House of Commons Debates

FIRST SESSION, FIFTH PARLIAMENT.

Volume XIV.

2nd Vol. of the Session.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

FRIDAY, 20th April, 1883.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PETITION FROM THE CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. ABBOTT. I presented, a few moments ago, a petition from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, asking to be permitted to present a petition for a Private Bill, notwithstanding that the time limited for that purpose has expired. The circumstances under which this petition has become necessary, are, that this morning an agreement was executed between the executive of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and the three lines of railway forming a continuous line between Montreal and the terminus of the Credit Valley Railway, by which these companies agree to lease themselves to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, on terms mentioned in this agreement. This agreement having only been executed this morning, it was, of course, impossible to take earlier proceedings for the purpose. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company has no power to execute such lease; whether it would be proper, if it should have the power, or not, will, of course, be a subject of discussion when the Bill comes up; and I now move, as I am told is the correct mode, that the petition so presented this day for leave to permit a petition for this Bill, be now read, and that it be referred to the Committee on Standing Orders.

Motion agreed to.

THE ORANGE INCORPORATION BILL.

Mr. ROYAL. Before the Orders of the Day are called, I am requested to correct a statement made by the hon. member for Hastings (Mr. White) when moving the second reading of the Orange Incorporation Bill. The hon. member stated that His Grace Archbishop Taché, of St. Boniface, had, last year, when a similar Bill was before the Local House, advised the Catholic members of the Legislature not to oppose the Bill. His Grace only advised the members not to raise, or not to lend themselves to any acrimonious or useless discussion.

HARBOR OF PICTOU.

Mr. McLELAN moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolution:—

That it is expedient further to amend the Act 36 Vic., chap. 63, respecting the Harbor of Pictou, by exempting vessels exceeding forty and not exceeding eighty tons register, from the payment of harbor dues more than twice in any calendar year, whatever be the number of times for entering the harbor.

Resolution reported.

Mr. McLELAN introduced Bill (No. 108) further to amend the Act respecting the Harbor of Pictou.

Bill read the first time.

• Mr. FORTIN. Before this Bill is read the second time, I beg to ask the hon. Minister of Marine if he will introduce a similar measure for ports where similar dues are exacted. I may tell him that, in Quebec or Montreal, dues are paid by all classes of vessels, and small vessels when they enter each of those ports pay dues every time. I think small vessels, in view of the fact that the improvements which are going on in the navigation between Montreal and Quebec, do not affect them at all beneficially, they should be exempt from paying every time they come into port. If they pay twice a year that should be enough. I hope the hon. Minister will study the question; and if he finds that in any port in the Dominion, fishing and coasting vessels pay more than twice a year, he will introduce a general measure so as to make matters equal for everyone.

Mr. McLELAN. I will give the matter attention, and will carry out the suggestion as far as possible, if it does not interfere too much with other interests.

STANDING ORDERS.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved that, in accordance with the recommendation of the Select Standing Committee on Banking and Commerce, and the Select Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines, the following resolution be made one of the Standing Orders of this House:—

All Private Bills for Acts of incorporation shall be so framed as to incorporate by reference the clauses of the General Acts relating to the details to be provided for by such Bills;—special grounds shall be established for any proposed departure from this principle, or for the introduction of other provisions as to such details, and a note shall be appended to the Bill indicating the provisions thereof, in which the General Act is proposed to be departed from;—Bills which are not framed in accordance with this rule, shall be re-cast by the promoters, and reprinted at their expense, before any Committee passes upon the clauses, and the substance of this Rule shall be published by the Clerk in conformity with the terms of the 50th Rule.

He said: The object of this motion is to simplify and diminish the work of the Standing Committee. The Railway Committee and the Banking Committee are kept at work a great deal longer than they should, because the Bills brought before them are not so framed as to facilitate the work. Every promoter of a Bill wants special clauses in his Bill, and declares he has not had time to look at similar Bills already accepted by Parliament, and he will come before the Committee with the measure containing the same objectionable provisions, sometimes in two or three different clauses. The Railway Committee comprises no less than 140 members, and it is because they think that work should be done by the promoter before the Bill is brought before the Committee, that it is now proposed that his resolution shall be made part of the Standing Orders of the House.

Mr. LANDRY (Translation). Mr. Speaker: I desire to call the attention of the House, on the occasion of this motion, to the necessity of having the Rules and Regulations printed anew. I would suggest that the Federal Act be incorporated in the book, as it used to be in 1866 and before that time. At the present time, we have nothing but the Rules of the House, and when we want to consult the Federal Act, we are obliged to go to the Library to get the volume. I think it would be proper also, since we are to continue the book, to incorporate in it the Rules and Proceedings of the Senate.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I am gratified to observe that the hon. Minister of Public Works has brought in this motion. It is not very often we have the pleasure of agreeing. I think, however, the hon. gentleman agrees with me, because the proposal now before the House has already been submitted from this side of the House, and was suggested many years ago. It is the first step in the right direction. No doubt many reforms may yet be adopted in the proceedings of the House, and this, I think, will be entering the thin end of the wedge. Now that we have begun the work of reform, we may go on quietly and smoothly, and perhaps arrive at a better mode of procedure. There is at present great loss of time, and I draw the attention of the Government especially to the loss of time occasioned in regard to Private Bills. These should be in the hands of the hon. Minister of Justice, or the law officers of the Crown, at the opening of the Session, so that the drudgery work of the Committee should be, to a certain extent, lightened. I suggested this course many years ago, and I suggest its adoption now.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not like to take feathers belonging to other birds, and, therefore, I must say that I am only the mouthpiece of the Committee in this instance, being Chairman of the Railway Committee. A prominent member of that Committee, the hon. gentleman who sits opposite to me, proposed a motion, and it was adopted by the Committee; and in the Banking Committee another hon. member proposed another motion, a little different from this one, and I have combined the two in the motion now before the House, which will cover the whole ground, and I have no doubt it will be adopted. I, therefore, do not like the hon. member for L'Islet (Mr. Casgrain) to give me credit for what belongs, first to the members who moved the motions, in each Committee, and then to the Committee themselves. Of course, I am always ready to receive compliments from the hon. gentleman, but in this case I, as Chairman of the Railway Committee, can receive only the one-hundred and fortieth part of the compliment. The hon. gentleman has made another suggestion. It must, however, be remembered that reforms only come by degrees; no doubt the reform now before the House will prove a good one. In regard to the suggestions of the hon. member for Montmagny (Mr. Landry), I think the Rules of the House might be reprinted, and that a favorable opportunity now offers to do so. I also agree with him, that the Confederation Act of 1857, might with great propriety be added to the little book supplied to each member, as well as the Rules of the House. Either the proper Committee, or perhaps the Speaker, will see that this matter is attended to next Session.

Mr. BLAKE. I think this is a step in the right direction; but the suggestion of the hon. member for L'Islet ought to receive consideration, even this Session. While we are amending the Standing Rules, I think we should take some steps to remove one of the greatest sources of evil, that is the late period to which the larger proportion of the Bills is delayed, when the work is done hurriedly. If the House were to record its insistence of the Rules for the future, we would get rid of a portion of the difficulty, and the work of the Committee would be properly done. After we have applied the Rule, one of the law officers of the House should examine each Private Bill for the use of the Committee, not for the promoter, and should make his report of it just as the Clerk of the Committee on Standing Orders compares the notices and reports. You make a Rule as to the mode in which the Bill is to be framed, that any general clauses which are sought to be applied are not to be repeated, but simply to be incorporated by reference; that any departure from this regulation is to be made only on special grounds, and noted upon the Bill indicating where the departure is. If the Committee is to consider when the Bill comes before it, whether this Rule has been complied with, half of the time now wasted in doing draughtsman's work in getting up the clauses will be spent. I think, therefore, we should make some other provision, either by Rule or arrangement, in order to have a report on the Bill submitted to the Committee, and have the respects which it is defective pointed out. In that way the Committee would be able to act rapidly, and, if necessary, reject Bills without their time being wasted. It has happened this Session time and again, that the Railway Committee occupy two hours in discussing a Railway Bill, the important part of which would only occupy ten minutes, the rest of the time being occupied in trying to lick the Bill into shape; and the rest of the time we are engaged in trying to lick into something like shape—and occasionally, I am afraid, into pretty bad shape—the abominable Bills presented to us for consideration. The other practical point to which I wish to direct attention is the old one, of which complaint was made, I think, by the hon. member for Hochelaga—that it was rather unjust to say that our Rules ought to be complied with, as to the time of depositing Private Bills, within eight days of the Session, because he says two months' notice is required by the Standing Rules to be given, and the Session of Parliament is not announced as early often as two months, and therefore Private Bills' promoters cannot possibly proceed. I think, if my hon. friend will permit me to say so, that this objection is founded on a misapprehension of the Rule, because the Rule says such notice—which the promoters are to give—shall be continued, in each case, for a period of at least two months during the interval of time between the close of the next preceding Session and the consideration of the petition; and, therefore, any promoter just as soon as he has determined at the next Session of Parliament to introduce a Bill, can begin publishing at once, and is not called upon to wait for the Gazette that summons Parliament for despatch of business. But, at the same time, I repeat the suggestion which I made before on this subject, which is, that it would be probably better to shorten the period of two months considerably, and make it terminate with the opening of the Session, than to keep it as long as two months, and make it terminate only with the consideration of the petition; for so long as we give that flexible time for termination, with our evil habits of yielding to neglectful and apathetic promoters, they will expect and rely upon that, but if it be announced that there will be the comparatively brief limit of one month instead of two, to terminate with the opening of the Session, then I think you will find a better practice. The extent to which our Rule which requires eight days before meeting, and that a copy of the Bill shall be deposited, in order to printing and translation, has been complied with, will be shown by the statistics of this Session, which I have procured. The total number of Private Bills introduced to date—a couple of days ago—was fifty-six; of these there were but seventeen deposited in accordance with the Rule; there were ten more deposited within the eight days which preceded the Session running over up to the day preceding the Session; eleven were deposited between the 9th and 27th of February, and the remaining eighteen at various intervals between the 28th of February and the 16th of April, so that the great bulk of the whole Bills deposited this Session, have not been regularly deposited at the time required by the Standing Rule. It seems to me that in place of that state of things, unless we take the opportunity of recasting the Rule, and place it on a more workmanlike basis, we should pass a solemn resolution to act under our Rules in future. How we can reasonably expect an amendment next Session, I submit for the consideration of the hon. gentleman.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman suggested just now, in accordance with what the hon. member for L'Islet stated, that it would be proper that Bills before being submitted to the Committee might be examined either by the law officers of the House, or by the Secretary of the Committee, or by some other authority, in order to see whether the Rules of the House have been complied with. In this the hon. gentleman is right; it would simplify greatly the work of the Committee; and a party presenting a Bill, finding that it was not in accordance with the Rules of the House, could alter it, or have to withdraw it. The question arises: that all this could be done by the Rule which the hon. gentleman has read, if enforced strictly. If Bills were deposited eight days previous to the meeting of Parliament, there would be plenty of time, probably a fortnight and more, for the Bills to be examined by the proper authority—either the law officers of the House, or the Secretary of the Committee, or, perhaps, by some other Committee, such as the Standing Committee on Standing Orders. We have a Committee especially for that purpose, to see whether the notice was given in the newspapers, and in the Official Gazette, within the necessary time, &c., and the same Committee, perhaps, might report also on these Bills, if it were thought proper that the Committee should so report; or, as the hon. gentleman suggests, either the law officers, if they have the time, or the secretaries of the different Committees—perhaps, all the secretaries together—could do this work. I agree that something might be done in this direction, but it all depends on the strictness with which the Rule about the eight days is complied with. If we relax the Rule, as we are always disposed on both sides of the House to do, of course we must suffer for it; but that would not prevent, I think, some mode being adopted, at all events, to secure the revision and examination of the Bills before they are submitted to the different Committees.

Motion agreed to.

MASTERS AND MATES BILL.

Mr. McLELAN moved the third reading of Bill (No. 89) respecting certificates to masters and mates of inland and coasting ships.

Mr. LANDRY. Was any change made in the fees for certificates?

Mr. McLELAN. The $4 fee was reduced to $2.

Bill read the third time, and passed.

PIG IRON BOUNTY.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that the report of the Committee of the Whole on the resolution to provide that a bounty be paid on all pig iron manufactured in Canada from Canadian ore be received.

Motion agreed to; and resolution concurred in.

SUPPLY.

House resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

1. Charges of Management.....$172,140.87

Mr. BLAKE. I notice that there are increases under the head of Winnipeg board allowance, and other increases at Victoria, Charlottetown, and an increase of $2,000 in salaries of savings bank agents, and establishment of new offices.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The business at Winnipeg has increased so largely that we required another clerk, for which we ask $900 salary. Then, again, the officers there have represented to us that, owing to the cost of living in Winnipeg they should have a general increase of salaries. It is the opinion of the Government, while we are prepared to admit that the cost of living is higher in Winnipeg than almost any other place at the present moment, that it would not be advisable to make a permanent increase in salaries, because it is supposed that in a year or two, when that country will have a surplus production, the cost of living will not be any more there than at Ottawa. It was, therefore, thought proper to give a certain board allowance, while the expense of living continues as at present. At Victoria, there is an increase to one or two of the employés to the extent of $200. At Charlottetown, there is an increase of $200 to one of the employés. With regard to the salaries of savings bank agents, as the hon. gentleman understands, we now pay these agents in proportion to the deposits. The smallest sum paid is $200 a year. If the deposits reach $120,000, they receive $300, and when they reach from $200,000 to $400,000, they receive the maximum of $400. Under that arrangement as the deposits increase in the different savings banks, the agents are entitled to an increase of $50 or $100 as the case may be. Then there are numerous applications for the establishment of savings banks in different places, and these are now under consideration. A vote is now being taken for the establishment of three or four additional offices, if it is found necessary to establish these additional offices. Some of the applications are from Sydney mines, and other places in Nova Scotia where mining operations are increasing; one or two from Prince Edward Island, and two from New Brunswick.

Mr. BLAKE. With reference to the board allowance at Winnipeg, what is the principle upon which the allowance is made?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. For example, a clerk who has $800 or $900 a year is to get $20 a month extra, and other salaries in proportion.

2. The Governor-General Secretary's Office.....$9,730.00

Mr. BLAKE. There is a reduction here.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes; an indication of our anxiety to retrench, which I have no doubt will be very gratifying to the hon. gentleman.

Mr. BLAKE. I suppose it is occasioned by the vacation of a senior officer, and the appointment of a new one at the minimum salary of a chief clerk.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Part of it is—$600, I think.

Mr. BLAKE. I see a first-class clerk has been reduced from $1,800 to $1,450.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It resulted in part from the fact that when the late deputy-head of the Department was superannuated we did not bring in an additional man. Col. Stewart, who was appointed at $2,000 a year, had $2,150 at the time of his death, and it is provided that his successor shall have $1,800. We also took in a younger man:

3. Office of the Privy Council for Canada.....$17,755.00

Mr. BLAKE. That is a contrast; there is an increase here.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. There is an accountant and draughtsman, making $1,100, and the remainder is mainly for increases to the different employés. There will be four second-class clerks, one additional third-class clerk, and one accountant and draughtsman.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Will the hon. gentleman explain why three additional clerks are added to that Department. The increase in salaries are very considerable, as well as the increase in the number of the clerks.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It was found necessary that we should have a man who is competent as a draughtsman.

Mr. MACKENZIE. What is meant by a draughtsman?

Mr. BLAKE. I suppose the fact of the matter is, that because the office has no head it wants more tails.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. There is something in that, and hence there is a considerable saving. A head would have to be paid $7,000.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes; and I suppose the $7,000 will become payable very soon.

Mr. MACKENZIE. What are the draughtsman's duties?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Reports are often made by the Department to the Privy Council, accompanied by plans. When the clerk has to send a copy of an Order in Council he has often to send a plan with it; and, therefore, a draughtsman is required.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It looks very like a little plan to make an appointment that is not required.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There is considerable work. When a copy of an Order in Council is sent away with regard to timber limits, &c., a plan must be copied and sent with it. We could not allow the original order and plan to be sent away.

Mr. MACKENZIE. But these plans are made in the Department of the Interior. There never was a plan made, so far I know, in the Privy Council Office. During the five years I was in that office, I never felt the want of a permanent draughtsman. Fifteen years have elapsed since the new system was inaugurated, and this is the first time such an officer has been found necessary. I do not think he is necessary. I think the hon. gentleman ought not to defend such a transaction as this.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If the hon. gentleman were there now, he would find that the work has increased immensely, and the draughtsman is required. There are no officers in any of the Departments that are more hard worked than the officers of the Privy Council, especially during certain long periods of the year; and, therefore, these additional clerks are required, and we ask Parliament to grant the necessary money.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman has explained that when small plans come in to the Privy Council, with reference to timber limits, copies must be made of them, and sent out with the order. That is, of course, a reasonable thing; but I should have supposed that the business-like way of proceeding would be for the Department sending the order and the plan to the Privy Council, also to send a tracing of the plan, and not to keep an officer in the Department solely for making these plans. Then, this officer is also an accountant; he has not sufficient work as a draughtsman. Now, I filled the office of President of the Council for a short time, and I know something of it during another period, and I never heard of an accountant in the office at all. I should like to know what duties this officer discharges as an accountant.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. With regard to the plans, perhaps it would be as well to have them copied in the way the hon. gentleman suggests; but if a draughtsman were employed in drawing these plans in one Department, an additional clerk would have to be employed to do the work of an accountant in the Privy Council, whereas this officer will be doing the work both of an accountant and a draughtsman.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not know whether the hon. gentleman has accounted for the draughtsman. He has not accounted for the accountant yet.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Clerk of the Privy Council stated the necessity of having a draughtsman who should also be an accountant. A draughtsman is absolutely required to avoid the great delays in consequence of the number of plans that form a portion of the minutes of Council; and we also require a man for keeping the accounts, which the clerk states are accruing there, and ought to be kept separate.

Mr. BLAKE.

Mr. BLAKE. What are they? There are no accounts in the Privy Council—at least there have not been up to this time.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will bring the hon. gentleman the report.

Mr. BLAKE. The proper plan would be for the Department to send in a plan which could go into the Order in Council, instead of having a different officer appointed for this work.

4. Department of Justice $16,015.00

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The increase is due to the statutory bonus of $50. Under the Civil Service Act there has been a readjustment of the officials of the different Departments, and the readjustment is the one consented to by the hon. Minister of Justice as the proper theoretical organization for the working of this Department.

Mr. CASGRAIN. There is an allowance for the private secretary of $600. Is that work done by one of the old clerks, or a new hand?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Every hon. Minister has a private secretary of his own, whom he takes from the service, or outside of it. When in the service he receives this amount in addition to his ordinary salary.

5. Department of Justice, Penitentiaries Branch..... $5,450.00

Mr. BLAKE. The Inspector of Penitentiaries, when this office was established, was appointed with a statutory salary of $2,000. There have been at least two increases, and I find now a further increase of $50. I observe in the Penitentiary Act, which has lately come down to the House, the statutory provision for the salary is entirely left out, and it is provided in general terms that the salary shall be such as fixed by the Governor in Council, without any limitation whatever. I should like to know the principle on which this third addition is made, and whether it is intended to make this the fixed salary.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Inspector is much dissatisfied with his salary, and complains his work is very onerous. He compares it with the salary of Mr. Langmuir, Inspector of Jails and Prisons of Ontario, which is greater, although the work is much less.

Mr. MACKENZIE. He does not do half the work.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman made rather an unfortunate speech for his peace of mind. If the officials learn that their dissatisfaction and grumbling will be an excuse for increasing their salaries, he may expect a good deal of grumbling. I would cheerfully consent to a vote of the House for an advertisement for a satisfied civil servant. I am not going to compare the case of Mr. Langmuir with that of the Inspector of Penitentiaries, because Mr. Langmuir decided to leave his office and take other employment, and I think the office is now divided between two. I do not see that the cases are comparable, because the Inspector in Ontario has a great many important institutions to examine. The lunatic asylums alone contain three times as many souls as the penitentiaries. In any case I am not disposed to accede to the view that what another Government pays is a proper text of the case. It would be dangerous to consent to this increase, for next year the salary would probably be $2,850, and go on increasing indefinitely in this ratio. We should once for all decide finally what the salary shall be.

8. Department of Interior.....$103,134.00

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hon. gentlemen will see, with respect to the Department of the Interior, that the Geological Survey branch is added to that Department, but will be supported, as heretofore, out of the general vote for the survey. The officers of the survey are now specially charged as officers in the Department of the Interior. The business of the Department is enormously increasing, and I do not suppose it can be diminished for some time to come.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I have no doubt the labors of the Department of the Interior have increased within the last few years, and one would naturally expect to find a considerable increase in the expenditure of that Department. But I notice here, in connection with the North-West Mounted Police branch of this part of the service, under the Department of the Interior, that there is a considerable increase. I do not understand the necessity for the increase in that particular branch of the service. I notice, also, that there is a new officer appointed in that particular branch. Last year there were three officers, I think, and a chief clerk, and a first and second-class clerk. The chief clerk had $2,150 a year. This year I observe the hon. gentleman has appointed what is called a comptroller, at a salary of $3,200, an increase of over $1,000. I wish to know whether the person who formerly occupied the position of chief clerk is now to occupy the position of comptroller. Has he any additional or other duties to perform as comptroller, that he did not have as chief clerk?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He has the sole charge and responsibility of all the disbursements of the Mounted Police force, of all the contracts for supplies, forage, purchase of horses, of uniforms, and furniture of all kinds. It is a most responsible office and a most onerous office. Mr. White was the chief clerk, of first-class standing, in his Department. He would have had a right to claim the highest offices, from his great ability, on the staff. He is specially valuable in this position. He has been obliged to go this year, and the year before, to the North-West to look after a very large expenditure at the outposts, and they are scattered all over that country. He was the chief organizer and officer of that force. He has got the name of comptroller—it is comptroller of Mounted Police force—that is, he keeps the accounts. He has to keep all the correspondence with the Commissioner, the Assistant Commissioner, and the different superintendents who are stationed all over the country. He has got a small staff and a great deal of work. He well earns the salary, and we could not keep him unless we gave him that salary. I do not think, at this moment, we could supply his place, and it would be unwise economy if we lost his service.

Mr. CAMERON. No new duties, I understand, have been thrown upon him; but if he discharges the duties the hon. gentleman has mentioned, perhaps it is not too much.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is the duty, in addition, between 300 men and 500 men.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the increase in the number of first-class clerks employed in the Department of the Interior?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They arise in the service, they arise from length of service, they arise from the duties being enormously increased. We have to have subdivisions for timber limits, for coal lands, and for mineral lands. There has been a very considerable sub-division in that service, which was small originally. It has more than doubled, and with the great pressure just now it is advisable to have a very full staff of competent officers. I tell the hon. gentleman that we have very great difficulty in keeping our officers. The inducements offered them elsewhere are so great that we have lost some of our best officers, because we would not give them the salary. We have lost Mr. Hamilton, who was at the head of the Land Grant Department. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company offered him a salary twice or three times more than we could afford to give him; and we lost some of our most efficient officers, whose places it is hard to supply. Mr. Lindsay Russell, as the hon. gentleman opposite knows, complains very much of the impossibility almost of keeping these men, owing to the inducements offered them elsewhere.

Mr. CHARLTON. I notice the increase in the expense of first-class clerks is something over $5,000—$10,650 last year, $15,750 this year. I notice the number of second-class clerks is increased from seven to eleven, and the expense from $9,350 to $13,800. The number of third-class clerks has increased from eighteen to twenty-nine, and the expense from $15,950 to $24,100. It strikes me this is a very large percentage of increase, and must indicate an enormous increase in the business of the Department.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. With respect to the third-class clerks, several of them have been continued from year to year as temporary clerks, and have been put on the permanent staff under the reorganization of the Civil Service Act. Their salaries appear here now as having been paid under the old system, either out of contingencies or out of some votes connected with the different branches of the Department. There were seven or eight of them, if not more, that were brought in and made permanent; but that is not an actual increase of the staff, these people having been there before. During the Session, and sometimes before the Session, a very considerable staff of temporary clerks are employed in making returns, and as soon as the work is over they will be got rid of. But the increase is not so large as the hon. gentleman supposes, for that reason.

Mr. BLAKE. It seems that, notwithstanding this removal from one part to another, the contingencies have increased very largely as well. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would state whether the Geological Survey Branch, which is now proposed to be appended to his Department and paid separately, whether this statement of salaries is just a statement of the service to be paid out of the other vote, or whether it represents the proposed plan of the service.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It represents the proposed plan. Some addition has been made to the salaries on the report of the Director, Professor Selwyn, who also complained of the difficulty of retaining his officers in consequence of the salaries not being adequate. The staff is now making every effort to keep up with the new field opened in the North-West, and especially in the mining regions of the North-West, and I should be very sorry if I should lose any of the men he prizes so much.

Mr. BLAKE. It is now proposed, for the first time, to establish a scale of salaries and regular system for the staff of the Geological Survey, and I think we should have fuller information, so that we may compare the payments made under the former regime.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will bring all that information down.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Is this vote intended to cover the salaries of officers at headquarters, or the whole staff in connection with the Geological Survey? If it is intended for the clerks here I think it is a large expenditure. The vote proposed is $60,000, and the clerks, numbering twenty-six, will receive $31,604. I do not understand that their duties in connection with the Geological Museum and elsewhere are so excessive as to require twenty-six clerks at such large salaries.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This amount is for the whole staff, including explorers, field men and scientific men. They had to be brought into some class under the Civil Service Act, and they are placed, according to their relative rank, as chief clerk, and so on.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It is unfortunate that it should be so, and the Civil Service Act might be amended in that regard.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They are merely entered in the Estimates as chief clerks, and so on. But for other purposes they keep their designation of hydrographer, chemist, and so on.

Mr. ROSS. An amount is entered for a librarian. Is it intended to have a Geological library, and place it in charge of an officer?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There has always been an officer having special charge of the books, maps and other literary matter connected with the Geological Survey. The present officer is Dr. Thorburn, who is found to be very valuable, not only as a librarian, but as being able to perform a very valuable function in my opinion, that of being able to explain to visitors the different branches of the museum and the exhibits.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It is necessary we should have such an officer. I may say I sympathize with the hon. gentleman in losing so many of his best servants; but I hope he will be able to retain all his colleagues.

Mr. ROSS. Am I to understand that all geological works under the control of the Government will be found in the Geological Museum?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Certainly not. The Library Committee of the House of Parliament will see that books of science will be fully represented in our National Library here. The works in the Geological Museum are the working tools of the staff, more than books of public reference.

9. Department of Indian Affairs..... $31,287.50

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). There is an increase in this Department of $6,372 over and above what it cost last year. I notice that the hon. gentleman has added to the salaries in some cases. There is also to be a solicitor.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There has always been one.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). It has not so appeared before. If so, the Estimates are not correct. At all events, it appears for the first time under this head.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Such an officer was paid before, but it did not appear in the Estimates.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). Who is the solicitor, and where does he reside?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Deputy Minister of Justice, since 1867, has received $400 in addition to his salary for acting as solicitor of the Indian Department.

Mr. CAMERON. I also observe there are additions to the staff; there are eight more clerks in the Indian branch than last year, involving considerable additional expense. While I am prepared to admit that the work connected with the Department of the Interior must necessarily have increased for the last few years, and probably will increase, I cannot understand how the cost of running the Indian Department can by any possibility have increased. Have we any more Indians than we had last year? Is a new system inaugurated by which the Indian affairs are managed? What is the real cause of this increase? Altogether it is this year $6,372.50 over and above last year, when there was an increase of $4,215 over the year before. The hon. gentleman accounted for it last year, and found it necessary, I think, to apologize or explain to the House the reason why that increase occurred over 1881. I think he mentioned that two officers of the outside service were brought down here—Mr. Plummer, of Toronto, and Mr. Dalton; and their salaries, with the statutory increases, made the difference.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The work of the Department has been increased, strange to say, though the hon.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

gentleman cannot understand it. In the first place, there is a great increase in the number of Indians coming in to settle on the reserves, I am glad to say; then, with respect to the officers, it will be found that the difference between eleven and seventeen is caused by the appointment of temporary officers, who were paid out of contingencies, to permanent positions. I will also bring down, on Concurrence, full details of all these matters.

10. Auditor-General's Office $19,200.00

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Under the heading of the office of the Auditor-General I see that an additional officer has been appointed, and yet there is a decrease in salaries. Will the hon. Minister explain? This is strange.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. What is strange about it?

Mr. ROSS. It is strange because there is an increase of officers and a decrease of salaries.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It so happened that two first-class clerks were superannuated, and we have not filled the vacancies; then two or three—two I think—third-class clerks were promoted to the second class; and, on the whole, I am happy to say, for the information of the hon. gentleman, that there is a reduction in the expenditure.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is there no increase in superannuations?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes; because we are paying the parties superannuated. If you charge that against it, there would not be a reduction; but, in the interests of the service, it was found desirable to do so.

11. Department of Finance and Treasury Board. $58,125.00

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). So the public purse bleeds to the same extent all the same. In the Department of Finance and Treasury Board—this is more natural—there is an increase of three officers, and quite an increase in salaries, something like $3,000. This is more in keeping with the eternal fitness of things.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. There is an increase of three officers, and if we give them but the statutory allowance, $50, it would amount to that sum; but it has been found that the duties of the deputy-head of the Department are so onerous—a large portion of his time being taken up with correspondence, depriving the country of time which might be devoted more profitably than to writing his own letters, that a clerk has been employed, who acts as a clerk in the Department, and is shorthand-writer for him. Any hon. gentleman who knows anything about that Department, and the labor involved in its correspondence, will quite appreciate the position of the deputy until this assistance was given. Then the officers of the Department are increased in number, as we are continuing to add to the deposits in the savings bank; owing to the increased number of depositors, thousands more accounts, I may say, have been opened. Then there are all these returns; every payment made, and the returns from the officers in the different parts of the Province, have to be sent here, checked and corrected. The increase in this work alone will require, the deputy estimates, probably two officers during the next year besides the additional appointed shorthand-writer; that is the reason for the increase.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). The hon. gentleman referred to the necessity of the increase, as due to increased labor because of the savings bank. I am somewhat inquisitive to know what the hon. gentleman considers the expense of managing the savings bank; what percentage does the cost of management bear to the deposits.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I think about 7 per cent., making the money cost us about 4½ per cent. If my memory serves me, it is a little under 4½ per cent.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is about the average loss to the Government on the interest of deposits received until re-deposited—the Government deposits money with the banks at 4 per cent.; and is there any means of informing us what loss is sustained under this head?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I cannot state the exact loss, but it cannot be very large, for this reason: it is considered necessary, under any circumstances, as near as may be, to have $2,000,000 or $3,000,000 at call in the banks of the country, and, for this reason, the amount of Dominion notes held by the banks to-day, is perhaps $3,000,000 or $4,000,000 in excess of what they are compelled by law to hold. Under these circumstances, the hon. gentleman will see it would be very impolitic, and unwise under any circumstances—and no Government would do otherwise—to have less than $2,500,000, or something of that kind, at call; and, for various reasons, demands may be made on the Government from day to day. Take, for instance, the Pacific Railway, as it proceeds every twenty miles, $200,000 are to be paid and $180,000 or $190,000 to be paid back on the land grant bonds deposited with them; and, therefore, under any circumstances, for the general safety and credit of the country, and to prevent any possibility of any difficulty, the Government should and must necessarily have $2,500,000, and, perhaps, $3,000,000 at call. Then, when we find any money coming in from the savings banks or from any other source, we have arranged with the banks, to take it for from four to six months, just as we find our position likely to be, and as it may be required; and, therefore, we have that sum placed to the credit of the Government, deposited for two, four or six months, or sometimes subject to a notice of thirty days, for which they give us 4 per cent. Of course, there may be some little loss between the transmission, but it cannot be very large under these circumstances.

Mr. BURPEE (St. John). Are the savings banks managed through the Finance Department?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. No; but by the Post Office Department.

Mr. BURPEE. You have nothing to do with them?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. No.

12. Department of Inland Revenue $35,712.50

Mr. LAURIER. In the Department of Inland Revenue, I see that no provision is taken for the salary of the Assistant Commissioner. This office exists by Statute. Is it intended to abolish it? I would suggest it as proper, then, to amend the law creating the Department.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The number of the staff at present is twenty-eight, last year it was twenty-seven. The apparent increase shown in the Estimates is $1,762.50; but taking into account the Chief Clerk and Assistant Commissioner $2,400, the real increase is found to be $4,162.60. Of this, two men have been added to the permanent staff, but who were Commissioners last year, which accounts for $1,825, one being at $1,095, and the other $730. The ordinary increment provided for by the Act of twenty-two officers at $50 each, amounts to $1,100. The sum of $1,247 remaining is accounted for by the reorganizations of the salaries and promotions in the Department.

Mr. LAURIER. I asked the hon. gentleman about the item for Chief Inspector of Standards; I suppose that has to do with the weights and measures. Is this a promotion, or a new appointment?

Mr. COSTIGAN. This is a promotion.

Mr. LAURIER. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will explain about the supernumerary first and second-class clerks?

Mr. COSTIGAN. According to the Civil Service Act there was a reorganization of the staff of the Department.

These supernumerary clerks were first-class clerks when the reorganization was made, and, of course, we cannot interfere with their salaries or rank. If a vacancy occurred that vacancy would be filled by the appointment of a first-class clerk.

Mr. LAURIER. I find here that, including the first and second-class clerks for this and last year, there is an addition of one clerk.

Mr. BLAKE. The total number of first-class clerks is six, being four first-class clerks, and two supernumerary, while the staff of last year, as the hon. gentleman states, was five first-class clerks; so that while he found, in his theoretical organization, an excess of two first-class clerks, he has actually himself created one first-class clerk. If the theoretical organization required only four first-class clerks, then it is impossible that there should have been more than five on the list looking at last year's work.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. By the theoretical organization, as now adopted, the number of permanent first-class clerks of the Department will be four instead of five. The number of second-class clerks, under the reorganization, will be seven instead of eight, a reduction in both cases of one. But in the Department there were three who are now supernumerary clerks, two first-class, and one second. These cannot, under the law, be reduced in rank; but when any of the first or second-class clerks disappear one of the supernumeraries will be put on the ordinary permanent list.

Mr. BLAKE. So far as the second-class clerks are concerned the matter is pretty plain. On the theoretical organization of the Department there were eight second-class clerks, and there are on the list to-day seven second-class and one supernumerary second-class clerk; but we are dealing with the first-class clerkships, of whom there were, at the reorganization, five, while on the list to-day there are four first-class clerks and two supernumeraries, which make six, or an excess of one.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There are only two supernumerary clerks this year; at all events there is one less this year. The hon. gentleman asks me to account for the other; perhaps he will allow us to account for it on Concurrence.

13. Customs Department..... $32,950.00

Mr. BURPEE. There are a good many changes in the Department, but there is not a very large increase in the amount. There is one first-class clerk less than there was last year; there are three second-class clerks more, and six third-class clerks more, and the six junior second-class clerks are dropped out altogether; and there is one additional clerk, a shorthand-writer. The total increase is $955; leaving out the shorthand-writer, the increase is $205. Is that increase made up by the $50 additions?

Mr. BOWELL. The dropping of the junior second-class clerks is in conformity with the new Civil Service Act; consequently that increases the number of third-class clerks, and some of the others are promoted. The third-class clerk, the shorthand-writer, we propose to give $750; he is for the assistance of the Commissioner, whose work has become so great that it is almost impossible for him to keep up with it. The reduction of one in the number of first-class clerks arises from the superannuation of one owing to ill-health. The $205 addition to which the hon. gentleman refers, is due to the $50 increases, and to an increase given to the Assistant Accountant. Owing to the responsible position he occupies and his efficiency, it is proposed to increase his salary to the maximum amount, so that there will be no increase in his salary in the future. The hon. gentleman will understand that the Estimates for this year are much less than those of 1878. Last year the expenditure was only $38,000, notwithstanding the enormous increase of business which has fallen upon the Customs Department, while the expenditure, in 1878, was $44,600.

Mr. BURPEE. That includes the contingencies.

Mr. BOWELL. Yes, in both cases. The estimate for this year is only $955 more than the expenditure of last year; and if you deduct the statutory increases from that $955, you will find that the actual increase is only $25.

Mr. BURPEE. The hon. gentleman knows that we had to pay, in 1878 and previous years, a very large amount on American invoices for advertising the discount. Of course, gold being now at par, that is not necessary. But that added largely at that time to the contingent account.

Mr. BOWELL. That is very true, but the expenditures for salaries alone was $28,287 in 1878, against $31,800 last year, notwithstanding the statutory increases.

14. Post Office Department $141,125.00

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I would like to know the reason of this large increase. This appears to be a Department remarkable for its advancing expenses. In 1879, it had only ninety-two employes, last year it had 122, and now it is proposed to employ 161 persons. The salaries, in 1879, amounted to $87,850, last year to $116,970 and now it is proposed to take $141,000. The increases are very serious. Perhaps the hon. Postmaster-General will explain them.

Mr. CARLING. A number of the salaries were paid last year out of contingencies, for instance, the eighteen packers, who are now put on the staff; and it has been found that, with the large increase of business in the Department, we require fourteen additional clerks to manage the work of the Department during the present year.

Mr. ROSS. I can understand that there should be an increase in the Savings bank Branch, owing to the large amount of money now being deposited, and perhaps in the Money Order branch; but in the Secretary's office, which I suppose is only for the ordinary business, there is an increase of five second-class clerks, four third-class clerks, and twenty-two packers. Do I understand that the whole of these increases were formerly paid out of contingencies?

Mr. CARLING. Thirty-two were. We have established 161 new post offices during the year; there has been an immense increase of business all over. In connection with that particular Department, the whole number of additional clerks is fourteen over that of last year.

Mr. CHARLTON. The increase of the Secretary's office amounts to 70 per cent. in the number of employes, and 35 per cent. in the expenditure. Do I understand that these clerks were employed in former years, and their salaries not included in the Estimates?

Mr. CARLING. Yes.

15. Department of Agriculture..... $43,065.00

Mr. POPE. This is a very progressive Department. The increase arises, as a general rule, from the employment permanently on the staff of clerks formerly employed temporarily. The statutory increase of $50 per year, amounts to $1,035. In the appointments, which were necessary, were repairers, $1,250; one patent clerk, $400; there was a German engaged writing German pamphlets and correspondence, who speaks German, French and English, $780. This German was but temporarily employed, and was paid by the day, and it was thought better he should appear here. In the Archives, it was found absolutely necessary we should have a French clerk, and the man employed was in the service before in the Immigration Department. There is no increase in his pay, although he is put here. This is Mr. Marmette. Mr. Lake, Chief of Statistics, has been for years drawing the same pay as now, $1,500, but was paid out of contingencies. The promotions under the Civil Service Act, are: Mr. Currier, my Secretary, who gets $100 a year promotion. Mr. Dion, who was taken from the second-class and made a first-class clerk in charge of the divisions, at an increase of $100. Mr. Hanwright, who received $400, receives $100 more. Mr. McKay is a gentleman of great ability as examiner of patents, a branch which requires great skill. I do not know how we could replace him if he were to leave. He has been offered much more, and I have increased his salary $450.

Mr. BLAKE. A statistical officer in the Census branch, Mr. Lake, the hon. Minister says was employed for the last ten years, but paid out of contingencies, and is now put on the permanent staff. Have we got to the end of that category?

Mr. POPE. It would be a great mistake to get to the end of the temporary clerks, for in case of pressure of work it is necessary to have their services.

Mr. BLAKE. I was not referring to temporary employment, but to what is really permanent employment, though for years paid out of contingencies. Have we reached the end of these temporary permanent officials?

Mr. POPE. I do not think we have. We have thought proper to keep up the staff, and as the business of the Department increases we give the preference to these temporary men for permanent positions.

16. Department of Marine and Fisheries..... $35,000.00

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). No doubt a great many Departments are very progressive, and have much increase of business; but there are some in which there cannot be much, if any, increase. Take the Department of Marine and Fisheries. To what extent has business increased since last year to necessitate the employment of more men? I would like to understand what justification the Head of the Department has for this increase. I do not think he can be a particularly economical officer, judging by the increase that has taken place in the Department since he entered it. This year the hon. gentleman asks for $35,000 to run this Department; last year he asked for $31,020. In 1879, the Department only cost $25,070, and there were twenty employes to do the work. Last year the hon. gentleman himself was able to manage the Department with twenty-five employes, at an expense of $31,020. The increase this year, over 1879, is $5,950. The increase in 1882 over 1878, was $5,950; the increase in 1883 over 1882, was $2,980; and the increase in 1883 over 1878-79, was $9,930, and with an increase of ten more employes. I think it is only fair that we should know why these additions in the service are required.

Mr. McLELAN. I claim that the Department of Marine and Fisheries is a progressive Department. Every year a number of lighthouses are added, and new harbors are opened; and then there has been added to the Department the Signal Service branch of the Public Works. The bounty business has also been thrown upon this Department, which increases its work very much.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Who did the Signal Service before last year?

Mr. McLELAN. It was connected with the Public Works Department.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I do not think so.

Mr. McLELAN. It was transferred during the summer. There is a branch of the Signal Service now connected with the sea coast, with the fisheries, and in connection with shipping. The meteorological service has also extended very largely, involving additional correspondence, as does also the inspection of vessels, steamboats and hulls. I have the same reason to give that my colleagues have given for the increased number of the staff. They were extras, and I found their services were continuous during the year, and that as they could not be dispensed with it was better to place them on the permanent staff. I expect to require, under this system, only two new officers; the others will be taken from the extra clerks in the office now.

17. Department of Public Works..... $41,430.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In the four first items there is no increase except in the second one, a statutory increase of $50. In the second-class clerks the number is reduced from three to two. The corresponding branch has increased very much and necessitates more help, not only of copying clerks, but of clerks able to make reports, &c. In the account branch the chief clerk has the statutory increase of $50. Then a third-class clerk is promoted to a second-class clerkship, and we require an additional officer. The technical branch is composed of the engineers, architects, and the mechanical engineers. The first two officers have the salary they had before. The mechanical engineer had never been put on the permanent list, but as he was an officer permanently necessary, we thought best to put him on the list at a salary of $2,000. The chief clerk in the engineering branch has his increase of $50. There are five new officers, three of the second-class and two of the third. These officers are constantly required, and the Government thought best to put them on the permanent list of the Department.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I suppose there is no use in finding fault on this side of the House, but the hon. gentleman will see that there is an increase of $10,000 in the expenses of the coming year. That is a most extraordinary expenditure, and one that I cannot understand.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The increase is more apparent than real. It is an increase on the permanent staff, but it is not an increase in the number, nor in the expenditure of the Department. These officers have been there for a number of years. Mr. Arnoldi, for example, the mechanical engineer, has been there for a long number of years. He has charge of the heating apparatus, the lighting apparatus, &c., of these buildings, as well as the Ottawa Post Office, the Geological Museum, and the other departments that are not in these buildings. So that, though it is an increase on the permanent staff, it is really not an increase in the number of officers, because they have been at work for years past.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Is there any other person but Mr. Arnoldi, in that position, who has been placed there for the first time?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes; there are other officers that might have been brought in; for example, the Superintendent of Telegraph Lines. The question has not been brought up how far these lines shall be kept in the hands of the Government, and, therefore, we still pay that officer out of the money voted for the telegraph system. But if it is afterwards decided that the Government shall take control of the telegraph lines, then, most likely, the superintendent of that system will have to become a permanent officer and be put on the list. It must grow not only in that direction, but in all directions, and the number of officers must be increased in proportion to the work that is placed on this Department or any other Department.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The increased expenditure last year was $3,150; it is now $5,100.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The work was done by officers who are not permanent, and who have been employed for years and years; but as the clerks were really permanent clerks it was proper they should be placed on the permanent list. It is always painful to find a clerk who does his work well and has the confidence of his chief, to be in the Department as a temporary clerk, and liable to lose his position any day; and if his services are required permanently it is proper for the chiefs to say: "We will place you on the permanent list and give you a chance to rise; and if, after a number of years, you become unfit for work, you will receive a small superannuation allowance."

Mr. MACKENZIE. I entirely agree with the hon. gentleman as to the treatment which should be given to such clerks, but he takes the same amount for contingencies.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman is perfectly correct. The contingencies must follow the increase of work. If we have more works going on in all sections of the Dominion we must have more contingencies. For example, works are carried on in Prince Edward Island, British Columbia and the North-West. The season is short, and it is hardly possible or feasible to write a letter and wait for an answer before giving every order. Accordingly, we have to send telegrams which cost something, especially to British Columbia, and we have often to pay for long answers, and these amounts are paid out of contingencies. As these works are now more numerous and extend over different portions of the Dominion, a little more money for contingencies is necessary to meet the requirements of the service.

Mr. BLAKE. In 1878, when there was only one Department for Public Works and Railways and Canals, the amount voted for the Department was $44,676. The expenditure in the Public Works' branch is very near that amount, leaving out the Railways and Canals Department. So it seems exceedingly difficult to reconcile the views of economy which are constantly placed before us with that result. The hon. Minister may say there were a great many persons paid then out of contingencies who are not placed on the permanent staff; but the contingencies for 1878 were only $1,000 greater than the hon. gentleman's vote for this year, irrespective of the general vote for contingencies. I make this observation because it seems to me to lead to this consideration: The Department was divided at the time when it was the policy of the Administration itself to build the Pacific Railway. That is now under construction under another arrangement, and the principle objects of separating the Department no longer served; and I was about to enquire whether the Government have taken into consideration any proposal for the reconsolidation of those two Departments since their division seems to have been attended with very large additional expenditures.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

THIRD READINGS.

The following Bills were severally considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time and passed:—

Bill (No. 41) to incorporate the Dominion Railway Trust and Construction Company of Canada, limited.—(Mr. Small.)

Bill (No. 88) to unite the Winnipeg and Hudson's Bay Railway and Steamship Company and the Nelson Valley Railway and Transportation Company into one corporation, under the name of The Winnipeg and Hudson Bay Railway and Steamship Company.—(Mr. Cameron, Victoria.)

Bill (No. 64) to incorporate the Pacific and Peace River Railway Company.—(Mr. Cameron, Victoria.)

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

17. Department of Public Works.....$41,430.00

Mr. MACKENZIE. I understood that the hon. Minister of Public Works was to explain what are the duties of the three additional second-class clerks, who are added to the engineering branch.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. They are engineers, connected with both the engineering branch and the architect's branch.

Mr. MACKENZIE. They are really assistant architects.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes. These officers are doing work that has been going on for the last fifteen years, and they have been made permanent officers. If we find that it is better for the service, as well as for the individual, that a man should be made a permanent officer, we appoint him, although sometimes an officer prefers to remain on the outside service.

Mr. MACKENZIE. If the hon. gentleman would call these officers assistant architects, or something that would indicate their duties, I think it would be better.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The difficulty is this: Very often when we give a title to an officer he is apt to consider himself in a higher position than he really is, and then he and his friends press for more salary for him. I think it would be better for the Head of the Department to be in a position to say that if an officer, by his good conduct and service, earns a title, after a while he should have it. For instance, I might call my hon. friend's attention to Mr. H. F. Perley, who was employed in his time, and is still employed. I had the position of Chief Engineer of the Department to give when the two Departments were divided, and I thought from what I knew and heard of that officer that he deserved to be promoted. I promoted him with the consent of my colleagues; and I must say that the experience I have had of Mr. Perley convinces me that he deserved that promotion. The only regret I had was that I could not ask for an increase of salary for that officer. He does his work with a great deal of zeal, and to the entire satisfaction of the Head of the Department, and I must say that his services are worth more salary than he receives, considering the salaries given to corresponding officers outside the Government. But Mr. Perley saw the difficulties in the way, and he has acquiesced, relying on the future to obtain, if Parliament will grant it, an increase of salary. I am very glad my hon. friend has given me this opportunity to pay that tribute to the Chief Engineer of my Department.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I quite admit all that the hon. gentleman has said regarding the merits of Mr. Perley; and I also admit that the hon. gentleman, in the matter he has referred to, is able to speak from experience. I understand the hon. gentleman to say that when people accept titles, they are not satisfied until they get something else.

19. Departmental contingencies $153,950.00

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Before the item passes, I wish to call the attention of the extraordinary amount of the sum which is spent every year on extra clerks. It has been said over and over again on the Opposition side of the House, that this expenditure would, under the new arrangement of the Civil Service, be done away with; but I notice, from the Public Accounts, that while the fixed charges for regular clerks in the various Departments are increasing, the expenditure for extra clerks, instead of being reduced, is being increased. Last year the expenditure for this service alone was as follows:—For the Privy Council, $589; for the Department of Justice, $267; for the Department of Militia, $1,215; for the Secretary of State's Department, $1,621; for the Department of the Interior, $538; for the Indian Department, $1,378; for the Auditor General's Department, $1,003; for the Finance Department, $1,580; for the Inland Revenue Department, $2,555; for the Post Office Department, $10,620; for the Department of Agriculture, $2,346; and for the Department of Marine and Fisheries, $3,445; in all, $27,177. The Government can, perhaps, explain what necessity there is for this large extra service, while the service generally is involving a larger expenditure.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. If the hon. gentleman will compare the Estimates with last year's expenditure, under this head, he will find that we are asking for some $20,000 less than was expended last year. This is largely the result of the transfer of eighteen or twenty packers in the Post Office Department to the regular list, which enables us to reduce the estimated contingencies about $13,000. The expenditures last year, under the head of contingencies, was $23,000 more than the Estimates, and the Estimates this year will be lower than the estimate on account of the increased number of temporary employes in the Department. Hon. members who have visited the Department of Interior, both last Session and this, will be aware that on account of the extended operations in connection with land sales, there must be a large number of persons employed who are not on the regular staff, but are paid a per day rate, and this is charged against contingencies. The amount asked for next year is $23,000 less than was expended last year, and that has been brought about by the transference of men paid out of contingencies to the permanent staff.

Mr. ROSS. In view of that explanation, it might be supposed that there will be a reduction under the head of contingencies. Yet the hon. Finance Minister is asking $13,950 more for contingencies next year than for the last year.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The expenditure on contingencies will be at least $15,000 less than was expended last year.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). We have reason, then, to hope that the expenditure for contingencies will be reduced.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It must be largely reduced.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I must congratulate the hon. Minister on the desirable change which has been made by placing temporary employes, whose services were absolutely required, on the regular staff, especially as in many cases they were employed, not so much because their services were absolutely necessary, as because some unfortunate individual wanted temporary employment. I desire to call attention to the large expenditure of the Heads of the various Departments. I do not know the reason for the increase, whether it was on account of the great commotion at the Capital and the hon. Ministers', finding it necessary to travel hither and thither through the Dominion; but I find that the expenditure for travelling expenses was, perhaps, greater than in any previous year. The head of the Privy Council charged $256; the Minister of Justice, $535; the Minister of Militia, $921—I suppose that was in reviewing the troops and seeing that Her Majesty's active Militia were properly caparisoned and doing their work well—Secretary of State, $1,140; the Minister of the Interior, $3,005; Minister of Finance $749; Minister of Customs, $205; Minister of Inland Revenue, $125; Minister of Public Works, $1,677; Postmaster General, $1,527; Minister of Agriculture, $127; Minister of Marine, $360; making a total of $11,519. Of course, there was no contingent account of $167,000 to draw from, and there would be a nice margin left after the hon. gentlemen had spent $11,500. I hope it may be possible next year for the hon. Ministers to remain in the Capital more constantly and attend to their special duties, without travelling over the country and imposing such a heavy charge on the people.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Why is Mr. Schreiber paid as a departmental officer instead of his salary being charged to the Intercolonial Railway?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Schreiber was appointed, as the hon. gentleman knows, to the position he now holds previous to the change of Government in 1873.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Not to be chief engineer of the Intercolonial.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; to the same office as he now holds. After full investigation, the Government came to the conclusion that the best mode of administering economically the Intercolonial Railway was to have the responsible officer a permanent officer of the Department at headquarters; and having arrived at that conclusion, after an examination and report by an able officer specially sent down, Mr. Schreiber was appointed Chief Engineer of Government Railways in operation, and he has remained a permanent officer of the Department from that time. While he was engaged mainly on the construction of the Intercolonial Railway, I think the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) did largely employ him after the change of Government. The hon. gentleman very naturally would charge his salary to the construction of the Intercolonial. Mr. Schreiber's salary never was charged to the operation of the Intercolonial.

Mr. MACKENZIE. He had nothing to do with it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. He had nothing to do with the operating of the Intercolonial; but that was the position to which he had been appointed previous to the change of Government, that of chief responsible officer, and that at headquarters.

Mr. MACKENZIE. So $4,000 which should be charged to the working of the Intercolonial is charged to the Department here, making the expenditure on the Intercolonial that much less than it should be. Mr. Brydges was Superintendent of all Government Railways, not as Engineer, but as General Superintendent. Mr. McNabb was Chief Engineer of the Intercolonial in my time, and when the change of Government occurred, Mr. Schreiber was put practically in his place. Mr. McNabb had no successor except Mr. Schreiber.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Archibald is Mr. McNabb's successor, and discharges precisely the duties Mr. McNabb performed.

Mr. MACKENZIE. But he was not at first.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Archibald succeeded Mr. McNabb as Engineer of the Intercolonial, and fills the same position that Mr. McNabb filled previously. The hon. gentleman is aware that Mr. Schreiber is Chief Engineer of the Canadian Pacific Railway as well as of the other Government railways. The chief engineer of the Canadian Pacific Railway was receiving a salary of $6,000 for that service alone; and Mr. Schreiber has succeeded him, and is only charged on the Canadian Pacific Railway service some $2,000 for his additional services with relation to that work, in addition to the salary he has as a permanent officer, as Chief Engineer of Government Railways.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Of course, the duties of the Canadian Pacific Railway are very materially changed. There are little or no duties now to perform compared with what was the case when the other engineer was receiving $6,000. The surveys were not then completed. Many engineering works were still to be attended to; the plans and bridges and everything of that sort, and the entire work except certain sections given out to the Company for which the Company paid but $2,000 formerly—now it is very much more than $6,000; in relation to the work performed I am not complaining of the salary as a whole at all, I know that Mr. Schreiber is an able man. I quite admit that, but I complain of the distribution and mode of payment.

20. Stationery Office for stationery..... $7,000.00

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex.) This is the same vote as last year, I suppose it is an open vote.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes.

22. Amount required to provide for contingent expenses of the High Commissioner for Canada in London..... $4,000.00

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I will lend all attention to this expenditure. I remember very well that when Sir A. T. Galt was appointed High Commissioner, we were assured that the expenditure would not be very large. However, it has grown to be quite a considerable sum even now. We paid him last year $10,000; and according to the Auditor-General's report, $5,085 for expenses connected with his office in England; and $1,500 for travelling expenses to Manitoba; in all, he drew for one year, $16,585. The vote just proposed is $4,000 connected with his office in London. His contingent expenses last year were over $5,000. Can the hon. Minister of Finance tell us, whether he expects these contingent office expenses to be kept within the $4,000. I see by an Order in Council he was allowed $3,500 in lieu of house rent, fuel, light and taxes; and besides, he drew for house rent and repairs last year $132, for fuel $45, for gas $41 and for income-tax $243.33, besides travelling expenses. Perhaps the hon. gentleman is able to tell us now, whether he is going to confine the High Commissioner within the vote proposed, $4,000.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The first vote was sufficient to pay rent. We gave him $10,000 and fitted up the house and paid rent and other expenses; but we thought that it would be more satisfactory every way to make $4,000 cover all contingencies—house rent and everything of that kind. It was understood, and so acted upon, that if he had to visit Paris or Madrid, or any other portion of the continent, as High Commissioner of the Dominion, and endeavor to arrange treaties and that kind of thing, the expenses he so incurred would be paid. These are to cover expenses connected with his London residence. I presume that the items the hon. gentleman refers to were probably made in connection with the immigration office—at the Victoria Chambers.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I see we are charged £103 stg. for expenses on a mission to Paris connected with the commercial convention negotiations; £9 stg. for expenses to and from Dublin; and £26 stg. for ocean passage to Canada. Could the hon. gentleman tell us what services he rendered the country by these trips? What was the result of his mission to Paris, Dublin or Canada? And what was the public necessity for his trip to Manitoba, for which we are charged $1,500, which, as I stated before to the House, are charged to Capital Account, and not to ordinary revenue?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. With reference to the trip to Dublin, this item may probably be found in the present year; he went there to consult with the authorities on the subject of immigration. He went to Paris in connection with treaty arrangements which have not been as successful as could be desired, but are not yet closed; as to his visit to the North-West, it was considered of the utmost importance, that the High Commissioner who was in London to forward immigration interests, when parties called on him and made enquiries regarding the country, should be able to speak from his own observation, in addition to the information he possessed from reports, &c.; and, therefore, his expenses in this relation were paid by the Government.

Mr. CHARLTON. I see that Sir A. T. Galt is one of the applicants for a colonization grant on plan No. 2, for some fifty townships. I would like to enquire whether it is at all possible that he attended to that business, when he was making this journey, and charging the Government for his expenses?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I do not think so.

Mr. CHARLTON. The circumstances are rather suspicious.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I wish to ask the Premier at what time Sir A. T. Galt's resignation takes effect?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. On the 1st of June.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Who is to be his successor?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh!

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. gentleman can tell me in confidence.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think that the hon. gentleman and myself took the same oath—that we would not disclose advice given to His Excellency without his permission.

Mr. BLAKE. Has any addition been made to his staff during the last year?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No.

Mr. BLAKE. Has any officer of any kind been appointed?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; only Mr. Colmer, who has always been there. He was there as secretary for some years previously.

Mr. BLAKE. Is it proposed to make any change in connection with the change of office—in the organization of the office? Are other officers to be appointed in connection with the High Commissioner's office?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is no such present intention at all. Not a word, not a suggestion of the kind has been made.

23. Post Office and Finance Departments—Contingencies—Amount required to make payment to those officers of the Savings Bank Branch, Post Office and Finance Departments, engaged in balancing and computing interest in Depositors' Accounts, to 30th June, 1883.....$2,000.00

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Returns are sent to the Finance Department from the different agents of the Post Office saving banks quarterly, and upon the receipt of the returns, circulars are at once prepared and sent to every depositor stating what appears at the credit of his account, so that it may be ascertained whether the accounts are correct or not; this must be done within two or three weeks from the date of the returns, and the result is that we have either to employ persons not acquainted with this work or not competent to do it satisfactorily, or employ a portion of the staff extra hours until twelve or one o'clock for about three months during the year. It was considered unfair that these officials should do that extra work without extra pay, and the Government last Session thought that $1,000 should be placed at its disposal, $500 to the Post Office, and $500 to the Finance Department, to remunerate these officials. It was found by the deputy heads of the two Departments that that sum was not adequate, and they proposed another $1,000 should be added. In no other way can the work be done as economically.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I see that Senator Kaulbach was paid $120 last year out of contingencies for legal services in connection with the savings banks. Is it the intention of the Government to provide for senators in this way?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I am not aware who was employed. If there is a defaulter in Nova Scotia or any other place the hon. Minister of Justice employs such legal counsel as he thinks proper. I do not know who was employed in this case, whether it was a senator or not.

Mr. ROSS. The item appears on page 15 of the Auditor-General's report:

"The Hon. H. A. M. Kaulbach for legal services, $120. Mr. Kaulbach is a member of the Senate."

Mr. MACKENZIE. We ought to know whether senators are employed to do professional work.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Until I heard Senator Kaulbach's name mentioned, I was not aware he had been employed. I will make enquiries of the hon. Minister of Justice.

Mr. BLAKE. The proposal now made is of a dangerous character. Last year we were told $1,000 would be sufficient, and that that was the most economical way of doing the work. My impression is the most economical way would be to fix an additional remuneration for those employed to do extra work during a certain period of the year, and not go beyond that. I do not say that the hon. gentleman ought to call in extra hands, nor do I say that these officials should not get extra pay for their extra hours' work, but that extra pay should be settled and not departed from.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. There is a great deal in what the hon. gentleman says. Some men are quite free and willing to do the extra work they are directed to do. Others are not so free. Therefore, if we can select the men and apportion the increase among them it may be the better course, but we will allow it to stand at present and see how it works.

24. Amount required for salaries of board of examiners and other expenses connected with the Civil Service Act.....$2,500.00

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I would like to know to what extent the Government have availed themselves of those who passed these examinations. Six have passed at Halifax, six at St. John, eight at Charlottetown, six at Quebec, twenty-six at Montreal, six at Kingston, forty-six at Toronto, eighteen at London, six at Winnipeg, and three at Victoria, British Columbia—quite a considerable number. On looking at the examination papers they appear to have passed through a severe ordeal. Can the hon. Minister tell us how far these men have been utilized?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Since the Civil Service examinations, whenever we require a clerk we select one from those who have passed. Of course, if we require an official who cannot be found among those, a man of higher position, for instance an accountant, an engineer or a lawyer, or a professional man of any kind, we must go outside the list. But since the list was sent in by the board of examiners we have taken what clerks we required from it. I will bring down a statement giving the hon. gentleman the required information.

Mr. ROSS. Will the hon. gentleman give in more detail the mode in which it is proposed to expend this amount of $2,500?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The expenditure of the money was fixed by law during last Session, and the notice

I gave the other day is the result of the experience of past years. We found that the Act of last year was too expensive, and that it would be possible to reduce the expense considerably. We now propose to make one of the commissioners secretary to the board, and he is to receive $1,000 a year for his salary. The two other commissioners are to be paid at the rate of $5 a day for sixty days in the year. The commissioner who is secretary will be employed a much longer time than the others, and must consequently receive a higher salary. Under this arrangement the salaries will only amount to $1,600 per year. In the new Bill we ask for power not to be obliged to have examinations at all the places in the Dominion. We may have examinations only at headquarters by giving ordinary notice, and those that want to compete may do so. Examination only takes place at headquarters when promotions are to be made.

Mr. BLAKE. There are three classes of expenditure, the secretary, the commissioners and the local examiners. After the experience of last year, I was anxious to know what proportion of this expenditure—which is not very large, I quite agree—would be devoted to the services of the local examiners, and what to those of the commissioners, and whether he intended this system to be one which should involve the necessity of the attendance of one of the commissioners where there was an examination abroad, or whether that was to be conducted solely by local examiners.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The experience of last year was tentative; moreover, we wished to put the system at once into operation. We sent one of the commissioners to Halifax, one to Toronto, and a third to Montreal. It was to organize the system, and after the experience of one year we think that the commissioners can be sent from headquarters. The secretary may remain here and be at the same time examiner for the city of Ottawa. He has no travelling expenses, and he is paid yearly as an examiner, but he is paid according to the rate fixed by Parliament, at $1,000 a year. Then, at eight or ten other places where there were local examiners no travelling expenses would have to be paid, and we would pay to those examiners according to the present law $5 a day for each day of service, the whole time not to exceed sixty days. The experience of last year shows that three or four days will suffice for each commissioner to do the work. If there are ten of them it would amount to $200 for the local examiners. The hon. gentleman knows that these local examiners have only to see that the examination shall be bona fide, that there is no collusion, and that the papers are sent to headquarters without being interfered with. They are sent up here and then the board of examiners meet, and those three commissioners here examine the papers and make their report, and decide which candidates have succeeded in the examination.

25. Administration of Justice.....$36,700.00

Mr. BLAKE. I observe considerable reduction for the travelling expenses of the stipendiary magistrates. Would the hon. gentleman explain that?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There will only be two magistrates instead of three. Then the expenses of travelling consequent on railway communication, and the means of communication of every kind, have considerably lessened the expense.

26. Dominion Police.....$15,000.00

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Dominion Police, I believe, is about the same strength as last year, perhaps a few men more. The present Minister of Justice thought it well to improve the corps and organization of the body generally, and to secure that improvement he has had to pay higher salaries.

27. Kingston Penitentiary.....$112,878.23

In answer to Mr. BLAKE,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The details as to the different penitentiaries are given in the tables attached to the item, and, as the hon. gentleman will see, there is a decrease of over $8,000 in the Kingston Penitentiary, and there is also a decrease in St. Vincent de Paul.

Mr. BLAKE. I am sorry that the Estimates are supported by such an abundant absence of statement on the part of the hon. gentleman.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The statements are in the Estimates themselves.

Mr. BLAKE. True, but the reasons for the increases are not here or anywhere so far as is apparent to the Committee. It is true that the total vote of Kingston does compare favorably with the vote for last year, but when you consider that Kingston is estimated for no less than 100 convicts less than last year, you perceive why the total vote should not be enhanced but should rather be diminished. Taking the same officers this year who were employed last year and there is an increase on the staff of about eleven per cent. on salaries. You find that there is an increase—contrary to law as the law now stands—in the warden's salary of $400. I can see no reason for that increase at all. The warden of the penitentiary has supplied for him, at the public expense, a very handsome residence; in fact it was so handsome that after it was built we voted him a considerable sum of money to furnish it, because, as was said, it was impossible to expect a warden with a salary of $2,600 a year to furnish such a house as that. Then there are also other perquisites in connection with his office, and I can see no reason why contemporaneously with diminished responsibility, with a number of convicts smaller than about one-seventh, or one-fourth less than it once had, with an institution which the hon. Minister described last year as having got to a state of perfection, and consequently running easier—I cannot see why this time should be chosen to increase the salary of the warden. Then we find that the warden's clerk's salary is increased, so is the salary of the steward, the matron, the deputy matron, the hospital overseer, the clerk of works and chief instructor, the stone cutter, the mason, the carpenter, the miller, the quarryman, the foundry man, the baker, the keepers, forty guards, the messenger and the teamsters, or in all an increase of $4,360 on the salaries of last year. Then with reference to maintenance, I pointed out last year that the maintenance proposed for last year was considerably in excess of the maintenance which had been proposed for the year before per capita. Of course, there are many of the expenditures which partake of the nature of fixed charges and which do not vary very much by any increase or diminution to a moderate extent in the number of convicts. But the maintenance of the institution, leaving out these charges, is a reasonable test of economy, or the reverse. I pointed out last year that the expenditure then estimated for maintenance was higher in Kingston than the year before; it was $70.22 per head, while this year it is $74.70, an increase of $4.50 over last year. Under these circumstances, I think the hon. Minister of Justice ought to have supplied his representative in this House with such information as would have enabled him to give explanations upon the subject. With reference to the grist mill it will be remembered that three or four years ago a vote was proposed for the erection of a grist mill in Kingston in connection with Kingston Penitentiary. It was opposed by a good many of us at that time. We thought it was a mistaken vote, that it would not conduce to economy, that in an institution of that kind a steam grist mill should not be erected for the purpose of grinding wheat into flour for the convicts. On that occasion a practical man, a supporter of the hon. gentleman, who is not now in the House, Mr. Currier, the present Postmaster of this city, expressed his hesitation on the vote in these words:

"I doubt if the construction of this grist mill will tend in that direction. I know something about mills, and I do not think it would be a good investment merely for the purpose of grinding the wheat for feeding the prisoners. As hon. gentlemen will see the difference between the price of wheat and the price of flour is very small, and it might require a large number of convicts to be employed on it—

"Mr. MACKENZIE. You might have to employ a miller.

"Mr. CURRIER. So that the construction of that mill will not tend to reduce the expenses per capita of the prisoners. Besides, $10,000 would be a sum quite inadequate for the construction of a mill of that kind.

"Mr. BLAKE. The amount to be set apart for the mill is $4,800 only.

"Mr. CURRIER. I do not see how they can build one for $4,800."

Well, the vote passed and nothing was done, and there being no reappearance of the vote in the Estimates, I asked in 1891 if anything was to be done about it. The reply was:

"Mr. McDONALD (Picton). We did not proceed with it."

This announcement was made, and there was the end of it. Last year there was no statement that the grist mill was to be proceeded with either, and I suppose that there was no intention of going on with it, nor do I know under what vote it has been proceeded with. There is but a trifling allusion to it in the report of the warden, who says something about the grist mill being completed. I have no doubt the result will be increased extravagance, instead of economy. Now, I want to understand out of what vote, and under what circumstances, the grist mill was erected, how it is expected to pay, what is to be the cost of running, fuel, and so forth? What is the scheme for purchasing wheat on the market, and out of what vote the money was obtained for this experiment?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. With respect to the miller, of course he is appointed to run the mill. The report of the Inspector says:

"A grist mill, of sufficient capacity to grind flour for this, as well as for the Penitentiaries of St. Vincent de Paul and Dorchester, has been fitted up in one end of the Insane Asylum building. It will go into operation as soon as the steam from the new boiler-house can be introduced to set the machinery in motion. The warden expects that a goodly amount will be saved yearly by manufacturing the supply of flour on the premises."

I believe the Warden has very good judgment on these matters, and he has been very persistent in expressing his belief that a considerable saving would be effected in this way. This was done for the purpose of utilizing a portion of the building which was not wanted for other purposes. There was a stone building built, and all they had to do was to put in the machinery.

Mr. BLAKE. They had just put up the building.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It was built as an Insane Asylum, but the whole building was not wanted for that purpose.

Mr. BLAKE. I admit that it is an admirable place for a mill.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. With regard to the addition of $400 to the warden's salary, I do not think the hon. Minister of Justice would have given that if it were illegal, as the hon. gentleman suggests. I fancy that he satisfied himself that he had a right to recommend the addition of this small sum. It is quite true that the warden has a house, but it is also true that this is the largest penitentiary we have, containing the greatest number of prisoners, and is, I think, managed in the most economical manner; and, I think, as a sort of reward for his being the oldest officer of the kind, and his great efficiency, it is no more than right that he should receive this encouragement for his long, faithful and able management of that institution. The hon. gentleman objects to some small sums which have been added to the salaries of the officers. The warden's clerk gets an advance of $100 because he is an efficient officer, and has been there for some time. Some of the keepers and other officers receive an addition of $50 each to their salaries, I suppose, as being in the light of a statutory increase, although they are not, strictly speaking, civil servants, but they are substantially and practically civil servants, and they have got this $50 increase as it is given to other civil servants. I presume these are the reasons for making these small additions. The $500 for the miller speaks for itself. The hon. gentleman says the responsibility has diminished. Well, it has diminished this year, I fancy, in consequence of the superabundance of convicts who overflowed from some of the other penitentiaries—from Montreal and from Dorchester—and when transferred temporarily to Kingston. There were 217 released on the expiration of their sentence last year, and in consequence of the prosperity of the country there has been less crime than usual. I will try to get some further information to satisfy the enquiring mind of my hon. friend opposite.

Mr. BLAKE. I am glad the hon. gentleman has had grace enough to confess that he has not explained the item. He talks about little increases. These little increases amount to $4,360 in one year in one institution, or about 11 per cent. He has also laid down the proposition that to persons not in the inside department of the service he is going to apply the $50 statutory increase.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not say so.

Mr. BLAKE. Well, he said that they ought to be put on a fair footing with the others. How high are you going to put a guard? These men have had their salaries fixed for several years.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not say that.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman alluded to the $50 increase, and if we are to understand that this rule is to be extended, we had better have it regulated in some way. I contend that there is nothing in the condition of the institution or the country to justify these increases. The maximum salary of any warden, under the law, is $2,600. The hon. gentleman gave no explanation as to the vote out of which the mill was built. It is very important that we should know, after the vote had been taken, and the hon. Minister had declared that it had not been expended, how it is that the mill has been built after all.

28. St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary..... $83,546.36

Mr. BLAKE. Here, again, we are face to face with a number of increases. The salaries have been increased at the rate, not of 11 per cent. in this case, but of 6 and 7 per cent., an average of $2,770 upon the existing salaries, comparing the salaries in force last year with those of the same officials this year, or an increase of $2,770 on a total of $36,840. The staff is a large one and always has been, compared with other penitentiaries and compared with the number of convicts. The maintenance has also increased very largely. I pointed out last year that while the maintenance of the penitentiary at Kingston was, on an average of $70.29 per convict, that of St. Vincent de Paul was $33.33, or $13 a head more than at Kingston. But while the cost at Kingston has been increased to $74.70 per head, that at St. Vincent de Paul has been increased to $93.80, or $10 over last year—that is, $23 over the cost of Kingston last year, or $18.50 over that of Kingston this year, about 25 per cent. more. It is alleged, therefore, that to maintain a convict at St. Vincent de Paul—not counting the cost of the officials—but simply the cost of maintenance, rations, clothes, fuel, light, and medical attendance, &c., cost, one-fourth more than at Kingston, and an aggregate of $93.80 per head as compared with $33.33 last year. Some explanation should be given of these things. An attempt has been made to cut down this estimate by omitting another which generally appears and should appear, that of gratuities, for which no vote is taken this year. Something of this kind is always expected to take place, and it is not a reasonable way of forcing a less unfavorable balance to omit a vote which experience indicates to us must be used in the course of the year. Even when that course is taken and the working expenses, as they are called, are attempted to be reduced by a considerable amount, you find the total expenditure nearly the same. Though there is a slight reduction of one-eighth in the number of convicts, 350 as against 400, it does not appear that this any more than Kingston—indeed, I may say with reference to the maintenance, this much less than Kingston—is a satisfactory estimate for the maintenance of this penitentiary.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is true the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary has always been more expensive, comparatively, than that at Kingston. That, however, to a certain extent, must be the case, because a certain amount of staff and organization must be kept up whether the number of convicts is large or small; that is, in the smaller penitentiaries, there is a greater amount of comparative expenses than in the larger. It is true there has been, in years past, a considerable amount of extravagance, but that is now in the process of being remedied. The new warden, under the new arrangement—he has not been long in office—has caused very considerable improvement and economy. I see, in the Inspector's report, there is a reduction of $2,025 made in the seven months of his administration, and that great economy is being exercised. The expenditure on food, of course, varies greatly according to current prices, and there may be local circumstances and causes to account for the difference. I can well understand that the price of food and clothing in Manitoba is larger than at Kingston or at St. Vincent de Paul, and in consequence of the rise in the price of wages and the value of labor generally, it was found necessary to increase the salaries of the keepers and guards in order to have good men. Wages have increased all over the country, and the people pressed for increases of salary, which the responsible officers thought it expedient to give them.

Mr. BLAKE. If the result of the successful administration of the last two or three years of St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary, and that improved condition which the hon. gentleman says now exists, as compared with its previous condition, are to be proved by these Estimates, I am afraid they belie his assertions. If that economy and improved arrangements involve an increase of $10 per head in the maintenance of the convicts, I would rather have a little extravagance and mismanagement. We find that a certain increase in Kingston has been followed by an increase of more than double the amount in St. Vincent de Paul, on maintenance alone. The hon. gentleman says the smaller the penitentiary the greater the per capita cost. I referred to that when I made an estimate of the whole cost, including the cost of the officials; but if it does not apply to the cost of rations, fuel, light, &c., how imperfect an answer that is, is proved by simply referring to the Dorchester Penitentiary, which has 130 convicts, as against 350 in St. Vincent de Paul. Yet the cost there is but $67.50 per head, as against $93.10 in the latter, so that the smaller the penitentiary the smaller the cost. In the matter of rations, clothes, &c., in a penitentiary the size of St. Vincent de Paul, there is very little economy per capita to be obtained by increasing the number, for 350 or 400 convicts can be maintained, as regards fuel, clothing, lights, medical attendance, &c., as economically per capita as if you had 1,000. There is really no explanation why this increase should be so great. It is true the Inspector criticises in a somewhat humorous manner in his report the statement of this Warden, and administers to him a slight snub with reference to his statement that the expenditure will be greater for 1882-83, owing to the fact that the supplies contracted for are dearer, though awarded to the lowest tendering parties. If that be the case, the price of supplies ought not to raise very much more in the neighborhood of St. Vincent de Paul than in the neighborhood of Kingston, but we find a ratio of increase for the St. Vincent de Paul, more than double per head the increase over Kingston, and that piled up upon a considerable increase over the year before. With reference to the salaries of employes, it must be remembered that they have certain other advantages; several of them have houses at St. Vincent de Paul, and I do not think that even if their present salaries were retained, they could be induced to quit their situations.

29. Dorchester Penitentiary..... $15,856.00

Mr. BLAKE. In this case also we find an increase in expenditures on the staff. The accountant has an increase of $100; there is an increase of $100 for the chaplains, of $50 for the steward, of $40 for the hospital keeper, $150 for the guard shoemaker, $50 each for three keepers, $50 each for eighteen guards, $50 for the messenger, $600 for the farmer, $300 for the teamster. In this case also we find the matrons and deputy-matrons reappearing. It was stated last year on Concurrence that the Government would take into consideration a plan for the removal of female prisoners to some other point; Kingston was the point suggested. At that time a matron, receiving a salary of $500, and a deputy-matron receiving a salary of $300, each of them enjoying quarters in the prison, with other incidental advantages, were employed to take charge of two other women, convicts. Since that time, I believe, three more have come in, so at the time of the report there were five female convicts. It was deemed absurd to keep up a separate organization for so few convicts, and that as the female convicts of Quebec were sent to Kingston, there was no reason why the female convicts of the Maritime Provinces should not also be sent to Kingston. The Government conceded the view that a change ought to take place. No change, however, has taken place, and I call for explanations on that subject; and I also ask for the reasons why these other increases have been made. I find the rate of maintenance last year to be a little under 67½ cts., and therefore a very low rate relatively to St. Vincent de Paul, and low relatively to Kingston, a rate which evidences how very cheap the Province of New Brunswick is to live in, or how very extravagant the affairs of the other penitentiaries are conducted in this regard.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As regards the small increase of salaries I will be able, on Concurrence, to give fuller information. The hon. gentleman wants the female convicts to be sent away to other penitentiaries; he, however, admits that it is cheaper to maintain convicts at Dorchester than it is at Kingston, therefore, it is economy to keep them at Dorchester. Besides, the number of women convicts will likely increase. These women servants are more valuable at Dorchester than at Kingston; I suppose they do work in the wash-room. However, I will read the report of the Inspector on that subject:

"The Matron states that the conduct of the female prisoners 'has been very satisfactory.' They have been employed at prison house work, making their own clothing and mending for male prisoners. The number has increased from two to five since my last report. This would warrant the Department to continue the female convicts here, as the work they perform is very necessary, and its assessed value makes a favorable offset to the expense of their maintenance. Neither the revenue nor the administration of the penitentiary is in any worse condition now, as regards the female convicts being at Dorchester, than when they were at Halifax and St. John. Then, two matrons and two deputy matrons were employed to look after, during most of the time, from 1872 till 1880, a comparatively smaller number of convicts, than are at the present time taken care of by a Matron and her deputy. When the expense of transfer and the value of the female prisoners' work at Dorchester Penitentiary are taken into account, the gain or advantage of taking them to Kingston would not amount to much. Later on, it may be advisable to adopt this course; but, just now, there does not appear to be any necessity for a change in existing arrangements."

That is the reason given for retaining them there instead of transferring them elsewhere. As regards the matron and deputy-matron they hold their appointments, and it is not usual, I think, to dismiss people who have served for years without either putting them on either a gratuity or pension, or some means of supporting themselves. The matron, I know, was an old and deserving servant, and I fancy that her training there for so many years has not specially adapted her to employ her services profitably to herself elsewhere. It would be hard to turn her out after having once been appointed. I dare say, when she disappears that one woman will be sufficient to perform the services required.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. Minister has adopted the argument of the Inspector of Penitentiaries, and he has added some arguments of his own. He says, as I have pointed out, that it is cheaper living at Dorchester than at Kingston, therefore, it would be saving expense to keep these five females at Dorchester rather than at Kingston. I pointed out what the expense was at the two places. I pointed out that at Dorchester it was about $67.50 a year, and at Kingston about $74.70, by the present estimate, or a difference of $7 a year in favor of Dorchester. In order that we may secure a saving of $40 we pay salaries to a matron and deputy-matron, without considering residence and perquisites, and without considering the difficulties and inconveniences occasioned by having a female wing for two or three convicts, thus taking away a large portion of the prison wanted for male convicts; and we thus expend $800 in order to save $40.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is the cost of transport.

Mr. BLAKE. But how many female convicts would be sent up each year? If you take the statistics of the country and find how many out of the population of Quebec are sent to St. Vincent de Paul, and then transferred to Kingston; how many come from Ontario, with its 2,000,000 of people—and it must be assumed that the state of morality amongst females is as high in the Maritime Provinces as in the other Provinces—the hon. gentleman must come to the conclusion that there will not be an appreciable number of female convicts to be sent up here. The Inspector says there is no sufficient cause to make this change now, but that hereafter it may be necessary. The mending of the male convicts' clothes will not serve as an excuse for the present state of things. The truth is, it is a mistake. We built Dorchester Penitentiary with a view to economise and have a better system generally adopted, and to suggest, as the Inspector does, that because the state of things is no worse than it was when the old penitentiaries at St. John and Halifax were in operation, when the Provinces were obliged to keep a matron and deputy-matron in each of them, is absurd and is imposing on our intelligence. What we want is a reason why reorganization should not take place.

30. Manitoba Penitentiary..... $32,233.90

Mr. BLAKE. The boom is here, if it is not anywhere else in Manitoba. There is no doubt whatever that there is a grand swell in the prosperity of this penitentiary. The maintenance last year reached $111.36 for each convict, for that country is progressive as the hon. Minister of Agriculture says his Department is, and as a consequence the cost this year is to be $123.97 per head. Is it going to cost so much more to maintain the free men outside of the penitentiary in Manitoba, as it is going to cost for those inside? Is the cost of living increasing there, instead of diminishing? What is the reason we find over $120 per head as cost of maintenance for a convict in the Manitoba Penitentiary, twice as much as the cost at Dorchester. The chief keeper's salary has been increased by $100; the guards' salaries are also increased.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; there are two additional guards.

Mr. BLAKE. These guards were paid at a high rate before, and I observe their salaries are the same, but the number is increased. It may be necessary to increase the number of this staff slightly, because I see an increased number of convicts is estimated for, and it is possible two more guards may be required, though I hardly see the necessity for them. It is to be presumed the original difficulty with respect to the imperfection of the walls surrounding the prison have been by this time overcome. I know not how that may be. I desire to know what is the principle on which the maintenance of a convict in the Manitoba Penitentiary reaches nearly $124; is it the fact that the cost of living is higher this year than last? They do not use any agricultural implements there.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I presume that the estimate of last year was inadequate; hence the necessity for increasing the estimate for this year. I take it that the cost of living varies very much up there, that the cost of clothing, of food and of all appliances has been hitherto much higher than in the older Provinces. I hope we will find in another year that the cost of maintaining the convicts will be very much decreased. At the opening of navigation we will have steamers running to Thunder Bay, and a railway from there to the penitentiary in fact, and supplies will be forwarded at reasonable rates. At all events we will get competition, and the cost of transportation will be materially reduced. The increase in the number of guards is probably owing to the unprotected state of the building. I am not able to say whether any extra wall has yet been built, the lack of which has been assigned as a reason for keeping up a strong body of guards. There was a revolt there not long ago, a very serious one, when the convicts nearly overpowered their keepers, and it is, perhaps, in consequence of that outbreak we propose these two additional guards.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman expects that the cost of living will be very much decreased this year, because, he says, that during the approaching season a railway will be opened from Thunder Bay, and there will be competition. But it is for this very season we are estimating. The railway is to be opened in May, navigation in June, and these estimates are for the financial year, 30th June, 1883, to 30th June, 1884. Therefore, perhaps, the hon. gentleman will reduce the items, as he admits that the cost of living will be decreased with the opening of navigation.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The prison authorities, I suppose, estimated on the prices existing at the time the estimate was made, and, perhaps, with reference to the contract of last year. I hope that my anticipations are fulfilled, and that this estimate will be found too large next year, as last year it was too small. It does no harm to have the estimate.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman says the estimate is made on present prices. This reminds me of what happened when I occupied that position. I found the estimate very high, and sent to know the reason why. The answer of the officer was that he based the estimates on the expectation that there was about to be an European war, which would raise the prices.

31. British Columbia.....$21,706.83

Mr. BLAKE. I congratulate my hon. friends from that Province on the fact now demonstrated, that it is cheaper to live there, at any rate, than in Manitoba, because maintenance is something under $90, for the British Columbia Penitentiary, although the number of convicts is slightly less than it is in the Prairie Province; but here I find several increases. For these seventy convicts, of whom, if I rightly remember—it certainly was so in my own time—a very large proportion were heathen Chinese; their spiritual welfare is to be attended to on a more extended scale, at any rate as far as remuneration is concerned, though hitherto that was not found so necessary. In my time we simply availed ourselves of the services of ministers of religion in that neighborhood, giving them a certain engagement to attend to those who were not Chinese. We could conduct this rather economically; but the hon. gentleman proposes that two chaplains shall receive $500 each. I would like to know what has rendered this charge necessary. Then there are increases in the salaries of the warden, deputy-warden and chief keeper, each of $200. The surgeon has an increase of $100, though I do not see why this should be; and there are two more guards.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There are two chaplains provided for in the Penitentiary Bill—I presume; one Protestant, and one Roman Catholic.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not think there is any Chinese chaplain.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I was about to say, I do not know of any Chinese clergyman, or Bonze there; but the salary is the same as in Manitoba, $500. The fact of the matter is, that we must have in all penitentiaries Catholic and Protestant chaplains.

Mr. BLAKE. We have had them before in the penitentiaries for years. I am not objecting to that; but to the increases.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. There is no increase. In British Columbia, the salaries are put on the same basis as in Manitoba.

Mr. BLAKE. Do you know why? Because there is an increase in Manitoba too.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The two chaplains evidently heretofore received $300 each, and now they get $500, being put on a par with the chaplains in the other penitentiaries.

Mr. BLAKE. What other?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Manitoba.

Mr. BLAKE. My hon. friend brings down two estimates the same evening, and proposes to increase the chaplains' salaries in Manitoba to $500 each or to $1,000, and then says, it is reasonable to increase them in British Columbia, because they ought to be on a par with those of Manitoba.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Very well; at the Dorchester Penitentiary the two chaplains get $550 each, and I am quite surprised that the chaplains in British Columbia have not asked for a corresponding increase. They have to work as hard to save souls as the chaplains in the other penitentiaries—especially as it is part of their duty to try and convert the heathen Chinese. They ought to get a special allowance for that.

Mr. BLAKE. There is a very great difference in their situation. The number of Chinese was very large in proportion in my time. I fancy they were in a considerable majority. I would not be surprised to find that there were not more than twenty or twenty-five of other faiths in the penitentiary, and it is ridiculous to speak of the services of ministers of religion having charge of ten or twelve convicts, compared with chaplains having charge of sixty or seventy convicts. The services rendered are entirely different.

Mr. HOMER. One-third of the whole number are Chinese. I would like to know why the warden of the British Columbia Penitentiary gets only $1,400, while the Manitoba warden receives $2,000?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is another instance of better terms for British Columbia. I will inform the Minister of Justice of the complaint made, that injustice is done to British Columbia; and I have no doubt, that if he has not the fear of the hon. member from West Durham before his eyes, he will perhaps increase the salary; but after the scathing criticisms passed on the Minister of Justice by the hon. gentleman opposite, I do not know that he will venture to do justice to British Columbia.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE. The officers in the other penitentiaries are paid higher salaries than is the case in British Columbia; I think myself the living is quite as high in British Columbia as it is in any other part of the Dominion. I think the officers are entitled to be paid at the same rate, and I sincerely trust that when the Supplementary Estimates come down there will be an amount placed in them for that purpose.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I rather think that the officers get their rations in the penitentiary.

22. Salaries and contingent expenses of the Senate. $56,733.00

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Why this increase in the expenditure for the Senate? I notice there is a large increase for salaries. The Assistant Clerk of the French Journals, and the Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms, has an increase of $100; the Assistant Clerk of Private Bills, and Clerk, $100; Postmaster, $200; the Housekeeper, $200; the Speaker's Messenger, $100; there is an additional permanent Messenger, $500, and an increase of $100 to the House carpenter.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think that either the Finance Minister or any of us here can control these matters, as they are settled by the Senate Committee on Contingencies. The requirements of that House are communicated to the Minister of Finance, and all he has to do is to put them in the Estimates. He cannot control them or cut them down, and whatever we may think of them here, or any person may think, I do not suppose my hon. friend would want to get up a war between the two Houses by intermeddling with their quiet little additions of $100 here or $100 there.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I understand that they pay a higher rate than we do in this end to officers who perform the same functions. Does not the hon. gentleman think that the Government should interfere in such cases? Even their messengers are paid 50 cts. a day more than ours.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That has always been the case, and I am sorry that it has been so. The spirit is somewhat the same as that exhibited by an hon. member from any one of the Provinces when he insists that the salaries paid to the officers in that Province shall be the same as those paid to similar officers in the other Provinces. They regard it as a matter of Provincial dignity. I am bound to say that I think the officers of the Senate are fully paid, and more than fully paid, comparing their salaries with our officers, and their work with the duties which our officers perform. But we cannot well help it; I myself think, and I have suggested, that there should be a Joint Committee of both Houses to regulate these matters, and that as much as possible they should be officers of Parliament and not officers of one House or the other. I think considerable economy might be practiced in that way. I suppose the Senate, as an independent branch of the Legislature, prefers to retain the control and management of their own expenses, and I do not see very well how we can interfere, except by an expression of opinions, by the leading hon. members of the House—which, of course, they will read and ponder over—pointing out that while the work is much easier, the salaries are as large or, in some cases, larger. As my hon. friend opposite (Mr. Mackenzie) has pointed out, even the messengers are paid more, and they certainly have not near as much or as hard work to do as our people have. They do not sit so late, and the messengers, pages—every person connected with the House of Commons is much harder worked, and is obliged to work for longer hours and for a greater number of days in the year during the Session, and after prorogation, than the corresponding officers of the Senate.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I am sorry that the hon. gentleman has not some control over his colleagues in the Government in the other end, so that he might exercise some control over the salaries which are paid in the Senate. For instance, their Assistant Clerk get, $2,800; our Assistant, $2,400. I notice to, that although their hours are so short, their Sergeant-at-Arms gets $1,200, and the deputy, whose duties were so onerous that his salary had to be increased by $100, receives $1,000. The Postmaster, whose duties are not, I should think, very onerous, gets an increase of $200, and if I am not misinformed he also keeps a small dry goods store in one corner of the Post Office for the accommodation of hon. members of the Senate. The housekeeper, whose duties are not very laborious, one would say, also gets an increase of $200, and why the Speaker's messenger should receive an addition of $100 to his salary I cannot see. If I remember rightly the utterances of the present Speaker of the Senate, I should suppose he was an exceedingly economical man. I think he once said that the expenditure of the various Departments of this Government were as much under the control of the Minister as were his household expenses, but here we find the salary of his own messenger increased by $100. This officer must be under his control to a certain extent.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not suppose he is.

Mr. ROSS. He is the Speaker's messenger; there can be no doubt about it. Then the Senators themselves, whose time is not spent very steadily in their Chamber, must have an additional messenger at a salary of $800. I was inquisitive enough to enquire how hard these Senators have worked during the present Session, and I found that since the House met they have sat thirty-two days. We met on Thursday, February 8th, and the Senate adjourned, after an hour's sitting, to the following Monday, and on that day they sat for three hours. Since the Senate began its duties, their sittings have averaged about one and a-half hours a day. They adjourned over the Ontario Elections—why, I cannot say; and, if I am not mistaken, some of the hon. members of the Senate, during that contest, entered into the political arena. I think one distinguished Senator visited the city of Brantford, and did yeoman service for the Conservative party. I do not know, but, perhaps, he is non-political—perhaps he did not speak in favor of the leader of the Opposition in the Ontario Legislature—but he certainly took part in the election. Another Senator visited the county of Huron, and in order to make it convenient for them to go on these political peregrinations the whole business of the Senate must be stopped, forsooth, in order that they might take part in a political contest. After the Elections they came back and worked for fourteen days, then they adjourned over Easter for nearly two weeks; and so exhaustive were their labors during the Ontario Elections that when they met on the 1st of March, after the contest, they remained in Session for exactly ten minutes, no doubt being completely worn out with the duties they were discharging for the people of the country. More than that; I think the present Speaker of the Senate argued in 1878 that Canada should be kept for the Canadians. But, if I am not wrongly informed, that hon. gentleman sat for his portrait, not before a Canadian artist, but before an Old Country artist, and, under the vivid imagination of the painter, the picture assumed such herculean proportions that no place in the corridors or the lobbies of those buildings, or in the Departments, is capacious enough to enable that portrait to be exposed, and it had to be placed in the Speaker's own room. Now, why should we expend

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

$489 on a portrait which is to be excluded from the vulgar public gaze and to be hidden away in the Speaker's room, where it can be viewed only by those who have the entree to his chamber? I would ask further: Why did not that distinguished gentleman engage a Canadian artist, as is done in the case of Speakers' portraits generally? Our ex-Speaker, a most presentable man anywhere, had his portrait painted by a Canadian artist, and it cost $100 less than the other. The artist was a Canadian artist. That was encouraging a Canadian industry—a very desirable one. But hon. gentlemen opposite, represented by the Speaker of the Senate, and a member of the Government, could not encourage this native industry; he, forsooth, could not submit to this indignity of having his features preserved for posterity by a Canadian artist, but he must seek for a foreigner. Is this fair? I fancy that this and other items which I need not enumerate, account for a portion of this increase. I think we should not only express our dissatisfaction with this particular act of the Speaker of the Senate, but that we should express in the strongest terms our disapprobation of members of the Senate interfering in Provincial Elections. I think it is not their place to do it. In England, the members of the House of Lords do not interfere with the Elections for the Commons. True, this was not for the Commons; but Senators occupy, or claim to occupy, a judicial position, and to be in an atmosphere above that of ordinary party warfare. Now, what will be the effect on the community of these Senators entering the political arena, and giving the weight of their senatorial positions to the statements they make. I think it is entirely wrong, and I for one cannot express too strongly or too plainly my disapprobation of that course, and I hope that that expression, even from so humble a member as myself, will have its weight with the Senate. If they play the part of partisans, and engage in the party struggles of the day, as we know some of them have done, what confidence can we have in their judgment in the Senate? We shall have to regard Senators as marked with the same stripe as members of the Commons; if the Senate is to occupy in the country a non-partisan position we want these Senators to abstain from interfering in the Local Elections, and I hope this expression of opinion will, as I have said, have its due weight.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We have rather strayed away from the vote here before the House. This is a vote for the salaries and contingencies of the Senate, and I think if Dr. Playfair had been in your position, Mr. Chairman, he would have called the hon. gentleman to order for straying away so far from the subject before us. I will leave the Senate to read the amusing speech and badinage of the hon. gentleman opposite; but when he speaks of the present Speaker of the Senate, my colleague, the hon. Mr. Macpherson, I am quite satisfied that he is as economically inclined in every possible way as the hon. gentleman opposite. One of the messengers is detailed to attend to the Speaker's room, but the Speaker has no more to do with his salary than with that of any other messenger. It is fixed by the Committee on Contingencies, and if the hon. gentleman had been behind the door when these matters were discussed—I was not there—but I have no doubt he would have heard the Speaker contend for economy, and perhaps speak against some of these increases. I am quite surprised that the hon. gentleman, who is a man of letters, a man of classical knowledge, as he showed the other day, a man trained to the humane arts, should go out of his way to object to any gentleman sitting for his portrait to the portrait painter he fancies. The hon. gentleman's objection is quite in the style of Sam Slick, who said: "I went to Italy and I saw old smoked, dried-up pictures there that were worth five or six thousand dollars; why I can get new ones painted on my clocks, with new paints and new gildings, at five dollars a head." That is just the spirit in which the hon. gentleman makes these unfair and unworthy remarks.

Mr. BLAKE. I am very sorry that Canadian artists are hardly to be compared to those mechanical artists who painted Sam Slick's clocks, and that this is one native industry that does not receive encouragement from the Administration of the day. The hon. gentleman has raised a serious question. He has not only invited my hon. friend behind the door, but he has brought us all behind the scenes, and he has told us that the extravagance, which he admits prevails in the conduct of affairs in the other branch of the Legislature, is due, in effect, to the Committee on Contingencies, in which, he says, his colleague protested and complained.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not say that.

Mr. BLAKE. Well, he said that if the hon. gentleman had been behind the door, he would have heard the voice of the Speaker of the Senate exclaiming: "Do not add that to the salary of my messenger; remember my speeches throughout the country; remember the pamphlets I have written; remember the attacks I have made on the other side; I beg, I pray of you not to put me in a false position." And then he would have heard the Committee trying to drown the voice of the Speaker, and insisting on the increase which the hon. gentleman does not propose to defend but to laugh through the House. Now, we had a Contingency Committee here, and we abolished it, and appointed a Commission of Internal Economy, who were responsible to the House, and prepared the items with the assistance of the Speaker. Why cannot the hon. gentleman who possesses so much influence in the other Chamber, suggest to the unfortunate Speaker, who is so overborne in this Committee, that his policy cannot prevail in the matter of the Estimates, to introduce into the Senate the reform that was admitted a few years ago here, and have a Commission of Internal Economy to regulate these affairs there, so that Governmental responsibility might be introduced into the Estimates there, as here? It appears to me that the statement that the hon. gentleman has given us of the mode by which, in defiance of the hon. gentleman's colleague, these Estimates are made up, leads inevitably to that conclusion. Now, I am not disposed to blame the Senate very much for the short hours they have occupied this Session. It is well known that their business depends on the assiduity of this House; it is well known that the great bulk of the measures are initiated here, and until they reach the Senate, there is very little for that body to do; it is well known that the hon. gentleman's policy in this House—in this respect progressive, although in other respects we call it retrogressive—has been to postpone to as late a day as possible, the business of this House, and this Session this has been done to a greater extent than before. The conditions to which I have referred render it impossible they should have the late sittings we have. The great portion of their work is condensed into a small space at the end of the Session. It does seem a serious thing that our sessional messengers, who work sixteen hours a day on an average, should receive less than the messengers of the Senate, who have but short hours—ours receiving $2 per day, and those of the Senate $2.50 per day. The hon. gentleman this evening defended one extravagance by another. He raises the salary of one chaplain, and then asks if we can be so unreasonable as to require another to take a less sum; yet we find one particular class of officers, who work during long sittings, receiving less than others, who are engaged only during short sittings. This is a small matter, but it pervades, more or less, the whole estimate. I rather prefer to address myself to the question, whether the ordinary economy of the Senate should not be managed by the free action of that Chamber, guided, of course, by those who guide its deliberations ordinarily, on the same principle as we manage ours. That would be attended with beneficial results, and save the hon. gentleman those painful scenes and unavailing remonstrances to which he has referred.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I am not surprised at the attempts which hon. gentlemen opposite have made to do that which they have never been able to find any of their friends or supporters, either in the press or the other branch of the Legislature, to do. The remark which has just fallen from the hon. gentleman gives us the "true inwardness," if I may venture to use a slang expression, of his attack on the Speaker of the Senate. That hon. gentleman had the misfortune to write a pamphlet which had an important effect at the time the people were suffering from the serious misgovernment of hon. gentlemen opposite. They know that the hon. gentleman occupying the high position of Speaker of the Senate is a man of great ability, who was able to exercise on a very important occasion very patent influence in bringing about a great change in public sentiment which led to the overthrow of the late Government. These hon. gentlemen have had the press in their hands to as great an extent as had Mr. Macpherson. They had their friends and supporters to meet and answer those statements. They had able colleagues in the Senate, when that hon. gentleman took the responsibility of vindicating the opinions he gave utterance to through the press, and they failed to find one prepared to meet the hon. gentleman, either in the press or in the Senate, and discuss that question in such a way as would vindicate their position. It is unworthy of the hon. gentlemen to take an opportunity of making an assault on a gentleman who is not here to answer them. It would have been more becoming on their part, to have endeavored to find some friends of their own, seated in the same branch in the Parliament of the country, face to face with the hon. gentleman, to raise this question. I do not rise for the purpose of drawing attention to that, nor of alluding to the anxiety hon. gentlemen opposite seem to have that the artists of this country should not have an opportunity of having occasionally brought before them the work of artists of the Old Country. I do not think it is any discredit to Canadian artists to say it is quite possible to teach them something in the way of portrait painting, or that it is at all out of the way that they should occasionally study the works of masters in their art, who have enjoyed far greater and wider opportunities than they. Indeed, without any reflection on them, it is not at all to be regretted that an opportunity should be taken of handing down, not only one of the ablest public men of Canada, to posterity, but of handing down the portrait of a gentleman whose physical and personal appearance is such as to be a source of pride to present and future Canadians, who will have an opportunity of looking upon it. I will touch the only important points raised by either of the hon. gentlemen opposite. I mean, first, the point raised by the hon. member for Middlesex, that a Senator is violating his position, is dishonoring the high position he occupies, by entering the political arena and taking part in a General Election. I join issue with the hon. gentleman on this point. There is no man in this country who holds a position so high, in my judgment, save him who is placed in the position of chief executive head of the country, that does not do honor to himself and good to the country by giving the people the benefit of his advice, whether through the press or on the platform, with reference to the administration of public affairs; nor did hon. gentlemen opposite find there was anything derogatory to the character of a Senator in taking part in popular elections when the hon. Mr. Scott, the able leader of the Government in the Senate, went, as is well known, into the popular arena and used all the influence he could exercise in controlling the popular elections. So far from finding fault with him, I say that a Senator, holding strong views on public questions, is bound to use the talents God has given him in the most open and best way he can to promote what he believes to be good for the country. Is there any man in England who takes a more active public part in influencing public elections than Lord Salisbury, going from one part of the British Islands to another to deal with the public questions of the day in a most vigorous and trenchant manner? In doing so he is no exception. It is well known that the most distinguished peers of the realm are in the habit of taking the most active part in influencing public opinion of their utterances both on the platform and in Parliament. Therefore, I think the hon. gentleman had no right to raise that question. The hon. gentleman spoke of adjourning the Senate. It was adjourned for a time without any material hindrance to the progress of public business. The hon. gentleman ought to remember that in the Province of Ontario, his great exemplar, the person whose example he considers more important than any other, adjourned, I believe, the whole Parliament of Ontario for the purpose of taking part in the Dominion Elections of 1874. I think, under these circumstances, it is hardly worth while for the hon. gentleman to have made an onslaught on the Speaker of the Senate, and on the principle of Senators taking part in public elections, when the fact is notorious to the whole country that the hon. gentleman's friends in the Senate have used all the influence and power they possessed in the same direction and in the same way. Now, I want to say one word with reference to the suggestion of the leader of the Opposition as to this reform which he considers it the duty of the Government to bring about. I want to know why the hon. gentleman did not avail himself of the opportunity when he was in great distress, when his great difficulty was his unwillingness to belong to a Reform party who could find nothing to reform. The demand was as great as it is now, the Contingent Committee of the Senate bore as little reverence to the views of the Government of the day as they do now, there was as great a disparity between the salaries of the officers of the Senate down to the messengers, and the officers of this, as there is now; but the hon. gentleman's Government did not commit themselves, great as the necessity was, and did not undertake to put in practice what he now so strongly urges upon this Government to do. I imagine the difficulty would be precisely the same as would have met the hon. gentleman if the Government of my hon. friend who then led the Government, and who did not undertake it simply because he did not wish to bring about any conflict between the two Houses, which, after all, would be comparatively insignificant, if it was going at all to interfere with the harmonious working of the two branches of Parliament.

Mr. BLAKE. What I suggested to the hon. gentleman was, that in a body over which he had a greater control than he has even of this body, he should use that influence which he had from the fact that he has the political sympathy and support of the vast majority of this body, to introduce a reform in its administration similar to that which he was introducing here. The hon. Minister of Railways asks me why my hon. friend from East York—who never had a majority in the Senate, who never had control of that body, whose difficulty always was that one of the great legislative bodies of this country had been created by his adversaries—why he did not make use of the advantages which he did not possess, to do what I suggested to the hon. gentleman, that, under entirely different circumstances he should do.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. At all events, if the hon. gentleman opposite did not succeed in his measures, neither did he try. He should have tried. The responsibility of not trying rests upon his Government; and if his measure, through his influence in the Lower House, was carried and presented to the Upper House, and was then thrown out, then the responsibility of throwing it out rested on the Upper House.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Mr. BLAKE. Would the hon. gentleman suggest that such a measure as that should not have been introduced into the Lower House, but in the Senate?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The expenditure of public money is completely in control of this House, as much as it is in the other—there is not the slightest doubt about that.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. gentleman knows very well that such a measure as the one alluded to could only be carried by a Government having control of the Senate. The hon. gentleman himself, and any other hon. member of this House, would have denounced a Government for introducing a measure of that kind without first having it introduced in the Senate. Besides, we have abundant opportunity of knowing that, from the first, there was not a measure passed without evincing the hostility the Senate bore to the Government. It constituted itself into a political convention for the prosecution of Ministers for the time being. It was their entire occupation, for several Sessions, holding Committee meetings, sending abroad documents calculated to deceive, to one of which the hon. Minister of Railways has alluded, a pamphlet full of false statements—and flagrant and fraudulent statements. The hon. gentleman will remember, no doubt, that there was a second pamphlet issued to influence the Ontario Elections, but the people at once said they had had enough of Mr. Macpherson's pamphlets. The former ones were so bad that the last one was never looked at—or, if it was looked at, it was only for the purpose of influencing votes in favor of Mr. Mowat. The issue of the pamphlet had the effect of giving Mr. Mowat a majority he never expected. With regard to the expenditure of the Senate, I think this House has good reason to complain of some of the items, of the enormous amount spent in interior decorations and preparations for dinners, and everything of that kind. There has been nothing of the kind at this end of the House. I was obliged several times, while sitting on that side of the House, to call attention to some items in the Estimates, regarding the Senate expenditure. The hon. gentleman, now, must not be surprised if the items are brought up for discussion, and discussed calmly and carefully, as they have been, I think. The hon. member for West Middlesex, discussed the matter with perfect calmness, and in a very moderate tone. The right hon. gentleman who leads the Government admitted that there was cause of complaint, and it is the business of this branch of the Legislature to discuss these matters.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not object to it.

Mr. MACKENZIE. No; but the hon. gentleman will not move a finger except to condole with his friends, the President of the Council or the Speaker of the Senate—to condole with the latter in his attempts to control the expenditure of the Upper House when he was not able to accomplish it. Now, Sir, we have before us the fact that a body of this Legislature—I admit equal with this in every respect as to its legislative power with regard to matters affecting its own interior economy—is making extravagant expenditures. We must exercise some sort of influence upon that body, and if we find that though our own officers and our own messengers do immensely more work than is done in the Senate, they are paid no more than is paid in the Senate, it follows that either our people are underpaid or theirs are overpaid, and a public remonstrance by the members of this House, whether in conversation this way or otherwise, seems to be an absolute necessity. I think that the right hon. gentleman, controlling as he does such an enormous majority in the Senate, has surely control enough to carry some measure of reform in regard to this expenditure. I feel quite certain that if his own colleagues can do nothing there, if he will apply to such men as Senators Bellerose and Trudel, I have no doubt they will aid him to secure the needed reform. In the meantime, I enter my protest as a member of this House against the expenditure of the Senate as being entirely beyond what the necessities of the case require.

Mr. McNEILL. I wish also to enter my protest against any hon. member of this House describing an English artist as a foreigner. I was astonished to hear the hon. gentleman from East York describe two or three times over a resident and inhabitant of the Mother Country as a foreigner.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I will not discuss the matter with the hon. member; but, speaking of portraits, I desire to make a remark which I omitted. Some time ago, when the Speaker of the Upper House was obliged to retire for a time, it became necessary to go through the form of appointing a Speaker by Commission. A gentleman was appointed pro tem, until the presiding Speaker was able to resume his duties, and one of his first acts was to get his portrait painted. I do not think he was long enough in office to get his portrait completed; but it was completed within a year afterwards. This is a matter they have no right to do, surely. I will allow the hon. gentleman to take his portrait away with him if he wishes. There is no reason, because he was favored by being chosen by the Government to act two or three weeks when the Speaker was sick, that he should have his portrait painted. You, Sir, as Chairman of the Committee, will have somewhat of a claim to have your portrait painted, and I dare say it would give just as much satisfaction on the walls as does the mass of rubbish which covers them. I would sell the whole lot for $5; I would put them anywhere; they are a nuisance, and darken our corridors; and besides, who cares for them? Half of these men who have been Speakers, and have had their portraits painted, were not, in any sense, leading public men; some of them were, no doubt, and some of the portraits are of historical interest, but they are very few indeed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think the hon. gentleman had not the fear of the hon. member for West Durham before his eyes when he called portraits by Canadian artists rubbish, and declared he would sell them at $5 apiece. That is his idea of the value of Canadian art and Canadian artists. The hon. member has objected to a gentleman who occupied the position of Speaker for a short time, a venerable Senator whose portrait is valuable from his long experience in public life, and the high position he held in his own Province—having his portrait painted. The hon. gentleman objected to this portrait being painted, because he was so short a time Speaker. We have hanging on our walls the portrait of a Speaker who had no right to be Speaker at all; who had no right to be in this House; and there is a solemn decision that he had no right to be in this House, and no right to be Speaker. But we have got the portrait.

Mr. MACKENZIE. We have the further fact, and the hon. gentleman forgot to mention it, that the gentleman referred to was elected twice, and the hon. gentleman failed to oppose his election. I did not say that, as works of art, these pictures on our walls were rubbish. They may be good works of art for anything I know—I am not a great judge of that kind of art, and they may be excellent specimens of artistic painting—but they are no use hanging round our walls. We may have a high opinion of some pictures, and yet may not desire to have them in our drawing rooms. All I object to is filling up our corridors with portraits of men, year after year, in this way. As to the other portrait referred to, what I objected to was, that we were getting two Speakers' portraits painted for one term, and that is certainly not according to our usual practice.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It is amusing to see the hon. member for North Bruce (Mr. McNeill) becoming excited at Englishmen being termed foreigners. That same gentleman and all who act with him, are continually speaking of a large body of English manufacturers under that name, and in endeavoring to exclude their products from this country. And more than that, the supporters and defenders of the Government announced, as their policy, and made it a Statute law of the land, that when the Americans made certain reductions in the Tariff we would make the same reductions, while we made no provision in our law with respect to England which takes all our products free.

Mr. McNEILL. The hon. gentleman has made an explicit statement as to fact. He has said that I am in the habit of describing Englishmen as foreigners. I want to know when I ever described Englishmen as foreigners. I wish him to prove his charge. I have never done so, and it would be impossible for me to do so. So far as the Conservative party is concerned with the matter to which the hon. gentleman has referred, I can only say that nothing ever gave me greater pleasure in my life than to hear the applause which greeted the Finance Minister when he first introduced this policy, and when he declared it protected England as against other countries. The applause which greeted that sentiment from this side of the House, showed whether the statement of the hon. gentleman was true or not. But I can understand very well that the hon. gentleman should feel aggrieved, and should feel sore on this matter of the National Policy, and I know very well that his party treat the people of this country worse than foreigners, for they wish to hand over our manufactures body and bones to foreigners, to the people of the United States.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Who told you so?

Mr. McNEILL. Their whole policy has been that from first to last. That is the system on which they produced their whole theory of the management of the finances, and their whole system with respect to the policy of this country is one which would hand over the manufacturers of this country to the Americans. It is notorious that our manufactures were being killed out by the Americans before the hon. Finance Minister and the Government came to the rescue, and to-day our manufactures are being built up under that fostering National Policy. Hon. gentlemen are now endeavoring, day by day, and hour by hour, to destroy the policy which has been so beneficial to this country and to every young country which has adopted it. The hon. gentleman knows, or ought to know, that it is impossible for any country to prosper in manufacturing to any considerable extent unless it adopts a policy of Protection.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. McNEILL. It is a very simple thing for some hon. members to laugh. I ask the hon. gentleman to mention the name of any such country.

Mr. BLAKE. I rise to order. I beg to ask to what item these observations refer.

The CHAIRMAN. The hon. gentleman is not speaking to the point. The question before the Committee has reference to the expenditure of the Senate.

Mr. McNEILL. The point to which I was addressing myself was the accusation with respect to my calling Englishmen foreigners, and I will now address myself to the point if you say it is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. It is foreign to the discussion.

Mr. CHARLTON. This discussion has assumed a rather wide range. The hon. First Minister remarked, some little time ago, with reference to the speech of my hon. friend from West Middlesex, that had he been in England, no doubt Mr. Playfair would have called him to order, but then that gentleman would likely have called the right hon. gentleman to order himself, as well as the hon. Minister of Railways, and the speaker who has just spoken. I may be permitted, as all these hon. gentlemen have taken so much latitude—though I will not enter into the discussion of the National Policy, as my hon. friend from North Bruce did—to refer to one or two points made by the speakers on the opposite side. I take it that Canadian artists will be very much gratified to learn that the hon. First Minister of this Government compares them to men who daub on pictures as on Sam Slick's clock faces, and with the remarks made here by the hon. Minister of Railways, that it was desirable that in one instance, at least, a portrait should be brought here worthy of being looked at and as something to copy after; and that to bring a portrait from England was a very desirable thing, because Canadian artists were not worthy of the name, by imputation; and that then they would have to look at a copy worthy of being considered as a work of art. Then the hon. member for North Bruce showed a tender conscience about having Englishmen characterized as foreigners. I do not wonder at the tender conscience which he exhibits, for probably he felt a twinge of conscience from the fact that, a few nights ago, he here treated these men as aliens and foreigners.

The CHAIRMAN. The hon. gentleman is not speaking to the question.

Mr. CHARLTON. I will now come to the question, which we have not been within a gunshot of for some hour or more—the contingencies of the Senate. I would be glad, if permitted, to make a few more remarks, however, in relation to the remarks made by these hon. gentlemen. I wish now to call attention to another item—to the fact that the Senate supply themselves with stationery at an expense of $5,838 per annum, which amounts to $71 for each Senator. The charge for the same purpose for the House of Commons is $9,500, or an expense of some $30 less per head than for the Senate. Now, I do say that the extravagance manifested by these hon. gentlemen of that Chamber ought to be looked after; and every comparison we make between their expenses and the expenses of the House of Commons is most unfavorable to the Senate. I wish to know if their duties are so much more onerous than ours that they do double the correspondence which we do, and if there is any reason why it should cost the Senators about $30 per head more for stationery allowance than for the House of Commons. It strikes me that $71 per head for each Senator is a most extravagant and most unjust expenditure under that head, and I call attention to that matter; also to another matter. Here is a reading room maintained for the Senate, to be paid for from the House of Commons. Why should not these appropriations be put together for a reading room for both Assemblies? We could spend then for this purpose $3,000 and save $1,000, and have a reading room better than either one which we have to-day; and I think that this suggestion is worthy of consideration. I do not know, indeed, whether these hon. gentlemen would associate with the hon. members of the House of Commons in a common reading room, but that is the only reason which can be assigned for any other arrangement than having one in place of two. Certainly, the distance to travel is only a few feet more for the members of one or either Chamber, and a $3,000 appropriation would secure a much better room for both than $4,000 for two rooms. I think that this suggestion is a very practical one, and that my suggestion as to the stationery allowance business ought to be looked after. It is not quite so bad, however, as it is at Washington, where the members of the House of Representatives vote themselves gold pens, dressing cases, writing desks, and libraries, &c., at an expense of $500 or $600; but certainly $71 per head is too much for an ordinary, reasonable, and economical allowance for stationery; and there is something concealed in that, which ought not to be. I am perfectly well aware, that the House of Commons allowance is an extravagant allowance; I know that we make use of more stationery than is necessary, the stationery and ink given to each member of the House of Commons furnishes three times the amount of stationery which we require in the course of the year; but a nearly double allowance is certainly an act of great extravagance, as is done in the case of the Senate.

33. House of Commons, salaries per Clerk's Estimate. $61,000.00

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I see that there is an increase of $400 in the salary of the Assistant Clerk of the House of Commons. I think that he was paid $2,000 last year, and I notice that this year the amount is $2,400. If I mistake not, the Assistant Clerk who sat at the Table last year, Mr. Leprohon, was superannuated at an allowance of $1,531, I think. His place is worthily filled, I am happy to say, by a gentleman who receives $400 more than the gentleman who was superannuated; so we have a superannuation charge of $1,500 and we are paying an additional charge of $400 to the salary of the present Assistant Clerk, which makes $1,900 more for this service—

Mr. BLAKE. Then we are paying Piché's superannuation.

Mr. ROSS—than we were paying last year, and then the old Assistant Clerk, who sat at this Table, also receives a superannuation allowance; hence we have two superannuated Assistant Clerks, drawing between them $3,000 or $4,000, and an active Assistant Clerk who does the work for $2,400. Can we get any explanation for this? If I mistake not, Mr. Leprohon is quite as physically able as he was last year. I have met him frequently since the House met, and conversed with him; he looks quite lively and seems quite able and in the full possession of his faculties. I do not think that the House will cordially approve of the superannuation of an efficient officer, who had been long in the service and filled the position worthily, in order that his position might be given to some other gentleman, no matter what his qualifications are. I await an explanation.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The discussion just now is as to the salaries of the House of Commons, but the hon. gentleman is going into the question of the superannuation of previous officers, a separate matter.

Mr. ROSS. It is a cognate subject.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. We will be quite ready to discuss it and bring down the papers connected with the superannuation of Mr. Piché, if this is desired, and of Mr. Leprohon too, when the proper time arrives, but that stands quite apart.

Mr. ROSS. I do not know as to that.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; it is quite apart.

Mr. MACKENZIE. You cannot discuss this question without discussing those two cases.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes, you can. The hon. gentleman is quite open to attack the Government for the superannuation of these two officers, and censure it if he thinks proper. They are superannuated and are no longer officers of this House; that is done, and we must take the censure, if we are censurable for the removal of these officers, on the proper course being taken, and the proper notice being given. But the question now is as to the salary of the Clerk Assistant. Mr. Leprohon received $2,300—$2,000 as clerk assistant and $300 as secretary to the Speaker. His successor was appointed first at $2,000, but it was thought by the Committee on Internal Economy that considering the important duties he had to perform, he should receive $2,400. If the hon. gentleman will look back to the Senate he will find that the clerk assistant there, with half the work, gets $2,800.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). There is no economy in the arrangement, because the assistant sergeant-at-arms gets $300 as secretary to the Speaker, so that the Speaker has his secretary all the same. It seems that it was convenient that the Government should advance the salary of the assistant clerk to $2,400, and thus make ample provision for him, while the salary of another official was advanced by making him secretary to the Speaker. With regard to the question of the superannuation of Mr. Leprohon, I think it is germane to the question before the House. If there is a grievance, if he has been superannuated to make room for another, that question ought to be discussed and a reason given for it. We know that a certain gentleman did act as Assistant Clerk, and that we never heard any objection as to his efficiency; we see another gentleman at the Table, and we have a right to ask why this departure? What explanation has the hon. gentleman to give for the superannuation of that officer? Was it made with the view of preparing the way for another, or is it justifiable on its merits? If it is justifiable on its merits, then I should suppose that the superannuated officer would have shown some signs of bodily infirmity or unfitness for service. This question of superannuation is becoming a serious one, and I say that the House is bound to examine critically every single case of the kind. I call attention to this matter incidentally at present, but I shall take the opportunity of asking the hon. gentleman for explanations later on.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. What I stated was that I could not be expected to be drawn into a discussion of this question, which is not germane to the question of whether the Assistant Clerk is receiving too large a salary in getting $2,400. The hon. gentleman said he wished to discuss this question of superannuation, and I can only tell him that we are ready to discuss it at the proper time. Since I spoke before, my hon. friend beside me has placed in my hands the following letter, dated 1st May, 1882:

"To the Hon. the Commissioners of the Internal Economy of the House of Commons.

"GENTLEMEN,—I beg leave to state that I was advised by my medical attendant to cease all official business and mental occupation and to travel, in order to restore my impaired health, my decreased strength and nervous system, which are seriously affected by a long official life of nearly 40 years in the service of the Legislative Assembly since the union of the two Canadas, and in the service of the House of Commons since the confederation of the several Provinces.

"Under these circumstances, I beg leave to ask the Hon. Commissioners that they may be pleased to recommend my superannuation to the Government.

"I have the honour to be, &c.,

"J. P. LEPROHON,

"Assistant Clerk of the House of Commons."

Mr. BLAKE. I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman that the condition of things which is evidenced by the various entries on the Public Accounts as to the Assistant Clerkship is an unfit subject for comment on the occasion of this vote. As an hon. member has pointed out we have on our books the names of three persons who have filled that office, Mr. Piché, Mr. Leprohon and the present Assistant Clerk. This Government appointed Mr. Leprohon. I forget whether they appointed Mr. Piché, but they appointed Mr. Leprohon, having full experience and knowledge of his fitness for the office. He was in the office for a short time, and I am sorry to learn from the letter which the hon. gentleman has read, that his health failed him, though he certainly did not exhibit, up to the latest period at which he was present at the Table, any failure of his powers, or that he was less fit for the office at the close of his official career than at the commencement. Now, we find that the Government, in making the new appointment, has practically increased the salary very considerably, and that the salary which was paid to Mr. Leprohon, for the combined offices which he filled, was less than that which is now paid for the one officer, while at the same time there has been a charge of some $1,800 on account of the superannuation of the late Clerk Assistant.

We are sometimes told that though superannuation may cost more, still there is a certain saving, because the new salary is reduced, but in this case the public charge has been increased, first by the superannuation, and secondly by the increased charge consequent upon the superannuation. I think some reasonable explanation of that increased charge should be made.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. First Minister is not very consistent in his remarks. He began by stating that he was prepared to give explanations upon the question of superannuation, but upon that point he has given none. Then he said he was prepared to discuss whether the salary paid the present Clerk Assistant, was a proper one or not, but upon that point he has only given one explanation—if it can be called so—and that was, that the present officer was doing less work than formerly.

36. Publishing Debates..... $20,000.00

Mr. BLAKE. That is the old estimate, I believe?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. Is it anticipated that that sum will be adequate?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I think that there is a supplementary estimate of $5,000.

Mr. BLAKE. Might I enquire as to whether there is any intention of increasing the strength of the English reporting force? Provision has already been made, I believe, for an addition to the strength of the French reporting staff. Has any provision been made, or is any intended to be made, for increasing the strength of the English-speaking reporting staff?

Mr. BOWELL. I am not on the Committee; perhaps the hon. member for West Middlesex will answer the question.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). The matter was brought before the Committee at its last meeting, but no decision was arrived at. It is now under consideration. I might say, however, that we have increased the French reporting force by the addition of one French reporter. We hope that by that means the French members of this House, who use their own language in discussion, will be more fully and more satisfactorily reported than they have been before. We propose also to make a change in the system of translating the Debates from English into French, and vice versa. The intention is to appoint a staff of translators, and we hope to utilize on the French staff the additional French reporter when his services are not required in the Chamber. These are all the changes we have made, with the exception of one other. It has been decided that members of this House, instead of receiving, as now, two copies each of the bound volumes, should receive five copies each. Such frequent demands are made upon the Debates Committee for copies of the reports for libraries and for public institutions, as well as by members, that we think the only way in which these demands can be met will be to supply the members with the additional number of copies. By that means our Mechanics' Institutes and other institutions could be supplied with a valuable work of reference, and new members, who, on coming into this House are unable to be supplied from our stock on hand, could perhaps have access to back numbers, and thus overcome the difficulty of supplying themselves with information that seems to be very much in demand.

Mr. BLAKE. I am sorry to hear that an increase of such a large amount is proposed in the vote for the Hansard; but I have always said that so long as the House chose to continue this expenditure, it was essential that, whatever expenditure was necessary, in order that there might be an effective and accurate report of the Debates, must be voted; and I have to repeat the observation I made last Session, that my belief is that the English-speaking staff is not adequate in point of strength. I do not often look at the Reports of the Debates, although I occasionally do so, and I observe, this Session, what I did last Session, namely, manifest errors, arising, so far as I can judge, from the fact that the writing out of the reports, in the first instance, must be done with very great rapidity, and mechanically. I observe most amusing instances of words, similar in the writing, in long-hand, and similar in sound, being substituted for those used. As I have said, I very seldom look at any of the reports, and least often of all to those of my own speeches; it is too trying to my patience; but my attention was called by an hon. member the other day, to a report of my speech, in which it was said: "Lawyers have said this, and priests have said this." "Surely you did not say priests have said it," said he? I could hardly remember what I did say, but I recollected it was "jurists." And still absurd misstatements are constantly made. So, again, with reference to the punctuation—sentences are almost knocked into pi, if even these sentences were spoken. I believe all these things are due, not to the want of skill or knowledge, or diligence, or the part of the reporters, so far as I can judge from the work presented, but to the simple circumstance that unless we have an adequate staff, you impose too much labor upon that staff, and press it too hard. Now, I have more than once expressed my doubt as to the expediency, on the whole, of keeping up the Official Debates. I am more and more confirmed in the opinion that it protracts the Session; that it induces a great many men to speak rather for the Hansard than for the House; and that the main object of a deliberative assembly, in which it ought to be the height of every man's ambition who addresses it to maintain the attention of his audience, instead of speaking to the reporters, is not accomplished. But while I hold that opinion, and am prepared to carry it into action, I still maintain that we owe it to ourselves, and to the country, that so long as we decide to keep up the report of the debates, we should have the strength necessary to give us a fair and accurate report; and I believe that with one more reporter, in addition to those of the excellent quality we have now on the staff—I have not observed it, but it appears to me to be equal to the former quality—the opportunity of extension would be greater, the weariness of hand, and eye, and mind, would not be so great, and the whole work would probably be accomplished in a manner creditable to us, and to them, which I do not think now to be the case, so far as I can see, for lack of an efficient officer.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I stated $4,000 or $5,000 had been asked for the current year, and a like sum for next year, and I presume that it is to cover the cost of the additional numbers of Hansard; so that it will amount to about $10,000. As an illustration of what the hon. gentleman has just said, that while the reports as a whole are very accurate, still, from the pressure of the work and other causes, mistakes do occur. I may mention one that created some little excitement lately. An hon. member asked me a question with reference to the duty on jellies and jams, and I was made to say in Hansard that there was a duty of 5 cts. a lb. on hams, I had telegrams from everywhere in the country asking if this was correct.

Mr. CHARLTON. The additional vote for the Hansard is not exclusively for the three additional numbers to each member. There has been already an additional French reporter appointed, and there is a scheme, as the hon. member for West Middlesex has stated, for having the translating done by a staff. With reference to the question whether the English staff is sufficiently strong, that has engaged the attention of the Committee, and the Committee are at a loss whether to arrive at the conclusion that another reporter is necessary, or whether a change should be made in one or two members of the staff. But it is impossible to have reports taken in the way they are taken here without mistakes occurring similar to that to which the hon. Finance Minister referred when the word "hams" was reported instead of "jams." On the whole the Hansard reports are fairly correct. In my speeches I have found, as a rule, two or three takes admirably reported, scarcely calling for any correction; then perhaps one would follow very much involved. If that is the fault of any one or more of the staff, it may be necessary to make a change; but it may be possible that the staff is over-worked, and that all the change required is the addition of another reporter. With reference to the extra numbers of the Hansard, some hon. members may be disposed to find fault with that proposal as an excessive allowance. I, for one, have found that requisitions have been made to me for numbers of the Hansard for the Mechanics' Institute and other institutions, and I have been very sorry to be unable to comply with their request. In the great majority of cases hon. members could find good use for four extra copies, and if we compare our allowance with that of members of the United States Congress it will be found very moderate. While the new arrangement gives each hon. member five numbers, each member of the United States Senate received twenty-four copies of the Congressional Record, so that, on the ground of comparison, we should, even with our additional four numbers, exercise a very fair degree of economy. The complaint that the Hansard tends to lengthen the Session is undoubtedly well founded. No doubt, our Session is lengthened by two or three weeks from the fact that the speeches of hon. members are fully reported. Whether this evil is more than counterbalanced by the benefit of having an accurate report of the proceedings of Parliament is fairly open to question, and it may be maintained that it is better to prolong our Session to this extent than have no official report of our proceedings. If we wished to cut down this tendency to lengthen the Session, we might do so by adopting the rule enforced in the United States House of Representatives, where no member is allowed to speak for more than one hour, and when, in certain stages of debate, the duration of the speeches is cut down to five minutes. At the expiration of the allotted period the Speaker brings down his mallet on the marble table, and the member who has the floor is obliged to resume his seat. If we adopted that rule we would get rid of the evil of making unduly long speeches. Hon. members would be more concise in their remarks, and it would be very important that, before abolishing the Hansard, for the sake of short Sessions, we should try this system.

Mr. BOWELL. Hon. members could write out their speeches and hand them to the Hansard—

Mr. CHARLTON. That would shorten the Session, but would not reduce the volume of the Hansard.

Mr. BOWELL. That is what they do in the United States.

Mr. CHARLTON. And it would be entirely at variance with our traditions. The Hansard would not then be a memorandum of the transactions of Parliament.

Mr. BOWELL. And the suggestion of the hon. gentleman is altogether at variance with the spirit of British institutions.

Mr. CHARLTON. It is, perhaps, a great evil that an hon. member should abuse the privilege by using unduly the valuable time of the House. Under ordinary circumstances it would be possible to limit the time, but on occasions such as the presentation of the hon. Finance Minister's financial statement it would be necessary to give more latitude.

Mr. ROYAL. In connection with the Reports of the Debates, I am very glad to hear from the hon. member for Middlesex that it is the intention of the Committee to recommend to the House the propriety of appointing a permanent translating staff. As the translation is made now, a great many errors occur, owing to the rapidity with which it has to be made, and also from the great difficulty of translating correctly English into French. A person must be fully conversant, first with the English language, and more fully still with his own, in order to do the work properly. In many instances the translation is deficient as regards correctness of language, and errors often creep in such as those referred to by the hon. Finance Minister. If this translating staff is to be appointed, I cannot too strongly impress on the minds of the Committee that they should choose first-class men, if not literary men—at least men who are fully conversant with their own language. With regard to errors which take place sometimes in the Reports of our Debates, we must not be too hard on the reporting staff, because we know that in some books we read errors of a similar nature to those referred to by the hon. Minister of Finance and the hon. leader of the Opposition, which have crept in and destroyed the whole value of the Debate. It is impossible, owing to the rapidity with which these Debates are printed and distributed, that such errors should not take place. It would be better that we had no translation of the Hansard if we have not a first-class one, and it would be so much money thrown away if the translators to be appointed are not first-class men—not men appointed through favor, but through their own merit, experience, and reputation. I believe the step taken by the Committee is a step in the right direction.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I take this opportunity to throw out a suggestion to the Committee with reference to the distribution of the Hansard to newspapers. It is true that sometimes rather contradictory statements appear, and it is not to be wondered at. It is rather to be wondered at that, with speeches rapidly delivered and reported, and passing, after being rapidly written out, from the hands of the Hansard reporters to those of the printers, mistakes should not oftener happen. The rule is to send the uncorrected sheets to the different newspapers and except when, as in some cases, hon. members previously correct those sheets, the reports in the newspapers do not correspond with the sheets as subsequently revised and corrected. We know how easy it is to drop a figure in taking down a number of figures, making 100,000 in place of 1,000,000 and how mistakes are liable to be made such as that to which the hon. Finance Minister has referred, by substituting "hams" for "jams," making it appear as if the duty on hams had been changed to 5 cts. a lb., and it is only fair to the newspapers that means should be taken to furnish them with the corrected instead of the uncorrected sheets.

Mr. DAWSON. I quite agree with the last speaker that it would be decidedly better that a corrected copy of the Hansard should be sent to the newspapers. The first copy leads them into many mistakes, and it is very important that they should have a correct copy of the debates.

Mr. ORTON. The Hansard sent to newspapers ought to be provided with an index, and without this it is of very little use to the newspapers.

Mr. CHARLTON. The index is sent to the newspapers with the bound volume.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). In reply to the criticisms of the hon. member for West Durham, of the mistakes made by the reporters, I have just to say that one or two of the mistakes in that speech of his own, were not made by the reporters but by the proof-readers. My attention was called to it, and as a member of the Committee, I find in referring to the manuscript that the words were correctly written by the reporter, but incorrectly revised by the proof-reader. I make this remark in justice to the reporters.

Mr. BAIN. I take leave to dissent from the general current of this Hansard discussion. I never had a great worship for the Hansard myself, and I sometimes doubt whether those of us who do not make long speeches do not suffer enough in having to listen to them, without being obliged to see them distributed over our ridings afterwards. With reference to the proposal to furnish each member with five copies of the Hansard, I confess I have doubts whether it would not be found in practice to lead some of us into difficulty. We are supplied with only one or two copies, we can say to applicants who come to us for a book that is really an expensive book, that we are not furnished with them; but when our constituents come to understand that we are possessed of four or five copies to distribute freely, I am afraid we shall have many applications for a costly book that we will not be able to satisfy. With reference to another matter, I admit there is a great advantage in having distributed through the country speeches that contain matter of general interest to the people, but there is generally sufficient interest taken in that speech by the political friends of the speaker to secure a large distribution of it through the different ridings. Besides, this plan, while costing less would reach a great many more readers. I confess that I have strong objection towards increasing the expenditure on this Hansard. I would like, if it could be carried out, something after the fashion suggested in the early part of the evening by the hon. member for West Middlesex, by which a summarized abstract of the principal reports should be published, showing the farmers what was the business of the Departments and the general business of the country. I am satisfied that money spent in this way would do far more good than it will be in supplying each member with several copies of the Hansard.

38 Grant to Parliamentary Library... $10,000.00

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. This is practically a vote for $11,000, $1,000 of which is wanted for the purchase of some books in the United States with reference to Canadian history.

Mr. BLAKE. If it be a fact that the present appropriation is $10,000 plus $1,000 which was added, requiring only $1,000 more, the Government themselves taking the law books into their hands, as they appear to be doing, it will require only $1,000 more to carry out the scheme of the Library Committee. I think I may speak for the Library Committee, and I think I may say that we were very anxious that the vote should be specific as to the $2,000 for the purchase of works relating to America, and then a general grant of $10,000. The hon. Finance Minister is proposing to give us $11,000, and what we want is $12,000, but in a different shape from this.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. The vote asked for by the Library Committee was, as the hon. member for West Durham says, only slightly in excess of that asked for in these Estimates, namely, that the vote should be $10,000 for the ordinary purposes of the Library, supposing that the Government would transfer to the Supreme Court the vote for the Law Library, as is proposed to be done, and that a further sum of $2,000 a year, for five years, be granted for making a complete collection of books, relating to North America, a subject upon which this Library, of all the libraries in the country, should have a good collection. These are becoming more rare and more valuable, and the need of this further sum was brought with a great deal of force before the Committee by an hon. Senator, who was for many years a very respected and influential member of this House, and who has taken great interest in these matters. The hon. Finance Minister says that this is practically a vote of $10,000, and we only need $1,000 more to secure our object.

Mr. CHARLTON. I am sure the House and the country will find no fault with the appropriation for making our Library more complete. We have the most magnificent building for a Library in the country, and we ought not to hesitate over a slight expenditure that will make our Library a subject of just pride to Canadians. I would be willing to make the appropriation double what it is. I hope that the Government and members of the House will comply with the recommendations of the Library Committee fully and give everything they ask, and that in the way they ask it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am afraid that if that were done we would have to take an additional vote for building a new Library. That is the real difficulty. We have not sufficient room, nor any means, without disfiguring this building, of increasing the room for stowing away books, and we shall have some day or other to take up the whole question as to the formation of a National Library, quite distinct from the Parliamentary one, and place it in a separate building. But the vote is a liberal one, and no doubt the Finance Minister will be able to find another thousand dollars.

Mr. CHARLTON. I have a suggestion to make with respect to the want of room. If we were to take this dark chamber and build out a wing where we could have open windows, and be able to breathe the fresh air, and were to turn this Chamber into a Library, we would have plenty of room for books, and even if we were to banish a lot of the old rubbish to make space for works of some value there would be no loss.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Pictures.

Mr. BLAKE. The removal of the books to the Supreme Court, which has already taken place, and the removal of text-books which has yet to take place, will leave room for several thousands of volumes without appropriating the space in the reading room. There is no present pressure, without resorting to the somewhat radical step which the hon. member for North Norfolk (Mr. Charlton) proposes, or the removal of any of the books now in the Library, some of which we would be able to do without, and not feel the loss.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I wish to call the attention of the Chairman of the Library Committee to the matter to which my hon. friend has referred. The Sessional Papers should be placed somewhere else than where they are now. I would also suggest, not only their removal at an early day, but that they should be re-lettered. It is a gilt label on a black ground, and it becomes difficult and exceedingly painful to ascertain their titles. In the office of Routine and Records there is a new system of labelling the Sessional Papers, which might be considered by the proper officer having charge of the Sessional Papers. If the hon. Minister of Public Works will have the Sessional Papers placed in the reading room, he will add to the convenience of hon. members.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not know why the spaces in the reading room have not been used for the purpose indicated. I do not know whether there is some objection on the part of the Librarian to use it, but we could have relieved the Library of several thousand volumes by placing them in the reading room. Of course if the Library officials are afraid that these books might disappear during the recess, or at any other time, it is always easy to place some one to look after them or to put them under lock and key or wire. But certainly that space in the reading room could be used, and by relieving the Library of the books sent to the Supreme Court, a larger space would be provided for new books. I must say, as the First Minister has said, we shall have to look very soon to some other plan to increase the Library, or to have the Library elsewhere.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK.

Mr. CASEY. In regard to the question of removal, it is astonishing how much space is occupied by old, worn-out novels, and books of that class, which have afforded, no doubt, abundant amusement to the people of the Capital for many years, but which are not to-day in a condition to appear with credit on the shelves of the Library. If they are worth binding there should be an appropriation to rebind them, but I think the greater portion of them might be stowed away in some dark corner with benefit to the collection. If they could be disposed of for any considerable sum, it should be done, and the funds devoted to works of practical use. There is a question to some which I desire to allude, and it is the publication of many old and valuable maps and manuscripts which I understand exist and are stowed away somewhere about the Library. These documents will be soon, if they are not now, of the greatest value and of the most vital importance in deciding questions of history, boundary and matters of that kind. I think it is too bad that they should only exist in the form of one copy of each, liable to destruction from natural causes or accidents. It would be very well for the Library Committee, between this and next year, to look into the question of publishing a certain number of these documents. A small number might be published each year, sufficient to make their representation certain by having copies distributed among several libraries.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I would suggest that this House should unite with the Committee now formed with a view to the publication of the antiquities of America. The Governments of the United States, Brazil, and Mexico, are all interested in the publication of these antiquities, and it will be even a matter of speculation to have all these old books relative to America printed, and I think they would sell well not only in Canada but also in the United States, printed in the cheap form in which publications are printed to-day. I throw out this suggestion because the project is matured and it is easy to carry it to a conclusion. This is the more important from the fact that these old books are rapidly disappearing. By the destruction of the Parliament Building at Quebec the greater part of the Library was burned and some books have been lost forever.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. In reply to the hon. member for East Elgin (Mr. Casey) I may say that the matters mentioned by him have been under consideration by the Library Committee, and it has been determined to place all the rare and valuable works to which he has referred, together with the maps, under special care and keeping, none of them to be allowed to be taken out of the Library, and the greatest possible care to be observed against their loss or mutilation. With respect to the Parliamentary and Sessional Papers, there is to be a complete set made up from the earliest period of the history of Canada and the various Provinces, and these are to be kept as a collection.

Mr. CASEY. I have no doubt that the precautions are very valuable to save the originals for the present, but I think—of course, I cannot speak from personal knowledge—no doubt there must be a great many, of which more than one copy should be in existence. They would be very interesting; and, as my hon. friend has just said, they would even be bought eagerly by the public. I might refer, by way of illustration, to the publication of the extremely interesting and valuable work, the only work indeed furnishing materials for the early history of Canada, Les Relations des Jésuites, which was published in 1858 by order of Parliament; and which has been scattered pretty widely throughout the country, and which is now a work very much sought after by collectors. It is one on which great value is put, and it is extremely interesting, in all that concerns the early history of Canada. I do not suppose that any more such treasures as that exist, because that work is unique of its kind, but there must be a great many works in the Library, interesting, of the same kind, though not to the same extent; and I think, that no Government should have the slightest objection to concede the request of the Library Committee, if they asked for a considerable sum each year, to publish documents of that kind.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. It is not within the jurisdiction of the Library Committee to ask for printing of documents.

Mr. CASEY. It will then be a question for the Ministry to consider on their own responsibility.

Resolutions to be reported.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and (at 12:05 o'clock a.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

MONDAY, 23rd April, 1883.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

THIRD READINGS.

The following Bills were severally considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time and passed:—

Bill (No. 57) further to amend the Acts relating to the New Brunswick Railway Company.—(Mr. Weldon.)

Bill (No. 76) to amend an Act intitled: An Act to incorporate the Northern, North-Western and Sault Ste. Marie Railway Company, and to change the name of the said Company to the Northern and Pacific Junction Railway Company.—(Mr. McCarthy.)

WOOD MOUNTAIN AND QU'APPELLE RAILWAY COMPANY BILL.

Mr. BEATY. I move that this House disagree with the amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 48) to incorporate the Wood Mountain and Qu'Appelle Railway Company, and for this reason: I have ascertained that the ground on which the amendments in regard to the fee of 50 cts., which was struck out, was made under the apprehension that the line was in the Province of Manitoba; but I have seen the Senator who was in charge of the Bill in the Senate, and he said, that had it been known that the Bill related to the territory of Assiniboia, it would have been passed there without any objection. I, therefore, move that we disagree.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman, according to the Rule, must give the reason for the disagreement in the motion.

Mr. BEATY. I move that this House do disagree with the amendments of the Senate to Bill (No. 48), for the reason that the provisions of the Bill excepted to are within the jurisdiction of Parliament, the line of railway being within the Territory of Assiniboia, and not within the Province of Manitoba.

Mr. BLAKE. Mr. Speaker: The fact that the hon. gentleman puts in the motion as the reason, is no doubt the fact. This reason is probably a very good one; but I just wish to call the attention of the hon. gentleman opposite, and the House generally, to the circumstance, that by the reason proposed we are contumeliously surrendering what we have been putting in almost every railway charter, whether rightly or wrongly. I think it is very likely that we were wrong in so doing; but we have assumed, as part of our constitutional power, that we had the right to prescribe the mode of conveyance by which land should be parted with, and a registration fee charged; in fact entering into these particulars as to the mode of conveying lands in the exercise of the compulsory or voluntary powers of railway companies. The reason now given to the Senate is a reason which, of course, acknowledges with reference to all railways within any of the Provinces, that we have had no right, and had no right to do that thing. I dare say that this is correct, but it upsets two or three clauses in some hundreds of railway Bills.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not see why, because we did wrong in the past, that we should not do right now.

Mr. BLAKE. I am not objecting.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. As, however, this is a change of policy in this respect, I would ask the hon. gentleman to allow the motion to stand until to-morrow. I, therefore, move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to, and debate adjourned.

BETTER OBSERVANCE OF THE LORD'S DAY.

Mr. McMULLEN enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to introduce, this Session, any legislation in response to numerous petitions presented to this House, praying for such legislation as will secure a better observance of the Lord's Day, as regards the running of railway trains, &c.?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It is not the intention of the Government to introduce, this Session, any legislation on that subject.

RECIPROCAL TRADE BETWEEN CANADA AND BRAZIL, THE WEST INDIES AND MEXICO.

Mr. FORTIN, in moving for all correspondence and papers relating to the reciprocal trade agreements between the Government of Brazil, the different Governments of the West India Islands, whether British or foreign, and Mexico on the one side, and Canada on the other side. A statement of the Custom duties imposed by these countries on their imports or exports. A statement of the qualities of the different articles, whether manufactured or unmanufactured, exported from Canada to these different countries during the last ten years. A statement of the different articles, whether manufactured or unmanufactured, imported from these countries into Canada. A statement of commercial treaties, if such exists, between any of these countries, British Colonies excluded, and Great Britain, said: I wish to address some remarks to the House on this question, and before doing so I wish to crave the indulgence of this House if I should be somewhat lengthy, and, perhaps, tedious. This question is, I think, one of great importance, as it concerns our trade relations with neighboring States of large extent containing a numerous population, and producing a variety of articles which we consume. Before going to the heart of the question, I shall give some statistics and other information which are necessary to a proper knowledge of the facts and circumstances of the case. I would first refer to the West India Islands. These Islands are composed of the British, Spanish, French, Dutch and Danish West India Islands. The British Islands, which are very important, are composed of Antigua, Bahamas, Dominica, Jamaica, St. Christopher, Montserrat, Nevis, St. Lucia, Barbadoes, Grenada, Trinidad, St. Vincent, Turk's Island and Virgin Islands. Their area is 12,802 square miles; their population, 1,214,417; their revenue, $7,262,710; their expenditure, $7,853,790; their debt, $1,570,758; their imports from the United Kingdom, $8,939,329; their imports from other countries, $18,222,180; and their total imports, $30,782,840. Their exports to the United Kingdom are $18,035,410; to other countries, $12,813,890; total exports, $31,013,080. Their total trade amounts to $61,795,920. These figures show that these Islands, though they are small, carry on a large trade with England and other countries, and that it would be worth while for us to extend our trade relations in their direction. It will now be proper to notice the distances of various points from these Islands, and to see especially whether we are nearer to or farther away from them than Liverpool is. The distance from Quebec to St. Thomas is 2,395 miles; from Halifax to St. Thomas, 1,584 miles; from St. John to St. Thomas, 1,616 miles; from Portland to St. Thomas, 1,541 miles; from New York to St. Thomas, 1,425 miles; from Southampton to St. Thomas, 3,622 miles. So that Halifax is nearer to the West Indies than any of those towns except New York, and there is not only a difference of 120 miles between New York and Halifax in that respect. Coming now to the foreign West Indies, we find that the Spanish Islands have a population of 2,250,000; the French Islands, 1,000,000; the Dutch and Danish Islands, 500,000; San Domingo, 700,000; or a total of 4,450,000. If we add to this the population of the British West Indies, which is 1,214,417, we have a total of 5,664,417. Going next to Brazil, we find that it is an immense country—the largest in the world except Russia. It has an area of 3,100,000 square miles; a population of 12,000,000; an army of 20,000 in time of peace, and 60,000 in time of war; a navy of 60 vessels, of which 17 are ironclads; and a naval force of 8,000 men. If we add together the population of the West Indies and the population of Brazil, we have a total population of 17,664,417. It seems to me that it is of great importance to a country like ours, whose population does not amount to 5,000,000, that we should trade with countries whose total population amounts to over 17,000,000. Now, let us see how the distance from Canada to Brazil compares with the distance from Brazil to England, the greatest rival of any country in America for the trade of Brazil. The distance between Liverpool and Rio Janeiro is 5,083 miles, while the distance between Halifax and Rio Janeiro is 4,677 miles, or 406 miles less. The distance from New York to Pernambuco, another town of Brazil, is 3,364 miles, and from Halifax, 3,331 miles, a difference in favor of Halifax of 33 miles. The distance from Quebec to Rio Janeiro is 5,415 miles, and from Montreal, 5,552 miles. Now, I will read a statement of the foreign trade of the Empire of Brazil, by Provinces, for the fiscal year ending 30th June, 1878. I am obliged to take that year, because I am sorry to say we have nothing in our Library, or in the Departments, to give any information about the trade of that country. Of course, the reason is that we are a colony; we have no consul or agent in Brazil, or in the West Indies, and we are not, consequently, informed as to the state of trade in those countries. The information I have, I have been obliged to obtain from the reports of consuls of the United States. They, of course, look after the interests of their own country. There are English consuls and chargés d'affaires, in Brazil; but, although they would defend our interests if they were threatened in any way, these officials would, of course, work for British interests against ours. Now, the imports and exports of Brazil for the year 1877-78, compiled from the Custom House reports of the Empire, were as follows:—

Province.	Imports.	Exports. ¹
Rio de Janeiro.....	$44,739,649 00	$46,499,620 50
Pernambuco.....	10,525,202 50	6,825,511 50
Bahia.....	10,245,294 00	8,226,030 00
Rio Grand do Sul.....	4,879,971 00	5,815,251 00
Para.....	4,002,591 00	7,244,127 50

Mr. FORTIN.

These figures show that there is room for our vessels to enter the ports of Brazil, and for our commercial men to trade there. I will now read a few figures, showing the imports of certain articles into Rio Janeiro in 1881, from a statement prepared, I believe, by the Consul General of Brazil, Mr. Bentley: The importations into Rio Janeiro alone were, of flour, 404,175 barrels; of codfish, 78,332 tubs; of beer, 33,465 cases and 9,442 barrels; of butter, 9,042 barrels and 38,492 cases; of kerosene, 254,055 cases; of lard, 76,171 tubs and 85 cases; of coal, 225,457 tons; of lumber: pine, from the Baltic, 14,545 dozens, from America, 8,168,490 feet; spruce, 13,449,470 feet. Besides these articles there are very large importations of potatoes and onions, cheese, and canned vegetables, fruits, &c.; also cottons and woollens, which almost entirely come from England. If we look into the statistics, we will find that, with the exception of codfish, we supply hardly anything to Brazil. I should explain that the currency of that country is the millreas which is worth about 47 cts. current exchange, but sometimes is worth as low as 37 cts. Before trading with a country, the first thing necessary to know is its Tariff, or the conditions under which trade can be carried on. The Tariff of Brazil may be summarized in the following remarks. The Brazilian Tariff divides the imports into thirty-six classes, under headings which make the study of commerce there somewhat difficult, and which are a source of annoyance to the importers and shippers of manufactured goods, particularly when the article is of a mixed material. I have here a statement of the Customs duties on articles that we ship to Brazil. In 1878, the duty on codfish was 10 reas per kilogramme, with 45 per cent. added; in 1879, that was raised 50 per cent., and, in 1880, it was again increased 50 per cent.; so that the duty on a tub of fish containing 128 lbs. net, the Portuguese quintal, amounts to 1-755 millreas or 86 cts. It takes about 6,000 reas to pay all expenses of transporting the fish from our shores and port dues, or $2.70, so that a tub of fish from any port in Canada will cost the sender, in freight, shipping, port dues, and Customs dues, $2.70 delivered in Rio de Janeiro. Now, the duty on flour is about 60 cts. per brl.; the duty on planks, 14x3x9, is $3.10 per doz.; on Swedish deal and pitch pine, $18 per doz., 14x3x9; on lumber, 5 cts. per foot; and on butter 10 cts. per lb. The total value of imports into Brazil, for 1877-78, was $82,251,190, and the total duties on those imports, $27,199,870, or about 33 per cent. The export duties are also considerable, the total exportation amounting to $33,000,000, on which were collected $7,000,000, or 7½ per cent. To these must be added interprovincial duties, $411,000, and despatching duties, $62,000, or a total of $503,237. Let me add that, of the exports of Brazil, coffee is 60 per cent. of the whole; sugar comes next, 11 per cent.; tobacco, raw cotton, &c., comes next. These export and interprovincial duties are not the only expenses our shippers have to pay. I have two disbursement accounts of vessels which sail from Paspébiac to Brazil. In connection with this I may mention that while our vessels have to pay so high in Brazil, Brazilian vessels that come here have almost nothing to pay. The following are the bills. The following will show the disbursement accounts for expenses in Rio de Janeiro:—

Disbursements of the Barque Homely, 229 tons, at Rio de Janeiro, 1880, from Port of Papebiac, Quebec.

Or about $90.00.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I give these statements to show the Government that the dues are increasing, and that in order to extend our trade in that direction, we must try and get them lowered, especially when we consider the low dues on foreign vessels to this country. But in order to understand what should be done, and to demonstrate the necessity of extending our relations with Brazil and the West Indies, it is my duty to present a full statement of the export trade from Canada to Brazil and the West Indies, and the import trade from Brazil and the West Indies to this country. This statement is taken from the Blue-books, and must, therefore, be correct. I confine myself, of course, to this principle article of trade between the two countries, that is, fish. The following is a table of the exports of dry and salt codfish, giving the number of quintals, and the value:—

Seal oil, to British West Indies, 396 gallons, $186. Total value of fish and fish oil exported to West Indies and Brazil, in 1882, $2,495,141. The total value of the produce of the fisheries exported from Canada, in 1882, was $7,682,079. Now, Mr. Speaker, I must give the amount of the imports of those countries, in order to see whether our trade with them is advantageous, whether the balance of trade is against us, or in our favor. I will confine myself to the details to the two articles of sugar and molasses, because those are the chief articles which we import from these countries. The quantities and values of sugar and molasses imported into Canada in the fiscal year 1881-82 were as follows:—

Grand total..... $5,065,200

The total value of imports from West Indies and South America in Canada is $5,497,002, of which, as we see, $5,065,200 was sugars and molasses; so that it appears that the imports from these countries, excluding sugar and molasses, amount to the value of $431,802. I have given a statement from the Blue-books, which are correct, of the exports and the imports. Let us place the totals together and see whether the balance of trade is against us, or in our favor. The total imports from these countries amount to $5,497,002, the exports $3,936,734, showing an excess of imports over exports, amounting to $1,560,268; that is to say, that we import goods to the value of upwards of $1,500,000 more than we export to those countries. Perhaps some persons may say that we cannot make this comparison, because the goods may not be estimated at their cost. But the goods we send there are estimated at the cost in this country, while the goods we import are estimated at the actual cost in the country from which we import them, so that it is fair to contrast the two amounts and draw the conclusion, which is, that the balance of trade is against us to the extent of $1,560,268. Before leaving the question of the balance of trade, it is proper I should give to the House the amount of the duties collected on the imports from Brazil and the West Indies. The amount of duties collected on the imports from the British West Indies is $662,514.52; Spanish West Indies, $943,791.41; French West Indies, $9,255.05; other West India Islands, $384.46; South America, $504,255.74; making a total amount paid for Customs duties on the sugar, molasses, and other articles we import from the West Indies, Brazil, and other parts of South America, $2,120,199.18. If we add the duty to the value of the goods we import we have a sum of $7,617,201, while our export value is not quite $4,000,000, and thus it comes to pass that a comparison shows, first, that we have a balance of trade against us amounting to more than $1,500,000, and, second, that we pay more than $2 for every $1. But I have heard hon. members in this House, and outside of it, and I have also read in books, that balance of trade means nothing. It means nothing, or it means something, according to the way we understand it. If we look at the Blue-books of this country we will find that in some years the balance of trade is in our favor, and in other years it is against us, but it is generally against us; and many people are apt to think that if we go on in that way for many years, and if we do not obtain, as other countries do, money in some other way, we cannot continue to prosper. Those who make little of the balance of trade and who study English trade returns are in the habit of saying: “Look at England, she always imports so many millions more than she exports.” But the imports of goods are not the only imports England receives. England is receiving every day millions of money from loans to other countries—the money that they have loaned in the United States, in Canada, the Australian Colonies, in Europe and everywhere. And look again at her immense mercantile navy, which whitens with its sails every sea of the world; it goes into every port, and carries back money from every country to England. Then look at her merchants, who visit every country, make fortunes, and take them back to their native land; and when we add all these results together, we find that the balance of trade is really in favor of England; and that is the reason why England is so rich, and becomes richer every day. But what do we draw from the West Indies otherwise than by the sale of exports there? I do not think that we obtain anything. And what do we draw from Brazil? I do not think anything. Do we receive money from that country? No. So the question which presents itself is a very important one; and I believe that this House and the Government should investigate it, and try to discover the best means of changing this state of things, and make the balance of trade in our favor instead of against us. Now, I brought this matter before the House, because I believe that there is a remedy; but the remedy suggested is not of to-day. It does not come from me. The Government which was at the head of affairs in Canada in 1865, tried to apply a remedy and change this order of things. That Government united with the Governments of the other colonies to send a delegation to Brazil and the West Indies, charged with the mission of studying, on the premises, the best means of extending our trade relations and to render our trade more prosperous than it was then—and still is. Few in or out of this House will, perhaps, remember that fact, because although the delegation, composed of very honorable and clever gentlemen, went to and was well received in those countries, and was fully empowered by the British Government to go on their mission, still it produced no result. As you are aware, the delegation was composed of Messrs. Wm. McDougall, Chairman, Thomas Ryan, W. Duncombe, A. M. Delisle, Jas. McDonald, Isaac Levesconte and W. H. Pope. The four first gentlemen were from Canada, two others from Nova Scotia, and one from Prince Edward Island and one from New Brunswick. Now, these gentlemen had a conference, and they resolved:

“That, in the opinion of this council, it would be highly desirable that representations should be made to Her Majesty's Imperial Government to request that steps be taken to enable the Governments of the Provinces to open communications with the West India Islands, Spain and her Colonies, and New Mexico, for the purpose of ascertaining in what manner the traffic of the Provinces with these countries could be extended and placed on a more advantageous footing.”

These resolutions were approved by Her Majesty's Secretary for the Colonies. On the 28th of October, Sir Edward Cardwell wrote as follows:—

“The Secretary of State for the Colonies to the Officer Administering the Government of Canada.

“Canada, No. 151.

“DOWNING STREET, 28th October, 1865.

“SIR,—I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of Viscount Monck's despatch of the 22nd September, No. 157, forwarding copies of two approved minutes of the Executive Council of Canada, suggesting that measures should be taken with a view to the extension of the commerce of Canada in the British and Spanish West Indies, in Mexico, Brazil and other places. I request you will assure the Provincial Government that Her Majesty's Government cordially approve the suggestion they have made, and will support it by all the means in their power.

“The scheme is, of course, not applicable to Canada alone, but to the British North American Colonies collectively.

“On that understanding I shall request the Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs to recommend the object in view at the requisite Foreign Courts, and to introduce to the British Ministers abroad those gentlemen who shall be selected for the mission.”

Sir Emerson Tennent wrote to the Colonial Under-Secretary of State, on the 26th October, 1865, as follows:—

"I am directed by the Lords of the Committee of Privy Council for Trade to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of yesterday's date and of your previous communication and enclosures, relative to the proposal of the Confederate Council of the British North American Colonies to despatch deputations to Washington, to the West Indies, and to various South American Countries, with a view to the improvement and extension of the commercial relations of the British North American possessions with the United States of America and the other countries.

In reply I am directed to request you to state to Mr. Secretary Cardwell that My Lords fully approve of the object which the Confederate Council appears to contemplate, and they are of opinion that Her Majesty's Government should signify its approval of the step about to be taken."

Now, Mr. Hammond wrote to the Under-Secretary of State on the 11th of November, 1865:—

"Having thus obtained grounds for further proceedings, Her Majesty's Government might in the next place consider, in communication with the Lords of the Committee of Privy Council for Trade, how far any proposals might be made to foreign countries in behalf of the Colonies, consistently with the general Treaty engagements of the British Crown; and this point being satisfactorily ascertained, instructions might be framed in this country for Her Majesty's Ministers in the countries in question, and full powers issued to them by Her Majesty, under which they would endeavor to bring into the shape of international engagements such arrangements as might be ultimately considered acceptable, not only to the Colonies themselves, but also to the foreign Powers with whom they were contracted."

I will read the last part—its commencement may be understood—of another document which is extremely important. This is from a letter of Sir A. T. Galt, Minister of Finance, of Canada, who, on the 13th of November, 1865, wrote:—

"It would be improper for the Government to anticipate the action of the Legislature in reference to taxation; but it is necessary that you should be informed that this Government would be prepared to recommend to Parliament the reduction or even the abolition of any Customs duties now levied on the productions of these countries, if corresponding favor were shown to the staples of British North America in their markets."

Now, the delegation went on its mission, was well received, and promised that arrangements would be made in the direction desired, but still nothing was done. For this I will accuse no one. I should rather accuse circumstances. Confederation was accomplished shortly afterwards; and this great event absorbed the minds of all the people of this country. Then by-and-bye came deficits, and when we were having deficits it is hardly necessary for me to say that we could offer no reductions in the Tariff; but, Mr. Speaker, a new era has dawned. We have now large surpluses. We have had a surplus this year, and it looks like as if we were going to have surpluses every year. It seems to me that we cannot employ this surplus to better effect than in trying to extend our trade relations with this country—trying to get a market for all the articles which may now go abroad, and try also to find a market for other articles. I believe that the present is the time to make these endeavours, because we, if we were to say to the Government of Brazil or the Governments of the different West India Islands: "We are empowered by our Government to offer you a reduction of duties," these Governments would believe in our ability to make these arrangements, because we have a large surplus on hand. I will now read to the House a few lines which were written by the respectable and clever Consul of Brazil, Mr. W. D. Bentley:

"Sir Leonard Tilley, in his speech introducing the Budget of the present year, referred to the deputation which waited upon him in reference to some reciprocal arrangement with foreign countries. In 1879, when I was in Brazil, a law was passed at the instance of His Excellency Senhor Sinimbu, the then Prime Minister, by which the Government was authorized to make a reciprocal treaty with other countries. What was chiefly aimed at then, was an agreement with Canada, and therefore I am certain that, though the Government of Senhor Sinimbu has given place to another, yet there will be no difficulty raised on the part of Brazil to make a reciprocal arrangement with Canada, so long as it does not interfere with her existing treaties. Every one knows the enlightened views of His Majesty the Emperor, and how any proposal for the advancement of his country meets with his entire and cordial cooperation. I know he is ably supported by his Ministers. All are fully alive to the advantages of opening up new commercial relations, and I can guarantee that when the Government of Canada approach that of Brazil, they will find the same desire on their part to bind, commercially, the two countries more closely together."

A few words more about the fishing trade of this country, because, if we are to have a large and prosperous trade with Brazil and these Islands, our fishing industry must be prosperous. As I have stated already, most of our sea fish are exported to foreign countries, and in the markets of Brazil and the West Indies we have to encounter powerful rivals. Norway is one of these. She produced 982,760 quintals of codfish in 1880; 772,420 in 1881; and in 1882, 628,680. These figures include the Finmarken fishery, which, in 1881, was only one-sixth of that of 1880, and one-fifth of that of 1881. The other principal rival is Newfoundland, which produced of dry codfish alone, in 1882, 1,173,510 quintals, valued at $5,125,275, of which 96,395 quintals went to the British West Indies, and 471,244 to Brazil; or in all, 567,639 quintals, valued at $2,429,062. Let me add that in those countries which are more maritime than we are, and in which the fisheries are the main element of wealth, they are more looked after and greater care is taken with them than in this country. Let me cite a report of the American consul, Mr. Holt, who has been in Gaspé for ten or twelve years, and who is well posted on the fishing trade. Mr. Holt, in the report which he made to the Government of the United States in 1880, said:

"The cod-fishery continues to be managed and controlled in the old style, but not with the prosperous results now which have attended the fish trade for a hundred years past. Since 1876 the losses have been more general than the profits to the shippers, to the extent that many of them would find their financial standing seriously affected, were it not for their reserves of accumulated gains of previous years.

"This depressing condition and prospect of the Canadian fish trade is attributed to the formidable competition of the Norwegians, who have steadily been inaugurating a system of keeping the markets of the world supplied with their fish, improved in its curing so as to be more adapted to the taste of the consumers in southern latitudes. Prices having declined, in consequence, at the ports of consignment, Canada does not appear to be able to compete profitably with Norway."

With regard to the Norway fisheries, I have had occasion several times to speak and write on that subject, and I think we cannot speak and write too much of it. I remember the time when no fish from Norway appeared on the Brazilian markets, and when the Norwegian codfish were not prepared and cured as the codfish of Gaspé and Halifax. The Norwegian codfish were dried without salt, and, as they would not keep in the warmest climates, none of them were sent to Brazil, or the warmest parts of the West Indies. But Norway, being an independent country, has consuls, the same thing, all over the world. They have a Consul-General at Quebec, with Vice-Consuls in every town of the Dominion; and in every one of the small towns of the United States; in every part of the West Indies and Brazil, and all over the world; and those Consuls are not simply literary men, they are very practical men. They have studied the markets of Brazil, and they found that the codfish from Canada sold for a higher rate and were prepared in a certain way, and their Consuls all over the coast sent reports home to their people instructing them how to cure codfish in the Gaspé and Halifax fashion. For the last ten years these people have had the advantage over us in that market, because their fish are taken three or four months before ours, and are cheaper. Now, let me read a letter which I wrote some time ago to the hon. Minister of Public Works on this very question:

OTTAWA, 31st January, 1881.

"Sir,—I have already had the honor of drawing your attention frequently to the necessity of constructing breakwaters in several of the roadsteads on the coast of Gaspesia, for the purpose of affording our fishermen necessary facilities for the prosecution of their calling—so difficult, so dangerous, and, in general, so unremunerative—with better chances of success, and to enable them to draw from the sea a larger amount, than now, of production for their labor.

"Now, it should not be forgotten that our fishermen are not the only class who will benefit by this increase of wealth, because, just in proportion as the products of our fisheries are augmented, the fishermen being the largest consumers, as a class, of manufactured goods, as well as of foreign produce, from their increased ability to purchase, manufacturers will receive increased orders, and commerce in general will be largely benefited by this state of things, while the Treasury will profit also by the increased amount of Customs duties derived from importation.

"But these are not the only reasons which, at this time, prompt me more than ever, to insist on the necessity of aiding one of our most important industries which furnishes articles for exportation to an amount of more than six million (6,000,000) dollars, and which brings also to our domestic trade and consumption, produce of great value, of which, unfortunately, in this country, there is not generally a correct apprehension.

"Now, this industry is threatened, although not entirely in its very existence, yet to such an extent that if the present state of matters is not changed, instead of being prosperous as in bygone years, until lately, it will become languishing, and eventually fail in furnishing subsistence to those engaged in its prosecution—a class, as shown by vital statistics, increase with a most remarkable rapidity—and the inevitable consequence will be, that our fishermen will have largely to abandon their native shores, and emigrate to foreign countries.

"And whence this threat? From the competition of Norwegian fish—especially codfish—in the foreign markets in which Gaspé fish, until within a few years past, held first place, and had sold with facility and profit.

"The abundance of Norwegian fish for the last few years in these markets, in which, besides, it arrives at an earlier date than Canadian fish,—has caused there an important lowering of prices, so that our codfishery, carried on under the like conditions as heretofore, is not sufficiently productive to yield profits to our fishermen and merchants, at the reduced prices.

"I take the liberty of submitting to you the following extracts from a letter which I received from Mr. Henry N. DeVeulle, agent of the fishing establishment of the firm of Charles Robbins & Co., on the coast of Gaspeia—the following being what he wrote me under date of 6th January, 1881:—

"Next summer we are going to retrench and to try to economise still more than the past season.

"Appertaining to the Percé establishment, we are going to close North Beach and Anse-au-Beaufils.

"When I went to Percé, in 1878, we had 124 boats fishing. Next summer I do not intend having more than sixty or sixty-five; besides this, we will close Anse-au-Basque at Caraqueet. At Caraqueet we will keep only two or three boats, but we will increase slightly at Shippegan and North Shore. As for advances to draftmen, we are doing as usual, but we are reducing dealers a little; as you may well suppose, we will leave off those that remain in debt and keep those that pay.

"Should this coming season's transactions not be an improvement on the past, there is not much doubt that a further reduction will become imperative.

"Did I not tell you in Percé, in 1878, that the Canadian fish merchants were experiencing a competition that would become serious?

"It seems to me that the facts above stated by Mr. De Veulle do not require comment.

"For, on one hand, the codfishery in Norway, aided and encouraged as it has been by all possible means—telegraphs, breakwaters, towboats, &c., &c.—yields products of an extraordinary abundance. And, on the other hand, the fish merchants of that country, enlightened as they have been by those of their counsils who reside in fishing countries, have had for the last few years, their codfish intended for exportation to warm countries cured after the Gaspé method, instead of making it into 'stock-fish' as formerly, and it is that kind of codfish taken in such large quantities, and consequently sold at low prices, which competes so disastrously with the codfish of Canada and Newfoundland in the markets of Brazil, Spain, Portugal and Italy.

"I cannot speak extensively in this letter of the codfisheries of Norway and their immense production, but permit me to say a word of those which are best known—I mean the fisheries of the Lofoten Islands.

"The fishery of the Lofoten Islands—a group on the coast of Norway, 150 miles in extent, lying between 67° and 69° 30' N. latitude—viz.: 1,372 (thirteen hundred and seventy-two) geographical miles further north than Quebec, and 1,200 (twelve hundred) miles further north than the central part of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, yielded 26,500,000 (twenty-six and a half millions) codfish, during the fishing season of 1879, employing 26,556 men. Vessels and fishing-boats employed, 5,222.

"In 1878, for the requirements of that fishery and the fish trade, 41,709 telegraphic dispatches were sent and received at these Lofoten Islands. In 1879, these figures must have been still greater.

"Now, we must acknowledge with regret, that the productions of our fisheries have not augmented for some years past, and in certain parts they have decreased.

"But it would be necessary for our fishermen, in order to compete successfully with the fisheries of other countries, that they should augment the production. But can they do so?

"Yes!

"And how?

"By obtaining more facilities, more encouragement for the different operations, all of them difficult and laborious, which constitute the art of sea fishing.

"And what do they principally require?

"Shelter for their boats.

Mr. FORBES.

"Every one knows that on the coast of Gaspeia there is not a single port, with the exception of Gaspé Basin, which, however, is too far inland to be useful as a fishing harbor.

"Without harbors, without shelter, these fishermen lose one-third of their time.

"At each high wind or tempest, blowing on shore, they are obliged, after having discharged ballast, to haul their boats on shore.

"And when fine weather has returned, they are obliged to launch them.

"And how many boats are either injured or destroyed under these operations, which have often to be performed during one night, when the surf, rolled in by the fury of the gale, threatens destruction alike to the fishermen and their boats? At times, the wind springs up suddenly, and the sea, in consequence, rises with so much rapidity that before the fishermen can come to the rescue, their boats are smashed with the sails and outfits lost.

"In the roadstead of Percé alone, I believe, that within the last ten years, one hundred boats have been lost. Value—$10,000.

"And when the boats are thus hauled ashore, how many fishing days are lost? For the fishermen have to wait until the return of fine weather, and further until the surf has gone down sufficiently to permit the launching of their boats.

"Often, when they are on the fishing grounds and the catch most abundant, they are seen suddenly to raise anchor and scud for the shore, and by so doing, probably, lose their best day's fishing.

"The reason of this movement is because the weather has become threatening and they fear the approach of a gale from seaward.

"In this case it is imperative that they reach land and have beached their boats before the sea has risen and breakers have formed on the shore; for, if too late in making the land, the attempt to beach is certain death to the men and future misery to their widows and orphans."

Now, Sir, I have given a statement regarding our fishing industry, and the circumstances surrounding it, as I have seen them for the last thirty-two years. My remarks have been, perhaps, too long, but I thought it better to make my statement complete, so that the House, and the Government, and the country, might know what course to take. A deputation visited the Government on this subject a few days ago. We were kindly received by the hon. Minister of Finance. What we recommend is that the Government be authorized, by this House, as the Government of Brazil has by the Parliament of Brazil, to make, during the Recess, any arrangement which they may think in the interest of the country, to extend our trade with Brazil and the West Indies. We pay over $2,000,000 a year of duty on sugar and molasses, which are articles of food and should not pay duty. But I do not recommend that it should be abolished without getting an equivalent from other countries. Let us do in this case, as independent countries, as England, France, and other countries do. We cannot make treaties, but we can make arrangements; and those countries what do they do? In order to foster their commerce, in order to enrich their merchants, they get their best men to study the question, and the Government, by its diplomacy, does its best, to the extent sometimes to the use of retaliatory threats. What we can do is to offer to reduce, or even abolish the duties on the molasses or sugar of any country which will diminish or abolish the duties on the goods we send it. In doing that, the results would be twofold. We would increase the trade of this country, and we would procure to our people, especially the laborers, and the seafaring classes, an article of food which is not only excellent and savory, but necessary in this cold climate. I thank this House for the bienveillance with which they have received my remarks, and apologize for any imperfections of expression, as I would like to have used my own language, but out of deference to the majority of the hon. members of this House, and in order that my remarks might be understood by all, I have spoken in the English language.

Mr. BURNS. The thanks of this House, I think, are due to the hon. member for the vast amount of statistical information he has so intelligently explained to the House. More especially are the thanks of the people of the Lower Provinces due to the hon. member, because they are, perhaps, more than the people of the other Provinces interested in opening out and developing our trade with the countries to which the hon. gentleman made reference. I know of very few matters that should receive greater consideration from the Government than that of opening up and developing our trade relations with the countries of South America. Considering the large population, and the volume of trade of these countries, more particularly their imports, I think that the Government will be discharging a duty to the country and doing a great amount of good, if they would obtain more means of developing and extending our trade with those countries. It can be said of the West Indies and South America that they are the natural markets of the people of Canada, at all events for the producers of the Lower Provinces. By obtaining those markets we would become more independent of the United States to which we now look largely for a market, more especially for our lumber. As regards the article of fish, there is no country, I believe, which consumes, in proportion to population, more than Brazil, and some of the West India Islands. Anything that can be done to foster the fishing industry of the Lower Provinces would foster the industries and the business of all the other Provinces. In glancing over the statistics of these countries, I find that they import from the United States a great number of articles which we manufacture in Canada. Instead of sending our lumber to the United States as we now do largely, for the purpose of exportation, thence to the West Indies, we would be enabled to trade directly with these countries and get their products in the shape of sugar and molasses in return for our cargoes of lumber, fish, and other articles. I make now more particular reference to the article of raw sugar used in our refineries. As one of the means for obtaining a market for our products with the West Indies and Brazil, it would be necessary to get them to reduce the duties on lumber and fish in return for our reducing or abolishing the duties on sugar and molasses—that is on the raw sugar, not on the refined or partly refined. Reference was made in this House, at a former time, to the advisability of taking off the duties from molasses. As it was said some time ago, so I say now, it may be necessary, and perhaps is necessary, to retain the duty on molasses, in order that we may obtain something in the way of Reciprocity from the countries from which we obtain that article. Besides the West Indies and the Atlantic coast of South America, there is a country which has now been opened up to the world, which has been developed largely by United States capital—I refer to Mexico. There, I think, can be found in the future a large market for our products. We can go to the Central States of South America, we can go to the Argentine Republic, Uruguay, and all along the Atlantic coast, where we will find large outlets for our products, either manufactured or natural. Not only should we look to the Atlantic coast, but we should look to the Pacific coast affording a market for our people in British Columbia; and not only should we look to the Pacific ports of South America, in Peru and Chili, but we should also seek to obtain a fair share of the trade with the Hawaiian Islands and the other islands of the Pacific Coast. Now, Sir, I ask that the Government give its attention to this matter so very ably set forth by the hon. member for Gaspe; and I tell them that the people of the Upper Provinces are looking to them to increase the trade we now have with those countries, and not leave that trade so exclusively in the hands of our enterprising neighbors on the other side of the line.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I concur with the hon. member who has just taken his seat, that the House and the country are under an obligation to the hon. member for Gaspe for the full statistical information he has given us with reference to the trade between all parts of the world and the West India Islands and South America, as well as the trade between Canada and those countries. He has brought before us information that, perhaps, few possessed, or that would have been difficult to obtain in any other way than by his industry and application. I would call the attention of the House to the fact that since the policy adopted by the Government in 1879 for the encouragement of the manufacture of raw sugar and converting it into refined sugar, we have largely increased our trade with the British and foreign West India Islands, and also with South America and the East Indies. With reference to Brazil, under the operation of that Tariff, and by the subsidy that was voted by Parliament of $50,000 a year for the encouragement of a line of steamers between Canada and Brazil, our trade has largely increased in the last few years. Without that policy there would be no necessity for a line of steamers between here and Brazil, as we should have had nothing to bring back, no raw sugar. She might have taken our lumber, and fish, and some agricultural products, but a steamer would have had no return cargo. Under these circumstances we could not have succeeded in obtaining a line of steamers between Canada and Brazil. The Government have been very anxious to increase our trade with Brazil as well as with the British and foreign West India Islands. We have succeeded to some extent, and still the establishment of that line is in some little uncertainty at the present moment as to its continuance; still, I hope the negotiations that are now going on will lead to the permanent continuance of that line between Canada and Brazil. I hope such will be the case. But we experience a great many difficulties in the introduction of the products of our manufactures into Brazil. There being some 12,000,000 inhabitants residing in that country, they have very strong prejudices, we find, in favor of the manufactures of England, as circumstances have occurred to establish for many years a very extensive trade between Brazil and Great Britain. Take, for instance, agricultural implements. Our American neighbors have for a number of years endeavored to supplant the heavier English agricultural implements, and it appears, from the report of their Consular Agent in that country, that he points out very clearly the difficulties they meet with. They have even there to contend with the products of Great Britain, on account of the prejudices, as they call them, of the people of Brazil. Now, as the products of Canadian agricultural implements and others are very much of the character of those of the United States, we find the same difficulty in inducing the people to accept them because the like prejudices exist with reference to them. However, we are beginning to break that down to some extent. Under the circumstances we have exported very considerably to that country of our agricultural products. We have now satisfied them that the flour of Canada can be sent in there and kept sweet; the impression was that it would sour; but our Canadian manufacturers have proved to them that flour can be kept sweet and healthy, and does not sour; and these prejudices having been broken down, we are finding a market for our Canadian flour, and for various other products. The same may be said with reference to some of the other countries referred to, as, for instance, Cuba and the Spanish East Indian possessions. At present we impose a duty of 30 per cent. on the export duty imposed in Cuba on sugar. Well, we offered, through our representative in London, to admit sugar in Canada without that duty if they would make certain concessions to the products of Canada; and we offered also to pay a subsidy for a steamer plying between Canada and Cuba, and agreeing that that steamer should be under the French flag, if they would give to the products of Canada the advantages of the French flag, which would admit our articles at a very much less duty than if they had been imported in Canadian vessels, or under the British flag. These propositions were declined. I may say to my hon. friend, the mover of this resolution, that one of the difficulties we experience in all our communications, direct or indirect, with reference to this matter, is the difficulty that they have to give up a portion of their existing revenues. Still there has been manifested in Brazil, as well as in Jamaica and one or two other places, a desire to make some concession; and I had the pleasure of saying to the deputation who waited upon us that we were in accord with them so far as the concession of a certain part of the duty on sugar and molasses, but we thought we were in a position to make a concession to the amount of $500,000 or $600,000. If we can obtain concessions from those countries to a like extent, we would be prepared to ask Parliament to give up the revenue to the extent of $500,000 or so, in order that we may make such arrangements with them as that they may give us a reduction of duties. We thought that, under the circumstances, we could do that, and we hope that such will be the case. I may say to the hon. member that I doubt if it would be proper, notwithstanding he had appealed to us so strongly, to submit to Parliament a proposition asking it to give the Government unlimited authority to do certain things in the shape of Reciprocity. I think it would be more consistent with our duty, and more acceptable to the House, if we were to come to it with arrangements made and ask their confirmation, rather than to ask for general power and authority to be given. I think no time would be lost, because arrangements might be made and submitted to Parliament next Session, and the whole Recess would be occupied before any such arrangements could be finally completed. But we are in perfect unison with the hon. gentleman, and the propositions we have made and the communications which have taken place show that we are prepared almost to remove the duty on molasses altogether. There will be but one objection to removing the duty from molasses entirely, and that objection will be this: that so long as we impose a duty on raw sugar, if molasses were free we would get very little duty out of sugar, because it would be all imported in the form of molasses with a large saccharine percentage; and, therefore, we could not do that very well. But the Government are fully alive to the importance of this question, and are perfectly in accord with the hon. gentleman, and, therefore, anything that will enlarge the market and increase the demand for our fish and lumber in the West Indies, or in Brazil, and will increase, also, the demand for our natural products—because I hold, that while the Maritime Provinces will be very considerably benefited, as the hon. member for Gaspé has pointed out, we propose that the manufacturing and agricultural interests of all parts of Canada shall also be benefited by their products being admitted at a lower rate of duty, if possible—will be heartily supported by the Government. The Government will bring down all the papers, and I can assure the hon. gentleman that any arrangement which the Government will feel justified in making, as one which Parliament could properly sustain, we shall have great pleasure in submitting and asking Parliament to sanction.

