued, fishery leases or licenses for fisheries and fishing wheresoever situated or carried on, but leases or licenses for any term exceeding nine years shall be issued only under authority of an order of the Governor in Council; and provided that where an exclusive right of fishing exists by law, no lease or license shall be issued other than a license to fish at a certain time or in a certain mode, and then only to the person in whom the exclusive right is vested."

This means, as I understand it, that no net or fly-fisherman will be allowed to fish unless he gets a license from the hon. Minister of Marine, and I suppose the riparian owner himself will have to procure such a license before he can fish. I suppose it will be stipulated in the license that the licensee shall only fish at certain times. If this law goes into operation and is carried out, as I think it should be, no riparian owner or lessee of a riparian owner should be allowed to fish without permission of the hon. Minister; and, besides, I would stipulate in the license that he should not fish above a certain part of the rivers, or in certain pools. Petitions have been sent to this House from the county of Gaspé, and from various counties in the Provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, asking this House to declare the close time for fly-fishing to be the same as the close time for net-fishing, that is the 31st of July; and I believe that if the Government granted the prayer of the petitioners, they would remedy one of the greatest evils in the country. When the salmon has escaped the hands of the net-fisher, has gone over rapids and jumped many falls, and when it is exhausted and is looking for a pool in order to lay its eggs, or if a male, to fecundate them, gentlemen with hooks and lines are then ready to catch that fish for mere sport, and thus destroy thousands and hundreds of thousands of eggs, which if left alone, would produce hundreds of thousands of salmon to enrich the country. If you allow the fly-fishers to go on as they have done during the past fifteen or twenty years, fishing after the net fishers, they will soon deplete the rivers of the salmon entirely. I hope the Government will make this law as stringent as possible against the fly-fishers. I am not opposed to fly-fishing or sport of any kind, but sport must be carried on in such a way as not to injure any trade or industry. I have a reproach to make, not against this Government, but against past Governments, with regard to the salmon fisheries. Some ten or fifteen years ago fly-fishers came on the coast, some from England, some from the United States, and some from this country, and I have seen poor fishermen turned away from a river where they had got their living for years, in order to allow gentlemen to enjoy their sport in that river. We are a people of liberty and equality, we have no aristocracy, and no landlords, and we do not want landlords, in this country. If you go along the coasts and talk to the fishermen, you will hear them speaking against the Government—not the present Government, but past Governments—for giving the rivers to gentlemen for a few hundred dollars. One of the rivers of Gaspé was given to one gentleman for $200 or $300, and he managed to make about $1,000 a year by sub letting. I may be asked why I have not brought these matters up before. I would have done so, but I should not have been heard, as the fly-fishers were stronger than I; but now I can speak before this august tribunal—I can speak before the country on this question. If this House does not take strict precaution against the destruction of our salmon fisheries, they will go on decreasing from year to year to such an extent that they will come to nothing, as they have come to nothing in the United States. Now, I will ask that the licenses be confined to river fisheries, because I maintain that sea fisheries should be free to all fishermen without licenses. I believe that nine years is too long a period for leases or licenses; I think five years is long enough, as the Government usually make these grants to friends and favorites, I hope the Government will take steps to prevent the destruction of our river fisheries. The Local Governments and the riparian owners will, no doubt, try to make as much money as they can out of their salmon fisheries by giving as many permits for fly-fishing as they can, because they are not interested in the net-fishing, which are leased, and the money for which goes into the Federal Treasury. The Local Governments will try and get their fees from the fly-fishers, and if this goes on the depletion will continue in the salmon fisheries. I hope the Government will bring in a law by which the close time for fly-fishing will be assimilated to that of net-fishing; for I tell you it is the granting of prolonged time for fly-fishing that is the main cause of the destruction of the salmon.

Mr. DAWSON. Our inland fisheries are extremely important, especially on the great Lakes Superior and Huron. But they are very easily exhausted, and this Bill, so far as it goes, is an excellent Bill, because it will have a tendency to protect these fisheries. This stringent clause to which the hon. member for St. John objects will apply very well, I think, to the great lakes. Of course, with such an extent of fisheries from the Atlantic to the Pacific, the same rules may not apply to all, but in the great lakes it is highly important that stringent rules should be adopted to prevent fishermen using undersized mesh nets. On the American side of these great lakes the fish are almost exterminated through the use of small meshes, but the fisheries on our side, are, as yet, pretty well preserved. On the Georgian Bay the fisheries are becoming exhausted as on Lakes Erie and Ontario, but on Lake Superior and the upper parts of Lake Huron, on the British side, we still have abundance of fish. The provisions in this Bill will likely, if properly enforced, result in the preservation of our fish to a great extent, and the fishery officers should be compelled to see that the law is enforced.

Mr. WELDON. I call the attention of the Committee to a resolution which was passed in the Local Legislature of New Brunswick at its last sitting, and was moved by the leader of the Government and seconded by the leader of the Opposition:

"Whereas, the Minister of Marine and Fisheries has introduced into the House of Commons a Bill entitled 'An Act further to amend the Fishery Act,' which Act, with the amendments proposed to be made in Committee of the Whole, contain provision prohibiting riparian proprietors exercising their right to fish for salmon above tidal wave by any apparatus whatever, without a license from the Minister of Marine and Fisheries to fish at a certain time or in a certain mode; and

"Whereas, in the opinion of this House, such legislation is not necessary for the protection of the fisheries, and will injuriously affect the value of the fishing rights, the property of this Province, also the rights of Provincial proprietors; and

"Whereas, such legislation is in direct course with the decisions of the Supreme Court of the Province, and of the Supreme Court of Canada; therefore

"Resolved, That this House would approve of the Government bringing under the notice of the Minister of Justice, the objections entertained in the Province to the proposed legislation, and providing against such legislation by the Parliament of Canada as an interference with the rights of the Province and the inhabitants thereof."

A copy of this was forwarded to the Department of Justice, to show the views taken by our Province.

Mr. McISAAC. I would like to ask the acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries, what scale of fees chargeable for licenses is especially as regards fishing along the sea coast?

Mr. BOWELL. That is a matter of regulation.

Mr. McISAAC. It is necessary that this matter should be attended to immediately. During last Session a discussion took place on this subject. It was shown that, great as the hardship was in exacting licenses for salmon fishing along the coast, greater was the hardship arising from the mode in which the fees were charged. The hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries then intimated that licenses would be abolished altogether, or granted free of charge. I expected to see either change made in this Bill. I went in the beginning of the Session to the proper authorities, and found no change was made. The only purpose the Government can have in view in exacting these licenses, must be to make revenue. It cannot be simply the protection of the fisheries, for free licenses would not interfere with that purpose, as a person could be punished without making him pay for a license. The salmon fisheries seem to be singled out for the special disfavor of the Government. The outfit for a salmon fisher along the coast costs from $200 to $400, and this year an additional tax of 10 per cent. is imposed on cordage, which is a considerable tax in view of that cost, and these fishermen are excluded from sharing in the bounty. Some protection may arise as far as the rivers are concerned, but along the sea coast it is no protection. As far as the sea coast is concerned, I hope the licenses will be granted free, or a regular fixed system of fees established. As the law is now, an arbitrary authority is given to the fishery officer, who may charge what he likes, just as he likes or dislikes the applicant. I do not mean to cast a reflection upon any official, but I know that in Nova Scotia complaints have been made that the fishery officer may charge what he likes for a license. I hope that an Order in Council may soon be issued restraining these officers in the arbitrary exercise of their power, so that that body of fishermen may not be made the victims of the whim or prejudice of the servants of the Department.

Mr. BOWELL. I do not intend to enter into the constitutional argument presented by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon), but I am advised by the law officers of the Crown that this Bill was framed expressly for the purpose of meeting the constitutional objections which my hon. friend has taken. This law is to be changed for one object only, and that is the better protection of the fisheries, to prevent an unnecessary destruction of that valuable article of commerce, and to regulate the taking of fish at a period when such fishing would be very destructive to the supply of fish. I understand from the Department of Justice that it has been decided by the Supreme Court that a lease or license may not issue where the exclusive right of fishing exists by law; but the decision recognizes the right of Parliament to regulate and protect both inland and sea coast fisheries, and for that object alone these amendments are proposed to the Bill. As I understood the hon. member for St. John, he objects to this clause on the ground that riparian difficulties may arise in the granting of licenses to every riparian proprietor. To my mind this clause is very explicit that the Government, while it takes power to issue licenses, is not compelled to issue them upon every occasion or to any riparian proprietor. It will be seen, on reading the section, that the license of lease to fish at certain periods of the year can only be given to riparian proprietors. The hon. gentleman referred to a suppositious case in which four or five holders of land along the shore of a stream applied for licenses to fish, and that the fishery officer only granted them to two or three. The clause is, no doubt, open to that interpretation; but it will be apparent to any mind that a license cannot issue except to the riparian proprietors, and if there be five farmers living alongside each other, owning the right of soil to the centre of the river, or owning the bed of the river, the license can only issue to the proprietor, so I cannot understand how the difficulty could arise.

Mr. KIRK. Where the licensee has riparian rights will a fee be charged for the right to fish?

Mr. BOWELL. That depends altogether upon the regulations which may be made by the Department. A small fee may be exacted in order to cover the expenditure, but this is apart altogether from the point I was discussing a moment ago. I differ from the opinion enunciated by the member for Antigonish (Mr. McIsaac), that the object of the Government in this matter is one of revenue. The only object the Government has in view is to protect the fisheries from total destruction, in order that an important branch of commerce and source of wealth may not be destroyed. Considering the decision of the Supreme Court as to the right of the Dominion Parliament to control the fisheries, the question of revenue sinks into insignificance in comparison to the protection of this great industry, and I can assure the hon. gentleman that the fees imposed for licenses will be very small. This clause does not say, nor is it intended to provide, for the compulsory taking out of a license. It simply provides that the Government may issue licenses for the purpose of exercising a certain supervision over these fisheries, in order to protect them. The riparian owner may refuse to take out a license, and all the Government can do in that case is to say, by law, that at certain periods of the year he shall not fish. I take it that, under the decision of the Supreme Court, the Dominion authority has the right to make such provisions. If a riparian proprietor desires the full protection of the law over his fisheries, then he will pay a small sum for the purpose of obtaining a license, which would not give him any rights he did not possess before, but which would give him the aid of the Government in protecting him against the inroads of those who desire to poach upon his fisheries. Really that is the whole provision, as I am informed by the law officers of the Crown. The objection taken to fly-fishing by the hon. member for Gaspé is one upon which there would not be great diversity of opinion; but I am inclined to think there is a large section of people interested in these fisheries who would object in toto to the provisions my hon. friend desires to embody in this Bill. There is another fact in connection with fly-fishing. As I understand it, fish caught with hook and line cost three or four times their value, and many of the fish caught that way are caught by foreigners. Whether the destruction of salmon fisheries in particular is so extensive as my hon. friend indicated by fly-fishing, I am not aware, but I am of the opinion that if fishing was confined exclusively to fly fishing, very little damage would be done at almost any season of the year. Of course, the Committee will understand that outside the three-mile limit everyone has a right, under treaty, to fish without taking out any license. The object of the Bill is to make provision which can be worked under the Constitution as interpreted by the Superior Courts of the country, and not to go in any way beyond that, and the difficulty anticipated by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) will not arise.

Mr. WELDON. If the hon. gentleman's view is correct, the present Bill will not interfere with the rights of riparian proprietors, but the fishery officers will construe it in a different light.

Mr. BOWELL. We will not allow them to do so.

Mr. WELDON. With respect to section two, if the construction put upon it by the acting Minister is correct, a proprietor would not need to have a license, and it would be practically useless, because the proprietor would fish without a license; but reading the whole Act together, fishery officers will complain that such persons will be obliged to take out licenses. The Committee must look at the Order in Council of June, 1879. In 1881, a gentleman named Spur, applied for a license, and he received the following answer from the Department.

"FISHERIES DEPARTMENT,
"OTTAWA, JUNE 15th, 1881.

"SIR,—Your telegram on behalf of Mr. Spur has been submitted to the acting Minister, who thinks the proper course is for the party to make application to this Department setting forth the grounds of his claim to license and the limits, also referring to title on which such claim is based.

"The application should specify what license fee the applicant offers.

"I am, Sir,

"Your obedient servant,

"W. F. WHITCHER,
"Commissioner of Fisheries."

In that case Mr. Spur was asked to state his title, and then make it good.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman will bear in mind that this letter was written when the Department contended that they had full right to control the fisheries, not alone to regulate the periods when fish should be taken. Moreover, a license already existed for that particular fishery; the hon. gentleman cannot apply this application and answer to the state of things existing at present, in view of the decision given by the Superior Courts, and the intentions of the Government, and the provisions of this Bill.

Mr. WELDON. The letter was not written on the ground that Mr. Spur had applied for a license for a fishery where a license already existed. If the view of the hon. Minister is correct the difficulty I have pointed out may be obviated; but I very much doubt whether the same construction will be put upon the law by the fishery officers.

Mr. BOWELL. The Government take this view, and I may present it to the House by an illustration. The Local Government's pass laws regulating the mode in which a farmer shall sell his beef and pork on market days, but it does not thereby take from the farmer, or the person having the commodities to sell, his property. Neither is it the intention, under this Bill, to take from the riparian proprietor any right he possesses in law to the soil or bed of the river. The only object of the Government is, by the provisions of this law, to try and regulate the mode and manner of taking the fish, and to protect them at certain seasons. If a riparian proprietor declines to take out a license, then he fishes in the river at those seasons when it is lawful to fish; but the object he should have in obtaining a license would be to bring the power and authority of the law to bear in assisting him to protect his property, and in doing so to preserve the fish from total destruction. That is the interpretation of the law officers of the Crown, and the interpretation of the Department under the decision given by the Superior Court, and the regulations will be in accordance with these views.

Mr. FORTIN. From the tenor of the remarks made by the acting Minister, I am inclined to believe that it is not the intention of the Government to limit the time for fly-fishing. These strangers, the fly-fishers, do not bring much money into the country—of course they pay their board, and people to take them out in canoes; but I have been for thirty-three years on that coast, and know that they do not spend there much money. I am afraid that the Government is not posted as to what has taken place. I will tell the Government and the House, that gentlemen have lately bought, from the Local Government, thousands of acres of land on some of the salmon rivers, either for salmon fishing or to speculate in salmon fishing; and more, that some Americans have sent agents to buy the net-fishing rights in some of the rivers on the coast, not to fish with nets, but to abolish net fishing in order to promote fishing for mere sport in the upper part of the rivers. Millionaires from the States can come into this country and get hold of our rivers for sport, and drive out the net fishermen; and this is, as I know, what they are trying to do. We know what is occurring in the United States; there are many millionaires who do not know what to do with their money, and as there is not enough sport in that country, they come here and obtain it at the expense of our river fishermen, a hardy class who are ready at all times to defend the country and enrich it by their toil and labor. I hope that the Government will pause before they allow such a thing to be done, and will have this question studied with great care. If I am wrong, I will be glad of it; but I am not in error. I have been studying this question for many years, and this is the state of affairs. These American millionaires wish to possess our rivers for sport, and to become landlords; but this is not a country for landlords. We will never have them, and our people will not sustain or support them, or allow them to be in our midst; but this is not the beginning of it. Twenty years ago the Government granted the River Godbout to one gentleman, who has had it since, and who, perhaps, will have it forever, and for that the Government drove away two or three fishermen, who, I suppose, had to go to the States to earn a living—and what was so done twenty years ago, is now being tried more strenuously than ever, because a lot of men have more money to spend than they know what to do with; and the Government will not do its duty, if it allows this to be done at the expense of the river fishermen of this country.

Mr. MITCHELL. There are just two points, regarding which I wish to ask the hon. Minister in relation to this matter. I may say, of course, it is necessary that legislation should be had with regard to the fisheries, and that the Dominion Statute which governs them should be amended and altered so as to suit what is now believed to be the law of the land, but which is very different from what was believed to be the law of the land some time ago. I think the Ministry deserves credit for endeavoring to meet the case as it has arisen; but it is a very difficult one indeed. While the courts have decided that the riparian right exists in the owner of the soil to fish along the shores of the rivers where the lands are so owned, the duty of protecting the fisheries and of regulating them is thrown on the Dominion Government. With reference to the resolution which the hon. gentleman from St. John county read, and which emanated from the Legislature of the Province of New Brunswick, I would say, I think, that those hon. gentlemen have not given to the case the reflection which I consider they should have given, when they condemn in a wholesale manner the provisions of the Bill now under the consideration of this Parliament. I have given to this Bill, in conjunction with several other gentlemen interested in the fisheries, much attention. I have not publicly proclaimed the interest which I have taken in this matter. I have made no speeches concerning it while the Speaker was in the Chair, but I have given, in private Committee, a great deal of consideration to it, in conjunction both with the hon. gentleman from St. John county and other gentlemen interested in this matter, for the purpose of endeavoring, in the difficult circumstances in which the Government are placed, to get the Bill so amended and improved as will best meet the requirements or necessities of the case without doing any injustice, if we can possibly accomplish it, to the riparian proprietors in the different Provinces. I do not know very well how we can very much amend this Bill. It is time that my hon. friend from the county of St. John puts forward a point, in which there is a great deal, that the Government of the day under this Bill have the right to prohibit fishing except under a license. The point taken by my hon. friend is, that the Government may exercise an arbitrary power, and that where a dozen or twenty proprietors are on the stream, they may grant the privilege of fishing to six or ten, and refuse it to the other six or ten; but, at the same time, the hon. gentleman will perceive that unless there is some power vested in the Government every person may come in, whether under a license or not, and exercise the right to fish. The complaint which the hon. gentleman from Gaspé makes may then become a grievance, that the small streams which is the breeding bed of the great fisheries, that supply the commercial fisheries of the country, may be depleted; and I think it is not unwise, and that my hon. friend from the county of St. John, on consideration, will see, that between the choice of two evils, whether we shall allow unlimited fishing by these proprietors, or require of all persons desirous of fishing, having proprietary right to fish, to go to the Government and ask for a license, and that whether one horn or the other of the dilemma be adopted, I think that my hon. friend will say that, in the interest of the protection of the fisheries, it is better to trust to the Government of the day, whoever they may be, than to allow the unlimited fishing which proprietors will naturally exercise if no restriction be placed upon them. The acting Minister of Fisheries, in answer to some hon. gentleman on the other side, who enquired as to what the fee should be, spoke on a subject on which I presume my hon. friend is not very well prepared, because it requires consideration; and as he is only an acting Minister, perhaps he has not had an opportunity to give it that consideration which he shows that he is always prepared to give to matters in connection with his own Department. I do not know whether I caught aright the statement of my hon. friend, when he spoke of limiting largely the licenses, not so much for the purposes of revenue as for the purposes of regulation. I would suggest this to my hon. friend with regard to the right to license fishermen. Years ago, when a different rule prevailed as to the recognition where the right to fish, and the proprietary right existed for fishing prevailed, it was quite a different thing. Then the Government were supposed to have the property of these fisheries, and they had a perfect right, under those circumstances, to raise a revenue from it, as the property of the country; but the rule held to-day is, that the proprietary right exists in the owner of the soil on the fresh-water streams; and on those streams my hon. friend will see—and I am sure he will admit the justice and force of the remark—that in such a case any fee imposed by way of license money would be simply a nominal sum for the purpose of regulation, and not for the purpose of revenue. I think that my hon. friend will agree with me in that. I am sure every one in the House will approve of it, and I am glad to hear assent coming from every seat on the Treasury benches. When the imposition of the fees for salmon nets was proposed by myself in this House years ago, and when it was objected to by some hon. members, I took the ground then, as I take the ground now, that these fisheries along the coasts and the bays of the Maritime Provinces have existed from grandfather to father and grandson—they have been occupied for years by a recognised law which, whether it is part of the common or Statute law or not, is a Statute law from one end of the Atlantic coast of the Dominion to the other, and which has always been acted upon on those coasts. Under these circumstances I put this to the Government: Whether or not in granting these licenses, they would feel it desirable, in the interests of peace and harmony—the more so because it does not affect the public interests of any kind—to recognise the principle that licenses should be granted wherever occupation has existed for years, and exists to-day, to the occupants of the land upon the shores in front of which they fish. I am sure that this is a point which will be conceded by the acting Minister of Fisheries, and that he will recognise the fact that the fee which was imposed years ago, and is in force to-day, is merely a nominal one—one which with regard to net-fishing was to be so much up to fifty fathoms, and a reduced sum beyond that. This is a system which has not worked at all badly. It does not bring in a revenue, because it was imposed not for revenue but for regulation; on that principle, I trust the hon. gentleman will continue to carry out in his Department—because it had not given dissatisfaction in the country, and while giving to the Department power to regulate and control—the power of being able statistically to keep the run of the fisheries, it does not bear hardly on the toilers of the sea, whose interests have been so ably advocated on many occasions by the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Fortin.) These are the two points which, speaking from the standpoint of a fishing county, I have thought it my duty to state to the House, and to press upon the Government; and I am glad to see, from the tokens of assent with which my remarks have been met while I have been speaking, that in both these points hon. gentlemen coincide with the views I have expressed, and the practices which have been in vogue ever since I can recollect, and which I know, if continued, will give satisfaction to the people. It is only within the last five or six years that the people of the country have recognised the fact that it was desirable, in order to get Governmental and legal recognition, that they should consent to turn to the Government so far as to get licenses at all, but they have done so pretty generally now. The matter is pretty well settled in the Maritime Provinces, at least; and if the policy of years ago is continued by the hon. gentlemen, I think the passage of this Bill will combine with it in giving the security which the Government have endeavored to give to the fishermen, and, at the same time, maintain that control which it is so desirable that the Government should maintain, whenever the duty is imposed upon them, of protecting the fisheries. So much for the Bill itself. I think, on the whole, that my hon. friend from the county of St. John (Mr. Weldon), having stated his views to the House, will not feel called upon to press on the Government the necessity of making a change in the particular feature to which he has alluded. I think an expression of opinion from the hon. gentleman who is in charge of the Bill, in response to the remarks of the hon. member for the county of St. John (Mr. Weldon), that no favoritism shall be shown in the matter of licenses, that people applying for licenses shall be dealt with equally, that no refusal or assent shall be given on any other ground than the public interest, such as the possibility of a stream being over-fished—will be accepted by him as sufficient. There is one point more which I think requires some little attention at this particular moment. What is to become of these fisheries as they stand to-day? The Local Governments claim the right to control the fishermen on their own vacant lands on the different streams within their jurisdiction. The individuals owning the lands upon these streams claim the exclusive right of fishing off their lands, while not one of them spend $1, or do a single act to protect or propagate the fish at their breeding points, which are at the head of these streams. Occasionally you will find a gentleman of property who has the spirit of a sportsman, and who may take some pains to protect the fish by putting guardians in the rivers or by other means, but these are isolated cases. Had it not been for the large sums which the resources of Canada have enabled Parliament to place at the disposal of the Government for the protection of this great salmon industry, there is no doubt that this important source of wealth would by this time have been almost annihilated. While I do not desire to give arbitrary powers to the hon. Minister to deal with matters such as these, yet I feel it to be necessary when the matter has been fairly considered, where objections have been presented on one side and fairly dealt with on the other, to give that support to the passage of all measures such as this, which will strengthen the hands of the Government in protecting this industry. I believe we are on the right track in doing this, and I think it is important that we should legislate in that spirit. Within the last ten years we have seen the salmon industry of the country advance to an enormous extent. Ten years ago you could get at our fishing banks or stations—and there are dozens of them in my own county—salmon for 40 cts. or 50 cts. apiece. That was all they were worth for salting down or smoking, to be sent to the United States market. What can you get them for to-day on the river which runs through my own county, the greatest salmon river of this continent, and exhibiting the greatest amount of production? You cannot buy them for less than twice as much, and very likely you would have to pay three times the price I have mentioned. I think it is the duty of the Government to give facilities for transporting those fish in a fresh condition from the points of production by connections with the Intercolonial to the centres of commerce in the United States and Canada. The Intercolonial has provided refrigerator cars to carry the fish in a fresh condition. If they have connections by steamboats or other means of communication by which the fresh fish packed in ice and snow could be carried, in place of their being worth what they are worth to-day, they would be worth in New York from $3.50 to $5, according to the supply, and that for fish which were only worth 40 cts. apiece a few years ago. I take this opportunity of pressing on the Government the necessity of giving to our coast fishermen these facilities, by means of which they will not only utilize to the best advantage this great source of wealth, but will realize interest upon the investments they have made in the railways of the country by increasing their traffic, thus producing a result which will be alike beneficial to the country and to the interests of the fishermen. I trust that my hon. friend from St. John will withdraw his objection to that part of the Bill, and accept from the Government the assurance that, in dealing with this question, they will show no favoritism, but only refuse licenses when the refusal is necessary in the public interest.

Mr. BOWELL. In reply to the question put by the hon. member for Northumberland in reference to the granting of licenses to proprietors of land on tidal waters, I may say that the policy of the Government is, in all cases, to give the preference to the owners of the soil.

Mr. WELDON. In case a license is granted to a person, will it extend to persons fishing under him?

Mr. BOWELL. Certainly; if he obtains a license he can allow his friends, or any one under him, to fish under it.

On section 2,

In answer to Mr. WELDON,

Mr. BOWELL. I understand this clause simply to provide for defining the limits for fly-fishing or net-fishing, as the case may be. It simply gives the Department power to declare that net-fishing shall be unlawful in one river and lawful in another, as the necessity may arise in the protection of the fisheries.

Mr. KIRK. I wish to correct a statement made by the hon. member for Northumberland. He stated that this was an old system, which had prevailed for years in the Maritime Provinces. It has never been applied in Nova Scotia. We have had no licensing system there, but people were at liberty to fish under the law without requiring a license or paying a license fee. I know of only one instance in which people were required to take out a license, and the action of the Government in that case was so unpopular that after the licenses were issued, the officers of the Government were instructed to cancel them and pay back the money. I can assure the Government that this system will be exceedingly unpopular in the Province of Nova Scotia.

Mr. MITCHELL. All I can say is that the Order in Council creating the charge was applied to Nova Scotia as well as to New Brunswick.

On section 4,

Mr. WELDON. The fourth sub-section will permit any person, not necessarily a fishery officer, to seize a fisherman's nets or other appliances for a contravention of this Act. It also enables any person to throw the burden of proof on the individual who is charged with the offence. That is opposed to the whole principle of justice which pervades our law.

Mr. BOWELL. That principle is recognised in almost every law regulating the collection of revenue, but I have no objection to striking out the words "or any person."

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

SUPPLEMENTARY ESTIMATES, 1884.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY presented a Message from His Excellency the Governor General.

Mr. SPEAKER read the Message as follows:—

LOBBE.

The Governor General transmits to the House of Commons, Supplementary Estimates of sums required for the service of the Dominion, for the year ending 30th June, 1884, and, in accordance with the provisions of the British North America Act, 1867, he recommends these Estimates to the House of Commons.

GOVERNMENT HOUSE,
OTTAWA, 15th May, 1883.

Ordered, that the said Message and Supplementary Estimates be referred to the Committee of Supply.

Motion agreed to.

TOLLS ON GOVERNMENT TIMBER SLIDES.

Mr. COSTIGAN, in moving the second reading of Bill (No. 126) to make further provision respecting the regulation and collection of tolls on Government timber slides and other works constructed to facilitate the transmission of timber, lumber and saw-logs, said: The object of this Bill is to collect dues and tolls on timber and logs passing down slides and through public works of the Government, or rivers under the control of the Government of Canada. This Bill proposes to give the same power to enforce payment of tolls as is possessed by the Local Governments. The original Act only covered square timber; this also applies to saw-logs which have been taken down in great quantities. Many years ago, when timber was passed through in cribs, the tolls were easily collected; but there is a great difference now between the cribs of timber passing through the slides over the various branches of the Ottawa and the loose logs which come down in such large quantities. This Bill provides for collecting the dues on those logs in the same way as on square timber. Another feature in this Bill is to give power to follow the timber, whether it be manufactured or not, until the dues are collected. As hon. gentlemen are aware, the law provides for the collection of a stumpage, and gives a right to the Crown to follow the lumber in the same way until it is collected, and we propose to adopt, to some extent, the same principle. But we do not propose to go so far as the present Act does with regard to the collection of stumpage, because we do not intend to hold any portion of the timber, which may be sold off or held for stumpage, liable for more than double the amount of the stumpage dues. By the present laws relating to the collection of stumpage, I think we can hold any quantity of timber for the payment, and follow the stumpage due from the owner of that timber. This Bill provides that we can follow the logs, or the lumber manufactured from the logs, and we can hold that lumber for an amount not exceeding double the stumpage due on the lumber.

CANADA AT THE INTERNATIONAL FISHERY EXPOSITION.

Mr. BOWELL. As every one is interested in the success of our fishery exhibit in England, I take the opportunity of reading to the House a cablegram just received from the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries. He says:

"Exhibition a great success. Ours very favorably noticed by the Press and referred to by Prince of Wales at Fishmonger's dinner as remarkably good, and Duke of Edinburgh as ahead of all the colonies, and in some respects ranking with United States. Maps of Canada attract great attention and enquiry.

"MOLLELAN."

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

TOLLS ON GOVERNMENT TIMBER SLIDES.

Bill read the second time; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 3,

Mr. BLAKE. I think it is very unsatisfactory to give such extensive powers to the Governor in Council. It is impossible to tell whether the regulations so made will be under this Act, or under another Act. If it was intended to give the Governor in Council such extensive powers, it would have been better to have stated them in one Act, and then we would be able to know under what authority the resolutions were being made. Those powers include that of imposing fines and penalties up to $500. That is highly objectionable. Parliament is asked to give power to the Governor in Council to create offences by determining what the regulations shall be, and to give the Governor in Council power to impose penalties up to $500, for the infraction of those regulations.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It must be remembered that this Bill was not prepared by myself, but by the law clerk, who is supposed to be thoroughly acquainted with the Acts now in force, and who has given a careful examination to the whole subject. By other Acts similar powers are given to the Governor in Council.

Mr. BLAKE. We do not know what regulations the Governor in Council may make for the recovery of penalties. The ordinary custom of the law should not be departed from, and if special powers are required in this case they should be defined in the Bill. The hon. gentleman says the Bill was prepared by the law clerk. If we have not the right to discuss measures, we might as well pass a short Act, setting forth that the Bills prepared by the law clerk should become law.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I merely stated that the Bill was prepared by the law clerk after a very careful examination of the subject. The law stated that certain matters shall be done by regulations; those regulations must, however, be within the law itself, and not contrary to the Act, or going beyond the powers of the Act.

Mr. BLAKE. The regulations, of course, will not be contrary to the Act, but the Act gives excessive power to the Governor General in Council.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I do not think that any very great evil will arise under the operation of this clause. It does not give the Governor in Council power to impose any other than a money penalty, and this is restricted by the Act itself, to a sum not exceeding $500. It seems to me that the mere mode of recovering this penalty is not a question for very material consideration. At all events, the Governor in Council cannot frame any regulation by which any greater penalty than the immediate payment of money for the infraction of any regulation adopted by the Governor in Council, can be enforced, nothing more severe can be done; and I do not think that anything in this Act enables the Governor in Council to make regulations by which any person may be imprisoned.

Mr. BLAKE. It is quite true that it provides only a money penalty, limited to the sum which the hon. gentleman may consider wholly light and frivolous, $500; but to some people this might be rather an important sum, and a rather serious question, though it might not be so to the hon. gentleman; and, under the regulation which may be framed, this could be recovered by immediate procedure, without any judicial trial, without any enquiry, without any proper provision for ascertaining the facts relating to the subject. All this could be done under the legislation proposed. Now, what seems to me objectionable is that it is proposed to hand over to the Governor in Council power to prescribe rules contrary to the ordinary course of the law, because, if that were followed, well and good, we would not then want any regulations; and, therefore, these may be more severe, and how much more you cannot tell. There is no limitation whatever. It might be by immediate process of distress, without trial and without enquiry.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). The subject always has remedy against the Crown for improper execution. If there has been no infraction of the law, the subject can recover against the Crown.

Mr. BLAKE. With all deference to the hon. gentleman, I think it would be very difficult for him to establish that proposition. With regard to the second sub-section, I wish to say I think this is only adopting what is contained in recent, though not so very recent, legislation. My own opinion is very strongly against the multiplication of these voluntary and extra judicial oaths. I think that a solemn declaration is what ought to be substituted for an oath. It accomplishes all proper purposes, the person being liable as for perjury. We have an Act, if I remember aright, on the Statute-book for the suppression and mitigation of voluntary and extra judicial oaths, and here it is proposed to multiply them. I would ask the hon. gentleman before he takes the third reading—for I will not now, after what he has said, make an amendment on the moment—on these and other points about which I make suggestions, to consider them; and to see whether it would not be as convenient and as efficient to substitute a solemn declaration under an existing Act of Parliament for the proposed oath.

Mr. BLAKE.

On section 4,

Mr. BLAKE. The first sub-section of this clause, as I mentioned to the hon. gentleman privately a moment ago, is somewhat contrary to the hon. gentleman's statement on the introduction of the resolutions, in that it strikes at property after it has passed from the hands of the person liable to pay the dues. The property in question is to be liable to pay at any rate to the extent of double the dues, although it may be converted into lumber and sold, and passed away from the original proprietor or person, who passed it through the booms, slides or dams, and the person who ought to have paid it, seems to me that this is rather objectionable. I quite admit, speaking from memory, that there is a provision with reference to stumpage, that the timber shall continue liable, and it is continuing that step further, I think, to provide that stuff, after it has been cut up and become boards and sold in that condition, and passed out of the hands of the original person, shall be liable to be followed and seized not merely for single dues, but also for double the amount that may be due.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Under the Consolidated Statutes, power was taken for the collection of stumpage; and I suppose it will not be argued that the Government have not the same right to protect itself in connection with tolls due upon timber which has passed through slides and public works that the Local Government have in connection with stumpage. In fact the same officer collects both dues.

Mr. LAURIER. Abolish that provision regarding stumpage also.

Mr. COSTIGAN. They have the power to follow the timber until the stumpage is paid, and also to follow the lumber sawn from that timber. They can go into any lumber pile or yard, where they believe any portion of the timber, liable to stumpage is mixed up with other lumber, and seize the whole of this lumber, while the burden of proof rests with the owner to establish what is and what is not liable. Now we do not ask the Committee to go that far in connection with toll dues. We ask only to hold the timber liable, and liable for double the amount of the dues chargeable upon the timber which passed through the slides.

On sub-section 2,

Mr. BLAKE. Once again, this provision seems obnoxious and open to a good deal of objection. This timber, which as timber passed through the slide, is afterwards cut into lumber and gets into other hands altogether; but the innocent purchaser is liable to have the whole of his lumber chargeable en masse with whatever may be due on the part of the original owner.

Mr. COSTIGAN. A similar provision exists with regard to the collection of stumpage.

Mr. LAURIER. Would it not be more advisable, instead of making this Bill similar to the Stumpage Law, to soften these provisions. The law on stumpage is now in force, and is an old law passed before Confederation; but now the lands belong to the Provincial Governments, except, perhaps, in the North-West Territories. If so, it is in very rare instances, and I, therefore, suggest that it would be advisable to amend the law in that direction.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). The hon. gentleman will remember in regard to the Ottawa river in particular, and a portion of its tributaries where a considerable portion of the slides and booms are constructed by, and are under the control of the Government, some of these tributaries have been improved by the Government and some have not. Let us take for example the case of a mill owner here at Ottawa who draws his supplies from the different tributaries of the Ottawa river; a portion of his logs are subject to slide and boom dues and others are not. How would the hon. gentleman distinguish them; that part of the lumber which is cut from those logs which were subject to tolls under this Act and those which are not. For that reason it seems to me that it is absolutely necessary that all the lumber in the yard of the mill owner should be held liable for the dues which accrue on any portion of the logs that go to make up that lumber.

Mr. LAURIER. But this goes further, as they will be held liable for the logs after they are converted into lumber.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). Only to a limited extent.

Mr. BLAKE. Only to the extent of double the dues.

On section 5,

Mr. BLAKE. Why is it that in the collection of dues by suit these dues may be sued for "by the collector of tolls and dues in his own name or in the name of Her Majesty." Why lay down two modes of recovery?

Mr. COSTIGAN. This is for the purpose of meeting the wishes of those engaged in the trade. For instance, a large quantity of lumber might be sacrificed if only one mode were prescribed, whereas if the person against whom the claim lay was solvent it might be collected in the ordinary way without sacrificing any large amount of property. Experience has shown with regard to such powers though a provision is made for them, they are not as a rule enforced very rigidly.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not think it is very sound constitutional doctrine for Parliament to surrender general powers to the Executive on the ground that they will not find it necessary to use them very often.

On section 6,

Mr. BLAKE. This clause constitutes the resistance or obstruction of an officer, or person acting in his aid, a felony, which seems rather a severe result to follow such an offence.

Mr. COSTIGAN. A similar clause exists, I think, in other Acts with reference to the collection of the Inland Revenue and the collection of Customs.

On section 8,

Mr. BLAKE. In this case I have to make the same objection as before, and there is the additional feature that here there is no limitation to a pecuniary penalty. Why not describe the offence and the penalties in the law itself instead of leaving it a matter of general regulation. Why not state the maximum penalty which will follow each offence?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I will consider this suggestion before the third reading.

On section 10,

Mr. BLAKE. This section seems to me to be rather objectionable. I know that in other Acts the onus of proof is put on the party and not on the Crown; but in this case there is provision for a prosecution not merely by the officer of the Crown but also by some other party—the third person who is authorized under the ninth section to make the seizure. I think that in these sections which are subversive of the general rule as to the onus of proof should be rigidly limited, and should not apply to this third person who may be influenced by other motives. If an officer makes a false charge, or an improper seizure, he knows he is liable to correction or dismissal, but not so in the case of the other party, who, I think, should be subject to the ordinary rule which applies between subject and subject. I throw this out for the consideration of the hon. gentleman before the third reading.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I have already explained that; but for a clause of this kind it would be impossible to collect tolls and dues on timber, as timber which comes down rivers, on which there are no slides or booms, is liable to get mixed, and it would be impossible for the Department to establish a proof of non-payment. I agree with the hon. gentleman in the point raised—especially since the discussion took place on the Fishery Bill, in which the same principle was involved—and that particular provision may, perhaps, be struck out.

Bill reported.

CONSOLIDATED RAILWAY ACT, 1879.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER, in moving the second reading of Bill (No. 127) further to amend the Consolidated Railway Act, 1879, and to declare certain lines of railway to be works for the general advantage of Canada, said: In moving the second reading of this Bill, I desire to explain briefly the object of the various amendments that are contained in it. In the first place, I may say that, rather by an oversight than otherwise, the Railway Act in the first instance, and the Consolidated Act of 1879, both failed to bring under the operation of the law a large number of important railways, and it was found impossible to carry out the views of Parliament in relation to railways because of that omission. The reason of it was that the second section of the Act, 42 Vict., to amend and consolidate the Act of 1868 and the Acts amending it, provided that the said sections shall apply to any railway constructed or to be constructed under the authority of any Act passed by the Parliament of Canada. The Grand Trunk Railway and a number of other railways were entirely outside of the operation of the Consolidated Railway Act, and I think every member of this House will agree that it is highly desirable that this Act should apply, at all events, to all our great leading lines of railway, and every day's experience has proved the importance of this. For instance, the attention of the House and the country was forcibly drawn to the necessity of requiring greater headway under bridges, owing to the large number of fatal accidents which were caused to persons on the top of freight cars, and Parliament passed an Act requiring every company within a certain time to provide a certain amount of room between the top of the highest car in use on the line and the overhead bridges, except in a few cases that required to be dealt with by Order in Council. Of course, in the case of the Victoria Bridge, and in the case of tunnels built at great expense, it would be impossible to carry that provision out literally without causing great hardship to the companies; consequently provision was made by which the Governor in Council had power to exempt certain very important structures from the operation of that law. But so far as the Grand Trunk Railway was concerned it was entirely exempt. That company could maintain its overhead bridges without any reference to the deliberate action of Parliament on the subject. I merely give that as an illustration of the necessity that forced itself upon the Government of having these leading lines of railway brought under the control of this Parliament, so that we might make such regulations as in the judgment of this House might be from time to time considered necessary in the interest of the public. Consequently it is proposed to amend this Act by declaring that the Consolidated Railway Act shall apply to every railway and railway company subject to the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada; and, after that, it is proposed in a subsequent clause to name all these leading lines of railway, and to bring them within the authority of this Parliament by declaring, as the Union Act requires, that they shall be considered to be works for the general advantage of Canada, or for the advantage of two or more Provinces. The next amendment to this Act is merely a verbal one; there is a clerical error in the eighth sub-section of section eight of the Consolidated Railway Act of 1879, by which the words, "map or plan, or book of reference," occur in the first line of the said sub-section where the words "map or plan and book of reference" should occur. This amendment is such as not to enable parties to file either a map or a plan or a book of reference; but to require them to file either a map or a plan and book of reference, and that plan shall mean a ground plan and profile. The next amendment proposed is one to which the attention of the Government was drawn, and in fact I had a clause prepared before the present Session, but during the present Session the necessity of companies having power to take a larger amount of land for their stations than is provided for by the Consolidated Railway Act, forced itself upon the attention of members generally, in connection with one or two Bills that were before the Railway Committee. I stated to the Committee that the Government proposed to deal with that difficulty. I propose, therefore, to amend section nine of the Consolidated Railway Act by substituting the words:

"Six hundred and fifty yards in length by one hundred in breadth for the words 'two hundred and fifty yards in length by one hundred and fifty yards in breadth,' in the seventh and eighth lines of the said section nine, and inserting immediately thereafter the words, 'except for town and city stations, depots or terminal stations, or for protection against snow drifts (in which cases such greater quantity of land or land covered with water may be taken, as may be approved of by the Governor in Council.)'"

In the third section it is proposed:

"3. For the avoidance of doubts, the words 'working expenditure,' in the thirtieth section of the said The Consolidated Railway Act, 1879, are hereby declared to mean and include all expenses of maintenance of the railway, and of the stations, buildings, works and conveniences belonging thereto, and of the rolling and other stock and moveable plant used in the working thereof, and also all such tolls, rents or annual sums as may be paid in respect of property leased to or held by the company, or in respect of the hire of engines, carriages or waggons let to the company; also all rent charges or interest on the purchase money of lands belonging to the company, purchased but not paid for, or not fully paid for; and also all expenses of or incidental to working the railway, and the traffic thereon, including stores and consumable articles; also rates, taxes, insurance and compensation for accidents or losses; also all salaries and wages of persons employed in and about the working of the railway and traffic; and all office and management expenses including directors' fees, legal and other like expenses; and generally all such charges, if any, not above otherwise specified, as in all cases of English railway companies are usually carried to the debit of revenue, as distinguished from capital account."

It is the practice of the Government to carry all such items as are here included, under the head of working expenses, to the charge of revenue in connection with the Intercolonial Railway. I believe all these charges will be regarded by the House as proper charges to be made against the working expenses of railways. That part of the clause for compensation for accidents and losses is in order to make chargeable to the working expenses of a railway, all accidents to the person, whether involving loss of life or injury to the person as well as injury to property. It is the intention of the Government to look carefully into all these accidents that occur in such a way as to involve a legal liability against the road, for the purpose of providing what is considered due compensation for such accident. The next amendment is one that has been forced on the attention of the Government and Railway Committee by the number of accidents that have occurred in connection with railways crossing highways. It is here provided that:

"In any case where any portion of a railway is constructed, or authorized or proposed to be constructed, upon or along, or across any turnpike road, street or other public highway, on the level, the railway company, before constructing or using the same, or in the case of railways already constructed, within such time as the Railway Committee shall direct, shall submit a plan and profile of such portion of railway, for the approval of the Railway Committee, and the Railway Committee, if it appears to them necessary for the public safety, may, from time to time, with the sanction of the Governor in Council, authorize and require the company to whom such railway belongs, within such time as the said Committee directs, to carry such road, street or highway either over or under the said railway, by means of a bridge or arch, instead of crossing the same on the level, or to execute such other works as under the circumstances of the case appear to the said Committee the best adapted for removing or diminishing the danger arising from the then position of the railway, or to protect such road, street or highway by a watchman, or by a watchman and gates or other protection; and all the provisions of law at any such time applicable to the taking of land by railway companies and its valuation and conveyance to them, and to the compensation therefor, shall apply to the case of any land required for the proper carrying out of the requirements of the Railway Committee. For each and every day after the expiration of the date for the completion of the works fixed by the Railway Committee, during which the works remain uncompleted, the company shall forfeit and pay to Her Majesty, a penalty of fifty dollars to be recovered by information, with costs of suit, in the Exchequer Court of Canada by the Attorney-General of Canada on behalf of Her Majesty."

SIR CHARLES TUPPER.

The law has provided that where one railway crosses another, and there was danger to life and property through collision, the Railway Committee had authority to require such works as might be best adapted to remove or diminish the danger. This Bill is intended to extend the same provision to cases in which it is equally necessary, in which railways cross public streets, and for which there is no provision in the law by which the Railway Committee or the Government of the day could exercise the same wise and wholesome control that they do in the case of one railway crossing the track of another. After the serious accidents that have occurred in connection with the want of sufficient provision in such cases, this will be regarded as a wise and judicious amendment.

Mr. GILLMOR. To what railway does this apply?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. To all railways under the control of this Parliament. The hon. gentleman will find a clause, to which I will come by-and-bye, which will be pretty extensive in its operation in bringing the leading lines of railways under the control of this Parliament. The next clause gives power to the Committee to order the necessary repairs at such crossings:

"Whenever that portion of any railway which crosses or is constructed upon or along any turnpike road, street or other public highway on the level, is out of repair, the chief officer of the municipality, or other local division, having jurisdiction over such highway, may serve a notice upon the company in the usual manner, requiring the repair to be forthwith made."

If a road is out of repair the municipal authorities will have power to intervene and require the railway company at its expense to provide such repairs as are necessary:

"And if the company do not forthwith make the same, such officer may transmit a copy of the notice so served to the Secretary of the Railway Committee; and thereupon it shall be the duty of the Committee with all possible despatch, to appoint a day for an examination into the matter; and the Committee shall by mail give notice to such chief officer, and to the company, of the day so fixed; and upon the day so named the said portion of the railway shall be examined by an engineer appointed by the Railway Committee; and any certificate under his hand shall be final on the subject so in dispute between the parties; and if the said engineer determines that any repairs are required, he shall specify the nature thereof in his certificate, and direct the company to make the same; and the company shall thereupon with all possible despatch, comply with the requirement of such certificate; and in case of default the proper authority in the municipality or other local division, within whose jurisdiction the said portion of the railway is situate, may make such repairs, and may recover all costs, expenses and outlays in the premises, by action against the company in any court of competent jurisdiction, as money paid to the company's use: Provided always, that neither this section nor any proceeding had thereunder shall at all affect any liability otherwise attaching to such company in the premises."

Then, Sir, the next amendment proposed is one for the purpose of providing a penalty for parties who refuse to furnish the statistics required by law:

"And any such railway company shall be liable to a penalty not exceeding $50 per day for every day of wilful neglect, omission or refusal, to obey the provision aforesaid."

In the next clause it is intended to bring under the jurisdiction of this Parliament, a number of railways which are not now under its jurisdiction :

"Whereas, it is in and by the British North America Act, 1867, among other things in effect enacted, that the exclusive legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada extends to such local works and undertakings as, although wholly situate within a Province, are before or after their execution declared by the Parliament of Canada to be for the general advantage of Canada, or for the advantage of two or more Provinces : and whereas, not only the main lines of the Intercolonial Railway, the Grand Trunk Railway, the North Shore Railway, the Northern Railway, the Hamilton and North-Western Railway, the Canada Southern Railway, the Great Western Railway, the Credit Valley Railway, the Ontario and Quebec Railway, and the Canadian Pacific Railway, but also all branch lines or railways connecting with or crossing them or any of them, are works, and each of them is a work, for the general advantage of Canada ; and whereas, for the better and more uniform government of all such works, and for the greater safety, convenience and advantage of the public, it is desirable that Parliament should so declare : Therefore, it is hereby declared, that the said lines of railway, namely : The Intercolonial Railway, the Grand Trunk Railway, the North Shore Railway, the Northern Railway, the Hamilton and North-Western Railway, the Canada Southern Railway, the Great Western Railway, the Credit Valley Railway, the Ontario and Quebec Railway, and the Canadian Pacific Railway, are works for the general advantage of Canada, and each and every branch line or railway connecting with or crossing the said lines of railway, or any one of them, is a work for the general advantage of Canada."

I do not think that it will be considered any stretch of meaning of terms to declare that all these leading lines of railway and the branches connected with them, and the roads crossing them, are roads for the general advantage of Canada, and in more than one Province they are for the advantage of both Provinces. As I have stated before, it is provided that the provisions of the Consolidated Railway Act, shall only apply to railways that are hereby covered by the amendment I have just read to the House. But it may be said that a great many of these railways have local charters only, and that the provisions and guarantees and pledges in respect of these railways are local, and in some cases municipal. I have provided by this Act, that while bringing them under the control of this Parliament, in so far as necessary for the safety of the public, they shall not be free from any obligations that have been incurred by the agreements made as it were with the Local Legislatures who may have subsidised these railways or granted them their charter :

"Nothing in this section contained shall be construed as rendering inoperative the provisions of any Act of a Local Legislature heretofore passed, authorizing the construction and running of any such railway or branch line, but hereafter the same shall be subject to the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada."

The next clause is one in connection with the collection of statistics. Doubts have been raised on this point, though in my mind there can be no question that the collection of statistics is given by the Union Act to the Dominion Parliament, and I believe we are in a position to require statistical information with regard to railways, whether they are under the control of this Parliament or not. But some parties are under the impression that this Government have no right to require statistics from them unless they have a charter from this Parliament. It is therefore provided that :

"Whereas, it is desirable to collect railway statistics, therefore sections twenty-nine to thirty-four, both inclusive, and fifty-five to fifty-eight, both inclusive, of the said Consolidated Railway Act, 1879, shall apply to all railway companies operating lines of railway in Canada, whether otherwise within the legislative authority of the Parliament of Canada or not."

That clause will set at rest any doubt on the matter, and will enable us to compel them to furnish a response to a requisition of this Government for such statistical information as is absolutely needed to carry out the design of Parliament in having these railway statistics annually compiled. Then the nineteenth sub-section of the ninth section of the said Act, the Act of 1879, is hereby repealed. The object of this clause is also to remove doubts which have been expressed from a somewhat vague statement of the intention of Parliament with reference to arbitration, and it provides that :

"If by an award of arbitrators made under this Act, the sum awarded exceeds the sum offered by the company, the costs of the arbitration shall be borne by the company ; but if otherwise, they shall be borne by the opposite party, and be deducted from the compensation : and in either case the amount of such costs, if not agreed upon, may be taxed by the Judge."

That is practically already in the law, but stated a little obscurely, though, I think, there can be doubt as to what Parliament intended. The ninth sub-section provides with reference to calls for stock :

"The twentieth section of the present Act is hereby amended by adding to the first sub-section thereof, at the end of the said sub-section, the following words: 'But nothing herein contained shall prevent the directors from making more than one call by one resolution of the Board,—the intervals between such calls, the notices of each call and the other provisions of this Act and of the special Act (if any) being duly observed' "

That is to say that a company may make more than one call at one meeting and by one notice. It may provide for two calls at the same meeting without being obliged to meet again for the same purpose, although at the time of their first call they know perfectly well it will be necessary to make a second call at an early period. It avoids the necessity of having a special meeting to make a second call, all the notices and information to the public and everything of that kind being complied with, and the public and shareholders being perfectly informed of the intention of the meeting to provide for more than one call at that meeting. Clause ten reads as follows :—

"Section sixty of the said Act is hereby amended by adding at the end of the first sub-section of the said section, after the word 'proxy,' the words 'and also to the approval of the Governor in Council.' And also by the addition of the following provisions, a, b, c and d' :

This embodies a provision contained in a Bill introduced by the hon. member for North York (Mr. Mulock), which was withdrawn by him in consequence of an undertaking given on the part of the Government, that they would embody the provision he proposed in the Consolidated Railway Amendment Act, as it is undoubtedly more convenient to have all the amendments, if possible placed in one Statute. The following provisions are also added :—

"(a.) Provided, that before such approval shall be given, notice of the application therefor shall be published in the Canada Gazette for at least two months prior to the time therein named for the making of such application, and such notice shall state a time and place when the application shall be made, and that all parties interested may then and there appear and be heard on such application."

"(b.) That the like approval, applied for in like manner, shall be necessary in order to the validity of any purchase or lease of any railway or portion of railway :

"(c.) That unless specially authorized so to do, it shall not be lawful for any railway company, either directly or indirectly, to apply any of its funds to the acquisition of any shares, bonds or other securities issued by another railway company, nor of any interest in such shares, bonds or other securities :

"(d.) That every Director of a railway company who knowingly permits any of such company's funds to be applied in contravention of the provisions of the next preceding provision, shall be liable to a penalty of one thousand dollars for each contravention, which penalty may be sued for and recovered on information filed in the name of the Minister of Justice of Canada, and one-half of the said penalty when recovered shall belong to the Crown, and one-half thereof to the informer ; and the acquisition of each share, bond or other security, or interest therein, as aforesaid, shall be deemed a separate contravention of the provisions aforesaid."

The next sub-section is one to which I should like to direct the special attention of the hon. member for Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy) because he directed the attention of the House very forcibly to the necessity of making our Act comply more fully with the English Act. The hon. gentleman, as the House will remember, drew our attention to the fact that whereas in the Canadian Act, railways were compelled to give equal facilities to other lines, the English Act compelled the companies to give equal facilities under the same circumstances to individuals as well. With a view to meet the hon. gentleman as far as possible, and to embody the suggestion he threw out, he will be glad, as his own Bill was not proceeded with, to have the same provision embodied in the Consolidated Railway Act, and this amendment is proposed, and I trust the hon. gentleman will find that it meets the points which he impressed on the House, and that it will, in his judgment, meet the case so far as it can be met by the tribunal of the Railway Committee of the Privy Council. The section is as follows:—

"Every railway company shall, according to its power, afford all reasonable facilities for the receiving, and forwarding and delivery of traffic upon and from the several railways belonging to or worked by such company, and for the return of carriages, trucks and other vehicles; and no such company shall make or give any undue or unreasonable preference or advantage to or in favor of any particular person or company or any particular description of traffic in any respect whatever, nor shall any such company subject any particular person or any particular description of traffic to any undue or unreasonable prejudice or disadvantage in any respect whatsoever. And any railway company having or working railways which form part of a continuous line or railway, or which intersect any other railway, or which have the terminal station or wharf of the one near the terminal station or wharf of the other, shall afford all due and reasonable facilities for receiving and forwarding all the traffic arriving by one of such railways by the other, without any unreasonable delay, and without any such preference or advantage or precedence or disadvantage as aforesaid, and so that no obstruction may be offered to any person desirous of using such railways as a continuous line of communication, and so that all reasonable accommodation may by means of the railways of the several companies be at all times afforded to the public in that behalf; and any agreement made between any two or more railway companies contrary to the foregoing provisions shall be unlawful, null and void."

The next is a provision to meet the case of the sale of a railway or part of a railway to a party not having the necessary powers to work it. There is no provision in the existing Statute under which a railway so sold and becoming the property of an individual—purchased, not by a company, but by parties not having corporate powers—can be worked. This is a clause intended to provide means for working a railway under such circumstances by authority of the Government, until the assembly of Parliament, and an opportunity has been offered to obtain corporate powers. The clause is as follows:

"If at any time any railway or any section of any railway be sold under the provisions of any deed of mortgage thereof, or at the instance of the holders of any mortgage, bonds or debentures, for the payment of which any charges has been created thereon, or under any lawful proceeding, and be purchased by any person or corporation not having any corporate powers authorising the holding and operating thereof by such purchase, the purchaser thereof shall transmit to the Minister of Railways and Canals, within ten days from the date of such purchase, a notice in writing stating the fact that such purchase has been made, describing the termini and line of route of the railway purchased, and specifying the charter under which the same had been constructed and operated, including a copy of any writing preliminary to a conveyance of such railway which has been made as evidence of such sale; and immediately upon the execution of any deed of conveyance of such railway the purchaser shall also transmit to the Minister of Railways and Canals a duplicate or an authenticated copy of such deed, and shall furnish to the Minister, on request, any further details or information that he may require."

Section 14 is as follows:—

"Until the purchaser shall have given notice to the Minister in manner and form as provided by the last preceding section, it shall not be lawful for the purchaser to run or operate the railway so purchased, or to take, exact or receive any tolls whatever in respect of any traffic carried thereon; but after the said conditions have been complied with, the purchaser may continue until the end of the then next Session of the Parliament of Canada to operate such railway and to take and receive such tolls thereon as the railway company previously owning and operating the same was authorized to take, and shall be subject in so far as they can be made applicable to the terms and conditions of the charter of the said company, until he shall have received a letter of license from the Minister of Railways and Canals, which letter the Minister is hereby authorized to grant, defining the terms and conditions on which such railway shall be run by such purchaser during the said period."

I believe these clauses will be found to fully meet the case; but the party is obliged to apply to Parliament at the earliest possible moment, in order to obtain corporate powers the same as any other company. The next clause is as follows:—

"It shall be the duty of such purchaser to apply to the Parliament of Canada at the next following Session thereof after the purchase of such railway for an Act of incorporation or other legislative authority, to hold, operate and run such railway, and if such application be made to the said Parliament and be unsuccessful, it shall be in the discretion of the hon. Minister of Railways and Canals to extend the license to such railway until the end of the then next following Session of Parliament and no longer. And if during such extended period the purchaser does not obtain such Act of incorporation or other legislative authority, such railway shall be closed or otherwise dealt with by the Minister of Railways and Canals, as shall be determined by the Railway Committee of the Privy Council."

I trust that these amendments, many of which have been suggested by hon. gentlemen on the Railway Committee, and all of them, I believe, or most of them, certainly have been brought under the notice of that Committee, and its approval will meet with the approval of this House, and enable us to obviate a number of serious difficulties and objections which have been met with in carrying out the Railway Act, and many difficulties which have presented themselves in the management of the railways, so far as the Government is concerned.

Mr. BLAKE. I suppose that the hon. gentleman intends to refer this Bill to the Railway Committee.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

Mr. BLAKE. Well, I am very sorry the hon. gentleman takes this course. This is a very important Bill. It contains very numerous provisions, some of them of a startling character, and one of them in particular very startling. It was introduced six days ago, and distributed in English only one or two days ago. It is not yet distributed in French, and the Government announced that they would likely, to-day, take Government Notices of Motion and Concurrence, and not Bills. I have not excepted to a number of things taken in the ordinary course, and which did not involve discussion; but the hon. gentleman announces now, that he proposes to take up this Bill without referring it to the Railway Committee, to which the original Railway Act, to which this is an amendment in many important respects, was referred. Under these circumstances, I think that the hon. gentleman's proceedings are unfair. He is exposing the House to a surprise to read this Bill the second time at this stage, without the preliminary steps being taken, which we have a right to rely upon according to the Rules of the House; and, under these circumstances, I object, as the Bill is not distributed in French.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Of course, it is quite competent to the hon. gentleman to obstruct the progress of the Bill, but I am sorry that at this late period of the Session, he feels it to be his duty to do so, because I think I am in the judgment of the House, or of a very large portion of it, the members of the Committee on Railways and Canals, when I say that these, with the exception of one single clause in the Bill, which I admit is a clause of very great importance—

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. But one that is very easily comprehended—

Mr. BLAKE. It is very comprehensive, I admit.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is very comprehensive and very easily comprehended. It is a very simple proposition, although I think that it is a very necessary and very important proposition; yet it is a very simple one, and, with the exception of one, not one single clause in the Bill has not already been considered by the Committee of Railways and Canals; and I think I may say further that not a single clause in the Bill has not virtually received the approval of the Committee of Railways and Canals. I have no intention to have the Bill read the third time at this sitting. I think that if the hon. gentleman allows us to go into Committee and consider the Bill, without introducing a technical objection, he will forward the business of the House and not lie open to the charge of having neglected in the slightest degree that careful scrutiny which the high position he occupies certainly causes to devolve upon him in relation to the legislation of the House.

Mr. BLAKE. I would be very glad indeed to comply with the wishes of the hon. gentleman, but I would like to know how many members of the House have read this Bill, besides the hon. gentleman, and how many comprehended its provisions, before the hon. gentleman moved the second reading of it. We are very busily engaged, to a late hour every morning, in discharging our customary duties. The Government are asked every night—I take pains to ask them—what they are going to do next day; they do not announce that they are going to read this Bill, which is a very important Bill; and we knew that, according to the Orders of the House, they could not read it. I have not information on many points which I would like to have, for which I will have to ask the hon. gentleman at a subsequent stage, when the Bill goes on; and there are many other things. I think you have brought no list of the railways, which, with one fell swoop, permit me to say, you propose to bring within the legislative jurisdiction of the Parliament of Canada. We have no such legislation which I would notably like to have. If the hon. gentleman had referred the Bill to the Railway Committee I would not have been disposed to take exception; but as it is now proposed to take the Bill through the Committee of the Whole House, I feel constrained to say I do not think that the real business of legislation will be forwarded by that course.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I hope that my hon. friend will not persist.

Mr. BLAKE. There is plenty of other work to do.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. But we have had other Bills before us, and the hon. gentleman did not insist that they should be printed in both languages—several Bills belonging to private members as well as public Bills—and my hon. friend has just stated, it is not intended now to take the third reading.

Mr. BLAKE. But we are not prepared to discuss it in Committee. It is not reasonable to read it a second time to-day and to take it through Committee.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This Bill has been on the Table for several days.

Mr. BLAKE. I beg pardon. It has been there about two days. Yesterday, this Bill was distributed in English—only yesterday; and we were engaged in the House from three o'clock yesterday until two o'clock this morning.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This Bill has been distributed for several days.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think so—since the 9th.

Mr. BLAKE. It was introduced, but not distributed, on the 9th.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is the 15th—six days.

Mr. BLAKE. It was not then distributed, but on Monday.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is Tuesday and the Bill has been, at all events, for the last two days in the hands of hon. members. As my hon. friend (Mr. Blake) I think understands English, and the Bill is printed in English, I do not think he should make this objection. Of course, he is perfectly in his right. This is legal according to the Rules of the House, but sometimes an hon. member insists upon his right and then allows a Bill of this kind to be discussed. All the time possible may be given to the discussion of these clauses; and at this time of the Session, it would be better, I think, to allow the Bill to go through. Of course, however, if the hon. gentleman insists, we cannot do otherwise than submit, and pass to some other item.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). As a matter of fact regarding the distribution of this Bill, I remember distinctly having a conversation with my hon. friend from Renfrew, as to whether the Bill which was being introduced with relation to fences was embodied in this Bill; and he had looked over the Bill at that time and found that clause. As to members not reading it, I am satisfied that more members have read this Bill up to this time than is usually the case, in regard to Bills brought in, in consequence of the great interest which this Bill has excited.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Of course if the hon. gentleman insists, we cannot go on.

LÉVIS GRAVING DOCK.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved, That the House resolve itself into a Committee of the Whole, to consider the following Resolution:—

Resolved,—That it is expedient to authorize the Governor in Council to advance a sum or sums not exceeding in the whole $100,000 to the Quebec Harbor Commissioners towards the completion of the Lévis Graving Dock, bearing interest at the rate of 4 per cent per annum in addition to, and on like terms as to sinking fund as the sum of $500,000 the advance of which is authorized by the Act 38 Victoria, chapter 56.

He said: As many hon. gentlemen are aware, a resolution has been passed by Parliament authorizing the Harbor Commissioners of Quebec to borrow $500,000 for the construction of a graving dock. It appears from a communication from the Harbor Commissioners to the hon. Minister of Public Works, that in order to complete this dock they will require at least $50,000, and possibly between $50,000 and $100,000; and therefore they asked the Government to give them authority to borrow a sum not exceeding $100,000 at 4 per cent.

Motion agreed to; and resolution considered in Committee and reported.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY introduced Bill (No. 129) to amend the Act 3 Vic., chap. 56, intitled: An Act respecting the Graving Dock in the Harbor of Quebec, and authorizing the raising of a loan in respect thereof.

Bill read the first time.

QUEBEC HARBOR COMMISSIONERS' ACT AMENDMENT.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolution:—

Resolved, That in order to assist the Quebec Harbor Commissioners in the improvement of the harbor of Quebec, it is expedient to amend the Act thirty-six Victoria, chapter sixty-two, intitled: "An Act further to amend the Acts to provide for the management and improvement of the harbor of Quebec," and the Act forty-third Victoria, chapter seventeen, intitled: "An Act to authorize the raising of a further sum to enable the Quebec Harbor Commissioners to complete their tidal dock, so as to provide that the rate of interest payable by the said Harbor Commissioners to the Receiver-General upon the sums raised under the said recited Acts shall be four per centum per annum, instead of five as therein specified.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It will be remembered that in the Session of, I think, 1881, the Quebec Government asked Parliament to reduce the rate of interest paid by the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal on the sums expended in deepening Lake St. Peter, amounting to upwards of $1,700,000. The rate of interest was 5 per cent., and Parliament was asked to reduce the rate to 4 per cent., which it did. It appears that the Government had advanced to the Harbor Commissioners of Quebec, I think, about $1,400,000 for harbor improvements, as well as a tidal dock, upon which they had been paying 5 per cent. This resolution is for the purpose of placing the Commissioners of Quebec in precisely the same position as those of Montreal, by reducing the rate of interest from 5 to 4 per cent.

Mr. VAIL. Will the hon. Finance Minister tell us how much these two transactions, as well as that in connection with the bridge of St. John, N.B., will cost the Dominion?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. As the Finance Minister explained to-day, this loan is made to a company in St. John upon which they will pay interest, and there will be no cost to the Government. In so far as the graving dock in Quebec is concerned that amount is provided for under an Act passed, I think, by the late Government some few years ago, and the work has been progressing since then, but the amount of money at the disposal of the Commissioners was not sufficient to meet the engagements under that contract—extra works which were required since the contract was signed. That is the reason my hon. friend asked Parliament to vote $100,000 upon which interest is to be paid at 4 per cent. by the Commissioners. In the present case the interest is reduced from 5 per cent. to 4, as that is the rate which was paid by other bodies at that time and is the rate at which the Government borrows its money. This involves no charge upon the Government.

Mr. VAIL. I do not wish to be understood as objecting, but I merely wish to know whether the Government could borrow money at 4 per cent. and lend it at the same rate without loss?

Mr. LAURIER. Has this proposed Bill, with regard to the reduction of interest, any retroactive effect?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman state the aggregate amount of advances which were proposed by these resolutions and the two former Acts—the original Act and the one increasing the amount.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. For the Graving Dock, the amount which was authorized was, I believe, $500,000 by the previous Act, or $600,000 in all. For the other works on the Quebec side, there was an amount, at first, of something like $730,000 or $750,000, which the Commissioners used in redeeming debentures which had been issued under the old Commission. Then there were two other sums amounting to, I think, something like $600,000, which have been expended in the purchase of wharves, and building a large dock at the mouth of River St. Charles. The amount altogether will be $700,000, but that will not be sufficient to complete the works. Most likely $250,000 more will be required to complete the tidal dock, so that these works will not be completed, I think, before two or three years.

Mr. BLAKE. All the sums the hon. gentleman has named are advanced at 4 per cent interest?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. That will make a total of about $2,000,000 already, and the hon. gentleman expects $250,000 more?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think it will be about $2,000,000 altogether, with the money that will be borrowed.

Resolution reported.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY introduced Bill (No. 130) to amend the Act 36 Vic., chap. 62, and the Act 43 Vic., chap. 17, respecting the Quebec Harbor Commissioners.

Bill read the first time.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY.

SUPPLY—CONCURRENCE.

On Resolution 236,

House of Commons—To meet additional expenses of witnesses, shorthand reporters, &c., $1,000.00

Mr. BLAKE. We were to have a statement on this item.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The books in the Accountant's office show the following amounts to have been paid to witnesses and reporters, in connection with Committees:—Witnesses, Inter-provincial Trade, $199.50; Winter Communication with Prince Edward Island, $401.20; Public Accounts, $37; total, $637.70. Reporting—Immigration Committee, $189.70; Inter-provincial Trade, $144.90; Winter Communication with Prince Edward Island, $183.80; Privileges and Elections, $10.25; Railways, $121.20; total, $649.85. The two together make $1,287.55.

Mr. BLAKE. Then this vote of $1,000 is additional. Will the hon. gentleman state how much was included in the former estimate for this service?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is to meet the additional expense. The amount was not exactly known and there may be something else before the Session is over. If there is a balance it will remain there like other balances in the Public Treasury.

Mr. BLAKE. If I recollect aright, the hon. member for Richmond, when moving for a Committee, said he would only require one or two witnesses, and he has had $200 worth of witnesses.

Mr. PAINT. I consider the expense is very small, considering we had twelve witnesses.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. member told the House he would have but one or two.

Mr. PAINT. I said I would not have less than four.

Mr. BLAKE. According to my reckoning, twelve is three times four.

Mr. PAINT. I might have incurred $200 in obtaining two witnesses, and instead of that I made it extend to twelve.

Mr. BLAKE. We are much obliged to the hon. gentleman for the economy he has exercised.

On Resolution 240,

Immigration—To pay the Winnipeg General Hospital for patients, not being residents of Manitoba, between the 8th April, 1880, and the 31st March, 1883. $14,387.10

Mr. BLAKE. Will the charge of this description continue, and has some satisfactory arrangement been made to ascertain the number of resident patients and the length of their stay?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No doubt an arrangement has been made; some officer is charged with that duty. The hon. Minister of Agriculture might probably give more details than I can just now, but I will take care a statement is brought down.

On Resolution 246,

C.P.R.—Dawson Route: To pay James Dick the official arbitrators' award..... $4,423.92

Mr. BLAKE. Some portions of the material which was before the official arbitrators in this case have been laid on the Table by the hon. Minister of Railways, pursuant to the arrangement made when the House was in Committee of Supply. These materials, which do not, of course, give a history of the case, are, however, interesting. They show that an agreement was made in March, 1871, between Captain Dick and Charles Perry and the Queen to construct two side-wheel steamboats, one for the Lake of the Woods and the other for Rainy Lake, both to be completed the 1st

October, 1871. Mr. Isaac Buchanan makes the following report:—

"In now reporting on this case, I beg to quote the words of the reference, being Mr. Braun's letter to Mr. Ennis, of the 2nd July, 1879: 'By direction of the Hon. the Minister, I refer to you for examination and report by hon. Mr. Buchanan, one of the official arbitrators under the Act 41 Vic., chap. 8, a claim preferred by Captain James Dick for losses alleged to have been sustained in connection with a contract for building steamers for the Red River route,' and I am anxious to explain, that although the name of Captain James Dick is alone used here, the contract alluded to (made in the spring of 1871, see Exhibit I), was made by James Dick & Co., composed of Captain James Dick and Captain Charles Perry; and that it was in the name of this firm that the account was always kept by the Public Works Department. Captain James Dick, however, seems to have been the only person looked to latterly, as in little more than a couple of months from the signing of the contract, Captain Perry withheld his co-operation in restoring the supplies of the firm which were consumed by the fire at Kashabowie Portage, and practically retired from the firm, so that it was only through Captain Dick's personal attention and exertion that the contract was carried on, and it is, of course, to him alone that any consideration of the Government is due.

"CAPTAIN JAMES DICK'S CLAIM.

From its unusual nature and its voluminous papers, the investigation of this case, so as to get a perfect understanding of it and all its extraordinary vicissitudes, has consumed much time and given great trouble.

"But as almost every explanation can easily be got from the few exhibits herewith, my report on it need not be so very extended.

"A very short history of the case will show that James Dick & Co. have been fully paid for all the work they did and all the materials they furnished, so that on the strict letter of their contract with the Government, Captain Dick has no right to make any claim. But Captain Dick has lost a large sum by the contract, as the Government engineer in charge, Mr. Dawson, is well aware, having put into it all the money he himself had and also his wife's fortune, with three thousand dollars belonging to others for which he is still bound; and no doubt some part of his loss is due to the absence of any civil or military authority in the territory beyond Thunder Bay. It is for this part of his loss that Captain Dick has been making a claim since 1872, the justice of his claim never having been denied, although no consideration has ever been given it. As will be seen by Exhibits B, he states his claims somewhat loosely, thus:—

1. For actual loss by bush fire	$1,662.00
2. " 25 per cent. for transport	415.50
3. " loss of wages, &c.	800.00
4. " loss by men returning	3,871.00
5. " claim for cattle, &c., supplied to Government camp	1,500.00
	$8,248.50

"MY MORE MINUTE INVESTIGATION OF IT.

"Captain James Dick, I find, has ever since 1872, when he was relieved from his contract and his account made up, rendered accounts amounting to about the same as his present account, but with no similarity of details except that all of them had the item No. 1 $1,662 and No. 4 $3,871—of course, all the items have always been held by the local authorities ultra vires, as forming no part of the strict contract, while I think these two items Nos. 1 and 4 have been regarded as the most moderate view of the part of Captain Dick's loss and as the amount which should be placed to his credit in a final settlement, a list of Captain Dick's other claims which the local authorities refused to settle, as not being in their power, will be seen at end of James Dick & Co.'s account with the Department, which is Exhibit J, and which amount to about the same as the present Nos. 2, 3 and 5. But before going on to give the account of my Arbitration Courts and their results I had better go on with the history of the case, so as to simplify the sequel.

"In the spring of 1871 James Dick & Co. contracted with the Government for $35,120 to construct and supply with machinery two steamers, one for Rainy Lake and the other for the Lake of the Woods. There was little or no ground for calculation, for we know now that the offers for the same work went up to $64,000. And at the very off-go, Captain Dick being too sanguine, was brought home to time, for we found few men who would venture into such an outlandish country, and none without more than ordinary wages.

"Freights also and transportation were double his anticipation. A most serious calamity also occurred at Kashabowie Portage, were all the provisions and tools were consumed by fire. This required a renewed supply, which Captain Perry refused to purchase, thus leaving Captain Dick to struggle on alone. The second stock of supplies, however, went forward, but arrived only to find that the shipbuilders had all deserted Captain Dick, being frightened away by the excited condition at that time of the country. There being no civil or military authority established, Captain Dick had neither security from the Indians nor control over his men. And after he had sent his son to Quebec and secured a second gang of shipbuilders, by paying great wages besides all expenses, on came Colonel Wolseley and his troops on their way to the insurrection at Winnipeg, with whom Captain Dick allowed any of the men to go, in the emergency.

"By-and-bye, another unforeseen source of expense, caused by the breaking out of scurvy, so that eventually Captain Dick's means became exhausted and the contract was cancelled, the Government going on with the ship-building by day work.

"MY ARBITRATION COURTS HELD IN TORONTO.

"I now send you the minutes of these, also the evidence taken and the exhibits. And, in the first place, I may mention that I afterwards completed at Ottawa, with the assistance of Mr. D. A. Grant, who had been accountant and paymaster at Thunder Bay, the certain matters which were left to me to find out, as will be seen in the account of the closing of my last court in Toronto. I found that the 10 per cent. had been kept back from the progress estimates, but, since only the reduced amount was charged to the contractors, it made no difference in the account which was afterwards balanced by payments to them by the Government, in fact overbalanced, as the account now shows a balance against James Dick & Co of $1,109.08.

"Full particulars of the account can be seen in Exhibit J. This was No. 57,503 of the Departmental papers, and I have added it to the bundle of exhibits, thus having all the evidence together and at hand.

"I am now fully satisfied that the contractors got credit with the Government for any provisions of theirs furnished to the Government gang of men at Fort Francis, also that the fresh provisions which comprise Captain Dick's claim No. 5 formed no exception to this rule; and that therefore the amount, $1,500, is not due by the Government. I may remark that this claim never appeared before, in this shape, in any of the money accounts presented. In a word, so far as the strict letter of the contract is concerned, the account, corroborated by Captain Dick's receipts, shows that James Dick & Co. have been fully paid for all the work they did for the Government, and for all the material they furnished—indeed, have been overpaid $1,109.08, as above. I have also discovered, among the miscellaneous (not numbered) papers of the Department, and put among the Exhibits as 'K,' the account, hitherto supposed to be missing, of the loss by fire, and the greater loss by the desertion of the first mechanics, which Captain Dick swore had been rendered by his foreman, the late Mr. Walkerlee, who had in his possession the original invoices and accounts. Of the $1,662, the loss by fire of the provisions and tools, Mr. Dawson, in his report of 3rd June, 1874, No. 41,811, says: 'They (the contractors) claim to have suffered a loss of $1,662 by a bush fire, and I can corroborate their statements in this regard, in so far as to say that their loss by the fire referred to was considerable, and as it arose from an accident which no one could have foreseen, I would respectfully submit to the consideration of the Department whether this item might not be carried to their credit in account.'

"And on the subject of $3,871 (the loss by the desertion of the first gang of mechanics), I think it will appear from the uniformly appreciative tone of Mr. Dawson's reports, that the claim should be considered anything but large as an amount to represent the rest of the additional loss suffered by Captain Dick, from the absence of the means of law and order in the Territory. I see that it is not a large allowance, if not very much the contrary, for the difference which the absence of civil and military authority made to the contractors, causing as it did, Captain Dick's utter failure, and the ruin of himself and family.

"And I therefore feel that it is of less material consequence than from the death of Mr. Dick's foreman, Mr. Walkerlee, and the loss of the papers through him, some details cannot now be furnished which would have been desirable if there were any doubt as to the amount which may in justice be claimed for this particular source of injury.

"With regard to the other three items of Captain Dick's claims, per account now rendered, I think them inadmissible. I have already explained this in regard to item No. 5, $1,500; and with regard to item No. 2, $415.50, which he claims should be added to the $1,662, I cannot adopt Captain Dick's theory, in the absence of the papers, that Mr. Walkerlee had not also before him the accounts of transportation when he made up the account. I am the more disinclined to do so as this is the first appearance of the claim in this shape; nor can I support Captain Dick's item No. 3, $800, additional loss of wages. This is another charge never before made in this shape; and my view is that in all the circumstances it should be held to be covered by the $3,871, as made up by the late Mr. Walkerlee; while I must admit that the account struck my mind as being extremely reasonable.