Mr. BURNS. Of the grand total of imports into South America, Central America, Mexico and the West Indies, amounting to the value of $416,215,000, no less than $93,000,000 worth are imported from the United States.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I desire to ask the hon. Finance Minister whether the offers made to the people of Cuba were made to the authorities of Cuba direct.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. No.

Mr. PATERSON. I desire, also, to ask, as it will be impossible to obtain this return before the close of the Session, whether there has been any communication with the Government of Mexico, either directly or indirectly, as that is one of the countries mentioned in the motion of the hon. member for Gaspé (Mr. Fortin).

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. With respect to Mexico there has been no communication directly with the authorities, and none but verbal communications by a party who has been in Mexico, and his communications were not of an official character. He has addressed a letter or two to me, personally, urging the importance of the subject. I have been in communication with the Governor-General to-day, and copies of the despatches asked for by the hon. leader of the Opposition will be laid on the Table, except those with France and Spain, which are not complete; the Colonial Office objecting to communications passing between foreign Governments and our representative, or the Imperial Government, being laid before Parliament until they are complete. All the rest of the correspondence will be laid before the House.
Sir LEONARD TILLEY.

Mr. BLAKE. When?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. To-morrow, I think.

Motion agreed to.

BAYFIELD HARBOR.

Mr. McMILLAN (Huron), in moving for copies of all reports, plans and surveys made by the Government engineers of Bayfield harbor, in the county of Huron, said: I desire to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works to the condition of Bayfield Harbor. A sand bank being formed in the mouth of the harbor prevents vessels from entering and deriving any benefit from the works already constructed, until further improvements are made. I also beg leave to call the attention of the Government to the necessity of building a lighthouse at an early date, as vessels driven in there from stress of weather seeking refuge cannot judge the harbor at night. A fine three-masted schooner on attempting to enter the harbor on a dark, stormy night last fall, missed the entrance, and now lies a total wreck three or four rods south of the harbor, which in all likelihood would have been saved if there had been any light to direct her into the harbor. I also beg leave to ask the hon. Minister if it is the intention of the Government to make any improvement in Bayfield Harbor during the coming summer.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In answer to the hon. gentleman, I may say that when the hon. member has placed the question on the Notice Paper I will be able to answer it; I am not able to do so to-day. There is no objection to the papers being brought down.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I hope the hon. Minister will take into his very serious consideration the subject matter of the motion of the hon. member for South Huron. The hon. Minister knows something of Bayfield Harbor. The question of improvement has been before the House many times. Eight or ten years ago I drew the attention of the Government of which the hon. gentleman was then a member, to the importance of some public money being expended on that harbor, with a view to the protection of the trade of the lakes; and on another occasion I drew his attention to the importance of that harbor, a harbor situated in one of the finest localities of the whole of Western Canada, a harbor which could be made a good commercial harbor at a reasonable expenditure of public money. The hon. gentleman is, perhaps, aware that in 1875 or 1876 a sum of $15,000 was voted by Parliament for the purpose of improving the harbor. The people of that locality did not occupy exactly the same position as the people of other localities, as they contributed a very large sum themselves to the improvement of the harbor. The township of Stanley, in which the harbor is situated, spent between $40,000 and $50,000 on the harbor, while the Government, as I have said, spent $45,000. Some valuable works were constructed, piers and so forth; but the hon. gentleman is, no doubt, aware that on the east coast of Lake Huron, no matter how good the harbor may be, immense quantities of debris are brought down every spring, and, to a large extent fill up the outlets of the harbors. It has been so at Goderich, Kincardine, Port Elgin, Bayfield and Port Albert, and dredges are required almost every season for the purpose of removing the debris. At Goderich a dredge is required for the purpose of removing the bar formed there during the spring. I specially drew the hon. gentleman's attention to the importance of something being done to this harbor, I think when I spoke the other evening in connection with Port Albert Harbor, which is ten or twelve miles north of Goderich, the hon. Minister was kind enough to say it was one of his pet works, and I was led to believe that it would receive his favorable consideration. I can assure the hon. Minister that Bayfield Harbor is of as much importance as the harbor in my riding; and I hope the hon. gentleman will take both of the works under his charge, that they will both be his pet works, and that he will be able, during this Session of Parliament, to place some amount in the Estimates to carry out the necessary works there.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The attention given to these works by the hon. member for West Huron (Mr. Cameron) will induce me, most likely, to look more favorably on the works to which he has referred. The hon. gentleman has evidently studied the question, and, for my part, whether it is a work in his own county, or in the next county, if it is a public work requiring improvement, I will give it my attention. The fact which the hon. gentleman has stated to the House, that at Kincardine and other harbors on that shore there is every spring a large deposit of sand and other material at the mouth of the harbors, shows it is a difficult question with which we have to deal. I suppose that though we have extended some of these piers, we will always have to have dredges at the mouths of these harbors every year, or every second year, to remove the deposit of the twelve or twenty-four months previous. At Goderich, as the hon. gentleman has just stated, the same difficulty has occurred; but we have tried—although I do not know how far the experiment has yet gone; but we are trying at all events—to avoid that by a catch pier placed farther west, I think, towards Kincardine.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It is to the north.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is to the northwards, perhaps; and if we succeed in this, it will probably avoid the difficulty against which we have to contend there for a number of years; but eventually it will come again, because we dredge in that direction, and I suppose we will always have to count on a certain expenditure every year in this relation. I shall give my special attention to this matter.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The drift of Goderich Harbor is not now at all where it was. The level was changing, and we had to go in at the mouth of the river proper.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I was speaking from the lake. The hon. gentleman remembers that there is a drift coming in from the lake.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Yes.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. From the direction of Kincardine towards Goderich.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I was just about to remark that it was where the chief trouble rose. The pier built north of the harbor and south of the river will no doubt obviate some of the difficulty that exists.

Motion agreed to.

DUTIES ON AND IMPORTS OF CEREALS.

Mr. GIGAULT moved for a statement showing: 1st. The amount of duties collected, between the 15th March, 1879, and the 1st January, 1883, on the cereals comprised under the head of "Grain and products of grain," in the Trade and Navigation Returns of Canada; 2nd. The quantity of grain and products of grain imported and entered for consumption in Canada during the years 1874, 1875, 1876, 1877, 1878, 1879, 1880, 1881 and 1882.

Mr. CHARLTON. Mr. Speaker, I suggest that the motion be amended, perhaps with the approval of the hon. gentleman who has moved it, in the following sense: Add after the word "Canada," in the first paragraph, "the total quantity of grain and the products of grain imported," and add after the words "1882," at the close of the second paragraph "also a statement of the quantity of grain and the products of grain exported during the same years." The reason for making this proposed change is this: That the mode of entering grain for consumption was very different before and after the imposition of duties on these articles. Before the imposition of the duty on the 15th of March, 1873, all grains were entered for consumption, as will be apparent from the abstract of a table which I have here. For instance, the total imports for 1874—I will only give the round numbers—were valued at $15,482,000, while the total amount entered for consumption was $15,432,000. For 1875, the total amount entered was $12,389,000, and the total amount entered for consumption was $12,389,000. In 1876, the total amount imported was $11,094,000, and the total amount entered for consumption was $11,094,000. For 1877, the total amount imported was $13,795,000, and the total amount entered for consumption was $13,795,000. For 1878, the total amount imported was $13,444,000, and the total amount entered for consumption was $13,444,000. For 1879, up to the 15th of March, the total amount imported was $9,756,000, and the total amount entered for consumption was $9,756,000, showing that the imports for consumption were regularly the total imports. However, when the duty was imposed the mode of making these entries changed. I find that for the balance of the year 1879, from the 15th of March to the 30th of June, the total entries were $1,581,000, and the entries for consumption were $331,000. For 1880, the total entries were $12,169,000 and for consumption $1,804,000. For 1881, the total entries were $15,059,000, and for consumption $2,418,000. For 1882, the total entries were $7,431,000, and for consumption $2,298,000; so that unless the motion was made in this way, the inference drawn from it would very likely be a misleading one. I notice, in making up these figures, that the imports of grain for consumption have steadily increased since the National Policy has been in force. The imports for consumption were $331,000 from the 15th of March to the 30th of June, 1879, and the annual imports were $1,397,000 in 1879. The imports for consumption in 1880, were $1,804,000; in 1881 they were $2,418,000, and in 1882 they were $2,998,000; showing a constant increase in the imports for consumption as shown by the amount upon which duty was actually paid. So far as the imports before that date are concerned, that, of course, will enable us to say what proportion of these imports were actually for consumption; but I find that in the year 1874, out of the total imports 8,611,000 bushels were exported, although entered for consumption. In 1875, out of the total imports, 7,050,000 bushels were exported; in 1876, out of the total imports, 7,139,000 bushels were exported, and in 1877, out of the total imports, 8,547,000 bushels were exported; showing that the reports of the Trade and Navigation Returns are totally unreliable; if we are governed by the amount nominally imported for consumption in our estimate as to the amount actually consumed in the country. By a report, which the hon. Finance Minister was kind enough to hand me during the discussion on the Budget Speech, I find that the export for the year 1878 was valued at $7,433,000, and for 1879, at $10,603,000, or nearly the entire amount for 1878, entered for consumption, and the entire amount for the year 1879, entered for consumption.

I find, that the exports for 1880, were valued at $12,856,000, the whole of which would have been entered for consumption under the previous mode of compiling the figures before the imposition of the duty; and these exports for 1881 were valued at $7,210,000; and for 1882, at $8,179,000—all of which would have been entered at the Custom House for consumption prior to the imposition of the duty in 1879; so I think that in order to have the report give as true an account of the state of the trade as possible, it had better be amended in this respect. I beg to move in amendment:

"That after the word 'Canada' at the end of paragraph 1, the following words be added:—"the total quantities of grain and products of grain imported,"—and at the end of paragraph 2 the following words:—"also Statement of quantity of grain and products of grain exported during the same year."

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I do not know whether the mover has any objection to this proposition, but I have not, as it will present the case so far as the real imports we have consumed are concerned. I think it will be found apparent, when the figures come down, that the result, if it is so properly shown, will be that we have an increased market for our own products under the operation of the Tariff.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

MONTREAL HARBOR COMMISSION.

Mr. DE ST. GEORGES (Translation), in moving for a copy of an Order in Council passed on the 26th July, 1882, confirming a by-law of the Montreal Harbor Commission, said: Mr. Speaker, in making this motion, I wish to draw the attention of the House and of the Government to the fact that according to the by-law passed by the Montreal Harbor Commission, and approved of by a Minute in Council dated 26th July, 1882, the pilots find themselves in a very different position from what they were under the Pilot Act of 1873. If you will glance at that Act you will find that it is entirely different from the by-law passed by the Harbor Commission. If the House will allow me, I will read a part of the request which was presented to the two Ministers of the Crown who received the deputation. I will read that portion which explains the by-law:

"Article 85 is hereby amended in adding to it the following, which hereafter will form part of the said article, and which will read as follows: That is to say, and if such accident consists in the sinking or striking of any ship in charge of a pilot, such pilot will be, ipso facto, suspended in the exercise of his functions as pilot until the cause of such accident has been investigated, and until the decision of the Harbor Commissioners has been given, and for such further time as may be determined by the Commissioners in the decision. And in such case the pilot must also surrender his license as pilot to the Harbor Commissioners at the time required by this Article.

"That this new Article, number 142, subjects the pilots to an absolute arbitration, and appears contrary to the Pilotage Law;

"1. As long as this Article continues in force the pilot, immediately after the aforesaid accident, must immediately quit the ship, being, ipso facto, suspended in the exercise of his functions. He should not and cannot remain on board of the ship, having no longer any right to remain on board of her.

"2. Provided that this ipso facto suspension, until the accident has been investigated to ascertain the cause of it, and that without any delay being assigned, may be perpetual or indefinite, the pilot will be deprived of his right to exercise his business, even if he is not in any manner at fault.

"3. In view of the fact that the deposit of his license, simultaneously with the deposit of his report, which he should make under such circumstances, will be, ipso facto, an abdication of his rights as pilot, even should no blame, no judgment, no fault exist.

"4. In view of the fact that the principle contained in this 142nd Article is essentially different from the Pilotage Act of 1873, and to common right, and specially opposed to that contained in clauses 29, 31, and 35 of said Pilotage Act of 1873, which clauses determine on what conditions the pilot retains his commission, how and when he should surrender it, and for what causes he should surrender it.

"That the enforcement of this Article 142 will have for immediate result considerably increase the slowness of navigation.

"In view of the fact that this will have a tendency to paralyze the activity of pilots."

"Thus if it happens that a pilot in charge of a steamer, whether skilfully or otherwise, runs her aground to escape

a greater danger, he is obliged, as soon as the steamer under his control has struck or sunk, to give up his license, to go to Montreal, place that license in the hands of the Harbor Commissioners, awaiting the decision of the Harbor Commissioners, which may remain pending for two, three or four months. There is also another matter which is well understood: that a pilot is very often at the mercy of the crew, which is influenced by the Commissioners. Very often the crew is disposed to give testimony against him. It is often interested in doing so to save either the captain or some member of the crew. Under clause 142 of the by-laws of the Harbor Commission approved by Order in Council of 20th July, 1882, the pilot is entirely at the mercy of the crew and Harbor Commissioners, for as soon as the vessel is sunk he is deprived of his functions and he abandons all rights in the ship which he had charge of. I will observe, en passant, Mr. Speaker, not because they are political friends of mine, because I must candidly admit that the pilots voted against me, but I ought to acknowledge that the Corporation of Pilots is composed of perfectly qualified men, and if the Government does not give them the protection to which they are entitled, if the Government yields to the pressure of the upper commerce of Montreal, if they yield to the demands of the Harbor Commissioners, the pilots will be discouraged, insurance companies will be discouraged, and commerce and the general good will suffer. As I just observed, it may probably happen the pilot may skilfully run a vessel aground in order to avoid a greater disaster, but in such case he must surrender his license and be deprived of his vocation. At Quebec the regulations are not the same. According to the Federal Law of 1873 a pilot only forfeits his license after conviction. But to-day, according to the regulation about which I have been speaking, he is considered guilty the moment the vessel strikes either a shoal or sand bar. This is altogether unjust. If I am rightly informed, a deputation waited on the Ministers some time ago, and I believe I may say that they expressed the same views which I enunciate to-day to the hon. gentleman. I think it is entirely unjust to condemn a man before he is tried, and I trust the Government will duly make this Order in Council. As I observed, the object of my demand, has been to draw the attention of the House, and of the Government, to this question, and I think I have said enough to convince them of the justice of the claims of the pilots.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. (Translation). Mr. Speaker: In reply to the hon. member, I may say that I have already seen some of the members of the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal, and that I brought under their attention some of these regulations, and particularly the one to which he refers. I have reason to believe that the Commissioners realize that these regulations must be amended. I give this information to the hon. member, and the hon. member having attained his desired end, I trust that he will withdraw his motion.

Mr. De ST. GEORGES. In view of the explanations given by the hon. Minister of Public Works, I think I should withdraw the motion.

Motion withdrawn.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

IMMIGRATION INTO BRITISH COLUMBIA.

Mr. BAKER (Victoria), in moving for all correspondence of recent date between the Government of the Dominion and the Government of British Columbia, and all Orders in Council on the subject of immigration into that Province, said: I may say that this matter has already been touched upon by hon. members from British Columbia; but what I refer to in the motion is a letter addressed to the Government on the subject of immigration into that Province, and an Order in Council which has recently been passed in relation thereto.

Motion agreed to.

PHYSICIANS CERTIFICATES GRANTED UNDER CANADA TEMPERANCE ACT.

Mr. McCRAANEY moved for a return of all certificates granted for liquor under section ninety-nine, clause four, second part of the Canada Temperance Act of 1878 by the physicians of the county of Halton, giving the name of each physician, and specifying the number of certificates granted by each, from the 1st of May to the 31st of December, 1882.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I beg leave to call the hon. gentleman's attention to the fact that we have no control in this matter whatever. The licenses are granted by the Local Government, and as we cannot insist upon these returns being made, I think it would be unwise in the House to ask for them.

Mr. McCRAANEY. I find that the Act provides that such a return shall be made, and I took it for granted that it is to be made to this Government.

Sir HECTOR LANGÉVIN. If under the Act these returns can be made to this House, or to the Government, of course they will be brought down.

Motion agreed to.

IMPORTATION OF CHILDREN'S CARRIAGES.

Mr. McCRAANEY moved for a return of the number of children's carriages imported into Canada each and every year, from the 1st of July, 1878, to the 1st of July, 1882, with the amount of duty collected in each year.

Mr. BOWELL. There is no objection to bringing down these returns provided we have them in the Department. I am under the impression, however, that they are not kept separately, but are classed with other carriages. I will make enquiry, however, and if there is any such return we will bring it down.

Mr. McCRAANEY. In the Trade and Navigation Returns the aggregates are given. I supposed, however, that there was a detailed statement from which the returns were made, and that the hon. gentleman would bring it down.

Mr. BOWELL. The only way in which it could be obtained, unless it is kept separately in the Department, would be to send to each port in the Dominion for a special return. I scarcely think the hon. gentleman would require that.

Mr. McCRAANEY. My reason for making this motion is that some persons engaged in the business have been writing to me, asking for this return.

Motion agreed to.

TIMBER PERMITS.

Mr. McCRAANEY moved for a return showing the names of all persons to whom permits have been granted to make timber, ties, telegraph poles and saw-logs within the district of Rainy Lake and River and Lake of the Woods and tributary streams, said return to show the quantities removed and dues collected on the same, from the 1st day of July, 1880, to the 1st day of July, 1882, and the area of territory granted to each person, and by whom surveyed, with all correspondence in connection therewith. He said: I consider this a very important question—perhaps no more important question can come before this House. It is a well-known fact that the timber of our country is going away very fast. Largo tracts of country in the North-West are entirely destitute of timber; and the probability is, from the way in which our timber is being cut off, that in a very few years, perhaps not more than twenty, the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec will have no more lumber than they will require for their own use. At the present time lumber in the North West is very high, averaging from $20 to $40 per thousand, and at the present rate at which timber is being cut off, it is fair to say, at any rate, that the price of lumber will not decrease. Consequently, it becomes an absolute necessity that the timber resources of our country should be husbanded. While in the North-West last summer I made enquiries as to the practice of persons cutting timber in the Rainy Lake and Lake of the Woods district, and I found that a considerable quantity of timber had been destroyed by fire, and that large quantities were being removed by various parties. I was informed also that permits had been given by the Government. You will observe that I only ask for the number of permits; I do not ask for the number of licenses, as that return, I believe, has been asked for already this Session. Since that time, I have received several letters from parties in that section of country, and I will take the liberty of reading a short extract from one I received a short time ago, from a man who can be relied upon, and I have no doubt he states what is true. He says:

"During the summer of 1879 and the following winter but little timber belonging to Ontario was taken, further than what was required for the Pacific Railway, and until the road was in operation there was no means of removing timber and lumber, but in 1881 the timber cutters of the Dominion came in and went for the timber with a will. One man got a permit to make ties, take out telegraph poles, timber and piles. He made no survey of his limits; he selected the best place he could find, and the most convenient, and marked it on the map, and made a tracing which he sent to the land office at Winnipeg, and on this slender title but by no means a precarious one, so long as the Dominion claim the power, and have the will to take the timber from the estate of Ontario, he went to work. Report says an honorable Senator is the godfather of this man in timber iniquity. Another pet of the Dominion Government got a permit as vague and comprehensive as the other—marked it out the same way, and for the last two seasons has been cutting and removing timber on an extensive scale. His godfather is said to be another honorable at Ottawa. There are many minor villains who follow in the wake of these privileged plunderers, and have made a big stake; ties have been removed by the million, and telegraph poles by the hundreds of thousands, as well as square timber, piles and saw-logs. The vultures of the Dominion have a beautiful harvest in the dishonestly acquired property of old Ontario."

Now, Sir, I do not pretend to say that these statements are absolutely correct; all I have to say is this: if these things be so, it is time that the people of this country should know whether proper value has been received for this timber. During the past few months statements have appeared in the newspapers to the effect that the timber of that district is being sold at private sale, and at a very low price, to certain individuals who are favorites of the Government, and that the Dominion is not receiving full value for that timber. In one of our newspapers appeared, not long ago, the following:—

"Sir John Macdonald's Government gave to political friends certain valuable timber limits at the ridiculous price of $5 per square mile. The friends promptly sold these limits for $2,000 per square mile! Of such is the Ottawa system; and if our Provincial finances had been administered for ten years by the party that perpetrates such jobs, where, in the name of common sense, would Ontario have stood to-day?"

I find, on calculation, that if it be true that timber limits have been purchased at $5 per square mile, and resold at $2,000 per square mile, the profits resulting from this transaction would be 39,900 per cent., which is a pretty good rate of interest. There is no doubt but that the system of selling timber limits by private sale is a great mistake, whatever Government adopts it, and I think it is high time the Government put those limits up to the highest bidder and let every one who has the means and wishes to buy have an opportunity of purchasing. This, besides, will relieve the Government of a certain responsibility and prevent statements being made that timber limits are given to favorites, and that persons opposed to the Government have no opportunities of purchasing. I trust this return will be brought down before the close of the Session.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think it would have been fairer for the hon. gentleman to have waited until the information was brought down, and not have prejudged the case as he has done. The hon. gentleman has read extracts from newspapers and letters, and wants to prejudice public opinion, before allowing the Government to show how things are and produce all the papers. This is not fair. The hon. gentleman also selects a certain period by which he wants us to be limited, but the hon. gentleman should have asked for more than that. He should have asked for a statement of all the permits that have been granted in that Territory, and licenses, from the beginning until to-day. Let us have the whole statement and see how the case stands, not only under this Government, but under all previous Governments. Let us see whether the policy of this Government has been deficient from that of previous years, whether we have done a thing that is considered wrong, and whether the same thing done under a previous Government is to be considered right. Therefore I would ask that the hon. gentleman will consent—if not, I will propose an amendment—that there be no fixed date for the beginning, but that all the permits and licenses granted in the Territory down to to-day be brought down in a return. That will be a fair thing to all parties.

Mr. McCRAVEY. I have no objection at all to the hon. gentleman's suggestion, nor have I any desire to prejudge this case. All I want is to know the truth.

Mr. HESSON. The hon. gentleman should lay that letter on the Table of the House, and say who is the author of it. He has made from it the statement that timber limits have been sold by the Government at $5 per square mile, and resold at $2,000 per square mile. The hon. gentleman was not as fair as he might have been, for he did not tell the House the whole facts of the case. The hon. gentleman knows well that one of the conditions on which timber limits are sold, is, that the purchaser shall erect a mill on those limits with a capacity of sawing 25,000 feet of lumber per day, keep that mill running for six months in a year, and pay dues at the rate of 5 per cent. on all timber cut. The hon. gentleman did not state those facts which he must have known before he brought this matter before the House. The hon. gentleman reads to us items of newspapers and extracts from a letter, but I would like to see the hon. gentleman lay that letter on the Table of the House. If he claims it is a private letter, he should not have read it here, and in referring to the case at all he should have stated the whole case, and not have been careful to omit mentioning the conditions upon which licenses are obtained. I hope the hon. gentleman will lay that letter on the Table of the House.

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

RODERICK McLENNAN'S CLAIM.

Mr. BLAKE, in moving for copies of all correspondence, papers and Departmental action, with reference to the claim of Roderick McLennan, to section 31, township 21, range 27 west, North-West Territory, said: I make this motion having received a letter from Roderick McLennan saying that he came to that section of the country in March, 1882, with his brothers; that he settled on this section and improved it, at a time when these lands had been on the market a few days and were being sold to bona fide settlers for $1.25 per acre. It was this that induced him to settle on the section, but the sections were withdrawn before he was able to go to the office to secure the one he settled on.

Mr. McCRAVEY.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There can be no objection to the motion. I have no doubt the hon. gentleman, when the papers come down, will see that the Government, if they have not already done justice to the settler, is in the course of doing so. We will bring down the papers as soon as possible.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. BLAKE, in moving for a copy of the contract made by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company with a Construction Company called "The North American Contracting Company," or by some similar name, for the construction of the railway; a copy of the instrument of incorporation or association of the said Construction Company; and a statement of the names of the shareholders or associates thereof, said: Under the General Railway Act, as amended during the Session the Pacific Railway contract was passed, provision was made for receiving the terms of contracts made by railway companies for construction. Since that time addresses were passed for contracts made by the Canadian Pacific Railway for construction, but none have yet been brought down either in answer to these addresses or as part of the railway returns, although the railway returns require they should be brought down. In the returns which have been brought down up to the 30th June last, that portion which refer to contracts for construction is marked "Contracts to follow," indicating that it is intended at some subsequent term to bring them down. At the time the contract was made, suggestions were made that a contract might possibly be made with the Construction Company, on the same basis, and operating with similar results, as took place with some of the other Pacific Railway companies with whose history we are more or less familiar. For some time past rumors have been appearing in the papers that arrangements had been made in connection with a large emission of capital for the formation of a great Construction Company, which was to build the railway upon terms of receiving a portion of its stock. Amongst other things, rumors have so far taken shape as that lately there has appeared in the public press a direct statement that the negotiations which have been going on for some time are now concluded, and that a company, composed, I think, of strong Montreal capitalists, had been formed which had taken the contract for the whole of the remainder of the Company's line, and that Langdon, Shepherd & Co., who have been building that portion which has been constructed in the western part of the prairie, would take contracts with this new Construction Company. It is, of course, as I have pointed out on the occasion of former motions which have been made to this House, on this subject, of high consequence to us as the subsidizers of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and as having stipulated that we should limit our right to control the tolls by a limitation of 10 per cent. interest on the capital expenditure—it is, I say, of high interest, to know what contracts these are that are being made. I have already pointed out during this Session that the emission of capital which has taken place, or has been attempted, at the rate of sixty, was the creation of a share capital of ninety or one hundred million dollars, of which sixty or fifty-four million dollars alone was to be received, and that we ran the danger of being asked subsequently to permit dividends to be obtained upon ninety or one hundred millions, of which fifty-four or sixty millions, as the case may be, was for cash only. It is, therefore, important that we should obtain at an early period a copy of this contract. I, therefore, move for a copy of the contract made by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company with a Construction Company called "The North American Contracting Company," or by some similar name, for the construction of the railway; a copy of the instrument of incorporation or association of the said Construction Company; and a statement of the names of the shareholders or associates thereof.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think my hon. colleague the Minister of Railways has conferred with the hon. gentleman who has just made this motion, about the difficulty of granting it. The fact is the Canadian Pacific Railway Company having given a contract to another company to prosecute a portion of this work, that second company has, of course, given some contracts to different parties, and it would be more than inconvenient that the contract given by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to the second company should be made known. The hon. gentleman will see at once that it would be very inconvenient, and would necessarily cause trouble in the prosecution of that work, if the terms granted to the other company by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company were made known to the sub-contractors of that second company. I think there can be no difficulty arising out of the postponement of such information. The rates are established, I think, from year to year, or at shorter periods, subject to the approval of the Government; therefore, there can be no difficulty in this matter being postponed to another year, when the sub-contracts having been executed, there can be no objection in the contract given by the Canadian Pacific Railway being made public. I, therefore, hope that under these circumstances the hon. gentleman will see the propriety of not insisting upon his motion.

Mr. BLAKE. I am sorry I am not able to accede to the views of the hon. gentleman. The law, rightly or wrongly, requires that the contracts should be laid before the House; the law does not require this particular contract to be laid before the House at this time, but the law has laid down the proposition that the contracts made by the Company should be laid before the House, and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has thought fit to disobey the law in that regard. The hon. gentleman has rightly said that the hon. Minister of Railways gave me private explanations of the causes which induced the Company to disobey the law namely, that it would affect their contract with Langdon, Shepherd & Co., being a contract at schedule prices for the earth work, &c. He told me that it would create some difficulty with the sub-contracts with Langdon, Shepherd & Co. But this contract to which I am now referring—I have only the information in the press to guide me—is a contract of a very different complexion, it is a contract for the construction of the whole of the remainder of the line.

Mr. POPE. From whom?

Mr. BLAKE. The statement in the papers is, that it is a contract for the construction of the whole line unexecuted. I am merely saying what the newspapers say. Of course, I know nothing about it; but the statement is, that it is a contract for the whole of their unexecuted works. I presume it, therefore, to be of the nature of a sub-contract, but I do not know in which case the difficulty that was suggested by the hon. Minister would not arise. But it seems to me, as I thought it right, at an early period of the Session, to bring before the House what seemed to me to be the complications that were about to arise from the circumstance of this stock being issued in the way it has been issued—it seems to me that what has been developed within a few days in the statement which has come to us from abroad, is a further complication and a further step in the same direction. Therefore, I do not feel that I can take the responsibility of withdrawing my motion.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I must say that the Government does not feel that the public interest would be served by bringing the document down and laying it before the country at present. I do not say that after a time it may not be brought down—I think the contrary—but at present it would not be in favor of the public interest to bring it down, and I would still offer the hon. gentleman the option of withdrawing his motion.

Mr. BLAKE. My hon. friend's objection must be attained in some other way.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If the hon. gentleman does not wish to withdraw his motion, of course, I must ask the House to refuse assent to it, because we think, as a Government, that it would not be for the public interest for this to be brought down. Therefore, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. POPE. I think I may relieve the hon. gentleman from a little misapprehension about this matter. I am quite certain there is no such contract as the hon. gentleman has mentioned, but that the work is left to the same men who had it last year, and I know these parties made a contract to build to the foot of the Rocky Mountains.

Motion negatived.

QUEBEC SUBSIDY.

Mr. LAURIER moved for a copy of any representation by either of the Houses of the Legislature of Quebec on the subject of an increase of the Provincial subsidy. He said: It is well known that the Quebec Legislature has adopted a memorial to the Dominion Government, representing that the Province should have an increased subsidy. We have not heard anything of this memorial since. Perhaps it has not yet got into the hands of the Government; but if it has been presented to the Government, it should, in the public interest, be brought down.

Motion agreed to.

GEOLOGICAL REPORTS OF THE COUNTIES OF VICTORIA, INVERNESS AND RICHMOND.

Mr. CAMERON (Inverness). Before reading my motion I desire to place before the House a few facts which will show the necessity of publishing the Geological Reports, with maps, of the counties of Victoria, Inverness and Richmond, in the Island of Cape Breton. It is well known that the north-west coast of Cape Breton does not possess any harbors from which the vast mineral resources of that side of the Island can be exported. There are three or four harbors, it is true, but they are bar harbors, which only a small class of vessels can enter, a class of vessels which are not adequate for carrying coal and other minerals, of which there is an abundance on that coast. In the Geological Report for 1877-78 was published the last of four sheets of a map of Cape Breton County, on a scale of one inch to the mile, which is useful and valuable, not only to miners and explorers, but also to all interested in the county of Cape Breton, because it gives, besides the geology of this fine county, more geographical detail than any other map published. In 1877 and 1878, Richmond and that portion of Inverness which lies south of Judique and River Dennis Basin were surveyed with even greater minuteness than the county of Cape Breton; and a report of this work was written, which, however, was kept back until a few particulars could be obtained to make the accompanying maps more complete. This was done, and the maps were ready for the Report of the Geological Survey for 1879-80. Yet, in this report, the maps did not appear, although it contains an account of the work done by geological surveyors in 1877 and 1878. This comparative uselessness and incompleteness of that report, was publicly pointed out in the Cape Breton press, and in the Senate by hon. Senator Bourinot, as reported in Hansard of May 12th, 1882. Senator Bourinot, after pointing out the uselessness of the report with no maps accompanying it of the character stated, said:

"I regret very much that this should be so, and I have taken what I consider the best means of attaining the end which these people desire, and have brought this matter before the House. I have shown these reports, and these facts, when they become known, I trust will produce very good results. There is another point, before I resume my seat, to which I must refer. It is well known to hon. gentlemen present that there has been a syndicate formed in Nova Scotia for the purpose of building a line of railway from the Straits of Canso to the eastern part of that poor Island of Cape Breton, which has not been blessed with railways. Now, with regard to the proposed railway, and also the other railways of the opposite section of the Island of Cape Breton, the great American Short Line Railway, which I had the honor of introducing to this House, I am informed, and I believe it is a fact, that these very lines over which the railways are to run, have already been surveyed under the direction of the Geological Survey. These maps, if published, would they not have been of great service at this juncture when these railways are being constructed? Would they not be of great value? We know they are in existence, but they are completely buried in the archives of the Geological Survey. It may be that they will be published within the next two or three years, after the railway has been, I hope, located, when they will be, to some extent, useless."

A year has elapsed, yet these maps seem to be no nearer the "hands of the engraver" than before, and in the meantime the survey of the remainder of Inverness and Victoria has been finished and is quite ready for publication. The value of a geological report accompanied by the maps of the counties of Victoria, Inverness and Richmond, of which no maps exist, must be very great and needs not to be pointed out, and their immediate importance in view of prospective railway extension into Cape Breton is manifest. These maps should not be published on a smaller scale than the maps of Cape Breton County, to save a few dollars to the Geological Survey; as by reducing the scale the usefulness of the maps would be impaired. My desire in seeking to obtain the publication of these reports and maps, is to let capitalists all over the world know the immense mineral wealth which lies undeveloped on the north-west coast of Cape Breton. Copper mines exist in Inverness. Gold exists in the bed of Middle River, Victoria County, which is evidently washed down the mountains of an unexplored territory in the counties of Victoria and Inverness. It is an unfortunate fact that, in that region, there are large tracts of unexplored land which, it is believed, is of excellent quality and contains immense mineral wealth. Along the coast of Inverness, from Chimney Corner to Long Point, a distance of about fifty miles, there are immense deposits of coal, which cannot be developed without facilities which that county does not yet possess. Besides coal there are iron, gypsum, marble freestone and other mineral wealth, which cannot be exported from that county unless further facilities are afforded. My object in asking for this report is in order that capitalists all over the world may obtain copies of it, and be induced to invest money in developing the enormous resources which lie in that region. With that view, Sir, I move for an Order of the House for copies of the geological reports made by Mr. Hugh Fletcher, of the counties of Victoria, Inverness and Richmond, with the maps accompanying the same.

Motion agreed to.

WESTHAVER'S POINT.

Mr. KEEFLE moved for copies of all correspondence, reports and petitions in connection with the erection of a lighthouse at Westhaver's Point, entrance of Hubbard's Cove, in the county of Lunenburg, and all instructions issued to the commander of the steamship Newfield, or any other officer of the Government, in reference to the location of said lighthouse, under which he acted on the 10th day of June last, and any report on the same; also, a copy of the agreement for the purchase of the land for said lighthouse entered into on behalf of the Government by C. E. Kaulbach, Esq., M.P., within ten days of the last General Election. He said: Petitions were presented to this House in 1879 for the erection of a lighthouse at Westhaver's Point, in the county of Lunenburg; but nothing more was heard of the matter until the 10th of June, 1882, ten days prior to the last General Election, when the steamer Newfield, having Mr. Kaulbach, the Conservative candidate, and my opponent, on board, came to anchor off Westhaver's Point. The steamer landed some of her crew, who staked off a site for a lighthouse; and Mr. Kaulbach made a bargain for the land necessary, the price to be paid, I believe, being $800; but that is the last which, as far as I am aware, was done in the matter. At least, I have examined the Estimates for this year, and I find nothing in them for Nova Scotia for the building of a lighthouse at this point, which would be useful for the fishermen. It certainly looks suspicious that this steamer, so close to the time of the General Election, should come to this place; and that this project, after lingering in abeyance for four years, should be raked up within a few days of the General Election. The fact resulted, however, that where I expected to have a majority, my opponent had quite a majority. Now, I do not wish to say that the Government was in collusion with the action of the steamer and of Mr. Kaulbach in regard to this matter, I would be very sorry to do so; but I, nevertheless, think that the transaction requires a little explanation; and I think it due to myself and to the House, that this explanation should be given.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN, I am very sorry that we could not hear the hon. gentleman on this side of the House, excepting as to the last sentence or two. I think he said that he had not received several votes which he expected to have at a certain place. I am very sorry for the hon. gentleman, but it is evident he did not require those votes to elect him to this House. I suppose that he now wants a lighthouse to throw a great deal of light over this subject; and though I could not hear the hon. gentleman he may be sure that we will bring down the papers, when I hope he will see that everything is right as far as the Government is concerned.

Mr. ROBERTSON (Shelburne). I understand that the objections raised by the hon. gentleman are these: that the steamer Newfield appeared off Westhaver's Point on the 10th of June, a few days prior to the last General Elections; that among the passengers on board of this vessel, a Government steamer, was the Conservative candidate for the county of Lunenburg, who, assisted by the officers of the boat, had a site marked out for a lighthouse; that a bargain was made with the owner of the land for the purchase of the site on behalf of the Government; and as I further understand from the objections of the hon. gentleman, that no provision is this year made in the Estimates for the erection of this lighthouse. While I think that the proper course for the Government to pursue in this matter is to make provision for the erection of a lighthouse—and if the officers of the Newfield were the parties who assisted the Conservative candidate for the county, I think that the Government should reprimand them—I do not believe that the Government would allow the officers of this steamer to assist any candidate favorable to themselves in any way like that. I could not fancy such a thing, and I, therefore, trust that the Government will see to it that they make provision in the Estimates for the erection of this lighthouse this year.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The House will, perhaps, allow me, in answer to the hon. gentleman, to say this: it is impossible for both of the hon. gentlemen to say that this lighthouse is not to be provided for in the Estimates, because, if I am rightly informed, when the vote is brought down, this is done in one sum, and then the hon. Minister, when the item comes before the House, explains what is to be done with the amount, so that the hon. gentleman can still hope that provision for this lighthouse may be found in the Estimates. I, therefore, hope that he will allow this hope to linger until then, and perhaps he may then be satisfied when the propositions of the Government are laid before the House.

Mr. BOWELL. If the hon. gentleman will turn to page 62 of the Estimates, No. 164, he will find that $40,000 are asked from the House for the completion and construction of lighthouses and fog-horns.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Is this one among them?

Mr. BOWELL. We will tell you when they come down. Motion agreed to.

THE CLAIM OF JAMES DAUPHENÉE.

Mr. KEEFLER moved for copies of all petitions, reports and correspondence in reference to the claim of James Dauphenée, of Bridgewater, in the county of Lunenburg, for payment of claim for refund of expenses incurred by him in discharge of his duties as a Fishery Warden of that county. He said: I may state to the House that James Dauphenée was a Fish Warden in the county, and in the discharge of his duties he brought a number of persons to justice for violation of the Fisheries Act. He incurred a great deal of expense, which has never been refunded to him by the Government. I should like that he would get a measure of justice, either from the Government, or from this House.

Motion agreed to.

CHARGES AGAINST MAJOR PETERS.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex) moved for all correspondence, instructions, reports and Orders in Council to date, referring to the charges brought against Major Peters, No. 2 Troop, 1st Regiment Cavalry of London.

Mr. CARON. Hon. gentlemen know that I am always ready to bring down any papers that are asked for, but I consider that in a matter like this it would be unwise to bring down the papers and submit them to the discussion, not only of the House, but of the public, as the efficiency and discipline of the service would be affected.

Motion withdrawn.

MOTIONS FOR RETURNS.

Motions for the following Returns were severally agreed to:—

Copies of engineer's report of the survey made at Brae, Prince County, Prince Edward Island, during the last summer, with a view to making harbor improvements at that place.—(Mr. Hackett.)

Copy of petition relative to the trade between Canada and the West Indies, and Brazil, signed by the principal fish merchants of the coast of Gaspé and Bay des Chaleurs, and addressed to the hon. the Minister of Finance, and of the letter accompanying the said petition.—(Mr. Fortin.)

BI-DAILY MAIL SERVICE OF THE GRAND TRUNK, GEORGIAN BAY AND LAKE ERIE RAILWAY.

Mr. LANDERKIN enquired, Is it the intention of the Government to establish a bi-daily mail on both lines of the Grand Trunk, Georgian Bay and Lake Erie Railway to all the offices at all stations north of Palmerston; if so, when?

Mr. CARLING. It is not at present the intention of the Government to establish a bi-daily mail to the places mentioned.

CRUELTY TO ANIMALS BILL.

Mr. RICHEY moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 25) to amend the Acts respecting Cruelty to Animals.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

In the fourth and fifth sub-sections the words "wantonly and maliciously" were added.

In the seventh sub-section the words "whether domestic, tame or wild," were struck out.

On sub-section 8 of section 2,

Mr. LANDERKIN. A great many farmers, in slaughtering their hogs, shoot them. Would they be liable to be imprisoned in the common gaol for three months?

Mr. RICHEY. The plain meaning of the clause is that persons are liable only when the animal is kept as a target for the purpose of being shot at; it does not, of course, affect those who kill animals for the purpose of food. The language that is here is the very language that has already been incorporated in the Acts of the United States with regard to pigeon shooting. At the same time, if it is thought that there is any question with regard to the application of the phraseology I am quite ready to accept amendments to make the meaning more clear.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I object to the proviso that all animals found at large, under certain circumstances, may be destroyed at view. It is a dangerous power to vest in the hands of a Justice of the Peace that if he happens to find an animal of any kind at large upon the highway, and in any way injured—it does not say how injured—he may give two men as wise as himself authority to kill that animal without any notice to the owner of it, without calling the owner to show cause why the animal should not be killed, or giving him any notice by which an investigation into the condition of the animal might be held.

Mr. BLAKE. There is another objection which occurs to me. It seems to me that it is entirely beyond our jurisdiction. You are making lawful an Act which is destroying the property of another man, which is interfering with civil rights. My horse is hurt, and because, in the opinion of a magistrate, he is not likely to be useful any longer, you are here proposing that it shall be lawful for the magistrate to kill that horse, and that I shall not have my action. It is a question of civil rights, not at all a question of cruelty to animals.

Mr. RICHEY. The hon. gentleman will see that this proviso is not to the one clause only, but a proviso to the penal clause which covers the whole Act. It protects the magistrate who may be called upon to discharge this duty against the punishments that might flow from his act. I think, however, that full provision is made to cover this case in other Acts upon the Statute-book. I consent to the proviso being struck out.

Mr. LANDERKIN. In reference to the shooting of pigeons, does the hon. gentleman propose to strike out that also?

Mr. RICHEY. No; I consider that a very important part of the Bill?

Mr. LANDERKIN. Pigeons are used as an article of food. Many farmers raise pigeons, and before they can be cooked they have to be killed. Does it give them any more pain to be shot at as a target than to have their heads cut off? I cannot see that there is any greater cruelty being practiced to them by being shot at as a target than by being shot at on a fence, or on a barn. You cannot take pigeons in any other way than by shooting them.

Mr. RICHEY. I know the hon. gentleman is of a benevolent nature, and is not very much in the habit of attending pigeon-shooting matches. The Committee have taken evidence upon this point from parties who were inimical to the Bill, rather than favorable to it, and every sportsman conceded the fact that it was a cruel and reprehensible practice. In the greatest sporting country in the world, England, a Bill for the purpose of preventing pigeon-shooting passed its second reading while the Committee were considering the Bill now before the House. I find, in the language employed by members of the British House of Commons, the justification for the course we are pursuing here. Colonel King-Harman said that if the Bill referred solely to pigeon-shooting it would have his support, because, having been a pigeon-shooter himself, he had given up the sport as cruel and unsportsmanlike. Sir Wm. Harcourt, speaking for himself, and not for the Government, said he was strongly in favor of the Bill. In these matters it was necessary to keep pace with public opinion, and public opinion had made much progress, as was shown by the abolition of bull-baiting, cock-fighting, and other such sports. He believed that the cruelty of pigeon-shooting was proved and acknowledged. Indeed, as carried on it was a public nuisance, and public opinion was fully prepared for the first clause of the Bill. That Bill passed its second reading by 195 to 40 votes. The shooting of game or pigeons, or any animal necessary to kill for the purpose of food, does not come within the intention, scope, or purport of this Bill.

On the interpretation clause,

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. How will farmers pluck their geese in the spring without being subject to the penalty provided in the Bill.

Mr. BLAKE. The Finance Minister plucks his geese all the year round.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The Finance Minister has mentioned one provision in the Bill which should not be allowed to pass. The plucking of geese is a custom as old as the hills. Geese lose their feathers at a certain time naturally, and farmers' wives pluck them without causing the birds much pain. It will never do to send farmers' wives to jail for three months for this simple act.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I think the clause should be struck out. There is a practice in Quebec of plucking geese twice a year. The farmers obtain two crops without causing much pain to the birds, and, therefore, this provision should not pass.

Mr. RICHEY. Evidence was taken by the Committee on this point. If the Committee of the Whole is against me on this point I must submit, but I will not be a party to prepare a proviso excluding this act, which I believe to be a cruel practice.

Mr. BLAKE. What was the effect of the evidence? A great many things are customary which are cruel. If the evidence was that this is an inhuman practice, that is one thing; hon. gentlemen, on the other hand, say that geese lose their feathers naturally under any circumstances, and that the practice is humane rather than otherwise.

Mr. BÉCHARD. I object to this clause in the Bill. I am a farmer myself, and I know how the plucking of geese is done. The geese are plucked alive two or three times in the summer. There is a portion of the year when the birds lose their feathers naturally, and farmers find it profitable to pluck them at that time. It is a matter of great profit to farmers, and it would be very unjust to allow this provision of the Bill to pass. They know the right time when geese should be plucked, and no damage is done to the birds.

Mr. HESSON. It is a most absurd proposition to endeavor to prevent farmers from plucking their geese. Farmers know the necessity of doing so, and the practice is followed as a matter of economy as well as prudence.

Mr. RICHEY. That is, because it is done, therefore it must be right; but our contention is that many things are done which are not right, and are cruel in themselves. I find, that in Lincolnshire, fowls are often deprived while alive of their feathers, and sometimes of their quills; and in a case before the court, it was proved that a person with a live fowl in his hands plucked it, holding the bird's head between his knees; the fowl's breast was nearly bare, it fluttered about and seemed to be in agony. The penalty inflicted was £5. A number of other instances are given, in which plucking is carried on because they think that it improves the flesh of the animal, and they consequently pluck them alive before killing them. As to the geese question, I do not know; I suppose the geese may like it; but I do not think, that any other animal would be gratified in having its feathers plucked off while alive. The only way that a reservation might be made in this respect would be by a proviso.

Mr. McMULLEN. The proviso might direct chloroforming.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The words in the thirty-fifth line, "that plucks alive" means stripping alive an animal of its feathers wholly or in part, and the words, "plucks alive" in the second sub-section should be struck out.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course, if the only plucking alive that takes place in the country generally is the plucking of geese at the proper season, and that is the only thing we have to deal with, it may be struck out; but I could have quite understood that it would be lawful under this clause, and with proper care, even to pluck a portion of the feathers off geese while alive, because it says, "whosoever cruelly, wantonly, and unnecessarily," &c. If picking before killing is desired to be prevented, I could understand that this clause could properly remain with a proviso; but if the only thing is the plucking of geese, then, of course, we might strike it out.

Mr. RICHEY. I will defer to what seems to be the feeling of the House.

Mr. KEEFLER. Why did the hon. gentleman forget to introduce a clause with reference to the plunging of lobsters alive into boiling water? This is as strong a case as the plucking of geese while alive.

Mr. RICHEY. It is plain, that this is not a finality, and I will have to bring in another Bill next Session.

Mr. TAYLOR. How does the hon. gentleman interpret "bleeding slowly" in the second sub-section. We export in our section large numbers of fowls to the United States, and the Americans will not purchase our turkeys, &c., and give the highest price for them, unless they are killed by slow bleeding—pierced in the mouth alive with the head on.

Mr. RICHEY. That strikes me as being a very cruel act, and ought to be prevented. These words refer to the opening of a vein, whereby oxen, and particularly calves, are killed, being left to bleed as long as forty-eight hours, in order that the flesh may be whiter and command a higher price.

Mr. BLAKE. How long does it take fowls to die under that operation.

Mr. TAYLOR. From five to ten minutes.

Mr. BLAKE. Then it is not slow bleeding.

Mr. TAYLOR. It is termed "slow bleeding" in the American circulars?

Bill amended, and reported.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and (at 10:15 o'clock p.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

Tuesday, 24th April, 1883.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PRIVATE BILLS.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved, That as the time for the reception of reports of the Committee on Private Bills will expire on Thursday next, the same be extended to the following Tuesday, inclusive, in accordance with the recommendation of the Standing Committee on Railways, Canals and Telegraph Lines.

Motion agreed to.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Mr. ABBOTT moved, That the 51st Rule be suspended in conformity with the report of the Committee on Standing Orders, and that leave be granted to introduce Bill (No. 114) respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Motion agreed to; and Bill read the first time.

Mr. ABBOTT. Considering the lateness of the Session, I hope the Bill will now receive the second reading. The fullest possible opportunity will be given for discussion at subsequent stages.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will explain the objects of the Bill a little more fully, as we know nothing about it.

Mr. ABBOTT. The objects of the Bill are, as stated in the preamble, to authorize this company to lease the lines of the Credit Valley, the Ontario and Quebec, and a certain portion of the Atlantic and North-Western, in so far as that may be necessary to constitute a through line from Montreal and from the south bank of the St. Lawrence at or near Montreal to the western terminus, of the Credit Valley. The intention is simply to pay an annual rental for the lines forever. The lease is to be in perpetuity, and the object of the Bill is obviously, and the idea will present itself to the mind of every hon. gentleman, to secure a through line, and by that means to obtain some portion of the through traffic of Ontario and the western portion of Quebec for the northern route of the Canadian Pacific Railway and to afford some means of sustaining its line north of Lake Superior. The Company fears, from recent events, it may lose the traffic which it might otherwise obtain from Ontario, and from the western portion of Quebec, unless it can retain some kind of control over those railways; and it is for the purpose of enabling the Company to obtain that control that this Bill is introduced, and for no other purpose. That is the simple object of the Bill; the propriety of it is involved in the one proposition to which I have referred. The taking of the second reading of the Bill to-day will make no difference, and will be neither advantageous nor disadvantageous to the discussion of that proposition, as it seems to me.

Mr. BLAKE. This is a question involving a Company in which the Government and the public take great interest, and to which they are large contributors; and in view of the additional powers asked for, the House may not unreasonably ask that the views of the Administration respecting the Bill be placed before the House.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Speaker: I may say that the proposition was submitted very recently to the Government, and they saw no objection to the proposition as made. It is not a proposition to divert any portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway funds, for the purpose of obtaining the control of the lines referred to in the Bill, but to enable the Company to lease them so that they shall form a part of their system; and we may fairly assume that before leasing those lines, the Company will satisfy themselves that the terms on which they are enabled to lease them will be such as not to make any change on the Canadian Pacific Railway, but will, as has been stated by the hon. member who introduced the Bill, furnish a basis of traffic by which the line to the north of Lake Superior may be sustained. We consider it of great importance that the North-West should have the advantage of the fullest competition between the great commercial centres of Canada. At present the Canadian Pacific Railway connects the North-West with Brockville and Ottawa, between the intermediate points of Winnipeg and Montreal. By this proposal they will be enabled to secure a connecting line by which they will have the opportunity of giving the people of the North-West an active competition between the great commercial centres of Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton and other parts of Ontario. So far as the public interests are concerned, we think that they will be promoted rather than hindered in any way by the adoption of the proposal contained in this Bill, to give to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company the power to make arrangements for leasing the Credit Valley Railway, and the proposed railway, the Ontario and Quebec.

Mr. BLAKE. Mr. Speaker: it is not my intention to oppose the second reading of this Bill; but I must say it seems to me that a somewhat inadequate view is taken on this occasion, both by the hon. gentleman who introduced it and by the hon. Minister of Railways, of its possible attempted operations, as contrasted with some declarations which some of us still remember to have heard expressed in this House. It would be useless to conceal, for myself, that there is and has been for some time past a close alliance between the Credit Valley Railway Company and the Canada Southern, and that there have been rumors current in the public press and elsewhere of the action of a great railway capitalist, one of the greatest capitalists of the United States, who is interested in the Canada Southern, in connection with the affairs of the Canadian Pacific. It seems to be immediately on the cards, that arrangements will be made, whereby the Canadian Pacific obtains control of the Ontario and Quebec and the Credit Valley, and that connecting with the Canada Southern, we will soon have another through route via Chicago. It was said the Canadian Pacific Railway would have a greater interest in sending traffic by the north shore of Lake Superior than by any other way. I remember the hon. First Minister pointing out what happened when an attempt was made to trouble the course of the Rhine; but, without going into that matter of history, I may say that it is quite possible that the Canadian Pacific may secure connections through Michigan, and by this means form another through route via Chicago. Of course, the hon. gentleman may say that this line would be controlled, as far as the legislation of the Government is concerned, by the same persons who control the Pacific Railway, and who have a greater interest in sending traffic by the north shore of Lake Superior than by the other way, and, therefore, depend upon it, they will not; but, at the same time it is very obvious that it is possible—and it will be rendered more possible by the alliance proposed than it would be without that alliance—that it may go by another point. The hon. Minister of Finance some time ago, at the request of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, proposed to hand over $1,000,000 and take Credit Valley Railway bonds, on a statement of figures which I have been unable yet to understand; but I suppose that we will have further explanations on that subject. It now appears, however, that it is the Canadian Pacific Railway Company itself which is to support the Credit Valley Company; therefore, it is to come out of the Canadian Pacific Railway coffers, except so far as the traffic arrangements of the Credit Valley satisfy the drain, for the Credit Valley is, of course, the security, and it is quite clear that the security to be given by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to the Government, in lieu of the $1,000,000, is the Canadian Pacific, and not the Credit Valley; therefore, that is a portion of the transaction which seems to intimate that the hon. gentleman's view, when he proposed that exchange, was not exactly accurate. I am glad to hear from the hon. Minister of Railways that it is not proposed that any funds of the Canadian Pacific should be absorbed in the construction of these lines, and that it is simply proposed that the rentals shall be paid; but, of course, there is an obligation to pay the rental, which is not of itself an onerous obligation, but it may be an onerous obligation. It has a character dependent entirely on the question of what the traffic resources of the rented lines are, and how far they are adequate to meet the obligation which is incurred. When the Canadian Pacific was incorporated we all supposed it was given all possible powers, and it has been several times pointed out, as a model for universality of power in the case of other corporations, but it was not given the power to lease lines running in this particular direction. Power was given to lease lines, it is true, extending from Callander towards the eastern sea-board, and the Canada and Atlantic was mentioned specifically; other lines in that general direction were mentioned, but this power was given for the purpose—and this purpose was expressed—of completing the through route from the west to the sea-board. Of course, this leasing power is not embraced in that measure—the introduction of this Bill is sufficient proof of that—and the direction of the line with which we are all familiar, is another proof of it. This purpose also was stated recently by Mr. Stephens in a letter published in the papers. He says, having alluded to the political purposes for which the railway was incorporated:—

"It was created for the purpose of opening up the hitherto undeveloped North-Western Territories of the Dominion of Canada, and for carrying the traffic between those Territories and the Atlantic sea-board on the one hand, and the Pacific Ocean on the other, through British territory."

That is a general statement. While I am not opposed to the second reading of the Bill, I think it very possible, both with respect to the Dominion security, and the rental which is to be paid for these two lines—one of which is under construction, and is not advanced so far towards completion as that it may be said to be practically finished; and the other is, as far as I know, not commenced, but is to be acquired in perpetuity—an onerous obligation may thus be imposed upon the railway, and, I think it also possible that a through route to the south via Chicago may ultimately be acquired. As I told the hon. gentleman formerly, I am not afraid of a through route via Chicago, or Sault Ste. Marie, and less the latter than the former; but I contrast the horror and apprehensions expressed when any other route than that by the North Shore of Lake Superior was mentioned; and the present plan, it seems to me, would open the way to a through route more objectionable, if the Sault Ste. Marie route was objectionable, than that route was.

Mr. SPEAKER. Shall this Bill be read the second time.

Mr. RYKERT. I object to the second reading.

Mr. SPEAKER. Carried.

Mr. RYKERT. I object to the second reading of this Bill. I suppose that I have a perfect right to do so.

Mr. SPEAKER. Carried.

Bill read the second time.

Mr. RYKERT. I would like to know if an hon. member objects to the second reading, whether it can be carried in spite of him or not, when no notice is given.

Mr. BLAKE.

Mr. SPEAKER. I did not catch the hon. gentleman's remark.

Mr. RYKERT. I objected to the second reading of the Bill; and, of course, if it can be forced through in spite of my objection I would like to know it.

Mr. SPEAKER. I did not understand what the hon. gentleman said. Of course, it could not be carried if the hon. gentleman had objected to the second reading, unless the House agreed that it was a matter of urgency.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is a matter of urgency.

Mr. SPEAKER. When the hon. gentleman said he objected it was after the second reading was declared carried. When I was putting the motion that the Bill be referred to the Committee then the hon. gentleman said he objected.

Mr. RYKERT. I objected to the second reading.

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes; but on the motion for the reference.

Mr. ABBOTT. I do not think the hon. gentleman objected until the question was put: whether it should be referred to the Committee on Railways? I remarked that particularly.

Mr. RYKERT. That is not the case, Mr. Speaker; I objected immediately.

ACCOMMODATION IN THE BUILDINGS—EXCHANGE OF PUBLIC DOCUMENTS.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell), in moving the adoption of the Sixth Report of the Joint Committee of both Houses on the Printing of Parliament, said: This is the report of the Committee which was presented yesterday. It recommends the printing of a number of papers, but in addition to that recommendation there are two references in connection with it to which I desire to call attention. The first has regard to the want of accommodation in the House for the convenience of hon. members, and, to some extent, the convenience of the work of the House. Mr. Botterell, of the Distribution Office, applied for increased accommodation for the purposes of his office, and a sub-Committee of the Committee on Printing was appointed to see what could be done in that respect. Upon an examination of the rooms in the building, it was found that nothing could be done immediately, but it was also discovered that too great a number of the rooms of the House are occupied by officers of the House, and that to the great inconvenience of members, who really have no retiring rooms into which they can go and do writing or other work of that kind. The suggestion was made—and it is embodied in this report—that you, Mr. Speaker, the Speaker of the Senate, and the hon. Minister of Public Works, should, during the Recess, make an examination of the rooms, and see whether greater accommodation cannot be afforded to members of the House and to the business of the House. The other recommendation has relation to the exchange of our public documents, and it is embodied in this report simply for the purpose of calling the attention of members of the Local Legislatures, who may be interested in the subject, to the condition of things in respect to the exchange of these documents, so that some of them who have not been receiving them may know the reason why they have not been sent. Last year it was agreed that an exchange should take place of the public documents of this Parliament with the public documents of the various Local Legislatures—that is to say, that members of these Local Legislatures should receive our public documents, and members of Parliament should receive the public documents of the Provincial Legislatures. A circular was issued to each of the Provinces by the Clerk of the Printing Committee during the Recess, but only two of the Provinces—those, namely, of Ontario and Quebec—have responded; and the recommendation to which I have referred has been embodied in the report, simply for the purpose of informing members of the Local Legislatures of the other Provinces—who have complained that they have not received our documents—why these documents have not been sent to them, so that they may move their own officers to accept the suggestion which was made as to an exchange.

Mr. BLAKE. I cordially concur with the view of the hon. gentleman, that it would be a very great advantage to us if a few more of those rooms which were at our disposal in the earlier years of Confederation, should be restored to us by displacing or putting in some other places the officers who, from time to time, have been permitted to occupy them. I remember that during our earlier Parliaments there were a number of rooms which were available either as small committee-rooms or for the use of members in discharging that portion of their duties which cannot well be performed in this Chamber. But these have gradually been occupied—I do not say improperly, and perhaps there were fewer officers at that time—but I think it would not be unreasonable that accommodation should be found for them in some other places. Amongst the appliances which we require here for the efficient discharge of our duties, I know of nothing that is more lacking than a few rooms in which members can discuss public matters, arrange for the preparation of Bills, and generally perform that portion of our work which cannot conveniently be done in this Chamber, to which, however, many of us are now relegated for that purpose by the lack of accommodation elsewhere.

Mr. DESJARDINS (Translation). I think I can concur with the suggestions of my hon. friend the member from Cardwell (Mr. White). It is evident that the accommodation afforded to members is altogether insufficient. The employes suffer from this state of affairs. There is no doubt that an examination into the distribution of the apartments will induce the Internal Commission of the House to take some measures which, without increasing the expenses of the House, will render the situation much more convenient for us than it is at present. Certain employes have too extensive accommodation, and this should be remedied.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I agree with the hon. gentlemen who have spoken on this point that there is a want of accommodation for hon. members who may wish to retire from this Chamber to consult about matters public or otherwise; and I have no doubt that by a rearrangement of the accommodation in the building we would be able to find room enough for all the requirements of the House of Commons, as well as of the Senate, in that respect. Of course, it may be necessary to somewhat curtail the accommodation of some of our officers, at all events while the House is sitting. As to the time when the House is not sitting, of course nobody would complain of their occupying them; but while the House is in Session all available accommodation should be given to members of the House. For my own part, I shall have great pleasure in meeting yourself, Sir, and the hon. Speaker of the Senate, upon this matter after Parliament has prorogued, and I have no doubt we will be able to meet the requirements of the hon. members of the Commons at all events. As for the Senate, I do not know how they fare in that respect.

Mr. ROYAL. I am informed that the members from all the other Provinces have got the use of a room in this building; but that so far Manitoba has taken such a small space in the Confederation, that it is really impossible for the members from that Province to get the use of a room. If that idea is to be acted upon I hope that the rightful claims of Manitoba and the North-West will not be ignored. In fact, if we were to be given accommodation in proportion to our increase, I fear we would soon occupy one-third of this whole building, but we do not ask for so much space as that. So far, however, it has been impossible for us who represent Manitoba as well as the North-West Territories to a certain extent, to obtain one single room in which we could come to an understanding, or discuss between ourselves any question that refers to Manitoba and the North-West.

Mr. BRECKEN. The hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat is slightly incorrect. Prince Edward Island has made several applications for a very small room, but in vain; and some hon. members from the other Maritime Provinces are subject to the same inconvenience. I hope that, when the hon. Minister of Public Works takes this matter into consideration, Prince Edward Island will be placed in as favorable a position as the great Province of Manitoba.

Mr. BAKER. As there seems to be a general complaint from the hon. members from the smaller Provinces, I should like the Province of British Columbia not to be forgotten. The hon. members from that Province number as many as those from Prince Edward Island, or Manitoba, and I hope that, when a re-adjustment of the rooms in this Building takes place, the claims of British Columbia will be taken into consideration.

Motion agreed to.

DEBATES ON CONFEDERATION.

Mr. LANDRY (Translation). Mr. Speaker: Before the Orders of the Day are discussed, I wish to draw the attention of the Government to what I consider a question of considerable importance, at least for the members of this House. We have a very precious volume which is called "Debates on Confederation." When we have occasion to consult this volume, to study any question, we are obliged to examine it throughout to find anything which may have a bearing on what we wish to study. Under these circumstances, I think the Government would render a great service to the members, and to the public generally, if it would cause to be prepared an analytical index, in order to facilitate our studies on the various subjects which the study of these debates may present.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN (Translation). Mr. Speaker: I am not prepared to give an affirmative answer to the hon. member, and yet I should observe that the suggestion which he makes is a very reasonable one. I will speak to my colleagues, and we will see what can be done in the matter.

QUESTION OF PRIVILEGE.

Mr. DESJARDINS (Translation). Before the Orders of the Day are discussed, I wish to contradict a matter personal to myself, and which is in a report of an interview which took place last Saturday with the Government. Some of the Montreal journals would make it appear that I was one of a deputation which came from Quebec to oppose the action of the Government in taking control of the works to improve the river communication between Quebec and Montreal. As a matter of fact, supposing I was at the Capital on that day, I would have informed myself of the character of that deputation, which apparently was not a representative one, for I note that the three members from Quebec there, who are supposed to represent more immediately the interests of the city, were not members of the deputation, and those who are specially interested in this question, such as the members from Lévis (Mr. Blanchet) and from Montmorency (Mr. Valin) were absent. Now, as to the matter in which I am personally interested, I may observe that, far from approving of the course which it seemed advisable for these gentlemen to adopt, on every occasion when I had an opportunity of expressing my views to the Government, and especially to the hon. Minister of Public Works, who, I will avail myself of the occasion to remark, has always treated this subject in a correct light, and not whether Quebec or Montreal had more or less interest in the question; but, raising above the local interests under consideration, recognized the paramount duty of considering the great question of deep navigation. I did all in my power to impress on the Government to consider this subject whilst there was time, in order to arrive at a solution of this question, which is becoming more and more important for the commerce of the country.

Mr. FORTIN. Allow me to allude to a remark made by the hon. gentleman who has just sat down. According to him it is only the people of Montreal who should be interested in the deepening of the St. Lawrence. Allow me to say that the people of the whole country, from Halifax to British Columbia, are interested in that question. The deepening of the St. Lawrence should not be a local work, and should not be a job, as many people seem to think.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Is this in order?

Mr. SPEAKER. The discussion of the question is hardly in order, unless the hon. gentleman is going to conclude with a motion.

Mr. FORTIN. I am not going to discuss it, Sir, but I wanted to explain.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Chair, chair.

BOOMS AND OTHER WORKS IN NAVIGABLE WATERS.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN, in moving for the second reading of Bill (No. 96) respecting booms and other works constructed in navigable waters, whether under the authority of Provincial Acts, or otherwise, said: This Bill is for the purpose of meeting a difficulty that has arisen in the Province of New Brunswick. It has been decided in the Courts of New Brunswick that the power given by the Local Legislature to certain parties for the erection of booms in a certain river was ultra vires. This Bill is for the purpose of giving a legal status to the proprietors of those booms, and thus to legalize what has been done; but it will not interfere with the suits now pending. When we come to the different clauses of the Bill I shall explain its details more fully. The reason I bring this matter up immediately is that the rivers in New Brunswick are opening up rapidly, and this Bill, if it is to become law, should be passed without delay, in order that the parties in question may not be disturbed in their possession, and in the collection of their dues.

Mr. WELDON. The hon. Minister has quite correctly stated that this Bill has been suggested because of certain difficulties which have arisen in New Brunswick with regard to the possession of booms in navigable streams. In fact, there was a dispute in the courts, and the matter is now in appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada. I believe it was at the instance of members from New Brunswick that the Bill was introduced, a very important one, affecting the great staple industry of the Province. With the general principle of the Bill I am entirely in accord; but there are some features of the Bill to which I would call the hon. Minister's attention. There are two classes of booms in our Province, and possibly in other Provinces—those which existed prior to Confederation, and which were legalized, and a very few booms, the charters of which have expired since Confederation, and which come under this Act.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. When we go into Committee, I intend to move a clause, which will meet the case the hon. gentleman mentions, to the following effect:—

"Nothing herein shall apply to any boom or any such work as aforesaid, constructed under the authority of any Act of the Parliament of Mr. DESJARDINS.

Canada or the Legislature of the late Province of Canada, or the Legislature of any Provinces now forming part of the Dominion of Canada, passed before it became part thereof."

Mr. WELDON. With regard to litigation, it strikes me that this proviso is very insecurely worded. I assume the intention of the proviso is that, after the litigation is settled, the Governor in Council can authorize the legalizing of a boom or dam, or aboiteau, which has been approved; but, according to the wording of the proviso, it applies only to cases in litigation settled within twelve months, and there might be a difficulty with regard to booms concerning which the litigation was not settled within that time, although the booms might be approved of.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I propose to add at the end of the second sub-section these words: "During the said twelve months."

Mr. WELDON. When the litigation goes beyond twelve months there might be difficulty in legalizing the boom. According to the ninth section the word "aboiteau" includes dykes. Aboiteaus and dykes are very extensive in our Province. In the Bay of Fundy the tide rises very high, in some places thirty feet, in some places sixty or seventy feet, so that on the coasts there are immense tracts of very marshy lands, which if not protected would be covered with water at high tide. At a very early period, even during the French occupation, these tracts were protected from the sea by dykes and aboiteaus, the dykes being built on the shore and the aboiteaus across the creeks and rivers. Dykes do not interfere with navigation at all. On the Annapolis River there are dykes that have been in existence since the French occupation, and the same may be said in regard to many of the aboiteaus, which are mostly placed in streams practically unnavigable. There have been only one or two instances where they could interfere with navigation. Under this Act many small dykes and aboiteaus in different parts of the country might be cut, to the great injury of property, by allowing the sea to overflow marshy lands. The dyke lands throughout the Province are regulated by Commissioners, who are elected by the proprietors of marshes, who possess a common, joint property in the dykes, which no one is allowed to open except under certain regulations. This Bill, in its present shape, would interfere with this system.

Mr. BLAKE. I wish to point to the attention of the hon. member and the House, what seems to be an objectionable provision. No doubt a peculiar state of circumstances has arisen which requires exceptional temporary legislation. So far I am quite in accord with the hon. Minister. For a long number of years past, the Provinces have been authorizing certain dealings with rivers navigable in a more or less extended sense of that word, and now it is seriously argued that, so far as such action involves interference with the right of navigation, the Local Government had no right at all to take such action; that consequently the persons who have built these various obstructions are exposed to the ordinary process of law at the suit of those aggrieved, and the obstructions may be destroyed. Now, there are a great number, as I understand, of these constructions, so many that it has ceased to be an individual or minor interest, but it has become a very large one. It would be a misfortune that the question should remain pending in the courts of law from now till next Session of Parliament; but so far as this Bill proposes, during the next twelve months, or for whatever other reasonable period might be assigned, to legalize, so far as the question of navigation is concerned, these erections, I dare say this is a sensible mode of dealing with the matter, making provision for application to the proper authority for their legislation in so far as the question of navigation is concerned. But the right of navigation is a public right enjoyed by the subject, and which the Crown cannot alienate or depart with; and recognizing that view, it is that hon. Ministers come down and lay a proposition before us to establish a permanent principle that the Crown shall be authorized to deprive the subject of the right of navigation to the extent to which any boom, dam, or aboiteau which the Crown thinks fit to legalize, may deprive them of. No general principle is laid down for action, no proposal is made that there shall be Commissioners to ascertain certain general principles of action, or the extent of the public good that is created by the existence of the dam, aboiteau, or boom, or the extent of the public inconvenience that is created, on the other hand, in the way of obstruction of navigation. Of course, those who are in possession of the boom, aboiteau, or dam, feel that it is very important that they should remain in possession of it, no matter how great the obstruction to navigation, and they will press very strongly upon the Government of the day the propriety of legalizing its maintenance. On the other hand, the public may want to use this stream, or whatever it may be, only occasionally, at rare intervals, and there may be nobody very prominently representing the general public cause. Now, it seems to me that it is a great innovation that Parliament should surrender to the Crown the power, in perpetuum, of determining whether the right of navigation is interfered with in any place throughout the Dominion in which the Local Legislature may have authorized the erection of booms, dams, or aboiteaus. I do not think Parliament ought to depart with that power; I think it ought not to depart with that power any more than a Local Legislature should depart with the power of authorizing the erection of dams, booms, or aboiteaus. Now another principle of arbitrary power which is proposed to be taken, and that seems to me wrong in principle, is a power on the part of the Governor in Council, of its own head, without the authority of a court of law at all, to order the destruction of a boom, dyke, or aboiteau. A subject who has erected a boom, dyke, or aboiteau, may contend that he has got a legal right to maintain it, that it does not interfere with navigation, &c.; but you propose, by the fifth section, to authorize the Governor in Council to order it to be torn down, and the rights of the subject may be thus interfered with without any redress whatever. It seems to me that is an entirely indefensible position in point of principle. It seems to me unexampled legislation, so far as I know, that the Crown should have authority, first of all, to say this nuisance interferes with navigation, and having said so should have authority, of its own hand, to order its destruction without determination of a court as to whether the opinion of the officers of the Crown is right or wrong. But with reference to the special section, and those things which are in litigation, I think it is more fit that discussion on them should take place in Committee; but I will merely suggest that the third sub-section as it stands might prove wholly insufficient to do what ought to be done in the case of these companies. It is quite proper, if the action with reference to the boom, dam, or aboiteau, be one of damages for the loss which an individual has obtained from the obstruction, that the Legislature should not interfere in such sort that this extent of damages should not be recovered. But, supposing the procedure is, as it may be, a procedure in rem, a procedure in the court to evade it, then that which you would determine to be illegal will, first of all, be torn down under this section, and then afterwards the authority of the Governor in Council will be invoked to say it is legal. It seems to me a distinction ought to be made, because you are going to give the Governor in Council power to declare this erection illegal so far as it interferes with navigation, and you ought not to allow legal proceedings, even though pending, to proceed to their absolute determination. Let the damages be sustained, let the action for damages proceed to the end, but let the erection not be torn down, first of all, at the suit of the individual, and afterwards set up again in form, though it would not be set up again in substance, by the Order in Council. It would be like:

"Humpty Dumpty sat on a wall,
Humpty Dumpty had a great fall;
All the King's horses, and all the King's men, Cannot set Humpty Dumpty up again."

There is also the difficulty my hon. friend from St. John has referred to with reference to these cases, and there certainly should be an amendment in this regard in the Committee. But these are matters of detail. It is to the principle of the Bill that I object—to these two points: that you are proposing to invest the Crown with an absolute discretion to interfere with the right of a subject to free navigation where it chooses, and that you are proposing further to invest the Crown with the power, wherever it thinks that a particular erection is an obstruction to navigation, to pull it down without that question being tried in courts of law.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In answer to the hon. member for St. John, who agrees with the Bill in regard to booms, but who objects to the word "dam" and the word "aboiteau" and the word "dyke," I must say that if the hon. gentleman refers again to the first and second clauses he will find when the Bill refers to booms, dams, and aboiteaus, it is in so far as the same may not interfere with navigation; and if they do not interfere with navigation the Bill will not apply, and, therefore, the objection of the hon. gentleman is not pertinent. But I remember, and I think the hon. gentleman himself will remember, where an aboiteau was in the way of navigation—I cannot just now recollect the place—but we had to build, as a Government, a large aboiteau in either New Brunswick or Nova Scotia, some ten years ago.

Mr. WELDON. That is the one I referred to.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I remember it was a very large and costly work, and I understood at the time, rather a difficult work. It was the first work of the kind that the Department of Public Works ever constructed, and, of course, we had to take information from those who had experience before us. I think the work we constructed was a good one. This Bill will not apply to it. The same with respect to dykes. The hon. gentleman says the dykes will not interfere with navigation. I suppose that will generally be the case, but there may be cases in which such dykes interfere with navigation. The hon. gentleman was speaking of certain portions of the country in the Maritime Provinces where dykes have been built. I saw a number of them when I had the pleasure of visiting the Lower Provinces, and they were constructed with the object of reclaiming drowned lands that were very precious and yielded large crops. But there might be a stream or streams interfered with by dykes, and in that case a dyke might fall under this Bill; but if those dykes do not interfere with navigation, of course the Bill will not apply to them. The same remark applies to dams. A dam will, most likely, instead of interfering with navigation, create navigation. Generally its object is to back the water and create a stretch of navigation which will be a benefit instead of an injury; and, therefore, in that case the Bill would apply, and would apply justly. I do not say that some changes may not be necessary in the Bill, but the principle of the Bill is a good one. The hon. leader of the Opposition has said that Parliament should not give such powers as is mentioned in this Bill to the Executive; that is to say, that the Governor in Council may interfere with these booms, dams, or aboiteaus, as is provided in section 5, which is as follows:—

"Any boom, dam, or aboiteau, within the purview of this Act which is built upon a site not approved by, or which is built in accordance with plans approved by the Governor General in Council, or which, having been so built, is not maintained in accordance with such plans, may, in so far as the same interferes with navigation, be lawfully removed and destroyed under the authority of an order of the Governor General in Council."

I do not see anything wrong in that clause. Power of the same kind has been given to the Government in respect to other obstacles to navigation. For example, if a vessel is wrecked in a river, and interferes with navigation, and the owners do not remove it, the Government have certain powers under the law, and will use that power in order to remove the obstruction. Under this clause, if the works are not built in accordance with plans approved by the Governor in Council, they may be removed. If parties in violation of the law, instead of building works according to plans approved by the proper authorities, build dams or booms which interfere with navigation, authority is given to have the same removed. The hon. leader of the Opposition affirms that in such a case appeal should be had to a court, and the authority of a court should be obtained. I do not know whether his experience has been in the direction I am about to indicate, but I know that in very many cases the process of law is very long and tedious, and during all the time navigation will be interfered with, and the public will suffer because this individual has not complied with the provisions of the law, and has obtained a permission under false pretences, because he never intended to build the work under the regulations and plans laid down by the Government. In that case there should be an interference, and prompt interference, in order that navigation will not be obstructed. Then the hon. gentleman has referred to the words "and is not maintained in accordance with such plans." If there is an obstruction, there should be a prompt remedy applied, and that remedy has to be applied by the Governor in Council. If that provision were left out, that would have the effect of entrusting the power to irresponsible persons. I could very well understand the objection of the hon. leader of the Opposition; but it is given to the Governor in Council, that is to say, to the Ministers of the Crown who, every eight or nine months, come back to Parliament and are responsible to the representatives of the people, and, therefore, the guarantee is perfect. The hon. leader of the Opposition, moreover, says this power will be given for all to time come. Such is not the case. If Parliament, at its next Session, should repeal the law, it would have been in force only eight or ten months; but if the law was found to work well, it would be allowed to remain on the Statute-book. I think, under these circumstances, the Bill should be read the second time and should become law.

Bill read the second time; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 1,

Mr. BLAKE. Why should it be declared that there shall not be lawful booms unless they have been approved? Are they lawful booms without being approved?

Mr. MITCHELL. The cause which led to the introduction of the Bill now under the consideration of the House is simply this: There are a number of booms in the Provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia in the hands of a number of parties who were incorporated prior to Confederation. These Acts of incorporation were for terms of eight, ten, fifteen or twenty years, as the case might be. When the Acts expired the Local Legislature renewed them, extending and granting new charters; and their right to do so was never questioned until a recent case came up before the courts, when it was suggested by one of the Judges during the argument of the case, that it was beyond the power of the Local Legislature to grant powers which would in any way interfere with the navigation of rivers. This led to the attention of the different parties interested in booms being drawn to the question. Of course, many millions of feet of lumber are coming down the rivers and going into booms, and the suggestion of the Judge was looked upon with alarm by all those companies interfering with navigable rivers. Hence it became necessary to apply to the Dominion Parliament for incorporation. The Government attention having been called to the question, the present Bill was prepared. The hon. member for West Durham asks why these booms should be removed altogether for one year until the companies obtain the sanction of Parliament.

Mr. BLAKE. I said nothing of the kind. I was referring to the clause which is now before the Committee, namely the first clause, which speaks of booms, dams, and aboiteaus, hereafter constructed.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am so far distant from the hon. gentleman that I can scarcely hear one-half of his remarks. But while I am up, I may just as well explain that the reason for coming here is this: Timber is coming down at this very moment on some of the rivers. None of the booms are legal—if the decision of the court is made as expected—and the object of putting in the clause to which I refer, is this: That it desires, and the object of Parliament is, to give those people whose property is at stake, the right to secure that property for this current year, and to enable them by some speedy way, to come during the year to Parliament, and submit their plans and specifications to the Government and get its sanction, to the legalizing of the boom as it now stands, or direct it to be altered; that is the particular point to which I wish to call the attention of the Committee. The point to which the hon. gentleman referred, relates to the first section, which is as follows:—

"No boom, dam, or aboiteau, hereafter constructed whether under the authority of an Act of a Legislature of a Province of Canada, or under the authority of an Ordinance of the North-West Territories, or of the District of Keewatin or otherwise, shall, so far as the same may interfere with navigation, be a lawful boom, dam, or aboiteau, unless the site thereof has been approved, and unless the boom, dam, or aboiteau, has been built and is maintained in accordance with plans approved by the Governor General in Council."

By this section it appears to me very clear that hereafter no boom shall be built across a navigable river, until plans and specifications are submitted to the Government for the sanction and approval of the officers of the Government, the object being not to interfere with navigation materially, or for the plans to be altered in such a way that they will not so interfere materially.

Mr. BLAKE. I receive with great respect the hon. gentleman's explanation of the object of the specifications in the first clause, but I was anxious to get an explanation from the hon. Minister who is responsible for the Bill, and is carrying it through Committee. I may explain, for the information of the hon. gentleman, that my difficulty is this: Either booms constructed across navigable rivers under the authority of a Local Legislature, are, so far as they interfere with navigation, lawful, or they are not; that is quite clear—one or the other is the case. If they are legal then why take away the attribute of legality therefrom; but the whole theory of the Bill is that they are not lawful. You then proceed to say, that they shall not be lawful unless the plans are submitted to the Governor in Council and approved. I maintain that the Bill proceeds on the theory that they are not lawful, and there is no necessity, or propriety, in the declaration of their being not lawful unless the plans have been approved and legalized. You may provide for their being made lawful by plans approved by the Governor in Council, according to which they are made; but you do not require to and ought not to declare, that they shall be unlawful otherwise, for the law directs and makes them unlawful otherwise so far as they interfere with navigation. The general proposition on which the whole legislation proceeds is that the Local Legislature does not warrant interference with navigation; and, therefore, if they interfere with navigation, they are to that extent unlawful; therefore you do not want to declare, that they are unlawful, but to obtain machinery by which, it being admitted that they are unlawful, they shall be made lawful.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I was glad to explain to the hon. gentleman how I understood this first clause when my hon. friend rose, and, of course, I, knowing the interest which he takes in all matters of that kind, would not interfere with what he had to say. The object of the section is this: We start from this point—the Local Legislature has not authority. That is the point. Then we say that the boom, dam, or aboiteau, which will be constructed henceforth to be legal must be built after the site has been approved by the Governor in Council, and be built and maintained in accordance with plans approved by the Governor in Council. That is the object.

Mr. BLAKE. My hon. friend will permit me to point out that the second clause accomplishes everything, and I would suggest that the Bill begin with the second clause.

Mr. BURNS. It may be well to state, as bearing on the first section, that it only takes the place and carries out the provisions of the Local Act, because this establishes that booms in New Brunswick shall be so constructed as to admit the possibility of admitting the passage of vessels, and not to interfere with navigation. A clause of that kind is placed in every Act of incorporation, respecting dams, passed in New Brunswick.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; the first clause evidently has for its object the prevention of the building of booms, dams, and aboiteaus, unless the site is selected by the Governor in Council, and the plans are approved by the Governor General in Council. It is to prevent any boom, dam, or aboiteau, being built unless this is done. Then the second clause proceeds to say that any boom, dam, and aboiteau, that may be constructed henceforth, or constructed heretofore, will be an illegal boom, dam, or aboiteau, if these conditions had not been complied with. I think that this is the distinction which the Bill wishes to make: First, to prevent these being built unless the site is so-and-so; and, second, those that are built will be illegal if not built in accordance with the provisions of the clause.

Mr. BLAKE. If that be the object, the proper course is to provide that any boom, dam, or aboiteau, should be constructed that would interfere with navigation, &c., if you want to prevent the construction of a dam &c., that would interfere with navigation; but what you say is, no boom, &c., constructed hereafter shall be a lawful dam, &c.; while what you ought to say is, that no boom, &c., shall be constructed under authority that shall interfere with navigation.

Mr. WELDON. That would be a more direct mode of expressing it. As far as regards the word "boom," &c., in that section, they may be very well left in, because, if any boom, &c., is built hereafter interfering with navigation, then the Government might interfere.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I desire to call the attention of the hon. Minister to one point. Why does he want to prevent only booms being constructed? I called his attention to a harbor in my county, St. Jean Port Joli, where the Local Government granted a patent for a water lot between high and low water mark, which patent interferes directly with navigation. The Board of Quebec Harbor Commissioners say, that if the wharf projected is constructed according to the patent, it will completely obstruct that harbor; and I think that the Government ought also to provide for this kind of impediment in navigation. This is a very important harbor for the locality. The patent that has been granted is illegal, in my opinion. Still the courts of law decided that it was valid, though a subsequent decision of the Supreme Court declares the contrary; but the obstruction is to be made. I may say that this concession was granted when the hon. member for Gaspé was at the head of the Crown Lands Department in Quebec. While we are upon this question of navigation, which is connected with fisheries, I wish to call the attention of the hon. gentleman to the fisheries at St. Jean Port Joli, Rivière Ouelle. The hon. Minister of Marine, because he says the Government have not granted licenses—

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I hope the hon. gentleman will postpone his remarks on this subject to some other time, as it really does not properly come up under this Bill.

Mr. WOOD. There is a great deal of uncertainty in our Province as to the legality of some of these aboiteaus which have been constructed on our rivers. In one case several trials have taken place before the courts, but the juries could not agree, and it was finally referred to arbitration. The question before the arbitrators was to whether or not these structures were a benefit to certain lands; but the question of their legality was not settled because they are principally used for the protection and improvement of adjoining lands, and not as a means of navigation. I think, therefore, it would be very satisfactory to the people who live in those sections of the country to have it decided by law whether such structures are authorized or not. With regard to the word "dykes" to which the hon. gentleman refers, they are generally placed on top of the aboiteau, not for the purpose of obstructing the main river, but merely to prevent the tide overflowing when it is exceptionally high.

Mr. WELDON. There is no doubt, as the hon. gentleman says, there has been considerable discussion as to the legality of those aboiteaus, and I should like to see a clause inserted in the Bill declaring that all these aboiteaus heretofore erected shall be legal, but leaving those of the future under the operation of the first clause which requires plans to be filed in order to determine their legality. Many of these structures do not interfere to any serious extent with the navigation of the small rivers and streams upon which they are placed—to nothing like an extent commensurate with the advantage to the land which is secured by their construction. There are some streams in Albert and Westmoreland counties where they, the aboiteau, is the main road, and the streams upon which they are placed could not be practically used for purposes of navigation even if they were removed. In one sense, these dykes and aboiteaus are private, but in another they are public, and by the law of New Brunswick these marsh lands are set off in districts. The proprietors of these districts elect Commissioners, who regulate these dams and aboiteaus, and other matters of that kind.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In order to meet the views of hon. gentlemen I would suggest that the clause be amended in this way. In the fifth line of the first clause strike out the words "shall so far as the same may" and substitute "so as to," and in the following line insert the word "shall" before the word "be."

On section 5,

Mr. BLAKE. I maintain my objection in giving power to the Governor in Council to interfere with navigation in this way; and I must say, with reference to the hon. gentleman's argument that there is power given already to the Governor in Council to remove a wreck from a harbor, in case the owner neglects to remove it, that it seems to me the analogy does not hold. A vessel may be wrecked in a harbor or river, and the owner may be away, and not comply with his duty; but it is one thing to permit the Government to do that which the owner ought to do and would do for the protection of his own property if he were there, and it is quite another thing to permit the Crown, of its own mere motion, to destroy an existing property.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In that case it would be better to leave the matter under the general law and strike the clauses out altogether.

On section 10,

Mr. WOOD (Westmoreland). It has occurred to me that, though a dam, aboiteau, or boom, might not be an obstruction to navigation when erected, circumstances might afterwards arise that would become an obstruction, and would need to be removed. I do not see any provision in this Bill to meet a case of that kind. The place where you use a boom at present might be wanted for wharf purposes, or railway termination, or something of that kind, and I see no proviso by which that construction might be removed. It seems to me that the Governor in Council should have the power of removing those obstructions when the public interest requires it, which they had the power of authorizing when the public interest required it.

Mr. BLAKE. The law will remove them then.

Progress reported.

INLAND REVENUE.

Mr. COSTIGAN moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole, to consider a certain proposed resolution (April 12th) to consolidate and amend the Acts respecting the Inland Revenue.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BLAKE. What does the hon. gentleman estimate will be the fiscal result of the changes proposed in the resolution as regards the Excise duties on tobacco and cigars.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The difference between the present duty, and the proposed duty, it is estimated, will cause a reduction in the amount of duty collected to the extent of $800,000.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. Minister give the Committee some further details as to how the loss is made up.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The amount collected altogether is nearly $2,000,000, and the reduction will be eight-twentieths of the whole. For every one cent reduction in duty, there is a loss of about $100,000. That is the basis of the calculation.

Mr. BLAKE. There is no calculation of increased consumption in consequence of the decrease in the duty.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. No. There may be some, but it is doubtful. Such increased consumption will probably take place in home produced tobacco, on which the duty has been reduced from 10 cts. to 2 cts.

Mr. BLAKE. What revenue will be derived from the duty of 2 cts.?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. That we can hardly say, for the whole amount of the duty collected on home grown tobacco last year amounted only to $18,000, and we can only take that as a basis.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. gentleman estimated a revenue from Excise from all sources of $5,400,000, and the actual revenue last year was $5,390,000, which is very nearly the same.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. But this year there is a considerable increase. There was a reduction, however, no doubt. The difference, if my memory serves me, between the estimate for Excise next year, compared with what we expect this year, was about $400,000 and $500,000, because we will probably lose $300,000 this year by the fact of it not being put into the market. That is not knowing that this was to take place, and it was not taken out for consumption, and the difference between what would have been received next year under the old Tariff and the present would make about $800,000.

Mr. BLAKE. Do I understand that the loss, irrespective of this question, is anticipated to be $800,000. Will this be the permanent range of loss?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. I see. Then the hon. gentleman told us there was about $1,250,000 of relief from taxation altogether, and I am unable to make these figures just now given us chime in with them. I do not know where the $450,000 are, if we only get $800,000 of relief from tobacco.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. No; as far as the alterations are made in connection with this, it will be about $1,050,000 or $1,100,000. Some hon. member—I think the hon. member for Brant—asked me, when we were passing the Free List, what was the loss on the Free List, and I said, $80,000 or $90,000. The balance is in the reduction of duties where decreases have taken place, and the articles are not placed on the Free List. The whole amount is something over $200,000—say $250,000, which makes $1,050,000 if this reduction is $800,000.

Mr. BLAKE. That is the whole sum, including the Free List?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. And the hon. gentleman expects a reduction of about $110,000 in other items, exclusive of this $100,000?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes; to the extent of $160,000.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). That is making no alterations, on the other hand, for increases?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. No. We do not expect to get any increases from the changes made in the Tariff.

Mr. PATERSON. From none of them?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. No.

Mr. PATERSON. I do not quite understand this $800,000 loss to the revenue. I think that the hon. gentleman is rather mistaken there. He has overlooked the matter of cigars. Of course, there is not a proportionate decrease in cigars compared with tobacco. I would judge that the proportion would not be over—and I do not know whether it would be—one-fourth or not.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The duty is reduced from July next, from 40 cts. to 30 cts., and this will probably lead to a reduction of about 25 per cent., so it is pretty much the same proportion. There is not much difference between the proportion of decrease in cigars and tobacco, though the former is a little less perhaps. The receipts were $1,000,000 on the average under the present Tariff; take off eight-twentieths from that, and you have $800,000 in round numbers.

Mr. PATERSON. We must have been expecting large sums in some way, to bring up the revenue to the same amount which we have had.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. No. If the hon. gentleman will look, he will find that there has been a large increase from Excise this year.

Mr. PATERSON. And you are basing your calculations on the increase of next year?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. No; but of this year. My calculations are based on the revenue which we have had this year, and are likely to receive from tobacco, and I take off eight-twentieths from that. There has been a considerable increase this year from all sources of Inland Revenue.

Mr. BLAKE. What does the hon. gentleman think will be the expense of collecting the 2 cts. duty on home-grown tobacco?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I think the hon. member will find that, under this arrangement—it will be stated before we get through—that the machinery will be simplified, and there will not be so much expense connected with it. In fact, I may say to the hon. member that, if it had not been that the Department desired to keep control of the question, the duty would have been thrown off altogether. There was considerable inducement to do it; but still it was necessary for the Department to have control of the tobacco, which enters into the manufacture, from our home grown leaf.

Mr. BLAKE. Why?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The moment it goes beyond our reach, in the first place we have to see that the manufacturers of foreign leaf do not get possession of and manufacture home-grown. The hon. member will understand that perfectly well. Then there are other reasons. Of course, we are now driven to a certain extent, owing to the large reduction which has taken place in the United States, to take off more duty from tobacco than otherwise we would very likely have proposed, had the former state of things continued. The Department considered the matter, and represented to the Government that it was desirable for certain reasons to lose control of the home-grown leaf.

Mr. BLAKE. I understand that for this there are two reasons: First, that unless control of the home-grown is taken, there might be certain improprieties with reference to the manufacturers of tobacco, who might make up their accounts.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. We would not have the same control.

Mr. BLAKE. And the second is, that possibly a larger duty might be imposed at some future time.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Do I understand it is the intention of the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue to provide separate licenses entirely for the manufacture of cigars and tobacco, and that their manufacture on the same premises will not be allowed?

Mr. COSTIGAN. There will be separate licenses.

Mr. PATERSON. And those at present engaged in both lines will have to take out two licenses, and have separate factories in two entirely different buildings?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes.

Resolution reported.

Mr. COSTIGAN introduced Bill (No. 115) to consolidate and amend the several Acts respecting the Inland Revenue.

Bill read the first time.

INSOLVENT CORPORATIONS AMENDMENT BILL.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, in moving the second reading of Bill (No. 103) to amend an Act respecting Insolvent Banks, Insurance Companies, Loan Companies, Building Societies and Trading Corporations, said: This Bill is from the Senate, and it arises out of the Act which it proposes to amend. The reason for this legislation had its origin in a case in Prince Edward Island, when, with respect to the winding-up of a banking institution, it was found that under the existing Act they had no power to effect the objects which were desired to be attained.

Bill read the second time.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the third reading of the Bill.

Bill read the third time, and passed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and (at 5:55 o'clock p.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

PRAYERS.

BILL INTRODUCED.

The following Bill was introduced, and read the first time:—

Bill (No. 116) further to amend the Act respecting the incorporation of a Company to establish a Marine Telegraph between the Pacific coast of Canada and Asia.—(Sir Hector Langevin.)

SUPERANNUATION OF CIVIL SERVANTS.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolution:—

That it is expedient to amend the Acts relating to the superannuation of persons employed in the Civil Service of Canada, by providing that—

(a.) The Governor in Council may grant to any person having served in an established capacity in the Civil Service for ten years or upwards, and having attained the age of sixty years, or being incapacitated by bodily infirmity from properly performing his duties, a superannuation allowance, calculated on his average yearly salary during the then last three years, and not exceeding the following rates, that is to say:—If he has served for ten years, but less than eleven years, an allowance of ten-fiftieths of such average salary, and if for eleven years and under twelve years an annual allowance of eleven-fiftieths thereof, and in like manner a further addition of one-fiftieth of such average salary for each additional year of service up to thirty-five years, when an annual allowance of thirty-five fiftieths may be granted, but no addition shall be made for any service beyond thirty-five years; if the service has not been continuous, the period or periods during which such service has been interrupted shall not be counted, and the Order in Council made in such case shall be laid before Parliament at its then or then next Session.

(b.) The Governor in Council may, in the case of any person who entered the Civil Service after the age of thirty years, as being possessed of some peculiar professional or other qualifications or attainments required for the office to which he was appointed, and not ordinarily to be acquired in the public service, add to the actual number of years service of such person, such further number not exceeding ten, as may be considered equitable, for reasons stated in the Order of Council made in the case; and such additional number of years shall be taken as part of term of service on which the superannuation allowance of such person shall be computed, the Order in Council in any such case being laid before Parliament, at its then or then next Session.

(c.) Towards making good the superannuation allowances hereinbefore mentioned, an abatement shall be made from the salary of each person in the Civil Service to whom this Act applies, at the rate of 2 per centum per annum on such salary, if it be \$600 or upwards, and of $1\frac{1}{2}$ per centum per annum thereon, if it be less than \$600, and the sum so deducted shall form part of the Consolidated Revenue Fund, but such abatement shall be made only during the first thirty-five years of service.

(d.) The full superannuation allowance as aforesaid shall only be granted to persons who have been subject to the said abatement during ten years or upwards; the superannuation allowance of any person who has not paid it, or has paid it for a less period, being subject to a diminution of 1 per centum for every year less than ten during which he has not paid it, except that the superannuation allowance of any person hereafter retiring, shall not be subject to any such diminution by reason of his not having paid the abatement hereinbefore mentioned, during any year or years after his first thirty-five years of service.

(e.) Retirement shall be compulsory on any person to whom the superannuation allowance hereinbefore mentioned shall be offered, and such offer shall not be considered as implying any censure upon the person to whom it is made; nor shall any person be considered as having any absolute right to such allowance, but it shall be granted only in consideration of good and faithful service during the time upon which it is calculated, and nothing herein contained shall be understood as impairing or affecting the right of the Governor to dismiss or remove any person from the Civil Service.

(f.) If the Head of a Department reports with respect to any person employed in his Department, and about to be superannuated, from any cause other than that of ill-health or age, that the service of such person has not been satisfactory, the Governor in Council may grant such person a superannuation allowance being less than that to which he would have otherwise been entitled, as to him may seem fit.

(g.) If any person to whom this Act applies, is constrained from any infirmity of mind or body to quit the Civil Service before the period at which a superannuation allowance might be granted him, the Governor in Council may allow him a gratuity not exceeding one month's pay for each year of his service; and if any such person is so constrained to quit the service before such period, by reason of severe bodily injury received without his own fault in the discharge of his public duty, the Governor in Council may allow him a gratuity not exceeding three months' pay for every two years' service, or a superannuation allowance not exceeding one-fifth of his average salary during the then last three years.

(h.) If any person to whom this Act applies is removed from office in consequence of the abolition thereof, in order to the improvement of the organization of the Department to which he belongs, or is removed or retired from office to promote efficiency or economy in the Civil Service, the Governor in Council may grant him such gratuity or superannuation allowance as will fairly compensate him for his loss of office, not exceeding such as he would have been entitled to if he had retired in consequence of permanent infirmity of body or mind, after adding ten years to his actual term of service.

(i.) The allowances and gratuities granted under this Act shall be payable out of the Consolidated Revenue Fund of Canada.

(k.) All superannuation allowances fixed and granted under the Acts hereby repealed are confirmed.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. This is a consolidation of the Act with some slight amendments with reference to superannuation. The change which is proposed to be made, becomes necessary from the passage of the Civil Service Act of last Session. In the original Act, providing for superannuation, all employes of the Government, either inside or outside were included; but by the Act of last Session, the outside service was confined to Customs, Excise, and Inland Revenue. It is intended by this amendment to extend the superannuation to all the other outside Departments by Order in Council. Hon. gentlemen opposite will recollect that under the old Act, all the prominent officials of the railways were placed on the superannuation list, and so with reference to some of the other Departments. I believe that the Deputy Receiver-General's Department has never been brought under the operation of the Act; but by this change these Departments will be placed in exactly the same position they were in before. These are the principle changes proposed in the shape of amendments to the existing Act.

Mr. BLAKE. The whole question of superannuation necessarily comes up under this Bill; and I had hoped, as the hon. gentleman proposes to consolidate and amend the Acts relating to the subject, and to extend the services to which superannuation is to be applied, that he would have given, at an early day, some statement as to the effect of the measure on the service generally, and as to its financial effects. The hon. gentleman acknowledged, at an earlier stage of this Session, that the principle upon which this Government dealt with this question when they originally proposed the Superannuation Act, was a mistaken one; that they forgot that the principle of life insurance was applicable to these cases; and that the reduction to be made in the allowances by the Government was a mistaken reduction. We have found the system continuing year after year, and the discrepancy between the receipts and expenditures increasing year after year, and the gross amount of the expenditure increasing year after year, until we find it difficult to ascertain where it will end; and now we have a vague and indefinite proposal in this Bill, authorizing the Government to determine from time to time, outside of certain classes, whom they will and whom they will not superannuate. My impression is that it would have been more in accordance with proper legislation and a due regard for the rights of Parliament, if the Government had brought down a proposal as to what classes of persons they were about to superannuate. If the Government are not able, after the number of years that this system has been in vogue, to declare what classes of persons ought to be superannuated, and what classes ought not, because the subject is so obscure and so difficult, they ought to be assisted by a discussion in this House. It is impossible now to declare who ought and who ought not to be superannuated; and yet, when a suggestion was made in the other branch of the Legislature by an hon. gentleman who was formerly a member of the Government, the former member for Terrebonne, the hon. Mr. Masson, that information should be brought down on this subject, the hon. gentleman who had charge of the Bill there said it was very difficult to do so, and the Bill comes down here in its present state. There is a proposal in this Bill that we should confirm all superannuation allowance heretofore granted. I do not think we should do that. There may be some granted to, or in excess of, the powers granted to the Government. One such case was brought before the attention of Parliament a few years ago by the hon. gentleman who is now Minister of Railways. The case was investigated, and it was found that the Government had exceeded their powers, and the matter was rectified. But what is now proposed is to give a wholesale statutory confirmation of all superannuation allowances which have been made, no matter whether they have been in excess of the powers of the Government or not. Perhaps that was not intended; perhaps all that was intended was that these superannuations should stand in as good a position as they were in before the passage of this Bill. But, if that be not intended, I think we may fairly ask what superannuations require statutory confirmation—why and on what ground. For my own part, I am dissatisfied with the working of the superannuation Act. I believe that the results of its working have not been advantageous; and while I am prepared to sustain some means whereby the services of an official, who is no longer competent to discharge his duties, may be dispensed with, I believe the present system is one which it is not in the interest of the country to retain on any ground. The hon. gentleman will see that the charge is very large. If I remember rightly, something like $120,000 a year is now the difference between the receipts and the expenditures. I know that the report of the Civil Service Commission produces certain figures to show that there is a great saving; but that operation is performed by a sort of legerdemain which I do not think will commend it to the taxpayer. The Commissioners prove that in every case in which there has been economy, this has been either by the abolition of an office, or by the retirement of an official; and they assume that the person who retired would have lived for ever but for the Superannuation Act, or that an office abolished would have been perpetual; and therefore they claim that a large saving has been effected by these means. But we must remember that officers would die, and would be removed, even if there was no Superannuation Act; and therefore this claim of economy is ridiculous. Then there is a mischief in the present operation of this Act. It is supposed to be on the insurance principle, and the premium is no doubt inadequate to have the Act applied to certain persons; but the return I moved for a while ago, which has been brought down in part, is sufficient to show the House that a very large proportion of all the public servants who have been placed under the operation of the Superannuation Act have died in the service, and all those persons of course paid without benefit. They have a chance of living long enough and becoming infirm enough to get the benefit of the Act, but Providence was too kind to them, and allowed them to die in harness. I think another system different from the present system—it is perhaps premature to state it just now—would do justice to that class of officers and their families, and also to the other class of officers who are about to retire, and would, above and beyond all, do justice to the public, who are no doubt interested in the efficiency of the service. I am sorry that the hon. gentleman should have brought these resolutions on to-day, and stated that they would take only a few minutes for discussion. To my mind that opened a very large question—a question of policy of the practical operation of the existing policy which has been on trial for some time, with results, it appears to me, eminently unsatisfactory. At a subsequent stage of the Bill I hope we will receive full explanations of the views which induced the Government, with the experience they have had, to propose, not a change in the Civil Service Act, but an extension of the application of that Act in its present objectionable form.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. There is no intention on the part of the Government to confirm any doubtful cases, but simply to secure to the parties the rights they had under this Act before the amendments were made. The hon. gentleman referred to this being an insurance company, and to the advisability of its being conducted on the same principle.

Mr. BLAKE. Not an insurance company—but the hon. gentleman has stated that the principle of insurance applied to it.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Not that the principle applied entirely; because it will be borne in mind that, when this Bill was introduced, it was stated distinctly that it was for the purpose of placing the Government in a position to replace, by active, energetic men, those who are worn out in the service, whom the Government would hesitate to dismiss without giving them a retiring allowance. This is the basis on which the Act was introduced, and the men who had been twenty-five years in service, and had reached the age of sixty-five or seventy years, obtained, in many cases, immediate benefit from the operation of the Act. Though, to a certain extent, the Act is on the principle of insurance, it is not based on the general calculations on which insurances are based. At the time the Bill was introduced, it was thought that the amount to be obtained by the Government would be sufficient to pay pensions, without creating any loss to the Treasury; and after the Act had been a few years in operation it was found that the amounts received were in excess, and there was a universal feeling in the House that the amount to be paid by the Civil Service should be reduced. The Government were not quite of that opinion, but still the returns showed as if the Government would be justified in making the reduction, and there was a unanimous feeling, on both sides of the House, in favor of such deduction. Whether the statement of the Commission is correct or not, there are a great many items that do not appear on the credit side of this account, but which go to reduce the amount paid in excess of the amount received. It is quite possible that the calculations of these hon. gentlemen may have been made somewhat erroneously to show there has been a saving in the operation of the Act; but I do know that men are superannuated who have passed their term of usefulness and are replaced by younger and efficient men at lower salaries in many cases. I know that in New Brunswick, three officers of the Customs, with salaries of $1,000 and $1,200 per year, have been superannuated and their offices not since filled, thus effecting a saving. When the Bill is taken up for consideration I will be prepared to show—not to the extent, perhaps, the Civil Service Commission has shown—that there is a very large amount saved, and to the credit of this fund, by the superannuation of officers not required, or whose services were not efficient, and that we have had the benefit of efficient officers at lower salaries.

Mr. BURPEE (St. John). Will the hon. gentleman give us some idea of the contents of the resolution now proposed, as regards the different Departments?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It is to place this matter just about where it was under the old Act, as acted upon by both Governments. Under the Act of last Session we can only apply it to three Departments.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). The Bill does not apply to every person who has been in the employ of the Government for ten years.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. All those who are employed at a yearly salary as permanent officers of the Government, may, outside of the three Departments I have referred to, be brought in. We did not take all the Departments before, and this will have about the same effect.

Mr. BLAKE. It was in the discretion of the Government whether they will take men in or put them out. There was some question about penitentiary chaplains, when one Government took one view and another Government another. That indicates there is that power on the part of the Government to act as they think proper, and we do not know to what extent the list of those entitled to superannuation may be increased.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The Government took the power under the Act. They did not take all the employes of the penitentiaries, but only certain employes. The proposition in this is, that by an Order in Council the whole of the employes receiving annual salaries may come under the operation of this Act.

Mr. BLAKE. When we acted before we were acting with reference to a new experiment, and it was a question whether it should apply to the whole service. Rightly or wrongly we gave the Government discretion to decide to what classes it should apply; and to-day the Government ought to be able, after the experience of ten or twelve years, to determine what classes of public employes should be brought within the range of the Superannuation Act and what classes should be left out, and in consolidating and amending the Superannuation Act these classes should be defined.

Resolution to be reported.

KING'S COUNTY (P.E.I.) ELECTION.

Mr. BLANCHET moved that the report of the Committee on Privileges and Elections respecting the last Elections for the Electoral District of King's County (P.E.I.) be now concurred in.

Mr. HALL. The previous discussion of this case in the House was directed principally to the duties and conduct of the returning officer and the law applicable thereto, but as the Committee of Privileges and Elections to whom the matter was referred has had before it all the evidence, both as to that subject and as tending to show which of the candidates is rightfully and permanently entitled to the seat, it was thought advisable by the Committee that a short abstract of this evidence should be given to the House, in order that hon. members might more easily follow the arguments that will be adduced both in support of and against the Committee's report. As seconding the motion for concurrence, therefore, I take the opportunity of submitting a brief abstract of the testimony which was adduced, and of the legal conclusions that were based thereon. At the last General Dominion Election, of the candidates who presented themselves for the constituency of the Fourth Electoral District of King's County (P.E.I.) were Dr. J. E. Robertson, and A. C. McDonald, Esq., and of the votes that were tendered at that election, 2,002 were given in favor of Dr. Robertson, and 1,941 in favor of Mr. McDonald. Therefore, Dr. Robertson was elected as the representative of that constituency, unless some disqualification existed which prevented his filling that place, and even then he was entitled to have been returned as the representative of the constituency, and to have taken his seat in this House, unless that disqualification were of such a nature as to make his election void, ab initio, and to have the effect of causing the votes that were given for him to be thrown away. That disqualification the Committee believes to have existed, and they base their conclusions on the following facts: In the month of May, prior to the General Dominion Elections, a General Election had taken place throughout the Province of Prince Edward Island for the House of Assembly of that Province. At that election Dr. Robertson had presented himself as the candidate for the same constituency, had taken the oath of qualification necessary under the law of that Province, and had been elected and proclaimed as the duly elected member for that constituency in the Official Gazette of that Province. Two Statutes have been passed by this Parliament in reference to the subject of dual representation, one absolutely prohibiting, and another conditionally prohibiting that representation. While a doubt was entertained as to the applicability of one of these Statutes, no doubt whatever was entertained, or maintained, in the Committee, but that under one or the other of them dual representation was prohibited, and therefore that Dr. Robertson, at the time he presented himself as a candidate for election to this House, was disqualified from being a candidate, or from being elected, unless between the time of his election for the Provincial Legislature and his candidature for the Dominion Parliament he had validly effected a resignation. That resignation, it is claimed, was made by him. On the other hand, after the election had taken place, and before the summing up of the votes, a protest was submitted to the returning officer, to the effect that such disqualification still existed, and this was supported by the certificate of the Lieutenant-Governor of Prince Edward Island, that up to that time, the 26th June, six days after the election, no resignation had been tendered to him on behalf of Dr. Robertson, nor had any communication been presented to him to the effect that such resignation had been given. The returning officer for the Dominion Election had also acted as returning officer in the Provincial Election, and he therefore had personal knowledge that Dr. Robertson had been elected in that constituency, to the General Assembly of Prince Edward Island. It was not, however, upon that authority, but upon the official certificate of the Lieutenant-Governor, that no resignation had been put in, that the returning officer acted in this matter. He did not report, as the Committee believe he was justified in reporting, that Mr. McDonald was duly elected. He made a special return to this House, stating the fact that the largest number of votes was in favor of Dr. Robertson; but that by the certificate and protest which he forwarded with his return, a disqualification existed, which prevented his being entitled to the seat. Now, with reference to this resignation which is pretended to have taken place, it is necessary to state, in the first place, that by the common law, no such resignation as this is allowed. It is considered that when a person presents himself as a candidate for election for a constituency, and is selected by that constituency as its representative, a compact exists between them from which neither can withdraw. The constituency has no right to reconsider its decision, and to dis-elect the member—if I may use that expression—nor, on the other hand, has the member elected a right to resign his seat, and, thereby, to disfranchise the constituency. It is only by a special statutory enactment that such a right exists. In Great Britain no such statutory provision does exist, and it is very well known that whenever a member of the Imperial Parliament desires to be relieved from the trust thereby imposed upon him, he is obliged to resort to the expedient of accepting the stewardship of the Chiltern Hundreds, or some other office, real or nominal, in the gift of the Crown, and thereby become disqualified under the Act applying to such disqualification. In this Dominion, however, and also in the Provinces composing it, there are statutory provisions with reference to resignation. These enactments are very similar in their form, and it is necessary, of course, that whoever desires to avail himself of them must observe strictly the regulations they impose. In Prince Edward Island we find that there are three methods of resignation. A member may, from his place in the House, announce verbally his intention to resign; the Clerk of the House makes a minute of it in the Journals of the House, and the Speaker at once communicates this declaration to the Lieutenant-Governor, who forthwith issues his writ for a new election; or a member desiring to resign may announce that intention by a written communication addressed to the Speaker of the House, and this communication is at once conveyed by the Speaker to the Lieutenant-Governor, who forthwith issues his writ for a new election; or a member desiring so to resign may communicate his intention in writing to any two members of the House, and these members are required by law, "forthwith"—I use the terms of the Statute—to communicate this intention to the Lieutenant-Governor, who, as in the other cases, issues his writ immediately for a new election. It will be seen that the procedure is similar in all three cases. The declaration of intention must emanate, in the first instance, from the member who wishes to resign; in the second place there must be a record of it, either under his own hand, or in the Journal of the House, and the declaration must in all three cases reach the Lieutenant-Governor in order to be effective. It is clear that that must be the intention, because, as I stated before, in the case of elections, the effect is mutual, so in resignations is the effect two-fold—it not only has the effect of freeing the member from his trust, but it has also the result of disfranchising the constituency. It is, therefore, clear that the intention of all laws upon the subject, is that the Statute which gives to the member the right to resign also provides the machinery under which the constituency shall be relieved from the effect of that resignation. The Statute of Prince Edward Island is clear on this point, and says: "And a member so tendering his resignation shall be held to have vacated his seat and ceased to be a member of the House." It does not state: "A member who has so declared his intention of resigning," but "A member who has so tendered his resignation." Every one will appreciate the distinction between the two. A tender is not effective until it has reached the object of the tender; the declaration of a member of the Local Legislature that he intends to resign, is not such a resignation as he might not withdraw from at any time; and the fact that it has reached the Lieutenant-Governor is what gives effect to the resignation and releases the member from his trust and disfranchises, temporarily, the constituency. There is in the law of Prince Edward Island, a clause which is similar to that contained in the Act of the Dominion Parliament and of other Provincial Legislatures, providing that for a certain specified time after the election takes place no member has a right to avail himself of the privilege in respect to resignation; the delay, as of course hon. gentlemen will understand, is the delay during which an election may be contested. If during that delay, the member might resign, the object of the law would be frustrated, because a member who was conscious that he obtained his election by fraudulent and corrupt practices might free himself from the consequences which might follow an investigation in the courts, by resigning and becoming again a candidate; whereas if the matter were contested, it might be that he would be disqualified in consequence of his acts. Therefore, during this time, under the law of the Dominion, and specially under the law of Prince Edward Island, a member is absolutely prohibited from effecting his resignation. In Prince Edward Island this delay is stipulated for twenty-one days; not twenty-one days from the time of the election, but from the time when the notice of the election shall have reached the Provincial Secretary. In the case of Dr. Robertson's election to the Local Legislature this notice reached the Provincial Secretary on May 27, and therefore at the time when he presented himself as a candidate on the 13th of June afterwards for election to this House, the twenty-one days had not expired, nor had they expired when the election took place on June 20th. The Committee find, in the first place, that it was impossible for Dr. Robertson to have resigned, within the terms of the law, at the time he presented himself for his election to this House. But in the face of this fact, it is contended, on behalf of Dr. Robertson, that he did resign, and therefore it is necessary to consider the circumstances and procedure under which he professes to have made that resignation. He claims to have used the last of the three methods which the law provides, viz.: by tender of his resignation to two members of the House. It is claimed, on behalf of Dr. Robertson, that this was done in the form of a letter dated June 12th, and delivered on June 13th, the latter date being the day on which the nomination took place. Notwithstanding the provision of the law, that members receiving declarations of another member's wish to resign, must forthwith communicate the same to the Lieutenant-Governor, no communication of any kind reached the Lieutenant-Governor from those two members that Dr. Robertson had resigned or intended to resign until 8th of July afterwards; nearly a month after the date of the letter, and eighteen days after the election had taken place, which this resignation was intended to affect. It has been suggested that it is probable Dr. Robertson did not intend seriously to resign, that he intended to make his resignation in such a form that it might be used or not used according to the result of the Dominion Election; and the very strange, inexcusable and illegal detention of the letter on the part of the two gentlemen to whom he entrusted it, gives ground for very grave suspicion, and this suspicion is further confirmed by the fact that when the letter was finally unearthed, it was discovered to be a letter, not addressed to those two members in their official capacity as members of the House, but simply as individuals, thus furnishing them with the excuse, if their conduct should ever be called in question, that the letter was not addressed to them in any official capacity, but as neighbors and friends, and that they were justified therefore in treating it officially, or not, as they chose. It was not considered necessary by the Committee to give much weight to technicalities of this kind, and I only refer to them incidentally in passing. The Committee arrived at the conclusion—and I have no doubt it will be concurred in almost unanimously by the House—that Dr. Robertson could not, and did not, legally resign his seat in the Local Legislature before or at the time he presented himself for election to this House, and consequently that he was legally disqualified from so presenting himself and from being elected. We then come to the question of the effect of that disqualification. I mentioned at the outset that there were two Statutes in regard to it. Under the Statute which was first passed in 1872 that disqualification was made applicable to members of the Legislature of any Province in which corresponding legislation had taken place; that is, where any Province had passed a law that any member of this House could not be elected to the Provincial Legislature, this

"If any such member of a Provincial Legislature shall, notwithstanding his disqualification as in the preceding section mentioned, receive a majority of votes at any such election, such majority of votes shall be thrown away, and it shall be the duty of the returning officer to return the person having the next greatest number of votes, provided he be otherwise eligible."

If that Statute be in force, all difficulty is removed. It was clear that the returning officer was bound—and if he did not do so, this House is bound—to declare that the votes given for Dr. Robertson were wasted, and that the candidate having the next largest number of votes should be entitled to the seat. It is urged, however, that this law is not in force. It is not contended that it has been formally repealed, but it is contended that it has been repealed by implication. Now, the general principle applicable to the interpretation of Statutes is: that unless they contain within themselves some limitative clause, they remain in force until they are formally and specially repealed by a succeeding Act. As I have said, there is no contention that this Act has been formally repealed by a succeeding Act, nor that it contains within itself any limiting clause; but the contention is that it has been repealed by implication, because a subsequent Act was passed on the same subject. Upon that point I will cite the authority of Dwaris on Statutes, who is recognized as the best authority on the subject. At page 154 of the Library edition, he says:

"Every affirmative Statute is a repeal of a precedent affirmative Statute, where its matter necessarily implies a negative; but only so far as it is clearly and indisputably contradictory and contrary to the former Act, 'in the very matter' (Foster's case); and the repugnancy such that the two Acts cannot be reconciled; for then, leges posteriores, priores contrarias abrogant. The leaning of the courts is so strong against repealing the positive provisions of a former Statute by construction, as almost to establish the doctrine of 'No repeal by implication.' It is a general rule that subsequent Statutes, which add accumulative penalties, and institute new methods of proceeding, do not repeal former penalties and methods of proceeding ordained by preceding Statutes, without negative words. Nor hath a latter Act of Parliament ever been construed to repeal a prior Act, unless there be a contrariety or repugnancy in them, or, at least, some notice taken of the former Act, so as to indicate an intention in the lawgiver to repeal it. Neither is a bare recital in a Statute, without a clause of repeal, sufficient to repeal the positive provisions of a former Statute. The law does not favor a repeal by implication, unless the repugnance be quite plain; and such repeal, carrying with it a reflection on the wisdom of former Parliaments, it has ever been confined to repealing as little as possible of the preceding Statutes. Although, then, two Acts of Parliament are seemingly repugnant, yet if there be no clause of non obstante in the latter, they shall, if possible, have such construction that the latter may not be a repeal of the former by implication. The same view has been taken where powers under several Acts are such as may well subsist together. A subsequent Act, too, which can be reconciled with a former Act, shall not be a repeal of it, though there be negative words; as the 1st and 2nd Ph., and 11. Ch. 10, that all trials for treason shall be according to the course of the common law, and not otherwise, does not take away 35 H., C. 2, for trial of treason beyond sea."

This illustration is remarkably similar to the case we are now considering, because we have in the latter, first, the positive procedure laid down for the returning officer, who is to disregard the votes given for a person disqualified, and to return the person having the next number of votes, if otherwise eligible; while the Statute of 1873 merely gives a general prohibition against dual representation, without saying anything about the procedure to be adopted by the returning officer. It is the opinion of the Committee, therefore, that this Statute being in force, it was the duty of the returning officer to have disregarded the votes given to Mr. Robertson, and to have returned the person having the next largest number of votes. In the discussion which occurred in this House with reference to the duties of the returning officer, under the Act of 1874, it was strongly urged that his duties were purely ministerial, and not in any respect judicial. I think that reference to that Statute will show that, entirely independent of the discussion upon general principles and exceptional or supposed cases, it contains within itself evidence that the duties of the returning officer are sometimes both ministerial and judicial. In the first place, it is stated that the returning officer is bound to reject all votes given for a candidate not nominated; in the next place, it is stated in section twenty-five that any candidate nominated may withdraw at any time after the nomination and before the close of the poll, by filing with the returning officer a declaration in writing to that effect signed by himself, and that any votes cast for the candidate so having withdrawn shall be null and void, and it shall be the duty of the returning officer to return as duly elected the candidate so remaining. So that, under the Statute of 1874, the returning officer is bound to ignore the votes—even if they were a majority—given in favor of the candidate who has disqualified himself, precisely as, under the law of 1872, he is required to ignore the votes given for the candidate whom the law has disqualified. There is then the point as to whether the law of 1872, as well as the law of 1873 are applicable to Prince Edward Island, which was not then a portion of the Confederation. I do not think that I need refer further to that subject than to say, that the legislation under which Prince Edward Island was admitted into Confederation—Chap. 40, of the Act of 1873—was upon the terms and conditions that after it should be admitted all laws upon the following subjects then in force in the Dominion should be applicable to Prince Edward Island, namely: "Laws with reference to the Senate and the House of Commons, including procedure therein, and the vacating of the seats of members of the House of Commons, and the filling of vacancies." I think it is plain that all the laws in force in the Dominion at the time when Prince Edward Island was admitted to the Union, on the 1st July, 1873, were applicable to that Province, and in fact this was virtually conceded in the Committee by those who were advocating the case of Mr. Robertson, who admitted that the law of 1873 was in force; and their only contention was, that the law of 1872 was not in force, because it was specially repealed. But if I have established—as it seems to me this authority establishes—that the law of 1872 was in force throughout the Dominion, its application only was reserved until each of the Provinces should pass corresponding legislation, which was the conditions required by it. That corresponding legislation was passed in the case of Prince Edward Island in 1876. The Statute of that year made corresponding legislation, which prevented a member of this House from being eligible as a member of the Local House of Assembly of Prince Edward Island; and that legislation having been adopted, the effect was, in my opinion, and that of the Committee, to bring into force there the Act of 1872, in reference to dual representation, upon which the report of the Committee is based. I do not propose to take up the time of the House by any further explanation of the features of this case. I only undertook to submit the facts of it, and the bare conclusion to which the Committee arrived. The Committee, I am certain, has investigated, patiently, the facts of this case; and I believe that it arrived at an intelligent and conscientious conclusion with reference to them; and sharing in that conclusion and the responsibility of it, I have the honor, Mr. Speaker, to second the motion, that this House do concur in the Committee's report.

Mr. WELDON. Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Sherbrooke, who has just addressed the House, has certainly put forward some of the facts connected with this case; but not all the facts, nor do I think that he has called the attention of the House to the peculiar position of Prince Edward Island, and the law affecting it, as a member of this Confederation; but still the hon. member for Sherbrooke was very anxious to refer to precedents. He called our attention to the manner in which they act in England, and stated that in England no such thing as a resignation obtains by common law, but is a creation of the Statute.

Mr. HALL.

It is so created in the several Provinces of the Dominion with regard to the Local Legislatures, and also in the Dominion with regard to Dominion Elections. Yet, while he is correct in that point, that no such resignation is allowed by the common law, but wholly by Statute, and the mode in which the Parliament of England is created; but he has ignored, and also the Committee, the principle which does exist in Great Britain, and existed there since the days of Wilkes and Luttrell, when the House of Commons seated the minority candidate under circumstances such as this; but the general principle that the majority shall rule is the principle by which members of Parliament there are now returned. That principle is only ignored under certain circumstances, when certain facts exist showing that the majority candidate may be ignored, and the minority candidate returned. The principle laid down with regard to a minority candidate's seat is clear and plain: First, that in case a candidate receives the majority of votes and his election is contested, and it is claimed that the minority candidate should be elected, two things must exist: first, that disqualification exists; and, second, that notice of it has been given to the electors; and not until it is brought home to the electors, that those votes are to be thrown away, or to use the language of Lord Eldon in the first case which came before him: "Their votes are thrown away on a dead man." That notice must be brought home to the electors, and in no case—and I challenge the hon. gentleman and any member of the legal profession to show the contrary since the time alluded to, when Luttrell was seated in the place of Wilkes—a proceeding of which the House was so ashamed afterwards, that it expunged these proceedings from the records—unless the voters have been notified, and notice has been brought home to the voters that they were voting for a minority candidate, this is the only mode in which that election of a majority candidate could be vacated and declared null and void, and the party declared incapable of taking the seat, which is then given to the minority candidate. But what is the position in which it is sought by the motion before the House to seat a man returned by a minority of votes, for the Electoral District of King's County, Prince Edward Island. This man received the minority of the votes, but not the slightest notice was given of his disqualification to any elector in his district, or that he was throwing his vote away on Mr. Robertson. The hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Hall) says that the resignation was sent to the two members of the House of Assembly by their names, and not by their titles as members; but I fail to see why, if they were members duly elected, a notice such as this provided for in the Statute should not be regarded as an official notice addressed to them as members of the Assembly. I fail to see why, if this notice was sent for the purpose of being acted upon or not, any strength would be added to it by addressing it to these members as members of the House. The hon. gentleman has called attention to the law of Prince Edward Island. He has pointed out that there are three ways in which a member of the House of Assembly can resign, and he has correctly stated them. First, he can either do so by standing up in the House and announcing that he has vacated his seat; or during a Session, or during the interval between two Sessions, he can address a letter to the Speaker of the House announcing his resignation; or he may in the interval between two Sessions, or in case there is no Speaker, address his resignation to two members. The hon. gentleman says that Dr. Robertson could not do so in this case, because twenty-one days had not elapsed from the time he was gazetted as a member of the Local House. I ask the hon. gentleman to look at the law, and he will see that the twelfth and fourteenth sections apply to the two first cases of resignation; but that these sections do not apply to the case in which a member addresses his resignation to two members of the House of Assembly. Any time between the Sessions of the House, when no Speaker, a member can resign in that way without limitation. On the 12th of June, 1882, Dr. Robertson sent his resignation to two members of the Local Legislature, and he complied with the requirements of the law as stated in the fifteenth section of the Act. What beyond that had he to do? Nothing. His duty was simply to place that resignation in the hands of these gentlemen, and their duty was to forward it to the Lieutenant-Governor. The duty of forwarding it did not devolve upon him. The object of the Act was to prevent disfranchisement, and therefore the law imposed on these two members the duty of forwarding the resignation forthwith to the Lieutenant-Governor. The hon. gentleman has put forward the insinuation that in this case these gentlemen may have acted as they did for a sinister object; but if that hon. gentleman or his friends thought they could prove that why did they not examine and cross-examine Mr. Robertson on that subject when he was in the hands of such able examiners as the hon. member for North Simcoe (Mr. McCarthy), and the hon. member for North Victoria (Mr. Cameron). If they had any doubt as to the bona fides of this question why did they refrain from such an examination instead of coming here behind his back and insinuating that it was for sinister purposes. The evidence before the House shows most conclusively that so far as Dr. Robertson is concerned he acted in good faith. It is quite evident that the seven men who signed the papers knew the facts just as well before the 13th of June as afterwards, but they waited to see the result of the Election, and when Dr. Robertson was returned they then made their declaration. How did Dr. Robertson act under the circumstances? Did he not act as any man would who discovered that a trap had been laid for him. On the 29th of June he wrote a letter to the Lieutenant-Governor stating that he had been made aware that a protest was filed against him, and adding the following words:—

"I deem it due to myself to inform your Honor, that I did, the day before nomination day for the Dominion Election, duly resign my seat in the Local Legislature, by delivering my written resignation, in proper form, to Malcolm McFadyen, Esq., and Dr. Peter McLaren, members of the House of Assembly, for the 4th and 3rd Districts of King's County, respectively.

"I presume the reason your Honor has not received notice from them of my resignation has been owing to the almost continuous absence from the Island since then of Mr. McFadyen."

If the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Hall) doubted whether or not that letter was true, why did he not seek to prove it by evidence in the Committee, for since no evidence has been given to weaken that letter, it must stand in support of the good faith of Dr. Robertson. I think, in arguing an important case like this, it is unworthy of any hon. gentleman to put forward such insinuations when the evidence proves it to be utterly unfounded. Another point which has been ignored in the report of the Committee, as well as by the hon. member for Sherbrooke, is the proceedings that were taken by men who were more conversant with the law than we are—I mean the officers of the Crown in Prince Edward Island. On the 12th of June Dr. Robertson performed an act, which, if it had any force at all, was a tender of his resignation as a member of the House. The Statute says that the person so tendering his resignation vacates his seat. I do not want any astute lawyer to construe these words to mean that he must wait until certain acts are done. Is he to remain a member until the two members send the notice to the Lieutenant Governor? The hon. member for Sherbrooke says that must be done. But why not carry the argument further, and say that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery must issue the writ, and the Sheriff must make his return? The law declares plainly that when a man places his resignation in the hands of two members, he tenders his resignation. I am fortified in that position by the opinion given by the law officers of the Crown on the Island on the subject; and I cite their opinion the more confidently, because they are not in political accord with Dr. Robertson, but with hon. gentlemen opposite. What does Attorney General Sullivan say? On the 3rd of July, on receipt of Dr. Robertson's letter, he writes to Messrs. Malcolm McFadyen, and Peter McLaren, as follows:—

"His Honor the Lieut.-Governor has placed in my hands a communication, dated 29th ultimo, from Mr. James E. Robertson, calling the attention of His Honor to the circumstance that Mr. Robertson 'duly resigned' his 'seat in the Local Legislature' on the 12th of June last 'by delivering' his 'written resignation in proper form to Malcolm McFadyen, Esq., and Dr. Peter McLaren, members of the House of Assembly for the 4th and 3rd Districts of King's County respectively.'

"The law authorizing a member to deliver to two members a declaration of his intention to resign his seat requires that 'such two members upon receiving such declaration shall forthwith notify the Lieutenant-Governor thereof under their hands and seals.'

"His Honor the Lieutenant-Governor has to-day informed me that he has not yet received from you the notification required by law, and I write you to direct your attention to the matter by pointing out to you that it is your duty to comply with the law, otherwise you shall be liable to punishment for its breach."

The breach of duty was not on the part of James Edwin Robertson, but on the part of Messrs. McFadyen and McLaren. Dr. Robertson's duty was done on the 12th of June. So we have this peculiar anomaly—that in Prince Edward Island the law officers of the Crown have declared the seat vacant and have filled it up, and here a majority of men of the same political opinions declare the contrary—in one case, filling up Dr. Robertson's place by a new election, and in the other case giving the seat to the minority candidate of King's County. Now, the hon. member says that by the law of 1872—and the report takes the same position—the returning officer was bound to throw away the votes. It would seem to me, considering the number of returning officers in this country, and the position they occupy, that it would be a terrible thing if our laws were so weak that in a case so complicated as this, in which the members of the legal profession in this House have widely differed, the returning officers should be allowed to decide the law, as the returning officer has done in this case, and thereby disfranchise the people of the district in question. If the candidate has been duly nominated, if the electors have been duly notified and cautioned that if they vote for that candidate, and he is disqualified, their votes are thrown away, then the case can be adjudicated upon in the courts. But with this exception, I can find no case since the days of Wilkes and Luttrell in which the minority candidate has sat in Parliament. The position of the returning officer is, after all, the most important question affecting the House and its members which this case brings up. What I contend is, that by the Act of 1874, the exercise of discretion was entirely taken away from the returning officer, and his duty is simply ministerial—to return the candidate who has received the majority of votes. I think it might be well, however, first to call attention to the relation of Prince Edward Island to this Union. As hon. members are aware, Prince Edward Island was not one of the original members of this Confederation, but provision was made in the British North America Act for the admission of the Island on certain terms. Nearly six years had elapsed after the time of the Union before any attempts were made to carry out the terms upon which that Province should become a part of Confederation. On the 20th of May, 1873, the House of Commons and the Senate of this Dominion passed resolutions as a basis of Union for Prince Edward Island and the Dominion; and on the 28th of May, the two Houses in Prince Edward Island passed an Address to the Crown, praying Her Majesty to consummate the Union on the terms mentioned in those resolutions. Accordingly, on the 26th of June, 1873, the Order in Council was passed making Prince Edward Island part of Canada. Now, great stress has been laid by the hon. member for Sherbrooke on chap. 40 of the Statutes of 1873, by which he claims that the Acts of 1872-73 are in force in Prince Edward Island. With regard to that, I merely have to say that this Act was passed 23rd May, and before Prince Edward Island came into this Union. Therefore, I say these Statutes are not binding. The people of Prince Edward Island never had a voice or share in making them—never had an opportunity of expressing their approval or otherwise of those laws; and there is no principle by which a law shall be imposed on a people without their consent. I contend, therefore, that so far as the people of Prince Edward Island are concerned, those laws have no binding force. But even assuming these laws to be in force, the law of 1872 was abrogated and repealed by the law of 1874. There is no doubt but that the hon. member for Sherbrooke has, to a certain extent, correctly laid down the law with regard to repealed Statutes, but I think the rules are more explicitly laid down in Hardcastle's "Rules of Statutory Law," which is probably the latest work on the subject, and in which are laid down certain definite rules fortified by authorities. The very first case cited is that referred to by the hon. member for Sherbrooke, and I will read the rule in that case from Hardcastle's work, page 169:

"The second general rule laid down in Dr. Foster's case, 11 Rep. 61, with regard to the effect of a subsequent upon a prior Statute is, that when two Statutes, although both are expressed in affirmative language, are contrary in matter the latter abrogates the former. 'The said rule,' says Lord Coke, 'that leges posteriores priores abrogant was well agreed, but as to this purpose contrarium est multiplex, scilicet if one is an express and material negative, and the last is an express and material affirmative, or if the first affirmative and the latter negative. 2. In matter, although both are affirmative, as by the Statute of 33 Hen. VIII. c. 23, it is enacted that 'if any person being examined before the King's council . . . shall confess any treason . . . he shall be tried in any county where the King pleases, by his commission'; and afterwards another law was made, 1 & 2 P. & M. c. 10, in these words, 'that all trials hereafter to be had for any treason, shall be had according to the course of the common law, and not otherwise'; this latter Act (although the latter words had not been) hath abrogated the former, because they are contrary in matter; but it doth not abrogate the Statute of 35 Hen. VIII. c. 2, of trial of treason beyond the seas, notwithstanding the negative words, because it was not contrary in matter, for that was not triable by the common law.

"This second general rule is often somewhat difficult in its application, because on every occasion when it is proposed to apply the rule the question will arise whether the two Statutes in question are actually or only apparently inconsistent with one another. 'I do not think,' said Grove, J., in Hill vs. Hall, L. R. 1 Ex. D. 414, 'that a mere accidental inconsistency between two Statutes amounts to a total repeal of the earlier; such a doctrine might be pushed to a mischievous extent.' 'What words,' said Dr. Lushington in the India, 33 L. J. Adm. 193, 'will establish a repeal by implication it is impossible to say from authority or decided cases. If, on the one hand, the general presumption must be against such a repeal on the ground that the intention to repeal, if any had existed, would have been declared in express terms, so, on the other hand, it is not necessary that any express reference be made to the Statute which it is intended to repeal. The prior Statute would, I conceive, be repealed by implication if its provisions were wholly incompatible with a subsequent one; or if the two Statutes together would lead to wholly absurd consequences; or if the entire subject-matter were taken away by the subsequent Statute. Perhaps the most difficult case for consideration is where the subject-matter has been so dealt with in subsequent Statutes that according to all ordinary reasoning, the particular provision in the prior Statutes could not have been intended to subsist, and yet, if it were left subsisting, no palpable absurdity would have been occasioned.' It must therefore always be a question for the court to decide whether this second rule is applicable or not, and in coming to a decision on this point it may be well to bear in mind that (as Lord Langdale, M.R. observed in Dean of Ely vs. Bliss, 5 Beav. 374) 'every Act must be considered with reference to the state of the law when it came into operation. Every Act is made either for the purpose of making a change in the law or for the purpose of better declaring the law, and its operation is not to be impeded by the mere fact that it is inconsistent with some previous enactment.'

"For this rule it follows that if one Statute enacts something in general terms, and afterwards another Statute is passed on the same subject, which, although expressed in affirmative language, introduces special conditions or restrictions, the subsequent Statute will usually be considered as repealing by implication the former one. For, as Byres, J., said in Harcourt vs. Fox, 1 Shower, 620, 'affirmative Statutes introductive of a new law do imply a negative.' Thus in Ex parte Carruthers, 9 East, 44, it appeared that 13 Geo. II. c. 28, s. 5, exempted from the impress service any harpooner or seaman in the Greenland trade, but 26 Geo. III. c. 41, s. 17, enacted that 'no harpooner whose name shall be inserted in a list shall be impressed,' and it was held that the subsequent Statute repealed by implication the general provision of the former Statute by requiring something special to be done."

On page 176 he says:

"But if a special enactment, whether it be in a public or private Act, and a subsequent General Act, are absolutely repugnant and inconsistent with one another, the courts have no alternative but to declare the prior enactment repealed by the subsequent General Act. Thus in Brampton vs. Colchester 6 E. and B. 246, it was held that the provisions of a Local Act under which certain arrangements had been made for maintaining borough prisoners in county gaols were repealed by the General Prison Act of 5 and 6 Vic. c. 93, s. 18, 'for' said Lord Campbell, C. J., 'I think it was the intention of the Legislature to sweep away all local peculiarities, though sanctioned by Special Acts, and to establish one uniform system except an so far as there are express exceptions. And Wightman, J., added 'it was intended to make one general law superceding all local laws as to prisons and repealing all Local Acts.' And in Duncan vs. Scottish N. E. Ry., L. R. 2, S. A. 20, it was held that the exemption from liability to pay rates which was conferred on the defendant railway company by the Special Acts under which it was made was taken away by the subsequent Poor Law Amendment Act, because, as Lord Westbury said, 'the rule given by this Poor Law Act is wholly inconsistent with the exemption contained in the company's Special Acts.'

These principles we propose to apply to the law of 1872, because that is the law on which the report is made, and it is thoroughly inconsistent with the provisions of the Act of 1874. What was the state of the law in 1872? There was then no general law for the regulation of elections throughout the Dominion, but it was provided by the Election Act that the local laws of the different Provinces should govern elections. In 1874 a change was made, and a uniform law regulating elections generally throughout the Dominion was passed. Before calling the attention of the House to the words of the Act of 1872, referred to by the hon. member for Sherbrooke, I wish to explain the spirit and meaning of the Act of 1874 by comparing it with the corresponding English Act. Our Act of 1874 is based, to a large extent, on the provisions of the Election Act of 1868 in England, and whenever a change takes place we have a fair right to assume that this Parliament, in the exercise of its wisdom, felt that the change was more adapted to our Constitution than the strict following of the provisions of the English Act would be. One important difference was this: that in the English Act the returning officer counts the ballots, and is given certain judicial functions with regard to the question of ballots. It is not on the deputy returning officers, but on the returning officers that are cast the responsibilities with regard to the ballots. Our Legislature, for some particular reason, altered that, and they also altered the arrangements with regard to the nomination. The spirit and meaning of the Act of 1874 was that no discretion should be left to the returning officer after the nomination had been made. It has been strongly urged that under the Act of 1874 the returning officer had judicial functions, and the decision of Chief Justice Wilson in the case of Bannerman vs. McDougall, known as the South Renfrew case, has been cited in support of that contention. But that judgment was confined strictly to the position of the returning officer at the time of the nomination. All the language of the Chief Justice about the judicial functions of the returning officer applies to him in his capacity of receiving the nomination. The facts of the case were that the returning officer in that case, in the exercise of his discretion, rejected the petitioner's nomination paper on the ground that one of the twenty-five was not qualified, and then returned the respondent as duly elected. On the case coming before Chief Justice Wilson, he put forward that the returning officer has, so far as he is concerned, judicial as well as ministerial powers, and that he would have the right to reject the nomination, as he states there, of a woman or of any other disqualified person. No doubt that is entirely within the purview of the law, and the whole object of the Act of 1874 is to give to the returning officer at the time of the nomination power to reject a person who is not properly qualified. We find the qualifications set forth in the Act of 1874, and in various other Acts. I would call the attention of the House to the provisions of the Act of 1874. There we find that the returning officer, upon receiving the proclamation, is to publish a notice and to fix the place of nomination, the day being appointed by law. Then, under the eighteenth section, twenty-five electors may nominate a candidate, that candidate should be nominated on a separate nomination paper, &c.; and any votes given at any election for any other candidate than those nominated shall be null and void. Now, that is the direction of the Statute, because the hon. member for Sherbrooke (Mr. Hall) referred to the twenty-fifth section as if it passed judicial functions upon the returning officer; but the Statute is express that when a candidate has withdrawn the votes cast for him shall be null and void, leaving the returning officer no discretion whatever and no judicial power. And we find that is the principle laid down by the authorities on the English Act, that in every case where votes are given for a candidate who has not been nominated, or given for a candidate who has withdrawn, as under the twenty-fifth section, such votes are null and void. Then it is provided in the Act that the candidate shall be a natural born subject of Her Majesty, and then the paper is to be attested; and in the twenty-third section it is provided that the returning officer shall accompany his return to the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery with a report of his proceedings, and of any nomination papers rejected for non-compliance with the requirements of the Act. I say that is just the principle laid down in the South Renfrew case, that the returning officer has judicial functions only in respect to the nomination, when he has a right to reject a candidate and to exercise his judgment, whether rightly or wrongly, according to the best of his ability; but he can only do that when there is non-compliance with the requirements of the Act. I say that the question of disqualification is a matter for the returning officer only in respect to the nomination, and after once a man is a candidate all further proceedings must be left to the tribunals of the land. Then he holds a court, and having received the nomination papers, in the exercise of his functions, decides whether the nomination papers are right, and he has to see that the candidates are duly nominated before they can receive any votes on the day of election. Now, in reference to withdrawal, it is provided in the 25th section that a candidate may withdraw at any time after his nomination, and even on the day of polling before the close of the poll, and the votes polled for him after that moment cease to be counted—not by the discretion of the returning officer, but by the Act itself. And I say that when the nominations are declared then the judicial function of the returning officer ceases, and we have got to see whether after that his duties are not simply ministerial, and that is the real question before this House. The question is: whether the returning officer can do as he has done in this case, and if it is not a clear violation of the law of 1874? It is not so much the interests of Dr. Robertson that are concerned, but it is the disfranchisement of the electors of that district. It is their rights which have been violated by the returning officer in this case, who has taken upon himself to do what another tribunal only could do. But we want to see what the duty of the returning officer is. He posts up the name of the candidate; he can then no longer reject any candidate after he has once declared him to be nominated; the only way a candidate can be withdrawn from the votes of the electors is by his own voluntary act, expressed in writing to the returning officer. Then he appoints his deputy returning officers. These have their various functions, and we find that in each polling district they are judges who have judicial functions cast upon them. Now, I make a broad distinction between the English Act and our own. In the English Act this duty devolves on the returning officer, but by our Act all those functions are taken away and given to the deputies. In the fifty-fifth section the distinction between the returning officer and the deputies is very marked. That section reads as follows:—

“Immediately after the close of the poll the deputy returning officer in the presence of the poll clerk and the candidates or their agents, and if the candidates and their agents are absent, then in the presence of such, if any, of them as are present, and of at least three electors, open the ballot box and proceed to count the number of votes given for each candidate. In doing so he shall reject all ballot papers which have not been supplied by the deputy returning officer, all those by which votes have been given for more candidates than are to be elected, and all those upon which there is any writing or mark by which the vote could be identified.

“The other ballot papers being counted and a list of the number of votes given to each candidate, and of the number of rejected ballot papers, all the ballot papers indicating the number of votes given for each candidate respectively shall be put in separate envelopes or parcels, those rejected, those spoiled and those unused shall each be put into a different envelope or parcel, and all these parcels being endorsed so as to indicate their contents, shall be put back into the ballot boxes.

“56. The deputy returning officer shall take a note of any objection made by any candidate, his agent, or any elector present, to any ballot paper found in the ballot box, and shall decide any question arising out of the objection: and the decision of such deputy returning officer shall be final, subject only to reversal on petitions questioning the election or return.”

I want to point out that the decision of the deputy returning officer with respect to the rejection of votes shall be final, subject only to reversal on petition to an election court. The fifty-seventh section says:

“The deputy returning officer shall make out a statement of the accepted ballot papers, of the number of votes given to each candidate, of the rejected ballot papers, of the spoiled and returned ballot papers, and of those unused and returned by him, and he shall make and keep by him a copy of such statement, and enclose in the ballot box the original statement, together with the voters' list, and a certified statement at the foot of each list of the total number of electors who voted on each list, and such other lists and documents as may have been used at such election. The ballot box shall then be locked and sealed, and shall be delivered to the returning officer, or to the election clerk, who shall receive or collect the same.”

There the function of the deputy returning officer is clearly defined. He has not the power to elect a candidate, but in his hands rests the decision as to the question of votes, and it is not to be questioned by the returning officer, but to be questioned only on petition against election returns being heard by the legal tribunals. It is provided, in order to prevent collusion or fraud, that the deputy returning officer shall preserve the original returns and furnish the candidates with a certified copy. With respect to the returning officer, I wish to point out how opposed this Act is to the Act of 1872. The Act of 1874 provides as follows:—

“The returning officer at the place, day and hour appointed by his proclamation, and after having received all the ballot boxes, shall proceed to open them, in the presence of the election clerk, the candidates or their representatives, if present, and of at least two electors, if the candidates or their representatives are not present, and to add together the number of votes given for each candidate, from the statements contained in the several ballot boxes returned by the deputy returning officer.”

The section then declares that the candidate having the majority of votes shall then be declared elected. The provision of the sixtieth section shows there is a marked difference between our Act and the British Act, because the latter says that the returning officer, if a qualified voter, shall give a casting vote, while in our Act it declares that in every case the returning officer shall give the casting vote, so that there shall be no such thing as a double return, and that the candidate elected shall have a majority of votes, and that if either of the candidates is disqualified, or has improperly obtained that majority, the Judges of the land shall decide whether he was properly elected or not, and not the caprice, by whim and ignorance, perhaps, of a returning officer. That is the spirit and meaning of the Act of 1874. The Act of 1878 gave the County Court Judges the revising of the votes, and the returning officer had to give the casting vote in case of a tie then also. I want to turn, for a few moments, to the Act of 1872, and I call the attention of the House to that Act because it is entirely inconsistent, not only with the spirit, but with the language of the Act of 1874. The Act of 1872 provided:

"1. No person shall be eligible to, or be capable of being nominated to or voted for, or of being elected to, or of sitting or voting in the House of Commons, who, on the day of nomination at any election to the House of Commons, is a member of the Legislative Council or Assembly of any Province in which, by law, members of the Senate or House of Commons are rendered incapable of being appointed to, or of sitting or voting in the Legislative Council, or of being elected to, or of sitting and voting in the House of Assembly thereof, or who, on the day of any such nomination is a member of the Legislative Assembly in any Province in which, by law, after the dissolution of the present House of Commons, the sitting or voting as a member of the House of Commons by such member of the Legislative Assembly, will have the effect of voiding his election to the Legislative Assembly thereof and vacating his seat, or of rendering him incapable of sitting or voting in the Legislative Assembly of such Province.

"2. If any such member of a Provincial Legislature shall, notwithstanding his disqualification as in the preceding section mentioned, receive a majority of votes at any such election, such majority of votes shall be thrown away, and it shall be the duty of the returning officer to return the person having the next greatest number of votes, provided he be otherwise eligible."

The second clause gives a judicial function, for it says the returning officer shall return the person having the next greatest number of votes, provided he be otherwise eligible. It points out, in fact, what I know was then the law in New Brunswick, that the returning officer, the Sheriff, had the power to hold a scrutiny before the return of the writ. But when that was taken away, I contend that not only the language, but the spirit of the Act of 1872 was utterly inconsistent with the General Elections Act. The latter Act provided for the withdrawal of election cases, not only from Parliament, but from the returning officers, and to place their decision far above political feeling and party bias, so that the rights of the electors might be as fully protected as civil rights. The Act of 1873, which provides that the election of members of the Legislature who may hereafter be elected members to this House shall not be valid, and that they shall be liable to a penalty, does not touch the question of the returning officers deciding respective votes. In the case of Mitchell, who was disqualified as a felon, the Imperial Parliament did not seat Moore, but on notice being given the Judge at the trial set aside the election of Mitchell, and declared Moore was elected: first, because Mitchell was disqualified; and, second, because this fact was known and notice given to the electors, and therefore they wilfully threw away their votes. But I hold that, under the law, if notice had not been given the Judge would have decided that Mitchell was not duly elected, and that there must be a new election, but not that the minority candidate should be seated. The action now proposed in this House would be a violation of the law of the land if carried out, and an invasion of the rights of the people of Prince Edward Island, and the House should pause before it declared in favor of a principle which, if carried out, must affect the interests of the majority candidate in every case. This is not a case between Dr. Robertson, and Mr. McDonald alone, but it affects the rights of the electors of King's, and deals with the question as to whether the returning officer has done his duty. It has also a bearing on the case of Queen's County. The returning officer returned Mr. Jenkins. The present member (Mr. Brecken) appealed from that decision to the courts, and when the case came finally before the Supreme Court a decision was given in his favor. During that time Queen's County was not disfranchised because Mr. Jenkins occupied the seat until the Supreme Court gave its decision. There we have an example of the manner in which the spirit and meaning of that Act of 1874 had been carried out, for the case had been disposed of by that tribunal, to which all these matters had to be referred, a tribunal which was free from party prejudice and party bias, and its decision would be fully acquiesced in, not only by the people of Prince Edward Island, but by the people of the whole Dominion. But as it stands now, here we have a man proposed as the member, by the Committee, and by this resolution, who it is claimed has the majority of the votes of this House, but is in a minority with the electors; and I say in conclusion, that if he has one spark of feeling and honor, and this resolution is carried, the very first moment that he takes his seat, he will rise up and say: I resign the seat at once into the hands of the people. Mr. Speaker, I beg to move in amendment that this motion be not concurred in, but that all the words after "that" be left out, and the following words be inserted:—

In view of the provisions of the Dominion Elections Act, 1874, and the duties of the Returning Officer, as therein defined, and also in view of the fact, elicited from the evidence produced before the Select Standing Committee on Privileges and Elections, now before the House—it was the duty of the Returning Officer at the last election for the Electoral District of King's County, Prince Edward Island, to declare and return James Edwin Robertson, as one of the members elected at the said election.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I have just a word or two to say upon the subject of this motion before it is submitted to the House. This is, of course, an important question; and I may say now, that after having heard the evidence submitted to the Committee on Elections and Privileges, the whole question has assumed a different phase altogether to what it assumed when I formerly discussed this question. Then I proposed to discuss, and only did discuss, this proposition,—as to the duty cast by the Act of 1874 upon the returning officer; and my contention was, that his duties were purely ministerial, and that Dr. Robertson, having the majority of the legal votes, was entitled to be declared returned, and ought so to be declared returned by the returning officer. To the motion I submitted on that occasion an amendment was moved by the hon. First Minister, and upon that amendment coming up before the Committee on Elections and Privileges, of course the whole of the papers and some evidence were submitted to that Committee; and now the matter comes before the House in an entirely different aspect and in an entirely different shape. I have said, Sir, that this is an important question. It is a question that I think we ought to approach with unbiassed and unprejudiced minds.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. CAMERON. I recollect, when I discussed the question before—and I think that the hon. First Minister, at all events, will give me credit when I say so—I did nothing more than submit a calm, dispassionate statement of the facts, as I then understood them, to the House. We were warned, by one or two hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House, that this was a judicial question, that we ought to approach it in a judicial spirit, that we should deal with it in a judicial spirit, and that we ought, so far as possible, to divest our minds of our political leanings and of our political inclinations, and approach the question in the spirit of judges, and solely as if we were judges adjudicating upon this case. Now, Sir, that is the spirit in which we ought to approach it; and I hope, Sir, although I occasionally fight a political battle, both in this House and out of this House, if I know myself I will be enabled to discuss the few propositions which I will submit to this House this evening without any political prejudices, and that I will be enabled to divest my own mind of all political bias, and to deal with this case and to comment on this case as if I did not know to what side of politics either Dr. Robertson or Mr. McDonald belongs; and I hope that every hon. member of the House will approach the consideration of it in the same spirit. I only hope that, in dealing with a question of this kind, a purely judicial question, the result of which must depend almost entirely on the construction of the Statutes of Prince Edward Island, and of our own disqualifying Act, I say I hope that in discussing this question, every hon. member of the House, both professional and lay, will be enabled to lay aside their party prejudices and approach it in the spirit which I have just indicated; but I fear somewhat, that my hopes will not be realized, because the cheers that greeted my hon. friend from Sherbrooke (Mr. Hall) when he resumed his seat on that side of the House, and the cheers which greeted my hon. friend from St. John (Mr. Weldon) when he resumed his seat on this side of the House, do not give me much warrant for the conclusion to which I was trying to bring my own mind. Now, Sir, this is a judicial question; and, of course, it is not to be expected in dealing with this judicial question, and in putting an interpretation upon the Statute law of the Island, and also upon our own disqualifying Acts, that the laymen of the House will, be able to deal with it in the same spirit of intelligence that the lawyers, who are in the habit of dealing with questions of this kind, will be able to deal with this question. I say this without any disrespect to the wisdom, intelligence, and common sense of the laymen, but, of course, they can hardly be expected to bring to the consideration of the discussion of the construction of the Statute law, the same amount of experience and legal knowledge that those who are in the daily habit during a long lifetime of dealing with questions of this kind, will be able to do. Now, Sir, there are three questions which appear to me must necessarily arise in the discussion of this case. We have had the facts before the House in the former discussion, and we had them before the Committee on Elections and Privileges. These facts are now submitted by that Committee to the House, and the conclusions to which that Committee arrived are also before the House. The conclusions that the majority of the Committee arrived at, hon. gentlemen who have taken the trouble to read the report, will find are—first, that Dr. Robertson, on the 13th of June, 1882, was disqualified from being a candidate for this House, the majority of the Committee have so decided; and the majority of the Committee have also decided that Dr. Robertson being disqualified, it was the duty of the returning officer to have declared Mr. McDonald elected, upon the ground that the Act of 1872 was then in force in the Island, that the second section of the Act of 1872 left the returning officer no discretion; and that if that Act were in force in the Island—as the Committee declared it was—in June, 1882, then no discretion was left to the returning officer, he was bound to declare elected the man having the minority of votes, on the principle that the votes cast for the man who had the majority were thrown away, he being disqualified. I may say, Sir, at once, that if I could be convinced in the first place, that Dr. Robertson was then disqualified, or, in other words, that on the 13th of June, 1882, he was what is technically within the meaning of the Statute of the Island and within the meaning of our own disqualifying Act, a member of the Legislative Assembly of the Island—if I could bring my mind to that conclusion, and also to the conclusion that the Act of 1872 was then in force in the Island, I would agree with the report of the majority, and hold that the returning officer should have declared elected the man who received a minority of votes. I say nothing about the policy or impolicy of such a law, because that question is not before us; but I think if it were to come before us again, Parliament would hesitate a good while before it would entrust to any returning officer—either the nominee of the Government or the local officials in the counties who were appointed under the old Act returning officers—such powers as these. For myself, after a careful perusal, examination, and study of the Local Acts and our disqualifying Act, I have not been able to bring my mind to the conclusion that Dr. Robertson was disqualified. Other hon. gentlemen have come to another conclusion than my own, and I have nothing to say on that point, as they have a right to their opinion. I know that some of these hon. gentlemen came to their conclusion only after grave doubt and hesitation, as they declared so before voting on that question in the Committee. Though I may be dogmatic enough to lay down the proposition that the law is clear on these points, I do not arrogate to myself, or to those who share my views, all the knowledge possessed by members of the legal profession in this House. I am willing to concede to hon. gentlemen the same right which I claim for myself, though their conclusion may be opposed to mine. In order to settle the question of Dr. Robertson's qualification, we require to examine with care the Statutes of the Island and our disqualifying Act. We are now dealing with the matter as if it never had been before the House, and in its present aspect it never has been before the House. With regard to these Statutes I may say that in my short political life, and enjoyed as I have enjoyed a moderate share of professional experience, I never read anything so peculiar and extraordinary in its wording as the Statute of the Island. They seem to have peculiar ways of doing things in the East, which we have not in the West. In Prince Edward Island no man can be nominated as a candidate for election for the Local Legislature without filing a declaration under oath that he is possessed of a certain property qualification. The returning officers hold what is called a court, at which each candidate is bound to make a declaration and give a schedule of the property qualification upon which he claims to be entitled to be put in nomination as a candidate. The property qualification required in that Province is £50 free from all incumbrances, but before he is entitled to his seat and to the rights and privileges of the House he must make another declaration. If hon. gentlemen will refer to the 12th section of the Island Act, they will find that it provides substantially in the language in which I have presented the case to the House. It says:

"At every court to be holden for opening any election as aforesaid, every candidate proposed as aforesaid, if present, shall, before the said court be determined or adjourned, deliver a schedule to the Sheriff containing the particulars of his qualification, according to law, and at the foot thereof shall subscribe and take the following oath before the said Sheriff or presiding officer, who is hereby required to administer the same."

Having so done he is entitled to be put in nomination and to get the votes of the electors, and if he receives a majority of them, to be declared returned by the returning officer. But he must do something else before, by the law of the Island, he can be a member of the Assembly. If hon. gentlemen will refer to section 75, they will find that the wording is still more extraordinary; and I call the special attention of the First Minister to the peculiar wording of this clause:

"LXXV. No person shall be capable of being elected a member for any Town and Royalty or district in this Island, unless he shall, for a period of at least twelve calendar months before the teste of the writ for holding the election at which such person shall claim to be elected, have been in the seizin or possession of a freehold or leasehold estate within this Island, of the value of fifty pounds, over and above all incumbrances, that may affect the same; and shall, before he be presented to take his seat in the House of Assembly, take one of the oaths in the schedule to this Act prescribed for members, relative to a freehold or leasehold estate, as the nature of his qualification may require."

So that, according to that clause, though he may be nominated and elected, he cannot be presented until he again takes the oath of qualification for the second time—he is not entitled to the rights and privileges of a member of the House by simply taking the first oath. Now, that is the contention of the minority of the Committee. Of course the majority take a different view, and I do not mean to say that there is no ground for the argument they advance, or no reason for the conclusion they have arrived at; but my view is that by the 75th section of the Act Dr. Robertson was not a member of the Assembly within the meaning of our disqualification Act until he took the second oath. Now, assuming that the Act of 1872 was in force, what does the disqualifying Act say? It does not say "elected," but it says "a member of the Assembly." Our contention is that a person must be a member of the Assembly before he becomes disqualified, and in order to be a member of the Assembly he must have taken the second oath. The Act provides:

"No person shall be eligible to, or be capable of being nominated to, or voted for, or of being elected to, or of sitting or voting in the House of Commons, who, at the day of the nomination of any election to the House of Commons, is a member of the Legislative Council or Assembly of any Province in which, by law, members of the Senate or House of Commons are rendered incapable of being appointed to, or of sitting or voting in the Legislative Council, or of being elected to, or of sitting or voting in the House Assembly thereof, or who, on the day of any such nomination, is a member of the Legislative Assembly in any Province in which, by law, after the dissolution of the present House of Commons, the sitting or voting as a member of the House of Commons by such member of the Legislative Assembly, will have the effect of voiding his election to the Legislative Assembly thereof and vacating his seat, or of rendering him incapable of sitting or voting in the Legislative Assembly of such Province."

Now, Sir, you see that the man who is disqualified from being elected to or occupying a seat in the House of Commons, under our disqualifying Act—assuming it to be in force in the Island, which I by no means admit—is the man who is a member of the Local Legislative Assembly. Mr. Robertson did not take that oath; he could not take it, because the election for the Local Assembly took place in May, 1882, and the election for the House of Commons took place in June, 1882, and the Local Legislature did not meet until March, 1883; so that during all that time Mr. Robertson could not have taken the oath, and could not have been a member within the meaning of that section. But it is argued by hon. gentlemen opposite that the moment a man is elected, he becomes a member of the Assembly. I think I can satisfy hon. gentlemen who are open to conviction—I will not attempt to satisfy any others than those whose minds are unbiassed, and who do not vote on this question as mere partisans—and I am sure no one here desires to do that—that the mere election is not sufficient; and we must bear in mind that this disqualifying Act is a penal Act, and therefore we must construe the law strictly. For the purpose of my argument, I am going to refer to a case which the hon. member for Queen's (Mr. Davies), by his zeal and industry, discovered—a case which, in my judgment, has an important bearing on this question, and practically settles the dispute between the majority and the minority of the Committee. You will observe that the ground taken in the report is, that the moment a man is elected to the Legislative Assembly he is a member; the case I quote goes to show that he is not. Of course the cases bearing on this subject are very few, but they rather go to confirm the views of those who differ from the majority of the Committee. The city of Shaftesbury, in England, many years ago obtained a charter from one of the kings of England, under which and by virtue of which that corporation was entitled to elect its burgesses, its councillors and its mayor. A provision was made in that charter that a man who once occupied the position of mayor should not again occupy that office for the space of three years. One of the mayors was elected in September, 1826, and he took the oath of office in October of the same year. In September, 1829, he was again elected mayor, and on the 6th of October he took the oath of office. It was contended that he was disqualified, because he was elected within three years of the period when we first took office; and it was argued that the date of his election decided the question, and not the day he took the oath and occupied his seat at the council board. That case is, in my judgment, so analogous to the case under consideration—that I shall call the attention of the House to the terms of the charter. It is as follows:—

"That the mayor nominated for the position as aforesaid, before he be admitted to exercise that office, shall not only take his proper oath well and faithfully to exercise that office, but also all the oaths on the Statute of this Realm upon the next such nomination, before the steward of the Court for the time being, or his deputy, and after such oath so taken, can exercise his office for one year."

There was an application made to unseat the mayor on the ground I have indicated; and Lord Denman says on the subject:

"The party becomes mayor, not by reason of his being elected, but by being sworn into his office."

There is a good deal more in the judgment of the court on the same subject, with which I will not trouble the House. The words of the Island Act are that the successful candidate may not be presented to take his seat in the Local Legislature until he takes the oath prescribed by section 75 of the Island Act. In the case from which I have just quoted the charter provided that before the mayor-elect could be admitted to exercise his office, he must take the proper oath. The Island Act uses substantially the same language, so that the case is clearly in point. My hon. friend from Sherbrooke quoted from Dwarris, the American edition. I quote from the English Dwarris on the same point. It is contended by the Committee that Mr. McDonald was entitled to this seat, because Dr. Robertson was elected to the Local Legislature, that is, that he occupied another office, which disqualified him from being a candidate for the House of Commons. The hon. gentleman will find that by 15 George II, Chapter 22, no commissioner of Revenue in Ireland, no commissioner of the Navy, no auditor of the Exchequer, no auditor of the Admiralty, no paymaster of the Army or Navy, shall be capable of being elected to Parliament, or of voting in Parliament. Now, you will see that that is very nearly the language of our disqualifying Statute—no man who is a member of a Local Assembly shall be capable of being a member of the House of Commons. By 41 George III, Chapter 52, it is provided that no commissioner of Customs, Excise or Stamps, no agent for any regiment, no party to any contract from the Treasury, and no auditor or teller of the Exchequer, shall be capable of being elected or chosen. The language is nearly the same as that in the Dominion Act of 1872, which, remember, I deny to be in force in Prince Edward Island. It is further provided by this Act that no person should be elected a member of Parliament who had not an estate valued at £300 sterling. And in order to enforce the provisions of 9 Anne, Chapter 5, George II, Chapter 20, was passed, which provides that:

"Before any hon. member can take his seat he shall deliver at the Clerk's table a paper signed by himself, containing the names of the parish and county in which the lands lie, whereby he makes out his qualification, and shall also swear that he truly and bonâ fide is in possession of the estate as described on the paper."

After laying down this general proposition, Dwarris says, at page 263:

"In order that holding an office may disqualify the actual occupancy and enjoyment of office must be shown. A mere title, if never acted on, will not operate to disqualify."

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That applies to the office.

Mr. CAMERON. Precisely; and so is this an office. Can the right hon. gentleman or any person point out any distinction between the two cases? It is said this man is disqualified because he was elected to an office—I do not care what you call it—because he was elected to the position of a member of a Local Legislature. In England it is held that if a man has an office under Government, he is not entitled to be elected, but it is further held that he does not hold an office under Government by a simple appointment. He must be also in the enjoyment of it. He must have something more than the title. Mr. Robertson must be shown to have something more than the title before he can be disqualified. That is the position I take on this subject. There is another point to which I direct the attention of the House. Assuming, for argument sake, that Mr. Robertson was disqualified, what power has this Parliament to deal with it? We can say that a member of this House has no right to sit here if the disqualification is a personal one—if he happens to be a Senator, if he be a lunatic, if he be a minor—because that has been the law of Parliament from time immemorial, since we have had a Parliament. But I can challenge the hon. gentleman to point out, in the whole history of Parliament, any practice of Parliament justifying our giving a seat in Parliament to a candidate who had the minority of votes, and who was not declared elected by the returning officer. Another important point is this: Assuming that Dr. Robertson was disqualified, how does this House propose to deal with the matter? We can only deal with it on the assumption that the Act of 1872 was in force in June, 1882. If it can be shown that that Act was not in force in the Island in 1882, this Parliament has no power to seat Dr. Robertson. That proposition cannot be gainsaid by anybody. It is only by virtue of this Act, which gives the returning officer power to return a minority candidate, that we can have any pretension to order the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to amend the return. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) has argued this point, and the point that the Act of 1872 is not in force in any part of the Dominion, but is superseded by the Act of 1873 and the Act of 1874. My hon. friend's argument on that point is clear, viz., that the Act of 1872 is not in force in the Dominion at all, that it is superseded by the Act of 1874. The second section of the Act of 1872 is that which gives the returning officer the power of returning a minority candidate, by declaring that all votes for the disqualified candidate shall be thrown away. That gives the returning officer power to do something more than sum up the votes. We have the Act of 1874, in which the fifty-ninth section provides that the returning officer shall sum up the votes and declare elected the man having the highest number; and section sixty-one provides that he shall return the man having the highest number of votes. I ask the hon. member for Sherbrooke, or any hon. member who desires to view this case apart from any personal or political leanings, I ask the hon. First Minister, if it is not perfectly clear that the fifty-ninth and sixty-first clauses of the Act of 1874 are in direct contradiction and opposition to the second section of the Act of 1872? The one gives the returning officer the power of returning a minority candidate, and the other declares explicitly and unmistakably that the returning officer shall return only the man having the highest number of votes. There is another question apart from that altogether. I say the Act of 1872 is repealed in substance; I say that it is superseded. Hon. gentlemen opposite say the contrary. That is an important legal question on which we ought to have the judgment of our ablest men skilled in the law, for it is a question on which men may fairly differ. But another question arises here. Assuming that the Act of 1872 is not practically superseded by the Act of 1874, is the Act of 1872 in force in Prince Edward Island? Was it ever in force in Prince Edward Island? It is perfectly manifest it was not in force when the Island joined the Union, because the Act of 1872 was passed the year before the Island joined the Union, and it contains no provision that it shall extend to Provinces forming part of the Union after its passage. If that be so I would like to know by virtue of what law the Act of 1872 can be applied to Prince Edward Island; and it is only on the assumption that this Act is in force there that this report of the Committee can by any possibility be concurred in. The Act of 1873 makes express provision that not only would it apply to the Provinces then forming the Union, but also to all the Provinces that might subsequently join the Union; and were it not for the constitutional question that an hon. gentleman has suggested with respect to the Act of 1873, I would say it was in force by virtue of that clause which extends the Act to Provinces subsequently joining Confederation. It was argued by one hon. gentleman that the Act of 1872 came into force in the Island by virtue of an Act of the Island passed in 1876. It could not, therefore, have been in force from 1872 to 1876. What law was in force during those four years? It must have been the law of 1873 and 1874. The Act of 1872 provides for a disqualification and a qualification for members of this House, yet we are gravely told that Prince Edward Island, one of the Provinces of this Dominion, has the right by legislation of its own—the legislation of 1876—to make applicable to the Island a law that regulates the qualification and disqualification of members of this House.

It being Six o'clock the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

THE NORTHERN RAILWAY COMPANY OF CANADA.

On the order for the House to go into Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 93) respecting the Northern Railway of Canada, being read,

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I think the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Cameron), who has really charge of this Bill, has given notice of some amendments to it, and it would be hardly fair to consider the Bill in his absence.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I was about to suggest that, as these amendments are important, it would be proper to consider them in the Railway Committee. Under these circumstances, I would move that instead of the House going into Committee on this Bill, it be referred back to the Railway Committee, together with the amendments of which notice has been given. As we have extended the time to receive the report from the Committee, and as there are one or two other Bills before the Committee, there is no risk of delay in making this reference.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). My only objection is a fear that it would be delayed too long to be passed this Session.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There is no danger of that.

Mr. CAMERON. These amendments were ready when the Bill was before the Railway Committee, but at the request of the Government, and in order that they might consider them, I deferred moving them in the Committee, with the understanding that they should be moved in Committee of the whole House. Of course, I consent to the reference, after the assurance of the hon. Minister of Public Works.

Order discharged, and Bill referred back to Committee on Railways.

THE GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY OF CANADA.

Mr. COLBY moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 113) to authorize the Grand Trunk Railway of Canada to extend their traffic arrangements with the North Shore Railway Company, to fifty years from the date thereof.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). Before the Committee reports on this Bill, I wish to say that, as I understand the third reading is not to be to-night, and as my objections to it are to the principle rather than to the detail, I reserve any remarks I have to make until the third reading. I think the Bill is vicious in principle and ought not to be passed by this House, for the reasons I stated in the Railway Committee. I shall probably feel it my duty to move some amendments on third reading of the Bill.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am glad my hon. friend from Victoria has made a statement of his objections to the Bill. I have similar objections to those which the hon. gentleman entertains, and which objections I stated very fully before the Railway Committee, but as the matter is to stand over by arrangement to be dealt with on the third reading, I, of course, make no opposition to the Bill at present.

Bill reported.

THE DOMINION PHOSPHATE AND MINING COMPANY.

On the order for consideration of amendments made by the Senate to Bill (No. 49) to incorporate the Dominion Phosphate and Mining Company, being read,

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I am informed by the promoters of this Bill that they are content to accept the amendment which the Senate has made, inasmuch as they do not purpose using their borrowing powers, and it is, therefore, of no moment how those powers may be restricted. The limitation imposed by the Senate was that they should not borrow more than the amount of their paid-up capital. As that clause had not usually been inserted in Bills of this kind, I objected to it when it came down here; but as the promoters have no objection to it, I, therefore, move concurrence in the amendment.

Amendments concurred in.

KING'S COUNTY (P.E.I.) ELECTION.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). When you left the Chair at six o'clock, I had concluded my remarks on the subject of the Act of 1872, known as the Costigan Act. I endeavored to show that that Act was not in force in the Island of Prince Edward at the last Dominion Election for the Dominion, on various grounds. In the first place I pointed out that the Act was passed before the Union was consummated; and that the Act was only intended to apply to such Provinces as had by law abolished dual representation. I pointed out that, by the words of the Statute itself, it could only be applicable to such Provinces as formed the Dominion at the time of the passing of the Act, and that, therefore, by no possibility could it be argued with any show of reason that the Act of 1872 was in force in the Island in 1882. Now, Sir, I contend that the report adopted by the majority of the Committee cannot be adopted by this House, because it is based upon the assumption that the Act of 1872 was in force in the Island on the 13th of June, 1882. But it is argued that the Act of 1873 is in force in that Island; assuming that it was then the report of the Committee is equally at fault, because, as I have said, it proceeds on the assumption that the Act of 1872, which is the only Act that gives the returning officer the power of declaring that the votes given for the minority candidate, if he is disqualified, shall be thrown away—was the only Act in existence at that time. Now, if the Act of 1873 was in force in the Island, then I say the report cannot be adopted. From the facts set out in the report and this view of the law, the conclusion would be that there should be a new election, that the election was null and void, that the returning officer had no power to reject the votes given for the majority candidate. Now, it may be argued further, that if the Acts of 1872 and 1873 were not in force in the Island, that the Union Act passed by this Parliament in 1873 was in force in the Island. You will recollect that the Act of 1872 was passed on the 14th day of June, 1872, and you will recollect that the Island Act was passed and received the Royal Assent on the 23rd of May, 1873, and prior to that the Mills Act was passed. I contend that it cannot be urged successfully that the Act of 1872 was in force, or that the Act of 1873 was in force; but then it may be argued, as it was argued in the Committee, that if neither of these Acts is in force the Act of Union brought the Act of 1873, if not the Act of 1872, into force in the Island. The Union Act was passed on May 23rd, 1873, and among other provisions it contains the following:—

“On, from and after the day on which the said colony of Prince Edward Island shall be admitted to the Union or Dominion of Canada as a Province thereof by Her Majesty, the Queen, by and with the advice of Her Majesty's Most Honorable Privy Council, under the provisions of the one hundred and forty-sixth section of the British North America Act of 1867, all the Acts of the Parliament of Canada passed in the present, or any former Session thereof and relating to the following subjects, or any of them, that is to say: (1) The Executive Government and the several departments thereof; (2) The Civil Service of the Dominion; (3) The Legislature and Legislation; (4) The Senate and House of Commons, including the proceedings therein, and the vacating of the seats of members of the House of Commons and the filling of vacancies.”

The last clause I have read is the only one which has any application here. It may be argued that under the words “House of Commons” the Act of 1872 might be imported into the Island, that its provisions might be made applicable to the Island under the clause I have just read. It is important to notice the date of this statute. This Act was passed on May 23rd, 1873. Prince Edward Island was not admitted into the Union at that time. It was admitted by a joint address of both Houses of this Parliament, and a joint address of the Local Legislature and by the Order in Council, to which I will now refer. That Order in Council was passed on June 26th, 1873, over a month after the Statute from which I have just read was passed, and which it is contended brought the Act of 1872 into force in the Island. The point, I think, is a reasonably clear one, that the terms of Union and the conditions and stipulations upon which the Island would join the Union, are all embodied in the address of both Houses of Parliament of the Dominion and of the Island, and in the Order in Council. You will search in vain in the addresses to which I have just referred, for any words that can by any possibility be construed so as to bring either of these Acts into force in the Island. Besides, it may be argued with great force that this Parliament had no power to bind the Island by any Act of this Parliament passed before the Island joined the Union, and had no power to stipulate and fix on any terms and conditions on which the Island should join the Union other than those in the addresses aforesaid and the Order in Council. That was a matter of convention and treaty between the negotiating parties, and the Island not being part of the Union, therefore it may properly be argued that this Statute cannot apply to the Island. If that is so, and I think it is a fair argument, then this result must inevitably follow, that neither the Act of 1872, nor the Act of 1873, nor the Union Act of 1873, can have any force or effect in the Island. If such process of reasoning be correct, then my position is, I think, made out. I stated before recess that the Act of 1873 could not, by any possibility, have any force from 1873 to 1876, when the Island abolished dual representation. If so, what law was in force during those years under which the Dominion Elections in the Island were carried on? Provision is made therefor by this Order in Council. It says:

“And in accordance with the terms of the said addresses relating to the Electoral Districts for which, the time within which, and the laws and provisions under which the first election of members to serve in the House of Commons of Canada, for such Electoral Districts shall be held, it is hereby further ordered and declared that ‘Prince County’ shall constitute one district, to be designated ‘Prince County District,’ and return two members; that ‘Queen's County’ shall constitute one district, to be designated ‘Queen's County District,’ and return two members; that ‘King's County’ shall constitute one district, to be designated ‘King's County District,’ and return two members; that the election of members to serve in the House of Commons of Canada, for such Electoral Districts shall be held within three calendar months from the day of the admission of the said Island into the Union or Dominion of Canada; that all laws which at the date of this Order in Council relating to the qualification of any person to be elected or sit or vote as a member of the House of Assembly of the said Island shall apply to elections of members to serve in the House of Commons for the Electoral Districts situate in the said Island of Prince Edward.”