"DEPOSITIONS.

"I would now refer shortly to the evidence which will be found to bear out the foregoing report.

"The only witnesses were Mr. S. J. Dawson, the Engineer in charge of the work, and Captain Dick, the claimant, Mr. Pierre Brunelle, the Government Inspector of the ship-building, who came from Quebec, and Mr. Duncan Chisholm, the sub-contractor, who, with his men, deserted the work.

"With regard to the last named witness, the counsel for the claimant (see Exhibit F), says: 'It is submitted that the evidence of Mr. Chisholm is utterly unworthy of belief, and contradicted as it is by that of the petitioner and Mr. Dawson, and by his own letters of August 10th, 1871, to the latter, should be altogether disregarded.'

"Without exactly going that length, I think it evident that Mr. Chisholm's memory, at this distance of time, has proved much at fault, and that, in the circumstances, his evidence possesses little value, as it is contradicted in one point or another by all other witnesses. To show, for instance, a very different account of Mr. Chisholm's and his men's desertion of his sub-contract from that which his evidence gives, I may quote the following from Mr. Dawson's report of 24th April, 1875, now confirmed by him under oath, (See the close of his deposition.) 'The workmen who had left endeavored to extenuate their fault by saying that the Indians had prevented them from using timber.' But this charge was indignantly denied by the Indians, who, on the contrary, asserted that they had shown them every evidence of their goodwill and friendship; and on enquiry it was found that they had actually done so in their accustomed manner. They had marshalled their painted warriors, and with war-whoop and scalp dance, dog-feast and medicine-drum, welcomed the strangers, who were to build the big canals to their country. But their advances were not appreciated, in fact, excited alarm; the men becoming apprehensive, besides feeling that they had taken an unremunerative job, for they had a sub-contract, left the work."

That is the statement made in 1875 by the engineer in charge. So far from the difficulty being due to the Indians frightening the people and being hostile to them, the Indians welcomed them in their accustomed manner. They indignantly denied any statements that, except that they prevented the men from using the timber, that they threatened to scalp or maltreat them.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Their friendly demonstrations were misapprehended.

Mr. BLAKE. These were not Mr. Dick's workmen; they were sub-contractors who found that they had taken an unremunerative job, and having found that out, they abandoned the work and set up a story to Mr. Dawson that the Indians prevented them from taking lumber; but this was not so, because Mr. Dawson found that the Indians were friendly to the scheme, that they wished to see the big canals built, and that they welcomed strangers to their camps. He said that, alarmed by those demonstrations, and finding they had an unremunerative job, the men left their work. And it is because of those peaceful and friendly, but alarming demonstrations, and because those sub-contractors found they had an unremunerative job, that the country is now called upon to pay, after an interval of ten years, $3,000 or $4,000; it is, I say, because the country did not provide a civil and military force to prevent the men being alarmed by the friendly demonstrations of the Indians, and to prevent the sub-contractors on an unremunerative job from deserting their employment, that the country is called upon to make this payment. This is the gist of it. In the same report Mr. Dawson continues:

"I have been particular in noticing this matter, because if the contractors have any claim at all it is the fact that they had a right to expect that the Government would provide the means of enforcing law in the district where the work was to be carried on."

That is to say, that the contractors had the right to declare that in the Red River country at that time the Government should have established courts and means of justice whereby Mr. Dick, when his contractors deserted him, could have arrested them, or taken steps against them. The report proceeds:

"The people whom they had brought at great expense to a remote and uninhabited country, mutinied, and they had no means of compelling obedience."

The idea is preposterous. If such an occurrence had taken place within 100 yards of this building, all Mr. Dick could have done would have been to resort to the Civil Courts and enter an action for damages—which contract having been made in Ontario, he could have done as it was. Then Mr. Buchanan says:

"The loss and embarrassment arising from this cause are, I think, matters which might be favorably considered. When the contractors undertook the work the question of having a Magistrate with a certain civil force at Fort Francis was, as I have reason to believe, under the consideration of the Government; and if it should be admitted that the Government was in any way bound to provide the means of maintaining the law at a point where the public works were under contract, and did not do so, then the contractors might have some reasonable claim for compensation for the losses arising from the desertion of their men. Mr. Dawson's present evidence, as will be seen, is even stronger than the foregoing. His examination in chief closes in these words: 'up to the time that the first lot (of shipbuilders) left, they (the contractors) had exerted themselves with commendable energy to the work under way, but their men had not been long there before they struck and left, from this blow to their undertaking the contractors never recovered.'"

Mr. BLAKE.

"They did what they could to replace the men by bringing other mechanics from Quebec, but their funds were exhausted, and their efforts proving inadequate, the contract was cancelled, and the work carried out by day labor." And on his cross-examination the question was put: 'Should not the contractors have anticipated the large cost of freight and trouble of transport at the time of tendering?' And Mr. Dawson replied: 'The enterprise was so entirely new in its character, and the country so little known at that time, that the contractors had really no data upon which to go in forming the estimates.'

"I remembered at the time when Mr. Dawson made this reply, that when trying to master the Departmental papers, I was struck with a remark in Captain Dick's letter of 30th April, 1873, (No. 30,627), to the Minister of Public Works, which corroborates and explains it. 'Had I taken my machinery (60 tons) by Fort Garry I could have had it at Fort Francis much earlier, but desired more to establish our own route and encounter its difficulties. Another delay arose from the fact that the Nequaquon Portage was not finished, and I had to wait six weeks before I could transport my machinery across it, so that in point of fact it was of little consequence whether it arrived at Thunder Bay in 1871 or 1872.'

"THE ARGUMENTS OF BOTH COUNSEL.

"These will be found among the Exhibits, being marked F and G. As will be seen, they evince much talent, and shew all that can be urged on each side.

"CONCLUSION.

"As I have indicated above, I think that the evidence shews that the case of Captain James Dick requires consideration, unless it be held not to be the duty of Government to furnish the means of enforcing law and order wherever public works are going on. But I think that even if the principle for which he contends is admitted (which, of course, it is not my business to decide) he will be sufficiently remunerated by the payment by the Government of $4,423 92, being the first and fourth items of his claim—$5,533, less $1,109.08, the balance against him in the account current made up, as it has been, on the strict terms of the contract taken by James Dick & Co. In all the circumstances, however, I do not see that he should be entitled to interest further back than the date on which Government decides on the principle."

So it is proposed to grant an award covering the first and fourth clauses, that is done by bush fires and loss by men leaving the work. The first item is a loss caused by an accidental bush fire. In my opinion it is no part of the Government's duty in providing means for enforcing law and order in the North-West to pay for loss by a casual bush fire, and I feel apprehensive on this point, unless it is part of the duty of the Government, where public works are going on, to provide an electric fire alarm and steam fire engine or their equivalents. Then follow the minutes of the proceedings for the arbitrators, and with them I need not trouble you, and then we find a joint report of two of the arbitrators, Mr. Buchanan and Mr. Simard, who say that they have heard the arguments of counsel and read the evidence, and they take the same view as was contained in Mr. Buchanan's report, and think that Captain Dick is entitled to the favorable consideration of the Government, inasmuch as the loss sustained by this man in the execution of the work was caused by the absence of any organization. Once again, Sir, a casual bush fire is attributed to the want of a civil or military organization in that district. Well, Isaac Buchanan and J. Simard signed and assented, and Jas. Cowan signs dissenting. Then the hon. Minister of Railways reported to Council on July 24, 1882, stating that:

"The undersigned represents that James Dick & Co. entered into this contract, that the enterprise was new in its character and the country so little known at the time, that the contractors had scant data to guide them in making their arrangements; that difficulties soon arose; that their supplies were burned; and their laborers, frightened by the demonstrations made by the Indians, left the works."

The hon. gentleman makes not the slightest allusion to the trifling circumstance, that they were sub-contractors engaged in an unremunerative contract. Other contractors were engaged in an unremunerative contract; but I see by another paper, with which we will presently deal, on another item, that they are certainly treated in a different way. Amongst the appliances of law or order which the Government has in the more civilized parts, is the system of giving a contract to some men at higher prices, when it was taken at too low a price. I find that here, these poor people in these remote territories had not a benevolent and paternal Government to apply to, to make the contract go, and so they had to go themselves; and it is the Indians, according to the hon. gentleman's statement, who, by their demonstrations, frightened them away. The report thus proceeds:

"And the occurrence of the Red River troubles, and the consequent passage of Colonel Wolseley and his troops along the route, resulted in the loss of numbers of a fresh gang of men who had been got together with great difficulty. Finally an outbreak of scurvy broke down the means at the disposal of contractors. The contract was thereupon cancelled, the Government completing the work by day's labor, and the firm being paid for all work done, and for all materials furnished, by them.

"That Captain Dick, the leading and practically sole member of the firm, subsequently made a claim, setting forth that he had sustained severe loss by this contract, and urging the exceptional nature of the circumstances by which he had been affected as grounds for the grant of compensation.

"That the matter was referred to one of the official arbitrators for examination and report, under the Act, 41 Vic., chap. 8, and a report was duly received from him, based on a close investigation of the case.

"That the arbitrators found that it was only through Captain Dick's personal attention and exertion, his partner having practically retired, that the contract was carried on, and that, the firm having been settled with, any consideration to be shown, by the Government is due to him alone; further,

"That the absence of the means of maintaining law and order, there being neither civil nor military authority available, and the contractor having neither security from the Indians nor control over his men, led to the desertion of the laborers first brought, and to the necessity of paying high wages in order to secure a further supply, the ultimate issue being, in the words of the arbitrator, his utter failure, and the ruin of himself and family."

"That whereas the claims put forward by Captain Dick amount to $8,243.50, the arbitrator, while disallowing certain items, is of opinion that though, under the contract, no right exists for a claim, yet should the Government consider that means of enforcing law and order ought to have been provided, payment should be made of certain other items, the total amount which he found to be so payable being $1,239.2.

"That the matter was subsequently referred to the decision of the full Board of Arbitrators, whose report, dated the 6th of June, 1883, from which one of them, Mr. Cowan, dissents, adopts the view taken by the arbitrator above cited, and recommends to favorable consideration this claim.

"The undersigned, holding that the exceptional circumstances of the case entitle Captain Dick to consideration at the hands of the Government, recommends that he be authorized to place the said sum of four thousand four hundred and twenty-three dollars and ninety two cents in the Supplementary Estimates for 1882-83, to be laid before Parliament at its next Session, and that, further, a special warrant of the Governor General be now issued for that amount to be applied in settlement of this matter."

That last recommendation of the hon. gentleman was, fortunately, not acceded to. It was referred apparently to the Minister of Justice, who reported that the provision for a special warrant, was not, as was obvious, applicable in the slightest degree to this case, and that, according to law, no special warrant should issue; and so, I assume, a special warrant did not issue; but the sum is placed in the Supplementary Estimates. Now, it seems to me that which I have read indicates the position of danger and difficulty of the course which the Government propose to pursue, yet we find the arbitrators telling us, and, no doubt, the papers here corroborate it, that Captain Dick at various times sent in accounts whose statements varied each from the other; that they contained different items of claim altogether; and that the account last sent in, and on which the arbitrators acted, contains several items which were never in any account before at all in that shape. You find him stating the aggregate about the same, but the details are wholly different in sums, and in the nature of the claims; but the sum he proceeded to consider, and he says, that if the Government consent that they are responsible for the consequence of not providing a civil or military organization up in that remote district, and the means of providing law and order, then he thinks that some redress is due to Captain Dick. Well, I have shown in what the statement of Mr. Dawson was within a reasonably short time after the occurrence. I have shown you that these Indians were friendly, not hostile; that what the men complained of, and complained wrongly, to extenuate their conduct, that the Indians prevented them from taking timber, was not correct. The Indians did not prevent them from doing so, and the demonstrations at which they professed to be frightened, were friendly; and it is quite obvious that the true state of the case was this: they were sub-contractors who had taken an unprofitable job, and they took the first opportunity of leaving the work. I say that no provision at all, moral, legal or equitable—that no obligation devolved upon the Government to provide special means for dealing with these persons. The civil law applicable to the ordinary course of justice was open to Captain Dick, in the courts of the Provinces where he hired, engaged, or contracted with these men, and they have been so open ever since, except so far as they are barred by the lapse of time; that the only part of the claim allowed—the rest of the claim amounts to $16,000—arose from a casual bush fire which cannot be pretended to be due to any of the causes referred to. Of these two aggregates, the claim which it is proposed to pay, is allowed; and I say that the claim made in 1871, and not listened to from that time until the fall of 1873, when the Government which made the contract with Mr. Dick, and to whom the claim was preferred, left office, nothing was done but decline it during the whole period of the succeeding Government, five years; and it is only brought under consideration once again after the resumption of office by these hon gentlemen, and even then after the lapse of years, when Parliament is asked to make this vote. I say you have no protection at all, if claims so stale as these, so old as these, and with respect to what the items of the claims as the arbitrators say, vary in every account of the claim, are to be allowed at this distance of time; and I say, lastly, that this claim itself on the evidence I have read, is not a claim with respect to which any legal—and that is admitted—or any moral objection on the part of the Government exists; even to compensate him because sub-contractors left the work, there is none, and there is still less to compensate him, because a bush fire which burned some supplies, occurred. I do not think that the hon. gentleman has made out a case for this wholly exceptional proposal made ten years after the event, to pay this sum of money.

Mr. DAWSON. Perhaps I will be allowed to make a few remarks on this subject, as I was rather familiar with it at one time. This claim cannot be considered properly without taking into consideration the then condition of the country. At the time this claim arose that country was in a very disturbed condition, and although I and others who knew the Indians perfectly well might not be apprehensive of them—I had been among them for a very long time, and knew perfectly well their manners and customs and habits—still these demonstrations might be very alarming to strangers. At the time this contract was entered into it was just after a rebellion had been suppressed in the North-West.

Mr. BLAKE. No, no.

Mr. DAWSON. The contract was entered into in March, 1871, and the military expedition had gone through in 1870, and in 1871 the Indians were still in a very excited state.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman allow me to say that the papers before us prove that the second gang of workmen was principally employed by Colonel Wolseley before he went through, so he could not have gone through the year before.

Mr. DAWSON. The hon. gentleman will pardon me. There may be some mistake in the transcription of the documents; but if the hon. gentleman will allow me to go on I will explain Colonel Wolseley's expedition presently. Colonel Wolseley went through in 1870. That was the year of the expedition, and the contract for building the boat was given out in 1871. The Indians were in a very excited condition at that time, and it must be borne in mind that these Indians were a community by themselves, cut off and isolated from all the world besides, they had seen little of white men. The number of these Indians amounted to about 4,000. They must have mustered nearly 1,000 armed men, and so formidable were they considered by the military authorities that one of the officers who went through with Colonel Wolseley informed me that if they had been hostile the expedition would have been obliged to turn back. There were emissaries among these Indians from the insurgents at Red River, so that they were in a very unsettled state, so much so that the Government in the previous year—in the spring of 1869—had sent out an agent to reside among them in order to keep up a good feeling and prevent them from becoming hostile. I shall now explain the expedition to which the hon. gentleman referred, which was not Colonel Wolseley's, but one composed of Canadian volunteers in the following year. In 1871, the men who were to build the boats came forward and went to work. The Indians happened to have assembled at Fort Frances at that time; and they often assemble there in considerable numbers. I have seen as many at one time as 1,000, but on this occasion I fancy there were no more than 500. They came to welcome the strangers who were to build the big canoes in that country, and they extended their welcome in a way which rather alarmed these workmen. Let anyone imagine thirty or forty mechanics who never had seen Indians before in their lives, surrounded by 500 painted savages whooping and yelling and dancing throughout the night around blazing camp fires, and exhibiting the scalps they had taken—for the Indians in those days were in the habit of exhibiting these trophies. We had numbers of them in those days dancing around and showing scalps at their great meetings at the Portage, when a big chief would get up and tell how many scalps he had taken, and how he had drunk the blood of his enemies. Fancy a scene like this kept up for a whole night among these mechanics, and hon. members will not be surprised that they were a little alarmed. This was in 1871, and the men ran away from whatever cause, though I think they had no good reason. I had men there at the time, but they were accustomed to the Indians, who, I have no doubt, indulged in these manifestations in a friendly spirit and partly, perhaps, to get presents from the workmen in the way of a good dinner, or something of that sort. The truth is, these men became very much alarmed. Mr. Chisholm afterwards left, and though he made a great many excuses, I believe the truth was that he was thoroughly frightened. Immediately when this occurred, Captain Dick sent back for shipbuilders, and, of course he could not send ordinary men, as he had to get mechanics who were fit for the work he had to perform under his contract. The hon. gentleman has spoken about law as if there were courts of law there as in Toronto. But it must be borne in mind, that this was in the middle of the wilderness, a thousand miles from courts of law, and at that time there were only two steamers plying on the great lakes, the Algoma and the Chicora, instead of the numerous beautiful steamers that traverse these waters at the present time. But Captain Dick, as I have stated, set to work to get forward other men, and he got them on the ground towards fall. They were good men, much better adapted to the country than the first lot, and there were among them a number of Iroquois voyageurs and other men of that sort. I happened to be going through from Manitoba at that time, and waited there, leisurely examining what was going on on the route and making preparations for the winter, when there came an express messenger from Governor Archibald then Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba—hon. gentleman will please remember that this was in 1871, and that Colonel Wolseley was then in England—telling me that he had sent an express to Ottawa making a demand upon the Government for troops, as the Fenians were threatening to invade Manitoba, and as a matter of fact they did make a demonstration about that time. I immediately put all the force that I could muster on the road to prepare for getting through these troops. Captain Dick came forward and offered me all the men he had, and under the circumstances I considered it incumbent upon me to place them along the route so as to hasten the progress of the troops when they came. The result was that they went through in a little over a week, while Colonel Wolseley's expedition of the previous year had required nearly six weeks to get through. Captain Dick acted very patriotically on that occasion, but I had no means of recompensing him further than by paying the men for their day's work during the time they were employed. I had no power to take into consideration the losses he had sustained further than make a report upon the subject to the Government. An officer of the Government, Mr. Brunel, a very respectable man from the Province of Quebec, was sent to inspect the steamboats, and the contractor was paid for the work which was actually done under the strict letter of the contract. All that we could do beyond that was to promise to report the matter for the consideration of the Government. Now, as to its being incumbent on the Government in such cases to provide means for maintaining law and order, I think it will be readily admitted that that duty was incumbent on the Government. Here was a large force of Indians totally unaccustomed to law and able to muster a little short of 1,000 armed men, while the greatest number of men that worked on the road was from 300 to 400 white men all unarmed scattered here and there along the route. Fortunately we were able to get on pretty well with the Indians and to keep on amicable terms with them, as our men were accustomed to Indians; they had seen many before, as they were boatmen, or men who had been working in the woods all their lives. These mechanics were not in that position. The nearest troops were distant from them 200 miles, in a direct line, on one side in Manitoba, and a much greater distance by any road which was practicable at that time, and the nearest on the other side were in Toronto. There was no Magistrate in the country to whom they might appeal, and finding themselves unprotected they became alarmed. I do not think, as I said before, that there was any occasion for their alarm, because I believe the Indians would not have harmed them; but, at the same time I think the Government is perfectly right in taking all the circumstances into account, and I may say that I recommended the Government of that time to place some sort of force there, together with a Magistrate, so as to give confidence to the people employed in that section. But in order that it may be understood that everybody did not consider these Indians to be so harmless as I did, I may say that when Colonel Wolseley was absent with the troops at Fort Garry, he left a company of soldiers at Fort Frances to take care of his supplies. I happened to go there at the time and the officer in command was in the greatest state of alarm. I told him that he was perfectly safe among these Indians, that they never would attempt anything aggressive, and that all they wanted was to get a dinner or a piece of tobacco or something of that kind. I mention all this in order that the House may understand that the circumstances were somewhat extraordinary. According to the strict letter of Captain Dick's contract, he was paid what he was legally entitled to, and the only claim he could possibly have was for an allowance on account of the losses he sustained under circumstances which no one could have foreseen.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not think it will be necessary for me to say much on this subject after the very succinct and clear statement made by my hon. friend, who had better means of knowing the facts in relation to this subject than any other man in this country, because he was in charge of the work, and acquainted with everything in connection with it. Nor do I believe that the House will accept the hard-and-fast lines which the hon. leader of the Opposition has laid down in this and other cases. That hon. gentleman, if I understand him, takes the ground that if the Government of the country make a contract with an individual for the performance of a certain work, they are entitled to pay public money under that contract, provided it is carried out, and under no other circumstances. I ask the hon. gentleman, am I right in understanding him to take that ground, that Parliament is only warranted in paying public money for the services rendered under the contract made between the individual and the Government?

Mr. BLAKE. No; I never took such a position.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Then, I would like to ask the hon. gentleman to say what he means.

Mr. BLAKE. I tried to explain it, but I despair of explaining it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Then I want to know what the hon. gentleman's long address has reference to. The Government took every means to ascertain what amount the man was legally entitled to. If he was legally entitled to this money, the Government would have paid it without waiting to ask Parliament for it; but the hon. gentleman takes the ground that Parliament should refuse to pay the money because it was not earned under the contract. If he does not take that ground, he has no ground to stand on. The hon. gentleman has gone into the details of this matter at great length—for what purpose? I am extremely obliged to him. When Captain Dick claimed that he had an equitable claim on the Government for a certain sum of money, and we had no means of ascertaining it by testimony under oath, we called upon the means provided by the law, a Government arbitrator, to investigate the claim and report to the Government. He investigated it under oath, and made his report; and the details the hon. gentleman has read prove that Mr. Buchanan went most laboriously to work, and took the utmost pains to have all the facts placed clearly before him. With what result? With the result of arriving at the conclusion that, although Captain Dick had no legal claim on the Government, he had a just and equitable claim. What did we do? We did not then agree to pay it. The hon. Minister of Justice reported that there was not a legal claim, in view of the facts as reported. Then Captain Dick asked that to which every man has a right at the hands of the Government, when they dispute a claim, that is a reference to a tribunal chosen and paid by ourselves; and that reference was made to a full board of arbitrators, as the Government were bound to refer the claim, if they had a doubt as to the propriety of payment on the report of a single arbitrator. What was the result? The result was that a majority of the board that sat upon the case, and went exhaustively into it, again reported, in the light of the sworn testimony in their hands, that Captain Dick had an honest and just claim on the Government for the payment of so much money. I ask, what else could we do but come down to Parliament and say, There are the facts and we ask you to pay the money. My hon. friend has told you the condition of the country, and the condition that Captain Dick was in; and he has told you that, notwithstanding all his sufferings and losses, the moment his patriotism was appealed to, the moment the Government of Manitoba called on the men under him to abandon their work for the protection of the country, Captain Dick at once, loyally and regardless of his own interests, placed every man at the service of his country. I am astonished that the hon. leader of the Opposition should, for a single moment, question the justice of this claim. It must be obvious to every hon. member in the House, that the Government and this House should either refuse to permit a dollar of public money to be paid to anybody unless he faithfully and completely carries out his contract with the Government, or they should not. If they are only to pay what has been earned under the contract, I ask the hon. gentleman why the Government of which he was a member, paid Captain Dick this money? He says they overpaid Captain Dick $1,100. Why did they do it? He had not completed his contract; he had not built a boat.

Mr. BLAKE. What Government paid it?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Your Government. If the hon. gentleman refers to the papers he will find that it was in 1876 that these payments were made to Captain Dick. It is perfectly obvious, from the statement of Mr. Buchanan, that this contract was taken at an extremely low rate, and that if Captain Dick had not got it the work would have been done at an enormous amount above that at which he took it. These forty or fifty mechanics went into the country under the unusual circumstances as described by my hon. friend; they found themselves surrounded by 500 painted savages with tomahawks, and were entirely at their mercy, and this was when the country was in a most excited condition, full of emissaries from a country in rebellion who were exciting these Indians to warfare; yet the hon. gentleman says these men were not alarmed in the slightest degree. It was simply the fact, he said, that they had undertaken an unprofitable contract that caused their alarm. But if that were the case they need not have waited. The sub-contractors could have run away and deserted the work. The state of the country would have excited most people, though it is possible men accustomed to the Indians and their habits, might not have felt alarmed, but other people could not help feeling much alarm and anxiety. I do not believe any hon. member of this House will take the position that the Government is not entitled, not merely to use the hard, dry, legal construction of the contract, but to deal out fair and just treatment to Captain Dick, for the energetic and determined efforts he had made to carry out his contract in the face of such an extreme condition of things in the country. Is Canada so poor that she is compelled to keep this money which should go to the poor contractors who could not carry out their contract, owing to circumstances over which they had no possible control? I do not believe it. There is not an independent member of this House who will not say the Government would have been wanting in their duty, if, with the fact placed before them, they had refused to investigate their claims, and when it had been declared fair and just, and deserving the consideration of Parliament, by their own court, they should have refused to ask Parliament to provide for it.

On Resolution 247,

To pay Jos. Whitehead, Contract 15, the difference between cost of work and contract prices..... $86,200.00

Mr. WATSON. Is any of this money paid out yet, and what arrangements will be made to pay it?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. None of this has been paid. Measures will be taken to see that all the creditors receive their due share, and all the creditors will be treated on the same basis.

Mr. BLAKE. I suppose notice will be given by some officer limiting the times in which claims may be brought in and investigated. The Government will act as a trustee?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Precisely.

On Resolution 252,

To refund to Mr. H. G. O. Ketchum amount of an overcharge for the conveyance of rails, &c., in 1866-67-68, over what is now a portion of the Intercolonial Railway..... $1,637.70

Mr. BLAKE. A portion of the papers in the case have been brought down, and they show that the hon. member for St. John was right when he said Mr. Ketchum was a sub-contractor. The contract was made by the Government of New Brunswick with the Intercolonial Contract Company of England. Mr. Ketchum was a sub-contractor with that company, and as that company was settled with in full, it is clear Mr. Ketchum had no claim on the Government but had to deal solely with the Intercolonial Company. I agree also with the view that these claims could not properly come to this Government, that it really arises out of the application of the Government of New Brunswick; and it seems to me an extraordinary thing that the Intercolonial accounts should, at this date after the construction, be added to by this item. I think the hon. gentleman stated in Committee that the claim had been continuously pressed. I do not find evidence of that in the statement. As well as I can make out it was pressed in 1868, again in 1876, and then upon the present occasion, which has resulted in this reference. It does not appear to me, therefore, that the claim was continuously pressed, and I fail to see why, if the claim was just, it was not attended to by the Government in 1868, and it seems to me a very extraordinary item now to ask our concurrence in.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will see by the papers in his hands that Mr. Ketchum had continuously pressed his claim. In his application to the Government he reminds me of the fact that the Attorney-General and leader of the Government of New Brunswick, Mr. Fraser, had come to me with him—of which I have a distinct recollection—and had stated that Mr. Ketchum had continuously pressed this claim on the Government of New Brunswick; that they recognized the claim as a just one, but they did not consider they ought to pay it; that the railway upon which the charge was made had passed into the hands of the Government of the Dominion, that the money had gone into our Treasury, and that under these circumstances they thought the amount should be paid by us. I do not see that there can be any question about the parties from whom the claim came, and there can be no question that under the Union Act the claim necessarily has to be dealt with by this Government, who had the railway in their possession on which the charge was made. There is no question that under the Union Act we became responsible, whether the ultimate amount should be charged back on the Government of New Brunswick or not, for these claims in relation to the Intercolonial Railway. Under these circumstances, with the fact of the Government of New Brunswick themselves declaring, the parties with whom the contract had been originally made, that the amount was due to Mr. Ketchum, we proceeded at once to dispose of the point as to whether Mr. Ketchum, being a sub-contractor, stood in the position to avail himself of that clause of the contract made with the contractors from whom he had taken it. Having ascertained whether Mr. Ketchum's claim was well founded, and the amount of it, I took every possible means to have that matter carefully investigated. I had the report of Mr. Frank Shanly, who had gone thoroughly into the question as to the amount of overcharge that had been made beyond what the contract authorized, and I had that report confirmed by the present general manager and chief engineer of the Government railways, Mr. Schreiber, who reports that Mr. Shanly's figures were correct, and that the amount overcharged was as stated. The hon. gentleman says it was not continuously pressed; I say it was continuously pressed; but I had not entertained the substantial charge until after the leader of the Government declared to me that his Government arrived at the conclusion, not only that Mr. Ketchum was the person to be paid, but that the charge was a legitimate one.

Mr. BLAKE. The statement of the hon. gentleman amplifies the statement made in the petition. We have no record of what the Attorney-General of New Brunswick said, or in what capacity he accompanied the claimant to the hon. gentleman; but this is the statement:

"That your petitioner, accompanied by the Hon. John J. Fraser, Attorney-General of New Brunswick, had an interview with your Honor in July last, when the Attorney-General explained in full the reasons why the Province was not liable for the claim, and that he believed there was an overcharge, and that it was payable to your petitioner."

Now, what the leader of the Government of New Brunswick said, was, that New Brunswick was not liable for this claim, and having said that, his admission that this Dominion was liable to the claim was an admission of very little consequence. If the Government of New Brunswick admitted that this was a debt of the old Province of New Brunswick for which that Province was liable, unless it was an extraordinary amount, he might, in such a case, have consented to charge it, but we find the Attorney-General says that the Province is not liable, and he proceeds to point out that he thinks Mr. Ketchum has a claim against this Government. He does not acknowledge that it is a debt against New Brunswick; if it is to be charged against New Brunswick it is to be charged, not as the leader of the Government said it should be, but because it ought to be charged, because it makes a legal charge against the Government of New Brunswick. The Attorney-General of New Brunswick, far from admitting that, said the Province was not liable, and therefore that it was not properly chargeable against New Brunswick. That being so, the hon. gentleman had to make up his mind irrespective of any statement of Mr. Fraser.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am afraid the hon. gentleman did not understand me. I take the ground that under the Union Act this Government is compelled to pay the claim, and the hon. gentleman does not controvert that. If it was a matter of £100,000, a contract in connection with property that came into our hands under the Union Act, we would be liable therefore, because we took that property with all its liabilities. That specially in regard to the Intercolonial we were liable for all the contracts that the Local Government had made touching that work. We have to pay it; as to whom it may ultimately be charged is a question of law, and a question that may be dealt with at any period. I may tell the hon. gentleman that, inasmuch as the Government of New Brunswick claim now that we ought to pay them $150,000 more than they received, the hon. gentlemen will see that it is hardly worth while, in relation to the small amount of this account, to refuse to pay it; because the question might arise as to whether it, or some portion of it, could legitimately be charged against the Province of New Brunswick—I think it would be a very extraordinary thing to do so, and compromise our claim against New Brunswick. I think it would be a very harsh construction of that contract, when the railway had passed into the hands of this Government to say that we would not recognize that, and insist upon charging a higher rate than the Government of New Brunswick, who owned the road to the 1st of July, 1867, agreed that they would carry it for. I think it would be pushing things to an extreme. But assuming that to be the case, still the liability rests upon us and we are obliged to pay the amount. We have taken means for ascertaining what the amount is and we ask Parliament to provide the money.

Mr. WELDON. There is no liability against Mr. Ketchum assuming there is a liability under the arrangement made by Sir Albert Smith and the present Chief Justice Allen of New Brunswick; it is entirely with the International Contract Company. Mr. Ketchum did not take the contract, but was simply a sub-contractor, who was settled with by the International Contract Company. Mr. Ketchum was not recognized; and I find, in a despatch from Mr. Beck, worth, addressed to the Secretary of State for the Provinces at Ottawa, the following language:—

"This line of railway is in course of construction by the International Contract Company, Limited, * * * under a contract with the Province of New Brunswick, * * * the International Company, is, I am informed, quite ready to negotiate on liberal terms for the transfer of the road to the Federal Government, and the Government of New Brunswick are willing and anxious that such transfer should be made; but it is expected that the subsidies advanced will be returned, and that the Province will be relieved from any further responsibility, excepting so far as they are liable under Confederation for their portion of the cost of the Intercolonial Railway."

I quote this to show that the New Brunswick Government were dealing entirely with the International Contract Company. According to Mr. Ketchum's own petition he made an application to Mr. Beckworth, who merely handed the matter over to the Dominion Government, with a request to examine into the facts. The matter was referred to Mr. Carvell and Mr. Boyd, who reported against it; and a curious fact to be remembered is that Mr. Ketchum refers to Sir Albert Smith and attaches a certain letter written by Sir Albert, and that the Government of which he was a member, on 1th May, 1876, declined to re-open the question and rejected the claim. We know that the company made a final arrangement with Mr. Ketchum, by which they held the road, and if any claim exists against the Dominion Government, it is on the part of the International Contract Company, and not by Mr. Ketchum, who was a sub-contractor.

On Resolution 260,

To pay award in favor of Heney, Stewart & Co.,
Contractors for works at Greece's Point,
Grenville Canal $17,370.00

Mr. BLAKE. Some further explanations were to be given on this item, and the hon. Minister has laid on the Table a statement. From that statement it appears that these works were let to John Stewart and John Heney, under the name of Heney, Stewart & Co., on 20th July, 1880, at schedule rates, which, when figured out, amounted to $280,251. Then the works were taken out of their hands, and were re-let in January, 1881. The first contractors fell into arrears because they took the contract too low, and this award represents, in the opinion of the arbitrator, the value of the work they performed in excess of the amount of money they received. The Government was at a considerable loss on the contract. The contract for the remainder of the work let for $251,014, being about 25 per cent. in excess of the rate to be paid for the work under the original schedule; so that the Government will lose something like $40,000 or $50,000 when the work is completed, assuming that the new contract is completed within the estimates. It seems also from the papers that the new firm to whom the contract was let, was composed of Mr. Brecken, who was a sub-contractor with the original contractors, and John Nicholson, who was one of the original contractors, from whose hands the work had been taken. So one of the original contractors obtained the work at an enhanced price of 25 per cent. over the original rate, and it seems since that time another person has replaced Mr. Nicholson by arrangement. Thus the chain of transactions is this: Mr. Nicholson associated with others and contracted to do the work for $280,000; they gave security to the amount of $14,000 for the due execution of the contract; they failed, the work was taken out of their hands and re-let at an advance of prices which amounted to an additional sum of $40,000 or $50,000; the contract was re-let to one of the original contractors and to a sub-contractor. If that is the rule with respect to these transactions I do not see there is any advantage in taking security, because in this case, not merely is the security not forfeited, but also the amount which the contractors have expended in excess of what has been paid, is repaid to them, although no less than $40,000 or $50,000 increased cost is rendered necessary on account of the enhanced cost under the contract which is re-let to one of the same parties. First, this party gets back his security; second, he is repaid all he lost, whatever he lost by having taken the contract too low; and third, he becomes a contractor once again at enhanced prices for the work.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The transaction is simply this: the contract was let to Messrs. Heney, Stewart & Co. They were the lowest tenderers, and their tender was accepted. The course that is invariably pursued by the Government in relation to these matters, is to accept the lowest tender, provided the security demanded is given. The Government have fixed the test of the bona fide tender by requiring a certain sum of money to be put in with the tender, and they then say to the lowest tenderer, "Deposit 5 per cent., which is required as security for the performance of your contract, and it will be awarded to you." These parties made the deposit. In the first place, their tender was formal and regular, and the lowest. Then, when we called upon them, they deposited the security within the time stated by the Government, and the Government gave them the contract. Their prices were very low, and they were not skilled contractors; still they were the lowest tenderers, and they deposited the necessary amount of security. The cost of labor, of material and of everything became enhanced; they became embarrassed, and were not carrying on the work with vigor; and when called upon by the Government to make greater exertions, they stated that unless we increased the prices, it was quite impossible to go on. They were utterly incapable of fulfilling the contract. Under these circumstances, the contract was taken out of their hands, and we re-advertised for fresh tenders. The lowest tender was Brecken & Co. Now, as to Brecken, my hon. friend has laid some stress upon the fact that he was a sub-contractor; but I do not think that this is anything to disqualify him. It was an additional reason for giving him the contract, because we knew that he had had practical experience of the work. He had had no connection with the contract so far as the Government was concerned, but he was intimately acquainted with the work, and Mr. Stark, the superintending engineer, declared him to be an exceedingly capable man, and a person who, he believed, would be a very successful contractor; and this was an additional reason for accepting their tender. Again, Brecken and Co. were the lowest. Now, I ask the hon. gentleman whether because we found that one of the parties to the former tender formed part of this company, we should have refused to accept the tender of a person who, we had reason to believe, would be a good contractor. I think I will settle that in a moment by reading the report of Mr. Page, the Chief Engineer of Canals, which was sent in with that tender, and leave it to the House to consider whether, with this report in my hands, I could do anything else than to ask the Government to accept the lowest tender. It is as follows:—

"OTTAWA, 2nd January, 1882.

"The Secretary of Railways and Canals.

"Sir,—As requested, I have examined the tenders sent in for the Greece's Point Works, Grenville Canal, the extension of the three lowest of which I have checked carefully, and find them to be correct, viz. :—

Tender B, in the aggregate amounting to.....	$251,014
do K do do	267,115
do H do do	267,835

"The lowest, or tender B, is from Brecken & Nicholson, and amounts to about 25 per cent. more than the old contract rates, when applied to the quantities used in extending the new tenders. The old prices were, however, for the most part wholly inadequate; but those in tender B, although still low, are believed to be such as the work can be done for, and, with good management, leave a small margin of profit.

"Mr. Brecken is said to be a thoroughly practical person who, I believe, had undertaken to do the masonry for the firm of Heney, Stewart & Co., and from all I can learn would be likely to complete the work if allotted to him. I am not, however, aware that Mr. Nicholson has much, if any, practical knowledge in the way of executing such works.

"It may further be said that Mr. Brecken, under his agreement with the late contractors, quarried and prepared the stone provided for the masonry: consequently, it might be more easily arranging these matters with him than with a person unfamiliar with the present condition of affairs.

"I therefore advise that as the tender of Mr. Brecken is the lowest, that the work be awarded to him, if he is prepared to show that he can make satisfactory arrangements to carry out the undertaking."

Brecken was called upon under these circumstances, as I am sure the hon. gentleman would have done in my place—to deposit his security. He did so, and the contract was awarded to him. I may tell the hon. gentleman that the security of $14,000 deposited by Stewart, Heney & Co. is still in the hands of the Government.

Mr. BLAKE. So I see.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Now, so far as this amount is concerned, these parties made a claim for a certain sum. The Government refused it, and they then said that they would abide by Mr. Page's decision as sole arbitrator, as to what their final estimate should be. It had to be settled in some way. Mr. Page, therefore, as sole arbitrator, decided that this amount, $17,370, was due and ought properly to be paid to these contractors. This was the award; and the hon. gentleman will see that we could not very well have better means for settling this point than by reference to the chief engineer, who had the contract in his hand, and under whose hands the work had been performed. Under these circumstances we have retained the security, and we ask for this vote to enable us to pay the amount of Mr. Page's award to the former contractors. We did not feel warranted in rejecting the tender of a man declared by Mr. Page to be well fitted to do the work, and at whose prices he thought, with good management, would enable him to do it although they were very low, at a small margin of profit, he being the lowest tenderer, because one of the other parties appeared associated with him. This other party now, however, has no connection with this contract. Mr. Nicholson is replaced by Mr. Stewart, a man of a different family, and no connection of Mr. Stewart of the former contractors; and so the present contractors, Brecken & Stewart, are an entirely new firm. I did not feel, with Mr. Page's report in my hands, that the work could be done at these figures; that the man was a good contractor; that his tender should be rejected because he had associated himself with one of the former contractors.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman knows that the deposit is there, and also that the security is not to be used, because the hon. gentleman distinctly stated that this award was made by Mr. Page, on the matter being referred to him to ascertain what the amount of the value of the contractors' work was in excess of what they ought to have been paid. He said it would not do to carry on the public works of the country at the expense of contractors; that these contractors had not received the value of their work in the contract price, and that the difference between what the contract price would give them and the real value of their work was to be ascertained, and was ascertained; and that this was the sum of $17,000 odd. It was not a final estimate, but a statement of what the work was supposed to be worth by Mr. Page; therefore, the hon. gentleman adopted the view with reference to them, that the contractors were not bound by the contract, although the Government would have been.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, no.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman certainly led me to believe so.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I had no such intention. I will tell the hon. gentleman exactly how the case stands. Mr. Page had no such instructions given him. A claim was made by these contractors; they had to be settled with. Mr. Page had given a final estimate, which they said was below what it should be. They made a claim on the Government, and the question was referred to Mr. Page under the contract, as to what these parties were entitled to; but the security originally deposited stands in our hands to-day, it is not surrendered, and it will not be surrendered until the final completion of the work.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Mr. BLAKE. Then am I to understand that the sum which we are now called upon to vote, is the statement of Mr. Page of what would be due to these contractors according to the strict terms of the contract, irrespective of the question of default?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Page had the whole question before him, and knew exactly how it stood.

Mr. BLAKE. That is what the hon. gentleman understands from Mr. Page's award. Of course nothing is due under the terms of the contract, because the contractors are in default; but waiving the question of default, and seeing that they have gone on a certain distance with the work, am I to understand, that this amount is coming to them irrespective of their default under the contract, and is not at all the real value of the work to which Mr. Page's award relates?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. All I have to say is that Mr. Page, the sole arbitrator, had the whole case before him; and the contract was in his hands, and these parties made a claim. The hon. gentleman knows that that is the usual course which has been pursued; but I will give him a case which occurred under the Government of which he was a member and which he will recollect at once—that is, the case of Messrs. Cook & Co., contractors on the Carillon canal. The hon. gentleman knows that my predecessor took that work out of their hands, because, as he stated, they were not pushing it with sufficient vigor and rapidity, and he re-let the contract at a much higher rate than that of Messrs. Cook & Co.'s contract, yet he paid them a large sum of money though it was taken out of their hands.

Mr. BLAKE. I am merely trying to get at the facts.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; but why should the hon. gentleman present these facts as if our course in this respect was unprecedented. There were no instructions given in this case. Mr. Page is an old and skilled engineer, who is thoroughly familiar with these works, and he had no instructions whatever, except that there was a claim made by the contractors after the work was taken out of their hands, and they agreed to leave it to Mr. Page to say what amount should be paid. Mr. Page found this amount as the amount which should be paid—a smaller amount than they claimed.

Mr. BLAKE. I think I must have misapprehended the statement which the hon. gentleman made in Committee, as his present statement does not quite agree with what I understood him to say. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will lay the submission to the award and Mr. Page's award on the Table?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

On Resolution 321,

Fisheries—Prince Edward Island Railway—To be paid to Mrs. A. A. McInnis, re compensation for the death of her husband, without prejudice to the defence of the case..... $ 400.00

Mr. DAVIES. I understood the hon. gentleman to say that it was his intention to bring down a vote in the Supplementary Estimates to cover possible damages which might occur on the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railways, but I am unable to find such a sum in these Estimates.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It is not the intention of the Government to bring down such a sum. As I stated in speaking upon the amendment to the Consolidated Railways Act which I endeavored to read the second time to-day—unsuccessfully, I am sorry to say—I provide that accidents which cause loss of life or injury to the person shall be treated as part of the working expenses; so that the whole vote taken for the working expenses of the railways will be properly chargeable for any amount the Government decide should be fairly paid to any person who is entitled to compensation, on an equitable view of the question as these accidents occur. They will refer to the past as well as the present, and it will be my duty to consider these cases at an early day.

Mr. BLAKE. Then the vote for the current year will be available for compensation for accidents which occurred in prior years?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I may ask the indulgence of the House—without re-opening the discussion on the subject to be allowed to read part of a letter from Mr. McNab, dated 11th June, 1879. Does the hon. gentleman remember when the accident occurred?

Mr. DAVIES. Not exactly, but I think it was the 10th of August, 1880.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. McNab wrote, on the 11th of June, 1879, as follows:—

"I am happy to be able to report satisfactory progress in regard to railway matters, and I only wonder that the duties of superintendent and engineer were not long ago combined, as one officer can so readily discharge them."

So that the Government had no apprehension that the writer was being overworked at that time.

Mr. BLAKE. I wish to say one word on this subject that I intended to have said on a former occasion, and that is, that a strong impression was left on my mind by some letters or papers which were submitted in the Public Accounts Committee with reference to the superannuation of Mr. McNab, that there was a letter from that gentleman, written in view of a leave of absence in which he stated as a ground—I cannot give the phrase—but something to the effect that over-work, and extreme anxiety, occasioned by the arduous character of his duties, was the ground on which he made this request. The impression was left that the extreme nervous prostration was due to over-work.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman is right. That did appear, but at the particular time in question this letter was the only information I had. I had no information at variance with this statement down to that period. Afterwards there is no doubt that Mr. McNab was completely broken down, and came to be in the state of extreme nervous prostration which disqualified him for this work.

On Resolution 287,

To provide for extra services and expenses in connection with the Act granting bounties to fishermen..... $3,000.00

Mr. PAINT. In giving bounties to fishermen to encourage them in the prosecution of their calling, it is understood that we should afford them protection. I have been requested to bring a matter before this House. The papers should have reached me earlier, in February, but they have only come to hand within a few days. If it is any discourtesy to the Ministry to bring it forward in this manner, I beg their pardon, but I wish to get the matter before the public. It presents itself in the shape of an outrage committed on Dominion fishermen by Newfoundland fishermen; and to introduce the matter intelligently, I shall read from the document that has been placed in my hands:

"That your memorialist resides at Port Mulgrave, in the County of Guysborough, in the Province of Nova Scotia, and there carries on a large business of catching and curing fish

"That your memorialist is owner of the schooner Sea Flower, of one hundred and thirteen tons, and last summer fitted her out for a fishing voyage to the Labrador Coast, for the purpose of catching and curing herring.

"That said schooner was fully equipped for said voyage and had a crew of fourteen hands all told, under the command of Captain Edmund Purcell, of Port Mulgrave, aforesaid, and was supplied with salt and barrels sufficient for curing a complete cargo.

"That said schooner left on said voyage on the sixth day of August, A.D. 1882, and arrived at Sizes Harbour, on the Coast of Labrador, about the twentieth day of that month.

"That said Sizes Harbour is on that part of the Coast of Labrador over which the Government of the Colony of Newfoundland has, as your memorialist is informed and believes, territorial jurisdiction and control, and over which the said Government exercises the right and power of exacting and collecting Customs and other duties.

"That when said schooner arrived at said harbour there were a large number of vessels there hailing from St. Johns, Harbour Grace, Carbonear, Catilina, Spaniards Bay and other places in said Island of Newfoundland, and were manned by a large number of seamen belonging to those places.

"That on Friday, the twenty-fifth day of the said month of August, the crew of said schooner run out their seine one hundred and ten fathoms long, and enclosed therein in said harbour at least three thousand barrels of herring and had them secured in the said seine already to dip out and remove to said schooner, when a large number of men and boats from said vessels came, and notwithstanding the resistance of the crew of said schooner Sea Flower, with force and violence drove the said crew away and dipped out and carried away the said herring and deprived your memorialist thereof.

"That the said crew again on Monday, the twenty-eighth day of said month, hove said seine and enclosed and had secured at least five hundred barrels of herring, and were again by said men from said vessels in the same manner deprived thereof.

"That on Wednesday, the thirtieth day of said month, your memorialist's crew again hove said seine and enclosed at least five hundred barrels of herring, and the captain of said schooner seeing the same men coming again to deprive him of said fish, and they having in their wantonness before much injured and destroyed said seine, the said captain, in order to save the said seine from total destruction, was compelled to take the same up and allow all the fish taken to escape.

"That said schooner could have brought home twelve hundred barrels of fish, and the captain had means on board thereof whereby he could have cured a much larger number and could have freighted them home, and he could have sold what fish he did not need in their fresh state to parties in said harbour for at least one dollar and fifty cents per barrel. That said captain with said crew thereafter only secured three hundred barrels of fish and had to return with on y that amount.

"That by said depredations of said inhabitants of the Colony of Newfoundland, your memorialist has suffered great loss and injury, and your memorialist is advised and believes that these parties have been carrying on these depredations for several years, causing great loss and injury to other inhabitants of said Province of Nova Scotia.

"Your memorialist therefore humbly prays that such proceedings may be taken on behalf of the authorities of the Dominion of Canada as will prevent a recurrence of these depredations upon and injuries to the inhabitants of said Dominion of Canada, and that such relief may be accorded your memorialist as the nature and circumstances of the case may warrant.

"And as in duty bound, your memorialist will ever pray, &c."

In this matter the lives of those on board were threatened and their property was wrested from them by force. The document I have just read sets forth the grievance. This Mr. Purcell has been engaged in the prosecution of fisheries for forty years, and does a large part of his business in the county of Richmond, which I have the honor to represent. It may be doubted by some whether there is a necessity for the services of the Government steamer La Canadienne, under the able direction of Commander Wakeham. I am able personally to testify to her value, in rendering protection to the fishermen, their vessels, and wrecks in the Gulf of St. Lawrence, the Straits of Belle Isle and the shores of Labrador. There are a number of other important papers in connection with this case, and I trust the Government of the Dominion will see to the protection of its subjects, and prevent such outrages being perpetrated on our fishermen. The loss in connection with this affair is estimated at $10,000, and I may add that such transactions as this tend to destroy and prevent Inter-provincial Trade. I should be inclined to recommend the following course in this matter: that satisfaction be first obtained and explanation given afterwards. The Americans are very sensitive on matters such as these, and are very jealous and vigilant in the protection of their citizens. To declare yourself an American, it is well known, is to ensure your protection, and from the very first, from the declaration of Independence, the consuls and the Navy of the United States took good care to protect and preserve their subjects wherever found, and they do so to this day. They usually act without consulting Washington, and are generally sustained in the steps they take. I trust this memorialist will not present his claim in vain, and that steps will be taken between this and next meeting of Parliament to give him redress.

Mr. BOWELL. As to the information asked for by the hon. leader of the Opposition, the accounts are not in such a state as to be able to give it in detail. There are some eleven or twelve clerks and employés of the Department who have been doing portions of the extra work and have been paid at the rate of $2 per every five hours' service performed under the supervision of one of the clerks of the Department. A portion of this amount is for printing circulars and clerical labor. As to Mr. Ogden, he has been employed in Nova Scotia adjusting certain accounts and investigating claims that had been made, the correctness of which the Department had some doubts. The same work is being performed in New Brunswick by Mr. Harrington, who is an employé of the Department. The services of all these officers have also been utilized in connection with the distribution of the fishery bounty, and in procuring the fish and other articles that have been sent to the exhibition in London. This statement also refers to adjusting accounts and procuring exhibits for the exhibition. Mr. Rogers and Mr. Johnston, of Nova Scotia, have been employed; the former has expended $950, and the latter $700. In Quebec Mr. Wakeham is employed, and in Prince Edward Island, Mr. Duval. Mr. Ogden up to the present time has expended $490; Mr. Honeyman, for Nova Scotia, has expended $200; Mr. Gregory, Quebec, $1,500; Mr. Andrews, British Columbia, $1,100. Professor Macoun was also employed in procuring fish food for the exhibition.

Mr. BLAKE. I see there are fourteen clerks in the Department employed for extra services in connection with this matter. It was a new matter entirely, and I hardly understand the ground upon which the hon. gentleman says it was important in the public interest they should be employed for that extra work. I do not mean to say that if the Department is overworked, or when extra pressure comes upon it, that it may not be necessary to employ extra services; but if that be so, it seems to me there has been a needless and unwarrantable violation of the Civil Service Act, which prescribes that clerks in a Department shall not be employed for extra services in that particular Department. This work could very well have been attended to by other persons employed for that purpose. The sums may not be important, but the principle is, and I am sorry that at a period when we are regulating our Civil Service Act, and adopting the most virtuous resolutions, the hon. gentleman should propose to violate one of the most wholesome clauses of this Act in this manner.

Mr. BOWELL. I do not so understand the Civil Service Act. That Act provides that clerks employed at a regular salary shall not be paid for extra work, unless the sum be voted distinctly by Parliament. It is well known that for a number of years past that the practice of employing clerks and paying them large sums in addition to their salary was the reason for introducing that clause into the Civil Service Act. In almost every Department there were very large sums paid to clerks in violation of the law as it then existed. Since the present Act has been passed, when it has been necessary to employ any extra service, it has not been paid to him out of the contingencies of the Department, but a special vote has been placed in the Estimates to cover it, in order that Parliament might know in every instance where a clerk had been employed, the services he had performed and the amount that was to be paid to him, which was not the case under the old law. If a clerk now receiving a salary is worked over hours he cannot be paid under the law as I have indicated, but it has to be brought before Parliament. I do not therefore consider this is a violation of the Civil Service Act, for the reason that Parliament knows every dollar that is paid to an extra clerk. I cannot understand that it was the intention of Parliament to prevent the services of a clerk being utilised when he was required in any special work in that Department; but it did make this provision, that if he is so employed, his salary is not to be supplemented out of any vote granted by Parliament for other purposes, hence the necessity for coming down to Parliament in every instance with a specific sum to cover these particular items. In this case I am informed by those upon whom the responsibility rest in the Department of Marine and Fisheries, that they found it both easier and better to adopt this system, and to utilize clerks who had had experience in the Department, and that it would cost much less to employ them in this manner, than to bring in other clerks into the Department. Had new clerks been brought into the Department, they would have had to undergo a certain education, and be taught either by the Deputy Head or the chief clerks, at a loss of time to these latter officers. I am also informed that had the Department brought into the offices this number of clerks to perform this work, there would not have been rooms in which to place them.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne). I agree with what has been said by the leader of the Opposition, that this expenditure is entirely uncalled for, and if money is to be wasted and salaries paid for extra services, there are plenty of works in connection with the fisheries of Nova Scotia, where it could be spent with better advantage. When the hon. Finance Minister made his Budget Speech last year, he stated that it was the intention of the Government to provide $150,000 for the purpose of paying bounties to fishermen. Nearly seven months elapsed before any steps were taken, and it was not until 7th November, 1882, that the hon. gentleman made any statement in connection with this matter. It was not until 4th December that it was heard from again, and not until 18th December were any steps taken to collect information as to the proper persons to receive the bounty. A circular was issued on that date, addressed to the Collectors of Customs in Nova Scotia and other parts of Canada. These returns could not be obtained until January or February, and it was scarcely a matter of surprise that extra clerks were necessary, at that late date, to examine claims and prepare cheques. If the Department had given their attention to the matter two or three months earlier this expenditure would have been unnecessary. With respect to the appointment of Mr. Ogden: I understand he has been appointed for the purpose of making enquiries into disputed claims in connection with the fisheries of Nova Scotia. There are, however, a sufficient number of officers to look after those fisheries and to represent the Department, without extra men being appointed. There is Mr. Johnson, the head of the Department of Nova Scotia; Mr. Rogers, Inspector of Fisheries; and deputies and inspectors of fish in almost every county. I think in one county, that of Guysborough, there are no less than twenty-five inspectors and deputy-inspectors representing the Department.

Mr. BOWELL. Some of these men receive only $30 a year.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne). They are appointed to perform certain duties and there are plenty of others willing to take their places. Then there are the Collectors of Customs. These collectors were instructed to examine into the claims. The acting Minister has stated that Mr. Ogden was appointed to collect fish for the London exhibition; but Dr. Honeyman, a most valuable officer, and one who has been connected with exhibitions since 1862, was also engaged in that work, and could do it most successfully, and to far better advantage. This vote for extra clerks is entirely due to the Minister of Finance and the Minister of Marine having neglected to perform their duty in not taking earlier steps in respect to the payment of the fishery bounties.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. gentleman would have the country and the House believe that all the clerks in the Department and the fishery wardens had nothing else to do except to distribute this amount of $150,000. I may say in this connection that 16,000 cheques have been issued in connection with these bounties. If the clerks in the Department had nothing else to do they should not be there. The presumption is that officers in the Department have their regular duties to perform, and that their whole time is occupied. Hence, it was necessary, in order to perform this extra labor, to make a thorough investigation into those claims, that others outside of the Department should do the work, and that those in the Department who were engaged on it should be paid extra. In Halifax, the Department attempted to utilize the Collector of Customs, but he found it utterly impossible to perform his own duties and attend to the verification of these accounts and the payment of a very large number of cheques. When this was represented to the Department the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries asked some other officer to do the work, either Mr. Johnson or Mr. Ogden. The hon. member for Shelburne (Mr. Robertson) could not be serious when he spoke of employing fishery wardens, for he was well aware that nineteen-twentieths of them were selected merely to protect the fish in streams, and to see that the close seasons were observed. Even if some of them were qualified for the work connected with the bounties, they would have required extra pay. When the hon. gentleman attacks the Marine and Fisheries Department, he gives the very best evidence that the Department was not to blame, if any blame attached to anyone. He tells the House that the first reference made by the Department was on the 9th of the month, and that, on the 18th of the same month, the circulars were issued. It might be possible, if the hon. gentleman presided over the Department—

Mr. ROBERTSON. I said the 7th of November.

Mr. BOWELL. I understood the 9th of November; well, from the 9th to the 18th—

Mr. ROBERTSON. The 18th of December.

Mr. BOWELL. Admitting that it was the 18th of December, that is about a month; and during that month—

Mr. ROBERTSON. It is six weeks.

Mr. BOWELL. And during that month or six weeks the whole scheme had to be considered, and they were as busy as they could be in preparing the necessary documents upon which claims could be made, and to lay down a principle and basis upon which to act. The Department certainly was not remiss in its duty, in adopting a system of this kind for the distribution of $150,000 among so many. It is not yet all distributed, but about 16,000 cheques have been sent out already. A number have had to be rejected, and a number of claims have had to be investigated. There has been no unnecessary delay in carrying out the intentions of Parliament in appropriating this money. I can readily understand—and so can my hon. friend—that in the future, in the distribution of this money, having once established the system, neither large expense, nor trouble, nor delay will take place; he will also bear in mind that all the expenses attending the distribution of this money are extra and are not taken out of the $150,000, which was given by Parliament for distribution among the fishermen. For the attending expenses, Parliament has been asked to grant extra votes in order that the full amount of money go to the fishermen.

Mr. DALY. It appears to me that the hon. member for Shelburne merely desired to criticise the action of the Department, and that this was the sole object of his remarks this evening. If I were inclined to criticise the Department it would be in exactly the opposite direction to that which the hon. member for Shelburne has taken. It seems to me that any just criticism would be founded upon a want in that Department in not having employed a sufficient number of persons to distribute this award at one time, and in not having gone outside their own Department and retained the services of others, as they would in that way have distributed the award much more quickly and in a more speedy manner than has been the case under the present arrangement. I think that the Department has been rather inclined to overtax the already fully taxed officers with labors which they were unexpectedly called upon to perform. I can only say that in the county I have the honor to represent, we have but two inspectors of fisheries. This county extends for 100 miles on one side and for over 35 miles on the other side of the capital; and to distribute along the whole length of the shore of this county, to the owners of the numerous boats, who claimed the share in this bounty to which they were entitled, simply through either the agent at Halifax, Mr. Johnson, a very capable but greatly overworked employé of the Government, and of the inspectors of the two sections of the county, either east or west, or by means of these inspectors alone, would be a work of endless trouble and would not result, I am sure, satisfactorily. I believe that if any error has been made by the Department at all, it is in not having employed others and in not having gone outside to obtain the services of others to a greater extent than they have already done. I believe that the remarks of the hon. member for Shelburne are directed more at the employment of a former political opponent who had the honor of a seat in this House, than they were actuated by any motive of benefiting the service, which he now pretends to support. I believe that this bounty granted to the fishermen, is a policy to which this Government can lay claim to the credit of having inaugurated, and it is to this Government and to this Parliament to whom the fishermen of Nova Scotia, in spite of all the observations that now come from the other side of the House, will give, and will continue to give, that credit for years to come.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne). In the circular issued by the Department to the Collectors of Customs in Nova Scotia, they were instructed to circulate forms which were to be filled up and sworn to before a Justice of the Peace; and they were to see that those forms were correctly prepared, and to certify to them. This was the duty which devolved upon the Collectors of Customs from the instructions issued by the Department. The remarks of the member for Halifax, and of the acting Minister of Fisheries, would lead us to suppose that the officials in Nova Scotia had to examine into the claims, draw the cheques, and pay the money; but as I understand it, all this was done at Ottawa. What was done in Nova Scotia was to circulate the forms which were to be filled up, which were to be certified to by the Collectors of Customs, and this duty of certification took very little time indeed. I believe that so far as the Department is concerned, it did its work faithfully and well, considering the time that it had at its disposal for this purpose. Many returns never reached Ottawa until the middle of last January, and a large number of claims had to be examined by officers here, and the cheques had then to be drawn. I find no fault in the Department here; but I say that the work undertaken by the Ministers of Fisheries and Finance, should have been begun months before they reported on this matter, or brought it first to the attention of the Privy Council. If this had been done in time, then it would have been easy enough to have the claims examined, the cheques drawn, and the money paid long before this. The member for Halifax would lead us to believe that these cheques were drawn by some officer who must travel all round the coast to pay the cheques to the owners of the boats and to the men who fished in them. I do not so understand it at all; the Departmental cheques are payable to order of the men entitled to them; and they are forwarded to the office from whom the claims have come; and this does not entail any expense. His insinuation that the remarks I addressed to the House had for their object the slurring of a past political opponent is entirely uncalled for. I had no such intention. I do not approve of the appointment of Mr. Ogden to such a position; but I think it a most fortunate thing for a person in Nova Scotia, or in any part of the Dominion, especially a Conservative, to be defeated; for if defeated they are far better treated than those who meet with success and win seats in the House. I repeat that if the Department had issued instructions to collect this information before November or December, and had undertaken this work earlier in the season, this information might have been in the possession of the Government long ago, and there would not have been any necessity for employing so many extra clerks, while the fishermen would have been paid long before they will now be paid.

Mr. BOWELL. Will the hon. gentleman explain to the House how the statistics could have been obtained before the fishing season closed, and while half of the fishermen were out at sea.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne). Then you did not wait until the information was returned, because you issued instructions, and finding that there was a considerable amount of money on hand, the bounty to the fishermen was increased, and you ascertained this only three or four weeks ago. The fact is that if the Department had asked the number of vessels employed, the tonnage of vessels, and the number of boats and their tonnage, they might have had this information in the month of October. I looked through the returns for my own county, and I found that there was not a vessel reported but might have been reported in October; and I only hope that in future the Department will take steps to collect the information earlier in the season in order that the men may be paid before the season is closed.

On Resolution 314,

Customs—To provide for amount required to complete service in the Province of Manitoba $25,000.00

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). As I understand, this $20,000 additional is for this year's service in Manitoba. I see the vote in the original Estimates was $19,000, which would make altogether the Estimates for 1882-83, $44,900, while the Minister is only asking for, 1883-84, $40,000. I suppose there will be a Supplementary Estimate for this year.

Mr. BOWELL. I hope not.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Will there be less expended in 1883-84 than in 1882-83?

Mr. BOWELL. I hope so, from the fact that the service there has been systematized to a certain extent. As I explained when the item was before the House, we anticipate that a large amount of goods which are now passing through the United States, and which have to be bonded at Sarnia or Windsor, and the bond cancelled when these goods reach the boundaries of Manitoba at Emerson or Winnipeg, thus entailing a large amount of labor on the extra men whom we have attached to the staff, will go to Manitoba by way of Thunder Bay, and instead of the bonds being broken and the goods examined at Winnipeg, they will go westward to the sub-ports which we propose to open. We hope that there will be a less rush of business in Winnipeg than there has been, and that hence a less number of men will be required. The hon. gentleman will readily understand this expectation when I point out the fact that every car of goods, no matter whether it be dutiable or free, or whether it is immigrants' effects which passes through the United States, has to be bonded when it enters that territory, and the bond has to be cancelled when it reaches our borders at Winnipeg or Emerson. All the work attending that collection of revenue is imposed on these officers, less the amount of money received and the making of the calculations; but we hope they will be relieved of a large proportion of that work when immigrants and goods passing through, either from Montreal or Ontario, will go by Thunder Bay, and that there will be nothing for the Customs officers to do. I trust that this year, unless an unforeseen circumstance should arise, the expenditure in connection with the collection of revenue in Manitoba, will be somewhat lighter than during the past year.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne).

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and (at 12:55 o'clock a.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

WEDNESDAY, 16th May, 1883.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

BILL INTRODUCED.

The following Bill was introduced, and read the first time:—

Bill (No. 131) to encourage the manufacture of pig iron in Canada from Canadian ore.—(Sir Leonard Tilley.)

SALE OF INTOXICATING LIQUORS.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, in moving that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider a certain proposed resolution declaring that it is expedient to bring in a Bill to regulate the granting of shop, saloon, hotel, vessel and wholesale licenses for the sale of intoxicating liquors in the several Provinces of the Dominion, said: The House, when a Committee was specially struck on this subject, adopted, in effect, the principle of this resolution. It is, however, not necessary pro forma to move this resolution in order to meet the principle that all matters affecting trade should commence in Committee. A Bill has been reported, I believe, by the Committee, and on this resolution being adopted, the Bill which the Committee were authorized to introduce will be presented and printed, and pressed on the consideration of the House.

Mr. BLAKE. The House, in obedience to the suggestion of the paragraph of the Speech from the Throne on this subject, referred the matter to a Select Committee, giving them power to report by Bill or otherwise. I was surprised when I saw the notice on the paper which the hon. gentleman has just moved, as I understood that the matter having been referred to the Committee, it was by that channel alone that the Bill could come before us. I think the hon. gentleman's notice was irregular, as I think this motion is irregular. It seems to me the function of the Committee being to report by Bill or otherwise, it was the duty of the Committee to have reported a resolution, if a resolution is the proper mode to initiate the legislation. We have neither a report, nor a resolution upon which to found a Bill containing provisions similar to those which were suggested. It seems to me that on the point of Order, we have to carry out the proceedings which we have initiated in this matter in accordance with the third paragraph of the Speech from the Throne, upon which the Select Committee was appointed. It is only upon their report that we can act, not upon any motion, such as the hon. gentleman is now making. It strikes me, therefore, the true course would be to await the report of the Select Committee, and upon that to move whatever resolution might be necessary to initiate the legislation which they suggest.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The House certainly struck a Committee for the purpose of examining and reporting on this subject, with instructions to report by Bill or otherwise—no matter whether they reported by Bill or by resolution. The House has not concurred in that report; and will not be asked to concur in it. The report will be laid before the House as a means of information to the House. They might report a resolution which did not meet the views of the Government, and the Government, therefore, take the responsibility of moving this general resolution as a matter affecting trade and commerce; it will commence in Committee, and certainly there can be no point of Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. It seems to me that by adopting this resolution and going into Committee, it is open to introduce a Bill, either a Bill that has been reported by the Committee, or some similar Bill. I think the motion is in order.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BLAKE. I presume the hon. gentleman will give us some explanation of what the general provisions of this proposed measure will be. I suppose the real object of this is that the important matters concerning trade should be sifted and go through more stages than ordinary matters. That is the object of the rule; but if it is to be pure form, if the Speaker is to be moved out of the Chair, and you, Mr. Chairman, to be moved into the Chair, and the Committee is to report back again, and we are to have no more light until the Bill is introduced, then I would like to know of what use, for what object, this proceeding is taken. It seems to me there is substance as well as form, and that there ought to be more frequent stages, and earlier information than upon ordinary Bills. I would invite the hon. gentleman, therefore, to give us some explanation, particularly as he has told us that the House is not to be asked to concur in the report of the Select Committee, as the Government, upon their own responsibility, is now taking this initiative. We are now entirely at sea. We have had some information from the newspapers as to what the Committee has done, and the character of their Bill, but we have none at all as to the proposition the Government is about to submit to us.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would simply say that this resolution is practically a matter of form. The expediency of dealing with the subject was approved in the Address from the Throne, and the formation of the Committee, and the submission of this subject to the Committee, showed that the House thought we should have legislation in the matter. Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I think this is a mere matter of form, in order to satisfy the letter as well as the spirit of the Rule of the House.

Mr. BLAKE. Then the hon. gentleman declines to give us any information as to the nature of the legislation.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We will discuss that when the Bill is brought in.

Resolution reported.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD introduced Bill (No. 132) respecting the sale of intoxicating liquors, and the issue of licenses therefor.

Mr. BLAKE. Is this Bill in print?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; it is printed in English and French.

Bill read the first time.

PATENT ACT (1872) AMENDMENT BILL.

Mr. POPE, in moving the second reading of Bill (No. 122) to amend the Patent Act of 1872, said: The object of the present Bill is to remove difficulties in the working of the existing law. One main difficulty was that by the Patent Laws of the United States, any patent taken out expires at the earliest date at which the patent could expire, which had been taken out in any other country. We have always acted on the principle that our patents were for fifteen years. They are first issued for five years, and a fee of $20 imposed, and the time is afterwards extended for ten years more, and a further fee of $20 is collected. This arrangement was made in the interest of the patentee, so as to make it easy for him to procure a patent. It has been decided by the United States Courts that a patent taken out in the United States, after a patent had been taken out here, would expire at the end of five years, under our law. This amendment is intended to remove, as far as we can remove, this difficulty. We declare by this Bill that:

"The term limited for the duration of every patent of invention issued by the Patent Office shall be fifteen years; but at the time of the application therefor it shall be at the option of the applicant to pay the full fee required for the term of fifteen years, or the partial fee required for the term of five years, or the partial fee required for the term of ten years."

It further states:

"Every patent heretofore issued by the Patent Office in respect of which the fee required for the whole or for any unexpired portion of the term of fifteen years, has been duly paid according to the provisions of the now existing law in that behalf, has been and shall be deemed to have been issued for the term of fifteen years, subject, in case a partial fee only has been paid, to cease on the same conditions on which patents hereafter issued are to cease under the operation of this section."

The object of this Bill is, therefore, to give effect to what we have always contended was the principle on which we have issued patents, and to make the law clear. We hope that when this measure is adopted our patents will be accepted in the United States as being issued for fifteen years. The difficulty experienced is greater on account of the fact that when parties apply for patents in the United States and Canada, ours are issued two, three or four months before those of the United States, and that being the case the decision of the American Courts provided that the patents shall expire in the United States at the shortest time for which they were issued in any other country.

Bill read the second time, considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time and passed.

THIRD READING.

The following Bill was read the third time, and passed:—

Bill (No. 126) to make further provision respecting the regulation and collection of tolls on Government timber slides and other works constructed to facilitate the transmission of timber, lumber and saw-logs.—(Mr. Costigan.)

SUPERANNUATION OF CIVIL SERVANTS.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved the second reading of Bill (No. 91) to amend and consolidate the Acts relating to the superannuation of persons employed in the Civil Service of Canada.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will explain the Bill.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. As I stated when the resolutions were brought down, this Bill is mainly a consolidation of the Acts relating to superannuation. The amendments made by the Bill have been rendered necessary by the provision of the Civil Service Act of 1882, by which that Act was applied to a limited number of officials. There are only one or two new sections in the Bill, among them are the following:—

"All officers, clerks and employes in or under the several Departments of the Executive Government who are paid a yearly salary, and to whom 'The Canada Civil Service Act, 1882,' applies, and who in case they were or are appointed after the coming into force of that Act were or are appointed in conformity with its provisions.

"All such officers, clerks and employes of the second or outside division of the Civil Service, to whom 'The Canada Civil Service Act, 1882,' does not apply, and who are employed in an established capacity, and paid a yearly salary as the Governor in Council may, from time to time, designate."

Under the Act of 1882, so far as the outside service was concerned, it limited the officials to whom the Act should apply to the officers of the Customs, Excise and Post Office Departments; and it was, therefore, necessary to amend the Act in order to place the service generally under its operation. There is one provision to which the hon. leader of the Opposition took exception, and at the time I was inclined to agree with him that the objection was a sound one. I refer to the section reserving to parties their rights when a repealing Act is introduced. Such a clause is usually inserted; but as it may possibly turn out that a party superannuated was not legally superannuated, after consultation with the Minister of Justice I have decided not to press that clause if the hon. gentleman thinks it objectionable.

Mr. McMULLEN. When this Bill was introduced, the hon. gentleman promised to give us some information with regard to the operations of the Act, so far as the finances of the country are concerned. The Civil Service Board set out that the country was saving money by the Act, and the hon. gentleman undertook to give us some information on this point.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It is exceedingly difficult to give definite or reliable information on this point. The hon. leader of the Opposition took some exception to the calculations made in the report of the Civil Service, and I may say that when I first read these calculations I was somewhat inclined to think that they were exaggerated. But in looking into the matter carefully, I am of opinion that though their calculations may not turn out entirely correct, they will be so to a great extent. Take the port of St. John, for example: There were three persons superannuated there within the last three or four years. Their average salary was $1,000 each. The average superannuation, perhaps, amounts to $1,500. Only one person was appointed to fill the position of the assistant statistical clerk, who had a salary of $1,000, and they were superannuated at an average of about $500 a year. The result was, that while there appears to be an increased charge made on the revenues of the country of $1,500 there was really a saving of $1,100 to the Treasury by that operation, because the salaries which were saved amounted to $3,000, less $400 paid to a junior clerk. It may be said that those men would not have been retained but for the Civil Service Act; but I appeal to the House to say whether three aged men who were not capable of doing work should be turned out on the world without a dollar. The result would have been that they would have been retained in office, and other persons would have been employed to do their work. Therefore, in that particular case, while there appears to be an addition of some $1,500 to the Civil Service fund, there is an absolute saving of $1,100. The hon. leader of the Opposition says the calculation is based on the supposition that the men shall live forever. I do not quite see that that is the result of the calculation, but it is exceedingly difficult to make an estimate of this kind, because you have to estimate how long they are likely to continue to draw from this sum. It has been suggested that in future, when a person is superannuated, it should be stated on the face of the paper whether the office is to be filled up or not, and in that way it might be ascertained exactly what was saved and what was lost by the change. The statements of payments made to the Superannuation Fund by the Civil Service, and of the amounts paid to them, do not give a correct idea of what the country loses and the Treasury pays under the operation of the Civil Service Act. To make a definite calculation of the matter is exceeding difficult, in fact it is impossible. While I doubt very much the correctness of the statement made by the Civil Service Commissioners, I must say, after looking more closely into it, there is more ground for the calculations they made than I had supposed on giving it a cursory examination.

Mr. McMULLEN. This Superannuation Act is a matter that I think deserves the serious consideration of the House. It has now been in existence in this country for about twelve years. I have looked carefully into the operations of the Act, and I find that last year there were on the list of persons who had been superannuated 394 names, and this year the number had increased to 406. The sum paid out last year on account of superannuation was $160,319.95, and the amount to be paid out during the current year, according to the return brought down to the House on the 23rd of February, is $189,978.98, an increase of $29,658.03. This is more than double the increase that has taken place during any year since the inception of this Act, and I hold that it is the duty of this House to seriously consider whether it is wise, in the interest of the country, to continue this system in force, or whether it would not be better to abolish it entirely, and adopt something else that would be fairer to the country and juster to the Civil Service. I have looked carefully into the list, and I find that fifteen of the number served an average of six years and six months, and in the fixing of their retiring allowance they have had added to their time eight years and nine months.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Under the Superannuation Act they cannot be superannuated unless they have served ten years.

Mr. McMULLEN. There are some who have served only three years, and those fifteen only served an average of six and one-half years each.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. That cannot be.

Mr. McMULLEN. I have gone carefully over the list and any hon. gentleman who goes over it will find that my calculation is correct. In the fixing of their retiring allowance they have also had eight and one-third years added to their time of service.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Oh, oh.