That very clearly provided for the holding of the first election in the Island, for the purpose of returning members to serve in the Parliament of Canada. I am told that the election of 1874 was held under that Order in Council, and upon the same terms and conditions, and that the qualification for local members was the qualification for members of the House of Commons, in pursuance of that Order in Council. If that be so, it is quite clear that the Order in Council provided for holding the Dominion Elections in the Island, from the time when the Island joined the Union until the Dominion Parliament passed such legislation as was applicable to the whole Dominion. We passed such legislation. We passed the Act of 1874, which was in force in Prince Edward Island, but not for the election of 1874. All the elections in that Island subsequently, were held under that Act, and that Act, as I have pointed out, expressly speaks of the duty and power imposed on Returning Officers, and that duty and power consisted in their having the authority to sum up the number of votes cast, and to declare elected the candidate having the highest number. If that process of reasoning be correct, I say, again that neither the Act of 1872, the Act of 1873, or the Union Act, were in force during the last Dominion Elections. But it was urged in the Committee, and it may be urged again, that the Act of 1872 must be in force there, because the Island passed this law abolishing dual representation. I hold that the Island could not by any legislation of its own introduce there a Dominion law that fixed the qualification of candidates for the Dominion Parliament, or the disqualification of candidates. It was said that the Act of 1872 was in force, because it speaks in the present—that it speaks now to all Provinces affected by it. That is true so far as regards the construction of Statutes, for laws always speak in the present. But it only speaks to the Provinces intended to be under its control, or governed by it, and those were the Provinces which formed the Union in 1872, when the Act was passed. It cannot speak to Provinces which were not in the Union, and which hardly contemplated entering it; and upon all these grounds I hold that the Act of 1872 was not in force in Prince Edward Island at the late Dominion Elections. Hon. gentlemen opposite take a different view of the question. I say there may be something in the view which they hold; it is a question open to argument, and it is the bounden duty of Parliament to obtain the very highest legal adjudication upon it in order that the law may be settled and determined. It may be argued further, and I think with some propriety, that although this Parliament has the power, by virtue of the law of Parliament, to declare that a sitting member who occupies a seat in Parliament is disqualified for personal reasons, such as holding a Government office, being a minor or a lunatic, or something of that kind; but I deny that, although this Parliament has the power to declare vacant a seat in Parliament, it has not the power to do anything else, to declare that any other person shall occupy the seat. Parliament has the power to purge itself, but it rests with the people to say who shall occupy seats in Parliament. Now, I pointed out, when I moved in this matter some months ago, many cases in which Parliament had called upon and directed the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to amend the return, and in every single one of them it was the majority candidate that was declared entitled to the seat, and the returns were so amended; and I think I can challenge hon. gentlemen opposite to point out a single instance in which Parliament was ever called upon to amend a return so as to give the minority candidate the seat. The power and jurisdiction of Parliament was never invoked to give a seat to a man whom the returning officer did not declare elected, and the people at the polls did not elect. I referred the House to the Beauharnois, Kent, Oxford, Gaspé, Bagot, Essex, Lennox and Addington, and

Muskoka cases, and in every one of them the returns were amended by the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery, at the Table of the House, and in every one of them the man ultimately got the seat whom the people said should have the seat by their votes, and he was declared entitled to the seat accordingly. We here simply did what the returning officer ought to have done. It may be said that if we had the power then to do that, we have the power here to do so, because it was the duty of the returning officer to declare the minority candidate elected. I say, no; it is only by virtue of the law of Parliament, and not by virtue of a Statute; it is only—if I may use the expression—by virtue of the common law of Parliament, that Parliament assumes jurisdiction and authority, and directs the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to amend the returns and give the majority candidate the seat. The hon. gentleman will search in vain among the authorities for a single authority to show that the minority candidate was ever ordered by Parliament to occupy the seat. It may be said that the Act of 1872 gives us that power here; but I say it does not. The Act of 1872 gives the returning officer the power, under certain circumstances, where it is in force, to return the minority candidate; but it gives no other person or body the power. Are we to be asked now to assume the power of doing what Parliament never has done, give the seat to the minority candidate, because the returning officer has not done his duty? No. That power is the creature of the Statute, and must be exercised in strict accordance with the provisions of the Statute; and we cannot in Parliament assume to ourselves the duty of doing that which the returning officer ought to have done. This was done in the other case because it was the law of Parliament, and it cannot be done in this case because it is not the law of Parliament, and we cannot make the law of Parliament by a mere resolution of the House. Dwaris, Potter's edition, lays this down very clearly on pages 612 to 620, the doctrine that Parliament cannot acquire power, or jurisdiction, or authority, by merely passing a resolution, that such shall be the case. I have said about all I intended to say on this question; I have pointed out that, according to my view of the law, Dr. Robertson, on the 13th of June last, was qualified to be elected a candidate for this Parliament. I have pointed out that according to my reading of the Statute of the Island, and of our disqualification Act, Dr. Robertson was not disqualified, because the Local Legislature required him to do two things, one only of which he did do, and that he was not, therefore, entitled to the seat or to be called a member of the Legislative Assembly; the second was, that he was to take the oath prescribed by section seventy-five of the Local Act. I have pointed out that the Act of 1872 could not, by any possibility, be in force, for the reasons already given; and that, as to the Act of 1873, it was very doubtful whether it was in force, because, although, in one of the clauses it says, that it shall apply to all the Provinces then forming the Union, and which subsequently joined the Union, it was an Act passed before the Island joined the Union, and that the Island was not bound by that legislation. I have pointed out that it is very doubtful whether the Union Act of 1873 was in force in the Island, for precisely the same reason; that this Parliament has no power, without the assent and consent of the Island Legislature, to make its provisions applicable to the Island. If either of these propositions are correct—I care not which—then the report of the Committee cannot be adopted, because Mr. McDonald is not entitled to the seat. I do not mean to say, I lay down the rule dogmatically, that this is the law, and that there cannot be any doubt about it. I know that there is some doubt about it. I know that lawyers differ on this subject; that the ablest lawyers on the other side of the House have taken a contrary opinion; and that some of them, from their own expressed determination, have done so with great reluctance, and after great hesitation, and after considerable doubt. I know that some lawyers on this side of the House take a different opinion. We have a difference of opinion in the Committee; and we have a difference of opinion in the House, as we are aware from the observations of the hon. member for Sherbrooke; and as there is a difference of opinion in the House, I think it is the duty of the Government, and of Parliament, and of every man who desires to see the law of the land properly interpreted, and properly administered, to see that we have a proper interpretation of the law of the land. Now, I ask, without the slightest reflection on the honesty, on the integrity, or upon the good faith of every hon. gentleman within the range of my voice now, if they expect to get a clear and sound exposition of the law with regard to these complicated Statutes and legal propositions, which are perhaps difficult to be understood by the hon. members of this House, the majority of whom are laymen, unaccustomed to the construction of Statutes, in this manner; and I ask further, is it possible, that we can so divest our minds of our political leanings, our political prejudices, and our political sympathies, that we can rise above all these and bring to the consideration of this question, minds which are unbiassed and untrammelled by political consideration. I would fain hope so; but as I said in my opening remarks, I fear, that the cheers which greeted the two hon. gentlemen who first addressed the House, are a strong indication that I can hardly hope for that desirable result. If we cannot hope for that here, would it not be better to have a proper adjudication of this question. Sir, I may be right, I think I am right. If this report is adopted, and the court afterward decides that Dr. Robertson was entitled to the seat, and that Mr. McDonald was not so entitled, I ask you what position those members who have voted—as did the majority of the Committee—for sustaining this report, if the majority of the members so vote, will occupy? How will they reconcile with their duty, to their consciences, to their country, and to Parliament, the fact that they put a man with a minority of votes illegally and improperly in his seat in Parliament; and how, on the other hand, if the motion of the hon. gentleman should carry, would the gentlemen on this side of the House feel, if it afterwards turned out on judicial investigation, that Mr. McDonald was all along entitled to the seat? We would not be in a very comfortable frame of mind, I apprehend; and I therefore implore the House, and the Government especially, before they vote to maintain the report, that every means should be adopted, and every scheme resorted to, for the purpose of getting some authoritative exposition of the law bearing on this subject. I think I can suggest—as I did before the Committee—a mode by which justice can be done to all parties; by which the authority and power of Parliament may be vindicated, and the rights of the respective parties in this case may be secured, and secured satisfactorily. I think, Sir, I can point out a way by which justice can be done—and, at all events, whatever the decision may be, we will then have confidence in the decision—namely, the decision of the court of last resort in this country. By the Supreme Court Act, provision is made for the Governor in Council referring any matter to the consideration of the Supreme Court, and that court is bound by law to certify their opinion on the question so submitted; and upon that certificate the Government and House can act. I ask the House, in the interest of justice and fair play, to refer this question as to the disqualification of Dr. Robertson, as to whether or not the Act of 1872, or the Act of 1873, or the Act of Union, or either of them, were in force on the Island on the 13th of June, 1882. Although my views on this subject are strong, I am not so dogmatic—I have not such a profound opinion of my own legal attainments—as to say with absolute certainty that all the law laid down on this side of the House is right, and all laid down on the other side of the House is wrong.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron).

If I know myself, I want to see that fair play and justice is done to the parties affected; I want to have the interpretation of these laws from the highest authority which exists in this land. I propose to move that this matter be submitted to the Supreme Court, and I hope the Government will assent to so reasonable a proposition; and when we have such an interpretation, the rights of the parties will be disposed of by the House, with some assurance that we are disposing of them on legal and equitable principles. I move in amendment to the amendment:

That a difference of opinion exists in the Select Standing Committee of Privileges and Elections, and exists also in the House, as to the effect of the provisions of the Statute bearing on the Election for King's County, in the Island of Prince Edward.

That the spirit of recent legislation has been to refer questions affecting elections to the judgment of the courts.

That the Supreme Court is the court of last resort in election cases,—that the Supreme Court Act provides that any matter whatever may be referred to the Supreme Court for hearing and consideration by the Governor in Council, and that the court shall thereupon hear and consider the same, and certify their opinion thereon.

That, in the opinion of this House, it is desirable, that before a decision is voted by this House on the subject, steps should be taken to obtain the opinion of the Supreme Court on the question, whether under the law regulating the holding the election, James E. Robertson was, on the 13th June, 1882, disqualified to be elected a member of the House of Commons for the Electoral District of King's County, P. E. I.;—and 2nd. whether under the law the said James E. Robertson, or the said Augustine C. McDonald should have been declared elected and returned as member for the said Electoral District in the present Parliament by the returning officer, or whether the said election was null and void.

The Statute under which I move is section fifty-two of the Supreme Court Act.

Sir JOHN MACDONALD. Will the hon. gentleman be kind enough to read it?

Mr. CAMERON. Section fifty-two says:

"It shall be lawful for the Governor in Council to refer to the Supreme Court for hearing or consideration, any matter whatsoever as he may think fit; and the court shall thereupon hear and consider the same and certify their opinion thereon to the Governor in Council."

This enables the Governor in Council to submit the whole case to the Supreme Court.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I rise merely to say a word or two with reference to the amendment which has just been moved. I think if the hon. gentleman were to go into the precedents, he will find that his motion is altogether unsupported by the Statutes. The clause to which he has referred was taken from the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council Act, and he will find that that clause was put in for the purpose of enabling the Crown to ask the Judicial Committee for their opinion, to quiet the conscience of the Crown in matters in which the Crown is concerned. This is a matter connected with the representation of the people in Parliament, with which the Crown or the conscience of the Crown has no concern. It is quite impossible that the Supreme Court could entertain a question relating to the election of representatives in Parliament under this clause.

Mr. MACMASTER. I am glad that the hon. gentleman who last addressed the House from the Opposition side, concedes, at all events, that from his point of view there are some doubts upon this question; and I am glad that he further made the admission that the whole question was open to argument. We are so accustomed to hear hon. gentlemen opposite take the view that all their contentions, or nearly all of them, are right, that it is rather refreshing to find one of their number taking a position about which he, at all events, has some doubt. I, for myself, confess that I had considerable doubt as to this question at the outset. I was not familiar with the question. I was not aware of the true inwardness of the controversy, and I had, at all events, the best qualification for American juryship, inasmuch as I had not even read the papers. I, therefore, came perfectly fresh to the consideration of this question in the Committee, and I endeavored to bring what the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cameron) says we should all bring to the consideration of this question, a judicial spirit. I quite agree with him that it is proper that hon. members should bring to the consideration of this question a judicial spirit, but I was rather surprised to find, after he had invited the House to investigate this matter in a judicial spirit, that he should have suggested to refer it elsewhere for consideration. We are confronted here with a difficulty which is not of our own making. We have to look at the actual position, which is quite apart from conceding the general rule that the candidate having the majority of votes should be returned to Parliament by the returning officer. We are here confronted with an exceptional state of circumstances, and we must face them. I find that King's County (P. E. I.), is entitled to two members. I find that four candidates presented themselves, one of whom, Mr. McIntyre, obtained the highest number of votes; another, Dr. Robertson, who is a claimant for one of the seats, obtained the second highest number of votes; and Mr. McDonald, who is also a claimant for the seat, obtained the third highest number of votes. It seems that certain representations were made to the returning officer after the election to the effect that Mr. Robertson was not eligible or qualified to be returned to this House. The returning officer had some personal cognizance of the facts which were alleged by way of disqualification. Documents were put before him to show that Mr. Robertson was, in fact, disqualified to become a member of this House, and it is quite reasonable to infer, when so shrewd an advocate as the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cameron) admits, that there is a doubt about this question, that the returning officer, in the turmoil of an election, with both parties pressing to have their favorite candidate returned, should have considerable doubt as to what his duty should be under the circumstances. Now, what did the returning officer do under the circumstances? He did not make a partisan return; he did not return one candidate or the other; he returned the senior member for King's County, who now sits in this House—Mr. McIntyre, if I may mention him by name—and he made a special return, or what has been called a double return, with reference to the other two candidates who were highest on the list. He practically said: "I am unable to return either of these candidates, and I will make a return of the circumstances, and leave Parliament to decide for itself." In other words, he said: "I am confronted with a difficulty, and I will make a return of the circumstances, and leave Parliament to decide according to its wisdom." I say, that a returning officer making such a return did not do what was unfair, but exercised a reasonable discretion under the circumstances, and there is no ground for the aspersions cast upon him by some members of this House. Under the English Ballot Act, the rule is precisely the same as ours: the returning officer is enjoined to return the majority candidate; but I notice Mr. Cunningham, on Elections, says:

"Where a disqualified candidate obtains a majority of votes, it is thought to be a better and safer course to return such candidate, together with the candidate or candidates, according to the number of vacancies, who come next to him in the number of votes. [And there is no question that when there is any doubt as to the fact of the disqualification, it would be much safer to follow this course than either to return the candidate alleged to be disqualified, to the exclusion of another, or, on the other hand, to return another candidate to the exclusion of him alleged to be disqualified.]"

Again, I find that Rogers, a writer on Elections, says:

"In the Leominster case, under similar circumstances, the Sheriff returned both the qualified and unqualified candidates, and his conduct does not seem to have been reflected upon; and this, it is conceived, is on the whole the safest course for the returning officer to pursue as regards places in England and Scotland. Parliament, looking at the difficult position in which a returning officer, under such circumstances, would be placed—the question depending perhaps upon nice points of law or fact, and having to be decided upon the spur of the moment, during the turmoil of a contested election—would hardly, it is presumed, refuse to uphold the conduct of the returning officer."

So that the returning officer had the warrant of English precedent, at all events, for the course he adopted. Now, I do not pretend that he adopted the correct course. I contend that he should have adopted another course—that, according to the law, he should have returned the minority candidate under the circumstances; but while I say this, I maintain that he acted with a discretion which, under the circumstances, was not unreasonable. The remarks of the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) were based, mainly, on the assumption that the returning officer is in all cases bound to return the candidate having the majority of votes. That is the rule undoubtedly; but there may be some special circumstances that take the case out of the general rule; and the question for us to consider is, are there any such circumstances in this case? I hold that such circumstances have been involved in this case as would warrant the returning officer in returning the candidate having the next highest number of votes. The whole question was referred to the Committee, and we have their finding on the law, and a complete statement as to the facts. The Committee make two main reports. They first report, as to the facts, that at the date at which Dr. Robertson was nominated to the House of Commons, he was a member of the Local House; and they find, as to the law, that being a member of the Local House, he was ineligible as a candidate for the House of Commons, and that furthermore, under the law, the votes cast for him were thrown away. They further find that under the law the returning officer was bound to return the candidate having the next highest number of votes. Now, what are we to do? I maintain that, having the law and the facts before us, the duty of this House is to do now what the returning officer, on a strict interpretation of the law, should have done in the first instance. If this House does what the returning officer should have done on the 26th of June, which was, I believe, the declaration day, I believe justice will have been done, and no complaint can fairly be made against the returning officer. As to Dr. Robertson being a member of the Local House, there can be no doubt whatever. There was a local Election; Dr. Robertson was nominated as a candidate on the 1st of May, and was elected on the 8th of May; his return was made to the Provincial Secretary on the 27th of May, and was published in the Royal Gazette of the Island on the 3rd of June; and, by all these steps, Dr. Robertson became the representative of the Fourth Electoral District of King's County in the Island Assembly. We next come to the dates of the Dominion nomination and Election, the 13th and the 20th of June. The contention of hon. gentlemen opposite is that Dr. Robertson resigned on the 12th of June, the day before the nomination, and was, therefore, qualified as a candidate for the Commons. I must modify that statement, because I now understand the hon. member for West Huron to argue that he never was a member of the Local House, whereas I understand the hon. member for St. John to argue that he was a member, and that he properly resigned. I might leave these two hon. gentlemen to settle their dispute between themselves, but I prefer to take up in turn the positions assumed by those hon. gentlemen. The hon. member for West Huron cited the Island Statute; he cited section seventy-five of 19 Vic., which provides that it shall be not only necessary for a member-elect of the Local Assembly to put in a property qualification at the time of his nomination, but necessary to re-swear to his property qualification before he takes his seat. I shall take the liberty of reading the section again:

"No person shall be capable of being elected a member for any Town and Royalty or district in this Island, unless he shall, for a period of at least twelve calendar months before the date of the writ for holding the election at which such person shall claim to be elected, have been in the seizin or possession of a freehold or leasehold estate within this Island of the value of fifty pounds, over and above all encumbrances that may affect the same; and shall, before he be presented to take his seat in the House of Assembly, take one of the oaths in the schedule of this Act prescribed for members, relative to a freehold or leasehold estate, as the nature of his qualification may require."

What is the meaning of that section? It is that in order that he may be qualified to be a candidate, or to be elected, he shall first have taken an oath that he has a certain property qualification; and, in order, further, as I interpret it, that the Island Assembly may be perfectly aware he has not become dispossessed of that property qualification, that Assembly made provision against his losing that qualification between the election and the time he may take his seat. I see nothing in that law that implies that a member-elect is not a member of the House until he takes this particular oath. I see nothing in it to conflict with our pretension that he is a member chosen and properly returned in the way provided by the law before he shall present himself to take his seat, and to take the oath of allegiance to his sovereign exacted from the member-elect. I find in the Island Statute another section that recognizes completely the principle that he is a member even before the first meeting of the Assembly after General Election. The Statute passed in 1876, section 18, says:—

"Any two members of the House of Assembly may notify the Lieutenant-Governor, under their hands and seals, of any vacancy arising subsequently to a General Election, and before the first meeting of the General Assembly thereafter, by reason of the death or acceptance of office of any member."

Here is a recognition of the competency of two members—I call them "elect," for the sake of convenience, as distinguished from members who have taken the oath—before they have taken the oath or their seat, to perform a certain executive act, as what?—as members of the Legislative Assembly. Here is the Island Statute itself recognizing these men as members. Under these circumstances, and I do not see how it can lie in the mouths of hon. gentlemen to say they are not members. But there is a further authority on this subject. Now, I think I may say, without a chance for successful contradiction, that in England, when a member is elected for the Commons, he is a member of that House after his election and return, even before he has taken the oath; and, as a matter of fact, some men have been elected and returned, and have been members of the House and have acted on the Committees, though they never took their seats. They were treated as members to this extent, that they could not free themselves from their office as members of the House without accepting the Chiltern Hundreds, which disqualified them by taking office under the Crown.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. MACMASTER. I will cite May's "Parliamentary Practice":

"But although a member may not sit and vote until he has taken the oath, he is entitled to all the other privileges of a member and is otherwise regarded both by the House and by the laws as qualified to serve until some other disqualification has been shown to exist. On the 11th of May, 1858, acting upon this precedent, the House added Baron Rothschild, who had now continued a member for eleven years without having taken the oaths, to the Committee appointed to draw up reasons to be offered to the Lords at a conference for disagreeing to the Lords amendments to the Oaths Bill; and on the 18th he was appointed one of the managers of the conference.

"In 1849 Baron Lionel Nathan de Rothschild had been a member for two sessions without having taken the oaths; when he accepted the Chiltern Hundreds. On the 27th June, a new writ was issued for the city of London, and he was again returned and continued to be a member without taking the oaths; but being again returned in succeeding Parliaments, he accepted the Chiltern Hundreds a second time in 1857, and on the 23rd July, a new writ was issued for the city of London, and he was for the fifth time returned. It is usual for members who have not yet taken the oaths, to sit below the bar; and care must be taken that they do not inadvertently take a seat within the bar, by which they would render themselves liable to the penalties and disqualifications imposed by the Statute."

The hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cameron) referred to a case in which a mayor was held not to be a mayor until he had taken the oath. In order that we may know the value of that decision we would require to have the charter of the municipal or other corporation that regulated the election of the mayor. If we had that charter before us we might find that it contained some special regulations to the effect that a man is debarred from performing any executive act as mayor until he has actually taken the oath; but without that act of incorporation we are utterly unable to appreciate the value of the decision the hon. gentleman has placed before us. The hon. member for Huron cited another case from Durriss on Statutes to prove that there must be a holding of office to complete the function and make a man a member. But the hon. gentleman omitted to cite the context of the Imperial Statutes therein referred to, from which it is evident that they refer to an appointive and not to an elective office; so that the case cited by the hon. gentleman does not apply.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. A Member of Parliament is not an officer.

Mr. MACMASTER. I think it is perfectly clear that Dr. Robertson was a member of the Prince Edward Island Assembly, and I must now proceed to the consideration of the other difficulty raised by the hon. member for St. John, as to whether Dr. Robertson did properly resign. Now, there is an initial enquiry as to whether he could resign at all, and with that question I propose to deal at the outset. I will cite again from May's "Parliamentary Practice," in which he lays down as an elementary rule:

"It is a settled principle of Parliamentary law that a member, after he is duly chosen, cannot relinquish his seat; and in order to evade this restriction, a member who wishes to retire accepts office under the Crown, which legally vacates his seat and obliges the House to order a new writ."

As, therefore, a member, once a member, cannot free himself from the office unless by some satisfactory relief or provision, we must look into the Prince Edward Island Statutes to see if we can find any way in which Dr. Robertson could have freed himself from his membership. The hon. member for St. John stated it was unfair for the hon. member for Sherbrooke to argue that the twenty-one days clause did not apply to this case—I call it the twenty-one days limitation clause, for the sake of convenience. But the hon. member (Mr. Weldon) frankly said that what applied to this case is the fifteenth section of the Prince Edward Island Statute of 1876. What is the fifteenth section? With the permission of the House I will read it. I ask the special attention of the House to it, because an important judicial decision has been based on a provision precisely similar in terms. Among the methods provided for resigning are, first, that the member shall put in his resignation while the House is sitting; next, that he shall send his resignation to the Speaker. Both imply that there is a Speaker to which the resignation can be sent directly or indirectly. Then comes the provision that no member shall tender his resignation while his election is being lawfully contested, or until the expiration of the time during which it may by law be contested for other grounds than corruption or bribery. Now that delay is twenty-one days as fixed by another section of the Statute. Now we come to the fifteenth section which the hon. member for St. John says applies to this case. That section is as follows:—

"If any member of the House of Assembly wishes to resign his seat in the interval between two Sessions of the General Assembly, and there is then no Speaker, or if such member be himself the Speaker, he may address and cause to be delivered to any two members of this House the declaration before mentioned, of his intention to resign, and such two members, upon receiving such declaration, shall forthwith notify the Lieutenant-Governor thereof, under their hands and seals, who is hereby empowered and required, within seven days after the receipt of such notification as aforesaid, to issue a writ for the election of a new member in the place of the member so notifying his intention to resign. And the member so tendering his resignation shall be held to have vacated his seat and ceased to be a member of the House."

Now, we have here the peculiar words :

"If any member of the House of Assembly wishes to resign his seat in the interval between two Sessions of the General Assembly."

What does that mean? Does it mean in the interval between two Sessions of the same Parliament, or does it mean in the interval between the end of one Parliament and the first Session of the next Parliament? Upon this head we have an important judicial decision rendered in the Province of Ontario; and I may remark that this Statute of 1876, of the Island of Prince Edward, seems to have been taken, word for word, from the Ontario Statute, 32 Vic., chap. 4. There are a few slight verbal differences, because it is the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery that issues the writ in the Province of Ontario, and it is the Lieutenant-Governor in the Province of Prince Edward Island; but with the exception as to the executive acts of these particular officers, these sections are precisely the same. This section fifteen is word for word as section twelve in the Ontario Act, 32 Vic. Now, a General Election took place, some years ago, in the Province of Ontario, at which my hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, was the successful candidate for the Local House. After the election he wished to resign, and he sent his resignation to two members of the Local House, and these two members called on the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery to issue his writ, but he refused to issue his writ, and took the ground that he could not do so. They proceeded by a mandamus, or some other summary proceeding, against him, and the matter came up for adjudication before the hon. Mr. Justice Wilson, and here is what he says :

"As a rule, the member of Parliament elected or fully installed, cannot renounce his election or resign his seat of his own mere motion. It is a trust not for himself but for the public benefit.

"If there be a voluntary resignation, it must be made under the authority of a statute.

"In this Province, the Statute 32 Vic., chap. 4, sec. 10, has provided for the resignation by members of the Legislative Assembly :—

"1. By their giving notice in their places in the Assembly, of their intention to resign.

"2. By their delivering to the Speaker a declaration in writing of their intention, under their hands and seals, made before two witnesses, either during a Session or in the interval between two Sessions; or under sec. 12.

"3. By their delivering the declaration to any two members of the House, in case there is no Speaker, and in case the resignation is made in the interval between two Sessions.

"These two Sessions mean, no doubt, two Sessions of the same Parliament or Assembly, or, at all events, refer to a period when there is a Speaker. There is no other case of a voluntary resignation provided for, or, what is the same thing, there is no other mode by which a resignation can be made or completed, than by one of these three methods specifically pointed out."

Now, these are precisely the three methods provided in Prince Edward Island. It is admitted by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon), and it cannot be controverted, that the first two do not apply, and so it was only under the third method that there could be any possible ground for contending that he could resign before the meeting of the Legislature. But in this case, Mr. Speaker, there was no meeting of the Legislature; the Legislature of Prince Edward Island did not meet until the month of March this year, so that it was not possible for Dr. Robertson to have sent in the resignation of his membership in the Local House, even if he had so wished, up to the time of the General Election for the House of Commons. Now, in the case to which I refer, called the Election for the West Riding of Durham, the hon. Judge upheld the position that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery took, and he determined that the hon. gentleman who now leads the Opposition in this House with so much shrewdness and ability, able and distinguished lawyer though he is, had been in that case mistaken in his law and that that resignation could not be made. In the face of that I do not expect that hon. gentleman at this time will stand up against the decision of the courts in his own case, and pretend, as the hon. member for St. John has contended, that there could be a resignation under the fifteenth section. But this is another little difficulty that I leave to the two hon. gentlemen to settle between themselves. I may say here, as a corollary to what I have said, that the only chance for Dr. Robertson to have got free from his membership in the Local House, was one that he would not voluntarily accept—death, or secondly, by accepting some office under the Crown; but in no other way could he get free from his membership in the Local House until the Assembly met and elected a Speaker. If the Local House had met within twenty-one days after the return of the writ, he could not even then have resigned before the 22nd June—too late to be eligible for the Commons candidature. But as it did not meet, the twenty-one days clause cannot be made to apply, and the result is that under the actual circumstances existing in this case, he could not make a legal resignation, and never did make a legal resignation, and so far as I can see, he is a member of the Legislative Assembly to this day. But it is not necessary to go that length. I am perfectly aware that the Attorney-General of Prince Edward Island took the ground that this alleged resignation, that Dr. Robertson sent to two members of the House, and that they kept in their pockets until after it was perfectly certain that he had a majority of the votes—I know that the Attorney-General took the ground, that in order that that resignation should be valid, it ought to have been sent into the Lieutenant-Governor, who would then have issued the writ. That view is quite correct, provided Dr. Robertson could resign by that method, but I deny that he could resign at all. In process of time, when that resignation was sent in to the Lieutenant-Governor, the writ did issue. All I have to say with regard to that, is that, in my humble opinion, the Attorney-General was mistaken in his law, just as the hon. leader of the Opposition was mistaken in his law with regard to the case of the West Riding of Durham. I take it for granted that the Attorney-General of Prince Edward Island, whom, I believe, is an able jurist and an experienced Parliamentarian, had not in all probability read the case relating to the West Riding of Durham. Had he read it he might have taken a different view, but the view he may have taken is not material to the decision of the issue in this case. Now, if the position is clear—and I have endeavored to make it clear—that on the 13th of June last, Dr. Robertson was a member of the Local Legislature of Prince Edward Island, and that he could not resign, he was a candidate for the House of Commons while a member of the Local House, and he was elected to the House of Commons—I use the word elected in the ordinary conventional sense—while being a member of the Local House. What is the effect of this? Now, to make the matter as plain as I am able, we have a Statute in force in Canada, passed in the year 1872, which says, that in any Province of the Dominion in which they have passed an Act that a member of the House of Commons shall not be eligible to sit in the Legislative Assembly of that Province, a member of the Legislative Assembly of that Province shall not be eligible for a seat in the House of Commons. The Statute of 1872 says: We will give reciprocity of prohibition if you prohibit us from going into your Assembly, we will prohibit you from coming into ours. But that Statute says more; it says that: in the event of any member of a Legislative Assembly being a candidate and getting a majority of the votes, the returning officer shall throw those votes away and shall declare the candidate having the next highest number of votes to be properly elected. Now, here is the expression of the Statute, and if that Statute is binding and the law of the land, the returning officer has no discretion :

"2. If any such member of a Provincial Legislature shall, notwithstanding his disqualification as in the preceding section mentioned, receive a majority of votes at any such election, such majority of votes shall be thrown away, and it shall be the duty of the returning officer to return the person having the greatest number of votes, provided he be otherwise eligible."

Hon. gentlemen may talk about judicial or ministerial power, but it is no use wasting idle terms, because there are the plain words of the English language which say that if this provision is applicable to the election, the returning officer shall throw away the votes thus given, and shall return the candidate having the next highest number of votes. The hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cameron) frankly recognized that position, and said if the Statute of 1872 is in force, I admit the returning officer should return the minority candidate. In that respect, again, the hon. gentleman is in conflict with the hon. member for the city and county of St. John (Mr. Weldon), who warmly declared against the great injustice it would inflict on the electors of King's County, if that county should be disfranchised, as he held the House was about to disfranchise it. With clearer and better judgment, the hon. member for Huron said, if that is the law and if it is applicable, then the returning officer should have returned the minority candidate. I have spoken of the Statute of 1872. Let me see if that Statute applies to Prince Edward Island. First, as to its special provisions, we find that, in 1876, the Island Legislature passed a Statute in which they enacted reciprocity of prohibition; in which they said that no member of the House of Commons shall be eligible to sit in the Local Assembly. Thus the Island, by its legislation, created the state of affairs that brought into operation as applying to it the Statute of 1872. The hon. gentleman argues, how can it be possible that a Statute passed by the Dominion Parliament in 1872 can have any relation to a Statute passed in 1876 in Prince Edward Island? It is well known to all legal gentlemen here—and as hon. members opposite have appealed to the laity in this House, I may be permitted to read a section from the Interpretation Act that I would not otherwise read, that a law once enacted on the Statute-book is constantly speaking:

"The law is to be considered as always speaking, and whenever any matter or thing is expressed in the present tense the same is to be applied to the circumstances as they arise, so that effect may be given to each Act, and every part thereof, according to its spirit, true intent, and meaning."

The Interpretation Act is the lamp by the light of which our Statutes must be read. The Act of 1872 was in full force, waiting for—what? Waiting for circumstances to arise in the different Provinces of the Dominion, by which it would be put into operation. While the Act of 1872 was thus speaking, Prince Edward Island passed its Statute in the face of that Act, and accorded reciprocity of prohibition. I believe the junior member for Queen's was Attorney-General of the Island at that time.

Mr. DAVIES. No.

Mr. MACMASTER. Then I have been misinformed.

Mr. DAVIES. My colleague was.

Mr. MACMASTER. At all events, the hon. gentleman was Premier, or was occupying some distinguished position in the Councils of the Island.

Mr. DAVIES. I was leading the Opposition at the time.

Mr. MACMASTER. The position of the leader of the Opposition is only second to that of the leader of the Government, and no doubt the hon. member for Queen's exercised as wholesome an influence as he would have done as leader of the Government. We have not been informed that such a law was passed against his protest, but there was placed on the Statute-book of Prince Edward Island a law by which the hon. gentleman brought the Islanders within the operation of the Statute of 1872. I think it is perfectly plain, if the Statute of 1872 is to have application and to be in force, that the returning officer should have thrown away the votes cast for Dr. Robertson and have returned Mr. McDonald. But a question has been raised here as to whether the Act of 1872 was in force. The matter is put in a plausible and popular sort of way; it is asked, how can it be said that a Statute passed in 1872 can have any bearing on Prince Edward Island, since the Island was not admitted into the Dominion until 1873? At first sight that position is an exceedingly staggering one, and no doubt many people will find great difficulty in answering the question. But there is an answer to it, and an answer that I think is perfectly conclusive. Prince Edward Island came into Confederation in 1873. Before it entered the Union a Statute of the Parliament of Canada was passed, by the terms of which it is provided that:

"All the Acts of the Parliament of Canada, passed in the present or any former Session, and relating to the following subjects, or any of them, that is to say: the Executive Government and the several departments thereof; the Civil Service of the Dominion; the Legislature and Legislation; the Senate and House of Commons, including the proceedings therein, and the vacating of seats of members of the House of Commons, and the filling of vacancies—"

And other matters which I will not recite—

"shall, in so far as they are not consistent with the provisions of the British North America Act, 1867, or with those of the Order of Her Majesty in Council, admitting the said Colony into the Union or Dominion, apply to and be in force in the said Colony or Province of Prince Edward Island, as if it had formed a part of Canada when the said Acts were respectively passed."

The terms of this Statute of May, 1873, are, in the plain vernacular, these: that Prince Edward Island, then about to come into the Confederation, shall be subject to all the laws then existing previously passed by the Parliament of Canada with respect to a certain set of subjects, and should apply as effectually to the Island as if the Islanders were in the Union at the time they were passed. It seems to me that if the framers had desired to make an Act retroactive, they could not have done so more effectually. They made it so retrospective that it extends to the Island, not only the Statutes that were passed in 1873 and subsequently to that, but all Statutes previously passed by the Dominion Parliament in so far as they are of general application to all the Provinces which first entered into Confederation. A question was raised by an hon. gentleman as to whether the term "House of Commons" should be construed to include a regulation of the nature provided by the Act of 1872. When we take up the Act of 1872 we find the very title of it is "An Act to compel members of the Local Legislature in any Province where dual representation is not allowed, to resign their seats before becoming candidates for seats in the Dominion Parliament." If we look at the Confederation Act we find "Dominion Parliament" is defined, and that it includes the Senate and the House of Commons. So there can be no doubt whatever that the Act of 1873 is wide enough in its terms to include the Statute of 1872, the application of which is doubted by hon. gentlemen opposite. It is said how can that Act of May, 1873, have application to Prince Edward Island, inasmuch as it did not come into the Union until the June following. It has application by its distinct terms, and it is retrospective in its effects. It does not lie in the mouth of any hon. gentleman in this Assembly, who passed the Act of 1873, to question its retrospective effect or its constitutionality. The Acts of this Legislature can only be set aside and disallowed by the Sovereign, or, judicially, by the courts. The Union Act of 1873, being in full force and effect in every respect whatever, and retrospective in its terms, extended past Statutes of Canada to the Island; and its constitutionally cannot be questioned in this Assembly. I am aware that hon. gentlemen have raised another difficulty, which is this: They say that the Union Act of 1873 provides that it shall be only binding on the Island of Prince Edward, when it is not inconsistent with the provisions of the British North America Act, or an Order in Council, that may be made by Her Majesty, with reference to the admission of Prince Edward Island into Canada. Now, on examination it will be found that temporary provisions made for the management of the Island of Prince Edward, just after it came into the Union, were almost precisely the same as those made for the management of the old Provinces, on the formation of Confederation. The forty-first section of the British North America Act provides, with regard to the old Provinces, as follows:—

“Until the Parliament of Canada otherwise provides, all laws in force in the several Provinces at the Union, relative to the following matters or any of them, namely, qualification or disqualification—”

I call the attention of hon. gentlemen especially to these words:

“Qualification and disqualification of persons to be elected to sit or vote as members of the House of Assembly, or the Legislative Assemblies of the several Provinces, etc., shall respectively apply to the election of members to serve in the House of Commons for the same several Provinces.”

Now, we find that the British North America Act provides that Election Laws in existence in the old Provinces, just preceding Confederation, shall have application in the Confederacy, until fresh laws are made applicable to the new state of affairs; and you will observe the words “qualification and disqualification of members” are used in the British North America Act. When we take up the Order in Council, under which Prince Edward Island was, under the 146th section of the British North America Act, admitted into the Confederacy some years afterwards, we find that these words “disqualification of members” are entirely omitted. Now, here is what the Order in Council says, regarding the admission of Prince Edward Island:

“All laws, which, at the date of this Order in Council, relating to the qualification of any person—”

There is not a word about disqualification.

“To be elected to sit or vote as a member of the House of Assembly of the said Island, etc., shall apply to the election of members to serve in the House of Commons for the electoral districts of the said Island of Prince Edward.”

Now, the point I wish to make with regard to this, is as follows:—That whereas, when the four old Provinces were united to form the Dominion of Canada, the old Election Laws were confirmed in the different Provinces, it was specifically mentioned that these laws should continue, not only as to the method of voting, &c. but as to the qualification and disqualification for candidature, existing under the Local Laws of the several Provinces. I direct the special attention of hon. members to the fact, that when the Island of Prince Edward came in, the word “disqualification” is excluded from the terms of the Order in Council; which, according to my view, goes to show that the high contracting parties had in view the fact that, in the meantime, the Dominion of Canada had made some legislative restrictions with regard to eligibility for the House of Commons. It seems to me as if the contracting parties foresaw this and said: We cannot exactly agree to have enacted what the old Provinces did with regard to the qualification and disqualification of candidates. Why? Because certain Statutes have been, meantime, passed by the Parliament of Canada, which provide certain disqualifications, and we must recognize these disqualifications; and in the arrangements with Prince Edward Island, we must eliminate the word “disqualification” from the terms. In other respects the provisions with regard to the admission of Prince Edward Island into the Confederation were practically temporary provisions, until Prince Edward Island could be brought fully within the purview of the Dominion Laws. Now, the Union Act of 1873, which is retrospective in its terms, makes the Statute of 1872 apply to and in force in Prince Edward Island, and if it is in force there cannot be a doubt that the conclusions of the Committee are correct. If it is not in force, it is for hon. gentlemen opposite to show how such is the case. Upon them is the burden of this argument, and it is no wonder that my hon.

friend from Huron felt himself in doubt, for his undertaking was a very serious one indeed. That Act (1872) must be in force, unless it is superseded by the Dual Election Act of 1873, or by the General Election Act of 1874. Hon. gentlemen are aware that in 1873, another Act was passed with reference to Elections to the House of Commons, in which it was provided that no member of the Local Assembly should be eligible for a seat in the House of Commons. Now, there is a difference between this Act and the Act of 1872. The Act of 1872 says to the Local Assemblies: “If you prohibit us going to your Assemblies, we prohibit you coming to ours;” and the Act of 1873 says: “Whether you prohibit us or not going to your Assemblies, we prohibit you coming to ours.” That is the difference between the two Acts; but there is no contradiction between these two Dual Election Acts; they both apply to different series of circumstances, and are both susceptible of operation side by side. One (1872) is a Special Act relating to Dual Elections, the other (1873) is a General Act relating to the same subject. One may have application to-day as regards Prince Edward Island, because it has prohibited our members going there; and the Dual Election Act of 1873 may have application as regards one of the other Provinces, that has not prohibited us going there, so the two Acts are perfectly reconcilable, and may exist side by side. The 1873 Act has a general sphere of operation; the 1872 Act has a special one. My hon. friends have argued, that the Act of 1872 could not be in force, under any circumstances, having been passed before the Union Act of 1873. The hon. member for Huron, since Recess, very circumspcctly has taken up the ground, that the Act of 1873 relating to dual elections could not be enforced as regards Prince Edward Island, because it was passed before the admission of Prince Edward Island. The hon. gentleman, before Recess, was not so precise with regard to the objection on this score; and the hon. gentleman from St. John did not take very strong ground with regard to that matter. I think the hon. gentlemen opposite have changed their minds. The hon. member from Huron now thinks, that the Dual Election Act of 1873 is not in force as regards Prince Edward Island; but what did this hon. gentleman say in Committee. I do not know if I am in order in referring to the proceedings before the Committee; but if I may be permitted to refer to the report of the proceedings of the Committee, I will do so. I think that the motion moved by the hon. member for Queen's County (Mr. Davies) recognizes the fact that the Act of 1873, relating to dual elections, was in force as regards Prince Edward Island, notwithstanding the fact that it was passed by the Parliament of Canada, before the Terms of Union were consummated. Here are the terms of this motion:

“Be it therefore resolved, that in the opinion of this Committee, the said James E. Robertson was not a member of the House of Assembly of Prince Edward Island on the 13th day of June last, within the meaning of the Disqualification Act, 36 Vic., cap. 2, 1873, and consequently was eligible for election to the House of Commons of Canada.”

In other words, that this case did not come within the operation of the Disqualification Act, and consequently he was perfectly qualified to be a candidate for the House of Commons of Canada. I think if the hon. gentleman will analyze his resolution he will find that it implies a recognition of the disqualifying Act of 1873. Of course I cannot expect him to admit that now, as it would be inconvenient for him to do so, but I think he will find a recognition of it in his motion, and as this Act was passed before Prince Edward Island became a member of Confederation, the objection which the hon. gentleman raises to the application of these Acts entirely falls to the ground. I come now to the next ground of objection, which is the gravamen of the whole matter. The hon. gentleman who moved the amendment contended that the Act of 1874 repealed the Act of 1872. He says that the General Election Act of 1874 provides that the candidate having the majority of votes must be returned, and that the provisions of that Act are inconsistent with the Act of 1872, which enjoins the returning officer to throw away the votes of the majority candidate, if he is disqualified, and to return the minority candidate. I admit that that is a fair and arguable position to take. But let us compare the Act of 1874 with the Act of 1872. The Act of 1874 is a General Election Act intended to have application to general cases, while the Act of 1872 is a Special Act intended to refer to special cases—cases which, as it were, are taken out of the category of what might be called general regulations referring to elections. We must also look to the association with which we find the Act of 1872 when it was passed. The hon. gentleman says that it is repugnant to the Act of 1874, but the Act of 1872 was put on the Statute-book, and was operated side by side with the Election Acts of the old Provinces of Canada, all of which provided that the majority candidate was to be returned. Therefore the Act of 1872 was passed at the time when the general law in all the Provinces then in Confederation was that a majority candidate should be returned, and it was passed to provide for a special case, namely, the case in which a disqualified candidate should present himself for election. My hon. friends opposite have cited from two or three authors with regard to the construction of Statutes. I will take the liberty of citing from a late author—Maxwell on Statutes—and I do so with reference to the effect of the General Acts of 1873 and 1874, and the Special Act of 1872:

“When the latter enactment is worded in affirmative only, without any negative expressed or implied, it does not take away the earlier law. The governing principle in all these cases is to construe the acts, if possible, as reconcilable and capable of co-existence.”

Now, the point I put is this: If the Act of 1872 was capable of co-existence with a General Act prevailing in 1872, by which the majority candidate could be returned, why should it be repugnant to or incapable of co-existence with an Act passed in 1874, which said the same thing? Mr. Maxwell says again—and this has a very strong bearing on the case:

“A general later law does not abrogate an earlier special one. It is presumed to have only general cases in view, and not particular cases which have already been provided for by a special or local Act, or what is the same thing, by custom. Having already given attention to the particular subject, and provided for it, the legislature is reasonably presumed not to intend to alter that special provision by a subsequent general enactment, unless it manifests that intention in explicit language. It is therefore, a received maxim of statutory interpretation that generalia specialibus non derogant. The general statute is read as silently excluding from its operation the cases which have been provided for under the special one.”

If we were to search the books indefinitely it would be difficult to find a quotation more applicable to the case in hand. He says that when the Legislature has dealt with regard to special cases it is not presumed, when it again makes a general law, to interfere with the special cases which are provided for. I argue in this case, and I submit that the argument would be sustainable before any court of justice, that the General Act of 1874 is only intended to have in view general cases, and that it has no reference whatever to the special contingency which might not occur more than once in fifty years, and which are provided for in the Special Act of 1872. The Dual Election Act of 1873 is also a General Act as regards the Special Act of 1872, and the same reasoning applies with reference to their operation. Again, if there was any doubt about the application of the Act of 1872, how is it that it was not specially repealed? Hon. gentlemen opposite were in power when the General Election Act of 1874 was passed, and if there was any doubt about the application of this Act of 1872, how was it that when they made a general law they did not take away these doubts? If you look at the Act of 1874 you will find that they repealed other Acts. It says:

“The Act passed by the Parliament of Canada in the 36th year of Her Majesty's reign intitled: An Act to make temporary provision for the election of members to serve in the House of Commons, is hereby repealed.”

Mr. MACMASTER.

There is not a word here with regard to the repealing of the Statutes of 1872 and 1873, and that for the best of reasons, namely, that these Statutes made provision for circumstance which might occur at rare intervals, but which did not come within the grasp of a General Act having reference to the General Elections throughout the country. The hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon) said that the votes given for a candidate could not be thrown away without notice. I admit that that is the rule in England. But the hon. gentleman will look in vain for a Statute in England by which in express terms the officer is enjoined to throw them away. The English books and the English decisions take the view that if there be a real disqualification existing at the time of nomination or election, it is but fair and reasonable that it should be brought to the notice of the electors, in order that they might not throw away their votes. A great deal of false sentiment and vacant platitude has been wasted over this question of the notice to the electors of King's County. The electors of King's County knew of the disqualification. They are presumed to have known the law, and if they did not know it, they knew the facts, because they had elected Dr. Robertson to the Local Legislature only a few weeks before. It was their duty, then, to be on their guard, and to satisfy themselves as to whether he was competent to be elected to the House of Commons. There was a strange negligence on the part of the friends of Dr. Robertson on that occasion. Was it fitting for them to nominate him as a candidate a fortnight before the nomination, and to permit him to walk about all that time without handing in his resignation if he could resign? I was in the same plight as Dr. Robertson in one respect. I was a member of the Legislature of Ontario when my friends in Gengarry thought proper to nominate me for the House of Commons. Do you think I allowed them to risk their votes upon a disqualified candidate? Do you think it would have been proper for me to have kept back my resignation until the very day before nomination? Would it have been just or fair treatment to the electorate to have done so? No; I think not. So strong was my feeling on that point that before a single name was on my nomination paper, not only had I sent in my resignation, but I had the acceptance of it in my pocket. I say that the good faith to the electorate required that that should be done, and good faith to the electors of King's County required that Dr. Robertson should have sent in his resignation before he did, if he could legally resign, in order that the electors of that county should not have been conducted to a false issue. Hon. gentlemen may make such inuendoes as they please; but facts are more eloquent than words. One hon. member enquires why the Committee did not ask Dr. Robertson why his resignation was not sent in at an earlier date? Why, his resignation was sent in on the very eve of nomination day.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). On the morning of the day of nomination.

Mr. MACMASTER. Yes, on the morning of the day of nomination or thereabouts. Well, what do we find? We find that the two members to whom he sent his resignation kept it in their pocket until the 7th or 8th of July following. When they found that Dr. Robertson had a majority of the votes, they sent in his resignation, dated the 26th or 27th June, but the post mark upon the document bears the date of the 8th of July, and there is no distance on that Island so great that it would take that length of time to reach its destination, so that the case is not entirely free from suspicion; and, judging by what occurred on a previous occasion with regard to another candidate on Prince Edward Island, it appears that had Dr. Robertson been unsuccessful, he might not have claimed to have sent in a resignation, and these gentlemen to whom he sent it could have very conveniently returned it to him, because they had not communicated it to the Lieutenant-Governor. I fear that the actual circumstances indicate that this was the case of a candidate with a card in the sleeve; that the friends of Dr. Robertson were ready for either issue, as Virgil puts it; that it was a case of "heads I win, tails you lose." However, it is not necessary to go into that, nor did I intend to do so; but when I found hon. gentlemen opposite talking about the rights of the people being outraged, I thought it well to point out to them that they are not free from the taunt that everything was not as pure as Cæsar's wife, with regard to the candidature of Dr. Robertson. Now, I have endeavored to put this case fairly before you; I have endeavored to show that the report of the Committee was correct as to the fact that Dr. Robertson was, as a matter of fact, a member of the Local Assembly, and that he could not resign under the circumstances, and that he could not be and was not legally a candidate. I have further endeavored to show, as a matter of law, that by the Union Act by which Prince Edward Island came into the Confederation, the Act of 1872 was retrospectively applied to that Island, was in full force and effect there, and was brought into operation, as regards this particular case, by the Statute of 1876, passed in the Island Legislature. If this be so, the argument is complete. Dr. Robertson was disqualified, and if that Statute of 1872 is applicable, there is no escape from the position that the votes given for him must be declared to have been thrown away, and Mr. McDonald must be declared to have been elected. That would have been the duty of the returning officer on a strict reading of the law, though I do not blame him for not being able, on the spur of the moment, to interpret the carnival of Statutes that beset him. It is unfortunate that the majority of the electors of King's County should not have their choice on the floor of this House. I freely subscribe to this—that the choice of the people should be here; but the people made their choice unwisely, and, like all other people, they must abide by their choice. They made a bad choice—they chose a disqualified candidate, and they threw away their votes by their own act. Now, I have heard it asked, and by some of my hon. friends on this side of the House, whether it would not be possible to void the election and run it over again? I would be very glad to see that result attained, if it were practicable; but if the law of 1872 is applicable at all, it is applicable in its entirety, and that portion of it which excludes Dr. Robertson from this House and seats Mr. McDonald here, is just as binding upon us as the other sections of this Act. It passes almost as a proverb that the House of Commons has power over its own members. Well, I am free to concede that; but I ask hon. members of this House, if the law is plain and clear that Mr. McDonald is entitled to the seat, under the circumstances, what power is there in this House to overturn the Statutes of the land and to say that they shall not be obeyed? Is this House constituted by itself, or are there three branches of the Legislature? It took three branches of the Legislature to make the Act of 1872; are we prepared to say that one branch can abrogate it? Are we prepared to say, by the fiat of this House, that we can set aside that Act? I do not think we can. As I said, that Act is binding upon us. We must recognize it. If it is in existence it is as binding upon us as upon the humblest subject in the land, and I think it would be a sorry day, not only for this House, but for the country, if the time arrives when the House of Commons, by its own mere motion, could say: "Our powers of destruction are greater than our powers of creation, and that we can set aside, by a single Act, Statutes that require the action of the three branches of the Legislature to bring into existence." I think, further, it is just as necessary, though we are participators in the law making functions, that the law of the land should be as vigorously respected and recognized by us as by the humblest subjects. When they are not that equilibrium of justice, which is applicable to all, will be very rudely disturbed. In this case I had some regret, I must confess, in coming to this conclusion, but we were appointed as a Committee to act judicially in the matter.

Mr. MULOCK. Hear, hear.

Mr. MACMASTER. One of my hon. friends says "hear, hear." I believe he was not a member of the Committee and probably that accounts for his "hear, hear." The Committee went into this whole matter carefully from beginning to end, no point was ignored, and when a grave point was raised by the hon. member for Queen's County the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Cameron), suggested that an adjournment should take place until the following day, in order that time might be taken to consider it. I am sure my statement will be corroborated by the Chairman of the Committee, when I say the members of the Committee studied the case carefully with the view of arriving at a correct conclusion, and if the conclusion at which we have arrived be one that may not be acceptable to the majority of the electors of King's County, we can only regret it. We have endeavored to do our duty, and if this House finds we have correctly done our duty I hope it will have the courage of its opinion and confirm by its resolution the decision of the committee. I must say that this being the first time I have had the honor of addressing this House, I have, perhaps, not presented my views with the conscientiousness I should like to have presented them, but I feel I have been treated with the greatest indulgence by hon. members on both sides, and I beg, before taking my seat, to express my gratitude to you, Mr. Speaker, and the hon. gentlemen on both sides for the indulgence and sympathy extended to me.

Mr. GIROUARD. I have listened with great attention to the interesting speech of my hon. friend from Glengarry, and the loud applause with which his remarks have been greeted show how well his speech has been appreciated by hon. members. I have endeavored, within the last week or so, to give as much time as possible to the consideration of this case, since the report has been made by the Committee of this House, and I am sorry to say I find myself placed in a rather difficult position. Here we have three motions—one asking that this House should concur in the report of the Committee, or, in other words, that Mr. McDonald be declared elected; another, that Dr. Robertson be declared elected; and a third, that the whole subject be referred to the Supreme Court. Not one of these three motions meets my views. I am in favor of voiding the election and in doing so, I wish merely to respect the law of the land as the hon. member for Glengarry has said. My hon. friend has mentioned a great many points in which I agree with him. In the first place, I believe that the facts which have been returned by the Committee show beyond doubt that Dr. Robertson was a member of the Legislative Assembly of the Island on the nomination day in June last. I am not going to review those facts that have been dealt with at such great length by the hon. gentleman. I do not think further comment on them is necessary. I also agree with him that the Statute of 1872 and the Statute of 1873 concerning dual representation, apply to Prince Edward Island as much as to the other Provinces. As a lawyer, I must confess, however, that the Union Statute, as it has been called, of 1873, which was passed in anticipation of the Union of Prince Edward Island with the Dominion, is unconstitutional. I take it for granted that this Parliament has no right to make laws for a province or for a colony which is not represented in this Parliament—that we cannot for instance make laws for a colony like Newfoundland, which, I hope, will soon join the Confederation. Are we going, for one moment, to contend seriously that any colony which has joined Confederation, joined it on other terms than those agreed upon both by the Dominion and the Colony? The contrary proposition is to my mind so clear as to be beyond doubt. We find it laid down in the British North America Act, which says that all the laws of the Provinces shall remain in force until repealed by competent authority, and it makes no exception with regard to Election Laws. As I say, I am now expressing my opinion as a lawyer, but although it has been said we are discharging judicial functions, I am not prepared to say our functions are altogether judicial. We are discharging quasi judicial functions only under our Statutes and regulations. I assert we cannot put in question the constitutionality of any Statute after that Statute is passed. There is only one authority in the land capable of determining such constitutional questions. We all know that when, as in the case of a Bill introduced, a constitutional question is raised either in this House or in the Senate, we have to deal with it as a court of justice would. But the moment a constitutional question has been settled by the three branches of Parliament, the Commons, the Senate, and the Governor General, it would be unbecoming on the part of a Member of Parliament to set up his own opinion against the decision of these three branches. For these reasons, although, as I said, if I were preparing an opinion as a lawyer, or sitting as a Judge, I would have no hesitation in declaring that the Union Statute of 1873 was unconstitutional, and that we had no right to pass such a law with regard to a colony not represented in this Parliament, not a member of the Confederation. For the reason that in this House we must presume every Statute constitutional, I am willing to consider this case exactly as if coming from Quebec or Ontario. What is the position of the parties? The hon. member for Glengarry has given, I believe, a complete answer to the contention of hon. gentlemen opposite that the Statute of 1872 was repealed by the Statute of 1874. No such contention can, in my opinion, be maintained. The Statute of 1872 provides for a special case, the case of the disqualification or qualification of a member of the Legislative Assembly of a Province. The Statute of 1874 provides for all the general cases of elections. According to the principle which has been cited by hon. Members from Maxwell and from Hardcastle—I will not trouble the House, therefore, with repeating the quotations—general laws do not supersede special laws. For that reason I hold, that the Statute of 1874 did not supersede the Statute of 1872. There is another question, the main question in this case, which has only been referred to by the hon. member for Glengarry. In fact, it is the only serious question we can raise as members of Parliament. It is this: Does the Statute of 1873 concerning dual representation repeal the Statute of 1872, dealing with the same matter? I maintain that it does. The title of the Statute of 1872 is: "An Act to compel members of the Local Legislature in any Province where dual representation is not allowed, to resign their seats before becoming candidates for seats in the Dominion Parliament." The first clause provides exactly for the case mentioned in the title of the Bill; and then the second clause says, that "if any member of any Legislative Assembly"—mentioning the case stated in the first clause and in the title of the Bill—that in such case the returning officer shall throw away the votes; not a word is said about the election being void in that Statute. There was a very good reason for it; it was an impossibility to have an election under that Statute. A member of the Legislative Assembly was disqualified; therefore, the returning officer was bound to throw away the votes, and consequently an election of that disqualified member was an impossibility. But suppose the returning officer had not done his duty, and had returned a member so disqualified, what would have been the duty of this House? It would have been to perform exactly the duty of the returning officer, and to declare the member so ineligible, disqualified, and to give the seat to the other candidate. Now, let us look at the Statute of 1873, which deals again with the whole subject, not only with a portion of it. It is entitled "An Act to render Members of the Legislative Councils and Legislative Assemblies of the Provinces now included, or which may hereafter be included within the Dominion of Canada, ineligible for sitting or voting in the House of Commons of Canada." The first clause is a modification of the first clause of the Statute of 1872; it is not inconsistent, but it goes beyond it. The Statute of 1872 says that if the Local Legislature shall prohibit a member of this House from being a member of the Local Legislature, then a member of that Local Legislature shall not be eligible to a seat in this House. But the Statute of 1873 goes beyond that. Whether there is prohibition on the part of the Local Legislature or not, this Parliament declared in 1873 that no member of the Legislative Assembly shall be a member of the Dominion Parliament; and if so elected, "then his election shall be null and void." I say that that declaration, that nullification of the election in the Statute of 1873, is inconsistent with the powers given by the Statute of 1872 of throwing away the votes. If the returning officer has power to throw away the votes, the election is impossible and consequently there is no voiding of the election. But there are some other clauses in that Statute of 1873, which show that this Parliament at that time intended to deal with the whole subject of dual representation, and to repeal all former laws. The Statute of 1872 did not provide for any penalty for a member who, being so ineligible, should be returned, and who would act and vote in this House. Why was that not provided against in the Statute of 1872? Why was it mentioned that in case of a member so sitting and voting, he should not be subjected to a penalty? The Statute of 1873 says he shall incur a penalty of $2,000 for every vote. Why? It is very simple, because, under the Statute of 1872, it was impossible to have an election of a candidate so placed. The votes were thrown away by the returning officer, and if not thrown away by him, they would have been thrown away by this House. Therefore, the case of a member elected under those circumstances and sitting and voting in this House, was practically an impossibility, but under the Statute of 1873 he may be elected, illegally elected it is true, and for that reason he would be liable to the penalty. Then, in that Statute of 1873, we have another clause which is not to be found in the Statute of 1872, in order to make legislation upon the subject-matter perfect and complete, that is the case when a member of this House becomes a member of the Local Legislature. The law says, then, that his election shall be void. Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask if it is possible to find a Statute more complete on the subject-matter which we are discussing than that of 1873? And upon that I will take the liberty of referring to an authority which has been already quoted and is admitted in all courts of justice—Hardcastle on the construction of Statutes. After stating that in all these cases the repeal by implication of a former Statute by a subsequent Statute is always a point of difficulty, he says:

"The prior Statute would, I conceive, be repealed by implication if its provisions were wholly incompatible with a subsequent one."

I contend that is the case here, that the Statute of 1873 concerning dual representation is entirely incompatible with the Statute of 1872:

"Or if the two stated together would lead to wholly absurd consequences."

That is one branch of the case which I intended to allude to. The Statute of 1872 is intended to be passed only for the Provinces in the Confederation at the time of its enactment. The Statute of 1873 in expressed words is declared to extend not only to any Province now included, but also which may be hereafter included within the Dominion of Canada. If the Statute of 1872 does not apply by the intention of the Legislature to the new Provinces, and if the Statute of 1873 alone is to apply to the new Provinces, then we find that as far as the old Provinces are concerned, the returning officer will be empowered to throw away the votes, whereas in the new Provinces, conformable to the Statute of 1873, no such power would exist. Such a result is not reasonable. Then there is another case where the subsequent Statute repeals by implication the former Statute, Hardcastle says: "If the entire subject-matter were taken away by the subsequent Statute." That is exactly the position. I say that the Statute of 1873 has entirely dealt with the whole subject-matter, and consequently it repealed the Statute of 1872. For all these reasons I cannot vote for the motion asking that the seat be given to Dr. Robertson. I consider that Dr. Robertson was a disqualified candidate at the time of the last election, and for that reason is not entitled to a seat in this House. But it may be said that if the Statute of 1872, which gives power to the returning officer to throw away the votes, has been repealed by the Statute of 1873, then the Statute of 1874, which makes it imperative for the returning officer to return the candidate having the majority of votes, applies to the returning officer in this case and he should have returned Dr. Robertson instead of making a double return. I entirely concur with the writer cited by my hon. friend from Glengarry. I believe the English practice is the only consistent one, with a view of giving justice to all parties concerned. I believe in cases of that kind a double return should be made, and that the returning officer should not decide a case which is often very complicated, as this one appears to be. But even if the returning officer, as in this case, did not return Dr. Robertson, are we going to give him the seat while we have on the Statute-book the law of 1873, whereby he is disqualified from holding a seat in this House? No; we could not give him the seat. The next question is: whether the report of the Committee should be accepted? For the reason that the Statute of 1873 repealed the Statute of 1872 concerning dual representation, the Election is simply void. I have been astonished, during the discussion, that this point has not been more seriously alluded to. The hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Macmaster) in his able argument, complete as it was, in every respect, had only one word to say with respect to this point: whether the Statute of 1873 did repeal the Act of 1872, whether the Act of 1873 declared that the election of a candidate, so disqualified, shall be null and void only? How can an election be declared void if the election could not take place? It is a matter too clear to be susceptible of doubt. If I had any doubt on the point I certainly would not give it in favor of the report of the Committee, although that Committee is composed of men well known in the House and in the country, for their legal and Parliamentary learning. This is not a political or party question or a matter of sentiment. It would be natural that we should desire our old friend, whom we had here during four years of the old Parliament, to sit here during the present Parliament; but it is not a matter of feeling and sentiment; it is a matter of serious import. In a case like this, where the dearest privileges of the people are at stake, where their right to exercise the electoral franchise is in question, I believe, if there is any doubt, it is the duty of every member of this House, who appreciates free institutions and government by the people, to give the benefit of that doubt, not to our political friends, as we do pretty often on merely political questions, not to give it to any of the candidates, but to give the benefit of that doubt to the people whose mission it is to make Legislatures. Another motion has been made by the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cameron) asking that the case be referred to the Supreme Court. I am sorry I shall have to vote against that motion also. I believe we have admitted, by referring the question to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, that Parliament is seized of the whole subject-matter. If there is any doubt it will disappear by referring to May's "Parliamentary Practice." In the edition of 1873, May reviews the whole. In England they have a Statute from which our own Controverted Election Act of 1874 has been copied, providing that all election matters shall only be questioned before the courts. May says:

"A few words will suffice to explain the proceedings of the House, so far as its judicature is still exercised in matters of election. It being enacted by section 50 of the Election Petitions Act that no election or return to Parliament shall be questioned, except in accordance with the provisions of this Act, doubts were expressed whether this provision would not supersede the proper jurisdiction of the House in determining questions affecting the seats of its own members, not arising out of controverted elections."

Then he goes on and cites two cases:

"In the autumn of 1868 an election petition had been presented to the Court of Sessions in Scotland, complaining of the election of Sir Sidney Waterlow, for the county of Dumfries, on the ground of his holding a Government contract. In the ensuing session, however, this petition having been withdrawn, a select committee was appointed to "consider whether Sir Sidney Waterlow is disqualified from sitting and voting as a member of this House, under the statute 22 George III, c. 45." And on receiving the report of this committee, which declared him disqualified, a new writ was issued for the county of Dumfries. Thus the very same question which might have been determined, upon petition, by an election judge, was adjudged by the House itself. The House is, in fact, bound to take notice of any legal disabilities affecting its members, and to issue writs in the room of members adjudged to be incapable of sitting. But, notwithstanding this conclusive precedent, it was contended in 1870, in the case of O'Donovan Rossa, that the House had become completely divested of the right of determining upon legal disqualifications affecting its own members. This argument, however, found no favor, it being justly said that it amounted to this, that even a peer chosen to sit could not be excluded, and that a lunatic was to be suffered to continue a member."

May lays down the practice to be followed in the House:

"Where it has been determined that the sitting member was not duly elected, and that some other candidate was duly elected, and ought to have been returned, the Clerk of the Crown is ordered to attend, and amend the return, by easing out one name and inserting the other name instead thereof, which he accordingly does, at the Table of the House. In the case of a double return, the Clerk of the Crown is ordered to attend, and amend the return, by easing out the name of one of the parties, and what relates to him in the return. When the election is void, a new writ is ordered, unless the House shall think fit to suspend its issue."

The parties in this case did not think proper to go before the ordinary courts of justice, and after the time for filing an election petition had expired, Parliament was called upon to consider the question. Two members took the oath and presented themselves to sit here. Are we going to surrender our power to decide which of them is entitled to the seat? I say we should not refer the case to the Supreme Court, because we are as competent as is the Supreme Court to decide these legal questions, and it is our duty to uphold the power to pronounce on cases of members applying to sit in this House.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. GIROUARD. Some hon. members say "hear, hear," when I remark that this House is as competent as the Supreme Court to decide a case like this. In election cases I believe men outside of the House, even on the Bench, continue to be men. I will only mention one case which is perfectly well-known, not only in this country but throughout the whole world. Hon. members will no doubt recollect when the election of President Hayes, of the United States, was contested. A special tribunal was appointed, by both political parties, composed of fifteen of the best Judges of the Union, seven belonging to one party and eight to the other party, dividing the politics of the neighboring Republic. What was the result? Upon every question that came before that special tribunal, whether interlocutory or final, the eight Republicans voted one way, and the seven Democrats the other. We cannot be told that these men acted in bad faith—I cannot believe it; but it shows conclusively that, more or less, how difficult it is, in election matters, connected more or less with the party in power or in opposition, to divest ourselves of our feeling, either of sympathy or opposition, as the case may be. That is the reason why I say that this Parliament, containing as it does many lawyers of standing, is just as competent as the Supreme Court to decide a case of this kind; and for that reason, and also because I consider it is the duty of this House to decide any question of the admission of a member to sit here, I will also vote against the motion of the hon. member for Centre Huron. We have heard something this evening about members not being independent, and being partisans. I do not know really where I am going to be. I cannot vote for the report of the Committee, because it gives the seat to a man who did not obtain the majority of votes. I cannot vote also for the candidate of the majority, because I believe that he is not a qualified candidate. My opinion is, that the election is void within the meaning of the Statute of 1873, and that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery should be requested to issue a new writ for King's County, Prince Edward Island. I want to give these explanations, as I believe my position is a peculiar one. I conceived that I ought to offer some explanations before I gave the votes, which I will give on this matter.

Mr. DAVIES. I regret, Mr. Speaker, that I am unable to follow the reasoning of the hon. gentleman who has just resumed his seat, which led him to the conclusion he announced that this House was the proper tribunal to determine this question, and that the Supreme Court, to which it is proposed to refer it, was not a proper tribunal. I regret it the more because I think that the illustration which he gave to show that the Supreme Court was not a proper tribunal was unfair, and I do not think that the implication which he has drawn is the implication which any other hon. gentleman will draw against the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court. I am quite satisfied that if this case be referred to their Honors of the Supreme Court, [they would decide it irrespective of any political proclivities which they may have had before they went on the Bench, and purely as a question of law, and I think that the best answer which can be given to the hon. gentleman's statement that this House is the proper tribunal to try this question, and not the Supreme Court, is the statement made by the hon. gentleman himself that while, as a lawyer, he believed that Mr. McDonald was not entitled to the seat, and that the Act of 1872 does not apply, still he was going to vote as a member that it did apply. The hon. gentleman while stating in the House his conviction as a lawyer, and the conclusion at which he, as a lawyer, had arrived after a long train of reasoning and a great deal of thought and application, says that, nevertheless, as a member of the House he is going to vote in another way; and therefore I say that he used, in that very statement, one of the strongest arguments that can be presented to the House in favor of the amendment proposed by the hon. member for Huron. I agree with a great deal that has fallen from the hon. member for Jacques Cartier, as to the application of the Act of 1872. I shall not weary the House by repeating the arguments which he has very ably presented to the House, that the Act of 1872 has been repealed; but I wish to say a word or two with reference to the speech delivered by the hon. member for Glengarry. That hon. gentleman in delivering what was, to a very large extent, an able speech and devoid of improper references, thought fit, at the close of it, to impute—and I think unjustly and unnecessarily too—to the two gentlemen to whom Dr. Robertson had entrusted his resignation, a conspiracy on their part and with Dr. Robertson in some way to evade the law of the land. Sir, I find no evidence brought before the Committee to justify any imputation of that kind, and no question was put by the hon. gentleman himself when on the Committee, to the witnesses who were examined, to show that he entertained any such view then; and certainly there is no evidence to justify any such view. If the hon. member will reflect for a moment he will see that the facts themselves show that this imputation or charge is without any foundation. What is that imputation and charge? He says that those two gentlemen conspired with Dr. Robertson, for if they were not doing so they would have sent in his resignation without allowing so long a delay to take place. Why, the hon. member, if he turns to his own report, will see why the resignation was not forwarded by these two members when Dr. Robertson was elected. If those members were only waiting till Dr. Robertson was elected—to see whether he were elected or not—and if they were in the conspiracy which he supposes, they would have forwarded his resignation to the Lieutenant-Governor, on the evening when the election took place. It was well known all through the county and through the length and breadth of the Island, that Dr. Robertson was elected, and if they were part of that conspiracy they would have forwarded the resignation on that very night. He knows further—and this is on record in the evidence returned to the House, and it is the only bit of evidence on that point—that the reason why the resignation was not returned sooner to the Lieutenant-Governor was because one of the gentlemen to whom it was delivered was absent from the Island during nearly the whole time. That statement is there on record. That statement was not questioned or attempted to be controverted; and I say that it is now rather too late in the day, and rather unfair and unjust, both to Dr. Robertson himself and to these two gentlemen, to have these insinuations thrown out by the hon. member. "Oh, but," says the hon. member, "good faith to the electors of King's County required that Dr. Robertson should resign sooner!" Sir, I felt somewhat surprised that the hon. gentleman should not have shrunk from using the words "good faith to the electors of King's County" at the very time when he was urging the House to break faith with the majority of the electors of that county and to return to this House a man whom they refused to send here. Good faith, forsooth. Why, Mr. Speaker, these are the last words and the last phrase which the hon. gentleman should have used in connection with the arguments which he presented to this House. Good faith to the electors of King's County requires that the member whom they elected, unless it is clearly and distinctly shown that he is disqualified, should be returned here; and it is bad faith—if I may be permitted to use the expression—not only to refuse to allow the man whom they elected to take his seat, but to force in upon them as their representative, a man, whom they refused to elect and whom they rejected at the polls. Now, there are two or three larger questions involved in this discussion of a constitutional character, and a number of smaller ones, and I noticed that my hon. friend from Glengarry, with the ingenuity which distinguishes him I believe at the Bar, glided very swiftly and quietly over the larger questions and devoted the major part of his speech to the discussion of the minor ones. Let me recall the attention of the House for a moment to the larger ones. I will not weary the House long, because my friends who preceded me on this side, have discussed them at some length. The question which is first involved here is the question as to the rights of the majority, the question is whether the rights of the majority are to rule here or not. I think I am not using too strong language, when I say, Mr. Speaker, that the right of the majority to govern, is a fundamental principle of our constitution; that it affects not only the election of the members of this House, and not only the votes of this House, but the government of the country itself. We are here by this right of the majority to return us. The hon. gentleman who leads the Government, leads it by right of this fundamental principle; and I maintain, Sir, that the report of the Committee which we are asked to adopt on this occasion, asks us to violate that principle, and to adopt a new principle altogether; a new principle unknown to the constitution; a new principle which substitutes the minority of a partisan returning officer and a minority of the people for the majority of the people, that the law has declared shall return us to Parliament. Sir, before this House adopts the report of the Committee, involving the introduction, I say, of this new principle, let them very carefully look at all the Statutes, and adopting the language of the member for Jacques Cartier, if they have any reasonable doubt on the point, let them give it in favor of the people and not in favor of a partisan returning officer, or in favor of a gentleman who it is supposed will vote with the hon. gentlemen opposite when he gets here. Now, Mr. Speaker, let us look for a moment, then, at the law. The question which first comes up is this: Do, or do not, the Acts of 1872 and 1873 apply to elections in Prince Edward Island? That is the great question; and if they do apply to Prince Edward Island, and if they were in force at the last election, of course we must admit that Dr. Robertson, if he was a member of the Local House, and had not resigned was disqualified, and a minority candidate might have been returned. Now, Sir, in coming to a conclusion on this question, I beg the House to mark that Prince Edward Island, neither when the Act of 1872 was passed, nor when the Act of 1873 was passed, was part of the Dominion of Canada. Prince Edward Island had then a separate and independent Legislature of its own—a Legislature having power and jurisdiction in Prince Edward Island co-ordinate with the powers and jurisdictions of this Legislature in the Dominion—and I maintain that the Dominion of Canada has had no more right before the Confederation which took place with Prince Edward Island, to pass a law binding it, than the Legislature of Prince Edward Island had to pass one binding any part of the Dominion of Canada. It would be a ridiculous thing to argue that the Legislature of Prince Edward Island, before Confederation, could pass a law applicable to any part of the Dominion of Canada, but that would be just as good an argument as to propound that the Legislature of Canada should have the jurisdiction to pass a law before Confederation which should be binding on Prince Edward Island. It cannot do it. The powers of those two Legislatures were co-ordinate in their respective spheres, and one had not power to pass a law binding on the other. If hon. gentlemen will look at the mode in which Prince Edward Island joined the Union they will see that it was not by virtue of any Act of Union—a phrase which though used in this debate really has no meaning. There was no Act of Union cementing the joining of Prince Edward Island to the Dominion. There is no such Act in our Statute-book. This Confederation was not brought about by an Act of this Parliament. It was a contract arranged and entered into by two independent Provinces—a compact entered into by means of resolutions carried in the Legislatures of both Provinces pursuant to the British North America Act. Those resolutions, when they were ratified by Order in Council, became in themselves an Act of Union—and I call attention to that point because I will ask hon. gentlemen to consider the terms of those resolutions which were really the only Act of Union or compact between the Island and Canada. The 143th section of the British North America Act, 1867, says:

"It shall be lawful for the Queen, by and with the advice of Her Majesty's Most Honorable Privy Council, on Addresses from the Houses of the Parliament of Canada, and from the Houses of the respective Legislatures of the Colonies or Provinces of Newfoundland, Prince Edward Island and British Columbia, to admit those Colonies or Provinces into the Union; and on Addresses from the Houses of the Parliament of Canada to admit Rupert's Land and the North-Western Territory, or either of them into the Union, on such terms and conditions in each case as are in the Addresses expressed, and as the Queen thinks fit to approve, subject to the provisions of this Act; and the provisions of any Order in Council in that behalf, shall have effect as if they had been enacted by the Parliament of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland."

In other words, a resolution of this Legislature, and of the Legislature of Prince Edward Island, when ratified, became an Imperial Statute—a supplement to the British North America Act, not capable of being appealed, amended, or impugned by any Act of this Legislature whatsoever. Now, when we turn to this compact, what do we find? We find that some fifteen or sixteen resolutions were adopted by this Legislature and the Legislature of Prince Edward Island. Let me ask those hon. gentlemen, who contend that the Act of 1872 applies to the Island, to turn to those fifteen resolutions which, by Order in Council, were subsequently made an Imperial Statute. Let them point out where the Act of 1872 was agreed to by Prince Edward Island in any way. I say these resolutions are entirely silent as to the application to the Island of any Statute passed by the Dominion of Canada prior to Prince Edward Island joining the Union. I am sure the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Cameron) will come to the conclusion, unless he can point out within the four corners of those resolutions some clause declaring that the previous Acts of the Dominion of Canada shall apply to Prince Edward Island, that they do not apply. I am sure that the hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Macmaster), if he had given the same attention to this branch of the case that he gave to others of subordinate importance, would have come to the same conclusion. Hon. gentlemen may say, if these resolutions are silent altogether on the question of Elections: Then you have no Election law at all! Not so. The Legislature of Prince Edward Island and the Parliament of Canada by these resolutions, which subsequently became an Imperial Statute, provided for this very subject-matter. In the clause following the fifteenth resolution, passed by the Legislature of Prince Edward Island, machinery is provided by which members of this Legislature, from Prince Edward Island, should be elected—it declared what laws should regulate the qualification of members to be elected, and what laws should regulate the qualification of voters to vote for those members. It went on expressly to provide what laws should regulate the powers, conduct and duties of returning officers in these elections; so that not only was the law silent as to applying any provisions of the Legislature of Canada to Prince Edward Island, but it expressly provided that not the Act of 1872, but the Local Election Law, should apply to Prince Edward Island. That clause reads as follows:—

"That for the first election of members to be returned by this Island for the House of Commons for the Dominion of Canada, this Island shall be divided into Electoral Districts as follows: That 'Prince County' shall constitute one district, to be designated 'Prince County District,' and return two members; that 'Queen's County' shall constitute one district, to be designated 'Queen's County District,' and return two members; that 'King's County' shall constitute one district, to be designated 'King's County District,' and return two members; that the first election of members to serve in the House of Commons of Canada, for such Electoral District, shall be held within three calendar months from the day of the admission of the said Island into the Union of the Dominion of Canada; and we further humbly pray that all laws which, at the date of the Order in Council, by which the Island shall be admitted into the Union, relating to the qualification of any person to be elected to sit or vote as a member of the House of Assembly of the said Island, and relating to the qualifications or disqualifications of voters, and to the oath to be taken by voters, and to returning officers and poll clerks, and their powers and duties, and relating to the polling divisions within the said Island, and relating to the proceedings at elections, and to the period during which such elections may be continued, and relating to the trial of controverted elections, and the proceedings incidental thereto and relating to the vacating of seats of the members, and to the execution of new writs, in case of any seat being vacated otherwise than by a dissolution, and to all other matters connected with or incidental to elections of members to serve in the House of Assembly of the said Island, shall apply to the elections of members to serve in the House of Commons for the Electoral Districts situate in the said Island of Prince Edward."

When that resolution was ratified by the Queen's Order in Council, the question arose whether or not the ratification limited it only to the first election, or whether it should apply to subsequent elections, and when this question was argued before the Committee, grave doubts were expressed on the subject. I admit that if you read the Order in Council alone without reference to this resolution, very great doubts might arise, because the first part of the Order in Council limits it to the first election, but in the latter part it is provided that the same law shall apply in the case of the issue of new writs. This point, which was put forward by the hon. member for St. John (Mr. Weldon), and the hon. member for Huron (Mr. Cameron), has not been answered by hon. gentlemen opposite, and until it can be answered we cannot get away from the position that, until the Act of 1874 was passed by this Parliament, when Prince Edward Island was part of the Dominion, the only law which regulated the election of members in the Island to this House was the local law of Prince Edward Island, which had been applied to its elections by the Queen's Order in Council, which had the effect of an Imperial Statute. Why, Sir, there never was a doubt raised about it. The election of 1873 was held under these laws; the election of the hon. David Laird, who held office in Mr. Mackenzie's Government, was held under these laws; the election held in the beginning of 1874 was held under these laws; and no person ever raised a doubt in the Island, or out of it, that the law which regulated the election of members from that Island to serve in the House of Commons, was the law passed by the Legislature of Prince Edward Island, and ratified by the Queen and Council. The position I take is this: I say, as a matter of constitutional law, that the Parliament of Canada—the Parliament of the four Provinces of Quebec, Ontario, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick—had no power before Prince Edward Island joined them, to pass a law which should apply to Prince Edward Island—no more power than had the Legislature of Prince Edward Island, which was an independent Legislature, to pass a law to operate in the Province of New Brunswick. Therefore I say, and I have not heard that position challenged successfully—and I should very much like to hear the opinion of the Prime Minister on this matter—that until the Act of 1874 was passed, no law had been passed by the Parliament of Canada affecting the elections of Prince Edward Island. If that position is correct as a matter of constitutional law, are hon. members here to shrink from the logical consequences of it, and refuse to vote, as the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard) says he will refuse, although he admits we are right. We are here, he says, in the position of quasi judges, and in the same breath he says he will refuse to exercise his judicial functions. If hon. gentlemen are satisfied, as I believe, under these Statutes they must be satisfied, that the position I take is correct, Dr. Robertson is the legally elected member for King's County, and ought to be voted into his seat. Now, Sir, I will just call the attention of hon. gentlemen to the dates in this matter, because I believe them to be very important. The Act known as the Costigan Act was passed in June, 1872, and the other Act, known as the Mills Act, was passed on the 3rd of May, 1873. The resolutions of the Commons and Senate of Canada for bringing in Prince Edward Island were passed on the 20th of May, and the Legislature of Prince Edward Island passed them on the 28th of May. Three days after the House of Commons had passed the compact of Union with Prince Edward Island, and over a month before the compact was carried into effect it undertook to pass a law applying certain laws of Canada to that Island. What right had it to do so? Where did it derive its power, on the 23rd of May, to legislate for Prince Edward Island? That Province was not then a part of the Dominion. The Imperial Statute provided that if she came into the Dominion, she could only come in on such terms and conditions as the two Legislatures should agree upon. If the Parliament of Canada wished to apply any of those laws to the incoming Province, it was its duty to have declared in the resolutions, that when Prince Edward Island joined the Union, such and such laws should apply in that Province. But the Parliament of Canada did not do so; but before Prince Edward Island had a vote here, it attempted, without her consent or authority, to pass a law which should bind her people. That Province had a right to be governed by those principles which govern in this country and in the Mother Country, and which are at the root of all representative Government, namely, that no law shall be applied to a people who have had no voice in making it, unless they consent to its application. That this Parliament, having a limited jurisdiction under the British North America Act, limited as to place and to persons, should have power to pass a law binding another country, when that country had no voice or vote upon it, is a monstrous and unconstitutional proposition, which I believe the hon. First Minister, on reflection, will not sustain. I say that that Act was ultra vires of this House. The same argument will apply to the Mills Act of 1873, passed nearly a month before Prince Edward Island became a part of this Dominion at all. Now, leaving that branch of the subject, I will ask the indulgence of the House while I address myself to the other branch for a few moments. Assuming for the purpose of argument that the Act of 1873, the disqualifying Act, is in force, I want to ask whether or not Dr. Robertson was disqualified within the meaning of that Act. That Act provided that:

"After the dissolution of the present Parliament of Canada, no person who is a member of a Legislative Council, or of any Legislative Assembly of any Province now included, or which may hereafter be included within the Dominion of Canada, shall be eligible as a member of the House of Commons."

This Act is both a disqualifying Act and a penal Act—a combination of the two; it disqualifies certain people from being elected, and it imposes a penalty upon them, if they presume to sit. When we come to consider that Act, we must put a strict construction on its words. I do not think there is any doubt about that; it is laid down in all the text-books that these disqualifying and penal Acts are to receive a strict construction. I find it laid down in Rogers on Elections:

"As all penal and disqualifying Statutes are to be construed strictly, the House as well as Committees have always required proof, in case of offices accepted after the election, that such acceptance has been complete; and in case of offices renounced before the election, have admitted evidence of a substantial though informal renunciation; and this, whether such office incapacitates for being elected, or only vacates the seat."

There the principle is laid down clearly and distinctly. Now, Sir, when we come to look at that disqualifying Act, we have not to ask ourselves whether Dr. Robertson was a member of the Local Legislature in the colloquial sense, but whether he was so in the meaning of that Statute; and in doing so, we have to look to what is the object of the Statute. It was intended to abolish dual representation, to prevent members from sitting in both Houses—not to prevent members from being elected for both Houses. I presume it will not be disputed, that if elections were held simultaneously for the Local and Dominion Parliaments, one person would be capable of being elected for both Houses. The Act was not passed to prevent anything of that kind, but was passed to prevent a complete member, a legal member of the House of Assembly, from being elected for this House. The question is, was or was not Dr. Robertson a legal member of the House of Assembly. I submit he was not. It has been assumed by hon. gentlemen opposite, that a man is a member once he is elected, and the hon. member for Glengarry cited several instances from the Imperial Parliament, for instance, the case of Baron Rothschild, who had been elected for the House of Commons, and who, although he could not take his seat on account of his inability to take the oaths, nevertheless was permitted by the House to serve on a Committee. Hon. members will see there is a great distinction between the case of a man elected to the House of Commons, and permitted by that House to act on its Committees, and that of a man elected to a Local Legislature, the law relating to which prescribes a qualification without which he is not entitled to take his seat, or to vote, or to act as a member of that House in any way. Dr. Robertson could not take his seat in the Legislature of the Island, or act on its Committees, or vote, or act in any sense as a member of that body. I find that the Judges in England have drawn, in the cases that have come before them, a very clear distinction between a member-elect and a member who has complied with the requirements of the law, and taken his seat. In a case that came before the Court of Exchequer in England, that of Miller vs. Salomons, it was argued that a man was a member of the House because he was elected, but the Lord Chief Baron held that "a person is not a member of the House until he has taken his seat." Counsel go on to argue: "It is submitted that he is a member before, otherwise he could not be entitled to vote for the Speaker which he may do," and the Lord Chief Baron says: "There is nothing of which I am aware to prevent a minor, or a woman, or even an alien enemy, from doing so." They go on to cite a precedent, similar to the case cited by the hon. member for Glengarry, by which it appears that "on the 30th April, 1715, the House of Commons determined that Sir Joseph Jekyll was a person fit to act on a Committee of Secrecy, though he had not been sworn at the Clerk's Table." What answer did the Lord Chief Baron make? He said: "It was perfectly competent for the House of Commons to allow him to sit on Committees, although he did not take the oaths or his seat. The question was whether a party returned as a member is bound to attend Committees, or is liable to the jurisdiction of the House, before he has taken his seat." The Lord Chief Baron thought he was not a member of the House before he had complied with all the requirements of the law. That is not all. In the very case which an hon. member quoted—I noticed he stopped short in the reading of it—the case of the West Durham election, Mr. Justice Wilson says on this point which came up incidentally: "It is a matter of very grave doubt whether a man is a member or not until he has taken the oath." Then we find this case which was quoted by the hon. member for West Huron, which I had the honor to cite before in the Committee. It is the only authority that bears squarely on the question, and the hon. member from Glengarry did not attempt to distinguish it in any way. There it stands in a legal decision, that a man who was elected to be a mayor in a certain city, was held by all the Judges of the Court of Queen's Bench, not to be a mayor, in a legal sense, until he had taken the oath of qualification. Lord Tenterden laid down this ruling:—"A party becomes a mayor, not merely by reason of his being elected, but by reason of his being sworn into office." Bailey, Justice, takes the same ground. He says:—"He, before he executes his office, is to be sworn in, and he becomes the head of the corporation, not when he is elected and nominated, but when he is sworn in." The other Judges concur in that opinion. That is a case precisely analogous to the one before the House. By the charter of that town it was provided that, before "he be admitted to execute his office, the person elected and nominated for mayor should not only take his corporate oath, well and faithfully to execute that office, but also all the oaths by the laws and Statutes of this realm appointed by a mayor to be taken." The law of Prince Edward Island, with reference to a member of the Assembly, is in very nearly the same terms as the law upon which we have a judicial decision of the Court of Queen's Bench in England. In the 75th section it is prescribed:

"No person shall be capable of being elected a member for any Town, Royalty or District in the Island, unless he shall, for a period of at least twelve calendar months before the teste of the writ for holding the election at which such person shall claim to be elected, have been in the seizin or possession of a freehold or leasehold estate, within this Island, of the value of £50 over and above all encumbrances that shall affect the same; and shall, before he be presented to take his seat in the House of Assembly, take one of the oaths in the schedule of this Act prescribed for members relative to freehold or leasehold estate, as the nature of his qualification may require."

Dr. Robertson never took that oath, and never could have taken it, because the Legislature did not meet. A case may occur—it is not at all improbable—where a man may be elected to the House, and take the oath on nomination day, but through business losses be unable to take the qualification oath or his seat as a member when the House meets. How can it be argued in that case that he is a member when the Act specially provides that he shall not exercise the functions of a member in any way or take his seat until he takes this oath. Under that law, even supposing the Act of 1873 to be in force, it being a penal disqualifying Statute, it must have a strict construction; and a member of the Legislature, as understood by it, is a complete legal member, which Dr. Robertson was not, and therefore he was not disqualified for election to this House. But suppose we go further. The hon. member for Glengarry devoted some time to show that if Dr. Robertson was a member he did not, or could not, resign. Whether he could or could not resign is a legal question. Whether he attempted to resign is a different question, and I was sorry to see the hon. Member encumber his argument with imputations which the evidence did not justify. The question here is a purely legal one—could he, or could he not, resign? I find that the Committee on Privileges and Elections in this House, in the year 1874, passed their opinion on cases of this kind. In the case of Mr. Perry, the House determined what is the real meaning to be put upon that disqualifying Act—whether you are to go by the literal words of it as used in a legal sense, or whether you are to consider it in the spirit and intent of the law? I find that at that time Mr. Perry was a member elected to this Parliament, and was also a member of the Legislature of Prince Edward Island. At that time there was no provision made for resigning, but he went through the forms of sending his resignation to the Lieutenant-Governor and the Clerk of the House, and every other official he could think of. He did all in his power to divest himself of the position of member legally, but he could not do it, as there was no provision in the law to meet his case. However, when he came before this House, and this House was asked to put a judicial construction on the clause, they held that as he had complied with the spirit and intent of the law, by doing all in his power to divest himself of the position of a local member, he was entitled to retain his seat and was eligible for election to the House. The preamble of the Statute which this House passed, I believe, without a dissenting voice, "declared the laws of Prince Edward Island recognized the right of a member to resign his seat in the Local Legislature, and the said Perry has taken, so far as it was possible for him to do, and in good faith, every step in his power to divest himself of his position as a member of the Legislative Assembly, and that according to the spirit and intent of the Act of 1873, he was not disqualified to be a candidate." Well, Sir, this House having put that judicial interpretation upon the law of 1873, having said that the man who complies with the spirit and intent of the law is not disqualified from being elected, is now asked to turn round and say that Dr. Robertson—who certainly, it must be admitted, has done all that he could do—is disqualified. He has tried to divest himself of his position as a member of the Local House, he has resigned and done all that lay in his power to give up that seat, and if the construction of the law which is contained in the preamble of that Act I have quoted from is the true one, if that is a correct declaration of law, that when a member complies with the spirit and intent of the law, he has complied with the law itself, then I say he is not disqualified from being elected here. Now, the position in reference to Dr. Robertson's election will be this: The Attorney-General of Prince Edward Island held that Dr. Robertson could resign, the Legislature of Prince Edward Island held that his seat is vacant, the Lieutenant-Governor has held that he could resign, and he issued his fiat for a new writ. A new election has taken place, a new member fills the seat. Therefore, the party to whom the hon. member for Glengarry belongs will be in this peculiar position; that in Prince Edward Island they have declared that Dr. Robertson was entitled to resign, and that he did resign, and they have filled up his seat. Here they have declared that he did not resign, has not resigned, and will not allow him to sit here. Well, if that is not blowing hot and cold I do not know what it is. The hon. member for Glengarry talked about "heads I win, tails you lose." Why, that is just the very thing they are doing here. They are tossing up the copper, and no matter how it comes down they are to win. If it comes down heads, Dr. Robertson cannot be elected to this House, because he was a member of the Legislative Assembly and could not resign; if it turns up tail, oh! the Local Legislature say, he can resign, and he has resigned, and we will put Mr. Prouse in his place. I will just ask the members whether that is a proper position for the two Legislatures to occupy towards each other. There is grave doubt whether a man can resign or not between the interval after the expiration of one Parliament and the beginning of a new one under that section; but I say that if he could resign at all he has done so. He has done all that lay in his power to divest himself of his seat, and the Local Legislature, the Attorney-General, the Lieutenant-Governor and all the authorities hold he could resign, and we are asked to hold that he could not. But, in the position I take, it is not necessary for me to hold a strong opinion one way or another upon that point, because I hold in the first place that the Act of 1873 does not apply to the case of Dr. Robertson. The hon. gentleman says that Dr. Robertson knew it was legally necessary for him to resign the local seat before he could become eligible for election to the Commons, and that his attempt to resign proves that. But it does not follow. Has he never heard of a man taking a step from an abundance of caution? In the case of Mr. Perry, who contested Prince County at the late General Election, I am told he was advised by his lawyer that there was no occasion for him to resign; that the Act did not apply to him. Dr. Robertson resigned as a matter of precaution, and the mere fact that he exercised this caution ought not to deprive him of his seat, if he is otherwise entitled to it. Then comes the question on the main report of the Committee, passing from the amendment moved by my hon. friend: Are we to seat Mr. McDonald here?—Mr. McDonald, who only polled a minority of the votes. They say you are compelled to do it under the law of 1872. Now, I am not going to repeat the arguments I have used already, but I shall refer to the argument of the hon. member for Glengarry, that because the people of King's County had knowledge of Dr. Robertson's election to the Local Legislature, they must be presumed to have knowledge of his disqualification for election to this House; and having voted with that knowledge, they are bound by it. With all respect to that hon. gentleman, I will tell him that he has not informed this House correctly as to the law on that subject. I will show the hon. gentleman authorities that he himself will accept that the very opposite is the law in England. I call his attention in the first place to Warwick on "Municipal Elections in Scotland," and he will find on page 477 the law laid down on that subject:

"In order to secure the absolute nullity of votes given for a disqualified candidate, and possibly to avoid the expense and inconvenience of a second election, notice of the disqualification and of the grounds upon which it rests, should be given to the electors before the vote or poll is commenced."

Mr. DAVIES.

Now, it is in evidence here that no notice of any kind was ever given to a single elector in King's County, alleging the disqualification of Dr. Robertson, whether by letter, by notice in the newspapers, by post, or otherwise. The people voted in the full belief that he was qualified; and it is now attempted, without any notice having been given, and in violation of every decision which I can find in the English courts of justice, to put in the minority candidate. The hon. gentleman will find as many as ten or twelve cases decided in the English courts confirming this law I have read from the books. I will only give one—the case of the Queen vs. the Mayor of Tewkesbury—and this very point came out in that case. I call the attention, especially of the hon. member for Glengarry, to this case, inasmuch as he laid down with some emphasis, and with some degree of assurance, a view of the law directly contrary to that laid down by the English Judges. The marginal note to the case reads as follows:—

"At the election of Town Councillors in a borough not divided into wards, there were four vacancies and five candidates. B., one of the four who had a majority of votes, was the mayor, and acted as returning officer, and was, therefore, incapable of being elected:—Held, that the mere knowledge on the part of the electors who voted for B., that he was mayor and returning officer, did not amount to knowledge that he was disqualified in point of law as a candidate, and therefore their votes were not thrown away, so as to make the election fall on the fifth candidate."

Now, here is a case on all fours with the one before the House. The electors had knowledge that Dr. Robertson was elected to the Local House, but it does not follow that they had knowledge that he was disqualified from sitting in this House. In the Tewkesbury case, Mr. Justice Blackburn, in giving his judgment, said:

"Voting for a dead man, or for the man in the moon, are expressions showing that, in order to make the vote a nullity, there must be wilful persistence against actual knowledge. But it does not seem to me consistent with either justice or common sense, or common law, to say that because these voters were aware of a certain circumstance they were necessarily aware of the disqualification arising from that circumstance."

Now, that is the very point. The hon. member says the electors of King's County did know or should have known. I leave him to settle his account with Lord Justice Blackburn, who says the position he takes is not based upon common law or common sense. I think the common sense and common law laid down by Justice Blackburn, and supported by the rest of the Bench, will commend itself to this House and cause it to pause before it commits the iniquity of throwing away the votes of 2,000 people, given for Dr. Robertson, when no notice was given, direct or indirect, and no claim made by Mr. McDonald, that those votes should be thrown away, or that Dr. Robertson was disqualified. But, if we examine the Act of 1872, we find that within its four corners it did not apply to any other Province than those which were in the Union at the time it was passed. The Act of 1873 says on its face that it shall apply to future Provinces. The Act of 1872, as I have said, does not say anything about future Provinces. Where does the hon. gentleman make it apply? It does not apply on its face. The hon. gentleman (Mr. Macmaster) said a law was passed, which he calls the Union Act—which is not a Union Act, and the phrase is a misleading one—which he says applies certain laws to Prince Edward Island. I say that the Act of 1873 does not do so. That Act, assuming it to be constitutional, for the purpose of my argument, applies certain laws to the Island, among them "laws relating to the Senate and House of Commons," and the hon. gentleman says that under that language the Act of 1872, and the clauses of it which relate to the eligibility of people to be elected to the House of Commons, and also the clauses which relate to the duties of returning officers, are included. I wish to call attention to the Act of 1872. It relates to two distinct subjects: first, the class of persons who may, or may not, be elected to the House of Commons; and second, duties of returning officers. They are not cognate subjects, although embraced in the same Act; indeed they have nothing to do with each other. I ask hon. gentlemen opposite whether a general law, which says that Acts which relate to the House of Commons, shall apply to Prince Edward Island can, by any stretch of the imagination, extend so as to embrace a law relating to the duties of returning officers? I say it cannot. I say the second section of the Act of 1872 cannot, by any force of reasoning, be squeezed into the words "House of Commons." The Act defines the duties of returning officers, which subject, as I have said, has no relation whatever to the House of Commons; and therefore the Act of 1872, neither on its face, nor by any subsequent legislation, has ever been applied to Prince Edward Island. It has no force or effect whatever. That being the case, it is perfectly impossible, without violating all precedents, principles, and rules upon which the decisions of the English courts and the Imperial Parliament have been given, to force the minority candidate into a seat in this House. I was going on to argue that the Acts of 1872 and 1873 were repealed by the Act of 1874; but I need not trouble the House with that point; I believe the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard) was correct in stating that the Act of 1873 repealed the Act of 1872; and if it does not, certainly the Act of 1874 does. The hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Macmaster) quoted from Maxwell on Statutes, to the effect that one law does not repeal another unless they are inconsistent. No one said that it does; but we say these Acts are inconsistent. The hon. gentleman says a general law cannot repeal a special one. We do not lay down such a broad proposition. It depends whether the general law is inconsistent with the special one or not. If the hon. gentleman will refer to the reports of Scotch appeals, before the House of Lords, he will find the case of Duncan, appellant, the Scottish North-Eastern Railway Company, respondents, a declaration by the House (reversing the decree below) that the provisions in the Local Acts of 1836, exempting the Dundee and Arbroath, and the Arbroath and Forfar Railways from poor rates were in effect abrogated by the General Poor Law Amendment Act, 1845, and by the General Valuation of Lands Act, 1854. Lord Chelmsford said:

"I entertain no doubt that if there were nothing more to be considered than the Act of 1836, the railway company would be exempt from all liability to this assessment. But in 1849 the Act of 8 and 9 Victoria, chap. 83, was passed. Whether, after that Act, the original proprietors of the land acquired for the purposes of the railway continued liable to assessment or not, it is unnecessary to determine. It is sufficient for the decision of this appeal to say that, so far as the railway companies are concerned, the exemption clauses must have been deprived of all effect by the passing of the Act of 1845, because they had no longer any subject upon which to operate."

Lord Westbury said:

"No doubt some injustice has been done to the railway company; but it is probably due to the neglect of the company in not bringing their particular exemption under the Acts of 1836, before Parliament, when the Poor Law Act, and the Valuation Act, were being considered by it; and in consequence of their not having done so, they have entirely lost the benefit of the exemption given them, which is in effect abrogated by the different Statutes."

There the Company had been exempted by a particular Statute of their own, but a general law was afterwards passed which impliedly did away with the exception. Although it did not expressly refer to the particular Statute, the House of Lords held that the general law impliedly repealed it. So the Act of 1874 is a complete Statute in itself, covering the whole duties of returning officers, and all the machinery relating to elections. We must look for a moment at the law with respect to elections, as it stood prior to the passing of this Act. The law of the Dominion had been declared to be the laws in the several Provinces; and I wish to call the attention of hon. gentlemen who desire to come to a conclusion on the subject, apart from party feeling, that the local laws were those which regulated the elections of members to this House. This condition of things had been brought about by this Parliament. The only law of the Dominion on the subject was that of 1872, which provided that, in case the candidate having the largest number of votes was disqualified, he was to throw aside the votes cast in his favor and declare the candidate having the next largest number elected, unless the majority candidate is disqualified. This clause gave judicial power to the returning officer. But when the law of 1874 was passed, instead of allowing the returning officer to return the minority candidate in such a case, it was provided that the returning officer shall return the man having the highest number of votes. The hon. member for Glengarry (Mr. Macmaster) read the Interpretation Act. He will see that the word "shall" wherever used in the Statutes of the Dominion is mandatory, and it is so used in the Act of 1874. It is peremptory and imperative, it admits of no excuse. The returning officer has one duty, and one duty alone, to perform—he has no judicial function, because that has been taken away from him—and that is a ministerial duty, to add up the votes as returned by his deputies, and then return the man who has the highest number of votes. There can be no doubt that the Act of 1874 repeals the Act of 1872, even if it ever was in force in Prince Edward Island. Sir, in conclusion, I may say that I do not know what the decision of the House may be on the question, whether a majority of the members will vote to seat a minority candidate here. I hope and trust they may not, that a majority of the House may be found having greater respect for the rights and privileges of this House, and for the wishes of the majority of the electors of King's County, whose case is now before us; but whether the majority do so or not, I hope and trust that our party, this Reform party, at all events, will remain true to the traditions of our past.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. DAVIES. Well, hon. gentlemen may cheer, but they have been true so far to their traditions of the past. I believe in every instance I have been able to find in the late Parliament of Canada, and I suppose that eight or ten were cited by the hon. member for Huron, that they have in every instance recorded their votes in favor of the return to this House of the man who received the majority of the votes of the people. That, Sir, has been the tradition of the party in times gone by, and I hope that they will be true to those traditions now, and whether we poll the majority of this House or not I am satisfied at least, that we will have faithfully discharged our duty to our constituents and the country at large.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). My hon. friend from Glengarry in the very able and full argument and discussion of this question, with which we have been favored from him to-night, has so fully dealt with the legal bearings of this case, that at this late hour I do not propose occupying time in going into a discussion at any great length of the points involved in it. With the hon. gentleman for Huron, I should have been glad if the decision of this question which he has admitted, and which all must admit, involves legal questions of great difficulty, upon which the very best legal minds may naturally differ, could have been referred to some competent legal tribunal to decide; but I think it must be admitted after the few words of explanation which the leader of the House gave in reply to the hon. member for Huron, that the proposal he made, that it should be referred to the Supreme Court by the Governor in Council, is entirely out of the question. It is quite clear, I am sure, to any lawyer looking at this case, that the Supreme Court Act cannot apply to a case of this kind, and if the Governor in Council were to send a special case upon the subject to the Supreme Court, that court would be compelled in the discharge of its duty to send it back, as they did on one occasion to the Senate, with the statement that they did not think that the matter referred came within their functions and powers under the Act to give any opinion on. In fact the Governor in Council has no more jurisdiction over this question, and has nothing more to say on it than has the man in the moon, to whom my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island has referred. The Governor in Council has nothing whatever to say to it, and it would be impertinent for the Governor in Council to send to the Supreme Court this case for their opinion on this question. If then the Supreme Court cannot decide it, if there is no legal tribunal that can decide it, the decision is forced upon us. I should have been much better pleased if this case had come in the ordinary course of proceedings before a legal tribunal as might have been the result if the members contesting the seat had chosen to resort to it, and let the court pronounce upon it, because I do not feel, as I said when this matter was before the House on a former occasion, that this House is the proper and most competent tribunal to decide a question of this kind. That it has the legal power, is beyond any question; that it has the right to do so, no one can doubt, and that we are compelled to do so on the present occasion is equally free from doubt. We must decide this question, whether we like it or not. We must come to a conclusion and vote according to what we believe is right, and to say, first of all, whether Dr. Robertson is entitled to the seat; secondly, whether Mr. McDonald is entitled to the seat; or, thirdly, whether either of them is. Now, upon the first part of the case, as to whether Dr. Robertson is entitled to the seat, I confess I have no doubt at all in my own mind. I have no doubt that the Acts of 1872 and 1873 apply to the Prince Edward Island election at which Dr. Robertson was a candidate, and that he was, under the circumstances, ineligible to be elected on that occasion. When we come to consider the other question, as to whether Mr. McDonald is entitled to the seat, I think the main difficulty arises, because it is conceded that the only ground upon which Mr. McDonald can claim the seat is the existence and applicability of the second section of the Act of 1872. If that does not apply, Mr. McDonald cannot be entitled to the seat, and then there must be a new election. Many arguments have been advanced to show that it is inapplicable and does not apply, or has been repealed. I am satisfied that it has not been repealed; I am satisfied that there is no express repeal of it, and also that it has not been repealed by implication, and that the second section of the Act of 1872 is still in force, notwithstanding the existence of the Act of 1873 against dual representation, and equally notwithstanding the Act of 1874 in reference to controverted elections. My hon. friend from Prince Edward Island (Mr. Davies) who has just sat down, appears to have utterly misunderstood—he certainly misstated the argument of my hon. friend from Glengarry upon that point; and my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island quoted authorities wholly unnecessary on this occasion, to show that as an ordinary rule, as a rule of Parliamentary law, and of Election Court Law, a minority candidate cannot be entitled to the seat in case of the disqualification or ineligibility, of the majority candidate, unless that disqualification or ineligibility has been brought home expressly to the notice of the electors. This is a question which no one will controvert, and it was quite unnecessary to cite authorities to prove it as a general question of law. We all know that if a man who gets the minority of the votes, wants the seat, or claims it, on the ground that the man getting the majority is disqualified, he must not only prove disqualification, but also that notice of it was expressly given on nomination day, or at each poll, or in some such way so that the fact was brought home to each elector personally, that the man getting the majority of votes was disqualified, and that their votes were thrown away. That is the general law and is indisputable; and my hon. friend from Glengarry admitted that to be the case, but my hon. friend from Prince Edward Island argued as if my hon. friend from Glengarry controverted it. What we say is this: There is the statutory notice given by the second clause of the Act of 1872, that where the Statute comes in and says expressly, as it does, that in case the electors vote for a man who is ineligible, their votes shall be thrown away; the duty of the returning officer shall be to return the man having the next largest number of votes. The law, the general law, the statutory law, gives that notice, which is therefore unnecessary to have been given expressly by printed handbills, or by notice on the hustings, or in any way of that kind. I cannot override that law; and if the second clause of the Act of 1872 is in force, no other conclusion can be come to than that Mr. McDonald is entitled to the seat. I said, when this matter was being discussed elsewhere, that in coming to that conclusion I did so reluctantly. I would have preferred, if I had seen my way as a lawyer and a member of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and as a member of the House, to come to the conclusion that there ought to be a new election; but being compelled, as I feel we are, to give a decision on this question, according to what I believe the law to be, and if the law is as contended, if Mr. McDonald has a vested right to a seat in this House, we have no right to take it away from him; and the minority, who voted for him, and gave good votes, are entitled to have their member returned here and to take his seat; while the majority, if the Act of 1872 applies, wilfully threw away their votes, and cannot complain, because in the face of the Statute, they have done what the Statute Law says shall cause their votes to be thrown away; but I say although reluctantly, and I feel myself forced to come to the conclusion, that Mr. McDonald is entitled to the seat. The whole question, however, turns on the applicability and the existence of the second clause of the Act of 1872. My hon. friend from Prince Edward Island, has argued at great length, that the Union Acts of 1872 and 1873, applied to Prince Edward Island; that the Act of 1873, in reference to the Union, when it provided that certain laws of Canada should be applicable to Prince Edward Island when it came into the Union, being passed before the Union took place, was ultra vires of the power of this Parliament, and my hon. friend from Jacques Cartier has argued in the same way; but they both seem to forget this manifest fact—that sitting here we have no right and no power to say that any Act passed by the three branches of the Legislature, the Governor General, the Senate and the House of Commons, is unconstitutional. We have no power to say that it is ultra vires. What right have we as one of the component parts only of the Legislative body of this Dominion, to say that former legislation is ultra vires. If we say so, the only constitutional way in which we can do so, is by repealing the law; and then if the other branches of the Legislature concur in that repeal, it will cease to be law; but when we have once passed a law, and put it in the Statute-book, and when that law has been assented to by the Governor General, and not disallowed by the Queen, it is law. We cannot, therefore, now say that it is unconstitutional. We may have our own opinions as individuals, but we are bound to admit the Act of 1873 says expressly that the laws on certain subjects shall apply to Prince Edward Island, and included in that definition I have no doubt are the laws relating to the election of members of the House of Commons; but I doubt much whether, in the absence of any provision of that kind, the law of Canada, as it was at the time Prince Edward Island came into the Union, with reference to the constitution of our Parliament, did not necessarily apply without express enactments. I think it did. The moment that Prince Edward Island became part of the Dominion that moment the laws of Canada in reference to the constitution of our Parliament and matters of that kind, became, ipso facto, and necessarily binding on Prince Edward Island. By the Order in Council adopting the Terms of Union, there was a special exception made in reference to the first election, because in the absence of that exception our general law would have applied, and as it was much more convenient that the local law should apply to the first election in the Province, it was declared that it should so apply, but not to any subsequent elections. Hon. gentlemen opposite have referred to the case of Mr. Laird, but if that election took place under local laws in November, 1873, I think it took place illegally. I believe that the general laws of the Parliament of Canada applied to that election and to every other election except the one immediately after the Island came into the Union.

Mr. GIROUARD (Jacques Cartier). I wish to correct the hon. gentleman. He said that I stated that as members of Parliament we were not obliged to take the Statutes as we found them.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). I did not say so; I understood the hon. gentleman to say that as members of Parliament we were bound to take them as we found them, but the hon. gentleman argued that the Statute of 1873 was ultra vires of this Parliament, and in reply to that argument I said that it was unimportant to discuss that question, because we were bound to take it as law. I do not purpose going into a discussion of what I call, and what hon. gentlemen opposite have called, the minor points of the case, as to whether Dr. Robertson was the member elected, and so on, because they have already been fully discussed, and it seems to me that they are really too clear for argument. There can be nothing but very weak and insupportable arguments advanced in favor of the position that Dr. Robertson was not a member within the meaning of this Act—if it applies—and I think that is beyond question. He could not resign at all until the first meeting of the House. If he could, I am equally clear that he did not resign effectually, and in either case if he was a member not being able to resign, and not having resigned, that disqualification clause applies, and he was necessarily ineligible to be elected a member of this House. The whole point of the case is whether these Acts of 1872 and 1873 apply to Prince Edward Island and whether the second clause of the Act of 1872 is in force? It has been argued that it was repealed by the Act of 1873, and the legislation of 1874. I do not concur in this opinion, though I will not discuss the point at this late hour. My hon. friend from Huron (Mr. Cameron) in his very temperate and well reasoned speech on this occasion, I think made one mistake in arguing that such a thing as a minority candidate having been seated was unknown. My hon. friend must recollect cases which are numerous in the books of a member who had been elected by a majority of votes and was returned, was petitioned against on the ground of his being disqualified, and the minority candidate having petitioned and claimed the seat, and showing that he had given notice of disqualification, and showing that that notice was brought home, the minority candidate always got the seat. That is the case here, except that we have no evidence that an express notice was given to the electors. I think it unnecessary to discuss the question of whether there was an implied notice, because there was the statutory notice which dispenses with such a notice.

Mr. CAMERON (Huron). I did not make such a statement, but I said that Parliament had never done so.

Mr. CAMERON (Victoria). Parliament does it on the Report of an Election Committee. I am not aware of any cases which have occurred since the present method of trying controverted election cases. There may be such cases, but I know there were dozens of them anterior to the Con-troverted Elections Act, where the Committee reported that the man returned was disqualified, and that notice of disqualification was given, and the minority candidate was entitled to his seat, and he got it. My hon. friend from Huron (Mr. Cameron) admitted that if the Act of 1872 was in force, and assuming that Dr. Robertson was not a member within the technical meaning of the term, there was no doubt that the conclusion of the Committee was right. I do not think it is necessary to occupy the time of the House upon this point. It is a difficult point for lawyers, and of course more difficult for laymen to determine; but I thought it was as well, at the conclusion of the debate, that it should be plainly and clearly stated, that that is the turning point of the whole case, and that upon that question must depend any proper conclusion at which we could arrive. The majority of the Committee have arrived at the conclusion set forth in the report. I agreed in that conclusion, and, after listening to the arguments of hon. gentlemen opposite, I am unable to come to the conclusion that the majority of the Committee were wrong. For these reasons I shall vote for the adoption of the original motion.

Mr. WELDON. I intend to detain the House but a few minutes; but I must say that the remarks of my hon. friend who has just sat down satisfy me that the position we have taken on this side is right. He says that we have no right to discuss the constitutionality of a law—that all we can do is to repeal it. That would be very true if we were sitting here to debate a bill, but we are sitting here as judges, and if the law is unconstitutional, we have a right as judges to pass an opinion upon it. I am sure that my hon. friend feels that the position we have laid down is correct, and that if he were sitting on the bench, he would not hesitate to express that opinion; and sitting here to act in a judicial manner, and not in a party spirit, sitting temporarily as judges, we should decide this question precisely as my hon. friend would expect the judges to decide it. The hon. First Minister, referring to the Supreme Court Act, said that Act only referred to matters of consequence on which the Crown required to be informed. Now, I will call your attention to some authorities on that point. I will first turn to Todd's "Parliamentary Government," vol. 2, page 625, which says:

"If the matter be one that is properly cognizable by a legal tribunal, it would be referred to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, which, by the Act 3 and 4 William IV., chap. 41, in addition to its ordinary functions as a Court of Appeal from the decisions of the courts of law, is empowered (by section 4) to consider any matters whatsoever that the Sovereign shall think fit to refer to it."

For a practical illustration of that I will refer to the English Hansard Debates of 1866, volume 184, page 1282:

"Captain STACPOOLE said, he would beg to ask the Secretary of State for India, whether, with reference to the pledge that would have been given to this House—that the public and bona fide claims against the late State of Oude would be paid out of the revenues of the country—it is the intention of Her Majesty's Government to place the Report of the Commission appointed to inquire into those claims, and the decision of the Local Government thereupon, upon the footing of all other reports and decisions affecting the rights of individuals in India, and to allow the same to be reviewed by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council?"

"Viscount CRANBOURNE. Sir, these are claims that arose out of transactions that took place about eighteen years ago. They are claims of a moral, and not of a legal character, and they depend, as I am informed, upon proof that falls very far short of legal proof. There is no doubt by the Statute a power enabling Her Majesty to refer to the Committee of Privy Council any matters which she pleases, but I imagine there would be a very great difficulty in referring matters of this kind to a judicial tribunal, and certainly I cannot pledge myself generally to do so. If references are made, it must be on each individual case, on cause shown, and on a full review of all the circumstances."

We find the same doctrine laid down by Donison, on the practice of appeals to the House of Lords, page 21, with regard to examining Judges before that House:

"It was decided in the Wensleydale Peerage case that the House did not consult the Judges on questions other than of law, arising on a claim to sit and vote as a Peer. The Lords have, however, the right to require the Judges to attend and to answer abstract questions of existing law, without regard to the form of an appeal or the questions raised upon it, or although such questions do not arise out of any case actually before the House; but the Judges will decline to answer a question put to them by the House of Lords if it be not confined to the strict legal construction of existing laws."

There is the proposition put forward by Todd, and in the reply of Cranborne, and implied also in the practice of the House of Lords. It seems to me that all we have heard in this case, and the conflicting opinions expressed by legal members of this House, indicate that the Government should exercise its power to refer this case to a tribunal which should give a satisfactory decision upon it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have no right to say anything, having spoken already, except by the permission of the House. It is quite true that the House of Lords, which is a judicial as well as a legislative body, has the right to examine the judges as officers, and can call upon the judges to give their opinions on matters of law. There is no doubt about that. The clause in the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council Act says that the Sovereign may send any matter that the Crown chooses, to the Committee for its opinion. That is quite true; but the Crown has to make up its mind what questions it can send. Now, the hon. gentleman knows that it will be unconstitutional what is going on here; the Crown cannot even allude to what is going on in the House of Commons; there is no way of informing the Crown; it is considered to be a breach of the privileges of the House of Commons for the Crown to intervene. The hon. gentleman will find, if he looks up the special cases referred to the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, that all these cases, without exception, have concerned matters on which the Crown, as the head of the Executive, desired to be informed. The special quotation of the hon. gentleman proves that. It related to certain Indian claims against the Crown. Although they were not legal claims the Ministers of the Crown promised to submit to the Judges the question whether there was a good moral claim against the Crown, because if there was a good moral claim it should be paid.

Mr. BLAKE. No; he was objecting to the reference to the Judicial Committee, because the claim was a moral claim, and not a legal claim.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Well, it was a claim against the Crown, and all these questions submitted by the Crown are for the purpose of the Crown being informed what it ought to do as the head of the Executive. But that the Crown should be made the go-between between the House of Commons, or between the people and the court on the matter of an election, is quite unheard of. I am sure the very idea would be scouted in England, if proposed.

Mr. BLAKE. I regret that I am unable to agree with the hon. gentleman. We are in a very painful position, according to the statements of the hon. member for Victoria (Mr. Cameron) and the hon. member for Jacques Cartier (Mr. Girouard). We have been told on repeated occasions, in the discussion of this question, that it was a judicial question, that we were judges, that we were to act as judges, that we were to consider what the law is on this question, and were to decide according to the law. But these two hon. gentlemen tell us that we are judges who will not decide according to the law; that we are judges who—whether or not our opinion be that the particular Act of Parliament which is called in question here is within the constitutional powers of this Parliament, or is a binding law—may not offer to decide as the judges on the Bench would decide; and therefore, we are to decide the law, but not in accordance with the law; we are to decide the law, but in a limited, lame, perfunctory manner; we must be blind as to the system of Parliament, must be deaf to difficulties as to the validity of an Act of Parliament, must be obliged to ignore wholly the fundamental proposition that a portion of a free British race are not to be bound by laws which they themselves have not had a part in making. That is what the hon. gentlemen have indicated they believed the Judges of the land would determine to be the law as applicable to this case, but we, the judges in this particular case, they say, are prevented from so deciding, and are obliged to judge against, and not according to, the law. That is not my opinion. I believe that, if we are judges, we are free to judge according to the law. I believe that, this being a legal question, we are bound to decide it according to the whole law. The proposition that a particular Act of Parliament, from its being beyond our powers to apply it to the Island at the time we passed it, does not apply to the Island, is a proof which, as the judges in the case, we are free to decide upon, and affirm or negative according to our conclusion as to what the law would do. If the proposition of these hon. gentlemen be correct, and I dispute it, with the respect which is due to their legal opinion—but I entertain a very decided contrary one—how unfortunate a position is that in which the Parliament of Canada stands at this moment—that within a few minutes we are to pronounce upon this question as judges, not according to, but against, the law. From that difficulty a mode of escape presents itself for those who believe that the difficulty exists; but for all of us who recognize that there are doubts and difficulties as to what the true decision, according to the law, is, there is also a mode of escape. The hon. gentleman interposes and says there is no mode of escape. You, and you alone, are the judges, and you, the sole judges of the case, are here cramped, fettered and limited in your judicial powers so that you must decide against and not according to the law. Why is that? The hon. gentleman says the Crown cannot know what is going on here. It is unconstitutional, he says, for the Crown to know what is going on here, and therefore the Crown cannot refer this question to the Supreme Court. Further, he says the Crown has nothing to do with the election. I admit that, but the Ministers sometimes have. And what right, he asks, has the Crown to submit to the Supreme Court, the question about elections. Nobody proposes that the Crown should, sua sponte, without the request of the people, manifested by an application from this House, intervene to provide a mode of obtaining the decision of the highest tribunal of this country, of that tribunal which, if this case had come before the judicial tribunals in the ordinary way, would have been the tribunal of ultimate appeal, which would have had to pass upon it. If that mode could be obtained by the action of this House, as it can be; if following up the motion of the hon. gentleman, the proper course were followed of presenting an address to the Crown, as the medium of communication between this House and the court, to refer their questions to the Supreme Court, they could be referred to that court, and we would be seized of their judgment. I can see nothing unconstitutional, improper, or impossible in a transaction of that description. I am sorry we should be approaching a judgment, such as we are about to render according to the views of the hon. gentlemen to which I have referred. It has been my fortune when sitting among the majority in this House, to have been concerned with the other hon. members, in the settlement of two cases which affected the seats of members in this House—one in which a member of their minority was concerned, the hon. member for Two Mountains, whose seat was attacked, and the other in which the right to sit here of an hon. gentleman, who at that time filled the chair, Mr. Speaker, you now occupy, was disputed. On those two occasions the matter was referred to the Committee on Privileges and Elections, and in both cases we were able to arrive at an unanimous deliverance, and to deal with them in a spirit which reflected, I think, no discredit on Parliament as a judiciary on those occasions. We are now on the eve of coming to a decision which is not going to reflect credit on

Parliament, if there is going to be a decision on this question, in which party lines will take the place of impartial judgment. I agree with the hon. member for Huron that this case is involved in considerable difficulties. I see that those great difficulties are going to be looked at through party eyes. I am not blaming one or the other side of the House, but am expressing my deep regret that that should be the conclusion of this dispute, and that the visible mode which has been suggested for averting such conclusions, is to be rejected. I had hoped that when these presented itself before the eyes of the House, the opportunity of obtaining an ultimate tribunal, to which, in point of law, this question should have been referred, the House would have been glad to say: We will obtain the opinion of the Judges of the land, and by that be guided. But as that is to be refused, as one hon. gentleman says is unconstitutional, and as other hon. gentlemen have said it is impossible; and as we are told we are to decide as judges, but without having the power of judges; and we are bound to decide not the whole question which the Judges would decide—I suppose the majority will determine that it is out of the question; anxious as they are to get more light, they refuse to get it; and having determined to decide with the limited powers, they say we possess, the result will be, Parliament will give a place in this House to the gentleman whom the people did not elect, but rejected.

Mr. BRECKEN. It is not my intention to delay the House by going into the points presented in this case, for they have been fully argued by gentlemen on both sides. I was not in the House when my hon. colleague spoke, but was informed he had stated to the House that while Dr. Robertson was instructed to resign, another gentleman in exactly the same position was instructed not to resign. I was not in the Island when the local elections took place, but my hon. friend from King's County who sits at my right says, that my hon. colleague is wrong. The facts connected with Mr. Robertson's resignation are before the House. I may now assume that dual representation is prohibited in Prince Edward Island. He sent in his resignation on the 13th June, but it did not reach the Governor's office on the 8th of July. I was not in the Island and know nothing of the circumstances; but there was another gentleman, they say, who was precisely in the same position and on the same side of politics as Dr. Robertson. He was a candidate for the Local Parliament, and was elected, and was also a candidate at the last Dominion Election. I cannot state the fact whether Mr. Perry actually resigned, or to whom he resigned, but I am instructed by my hon. friend on my right to say that he was present at several of the political meetings which took place before the Dominion Elections, and Mr. Perry was interrogated as to whether or not he had resigned, and he said he had. Of course Dr. Robertson is not bound to anything that Mr. Perry did or did not do; but I may state, from the information I have received from Prince Edward Island, I never heard a man on either side of politics who doubted that a member of the Local Legislature was bound to resign before he was competent to be a candidate for the Dominion Parliament. The excuse that is attempted to be made to account for the fact that the resignation did not reach the hands of the Lieutenant-Governor on the 8th of July, was that one of the gentlemen to whom the resignation was sent was absent from the Island. But Dr. McLaren was there, and there was nothing in the world to prevent him from sending in the resignation to the Lieutenant-Governor. I am not in possession of the facts, but I have not the slightest doubt that Dr. Robertson intended to pursue the same course as Mr. Perry. Mr. Perry, as I am informed by my friends here, stated on several occasions that he had resigned, and at a meeting he was interrogated by an elector and stated that he had resigned. Mr. Perry was defeated in the Dominion Election, and he is sitting in the Local Legislature of Prince Edward Island at this moment voting and assisting to make laws for the Province by virtue of his first election. I do not want to say anything disrespectful of Dr. Robertson; I have known him well when sitting with him in the Local Legislature, when he was a good Conservative, and I am not going to say anything against him as a private member of society, but I must say that it is my firm conviction that his resignation was not bona fide, and if he had not succeeded in obtaining a majority of the votes he would to-day be found sitting in the Local Legislative Assembly making laws for that Province. While, of course, I could not state positively that his resignation was not genuine, I believe he made it conditional, and that if he had been rejected at the polls it would have been withdrawn, and, like Mr. Perry's, it would never have seen the light.

Mr. BLANCHET moved:

That it be Resolved,—That the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery do attend the House forthwith, with the return for the Electoral District of King's County, in the Island of Prince Edward, and amend the same, by erasing the name of James E. Robertson, Esq.

Motion agreed to, on the same division.

The Clerk of the Crown in Chancery attended, in obedience to the Order of the House, and altered the said return accordingly.

Mr. CASGRAIN (Translation). Mr. Speaker, I would like to know, first, by whose order the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery is preparing that report at this moment, and then if he is restricting himself to the wording of the motion, which says that the name of Mr. Robertson should simply be struck out in the return?

Mr. SPEAKER. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. Have the orders of the House been complied with, Mr. Speaker. I should desire the return as changed in conformity with the orders of the House, to be read. I want to see what the majority have accomplished.

The ASSISTANT CLERK. In obedience to the orders of the House, I have altered the above return by erasing the name of James Edmund Robertson therefrom.

Mr. BLAKE. I wish the return read as altered. I want to see what the return is now.

The ASSISTANT CLERK:

"I hereby certify that one of the members elected for the Electoral District of King's County, pursuant to the within writ, as having received the majority of the votes lawfully given, Peter Adolphus McIntyre, &c.; and I further certify that James E. Robertson"

Mr. BLAKE. Oh, Oh! I thought that this name had disappeared, Mr. Speaker. The Clerk is reading what is hardly called for in the return. What is desired is simply the concluding portion in which are the words :

"I further do make this return regarding the said James E. Robertson and Augustine McDonald, known of all concerned."

Mr. SPEAKER. This is a special return ; and of course the formal motion that has been made, would only make nonsense of it, if it struck out the name of Jas. E. Robertson, wherever it occurs. We must try and keep the proceedings of the House regular. The motion is in effect to amend the return so as to make it the return of Augustine C. McDonald.

Mr. BLAKE. The motion as I understand it, which the House agreed to by a majority, is to amend the return by erasing the name of Jas. E. Robertson, and I understand that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery has erased the name from the part, which the Assistant Clerk was reading when you interposed, Sir. He proceeded to read leaving out the name. We should have things regular.

Mr. SPEAKER. All relating to Jas. E. Robertson cannot be erased from the return.

Mr. BLAKE. That would have given the return to Augustine C. McDonald. There will have to be another motion.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I move the following motion :—

That the said return be further amended, by striking out all the words in the same after the words : "I further certify that" and inserting the words following: Augustine Colin McDonald, of Montague Bridge, in King's County, merchant, is also elected for the said Electoral District, as having the next highest number of votes lawfully given at such election."

Mr. CASGRAIN. I beg to enter my remonstrance against this motion. We are putting words in the mouth of a third party who is not present, and I say that, as a matter of common sense, we cannot agree to do so.

Motion agreed to on the same division.

Mr. SPEAKER. I have the honor to inform the House that the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery has attended and made the correction ordered by the House.

PROCEDURE OF THE HOUSE.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Before the House adjourns I wish to call attention to the fact that an enormous amount of time is consumed in recording our votes. The first division took about twenty minutes, and altogether with our 211 members about seventy hours and three minutes were taken up in recording our divisions to-night. If we followed the plan which is adopted in the House of Commons in England we would have saved an hour.

Motion agreed to, and (at 1:45 o'clock a.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

THURSDAY, 26th April, 1883.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

OFFENCES AGAINST PERSONS EMPLOYED IN FACTORIES.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY, in introducing Bill (No. 117) to define certain offences against persons employed in factories, said: I will briefly state the main provisions of the Bill. The employment in a factory of any child, or of any woman, shall be deemed to be unlawful, and so that the health of such child or woman is likely to be permanently injured if in that factory there is any contravention of the following provisions of this section, that is to say:—1. A child under twelve years of age shall not be employed in any factory. 2. Except as hereinafter provided, a child between the ages of twelve and fifteen years shall not be employed in any factory, unless the employer of such child has in his possession, and produces when thereto requested by the inspector, a certificate signed by the parent, guardian or other person having the legal custody or control over such child, in which certificate the person signing it shall state the date thereof, the age of such child at said date, and the birth place of such child. 3. Except as is herein otherwise provided, a child or woman shall not be employed for more than ten hours in one day, nor more than for sixty hours in any one week. Provision is, however, made in case a mill breaks down, or circumstances occur by which it is deemed necessary that the operatives should be employed over sixty hours a week, that they shall be so employed; but this over-time is not to extend more than six weeks in any year. Every factory shall be kept in a cleanly state and free from effluvia arising from any drain, privy, or any other nuisance. No factory shall be so over-crowded as to be prejudicial to the health of those employed therein. Every factory shall be ventilated in such a manner as to render harmless, so far as is reasonably practicable, all the gases, vapors, dust or other impurities that may be injurious to health, generated in the course of the manufacturing process or handicraft carried on therein. In every factory there shall be kept provided a sufficient number and description of earth or water closets, and urinals for the employes of such factory; such closets and urinals shall at all times be kept clean and well ventilated, and separate closets or sets of closets shall be provided for the use of male and female employes, and shall have respectively separate approaches. A factory in which there is a contravention of this section shall be deemed to be kept unlawfully and so that the health of any person employed therein is likely to be permanently injured. In every factory where it appears to the inspector that there is any act, neglect or default in relation to any over-crowding, ventilation, drain, privy, earth closet, water closet, ash pit, water supply, nuisance or other matter whereby health may be affected in a factory, he may give notice thereof in writing to the employer, who shall, within a reasonable time, take such action thereon as the inspector deems proper and necessary; and, in every factory where any process is carried on, by which dust is generated and inhaled to an injurious extent by the employes, if it appears to the inspector that such inhalation could by mechanical means be prevented or partly prevented, he may direct that such means shall be provided within a reasonable time by the employer, who, in such case, shall be bound so to provide them. A factory in which the provisions of this section are not complied with by the employer shall be deemed to be kept unlawfully and so that the health of any person employed therein is likely to be permanently injured. For the purposes of the two next preceding sections the inspector may take with him into any factory a medical man, health officer, inspector of nuisances or other officer of the local sanitary authority. In every factory all belting, shafting, gearing, fly-wheels, drums and other moving parts of the machinery; all vats, pans, cauldrons, reservoirs, wheel races, flumes, water channels, doors, openings in the floors or walls, bridges, and all other like dangerous structures or places shall be, as far as practicable, securely guarded. No machinery, other than steam engines, shall be cleaned while in motion, if the inspector so directs by written notice. The openings of every hoistway, hatchway, elevator or well-hole shall be at each floor provided with and protected by good and sufficient trap-doors or self-closing hatches and safety catches, and by such other safeguards as the inspector directs, and such trap doors shall be kept closed at all times except when in actual use by persons duly authorized by the employer to use the same. All elevator cabs or cars, whether used for freight or passengers, shall be provided with some suitable mechanical device to be approved by the inspector, whereby the cab or car will be securely held in the event of accident to the shipper rope or hoisting machinery, or from any similar cause. A factory in which there is a contravention of this section shall be deemed to be kept unlawfully and so that the life of any person employed therein is endangered. In every factory there shall be such means of extinguishing fire as the inspector directs in writing, and he shall have regard to the circumstances of each case. The main inside and outside doors shall open outwardly, wherever the inspector deems it necessary and so directs in writing; and every factory three or more storeys in height, in which persons are employed above the second storey, unless supplied with a sufficient number of tower stairways, shall be provided with a sufficient number of fire escapes; said fire escapes shall consist of an iron stairway with a suitable railing, and shall be connected with the interior of the building by doors or windows, and shall have suitable landings at every storey above the first, including the attic if the attic is occupied as a workroom. Such fire escapes shall be kept in good repair, and free from obstruction or encumbrance of any kind. A factory or workshop in which there is a contravention of this section shall be deemed to be kept unlawfully, and so that the life of any person employed therein is endangered. Whoever unlawfully employs in a factory any child or any woman so that the health of such child or woman is likely to be permanently injured, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be liable to imprisonment for any term not more than —years, or to a fine of not more than—dollars, and in default of immediate payment of such fine, then to imprisonment as aforesaid. Whoever unlawfully keeps a factory that the life of any person employed therein is endangered, or so that the health of any person employed therein is likely to be permanently injured, is guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be liable to imprisonment for any term not more than —years, or to a fine of not more than—dollars, and in default of immediate payment of such fine, then to imprisonment as aforesaid. These are the principle provisions of the Bill, and I now move the first reading.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. gentleman state whether there is any definition of the term "factory;" what the general proposition as to factories is; how soon it is proposed that the Bill shall come into operation, and how many inspectors there will be?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. There is a clause defining a factory in the meaning of the Act. We have not decided when the Bill shall come into operation. As to the number of inspectors, there may be one or two, probably one will be sufficient; but that is a matter which we will take into consideration.

Bill read the first time.

TRANSLATION OF VOTES AND PROCEEDINGS.

Mr. LANDRY (Translation). Mr. Speaker. Before discussing the Orders of the Day, I wish to call the attention of the Government, or the persons responsible for the translation of the Votes and Proceedings of the House, to the character of the translation of these Votes and Proceedings. For instance, in yesterday's Votes and Proceedings there is a very important report of a Special Committee appointed to investigate on Inter-Provincial Trade. This report appears in the worst French imaginable. The fact is, it is not French at all. The first phrase especially is not French. I will not enter into further details relative to this report as translated, which I consider a disgrace to our Journals.

BILL INTRODUCED.

The following Bill was introduced, and read the first and second times:—

Bill (No. 118) to amend the Act incorporating the European, American, Canadian and Asiatic Cable Company, limited, and to change the name thereof to the American, British and Continental Cable Company, limited.—(Mr. Colby.)

THE GENERAL INSPECTION ACT.

Mr. COSTIGAN, in moving the second reading of Bill (No. 104) to amend the General Inspection Act of 1874, said: Under the Act of 1874 it is provided that Black Sea and Flinty Fife wheat shall in no case be inspected higher than No. 2, and this provision, it is contended by the people of the North-West, is entirely against their interests, as this wheat is the best grown in that country. This is evident from the fact that the Canadian Pacific Railway carried that wheat for seeding purposes into that country free of charge, and that it commands a higher price than any other quality grown there. It is for the purpose of removing this objection that this amendment is proposed: "Black Sea wheat and, except when grown in the Province of Manitoba or North-West Territories, Flinty Fife wheat shall in no case be inspected as higher than No. 2." It was also necessary, in order to have the inspection of wheat at all in Manitoba and the North-West Territories, that we should amend another section of the Act of 1874, because when that Act was passed, giving authority to appoint inspectors, Winnipeg was not considered among the larger cities, and consequently not included in the Act. The name of Winnipeg is, therefore, inserted among those of the other cities in which the Boards of Trade have the power of appointing examiners, who will examine and appoint the inspectors according to instructions. There is another short clause which it was thought advisable to introduce, with respect to the inspection of hides. Section eighty-seven of the Act of 1874 is altered by striking out the words "raw hides" when they occur. One of the sections of that law provides that the inspection of raw hides is compulsory, and an inspector is appointed; but the inspection of leather is not compulsory, and while that is clearly the intention of the law, section eighty-seven is so framed as to leave doubt and confusion on that subject. Section ninety-six of the Act of 1874 provides "that the inspection of raw hides shall be compulsory in every place where an inspector or deputy inspector has been appointed, and every raw hide sold, offered for sale, or for export, or laden in any vehicle or vessel for the purpose of being exported, and which has not been first inspected, stamped, or marked as herein required, shall be forfeited." It is proposed that we strike out the words, in the eighty-seventh clause, "raw hides," where they occur, and make the word "weights," when it occurs, in the singular instead of in the plural.

Mr. LAURIER. There can be no objection to the first part of this Bill. I presume that the clause in relation to the inspection of wheat has been rendered necessary by local circumstances. But I see no necessity whatever for the change proposed by the third clause in respect to the working of hides. I understood the hon. Minister to say there was a contradiction between sections ninety-six and eighty-seven of the present Act, and it was to remedy this contradiction that the Bill was proposed. In my opinion there is no contradiction between those two sections. Section ninety-six merely provides that no raw hides shall be offered for sale unless first inspected. It reads as follows:—

“The inspection of ‘raw hides’ shall be compulsory at every place where an inspector or deputy inspector has been appointed, and every raw hide sold, offered for sale, or exported, offered for export, or laden in any vehicle or vessel for the purpose of being exported, and which has not been first inspected and stamped or marked, as herein required, shall be forfeited, and the person so selling or offering for sale, or exporting the same, shall incur a penalty of one dollar for every hide so sold, offered for sale, or exported.”

It merely says that no raw hides shall be offered for sale unless first inspected. Now, section eighty-seven is not in contradiction with this clause. It says:

“Any person, except the inspector or deputy inspector, who shall stamp or number any of the raw hides or leather above mentioned, and shall expose them for sale, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding twenty dollars; but he shall be at liberty to mark on the said raw hides or leather, in ordinary and legible figures, the weights of the said raw hides or leather, and in such cases the words ‘not inspected’ shall be marked above the said figures, in letters of the same dimensions, and as legible as the said figures; and any person who shall expose for sale any raw hides or leather the weights of which shall be so marked without the words ‘not inspected,’ as above prescribed, shall be liable to a fine not exceeding twenty dollars.”

While this section merely says that no one except the inspector or deputy inspector shall mark the raw hide—that is to say, the weight of the raw hide—unless at the same time he adds the words “not inspected.” It is simply for the guidance of the purchaser. Any one is at liberty to put any figure on any raw hide. We all know that raw hides are always sold by weight; and any one is at liberty to put on the raw hide any figure—50 or 60, for instance—and the purchaser would likely presume that this was marked and inspected unless the words “not inspected” were added to show that it had not been done by an official. This applies to both leathers and raw hides, and I do not see why we should amend in the one case and not in the other. These two dispositions do not conflict with each other. Section ninety-six merely says that no hides or leathers shall be exposed for sale unless marked; while section eighty-seven merely says that no one shall mark the weight on the leather unless at the same time he cautions the public by adding the words “not inspected.” I see no reason why this change should not be carried out in the one case as in the other. By striking out the words “raw hide” you deprive the public of the guarantee they have in section eighty-seven. If the Bill passes, the consequence will be that any one in the market would be at liberty to put any figures whatever as the weight of the raw hide, and he would be relieved from the necessity of adding the words necessary to show the public that the hide is not inspected. Consequently the purchaser will be led into error by the fraud, and he will have no remedy. It seems to me the argument applies as well to raw hides as to leather. If I might venture to say so, I would say that my hon. friend is mistaken when he says that the two clauses conflict with each other. Section ninety-six provides only for inspection, while section eighty-seven refers merely to the marking and the weight. The hon. Minister will see this if he will read carefully the eighty-seventh section. I see no contradiction between the two sections, while it seems to me that the proposed change will deprive the purchaser of the guarantee he now possesses.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Of course, I do not pretend to be more able in legally interpreting these clauses than the hon. gentleman who has just taken his seat. He may be right, but I have proposed this change because the question has already been before the courts, and this amendment seems to be necessary. Now, the inspection of leather is not compulsory, but the inspection of raw hides is compulsory. The law does not recognize that a man shall deal with any but inspected hides, while it does recognize his right to mark his leather. But the inspection of leather not being compulsory, all the law requires him to do is that when he marks it he shall do it in such a manner that the public will not be deceived.

Bill read the second time; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. DUNDAS. I could not distinctly hear the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue, but it seems to me that the object which the hon. Minister has in view in amending this Bill, is to allow the hard wheat grown in the northern Province of the Dominion to be graded as higher than No. 2 under certain circumstances. I think that is quite right; but I also hold that the same privilege should be allowed to Ontario and other Provinces where the same class of wheat is grown. I was surprised to find that by the Inspection Law that grain, even of a higher class than No. 2, and the most valuable kinds of spring wheat grown in this country, could only be placed in that grade. I cannot think why it is that this distinction has been made against spring wheat, but I can very well understand why the newly-settled districts in the North-West wish to have it removed. I hold that it should, at the same time, be removed from wheat grown in the older Provinces. It is well known that hard, flinty wheat will, to-day, bring in Toronto and other markets many cents per bushel more than ordinary spring wheat; yet, by the interpretation of the law, it is provided that it shall not be graded higher than No. 2. I call the attention of the hon. Minister to this subject, and I ask him to extend the same privilege to Toronto and other markets where this wheat is sold, as it is proposed to extend to Winnipeg.

Mr. COSTIGAN. With respect to the suggestion made by the hon. member, I do not think it advisable to make these changes at present. The change now being made in the Act has been brought about by the representations of the Board of Trade at Winnipeg, of the millers of that country, of the managers of railways, and the public generally, which go to show that the people of the North-West feel the necessity of this change being made. This Inspection Act was passed in 1874. It has been in operation since then in the older Provinces, and no representation has been made asking for a change in the direction indicated, except from Manitoba and the North-West Territory. I do not deny that such a change might not become necessary as regards the older Provinces, but no change should be made in an Act of this importance without very serious consideration, and without receiving representations from the Boards of Trade in the cities to which the hon. gentleman has referred. If the matter is brought before the House by the Boards of Trade in Montreal, Toronto and other cities, even at this late period of the Session, the Government might alter the Bill. Very little inconvenience had been caused from the operation of the Act during the last four years, and the public interest will not suffer much if the Act is allowed to remain in force for the rest of the Dominion, and the amendments proposed to be applied to Manitoba and the North-West, be adopted.

Mr. DUNDAS. I will not press the matter further on the attention of the hon. Minister, but I am quite sure that had it been brought before the notice of the Boards of Trade in Toronto, Montreal, and other cities in Ontario, they would have sought the same change in the Inspection Act as Winnipeg asks for. I might mention, moreover, that I have been told by an hon. gentleman in this House that he is purchasing some of this kind of wheat in the North-West Territory, which is at present prohibited from being classed higher than No. 2, in order to have the pure seed, with a view to introducing it on his own farm. In the district where I reside and do business, a large quantity of this wheat is grown, and to-day, or any day during the past six months, it will bring from 5 cts. to 7 cts. per bushel more in Toronto than the ordinary No. 2 wheat. Having pointed out this inequality; I will leave the matter with the hon. Minister, and I am sure, before another year has elapsed, the change sought by Winnipeg will be asked by Toronto and other cities.

Bill reported.

THE MILITIA OF CANADA.

The House resumed the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Caron: That Bill (No. 31) to consolidate and amend the laws affecting the Militia of Canada, be now considered as amended; and the motion of Mr. Ross (Middlesex) in amendment thereto.

Mr. CARON. Mr. Speaker: I may say, in regard to the amendment which is suggested by the hon. member for West Middlesex (Mr. Ross), that I have looked into, and am perfectly willing, as I agree with the proposition suggested by the hon. member, to introduce it into the regulations which will be the controlling law of the Militia; but I think as it is a matter of discipline that it should not be introduced into the Bill as being a clause which will remain upon the Statute-book. Hon. gentlemen who know the manner in which these matters are regulated, will understand that up to the present time they have been left, and I think rightly left, to the commanding officer, who always took the measures which were required to be taken for the carrying out of discipline in the camps of instruction which were held in different parts of the Dominion. I believe that the result must have convinced the hon. gentleman that so far it has been successful, as we have received no complaints from any quarter as to the manner in which these camps of instruction were conducted; but as I believe that during the time when the Militia force are engaged in their drill, and in their exercises for the purpose of improving their instruction in military matters, they can very well get along without any stimulants like those mentioned in the amendment of the hon. gentleman; and I think that, if the hon. gentleman will consent, and if he considers that the regulations framed by the Department which are always the law under which the Militia is conducted while in camps of instruction, he will see that these regulations will exactly meet what he requires, and thus we will not place in this Bill, and on the Statute-book, an amendment which might at some time or other require to be altered, owing to the peculiar necessities in which the force might be placed; and were this the case, we would have to come to Parliament to have it amended. I am perfectly willing to insert in the regulations the amendment which has been suggested by the hon. gentleman; but I believe, from what he himself has told me, that what I propose will be satisfactory, and will meet his views.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I am exceedingly glad to know that the hon. Minister of Militia is disposed to entertain favorably the proposition which I made with regard to canteens. I am afraid, however, that by the structure of clause sixty-four it will be almost impossible for him to provide regulations to meet the matter in point, unless some alteration is made in clause sixty-four. If the hon. gentleman looks at it he will see it reads as follows:—

“The active Militia shall be subject to the Queen's Regulations and orders for the Army.”

Here by the Statute, the Queen's Regulations and orders, not the regulations and orders of the hon. Minister of Militia, are those which control the army—that is by Statute. Now, I cannot see that the hon. gentleman's Departmental regulations would supersede the wording of the Statute; and, under the regulations and orders for the army by the Queen, I see it is quite within their power to sell beer and malt liquors in camp.

Mr. CARON. Quite right; and it is under that very clause that I have the power, as Minister of Militia, to make any regulations which shall be required for the control of these canteens; and I can say that, under that very clause which the hon. gentleman has just quoted, in the canteens in our camps, instead of selling ale, and what is mentioned there, they have to confine themselves to selling—

Mr. ROSS. Tea and coffee.

Mr. CARON. Not cold water, but ginger ale and anything of that kind.

Mr. ROSS. That is just where I find a difficulty, whether the hon. Minister of Militia had the power, seeing that the Militia were under the Queen's Regulations and orders for the Army, to make regulations which would serve the purpose I have in view. I do not see it myself very clearly; but perhaps some other hon. gentleman, who is more familiar with the matter than I am, may throw light on the subject. The hon. Minister of Militia ought certainly to understand his own power in this matter; and if my object be fully carried out in that way I would not have the slightest objection. All I want to get at is the prohibition of beer in camps; and that I know I can get at. I think that the opinion of the House will sustain me in the proposition I have made, as the opinion of the hon. Minister of Militia does sustain me; but I want to be sure, doubly sure, that this opportunity which is afforded me is not allowed to escape.

Mr. CARON. I cannot say anything more than I have already stated; and if the hon. gentleman is not willing to accept my statement, and what I am now telling the hon. gentleman—that I am included in those regulations—

Mr. ROSS. All right then.

Mr. CARON. Does the hon. gentleman accept that? I am anxious to carry out and include his very amendment in the regulations which will control the camps; and that I undertake to say I will do.

Mr. ROSS. I will accept the proposition of the hon. gentleman, and I am exceedingly glad that he is disposed to entertain the proposition which I made. I believe it will add to the comfort of the soldiers in the camps, and add to the facilities with which the officers will control the men; and I think it will also raise the active Militia in the estimation of the people. What I was afraid, very much afraid of, was, that many of our young men going into camp, would there be brought in contact with the drinking usages of the camp, and become demoralized; and, on that account, many are not disposed to allow those over whom they have control, such as grown up sons, to join the Militia force, just because of the dangerous associations. The assurances of the hon. Minister of Militia will raise the force in the estimation of a certain portion of the community, and I am sure it will encourage those who are endeavoring to raise its moral standard in this respect very much.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not know whether the Government will agree, but I know of two hostile camps, not very remote from here; and if they would apply the same principle to those camps and go a little farther than the little sustenance they now have.

Amendment (Mr. Ross, Middlesex) withdrawn.

Mr. CARON moved the third reading of the Bill.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Mr. Speaker: Before the Bill is read the third time I want to call attention particularly to the new portion contained in clause twenty-one of the Bill. From the tenor of the debate in this House, as well as from conversations with many interested in the Militia force, added to which I may state my own convictions, I am satisfied that the change which the hon. Minister of Militia proposes in clause twenty-one is a change decidedly in the wrong direction. The proposition of the Bill is to increase very largely the Department of our Militia expenditure, which, in my humble judgment, is sufficiently large at the present time. If I rightly understand—speaking as a civilian—how the Militia force can be made effective, I would say that the best method of rendering the Militia force effective would be through the drill and the training of the active force. We are spending largely, as I have already said, for Military instruction at the present moment, and the amount expended on military instruction is, in my judgment, out of all proportion to the amount of money spent for drilling the active force. For instance, we spent, last year, on "B" Battery, $65,648; on "A" Battery, $50,516; on the Military College, $58,937; on drill instruction in Military Districts, $38,471; and on Military Colleges, $5,317, or a total of $218,942. This was the amount expended last year for instruction, and these facilities for instruction are not confined to one portion of the country. We have a battery at Quebec, and another at Kingston; we have military schools at Toronto, Montreal, Ottawa, and St. John, and we have Wimbledon teams, and so on—all expenditures for military instruction. Let us contrast the liberality of the Government in this respect with the amount they have paid for the drill of the active Militia. The amount paid the men for drill last year was $227,255. We have scarcely spent more than about $9,000 more in drilling the whole active force of the Militia than we have spent on instruction in "A" and "B" Batteries, the Military Colleges, and elsewhere—instructions which are not extended to the active force. We had in the Military College, last year, seventy persons; in "A" Battery, 105; in "B" Battery, 193, or a total of 368, and the greater portion of the $218,000 which I mentioned, was spent for the instruction of these 368 men, whereas $227,000 was all that was distributed amongst the 20,000 men of the actual Militia force. The hon. gentleman will see that by adding $200,000 more to the amount which is spent on instruction, he is spending that money in a direction in which the expenditure is already exceedingly large. I think it would conduce much more largely to the success and efficiency of the Militia force—if the hon. gentleman is bound to increase the expenditure—that he should spend it in drilling the men, instead of adding still further to the expenses for instruction. If he were to call out the men to drill sixteen days a year if necessary, or if he were to procure for them more efficient drill, I think he would add much more to the efficiency and usefulness of the force than by spending the money upon an additional troop of cavalry, or an additional battery, or increasing the number of the infantry. It will be noticed, besides, that the charge which the hon. gentleman is providing for by this Bill, will be a permanent charge, and not one which the hon. gentleman can easily relax at any moment. He establishes a battery at British Columbia, and the Department of Public Works will be at some expense having rooms and barracks and other accommodation provided for the battery; more men will be appointed for the necessary instruction, and there will be an addition to the permanent military staff in British Columbia as well as in connection with the troops of infantry to be enlisted at other points. A permanent charge will thus be imposed upon the country which will be difficult to remove hereafter. I would also like to ask the hon. Minister what object he has in enlisting permanently 750 men in addition to the present force; I do not see that this addition is absolutely required. It may be necessary for us to keep up "A" and "B" Batteries in order to protect the people in a time of civil commotion. It might even be necessary to have a nucleus of a Militia force in British Columbia; but, as hon. gentlemen will see, the expense to which the country is put at the present moment ought to be sufficient to meet all these objects. But to add an expenditure of $200,000 in enlisting 750 men, and taking them from active industrial pursuits when there is no present emergency, is something which I think the hon. gentleman would not have proposed if he had consulted the interests of the whole force, if he had consulted the public opinion of the country, or if he had consulted his own Major-General. The Major-General calls attention in his report to the small amount of drilling the men receive, and the small number of them that are trained. Let the hon. Minister of Militia adopt such reforms in the service as are in the directions suggested by these experienced officers—reforms which every one connected with the service would appreciate. In order to place my views on record, I move the following amendment, which I hope will command the approval of the House. That the said Bill be not now read the third time, but that it be

Resolved,—That by Clause 21 of the said Bill it is proposed to authorize the enlistment for continuous service, in addition to the existing Batteries "A" and "B," of a third Battery of Artillery, a Troop of Cavalry, and three Companies of Infantry which will involve an increased permanent charge upon the Revenue of over $2,000,000, in connection with the Militia,—That in the opinion of this House, if any increase in the charge for the Militia is to be made, the efficiency of the Force and the public good would be promoted by better provision for the training of the Active Militia, than by the proposed enlistment of a Battery of Artillery, a Troop of Cavalry and three Companies of Infantry, - and that the said Bill be referred back to a Committee of the Whole in order to amend the same, by omitting the provisions for the said proposed enlistment.

Mr. CARON. The manner in which my hon. friend has dealt with military matters since he began to devote attention to them, indicates the necessity which exists for getting up training schools, where the different branches of the service will be instructed in an efficient manner. I congratulate the hon. gentleman upon the manner in which he has taken to military life, because, from his first speech, one would have thought that he took no interest in military matters at all. I am glad to see that he is getting quite efficient, and I have no doubt that if he continues to qualify himself as he has been qualifying himself in the past, the Department will be ready to give him a certificate for his knowledge of military matters. But when he speaks of consulting the public opinion of this country, or the opinion of this House, I should like the hon. gentleman also to allow me, as Minister of Militia, to consult men who know what the Militia force of Canada is, and what is required for that force. If there is one clause in this Bill which is indispensable to the efficiency of the force it is this very clause which the hon. gentleman wishes me to strike out of the Bill; and I have no doubt the hon. gentleman will say so himself, when he advances a little further in his military studies. When the Bill was up for the second reading every hon. gentleman who could express an opinion about the force was in favor of this clause. The hon. gentleman says that we now propose to enlist 750 men. He does not consider that the 750 men mentioned in the Bill included "A" and "B" Batteries. We are not adding 750 men; nor is the force to be, as some papers and some hon. gentlemen have stated, a standing army. It is to be an instructional corps, for the purpose of giving to the militiamen of Canada instruction in matters connected with infantry drill, such as "A" and "B" Batteries have given in connection with artillery drill. The Minister of Militia is not trying to get up a standing army for Canada. I believe it is no menace to any military nation in the world to say that Canada wishes to give to the infantry branch of her Militia service the same instruction as we have given to the artillery, and to every other branch of the service; and if there is any one clause in this Bill which is more important than another, it is this very clause twenty-one, which the hon. gentleman wishes to drop out. The hon. gentleman might just as well ask me to consent to the withdrawal of my Bill. This is, of all the clauses, the most indispensable for properly training the Militia force of Canada, as you, Mr. Speaker, as a military man, will acknowledge; and as no other gentleman has objected to it other than my hon. friend opposite, who has commenced his military studies within a very short time, and who is doing uncommonly well, I have no doubt that after a little more time, he will see that this clause is the whole Bill, and that it is, of all the clauses, the one which we require to make the Militia force of Canada efficient. Without this clause, I can say that the expenditure for training purposes, though not entirely useless, would not produce those results which the Parliament and people of Canada would expect from the amount of money expended. But when we have these training schools established, hon. gentlemen will see that they will produce, for the infantry, exactly the same results which the artillery schools have produced for the artillery all over the country.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I am quite aware that it is the duty of every Member of Parliament to support the Government in every effort to improve the defence of the country. I should be sorry, indeed, to criticise adversely the propositions of the Government respecting the force, unless I was thoroughly satisfied that the propositions were wrong. Now, it has been admitted for years that all we require in a Militia force is the nucleus of what would be required in the event of disturbances occurring on our borders, such as have occurred, or in the event of the Mother Country being unfortunately plunged into war in which we would have to take some part. The view I have always held is, that we ought to keep our military establishment in such a position that we should have a thoroughly trained corps of officers in the first place, and the means of training non-commissioned officers in the second place, so that we might be able at a day's notice to place competent men in charge of our volunteer force. Anything approaching the status of a standing army has not been thought necessary or advisable in this country. When "A" and "B" Batteries were established, it was contended, and I think very properly so, that however rapidly we might succeed in training the infantry force for service in the field, it would be next to impossible to train an artillery corps in sufficient time to be of practical service in the field. The establishment of these two batteries, therefore, while they have sometimes been criticised somewhat hostilely, I have always looked upon as necessary for the maintenance of order in the country, or the maintenance of order in the North-West. I think there was a general consensus of opinion that it could best be accomplished by a force of police; and if there is anything required for the maintenance of order in the older Provinces, it seems to me that it should be in the direction of a police force rather than a military force. What the three corps of infantry are established for, I am bound to say the hon. gentleman has not explained very satisfactorily. They are, he says, to give to the infantry similar training to what is given to the artillery; but the two cases are entirely different—there is no similitude between them whatever. As I have pointed out, the training of artillery is a difficult matter, and requires time, while the training of an infantry corps is a rapid process. The system of drill is changed, and is now much easier than it was formerly; the conditions are entirely changed. Now, I have not been able to see the necessity for the establishment of these three infantry corps, or for raising a troop of cavalry. The cavalry forces in recent wars have not been of material service, or of so much service as the mounted infantry, who perform the part occasionally of cavalry and occasionally of infantry. Their services are now limited to rapid movements, by which a small body of men may be transported quickly from one point to another. No one dreams now of anticipating another Balaklava charge in the face of an artillery fire; and during the late war in the United States the cavalry was of comparatively little use. But we do not anticipate any state of war, at any rate; and why this cavalry troop is to be raised is really more than I can comprehend. What their duties are to be, where they are to be located, how they are to be maintained—nothing of that has been laid before the House; and I am bound to say that for these considerations I have the strongest possible sympathy with the motion made by the hon. member for West Middlesex. Besides, I do not think the subject has been brought before the House fairly. If it was the intention of the hon. Minister and the Government to create what is practically a standing army—it may be a small one, but still it is a standing army—they should have so informed the House; but the hon. Minister informs us now, that while the measure was called a Bill to consolidate the Militia Law, it is really a Bill to create a standing force, for he has told us that if this clause is struck out he will drop the Bill altogether, for he says that is the Bill, the whole Bill, and nothing but the Bill. Now it seems to me that a fair way to deal with this House would have been to have intimated the determination of the Government to increase the standing military force of the country, and to have given the reasons for so doing in introducing the Bill. But the Bill has been introduced apparently for a different purpose, and this clause which now turns out, by the confession of the hon. Minister of Militia, to be the real principle of the Bill, was introduced as a mere incident of the Bill. That is evidently not fair, and I trust the hon. gentleman will forego his intention at present of establishing this force, unless he is able to show us cogent reasons why our standing army should be increased.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I can quite appreciate the remarks of the hon. gentleman, because, although we happen to disagree on political questions very frequently—more frequently than I would like—I have always found the hon. gentleman true to the principle that every country worthy of the name should have a force adequate to protect itself, to protect order, and to assume its position as a country. I have listened, therefore, to the hon. gentleman's remarks with great pleasure. I do not think, however, he has quite understood the purport of my hon. colleague's remarks. The Bill is a consolidation of the Militia Law. That is the principle of the Bill. My hon. friend most candidly stated, when introducing the Bill, that he considered those amendments of primary importance, or if not of primary, of the very greatest importance. My hon. friend who has just spoken has shown that he appreciates the importance of our having an efficient Militia. But an efficient Militia can only be obtained by efficient training. In days of old our Militia force had before them the example of the British army. We had large military forces at Halifax, St. John, Quebec, Montreal, Kingston, Toronto and London, and the whole Militia body of Canada, the whole people of Canada, had an opportunity of seeing what soldiers were, and what soldiering and discipline meant. We have lost all that now, except the garrison at Halifax; we have no standard to work up to, and when this resolution admits that it is necessary there should be a provision for the training of an active Militia, it points really to the only mode, in my opinion, in which efficient training can be obtained. We have not the advantage of this standard to work up to. More than that, we have not the advantage of having in the country non-commissioned officers, trained soldiers, fit to train our Militia. Now it was one of the great incidental advantages of having portions of the British army stationed in Canada, that they left the most deserving men of their regiments in this country, men who had risen from the ranks by their intelligence and their soldier-like qualities, to be non-commissioned officers; and these men, seeing the advantages of settling in Canada, saved up their money in order to buy their discharge, or their friends in Canada bought their discharge, and we had a competent body of non-commissioned officers throughout Canada able to train our Militia. That advantage is all gone, and when the hon. gentleman in this motion admits that we must have an active Militia, and that an active Militia is of no value unless trained—who is to train them? They cannot train each other. That would be the blind leading the blind. We must have drilled and trained men. It is quite true we have a Military College and the two batteries. Those train a certain number of officers able to take company command, or perhaps subaltern command, but the main-stay of any army, that upon which its efficiency depends, is the efficiency of the non-commissioned officers. Why the British army in the whole of its Peninsula service depended for its efficiency, as the Duke of Wellington admitted—that magnificent army which he said could do anything or go anywhere—upon the non-commissioned officers. These men cannot get their training by intuition of 16, 18 or 24 days in the year. They may in that time learn a little drill, but they cannot learn discipline, nor organization, nor the knowledge which will enable them to govern men. The proposition in this Bill is simply to have a training school for non-commissioned officers. The short service system which has been introduced in England by Mr. Cardwell, now Lord Cardwell, has been very successful in the sense of making the army popular, and inducing a great number of young men to join for three years who could not afford to give seven or twenty-one years to the service. But while it has been beneficial in that sense, it has failed to a wonderful extent in not supplying the requisite number of efficient non-commissioned officers, and the military authorities are now at their wits end—I have occasion, as a matter of curiosity, to read all their reports—to get a sufficient staff of non-commissioned officers. The commissioned officers are all well enough in their way. They are all absolutely necessary, but still not all the skill from the commander-in-chief down to the ensign will be sufficient to make an efficient army unless you have a well-trained efficient staff of non-commissioned officers. It is for this purpose, in the absence of the supply we used to get from the British Army, that this small additional expense is to be incurred. It is in order that the young men of the separate infantry corps should be trained here, and when they leave supply in the different sections of the country what is absolutely necessary, a non-commissioned force to manage company training. The basis of all military organization is company training, and you cannot have efficient company training unless you have well-trained non-commissioned officers to carry out in every-day life, in camp, in barracks, in drill, the commands of the commissioned officers. At this small expense it is proposed we will have a small troop of cavalry using to a certain extent the cavalry horses which are required by the batteries, and where will be trained the non-commissioned officers required for cavalry movements, and the same with respect to infantry corps. Just as the hon. gentleman established—I must say against my opinion—the Kingston Military College—and I am not too proud to say that college has been a success—to train commissioned officers, we propose to have a body of trained non-commissioned officers to command our Militia; and, if the expense were double what it is, it would not be too great to secure the object to be gained by it. Just as the Military College is to furnish the commissioned officers, so these three infantry schools and this one troop of cavalry are to give a perpetual means of supplying non-commissioned officers, sergeants and corporals, to train and drill our Militia. Now, Mr. Speaker, when we undertook this matter, the main attack that was made—and there was some foundation for it, perhaps a good deal of foundation for it—was that too large a proportion of money was expended on the headquarters staff, or on the district staff, and that a sufficient sum of money was not given for training the soldiery. Well, this is a step in the other direction. Ever since we have taken hold of it the Government has been, my hon.

friend has been, his predecessor has been, reducing the expense of the staff.

Mr. CARON. About $11,000.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The number of District Adjutant-Generals has been reduced, the number of Brigade Majors has been reduced, and this is an attempt to make the Militia really efficient. The annual vote that Parliament can afford to give for training the Militia is in the discretion of Parliament; but this is an attempt to carry out the idea that the active Militia shall be trained by efficient non-commissioned officers. And how are they to be supplied, unless you have some school for them? Suppose you have no such school, you have no army, you have no means of getting a supply of sergeants and corporals. You call out a number of young fellows to form a company. One looks at the other, the other looks at the third, and not one of them knows anything about drill. Their officers may be young men coming from the Military College; they know their drill, but they see that they have only civilians before them, who do not know anything about soldiering, and how can an officer select the proper men to be non-commissioned officers? But the moment the colonel knows that he has got within his battalion a certain number of men who have been trained in these infantry schools, or in this cavalry troop, and who have left those schools with a good conduct certificate as being good soldiers and good men, then he knows at once that he has got the means of bringing the men into active and efficient drill. I cannot fancy any proposition more efficient in its way, and less expensive. But you must remember, Mr. Speaker, that we are scarcely doing our duty to England by the amount we have hitherto expended. My hon. friend from East York remembers that, in 1865, a certain arrangement was made. I was one of a party that went home on behalf of the Government, and his former leader and great personal friend, and my colleague, Mr. Brown, went with us; and it was then understood that the then four Provinces should expend not less than $1,000,000 a year in keeping up the Militia force, an auxiliary force, in the then four Provinces. Well, Sir, we have not spent that sum yearly. Some years it has been $800,000, some years less, and some years a little more; but we never have really worked up to the fair engagement we made with Her Majesty's Government in England, when they handed over all their fortifications and all their ordnance lands to Canada.

Mr. BLAKE. What of the Mounted Police?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh! The Mounted Police is a different affair. It arose afterwards, it arose out of our own ambition to get the western country. That was not involved in the discussion with Her Majesty's Government. The Mounted Police was formed for Canadian purposes, and not with any view of carrying out the arrangement made with Her Majesty's Government in 1865. Now, with respect to the cavalry. My hon. friend opposite objected to our paying a troop of cavalry, because cavalry had not been so powerful for warlike purposes as it had been formerly. Well, that was the current idea until the Franco-German war; and it is now known and admitted, not only by German and French military men, but by disinterested writers in England and other countries, that if there was one thing more than another that contributed to the successful advance of the German armies into France, it was the Uhlans, or the eyes of the army, who paraded the whole of France, who scattered and opened out as a lady would open out her fan. They were the eyes of the army; and in this country, in case of war, just such a force is needed—not a solid and heavy dragoon service, but a cavalry like the Uhlans, or the mounted infantry, which are like cavalry in fact—men carrying light arms on light horses, and good shots, being carried to a particular point in a very short period of time, and then at once, either firing from the saddle or dismounting, become infantry again. Now, all that training we can have, and at a very small expense indeed. I really do hope that there will not be any objection to this provision, which is not expensive in itself. There have been very considerable savings in the staff that will go far to contribute to any additional expense that these schools and this troop of cavalry may involve, and it will insure efficiency, because it will give you the eyes of the army, really the main-stay of the army, and an efficient body of non-commissioned officers.

Mr. VAIL. I have listened with a good deal of attention to the right hon. Minister. This subject is not a new one, but it has been discussed from time to time, even so long ago as when I had the honor of being at the head of the Department. I remember that the Inspector of Militia mentioned the subject at that time; it was mentioned in this House, and there was such a noise made in the House and out of the House about it, and in the press from one end of the Dominion to the other, that we found it was useless to think of such a thing, or to do anything which had at all the appearance of creating a standing army. I agree with a great deal which the hon. Minister has said, and, among other things, I entirely concur in the view that the back-bone of a Militia force, or standing army, is the non-commissioned officers. There can be no doubt about that point; and if I can be convinced that we have not the schools of sufficient size and accommodation to educate those men in their duties, I would say, at once, that the hon. Minister of Militia was perfectly right in introducing this clause, and providing for additional schools. If this proposition had been brought forward when I had the honor of filling the position of Minister, I think we would have had a much better excuse than the hon. Minister has at the present time, because at that time the batteries were full and we could not provide for the education of the men applying. In several instances applications remained over from month to month before we could provide room in the batteries for them, and, therefore, we might have been justified at that time in providing additional schools. But if I am correctly informed—and I think the report of Lieutenant-Colonel Irwin will support my position—the position of the batteries at the present time are not such as would warrant additional expenditure of this kind. I observe, from the returns, that pretty much all the men trained in the batteries last year, particularly in "A" Battery, were all short-course men. Colonel Irwin, in his report, says:

"To carry on these schools of military instruction successfully, the average intelligence of non-commissioned officers and men should be of a high order. At present, at Quebec, owing to the want of men to carry on the unavoidable duties, it is found necessary in many cases to enlist recruits, some of whom can neither read nor write, and others whose general education is so defective as to prevent their ever being employed to instruct others."

There are other references in that officer's report which are calculated to convince that the schools are not at all full. The hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) has stated the reason infantry instruction in the batteries is not necessary, but at all events they are infantry schools to a certain extent. I am rather disposed to think that those batteries can instruct the men who will require to receive instruction for the next eight or ten years to come, at least, and provide accommodation for them. If it could be shown that the accommodation was less than was required, there would be very good reason for the proposal, and I would be very happy to support the hon. Minister, because my desire is to make the force as perfect as possible; and I feel a little diffidence in opposing any proposal of this kind, for fear that it may be supposed that I desire to throw impediments in the way of the hon. Minister in his efforts to improve the force. There never, however, was a time in the history of this country when we required additional military schools less than at the present time. This is an unnecessary expenditure; it is an expenditure which will be fastened on the country for three years at least, and until the Act is repealed we shall have a standing army to all intents and purposes. The cost is said to be about $200,000. We know what that means; we know that it is impossible to fill up the rank and file in British Columbia, for example, at 50 cts., or 60 cts. a day. That is an expensive place to live and wages are high, and if a battery of artillery is to be established there it will prove a very expensive corps and next year, probably, the hon. Minister will come down with an estimate for an additional sum of $50,000 or $60,000. I should like to support the Bill, but under the circumstances I will have to vote for the amendment.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not rise to move a motion, but to ask the hon. Minister of Militia a question. Will the hon. gentleman tell us about what time the annual camps will be held this year? And while I am putting this question, I would like to urge on the hon. gentleman the importance of giving to the battalions that are to go out, as ample notice as he possibly can, so that the rural companies can be got together in advance of the day for going out, which will aid them very materially when they get to the camp.

Mr. CARON. I can tell my hon. friend that the day has not yet been fixed; but the time when the camps will be held will be selected so as to meet, as far as possible, the convenience of the force, and at a time when it will be easiest to get the force together.

Mr. THOMPSON. If I might just suggest, I would say that not earlier than the 18th of June would suit Ontario better, as there is likely to be a very backward spring.

Bill read the third time and passed.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

39. Salaries of officers and contingencies of Library. $20,260.00

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Please explain the increase of $800.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Under an arrangement made a year or two since, it was provided that the Library officials should have the statutory allowance of $50, in common with civil servants.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Is this in accordance with the last report of the Library Committee?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It is in accordance with the report which was made last Session, or the Session before.

Mr. MACKENZIE. But a report was made this Session recommending some special increases.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Well, that was not brought up since the Estimates were prepared; if there is to be any addition, it will appear in the Supplementary Estimates.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Then the Government do not intend to accept the recommendation?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It has not been under consideration in Council yet.

40. Printing, binding and distributing the Laws. $12,000.00

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Under this head, I think that the Government should reconsider the mode of distributing the Statutes. I believe it is expected, or intended, that every magistrate in the country should have a copy of the Dominion Statutes. I know, however, that there seems to be some difficulty in getting them to their destination; but I am not sufficiently familiar with the rule adopted in distributing them, to criticise it properly or intelligently. Perhaps the hon. Minister of Finance could tell us, or we might get that information at some future stage. I know I am frequently applied to by magistrates for copies of the Statutes, and I want to know under what arrangement they are distributed.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I do not think that they are supplied to every magistrate, but I cannot state the mode of distribution. I think, however, that they are sent from the Department of the Secretary of State, in cases, for distribution to the different Provinces or the different cities, as the case may be; but I will enquire. Still, I do not think they go to every magistrate. If they do, I think the number would increase enormously every year.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The mode formerly in vogue under the old Province of Canada was to send a copy of the Statutes to the clerk of the peace of the county for each magistrate, to be by him distributed. My impression is that we have never sent them to the magistrates of the country generally, but only to the chief officers and libraries.

Mr. BOWELL. That is all.

Mr. ROSS. May be the hon. Minister of Finance will bring down, on Concurrence, some information on that point, which will, perhaps, save hon. gentlemen opposite and myself some trouble.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I will do so.

Mr. MACKENZIE. An Order of the House requires that the distribution be placed on the Table within fifteen days of the meeting of the House. If this has been complied with it will show the distribution; but I am afraid it has been neglected of late years, though formerly it was brought down regularly.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I do not think that we have had such a report.

42. Salary of the Clerk of the Crown in Chancery... $2,100.00

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. This is an increase of $100. This officer has been receiving $2,000 for a number of years, and as he has been faithful and efficient in the discharge of his duties we thought he was entitled to this increase.

Mr. BLAKE. I agree with the hon. gentleman that the services of this officer last night were such as fully to deserve the increase.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Perhaps the hon. gentleman would not object to make the increase $200 for so worthy an object.

Mr. BLAKE. I dare say the hon. gentleman has expended considerable more money than that to secure a member to support him.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Ah, that is not fair.

44. Miscellaneous printing..... $2,000.00

Mr. ROSS. I have already called the attention to the anomaly of having two items for printing—one for printing, and the other for miscellaneous printing; but I see the item is repeated in this year's Estimates. The greater portion of the item, I believe, is devoted to printing the Budget Speech of the hon. Finance Minister, but it might as well be taken out of the other vote.

45. For the purchase of law reports required by the Supreme Court..... $1,500.00

Mr. BLAKE. I think that it is important that we should know the policy of the Government on this subject. The vote is a new one, and I had supposed that it had been put in a little inaccurately, and that it was intended to supply text books and such of the reports as are not supplied under the present arrangement. I should be glad to know whether it is proposed in future that current reports shall be supplied by the vote of the House as connected with the Supreme Court library, and also current text books, in which case the wording of the item should be changed. Our proposition was that a strictly Law Library, comprising the reports and text books, should be kept down in the Supreme Court room, and I presume this sum would be sufficient. In the Law Library of the Province of Ontario, the expenditure has been, for the last four years, about $9,000, or a little over $2,000 a year; but as we pay a duty on the books, that takes away a considerable portion of the annual sum, so that I should suppose that between $1,500 and $2,000 would be adequate for the purpose of keeping the Law Library in the thoroughly efficient condition in which it should be kept. Therefore, I do not object to the vote of $1,500 in the first instance to try the experiment; but it is important to know what the policy of the Government is with regard to this vote in the future.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not know that the Government have seriously considered their policy on the subject; but I think the recommendation of the report of the Library Committee is a sensible one. I have no objection, if the hon. Minister of Finance has not, to change the item so as to make it read law books.

46. For binding newspapers, &c..... $1,000.00

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. This was formerly paid out of the vote for the Library, and it is expended by the librarian in stitching and binding the papers which are received and kept for the use of the House. The Committee recommend that a specific vote should be taken for that purpose.

Mr. BLAKE. The Library Committee are specially anxious that the vote of $2,000 should be specially allocated to the purpose to which we propose to devote it; and I would suggest that we make the vote for the Library generally $9,000, and $1,000 for the binding, which would make $10,000 altogether for the Library. In that case the $2,000 might be put in the Supplementary Estimates for the American volumes.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes; we can do that.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

47. To meet expenses in connection with care of Archives..... $6,000.00

Mr. ROSS (West Middlesex). I see that there is an increase of $1,000, and, in looking at the Public Accounts, I find it very meagre as to how the Archives are cared for. I noticed that last year $2,500 was paid to Sir A. T. Galt for disbursements, and $1,500 to J. C. Taché. Will the hon. gentleman explain this increase, and for what purpose the appropriation was made to Sir A. T. Galt?

Mr. POPE. This money was paid out by Sir A. T. Galt to parties engaged in copying documents in London.

Mr. BLAKE. As I understand, the whole of this money is practically paid for copying?

Mr. POPE. No; I will explain. The increase is because we found that the former appropriation was insufficient. A considerable portion of this money is spent here in collecting old records of the early history of Canada; the largest part is spent in copying. We have now over 3,000 volumes, which we have collected from the different Provinces, and I am sorry that we did not copy more of the early records than we did in Quebec, and we ought to have more than one copy of these documents. The increase of $1,000 is for the purpose of obtaining copies of some records in Paris.

Mr. ROSS (West Middlesex). I believe the Archives are under the care of Mr. Brymner. In his report he calls attention to the catalogue, a very admirable one, indeed. I see that the archivist complains of the want of room. I have not had time yet to visit the place where the Archives are kept, and I do not know how much room he has at his disposal. It is very unfortunate that we have not room in the Library for these Archives. It is somewhat inconvenient, when one wants to refer to a certain book of reference, to have to go to another building for it. I do not know whether there is room in the Library or not, but I think it is unfortunate that our literature cannot all be kept in one building, where it would be easy of reference.

Mr. POPE. Of course there is no room in the Library for them. These records, however, ought to be kept in a fire-proof room. I hope we shall have very soon a better and more accessible room than we have now. The hon. gentleman knows that these records are more for the historian than they are books of reference for gentlemen attending Parliament, and, therefore, I think it is better to keep them in a fire-proof room than in the Library.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

48. To meet expenses in connection with Patent Record. $8,500.00

Mr. ROSS (West Middlesex). I should like to ask whether the printing of the Patent Record is done by tender, or whether it is always given to the Burland Lithographic Company in Montreal. I see that $7,257 was expended last year in publishing this paper. I am strongly of opinion that that is money wasted; I do not think the work is worth one-quarter of that amount to anybody. This year it is proposed to take an additional $1,300 for the work. I think the hon. Minister might investigate that matter, and bring about a reduction.

Mr. POPE. I can say to the hon. gentleman, it is not a foolish outlay of money. People engaged in this line all over the country think a great deal of this publication, and the hon. Mr. Mills said it was one of the best things he knew of. In 1872, I arranged with Mr. Burland, who was then the only man who could have done this work, to publish it for $4,000. In 1876, the number of patents had increased very largely, and the late Government increased the amount to $7,200. I do not think it is a very extraordinary price. This year the work is made double size, and the drawings are much larger and plainer than before. The number of extra copies that have to be printed is very large, indeed; more than enough to cover the cost of the increase. There are very few who will agree with my hon. friend that this is of no consequence.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I never could see any practical utility in it. I think the paper has no circulation at all. Has the hon. gentleman any subscribers to it? Or is the public charged with the whole expenditure? If the book is as valuable as he says, surely it will have some subscribers. I believe the Canada Gazette, which is absolutely necessary as an official means of communication, has a few subscribers, and almost every journal connected with any particular trade or profession has its subscribers.

Mr. POPE. We pay this whole amount for the number of copies we get, and Mr. Burland sells other copies. We do not peddle them, and believe we are acting in the interests of the country in getting this publication.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). How many copies do we get?