Mr. McMULLEN. Hon. members may challenge the statement I make; but until they examine the list, and are prepared to say that my statement is wrong, they had better, in the meantime, accept it. The total amount contributed to the fund by the fifteen I have referred to, is $2,944.01, during the time they were in the service of the Government; and the sum they draw annually from the fund is $6,209.54. During the entire time those fifteen men were in the service of the country, they did not contribute sufficient to pay one-half year's allowance of the amount they draw. I contend, therefore, that it is unjust that those who are placed on the superannuation list should be permitted to draw a sum not proportionate to the number of years they have served, but largely in excess of it, by the addition of a number of years. There are some cases in which ten years have been added. The total number of years that have been added to the service of the superannuated servants now on the retired list, is 413. The average sum drawn annually by each person on the superannuation list at present is $468; but owing to the number of years that have been added to the service of these men, the country is now paying annually $8,494.00 more than it should be required to pay under the terms of the Act. The average annual increase of payment on account of this fund since its inception, has been $12,141.41. The entire sum paid out since the introduction of the Act, is $1,108,539.40; and the entire sum contributed by the Civil Service has been $526,876.62, leaving $581,662.78 as an absolute loss to this country, by the operation of this system during twelve years. The next point I desire to call the attention of the House to is the average salary paid. Of course, it is said that these people, having been in the service of the country so long, and receiving only a moderate salary, should be provided with something in the shape of a retiring allowance in the event of their becoming incapacitated from discharging the duties devolving upon them. There are in the Department of Justice, fifteen, with an average salary of $1,431; in the Department of the Secretary of State, there are forty-one, with an average salary of $1,028; in the Department of the Interior eighty-eight, being five of an increase this year, with an average salary of $1,172; in the Department of Indian Affairs, thirty-two, with an average of $978; in the Auditor-General's Department, eighteen, with an average of $1,066; in the Finance Department, forty-six, with an average of $1,262; in the Inland Revenue Department, twenty-eight, with an average of $1,275; in the Customs Department, twenty-nine, an increase of three this year, with an average of $1,136; in the Post Office Department, 161, an increase of thirty-nine this year, with an average, of $876; in the Department of Agriculture, forty-two, an increase of nine this year, with an average of $1,205; in the Department of Marine and Fisheries, thirty, an increase of five, with an average of $1,166; in the Department of Public Works, thirty-two, an increase of ten, with an average of $1,294; in the Department of Railways and Canals, twenty-seven, an increase of one, with an average of $1,601. The average salary of the entire staff is $1,191, and the total increase this year, 118. My reason for giving the average salaries in the several Departments is this: Of course, the reason why the superannuation system is kept in force is, as I have already said, that it is thought desirable, on the part of the Government, that some retiring allowance should be made for those people after they have labored for a considerable time in the service of the country. My reason for making an average of the salaries is to show that those gentlemen receive in return for their services, annually, salaries as large, if not in excess, of those usually paid to bank clerks, clerks in wholesale houses, school teachers, or any other class. I do not think there is any other class better paid than the Civil Service. Under these circumstances, I think it would be only right that those people should be required to provide for themselves out of the very liberal allowance they get, in place of their being made a charge on the country. From what I have gathered from the operation of the Act, the Civil Service rather take the position of being heirs or sons of an estate than servants. It appears that, once a man becomes a servant of the country, he has a right to expect—in fact, the Government admit he is entitled to be supported by the State for the balance of his life. Should anything happen to him he has to be provided for. I think this is a very wrong principle. We have a right to expect when a man is hired to discharge any duty in connection with the Department in which he is employed, that he should be engaged on the distinct understanding that so long as he efficiently and faithfully discharges his duty he can reasonably expect to hold the position, but that when he fails to do that he must expect to be dismissed. That is the rule in the case of banks, and all other cases, and I think it is wrong that the public should be led to suppose that because a man is placed on the list of the Civil Service he must count on being provided for during the balance of his life, as if he were an heir or a son. I find in this list there are sixty-one Deputy-Heads of Departments and assistant clerks that get an average of $2,640.00. My reason for putting the question I did, in the first place, with regard to the report of the Civil Service, was to find out on what grounds the hon. Minister would attempt to show that the operations of this Act were advantageous to the country, and that the report was correct. I took the opportunity myself to examine into the working of the Act. I took two or three cases as an illustration. In the first place, if you take the case of John Wilson of the Inland Revenue Department, you will find he was superannuated the 1st March, 1872, when he was drawing $900 per year, and he was granted a retiring allowance of $193.72. He lived eight years and four months during which time he drew a total of $1,656. Had he remained that time in the service he would have drawn $7,500, thus leaving a difference between the two of $5,844. In his case the office was closed and no one appointed to take his place, and the Civil Service report declared that the country made $5,844 by superannuating him when he was not wanted and from an office that was not refilled. If a business man were to adopt this system, and in the event of his failing, bring before his creditors a report stating that by the removal of certain clerks whom he had hired, and who had nothing to do, he not only saved say $400 a year—but that he had made a clear profit during that year of $400—I fancy such a statement would be laughed at. On the 1st of March, 1872, E. D. Scott, when he was getting $1,400 a year, was superannuated on an allowance of $380.80. He lived nine years and four months, in which time he drew a total of $3,551.13. Had he remained in office all the time, he would have drawn $13,066. Deduct from that the amount he drew as retiring allowance, and you have a balance of $9,511.87. That is another case in which the Civil Service report cited as a case in which the country made $9,511.87 by removing this man, and not putting another in his place. I do not think any gentleman who carefully examines the basis on which those calculations were made, would risk his reputation for intelligence and accuracy and careful calculation, by saying that they are based on a proper, equitable, fair, and just calculation. I was surprised to find the names I did of the gentlemen attached to that report of the Civil Service. In the next place, I find that all those in the Civil Service drawing a salary of $1,000 a year have to pay 2 per cent. of that salary towards the fund. Now, I hold it would be more in the interest of the Civil Service of this country if that 2 per cent. was set aside at interest and that the sum should remain at their credit, to be drawn out when they left the service. I think it would be more just to the service than the system now in force. From my examination of those on the retired list, I have come to the conclusion—which I think will be concurred in by every member of this House—that a great many have been taken into the service who never ought to have been admitted, and that, in order to get rid of inefficient servants, they have been superannuated; and the result is that the faithful and efficient servants who have discharged their duties well for a number of years, are called upon to pay a certain sum annually out of their salary in order to provide for those who never ought to have been admitted to the service. I believe great injustice is thus done to the efficient servants; and that if the question of the continuation of this system were submitted to a vote of the service to-morrow, they would reject it and prefer some system of insurance. I do not mean, for a moment, to say that those who are now in the employ of the country and have contributed toward the fund, should not be permitted, if they choose, to reap any advantages they may be entitled to draw from the fund at some future time when they may become unable to discharge their duties. I am willing that justice should be done to them; but I think that in place of perpetuating such a system as this, seeing the operations of the Act, seeing how much money has been paid out for the last twelve years at the expense of this country, and seeing the manner in which the Act has worked since its inception to the present time, it would be very much better to abolish it altogether and to introduce a more equitable system whereby those who are disposed to contribute to a fund out of which they may be permitted to draw when they retire from the service, should be able to draw in proportion to the amount they had contributed, and that the honest and efficient clerk, the man who, for a great many years, had faithfully discharged his duty, should not be compelled to pay for the drones and those that are inefficient. Under the present system their family is robbed by the amount they should have coming to them on account of the annual deduction made from their salary. I admit that in England there may be some reasonable grounds for the continuation of this system. In that country the Civil Service officers have not the same opportunity of investing their money to advantage as they have in this country. I hold that if the Civil Service of this country were made to understand that they would have to provide for themselves they would be much more economical in their habits than they are now. I contend this system rather leads them to recklessness than to economy. If there was no law under which they expected the country to provide for them they would lay aside more money annually. There are plenty of opportunities for good investments, such as real estate or bank stocks. Now, I would draw the attention of the House to the manner in which these 406 men are distributed over the Departments. There are fifteen now employed in the office of the hon. Minister of Justice, and his percentage of those who are on the retired list would be ten, who are drawing the sum of $4,680 annually. There are twenty-seven in the office of the hon. Minister of Militia, and his percentage of those who are on the retired list would be eighteen, and they are drawing $8,424 annually. There are forty-one in the office of the hon. Secretary of State, and his percentage of the 406 who are on the retired list would be twenty-seven, who are drawing the gross sum of $12,636 annually. There are eighty-eight in the office of the hon. Minister of the Interior, and his percentage on the retired list would be fifty-four, who are drawing annually $25,272.00. There are thirty-two in the Department of Indian Affairs, the percentage would be twenty-one, and they are drawing $9,828. There are eighteen in the office of the Auditor General, his percentage on the retired list would be twelve, and they are drawing $5,716. There are forty-six in the office of the hon. Minister of Finance, his percentage would be thirty, and they are drawing $14,040. There are twenty-eight in the office of the Minister of Inland Revenue; his percentage on the retired list would be eighteen, and these are drawing $8,424. There are twenty-nine in the office of the hon. Minister of Customs, his percentage on the retired list would be eighteen, and they are drawing $8,424. There are 161 in the Post Office Department, the percentage on the retired list would be 107, and they are drawing $50,076. There are forty-two in the office of the hon. Minister of Agriculture, his percentage on the retired list would be twenty-eight, and they are drawing $13,104. Those gentlemen who are drawing those sums are strutting round doing nothing, and living at the country's expense of course. There are thirty in the office of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries, his percentage would be twenty, and they are drawing annually $9,360. There are thirty-two in the office of the hon. Minister of Public Works, his percentage on the retired list would be twenty-one, and they are drawing $10,206. There are twenty-seven in the office of the hon. Minister of Railways, and his percentage on the retired list is eighteen, and they are drawing annually $8,424. There are 406 altogether on the retired list, and to these the yearly sum of $189,978.98 has got to be paid. Now, I think this question deserves the serious consideration of this House, and it is time that something should be done. Not only in the interest of the country, but in the interest of the faithful and efficient servants, some system should be adopted, if any system of retiring allowances is necessary, whereby the country would not be called upon to lose the enormous sum we are now losing annually and to provide that the faithful servants should not be so unjustly treated as they are by the provisions of this Act.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. If the hon. member followed up his proposition with a resolution it would be to repeal the Act; he does not believe in the Act, that is quite clear. I doubt very much whether Parliament is prepared to accept his proposal and repeal the Act. In 1871, or earlier, when this law was enacted, twice the amount was required to be paid by the members of the Civil Service, as compared with that exacted from them to-day. I recollect perfectly the great interest taken by a prominent member on the other side of the House, Mr. Joly, who took up the question, brought it under the consideration of the House, and produced such an influence and effect on hon. members that the amount paid by Civil servants was reduced one-half. Two remedies are suggested by the hon. gentleman (Mr. McMullen) if the Act were repealed. One is, that a certain percentage of the salary of each member should be placed in the Treasury bearing interest, and be paid to him on his retirement from the Service. When this Act was passed we found a great many aged men in the service who were utterly unfit to discharge their duties, and the Governor came down to the House and asked, in the interest of the service more than to benefit the men themselves, that they should have power to superannuate officers and give them something on which to live. Suppose the propositions of the hon. member were adopted, that is that the Civil servants should pay 2 or 4 per cent. of their salaries into the Treasury and receive the interest thereon, and obtain the amount with interest, upon their retirement, it would not have reached the cases of men who, at that time, should be superannuated, having been twenty-five or thirty-five years in the service, and who took the benefit of the Act at once. Then the hon. gentleman suggested that the lives of the Civil servants should be insured, in order that their families should receive an amount on their decease. That scheme is somewhat popular in the Civil Service, namely: That instead of getting a retiring allowance, there should be a certain life insurance. But this again did not meet the case. The object of Parliament was to provide for those men who were not efficient servants, in order that there might be efficient men secured. You would not reach these cases by a system of life insurance, for, while the family would obtain the benefit in the event of the father's death, he would be turned out of the service without a shilling. The hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) has devoted a good deal of time to the preparation of the statement which he has submitted to the House. Some of them, no doubt, are correct; but he must be mistaken, notwithstanding the emphatic manner in which he reasserted it after some doubt had been expressed on this side of the House, in his statement that 15 per cent. were superannuated on an average service of six and a-half years; that they paid $2,900 and received $6,000. That must be a mistake, because the Act strictly provides that an officer shall not be superannuated until he has served ten years, except for causes stated in this Bill, which in this particular is a repetition of the old Act, as follows:—

"If any person to whom this Act applies, is constrained from any infirmity of mind or body to quit the Civil Service before the period at which a superannuation allowance might be granted him, the Governor in Council may allow him a gratuity not exceeding one month's pay for each year of his service; and if any such person is so constrained to quit the service before such period, by reason of severe bodily injury received without his own fault in the discharge of his public duty, the Governor in Council may allow him a gratuity not exceeding three months' pay for every two years service, or a superannuation allowance not exceeding one-fifth of his average salary during the then last three years.'

The hon. gentleman has somewhat reflected on the service. His principle objection is that drones contribute equally with active men. But each man contributes according to his salary. When the hon. gentleman, in reflecting on the Civil Service expenditure, says that Civil Service servants seem to be considered as the sons and heirs of the Government, I do not hesitate to say that in the public interest Civil servants should be fairly remunerated for the work they perform for their country; and I will say more, if I had a dozen sons, even with the large salaries of which the hon. member complains, I would never advise one of them to enter the service. I would prefer that they should go into shops, stores and banks, where they were not so well paid, according to the hon. gentleman, but where they would have a chance to rise. Here an officer at $600 or $700 a year with a family, has nothing left at the end of the year, except, perhaps, debts; he is in a hopeless position, and is able to obtain only a bare living. Whereas, a man entering trade and commerce, though he might meet with mishaps, might ultimately make something, which an honest Civil servant can never do. I hold it would be a great mistake to go back to the position occupied before 1871, and neither this Government nor any other Government would vote for a return to the position under which officers were removed, after giving faithful service for twenty or thirty years, without receiving a shilling. It does not appear that we are repaid the whole sum, but there is a very considerable saving effected, which compensates for the amount paid under the Civil Service Act, and there are other advantages to the public service which flow from a continuation of this policy of providing something for a man who has spent his life in the service, and who has not been able to lay by anything for himself or his family.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I quite agree that it is very desirable, in the interest of the country, that the Civil Service should be made as efficient as possible, and it cannot be made efficient unless the officials are reasonably well paid; but I remember cases when men contributed under the superannuation arrangement, a certain sum from their income every year, which they could ill afford, and, because they died during the time of their service, their families did not obtain a return of any part of the money paid in. I understand there is a proposal to establish a life insurance system, but that would never meet the case, because if it were established it would be an additional amount which the Civil servant would have to pay. If an officer dies within one year of the time when he would be entitled to superannuation, his family receive nothing. That is not a fair or reasonable thing; and I would like to hear from the hon. Minister if any arrangement could be made by which that very grave injustice could be remedied.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. If this Bill is objectionable from a financial stand point, it would be still more objectionable if the suggestions of the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien) were adopted. I think the members of the Civil Service are perfectly satisfied to take their chance in this matter, because if we were to pay back to the family the money which every officer had paid in, it would involve a very considerable amount; and that was one of the grounds urged by Mr. Joly for reducing the amount paid by the Civil servants namely, that their contributions would not necessarily come back to them.

Mr. BLAKE. The proposal of the Administration, in the first instance, was, that this fund should be self-sustaining, and they were of the opinion that the contributions, which originally were nearly double what they are at present, would produce that result. It is very clear from the figures, that if the original proposal would not have produced any such result, still less the diminished proposal—a proposal as my hon. friend from Muskoka will observe, was for an insurance against particular risks, and for insurance against the risk of their becoming disabled and infirm while in the service, and the insurance money is paid as insurance money against that particular risk. But it is not adequate insurance money for this purpose, because the country has to pay four times as much as the whole of the Civil servants pay, in order to carry out the obligations imposed on them, even for that limited risk; and if, in addition, the country was to undertake to pay under any events, under any circumstances, of course, the financial results of the measure would be still more onerous, as the hon. Minister of Finance pointed out, than they now are. I obtained a return from the hon. Minister of Finance a while ago. It was only a partial answer to a return which I had applied for, and the whole figures of which it was impossible to bring down, but it was numerical, and I may say it showed that since the Civil Service Act was passed the numbers are not very unequally divided between those superannuated or retired upon a gratuity under the Civil Service Act and those who died while in the service. There is a slight majority—I cannot remember the exact figures, but I think the number was 11,000 or 12,000 altogether, and there was a majority of seventy-five or thereabouts of those who got some benefit from the Civil Service Act practically, and of those who died while in the service—and therefore the hon. gentleman's observation that there is a very large proportion—and I think rather an increasing proportion than otherwise—as far as it has worked into its normal condition, although perhaps there has been too short a time yet to toll about it—of those who contributed to it and never got any practical benefit from it. Against this particular risk, another risk, which comes to us all sooner or later, happens to them, and they die in the service. I am not objecting to the second reading of the Bill because it is a Consolidation Bill; and I presume that nobody, however much opposed to this system in the beginning, and, however much convinced as I am that it requires modification in the future, would propose that Civil servants who had entered office or retained office for ten or eleven years under its operation, and who had changed their condition in life with this inducement existing, should be deprived of what may be called fairly by that much abused name sometimes—a vested right. I do not think that it would be fair or reasonable to persons in that position, even if the policy of the country should change upon this subject, to say to them: "Gentlemen, you have been ten or twelve years in the service, you have paid your subscriptions to the fund, and you entered and continued in the service under the idea of having the benefits of this provision; but we have changed that policy now and will cut you off, and return you your money." I think that any change that takes place in the policy of the country with reference to the persons who have been for any reasonable, any appreciable time in the service, must be a charge, optional as far as they are concerned, and not be compulsory upon them to their disadvantage. It is an old observation, as old as the time in which Burke introduced his great economical reform, that it is the duty of those who propose economical reforms in the State, to remember that the State is perpetual, while the lives of its servants are, after all, but of brief duration. We should not propose to do an injustice to the individual in attempting to make a public benefit. That principle was carried, in my opinion, in the particular instance to which I refer, in consideration for pensioners, a great deal further than we would be disposed to carry it, but the general principle to the extent to which I have indicated seems to me quite sound. I think that this Bill contains details of an objectionable character, to which I called the hon. Minister's attention a while ago, and to which I will take the liberty of calling the attention of the Committee, when we go into Committee; and I think that when we go out of Committee, and it is proposed to read the Bill the third time, then will be the proper time to propose in future, and with reference to existing Civil servants, who may avail themselves of it, perhaps with reference to those who have very recently come into the service, and under any circumstances, certainly with reference to those who have yet to come into the service, some modification of a policy which was experimental at the start, and the expectations connected with which have not, I think, been answered. Speaking generally, the observations of the hon. Minister I concur in. I have always said that the condition on which we are to expect efficient service is the giving of a fair reward to those who are placed in office. I believe that a fair reward to those placed in office ought to co-exist with a determination on the part of the Administration to exact a performance of their duties from these persons; and I believe that a liberal, cheerful spirit in the performance of duty, is best to be obtained by affording that fair play which the hon. Minister advocates, and which I am always prepared to support. I agree further with the proposition of the hon. Minister, that some proposition of some kind or other in this relation is of practical consequence to the State in regard to these servants. It is an unfortunate thing that it should be so, because one of the most important things in the making up of people's characters is that they should learn for themselves that part of prudence which consists in economy, in, whatever your income may be, confining your expenditure within the margin of that income, and in saving something for a rainy day for yourself, and still more for those near and dear to you, dependent upon you; and anything which recognizes the proposition that there is to be a State aid for the period of infirmity, and that there is to be a compulsory saving, is a thing which, to that extent, takes away from the nerve, fibre and stamina of the character of those in whose favor, so to speak, such a provision was made. No doubt experience has demonstrated that, where the State is master, those feelings of compassion which we all entertain in reference to persons who may not be saving money—and who find themselves incapable of longer discharging their duty, are very strong—they are so strong as to prevail over the stern discharge of the duty to the State, which is involved, in seeing that a man is retired the moment he ceases to be able to efficiently discharge the duties to which he has been appointed. In private life, persons at any rate who have not accumulated vast means, and who are employés of others, are obliged with deep regret, but still obliged, no longer to continue the services of those who have become incapable of serving them, because they cannot afford to keep them for nothing and make them pensioners; and they are obliged to revert to the principles to which I alluded a while ago—to pay them the worth of their services they from time to time receive from them, and that it is their duty out of the moneys they have received to have accumulated what might be necessary for the period of ill-health or old age. But the State does not do so, and the Administrators of the State do not do so; and there is this additional point which is not without force: That the Administrators of the State, when they continue an officer in the service after he is unfit for, or less fit for it, are not paying out their own money. They are not themselves suffering any inconvenience—the State suffers. Somebody else is appointed; some other provision is made to do the work that has been done less efficiently; and after all it is not the individual who is called upon to make the decision that suffers personally, but the State at large. Now, these are considerations which have resulted in this way. As a matter of fact, the State does not, through its Ministers, turn people out of doors if they have not saved money, and are not able to support themselves when they have become inefficient; and you ought to put the Ministers of the State in a position in which those feelings of compassion to which I have referred shall not over-bear the sense of duty to the State, so that they will be able to say: "Now we can discharge our duty." Well, that is all very well; but once again, in all other walks of life, if those persons were professional men, or bankers, or clerks, or merchants, they would have been called upon—out of the reward for their labors received day after day, month after month, year after year—themselves to make that fund. My hon. friend has given some figures which show that taking it by the large, taking it all around—with some exceptions, I dare say—the fund is there. But it is not so applied. Now the question is whether the true mode of dealing with these cases now—not as the hon. gentleman said in 1871, when he wanted to relieve the service of a number of persons then old and infirm, and then presently to take the benefit of the Act—is to provide that in future as you are going to put in none but excellent men who have passed admirable examinations, young and vigorous men—physically and mentally fit for the service, you should provide something of the kind which my hon. friend has described—a compulsory saving graduated according to their emolument, which shall go to the credit of these gentlemen with interest accumulating, and which shall take the shape of a fund, so that when the time arrives when a particular individual leaves the service, whether by voluntary retirement from infirmity, or because he has left the world, this fund shall be available for himself or his family. This would be the adoption of a compulsory saving on the part of the service for that voluntarily which individuals are obliged to make at the risk of being driven to the wall and exposed to poverty in their old age, or when they become infirm. The making of that saving would result in the hon. Minister being able to say to a Civil servant when the time arrived when the efficiency of the service required his retirement, where is that sum which could be converted into an annuity and paid to his family afterwards because it is composed of his own savings with interest during the time he has been in service. I take occasion to make these remarks because I think that even on the second reading of this Bill when it is proposed to re-enact, not a system of superannuation, but this system of superannuation which I think has proved in many cases expensive, faulty, and defective, we should express our views upon the subject.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. Minister himself pointed out that when the system was first introduced, it was not introduced as being the mature expression of what was thought most advisable for all time to come, but was introduced as an experiment for the time being. The hon. Minister's words when the Bill was introduced in about 1870 or 1871 were that it had been found that there were a number of old men in the service of the Government who were inefficient on account of their age, and finding himself unable to dismiss them with compensation this plan was adopted to enable him to get rid of them. If that statement was correct, as I have no doubt it was, it shows that the whole principle of the scheme of superannuation, as well as the details, are quite open to our consideration, for there is nothing in it which may be considered as having been settled by the wisdom of previous Parliaments, or settled by precedents. As the hon. leader of the Opposition has pointed out, things have changed very much. There is now a Civil Service Act providing that no man who is too old to expect a moderately long term of useful service shall enter the Department; that no man who is not in sound health shall enter the service. There is no reason why a different arrangement should not be made with regard to those who now enter the service under the Act, for we do not propose at all to interfere with those who are already in the service. Of course, the great cause of the excessive superannuations in the past has been that men have been allowed to enter the service when they were too old to have a reasonable expectation of devoting any considerable time to the service, and they thus come on the country before they should have done, thereby involving an excess of expenditure, particularly because a large number of these men were appointed to the higher positions in the service. This has been remedied to a great extent by the present Act, though I think, perhaps, that the age for entrance might have been put at a lower point. The hon. Minister has said that if he had twelve sons he would rather put them in banks, or in commerce, or in other occupations where they could hope to rise, than in the Civil Service. There is no doubt that, as at present constituted, the Civil Service does not offer a very tempting career, simply because a man is by no means as sure of rising by any amount of honest work, or by persistent attention to his duties, as he would be in commerce. This is not a necessary concomitant of a Civil Service, but it is of any Civil Service such as ours which is managed as ours is, as it always has been, by political influence. So long as a man's promotion depends so much upon the amount of politics at his back rather than his qualification, so long will it be no object for active and capable young men entering the Civil Service. We have been told by one of the most efficient deputy-heads of the service—the deputy-head of the Post Office Department—that it was impossible to attract to the service fairly good men, or even as good a class of young men as the junior clerks in banks, not because the salaries were not high enough, for they are nearly double, but because there was no prospect of promotion. I am glad that the hon. gentleman has realized the fact that the great objection to the service and the thing which makes it practically an unprofitable service for active and energetic young men to enter, is, that there is no certain promotion as a reward of merit; but though he has provided that promotion shall not take place without a certain amount of competency, he does not provide that promotion shall take place in consequence of that efficiency. When he has taken that step the service will become as attractive to capable and enterprising young men as the service of banking, insurance, or other companies—in fact more so than the service of any private corporation. Men who are employed in these corporations, though they may not have the chance of becoming enormously wealthy, they have a chance of attaining to the highest position in the service of such companies; they have not only a chance but a certainty of promotion if they remain in the service of those banks or other companies, and persist in the faithful discharge of their duties. He knows that merit will be appreciated, and that promotion will not come as a result of the amount of backing he has, or of the result of some election which may occur, but that it will depend entirely upon the zeal and ability with which he discharges his duties. While we are on this subject of the salaries of the Civil Service in comparison with those paid in banks, &c., I may say that it has been pointed out that the salaries of the Civil Service are larger than those paid by such companies, especially for the lower grades. I do not believe, under present conditions, that a Civil servant can save as much money as the ordinary bank clerk or clerk in a wholesale house, receiving the same salary, for the reason that he is expected to spend more, and to take a higher position in society. He is even encouraged to do so by his superiors, for we find that when Rideau Hall festivities approach, which naturally call for a little outlay on the part of those who attend them, the Government are prepared to advance sometimes a month's salary to their employes to enable them to make preparations for these festivities. I say, therefore, that they are not only obliged, but encouraged to indulge in what would be called extravagance in another walk in life, where they receive the same salary, and on this account they cannot be expected to save as much as they would under other circumstances. I think, therefore, that there is good ground for imposing compulsory saving upon them. The only question is whether to this compulsory saving, a bonus should be added by the Government. I am myself inclined to the opinion, though I do not lay it down authoritatively, that there is some ground for giving a bonus of a certain amount in addition to what they are compelled to save. What the amount should be is another question. I think the present contribution by the Government to the superannuation fund is excessive. I think it has been clearly shown that men, by simple persistence in the service without any particular zeal in the performance of their duties, and by political influence, succeeded in rising from one grade of the service to another, and in becoming entitled to a sum altogether out of proportion to the amount of work they have done for the country. I think the bonus should bear a fairer proportion to the amount of their compulsory saving than it does at present; and I do not know but that it might very fairly be combined with a system of Government life insurance. The Government, in addition to collecting a certain compulsory saving from their employes, might receive besides, as much as they are willing to contribute for the purpose of insuring them. This may not be much of a boon to the service; but we know that the insurance companies make a profit, and, therefore, a man's representatives do not get as much from them when he dies as they would if the fund were managed for nothing. I do not think it would be at all out of place for the Government to conduct gratuitously such an insurance fund, so as to let the Civil servants insure their lives either in a sum payable at death or in an endowment payable at a specified age, or upon a man's leaving the service. This would be a real boon to the service, as it would enable them to obtain a larger premium in proportion to what they paid than they could possibly obtain from any existing company. But I do not think the evil of the superannuation system consists exclusively in the excessive amount paid to those who are bona fide disabled for the service. The great abuse consists in what is too frequent under all Governments, viz.: The superannuation of men who are still able to perform their duties, merely to get rid of them, and get their places for some friend of the Government. This will continue to be the case as long as the service is regulated on political considerations; and it is in these cases, in which the Government continue to pay a man capable of work for work he is not doing, and to pay another man for doing the same work, that the abuse of the system stands out most prominently. Another abuse consists in placing men in the service too late in life, who have soon to be superannuated. The reason of the great accumulation of this fund is that it is impossible, under present conditions, to weed out inefficient men while they are still young in the service, and the drones continue to receive as much pay as those who work until they are got rid of, and the Government have to pay for their inefficiency in the shape of superannuation allowances. If political influence were done away with, and if a man's entrance into the service and position in it depended entirely upon his personal merit, there would be no difficulty about superannuation allowances, and about getting rid of inefficient men who had been for a certain length of time in the service.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I understood the hon. Minister of Finance, while generally admitting the correctness of the figures of the hon. member for North Wellington (Mr. McMullen) to state that in no case was any one participating in the superannuation fund who had not been in the service ten years.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I said that he certainly could not find those fifteen cases averaging six and a-half years.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman said more than that. He said the law prevented them from participating in the fund unless they had served ten years.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I did; I read the provision.

Mr. McMULLEN. I will furnish the names to the House on Concurrence.

Bill read the second time; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BLAKE. The first clause seems to be of awkward construction.

"1. The Civil Service for the purpose of this Act shall include and consist of—

"(1.) All officers, clerks and employés in or under the several Departments of the Executive Government, who are paid a yearly salary, and to whom 'The Canada Civil Service Act, 1862,' applies, and who in case they were or are appointed after the coming into force of that Act were or are appointed in conformity with its provisions."

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It is the phraseology used in the present Act.

Mr. BLAKE. My impression is that if a junior Civil Service clerk were called upon to draw up a clause and gave such a construction as this, he would not pass the examination. With reference to the second sub-section, I renew the objection before made. This is substantially the same as the provision in the original Act. We were then dealing with an experiment, and the Government were not in a position to bring down propositions which should fully state who should be entitled to the benefits of the Civil Service Act, and consequently that was left to their discretion. Inconveniences have occurred through classes being considered within the Act by one Government and not by another. At this time, however, after twelve years of experience, the Government ought to be able to designate what classes should receive the benefit of the superannuation allowance, and the question should no longer be left unsettled.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I am not prepared to agree with the hon. member in the view he takes, as new circumstances arise with new Departments and new employés. Take the railways, for instance; it may be prudent to take the leading employés, the manager and certain permanent officials on railways within the Act, and to include others, such as conductors, who, though occupying responsible positions, cannot be considered permanent employés. The hon. gentleman may say we should designate those; but there are circumstances when it is considered there should be some elasticity, and since there is no difficulty in this case, we see no reason why we should, by Act of Parliament, prevent the Government having the power to exercise that elasticity. Therefore, as long as Parliament has confidence in the Government, and if it has not, if it thinks the Government have acted unwisely in any instance, there is the constitutional mode of remedy. It was considered desirable there should be some elasticity, and that the Government should not be tied down to certain employés named specifically in the Bill.

Mr. BLAKE. This designation has admittedly to be made either by Act of Parliament or Order in Council; and if it is difficult to make by Act of Parliament how is it going to be made by Order in Council. Is it possible that after twelve years of experience we have not yet reaped any fruit of certainty. Rules have been laid down I presume; certain classes of the outside service have been considered; it is in the discretion of the Government whether they will be put in or kept out. The hon. gentleman says there is a constitutional mode of remedying any evil. That observation is all very fine, but it amounts to nothing. He knows that those who support him will support him over a much steeper question still than the question of whether he has wisely or imprudently superannuated civil servants. He knows that prudence in all cases—I am speaking of all Governments—such prudence as has been exemplified in the conduct of constitutional and representative Government, calls for Parliament to do what they can, leaving to the Executive as little as it can, instead of, as this Government proposes, leaving the area of Executive authority as wide as possible, and obstructing the authority of Parliament as much as possible.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I just leave it where the hon. Minister left it five years ago.

Mr. BLAKE. No; we did not make this law. The hon. gentleman is now proposing to re-establish the law, to re-enact every one of those clauses. He is proposing to do that after four years of experience as to the working of the Superannuation Act. But I am dealing with this case as I always do with reference to questions between Executive and Parliament, entirely irrespective of the question of how it will affect a particular Government. We are to give no more to one Government than to another, to the Government in which we have the greatest confidence than to that in which we have no confidence at all. A majority is bound to consider what are the limits properly to be assigned to the Executive power, because the majority may become the minority, and they may find good cause for complaint. Here you find in one sub-section, Parliament designating the officers by a general enumeration who are to come within it; in the other sub-section is mentioned a very large number of officers who will admittedly come within it, although there are a large number who, I presume, will stay without. All is to be left at loose ends, so far as Parliament is concerned; for the hon. gentleman says that elasticity should be the rule, that there is some difficulty in designation, and the Governor ought to leave it in their power to deprive the whole outside service of the benefit of the Superannuation Act if it pleases to draw the line between those who are to be excluded and those who are to be included. Now, I do not agree at all in this view. I think it is a mistake. I admit it is of a piece with the general line of action of this Administration which was duly proposed to Parliament from time to time to surrender its functions and to hand them over to the Executive. The hon. gentleman knows that he may look with perfect confidence upon his friends sustaining him, even though he may commit great errors, even improper acts, with reference to the superannuation of particular individuals. His friends would say then: "The mischief is done, we cannot revoke it, why should we cry over spilt milk? Shall we join in a vote of censure on our friends when it will do no good? We may privately remonstrate with them, but we will not join in a vote of censure." The true security is to prevent the wrong being done, to prevent a repetition of the wrong by punishing those who have committed it. But we know from very long experience that this security is an illusory one, so far as this Government is concerned.

Mr. CASEY. The reading of this clause is vague in another respect. Amongst those who are employed in an established capacity and paid a yearly salary are many who are occupied but a small portion of the year. We heard the other day of a great many fishery wardens in the Maritime Provinces who are paid $300 or $400 a year, and who are occupied but a portion of the time; and as this clause leaves it open to the Governor in Council to declare that those who are employed in an established capacity and are paid a yearly salary, may come under the provisions of this Act, officers like these might be held to be included.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. This gives authority to the Governor in Council to deal with these very men.

On sub-section 4,

Mr. BLAKE. There may be some persons who are contributing to the superannuation fund in error. We have had such cases before, where contributions had been made for a considerable time; but you are making an absolute provision that all those who contribute to the fund shall be entitled to superannuation.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It provides that persons who now contribute shall come under the operation of the first and second clauses.

On section 2,

Mr. CASEY. I would suggest that instead of paying an annuity to officers superannuated, Parliament should pay them a lump sum based on their length of service. The cost to the country under the present system depends on the number of years the officer lives after he has left the service. The amount given could be invested by the officer as he pleased; at all events, I do not think the country should be bound down to pay him so much a year, no matter how long he might live.

On section 3,

Mr. BLAKE. I would suggest to the hon. Minister whether it would not be proper, in regard to the use of the ten years' clause, to pass an Order in Council in the case of all persons who enter the service over thirty years of age declaring whether or not they were to be treated as eligible under this clause. If you declare that the person who has been appointed, was appointed as being possessed of particular attainments and qualifications you will then know when you come to deal with the matter of superannuation whether he comes within the clause or not. At present, if you were considering the question of superannuation, an officer might say that he was appointed when more than thirty years of age, and that he had special qualifications, although he was only too glad to come into the service at the time of this appointment. My proposal is that in all cases in which a person is employed as possessing special professional or other qualifications or attainments, that fact should be expressly stated in the Order in Council on his appointment; if not, that it should be conclusive that his appointment did not come under this clause.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I will take this suggestion into consideration.

Bill reported.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

SUPPLY.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee.

Mr. BLAKE. I wish to avail myself of this opportunity to call the attention of the House to the condition of public business this Session, and contrast it with former Sessions, and to invite the attention of the House to the situation in which we stand with reference to several measures which were proposed in the Speech from the Throne. The Sessions for the last nine years have averaged about eighty-one days.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Might I ask the hon. member to postpone his remarks in the absence of the leader of the Government, whom I would like to have here while he is making his comments.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the House be in Committee of Supply again?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. We will not complete the Estimates to-night.

Mr. BLAKE. I was anxious to make my observations to-night; but as the hon. gentleman says we will not conclude the Estimates at this sitting I will postpone them.

(In the Committee.)

327. Governor General Secretary's Office—To pay to C. J. Jones, difference of salary between $1,450 and $1,800 from 1st February to 30th June, 1883, as provided by the Civil Service Act..... $145.83

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The Civil Service Act provides that in the event of a senior officer being absent from sickness, or on leave, the officer below him who discharges his duties temporarily is entitled to be paid at the rate paid the senior officer. In the present case the vacancy occurred, not by leave of absence or sickness, but by the death of the senior, for which no provision is made in the Act.

Mr. BLAKE. This is a temporary allowance.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes.

328. Department of the Secretary of State—To provide for the salary of one chief clerk in Correspondence branch $2,000, and for the statutory increase to the salary of one clerk (omitted in main Estimates) $50..... $2,050.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I wish to explain that when Mr. Grant Powell was promoted to the Under-Secretaryship of State we omitted in the main estimates to provide for the salary of the chief clerk who took his place. This chief clerk will receive $2,000 instead of $2,400 which was paid to Mr. Powell.

329. Department of Finance—Additional allowance to the Clerk of Contingencies..... $200.00

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. This is $200 additional to Mr. Ross, the Clerk of Contingencies. He was in the Secretary of State's Department at the time the stationary was re-organized, and he took charge of that office at the request of the head of the Department. He left the Department of the Secretary of State rather reluctantly, because he was hoping for an advantage which, as it turns out, he would have received had he remained there, as he was the senior of the gentleman who has since been appointed deputy head.

Mr. BLAKE. Is this a permanent increase?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes.

330. Department of Railways and Canals—To provide for the salaries of four third class clerks..... $2,800.00

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. These are two persons who have been employed at $2 a day for a number of years, and they are now to be put on the permanent list.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not fully understand how this is. The reason, I presume, for the division of the Department of Public Works into two separate Departments was the view that the Canadian Pacific Railway was about to be constructed as a public work—at all events, that was the main reason. Now that that work is being constructed by a private corporation, it is obvious that the work of the Department of Railways and Canals must be less instead of more, than if the whole responsibility of that construction continued to be in that office. Why at this day and under these circumstances more permanent officers are proposed to be added to the Department of Railways and Canals I cannot very well see.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There have been a number of persons temporarily employed, some of them for several years, and it is proposed to place two of these persons on the permanent list, by which their salaries will be rather decreased than increased. What the hon. gentleman has said with regard to the division of the Department is quite true, but it will be some time before these works are finished, and there will be no great relief to the work of the Department until they are finally finished. Besides, a great deal of the work connected with the management of the Intercolonial Railway is being done at headquarters in the Department which was formerly performed outside.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not suppose the Committee will readily accept the statement that there has been a saving by adding these gentlemen to the permanent list as meaning that this would be the ultimate result to the public Treasury. These men may have been employed temporarily at a higher rate than the minimum salary of a junior clerk, but putting them on the permanent list involves considerations of permanency, promotions, increases, and so on. Will the hon. gentleman say how long they have been temporarily employed?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Over two years, I think.

Mr. BLAKE. Then it is since the reorganization, and since the Canadian Pacific Railway contract that they came in?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am not able to state at this moment. It is more probably three years.

Mr. BLAKE. Since the reorganization, at any rate. Of course, the work is very rapidly diminishing, because we have the Thunder Bay section practically out of the way now, and only the Columbia part remains for the Government to deal with, and what I observe is that the reorganization of the Railway Department was based upon the supposition that the whole work of the Pacific Railway was to devolve upon the Government. But immediately after the contract was let, and the Company assumed the responsibility of locating and constructing these portions of the line, which they have been engaged upon since, there was an immediate diminution of the strain on the Railway Department, and, therefore, it was the reason that I was surprised to learn that it was proposed to grant permanent increases at this time, or to appoint any new permanent officers. When you make a man a third class clerk against his will, you will probably have to keep him against your will when the time comes for the Department to be diminished in the scope of its operations, and we hope in the scope of its expenses.

335. To pay to the widow of the late Judge Fisher, for extra services rendered by him to the Government under Commission from 1870 to 1881..... $2,400.00

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman explain this extraordinary item?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Before the Union, we passed a law in New Brunswick establishing a Court of Divorce, and one of the Judges of the Supreme Court of the Province acted as the Judge of that Court. After the Union that Court, being a Provincial Court both in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, continued to exist, and Judge Fisher was appointed the Judge of the Court in New Brunswick, and Judge Ritchie in Nova Scotia. Judge Ritchie was also a Judge in equity, for which he received a salary of $5,000 a year, while Judge Fisher received $4,000. Judge Fisher frequently made application to the Government for the same salary as Judge Ritchie received, and almost his last communication addressed to the Government previous to his death was the renewal of that application. As the Government had decided that at Judge Ritchie's death his successor should only receive $4,000, they did not see their way to give Judge Fisher the increase he asked for. So the matter has remained since, and at the solicitation of his widow, who pointed out the justice of the Government paying something for the services rendered by her husband in this Court, an enquiry was made as to the number of cases brought before Judge Fisher to be adjudicated upon during the time he held this Commission. The number was found to be thirty-two, and it is proposed to pay his widow $75 for each case, making $2,400.
Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Mr. BLAKE. This is one of the most extraordinary propositions, I think, ever submitted to Parliament. This gentleman accepted the office of Judge and the office of Judge of the Divorce Court. These offices were not forced upon him, and he was not reluctant to accept them.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. This was after he was appointed Judge.

Mr. BLAKE. No; according to my memory, it was at the same time that he was appointed that there was a vacancy in the Divorce Court. When was Judge Fulton appointed a Judge?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I think in 1870.