Mr. POPE. I cannot say just now.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I think each hon. member of the House gets two copies—that will make about 400; the members of the Senate get some—say 600 in all, for which Mr. Burland gets $7,257, and, besides, sells so many more copies. Thus we place him in a position whereby he makes something in the form of a casual advantage out of a publication for which we pay.

Mr. BAIN. I am aware that these records are distributed to us regularly. Perhaps the hon. gentleman could tell us if they are distributed to any institutions, or to patentees.

Mr. POPE. They are not distributed to patentees. They are distributed to institutions of the country. Whenever called for we try to accommodate the public with them, and at the end of the year they are bound and remain on record.

Mr. BAIN. Are they sent to the Mechanics' Institutes?

Mr. ROSS. No.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It would be desirable that the hon. gentleman should see that the Mechanics' Institutes get them. Some sort of record is no doubt necessary, but there might be a cheaper method of obtaining it—by keeping it, for instance, in the office.

Mr. ROSS. Will the hon. gentleman, on Concurrence, give us a statement of the number issued and the mode of distribution?

Mr. POPE. Yes.

Mr. PICKARD. The copies I have received I have always sent to manufacturers, and I know of different establishments to whom I have forwarded these books that had not before seen the patents and purchased the patent right, and now manufacture the articles.

49. To meet expenses in connection with preparation of criminal statistics..... $4,000.00

Mr. ROSS. Can the hon. gentleman tell us whether, in this volume, there will be a comparative statement of the statistics in this and previous volumes? Comparative statements is what gives value to statistical works.

Mr. POPE. The hon. gentleman is quite right, and I will see to it.

50. To meet expenses in connection with Census (revote $20,000)..... $45,000.00

Mr. ROSS. When are we going to get the next volume of the Census? It is now two years, or more, since the Census was taken, and we have been furnished only with a small volume—not a very heavy thing for a Department such as that over which the hon. gentleman presides with so much dignity and ability. I am surprised that the arduous labors of the Department should have produced such little results in so long a time. The United States took their Census in 1880, and their volumes are complete by this time.

Mr. POPE. No. The first volume is just out.

Mr. ROSS. A large, ponderous volume, containing more than ten times the amount of statistics which are contained in the hon. gentleman's first volume, has been issued by the United States Government. Here we are anxious to make comparison as to the progress of manufactures and trade, and we have no information by which to do it. I think some of the newspapers gave us advanced reports of a few cases; but besides these we have had no information of the progress of industry in this country. I think the hon. gentleman, who is getting $50,000 a year, and even $100,000 some years, ought to put on a little more pressure, and let us have these Census statistics when they are fresh. In another year they will be stale and uninteresting, and the data on which comparisons might be made will have become useless.

Mr. POPE. The hon. gentleman is mistaken in respect to the United States Census, which was taken a year before ours. The first volume has just been issued, and they have as large a staff, comparatively, as we have. This year our staff has not been heavy, because I thought we could do it cheaper and still have it out in good time. It was my intention to distribute this volume some time ago, and I have pressed it as hard as I could. It is already printed, and in the hands of the binder, and I presume it may be distributed to the members of this House in a week or ten days. We have been largely delayed on account of the pressure of work upon the Queen's printers, otherwise it would now be ready.

Mr. BLAKE. Does the Census contain comparisons with the results of the Census of 1871 and 1861?

Mr. POPE. The last volume will contain such comparative statements, but not the first volume. We hope to have the final volume out during this year.

Mr. CHARLTON. With reference to the question of the hon. Minister of Agriculture, that only the first volume of the United States Census, taken in 1880, has been distributed, I may say that all the information contained in that Census has been issued as a compendium, being a ponderous volume of 1,500 pages. Several volumes have been issued, but the compendium contains all the information in an abridged form, and contains comparative tables of the Census of 1880 and the Census of the three previous decades. With reference to the Census of Canada, the value of such a work is greater almost immediately after it is taken, than after a lapse of years. There are many things in connection with that Census that we want to know almost immediately after it is taken, and to oblige us to wait two or three years before we can obtain any information, is a grievance that ought to be remedied. For instance, in discussion this year we had no means of ascertaining what the productions of the manufactures of Canada were. That was something we ought to have known within twelve months' time of the return of the Census schedules. That information we ought to have had before now; and I hope the Minister of Agriculture, if he should be in his place when another Census is taken—which I cannot say I really wish should be the case—I hope he will give us more prompt work than he has done this time.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). We must all agree in the remarks of the last speaker, and without desiring to find unnecessary fault, it does strike me that the hon. Minister of Agriculture could have pushed forward this third volume that he determined to take up, before the second volume, in order the sooner to give us the information it contained, with more despatch than he seems to have exercised. I think it ought to have been in our hands prior to engaging in the last Tariff discussion. We were very much in the dark on account of the information that was withheld. Now, he has given us in his report a few facts gleaned from that volume, and they are most startling in their nature, when we look at them, and it seems to me it would have been of great interest to the country, and that we might have all derived much profit, if we had even had a few weeks ago these tables that are now before us in the hon. gentleman's report. For instance, let me call his attention to this fact: In the comparative statement he gives us between 1871 and 1881, he tells us correctly that in 1871 the manufacturing industries of this country had $77,764,020 invested, and that the product of that investment amounted to $221,617,773, or, in other words, under the Census of 1871 every dollar of capital employed had a product of $3 representing it. Now, we have added to that capital during the past ten years by $80,812,161, but have we produced $3 on every dollar invested? No; the hon. Minister of Agriculture gives us as the product of this extra $80,000,000, only an amount of $78,122,339. There is a little error in making up the figures, as I have found the exact figures are $81,122,339. Now, I think there is something rather startling in that. The capital employed in our manufacturing industries in 1871 had a product of $3 for every $1 invested; while the extra $80,000,000 added in the past ten years has only a product of about $1 to every $1 invested. The hon. gentleman has omitted in this table, while giving us comparisons of the capital invested, and of the values, to give us the number of hands employed. I think he might very well have given us that; it would have been of great use to us in discussing the questions that we have discussed. I merely allude to this in order to point out how desirable it was, and how desirable it must have been in the eyes of the hon. Minister himself, if he had given us that in this third volume that he took up before completing the second one; and I am afraid that even now we shall not have this third volume in time to be of any use to us this Session. Another point he gives us, which is of still more interest, and that is with reference to the comparative increase of population in the cities and in the rural portions of our country. We find that the total population has been increased by 689,780, and the population in our cities and towns of over 5,000 has increased in that period 229,997, or one third of the whole increase of the population of the Dominion is to be found in some thirty-seven cities and towns of over 5,000 inhabitants. Now, it seems to me that there is a lesson for us in these figures, and that they invite us to look forward a little and to ask whether this is a common danger in the undue tendency, which perhaps is being unduly stimulated, of our towns drawing not only from the rural population, but from those who newly arrive on our shores. All this is very well as long as capital is remunerative, as long as industries are fully employed, but should stagnation in business occur, we are not in a position, and they are not in a position, to stand it as well as they would have been able to stand it if they had been engaged in other pursuits. There are two pages of information that the hon. Minister has compiled in his report here in order to show that something has been done in the compilation of his third volume. It was, above all things, unfortunate that this volume should have been in our hands before the discussion on the items took place. No doubt there are other important facts to be gleaned from the Census, and I will not charge the hon. Minister with anything in the direction of supposing that he would not be able to strengthen his position by having the volume in the hands of members. But I do not hold the hon. gentleman entirely blameless, for he did not use sufficient diligence in endeavoring to place this volume, in question, in the hands of members at the opening of the Session. If two years had not elapsed since the work was entered upon, my complaint might be thought unreasonable; but having arranged to place this volume in the hands of members at the opening of the Session, an addition to the staff by the hon. Minister would have been approved by the House.

Mr. HESSON. If the hon. member for Brant were conscientious in the statement made, and had looked back at the history of past Censuses, he would have given credit to the hon. Minister of Agriculture in connection with the present Census. More valuable information has been given to the country, within little more than a year, than has been given in the history of Canada before. The hon. member for Brant is unfair when he says the hon. Minister did not discharge his duty, because he discharged his duty, not only expeditiously, but satisfactory to the country in this respect; and, except from the two hon. members who have last spoken, we have not heard any such charge made either in the House or in the country. The hon. gentleman has not given fair consideration to the fact that increased capital was invested in our manufacturing industries during the last two or three years. He has endeavored to show that the $31,000,000 of capital invested in our industries ought to have been distributed over ten years, when he knows that during the seven years preceding the Census no extension of our investments of capital took place, and that it was not until 1880-81 that any real increase occurred.

Mr. PATERSON. The capital more than doubled in that time.

Mr. HESSON. I venture to make the assertion that the whole increase of investments is attributable to the introduction of the National Policy. There is no denying that fact, and no hon. gentleman can substantiate any statements to the contrary. No capitalist would invest between 1873 and 1879, and there was no extension of capital in that period.

Mr. PATERSON. The capital doubled in ten years.

Mr. HESSON. The capital has doubled within the last three years.

Mr. PATERSON. The returns for the last three years do not appear in the Census.

Mr. HESSON. I repeat that the increased investments have been largely made during the last two years. The hon. member for Brant knows that, and no town in Ontario proves the fact more than Brantford. When the hon. gentleman spoke of the increase in population, he mentioned that one-third of the whole increase was concentrated in cities and towns, and the hon. gentleman would seem to desire that there should not be any great centres of population from which beneficial influences might extend to other parts of the Dominion. He would seem to desire that there should not be any central point where people might invest their capital and surplus earnings. Did the hon. gentleman mean to say that the rural population in the county of Brant are suffering in consequence of the concentration of capital in Brantford, or that the people of Brantford and the rural population are in a worse position than formerly? The hon. gentleman knows that is not so, that the rural population are in a better position than they were ten years ago, and more especially has that been the case during the last three or four years. If the hon. gentleman does not know that, he should know it. I do not know a farm unoccupied, nor does the hon. gentleman know one, and this is due to the National Policy, and the value of the farms has increased in consequence of that policy. I know it is so in my own county, which adjoins the hon. gentleman's county. The hon. gentleman should act fairly, and give credit where credit is due. I must say that the hon. Minister of Agriculture has made greater efforts to give information within a reasonable time than has ever been done previously.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. gentleman might be satisfied with knowing that his own town has declined in population since the National Policy was brought into force. The principal manufactures which flourished there before, have since ceased to exist.

Mr. HESSON. I may say this: that Stratford has doubled its population in ten years, and I do not think the hon. member for East York should complain because cities and towns should double their population in ten years, but the fact should give him pleasure.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I did not say it had doubled its population, but that its population had decreased under the National Policy, and the hon. gentleman knows it perfectly well.

Mr. HESSON. It has not decreased under the National Policy. It has increased very largely.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It has decreased.

Mr. HESSON. I deny it.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Not only had the population decreased, but the manufactures which flourished there before, have since stopped; and yet the hon. gentleman is not fair enough to state the facts in regard to the matter.

Mr. HESSON. I challenge the hon. gentleman to state a single case in my town and county where the population has decreased, or where a factory has closed.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I can give the hon. gentleman cases in his own town.

Mr. POPE. I will not enter into a discussion of the National Policy; but I will say this: that the hon. member for Brant has not put the case fairly. He has complained because he did not get the population of the cities until now.

Mr. PATERSON. I did not complain.

Mr. POPE. I will allude to one point, and it is this: that I have labored under some little difficulty during the last year. My deputy, a most valuable and most efficient officer, one of whom I cannot speak too highly, and whose loss I feel is almost irreparable, has been unable to be in the office during the whole of last year. These things have thrown more work on me and others; and has required stricter care on my part than would have been the case, had that gentleman been there. I depended very much on him in regard to the Census—and in fact entirely—together with one or two others under his direction. I have been deprived of his services, and I think there is no reasonable cause for complaint. The Census has been got out considerably earlier and with much less expense, although we had a much larger territory to go over, than was the case with the Census of 1871; and if it is got out earlier, and a year or two in advance of the former Census, I do not think that the hon. member for Brant has very much to complain of. I hope that we will be able to complete the Census by October. I feel quite sure that the next volume will then be completed, and if so, I think that the period is reasonable. My hon. friend from North Norfolk knows very well—if he knows anything at all about it—that what he said about the American Census is not correct, and but one of its volumes has appeared. Advance sheets have been issued from the office in Washington, it is true, but only one volume is now published, there is no doubt about that fact; and their Census was taken in 1880.

Mr. PATERSON. I am sure that I, in common with everyone else, will regret very much, and am disposed to make all allowance for, the unfortunate illness to which the hon. gentleman has alluded. I had overlooked that matter and forgotten it, but still we feel that the work must go on, and our business is to ask that it proceed. I will not take up much time in attending to the hon. member for North Perth, because I think that, perhaps, the Minister of Agriculture is still Minister of Agriculture, and I have fancied that notwithstanding that several claimants have set up for his position, I believe he is quite as capable of explaining anything that requires explanation in his Department as is the hon. member for North Perth. The hon. gentleman may feel a little irritated of course, because in his party journals his name is not mentioned as the coming man for that Department, and he may have taken this means of advertising himself. I have seen the name of the hon. member for Centre Wellington mentioned; in fact, I believe a paper in my own town has the credit of first suggesting his fitness and capacity for it, and since my hon. friend from East Huron demonstrated to a conclusion that hens lay more eggs and cows give more milk since the National Policy, the hon. gentleman is mentioned in this connection; but I have not heard that the hon. member for North Perth has any of the press favoring him so far. I have no doubt that his loquacity of expression, and thought to-night, and the able manner in which he discussed the question, and the clearness with which he took his position, and the accuracy which he displayed in all his statements, and the infallible correctness of his reasoning, were something beautiful. You remember he laid down that I was very unfair. I knew very well that no capital was invested and we could not expect any capital to be invested, in Canada, during the ten years preceding 1880.

Mr. HESSON. The seven years.

Mr. PATERSON. This was a moral impossibility; I spoke with reference to the increase of capital during precisely those ten years when it precisely increased a little more than double; and I am sure the hon. gentleman will, at any rate, have to know a little more of the subject he is talking about, before we can accept him as a worthy successor of the hon. Minister of Agriculture, who did not venture on such a line of statement. He prepared the tables and gave them to us. I know well that $77,000,000 in round numbers of capital were invested in 1871, and $158,000,000 in 1881, during the ten years when the hon. member for North Perth says there was no capital invested, and when no one could expect it to be invested. The hon. gentleman says that the increase of capital took place during the last two or three years, showing lamentable ignorance on the part of the hon. gentleman, because we could not possibly discuss that increase of capital which could not possibly be found in a Census compiled at a date prior to those years. With wonderful clearness on a point which I have only touched, the hon. gentleman discussed this subject; and I must say I will award the palm to the hon. member for Centre Wellington if there must be a change, because I was unable either to accept the convincing logic and statement of facts of the hon. member for North or East Huron the other night any more than to accept the statements and explanations and alleged facts given by the hon. member for North Perth. The hon. member is very fond of rising and lecturing hon. gentlemen on this side of the House, and he occasionally alludes to his conscience. He speaks of hon. members on that side of the House as if all the conscience was located with the pure and immaculate hon. members of his side of the House, and he seems to have the opinion that no one on this side of the House possesses conscientious feelings; but after indulging in that strain he failed to point out the slightest inaccuracy on the part of any hon. gentleman whose conscience he impugned. That has been his course, however, and I suppose that it will still continue to be his habit. There seems to be something uneasy within him, impelling him to rise, and take a hand in, if I may use the expression, on any subject, whether conversant with it or not. Of course, I am able to stand it; and I am quite willing to do so on this occasion because of the free advertisement which he gave to my own town. I am free, and glad to confess, that it never prospered so well as is now the case, and any one who says I found fault because the population of our cities and towns are increasing, is misconstruing my words. I simply pointed to it as a lesson, and a matter of information that did contain a lesson, which was worthy of thought and consideration; and I pointed out, that no danger was to be feared, as long as the good times existed; but that there was some danger in times of depression, of having over crowded cities and towns instead of having the people scattered through the rural parts. And when I tell hon. gentlemen that this is to-day engaging the attention of the Labor Council of the Province of Ontario, that they have represented that for every mechanic or artisan coming into the country, another must go out of it, it will be seen, at any rate, that their view is that we are increasing the population of the cities and towns as fast as is desirable in the interest of the great class of mechanics and laborers, and of those who earn their living by their day's work. In that regard I simply alluded to a fact, and illustrated it as one of the reasons why I pressed for an early return of this volume, whose lessons, contained in every page, might be taken up and learned, and turned to good practice and use by us.

Mr. HESSON. The hon. gentleman's reasoning is probably clear to himself, but so far as I am personally concerned, allow me to say I am not at all ambitious to succeed the hon. Minister of Agriculture. Whilst the hon. gentleman said that the hon. member for Centre Wellington is a more likely candidate for that position than myself, and that I was not mentioned, I would first desire to say this: The hon. gentleman does not lead the press of this country, and in my own town I am happy to say that my organ supports me, and names me for that position.

Mr. PATERSON. I beg your pardon.

Mr. HESSON. The hon. gentleman takes it back and begs my pardon. I am perfectly satisfied to have given him now the knowledge which he would have possessed if he had read the public press generally; but as he reads only one side, I can easily understand that he does not know all that is going on in the country. The hon. gentleman reads me a lecture as to my presumed knowledge of the matter under discussion; but I think I have a right to assume that I know as much about it as the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Paterson). I have been as long in the country as he has, and I have had as much experience, not only as a farmer, but as a business man. I know his intention was to insinuate that the hon. Minister of Agriculture had been negligent in the discharge of his duties, and had not given information to the country at the proper time. I challenge the hon. gentleman to show how it was possible to give that information sooner, and I challenge him to point to any past period in the history of the country when information was given so readily, and so freely, as it is now given by the hon. Minister of Agriculture. No hon. gentleman on this side of the House would at all like to see the hon. member step down and out of his present position, and the hon. gentleman may reconcile himself to this fact, that so long as the hon. Minister of Agriculture looks after his Department as carefully as he does now, he will not fall under the censure of the country, and the people will be satisfied that he is doing his duty. The impression which the hon. gentleman tried to leave upon the minds of hon. members was that the concentration of population and business in the cities and towns was an injurious thing, and should be taken into serious consideration. I take issue with the hon. gentleman upon that point, and I think other hon. members will also take issue with him. The hon. gentleman knows perfectly well that there is not a single farm which is fit to work in Ontario which is not occupied, or a single farm unoccupied now that was occupied before; and he knows also that the tendency at the present time is to have farming done on a very large scale. This being the case there cannot be so large a rural population as there would be otherwise, but still he cannot say that the rural population has fallen off in Ontario, because he knows perfectly well that while the increase has been in the towns and cities, the rural constituencies have not lost. If we are to have great hearts of population and commerce, from which the pulsations of trade are to flow out through the country, hon. gentlemen will congratulate themselves and the country that the population of our cities and towns is increasing.

Mr. ROSS (West Middlesex). I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture, since we are to get the third volume of the Census in a short time, when we are likely to get the second volume, and if there is to be any change in the second as compared with the first? I notice that the Census is compiled in a way that makes reference difficult, as the counties are not alphabetically arranged as they are in the United States. Again, I find that there is a table near the close of the volume giving the villages and towns, but they are not alphabetically arranged, as I think they should be. In preparing our Census, and sending it abroad, it would be more creditable to the Department, and add distinction to the hon. Minister himself, that the population and other statistics should be arranged and compiled upon the most approved system.

Mr. POPE. It is the second or last volume to which I have already referred as being likely to be completed in October.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Will that volume contain any information as to the number of immigrants who have left our country? We have positive cognizance of that emigration, but we have not the negative. There are a large number of French Canadian citizens who have left for the other side, and the population of that race in the United States has gone up to 700,000, which is one-half the entire population of the Province of Quebec.

51. To meet expenses in connection with the Dominion Exhibition $10,000.00

Mr. ROSS. I see there is an increase of $5,000 in this vote, and I do not think the House has been put in possession of any information as to the benefit of that expenditure. I am not opposing the expenditure, but I would like to know what its results have been, and why there is an increase. On page 12 of the report of the hon.

Mr. HESSON.

Minister he makes the following short statement about last year's exposition:—

"A Provincial Exhibition was held at Kingston in the fall of 1882, to which, as in previous years, a Dominion character was given by the vote of Parliament, last Session, of $5,000. The stormy weather prevailing at the time it was held, interfered somewhat with its success, but the industrial and agricultural exhibits, as well as those of live stock, were very creditable."

Perhaps the hon. gentleman will tell us how he intends to expend the money, whether as prizes for live stock or cereals, and also where the next Dominion Exhibition is to be held.

Mr. POPE. When we had a smaller vote we used to give $1,000 in order to procure a fair show of Manitoba products, as the people up there found it very difficult to secure this without such assistance. The balance of the money was handed over to the board of agriculture in which ever Province the exhibition was held, and they expended the money in giving additional prizes. It has been found, by experience, that this expenditure has produced a great deal of good, and for my part I am only sorry that the vote is not larger, and that we could not do more for the farmers of this country in enabling them to compete at the different shows without their sustaining absolute loss in sending their stock and other articles to these shows. I think in a country like this which is made up largely of agriculturists, $10,000 is a very small sum to give for such a purpose. A centennial exhibition is to be held at St. John this year. I think every hon. member will feel satisfied with our attempts to call out these farmers and bring them together at these exhibitions, and to enable them to keep up the interest and the competition at these exhibitions.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It is the merest buncombe to say that this is being done for the farmers. It is impossible to have a Dominion Exhibition in a country so extensive as ours is from East to West. How many farmers does the hon. gentleman know, went from Ontario to Halifax last summer? Does he know of any that went? Does he know of a single animal that was sent for exhibition there? The thing is preposterous. We have no evidence before us to show the benefit of this exhibition, and one is strongly inclined to ask, when $10,000 is taken for the exhibition at St. John, who the representative of St. John is. The vote is for no other purpose whatever. The hon. gentleman says that except for $1,000 for the Manitoba exhibition, he always handed over the balance to the managers of the fair. I think the first exhibition for which a Dominion grant was made was held in this town, and, if I am not misinformed, the hon. gentleman held the control of the entire $5,000 in his own hands.

Mr. POPE. My hon. friend is quite right. I now hold the control; I insist on their giving me a copy of the prize list, and I insist on the prize list being a proper one.

Mr. MACKENZIE. So the money is not handed over. My impression is that the hon. gentleman holds entire control of it, and that it is made payable to himself, and not to the managers of the fair.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course, once we have initiated this system, it has to be carried out, at any rate, until there is one grand round. There is no doubt, having voted money to give what is called a Dominion character to an exhibition, we must mete out the same justice to all the Provinces. But I must say I am disappointed with the statement of the hon. gentleman as to the application of the fund. It somewhat differs from my understanding on the subject last year. I ventured to suggest that the only way in which a practical result could follow from this vote, such as its name imports, was to see that the money was used in reducing the cost of the transport of goods for exhibition from distant parts to the place at which they would be exhibited; but the hon. gentleman has said that out of the vote of $5,000, $1,000 was used for the purpose of assisting in the transport of goods from Manitoba, and the rest was added to the prize list, subject to his looking at the prize list.

Mr. POPE. My hon. friend is quite right. I did insist upon a portion of this money being given to assist people to bring their goods to the exhibitions, and the balance was disposed of as I say.

Mr. BLAKE. I am glad to hear that the hon. gentleman carried out what I understood was intended, and what I think is the only way of making a genuine approach to an exhibition of a Dominion character. Whether you can do it in that way or not I doubt. You cannot do it with regard to live stock, because it will not be sent on a long journey. We have had a good deal of experience of that in our Province. We find it difficult to get exhibitors to send their stock from one end of the Province to the other, and to induce them to send their stock from one end of the Dominion to the other, is, I fear, out of the question.

Mr. POPE. At Montreal we had a very excellent display from Prince Edward Island.

Mr. BLAKE. You may have an occasional exhibit; but it is not the general rule. I want to know why it is proposed to double the grant for St. John, and whether any different administration of it is proposed? What proportion of the $10,000 is intended to be expended in cheapening the transport from other Provinces to St. John, and what proportion is to be placed at the disposal of the managers of the exhibition as an addition to their prize list?

Mr. POPE. I cannot give the exact proportions; but I do intend that a portion of this grant shall be devoted to assisting in the taking of stock from distant points to St. John. I suppose the hon. gentleman does not overlook the importance of having an exhibition of this kind.

Mr. BLAKE. I agree that an exhibition, at which the articles of one Province could be shown to the people of another, would be a very important object; but with regard to many classes of articles, I do not think much can be done. I was about to make another observation, which I made in another place, in the presence of my hon. friend from St. John, namely, that I think it is important to encourage the visitations which these seasons produce. I think it is of consequence that the Government should make extremely liberal arrangements with the railway companies and over the Government railway, for the carrying of persons and goods to this exhibition. There is no little interchange of visits between the people of the different Provinces, that, as we are marking this exhibition in a peculiar manner by doubling the vote, I believe is an occasion on which it would be a judicious thing to make some liberal arrangements indeed, so far as the Government railway is concerned, and I have no doubt the other railways would find it to their interest to join with such a scheme, so as to enable the people from Ontario and Quebec to visit the city of St. John, and the Maritime Provinces generally. I attach much more importance to that than to the amount of direct good which the hon. gentleman's vote will do in the way of exhibits. I think it is of great consequence that our people should learn to mingle more with each other than they have done in the past.

52. To meet expenses in connection with health statistics..... $20,000.00

Mr. ROSS (West Middlesex). I see that there is the very large increase of $10,000 in this item. It is only a short time since the item first occurred in the Estimates, and I approve most cordially of an appropriation being made to this purpose. I see, from the report of the hon. Minister, that the appropriation is divided among the boards of health of the different Provinces according to the sizes of the different cities. Montreal getting $1,800, and smaller places getting less amounts. I fancy the proposition of the hon. Minister to co-operate with the local boards of health in securing the vital statistics of the country, but I fail to see in this report any return of the results of previous expenditures. Now that the hon. gentleman is publishing statistics generally, the House should be put in possession of the information this money is supposed to secure. Perhaps the hon. Minister will see that next year we have more evidence as to what is done with this money, and he may be able to give us some information now as to what benefits he expects to derive from this additional grant of $10,000. In Ontario there is a Provincial Board of Health, and last year they were anxious to receive the co-operation of some Dominion officials representing themselves as the Dominion Board of Health, but I do not think they received that co-operation as readily as expected.

Mr. POPE. No proposition was made to me from the Ontario Government about any united action, nor from the Ontario Board of Health that I know of. In this particular question I am not very well versed and depended very much on the hon. Minister of Railways who has taken a very active part in this, but who is unable to be present to-night. Up to the present there has been no preparation of statistics or expenditure of money, further than the getting up of an organization for this purpose. We adopted a plan of taking such cities as had boards of health and using their officers as ours for doing this work. Some forty or fifty gentlemen met here in order to devise some scheme, and we paid some of their expenses. Various schemes were suggested; but at last, at the suggestion of my deputy they decided to try this one, of using the health officers of cities as our statistical officers. The expenditure for organization was shown in the returns, and amounts to $746. That is all that has been spent of the vote of last year. My own impression is that the figures fixed will be found barely sufficient to do the work expected of these men, but we will make the trial. The reason we ask for a larger vote this year is that we expect the different towns and villages will co-operate with us, and gradually appoint health officers, and thus the work will extend. If it does not extend we will not expend all the appropriation; but I think it will be found that the cost of carrying out the work properly, will be larger than most people will admit.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I confess to a very great deal of disappointment at the statement of the hon. gentleman. He has not given us information as to the work that is to be done. He speaks of these parties doing the work, but what is the work? Are there to be new regulations independent of the local authorities altogether? Are these people to be medical men, and are the statistics to be vital alone?

Mr. POPE. They are to be mortuary statistics and sanitary statistics.

Mr. MACKENZIE. As to mortuary statistics, I am sure that in Ontario $20,000 will not enable the hon. Minister to obtain the information now available. When we abolished the system of registration of statistics in Nova Scotia, we decided it was not in the province of the Dominion to undertake the collection and publication of vital statistics. Ontario adopted a system in which two or three times the amount asked for here is expended in the collection of vital statistics. Now the Dominion proposes to step in with a new system, or rather with no system at all. Since the hon. gentleman approached this question, some years ago, there has been no plan devised or system pursued, and we are now asked to vote this large sum without knowing where one dollar of it is to go. Is it to pay officers that may be appointed by Local Governments? Are there to be collected rural as well as city statistics? Is it a suburban as well as an urban arrangement? We ought to have some information on these points. I think it a great mistake to undertake anything of the kind here. In the first place, we could not force the collection of vital statistics. It is for the Provinces to undertake that. Without having any method fixed we are called on to vote this sum upon the wildest speculation. I hope the Government will retrace their steps, and not interfere with matters which the Provincial authorities have perfect right to deal.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. member for East York states that this question is not of sufficient importance to induce the Dominion Government to take an interest in it, or give any money for it.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I did not say it was of no importance. I said it was not in our province.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood the hon. gentleman to say we were not doing right in appropriating this money. We have just passed votes to keep up exhibitions, or to carry out agricultural shows, and to aid in many other schemes in which the Dominion and Provincial Governments co-operate, which individual Provinces would not be in a position to carry out alone as successfully as if assisted by this Government. We must all regret that our late lamented friend Dr. Brouse is not with us to-day, for he took a lively interest in this matter, and for years endeavored to promote some means by which we could get vital statistics. I regret the hon. Minister of Railways is not here, because he took an active part in it. When this subject was under discussion last year, we must all remember that it was then deemed especially important to co-operate with the Provincial Governments in endeavoring to get this information. I know it takes time to mature a scheme like this. This subject has been under discussion since last year, and circulars have been addressed to medical men, asking for suggestions how the object could best be accomplished, with the least expenditure. I think the very fact that diseases of a dangerous nature are making extensive ravages throughout the country, and that they appear to be attributable to causes that might be materially controlled if we had proper statistics to enable us to watch the progress of those diseases, to ascertain their nature, and to keep a record of them, I say that so long as we believe they can be controlled, I think it is of great importance to the people of this country that sufficient steps be taken to make that control effective. I am also glad to find that there is an increase in the Estimates this year for that purpose, because the amount voted last year was of little or no use. It was rather for the purpose of organization, and I was not surprised that the Minister of Agriculture did not give a definite statement of the expenditure required, because the thing has not matured yet. I think it is impossible to expect the Provincial Government, to get this information, and it is not altogether reasonable to expect that the Dominion Government can get this information alone, but where the two Governments co-operate they will be able very effectually to secure the information required. I believe, that after this experiment has had a fair trial it will warrant this House in doubling the amount next year, and if this scheme is successfully carried out it will render the greatest benefit to the people of this country, and will materially lessen the ravages of several diseases that are now depopulating our country at a rapid rate in many parts of it.

Mr. ORTON. I must congratulate the Government and the hon. Minister of Agriculture upon the stand he has taken with reference to this question. I hold, and it is held by leading men in this country, that there is no more important question than that of the public health. We spend from year to year thousands and hundreds of thousands in bringing people to this country, while we pay little regard to the health of those who are born here and live in our midst. Now, Sir, it is known that there are diseases prevailing in this country that can be easily prevented, if the public are only made aware of the simple means of doing so. I presume the object of this item is the collection not only of vital statistics, but to acquaint the people what steps should be taken to prevent the spread of these serious contagious diseases. I am very glad indeed that this matter has been taken up by the Government. I had the honor of being present last autumn with a deputation of medical men from various parts of the Dominion in reference to this question, and I was very happy to see the Minister of Railways and the Minister of Agriculture receive the deputation in the friendly way they did. There are considerable difficulties surrounding this question. In the first place, we are all aware that many of our municipal institutions are under the control of the Local Governments, and the council of every municipality are, by virtue of their office, a health board for that municipality and under the control of the Local Government, therefore it is important that this House should invite the co-operation of every Local Legislature in this Dominion in this very important work. The collection of vital statistics is of small importance compared with the results that should accrue from the people being made acquainted with the peculiar diseases that prevail in their midst, and with the means of arresting their progress, for I believe, that many of these diseases now destroying hundreds, aye, thousands of our people, might be arrested. If statistics were kept in reference to various diseases that prevail and a record kept of them, these statistics might be made available to the local boards of health, and these in turn might take the simple sanitary measures necessary for the purpose of preventing the spread of those diseases. I apprehend that the object of this vote is to begin a great work with the ultimate result of affording information to every board of health within the Dominion of Canada. Another point worthy of consideration is this: we have had various journals established in Canada for the purpose of informing the public upon these simple but very important sanitary matters, and these journals should be in the possession of every board of health and of every municipal council in the Dominion of Canada, and some encouragement might be given to them by the Government. I think that if a carefully revised report of the sanitary condition of the various portions of our country were issued under the authority of this House, even if it were only once a year, a vast amount of valuable information would be given that would lead to great and beneficial results to every portion of our people. I congratulate the hon. Minister upon increasing this amount. So far as my knowledge is concerned, I consider that even $20,000 is totally inadequate to the necessities of the case; however, it will go a great way and will accomplish a great deal of good.

Mr. BLAKE. We passed a vote last year for this purpose; would the hon. Minister state whether that sum has been or is to be spent this year, and how?

Mr. POPE. It has not all been spent. As I mentioned a moment ago, only $700 or $800 were spent, mostly in organization and in connection with the meeting of those medical gentlemen in Ottawa.

Mr. BLAKE. In having a good time.

Mr. POPE. Yes, at my expense. I hope they all had a good time, and I was very glad to see them and to ask them back again. But I do not think the hon. gentleman will seriously complain of that. I could not expect those men to come here without having their expenses partially paid—I mean their railway fares partially paid, because while here they paid their own expenses. In the first place,

I asked some medical men from Ontario and others from Montreal, and these met together, and after completing an organization invited about fifty other medical gentlemen from all parts of the Dominion to meet here consider this important subject. I suppose during this year we will spend $5,000 of the $10,000. It is intended that these reports should be monthly, and that they shall be tabulated so as to show the public the diseases prevailing in the country.

Mr. BLAKE. When the vote was proposed last year the hon. gentleman was unable to give us any statement whatever as to the plan on which the money was to be expended. He said that it was an experiment, and asked us to trust him with the vote. He told us, further, that the Dominion Medical Council had made a proposal to the Government, that they would submit a plan for the collection, by them, of health statistics, and that they could do it much cheaper than the Government, which perhaps was quite correct. He said, further, that the plan would be submitted, and if approved would go into operation. Did they submit a plan?

Mr. POPE. They did. The Medical Council submitted a plan which was not approved by the gentlemen who met here, and was not believed in by medical men generally. I forget exactly what it amounted to, but it amounted to very little indeed, and it was decided by the gentlemen who met here, and by medical men generally, that it was not a feasible plan. I asked the co-operation of these gentlemen, and obtained their suggestions. I did so as an experiment; I have experimented to the extent of $700. If I am able to show, at the end of the fiscal year, that not more than one-half of the vote has been expended, and that money has been saved to the country, there will not be much cause for complaint.

Mr. BLAKE. That depends entirely on what the hon. gentleman may have done with the half of the vote. If he has accomplished nothing, we shall have grounds for complaint. Upon the last occasion I indulged, it appears, in a little prophecy. I asked: "Will you promise not to ask for another $10,000?" The hon. gentleman replied, "No, not till I give you a good reason." Now I want the reason, for he is asking for the other $10,000—he is asking for $20,000 instead of $10,000. Will this be the last time of asking? The hon. member for Centre Wellington (Mr. Orton) says no, the amount is altogether inadequate, and a great deal more will be wanted. The hon. Minister told us last year that it was experimental, and that a plan had been proposed to him, and that if the plan was approved, the money would be spent, and if not approved, the money would not be expended. The plan turned out not to be practicable, and the hon. gentleman invited medical men here and expended on them $700. Did the hon. gentleman procure from them a plan? If the newspapers spoke correctly, which I believe they occasionally do, it was announced by the hon. Minister of Railways, who attended the gathering, partly in his official capacity, and partly in his professional capacity, that there was a constitutional difficulty in complying to the full with the request of those who were thus assembled. I do not know whether the hon. Minister of Agriculture was there, but the newspapers said it was pointed out that the Government had not the constitutional power to do all they might ask, and suggested an amendment of the Constitution in order that larger powers might be obtained to carry out measures which the public health requires. Is there any proposition of that kind involved?

Mr. POPE. No.

Mr. BLAKE. We are to limit ourselves to the constitutional power we possess and to the scheme proposed, which will involve an expenditure of $20,000.

Mr. POPE. I think about that.

Mr. BLAKE. Has the scheme been approved by the Government?

Mr. POPE. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. What seems important is that the matter has now passed the experimental stage.

Mr. POPE. Not entirely so.

Mr. BLAKE. To a considerable extent. Whereas last year the scheme had not been submitted to the Government, now a scheme from another board has been approved by the Government, and we should know what the scheme is, so that we may understand the matter in which it is proposed to expend this money. It is no longer a vote of credit; it is a vote to carry out a definite proposal of the Government. Last year, on Concurrence, the hon. Minister said: "I have no further information than what I gave when the item was first brought down. The Medical Board said, that if a certain allowance were placed at their disposal they could collect health statistics much cheaper. They will submit a plan for approval." That failed, and another plan was submitted, and approved. The hon. gentleman should have brought down that plan to the House, for we have no intelligent information respecting it. I believe a thoroughly accurate investigation into the subject of health statistics may produce important results, but I have a very strong impression that no useful results can be produced for any such amount as is proposed to be voted. A very much larger sum would be required to produce any useful results, and the hon. Minister should fully consider that point before he proposes to throw away—for I believe it will be throwing it away—$20,000. Whether we can afford the sum necessary to procure useful results, is a question which can be only answered when we see the hon. gentleman's plan. This is as much a vote of credit as the item was when it was first proposed.

Mr. ORTON. I wish to offer a few remarks in regard to the plan referred to by the hon. Minister. Having been a member of the deputation of medical men appointed on the question, I think it is proper that I should state what that body suggested. Medical men from all parts of the Dominion, from Halifax, Quebec, Montreal, Toronto, and other cities and towns, assembled here, and they found the Government were not prepared to enter into a very extensive plan for collecting vital statistics, and establish what we desired, a bureau of vital statistics of Canada. But the Government were prepared to meet them half-way, and a resolution was passed to the effect that where recognized boards of health were established in the cities and towns of the Dominion, they should participate in whatever sum the Government might think proper to vote to commence this important work; and the Government, through their representatives, who met the medical men—the hon. Minister of Agriculture and the hon. Minister of Railways—agreed to the proposition, and it was decided that health officers in cities and towns should receive a certain amount of money in proportion to the population of the city or town for the purpose of collecting vital statistics therein; and it was generally agreed by medical men, though they did not get all they asked, that this was a step in the right direction, and a sincere and earnest commencement in this great and important work; and I think that as far as that is concerned it is simply a question of how this money is being spent.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I would like to ask the matured Minister whether the statement of the embryo Minister is correct? Here is a direct statement made by the hon. gentleman who spoke last, as to certain proceedings that took place, which the Minister did not communicate to the House; and I simply desire to know whether that statement is correct, because it develops some sort of plan, at least, which the hon. gentleman did not mention to us?

Mr. POPE. I believe it is correct.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It should have been stated by the hon. Minister himself, I do not think that this House should be treated discourteously.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I think this is a very important matter which deserves the serious consideration of the Committee. If anything can be done by the action of this House to improve the public health, it should be cheerfully done. I would like to obtain from the hon. Minister of Agriculture the basis upon which he proposes to expend this money. Does he propose to appoint a health officer in each of the cities and towns, in order to collect and tabulate statistics for the information of the Government, so that these statistics may become available and useful to the public generally? How is this report to be distributed? I would like to have some information from him before the vote is passed, on these grounds. If the money is granted and nothing is done, the money may possibly be mis-spent, and we would like to know, and I, for my part, would really like to know, in the interests of the country, how this matter is to be arranged; what machinery is to be called into existence; what officers are to be appointed; what statistics are to be collected; and how they are to be collected? I trust that the hon. Minister will give this information.

Mr. POPE. I have done so.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I did not catch what the hon. gentleman stated about the appointment of officers, or where they are to be appointed. There is no doubt that the attention of Governments to these matters in other countries, has resulted in the public benefit; and if it is done in other countries, I do not see why it should not be done here; and if it is possible to preserve the health of the people and to increase the healthfulness of the people, this vote is in the right direction and has my support. I recollect, some years ago, that a Committee was appointed in this House to get information connected with the ventilation of this House, and sanitary matters connected with it. It went into an exhaustive research of all questions relating to this subject; and it found that the ventilation of the House was at that time in a very deplorable condition. I believe that, by the labors of that Committee, a remedy was found, and that the ventilation and the sanitary condition of this House has been very much improved by the results of its labors. If that was done in this House, it can be done in other houses; and if the people only know what means are to be adopted in order to preserve the health of their families, it will be a step in the right direction. If means can be adopted by the hon. Minister, in order to get information of this kind, it will improve the general health of the people, and the hon. gentleman will be doing a good work for this country. If he does not do so, it is quite possible that the agitation which has been begun to have him removed and a medical man appointed in his stead, will be very likely carried on; but, seriously, I consider that full information should be given to the House as to the mode of the expenditure of this money. There is a great deal of difficulty in carrying out the operations of the local boards of health. A good deal of opposition is given to them by the people, who are reluctant to give information to these boards; and I would like to know what powers those appointed will be clothed with by the Government, in order to fully carry out and maintain the usefulness of the grant which this House gives for that purpose.

53. For collecting and compiling Agricultural, Industrial and other Statistics in Manitoba and the North-West Territories; and also for collecting and compiling such Statistics elsewhere
(Revised) $20,000.00

Mr. MACKENZIE.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). How was this appropriation expended last year? I have searched in vain in the Public Accounts and in the Report of the Minister of Agriculture, to find out.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. That vote is for the current year.

Mr. ROSS. We will probably learn from the hon. Minister of Agriculture what he proposes to do with the vote of $20,000 for the next year.

Mr. POPE. Not one dollar of the $20,000 was expended last year. It was intended to collect all statistics relating to the North-West, and I believe that every hon. gentleman in the House saw the importance of this, so far as agriculture is concerned; but it was pretty late in the season before I could get at it. I employed my agents, as far as I could, to collect the statistics which are found in my report; and I also induced the railways to give us statistics. I supposed at the time that I could make an arrangement with the municipal authorities of Manitoba in this relation; but the negotiations were delayed until I thought it hardly worth while to expend the money last year. My intention this year, if I make arrangements with them—and they have made some propositions—is to get this information regarding the North-West and its produce, to be placed before intending settlers and the people of this country.

Mr. ROYAL. I believe that the hon. gentleman, if he wishes to avail himself of the existing system inaugurated by the Provincial Government of Manitoba for the collection of statistics of this kind, will succeed in his object. The Department of Agriculture of Manitoba was reorganized last year, and I think that it is now in a most efficient state. The Minister and the Deputy there, Mr. Burrows, are very efficient, and are collecting, all over the Province, most valuable and most correct information with respect to industrial and other statistics. Vital statistics are also being obtained of a special character. The Deputy Minister, Mr. Burrows, is a very active and intelligent and clever man who is giving to this very important matter all his attention, and I am sure that, with very little expense, the Minister of Agriculture here will be able to get these statistics from the Provincial Department, and to complete them by the statistics which he will get from his own agents. I am glad to be able to point out to him the existence of that reorganized Department in Manitoba.

Mr. ORTON. With reference to the collection of agricultural statistics, I wish to draw the attention of the House to the character of statistics which I think would be useful, and to say be depended upon—the obtaining of statistical information properly collected, on good authority, with reference to the amount of grain brought into the markets of Europe and Great Britain—not only by Canada, but other countries with which Canada has to cope or compete. In the future this will be, more than now, a country which will be largely interested in supplying the people of Europe and Great Britain with breadstuffs, and I think it is important, that the imports into these countries from India, Egypt, and other countries, which compete with us, should be kept on record in the Department of Agriculture. It would also be important to have the yearly statement of the market value of agricultural products in the leading markets of Great Britain, Canada, United States, and those countries which compete with us in supplying Europe with breadstuffs. Another important point to which I desire to call attention, is the necessity of providing our farmers with good seed. I am sorry to find that a duty is charged on seed imported for the purpose of improving the grain sown by our farmers. We all know the serious disadvantage which has accrued to Manitoba and the North-West, from the Mennonites having a class of seed which was not adapted to the climate. I trust it may be within the power of the Minister of Agriculture, to devote some of this money to encouraging the importation of the best kind of seed adapted to our climate.

Mr. BLAKE. When the hon. gentleman proposed this vote last year, I stated that I was glad that attention was being called to the special necessity of procuring statistics of this kind, though I objected to his bringing it forward without proposing any plan for collecting such information. I still support a proposition for the collection of such information. I think it is of great importance to Canada at large that some special attention should be given to the procuring and publication of reliable statistics as to Manitoba and the North-West. My hon. friend from Provencher (Mr. Royal) has stated that the Local Government of Manitoba has re-organized this Department, and that it is now in an efficient state; so I have no doubt the hon. Minister of Agriculture will cease spending money in trying to get, through Dominion officers, what is efficiently collected by local officers. Assuming that the local Department is in the condition which the hon. gentleman has stated, there yet remains the North-West Territory, and I think it is very important that we should point out the progress and settlement of that part of the country, and give reliable information as to the character and extent of its crops. But I stated on a former occasion, and I now desire to repeat, that it is of great consequence that we should obtain accurate yearly information as to the settlement in the country, and for that purpose I have ventured privately to suggest to the hon. gentleman that he should perfect arrangements with the railway companies in order to obtain information which, by his own action with reference to the supposed exodus he deems important, as verifying calculations with reference to immigration. I think that full and reliable information as to the period at which the ground was fit for tillage, the period at which the crops matured, and as to the crops which come to perfection in the various parts of that territory are points to which we have not paid sufficient attention, and, as the hon. member beside me (Mr. Mackenzie) suggests, the meteorological phenomena of that country might be included in the same category. I think we can well afford to spend, and to expect a large return from the judicious expenditure of money in this direction. But I regret that the hon. gentleman has not prefaced his application to the Committee for this vote by giving us some details as to his proposed mode of operation, and I invite him now to tell us—having had a year to mature his plan—in what way he purposes expending this money.

Mr. POPE. I think I told the Committee last year that I proposed to get the information, as far as possible, from the Local Governments, but that it was impossible to get it from the North-West in any such way, so that in that part of the Dominion it is the intention of the Government to collect this information as far as they possibly can. The hon. gentleman says the Local Government of Manitoba are re-organizing their bureau, but I do not suppose they will give us this information for nothing. I have been negotiating upon that matter. I found them pretty well disorganized last year, and I saw that I could not make the arrangements which were needed without a larger expenditure than I felt justified in incurring. I do intend, however, making arrangements with the Local Government of Manitoba, as well as with those of the other Provinces where such information is collected, but I am particularly anxious to get information about the North-West. I want to be able next year to lay before the House the number of acres under cultivation this year and last, the amount of land broken up, the averages of the crops, and what crops the country is capable of producing. But I want to get this information without an unduly large expenditure of money. With regard to the statistics from the railway I quite agree with the hon. gentleman, but I never have considered that these figures were absolutely correct, though I do think they are an approximation. That information I will try to lay before the House next year.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It would be very important for the promotion of immigration that, not only should the general time for ploughing, seeding, and harvesting be given, but that individual cases should be mentioned. It might be stated that in such and such a district land was ploughed on a certain day, the seed sown on a certain day, and that the crop was reaped on a certain day. If the figures of a few farms a few miles apart were given in this way, it would give a better idea of the country to the people of Great Britain than any general statistics.

Mr. SPROULE. The course suggested last year with reference to statistics could be accomplished admirably this year, if the Local Government would only co-operate with the Government here, viz.: to have the assessors, in going around among the farmers, obtain from them information as to the number of acres sowed, the amount reaped, and the vital statistics.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I only alluded to the North-West in what I suggested. Of course we cannot interfere with the assessors of the Provinces.

Mr. WATSON. I approve of the means that the Government intend to use in order to obtain information in the North-West. As has been said by the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Royal), the Local Government of Manitoba have a very efficient Deputy Minister of Agriculture, but, unfortunately, the money they have to spend is too limited. One-third of the amount appropriated is required to pay the salaries of the officials. I think it would be well for the Dominion Government to make an arrangement with the Local Government to obtain the statistics from them. It would be very interesting to persons from other Provinces to have reports from farmers in different sections of the country, as to the seasons of the year at which they cultivate their lands, as to the yield, the best crops, the best quality of grain, &c. The plan adopted last fall, of getting statistics from the railway officials, was very unsatisfactory. In some cases the reports greatly exaggerated the amount of grain produced, and in other cases they did not give more than half, but if the Government co-operate with the Local Government, I think the statistics may be very successfully obtained.

54. To meet expenses in connection with Immigration and Quarantine.....$518,721.00

Mr. POPE. Hon. gentlemen will see that there is an increase of $50 a year in the salaries of agents; but in the cases of the agents at Toronto, Hamilton and London, the increases are greater, and, considering the importance of these points, I do not think the agents are over-paid. We propose to have an agent at Qu'Appelle at the same salary as is paid to the agent at Brandon; there will be another agent in the North-West at some point west of Regina; and it is proposed to remove the agent at Duluth to Prince Arthur's Landing. The salaries paid at the London office are exactly the same as they were last year, except $100, which is added to Mr. Dickson's salary. There is an addition of $1,200 in the salaries of agents in Europe, which is for an agent who has recently been appointed in Norway. Now I come to the increase of $200,000 for general immigration purposes. I believe the only way to secure a large immigration is to place within the reach of the largest number of people the means of coming to this country. Many people would gladly come here who have not the means to do so. For that reason we have contributed to assisted passages, for which we expended last year $83,722,

The expenditure for publications last year was $56,144; the expenditure for transport to Ontario was $40,095. Two years ago the Ontario Government, who had previously paid two-thirds of the cost of passage from Quebec to any part of Ontario, declined to pay any part of it, and hence this very large increase. We have not paid it all; we have only done so when the people could not pay it themselves. For transport to points in Quebec we paid $13,000, and to other places in the Dominion, $36,000. We also paid for delegates' expenses, $2,244; for colonization expenses, $3,553; for meals for immigrants, $8,630; and we expended at Point Levis for sheds, $6,831.

Mr. CHARLTON. What are colonization expenses?

Mr. POPE. Placing immigrants. Of course there are other expenses. For repatriation we have paid something like $2,000, being at the rate of £1 a head. That with other smaller expenses amounted to $346,000.

Mr. BLAKE. Is that paid to agents or to the parties themselves?

Mr. POPE. To the parties themselves on arriving at Winnipeg. We offer, as we did last year, £1 per head for all German immigrants coming into Winnipeg, and when they get to Winnipeg we pay it on presentation of the last coupon. We also pay for immigration from Great Britain; for instance, some girls come here at £2 10s. per head, payable upon arrival at any port in the Dominion. Farmers come here for £3 sterling per head, and others for £4 per head. We pay something on the servant girls and something on the farmers—$1 per head. While 112,000 came in last year, we shall, this year, have 150,000 coming to Canada. Of those I calculate 75,000, formed of our own people and Europeans, will go to the North-West. So far as the North-West is concerned, I do not induce people without some means to go there. The only way we can get German immigration is by the direct lines to New York, and I have entered into negotiations with an agent in Germany and Scandinavia to have those people laid down in Manitoba, and upon the last coupon of their ticket being presented to us we pay them $1; after we find they are settled and located in the country we pay the amount to the ship. The hon. gentleman will see that I am quite within the mark if we get the immigration I have every reason to expect we will. I know there will not be this year anything like the German and Scandinavian immigration that there was last year, but the last mail brings me word that we are going to have a larger immigration from those places than last year. We made great exertions; brought out delegates, sent them to examine our North-West, and are now paying £1 per head to the agents of the steamships, whenever these people are laid down in Manitoba. We want to establish a nucleus of that immigration there, knowing that those settled will induce their friends to follow. We cannot, to any reasonable extent, do too much to settle that great country, which has such a bearing on the future of this Dominion, and we do not believe that the land in its natural state is worth a single dollar to us. I have looked at this question from many points of view. I have looked to see what is the result of the immigration we had last year. We will take it at 100,000 people. They cost us in round numbers, $350,900 for all the agencies and expenses, or $4 per head. If those people were raised in this country, it would cost for every one of them raised up to 16 years of age, $800 to raise them; and if we get them for $5 per head, we make a good bargain. This is not all; there is not a man in this House who will not admit that every man we bring in here, will pay into the revenue at least $5 a year. Supposing it is only that, that is the interest on $100, and if you multiply that by 100,000 immigrants, you will see I have made for you $10,000,000. I am making this large amount of money, and my hon. friend the Finance Minister is reaping the benefit.

Mr. POPE.

I am satisfied by this year's operations, that the coming year will bring to this country 150,000 people from Europe, and I am satisfied that the figures I have given will not more than cover the disbursements I shall have to make. Under these circumstances I ask the House to have a little confidence in me and vote this large grant.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the expected distribution of this large vote?

Mr. POPE. In exactly the same proportion as last year. I ask for the larger amount because the number of immigrants will be much larger.

Mr. BLAKE. There is no alteration in the plans or the system of the Department. Merely the expectation that a larger expenditure will be required because of the larger immigration.

Mr. POPE. Just so.

Mr. BLAKE. Of the 75,000 expected to go into Manitoba, and of which a portion will be from this country, what does the hon. Minister expect will be the proportion of Europeans and Canadians?

Mr. POPE. It is impossible for me to tell accurately. The hon. gentleman will find by the newspapers that a very much larger proportion of German immigration is destined for Manitoba than formerly. We may safely say that we will get 40,000 European immigrants into Manitoba this year.

Mr. ROYAL. We see by the papers that 5,000 Irish families, assisted, will be directed this year to Manitoba. Will these 5,000 families, which will amount to 25,000 individuals, get any assistance from the hon. gentleman's Department?

Mr. POPE. No. I do not think, as I said before, that it is profitable to Manitoba or useful to the country that we should put any men there whom we may have to assist very largely. It is better we should assist them to come to Canada where they can find employment and learn the ways of the country, and after a time, if industrious, they will earn money to go further west. It is in the interests of the country that we should not fill it with people requiring to be assisted. Requests are very numerous this year for laborers, and even half-a-dozen members of this House have spoken to me on behalf of their own constituencies where help is very much required. In some cases the very Irish families are being sought for. In Japanese provision has been made to settle and employ some of these people, and so we find it all through the country. We think it better for them and better for Manitoba that men of some means, men who are able to keep themselves, should go there, while these immigrants can find employment in this part of the country among our farmers. I have urged many of them to remain in the older Provinces, as being better adapted for them than the North-West. If I do send a man to the North-West I want to send a man who is able to take care of himself.

Mr. HESSON. I am sure it is most gratifying to this Committee to learn from the hon. Minister of Agriculture, that he expects such a large immigration to this country, and the North-West, at an early day, and I am especially glad to know that he expects a large part of these to be of the Scandinavian and German races. We know the value of these people, and I am glad the hon. Minister has devoted some attention to that particular class. But I rose for the purpose of calling the hon. gentleman's attention to another point. The Government have agreed upon Regina as the capital of the Province of Assiniboia, but I do not see in this vote any item for the purpose of providing shelter for any emigrants there, though I do see an item of $14,000 to be expended somewhere in the North-West, which may be in the Province of Assiniboia. It is very desirable that people arriving here from Europe, and going to the North-West, if they should desire to go to Regina, there ought certainly to be provided some accommodation for them there in the way of shelter for a few days. Now, we know the expense and difficulty of people finding lodging in that country. It is difficult for any one to get comfortable shelter there. It may be said by the hon. Minister, that he has provided accommodation at Qu'Appelle to a certain extent; in fact, he has some $45,000 for use east of Qu'Appelle, but I am sorry to see no provision made for the town of Regina. I do not say this from any pecuniary interest in the place, but simply from an interest in the people who may go there and find no provision made for them. I have not a dollar's interest in that place, nor in Qu'Appelle, so I am not speaking from any personal consideration. I trust the hon. Minister of Agriculture will make some provision for the protection, though it may be but for a few days, for emigrants who go there. Many families will go from Ontario, and it would certainly be hard for them, after leaving their comfortable homes, to find no place to shelter them on their arrival at Regina. For this purpose some portion of the Mounted Police coverings or tents which are no longer in use, might be utilized; but I think that something even more permanent than that should be erected. When we consider that out of the 40,000 European immigrants the Minister expects to enter the North-West this year, probably 10,000 or 15,000 may make their headquarters at Regina for a few days, the need of protection and shelter for those people becomes very evident.

Mr. POPE. When I said 40,000 Europeans I meant 40,000 people outside of Canadians.

Mr. ROYAL. It is certainly a matter of great satisfaction to the members from Manitoba, to learn that 40,000 immigrants are likely to settle in Manitoba and the North-West during the coming year, from Ontario alone. We are also likely to get a portion of the 75,000 that he expects from Europe, and these, with the assisted Irish immigrants, will make up probably 100,000 settlers in our Province and the North-West Territory this year. This is a most pleasing announcement to make in this Committee, and will very likely carry joy to our distant homes in Manitoba. Now, last year it was calculated that 60,000 people settled in Manitoba, and that these emigrants carried with them a capital to the amount of $8,000,000 or $10,000,000. If the same proportion of capital is brought into the Province this year, we may depend upon having an increase of capital of from $10,000,000 to $20,000,000. This, I repeat, is very cheerful news to announce to this country, and to announce to our distant Province and to the North-West Territory. Now, I believe that the whole of Canada is interested in this question of immigration, and although this debate may seem wearisome to some members, to our Province it is one of very great importance. Canada has invested capital largely in opening up Manitoba and the North West Territories, and, so far, Canada has invested nearly $45,000,000 in that country. It is calculated that, last year, the inter-provincial trade amounted to nearly $18,000,000. Now, it is evident that to increase our population in the West is the surest means of increasing our inter-provincial trade, and by that means yielding a revenue to the Eastern Provinces for the investments they have made in the West. I repeat that if the expectations which have been held out to this Committee are realized, I believe this year will be one of the brightest years we have seen in this country since the years 1878 and 1879, and I hope, in another year, we will have, instead of 100,000, 125,000, especially if we have presiding over the Immigration Department the present intelligent, clever and patriotic gentleman who is Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. BURNS. I have only a word to say, because I can appreciate the value of time. On a former occasion I made a few remarks on the subject of immigration. I desire to repeat now what I stated then, and that is, that while I favor a policy which will settle the north-western part of this Dominion by the expenditure of even a larger amount than is asked, I also recognize the importance of settling up the large tracts of land we have in the Eastern Provinces. Reference has been made to the benefits that accrue to the Eastern Provinces by the settlement of the North-West, and that has been specially referred to by the hon. member who has just taken his seat. While it may be true that the Provinces of Ontario and Quebec derive very large benefits from the trade with Manitoba, the same cannot be said, at all events, with equal application, in regard to Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, and largely because these Provinces are at a great distance from the North-West, and the item of freight is a very important one in considering the question of trade with the North-West. My idea now is, as I stated before, that in appropriating the amount of money which this Parliament can grant for immigration purposes, each Province of the Dominion should get a share of that money. It is true that the whole Dominion is interested in the settlement of the North West, because the North-West properly belongs to the Dominion. It is quite right, then, that Dominion funds should be appropriated for the purpose of opening up that country from which Canada, as a whole, would derive benefits; but by applying all the money for the settlement of that particular part of the Dominion, you, in a sense, do injustice to the other Provinces which have also lands to settle, and which contribute their share of the amount appropriated for the settlement of the North-West. Under the scheme which was proposed, and partly carried out, some years ago, each Province would receive from the Dominion Exchequer a certain sum of money as supplementary to an amount to be appropriated by the respective Provinces for immigration purposes. I allude more particularly to New Brunswick. I think it was claimed, and it was claimed with considerable justice, too, that the Province of New Brunswick was treated unfairly at that time. That Province was induced to spend a large sum for immigration on the understanding—if not written it was implied—that it would receive from the Dominion Exchequer a certain amount of money for a certain number of years. Acting on that belief, that Province spent a large amount of money, in one year not less than $70,000 or $80,000, on immigration purposes. Turning to another matter in connection with immigration: I am not disposed to under-value the importance of bringing Scandinavian and German immigrants to this country; but while I am disposed to lend all assistance I can to promote immigration of that kind, I cannot close my eyes to the fact that there is another country from which immigrants can be brought with advantage to the Dominion, and that is Ireland. The hon. Minister of Agriculture has said it is not desirable to settle up the North-West with poor people. It does not follow that in promoting immigration from Ireland you settle the North-West with poor people. There is in Ireland a large population, not larger than the country can maintain, but there are peculiar circumstances and reasons why the population are not obtaining the living they should get, and for that reason they are removing. I am now speaking of farmers who leave the country with funds quite sufficient to establish them in any country where they might wish to settle. Where are they going? Are they coming to Canada? They are going either to the United States or to the Australian colonies. My business takes me every year, and it has done so for a number of years, to the Old Country. Every year, while in Ireland, at almost every important railway station I have seen people going away by hundreds to Queensland, and not coming to Canada; and they were not poor people, but those who possessed sufficient money to establish themselves in business in more distant lands than Canada is to them. As much attention should be given to the promotion of immigration from Ireland as to Germany, or Scandinavia, or any other country.

Mr. POPE. There is.

Mr. BURNS. I have not seen any evidence of it. If you take up the report of the London agent, you will find that of the 51,000 people who left Great Britain for this country only 6,000 were Irish, 13,000 were foreigners, 21,000 were English, and about 4,000 Scotch. We know that from peculiar circumstances emigration has been going on from Ireland on a large scale for a number of years, and I say 6,000 is not a good proportion of Irish to the number of English and foreigners who came to Canada; and, therefore, it is desirable to do as much to promote and encourage the class of immigrants of which I speak, to come from Ireland as from Germany or Scandinavia. I am not one of those who believe a statement I heard some time ago, that it is not desirable to encourage a certain class of immigrants. I am not prepared to accept that doctrine. Going back to the Provinces: we have in the Lower Provinces a very large amount of unsettled land. We have in the three counties of Gloucester, Kent and Madawaska, some of the finest farm lands in Canada. These lands are being settled by French Canadians; in my county there are 15,000 Acadians. I would desire to see brought to that county a number of Irish people. If they were poor we would be quite willing to accept them. It is quite true, as the hon. Minister has stated, that the poorer classes are perhaps better remaining in the older Provinces, where they can obtain employment, and where they do not require capital to start with, as they do in the North-West. They could obtain employment in the counties I have mentioned, and settle alongside French Acadians, a people with whom the Irish have always dwelt, in times past, in amity and goodwill. I will refer to a statement made by an hon. member some time ago, and it is this: that the Irish Roman Catholic prefers an Orangeman for a neighbor rather than a French Canadian. I deny that in toto. I say it was an unwarranted and unauthorized statement to make; and I am glad I have now an opportunity here to say that the Irish Roman Catholics coming from Ireland will find in the French-Canadian counties of the different Provinces just as much society congenial to them as in any place else. I saw the other day a statement made by some papers that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company were about to bring out 5,000 immigrant families. As I understand from the Minister of Agriculture now, that scheme is not part and parcel, at all events, of the scheme of the Government. Whether it is or not, I think it would be very desirable that the suffering population of Ireland should be brought out even in that way; and I think that their introduction into this country, whether they are poor or rich, will be of material service to this country. With respect to the London agency I have this to say: I have had occasion to go in there many times, and while I bring no charge whatever against the management of it, I have to say, that it is desirable, if this is not the case, that the clerks employed there should have a thorough acquaintance with Canada. I do not know whether these clerks are Canadians or Englishmen, but, judging from what I saw, I think they are not the class of young men who are fit to encourage applications being made to them for information. Perhaps it may be that I am over-sensitive, but on every occasion that I went there I found no desire at all events on their part to enter into any conversation with reference to the matters connected with the office. Questions met with civil answers, and information asked for was given, but I did not find in them that enterprising go-ahead-itativeness displayed which is desirable. My idea of an immigration agency is this: the clerks should be on the look-out; they should place posters at the door, if you will; and if they see any person who looks like an immigrant—as I myself may have looked—they should go out and say: "What can I do for you, Sir?" I throw out the suggestion with the view of drawing the attention of the Minister to the necessity of spurring up these young men, and making them display more energy in encouraging applications to be made by immigrants at the office.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Of course, the Government have no means and no desire to force immigration into Canada. That must be the voluntary act of the immigrants, whether from Ireland, or from Scandinavia, or from Germany. The mass of the immigration has hitherto gone to the United States, and our effort now is, and the effort of the Government under the special auspices of my hon. friend, the Minister of Agriculture, is to change that current both from Ireland, Scandinavia, and Germany, to our own country, instead of to the United States. With respect to all these immigrants, whether from Ireland, England, or Scotland; or from the Continent of Europe, the advantage is the same; the assistance is the same; and there is no assistance to immigration specially going to the North-West. They are invited to come to Dominion ports, to Halifax, St. John, Quebec, Montreal, &c., or through the United States to Toronto, so that we may get them into this country in some way. Their passages are assisted, and when you learn from my hon. friend, that these passages vary from £2 10s. to £4, you will understand at what a cheap rate immigrants can arrive on our shores. When they arrive here it is for them to say whether they will remain in the Maritime Provinces, or in Quebec, or in Ontario, or go farther west. I am glad to know and believe that the statements of my hon. friend with respect to the prospective immigration of the year 1833 are correct. They are very moderate, and not at all exaggerated; and I am quite satisfied that we will receive, at our various ports or through the United States, the amount of immigration upon which he has calculated. In stating that he expects 40,000 to go into the North-West during the current year, he has not made any calculation for the 5,000 families, or 25,000 people, coming from Ireland. There is no necessity, I am glad to say, for our going to any expense, as a Government, to assist those people. From the latest information we have by cable, I have reason to believe that satisfactory arrangements will be made, without the transport of these people costing us anything for conveying a large body of people from the west and south of Ireland to Manitoba and the North-West.

Mr. POPE. Except assisted passages.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Of course; the Canadian Government assists all families coming to this country, under the same rule; and I may say, at the same time, that we also assist the repatriation of the people who have left Canada in years gone by, and are returning in very large numbers, or in very considerable numbers, to Canada again. Some are coming back to the older Provinces, and some are going to the North-West. I understand that the Secretary for Ireland, Mr. Trevelyan, in a speech made a few days ago, has fully committed himself to the principle of assisted immigration to a very large extent. I believe also from the information which I have received by wire, that the Colonial Minister has also—so far as he can individually do so—stated his desire, on behalf of the Government, to assist in the transfer of a very large population—a very considerable population—from Ireland to the North-West. It seems to be now admitted by statesmen on both sides, sitting in the House of Commons of England, that immigration is the chief remedy, and perhaps the only remedy, for the troubles which, we all know, exist now in Ireland. Whether that opinion is correct or not is not for us to say. It is very fortunate, in one sense, that this opinion should prevail among the public men of Great Britain, because the opinion prevailing will, of course, result in an expenditure of money in sending these people, a most desirable population, to settle in the North-West. We are going to get, we know, a large influx of settlers into the North-West bringing money; they will be employers of labor; they will have the money to do it, and that being the case, the moment these poor people are brought out from Ireland at the expense of Her Majesty's Government, or by a combination of capital or capitalists in Europe, to the North-West, they will find there employers of labor in advance of them, ready to employ them at profitable and, I may say, at high wages. I know, that by a combination—I cannot speak positively, I cannot give specific information to the Committee at this moment, but I believe there is a combination of arrangements between the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the Hudson Bay Company and the North-West Land Company, to aid in the desirable project of Her Majesty's Government to send a large number of Irish families to the North-West, and I have reason to believe, though I cannot speak specifically as to any final arrangement being made, that Her Majesty's Government will employ the organization which is to be formed of these three corporations, as a means of bringing out and peopling and settling them in the North-West. Everything looks ripe in that regard. As I stated before, we will have a very considerable influx of people with money into the North-West, and I believe we will have a large number of laborers from Ireland seeking employment; and with these two classes going in the same year, into the same country, the result must be a great activity in that country, and the rapid development of its resources.

Mr. DAWSON. It is pleasing to hear that the prospects for immigration are so good—that we are to have so large an immigration from Ireland and other places to the North-West. My hon. friend from New Brunswick (Mr. Burns) stated that there was plenty of room for immigration in his Province, as well as into the North-West. So far as that is concerned, I would say that, in the district which I represent, which is as large as all the Maritime Provinces combined, with Newfoundland thrown in, there is plenty of room for a considerable number of immigrants. In many parts of that district we have a good soil and a good climate, and we grow as good wheat as is grown in the North-West. North of Lake Huron, and in many parts of the country north of Lake Superior, there are considerable stretches of good land, and though I do not regret to see immigration invited into the vast regions of the North-West, where there is room enough for all the suffering people in Ireland or elsewhere, still there is ample space for a good many immigrants in the district to the east of that region, and probably it would be well that efforts should be made to attract immigration in that direction rather than have an unsettled stretch of country between Ontario and the North-West. I rose, however, for the purpose of drawing attention to another matter, which I suppose comes under this head, as it includes quarantine. Last winter there was a very serious outbreak of small-pox among the men employed on the Canadian Pacific Railway in the district of Thunder Bay. It broke out suddenly, and I think there should be some means taken of imposing quarantine in such cases. As was stated in the newspapers the other day, the people of Prince Arthur's Landing established a quarantine and succeeded in stamping out the disease. I think it is hardly fair that the expense of providing for a thing of this sort should fall upon a poor and isolated community. The people there did all that it was possible for them to do. They employed physicians, they established an hospital in an isolated position, they sent the sick there, and they established quarantine at the different camps along the road for a distance of forty miles eastward from Prince Arthur's Landing. They put guards at the camps which were infected, and they would not allow the people to leave them for fear of carrying the infection to other places. They nursed the sick, they buried the dead, and they succeeded in stamping out the disease. Now, it is quite evident that all this could not be done without incurring a good deal of expense. The people of the Landing cheerfully bore that expense, though they are a small community. They sent me an account of it, which I laid before, the hon. Minister of Immigration, thinking that, doubtless, it came within his Department. He manifested great sympathy, but he thought that some other Department should deal with it. I then went to the Department of Railways, but they thought that theirs was not the proper Department, and that it should be dealt with by some other Department. They wrote me a letter recommending me to apply to the Canadian Pacific Railway about it, because the men were working for that Company. I sent this letter to the Company, and received an answer from them, the other day, to the effect that they had no funds for such a purpose. The fact remains that a terrible disease broke out, and that if it had not been for these energetic people acting as they did, and stamping it out, the consequences might have been very serious; and yet, it appears, that we have not a Department of the Government ready to take the matter up and deal with it. They all manifested the greatest sympathy with these people, they were exceedingly sorry that they had been put to so much trouble in stamping out the disease, but I could get nothing from them further than extreme courtesy, civility, and a great deal of red tape. Now that the matter is under discussion, I would draw the attention of the hon. Minister of Agriculture to these facts, so that he may make provision for such cases in the future. The small-pox has left the place where it broke out, and its ravages are now felt among the poor Indians of Rainy River, whom it is killing off very fast, and there is no saying where it may end.

Mr. SPROULE. I have some knowledge of this outbreak and of the means which were taken to stamp it out, and I fully endorse all the hon. gentleman has said. I think we can scarcely over-estimate its importance, because if the disease had spread amongst the laborers of the railway, it would have been almost impossible to carry on the works around Lake Superior. The people at the Landing who took this matter in hand were not a wealthy people, and they took the most efficient means of stamping out the disease, and these means were successful. I think it is a matter with which the hon. Minister of Agriculture should deal, as it belongs to his Department, and I think he should grant a small sum in order to pay the expenses which were incurred at that time.

Mr. BLAKE. I would be sorry to interrupt this discussion, but I was anxious to get some information from the hon. Minister upon the question of immigration, which we were discussing when this matter came up. My hon. friend from Provencher (Mr. Royal) added the 25,000 expected to come from Ireland to the 75,000 that the hon. Minister calculates for the North-West, making in all 100,000. I would like to ask the hon. Minister if my hon. friend was correct or not. Did the hon. gentleman include the 25,000 in his estimated calculation?

Mr. POPE. My calculation was 75,000, and I did not take those into consideration, because arrangements had not been made at that time.

Mr. BLAKE. I understand that; but still the hon. gentleman did expect a certain amount of Irish immigration.

Mr. POPE. Certainly.

Mr. BLAKE. And I suppose he expects ten or twelve thousand from the United States.

Mr. POPE. I think a good many more. During the winter season, my agents have been employed in travelling in the United States, and working up emigration from that country, and the reports I get are very encouraging.

Mr. BLAKE. So we may, perhaps, count on 15,000 of the 40,000 to come from there. The hon. gentleman also includes in this total of 150,000, the persons who will be repatriated from the United States. Has he any statement as to that?

Mr. POPE. I cannot say as to that.

Mr. BLAKE. They are included in the 150,000, but how many they are he cannot say; and therefore the total figure is reached without any very great information as to how it is reached.

Mr. POPE. I said that. I said that my impression was that we would get 150,000 but it was not based on a very positive estimate, but on the information from Europe and the United States.

Mr. BLAKE. And how many Chinese did the hon. gentleman include in that number.

Mr. POPE. I did not count any Chinese at all. I presume we shall get some.

Mr. BLAKE. Then the hon. First Minister stated that there was an extensive plan, in which the Pacific Railway Company, the Hudson's Bay Company, and another Company, were joined to promote immigration. I saw a brief letter from the President of the Canadian Pacific Railway the other day, in which he stated that his suggestion was not a settlement on the lands of the Company, but on free grant lands. Can the hon. gentleman speak a little more positively or fully as to what the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are doing to promote immigration and what they are expending? I observe that the return of the railway, given under the Statute did not mention any specific expenditure in that direction; and some of us have a very lively recollection of promises made to us when we were called upon to assent to the hon. gentleman's railway policy, as to the vast work to be done, and as to the way in which the public revenue would be relieved by the railway company doing that portion of our business for us. They were to pay our immigration agents, and we were to save our money. I do not know how much they have spent; I have seen no account, and I would like to know what they have spent, are spending, and are about to spend for immigration.

Mr. POPE. Of course, I cannot say what they have spent. I know that they have an agent in London, and I know that they have contributed largely by the publication of pamphlets and other literature, which they have distributed throughout Germany, Scandinavia, and elsewhere. If the report is true, as I believe it is, that the Pacific Railway Company, and the other companies mentioned by the hon. First Minister, are going to establish 25,000 people in the North-West, I can assure the hon. gentleman that that means a very large expenditure indeed.

Mr. BLAKE. But the plan is not that the Canadian Pacific Railway will do that, but that the English Government will do it.

Mr. POPE. No; I understand that the English Government will give £5 a head, and the rest will be contributed by these Companies.

Mr. BLAKE. The statement is that the English Government will advance for ten years enough money to put them in the North-West.

Mr. FAIRBANK. It is a pleasing feature of the debate that a few hon. gentlemen have been bold enough to say a word or two for the older Provinces. We have heard so much of the West, and the tendency has been so strong to go there, that we might fear the East would tip up. The remark has been made twice to-night by an hon. gentleman, that there were no unoccupied farms in Ontario. This is quite correct. Such is the soil, the climate, and the abundance of fuel in Ontario, that the lands once made into farms are not left unoccupied; but a stranger might draw a wrong conclusion from those remarks, and might suppose that there were no unoccupied lands suitable for farming in the Province, whereas there are tens of thousands of acres in the Western Peninsula of Ontario still awaiting settlement, and which, when once cultivated as farms, are worth from $40 to $60 an acre. In the attention paid to the North-West, this fact is likely to be overlooked. There are so many individuals interested in the North-West, that it is receiving undue attention. Great quantities of the literature regarding the North-West, which was prepared originally for the Old Country, is distributed in the older Provinces. I have seen cartloads of it being sent to Ontario. Allusions have been made to the Pacific Railway Company, and the efforts it is making to secure immigration. I think the point was properly taken. The Pacific Railway Company own half the land, and all the modern highways, that is, the railways of the North-West, and it is very desirable that we should know whether it is doing its part in the promotion of immigration. The attention of the hon. Minister of Agriculture has been called to the necessity of making suitable provision for immigrants when they arrive in the North-West. I think it would be well to protect those immigrants who are not familiar with the country from locating on poor land. It is well known that there are large sections in the North-West that are not suitable for settlement, to which immigrants occasionally find their way, and after spending considerable of their energy and money, they are forced to move. There have been numerous instances of that kind already, and I believe it would be largely in the future interest of that country if some attention was paid to directing the immigrants to suitable locations; otherwise, the effect of our policy will be largely to send immigrants to Dakota by way of Manitoba.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman has stated that the general policy of his Department this year is the same as last, as applied to larger figures. I see that last year a portion of the vote was expended in paying assisted passages of mechanics. Is there any proposal to assist the immigration of mechanics this year?

Mr. POPE. Not as mechanics. Attached to every assisted warrant is the certificate of a clergyman, and the declaration of the immigrant himself, that he is an agriculturist, or a farmer, or of something of that kind. But I find very often that a good able fisted mechanic will make a very good agriculturist, and besides there is a very large demand for mechanics in the North-West at very high prices, and I shall try as far as I can to supply that demand to some extent.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not express an opinion on the hon. gentleman's policy, but am merely ascertaining what the policy is.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). There is one point that ought to be referred to, and that is the references hon. gentlemen opposite have made to the effect of the Canadian Pacific Railway on immigration to this country. When the discussion took place on the charter of the Canadian Pacific Railway, it was urged strongly that the effect of that contract would be to largely increase immigration, and that the Company would share largely with the Government the cost of bringing in immigration. We may fairly say this has been realized to a very considerable degree. If to-day we are looking forward to some 75,000 immigrants coming into the North-West, we owe it to the fact that the Canadian Pacific Railway has succeeded with an enterprise that has challenged the admiration of everyone, in constructing the railway over the prairie section of the North-West, and at the end of this year will probably have it completed to the foot of the Rocky Mountains. In no possible way could the Company have contributed more to the bringing in and settlement of immigration in the North-West than by this work. One of the things we want in connection with immigration is labor, and in consequence of the rapid progress that has been made in the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, labor has been offered to people going into the North-West, enabling them to earn wages while actually preparing to make their settlement on the land. Although it may be quite true that the Canadian Pacific Railway have not yet reached the point where they can contribute money to bring immigrants into the country, as the railways of the United States are doing in their Land Department, we have no reason to complain of their operations to this time. Until the railway is completed in the North-West there is no use bringing in immigrants there to any great extent; and by their rapid progress in the construction of that road the Canadian Pacific Railway are doing the best work they can to promote the settlement of that country. Every one will congratulate the hon. Minister of Agriculture in the statement he has been able to make as to the prospects of immigration this year. No one could have believed, two or three years ago, when this subject was discussed as a matter of the future, that in the course of a couple of years we would be able to make estimates for the bringing of an immigration of 75,000 into the North-West. We ought to be abundantly satisfied, not only as to the work done by the Government, in this connection, but also with the work done by the Canadian Pacific Railway. In the future, when the road will be completed, this Company will enter more energetically into the work of bringing in immigrants than can be expected of them at present.

Mr. TASSÉ. With reference to a statement made by the hon. First Minister, I would like to know from the hon. Minister of Agriculture what was the assisted passage offered to those Canadians who wished to return to the country?

Mr. POPE. The hon. gentleman may have misunderstood what the hon. First Minister said, or intended to say. We give to the immigrants, going to Manitoba, $5 a head towards their expenses going there.

Mr. BAIN. I do not propose to deal at any great length with the doings of the Canadian Pacific Railway in the North-West, because I do not look at their efforts in exactly the same light as the hon. member for Cardwell. I doubt whether the hon. Minister of Agriculture will consider the class of employment they furnish in constructing the railway as likely to draw to us a very desirable class of agricultural settlers. I have generally found that a certain class of men follow that labor as a profession of itself, and when the railway construction is over they pass onward to where other work of that kind is to be found. Any efforts I have been able to see that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have made towards a policy of immigration will be more than counterbalanced by the very high rates they impose on everything they carry, and I must say the hon. Finance Minister has not facilitated by his Tariff the procuring of cheap agricultural implements in the North-West by the new settler. With reference to the recent negotiations that have transpired between the Imperial authorities and the Canadian Pacific Railway, I have looked over the correspondence in the London Times, and the references to them in our own papers, and I must say it strikes me that the President of that Company has not made any tangible proposition in the way of aiding immigration in the North-West. Up to this time his efforts seem rather to have been directed to getting some one else to do the work. I defy any one to point to any tangible offers of aid coming from him. The hon. First Minister told us, two years ago, that the fact of this company having a large interest in the lands of the North West would relieve us of our large expenditure in connection with immigration. But we find the Railway Company have transferred a very large proportion of those lands to other companies, and they now expect that those companies and the Hudson Bay Company will come forward and facilitate the settlement of those lands by promoting immigration. I confess I have strong sympathy with the sentiment of the hon. Minister of Agriculture, when he said that he did not propose, except in the matter of assisted passengers, to aid in the promotion of this Imperial Government scheme of immigration from the destitute districts of Ireland that propose to settle at least 5,000 families in the North-West. Now, there is this remarkable thing in connection with Irish immigration. The recent statistics furnished by the Imperial authorities show that the immigration from Ireland for the last two years has been much larger from the Province of Ulster and the peaceable portion of Ireland than from the disturbed Provinces—

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Because they had more money.

Mr. BAIN. Yes. And it proves that in those sections of Ireland where this difficulty existed, where the population was so dense that the moment the crop fell below the average the people were immediately in want, they were in that unfortunate position that they were really too poor to leave the country, and the consequence was that it was mainly the best portion of the earning and enterprising population of Ireland who emigrated from that country, while the poorer classes remained at home. Now, I doubt honestly the desirability of moving that section of the population from those disturbed districts where they have had the manhood, in a large measure, crushed out of them by years of difficulty and depression, and I fear that any scheme that proposes to move 5,000 families, which would be an aggregate of 25,000 souls, to this country, under these circumstances, and locate them on lands in the North-West—I fear that unless there is a much larger expenditure than our Government or the Home Government are likely to make, the whole scheme will prove an ignominious failure. I agree with the hon. Minister when he says that this class of the population had better be scattered over the older Provinces and mingled with their population, because the fact is patent that in the older Provinces our difficulty is that the best of our young men whom we are most anxious to see remain among us, have gone off to the North-West Territory and located there. Of course, what is the loss of the older Provinces is the gain of the North-West, because I am satisfied that there is no class of immigrants who go into that country who will make their marks as quickly and develop that country so successfully as these young men. I, therefore, concur in the opinion of the Minister that it would be better to scatter those people, who come here comparatively helpless for want of means, over the older Provinces than to settle them in the North-West. It is difficult for colonists from the older European countries to transport to that new country their original associations, and carry with them all the comforts with which they were surrounded at home. I think it would be bad policy to form a whole settlement of families who had no capital and had to be brought to the country at the expense of the Imperial Government. There is one other point in connection with this immigration. My hon. friend from Gloucester remarked that he thought we were not securing our proportion of Irish immigration, and he referred to the large exodus that occurred under his own observation to the Australian colonies. Fortunately we have the records of the Imperial Parliament with reference to that immigration, and I will only quote the figures to show where the Irish population have been immigrating during the last two years. The official returns show that in 1882 a little over 89,000 people left Ireland. Of these nearly 66,000, or 74 per cent. of the whole, have gone to the United States. Canada gets the next largest proportion, between 7,000 and 8,000, and between 10,000 and 11,000 left the sister Isle and found employment in various portions of England. Australia comes in for only 4,600, and when these are added up it leaves less than 2,000 to be distributed to New Zealand and all other parts of the world. Our returns show that we have nearly doubled Irish emigration to this country in 1882 as compared with 1881. We thus compare favorably with Australia and New Zealand, who have put forth excessive efforts to secure emigration to their shores—

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. More than the United States in proportion to their population.

Mr. BAIN. So much the better for us. We gather from the statement of our Commissioner in London, that very few go to Australia or New Zealand except those whose passages are entirely paid by the Government of those Colonies, while the large proportion of Irishmen who emigrate to Canada come by their own unaided efforts. It is to be regretted that such a large proportion of them go to the United States, but such is the fact, and there is no use denying it. With reference to the question of German immigrants, I think they are a very desirable class, but when I look at the figures, I do not think they will stand that laudation which the hon. member for Perth (Mr. Hesson) and some other hon. members have bestowed upon that immigration. I see in the Estimates for this year, $6,200 for the salaries of immigration agents on the Continent, and $7,000 for their travelling expenses. Turning to the report of the Minister of Agriculture I find the reports of agents from this side of the Atlantic, and also from the agents in Ireland and Great Britain, very fully given; the only reference I have been able to find to these agents who are drawing $13,000 per annum, is simply a couple of lines in the earlier part of this report, setting forth that Dr. Hahn, of Wurtemberg, was our representative in Germany, and a Mr. Marmette our representative in France. I had the curiosity to turn to the analysis of the immigrants who came to Canada last year, to see how much we had secured from these two gentlemen, that were thus specially singled out as being our sole representatives on the Continent. I find that in 1881 we received 530 Germans, and in 1882 this number had increased to 1,024. Of French and Belgians, Mr. Marmette had secured in 1881, 104, but in 1882 he had only been able to secure 50. The great mass of emigrants who have come to this country from the Continent are classed as Scandinavians. In 1881 there were 9,600, and in 1882, 8,274. I think it is an oversight on the part of the hon. Minister that we have no report from the agency which secured that large number of Scandinavians from the Continent of Europe, while we have the reports from agents in other sections representing a much smaller increment, and backed up as they are by 600 or 700 agents of steamship companies in the Mother Country who all receive a direct cash bonus from the steamship companies for every emigrant they secure. Something more will have to be done before we can secure a large increase to our German population. I believe so soon as we can secure, by any reasonable means such a nucleus of German immigrants from the Fatherland as will at once form a point of attraction to those left behind, then and not till then, will we secure a satisfactory mode of drawing to our shores the German population. That is one of the great means by which the United States has secured such a very large proportion of that immigration. We have heard a good deal said about the population we are drawing from the American side of the line, to the North-West. I do not propose to discuss that vexed question now, but on looking at the Public Accounts I notice that one of the agents at Winnipeg has been paid over $1,000 for assisting immigrants into the North-West from the United States. My observation in connection with the crossing of the frontier is, that the parties generally get themselves over, and I was very much surprised to see this item, because I had supposed that people coming from the United States to Canada, and going from here to the United States, arranged the matter themselves, and travelled as they felt disposed. This is entirely apart from the efforts of our agent among the French population of the New England States to secure immigration to the North-West. In connection with his efforts he draws a salary of $1,200, with travelling expenses, amounting to $1,400 or $1,500 more, and his efforts last season secured between 600 and 700 people to move from the Eastern States into Manitoba and the North-West. I do not suggest these matters in a spirit of fault-finding with the hon. Minister of Agriculture and the administration of his Department. I believe that, after all the expenditure, year after year—and I am not sure but that the hon. Minister has been as severely criticized by his friends as by his opponents—that the steady maintenance of the advantages of this Dominion before the Mother Country and the continental nations which have dense populations, will contribute to our future welfare and the building up of this Dominion, and a good investment financially.

Mr. WATSON. As the hon. Minister appears to have figured out the value of immigrants and claims that a boy of sixteen is worth $800, and pays a revenue of $5, perhaps the hon. gentleman has estimated the value of an immigrant in the North-West.

59. To meet the probable amount required for Pensions to Veterans of War. $25,000.00

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Will the hon. Minister inform the Committee how many of the veterans of 1812 are still on the pension list? I think the appropriation for each was about $25 last year.

Mr. CARON. 800 veterans are receiving pensions from the Government at present.

Mr. ROSS. Does the hon. gentleman propose to divide this grant pro rata, or still limit the amount to $25 for each pensioner?

Mr. CARON. The amount voted last year is being kept up for this year, and I hope the veterans will have a small increase on what was given them last year.

Mr. ROSS. Is it the present intention, as the number of pensioners is reduced, to divide the same amount among the smaller number?

Mr. CARON. Of course I would not pledge myself to do that; but I can say it is the intention, for the present year, to do what I have just stated to my hon. friend.

Mr. AMYOT. Some veterans in Lower Canada do not receive as much as the same class in Ontario, and I would like to know if the hon. gentleman intends, this year, to equalize the distribution.

Mr. CARON. The amount which the veterans from Quebec receive was fixed by the Province of Quebec, previous to Confederation. In Ontario the amount, instead of being $60, as in Quebec, is $80; and we could not make any change without interfering with the arrangements which existed previous to Confederation, and which would interfere with the amounts that the different Provinces were paying for that purpose.

Mr. AMYOT. That is all very well for the past; but for the future I do not see any possible objection to equalizing the amount. Some have died, and there is more money to distribute; and I think it only fair that those who remain, who are only a few in number compared with those in Ontario, should receive as much as the latter. This would not disturb the arrangements of the several Provinces before Confederation, and is only an act of justice to those who remain.

Mr. CARON. My hon. friend will see that if any change takes place, it must occur with the consent of the Province of Quebec. This arrangement was previous to Confederation. It was taken in as one of the assets of the Province, and we could not change it; but I will be very happy indeed on some future occasion to discuss this point with the hon. gentleman, and to see whether it would not be possible to meet his view.

59. Compensation to Pensioners in lieu of land..... $5,120.00

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). How many pensioners are on the list?

Mr. CARON. They are decreasing every year—at the ratio of about 200 per annum.

60. Salaries, Military Branch and District Staff..... $19,830.00

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Here is an increase of $2,300 and I notice that it arises from the appointment of an Inspector of Artillery and Warlike Stores for the Dominion of Canada, who will receive $1,800; staff allowances $500. I think I am not out of order in calling the attention of the hon. Minister of Militia to the answer he made to me when the Militia Bill was under consideration. I said, he intended to appoint practically a new officer, an Inspector of Artillery, and his explanation was, that this was not a new officer, but a certain individual, Col. Irvine, who was Inspector of Artillery connected with one of the batteries. I think the intention is to remove that officer to headquarters here, and appoint him Inspector of Artillery, while the inspection he was in the habit of doing before is to be done by officers connected with "A" and "B" Batteries. I was also told by the hon. Minister, that the remuneration for this officer was taken out of the appropriation for those batteries; but I see now that it is to be taken out of another fund, and to be paid in connection with the District Staff. The Inspector of the batteries will then be only a sort of sub-Inspector of Artillery connected with the batteries, and this officer, with an allowance of $2,300, will be Inspector of Artillery generally. I think I am right, then, in saying that he is practically a new officer; and that other officers will really inspect the artillery connected with the respective batteries; and this officer will be Inspector of Artillery for the Dominion. I do not know whether there is any more necessity or not for a special officer of this kind than there was before.

Mr. CARON. It is not practically a new appointment, because it is practically exactly what I told my hon. friend when the matter came up before. I then told him that the pay of the Inspector of Artillery had been transferred from Ottawa, for the simple reason that he was transferred to headquarters. I then told my hon. friend, and I now repeat, that the gentleman who has been appointed Inspector of Artillery at headquarters was merely removed from the battery, and his pay, that used to appear as he will see—if the hon. gentleman will look there—in the pay-list of "A" and "B" Batteries, is now charged to the staff at headquarters, and is taken out of the amount that used to be voted for "A" and "B" Batteries; consequently, I told the hon. gentleman that it was not a new appointment, and instead of the Inspector of Artillery being paid out of "A" and "B" Batteries, on his being transferred to headquarters, I thought it was only right and proper that this pay should be charged to the account of the staff appointments, and not to the batteries. If the hon. gentleman has looked into the organization of the Militia, he will find that previous to this Inspector of Artillery being appointed, Major-General Strange was Inspector of Artillery; and under him, as under Colonel Irwin, to-day we have sub-Inspectors of Artillery, who are Commandants of the two Schools of Artillery which we have in Quebec and Kingston. The change is absolutely in transferring the payment from the pay-list of "A" and "B" Batteries to the pay-list of the staff in Ottawa, and nothing more.

Mr. VAIL. Is Col. Irwin only appointed in place of Col. Lewis, who formerly resided in Halifax, and was the Inspector of Artillery?

Mr. CARON. My hon. friend is completely mistaken. Col. Lewis was never replaced, and it is not intended to replace him. Col. Lewis was Inspector of Artillery for the military district comprising Halifax and the Lower Provinces. When the matter was brought before me, I struck out the item, and this enabled me to save $11,500 per annum in the pay of the staff. Col. Lewis never has been replaced; and when he was Inspector of Artillery, the same organization which we now have, existed, excepting that instead of it being Col. Irwin, Strange, who is now Major-General Strange, was Inspector of Artillery.

Mr. VAIL. But Col. Irwin will perform the same duties which devolved upon Col. Lewis.

Mr. CARON. It is not at all the same. Col. Lewis has not been replaced, and we have made a saving in his department.

Mr. VAIL. What I mean is, that the duty which formerly fell upon him now devolves upon the present Inspector.

Mr. CARON. Yes.

61. Ammunition, clothing and military stores..... $125,000.00

Mr. VAIL. What is the intention of the hon. Minister with regard to the purchase of clothing? Does he intend to purchase in London, as he did last year, or to have a portion of it manufactured in Canada?

Mr. CARON. Since I have been at the head of the Department I have tried to get manufactured in Canada the greater portion of the clothing which formerly used to be imported from England, and I have succeeded; but, as the hon. gentleman knows, there are some articles which cannot be obtained in Canada. As I stated on the second reading of the Militia Bill, it is our intention, as far as possible, to get what clothing we require to use from the manufacturers of Canada, instead of importing it from the Old Country.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I would like to know if the Minister of Militia is doing anything towards providing a better system of equipment. With all our large expenditure of over $1,000,000 there is not a man in the force so well equipped as actually to be in a fit condition to take them to the field. If it should happen that an outbreak should take place in the North-West, and it become necessary to send up a force to assist the Mounted Police there is not a regiment well enough equipped to go to service. I think it is time that the Government took this matter in hand, and made an annual appropriation towards the proper equipment of the force. I have seen amongst the stores in use by volunteers, belts which belonged to the Irish regiment which dated back, I am sure, as far as 1798. With the new arms which we now use, we require different kinds of cartridge boxes, and when men go to ball practice they have to carry their ammunition in their vest pockets; and I think it is time that some provision was made to supply us with better equipment. I moved, some time ago, for a return respecting the Ordnance Lands, and I think it would be well for the Government to put the $1,500,000 which they received as a free gift from the Imperial Government into a fund, and devote the interest to the purchase of a proper equipment for the force. It is ridiculous and childish that no appropriation should be made for equipment under our large Militia expenditure.

Mr. CARON. I can only say that the hon. gentleman will see by the Estimates that I have asked for $10,000 additional to meet the views he has been expressing.

Mr. VAIL. The reason I referred to this matter of clothing was because I stated the other day that I was sorry to see that the hon. Minister of Militia had expended a large sum of money in making purchases in London, the last year or two—a sum very much in excess of what I found it necessary to expend in London when I was at the head of the Department. I was not in the House when the hon. Minister replied, but I judge, by what I see in the newspapers, that he stated that the amount expended by him in London was no larger than the amount expended there in my time. I desire to put myself right on this matter, because I would be very sorry to make a statement of that kind without foundation. I have looked into the figures and I will give them to the House. When I took charge of the Department I found that we were getting our clothing from London, but we changed that system, as we thought it wise that we should at least try the experiment of making our purchases in this country. In 1876, the expenditure for clothing was $75,000; in 1877, it was $25,394, or, in the two years, $100,394. Of this amount there was expended in London, $6,358.51, and there was purchased in Canada $94,035.49. I find that, in 1881, when my hon. friend was in charge of the Department, there was expended in clothing $54,000, and in 1882, $57,623.71, making for the two years, $111,623.71, of which no less than $100,781.90 was spent in London, and $10,841.81 in Canada. From these figures I think the House will see that the statement I made is borne out by facts.

Mr. CASEY. It appears by the explanation given by the hon. member for Muskoka (Mr. O'Brien), that the additional $10,000 asked for here for clothing is not to be spent for new clothing, but for equipment, which, I suppose, will include pouches, knapsacks, &c. The fact is that very few of our volunteers have knapsacks, and that they really could not go on service as they are equipped at present. In regard to the item for ammunition, I expected that the Minister would have given us some particulars as to the manufacture of ammunition in Quebec, and the result of any experiments which have been made with it, with a view of determining how it compares with the imported ammunition. In military stores there is an increase of $10,000. I would like some explanation of what that increase is. I have been informed that experiments have been conducted with the ammunition. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will give us the results of them.

Mr. CARON. I can tell the hon. gentleman that the factory at Quebec has been, so far, a great success. We have already carried out the views of our predecessors in getting the clothing manufactured in Canada, and we are endeavoring to do the same thing with regard to cartridges. The ammunition which we have been manufacturing does not cost us any more than it used to cost us when we imported it from England, and we have the advantage of keeping the money in the country, and having the cartridges manufactured by our own people, while we avoid the necessity of keeping so large an amount of ammunition in store, as we formerly had to do, which represented a large amount of capital locked up. At present we can manufacture any quantity of ammunition that might be required, at any given moment in case of emergency.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. Minister has not answered my question. What I asked was whether there had been any trials of this ammunition, and, if so, what the results were.

Mr. CARON. The cartridges have been tried by the most experienced men in the factory. We have instruments which were imported for the special purpose of trying these cartridges, and some of them have been sent to leading Militiamen; and they have proved to be quite equal and in many cases they are said to be superior to the cartridges which were imported.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. Minister deserves credit for bringing about such a result, for it is a result not to be looked for in a small factory in Quebec. I am afraid that his calculations must have been faulty in some respects. It seems hardly creditable that a small factory at Quebec can turn out these cartridges as cheaply as a large factory in England.

Mr. CARON. Still it is a fact.

Mr. CASEY. As to the tests, the hon. gentleman spoke of testing the cartridges in the factory. The only proper test is to shoot them at a target.

Mr. CARON. That is the way we tested them.

Mr. CASEY. The hon. gentleman spoke of having imported instruments for the purpose of testing them in the factory. Is it intended to serve out the ammunition this season?

Mr. CARON. Yes; it is being served out now. At the factory we have regular targets for testing the cartridges at all the elevations, and they are also tested by the instruments before they are used.

Mr. CASGRAIN. Perhaps the hon. Minister will be kind enough to give us some information about the Krupp guns which we heard about last year.

Mr. CARON. The guns which the hon. gentleman speaks of were furnished under the previous Administration by Mr. Gilbert of Montreal, under a contract with the Militia Department for converting heavy ordnance. For reasons affecting Mr. Gilbert's financial standing, he was not able to carry out the contract. The Department took precaution to secure the Government against loss, the bondsmen of Mr. Gilbert being called upon to pay the amount they were bound to pay for the non-fulfilment of the contract.

Mr. VAIL. I wish to refer to what the hon. member for Muskoka has said, as it is a very important matter. I find that lately the Military Department in England adopted Dr. Oliver's new plan of outfit for the men; it is much lighter than the old plan. The hon. Minister should examine into this plan before making these purchases, as I am sure it is better adapted to our force than the present kit.

Mr. CASEY. What is the $10,000 increase in military stores for?

Mr. CARON. I cannot exactly tell the items, but the hon. gentleman, as a military man, knows what military stores are. I consider this increase is necessary from the fact that our stores are considerably reduced since the last five or six years.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I asked for a return showing the cost of the cartridge factory at Quebec, since first established, the names and salaries of the employées, and the value and quantity of ammunition made. Will the hon. gentleman bring down this return at concurrence? I am strongly impressed with the view that the cartridge factory is not a good speculation.

Mr. CARON. The return, I hope, will be down to-morrow. This is no speculation at all, but a very good investment. The factory at present supplies all the ammunition we require, and is an institution the Government and country should be proud of, besides giving employment to our people and keeping the money in the country.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I do not attach any value to the last remark, but look forward to receiving the return.

Mr. AMYOT. I visited that institution and can declare it is a perfect success from every point of view. The machinery is perfect, and the institution is a very good one for the instruction of officers and non-commissioned officers. With regard to the statement of the hon. member for Middlesex that he attaches no value to the fact of the cartridges being made here, I may say that this factory gives employment to a number of people; that the materials it uses are got in the country, and the profits made go into the pockets of our own people, instead of into those of the people of other countries.

61. {	Allowance for drill instruction	$ 40,000.00
	Drill pay and other incidental expenses connect- ed with the drill and training of the Militia..	250,000.00

Mr. O'BRIEN. This money for drill instruction is paid to the captains of companies, whether they do their duty or not. A certain standard of drill should be established, which each company should be required to reach before the captain would be entitled to this money, as some captains draw the money without doing any work for it. On a battalion going into camp, an officer should put every company through certain sections of drill and decide that a certain number of men are efficient in those sections; and in this respect the captain of the company would be entitled, or the reverse, to the instruction money. This could be done in an hour's time, and this would save the injustice of paying money to captains who may not have drilled their company at all, outside of the annual drill.

Mr. CASEY. I am glad my hon. friend has called attention to this. I have had the honor to hold a commission as captain myself, and whether my company was out during the year or not, except when in camp, this money was paid.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You should have returned it.

Mr. CASEY. I had not the chance to keep it, for it went for band purposes. I do not suppose that the officers keep that money; but if it is intended for the band fund, that should be stated. If intended for drill purposes, means should be taken that captains of companies do their duty in that respect.

Mr. LANDERKIN. It is the duty of the Government to look after the welfare of those who take part in defending the country. The hon. Minister of Militia told us that he endeavored to give the volunteers a national character; and I inferred from that, that each case that deserved the consideration of the Department, involving anything affecting the interests of the volunteers, would receive prompt and careful consideration. I brought before his notice a case which not only affects the persons I mentioned, but affects, more or less, perhaps, the welfare of all the volunteers in this country. No doubt all of them look to the result of the application I made on behalf of those six who took the fever while engaged in drill, and their claims for compensation up to this time have not been requited. I understand my predecessor also brought the matter before the Minister, but nothing has been done. To my mind it is as clear as noonday: they contract the fever while in the service of their country, that they suffered long and serious illness, from which some of them have scarcely ever recovered, and no compensation whatever has been granted to them. Doubts were expressed by the Department that these volunteers did not contract the disease in the service of the country; but to set those doubts at rest and clearly to establish the facts of the case, several letters have been sent me, which I will read to the House. I have a letter which I received since I brought the matter before the House, from the captain of the company in which the disease occurred, and here is what he says:

"I have no doubt that the disease was contracted while at drill. I think it would have told well for the service if the Department had made some compensation to the poor fellows for their suffering and loss of time."

The CHAIRMAN. The hon. gentleman is not speaking to the item at all; that has nothing to do about drill.

Mr. LANDERKIN. The item is for incidental expenses connected with drill; and if this has nothing to do with the item, I am very much astonished.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Go on.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I have a letter from the doctor who attended two or three of those cases. It is dated, Durham, April 18th, 1883:

"DURHAM, April 18, 1883.

"MY DEAR DOCTOR.—Thanks for the copies of Hansard which I received last evening. That affair about the typhoid fever amongst members of the Grey Battalion had slipped out of my mind, and you certainly deserve credit for again bringing the matter before the attention of the Minister of Militia. My views were fully placed before the Department in papers sent in at the time, and I can only now repeat my belief that the cases under my care were undoubtedly typhoid fever, and have no hesitation in saying that the disease was contracted by the men while doing Militia duty, notwithstanding the report of the battalion surgeon to the contrary. The attending physician should be more competent to give a diagnosis than any one who comes along after the men have recovered, and gives an opinion from hearsay evidence.

"As to the statement made that the charges were excessive, and made with the intention of 'making a haul' out of the Government, I can only say that the bills as rendered by me were under, rather than over, the tariff, and I have no interest in them whatever, as the patients themselves are responsible for their bills, and have already settled them in some cases. My only wish is to secure to the men some little compensation for the injury received by them while in the service of their country.

"Yours sincerely,

"D. JAMIESON."

Now, I have a statement made by one of the volunteers himself. I have also a statement made by Mr. Robert J. Disney, and I will read that to the House if the Government will give me their attention. I want this matter put fairly before the Minister of Militia, and I want to find out, and the volunteers want to find out, the position that they occupy in the Department of Militia controlled by the hon. Minister at present. This is the declaration made by Robert J. Disney, at whose place two of the volunteers stayed during the time they had the fever:

"I, Robert J. Disney, of the village of Hanover in the county of Grey and Province of Ontario, carpenter and builder, do solemnly declare—"That George C. Disney was in perfect good health previous to going to brigade drill at Toronto, in the month of October, 1879, and that when he came to my house from said drill he was sick with typhoid fever.

"That he was sick for six months, and in consequence was not able to work for one year, and that during the whole of that time he was cared for and nursed by my wife and myself.

"That he is still suffering from the effects of said fever, portions of his right leg being still numb, and frequently complains of weakness in that limb.

"That I have procured medical attendance for him during his sickness, and paid the sum of forty dollars for such attendance.

"That I have not received any remuneration for board, lodgings, or for what I paid to the medical attendant.

"That the late Thomas W. Disney was in my employment at the time said George W. Disney was sick at my house, and caught the fever from George, and had several running sores on his body, and died from the effects thereof, on the 10th day of April, 1882, leaving a widow unprovided for.

"That my sister, Sarah Disney, was living with me at the same time, and took the fever, and was sick for three months.

"And that John Hill Bottrell (now a resident of the city of Toronto), who was a member of the same company of volunteers as the said George C. Disney, went to the said brigade drill, and was in good health before going, came back to my place from said drill sick with typhoid fever, and was sick for five months and remained during that time with me, and was nursed by my wife and myself.

"That I received no compensation for the lodging, caring or boarding of the said John Hill Bottrell whatever.

"And I make this solemn declaration, conscientiously believing the same to be true, and by virtue of the Act passed in the thirty-seventh year of Her Majesty's reign, intitled 'An Act for the Suppression of Voluntary and Extra-Judicial Oaths.'

"Declared before me, at Bentinck, in the } County of Grey, Ontario, the 19th day } "ROBERT J. DISNEY. of April, A.D. 1882.

"JOHN PROCTOR, J.P.,

"In and for the county of Grey,
and Province of Ontario."

I have another document, made by several leading citizens, in confirmation of the statement of Robert J. Disney. I have also a declaration made by George Disney, similar in character to the one I have just read. But the statement that I now read as to the credibility of those witnesses is sworn to by the leading citizens of the place—one of them is a postmaster, one a druggist and the other two are business men. It reads as follows:—

"We, the undersigned, do solemnly declare that we did, at different times go to Robert J. Disney's house during the sickness of George C. Disney, the late Thomas W. Disney, Sarah Disney, and John Hill Bottrell.

"That we have heard the declaration of George C. Disney and Robert J. Disney read, and corroborate the statements made therein as relates to the sickness of the said George C. Disney, the late Thomas W. Disney, Sarah Disney and John Hill Bottrell.

"And we make this solemn declaration conscientiously believing the same to be true, and by virtue of the Act passed in the thirty-seventh year of Her Majesty's reign, entitled 'An Act for the Suppression of Voluntary and Extra-Judicial Oaths.'

"GEORGE BRIGGS,
"JAMES BOTTRELL,
"W. GOODEVE, Druggist,
"T. S. COPPINGER, P.M.

"Declared before me at Bentinck, in the County of Grey, Ontario, the 19th day of April, A.D. 1833.

"JOHN PROCTOR, J.P.,
"In and for the County of Grey,"

Now, Mr. Chairman, this is the full case which I brought before the notice of the House the other day. I am sorry to trouble the House again with it, but I desire to put myself right, and I desire to see that the claims of the volunteers who contracted illness in the service of the country, are looked after by the country. It is always very well to say that the volunteers are very patriotic. So they are; but if that patriotism is to be rewarded by neglect, by abuse, by loss of time and money, I think that is a very poor reward for patriotism. If the hon. Minister of Militia states that the Militia Department is a loyal department, and if he wishes to make it a national institution deserving the support of both great parties in this House and in the country—and I believe the Militia force is built up from both great parties and that it should be treated irrespective of party—I believe that the claims of those volunteers will not be denied; whereas at the present time they have just reason to fear that they have been slighted and their claims not attended to, and that they are not receiving the support and encouragement from this House and the hon. Minister which they have reason to expect, and should receive. I will submit to the hon. Minister all these papers for his consideration. He can examine them and investigate those claims, and I feel assured that if he divests himself of everything but a desire to do right to members of the force, those claims will not be unrequited for a month, but will be settled at once. The statement was made by an hon. member of this House, that I desired to make a haul in connection with this matter, though there is no hon. member so unworthy, except the one who made it, to make such a statement. He knew perfectly well that if I was called to attend on a volunteer, the volunteer was responsible for the payment for my attendance. It is unworthy of any hon. member, to charge another member with doing what I presume he would do if he had an opportunity. It is unworthy of the hon. member, and every hon. member who desires to see right maintained in this House, well knows I had no interest in those cases, except a desire to see the men who suffered, requited, and those who had lost money while standing in defence of the country, repaid. I felt it was my duty, not only to those few volunteers, but to the whole volunteer force, to lay before the House, and the country, the claims of those volunteers, and to allow the Department to act as they considered best for the future interests of the Militia force of this country.

Mr. SPROULE. I am glad this opportunity has presented itself to enable me to make a short explanation in regard to this matter. No doubt every hon. member will remember the invectives hurled at me for the course I took during the last debate on this subject. I was misrepresented at the time, and a similar attempt is made now. In regard to the statement of the hon. member for South Grey (Mr. Landerkin) that a member in this House said he had no right to charge such a bill, I deny I said anything of the kind. I said a rumor was afloat to the effect that certain professional gentlemen had sent in exorbitant bills, expecting the Department of Militia to pay the charges, and they would receive some consideration for it. I said exactly what was told me by the surgeon of the battalion, and although I examined the bills afterwards, and I confess that, to my mind, they were not extravagant, still I must say here that a denial was emphatically made on the floor of the House during the last debate, that the hon. member for South Grey (Dr. Landerkin) had made any charge, or sent in any bill, although the bills are in the Department at this day. I have the Debates here, and I find the hon. gentleman said: "I made no charge and sent in no bills." I say the bills are in the Department to-day. I give this explanation because I went with Mr. Jackson, the late member for South Grey, to the Department to assist him in securing for these men that to which they were entitled. I made this explanation also because I have before me a copy of the Grey Review, in which I find an editorial, or a piece purporting to be an editorial, which I believe is only a communication written from this House by a member of it who is attempting to pose before the electors of the constituency of South Grey, and to do something which will be injurious to the hon. member for East Grey—I make this explanation because I find in that article it is stated that the hon. member for East Grey has opposed this claim, and has said that those men had not typhoid fever while in the discharge of their duties, and were not entitled to pay. I deny that I ever made those assertions. I said I saw the report in the Department, and it was to the effect that those men had not typhoid fever, that they did not contract fever while in the discharge of their duty, and consequently apprehended the Department were not to blame because they refused to pay the claim after the report of their own surgeon, specially sent to investigate those cases, was to the effect that the men did not contract the disease while in the discharge of their duty. I am glad to have had this opportunity, which enables me to set myself right before my constituents, and those whom I respect, in South Grey. I am as anxious as is the hon. member for South Grey, that every man connected with the 31st Battalion who received any injury, or sustained any loss from the discharge of his duty, should be compensated; but I only rose in defence of the Government, because an unfair attempt was made to charge them with dereliction of duty, in refusing to pay demands which a reasonable explanation would make apparent. I am willing that they should be paid, but I adhere to my statement that the report is in the Department, and it appears that, in the opinion of the surgeon of the 31st Battalion, who investigated the cases, that the parties did not contract disease when attending drill in Toronto, or on the way up and down.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). For how many days' drill does the hon. Minister expect to call out the Active Militia force this year, and how many men does he expect to drill?

Mr. CARON. The drill will not occupy less than twelve days, and it may probably be one or two days additional. We count on about 27,000 men.

Mr. AMYOT. There is a general desire expressed by the force that the pay of the rank and file should increase every year by a sum of 10 cts. or 15 cts. For the first year a man should receive 50 cts. per day, for the second year 60 cts., and for the third year 70 cts. This would give more encouragement to the men to go on with their drill, and it would not amount to more than $4,000 or $5,000 additional a year.

Mr. CARON. In reply to the hon. gentleman, who is a distinguished member of the force, and who takes much interest in matters tending to increase its efficiency, I must say his suggestion is a very good one. At the present time, however, in view of the changes which are contemplated and the changes which will be effected when the Militia Bill becomes law, I am not prepared at present to adopt his suggestion; but this is one of those suggestions which must call on the Minister of Militia for future consideration, and there can be no doubt that some day it will be carried into effect.

Mr. VAIL. I am afraid the hon. Minister has not taken into account the cost of drilling 20,000 men. I find that in 1877 we drilled 20,000 men, and I think for twelve days, at a cost of $125,000; and the whole force, 40,000, could then be drilled for $250,000.

Mr. CARON. The hon. gentleman will find, in making a calculation, that it is quite impossible to drill 20,000 men for twelve days for $125,000.

Mr. VAIL. Is all of the $250,000 to be spent in drilling?

Mr. CARON. Yes, if the number of men we expect to have drilled, turn out; otherwise the amount will be proportionately less.

Mr. PLATT. Does the hon. gentleman intend to formulate any regulations regarding the examination of volunteers entering into camp? We know that, according to the regulations as heretofore carried out, a very large number of the volunteers drilled in the camps have been totally unfit to enter the service at all. In many corps, no examination took place. In many instances commanding officers, while making strenuous exertions to fill up the companies, as the camps are held in the busy season, when able-bodied men are earning good wages, take a poorer class of men, those who are too old or too young, or too infirm to work in the harvest field; and in many instances which came under my own observation, men after drilling in the ranks, had to lay off one-half the time owing to their infirmities. It is quite essential to the interests of the country and the force, that a thorough examination should be made, and certificates issued to each member of the force. It seems to me very remarkable that, whereas, when men are to go to the front, they are put through a thorough course of medical examination, we pay, in the camps, for the drilling of men who are totally unfit for service. I think I am safe in saying that 25 per cent. of the men drilled during the last few years were totally unfitted for service, and should not be received into it in case of the country being in danger. I trust the instructions will be given that no one shall be accepted for drill, unless fit for active service. I would also ask the hon. gentleman if he intends to make any change with regard to the medical comforts of the men while in camp. Several years ago, something like a respectable medical chest was sent to the commanding officer of each battalion, for the use of the surgeon; but in the camps which I have attended during the last few years, only one chest was to be found, and it contained nothing more than rhubarb pills and Dover's powders, and you had to send an orderly to get a single potion of medicine when a man was taken suddenly ill. Again, a hospital tent should be placed under the charge of the surgeon, to be used in cases of emergency. During rainy and cold nights, men are often taken suddenly ill at quite a distance from any town, and a very great deal of trouble ensues. I have known poor fellows lying on the cold ground until blankets were loaned them, and I have even taken blankets from my own tent in order to keep a sick soldier from the damp ground. Many cases of serious illness have resulted; and the country has, in consequence, been called upon to pay what might have been avoided had the men been taken better care of, and means been supplied to the surgeons for this purpose in cases of sudden illness.

I trust that these matters will receive the attention of the hon. gentleman.

Mr. O'BRIEN. The corps to which the hon. gentleman belonged must have been very remiss in its duty, for I know, in our battalion, a strict medical examination is made, and we take no man unfit for service. We also always have a hospital tent, and are well provided. Surgeons do make complaints about the medical chest, and I think with reason. A great deal of abuse prevailed in former years regarding the medical examination; but last year, this was effectually carried out, so far as I know—at least, this was the case in my own regiment. The hospital tent is the first thing I would think of pitching.

Mr. TROW. Will any allowance be made to the men who are not called out into camp, if they are drilled by their officers?

Mr. CARON. The city corps drill at headquarters, and of course are paid, and the corps that drill in camps are paid by Statute.

65. Contingencies and general service not otherwise provided for, including grants to Artillery and Rifle Associations, and bands of efficient corps. $38,000.00

Mr. CASEY. This is a very important item; and I wish to call the attention of the Minister especially to a few points. Of course, the object of the grant is to teach shooting, and this is perhaps the best possible object, for whom money can be expended in connection with the Militia force, the principal thing after all, in modern warfare, is to have good marksmen as soldiers. In order to encourage shooting, it is in the first place necessary to get as many new beginners to commence practice each year as possible, and to see that the money does not go, as it very often does, principally to a few professional shots, and in the second place, to see that it is not wasted by the Association to which it is given. I think, when the Government makes a grant to a local association, they should do so on certain terms, and they should require certain regulations as to the conduct of the matches to be held. They should stipulate that they should be held at certain ranges under certain conditions, and under the management and in presence of an officer of the volunteers properly qualified to conduct them. They should not give the grant unconditionally, but in the form of a payment for results after the match is held. They should stipulate that there should be at least a certain number of competitors, and that a certain score should be made—say that, twenty, twenty-five or fifty men should make a minimum score of so much before any grant was paid, and so much extra to be paid for a certain number of competitors making a higher score. I know that a good deal of money is wasted by the smaller associations from a lack of experience in conducting matches, and the shooting that is done at these matches is no real instruction to the men. There is another point to which I wish to call the hon. Minister's attention. Most of the men who compete at these local matches are either not volunteers at all or have joined for the purpose of shooting the matches or of getting the prizes. In the latter case there is something gained, because it is something better than that these men should join for that purpose than that they should not join at all. I think the Government should see to it that no money goes to these local associations to be expended on those who are not volunteers, and that all who compete should be duly qualified and efficient volunteers. I know it is quite a common thing in many of these smaller places, and in some larger places, to have more than one association in the same place, the competitors of each being really the same men, and each drawing a grant. In Ottawa, I believe, there are no less than three associations, and of course the leading men must be largely the same individuals, and a large amount of money is spent in Ottawa which, if properly distributed, would do a great deal to encourage rifle shooting in matches. The hon. Minister might prevent this abuse by getting a list of the names composing each association, and if the grant was given according to a system of payment of results, he could refuse to give the grant if it appeared that the greater number of the competitors in both associations were the same individuals. In addition to these grants to rifle associations I think there should be a payment of cash, and prizes in the form of badges or something of that sort to volunteers who attained a certain minimum efficiency while in camp or drilling at home. That is the system in the regular army, and I think it is the system among the English volunteers. A man who attains a certain standard in practices obtains an increase in pay.

67. Drill sheds and rifle ranges $10,000.00

Mr. VAIL. I think it would be well if some provision could be made by which the men would have an opportunity of drilling in the long winter evenings when they have not much else to do. It is of the utmost importance that there should be drill sheds in the different districts in which the men could drill in the inclement seasons of the year. As the Minister of Militia stated that I had saved money in the Department by allowing the force to run down, I might observe that when I was Minister we completed the military building at Winnipeg; we purchased the land at Hamilton upon which the drill shed was, and we completed the drill shed; we erected valuable buildings at London; we built a drill shed at Toronto, and we put all the Militia buildings in that city in a thorough state of repair; we made a grant for a drill shed here at Ottawa, and laid out the grounds—I say we did all this in addition to what was done in connection with the Military College. I would like to ask the Minister if he proposes to make any appropriation for the settlement of that long vexed question between the city of Montreal and the Militia Department. When I left the Department we had been in correspondence with the city of Montreal with a view of having the matter settled.

Mr. CARON. We have been able to get that matter settled, and a vote will be asked for the purpose of re-roofing and repairing the shed, so that the force may have every possible facility for drilling.

68. Care of military properties transferred from the Ordnance and Imperial Government $10,000.00

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). What is the cause of this increase of $2,000?

Mr. CARON. It has been put into the Estimates because last year the Imperial Government made over to us some very valuable Ordnance property in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia—the Department has not yet accepted the transfer, but will do so within a few weeks—and we consider that the management of this property will cost about $2,000.

Mr. ROSS. What kind of property is it?

Mr. CARON. It is land, barracks, forts, bastions, &c.

69. Royal Military College.....$59,000.00

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). The expenditure in this College has increased rapidly within the last four or five years. That College was managed in the first year, with a full staff, for about $30,000, and last year the expenditure was $58,937, nearly double the expenditure for the first year. There were fourteen officers and six non-commissioned officers drawing salaries in connection with that college last year, and there was paid to the superior staff, $30,000, against $13,946 in the first year, although the number of cadets was only seventy.

Mr. CARON. There has been no increase in the expenditure, either last year or the year before; it has remained at $59,000. Even if there was an increase, the hon. gentleman must remember that when the College was opened, the staff was far from being complete, and when the number of cadets increased, it was necessary to increase the accommodation. If hon. gentlemen will look into the matter, I think that they will be convinced that the establishment is carried on as cheaply as is possible in the case of a College like the Royal Military College, which was started by hon. gentlemen on the other side of the House.

Mr. ROSS. The hon. gentleman will see that the expenditure on the staff is out of all reasonable proportion to the number of cadets. To employ a staff of superior officers and non-commissioned officers drawing salaries to the amount of nearly $40,000, to teach seventy cadets, is beyond all reason.

Mr. CARON. One hundred cadets.

Mr. ROSS. The report of Mr. Powell says seventy. I have a statement showing that the number of students at University College, Toronto, in the session of 1881, was 351, and that the salaries paid for fifteen lecturers, professors, and teachers, amounted to $29,900, five times the number of students in the Military College, and a little more than one-half the amount paid in salaries. In the Ontario Agricultural College there were 217 pupils, and the amount expended for salaries and wages, $10,530, three times the number of students in the Military College, and about one-fourth of the amount paid in salaries and wages. If the hon. Minister is going to load down the Military College with exorbitant and unnecessary salaries he will destroy what we believe to be a valuable institution. I cannot understand the College should require fourteen superior instructor officers and six inferior, I suppose non-commissioned officers, for twenty students. Will the hon. gentleman give in detail the names of the officers and the subjects they teach?

Mr. CARON. The salaries have not been increased, except in a very few cases, since the College was established. The staff is composed of Commandant Col. Hewitt, who gets $3,163; Staff Adjutant, $1,250; Professors of Mathematics, Artillery, Fortification and Military Works, Military Engineering and Drawing, Lieut.-Col. Kensington and Lieut.-Col. Oliver; Military Topography and Civil Engineering, Major Walker; Military Administration, Law, History, Strategy, Major Jones; Civil Engineering, Mr. Harris; Chemistry and Physics, Mr. Bayne; English and German, Mr. Dickson; French, Mr. Duval; Drawing and Painting, Mr. Day; Assistant Instructors in Mathematics, Mr. Wurtele, one of the cadets of the college, and Mr. Cochrane, also a cadet.

Mr. ROSS. How many instructors in all?

Mr. CARON. Eleven professors and the two cadets. The hon. gentleman will see that the various branches of instruction must naturally be taught by professors, who, so to speak, are specialists, and whether the College has fifty or twenty-five cadets, if these branches are to be taught, professors must be placed at the head of the different branches when they are taught.

Mr. ROSS. If the hon. gentleman is going to select specialists, he can increase the number of professors indefinitely. I do not see that it is necessary to select specialists when the classes are small and the time limited. Good men could be found with more general attainments, who would serve the purpose equally well. If in the Toronto University specialists were employed on every subject, the salaries would be increased three fold, and the same may be said in reference to the Guelph Agricultural College. I would further ask if the hon. Minister makes any effort to secure the services of the military cadets on the surveying and engineering staff of the Government. One of the arguments used in favor of the establishment of the College, was, that we would have a class of young men who would be exceedingly useful in some of the Departments of the Civil Service, or as engineers. If the country spends $60,000 for the education of these young men, the country should utilize their services. Last year eight of them went to the United States, and four or five received commissions in the English service.

Mr. CARON. If it were possible to find one professor who could teach them various branches, we would be saved much trouble and expenditure. If these various branches were taught by one professor, the examination of the cadets would not compare with those at Sandhurst and Woolwich. I can tell my hon. friend that the staff has not been increased, taking into consideration the number of cadets which have been added to the College. We have only added two or three to the staff, which was originally established at the opening of the College. Fifty-four cadets have graduated in the Royal Military College at Kingston. There are eleven cadets in the public service in Canada, four in New Zealand and eight in the United States. Of these latter two are employed by the Grand Trunk Railway Company on a branch of their line of railway which is being constructed in the United States. The employment of the cadets is as follows: Imperial regular army, 11; assistant professors in college, 2; inspector of Mounted Police, 1; civil engineering and railway works, 23; land surveying, 6; agriculture, 1; commerce, 4; Customs, 1; divinity, 1; bank clerk, 1; temporarily unemployed from ill-health, 1; no report, 2; total 54.

Mr. TROW. The hon. Minister has stated the number of cadets who have received certificates for a number of years. I understand these cadets have received the rank of Lieutenant in the Militia. I would like to know if the companies to which they are attached receive the benefits of their instruction.

Mr. CARON. I could not tell; but several of the cadets when vacancies occurred in the batteries, did not apply for any commission from their being employed elsewhere.

Mr. ROSS. I notice by the report of the hon. Minister that six professors on the staff were employed in writing text-books for the use of the staff of the College. Does the hon. Minister of Militia consider it necessary that the professors of the staff should be employed in preparing text-books for the College? Cannot these books be got somewhere else?

Mr. CARON. The hon. gentleman will understand that these books are issued to the cadets upon their paying for the books; consequently, the printing and publishing of these books really cost us nothing, because the cost is recouped to the Department by the cadets. These text-books are practically the result of the lectures which are given by those various professors in their different branches.

Mr. ROSS. There is another matter which I would like to see explained. The hon. Minister laid great stress, a little while ago, upon the employment of labor in Canada for the making of cartridges and ammunition. I notice by the Public Accounts, that he has sent $2,274 to England to purchase clothing for the cadets, and nearly $400 has been sent out of the country to purchase crockery and glassware for the Military College. Now, why not employ labor in Canada in manufacturing this clothing, and this crockery? Those items are not very large, but if we are to keep Canada for the Canadians, if we are anxious to employ Canadian labor and keep our money in the country, then the hon. Minister should find some means for keeping this money in the country as we keep it in the manufacturing of cartridges.

Mr. CARON. The only articles are scarlet cloth and gold lace, which are not manufactured in Canada.

Mr. CASEY. The Minister has given a very clear explanation of the text-book question. He says they are mere synopses of the lectures given by the professors during the session. Incoming students, instead of studying established text-books, will study the practically narrow range of instruction given by the professors. It is absurd to talk about the necessity of publishing new text-books on mathematics, or even on military subjects; there are already much better text-books than any professor in Kingston College is able to write, and it will be simply allowing them to waste time which otherwise would be devoted to teaching. Time so spent is time wasted, and money paid for that time is money wasted. The Minister has said he had to obtain specialists in order to provide first-class instruction in the College. That is true. He also stated that the same number of teachers is required for five or ten pupils as for seventy. That is true. That being so, we must consider the question whether it pays to keep up the College. It appears to give the highest possible instruction to seventy cadets, which is the largest number it ever possessed. When the College was established by my hon. friends on the other side of the House, it was admittedly an experiment. It is such yet, and if the results are not commensurate it will be a question whether the institution can be continued. Fifty-four cadets have graduated at an expense, during the six years, of over $300,000, or $5,500 for each cadet who has graduated. We have to look the question in the face, and ask whether it pays to pass the cadets through the College at that cost unless they can be made of special value to the Militia force of this country. We talk about them being employed as civil engineers, and in commercial life. It is absurd to spend money avowedly for military purposes, to provide civil engineers, because plenty of such are being qualified by Toronto, Queen's and other universities. The hon. Minister has told the House that eleven of the graduates are in the English army, and for their education we have spent $55,000. Is it proper that Canada should be called on to pay $55,000 to educate men for the English army, when England possesses ample institutions to educate her own cadets and officers? Such was not the intention when the Military College was first established. Eight graduates have gone to the United States, and they cost this country $40,000. Surely the hon. Minister, who takes so much interest in military matters, should be able to devise some scheme whereby these cadets would be made useful, not only in Canada, but in the military service of Canada, where their special training might prove useful in training our Militia force.

Mr. BOURBEAU (Translation). Mr. Speaker, my hon. friend says the Military College at Kingston ought to be abolished. This College, which was established by his friends, does not meet his approval to-day, conducted as it is under the present Government. I think these hon. gentlemen will end by repudiating everything which they inaugurated whilst in power. If the hon. gentleman had gone a little further he might have asked for the abolition of the Supreme Court, which was also established by his friends, and which has been quite as useless as the Military College.

Mr. BLAKE. It has been stated that the dormitory accommodation at the College is inadequate for those at present in attendance, who number about seventy. The hon. Minister, I understand, estimated 100 cadets for the coming year.

Mr. CARON. That is the estimate, but we have not got them.

Mr. BLAKE. If the dormitory accommodation for seventy is insufficient, what will it be for 100? I have also to ask the Minister with respect to the preliminary examinations, and the probable supply of candidates. I have been told that the latter is showing signs of falling off instead of increasing, and that the demand for admission to the college, where I believe an excellent education is given, is weaker than it was.

Mr. CARON. The accommodation is really not what it should be for any over sixty-five cadets. I hope, within a short time, to be able to make additions, so as to make the accommodation comfortable and adequate for the cadets. I am not aware of any falling off in the applications which are made for the preliminary examinations, and I think if we had room there would be even more applications. The number of applications for cadetships is not falling off, and I believe, from letters I have received, that the next examination will show probably an increase from Quebec and the other Provinces.

71. Pay maintenance and equipment of "A" and "B" Batteries, Garrison Artillery and Schools of Gunnery at Kingston and Quebec.....$125,700.00

Mr. ROSS. I have asked for returns connected with this expenditure, showing the number of officers and non-commissioned officers in these batteries, &c., and the cost per annum of these batteries. It is very important for us to have this information in discussing this item, and if the hon. gentleman will bring it down we will take the discussion on Concurrence.

Mr. CARON. All right.

Mr. VAIL. How many horses have been added to the batteries at Kingston?

Mr. CARON. I am not aware.

Mr. VAIL. I observe $301.80 charged for attendance on horses and for drugs, and this, for not more than eight or ten horses at the most, is altogether too much.

Mr. CARON. The accounts have been carefully examined, and, if desired, I will bring down the details, which I have not with me.

72. Government aid towards sending a team of Canadian Militia Artillerymen to Shoeburyness, England.....$2,000.00

Mr. ROSS. This is a new item. We have a Wimbledon team. I suppose that the experiment is a complete success. This is another experiment.

Mr. CARON. It is not altogether a new item, because, two years ago, we gave the same amount to send a team to Shoeburyness, to compete against English artillerymen, and they brought back one of the best prizes. This money is well spent, because the men have to prepare for this competition by going through quite a number of drills; and I think this is only that encouragement to which the artillerymen volunteers of Canada are entitled. The amount is very small, and the men get nothing more, while it creates a spirit of emulation and a desire to excel among the men.

Mr. ROSS. How many men will go?

Mr. CARON. About twenty

Mr. ROSS. How are they selected?

Mr. CARON. Not by the Department at all, but by the Artillery Association, as the Wimbledon team is selected by the Dominion Rifle Association.

Mr. VAIL. I will come to the rescue of the hon. Minister of Militia. I think this is a very proper vote. The money so expended, both in connection with the artillerymen and the volunteers, is very well spent.

Mr. ROSS. I was not objecting to the vote. I approve most cordially of the sending of samples of our best men to England to teach our grannys how to suck a new egg; and to show them where men are properly trained, and know how to do it.

The following Bills were severally read the second time:—

Bill (No. 101) to further amend the Fisheries Act.—(Mr. McLelan.)

DOMINION LANDS BILL.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD, in moving that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 45) further to amend and consolidate, as amended, the several Acts respecting the Public Lands of the Dominion therein mentioned, said: It is important that everyone going into the North-West to be a settler, or desiring to possess lands, should know what the law is connected with our land grant system. It is difficult for lawyers, and practically impossible for laymen, to collate correctly these several Acts in order to understand the bearing of one or another, and I propose we should consolidate them and make what amendments experience has shown to be necessary. If there are any substantial amendments made, I should hope that Parliament would agree to the reenactment of the whole law, so that every person going to that country would have in one Statute all the law relating to the settlement of the North-West and the land-granting system. There are, however, some amendments in this Bill which are important in their nature. I shall mention two or three of them as being important—the verbal amendments can be more properly discussed in Committee. One of the amendments is to provide that parties can get second homesteads. In the United States you cannot get a second homestead; a party once getting a homestead, gets no other. It is, however, found that when a party has gone to that country, and has bona fide become a settler by three years' settlement, or, under the provisions of the law, has acquired his patent, that there is an objection to his being deprived of the opportunity of getting a second homestead. In our own case, the consequence, obviously, will be that if he cannot get a second homestead in our North-West, he may move across the line and get a second homestead—or a first homestead south of the line. Therefore, it is proposed in this Bill that a settler, after having acquired a right to his patent in the manner prescribed by law, so that he has an indefeasible title to his homestead, he can get another homestead subject to the same condition as at first. That is one alteration in the law. At present, as those who are interested in the subject will remember, it is provided that every settler going to the North-West after obtaining this entry, should settle upon the land within two months. That is found to be altogether too short a time, and we extend it to six months. That provision is still continued by the Act with one exception, that the settler who goes up in the fall and makes his selection should not be compelled to go up in midwinter in order to settle upon his lands within the first six months. I have here a memorandum setting forth the reasons for some of these provisions. For the better convenience of the settler, many of whom go up and select their lands in the fall of the year, an amendment is proposed which will give a homesteader recording his entry after the beginning of September, until the 15th of May of the following year, within which to commence actual residence and cultivation. This change will enable farmers from the older Provinces who have determined to remove, an opportunity, after the completion of the harvest, of visiting the North-West at a very pleasant time of the year, when facilities for travelling and for judging of the qualities of the soil are peculiarly favorable, of returning home and finishing up their business in the older Provinces, and making all preparations during the winter and going up for good in the spring, taking with them their families, their cattle, horses, &c. This was the object of the Government in giving, by the amendment of 1880, six months instead of two within which, after the date of entry, the homesteader was required to commence actual personal residence. The benefit, however, was seriously qualified in the case of those making their entries in the fall, inasmuch as they were required to go on the land in winter. This not unfrequently involved some hardship, it being entirely unnecessary, and it is now proposed to be obviated by this Act. Then there are clauses to prevent the jumping of claims. I find that one of the greatest inconveniences that arise in the settlement of the country, and in ascertaining who have acquired a right to a particular portion of the soil, is from the rush; whenever there is a rush of people, some anxious to get good farms, more anxious to make a good speculation, they will rush to a favored portion of the country where there happens to be a boom for the time being. Complaint of this has often been made in the past year or two during which there has been such an extraordinary increase in the demand for land for actual settlement. Those who have not settled in good faith hold homestead entries, and by their failure to comply with the conditions of residence and cultivation described by the law, are retarding the settlement of the country. This has led to a great deal of what is known as homestead jumping. This system has its objectionable features, and especially is calculated to create ill-feeling among the settlers against each other. It is, therefore, contemplated to institute a system of inspection by officers appointed for that purpose by the Department. Persons are not precluded, as has been the case heretofore, from obtaining another homestead, except, of course, for satisfactory cause, through any failure to comply with the requirements of the law. This, I think, is the most important amendment in the law. Another amendment is an attempt to shorten the process by which a patent is issued in the Crown. Those hon. gentlemen in this House who are aware of the constitutional safeguard that surrounds the granting the application of the Great Seal to any document, will understand that it has to be dealt with great care. The Great Seal covers everything; they never can go behind it except by the action of the Crown itself, or by the consent of the Crown through the courts of the Crown. Therefore, it has always been carried out in all the Provinces of the Dominion, since Confederation. We have endeavored to carry out the great constitutional principle of guarding the application of the Great Seal to any document with all the safeguards that surround it in England. Still it has been found that these safeguards cause practical inconvenience to the settler. He wants to get his patent; he is not satisfied unless he gets his patent; and we have endeavored, so far as we could, by the clause which the hon. members will find in the Act, to shorten the process, instead of going from one Department to the other, by which the patent is to be issued, and to control the issue of the patent by one Department. This will greatly expedite the mere mechanical work of issuing patents, the signature of the head of the Government, or his representative, the application of the Great Seal—the registration of the patent. But even that involves considerable delay. The delay does not exist only in England, but in Canada, which adopts the English principle; and the delay also occurs in the United States, at Washington, and sometimes it takes years before the patent actually gets into the hands of the owner. In the present law it is provided that on a certificate being given by the local agent that the party has fulfilled all the requirements of the Act, he then obtains a quasi title. Now, Mr. Speaker, that is too wide and great a power to give to any individual local agent. There are agents and agents. Some who are honest and intelligent you can trust thoroughly, some who are honest you can trust, and some who are intelligent you cannot trust; and it has been found that that there have been certificates given which ought not to have been given. There should be some check on the agents; that no agent by simply giving a certificate that the facts are as stated, so far as he knows, looking at the affidavits before him, which may be true or false, which may never have been sworn to, and got up improperly, as I know was the case in the days of old in Ontario at the time the United Empire loyalists claimed their lands, shall have his certificate regarded as final; and that upon that certificate a person has in fact a title, and that the mere form of getting a title might in fact be dispensed with. At the same time it is of importance that so soon after the settler has performed the conditions under which he acquires his land, he should obtain a title which he can sell, mortgage, and obtain money upon to improve his property. He should have the means of doing so. And, therefore, we propose a mode by which, without waiting for the actual issue of the patent, the person can have a tangible title, and the provision is simply this: That whenever an agent gives a certificate that the homesteader has performed the conditions under which he has a right to claim his patent, and when those papers are sent to the Land Board at Winnipeg, and when the certificate of the local agent is endorsed by the Land Board, or commissioner, then that shall have all the effect, for practical purposes, of an issue of the patent. As was mentioned to Parliament during this last Session, the Government thought the time had come when the Patent Office at Ottawa should be relieved of the duties of the land granting department. It is quite obvious, even supposing that there was plenty of time for all kinds of work to be done, and that the officers were quite ready and able to do it, that delay must be very great. In order to prevent that, a Land Board was established. In the first place a commissioner was sent in the person of Mr. Walsh, who is known to some hon. gentlemen opposite; and there was an inspector appointed to serve under him. Those two gentlemen, the commissioner and the inspector, formed the Land Board.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Who was the inspector?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Pearce, an experienced surveyor, who has been in the North-West for some years, and been in the employment of the Government many years, perhaps in the time of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie), and whom we learned to be an active practical man, having full confidence of the officers of the surveying branch of my Department. He is a first rate surveyor, a good practical man, and has been in the country for many years, and altogether seems to possess all the acquirements which the Government desire in a person occupying that position. The arrangement was simply this: The Commissioners, in the first place, decides summarily any question that arises in respect to claims about settlement. Should there be any doubt, and should the party grumble at the decision of the commissioners, the Land Board, which consists of the commissioner and the inspector, give their decision, which is supposed to be final. Of course, there is an appeal to the Department here, but for all practical purposes it is desirable that the Land Board should be considered a final tribunal. From the experience of the last year the system has been found to be successful. There are complaints, I know, that the Land Board have been too rigid in their construction of the law, and that sometimes they have decided against parties when they should have decided otherwise. Of course, such complaints will always arise. Neither of the gentlemen who composed the Board, nor the two as a Board, have any interest except that of doing their duty and carrying out the principles of the Dominion Lands Act. They sometimes may err, no doubt, and at the last moment there is always an appeal to the responsible Minister, the Minister of the Interior; but, at the same time, I must say that I feel it my duty, as Minister of the Interior, to discourage all such appeals. I take it that when there are two experienced and honest men on the spot, judging the evidence, having no interest except to do what is right, it is more probable that their decision will be right than any decision that the Minister or the officers of my Department, far away from the scene of action, and not hearing the parties, could be expected to give. I mean to say that the chances are that the Board on the spot are more likely to decide correctly than is the Department here. Still, however, we cannot, and do not, desire to ignore that responsibility, and in cases where it is shown that, by a too rigid adherence to the letter of the law, parties have suffered injury, then the Minister and the Department can properly step in and relax the rigidity and stringency of the decision. There is, in the present law, a rather incongruous or inconsistent provision with respect to the school lands. One portion of the law provides that all the school lands are to be set up and sold by auction at an upset price, such upset price not being less than the average value of the lands in the vicinity.

Mr. MACKENZIE. This is outside of the Province of Manitoba.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is inside of the Province as well. The school lands have not been handed over to the Province of Manitoba. The school lands in Manitoba and the North-West, outside of the Province, are governed by the same provision—and it is a very proper provision—that these lands shall be very rapidly sold and disposed of for the purpose of forming for all time a sufficient fund for the education of the people of the North-West. Representations have come from the Province of Manitoba, and very naturally from the Government of that Province, that the school lands of Manitoba should be handed over to them for their management. Hitherto the Government have not seen their way to go so far. That Province is large and its population small; and the temptation to deal with that magnificent grant for present purposes to meet present exigencies is very great; and the Government think—and I may here mention that the course of the Government met with apparent approval during the last Parliament—they ought not to denude themselves of this sacred trust, handed over to them as trustee for this great fund for the education of the people in the illimitable future; so that the policy of the Government hitherto has been, in the Province of Manitoba, to dispose of this land, the proceeds of which are funded, as the law provides, in Government securities, and the annual interest or increment is handed over from year to year to the Province of Manitoba for educational purposes. The fund being intact, the fund continually growing, and the interest annually being handed over to the Province for the purposes of education, I think that it is in the interest of Manitoba itself, I think it is in the interest of the great North-West, that this magnificent provision for education should be rigidly preserved; but it is very difficult to do so. These lands in many places are of a most valuable nature, and wherever they are known to be of value, there is a rush to get some real or supposed priority of right by occupation to these lands; and then whenever the Government attempts to offer these lands by public auction, as is provided in the law, there is a complaint of great hardship. "We have built fences, we have broken up so much land and built houses, and we must either be paid for all our improvements"—at their own valuation in fact, or the law must be set aside; and instead of the land being offered at public auction, there must be some valuation put upon them, and these parties allowed to get them. Now, the numbers of these school lands are known; there is no man in the North-West who does not know what is a school lot, and what is not; and, therefore, any person who chooses to go upon a school lot, does so at his own peril, and he must take the consequences of wilfully going upon and taking possession of land which he knows belongs to the school fund, which ought to be sold to the highest bidder, and at the highest price; and when he goes upon this lot, he is deliberately attempting to thwart the purpose of the law, and is deliberately attempting to diminish the fund for the education of the people; and all for the sordid purpose of getting a good lot at a low price. The Government have hitherto resisted these attempts, and they are resolved, if they are sustained by the opinion of Parliament, to continue that policy. There is, however, an inconsistency in the law. There is a provision in one portion of the old Act which provides for educational endowment, which speaks of settlers on unsurveyed school lots as having acquired certain rights; then it goes on further to provide, that all school lots shall be offered for sale by public auction. If all are to be offered for sale by public auction, then, of course, they must be subject to any rights, which those parties may have obtained under this rather inconsistent provision of the law. Of course, vested rights are vested rights, and they must be protected. This Bill does not in any way affect the rights whatever they may be—I desire to express no opinion as to what the rights of settlers on school lots may be on unsurveyed lands; that must be left for judicial or legal decision—but the provision in this Act does not affect in any way the in quoad legal or equitable rights of parties settled on school lands unsurveyed under the provisions of the law as it now stands. The amendment to the law, however is, that in the future, after the passing of this Act, no settlement or any settlement on, or claim of any kind to a school lot shall prevail; and that as these parties all know what numbers are school lands, what sections are school sections, therefore they enter upon them at their own peril. There is another amendment, which is of comparatively little importance, and which has been discussed in Committee with respect to military bounties scrip. Then the law as it now stands was passed for the purpose of enabling capitalists, or landlords, or philanthropists, to bring out and settle upon lands in the North-West people who are poor, and without capital, and unable to cultivate their own land, build their own houses, break up the soil, and become farmers in fact; and hon. gentlemen will remember that the law provides that persons can make an advance to the intending settler who goes on a homestead for the purpose of building a house, and otherwise to enable him to claim a homestead, to the extent of $500, interest not to exceed 6 per cent.; and the Government undertake by law not to issue a patent to the settler until this advance given to him for the purpose of enabling him to become a settler is repaid; but the law is defective in this regard—that while the Government are not allowed by law to issue a patent until the money is repaid, the loan does not operate as a charge upon the property itself, and it has been found that no person, no capitalist, will advance, or few capitalists at all events—and I have not heard of any—will advance money on such frail security. If a dishonest man gets a house built at the expense of his landlord, or a friend, or a capitalist, or a company, the only restriction in the law now is, that the patent shall not issue until the money is repaid; but the man is in possession of the farm, and he and his family may occupy it for ever, as all that he has to do is not to ask for the patent; so that this does not operate in any way as a valid security to the capitalist; therefore, no assistance is given to the immigrant under these well-intentioned clauses.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Is it not because the interest is too low?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That may be, but I know that the rate of interest hitherto has far exceeded 6 per cent. per annum in the North-West. But with new times comes new circumstances; and I fancy, from the rush of people to that country, with the capital which is going into it and becoming accessible to the people every year, money will find its way there very rapidly from the older Provinces. Now 6 per cent. is a fair interest in the old Provinces at this moment. I know there are many lending companies which would be glad to get 6 per cent. on the money they lend, and I should be very sorry to see an alteration of the law in that regard. I think 6 per cent. is as much as we can fairly charge the homesteader who borrows money to build his house, to buy his oxen, and to break his soil. I think that that rate is sufficient for him to pay out of the profits of the land; and I think we will find in a year or two, if not now, that there will be large numbers of capitalists who will be glad to lend their money at 6 per cent. on the cultivated soil of the North-West, if the title and security are good. There is a clause in the Bill to which I invite the serious attention of the House, that is: the clause giving power to the Government to abolish the preemption right. There has been a great deal of misunderstanding in the country about that right; and because there are what are called a homestead right and a preemption right in the United States, it is supposed that the law is the same. Our law is infinitely more liberal than the law of the United States. We give the homesteader the right to make entry for 160 acres; we give him the right to make, at the same time, a preemption entry for 160 acres more. That is not the law in the United States. They do not give a homestead and a preemption to the same man at the same time. He may, if he likes, enter himself as a homesteader; he may, if he likes, become a preemptioner—if I may be allowed to coin a word—and the homesteader may, if he choose, exchange his position as a homesteader for that of a preemptioner, by paying for the land. The land is paid for at once, and the homesteader is obliged to work his farm five years before he can get his homestead. With us three years is sufficient; and, in addition to the homestead, the man has the preemption right by paying the legal price for 160 acres more. Now, Sir, we have occasion to know that the land granting department of the United States is opposed to the system of preemption as it exists there, and they have reported again and again in that direction. Last year—as I think I had occasion to mention before in the House—the United States authorities governing this subject pressed it on the consideration of Congress, and, in connection with the Department of the Interior, they said that whenever Congress could be got to undertake that subject, it was quite certain that preemption would be abolished altogether, as it was the great and fruitful source of all the speculating, land jobbing, land sharking, land grabbing system of which we read so much in the United States, and of which we have some faint, pale reflection from the North-West. Then, Sir, experience has been found to show that it may be necessary and expedient to reconsider that subject. It is found that even 160 acres is more than a person without capital can cultivate. In the Bishops of Ireland's colony I know they are practically proposing to break up the land to eighty acre holdings. I have been informed lately—though without such specific information as to warrant me to make the statement—that even the United States are reducing the quantity of land to settlers who go into that country without money. It is said, indeed, that settlers from Europe—including Ireland and my own country, and especially the Islands of Scotland where the people live close together at home, where they are cottagers more than farmers—that they get actually frightened and appalled at the extent of their possessions when they are placed in the middle of 160 acre farms instead of having neighbors close to them. They are a gregarious people, they assemble together, and the consequence is that various portions of the United States adopt the continental plan—the German plan, and more especially the French plan of having villages—people living close together instead of being scattered in the manner of Englishmen, Americans and Canadians—each man living in the centre of his own property. The clause is merely a provisional one. The Government want to have the power to make these arrangements; but I may state that they think this power should not be exercised until similar action is taken by the Legislature of the United States. We have offered much more favorable terms to the settler than have ever been given in the United States, but we did so advisedly. We knew that the current of immigration was altogether to the United States, whether it be from Great Britain and Ireland, or from the continent of Europe. The immigrant, wherever he went in the United States, found his own relations, his own friends and kindred, his own nationality. We had no nationality, because the country was a wilderness. We had no people there, and we were obliged, as it were, to offer a bribe—to offer superior inducements to immigrants from the European world to come to the North-West. We did so. Our terms are altogether more favorable than theirs; but I think we should not, without great consideration, alter our terms so as to be less liberal. We should be more liberal than the neighboring States; but at the same time we ought not to be so generous, by giving people without means, without capital, more land than they know what to do with—more land than they can cultivate, or expect to cultivate, so that the land would simply be handed over to the first speculator who came along and bought out the preemption. You do not get the 320-acre farmer, but you get the 160-acre homesteader, who is utterly unable to do anything with the preemption right, whilst the speculator gets hold of it and keeps it until he can find a purchaser at an advanced rate. This is a matter in which we are all concerned; in which the whole of Canada is concerned—the adoption of the best system of law, the best land granting system, the best system of settling the immigrant. We may differ as to the mode in which that object is to be carried out, but we can only have one object. I, therefore, invite the serious attention of the House as a House, to the several points which I have ventured to indicate. There are several amendments of more or less importance with which I will not trouble the House now. Some alterations have been made even since the Bill was laid before the House, induced by communications to myself and my Department. These also are committed to the candid consideration of the House. I now move that you leave the Chair.

Mr. CHARLTON. Before you leave the Chair, I may be permitted to make few remarks on the presentation of the Bill made by the hon. First Minister. There can be no doubt of the advisability of consolidating the various laws with reference to the lands of the North-West. The Government deserve the thanks of the country, for the measures they have taken in that respect, and I must cordially agree with the hon. the First Minister that this question ought not to be treated as a party question. It should be the endeavor of the House to frame a Bill in the interests of the country, and not with the purpose of securing any party advantage. The duty of dealing with so vast a domain as the North-West—an empire, in fact—a country suitable to become the home of millions upon millions of people—is a very grave responsibility resting upon this House; and in the consideration of this measure we should endeavor to realize that responsibility, and endeavor to discharge our duties in the interest of the present and of the future. The hon. First Minister has referred to some changes which he proposes to make in the law. I am happy to say, that I believe that these changes, so far as they go, are, in the main, commendable ones; and I think the only exception that will, perhaps, be taken on this side of the House will be, that in some respects he has not gone quite as far as we could wish; but, so far as I have looked over the changes, I think they will meet the approval of the entire House. He refers to the provision respecting second homesteads. That I deem to be an eminently proper provision, and I think it might be advantageously extended. The homestead settler is naturally a pioneer; he is subjected to many hardships, and he is deserving of great consideration from the Government. I see no reason why a homesteader, having settled upon his land for twelve months, having done some work, built a house, and proven himself to be a bona fide settler, should be debarred from selling his claim. I think it might be an advantage, if such an enterprising individual, who is willing to press on into the wilderness, should be allowed to sell his claim and go. Then, a person who does not know the country, and is ignorant of the soil, may go in and settle on worthless land. In such cases, with a proper guarantee against fraud, I think the homesteader ought to be permitted to abandon a worthless claim and take up a second one. With regard to the extension of the time for settling after making entry, I think it is a very proper change; and I think the opinion of many settlers in the North-West is, that the change might be extended further. If a settler makes an entry after the 15th of July, it is hardly possible for him to go on his homestead and do any work that year; it is too late to do any breaking, and I think it might be advantageous to provide that a person entering for a claim between the 15th of July and the 15th of December, should be allowed until the first of the following June to enter upon his homestead, with the provision that the three years of duties should date from the occupancy, and not the entry. That would give the settler time, after making his entry, to go home to make his arrangements for immigration, and to come back on the 1st of June. With regard to the jumping of claims, referred to by the hon. First Minister, that is, no doubt, a prolific source of trouble, and many cases of hardship have arisen under the provisions with regard to the forfeiting of claims. The unscrupulous are always lying in wait, and if a homestead settler, from any circumstance, happens to be away for two or three days beyond his time, they are ready to pounce upon his homestead. In such a case, I think the homesteader should receive every consideration from the Government; and it might be right to provide that a homesteader, who has made improvements to the amount of $2 per acre, should have a chance to enter upon his claim again and fulfil the duties of settlement; and if it were provided, in case a man's claim were forfeited, that the improvements made should be sold for the benefit of the settler, that would at once put an end to all this claim-jumping, and to the perjury that now prevails, because the claim-jumper would have nothing to gain. With regard to the issue of patents, I think there is great force in what the hon. First Minister says. I think the practice in the United States is, for the local land agent to issue a certificate of sale when the purchase money is paid, and a long time elapses before the patent issues, although the certificate is evidence of the sale.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I may mention that the law of the United States provides that a party claiming his rights must advertise the fact, and any person may enter an objection. We do not propose to introduce that very cumbersome and inefficient provision.

Mr. CHARLTON. I have bought land in the United States, and I do not know that I had to comply with a regulation of that kind.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You were not a homesteader.

Mr. CHARLTON. No; a purchaser. With regard to the school lands, the Government have certainly made a most magnificent provision. Our reservation for school purposes is as large again as that of the United States—there it is only one section in a township, section sixteen—and it has occurred to me, as this provision is so ample, that we might take into consideration the advisability of setting aside a small percentage of those lands for a purpose that I think would be very important in the North-West—that is, for the establishment of nurseries for the introduction into the North-West, of trees from Russia and Eastern Siberia. This is beyond the reach of private enterprise. I believe that in Russia they have apple, pear, and plum trees that stand a temperature of 53 degrees below zero, and bear abundantly. They are planted in groups, like hills of corn. If the Government would set aside, say 10 per cent. from the proceeds of the school lands for this purpose, I think it would be of inestimable advantage to the North-West. I am sorry that we do not see in this measure a provision for sales of land for cash, with conditions of settlement. The credit system I consider a very objectionable one. It was tried in the United States at first, but was abandoned there after experience had demonstrated that it was an improper system; and the cash system was adopted, and has since been adhered to. If we adopted the same system, with some conditions of settlement, I have no doubt it would be found to be very advantageous. The claim that our policy is more liberal than that of the United States, with regard to homesteads and preemptions, has some truth in it. The American Government does not allow each settler to take up a homestead and preemption. Of course, the lands in that country are open for preemption and homestead, but all of it is as well open for sale; and when settlers get behind the land grabber and speculator comes in, so that perhaps our system is a better one in that respect. I do not propose to say much about the measure before we go into Committee. With regard to the proposal to discontinue homesteads it would have been better if we had substituted the words "Act of Parliament" for "Order in Council." We might justly take from the Governor in Council some of the prerogatives that belong to them now, and have them brought within the deliberate and careful action of Parliament. It will be in the interests of the country to have sweeping changes depend rather on the Act of Parliament than of the Governor in Council.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I desire to say a few words on the Bill before we go into Committee. I am glad to be able to approve of the suggestions made by the hon. First Minister, and the alterations proposed in the Land Bill. I agree with the last speaker that they are all in the right direction. I think, when we come to discuss them more freely in Committee, we may see our way clear to being a little more liberal. I am glad also to hear from the hon. First Minister, that we shall have the fullest opportunity of discussing this question, and that he will be ready and willing to take suggestions from those who have had practical experience in the country. I am sure the desire of the Government and of this House, is to make the best possible Land Bill we can. We should make some of the clauses perhaps a little more liberal than they are at present. In reference to claim-jumping, as has been said, it has got to be a serious annoyance to settlers. They have a great dread of the system that has been inaugurated in the North-West in reference to claim-jumping. It has unsettled a great many people in the country. I am glad the provisions of the Bill will tend to correct this evil. I think we ought to even go a little further in some respects by taking away the inducements to claim-jumping, rather than adopt a system of punishing those who have committed the evil. The system of inspection which the hon. First Minister has proposed is, I think, a good one. I always held the view that our homesteads should be inspected by a Government inspector, as that would do away, to a considerable extent, with the evils of false swearing. No doubt, in many cases, false affidavits have been made, and many settlers have come to grief in consequence. The Land Board, I must say, has very much facilitated land matters in Manitoba, and although there have been some complaints—of course, we must expect that—I believe, on the whole, the gentlemen at the head of the Land Board are fully qualified for the position. There has been considerable complaint of their being a little too rigid in interpreting the law regarding occupation; but I think, on the whole, that the move is one in the right direction. One thing advisable would be that, in some cases, an appeal should be had from the Land Board. Of course, as the hon. First Minister has said, an appeal can be made to the hon. Minister of the Interior, but that is a very big institution, and sometimes very hard to get at. In cases of fraud, an appeal should be had to the Court of Queen's Bench. I see that a case has been brought into court, and Judge Taylor gave his opinion that he had no jurisdiction; but, at the same time, he commented on the hardship to the settler. In reference to school lands, I quite agree with the law as it is at present, but a great deal of complaint has been made, and with some degree of fairness, by settlers who went in there some years ago, before they had an opportunity of being posted as to the regulations of the Land Act, and they have perhaps special claims on that ground. I think, however, that people who have gone in recently and settled on school lands, should abide the consequences. I quite agree with the hon. Minister, that this is a delicate subject to interfere with; but there are some special cases of hardship which are entitled to, and no doubt will receive favorable consideration. As to the advances made to homesteaders, as allowed by the law to the extent of $500, when I say the interest on that is too low I have no desire at all to raise the interest to the settlers; but I think I am right in saying that this clause of the law has never been availed of, and it struck me the principal reason was that money being worth 10 or 12 per cent. in Manitoba, it was hard for the settler to get an advance of $500 at 6 per cent.; while he might be able to pay 8 per cent, and could get the advance at that rate, the law allows only 6 per cent.; and it would be well, perhaps, if that rate were changed to 8 per cent. However, that is only my own opinion. With regard to preemptions, I quite agree with the hon. Minister, on the ground he takes. It is a very difficult question. Preemptions have given a great deal of trouble in Minnesota, and I know they have been the cause of a great deal of fraud. Perhaps we might do away with preemptions, although I am not prepared to say we should, without something in their place. A cultivation homestead in the place of preemption would, I think, do very well and dovetail in with the present homestead law. At the present time, everyone knows it is almost impossible for a man without means to comply with the present homestead regulations, and it is positively wrong to bring people out there with the idea that they can start on a prairie farm without a dollar, comply with the regulations of the law, and retain their land. This has led to a great deal of trouble and to a great deal of claim-jumping. A man who goes in without any money at all is forced either to get employment from his neighbor as farm laborer, or is driven into the towns and cities; and while he is away from his homestead—not having capital to reside there and cultivate it—his claim is liable to be jumped. Of course, I know it will be said that a cultivation homestead entry will open the door to speculating in homesteads; but I think a clause permitting homesteading in this way would also assist the man without capital to homestead under the Act as at present. The plan I propose is to require the cultivation of at least twenty acres a year for five years, and get his patent only on his becoming an actual resident the last year. That would make 100 acres cultivated, besides the building of a suitable house, necessary before he could go into actual possession. I see no reason why he should not be allowed to cultivate a homestead in that way, and we would secure a class of settlers that are very desirable. This would enable the poor man who has taken up the homestead without any capital at all to get employment from a man who obtained a homestead in the manner I have described, and at the same time he would preserve his own rights, and in a year or so he would be able to go on and fulfil the requirements of the law as it stands at present. I make this suggestion, because I think it would work well. I know it is very hard to draw the line between the actual settler and the speculator—in fact, until I commenced to put my ideas, together so as to be able to consider this matter in Committee I only began to understand what a difficult thing it was to frame a Land Act; and although I have had a good deal of experience and a great deal of correspondence on the subject, I find it very hard to come to a just conclusion. I know that in this way the actual settler would be more apt to become something more than a laborer, and the country would not be cultivated as it is at the present time in small patches, the settlers being five, ten or twenty miles apart. I think that the hon. First Minister should consider this, and when we go into Committee we will be able to discuss it more fully. I think it would be a wise provision; at all events it would be a very good substitute for the present Preemption Law.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would suggest to my hon. friend to frame a clause embodying his idea.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have already prepared it. I agree with the last speaker, and also with the hon. First Minister, that we should, if possible, offer superior inducements to those offered by the American Government. A great many immigrants coming through that country to our own North-West are lost on the way, and no doubt arguments are used which are scarcely fair; and if we can point to better land regulations in the North-West than exists in the United States, we offer them a very strong argument indeed in favor of coming to our country. Still I do not think we should go too far in giving them more than is absolutely necessary. I think it would be advisable to make the regulations a little more liberal at least than they are in the United States. The question of a second homestead entry is one that has been very much discussed and a want that has been very much felt. I am very much pleased to see that the clause has been introduced into the Bill, but I think we should go a little further. The Bill says that when a man has obtained a patent for a homestead he can make an entry for a second homestead. I think that if a man has fulfilled the conditions of the Act, he is entitled to a homestead entry then as if he had the patent, because it may be a year before he gets his patent, and he would in reality be performing four years service on his homestead before he would be able to homestead a second time. As soon as a homesteader has received the proper certificate, in accordance with the schedule attached to the Act, and as the hon. First Minister says to be endorsed by the land agent, I think he would then have a perfect right to take up a second homestead.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Of course, the Act provides that the patent must issue; but the other clause provides that the certificate of the land agent, endorsed by the commissioner, is equivalent to the patent. I quite agree with the hon. member, and we will have the clause altered.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. As to the change that has been made from the 15th of May to the 15th of September, I think that upon further consideration it will be advisable to make a change. Perhaps hon. gentlemen here who live in the eastern part of the country do not understand that after the 15th of July there can be no breaking done in the North-West. Of course, it can be done, but it will not answer the purpose. The crop the first year will not be nearly so good, and the sod will not rot in time for back setting the next spring.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. A house can be put up.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. So far as that is concerned the hon. gentleman will see that in the Act as it is at the present time there is no such thing required. It is provided that he shall reside upon the property, but that has been evaded, and is being evaded every day, so much so that he is really not compelled to put up a house at all. He can live in a tent, as many of them do. You will see tents all over the country, especially the first year, and very often they take their tents away with them when they go away in the winter. In the case of unmarried men they use tents altogether, so that the building clause does not amount to very much as it is at the present time. I was going to say that if this change was made I think it would be an inducement to settlers, and we should do everything we can in that direction. To recur to the point, after the 15th of July, the breaking season, as I have before remarked, is over, and they would have to wait until next year; and I think that all who enter after the 15th of July, and before the 15th of December, should have the privilege of going into actual residence or occupation on the 1st of next June. The 15th of May is a little too early on account of high water in the spring and the difficulty of travelling early in the season—which would keep most of the settlers behind; and I know cases of men who have left here with their families in April and were not able to reach their lands much before the 1st of July on account of bridges being washed away. I think if we said the 1st of June, instead of the 15th May, it would be better, so that all who take up homesteads after the 15th of July, and before the 15th of December, would be in no better position than if they had taken them up the next spring, because they could really do nothing on their land. The hon. Minister says he could build a house. If they were obliged to build perhaps they would not go at all, because that requires capital. But I am speaking now in the interest of the man who has little or no capital. If he takes up land and goes into possession on the 15th June, the homestead residence should date from that time, although he may have taken it up in August. As the clause now stands, supposing a man takes up a homestead on the 31st August, at the end of six months he is in the middle of March, he cannot go on to his homestead then, and so it is obvious that the 15th September will not meet the case, as I have no doubt the hon. Minister intended it should. I know men with small families, who have not been able to take their families with them on account of the six months expiring in the middle of winter, and being unable to get a permit to leave their homesteads to come down here and get their families in the spring, or the opening of navigation, had to remain there, and eat up what little capital they were able to earn in the fore part of the winter. This is a hardship which, I think, should be remedied.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will not trouble the House with further remarks, but I will take occasion to offer some amendments in Committee.

Mr. ROYAL. Mr. Speaker: With respect to the suggestion of the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Sutherland), I think the suggestions given by Mr. Pierce, the inspector of Dominion Lands Agencies, are more to the point; and I believe, if these suggestions were carried out—for they come from a man who has had actual experience of the matters on which he writes and speaks—the object sought by the promoter of this Bill will be reached more effectually. I have listened with a great deal of satisfaction to the praise which the hon. member for Selkirk has bestowed on this Bill. There can be no doubt that the Bill is a good one; that is to say, it is a consolidation of the old laws, with certain changes introduced that will certainly make it a more perfect law. But I believe this law is still too experimental. Of course, there is a good reason for it. Like our own Tariff Law, which has to be framed to a certain extent to meet the exigencies that arise from the Tariff of our neighbors, in this case our Land Law must, to a certain extent, be framed so as to give our own settlers as many advantages, and more if possible, than are given on the other side of the line. I believe there are some features in this Bill which carry out that object very fully; at least that is my humble opinion. But there are certain other changes which, I believe, the right hon. gentleman might have made in the law, which, I believe, would have done much towards the settlement of the wild lands of Manitoba and the North-West. With respect to the Land Board, there is no doubt that institution is a good one; and if the intentions of the law are fully carried out, we will see, before very long, the Board settling disputes to the satisfaction of the parties, or at least as promptly as possible. In regard to the Land Board, it will be very satisfactory to the people of the North-West if the hon. Minister of the Interior could go frequently to Manitoba and that territory, and be able to convince himself on the spot of the various requirements of the country and the changes and improvements that should be made in the law. We see that the Lieutenant-Governor of the North-West Territory has been spending a few weeks down there. I believe his experience has been most valuable to the Government in more than one respect.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. ROYAL. If we had a Minister, or some one responsible to this House who could come to Manitoba, who could take some part in the local administration of these laws, who could listen patiently to the complaints, who could understand the views of the people, and who could go on the spot and see for himself what is actually taking place, I believe this law would be a little more perfect and a little more advanced. There is only one class of settlers to which this law gives the right of homesteading—that is the class of settlers who have means enough to go at once on their homesteads, put up buildings, buy a yoke of oxen, and commence to break the land and cultivate it. I believe this class is not the most numerous we should have on our lands. I believe that the settlement of the wild lands of the North-West should, as much as possible, be open to all classes. I believe that farmers' sons, of which class so much has been said and written lately, should be given a chance to settle on homesteads without exposing themselves to the charges of having fraudulently made their entries, or having tried to evade the law in some respects, but they should be allowed an opportunity to enter for homesteads themselves. There is another class, and it is the class of poor settlers. Last night, during the debate that was going on regarding immigration, a remark was made that only a certain class of immigrants ought to go to the North-West. I concur, and I think I concurred last night, in that statement; but we must remember that the class of immigrants composed of families who have only money to go there and some few hundred dollars to spare, is by far the most numerous class; and with the law as it stands I do not think this class can take advantage of the law. I submit to the right hon. promoter of the Bill that an opportunity to take advantage of the law should be given to these two other classes. Immigrants can only be secured for our country during six months of the year, while across the border emigrants come in during all months of the year. That is a reason why this law should go a little further than the Americans go, and should give an opportunity to all classes of settlers to take advantage of it. I have mentioned the young men. A farmer may not desire to go to the North-West Territory; his son may, however, wish to go. But if the farmer has not the means to take up a homestead at once, what will be the result? The young man will go somewhere else, or instead of trying to become one of the settlers in the country, he will probably hire himself in some other employment, and thereby we shall lose a good settler; while, on the other hand, if you allow him to take a homestead and require from him a certain amount of progressive cultivation as an alternative for residence, I believe that young man will at once go on a homestead, will make the necessary improvements, gradually and progressively—and this might be subject to an Order in Council—and he would go elsewhere and hire out his labor, either on the railway or some farm, and he would have a great object in view to lay aside his savings in order to make improvements upon his land. At the expiration of one, two or three years, which would depend on the regulations and Order in Council, the young man having prepared himself to go on the homestead, would take himself to the homestead and become one of the most flourishing farmers we could possibly possess. That would be an inducement to our young men not to go over to the United States, but to stick to the old maxim, "Go West: and remain West with us." With respect to the poor class who are deprived, even by taking the most liberal interpretation of the law, of the advantage of going on a farm, it is true the law cannot contemplate that everybody has a right to obtain a homestead; but those advantages are only extended to the farming class. With respect to the poor farmer, if he was allowed to take advantage of the law, a great inducement would be offered to him to save as much money as possible in order to make the improvements required of him as an alternative for residence. The homestead section, twenty-six, in my opinion, is the leading feature of the Bill, because it provides for the settlement of wild lands, and this has been tested; but what have we witnessed? Last year we find, from the reports of the officers of the Government, Commissioners Walsh and Pierce, Inspectors of Agencies, that claim-jumping has been a great source of trouble, and has been going on at a great rate. In fact, the Dominion office in Winnipeg was almost daily crowded with people trying to jump some other person's homesteads; and if this fact was published and disclosed without any qualification, it would, at first sight, lead people to believe that one-half of our homesteaders had gone to the United States, because these men had relinquished their homesteads according to the declaration of the claim-jumpers, who represented that these others had never been on their homesteads. Fortunately this circumstance has not been used as an argument to show that our people were emigrating to the other side of the line; but it would have been a good argument, and could have been employed with a great deal of force. If so many homesteaders have lost their homesteads on account of their inability from lack of means to go on them and fulfil the requirements of the law, then I say that there must be something wrong in that law, and that it does not go far enough; and I wholly agree with the hon. member for North Norfolk, in his statement that this Bill does not go sufficiently far. We have at the present moment before the House, a Bill which goes very far in extending the franchise; and if this Bill were framed in as liberal a spirit, I believe that it would be nearly perfect. Now, as I have given notice, that I would move that a section be inserted in the Bill when it is discussed in Committee of the Whole, I will say little further. But there is no doubt as to what we want. I do not wish to hold to any system which would not improve this law; but with your experience, and the experience which I have been able to acquire during a thirteen years' residence in the North-West, during which time I have mixed up with the people daily; and judging from my own knowledge of that country, and the experience which has been acquired by those around me there, from the tone of the North-West press, from the disinterested and candid opinions of the homesteaders themselves, and our own settlers, I say that if this clause was so framed as to embrace in lieu of one class, three classes of settlers, the settlement of that country would be much more rapid and would give much more satisfaction. It is true, it can be said we will thus open the door to speculation; but speculation is not such an easy matter after all, and I provide for it in my proposed amendment; besides, I believe that speculation has been greater in the past than it will be in the future, while the speculator who desires to speculate on homesteads has to trust entirely to the good faith of another person, who is placed between his obligation and his employer, and his own interest; and among that class of people, I do not think that much mutual trust can exist, as between the speculator and the tool he employs to attain his objects. I am of opinion that speculation, like other things, has been exaggerated with an object, and even at the risk of some speculation prevailing, which I believe would be very small—and we have land enough to afford to lose a fraction and a very small fraction of it—I think that such good results could be derived from the adoption of this view of the question as would more than compensate, and one hundredfold compensate disadvantages which some may see will follow from the adoption of this section. Returning to some of the changes of which the right hon. promoter of the Bill has given the House notice, I would say that it is a matter of very great and universal regret in our Province, that the Government should allow all this time to elapse without disposing of some, at all events, of the school lands in the Province. Now, what is the result of this policy? It has been stated by the hon. Premier, that these school lands in some cases, are first class, and no doubt some people will, either through ignorance, or owing to other causes, squat on them. This is, of course, against the law, which forbids settlement on school sections; still this will be done, and we have seen school lands squatted on to a very large and regrettable extent in our Province. If some and a proportionate quantity of these school lands were disposed of, as they could have been disposed of say last year, when certainly they were as valuable if not more valuable, than they are this year, I believe that the school fund would have been begun; and that we, the heads of families there, or the settlers, could perhaps derive some benefit from the interest of the fund. Now, we are the pioneers in that country, and what is the use of having this rich endowment lying unfruitful for the advantage, I presume, of our grandchildren? I must say that I do not believe in such a policy. Of course, great caution and great prudence should be exercised in selecting the school lands to be sold every year; but the Government should commence to create that fund. I do not believe, myself, that these lands should be placed under the management of the Provincial Government. I think that this is a wise provision of the law; and I fully concur in the wisdom of the remarks made by the right hon. the Premier on this subject; but in addition to the common schools, which are and have been entitled to share in this fund, I think that some provision should also be made for higher education. The Manitoba University has been now in existence for some six years. The funds at the disposal of the Local Government are very scanty. They have only a small pittance, and while the wants of the Province are daily increasing, the Government have only a fixed allowance to depend upon; therefore in this, as in many other cases, the Local Government have been placed in the impossibility of doing anything to further the interests of such an institution. The Chancellor and the Council of that University have, on more than one occasion, addressed the Dominion Government in order to obtain some share in this fund, or to be otherwise endowed with lands. I see that in this Act, provision is made for the endowment of a model school farm. Well, Sir, if endowments are to be provided for model school farms, I do not see why endowments should not be set apart for universities in the new Provinces which will be carved out of the North-West Territory. There is another defect in the law which I think might also be remedied. In the oath which the homesteader is obliged to take after his three years' residence in order to get his land, the conditions that he has to fulfil in order to acquire a title are not stated. I believe that the homesteader should know that in addition to his residence there is a certain amount of cultivation to perform on his homestead which the oath should specify. If that were done, the work of the inspector could be much more easily performed, and a good many irregularities would also be avoided. I fully concur with the right hon. gentleman on the subject of the abolition of preemptions. I believe that we will practically dispose of the preemption by giving the homesteader the right to a second homestead, besides it being an inducement for him to remain in our Province, instead of crossing the frontier. In many cases we could gradually dispense with the preemptions, and they would be replaced by the other right of giving the settler another homestead. I am one of those who believe that 160 acres constitute a very large farm, especially for the class of settlers who go into the North-West; and I am not surprised that some of these settlers are amazed at the extent of land which they acquire for themselves in that country. Experience is the great teacher in these as in other matters. The farmers in other parts of Canada were never ambitious to possess 100 or 120 acres, and now we propose to give 160 acres to the farmers of the North-West. I believe the Colonization Land Company are subdividing their quarter-sections, and they are giving only 110 acres or 100 acres to their settlers; and I believe their policy in that respect shows the truth of the remark made by the hon. First Minister.

Mr. SPROULE. Some give only eighty acres.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. ROYAL.

Mr. ROYAL. I do not agree with the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Sutherland) as to the giving the right of appeal from the Land Board. There must be a finality in all these cases; if not, what is the use of the Board? The Board is composed of members, eminent by their intelligence, education and experience, in many ways, and I do not see why the Government should give the right of appeal to parties coming before them. I rather believe that the more we get a finality in these cases, the better it will be for the country, because, by giving multiplied degrees of jurisdiction, we will have the same evils which exist, in some cases, in our own administration of justice. I believe the Board should be empowered to finally decide those cases without compelling parties to incur the expense and loss of time of coming here to Ottawa, at the risk of having their cases pigeon-holed for months, and even for one, two, or even ten years. If such a board had been organized in the early days—in 1871 or 1872—I believe that the heartburnings and dissatisfactions which were felt in many cases, and especially the loss of time which has been incurred in these long disputes, would have been avoided. There are some other details upon which, as the right hon. gentleman has said, he will be glad to listen to the suggestions of hon. members, and I shall avail myself of his invitation in Committee of the Whole. I think that, on the whole, the Bill is a commendable one, and that it should be discussed, as an hon. member who preceded me remarked, in no party spirit. We are all equally interested in perfecting the Bill; in fact the good work contemplated by the immigration office cannot be performed without the assistance of an efficient administration of our lands. If a proper system of immigration and settlement is to be adopted, it cannot be secured if one Department is inferior, no matter how well the others may be administered. But if, on the other hand, one system is as well managed as the other, the result will be a large immigration, and an increase of prosperity in the North-West Territories of Canada.

Mr. ORTON. I rise to express the satisfaction I feel at the discussion which has taken place, and the remarks which fell from some hon. members. I had the honor of offering some suggestion to the Acting Minister of Interior, Mr. Macpherson, which were of a similar character to the tenor of those remarks, and I was glad to hear those views endorsed so ably as they have been by hon. gentlemen from the North-West. Having gained some knowledge of the country, I may be permitted to offer a few of the suggestions which I made, and I think it will be seen that they are very much of the same character as those to which we have listened this afternoon. I think there should be some system by which lands should be sold by the Government for cash to actual settlers, and I think this is a very important matter indeed. The people settling in that country find great difficulty in maintaining schools and building roads, and if the Government would sell lands—not more perhaps than 160 acres to one individual upon condition of actual settlement at the preemption price of the district in which the lands are situated—I think it would be a good system. I would also suggest that even a smaller amount of land—say as low as forty acres—should be sold, and thus give an opportunity to those who have not much money to invest in land in localities where there is a considerable settlement, and in which schools and other advantages may be enjoyed. Another suggestion which has been made was the proposal to give the opportunity to other classes of obtaining homesteads in the North-West. I may, perhaps, be allowed to read what I have jotted down in reference to that point:

"That in order to give laboring men, mechanics, and others with limited means an opportunity of taking up a homestead and preemption in Dominion lands, provide that upon the affidavit of the person desiring to enter made before one or more just ces of the peace, or such other responsible parties as may be deemed sufficient, setting forth that such person has such limited means as this clause is intended to provide for, the land agents shall make a special entry by which said person may be permitted to absent himself for the purpose of earning money for nine months in each of the first two years, but that no permission be allowed to purchase until the end of the said first two years."

That is in order to prevent speculation. I think it would not be advisable to allow them to sell their homesteads after the first year, as homesteaders now do.

"And it shall be incumbent upon every such person to file at the end of each year in the land office of such district, in which the land is situated, conclusive evidence that he has himself actually resided thereon for three months continuously, and has made improvements to the value of $200 in each of the said first two years, and at the end of the third and last year that he has resided for a term of nine months, upon which a patent may be issued for the homestead and preemption in the ordinary manner."