Mr. BLAKE. And this settlement is for the time extending from 1870 to 1881, so that his Commission was for the same time.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I am not sure that it was.

Mr. BLAKE. I think it was, and if the hon. gentleman is not acquainted with the facts, I think he should familiarize himself with them before he comes down with this vote. My recollection is that these appointments were contemporaneous; but whether contemporaneous or not, there was no compulsion on Judge Fisher to accept the offices. He accepted them; I do not know that he ever had an additional salary as Judge of the Divorce Court. Parliament never provided an additional salary, and never was asked for it. As often happens with public officers, after he was appointed he thought he was under paid, and he made a special claim of this Divorce Court business. The hon. gentleman's Government repudiated the claim. Another Government came in; he renewed his application, and during the whole time of that Government it was refused on the ground that there was no justification for coming to Parliament for a special salary. That Government went out and the old Government came back again, and remained from 1879 to 1881, during which time, I suppose, Judge Fisher continued his application; and now, after the expiration of all these years, the hon. gentleman comes down with a proposal to pay the Judge $75 a case for the cases tried. That there were thirty-two cases which actually came to a hearing in New Brunswick, in the course of those eleven years surprises me. There may have been that number of cases entered in court, but that there was that number tried I doubt extremely; and to make the proposal that a Judge is to be paid so much a head for the cases he tries—$75 a head during eleven years—is certainly utterly unprecedented. He was simply discharging his judicial duties, and there is no justification at all for taking out of the Treasury now the sum of $2,400. If he had a right to be paid the Government have no right to make the money a present to the widow, for it belongs to his estate and may be the property of his creditors. We make allowance to widows of deceased public servants; but that is a present given out of our liberality, and stands in an altogether different position from that which the hon. gentleman says is a debt. I believe the trumping up and paying of old demands on the public purse which have been repudiated by so many Governments is utterly unexampled in the history of the country.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The claim of Judge Fisher was for $1,000 a year. As to the payment to the widow the Government have no particular desire to pay the money to her, and will have no objection to paying it to the executors, for it will go to her benefit and that of her children. The claim was made a year after for $1,000 a year.

Mr. BLAKE. And repudiated.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes; because the Government did not feel paying it as it was not known what the extent of the labor would be. At that time the Government felt satisfied the labor he performed was not worth $1,000 a year, but at the time of his death when the claim came in another shape for services rendered in cases he had to deal with, the Government felt they were justified in asking Parliament to contribute the amount. The hon. gentleman says it is exceptional to allow $75 for cases of this kind. Was there not some provision in the Election Law giving Judges allowances for election cases?

Mr. BLAKE. There was, but it was thought so unseemly and improper that it was struck out.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. At all events there was such a provision, and no doubt in the legislation of the present Session there may be duties imposed on Judges for which they ought to be paid. The Government thought that in equity this sum should be allowed.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman now says it was because Judge Fisher asked too much. What is the relation that was supposed to exist between the Judge and the Government? He says the Government ought to have paid something, but too much was asked, and therefore they gave him nothing at all. And that continued during ten or twelve years of his judicial life. What correspondence was there on the subject? What was the attitude of the Government? Did the Government say: "We ought to pay you something, but as you ask too much, we will pay you nothing." This is degrading to the character of the bench, and does not accurately represent what the relations of the Administration were to the Judge in this regard. Does the hon. gentleman mean to say that thirty-two divorce cases were actually tried during this term? I doubt it very much.

Mr. PICKARD. The late Judge Fisher was appointed in 1868. If he had done any work extra entitling him to pay beyond the $1,000 that the other four Judges in New Brunswick received, I certainly think it is only paying for delay of justice in now settling the claim. I had the honor every year, until his death, of presenting a letter from him to the right hon. leader of the Government, asking for some compensation for work done as a Judge of the Divorce Court. His letters to me I never could read. I do not know whether the right hon. gentleman could read those sent to him, but the late Judge always told me what he was going to write about.

Mr. BLAKE. I can corroborate the hon. gentleman's statement. I never saw any handwriting so difficult to read as that of the late Judge.

Mr. PICKARD. I presented a letter from him to the Government of which the hon. member for Durham was a member, because I received them every year.

Mr. BLAKE. But my hon. friend did not get much satisfaction from either of us. Will the hon. Minister of Finance give us a list of those thirty-two cases, and the years they were tried in, or if they were tried? Some proceedings take place in some cases which go no further than the presenting of a petition.

331. Department of Interior—To provide for the salary of the Surveyor-General..... $3,200.00

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Lindsay Russell is performing the duties of Surveyor-General and of Deputy Minister of Interior; but it has been found absolutely necessary that he should be to a considerable extent removed from the work of the office in order to devote himself to the survey. He still holds his position of Surveyor-General, but we must have another person in the Department. A great portion of the working season Mr. Russell must be in the North-West. Men are continually going up there for the purpose of expediting the survey. There are a great many difficulties arising in regard to the accuracy of the survey, or improper proceedings on the part of the surveyors, and Mr. Russell will have to examine into them. He will be charged with doing more field work than office work.

Mr. BLAKE. Do I understand there is to be a Deputy Minister of Interior, a separate officer, and a Surveyor-General?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; this arrangement will probably go into operation about the 1st of July.

336. For a gratuity of one year's salary to J. Dillon, guard at Kingston Penitentiary, as compensation for loss of sight whilst performing his duties.. $550.00

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In reference to this case I will read the report of the hon. Minister of Justice:

"The undersigned has the honor to report that Mr. Jeremiah Dillon, guard in the Kingston Penitentiary, whose health and sight have been failing for a long period, has now become almost totally blind. Warden Creighton reports, that Dillon is without means of any consequence, with an aged mother wholly and two sisters partially depending upon him, and that in his present condition he is not able to help himself. He also states, that this officer has been most faithful in the discharge of his various duties.

"Dillon was appointed guard on the 1st January, 1871.

"His salary is $450, with an additional $100 for performing the duties of assistant school teacher.

"The Inspector of Penitentiaries reports, that 'this man has always proved himself a thoroughly competent, faithful, and respectable officer, in fact exceptionally so; he also recommends that a small annuity be allowed Dillon during his life, or failing that, two year's salary as a gratuity.

"On his retirement which it is intended should take place on the 30th June next, he will be entitled to a gratuity equal to one month's salary for each year of service up to ten, and a half month's salary for each additional year.

"In view of the unfortunate nature of the case, the undersigned recommends that an amount equal to one year of his salary, namely $550, be put in the Supplementary Estimates for 1883-84 for Mr. Dillon, as a special recognition of his services, and the unfortunate circumstances under which he is retired, this to be in addition to any gratuity which may be allowed to him."

Mr. BLAKE. This vote is rather misleading. The statement in the vote is that it is for compensation for loss of sight while performing his duties. I had supposed some accident had happened in the discharge of his duties by which he had lost his sight, but it appears that is not the case.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. While performing his duties, but not from any accident.

Mr. BLAKE. It does not appear to be in any way in consequence of the discharge of his duties, or from any accident which occurred to him in the discharge of his duties. This is just the same thing as if some ordinary disease had beset him, or as if a stroke of paralysis had rendered him incapable. Up to a few years ago there was no provision for these persons disabled under these circumstances; but in my time we established a provision for the retirement of men under these circumstances which would have covered the case of this unfortunate man. But because by reason of advancing infirmity he has lost his eye sight, it is proposed he shall have a year's salary besides the usual gratuity. We cannot give to him and refuse to another. If you establish this precedent all those who become infirm in the service of the penitentiary will be asking for a similar gratuity, and you will have to award it practically to all.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If this man had been in the Civil Service he would have a superannuation allowance, but instead of that we give him a year's pay. I did not intend to trouble the House further in the matter, but I shall read the warden's report on the case:

"I regret to be obliged to report that Guard Jeremiah Dillon, whose sight had been failing for a long period, has now become almost totally blind, and I fear there is no hope that Dillon will ever again recover his health. His case is a very sad one, and I hope that in considering it the following facts will be given exceptionally favorable consideration.

"Dillon is without means of any consequence—with an aged mother wholly, and two sisters partially, depending upon him. He has been a kind son and brother, sober, clever, well educated, faithful and most industrious in the discharge of his duties.

"You will remember that Dillon had charge of the dry room. There all the prison clothing was dried in winter and on wet days in summer. And until we got a centrifugal wringer, which wrings the water out of the clothes more thoroughly before they are taken to the dry room the atmosphere was invariably very moist and almost always offensive. The steam dyeing closets recently introduced are a great improvement, but they came too late for poor Dillon's benefit. Dillon's duty was arduous, but he was so correct and methodical, keeping the convicts bedding, shirts, socks, &c, in good order, that there was little room for complaint. And I felt much relieved to know that I had an officer in that department who could not be humbugged by the convicts, and who had a place for everything and everything in its place. But I have no doubt that doing duty in the dry room so constantly had an injurious effect upon Dillon's eyes, as well as upon his general health.

"Jeremiah Dillon was appointed guard at this Penitentiary on 1st January, 1871, and in addition was appointed assistant school-teacher on 26th September, 1873. Making his salary from that date about $550 per annum, out of this he has saved a little, which he has invested in two little houses. In one of these he lives, and the rent from the other is a very small and precarious pittance.

"In his present condition Dillon is not able to take care of himself, hence his case is most pitiable. I have not yet struck his name from the guards' pay list, and I propose continuing him on it till 30th June, if not otherwise ordered.

"Dillon is most anxious that the Government would allow him a small annuity during his life, or failing that, two years' salary as a gratuity. The annuity, however, would be most acceptable.

"With this brief statement I leave the matter in the hands of the Department, hoping that Dillon's case will receive most favorable consideration. It may be fairly made exceptional, as such another case may not occur again in twenty-five years.

338. House of Commons—To meet amount required to pay L. J. Piteau, indemnification for loss of appointment as Assistant French Translator, 1878 $383.53

Mr. BLAKE. Would the hon. Minister explain this item?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The case is this: Mr. Piteau was a sessional translator previous to 1878. He claims three months salary and travelling expenses on account of having been relieved from his position as permanent French translator, to which he was appointed on 2nd December, 1878. He had been officially informed of his appointment by Mr. Anglin, as Speaker, after the Elections of 1878, and his appointment was to begin on 1st December, at a salary of $1,400. He accordingly reported himself to the Clerk of the House, Mr. Patrick, and was informed that the appointment could not be recognized. Mr. Piteau was not permitted to enter on his official duties. He had been for several years previously employed as a sessional translator, and discharged his duties satisfactorily. Now he demands three months salary, $350, and $33.60 as travelling expenses to and from his home at Somerset, Megantic, Province of Quebec. This gentleman having been so informed by Mr. Anglin, thought the appointment would be maintained, and did not take any other employment.

Mr. BLAKE. Who took his position?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not know.

Mr. LAURIER. Would the hon. Minister inform me whether it is intended to apply the same rule to Mr. Brossoit, who was also appointed by Mr. Anglin as a permanent French translator, and who never was permitted to perform his duties?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Of that gentleman I know nothing. This case was brought before us, and is the only one.

Mr. CASGRAIN. What is the date of Mr. Piteau's claim?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. His claim came before us during the last five or six months.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I supposed so.

Mr. LAURIER. There is no reason whatever why, if this rule should apply to Mr. Piteau's case, it should not apply to that of Mr. Brossoit. Two vacancies occurred in the French translators' office: one was that of the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Tassé), who retired to contest Ottawa, and the other was that of Mr. David, who also resigned to be a candidate in the Elections of 1878. One was elected and the other had not that good fortune. Mr. Anglin, thinking he would be Speaker, and acting in that capacity, appointed two gentlemen to fill the vacancy, namely, Mr. Piteau and Mr. Brossoit. Neither of those gentlemen was allowed to perform their duties, and their places were given to some other parties, whose names I do not now remember. Since that time Mr. Piteau—I cannot speak positively, but I am under the impression—remonstrated time and again at his dismissal. His claim has not been recognized until this year, and of late Mr. Piteau has changed his politics, and last year worked for the hon. member for Megantic. Whether this has had any effect on the case I do not know.
Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am informed by my hon. colleagues and hon. members round me that the claim was made before that period. The case came before me during the last six months. As regards the politics of Mr. Piteau, all I know is that the last time I knew anything about him he was working hard against me, and, therefore, I cannot be supposed to be partial; but I thought this was a case in which the gentleman was entitled to indemnification. Mr. Brossoit's case, we are bound to consider when it comes before us, and we will have then to decide whether he is entitled to indemnification or not.

Mr. LAURIER. He is still an unrepentant sinner; but there is more joy over the repentance of one sinner than over dozens who have never politically sinned. Mr. Piteau's claim had been several years before the Government, and he always considered he had been harshly treated. The Minister says this was only during the last four or five months brought to his consideration—I suppose that he means favorable consideration.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Perhaps so. I think, however, that the word "favorable" might be omitted by the hon. gentleman. When I stated that it had not come under my notice, of course, I meant exactly what I said. I was not aware of the claim until there was question of the Order in Council.

340. Immigration,—Victoria, B.C., Agent, &c..... $1,500.00

Mr. POPE. This is a new agency, and the item explains itself. We are trying to induce emigration from the Old Country to British Columbia, and we succeeded slightly last year in doing so. We hope to be able to do more, and we are offering inducements in this relation.

Mr. BLAKE. Hitherto there has been no organized arrangement in this relation?

Mr. POPE. No; none at all.

341. Quarantine—Sydney, N.S.—Inspecting Physician, &c..... $1,400.00

Mr. POPE. This is also a new item. Sydney is a very important shipping place, and, perhaps, as many ships call there as at any other port in Nova Scotia, from what I hear. We found it necessary to give this very small sum to provide for an officer to look after this place.

Mr. BLAKE. It is true, of course, that this is a very important port of call, and no doubt there has also been a considerable increase in its traffic, and in the number of ships coaling there. Has there been no organization of any kind up to this time? And will the hon. gentleman state, not the number of vessels that came there simply to coal, but the number which took in or discharged cargoes during the year?

Mr. POPE. I cannot do so.

Mr. McDONALD (Cape Breton). I can tell the hon. gentleman that at the port of Sydney last season 300 Atlantic steamers loaded with bunker coal; and during the past calendar year about 500,000 tons of shipping called, while at its out-ports the ships which entered and cleared could not have been less than 250,000 tons, making 750,000 tons in all for the ports in the county of Cape Breton alone. I may say that very frequently small-pox is brought to this port in vessels, and this gives us a great deal of trouble. For the last several years we have been endeavoring to get the Government to build a quarantine hospital, and at last they have consented to do so. I am glad to say that the contract has been awarded, and that the building is being erected. This matter cost the Government, some three or four years ago, I think, a considerable sum. Several vessels came to this port five years ago, and two in particular, the owners of which, from St. John, N.B., were obliged to build a temporary hospital for their men. This cost the owners of the vessels a good deal, and I think that the Government made good a portion of the expense to which these owners were put. Hereafter, however, nothing of this kind will have to be done.

Mr. BLAKE. Has the hon. gentleman any information with reference to what I was very sorry to see in a paper to-day—a very serious outbreak of small-pox at St. Boniface?

Mr. POPE. No; I have not.

Mr. BLAKE. The newspapers say it is very serious

Mr. POPE. I do not think that this is possible from recent information which I have received. Formerly at Sydney we had temporary provision for these cases; the Custom House officers could quarantine vessels and send the men to some other port, where provision for patients existed.

Mr. ROYAL. As to the report in the papers with reference to small-pox in some part of Manitoba, I am enabled to state, from a private letter received from that locality, that this disease has existed in some localities on Red River during last winter; one or two families of half-breeds only had it two or three weeks ago; and this small affair has been greatly exaggerated. I am able to state that no such thing as this disease has broken out in that locality; besides, the municipal authorities of St. Boniface, some two or three weeks ago, provided hospital accommodation to meet any such emergency that might arise.

Mr. DODD. As to the port of Sydney, it is peculiarly situated, inasmuch as it is a port of divergence for vessels coming across the Atlantic to southern or western ports, in the St. Lawrence or in the States. An immense amount of shipping called there last year. In addition to some 200 odd steamships, which called at our port, we had in the aggregate an amount of shipping beyond that which visited the port of Montreal, the largest shipping port of Canada. It is necessary, of course, that precautions should be taken against the spread of small-pox, which is frequently brought there by vessels; and consequently this is a very proper vote for a proper purpose.

342. Militia $180,500.00

Mr. CARON. The first item is for the purchase of building and property situated on the east side of the canal basin required for military store purposes at Ottawa, $8,000. I may say that the military stores were kept in a building on the opposite side of the canal, but it was quite insufficient for keeping these stores, which are of great value. The building we are about to purchase for the sum of $8,000 is one upon a lot owned by the Government, for which there is a rental due of $3,000. The Government gets this building for $3,000, and this arrearage of rent. This building cost Dufresne & McGarity $20,000, and it is sufficient to contain all the military stores we will require for years to come, so that I think it will be admitted that we purchased a very valuable property at a reasonable price. Besides the military stores we intend to have the offices of the Brigade Major, the District Adjutant and others removed to this building, so as to give more room in the Department, which is overcrowded so far as the officers required for working the different branches are concerned.

Mr. VAIL. Where is the building?

Mr. CARON. It is on the east end of the Sappers Bridge—a stone building connected with the street by a wooden way. I may say that these stores require a great deal of care so far as preventing damp, which interferes with their value. The present building is of stone but it is not lined, but the new building is lined with wood, and there is a heating apparatus which will not only save a considerable expenditure, but will keep the stores in the best of order. I may say that the matter of the rental was referred to the Department of Justice, and it was considered that in giving up this rental and paying $8,000 we were securing a building which was a decided acquisition at that price.

Mr. BLAKE. There seems to be an error in the mode in which the vote is proposed to be taken. It is evident that the $3,000 of public debt due, I presume, on Ordnance Lands is a portion of the price of this property, so the price is really $11,000 instead of $8,000 as stated in the Estimates. The proper course would be to take a vote for $11,000, and then $3,000 of arrears in rent would go to the credit of the Ordnance Lands account, instead of disappearing altogether as it will by this mode of taking the vote. The vote mentions property as well as building: what property goes with the building?

Mr. CARON. The Ordnance Lands not being under the control of my Department the $3,000 on that account cannot appear in my estimates at all, as I have to submit to Parliament in my estimates only what I am called upon to pay in the purchase of that property, which is $8,000. As to the other point we have, of course, to be as careful as possible in framing these estimates; and there may be some outside properties, as for example the sidewalk to the street, which, though included in the purchase price, cannot be designated as part of the building.

Mr. BLAKE. It is true the hon. gentleman will have nothing to do with the $3,000 except paying it, but the $3,000 is part of the price.

Mr. CARON. I do not pay it.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman should pay it, else the Ordnance Lands will lose it. It is part of the consideration, and certainly Messrs. Dufresne & McGarity are not going to pay it. It is obvious that unless the hon. gentleman takes a vote for $11,000 of which $3,000 is a set-off, the $3,000 will not be credited at all. Either the tenant must pay it, or the Crown must pay it as part of the price of this property, and if the Crown must pay it, it must be paid by another Department. Will the hon. gentleman state whether this great bargain was achieved by arbitration, by valuation, or by private arrangement, or how the price was arrived at?

Mr. CARON. The Department of Militia applied to the Department of Justice to recover this amount of rental, which had not been paid. Through the gentlemen who were acting for the Department of Justice, we learned that the property could be purchased for this sum, which we agreed was really far under its value; and it was a question whether it was better to purchase this property or to make the improvements and repairs which were absolutely necessary for the safety of the Militia stores. Officers both from the Public Works Department and the Militia Department were sent to inspect the old store building and the building we contemplated purchasing, and they all agreed that the purchase would be a saving of money to the country, and a very valuable addition to the property of the Department. Under these circumstances, and especially as the stores, which were valuable, were in danger of being completely spoiled within a few months in the old building, we decided to make the purchase.

Mr. BLAKE. Was there any inspection, or any report from the officers as to the value of this building?

Mr. CARON. There is a written report which gives all the details, and which was submitted to Council before any action was taken. That report I shall be very glad to submit to Parliament.

Mr. BLAKE. Was the property in the hands of the tenants?

Mr. CARON. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. And how long had the arrears of rent been accumulating?

Mr. CARON. The property was leased by the Government to the firm of Dufresne & McGarity, who got into financial difficulties seven or eight years ago. Upon a lease obtained for a number of years they put up this valuable building, which was not only a warehouse, but their place of business, and was most elaborately fitted up. When Dufresne & McGarity got into difficulties the lease was taken by another firm, whose name I forget; but they never paid up the rent. I saw that those arrears stood against us in the books, and I submitted a statement to the Minister of Justice and asked him to proceed to recover this money, and ultimately the matter was settled in the way I have mentioned. The report which I will bring down gives all the details. With regard to the vote of $20,000 for the purchase of ammunition, hon. gentlemen will understand that the stores have been allowed to run down considerably, and we have had to draw on the reserve of ammunition for the purpose of accommodating the annual artillery practice. The stores got so low that it became necessary for the Department to ask Parliament to vote this amount for replenishing them and enabling us to meet the requirements of the service.

Mr. BLAKE. I suppose for some time the hon. gentleman has been drawing on the reserve ammunition stock until it has got this low.

Mr. CARON. The hon. gentleman must go beyond the period of time when I took charge of the Department. The hon. gentleman who preceded me in this office will agree with me that the stores have been allowed to run down below what they should have been allowed to run at any period. To meet annual requirements and gradually reform the reserve this sum was required—$5,000—for the annual requirements, and the remainder of the $20,000 for the reserve.

Mr. BLAKE. It will take three years at $20,000 each year to bring the reserve to the proper point, or $60,000?

Mr. CARON. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. I am very glad to know the hon. gentleman calculates we will have no war inside of four years, but will have that time to make up our reserve in case of emergency.

Mr. CARON. The next item is $150,000 for artillery battery and cavalry and infantry schools. The policy of the Government is to establish three schools of infantry to be composed of 100 men each. It is also the policy of the Government to establish a battery similar to "A" and "B" Batteries, to be called "C" Battery. This will be stationed in British Columbia. After consulting those who could advise me from a military point, I concluded that the British Columbia force should be an artillery force, and the intention is to place the commandant of "C" Battery also in command of the military district, substituting the commandant of "C" Battery for the Deputy Adjutant-General who formerly had the military command of this military district. By so doing we will have an artillery officer perfectly au fait with this branch, and who, moreover, will save us the pay we would otherwise have to give to the Deputy Adjutant-General. My intention is to combine the position of the commandant of "C" Battery with the position of Deputy Adjutant-General. By combining both we can save one of these offices, and have a unit so far as the military side of the question is concerned—one officer who will command not only the permanent force but also the military organization. The hon. gentleman would, no doubt, like to know the details of the expenditure we are going to make. As I stated on a former occasion, the whole expenditure will amount to $203,900. This covers the three military schools, "C" Battery and a troop of cavalry. One half of that troop will be added to the establishment of "A" Battery in Quebec, and the other half to "B" Battery in Kingston. The object of thus dividing the troop is, that by adding sixteen horses to "A" and "B" Batteries each, it will be possible to organize a good permanent school of cavalry which will be a training school for the field officers and for the cavalry of this country. The captain of the Infantry School is to get $1,460; two lieutenants, $1,460 combined. These together with the sergeants, corporals, and ninety-two men, will make up $16,200. The men's pay will be 40 cts. per head. That comprises the permanent establishment. To that we must add rations for 100 men, $500; uniforms, boots, kits, &c., $3,500; barracks, furniture, transport, fuel, light and contingencies, $7,533, making $37,000 for everything in each infantry school. The total amount for each school will be $44,300. The troop of cavalry, as I stated, is to be divided; the cost will reach $22,800. To establish these troops of cavalry we will have to add to that $3,900 for the purpose of purchasing horses required for the troop; but this item will not be required another year.

Mr. CARON,

Mr. BLAKE. Except the remounts.

Mr. CARON. The hon. gentleman would be surprised to learn how these cavalry and artillery horses live. The hon. gentleman will understand that under my system I intend to prevent war. The hon. gentleman must see that I am taking every possible precaution to avoid a war, and to save the expenditure we would have to incur in case of war.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman has not given us the details of the $22,800.

Mr. CARON. I have not got the details of expenditure for rations, horses, blankets, saddles, &c., but if the hon. gentleman requires, I will bring it down. I should have to go back to the old items in the Estimates to find exactly the items which have already been submitted to Parliament in detail, when I had to discuss the items for "A" and "B" Batteries. The items are exactly similar, except that in "A" and "B" Batteries each is composed of 150 men, whereas "C" Battery will only have one hundred. In discussing the Bill I gave the hon. gentleman the different items composing the expenditure. I was asked how I could explain that "C" Battery was going to cost so much less than "A" and "B" Batteries, and the reason I gave for the smaller estimate was that instead of having 150 men we had 100.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the estimated gross expenditure of "A" and "B" Batteries?

Mr. CARON. The hon. gentleman will see in the Estimates there is an amount for pay and equipment, "A" and "B" Batteries, $125,700, from which has to be deducted $2,500 on account of the transfer of an item to another Department.

Mr. BLAKE. Where are the three new schools to be stationed?

Mr. CARON. The intention is to establish an infantry school in the Province of Quebec—I expect, without stating it, as a matter of certainty, on St. Helen's Island, near Montreal, or at St. Johns. Another school will be in the Maritime Provinces, probably at St. John, N.B. The third will be in Ontario, probably and almost certainly at Toronto. The hon. gentleman knows that at Toronto we have a valuable military property, which, from the information I have received from the officers of the Department, could, with a very little expenditure on repairs, be made perfectly convenient for the force we require to have there. The intention is to make use of all the military property we possess in the way of barracks, so as to reduce the expenditure on buildings. The Cavalry School will be located in British Columbia and the whole district will be turned into an artillery corps.

Mr. BLAKE. Has the hon. gentleman formed any idea of what the additional expense for buildings will be?

Mr. CARON. As far as Montreal, St. John, N.B., and Toronto are concerned, I believe the repairs for this year will be covered by the Estimates submitted to Parliament for public works for military purposes. In British Columbia we have no such property, and it is impossible for me—and that is the reason why I do not ask for the vote—at present to know exactly what will be required. I am trying to ascertain whether we will be able to obtain the accommodation required without building; but if it becomes a question of erecting a building, for the purpose of accommodating a force of 100 men, we will not go into the expenditure which the Imperial Government lavished on military works and buildings in Canada, as hon. members will perfectly understand. As far as British Columbia is concerned, I have not made an estimate, and have not asked for a vote, because, from the information I am able to collect, we will have to rent accommodation at first, and have plans prepared for a permanent building, an estimate of which will be submitted to Parliament. In regard to St. John, New Brunswick, I may say—

Mr. VAIL. I think all the military buildings at St. John were burnt during the great fire. There are some at Fredericton.

Mr. CARON. I speak of St. John, New Brunswick; but as the hon. gentleman belongs to the Maritime Provinces he is, of course, a much better authority as to the military buildings there than I am.

Mr. BLAKE. If it is determined to locate the school at St. John, and the military buildings have been burned, as my hon. friend mentions, a new building will be required. I do not know whether the hon. Minister has finally fixed at St. John or has considered the case of Fredericton.

Mr. CARON. I have not definitely fixed the places.

Mr. BLAKE. For British Columbia an amount will be required for buildings, and I suppose the House will be asked for a vote before any large expenditure is incurred. I would like to know whether the hon. gentleman considered, in making the estimate which is based upon the cost of "A" and "B" Batteries, the increased cost of living in British Columbia. My hon. friend who comes from that Province says that it is rather a dear country to live in, and I observe that extra votes are given occasionally in consequence of the increased expense of living in British Columbia over the happier land in which it is our good fortune to reside. Does the hon. gentleman expect to maintain this battery as cheaply as in the east?

Mr. CARON. I believe that this over-expenditure will diminish as soon as the railway is built, and the natural means of communication are improved. I must admit, however, that this is a difficulty, and one which I have to examine into, as Head of the Department. From all I can ascertain, I believe that a permanent force can be kept up there, for the most part, as cheaply as here. The pay of the men will be the same, but I cannot at present say what the allowances will be. I think, however, I can keep up "C" Battery within my estimate.

Mr. BLAKE. Will there be any additional expenditure with reference to attaching portions of the troop of cavalry to "A" and "B" Batteries, touching accommodation?

Mr. CARON. No.

244. Public Buildings—Nova Scotia..... $11,600.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. As to the first, the lot will cost about $1,000, and other expenses, the survey, &c., will be about $200. For the works at Yarmouth, $15,000 will not be sufficient for the entire expenditure, but this will suffice for this year. We will likely require $7,000 more. Room is to be provided in the Marine Hospital at Picton for sixteen or twenty beds; and to raise the rear wall of the building to the same height as the front. We had a vote for the site at North Sydney, and the lot will be purchased before the 1st of July; $15,000 will be required during the year to proceed with the building, which, in all, will cost $20,000. The building at Baddeck will cost between $15,000 and $16,000. The lot at Arichat will not be an extensive one; and the sites at North Sydney, Baddeck and Yarmouth have not yet been purchased.

245. Public Buildings—Prince Edward Island..... $5,000.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is a vote of $5,000 for a Custom House and Post Office at Montague, and I think we will be able to erect an armory besides. The cost will be about $12,000.

Mr. DAVIES. There is an armory at Georgetown in the same county and about ten miles distant. I would ask if this vote included the purchase of land and where the site is to be, whether on the north or south side of the river?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The vote includes the land. I cannot give any information as to the site, as it has not been selected. Before purchasing we generally send a confidential officer of the Department to look at the different sites and to make a report showing prices and other particulars along with the plan, and upon this report I make my report to Council.

Mr. KEEFLER. Will the hon. gentleman state what is the amount of revenue collected at this port?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot state.

Mr. DAVIES. I may state that most of the buildings in this place are of wood, and that the appliances for extinguishing fire are very slight, and the rate of insurance accordingly very high. I would strongly recommend the hon. gentleman to make the building either of brick or of stone.

Mr. BOWELL. I will now take the liberty of reading the memorandum with which I have been furnished from the Department relative to the Charlottetown Marine Hospital:

"At Charlottetown for a number of years a private dwelling was leased for the purposes of a Marine Hospital, and Dr. Taylor as medical attendant received a salary of $300, the whole cost of the institution being about $9 per week per patient. In 1880, it was decided to erect a Hospital at an estimated cost of $5,800 including land, and plans were prepared, and necessary steps being taken when a petition signed by the Mayor of Charlottetown, members of Parliament, and leading men of that city, was received setting forth that an institution known as the Charlottetown Hospital under the management of the Sisters of Charity, proposed to take charge of all sick seamen on conditions that the Government would bear the following expenditure: 1st. The purchase of certain ground adjoining the Hospital, and the erection of suitable buildings; 2nd. The allowance of a weekly sum for maintenance of sick seamen; and recommending it to favorable consideration. The Minister gave the matter due consideration, and being informed on enquiry that all denominations contributed to the support of this Hospital, and that it was open to all classes, he recommended to Council, and an Order issued on 23rd September last, authorizing the entering into an agreement with the Hospital authorities at rates not exceeding $5 per week for each patient, and an annual allowance of $400, to provide medical attendance and medicine.

"An arrangement has accordingly been made on the terms stated, it being a condition that the Hospital shall be open to the inspection of Officers of this Department, friends of patients, and Clergymen of all denominations, and that the agreement may terminate at any time on six months' notice.

"As Dr. Taylor's services were not required under the new arrangement, he was advised on the 21st September last to that effect."

Mr. DAVIES. Will the hon. gentleman be good enough to bring down on Concurrence any representations which may have been made by Dr. Taylor as to the inconvenience that would result from this transfer of the sailors to the General Hospital?

346. Public Buildings—New Brunswick..... $19,000.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The first item is $10,000 for a Post Office, Custom House, &c., at Bathurst. The total cost of the building will be $20,000, exclusive, I believe, of the site. The next is $9,000, for the Portland Post Office. This amount will cover what is required for this building.

347. Public Buildings—Quebec.....$100,000.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The first item is the Hull Post Office and Inland Revenue Office, $4,790, which, I think, will complete that building. The next is Lévis Immigrant Buildings, $15,000, which is required to complete building which will be erected this summer. Montreal Immigrant Buildings, $15,000. The Minister of Agriculture has asked for such a building, as there is no suitable building in Montreal for that purpose. The next item is Montreal Custom House, $3,000, for some improvements, and to repair a portion of the building which was damaged by fire. Improvements consist of heating apparatus, furnaces, and other items. The next item is Montreal Inland Revenue Building, $11,260, which will be the last amount required for that building. This amount is made up of a number of small items varying from $140 to $2,600, the latter being for flagging the sidewalk.

Mr. SCRIVER. Is that the old Custom House?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes. The next item is $45,000 for the Montreal Examining Warehouse. As I explained the other evening, the largest portion of this vote is for the construction of iron joists in the place of the wooden ones, which have become rotten, and for the construction of a stone shed for the storage of bar iron, &c. The next item is $7,000 for the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary. This is to cover the extra expense of having stone quarried for completing the building.

Mr. BLAKE. Is it the case that a portion of the stone is being quarried by contract?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes; it is impossible to have it all done by convict labor. The convicts will have plenty to do in the yard, dressing the stone, and so on.

348. Public Buildings—Ontario..... $131,200.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The first item is $6,000, the amount required this year for a Post Office at Orangeville. The next item is $50,000 for a building in connection with the Toronto Examining Warehouse, which is represented by the proper authorities as being absolutely necessary. The whole building, when completed, will cost $160,000, the intention being to complete it in three years. For this purpose we intend to ask for $50,000 more next year, and the balance the year after. The next item, $3,100, being the balance to complete the Belleville Post Office and Custom House. The next item is $15,000 for a Post Office, Custom House, and Inland Revenue Office at Peterboro'. The land will, I think, be furnished by the locality, and the building, when completed, will cost $20,000. A vote of $20,000 is asked for the Berlin Post Office and Custom House. This amount is required for the year, and I think we shall require $6,000 or $7,000 more; the total cost will be $27,500. The next item is $17,000 to complete the work on the St. Catharines Post Office. The next item of $8,000 for the Toronto Drill Shed is to provide additional accommodation for armories, &c., on the north side of the present shed. The next item of $1,000 is to provide for alterations in the House of Commons Post Office that are required to give more accommodation in the way of boxes and better accommodation for the officers. The London Custom House, addition for Weights and Measures and Gas Inspection Office, $5,000. This amount is required to pay for some legal expenses connected with the purchase of the lot there and also for some improvements in the building, and probably for the purchase of a small piece of land in rear of the building in order to isolate it further.

Mr. BOWELL,

Mr. BLAKE. How much will the total of the Orangeville Post Office be, and how much for the site?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not know the exact amount. It may cost $18,000 or $20,000 without the site?

Mr. BLAKE. The sum for drill sheds seems large.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We may be obliged to build separately, and therefore I made the amount $8,000 in order not to be out of funds should that be the case.

349. Public Buildings—Manitoba..... $70,000.00

Mr. CASGRAIN. I think the expenses the Dominion is incurring on account of the Lieutenant-Governors of the Provinces generally is rather high. I know the expense is regulated by Statute, but this item is for buildings and stables. I do not know whether the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Manitoba desires, like the Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec, to have an extensive piggery. I think the attention of the Lieutenant-Governor might be directed to some more noble occupation, for though there is nothing degrading in raising pigs it is rather expensive for the Government to allow such a large sum for that object. I have here a list showing the different salaries paid to Governors in the States. I take some twelve States, the average of whose population is about those of Ontario and Quebec: from Indiana whose population is 1,187,000, to Alabama whose population is 1,262,000, the other States averaging about the population of Ontario and Quebec. The Governor of Georgia receives only $3,000 a year; the Governor of Iowa, $3,000; the Governor of Kentucky, $5,000; the Governor of Massachusetts, $5,000; the Governor of Michigan, which is rather a large State, $1,000; the Governor of North Carolina, $3,000; the Governor of Tennessee, $4,000; the Governor of Texas, $4,000; the Governor of the Territories, $2,000; the Governor of Wisconsin, $5,000. This statement shows that for a country like ours which is far from being so rich as the United States, we are paying too high salaries to our Lieutenant-Governors. If we take the State of Pennsylvania, which is the largest State in the Union as to population and wealth, we see that the Governor there received the largest amount, $10,000. These Governors do not receive a vice-regal mansion. It is only the President who receives a large mansion. It is true that this year we may have a surplus to dispose of, but however large it may be that surplus comes from the pockets of the people, and if the people were to pay them in the same ratio as they do in the United States the whole Dominion would rejoice at it. Though this country is becoming prosperous, to a certain extent, the extravagant expenditure by those at the head of the Government is not an example that can do any good to the different Provinces. Under these circumstances I think that some suggestions of this kind ought to be well received by this House and carried into effect hereafter.

Mr. LANDRY (Translation). Mr. Chairman: In the name of the Province of Quebec, I offer my most sincere thanks to the hon. member from L'Islet (Mr. Casgrain). There is a proverb that one should wash his dirty linen at home. I ignore whether it is in virtue of this proverb that the hon. member should have brought before this House the name of the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec with reference to the Manitoba stables. If the hon. member has any remarks to make in reference to the item now asked from this House, let him make them; but to come before this House, which makes no appropriations for items of this kind for the Province of Quebec, pour out his bile against a man whom he does not like, seize this occasion to insult in the person of the Lieutenant-Governor the entire Province of Quebec, the least we can do, even if we do it ironically, is to offer him our sincere thanks. I feel assured that every time the hon. member delivers speeches of this character he will diminish his chances of attaining the goal he aspires to.

Mr. VALIN (Translation). Mr. Chairman: I thought that the hon. member from L'Islet (Mr. Casgrain) would, at least, have spoken to us about the Manitoba stables, for this is the subject under consideration. But since he has deemed it proper to attack the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Quebec, he ought to have informed us how it was that the ex-Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba, who is one of his friends, went into commercial operations in horses, animals, lands, and other matters. I would like to know what is the difference between one who goes into the pork business, which is an agreeable thing to eat, and one who goes into the horse business. I do not see why the hon. gentleman wants to draw us into a discussion of Quebec matters when Manitoba questions are the ones under consideration. The hon. member from Montmagny (Mr. Landry) is quite right in what he said, and I do not see why the hon. member from L'Islet attacked persons here who are not subjects for our consideration.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I do not wish to interpose in the discussion between our friends from the Province of Quebec, but I cannot allow the very extraordinary position which the hon. member for L'Islet has taken in relation to this matter to pass without a single word. I am astonished that any hon. gentleman in this House, should refer to the fact of the Lieutenant-Governor engaging in agricultural pursuits as degrading to his office or the position he holds. I hold, Sir, that the cultivation of the soil and anything that relates to it, is as honorable an occupation and as honorable a calling as that which the hon. gentleman himself follows; and, I believe, that the hon. gentleman will find little sympathy in this House, or little sympathy out of it, for attacking the Lieutenant-Governor because he uses the leisure which his office affords—I care not whether it is Mr. Cauchon the ex-Lieutenant-Governor of Manitoba, or my friend Mr. Robitaille, Lieutenant-Governor of Quebec. I say that neither of these gentlemen can use their leisure, or use any means at their disposal, in a manner more advantageous to the country, than in promoting and encouraging agriculture and agricultural pursuits in any respect whatever. There is no branch of agriculture to which these gentlemen can devote any portion of their leisure time more profitably to the interests of Canada, than in the improvement of stock, whether of horses, horned cattle, or pigs. The loss to the people of Canada, the loss to the agricultural interests of this country, by having poor and inferior breeds of cattle, is something enormous, and I am astonished that when a gentleman occupying the high position of Lieutenant-Governor, has turned his attention to a matter so beneficial to the country, any hon. gentleman in this House should endeavor to represent that action as degrading to his office.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I see nothing degrading in raising pigs.