I think that would give encouragement to a large class of men who go into that country and who have insufficient means to enable them to settle on a homestead in the ordinary way. From the knowledge I have gathered, I can say that it is almost impossible for a man with a family to settle there with less than $1,000, and we know that many go there without that amount of capital; but if we allowed a man, living on his homestead for three months, and making such improvements as he could with his limited capital, to absent himself for nine months in order to earn money, we would not only be promoting the cultivation of the country, but would attract a large number of that class of people in the United States, I believe, no such inducement is offered, and if some such clause were introduced into our Act, I think it would have a highly beneficial effect upon the settlement of the North-West. With regard to the school lands, although I agree with what the right hon. Prime Minister has said as to the importance of preserving the school lands for educational purposes, I think that the Government should not take the school lands from those settlers who have gone upon them without knowledge, but should have power to settle with them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is power reserved.

Mr. ORTON. I am glad to hear it. The remarks that have been made with regard to extending the time between making entry for a homestead and occupying it, I quite agree that it might very properly be enlarged. Breaking cannot be done in that country until about the middle of July, and I see no objection to extending the time. I am also pleased to notice that the Government are taking some steps to remove the difficulty that has been experienced by settlers in ascertaining what lands were entered for; I am pleased to note that steps are being taken by which information will be gathered every week in the various land offices and other public places in the country, so that people going in may ascertain what lands are taken up and what are not.

Mr. WATSON. I agree with almost everything that has been said as to the improvements which this Bill makes in the Land Act. I heartily agree with the remarks of the hon. First Minister with regard to the school lands. A deputation, I believe, recently waited upon the hon. First Minister with the view of inducing the Government to grant these lands to the parties who have squatted upon them, or cultivated a small portion of them, supposing that that would give them a prior right to purchase. If the suggestion of the deputation had been acted upon, a great deal of injustice would be done to the country, because in a great many cases, within my own knowledge, the improvements on these lands are made by persons who have already received patents for adjoining lands, and in some instances I believe the friends of these people have used their influence to have these persons allowed to purchase these lands at the very low price of $2.50 per acre. A year ago last fall I believe inspectors were appointed to report to the Government upon those lands, and the improvements made upon them, and I believe that in many instances these inspectors were interested in the lands themselves. I think it is of the greatest importance that these lands should be held exclusively for school purposes. That may inconvenience a few men who expect to get a farm in a well settled district for a mere nothing, but it will benefit the great bulk of the people; and when they are disposed of, they should be put up at public competition. I wish to make one or two remarks with regard to homesteading. I would not advocate strongly the granting of a homestead and a preemption in all cases. I think 160 acres makes a very reasonable farm; but I think that in some cases an exception might be made to the regulation regarding the granting of homesteads to persons under eighteen years of age. In some families there are two or three sons, and it is very inconvenient for them to be obliged to remain on the original homestead with their parents for, perhaps, two or three years, until they are able to go west and take up homesteads for themselves. The consequence is that they are scattered all over the country. I think it would be proper, in the case of families in which there are two or three sons, that they should be allowed to take up a larger quantity of land than the present law allows them, on condition of cultivation. I think that in all cases the Act should require a certain amount of cultivation and a certain amount of improvement on the land before entitling the settler to receive his patent. Probably as regards one-half the patents issued by the Crown, there is not fifteen acres under cultivation on each quarter-section. The provision requiring six months' residence was a mere farce. A great many of the lands that have been patented have not probably $25 of improvements on them, and as far as the residence is concerned it has been of very little good to the country, and no good to the resident, except what he may have made by receiving the lands for nothing. A young man, for instance, of very limited means, will have to work all summer earning money to keep him on his land during the winter, and the result is, these young men will bury themselves like bears for six months in their homesteads during the winter, when they can do nothing on the land, in order to comply with the law.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They should get married, and leave their wives there.

Mr. WATSON. I do not know that that would be good policy, for if the young men are not able to keep themselves on their farms in summer, they would not be able to keep their wives there. It would be well to make the change suggested of not requiring residence altogether as a qualification. I think that cultivation should be as good a qualification as residence; but in no case should one person hold more than one homestead, and we should only grant a patent for a homestead after a cultivation of five years of twenty acres per year. It does not make much difference as to whether the patents are to be issued to the man who actually makes the improvements, or to some other individual; but it would be as well not to extend this to the other Provinces to avoid speculation. I would confine it to the residents of the Province.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. A speculation to the residents of the Province.

Mr. WATSON. There are a great many cases of blacksmiths, mechanics, school teachers and others living in the country, who would be very glad to take up lands, and who at their calling make more money than would be required to hire men to work them. By that means the country could be got under cultivation sooner than by requiring actual residence, because a settler requires considerable funds before he can settle on the land; and men working at trades would furnish means to other settlers on adjoining lands to cultivate and improve their own lots as well.

Mr. ROSS (Lisgar). The Land Bill, I am happy to say, has given a good deal of satisfaction, for two reasons: In the past, great dissatisfaction existed with the land regulations, owing to the numerous changes in the Land Act, which led the settler to believe there was not the security for them they ought to have. The other cause of dissatisfaction is, the want of a second homestead entry, and that in my part of the country was the greatest source of dissatisfaction. In my own constituency I know of two townships that are almost entirely depopulated by people going to Dakota because they could not take up a second homestead; and when it appeared in the North-West newspapers that people were going to Dakota on account of our land regulations, this had a very bad effect, especially on people coming in who were not aware of the true cause of the evil, viz.: That no provision was made for a second homestead entry, as it was generally supposed there would be. Consequently, settlers who had been in the country, and sold out in the expectation of getting a second homestead, were unable to do so, and we lost a number of that most desirable class, who having had three years' experience on the prairie were of greater value to us than new settlers. I am glad the hon. First Minister has seen fit to bring down this Bill, so that we will be able to keep our own people there and not see them go to the United States. With regard to the preemptions, I am sorry the hon. Minister has not seen fit to go further and abolish them entirely. I would not have the preemptions abolished this year, not because people coming from the Old Country come out under the impression that they will obtain a homestead and preemption, but I would have them abolished at the end of six months. Even then we would be more liberal than the United States, where they have no homesteads and preemptions together, but have either the one or the other. We have homesteads and preemptions which can be taken up by the same person; and in addition to them, where a homestead entry is taken up and twelve months' continuous residence proved, the settler, on paying $250, is entitled to a patent. That is very similar to the preemption in the United States. I think it would be well to call that a preemption, abolish the one we have now, and have nothing but homesteads. There are various reasons for this. One is that in a township in the North-West the alternate sections are railway lands, and every man entitled to preemption takes it because he has only to pay a few dollars, and has three years allowed him to pay the rest, so that there will be only two settlers on a section, and only thirty-two in a township. As most of the young men who go out there are unmarried, it is very difficult to have schools and churches established, especially schools, on account of the children being so far apart and there being so few settlers. Even in the old Province of Manitoba the greatest number in attendance at one school is about fifteen, and if we abolish the preemptions in the North-West and have only the homesteads we will have four settlers to every even-numbered section instead of two as at present, so that the settlers will be brought nearer together. Should a man want more than 160 acres he can purchase from the railway companies or the colonization companies on the alternate sections to the extent of 640 acres adjoining his property. For many a poor man 160 acres of land is a bigger farm than he can cultivate. We have numbers of large speculators in the North-West, it is true; but if there is one class more numerous than another, it is the poor settler. He takes up his second preemption of 160 acres, when he cannot farm really more than five, ten, or twenty acres fit for cultivation. Here he has 320 acres, and he is keeping that for years, and what is he keeping it for? Simply and solely in order that by the time he gets his patent he can resell it to speculators. It would be far better for the country if that 160 acres he holds for preemption were given to a poor settler like himself. Then you would have thicker settlements and better schools in the North-West. The man who wants to cultivate a large farm can go and purchase land from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company—a whole section or more. In the past, my impression was that it would have been far better for the Government to give alternate townships instead of alternate sections. The alternate townships then would be for the man who wants to cultivate large farms, while the smaller lots would be for men of moderate means. The townships would be filled with solid blocks of farms, four on every section, and this would be far better than it is at the present time. Now, with regard to foreign preemptions, if we change this, and give power to the settler who cultivates his land twelve months and resides on his place—if we give power to change that into a preemption, then we have the advantage over the United States; because, in the United States, you have to live five years on your farm before you can get a patent, while here a man will only be obliged to live three years. Now, I would go further in the matter of liberality than the United States, in some other directions. With regard to this continuous residence there has been a great deal said: and I admit there is great difficulty in framing a section so as to benefit the honest, straightforward poor settler. The great difficulty is the first year only; after that I would like him to take his chances the same as anyone else. A man settling on a quarter-section is in an entirely different position the first year from a man who settles on a wood farm in Ontario or any other Province. It is true, that in the last he cannot cultivate the first year, but he could cut down trees, and build a house, and prepare his firewood; whereas in the North-West he can only work on his farm during certain months of the year. He can put up a house, but after that he can do nothing until spring. Under this section of the Act to compel him to live on his place six months in the year, when he cannot do anything on it, is a hardship which will deter many young men from attempting it. Many of these young men, who are taking up homesteads in the North-West, are mechanics, men who have gone there from Ontario, or the other Provinces, men who have served their time here as apprentices at their trade, and have gone to the North-West to better their position. I think they should be permitted the first year to leave their homesteads after breaking up a certain quantity of land and building a house. Two or three months is all the time they can spend the first year on their farms with any advantage to themselves. Then the second year I would make him live there six months, because then he can do some breaking, then he has got his seeding and his reaping to do, and to provide his winter firewood. The second year there is not the same occasion for giving him extra time, but the first year we should be very liberal indeed with settlers going into that country. A great deal of the cause of this claim-jumping is owing to this very fact. Young men saw it was useless for them to stay on their homesteads so long a time, and so they went off to Winnipeg, or other places, and put in their time making a little money, or went to work for some farmer in the neighborhood. After doing this for three years they considered they had put in their six months' residence. After spending a certain portion of their time each year on their farms, they considered themselves justified in making an affidavit that they had lived there the prescribed time. They doubtless did that in good faith, but they may not have lived on their farms the first year, during six months of continual occupation. The consequence was that people went around and discovered a flaw in their title and found that they had not put in a continuous residence as required by law. As a result many of them lost their places, or they were obliged to sell their farms at a loss. All this difficulty has been owing to this six months' continuous residence the first year, and I think it is highly desirable that we should make some change in this respect.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

THIRD READINGS.

The following Bills were considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time and passed:—

Bill (No. 105) for granting certain powers to the Canadian Electric Light Company.—(Mr. Bergeron.)

Bill (No. 112) to amend the Act to incorporate the North Western Bank.—(Mr. Beaty.)

DOMINION LANDS BILL.

Mr. ROSS (Lisgar). When the House arose at Six o'clock I was about to remark on the provisions connected with the school lands. I find here that the Government have taken power to sell these lands, where they are desirable for a town site or town plot, or anything of that kind, but the Government only give to the school fund so much as actual farming lands bring in the township in question. It might be that the town site in the school section would be the only land worth anything in the district, and the other lands be worthless for farming lands; but I think that, under such circumstances, the school fund should receive more than the sale of ordinary farming land would bring, and some benefit from the sale of the section for a town site, in the same manner as the Government. It might not be allowed one-half but it should get one-quarter, or some increased benefit. The Government should also make some provision for squatters on school lands, who are there now, or were there previous to 1881. Since then, however, I do not think that any provision should be made for them; but some forty or fifty who settled on these lands before 1881 should receive attention. They then could not get land surveyed in the neighborhood; it was very difficult to go further west, owing to the hardness of the roads, and there being no railway, and they consequently settled on lands near Winnipeg and Marquette. They are prepared, I believe, to pay for these lands all they are really worth as farming lands. They have made certain improvements, put up buildings and fences, and cultivated the soil; and it will be a very great hardship, if the Government sell these lands by auction, compelling these people thereby to pay for their own improvements. If provision were made that the Government could, by Order in Council, or by reference to the Board at Winnipeg, allow these cases to be adjudicated upon, and have these parties compelled to pay as much for these lands as ordinary farming lands there bring, it would be wise; but I would not, in the future, encourage people to squat on school lands, as these are set apart for a special purpose; and, as far as I am concerned, I believe that the people of the North-West think that the Government should preserve these lands intact for school purposes. In the past, people were under misapprehension as to what the Government were really going to do with these lands, or as to what the law really was, and it would be well for the Government to take power to deal with those special cases. I see that the Government have taken power with regard to the sale of land, either odd or even-numbered sections; and I understand that a sale is to be made, in a short time, in the Turtle Mountain District and along the line of railway. In my opinion, it would be a very wise provision if the Government would see fit to take power to deal specially with lands in certain special cases, for instance, along the line of railway; and improvements should be made part of the conditions of sale, for this reason: If you now go along the railway for a mile on each side the land is reserved for actual settlement, and the Canadian Pacific Railway have also reserved their lands; and consequently the country seems to be a regular waste from one end to the other. Persons travelling on the railway and seeing no improvements, and no field of wheat except in old settlements for hour after hour and day after day, have a very poor impression of the country. They do not understand why so much land is not improved and cultivated; but if the Government would sell these lands and make settlement and actual cultivation of one-third or one-half in three years a condition of the issue of the patent, selling the land at a certain price with these conditions attached, I believe it would be the means of advertising the country. I have seen people who returned from the West last year, and who informed me that they saw no fields of wheat except at Portage La Prairie, and at one or two other points, and they had not made up their minds that wheat could be grown successfully in the North-West. If what I suggest was done, I am satisfied that it would be a completely paying investment to the Government and the country, as it would tend to get the lands into cultivation as rapidly and as speedily as possible. One provision of the Bill is a very wise one, and I think an addition might be made to it: where a settler has gone on land in unsurveyed territory, and made improvements, and two years afterwards the survey is made, or two and a-half years afterwards, he can make his entry and obtain his patent three years after actual residence and cultivation. But it says: "In the section previous to the survey thereof." Now I know of certain cases where even after survey, some delays occurred on account of the surveys not being returned by the surveyors in charge of certain townships, so that the lands were not thrown open for settlement for one or two years after. I think that provision should be made for such cases, and even after the survey is made, and people have occupied surveyed lands, they should be enabled to make an extra entry after three years of actual residence and cultivation, when they should be entitled to their patents for their lands. A very slight addition to this section would cover that point. I know of two or three townships in Manitoba where surveys were made two or three years ago, and where the settlers went in after the surveys were completed, and to this day they have not been able to fulfil the provisions relating to settlement, because the surveyors who made the survey did not give sufficient notice to the Government to entitle them to place the lands on the market; and those settlers are in the position of not having made their entry except very recently in the case of one township. I agree with the remark made by my hon. friend from Provencher (Mr. Royal) with regard to the school fund. I think that fund should not be dealt with by the Local Government. I believe it is better to leave it in the hands of the Dominion Government. It might be advisable to appoint the times of selling the lands by the advice of the Land Board, with the concurrence of the Board of Education, for the Province of Manitoba. I think that Board would be a good authority to consult as to the advisability of the sale of these lands for school purposes. I have nothing more to say than this: that I am much pleased with this Dominion Lands Act, and with the consolidation which has been made of previous Acts. I am certain that in the North-West it will make a great change in the feelings with which the land regulations have been regarded. There has been in the past a great feeling of insecurity owing to the changes which have been made from time to time; but if the Bill is made as perfect as we in our wisdom can make it, I feel certain that it will produce a feeling of security among the settlers of the North-West, which will be a great advantage to the country. Settlers coming from the Old Country to the North-West, who are told that the land regulations are of a certain kind, but who afterwards find that changes have been made, are very much dissatisfied. On the other hand, if they find the law and the regulations unchanged from year to year, a greater feeling of security is produced, and they rely with greater faith on what the Government is going to do. I think, therefore, it would be well to put in the Bill that preemptions are to be done away with at a certain time; because if it is published in the Gazette that the preemptions are to be done away with in a certain number of months, the immigration agents of the United States will use that information to produce a certain amount of insecurity in the North-West country. On the other hand, if this provision is inserted in the Bill, and if it is known that it is to come into effect—I would not say for this year's immigration, but for next—the agents of the Dominion of Canada in England, and on the continent, can assure the people that are coming here that they will get homesteads but not preemptions; and then there will be no difficulty whatever. If, however, the impressions get abroad that these settlers are to get preemptions as well as homesteads, and they find that they cannot do so, there will be a feeling of dissatisfaction, and as there are persons in the North-West who act as agents for the United States Government, and the United States railway companies, they will use this state of things to induce the people who have gone into the country to return to the United States.

Mr. SCOTT. I fully concur with many of the remarks which have been made by the other representatives of Manitoba, with regard to this Bill. I believe the consolidation of the various Lands Acts, and including with them the various Orders in Council which have been passed, will be beneficial to the Province of Manitoba and the North-West Territories. It is quite true that in the past three or four years very great difficulty has been experienced by settlers in the Province of Manitoba, owing to the frequent changes of the land regulations. In the older Provinces of the Dominion it is a very easy matter to promulgate new ideas, and new information; it is an easy matter to give world-wide publicity to the new regulations; but in a new Province, such as that of Manitoba, without railway communication, or telegraph lines, it is almost impossible. I know very well that in many cases Orders in Council have been passed changing the land regulations, and for six months they were not known to many people in the outlying districts of the Province. I believe that this will meet a great want, and so soon as it becomes known that frequent changes will not take place, just so soon will the people have less cause of complaint, and they will become correspondingly satisfied. With regard to the homesteads, I agree with the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Sutherland) that the time should be extended for location till the 1st of June. Those living in that Province know that it is almost impossible for the people, in the earlier part of the spring, to go to the outlying districts, and I have no doubt that the Government will see that the Bill will be so amended. Such a change will be to the advantage of the country, and there is no doubt that the Government have no object in view other than to frame a Land Act such as will meet all possible requirements of the country. With regard to the homesteads, there is one clause which I would like to see inserted in the Bill, and that is a clause to make provision for farmers' sons. We know that in the North-West many men, in fact all who go into the country, go there not for comfort, but to better their condition. Many of the farmers who live in this country sell their farms with the object of benefiting themselves and their families; and we know that a parent who has one or two sons gets them to take up a homestead for themselves, while he himself takes up the adjoining homestead. And yet the sons are compelled to reside on their own homesteads for the six months. I believe that if an exception were made in such cases, allowing them for the first twelve months to do their settlement duties without actual residence, it would be a real benefit. With regard to second homesteads, I, for one, have always been in favor of them, and so has almost every one who has lived in the Province. The Government were rather slow in adopting this system, feeling no doubt that they might encourage something which would not entirely be honorable on the part of the settler. I believed then, as I believe now, that the poor settler who locates on a farm for a number of years and sells it for a considerable sum is in a better position to take up another homestead and does more service to the country than he otherwise would have done. The Government last July wisely allowed the second homestead entry; and the second homestead can be procured, not as the hon. member for Selkirk has stated, after the patent for the first has been issued, but, as he will see by section thirty-eight, as soon as the patent has been recommended by the local land agent, and countersigned by the Commissioners of the Land Board; he can then assign or dispose of the property as he thinks fit. With regard to the cry which we have heard so frequently, and which has been reported in many of the papers in these Provinces, that there has been a large exodus from the Province of Manitoba to the territory of Dakota, we have heard very little of it in the Province of Manitoba. There has not been an exodus to any extent whatever. A few disaffected people did go across the line imagining they had a grievance, but that will always be the case no matter how wisely our Land Bill may be framed; and I venture to say that for every one who left for Dakota ten have come from that territory into the Province of Manitoba. I must dissent from the remarks of the hon. member for Lisgar (Mr. Ross) in reference to preemptions. I am strongly in favor of allowing the settlers the right of preemption, and particularly settlers who are heads of families; and I trust the Government will not see any good reason for taking the power in their own hands for abolishing the preemption right. I believe our friends opposite would be only too glad to take advantage of that, and use it as another cry against the Government. If we wish to encourage people to come into our country, we must give them plenty of land. We have millions of acres lying there uncultivated, and I do not think the time has yet arrived when we should limit a grant to 160 acres for each settler. With regard to jumping, and cancellations, and the operations of the Land Board in Winnipeg, I must say that I believe the appointment of that Board was a step in the right direction. Those who have land business to attend to are better satisfied than they were previously, for the simple reason that they can attend to their business in Winnipeg without losing time and money in coming to Ottawa. But I must say that the Land Board have been a little too stringent, and have adhered too closely to the letter of the law. A little more judgment, a little more discretion, and a little more latitude, ought to be used by the Land Board. With regard to the school lands, the hon. member for Provencher, and the hon. member for Lisgar seem to be anxious that they should be sold. I agree with them that the management of these lands should remain entirely in the hands of the Dominion Government; but I do not agree with them that any large portion of them should be sold immediately. About a year ago one section of school lands in each township was advertised for sale; but the two sections of the Winnipeg School Board, as well as the hon. member for Provencher, asked the Government to postpone the sale for two reasons: Because to sell them would be to greatly injure the settlers upon them, and because of the more important reason that the lands should not be sold until they increased in value. These lands have been set aside for the endowment of the educational institutions of our country, and they should only be sold as they become valuable; and I think the Government would be acting unwisely to dispose of any large quantity of them at the present time. It might be well to dispose of one section in each township, but certainly not more. Some years ago, on the security of these school lands, the sum of $10,000 a year was advanced for three years, I think, by the Dominion Government to the Local Government; and I think it would be a wiser move for the Dominion Government to increase that sum to $25,000 or $30,000 than to dispose of them at the present time. I agree with the remarks of the hon. member for Lisgar with reference to the squatters on the school lands of five or six years ago. At that time it was impossible for them to get to the outlying districts of the country; we had the grasshoppers during two or three years, and we had much rainy weather, and the people could not get West. Besides, many of them wished to settle in the populated portions of the Province, where they would have a few neighbors, and where their children would have the benefit of schools. So they settled on these lands and made large improvements, and I regret very much that the Government has not made provision for these people, numbering some sixty or seventy. It would be a great hardship and injustice to them to sell these lands without giving them the benefit of the improvements they have made. I had hoped that the Government would have been able to pass a Bill to provide for these sixty or seventy people, whose names have been furnished to the Department, as well as affidavits as to their actual settlement and the improvements they have made. With regard to subsection five, of section twenty, which gives the Government power to withdraw school lands that may be valuable for town sites, I can express no opinion. As a representative from Manitoba, I would be glad if the Government could see their way to allowing the proceeds from all school lands to be devoted to the purpose for which they are intended, and not into the general revenues of the Dominion. Many of our school lands are unfit for settlement, and will be almost valueless unless for grazing purposes, and will not yield a large price; but when there is a section that is valuable, owing to its proximity to a town site, I think that the school fund of the country should receive, at all events, a fair share of the proceeds of the sale of that section. The people of Manitoba, I am certain, will accept this Bill with pleasure; and I trust that the Government will not delay bringing it into force, so that the people of the country may become well acquainted with all the information it contains, and know exactly what they should do when they take up land. I received a letter the other day from a gentleman who settled in the Boyne River district, and who, had he been acquainted with the Land Act, need not have placed himself in the difficult position he did. There are many others in the same difficulty, and they get out of it by blaming the Department for its mismanagement of land matters in the North-West. The more information that can be given the better for all concerned. The gentlemen in the Interior Department have been most indefatigable in years past; their labors have been onerous, and they have endeavored to give the people all the information possible, and yet they are a long way behind the times. The method of issuing patents is a slow process, and causes a great deal of hardship. I trust, when this Act comes into force, with the determination that the Government seem to have to induce immigration to come into our country and make it what it will be in a few years, the backbone of the Dominion, that our anticipations will be more than realised.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have every cause to be more than gratified at the reception which the Bill has received, and at the various amendments which have been proposed. I shall not detain the House by discussing any of the remarks, weighty as they have been, made by the several hon. gentlemen who have spoken, especially those who have spoken from actual experience in the North-West, because any such remarks would be more appropriate in Committee of the Whole. The criticisms which have been offered are directed to different clauses of the Bill; I do not think there is any manner of objection to the principle of the Bill. I propose, when we go into Committee, we shall take the Bill up clause by clause, and if there is any suggestion in reference to any clause which may require further consideration, I will ask the House to allow the clause to stand over. We shall thus pass all the clauses we can to-night without objection, and leave over those important clauses which may require further consideration. I move that this House resolve itself into Committee on the Bill.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 2,

Mr. ROYAL. Do I understand the hon. Minister to say that the stake claims classified by the Order in Council of February, 1881, will be referred to this Land Board?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am not prepared to say that just now. This is merely appointing by Statute the Commission instituted by Order in Council. We will discuss their power later.

Mr. ROYAL. There were two Commissions appointed to investigate and report upon those stake claims. Those stake claims were lots staked out by the settlers of the Red River settlement before the transfer of the country to the Dominion Government. As there was some diversity of understanding with reference to the meaning of the word "occupation" in the Manitoba Act, numerous difficulties arose, and they are to be referred to the Commission. Two Commissions were appointed, one of which was the late Chief Justice of the Province, and the second was composed of two Judges. I understand that the two Judges did not make any report. However those peoples claims have been pending for the last thirteen years, and it is a matter of great importance to some of them that they should be settled, and the object of my question is to ask the Government to dispose of these claims as early as possible.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is very desirable they should be settled. There was a report, but not, in the opinion of the Government, a full report, by the gentlemen who were appointed a Commission. By a subsequent Order in Council, I find that the Land Board are placed in the same position as the Judges to settle the stake claims.

On section 5,

Mr. CHARLTON. It strikes me it would be an advantage to establish the bounds of the Provinces in the North-West, and make the surveys correspond with those provincial bounds, have the meridian line and the base line for each Province, and not have a general system for the whole North-West. It is a vast country, and one system for the whole country is carrying it on too large a scale. In all the American States the bounds of the territories are first defined, then the survey is made with reference to those bounds, the meridian line to run as near as possible through the centre of the territory from north to south and the townships being ranged on those lines. I think we might adopt that system in our own North-West. It would be an easy matter to define the bounds of the territory and then lay off our base lines, to the meridians with reference to the territory itself.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think we have the advantage over the United States in that regard. Our system is much more simple and perfect. Every man knows from Red River westward what the description means, and it is not necessary to ascertain whether he is in Alberta, Assiniboia, or Saskatchewan. He knows exactly where his township, range, or lot is. In the United States they have a happy-go-lucky sort of plan. They set off the territory in the Indian great West, and when there was an influx of people to any given place they laid that out as a territory. We have the advantage of having one great country before us to do as we like, and we have one vast system of survey uniform over the whole of it. I do not think the ingenuity of man could invent a more perfect system than the present one by which, from the Red River all the way to the boundary of British Columbia, we have a system that is so plain that a child can understand it.

Mr. TROW. I think the system is admirable and could not well be improved.

On section 14,

Mr. CHARLTON. How are those posts marked to designate ranges, townships and sections?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. At first, they were posts of wood. We find that these disappeared, that people going across the plains have used them as fuel. The Government is planting iron posts wherever they can. The sub-division posts are of wood, and where the land is so rocky that they cannot sink an iron post, there is a cairn of stones.

Mr. CHARLTON. Can a man, by going to a section corner, ascertain what range, or section, or division he is in? In the American system you go on a section corner and you can tell exactly where you are, and this advantage comes from their meridian system. If you cannot tell what meridian you are in by the section corner, you cannot tell where you are. Here you have got to have only one meridian line in this vast country, and consequently you cannot have a system of marking by corners, and you cannot tell in what position you are.

Mr. WATSON. The meridians are about 125 miles apart, and a person would easily know what meridian he is in.

Mr. TROW. I would suggest to the right hon. Premier the propriety of establishing more permanent monuments in the survey. Now, settlers going to that country are put to a great deal of difficulty and expense in ascertaining their lots in consequence of fires having destroyed the timber posts, and they have to re-survey at a large expense.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. My hon. friend is quite right. We find great difficulty in consequence of the destruction of wooden landmarks, and the Surveyor-General's Department is carrying out the principle of planting iron posts in all the townships.

Mr. WATSON. Surveyors are not sufficiently careful to place the mounds in the right position, and there is great difficulty in finding corner stakes.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Some surveyors are very accurate, while others are inaccurate. The Surveyor-General's Department is, however, endeavoring to cure that evil by giving contracts only to such surveyors as efficiently perform their duty; and every year shows what surveyors do their work efficiently, and they have the preference next year.

Mr. CASEY. The Government should consider whether the system of letting this work by contract is a proper one. It tends to cause surveyors to scant their work, especially that of reporting on sections. I have often heard of surveyors making up reports on three or four sections, at the close of a day, from memory. The consequence is, that the field notes are very much distrusted by people dealing in land. By engaging good men and exercising proper supervision the Government would be able to get the work much better done; and accuracy is of the utmost importance in land surveying.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (Selkirk). The clause is all right as it is. If the work were let out by day it would involve a much higher expenditure, perhaps double the cost, and the Government would be imposed upon in all directions.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The work as a whole is fairly done, and if it were let out by day work the value of the land, say $1 per acre, would be absorbed.

On section 16,

Mr. CHARLTON suggested that the sub-division should be into quarter-sections, and he handed to the hon. Minister a diagram showing his proposal.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD thanked the hon. gentleman for the diagram, which he said he would submit to experts in the Department, and would, if necessary, ask the Committee at a subsequent stage to reconsider the clause.

On section 19,

Mr. CHARLTON. I hope that the hon. Minister will bear in mind the devotion of some of the school land sales to the purpose of establishing nurseries of trees.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is a most valuable suggestion quoad the North-West Territories, but not quoad the Province of Manitoba, which has its rights in these school lands settled. The Government is merely the trustee for these lands, and cannot divest them in any way whatever from the purposes of school endowment. With respect to the North-West, however, as yet, we can do as we please, but I should be very loth to set a precedent for altering the endowment solemnly set aside in the North-West for educational purposes, for any other purpose however benevolent and beneficent, because if the Parliament of to-day can establish nurseries, they can take away these lands to build railroads, and say that these are of more importance to the North-West than education. I think that we must cling rigidly to the educational endowment.

Mr. TROW. Could not a portion of the fund be used for the erection of schools?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is no difficulty about that; education means university as well as common school education. The language of the clause on this point is as general as it can well be.

Mr. TROW. It is my impression that a year or eighteen months ago the school lands in the older portions of Manitoba could have been sold at better prices than now. The Government should take advantage of circumstances to create a fund, and the interest growing would increase this fund much more than the lands would increase in value.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The hon. gentleman is quite right. Under this clause, it is quite within the power of the Dominion Government, as the guardian and trustee of this endowment, to put these lands in the market. If the hon. gentleman will follow the clause, he will see that this is the case. Some hon. gentleman who spoke while the Speaker was in the Chair, supposed that these lands were going to be locked up; on the contrary, the Government is anxious to put them in the market as speedily as possible, the only limitation being the danger of their being sacrificed. I do not think the Government ought, from any idea of keeping them until ten years hence, when they would be more valuable than now, to keep back these lands from sale. The moment we find settlement going into any part of that country to any considerable extent, and that a fair price can be got, I think these lands ought to be sold and the proceeds funded; because the country ought not to be kept back owing to the prospective and possible advantages to posterity from getting exorbitant prices by-and-bye. The Government were so impressed with this idea, that there ought to be a commencement in the sales of school lands—to which my hon. friend from Provencher alluded—that they made a tentative offer of them a year ago; but objection was taken by the local authorities, that it was the wrong time, and the protest was so strong, that as they were principally interested the Government dropped the sale. I think, that if the sales had gone on we would have obtained higher prices than now, as the boom was then almost at fever heat. The Government are doing this: in the first place, they have made advances out of the Dominion Treasury to the Province of Manitoba to assist in education, and help them in their schools; and such advances are charged against future sales of these lands. We are now in communication with the Government of Manitoba, and with our own Land Board and officers as well, as to when, where and to what extent these school lands should be put into the market, and under what terms; and I hope and believe that there will be, in the course of the present spring or summer, a considerable portion of these school lands put on the market.

Mr. WATSON. Were those lands withdrawn owing to the objections of the Local Government, or because a part of the lands which were advertised for sale were claimed by squatters who had made on them improvements?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Both. We were crowded with protests and deputations from the squatters, who protested owing to the hardship of their cases. Well, we could not judge of that at the time; and there were also statements made by the Government of Manitoba, who represented that it was an inopportune time to sell. For these reasons, for fear we should make a mistake, we withdrew the lands.

Mr. WATSON. Have the Government come to any decision as to how they will settle with the parties who had made improvements on those lands?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government have come to this conclusion: whatever rights any of the settlers on these lands have under the law, they shall continue to have.

Mr. WATSON. That is satisfactory to me.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It will be advisable, when selling, to put only a portion of each section on the market at the time, as, for instance, half of the section.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is a good idea.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Thus the remainder will be increased in value by the cultivation of the portion sold; in some cases one-quarter and in others one-half of the section could be sold, and the remainder would be enhanced in value in all probability, before it was disposed of.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hon. gentlemen laughed when I said the occupants of these lands would get whatever rights they have under the law. They have considerable rights under the law as it now exists, but we are now taking away that right. The hon. gentleman will see this if he will read the second sub-section of the twenty-second clause of the existing Act.

Mr. WATSON. I do not think the hon. gentleman will have much trouble with the claims of those who settled previous to the survey, as there are but very few of them.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There are many of them. There are many cases of men who have deliberately settled on these lands knowing that they were school lands, trusting to the liberality of the Government for being recouped.

Mr. WATSON. How do you propose to deal with such cases?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. According to the law, of course.

Mr. CHARLTON. I hope the hon. gentleman will accept of the suggestion I made with regard to nurseries, as these will be practically schools of the most important and beneficial kind, and they are something which will be beyond the reach of private enterprise for generations to come.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think that growing trees any more than growing wheat can come under the head of an endowment for school purposes.

Mr. ORTON. Mr. B. W. Beadle stated before the Agricultural Committee that he was making a series of experiments with Russian fruit trees, with the view of obtaining varieties which could be cultivated successfully in the North-West. Judging by his opinion, I should think that this matter was not as far beyond the reach of private enterprise as the hon. gentlemen suppose.

Mr. CASEY. I think provision should be made in some way to encourage tree planting, but I think, instead of taking the money out of the receipts for school lands, it would be more proper to clothe one part of the country by the proceeds of the sales of timber limits in the other. With regard to squatters, I think that those who went out into unsurveyed territory, and who not intentionally or speculatively settled and made improvements upon lands which afterwards turned out to be school lands, should be recouped for their improvements.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have no doubt that every case will be dealt with on its merits. But it would be unsafe to deal with these cases in a general Bill like this.

Mr. SCOTT. As these school lands are put up at upset prices, it might be well to allow these old squatters, who are only some sixty or sixty-five in number, to purchase these lands at the upset price.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. In a general Bill like this, which is in fact a scheme or plan, we cannot take up exceptional cases. They must be brought before Parliament or the Government, and the Government, at the bidding of Parliament, can deal with them. And I take it there will be no difficulty about those cases. If the Government sees that a man has really made improvements, they can arrange it that the man who is in possession can, upon paying a reasonable price, get the title—they can arrange it in one way or the other. But it would not do to mar the symmetry of the Bill by making a special provision for such cases.

Mr. WATSON. There are many parties trying to claim those lands who are not, I think, entitled to any consideration. They go on improving those lands, calculating that they will be able to purchase them at the upset price. Some of these lands are valuable, and eighteen months ago, when they were advertised for sale many of these parties who had broken a few acres were indignant at the Government selling them at public auction. I do not think, because a man has a good deal of cheek or thinks he can lobby his claims here in Ottawa, that he has a right to any consideration, because he took up land which he knows he cannot get under the law. In fact there are some of these cases in which, instead of receiving any consideration, they should be compelled to pay rent, because they have gone on to the best lands, which are very easy of cultivation.

Mr. SPROULE. I think it would be well to have an established rule in regard to these cases, and I believe also that it would be just to recoup those who have settled on these lands innocently. On the other hand, there has been a system of extensive speculation on these lands, and these speculators are the men who try to get the Government to sell at a low figure. This shows the necessity of a stringent law. I know that a Mr. Walker, who came down here to try to impress on the Government the necessity of selling these lands at $2.50 an acre, was at the same time speculating in the rights of parties to squat on those lands, for $25 or almost any consideration he could get. When he went back he said the lands would be sold for $2.50, and he would get $8 or $10 more from these parties. I have reason to know that many of these men engaged in these speculations on the strength of their check, as has been stated by the last speaker.

On section 20,

Mr. CASEY. The question arises under this clause, why should we tax ourselves with the management of these lands at all? Why should not the Provincial Government, which has charge of education, take the trouble of managing and disposing of these lands? They might naturally be supposed to be best qualified to manage them, and to know when they could be disposed of to the best advantage, and when funds are required for the purpose of education.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. All I can say is that every member from Manitoba has protested against the possibility of the Dominion Government giving up these lands.

Mr. WATSON. I think that at the present time these lands are safer in the care of the Dominion Government.

Mr. SCOTT. Why not provide that one-half of the proceeds of these lands, after deducting all expenses of sale and management, should be appropriated to the educational endowment fund, and that the balance should go into the Dominion Treasury.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would ask the Committee to allow sub-section 5 to stand over.

Mr. CHARLTON. I do not understand how the hon. First Minister can reconcile the views he expressed a while ago with regard to the sacredness of keeping these school lands for school purposes, with the provision in the Bill that any that are very valuable may be taken away. If the grant is so sacred, I think he had better let the school fund have what it amounts to. As an hon. member has said, a great many of these lands may be worthless, and if any are valuable, they will only compensate the school fund for those that are worthless.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. My memory is very short, and I cannot remember what we did in the last Parliament; but this clause was introduced in the last Parliament, and, if I am not very much mistaken, my hon. friend voted for it.

Mr. CHARLTON. I do not think so; but I must protest against the reservation.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. When that clause was put in, it was anticipated that the Pacific Railway would be built by the Government, and the Government had to choose the points where towns should be built along the line, and there was no reason why an exceptional advantage should be given to the school lands. This provision merely freed the hands of the Government to place a town at the most eligible place for the benefit of the Dominion. However, I shall not press the fifth sub-section to-night.

Mr. CASEY. Sub-section four limits the investment of school funds to Dominion securities. These securities all bear a low rate of interest, and I think it would be advisable to allow the school funds to be invested in first-class municipal debentures, or similar securities, that would yield a higher rate of interest.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think that would be giving too much power to any Government. Continual pressure would be brought on the Government of the day by corporations anxious to get the money, and the fund might disappear.

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. WATSON. I think it would be a very good idea to allow this money to be used for the purpose of redeeming school debentures, for aiding by loans in the building of schools, and so forth. I suppose the Government interest is only about 4 per cent., whereas some of our towns in the West are paying as high as 8 per cent. on school debentures.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That question had better be left over until next Session.

On section 24,

Mr. CHARLTON. We were congratulating ourselves on the fact that in many respects our land laws are superior to those of the United States. I would like to see one change introduced, which will remove one of the radical defects of the land policy of the Government. I would like to see a provision introduced that would require settlement as a condition of sale. With that provision we would have a land law, in that respect at least, vastly superior to that of the United States. One of the great evils of the disposal of public lands of the United States, has been sales to non-residents or speculators. This evil has retarded the settlement of the various sections of public lands in that country. I would suggest that this clause be amended by substituting "Act of Parliament," for "Governor in Council," after the word "by," in the fifth line, and by making the balance of the clause read as follows:—

Provided that lands within railway belts, when alternate sections of public lands have been granted in aid of railway construction, shall be sold at $2.50 per acre, and that land outside of railway belts shall be sold at $1.35 per acre, that settlement within a period of one year shall be condition of sale, that amount sold shall be limited to the quantity that may be occupied by the settler, that payment shall be made in cash, that at the time of purchase a certificate of sale shall issue to the purchaser from the local land agent, and that the settler has erected a house upon his land and occupies the same and has brought one-quarter of his land under cultivation, the patent shall issue. Provided further, that when deemed expedient by the Governor in Council, after three months' notice shall have been given in the Canada Gazette, and in all newspapers published in the Province or Territory in which such land is situated, purchases may be restricted to the even-numbered sections in such township, or such unoccupied lands as the Minister of the Interior shall deem expedient, may, after notice as aforesaid, be withdrawn from ordinary sale and sold at auction to the highest bidder, an upset price being fixed for the same upon terms of one-third down and the balance of purchase money in thirty days; with provisions as to certificate of sale, quantity sold to each purchaser, settlement, cultivation, and issue of patent as hereinbefore provided.

If this feature were substituted we would have the authority of Parliament required instead of the ordinary Order in Council, which would be a beneficial change. By having the prices uniform with those of the United States a larger immigration would be induced; by making the settlement a condition of sale we would have a land law immeasurably superior to that of the United States; by limiting the quantity sold to that which may be occupied by the settler we would effect another great improvement and do away with the great abuse that exists in the United States; by introducing the system of cash sales we would avoid the great confusion and difficulty which this system of credit sales will inevitably create, and we would simplify our land transactions immeasurably, besides relieving ourselves of the necessity of keeping a large staff of clerks. The settler who bought lands would not obtain a patent until he complied with the conditions of settlement; and if it was found necessary to restrict the sale of lands to the even-numbered sections of townships, this could be done, under this clause, on ample notice being given in the Canada Gazette and the newspapers of the Province or Territory, as it would not be right to make a radical change on a short notice. If lands were worth much more than $2.50 or $1.25 per acre, this clause makes provision for withdrawing them for ordinary sale and putting them up for auction to the highest bidder, at an upset price, on the conditions of settlement already laid down. This is a matter we have often had under discussion in this House. One of the radical defects of the Government land policy is the sale of lands upon credit and in larger quantities than may be occupied by the settlers. If the conditions of settlement were enforced, the good results to the North-West would become immediately apparent. I beg to submit this clause as merely embodying my idea as to the change we should make in this matter.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am sure my hon. friend's scheme is a pious imagination that can never be carried out practically. I differ from him toto cælo in the proposition that the lands should be sold for cash. I want the man of small means, with good health and energy, and enough money to pay one or two instalments, to be able to purchase the lands and pay the balance out of what he makes out of the soil. The hon. gentleman's proposition would simply be to offer the lands at diminished prices to people who have the cash to buy them, and keep out the deserving man of small means. I have a practical objection to providing that the lands be sold with conditions of settlement. We have plenty of land offered on conditions of settlement. The whole homestead system is based on that, and it will take fifty, perhaps one hundred years to settle this country, nearly as large as all Europe, if we only offered the even-numbered sections. The even-numbered sections are open to those coming in to settle, and you must remember that Parliament has solemnly decided that the expenditure caused by the Canadian Pacific Railway shall be defrayed out of the sale of the lands. The railway lands and odd-numbered sections will be put into the market. As a general rule, when you get further away from Winnipeg, out of the immediate influence of speculators—away out on the plains—the odd-numbered sections will be bought by those who have settled under the homestead law, or the even-numbered sections. We will thus get a large sum of money to defray the expenditure that is going on in the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Parliament has appropriated 100,000,000 acres for that purpose, and we are obliged to get the best price we can for those lands. I do not doubt there will be any difficulty, if the principle of giving only the even-numbered sections to actual settlers is adhered to, as to the disposal and cultivation of the odd-numbered sections.

Mr. CASEY. I have the pleasure of agreeing for once with the right hon. gentleman in regard to the cash price and also as to the fixed price. It would not be wise to introduce fixed prices. As to selling for the purpose of settlement I disagree with him. I think that selling land under the condition of cultivation would by no means interfere with our getting good prices for those lands, and certainly would not stop their sale. The Canadian Pacific Railway have shown themselves to be as good business men as can be found in dealing with lands, and they sell only on condition of actual cultivation, without necessitating actual residence, and they have been able to sell their lands all along the constructed portion of the lines lying right amongst the Government free grants. The existence of free grant lands alongside has not prevented the sale of their lands, or has only delayed it for a short time. As a matter of fact all the choice free grant lands appear to be taken up, all that lie near the railway, and the settlers who come in afterwards cannot buy railway lands. Of course speculators buy them, but they are compelled, if they intend to keep the lands, to cultivate a certain portion of them each year, so that something is produced and a revenue earned for the Government. I think what the country would make in the increased population of some districts if these terms were enforced, would more than recoup what they might otherwise lose. Now, as long as you sell this land without conditions it will be principally bought up by speculators. The hon. Minister seems to have an idea that away from Winnipeg on the plains there are no speculators. I think he must have had some little experience that would prove the contrary to him. We all remember, for instance, the great land sales at Birtle last winter when hundreds of thousands of acres were taken up; all the good sections around Birtle were taken up by speculators, who hold them now for a rise. The consequence is that nothing is now open for settlement but the even-numbered sections. Speculators, of course, will not sell without profit, unless they are hard up. That rule will be found to apply throughout the country, that wherever a desirable section of the country is opened up for settlement, the odd-numbered sections, if sold without terms of cultivation, will be held exclusively by speculators, and half the country will be locked up from settlement for years to come. You will find it will be a long time before this land that is locked up in the Birtle district will be brought into settlement. As the object of Government, in disposing of these lands, should be to get settlers into the country and have the country cultivated, I think it is their duty to impose terms upon all lands for sale. I shall not now make a formal motion—that will be made later on—but I would propose the insertion of a clause something like this:

“And on the same conditions in regard to settlement as are required in the case of homesteads.”

Mr. TROW. I regret that this country is overrun with speculators, but it will soon come under municipal government, and annual taxation will cure the evil.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think the Government stands in the position of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. The hon. gentleman quotes their example about enforcing the terms of actual settlement. A corporation, the hon. gentleman knows, can do what it likes; it has no body to be kicked, and no soul to be saved, and can do what it pleases. But the Government cannot do so. Now I will give the hon. gentleman an example. There are sixty-one men who are now insisting upon a clause being put in this Act for their protection. When a person has bought land and paid for it, if he has not carried out the conditions of actual settlement, it will require, in the first place, a great deal of trouble and expense, to ascertain whether he has done so. Then you will have a large body of petitioners coming down here and saying to Parliament: “It is too bad! we have paid our money, we have not quite fulfilled the conditions, we have only cleared five acres instead of twenty-five; but you are not going to take the pound of flesh from us?” Are we to restore them the money? Are we to turn them off? What are we to do? Parliament will yield, and the men will get their lands, whether they improve them or not.

Mr. CASEY. Whether this argument has any force or not, it will apply only to the terms of homesteading. If it is possible to ascertain whether a homesteader has fulfilled the terms required, it is possible to ascertain whether a man has bought land on those terms. The hon. Minister may naturally suppose the case of a man who has fulfilled only part of the terms. Here again I am compelled to quote the example of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, who have foreseen and provided for that case. Where a man has made part of the settlement dues, but not all, he is allowed to retain a number of acres proportionate to the number he has improved. I do not see why the Government should not do the same.

Mr. CHARLTON. I see the second sub-section reserves land containing stone quarries, or water powers. In case lands of that kind were sold, and valuable stone quarries, or water powers or mines, were afterwards discovered on it, how would that affect the rights of the holder?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is a question I am not exactly prepared to answer, but my impression is that if the land is open as agricultural land, and a party bona fide goes and makes his entry for agricultural land, and it is put into the market as agricultural land by the Crown, I think the party gets the advantage of the subsequent discovery. But if, when he makes his entry, he has secret knowledge that there is a mine, for instance, and fraudulently intends to work it for mineral purposes, according to the ordinary principles of law and equity his title can be impugned.

Mr. WATSON. It is the duty of the Government to ascertain if anything of this description is on the property before they put it into the market. It would hardly be right, after a man had made improvements, and after he had found a mine more valuable than the farm, to deprive him of the advantage. I think if land is put into the market for homestead or for sale, that the purchaser should be entitled to all it contains after he has fulfilled the conditions of the law.

On section 25,

Mr. CHARLTON. There is a chance here of some advantage being taken of the Government. It might occur in cases of town sites that the Government and the Pacific Railway owned adjoining sections, and that the valuable portion was in the Government section. Under this arrangement, embodied in the clause, the land would be sold on joint account, and although the railway company's portion was very much inferior they would receive one-half of the total sales.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That works both ways.

Mr. CHARLTON. I do not think the Canadian Pacific Railway will allow it to work the other way.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am afraid they have done so; I know where I think we have the best of the bargain.

Mr. CASEY. I think there is great force in the objection taken by the hon. member for North Norfolk. The Canadian Pacific Railway are not likely to allow such an arrangement to work against them, and the Government cannot hope to be as fully informed of the relative value of the sections as the railway company. In regard to the sales at Regina, I called the hon. Minister's attention to the way in which those lots had been sold, and that it really amounted to a lottery. I heard repeatedly expressions of dissatisfaction respecting that transaction. I know it was not done directly by the Government or by the railway company, but by their agent; but the Government should take care that they are not mixed up in such transactions. They should not go into partnership with respect to the sale of town lots any more than for the sale of farming lands. The sections should be amended by providing that town lots should be sold only by auction at an upset price.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If we did not make such an arrangement, we would have no towns along the line. The Canadian Pacific Railway would place the towns where they like. They have every alternate section and they can have the towns on their own land. The Government in such a case could only have the suburbs of a town. We know perfectly well that the railway company would select sites where they would be most likely to sell the land to the greatest advantage. The bargain was altogether in our favor; otherwise the railway company would have from the foot of the Rockies to Red River, every town, village and station on their own land. We had at Regina something to offer. We wanted some point easily accessible for the Mounted Police and for the residence of the Lieutenant-Governor. We said to the company: We will select this place if you will agree to make it a town and the starting point of a railway branch. They agreed, and they are to run a branch due north from Regina and make it a station.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

We agreed that the Lieutenant-Governor shall live there, and by combining the two interests a very respectable town will grow up there; I hope a large and very considerable one, the larger the better for the Treasury. Then there are Medicine Hat and Moose Jaw Creek, points indicated by nature for town sites. It will be a good thing for us to make this agreement, and the company being much more interested, they will desire to obtain the highest speculative price, while the Dominion is, of course, satisfied with a moderate price. This, therefore, is not an unprofitable arrangement between the Government and the company.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (Selkirk). I quite agree with the hon. First Minister that we should pass the present clause. If the Government were not to make such an agreement with the Canadian Pacific Railway, the latter would place town sites on their own lots and the Government would be left out. If the plan suggested in the Bill is carried out, we can safely rely on the railway company making all the money possible, and we shall get one-half of it.

Mr. CASEY. There may, however, be cases in which a Government section would happen to be at the crossing of a river, and where they would be masters of the situation, and in such cases we should not enter into any arrangement with the railway company.

On section 27,

Mr. CHARLTON. I would suggest that the fourth subsection be amended by adding words to the effect that in all cases where land has not been withheld from entry, and where settlers have been permitted to make entry, such entry shall not be disputed because it is afterwards discovered that it contains minerals, and is valuable for other than agricultural purposes.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The intention is to get population to settle on the agricultural lands, and to get people there, and this is the reason why we give away a portion of our estate; but if there is any special value in the property, the Dominion, the Public Treasury should get the advantage of it, and not the speculator.

Mr. CHARLTON. My idea is that a settler may be allowed to make an entry; there may be on the land some little stream, and somebody may claim it to be a water power, which the settler might not consider, when the entry was made, to be of any value, though his title might be imperilled. I hold that where a homestead settler is permitted to make an entry and go upon the land, he ought to hold it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Certainly; this does not interfere with that at all. The Act gives certain in quoad rights to people settling on unsurveyed land; on agricultural lands the settler has the first right to get the homestead; but are you to say, that a lot of speculators are to be allowed to take up every mine and water power all through the country, to which, when the land is surveyed, they may make claim. That would not do.

Mr. CASEY. Has the hon. gentleman fully considered the question raised as to the abolition of the preemption of 160 acres.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have listened with a great deal of attention to the arguments of the hon. gentlemen who favor the doing away with the preemption rights altogether, and I must say, my own opinion goes very much with those hon. gentlemen, that preemption rights should be done away with; but you must remember that we have taken certain steps, Canada has advertised largely in Europe holding out certain advantages, and the people of Scandinavia, Ireland, Scotland, Germany, &c., have been told that they can have the right to 160 acres, and 160 acres of preemption, which could not therefore be at once withdrawn. There must not be the most distant shadow of a breach of faith with the immigrants of 1883, or with the intending immigrants of 1884. It is to be supposed that it will take at least two years before they make up their minds finally, to make the plunge and pull up stakes in the Old Country to come here; for that reason, I think that we must keep in this clause. We have put, in a subsequent part of the Bill, power on giving six months' notice to do away with the right of preemption, and I am quite open, when we come to that clause, to consider whether we shall make it more stringent and say that preemption shall end at a given date; but this must be a date very considerably distant from the present; that is a matter to be considered hereafter.

Mr. SPROULE. When a party makes a homestead entry, has he the right to enter for preemption?

Mr. WATSON. The settler is not supposed to have that right on unsurveyed lands.

Mr. SPROULE. I understood they had; but some parties were in doubt about it.

Mr. WATSON. A great deal of dissatisfaction in the past has been experienced with regard to the right to preemption. In the vicinity of Brandon, a number of persons had to form a vigilance committee to try and protect their preemptions, but those who wanted to occupy these lands were the stronger, and the former had to give up the idea of holding 320 acres. If they have the right to hold half a section, this ought to be plainly stated; and if they have not the right, that ought to be plainly stated, in order to leave no ground for dispute.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This clause certainly gives only the right to homestead. I will consider the question of preemptions before concurrence.

On section 30,

Mr. SUTHERLAND (Selkirk). Will the hon. gentleman make any provision with regard to the appeal from the Land Board?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As was argued this afternoon, there should be a finality somewhere, and I think the chances are greater that a Board composed of men with special qualifications for an understanding of these matters, with, of course, a final appeal to the responsible Minister, will know much more about the justice of the case, and the weight of the evidence, and all the circumstances than any other court.

Mr. CASEY. It is not always the best informed tribunal that is most impartial, and though the local agent of the Land Board would be the best possible witness in a case of this kind, I think the parties should have the right to appeal to a court which is more accustomed to judicial decisions than even the hon. Minister of the Department is.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It will simply be a case of the rich man worrying the poor man out of his place. If you put in a clause of that kind, I venture to say there will be an outcry for an appeal within two years.

Mr. SPROULE. I know that parties for whom I have written on this subject, and who have made application, are well satisfied with their decisions. We know, from our experience in other matters, that to give the right of appeal would simply be to say that the man who has the most money carries it to the last court.

Mr. CHARLTON. I think that there should be a provision here that notice should be given to both parties before the case is heard. I think also that if it should appear that if a decision were arrived at by fraudulent evidence being given, that should be a ground for setting aside the decision. There certainly, I think, should be some appeal in cases of that kind.

Mr. BLAKE. I entirely agree with the observation of the hon. Minister that it would be important in all ordinary cases that the decision of the Board, or of the Minister, should not be final, but I think the Minister will find it a protection, probably, instead of the reverse, if, where there has been deliberate fraud in obtaining his decision, there should be that appeal to the courts which has always been allowed in the administration of our Crown lands in the older Provinces. There were found to be, as no doubt the hon. gentleman knows, many cases of this kind for which it was impossible that there could be any proper machinery for investigation in the Department. There are cases, and by no means rarely, in which false affidavits are put in, and false information made, by which the Crown was misled and deceived into a transaction.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I agree with the hon. gentleman, but I submit to him whether this clause excludes the rights of the courts in cases of fraud proprio motu.

Mr. BLAKE. I know it was not thought that the courts could have such a power, to set aside a patent, unless that jurisdiction were expressly conferred upon them by a statutory definition of this limited character. It is because I am very anxious that the appeal should not be had except in these special cases, that I think a special and careful provision should be made as to such cases. I think there should be no appeal unless there is a fraud committed on the Crown or the officers of the Crown.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is a clause in the Statute of 1880, under the head of Patents, which provides for what the hon. gentleman speaks of.

On section 31,

Mr. HESSON. Before this clause passes I desire to know whether it is absolutely imperative that a person who has entered for a homestead shall personally occupy it within six months. I know of some cases in which persons have made some improvements, and have become sick and been unable to remain on their homesteads. In such cases I suppose the spirit of the law would be carried out if the duties were performed by some person on behalf of the homesteader.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The great object is to get the party to go and settle on the land, and not to allow them under a pretence to get someone else to settle on it. If a man has money enough to send other persons to settle on his land, he should not get a homestead. However, if it is shown that a party has gone on the land and is unable, from any circumstance, to carry out the strict provisions of the law, there is power given to the Government to extend the time; but I do not think it would be well to enlarge the time.

Mr. WATSON. I know of several cases in which settlers became sick, and upon the certificate of a doctor the time of the sickness was counted in the three years.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am opposed to that. When a party gets leave of absence for sickness he ought to come back and put in his full time.

Mr. SPROULE. Is there any provision to apply to cases where the party has died and the other members of the family are not old enough to complete the homestead provisions. There are one or two cases of this kind in which I have tried to get something done, but have not succeeded. In Manitoba, I believe, the relations should do it, but the property would go to the general heirs.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is a question of title. The legal representatives have the same right as the homesteader when alive.

Mr. SPROULE. If he dies without a will?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The property is escheated to the Crown unless he has relatives or legal representatives.

Mr. WALLACE (York). In the case of a homesteader who dies after residing two years on his lot, are his legal heirs required to complete the term of residence.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. ORTON. Is there any provision in the case of insanity? A case occurred in my riding where a young man became insane before he fulfilled his time. This man had resided on the land within a couple of months of the time required.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will look into that.

On section 33,

Mr. SUTHERLAND suggested that the number of families be reduced to ten.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is not the desire of the Government to encourage settlement in hamlets, by which people lose half their time in going to and from their farms, but this clause is necessary to meet the habits of some of the European settlements, as for instance, the Menonites.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The clause is a dead letter.

Mr. ROYAL. I know of a case in my own county in which it was a dead letter. A petition was transmitted by me to the Department, signed by twenty or twenty-five heads of families, who wanted to form a village. By some reason their petition was never answered, and in the meantime those parties expecting an answer had not fulfilled the conditions of continuous residence and in some cases their claims were jumped. I hope if this clause is to remain more attention will be made to petitions sent in.

On section 34,

Mr. WATSON suggested that a certain amount of cultivation and improvements be executed before granting the homestead patent.

Mr. ROSS (Lisgar). The section provides that he must reside upon it and cultivate it. With regard to cultivation so much each year, I do not think that would work, because in many cases a man might, through sickness or otherwise, be unable to break any more land the second year, though living on his place.

Mr. SPROULE. It is easy to evade that clause as it stands. It is better to say that they shall break up and cultivate not less than 25 or 30 acres at the expiration of the three years.

Mr. SCOTT. It is not necessary to specify any number of acres. Any man who is a bona fide settler will break up all the land he can.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If we stick sternly to the principle of personal residence there can be no difficulty. A man who is going to live on a farm will not stand with his hands in his pockets.

Mr. CASEY. It is quite true, as the hon. member for Winnipeg says, that the bona fide settler will cultivate every acre he can. The object of this provision is to exclude everybody who is not a bona fide settler. The hon. Minister says if you stick to the personal residence clause you will ensure cultivation. That is contrary to experience. Personal residence may be put in, in the winter, when cultivation is impossible, and that is actually done in many cases. A settler who intends to be a bona fide settler in the meantime spends part of the summer at something else, and in the winter when he has nothing to do, he goes and smokes his pipe, and eats his bacon quietly on the section. I think that the number of acres to be cultivated should be something considerable. I think five acres a year for the first two years and ten acres for the last year, is too little. The object is to ensure an amount of cultivation practically useful to the settler, and I think that fifteen acres a year, making forty-five in all, might be sufficient. All the capital he requires is a plough and a span of horses, and if he has not capital enough to do that, he has no business to have a homestead.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would allow a man to go who had nothing to cultivate his land but a spade.

Mr. CASEY. If you allow a man to have a homestead who does nothing but spade cultivation you are locking up 160 acres that somebody else might be cultivating profitably. My experience of Manitoba is that the men who go there have ample means of cultivating a farm, and I think they should be compelled to do such an amount of cultivation as practically improves the value of the land.

Mr. HESSON. Some of the most valued settlers we have in Canada came here with nothing but an axe on their shoulders, and have carved out homes for themselves under greater disadvantages than those that beset settlers in the North-West.

Mr. CASEY. Any man who goes to Manitoba with a good pair of hands and a determination to work, can obtain sufficient credit to buy ten or fifteen acres of land a year.

Mr. WATSON. I do not agree with the hon. gentleman, who probably does not know what classes of men go to the North-West and take up homesteads. I have known many who have not possessed more than $40 or $50 after their arrival, and who did not possess any influence, but who did not find it necessary to own a plough and team in order to start farming, but hired a plough and exchanged work. Each quarter-section should have certain improvements which should cover ten or fifteen acres for the three years.

Mr. ROSS (Lisgar). I would leave the extent of cultivation to the settler himself. In my constituency I know settlers who have been there for many years, who have not more than twenty acres under cultivation. They do not make their money by cultivating the soil, and do not grow more wheat than they require for their own use; but they keep cattle and are better settlers than many men owning forty or fifty acres, who do not possess any stock.

Mr. CHARLTON. The clause should be made definite in some way, and certainly not be left in its present indefinite form.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The lack of definition is all in favor of the settler. The Land Board will decide whether there is a bona fide settlement by residence and cultivation.

Mr. WATSON. I would urge upon the Government, that twenty acres at least should be placed under cultivation.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That might be an argument for cutting the 160 acres down to forty or sixty. Different settlers have different habits, and if they occupy their time during the three years in putting up a house, and in cultivating their land in their own way, they will be adjudged bona fide settlers.

Mr. SPROULE. In travelling through Southern Manitoba, I have seen thousands of acres deeded without having a settler living on them, yet they were broken up and filled the conditions of settlement. Continuous settlement means settlement during six months of the year, and I know many cases in which the people live on their land in the winter time, and in spring go in search of work. They subsequently obtain the deeds and sell out.

Mr. SCOTT. Such instances are very rare. The reverse is the case. Settlers remain on their homesteads during the summer, and obtain work during the winter to furnish them with means to increase their stock of agricultural implements.

Mr. SPROULE. The hon. gentleman cannot have visited the neighborhood of Nelsonville and Moose Jaw Creek, where I found hundreds of such farms.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I agree with the hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) that there is too much of that sort of thing done. I doubt very much the propriety of defining the number of acres to be cultivated. If we can leave the clause so as to operate in the interest of the settlers, we are safe. After all, the clause had better stand as it is.

On section 37,

Mr. CHARLTON. I think some amendment should be made with reference to persons who may have taken up homesteads and who, being unacquainted with the country, afterwards find that the land is perfectly worthless. If the facts in such cases were attested by affidavits or other proof, I think it would be well that he should be allowed to make another entry.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If we are to open the door to such cases we will find it necessary to send up an inspector to ascertain the facts in every case which occur. The affidavit system is simply corrupting the whole population. In the anxiety to obtain their patents many affidavits are being made like the old Custom House affidavits. My hon. friend will recollect that when a smuggler went into the business in the old days, he used to get down on his knees and swear on the Bible that he would never tell the truth to a Custom House officer, and he held that that oath justified him in swearing to anything ever afterwards. So about these affidavits. In order to decide whether a party had primarily settled on land fit for settlement we would have to send up an agent in every case, and the door would be open to all kinds of difficulties. Cases of that kind are so few, and land of every grade is so abundant, that if a man is fool enough to settle on bad land he should pay the penalty of his neglect.

Mr. CHARLTON. Still there is a great deal of bad land in the North-West; and when cases of hardship arising from ignorance of the country occur, I think the Government should give the man a chance of rectifying what may be, perhaps, the supreme mistake of his life.

Mr. O'BRIEN. I think perhaps the experience of the free grant districts of Ontario may be of some value in settling this question. I know nothing about lands in the North-West, but I know this question has occupied a great deal of discussion in the free-grant districts of Ontario, and I think the general conviction there is that it would be to the advantage of the country if the pioneer settler were allowed to sell his improvements to that class of people who have a little capital, and who would prefer paying a little more money, rather than undergo the first roughing.

Mr. TROW. I think the transfer of lands for a second entry should be made as easy as possible. The first settlers, in many cases, are young men who would be glad to sell out and go further West; and there are many others, from Europe and elsewhere, who would be glad to pay the price of their improved farms.

Mr. WATSON. I heartily agree with both of the last speakers. There are a great many of these pioneer settlers in the North-West who are prepared to go to the front and break up the land for persons who are willing to pay a consideration for improved farms. I hope the Government will consider this matter and make the transfer as easy as possible from the first settler to the man who will take up the conditions where he left them and fulfil them. It makes very little difference what men we have on the land, so long as the country is settled. I think it would be right, also, to make a provision to permit a man to abandon a quarter-section that turns out to be unfit for cultivation, and take up another. In my own county, a great many people had to abandon their homesteads around Lake Manitoba, because they were drowned out by the rise of the water; I think most of them were allowed to take up second homesteads. Lands that a few years ago were fields of wheat are now two feet under water. It would not have been right to compel those people to remain there and try to make a living by catching jack-fish if they cannot grow wheat. We want to keep all the people we have in that country, and I hope the Government will see their way to make the transfer of homesteads as easy as possible, and to allow a person to abandon a homestead and take up a second if he can give satisfactory reasons.

Mr. TROW. I have travelled over the tract of country the hon. member for Marquette refers to. It is on the eastern shore of Lake Manitoba. Seven years ago it was good arable land, but owing to the flooding of the outlet of the lake the water has risen three or four feet, and the country is under water.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is a case which I shall take into consideration. As to enabling a homesteader to sell out at the end of a year and take up another homestead, I think I cannot agree to that. It would be simply opening a door to a great fraud. I think the principle of the homestead is that if a man is unable to pay for the land, he can get it on condition of residence. If after the first year he sells out, this shows that he should never have got the land at all.

Mr. CHARLTON. It strikes me that the hon. First Minister loses sight of the object of homestead entry. The object is to get settlers into the country; and if by allowing second entry, he gets two settlers in place of one, I think that would be in the interest of the country. I think the provision proposed would be favored by nine-tenths of the settlers in the North-West, and I hope the hon. First Minister will still give the matter his consideration.

On section 39,

Mr. CHARLTON. I think that 8 per cent. should be substituted for 6 per cent., as it is impossible for the settler to borrow at 6 per cent.

Mr. TROW. I dissent from this. It would be impossible for the settler to pay more than 6 per cent., and the advantage can be obtained from companies in the Old Country who do not realize more than 3 or 4 per cent.

Mr. WATSON. I do not think the rate should be altered. The advances will be made by those colonization companies who look for their profit rather to the settlement of their lands than to the charge of interest.

Mr. SPROULE. With the experience we have had in Ontario it is impossible for farmers to pay more than 5 or 6 per cent. on their money, and if you impose a heavier interest than that you put a burthen on them that they will not be able to pay.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. With such a thin House as at present I would not like to make such an important alteration in the law. This Act has gone all over the world. It is now before the emigrants in England, Ireland and Scotland, and it is understood that they can borrow money at 6 per cent.

Mr. CHARLTON. The proposition is not to impose 8 per cent., but to limit the interest to 8 per cent. It was said to-night that this privilege was inoperative, for the reason that money could not be borrowed at that rate of interest. It is well known that money is worth more than 6 per cent. in Manitoba, and the security is not as good as in the older Provinces. I do not believe that under 6 per cent. many settlers will be enabled to borrow money under this clause. If there is any object in disturbing this clause if is for the purpose of enabling settlers to avail themselves to the privileges that this clause gives.

Mr. SPROULE. This plan has only been tried for a short time. The parties who are loaning money can afford to loan it to these settlers at a low rate of interest.

Mr. AUGER. I think that 6 per cent. is high enough; and if they cannot borrow at 6 per cent. they should not borrow at all. The experience in the Eastern Townships has been that all those who borrow money to settle on new lands have been obliged to go away poorer than when they first came there; while those who did not borrow at all, remained there, and are now generally wealthy men. If you bring immigrants here, you must not give a chance to speculators to put them in such a position that, after years of labor, they will be forced to go elsewhere.

Mr. ROSS (Lisgar). Why not make it 8 per cent., for the purchase of horses and cattle, as well as of farming implements and the erection of buildings? You give him money to buy seed grain, and you put a mortgage on the homestead for the pay. Cattle and horses are as necessary for a man to begin work with as seed grain.

On section 40,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I believe there is a general consensus of opinion among the Manitoba members that the right of preemption should be abolished. This clause provided that the privilege of preemption may be discontinued by Order in Council, to be published at least six months, and go into force on the expiration of six months from the first publication thereof.

Mr. BLAKE. It would be very much better, if such is the definite policy of Parliament, that preemptions should be abolished from a certain period.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is my own opinion. We might provide that after a given date, preemption shall be abolished; and it should be a date which would not affect immigrants, either in 1883 or in 1884. The date might be fixed at 1st January, 1885.

Mr. WATSON. I would not do away with preemption unless something is substituted in its place. It was on that ground that I advocated a cultivation homestead plan. There are many mechanics and others in Manitoba, who would avail themselves of such an opportunity to obtain 160 acres of land, for they would be able to save sufficient from their wages to pay for the improvements. The proposal I have made would be in the interests of the country and also of the poor settlers.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I move that the privilege of preemption in connection with homesteads shall be discontinued from and after 1st January, 1885.

Mr. CHARLTON. If the Government have determined to do away with the privilege of preemption, most of the hon. members from Manitoba think something should be substituted. I beg to call the attention of the Government to the desirability of having some provision made for homesteading based on tree culture. There is an inadequate supply of timber in the North-West, and the denudation of timber is one of the evils of the near future. The timber of the United States is swept away at the rate of 12,000,000 acres per annum, and that country realizing the great importance of the subject, ten years ago entered upon the cultivation of trees on the treeless prairies of the West. A Timber Cultivation Act was passed in 1874; it was amended in 1878, and under its operation since 1876, 12,300,000 acres have been entered under the Tree Culture Homestead Act. It will be, no doubt, interesting to the Committee if I should sketch the provisions of that Act. It provided that the head of a family can make an entry of that kind. He is required to cultivate 700 trees per acre. These have to be kept in growing condition for eight years. There is a provision to extend the time in case of grasshoppers, drought or fire; but invariably there must be 675 healthy growing trees upon the land, and then the deed is given. The desirability of adopting the policy of homestead tree culture in substitution of preemptions is a matter worthy of the consideration of the hon. First Minister, as this will be a matter of the greatest importance in the North-West. I do not suppose that such provisions can be incorporated now, but the policy is one deserving attention, and one which should be acted upon in the near future.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I quite agree with the remarks of the hon. gentleman as to the importance of developing the growth of forest trees. I do not think, however, the experiment in the United States has been a success; the authorities at Washington declare it has not been a success. Large quantities of land were conveyed under pretence of forestry, and so much land was lost to the domain without trees being planted. There must be a much more comprehensive organized system, similar to that in Germany, and in France, and in Norway; and it must be under the constraint of the Government. Now, I will say to the hon. gentleman—though it is a little out of order to talk in Committee about the Government's policy—it is the intention of the Canadian Government, and we have taken some steps already to invite the co-operative action of all the Provincial Governments, in order to have some united action, united legislation, and united governmental control, in the way of enforcing plantations, setting aside certain districts, as in Germany; and wherever a district is there set aside to be cleared of the useful timber, an appropriation of another district, of the same size, is made, which must be planted in the same year when the timber of the corresponding section is cut away. There must be some system of that kind. The idea of bribing people by offering them land for the planting of trees is found to be a failure. This is the opinion at Washington of the land grant authorities. They say that the land is gone, but the trees are not there. We are now taking action in that matter.

Mr. CHARLTON. I am satisfied to hear the statement of the hon. First Minister, and I presume there is a good deal of truth in the remark made by him, that the tree-planting Act of Congress has not been a thorough success, though I see that the entries under that Act last year exceeded two million acres.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The entries are large enough.

Mr. CHARLTON. The policy foreshadowed will likely be much more efficient than a law of that kind. I am glad to see that the Government is alive to the interests of the country, and to the danger of denuding the country of trees.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have a special report on that subject which I will produce by-and-by. The privilege of preemption shall be discontinued from and after the 1st of January, 1885.

On section 41,

Mr. CHARLTON. Is there any competition in the matter of grazing-land leases now?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hitherto we have granted applications in their order, if the Government or Department believed that the parties applying were bona fide—going to be graziers and rancheros. I believe that the parties who have taken ranches, are, on the whole, almost entirely good men—men of capital, who have put in large sums of money and have brought in large herds of cattle; in some cases, I believe, considerably to their own loss during this last year. The experiment, on the whole, has been successful, in the way that it has been a very popular way of employing capital. English capitalists and American capitalists as well, have come into Canada, and have got their grazing leases. The subject of grazing leases, the hon. gentleman will remember, was fully discussed in Committee before; and it was found, as stated then, that our system of granting leases is infinitely better than the American mode by which cattle were allowed to roam at will; and in consequence of that unrestricted permission, the grasses were so destroyed that there are large districts in the United States where the native grasses have been destroyed and therefore become valueless as grazing grounds. By granting leases, as we have done at a very moderate rental, these parties have something like a certainty. They have their leases, they bring their cattle in and protect their grasses and cattle, and grounds; and at the same time, in order to prevent these grazing leases from being an impediment to settlement—these leases all concern the Bow and Belly Rivers, from thence extend to the foot of the Rocky Mountains, far away from Red River—and preventing population going in. When population takes that direction, there is a provision in the law that every grazing lease must contain this clause: that the lease can be terminated at any time on two years' notice from the Government. Well, that is a very short notice, considering the great expense that these people must undergo in getting in there large herds of cattle and in putting up large buildings—for they must have large buildings—in order to classify their herds of cattle; and on two years' notice, the whole of the lease, even when a man has 100,000 acres from the Government, he must give up the whole of his land. Well, the consequence of that is this: it would be a very hard measure, a very hard thing indeed to give two years' notice; and if in any section and portion of a large ranch, settlers desire to establish themselves, all the Government has to say is: "You must give up that section and portion of your lease." If he says he won't, we say: "Take notice that the lease for the whole thing will expire in two years;" and at once he will give up any reasonable portion of his ranch in order to preserve the remainder until he receives a similar intimation from the Government, which must be done.

Mr. CHARLTON. What is the mode pursued in granting coal licenses? Is any competition invited?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There has not been hitherto competition invited, because so few persons have expressed a desire to go into this business. We were very fortunate, however, in getting Mr. Gethbridge, in connection with Sir A. T. Galt, to undertake these operations. Perhaps some of the hon. gentlemen may know who Mr. Gethbridge is. He is the partner of the right hon. W. H. Smith, a former member of Lord Beaconsfield's administration. They are millionaires. He is a millionaire who has taken a fancy to make investments in Canada. He has expended a very large sum of money already—I understand some £50,000 sterling—and is putting on steamers, and they have made a contract already for the delivery of a large quantity of coal at Medicine Hat to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the moment that railway is finished to that point, and they are also building barges for the purpose of bringing down coal from their mines to this point of delivery. I hope the experiment will be successful. It will be commenced on the largest and most liberal scale, and I hope it will induce others to undertake it. Whenever there is more than one applicant for any kind of section—and the sections are small—then competition will be invited.

Mr. CHARLTON. I see, from the size of this return, that it is quite possible that competition might be secured. There are something like 1,000 applications; and I find on the list no less than fifteen from my hon. friend, the member for Lincoln, on behalf of other parties, ten from the hon. member for Cornwall, and three from the hon. member for Stanstead. There is a letter here from the hon. member for Lincoln, dated the 23rd of June, which says:

"MY DEAR SIR.—Will you kindly endeavor to have the Order in Council granted for the coal license granted in the Souris district, for which I sent an application, a list of which I herewith enclose. Our people are very desirous of leaving next week to explore and take immediate action. I also applied for a timber license for W. Thomas, on the English River, and which, I was informed by Mr. Ryley, was first. Will you please urge this present at the same time. What do you think of the National Policy now? They tried very hard to defeat me."

I do not know whether this reference to the National Policy was intended to help his claim in the Department, but I certainly claim that it would be better to insist on competition in the matter of these coal lands. If members of Parliament are in the habit of making applications in this way, it is time that competition is introduced. It may be possible that this particular license was one which was granted for $5 and was afterwards sold for $2,000 per square mile, and whether the hon. member for Lincoln pocketed much of the money I do not know. I am afraid, however, that there are many irregularities under the present system: the evidence points in that direction, when we find that members of Parliament are sending applications on behalf of their friends, and referring to the success of their party, and to the fact that they have had a hard time in their contest.

Mr. BLAKE. I am sure, after the application which the hon. gentleman has read, those portions of the return will be put under another cover in future. I wish to point out, however, the inutility of the clause which the hon. gentleman inserted, at my suggestion, with reference to these returns. I asked several times for these until I was tired of asking, and until, I suppose, he was tired of giving the same answer, and in the end the return came down; but in the meantime the coal regulations were confirmed, when it was impossible to make any motion about them. I think it would be well to have these returns laid on the Table within thirty days after the motions are made.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I might say that the Department has been overlaid with work, and the returns were brought down as fast as they could be prepared. I think the poor Canadian taxpayer will have to pay the additional sum for the expenditure in getting up the return. With respect to mining lands in general, the Government have not been able to bring down the mining regulations. That subject is a very important and a very intricate one, and was confided to a very competent person, Mr. Lindsay Russell, the Deputy Minister of the Department. He, unfortunately, met with an accident a day or two before the House met, by breaking his leg, which confined him to his room. He had been working at this return and had made such progress that the work could not be confided to any person else. He is now completing them, and they will be submitted to the House in a day or two. The accident of Mr. Russell was very unfortunate, not only with regard to this return but to the other branches of the Department as well. I propose that instead of these regulations lying for a month before going into force, and as the House will not sit a month longer, to invite the attention of the House to resolutions approving of them, which will be introduced into both branches of the Legislature.

On section 44,

Mr. DAWSON. I wish to call attention to one effect which this clause may have in its present shape. It would evidently have a retroactive effect upon patents already granted, and would declare that the gold and silver had never been granted the patentee.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Just so.

Mr. DAWSON. Then this provision might occasion embarrassment. For instance, a part of the district which I represent is within the disputed territory. There was drawn at one time a conventional line by agreement between the Dominion Government and the Government of Ontario. The Government of Ontario was to manage the lands to the eastward of this line, and the Dominion Government the lands to the westward. Under this agreement the Government of Ontario granted patents. The reservation of gold and silver was struck from these Ontario patents. Now, it may happen, when the question of boundary is finally settled, that this territory will become Dominion territory, and these patentees would find that this clause might apply against them, and that they would not have the right to the gold and silver which was conveyed to them by the Ontario Government.

Mr. BLAKE. Whatever the Government of Ontario did convey would be recognized by this Government, and whatever this Government conveyed would, of course, be recognized by the Government of Ontario.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No doubt.

Mr. DAWSON. But there is another difficulty. I have heard the point raised by sound lawyers that the Provinces have not the right to convey gold and silver, that the right rests with the Crown. I see no objection to the Crown reserving the gold and silver in lands hereafter to be granted, but I do not think that this clause should have a retroactive effect, and I would suggest that the words "has operated or" be struck out.

Mr. BLAKE. I think the hon. gentleman is logically correct. Either the patents in which gold and silver are not mentioned have conveyed the gold and silver mines, or they have not. If they have not, there is no necessity for the declaration, and if they have, the hon. gentleman, the great advocate of vested rights, is proposing to take away from the patentee what he has got. The clause is either unnecessary or it is wrong.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No; it is neither unnecessary nor wrong. There is no doubt that a conveyance in feehold from the Crown, with or without the reservation, does not cover the gold and silver. The great object in putting in this clause is to settle the doubt for ever. Some of the patents which have been issued have contained the words; from others, which have been struck out; but whether left in or struck out, the mines of the precious metals have not been conveyed. They belong to the Crown by prerogative right. As to the other question which the hon. gentleman raises as to whether the gold and silver belongs to the Crown in its Imperial or its Dominion sense, I do not think there is much in that. I fancy that the British North America Act provides sufficiently that the public lands, including the gold and silver, belong to the Crown as represented in each Province by the Government of that Province.

Mr. BLAKE. It is to be observed that the right hon. gentleman does not confine himself to a declaration of the law, but he also enacts, and I repeat that this is either unnecessary or wrong. The hon. gentleman says that it is unnecessary, because the legal effect is that the gold and silver are not conveyed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I propose to follow the practice of my hon. friend in Ontario; but there is something in what he says, and I am willing to strike out the word "enacted."

Mr. DAWSON. Allow me to point out how this provision might work great hardship. A few years ago the Government of Ontario struck out the reservation of gold and silver from their patents, and it was held and acted upon as law that the gold and silver belonged to the proprietor of the land. Supposing Silver Islet were to come within the control of the Dominion, and not of Ontario, you would say to the people who own that island: "This silver never belonged to you; we have a right to take it, and we take it now." The people who own the Island would have been working as trespassers.

Mr. DAWSON.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Oh, no; whatever the Ontario Government have done under the conventional agreement, the Dominion Government must endorse.

On section 46,

Mr. WATSON. There might be some change in the fourth sub-section of this clause. According to this, if a man sells timber he forfeits his claim to his homestead.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. And I think he ought to. The homesteader has no title whatever to his lot until after he has resided upon it and cultivated it for three years, and if he cuts all the timber upon it he not only ought to forfeit his homestead, but he ought to be punished for stealing timber, for it is nothing less than theft.

On section 50,

Mr. CHARLTON. This contains the objectionable feature of the Land Bill and the Government policy. By the abuse of the system of licenses the greater part of the timber limits of the North-West are being farmed out to favorites at $5 a square mile, and in one case limits obtained at that figure were sold at an advance of $1,995 per square mile. If the Government wish to give us a good law they will introduce the system of public competition by inserting after the words "sale" in the fourteenth line an amendment of this kind:

Or one-fourth cash and the balance in instalments at three, six and nine months with satisfactory security as the Governor in Council may determine. Provided that the leases of the right to cut timber upon those lands shall in no case be granted except to the highest bidder after competition has been invited by weekly notice in the Canada Gazette for six months preceding the day of sale, and by notice for three months in the principal newspapers in the Province in which such timber berths are situated, which said notices shall describe the location, bounds and area of such timber berths.

It may be said that our own friends when in power did as the present Government are doing; but if they did, they acted wrongly; and I have no doubt, had they continued in office and seen the abuses to which this system gives rise, they would have altered it. I desire to place the selling of timber limits on a proper basis, and I hope the Government will accept some amendment of this kind.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I must defend the late Government from the atrocious attack the hon. gentleman has made against their purity. We found the law put into active operation by them, and continued the same system. The late Government were right in adopting that plan originally, and we were right in carrying it out. The time has come when I think we may fairly have the principle of competition. At first, with the timber scattered over a large region, the parties who got the licenses were explorers. They simply had exploring rights. The Government could not well put up berths unless they could arrive at something like a rough description of the external boundaries, and the cost of doing so would have amounted until lately to very nearly the value of the whole license. There has been a great run, certainly, for timber limits, and a great pressure made by the inhabitants to take every step to reduce the price of lumber, which has been one of the great obstacles to the settlement in that country. The Government have provided a reasonable royalty for stumpage, and so on, on these limits. The holders are obliged to put up a saw-mill within the year, and the licenses are only for a year—of course with the general understanding that unless the policy of the Government, or the progress of the settlement or other valid reasons require a change, the party paying his dues and fulfilling the conditions generally will be allowed to continue cutting the timber. With all these licenses, I do not know of anyone who has made a fortune. I believe most of them have lost money, and the price of timber has not come down as it ought. I, for one, if a speculator, would not look for timber licenses in the North-West just now as a means of increasing my fortune. With the railway open from Thunder Bay, and lumber, the finest in the country, coming across from Parry Sound, I think the timber covered by these licenses will find a competitor in the market that will take the gilding off the ginger-bread. When the railway is finished north of Lake Superior, it will go through one of the most magnificent timbered countries in the world. It has been found that instead of being a barren, fruitless country, as we feared, there is a large body of timber. Meanwhile the question before us now is as to the general policy of the Government, and if the hon. gentleman chooses to move against the policy of the Government on this question, we will be very glad to discuss it. The Government stand in this way: Any respectable person—and I state this positively—without respect to political antecedents or election interests, who has made an exploration, and has sent in a plan of any portion of the North-West which has been opened for timber limits, has got his license upon his executing the lease; and I think that when the list is looked over, it will be found that these leases have been granted without any reference to political consideration.

Mr. WATSON. I have known parties who have spent considerable money in hunting up limits, and when they sent in a plan and application to the Government, almost invariably they found there were two or three applications in ahead of them for this timber limit by parties who had never been on the ground at all, and had known nothing about these timber limits, except from information received from the Department. Of course, the Department was very sorry for it, but still I know several cases of this kind, and by men who intended to operate the limits, and those same limits have remained for several years without being operated. There must be some reason for allowing the party to hold these limits still, and not operate them. In the Brandon and Still River country, I believe two individuals hold two of these limits, and those men were prominent in the Department of the Interior in the North-West. I refer to Mr. Laycock and Mr. Anderson. Mr. Laycock was assistant timber inspector. They have the monopoly, and the limits on the Still River are operated at Brandon, and are of no benefit to the settlers in that vicinity at all. Is it right to grant all the limits to one or two individuals in that section of the country, and run the timber down the river thirty or forty miles away from the people who want to use it?

Mr. BOWELL. This is all very fine in theory; but the man who gets the limits, builds a mill and cuts timber and supplies the immediate locality—that is done in all sections of the world. According to the hon. gentleman's idea, you must make it a condition of every lease that a mill must be built in the immediate vicinity of the timber. Now, Brandon is growing up very rapidly, and a great deal of timber is required there. I must confess I can see no objection to that.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Before this matter is disposed of it is important that we should dispel the impression that is sought to be left on the public by the remarks of hon. gentlemen opposite, with regard to the leasing of timber limits in the North-West. It has been repeatedly stated that the policy of the Government is to sell the timber limits in the North-West for $5 per mile, which are resold for $2,000 per mile. That would leave a false impression on the minds of the public. In the first place, the land sold at $5 per mile, is land upon which the Government has expended nothing in the way of surveys or in making reports of the quantity of timber on it. The $5 per mile does not represent the cost to the person who buys it. He has to pay stumpage on that lumber afterwards, and $5 per mile every year; and I do not hesitate to say that if the timber limits that have been sold for $5 per mile in the North-West, were put up to-morrow at public competition, they would not bring over $5 per mile, the whole lot. There is plenty of land in the North-West that is not worth $5 per mile. Timber limits in that country are the exception, and there are plenty of timber limits that are not worth these fabulous prices that hon. gentlemen claim. There may be some limits more valuable than others, but it is not fair to try to create the impression that the Government are selling for $5 per square mile what is worth $2,000 per square mile.

Mr. CHARLTON. I would be very sorry to be instrumental in conveying a false impression to the country. I have not attempted to do anything of the kind. Nothing I have said is calculated to create that impression. It is true I pointed out that the Government charge only $5 per square mile and dues of 5 per cent. on the products of the limits, and that they did not take measures to ascertain whether they could obtain more than $5 per square mile. We complain that it is an injustice to so act without any attempt being made on the part of the Government to ascertain whether any person is willing to pay more or not, and I cited one instance where a friend and supporter of the Government had secured a lease at $5 per square mile and had sold it for $2,000 per square mile. That fact conveys the impression that the Government have not exercised proper precautions, because they would have been able to obtain the price of $2,000 just as well as did an hon. member of this House.

Mr. BOWELL. It constantly occurs in Ontario that limits are bought at a certain rate and are sold for $200,000 or $300,000.

Mr. CHARLTON. That occurs after the limits have once been sold, but not when limits are first sold by the Government at public sale.

Mr. BOWELL. Sometimes.

Mr. CHARLTON. They are invariably so sold. Ample notice is given by advertisement, that limits in a certain district will be sold, and the sales are attended by buyers from the United States and Canada. Such limits, a year afterwards, may change hands at an advance on the price originally paid, but not at the rate of $1,995 over the $5 paid.

Mr. BOWELL. In some cases where they have been so bought, the Ontario Government has reduced the amount of the annual charges.

Mr. CHARLTON. What I say is that the Government should take every precaution to secure the full value of the limits, and that such limits should be offered at public auction, so that they might be purchased by the highest bidder.

Mr. SPROULE. I notice that at a sale in this city, the other day, limits which were sold last year by the Ontario Government for $70 a square mile brought nearly $2,000 a square mile. Was that evidence that the system advocated by the hon. gentleman is one under which the Government would be likely to realize the full value? Additional value has been added to the limits in question by investigation and many other things which enhance the value of the property. But whatever virtue there might be in the theory, whenever it has been applied by the hon. gentleman's friends in Ontario, as it has been applied of late years, it affords the very strongest argument against the system. A few years ago limits were sold to the hon. gentleman's own political friends, on the distinct understanding that they should bid over their value at that time and that the Government would reduce the charges. The experience of the last few years has proved it, because subsequently the charges were reduced so as to make them very valuable, and caused the owners to make a great deal of money. There was scarcely a man among them who would make less than about 1,000 per cent. on his money.

Mr. CHARLTON. The sale of timber limits which took place in Ontario in 1873, was a sale which realized over $700,000 in bonuses, and if that sale had taken place under the policy of this Government, it would have realized only $25,000.

Mr. SPROULE. It was different timber.

Mr. CHARLTON. It does not matter. Last year, Ontario placed 1,300 square miles in the market, and received over half a million dollars in bonuses. It may be said, that in 1872 limits were sold for less than they were worth. There might be instances where the knowledge of the parties enabled them to make a profit; but there were other instances where the buyers paid too much, and that was the case in regard to the sale last year. Limits were bought then which could not be sold to-day at the same price. But they were sold in open competition, after ample notice had been given to everyone interested in pine, and they were sold in conformity with the proper principle to be adopted in selling property of this kind, that left no possibility of collusion or corruption, as is possible under the system of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. SPROULE. There is a very strange coincidence in the fact that the Ontario limits mentioned were bought up by friends of hon. gentlemen opposite, at prices higher than should have been paid at the time, and that afterwards the charges were reduced. The limits were situated in a section of country where there was an increasing demand for lumber for settlers, and where there were great facilities for getting it to market. But if there was anything unjust in the present system of timber licenses, it is very strange hon. gentlemen opposite did not ascertain it before, when their friends were receiving, not fifty square miles, but 200 square miles, and not taking it as it must be taken to-day, in one block, but wherever they could find good lumber between Winnipeg and the Rocky Mountains. If the present system is not infinitely better than that, I cannot understand anything. If there had been a strong disposition on the part of the hon. gentleman and his friends to remedy this wrong, surely they had time enough, five or six years ago, to have done so.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. member for Grey (Mr. Sproule) gives an example of the method of resorting to the childish expedient of attempting to justify a wrong by stating another.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You admitted it to be wrong.

Mr. CHARLTON. If the Government of Mr. Mackenzie adopted a wrong policy in regard to timber licenses in the North-West, it does not justify his continuing that policy. At that time the North-West was a new country, and the necessity of a different policy was not apparent. I condemn that principle, whatever party has been guilty of adopting it. If the late Government did so they acted wrongly, and if the present Government insist in doing so they are doubly wrong, because they have had the experience of years. The hon. gentleman attempted to justify this policy by resorting to the old excuse: "You are another; you have no right to find fault, as you were as bad as we have been."

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think the hon. gentleman has done me justice. He said I resorted to the argument "you are another." The fact was I justified the course of the late Government, and said they were right, and that they being right we followed in their footsteps. But we did not quite follow in their footsteps. Well, as the hon. gentleman says, we ought to learn by experience, and we have. Instead of granting 200 square miles, we have cut them down to fifty; and instead of granting twenty-one years license, we grant one year; that is the difference. But it is idle, this sort of recrimination. The Government have really thought that the course which was inaugurated when we first opened up that country, and first passed this law, ought to be continued; they have continued it hitherto; and the question now is, how far is it to be continued? Well, the principle we have adopted is simply this: We had actually to coax, as the previous Government had to coax, men to go in there, to spend their money in the way of getting out lumber. Before we resigned the Government of which I was a member, in 1873, it was considered a matter of great courage in Wm. Jas. Cauley to go up there and invest the money he had made in the older Provinces, and commence to reduce the price of lumber. The lumber that came into Winnipeg for Fort Garry, as it was then called—came altogether from the United States, and cost—I forget the sum, but my hon. friend from Winnipeg will be able to tell what the price of lumber then was.

Mr. SPROULE.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It was $80 a thousand.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He went up and brought down the price in a year or two a little; and I sincerely hope he made money by it. The whole object of the late Government, and of the present Government, was, and has been, to induce as many men as they could get to go in there and bring in their machinery and saw-mills, if it were only a hand-mill almost, and plant them wherever there was timber to saw up into lumber, and give it to immigrants. The price and profit to the Government was a matter of small importance in comparison to getting, wherever settlers went, some men to put up saw-mills and saw up lumber, as evidence of their good faith to put up a mill and saw lumber, to sell it to the settlers as cheaply as possible; and the more men that went in there, and the more mills they established, and the more licenses that were granted, the better it was for the country; and this was the reason the Government had no trouble about it; they had to make no surveys, as in Ontario, and to go to no expense whatever. They coaxed and asked people to go in and take licenses. Now there is, however, a rush for these licenses, and it may be that in some localities there may be clumps of trees, groves of trees, where the lumber licensee may make money out of it; but those must be very isolated cases, and I am satisfied that the majority of the men who have got licenses will not get their money back, and the majority of them will forfeit their licenses when the Inspector goes round, as he will this year, to see whether the mills are up and doing the work, and sawing the quantity of lumber that is required to be sawn under the licenses, in order to entitle them to hold these privileges.

On section 54,

Mr. CHARLTON. I see the lessee can establish such other manufactory of wooden goods as may be accepted in place of a saw-mill. This is rather indefinite. He might establish a one-horse cooper-shop working but one man.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. So he might; and he might make wooden nutmegs.

Mr. CHARLTON. Again: the royalty of 5 per cent. on the sales is insufficient. It would require lumber to be worth $20 a thousand to amount to $1. In Michigan where lumber is worth from $12 to $13, stumpage is now about $4; and in Ontario, where the Crown dues are $1, I think, the dues are very often from $1 to $1.50. I suggest that the dues be made specific, so much per thousand feet, instead of a percentage on the value of the sales—say, $1 on spruce and $2 on pine.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I will make a note of that.

On section 70,

Mr. CHARLTON. I think that the policy of the Government in this clause is a commendable one, regarding slides, but it is a little inconsistent, it strikes me, with the ground taken in disallowing legislation in Ontario having the same result.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. But there we have no vested rights. This is a tabula rasa. There is neither Caldwell nor McLaren up there.

Mr. CHARLTON. It is now almost too late to stop and argue that question.

On section 33,

Mr. WATSON. Would it not be well to insert here some provision with regard to the encouragement of the cultivation of trees.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would be opposed to the granting of land on the condition of planting trees, as the result would be as it is in the United States, that the man would get the land without planting the trees. There might be no objection to the Governor in Council setting aside certain tracts of land, or the proceeds of the sales of certain tracts of land, for the encouragement of forestry. I will take into consideration the suggestion made by the hon. gentleman, and by the hon. member for Norfolk (Mr. Charlton.)

Mr. CHARLTON. Have the lands south of the Canadian Pacific Railway been withdrawn from sale?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes; these lands have been withdrawn; some of them have been conveyed to the Canadian Pacific Railway in lieu of the other lands within their tract which could not be given.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is it contemplated to convey all these lands, or only the odd-numbered sections?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Only the odd-numbered sections.

Mr. BLAKE. But the even-numbered sections have been withdrawn from settlement.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. And are about to be sold.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The Government have now the matter under consideration. Those lands are exceedingly valuable, so valuable that the homesteader ought not to go in, and the poor man cannot go in. The general intention is to sell those lands and apply the proceeds to replenishing our depleted Treasury.

Mr. CHARLTON. Will they be sold to speculators or to settlers?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. To the highest bidder, if at all.

Mr. CHARLTON. I am sorry to hear that observation, as I think the Government should not allow the speculator to intervene between themselves and the settler. If these lands are sold to the speculator at $1 an acre, and the speculator sells them again to the settler at $10 or $15 an acre, it seems to me that it would be better for the country, and just as well for the Treasury, that they should be sold directly to the actual settler for the price which the speculator paid for them. We have always maintained the view, on this side of the House, that the plan which the hon. gentleman is about to adopt is one which is inimical to the best interests of the country.

Mr. COSTIGAN. A moment ago, the hon. gentleman was arguing that the Government did wrong in not putting the timber limits in the hands of the speculators. He found fault with them because they were selling them at a uniform price by which the poor man could get them for himself. The Government now proposes to sell to the highest bidder, by which the country will get the benefit and the settlers will not be injured, because there are millions of acres of homesteads ready for the settler. But the hon. gentleman does not want that. He seems very hard to please.

Mr. CHARLTON. I hope the Minister of Inland Revenue understands his own Department better than he does the question of agricultural interests versus timber interests.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. He has been there, and I think he knows the country better than you do.

Mr. CHARLTON. If the policy of the Government was to sell the agricultural lands at the one four-hundredth part of their value, then I would not object; but I do not see any inconsistency between the position that the Government should advertise their timber limits so as to get the highest price possible, instead of selling them at a nominal price, when they will be bought by speculators in any case, and the position that the agricultural lands which were designed for the homes of the settlers should be sold to the actual settlers, instead of allowing the speculators as middlemen to pocket the profits of the transaction. There is no analogy between the two cases.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman is perfectly welcome to enjoy his opinion as to how much I know of my Department, but I think I am as well qualified to speak on this subject as he is. I repeat that the hon. gentleman was not consistent in the two positions he assumed, any more than he was consistent a few minutes ago when he advocated the imposition of a higher duty on manufactured lumber consumed by the people of Manitoba. The other night the hon. member for Selkirk complained of the Government, because they, as he said, were imposing high duties on agricultural implements, and thereby grinding down the people of the North-West. Now, the hon. gentleman says that the duty we have imposed on the lumber which the people of the North-West consumes is not high enough, and he wants it raised. I say the hon. gentleman is not consistent, and I am quite as competent to form an opinion as he is.

Mr. CHARLTON. I never advocated raising the duty on lumber.

Mr. COSTIGAN. You said it should be increased.

Mr. CHARLTON. When the duty on lumber was discussed here, I advocated a specific duty in place of our ad valorem duty, because the ad valorem duty amounted to $6 or $7 a thousand, but I thought $3 a thousand was high enough. To-night I took the position that the system of levying dues is wrong—that the charges ought not to be a percentage on sales, but a specific sum. I do not think that, under the present regulations, the Dominion Government are receiving a fair price for their timber.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. My hon. friend cannot get off in that way. He insinuated that we were giving to our friends, for corrupt purposes, timber limits at too low a price. He wished the price to be raised, and the limits to be put up at competition. Now, I think the hon. gentleman will admit that the higher price the licensee pays for his timber the higher he must charge the settler for his lumber; and if the licenses are given at a low rate and a fair rate, and are granted to everybody who chooses to come, as they are, while we are getting a reasonable return for the timber, we are supplying the people with lumber at a cheap rate, and we are robbing the Treasury, as the hon. gentleman says, of the immense profit that we should make by raising the price of lumber to the settlers going into that country.

Mr. CHARLTON. The system of charging a direct percentage is a very objectionable system, because the timber varies in value, according to its quantity and quality. The expense of getting it to the settler, and other circumstances, and the purchaser in making a bid for the timber, will be governed by these considerations. It is absurd to say that a timber limit in one position is worth as much and no more than another, and the only fair way to dispose of them, is to put them up at auction, with a fixed sum attached. If you place all these timber berths on the same level, you give one berth at the same price as another, although it may be worth three times as much, and to argue that you would raise the price of lumber by adopting another system is pure moonshine. The price of lumber will be regulated by other causes.

Mr. CASEY. I do not think anybody disputes the knowledge of the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue, regarding the North-West, and for that reason we can appreciate the more highly the very humorous analogy he has drawn between the case of timber limits and the case of agricultural lands. His joke is only surpassed in richness by that of the hon. Premier, when he said that the Government system of granting timber limits gives everybody an equal chance of getting them, and reduces the price of lumber to the settler. The question under discussion is the policy of withdrawing the lands south of the Canadian Pacific Railway from settlement, and selling them to the highest bidder. I do not think the hon. member for North Norfolk, or anybody else on this side of the House, has any objection to selling these lands to the highest bidder, with one proviso: that the purchaser shall be required to reside upon and cultivate them. The proposal to withdraw from settlement lands which have been publicly advertised as open for homesteading, and in default of which promise a large immigration has been directed to this country, is very injurious. I am personally acquainted with a gentleman from Devonshire, of great influence in that country, who came out to the Moose Mountain country on the strength of this advertisement, and got there just in time to get his lands before they were withdrawn from settlement; but in consequence of the change he advised his friends in Devonshire not to come out. This district is one of the very best parts of the North-West, and if the immigrant finds that the lands are withdrawn because they are too valuable to give to homesteaders, and that he must put up with the fag-end of the country, he will go to Dakota where lands are not withdrawn from settlement simply because they happen to be valuable.

Mr. WATSON. According to the hon. Minister of Agriculture, an immigrant in this country is worth about $800. In the vicinity of Birtle, lands of very good quality were sold in large quantities to five or six speculators. The first day the lands were sold at $6 per acre, but the following days these men broke the upset price and bought it all in at $2.55 per acre. If a settler is worth $800, it would be better to throw that land open to him for actual settlement than to sell it for $2.55 per acre. These lands will be locked up for some time from settlement, and those people who have settled there will be placed at a disadvantage, by being isolated on that account.

Mr. SPROULE. Only a short time ago the hon. gentleman said it was impossible to lock up land, on account of the taxes imposed, after municipal organizations are formed. I know a gentleman of Toronto, Mr. Christie, who paid on one section at Birtle, last year, $650 in taxes. The hon. gentleman contradicts himself when he says the lands will be locked up by speculators, and then says it will be impossible to keep them locked up on account of taxes.

Mr. WATSON. I did not say so. I do not know of any case in which farm lands are assessed at the figures mentioned by the hon. gentleman.

Mr. LANDERKIN. It is unfortunate the statement should go abroad that taxes are so high, for such statements deter immigrants from entering the country. If they thought they would have to pay $900 taxes on a farm they would not come into the Province.

Mr. CHARLTON.

On section 128,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I call the attention of the Committee to this clause, by which it will be seen that all rights acquired or liabilities incurred under the previous Acts may be continued and completed under this Act. The clause is as follows:—

128. Subject to the provisions hereinafter made, the Act passed in the forty-second year of Her Majesty's reign and intitled "An Act to amend and consolidate the several Acts respecting the Public Lands of the Dominion," and the Act passed in the forty-third year of Her Majesty's reign, and intitled "An Act to amend the Dominion Lands Act, 1879," and the Act passed in the forty-fourth year of Her Majesty's reign, and intitled, "An Act to amend the Dominion Lands Acts," are hereby repealed, and this Act is substituted for them,—the Acts repealed by the Act first mentioned, and for which it was substituted, remaining so repealed: Provided always, that all enactments repealed by any of the said Acts shall remain repealed, and that all things lawfully done and all rights acquired or liabilities incurred under them or any of them shall remain valid and may be enforced, and all proceedings and things lawfully commenced under them or any of them may be continued and completed under this Act, which shall not be construed as a new law, but as a consolidation and continuation of the Acts hereby repealed, subject to the amendments hereby made and incorporated with them; and any thing heretofore done under any provision in any of the said repealed Acts which is repeated without alteration in this Act, may be alleged or referred to as having been done under the Act in which such provision was made, or under this Act. 1879, s. 129.

Progress reported.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and (at 2:10 o'clock a.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

MONDAY, 30th April, 1883.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

GRAND TRUNK RAILWAY.

Mr. COLBY moved that the Order for the third reading of Bill (No. 111) to authorize the Grand Trunk Railway Company of Canada to extend their traffic arrangements to the North Shore Railway Company to fifty years from the date thereof, be discharged, and that the Bill be recommitted to the Committee of the Whole to consider a certain amendment.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. ABBOTT moved that the Bill be amended by the insertion, as a separate clause, of these words:

Nothing herein contained shall affect any rights acquired by the Canadian Pacific Railway in respect to the said North Shore Railway, under and by virtue of an agreement between the Government of the Province of Quebec and the said Company, executed 4th March, 1882, and confirmed by an Act of the Quebec Legislature, 45 Vic., chap. 19.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY COMPANY.

Mr. ABBOTT moved that the House resolve itself into Committee on Bill (No. 114) respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Motion agreed to; and Bill considered in Committee and reported.

On motion for third reading,

Mr. SUTHERLAND (Selkirk) moved the following amendment:—

On that portion of the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, extending from St. Vincent or the boundary line to Winnipeg, and all other parts on the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway in Manitoba or the North-West Territories the same rates and fares per mile shall be charged upon all freight and passengers passing over the branch or section of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's line, which shall be formed by the leasing or amalgamations by this Act authorized and its connections in Canada and the United States via St. Vincent, and on freight and passengers by any other Canadian lines of Railway and their connections in Canada and the United States via St. Vincent aforesaid.

Mr. ABBOTT. I presume that when the House goes into Committee I shall be at liberty—

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The House is not going into Committee.

Mr. ABBOTT. I understand that when an amendment is made to a Bill on the third reading it must go back to Committee. As I have an amendment to propose I wish it to be understood that the former motion which has been made is not to preclude me from moving my amendment in Committee.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I hope the House will not accept this amendment of the hon. member for Selkirk (Mr. Sutherland), it is simply and solely a breach of the contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company.

Amendment negatived.

Mr. ABBOTT moved that the Bill be referred back to the Committee of the Whole to amend it by adding the following:—

If the Canadian Pacific Railway Company shall undertake the carriage of passenger and goods traffic over the said leased lines, or any part thereof, to Manitoba and the North-West Territories by any route south of Lake Superior, and shall continue to do so after the completion of its line north of Lake Superior, it shall be bound to receive at Emerson, and carry with due despatch to its destination, any such traffic carried by any Canadian line, and allied lines, from the Province of Ontario to Emerson; and shall not charge any higher rate therefor than it receives for the carriage, over the same portion of its line, of similar through traffic carried by it and its allied lines from Ontario to Emerson. Provided always that any railway company in Canada, availing itself of the foregoing provision, and possessing or controlling exclusively railway communication from any point on the Canadian Pacific Railway in Ontario or Quebec, to any other point in either of those Provinces, shall be bound in like manner to receive from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, at the point of connection, passenger and goods traffic coming from Manitoba or the North-West Territories, and carry the same with due despatch to its destination over such exclusive line, and shall not charge any higher rate therefor than it receives for the carriage, over the same portion of its line, of similar traffic carried by it and its allied lines, from Manitoba or the North-West Territories to the point of destination.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not suppose the amendment will be productive of any harm, but it will do no good, because it would be quite impossible to carry traffic into the North-West, unless arrangements are made by which cars carrying goods inwards will be filled for the outward journey.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (Selkirk). I would like to ask the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Abbott), if it is intended that this provision should not take effect until, and after, the completion of the main lines of the Canadian Pacific Railway.

Mr. ABBOTT. That is the intention, because, of course, there is no reason for any condition or restraint being placed on the Canadian Pacific Railway while the line is under construction. It must have been contemplated, indeed it was contemplated, that traffic should be carried south of Lake Superior until the line north of Lake Superior was constructed.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. ABBOTT moved that the above clause be added to the Bill.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). The amendment applies only to traffic going from Ontario. My impression is that it should apply to traffic from all the Eastern Provinces. I do not think the mover has any objections to insert words which will govern this point.

Mr. ABBOTT. No.

Mr. WHITE. It may be a question subsequently as to how the provision is to be interpreted. It might be interpreted to apply only to traffic which started from Ontario.

Mr. ABBOTT. I am quite willing to add the words "or any Province East of Ontario."

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

RETURN RESPECTING MR. WELLS.

Mr. FARROW enquired, Why the Government has not brought down the return asked for last Session, with reference to one Wells, a brewer, of Goderich, and the Government?

Mr. COSTIGAN. In reply to the hon. gentleman, I may say that there was not time last Session to bring down the papers, and as this is a new Parliament it has not been laid before the House, the Order for the return having lapsed.

UNDELIVERED LETTERS.

Mr. BLAKE enquired, Whether post letters having endorsed on the envelope a direction to return them if not called for or delivered within a limited time, to a given address, are, according to the practice of the Department, so returned unopened, or whether they pass through the Dead Letter Office and are opened before being returned?

Mr. CARLING. I may state to the hon. gentleman that letters having printed on the envelope, "return if not called for in ten days," are returned without being opened; but letters lacking this notice are sent to the Dead Letter Office, opened, and then returned to the sender.

WINNIPEG POST OFFICE.

Mr. SCOTT enquired, Whether the Government has selected the sites for the permanent and temporary post offices to be erected in Winnipeg; and if so, where?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The sites in question have been selected. The site of the present post office will be used for the new post office; and as a temporary post office will be required, it will be erected on the ground belonging to the Government between the Custom House and Land Office.

MALPEQUE BREAKWATER.

Mr. YEO enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to place any sum in the Supplementary Estimates for the repairing of the breakwater at Malpeque Harbor, Prince Edward Island?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This matter has been also brought to the attention of the Government by the hon. gentleman's colleague, and it is now receiving the attention of the Government.

ELM LOGS.

Mr. SMITH enquired, Whether the Government received a petition from certain residents of Kent, Ont., praying for an export duty on elm logs, and whether a deputation waited upon the hon. Minister of Finance to the same end? What was the answer of the Minister to deputation? And what are the intentions of the Government in respect to such export duty?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. At the last Session of Parliament petitions were presented to the Government by inhabitants of Kent county on this subject. The Government said they would take, and did take, these petitions under consideration, but they did not see their way clear to ask Parliament for the imposition of this duty. No such petitions have been presented this Session, and the Government have no intention to ask, this Session, for the imposition of an export duty on elm logs.

PETITION FOR A PIER.

Mr. SMYTH enquired, Whether the Government intends to grant the prayer of the petition of the residents of the southern portion of the county of Kent, for the construction of a pier at Buckhorn on Lake Erie, in the county of Kent, Ontario?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In answer to the hon. gentleman, I must say that in the Department we have no information about this place and pier; but as such a petition was presented, the intention is to have this place examined during the Recess.

JEANNETTE'S CREEK.

Mr. SMYTH enquired, Whether the Government is aware that the Grand Trunk Railway Company is obstructing the navigation of Jeannette's Creek, a navigable stream in the county of Kent, Ontario?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Department has not been notified that the Grand Trunk Railway Company is obstructing the channel of Jeannette's Creek. We do not know anything about it.

DELIVERY OF NEWSPAPERS.

Mr. WHEELER enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government, during the present Session, to amend the postal regulations so as to allow newspapers to be mailed for delivery free of charge, in post offices at places where such papers are published?

Mr. CARLING. This is under consideration.

DOMINION LAW CODIFICATION.

Mr. LANDRY enquired, Whether the Government has appointed a French Canadian on the Commission for the codification of our Dominion Laws?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I may say that so soon as a Commission is finally issued for the codification of the Dominion Laws, a French Canadian will be a member of the Commission.

QUEBEC HARBOR POLICE.

Mr. LANDRY enquired, Whether the Government intend to maintain the effective force of the Quebec Harbor Police, or to increase or diminish the number of men employed in that service?

Mr. BOWELL. The Government has not yet decided either to diminish or to increase the Police force, which will depend altogether on the requirements of the service.

COMMUNICATION BETWEEN GROSSE ISLE AND THE MAINLAND.

Mr. LANDRY (Translation) enquired, Whether the Government intend to establish communication by semaphore, telephone or telegraph, between the quarantine station at Grosse Isle and the mainland; and if so, when?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN (Translation). It is not the intention of the Government to establish these communications at present.

ST. FRANCIS WHARF, ISLAND OF ORLEANS.

Mr. LANDRY (Translation) enquired, Whether it is the intention of the Government to cause to be erected this year, a station at Cape St. Ignace, in the county of Montmagny, on the line of the Intercolonial Railway?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN (Translation). I fear the hon. member has not had time to read the Estimates which are before the House, because he would have seen at page 55, that in compliance with the request of the member from the county, and pursuant to the action of the House last year, $5,000 has been appropriated to continue the works.

REPATRIATION OF CANADIANS.

Mr. TASSÉ, in moving for a statement showing the sums expended each year since 1875, to secure the repatriation of Canadians who have emigrated to the United States; the conditions of transport offered them; the names of the agents employed for that purpose, and their salaries or commission, said: In proposing this motion I beg to offer a few remarks on a subject which I consider of the greatest importance. This subject has more than once engaged the attention of Parliament and of the press—in fact of all those who have their country's welfare at heart. I refer to the repatriation of the thousands of Canadians who have emigrated to the United States. It is not my intention to discuss the origin of that emigration, which is a remote one, nor the causes that have perpetuated it; they are manifold, and some of them beyond our control. As to the number of Canadians who have emigrated, it is large, very large; much larger than any patriotic man could desire. The most accurate statistics lead us to believe that there are about 300,000 French Canadians living on the other side of the line. Some put the number at a much higher figure, but their data are about as reliable as those American returns which count as immigrant every man who goes out from Canada, whether he is a mere tourist, or speculator, or a genuine settler. In passing, let me observe that the development of the French race in the Province of Quebec is the best evidence that an exodus of the magnitude claimed by those American returns would be an utter impossibility. Let us look at a few convincing figures. In 1851, there were 669,528 French Canadians in Quebec; in 1860, 847,615; in 1870, 929,817; and, in 1880, 1,073,820. In fact, notwithstanding the exodus, the whole increase of the population of Quebec, which amounts to 167,511 during the last decade, is due to the French race, less 23,508. Moreover, there was, during the same period a rapid growth of our people in other parts of the country, notably the great Province of Ontario. In 1850, there were 26,417 French Canadians in Ontario; in 1860, 33,287; in 1870, 75,383, and, in 1880, 102,743. Not very long ago the hon. leader of the Opposition explained to his faithful friends the causes of his defeat—carefully avoiding, however, to give the real causes—and he referred to the "political darkness" which existed in Eastern Ontario. Commenting on this subject, the leading organ of the Reform party explained that if such a "political darkness" prevailed in Eastern Ontario, that if the people of that section were less intelligent than those of the west, it was due to the influx of a great many settlers from Lower Canada. All these facts tend to show an immense exodus to the States of the French people—larger than that which I am prepared to acknowledge—would be almost impossible, having regard to the admitted growth of our race in this country. It would be a great error to believe that Canadians of French descent are the only important section of our people who have emigrated to the United States. The west, for instance, exercised a mysterious attraction over our people long before Horace Greeley uttered his famous advice: "Go West, young man." And to-day you could find in the American West—especially in those States bordering our frontier, which we have lost through the blunder of English diplomacy—large colonies composed of English speaking settlers who were formerly citizens of this country. I remember that, after the great fire at Chicago, it was claimed that there were 20,000 Canadians in that city, a very large majority of whom were of British origin, and came from Ontario. Our neighbors had the benefit of that emigration as long as our own West was a "sealed book;" but now that our boundless prairies are open to settlement, our exodus is not only flowing in that direction, but thousands of Americans are following the same route. The following figures are most convincing on that point: Out of 69,332 persons who entered Manitoba last year, 33,327 came from Ontario, 13,325 from the United States, 2,496 from Quebec, 1,997 from Nova Scotia, 1,485 from New Brunswick, and 376 from Prince Edward Island. The last American Census, that of 1880, claims that there are 717,157 persons in the States born in the different parts of British North America. I will cite some of the States which comprise the largest portion of that population: Michigan, 148,770; Massachusetts, 116,430; New York, 83,517; Maine, 36,989; Illinois, 33,870; Minnesota, 29,475; Wisconsin, 28,808; New Hampshire, 27,079; Vermont, 24,611; Iowa, 21,019; California, 19,465; Rhode Island, 18,156; Connecticut, 16,380; Ohio, 16,026; Kansas, 12,496; Pennsylvania, 12,203; Dakota, 10,661; Missouri, 8,635; Nebraska, 8,552, &c. Of that number we may fairly assume that less than one-half are of French descent. The presence of so many of our fellow citizens on the other side of the frontier has more than once engaged the attention of our public men. In 1857, a Committee was formed in the old Parliament of Canada with the object of finding out the best means of preventing that emigration which was depleting the country of many of its most active and energetic inhabitants. One of the conclusions arrived at by the Committee—of which the hon. member for East York, Mr. Mackenzie, is the only remaining member—was that one of the most effective remedies would be to develop the resources of the country by a system of protection to our home industries. That system has been adopted since. I only regret it was not adopted sooner, and we see its beneficial results in the return of several thousands of Canadians every year to the land of their origin and the land of their love. More than 20,000 returned last year, according to the hon. Minister of Agriculture, and they were preceded the year previous by less than 10,000. A few months ago I was invited to lecture before the French Canadians of Massachusetts, assembled in convention at Lowell, one of the great manufacturing centres of New England. I came into contact with many of them. In fact, there were about 3,000 persons at the meeting which I addressed, and I had the gratification of ascertaining that several thousands of Canadians had returned during the year from that single State, and that a great many more were anxious to follow their example. To give an illustration, I may observe that so many were leaving Lowell every Monday night that the railway officials used to style that night the "Frenchmen's night." To the hon. Minister of Agriculture is due the credit of having taken the preliminary steps towards a movement of repatriation. In 1873, that hon. gentleman instructed the Rev. Mr. Gendreau to visit the Canadian settlements of New England, and to report upon the feasibility of securing their repatriation. Mr. Gendreau fulfilled his mission with much diligence and care, and he came to the conclusion that such a movement was not only practicable, but that the bringing back of thousands of Canadians would entail less expense and a much less complicated system than that now in existence for the promotion of European immigration. I beg to draw the attention of the House to the following passage of his report:—

"With the exception of certain parts of the State of New York, I consider that I have visited all the principal French-Canadian centres in the Eastern States. I obtained the greater part of the statistical information given above from the priests in charge of the Canadians, and from tradesmen doing business with them. The totals given above do not reach 60,000 souls; it is true that there are several other localities which include a not inconsiderable number of French Canadians, yet I am satisfied that in placing at 200,000 the number of French Canadians in the New England States, I am amplifying rather than diminishing the true number of French Canadians who have emigrated to the Eastern States of the American Union.

"It is impossible to ascertain the number of Canadians of other origins who have emigrated to the United States, in consequence of the uniformity of their language, habits and customs with those of the natives of the Republic: no points of distinction present themselves, and as a consequence they are rarely found grouped together by themselves, and it is this circumstance which has caused that part of Canadian emigration quite as considerable in its extent as the other, to evade the attention of the public.

"The States of New York, Massachusetts and Vermont in the East, and Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin and Minnesota in the West, are those which contain the greatest Canadian population.

"Canadians who have emigrated are desirous of returning to Canada; many will do so as soon as they have sufficient means to pay their travelling expenses, and others as soon as the establishment of manufacturing in Canada provides for them the employment which they went to the United States to seek. This was the answer given to me almost universally by Canadians whom I fell in with either singly or in numbers collected together. One of them said to me that he hoped that after millions of dollars had been expended in the encouragement of European immigration, something might perhaps be done to restore to their native land Canadians who were desirous of returning home.

"For it must be borne in mind that hitherto not a single cent has ever been offered to Canadians in the United States, in any shape whatever, as an encouragement to them to return to the country, and that the many inducements held out to the Germans, the Scandinavians, and the Mennonites have never been extended to our fellow countrymen."

It was probably on the strength of this report that the hon. Minister of Agriculture of the day—the hon. Mr. Letellier—appointed two agents in the States to promote repatriation. One of them was stationed at Worcester, Massachusetts, and the other at Detroit. Mr. Charles Lalime is still the agent for the Eastern States, and, under his guidance, hundreds of Canadians have left every year to become settlers in the North-West—in that "illimitable wilderness, and a wilderness of fertile land," to use the language of Lord Beaconsfield. But the other day it was reported that 125 heads of French families had emigrated from Massachusetts to Manitoba. In 1881, more than 1,000 French Canadians settled in that Province, and most of them came from the States. In fact, the movement is assuming such proportions that it was referred to at an enquiry held by the Board of Statistics of Massachusetts as being calculated to affect the labor and price of wages in that State; and those emigrants never had any reason to regret their removal to Manitoba, for they have founded some of its most thriving settlements, namely Saint Jean Baptiste, St. Joseph and St. Pie. The last report of Mr. Lalime, shows that English Canadians that emigrated to New England, were beginning to follow the example of my compatriots, and to return to Canada, and that the repatriation movement was assuming the most encouraging aspect. The following passage of that report, which is dated the 30th December, 1882, will be found interesting on this subject:

"I am pleased to say that my labors for the immigration of Canadians from New England to the Province of Manitoba have been much more successful than in the year 1881.

"According to the list of names I forwarded to-day, you will find that 633 emigrants have left New England for Manitoba.

"A fact to which I especially call your attention, is, that in years past, the French Canadians alone in New England, seemed to take interest in Manitoba and its developments, almost all our emigrants belonged to that nationality, while you will find in the accompanying list of names, that we have this year as many English as French emigrants, a noteworthy fact, and to my appreciation a proof that our Western Province is getting to be better known every day, and which gives me the greatest hopes for the future.

"I also take great pleasure in stating that the emigration from Canada to New England, during the year 1882, has certainly decreased by at least 40 per cent. compared with years previous.

"I have had ample opportunities of becoming acquainted with that fact during my numerous trips to our New England manufacturing cities and towns, and, also, in the course of my relations with the different railroad corporations connecting Canada with New England.

"These railroad companies reports for 1882, show a decrease of about 50 per cent. in their ticket sales less than in 1881, for tickets sold from Canada to New England; while, on the other hand, the receipts of tickets sold in New England for Canada, have increased in the same ratio.

"To add another proof to my statement, I might remark that at the time of the last parochial Census, in the latter part of the year 1882, by the French clergyman, it was ascertained that the French population in Lowell, Mass., Manchester, N.H., and Fall River, had largely decreased."

The western agency of repatriation has been discontinued since 1879, and I really do not know for what reason. There are thousands and thousands of Canadians in the American West, and such an important field of action should not be neglected. If a change of office was necessary, which I am not aware of, it seems to me that the agency should have been maintained, although Detroit may have not been the best location. One may judge of the importance of that field of action by the following facts given in the report of Mr. Tétu, our Immigration Agent at Emerson:—

"The States of Michigan, Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin and Minnesota, have contributed greatly to the immigration. I think it my duty to remark here, that the immigrants were essentially agriculturists. Many of them had means and brought with them horses, vehicles, farming implements, &c. They say they are well satisfied with the country, and invite their friends to come and settle in it. The continual presence of a lecturing agent who should distribute pamphlets pointing out the best way to get here, and giving general information of the country, is of the first necessity in those parts."

This system of repatriation has cost but a paltry sum to the country. We may judge by the fact that, in 1876, we spent $2,713 for transport, and $5,807 for agency—these are the only figures I have found on the subject in the official reports—whilst the total sum spent for the transport of European immigrants was $56,887. Satisfactory as the results have been, I think that greater results could have been or could be achieved with a more liberal and a more vigorous policy. Let the Government invite delegates—true representative men—from the Canadian settlements of the Eastern and Western States to visit the North-West and to report thereon; let them disseminate throughout those settlements on a more extensive scale, reports and other information concerning our territories; let them take advantage of the publicity of several French papers which are now printed in those States, and which on every occasion stand up for the interests of Canada; let them increase the number of agencies and put them in a state of efficiency; let them reduce the cost of transport, and ere long we shall have the satisfaction of seeing thousands of compatriots returning to Canada, the land of their origin, and of their love. I do not intend to indulge in recrimination; but whatever may be the cause, we have done more for people of every other origin, for people opposed to some extent to our ideas of government and of civilization, than we have done for those of our fellow countrymen, who, through adverse circumstances, and against their own will, have in most cases been obliged to exile themselves in a foreign land. As a matter of contrast, let me draw your attention, for instance, to the obligations contracted by the Government to secure the Mennonite immigration, under date July 26th, 1873:

- "1st. Entire exemption from military service.
- "2nd. A free grant of lands in Manitoba.
- "3rd. The privilege of religious schools of their own.
- "4th. The privilege of affirming instead of making oaths in courts.
- "5th. The passenger warrants from Hamburg to Fort Garry, for the sum of $30 per adult, $15 for children under eight years, and $3 for infants under one year.
- "6th. The prices not to be changed during the years 1874, 1875, and 1876, and if changed afterwards, not to exceed $40 up to 1882.
- "7th. The emigrants to be provided with provisions during their journey between Liverpool and Collingwood."

We know that besides a loan of $100,000 was made to the Mennonites—which loan becomes due this year. From this statement it appears that the Mennonites have been treated with much more liberality than the Canadians desirous to return to their country. They had not more to pay from Hamburg to Winnipeg than the Canadians from the Eastern States, besides receiving most substantial advantages for their settlement. From 1876 to 1879, the price of transport was practically reduced for those Canadians to $13, but since then they have had to pay $31, a sum of $5 being remitted to them after their final settlement in Manitoba. That such a charge reduced the current of repatriation, I have no doubt. In support of that view I will give the following extract from the report of Mr. Lalime, the Government Agent for 1879:

"The number of immigrants from the Eastern States to Manitoba during the year 1879, has been 565. The slight falling off, as compared with the report of my operations in 1878, is owing to two causes.

"Since 1876 the Canadian Government granted aid to Canadians in the Eastern States in order to induce them to emigrate, by an indemnity calculated on their fare, and the price of a ticket was reduced, by that grant, to the sum of $13.

"On or about the 1st April, 1879, your Government reduced that grant to the sum of $5, payable to the emigrant only after his final settlement in Manitoba, so that emigrants had to pay the full price, that is to say, $31, in place of $13 as in the past, and in consequence of this change, made at the last moment, quite a number of families who had decided to start with the party of the 15th April, were compelled to put off their departure until better times."

From this statement it appears that the policy of the late Government was more liberal, in this respect, than that of the present one—and I am glad I have such an exceptional opportunity to pay them some compliment; but I must observe that, whilst the Reform Government were striving to facilitate repatriation, they were, at the same time, playing into the hands of the Americans, and driving the people by thousands to the States by refusing to adopt a policy of Protection. I will not discuss whether the Mennonite immigration—to which I have referred—was a desirable one, whether it was advantageous to add to our population men who are mere producers and consumers, men who erect a Chinese wall around them, men who refuse to share our duties and our responsibilities as citizens of a free land, men who will not defend their firesides, nor the flag under which they are free from Russian tyranny. Such a discussion would be out of place, but I may well observe that a Canadian immigration is of such superior advantage that we should be prepared to do much more to secure it than we have done to attract Mennonites. I remember that when a discussion took place on this very subject in this House, the hon. member for Compton—then sitting on the other side—asserted that "if it was important to bring the Mennonites into our country, it was no less important to bring back Canadians from the United States." If the hon. gentleman who presides over the Department of Agriculture with such marked success and practical ability, will now remember that declaration, I feel quite sure that abundant results will attend his endeavors in that direction. Let me tell him that Canadians, accustomed as they are to a severe climate and to a hardy life, are among the best settlers we could have for our western domains; let me tell him that none have a stronger claim to occupy the valley of the Red River, and even that of the Saskatchewan, than the descendants of the heroic pioneers who were the first to carry the flag of civilization into that vast region. Let me tell him that from a political standpoint—or rather from a British standpoint—their presence in large numbers would be most desirable in our new territories, as they would exercise a beneficial influence in the moulding of a true national spirit. I know that some people are so bigoted and narrow-minded that they view with pleasure the emigration of my compatriots to the United States. I hope they are few, although sometimes they pretend to speak on behalf of many. Could anyone imagine that the following paragraph was allowed to appear in a leading paper—in the organ of a party which claims to be liberal minded, par excellence:

"The departure of a few French Canadians for the United States will have but little influence on the whole Province; but if all that race could emigrate in a body, the English influence would be much affected thereby. The matter is that Canadians are a real obstacle to the working of British institutions."

This paragraph, it is true, was not published recently, but the spirit that inspired it still survives. It comes from the same paper which basely insulted our religious feeling in the past; which is sneering on all occasions at the French habitant, the backbone of our population; which is impugning the morality of our women, and which is clamoring for the abolition of the French language. I do not intend to dwell on that injurious article; but let me state that if our people had emigrated in a body to the States; if they had accepted the place open to them at any time in the American Union; if they had obeyed the pressing appeal of Washington and Lafayette at a critical and decisive period of our history; if they had not repelled the American invader on the memorable day of Chateauguay, under the command of De Salaberry, the British flag would have long since crossed the seas. Moreover, if our forefathers had not been the first and the most persevering to fight in our Legislative Assemblies for the securing of responsible government, Canada would not, perhaps, be even yet in the enjoyment of the greatest amount of liberty of which any race can boast of on this continent. The best answer, however, which I could give to those who do not appreciate the value of the French population in Canada, even from an entirely British standpoint, would be the following extract of a deposition made before the English Parliament in 1828 by Mr. William Parker—an English merchant who had spent many years here, and had been a close observer of events:

"I would encourage the French Canadians, they are the only people you can depend on. The population of the other Provinces is of a mixed character (a great many loyal, brave and good men, no doubt, amongst them). The French Canadians are united in their origin (of which they are justly proud), in religion, in manners, and in virtue. They have a character to support and they have always nobly supported it. Whilst they were under the French Government they were the bravest subjects that France had, and with one-sixth of their present number they gave the greatest opposition to the British army that they met with at the conquest of Canada. I am persuaded if the French Canadians had been as numerous at that time as they are now, we would not have wrested Canada from France, and if such had been the result, we would not now have the youthful, powerful and federative North American Republic encroaching on us as they do at present. The French Canadians are reproached for not Anglifying themselves; are the inhabitants of Jersey and Guernsey worse British subjects for having preserved their language, manners and Norman laws, or are they so reproached? And yet I will boldly assert that Lower Canada, and other North American colonies, are of ten thousand times more vital importance to this Empire than these Islands are. I consider them more than the right arm of the British Empire. I am convinced that if the French Canadians were double their present number they would set all the union of America at defiance. They are the best subjects this country has."

Whilst I am referring to this subject, let me say that I have seen with regret, the hon. member for East York alluding to our people in a most offensive manner, in a speech delivered at Toronto at the Liberal convention which took place last January. The hon. gentleman said:

"Sir John and his Ministers are mere puppets in the hands of a French majority; they are jumping-jacks, who jump when the Quebec string is pulled, though I fancy it must be rather humiliating for him to be compelled to dance to such music."

I quite conceive that the hon. gentleman should not appreciate French music; but I will ask this House if such language should have been found in the mouth of a veteran politician, whose duty one would think should lead him to strive to unite the people, instead of fostering national jealousies, and national animosities. I am glad to know, however, that the hon. gentleman had a better opinion of our people when visiting Scotland as Premier of Canada. In a speech which he delivered when honored with the freedom of Dundee, he paid us the following compliment:—

"The French people in Canada are in the position of a people speaking an alien language, but do not consider themselves an alien people, and are at this moment as proud of British law and freedom as any portion of the Canadian people; and as Lord Dufferin remarked the other day in London, there is no class or population more thoroughly trained in Parliamentary practice and life, and to all the rights and feelings of an independent and proud people."

But it is not only here that my fellow-countrymen have been slandered. They have been maligned also in the States, in a public document, by a certain Colonel Wright—they are all colonels in that country, when they are not generals,—Chief of the Board of Statistics of Massachusetts, who went so far as to style them the Chinese of the East. But this odious charge was resented by the Canadians who demanded and obtained a public investigation, which proved conclusively that there was not a more honest, moral or industrious class among the working men of the State. The same slander having been repeated lately by a man named Foster, before a Committee at Washington, the French Canadian groups of New England appointed at once delegates to face their traducers and to confound them. We read some times in papers which are unfriendly to us that we are intolerant, clannish, retrograde and narrow-minded. But facts are the best answers to these charges. When, for instance, did we oppose the immigration expenditure? When did we oppose any public work calculated to develop our country, to multiply its resources, and to increase thereby its population? We know very well, nevertheless, that every expenditure for foreign immigration purposes may reduce to some extent our influence in the community. We, the Frenchmen of Canada, draw no strength from that source. Old France does not send us any more of its blood. To our regret, it seems to have none to spare. In 1882, only fifty Frenchmen and Belgians came to this country, 104 came in 1881, and not more than twenty-seven were registered the year preceding. A few thousand invaded our cities a few years ago, but I confess that most of them were not of a desirable class. They had to be sent back at the expense of the State. They were too well versed in the art of dynamite—which now-a-days threatens, unfortunately, the whole fabric of society. With a proper system, it would be possible to attract a fair emigration from Belgium; and I wish a strong effort was made in that direction, because that country is composed of a very frugal and industrious population, and is the most densely peopled in Europe. We all remember that when Lord Durham submitted his celebrated report on the affairs of British North America to the Home Government, with a view of securing the extinction of the French Canadian nationality, his main recommendation to achieve that object was to promote emigration on the largest possible scale. Lord Durham said:

"I have little doubt that the French, when once placed by the legitimate course of events and the working of natural causes in the minority, would abandon their vain hopes of nationality."

But the English representative had not foreseen the impossibility of absorbing and crushing a nationality which has overcome, like ours, all the storms which have assailed its existence, and which is as firmly planted as its own Laurentian range. In that same report, Lord Durham asserts that "no population has increased by mere births so rapidly as that of the French Canadians"—and thus unwittingly gives to the world the reason why his abominable project could not be realized, why our people could not be annihilated. In fact, our multiplying power is great, very great—nay, marvellous. It rests on the vitality and the morality of our people. It has never been equalled or surpassed in the history of mankind. We are proud to say that no household can present such a formidable array of joyful and healthy children as that of the French Canadian. We ignore entirely Yankee notions in that respect. It reminds me that when Mr. Ampere visited this country, a Canadian habitant gave him the whole secret of our preservation in those characteristic words: "Nous sommes terribles pour les enfants." Not later than the 14th January, the Montreal Witness recognized that extraordinary development in the following language:

"Immigration has long made it seem as though the English were proportionately increasing in the Dominion, but multiplication is a more permanent force, and the proportion of French in the whole Dominion is on the increase."

And that force will continue to be our sole barrier, our sole protection against the European waves which are continually sweeping over the country. We were called upon the other day to vote $500,000 for immigration purposes. This is by far the largest appropriation we ever demanded for that service, the expenditure of last year reaching $346,442, and that of the preceding year not having exceeded $206,180. This unusually large appropriation was warranted by an overflowing Treasury, and by the rapid, stupendous expansion of our country. That vote was given cheerfully, because we recognise in immigration one of the main factors of our increasing prosperity. We know that, last year, 112,458 immigrants settled in this country, bringing with them more than $10,000,000 of money and effects, whilst the number of the previous year was but 47,991—having brought with them more than $1,000,000. That appropriation of $500,000 was given cheerfully. I repeat, without eliciting the apprehension, that this Parliament—that we, the French members, are adopting the very plan suggested thirty or forty years ago by Lord Durham, to submerge our nationality. Although speaking a language different from that of the majority, let me state that we are Canadians before all. As such, we are ready to follow our destiny at all risks and hazards, firmly believing that, under the safeguards of our Constitution and of our well balanced system of parties, justice and liberty shall be always the lot of the subject of Queen Victoria in this country. As such, we are prepared to welcome, to give a helping hand to the emigrants from all climes, from all latitudes, who are in search of broad, space and freedom—as such, we are prepared to welcome the emigrants from all countries, either from the Icelandic shores, from the steppes of Russia, from picturesque Switzerland, from the over-crowded districts of Germany and Great Britain—that nursery of nations—as such, we are prepared to assist the British Government in giving to the Irish people the land which they could not possess in their own country, the peace which they could not find, and the Home Rule for which they are agitating. In fact, our Dominion is broad enough to make a landlord of every Irish peasant. That diversity of races far from being detrimental, will be most desirable, most advantageous. Although at times it may give rise to a considerable amount of friction, it will produce a laudable spirit of emulation. Each would naturally strive for the highest prize. As far as we are concerned, we have learned a great deal in our contact with other nationalities. The great empire to which we belong, the great nation to the south of us, have all been made rich, progressive and powerful by a variety of races—so shall it be with us. We shall combine the energy, the industry and various qualities of all those races, and we shall make of them a great Canadian nationality. But whilst prepared to incur all legitimate sacrifices towards drawing to our shores the surplus population of overcrowded Europe, we have the right to expect that the Government will take all necessary steps to assist the return of those Canadians on the other side of the line who desire to come back to their native land, to share its progress and prosperity, to give it the benefit of their labor and industry, and to work out with us the problem of its future. Of course, there will be always a certain emigration to the States, it is as impossible to stop it entirely as to stem the flowing of the St. Lawrence. But let us reduce it to its smallest proportions. During many years the agents of the States have been telling the world that Canada could not support its own children—and it will be a great stroke of policy, apart from all other consideration, if not satisfied with keeping our own people, with receiving our share of immigration, we are still able to repatriate thousands of our fellow citizens. Such a measure which has already been partly accomplished by the National Policy would redound forever to the credit of the Government, and would be a crowning title to the confidence of this House, and to the gratitude of the whole country.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I regret very much that my hon. colleague the Minister of Agriculture is not in his place to answer my hon. friend who has just taken his seat; but it would be unfair to the hon. gentleman, and to his speech, to allow it to remain without an answer. I must begin by congratulating the hon. gentleman on his effort to-day. He has shown that when he undertakes any subject, he always studies it thoroughly, and treats it admirably before the House; nevertheless, I must say to my hon. friend that I think he takes too much to heart some remarks which are occasionally made by private individuals on the French Canadian race, either in the press, or in some other manner. Those remarks, of course, are sometimes offensive to the French Canadian race; but I think we have reached that period in our national history, and in our national position, that as French Canadians we may let these attacks pass unnoticed. Our position is such, that to day there is no danger about our keeping our own ground in this country, and extending our hold to any part of the Dominion to which we think proper to go. More than that, the progress which the French Canadian race has made, the position which it has attained, not only in the Province of Quebec and in the other Provinces, the position that it has in this Parliament, either in the one House or in the other, and the position which the members we have in this House according to our population give us, is such that we need not be uneasy as to what newspapers or public men, or any other individuals, may say with respect to us. My hon. friend has referred to the past of the French Canadian race, and to its present position. He has spoken of the loyalty of our race; but, although I must say that we are as loyal as he has represented, I must add that we are not more loyal than are the other races in this Dominion. In fact, we are all loyal, and the idea even of attacking at this day our loyalty has passed away. We are now on the same footing, and we intend to remain on the same footing, which the other races in this country occupy; and we do not intend that they shall imagine that our position as British subjects, as far as our loyalty to the Crown of England is concerned, differs in any particular from theirs. We admire their loyalty—we admire their position, but for ourselves we do not intend to be attacked or belittled. We have come to this period in our national history when we should strive to make this the great country which Providence evidently intended us to make it. We have large institutions, most liberal institutions—institutions based on the Constitution of England. Institutions which have been accepted by the people of the country, and more than that institutions which were petitioned for from the British Parliament, and which the British Parliament and Government gave to us word for word as we wanted them. Therefore, we have not to complain that those institutions were imposed on the Province of Quebec. When the first union of the Canadas took place it was imposed upon the French race without their will, and, therefore, we complained of it though we used those institutions to work the Government of this country to the benefit of the people. The result was that when, in 1861, the question came up of making a larger union, you did not see the French race standing up on the one side and not keeping pace with the progress of the country. On the contrary, the French race went hand in hand with the English, the Scotch, the Irish, and the Germans, and the other races of this country—all went together to secure the institutions which we enjoy to-day. Therefore, I say that we must leave those remarks which are occasionally made against us, to the criticism of public opinion, which will very soon put down the parties who may make those attacks on one section of the people or the other. But my hon. friend goes further, and he says that we welcome the other races amongst us. He is perfectly right. Whenever an Englishman, or a Scotchman, or an Irishman, or a German comes to the Province of Quebec, he is welcomed; and whilst the large emigrations took place at different periods of our history, when great scourges periodically destroyed the men and women and sometimes children who were emigrating to our shores—when hundreds of young children who were left there destitute, did our people say these are not our blood, they do not speak our language, they do not belong to our creed? No; nothing of the kind. They said they are orphans, their fathers and mothers are gone, and they were adopted by the French Canadians of the Province of Quebec, and they became French Canadians. They speak our language though they have English, Scotch or Irish names. For instance, you find French speaking Canadians named Cameron and Alain, and so you find other Scotchmen who have not been adopted in that way though they are settled amongst us, and are called Frasers. I do not think it is a bad thing that having settled among the French race they speak the language of the country. We are not disposed to carry war against others; but we wish, not only to live in peace and harmony with our neighbors in this country, but we wish also to have the same privileges as they have, and settle not only on our own territory—the Province of Quebec—but occasionally make a little raid into the eastern portion of Ontario and settle there. I think this is an increase of the population of Ontario which does no harm, and we intend not only going there but remaining there. We have settled also in the western portion of Ontario, and we intend remaining there for the good of Ontario. Whilst Ontario has lost a portion of its population, which is going either to the United States, Manitoba, or the North-West, that Province is getting numbers of French settlers—good men, law abiding citizens, loyal subjects of the Queen. They are going there, and they say we want to live alongside of you Englishmen, Scotchmen, and all Canadians, and I have no doubt there are many in Ontario who will be glad to see those Frenchmen going there. My hon. friend the hon. member for Ottawa (Mr. Tassé) says that he regrets that a number of our people have gone to the United States, and have not yet come back. He is perfectly right in that. If our people wish to emigrate we wish them to emigrate, not to the United States, but to the other Provinces of the Dominion, or to the North-West. Let them remain on Canadian soil, under the old flag; let them remain under the institutions which promise to make us a great people. But if they go to the United States, let us do all we can to bring them back. I assure the hon. gentleman that the desire of the Government is that as many of them as we can, may be brought back to Canadian soil. We wish them to come back; but you know, Mr. Speaker, that a number of them have settled in that country. They have married there, they have their families in their business there, and those men will not come back. They have settled there the same as those who left Quebec, and have gone to Ontario, Manitoba, or the North-West; they have gone there for good, they want to settle there; and though they are a loss to the Province of Quebec, they are, nevertheless, a gain to the other Provinces and to the Dominion. For my own part, and I may say, also, on the part of my colleague, we are all as glad to hear our friends make their remarks with reference to the representations to the Government. If they think that the policy of the Government is not going far enough in one direction we wish them to tell us so, as the hon. gentleman has done in very good and proper language. He says he thinks we might do more to bring back the portion of the population which went to the United States. I have no doubt that his remarks will be read with pleasure by the hon. Minister of Agriculture, and that he will not fail to do what can be done to meet the views of the hon. gentleman, at all events to a great extent. I was not prepared to answer the hon. gentleman, or take any part in this debate. I thought my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture would have been in his place to answer him; but I think he supposed that this motion was not coming up to-day. However, the hon. gentleman must see that although there may be a great many of these settlers in the United States from Canada who have not come back, yet there is not only what the Government may do to repatriate these men, but there is a great deal that can be done outside the Government to help the Government. The hon. gentleman knows what has been done elsewhere. He spoke of the Mennonites; but how was it that the attention of the Government was brought to the Mennonites. There were leading men in their country who wished their people to immigrate together, and they combined for that purpose. They came over after having had communication, and they obtained information, and they obtained also the concessions which Parliament granted. If our compatriots in the United States, whether of French Canadian, English, Scotch or Irish origin, who wished to come back to this country, why should there not be a combination amongst them in order to obtain the information they want? If, as I believe, a good many of them want to come back, let them do as was done elsewhere—in England, Scotland, Ireland, Germany, and Scandinavia, and get up organizations of their own and then communicate with us. I do not say that something more cannot be done by the Government; but a good deal can be done by these people themselves, and also by those colonization societies, which are really societies of the people, because they come into existence by subscriptions from the people. I have no doubt that when the remarks made by my hon. friend are published, they will produce a good effect, and he may depend upon it that my colleague, when he reads those remarks, will not fail to go as far as he can in the direction the hon. gentleman has indicated.

Mr. ROYAL (Translation). Mr Speaker: The hon. Minister of Public Works was justified in observing that a great part of the work of repatriation should be effected by Colonization Societies and by private enterprise. In this respect, I think the Canadians who have already settled in Manitoba have no reason for reproach. Since 1875 a Colonization Society has been established there which has extended to some French Canadian settlements in the United States, and assisted by the all powerful influence of the hon. Minister of Agriculture, we have attracted a current of emigration, which already has furnished us with several hundred families. The highly patriotic address of the hon. Minister of Public Works and of my hon. friend, the member from Ottawa (Mr. Tassé), will certainly find an echo, not only in the Province from which I am an humble representative in this House, but also among the French Canadian settlements in the United States, who only await a favorable opportunity to return to this country. Of course, Mr. Speaker, we should not confine ourselves to obtaining our contingent of European emigration. We should have a more complete system than that of the United States. Not only should we try and get from the different races which inhabit Europe, the Latin as well as the Celtic races, a share of the contingent which sets out from their frontiers every year; but we should also be careful to entice into the new Provinces, established to the west of the old ones, a large part of our fellow-countrymen. I believe, and experience will sustain what I say, that the new Provinces which we have established west of Lake Superior, ought to be settled by Canadians. The climatic conditions, the signs of winter, the intense cold which prevails, the requirements of agriculture, as well as our domestic institutions, all endorse the opinion which I have just advanced. I say that a European emigration cast into the vast plains of the West without any preparation, if it has no nucleus around which it can rally, whose example it can imitate, will be exposed to great dangers, to numerous sacrifices, and to reverses which will retard our work of European emigration. We discussed a few days ago the figures, as well as the estimates, of the hon. Minister of Agriculture for the current year, and the next day we discussed within these precincts the best means to colonize, by wise legislation, our North-West Territories; and thither direct the flood of emigration. This, perhaps, is the best time to investigate the question as to the best class of emigration for the North-West. We could certainly compete with the other nations of the American continent in striving to attract the surplus foreign population, to assist us in building up foreign nationalities on this continent. Our country is a highway to a great extent for considerable masses of emigrants, and, consequently, if the United States can invite immigration to their borders without any danger of losing it, I think we must take a different course from the one we are now following. The smallest loss of our vital forces is a serious loss, in view of the small number of immigrants which we succeed in planting on the soil of Canada. I will not complain; our winters, far from being injurious as far as social life is concerned, have been for us a great safeguard in the past, and will continue to be in the future. The northern people, by reason of their constitution, by reason of the air they breathe, by reason of their habits and institutions, more liberal than we find in the north of any country, find in our winters an element which we appreciate at its proper value. I think it would be possible by a well-conceived and adopted policy of emigration to repatriate a certain number of the 700,000 natives of Canada scattered at the present time along the frontiers of the United States. Repatriation is not a mere sentiment. I think it should be one of the bases of a good system of emigration. The inhabitant of any Province who leaves the soil of Canada to reside in the United States, constitutes a loss which is in no way compensated by European emigration. We usually lose our youth, and this youth which should be retained not only in the old Provinces but directed to the West, would assist us in building up our future nationality. I, therefore, believe that the Government would gain immensely in a social and economic point of view, if the hon. Minister of Agriculture took the necessary steps to do what has already been done to facilitate the repatriation of Canadians of every origin which are in the United States. In 1874-75 the repatriation amounted to several hundred families. With this contingent we established three large parishes, viz.: St. John the Baptist, St. Joseph and St. Pius. Moreover, Mr. Speaker, apart from the families which formed into parishes we have a considerable number of people who came from the United States, who established themselves in the old parishes, taking the place of the hundreds who sold their properties in order to go farther west. Again, a certain proportion of Canadians—I speak of Canadians, of French as well as English origin—a part of these Canadians only came to Manitoba with a view of going to the North-West Territories. To-day they are establishing important settlements which already are called towns, and which will play an important rôle in the Provinces about to be formed. This repatriation is, therefore, not a matter of sentiment, it is not simply a theory, it is not simply a patriotic idea which we express here, and which finds an echo in every soul which loves his country; but we have the tangible results of a system which was adopted some years ago by the Government of Canada. The hon. member for Ottawa observed, a few moments ago, with a good deal of reason, that the hon. Minister of Agriculture, and the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) had done much to encourage, to direct and to sustain the repatriation of Canadians. It was to him we owe in great part the idea expressed by the present hon. Minister of Agriculture. It is only right to do justice to whom it is due, and if, at the present time, we realize that we owe much to the late Government, it is a strong reason to appeal to the present Government, which has at least as much, if not more, means at its disposition. Mr. Speaker, repatriation has set in from the United States. The Canadians who emigrated to the United States were induced to do so for several reasons which the hon. member from Ottawa has not seen fit to investigate. Nevertheless, whatever may be the reasons, the Canadians who go to the United States, and, who are attracted thither by the immense industrial production there existing, by a milder climate, by parental relations, by family associations, find there inducements insufficient if they do not succeed in life; and very strange to say, the efforts which have hitherto been made have scarcely arrested in any perceptible manner that mysterious fever which seems to push population westward. It seems to me that if this repatriation organized by private colonization societies, were aided and sustained by the hon. Minister of Agriculture, that the success which attended the past would also attend future efforts, and on a much larger scale, because at that time Manitoba was not known; and it was only by advertisements, by publications, and all manner of means, that we made known to the world that it was not a country covered with snow for nine months in the year. To-day it is well known that our lands are fertile; that our winters are not more severe than elsewhere; that the soil gives large returns, and is superior to any other part of Canada. It seems to me that the task is easier to-day, and that for the $1 or $5, which were given at the time as a premium to the repatriated Canadians, we could, to-day, give $15 or $20, that is, give to him the same sum as is given to a European emigrant. I am of the opinion that the result would be more in harmony with the policy which we ought to follow, to establish a nationality. I have some letters here from Canadian families who testify their desire to leave the United States. When the heads of Canadian families emigrate to the United States with their families, it is by reason of misfortunes. It is either misery, fire, ruin, under one form or other, which forces them to expatriate themselves. These heads of families having many children, locate themselves in manufacturing centres, and there try to make a living. But soon the atmosphere of the factories endanger the health of the children, sickness develops among them, and, instead of a prosperous family blessed with health, the homestead is transformed into a species of hospital. These families, in order to reach Manitoba, must necessarily travel a great distance, say 1,800 or 1,900 miles. It is only just, therefore, that the Government should come to their assistance, that the Government should do for them what they do for European emigrants; and I feel assured that, instead of having 100, 200, or 300 families coming from the United States per annum, these figures would be doubled, and would even counterbalance the number of families which come from Europe at so great a cost. You are aware, Mr. Speaker, that a Canadian who emigrates to the North-West is much better adapted to become a settler and to work for the aggrandizement and prosperity of the country than an European. He is accustomed to our climate, to our system of husbandry, to our municipal institutions, and his ambition is to make a new Ontario, New Brunswick or Quebec, when he has gone to the Western Provinces. Thus, instead of having an emigration polluted with ideas brought by European immigrants, by ideas of Socialism and Nihilism, we would have men imbued with ideas of Canadian civilization, and who would endeavor to establish, in the western part of this continent, a new Canada. Mr. Speaker, allusion has been made to the Mennonites. The Mennonites are certainly good producers; and in this respect, I think, it would be difficult to find, in any part of the world, a class more independent of the institutions and of the population which surrounds them than the Mennonites. They are an imperium in imperio. The Mennonites have a peculiar character which prevents them from assimilating with municipal institutions of the country where they reside. This was the case, not only in the United States, but especially in our western plains. With your permission, Mr. Speaker, I will quote from the Official Report the following which will enable us to understand the character of the community which the Mennonites have established in the North-West. I take the following from the excellent report of Mr. J. E. Tétu, Immigration Agent at Emerson, in 1879:

"The Mennonites here have a government for themselves which decides in all civil and religious matters, and which they obey. In each village there is a Schultz (Mayor) elected for two years, who administers the affairs of the community, and who exercises considerable authority. I cannot precisely define the extent of these powers nevertheless. Above this dignitary there is the Ober Schultz (Grand Mayor) elected for four years, who is the sovereign Judge of all the population. It is he who, with the assistance of the other Schultz, regulates all important questions. A Mennonite never undertakes anything without consulting first the Ober Schultz even in the least important matters. The recent Ober Schultz is Mr. Isaac Miller. He resides at New Hurst, one of the villages of the reserves, and at present is in his second term of office. The seat of government is situate in the village of Reinland where there is a church, a court of justice, with a clerk. Mr. Peter Wheims is the present clerk. Every Saturday the Ober Schultz presides as Judge.

"The chief of the religious administration, who is designated by the name of Aclteste, or warden, presides over the religious exercise in the somewhat unique looking church at Reinland, blesses marriages, &c. The Aclteste is assisted by six Bishops, who take his place as occasion may require, for the exercise of his functions. The heads of this religion or sect are elected by a general vote of the population, and, as a rule, they are not better instructed or more enlightened than those who elect them.

"There is a school in each village. Reading, writing, German, and arithmetic on a small scale, are taught; the teachers are not well instructed, and their teaching is very defective. There is no lack of good disposition on the part of the Mennonites, but by their habits and manners they are opposed to all outside influence.

"For instance, you could not prevail on them to accept a government subsidy for their schools, nor teachers instructed or chosen outside of their society.

"For the same reason they refuse to have a post-office, lest it might be conducted by a stranger outside of their ranks.

"There were, in 1879, 38 villages, 703 families, 1,917 individuals of the male, and 1,627 of the female sex, amounting altogether to 3,544 souls."

It thus appears, Mr. Speaker, that there are 38 Mennonite villages, 703 families, 1,917 males and 1,627 females, making in all 3,544 souls. These are a few details relative to this strange economic organization which we have in the west of Manitoba. These people do not mix in any manner with the population which surrounds them. They remain outside of our municipal and social organization. They take no part in our political elections, and, in a word, they constitute an isolated government peculiar to themselves. A few years after their arrival in Manitoba a few of their young men went to work about the neighborhood. Soon it was learned that these young men were going to marry young women who were not Mennonites. Immediately a decree was issued recalling all Mennonites at work, and since then, neither for gold nor silver, have we been able to hire young men or young women among the Mennonites for domestic service. Thus you can see how to what extremes this exclusiveness of this particular organization called Mennonite extends. The Icelandic emigration has also been referred to. This emigration has not been successful. It has been a complete fiasco, notwithstanding the large amount expended for this purpose. The Icelanders who, if I may so express myself, were placed on the shores of Lake Winnipeg, were neither husbandmen nor fishermen. After the Government had supported them for one or two years, they quitted their reserves and scattered themselves over Manitoba; but the greater part of them went to the United States. To return, therefore, Mr. Speaker, to the matter first under consideration, and to give a practical result to what has been said, I think that the Department of Agriculture ought to give not only the greatest attention to European emigration, but also to embrace in their programme the repatriation of Canadians in the United States, and when we speak of the repatriation of Canadians we do not merely allude to French Canadians, but to Canadians of every origin and from all the Provinces. Of the 70,000 Canadians scattered along the frontier on the American side, I think the Government could repatriate 50,000 per annum. I second, with pleasure, the motion of the hon. member for Ottawa.

Motion agreed to.

LIBRARY OF PARLIAMENT.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell), in the absence of Mr. COLBY, moved that the first report of the Joint Committee of both Houses on the Library of Parliament be concurred in.

Motion agreed to.

DUFFERIN BRIDGE.

Mr. CASEY moved for copies of all correspondence between the hon. Minister of Customs and any parties in reference to the remission of duty on the iron imported for the construction of Dufferin Bridge in 1873; with copy of any Order in Council authorizing such remission, and of the memorandum of the hon. Minister of Customs recommending such remission, with reasons therefor; and statement of value of iron as entered and of amount of duty remitted. He said: My attention has been called to the fact that no duty has been yet collected on the iron imported for the construction of Dufferin Bridge, built, I think, in 1873. It is reported that the iron was not entered in the name of the actual contractor, but in the name of one of his friends, a Mr. McGillivray, I think, so that his name should not appear on the Custom House books. It is stated that the remission of duty in question was obtained at the request of the then Mayor of the city, I think Mr. Martineau, who asked this as a favor from the Government, on two considerations: first, that the Government, as owner of the canal, should contribute something towards the cost of the bridge, and second, in consideration of a favor that had been granted by the city to the Government, namely, a strip of land on Wellington street, to enlarge the front of the Parliament grounds. Now, if this is correctly reported, the transaction appears to be a very peculiar one. In the first place, I understand that the grant of the strip of land on Wellington street was made to the Government by the city before this question arose at all, and not in consideration of the remission of duty, so that no obligation rested upon the Government to grant this favor. In the second place, it does not appear that this remission of duty was a favor to the city at all, because the duty was not chargeable to the city, but to the individual who had the contract for the bridge, I think a Mr. Goodwin; so that a favor was granted to Mr. Goodwin in consideration of a favor previously granted to the Government by the city. The same argument would apply if the remission be based upon the ownership of the canal by the Government. The Government were not contributing anything to the city towards the cost of the bridge by remitting this duty, but were simply adding to the profits to be made by the contractor on his contract with the city. I suppose the hon. Minister of Customs will have all the documents in his Department, if he is not prepared to explain the matter to-day, as perhaps he is. I simply move for the papers, because the transaction appeared to be a very peculiar one.

—Mr. BOWELL. Some time ago my attention was called to the fact that the duty on the iron used in the construction of Dufferin Bridge had never been paid. On enquiry into the Department as to the reasons why this duty was not collected, I find, in the first place, that there is no report in the Department of any reasons why it was not collected, nor in fact is there any report anywhere to be found in reference to the subject at all. Upon further enquiry I learned that the Government had, at the time, consented not to collect the duty for the reason that the construction of Dufferin Bridge was supposed, to a certain extent, to be in the interest of property held by the Government, and this was consented to at the instance of the Mayor and corporation of the city. I learned, also, that the attention of my predecessor, the late Minister of Customs, was drawn to the fact, and that after having investigated the subject, after having tried to learn the reasons why the duty had not been collected, he must, no doubt, have acquiesced in the decision of his predecessor, since he took no further action in the matter. These were the explanations given to me by the Commissioner of Customs. Having learned, therefore, that the Government of 1873 had decided not to collect that duty and that the Government which preceded us, after investigation into the facts by the late Minister of Customs, must have come to the same conclusion as the preceding Government, I did not, nor did the Government deem it proper to, interfere with the arrangements that had been previously made by the Government of 1873 and acquiesced in by the late Government. There is no correspondence about the matter, and this is all the information I am able to give the House upon the matter. Under the circumstances I have stated I did not think it proper we should interfere with the arrangement made in 1873, and acquiesced in by the late Government, since the attention of the late hon. Minister of Customs had been drawn to the matter, and he took no action towards the collection of the duty.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I am not able to charge my memory with the facts of the case. If it came before the Council as it probably did, I have no recollection of it. I saw the notice of motion and spoke to the hon. gentleman about it, telling him I was under the impression there was some negotiation with the city council in this connection, but could not say so positively. There was a considerable amount of negotiation with regard to the bridge at the other end of the town, as to the amount the Government would pay, and I think it extremely likely that the same thing took place in regard to the canal bridge. There is some reason why the Government should pay a portion of the expenditure, and if the city and the corporation got the benefit of this remission of duty it was not at all a wrong step, except that I think the Government have no power to remit duties. This should be done by a vote in the House, and that is what was principally wrong in the matter.

Mr. CASEY. The whole matter seems, if anything, more obscure since the statement made by the hon. Minister of Customs, who admits that no report has been kept at all of the reasons that induced the then hon. Minister of Customs, the present hon. Minister of Railways, to take the action he did. Of course, when the matter came up before the late Government it was hard for them, as for them as at present, to find out anything about it, since there were no records. It is very strange that the matter should have been left in that way by the Government of 1873. My information is that the Government contribution did not go into the city treasury, but that the city made a contract with Mr. Goodwin to build the bridge at a certain price, he furnishing the material and being liable for the duties, and therefore the remission of the duties was simply a remission made to him, or a sum of

$2,000 or $3,000 put into his pocket. The remission may have been well intended; it may have been made as a favor to the city, but it does not seem the favor ever reached the city. I am also informed that the Mayor acted in the matter, not by the authority of the corporation, but as a personal favor to Mr. Goodwin. I was told he had written a letter to the Department, but it seems my information is incorrect in this respect, though certainly the Mayor must have made some representations to the Department. I do not know whether it is too late for the Department to enquire into the matter and see if the city got the benefit. If it did, there is not much to blame; if it did not, there is a good deal to blame. At all events, it is a reflection on the management of the Department at that time in not preserving the records of the transaction. I am sorry the hon. Minister of Railways is not able to be in his seat, as he would, probably, be able to give us some information on the subject.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. No doubt if my hon. colleague were here he would be able to show that the city did get the benefit of the duty, which it was right they should. I do not believe that the money went to the contractor, but I agree with my hon. friend opposite that the amount should have been put into the Estimates. Had it been I am sure no hon. member would have had a word to say against it.

Mr. BLAKE. That is quite probable, but there are two points of view in which certainly the transaction appears objectionable. One is, assuming the Government had the authority for this purpose, in this way, to remit the duties, I know of no transaction which it is more essential should be regularly accomplished than the transaction of the remission of duties. It is an executive power which, under certain circumstances and for certain purposes, is vested in the Government; but it is obviously one liable to abuse, open to the suspicion of favoritism, and in respect to which, is of the essence that a full statement should be kept of each transaction. That no record should appear in the books of the Department, how these goods were taken from the Customs without the payment of duty, is, therefore, a very lamentable statement. In the second place, the power to remit duties does not exist for this purpose. If the Government is about to make a contribution by giving up the amount of the duties, the course would be to have had a vote put in the Estimates and collect the duties. The dues would be duly collected and the country would contribute two or three thousand dollars towards the bridge, the equivalent of the dues. But neither of these steps appears to have been taken. The hon. gentleman says he is quite sure the contractor got the credit of it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not say so.

Mr. BLAKE. Well, that the contractor did not, but the city did. That will be found to be so. But I think, after what has been said to-day, it will be worth while enquiring whether the hon. gentlemen's convictions of what will be found, will, upon ascertainment, be verified. The hon. gentleman says the information which has reached him is that the city did not get any benefit, that they had contracted with the contractor for the construction of this bridge, that they had not contracted that they would pay the duty on the material, that by consequence it was for the contractor to procure the admission of the material, and that the city has not really obtained any benefit from it at all. That is worth while enquiring about, because if it be the case that the intentions of the Government have been frustrated, and that Parliament has not sanctioned this, and nobody has been released from the payment of this duty, then I think the duty ought to be collected for the purpose of carrying out what Parliament has assented to, namely, that the city should be relieved, to a certain extent, from the cost of construction of this bridge. But I do not know how we are to be certified of that unless some enquiry is made with reference to the facts of this transaction. Of course, had the records been kept, and had the transaction been announced, as it would have been announced had the records been kept—a record of this particular remission, along with the other remissions at an earlier date—then the facts of this case, at least those facts which appear to-day, would have come before Parliament, and it would have been much easier to find the duty. But I presume the transaction with the city was not so irregular and not so devoid of public interest as the transactions of the Government appear to have been. I presume that the contract with the contractor is available, or the price the city paid him is available, and that, therefore, it is easily to be seen whether this was in fact remitted to the city or remitted to the contractor.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. A great many things have happened since 1873. The hon. gentleman says it is quite irregular; I say it is irregular, and I am not at all sure that the Government who have inherent powers under the Audit Act, should not have repaired the irregularity. At all events that power ought not to be lightly exercised. But since 1873, at all events, this remission took place, and in 1873 the Government of that day went out and a Reform Government came in. The hon. gentleman was a member of that Reform Government, and from 1873 to 1878 the facts were before that Government, but the Government did not in any way trace up this irregularity. The hon. member who moves this thinks he has made a point; the leader of the Opposition thinks he must support him. The hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) gets up and candidly and honestly says that he believes, from his faint recollection of the matter, that there were some negotiations on the matter. I do not myself remember anything about it, because it is a considerable distance of time between 1873 and 1878; but I have little doubt that the city got the advantage of it, and that the negotiations the hon. gentleman says were going on to help the town, first to the Chaudiere bridge and then to the Dufferin bridge, resulted in these duties not being executed. It is a small thing to make a fuss about, but still there must be a fuss about something.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. gentleman is mistaken in saying I recollect negotiations going on. I recollect negotiations about the other bridge, and there may have been about this. I was not able to charge my memory with it. It must have taken place before we came in. It would not naturally come before us at all, and did not come before us that I recollect—though I think I recollect some discussion that embraced both bridges, but my recollection is very faint indeed.

Mr. CASEY. My information is very positive. I think it worth enquiring into.

Motion agreed to.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

RAILWAY TRAFFIC ON THE LORD'S DAY.

Mr. McMULLEN, in moving for a return showing the number of petitions presented to this House, praying for such legislation as will secure a better observance of the Lord's Day, as regards the running of railway trains, &c., &c., together with the aggregate number of names attached thereto, said: 'The House will, no doubt, remember that I recently put a question to the Government with regard to what course they intended to take with respect to the petitions that had been presented to this House upon this question. I was very sorry that the Government answered me that it was not their intention this Session to take any action upon that matter. I feel bound to bring this question before the House in some shape, because the number of petitions that have been presented from the several constituencies throughout this Dominion, I think, deserves from this House and at the hands of the Government, more than a mere passing notice. I think it is quite time, when a question of this kind is so urgently pressed upon the House with regard to the observance of the Lord's Day, that some action should be taken, either by the House or by the Government, in trying to prevent, in the future, a continuance of the desecration complained of. I find that several religious denominations throughout the country have taken action also. This is not a political question; it is a question upon which I believe, and trust that a very large number of the hon. members of this House will agree, that it is our duty to lend our aid and assistance in trying to secure whatever legislation is necessary in order to meet the expressed wish of the petitioners who have sent in memorials upon this subject. I am not going to say that perhaps it would be wise and judicious to have such legislation as would prohibit altogether the running of trains on the Lord's Day. I am quite prepared to admit that circumstances may exist when it may be necessary to run trains—trains that leave the ordinary hour on Saturday night, and possibly permitted to reach their destination on the next day. But I hold that when freight trains are so generally run on the Lord's Day as they are in this country, and on some lines, that it is not necessary that they should be allowed to continue this practice. I say that we ought to take steps to secure a better observance of the Lord's Day, and though we might permit the running of trains that cannot very well reach their destination except by encroaching on the Lord's Day, I think we ought to prevent trains starting on that day and continuing their journey when there is no absolute necessity for it. I am also prepared to admit that when a train has left its station point on a day that would enable it to reach its destination before the Sabbath and through some unforeseen difficulty or accident is prevented from reaching its destination before the Sabbath, it should be allowed to complete its journey on that day; also a train carrying perishable commodities that might suffer serious damage by being detained. In these cases there might be some reasonable excuse for allowing trains to run on the Lord's Day, and to this effect legislation should be had so that something in the shape of a permit issued by some Government official should be granted to enable a train to go on to its destination. But I say, with regard to all other trains, some steps should be taken to meet the very proper wishes of the petitioners. I am sorry, as I said before, that the Government have not seen it to be their duty to take the step asked by the petitioners. I think, when such a number of petitions are presented, they should be sufficient to convince the Government that an evil exists, and that to an extent which the people of the country feel, and it is the duty of the House and the Government when petitions of this kind are presented, at least to give them some consideration, and if the question cannot be dealt with fully the Government at least should advance a step in the direction of meeting public opinion on a question of this important character. If we allow the Sabbath to be desecrated in this way it will become a standing evil and will grow upon the people. It is demoralizing to the youth of the country. At the railway stations along the line young men gather, waiting for the arrival of trains to watch them as they pass. I hold it is the duty of the House and of the Government to see that something is done to prevent the continuation of this system, if it can be prevented, which I believe it can be. I notice that this subject has been before Parliament before. In 1878 an hon. gentleman brought it up, and it evoked considerable discussion. I was glad to see that the hon. gentleman, who was then leader of the Government, Mr. Mackenzie, stated at that time that he had stopped the running of Sunday trains on the Intercolonial. I believe that was done during his Administration, and I am glad even that step was taken; I believe, also, that the hon. gentleman took steps with respect to the running of canal boats and the opening of canal locks on Sunday. I do not know whether the condition of things he established still continues, but I hope the restrictions then imposed are still in force and will be continued, and that some legislation will be introduced by the Government, if not this Session—for I believe it is too late to move in the matter—at least next Session to carry into effect the wishes of the petitioners and place restrictions on Sunday traffic. I hold the Government have a very serious responsibility resting upon them in connection with this matter. People have presented petitions, because they feel that an evil exists, and that it is growing, and if we shut our eyes and ears to their remonstrances, and the curse of Him who rules dominions and nations should fall on our land owing to the desecration of the Lord's Day, the responsibility will rest at our doors, and at the doors of the Government, and not with the good people of the Provinces who are pressing this question upon us.

Mr. ALLEN. I go a little further than the hon. member who has just addressed the House, and I would entirely restrict trains from running on the Sabbath. If any arrangement is made by which trains are allowed to run, if they carry perishable commodities, it is more than probable that arrangements will be made in Chicago or other places, by which such trains will be allowed to pass through our country on the Sabbath. That should be prevented. Another matter which I should like to see taken up by the Government, is the running of steamboats on the Lord's Day. It is a fact, that in almost all sea-port towns in this country, congregations worshipping every Sabbath are disturbed very much by steamboats and trains running on that day. I hope the Government will see it to be in their interest, and in the interest of the country, to place some restriction on that traffic, and give magistrates such power that summary measures may be dealt out to offenders, and thus stop Sabbath-breaking, which is becoming so general. I hope the Government will do that for the country which the Christian Church in every quarter demands.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Before the motion is carried I desire to say that the mover can hardly declare that the Government do not want to give any consideration to the matter, because the Government said they were not ready to suggest any legislation this Session. The fact that the Government are not able to propose a measure this year should not be interpreted to mean that they are not prepared to consider the petitions. Those petitions are received from a number of people whose ideas and principles lead them to petition Parliament in that direction. Every petition to this House, especially on a subject of that kind, is worthy of consideration, and the Government, when it stated, through a member of the Ministry, that they were not ready this year to submit a measure, did not say they would not take the petitions into consideration. I must say, however, that if the hon. gentleman's proposal should be carried out to its full extent it would, perhaps, be found that petitions would be received in another direction. He would find, most likely, that if the British and foreign mails arriving at Halifax on Sunday should be detained until Monday, the whole of the West would complain at their detention for twenty-four hours. Those points have all to be considered, and it is not such an easy matter as the hon. mover believes it to be, to regulate this subject. I must say, however, that the Government are as much in favor of observing the Lord's Day as is any hon. member on the other side of the House. We are favorable to it, and we would not be doing our duty if we did not say so, and act on that statement. The fact is, that we avoid running trains on the Intercolonial on Sunday as far as possible, and the same applies to vessels passing through the canals. The hon. mover spoke of Mr. Mackenzie's Administration as having stopped Sunday traffic on the canals to a very great extent. I am not ready to say whether it was so or not—no doubt the hon. gentleman must have been informed that it was under the Government of the hon. member for East York—but the same rule is observed to-day and has been observed since we came back to power in 1878. Of course the hon. gentleman is aware that at the end of each season there is a great rush of traffic, and for two or three Sundays at the close of the season boats are allowed to go through the canal because a great deal of produce might otherwise be damaged or destroyed. There is no objection to the granting of this motion.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. gentleman is right in his recollection as to canal traffic. The canals were not closed on Sundays when I took office. Some have been opened for traffic, and I am afraid are open for traffic still—the canals on the Ottawa River. These were not placed in the same position as the Welland and St. Lawrence canals.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Ottawa canals are not open every Sunday during the season, but only for a couple of Sundays at the end of navigation when there is danger of the canals being closed; then we allow vessels to go through in order to save the cargoes.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I believe, in common with the petitioners, that it is important that we should preserve the sanctity of the Sabbath Day. I believe it is essential to our strength, liberty and welfare generally that there should be a day of rest, and anything that interferes with that deserves the attention of Parliament with a view to measures being proposed for its removal. On the other hand, I doubt exceedingly whether this House has power and is competent for it to undertake the legislation asked for by the petitions now before the House. It is clearly a matter which belongs to the Provinces, in my opinion; but the Government, with its control over its own railways and canals, can do much to promote the proper observance of the Lord's Day, and to that extent, I think, we may fairly call on the Government to do all it possibly can. I do not know what regulations at present are on the Intercolonial, but I recollect that the regulations that were made were something like this: that freight trains should stop over the Sabbath, wherever they happened to lie, unless they had to run some little distance for fuel or some necessity for existence, but that through passenger trains within any reasonable distance, should complete their journey. The passenger train reaching Halifax early in the morning, for instance—about nine o'clock, I think—passed Truro about six o'clock, or thereabouts, as it seemed unreasonable to expect a whole train load of passengers to wait within sixty miles of Halifax for the sake of two or three hours' journey on the Sabbath morning. It was, therefore, arranged that this train should complete its journey, but that any train reaching Moncton, or some central town, should not proceed during the Sabbath, so as to afford everyone opportunity of worshipping and enjoying the rest of the Sabbath. I recollect one very strong advocate of rigid Sabbath observance in the Province of Nova Scotia, who wrote—I was going to say savagely, but very strongly at any rate—to the newspapers denouncing myself and the Government, because we did not do more than this; but I found, that this gentleman went in one of the morning trains on the Sabbath to preach in Halifax, and I am afraid, that we would find examples of that sort now and then. I think, apart from all controversy as to what proper Sabbath observance really means, or as to whether it is a sentiment with some, or a matter of necessity with others, the grand results which spring from the observance, and the beneficial effects which one day's rest out of seven has on the whole community, make it very desirable for any Government to do all in its power to promote its observance. As I said a few minutes ago, I doubt very much whether we have this in our power; personally, I think we have not; I think that its observance is a matter to be regulated by Provincial laws; and at this moment I believe that the law is such that the magistrates—in Ontario, at all events—can stop traffic on canals and railways. I recollect very well, that, some years ago, some of the officials of the Government allowed a vessel to pass through the Cornwall Canal on the Sabbath, and were promptly arrested for the desecration of the Sabbath by the magistrates at Cornwall, and the Government had to pay the fines. Now, I have known cases where magistrates interfered at railway stations, to prevent the loading and unloading of goods, under the Sabbath Observance Act; and I have pointed out to some of the petitioners who have sent petitions to this House recently, that they had the remedy in their own hands, that their magistrates in the different localities can enforce the law as it now exists, without appealing to this House to do it for them, and that it is their duty to exhaust the means which they have in their hands, under the law as it stands, to accomplish what they want to, and then to come to us, if they think we have any power, and we would do what we could to aid them in their laudable object. There will be always differences of opinion as to what constitutes the proper observance of the Sabbath, and there will be some who maintain the right to do as they please on every day of the seven; but I think, that all nations have generally fallen into the opinion—from whatever ground arrived at is a matter of little consequence—that the observance of a day of rest in every way is a necessity for the human system, and must be beneficial to any nation that adopts it. I have the utmost sympathy with the object aimed at by the petitioners who have presented petitions to the House at present, and while I would be very glad indeed to aid them in every possible way, I would be sorry to trench on the functions of the Local Legislatures even to effect that object.

Mr. WHITE, (Cardwell). I am sure that everyone will concur in the wishes of the petitioners, that the Sabbath may be observed; but there are some practical difficulties in the way, to mention which may subject one to the imputation of being indifferent and careless about the observance of that holy day. For instance, I will give an illustration; and I would be very glad if it were possible—from my standpoint, at any rate—to change it. Take the illustration of the Intercolonial Railway, where I believe the Government have done more than is done by any railway company to meet the very proper wishes of the people of this country for the observance of the Sabbath day. The Intercolonial passenger train leaves St. John on Saturday night, gets as far as Campbelltown on Sunday morning at eight o'clock, and has to remain over at Campbelltown for the observance of the Sabbath until Monday morning at eight o'clock. Now, there is no doubt about this, that a considerable portion of the Sabbath, at any rate, is desecrated—if I may use that expression—by the fact, that this train has run from midnight on Saturday, until 8 o'clock on Sunday morning, and I know from my own observance in travelling on that road, that stopping over at Campbelltown for Monday is anything but conducive to religious feeling. People find themselves in a miserable—I hope my New Brunswick friends will not consider this an improper expression to use—in, at any rate, not a very religion-inspiring place; there may be religious services held there, but if so, I confess I failed to discover them on the day I stopped over at that place, and the disposition was anything but one that would lead one to go with a proper frame of mind to church on that day. The truth is, if one must say it, that the day was given up, and must in the very nature of things, to absolute ennui, and annoyance at the detention, and to anything but real Christian feeling, or it was given up to dissipation, just as people might be disposed; and that is one difficulty in stopping trains or conveyances of any kind over Sunday at these small places. It may be possible to give to the people connected with the transportation, the opportunity of going to see their friends at these places, or to church, if they so think proper, but to the great mass who travel, instead of being a source of advantage to them from a religious point of view, I believe that it is just the reverse. Now, I know, as a newspaper man for instance—I had experience of the practice which prevailed in a newspaper office, which I know something of sometime ago, of going in Saturday night, working until Sunday morning, then stopping off until Monday, in order that the printers might not go back at any part of the Lord's day for their work. They did not go back again until Monday, and what was the result? The men worked all Saturday night until an early hour on Sunday morning, got up late in the day from the nature of things, tired and fatigued, and instead of going to church, the chances were that they went to see their friends; Sunday was not by any means a typical Sunday as kept by them, and a blue Monday almost inevitably followed. I know that a change was made connected with the establishment to which I refer: the men broke off on Saturday evening at 6 o'clock; went home and had the opportunity of going to bed early—perhaps doing the marketing with their wives that night—and next morning they got up at a reasonable hour in a frame of mind to go to church; and although they came to the printing office and did the same number of hours' work on Sunday night which they used to do on Sunday morning, when nobody was awake to see what was going on, I dare say that many people would consider this a desecration of the Lord's day, but to my mind it was nothing of the kind, just the reverse; and so I believe that if the train which leaves St. John on Saturday night, left it at 11 o'clock on Sunday night, and travelled straight to Quebec, there would be less desecration of the Lord's day by the employés of the railway, and certainly those who travel on that train would be in a better frame of mind by going straight on their journey westward. There is no doubt that this whole question is surrounded by most serious difficulties; but there is no greater fallacy than to suppose that the stoppage of a train at a wayside station on Sunday is to the advantage of the observance of the Sabbath or the promotion of Christian sentiment. All that can be done—all that ought to be done—and I think every one will say that it should be done—is to so arrange the trains on railways and the steamers that there may be as little stopping over as possible. So, with regard to our canals, if a steamer enters a canal late on Saturday night, and if it is found that it cannot go on, it is true that the religiously-minded connected with the vessel may go to church if they think proper; but I venture the opinion—though it may be regarded as somewhat heterodox—that to the persons on that vessel the staying over at a particular place on Sunday, with practically nothing to do, infinitely more harm would be done, from a religious point of view, and as much harm from a physical point of view, as if the boat had proceeded on its journey. I think the question is so surrounded by difficulties that no hard-and-fast rule can well be laid down, and that the true plan is to adopt such means as will secure as few detentions of passengers and others as possible by the proper arrangement of the time of departure, and in that way prevent a great evil—the accumulation of passengers and persons connected with trains at small wayside stations, which is simply provocative of a great deal of dissipation, instead of tending to religious fervor or Sabbath observance.

Mr. BOURBEAU (Translation). Mr. Speaker: I cannot allow this motion to pass without making a few remarks as to the observation of the Lord's day. I am not aware of what is going on, on the Intercolonial Railway, on the Government Railway. I am not aware of what is done on the Government Canals; but I think the holy day of Sunday ought to be observed in a manner to attain the end for which it was instituted. I know, however, Mr. Speaker, what takes place on the Grand Trunk. I know what is going on on that line, as I live close by it, and I can say to the hon. gentlemen of this House, that this company observes Sunday very badly. It is all very well to see a train carrying the European mails running past, that cannot be helped. It is all very well to see a train laden with emigrants running past, this also cannot be helped; but when we see the employés of the Grand Trunk working on Sunday, not in removing snow, not in repairing the road to prevent accidents, but in transporting horses, in doing everything necessary, to saw and cut wood in the sheds, this is what should not be allowed. I suppose it is possible for anyone to prosecute a company which compels its employés to work in this manner, a company which abuses its power to compel its employés to do such work as sawing wood on Sunday under pain of losing their situations. The question coming up this evening, I think the time appropriate to make known to the House and to the country the manner in which the Grand Trunk acts towards its employés. I have had occasion several times to see employés of this company receive orders to go to the sheds to cut and pile wood, to supply the locomotives. I have seen four, five or six passenger or freight trains pass on Sunday. Mr. Speaker: I will say nothing more. I wish the Grand Trunk Railway Company to understand, to know that I made my protest here as to the manner in which they observe the Sunday, and my object is attained.

MANITOBA INDIAN AGENCY.

Mr. CHARLTON moved for report on the condition and management of the Manitoba Indian Agency under J. A. N. Provencher, the Indian Superintendent of the Manitoba District, made by the Government Commission of Enquiry, composed of the late W. H. Ross, Barrister, and Ebenezer McColl, Indian Agency Inspector, and the evidence upon which the same was made; also a voucher dated June 25th, 1875, for $180, signed by one Tremblay; a voucher dated June 25th, 1875, for $1,290, signed by one Tremblay; and a voucher dated December 26th, 1875, for $600, signed by one Tremblay. He said: As I presume this return will not be a very long one, I hope that it will be brought down and laid on the Table before the prorogation of the House.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think that the hon. gentleman does not wish to be unfair, but, on the other hand, I think he should complete the information, by asking for all the other papers connected with this enquiry. It is only fair to the parties mentioned, that if they made any statement, or filed any document, that they should be brought down at the same time.

Motion amended by adding "and all other papers connected therewith."

Motion, as amended, agreed to.

POSTMASTERSHIP OF L'AVENIR.

Mr. RINFRET moved for copies of the complaints brought against the Postmaster of L'Avenir, county of Drummond, during the year 1832, and the evidence given at the enquiry which took place in the matter, as well as the correspondence between the Government and the Post Office Inspector.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell).

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Some of the reports of the Inspector cannot, of course, be brought down, because they are confidential reports to the Government, but any correspondence which we can bring down without interfering with the public service will, of course, be laid on the Table. If an Inspector makes a report to his chief which the latter may require to be very free in order to enable him to know the exact condition of affairs, that freedom would be lost if such reports were to be published. For that reason they are not usually brought down. Of course, if we see no objection to it we will bring it down.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Surely the hon. gentleman does not take the ground that every Inspector's report is a confidential document?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; but in certain cases it is. I do not know whether the report, in this case, is confidential or not. I hope it is not; if so, I will bring it down.

Motion agreed to.

PEMBINA BRANCH—GRAVEL CLAIM.

Mr. CASEY moved for copies of all correspondence, reports, accounts and other papers relating to any claim made by D. B. Woodworth, and others, for compensation for gravel, said to have been taken from claimants' land for use on the Pembina Branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway; together with a copy of the evidence respecting such claim taken before the Board of Dominion Arbitrators, showing the amount claimed, and the award, if any, made by said Arbitrators, and what sums have been paid thereunder.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). I think a motion of this kind, that reflects on, or rather refers to a member of this House, should be moved in his presence. I would, therefore, move the adjournment of the debate, so as to allow Mr. Woodworth an opportunity to make any statement he thinks proper to make.

Motion, to adjourn debate, agreed to.

THE VICE-ADMIRALTY COURTS.

Mr. DALY moved for a return showing the amount of money paid as the emoluments of their offices, to the Judge, the Registrar and the Marshal of the Vice-Admiralty Court at Quebec, and the amount paid to each of those officers of the Vice-Admiralty Courts at Halifax and St. John respectively; also, a return showing the number of libels filed and cases tried in the said courts respectively, from the first day of July, 1867, to the present date. He said: I move for this return for the purpose of asking the Government to give its attention to the subject of the salaries of the officials of the Vice-Admiralty Courts at Halifax and St. John. It appears that the Judges of these courts now receive but $600 a year each, and that the registrars and the marshals receive nothing whatever beyond the fees derived from the suits which come before the courts. I find, however, that the Judge of the Vice-Admiralty Court at Quebec, receives $2,000 a year, the registrar $666, and the marshal $333. There may be some very good reason for the difference. I have no doubt that the officers of the Quebec Court fully deserve the salaries awarded to them; at the same time, I fail to see why the distinction should be made. This subject has already been brought before the notice of the House. I believe that at the present time, there is correspondence passing between this Government and the Government of Great Britain, with the view of the Vice-Admiralty Courts in the Maritime Provinces, which are not Imperial Courts, being made subject to Canadian jurisdiction alone. Should that suggestion be carried out, I think it very proper that we should now ask the Government to take into consideration the remuneration of these officers. It is with that view that I make this motion; and

I believe the statistics will show that the amount of labor performed by the Judges, both in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick, as well as the number and importance of the causes tried by them, are equal to those in the Quebec Court. Therefore I hope that on the first opportunity steps will be taken to remedy what appears to me an anomalous state of affairs.

Motion agreed to.

MOTIONS FOR RETURNS.

Motions for the following Returns were severally agreed to:—

Copies of all correspondence, reports, &c., (not hitherto ordered) between the Government of Canada and the Harbor Commissioners of Quebec and of Montreal, the Boards of Trade of various localities in the country, and any persons interested therein, respecting the deepening of Lake St. Peter, and the channels of the St. Lawrence; the deepening of the canals, the improvement of the harbors of Quebec and Montreal, and the assumption by the Dominion of Canada of the debt contracted by the Harbor Commissioners of Montreal for improvements in the River St. Lawrence.—(Mr. Rinfret.)

Copy of award of arbitrator on claim for damages put in by contractor for Grenville and Carillon Canal under contract in force in 1871-72, with statement of sums paid thereunder.—(Mr. Casey.)

Copies of all documents or extracts from documents, showing: 1st. The total length of the Canadian Pacific Railway constructed in the Province of Manitoba, and entitled to the land grant; 2nd. The length of branch lines of the Canadian Pacific Railway constructed in the Province of Manitoba, and in like manner entitled to land grant; 3rd. The total number of acres of land given to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company by the Government of Canada, in the Province of Manitoba, under the provisions of the Act 44 Vic, chap. 1.—(Mr. Royal.)

Copies of all Orders in Council, reports and correspondence in relation to the dismissal of David Damour, heretofore captain of the lightship at Isle Rouge.—(Mr. Laurier.)

THIRD READING.

The following Bill was read the third time and passed:—

Bill (No. 25) to amend the Acts respecting Cruelty to Animals.—(Mr. Richey.)

RATE OF INTEREST.

Mr. AUGER, in the absence of Mr. CATUDAL, moved the second reading of Bill (No. 77) to fix the rate of interest in Canada.

Motion negatived on a division.

DOMINION ELECTIONS ACT AMENDMENT.

Mr. BOLDUC (Translation). In proposing the second reading of Bill (No. 85) to amend the Dominion Elections Act of 1874, said: The object of this Bill is to amend clause 109 of the Dominion Election Act of 1874. According to this clause any person can prosecute those who may be guilty of corrupt practices, and in almost every instance, the parties who bring these actions are insolvent and can give no security for the costs. By this amendment, I propose that whoever may wish to bring such actions in future, shall be compelled to make a deposit, which I will fix at $50, or leave the matter to the discretion of the Court. I also propose, Mr. Speaker, when the House goes into Committee on this Bill, to propose another amendment. By the law of 1874 the deputy returning officer is obliged to make oath as to the closing of the court; according to the present law he must take this oath either before the returning officer or a justice of the peace. In many instances it is difficult to find a justice of the peace present at the closing of the court to administer the oath. I think that the poll clerk could administer this oath to the deputy returning officer. This same law exists in the Province of Quebec and gives satisfaction to the public.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think this is a good and proper measure. If parties are subject to the annoyance of being sued innocently, there should be a guarantee that they will not have to pay the costs.

Mr. BLAKE. We are gradually making arrangements by which we will abolish all provisions for preventing violations of the Electoral Law. We have laws to try controverted elections and the arraignment on a petition against an hon. member on the one side and an hon. member on the other side. The cases come before the Judge. The counsel in the one case says he has no evidence, and the counsel in the other case says he has no evidence. The Judge summarily dismisses both cases, and both hon. members are confirmed in their seats. We have other means by which penalties are provided for corrupt practices, but proceedings are very seldom taken. I do not acknowledge what my hon. friend said, not having heard of any cases in which the law has been abused, in which for want of this additional precaution, vexatious prosecutions were brought; but there can be no doubt whatever that the additional precaution is proposed to be taken to place another obstacle by which to impede and prevent the course of justice in prosecutions for frauds and crimes against the Electoral Acts. Another provision under which Judges are bound to proceed against persons whom they find to be guilty, in the course of their enquiry, of crimes against the Election Law, has, although in various instances persons have been shown to be guilty, not being complied with, and no proceedings taken. Upon the whole, from the time we began by requiring a deposit in cash of $1,000 as preliminary until now, when we propose this extra obstacle, our proceedings seem to be more and more towards the putting of obstacles in the way of the ascertainment of crimes against the Electoral Law. If cases were made out of a system of using persons who are worth nothing as promoters of prosecutions, we might be called on to consider how far that inconvenience is to prevail, or how far some greater inconvenience might happen; but I do not understand my hon. friend to make out a case of the systematic putting forward of worthless persons in these prosecutions. I do not think that unless such a case is made out that we ought to put a single additional obstacle in the way of investigation into frauds in the Election Law or upon all those frauds.

Bill read the second time, and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. LAURIER. I see there is no provision to whom this bond is to be given or in whose hands it is to be left. If the Bill is to be of some practical value it should make some provision on these points.

Mr. BLAKE. There should also be some mode of testing whether the security is satisfactory; at least, that is generally embraced in similar legislation.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. As the hon. gentleman promoting the Bill is not now ready to make these amendments, I think the Committee had better rise and report progress, and the amendments can be got ready for the next sitting of the Committee.

Progress reported.

CHINESE IMMIGRATION.

The House resumed the adjourned debate on the proposed motion of Mr. Shakespeare: That the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole for the purpose of considering a resolution declaring it expedient to enact a law similar in principle to the law now in force in Australia, and entitled the 'Influx of Chinese Restriction Act, 1831.'

Mr. HOMER. Before this question is put I wish to make a few remarks. During the recent debate on this subject reference was made to the Chinese Restriction Act of the United States. That restrictive law was not enacted until after the completion of the overland railroad to the Pacific coast by which the State of California received from the east all the additional labor required in that State. Reference was also made to the Australian Chinese Restriction Act. Neither did these Colonies enact restrictive measures until they had obtained from the older countries a supply of immigration sufficient for their needs. That immigration was conducted by the Government, and was conveyed from Great Britain to the Australian Colonies in a chartered line of ships. So you will see that in the cases both of the United States and of Australia provision was made to replace Chinese labor with white labor before they enacted restrictive measures. The people of British Columbia stand in an entirely different position to those of other countries. That Province has no railway conveying emigrants from the Eastern Provinces to her shores. Neither are there any organized lines of packet ships conveying thousands of immigrants from the older countries to that Province, such as was and is now the case between Great Britain and the Australian Colonies; and in consequence of British Columbia not having those facilities for obtaining immigrants, she has not to-day a surplus of labor, but is in need of a largely increased supply to meet the continually augmenting requirements of the country. Almost every industry of importance in British Columbia, at the present time, is more or less dependent on Chinese labor, more particularly the coal mining, the salmon canning and the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. To place restrictions upon Chinese labor before making provision to replace it by white labor would be, in my opinion, a very serious mistake, for it might be the means of crippling those industries for years to come; but so soon as provision is made to replace the Chinese with white labor, or so soon as provision is made to obtain an increased supply of white labor, then I should be glad to support a Bill in the House for the purpose of restricting the importation of Chinese into the Dominion.

Mr. ALLEN. It may appear strange that any member on the floor of this House should advocate a law by which immigration to our country would be restricted, a country where we have so much land unoccupied, a country that requires so much labor, both for the field and domestic purposes, and where wages are so high and servants so difficult to secure; but I have had some experience in regard to Chinese immigration, and the result of that experience is that I believe a country like Canada or the United States or the Australian Colonies, where I had that experience with respect to the Chinese, is injured by that immigration. Chinese came to Australia by hundreds of thousands. They brought the greater part of their clothing with them, they purchased nothing they could avoid, they lived in the most economical manner and spent nothing in the country; everything they made they took out of the country with them, and if they should die they would not leave their bones there, although we did not consider that a very serious loss. They came there under an organized system by which companies paid their passages, and the men occupied the same position as they do in British Columbia and the United States, not one by which they were altogether slaves, but

by which all the money they earned was handed over to the company and transmitted to the country from which they came. I believe that such an immigration to any country is a disadvantage rather than a source of strength; and after having tried Chinese immigration for many years, the Australian Colony passed a restrictive measure by which not more than ten Chinese in a ship of 1,000 tons burden are allowed to come into the country. Look also at the experience of the United States. After an experience of more than a quarter of a century of the Chinese in that country, restrictive measures were adopted. When the hon. member for King's, a few nights ago, declared that the Chinese were a law-abiding and industrious people, and a people who required to be christianized—with all of which we agree—he forgot to tell the House that the United States Commission, after hearing the evidence of 138 witnesses, unanimously recommended the American Government to restrict Chinese immigration to that country. The hon. member who has just addressed the House stated that the industries of British Columbia consisted principally of mining, lumbering and fish canning, and the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Suppose we allow as many Chinese to come in as they please, they may arrive not by the hundreds or thousands but by the million, for the Flowery Land can spare them, and British Columbia would be overrun by them. What would be the effect? They would go there with the intention of taking away all the money possible from the country. If they were engaged in the gold or iron industry they would take the product away, if they were engaged in the canning business there would be the same result. Would the country be any better for that, or would the people derive any advantage from that? The same might be said of lumbering and any other industry. I believe the immigration we want for this country is a class of immigrants who would come and settle. If we allow white men to work on the railway and to develop our mineral and lumbering industry, we would keep the money in the country; and we should encourage such a class, and we should give the white men advantages over the Chinese. If Onderdonk and Company, or any other railway contractors, have to pay a little more for white labor than for Chinese labor—and the general decision is that one white man can do almost as much as three Chinese—and if the country have to pay them $200,000 extra for employing white men, I do not think we would be perpetrating any great wrong in forcing them to build the railway with white labor, if we place them in a position to pay that white labor to do the work, and I believe such a course would be for the benefit of the country. If poor white men go into the prairie country without sufficient funds to support them and enable them to build themselves a home, and therefore work on the railway, they remain in the country and spend their money here, and we thus keep the money for building the railway in the country. But when Chinese are employed the whole amount of money they earn passes into the hands of the Chinese companies, who send it out of the country. I believe they are no better than a flock of pigeons coming on to a farm and eating the wheat and carrying every grain away. Some persons will say that the Chinese give value for the money they receive. The pigeons do the same thing, but they carry away every grain from the farm. That is the position of the Chinese, and such in effect is the opinion of the people of British Columbia, who know their value and what the Province requires better than we do. Our experience and knowledge of them is very limited; but with the experience which they have had of them in British Columbia and in San Francisco, and with the experience which they have had of them in Australia, I believe we must come to the conclusion—and if we do not do so to-night, at some future date, which is not very far distant—that this country will be better off without this immigration, the absence of which will give our own people a chance.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Who will decide, when doctors disagree. We have had this subject discussed before—a few nights ago; we had, on the one hand, my hon. friend who makes this motion, and we have the hon. gentleman who has just spoken so well on this subject; and on the other hand we had the hon. gentleman from Charlotte-town, and my hon. friend from King's, New Brunswick, who is not now in his place, on the other side, defending the usefulness of the Chinese and the advantage of having them in the country. I shall take as I did before, a middle path. I shall agree with my hon. friend from the mainland, New Westminster, who says, it will be all very well to exclude Chinese labor, when we can replace it by white labor, but until that can be done, it is better to have Chinese labor than no labor at all. I am one of those who have a great sympathy with the cry both of California and Australia, against the permanent introduction or entry into a country of a foreign race. I am sufficient of a physiologist to believe that the two races cannot combine, and that no great middle race can arise from the mixture of the Mongolian and the Asian. I believe it would be a great mistake, and would tend to the degradation of the people of the Pacific; and that no permanent immigration of the Chinese people into Canada is to be encouraged as a body of settlers, but under the present system there is no fear of that. The Chinese, when they come over to British Columbia, do not bring their families, their wives, with them. They work, and I believe they earn their wages, which are given to them, or they would not be employed. When they make money enough, they return to their own country, China, and take their money with them, and therefore they are not permanent settlers. At any moment when the Legislature of Canada chooses, it can shut down the gate and say, No more immigrants shall come here from China; and then no more immigrants will come, and those in the country at the time will rapidly disappear. They have not their families with them, and leave nobody behind them, but according to their system, religion or superstition, as the hon. gentleman has just said, they will not even leave their bones behind them. They are sent back to China either alive or dead; and therefore there is no fear of a permanent degradation of the country by a mongrel race. Now, the short and pithy speech of my hon. friend from New Westminster, states exactly my opinion. He says: So soon as you can replace the Chinese by white labor, pass any legislation you like, but in the meanwhile do not deprive all the enterprises of that country, in fact, enterprises in some respects, railway enterprise and other enterprises of the only labor which they can get. In a few years you will have the Rocky Mountains pierced by a Pacific Railway, and perhaps by-and-bye, we will have an overflow from the Western States into British Columbia flowing north, but at present such is not the case. We have no white labor of any consequence going into British Columbia. There is no doubt a project pressed upon the Canadian Government by the Government of British Columbia, to aid them in bringing white labor from England around Cape Horn on vessels carrying rails to British Columbia. There is no other means of bringing them. We cannot send them to Panama, and if we try via San Francisco, they all disappear before they arrive at British Columbia; so that either they must have Chinese labor or no labor at all. It is quite true that the Chinese take away their wages, and it would be preferable, that we should get a body of workmen, and laborers, and artisans, who would remain in the country and settle in it, spend their wages in the country, raise families and become valuable settlers; but that will come very soon, and in the meanwhile until the Pacific Railway is constructed, it seems to me it would be premature to press this motion. We are asked to pass a resolution by which we will adopt the Australian law. Now, I venture to say, that very few members have yet studied the case, or have yet read, or know what the Australian law is. I venture to say that it would be quite impossible for this House to adopt this resolution in its entirety. The employment of these people is, I think, an absolute necessity. I am told that in the Island, you cannot get a servant; you cannot get a cook, unless a Chinaman; and the cry for the present is got up by a few whites, those there, and who like to have a monopoly of the work and to have the right to charge their own price for their labor.

Mr. MACKENZIE. That is protection.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Now, I know that Onderdonk, the contractor for building a certain portion of the Pacific Railway, has done everything in his power to get white labor. I know that he has gone to enormous expense to get skilled labor from Canada. I know he has brought from Ontario a large number of carpenters and builders, to perform the wood, and trestle, and bridge work, and work of that kind, on the Pacific Railway, but he cannot get sufficient men. It is quite true that the hon. gentleman who spoke last said that white labor is infinitely more valuable than Chinese, and that, for general work and practical purposes, one skilled, strong Englishman, or white man, is worth three Chinese; but if you cannot get the one white man, you must employ the three Chinese in the meanwhile. Let us consider this subject, which is of very great importance, now brought before Parliament. It was brought up, with a great deal of ability, by a member of the last Parliament, Mr. DeCosmos, who pressed all the considerations which are now being pressed with a very considerable amount of ability, and the answer of the last House was that in the meanwhile you must keep Chinese labor until white labor is ready to supplant it. As soon as this takes place, then I will go just as strongly perhaps as the hon. gentleman who has moved this resolution, in favor—perhaps not of exclusion, because it is a very strong measure for a civilized country to exclude the people of a nation with whom you trade, and whom you treat as a civilized nation or a quasi civilized nation;—but there must be some regulation, one similar to that passed in the United States which amounts to exclusion, but more nearly alike to the legislation in Australia where it is not excluded positively, but where it is regulated and restricted. But until we can be sure that British Columbia gets a sufficient amount of white labor, I think we ought not to paralyze to a great extent all the enterprises and all the industries of that country for the sake of increasing the wages of the few white operatives who are in that country.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Knowing the doctrines of the hon. gentleman, and the doctrines on which his Government is based, I am astonished that he has taken this ground. He is willing to protect every interest but that of the workingmen.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There are no workingmen to protect.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. gentleman stated that only workingmen demanded this measure, and any measure which they demand at his hands, he is bound to give in the way of protection; but while he is giving protection to everybody else, the moment he is asked to protect labor, the hon. gentleman's doctrine is at an end.

Mr. BARNARD. I may say that having been in British Columbia for some time I have seen the practical working of this Chinese problem, and I have found that they are competitors with white labor. I am free to confess, too, that the only reason why employers engage the Chinese in that country is that they are forced to do it. Mr. Onderdonk himself, who has had them working for him in California, declares that he would much sooner have white men to work for him than Chinese if he could get them. You must remember the position we occupy in British Columbia: we are 4,000 miles from here; we are north of California and Oregon, and few laboring men have been induced to come to that country except through the discovery of gold. Money has actually been sent from the country to bring out these Chinese; and had some trouble been taken for the purpose of securing white labor we would have had it in abundance. A short time before the contract was given out in British Columbia I urged strongly that the matter should be brought before the House in order that Parliament might take action against the employment of Chinese as far as possible; for if the House had simply passed a resolution branding these Chinese, thus showing that a majority were opposed to their introduction, it would have had a great effect in bringing in white labor. I believe that white labor is to be had in abundance, only for the presence of the Chinese, but white men do not care to come so long as they are present in such large numbers.

Mr. BAKER. I would not be doing my duty if I did not make a few remarks on this question. There are two things which I wish to impress on the House. The first is, that the people in my constituency, Victoria, the capital of the Province, desire most strongly that the immigration of the Chinese into British Columbia should be restricted. The second point is, that these restrictive measures can be secured to the Province by having the Chinamen land at Halifax, Quebec and other ports, and filter through the other Provinces in order to get to British Columbia.

Mr. MACKENZIE. They can do that if they like.

Mr. BAKER. If they were encouraged, the same as other immigrants are, to come to Quebec, Halifax, St. John and other Atlantic ports, they would have considerable difficulty in getting to British Columbia. All that I ask is, that we should have restrictive measures. I do not ask for anything to expel the Chinamen from British Columbia, as we are satisfied they would soon die out, so that only their bones will have to be taken away. We ask for a law similar to the law which has been enacted in Australia, so that not more than ten may be allowed to come into the Province in a vessel of say 1,000 tons burden. With regard to the question of Chinamen working on the railway, and the statement that there are no white laboring men there to protect, I beg most respectfully to differ from the hon. leader of the Government. There are a great many workingmen in British Columbia, and there are many more who would be induced to come but for the fact that they are met on the border by the Chinese, who are allowed to underwork them, and who can underwork them because they work for the small sum of 25 cts. per day, a sum which no white man with a family can live upon. To use the parlance of the country, a white man requires at least two good square meals a day. There is another reason why we do not desire them, and that is, that they do not spend their money in the Province or in the Dominion. As soon as a Chinaman has accumulated his sum of money, he takes it to China, and then sends out his thirty-first or thirty-second cousin to supply his place. From conversations which I have had with hon. gentlemen, I am inclined to believe that there are very few of them who have ever really seen a Chinaman. I would like, since immigration to this country is being encouraged, that hon. members of this House should have the opportunity of seeing John Chinamen in their various constituencies, and then if they are disposed to keep them, we shall be very glad to part with our share.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. SHAKESPEARE. I trust the motion will not be carried. This is a question of vital importance. It is a Mr. BARNARD.

question which has been before the House for some weeks, and I think the best thing we can do is to vote either for it or against it. I want to see the question voted upon, whether the result should be yea or nay. With regard to the works on the railway, we have in to-day in the Province of British Columbia, all the Chinamen we require for building all the railways we ever shall build, in addition, of course, to the white men who are coming in to the Province continually. I am informed by newspaper reports, as well as by letters which I have received from friends that this spring white men are going into that Province by hundreds, no less than 2,000 or 3,000 having gone there already this season. The trouble is, however, that white men going there and finding that they have to come in contact with Chinese, will not remain there under such circumstances. Hon. members may be surprised at this statement, but it is a fact. It is a very unpleasant thing indeed for respectable men to have to go to work alongside of that class of people. The hon. gentleman opposite, who spoke to-night on that subject, spoke from experience. He has lived in a country where the fact of having so many people of that class in their midst was a known evil, and those who have not lived among them have really no idea as to the trouble we have with them. My hon. friend from New Westminster speaks as though we have not sufficient Chinese there yet. Of course the hon. gentleman is a member of this House, but I might state, for the information of hon. members, that, in the Local House of British Columbia, there are three representatives from the district which he represents, and every one of those gentlemen have voted in favor of restrictive measures, so that it would appear, at least to my mind, that he does not express the well-understood wishes of the people of his district. If doctors disagree, then how shall we get at the truth. I maintain that the people themselves are the best judges, and it is scarcely necessary for me to say that some measures should be adopted when the people themselves have petitioned this House for such measures over and over again. This year they have done the same thing, they have asked that some restrictive measures shall be passed to prevent such a large influx of these people into that Province. We see from newspaper reports that so many Chinamen are going there that the farming class have to leave. They are not able to obtain lands, because they are reserved from settlement; but if there were not so many Chinese in the Province, I have no doubt that these men would find other employment until the lands were thrown open and they could settle upon them. Now, with regard to this Bill, it is not intended to exclude the Chinese entirely. The proposition is not to interfere with those that are there, although there are two thousand more now on the way from China to British Columbia, and for aught I know, they have landed before this hour. At the rate at which they are going into that Province the whole of the white population will be swamped by these Chinese, and I do not think any hon. gentleman in this House desires to see such a state of things. I am satisfied that if hon. gentlemen in this House had to live there and labor for their bread, they would express themselves very decidedly in favor of this resolution. Now, what are the provisions of the Bill? One is that no ship shall arrive at any port in the Province with more than one Chinaman to every hundred tons register of the ship. If the House thinks this figure is too small, we can make it two or three to every hundred tons. The resolution is that we pass a Bill similar in principle to the one now in force in New South Wales—not exactly the same, but similar in principle. I think the proposition is a very reasonable one, especially as this question has been brought before this House on several occasions, and has been very fully ventilated by the representative from the Province of British Columbia. All I ask is that this motion may be voted upon.

It has been on the paper for some time, and I wish to see a vote upon it, yea or nay.

Mr. HOMER. I wish to refer to the remarks made by my hon. friend from Victoria (Mr. Shakespeare). The district which the hon. gentleman represents does not, I believe, employ a great many Chinamen. I believe there are no very extensive industries there requiring them; but the district I represent employs about one-half of all the Chinese in the Province; there are some four thousand employed in the salmon fisheries, and about the same number upon the railway. Notwithstanding the fact that several hundred mechanics have been brought in this spring, the wages for that class of laborers have already advanced a dollar a day. A great many farmers have gone into the Province, but the number of laborers that come in are but a fraction of what is required. To show the opinion of the Legislature of that Province with respect to restriction on Chinese immigration, I may state that on the fourth of this month a resolution was introduced there against the employment of Chinese on local railways which are now in contemplation, and that motion was lost by a vote of twelve to eight, the three representatives from the district which I have the honor to represent here voting against the resolution. So my hon. friend is entirely mistaken in the views he represents to prevail in my district with respect to Chinese immigration.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. As the hon. mover of the motion says he wishes a direct vote upon it I shall not stand in his way by insisting on my motion; and if the House will allow me, I will withdraw my motion for the adjournment of the debate.

Motion, to adjourn debate, withdrawn.

Mr. GORDON. My hon. friend from New Westminster (Mr. Homer) speaks as if certain industries in British Columbia could not be carried on successfully without Chinese labor. As I understand this motion, it is not intended to interfere with the Chinese now in the Province, but to restrict the number coming in in the future. I will say, so far as the coal lands are concerned, that the Chinese are not a necessity. I will say more—they are kept in all these enterprises, railway and others, as a sort of base currency for fixing the value of white labor. Since I have been in this House, I have received a large number of letters from people in this and other Provinces, enquiring about British Columbia, and if I thought for one moment that the unlimited immigration of Chinese were to continue, I would certainly advise every applicant to keep out of British Columbia. I would not advise one of my fellow-countrymen to go to British Columbia and place himself right in competition with this element, knowing the Chinese as well as I do. I am disappointed at the remarks of the right hon. leader of the House. At an early stage of the Session, on the 23rd February, before this question was brought up at all, under the form of a resolution we had the assurance that the Government regarded this as a very serious question. The right hon. gentleman spoke as follows:—

"It is a very serious question, one whose importance cannot be overrated, one that cannot be slurred over, but must be treated. It is of great consequence to British Columbia, and is of subsequent consequence to the Eastern Provinces, and must be fairly considered, so that some principle may be laid down regarding it, and that principle carried out in practice."

I felt somewhat assured by these remarks that the Government, after the consideration that had been given this question in the past, had come to the conclusion to deal with this question on its merits. But if the dealing with it is to be put off until the railway is completed, that would be, I consider, an act of selfishness on the part of hon. members from the other Provinces, by deferring the settlement of this question until such a time as the Chinese will begin to find access to their Provinces. Until such time those hon. members seem to think it all right that the Chinese should have unrestricted admission, and British Columbia suffer the consequences. If I should have the honor to be in the House at the time when hon. members will consider it opportune to exclude them, I should vote for their unlimited immigration. I do not think this question can be dealt with too soon. As to their working in the mines, we have a Local Act debarring them from any position of trust about the mines. The feeling is, then, that the Chinese could be dispensed with. They are now in equal number to the whites, and if you had them in equal numbers here there would be no difficulty in settling the question to-night.

Motion negatived on a division.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee of Supply.

(In the Committee.)

100. Additional public buildings on Wellington Street.. $300,000.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This vote is for a new building on Wellington street, between Metcalfe and Elgin streets, with the full depth of the lots. At present the Departmental buildings are much too small for the wants of the public service, and we have been obliged to use houses outside, and still the public offices are much too crowded. The business is suffering on account of it, due greatly to the increase of business in the Department of the Interior, Indian Affairs, &c. Under these circumstances we have decided to secure the lots I have mentioned in order to erect thereon a building which would suffice, at all events, for a number of years to come. The lots will cost something like $83,000 or $85,000, the amount for which will appear in the Supplementary Estimates for the present year. The building itself will cost probably $400,000 or $500,000. This vote will be sufficient for the year. After the contract has been given it will take at least two years to erect the building. It will contain a basement and will be three stories high, with a Mansard roof. It is intended to transfer into that new building the Department of the Interior and Indian Affairs, the Department of Agriculture, the Patent Office, and the Model Rooms. The Mansard roof story will probably be utilized for the Model room, as there will be ample space for that purpose. The room where they are now is so small that they have to be piled up, and are, consequently, not easy to see.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Did the Government consider the possibility of extending the present buildings on the hill?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes; we considered that, but we found that if extending the Western Block on the square and then turning toward the north that it would give accommodation, but not sufficient. We found that it would cost more to make this extension than to erect a whole new building, for the reason that the architecture of the extension would have to be in accord with the building as it appears on the Square. In the building on Wellington street we should be able to have plenty of light and large airy rooms for the use of the officers who will be employed there.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Are we to understand that the architecture of the new block is to be of a different character from that inside the grounds?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes; the building on Wellington street will be more in keeping with the architecture of the best buildings on that street than with the architecture of the present Departmental Buildings.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I recollect very well when the hon. gentleman made preparations for the Western Block before he left office in 1873, and it fell to me to carry out that idea with the plans for the new building called the Western Block. We were subjected to an incessant fire in the House from hon. gentlemen opposite on the ground that it was not required, but now we have the same gentlemen proposing a vote of $500,000 to erect another building still, after their denunciations of the extension of the Western Block on account of its not being required. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will explain that inconsistency.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The circumstances have changed since then and the business has greatly increased. At the period the hon. gentleman speaks of we did not believe the requirements were such as to warrant such a large building. He may have been mistaken—it is in human nature to be mistaken—but I do not think we were mistaken at that period. The hon. gentleman may have foreseen that the wants of the public service would require larger buildings, but even his foresight did not go far enough for the wants of to-day. At present the hon. gentleman will admit that more room is absolutely required. The proposed buildings will have a length of 200 or 225 feet, the building will have a depth of some fifty-five feet, and then there will be an open space and behind that a passage way, so that there will be plenty of light. The passage will run from Elgin street to Metcalf street and will have a width of perhaps ten feet.

Mr. BLAKE. I think I saw some statement in the newspapers about very much larger claims for the land being made by tenants and others, which are under the consideration of arbitrators.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think there were two half-lots that we could not obtain without expropriation. There was some difficulty, and we had to expropriate. There are some three or four claims made by parties who contend they have a right of way, for example, and another party claims that the erection of this building will deprive him a light for his industry—I think he is a photographer. I do not know how far we are liable; but these claims have been referred to the law officers to be investigated, and any claims that have to be decided by the courts will be so decided, and we will, of course, have to pay according to the judgment.

Mr. BLAKE. Then the total cost of land and buildings will be about $500,000.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think it will come to that.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman will, perhaps, find a room for the national gallery in the new building. I have not been in the building of the Supreme Court, but I am told by members of the profession that the library is not adequate for its purpose even now, and when the arrangements which the Government assented to for the removal of the text-books is carried out, it will be found to be entirely inadequate. I throw out the suggestion that, as I am told, there are not a great many pictures in the National Gallery, perhaps the hon. Minister may find in this new building, or some other building, room for the collection, and thus afford accommodation for the reception of the books for the Supreme Court.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. My attention was called to that matter some time ago, but I was not in a position to say what could be done. If another room, or a couple of rooms, properly lighted, can be obtained either there or in some other building, we will do what we can to accommodate the Judges and lawyers who attend the Supreme Court.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). How many rooms for clerks is it intended to provide in the new building?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot say, but the intention is to make large rooms in order that the clerks, instead of being separated in small rooms, may be, as far as possible, under the surveillance of a head officer. We find in all the Departments a difficulty in this respect. I do not say that officers will try and waste their time, but the existence of a number of small rooms is not conducive to the proper administration of affairs. On the contrary, if the rooms are large as in a bank, the work will be done more quickly, because clerks can go to each other in respect to matters of work with little trouble, whereas, if they have to go to separate rooms time is lost, and they are liable to be delayed by persons in the corridors.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Then the hon. gentleman intends to carry out the plan in the new Western Block?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There are large rooms in the Western Block.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I saw it stated in some newspaper, that the Government were entertaining the question of prospective damages in some of the properties about to be expropriated. I hope the hon. gentleman will be able to contradict that statement.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There is no such intention. We will pay what the court decides.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Is it true that the question of prospective damages is submitted to the arbitrators?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Not that I am aware of.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I was about to call the hon. Minister's attention to the desirability of dividing the building into large rooms, specially for clerks dealing with the same subject, and I think this will be a very desirable improvement. I am a little surprised, speaking without much experience of the extent of the service, that this large demand is being made upon us just now for new buildings. It is only a little while since $300,000 or $400,000 were expended for the enlargement of the Western Block, and that in the face of a very strong remonstrance from hon. gentlemen opposite. We have now a proposal to expend a further sum of $600,000. It is made in order to accommodate the increased staff, which seems to be becoming larger every day of the year. I think the staff numbers over 100 employes more than the number employed in 1878. Is this expenditure incurred in order that the staff may be further increased? The Departments are full and there is no further room for additional employes. I am almost inclined to be severe enough on the hon. Minister of Public Works to say that this is merely an additional convenience, not for the public service, but for unfortunate gentlemen who, no doubt, are anxious to place themselves under comfortable salaries in order to spend their valuable lives in the service of the public. I notice by the last report of the hon. Finance Minister that the present Departmental Buildings cost $4,173,977. We intend to enlarge that sum by about $600,000. We have spent on the Post Office about $250,000, about $50,000 on the Geological Museum, and $30,000 on the Supreme Court. The Committee should obtain some more satisfactory explanation and a fuller justification of this large expenditure before it votes this large sum asked for.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. Minister has, no doubt, considered the fact that the risk by fire will be very greatly increased in the new building, as stores facing on Sparks street will be immediately in its rear.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That matter has been attended to. In the plan prepared by the architect, care is taken to make that side of the building fire-proof. In answer to the hon. member for Middlesex (Mr. Ross), if my explanation has not satisfied him, I am afraid I cannot satisfy him. As we have not had room for the transaction of public business we have been obliged to hire accommodation in the neighborhood of the Post Office, and even then the Departments are crowded—not, as the hon. gentleman very charitably supposes, because we want to take into the service a great many more employes, but because the public service requires that the employes we have shall be provided with proper accommodation. The buildings are too small, and we cannot get along with public business, and therefore we must have confidence in Parliament providing a remedy, and afford accommodation where the officers can work well. Besides, the service is growing. The North-West requires more and more attention, and the number of officers in the Department of the Interior has been increased, and must be increased as the public demands require. And for that purpose we must have more room; and that is the reason why we come to Parliament and ask for the grant, which, we hope, will be given.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The last performance of the hon. gentlemen in providing accommodation, was to buy an old building for $20,000, and spend $30,000 in repairing it. This is decidedly better.

Mr. VAIL. What is the intention of the Government, in taking from Ottawa so much tax-paying property, in making an allowance to the city of Ottawa? This is a serious thing for the taxpayers.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This relates to another branch for consideration; and I must ask the hon. gentleman to postpone his question.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I suppose there is something almost so sacred in the hours nine to four, that it would be impossible to entertain a proposition to alter them, to perhaps an hour earlier in the morning and an hour later at night, giving two hours more work to each employé, which, with every employé about the buildings, would accomplish a vastly greater amount of work than could be managed in this way, and perhaps accommodation would be found for the requisite number in the present buildings, saving $600,000, and perhaps enabling us, without the expenditure of a greater amount of money, to give somewhat larger salaries, perhaps, to those already employed. It does seem to me the proper way in the public service—the best for the men and for the country—is to employ as few hands as possible, and see that they are paid fair salaries for the work which they do.

110. Public Buildings, Nova Scotia..... $67,200.00

Mr. MACKENZIE. Would the hon. gentleman give us some statement on each item under the arrangement formerly made?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will. The first item, Sydney Quarantine Hospital, $2,000, is a revote. The site could not be obtained at the proper time, and, of course, we had to delay the expenditure of money.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Was there not a small hospital there five or six years ago?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not think so.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I am sure of it.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We had none there before. The second vote, $12,000, is to continue the erection of public buildings at New Glasgow.

Mr. BLAKE. Will this complete the work at Sydney?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It will not. I think there will be an additional vote in the Supplementary Estimates to complete the work, I believe. We had $6,000 voted last year for the New Glasgow Public Buildings. A site has been purchased, and this $12,000 is to go on with the erection of the building; but some more money will be required—probably $6,000 or $7,000. Halifax Cattle Quarantine Station, $5,000. This vote was not expended last year, because we had not decided, I think, about the site, and this amount will cover the expenditure there. Truro Custom House, Post Office and Savings Bank, $21,000. There is here a building for which we had $15,000 voted last year; $6,000 is a revote, $15,000 being a new vote, making the $21,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I will make a proposition to the hon. gentleman, which will save a great deal of discussion, perhaps. I would like also to know, not merely what these buildings are for, but the number of employes in such districts at the present time, and the revenues obtained there from Customs, Excise and Post Office, or whatever other branches of the public service are there accommodated. If a short return were made out and brought down and printed before Concurrence, it would be very easily done, and it would save a lot of questions, and save some time in discussion.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Of course. I could not have that ready now, but I will make a note of it, and try to have it brought down before, or at, Concurrence. Antigonish Public Buildings, $3,500—this amount is required to complete them. Windsor Post Office, Custom House, &c., $10,000. We had $5,000 last year for this purpose, and $10,000 are asked for this year, but more will be required—probably $5,000. This is for preparing and repairing a certain portion of the building, rebuilding fences, repairs to the outbuildings, and contingencies, making in all $1,400 for the Halifax Penitentiary. We could not allow the property to go to waste as the building is a good one, and has been put temporarily in the hands of the Local Government after the destruction of the poor house. These poor people were in the street, and we were asked to allow them to be put in this building until they could find proper accommodation elsewhere. This amount is to keep the property in repair until we decide what is to be done with it—whether to keep it for a while or to dispose of it at public auction. The vote of $2,300 for Pictou Marine Hospital is to make up a balance of $2,235 from last year. We had to meet the expenditure necessary for fences and outbuildings, which, according to the engineer's estimate, made up the $2,235. We had a vote before for $600, and the reason I have asked for $2,300 is that we may not be short a few dollars. The next item, Amherst Public Buildings, $10,000, is for the construction of a building for the accommodation of the Customs, Post Office, Inland Revenue, and Government Savings Bank. This is only the first vote, and most likely another vote for the same amount will be required next year. These are the explanations with regard to the whole vote of $67,200.

Mr. BLAKE. With reference to Halifax Penitentiary. It was a good while in contemplation that the penitentiary should be disused, because, owing to the completion of Dorchester, the convicts were to be removed. It is a good while since it was disused, as it is some time since Dorchester has been occupied, and convicts removed there. I think it was an extremely reasonable thing, in view of the calamity which befel Halifax, that the building should be at the disposal of the city and local authorities temporarily—I am not at all objecting to that—but the hon. gentleman informs us that we have to spend $14,000 to improve the property while the Government is making up its mind what to do with it. There has been a good deal of time for the Government to make up its mind, and I would like to know how much longer it will take them to make up their mind? Perhaps you, Mr. Chairman, knowing something about the city, could tell them whether they should sell it by public auction, or what other disposition they could make of it, because if we are to go on spending money upon it, it would perhaps be better to give it away than to keep it.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is possible that arrangements might be made with the Local Government for its purchase. They might find that these inmates who took refuge there were so well suited, that they would be disposed to purchase the property. I have no doubt that the matter will be taken up as soon as possible, in order to see what is to be done with the property.

111. Public Buildings, Prince Edward Island..... $9,000.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The only item is Summer-side Public Buildings, $9,000. We had a vote of $5,000 last year. These votes being for a Post Office and Custom House. This would be a total of $14,000, and we will require $6,000 more.

Mr. DAVIES. I notice there is no vote for Charlottetown Marine Hospital. Why is this?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I suppose because it was not required.

Mr. DAVIES. How is it kept up?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. These votes are for buildings and not for maintenance.

112. Public Buildings, New Brunswick.....$107,200.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The first item is $12,500, to complete St. John Marine Hospital, Woodstock Post Office, Custom House, &c., $15,000. We are to erect here a building 115 feet long, by 90 feet wide; built of brick with stone dressing covered with slate, and 32 feet above the ground level. The total amount required will be $27,000, so that $5,000 more will be required to complete it. For St. Stephen's Post Office and Custom House, we had a vote of $15,000 last year, and we ask for $5,000 this year.

Mr. GILLMOR. Has the site for that building been purchased?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; the site has not been purchased yet. Only one offer has been made.

Mr. GILLMOR. Nothing has been done at all?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No.

Mr. GILLMOR. How much has been voted for it?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. $15,000 was voted last year. We intend expending $10,000 by the 1st of October, and we have a revote this year of $5,000, making $15,000 in all. For Sussex Post Office, Custom House and Inland Revenue building we ask $9,000 additional for the purpose of completing the building, making in all $16,000.

Mr. BLAKE. How many inhabitants are there in Sussex?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. 3,584. That is the population of 1881. The next item is $15,000 for the Moncton Post Office, Custom House, &c., the whole building will cost $35,000, and we shall require about $5,000 after this vote. For the Dorchester Penitentiary we asked $25,000 last year, and we ask $30,000 more this year, and to complete the works that have been begun there we shall require another $30,000 next year. The total expenditure on the penitentiary will then have been nearly $400,000. For the Newcastle Post Office and Custom House we ask $10,000 in addition to the $4,000 which has already been voted. We have yet to select the site, and I suppose $15,000 or $16,000 will cover the whole cost. The Carleton Post Office, for which we ask $10,000, will cost about $15,100, so that in another year we shall require probably $4,000 or $5,000 more.

113. Public Buildings, Quebec $246,500.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The $3,200 for Lévis fortifications and military buildings, are required for improvements in the stonework and the woodwork, and for building culverts, drains, &c. The $19,000 for the Quebec fortifications is for extending and repairing the walls and fortifications in various places.

Mr. LAURIER. As far as I understand, this will complete the restoration of the wall from Kent Gate to Palace Gate.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Beyond.

Mr. LAURIER. I would like to ask whether it is the intention of the Government to put a railing on the top of the ramparts, so as to make it a promenade, as was originally intended?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The first thing is to complete the walls. The vote of $2,500 for Dufferin Terrace is to complete the fortification wall under the Terrace. The vote of $22,500 for the Quebec Citadel, is for restoring the outward fence, repairing the bastions, and for general repairs to the Citadel; as well as for repairing officers' quarters, stables and hospital, sergeants' mess room, and canteen buildings, for removing outer works and fixing embankments, &c. As far as I can recollect, it is the same as the one that was built under the hon. gentleman's Government—on the left hand side, going into the Citadel.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It is not a warlike roof.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No doubt it is not, but in time of war it could be quickly removed. The Quebec Customs Warehouse. We had $20,000 voted last year, and we now ask a revote of $10,000 and an additional vote of $20,000. It will be built on the Government ground, on Dalhousie street, where we have a good piece of ground in close proximity to the Custom House. We thought that was the best spot to put it, and it relieved us from the necessity of purchasing ground with all the jealousies that spring up when a piece of ground is to be purchased. I believe the whole cost, when completed, will be $60,000. We will avoid, by this means, a good many rents that we now pay in different places in the city, and the work will be done more economically. The goods will also be safer, and, no doubt, the revenue more secure. Then there is the other vote of $1,500 to complete the wall at the foot of the cliff beneath the Citadel, in order to prevent the falling of rocks into Champlain street. Three Rivers, the conversion of the former Custom House into a post office, will necessitate some repairs. In Sherbrooke, for Post Office and Custom House, $20,000. Last year we asked a revote of $10,000 and an additional vote of $18,500; this will complete the building. The other vote is Hull Post Office and Inland Revenue Office, $10,000 additional. The words "to complete" should be struck out here, because it will require $5,000 more to complete it, or a total of about $23,000 or $24,000. Grosse Island Quarantine Station, a revote of $1,000 is asked in connection with the construction of a dwelling to be used by the chaplain of the Episcopal Church. The Montreal Drill Shed: we had a vote of $20,000 last year which has not been expended; we ask a revote of that and $20,000 more. The reason this work was not continued, was this: We had a survey made of the property in Montreal where the old drill shed stood, and the report was that the outside walls were canting and it would not be safe to put the new roof over them, but they should be demolished and rebuilt. Thus, if we had put the roof on the outside walls we would have had an immense building which would have cost $125,000. We thought we could not afford that or go into that expense without stating to Parliament the cost, because when we asked Parliament for $20,000 last year we stated the cost would likely be $30,000 or $40,000 more to complete, or a total of between $40,000 and $50,000. Since then there has been a new survey made by the new architect, who reported to me that the outside walls, though not perfect, might be made so by demolishing and rebuilding eight or nine feet and then placing an iron roof over them. The whole thing would cost $55,000 if the roof were entirely of iron, but if of iron and wood it would cost $45,000. But I think we will decide on putting on an iron roof, as it will be much more economical in the long run, and the entire cost will be only $55,000 instead of $125,000. The city gives us the lot and building as it stands, and, of course, if at any time the Government gave up the drill shed the property would revert to the city. Dominion Buildings, $12,900. This is on the different public buildings in Montreal: the Post Office, $5,254; the Examining Warehouse, $3,958; Weights and Measures office, $907, and sundries, making a total of $12,900. In regard to the examining warehouse already mentioned, there will be in the Supplementary Estimates a much larger vote for replacing the present wooden joists and beams, which are decaying with dry rot, with iron posts and beams. The next then, is $18,950 for the St. Vincent de Paul Penitentiary buildings, with which is connected an item of $9,050 for materials and tools for use of convicts in construction. The vote for the buildings is to extend the dining room and to make additions to the building, and includes the materials as per architect's estimate. Then I have the details. Materials for building the new dining room, $3,540; extension of main building, $8,340; main sewer, $200; two hose reels, $210; repairs and water supplies, $200; and all the other details which foot up to $18,950. The $9,050 is for material and tools; $5,646, 25 cords of hard wood, 75 tons of coal, 120 tons of Scotch coal, steam pipes, stoves, repairs to water apparatus, keeping four horses with oats, hay, straw, repairs to harness, waggons, &c.

Mr. BLAKE. It seems to me that this is a misleading item. I think my hon. friend will see that his officers have not placed a proper statement before him. It looks like an attempt to get through items in connection with the penitentiary under the head of construction, and make the maintenance of the penitentiary much less than it really is.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman will see that these items are required for the convicts to work with. If you hire mechanics and laborers from outside they generally bring their own tools with them, but you have to furnish the convicts with tools to work with. For example, we require some galvanized iron, zinc, borax, bolts, planes, &c. The whole list amounts to the sum stated. Next is the Quebec Dominion Buildings improvement, $3,000. This is for improvements in the Quebec Post Office, Excise Office and Cartridge Factory—$2,200 for the Post Office, $350 for the Excise Office, $411 for the Cartridge Factory, and $218 for contingencies. The vote for Sorel Public Building is for the erection of a public building in Sorel for the accommodation of the Post Office, Inland Revenue Department, &c. The Corporation of Sorel will give a site. The cost of the building will be about $20,000. The item, Lévis Immigration Station, is for small repairs there. Quebec Military Buildings, including drill shed, $30,000. We have an old drill shed on the Grand Allee. The intention is to remove that building and erect a new drill shed further up, on land belonging to the Dominion. The Quebec Government and the city of Quebec will contribute $15,000 each. They considered the Dominion Government might be induced to propose a vote of $60,000 beyond the total sum contributed by them; but after consideration we thought that $30,000 by the Dominion Government and $30,000 by the bodies I have mentioned would be sufficient to erect a public building which would be useful, not only for drill purposes, but for agricultural show purposes.

Mr. VAIL. The drill shed at Quebec was a very good and convenient building a few years ago. If it is in a state of decay it could be made available for Militia purposes for a very much smaller sum than that proposed for a new building.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It has been erected many years. It was a good building in its time, but like everything else it has fallen into decay.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It was erected about twenty-five years ago.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think so. I do not think any loss will accrue to the country from the building of this drill shed.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not see how several of the items, such as 75 tons of hard coal, for instance, can be put down as materials.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Read the full details of the proposed expenditure, amounting to $9,050.

Mr. BLAKE. I did not object to what were materials but to some of the items which I did not think came properly under that head. I fail to see how repairs to a steam pump and a coal stove come under the head of materials.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Of course there may be two or three items which might have been placed under another head, but with this exception the hon. gentleman will see that the whole amount is correct.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Under the head of Penitentiaries, we find this item: Penitentiary at Kingston, working expenses, $20,093.05, and St. Vincent de Paul, $95,178; and what we complain of is—at least I do, and I think also the hon. member for West Durham—that the amount which should have been charged as the working expenses of St. Vincent de Paul, are transferred to this building account, in order to cover up the amount, which ought to have appeared in the penitentiary accounts proper. I would like the hon. gentleman, or some other member of the Government, to bring down a statement showing what is comprised in this statement of the working expenses in two penitentiaries; and we will then find you are placing many items in this new building account, and which ought to have gone into the penitentiary accounts proper.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Of course I am not in a position to give that list this evening, but I will see that the statement is brought down.

114. Public Buildings, Ontario $342,000.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. For the Cornwall Post Office, Custom House, &c., the vote last year was $20,000, and it is $20,000 this year. We will only require a little over $9,000 more to complete the work. Brockville Post Office, Custom House, &c., last year, $20,000, and this year, $10,000. This amount, $10,000, will have to be supplemented afterwards by $20,000. Kingston fortifications and military buildings, $12,000; this is for a gas supply apparatus to replace coal oil lamps, the light of which injures the pupils' eyes, while the use of coal oil is dangerous. We also make provision for water supply, &c. Kingston Penitentiary, $15,000, for internal fittings, repairs, &c. The next item is to complete the Belleville Post Office, Custom House, &c., $17,000.

Mr. BLAKE. The total cost will be $37,000?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes. The next item is the Hamilton Post Office, Custom House, &c., $125,000.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Is it intended to sell the present buildings?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes; when the offices have been transferred. The post office, as the hon. gentleman knows, is in a very good position, and will sell advantageously with the back lot. The Custom House is not so well situated, but it can easily be disposed of, and I think to our advantage. In this case we will require this sum to complete the buildings. The total cost will be about $280,000. The next item is $13,000 to complete Stratford Post Office. It will cost about $21,000 or $22,000. For St. Thomas, we ask $28,000, and we will require about $11,000 more to complete.

Mr. WILSON. I notice that $20,000 was the vote last year. Was some of the land included in that?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The site is evidently not included in this.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman says it will take about $11,000 more to complete.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; it will require $28,000 to complete, and the total cost will be nearly $55,000.

Mr. WILSON. The contract will be about $50,000 independent of the land.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; the contract is about $37,000 altogether.

Mr. WILSON. Should not the words "to complete" be omitted here as in the previous items?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman is right. These words have been erroneously inserted by the printer. For Chatham Post Office we ask $16,500, and about $8,000 more will be required to complete. The total amount will be $44,000 or so. For London Post Office we ask $3,600. There were some repairs and alterations begun a year or two ago, and these have been continued.

Mr. BLAKE. These repairs and alterations seem to have been rather expensive.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes; there was an addition made, and there was also a balance due on the old contract. The next item is $10,000 for Amherstburg Post Office, Custom House, &c. We have not purchased the land, although two or three offers have been made. Of this sum $8,000 is to purchase the lot, and the balance is to go on the contract.

Mr. BLAKE. It is quite decided that the building will be erected in Amherstburg?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes; Parliament voted the money last year for that purpose, and it has been so decided. At Galt nothing has been done, and the vote is asked in order that we may select the lot and pay ordinary expenses until we get a vote for the erection of a building. At Berlin a site has not been selected. The vote was forgotten in this case, but it will appear in the Supplementary Estimates. The vote of Cobourg Post Office, Custom House, &c., is to complete the alterations and fit the building for offices, superintendence, and incidental expenses, making the balance required $7,000. For the Clifton Post Office and Custom House, for which we ask $12,000 this year, tenders were called for, but they have not yet been awarded. The building will cost about $40,000. For the Barrie Post Office the same vote is asked, and it also will cost $40,000, including the furnishings and fittings. The town of Barrie gives the site. For the Port Hope Post Office the same vote is required, and the cost will be the same. For the Gananoque Custom House and Inland Revenue Offices, $5,500 is asked towards the erection of a building on the site of the old building; probably $1,500 or $2,000 will be required to complete it. For the Belleville Examining Warehouse we ask $4,000, for the purchase of a lot in the rear of the Custom House, upon which we intend afterwards to erect the Examining Warehouse.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Surely there is no need of an Examining Warehouse there. What is the amount of business done in the Custom House at Belleville?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The exports amount to $1,602,000, and the imports to $392,000, and the Customs duties to $67,952.

Mr. MACKENZIE. It does not rank with some other towns in that respect. Is it the intention to have examining warehouses erected at all places where $60,000 or upwards are collected, or is this place to be specially favored, and if so, for what reason?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The lot is very small in rear of the Custom House, and as it was going to be sold and could be had at a moderate price, we secured it so as to prevent the erection upon it of some building that would be a nuisance to the Custom House. There is a building already on the lot, and a small sum of money will most likely be sufficient to put it in a condition to be used.

Mr. MACKENZIE. But that was not my question. My question was, does the Government intend having an examining warehouse at every place where $60,000 is collected?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I do not think a rule of that kind has been established.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Is there an idea of doing it?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; I think the idea of the Government will be to put an examining warehouse where we think it is needed.

Mr. BLAKE. How much is to be expended on this examining warehouse besides this amount?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot say exactly, but we will only spend what is necessary to make it suit the trade there.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I think the hon. gentleman is reversing the terms. The trade is to be made to suit the examining warehouse, not the examining warehouse to suit the trade.

116. Public Buildings, Manitoba..... $163,000.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. For the Manitoba Penitentiary we ask $40,000. This will take three years to execute. The total work is as follows: New cell wing and boiler house $85,000; additional expenditure for pumping purposes, $5,765; repairs asked by the Department of Justice, $3,599; reconstructing cells, $7,000.

Mr. BLAKE. We should have details of repairs, which may really belong to maintenance and not be charged to construction.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. A part of the repairs, I think, was for padlock, which we ordered because the building was not considered safe, and might, I think, be taken as part of construction. I will furnish details on Concurrence.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not want so much to ascertain the details as to see that items belonging to maintenance are charged to construction. The padlocks, if not a renewal of or substitution for others, might be charged to construction; but I presume padlocks were not the whole expense.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No, not altogether. The next item is for Parliament Buildings at Winnipeg. This work has not progressed as we would wish. The contractor took it at such a low price that he could not execute it, as work, labor and material went up as they did, and new tenders were called for and they would cost $15,000 or $20,000 more than expected.

Mr. CHARLTON. Must we build Parliament buildings for all the Provinces in the North-West?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That policy was adopted and approved by Parliament with reference to the new Provinces. We will have to ask for buildings at Regina. The Parliament buildings at Winnipeg will cost about $115,000. For the Lieutenant-Governor's residence we ask a revote of $10,000 and a new vote of $23,000; the total cost will be $70,000. We have selected the site of the present Winnipeg Post Office for that of the new one, and we have made arrangements for the erection of a temporary one on the Government property between the Custom House and the Land Office. This temporary office will cost $12,000 and will be a portable edifice, so that it can be removed when necessary. The total expenditure will be about $162,000.

117. Public Buildings in the North-West Territory...$59,100.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The first vote is the ordinary vote of $5,000 for all public buildings that require improvements. The second vote of $0,000 is for a Dominion Lunatic Asylum, or Hospital. The vote last year was not expended, and we ask a revote of that sum with $10,000 additional. The institution will be most likely at Regina, and will be made suitable for either purposes. New gaols and lock-ups, $10,000, is a revote. The capital of North-West Territory, $20,000. That is a revote. Qu'Appelle Immigrant Shed, $3,500. That building has cost more than was expected at first. Immigrant Station west of Qu'Appelle, $600. The site will be selected afterwards.

Mr. CASEY. Where is this immigrant shed to be located?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. At Troy, I think. It is not intended to make extensive public buildings at Regina at present, until the population has increased somewhat. I am not sure this vote will cover the entire cost of the public buildings at present intended, but we will do as much as we can with it. The Lieutenant-Governor of the Territory was here lately, and I have conferred with him about the buildings.

Mr. CASEY. I moved some time ago for a statement of the location and cost of these buildings, and I was led to understand by the hon. First Minister, that it had not been settled in regard to their position and character, and it seems it has not been settled yet. The plans that were drawn up last summer have not been carried out, then?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Government declined to adopt those plans because they were too expensive.

Mr. BLAKE. Where are these new gaols and lock-ups to be?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Strong representations were made to the stipendiary magistrate that new lock-ups were needed. They have been using the Mounted Police lock-ups, which are mere guard-rooms; but the population is increasing, and consequently the number of criminals on short punishment terms. These places are overcrowded, and it is improper that persons imprisoned for small crimes should be put in with persons convicted for larger ones. I suppose one of these new gaols will be near Fort McLeod, one at Regina, and one at Battleford. It is proposed that Colonel Richardson, one of the stipendiary magistrates, will be transferred from Battleford to Regina. It has hitherto been a matter of enormous expense to send criminals across the continent to Winnipeg, but the case will not be so bad next year. They can be sent from Fort McLeod, about 100 miles to the railway, and thence to the penitentiary.

Mr. BLAKE. Is it intended that these lock-ups shall be in connection with the stations, so that they may be under the surveillance of the Mounted Police? or are we now commencing a regular penal establishment for these Territories? If the Mounted Police are not allowed to act as gaolers, we must have gaolers to take charge of the prisoners.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Regina will be the headquarters of the Mounted Police, and there will also be a detachment at Fort McLeod. They will watch these prisoners until, by-and-by, these lock-ups may assume the character of penitentiaries.

118. Public Buildings, British Columbia... $11,750.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. With respect to Vancouver Quarantine Station and outbuildings, $7,500, we were not in a position to establish those buildings last year, and, therefore, we ask for a revote of the amount, $5,000, and $2,500 more.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Where is it?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I understand it would be near Victoria. New Westminster Post Office, Custom House, &c., to complete, $11,500. This building will be erected on the site of the old Post Office. The next vote is to complete the Nanaimo Post Office, Custom House, &c., $22,750. The total cost of the building will be $36,250.

119. Public Buildings generally..... $15,000.00

Mr. VAIL. I hope the hon. Minister intends to spend some of that amount in the western part of Nova Scotia. I observe that, with the exception of a small vote at Windsor, which is a short distance west of Halifax, all the amount voted for Nova Scotia is to be expended among the counties east.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This vote is for public buildings generally—for repairs, not to erect new buildings. The hon. gentleman may rest assured that western Nova Scotia is considered a very important portion of the Dominion, and that it will be taken care of.

120. Public Buildings—Repairs, furniture, heating, &c..... $302,400.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The amount for repairs, furniture, heating, &c., $175,000, shows an increase of $10,000, on account of last year's vote being insufficient.

Mr. CHARLTON. Is anything proposed to be done at the rising ground lying between the Western Block and the Central Block?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That would be a large work, and I have not submitted it to my colleagues. Some persons think it should be levelled so that the view of the river might be improved, while others think it should be allowed to remain as it is.

Mr. CHARLTON. I hope the hon. Minister will never think of removing it.

Mr. BLAKE. I would venture to suggest that a screen fence should be erected at the rear of the Eastern Block so as to shut out from view the wood piles.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will not forget the suggestions that have been offered. An increased amount of $10,000 is required for heating the Public Buildings. Of the total amount of $50,000, $36,000 was entered for cordwood and $1,000 for coal.

Mr. BLAKE. The larger proportion of the increased cost is due to the increased value of cordwood. The staff seems to be excessive—$9,000 a year as wages to firemen.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In order to insure the work being properly done we must pay good wages so as to obtain men in whom we have confidence. Whenever a man has been found to indulge in intoxicating drink he has been allowed to leave the Department, because we must have men on whom we can rely, day or night.

Mr. CHARLTON. Would it not be possible to substitute coal for wood for fuel to a large extent and effect a saving?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This question has come up several times. I am sure that the hon. gentleman will agree with me, that if we were to use coal exclusively for wood, we would have these buildings very soon as black as the public buildings in London, England.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The experiment made shows that already.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. And another thing, we would then have to change the flues, I understand, and the heating apparatus as well. Of course, I am only a layman in these matters, but I had the whole question so explained to me. However, we had under consideration a plan which of course, is not matured, but our officers are now giving their attention to it—to see whether we could not heat these buildings with gas. Then the necessary apparatus would not be in the building, but below the hill on the wharf, or on a platform built for the purpose; but this scheme has not reached that point, when I could say to my colleagues, it is feasible. Of course, before we adopt any new scheme, we must be sure that it will work properly, because it would never do to have these buildings without heat, especially when hon. members are here.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I hope that no attempt will be made to heat with coal without smoke-consuming apparatus. Coal heating was tried in the Western Block, and the result was the great disfigurement of the building, as any one can easily see on examination.

Mr. BLAKE. What is the number of cords used and the price of the wood?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot now say. It is done by contract, awarded every two or three years. The price is, however, increasing, because it is brought from a greater distance, and the supply is diminishing.

Mr. CHARLTON. The use of anthracite coal would obviate the smoke objection, and it would be much cheaper than wood.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am afraid that we would have to import it.

Mr. BLAKE. It would be cheaper though.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There would be some, but not a large saving, on account of the change in the heating apparatus.

Mr. BLAKE. That change would be once for all, and this is an annual charge with the rest of us, the change from coal to wood would not be so great; still the hon. gentleman does not pay the duty on coal.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I hope that next year I will be in a position to give to hon. gentlemen a comparative statement of the different systems, and then hon. gentleman can judge of the saving. The next item is gas for the public buildings here, which is $2,000 more for the same reason that I gave with respect to the heating.

Mr. LAURIER. Can we not hope that this Chamber will be lighted soon with the electric light?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That question has also come up; but we were not in a position to do it this Session. As the hon. gentleman is aware, there are a number of electric lights, and every inventor says that his light is the best of all. We wanted to see what light we might approve of, and one day a certain party, whom I will not name, as I do not wish to injure him, said his invention was to be seen in a certain street of a certain city; and I sent the chief architect of the Department, a mechanic and an engineer with the gentleman to see it at night and report on it in the morning. My two officers then told me: We cannot accept that light, because it flickers, and therefore would not do, especially in the House of Commons, where the members must have a steady light, being there for a long time. We did not want to take the risk this year, but if, during the Recess we find a proper light, it will be decided whether we will not light these buildings with electricity. This light will answer better a large room like this or the Senate, than small rooms, for which I am told that it is too strong; and unless they invent something to dim the light, it will not do for small apartments.

Mr. MACKENZIE. We want a strong light at present, as there is a great deal of darkness in these buildings.

Mr. BLAKE. That great difficulty has been entirely overcome by the Edison invention, which can be more diffused than an ordinary gas light. Ordinary lamps are used, which are just the same, 16-candle power, and they are divided down even to four-candle power, while the light is very steady. Most hon. gentlemen had an opportunity of seeing it—I was not able to avail myself of the occasion—at Cornwall lately, but I have seen it at New York, and certainly I cannot conceive of a more perfect light in all particulars. It was perfectly steady, and as bright and gentle as you might please to make it; certainly it was a very great improvement over gas light, and when we have to sit as we do here, for so many hours, consuming our eyes, it is of very great consequence to have the steadiest and brightest light possible. I have no doubt whatever that the hon. gentleman will find the Edison light very satisfactory.

Mr. VAIL. It appears to me that the Minister of Public Works is very wise in waiting for this light to be perfected before it is adopted. I notice that they were used a good while in London, England, at the Charing Cross Depot, a very large place, indeed, and although it was steady for fifteen or twenty minutes, the light then darkened, and afterwards flashed up again. I do not think that this light is at all in such a perfect state as would justify its production in a building like this until it is tried a little farther.

Mr. CASEY. It is quite true, that all the systems of electric light burning carbons, approached by machinery, and burning down, flicker and go out occasionally; these were used in London, in different cities of the United States, and in certain parts of Canada, to light outdoor areas, but they would not do for this building, while the Edison system, which is incandescent, succeeds without doubt to perfection. The flame is enclosed in glass, and cannot and does not flicker, and it gives a steady light. I think that not merely on account of the light, but of the purity of the atmosphere, the Government ought to experiment during vacation, and next year give us this light, because really the amount of gas burned here does vitiate the air dreadfully.

Mr. CARLING. It is very fortunately consumed.

Mr. CASEY. If we are to continue the use of gas, we had better make our own gas—I mean ordinary coal gas. The $22,000 which gas costs us would pay the Government a rate of interest on a capital of $500,000, and I think that we could put up a very expensive set of gas works for a good deal less than that, while we could easily improve on the city gas, which is both dear and bad.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will consider this subject carefully during Recess. Of course if we decide about putting them in this room I will take care that the gas jets remain as they are. The next item is for water, Public Buildings, Ottawa. The addition of $100 to this item this year is to supply water to the Indian Office on Wellington street. The next item is for the allowance for fuel and light for Rideau Hall. Then we have telephonic service for Public Buildings, Ottawa, $4,000. The amount asked last year was not expended, because we were not ready, and we had not enough money, but with $1,500 more we will be able to have a telephonic service between these buildings.

Mr. BLAKE. Will that cover subsequent rates, or will there be an annual charge or rental?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This is for an exchange for a limited number of instruments with services in the offices of the heads of Departments, Banks, and other Public Buildings. There will be subterranean wires in lieu of suspended wires. The incidental expenses, salaries, &c., will be $1,500 a year. The idea is that this service will be for the buildings, and if we want to communicate with the outside world, we will be put in connection with the city offices.

Mr. BLAKE. As there is to be a limited exchange there will be circuits in connection with the Buildings, and also with some of the principal institutions outside. An annual charge of $1,500 would seem to be a pretty heavy one.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No, I think it is the exact amount which is charged now for telephonic connection, that is $30 a year for each instrument. The next item is for salaries of engineers, firemen and caretakers, &c., of Dominion public buildings (hitherto paid by the respective Departments for which the services were performed). As these Custom Houses and other buildings are completed, we have of course to put proper officers in charge of them.

Mr. BLAKE. Is there any portion of this expense in connection with the buildings here?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No, I think not; it is for buildings in various cities and towns throughout the Dominion.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I think it would be well to call the attention of the hon. Minister of Public Works to the enormous sums which we are annually paying on Rideau Hall. Now that the hon. gentleman is erecting a building for the accommodation of public servants elsewhere, I think it would be well for him to consider whether he should not erect a suitable residence for the Governor General which would not require such enormous expenditures for fitting up and repairing as are required for Rideau Hall. The first cost of the building was $80,819, and we have already expended, on additions and buildings of one kind and another, according to the Public Accounts, $236,785. That old building has cost us in addition something like $200,000 more for repairs. Last year the repairs alone amounted to $22,254; the previous year $5,439; in 1880, $61,391, or altogether, since it was first purchased, including its cost, $542,265, or over half a million dollars. I hope the hon. gentlemen will consider this vast drain on our resources every year. Lighting and heating is also a very large item, and the Department might well consider whether something could not be done to relieve us of a portion of that expenditure. I do not object to making the Hall a comfortable and suitable residence for His Excellency—it is due to the Governor General that it should be comfortable—but it certainly seems that one half a million dollars is a very large sum to have expended on a building which is certainly not a very fine one to look at, though I cannot say anything as to whether it is comfortable or not.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is true, a large sum of money has been expended on that building from year to year, but it was not a new building when it was purchased, and it had to be put in good order. Then it was found that large additions were required which cost large sums of money. It is not a very prepossessing building, but is, I understand, a very comfortable dwelling. It would please me and I have no doubt my colleagues very much, to be able to come down and ask for a vote for a new building, which would be more seemly if not more comfortable, and the time will come when we shall have to erect a new building either there or elsewhere, but I do not know whether we shall be able to meet the wishes of the hon. gentleman so soon as he seems to desire. In the meantime, however, we must keep the building in proper order, in order that the Governor General and his household may be comfortable. I do not think last year's expenditure was at all extravagant. After an examination by experts, we removed the drains from the building, as the inmates were afraid of fever, and that cost a large sum of money. The heating has to be done with stoves, as there are no furnaces in the building; so we have had to spend a large amount of money for stoves and fuel. Altogether, I do not think we can reduce that expenditure if we keep the building comfortable.

Resolutions to be reported.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and (at 1 o'clock a.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

TUESDAY, 1st May, 1883.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

PRIVATE BILLS.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved that as the time for the reception of reports from the Committee on Private Bills expires to-day, the time be extended until the 11th of May, in accordance with the recommendation of the Committee on Railways, &c.

Motion agreed to.

INLAND REVENUE ACT CONSOLIDATION BILL

Mr. COSTIGAN moved the second reading of Bill (No. 115) to consolidate and amend the several Acts respecting the Inland Revenue.

Bill read the second time; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. COSTIGAN. Although this is apparently a very long Bill, it is merely a re-enactment of the present law, with a few changes in some clauses, which I will explain as we reach them. In the first clause the only change is adding the word "malt," which seems to have been an oversight, and then by adding the new sub-section C.

On section 2,

Mr. COSTIGAN. That is changed to the old Act. In the first place, the words "or cultivation of tobacco for sale" are omitted, on account of the changes you will find in the section referring to the subject of tobacco. Under the resolution already introduced, hon. members will have seen that in future we do not intend to have any supervision of the cultivation of tobacco at all.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). The hon. gentleman has not indicated where those words "or cultivation of tobacco for sale" are to be found. This Bill, like the Militia Bill, does not indicate what is omitted, and such cannot be found, except with the aid of a search warrant.

Mr. COSTIGAN. In the fifth line of the seventh section, in the new Act, sections dealing with particular subjects are grouped together, so that section two, for example, of this Act, does not correspond with the same section of the old Act.

On section 8,

Mr. COSTIGAN. Sub-section four of section eight is new, and it reads as follows:—

If any Inspector of Inland Revenue reports to the Department of Inland Revenue, that it is not expedient that a license should be granted in respect of any building in connection with which the license is applied for, in view of its proximity to any such shop or premises as in the next preceding sub-section mentioned, the licence shall not be granted notwithstanding that the provisions of the said sub-section would not operate to prevent the granting of such license.]

Mr. LAURIER. I think the power taken is a very proper one, but it should not be placed in the hands of subordinate officers. I would suggest that the word "may" should be substituted for "shall."

Mr. COSTIGAN. I accept the suggestion of the hon. gentleman.

On section 30,

Mr. COSTIGAN. The last proviso of sub-section three is an amendment of the old Act.

Mr. LAURIER. What is the object?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The object is simply the convenience of the manufacturer. It was thought that these uninspected scales would not be used in weighing the raw material, or in ascertaining the manufactured product, but only in the intermediate processes of manufacture it might be a hardship to require the manufacturer to purchase new scales, when no injury to the public would be done by the use of the old ones.

Mr. LAURIER. I would like to know the raison d'être for this change. It would seem if these scales are false, if they have not been verified, that there might be an injury to the revenue as well as to the public.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I do not see how that can happen, as the law makes ample provision for the protection of the public as well as of the revenue with regard to the use of unverified scales. But in this case the manufacturer might even guess at the quantity, say of tobacco, to be used in making a certain number of cigars, so that I can see no harm in his using these scales instead.

Mr. ROSS (West Middlesex). As I understand this House, these scales are only used by the manufacturer in his own business, and do not determine the weight of what he gives to the public, or the weight of the material on which the duty is levied. They are simply private scales, for the purpose of showing that such a quantity of tobacco will make so many cigars, or so many plugs of tobacco, as the case may be. You are giving a legal status to scales that are no scales at all. If a man chooses to use a scoop shovel, or to guess the quantity, I do not see how you can make him amenable to the law.

Mr. COSTIGAN. There may arise a necessity for this provision. It may be that the clause will bear the construction that the hon. gentleman gives to it, but I think that would be a strained interpretation. If the hon. gentleman reads the section, he will find, I think, that under it neither the public nor the revenue will suffer.

On section 37,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Does not the wording of this section give greater weight to the oath of a person, than to the statement of the owner of a manufactory? The Department may at any time examine a person who has left the employ of a manufacturer, and upon his testimony, may reject the written, and in fact sworn statement of the manufacturer, or his bookkeeper.

Mr. COSTIGAN. No complaints have been made to my knowledge, against the working of this provision; but if the hon. gentleman thinks there is any serious objection to the wording of the clause, I am willing to allow it to stand.

On section 57,

Mr. COSTIGAN. There is a reduction of the warehouse fee here, from $40 to $10 for each additional warehouse.

On section 58,

Mr. COSTIGAN. This is a new clause and reads as follows:—

The Governor in Council may order that an Inland Revenue Bonding Warehouse shall be established at any place or places specified in such order; and such order shall prescribe the storage dues, and the license fee to be paid by persons using such Inland Revenue Bonding Warehouse, but such license fee shall not exceed ten dollars per annum: Provided always, that all goods stored and kept in any Inland Revenue Bonding Warehouse established under the provisions of this section shall be stored and kept at the risk, in every respect, of the owner thereof, and that any damage or loss by fire or otherwise shall not give rise to a claim for indemnity by the owner.

This section is put in for the convenience of the trade.

Mr. DALY. I am happy to see this clause introduced. It remedies the evils we have felt for some time.

On section 64,

Mr. COSTIGAN. The second sub-section is a new section. We make this alteration so as to apply to all manufacturers instead of to distillers, as it was in the old Act.

Mr. LAURIER. There seems to be no reason why an exception should be made.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The difference is that in the first case what is taken is taken from the manufacturer and paid for; in the second case, the material taken is in order to ascertain the degree of moisture, and it is given right back to him.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). But it must be remembered that after tobacco has been tested for moisture it is utterly worthless. When samples of tobacco, worth $1 or $1.25 per lb, are taken from say 100 bales, the amount is considerable, and the Department should pay for it as it is taken for Departmental convenience.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Only very small quantities are taken to ascertain the degree of moisture. All these changes have been made after full consultation with the officials throughout the country, and with the manufacturers themselves.

Mr. LAURIER. The principle is a wrong one, that you should compel a man to supply these samples without paying for them, which in the aggregate may amount to a pretty large sum. The first part of the section provides that an officer shall not take any of these samples without payment being made; but the latter part states that he may take samples of tobacco and not pay for them.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The section does not state the quantity he shall take as samples. If the manufacturer is not on very good terms with the officer, the latter may take a pound to test. The section gives a power to officers which they should not possess.

On section 68,

Mr. LAURIER. The language of this section is so vague that it may place tyrannical power in the hands of the inspector or collector. There is nothing definite about it; it says, if any person does anything "in the opinion of the officer." I think the section should be reconsidered.

Mr. COSTIGAN. This section applies only when the officer is in the discharge of his duty.

Mr. LAURIER. The power already given to officers is very strong. If the rules and regulations imposed on manufacturers are complied with that should be sufficient.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The hon. gentleman takes an extreme view of the case, and presumes that the officer is going to abuse his position.

Mr. LAURIER. I do not do so; but the hon. gentleman will agree that in an Act of this kind, which is an infringement of the liberty of the subject, it is only right and proper that officers should be kept within strict rules, and not be in a position to place annoyances, not contemplated by the Act, on manufacturers.

Mr. COSTIGAN. It is only a collector who can exercise this power. The officers will have to report to him, and he will have to use his judgment in the matter. I agree with the hon. gentleman that no restrictions should be imposed that are not absolutely necessary, but I think this restriction is necessary.

On section 71,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I would like to ask my learned friend if there is not a protection given to the defendant in that case, which is not given in ordinary law.

On section 76,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I would like to say a word or two in a general way with reference to this Bill. It only came into our hands yesterday, and it contains 374 clauses, between 50 or 100 of which are new clauses. I have been endeavoring to read the Bill, and was at work until twelve o'clock last night, and for a good while this morning, in order to understand it and know what it was. I then come to the House and find that it has been taken up. The new clauses are intricate, and yet some hon. gentlemen cry "carried, carried," as they are called. The hon. Minister ought to be satisfied to get this Bill through in two or three days, as it entirely remodels the whole matter. I do not want to make a complaint, but I do not think that we ought to have gone on with this Bill to day at all. This is a new clause, and I am at a loss to see the necessity of it. I think that it is too stringent, and that it ought to be struck out.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Then we would have to strike out clause eighteen.

Mr. PATERSON. I know that; but there are a good many clauses which I would like to strike out. Clause eighteen was passed before I came in. How do you interpret, for instance:

Every manufacturer who neglects or refuses to keep his license posted as required by section 18 of this Act, shall incur and pay a penalty of $50 for the first offence, and of $100 for each subsequent offence.

Of course, I cannot now speak on clause eighteen, which was passed unfortunately when I was not in the House; but I have made a note of it. What is meant by "subsequent offence," if you do not have the license posted?

Mr. COSTIGAN. I suppose it means notification, if the license is not up.

Mr. PATERSON. He is notified, and then the official comes in an hour after, and the license is not up. Is that a subsequent offence; and if another hour elapses, is that another subsequent offence.

Mr. COSTIGAN. By section eighteen, we provided for the posting of licenses on the premises.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is not exactly that; it was as follows:—

18. Every person licensed under this Act, shall keep his license posted in a conspicuous place in his manufactory."

All the licensee has to do is to stick it up, and keep it up; and this provision being in the Bill, something must be done to enforce it; if it is not posted up under section eighteen, the offender must be punished under section seventy-six.

Mr. PATERSON. I do not see the necessity for it. Only the license is issued, and suppose it is destroyed, or torn down from its place in the shop or store, a new license cannot be got. All these difficulties present themselves.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. All you have to do is to prove that, and it will be renewed.

Mr. PATERSON. If any good purpose could be served by posting the license I could understand it. Why should it be posted up, when a record is kept of every manufacturer who is licensed, and this is entered in a book and numbered, the officers of the Government have it. It is known to the Department, and why licenses should be kept posted up, is something which I cannot understand.

Mr. BOURBEAU. All we have to do is to prove that we have posted up the license. When a store keeper gets a license, he is obliged to have it posted up in the store. If the license becomes torn, or is in some manner removed, all we have to do is to prove that we have posted up the license.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). This relates to manufacturers, and not to store keepers. The Government, in the first place, have a record of every manufacturer who is licensed. They have this entered and numbered. They know all about the manufactory, and where it is—they cannot help knowing where it is—and why a man should be required to keep his license posted up, and a penalty of from $50 to $100 enforced, if it is torn down, I cannot comprehend. The license is guarded carefully, in some special drawer, and it is always kept there. Under another section the burden of proof is thrown on the man; and why should the license be stuck up where some person may have access to it and destroy it? If the Department knows that a man has a license, what object can be served by this provision?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is done for the same reason that such notice has to be put up in steamboats—a copy of their license, and all the regulations. Captains have to put up such notices, and also inn-keepers, licensed to keep spirituous liquors.

Mr. PATERSON. Can the hon. gentleman tell the practical use of it.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is to tell the public that he is a licensed dealer, and not an illicit dealer. This gives notice to the public.

Mr. DAVIES. The only force in the objection is in the imposition of a penalty of $50. If a license is torn down inadvertently, only a nominal fine would then be imposed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If it is torn down, there would be no nominal fine.

Mr. DAVIES. No discretion is left. There must be a fine of $50.

Mr. COSTIGAN. This is only done if a man refuses to comply with the law.

Mr. DAVIES. If the fault is due to inadvertency, it is not reasonable to fine a man $50; but if it is due to any other cause, then this would be reasonable. I think that we can meet the difficulty by saying that the offending party should pay a fine not exceeding $50.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I hope the hon. gentleman will not ask us to go back to section eighteen which has already been passed without the opposition of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Mr. LAURIER. I do not think the posting of the license can be any great inconvenience, but I certainly think the penalty is an extremely severe one. Would it not be well to make the penalty not more than $50, leaving the amount to the discretion of the magistrate after considering the circumstances of the offence.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is simply the order of the Statute that every manufacturer shall keep his license posted. That is an easy thing to do, and if he does not do it he neglects or refuses to do it—to use the words of the Statute—and he pays the penalty. If he neglects or refuses he must do so perversely, and therefore he should pay the penalty. If the license is torn down, or taken off, then he does not refuse, and he is not liable to the penalty. The intention must be willful, or there cannot be neglect or refusal.

Mr. LAURIER. The argument of the right hon. gentleman justifies my contention. I say that he should not pay the same penalty for neglect as for refusal.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I think the hon. Minister might tell us whether the lack or absence of such a provision has produced any evil results in the past. For my own part I am utterly at a loss to conceive what additional security such a clause can give the Department. The Inland Revenue Law is at any rate an annoying and vexatious—

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Not to the honest dealer.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Yes, to all dealers; because the Department, in watching the honest dealer, is forced to take strong steps to guard against fraud, and they feel constrained to word the Statute so strongly that it is almost impossible for any man, honest or otherwise, to comply with it. For that reason there should be no vexatious restrictions placed in the law unless for a specified and a good purpose.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. As I understand it, the law imposes heavy penalties upon vendors of leaf tobacco who sell to any but licensed manufacturers; and in order that they may know at a glance whether they are selling to licensed or unlicensed manufacturers, the notice should be put up where it may readily be seen. Then the seller has no excuse.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I candidly confess that that is the reason, though I have not seen it before. The Inland Revenue Law deals with so many matters that we are all apt to look at it from our particular point of view, and perhaps to overlook matters which do not pertain to that branch with which we are most acquainted. But is the penalty not rather severe?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think not, considering that perverseness must be shown before the penalty can be imposed.

On section 77,

Mr. SCRIVER. I would call the attention of the hon. member for Halifax to part of this fifth sub-section. It provides that all horses, vehicles, and so forth, which are used for the purpose of removing spirits, malt, &c., to be used in producing any articles subject to Excise in contravention of this Act, shall be liable to be seized, and may either be destroyed when and where found, or removed to some place for safe keeping. That would seem to imply that the horses may be destroyed and might bring up the question of cruelty to animals.

Mr. RICHEY. There is nothing here providing that the destruction of the horses—if any are to be destroyed—shall be cruelly done. I remember some hon. gentlemen opposite objected when we attempted to provide that animals might be destroyed under certain circumstances.

Mr. SCRIVER. The hon. gentleman will see, however, that there may be cases in which it would be proper and necessary to destroy them. I think the intention of the clause was not to take the life of the horses, but to destroy the vehicles. Probably there has been an oversight in wording it.

Mr. WILSON. I think the hon. member for Halifax (Mr. Richey) will not pretend to say that it is necessary, or in the public interest, that horses seized on occasions of this kind should be destroyed. The seizing officer will have a perfect right to exercise his sole judgment and discretion, with reference to seizing and destroying the man's horse. I do not think the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue intended that such a course should be pursued.

Mr. LAURIER. I do not think that we shall differ as to that. The Act provides that these things shall be forfeited to the Crown, and the officer shall have the benefit of them; so that he is not likely to destroy them.

On section 78,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Supposing a man is engaged in the manufacture of other lines of goods besides tobacco; would the seizure provided by this section cover those other goods, or only the line that is subject to Excise?

Mr. PATERSON (Brant).

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I think it covers all that is in the premises.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). It would not, I think. It ought to be sufficient to seize the offending stock.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is not the stock that offends, but the man, and he is liable for all that is there.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). But he offends as to this stock, and if you seize that stock alone, it ought to be sufficient. He may have $10,000 or $15,000 worth of goods there besides the particular line.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Then he will take the greater precaution. This is the old law, which I have no doubt was copied from the English Excise Law.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). The hon. gentleman will know that businesses are very much more divided there than here, and probably the question has never arisen there.

On section 79,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). This is a clause of the old Act which I think was too stringent also. The Act provides that a return shall be made on the first of every month. On the sixth of the month the duty becomes payable. That day might be a very busy one for the manufacturer, and he might forget to send down his cheque for the duty. In that case he would be liable to lose all his stock. I think it might be provided that the officer shall remind the manufacturer on the sixth of the month, and give him six hours notice. Another clause gives the officer the right to share in the proceeds of the seizure, and thus makes it his interest that the man should neglect to pay the duty, and that the seizure should take place.

Mr. COSTIGAN. This clause is from the old Act, and it has not been found to work harshly. If the sixth day should be a busy day there is no reason why the manufacturer should not pay on the fourth. The objection urged by the hon. gentleman that the officer being a participator in the proceeds of the confiscated goods will not exist under the present law, as it will provide that the officers above the rank of an exciseman shall not participate in the fines, because the seizures are not made by them, but by the officers under them. As the collectors are required to act as Judges, it is thought that they should not participate in the fines, so that the public will have full confidence in their decisions.

Mr. PATERSON. There ought to be some one to see that the duty is paid, as it is possible a man in business might forget to attend to it. It would not be too much to require that an officer should, on the fifth or sixth day, give notice that the duty is due; but when it is his interest that the merchant should forget to pay—when he gets a share in the forfeiture—he will be careful not to take any such steps.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. You could not expect officers who might be a mile and a-half distant to go round and give the notice.

On section 80,

Mr. COSTIGAN. This clause is changed by imposing two different penalties. The party who puts up these illegal packages is guilty of a misdemeanor, and the party who sells the package also incurs a penalty.

On section 82,

Mr. COSTIGAN. This is the old Act, the only change being the addition of the words "except as permitted by the Act," and the words, in the fifth line, "or in whose licensed premises there shall at any time be found any box, &c.," and the words in the old Act, section 155: "without first giving an exact return or account, with a description of such packages, and of the marks or labels then upon them, to the officer of Inland Revenue under whose survey his premises are obtaining a permit thereto," are left out.

Mr. LAURIER. These words left out have a great bearing on the clause. The clause in the old Act means that if a person does any of the acts mentioned without first giving an exact return, he shall incur a penalty; but you amend the Act by saying that, whether he gives a return, whether he is innocent or not, he shall be fined.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Circumstances have changed, which make this change absolutely necessary. There is no necessity for these articles being brought into factories at all, and the fact of their being brought there we must presume to be evidence of fraud.

Mr. LAURIER. There may be cases where they are not brought in with fraudulent intent, and no opportunity is given to establish that.

Mr. COSTIGAN. We do not want parties to bring in these packages at all, and therefore we struck out the notice under which they would have an excuse to bring them in.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). This seems to be a very stringent enactment. Supposing a person brings into a cigar store an empty cigar box and sets it on the counter, and an Excise officer comes in and finds it, would you fine that vendor $500 and seize his whole stock?

Mr. COSTIGAN. This is only consistent with sub-section F of section 247, which provides that manufactured tobacco of every description should be put up in new packages.

On section 83,

Mr. COSTIGAN. This is the old Act, with a few additions. In sub-section two, the words "tobacco press, cutting machine, or knife," are added. In sub-section four, the word "plan" is added. In sub-section five, the words "collector of Inland Revenue" are added.

Mr. PATERSON. We find here entirely new features. I take exception to the provision concerning tobacco presses, cutting machines, or knives. It is well known that in some manufactories, the men, after using up their old knives, throw them away and buy new ones with their own money, as they cost but a few cents. The manufacturer does not know anything about it, and he has no means of knowing; and still you propose to make him liable to have his whole place seized for the acts of his men.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I think that he is supposing a case which is not likely to occur.

Mr. PATERSON. It occurs every month or two when a man throws away his knife. The language does not permit any deviation from it.

Mr. COSTIGAN. How does the hon. gentleman expect that control can be exercised otherwise?

Mr. PATERSON. There is no necessity to control the number of knives in a tobacco manufactory, and no good object can be served by putting these words into the clause.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Under the regulations they are required to make a report of everything that is required. If they require one knife, or ten knives, they are supposed to state that. If one of the men found his knife useless, and replaced it by a new one, of course that will not be looked upon as a violation of the law.

Mr. LAURIER. I can well understand that the Department should have control of all the stock owned by the manufacturers. But if the men furnish their own knives, it is impossible to expect that the Department will hold the manufacturers responsible for those knives.

Mr. BOURBEAU (Translation). I always understood that the manufacturers furnished the knives, but if they oblige their employes to furnish their own knives I think we can compel the latter to declare the number of knives of which they make use. I think after this Act the manufacturer can oblige the employes to furnish the necessary knives to cut tobacco, or he can furnish them himself. If he furnishes them himself he will have control of the number of knives used in manufacturing; if, on the contrary, he obliges the employes to furnish the knives, he can fix the number which they may use, and remove from the factory those which they do not use.

Mr. COSTIGAN. We will strike out the words "or knife," but leave the rest in.

On section 86, sub-section 8,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). These penalties are very disproportionate. A manufacturer has to make a monthly statement. If it is not made on the first of the month he is liable to a penalty of not less than $50, nor more than $300; for the second and subsequent offence he is liable to a penalty of $500, together with a further penalty, equivalent to double the amount of the license fees, duty or other impost payable under this Act, on any spirits, malt, beer, manufactured tobacco, cigars, stock, goods manufactured in bond, or materials for manufacturing them. In the case of one of the large manufacturers the penalty for simply omitting to make that return on the first day of the month would be equal to not less than $50,000 or $100,000.

Mr. COSTIGAN. We have suggested only such changes as are necessary; the other sections are from the old law, respecting which no changes have been made.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I am not complaining of the new Bill; but I contend that the old Act is too stringent, and you are making it more stringent and difficult to work up to. My opinion in regard to penalties—and I ask the first man if there is not some force in my contention—is this: A certain penalty is imposed for the first offence; for the second offence a very heavy penalty is imposed, and, in addition, the Bill provides for forfeiture of stock. That is, proportionately, a far heavier penalty on a large manufacturer than on a small manufacturer. I will not say that the former is more respectable, but it cannot be argued in the other direction; but when it comes to a question of forfeiture it means that the former pays $1,000, while the latter pays $1. The principle is not a fair one, although it is in the old Act. The penalties are too severe, and might be relaxed.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is very true that some of the penalties may be excessive, and that the whole system of penalties may be wrong; but I take it that we cannot consider this question now. If we are going to take up this question of penalties, their cumulative character, their varieties of amount, we must make a special study of it. This Bill is simply a consolidation of the Statutes, with the addition of some amendments. Both in England and here, we find it difficult to carry consolidation of laws, from the fact that although clauses may not be altered in any way from the old Act, hon. members may discuss them, and this fact has caused great restriction in passing Consolidation Laws in England, and Bills have several times been abandoned on that ground. This Bill is not only a consolidation but an amendment, and the effect of the whole Bill being discussed de novo will be that an hon. member, or a Minister, wishing to amend and consolidate an Act will not introduce a consolidation Bill but simply a Bill with a few clauses containing the amendments to the old law which he seeks, the amendments being judged on their merits; and great inconvenience will be caused to the public, professional and otherwise, for there will be half-a-dozen amending Statutes, as the Government will not bring down consolidation Bills, because their discussion may re-open the whole question. If the hon. gentleman (Mr. Paterson) really objected to the whole system of penalties, and desired it to be reconsidered, he may enter into the subject. But the Bill does not propose to readjust the penalties. The hon. Minister introduces certain clauses on that and on other subjects from the old Act for convenience sake, just as they are, and wishes the Committee to pass them. The hon. Minister offers amendments, and if they are accepted they become part of the Bill; but we would never get through with any consolidation Bill if every clause were considered de novo.

Mr. LAURIER. All these penalty clauses are very severe, but in my judgment there is no remedy. All Excise Laws must be so; it is not the fault of the law itself, but of the system which is a consequence of the Excise Law.

On section 97,

Mr. WILSON. Power is given under this clause to commit offending parties to prison for a period not exceeding two years. This is certainly giving very extensive power to the courts in cases where a money penalty is involved, and I would like to call the attention of the Government particularly to its severity.

On section 109,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I notice that though this section has been amended it contains the same objectionable principle which appeared in the old Act; and I think, as the Minister has struck out that principle from another clause, he should go further, and not allow any participation in the penalties by any officer in the Excise whatever. The excisemen are the men who have to look after the manufacturers, and the tendency would be that they might wink at a mere oversight on the part of the manufacturer with a view of sharing in the profits afterwards. I think this is a most injurious principle, and it involves a great source of danger, as, in my opinion, there should be no law on the Statute-book which would allow any unworthy person who might creep into the service to wink at any innocent oversight or neglect on the part of the manufacturer. It should be the duty of the exciseman, so far as he has the power, to see that the manufacturer carries out the strict requirements of the law.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The reason why we changed the law with respect to collectors is one which does not apply in the case of other officers. I believe thoroughly in giving the Excise officers an interest in the seizure so that they may look after any attempts to defraud the revenue. The reason we excluded the collector from any participation in these fines was that he was not, properly speaking, the seizing officer, but a man who was called upon to act as Judge, and should, therefore, be in a position to ensure respect for his decisions.

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Then, Sir, I entirely dissent from the hon. Minister. The principle is an utterly wrong one, and one that should be without any justification in any assembly. If a manufacturer makes a certain omission on a certain day—if he should make a mistake with regard to one out of hundreds or thousands of packages which may be going out of his shop from day to day—if he should, during the hurry and turmoil of business, be guilty of one of the very little trifling neglects which it is almost impossible to avoid, you offer a direct inducement to the officer of the Excise to allow the manufacturer to do so because he shares in the fines, which may, perhaps, amount to hundreds and thousands of dollars. It may be that he shares to the extent of thousands of dollars, for a man's whole stock of $50,000 or $100,000 worth of goods may be seized under this clause; and he a competent witness. He whose duty it is to see that the manufacturer does carry out the law, who may know that the manufacturer had simply forgotten, who may know that the manufacturer is an honest man, and had no intention of fraud. This provision offers him an inducement to let that manufacturer forget, because the seizure can then be made, the penalty levied, the man's stock confiscated, and he shares in it. I say the principle is wrong, no matter who defends it.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

On section 115,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I would suggest that a concise set of those Departmental Regulations should be placed in the hands of each holder of a license.

On section 171,

Mr. ORTON. In regard to this clause, I desire to draw the attention of the Committee to the change in the law of the United States in regard to the import duty on malt. As hon. members of the Committee are doubtless aware, there is now a duty of 20 per cent. ad valorem, instead of 20 cts. a bushel as formerly, and they have also reduced the duty upon barley imported from Canada, from 15 cts. to 10 cts. per bushel, which, no doubt, is a considerable advantage to the Canadian farmers, thereby affording them a better opportunity for obtaining a market for their barley in the United States. At the same time, it is also important to the farmers of this country, and to the large malting interest in Canada, that our maltsters should be, to some extent, encouraged, and, if possible, some equivalent be given to enable them to compete with the maltsters of the United States, thus affording competition in the barley market of Canada for the barley produced by our farmers. It has been suggested that there should be even a further drawback upon the malt which is exported; and, for my part, I do not see that it would be at all injurious to the interests of any class, and it would place the maltsters of Canada upon a fair footing with the maltsters of the United States, and the result would be highly beneficial, not only to the large malting interest of Canada, but to our farmers who are engaged so largely, and from year to year are engaged more largely, in the production of barley. It will not be out of place to refer to another matter while this clause is under consideration, which I think is also of great importance, and to which I have had the honor of directing the attention of the House on former occasions, that is a change in the law with respect to the duty—as to whether the duty should be collected from malt or from malt liquors. As the Committee are doubtless aware, a fierce battle was fought in Great Britain in regard to this question. The farmers of Great Britain desired to have the duty taken off malt, for the important purpose of enabling them to use malt in feeding cattle; and as we are competing, not only with the cattle feeders of Great Britain, but also with those of the United States, it is eminently desirable that this country should be placed on an equal footing in regard to this industry in regard to other countries. I do not see why malt should not be obtained by our farmers for feeding purposes in a very simple and easy manner. The Government of the United States have, for a number of years, pursued a policy there which has worked very satisfactory. They have collected the duty, not from malt but from malt liquor, by a system of stamps—stamps being placed on each package sent out of the brewery or other place where malt liquors are manufactured. The result has proved, as I have said, to be highly beneficial. A great saving, it is said, is effected in the Inland Revenue Department of that country by that system, and brewers are not subjected to the same difficulties they undergo under the system in vogue here. It is true that in Great Britain no farmers are allowed to use malt, and the duty is now collected from malt liquors. The same system does not exist. The duty there is collected from so much per gallon on malt liquors instead of on malt, and the farmers have the advantage of using malt for feeding purposes. In respect to this point, of the benefit of malt for feeding purposes, I desire to draw the attention of the Committee to the fact that nearly all artificial feeds which are sold so largely in Canada, and are used so extensively for the fattening of cattle, have malt for their principal ingredient. We find that when grain is malted its feeding qualities are much increased, and that cattle can be fed upon such food at less cost, and fattened more rapidly. I hope the hon. Minister of Inland Revenue will bestow attention to this matter. I presume it is rather late in the Session to have the change made; but if he can possibly see his way clear to have the alteration effected, I think it would be an immense benefit to the farmers of this country, as well as to the brewers. It is very true that some large brewers in the cities prefer the old plan of collecting duty on malt. It is very well known that the brewers in Great Britain fought against the farmers on this question, and insisted on having the duty collected on malt, for the large and wealthy brewers thus prevented small brewers from starting in business; and the same feeling exists in this country. The wealthy brewers in our large cities prefer to have the duty upon malt, but the small brewers in the rural districts desire to have the duty taken off malt and placed upon beer. I may say that a very strong feeling is felt by agriculturists engaged in feeding cattle with reference to this question, and I have been urged by a great many leading agriculturists of Ontario to press this question on the Government.

Mr. COSTIGAN. This section will stand over.

Mr. DUNDAS. I might just say that if the proposed change were made in the manner of collecting the revenue—if the Excise duty were placed on beer instead of on malt—I think this would be a good argument and a good reason why the Government should grant a rebate or drawback on malt exported; but while the duty is collected as it now is, I do not think the change should be made.

Mr. ORTON. I am urging that the duty should be collected, not on the malt, but on the beer.

Mr. DUNDAS. I think that it would be bad policy to grant a drawback on malt at the present time, owing to the action of the American Government recently, in changing the duty upon barley and malt. We can, of course, carry this system of drawbacks too far; and I think that while it is well to have our legislation regulated in accordance with our convenience and requirements, under the present circumstances it would not be good policy to grant a drawback on malt exported to the other side, since no revenue is collected on the malt which is now exported.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I move that the word "eight" in the forty-fifth line, thirteenth page, be changed to "four;" this duty refers to revenue collected on fermented beverages made in imitation of beer or malt liquor.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). What effect will this have on the revenue?

Mr. COSTIGAN. The revenue from this source does not amount to anything.

On section 236,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Sub-section N provides for the affixing of cigar stamps on packages of cigars. The old law required the stamps to be fixed by an officer of the Department. I wish to know if the hon. Minister intends that rule to be continued.

Mr. COSTIGAN. The whole system of stamping will be changed after the 1st of July. It will be made more convenient for the manufacturer than before. It will be hardly fair to make the officers affix the stamps.

On section 239,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I suppose the manufacturers will give a statement of the number of hands employed, in a monthly return.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes; in the monthly returns.

On section 244,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). Under this, a manufacturer might be prohibited running a broom factory in connection with a tobacco factory. I can understand keeping cigars and tobacco separate, because that is the intent of the law; but I presume the Department will exercise discretion in this matter.

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes; it leaves the Department to judge. If it be a business not incompatible with the manufacture of cigars or tobacco the Department will not interfere.

On section 246,

Mr. PATERSON. "The Inland Revenue Act provides," &c.: is that all to be put in this notice down to the bottom of the clause?

Mr. COSTIGAN. Yes; all that will be in the notice. The four words "Raw Leaf Tobacco Entrance" are to be over the entrance, and the rest is the notice showing the requirements of the law.

On section 248,

Mr. COSTIGAN. That is a new item which I explained when the resolutions were introduced. A drawback of 2 per cent. on the value of the stamps used shall be allowed to manufacturers of foreign leaf tobacco, on the ground that they have to pay in advance a large amount of money. When they pay in advance of course we can run no risk, and as a sort of indemnity to them we allow that drawback.

On section 258,

Mr. PATERSON. How does the hon. gentleman arrive at the 25 lbs. standard? My own impression is that it is ample.

Mr. COSTIGAN. We find, from the experience of the Department, that 25 lbs. of leaf should produce 1,000 cigars. Should that be found too high an estimate the Governor in Council takes power to change it.

On section 294,

Mr. DUGAS. The sum of $10 seems to be rather high for a producer's license, and altogether disproportionate. It is certainly very unjust to place it at this figure, and it ought to be made nominal.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I agree with the hon. gentleman. It was not intended to fix this license at $10, but at a lower rate; and I think that $2 would meet the case, while we will not, in my opinion, lose anything by the substitution.

On section 299,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). This clause is as follows:—

"All raw leaf tobacco imported shall be bonded at one or other of the above-named ports of entry, in a Customs warehouse, which shall be subject to the approval of the Collector of Customs at the port of entry."

And the next clause is thus worded:

"All imported raw leaf tobacco shall be weighed by the proper officer of Customs at the port where it enters the Dominion; and the importer or owner thereof shall provide all necessary appliances for weighing the packages and their contents, and all labor necessary for moving, piling or handing such packages."

On section 323,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). I would just say, once for all, that many of these penalties seem to be unduly severe. I quite admit the difficulty the Department is under in not being able to distinguish between neglect and fraud. In a clear case of fraud I am quite willing that a heavy penalty should be imposed; but the danger is that the penalty might sometimes be imposed for a mere omission or mistake, which the Department might take to be a fraud.

That a man should be laid under penalties for a simple omission to put up a notice in his office, or because a box should have found its way into his place without his knowledge or design, does seem to me to be rather harsh. I quite admit the difficulty in discriminating between the fraudulent dealer and the man who merely makes a mistake. I think there ought to be some latitude taken by the Department to itself. Some discretion should be given to its superior officers to exercise in these matters. They can generally tell whether there has been fraud or not through the character of the individual, or the nature of the circumstances.

On section 326,

Mr. PATERSON (Brant). This is an illustration of what I have just said. An omission on the part of a manufacturer's clerk involves him in a penalty of $1,000, and not less. No latitude whatever is allowed the Department to judge whether this is a mere accidental omission or error, or a fraudulent one.

Mr. COSTIGAN. I propose that this section be altered by making it read not less than $200 or more than $1,000.

Mr. PATERSON. I have never manifested at any time so much confidence in the Government, but I really do not like them to tie themselves up so that they have no discretionary power. If a case occurred in which they knew the party was not to blame they would have no choice but to impose the penalty.

On section 37,

Mr. PATERSON. The difficulty I mentioned before was, that after the oath is signed by the manufacturer the Department thereafter might bring up a person who had been in his employ, to give testimony, and if this person should testify contrary to the testimony of the manufacturer it would be taken instead of the testimony of the latter. It is possible that an employé who has been discharged in order to vent his spite might go and allege that so-and-so was the case, and might not hesitate to swear in that way. It seems to me there is a value given to his testimony greater than that given to the other man. I think the testimony of one man should not be sufficient.

Mr. COSTIGAN. This is a provision of the old Act, and as the public has not suffered anything from it up to the present time, I think we may as well let it go. The manufacturer might make a false oath, or do something wrong, and this gives the Department some latitude in such cases.

On section 46,

Mr. PATERSON. I took a well-founded objection to this point and I think the hon. Minister might very well yield it. It would be hard to make a man pay duty on goods that have been destroyed. Suppose a fire destroys the warehouse where goods are stored upon which duty has not been paid; the party not only loses his goods but he has to lose his duty as well. The goods have never gone into consumption, but the law proceeds on the assumption that the duty shall be paid by the parties who consume the goods.

Mr. HESSON. I think my hon. friend's objection is well taken. It is loss enough for the man to lose his stock without having to pay the Inland Revenue charge. I know cases myself where men have lost their goods after paying the duty, and they thought they were entitled to get it back.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If the duty is once paid it becomes a portion of the Consolidated Revenue, and can only be taken out by vote of Parliament. But I think this clause might be amended. We know that, as a matter of fact, there are continual applications made to the Department of Inland Revenue to refund the duty when the goods have been lost. I would propose, therefore, that the clause be amended by striking out all before the words "if destroyed or wasted" and adding "all goods warehoused shall be at the risk of the owner," and unless destroyed by fire duties shall be payable thereon as if they were entered for consumption.

Bill reported.

FIRST READING.

The following Bill, from the Senate, was read the first time:—

Bill (No. 120) to incorporate the Canadian Rapid Telegraph Company limited.—(Mr. Davies).

THIRD READING.

The following Bill was considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time, and passed:—

Bill (No. 108) further to amend the Act respecting the Harbor of Pictou.

SUPPLY.

The House again resolved itself into Committee.

121. Harbors and Rivers, Nova Scotia. $63,350.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The first item is Cow Bay $12,000, to provide a new block of crib work 250 feet in length, and twenty-five feet in width, and to repair the north side of the breakwater, placing hardwood piles in all parts of it where they are worm-eaten and liable at any time to be destroyed. The fact is, that this work will be destroyed if not repaired as proposed. Benacadie Pond, Cape Breton, $7,000, to complete the open passage and protect the sides of the same with crib work. South Ingonish, $10,000. There is here required, in addition to the appropriation of last year, extensive repairs indispensable to place this work in safety, according to the estimate of the engineer. Cheverie, $7,500, to extend the wharf northwards, to complete the arm 250 feet westward, and to form a harbor with a depth of twenty-two feet of water. This is to continue the work. Parrsborough or Partridge Island River, $2,500 — to complete. This work was begun in 1881; it is to complete the deepening of the channel, which is used for the shipment of coal from the Springhill mines. The excavations were only pursued during low water each day, and consequently several seasons were taken up in performing the whole work required. Port Hood, $12,500, to complete the work of repairing the pier with the view of restoring it to its former usefulness, in accordance with the estimate of the Chief Engineer.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Which of the piers is this—the mainland, or the one from the Island?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Chief Engineer, on the 24th of last February, stated that this work was very seriously damaged during the gales of the latter part of the year 1881; and so much so as to render it useless as a landing pier, unless it is repaired to the extent of $16,000; while to place this wharf in a thoroughly efficient condition a further sum of $9,000 will be needed. The inhabitants of New Glasgow petitioned, in 1882, for a grant of money to repair the Port Hood breakwater. The petitioners state that the repairs prayed for are absolutely necessary to accommodate the steamers plying between Pictou and Port Hood. A considerable trade is carried on between the counties of Pictou and Inverness, &c.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Is this wharf on the mainland?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; it is a breakwater.

Mr. CAMERON. Is the old pier on the mainland?

Mr. MACKENZIE. It is not a breakwater.

Mr. CAMERON. It is the only breakwater there.

Mr. MACKENZIE. One was commenced on the Island, was there not?

Mr. CAMERON. No. One was proposed in 1878, but not built. Tenders were asked for, but the contract was never awarded.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. This wharf is called a breakwater, at all events in the report of the Engineer. Coffin's Island, $2,900, to complete the work begun a year ago. Fort Lorne, $500, to complete the work. Three Fathom Harbor, $1,000, to make additions required to the present breakwater, in a north-westerly direction, on the same plan as is followed by the present work for the purpose of strengthening the beach, as at present the sea during south-easterly storms breaks through.

Mr. VAIL. I understood the hon. Minister to say that this $2,000 for Westport pier will be expended within the financial year.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. VAIL. I would just remind the hon. gentleman that I have the same complaint with regard to these grants which I made with respect to public buildings, namely, that they are all, or nearly all, in eastern Nova Scotia. There are works of quite as much importance required to be done in the west as in the east.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I can assure the hon. gentleman that there is no intention of discriminating between the east and the west, and I have no doubt that the wind which carried me to the east will bring me back to the west.

Mr. KIRK. I would like to ask the hon. Minister what proportion of the money granted last year was expended, and how much he intends to expend of the present votes.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The intention is to spend every dollar that may be usefully employed. Of course, if we find that the vote is too large we will expend only what is absolutely necessary.

Mr. KIRK. What proportion?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am not in a position to say, because these votes for harbors and other works go on all the time. The amounts put at the disposal of my Department are intended to be expended, and will be expended within the time fixed by Parliament.

Mr. KIRK. I notice that the whole grant this year for Nova Scotia amounts to $63,350, while last year it was $109,450, or a difference of $46,100. I fancy there are as many harbors in the Province of Nova Scotia as last year, but I do not think the Government have completed a great many breakwaters in those harbors. There were many grants made last year which were not expended—two in my own county, $3,000 for New Harbor, in the county of Guysborough, another for Indian Harbor in the same county. The hon. Minister stated, some time ago, in reply to a question of mine, that it was found that the works would cost so much that it would be useless to expend the money. This may be true, and so far as the reports of the engineer go there is reason in what he says. But I fail to find that there has been any report laid before the Government since the grant was made. The matter stands in the same position to-day as when the vote was taken, and I cannot see how it was that the hon. Minister made up his mind, on information received since, that the work would cost so much. It is true that the engineer reported, in 1874, that the breakwater at New Harbor would cost $53,500—that is such a breakwater as the Government sent the engineer to report upon. At that time it was the policy of the Government only to construct such breakwaters as were necessary for harbors of refuge for general shipping. That is not the kind of breakwater which is wanted at that place, and, moreover, since 1874, the Government have changed their policy and have granted smaller sums for the protection of fishing craft. I notice that my predecessor last year, in applying to the Government, said he, too, thought $4,000 would be sufficient to build a breakwater at New Harbor. I think that estimate was rather low; but I believe that $10,000 would be sufficient for all necessary purposes. To show their interest in the matter, the people in the locality have actually subscribed $15,000, and are prepared to work out that amount if the Government would make up the balance. I hope the Government will alter its decision with regard to this harbor. I should be perfectly satisfied, and I think the people would be satisfied, with $3,000 to begin with, and if $3,000 were voted next year I think it would be quite sufficient to build a breakwater. I do hope the hon. Minister will reconsider his decision, and recommend this sum now.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. After the remarks of the hon. gentleman, I will give my consideration again to this matter; but I must state generally that when I obtain from Parliament a vote of money for a certain work, and I find afterwards that it will cost a great deal more, I do not go on with the work, because I do not think that would be fair to Parliament. The hon. gentleman says that our predecessors voted $3,000 for this work. That is quite possible, but I may have found afterwards that it would cost a great deal more, and did not undertake it under the circumstances.

Mr. BLAKE. The observation of the hon. gentleman is very just, and I am very glad to hear that he adopts that course. I think I can see into the true inwardness of this matter. My hon. friend says that an officer of the Department stated that a very large sum—some $53,000—would be required for this work. Of course, it was not on that report that my hon. friend acted in proposing the vote, but on the information of acting chief engineer Ogden, who told him that the $3,000 would be enough. He also had certain confidence in acting chief engineer Ogden; but when he was no longer here to represent his views, he felt that he could no longer repose implicit confidence in him, and so he does not ask for the vote. I hope, however, that he will bestow equal favor on the views of acting engineer Kirk, as he did on those of acting chief engineer Ogden.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will not discuss this matter beyond this. I have expressed my willingness to listen to the hon. gentlemen now; but if the work is to cost $10,000, or $15,000, I certainly will not undertake it with $3,000. That is the proper principle, and that is the principle upon which I intend acting in the Department.

Mr. KIRK. I am not finding fault with the hon. Minister for acting as he has done. The fact that the engineer of the Department reported that this work would cost $53,000, was, I think, a sufficient reason for refusing to undertake it with $3,000. But this report was given while the policy of the Government was not to undertake any work of a local nature. This policy, however, has been changed by the Government, they having decided to build smaller breakwaters for the benefit of the fishermen. What I would suggest is, that the Government send their engineer there again to see what a breakwater would cost that would be serviceable for the fishermen.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is a proper suggestion, and I will do that.

Mr. KEEFLER. I would like to call the hon. gentleman's attention to an appropriation of $5,000 that was made last year for a breakwater in the county of Lunenburg. I believe the money was not expended, and I would like to ask if it is the intention of the Government to expend it this year?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I see no reason why that vote should not be expended. Some of these votes are not expended, or only partially so, during the first portion of the fiscal year, but when the spring comes, we usually expend the vote.

Mr. KEEFLER. Am I to understand that this sum will be expended this year?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think so.

Mr. KIRK. The item of $1,000 for Indian Harbor is in the same position as the vote for New Harbor, and I would like the hon. Minister to treat it in the same way.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot say as to that; but if the engineer goes, he will report on that harbor as well as the other.

122. Cascumpec Harbor, P.E.I..... $5,000.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. "Towards the deepening of the channel, 14 feet deep at low water from the inner bar of sandstone, from which there is now but from 10 to 11 feet deep, necessitating the removal by submarine blasting and so on." The work that is asked is only to make a smaller channel, because the other would cost too much.

Mr. DAVIES. Is it the intention to spend the appropriation of last year, also, during the present summer?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes; there will be $10,000 expended this year. I could not ask for a larger sum, but kept the vote last year in order to have the two votes together and make something worth while.

Mr. DAVIES. I want to call the hon. gentleman's attention to the appropriation of last year for Restigouche Harbor. The breakwater, which is a very valuable work, was about being finished last year when a schooner laden with coal was driven against it in a storm and damaged it to the extent of $3,000 or $4,000. The contractor sent a petition asking for compensation for this damage, which was not due to any fault of his. I would like to know if the hon. Minister has received that petition and will give it his consideration?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I may have received the petition, but do not recollect it now. Of course it is in the Department. When was it sent?

Mr. DAVIES. At the beginning of the Session.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman will understand that my time is fully occupied during the Session in Parliament and at the Council. After the Session I will take up these matters.

Mr. DAVIES. I am quite aware of that. Of course it is a very unfortunate accident for the contractor, and is hampering him so that he may be unable to complete the work, unless he receives some assistance at the hands of the hon. Minister.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will take a note of it.

Mr. DAVIES. With reference to the appropriation last year for Wood Island Breakwater, of $3,000, no tenders have ever been called for to complete the work. Unless the money is expended there a good deal of damage will be done to it in its unfinished state. Does the hon. gentleman intend to spend that $3,000 this year?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think this matter has come again under my notice lately, for the purpose of increasing the vote, but I am not now in a position to give the information on this matter until the Supplementary Estimates come down. I will take a note of it.

Mr. DAVIES. I have received communications from the local members and other inhabitants, stating that unless some moneys are expended in protecting the existing breakwater during the coming summer, a great deal of loss will ensue. A great deal had been expended by the Local Government on this work before this Government took charge of it. There is no harbor for eighteen or twenty miles, and this expenditure would give something of a harbor.

Mr. McINTYRE. I wish to ascertain whether the sum of $4,000 appropriated for Campbell's Cove has been expended?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It has not. There was some difficulty about the contribution of the local authorities, and correspondence has been going on with the view of getting that contribution. If the local authorities furnished stone and timber, &c., which, after being examined by the engineer was reported to be of the value of their contribution, of course I would accept that, but I must have the report.

Mr. McINTYRE. I always understood that the work constructed by the Local Government was equivalent to this $4,000.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The money expended before Confederation had nothing to do with this vote. This must be an amount to be provided for by the local authorities on account of this vote of Parliament.

Mr. McINTYRE. What authority was there in granting the $4,000 that they were to contribute $4,100.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There must have been some assurance given by the local authorities or the parties who could speak for the people that this amount would be given, and therefore this condition was inserted. Whether the assurance was given or not I must stand by the condition imposed by Parliament.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The vote says: "Campbell's Cove (the local authorities having already expended $1,100.)" That is not a condition that they should raise another $4,000.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It may be that or this, that after having examined the matter we may have found it was a mistake. At all events the hon. gentleman may be sure that the money having been voted by Parliament it will be expended in accordance with the desire of Parliament in that respect.

Mr. McINTYRE. Have I the assurance that this $4,000 will be expended?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The vote says so.

Mr. McINTYRE. This is a very useful work, and I hope the sum placed in the Estimates last year will be expended on it as soon as possible, for if the work is not looked after, what is already done will be destroyed. It is the only work of the kind in that section of the country, and I only regret there was not a further appropriation this year. With regard to the South River, Murray Harbor grant, has this $5,000 been expended for what it was granted?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot say. I can hardly be expected to carry all these things in my head since last year. I might have ascertained if the hon. gentleman had given me notice.

123. Harbors and Rivers, New Brunswick..... $93,500.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The $71,000 is to complete the breakwater at Negro Point. It was begun in 1877. Since this was begun about $350,000 in round numbers have been expended.

Mr. MACKENZIE. A large portion of the expenditure is in consequence of a very violent storm that took place two or three years after it was built.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There is the ordinary vote for River St. John, for the Madawaska River, and the Rocher Bay Creakwater. At Rocher Bay an addition is to be constructed to the breakwater of 200 feet. The vote of $5,000 for St. Mary's is towards the construction of a wharf 200 feet long by 20 wide. This is in Albert county. The $5,000 for Grand Lake and Jemseg is for dredging the river at the outlet to the depth of 11 feet at the low summer water level.

Mr. WELDON. In what county is this Anderson's Hollow where $4,000 is voted for addition to a pier?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is a question of geography I did not suppose I would be called upon to answer. The hon. gentleman knows better than I can tell him where these places are.

124. Harbors and Rivers in Maritime Provinces generally $10,000 00

Mr. MACKENZIE. Can the hon. gentleman say how much of this was spent last year?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think we must have expended $5,000 or $6,000.

125. Harbors and Rivers, Quebec$177,700.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The $6,000 for New Carlisle is to continue the pier that was begun two years ago. Then at Trois Pistoles, $1,500 is to build a pier there. At Rivière du Loup (en bas), this $1,000 is to finish the planking. Then $7,000 is devoted to the dredging the channel between Chicoutimi on the River Saguenay, which has been going on for three years. Then there is a vote of $5,000 for the enlargement of "La Grande Décharge" from Lake St. John. This vote will probably be the last for this purpose.

Mr. LAURIER. Will this make the channel from Chicoutimi to Lake St. John?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No. The hon. gentleman will remember that it is between Chicoutimi. It had become so shallow that steamers could hardly get up there in ordinary weather.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I would suggest that tenders be asked for the walls as soon as possible, in order that the work may be done during the proper season, as the weather during the fall is very trying.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is being attended to. The next vote is, Lake St. John surveys, $4,000. There has been no survey of that lake and of the channel, and petitions have been presented asking that such shall be done in order to ascertain what improvement might be needed by the population settled along the lake shores; and therefore we ask for this small vote for that purpose.

Mr. LAURIER. What kind of survey is intended to be made?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is proposed to ascertain, for example, the depth of water in the channel and between the island, in order that we may ascertain what are the best channels, and, if a wharf or more is necessary, where they should be built.

Mr. SCRIVER. Are there any boats on the lake now?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There are only small boats. With respect to Baie St. Paul, $3,000 or $4,000 will be required to complete the pier there. With respect to the removal of chains, anchors, boulders, &c., in the St. Lawrence River, I thought we could reduce that vote by half this year, because the work is very far advanced. The vote for harbor refuge at River Nicolet is to continue the work.

Mr. LAURIER. Has anything of the amount of $20,000 voted last year been expended?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. A portion of it, but not so much as I would have desired. The work has not progressed with sufficient rapidity, and the contractor has been called upon to show more vigor, and if he fails to do so the contract will be taken from his hands and given to another. The works at River Yamaska are progressing very rapidly.

Mr. MACKENZIE. What class of vessels take refuge at these places?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. At Nicolet, vessels which ply on the St. Lawrence take refuge. There is a long shoal extending there, and the improvements in progress of construction at the mouth of the river will make it a harbor of refuge. A number of vessels and lives have been lost in that neighborhood for lack of such harbor.

Mr. LAURIER. Has anything except dredging been done at Yamaska?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes; there have been a dam and lock built, in order to give a long stretch of navigation. When the reports were made, I reduced the work to one section, and this was undertaken. The vote of $13,000 will be about sufficient to complete the work. With respect to Rivière du Lièvre, $1,000 were voted last year. We will not spend more than $1,000 during this fiscal year, and we ask for a revote of the $4,000. There is a good deal of navigation up to the falls. The usual vote of $10,000 is taken for general repairs and improvements of the harbors and rivers of Quebec.

Mr. DESJARDINS. I hope out of that vote the hon. Minister will be able to devote some amount in order to continue the dredging of the channel between Boucherville and Long Pointe.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Petitions were presented to me asking that some dredging be done, and no doubt I will be able, with the consent of my colleagues, to do some dredging which will not cost much, but will be a great benefit to the population in the neighborhood. Philipsburg Harbor, Missisquoi Bay, Lake Champlain, locality furnishing an equal amount, $4,000; this is only a revote. Etang du Nord, in the Magdalen Islands, $9,000 to continue the work. A harbor of refuge by building up and sinking into position 175 feet of breakwater for which the timber is prepared, and 200 feet additional for which the timber was ordered to be cut last winter. I understand that this will be a very useful work. St. François, Island of Orleans, $6,000. Quebec, Marine Hospital Wharves, $2,000, to renew these wharves.

Mr. LAURIER. Was the whole of the $4,000 expended last year?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes. Matane, $5,000. This work was undertaken by the hon. member for East York. Last year I asked for it, $3,500, and this year I require $5,000, with which I think I will be able to make good work of what has been done there up to the present time, and to complete the work.

Mr. MACKENZIE. This was an extension of the pier originally.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes, towards the shore with which there was no communication; and consequently it was of no use to the people. A couple of the blocks were canted over by the ice, and these had to be righted at some expense. We will now extend and complete the work.

Mr. MACKENZIE. The hon. gentleman will remember, that the timber and material were there for the purpose of performing this work.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I remember this work perfectly well.

Mr. MACKENZIE. But these materials were sold by the hon. gentleman's orders. There was enough timber there, I believe, to complete the work, but the hon. gentleman did not allow this to be done.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No. There were some toolst at this place, which were sold, as the hon. gentleman says, in 1879, I think; but after that and until last year, nothing was done. The information which I had about these piers was this: that the ice would certainly destroy them or cant them over. I found that this was correct, and money was asked for last year. What will be expended this year will not only complete the work, but will give a good entrance to the river to vessels which frequent that neighborhood. Isle aux Coudres, $500, to complete a small work there undertaken. Berthier (en bas) $7,500, to provide for the extension of the pier. River Blanche, which is four or five parishes below Rimouski, $5,000. This is another work which the hon. member for East York undertook in his day, and which these $5,000 will complete, by giving a landing from the shore. River St. Louis, $10,000. This is to be applied towards the improvement of the River St. Louis, in the county of Beauharnois, with the view of increasing the supply of water, which will encourage manufactures and prevent the annual overflow of a large area of country.

Mr. SCRIVER. I would ask the hon. gentleman whether these $10,000 will complete the work?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Well, I am not sure of that; but we expect to do so with $3,000 or $4,000 more. The engineer, however, thinks it possible, that these $10,000 will be sufficient.

Mr. SCRIVER. I would ask the hon. gentleman whether any examination has been made of this territory, now overflowed, and whether the engineer is of opinion that any material benefit will be caused by the improvements on the river to this overflowed territory?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Oh, yes. It will stop that altogether, and be a complete remedy for it.

Mr. SCRIVER. I hope so.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Surely it is no part of our duty to undertake to drain lands. Upon what ground does the hon. gentleman propose this vote to this Parliament?

Mr. SCRIVER. That is an indirect advantage, as I understand it.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It improves the river and by that means it remedies the evil of which the farmers have long been complaining. There is an old weir which was built there, but the work on which was never completed. The water flows there and thus drowns a large area of country. By the improvement proposed, the water will flow down and deepen the river, and all that part of the country will cease to be overflowed. This will turn a large volume of water into the River St. Louis, and thus this volume of water will create new water powers and increase the number of sites where manufactories may be created and begun.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Then the object is to create water powers and to drain land?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Well, it will produce that effect certainly.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Is that the object of the vote?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Well, yes, that is the object of the vote.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Then I think that this vote ought not to be made. It is altogether beyond our province.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Well, it is for as good a purpose as the taking of a few boulders from a river, or the deepening of a harbor, or anything of that kind. It is for the benefit of the public—for the general benefit. This comes under the same head. It is not for the advantage of one individual, but of a large extent of country, and also for the improvement of this river.

Mr. MACKENZIE. That is not the point. In many parts of Canada, the people are expending hundreds of hundreds of dollars, from municipal taxation, for the purpose of draining land. It is no part of our business to undertake the municipal work of the country. This is a municipal work. It is not to make this river navigable at all, that the money is asked for, but to create water powers and to drain the land, which is altogether beyond our province.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think that it is for a good purpose and object. It is for the advantage of the public, in the same way that we build a pier, or improve the mouth of a river, or the navigation of a river. I think that this is a proper employment of the public money. Chicoutimi Pier, which is to be heightened a little, $1,500; at Lanoraie, $5,000 is to be expended on a pier, the locality furnishing $1,500. At Percé, the county town of Gaspé, there is no accommodation of any kind in the way of a landing, and, in high winds, the people are exposed to being drowned. We ask for a vote of $10,000 for this place. At River Batiscan, $2,000 is to be spent for dredging and removing boulders at the mouth of the river. Then there is $3,200 for Queen's Wharf, Quebec, for the purpose of removing some worn out face timber, driving piles to protect the front of the wharf, taking down a portion of the face timbers, &c. At Bic Pier we propose to expend $7,500. At this place there is a large harbor where vessels may come in, and this is to make a small landing. The last item is $1,500, for the River St. Francis, to remove boulders, and do a little dredging, to make the river more floatable.

Mr. LAURIER. Will the hon. gentleman inform me how far up the river he intends dredging?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is for the improvement of Spicer's Rapid, where the greatest obstructions exist.

116. Harbors and Rivers, Ontario..... $267,300.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The first item is to continue the work undertaken some years ago in Cobourg Harbor. This amount of $20,000 will not complete the work. The plan is the one which was begun in my time and continued afterwards during the time of the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie). When the work is completed it will be one of the best harbors on the rivers or lakes. I think it will cost about $50,000 more to complete. The next item is $14,000 for Port Hope Harbor, a work which was undertaken some two or three years ago. This will not cover the whole expenditure, but I think a few thousand dollars more will complete the work.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Is this for deepening the harbor and extending the piers?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There is first for completing the extension of the works on the east pier, $3,000; then there is the amount of the contract for a breakwater from the western pier; and there is a sum for dredging.

Mr. SCRIVER. In looking through some of the accounts for these harbors last year, I notice that the work was almost all done by days' labor, and that the supplies appear to be purchased here and there from different store-keepers. Could not these improvements be done by contract?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The intention is to ask for tenders for this work. There may have been some expenditures, of that kind for small improvements coming in at the last moment, but there was a contract, and the intention is to have a contract for this work. The grant for Toronto Harbor, amounting to $117,500, is to continue the work we began last year.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Is the contract let, and for how much?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The contract is let to Messrs. Cook & Jones, but I cannot say at the moment for how much.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I believe one Mr. Eads, an American, was appointed to inspect the harbor. How much was he paid for this work?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. $5,000.

Mr. ROSS. How long was he engaged?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. He must have been engaged seven or eight months. The hon. gentleman may know that Captain Eads is a very eminent engineer in the United States. He distinguished himself by his works on the Mississippi River, which he succeeded in making navigable for very large vessels. Of course we had to pay, not only for the work he did, but for his position. His report was laid before the Government and also before the House. We are going on with a portion of that work, but we did not undertake all the works at the same time. We thought the first thing was to protect the harbor—to prevent the Island from being carried away, and thus leaving Toronto open to the Lake. That work is now going on, and I understand from my Chief Engineer, with great success. I hope that the work, when completed, will be a credit to the Government, and will secure to the citizens of Toronto that Island which they are justly so proud of.

Mr. ROSS. Is any work being done at the eastern end of the Island with the view of keeping open the gap?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes. The opinion was felt in Toronto that the eastern entrance should be closed. The engineers are not of that opinion. They think that an entrance should be left there, and that it will not damage the harbor, but be of great benefit to it. At all events if, at any time, it is thought proper to close it, it will always be easy to do so.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Did Captain Eads condemn the work that had been done last year at the western end of the harbor?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; not that I know of.

Mr. MACKENZIE. I understand that the entrance at the Queen's Wharf is all filled up again.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; I think not.

Mr. MACKENZIE. During my incumbency, I endeavoured to widen that channel; but the hon. gentleman cut across the neck extending to the Island, in a place where it was impossible to accomplish any results. That, I understand, has not only been abandoned but is absolutely filled up. I see from a late newspaper, that the land is made so fast that it is now within 200 yards of the wharf. Has the hon. gentleman any information about that?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. What the hon. gentleman says may be quite correct, but I have not been so informed. I know that after one or two storms, a great change has occurred in the formation of the island; but that cannot be avoided until our works are completed. I understand that the works we have undertaken have withstood the force of the storms, and that they are likely to remain permanent.

Mr. McCRAVEY. I would say to the hon. Minister, with reference to that harbor, that the channel is not now more than 200 or 300 feet wide, and it is filling up very fast—so fast that unless the passage at the eastern gap is kept open, in a very short time the western gap will be filled up.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The next item is $4,000 for Rondeau Harbor; the money is required for dredging, as recommended by the Chief Engineer. The $7,000 asked for Kincardine Harbor is for repairing and rebuilding.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Is there any expenditure for dredging in Kincardine Harbor?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No, there is nothing in this vote; but there will be some dredging.

Mr. CASEY. I wish to speak about a harbor, in the immediate neighborhood of Rondeau Harbor, in regard to which I moved for papers some time ago—I mean the harbor of Morpeth. I have been informed that, since I moved in that matter, the hon. member for Kent (Mr. Smyth) and the hon. member for Bothwell (Mr. Hawkins), and certain gentlemen of the neighborhood, have been interesting themselves in the matter, and that some decision has been arrived at by the Government. I would like to know if the hon. Minister has any information on that subject?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I am not in a position to answer the hon. gentleman to-day. He will have to wait until the Supplementary Estimates come down; and when I say that, I do not intend it offensively, because I cannot give the information now.

Mr. CASEY. I believe the case in favor of that harbor is very strong. As I said before, the people of the neighborhood contributed a considerable sum of money out of their pockets by private subscription, and this money has been lying useless, because not available for the purpose for which it was contributed until now; and I think, as a matter of justice, that the people of that district have a claim on the Government for a vote for that harbor. I do not know what influenced the hon. gentlemen from the neighboring ridings to interest themselves so much in my riding. I suppose they had reasons, but whatever they are, they matter very little to me; as long as they assist in inducing the Government to do justice, I will not complain. I would like to bring another matter to the attention of the hon. Minister. There is a place, in the same neighborhood, known as Port New Glasgow, to which my attention has been drawn by correspondence during the Session. It is at some distance east of Rondeau, and would afford a very desirable harbor of refuge; I am informed that there is a very good natural basin there. I hope the many harbors along that part of Lake Erie will engage his attention between now and next Session. They are places of considerable importance and deserve more attention.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In this case the hon. gentleman should be satisfied, because after all, the answer being not exactly no, he must still hope, dum spiro spero.

Mr. CASEY. I said, when the Government did intend to put items in the Estimates they should say so. In this case it has been said there was going to be a vote, and information that might be given to the House has been given to private members and the press.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No doubt those hon. gentlemen, finding their case was good, thought the Government could not do otherwise than meet their case, but they cannot have stated this as a positive fact. I keep my own counsel, under my oath of office.

Mr. MACKENZIE. They may have stated it as a prospective fact.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. They see a long way in advance. A deputation came to me from that place, and I told them the matter would be taken into the consideration of the Government, as I stated to the hon. gentleman in the House. As for the new place, New Glasgow, I have not heard of it before. Port Elgin, this is to complete the work. Goderich Harbor, this is a revote of $5,000 on the $16,000 voted last year, as we could not complete the work last Session. Collingwood Harbor, this is a continuation of the works begun some three years ago. Warton Harbor, is a revote of $5,000; the money expended has been about $30,000, and with the $5,000, we expect to complete the work. We thought it might strengthen, especially a portion of the pier, because the railway company intend, I think, putting an elevator there; and therefore it will be a great benefit to the place. Besides, Warton Harbor, as far as I know, not having visited the place, is a beautiful harbor. Meaford, to complete, $3,000. Kingston Harbor, continuation of the work of deepening the harbor, $12,500.

Little Current, also to complete the work, $10,000. The next is the general repairs and improvements, Harbors and Rivers, Ontario, $8,000; Maritime Provinces, $10,000; Kingsville, Lake Erie, $5,000 additional; River Sydenham, $5,000, to continue the dredging of the river. The next is the Newcastle Harbor, to complete, $8,000; Chantry Island, $5,000; another sum may be required in the Supplementary Estimates, because the damage to the island and the damage to the lighthouse were such, that an additional amount will be required.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Is not the proper name Southampton?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is not really Southampton, but Chantry Island proper. Most likely there will be another vote for Southampton. Besides the two large piers, we make a harbor of refuge. There is an inside pier of landing at Southampton that must be extended to deep water in order to prevent the accumulation of sand or refuse. Then we have the Otonabee River, $1,200 required for dredging. Little Bear Creek, $5,000; this is towards dredging to eight feet in depth at low water, for a distance of a mile from the junction of the creek with the Chenal Ecarté. The Little Bear Creek goes through the township of Dover, and flows into the Chenal Ecarté of the River Sydenham. The river when it goes towards the St. Ann's Island has two channels, the one on the right, and the other on the left, and the one on the left is called the Chenal Ecarté.

Mr. PLATT. Is the hon. gentleman in a position to state what portion, if any, of the appropriation of last year, of $4,000, has been expended on the harbors of Conseccon and Wellington, Lake Ontario?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Only a portion has been expended for Wellington, but not for the other, because an examination that I caused to be made showed that the intended works would cost too much.

127. Harbors and Rivers, Manitoba..... $13,000.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There is a revote of $12,000 for the mouth of Red River. It has been voted for two years, but we were unable to expend it because we had no dredge. The intention is to have a small dredge and try to improve the mouth of the river.

Mr. WATSON. Has the $5,000 voted last year for the Waterhen River all been expended?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No. It is found to be a much larger question than appeared at first, because there is not only the Waterhen River but Lake Manitoba to consider. The hon. gentleman will remember, from the report of Mr. Guerin, the engineer who examined the river and took the levels, that the works that would be required to improve the navigation and lower the water of the lake, would be of great magnitude, and we were not in a position to decide upon undertaking them. When you undertake a work of that kind, dealing with the water, you do not know where you may stop. If we make a deep cut and bring the waters of that lake into another lake we do not know what the result may be. There are creeks and rivers to consider, and the matter requires a great deal of attention; and the chief engineer told me that he was not in a position to recommend me to undertake that work now.

Mr. MACKENZIE. If I recollect aright the waters of the northern Lake Winnipegosis are eighteen feet and nine inches higher than Lake Manitoba, while the Waterhen River is a somewhat circuitous river and communicates between the two lakes. The complaint is not that Lake Winnipegosis is too high, but that Lake Manitoba is too high, and if the Waterhen River is lowered it will bring an additional stream of water from the upper lake into the lower lake and aggravate the fault which is complained of by people on Lake

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

Manitoba. In 1874 we had the whole country surveyed and examined from the Saskatchewan south to the Assiniboine, and the result was such that I should not venture to deal with the subject in the way some people desired. It would be very difficult to avoid doing damage on account of the peculiar position the lakes occupy towards each other.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman is perfectly right. We have been pressed about this matter. There is a large tract of land that is flooded, and we have been pressed to reclaim that land by turning off the water, on the ground that the value of the land saved would cover the expense of the work. But it is a question whether by draining those lands we will not do more damage still. Therefore we are not in a position to say to the hon. gentleman that the Government will undertake that work. If, after careful study, we find that the project is feasible, we will ask a vote of money for it if we can afford it.

Mr. WATSON. The hon. member for East York has just stated his objections to cleaning out this Waterhen River, because it would raise the water of Lake Manitoba. But I have never heard it complained that the water in Lake Winnipeg was too high or was flooding the adjoining lands, and if Lake Manitoba could be lowered without doing any injury to Lake Winnipeg, I think it will be in the interest of the country to do so. In that report the hon. Minister spoke of, it is estimated that it would cost $281,000 to lower Lake Manitoba four feet and a half. It has been calculated that 696,320 acres of land would be reclaimed, which, at the estimated value of $2 per acre, would be $1,392,640, which, certainly, would be a very good investment for the Government. I have just received a petition from the County Council of Portage la Prairie, which the south end of this lake floods, memorializing the Government to take some action in this matter; and I know from personal knowledge that the country is very much injured by the rising of the water of Lake Manitoba. I know that six years ago where where there were first-class farms with grain growing upon them, there are two feet of water at present. The water has been rising for the last five years. It is not the deepening of the channel that is required, but the widening of it, for I believe, the cause of the mouth of the river closing up is on account of the high water carrying boulders to the mouth of the stream in the spring. A larger quantity of water flows into Lake Manitoba than the mouth of the river will allow to go out, and the mouth requires to be widened in order to carry off the water. It would not do to have the water lowered to any considerable extent, as it would spoil navigation on Lake Manitoba. During the recent wet season, the settlers have experienced great hardships on account of the height of the water in the lake, and if the Government can see their way to reducing the level, much benefit will accrue. The action of the Government in providing a dredge is a step in the right direction, and the works in Manitoba should be commenced as soon as possible.

129. Harbors and Rivers, British Columbia.....$17,000.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The first item is the ordinary vote of $2,000 for general repairs and improvements. There is an item of $2,000 for the improvement of Cottonwood Canyon, Upper Fraser River, to continue the work which was undertaken some years ago. An item of $2,000 is to remove snags in Stickeen River. An item of $3,000 is to make a complete examination of Victoria Harbor.

Mr. BAKER. Is the $3,000 more particularly for an examination of Fraser Rock?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is for an examination of the harbor, and especially of Fraser Rock?

130. Harbors and Rivers generally $6,000.00

Mr. KEEFLER. I desire to call the attention of the hon. Minister to a matter with respect to the breakwater at Blandford. I had the honor of sending a petition to the hon. Minister of Public Works this Session, respecting this question. It is a matter of great importance to a large number of people, there being one thousand interested in it. The present pier is only 80 feet long, and the petition asks that it be increased 100 feet. The people have hitherto been engaged in fishing with boats, but the fish having moved away into deeper water, they are obliged to resort to large schooners, and the effect is that they have no place of refuge for their vessels. With the permission of the Committee, I will read extracts from some of the letters which I have received on the subject. One of my correspondents says:

"In the settlement of Blandford, there are between 500 and 600 people, and about the same number on the Tancook Islands, which lay about one mile off the coast, and which makes over 1,000 inhabitants, all depending on the Harbor of Blandford for a refuge for their vessels. The fishermen have been using small boats, as they had to haul them up in bad weather, but the fish now becoming scarce, the people have to get larger vessels for fishing, and require a safe harbor to keep their vessels in. There is an old breakwater about 80 feet long, which is not half the length required, and it being much out of repair, we want the old work repaired and an addition of 100 feet, which could all be done for about $2,000. There is 14 feet of water at the breakwater clay bottom; the breakwater could be built with crib work and stone ballast. There is about 200 boats, 60 seines and 400 nets now in use by the people in this neighborhood, but with all this gear the people, to make a living, are getting larger vessels, hence the need of a breakwater."

Another letter says:

"The vessels from Blandford fish on the banks off the coast, which distance is from fifty to one hundred miles. We have now ten vessels engaged in the bank fishing, and we would have three times that number if we had a breakwater to protect them when in port. There is an average catch of about 6,000 quintals yearly of codfish taken in vessels, and about 5,000 quintals of codfish taken in boats. The fish now becoming scarce near the shore, the people must have larger vessels to go to the banks for them now. Average of fish taken yearly at Blandford and Tancook: Codfish, about 11,000 quintals; barrels mackerel, 5,000; barrels herring, 3,000."

Another letter says:

"Your valued favors of the 11th instant duly received, and I am sorry to hear the prospect is small for getting any help for our breakwater. About forty feet of the outer end was damaged in the Wiggins storm. We intended to repair it ourselves to try and keep what we have, and I am expending sixty dollars myself in putting down a pier on the outside of the breakwater to protect it from going further; and I trust the hon. Minister of Public Works will yet have compassion on us, and grant us a small sum of money to make our harbor a safe one. In my previous letter I forgot to say that the bank fishermen resort to this place for bait very much during the season, which makes it more important that the harbor should be safe."

I trust the hon. Minister will make a grant of $2,000, so as to assist these poor people.

131. Dredging..... $253,600.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The vote of $64,000 is to provide for new dredging plant, which the Chief Engineer recommends to be purchased. Steam tugs are absolutely required, because we are expending every year large sums of money in hiring tugs, and when we have our own, we will probably do the work both cheaper and better. In Ontario, we found that we required a new dredge on account of the calls on the Department for dredging, &c.; and for this purpose, $27,000 are required out of the $64,000.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Where is this dredge being built?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. It is not being built, because I have no money to pay for it. As soon as the money is in my hands I will call for tenders.

Mr. ROSS. Where does the hon. gentleman intend building it?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I have no doubt that it will be built somewhere in Ontario. New dredging, Manitoba, $37,500, in connection with the works which were just now mentioned by an hon. gentleman. A dredge will have to be built, and scows, and a tug, for which we had no money, and which will be provided by this vote.

Mr. WATSON. What work is to be done?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Improvements are to be made on the Red River and Lake Winnipeg, connecting the waters of Lake Manitoba, &c. Saag-boat, British Columbia, $15,000. This vessel is absolutely necessary, especially in that country, not to remove boulders but snags, which are constantly found there in spring and summer; and of course, if we had a vessel of this kind it could be taken from one river to another and used thus, avoiding heavy expenses and doing a great deal more work than we can perform otherwise with the money placed at our disposal. Dredge vessels, repairs $25,100. Repairs of this kind are made every year, but this sum is larger than usual, because the repairs are this year somewhat more extensive. The ordinary votes are asked for New Brunswick, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, Ontario and Quebec, for dredging, but for British Columbia we have to double the vote, $15,000. We have there a dredge, and we must have money to work it. General service, $5,000, making altogether for dredging, $253,600.

Mr. McINTYRE. Where is the dredge to be used this summer in Prince Edward Island, in King's county?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Well, this dredge will be used where it will be absolutely required during summer, but I am unable to say where. As soon as spring comes the dredges will leave their winter quarters, and we will try to use them to the best advantage, losing as little time and money as possible in taking them from one place to another. We will not send a dredge 300 or 400 miles to execute work, but we will try to work them from port to port. Certain works have to be undertaken, and I have no doubt that we will give as good an account of the dredges next summer as we have given during the last few years.

Mr. McINTYRE. The reason I ask the question is this. The dredge was brought to Murray River on the eve of the last election, and I believe that it did a little service there, but shortly after the election was over it was taken to Pictou, though I do not know for what purpose, and she is there yet as far as I can ascertain. I wish to learn whether or not she is going back to finish that work.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If she was taken to Pictou it was probably because work had to be done there. That is all.

Mr. DAVIES. Who directs the movements of these dredges? Who gives the instructions?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. These are sent from headquarters.

Mr. DAVIES. Because I wish to call attention—that being the case—to Burnham River, and I hope that the hon. gentleman will make a note of it. The dredge was sent to Burnham River a year or two ago, and did excellent service in dredging the river, but for about 100 yards below the bridge, the channel is very narrow and crooked, being a great hindrance to navigation. It left a small ridge of the work unfinished, which prevents the harbor getting the benefit of all the work which was done there; and if it is possible, in the event of the dredge being ordered to that neighborhood, at all, to give one or two weeks at the outside to complete this work, it would confer a great benefit; but as it is now, a small ridge which prevents shipping getting the benefit of the work already done, is left.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I will take a note of the circumstance.

Mr. KIRK. Has the hon. gentleman made arrangements regarding the harbors which are to be dredged in Nova Scotia, during next season?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; of course not. Certain engagements have been made, because we have undertaken certain works which must be completed. We try to give the best service possible with our dredges, in order that they may accomplish more work during the season. For example, if by employing a dredge at one place during six or eight months, we would complete the work there, I would say I would not do so unless I had two or three dredges; but if I have only one dredge, I cannot keep it at one place and deprive the others of the benefit of it. We are trying to do all we can at ten or twelve different places, and then we begin again next year; in this way, the dredge does better service than if it was kept at only one place.

Mr. KIRK. Application has been made for the dredge to be sent to Laney's River, or Tor Bay, in the county of Guysborough. Can the hon. gentleman hold out any hope that they will get the use of it during the coming season?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot say. I do not know whether or not these places were brought under the notice of the Department.

Mr. McINTYRE. I have brought the matter to the notice of the Department lately.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. If the hon. gentleman has brought it to the notice of the Department since he came here, it would be very difficult to make the examination through the ice and snow.

Mr. McINTYRE. That examination was made years ago.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In that case, as the hon. gentleman has complained that there are boulders and an accumulation of silt, another examination would have to be made.

132. Roads and Bridges..... $15,000.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. There is $10,000 to complete the bridge at Des Joachims Rapids, Ottawa River; and the next item is $4,000 for trails, bridges, &c., North-West Territories.

Mr. WATSON. What is this $4,000 for? Are you reducing the amount?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. $4,000 is a revote, and we propose to reduce it to only $1,800. The hon. gentleman must see that it leaves a balance to be expended during the current year.

Mr. WATSON. But is there not a certain amount to be expended on the bridge between Manitoba and the new Province of Assiniboia?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. That is not in this estimate. This is for trails, bridges, &c., in the North-West Territories last year, and would not apply to the case he speaks of.

Mr. WATSON. I understand that a deputation came down here and that the hon. Minister gave them to understand that the Government would give them assistance if the municipality would vote an equal amount.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman is right. A deputation did come down here; but these estimates were completed, so the amount could not be included in them. The hon. gentleman will allow me to keep silent in the meantime, and when the Supplementary Estimates come down he will see.

133. Telegraphs..... $87,500.00

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The first item is for repairing the cable between the mainland and Grand Manan. The cable was broken by some vessel. Then we have $28,000 to connect Pointe des Montes with a telegraph line constructed and in operation along the north shore of the St. Lawrence by cables and land lines, and towards extension of land line to River Moisie. That work has already been sanctioned by Parliament, and this is for the purpose of continuing it. Then we have $3,000 for the telegraph line from Chatham to Escuminac. That is to give communication between the town of Chatham and the lighthouse, and so with the vessels which are passing outside. The next item is for a telegraph line from Prince Arthur's Landing, via Winnipeg and Qu'Appelle Junction, to British Columbia, $10,000. This is for the purpose of completing that line. Then we have a telegraph line, Saskatchewan to Prince Albert, the poles being furnished free to the Government, $7,000. This is a new line. This line will go through a number of places, and put them in communication with the older portions of the world.

Mr. CASEY. What is the length of new line?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Between eighty and ninety miles.

Mr. WATSON. Is this line from the south branch to the north branch?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The line comes from Edmonton to Humboldt. Further, we bring the line down from Qu'Appelle to the Pacific Railway, between Humboldt and Battleford, at the River Saskatchewan. The next item is telegraph lines, British Columbia. New submarine cable route between Vancouver Island and Washington Territory via Victoria and Point Angelos, or land route from Victoria to Cape Beale, via San Juan Harbor, with cable thence to Neesh Harbor, Cape Flattery, Washington Territory, $18,500. This vote is for the purpose of having a double cable to communicate between British Columbia and the other portions of Canada, through the United States, until the lines are completed through our own territory. We cannot leave that Province without communication, and if the cable were to break to-morrow, communication would be completely out off.

134. Miscellaneous..... $95,240.85

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The first item is for miscellaneous works not otherwise provided for—the usual vote; the next is surveys and inspections, then we have arbitrations and awards, and repairs, and improvements and construction of military works and buildings. This applies to all military works in the Provinces besides the special votes which were required for large works. Then there is a revote of $9,000 for the monument to the memory of the late Sir George E. Cartier. After the separation of the Department of Public Works from the Department of Railways and Canals a number of records and books had to be copied, and a vote of $1,650 is asked for this work.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I understand that the Department is about to issue a report or sketch of all the Public Works of the Dominion. This vote is not for that purpose?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No. That will be a report to Parliament in the ordinary form. I had hoped to be able to lay it before Parliament before to-day; but the printers have been delayed, and I have not been able to do so. It will be a very interesting history of all our Public Works since Confederation. A similar report was published before Confederation, so that the two volumes will give the best history that we can have of all our Public Works, except railways.

Mr. ROSS. Is it being printed by the Parliamentary Printers?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Of course. I do not say that I have not been pressed to have it printed elsewhere, but I thought it best to have it printed in the ordinary way. A vote of $1,500 is asked for the National Art Gallery. It is a small beginning, but, I think, that after a few years, we shall have a number of good pictures that will be a credit to the country. At present the place is visited constantly by a large number of visitors, and by some young artists who wish to copy the pictures.

Mr. ROSS. Does the hon. Minister intend to transfer to the Art Gallery the portraits of the Speakers and the ex-Speakers that are hung around our walls?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think we shall keep them for our own benefit. This vote is to pay a caretaker, to pay for cleaning the rooms, for fitting up the gallery, for insurance, and $300 for purchasing pictures. I suppose this may be called the wedge; I hope Parliament will give us a larger vote after a while. The next item is to pay a claim of W. L. Macaulay, in connection with barrack buildings erected by him at Fort Garry, $5,590.85.

Mr. ROSS. Was this the award of the arbitrators?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; it was the officers that reported upon it.

Mr. BLAKE. How long has this claim been standing?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Since 1873.

Mr. BLAKE. I suppose it was in consequence of the misfortune that happened to him in connection with his timber limit?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No; he was pressed to go on with his contract late in the fall, and the officer in charge led him to understand that if he went on and employed more men, he would receive more money. We thought the man was entitled to this sum, and we put it in the Estimates.

Mr. BLAKE. What officers reported in favor of it?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The architect of the Department, the local architect there, Mr. Lacour, and another officer connected with the Department there, whose name I do not remember.

Mr. BLAKE. The Government have taken a very long time, indeed, to make up their minds to recognize this claim. Not only several Sessions of Parliament, but several Parliaments have intervened before that was done. I think we ought to have the documents on Concurrence.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. With regard to the Art Gallery, when I say pictures the hon. gentleman must be sure I do not mean oil paintings, because $300 would not go far in that respect. I suppose these will be engravings.

Resolutions to be reported.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and (at 1:20 o'clock a.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

WEDNESDAY, 2nd May, 1883.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

OFFICIAL REPORT OF THE DEBATES.

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell) presented the Fifth Report of the Committee on the Official Reporting of the Debates of the House.

ADJOURNMENTS.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that when the House adjourns this day, it do stand adjourned until Friday next, at three o'clock.

Motion agreed to.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I beg to move that when the House adjourns on Friday next, it will stand adjourned until Saturday, at 3 o'clock p.m.

Motion agreed to.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT AMENDMENT BILLS.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved the second reading of Bill (No. 90) to amend the Canada Civil Service Act, 1882.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will explain the provisions of the Bill.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The object of these amendments is to try and reduce the expenses connected with the duties of the Board of Examiners. We have tried the law as it stands on the Statute-book for a year, and we think that by these amendments we can reduce the expenses considerably. Under these circumstances, we propose to repeal the third section of the Canada Civil Service Act of 1882, and to insert a new clause. There will be the same number of examiners, but as the hon. gentleman will see by the resolutions which, by the permission of the House, I will move after the second reading for reference to the Committee of the Whole—that the salary of the Secretary of the Board, who is one of the Commissioners, will be $1,000, while the other two Commissioners will receive each $5 a day. If these gentlemen were not officers in the public service, their pay would probably have to be doubled; but we thought that as they were members of the Civil Service, $5 a day whilst they performed these duties, in addition to their ordinary salaries, would be sufficient. The number of days is fixed as I will state further on, when I come to the money resolutions. The provisions as to persons to be employed in the different places, will remain unchanged, save that we ask for power to abstain from holding public examinations in every town or city mentioned in the Bill. If an examination is only required at one place, this alone will be held. Appointments in the Civil Service shall be during pleasure, and a probationary term must be served before an official can be confirmed in his position. The maximum age of candidates is fixed at thirty-five, and the minimum at fifteen. The latter is made for this reason: We can thus employ youths as messengers for instance, as packers when they are very active, they can grow up with the service, and we will have the advantage of their activity for a much longer period than would otherwise be the case. Clause twenty-four relates to the promotion of officials which shall be by examination. We have found, under the law as it stands, that an officer in the outside service cannot be brought into the inside service, and vice versa. This is the opinion of the hon. Minister of Justice, and, therefore, we have provided that this exchange can take place; but as persons can enter the outside service when over thirty-five, it is provided that no outside official shall be brought into the inside service unless he entered the outside service while under thirty-five years of age. Another clause provides that the oath of allegiance shall be taken by all officers who have not already done so; and they shall be sworn by the Clerk of the Queen's Privy Council, who shall keep a register of all these oaths. An exchange of positions between officers may take place with the concurrence of the Head of the Department, and by Order in Council. The thirteenth clause provides:

A vacancy which would otherwise be filled by a first appointment, after an examination, may, by Order in Council and without an examination, be filled by a transfer from another division of the Department in which the vacancy exists, or from another Department; provided that the transfer shall be made without increasing the salary of the person transferred, and that no person shall be transferred from an outside to an inside division, whose age at the date of his first appointment exceeded thirty-five years.

Then we have the schedule which concludes the Bill.

Mr. BLAKE. There are one or two points to which the hon. gentleman did not refer, and which, it seems to me, might properly be adverted to on this occasion. For example, there is the provision altering the arrangements as to examinations for vacancies. The clause as in this Bill alters the law recently passed—the language is changed, and the hon. gentleman has not explained to us why the change has been made.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The reason we substituted the words "wholly or in part, professional or technical," for the words of the Act of last year, was, that the word "peculiar," used in the old Act of last year, we thought gave too much latitude.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman provides in the same clause, sub-section three, that city postmasters and collectors and preventive officers in the Customs and Inland Revenue Departments may be appointed without examination, and without reference to the rules for promotion herein prescribed.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. With regard to city postmasters, they are in much the same position in that respect as sub-heads of Departments at headquarters. As to the collectors and preventive officers in the Customs, perhaps my hon. friend the Minister of Customs will explain the reasons of the change.

Mr. BOWELL. Difficulties have arisen in this way. Many of the preventive officers receive very low salaries, and they are stationed along the shores of the Maritime Provinces, as well as the frontier, where they receive, perhaps, from $60 to $200 a year. It is difficult to get men at these salaries, who are merely engaged in preventing smuggling in their respective localities to go to the different centres and pass examinations, particularly as they have no power to collect duties. Other difficulties have arisen under the Act, particularly with our sub-collectors. Sub-collectors at an outpost receive, say $200, or $300, or $400 a year, which is a grade a little higher in the service than that of landing waiter; yet the Civil Service Act provided that these positions must be filled by promotion—that is, from the lockers or messengers, or landing waiters. But there are few landing waiters who receive less than $400, and some receive $600, $700, and $800. It was, therefore, utterly impossible to work the law while the provisions of the Statute remained as they are. For example, I could not take a man from Hamilton or Toronto, who, say, is getting $600, or $700 a year, and send him to Kincardine where the salary is only $40. Still, I have no power to appoint a man unless he passed an examination, and I could then only appoint him from the service by means of promotion. The object of this change is to enable the Department to fill such positions without the necessity of having an examination.

Mr. BLAKE. What about the collectors? The reasons which have been given are elastic, and, perhaps, a little contradictory. The city postmasters are omitted because the appointments are too good.

Mr. BOWELL. I said nothing about them.

Mr. BLAKE. No; but the hon. Minister in charge of the Bill did. On the other hand, the preventive officers are too low. You may examine a man who is going to be a packer or messenger, but not a landing waiter. I think the hon. gentleman has probably explained some of the difficulties of the old clause as applied to the outside machinery of his Department, and, so far as I can see, his explanation is a plausible, and, perhaps, a sound one with reference to the hon. Minister or officer; but I do not think it applies to the collectors, and I do not know that it applies to all preventive officers. Collectorships are of all grades; some of them are very high offices, and there are some of a less important character, but all collectors and all preventive officers are to be given irrespective of qualifications and irrespective of promotions. Now, it seems to me that that would be an unfortunate departure from the principles we tried to lay down with regard to the elevation of the service. If there are exceptional cases, if there are some officers too high and others too low, if you cannot expect men to come from the outside parts to be examined, surely some one has ingenuity enough to frame a clause which would dispense with the application of the rules in these particular cases. But because there is a desire on the one side, and a desire on the other side, to dispense with the rule, I do not think we should block it out altogether as to all city postmasters, all collectors, and all preventive officers, whether inside or outside.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think the hon. gentleman is wrong as to the city postmasters. If they were to apply the rule, he would see at once that it is a proper thing to have city postmasters who are paid by salary appointed without examination. Of course, the Government when they make the appointment, will always take care that the person so appointed is one whose qualifications are such that he can perform the duties of his office. Take, for example, the case of the city postmaster of Montreal. A man is appointed there, in whom the Government of the day have confidence—a business man who is able to direct the machinery of that office; and it is not to be supposed that he should be required to pass an examination as a mere clerk. A position of that kind should never be given to a youngster, but it must be given to a man of position, one who—I hope the hon. gentleman will not object to my saying—has rendered service to his country. With regard to the preventive officers, we must treat them as we treat lighthouse keepers. We do not call upon a man who wants to be a lighthouse keeper to pass an examination, because his work is not of a very scientific character; we only want a man who is able to keep a lighthouse properly. For that reason, I think the provision of this sub-section is one that should be adopted by the House.

Mr. BLAKE. I do not intend to discuss the matter further at present, but I wish to point out that sub-section four provides that in the case of temporary or supernumerary officers actually employed at the time this Act comes into force, the qualifying examination may be dispensed with. Some time ago the hon. gentleman, in replying to the hon. member for Montreal Centre, gave reasons why the qualifying examinations should not be dispensed with; but he seems to have changed his mind. The hon. member made an appeal on behalf of some well-conducted supernumeraries, which the hon. gentleman at that time would not accede to.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think my hon. friend from Montreal Centre was suggesting that these men should be made permanent clerks. I have no doubt the hon. gentleman will see that this provision is desirable, so far as it is practicable. These officers, who have been doing their work well for three or four years, are on that account likely to be as well qualified as if they had passed an examination. If a man is not a good officer, of course he will not be promoted.

Mr. CASEY. I very much regret to see that such changes as the Government think fit to make in this Bill, are rather going further away from the principle which I have always advocated than coming nearer to it. I had really some hope, when I heard that the Act was to be amended, that the Government were about to follow the example set by our neighbors across the border. We have for many years looked upon the United States as the stronghold of the system of favoritism in appointments to the Civil Service—as the country where the system of competitive examinations was least likely to come into force. But since last Session that great nation has taken a step in advance, and in spite of the immense influence there exercised in favor of the retention of the system of patronage, it has passed a very thorough and comprehensive Act, introducing the competitive examinations. Of course, it has not been tried to a great extent yet, but seems likely to greatly improve the service. I am sorry, therefore, that our Government, who have seen fit to follow the example of the American Government with regard to its financial policy, seem to hang back from following it in this step, especially when they would have the advantage of walking in the steps, not only of the United States, but of the Mother Country. I do not intend to discuss the details of the Bill further than to point out, with regard to sub-section three of section thirty-four, that the officers here treated of are those from whom a particularly severe examination should be required. The offices of city postmaster, collector, and preventive officer, are offices which should be filled by men who are not only reasonably well educated, but have some special knowledge to fit them for their positions.

Bill read the second time.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole to consider the following resolutions respecting the Civil Service Act of Canada, 1882:—

1. Resolved,—That it is expedient to amend "The Canada Civil Service Act, 1882," by providing that the Secretary of the Board of Examiners under the third section thereof, shall be one of the members of the Board.

2. Resolved,—That it is expedient to repeal the fifth section of the said Act, and to enact the following section in lieu thereof:—

"5. The Secretary of the Board shall be paid a salary not exceeding one thousand dollars per annum. He shall render such services as the nature of the office requires, and as may from time to time be prescribed by Order in Council. The other members of the Board shall be paid five dollars per diem when actually engaged in their work, not, however, to exceed sixty days in any one year.

"2. The members of the Board shall, on authority of an Order in Council, be paid their actual travelling expenses incurred while so engaged in their work.

"3. Such persons as may be selected by the Board to assist them in the conduct of examination, may receive such sum not exceeding five dollars per diem, as may be fixed by Order in Council."

3. Resolved,—That it is expedient to repeal the sixth section of the said Act, and to enact the following in lieu thereof:—

"6. The Board of Examiners may obtain the assistance of persons who have had experience in the education of the youth of the Dominion, and with such assistance shall hold or cause to be held periodical examinations for admission to the Civil Service, in the cities of Halifax, St. John, New Brunswick, Charlottetown, Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa, Toronto, Hamilton, London, Winnipeg, Victoria and such other places as may be determined by Order in Council. It shall not be necessary to hold each examination in all the said places, but the times and places at which the examinations shall be held, shall be determined from time to time by Order in Council. Examinations as far as possible shall be in writing. Their cost shall be defrayed out of moneys previously voted by Parliament for that purpose."

4. Resolved,—That it is expedient to repeal the thirteenth section of the said Act, and to enact the following in lieu thereof:—

"13. The minimum salary paid to a Chief Clerk shall be one thousand eight hundred dollars, with an annual increase of fifty dollars up to twenty-four hundred dollars."

"2. No salary shall be increased under the provision of this section before the first day of July next."

5. Resolved,—That it is expedient to make the following provision in amendment to the said Act:—

"The Officers, Clerks and employés mentioned in Schedule B of the said Act shall be paid according to the scale thereby established. The salaries of Officers, Clerks and Employés in the Second or Outside Division of Departments other than the Customs, Inland Revenue and Post Office Departments shall, subject to the provisions of any Act relating thereto, be fixed in each case by Order in Council."

"2. That part of Schedule B to the said Act which relates to 'Departments Generally' shall be repealed."

6. Resolved,—That it is expedient to provide that Schedule B of the said Act shall be amended as follows:—

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. BLAKE. The Secretary shall be one of the members of the Board.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. Is he a Civil servant?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. No. A superannuated officer.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Is it proposed to give him a salary as secretary, in addition to the superannuation allowance?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. We would not do that if he received, with salary and superannuation, more than by his salary before superannuation. That is the law. As it is, we save half his salary, for we get him for half what we would have to give to anyone else.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). The members of the Board are Decelles, Thorburn, and LeSueur. Do the Government consider the latter as competent as the others?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Of course, he is considered a good officer; though superannuated, he can perform this duty. He was superannuated some years ago—I do not think by our Government. This duty is not as arduous as what he would have to perform in the Department, and, besides being a literary man, he is specially gifted for the office.

Mr. BLAKE. With regard to holding examinations, I think the Government should take some latitude, and not pledge themselves to hold examinations where there may be no candidates. It would be unfortunate if a rule were adopted by which young men would be obliged to travel a considerable distance to attend examinations. Some places should be named where examinations would always be held, and the Governor in Council should take the power of choosing other places at which there might be a sufficient number of candidates to make it reasonable to hold one there, and save expense. It is ridiculous to have examinations both at Hamilton and Toronto.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think the proper course to follow is, that we should have, at least once a year, if not twice a year, an examination in the ten or twelve places mentioned in the Act, so as to give an opportunity to the people who wish to enter the Civil Service, to pass their examinations.

Mr. FOSTER. I do not see why there should be examinations both in Toronto and Hamilton, so little distance from each other. In Nova Scotia, all have to go to Halifax, and some from long distances; in New Brunswick, all have to go to St. John. As it is only about an hour and a quarter's distance from Hamilton to Toronto it seems to me like having an extra examiner at an extra cost who is not needed. London, Ottawa, and Toronto, seem to be quite sufficient for all the purposes of Ontario.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. In a large Province like Ontario, where a great number of young men want to compete, it would be difficult to have too large a number competing under one examiner, in which case you would have to change the law and have two examiners at the same place. If we are to have the same number of examiners, it is better to give extra facilities to the young men, who, as a rule, have not their pockets lined with bank notes. If we give them a chance of passing their examination nearer home, it costs them so much less for travelling expenses and board. In a populous district like that of Hamilton, for instance, great numbers could go to town and pass their examination and return home in the evening. I think it will be better to leave the clause as it is.

On resolution 5,

Mr. BLAKE. This seems to be rather an important clause. We know that the theory of this $50 increase is very different from the practice. The theory of this $50 increase was that there should be an eligibility to receive a reward for good service, and that those who were industrious and deserving should get it; we know that in practice this theory is almost always disregarded, and the increase is given to all applicants. This has become a regular system, whatever party is in power. When I was in office those officers who received an increase were officers to whom the Government might assign a salary between certain limits. There are some chief clerks, no doubt, of special qualification to whom you would be obliged to pay salaries ranging from $1,800 to $2,400; but to apply the $50 increase to the chief clerks is practically to raise the expense of the service by a graduated scale which, in a few years, would raise the pay of all the chief clerks in the service up to the maximum. No doubt there are many chief clerks—or were in my time, I will not say now—of varying qualifications, of varying earning power: some entitled to the full salary they have been receiving, some entitled to less, and some who ought not to be paid as much as $2,400. But your proposed plan of paying this $50 increase annually will be to increase all salaries to the maximum—unless for good cause, such as some scandalous or gross neglect, which I hope hardly ever occurs—therefore, I think it is a serious change in point of expense, and I doubt its expediency.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I cannot agree with the hon. gentleman. The law, as it stands to-day, says that the minimum salary paid to a chief clerk shall be $1,800, and the maximum, $2,400 per annum. The hon. gentleman must know, from his experience in Ontario, and afterwards at Ottawa, that pressure is always brought to bear upon hon. Ministers, not only by their clerks, deserving ones, no doubt, but outside influence is brought to bear upon them to obtain an increased salary. The man is a good man, who has fulfilled his duties well; he is an old officer, therefore he should be promoted—such are the arguments used. Under the law, as it stands, there is pressure upon the hon. Ministers. They are convinced that the increase is required, but, instead of raising the salary by $50 annually, they probably raise it by $200 or $400 at a time. If, instead of that, we adopted this provision, increasing the salary at the rate of $50 a year, how long will it take him to reach the maximum? It would take him twelve years to reach the $2,400. During all that time he must be a good officer and faithfully fulfil his duties, otherwise he cannot get the increase. We thus place before him a constant stimulus to good conduct, which is more effective than would be the chance of an arbitrary increase of several hundred dollars at a time. Moreover, when he knows the increase is to be regular, if he will measure his salary, he will measure his expenses thereupon. I think if we allow him to depend upon what personal or outside influence he can exercise upon hon. Ministers, we will have less regard for his position as a public officer than if we give him a definite yearly increase.

Mr. ROSS (West Middlesex). Does the hon. gentleman propose to make this increase arbitrarily, whether the officer is good, bad, or indifferent?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The Government have the discretion of granting it or not.

Mr. ROSS. The annual increase seems to follow from the starting sum of $1,800. Now, if the hon. Minister, or the deputy-head of the Department, has it in his discretion to say whether the increase should be granted or not, matters would appear very different from what they appear to me by reading the Bill. It is quite right that the increase should depend upon the good conduct of the officer; but it seems to me absurd to treat good, bad, and indifferent officers in the same way, and allow them all an increase of $50 a year, irrespective entirely of the conduct of the officer.

Mr. BLAKE. My hon. friend has not remembered a provision of the Act. The Act says, in the first instance, that the chief clerks shall have an increase, all of them, and then it provides generally that it shall not be authorized unless the head of the Department concurs in the representation of the Department's deputy-head that the clerk is deserving of the increase, and that will apply to all. Of course, my difficulty has been mitigated by the statement of the hon. gentleman. The hon. gentleman sets forth that a good deal of money is required to be provided by Parliament in connection with the service, and he requires to be protected by this House against swerving from the path of duty, and I suppose he will receive that protection.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I thank the hon. gentleman for his protection in that respect; but the hon. gentleman, I suppose, expects some day to occupy these benches, and when he does so, he will have the same protection as he is giving us to-day.

Mr. McMULLEN. Is there any first-class clerk at $1,800 in the service, to whom an increase of salary has been refused on the ground of inefficiency?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Not that I am aware of.

Mr. McMULLEN. Then the hon. Minister is prepared to say that all the first-class clerks in the several Departments are equally efficient.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. The hon. gentleman has asked a question that I am sure no one can answer. The hon. gentleman does not suppose that I have gone through all the Departments and ascertained whether all the first-class clerks are equally efficient; but I can say this: That the Civil Service of Canada is as good, honorable, and able a service as can be found anywhere. There may be some exceptions, such exceptions you will find anywhere; but as a whole it is a service which is a credit to the country.

Mr. McMULLEN. My reason for asking the question was this: The hon. Minister said it was in the power of the deputy-head of the Department to refuse to grant the increase, and I was anxious to know if there was any instance in which it had been refused.

On resolution 6,

Mr. BLAKE. Will the hon. Minister explain the grounds on which the salaries of inspectors have been raised from a scale of from $1,600 to $2,000, to one of from $2,000 to $2,500?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. Those are inspectors of Customs. The old law placed their salary at from $1,600 to $2,000. By the present Bill they will range from $1,600 to $2,500. The chief clerks' salaries are $1,200 now, and will remain the same; clerks, instead of receiving from $600 to $1,200, will receive from $400 to $1,200. The Chief Inspector of Inland Revenue, who formerly received $3,000, will receive, under this Bill, $2,800. The inspectors who were at fixed salaries of $2,500 are placed here at from $1,600 to $2,500.

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the hon. Minister of Customs will explain why the inspectors of Customs will receive from $2,000 to $2,500, instead of from $1,600 to $2,000, the amount fixed last year.

Mr. BOWELL. The only reason why the salaries have been raised so as to range from $2,000 to $2,500 is because the inspectors of Inland Revenue and the inspectors of the Post Office receive larger salaries, and the duties of an inspector of Customs are just as responsible, and require men of equal capacity and experience to fill them, as do other branches of the service. It is, therefore, proposed to place the inspectors of the different branches, having similar duties to perform, as near on an equality as possible. Under the old law the Custom House inspectors received a maximum salary of $2,000, while Inland Revenue inspectors received $2,500, and the head inspector $2,800, and the Post Office inspectors received still larger sums.

Resolutions reported, and referred to the Committee of the Whole to which Bill (No. 90) was referred.

BOOMS AND OTHER WORKS BILL.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 96) respecting booms and other works constructed in navigable waters under the authority of Provincial Acts or otherwise.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). I may say that certain works were constructed under the authority of Acts of the old Parliament of Canada, and the rights of the owners of them ought to be preserved in this Bill, unless it is in the public interest that they should be taken away. A clause to this effect was suggested in Committee.

Mr. BLAKE. On a careful investigation of the clause of the Act, the hon. gentleman will see that the amendment is unnecessary, because the Act does not apply to these booms. It applies, in the first clause, to booms hereafter constructed under the authority of an Act of a Legislature of a Province of Canada; and, in the second clause, to any boom heretofore or hereafter constructed under the authority of an Act of a Legislature of a Province of Canada. I understand from that that it does not deal with what was done with New Brunswick, or Nova Scotia, or Prince Edward Island, or old Canada before the Union.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). But suppose the works have been constructed since Confederation under the authority of Acts passed prior to Confederation?

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think my hon. friend is needlessly afraid. I do not think there is any danger of what he fears, or that it will interfere in any way with the works he speaks of.

Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

THIRD READING.

The following Bill was considered in Committee, reported and read the third time and passed:—

Bill (No. 116) further to amend the Act respecting the incorporation of a Company to establish a Marine Telegraph between the Pacific coast of Canada and Asia.—(Sir Hector Langevin.)

DOMINION LANDS ACTS CONSOLIDATION BILL.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 45) to amend, and consolidate as so amended, the several Acts respecting the Public Lands of the Dominion therein mentioned.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 20, sub-section 5,

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. This is a reenactment of a provision in one of the old Acts by which, in case any school lot should be wanted as a site for a town, the Government were empowered to take it, and pay the school fund the highest value the land would bring if sold for agricultural purposes. I do not see any reason why the school fund should not have the advantage of any accidental circumstance of that kind, and, therefore, I propose to strike that portion out. There was a good deal of discussion upon sub-section three of section thirty-one, which provides that any person who makes an entry after the 1st of September should be allowed until the 15th of the following May to perfect his entry. I propose to extend the time to the 1st of June.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. members from Manitoba have discussed this matter pretty fully, and they are of opinion that the 1st of September should be changed to the 15th of July.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I have consulted some persons who have had considerable experience in that matter, and they say that that would be out of the question.

Mr. CHARLTON. The proposal was, that the three years should date from the 1st of June, when the settler enters upon his homestead.

Mr. WATSON. In a great many cases, when a poor man goes to that country, he wants, in the first year, to earn some money; besides, a great many Ontario people go there after seeding time, and if they had to go on their farms within six months after entering for them, they would be brought about to the beginning of the winter. I think they might be allowed the privilege of securing the land without being required to go on until the first of the following June, their entry dating from that time.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. If a man enters for a homestead and does not go upon it for a year, the actual settler is kept out of it during that time. If a man finds, on going up there, that he can do better by working as a mechanic, or a laborer, than by going on his farm, let him do so, and take up land afterwards; there is land enough in that country to provide a homestead for everybody who wants it for the next fifty years. The whole object of the homestead is to get the settler upon it. There was some discussion about hamlets, and it was said that twenty families was too large a number. The object of the clause providing for them is not that people should go up there and settle in one spot, and neglect their homesteads; but the object is that when people who are in the habit of living in villages come here, and want to settle together in a village, they must first come and make the proposition to the Government. They make their application, and we give permission, but it is a permission that must be carefully considered before being given. The main object and principle is to have on every quarter-section, if possible, a house and an occupant. To meet the proclivities and habits of people from Europe, and perhaps in a certain sense from Lower Canada, if twenty families go into a township and undertake to build a village in place of a house on each quarter-section—if they make out a case, permission will be granted to them.

Mr. ROYAL. Are we to understand this clause will only apply to incoming settlers, and that those now in the territories will be debarred from taking possession of it?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The clause explains itself: "In case a certain number of homestead settlers, &c."