Mr. CHAIRMAN. There is nothing in this item about pigs. The hon. gentleman will please confine his attention to the item.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I was speaking about the Lieutenant-Governor's stables, and I desired to know the object for which these stables are built. Are they for horses, or hens, or cocks, or pigs? That is the question before the Committee. I do not see anything degrading in raising pigs.

Mr. VALIN. This is not a vote for pigs, but for stables.

Mr. CASGRAIN. If my hon. friend will keep quiet for a moment perhaps we may be able to find out from the Government the purpose of building these stables; and if the purpose of building these stables is to raise pigs, we ought to know it. There is nothing degrading in raising pigs. But I do not think it is the duty of this Government to build stables for that purpose. This House would like to know whether the Lieutenant-Governor intends to raise pigs. That is information that I have a right to ask for and which the Government may properly give.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The next item is the Dominion Land Office, Winnipeg, $10,000. This item has been asked by the Department of Interior because the present building is too small for the service, and the intention is to build an extension. The next item is the Winnipeg Powder Magazine, $5,000. This is to construct a new brick powder magazine, 40 x 20, for Military District No. 10, and estimated by the chief architect to cost $4,800, with $200 for contingencies.

350. Public Buildings—North-West Territories.....$29,000.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We asked for $12,000 to construct an immigrant station west of Qu'Appelle. The site has not yet been selected, but we will have to build a shed for the immigrants west of Qu'Appelle, during the next season. Then, new Public Buildings at Regina, the capital of the North-West Territories, additional amount required, $7,000. The amount of $20,000 that was voted is considered too small for the buildings that are required there for the use of the Government of the Territories. There is also an amount placed for a new immigrant station at Qu'Appelle, to take the place of that destroyed the other day by fire.

Mr. MULOCK. I desire to call the attention of the Minister of Public Works to a remark that appeared in the papers yesterday and to-day, to the effect that the destruction of the immigrant sheds at Qu'Appelle was due to its close proximity to the station. Is it intended to re-erect the destroyed building on precisely the same site formerly occupied, or would it not be prudent to endeavor to some extent to isolate the building? I see from the newspapers that this fire destroyed a large quantity of settlers' effects, the loss of which, at this juncture in their lives, appears to be almost incalculable in its effect; and I think it would be prudent and wise to adopt all precautions available, in order to protect settlers in their endeavors to open up our country.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The intention is to place the new building at such a spot as will isolate it as far as possible; but the hon. gentleman knows that immigrant sheds should not be far from the railway depot.

Mr. CASEY. I would suggest, seeing that such buildings are always of an inflammable nature, that their contents should be insured for a reasonable amount, so that in case of fire the settlers may be recouped part of their loss.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Government are their own insurers. It is very unfortunate that an accident of this kind should have occurred at Qu'Appelle, but such a one may not occur again for ten or twenty years. The idea is not to keep immigrants long in the sheds; quite the contrary. I do not see how we could carry out the hon. gentleman's proposal.

Mr. ORTON. In regard to the immigrant sheds, I would ask whether it is the intention of the Government to erect an immigrant shed at Regina. This unfortunate fire at Qu'Appelle is a very sad affair for the people of that town. I do not desire to make any assertion against the erection of an immigrant shed at that point; but I mean to say that Regina having been selected by the Government as the capital of the North-West Territory, and people having been induced to buy property on the distinct understanding that the Government intended to erect all public buildings there, that fact has led many people to invest capital there and to go there in order to help to build it up, and such people feel they have been somewhat deceived by the Government. I certainly think the capital of the territory is the right place to erect an immigrant shed. It is about the same distance, or perhaps a little further from Brandon, where there is an immigrant shed, as Brandon is from Winnipeg; and I wish to draw the attention of the Minister to the importance of having an immigrant shed erected at Regina. It is proposed that a branch railway shall be built by the Canadian Pacific Railway to that point, and I think that the Government should provide some accommodation for immigrants there. Many people have been led to believe that there is division even in the Cabinet, with respect to the selection of Regina as the seat of Government in the territory. When they find that the public buildings are not all being erected there, as was promised by those who had lots to sell on behalf of the Government, I certainly think it does not look very well that there is no provision made for immigrants going to Regina.

Mr. HESSON. I would remind the Committee that I have had the honor of presenting a very large petition from the inhabitants of Regina upon this subject, the erection of an immigrant shed there. It is of the utmost importance, especially to strangers going there, that there should be some accommodation, however temporary it may be, for their accommodation during a few days. It is natural to suppose that at the place which has been selected as the capital of a new Province, they will at least find shelter from the inclemency of the weather, and when they come to find there is no accommodation for immigrants they will feel very much disappointed. I have no desire to say that the position is not well chosen, but with regard to buildings of a permanent and substantial character, it might be worthy of consideration whether it would not be advisable to divide the expenditure between these two places, and give the accommodation at Regina which the member for Wellington (Mr. Orton) very fairly stated the people going there had been led to expect. The erection of a temporary structure at Regina is deserving of consideration; and I may say that the petition I presented to the House is signed by the most respectable residents of Regina—men of capital and means, who were induced to go there on the representation that it would be the capital of the new Province, and they have a right to expect that something will be done. I trust that some action will be taken in the matter.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The first item is for an immigration station west of Qu'Appelle, and as Regina is west of Qu'Appelle, the Government, of course, will have to consider the remarks of the hon. gentlemen on this head. The Government are of opinion that there should be an immigration shed at Qu'Appelle, as it is 40 or 50 miles from Regina, and many immigrants are going to this point, as is shown from the quantity of settlers' baggage destroyed during the recent fire.

251. Public Buildings—British Columbia..... $12,000.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am sorry to say that the British Columbia Penitentiary is too small; civilization is penetrating more and more into this beautiful Province, and therefore we have to extend the penitentiary. The question was whether we should build a wing or erect a building on the plateau, because the present structure is on a slope. There is some difficulty about drainage, and this matter will be well looked into, and I have no doubt that the architects will remedy the drainage.
Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

264. Railways—Intercolonial.....$158,000.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The first item is for a shunting and station yard at Point Lévis. I may say that the time has arrived for a decision as to the station yard at Point Lévis as well in connection with the Intercolonial as the Grand Trunk Railway, and after full consideration the Chief Engineer is of opinion that in the interests of the Intercolonial traffic, the shunting and station grounds should be in close proximity to the Grand Trunk yard, and that the connection of the Intercolonial tracks with those of the Grand Trunk should be made in such a way as to approach on the south side of the Grand Trunk Railway where should be the new passenger station, in order that the passenger traffic may be exchanged with despatch and to the convenience of the travelling public, while the way station should be placed at the south ferry. When the vote was previously under consideration on the question of the St. Clair Branch, I stated that we expected to run this by the lower ferry, where would be the way station cross at that point, and then run up to the Point Lévis Grand Trunk Railway station. The cost of the shunting shed at the centre of the Grand Trunk Railway yard will be $33,000, the way station on site at Smith's wharf will cost $12,000, and the way station building, $25,000, making $47,500, whereas the same accommodation at the lower station would have cost us $125,000.

Mr. LANDRY. Will the shunting and station yard be between the ferry and the Grand Trunk station?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The shunting yard will be in the proximity of the present Grand Trunk Railway station at Point Lévis.

Mr. LANDRY. Is it the intention of the Government to have a station at Point Lévis?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; a branch is to be built at the Rivière du Loup, over the two miles between the railway and the town, to furnish wood and water at that point; and we expect to increase greatly the facilities for sea-side excursions, and those who go to this town during the summer season. The estimate of the entire cost of this Rivière du Loup Branch is $25,000, covering everything connected with the purchase of the roadway and construction, and such station accommodation as is required. The Dalhousie Branch will pass over the six miles between Campbellton and Dalhousie. It was originally intended to locate the Intercolonial at Dalhousie; but it was decided that the distance could be shortened by having the road take its present course past Campbellton in a direct line, leaving Dalhousie some six miles off the track. The desirability of having this branch constructed will be obvious, when I state that navigation has opened much earlier in the spring and has been continued much later in the fall at Dalhousie than it has been at Campbellton, so that the postal communication by steam with the surrounding country will be much improved by this arrangement.

Mr. LANDRY. I call the attention of the hon. Minister to the following resolutions which were passed at a recent meeting of the Board of Trade of the city of Quebec:—

"Moved by Mr. N. Turcotte, seconded by Mr. P. Vallière.—That this meeting hopes that the Government may grant to the city of Quebec the same advantages which have been accorded to other towns in the Dominion, namely, that a freight agent for the Intercolonial Railway be placed at Quebec as well as at Lévis, and it is obvious that the mercantile community of the former city suffer great inconvenience in being compelled to cross to Lévis on matters of even the least importance concerning freight traffic on the said road.—Carried.”

Actually there is only one agent of the road in the city of Quebec, and he lives near the St. Louis station, a long way from the terminus where the ferry lands. In that part of the city we have not even a blackboard to tell us whether the trains are late or not, and if we want to get information as to the trains we have to send a person across to Lévis to get it. Under these circumstances I hope the Government will do justice to Quebec by giving us an agent and the freight accommodation we asked for.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. My attention was called to this matter before, and I brought it to the notice of the Chief Engineer and Manager of the road, stating that I was anxious that every possible facility should be given to Quebec city, and all possible information furnished. Since that time my attention has been drawn to the resolutions passed by the Board of Trade of Quebec, and I have directed an officer to make a report to me on the subject. The matter is now engaging the attention of the Department.

Mr. BLAKE. Does this include the accommodation of Rivière du Loup?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; this covers everything, both Rivière du Loup and Dalhousie.

Mr. BLAKE. Will there be stations?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, at both points.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the trains be run on the short branches to connect with the main trains of the Intercolonial?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. All travellers desiring to go down will be carried directly, either to one point or the other.

365. Canals.....$96,000.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The first item of $14,000, St. Peter's Canal, is for the purpose of providing for the protection of vessels which, in passing through the canals, are liable to be driven against the sides by the winds. I will read from a memorandum I have here:

“Complaints have been made as to the necessity which exists for the protection of vessels passing through this canal, which are liable to be driven against the sides of the canal by the influence of certain winds. The Engineer in charge recommends that the north entrance be protected on the east side by a pier 330 feet in length, its top to be six feet above the level of the lake; estimated cost, $11,000. Also, to place timbers vertically against the rock sides to carry horizontal fenders, $3,000. Total, $14,000.”

The next item is $80,000 for the Williamsburg Canal—towards enlargement of the upper entrance, Galops Canal:

“On a report dated 23rd April, 1883, from the Minister of Railways and Canals, submitting that complaints have been made in respect of the condition of the works at the entrance of the Galops Canal, it being urged that in consequence of the carrying away by ice of much of the head pier, loaded vessels coming downwards are unable to enter at the head and have been for some time past compelled to run the rapids to Iroquois at the foot of the canal, and if bound for the intermediately situated Village of Edwardsburgh, to work their way back via the canal; and that from reports in his Department it appears for the past year the depth of water at the entrance to be considerably below that of even other canals on the St. Lawrence, which were themselves inadequate, and that a remedy for this condition of things was urgently called for in the case of these canals.

“The Minister represents that the Chief Engineer has, under date the 21st inst., reported that instead of attempting to repair the old pier at the upper entrance of the canal, it would be better to proceed with works applicable to a new entrance at this point, this being part of the general scheme of canal enlargement, and he suggests that the extension of these works up-stream would have the effect of increasing the depth of water in the canal.

“The probable cost of forming new entrance he sets down at about $260,000, of which amount the sum of $60,000 could, he states, be advantageously expended during the ensuing year.”

It was found that to remedy this difficulty at all, would involve a large expenditure unless the work was dealt with in this mode; and otherwise it would have been useful in carrying out the ultimate system of the enlargement of the canals. Then there is $2,000 to remove a shoal above the locks of the Culbute Canal.

“Attention has been drawn by steamboat owners to the necessity for the removal of certain shoals in the Ottawa River which at low water interfere materially with the passage of vessels using the Culbute Lock. The matter has been reported upon by Mr. Perry, and finally submitted to the Chief Engineer of Canals, who has reported that the clearing out of these shoals is of great importance to navigation, and advises that the work be proceeded with. Estimated cost for the shoal above the lock, $2,000.”

With regard to the last item, Miscellaneous Works, I may state that about $3,500 of that sum is for the preparation of the large way which has been prepared during the past season and the remainder is for a number of other smaller items.

390. To compensate Mr. Thomas Munro for performing the duties of Superintendent of the Welland Canal for one and a-half months in 1879 $180.00

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. It will be remembered that at one time Mr. Bodwell, the Superintendent of the Welland Canal, was suspended, and an investigation was held by the Department. During that period Mr. Munro, who is a Division Engineer on the canal, was charged with the additional duties of Superintendent. He made an application for $362, which would have been the salary of the Superintendent during the time Mr. Munro performed the duties. What I have recommended is that he should be paid one-half of that amount.

Mr. BLAKE. When did Mr. Munro apply?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. He has continuously applied, and from time to time the subject has been postponed.

353. Miscellaneous—Fort Dufferin, St. John, N.B..... $3,000.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is for the construction of some works to protect the fort at a point where it is exposed to being washed away by the sea.

354. Harbors and Rivers, Nova Scotia $29,850.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. These are a number of small items, mostly for repairs. The vote of $4,600, for Yarmouth, is for the construction of 160 feet of cribwork for the protection of the western end of the harbor. The next item is $2,000, of which $1,000 is a revote, for works at Parker's Cove, in the county of Annapolis. In the previous vote of $1,000 there was a condition attached, that the locality should provide a similar amount, but it has been represented to me by the late member, Mr. Longley, as well as by the present hon. member for the county, that the people are too poor to do so, and, under the circumstances, we ask for sufficient to do the whole work. The next item of $3,000, for Grand Narrows, in the county of Cape Breton, is for the extension of the existing wharf 124 feet in length, and the addition of a wing 60 feet long. The next is Oyster Pond in the county of Gloucester, $2,000, for the extension of the pier works constructed in 1876. The next is White Point in Queen's county. The chief explained that urgent repairs were needed as much damage had been caused in the beginning of March, 1883. The next item is to provide for the construction of a wharf, 129 feet long and 20 feet wide extending to 12 feet of water at Militia Point in the county of Inverness. The next item is Cataragui Gut, Cape Breton, $1,500, for opening a passage with three feet of water at neap-tide to allow fishermen to pass their boats through and give them a place where they can lie in safety. The next item is McNair's Cove in the county of Antigonishe, $5,000. This is for restoring the inner side of the breakwater and making it useful as a place of shipment.

Mr. VAIL. I am afraid the hon. gentleman has overlooked some particulars. A grant or two for some piers in Digby county, are urgently required, and I may mention that a petition was sent from the inhabitants of Sandy Cove, accompanied by a subscription list asking for a grant. An engineer was sent some years ago to examine that place, and the inhabitants expected a very large and important pier would have been built, but the engineer reported that a large amount would be required, and the Government consequently did not proceed with the work. The inhabitants have since concluded that a small work costing a reasonable sum would be a great advantage to them, because they are now obliged to turn their attention to fishing; whereas heretofore they had larger vessels and were engaged in a different calling. I hope the hon. Minister of Public Works will see his way clear to making a small grant towards that work this year. There are also one or two important works at Church Point and Comeanville, which could be repaired at a small expenditure, and would be of great advantage to the people. I hope the hon. Minister will consider these suggestions and bring down grants for those works this Session.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. As to the first work mentioned by my hon. friend, I was not able to comply with his request, as the engineer reported it would entail too much expense; but after what the hon. gentleman has said, I may be in a position to examine the work again, but cannot make any promise. The hon. gentleman called my attention to the two other points, outside the House as well as in it, and I told him I would most likely have an examination made in order to put myself au fait with the position of affairs.

Mr. FORBES. A petition was sent in from Hunter's Point to which I never got an answer. The public works there were erected by the Local Government, and the people were trying to get a small grant from the Dominion Government to assist in completing them. I do not know whether it is the intention of the Government to send an engineer down this season to report on that work, though I think it was reported on some years ago. I would like to ask the hon. Minister when I may expect to receive the report of the engineers and the surveys that were made for the breakwater on the western side of the bay?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. As to the return, I have a list of the returns that have not yet been brought down from my Department, and have sent to my deputy pressing him to send the returns as soon as possible. I cannot do more than that. As to the other work mentioned by the hon. gentleman, I must ask a little patience on the part of hon. members. The Government have done all they could this year with what they considered the most pressing work. The hon. gentleman will, no doubt, remain in this House for several years more, and will be in a position to call my attention to this work again, should I forget it.

Mr. WOODWORTH. I wish to bring to the hon. Minister's notice the small sum allowed to King's county for the piers and breakwaters on the north shore of that county. These have been built by the people themselves, aided by the Provincial Government from time to time, and are indispensable to their trade. Under the fiscal policy so happily inaugurated and successfully carried out by this Government, these people have depended almost entirely upon Canadian flour. They import that in their vessels from Portland, Boston, and New York, in bond, and bring it down to the shore, and if these piers and breakwaters give way from force of the storms, it leaves them entirely unprotected, and unable to carry on their business. I have presented to the Minister of Public Works eight or nine petitions from the people along the shore, asking for grants to these respective piers and breakwaters, and stating that if relief was not afforded, they would probably go out during the present year. I think the sum of $1,500 will be found to be entirely inadequate to accomplish what the people desire.

Mr. VAIL.

There are other piers and breakwaters in a dilapidated state, and I would ask the hon. Minister, during Recess, to look after them. A stitch in time saves nine, and perhaps $300 or $400 here and there, will save thousands of dollars to the Government.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not remember all these piers that are mentioned by the hon. gentleman, but if they have not been put on the list, it is because we could not do so this year. Of course there is always a certain latitude left to the Head of a Department in case of emergency, and if any very pressing necessity arises, I might be in a position to come to the relief of the locality, but I cannot do that for many piers.

355. Harbors and Rivers—Prince Edward Island.....$7,250.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The first item is to build the work at South River, already begun, deepening and extending the present channel so as to provide a straight channel fifty feet in width and eight feet deep at low water. The total cost is $8,250, of which a portion has already been expended. The next item is $4,000 for Malpeque.

Mr. DAVIES. We took last year a vote of $3,000 for the breakwater at Malpeque, and I would like to know from the hon. Minister if anything has been done yet with that money. The breakwater is washing away at the end and it is of no use as it is now. The tide is undermining it and washing the work away, and unless something is soon done all will be lost that has already been expended there.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The intention is to expend this amount. The colleague of the hon. gentleman called my attention to the fact a short time ago and asked for another vote of $2,000. I will consider the matter and see whether there are means of making it $5,000.

Mr. DAVIES. The local members have called my attention to the same vote of last year, and they said that $3,000 would not complete it, but that it would require a vote of $5,000. I hope the hon. Minister will see his way clear to do that much for us.

356. Harbors and Rivers—New Brunswick.....$26,000.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The second item is $4,000 for Mispick breakwater. It is also called Port Simons and is in St. John county. It is proposed to construct a breakwater 200 feet long and 25 feet wide. The total cost will be $8,600, of which we only ask $4,000 this year. The next item is for the construction of a wharf at Robby's Point in the county of Westmoreland, which is estimated at $1,500. The item of $4,000 is to construct a ballast wharf at Hope-well Cape, in Albert county, the total cost of which is estimated at $9,000. $2,000 is to complete breakwater as originally contemplated at Grande Anse. $4,000 is to rebuild a portion of the work of Shippegan, which when completed will cost $12,000. $3,000 is asked towards the construction of a wharf at Buctouche.

357. Harbors and Rivers—Quebec$46,900.00

Mr. DESJARDINS. Perhaps this is the proper time to enquire of the Government whether they have been able to consider, this Session, the representations made to them on several occasions, relating to the urgency of deepening the channel between Montreal and Quebec. I do not see as yet any resolution on the paper, or any amount in the Estimates to show that the Government have taken action. The question is a most important one, affecting the interests of the trade and navigation of the St. Lawrence. I hope the Government have come to some conclusion; and we are anxious in our district, at least, to know if immediate action will be taken on this matter.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am not in a position to give a positive answer this evening to the hon. gentleman;

but if he will kindly renew his question to-morrow, I think I will be able to let the House know the course which the Government intends to take on that subject.

Mr. BLAKE. Are all these items for new work?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No. $1,500 for piers at Lake Megantic is to continue the work. $3,000 for wharf at bridge across River Richelieu on road between Lacolle and Clarenceville is for a new work. $6,000 is to protect the lighthouse at St. Jean d'Orleans. The lighthouse was placed on a pier that belongs to the locality, and on which there is a large indebtedness to the Local Government; and, of course, they call on us to pay our share for the pier. That money will not be paid except on a discharge from the Local Government of all liability on that ground.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Am I to understand that this vote is for works to protect the lighthouse, or merely to pay the money to the Local Government?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is for the works themselves. $4,500 is to complete improvements at Pointe aux Orignaux, Rivière Ouelle, which were begun two or three years ago.

Mr. LANDRY. Does this $5,000 include the amount to build the lighthouse at Isle aux Grues?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No. It belongs to the Minister of Marine.

Mr. BLAKE. How does the hon. gentleman take a vote to protect the lighthouse at St. Jean d'Orleans?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This was built by the Department of Public Works. An Order in Council was passed some years ago directing that such works costing $10,000 should be built by the Public Works Department, while small lighthouses, costing $1,000 or $500 or so, are built by the other Department.

258. Harbors and Rivers—Ontario.....$65,500.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It was estimated in the first instance that the work at Morpeth would cost $20,000, but we think that we will do it with probably $10,000, so that this will have to be supplemented next year. The locality is very much exposed, the pier will be extended to 12 feet of water, and a bend to give shelter will be provided. The future will decide whether a further extension shall be made.

Mr. CASEY. Is it not intended to go on to deep water and to protect the wharf at the end of it?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. As soon as the money is voted, we will see how far the money will go. If this be not enough, we will trust to Parliament to give us more next year. It was originally proposed to build a new wharf with 12 feet of water at low water; total length about 470 ft. and at a total cost of $20,000. With this $10,000 we will probably build 200 feet with a return wharf, but do not wish to be bound down to this, as the plan may be changed. For the L'Original repairs, the local authorities furnish $1,000, and we, $3,000. The Kingsville work was begun last year. This amount will not complete it; we will probably need $5,000 more to do so. The total cost will be between $32,000 and $33,000; $5,000 were voted, and we have still of it, I think, $4,500, which, with this, will make $31,000, while there will be something for contingencies, &c. At Belleville the channel will be deepened, 1,875 feet long by 100 feet wide—14 feet at low water. A landing pier will be provided at Southampton, where there is an accumulation of sand or silt, and we want to extend the wharf to get to the current formed by the opening between the two piers on the one side and Chantry Island on the other. Dredging will be done at Meaford. The work at Little Nation River was begun two years ago, and is to be continued.

Mr. BLAKE. Will this vote complete the work at Owen Sound, and what depth of water will it give?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The sum asked is to complete the dredging of the channel in this harbor to fourteen feet. When we began these works the locality agreed to furnish, I think, $13,000 or $14,000, and we the balance. We have found the undertaking a little more difficult than we had foreseen, but this amount will complete the work.

Mr. BRYSON. Is the dredging of the portion of the Ottawa River at the Narrows to be continued this season? No doubt the hon. gentleman is aware that the dredge is within a few miles of the Culbute locks, and I see that the Government has asked for $2,000 to remove the boulders above these locks. I desire to ask if it is the intention of the Government to continue the removal of these obstructions, on the same principle which was observed last season?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am not now in a position to answer that question positively. This request came very late. Of course I intend to investigate the matter, but I know enough of it, from the information which I have received from other quarters, to see that it was necessary to ask for a small vote for this purpose.

Mr. CASEY. In regard to Morpeth Harbor, I am glad that justice has at last been done the locality, and that the arrangement originally understood between them and the Government is being carried out at least in part. The $4,000 which the locality subscribed was subscribed, I believe, on the understanding that the original plan or something like it should be carried out, and I hope the hon. Minister will be able to carry out that understanding. I hardly think that for the amount he named he will be able to get deep water at that point of the coast, but I have every confidence that when the works are begun and the plans are made, he will do what is required to make the expenditure useful.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am glad to hear the word "confidence" come from the hon. gentleman's mouth—it certainly shows that he is improving. Of course I can make no promises, and I am asking the vote simply because the locality is satisfied with this arrangement.

Mr. CASEY. The word "confidence" was not a slip on my part, because I have every confidence in the hon. gentleman's business capacity and his faculty for managing the Department in a business-like way—we can all say that, whatever we may think with regard to his policy.

359. Prince Arthur's Landing—Harbor Improvements $50,000.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Hon. gentlemen know that at Prince Arthur's Landing there is not sufficient, and it is becoming a very important harbor. We intend contributing a share of the improvement of that harbor, but the locality is also contributing $25,000. We expect that the vote will also be supplemented by the railway company, which is largely interested in having the harbor sheltered. We will, of course, enter into communication with the railway company and the authorities of the locality as to their respective contributions.

Mr. BLAKE. In the old times we used to hear comparisons made between another port and Prince Arthur's Landing, from which I was disposed to believe that Prince Arthur's Landing was one of the most admirable, safest, and most land-locked harbor to be found anywhere. Now it seems a considerable expenditure is required to make it safe. I would like to ask if there is any arrangement as yet with the railway company, and whether there is an approximate estimate of what the whole cost will be of the works required to make it what it should be in this regard?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That depends altogether on the extent of the shelter to be afforded. It will vary from $150,000 to over $200,000—perhaps $250,000. But the intention is not, for the present at all events, to go to an extreme estimate. If the company, as no doubt they will, furnishes a reasonable amount, this $50,000 from Parliament, and $25,000 from the locality will certainly be sufficient to build a breakwater which will shelter a portion of the harbor. With regard to the hon. gentleman's reminiscences perhaps this harbor was better sheltered than the other, though it may not be as good as we might desire.

Mr. BLAKE. If it is better sheltered than the other port I am much mistaken. I understand the hon. gentleman to say that all the public money he proposes to expend is $50,000?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. For the present at all events. Of course if these improvements are to be extended very much—if they are to cost from $200,000 to $250,000 we may have to supplement this vote by a smaller one, but my idea is that this vote will be sufficient for the present.

Mr. BLAKE. The improvements will be in the nature of a breakwater?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. DAWSON. With regard to Prince Arthur's Landing, it is now the terminus of the railway, and a very large traffic is likely to go through there this summer, so that it is highly necessary that something should be done to provide accommodation for shipping. Prince Arthur's Landing is decidedly a well-sheltered harbor. It is in a bay which is completely land-locked—a bay, however, which is of somewhat large dimensions—and, of course, a little surge rising may sometimes occasion inconvenience. A sure proof that it is a good harbor is the fact that although for the last ten years a large amount of shipping has gone there—last year it was 190,000 tons or something approaching that amount—early in the spring and late in the fall there has not been one single accident. A breakwater is required for the reason I have stated, but within a year past the people of the Landing have laid out themselves about $100,000 in building wharves. They are very commodious, one of them being 1,100 feet long, by 100 feet wide, and others of lesser dimensions. They are very strong vertically, but are too slightly built for the lateral pressure of the ice shoving upon them, and therefore a breakwater is required, which, if built, will protect all this property, and they will be perfectly good as wharves. A great deal used to be said in old times about the Kaministiquia River, which is far from the Landing. I believe some $60,000 or $80,000 was expended on that river in dredging, extending over a period of some five or six years, during which dredging was carried on continuously in the summer season. The results of that dredging have been nearly obliterated by a cause which may occur any year, but which has never been taken into consideration. It is, that that river is at times subject to ice-gorges, which form a jam, and dams the water back, heaving up banks and greatly altering the soundings in the soft, alluvial bottom. In order that the House may better understand what occurs, I shall read a description from a local paper, of what took place on the 29th of April, 1881:—

“Fort William submerged—An ice gorge on the Kaministiquia—Schooner Richardson high and dry—Davidson's boom and dock demolished—Steam dredge under water—Hudson Bay Co.'s dock a total wreck—Tug Lizzie leaking badly—Two scows carried out into the lake and lost—The range lights out of range—Hundreds of cords of wood washed away—Ice piled six feet high on the road.

“On Monday last persons arriving from Fort William reported an inundation of the fields belonging to the Hudson Bay Co., caused by the rapid rise in the Kaministiquia, which had swelled to an enormous extent, overrunning its banks to a considerable depth. From those who witnessed the rushing of the water we learn that for about a mile along the road leading from the Hudson Bay Co.'s Fort to Prince Arthur's Landing, the water was of such a depth as to admit of boats being rowed from the Fort buildings to within a short distance of a second river bridge; the road being considerably higher than the surrounding land, it was estimated that the water at one time must have risen to a height of nearly four feet above the banks of the river.

“Quite early in the afternoon the ice began moving towards the entry, and without much warning the water rose very rapidly, soon submerging the banks and allowing but little time for escape; in fact, the people living there had barely time to secure boats before the water was three or four feet in depth, and extending on both sides for about a mile beyond the banks. Women and children were seen on the tops of houses, and one (supposed to be Mrs. Stevenson, wife of the manager of Davidson's Mill), with her child, were distinctly seen across the river, on top of a lumber pile.

“The fields on both sides of the road gave every indication of the rushing of many waters; on the north side especially was this the case, and for a long distance the ice covered the entire surface. Arrived at Fort William the scene was grand beyond description, it was of that mournful grandeur that surrounds old ruins. The road at this point was rendered impassable by immense cakes of ice, which were piled one upon another in some places to a height of six feet. The ice seemed to have a special liking for the road bed, as it was there found in greater quantity than at other points. As far as the eye could reach along the river banks, these miniature icebergs were the only objects discernible. One that was measured was found to be over three feet in thickness, and about eight feet in length.

“Finding Mr. Richards, who is in charge of the Hudson Bay Co.'s store and property at this fort, we learned that the water commenced to recede about half-past ten o'clock at night, and that by twelve o'clock it confined itself to the river bed, so that they anticipated no further danger, although a strict watch was kept all night long. On this reserve is an old stone building used in former times for storing fur, to this Mr. Richards removed his family in a row boat. Mr. Morrison, who has charge of the lighthouse, also brought his family to the same place by means of a boat.

“During the winter the schooner Richardson, the steam dredge, the tugs Lizzie and M. I. Mills, two scows belonging to the dredge, and a number of small boats have been harbored at this point, and all have been more or less demoralized. The schooner Richardson brought up late last fall, a load of nitro-glycerine, &c., for the use of the Hamilton Powder Co., and being too late after unloading to return to the Sault Canal before the time announced for closing, she was moored below the dock, near the mouth of the river. It was very fortunate for the owner that she was so moored, as there is no reason to doubt that she would otherwise have been a complete wreck. As it now is, she has been lifted high and dry on the bank, and is only supported on one side by the jammed ice. The steam dredge was completely under water, and her shovel carried away and deposited inland. The tug Lizzie was also shoved upon to the dock, but by prompt attention given her by Mr. Richards, Captain Coxetter and others, she was safely launched into her usual position, though found to be leaking badly. Men placed at the pumps found the water in the hold gaining upon them and eventually she had to be beached and allowed to fill. The tug M. I. Mills is on the opposite side of the river, and has the appearance of trying to crawl up the bank, as she is a rotten, old hulk it does not matter much whether she has sustained any damage or not.

“One of the scows in attendance on the dredge was taken away by the flood, and cannot be seen; it is supposed that she was carried down and drawn under the ice in the lake, or sunk in the river channel. Another scow, belonging to Davidson's Mill, has suffered a similar experience.

“The plank walk leading to the outer range is a thing of the past, and the force of the water landed the range light into a swamp, carrying it completely off its underpinning, and of course in its present position, is of no use.

“The oil house, another large building in the same vicinity, is also moved from its foundation. The light-keeper's residence formerly occupied by Captain J. W. Plummer was flooded to a depth of about three feet, and trunks, furniture, and other articles were floating around inside. The bedding, bedsteads, carpets, &c., were rendered almost worthless by the deposit of mud and sand that the water left upon them.

“The Hudson Bay Company will be heavy losers, the fences were entirely destroyed along the west side of their land, and their docks are a total wreck. The latter had lately been repaired at considerable expense, but the deluge has wrenched large timbers and piles asunder.”

I need not read further from this description. I think it is very necessary that the attention of the House should be drawn to this, so that hon. members may know what sort of a harbor the Kaministiquia is—the expenditure of $60,000 or $80,000 produced no permanent result.

Mr. BLAKE. Are there any plans or estimates or surveys of this work?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There is an estimate and there must be a report in the Department. During 1880 surveys were made by an officer of the Department, and the information then obtained is now used by the Chief Engineer in proposing the construction of a breakwater. I stated the extreme cost would be $250,000, but I see it is $240,000.

Mr. DAVIES. Is it the intention of the Government to bring down Supplementary Estimates for the maintenance of piers on the Island which, by a decision of the Supreme Court, are declared to belong to the Dominion.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Local Government have been in communication with the Dominion Government on this matter. The First Minister of Prince Edward Island was here, and I informed him an officer or two would visit the Island to examine each pier in order to ascertain exactly whether these were Dominion or local works. We will have a report by the 1st or 15th July. I told the First Minister he could, if he wished, send an officer to accompany ours. When the report is received, I will examine the whole question with the Chief Engineer and report the result to Council in order that the Government may decide whether any and which should be Dominion works.

Mr. DAVIES. The hon. gentleman does not propose any grant this year?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; but any small repairs will be made out of the general vote.

363. Public Works—Miscellaneous—Monument to Joseph Brant..... $5,000.00

Mr. HICKEY. It has been said this is an age of economists and calculators, but I am pleased, and I am sure the House is pleased, to see that the spirit of chivalry is not altogether absent from our midst and destroyed by our activity of life, but that this spirit shows signs of being more prominent and stronger in the future. Monuments erected in honor of the illustrious dead, add to the national glory of the country in which they are erected, and we have not so many heroes in our past, or fields of victory in our country, that we can afford to neglect those that add lustre to our history. I think that the battle of Chrysler's Farm is of sufficient importance in our history to demand the attention of the Government. A few hundred dollars expended in raising a monument to commemorate that victory, and to show to future generations that we, at heart, honored the valor of our sires, would be a fitting action on our part, and I hope, in another year, an estimate will be brought down to erect a monument to our worthy sires who fought and bled in this battle, and gained a victory which, the best historians say, maintained this country in its British connection.

364. Telegraph line from a point opposite New Westminster to Lader's Landing, B.C..... $1,500.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Private individuals wanted to build this branch line from our own line, but we thought it was better not to allow private individuals to interfere with the lines of the Government. The people will furnish the poles, and we have an old cable perfectly fitted for this branch line. We have also some wire, so that we will only require $1,500 to build the line.

334. Privy Council contingencies—To make payment to officers of this Department who are engaged after hours..... $1,000.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The officers of the Privy Council are often obliged to work late at night, after having worked all day. Instead of increasing their salaries permanently, we thought it was better to ask for a gratuity of $1,000.

Mr. BLAKE. It has always been understood that when the Council sat late, and the business required despatch, the officers should remain after hours, as is done in other Departments. There has been no proposition up to this time that there should be extra remuneration for that service.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We think that these officers are not sufficiently remunerated. The work of the Privy Council has increased very largely, and these officers are overworked. We thought it better to give them this small remuneration than to increase their salaries, for if we increase their salaries it will be a permanent thing.

Mr. BLAKE. Does the hon. gentleman suppose this vote is going to disappear from the Estimates? We are going to have this every year.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Perhaps so.

368. Additional amount required for purchase of life-boats, stations and life-preservers, maintenance of crews and rewards for saving life. $3,000.00

Mr. BOWELL. This is an additional vote that is asked for in order to put into operation the life-boat service on different stations along the coast. The subject was fully discussed a few nights ago, and from the expression of opinion in the House, it was deemed advisable to ask for a larger sum.

Mr. PLATT. Will the hon. Minister inform the Committee whether buildings are to be constructed this season to cover the life-boats?

Mr. BOWELL. Not that I am aware of; the system is not yet perfected.

Mr. BLAKE. Has the hon. gentleman any idea of what will be the cost of the life-boat it is intended to purchase? The hon. member for Prince Edward (Mr. Platt) made some suggestions the other day that seemed worthy of consideration.

Mr. BOWELL. I think they were, and they will be taken into consideration by the Department.

370. Indians—New Brunswick..... $618.12

Mr. BURPEE (Sunbury). There was a deputation of Indians here from New Brunswick the other day, and I presume this is the result of their visit.

Mr. BOWELL. There is a sum of $393.12, which is an increase to be paid to medical officers of from 26 cts. to 50 cts. per head of the population. The second item of $100 is to provide for the salary of a missionary at Big Cove, county of Kent. This is to be paid to the Rev. John Edward Barnett, parish priest of Richibucto, who has already been attending them. The medical grant having been considered inadequate, the Department decided to increase it from 26 cts. to 56 cts. per head of the population.

Mr. BURPEE (Sunbury). A deputation of Indians from New Brunswick recently visited Ottawa in order to submit their grievance. I desire to enquire what those grievances are, and whether they have been attended to?

Mr. BOWELL. I remember a deputation of Indians from New Brunswick called upon the First Minister and laid before him what they called their grievances. The matter has been referred to the inspector for investigation, and that investigation is now proceeding.

Mr. BURPEE. What were their grievances?

Mr. BOWELL. They were under the impression that they were not properly treated by the superintendent, against whom they lodged complaints, and the matter is now being investigated by another officer.

386. Collection of Revenues—Excise..... $4,845.00

Mr. COSTIGAN. The larger portion of this amount is to provide for additional allowances in Manitoba and the North-West and British Columbia, to compensate for increased cost of living as compared with the other Provinces. This amount is to be distributed by arrangement between the different Departments on a general scale. Those having salaries of $2,000 and upwards are to be allowed 12½ per cent.; salaries $600 to $1,000, 20 per cent.; and lower salaries, 40 per cent. This percentage is not given to any officer who, by reason of his appointment in these Provinces, is now receiving a higher salary than he would have received in the old Provinces of the same rank. In some few cases, officers were appointed at higher salaries owing to being sent there and to the increased cost of living; therefore, these percentages is not given to those officers, but only to those who get the same salaries that are given here.

Mr. BLAKE. A proposal was made some time ago regarding allowances, and some officers in Manitoba, I think, got what were said to be board allowances at a certain rate instead of a percentage. I should suppose it important to have a uniform system, and whichever was preferable should be adopted.

Mr. COSTIGAN. We ask for $3,000 to meet those cases, but these allowances are asked for other Departments to cover what may be termed board allowances, although all are based on this same principle.