Mr. CHARLTON. With reference to the cultivation of homesteads for the owners, the hon. gentleman gave no definite answer on the previous occasion.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I am strongly opposed to that, which would simply mean the getting rid of actual settlers. There would not be a man in Ontario who would not have a lot under cultivation, or pretended cultivation. The land would disappear, and the people would not go there.

Mr. WATSON. Is it the intention of the Government that the preemptions will still exist?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It was agreed unanimously that preemptions should cease to exist from January 1st, 1883.

Mr. WATSON. The stand that the Manitoba members took, was that the cultivation of homesteads should not take the place of preemptions. We wish to substitute a cultivation for five years, at the rate of twenty acres per year before a patent would be given for a homestead, for the preemption clause.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. By doing away with preemptions, we will have four settlers on each section instead of two. The Government do not want to make money out of it, and, I take it, will hold all the even-numbered sections for homesteads. If we allowed this cultivation system, a person wanting a large farm could engage 40 or 100 persons to work for him, and we know as a matter of fact that individuals have employed persons to make entries for them, being their agents and servants though nominally settlers. Under the cultivation system, any person with money could get people to enter in his name for quarter-sections and obtain a very large farm, as in the Western States, where it takes a man sometimes a day to plough a furrow from one end of his farm to the other. Cultivation without residence is not what we want.

Mr. CHARLTON. There is one point which the hon. Minister did not decide, the other night, as to compensation.

Mr. WATSON.

to be given to homestead settlers who have settled on worthless land. Will they be allowed a second homestead?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. That is provided in the Act.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman stated he supposed the Government would use the sections not available for free entry for settlers. The Act should be made clear on this point. We did not propose to abolish preemptions with a view of limiting the number of homesteads, but in order that we might be able to give two homesteads, instead of one homestead and a preemption. If the clause does not bear this out already, I have sufficient experience of the change of mind to which the Government is subject, to desire that this should be specifically stated.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. The law has always been that a person going up there with a family, any of whose male members are eighteen years of age or over, these can get a homestead, but they have no right to one particular homestead, or one particular lot. There are ample provisions in the first Act by which the Government can withdraw, if they wish to do so, any portion from settlement. The Government may want it to raise money to pay the debt, or for military purposes. No immigrant has a vested right in any given section of the country, or in any given quarter-section; all he has a right to is to know that when he goes there there will be accessible places and quarter-sections of good arable land where he can find a home.

Mr. BLAKE. But at present there is a provision in the law under which the Government can withdraw a particular locality among the even-numbered sections; but the law is that, subject to that power of withdrawal, the even-numbered sections are applicable to the homesteads, and that preemptions are pertinent to homesteads. We are now going to abolish preemptions within a certain time, and I want the even-numbered sections still to remain under the law, subject to the same power of withdrawal in the general sense that the Government has now.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There is no difficulty. I said that I presumed it would be so, and I have no doubt it will be so.

Bill reported.

On motion for third reading,

Mr. CHARLTON. Before the Bill passes its third reading, I wish to move an amendment upon a matter that I consider of vital importance, and in respect of which the Bill is seriously defective. I do not need, Mr. Speaker, to descant upon the bearing that the great North-West will have upon the future of this Dominion, upon the bearing that it will have upon the establishment of a nationality there, provided we do not, by bad legislation, drive that country out of the Union. I do not need to say that in dealing with this great question, in dealing with the future of our empire, we should approach the discussion without any reference to party interests, or any desire to advance the interests of personal or party friends. When we look at that great country in its present condition, the conclusion is at once forced upon our minds that something is required there in order to make it available, and a real source of strength and power to this Dominion. Now, the question is: what is required to produce that result? Certainly it is not the operations and manipulations of speculators—speculators in lands, in coal licenses, in timber limits, in pasture lands even; these, on the whole, do little or nothing to develop the resources of the great North-West. That country can only be made what we desire to see it become by the intervention of the settler. Labor alone will develop that country; labor alone will convert those wastes into fields of wheat and other crops, instead of the prairie grass that now grows there. Well,

Sir, if this is the case, then the one and sole instrumentality that can make that country what we desire to see it become is an instrumentality that should receive our particular regard as a Parliament discussing the laws and regulations that shall apply to the great North-West. Now, that instrumentality is clearly the settler. The settler is the foundation rock upon which the superstructure of a great country must be built in the North-West. It is by his labor alone that the North-West can be developed, and in our legislation upon this matter we should have special regard to the interests of the settler. Of course, when the settler goes into that country and develops, it other classes will follow him—the artisans, the merchants, and the speculators. These last will all take care of themselves, their interests do not need our fostering care. But we should, at least, give to the settler justice; if we give him no exceptional privileges we should, at least, see that he is not trampled upon, that his rights are not tramped upon, that his rights are not made subordinate to the interests of others; we should see, in short, to use a vulgarism, that he had a fair show in that country. It is essential, if we would secure the development of the North-West, that no obstacle is put in the way of the settlers getting land. The Government have, in their policy, in effect conceded this principle by adopting a preemption system, and a homestead system. They have conceded the principle that it is proper and necessary to facilitate the settlement of the North-West by giving to the settler advantages and inducements to go into that country. Now, if the Government, after having made provisions for homestead and preemption settlement in the North-West, then turns round, and, with reference to the other lands in that country, in place of favoring the settler and giving him justice, favors the interests of the speculators to his detriment, then I say the Government has stopped short in its duty, has not gone as far as it should have gone, and in reference to that question has proved derelict in its duty. In discussing this land Bill a few nights ago, we took occasion, on this side of the House, to give certain qualified commendations to the right hon. gentleman, with reference to this Bill. The Bill is a consolidation of all the various land laws, and, in that respect, the efforts of the hon. gentleman are praiseworthy, and we very properly thanked him. We also had occasion to acknowledge that the changes in the Bill in the main, were commendable changes. In fact, we were desirous of securing the elimination of some features in this Bill that we considered bad, and of substituting good features in their place; and we very properly considered that indulging in invectives against the Government was not likely to produce the result we desired. Consequently, we approached the discussion of this question in as persuasive a spirit as we were master of, and we hoped, from the suavity with which the hon. First Minister treated us, that we would obtain great concessions. Well, Sir, we have not obtained very great concessions, in fact the concessions the hon. gentleman has given us are very inconsiderable. There are still several features in which I consider this Bill is radically wrong—several provisions that we have attacked before. There are provisions that we would have been glad to see the Government remove, but they have not seen fit to remove them. This Bill is lacking in one essential particular, it affords no special protection to the settler. The duty of the Government should be to hold the land in the North-West for the settler. It is no object to sell the land a few years in advance of the time the settler would occupy it; it should be held by the Government to be sold direct to the settler—the Government should allow no party to come between the Government and the man who would ultimately occupy the soil. The speculator should not be encouraged, he should not be permitted to make purchase of the public lands in the North-West; the Government should hold that public land as a sacred trust to be handed direct to the man who would cultivate the land; and in this respect the Bill is radically deficient. In this respect we condemned the policy of the Government before, and we hoped to find a reform; but the Government have given us no reform, and consequently we shall be called upon to record our sentiments on this matter in a protest against the Government's policy. The Bill is also deficient in the matter of refusing to afford competition in the sale of pasture licenses, coal licenses, and timber berths. It is also deficient, and lamentably deficient, in that it provides no adequate remedy for the vacillation and changes that have hitherto applied to the regulations and policy of the Government in respect to lands in the North-West. The trouble is that the powers which belong legitimately to Parliament, and ought to be exercised after due deliberation by all the representatives of the people in Parliament assembled, are exercised by a small body of men, and for some reason or other these powers are exercised in such a way as to leave their policy open to the charge of vacillation and change. That vacillating policy has been productive of very great difficulty and trouble in the North-West. We know the settlers in that country have been in the main ignorant as to what the policy of the Government was, and in fact the local land agents in various portions of the North-West have also been ignorant of the changes made in the regulations at Ottawa. The exercise of this power that properly pertains to Parliament by the Ministry, or rather by one member of the Ministry—because, of course, the decision of the hon. First Minister, who is head of the Department of Interior, is what guides and governs in all matters pertaining to it—is an evil. It is an evil under the peculiar circumstances of the case, and is aggravated by the fact that the right hon. gentleman, although he bears his years well and shows a wonderful degree of vitality and physical and mental energy for a man of his age, is a man well stricken in years, and consequently is incapable of the severe physical and mental exertion necessary on the part of the head of a great department like the Department of the Interior, with its multifarious interests and duties. No hon. gentleman will pretend to say that Department does not require the undivided efforts of a man in the full vigor of life, and when an hon. Minister, in addition to the duties of that Department, has to discharge the duties of Premier, he will be overworked. What are the consequences? They are, that the duty of establishing and carrying out regulations amounting in point of fact to legislation having to do with the future of an empire, is placed in the hands of whom? In the hands of subordinates and clerks who are called upon to discharge functions that properly pertain to the House of Commons in Parliament assembled—I characterize that as an abuse of power; and I say that the functions of Parliament have been usurped, and that Parliament should proceed to assert its power and exercise its functions in the matter of establishing regulations and other matters connected with the management of the public lands in the North-West. We, then take the ground that the Government should sell to the settler direct, that he should not be liable to the intervention of the middleman; and, further than that, it should not permit the intervention of the middleman, that it should allow no party to stand between themselves and the men who wish to acquire the land for purposes of cultivation. The Government so far from doing this has actually promoted speculation. It has promoted speculations in farming land, in timber, and coal lands. And it is a very suspicious circumstance that this was done just upon the eve of a General Election.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Hear, hear.

Mr. CHARLTON. Some hon members say "hear, hear." We have the evidence that members of Parliament were applicants for favors from the Government, that they were applicants for lands under the colonization schemes, they were applicants for timber limits, and for coal leases; that they acted on their own behalf, and as agents for others, that they added to the functions of members of Parliament, the functions of lobbyists, and this condition of things, especially on the eve of a General Election, can only be characterized as a lamentable condition of affairs, and one not calculated to promote public morality in the Dominion of Canada.

Mr. HESSON. If the Reform party had been in power, it would have been all right.

Mr. CHARLTON. We hear that assertion until it actually has become almost idiotic—"You're another"—"You did it,"—consequently as one wrong has been committed, another is justifiable. This is worthy of the hon. member for South Perth (Mr. Hesson). I wish to call attention to the character of some of these land speculation schemes. I wish to call attention briefly to the character of these colonization schemes which were planned and entered upon just at the opening of the new year of 1882. I want to call your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the admirable character of the regulations, if the object in view was to promote speculation and to benefit speculators. Under plan No. 1, townships, or a block of townships, in belt "D,"—that is the belt north of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and outside of the railway belt—could be granted to applicants; that is to say, the land amounting to sixteen sections in each township not reserved for homesteads and pre-emptions. Those lands were sold to the actual settler at $2 per acre, but they were sold to the speculator at $2, but with conditions which reduced the price to $1 per acre. If he placed thirty-two settlers on his lands in each township within five years, and secured the placing of thirty-two settlers on the homestead and preemption reserves in the township, he would receive the land for half the price; and if he failed to place the entire required number, $160 would be allowed for each settler placed there during the five years. This was a scheme giving speculators land at one-half the price settlers would have to pay for it; and it was not to be supposed that the speculators would be satisfied with 100 per cent. profit, and sell the land at $2 per acre, for the settler was left at the mercy of the speculator, who would wring from him the last cent he could pay. That was plan No. 1. Plan No. 2 was still worse. It provided that townships outside of the railway belt, and in belt "D," might be granted to speculators, not the odd-numbered sections only, but the sections reserved for homestead and preemption entry were all to be granted. The homestead, the pre-emption entry—all should be swept away, and the whole granted, except the school sections and the Hudson Bay sections, leaving thirty-two sections, in each township granted, on payment of $2 per acre with the same provisions as to rebate on placing two settlers on each section, and if less than the stipulated number were placed, then $160 rebate for every settler placed in the township. These are the two schemes adopted on the eve of the General Election for the sake of attracting to the side of the Government speculators and capitalists who desired to embark in land speculation in the North-West. And I judge, from the returns brought down, that the result of the plan more than justified the expectations of my hon. friend the First Minister. I find that, under plan No. 1, there were 257 applications which covered 2,301 townships. This, at the rate of sixteen sections to each township, amounted to application for land, under plan No. 1, covering 23,562,000 acres; of these applications there were allotted 119, covering 720 townships, and embracing an area, counting sixteen sections to each township granted, of 7,321,000 acres of land. Well, some of these men failed to make their payments, and I do not know how long my hon. friend gave them an extension, I do not know how long some of them had to pay, but we will see how many. I see that the number of allotments on which the first instalment was paid was twenty-six, covering 137 townships, and embracing an area of 1,402,800 acres of land. The number of allotments upon which the first instalment is not yet due—I suppose that an extension of time was given in some cases—and upon which the first instalment presumably will be paid, is six, covering 168 townships, and embracing an area of 1,720,300 acres of land. The number of townships on which the first instalment is not paid, or not yet due, and will probably be paid, is 305, covering an area of 3,123,000 acres of land. What is this equal to? It is equal to 31,232 farms of 100 acres each. It is equal to a territory furnishing homes for a population, amounting to five to each family, of 156,000—placed in the hands of these speculative companies for the purpose of enabling them to get this land at 50 per cent. discount, and to turn round and sell it to settlers at as large an advance as they can secure—that is the result under plan No. 1. Now, plan No. 2 was scarcely as favorable a plan with speculators, because it required a larger payment in cash. Under plan No. 2 there were nine applications, covering 78 townships, which, with thirty-two sections to each township, cover 1,597,000 acres of land. I presume that the considerations of these applications have been complied with, although this fact is not mentioned. This will cover an area of 1,596,800 acres of land, sufficient for 15,940 farms of 100 acres each, providing homes for 80,000 people in families of five. Under these two plans, we have placed in the hands of these speculative companies an area of land sufficient for 47,200 farms of 100 acres each, which would support a population of 236,000, in families of five each. Well, now, I would ask, if it is not time to call a halt on this thing. Here is an evil infinitely greater than any evil of the kind ever complained of in Canada before; and infinitely greater than that inflicted on Ontario by the Canada Company. That was a matter of trivial consequence in comparison with the evil of which I am treating this afternoon; and it is for the purpose of calling the attention of the House to cognate evils, that I propose placing a resolution in your hands this afternoon, calling on the Government to restrict sales of land to settlers who desire to occupy these lands. Now, if we look through the list of these applications, we will find that members of Parliament have been applicants for—I will not say favors—but for grants, which were given at the pleasure of the Government. Under these colonization plans, I find that five days after the date of the regulations, which established plans Nos. 1 and 2, a certain Colonel Williams applied for five and a-quarter townships. I find that on the 9th of February, 1882, one Robert Hay applied for six and one-half townships. I find that on the 15th of February, the said Col. Williams applied for a further grant of six townships. On the 15th of February, one Adam Brown, who is not a member of this House, but who, I believe, is a friend of this Government, applied for one township. On the 13th of February, Robert Hay and associates applied for two townships more. On the 25th of February, George Elliott applied for two townships. On the 27th of February, one George S. Drew, now a Judge in the Province of Ontario, applied for four townships. On the 30th of March, John White and associates applied for four townships. On the 30th of March, C. F. Ferguson applied for three townships. On the 7th of March, Robert Hay and associates applied for five townships. On the 10th of March, P. Valin & Ross applied for two townships. On the 10th of March, Thomas Arkell, who knows this place no more, and associates, applied for six townships. On the 11th of March, George Elliott and others applied for five townships. On April 4th, P. Valin applied for one township.

On March 4th, the amiable member for Stanstead and associates applied for six townships. On May 12th, Senator Almon applied for twelve townships. On June 26th, Sir A. T. Galt applied for fifty townships. When this gentleman went up to the North-West to see about his colonization grants, he had a gentleman deputed to accompany him, namely, Colonel Dennis, whose expenses were charged to the Dominion of Canada. They were something like $400, while the High Commissioner charged the Dominion with $1,500 as his expenses, so that we have some $1,800 or $1,900, as the cost to Canada for the great benefit conferred upon us of allowing Sir A. T. Galt to get fifty townships at half price. I might ask the question: "Men and brethren, should these things be so?" Is it conducive to public morality and to the public interests, that members of this Parliament—and all of them sitting on that side of the Chamber—should be dancing attendance in the office of the hon. Minister of the Interior, waiting for their turns, as applicants in their own behalf and in behalf of their friends, for those favors which the Government had to dispense under its land regulations adopted on the 23rd of December, 1881; and I ask, if we are to suppose that all these gentlemen, to use another phrase of common parlance, showed their hand, are we not justified in supposing that hundreds of applications were made, and that many of them were made where members of Parliament were interested, and where their names do not show on the face of the records? Well, it is high time, I re-assert, that this state of things should be brought to an end. It is high time that an empire should not be put up for sale and bartered away, by being given to political favorites and others by the hon. First Minister at his pleasure in the way in which these lands have been bestowed. I say that it is a crying abuse; and I say, that if political morality in this Dominion of Canada had not been deadened by the condition of things existing here for many years, we would have had an uprising on account of this abuse, which would have swept these men from power; and this is one of the most lamentable indications of the future, that our public virtue is not sufficiently alive to rebuke this state of things, as they ought to have been rebuked. It might be said—I do not make the charge definitely—that these grants were made corruptly, for the purpose of securing political influence. I do not make these charges definitely, but I say that no Government with a desire to preserve its character before the country—no Government that stood in fear of having imputations of dishonesty laid at its door—would do things of that kind. I say that there are several suspicious circumstances connected with these applications, and that the portion of them which I have read over are made invariably by supporters of hon. gentlemen opposite.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Invariably?

Mr. CHARLTON. I think so. I do not find, in the whole list, any member in the House of Commons who is in opposition to the right hon. gentleman. If there are such, I may have overlooked them, but I do not recall the case of one applicant, who is a member of this House, opposed to the Government. Now, Sir, not only might there be favoritism in the granting of applications—not only might some political favoritism be exercised in the withholding of these favors, and some favoritism be exercised in the cancellation or the declining to cancel these grants, but these men making application might fall in arrears, and it is within the power of the hon. First Minister either to enforce the regulations of the Department rigorously, or to be lenient in the exercise of those powers which have been placed in the hands of the hon. Minister. I say it is a dangerous power to give any Minister of the Crown the discretion of whether he shall enforce rigidly the regulations of the Department, or whether he shall act with lenity in the matter of cancelling claims of this kind. Another objection we have to this law, as it now stands, is that the right of the homestead settler is held by a frail, insecure tenure. There is nothing to prevent the hon. First Minister, at any time, by a Departmental order, from abrogating the privilege of the homesteader—the privilege of withdrawing from settlement all homestead entries. By one sweep of his pen this right can be taken from the homestead settler. I hold that, in a matter of such vital importance, in a matter so vitally affecting the interests of the North-West, no Minister should have the right of abrogating such a privilege. I hold that this is a matter that should be dealt with by Parliament alone—that it should require the solemn deliberate declaration of the House of Commons to withdraw that privilege from the homestead settler, and in that respect the law requires amendment. I say that between the railway grant and the colonization companies grants, there is danger that the whole North-West will be taken from the settler.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Hear, hear.

Mr. CHARLTON. The hon. Minister laughs, but there are applications covering over 23,000,000 of acres, and with the immense grants to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and the grants of various other lines in the North-West who are clamoring for land appropriations—I repeat that between railway grants made and in prospect, and the colonization grants made and in prospect, the bonâ fide settler in the North-West will not have a place whereon to put his foot. He will have to choose between the colonization companies and the railway company. Hon. gentlemen opposite may laugh, but I say that this is matter fraught not only with interest but with danger to the North-West. That the hon. gentleman is trifling with the interests of the North-West settler, he is playing ducks and drakes with millions of acres of the public domain, which is passing to railway and colonization companies—that he is dealing with it as if it were practically exhaustless—

Mr. HESSON. I would like to ask the hon. gentleman whether he says that the Government are allowing the even-numbered sections to pass out of their hands to the colonization companies?

Mr. CHARLTON. I regret to say that I am under the disadvantage of not having heard the remark of the hon. member for North Perth (Mr. Hesson).

Mr. HESSON. I asked the hon. gentleman the question whether the Government were allowing to pass out of their hands the even-numbered sections to these colonization companies?

Mr. CHARLTON. Under plan No. 2, the Government may grant the even numbered sections in belt "D."

An hon. MEMBER. But did they do it?

Mr. CHARLTON. I think they did.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. There has not been one single grant made under plan No. 2.

Mr. CHARLTON. Will the hon. gentleman say that they have not power?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I did not say so. But the hon. gentleman said in his speech that there were nine applications made under this plan; but I say that not one of them was granted.

Mr. CHARLTON. I am sorry that the hon. gentleman did not make his correction sooner.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I would not presume to break into the hon. gentleman's speech.

Mr. CHARLTON. The regulations were made by the Government with the intention of carrying them out; they are giving force to these regulations, and if they have concluded that these regulations are wrong, that the policy of granting these lands in that way was injurious, we may assume that the regulations would have been abrogated before now, but they are in force to-day. There is another point to which I wish to call the attention of the House. I allude to the fact that the Government have withdrawn all public lands for sale south of the Canada Pacific Railway. I am told that these lands were advertised for sale by auction, and I think that the Government certainly deserve a reprimand from this House for their policy with reference to those lands. I cannot understand why a vast extent of the public domains south of the Canadian Pacific Railway should be withheld from the settler; and these lands having been withheld we say that the settler has a right to allege that a cruel wrong has been done to him; that the Government should have offered these lands for sale, thus allowing the settler to deal with the Government, by which, we may assume, he would have been fairly dealt with, and not with these speculators whom the Government has allowed to intervene and obtain the land for the purpose of making a profit out of the actual settlers. As I said a few moments ago, this system gives a temptation to members of Parliament to act as lobbyists; and I find that a good many hon. members have acted in that capacity. I read a letter here the other night from an hon. gentleman who was not present at the time, but whom I am now happy to see in his place—I refer to the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert). I went through the applications for coal licenses, and I find that the hon. member for Lincoln was an applicant on behalf of other parties on fifteen occasions. I find that the hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Bergin) was an applicant in ten instances.

An hon. MEMBER. Was that all?

Mr. CHARLTON. So far as I saw, that was all. The hon. member for Stanstead (Mr. Colby) and the hon. member for Centre Wellington (Mr. Orton) figured in the same category.

Mr. COLBY. Have any of the applications been granted?

Mr. CHARLTON. I did not enquire. It was not necessary to do so, and, besides, it was sufficient to know that hon. gentlemen were acting in their own behalf and in behalf of others as lobbyists in this matter. I took occasion at that time to read a letter from my hon. friend from Lincoln (Mr. Rykert) to the Department of the Interior. That letter was, I think, dated the 29th of June last, very shortly after the elections. It proceeded to enquire:

"Will you kindly endeavor to have the Order in Council granted for the coal licenses, applied for in the Souris district, for which I sent an application, a list of which I herewith enclose. Our people are very desirous of leaving next week to explore and take immediate action. I also applied for a timber license for W. Thomas, on English River, and which, I was informed by Mr. Riley, was first. Will you please urge this present at the same time. What do you think of the National Policy now? They tried very hard to defeat me."

Now, the hon. gentleman is here, and perhaps he will be kind enough to tell us what connection the National Policy had with timber licenses, and coal lands. Did he wish to remind the Government that he was a good boy, that he had fought the fight and conquered the foe, and that he was entitled to the timber license? If that was not his object, perhaps he will inform us why he made this remark in the letter; and although it is not altogether pertinent to this matter, it may be well to mention that a timber license was granted to him on payment of $5 per square mile, and that a very short time afterwards it was sold again at $2,000 per square mile. Perhaps some one who is good at figures will tell us the amount of profit derived from that transaction; but this is a condition of things which those who are not interested in obtaining the license have certainly reason to find fault with. The hon. gentleman, it is claimed, was acting as the agent of others. I do not know whether he pocketed any proportion of the profits, although it is reported that he received, ostensibly as a fee, about one-third of the whole amount. In conclusion, I have to say, in relation to this matter, that we find fault with this Bill because, in many cases, it usurps to the Government the power that belongs to Parliament, because it presumes to deal, in a Star Chamber fashion, with interests of such vast magnitude that the control of them should be entrusted only to the representatives of the people in Parliament. We find fault with this Bill because the settler's interests are uncared for except in the matter of homestead and pre-emptions, and preemption is shortly to be taken from him. The Government instead of protecting his interests, play into the hands of speculators, and allow them to buy great portions of the public domain for the purpose of selling the land again to the settler at an advance. I think the hon. gentlemen might have allowed the privilege of second entry to that class of hardy men who are the pioneers in the North-West, and who, after fulfilling the regulations for one or more years, should have a chance to sell out and move further on in the wilderness. I think the functions these men perform are of the highest importance in the development of that country. The Government have also done wrong in refusing to give a definite assurance to the homestead settler that if he settles upon worthless land, he will have the privilege of a second homestead entry. I believe that the only policy the Government can adopt that will protect the settler from his natural enemy, the land-grabber and speculator, is one that will reserve the land from sale until it is required for settlement. I think this is a primary duty resting on the Government, and no part of this land policy would more redound to the interests of the North-West. Although I can scarcely hope that the Government will adopt that policy now, I believe the time is coming when the force of public sentiment will compel them to do so; and I only hope that irreparable injury will not be done to the North-West before that time by the Government in placing the public domain to a large extent in the hands of speculative companies. I move in amendment thereto that the said Bill be re-committed to a Committee of the Whole, in order to amend the same, by striking out all after the words "Governor in Council," in line five, sub-section one, section twenty-four, and substituting the following:—

Provided that all sales of agricultural lands, shall, unless under exceptional circumstances, applicable to particular lots, be made on condition of actual settlement by the purchaser, and in quantities limited to the numbers of acres, which can be reasonably occupied by one settler.

It being Six o'clock, the Speaker left the Chair.

After Recess.

QUINZE PIER, BOOM AND IMPROVEMENT COMPANY.

Mr. TASSÉ moved that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole on Bill (No. 66) to incorporate the Quinze Pier, Boom and Improvement Company.

Mr. WHITE (Renfrew). Before the House goes into Committee, I would like to say a few words on the Bill. It proposes to grant to two gentlemen, Mr. Allan Grant and Mr. Taggart, the right to construct certain works upon that portion of the Ottawa River—a river that is declared by an Act of this Parliament to be a navigable stream—almost 200 miles from above the head of Lake Temiscamingue, through which the timber for a very considerable portion of territory will require to pass. I say this Bill gives this right to those two gentlemen, because although five names appear in the Bill—and I presume also in the petition for it—three of them are the names of employés of Mr. Grant—mere men of straw—and are put there in order to complete the number required to secure an Act of incorporation. I do not believe it to be in the public interest that the control of so considerable a portion of a river like the Ottawa should be placed in the hands of private individuals, and I am informed licenses have been issued over an extent of from 1,200 to 1,500 square miles above the point where those works are to be constructed. It was stated by the hon. gentleman who appeared on behalf of the incorporators before the Private Bills Committee, that the works, the power to construct which are asked by this Bill, extend over a distance of upwards of 200 miles; yet I am informed that the interests of those two gentlemen who ask for these powers only extend twelve, fifteen, or twenty miles from the head of Lake Temiscamingue. My strong impression is that those works ought to be constructed by the Government; and I would suggest to the hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill, that, inasmuch as no person, except the two gentlemen who have applied for this Act, will use those works during the present season, and which must have been constructed to enable them to get their timber down this stream, he should not press the Bill this Session, and if, during Recess, the Government, upon examination and after full consideration of the circumstances, should come to the conclusion that they will not improve that portion of the river, I will offer no objection next Session to the charter being given to them, or any other gentlemen who may undertake to make the improvements. Although I will be the last to place any obstructions in the way of parties who, by their private enterprise, should have constructed works of this nature, from reaping the advantages they ought to derive by being able to collect tolls from those, other than themselves, who use them; yet, under the circumstances, I am of the opinion the course I suggest should be followed. So far as I am able to learn, some of the license holders in that locality object to these powers being given; but should the House decide to pass this Bill, I will move, in Committee, an amendment, giving to the Government the right to acquire those works at any time they may deem expedient in the public interest to do so.

Mr. TASSÉ. I do not think the hon. member is justified in stating that, but two gentlemen have applied for this Bill, because, in its very preamble, appear the names of Allan Grant, George Taggart, W. G. McVicar, Fred. Fraser, and James Tackle, as applicants for the Act of incorporation. The promoters of this Bill have deserved much from the lumber interests. They have been the pioneers in that part of the Ottawa Valley, and instead of their petition for this Bill being opposed by the lumbering interests there, I may say I hold in my hand letters from eight or ten of the most important men interested in the lumbering interests in that place, proving the contrary.

Mr. WHITE. Name them.

Mr. TASSÉ. I have a letter, signed by Mr. Eagan, who says:

"As a limit holder in that vicinity, I do not see anything objectionable in said Bill, but, on the contrary, consider it most essential that such improvements should be made. In my opinion, public works of this description, particularly in the main Ottawa, should be constructed and controlled by the Government, yet they are so essential to the interests of the lumberers working in that locality that I would be glad to see you succeed in getting incorporated.

"(Signed) H. H. EAGAN."

I have another letter signed by Mr. David Moore, one of the most important lumbermen of the Ottawa Valley. He says:

"I have just seen and carefully read over the Bill as passed before the Private Bills Committee of the House of Commons, and, as a limit holder on the Ottawa River, I have no objection to its being passed. I trust every reasonable protection is given to all persons desirous of navigating the river, or enabling them to use the improvements, as I think, moreover, that unless the Government, as a part of the future policy of the country, is prepared to undertake that it will undertake at the public expense to open up and render floatable the Ottawa above Lake Temiscamingue, that portion of the country must remain a sealed book, and the lumber wealth undeveloped for all time, unless such joint action as is represented by this Bill as managed by the public men of this country and the lumber trade. I certainly believe that the limit holders above Lake Temiscamingue could well afford to grant a bonus to your company, as it will at once put a value upon their property now proportionately valueless owing to the impracticable character of the river as a channel for the timber trade."

I may state that I have a letter also from a gentleman who resides in that locality to which my hon. friend belongs, Mr. Thistle. He says:

"As somewhat interested in the improvement of the Quinze, having an interest in limits on Block A, I have no hesitation in expressing my approval of the work you have in view, and for which you ask a charter under the name of the Quinze Pier and Boom Improvement Company—certainly as far as improving the stream to Lac Expance; and should it not be the policy of the Government to take the improvement of the main Ottawa beyond that point into their own hands with the view of pressing the work on to its completion, I consider it but justice to the limit holders north of Lac Expance that their wishes to have the Bill pass, be assented to. Mr. J. K. Ward, of Montreal, who is largely interested in Quinze limit property writes me that he is favorable to the work, with a clause that charges shall be reasonable and not show a profit of over 10 per cent."

"I am, yours truly,
"W. R. THISTLE."

Here is a letter from Allan Gilmour, who is also one of the leading lumbermen of this country:

"I have looked over the Bill of the Quinze Pier and Boom Improvement Company, and, as a limit holder on the Ottawa, I see no objection to its being passed; on the contrary, I think, it will be a great benefit to limit holders in that part of the country, if the tolls for passing through the improvements are under the control of the Government."

"Yours truly,
"ALLAN GILMOUR."

The very thing asked by Mr. Gilmour is proposed to be granted in the Bill now before the House. In fact, all the toils of the company will be under the control and at the risk of the Government, who may change them from time to time. I have also a letter signed by Mr. Conroy; another from Dr. Church, who is a limit holder in that locality; another from Alexander Fraser, and one from Mr. Richard Nagle, also one of the leading lumbermen of the Ottawa Valley. Those letters show that the leading men of the Ottawa Valley interested in the lumber trade instead of being opposed to this charter being granted rather favor it, as being calculated to advance the interests of the lumber trade in this direction. When the House is in Committee I will be prepared to meet the views, to some extent, in limiting the operations of the company. Instead of asking, as is provided in the second clause, that the company shall have power at ninety-five separate and distinct points on the Ottawa River, I will ask the House to substitute the following: "The Company will have power at such separate and distinct points on the River Ottawa at which it may be necessary to attach said booms to the shore of or on such river as far as Lake Temiscamingue;" and instead of "sources of said river," I will put a provision which shall restrict the operations of the company from the foot of Lac Expance to an extent of about thirty or forty miles. I would have no objection if the Government were prepared to go on with the work, but I do not suppose they are ready now. At all events, I am prepared to accept the amendment of which notice has been given by my hon. friend, to the effect that the Government may at any time when they think proper in the public interest take hold of the works. With these remarks, I move the House into Committee on the Bill.

Mr. BRYSON. I consider it my duty at this time to express my views on this subject. I have had some little experience in the lumber trade, and I think that the Bill is not in the interests of the public. In the first place, I contend that it has been wrongfully alleged as to the number of places requiring improvements on the Ottawa river; and, secondly, the magnitude and importance of the interests involved in this Bill is something that deserves great consideration. There is a very large expanse of country north and east of this portion of the Ottawa River, which is known as the Quinze River, because there are some fifteen portages on this portion of the Ottawa River, and from these portages the river derives its name. It is true this portion of the river is very rough and requires improvement. It has been stated by the hon. member for North Renfrew that the promoters of this Bill, although five in number, who appear to have asked to be incorporated, are really but two men. These two gentlemen are lumbering on the upper portion of the Ottawa River in the vicinity of Quinze Rapids, and last year they had their timber and logs driven through this portion of the river in almost its natural condition. This year they are doing the same thing, and have constructed some temporary improvements. They found very little difficulty, I understand from one of the promoters of the Bill, in using that portion of the river last season, and I would suggest, before this company become incorporated, that the Government should send their engineer and make a report of that portion of the river, and submit the specifications; and then if the Government does not feel disposed next year to go on and improve this portion of the river I should be satisfied to support this Bill. But, Sir, at the present time I consider it premature to go on and incorporate this company, because I do not consider it will benefit those holding limits above this portion of the Ottawa River called Quinze. This private company may go on and improve this portion of the river temporarily, but these improvements may not be properly constructed as has been the case with several companies that have already endeavoured to improve the streams and tributaries of the Ottawa, whose efforts have been a total failure. Several instances might be quoted where private companies have attempted to improve the tributaries of the Ottawa and have failed. It might be the same in this case, but I contend that the improvements of a navigable river, such as the Ottawa, should belong to the Government, as is the case in the improvements from the Roche Capitaine to the foot of the Hull slide. The dues and slideage are paid by the lumbermen without any difficulty whatever; whereas, if the company were incorporated, and those holding limits on the upper portion of the Ottawa were obliged to pay these tolls at the head of Lake Temiscamingue, it might cause serious difficulty. As for the letters which have been read by the hon. member in charge of this Bill, I may say in respect of the letter from Mr. Nagle that I am not aware that that gentleman is interested in that portion of the Ottawa. Mr. Fraser, it is true, has some limits in that portion of the Ottawa, but I do not know that they are drained into that river at that point, and I think the timber from his limits will have to come by the Rivière du Moine. Mr. Allan Gilmour is also reported as in favor of the incorporation of this company. I am not aware that Mr. Allan Gilmour has anything at stake in that section of the country whatever. I do not know that his limits touch that portion of the Ottawa. I am satisfied that if the Government would allow this matter to remain over till next year, and if they were not then prepared to go on and build the necessary improvements, after having a report from their engineer, I, for one, will support this Bill. But as it stands at the present time I do not consider it would be in the public interest to now enact it into law.

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I think it this Bill was to remain in the form in which it has been introduced from the other House, it would give power to the company to construct works on a very long stretch of river above Lake Temiscamingue; but the promoter of the Bill has explained that he intends in Committee to limit its operation altogether to that small portion of the river between Lake Temiscamingue and Lac Expance. That is just at the place where the petitioners have their work and their timber.

Mr. BRYSON.

The hon. member for Renfrew (Mr. White) wished that the Government should build this work. I am not sure whether we should undertake this work or not; we have other works of the same kind on the Ottawa. We have on the Upper and Lower Ottawa works which belong to two different companies, not to the Government, and I do not see any difference between the cases of those companies and the case of incorporating this company, where the parties have limits and lumbering establishments. It shows great spirit of enterprise on their part to propose to do this work without asking any aid from the Government. Moreover, by a clause in the Bill, the Government may at any time, if they choose, purchase the work at its value at that time, and if they cannot agree, the matter has to be decided by the Dominion arbitrators. If the public interest would be served one, two or three years hence by the Government acquiring the work, they would have power to do so under this Bill. With respect to limit owners on Lac Expance, if they work their limits, their logs would come down the river, and when they came to that portion of the river improved by the incorporators under this Bill, the property would come under the tariff to be established by the Bill. The charges and dues were to be approved by the Governor in Council, and they might be from time to time, altered and amended. I believe, therefore, the provisions of the Bill are sufficient to guarantee the floating of logs through this work at fair tolls compared with its cost. It has also been objected that the works constructed may not be of a substantial nature. But the plans and specifications have to be approved by the Governor in Council; and it was not in the interest of the company that the work should be of a temporary character, so that they might be carried away by logs or water. I think the provisions of the Bill should be considered in Committee.

Mr. BLAKE. The objections taken by hon. members on both sides of the House are reducible to this: that there is danger that those two gentlemen, who it is said are to represent two lumber firms, may make an undue use of the advantages they will obtain by the incorporation of the company. The whole capital of the company is placed at $50,000, and this is for a much larger work than the hon. gentlemen now contemplate they should carry out. If the hon. gentleman would make provision in the Bill for the opening of stock books for a certain amount of stock, and give an opportunity to limits holder who are afraid of a monopoly to subscribe and take a portion of stock in the enterprise, the difficulty would be obviated, for they would have a chance to protect their own interests. I do not think they could complain of undue hardship if they were thus allowed to make an investment and share in the control and management of the work.

Mr. DAWSON. I am not opposed to the principle of the Bill, and I am happy to see the very liberal view which the hon. Minister of Public Works has presented in respect to a work of this nature. It is quite evident that lumbermen must have booms in connection with their limits, and it is clear they should have power by law to construct those booms in order to protect themselves. But while admitting this principle, I cannot but recollect that I had a Bill under my charge of precisely a similar nature the other day. It was for booms required at a place where they are as much needed as on the Upper Ottawa, indeed more so, and the Bill was precisely like this now before the House. That Bill was, however, not allowed to go through Committee. I am perfectly aware that an objection was raised that it was on the boundary line; but lumbermen did not wish to take logs except in Canada. While I heartily approve of the principle of the Bill, I must say that it is a bad rule which cannot work both ways, and I much regret that the other Boom Company's Bill could not also have become law.

Motion agreed to; and the House resolved itself into Committee.

(In the Committee.)

On section 4,

Sir HECTOR LANGEVIN. I move in amendment that after the words, "the capital stock of the Company shall be $50,000 divided into 500 shares of $100 each," be added: "and after one month's notice in the Canada Gazette a book shall be opened at the chief place of business of the Company, in which any person may subscribe for shares of the said capital stock, and in case a larger number than 500 shares shall be subscribed for, then there shall be an allotment of shares among the subscribers, so that no subscriber shall be excluded."

Motion agreed to; and Bill reported, and read the third time and passed.

THIRD READING.

The following Bill was considered in Committee, reported, and read the third time and passed:—

Bill (No 118) to amend the Act incorporating the European, American, Canadian and Asiatic Cable Company, limited, and to change the name of the Company to the American, British and Continental Cable Company, limited.—(Mr. Colby).

SECOND READING.

The following Bill was read the second time:—

Bill (No. 120) to incorporate The Canadian Rapid Telegraph Company, limited.—(Mr. Davies).

DOMINION LANDS ACTS CONSOLIDATION BILL

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Mr. Speaker: I cannot congratulate the hon. member for the tone and spirit of the speech in which he introduced the resolution now in your hands. He stated that this was a subject that affected the future of the country and should be removed from the arena of party politics. I would appeal to hon. members on both sides of this House if ever there was a speech delivered in a narrower spirit of partisan attack than that of the hon. gentleman himself. There were no new arguments adduced, no new statements made, no new facts presented, and it was quite easy to see that the motion and the speech were got up for the purpose of making an attack on some gentlemen who sit on the opposite side from the mover of the resolution. I, Sir, shall not condescend to adopt that ignoble course; I shall not condescend to state to this House, as I might do, that there are hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House who have made applications for privileges in land, for grants to colonization companies, for timber licenses, and so on. It is an ignoble warfare, Sir, and I congratulate the hon. gentleman on his skill in showing, even in a matter which he himself says should be removed from party politics, what a mere partisan he is. Sir, there is nothing wrong in any gentleman on either side of this House purchasing lands or entering into speculations, or trying to get leases, or developing the country by mines; there is nothing wrong in any hon. member of this House, or any man in the country or out of it, attempting to have a hand, with the prospect of profit, in the work of developing the great North-West; and I am surprised that the hon. gentleman should have forgotten what very thin ice he walks on when he makes a speech of the kind he did. The hon. gentleman brought in the names of some of my hon. friends who sit behind me. Some of them, Mr. Speaker, have no more interest in these applications than you have, because they made them in the interest of their friends. I would ask you to look, for instance, at my hon. friend from Centre Toronto (Mr. Hay); does he look like a land shark or a land speculator. He was made, as I happen to know, the medium of communication for some of the people in his constituency, some of them very good political friends of hon. gentlemen opposite, who asked him to forward their application, and he as their representative did so. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman has attacked the policy of the Government on every possible ground. In the first place, he says the honest settler, the homesteader, is not protected. Who is protected in the North-West if the homesteader is not? He can go there and can select his land in any part of the country where it is open for settlement; he can choose according to his own fancy, whether the land is grazing land, heavy clay, or light loam; he can make his selection anywhere in that vast country, and he gets his land free. The sheriff cannot follow him, his creditors cannot follow him, no one can follow him; no matter whether he was an insolvent or not when he left the older Provinces of this country, or Europe, his property is protected there; he can begin a new life of usefulness, and will be surrounded with all the protections of the law that are possible. The hon. gentleman said that the colonization system and this vast system of railway monopoly, are going to swallow up that whole country. Why, Sir, that country is as large, nearly, as all Europe; and to say that two or three or fifty colonization companies, or twenty or thirty or fifty railway companies should be able to do that, is absurd—to use the hon. gentleman's Parliamentary language, is idiotic. The hon. gentleman especially objected to grants to railways. Does the hon. gentleman not remember when the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) sat at the head of the Government, and when he himself was, I do not say a slavish, but an obsequious follower of that hon. gentleman, that the Government introduced a Bill by which any fifteen men could build a railway from any point to any point in the North-West, and should receive a grant of 10,000 acres a mile? The Land Act also provided that all land must be sold at $1 an acre; and this Act of Mr. Mills provides that the Government, instead of giving these companies the land itself, may give them $1 an acre in money, that is, $10,000 a mile. That was the policy of the Government. I do not object to that policy; it is no part of my business to object to it now at all; but the hon. gentleman did not object to it, he did not then think that these railway monopolies were going to drive out the honest settler, and that the Government were handing over to speculative companies what ought to belong to the hardy sons of toil. Let me read from the debate on that occasion. There was considerable discussion, and my hon. friend from Northumberland (Mr. Mitchell) opposed the Bill in some of its clauses. But Mr. Charlton said:

"He considered this measure, notwithstanding the unmeasured denunciations it had received at the hands of the hon. member for Northumberland, was a statesmanlike measure and embodied a wise policy. It was essential to the development of the North-West that that country should be furnished with railways. The rivers flowing through that region all flowed to the northward, and thus this region had no natural highways to market as was furnished to the Western States by the Mississippi and the Great Lakes; and if railways were essential to the development of the Western States, they were tenfold more essential to the development of the North-West. It was useless to think of opening up and settling this country without furnishing it with railway facilities. Now, it had been said that the American railways were subsidized to a greater extent than necessary; perhaps that had, in some instances, been the case. Reference had been made to the Illinois Central Railway. At the time that road was projected, nearly the whole interior portion of the State was a wilderness. Farmers living fifty miles from Chicago were in the habit of teaming wheat to the market often, when the roads were bad, at a cost of one-half the value of the wheat. The country had a few struggling settlements in the interior, but there was no extent of population."

Is the hon. gentleman not describing our North-West?

"The country would never have been opened and settled as it has been, but for the construction of a system of railways, of which the Central was the chief. That railway had populated the vast prairie region."

Was it keeping the people out, driving away the homesteaders? No. This railway—

"had contributed in an important degree to make Illinois the third State in the American Union, with a population of over three millions. He recollected paying a visit to Iowa about twenty years ago. Then it had but a few miles of railway, and but a sparse population, chiefly located along the line of the Mississippi: yet by means of a liberal railway policy, by subsidizing several lines crossing the State from east to west, it had suddenly risen into an important State, with a population of nearly, if not quite, 1,500,000. Some of the railways had perhaps been subsidized more than was necessary, perhaps more land had been given than was advisable; but capitalists would not embark their money unless they had a prospect of a fair return, and it was folly to haggle with them about an unimportant difference, when important interests were at stake."

I could pick out a number of very choice morceaux in this speech, for the hon. gentleman was there as strong and as convincing as to the necessity, for the sake of settling the country, by subsidizing railways, as he was some years ago, that the only way to produce prosperity in this country was to adopt a system of protection to our native industries. But the hon. gentleman also says, not only the railways but the colonization companies. Well, there are a few of these companies and I consider that every one of them is for the advantage of the North-West. They have put in their capital as the railway speculators have put in theirs and built their railways—for it would be a folly, to use the language of the hon. gentleman, to haggle at any fair return that may be made by them. It may be idiotic; but I tell you, in carrying out the policy of establishing colonization companies, we only follow the example of his leader and the Government which he supported. The whole principle is laid down in the Act that was passed by that Government in 1874, the first Session they came into power. The hon. gentleman says under plan No. 1 we bring in middlemen. Well railways are middlemen and colonization companies are middlemen, but they are to be the agents, the means of assisting immigration, of bringing them out from the old countries or the older Provinces and showing them the land. The hon. gentleman says: You charge nominally $2, but you give a rebate of $1. Well, it must be remembered that by the law, until it was altered last year, the land could only be sold for $1 per acre. By the Dominion Lands Act the price of all lands open for sale was fixed at $1 per acre. What is our plan? We offer to colonization companies, after putting in capital and bringing in immigrants—and they can only get their money back by bringing in immigrants—land at $2 per acre, and for every immigrant they actually settle on the lands they get $1 back. The country therefore gets the original price fixed by the Government of hon. gentlemen opposite, and continued by us until a late day as being the nominal price of agricultural lands. What is the clause of the law as passed in 1874:

"If any person or persons undertake to settle any of the public lands of the Dominion free of expense to the Government, in the proportion of every family to each alternate quarter-section, or not less than sixty-four families in any one township"—

That is our system:

"Under the homestead provision of this Act hereby amended, the Governor in Council may withdraw any such township."

The hon. gentleman says, the land ought to be thrown open to the settler—no middlemen—at a reduced price, and charges us with introducing the policy of helping the speculator, the middleman, and the handing over to him the lands of the country. The policy established by the Government, supported by the hon. gentleman in that respect, I have shown most conclusively to be the same. We approved of it, because we have simply carried it out and developed it. As regards these colonization companies, I have not any doubt that those who have organized and paid in their money—in the first place, we get all the money the law ever contemplated—will be an efficient means of bringing immigrants into this country.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

They must have all their capital unless they bring in immigrants, when they will get $1 back on the $2 per acre they pay up. I wonder if any greater inducement could be offered by any Government to make these companies bring in immigrants. There was, as everyone knows, a boom, a craze, for colonization companies, and any amount of applications on their behalf. I will not condescend, as I have said before, to say whether these were Conservatives or Reformers, whether they belonged to one side or the other. I know, on going over the whole list, they belonged to both sides. There was a general idea in older Canada, that the North-West was an El Dorado, that gold could be raked up in the streets of Winnipeg. There were many applications, and the Government entertained every application backed by respectable men, whose names were a guarantee that it was bona fide and not a fraud. The Government entertained all the applications, but the conditions were so stringent and so well calculated to prevent speculation, and to prevent land sharks from obtaining wealth at the expense of the immigrant, that with these few exceptions the hon. gentleman has mentioned, the rest of the companies have failed to organize. After the first blush was over, the first furore was over, and on calmly considering the project of the Government, the majority of them said: We see there is no money to be made out of it. They never completed their applications, they never organized, and they never paid their money. But those companies who have done so, who have handed their money over and who can get it back, are now energetically proceeding; and I have occasion to know that some of the companies have their agents in Europe, and I have occasion to know that last year one of the companies brought out their immigrants and settled them within the one year. Some of them have not yet done so; but, at all events, we have got their money, and if they do not settle the immigrant upon this land, why, then, we have got the money, and we have got the lands for the homesteads. Now, Sir, as I have endeavored to explain, both in the last Parliament and in this, the effect of granting to the colonization companies a tract of land under plan No. 1 has not kept out a single homesteader. Every even-numbered lot in any one of the colonization grants is open to a homesteader; he can go in, and the company cannot keep him out. If the company brought him there and settled him there they will get the rebate for that man; if the man forces his way in against their consent they will not get the rebate. They are bound to settle men on even-numbered lots, and for every man they put on an even-numbered lot they will get a rebate of $1 an acre. So they are agents, just as the railway companies of the Western States were agents; all those companies that had large grants of land. There is only one railway yet of any importance, the Pacific Railway, but this and the other railways which are to be subsidized will get grants of land; and with the help of all these companies will the North-West be settled. The hon. gentleman says we should open the country, and let the people go in. Why, Mr. Speaker, after having made these large grants to the railway companies in the first place they are opening up the country, and all these companies, being anxious to get a return for their capital, are bringing immigrants out and are acting agents for that purpose, and without their help that country would never have been settled. Now, these colonization companies are doing precisely the same thing; they will do it, they must do it, or they will lose every farthing they have put into it; and the Government, under the supervision of this House, will force these companies to perform all the conditions under which they have got these grants. I say that the Government will compel them, force them, to perform their conditions under penalties which are provided by the regulations, by the utter forfeiture of all the advantages which they hope to gain. But the hon. gentleman objected to plan No. 2. Well, plan No. 2 has proved a failure; not one single company has been organized under it. And why? Because there was no money in it. As was explained to Parliament before, plan No. 2 provided that a party obtaining a grant under that plan should pay $2 for every acre, and in case they paid $2 in cash for the whole of the area, they were to get a rebate of one-half if they put on 128 immigrants, twice the number of settlers required under plan No. 1. The reason for adopting plan No. 2 was, that it had been represented to us that there were large capitalists in Europe and in Great Britain, who were desirous to get large tracts, and to bring out a body of their people and place them on that land. In order to assist them, plan No. 2 was adopted. But the regulations were so stringent, so much against the speculator, that although on the first blush nine applications were made, not one single company was organized under it, because there was no money in it. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman insinuated—he ventured to insinuate that all these arrangements were made before an election, and for election purposes; at the same time he quoted gentlemen on this side who did not want to be bribed; they were Conservatives, they had been Conservatives and would be Conservatives, grant or no grant. They were unworthy insinuations, but they were insinuations such as do not come unfrequently from that hon. gentleman. I do not think that those who surround him will feel themselves, or their party, elevated in public opinion, or in the opinion of those in their ranks, by an hon. gentleman who, from the best and most Parliamentary motives makes the basest and grossest insinuations. But it was before an election, forsooth! Why, Mr. Speaker, since 1874 a law was passed carrying out the same policy. We all know that there was a boom and a rush, and in order to check and regulate and restrict speculation, these negotiations were made. They were not wanted for the purpose of authorizing the Government to establish colonization companies, they were regulations so to restrict them that the settlement was sure and assured, that the land sharks should not get possession of the land under pretext of being a colonization company. They were regulations, not empowering the Government to establish companies, but they were passed to restrain and restrict the power that had been given and had run throughout the whole Statutes since 1874—I presume before that—but at all events under the Statutes, as I now have them before me, of 1874. So it was unworthy of the hon. gentleman to make such an insinuation, to make such a charge. But the hon. gentleman said also that we ought only to give those lands away to actual settlers. Why, we give every even-numbered lot in that country, we give them away for nothing. Railway lands we give to the railways, and they are paid for. We give lands to the Pacific Railway Company, and the even-numbered lots are no doubt, offered to the homesteader. “But,” says the hon. gentleman, “some lands are reserved.” Does not the hon. gentleman know that when the Government came to Parliament and asked the people to commit themselves to build the Canadian Pacific Railway; when the Government asked Parliament, as the representatives of the people, to undertake the burden of paying $25,000,000 in cash besides what had been expended previously on the road—does the hon. gentleman not know that in order to induce Parliament to undertake such an immense road, there was a reservation of 100,000,000 acres, and by Statute? And this 100,000,000 acres were pledged by Act of Parliament to be sold for the purpose of recouping to the taxpayers of the older Provinces the money they were advancing for the purpose of opening up and developing the great West. Of those 100,000,000 of acres, 25,000,000 are given to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and it is the duty of the Government as trustees—they are obliged to do it as faithful guardians of the public interests, and as provided for under the law of the land—to take 75,000,000 acres and to sell them to the best advantage and apply the money for the purpose of repaying what we are now paying out of the hard-earned money of the people for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. When we came down with our scheme I ventured to pledge myself, although I was told I was Quixotic and extravagant in my ideas, that the North-West country could build its own railways, that the soil was rich enough and the future people independent enough to desire that their own railways should be built by themselves, out of their own means, and we in the older Provinces were merely advancing money—on mortgage of those 100,000,000 acres; and I pledged myself that there would not be a single farthing taken from the pockets of the people that would not be returned from the proceeds of those lands. And therefore it was that we put into the market good land and offered it for sale on fair terms, and we hope, and in fact we know we will get good prices; and within the limitation of the existence of the present Parliament if it lasts its legal term there will be derived from the proceeds of these land sales sufficient to repay the people of Canada for all advances made in connection with that work. This was a wise and true policy, and yet it has been carpied at by the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) as being a corrupt arrangement, as being carried out for party purposes and objects, and as being an encouragement to speculators and land sharks to keep out immigration. Why, our policy is infinitely superior to the policy of the United States, and infinitely more liberal. We give 160 acres and preemption, and will do so for a year and a-half. The United States do not give both. They only give 160 acres. The settler may have either a preemption or a homestead, but he cannot have both; he may change his homestead for a preemption, but he cannot have both. We give homestead and preemption. Instead of five years residence and cultivation of the soil, we make a man a freeholder if he cultivates honestly and fairly his farm for three years. I say this policy is the true one. I do not at all claim a monopoly of credit for it; it was the sensible policy of the Government in 1870-71, so far as in that early embryonic stage of the North-West, we may be said to have had a policy. It was carried out by the former Government of which I was a member; it was carried out by hon. gentlemen opposite when in power, and it has been developed fully and perfectly, and made a complete system under the present Administration. But the hon. gentleman (Mr. Charlton) said there was favoritism in regard to timber limits. The law before 1874, and it was the law passed by the Administration of which I was formerly a member, was, that all timber limits should be put up to auction and should be disposed of to the highest bidder. Hon. gentlemen opposite, when they assumed office, altered that law and did away with the principle of offering timber limits for competition, and provided that timber limits should be given under the provisions that now obtain, namely: $5 a mile annually, and 5 per cent. on the gross receipts from the timber. The hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) was right in thus altering the law. He and the hon. members of his Government found out that in that new country, into which timber had to be brought from the United States, and which was dependent on Minnesota and Minneapolis mills for its supply, there was no means of inducing lumbermen to go there but by giving them liberal terms and coaxing them to go into the country. Before we went out of power in 1873 I had, after great difficulty, persuaded Mr. William J. Macaulay, whom everyone knows in the North-West—I had known him before, when he was a successful lumberer in eastern Canada—to go to the North-West, and I believe he has done very well, having made a competency, if not a fortune. I felt, to use the expressive language of the hon. member, that it was useless to haggle with him, as I was desirous of bringing down the price of lumber, from God knows what price, to a reasonable figure. The people want lumber. The Government said to any respectable man, whatever his name and antecedents—and I say distinctly, that the Government did not ask what his politics were—that if you can give to the Department reasonable assurance that you will carry out the undertaking, erect a saw-mill capable of cutting a certain quantity of lumber during the year, you will obtain a district. The only difference we made was that we altered the law allowing licenses for twenty-one years—a good many of such licenses were issued by hon. gentlemen opposite—and we limited them to one year only, at the same time intimating that, not as a matter of legal obligation, but as a matter of practice, we would carry out the practice existing so long, both in Ontario and Quebec, that unless public policy and other high interests demanded it, if the party performed all the obligations and paid rental and stumpage, he would get a renewal. That has been the policy of the Government, and it has been a true policy. The consequence was that the Government were saved the expense of surveys, for those lumbermen went into the country, took their surveyors with them, and did the work of explorers; they found where the lumber was, and some found after their licenses were granted that there was not sufficient lumber to make it worth while to execute their lease. Those explorers went all over the North-West; they found the lumber, as I have said, they got the area surveyed, they obtained a license; and if at the end of the year they had not fulfilled the conditions, they lost their license, but if they erected a mill there and fulfilled the conditions, who got the benefit of it? Why, the settlers going in there. Lumber is like the breath of life to them. Unless they get it they must remain without houses and the means of becoming settlers; and if the Government do not obtain one farthing of return in money, they will obtain a substantial return if, as a consequence of granting those timber licenses, the price of lumber shall be brought down within reasonable limits, so that settlers would not ruin themselves to obtain lumber to erect houses, and for other purposes. As regards timber licenses, most of the holders will find no money in them. The railway will be carrying lumber from Thunder Bay, the finest lumber in the world, into that country, within two years—at the end of this year, in fact—and so soon as, within five years, the line north of Lake Superior is finished. Recent discoveries show its timber to be very valuable. This timber is shown to be of good quality, and to exist to a great extent; and when this lumber is poured in from the east, and more than that, when the railway gets through the gorges of the Rocky Mountains, and the magnificent timber of British Columbia is poured in eastward, then we will find very many of these speculators, who have got hold of the Government, and bribed the Government, and been bribed by the Government, according to the hon. gentleman, by the enormous fortunes which they are going to make out of these licenses, coming back and begging us to take them off their hands, and to remit the dues, declaring they are ruined, and that they have lost money by their enterprises, which had proved mistaken and unfortunate. So I might go on at considerable length on this matter, but I do not think that I ought really to pay such a compliment to the hon. gentleman, who I see has introduced a resolution for the purpose of making an attack, which outside of this House would be called an ungentlemanly attack, on men sitting in the same society with himself, and in the same House, trying to drag their names before the public in order that these may be published in the Hansard, and in the newspapers, as not being independent members of Parliament. Independent! Heaven save the mark! That hon. gentleman talks of independence! I say it is paying him an undue compliment to delay longer on this subject. And now let us read the resolution which he says should be put in the Act. In the fifth line, sub-section one, section twenty-four, he desires this to be substituted:

“Provided that all sales of agricultural lands shall, unless under exceptional circumstances,—”

Now, this is to form part of an Act of Parliament—

“Applicable to particular lots,—”

I ask the hon. gentleman, who is to judge of the exceptional circumstances, what are the particular lots to which the exceptional circumstances are to be applied? Who is to be the judge of it? Why surely the hon. gentleman does not want that this corrupt Government, which bribes their friends, and which is bribed by their friends, shall be the judge of these exceptional circumstances! The hon. gentleman said, in his speech, that the Government is taking out of the hands of Parliament, what belongs to Parliament. I had always understood that according to the principles of the British Constitution, Parliament had to legislate and to legislate only; and it would be an abuse of the Constitution—and the law lays this down—it would be a fracture, a breach of the Constitution, whenever the Legislature would attempt to usurp the province of the Executive. That is the principle in the United States, and the hon. gentleman likes it. The Senate, one of the branches of the Legislature there, is a portion of the Executive. The hon. gentleman draws his inspiration from the United States. It was only the other day, on this Bill, that he said that the sections must be numbered from north to south; and why should we start from north to south? Why?—because they do it in the States. When we had a most magnificent system of arrangement of surveys in the world; when from Red River throughout Manitoba to the foot of the Rocky Mountains, we had one uniform system, so complete and so readily intelligible, that no man could make a mistake, the hon. gentleman said: “It is not so very good.” Why?—because they have it otherwise in the States, where they mark off Territories, and each Territory has its own survey and system. But this was what it ought to be, because they had it in the States. Well, when we belong to the States, we shall do as Statesmen do; but in the meantime, we will stick to the present system, which is perfect. I am not an expert in these matters myself; but let any geometrician or person connected with surveying and the arrangement of land be consulted, and he will say that our system is the finest in the world. We had the advantage of a country not broken up into Territories and States. We had complete control of the whole country, and consequently, we adopted this simple and magnificent system, which has been carried out. But it seems:

“That all sales of agricultural lands shall, unless under exceptional circumstances, applicable to particular lots—”

What lots? No. 1 or No. 2?

“Be made on condition of actual settlement by the purchaser.”

Well, the purchaser pays the money, and how will you compel him to settle. If he once pays the money, you cannot ask him to take it back. He will not do it. You must give him credit. The hon. gentleman wishes to allow a number of years to run, when the land is to be forfeited if he does not cultivate it. Then we can take it back; and last of all, we are to compel him to cultivate it. No, we do better than that. We give at least one-half of the whole country to the actual settler for nothing, and the balance is sold at the best price, the money going into the public treasury and being returned to the pockets of the people. Then, it is to “Be made on condition of actual settlement by the purchaser, and in quantities limited to the number of acres which can be reasonably occupied by one settler.”

Now, how much land can one man reasonably occupy? One man may reasonably occupy 10,000 acres if he has money enough; and if a poor cotter or crofter coming from his own country, or an Irishman from the west of Ireland, one acre may perhaps be a reasonable quantity. But the Government is to see to this. And this is the hon. gentleman's first attempt at Parliamentary legislation. This is a specimen of the Bill that the hon. gentleman will introduce when he is Minister of the Interior. This is a specimen of the legal acumen and power of drafting of the hon. gentleman! Why, this resolution, not to put it too strongly, is, to use the expressive language of the hon. gentleman, "idiotic," and there I leave it.

Mr. SPROULE. Before the motion is put I would like to say a few words, although I can scarcely hope to add one thing additional to the very able speech of the hon. First Minister. I think, on reading the resolution and drawing a few inferences relating to the speech made previous to six o'clock by the hon. member for Norfolk, one would be led to suppose that some great wrong was being perpetrated on the settler going into Manitoba and the North-West Territories. The comparison drawn as to what would be the result of the policy which is being carried out so successfully at the present time, and what would be the result from the change proposed by the hon. gentleman, is suggestive. I will only touch on a few points to which the hon. gentleman referred. He said that this system was an evil—worse than anything which had ever been introduced by the Canada Company of Ontario. Now, I happen to live in a part of the country where the Canada Company operated very largely; and I would like to ask the hon. gentleman and this House if they are aware of the conditions upon which land was sold by that company? They were these: The land was simply leased to a party for a term of years, and the occupant had to pay about four times as much as the Government was selling land for, and this had to be done before a certain number of years went by, sometimes four, sometimes six, and sometimes eight. If they fail to pay for the land inside of those years, then, no matter what improvements were made—they counted for nothing—the Canada Company took the lands into their own hands, and then they advanced it in price according to improvements. I know of cases where I am living in which land was originally bought for $4 an acre, and the farmer, after working hard upon it for seven years, could not meet the payments, the land was taken from him and raised to $12 an acre. I would ask if the poor settler in that case was any better off than the man who goes to the North-West and gets a homestead for $10, or whatever is the cost of making the necessary entries. I say that with regard to the Canada Company there is no comparison, because to-day it is almost impossible to buy from that company in the old settled portions of the country. I say that there are no evils connected with the land system of to-day which can at all compare with those which were felt under the sway of the Canada Company. I believe it was recognized by the past, as it is by the present Government that the North-West country should be settled up. The only difference between them was as to the best means of accomplishing that object. Let us compare the means adopted by the late Government with those which are employed by the present Administration. Two years ago we had occasion to examine before the Committee of Immigration and Colonization, gentlemen who were engaged in getting settlers into that country under the late Government—I refer to Mr. Prittie and Mr. Archibald Young of Sarnia. I have the evidence before me which was adduced in the Committee. He told the Committee that he was engaged under an agreement with the late Government, arranged by an Order in Council by which Mr. Young was to get 80 acres of land for every settler he put in the country. Had he brought these settlers from Europe we might have made no great objection, but his plan was to take settlers from Ontario and the other older Provinces, and to depopulate these Provinces by trans-planting the people to the North-West. In his evidence he did not tell us how many he had taken up in 1877, but in 1878 he took up 700; in 1879, 1,000; in 1881, 1,033; and these settlers were not placed as those colonization companies are placing them to-day, twenty miles from the railway, but wherever he could find a place for them; and for each settler he received eighty acres of land. I have gone into a calculation to ascertain how much land that would realize him, according to his own evidence, in three years, and I find that it was no less than 218,649 acres. He told us that this land was worth $6 an acre at least, so that the amount he received was $1,311,843 for the three years, or at the rate of $480 for each immigrant. We would consider that a dear figure even if he had brought the immigrants from Europe; but, as I said before, he thinned the population of the older Provinces for the purpose of settling up the North-West. I know that in every portion of my own county advertisements were put in the papers asking families to join Prittie's excursion, and I know that in my own neighborhood several families were taken to the North-West in this way. Some of these families had already sold out their property with the intention of going there, and yet, for every individual, they received eighty acres of good land in Manitoba. I say that, in comparison with such a system as this, colonization companies are a great advantage to the country, because they not only take up the settlers but they build mills, construct railways, open roads, and secure postal advantages, and many other conveniences. I think there is a very strong argument in favor of the present scheme, because, as we judge by the light of experience, many men are going up into that country and the country is being settled up. From 1875 to 1878 few men went into that country, and it was comparatively at a standstill. Now it is progressing more rapidly than any other country under the sun. There is no parallel in the civilized world to the advancement which that country has made within the last few years. The people who are going up there are forming nuclei of settlement away from the railway. An hon. member opposite said that the timber policy of the present Government was a bad one, because it allowed every man to go and get a limit and build a mill. If the hon. gentleman will look at the returns brought down from the Department of the Interior, he will find that very few mills have been built there—not more than one or two dozen within the last few years. The present regulations give fifty square miles to every man who goes in and manufactures the timber, but previously the quantity was 200 square miles, and it might be taken anywhere between Winnipeg and the Rocky Mountains. At present the settler gets the full advantage of these mills, which formerly were scattered at long distances throughout the country. What is it now? Lumber for building purposes can be got there now for from $18 to $35 a thousand. Why has the price come down? Because all these mills have been built, and millions of feet of lumber have been taken into the country. Again: Do the means of settlement require that a change should be made in the conditions of these leases? They are only for one year, so that there is every protection to the country under them; but formerly, when the leases were for twenty-one years, all the mills might be in one man's hands, and he could control all the lumbering operations in the North-West. At present, the erection of mills, and the increasing quantity of lumber produced every year, help the poor settler, and promote the interests of the country. This resolution says that there should be no middleman, but that the land should be sold for actual settlement; but several hon. gentlemen, including, I believe, the hon. gentleman himself, a few nights ago endeavored to induce the Government to grant land for cultivation, and not for settlement at all. I think some of the Manitoba members recommended that, when they knew that if it were done, an army of speculators would rush into Manitoba and the North-West, and would take up millions of acres of land, and would never settle on it. They would cultivate for awhile, and then sell it to any man who would give them the highest figure for it; and the settlers would be scattered all over the country, and be unable to make their roads, to build their schools and churches, and to enjoy that society which is always so desirable in the early history of a country. No matter from what standpoint you view these land regulations, compared with the old regulations, you see how those of the present Government contrast with those of their predecessors in the interest of the settler. They have expunged everything that appeared to be injurious; they have accepted all the good points and abandoned all the bad ones, and they have made others that appeared to be in the interest of the country, as from time to time they appeared requisite. Now, taking the arguments advanced by the members for Manitoba during the discussion on this Bill, I do not think there is a single one in harmony with the resolutions of the hon. member for North Norfolk. I do not think his own arguments or speeches in this House on former occasions are in consonance with the speech he has made to-day. I think he is as much out to-day as he was a few years ago, because our experience shows that the regulations are being properly carried out, not only in the interest of the pioneer settler, but for the development of the country, the returns to the Government, and the prosperity of the Dominion.

Mr. BERGIN. I am sorry to be obliged to ask the indulgence of the House for a little while, as I feel it due to myself and to others to make some remarks in reply to what has been said by the hon. member for North Norfolk. Although that gentleman used the plural "we," thereby professing to speak for gentlemen on the other side of the House, I am sure that there cannot be one who did not hang his head in shame when he heard the cruel, unfeeling, unnatural attack that that hon. gentleman made on the right hon. leader of the Government. Why, Sir, there is no man in Canada, no matter what his personal or political feelings may be, who can deny that that venerable statesman has done more not only than any man, but than all men in this Parliament for this country, and it ill became one with the record of the hon. member for North Norfolk to make such an attack, either on the right hon. leader of the Government, or on any member of this House. What is his record for consistency? Consult the Hansard and see if there be a question on which he has not spoken on both sides. We do not forget that in the year 1876 a Colonization Bill was brought in by the then Minister of the Interior, and that that Bill was supported by the hon. member for North Norfolk. The right hon. leader of the Government quoted to-night from the speech of the hon. member on that occasion, and I shall take the liberty of quoting from it also. Remember, Sir, that this hon. gentleman, at the opening of his speech, deprecated, as he does on all occasions when insinuating slanders on gentlemen on this side of the House, anything of party feeling, and he used the same words in 1878 that he used to-night. He said on that occasion: "He hoped hon. gentlemen would not look at this matter in any party light." How has he treated it to-day? Had he anything but the vilest party motive in the speech he made? "He trusted they would not oppose the policy in order to gain a temporary advantage over the Government." From what other motive did he make that speech, and move that resolution, which was so justly characterized by the right hon. leader of the Government as idiotic. "But that they would view it from the broad standpoint of our national interest." Let me ask what interest, national, local, personal, or political, could be served by such a vile diatribe as that which he addressed to the House this afternoon? He went on to say that, "They would look with statesmanlike forethought to what were the real interests of Canada, and accord to this measure the generous support which it most certainly deserved." Has he who dared to speak this afternoon—not from a patriotic, but from a party point of view—has he viewed this question as he said it ought to be viewed, and given it the generous support he said it deserved? Far from it. In that usual hypocritical style that characterizes him, he dared to asperse the character of the right hon. leader of the Government with a dishonesty that no one else—

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. SPEAKER. I must request the hon. member to withdraw those words.

Mr. BERGIN. If the words that I have used are unparliamentary, I apologize to the House; but it must not be forgotten that it was in the heat of the moment, smarting under a baseless attack made upon me, I used the somewhat strong expression. When I call the attention of the House to the fact that when this hon. gentleman dared to charge me with having made ten applications for coal lands, in order that the House and the country might be led to believe that I had made these applications in my own interest, he knew he was insinuating that which was not correct; and let me say that the majority of the men for whom I made application—for I had not a particle of interest in their applications—belonged to his side of the House and not to this. The same may be said with regard to the applications made by the hon. member for Lincoln. If anything could show the dishonest style of attack which was made upon that hon. gentleman, and upon me, in connection with this matter, it would be the manner in which he gave to the House the letter written by that hon. gentleman to the right hon. leader of the Government. Who would suppose, on hearing the hon. gentleman this afternoon, but that the hon. member for Lincoln had asked the right hon. leader of the Government to give him coal lands and timber limits in reward for services he proposed to render at the election. Everybody understood—in fact the hon. gentleman said directly, and it was almost the only direct charge he made—that hon. members of Parliament received these coal lands and timber limits in reward for political services rendered at the elections, and that these regulations were framed for the purpose of inducing hon. members and others to support the Government during the elections. I find, upon looking at this letter to the right hon. leader of the Government, which ought not to have been brought down, for it was a private letter, that it was dated after the elections—

Mr. CHARLTON. So I said—June 29th.

Mr. BERGIN. Eight days after the election. Here is the letter. I will read it to the House to show how unfair was the manner in which this matter has been treated by the hon. gentleman. The letter is as follows:—

"MY DEAR SIR,—Will you kindly endeavor to have the Order in Council granted for the coal licenses in the Souris District, for which I sent an application, a list of which I herewith enclose."

A list of the names of his constituents who had through him—the proper party—applied for coal licenses.

"Our people are very desirous of leaving here next week to explore and take immediate action."

They had only waited until the election was over, I suppose, according to the hon. gentleman.

"I have applied for a timber license for St. Thomas, or on the English River, which I was informed by Mr. Ryley, was first. Will you please urge this present at the same time"

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It was the first application you see.

Mr. BERGIN.—

"What do you think of the National Policy? They tried hard to defeat me."

Now, he was jubilant over the carrying of the election, as showing that hon. gentlemen opposite had as usual prophesied falsely, and made statements they knew were not correct, and he says they tried very hard to defeat him. Yet the hon. member for North Norfolk tried to lead the country to believe, that because they had tried hard to defeat the hon. member for Lincoln, the right hon. leader of the Government should assist him with a timber limit to defray his expenses. That is the way the hon. member for North Norfolk distorts and twists public documents in the interest of his party, whilst exclaiming that he was speaking patriotically, and asking the House not to view this question in a party light. As regards the attack the hon. gentleman made upon myself, I could, I think, afford to treat it with contempt; but I have a constituency—a constituency which I think has a regard for the character of its representative, a constituency on which I hope never by act or word of mine to bring discredit or dishonor in any way. I hope that I shall never forget that, holding the position of a member of the House of Commons of Canada, I am here, not alone as an individual, with my own individual character to preserve, but as representing a great county which I must not discredit or disgrace by any act or word of mine. This hon. gentleman disapproves of the land policy. He says we have too many railways, and that there is not an acre of land in the North-West on which to settle; that we have been giving away the lands. A while ago, I told you there was not a question that came before this House since the hon. member for North Norfolk has had the honor of a seat here, upon which he has not spoken on both sides. He says that we are giving away the lands, that we are not getting enough for them, and that we have too many railways; but in 1878, he said:

"The United States Government held the alternate sections, which were reserved within the limits of railway land grants, at double the price of lands outside the limits of railway grants, and more distant for railway communication. These lands were denominated double minimum lands, and sold as readily at $2.50 per acre as other land did at $1.25; and the result of railway land grants, so far as land sales were concerned, was, that the Government had actually received as much for its lands as it would have been likely to have done if the whole area had been sold at the ordinary Government prices. Now, in the North-West there were involved millions of acres of land. They were told by the hon. member for Northumberland that this was the heritage of Canada, that it had been bought by the people's money; but in its present shape, of what value was this great, wild, lone land to us? The question was, how that land should be utilized, and for that purpose the hon. Minister of the Interior had devised a Bill which, in its conception, was admirable, and which, in his opinion, would, if carried out, attain the object of populating this vast country."

And what was this admirable Bill? The right hon. leader of the Government described it awhile ago—a Bill that placed in the hands of fifteen land sharks and railway speculators the power to gobble up all the important sections of the North-West; and if I were disposed to insinuate, if I were disposed so to degrade my position as to follow the example set me by the hon. member for North Norfolk, I might create a sensation in this House by calling to mind what has occurred on the other side of the line, that country which the hon. gentleman loves so well, and from which he draws his inspiration when he brings before this House—he, that great moral Reformer—measures which he thinks ought to be passed here because similar ones were passed in the United States. But I shall spare him. I do not know that I ought to pursue this subject much further. But I cannot avoid saying a word or two in regard to the timber limits of which this hon. gentleman seems to think hon. gentlemen on this side of the House have too many. We all know that the regulations under which the timber limits are granted by the present Government are those under which the hon. member for East York (Mr. Mackenzie) granted timber licenses during his regime. We all know those timber regulations were framed by him. Who that read the return brought down last year, asked for by the hon. member for West Durham, but must have noticed that out of twenty-six or twenty-eight licenses that were granted to cut timber, twenty-two of the berths were granted to Grits; and yet, Sir, we are to be told that upon this side of the House we have been robbing the timber lands of this country. Why, Sir, has he forgotten that only a day or two before the right hon. gentleman at the head of the Government came into power upon the resignation of the hon. member for East York, 200 miles of the best limits in the North-West were given away—given away to the present member for Simcoe and the member for Selkirk? Who forgets, too, that these timber limits were not given en bloc, as they were given by the right hon. gentleman, but they were given in small parcels, with the privilege of selecting them wherever they chose. In fact, the whole of the North-West timber was given over to these two gentlemen, and for twenty-one years, and we have never from that day to this, heard a word of rebuke of that conduct by the hon. member for North Norfolk—the man who stands up in this House to-day and says, that upon great questions of this kind, we should throw aside party and speak and vote as patriotic Canadians. And we require, the hon. gentleman says, at the head of the Department of the Interior, not a worn-out, feeble old intellect, like that of the right hon. Premier, but we require a young and vigorous intellect like his. I ask this House, after listening to the right hon. gentleman to-night, and to the hon. gentleman this afternoon; and I ask the country, after they shall have read the two speeches, wherein his head is not as clear, his intellect as bright, his power of speech as great, as it was when he first entered Parliament, and his character as high, not only in Parliament, not only in the country, but throughout the civilized world? And the contrast with the hon. gentleman opposite, I leave with the country to make.

Mr. SUTHERLAND (Selkirk). I just wish to correct the hon. gentleman who has spoken. I wish him to understand, and this House to understand, that I never made an application nor received a timber limit from the Mackenzie Government in my life.

Mr. BERGIN. Well, I am most unfortunate, it appears, in my allusions to the hon. member for Selkirk. The other night I mistook him for the member for L'Esperance; to-night it appears I gave him credit for that which was due to his brother.

Mr. CHARLTON. I am aware that if I say anything this time it must be by the courtesy of the House. But as attacks have been made upon me, and representations that are misleading, I claim the privilege of correcting them.

Mr. RYKERT. I rise to a point of order; he has already spoken.

Mr. SPEAKER. The question is upon the amendment of the hon. member for North Norfolk.

Mr. CHARLTON. Do I understand that the gag laws are to be applied to me?

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman knows that it is by the courtesy of the House if he is heard. It is not for me to decide.

Mr. CHARLTON. Three members have spoken on that side, and representations have been made with regard to myself to which I ought to have a chance of replying.

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. gentleman will have another opportunity.

Mr. LANDERKIN. I move the adjournment of the debate.

Mr. CHARLTON. In speaking upon this question I may be allowed to allude to one or two matters, perhaps not strictly pertinent to the motion for adjournment, but connected with it. If the First Minister had treated my remarks fairly I should not have sought this opportunity of replying briefly to what he said. He attempted upon the very start to mislead the House, and mislead the country.

Mr. SPEAKER. I must ask the hon. gentleman, in any remarks he makes, to use parliamentary terms. He must know that it is unparliamentary to say that any hon. gentleman has attempted to mislead the House.

Mr. CHARLTON. I stand corrected. I certainly intended to use no terms offensive to the hon. gentleman, or to the House, but I am dealing with the fact, that the hon. gentleman's language was calculated to convey an erroneous impression as to the course I took in the remarks made to this House. The hon. gentleman asserted that I had attacked the system of railway grants. I made no attack of the kind. I merely alluded incidentally to the fact that railway grants had been made. In criticising the policy of the Government in making large grants to the colonization companies, I incidentally mentioned that between grants of this kind, and grants to railway companies, I feared the public domain would be exhausted, and that was all I said with reference to railway grants. I made no attack upon that policy; but the hon. gentleman, building that foundation, proceeded to make a speech, to quote my speech of some years ago with reference to Bill introduced into this House by the hon. David Mills, a Bill styled the Colonization Railway Bill, a Bill which I supported, which I spoke in favor of, which I deemed then, and still deem to have been a proper and rightful measure. Now, Sir, as the character of that Bill has been called in question, and as my language upon that Bill has been cited here, let us enquire for a moment what were its features. Sir, it was a Bill that provided for the construction of railways in the North-West, not all east and west, not all leading to the one centre and under one monopoly, but a Bill for building railways in any direction that the wants of that country might require; a Bill that provided for subsidizing these railway lines by a grant not exceeding twenty sections per mile in the Peace River region, and not exceeding twelve sections per mile in that section of the country now being developed. The maximum grant in the Peace River district would be 12,800 acres to the mile, and in the other district 8,680 acres to the mile. But these are the gentlemen calling that Bill into question who have subsidized a road by granting 12,500 acres of selected land to the mile, and by granting $12,500 in cash to the mile, and by giving in addition 730 miles of road, the most expensive in the North-West, together with the monopoly of the carrying trade of the North-West, and upon conditions so odious that the country, when it comes to understand them, will pronounce these men to have been derelict in their duty, and to have failed to protect the interests of the country. This is the comparison made, a comparison between that Bill granting at the utmost 12,800 acres to the mile in the Peace River region, and twelve sections to the mile in the country now being traversed by railways; these are the hon. gentlemen that make this comparison with their scheme for granting these sums of money and creating this great monopoly, granting 25,000,000 acres of selected land in the North-West. I do not wonder that the hon. gentlemen sought to divert attention from that Bill, but I do wonder at their making the comparisons they did make in this matter. I have nothing to retract in the speech I made then. I stand by the principles enunciated in that speech. The hon. gentleman, in quoting that speech, thought to create a false impression in this House—

Mr. SPEAKER. Order! I beg the hon. gentleman to withdraw that expression.

Mr. CHARLTON. I did not use that word in the sense of designed falsehood, but I say an incorrect impression, an impression not in accordance with the facts of the case. The right hon. gentlemen then proceeds to charge me with having made insinuations—mean, cowardly, wanton, dastardly—with regard to this policy, with regard to the effects of this policy that he has adopted, in placing the timber limits in the hands of those who applied for them without competition, in placing coal leases in the hands of those who applied for them without competition, and in making these colonization grants at half-price. I believe honestly and conscientiously from my inmost soul, that the interests of the country are threatened by this policy; I believe that policy adopted by hon. gentlemen opposite is one not calculated to foster the interests of this country, and I believe it is my duty as an independent member of Parliament, as the representative of a riding in this Dominion, to denounce this policy, and I do denounce it, and will denounce it. I do not do it for the satisfaction it affords me, for it is a painful duty to discharge. I believe this policy is calculated to bring the country into great and serious difficulties, and for that reason I denounce it. I have made no charges against any one. I gave a list of certain members who, either on their own behalf, or as agents, made application for coal land leases, and I did not seek to create a false impression as to those members, and I did not create such an impression. The hon. the First Minister, after making a misleading quotation as to the course I took with respect to denouncing railway grants, when I did not denounce them at all, and only mentioned them incidentally, attempted—I am sorry to see a man in his eminent position stoop to play on the Yankee string—to accuse me of drawing my inspiration from the United States, mentioning a circumstance in connection with the discussion in the Committee, in which I asked why a system of numbering the townships diametrically opposite to that of the United States had been adopted. The hon. gentleman says I drew my inspiration from the United States. Where did he draw his land system from? He copied his land system from that of the United States, the system of sections, townships, ranges, and in order that it might not be a slavish imitation, he changed the American system of numbering sections from north to south to one from south to north. Yet the hon. gentleman rises in his place and accuses me of having sought to introduce something copied from the United States with respect to the land system—a beautiful specimen of guilelessness on the part of the hon. gentleman. It is an old saying that, when you have no case, abuse the plaintiff's attorney. I regret that the hon. gentleman—I cannot say he has no case—was driven to abuse the plaintiff's attorney in this matter. I come to my hon. friend, the hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Bergin), who endeavored to justify the hon. member for Lincoln, and read that letter, and said I had attempted to convey the impression to this House that it was written before the elections. I quoted the date of that letter when I read it. I stated that the hon. gentleman, in that letter, had asked the hon. First Minister what he thought of the National Policy now, and why he should introduce that reference in an application for a coal lease and timber lease. I cannot understand; perhaps he thought he might convince the hon. Minister that he had fought the good fight, that he had kept the Tory faith, and now was entitled to his timber lease, and such rewards, for his labor. This was what I stated, and it cannot be said that I read the letter and endeavored to show that it was written before the election. With respect to the patriotic motives of the hon. member for Lincoln (Mr. Rykert), it is not a pleasure to allude to this; but when the denial is made that the hon. member for Lincoln had any personal motives in this matter, it is well that the facts should be known. I want to know if the hon. gentleman did not negotiate the transaction in connection with the timber limit in the Cypress Hills? I want to know if he did not, as agent for other parties, get a timber limit there at $5 a square mile, and sell it at $2,000 a square mile ?

Mr. RYKERT. No.

Mr. CHARLTON. I want to know if he did not get that on behalf of one Adams; if he did not go to Winnipeg in person and sell it to Louis Sand of Michigan ?

Mr. RYKERT. No.

Mr. CHARLTON. I want to know if the price was not $200,000; if $90,000 was not paid in cash, one-third of which he put in his pocket ?

Mr. RYKERT. I did not.

Mr. CHARLTON. I tell this House that the policy of the Government in placing such temptations in the way, is wrong. Members of Parliament should not be subjected to temptation of this kind, and I denounce the Government's policy for that reason. Those hon. gentlemen acted probably as other hon. gentlemen would have acted. I do not say one party is purer than another, or assert that purity is all on one side, and dishonesty on the other; but I say that the policy of the Government is wrong, and I condemn that policy as producing these fruits. I have but one word more to say. The hon. member for Cornwall (Mr. Bergin) accused me of having spoken in a disparaging tone of the First Minister. I deny it. He says that I described him as having an old, feeble intellect. I said nothing of the kind. I complimented the hon. gentleman on the remarkable preservation of his intellectual and physical qualities. I complimented him on the fact, that for a man of his years, he was remarkable for his physical and intellectual vigor; but I said that the duties of the offices of Minister of the Interior and Premier, united in one person, were too much for any man in the prime of life, with full physical vigor, and too much for the hon. gentleman, and the consequence was, that important duties were performed by clerks and subordinates, that these men played ducks and drakes with the interests of a great empire which should be placed in the hands of the House. This is what I said with respect to the hon. First Minister. If I have given offence to any hon. member, I did it unintentionally, and I admit I am in the wrong. It is true I spoke warmly, for I feel warmly on this subject. I do not desire, however, to wound the feelings of any hon. member, and would not willingly do so; but I must condemn the policy of the Government, and the fruits of that policy, and if in doing so I am obliged to refer to actions of members of the House in the illustration of my point, I am only sorry I am compelled to do it.

Mr. RYKERT. The hon. gentleman has asked me several questions, and I propose now to answer them. I neither directly nor indirectly drew the money he spoke of, nor put any sum in my pocket except professional fees, and professional fees only. I deny that I negotiated any timber lease for Mr. Adams, or any other person. On the contrary, Mr. Adams had his own agents to negotiate for him; he made his own bargain, and I had nothing to do with it, and did not pocket the money the hon. gentleman has spoken of. On the contrary, I advised Mr. Adams not to dispose of the limit, but to work it. The hon. gentleman on several occasions has made remarks outside of the House to the same effect, and I am glad now to have an opportunity to give it an emphatic denial. The hon. gentleman, through every county in the Province, has used as an argument against the Government, that limits have been sold for $5 a square mile, when, as a matter of fact, he knew the statement was not correct, and if he did not know it he should have known it. The hon. gentleman knew right well what the regulations were, that they were framed by his own party when in power, and carried out by it, and that they did not provide for the sale of limits absolutely, but, on the contrary, provided for the payment of $5 per square mile annually, and 5 per cent. on the gross receipts from the limits. The hon.

gentleman has attempted to convey to the House, and through it to the country, the impression that the Government had sold limits out-and-out for $5 per square mile, which was not the case. I hope the hon. gentleman will not, in future, be so ready to retail slanders through the country. I am not ashamed to have the whole matter investigated; if he desires to have a Committee of Investigation to see how much I did make, I shall be most happy to give him an opportunity of so doing.

Motion to adjourn withdrawn.

Bill read the third time and passed.

THE SECRETARY OF STATE.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I wish to ask a question, which interests this House, and more particularly the Province of Quebec. Perhaps the Government will be able to tell us when we will have the pleasure of seeing the Secretary of State. That hon. gentleman is on his return, and we would like very much to see him on the floor of the House, especially before the close of this Session.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I can only inform the hon. gentleman that I will be very glad indeed to have the advantage of the presence of my colleague during the remainder of the Session, but it is quite uncertain that his health will allow him to be here before prorogation.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee.

136. Steam communication on Lakes Huron and Superior..... $10,000.00

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). What company is subsidized on these lakes?

Mr. CARLING. The Canadian line, at Sarnia, receives $6,000 a year, and two lines of steamers running from Collingwood receive each $2,000 a year.

Mr. ROSS. Between what points do the Collingwood steamers ply?

Mr. CARLING. One steamer plys between Collingwood and Sault Ste. Marie and Thunder Bay, and the other one runs to Parry Sound and to the different ports on Georgian Bay.

138. Steam communication with the Magdalen Islands $7,800.00

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Is this communication carried on by the same line of steamers which did this service last year?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. There is no arrangement made for next year, but I presume it is the same.

140. To provide for one year's subsidy, to be granted at the rate of $50,000 per annum, to line of steamers to trade between Canada and West Indies and Brazil, provided a like amount be paid by the Brazilian Government..... $50,000.00

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Notwithstanding the very liberal appropriation which was made, this has been found rather a losing operation for the company connected with the service. The same company have a line of steamers, which they propose to put on, connecting France with the Maritime Provinces in the winter, and with Montreal in summer. The proposition is to make an arrangement to give the company $25,000 or $75,000 in all for a monthly line between France and Canada, and between Canada and Brazil. Mr. Bentley is now on his way to France, and I have no doubt that by this subsidy we will be able to establish a direct line between France and Canada, and Canada and Brazil, consisting of a superior class of boats. By this arrangement it will not only cost $25,000 for the service between Canada and France, but we ask for $50,000, because it may be possible during the summer to make fortnightly trips.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). What port in Canada is to be the port of call?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Montreal during the summer, and Halifax during the winter.

Mr. BLAKE. What are the arrangements between Halifax and Brazil?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I have a memorandum from the Auditor-General, that under the contract made with that company, if they have a May and June trip they will probably earn $40,000 and not $50,000, because they have not carried out the trip.

Mr. BLAKE. Is it a certain rate per trip?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. No; it is a certain proportion at the rate of twelve trips to the year to Brazil.

Mr. BLAKE. How long is the arrangement to extend?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The proposition is that it shall extend for five years.

Mr. BLAKE. It is not intended to make a binding bargain except subject to the approval of Parliament?

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. No.

141. For subsidy to line of steamers to run fortnightly between France and Quebec, provided the French Government appropriate $50,000 for the same service..... $50,000.00

Mr. BLAKE. I would suggest that after what the hon. gentleman has stated, that there may be the same difficulty in carrying out this arrangement.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The Canadian Government practically did it in an indirect form under the bounty they gave to French vessels.

Mr. BLAKE. The only authority to give the grant is on condition of the Government appropriating $50,000.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. They gave it according to the mileage; but I have no objection to substituting the words "equal to that contributed by Canada," and strike out the words "$50,000."

Mr. BLAKE. Has the hon. gentleman calculated what the mileage would be which would come out about equal to this sum?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I am not at present able to answer the hon. gentleman, but the subsidy will be for a limited number of years.

142. For subsidy to line of steamers to run between Liverpool and St. John, N. B., and Liverpool and Halifax, N.S..... $2,500.00

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. This vote was taken last Session and the year before. The year before, I am sorry to say, circumstances were very unfortunate, as the steamer was lost and the company has not been reorganized. Arrangements were made that if they ran eight trips they would have $1,500 for each trip, or $12,000 for the year; but they ran only one trip. Arrangements are now in course of completion by which another company are in communication with this company by which a line of steamers will leave St. John, call at Halifax, and on returning call at Halifax and St. John. By this means the farmers of these two Provinces will be enabled to export their produce. There will be an opportunity for farmers and others wishing to export cattle and produce from these two Provinces, such as they have not had before. It is, therefore, proposed to continue the vote in case these companies will be in a position to avail themselves of it.

Mr. WELDON. Will the same class of steamers be on the route as before?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. If these companies go on, they will have a better class.

Mr. WELDON. Will they be allowed the option of going to London?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. Yes; to Liverpool or London.

Mr. BLAKE. Is this compact intended to extend over a period of years?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. No; it is only made from year to year.

144. For steam communication between Cape Oanso and Port Hood, daily, touching at railway terminus, Port Mulgrave, and such other places within above limits as may be agreed upon... $3,000.00

Mr. BLAKE. I am informed that it was stated last year that Captain Beatty had offered to perform this service for $4,000, and that his offer was refused. I would like to know who has the contract, were tenders asked for, how many months of service is required during the season, and how often are the contracts made?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I am under the impression that the arrangements are made with Captain Beatty for next year. I will state it on Concurrence.

147. To provide for a subsidy of $1,500 a voyage, for five voyages, of steamers from Prince Edward Island to Great Britain or Continental ports.... $7,500.00

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. The steamer that was formerly employed on this service has been sold, and this appropriation may not be required, but the Government thought it best to place the sum in the Estimates so that the people of the Island, if they could get a vessel, would have the benefit of it.

Mr. DAVIES. I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Finance whether he has had time to consider a memorial submitted to him from a number of representative men in the Maritime Provinces in favor of a subsidy for a steamer sailing between the Maritime Provinces and the West India Islands, and whether it is his intention to put a sum in the Estimates this year to provide for that service?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. That is one of the subjects which the Government have still under their consideration.

148. For steam communication from Halifax to Murray Harbor and Charlottetown alternately..... $3,000.00

Mr. DAVIES. Is there a contract for this service for a term of years, or is it arranged from year to year?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I think it is from year to year. Most of these arrangements are made from year to year.

Mr. DAVIES. The reason I ask is, that there has been a movement among some of the merchants to get the vessel to call at Souris, as well as at Murray Harbor. The matter is still open for this year.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I cannot say positively, but I know of no contract for next year. The proposition has been made by the Belgian Consul at Montreal, to establish a monthly line between Antwerp and Canada, going to Montreal, for seven trips in the year, and to Halifax and St. John the other five. The papers in connection with this have been laid before the House some time ago, and hon. members will therefore be in possession of the nature of the arrangements. He is communicating with the Star Line, I think. This is a very strong company, having steamers now plying between Antwerp and New York, and it is proposed to place upon the route a superior class of steamers, capable of carrying immigrants, because one of the objects of this appropriation is to obtain from that country as large an immigration as possible. Another company have made a proposal concerning which negotiations have been closed, and all that is required is the signing of the contract. The party, I believe, is on his way out now for the purpose of communicating with the Government, and ascertaining whether we can arrange for a contract for five years, which will give us a fortnightly trip between Antwerp and Canada, and a port in Germany and one in Canada. Their proposition, I think, is to leave Montreal in the summer, and Halifax in the winter. There have been some negotiations and a good deal of correspondence, which has been laid on the Table of the House, as to the privilege of taking part of their cargo at an American port, then completing at Halifax or St. John; but giving the preference to the Canadian ports, so as to ensure that all the cargo ready there shall be taken away. The scale of rates of freight will be the same at Halifax as those paid in the United States port, so that we will not be under any disadvantage in this respect. As a rule the freights from American ports are lower than they would be from Halifax or St. John, when there is only a limited quantity of freight, but it is arranged the freights shall be the same. It has been found, so far, that we have not fit cargoes for the steamers in our ports in the winter, and to obtain these arrangements at anything like a moderate sum, we had to make the concession, though we fought hard against it, that the steamers should take part of their cargoes at an American port.

Mr. BLAKE. Was any application made to the German Government with a view of ascertaining whether they would contribute?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. We were led to believe the German Government were not anxious to send out their people as immigrants, and it would be useless to ask them to contribute.

Mr. McCRAANEY. Is it the intention of the Government to provide a small subsidy for a line of steamers from Hamilton and the Welland Canal to Point Lewis, to intersect the Intercolonial Railway?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. I have just had placed in my hands an argument on the subject, but have not yet taken it up.

151. Maintenance and repairs of Steamers Napoleon III., Druid, Newfield, Sir James Douglas, Northern Light, and Le Canadienne..... $125,000.00

Mr. BAKER. Out of this sum what will the Sir James Douglas cost for repairs?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. About $7,000 or $8,000.

Mr. BLAKE. In 1876 she cost over $19,000; in 1877, over $16,000; in 1878, over $12,000; in 1879, $8,000; in 1880, nearly $10,000; in 1881, nearly $12,000; in 1882, a little over $11,000. Is it intended to repair the Northern Light, or replace her by another steamer.

Mr. BOWELL. The Department is to repair her for next season's work.

Mr. WELDON. With regard to the vessel to replace the Glendon, my impression is that, last year, it was understood that a vessel called the Fox Hound was purchased. What has become of her?

Mr. BOWELL. The Fox Hound was purchased, and her name was changed to Le Canadienne, but she was not purchased to take the place of the Glendon. The vessel to replace the Glendon will cost about $55,000 when completed. $29,500 is all that is required now. The engine will be extra.

153. To provide for the examination of Masters and Mates..... $5,000.00

Mr. BAKER (Victoria, B.C.) Is that increase of $750 intended to meet the expense incidental to the examination of masters and mates of coasters?

Mr. BOWELL. It is proposed to extend that service to the inland waters, and it will, consequently, cost about that amount.

Mr. PLATT. Can the hon. gentleman inform us with any precision where examinations will be held? It will be necessary for the convenience of master sailors that they should not be called a long distance, and if examinations can be held at various points, as we are given to understand will be the case, it will be a great convenience indeed to the sailors. The chief complaint I have heard since the law was amended, is, that the sailors are afraid they may be called to Ottawa, or some distant point, at great expense.

Mr. BOWELL. The object of the $750 additional is to provide for the travelling expenses of examiners, in order to meet the cases to which my hon. friend has referred. They go to different parts of the country in order that those who desire to be examined may not be put to the travelling expenses to which he refers. I cannot just now say definitely where the examinations will be held, but they will be at points easily reached.

154. For purchase of Life Boats, Stations, and Life-preservers; maintenance of crews, and rewards for saving life..... $5,000.00

Mr. DODD. I would like to ask the hon. Minister if it is the intention of the Government to provide life-saving stations on the coast of Cape Breton? As he well knows, we are surrounded entirely by the waters of the Atlantic. Shipwrecks are frequent on our coast, and yet, I think, there is not on the whole Island one establishment where we can procure a life-boat. Within the last few years we have seen a ship wrecked on the coast in presence of hundreds of people, but with no means for rescuing her. I was told the other day by the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries that they expected the fishermen to do the life-saving work of our coast. They can do so, but not efficiently. On the occasion I mentioned a boat was manned to go to the rescue of this ship, and out of a crew of six four were lost. I think, that out of this vote a sum should be taken to erect at least one or two life-saving stations upon our coast.

Mr. GORDON. I would like to draw the attention of the Minister to the necessity that exists for a similar station at the entrance to the Straits of Juan de Fuca. Shipwrecks frequently occur there, sometimes attended with loss of life. At present, the United States Government have a small station there, manned, I think, by Indians, and perhaps one or two white men. It has occurred to me, and I thought I would mention it to the Minister, that arrangements might be made with the United States Government to have an international life-saving station at this point. I think it would lessen the expense, and would certainly prove very valuable to the commerce in those waters.

Mr. SMALL. I would also like to ask the Minister for the charge of the life-boat on the Island in Toronto Harbor.

Mr. BOWELL. This is intended to include the continuance of that service. The Department has taken over the life-boat from the city of Toronto, and they propose to take a portion of this money in order to maintain that service. In reply to the hon. member for Cape Breton (Mr. Dodd), I may say, that I believe there are two life-saving stations at present, one of which is at Sable Island. The intention is to extend this service. The amount spent last year was $2,212, and it is proposed to increase the vote to $5,000. However, I will see that the attention of the Department is called to the suggestion made by the hon. member for Cape Breton, as well as to that made by my hon. friend for Vancouver Island. It is a subject well worthy of the consideration of the Government, and if any arrangements can be made by which the American life-saving service could be utilized with the addition of our own, I assure the House the Government is alive to the necessity of assisting as much as possible in preventing accidents.

Mr. WELDON. The system in the United States is an admirable one, and I should like to see it extended to our coast; but I am afraid we will be unable to accomplish it except at great expense. I would suggest that a system of liberal rewards be instituted. The men of Nova Scotia and New Brunswick are perfectly ready to volunteer their aid to save life, but it would be gratifying if the Government would establish a very liberal system of rewards, as these are poor men. I desire to know from the Government whether the steamers belonging to the Government are directed to proceed at once to wrecks, in case of disaster, and render assistance. In the United States, the revenue cutters, so soon as they hear of vessels being in distress, to whatever flag they may belong, go and render assistance, and that gratuitously. The timely assistance of American revenue cutters has been of great advantage in the saving of property and life. I do not see why the same system should not be applied to our Government steamers.

Mr. PLATT. Every hon. member will be pleased if the request of the hon. gentlemen can be complied with. But I think when we come to analyze the grant made last year and Mr. Dodd.

the extra grant made for life-saving service this year, it will be found that the Government are unable to comply with the request. I presume the Government intend that the same amount granted last year, $3,000, will be consumed in the same manner as last year, in keeping up the life-boats then in use and granting rewards for saving life. If that is to be so consumed, there remains only $2,000 to provide for the increased efficiency of the service; and I am given to understand—and I am very glad to hear it—that the Government have decided to place the new life-boats in the county of Prince Edward. If it is proposed to maintain and work the boats with anything like efficiency, $2,000 will be required, to say nothing of the construction of the boats. I would like to ask if the Ministry have decided as to the location for the boats, and as to the experience of the men who are to become keepers of the life-saving stations, whether or not the men employed are to be put under a system of drill, and whether they are to have the assistance of experienced keepers, trained in some of the stations on the neighboring coast? We know that the cost of an ordinary self-righting boat is $900, that some cost more, and that the boats used in England cost nearly double that sum, and therefore the cost of the two boats will be very much more than the extra amount placed in the Estimates. I fear the Government will secure a cheap life-boat, and such a one as would be available in ordinary water, but would be of very little service when most needed. In regard to selection of depots, I am given to understand by the Department that Wellington and Popular Point have been selected as the locations for the boats. I am sorry, from one point of view, that this decision has been arrived at, for while I would be glad to see a life-boat station at Wellington, I do not know why that point has been selected instead of Salmon Point. Very few lives have been lost at Wellington.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Where is Salmon Point?

Mr. PLATT. Salmon Point is from twelve to fifteen miles south-east of Wellington, and is nearly midway between Wellington and the proposed station at Popular Point. At Wellington, as I have said, few lives are lost; it is not a harbor of refuge and vessels have no business there unless they come in to load. Some wrecks have occurred from vessels driving on the beach, but no lives have been lost. On the contrary, whenever any wreck takes place at Salmon Point Reef, it is generally attended with loss of life. Not many lives have been lost off Popular Point, as there is a smooth bottom there. As I have stated, almost all the wrecks attended with loss of life occur on Salmon Point Reef, although fewer lives have been lost since the erection of a light there. That light would be much more useful if it was larger and higher; at the present time it is too low and too small. I was told by a captain that he almost stranded his vessel in consequence of the light, as he mistook it for the red light of a vessel and that he steered his vessel directly across the Reef and would have stranded except for the fact that she was light. In respect to the placing of a life-boat at Wellington it is stated that it could be carried on wheels to this dangerous point, and either east or west, and if west that it could be carried on a railway train if there was an engine at the depot at the time. I have been shown a report from a person who certainly is interested in having the boat stationed at Wellington, in which he says that it will take one hour to reach Salmon Point. It is a question whether the boat could be got there without travelling twenty or twenty-five miles. When the sea runs high it is not easy to drive on the beach, even with a horse and buggy, and it will be almost impossible to take the boat to that point without making a long journey, and in many cases it will arrive too late to rescue the lives imperilled. I suppose that the arrangements for the management of the stations have not been finally completed, and I would venture to suggest that the keepers should be trained men, capable of drilling the crew thoroughly, and of seeing that something like efficiency is maintained during the first few years. If the keepers put in charge are not tried men the public will lose all spirit, and the whole service will fall into disrepute. It will be better if, in an organization of this sort, one or two stations are thoroughly equipped, possessing efficient men, not only volunteers, but, at certain seasons, trained men who will take charge of the boats. One such station would do more to ingratiate the service in the hearts of the people, and to save life, than would a half a dozen inefficient stations scattered along the coast. I should like to obtain some further information from the hon. Minister than he has yet given, but I take it for granted that the arrangements are not complete, and I hope that the suggestions thrown out will not be lost sight of by the hon. Minister when he comes to make these arrangements, with regard to the character of the crews. I would like to know if it is intended to have stated crews enlisted, or to depend entirely on any crew of fishermen who may be called on at a moment's notice. We know that, in emergencies, we have to take the best oarsmen we can get; but certainly we should have an enlisted crew, who should be trained at stated periods. I am sure that Wellington will be a very pleasant place indeed for a crew to live in; but I hope that the Government will not establish a mere resting-place for sailors, or give positions to persons who should not have them. If such is to be the case, it would be better to take the Bay of Quinté, and have one crew at Picton, and the other at Belleville, where they would be very comfortable. I hope that the crews will be stationed at the most dangerous points on the coast; and the men will be trained and enlisted, and that ere long we will have something worthy of the name of a life-saving service. If the hon. Minister is prepared to give explanations as to the character of the training, as to how the men will be enlisted, I will be most happy to hear it.

Mr. BOWELL. The hon. member from St. John stated that he would be very much pleased, if the American system could be introduced on our coast; but the expense of the American system last year was about $669,000, and I do not suppose that Canada would be prepared at the present moment to enter on a service of that kind, however desirable it might be; still I have no doubt that the country would sustain any expenditure necessary to protect life and property when vessels are wrecked; a question is put by the hon. gentleman, whether Canadian steamers are sent to the rescue, on the occasion of wrecks. I can tell him that this is done on all occasions, when there is a probability of the loss of property, and more particularly, of life. The hon. member for Prince Edward, I know, takes a very deep interest in this question, and most of his remarks were to the point and well timed, but he might just as well have omitted the attempt at the little political part in which he delights to indulge on most occasions. I can tell the hon. gentleman that the men who will be appointed to man the boats will be men physically strong, and quite capable of performing the duties allotted to them. I do not suppose, however, that men will accept these positions unless they want them. The hon. gentleman says he hopes that life-saving stations are not to be established for the purpose of finding places for men who want situations. My experience has been that whenever situations are to be filled there are generally to be found men who want them, and I have no doubt the Department will select men of whom my hon. friend, as far as physical ability is concerned, and capacity for performing their arduous duties which will devolve upon them, will approve. It is intended to drill these men and to have them thoroughly trained in their duties. The proposition is, that they shall be drilled twice a month, during the season, and paid during the time they are drilling; consequently they will be, to a certain extent, enlisted, or rather —which is the more suitable word—employed to perform that service. They will come at stated times to practice and drill, for which they will receive pay. I can give the hon. gentleman no information beyond that given him by the hon. Minister when in his seat, as to location of stations on the southern coast of Prince Edward county. I am, however, informed that for ten years there has been a boat at and near Salmon Point, where the dangerous reef, to which he referred, lies, and in no case has the service of this boat been called into request. I am giving the Committee the information communicated to me by the Deputy Head of the Department. If, however, it be found in the future, that Salmon Point would be a better position for a station than Wellington, which is easy of access, as the hon. gentleman knows, and from which it will be very easy to go to any point east or south-east, west or south-west, towards Weller's Bay, or to the islands which lie to the west and as far as the point, and that it is necessary that the station should be changed, why, in the interest of life and humanity, the station will be changed at once. I can assure the hon. gentleman that there is no desire on the part of the Government to select any particular place, and certainly no position will be selected by them merely for the comfort of the men. It is not the intention to place them at Belleville or Picton, nor to furnish them with feather beds, on which to rest their weary limbs. The men will be placed at such stations along the coast as the Government believe, will be in the interest of the service which they will be appointed to perform. I can only say to the hon. gentleman that the desire of the Government is to have this service as far as our means allow, as effective as possible, and if it be found necessary to spend more money in the service in order to make it more effective in the future, the Department will not hesitate to ask for the money to put it on a sound footing.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Is it the intention of the Department to establish life-saving stations anywhere on the route of the steamers between Collingwood and Parry Sound? It will be fresh in the memory of most members, that two very serious wrecks occurred there, one last year and one the year before, the Asia and the Manitoulin, and a life-saving station would afford relief.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Where?

Mr. ROSS. Somewhere about the north side of Manitoulin Island. I know that wrecks have taken place somewhere about there, where the navigation is very dangerous. As far as I am individually concerned, I would be most happy to support a very liberal expenditure for this service. I see in the report of the hon. Minister of Marine and Fisheries that, during the last ten years, in Canadian waters, a greater number of tons of shipping than Canada owns have been lost. The loss, since 1873, has been 1,532,290 tons of shipping, and loss of life, 2,926 souls, while the damage inflicted has exceeded $30,000,000, so that any provision which we make to protect life and property, even if it is very liberal, is one which I think that the House will very readily support. I merely throw out the suggestion that at some point on Lake Huron a life-saving station might be established.

Mr. DAWSON. Both on Lake Huron and Lake Superior there should be a great deal of life-saving apparatus, because in some parts of these lakes the shipping is very much exposed, and the wrecks which have occurred recently on Georgian Bay, and on the great lakes generally, show the necessity for some such arrangement.

Mr. McCRAVEY. I quite agree with the hon. member for Prince Edward County (Mr. Platt), and I consider this a very important question. I have been a witness of several very serious wrecks on the lake between Hamilton and Toronto, and I think that the sum appropriated is quite inadequate for the purpose. The object is not only a humane one, but it involves the lives of the people of this country. The appropriation is so small that it would be useless for me to ask the hon. Minister whether it was the intention to establish a life-saving station between Toronto and Hamilton.

Mr. PLATT. I did not intentionally allude to the suspicions which might be raised as to the intentions of the Government with the purpose of casting any aspersions upon them, but merely to caution them that public opinion sometimes blames the Government for the mistakes which they may fall into from mistaken advice. I was merely reflecting the opinion which I heard expressed in my own county, when it was heard that Wellington was selected as one of the stations. I wish to say also that in many cases, a mortar station is much more efficient than a life-boat station, especially at some points, and perhaps the Minister may feel disposed to give us a Lyle gun and proper appliances at Salmon Point if he cannot give us the other.

Mr. PAINT. I consider that the sum is entirely inadequate, when we remember that we have to protect a coast line of 9,000 miles, and that these coasts are visited every day during six months by shipping, and other portions every day during the twelve months. It should be at least $50,000.

Mr. SPROULE. I think the country at the present time would tolerate the spending of a large amount of money for this particular purpose. There is no more important route on the upper lakes, than that between Collingwood and Lake Superior, and as there is an increasing amount of navigation done in that part of the Dominion, I think the grant should be larger than it is. I am certain that in our part of the country at least, the people would be glad to see it increased; and they would also be pleased to see some scheme devised, if possible, to prevent the extensive loss of life which has been going on for years.

Mr. BOWELL. I have to express my gratification that notwithstanding the small vote it has been so well received, and that suggestions have been made with regard to the subject which will be of practical value to the Government. The question is a very important one, and these suggestions will not be forgotten. I may state that there is a life-boat at Nottawasaga Island, on Georgian Bay; but whether it is sufficient to accomplish the object which the House and the country have in view is a question which will be considered. There is no present intention of establishing a life-saving station between Hamilton and Toronto. I am not aware that that portion of the lake is considered very dangerous—at least, I have scarcely heard of any accidents which have occurred there. The establishment of a mortar station has not been considered. I have made a note of that matter and it will be considered by the Government. The object of the Government is to make the service as effective as possible, and the suggestions made by the hon. gentlemen who have addressed the Committee are not only worthy of note, but are such as to justify their serious attention at the hands of the Government.

157. Printing Triennial List of Shipping..... $1,500.00

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). I think this should be printed as a supplement to the report of the Minister of Marine, as recommended by the Printing Committee some time ago, and that the item should not come up here as a special item.

Mr. PAINT. It is not sufficient, considering the fact that not less than 100 new vessels have been added to the list this year, that this list should be printed triennially instead of annually. Is this great Dominion taking a step backward? Three years without a report and registry of new owners.

Mr. BOWELL. I can give no explanation of the matter except that it was considered needless to print the list oftener than once in three years. The work of printing the list is a special one once every three years, and, consequently, would not properly come from the annual vote. It is actually an extra expenditure for that purpose.

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). My object is to keep the printing items under the one head as far as possible; for example, the Bank returns are published biennially, and they are published as part of the Departmental Printing, thereby keeping the Printing Accounts together.

160. Salaries and allowances, &c., of Lighthouse Keepers..... $164,025.00

Mr. DODD. I would like to ask the hon. acting Minister of Marine and Fisheries, if it is the intention of the Government to increase the salary of the Superintendent of the Humane Station at Scattarie? He was appointed some years ago at a salary of $500 a year; but since then there has been erected a fog-whistle, which is in operation nearly every day in the year, and he is obliged to do a great deal of extra work without any increased remuneration. He is an active, able seaman, a man who has risked his life more than once in life-saving, and I think he should receive the consideration of his Department.

Mr. BOWELL. The matter shall have the consideration of the Department, and if it is found that his pay is not sufficient for the services, he shall receive more.

Mr. KIRK. Is it the intention of the Department to increase the salary of the lighthouse-keeper at Tor Bay Point? He receives but $200 a year, and he is not able to attend to any other business, so that he is entirely dependent on this small salary of $200. He is a married man with a family, and it is impossible for him to live upon it. I hope the hon. Minister will see his way to increase his salary by at least $200. I think no lighthouse-keeper receives so small a salary.

Mr. BOWELL. The Department will take the matter into consideration.

Mr. WELDON. How does the increase arise?

Mr. BOWELL. There are new lighthouses constantly being erected. This year some twenty-eight new lighthouses are proposed to be erected.

Mr. DAWSON. I think that the salaries of the lighthouse-keepers in the District of Algoma, that is, on Lake Huron and Lake Superior, should be revised. Some of them receive ample to live upon, but others are half-starved. This service up there, I am sorry to say, is in a mess at present.

166. Construction of lighthouse at Colchester Reef, Lake Erie..... $5,000.00

Mr. DAWSON. This lighthouse was to be put there on the condition that the Americans should build a lighthouse at Passage Island, Lake Superior. They did so, and our Government was to erect this lighthouse. I believe the correspondence was carried on by the Deputy Minister of Marine and Fisheries, a gentleman of very refined taste and an elegant writer; and in carrying on the correspondence, instead of using the term, "steam fog-whistle," he used the more elegant one, "fog-alarm." In consequence we have, at Passage Island, a fog-alarm in the shape of a tinkling bell, instead of a steam fog-whistle, and when making this additional appropriation for Colchester Reef, it would be desirable the American Government should be communicated with and asked to put up a fog-whistle in place of the bell.

167. Signal Stations $7,500.00

Mr. KIRK. My predecessor (Mr. Ogden) had a list of the grants made out during the time he represented the county, showing an amount of $7,000 voted for signals in that county. Is it the intention of the Government to spend that amount in that county this year?

Mr. BOWELL. I do not think all the signal stations will be erected in Guysborough. They will be erected where they will do the most service along the shore, and after taking the reports of those best fitted to give the information to the Department. If Guysborough requires all the signal stations to protect her from any danger, no doubt they will be put there.

169. Observatories $7,750.00

Mr. ROSS (Middlesex). Why is the observatory at Quebec struck off the list?

Mr. BOWELL. The service performed by that observatory has been transferred to the Meteorological Department, where it will be conducted with equal efficiency and more economy.

Mr. BLAKE. Is there anything allowed to Wiggins in that?

170. Grant for Meteorological Observations, including Instruments and cost of telegraphing Weather Warnings $48,000.00

Mr. BOWELL. The extra sum of $8,000 asked for is because the service has been extended to the North-West Territory and to Manitoba, and because the service formerly performed at the Quebec Observatory is included under this head.

Mr. BLAKE. Of course, having a new competitor we are obliged to make extra exertions.

Resolutions to be reported.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD moved the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to; and (at 12:45 o'clock a.m.) the House adjourned.

HOUSE OF COMMONS,

FRIDAY, 4th May, 1883.

The SPEAKER took the Chair at Three o'clock.

PRAYERS.

RATE OF INTEREST BILL.

Mr. CASGRAIN moved that Bill (No. 77) to fix the rate of interest in Canada be placed on the Orders of the Day for the second reading on Monday next.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Lost.

Mr. SPEAKER. Notice of motion for this step is not required.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Lost.

Mr. SPEAKER. I think the noes have it.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I think the proper course to adopt has been already followed in this House. This is merely a motion for the second reading, in order to place the Bill on the Order Paper as a matter of form. The House has not yet disposed of this Bill, and I think that the motion must be granted. Of course, the House is all powerful; but if the Prime Minister, who guides the proceedings of the House, will refer to the proceedings of the 3rd of April, 1876, he will find that a similar motion was then made by Mr. Caron, and granted. When the Bill comes up for the second reading the House may accept it, or not, as it pleases; but this motion is a mere matter of form.

Mr. DESJARDINS. I think that the House has disposed of this Bill. I see, by the reports of the proceedings, that on motion of Mr. Auger, that the Bill be read the second time, that motion was rejected; so I think that we should not again allow the Bill to appear on the Order Paper.

Mr. SPEAKER. The proceedings the other day simply refused that the Bill should then be read the second time. The motion, was that the Bill be read the second time, and that motion was carried in the negative, not to fix the second reading for a future day, but simply stating that it should not then be read the second time. This being a motion with respect to a Bill now before the House, simply to place it on the Order Paper for a future day, it is quite in order, and it is for the House to say whether it will accept the motion or not.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think that we ought to agree to the motion of the hon. gentleman. The House says that the Bill should not now be read the second time, and it did so because it did not record as a formal vote that it should be read this day six months. I think the hon. gentleman who has charge of the Bill should have accepted a decided expression of the opinion of the House on that occasion, and that decision really meant in fact that the Bill should not be read during the present Session. I think the hon. gentleman, out of regard to the opinion of the House, should have accepted this decision.

Mr. CASGRAIN. I do not take the decision of the House in that sense, for it is a very easy thing for hon. members to give a square vote that the Bill should receive the six months' hoist, but that was not done. The decision of the House was merely that the Bill should not be read at that time; and I think that it was a mere matter of procedure and order to put the Bill on the Order Paper so that the House may decide. Surely hon. members are not afraid to decide by vote whether the rate of interest should continue as it is—for my own part, I am not; and I think we should have a vote on that point, so that we may have a free discussion. There may be something new on the subject which might be brought by such a discussion.

Motion negatived.

PATENT ACT AMENDMENT.

The following Bill (from the Senate) was introduced, and read the first time:—

Bill (No. 122) to amend the Patent Act.—(Mr. Pope.)

CANADIAN PACIFIC RAILWAY.

Sir LEONARD TILLEY moved that the House again resolve itself into Committee of Supply.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I regret very much, Mr. Speaker, that, owing to a severe attack of inflammation of the throat, I was not able at the time proposed to make the annual statement in relation to the Canadian Pacific Railway, and I regret still more that I fear the present state of my health will not enable me to do adequate justice to the very important question that is submitted for the consideration of the House. But I must, as meeting all shortcomings on my part, refer to the celebrated motto: "Let the deed speak." I believe, Sir, that that great work now occupies a position in the estimation of this House that renders it less necessary that any very lengthened observations should be made in relation to it. It is not often that the promoters of a great and important measure are able, after an experience of two years, to say that all the most sanguine predictions that they ventured to offer in support of the measure have been already more than realized. Yet, Sir, I am able to make that statement on the present occasion. The contract made with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for the construction of that great work—a work so great that my hon. friend the leader of the late Government stated on an important occasion that all the resources of the British Empire were not sufficient to ensure its construction within ten years; a work so great as to have baffled the efforts that had been made by two Governments to give it any very great prominence—I say, Sir, that the contract for that work required that it should be completed by the first day of July, 1891. We are enabled now to say that if the progress in future is equal to the progress of the past, we may confidently accept the statement of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company that by the end of December, 1886, that road will be completed from end to end. And Sir, with the organization they have effected, with the progress they have already made, with the preparation in hand for vigorously pushing that work to completion, they will not require to make any greater exertions to accomplish that pledge than they have required in the past, in order to push this great work to its present condition. That, Sir, will be four and a-half years before the time provided in the contract for the completion of the work. And those, Sir, who have witnessed the great progress given to this country, the enormous impetus given to the advancement of this country, by the vigorous and rapid prosecution of the work up to the present time, will agree with me in the sentiment that to anticipate the date of completion by no less than four years and a-half will be to confer upon Canada the greatest possible boon and benefit. Nor, Sir, can it be stated that the fullest anticipations of the Government, the strongest assurances given by us to this House in relation to the character of the work, have not been more than realized. I have laid upon the Table of the House such full and complete information with reference to the progress of this work up to the present time, or down to the very latest date, as will render it unnecessary for me to detain the House at such great length, as I would otherwise feel myself warranted in doing, in reference to the progress and character of the work. But I am sure the House will permit me to refer to the evidence of the progress of that work and the mode in which it has been pushed forward up to the present time. I read from the report of the General Manager, under date February 1st, 1883. In reference to the eastern section he says:

"On the eastern division, owing to the broken nature of the country, its difficulty of access, and the necessity of extensive surveys which consumed much time, very rapid progress with the work of construction has been impossible up to this time, but the track is now laid on the main line from Callander westward to the Sturgeon River, a distance of forty miles. The grading is nearly completed for an additional distance of twenty miles, and is well advanced on a further section of ten miles. Beyond this much work has been done in the way of clearing and road-making; 2,300 men and 173 teams are now employed on this work and it is expected that the grading will be completed and the track extended about 100 miles farther west during the present year.

"On the Algoma Branch, which diverges from the main line a short distance west of the Wahnapitae River, and thence follows a very direct line to Algoma Mills on Lake Huron, a distance of 100 miles, the track has been laid from Algoma eastward twenty-five miles; and the grading on the remainder of the line is so far advanced as to justify the belief that it will be completed and ready for operation by the end of the present season. This branch will afford a summer connection with the main line west from Thunder Bay, pending the completion of the Lake Superior section of the railway. 1,050 men and eighty teams are employed on this branch at the present time.

"During the past season active operations were commenced from Prince Arthur's Landing, on Thunder Bay eastward to the Nipigon River. The grading is already well advanced and several miles of track have been laid, and it is expected that by the end of the present year the track will have been laid to a point nearly, or quite 100 miles east from Prince Arthur's Landing. There are now employed on this section 1,150 men and 100 teams, and this force will be increased on the opening of navigation.

"The preliminary surveys of the remainder of the line north and east of Lake Superior have been completed, and prove, beyond a doubt, the feasibility of the line sought by the Company very near the north shore of the lake. The final location of this line is proceeding rapidly, and it is the intention of the Company to vigorously attack the work at all accessible points in the early spring.

"Much of the work on this section is very heavy, but keeping in view the competitive value of the shortest possible through line, as well as the capitalized value of the saving in the cost of operation, the Company have here, as on all other sections of their line, chosen the shortest possible route, notwithstanding a largely increased immediate outlay."

I may say, Sir, that the progress, as was stated before, of the Canadian Pacific Railway, has been entirely unprecedented. There has never, I think I am safe in saying, in the history of the world, been an instance in which the same amount of progress was made in the construction of any line of railway, from one end, as on the present occasion. The great rapidity of construction from Winnipeg westwards, as I have just said, more than exceeds, I believe, the construction of any line of railway in a prairie country or otherwise, in any part of the world. It will be observed that in fifty-three consecutive working days, from the 20th July to 20th September, 165 $\frac{13}{100}$ miles of main track, and 8 $\frac{9}{100}$ miles of side tracks, a total of 174 $\frac{63}{100}$ miles were laid on the main line, being an average of 3.13 miles of main track for each working day, and, including sidings, 3.29 miles per day. As I have said before, in the history of the railway construction of the world, there has been no evidence of the progress of the work being so rapid as in the present instance. Now, Sir, the next point that is of importance in relation to this matter, is the mode in which the road has been constructed; and I may say, Sir, that, on that point, I have evidence of a very high character, which, I think, will be accepted by the House. I have visited every portion of the line from Thunder Bay to Winnipeg; I have passed over the line from Winnipeg to a distance of 470 miles westward, which was constructed at the time I visited it last autumn. The Chief Engineer of the Canadian Pacific Railway has from time to time visited the works, and has stated, on his own observation, and on that of competent engineers employed under him, that this work was being carried on in a very admirable manner. But Sir, I may venture to read to the House an unofficial letter, written while I was on the other side of the Atlantic by Mr. Sandford Fleming, late Chief Engineer of the Canadian Pacific Railway—a gentleman whose unbiassed opinion and judgment, will, I believe, go very far in this House. Speaking of the mode in which the work is being constructed, Mr. Fleming says, under date of the 8th August, 1882:

"I was deeply interested in all that I saw, and the progress made in the Pacific Railway. I travelled twice over the whole line from Fort William to the western end, about the 104th meridian, which, with the Pembina branch, makes:—

West of Winnipeg	350
East of Selkirk	410
Pembina Branch	85
	845

Twice travelled over, making nearly 1,700 miles, on the Canadian Pacific Railway.

"No one could have been more deeply interested than myself, and I am bound to say the progress and character of the work is far better than expected.

"The men who compose the Syndicate are honestly carrying out their part of the contract; they have displayed wonderful energy and have been signally successful.

"I congratulate the Government on the present state of affairs, and especially on Pacific Railway progress.

"At Fort William I learned that the construction had practically commenced to Nipigon, and the shore of Lake Superior is covered with engineers to locate the line on the different sections to Pic River.

"On the prairie the road bed is being raised, as it should be, three, four and five feet above the prairie, with a view to working it in winter, and the present force is laying nearly 100 miles of track per month."

I will add on this point, in addition to the statement of the prosecution of the work which I have given by Mr. Sandford Fleming, the evidence of another gentleman whose name in connection with railway work will render him an authority which will be accepted in this House or out of it.

I refer to Mr. C. J. Brydges. As to the railway I cannot do better than produce the description of it given by Mr. Brydges to a reporter of the Winnipeg Times last August:—

"The grading is being very well done, the banks being wide and of good height, the track kept well above the level of the prairie, no cuttings anywhere, and good substantial pile openings to allow of the free passage of water where necessary. From Flat Creek to Moose Jaw Bone Creek, the grading will average about 17,000 yards to the mile. I do not believe that any prairie road has ever been built better or in a more perfect and substantial manner, and very few roads, indeed, that I have seen in a long experience have been so well constructed in the first instance. The rails are all of steel, with an excellent joint having four bolts and nuts in each, and the sleepers average 2,640 per mile, thus securing ample strength and solidity, and the whole is thoroughly well spiked throughout. There are now about 4,000 men employed in building the road, and 2,000 horses."

In addition, I may say that the number of sleepers—as any person familiar with railway construction will find—is far beyond the average, a fact which greatly increases the substantial character of the road; that the bridges are being constructed of iron with stone masonry, and that everything has been done from the commencement down to the present time to give the Canadian Pacific Railway the highest possible character as a first-class road in every respect. Although up to the time the contract was made with the Company we had been unable to find any line north of Lake Superior in which very severe grades were not encountered, although for a very considerable distance after leaving Black Rock, at the head of Lake Nipigon, these grades varied from 70 to upwards of 90 feet in the mile, the Company at a great cost had, as Mr. Fleming graphically stated, covered the country with engineers and surveyors, and notwithstanding the large amount of money which had previously been expended for surveys—they have been able to secure a line which will carry us from Montreal to the foot of the Rocky Mountains without encountering any grade over 52 feet to the mile. Too great importance cannot be attached, as the House will readily see, to the character of the grades on that portion of the road, because that is the portion of the road upon which it will be in the interests of the country that the largest possible amount of traffic should be moved at the minimum of cost. I may say, with reference to that portion of the work which is under the immediate charge of the Government, that the progress upon it has been very satisfactory. In making the contract with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company the Government undertook to hand over the works from Lake Superior to Red River at the time stated in the contract, which was July, 1883. They did not expect that probably it would be possible—as it has not often been possible—to complete works of such great magnitude and attended with such difficulties as were presented, especially by Section "B," within the time stated in the contract; but the rails were laid previous to the time stated in the contract, that was the 1st day of July, 1882, giving facilities for the transport of traffic over the road from Thunder Bay to Winnipeg, and the road would have been in an advanced state of completion—but for the interruption of the progress of construction by giving facilities to the traffic which offered—by the 1st day of July, of this year. The great importance of opening the line for traffic from Thunder Bay to Winnipeg has induced the Government to make an arrangement with the contractors, who have been carrying on to completion the works in Section "B," and who were engaged in carrying the traffic under an arrangement—as it was impossible for one party to undertake to operate the road while it was being constructed by another—an arrangement was made for carrying that traffic during the past autumn by the contractors on the road. An arrangement is now being made for the contractors to surrender the work in its present condition—about $300,000 of which contract remains to be done in order to complete it—to transfer that to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, who will be enabled to carry the work to completion under the terms of the contract, and at the same time carry on the great volume of traffic which did offer last autumn, and which we know will offer again with the opening of navigation, so as to give all the immediate facilities for that communication that are possible to be given. I may say, in relation to that matter, that I stated to the House, on a former occasion, that we expected to make a large saving, something like $500,000, on Section "A," and something over $1,000,000 on Section "B," and I am glad to be able to say that those contracts will be completed, and that the charge upon the country will not exceed the amounts which I have stated. They will be completed, with a very large margin, under the original amount which was contemplated on the extension of the prices when the contracts were let. I am satisfied that this arrangement will be one which will meet with the cordial approval of the House, because, without an increased cost to the country, we will be able to give the advantage to the people of Manitoba and the North-West of these increased facilities for communication with the older portions of Canada, at a much earlier period and under much more favorable circumstances than otherwise would have been possible. When I tell the House that, last autumn, with the road in an incomplete state, and with only very indifferent facilities for carrying traffic, Messrs. Manning, Macdonald & Co., the contractors for that portion of the road, were able to carry goods from Toronto to Winnipeg in six days, whereas it was not unusual to require six weeks with all the efforts that could be made over a continuous line of road from Toronto to Winnipeg, the importance and advantage to the country of having that line open, too, for traffic, will be so apparent as to require no further argument of mine to convince the House. Now, Sir, I may say here, that so far as the works under the charge of the Government in British Columbia are concerned, I am able to make an equally favorable statement. The contracts with the contractors of British Columbia require the completion of the works by the 1st of July, 1885, and I have every assurance from the engineers who are supervising those works, and from the Chief Engineer here, that there is no doubt that those contracts will be completed within the time stated. I am also able to say, with an additional year's experience, that my estimate as to the cost to the country of the completion of those works does not require to be modified or changed. I am at issue, Sir, to some extent with my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition, as to what that cost is; and I am not surprised that on a recent occasion he should have fortified his opinion by quoting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in his favor. The House will remember that when the contract was made with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, I stated that the amount to be paid to the Company in cash was $25,000,000, and the amount of land to be granted was 25,000,000 acres, and that I estimated that the 715 miles of road to be completed by the Government, and handed over to the Company, that portion between Thunder Bay and Winnipeg on the one side, and between Savona's Ferry and Port Moody on the other—would cost $28,000,000. Some exception was taken to that statement, because I was told that I had not charged the Company with a sufficient amount for the surveys—that all the expenditure made between Callander and Port Moody, and from Victoria to Port Simpson, extending over a country nearly 3,000 miles in length, and some 500 miles, at least in some parts, in width, ought to be charged to that part of the work which we were handing over to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Well, Sir, I dissent from that view of the case; but with that mode of charging all the past expenditures—the expenditure on the Georgian Bay Branch, the expenditures on large parties of explorers who were sent out by the Government to explore the character of the lands, quite irrespective of any line of railway, except in order to give additional value to those lands with the view of our utilizing them for the purpose of securing its construction—all these expenditures are embraced, as my hon. friend knows, in the $35,000,000. But as I have said, it is not wonderful that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, when going into the market for money, should have been glad to take the highly colored statements of my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition in preference to mine. It was a better statement to show that they could quote that high authority as proof of the correctness of their statement that they were receiving $35,000,000 of completed road, instead of $28,000,000, as I stated. But when I state to the House that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have already paid on the Eastern Section $94,178, and on the Central Section, $471,798, or a total of $565,976 for surveys in connection with the location of their line, and that they expect to pay $300,000 in addition before they have completed the location of the whole line, or a total for surveys of $865,976, I think it will be seen that I could hardly, with propriety, have charged those two portions of the road with all that $5,000,000 or $6,000,000 of expenditure which has been incurred during many years on surveys, and charged to the Canadian Pacific Railway account. That is the explanation I offer for the difference between the statement of my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition, that the completed portions of the road should be valued at $35,000,000, and my statement which I still adhere to, subject to the explanation I have offered to the House, that they should be valued at $28,000,000. I may say, Sir, in addition to that, that the expenditure by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for steamers will be no less than $850,000. They have already made contracts for the construction of three powerful steamers to run between Algoma Mills and Thunder Bay.

Mr. MACKENZIE. On the water-stretches?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. On the water-stretches; and I quite concur that it is almost impossible to overrate the importance to the country, during the three and a-half or four years that will be required to complete the road north of Lake Superior, of having the rapid, cheap and convenient line of communication which those steamers will afford. By the construction of those steamers it is expected that the voyage will be made from Algoma Mills to Prince Arthur's Landing within twenty-four hours, and immigrants, therefore, arriving at Quebec will be able to pass up to Thunder Bay at a comparatively small cost, and to be carried into the heart of our country without taking that long and circuitous, and, in more respects than one, hazardous journey through the United States, which they now have to make to reach the Territory. I mention that how in order to show the vigor that is being shown by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, not only to push forward the work of the contract made with the Government, but to provide every possible means to develop the country, and to establish the cheapest and most convenient communication through it. The distance from Callander Station, the initial point of the Canadian Pacific Railway proper, via Kicking Horse Pass to Port Moody, will be 2,528 miles, being a saving of 119 miles as compared with the route by the Yellow Head Pass, and of seventy-nine miles, as compared with that going through the Kicking Horse Pass, and round by the Big Bend of the Columbia River,—that is, piercing the Selkirk range, after passing through the Kicking Horse Pass, and getting direct across through to Kamloops, instead of taking the circuitous route by the Yellow Head Pass, or the less circuitous, but still very circuitous route, by the Big Bend of the Columbia. Now, Sir, I am aware that my hon. friend and predecessor will take great exception to the grades. I know the strong view he has held on former occasions, and the strong statements he made when the Bill passed through the House, with respect to giving power to the Government to change the route from the Yellow Head Pass to a more southerly one. I know that the hon. gentleman holds the strongest view with reference to the importance of grades; and I quite agree with him. There is no doubt that it would have been a very serious matter, had such a grade as is proposed to be adopted, 116 feet to the mile, been found necessary on the line between the Rocky Mountains and the city of Montreal; but my hon. friend will, I think, agree with me, that it is of vastly less consequence to encounter a severe grade west of the foot of the Rocky Mountains, where we cannot expect that the volume of traffic, at any rate, for many years, will be at all so great as that for the transport of the cereals of the great North-West to the tide water at Montreal. But the disadvantage of a grade of 116 feet to the mile will, I believe, be found to be more than counterbalanced by the shortened distance. I need not detain the House at very much length on that point, because the statement from the General Manager, which I have already laid upon the Table of the House, and which has been published, has dealt with it. I may be permitted, perhaps, briefly to refer to it:

"From the summit of the Rocky Mountains, descending westerly to the Columbia Valley, a maximum gradient of 90 feet to the mile can be secured, but it would involve excessive curvature, a large increase in distance and in cost, and twice the time in construction, and, inasmuch as helping engines will be required in any case, I have thought it best to adopt a heavier and shorter grade, and the shortest practicable line. This section of the line, as located, is very heavy work, which cannot be avoided; but it is very direct, and the heavy gradients (116 feet per mile) are confined within a comparatively short distance."

I may say, Sir, that the plan which I laid upon the Table of the House, indicating this grade, shows that, in going west, there is a distance of five miles, in which a grade of 75 feet to the mile is encountered, in reaching the summit of the Rocky Mountains, at Kicking Horse Pass. It is believed that grade can be avoided, and every effort will be made to avoid it. Then, in going west, there will be but one grade of 116 feet to the mile, and that for a distance of only twenty miles. In going east, which, as I have before stated, is of less importance, because the traffic will undoubtedly be very much more limited, there will be two grades of 116 feet to the mile for the distance of twenty miles each—a distance which, as every one familiar with railway management knows, is extremely convenient for the application of a pilot engine.

Mr. CHARLTON. Two distances of twenty miles east?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; two grades, but only one, I may say to my hon. friend, of 116 feet to the mile for twenty miles going west; but coming east there are two.

Mr. BLAKE. On the west side of the Rockies?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes; I may say that in this respect the Canadian Pacific will compare most favorably with any of the other Pacific Railways. On the Northern Pacific, gradients as high as 128 feet to 130 feet to the mile are used. It is well known that on that portion of the Union Pacific Railway Line, the extension of it over the Central Pacific Railway, gradients are frequently encountered of 116 feet to the mile; and yet, as is well known, very rapid time has been made when occasion required over the Union and Central Pacific Railways. I have evidence and information with reference to a number of roads in the United States performing an enormous amount of traffic in which the grades are as severe as, or more severe, than those to which I have alluded as likely to be encountered as the best we can do in passing through the Kicking Horse Pass over the Selkirk Range. But, Sir, there is not only the saving in distance that is important, the saving in time, the saving in the cost of transport of freight and passengers which will be very much less by the shorter line—79 miles shorter than by the Big Bend of the Columbia—it will not be only the saving in the cost of transport of freight and passengers that will occur, but a most important advantage to be gained by the country is that, by the Yellow Head Pass, we come down through a very unattractive country, to say the least, all the way to Kamloops, and from the time you entered the Rocky Mountains at the Yellow Head Pass until you had gone down to Port Moody, there was comparatively little country that was available for any extensive settlement; whereas, as my hon. friends from British Columbia can point out much more fully and accurately than I can, the line now proposed by the Kicking Horse Pass and the Selkirk Range will carry us through the Kamloops country where there is the largest portion of British Columbia available for settlement. The value to the country, the value to the Government of the belt of land along that line will be incalculably greater than along the line which was previously projected, and I am satisfied that the more the question is examined, the more it will be found in the interests of Canada that this shorter line should be adopted. By the adoption of this shorter line, and by the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway in the thorough and efficient manner in which it is being constructed, we believe we shall not only be able to offer the best and most available line of communication to the Pacific Ocean, the cheapest, best and shortest route for even the inhabitants of New-York, but quite possibly bring a large portion of the traffic between Chicago and San Francisco over the Canadian Pacific Railway. And, as a national line, it is impossible to overrate the importance of having the most direct and rapid line of communication, competing, as we are, as hon. gentlemen know, with the Northern Pacific Railway, some few hundred miles only to the south of us, and where—I should not be glad to say, but I am able to say—much more severe grades will be encountered than through the route to which I have alluded. Then the location has been approved except from the Wanapitae River to the Nepigon River on the Eastern Section, a distance of 483 miles. As I have already told the House, the Government have been extremely gratified to learn that the large expenditure and great efforts made by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have enabled them to locate a line, so far as all the difficulties to be encountered are concerned, as they are now known, infinitely superior to any that the Government had been able to obtain through that district, and, as I have already stated, a line which will enable us to pass from the foot of the Rocky Mountains to Montreal without encountering any grade as high as 53 feet to the mile. Parties are now being engaged at both ends of this section of 483 miles, and that location will be completed during the ensuing season, and not only have very improved grades been obtained, but the character of the country has been found to surpass anything we had previously supposed. The region that is now pierced by the line already in operation to the Sturgeon River opens up one of the finest timber districts to be found in any part of Canada, and the mineral wealth that is now being developed on the line from the north of Lake Superior to Prince Arthur's Landing promises at an early day to be a source of enormous wealth to the country, and to furnish a very large amount of traffic to the Canadian Pacific Railway. Then from the crossing of the South Saskatchewan to Savona's Ferry, 660 miles yet remain to be located. I should not say remain to be located, because 300 miles of that, to the summit of Kicking Horse Pass is now located, all but the completion of the plans, and ready for the approval of the Government; and, as I stated before, if any unforeseen difficulty should arise when we come to have the line presented beyond the Kicking Horse Pass, up to the point where we do not encounter these heavy grades any more difficulty than is held out by Major Rogers to the Company in piercing the Selkirk Range, it will be quite practicable still to take the location round by the Big Bend of the Columbia, and shorten the line considerably compared with what the line by the Yellow Head Pass would have been. Parties, to meet from the east and west, are already going to work on this remaining distance from the summit of the Rocky Mountains to Kamloops, and it is expected that, during the present season, that location will not only be completed, but the facility that will shortly be afforded for proceeding with the work efficiently both east and west, will secure, as I have already stated, without greater effort on the part of the Company than they have already made, the entire completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway from end to end by the close of December, 1886. Of the entire line of 2,528 miles, the track is laid, and in good condition for passing trains, from Callander to Sturgeon River, forty miles; from east of Current River to Prince Arthur's Landing, six miles; from Prince Arthur's Landing to Red River, 432 miles, from Red River to Colloy's Station, 626 miles, and twenty-eight miles in British Columbia, or 1,132 miles ready for the passage of trains, leaving on the main line 1,396 miles to be ironed. From Callander to Montreal is 347 miles, making the total distance from Montreal to Port Moody, 2,875 miles. I may, perhaps, be allowed, in referring to that, to draw the attention of the House for a moment to a passage in the prospectus of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, as to the advantage of this line as a through line:

"It is worthy of note that the distance from New York to San Francisco by the shortest railway line through the United States is 3,331 miles, while, by the Canadian Pacific Railway, from Montreal to Port Moody (its Pacific terminus), it will be 2,936 miles."

And more recent investigation and surveys since the publication of this report reduces that to 2,835 miles.

"And from New York via Brockville and the Canadian Pacific Railway, it will be 3,161 miles; and that the distance by the shortest line in the United States from Chicago to San Francisco is 2,408 miles, while from Chicago to Port Moody, by the way of St. Paul and Winnipeg and the Canadian Pacific Railway, it will be 2,342 miles. Considering the direction taken by the steamships on the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, and the shortness of the Company's line across the continent, its completion will very materially shorten the time occupied in the journey between the ports of China and Japan and those of Europe; and with its advantages in distance, in light grades, and in the use of its own railway from seaboard to seaboard, the Canadian Pacific Railway will certainly be in a position to command its full share of the Trans-Pacific traffic as well as that of an extensive section of the Pacific coast."

I may say that, in addition to the main line constructed by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, no less than 281 miles of branches will shortly be completed by the Company without any cost whatever to the Government, and, in addition to that, 110 miles of the extension of the south-western road, and 180 miles from the Pacific Railway to the Souris coalfields are already located, and I have no doubt whatever will be constructed within the ensuing two years, giving a very large additional amount of railway communication to the country, just as valuable so far as the development and opening up of the country is concerned, if not more so, than the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway proper. Subsidies paid by the Government, exclusive of the advances on rails, have been on the Eastern Section—forty miles—$315,384, and the land grant, 384,600 acres. On the Central Section, 601 miles,—twenty miles have been added since the last return was laid upon the Table of the House within the last week, making 601 miles on that section—the subsidy was $6,010,600, and the land grant 7,500,000 acres. Thus, the total cash payment has been $6,625,384, and the land grant 7,879,100 acres. The payment by the Government, inclusive of $1,248,627 advances on rails, makes a total of cash paid up to the present time of $7,874,011. The outlay by the Government on the Lake Superior section, down to the latest date, last month, is $13,373,500. On the Western Section, to January 31st, 1883, the outlay was $5,412,500, making a total of cash paid of $18,786,000. To that I must add the cost of the Pembina Branch, of $1,480,883. The cost of these works to the country—and I am not including in this statement the outlay for all the surveys over the whole territory for so many years, but only that portion which belongs to these particular works—up to the present date is $20,266,883 for the two sections. The total outlay, including the cash subsidy paid by the Government to date is, therefore, $28,140,894. I may now remark in passing, Sir, that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have expended, down to the 31st March on the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway and branches west of Callander, without any reference to the sections in this part of the country, the sum of $24,571,412. I got this information by telegraphic communication to-day from Mr. Drinkwater, the Secretary of the Company, and I give it to the House, because, as I have stated before, I endeavour, as fast as I obtain information in connection with this important work, to lay it as fully as is in my power before the House for consideration. The line in operation west of Winnipeg extends to Swift Current, a distance of 512 miles. Now, Sir, having given a general outline of the amount of work performed, and of the cost to the country of this work, so far as it has proceeded, I digress a little for the purpose of noting, more briefly than I would have otherwise done, in consequence of the condition of my health, some remarks that were made by my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition. I observe, Sir, that great anxiety has been exhibited by—I will not say the organ of the hon. gentleman, but leading organs of public opinion representing the views of hon. gentlemen opposite—lest I, or the Government, should allow the deeply interesting speeches of my hon. friend, on two occasions during the present Session, respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway, to pass unchallenged—great anxiety seems to be manifested lest these speeches, which were held to be overwhelming and unanswerable indictments of the Government, should pass unnoticed by this side of the House. But, Sir, I do not know that there is any particular necessity for answering those speeches at all. I mean no disrespect to my hon. friend in saying that, because everybody knows that the manner in which he devotes himself to this question, and the care with which he acquaints himself with everything connected with it, render the views he presents to the House upon it of very great importance. But there is a sufficient reason why no answer was required: his speeches have been answered already. The hon. gentleman, it is true, brought the prospectus of the Canadian Pacific Railway here, and painted the position and prospects of that great work before the House, and on the wings of the press, before the country, in a still more highly colored form than even the Company have ventured to present them. But I say I am not aware that any answer is required, for the simple reason that, glowing as was the picture which my hon. friend presented to the House as to the enormous bargain that had been obtained by this Company at the cost of the country; vivid as was the picture the hon. gentleman drew of the untold millions of profit this Company was going to make out of the country—vivid as his picture was, I say, it was pale in comparison with that which the hon. gentleman delivered a year before. It was, in no sense, as highly colored as the statement which the hon. gentleman made with equal ability, and equal earnestness, on the other side of the House last Session. When I call the attention of the House to the fact that a year ago, under the manipulation of my hon. friend, the land was worth from $3 to $4 an acre, and that now he calculated it to be worth only $2.68 per acre, it will be seen that, instead of increasing the strength of his statement, he has greatly decreased it. But of this strong and highly colored statement, delivered by the hon. gentleman on the floor of Parliament, and distributed by the press all over the country, what was the result? Why, the hon. gentleman got his answer. He got his answer in the fact that in his own Province, in the centre of his influence, a large and overwhelming majority of the people sent gentlemen to this House to sustain the Government and its policy with respect to the Canadian Pacific Railway. Down in the Province of Prince Edward Island the hon. gentleman was unable to obtain a majority.

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, Sir, in Prince Edward Island, where the hon. leader of the Conservative party had been struck down, where the party had been left without a leader, notwithstanding every advantage, the hon. gentleman was unable to obtain a majority in that Province, and cannot count one here to-day. So in the Province of Nova Scotia, two-thirds of the representatives of the people in that Province have come back here to endorse the Canadian Pacific Railway contract, notwithstanding the statements the hon. gentlemen made were far stronger than those of the present Session. So in New Brunswick, which was considered to be the banner Province of hon. gentleman opposite, the people sent double the number of men to support my hon. friend the Minister of Finance, than he had previously. In Quebec, the hon. gentleman knows, the red disappeared. I will not say it disappeared entirely from the picture—but the red paled before the blue. And in the Province of Ontario with the great question of Provincial rights, the great Boundary question, to agitate, excite, and influence the people, even there the hon. gentleman was unable to get anything like an equal proportion of the representatives of that Province to condemn the contract for the Canadian Pacific Railway. So, Sir, I say if I had allowed his speech to pass unanswered by myself, it would still not have been unanswered, because he has had that best and most effective of all answers—the verdict of a free and intelligent people, upon a statement of the case far stronger than that which the hon. gentleman now, with the prospectus of the Canadian Pacific Railway in his hands, was able to make before this House. Sir, what is his statement? The hon. gentleman says the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have made a profit, that it is now demonstrable from the prospectus they have published, and from the evidence he has, that that profit amounts to some $37,000,000, which he makes up in this way. He says it is ascertained, by the land sales of the Canadian Pacific Railway, that the present value of the land is $2.68 per acre, and in consequence the Government, in the 25,000,000 acres of land, pay the Company $67,000,000. He says the Company's receipts would, by their subsidy of $25,000,000, Government Railways $35,000,000, including the $6,000,000 on surveys, which I have shown, have not been of much value to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, although they put them in their prospectus, and the proceeds of the lands already sold, $17,300,000, or a total of $77,300,000. The value of the unsold lands will be $49,500,000, making the total receipts $126,800,000. Now, Sir, when I was discussing the question of the Canadian Pacific Railway contract in this House in the first instance, I made a calculation based upon $1 per acre for the lands. What authority had I for considering that the lands might fairly be calculated at $1 per acre? I had, in the first place, a very remarkable statement bearing upon that question, made by the late hon. Minister of Finance in his place in this House. Under the contract made with Mr. Foster for the construction of the Georgian Bay Branch, he was to receive from the Government a certain amount of money, and 20,000 acres of land per mile for this road. As my hon. friend then leader of the Government stated, the Government had no lands except in the North-West, and the 20,000 acres per mile had therefore to be land in the North-West. Mr. Foster endeavored, after he made that contract with the Government, to carry it out. He went to New York, and tried to get money in England, but was unable to obtain the means of carrying out his contract. He came back to the Government, and, as was explained by the late Minister of Finance, he stated to them:

"If you will give me 20 cts. an acre, and give me the money, I will give you the land and carry out your contract;" but they refused to do it. The late Government, therefore, refused to consider the land in the North-West, when the whole country was open to choose and select from—to the extent of 1,500,000 acres—worth 20 cts. an acre, and my hon. friend the leader of the late Government gave a very sufficient reason for the course, which they then adopted—which was, that so remote was the country, and so difficult of access at that time, that it was not easy to obtain settlement, and that it would not pay persons to go there and settle. But I hold in my hand a return of all the land sold from 1872—the time the country came into our possession—down to 1880. What was the value of the land in the then condition of the country? This return shows that in the whole of that period, the Government had disposed of in preemptions and in sales, for scrip and cash, 1,929,619 acres of land. How much money did they receive? They received $251,777.50, and there was owing to them $356,761.23, or, in all, cash to the amount of $608,538.73—if they had obtained it. How much was that equal to per acre? It was equal to 31½ cts. per acre.

Mr. MACKENZIE. That is embracing the preemption?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, embracing the preemption. The gross amount received, or to be received—for a great deal of it was on credit, as I have explained—for the preempted lands, and for the lands sold for scrip and cash, was only 31½ cts. per acre; and when the expenses were taken off, it would be brought down to 20 cts. per acre.

Mr. CHARLTON. You treat the scrip as cash.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I treat the scrip as cash. The scrip and cash, in all, amounted to less than $1,000,000. Under these circumstances, it did not appear very much out of the way, with the evidence we had, to value the lands at $1 per acre. But supposing these lands have become more valuable since, what has made them so? I appeal to my hon. friends from the North-West, and am quite indifferent to which side of the House they belong. I do not mean to say that I would not like to see them all seated on this side, for I would like to very much; and I do not believe there are any representatives in this Parliament on whom the Government have such claims as on the representatives of that country—but I appeal to those hon. gentlemen to say what the effect has been on the value of lands in the North-West, of the vigorous prosecution of this great national work by the present Government. If my hon. friend is able now to charge me $2.68 an acre for the land, he is able to do so only in consequence of the vigorous policy we pursued in reference to that work—to the very contract that was made with, and the manner in which it is being carried out by the Canadian Pacific Railway. According to my estimate, if the hon. gentleman puts as cash the subsidy at $25,000,000, and the lands at $2.68 an acre—I shall have something to say about that by-and-bye—that will give him, for the lands, $67,000,000. The road built by the Government I put still at $28,000,000. That makes a total of $120,000,000. But suppose the hon. gentleman could induce anybody to believe that it would be right to charge that contract with $5,000,000 or $6,000,000 expended in surveys away to Port Simpson and Bute Inlet, and from James to Hudson Bays, all over the country in every direction, it would only make $126,000,000. Now that, according to the hon. gentleman's own showing, is the outside amount that he considers he can charge the Government for the construction of that work. It is the hon. gentleman's own estimate of the cost. Supposing we paid the $127,000,000, supposing we accept his statement of the value of the land—I shall show by-and-bye what an extraordinary statement it is—what would it amount to? It would only furnish the money that the hon. gentleman himself, after years of examination, declared this country would have to pay for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The hon. gentleman would now make us believe that we had made an extravagant bargain with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, that we had made them a present of $37,000,000. If that was the case no one is so much to blame as the hon. gentleman himself. If we did not make a better bargain, it was because the Government of which he was long a member, decried the possibility of constructing the Canadian Pacific Railway at all within any reasonable period, because the hon. gentleman could not be made to believe in the value of the lands of that country. If we did not make a better bargain, none are more responsible than those gentlemen, who, when the Government asked their support to enable them to use 100,000,000 acres of land in the North-West to construct the Canadian Pacific Railway, obstructed them at every possible turn. We hoped, when we made this contract, that we were going to lift the Canadian Pacific Railway question out of the arena of party politics altogether. We believed that one of the great difficulties we would have, as a Government, in going on with the work, was the importance to hon. gentlemen in Opposition of obstructing us at every turn, and preventing our being able to proceed with the work as vigorously as necessary; and we hoped, when making a contract with a Company, composed especially of the hon. gentleman's own friends, that we should have reached that point in the consideration of the question that would have taken it out of the arena of party politics. We were unfortunately not able to do that. When I was here asking the House to assist me, as Minister of Railways, in going on with the construction of that work; when I stated, with the view of appeasing all hostility of hon. gentlemen opposite to the construction of that great work at all, that I proposed, in the first instance, to open up the prairie district of the country, which the hon. gentleman now says should have been opened up vigorously by the Government in the first instance, did my hon. friend support me? No; he treated the road I was proposing to build as unworthy the name of a railway. I was compelled to admit, and did admit, that I was proposing to construct the cheapest possible railroad in the first instance, in order to open up the country for settlement—in order to get people into it who would be able to sustain a railway. The hon. gentleman on that occasion said:

"Again, of course, the through traffic depends on the road being first-class, and we must remember that, after we have spent all the hon. Minister proposes, we shall have, not a Pacific, but a colonization road."

He condemned my plan to build a prairie road for the purpose of getting in settlers. What did he further say? He told the House, and he told the country, through the medium of the press, of the danger that was being incurred through the enormous character of the work that this Government was entering upon, and having had the advantage of the calculations made by his colleague the hon. Minister of Public Works, my predecessor, he gave to this House a careful and accurate calculation of what—not a colonization railway, but a Canadian Pacific Railway worthy of the name, would cost the people of this country. He said:

"According to the old system of construction that Central Section would cost, including the other item I have mentioned, altogether over $42,500,000, leaving out entirely both ends."

So that the hon. gentleman himself has declared, in the most formal manner, after years of consideration, after ten years of examination of this question with all that astuteness which the hon. gentleman brings to bear upon every question that comes before this House, that the prairie section of the line would cost $42,500,000, charging it with the $6,000,000 previously spent on the surveys. What more did he say? Why, Sir, he says:

"What are the ends to cost? $45,000,000 is, as I have stated, the cost from Edmonton to Burrard Inlet on the west; and from Fort William to Nipissing on the east, the hon. member for Lambton estimates at a length of about 650 miles."

And we still find it to be 650 miles.

"and a cost of $32,500,000. Thus the ends make up together $77,000,000, the centre and the past expenditure $42,500,000, making a total of $120,000,000."

So I say, assuming the hon. gentleman to be able to charge us with $2.68 an acre for the land, the payment for the construction of a Canadian Pacific Railway to these gentlemen would be $127,000,000; and the hon. gentleman here has a charge as the lowest cost at which the Canadian Pacific Railway can be constructed of $120,000,000. The hon. member for Lambton added $1,500,000, I suppose for contingencies to that, and put it at $121,500,000. And yet the hon. gentleman, now that he knows that it is being constructed as a first-class road, now that he knows there is no road on this continent that will be a better road than the Canadian Pacific Railway when it is completed as it is now being constructed, must admit that instead of their being any such margin of profit as he has intimated, and taking it by his own estimates, the amount at which Government has secured the construction of the road is a fair and reasonable one. Because it must not be forgotten that many of the other calculations of hon. gentlemen on both sides of this House always admitted that for many years to come it would be impossible to operate a through line when constructed without doing it at a considerable cost. Let me say a word here as to this $35,000,000 that the hon. gentleman says the Government gave the Company for the construction of that road. I say there is not an intelligent man in this House, there is not an hon. gentleman on either side of this House, that will not say that it would have been doing a wise thing in the interests of this country when we had completed that 715 miles of railway if we could have induced parties with ample resources, to stock and operate the road without making any charge upon us for doing so; so that the $35,000,000 was wisely expended so far as the interests of the public and the country were concerned, because the hon. gentleman knows that the companies and the parties with whom he was co-operating shrink from the contemplation of that portion of the Canadian Pacific Railway from the foot of the Rocky Mountains down to the shores of Port Moody on the Pacific Ocean. Well, Sir, let me take the hon. gentleman in another way. As I have said, we have the advantage, and we had the great advantage, in making this contract, of having the views of hon. gentlemen opposite as to what it would be wise and judicious for us to offer to any person to construct the Canadian Pacific Railway; we had the fact that they had invited tenders all over the world, in Great Britain, in the United States, wherever there was the slightest chance of getting a tender accepted—they had made an absolute offer of $10,000 cash per mile and 20,000 acres of land per mile. They said to the parties, not how much less land will you do it for, but how much money must we pay you 4 per cent. on in order to induce you to construct the Canadian Pacific Railway along with the $10,000 cash and the 20,000 acres of land per mile? Now, Sir, the length of road at that time consisted of 2,627 miles of the main line; the Pembina Branch, eighty-five miles, the Georgian Bay Branch, eighty-five miles, making altogether 2,797 miles of road as projected by the hon. gentlemen opposite. The cash subsidy of $10,000 per mile that they offered, and offered without being able to get a bid from any person, was equal to $27,970,000 in cash. The land grant of 20,000 acres per mile, at $2.68 an acre, the price that the hon. gentleman declares this land was worth $149,919,200. Now, as to the additional amount, I think I am safe in taking the hon. gentleman's own estimate of the Foster contract. In the Foster contract the hon. gentleman bound himself to pay 4 per cent. on $7,400 per mile for twenty-five years; that applied to the Canadian Pacific Railway would have given a further sum in cash to be paid by Canada of $20,977,500, or, in all, $48,947,500 in cash, $149,919,200 in land, at $2.68 an acre, making a grand total of $198,866,700. Now, Sir, I ask the hon. gentleman whether we are not in a position to congratulate the people of this country for having deprived him and his friends of an opportunity of securing the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway at a cost to this country of $198,866,700? I defy the hon. gentleman to escape from this conclusion in any possible manner. Either the land has a right to be charged at that, or it has not, and as the hon. gentleman charges the same price for lands 250 miles from any railway to-day—and 250 miles from the Canadian Pacific Railway—he puts it down at $2.68 an acre, the same as that alongside the track—I say I am warranted in applying the same rule to the hon. gentleman on this question. The hon. gentleman knows that in that land arrangement he has the benefit of the grant to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company of all the lands in Manitoba,—the odd-numbered sections in Manitoba that were available for the Canadian Pacific Railway. The hon. gentleman knows that he has the advantage of all the lands available along the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway to Moose Jaw Creek, and that the balance of the lands remaining, to be obtained by the Canadian Pacific Railway, are to be taken mainly out of a belt fixed upon by agreement with the Company, between the 52nd and 54th parallels of north latitude, from 100 to 250 miles away from any railway whatever, and that the only means by which that land can be made worth $2.68 an acre are the same means by which they made the land worth $2.63 an acre that they have sold. And what were they? Why, not only by building the Canadian Pacific Railway, but by building, as I have shown, 281 miles of branches, at their own cost, and thus opening up and rendering that land in Southern Manitoba valuable. But the hon. gentleman wants to go back to his old policy of dropping off both ends and building the prairie section. The hon. gentleman's policy was contained in what may be called the Sir William P. Howland's syndicate's offer. And what was that offer? Let me consider it for a single moment in relation to this work. Was it a better offer for the purpose of securing the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway on more favorable terms, even taking the lands at the exaggerated value placed upon them by the hon. gentleman? Let me invite the attention of the House to it. The hon. gentleman knew, and every man who placed his name to that offer knew, it never could have any practical value or effect until there was a change of Administration; and unless this House could be induced to refuse to ratify the contract made by this Government, and to which the faith of Canada had been pledged as well as that of our own, as far as a Government is able to pledge the faith of the country, the hon. gentleman knew that no man sitting on the Treasury benches under those circumstances, the Government having made a bargain in good faith and submitted it to this House for ratification, would be worthy of his position if he had listened to any proposal coming from any other quarter, and especially from a quarter which would not touch the Canadian Pacific Railway until the Government were bound hard and fast by a contract. What did their proposal amount to? It contained the very curious provision—one that ran on all fours with the hon. gentleman's policy, propounded then and advocated now—namely, to build the prairie section and leave the two ends of the line to take care of themselves. The hon. gentleman knew that the offer could not be accepted by us, and that if the House did not ratify the contract we placed before it, we would have to go to the other side of the House, and the hon. gentle man and his supporters would take our places. And then what would have been the position? The position would have been that the leader of the Government, the present leader of the Opposition, stood pledged before the world to abandon the two ends and build the prairie section, for in the proposal of Sir Wm. Howland and his associates, it was stated that the Company would be willing to drop the two ends if the Government wished them to do so. Very well, we will see what their proposal really was. It was, that for the prairie section, 900 miles, they should receive a cash subsidy of $7,333.33 per mile, equal to $6,600,000; also 10,000 acres of land per mile, which, at $2.68 per acre, would be equal to $24,120,000, or a total amount of $30,720,000. That was not all. They were to have the road, from Winnipeg to Thunder Bay, built by the Government, and also the Pembina Branch, and that would have added $16,261,900, making the gross value, $46,981,900, or $52,202 per mile for the prairie section. That was the policy to which the hon. leader of the Opposition stood committed, the only policy which could have been carried out if the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's contract could have been defeated; and I leave the hon. gentleman to say whether, in the light of those facts, he thinks it would have been better for Canada if the Howland Syndicate scheme of construction—admitting that the hon. gentleman's valuation of the land be correct—had been accepted, instead of the policy adopted by the Government, by which a magnificent backbone is given to this country by the construction of a through line of railway, to be completed within some four years, from end to end of this Dominion, so that passengers will be able to travel in the same car from the city of Halifax until they reach Port Moody, on the shores of the Pacific, running through our own territory, instead of by a circuitous route through the United States. I ask the hon. gentleman whether he is able to day to stand up in the presence of this House and the country, and to affirm that it would have been a better policy to have abandoned all the great national features of this project, and to have abandoned the construction of this railway that is indispensable to the security of the North-West, independent of every other consideration? The hon. gentleman knows that, cut off during six months of the year from the rest of the Dominion by the United States, the very existence of the North-West might at any moment have been imperilled, if we did not possess a through line of communication within our own country by which we could pass rapidly from one section to another. I ask whether, in view of that fact, the hon. gentleman would have taken the responsibility of committing the Government of which he was a member, or the Parliament of which he was an honored member, to breaking faith with British Columbia and violating the agreement entered into between the Provincial Government, the Imperial Government, and the Canadian Government, and cutting off from the Dominion that valuable Province on the Pacific Coast? I ask the hon. gentleman whether he would have handed over, at those enormous figures which he has mentioned, the construction of the prairie section, and have left poor Canada to have constructed such sections of the line as would be unprofitable, and to have left us for an indefinite period to carry our traffic over American lines to Chicago, and find a seaport at New York, instead of by the great national line of inter-communication, by which passengers and freight would be carried from one end of the Dominion to the other through our own country, over our own road, and independent of foreign lines? I have told the House what the effect would be even of opening the line from Lake Superior to Winnipeg on the means of transportation, and the progress and development of the great North-West. The hon. gentleman must see that at this hour of the day to come back with this feeble, impotent and miserable policy, as I think I may fairly term it, of abandoning the great national line of communication that is to give us intercourse rapidly and cheaply between the different portions of the Dominion, and hand over the work to a company to build at enormous figures nothing more than the prairie section, is trifling with the intelligence of this House and with the intelligence of the people of this country. But I will take the hon. gentleman for a moment in another way. He says it is not certain but that the construction of branches will be attended with danger. Danger to whom? Is it dangerous to Canada to have opened up at a large expenditure various lines of communication through the North-West and other sections of the Dominion? Is it dangerous to Canada to have the Algoma Branch constructed, which is going to give us within a year from to-day, a line by which traffic can pass very cheaply through the heart of the country instead of by a circuitous route, 600 or 700 miles longer, through the United States? It is impossible for any one to over-rate the value to the North-West of the construction of the Algoma Branch during the short period of three or four years before the line along the north shore of Lake Superior will be completed. Not only so, but it is important to look at the position of the older portions of Canada. Look at the position of this portion of the country engaged in manufacturing products, many of which find a market in the North-West, and the advantage to the people in the older portions of the country of having this cheap and rapid inter-communication between that great North-West country which is being so rapidly developed and their own manufacturing industries. Anything in a contrary direction will not, in my judgment, bear a moment's consideration. But suppose these branches are carried out, and there is no question that the expenditure involved in carrying to completion the roads now rapidly to be proceeded with in the shape of branches, will cost the Canadian Pacific Railway $20,000 per mile—

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. And with what result Sir? Why, Sir, can they give the value of $2.68 an acre to every acre of land of their own without giving us the same value for our land? If, Sir, we have given them $67,000,000 in 25,000,000 acres of land, they have given us $67,000,000 by the construction of the road, making our land worth $2.68 alongside of their own; and there is nothing but cause for the most profound gratification on the part of the House, on account of the position in which we stand in relation to this question. But, Sir, the hon. gentleman makes up his $127,000,000 by $25,000,000 in cash, $35,000,000 in road completed, and $67,000,000 for land, which makes $127,000,000. "Well," he says, "I have figured it out completely. I have made a close calculation. I know to the hundredth part of a cent what the construction of this work is going to cost the Company; and I find—"

Mr. BLAKE. Hear, hear.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Well, when I say that, I am speaking advisedly. I am showing that the hon. gentleman makes a close and elaborate calculation, and I think that he would take into consideration the hundredth part of a cent if that hundredth part of a cent would make a little larger his amount as paid by the Government to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Well, Sir, take it in that way, and he says he has discovered that this road, for which they are receiving $127,000,000, will only cost $90,000,000 to construct it; the Company have only got to pay $90,000,000, and he has taken note of the price at which they are selling their stock, and gone minutely into all their monetary calculations, and come to the conclusion that the road will cost them, as I have said, $90,000,000. Well, Sir, that just gives him exactly a profit of $37,000,000; but, Sir, there is another side to the story. How much does the hon. gentleman suppose that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company up to to-day have paid for rolling stock? How much does the hon. gentleman suppose has been paid by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company of this money which they have received? I stated to the House, that the amount which they have been paid by the the Government, was $6,625,384; and of that, Sir, they have paid for rolling stock, including duty, $4,351,374.84; for rolling stock on the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa and Occidental Railway, $450,800; and the Canada Central Railway, $432,500; and for tools and machinery in their shops, including duty, $244,651; while for steamers, their payments have been already $160,000. Now, Sir, that makes a total of $5,647,325.90 paid for these objects. The hon. gentleman may ask me, what have we to do with the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa and Occidental Railway and the Canada Central? I tell him this—and I was astonished that the hon. gentleman should have endeavored to make a point against the Canadian Pacific Railway Company for acquiring the Canada Central, and the Quebec, Montreal, Ottawa and Occidental Railways—why, Sir, it is impossible for any person to over-rate the value to Canada, it is impossible to over-rate the value to the country, of having that great national line of railway start from the great commercial centre of this country and go to the Pacific Ocean. Why, Sir, it would have taken twenty years for the people outside of very limited districts to get an idea where Callander was; and when you talked about the Canadian Pacific Railway going from Callander to Port Moody, you were simply talking Greek to very illiterate people. The fact is, Sir, taking it as regards traffic and as regards travel, it is impossible to over-estimate the value to every man who has to do business between these two termini, the Pacific coast and Montreal, of having one Company and one railway to deal with instead of two or three. I say, Sir, that no step could have been taken by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company which was more eminently in the interest of this country, in the interest of Canada, than the acquisition of these two roads, for it gave a truly national and complete character to this national work; but, Sir, it was at no cost to the Government. Every person knows that the Canada Central and the line between Ottawa and Montreal, not only pay all the working expenses of these lines, but also the interest on every dollar which they have cost; and they have done this for years; so that instead of being any charge, instead of being any burthen to the resources of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, this was an absolute advantage from a pecuniary point of view, and I am including the branches as well as the direct lines. I may here say, Sir, that there is under contract and subject to early delivery, $753,670 worth more of rolling stock, making, with the Customs duty added $350,462.50; and this is exclusive of the balance of the $850,000 required for steamers, which make no less than $6,497,788 in cash, which has been paid out by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, almost the entire amount of money which they have received from the Government of Canada for all they have done down to the present hour, paid for rolling stock and equipments for the purpose of carrying on the works upon this road. Now, there is another point—and I may here mention that I am satisfied that the return which has been laid by my hon. friend the Minister of Customs (Mr. Bowell) on the Table of the House, has some mistake in it—I have got the figures from the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's office, where they charge, as hon. gentlemen know, every item, and where a very minute account is kept of every class of expenditure; and they state to me, that they have paid in duty, in hard cash, in duties from the Montreal office, $216,774, and from the Winnipeg office, $618,747, or, in all, $35,502.81, which have been paid in duties into the Treasury of this country by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman knows that if we had been carrying on this work, not $1 of that money would have been paid into our Treasury, and that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have not only given an enormous impetus to our country by the rapid development and construction of the road, but they have also put nearly $1,000,000 in cash into the Treasury of the country—not $1 of which would have been placed there if the Government had been constructing this road, because, as the hon. gentleman knows, we were able to bring into the country free of duty, and without contributing to the revenue, anything imported by the Government and for the Government. I give that to the hon. gentleman as another evidence of the position of this Company in relation to this question. Now, Sir, I have no hesitation in venturing the statement that if the Canadian Pacific Railway Company proceed as they have proceeded in the North-West, if they go on with the construction of branches as they have gone on, and as they must go on if they are going to make all their land worth $2.68 an acre—land which is now from 100 to 250 miles away from the railway and their road—if they do this, then I say that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will have paid on that road from end to end and on the branches, which give the land that value, every dollar of the $25,000,000 for the equipment of the line—for the rolling stock, shops, tools, permanent stations, elevators, harbors and wharves, and the various things with which they are obliged to furnish themselves—and so that $25,000,000 of the hon. gentleman's calculation will disappear, and of his $37,000,000 of profit, I thus knock off $25,000,000 without the slightest hesitation for the rolling stock and equipment they will be obliged to provide. Now, the hon. gentleman may say: "You must not charge this twice: you must not first charge the road with the amount to build and equip it, and then charge the equipment besides." I do not intend to do so; but—and I will draw the hon. gentleman's attention to this—what are the two ends to cost? He himself answered that very pertinent question. He put the first cost of the two ends of the Canadian Pacific Railway at $77,000,000, so that the hon. gentleman will see that it will take $10,000,000 more than all they get for the land to build the two ends, according to his own calculations; and I think, Sir, under these circumstances, that the hon. gentleman's calculations of profit will be found very much at fault. But suppose we put the construction of the Lake Superior section at $30,000 per mile without equipment; that would be $20,000,000, and 450 miles of the mountain section at $70,000 per mile, without equipment, would be $31,500,000, or without equipment, a total of $51,500,000, that they would have to pay. An equipment, as I have stated, costing $25,000,000, would bring it up to $76,500,000 that they must pay, and deduct that from the $90,000,000 and you have just $13,500,000, or $15,000 per mile left to apply to the prairie section, and I think, Sir, that after the hon. gentleman's own estimate of $42,000,000 for the prairie section, he will not consider that a very extravagant estimate. Now, Sir, I will take the hon. gentleman in another way. I have shown the absurdity—and he must excuse me for using so strong a term—I have shown the absurdity of the calculation of $2.68 per acre, because I have shown that the mode in which we arrive at it is by taking the total amount that they have received, irrespective of the expenditure that they will have to make for surveying—and they have that country covered with explorers and surveyors in connection with the work—I say irrespective of the cost of the Company, the hon. gentleman is only able to put the amount of land that they have sold at $2.68, by taking in all that land made valuable by the construction of the branches in Southern Manitoba, by taking all the land that is valuable running out from Winnipeg to Moose Jaw Creek; and, Sir, in passing I wish to correct an error into which hon.

gentlemen opposite fell as to the necessity of going into Southern Manitoba to get land, because it could not be obtained in the twenty-four mile belt—I may be mistaken—it may be that it was that great organ of public opinion the Globe newspaper, but it was stated that they are rejecting a great part of these lands along the line of the railway. Why, Sir, they have not rejected an acre. I do not mean to say that there may not be some spots found unfit for settlement, or about which question might arise, but they have calculated all that was valuable of the odd sections which were not already alienated, or against which some claim against the Crown had not been established. I am happy to say that it is the settlers who pour into that country, and get land and acquire rights in connection with these lands, that has created any difficulty with reference to their obtaining their quota of lands within the twenty-four mile belt. But if they can only obtain $2.68 within the twenty-four miles of the railways in Southern Manitoba how can they hope to obtain for 17,000,000 of acres, a large portion of which must be found between the parallel of the fifty-second and fifty-fourth north latitude. Why, I say there is no railway to-day—neither the Canadian Pacific Railway or any other—from within 100 to 250 miles of these lands. There is but one way, and the hon. gentleman knows therefore, that to-day it would pay the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, looking to the long period that must elapse before it is possible to obtain the cash and utilize it for the sale of these lands—it would pay them, if they hoped to secure the lands for immediate or early settlement to take, $1 an acre for the remaining lands. And what would that make? It would make, with the amount they have received, and the amount they would receive, $35,000,000 instead of $67,000,000, or knock off $31,000,000 of the profits of the hon. gentleman, which he is able on paper to place in the pockets of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I believe, Sir, that the hon. gentleman's services have been of very great value to that Company. The discussion which took place between the hon. gentleman and myself gave a very valuable impulse to the stocks of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company on a former occasion, and I am sorry to say that it gave a corresponding drop to the Grand Trunk stocks in the London money market; because when it was found that the hon. gentlemen on both sides of the House joined in treating as enemies of Canada anybody who would seek to injure the prosperity of our great national work, it would be seen that the sudden tumble which had taken place in certain stocks was caused by parties who, I believe, were standing behind the hon. gentleman and furnished him with the calculations which he made. Now, Sir, I do not intend to say much more in relation to that; but I will turn my attention for a single moment to another very important point which the hon. gentleman raised in connection with this discussion. He said that these branches are going to be fraught with danger to this country, and why? He said they would go on and acquire these branches at their own cost, and when it came to the question of having their tolls reduced because of their profits being 10 per cent. of the capital they have expended, we will not be able to reduce their rates for the simple reason that the expenditure of operating these branches will be a burthen upon the main line, and they will require to take all the profits of the main line to make up the profits of the branches. Does not the hon. gentleman see that he is making the strongest case possible for the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. They cannot construct a mile of any branch—and they are doing it at their own cost, without every mile that they construct being of great money value to the Dominion of Canada, because it is opening settlement and doubling and trebling the value of lands that would otherwise remain unsettled and unsold on the part of the Government; and the hon. gentleman must see, therefore, that it is a perfectly legitimate operation. He objects again to their selling their bonds for 60, and he asks with well-feigned innocence—for I cannot believe for a single moment that the hon. gentleman was serious when he was propounding such an extraordinary proposition to the House—he asks whether we are to be charged par for these bonds when they sell at 60. Did the hon. gentleman ever hear of any portion of a railway being built by bonds that the discount on the bonds of the company actually used for the construction of the railway was not charged to the capital.