Mr. BLAKE. This is the general principle?

Mr. COSTIGAN. It applies to all the Departments out there.

Mr. BOWELL. It was established by the Treasury Board.

Mr. BLAKE. I would like an explanation regarding the Durnford and Bellemare items.

Mr. COSTIGAN. This is one of the old claims which I hope will not create a good deal of discussion, when I inform the House as to its nature.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It is only fifteen years old.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I am sorry that it has remained so long unsettled. These claims have been investigated, and I am quite satisfied that no payment has ever been made of the one-half year's salary to these officers. This was due to the change of Departments just after Confederation. These claims have since been pressed, and before recommending payment to the House, we made enquiries, and our officers have reported that these salaries were never paid to these two men, and that it was only fair that payment should be made.

Mr. BLAKE. This is a most extraordinary statement. The hon. gentleman says it is on account of Confederation

Mr. COSTIGAN. I said it was on account of the changes following Confederation; that is the only way in which I can account for six months' salary remaining unpaid.

Mr. BLAKE. Confederation took place a whole year before this began.

Mr. COSTIGAN. In 1867.

Mr. BLAKE. On the 1st July, 1867; and this half-year is from the 1st of July to the 30th of November, 1868, and these gentlemen were in office before July, 1868.

Mr. COSTIGAN. They were in office before Confederation.

Mr. BLAKE. They were paid monthly before that time?

Mr. COSTIGAN. No; but by the year.

Mr. BLAKE. Were their salaries not payable monthly?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I find from the 1st of July to the 30th of November, which does not indicate half a year, and I presume they were paid monthly.

Mr. BLAKE. How is it? When were these claims made? Surely their salaries were not cut off without some notice, or without some complaint being made at the time. Did they complain in 1868, '69, '70, '71, '72 or '73? How is it that it was not attended to then? This seems most extraordinary, most incomprehensible. Was there any report from any officer? Is there any evidence to be brought before the House to justify this vote?

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I understand something about this vote with reference to Mr. Durnford, as the papers were placed in my hands some time ago, before the Minister took possession of his office. Mr. Durnford, as I understand it, was an officer who, subsequent to this period, became stamp distributor, or stamp officer, for the Province of Quebec. Up to the 15th of November, or between July and November, he also acted as Inland Revenue officer, and then these offices became separate. During this period he collected some very large amounts, over $100,000 of revenue for the Dominion, and at the same time he was acting as stamp distributor for the Province of Quebec. He received no remuneration, and he made a claim for it at the time, but did not persistently press it on this Government, further than to put it in and to write about it several times, because he was of a nervous disposition, and was frightened lest it should interfere with the other office that he held. He died some two or three years ago, and his widow has pressed the claim ever since. The officers of the Department, I am informed by Mr. Miall, made a very close investigation into it, and are satisfied that he never received the salary for that period, and that the statement is perfectly true. He collected for the Dominion a very large amount of revenue, and only received the small salary which he had for performing his provincial duties. That is the story. I got the letters which Mrs. Durnford sent; I asked Mr. Miall about it, and this is the information which he gave me.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course, if the claim was made at the time, it must have been considered at the time. It cannot be presumed that the Government threw the claim of a public servant on one side, into the waste-paper basket. It must have been considered and disallowed.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. It was not disallowed.

Mr. BLAKE. It was not accepted, at any rate.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I saw the papers; but there was no disallowance or consideration.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman was not then in Parliament.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I saw the papers.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman does not know how diligently the Administration of that day performed the duties of their offices. I decline, for the credit of that Administration opposite with which I sat all that time, to assume if possible that they wholly neglected a claim of this kind, and having considered it, they must have decided that it was not fit to be paid. I have some remote recollection, gathered as the hon. gentleman spoke—and thought that the question was familiar—of a question of this kind once being raised, the officer having been a Quebec officer; and I think that something was indicated to this officer, that he must choose which service he would take, and he accepted the Quebec instead of the Dominion service.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I think so.

Mr. BLAKE. I think that something of that kind occurred. Now, the question is, whether this gentleman's main office was not the Quebec office, on what principle is this salary fixed? Was the salary assigned to the office later? or did it belong to the office before they were separated? How does it happen that this discrepancy or difficulty arose in July, 1868? If I rightly recollect the first Government of Canada gave notice to these people that they could not serve the Local Government and them too, and they elected to serve the Local Government. I think, Sir, that we should have the papers before us before being called on to vote this sum of money. I have stated more than once, and I repeat again, that claims fifteen years old, particularly for salaries and allowances, are generally all wrong and without foundation; people press them at the time and they are not granted because they have no foundation. When we are to'd fifteen years afterwards that they are all right, it is probably because the officers concerned in the matter at that time are dead and gone, or that they know nothing about it, and cannot give the explanations upon which the permanent staff of that time or the political staff decided the other way. When these claims are brought down after a lapse of fifteen years, I think that the least we can expect is that we shall have the papers before us which led the Minister to his present conclusion.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I will bring all the papers down on Concurrency.

Mr. BLAKE. In both cases?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. And we will have latitude of discussion?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

388. Weights and Measures$1,390.03

Mr. COSTIGAN. The first item is $500, to provide for necessary increases to certain inspectors and assistants. The next item is a balance of a revote which has lapsed, to pay ex-inspectors sums deducted for superannuation.

Mr. BLAKE. This covers all payments for these officers?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Resolutions to be reported.

Motion agreed to; and (at 1:30 a.m. o'clock) the House adjourned.

BILL INTRODUCED.

The following Bill was introduced and read the first time:—

Bill (No. 119) further to amend the Tariff of duties of Customs.—(Sir Leonard Tilley.)

STATIONERY FURNISHED TO MEMBERS.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell), in moving that the seventh report of the Joint Committee of both Houses on the printing of Parliament, be concurred in, said: If the House will permit me, I will make a brief statement in relation to a matter which has engaged the attention of those hon. members of the Joint Committee who are members of this House. There has been a good deal of complaint made in regard to the stationery supplied to members in the boxes they receive at the commencement of each Session, and the members of the Joint Committee, who are members of this House, through a sub-Committee of their own, examined into this matter and have come to the conclusion, if it be the will of the House, to recommend that in some respects the class of stationery furnished to us be changed, and that it be more in conformity to that furnished to the Senate, though there are some other articles furnished in the Senate boxes which will not be furnished to us. I may say that the ordinary folio post, the ordinary letter paper, will be abandoned altogether, and instead of it, we shall have note-paper of a somewhat better quality—paper that we can write upon and turn over, without danger of its breaking; and in one or two other respects we think the change will be advantageous. I ought to say, perhaps, that it would involve some slight additional cost—not very much; but the Committee who considered the matter this morning, came to the conclusion that it would be better to go to that slight additional cost and have paper that is really suitable for use. The small boxes which we have now cost, I believe, $1.65 each; the boxes which the Senate have now, and which it is proposed to have here, will cost not more than $2. This is a matter that could not be referred to the Joint Committee, because those members of the Committee who are members of the Senate have nothing whatever to do with this matter, it being one of internal arrangement, and we thought this the only way it could be brought to the attention of the House so that an order could be given by you, Mr. Speaker, to the head of the stationery department, and by mentioning it here, if there was no opposition to it, then the list as prepared by the sub-Committee could be furnished. There is also another matter which I desire to mention, and it is in relation to the supply of stationery to members while in Session. We have discovered that the present system is abused, I do not mean to say that it is abused by members, but that it is open to very great abuse; and the proposal that is made is, that each of the pages be furnished with a small pad and pencil, and when he is sent for stationery the member shall take the trouble—as it will take but a moment—to write the order and sign it with his name, so that the head of the stationery department will have some guarantee that the paper that is sent for is, at any rate, intended for a member. It has been discovered that in some cases paper has been obtained in the name of members that really was not for members at all, and it is thought this plan will correct that abuse. I think that, perhaps, we may save as much in connection with the stationery by adopting this plan as the extra cost of the stationery to be supplied to members at the commencement of the Session. The rest of the report refers simply to the printing of certain documents.

Motion agreed to.

DEEPENING THE CHANNEL BETWEEN MONTREAL AND QUEBEC.

Mr. DESJARDINS. Yesterday I had the honor of enquiring from the Government, whether it was the intention to take up the question of the deepening of the channel between Montreal and Quebec this year, and the hon. Minister of Public Works asked me to defer my question until to-day. With the permission of the House, I would, therefore, ask the hon. Minister if he is now ready to answer my question.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In answer to my hon. friend, I may say that the Government have taken into consideration the memorials presented by the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal, asking to be authorized to continue the deepening of the channel between Montreal and Quebec to a depth of 27½ feet. This matter having been considered, resolutions will be submitted to this House by which the Government will ask to be authorized to pay from time to time, to the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal, a sum yearly not exceeding $900,000, which is the amount that the Harbor Commissioners, through their Chief Engineer, declare this deepening will cost, the interest to be at the rate of 4 per cent. per annum. This is coupled with the condition that before paying that amount to the Commissioners the Governor in Council shall be satisfied that the calculations, statements and estimates of the engineer of the Commissioners are correct; and, therefore, a Commission will be appointed of two officers of the Government, that is to say, Mr. Page, the Chief Engineer of the Department of Railways and Canals, and Mr. Perley, Chief Engineer of the Public Works Department, to certify to those calculations, estimates and statements of the engineer of the Harbor Commissioners.

Mr. DESJARDINS. Do I understand that the Harbor Commissioners will be charged 4 per cent. on the amount of money advanced ?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The interest will be 4 per cent. on $900,000.

SUBSIDIES TO RAILWAY COMPANIES.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

completed in comparison with the whole work undertaken, to be established by the report of the said Minister.

He said: The district that is proposed to be opened up by this Baie des Chaleurs Railway is one that is well known to those who have paid any attention to the subject, to be very remote from the line of the Intercolonial Railway, and the communication with it to be exceedingly difficult; and we believe the opening up of that section of country will not only facilitate the trade and business of a very large area, but by giving facilities of communication with the Intercolonial will also bring a large volume of traffic to that road, which otherwise would not reach it. This line is proposed to start from a point on the Intercolonial Railway, at or near Metapediac station, and run thence in an easterly direction along the north shore of the Restigouche River and Baie des Chaleurs to Paspebiac, a distance of 100 miles. It is contemplated to extend the line, not only to Paspebiac, but a distance of some eighty miles further, to Gaspé Bassin. The resources of this district are very considerable. It is a very finely timbered country, and the product of the fisheries is very large. The hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Fortin), who has given much attention to the resources of that section of the country, has prepared from the Trade Returns of the Province of Quebec, for 1881, a series of tables which show a very large product from the fisheries in that district. The hon. gentleman has shown that on the south shore of the Province of Quebec there are no less than 30,382 barrels of bait put up annually, 22,498 of salt salmon and herring, 88,151 cwt. of cod, haddock and ling, 530,297 lbs. of fresh salmon, 38,834 gallons of cod and whale oil, and, in the immediate district of Paspebiac, there were 40 vessels, 1,279 fishing boats, and 3,579 fishermen employed. A large portion of the catch is dispatched by sailing craft to the United States and other foreign ports, whereas when the railway is constructed it is believed that the major part of the catch will find its way to Quebec, Montreal and the western parts of Canada and the North-West by rail; and not only so, but supplies from the western portions of the country will come down as return freight. The section of country of which I am speaking has not only valuable forests but an agricultural district, which is very inviting to settlers, and it is believed that the construction of this railway will greatly conduce to the development of its resources. The construction of the road is estimated to cost $2,590,000, and with an equipment of the value of $100,000, the total cost will be $2,690,000. The Province of Quebec, has, I believe, given a subsidy to this line of railway of 10,000 acres of land per mile along the route so far as available in that section of the country. This district is very imperfectly served at present by steam communication, which is provided, of course, only during the season when navigation is open, and when navigation is not open the district is not served at all. When navigation is open communication is maintained by a steamer, which we are obliged to subsidize to the extent of $12,500 a year. It will be at once seen, therefore, that not only will the service be performed much better, and throughout the entire year, provided the company are able to raise the large additional amount of capital required, but the subsidy of $320,000 will render unnecessary the old subsidy of $12,500 a year, which, at 4 per cent., represents a capital of over $300,000. It will not be necessary to grant the subsidy of $12,500 a year, which we are now obliged to give, when the road is extended to Gaspé; and so soon as the railway reaches Paspebiac, even supposing steam communication to be maintained between that port and Gaspé, it will be only for a distance of eighty miles and will be performed at a small cost. And I trust that the company will be able to go on, and at no distant day extend the road to Gaspé; and, as I have said before, the country will be developed, it will be opened up for settlement, and these additional facilities will be given, while a great volume of important traffic in connection with this enormous development of the fisheries of that section of the country will be brought over a considerable portion of the Intercolonial Railway, and be rendered infinitely more valuable than at present, by reason of the rapid despatch with which fresh fish especially will be sent from those districts into the western parts of Canada and the United States. I do not think it necessary to say more to the House, in order to show them that if this important work can be performed for a subsidy of $320,000, which, of course, will reach over a number of years during construction, we shall have promoted the general interests of the country to a much larger extent than the amount of subsidy which we are called upon to provide for this purpose; and as a valuable feeder to the Intercolonial, we may expect that so far from this subsidy costing us anything, taken in connection with other important advantages in the development of the country to which I have referred, it will be of very great service from every point of view from which it can be looked at. Then it is proposed to provide a subsidy for the Caraquet Railway Company for thirty-six miles of railway from a point near Bathurst to Caraquet in New Brunswick, not exceeding $3,200 a mile, and in the whole $115,200. I may say to the House that this is also another branch of the Intercolonial Railway. During the time that the Intercolonial was being located and constructed the House will remember that Mr. Fleming brought forward a project of reaching the sea by constructing this branch of forty miles from the Intercolonial down to Shippigan, and that this project was viewed with very great favor by a large portion of the press, and by a great many people in this country. The Government made a survey of the line, and found that it could be constructed at a comparatively moderate expense, and that there were no serious difficulties in construction; but it has not been proceeded with as a Government work; a company however, is organised for a purpose of constructing a line from the Intercolonial to the harbor of Shippigan, where navigation is reached; and they have also obtained from the Government of New Brunswick a subsidy of $3,000 a mile for forty-five miles from the Intercolonial to Shippigan. They have applied to this Government for additional aid, and after having given to the subject the most careful consideration, we feel that we would be warranted in asking Parliament to provide $3,200 a mile for thirty-six miles, which is the shortest distance that will take them from the Intercolonial to tide water where they will be able to reach navigation. This line also runs through a very interesting section of country that is susceptible of great development, and we believe that it will afford, in the same way as the Baie des Chaleurs line, to which I have already turned the attention of the House, means for enabling the fishermen of that portion of New Brunswick to have infinitely greater advantages than they have at present, and increase the value of their catch, because, as is in other instances, they will be able rapidly to send fresh fish at a small cost by rail to the western portion of Canada, and to the various markets of the United States. This line will also so develop that section of the country, and so increase the receipts on the Intercolonial by giving us additional volume of traffic, that we believe it will make an ample return to the Government for the subsidy which the House is invited to give. I have no doubt that if any further information is required with reference to either of these lines, my hon. friends, who represent the line provided for in Quebec, and my hon. friend the hon. member for Gloucester, with relation to the Caraquet Railway, will be able to satisfy the House that this is a wise and judicious appropriation of public money looked at in the light of the commercial results which are to occur in the increased development of the country, and in the increased volume of traffic over the Intercolonial, which has cost this country so large a sum of money, and which it is desirable should be rendered as useful as possible to this country by promoting the construction of these subsidiary lines and branches that will throw traffic into it. The next item is the Gatineau Valley Railway Company. For the first fifty mile section, from Hull station, in the Province of Quebec, the subsidy not to exceed $3,200 a mile, and in the whole $160,000. Now, I may say that it has been conclusively proved to the Government, what is known to many hon. members of the House—that lying here to the north on the other side of the Ottawa River, is a great country capable of being formed at no distant date into a great Province. There is here, in fact, another Province of Quebec, which yesterday was comparatively unknown, and comparatively unpeopled, but a country that the closest and most careful investigation proves to be of enormous extent, and of great fertility. Now, I need not say to the House, that every member of the House, every hon. gentleman who has given this subject any consideration at all, that it is not only of the most vital importance to Canada that we should attract immigrants from the Old World, but it is of still greater importance to Canada that we should retain our own population within our own country. It is known that, for whatever reason I am unable to say, the great North-West has never presented the attractions to our Lower Canadian friends that it has to the great Province of Ontario and the other Provinces. From some cause, some indisposition to go far from home, or for whatever reason which I am unable to state, we do know it to be a fact, that the greatest reluctance has been shown by the inhabitants of the old Province of Quebec to leave their own Province; and that when they do leave it, they go as short a distance from it as possible, which takes them across the boundary to the south of us, where they become citizens of the United States. If, by developing this great section of country lying on the other side of the Ottawa, this great and fertile country with unlimited resources in the way of forests, to be thus opened up, with magnificent lumber resources, with a soil that is capable of giving a most abundant return to those who cultivate it, with enormous mineral resources, the development of which is calculated to produce great national wealth in that locality—I say, if that be the case, I am satisfied that the House will say: “We are justified in treating these two lines of railway; first, the Gatineau Valley Railway, running 127 miles away to the north from Hull station, with a branch to the Gatineau, and another from St. Jérôme intersecting it away in the interior of the country, on the line which is ultimately intended to be extended to the Mattawan. I say, that from the information we have received as to the character of the country to be opened up, I believe the House will consider these two subsidies of $160,000 each, or $3,200 a mile for fifty miles on each of these lines, a wise and judicious appropriation of public money; and the last few years has given the most abundant evidence that there is no section of this country which we could assist in opening and developing, which is more likely to accomplish the great result of keeping within the boundaries of the Province of Quebec, that portion of its population which otherwise, if disinclined to go to our own North-West, might find attractions in the country south of us. I may be permitted to read a few words from a communication addressed to the Government by the Montreal and Western Railway these remarks being as applicable to the country traversed by the Gatineau Railway as that through which the other line is intended to be constructed, the intention being that the two roads shall intersect each other at a distance of about 100 miles to the north. It is stated in relation to that country:

“The tract of country which our railway proposes to traverse can be confidently stated as equal in fertility to the best parts of the Province of Quebec. It is covered as a rule with hardwood, maple, elm, oak, birch, &c., a sure sign of a rich soil. Already a strong current of colonization has set in through this tract of country; over 10,000 souls have established themselves there since five or six years, and twenty five townships and parishes have been partly settled. But this movement cannot continue without the aid of a railway. The last settlers are now at eighty miles from St. Jérôme, the nearest railway station; they cannot be expected to go any further if they have not railway facilities. Besides, it is necessary to increase the width of the inhabited portions of the Province, in order to ensure in the future and maintain for ever the importance of the route of the River St. Lawrence as the main commercial highway of the Dominion.

"At 100 miles back of the Ottawa River lies an immense territory of unsurpassed fertility, a Province in itself, and from that territory the whole of the traffic created will converge towards the St. Lawrence route and through no other on account of its geographical position. For the populous district of Montreal, containing nearly a half a million of souls, it is the only territory left open for the surplus of its population. I am happy to state that the efforts of Rev. F. Labelle and others have succeeded in directing towards these new and prosperous settlements a great many of our countrymen who would otherwise have gone to the United States."

I may state that the Rev. Father Labelle, a gentleman known to many hon. members of this House as a patriot of the finest type, and as a whole-souled enthusiast, who throws himself into any work in which he may be engaged with such ardor as to inspire confidence in the men with whom he comes in contact, thus leading them on successfully into the most profitable careers—this gentleman has devoted the last few years of his life to peopling this large, fertile, productive section of the country. I am almost afraid to state the number of people he has sent into that country, but I think I may venture to say that he has taken at least 10,000 people within the last three or four years into this previously almost unknown country. These people are making happy and prosperous homes for themselves in what was a desert and wilderness. As he fills one part of the district he goes on to farther outposts; but he has reached a point where, he says, a railway is absolutely necessary for the prosecution of the important and valuable work in which he is engaged. I believe that if these 10,000 people had not gone there they would either have been struggling with poverty in their former homes, or seeking prosperity in another country. I believe there is no member of the House who will not regard such a work as that as of the greatest possible importance to Canada, and that the resources of such a country should be developed as only railway communication can develop it. The amount of assistance proposed is only $3,200 per mile, but it is believed that this small subsidy, with the subsidies given by the Province of Quebec, will be found sufficient to open up that country, and create out of that untrodden wilderness a region which will compare very well with some of our existing Provinces. The proposition is to give to the Gatineau Valley Railway Company for the first fifty mile section of their railway, from Hull station, in the Province of Quebec, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $160,000; and to the Montreal and Western Railway Company, for the first fifty mile section of their railway, out of St. Jérôme, in the Province of Quebec, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $160,000. Then, Sir, it is proposed to give to the Great American and European Short Line Railway Company, for eighty miles of their railway from Canso to Louisburg, or Sydney, in the Province of Nova Scotia, a subsidy not exceeding $3,200 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $256,000. I may say that this is for the purpose of extending the existing railway system of Canada from the Strait of Canso through the Island of Cape Breton to Sydney and Louisburg, two ports which are now connected with a short line of railway—the only railway of any length existing on the Island of Cape Breton. The construction of this eighty miles will extend the great inter-oceanic system of railway communication to which we have been devoting so much time and energy for the last few years, from Port Moody, on the shores of the Pacific, to the easternmost port in the Dominion of Canada.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

I need not refer to the great volume of shipping which is now pouring into the harbor of Sydney as stated by the senior member for the county of Cape Breton last night, and there is only a comparatively small portion of the year when it is inaccessible to the ocean. The port of Louisburg with which, as I have stated, it is connected by rail, is open at all seasons of the year, and by that port we have the shortest route to Liverpool, as the distance by way of Louisburg is 200 miles shorter than by Halifax, the nearest port to England we now have in Canada. This will make almost an air line of communication—the most direct line of communication—connecting with the Canadian Pacific Railway at Montreal, running by the Grand Trunk system from Montreal to Sherbrooke, there taking the International Railway to the boundaries of the State of Maine, and then striking New Brunswick at the Mattawamkeag, or in that neighborhood, thence on to St. John, thus forming the shortest line of communication which can be obtained between the western portions of Canada and the Atlantic ports. This House has occasionally, and very naturally, been agitated on the question of a winter port for Canada. A good deal of excitement was raised in the country a short time ago, at the danger, as I felt it, and as I believe every good Canadian would feel it, of having the Atlantic terminus of that great Canadian Pacific Railway at Portland or Boston; and, Sir, it was very natural that anxiety should be excited when everybody knew the great advantage the ports of Boston and Portland had over Halifax or any Canadian port, as the terminus of that great trans-continental line of railway, for which we have had to make such great exertions, and have had to provide so largely from the public Treasury. I say that there is no intelligent man in this country, there is no patriotic Canadian, but would deplore the location of the Atlantic terminus of our great inter-oceanic line of railway at Boston or Portland. We have the most friendly feelings towards the great nation to the south of us; but much as we respect that country, we love our own more; and it was apparently a great misfortune that we should be handicapped in our efforts to make Halifax a great Atlantic port, by the shorter distance to the ocean by way of Boston or Portland. But with this line of communication—taking the Grand Trunk to Sherbrooke, taking the International Company's line from Sherbrooke to the boundary of the State of Maine, crossing the State of Maine, and striking New Brunswick at Mattawamkeag, or in that neighborhood, we can reach St. Andrews, a port of the Province of New Brunswick, thus bringing Montreal the great commercial centre of the country, and Liverpool nearer together by a Canadian port; or going on to St. John, we can reach Liverpool by way of that fine port with a shorter line from Montreal than that from Montreal and Portland or Montreal and Boston. When I state that to the House, I think I have given abundant evidence to show the wisdom of the small subsidy proposed for the International Company's line from Sherbrooke to the boundary of the State of Maine—and I may say that it will open up one of the finest districts of country to be opened up in the Province of Quebec, a district that will compare favorably with that of which I have already spoken on the other side of the Ottawa. That company have pushed their line to the boundary of the State of Maine, with the exception of fifteen miles; but a portion of the road is laid with iron rails, which are pretty thoroughly expended, and it is proposed to give that railway a subsidy of $3,200 a mile to enable them to lay with steel rails the portion of their road already constructed with iron rails, and the portion yet unconstructed, for a distance of forty-nine miles, altogether, thus forming a link of this inter-oceanic communication that will enable us to reach the ocean by the harbors of St. John and St. Andrews, by as direct a line, though not quite so short, as by the port of Boston; and taking into consideration the distance between those ports and Liverpool, it will enable us, beyond the shadow of a doubt, to have the terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and of all the railways of Canada—the winter and freight terminus—not at a foreign port to the south of us, but at a port in our own country. The distance from Montreal to Halifax will be shortened by 160 miles by the line I have referred to. Then, a subsidy is provided for an extension of the railway system of Nova Scotia, towards the Island of Cape Breton. A subsidy, composed of fifty miles of completed railway, between Truro and Pictou, was handed over by the late Government to the Government of Nova Scotia, to enable that Government to secure the construction of the line towards the Island of Cape Breton. I hoped, and all of us hoped, when that subsidy was given, that it would accomplish more than it did accomplish; but when the contract came to be made, it was found that the Government were obliged to give an additional subsidy, amounting, I think, to something like $750,000, to secure the construction of the road from Pictou, or New Glasgow, on to the Strait of Canso. It was hoped that this would carry the line further; but it has not done so, and arrangements have been made by the late and the present Governments of Nova Scotia to acquire that eighty miles of railway, leaving eighty miles to be constructed in the Island of Cape Breton, which everybody knows will be of great importance to this country at no distant day, in forming the most direct and rapid route between this country and the Mother Country; and knowing, as we do, that a great saving of time and distance will be effected for the transfer of mails and passengers by extending this road to the harbor of Louisburg, we believe that Parliament, in carrying out and extending the policy of having the most direct line across this continent from ocean to ocean that it is possible to obtain, and of having the most western portion of our country and the Pacific trade brought as near to the Mother Country and by as rapid and direct line of communication as possible, will be prepared to approve of the small subsidy to the International Company, forming the link on this end of the road, and this subsidy of $3,200 a mile to secure the construction of that eighty miles, as I trust it will be secured, from Canso to the harbor of Louisburg. I do not think it will be necessary for me to detain the House at this stage of the Session, to speak longer on this question, great and important as it is; but I will say that it would be difficult to overrate the value to Canada of obtaining this great route from ocean to ocean, and it would be difficult to overrate the importance, from every point of view, of opening up the Island of Cape Breton. The Island of Cape Breton is cut off by the Strait of Canso, although there is no ice, and no difficulty of maintaining communication across that strait by means of a boat—and, perhaps, at no distant day, by a bridge or a tunnel, although that is not proposed at present. It is at present cut off by the Strait of Canso from railway communication with the rest of the country, and it will be impossible to overrate the importance of the development of the Island of Cape Breton, of the construction of that eighty miles of railway. Independent of enormous coal fields, independent of the valuable fisheries, it is known that Cape Breton possesses not only a large portion of good soil adapted to cultivation and development, but also mineral resources of various kinds that only await the facilities railroads alone can give in order to cause the Island to spring forward, as I am sure it will, with unwonted rapidity. I will not say more with relation to this particular subject. Then there is the Miramichi Valley Railway Company. This company have projected a line from Fredericton across to the Intercolonial Railway in the Province of New Brunswick, striking the Intercolonial at Miramichi. They have obtained a subsidy of $3,000 a mile from the New Brunswick Legislature, but I did not feel warranted, under the circumstances, when they applied for a subsidy, in asking Parliament for a subsidy for that distance; but I believe that the large timber districts that will be opened up and developed by the line, and the opening up of the resources of that section of the country, fully warrants us in asking Parliament to appropriate $3,200 a mile for a distance not exceeding thirty-two miles, to form a branch of the Intercolonial. I believe that the lumber that will be brought on to the Intercolonial Railway, and from a source of increased traffic for the road will fully warrant us in asking Parliament for this appropriation. The hon. member for Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) who has given this subject most careful and exhaustive attention, who, as every person knows, is so intensely alive to the development of every section of this country, but more particularly the Province of New Brunswick, and still more particularly the county of Northumberland, will be able to give you more convincing reasons why this small subsidy should be granted. For a branch from Petitcodiac to Havelock Corner, N.B., we ask a subsidy of $3,200 a mile for twelve miles, or $38,400. This will open up an important section of country not hitherto opened by railway. In reference to these matters we are only following out the policy entered upon by our predecessors. The House will remember that my hon. predecessor adopted the policy of giving to parties, who would provide the means of constructing branches to the Intercolonial, rails to lay the track. With reference to the Miramichi Valley Railway and this short line to Havelock the same policy is carried out; and I may say that when I was sitting on the other side of the House, that policy, when introduced by my predecessor, had my hearty sanction and co-operation. I believed it was a wise policy, that the Intercolonial having cost the country so much should be made the means of developing the country as fast as possible. No one looked for a return of the money expended in its construction as a national line of communication; but this large sum having been expended, we all felt that every reasonable effort that could be made by giving them comparatively small subsidies to aid in the construction of branches to the Intercolonial was a sound and judicious policy. The Napanee, Tamworth and Quebec Railway Company applied to the Government for a subsidy in providing rails for the twenty-eight miles of their railway that they graded from Napanee to Tamworth. That road will connect the Bay of Quinté, which it taps at Napanee, and the waters of the lakes and the St. Lawrence, where it taps those waters at Napanee, with the interior line of railway now in course of construction, called the Ontario and Quebec Railway. The Government sent an engineer to report on this road, and having found that not only was it going to be an important factor in the development of that section, but that in addition to the railway facilities it would give, it would open up a most valuable water-power, and give a great stimulus to the manufacturing industries of the country, we believe we would be warranted in asking a small subsidy and applying the same principle as had been applied by the late Government on the branches of the Intercolonial Railway, of furnishing the means of laying the twenty-eight miles of track they had graded with steel rails. Then there is the appropriation for the Quebec and Lake St. John Railway, which is substantially the appropriation asked for each year. In submitting to Parliament last year the appropriation for the railway, I made an error of twenty-five miles in the distance. I asked Parliament to give that road an amount that would be necessary to provide $3,200 a mile from St. Raymond to Lake St. John, and that is all that is asked now. The distance between these points was stated to me correctly by the company, and the error I find was mine. The distance covers twenty-five miles more than that covered by the resolutions of last year, and the $80,000 is additional to the subsidy provided last year, but the whole subsidy only covers the road between the two points stated. Last year, I explained to the House the importance of that Lake St.

John district. I showed that all the explorations had shown there was a very fertile district lying around Lake St. John which this road would open up, and that this road might be regarded to a large extent as an extension of the Intercolonial up to Lake St. John, because you had only to cross the river at Quebec to enable you to make connection with the Lake St. John Railway, and carry it up to that vast, fertile, wheat-bearing district around Lake St. John which it is most desirable should be opened up. Then, Sir, I come last to the railway from Gravenhurst to Callander, 110 miles, a subsidy not exceeding $6,000 per mile, nor exceeding in the whole $660,000; and this, as the notice paper shows, is in addition to the subsidy granted by the Act 45 Vic, chap. 14, the subsidy taken last year. Those hon. gentlemen who were here a year ago will remember that on that occasion I stated that this was really implementing a pledge given by the leader of the late Government when he became leader of the Government. It will be remembered that that hon. gentleman, before going to the country, issued, as he was bound to do, a manifesto, stating what the policy of the Government, was and how they proposed to deal with the great question of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and in their manifesto he stated that a part of the policy of the Government was to subsidize lines of railway connecting with the Quebec and Ontario systems. Hon. members will remember that when that hon. gentleman, at a later stage in the Session of 1874, brought down his Canadian Pacific Railway policy for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and when he spoke of the subsidies that he proposed to grant to these lines of railway to connect the Canadian Pacific at Callander with the Ontario and Quebec systems of railway, I interrupted the hon. gentleman, and asked him, as will be seen by reference to the report of his speech at the time: "Do you men to subsidize one line or two lines? Is it to be a line to connect with the Quebec system?"—for he was explaining that, and the hon. gentleman's answer was: "Two lines." Now, this subsidy provides for the Gravenhurst and Callander section, 110 miles of railway, and is intended to fulfil the pledge that hon. gentleman made previous to the Elections, and in Parliament after the Elections, that not only was there to be a direct line of railway communication by the subsidy to the Canada Central Railway, but there was also to be a line of communication from Callander to connect with the Ontario system of railways. If the hon. gentleman had not said that, if he had made no reference to the subject, I do not believe there is a gentleman on either side of this House who will say that not only is it fair and just to make this provision to connect with the Ontario system, as the Canada Central subsidy, which was given by the late Government, enabled us to connect the Quebec system with the Canadian Pacific Railway, but that, apart altogether from any question of pledges, apart altogether from any question of even-handed justice, I do not believe there is a gentleman on either side of this House who will not say that, looking at this great question in the light of the importance of the development of the North-West, it is essential, to the completion of our system, that we should have the most direct, the most rapid, and the most independent line of communication between the great Canadian Pacific Railway at Callander, and the great commercial centres at Toronto, Hamilton, and all those towns on the lakes. Looking, Sir, to the importance of the advantage in competition in prices in the development of that great North-West country where for many long years to come you will have a great agricultural population making enormous demands upon the manufacturing industries of these old Provinces, where, for many long years to come, from the very nature of the country and the manufacturing advantages that are enjoyed in these old Provinces, an immense trade will grow up. I say it is of the most vital consequence, in my judgment, to the development of the great North-West, that you should have the great commercial centres in Ontario and Quebec connected with the North-West by the most rapid, easy and cheap line of communication you can obtain. I may be told that we had an offer to construct this line of railway by the Grand Trunk Railway Company practically for a subsidy of $6,000 a mile last year. Sir, I frankly admit that this is the case. I believe that to-day the subsidy voted by this Parliament last year would enable the Grand Trunk Railway Company to connect their system of railway with Callander; but after looking at this question in all its bearings, after looking at it in the light of the great importance to the country of having the connecting link between the commercial centres of Ontario and the North-West at the Callander Junction, we came to the conclusion that we would come here and ask for that which would be necessary to secure the construction of this line of railway as an independent line of communication, that we would ask for this additional subsidy, satisfied that Parliament, in its wisdom, would feel that it was infinitely better that we should, by this increased appropriation of $660,000 more, secure that as an independent link and line of communication between the railway system of Ontario and the Canadian Pacific Railway. That is the reason of placing this subsidy in the resolutions that will, I say it advisedly, secure the immediate construction of this important link of railway communication, completing and implementing the promise that was held out to Ontario, that the Ontario lines of railway should be connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway as the Quebec lines of railway were. This subsidy will not only secure that, but it will secure it in a way that will enable us to maintain it for the Government. We shall not give a dollar of that subsidy except on terms and conditions that will secure one of two things. I may be told that it is impossible to secure that by a line of railway, that any property held by any great corporation shall not be altered in its character and lose its independence; I may be told that, and I have no answer to give, except to say that the history of the past shows that it is all but impossible to prevent those things taking place; but I say this: We will secure one of two things—that either this line of railway shall be maintained for all time to come as independent of the two great railway systems of this country, the Canadian Pacific Railway on the one hand, and the Grand Trunk Railway system on the other, or we will take care to secure that, before a single dollar of this money is obtained by any company, such security shall be given; that when it ceases to be an independent line of communication, the company who obtains the subsidy and expends it in constructing the road, the moment that occurs this subsidy shall be chargeable, and that we shall have the first lien upon this road, and that we shall have, in addition to that, an additional lien upon the best security that can be given upon the road of any company with which it becomes incorporated or connected; so that if at any time it loses its independence, the Government will be in a position to return back to the Treasury of the country the money that has thus been appropriated, the two sums of $660,000 each, the amount voted last year and the amount voted this year. I submit these resolutions to the House with every confidence that they will be regarded by the House as they are regarded by the Government, as justified in the best interests of the country, as calculated to develop the various sections of this country at a smaller cost and greater advantage to the country than any similar expenditure of public money would develop them; and that one and all of these subsidies will be found to make the most valuable return to the Treasury by the development of trade and the increase of commerce—I say to a greater extent than any other appropriation of public money to the same amount that could be provided in any other way.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Mr. BLAKE. When the hon. gentleman brought down, towards the end of last Session, a set of resolutions granting aid to various railways, I stated that it was his duty to have preceded that submission to the House by laying on the Table at much earlier dates papers and materials which might enable us, by a study of them, to form some judgment as to the merits of his proposals. The hon. gentleman said that the custom was, when papers were of public interest, to move for them; but we could not be aware that those papers were wanted, that they existed, that they would be called for with reference to any deliberate judgment of ours to be asked this Session until the hon. gentleman's proposals were on the Table, and, therefore, the answer of the hon. gentleman was wholly unsatisfactory at that time. I reiterated the demand that, as a rule, founded upon the practice of Parliament, and founded also upon common sense, and common reason, proposals of this kind should be preceded by the submission of the papers upon which the judgment of the Government was founded. These resolutions of the hon. gentleman was printed for the first time, as well as I remember, in the Votes and Proceedings of yesterday, and I at once placed upon the notice paper a motion—which I knew could not be reached for the Government have appropriated all the days, but which I placed there to give an indication, at the earliest moment, of a renewal of my plan—a motion for all papers and correspondence with reference to grants to all these railways. The hon. gentleman, to-day, has made his statement, and he has told us, in almost every instance, of the prolonged enquiry, the careful investigation, the many sources of information from which he drew, in coming, himself and his colleagues, to a conclusion as to the merits of each one of these proposals. But the hon. gentleman did not vouchsafe to give to members of Parliament, before they are called on to decide whether the proposals be just or not, that information, those papers, those materials which were the painful results of his long labor in coming to a conclusion on those subjects. The hon. gentleman has made a speech in which he has condescended to give some particulars with respect to some of these railway grants, with that lavish hand with which he is accustomed to fling out such assurances of the toil, the labor, the care, the patience which he took to reach a just conclusion on this matter. But members of Parliament are bound to form conclusions for themselves, and they are entitled to the materials upon which such conclusions can be formed, and, therefore, I repeat that it was the duty of the hon. gentleman, if he contemplated advancing these propositions to Parliament this Session, to have preceded that step by submitting to us the materials on which to form a judgment. We often hear in this House, and elsewhere, of the vast extent of the country whose concerns at this moment engage our attention; and this Session the hon. gentleman has submitted a map, which conveys, in a very striking manner, the extent of the territory of this country, in which the Province in which we are, or at all events the undisputed territory of that Province, appears almost like a speck in the whole area of magnificent distances which comprise the Dominion. Each of us, I suppose, masters to some extent, as it is his duty to master, the geographical configurations of the particular Province from which he hails. Some of us, I daresay, but I cannot speak for more than myself, have but imperfect information, even with respect to our own Province; but although it may be our duty—I quite agree that it is a high duty—to familiarize ourselves as far as may be with the conditions, circumstances, territory, area and resources of the other Provinces, still we are not able, speaking generally, without some particular knowledge of the particular territory, to speak of these proposals in detail, and I am almost ashamed to confess, as I must confess, that I do not possess such knowledge of the peculiar conditions of the country, and the lay of the land,