Mr. BLAKE. But they are not bonds. It is stock.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. They are not bonds, and I can assure the hon. gentleman that he and every Canadian may thank God that they are not. I will tell him why. If they were bonds, when this great national work was completed, it would be in the position that the Union Pacific, the Central Pacific and the Northern Pacific, and those inter-oceanic lines of railway were in. That having a bonded debt of an enormous amount hanging upon it upon which interest must be paid, the interest must be found by obtaining it from the traffic of the road, because it is a mandatory claim which must be met, or the road will pass out of the hands of its possessors, whereas, if the money is raised by the sale of stock, as it is in the present instance, the hon. gentleman will see that although they pay—and justly pay—interest on the stock during the process of construction, the moment the construction is completed there is no mandatory debt upon the property—the property is not compelled to raise a single dollar of interest, because all the interest that has to be paid is going into the pockets of the owners of the work itself—there is no mortgage of any kind. And what is the result? The result is that in Canada we shall be able to point to a great inter-oceanic line of Canadian Pacific Railway that can compete, as I said before, even between San Francisco and Chicago for the transport of the traffic of the Pacific coast down through a large portion of country, for the reason that having issued no bonds, having only issued stock, the road is entirely in an independent position—in a position to deal by competition with other roads in a manner that no road could deal if it had a heavy bonded debt upon it—if it had a mortgage upon it and had to raise the interest under any circumstances. The hon. gentleman says that he deprecates the fact. He says we led the people to expect that capital was going to be brought into this country, and he says there has been no capital brought in. Who prevented it coming in? The enemies of Canada, the enemies of the Canadian Pacific Railway prevented it, and what is the fact? The fact is that if we had not had the good fortune to have made this contract with men of enormous personal wealth the scheme would have broken down, and would have gone to ruin under the hostility it had to encounter in Canada and out of Canada. We had the advantage of the fact that the contract was made with men who were prepared to do not what hon. gentlemen opposite told us would be done when the contract was made. They said a gigantic stock-jobbing operation will be performed; bonds and shares will be floated and these men will disappear without incurring the slightest responsibility or having the slightest trouble in connection with that work. But where are we to-day? We are within a short period of the completion of the work. They are pledged that the work shall be finished from end to end by December, 1886. It is nearly half completed now, and we stand in this position: That there is not a man who went into the contract who does not stand there to-day—not a man who went into the contract who did not dip his hands deep into his own pockets to furnish the means to carry on this national enterprise to its present position. I do not understand the hon. gentleman when he says, on the one hand, that he thinks it would be desirable to bring foreign capital into the country, and yet the moment the attempt is made and stock is put on the money market of the world the hon. gentleman complains, and he would have the Government interpose to forbid them to sell at less than par because he fears it is going to be treated as capital, when we come to consider the question of tolls on this road. I need not tell the hon. gentleman that it would be better to build the road if they only got 50 cts. on the dollar for the stock, in the mode in which it is proposed to build it, than to mortgage this great railway, and put it in a much less favorable position to compete with the other lines of inter-oceanic communication. I do not think I need elaborate that subject. I only wanted to draw attention to the incongruous character of the hon. gentleman's remarks, and of the analysis of this question which he gave to the House. I do not blame the hon. gentleman, standing as he did face to face with the fact that at the end of two years we stood on the great vantage ground of being able to claim before the House and the country, that there was not a single point upon which we had urged the adoption of the contract as to which our predictions have not been realized. I am not surprised that he found it difficult to keep within the limit of fair and legitimate discussion of this question, when even, with his microscopic inspection he could not find a spot or a speck on which he could found a just complaint. Now, Sir, I need not discuss very fully the question of tariffs, although the hon. gentleman attached, as I attach, very great importance to that point. But I might say at the outset that it would be utterly impossible—it could not be expected—no such thing has ever occurred anywhere as a great line of railway rapidly constructed through an unpeopled country being operated except upon a relatively high tariff. Every person knows that you cannot carry freight at a similar rate in proportion to the increased volume you have to carry up to the carrying capacity, and that where you have to carry it long distances through a sparsely settled country you must necessarily have a tariff which is tolerably high. But hon. gentlemen will observe that this tariff is constructed as all such tariffs must be constructed, upon what is called the parabolic curve, that is, it moves up rapidly at first and then more slowly in the longer distances. You must have high charges for short distances in order to recoup yourself for the small charges that must apply to the long distances. I might mention in this connection that I have received a severe criticism of this tariff—and it is the only severe criticism which I have received—from Mr. Brydges, as President of the Winnipeg Board of Trade. But I notice that his complaint is confined to the first, second, third and fourth classes of goods—that is, shelf goods, groceries, dry-goods, and things of that kind. But he is singularly silent as regards the great features of a tariff of this kind—constructed in the interests of the country—and that is the cost of carrying settlers' effects, agricultural implements, fuel, lumber, grain, and those other things upon which you must make an exceptionally low tariff, or it would be utterly impossible to people the remote sections of the North-West. I do not hesitate to say that the tariff which is now on the Table of the House cannot pay the Canadian Pacific Railway, and will not pay them for a considerable number of years. It would be impossible, until a large number of people go into that country, to construct a Tariff which would pay them. Because the climatic difficulties of the country are such that I have no hesitation in saying that the cost of hauling per ton per mile would be four or five times as great in the North-West in the present sparsely settled condition of the country and the small amount of traffic, as it would be on the Grand Trunk Railway with the enormous amount of traffic which I am glad to say it is carrying, and the milder climate in which it operates. The House will excuse me if, instead of reading a comparison of the tariff, I save myself and the time of the House by handing it to the reporter.

Note.—By the Canadian Pacific Railway, Emigrants and Settlers' effects coming into Manitoba and the North-West are carried at half special 6th class rates. Coal is carried from Prince Arthur's Landing in quantities at a reduced rate.

Hon. gentlemen will see by comparing the traffic tariff of the Canadian Pacific Railway with the Atchison, Topeka, and Santa Fe, the Northern Pacific Railway, the one which runs through the same description of country, but at some distance from it, the Union Pacific Railway, and the St. Paul, Minneapolis, and Manitoba Railway, that the tariff of the Canadian Pacific Railway is greatly lower than that of any of these other roads. It is said that they have raised the tariff beyond what the Government were charging, and beyond the previous tariff in operation in Winnipeg. It is quite true they have. But it is a mistake to say that that tariff was higher than the tariff of the Grand Trunk Railway, or than the tariffs of the railways in the Central or Middle States. That tariff was an extremely low tariff, while the distance between St. Vincent and Winnipeg is a comparatively short distance, with a large volume of business. But, as I was saying, the objection that Mr. Brydges, or the Board of Trade of which he is the President, raised, is this: He says that the tariff operates against Winnipeg, that the charge for carrying to Portage la Prairie, sixty-four miles beyond Winnipeg, is not double what it is for carrying sixty-four miles to Winnipeg, and he seems to think that that is an injustice to Winnipeg. Well, I may say at once that the Government are anxious to do everything in their power to promote the prosperity of that great and rapidly increasing commercial centre; but they are not prepared to sacrifice the whole of the North-West to secure that end. If you made a double charge for taking the same amount of goods to Portage la Prairie as to Winnipeg, you would not be acting on the principle of lessening the charge per ton per mile in proportion to the distance it is carried west. I say that to adopt a tariff that would sustain a railway at all on a principle such as that urged by Mr. Brydges, would be utterly destructive of the settlement of those remote portions of the country, to which the tariff as to those great leading articles of grain, fuel, lumber, agricultural implements, settlers' effects, and things of that kind must be a low one. In that respect, I have no hesitation in saying that the tariff will be found to be an exceedingly moderate one, comparing favorably with those of railways similarly situated; and the only objection raised against it, is that it is not so constructed as to make Winnipeg the distributing point for the whole of the North-West. Why should you do that? Winnipeg has many advantages; it is destined to be a very large place; it is the golden gate through which everything for the North-West has to go, whether from the United States, or from Thunder Bay. It has the advantage of possessing a great number of wealthy and enterprising men who are able to import in such large quantities as necessarily to obtain reduced rates for the business brought into that city. But, as I have shown before, it would be impossible to make those rates of the same character as the rates must be made for traffic to a point four or five hundred miles west, at the base of the Rocky Mountains, without adopting a tariff which would be either, on the one hand, utterly destructive of the successful operation of the road, or, on the other hand, utterly destructive of the settlement of the country. I will not elaborate that point further, because I believe that it would be found, on careful examination, that there is no great ground for complaint. I may say that the Government, in order to do justice to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, on the one hand, and to hold themselves free to act from day to day in the interest of the settlers and the people who have to travel, on the other, have fixed the tariff for one year only, so that, as the country settles up and a greater volume of trade offers for the railway, we shall be able to deal with it as circumstances arise, and with the view to promote, to the utmost of our power, the interests of the people who settle in the North-West. Now, Sir, I was a little surprised to find that my hon. friend, with that—shall I say party—blindness, which occasionally affects him, I believe, in common with other people who are subject to partisan influences, actually ventured the astounding proposition that the advantages of the contract were all on one side. He was referring to the statesmanlike expression of my hon. friend the member for Westmoreland, who stated, and in terms that, I think, carried conviction to the mind of every hon. gentleman who heard him, that he was glad that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had a good contract; that he was glad that it was going to be advantageous to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. And why, Sir? A more fatal mistake could not have been made by any Government than to have made a hard contract, under which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company would have come to grief—a hard contract, which would compel them, when shut out of the English money market by the influences to which I have referred, to turn back upon themselves to furnish the means to carry on this enterprise until at some remote period they could obtain some return from the lands that were placed at their disposal. I say, no greater mistake could have been made in the interests of Canada, than to have made a contract, the success of which would have been imperilled, or upon which a doubt could have been thrown. But if any person wishes to know whether or not this contract was all on one side, let him consider the single fact that I have alluded to before, that is, that with all the influences the Company could bring to bear, with the glowing prospectuses they could publish, with everything set forth in the most highly colored terms, down to this hour they have been unable, in London, the place where, above all others, if you can show that money is to be made in any undertaking, any amount of money will be at your command—there they have been unable, with all these advantages, and with the millions of profits which the hon. gentleman's lively imagination conjured up, to sell the stock of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company at more than 60 cts. on the dollar. And what more? Why, Sir, the hon. gentleman has called attention to the fact—I believe he has rather suggested to the Government that there has been a violation of the law—that we should endeavor to prevent the Company from obtaining this 60 cts. on the dollar, for he has a doubt that under the law of this country they can pay $8\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. of interest on the money they have obtained, and pay it out of capital. But did it not suggest itself to my hon. friend, when he was making a calculation of the interest they have to pay—for they have to pay 5 per cent. on par for every dollar they get during construction—did it not occur to the hon. gentleman what that would mean at 60 cts. in the dollar for four or five years? And yet that hon. gentleman did not hesitate to say to this House that the Company were going to have a profit of \$37,000,000, regardless of those considerations which are of primary importance in a calculation with reference to monetary transactions. I think, Mr. Speaker, if you will allow me, I will ask the permission of the House to pause here before I enter upon another branch of the question, as I see that it is impossible for me to close my remarks before six o'clock.

After Recess.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Mr. Speaker: Before resuming the discussion of this question at the point at which I left off, I want to call the attention of the House for a single moment to an omission I made in quoting from the speech of the hon. the leader of the Opposition when discussing the policy of the Government propounded to the House on this important question on the 15th April, 1880. I have shown that the hon. gentleman, after a careful calculation and estimate of the amount it would cost to make a first-class Canadian Pacific Railway, declared that it could not be placed at a smaller amount than $120,000,000; but I find that I did some injustice to the hon. gentleman in leaving it at that point, because by reference to that speech, which I now hold in my hand, I find the hon. gentleman added $24,500,000 to that sum as the cost to the country on the interest that would require to be paid during the construction of the work. I will read his words. He said:

"According to the old system of construction that Central Section would cost, including the other items I have mentioned, altogether over $42,500,000, leaving out entirely both ends. What are the ends to cost? $45,070,000 is, as I have stated, the cost from Edmonton to Burrard Inlet on the west, and from Fort William to Nipissing on the east, the hon. member for Lambton estimates at a length of about 650 miles and a cost of $32,500,000. Thus the ends make up together $77,000,000, the centre and the past expenditure $42,500,000, making a total of $120,000,000, and that wholly exclusive of the legitimate and necessary charge, which must be added in all cases, the charge for interest during construction. In all enterprises of this description every estimate with reference to expenditure includes a provision for interest on capital provided during construction, before the enterprise becomes productive, and this item is to be considered in the reckoning. The House will be surprised to learn that on our expenditure up to this time, and rating the interest at 4 per cent. only, as the money was raised partly on a guarantee, that interest up to 30th June next will exceed $1,250,000. Taking the estimate of ten days ago if $60,000,000 are expended in the next ten years, there will be a total of over $34,500,000 for interest, calculating interest on future loans at 5 per cent., the lowest rate, as I believe, at which the money can be raised."

Now, my hon. friend will admit that the Canadian Pacific Railway Committee cannot raise money at 5 per cent. interest, and consequently he will require to add to his $120,000,000 $24,500,000, as the cost of the road, plus the increased interest which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company will have to pay over and above the rate of 5 per cent. which my hon. friend has fixed. I am glad that the opportunity has occurred of drawing attention to that, because I think the hon. gentleman's statement would not be quite complete without it. And I may say, Sir, in speaking of capital on which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are entitled to obtain 10 per cent., under the law on our Statute-book, and under the contract we have made with them—because the hon. gentleman will remember that the Consolidated Railway Act was amended, and the contract made to embrace the amendment—there is a provision which declared that the capital of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company should be held to be the amount of money which the Company was obliged to put into the work, plus the subsidies received from the Government.

Mr. BLAKE. Less the subsidies.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Less the subsidies received from the Government. So that the moment that the Company obtain 10 per cent. on their capital, on the amount they had put into the work, less the subsidies they had received from the Government, these tolls are subject to revision. The hon. gentleman will see, therefore, as I stated before, that whatever money the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are obliged to raise upon the sale of bonds, in order to honestly implement the amount received from the Government of Canada for the construction of the work, whatever discount there is on that amount will fairly be chargeable under the head of capital. It is not to be supposed that any railway company will sell their bonds for any smaller amount, at any lower rate than the very highest rate they can obtain in the market, and having obtained on the best terms possible the amount of money absolutely necessary to implement, whatever that may be, the subsidies furnished by the Government, that will be the capital on which they will be entitled to receive 10 per cent. profit before the Government can interpose and forcibly reduce or require a reduction of the tolls on the road. Now, Sir, I have referred to a good many of the objections which the

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

hon. gentleman made in the course of the two speeches which he delivered and the criticisms that he offered upon this subject. The hon. gentleman, as I said before, objected to their eastern engagements, and thought it was quite possible they had gone too far, and the hon. gentleman seemed to think that they had behaved somewhat imprudently. Well, Sir, from my knowledge of those gentlemen up to the present time, I had supposed they were tolerably well qualified to take care of their own interests. During my acquaintance with them, I have found them not at all wanting in a knowledge of what the interests of the Company required, or in any amount of vigor in pressing those interests; and I think he will find that, in the eastern engagements they have made, they have consulted the interests of Canada as well as their own by having an extension of their line from Callander to Montreal. I have already stated that not a dollar of the money of the country has been required to be used in connection with these engagements, because those sections of the line yielded a profit over and above the interest required to meet the entire expenditure which the Company had to make. The hon. gentleman's mind may, therefore, be relieved upon that point. Then the hon. gentleman refers to the subject of monopolies. He says "we declared the provisions as to monopoly were unnecessary in order to procure the construction of the work, and were calculated to retard the settlement and impair the prosperity of that country, and to create great dissatisfaction and discontent within its bounds." I want to know where the hon. gentleman gets the impression that this road could have been constructed at all without the monopoly to which he refers. I want to know where the hon. gentleman obtains the information that it would be possible for any person or any body of capitalists, on the security offered, to obtain the means that are required to construct this road unless this Parliament had given them all the advantages that that contract provides. The hon. gentleman has the fact before him of the difficulty of floating the stock of the Company, notwithstanding all the advantages which the contract provided. I deny altogether, Sir, that if the terms given by the Government of Canada to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had been impaired in the slightest degree, there would have been the least chance of the successful carrying out of that great project. The hon. gentleman says it has been held that the Company was not merely entitled to, but could compel the Government of the day to exercise its power of disallowance. He says: "I myself have never been able to understand it being held that the Company was not merely entitled to, but could compel the Government of the day to exercise its power of disallowance, to veto charters for local railways within the borders of the Province of Manitoba, contrary to the bargain with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I say that that construction of the bargain is not merely contrary to what we were told the terms were to be, but contrary certainly to what we were told its terms were when the bargain was laid before us by the Minister of Railways." Now, Sir, I ask my hon. friend to produce the statement made by the Minister of Railways.

Mr. BLAKE. I said we were told that when the bargain was before us, but I did not say by the Minister of Railways.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Then the Minister of Railways did not tell it?

Mr. BLAKE. But the hon. First Minister did.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. All I can say is that as the humble mouthpiece of the Government, I undertook to state the terms of the contract, and the position under which the Government and the country under that contract stood in relation to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and the hon. gentleman knows that no man in the House can charge me with ever having receded in the slightest degree from the position I have ever taken upon that subject. Sir, I may recall to the hon. gentleman the fact that this has not been the policy of one Government, but the policy of all Governments. The policy of the Government of which he was a member was just as strongly pronounced upon that question of the disallowance of local charters which were calculated to interfere with the traffic of the Canadian Pacific Railway, as the policy of the present Government has been. The hon. gentleman knows that during the term of office of the late Government, a charter was given, subject to its being brought into operation by proclamation, for the construction of a line of railway from Winnipeg, on the west side of the Red River, to the United States boundary. The hon. gentleman knows, too, that my hon. predecessor, then Premier of the country, was applied to by Mr. George Stephen, to issue a proclamation making that charter law. What did he say? He refused to issue the proclamation. He vetoed the Bill. That is the position the hon. gentleman took. And why did he take it? He took it upon the plain and palpable ground that the Government of the country had undertaken the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, and they would not permit competing lines from the United States of America, or anywhere else, to come into competition with that undertaking. That is the position the hon. gentleman took. I say he took a sound and statesmanlike position, a position which—vigorously as he was pressed by his then opponents in Parliament, vigorously as the hon. gentleman's policy was being criticised by the Opposition of the day—no man in this House would have been so recreant to what we all knew to be the true interests of this country as to assent. But what more? Applications were made by companies who came down to the Government and Parliament for the passage of Bills that would secure competition between the Canadian Pacific Railway and those companies. What did we do, Sir? I went down, as Minister of Railways, to the Railway Committee, composed of 100 of the leading members on both sides of the House, and declared in most positive terms that the policy of this Government was to steadily refuse any company permission to build a line of railway in competition with the Canadian Pacific Railway or its branches. That was the position we took, and I say it unhesitatingly, and in the presence of hon. gentlemen opposite, that that policy met with the universal assent of the Railway Committee, of hon. gentlemen opposite, as well as ourselves. I say that the policy, neither in the Railway Committee room, nor in this House, was challenged; it was accepted as a sound unquestionable policy in the interest of the country. Then parties came down in the following Session, and appealed to the Government to allow rival lines to be built in the Province of Manitoba, running to the American boundary, and they were again refused. So I say there was no person in this House, or out of it, that did not know that the policy of the Government was never more pronounced or declared than it was upon that question of the prevention of the construction of any railway in Manitoba that was going to interfere with the Canadian Pacific Railway. Now, what was the Canadian Pacific Railway in those days? The Government had not undertaken to carry a trunk line of railway through Canada, nearly 650 miles along the north shore of Lake Superior, where not a single inhabitant was to be found from the time you left Red Rock at Nipigon, until you came down to Callander. No Government was prepared to undertake the construction of the work. No Government—this Government had not proposed at that day to do it. And notwithstanding that was the state of things, we refused to allow competition with the Pembina Branch of the Canadian Pacific Railway running to the boundary of the United States. Now, there is not a fair-minded man in Canada, a man who is not blinded by party feeling, who will say that—when the Company are bound not only to do all we were doing, when we refused competition, but to supplement that by building 650 miles through the desert between Callander and Thunder Bay—we were not a fortiori bound to carry out the same policy regarding the Company that we adopted for the protection of the Government irrespective of any contract at all. It is only necessary to apply the commonest principles of justice to this question to be convinced of that, and that is what I have invariably done in this House and out of it in discussing this question. I say the interests of this country demand that the Canadian Pacific Railway should be made a success, and the man who does any act by which that success is imperilled takes a course which is hostile to the interests of Canada. But somebody may ask what about the interests of Manitoba? Are the interests of Manitoba and the North-West to be sacrificed to the policy of Canada? I say, if it is necessary—yes. I met a deputation when visiting that country three years ago at Emerson, who put this subject before me, and I told them then and there that the Government of Canada made it its first consideration to do everything it could do to develop the great North-West Territory; that we were asking the people of the older Provinces to take hold of this gigantic work to push it forward and to develop and build up that country. And I said, under these circumstances, anxious as we are to do everything that will promote your interests, we would feel that we were traitors to the North-West, to Manitoba and the rest of Canada, if we were to allow ourselves to be swerved from that policy which we have declared hitherto honestly and plainly to be absolutely vital to the success of the Canadian Pacific Railway. On this ground I ask the approval of this policy, not only by all parts of the Dominion, but I ask Manitoba and the North-West to concur in it as a part of that railway policy which has vitalized and developed that country with such wonderful rapidity and energy. That is my answer to the hon. gentleman in relation to that. He says there is a great deal of dissatisfaction in this country on that subject. Who stirred it up, Sir? Who are the men, where is the press, where are the people that hounded the Government of this country, and assailed it day by day, and tried to influence the people of the North-West to believe that they were being prejudiced and injured by the policy of this Government? The same who when on this side of the House had propounded and acted upon the same policy as the only just and reasonable policy they could offer in relation to the interests of the whole of this country. So much, Sir, for disallowance. I think I have noticed and done justice to all the leading positions taken by the hon. gentleman in the speeches which he delivered. I now will refer, for a few moments, to the last and most important statement that he made, and that was the point at which I had arrived when the House rose before Recess. I said that when the hon. member for Westmoreland propounded the broad, statesmanlike policy that it was in the interests of Canada that the Canadian Pacific Railway should have a good bargain, he propounded a sentiment that will be echoed and reechoed from one end of this country to the other as a sound and judicious sentiment. I believe they have a good bargain. I do not hesitate to say so, and I trust they will make great fortunes out of their venture in undertaking the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway—an enterprise beset with difficulties as it is; a gigantic enterprise, from undertaking which both Governments in this country shrank; a work so gigantic that alarm was created in the minds of both the great parties in this country at the idea of taking it up as a Government work, with all the resources of the Government of the country, with the means of bringing everything free into the country, with every facility and advantage, with the means of getting any amount of money we wanted at 4 per cent. Notwithstanding all these advantages, both the great parties shrank from the contemplation of the Government of Canada constructing this gigantic road for 3,000 miles through a comparatively unpeopled country. It was a source of great relief to the people of this country when the Government were able to come down and lay upon the Table of the House a contract which provided for the construction of that work upon terms more unfavorable than had ever been propounded by any member of this House on either side, and which were eminently advantageous to the people of this country. I say that at this moment, if the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are successful, they owe it to the undivided energy with which, heart and soul, all the leading members of that corporation have thrown themselves into this work and made it the business of their lives. If this enterprise is made a success, and it has been trembling in the balance more than once, notwithstanding all their resources, it is because the Government were fortunate enough, not only to get men of vast experience and great resources, practically acquainted with all the work they had to do, but men who themselves possessed great fortunes upon which they could fall back, to implement any want of funds, while they were endeavoring to obtain the necessary means from that which had been an unpeopled desert—the North-West. Under these circumstances, I rejoice to believe that they have met, and will meet, with great success, and ultimately obtain a valuable property which can be worked, not only in their interests, but in the interests of the people of this country. Having said that much, I say that I believe my hon. friend never made a greater mistake as a statesman, and I believe that hon. gentlemen opposite never in the course of their lives committed themselves to an unsound policy, looking at the interests of their party, than their hostility to this great work. They could not afford to take the position they have taken. Their past record year after year; their long struggles in connection with this question; their statements again and again to which they were committed in this House in relation to the enterprise, in relation to the value of the land, the character of the territory that had to be pierced, and the enormous responsibility that was going to be thrown upon whoever constructed the Canadian Pacific Railway, by its operation—I say that in view of these public statements and their past record—a record they will find to be an indelible record—they could not afford to take the position of hostility they have taken in relation to this great work. I say if they were capable of learning anything, if anything could make an impression on them, if hon. gentlemen could be taught anything by experience, the experience of the past two years ought to have convinced them of the fatal mistake they had made, and induced them to abandon that line as soon as possible. Looking to the interests of the great Conservative party in this country, I want to see them pursue to the bitter end the policy they are now pursuing. Looking I say, to the interests of the great Conservative party, I want these hon. gentlemen on this question, just as they are on the National Policy, to remain in clear and well defined antagonism with the great mass of public sentiment in this country. Sir, I speak of what I know when I say—for I have not spent twenty-eight years of continuous public life, and in the study of public questions, and the public mind, without being able to form some judgment of the public sentiment of this country—I say there never was any question before the people of Canada upon which the overwhelming masses of the people of all parties and of all classes had their minds more completely and thoroughly made up than on the question of this Canadian Pacific Railway contract. In the debate on the Address my hon. friend declared, in reviewing the statesmanlike utterances of my hon. friend from Westmoreland, that the advantages were all on one side. Why, Sir, is it possible that the hon. gentleman was candid? Is it possible that anything can so blind his eyes, so deafen his ears, so obtund every sense by which a gentleman learns what is transpiring around him, as to induce the hon. gentleman to venture such a statement? Let me ask him what has been the effect of this measure upon the great vital question of population for Canada? The hon. gentleman knows that there is no question upon which our rapid progress and continued prosperity so entirely depend as the means by which we shall be able rapidly to fill up that great North-West and bring population into all sections of this country. When my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture brought down his estimate for immigration, the hon. gentleman said: "Why, what does this mean? We thought we were to be relieved of all this; we thought the Canadian Pacific Railway Company were going to spend all the money and bring the immigration into the country, and that we were going to fold our arms." Sir, nobody ever thought anything of the kind. I admit that my hon. friend behind me has exhibited wonderful industry, wonderful energy and wonderful skill in attracting immigration to Canada, and I say that all his efforts would have been comparatively futile but for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I say that no one factor has produced the influence upon our country in that great, that vital, question of immigration that the construction of this Canadian Pacific Railway has produced. I say the very fact that you have capitalists everywhere, capitalists in London, capitalists in France, capitalists in Germany, capitalists in New York, capitalists in Amsterdam, all interested in this great national work of Canada, and the fact that through every avenue that will reach the public mind of Europe from end to end, hundreds of thousands of documents are sent out that no Minister of Agriculture could ever have sent out without the aid of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company—I say that all these facts are entirely ignored by the hon. gentleman. And what do these documents show? They have shown the world, they have shown the people of the overpopulated portions of Europe the fact that they will not have to remain pent up in Winnipeg, unable to get land for settlement, but that a rapidly constructed railway will carry them the day after they reach Winnipeg, 500 or 600 miles out through the prairie country where they can choose land to the right and to the left upon which to locate and build up their own fortunes. Now, Sir, what do our statistics show? The hon. gentleman has only to look at the report of my hon. friend to find that the immigration went up from 40,000, in 1878, to 193,000 in 1882. Of these there came by the St. Lawrence, in 1878, 10,295, and, in 1882, 44,850 settlers. In 1878, 29,808 settlers came to the country, and in 1882, no less than 112,458. In 1882 no less than 70,532 settlers went to Manitoba and the North West, and no less than 13,325 were from the United States. Now, what do these figures show? Why, Sir, every person knows that the great disadvantage under which Canada has labored in times gone by was that the United States of America had a North-West to attract immigration, while Canada had none. Every person who has studied this question knows that there is nothing more true than that "Westward the star of Empire wends its way." Every person knows that the tendency is to go West. Look at the Eastern States of the United States, and what do you find? Look at their population to day compared with what it was long ago, and you find it comparatively stationary because of that constant drifting to the west that takes place on this American continent. The same took place in Canada. The tendency was to go West and as Canada had no West they went to the United States. How is it now? Why, Sir, not only is the current westward to the United States stopped, but it is reversed and now flowing back over the 49th parallel of latitude are the people that went out of our country into the West, and those who have always lived in the United States until some 13,000 of them during last year came over. And I say that if the railway has done nothing else, if this development of our North-West had done nothing else than to turn this current of immigration into our own country, and invite people from across the boundary into our North-West, if it had done nothing else it would have accomplished all that would be necessary to commend it to the judgment and the regard of any patriotic Canadian. Deduct the floating population out of the whole and you have of remaining settlers in the North-West, 58,751. But, Sir, that is not all. I will read, as the authority is better than any statement I can make—and I am sure the House will permit me to do so—I will read one of the most interesting extracts that ever graced the report of any hon. Minister of Agriculture since Canada was a country :

Sir CHARLES TUPPER.

"It thus appears that the value in money and property ascertained as brought by the immigrants into the country in 1882 was $3,171,501.59, besides a very large amount unascertained taken into Manitoba, and which it is impossible to approximate. In addition, there were the very considerable values in tools, implements and effects.

"The amount of money taken to Manitoba by intending settlers during 1882 was very considerable, and as will be seen by a note at the bottom of this page, it was stated by a banker that $8,000,000 were on deposit in Winnipeg, which sum had been taken in for investment before the middle of the year. Still further capital no doubt, was brought in after that date, of which no record is available. Part of this was from the older Provinces, but having in view the fact the capitalists from the Eastern Provinces, intending to invest in Manitoba, or the North-West Territory, would probably leave their deposits in their own banks, for draft upon them as required, a proportion of three-fourths of the above amount of $8,000,000, may be placed to the credit of newly arrived immigrants; and this cash capital without taking into account the monies deposited after the date above referred to, would make a total value of cash, goods and effects brought in by immigrants $10,000,000 in round numbers, in 1882.

Now, Sir, I have given you the figures in relation to the past year, and I draw attention to the fact that a cablegram appeared in the Globe newspaper from its London correspondent announcing that three steamships sailing that day conveyed 3,000 persons from Liverpool to the Dominion of Canada, and declaring that that number was double that which ever embarked on any previous day in the history of the country. I need not add a word to a statement of that kind to show the enormous value to this country of the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, which, as I have said, has been one of the chief factors in changing the position of our country and ensuring that we may rely on a steadily increasing tide of immigration, because the initial difficulty in immigration is the great difficulty; provided you have, as I am proud to say we have, the most inviting country for settlers in the world. All you want is the means of getting people into the country, from which they can communicate to their friends the prosperity that has attended them, and you will draw ultimately thousands, tens of thousands and hundreds of thousands after them. Our advance will thus be in a progressive ratio, and we will have the proud satisfaction of knowing that this garden of the world will be at no distant day filled with energetic and enterprising settlers who will make that hitherto neglected wilderness blossom as the rose. Now I may, perhaps, be permitted, with a little personal pride, to allude to the resolutions which I had the honor to submit, as representing the views of the Government in 1879. I do not intend to read the whole of them, but I will read three, as follows :—

"3. Resolved, That reports from the Mother Country set forth an unprecedented state of enforced idleness of the working classes, and the possibility of a scheme of relief on a large scale being found indispensable to alleviate destitution.

"4. Resolved, That the construction of the Pacific Railway would afford immediate employment to numbers of workmen, and would open up vast tracts of fertile land for occupation, and thus would form a ready outlet for the over-populated districts of Great Britain and other European countries.

"5. Resolved, That it is obvious that it would be of general advantage to find an outlet for the abundant population of the Mother Country within the Empire, and thus build up flourishing Colonies on British soil, instead of directing a stream of immigration from England to foreign countries."

I need not remind the House that the great difficulty under which Canada labored was that the United States presented such overwhelming attractions, previous to our having a North-West of our own, that we were unable to compete with them in relation to immigration. But I will draw attention to the fact that while hon. gentlemen opposite told the people it would be an idle dream for the Government to suppose they could enlist the Government of England in support of our policy, I have the proud satisfaction of knowing that to-day one of the questions uppermost in the minds of British statesmen and British Ministers who to-day control the destinies of the empire, is this question, and it is held that a sounder policy could not be adopted to meet the difficulties of the over-populated districts of the Mother Country, whether in England, Ireland or Scotland, and there are largely over-populated districts in all of them, than that of immigration. Lord Derby, the able Minister who now presides over our colonial destinies, publicly declared that England could not appropriate millions of its treasure to better use than to send to Canada assisted emigrants from the over-populated districts of Great Britain; and at last, through the various channels and means, means which never could have been adopted but for the attractions we are able to offer in connection with the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, the people of England and the press are being brought to understand that there is no source to which they can look with more confidence as a relief from their difficulty of over population, than the means of using the money at the disposal of the Imperial Government to place those who are now struggling with poverty and wretchedness in the heart of the empire, in the great Canadian North-West where, by industry and energy and by a tithe of the labor which now refuses to give them the common necessaries of life, they may rapidly become not only successful settlers, not only men who are going to add to the wealth of the country, but a source of strength to the empire instead of a source of the greatest possible weakness. And yet with all those facts before him the hon. leader of the Opposition ventured the statement that all the advantages of the Canadian Pacific Railway contract are on one side. Let him turn to Winnipeg for a few moments. Let him look at Winnipeg as it was, and as it is—before it was vitalized by the vigorous manner in which this Government undertook the work of pushing forward the railway. The hon. gentleman has only to turn to the figures to find the most astounding facts that are presented in any part of this continent. Where, I ask, even in the Western States of the Union, can the hon. gentleman show me a single spot, notwithstanding all the advantages they possess, and all the connections they have made by means of immigrants in the United States and their friends in the old countries, which presents the evidences of rapid progress and prosperity that Winnipeg presents to-day? Where is there a spot on this continent that has surged ahead with the rapidity, strength and energy seen in that city which is soon to become, which has already become, one of the great commercial centres of this country? The population in 1871 was 500, in 1881 it had risen to 9,000, and that was largely after 1878, as the hon. gentleman knows. But from 1881, the first year of the operations of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, the population went up from 9,000 to no less than 25,000 in a single year. The value of assessed property increased from $9,000,000 in 1881, to $30,000,000 in 1882. What evidence can be more conclusive of the influence and success of that policy than is to be found in the figures to which I have directed attention. The imports from Great Britain and foreign countries in 1881 were $2,837,431; in 1882 they had risen to $3,222,923, being an increase of $5,395,497. But the amount of increase with our own country is a question in which the people of the older Provinces have a lively interest. In addition to the $5,000,000 increase of imports from Great Britain and foreign countries, the imports from the older Provinces of Canada reached $12,000,000, making the imports for the little town of Winnipeg, as it was but yesterday, no less than $20,000,000 in a single year. Let us now turn to Customs duty, and what do we find? I need not tell the House the material value of every immigrant; that all Canada requires in order to secure material progress, and to rapidly wipe out the debt of the country and have a degree of prosperity which will compare with that of any country in the world, is that people shall be brought into the country and furnished with the means of obtaining profitable employment. The taxes paid into the revenue of the country by every immigrant who comes in, makes them an absolute and certain source of wealth. What do the Customs returns show. The duties collected in 1879 were $279,255; in 1881, $651,892; in 1882, $1,587,327, or an increase for 1882 over 1881 of $935,435, showing nearly $1,000,000 of an increase; and yet my hon. friend hesitates to accept $1,500,000 of Credit Valley Railway bonds as security for $1,000,000 to enable the Canadian Pacific Railway Company to prosecute more vigorously the great work in which they are engaged. Not only have we an increase of about $1,000,000 here in consequence of that contract, but we have at the same time nearly $1,000,000 absolutely paid into the Treasury of this country by themselves, or as nearly so as possible, in connection with their own works, $5,000,000 were expended in building in 1882. The deposits in the Government Savings Banks increased $707,922 in 1882 over 1881, and yet the hon. gentleman can find no evidence of any benefit accruing to Canada from the contract for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Does he believe, does any hon. gentleman in the House believe that the history of our country would furnish figures like these to evidence to the world the gigantic strides which we are making in progress and prosperity, if it had not been for the contract made with the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I say, Sir, under these circumstances, that we may point to that country, that we may point to the development of Winnipeg in this relation. Here, Sir, I want to ask the permission of the House to read an extract from a speech made the other day by Mr. Duncan McArthur. Mr. Duncan McArthur is a gentleman, a practical, clear-headed, able man, who has been engaged for ten years in the city of Winnipeg as manager of the Merchants Bank, a position from which he has recently retired. On a recent occasion that gentleman used the following language:

"When I came to Winnipeg upwards of ten years ago, it was a remote and insignificant village 500 miles north of any considerable town in the United States, and containing a population of about 800 souls. It was regarded both by Americans and Canadians as the ultima thule of settlement and of civilization."

He then went on to describe what he had seen during those ten years, but I will not detain the House, except to read what he says with reference to the future; and I read it, Sir, not as the language of a heated partisan, not as the language of any person who has anything to gain by advancing the political interests of one party or another, but as the clear deductions of a logical and able mind, in a better position carefully to study the past, and to estimate the future progress of that country, than perhaps almost any gentleman who is to be found in its borders. What does he say:

"And now, gentlemen, a few words about the future of Manitoba and the North-West. It is difficult to believe that the North-West Territory should have remained, so far as people generally were concerned, a terra incognita until the last twelve or fifteen years. Yet such is actually the case, and had it not been for the consolidated impulse that accompanied and followed the Confederation of the British North American Provinces, it might have remained a terra incognita to this day. Our statesmen never dreamt, during the earlier stages of their efforts, to bring about Confederation, that there was an unborn and greater Dominion in the North-West, stretching from Lake Superior to the Rocky Mountains on the one hand and from the international boundary to the Arctic Sea on the other, containing agricultural, manufacturing and mining resources sufficient to supply the wants of one hundred millions of human beings—a territory worth more in point of material value than all the other Provinces put together. Gentlemen, our country is so vast and its resources are so rich and varied, that it is impossible to mark the extent of the former or to estimate the value of the latter; and very few even of those who have lived longest and who have travelled most in the interior of the country possess an adequate idea of the value of Canada's heritage in the North-West. Confining one view of it to that portion that is suitable for agricultural purposes, we can see, standing as we do on the eastern confines of the fertile belt, an immense tract of country extending from Winnipeg to the Rocky Mountains on the one hand, and from Winnipeg to the fertile valleys of the Peace River country on the other hand, a tract of country which contains hundreds of millions of acres suitable for farming and grazing purposes, and which is sufficient to afford homes, an independence and comfort to the surplus population of Europe for centuries to come; and owing to the exigencies arising from too large populations in many European countries, our North-West is destined to be speedily peopled. Our soil, which is easy of cultivation, and is of unsurpassed fertility, is obtained free by actual settlers, and owing to its level surface, machinery, which so largely aids the efforts of the farmer in a prairie country, can be employed with advantage in every agricultural operation. The country is, moreover, accessible to Europe, and apart altogether from the special immigration which has been induced of late years to come here from the other Provinces and from Great Britain, we may expect that the great wave of immigration from Northern Europe, which during the last twenty years has been slowly but surely filling up Minnesota, Dakota and other United States Territories, will reach us and conduce greatly to the rapid settlement of the country. Moreover, our climate is healthy and bracing and is peculiarly well adapted to inspire mental and physical vigor into our people. (Applause.) It requires no ardent imagination to picture the change which awaits the North-West during the next twenty years. Long before that time the face of the country will be covered with a network of railways. Our prairies that now appear so bleak and boundless, will be cultivated and planted, and dotted over with the comfortable homes of an intelligent, prosperous and a contented people. We shall be able to grow and export a sufficient quantity of grain to justify us in calling our country the granary of the world. Many cities and towns of great importance will spring up, and Winnipeg will not only retain its present position and prestige, but will in all probability be the largest and most important city in Canada. Those who know little or nothing about the North-West and its resources may think these statements are either gross exaggerations or the utterance of a sanguine and partial individual, but the time is not far distant when this great country will be sufficiently well known to receive the recognition to which it is entitled. With such a future before us we may well work and hope and wait. Unlike many of the older nations of the world, who are limited by space, fettered by poverty, and crushed by the exactions of injustice and tyranny (whose greatness and opportunities are in the past), we stand on the threshold of a new land of promise—a land which constitutes one of the fairest portions of the new world—a land on which millions of our race are yet destined to act out the great drama of life, and which is to witness new and triumphal marches in literature, science and art, and in many other forms of national progress and development."

I may say, Sir, that no gentleman can read that statement, that clear, calm, dispassionate statement, which in every line of it carries conviction to the mind of every intelligent man, without coming to the conclusion, that the fears and anxieties of hon. gentlemen opposite had been in the past totally without foundation, and that all that is required in order to develop a greater Britain in this continent with a rapidity that the people of the Old World have never been able to understand or appreciate, is to energetically go forward in the future as we have done in the past; and by the policy which we have entered upon in the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, give that scope and verge for the development of that country that it would be impossible to give to it in any other way. I referred a little while ago, Sir, to the value of branches that were being constructed by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. I alluded to the fact that, with the exception of the land along their lines from Moose Jaw to the Rocky Mountains, they would be obliged to get the balance of their land in the North-West, between the fifty-second and fifty-fourth parallels of north latitude, and that these lands were from 100 to 250 miles distant from the railway. Now, Sir, let me just draw attention to this fact—that while the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have been constructing 281 miles of branches out of their own resources, and while they are engaged in constructing another branch of 110 miles, and another of 180 miles in addition, to be built within the next two years, all that we have been able, all that this Government has been able to do in constructing branches through that great and priceless heritage of the North-West, by private enterprise, has been one branch of fifty-one miles—the South-Western—and another of thirty, soon to be fifty miles on the Portage, Westbourne and North-Western. I need not say, Sir, that this is the total amount accomplished, notwithstanding that this Government gave to these Companies 6,400 acres of land per mile at $1 an acre along these lines of railway, to aid and assist them in the construction of these private branches; and here, Sir, I may say, that on the Portage, Westbourne and North-Western line, as everybody knows, not a blow would have been struck if it had not been for the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway to Portage la Prairie—and I give that, Sir, as evidence to the House of the enormous value of the development of this country in the North West. Not only, Sir, have we this record of Winnipeg, but going further West, we find Portage la Prairie, Brandon, Broadview, Regina, Moose Jaw, Medicine Hat and Calgary, and we find in all these points the nucleus already of thriving, energetic, populous towns rapidly to become large centres of population throughout that district, and giving the nucleus and starting-points for the development of the population and extension of branches north and South, in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway, for the development of that country to an extent which could not be accomplished in any other way. In the cattle ranches at the foot of the Rocky Mountains we have been enabled to illustrate and demonstrate to the world the fact that there is no part of the continent of America better adapted to that class of business than our Canadian North-West, into which great herds of cattle are pouring, and supplying, as they will continue to supply, the most important elements in connection with the development of that country. Now, Sir, I would like to ask my hon. friend, with these facts before him, whether he is still prepared to reiterate the statement that the advantages in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway contract are all to be found on the one side. I do not believe he will. Sir, we are developing not only the agricultural resources of that country, but capitalists are pouring in to develop its mineral resources. There is one respect in which we have at a great advantage over any portion of the prairies of the Western States—one respect in which they cannot at all compare with us. It has already been stated on the highest testimony that the fertility of the soil of our portion of the North-West is unequalled; and we have coal, one of the most vital elements in building up a great and prosperous people with rapidity, in the Canadian North-West—a great advantage over the prairies of the Western States where the absence of this element was found to be a material drawback. I have in my hand the report made by an able, and one who is rapidly becoming a very eminent, man—I refer to Mr. George M. Dawson, who is connected with the Department of the Interior. He says, after describing at length the value of the seams and the admirable character of the coal in the North-West:

“The occurrence of workable coal seams at several different horizons, and the proved continuity of some of them over great areas, guarantees an abundant supply of fuel in this district, a matter of great importance in a country which over great areas is almost entirely destitute of wood. The quality of some of the fuel is such as to render them suitable for transport to a distance, and it is doubtless on this belt of coal-bearing rocks in the vicinity of the mountains that the railways of the North-West will depend chiefly for their supply. The quantity of coal already proved to exist is very great. The distance for which the outcrops of certain seams have been traced have been mentioned. Approximate estimates of the quantity of coal underlying a square mile of country in several localities have been made with the following results:—

“Main seam in vicinity of coal banks, Belly River, coal underlying one square mile, 5,500,000 tons.

“Grassy Island, Bow River, (continuation of Belly River main seam) coal underlying one square mile, over 5,000,000 tons.

“Horse-shoe Bend, Bow River, coal underlying one square mile 4,900,000 tons.

“Blackfoot Crossing, workable coal in seam as exposed on Bow River. Underlying one square mile, 9,000,000.”

I refer to this, in passing, to show that in that most important element in the development of a prairie country Canada possesses great superiority over any portion of the Western States, and it is an element which will have a great deal to do with the future of our country. We have gold, we have copper, we have iron mines which are attracting immense attention at the present moment, at the head of Lake Superior, to furnish a profitable industry for great numbers of people. And in that rougher country from Prince Arthur's Landing all through to the head of Lake Neppigon and Red River the hum of mining industries is now to be heard, while large amounts of capital are going in to aid in the development of the mineral resources of the country. I now turn the attention of the House for a single moment to another point in this connection, and that is the position in which the country stands in relation to the sales of land. I will read a short note which was addressed by Mr. Burgess, the able Secretary of the Department of the Interior, to my friend the Speaker of the Senate, who has been giving this subject his constant and careful attention for a length of time. It was not given me for publication, but it expresses the facts of the case so tersely and so much to the point that I venture to give to the House.

“OTTAWA, 4th May, 1883.

“Sir,—Having given the subject my best and fullest consideration, I estimate that the receipts of this Department from the sale of agricultural and coal lands, timber dues, rents of grazing lands, and sales of mineral lands other than coal, with the royalties from the minerals, between the 1st January, 1883, and the 31st Dec., 1891, both inclusive, will amount to not less than $58,000,000.”

This note is signed by Mr. Burgess, under whose personal observation and information all these various points come. I give it to the House as an evidence of the soundness of the statement made by my right hon. friend, the Minister of the Interior, when he told the House three years ago that he confidently relied upon the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway being accomplished without its costing one dollar to the people of Canada, as the entire amount required to recoup the Government and the country for their expenditure in connection with it would, at no distant date, be returned by the sale of land and the revenues derived from lands in the North-West. I say that the evidence on that point is very conclusive. I hold in my hands a statement of the Department as to what has taken place. I have already given the total sales of 1872 to 1880 inclusive, and I have shown the utterly insignificant quantity of lands that the Government was able to dispose of, and the small amount of money they received for them—namely, something like 31½ cts. per acre. I now give from the Department the following: Approximate estimate of the amount due for lands—time sales and pre-emption sales, computed from 1st January, 1880, to 31st December, 1882, and maturing before 31st December, 1885, $4,930,000. Instalments owing by colonization companies to mature within four years and assuming that the companies earn the full amount of rebate, $927,150. Companies who have till 30th of June, 1883, to complete agreements and to mature within four years: Land and Colonization Company of Canada, $537,600; Saskatchewan Land and Homestead Company, $322,560; Temperance Colonization Company, $835,656, or a total for these companies of $1,698,816. Estimated to be received from colonization companies who have till 28th February, 1883, to pay instalments, $150,000; ground rents on timber leases, $4,163; owing at Winnipeg Timber Office, $25,600; estimated amount owing by Canadian Pacific Railway Company at Winnipeg Office, $20,000, or a total of $7,755,731, and adding to this cash received during the calendar year 1883, $2,256,850, or a total of $10,012,381. It will be remembered that my right hon. friend made a computation of what would be received in connection with the sale of lands in the North-West; and it will also be recollected that my hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, not only took great exception to the statement, but he pronounced it so absolutely beyond any possible conception, as to entirely discredit, so far as that hon. gentleman was able to discredit, the prediction and the computation which the right hon. gentleman made. We estimated that by the time the Canadian Pacific Railway contract was to be completed, under the terms of the contract, we would receive not merely the $53,000,000 we were going to pay in connection with the construction of that work, but that we would receive about $60,000,000, or a considerable amount over and above the entire expenditure we were called upon to make in connection with the construction of that road. In order to show the House how thoroughly reliable and within the mark that calculation is, I will give the calculation made by my right hon. friend, and communicated to the House as our estimate two years ago, when it was very much discredited by hon. gentlemen opposite; and I will also give the result. The Minister of the Interior estimated that in 1882 there would be an incoming population of 35,000; the actual immigration of settlers into the North-West was 58,751. I am almost afraid, Sir, of discrediting my right hon. friend by reading these figures, because you will find how incapable he is of making an accurate calculation. He estimated that the revenue to be derived from Dominion Lands for the year 1882 would be $781,000; the actual revenue for the calendar year was $2,256,000. My right hon. friend estimated, for the year 1883, 40,000 as the increase of population; and my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture estimates the increase of population at 75,000, and I think that will be below the mark, as previous estimates have been. My right hon. friend estimated the revenue to be derived from the lands in 1883 at $1,820,000; the present estimate is $2,750,000, with every evidence that that will be under the mark. My right hon. friend estimated the increased population of 1884 at 45,000, a much smaller estimate, it will be seen, than the actual increase of 1882; my hon. friend the Minister of Agriculture estimates it at 100,000. My right hon. friend estimates the receipts at $2,622,000, and I have no doubt that we shall receive in that year $4,250,000. I give these figures as the evidence upon which I think we may confidently ask the House to accept our estimates as being altogether below instead of above the mark; and I ask my hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, again whether, with these figures, I am not warranted in the statement I make in relation to everything connected with the Canadian Pacific Railway contract, that down to the present hour the most sanguine calculations that any gentleman on this side has ventured to offer to the House or the country have been more than realized; and I ask my hon. friend whether he will reiterate the statement to this House—if he does I am sure it will be to incredulous ears on both sides of the House—that all the advantages of this contract are to be found on one side. Now, Sir, I will say a single word, before I sit down, with reference to the net debt of the country. Every person knows that when this Government came down to the House and asked it to sustain them in the policy of vigorously grappling with the construction of a Canadian Pacific Railway from end to end, a wail of dismay was set up on the other side of the House, and every one remembers the utter ruin and destruction that was going to result to Canada from the attempt on the part of the Government, within any reasonable period, to construct that great railway. Everybody remembers the warning, the solemn warning, that my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition gave to the House, that in that ruin we were going to destroy the very foundation of our country's prosperity. He admitted with us that the greatest thing for Canada was to bring people into the country; but he said, "You will load this country down with a debt so gigantic in proportion to its population that everybody will avoid Canada as they would a pestilence, and our immigration will cease." I am glad, Sir, to be able under these circumstances to draw the attention of the House for a single moment to a calculation made by my hon. friend the Minister of Finance—and we all know how far below the mark all his calculations have been, how careful he has been not to overstate anything—as to the condition which this country will be in with respect to its debt, when the time comes under the contract for the completion of the Canadian Pacific Railway. I may state, and I do so with great pleasure, the result of one year's experience, which we have had already, of the Pacific Railway contract. We have had one year in which my hon. friend the leader of the Opposition says the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have gone too fast; we have had one year of unprecedented rapidity of construction and of draft on the treasury of the country for public money under the contract; and what has that year disclosed? Why, Sir, at the close of that year after we had paid them every dollar that they were entitled to, with all that rapidity of construction, we actually owed $1,734,129 less than we did at the beginning of the year. The net debt of the Dominion—the net debt on the 30th of June, 1881, at the beginning of the contract, was $155,395,780.40; on 30th of June, 1882, it was $153,661,650.78, or, as I said before, a decrease of $1,734,129.62. So much for the ruin that was to overtake this country by the rapid construction of a Canadian Pacific Railway. Now, Sir, my hon. friend the Minister of Finance has given me this memorandum:—

Surplus Consolidated Revenue, 1879-80	$4,132,743
do do do 1880-81	6,316,052
Proceeds of lands, 1880-81	1,744,456
Estimated surplus this year	6,000,000
Proceeds of lands this year	1,760,000
Estimated surplus next year	3,000,000
Estimated proceeds from lands	2,250,000
Estimated saving of interest after January 1885, 1 per cent. on $30,000,000. $300,000 per annum or equal to a reduction of debt of	7,500,000
If we have a surplus of about $1,000,000 a year from June, 1884, to 1891 say seven years	7,000,000
Proceeds of lands, seven years at $2,000,000 would be	14,000,000
	$53,693,251

This is the amount that we expect to receive from surplus revenue and the sales of land from the commencement of this contract down to the time the contract provides for the completion of the work. With that calculation before us—and I think all will admit that it is a safe calculation—I think we may come to the conclusion, not only that our country will not be overwhelmed in debt, but that we shall be in the position that the Imperial Government are in to-day. Mr. Childers has brought forward his budget, and in it he has very much astonished hon. gentlemen opposite, by a proposal to reduce the National Debt by £3,000,000, a year. It was reduced last year by £8,000,000, and the Chancellor of the Exchequer proposes to reduce it this year by £8,000,000. So my hon. friend the Minister of Finance proposes to reduce our debt; so we propose to use these surpluses, not for the construction of a Canadian Pacific Railway, mark you, but for the reduction of the public debt, that when this work is constructed from end to end there will not only be no increased indebtedness upon Canada, but at an early day the sales of the lands alone will recoup back to the treasury of the country every dollar that has been expended. But what will be the difference? Why the difference will be that instead of being overwhelmed with debt, instead of immigrants who are looking to our shores as a future home being driven to seek other lands, because we are borne down by a monstrous debt that we are unable to control or provide for, the hon. gentleman will find that we shall have in this country reduced the debt, and at the same time a little over 4,000,000 of people will have accomplished one of the most gigantic feats in the record of any country in the world, the construction of a Canadian Pacific Railway from ocean to ocean. I feel that we are in a position to congratulate ourselves upon the condition of our country, of which every Canadian may be justly proud. I say, Sir, that in contemplation of these facts, I trust my hon. friend will reconsider the statement which he made, and will come to the conclusion that the statement that all the advantages were to be found on one side, requires some little modification at his hands. I may say, Sir, that it would be impossible, in my judgment, to find any country in the world that has exhibited greater evidences of progress and prosperity, during the time that we have been engaged in actively grappling with the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway, than Canada presents, take it from what point you may. I spoke a little while ago of the great advantages the United States of America had in regard to attracting population to their country; but what is the fact? Here in this Canada of ours, we have been able, in connection with the construction of this great national work, and with the efforts that have been made through that Company and the Government of the country, to increase the immigration from Europe 50 per cent. while our neighbors (the United States) have been only able to increase their immigrant population $3\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. The tables are turned. Every person knows that the eyes of the civilized world have, for many long years, been turned to the wonderful development of the great country south of us. Every person knows that there never was a country that has made such progress as Canada has made in regard to the sentiment of the people, the press and the Government of England. The position Canada occupied yesterday has been entirely changed, and to-day the statesmen, the press and the most intelligent minds of that country are drawing the attention of the people to the fact that the wide world presents no more inviting or attractive field for those who wish to seek homes in the New World than is to be found within the Dominion of Canada. We have every reason to feel proud of our position, when we look at the rapidity of the increase of our population, at the imports of the country, at the exports of the country, and at the increasing and developing industries of the country. We are prepared to-day to meet our great American neighbors to the south of us in friendly rivalry, and to show that in neither one nor the other of these great factors of the development, and of the progress of the country are we behind. Now, Sir, I have trespassed upon the attention of the House much longer than I intended to, and if I were to judge by the futility of my efforts in the past, I would sit down without saying any more to my friends on the other side of the House. I have already stated, Sir, that looking at it from a party point of view, nothing could be more conducive to the continued rule of the Conservative party of this country than that hon. gentlemen opposite should continue to maintain the attitude that they have maintained in the past in relation to this great work. I have said, Sir, what I sincerely believe, that there is no question that is so rooted in the public mind of the great body of the intelligent men of all parties and all classes in this country, as the conviction that the Government of Canada deserves well at the hands of the people for having put their hands to this great work, and for having achieved the contract under which our country is surging ahead with such gigantic strides. But, Sir, there is a greater, there is a higher, there is a more important standpoint from which to view this question than one of party. Even at this late hour I would ask our friends on the opposite side of the House—notwithstanding the great advantage it will give them, and the great advantage it will take from us—I ask them to bury the dead past and to unite with us on the greatest national question that is now engaging the attention of the people of Canada, unite with us in a hearty endeavor to elevate, to raise and to advance the prosperity of our country together, as it can be only elevated, and only advanced, and only raised by the united sympathy and hearty action and co-operation of both parties. I feel that it is more in the interest of hon. gentlemen opposite than in the interest of my friends that I make this proposition. But, Sir, I believe that the time is coming, when, with the evidence before the world, that we have achieved a position of which no Canadian, however sanguine, dared two or three years ago to dream we could attain in so short a period.—I believe, Sir, that the time is coming when every patriotic Canadian will feel bound to unite, heart and soul, with all the energy that he possesses, in a common effort, to sustain this gigantic enterprise which has already accomplished so much, and is calculated to accomplish still more to make us a great and prosperous country.

Mr. BLAKE. This is not the first time that the hon. gentleman has appealed to hon. members on this side of the House not to treat questions in which he conceives himself and his party deeply interested, in what he calls a party spirit. This is not the first time on which he has appealed to us to act with a different view from what he believes the doctrines of the party demands. I have answered him before—as I shall answer him to-night—that if I understood the obligations of party and the machinery of party, as the hon. gentleman does, I would abandon all party alliances, and eschew all party views from this hour forward. I know of no obligation of party which prevents me from taking, supporting and sustaining what I believe to be the best course in the interests of my country. I know of no obligation upon me, as a party man, or upon those with whom I have the honor to co-operate, to oppose the hon. gentlemen opposite in any one measure—upon any one question—in which they believe that opposition is not justified in the interests of their country. But it is now as it has been heretofore; because we differ from the hon. gentleman in his views of what is to the public interest, of what was to the public interest; because we differ from the hon. gentleman in his estimate of past, present and future, and still more vitally in the causes which he assigns to results which, so far as they are prosperous results, we heartily join in rejoicing over—I say it is because we differ cardinally from him upon those subjects that we are constrained, not by any party obligation, but by our views of what is our duty to our country, still to criticize the hon. gentleman's policy, still to point out where he is wrong, still to point out what the results would have been of a wiser, a better, a more prudent policy than that which he has adopted. The hon. gentleman has said, in the earlier part of his speech, that he believes that no lengthened explanation was necessary upon the subject of the Canadian Pacific Railway, because he was satisfied that that Company occupied so strong a position in this House, as to render a long explanation needless. I dare say he is right. But after the hon. gentleman had made that statement, his performance did not exactly correspond with his promise, for I am sure we have not to complain of the brevity any more than we have to complain of any other feature of that statement, except that I think

I shall be able to point out some slight inaccuracies of fact and lapses of reasoning which the hon. gentleman was guilty of during the course of his oration. He said that I painted the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's prospects the other day in colors altogether too bright, and that he thought my speech did not need an answer, because the country had answered it. He declared that in the Province of Ontario, an overwhelming majority of the population had negated the proposals which I made to them on the subject of the Canadian Pacific Railway. He was mistaken. By the means which hon. gentlemen opposite chose to use, of manipulating the constituencies, they obtained a majority of supporters in this House; but I stated on the Address, and the statement was based upon a fair, careful and impartial estimate of the figures of the population who voted—and these figures have not been, and they cannot be, successfully contradicted by anyone who will go into the details—that the voting population of Ontario was practically equally divided in the month of June last. I admit that hon. gentlemen opposite obtained a majority of the voting population—I have always admitted it—but instead of that majority being an overwhelming one, it was inappreciable if you regard the number of votes cast, about 270,000. The hon. gentleman said, going from Ontario to Prince Edward Island, that I was defeated in Prince Edward Island.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes; and that a majority was returned to this House by the people of that Province.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No.

Mr. BLAKE. Yes.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. You will not allow me to explain?

Mr. BLAKE. I will not, because I know what you said.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I said you had failed to get a majority.

Mr. BLAKE. We did not fail to get a majority. Prince Edward Island sent a majority of men to this House to support us, but this House chose to return to Parliament, and give a seat here to a man who was rejected by the vote of the free electors of that Province. By the vote of the majority of this House, the hon. gentleman acquired that seat which the people refused to give him. The hon. gentleman said that in Nova Scotia there was a two-thirds majority for the Government. I have not counted up the figures lately, but if I rightly remember the returns from Nova Scotia, they are about equal in point of strength, to what they were on the one side and the other previous to the Elections. In New Brunswick, the hon. gentleman no doubt succeeded in altering the political complexion of the representation in this House; but I understand another change, on a revision, has taken place at a very recent moment, which you will, Mr. Speaker, be called on to announce to us in a day or two, in the delivery of your duty; and I say that some of the changes which took place before, may have been produced by means into the full discussion of which it would take to long to enter to-night. In Quebec he would not say that my hon. friends were annihilated, but that the red paled before the blue. We returned, it is true, a small number, but we returned the same number that were sitting in this House from the Province of Quebec prior to the Elections; and if that line of red be thin and narrow it is a gallant line of red, that, I tell the hon. gentleman, neither quails nor blanches before the overwhelming forces of the blue. The hon. gentleman said that he would make a further allusion to my speech in which I referred to the cost of the Canadian Pacific Railway; but I will defer a reference to the question until I reach that portion of his speech. The hon. gentleman referred to the question of the monopoly. He said the road could not have been built without a monopoly, and he declared, with reference to the disallowance, that that was a policy settled on and agreed on and applicable to this contract and this Company. I deny both the propositions of the hon. gentleman. I shall not enter into any lengthy details on this or any other topic of the hon. gentleman's speech which have been before discussed very fully in this House, professing to deal more at length with those topics which possess somewhat more the merit of freshness and novelty; but I will say there is no proof whatever, but proof to the contrary, that the road could not have been built without the odious monopoly clause, and I will add that the hon. gentleman's statement as to the power of disallowance, as applicable to this contract, is not in accordance with what I understand to be the facts. In the first place, he referred to it as a question of policy, and he said that the former Governments had acted upon the view that lines competing with the Government Pacific Railway should not be chartered. While yet it was uncertain how the road should be built; while yet all that was being done in the way of construction was being done by the Government itself; while yet, so far as was known, it was to be a Government road; while yet the arrangements for the contract were uncertain,—it was thought improper, at that time, and under those circumstances, to charter railways which might conflict with the great railway. That is true, but if the hon. gentleman infers from that that a policy was laid down with reference to this Company and to this contract, which was to guide us in the future, I deny his proposition altogether. I say that the people of this country, if they build this Pacific Railway through the prairies that would be an excellent security against the rates being high. The Government has built other railways. They have built the Intercolonial, and they run it—with what results as to profit we know. They have built the Prince Edward Island Railway, and they run it—with what results we know as to profit. There can be no doubt that the pressure would have been altogether in favor of low rates, and that the public interest alone being to be consulted, there would in that regard be little danger from the existence of a monopoly. A monopoly? Why, it would be the public that would own the railway, and the public could not have a monopoly in its own property. But a policy changing from year to year, from Session to Session, as the circumstances of the country and the condition of the enterprise might change, is one theory; a policy which involves an obligation, as it is now said, to a railway company, an obligation or contract that we will have to disallow local Acts of Parliament, is quite a different thing. The hon. gentleman challenged me to produce proofs of the assertion that during the debate on the contract allusion was made to this subject. We know it was. I have more than once quoted the passages which I shall quote in answer to the hon. gentleman's challenge. Late in the course of the debate the First Minister, dealing with this subject of monopoly, which he knew pressed the House very much, which he knew was one of the greatest difficulties in the way even of friends of his agreeing to the ratification of the contract, used this language:

"We know perfectly well it will take many years before that country is filled up with a large population, and the first ten years will be most unprofitable; we know perfectly well that it will require all the exertion, and all the skill, and all the management of the Company to make the eastern and western sections of this road fully compensate them, and fairly compensate them for their responsibility and for their expenditure during those ten years. In order to give them a chance we have provided that the Dominion Parliament—mind you, the Dominion Parliament—we cannot check Ontario, we cannot check Manitoba—shall for the first ten years after the construction of the road give their own road, in which they are putting so much money and so much land, a fair chance of existence."

Now, Sir, if it was not a bargain between the Government of the day and the Pacific Railway Syndicate that they would use that power for which they are responsible to, and in the exercise of which they are responsible for, the control of this Parliament, that they would use that power during these twenty years to disallow Local Acts of the Province of Manitoba and Local Acts of the Province of Ontario, then, Sir, what is the meaning of the phrases I have just read? What is their sense? What is their application? What did they mean, Sir? If the hon. gentleman says: "We cannot check the Ontario Parliament, we cannot check Manitoba," when he had bargained, or understood himself to have bargained, as a consequence of this contract, that he would check Ontario, that he would check Manitoba, by the exercise of the power of disallowance and prevent the construction of these railways; while this phrase clearly indicates that he intended Parliament to understand they would have power to charter and to construct if they should so determine. The hon. gentleman says that no fair-minded man could take any other view than that which he has proclaimed. I defy any fair-minded man to take any other view than that which I have stated, from the statement of the hon. gentleman made at a critical period of the debate on the question of this Canadian Pacific Railway Company, and which had a very serious effect. I will call a witness upon this subject. Although I would be glad to pay any hon. gentleman a compliment, I will not say that the witness I am about to call thoroughly answers the hon. gentleman's description, because I am afraid that, like most of us, he is sometimes a little biased, prejudiced, no doubt unconsciously, in favor of the side he espouses, and in that particular he cannot be that fair-minded man. I do not impute to him any undue share of bias or partiality. We are all human, and I suppose he may be—I see he recognizes the allusion; my witness is ready to rise. Now, he heard the speech of the First Minister, and it was his duty a little later on, after having heard the explanation, to give his views on this matter. I refer to the hon. member for Cardwell, and he must be a fair-minded man in the view which the hon. gentleman would desire. He is, if my hon. friend will allow me to say it, like the Irishman's wall—a little more than plumb, and he leans slightly to the other side. As the hon. member for Charlotte (Mr. Gillmor) once said with reference to the widower who was about to be buried between his wives—he said that he wanted to be laid right betwixt them, but if there was any inclination at all there should be a slight cant towards Biddy. Now, I do not suppose it will be said of the hon. gentleman that he has not a slight cant towards Biddy. Well, with that slight cant towards Biddy, and with that desire to state the case as Biddy would desire to have it stated, the hon. Minister after having heard the explanation of the First Minister, used this language:

"But we are told now that because of the fifteen miles there never can be any other railways in that country. To what does that apply? Simply to the territories over which the Dominion Parliament has control. There is nothing to prevent Manitoba now, if it thinks proper, granting a charter for a railway from Winnipeg to the boundary line. At this very moment there is a company in course of organization to build a railway from Winnipeg to West Lynne, on the boundary. And after this agreement is ratified, this provision does not take away from Manitoba a single right to possess. In fact, this Parliament cannot take away those rights. It has the same rights as the other Provinces for the incorporation of railway companies within the boundary of the Province itself, and there is nothing to prevent the Province of Manitoba from chartering a railway from Winnipeg to the boundary to connect with any southern railway. The only guarantee which this Company has under the contract is that their traffic shall not be tapped far west in the prairie section, thus directing the traffic away from their line to a foreign line, but there is nothing to prevent a railway being built in Manitoba within the Province that would carry the traffic to any railway that may tap it from the American side."

What does my fair-minded man say to that?

Mr. WHITE (Cardwell). Hear, hear.

Mr. BLAKE. He agrees in that view! Then the hon. gentleman, I suppose, must think that it is an admirable amusement for a Legislature to say: "Oh! yes, you have a perfect right to charter a railway, to be built to the boundary of the Province, so that no other railway may connect. The fifteen-mile clause does not in the slightest degree affect Manitoba. It does not affect the monopoly. It prevents the railway from being tapped far west from Manitoba by southern lines." I suppose the hon. gentleman thinks it a good joke—because it is no argument—to say that when the contract was going through, and afterwards to say "Oh! yes, that was all right, the contract did not do it, but then, we understood that we would exercise the power of disallowance. They may charter from now till doomsday, if it amuses them, but then they must understand that these charters would never be allowed to remain law; they must understand that they are going to be disallowed." And this is the way in which Manitoba could not be checked; this is the way in which railways could be built to the boundary line in Manitoba, and connect with southern lines; and this is the way in which the monopoly was not to affect the Province of Manitoba, and this is the way in which it was only to protect the Company from its traffic being tapped far west of Manitoba. Well, if that be so, I must withdraw the character I have given to the hon. gentleman, of being a fair-minded man. Now, this hon. gentleman has declared that it was the interest of the country that the Canadian Pacific Railway should have a good bargain, and that they had one. I agree, I have always agreed, that it was to the interest of the country, that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company should have a fair bargain. What I have objected to, is the peculiar character of this bargain, to which I gave a descriptive form, and which I do not in the slightest degree withdraw. The hon. gentleman has said, that if they have so far succeeded, it has been by devoting themselves with undying energy and determination, heart and soul, one and all, to the single prosecution of the work. But we have heard within a few days that the chief officer, the president of the Company, had a large interest in another railway, and that the Canadian Pacific Railway had to purchase that railway for fear it should be alienated to a rival corporation. That is the extent of his devotion to the interests of the Canadian Pacific Railway. It was explained to us with perfect good sense that his interest was larger in the Credit Valley than in the Canadian Pacific Railway; and was it to be expected that he should sacrifice his private interests in the Credit Valley for the sake of the Canadian Pacific Railway? Of course, not. But when you talk of undying devotion, of a single eye to the interests of the Canadian Pacific Railway, it seems to me those phrases are a little high-flown applied as to the circumstances which the officer of the Company has just disclosed. Then the hon. gentleman says that we ought to change our tone; that for party purposes he would like us to maintain in our present line of conduct, and none other; but that really we ought to change our tone, and that if we reflected upon what have been the consequences of the construction of this railway, if we reflected upon the immigration that is to be sent into the country, if we reflected upon the progress of the Syndicate, if we reflected upon the progress of the other parts of the North-West, if we reflected upon the statistics with which he deluged us—why, Sir, that we ought certainly to change our tactics and join in lauding and magnifying and falling down and worshipping the Canadian Pacific Railway contract. I do not agree in that point of view. I have said before, and I say to-day, that in so far as action in Canada, with respect to railway construction, has forwarded, and it has forwarded, the position of things in the North-West, it has been such action as we recommended to the hon. gentleman in 1880, and not such action as he took in 1881. I say that railway construction in British Columbia is not that which has produced appreciably good results in the direction to which the hon. gentleman has alluded. He has referred to immigration into the North-West; and that is not dependent on railway construction in British Columbia. I say construction,—I cannot say construction, for there has not been very much construction,—but the preparation for construction and such construction as has taken place to the north of Lake Huron, and that commencing from Thunder Bay, has not done much to create settlement in the North-West. What, in so far as railway construction is concerned, has forwarded settlement in the North-West? Why, it has been the building of railways in the North-West. That is what has done it, and that is what we suggested to the hon. gentleman he should do in 1880. The hon. Minister has said that the Pacific Railway Company is building great branches. I will advert, at another portion of my remarks, to the promises of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company with respect to branches; but I was a little amused when I heard the hon. gentleman claim that the Canadian Pacific Railway has built some miles of branches in the North-West, but that the Government had been entirely unable, notwithstanding all their efforts, to get more than a few miles built—not more than eighty I think, by the Manitoba and South-Western, and a few miles by the Portage and Westbourne. To say that the Government had been exerting itself to forward the construction of the Manitoba and South-Western, and to say that the construction of that railway had failed, notwithstanding all the best efforts of the Government, is to say something which I did not believe could fall even from the lips of the hon. gentleman. We believe that road has failed to be constructed, to a large extent, because of the apathy of the Government to deal with that railway as it should have been dealt with. The difficulties in the way of obtaining a land grant and of locating the line, have been the main causes which have impeded the construction of the road, and that they have been due largely to the attitude of the Government; and I believe that those difficulties are in a fair way of solution, because the Company has got into hands which are deemed by the Government not hostile to the Canadian Pacific Railway. The hon. gentleman has said that the position of things with respect to the construction of this work, so far as the country's expenditure is concerned, is excellent, and he read a brief statement from the Secretary of the Department of the First Minister, giving the gross and estimated receipts from the sales of land in the North-West, placing them at $58,000,000. That must be taken for what it is worth. We do not know what the details are; we do not know on what principles the calculations are made. It is impossible to discuss the details, because we have only the gross sum; but I will deal with the estimates which the hon. gentleman has given in detail. He has alluded to the very large revenue which he expects will accrue, within four years, from the sales to colonization companies; but that class of revenue is not indicative of a continuous income, because that source of supply has, to a large extent, dried up, and we are not likely to hear of many more colonization companies acquiring territory. The hon. gentleman has referred to the computations of the hon. First Minister. I rejoice, I am sure, quite as sincerely as does the hon. gentleman, at the influx of population into the North-West. But it was an unexpected influx; it was an influx which even hon. gentlemen opposite, in 1880, did not expect, and to a very much larger extent than ever could have been calculated at that time, it has come from the older Provinces. Up to this time the bulk of the immigration has been from the older Provinces, with consequences of not all unmixed good and advantage to them, though I have more than once said that I am quite willing that my Province should bear such ill consequences as have flowed from that immigration up to this time, in order that the higher interests of the country might be subserved by a large population from the older Provinces, taking part in the early settlement of the country. Still it is so; you cannot deny it, that the bulk of the immigration into the North-West has been from the older Provinces, a source of supply which must necessarily fail to continue unless consequences wholly disastrous ensue, or the void is filled by a very large foreign immigration. Then the hon. gentleman referred to his own resolutions, and to the resolutions of 1882, and the consequences which are now said to have fallen. I do not know whether it was the hon. gentleman's view which attracted the attention of the British Government and the world at large, but they have marched with rapidity in the Old Land, particularly in one of the countries, and a set of circumstances and feeling on the part of public men wholly different from that which existed, or was likely to exist, have now arisen. I rejoice at it; I rejoice, that driven by the necessities of the case, there is now a concurrent sentiment in favor of forwarding emigration from the Old Country. I hope and trust no check will occur to that new impulse, but that it will go on and develop. The hon. Minister of Agriculture, in his calculations of emigration from Great Britain, took no account of the large Irish immigration which is likely to come here by the efforts of the Canadian Pacific Railway. The hon. gentleman said he had not included that in his estimates. I need hardly say that we know, from the hon. members who come from the North-West, and from what we read and hear, that unless some money is supplied, it is impossible to place in the North-West country, as farmers, any very large body of those so wholly pauperized as are those classes from the most distressed parts of Ireland, who are likely to be sent out. A scheme that must involve the removal of a large number of those persons with their families to the North-West, to become farmers, must involve the proposition that there should be a very considerable advance of money to start them in the world. They must have means to build houses, or have houses built for them; must have implements, and supplies, and cattle, for one year at least. I would heartily rejoice if, under those circumstances, they could be sent to the North-West and enabled to start with supplies for one year. Short of that I think any large immigration of this class would be an injury to the North-West, unless they secured those means which are essential to their making a fair start in their new homes. But those are circumstances wholly unexpected at that time, and they favor the hon. Minister of Railways; and as they favor the country, too, we rejoice that they favor the hon. gentleman and the country together. The condition of the country at large is wholly different from what it was in those days. The hon. gentleman says that is due to his policy; he says that the large revenue is due to his policy, and so far I agree. He says, further, that the capacity to pay the imports is due to that policy, and there I differ with him; but we have enough to discuss this night without entering into the grounds of opinion in this regard, and I do no more than record my opinion on this subject. He declared he would get a statement from the hon. Finance Minister as to what was to be the result in, I think, nine years, with respect to the Canadian Pacific Railway expenditure. He took that expenditure of $53,000,000, omitting altogether the surveys to which reference was made several times by the hon. gentleman, and other incidental expenses. Well, the hon. gentleman may leave this out of his speech, but that will not prevent it being taken out of our pockets. We paid it. It is part of the expenditure incurred in the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway. It belongs to the enterprise. It is here in the Public Accounts. We borrowed the original money, $3,000,000 or $4,000,000, $5,000,000 or $6,000,000, and we are paying their debt, so that I maintain, that $60,000,000 is the sum which we have to consider in this regard, and not $53,000,000. The hon. gentleman does not dispute that $5,000,000, $6,000,000 or $7,000,000 were spent on that account; but he says: "Let us put that aside. I do not see the use of it; and let us state the account fairly, and then it is $60,000,000 with which we have to deal;" $28,000,000, he says, are for works completed; $5,000,000 or $6,000,000, or whatever it may be, for surveys; Canada Central subsidy, $1,500,000 for telegraphic and other expenses connected with the work, making up $35,000,000; and $25,000,000 subsidy; and thus you get $60,000,000. The hon. gentleman begins by saying: "Let us take the account of $53,000,000 only;" and he leaves out the $7,000,000, or whatever it may be, but still we have to pay it all the same. How does he state the account? I was amused at his statement of the account. He pointed out, that there was a surplus in the Consolidated Fund for 1879-80, of $4,132,000; for 1880-81, $6,300,000; and for 1881-82, $6,823,000, while a surplus of $3,000,000 is estimated for next year, making a total surplus of $19,448,000, all paid except that of this year; and he pointed out that he expected a surplus of $1,000,000 a year for the next seven years, making $7,000,000 more, and an aggregate of $26,000,000, all surpluses, which he applies to the wiping out of the $53,000,000; but where does that come from? Why, the hon. gentleman raised the taxes on us! He collected taxes far in excess of what was necessary for the public demands, exaggerated as he has made those demands! He has collected out of our pockets surpluses amounting to $19,448,000, including the surplus of the current year, and he expects to take $7,000,000 more in the next seven years, making $26,000,000, which he says will wipe out half of these $53,000,000. He has put aside the fact, that we paid this out of our taxes; although the plan on which the Canadian Pacific Railway was to be built, involved no increase in taxation; and yet the hon. gentleman now declares, that half of the whole $53,000,000 to which he reduces these demands, is to be met out of increased taxation. It is quite true, that the hon. gentleman, a little later on, said: Now mark you, we do not apply that towards paying for the Canadian Pacific Railway, but to reduce the debt." But he is not applying it towards reducing the debt, but towards preventing the debt getting higher, because the interest of the money borrowed to build the Canadian Pacific is paid off out of the taxes, and, therefore, no financial juggle of that kind will avail in the slightest degree. Now, it is plainly declared this night by the hon. Minister of Railways, on the authority of the hon. Minister of Finance, that out of the $53,000,000 to which he has reduced the public charges, respecting the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, no less a sum than $26,448,000 is to be paid out of the taxes, of which, including the surplus of the current year, $19,500,000 have been paid out of the taxes. Then the hon. gentleman says: "I see another financial feature. I venture next year, or a couple of years hence, to borrow $30,000,000 to redeem a debt contracted a long time ago at a high rate of interest. We have been reducing the rate of interest gradually, owing to the ease in the money markets generally and to the higher credit of this country in particular, and I will reduce the rate of interest. I expect to have to borrow $30,000,000 and to save 1 per cent. interest on the loan, which will be equivalent to $7,500,000, and thus," he says, "I will relieve you of $1,500,000 merely on account of the Canadian Pacific, and this don't cost you anything." But if we did not have to pay these $7,500,000 for the Canadian Pacific we would have it in our pockets for something else. It is not due to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, that we make this saving. It has nothing to do with the North-West, that we make this saving, but it is our general gain by virtue of the improved condition of the money market, and of our increased credit, through which we make this saving, though, according to my calculations, it is not a saving of $7,500,000. However, he simply says he will thus wipe off another $7,500,000 of the $53,000,000. I would like to know what this has to do with the Canadian Pacific Railway, and how far it will ease any burthen respecting those $53,000,000.

We now come to the proceeds of the lands, and he pointed out, that these proceeds for 1880-81 were $1,744,000, for 1881-82, $1,750,000; and for 1882-83, $2,250,000, making a total of $5,744,000 thus far received. Well, the Finance Minister already estimates the receipt of $2,000,000 a year for the next seven years, or $14,000,000; but the Secretary to the Minister of the Interior estimates $58,000,000 for nine years. I do not know whether or not the odd $44,000,000 are to come in the last two of the nine years, but this is the difference between these two authorities; and I do not know whether to give the preference to the hon. gentleman who stands in the higher official position, or to the Secretary. The Minister of Railways, who knows more about the subject than anybody else, estimates $2,000,000 a year, making in all for lands from 1880, for nine or ten years, $19,744,000, and he puts that all to credit!—the net proceeds of the lands! He places that against the $53,000,000; but have we got it yet. Why, Sir, up to to-day—no, but up to the 30th of June last, on surveys and the management of lands, we actually paid $2,480,000. We have still a large sum to pay, and will have a further large sum to pay. We have paid, with reference to the North-West for Indians, $3,993,000, of which during the last four years we paid $2,844,000; last year we paid $1,100,000. We have paid for Police, $2,976,000, of which during the last four years we paid $1,335,000, with other vast expenditures, with which it is not necessary now to deal. And yet the hon. gentleman says: "I will take every shilling that comes into the Public Treasury from lands, and I will deal with it as applicable to the reduction of the $53,000,000." Now, we suspected some time ago that the hon. gentleman would make an attack of that kind. A good while ago he proposed to alter the plan of dealing with the account with reference to surveys; and he proposed for the future to charge surveys to capital account. The First Minister proposed that the cost of surveys, which up to that time had gone against income, should go to capital. In doing so, on the 28th of April, 1880, he said:

"As to the charge to capital, it is simply owing to this that we hope to realise capital out of the land, and this charge is to be taken out of capital."

"Mr. MACKENZIE. It is not fair having regard to other years."

"Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It only requires an explanation. It is satisfactory to know that up to yesterday at Emerson, 7,000 emigrants came in, 3,500 of whom went into Winnipeg. There is a great claim for land both by settlers and purchasers."

"Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. I do not want to press discussion. The sums received heretofore for Dominion lands have been credited as an ordinary income. This is manifestly correct, and I do not think it is right to have this survey charged to Capital. It should be charged to Income, and any proceeds also should be charged to Income; therefore, in the Public Accounts for the future, if this is persisted in, you must charge the other side."

"Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. Certainly, a special land account can be kept for this for which credit will be given for all moneys received, and in which all charges for surveys, etc., will be charged."

"Sir RICHARD J. CARTWRIGHT. Without pledging myself as to taking a vote, I may say that that will to a considerable extent obviate the objection which lies to charging to Capital. Some distinct assurance had better be given on that head."

"Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. By the terms of the Resolutions of last Session, there would have been a general arrangement made between Her Majesty and Canada. There would have been Commissioners to hold these lands in trust. As there are no Commissioners, the Government must act as Commissioners, and keep the accounts which the Commissioners, if appointed under the Resolutions, would have kept."

But all that has been forgotten, and the hon. gentleman, although $2,480,000 had been spent up in that country, irrespective of the enormous sums which, due to the Dominion Lands, we are spending at headquarters, and which are equally justly a charge upon those lands, the increased expenditure of the Department—I say that the $2,480,000 spent on survey is put to one side, and we are asked to-night to understand that the $53,000,000 were liquidated by the gross proceeds of the lands instead of the net proceeds. Well, Sir, it is an easy way to liquidate, but the people of this country know, as the hon. First Minister said in April, 1880—they know perfectly well that it has cost that money to sell the lands. They know perfectly well that not only has $2,500,000 been spent for surveys, but that enormous votes are being asked from year to year, and they know that it is an unfair mode of stating the account to assume that the gross proceeds of the land, rather than the net proceeds, are applicable to the payment. These are all charges against the land for getting them into the market; and as I said before, so I say now, it is absurd to discuss these lands as producing even the price, less the cost of survey and other expenditures of a very large character, which are incurred in the North-West, and are properly chargeable on the proceeds of the sale of the land of that country. The hon. gentleman has said that the financial terms of this contract, as evidenced by events, do not justify my criticisms the other day. I believe they do. That criticism was based, so far as information was afforded by a public document—upon the official memorandum of the Canadian Pacific Railway itself. There were some points upon which I stated the Company's memorandum did not afford information, and upon those I was obliged to act conjecturally; but the main and a leading feature of that statement, which the hon. gentleman criticised, was founded on the official memorandum of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, dated, I think, on the 2nd of December last. The Company, as I then said, calculated its expenditure for the completion of the road to be the amount of its subsidy, $25,000,000; the amount it had realized from land grant bonds, $20,000,000; and $90,000,000 which it had sold at 60, making $54,000,000, or a total of $99,000,000, for which the Company, on the 12th of December last, said it would complete and fully equip the whole of the railway for 684 miles, with branches and extensions, including the eastern extension, to which I have referred, the Callander Branch, and the western extensions so far as under construction—some 200 or 300 miles. I excluded, with the view of ascertaining what the cost, according to the Company's estimate, would be of the contracted line, my view of what the cost to the Company was of the eastern lines which were outside of the contract altogether, and of the branches—$8,000,000, subject, of course, to the mortgages upon it; and that reduced the cost, according to the Company's estimate of the contracted line to $91,000,000, towards which it was receiving $25,000,000 of subsidy, and about $17,500,000 for lands already sold, making $42,000,000 of cash which we could see. This would leave about $40,000,000 to be provided for, and there are the town lots and the mile belt, which has not been sold; there are the speculations which were made in Brandon and other places upon other lots, from which the Company realized large sums; and there are those bonuses which would add considerably to the sum of $49,500,000. Now, you have to add to that only the cost of the land, taking the same average price to which I referred, of $2.68, in order to ascertain, as I have said, that there is a considerable margin over the cost of the railway as estimated by the Company, which is given to the Company in money and in land, without counting the cost of the Government works. The hon. gentleman criticized my statement of $35,000,000 as the cost of the works, and he says that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company borrowed that of me. I do not know from whom they borrowed. I did not know that I was upon such terms with the Canadian Pacific Railway, that they would borrow anything from me, but I find that in their prospectus, and I think they took a very fair and reasonable view of it. I do not understand that in the construction of a great work like this you are to assume that the exploratory surveys which have taken place, are not a part of the cost. These surveys were required to find the best route, they cost a large sum of money—they have to be paid for. If the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had entered upon their enterprise without any of these surveys, they would have had to enter into much more extensive surveys, and the cost of these surveys would have been part of the cost of the road. So these surveys, in so far as they acted affirmatively or negatively—affirmatively by proving certain lines to be the best, negatively as showing that certain lines were not available—were so much expended as part of the work. I think the Canadian Pacific Railway Company and myself are right, and I think, when two agree, as we do, that the fact may be regarded as a good proof that we are right, and that it is fair and reasonable to call the cost of the surveys $7,000,000. But the $7,000,000 will not balance the account, because the cost of the contracted line would be $91,000,000, which would more than balance up the money and the land. There would still be a margin of $28,000,000, after the hon. gentleman shall have pitilessly knocked off the $7,000,000 for surveys and other items. The hon. gentleman says this will not do at all. He says these calculations will not answer; he says it will cost a great deal more money; he says that the estimated cost of the land is all wrong, and he makes various statements of that kind. Before I touch upon them, I wish to read a further piece of evidence which has come out lately, in a letter from Mr. Stephen, the President of the Company, dated the 5th of April last, and addressed to the shareholders of the Grand Trunk. In this letter he states briefly the financial position of the Company, and the results of the enterprise, as he calculates them:

"In conclusion let me say that the Canadian Pacific Company is officially committed to the statement, that the whole of the main line, from Montreal to the Pacific Ocean, 2,904 miles, plus some 450 miles of branches—complete and fully equipped—with the addition of about 17,000,000 acres of perhaps the finest wheat lands on the continent, will be represented by $90,000,000 of share capital, without preferences of any kind. The proprietors of this capital will own the whole of this property, free from all incumbrances, except about $5,500,000 of mortgage bonds previously charged on the purchased lines. In other words, taking the $90,000,000 of share capital at the issue price of sixty, the actual cash cost of 3,354 miles of railway, and some 17,000,000 acres of land, will be $54,000,000—say, $16,300, or £3,260 per mile of railway, with the valuable land asset in addition."

This is Mr. Stephens statement. He points out that the stock capital of $90,000,000 is $54,000,000 cash, and he says that when the enterprise will be completed the road from Montreal to the Pacific Ocean will be in existence, fully equipped in the best style, with 450 miles of branches, with this result: that it will cost $54,000,000 of paid-up capital, against which we have to set 17,000,000 acres of perhaps the finest wheat lands on the continent. Now, what do you value 17,000,000 acres of the finest wheat land on the continent at? Whatever you value them at, strike a balance between that value and the $54,000,000, and you will find what the road will cost the Company; and after that the Company get these $28,000,000 of Government works, irrespective of the surveys. Now, Sir, that statement is perfectly plain and clear. If that statement is reliable—and I do not understand the hon. gentleman to dispute it, for it represents the views of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, after all the information they have received as to what this road is going to cost—the result will be that the view I have stated, which was based on that prospectus, the inferences I drew, which were drawn from that prospectus, are wholly borne out in this regard. But the hon. gentleman says that we ought to make the calculation on the valuation of $1 an acre for the lands; he says that a contract was made for the construction of the Georgian Bay Branch in the year 1875, that 20,000 acres a mile was to be granted as part of the price, and that it was talked of as being worth $1 an acre; he says that was the general estimate, although the late Finance Minister declared that Mr. Foster had offered that land for 20 cents an acre; and so he says: "That proves to you that I was quite right, this having happened in 1875, in valuing this land at $1 an acre in 1881." Now, Sir, the hon. gentleman made a valuation of that land in that year, 1875, and he declared that it was worth $5 an acre then. He did not accept Sir Richard Cartwright's valuation of $1 an acre; but even then, without a mile of railway in the country, without any access to the country at all, without any Pembina Branch built, or any connection on the other side if it had been built, with the Thunder Bay section untouched, with no immigration as yet in the country, the hon. gentleman, sitting where my hon. friend from East York (Mr. Mackenzie) sits, and speaking from that place, declared that he estimated the land as worth $5 an acre. But so diffident is he of his own judgment, and so inclined to learn from his adversary, that it turns out that he was convinced by my hon. friend's speech at that time, and that in secret—he did not make any public declaration—he recanted, and came to the conclusion that the land was worth only $1 an acre. But, then, the hon. gentleman says: "In 1880 this land was valued by you at advanced rates." Well, I am a little surprised at this. The hon. gentleman made his valuation in 1880 too. The hon. First Minister brought down a scheme in the spring of 1880, in connection with which he declared that the average value of the land would be $3 an acre for one hundred miles on each side of the railway; and yet the hon. gentleman, sitting beside him and not dissenting from his view, but affirming and reiterating it, in the following year declares that the land is worth only $1 an acre—and that a different kind of land; for the lands then spoken of as worth $3 an acre were in alternate lots, the other alternate lots being held for free grants and pre-emptions—100,000,000 acres reserved for sale, and valued at $3 an acre, good, bad and indifferent. But when the hon. gentleman was dealing, in the following year with selected lands—lands from which the bad and indifferent were to be deducted, and only those fairly fit for settlement to be granted, he suddenly reminds himself of the fact that five or six years before his valuation of $5 an acre had been disputed on the other side, and he says: "Now, I will go down to the bottom dollar." Well, I do not understand that kind of argument. I accept the hon. gentleman's figures as good for himself; I accept his statement as indicating his own opinion; I accept his calculations as indicating what he thought was right as to the bargain; and we find that, in 1881, he thought $1 an acre was enough for selected lands, although in 1880 he thought $5 an acre could be got for the good, bad and indifferent. What had happened between 1880 and 1881 to decrease the value of the land? The hon. gentleman pointed out that the exertions which had taken place between Winnipeg and Thunder Bay ought to be extended to British Columbia. He said that what was necessary was to connect that country with our seaboard, and what was done in getting a line from Thunder Bay to Winnipeg had changed and improved the condition of affairs enormously. So the opening of the Pembina Branch had opened the country to railways; and so the hon. gentleman's own railway works in the Province, although he is not to be congratulated on his success, were being carried forward. Then the hon. gentleman says: "Oh, but you did not help me; if you thought that the proper course was to build the railway through the prairie, why did you oppose me in my plan in 1880 of building a prairie road." If I thought as I did then, and had opposed the hon. gentleman, I would have done something of which I would be ashamed. But the hon. gentleman's memory is at fault. I did not oppose him. On the contrary, I declared that I favored the building of the railway over the prairie, that it was a course which ought to be pursued, and I used this language:

"I agree also that we ought to proceed with the road through the western prairies as rapidly as we find the settlement and development of that country requires us to advance. I believe that just as fast as we see that the plan of settlement presses for it and will be promoted by it, we ought to get on with the prairie road; and, therefore, to the suggestion of the hon. gentleman that he has contracted for 100 miles and that he is about to contract for another hundred, I offer no dissent but my hearty approbation. I believe that the true course is that which the hon. gentleman has adopted—that is to proceed with the construction of these sections. He has told us in what time he expects to have them finished; but long before they are finished we may know at what time and what rate it is necessary for us to proceed further in order to develop that country. We can be guided by circumstances and construct the road if necessary, even slightly in advance of the actual tide of settlement, but not so far in advance as to be expending our money before it can be of use."

Yet the hon. gentleman ventures to chargo me this night, in the face of this House with having opposed his policy in 1880, of building the railway over the prairie when he proposed it to the House. What I opposed was something else. It was his going on, at that time, and under those circumstances with the construction of the road through British Columbia; but feeling that it was the duty of every hon. member on what ever side of this House he might be seated, to give his cordial support to any proposal which might be in the interest of the country, I did not hesitate, not merely not to oppose, but to affirm positively my approbation and give my encouragement to the hon. gentleman in prosecuting the road over the prairies. Now, I say that it is the road over the prairie that has done the business. So far as railway construction has helped the North-West the benefit has come from that road, and therefore I say now, as I said in 1880, that the true and sensible course was to build the road over the prairie, develop the country, bring in settlement, get in that backbone of which the hon. gentleman spoke and to which I referred before, but not to contract in advance—but not to contract in advance with a company to build the road when we have to deal with most unfavorable circumstances as to the land and the work to be done at both ends of the line. You told us, that the land was worth but little, $1 an acre at the most; that nothing would be made out of it because there was no railway through it. Then I said: Get the railway through, but do not sell the lands first and build the railway afterwards. Since you are provided with ample means, build the railway, give value to the lands and sell them after they have achieved value instead of selling them when they are worth but little. The hon. gentleman says he looked to the lands sold from 1872 to 1880, and found they only realized 31½ cts. an acre. Did he look to that in 1880 when the hon. Minister of Interior made the statement that he would sell the lands at $3 an acre, nearly ten times that amount? Then the hon. gentleman says that I estimated the cost of the railway in 1880, and that if the bargain is a bad one it was due to the conduct of the late Government and of myself, who embarrassed the present Government by our opposition. After stating that I did not support him in opening up the prairie section, he says that I estimated the entire construction of the road at that time at certain values amounting in the aggregate to $120,000,000. I have repeatedly explained what those estimates were based on. They have never been refuted or contradicted. The materials upon which they were based were open to all the world. They were the estimates of the hon. gentleman's own engineers and the engineers of the preceding Government, Mr. Fleming and his officers. There was no mystery about them. These gentlemen had estimated these prices for these different parts of the works, and the calculations made by my hon. friend from East York were undoubtedly correct, as based on the estimates of these gentlemen of what the cost of a first-class road would be. We did not say that was the road the hon. gentleman was going to build, because that was not the road. We did not form any estimate of what such a road as the hon. gentleman talked of would cost, but I adopted his estimates for the sake of argument as to the road he was going to build. I demonstrated, however, that a first-class road would cost $120,000,000 according to the estimates of the engineers at that time. Subsequent statements I believe have shown these estimates in some instances to have been somewhat excessive, but they come wonderfully close to the cost of the road as estimated now by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. If you take the $91,000,000 I have given you as our estimated cost of their portion of the road, and add to that the $28,000,000 or $30,000,000 of Government work, you get about $120,000,000, so that the present estimate given for the construction of a first-class road is about what the engineers formerly estimated would be the cost—an estimate which did not exclude but included equipment and interest on cost of construction. These monies to which I have referred, and which made the aggregate the Company expect to pay, include the cost of equipment and interest during the period of construction, in so far as that may have to be provided out of capital. They expect to provide for it largely out of the profits of the enterprise, and I believe they will according to present tariff results. But what is the deficiency they expect to provide for out of that capital? The hon. gentleman says that assuming the cost at $120,000,000 there is not so much of a margin of profit in that. Well, no, there is not a very large margin of profit in that, if the Company were building the road for the Government; but you must remember the Company is to own the road they build, and after all, if they get the road for nothing, I do not know but that leaves a pretty fair margin of profit—$120,000,000, when you own the property after you construct it. The hon. gentleman says there will be a great loss in operating it. I do not know that at all, but I could read to the hon. gentleman paragraphs from that official memorandum which I think would indicate very clearly that there will not be much loss in operating the road. Of course we know that things have greatly changed, that prospects have improved, and we know above all that with the provision for a monopoly, with the provision that rates must produce at least 10 per cent. on the capital, the Company can put on the screws on such traffic as is going into the North-West and prevent any loss by making the centre support the ends. Our calculations were made in reference to a Government enterprise, and the Government could not put up or keep up rates in the North-West in such a way as to prevent loss at the ends. But the Canadian Pacific Railway is entitled by this contract to have the rates put up so high as to make, not only to pay the loss on the operation, but to make 10 per cent. profit on their expenditure. Therefore, an arrangement has been devised which renders this loss a serious thing for the country, but not for the Company, which, out of the profitable portions of the road, has got to pay that loss in operating, and 10 per cent. profit on the capital. But the hon. gentleman says there was an invitation for tenders at $10,000 a mile and 20,000 acres a mile, and a guarantee at 4 per cent., and he proceeds to make adverse calculations. First of all, he says that this proposal was for 52,000,000 acres of land in round numbers; that you are to value the land at $2.68 an acre. Now, this is an old business that I have already treated fully, and I will only give a slight sketch of it now. In the first place the hon. gentleman takes no note of time. He thinks there is no difference between 1874, 1875 and 1881, when this contract was sanctioned. He thinks the prospects of the North-West were the same in those earlier years as in the later ones. But I could read from the hon. gentleman's speech in 1880 that he said everything had changed, that his own views had altogether changed, that circumstances had entirely changed. But for the purposes of his discussion the hon. gentleman insists on putting on his blue spectacles, and looks back again at circumstances as they were in the old days; to day, however, he puts on his railway spectacles, and he says, in the case of this contract: "Oh! I value the land at $2.68 an acre." Now, Sir, money itself varies little in value, less than anything else, but land varies much, particularly in a new country and land in the North-West has varied greatly in value. I think, therefore, it is ridiculous—the hon. gentleman man will pardon me for saying so—I think it is ridiculous seriously to argue that you are to take the value of the lands in 1877-78 as an estimate for the value of lands when the contract was let in 1881. There is no use arguing about it, because the subject-matter is wholly different. There was a value to the land in later years; there was no value to the land in former years. But more: what was the nature of the land? In the former it was the land of the odd sections, as they come, which comprised the 52,000,000 acres, rough or smooth, as they came, along the line from Manitoba to the Pacific Ocean. The land was to be taken along the line of the railway deep enough to make this 52,000,000 acres, and if it could not be found there the Government was to assign them in other spots. If there was a bad lot, and it fell upon the Company's share, they were to take it; if it was a water-stretch, they were to take it. They had, it is true, the advantage of the fertile plains, but they had to take their land through British Columbia as well; and would the hon. gentleman compare in price, as of an equal price, acre for acre, even in the same year, land which they were to take as it happened, rough and smooth, good and bad, heavy and light, fertile and desert, swamp and hollow, water-stretch and sandy plain? Take it in that way and take land in which you can reject all that is not found fit for settlement—it is absurd, the things are totally different in their nature. There is no means of comparing the two things together. Yet the hon. gentleman says: "Oh, I have got you there. I insist that of the land I sold in 1881, the selected land, the lands from which were to be eliminated all that were not found fit for settlement, is worth $2.68 an acre, why, of course, the other land should also be rated at $2.68 an acre." The hon. gentleman goes a little further. He says the Government gave a guarantee of 4 per cent. on an additional sum, a guarantee for twenty-five years. "Why," he says, "I have made an estimate;" and I assumed he was going to give 4 per cent., on $7,500 per mile. What rate he did assume I do not know, but I will request him not to make estimates for us. It is hard enough for us to have facts inverted for us without having estimates inverted for us.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I gave the hon. gentleman my basis.

Mr. BLAKE. I know he gave a basis, but his basis was baseless. His basis was the Foster contract, given in 1875, and I have explained what the condition of the country was in 1875, relative even to its condition in 1878, and it is absurd to suppose that was a true basis. But assume it for a moment, and what does the hon. gentleman say?—and here we get down, not to estimates, but to actual monetary calculations. He has told us that we will have to pay interest at 4 per cent. on $7,500 a mile for twenty-five years, and that, he says, is equal to $20,979,500. Now, Sir, I have run the figures out and I find that the hon. gentleman has taken $7,500 a mile on every one of these miles, and that is how he makes up his $20,979,500; he has actually assumed that an annuity of 4 per cent. is equal to the capital sum.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. To $300 per mile.

Mr. BLAKE. Very well; what is the value of an annuity of $300 a mile for twenty-five years? Is it this $20,979,500? Let the hon. gentleman look at the figures. What rate will he take interest at? If he takes interest at 5 per cent. the value of such an annuity is $11,826,225.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. What is the value of that $25,000,000 on the same calculation? The hon. gentleman will see at once that I had a right to charge, just as he has given the right to charge, $25,000,000, which is only to be paid as the work proceeds, pro rata, and that is the entire process of the hon. gentleman's calculation. If I have a right to charge $300 per mile, he would have to pay 4 per cent. on $7,500 a mile, but he charges me with $25,000,000. If he capitalizes one, he must capitalize the other.

Mr. BLAKE. In the first place, the hon. gentleman finds himself caught. This $25,000,000 is to be paid inside four years. There will be an average of two years' interest upon that, speaking roughly. And I say again that the hon. gentleman's calculation was $7,500 a mile in clean cash paid over, and the value of such annuity, according to the tables, calculating interest at 5 per cent. is about $11,826,000, so that, one way or the other, about one-half what the hon. gentleman has estimated his annuity at its real value, according to the tables. Why, Sir, if it had been for fifty years, according to these tables, the hon. gentleman would have owed nearly $20,000,000 to-day. As long as you are paying it, he says, I have counted it. Now, the truth is, he charged us as if we were going to give $7,500 a mile in cash.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. No, I charged you with paying interest on $7,500 a mile per annum, as it became due, for twenty-five years; that made $20,000,000.

Mr. BLAKE. If it had been for fifty years, the hon. gentleman would have made it out $40,000,000, and he would not have allowed for a delay in payment. He would have placed us in the same position as if he had agreed to pay $10,000,000 in four years, or $10,000,000 in forty years; and that is what the hon. gentleman calls a fair, just, candid, reasonable calculation, fit to be submitted to reasonable men. Then the hon. gentleman says: "Oh! I am looking at the offer of the second syndicate." Now, that offer, he says, was an offer for the prairie section, and he charged us with an intention, a design, if they turned out and we came in, to accept that offer for the prairie section. Sir, we recorded our dissent for the prairie section; we not merely expressed our dissent in debate, but we recorded it also in the resolution which stands upon the Journals of Parliament, and which indicates the opinion that this alternative proposal could not be accepted; and therefore, there was not the slightest doubt or difficulty in coming to a conclusion as to what our policy was on that subject. It was not obscure, it did not stand only upon word of mouth, we wrote it down, and we voted for a resolution expressly declaring that the alternative proposition could not be accepted. But because you have an alternative proposition capable of being adopted, that is no reason why it is impossible to act on any part of it, and why it was impossible to act upon the suggestion of the second syndicate with respect to the prairie section. I will now deal with the hon. gentleman's statement as regards the prairie section. He says that the cost, according to the offer of the second syndicate, would be $9,720,000. It is true; it is a great deal too much; I always thought so, I said so, and I voted so. But if it is too much, what do you think of something very much more, of something like $42,000,000 for the prairie section? What do you think of paying, instead of $7,333 per mile, $10,000 per mile; instead of 10,000 acres of land per mile, 12,500 acres per mile for the prairie section? If one was bad, the other was worse.

An hon. MEMBER. That is special pleading.

Mr. BLAKE. The hon. gentleman says it is special pleading. It may be special pleading; there is about $10,000 a mile of special pleading in it. I, therefore, maintain that nothing which the hon. Minister of Railways has said to-night, has tended in the least degree, to alter the opinion that the true, the statesman like, the business like course, was to have proceeded rapidly with the construction of the railway in the North-West, and have held our hands as regards the ends of the line, rather than have made a bargain which in its pecuniary conditions has proved so onerous, and which in its other conditions has proved already onerous, and will, in the future, prove still more onerous to the country at large, and to the North-West particularly. I have pointed out that we had given too liberal terms for the prairie section, and that these funds should have been reserved to provide for the more difficult work. I have shown that up to the 30th June, the Company have actually received from the Government, in the way of land subsidy: in cash on account of land subsidy, in cash subsidy, in advance on rails, in the way of rails sold and not paid for, and in interest on deposits, $13,588,000, to which are to be added $664,000 for the twenty miles more which have been constructed according to the statement of the hon. Minister, making a total amount of $14,000,000 up to date. To that you add the Company's capital, $5,000,000 in cash; and yet the Company was pressed to the uttermost. That is proved very clearly by the papers before us, which show most urgent demands for advances, which show proposals that the contract should be violated by money being paid in advance of construction, which show pressure in various ways, indicating almost impecuniosity on the part of the Company. What has been done with this money? The hon. gentleman has said he has received a telegram from the Secretary of the Company to-day, to the effect that they have expended west of Callander, up to date 31st March, $24,471,000. We have the Company's accounts up to 30th June last, and they show a total expenditure west of Callander of $6,290,000 only. Yet the hon. gentleman states that they have spent $24,471,000 up to the 31st March. I think there is an error in that telegram. I do not think that amount in cash has been, or can have been spent. It may have been spent in arrangements for paid-up stock in connection with some hocus-pocus business to which I shall refer presently, that stands to the debit of the Company; but as for that amount of cash, I cannot see what we have got for it. Up to 30th June the amount expended on rolling stock was $2,423,000. The hon. gentleman says $4,351,000 have been expended.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Allow me to read the telegram, because I desire the hon. gentleman to know the information I have in my hands. It runs as follows:—

"May 4th.

"Have just ascertained the total expenditure to March 31st, including construction, material in hand and paid for, $24,571,412. This does not include anything on account of purchase of lines east of Callander."

Mr. BLAKE. That is just what the hon. gentleman said before. I say the hon. gentleman has stated that this sum includes $4,351,000 for rolling stock, that the accounts up to the 30th of June last show a total expenditure of $6,290,000, of which $2,423,000 was for rolling stock, and, therefore, the additional sum for rolling stock is about $2,000,000. On looking at the length of line constructed I find it very difficult to find how any such sum can have been expended in that interval. I applied to the Government for information on this subject. The Minister agreed to give it, the House awarded it, the Minister said the Company were anxious to furnish it; but I have not got it, and not until this evening has the hon. Minister given us any information and that which he has given is partial and unsatisfactory. We do not know the details, the points where the money has been spent, what was expended on the Callander Branch, how much was due to other branches and how much to the main line. But if it was so, it is all the more important that the Company should have reserved resources for the western work. The hon. gentleman has adverted to my remarks on another occasion. I had special reference on that occasion to the eastern extensions and acquisitions. I pointed out one reason why I thought it improper that the Company should be launching out into different undertakings from their main work, and were evoking hostility which it was important they should not evoke; and I said we should not permit the resources which were intended to be, and which should be, devoted to the construction of the contract line, to be used in buying branches and extensions which might not be essential to the contract line, and which might prove unfavorable to this country, because of the clause respecting 10 per cent., which, if applied to the extensions from the main line, and which was said to be applicable thereto, might have to be paid out of the profits obtained from working other portions of the line. Some further information has been obtained in respect to those branches and acquisitions since I spoke, and I wish to give a statement of the result of that further information. The Canada Central has been acquired, and the financial condition, as appears from the papers, of that enterprise as acquired by the Company is this: first mortgage bonds, £500,000 sterling, or $2,500,000; second mortgage bonds overdue, £200,000 sterling, or $1,000,000; first, preference stock, $1,400,000, assumed at par; ordinary stock outstanding, $1,200,300; to be issued $28,000; or a total of $2,850,000, assumed at 50 cents on the dollar, making $934,000. And then there is the agreement to pay certain other obligations outstanding for stock or otherwise, that when I make only a conjectural estimate, because no clue is given to the amount, but from the character of the statement I assume that they are not far from a couple of hundred thousand dollars, and giving $186,100 for them. This makes the price to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, of the Canada Central, $6,000,000. Of these $6,000,000, $2,500,000 stand on mortgage, and the remainder is provided for the present by the Company, making the sum to be provided for in this purchase, some $3,500,000. Now, of that line 120 miles were built almost entirely by the Government subsidy of $12,000 a mile, and the price seems to me, having regard to the fact, that a considerable portion of the whole mileage is in branches, to be a price greater, notwithstanding what the hon. gentleman has said, than will be paid for with the interest of dividends, or profit, at the rate which this Company is entitled to exact. Besides this liability of $6,000,000 the Montreal and Ottawa line has also been acquired, including the Aylmer Branch and the St. Jerome Branch; and if we include the rolling stock, as was included in the Canada Central case, we have $4,000,000 paid; $400,000 practically in cash, and $600,000 in yearly payments, and the balance of $3,000,000 is left on mortgage; and these $3,000,000, with $2,500,000, make the $5,000,000, which, in their prospectus, the Company declare will be mortgaged on the extension which they have purchased. It thus appears that these two purchases, these two main purchases in the east, come to $10,000,000, of which $6,500,000 have to be presently provided for, or have been provided for by the Company. Then I see that they have made another little purchase. They have bought the Laurentian Railway, together with the St. Lin Branch; and there again you find a purchase which I cannot connect with the true interests of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, but for which, notwithstanding, we will have to pay. This small road running from Ste. Thérèse to St. Lin, somewhere about fourteen miles, they made a bargain for apparently about the same time at which they bargained for the large road. They bargained for the large road, through the then First Minister of Quebec, the present Secretary of State; and they bargained for the small road through L. A. Senecal, the President and practical proprietor of the road. Now, that little branch was built on a financial scheme; and it received about $60,000 in aid from the Quebec Government. It was to have got some $50,000 from municipalities, and there were shares to the amount of $45,000 subscribed for, making a total of over $160,000. Still the road only cost about $140,000, and the contract was made on terms for the bonds, stock, &c.; but unfortunately things took such a shape, that the contractor handed over the bonds to Col. King and Mr. Hurteau, at two different times, and apparently all that was advanced by those unto whom the bonds ultimately fell, was a sum of about $60,000. Mr. Senecal became the proprietor of all of them I believe, or of all but a fraction of them, for somewhere about $60,000 or $70,000. In that position, at the same time when the large sale is made, the small is made; and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company acquires the Laurentian Railway, as it is called—a fine title, by the way, for a branch fourteen miles long—and agrees to pay these bonds in full with interest upon them calculated at 7 per cent., which, as far as I can see, has not been paid for a long number of years; so that the price to be received would be nearly $400,000 for the St. Lin branch, and representing an investment to the fortunate proprietor and vendor of $60,000 or $70,000—for which he receives nearly $400,000 for a road costing perhaps $140,000 to construct, and being worth no more. Well, there you find an investment for which the country has to pay, because, as I have said, the country has to pay out of the North-West, the interest upon the investments of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company in other lines; and if this is to be treated as part of the main line, it has to pay 10 per cent. profit on it.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. The hon. gentleman will see that the statement which I have just read to the House, declares that not a single dollar of the money to which reference is made, has been expended in relation to any of the works east of Callander. As I have already stated to the House, all further purchase by the Company, not only pay their working expenses, but the entire interest on the cost of the works; so I do not see how the hon. gentleman can charge against the funds of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, as derived from the Government of Canada, anything in relation to anything east of Callander.

Mr. BLAKE. Why, Sir, the Parliament of Canada has agreed that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company shall have the tolls kept up to such a point, that it shall reap enough to pay the working expenses, the interest on its debt, and 10 per cent. on capital, and, therefore, we are deeply, vitally interested in what that capital account is, and what the acquisitions of the Company are. It is not with its own money that it is speculating, it is not with its own prospects that it is speculating, it is speculating with the prospects of the North-West, for if that country can be made to pay toll and tribute enough to pay the interest on whatever it acquires, that country is to be made to pay that toll and tribute, and it has nothing to do with the case, whether it applies certain receipts received from the Government of this country, in one place or in another; but I have to do with the extraordinary unfortunate powers which under the contract were granted to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company; and I say that we are deeply interested in that Company, in considering what these purchases have been. The general result of them is, that in order, as far as I can see, to get a line from Montreal to Callander, 347 miles long, the Company has acquired some 440 miles of railway in main line and branches, because there is another little bit of road, the St. Eustache Railway, which was bought at a price I cannot tell, and for a purpose for which I cannot conjecture, which, with the other sums, would make a total of about $10,700,000, including a certain sum for expenditure on these works—of capital applied in this way—not all applied in cash, because, as I have said, $3,500,000 are in mortgage, but $10,700,000 are the obligations, of which all but $3,500,000 have been raised in some way or another. Now, between $7,000,000 and $8,000,000 must have been paid or settled in some way on this account, and if the resources of the company are strained, and if, as the hon. gentleman has informed us to-night, more than once has happened to the company, it was in doubt, its present was in doubt, and it was doubtful whether it would be able to go on—I ask whether this may not be largely attributed to the circumstance of its having, according to the hon. gentleman's view, to build the direct line, it has launched out, as it has launched out into the eastern part of the country. Now, the hon. gentleman says that these roads pay their working expenses and interest charge. Well, I observe that the traffic is estimated by the company itself in its prospectus on the Eastern section at $3,200 a mile—that is their statement. I do not know what the operating cost is, but I dare say I am not very wrong in estimating the operating cost at 70 per cent. on the gross returns; and that would give you a net sum of $460,000, or 4½ per cent. on the capital invested in the line. That would be a result of $3,200 per mile, or a gross return for the working expenses of 70 per cent. Now we know at any rate the bulk of this amount, and I believe the Company contend on all of it we have to secure them in ten per cent—that they are part of the Canadian Pacific Railway, part of the main line—and therefore there is not, as the hon. gentleman has stated, enough money to save the country from loss. There is not enough money to free the country from the liability to keep up these tolls, so that on this increase of capital 10 per cent. shall be received. Before the mortgages are paid the increase will be about $6,500,000, on which 10 per cent. will have to be paid or $650,000. Did I say $6,500,000? I retract. According to the hon. gentleman's statement to-night there is no doubt that the capital will be represented, every farthing of it, by stock issued at 60, and therefore the capital upon these roads will appear to be a much larger sum than $6,500,000, and it would be utterly impossible to pay a dividend out of their earnings, and therefore these transactions involved a further charge on the trade and traffic of the North-West Territories for all time to come. I alluded to the apparent connection between the Company and the Credit Valley, and the Ontario and Quebec, and I invited information on this subject. The order passed, but the Company has made a return stating that they have no connection whatever with the Credit Valley and the Ontario and Quebec. That is the answer to the return, but there is a cable telegram which preceded the return a few days, signed by A. Tyler and addressed to Mr. Hickson, and by Geo. Stephen addressed to Van Horn in which these two potentates declare that an arrangement has been made under which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company agrees to give the Credit Valley and the Ontario and Quebec to the Grand Trunk, but they have no connection; they have nothing to do with these roads—at least that is what they tell the House of Commons. When asked, they say they have nothing to say, but the President has telegraphed over that they have agreed to give them to the Grand Trunk. Are we to believe Mr. Drinkwater, who says they have nothing to do with these roads, or are we to believe the President who agrees to sell? Or are we to believe that the President agrees to sell without having the power to sell? Between these two conflicting authorities I am somewhat puzzled, but on the whole, I am inclined to believe the President who occupies the higher position—I am inclined to believe that they have some connection with the Credit Valley and the Ontario and Quebec. At any rate, it now appears that they are to acquire these roads, or, at least, they are to lease them perpetually and pay interest on their securities; and here again we have another illustration of the mode in which burdens are being placed on the North-West by virtue of the powers given and to be given by Parliament to this Company. The Credit Valley Railway is a road about 183 miles long, and it cost somewhere about $20,000 a mile, or $3,700,000 in all. How was that cost provided? There was aid from the Government of Ontario, $457,500; aid from the municipalities in Ontario, $1,165,000; stock subscribed and paid up, $500,000; making $2,082,000, as appears by the hon. gentleman's railway statistics now on the Table of the House. If we deduct that amount from $3,700,000, we have $1,600,000 to be provided for; and bonds were issued to the amount of $20,000 per mile, and were pledged in London and elsewhere for the raising of this balance of $1,600,000. Ultimately the bonds were, to a large extent, disposed of. In fact, it appears from other papers which have been laid on the Table, that Mr. Stephen got $1,650,000, and if you run out the figures you will find that the price is about 45 cents on the dollar. Now, what is the railway worth? According to railway statistics of the hon. gentleman, it earned $35,900, while its expenses were $239,000, leaving a surplus of $46,000. Well, the interest charged on the bonds of $3,670,000 of which $1,600,000 only had been raised would be $183,500, leaving a deficiency in interest of $136,700 a year. I need not say that the bonds were not worth par—that they were not worth more than 50 cts., but the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has undertaken to take them up and assume the interest—and if they are to be believed, the principal too. Now, I do not say that this is to be added, for the hon. member for Argenteuil (Mr. Abbott) explained in the Railway Committee that he did not understand that it would be added to the capital, so that 10 per cent. would have to be paid on it. But he acknowledged that by legalizing the creation of the indebtedness we authorized the Government to pay the indebtedness, and we agreed, therefore, that they might pay $183,500 upon a road which is only paying $46,000 a year—I hope that its profits will improve, but it is obvious there will be a deficiency which will have to be paid before getting a dividend, which dividend is to be kept at 10 per cent., and therefore so much more is thrown on the North-West in order to acquire the Credit Valley Railway in the interests of the Company whose president, as was stated by the hon. member for Argenteuil, has an interest in it very much larger than in the Canadian Pacific Railway. It is to the interests of the Company to acquire it and to agree to assume the bonds on that road at par, when they are not worth more than 40 or 50, thus throwing on the back of the Canadian Pacific Railway from $1,600,000 to $2,000,000 more. In this connection I might refer to the hon. gentleman's arrangement by which he substituted these $1,650,000 bonds for the $1,000,000 deposits. I do not understand that that was according to law. The law provided that the Company might originally either deposit cash or approved securities, but the deposit being made there was no power of substitution. It provided for substitution with regard to land grant bonds, but not with reference to the $1,000,000 deposit. The Company deposited in cash, and I believe there was no legal authority to take that $1,000,000 out of the treasury and accepting any securities whatever in lieu of it. The hon. Minister on the 24th November—Mr. Angus writes his proposition on the same day, whether the letter was by telegraph I know not—makes enquiries, ascertains the facts, makes a report to council and recommends the consummation of the transaction. In that report he declares that the security represents a charge on the Credit Valley of $12,000 a mile only, and considering the section of country through which the road ran, he believes it is good. Now I cannot make out any figures to justify the hon. Minister's calculation. If he assumes that the charge of the Credit Valley is to be reduced because these bonds represent only $1,000,000, I accept that assumption, and with that assumption and the taking over the $2,000,000 which are outstanding, I find that the charge on the Credit Valley Railway would be $16,400 a mile instead of $12,000 a mile. I ask the hon. gentleman to explain by what figures he justifies his calculation that the bond charge was only $12,000 a mile. Then we were asked to grant a charter to the Ontario and Quebec. We were told that this was a Company which asked no aid, which asked no subsidies, that it was an independent Company giving an independent line—not asking the Government or the municipalities for anything—asking no special favours and giving us an interior line. We thought it was an important thing that such a Company should be established; but it seems that it is to be taken over at a low capital by the Canadian Pacific Railway, including the bridge across the St. Lawrence. Now, these three operations involve an addition to the capital of from ten to twelve million dollars—the Credit Valley, the Ontario and Quebec, and a portion of the Atlantic and North-Western, are to be taken over, and if these enterprises do not pay interest at the full rate at which the money is borrowed to construct them, then the Canadian Pacific Railway Company has to pay the balance, and the balance is to come out of the North-West. Well, Sir, what was the object? I suspect that the object of wanting the bridge across to Montreal is to get a Boston terminus for the Canadian Pacific Railway. I observe that prominent gentlemen in that Company are prominent in the South-Eastern Railway, and I suspect that the next movement, after these arrangements have been completed and these contracts have been let, will be to arrange an amalgamation with the South-Eastern, by which Boston will become the eastern terminus of the Canadian Pacific Railway. Some years ago we thought it very important to help the Grand Trunk Railway into Chicago; and having trusted the Government with the determination to expend the money that they were to receive for the Rivière du Loup Branch, in accordance with the public interests of Canada, the Government exercised that determination by deciding that it was in the public interest to expend that money in bringing the Grand Trunk into Chicago. But now we are establishing, not a competitive line with the Grand Trunk for the North-West trade, which I should rejoice to see, but a line which shall diverge from the Grand Trunk the North-West trade. No, it is utterly impossible for any railway to compete for the North-West trade upon equal terms with the Canadian Pacific Railway as long as the Canadian Pacific Railway retains the roads it has acquired in that regard, and until it has all the traffic it can bear over its road. The result will be that there will be no competition. There may be competition on the Western peninsula, but, with reference to a large class of interests, you will find no competition in the North-West between the Canadian Pacific and the Grand Trunk so long as the Canadian Pacific has the only line into the North-West and will be able to effect this diversion of traffic over the new Canadian lines; so that the probability is that this very road, the Grand Trunk, which we extended with our money into Chicago, cannot carry that western trade. You are diverting the traffic from one to the other; you are not establishing competition where competition would be most advantageous, and you are giving over to the Canadian Pacific Railway the right to do the traffic of the North-West, to the exclusion of the other great Canadian line. And thus, Sir, have the great powers with which Parliament entrusted the Canadian Pacific Railway Company been used, and we dreaded they would be used, in a waste of financial strength and energy, not devoted exclusively to their great work, the building of the contracted line, but to other and extraneous works, upon which I commented, and which have worked injuriously to the Company as well as to the country; and if there has been a cloud in this company's prospects, if they have been twitted by the hon. first Minister with having failed to get into the London money market, it was due to the hostility of the shareholders of the Grand Trunk Railway, and that hostility I attribute to the course the Canadian Pacific Railway Company have pursued in Ontario. These shareholders, one after another, declared at meetings of the Company that they were willing to be on amicable terms with this Company, but that they found it proceeding to make arrangements which would be injurious to them, and instead of taking its own share of the traffic, the Canadian Pacific was determined to take hold of what the Grand Trunk regarded as its share of the profits, and under these circumstances they struck back again. I say that was an imprudent course on the part of that Company, dependent as it must be upon the money market for its capital in which the shareholders of the other Company are so powerful. I said that the power of issuing paid-up stock was resorted to on a scale of the greatest magnitude, and with the gravest consequences. I showed that the public knew that the Parliament of Canada knew of only $5,000,000 of paid-up Canadian Pacific Railway stock, but that the rumour was current every where that that stock had been increased, and instead of standing at $5,000,000, it has been standing at a point which has been variously stated at from $15,000,000 to $25,000,000, exclusive of the new issue which has been lately announced. I said that we who had agreed that the tolls should have regard to ten per cent profit on the capital, were entitled to know the state of the capital account from time to time, and whether any or what increases had taken place; and among the information for which I moved was a statement of the increases of the capital, and what had been paid on those increases prior to the emission of the $10,000,000 lately emitted. The hon. Minister of Railways acceded to the reasonableness of that proposal; he stated that Parliament ought to have that information, invited the House to pass the motion, and added that the Company had been instructed to give full information on that point. The order was passed, the return was brought down, and what has been done with regard to that particular item? The Company take no notice of it; they do not consider it worth objecting to, but they ignore it, and leave us without a word of information as to what extent the capital has been increased, to what extent it represents cash and to what extent it represents water. I pointed out then that, the Company having adopted this mode of issuing their capital stock, that is to say, issuing a larger amount than they required, and issuing it at a discount, it was probable that the original proprietors would recoup, or a good deal more than recoup themselves by increasing their holdings without paying value therefor. I pointed out that it was not unlikely that a great portion of the increase was composed of water, and I said that we ought to know that, because we had not agreed to pay dividends at ten per cent. upon pieces of paper issued by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, without value, but only upon the money which had gone into the construction of the road. But, Sir, we know nothing about it, only we are entitled to believe that a very large sum has been added to that capital without any value whatever being given therefor. Now, Sir, I was prepared to ask to-night what the condition of things was to be. I was prepared to ask upon what the dividends of ten per cent. were to be collected. I had asked before and I had got no answer; but, to-night, the response is made and it realizes our worst apprehensions. We are told boldly to-night that a dividend is to be paid and the legitimate capital is to be considered as having been created by whatever extent to which the Canadian Pacific Railway choose to emit stock. I have read to you the Canadian Pacific Railway Company's President's own letter in which he declares on the 5th of April, that: "The cash cost of the 334 miles of Railway will be $54,000,000," the stock being issued at 60. And I am told that instead of paying ten per cent. on the cash cost, as he estimates it, without giving credit for the 17,000,000 acres of land, which he sets against it, the dividend is to be paid, not on the $54,000,000, but on the whole $90,000,000, making $9,000,000 a year dividend, although $54,000,000 only go into the road. And the hon. gentleman had so little considered this subject, that he talked of this new stock all through, as bonds, and had to be corrected time and again. He said they sell their bonds at 60, as if the sale of bonds and the sale of stock had any parallel whatever. Why, if you sell bonds at 60 in the open market, it is because you cannot raise your money cheaper, and it is necessary, therefore, to pay that much money in the end in order to raise the money for which you sell your bonds. But if you are going to emit stock, and if you want $54,000,000 of stock, you send that amount out to the public, and you get what you want. If you send out $90,000,000 of stock you get no more; but all the advantage the shareholders have is under this contract, according to which they say they can get a dividend at 10 per cent. on $90,000,000, instead of 10 per cent. on $54,000,000.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. They cannot do it.

Mr. BLAKE. There again I am confronted with the great difficulty in the case, viz.: that I find two voices on the other side of the House on this subject. The right hon. gentleman says they cannot do it, but the hon. Minister of Railways explained the policy of the Government, and he declared emphatically that the stock was to be treated—every shilling of it—as capital.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. It is for dividend purposes, but not for Tariff purposes. Read the clause.

Mr. BLAKE. I have read it, and know it perfectly well.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. But you do not tell us all about it.

Mr. BLAKE. I cannot say all I have to say in a moment. I know the hon. gentleman's views about it and my own view, but I am dealing now with the hon. Minister of Railways' view. What the hon. Minister of Railways said was that the stock was to be counted for tariff purposes. The question I put in March last was whether the Company was to be entitled to 10 per cent. on the whole stock or not, and that question the hon. Minister of Railways has answered when he said certainly. What else was the sense of his answer? What cared I whether the Company made it $90,000,000 or $900,000,000 if it did not affect the question of 10 per cent., but it was in that express light that I quoted my own speech as to the effect of the clause and the hon. gentleman's assurance as to the meaning of the clause, and asked whether the Canadian Pacific Railway was to be entitled to exact 10 per cent. dividend on the capital stock instead of on the nominal cash put into the road. On that question the hon. Minister of Railways said that bonds and stocks were all the same thing, and that it would be better for the country that the Company should sell at 50 instead of at 60 rather than there should be a mortgage on our Canadian Pacific Railway. It would have been better had the hon. Minister of Railways consulted the First Minister before making his statement so that there might be concert among the hon. gentlemen opposite. I do not know which should have been the first to approach the other, but in some way or other they should have got together and decided what they should say. I recollect a story as told of an old cabinet secret—so old I suppose that it is not contrary to the oath to reveal it—Lord Melbourne, at a Cabinet meeting concerning the corn laws, placed his back against the door and refused to allow any of the Ministers to leave until they had decided whether to say the duty would raise the price of corn or not.

Sir JOHN A. MACDONALD. I do not think my hon. friend is verbally accurate as to what Lord Melbourne said.

Mr. BLAKE. I may have omitted the expletive, but think the House will excuse the omission. I will adjure the hon. gentlemen as solemnly as I can without the addition of the expletive, to try and agree among themselves. This is a grave question. My opinion is that there is a difference of opinion in the Cabinet on this subject, and, as I stated on the 5th of March, I believe that if you allow this stock to be emitted and to get into the hands of the people; if you allow $90,000,000 to be floated around as representing the Canadian Pacific Railway capital, we will be told later on that the good faith of this country requires they should get a 10 per cent. dividend on that amount. We owe it to ourselves and the country, and to intending investors, that the hon. Minister of Railways, and the hon. First Minister, should settle the difference between them; decide how the calculation shall be made; announce it to the country before there has been any considerable movement of this stock on the market, so that the people may not be able to say that they were deceived or misled. The Government should warn the Canadian Pacific Railway and the public that it is only to the actual stock, entirely irrespective of the nominal amount of stock, that the 10 per cent. clause applies. I am aware of what the clause is. I read it, and also the hon. gentleman's own speech about it. I pointed out that the hon. gentleman's view was that it applied only to the amount actually paid. I hung my hopes on that statement until I heard the hon. Minister of Railways' speech, but they were then dashed to the ground, and I felt that another construction was being adopted. There is, therefore, now additional reason for a decisive and authoritative statement. I pointed out that the Consolidated Railway Act, allowed only 6 per cent. interest on the capital expended during construction, but that this mode of issuing stock, allowed the Company to obtain 8½ per cent. if necessary. The hon. gentleman seemed to think that was a small matter not worthy of notice. With the hon. gentleman's tariff, and the arrangement he has made, it is probable that the profits of the railway in the future will, as they have been in the past, be good enough to pay the interest on the legitimate capital used in the construction of the road. They tell us in the return brought down the other day, that they have not taken out of the capital one dollar for interest as yet, because the earnings of the road have been adequate to pay interest on construction;—and what I complain of is, that a provision should be inserted enlarging the charge for interest during construction beyond that which the law has applied to this sort of payments, and I pointed out that separate sections of the Eastern and Western divisions ought to be made, that these divisions were separated by hundreds of miles, that they were worked entirely separate, and that they formed as much, or more, two separate systems of railway to-day as any two railways that could be found, that their traffic accounts and all other accounts must be separately kept, and that we ought to have a separate account. I pointed out that separate accounts were necessary, because we wanted to know about the regulations of the tariff, that we could not tell what the tariff was producing in the North-West unless we had an account of the results of the working in the North-West, and that to mix up the Eastern Division, and the old lines with the North-West and give us one bulk return, was to render it impossible for us to understand what was done in the east and in the west, to judge how far the eastern lines were paying their way and what the western lines were doing. Well, Sir, the House agreed in that, the hon. Minister agreed to it, the order was made, and we are told in answer that the works of the Company are so extensive, and are carried on at so many different points, that it is impossible to make these returns at more than one period of the year. I asked for a return for that period of the year up to the 30th June last, also for a later return, but they did not give us even a separate return up to the 30th June last, although they kept their accounts separately, although in December they are able to point out what they had done for each end, what the running expenses were, what the earnings were, etc. They did not give to Parliament that information. Well, now, we ought to have that. The hon. gentleman has given them a new tariff, a highly increased tariff, but he has not been furnished with information which shows him how the old tariff worked, the House has not been furnished with it, we have got nothing which enables us to judge for ourselves how things have gone. Now, then, there are some points upon which I did not then touch. We contended when this contract was made that the power of regulating tolls would not be a satisfactory protection. Now, the law requires that the company shall frame a tariff and pass a by-law, that the by-law shall be submitted to the Governor in Council, and that the Governor in Council shall determine whether it will approve of it or how it will deal with it, so that you got in the first instance the Company's motion as to what their tariff should be, and then the decision of the Governor in Council upon it. Such was the course adopted last year and the year before. The company framed a tariff for local freight, they framed a tariff for through freight, they passed a by-law, they sent the by-law to the Government, the Governor in Council considered the by-law, they approved the by-law, they approved the tariff and they fixed the period of time. Later on that period expired, and in the meantime the mileage had been much increased. The company applied for an extension of the tariff to the new region, and also as to time, saying they were about to submit a reduced tariff later on. The Minister agreed with that view, and the tariff was extended in its operation for another period. The next year we find that the company, having stated they would submit a tariff, a new tariff, we are told, is submitted. The Minister has not brought it down; I have asked for it several times; I called attention to the defect in the return to the Minister of Public Works—in the absence of the hon. gentleman—and he said he would look into it. But I could get no satisfaction; I may assume, therefore, that this company has never submitted any further tariff than the first one. If they have, we ought to have had it, it was our right to have it, it was the duty of the hon. Minister to send it down to us. Now what has the hon. gentleman done? He ventures to frame a tariff, and he orders his chief engineer to frame a tariff, and his chief engineer submits one to him which, he says, he does not believe will please either party, he knows it is not considered liberal enough by the Company, and he thinks the hon. Minister will consider it too high, but he thinks it is a fair and a just tariff. He has given us something about the cost of labor, something about the cost of fuel, and the cost of working and his comparison. But we have not got the data that we would like to have had, namely, how had the old tariff worked? what had been done under it? What were the operating expenses? What were the earnings, what different conditions were to be accepted in the new? Now, we have the general results. We know by the returns to the 30th June, that in the year ending then the Company's operating earnings over their lines were $1,548,000, and their operating receipts $1,148,000, giving a surplus of earnings over operating expenses of $400,000. We know not what was the result in the east, what the result was in the west, or how the old tariff had worked. We do not know, but I suppose if the hon. Minister had had that information he would have brought it down. Without it, then, he has acted and framed a tariff, without knowing, without getting from them those details which were essential elements in forming a judgment, he has caused to be approved a new tariff. Now, Sir, that tariff is extremely defective. The old tariff provided through rates and local rates on different scales, as was proper. The new tariff that the hon. Minister has given to this Company provides only local rates—no through rates—and, therefore of course, gives the Company right to charge mileage rates up to the mileage rates on through freight as well as on local freight. What they do in that regard in the way of diminution is done of free grace; it is not done under the hon. gentleman's tariff. That is an important difference between the old tariff and the new one. In the old tariff it was held important to indicate what they should be allowed to charge for through freight, or for freight interchanged with connecting lines. Now, this new tariff gives only one maximum. Now, Sir, the old rates and the new rates compare thus—taking the statistics which the hon. gentleman himself gave in his table of rates, given about this time last year: For distances of twenty to twenty-five miles, the old rates were, for first class freight, 17 cts.; second, 14 cts.; third, 11 cts.; fourth, 8 cts. New rates, 24, 20, 16, 12, or an increase of about 50 per cent. in the new over the old. For forty-five to fifty, the next stage the hon. gentleman gave us last year as furnishing a fair test, the rates were 34, 18, 15 and 12; the new rates are 35, 29, 24 and 18, or once again an increase of somewhere about 50 per cent. For the next grade the hon. gentleman took last year seventy to seventy-five miles, and the old rates were 29, 22, 19 and 15 cts.; the new rates are 45, 38, 30 and 23. For 95 to 100 miles the old rates were 40, 32, 22 and 17; the new rates are 54, 45, 36 and 27. The last which the hon. gentleman gave us last year was from 145 to 150 miles; for this the old rates were 45, 36, 29 and 23, while the new rates are 69, 58, 46 and 34, or, speaking roughly, on every grade of rates which the hon. gentleman gave us of merchandise last year for the purpose of comparison, the new tariff is an increase of about 50 per cent. on the old—in some a little less, in some a little more—but on the average an increase of 50 per cent. Well, I will take some of the results in freighting from known points. The old local rate from Emerson to St. Boniface, sixty-five miles, on first-class merchandise, was 27 cts., now it is 41; on fourth-class, old rate 14 cts., new rate 21; special, sixth-class, old rate $24, new rate $35, being an increase of 50 per cent. Take the new rates and you will see that this is a consequence of having omitted to give a through rate tariff and allow discretion to the Company with respect to through rates, equal to that for local rates. The old through rate for first-class merchandise from St. Vincent to St. Boniface was 18 cts.; now the through rate from St. Vincent to St. Boniface is 41 cts. The old rate for fourth class merchandise from Emerson to St. Boniface, was 10 cts., now it is 21; the old rate for merchandise, special sixth-class, from Emerson to St. Boniface was $17 for half a car, now it is $35. So the through rates have been increased on the short hauls by 100 per cent, while the local rates have been increased 50 per cent. Now, why was this? It was because the Minister did not prepare a tariff of through rates, but gave the Company the power to charge up to the maximum through rate, as well as the local rate, and they have charged up to the maximum on the hauls I have mentioned for both, and they have been able to double the charge for through rates on short hauls. I say, therefore, the increase is enormous, and that the increase is due to the circumstance that in framing a tariff for the Company the Minister chose to depart from the principle that there should be a defined distinction made by a tariff framed by the Government and approved by the Governor in Council, between through and local rates. But the Minister allowed the Company to exercise a discretion in these hauls, and they have availed themselves of it to the full extent. So it is of very little importance what the local rate is as compared with the through rate. The question is, what is charged upon the great amount of freight? The old local rate from Winnipeg to Rat Portage, 135 miles, was: first-class merchandize, 41 cts.; now, 65 cts. Fourth-class, 21 cts.; now, 33 cts. Special, sixth, $12; now, $47. To points beyond Winnipeg, such as Brandon, Rat Portage and Portage la Prairie, the through rate into Winnipeg, and the local rate out, is very far in excess of the through rate direct to that point. I do not object to a difference. I agree with the hon. gentleman that the long haul has to be considered, and that the circumstances of the country have to be considered, and that they have to be considered with regard to opening up for settlement the further part; but the discrepancies are so great here, as undoubtedly to affect the interests of different parts of the country. I believe the extent of the discrimination is beyond what the hon. Minister should have considered. I had prepared some memoranda on this subject, but I will omit the figures and hand them to the reporters. They are such as to show enormous increases, and practically, not merely to prevent Winnipeg from being a distributing centre, but almost to force it in a very short time, and so soon as there are centres anywhere else, out of the fair rates for being the distributing centre for points at any considerable distance. I could show, as I have said, that the local rates have increased over 50 per cent. on short hauls, and on that part of the railway which covers the bulk of the trade, they have been doubled. The hon. Minister, however, says that this is all right; that the tariff is constructed on a parabolic curve—the rates for short distances being very high as compared with long distances; and he says it is a good tariff. The hon. gentleman further declares that the the tariff will not pay the Canadian Pacific Railway for some years. The old one did. It has enabled them to pay running expenses and interest on capital during construction. The hon. gentleman does not give details, but simply tells us that the rates will not pay. The hon. gentleman points to problematical difficulties, and declares that it costs four or five times as much to move freight as it does on the Grand Trunk. He makes comparisons with the Intercolonial, the Northern Pacific, the Union Pacific, the St. Paul and Manitoba, and other roads. The hon. gentleman does not, however, assume on this occasion the attitude he assumed a year ago. He made comparisons then too. He made a tariff which suited him to make more extensive comparisons. On page 966 of the Hansard the hon. gentleman made comparisons of the rates of that day; and I will ask permission of the House to hand the figures to the reporters. The hon. gentleman did not confine himself to monopoly rates and to high-priced roads, to the roads which have created, to a large extent, the railway question in the United States with respect to tariffs, or to roads about which great grievances have arisen. He took the Intercolonial, the Prince Edward Island, the Central Vermont, the Toronto, Grey and Bruce, the Canada Central, the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba, the Northern and North-Western, the Grand Trunk, the Chicago, Milwaukee, and St. Paul, the Atcheson, Topeka and Santa Fé, the Northern Pacific, the Union Pacific, the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, the Chicago and North-Western; and he gave us a table of rates for first and fourth-class freights, ranging from 20 cts. to 50 cts., 75 cts., 90 cts. $1.00 and $150. What did the hon. gentleman say? He said:

“As this is a matter to which the hon. leader of the Opposition devoted a great deal of attention, and which I understand he deplored more deeply than any thing else in connection with this contract, I am quite sure the House will bear with me if I take the opportunity, at some length, to show the hon. gentleman that his sympathy was thrown away; that it was not required, and there is no room for him to bestow any more of it in that connection. Of course, the charges upon railways are in proportion to the distance that freight is carried. This is the mode in which all railway Tariffs are constructed.

“The following is the comparative statement.”

This comparative statement, I put it in:

He then alludes to the Atcheson and Topeka, Northern Pacific, Union Pacific, Chicago, Burlington and Quincy, and proceeds:—

"I am asked by my hon. friend behind me if there is any one of these sixteen railways which charges less than the Canadian Pacific Railway, and to the best of my knowledge, holding the paper in my hand, I do not see a single case in which the charge of the Canadian Pacific Railway is not as low as any one I have stated."

He then alludes to Government railways, and says:

"The Central Vermont I see is a cent lower, and the St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba, which has been complained of so much, is also 3 cents lower—that is in the short distance and for the first-class freight; but, as I said, I will ask permission of the House to publish this table exactly as it stands in the Hazard, as a matter of record, and a very useful one it will be in dealing with the very important question of freights."

So I find it, even earlier than I had expected. I find it extremely useful this evening in dealing with this important matter, for, as the hon. gentleman observed on that day, it would stand as a record and a guide for the future. Let it be a guide, and let us see how far the hon. gentleman has followed it:

"The Northern and the North-Western is 16 cents to 17 cents for the first-class, which is a cent over, but on the longer distance I do not see any of these in which I have the amounts given which is lower than the Canadian Pacific Railway, and as I have shown in the distances of 145 miles to 150 miles it is very greatly lower. I think the same will be found which, referred to the charges for 70 to 75 miles and from 95 to 100 miles. I think it will be found that there are no charges lower than those of the Canadian Pacific Railway for the 95 to 100 miles. From 70 to 75 miles, the charges are 29, 22, 19 and 50 cents, but I see no instance in this table, which is compiled so far as the figures could be obtained for the various distances, in which the Canadian Pacific Railway is not the lowest. From 45 to 50 miles the charges are 24, 18, 15 and 12 cents according to the class of freight. I think for the distance from forty-five to fifty miles there is not a single instance, so far as I am able to see at this moment, among all these railways, that the charges are not higher than the Canadian Pacific Railway, etc."

That was the general statement then, and he called upon me to find some other subject upon which to waste or expend my sympathy, because, he said, it was entirely displaced as to this tariff. Well, time works wonders, and in this particular it seems to have arranged matters perhaps a little earlier than the hon. gentleman himself may have expected. The tariffs which are in existence show that there is nothing to which the hon. gentleman can refer in this connection. They show this: the rates which he gave us last year as the rates of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, in each of these cases, were the rates which have now been enormously increased. The Canadian Pacific Railway Company no longer bears a comparison with any of these roads whatever, except the four monopoly routes, to which he has now referred. It no longer occupies the position in which he placed it last year, and even with them, taking the long hauls, the comparatively long hauls, the comparisons may be made in taking first-class merchandize. For two hundred miles on the Canadian Pacific, the rate is 80 cents; on the Union Pacific, 67 cents, and on the St. Paul & Manitoba, 73 cents; so that even of the monopoly rates, two are considerably under the Canadian Pacific, according to the hon. gentleman's new table. For second-class traffic on a two hundred miles haul, the Canadian Pacific charge 67 cents, the Union Pacific 60 cents, and the St. Paul & Manitoba 54 cents. For lumber, shingles and special fourths, the Canadian Pacific, on a two hundred miles haul, charge 37 cents, the Union Pacific 36 cents, and the St. Paul & Manitoba 33 cents. For live stock, the Canadian Pacific charges 60 cents, the Union Pacific 55 cents, and the St. Paul & Manitoba 53 cents. For household goods and implements, &c., sixth-class goods, the Canadian Pacific charge 60 cents, and the St. Paul & Manitoba 56 cents. Now, Sir, when we complained of high freights from the North-West to Old Canada last year, they said, "Oh! it is all on account of this infamous St. Paul & Manitoba road." They have the right to charge what they like on their own railway. What have we to do with that? But as to the Canadian Pacific itself, the minute it gets inside the North-West its freights are low; but I have shown numerous instances in which the Canadian Pacific, under their new tariff, actually charge higher than the rates which were acknowledged grievances, of the St. Paul & Manitoba last year; and it has been taken entirely out of that proud category in which the hon. gentleman placed it by the useful record which he made in his speech last year, of the ordinary rates; and it is put among the high monopoly roads, and up beyond a good many high monopoly roads at that; so that, Sir, it is clear that my observation was correct—that the principle of regulating tolls by the Government would prove but a very unsatisfactory and imperfect method of obviating the evils of monopoly. This is the first instance we have of it. They commenced on a tariff which they say they believe is reasonable. Everybody is pleased. The hon. gentleman congratulates himself. We are branded through the country as having been raising a bogey. We find that the Canadian Pacific is going to carry freights as low as the Grand Trunk, the Northern & North-Western, the Toronto, Grey & Bruce—all these roads; but one short year elapses the prospects of the road are brighter than ever; and the hon. gentleman shows a double tariff—a tariff which goes far in excess of all these, and thus we see, so early, how little protective the power of the Governor in Council in regulating tolls is. We contended that the Company would be likely to sell the lands at high prices for speculative purposes to speculators; and that the restrictions should be placed so as to secure the settlement, but there again we were laughed at by the hon. gentleman. We were told that it was ridiculous; that the Company would never do anything of the kind; and last year, the hon. gentleman, in reading over our resolutions to prove their futility, turned to that subject, and said: Here is another resolution, we were told that restrictions ought to be cast around the Canadian Pacific; that they ought not to be allowed to sell their lands free of conditions of settlement, and now I prove to you by the logic of events, that this is all nonsense. I prove to you, that these alarms were uncalled-for. What does he say:

"Now, Sir, I ask that hon. gentleman in all candor to say whether, what has taken place between the time that he moved that resolution and to-day, it has not given him the most perfect and complete answer which it is possible for any person to give, to the resolution he moved. Why, Sir, what is the fact? The fact is that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are placing the whole of their 25,000,000 acres of land in the market at $1.25. Instead of adopting the policy of holding them which it was alleged they would adopt; instead of doing what the hon. gentleman feared that the Company would be induced to do, namely, hold their lands until they would acquire a value by the cultivation of the adjoining sections, which would be taken for free homesteads, — what have they done? Why, Sir, they have said to the world: "We have determined not to sell our lands to speculators at any price." Offer them $5 or $10 an acre, or what you like for their lands, and the answer will be: "We do not want your money, but if you are ready to cultivate the land, you can have it for $1.25." They have put up their lands at the maximum price of $2.50 per acre, for the whole 25,000,000 acres, and for every acre cultivated within four years they return to the purchaser one-half of his purchase money, thus reducing the cost of every acre of land to $1.25. They do more."

And then he states the regulation and continues:

"And in all their regulations from the very first, they have aimed at placing their lands in the hands of persons who would cultivate and settle them at the lowest possible rate—at a rate that cannot yield them more than $1 an acre, because no person can say that they can administer their lands at less than 25 cents an acre; so that practically their 25,000,000 acres of land are open to all persons who will choose to settle on them at $1.25."

Once again he says:

"These gentlemen show that they understand their business too well, to hold their lands at too high a price. That every acre of land put under cultivation is worth twice as much to them as it would be if they got $10 an acre for it at the end of ten years. So that that difficulty is swept away, I do not wish to detain the House, &c."

And he proceeds to say :

" And they have been rendered so liberal that every difficulty in that respect has been removed, and the best evidence has been given that these gentlemen are willing to part with the whole of their lands for agricultural purposes at a price that will not return to them more than $1 an acre."

Once again, Sir, one short year has vindicated our opinions. We find that the returns of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company shew that they have sold 6,250,000 acres in round figures for $17,300,000. We know that the great bulk of it has been sold not to settlers, not on condition of settlement, but to a speculative land company, the North-West Land Company. We know that that land has been sold not at $1 an acre but at something which is equivalent to $3 nominally—equivalent to $3.70 per acre, allowing for the discount of the bonds and the prices at which they were taken. We know that the Company has not acted on the prices which were stated to us last year. We know that they have refused those who wanted to buy lands, and that they have promoted and assisted as far as they could the formation of the companies which have taken 5,000,000 acres of the choicest land at the net price of $2.73 per acre. We know that our fears have been realized and that the settler has to pay a profit on to $2.75 per acre to the speculator instead of getting the land at $1 or $1.25 from the Company. It has been proved to be clear and plain that our fears were justified, and that it would have been prudent and statesmanlike to put in a clause which would have prevented the Company doing what the hon. gentleman said they would not do, and by which the great bulk of the best lands of the North-West have been disposed of otherwise than the hon. gentleman contended they would be disposed of. Now, the cost of administration he said would be 25 cents per acre. I find that the cost of administration for the year was $35,000. They sold several millions of acres, but they did not put in the big sale of 5,000,000 of acres, so that the cost of administering the lands was a mere fraction of what the hon. gentleman said it would be, and the net return to the Company will be $2.60 per acre if you make a liberal allowance for administration. Now, the hon. gentleman stated with reference to the selection of the lands that the lands which they now get, and the lands which were sold, were the cream. Not so. 5,000,000 of acres are now estimated to be obtainable along the line of the railway out of the nine or ten millions which would have existed if every alternate section had been available. Two and a half millions of acres are supposed to be available under the first grant made to the south of the line, but that amount has been enormously extended since without any statement of what the acreage of that extent will be but we know that far more than the Company has disposed of is available along the line. The sale to the North-West Company, is only a part of these lands. It is only certain sections, and certain sections in the south-western part of Manitoba. That sale is distributed amongst the whole, presumably of some 10,000,000 acres of country which along the line, and in the southern part of the country, they may have. The hon. gentleman says that he rest is far superior; but did we not hear the hon. member for Provencher (Mr. Royal) say, when the subject of the Prince Albert settlement was discussed, that it was the choicest part of the whole North-West. Wherever the Company told the Government that they would build, wherever they wanted land, they projected a line, and they asked the Government to reserve sections, because they were going to build. Later, they have asked the Government to reserve them without their building through it, and the Government have reserved a large block of what is reported to be the choicest lands in the North-West—a block comprising, exclusive of Hudson's Bay and school lands, some 38,000,000 of acres, or of odd-numbered sections comprising 19,000,000 of acres; and the Minister of the Interior reports that he thinks that out of that 19,000,000 of acres, after making allowances for water-stretches, lakes, &c., 12,500,000 acres would inure to the grant—that is, about two-thirds of the 19,000,000 would be available, and the lands are in the choicest parts of the North-West. So futile are the stories which would treat the whole area of the North-West, as if whatever you found within those distances, from north to south, and from east to west, was available land—so futile are those stories, that the Minister of the Interior, in proposing a reservation of 19,000,000 of acres for the Canadian Pacific Railway within limits of their own selection, says, that these 19,000,000 shall be reserved in order to secure them 12,500,000 proper, to be taken under the terms of the contract. If it requires 19,000,000 of acres to make up 12,500,000 fairly fit for settlement, in the blocks of the choicest lands in the North-West, what proportion will be required in the ordinary portions of the country? Certainly a larger proportion, and this statement indicates that a much larger proportion than the hon. gentleman stated, and asked the House and the country to assume, of the North-West is not fit for settlement. The hon. gentleman says that the arrangements which have been made, have been entirely in favor of the public. The arrangements with reference to the homesteaders seem to me to be very unfavorable to the public. The Government was asked late in the year to negotiate with the homesteaders, whose homesteads might be wanted for town sites, with a view of having them abandon their homesteads, so that the Company might build their stations upon them. Everybody heard that the Company were sending out speculative homesteaders—persons to squat as homesteaders along the line. Everybody heard that others were speculating in homesteads along the line; and hon. gentlemen agree that whoever might happen to be on a homestead, might agree with the Company to give up his land to them, and all the Company had to do was to send out men to squat, and then if they abandoned their land the Company were authorized to take them. That is an arrangement which does not seem to me to be in the interest of the homesteader, or in the interest of the public, but is entirely in the interest of the Railway Company as it enables them to acquire land which should either be the property of the homesteader or should have been reserved for town sites, so that the public would have got the benefit. The hon. gentleman has said a great deal about the branches of the road. He says they are going to do a great deal in branches, but they certainly have changed their tune very much about the branches. Last year the hon. Minister brought down a letter from the Company, in which they said that they had decided to build several branches in the North-West. There was the Assiniboine Branch, 300 miles; the Saskatchewan Branch, 435 miles; the Souris Branch, 200 miles; and the Pembina Mountain Branch, 100 miles, or a total of 1,035 miles of branches. They said they had not had time actually to locate the branches, but they sent in a plan giving an approximate statement of the lines so that the Government might reserve the land. These almost all seem to have been abandoned. The Saskatchewan has not been touched; the Assiniboine has not been touched, and instead of 1,035 miles of projected lines, the hon. gentleman talks about 280 miles in other parts of the country. In fact the energy which should have been expended in making the branches, has been expended in these eastern portions which I have already criticised. It will be remembered that we contended that the provisions with regard to the selections of the route were not sufficiently guarded. Now, there are several questions which arise with regard to this portion of the subject. For example, Callander Station apparently is a movable point, for now it has been fixed at a point ten miles eastward of the point at which it was originally located. The reason is obvious. If you could shove Callander to the east the Canadian Pacific Railway Company which amalgamated with the Canada Central, and which was completing its line, would be able to draw land and money subsidy for every mile you shove Callander to the east. I do not mean that the whole contract price would be increased, because it is a bulk sum; but they would be able to take the money which should be otherwise reserved for the construction of the other part, the real 650 miles to be built by the Canadian Pacific Railway Company from Callander to Thunder Bay, and apply it to a road which should be built from their own resources. The hon. gentleman did not see any objection to that. He shoved Callander Station ten miles farther back to the east, and ten miles of road which was not part of the contracted line became part of it, and the Company claimed a subsidy for it and got it. That would be about $400,000 in land and money, estimating the land at $2.68 an acre, which they have realized on what they have already sold; and what is the consequence? There is a certain sum with which to build the line; but we have already handed over to them for the building of that which was not part of the line contracted to be built, $400,000 in land and money, and consequently there is $400,000 less available to build the contracted line, just as on the prairie section we have handed over many millions of land and money which were wanted for other parts of the line. With reference also to the route from Callander to Thunder Bay, there is a good deal to be said. Last year there was a great flourish. The hon. First Minister, in the fall of the year before, had stated that he had a letter from Mr. Stephen, which has not been brought down—but which he communicated to the faithful then attending upon him—in which Mr. Stephen had stated that the Company, although they had at first objected to building that line, would not now part with it; that they were going to build close to Lake Superior; that about thirty-five miles was then built, and that this would be a great advantage to the Province of Ontario; and the hon. gentleman congratulated Toronto, where he was speaking at the time, on the subject. The Company had said so. On the 30th of March, 1882, they applied to the Minister to approve of the line to Algoma Mills as part of the main line. The Minister said: "No; I cannot approve of it further than what would be a common point until you can prove to me that the line is practicable all through," and he was quite right. "But," he said, "I will approve it on condition that you prove it to be practicable afterwards." Well, that was the last we heard of it. The hon. gentleman, in his speech last year, made another great flourish of trumpets about this line. He said: "They are going near the shore, they will be able to build farther, the snowfall will be less, and the change of location will be a great benefit to the country." That has all been changed. There is no statement, and the Minister has withdrawn the application. All we hear about this grand affair, which was heralded the fall before last so loudly, is that the Company call the Algoma Mills line once more a branch, and it turns out that their plan is changed, but the Minister has not obtained from them any statement of the reasons why there was a change in the policy announced on the 30th of March, 1882, by the Company, and also by the First Minister, as tending to the great advantage of the whole community. It was proposed at that time to locate the whole line from Thunder Bay eastward to the head of Lake Superior during 1882. At any rate, this has not been done; there has been an approval of only a small fraction of that line. It was also stated by the hon. Minister that the road would be opened for immigrants in July, 1882. I would ask the hon. gentleman how many, if any, immigrants went in during 1882; whether that anticipation of the hon. gentleman, so confidently expressed a few months ago, was realized; and, if not, why we have not some explanation on this occasion? We are called upon to review the operations of the Government and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company during the year. We contrast the hon. gentleman's statements with his performances, and we find that, whenever anything occurs which was not calculated upon, he is dumb. Now, we know that some mysterious arrangement has been made by which the contractors on Section "B" are satisfied, and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company are satisfied, but the contractors have given up their contract, and the Canadian Pacific Railway Company choose to construct, as well as to run the line. Then there is the location of the road west of Moose Jaw Creek. This was the most westerly point approved up to last Session, 454 miles west of Winnipeg. The hon. Minister distinctly pledged himself that no further appropriation should be given to any portion of the road west of that point until Government had decided as to the route through the Kicking Horse Pass. He said of that line:

"It then follows the general course of the Qu'Appelle River to Moose Jaw Creek, a distance of 404 miles from Winnipeg, which is the most westerly point up to the present approved of by the Governor in Council, and I may say here that it is not the intention of the Governor in Council to approve any further portion of the line of the Canadian Pacific Railway proper, or make any payments in regard to any construction west of that point until it is ascertained that there is a better line in the interest of this country, so far as we are able to judge, through Kicking Horse Pass, than we had previously obtained through Yellow Head Pass * * * The Company expect to be able to lay some 500 miles of track in a direct westerly line during the coming season, but, as I have already stated, the Government does not intend to make any payment on any portion of the line beyond Moose Jaw Creek until they are satisfied that a better line can be obtained for the Canadian Pacific Railway by going south to Kicking Horse Pass than had already been obtained in the direction of Yellow Head Pass."

That was the pledge; what has taken place? On the 27th of September, 1882, approval was reported of 113½ miles west of Moose Jaw, from Moose Jaw to Swift Current Creek, on the recommendation of Acting Chief Engineer Lynch, in the absence of the Chief Engineer, through the hon. Minister of Agriculture, the Acting Minister of Railways and Canals, in the absence of the hon. Minister of Railways. That report was approved by the hon. Minister, submitted to the Council, and adopted on the 30th September. I know the hon. Minister of Agriculture to be, by name as well as by nature, infallible, and I cannot think he made a mistake; and here was a positive pledge to Parliament that there would not be any payment upon or any approval of any portion of the line east of Moose Jaw until the Government had ascertained that there was a better route through Kicking Horse Pass than through Yellow Head Pass. Yet without having ascertained that, without having the information upon which it could be ascertained—for some of the information only came in the return the other day and some of it came since, which the hon. Minister communicated to the House for the first time to-night—without having the information upon which a decision could be reached, a decision was reached, or rather there was no decision, for there is no Order in Council approving it; but the hon. Minister caused approval to be given involving the payment of $1,135,000 in cash and a grant of 1,418,750 acres of land which at the estimated value of $2.68 an acre is $3,802,000 or a total of $4,937,000, without any reference to the question of the Kicking Horse Pass at all.

Mr. POPE. Referring to both passes.

Mr. BLAKE. No; because the hon. Minister of Railways had declared that Moose Jaw was as far west as you could go on the route to Calgary, except with reference to the Yellow Head Pass, because the hon. Minister of Railways had declared that he did not intend to allow a single mile to be approved in location or paid for on the route to Calgary unless it was decided the railway should go by Kicking Horse Pass; because the road does diverge there; because the engineer so reported; because the Minister so stated; because it would be quite out of the question to carry that road to Swift Current Creek and then go to Yellow Head Pass with any degree of propriety unless the views formerly entertained by the engineer and the hon. Minister of Railways are entirely erroneous and uncertain. A little later, the 6th November, the hon. Minister of Railways himself received an application with reference to the location of the line from Swift Current Creek to the crossing of the South Saskatchewan, a distance of 148 miles. On that, the Chief Engineer, Mr. Schreiber, reported as follows:—

“That as far as the section referred to from Swift Current Creek to the South Saskatchewan River, a distance of about 148 miles, is concerned, and its suitability for a line of railway, the country is favorable both as regards gradients and curvature, being in this respect well within the conditions imposed by the Canadian Pacific Railway Act; and that if a line within the terms of this Act can be located through the Kicking Horse Pass the line laid down on the plan now submitted, though not so direct from that point as might have been desired, may be considered sufficient so as to warrant its approval.”

So that there was only a conditional approval given by the officer. But the hon. Minister, upon that, reported absolutely in favor of approval, and the Government absolutely approved. So, upon the 6th November there was an absolute approval of the continued line for another 148 beyond miles Moose Jaw Creek, making an aggregate, adding the 148 and 113½ miles together, of 261½ miles approved of, beyond the point in respect to which a pledge had been given to Parliament that there would be no such approval until the ascertainment that there was a better line in of the country through Kicking Horse Pass than had been the interests previously obtained through Yellow Head Pass. This action of the Government involved a further payment of $1,480,000 cash, and 1,850,000 acres of land, worth $2.68 an acre, $4,910,000, or a total of $6,390,000 in land and money. Now, Kicking Horse Pass had not then been approved. When last Session we were asked to give the Government authority to approve of a change, the hon. gentleman, in his speech last Session, quoted a telegram of the 17th April as his latest information, and the memorandum of Mr. Smellie, of the 15th April, as the next latest information. His understanding then was that seventy-nine miles would be saved if a straight line across the Selkirk was taken, and not if the big bend of the Columbia River should be followed. The subsequent information which has been brought down indicates that to go by the big bend of the Columbia, instead of by the straight cut, would involve a loss of 77 miles, so that according to all the information received, if you go round by the big bend of the Columbia, you get practically the same distance through the Kicking Horse Pass as through the Yellow Head Pass. The hon. gentleman stated that a further saving has been found of 79 miles since this report was made, but this report is very late.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That report does not refer to the Yellow Head at all.

Mr. BLAKE. Certainly not; but we had before that all the information concerning it, and according to that, seventy-nine miles would be saved by going through the Kicking Horse Pass straight across the Selkirk Mountains, as compared with the route through the Yellow Head Pass. There is no indication of any other change. Then they give the mileage from a certain point by the Kicking Horse Pass at 148 miles, or about that; then they show that seventy-seven miles, or thereabouts, of those 148 miles, would be taken by going by the Big Bend, so that practically the distance is the same. The hon. gentleman says that in some way or other, either by lengthening Yellow Head Pass or by shortening the Kicking Horse Pass, they have found a further saving of seventy-nine miles. On that I am not competent to treat, nor is Parliament competent to deal with it; for the information, though it arrived just in time to enable the hon. gentleman to make his statement, did not arrive in sufficient time to be laid on the Table of the House.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I have simply used the figures furnished by the Chief Engineer. I asked Mr. Schrieber what the saving would be by the line now ascertained, and he gave me the distance saved as compared with the Yellow Head Pass line, to be 119 miles. I have used Mr. Van Horn's statement as to the saving between the line by Kicking Horse Pass and the Selkirk Range, and that around the great bend of the Columbia River.

Mr. MACKENZIE. Whose figures did you use last year?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Last year we had not the accurate information that we have now.

Mr. BLAKE. We have got a report on this subject so late as the 18th April, 1883, which does not give the information the Chief Engineer gave the hon. gentleman. It does not inform us of this further saving. When or how, in which of the valleys or mountains this saving has been found, we have no information of, and it only shows how inaccurate must have been the previous explorations, if that is the result arrived at between the 18th of April and the present time. The question, as it presented itself to me, is a very serious one, for this reason. I quite agree that if the Company and the Government were committed one way or the other, we might look with very considerable confidence, though we would not give up our right of judgment, to a decision taken after full information on the part of the Company as to which road was best for themselves; but it is clear now that before Company had obtained information, and at a time the when it was quite uncertain whether proper means of crossing at the Kicking Horse Pass and going into Kamloops across the Selkirks could be found, they had determined, in their minds, they would go that way and they determined to build their railway in that direction. They determined to go on and spend their money—or rather our money—in that way, and the Government has acceded to that, and these many millions have been expended along the line leading to the Kicking Horse Pass, and of course the Government has got to make the best of it. Of course, having allowed them not merely to go on and build the railway as a branch, but having allowed them to build it as part of the main line, they approved the location, granted the subsidies, and having issued a large quantity of money on land, they have now to say to-night—what else is left for them to say? “The Kicking Horse Pass is the best.” If the Minister was right last year he ought to have reached his conclusion on proper evidence that the Kicking Horse Pass was best before he approved the location of a mile of railway beyond Moose Jaw Creek, or paid a dollar on that line. He tells us he would do it. I have read his language twice repeated; I have proved to him that his pledge was not kept; I have proved to him that twice the location was approved, and that all the information had been received rendering it possible to form a judgment which of those two was the best, rendering it possible to form a judgment in favor of Kicking Horse Pass over the Yellow Head Pass, and that having been done the Company come down to him and say: “Sir, upon receiving the fullest information we are obliged to conclude that the Yellow Head Pass is the best.” He, knowing that he would have stood self-condemned, because he had broken his pledge, and seeing that the Canadian Pacific Railway Company had got him as tight in the vice as they have in some other matters, he was obliged to adopt their views. Now, Sir, I must confess that I am not at all satisfied with the remarks made on this subject in these various reports. In the first place if you take the road round by the Big Bend these reports show that that road is at one end so much longer than the road across the Selkirks, than even according to the hon. gentleman's latest information. The distance in mileage is a mere trifle, but even round by the Big Bend you will have grades off from seventy to ninety feet—the report says that—so that you will have at this rate, in order to go by Kicking Horse Pass in the first place ascending west, five miles of seventy-five feet over the Rockies, and a grade on the western descent of twenty miles of 116 feet to the mile; then you will have a long route by the Big Bend, which contains several grades of from seventy to ninety feet per mile, besides much very difficult work. Now, compare that with a railroad where the maximum grade is only fifty-two, and very little of that. But I say that those grades I have just mentioned render it utterly impossible to compare a railway passing by the Big Bend and Kicking Horse Pass with the railway that the survey proposed, without coming to a conclusion in favor of the Yellow Head; but if you take the Kicking Horse Pass straight across the Selkirk's, then you find a great advantage if the report is true. Major Rogers reports that the whole difficulty of work at the Selkirks could be concentrated in ten or twelve months; but now we find it takes forty months, twenty on the east and twenty on the west. He reported 105 feet grades, but now it seems they will be too expensive, and that it will take 116 feet grades. But we are told that the Central Pacific has as high grades. In one of the letters I have read it is stated that the Union Pacific has such grades. I do not see in the papers I have been able to look at, any statement of a grade higher than 80 or 90 feet on the Union Pacific. I am not able to speak with positiveness for I have not been able to get the information.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That is correct; they are reduced to that.

Mr. BLAKE. It is the reduced grades we are talking about, because it is the improved Union Pacific that we are taking about. The hon. gentleman proposes in this contract to go by the Kicking Horse, giving us a grade of 116 feet to get down the Rockies in the west, and giving us two grades of 116 feet, each of these three grades being for twenty miles to get across the Selkirks. Well, I say he has no authority to do it. I say the authority to approve the route through Kicking Horse Pass is not an authority to alter the terms of the contract to that extent. The terms of the contract were that the grades should be as good, at any rate, as the Union Pacific grades, and the hon. gentleman will have to alter the contract again to get further power. But he assumes to himself the right, in case it turns out that the grades are more than the maximum of the Union Pacific grades, to go by that route, and these grades that we have an express bargain that were not to be worse than the Union Pacific grades, it is now proposed shall be worse by twenty feet than the maximum of the Union Pacific, and those for very long stretches. I certainly admit some of the general propositions stated in the last report. I entirely admit it is much better to have a concentrated steep grade at one point than to have a number of steep grades occurring at different points. It is obvious and proper. But if these grades are more severe, and they are now admitted to be more severe, than the standard which we stipulated for, I do not understand how the hon. gentleman can propose to Parliament to accept the view that he has authority to create a grade twenty-six feet worse than the worst grades of that road which is to be our standard. But, as I said, the hon. gentleman committed himself, and his colleagues who acted for him, committed him in September and again in November, and they decided absolutely to locate the line for the Kicking Horse Pass. Now, I think this has been an error of judgment. Early in the business, so long ago as in that same fall of 1881, the hon. First Minister made his speech, which referred to the new notion of going to Calgary. The Pacific Railway Company decided they would deflect this line to the Selkirks, and that was their general policy. But then they wished to take the whole country into their net, and if any railroads were built by Canada in that country, they must swallow them up unless they were built in the south; and having decided that they wanted to keep to the south, they wanted to go on at the cost of the Government and the country with their construction last year, and they induced the hon. gentleman to violate the pledge he had made to this House, and to take them along to the south of the Saskatchewan, after the decision on the subject of the Kicking Horse Pass. I maintain that having so done, it now having turned out that the saving by the Big Bend would be hardly anything in time, it having turned out that the grades on the track of the road are twenty-six feet more severe than the maximum contract grades, I maintain that that route ought not to be approved. But I have no doubt the Government is shut up to the approval of that route by the course they pursue. Now there is much more to be said, but I am not able to say anything more. In the review of the operations of the Government in connection with the construction of this railway during this year, in the particular which I have just now pointed out, and in other particulars which I have pointed out—in the particular of the eastern end, in the particular of the location of the western end from the Moose Jaw west, and in other regards, I maintain that the Government have shown themselves regardless of the contract, and neglectful of the pledges they made to this House when they asked it to sanction and give them authority to change the route of the railway. I maintain that the progress which has been made in the settlement of the North-West is not due to this contract. I maintain that it is due simply to a line having been built through the prairies of the North-West. However bright may be the picture of that country, under whatever load of difficulty it may yet be able to overcome and prosper, I ask all those who belong to the North-West, how much brighter would those pictures have been, how much clearer would have been the atmosphere, how much brighter the sky, how much plainer the course, if we had 500 or 600 miles built through the prairies now? Our lands would be improved in value, our hands free, and the country would not be bound up by a monopoly for twenty years. The rates would not be obliged to be run up to the enormous prices at which they are now, in order to give those profits, but we should have been left free to sell our lands at their improved value for the building of the ends. How much better and brighter would have been the picture, if only the prudent, reasonable and statesmanlike suggestion we offered: that the Government should not commit themselves—in the then condition of the North-West as to its lands, as to its immigration, as to its communications with the outer world, as to the knowledge of it by the world—to a bargain for the building of the whole line? We should have promoted the rapid development of the North-West; and having produced that state of things which exists to-day, marred and blotted only by the objectionable features of this contract, having provided that state of things without that marring and blotting, then, as I pointed out last year, we might have proceeded to build the ends at an enormous saving of money to this country, and still greater safety as to its future, in regard to extensions and monopolies, which are going to form, for a long time to come, a burden very difficult to be borne by the people of that country, who on the one hand are taxed with high duties, and on the other hand are to be burdened with enormously high rates. It seems to me that these considerations are plain and simple. It seems to me possible, notwithstanding the glamor which the hon. gentleman endeavors to throw over the scene—even if it is due to the activity and enterprise of the Government that 400 or 500 miles of railway have been constructed through the Prairie country—that all these things might have been obtained at a much less cost in the present, and an infinitely less cost in the future had the course which we suggested been adopted. And, Sir, while the advantages which the hon. gentleman has pointed out, and which he has attributed to the contract, but which I say have been produced in spite of the contract, are in the present, the disadvantages are in the future. We are only beginning to feel and to see them. It is not so much when the settler is going to the North-West with his property and effects, and is investing his capital in the removal, in the purchase of his outfit and appliances, that he will feel the high freights, as when he has settled down to the normal condition of the farmer, living on his farm, and obliged to maintain himself every year and to buy the goods he wants out of the prices he receives for the grain and cattle he is able to send to market. It is not the time when a man in spending his capital, and $100 or $200 more is looked upon as part of the investment, but when he comes down to make up accounts of debit and credit between the receipts of the farm and the payments made out of them, that the freights which, under the monopoly and the 10 per cent. clause will be chargeable, will be found to diminish the value of the farmer's wheat and cattle which he has to sell, and will be found to enhance the cost of the goods he has to buy to an extent that will be extremely onerous. I believe, as I have said, that the apparent advantages are present, that the difficulties are only beginning to be discerned, that they will increase and grow from year to year, and with the monopoly and the 10 per cent. clause the bargain of the hon. Minister, instead of being a bargain of which he may feel proud, will be a bargain of which in time to come he will be ashamed.

Mr. POPE. I am not going, Mr. Speaker, to make a speech, but before the House rises I desire to point out some of the mistakes which the hon. gentleman has made, and purposely made, as the paper from which he obtained the figures he did give, contained also the correction, and after having done that I shall move that the House adjourn. The hon. gentleman declared in effect, that he came before the House as a superior man, and as such, would discuss the question. He had hardly entered on his task before he dealt with the subject in the most extreme and misleading manner. With respect to his quotations from the Canadian Pacific Railway tariff, I wish to show his disingenuousness, that he did not point out matters in the tariff, except in a way that must be misleading, and which he knew was misleading.

Some hon. MEMBERS. Order.

Mr. POPE. I say the hon. gentleman knew, because he had the facts under his hand, and I am not out of order. What did the hon. gentleman say. Quoting from the Canadian Pacific Railway tariff, he said: that merchandise of the first class was 80 cts. per hundred pounds, while on the Union Pacific it was 57 cts., the distance being 200 miles. With respect to the rates for 400 miles he said nothing, and regarding those for 600 miles he said nothing. If he had told the house that they were $1.97 on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and $2.47 on the Union Pacific for the latter distance, he would have told the House the truth and dealt with the question in a fair manner.

Mr. BLAKE. I had not the rates of the Union Pacific over 200 miles.

Mr. POPE. Then I wish to inform the hon. gentleman, that the paper which contained the figures which he did give, contained the information, and yet in view of that fact, he has led the House astray. In regard to second-class goods, the rate of the Canadian Pacific Railway was 67 cts., as against 60 cts. on the Union Pacific. If he had taken 400 miles he would have found the rate $1.35 on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and $2.13 on the Union Pacific, and he would therefore have given the House some idea what the tariffs really are. If the hon. gentleman knows anything about railways, he would be aware that almost all the goods are classed as third and fourth-class, and that the rate on first-class is of little importance, because the great bulk of the goods belong to the third and fourth classes. On the third class he informed us the rate is 54 cts. on the Canadian Pacific Railway, and 51 cts. on the Union Pacific for 200 miles. If he had taken 600 miles, he would have found the rate $1.08 on the Canadian Pacific and $1.91 on the Union Pacific. Now, Sir, I desire these things to be understood. I think it well, after what has been placed before the House to-night, that this matter should not be left as the hon. gentleman left it. Now we come to the fourth class, which is the most important. The hon. gentleman did not quote these rates and why? Just for the reason that for fourth class goods for 200 miles, the rate on the Canadian Pacific is 40 cts. and 46 cts. on the Union Pacific. Then, Sir, why did he not take the rates for 600 miles? If he had taken 600 miles, he would have found that the rate on the Canadian Pacific is 86 cts., and $1.59 on the Union Pacific. He quoted a little further. He said the rate for grain was 24 cts. for 200 miles on the Canadian Pacific. But against 24 cts, it is 46 cts. on the Union Pacific for 200 miles; and the rate of 42 cts. on the Canadian Pacific for 600 miles, is $1.49 on the Union Pacific. Now, if he had taken flour, he would have found that while the rate is 48 cts. for 200 miles on the Canadian Pacific, it is 92 cts. for 200 miles on the Union Pacific; and while 84 cts. are charged for 600 miles on the Canadian Pacific, $3.18 are charged on the Union Pacific. This, Sir, would have given a better idea of the true state of matters to the House. The rate for salt and lime is 66 cts. on the Canadian Pacific for 200 miles, and 70 cts. on the Union Pacific, and $1.29 for 600 miles on the Canadian Pacific, and $2.45 on the Union Pacific. If we take timber, shingles, &c., what the hon. gentleman mentioned, we find that $37 a car for 200 miles are charged on the Canadian Pacific, and $36 on the Union Pacific, while $73 are charged for 600 miles on the Canadian Pacific, and $118 are charged on the Union Pacific. If he had taken live stock, he would find that $60 a car are charged on the Canadian Pacific for 200 miles, and $55 on the Union Pacific; $124 a car being charged on the Canadian Pacific for 600 miles, and $180 on the Union Pacific. In the case of immigrants effects, the Canadian Pacific Railway rate is immensely lower, their figures being $90 against $180 on the Union Pacific; and so, Sir, it is to the end. My hon. friend (the Minister of Railways) explained when he rose, that if you take short distances you would find, perhaps, the rates a little heavier; but, said the hon. gentleman (Mr. Blake) "we did not find this to be the case on the Pembina Branch." And why? There were no long distances on that road. My hon. friend, (the Minister of Railways) when he addressed the House to-night, said that they intended to encourage trade and to assist men who had gone a long way into the country, by giving them cheaper proportionate rates; and he (Mr. Blake) stated that this was all right. What I complain of, and am desirous of reminding you and setting right before the House—if possible before the country—was the comparison which the hon. gentleman made between the rates on the Union Pacific and Canadian Pacific. I might have carried my comparisons still further, but that I do not wish to detain the House at this late hour. But a further comparison would have proved the hon. gentleman to be still more deeply in the wrong.

SUPPLY.

House again resolved itself into Committee.

73. Canada Central Railway subsidy.....$16,800.00

Mr. BLAKE. Is this the final vote?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. It is the balance of the subsidy to the line under the Act.

Mr. BLAKE. Will the whole be paid then?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That covers the entire subsidy.

Mr. BLAKE. Has the Government got in its hands some funds as a guarantee against the interest charge which they have guaranteed?

Sir LEONARD TILLEY. This is the balance of money in our hands to pay the guarantee up to a certain period.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. This discharges the entire liability to the Company for the subsidy, and the money to cover the guarantee of interest was deposited with the Government and remains.

74. Prince Arthur's Landing to Red River..... $350,000.00

Mr. BLAKE. Perhaps the hon. gentleman will give some explanation as to details.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I stated in the course of my remarks to-day that about $300,000 were required to complete the contract on Section B. The contract is practically closed on the other section. The original estimate as to the cost of Section A was $2,300,000, and the estimate of the probable cost is, as nearly as we can arrive at it now, $1,860,000, or $440,000 less than the original estimate. It is approaching nearly to completion. The original estimate for section B was $4,130,707, and the estimate of the probable cost is as nearly as we can arrive at it, $2,905,000, or $1,225,707 less than the original estimate, and this $350,000 is to cover the expenditure to finish these works.

Mr. BLAKE. I did not catch the hon. gentleman's statement with reference to Section A. That is for Eagle River to English River, as I understand.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes.

Mr. BLAKE. What does the hon. gentleman say it will be now?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. $1,860,000 to complete.

Mr. BLAKE. Then it will cost a little more than the estimate of last year? How did that come about? It was well on towards completion, and the hon. gentleman made his estimate.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. I think the hon. gentleman ought to be satisfied with our saving half a million of dollars in completing the contract—the cost being that much less than the sum which was appropriated by Parliament on the best estimate that could be made when the work was commenced.

Mr. BLAKE. I am not satisfied, because the hon. gentleman stated that it would be completed for so much less. Then, as to Section "D," the estimate stands the same as last year.

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. Yes, it practically stands as it was.

Mr. BLAKE. Then as to this $350,000?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. That contract is virtually settled.

Mr. BLAKE. This will be payable to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company, as I understand. What is the nature of the arrangement?

Sir CHARLES TUPPER. We have agreed upon terms of settlement with the contractors for that work, so as to transfer it to the Canadian Pacific Railway Company practically at the contract rate. They will virtually become the
