Ayer's Sarsaparilla

The Best Blood Medicine
So say Leading Physicians and Druggists, and their opinion is endorsed by thousands cured by it of Scrofula, Eczema, Erysipelas, and other diseases of the blood.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla has won the reputation by years of valuable service to the community. It is the best."—R. S. Lang, Druggist, 22 Merrimack St., Lowell, Mass. "In my practice, I invariably prescribe Ayer's Sarsaparilla for chronic diseases of the blood. I find it highly efficacious in the treatment of all disorders of the blood."
Dr. R. B. Boyle, Third and Oxford Sts., Philadelphia, Pa., writes: "For two years I have prescribed Ayer's Sarsaparilla in numerous instances, and I find it highly efficacious in the treatment of all disorders of the blood."
L. M. Robinson, Pharmacist, Sabina, O., writes: "Ayer's Sarsaparilla has always been a great seller. My customers think there is no blood-purifier equal to it."
For many years I was afflicted with scrofulous running sores, which, at last became so bad the doctors advised amputating one of my legs to save my life. I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla and soon saw an improvement. After using about two dozen bottles the sores were healed. I continue to take a few bottles of this medicine each year, for my blood, and am no longer troubled with sores. I have tried other reputed blood-purifiers, but none does so much good as Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—D. A. Robinson, Vandalia, Kansas.

"What is it, Jones?" Mrs. Vandylke asked last night. The children had disappeared from view now; the shed looked dark again.
"It's these children, ma'am, if you please," said the old servant. "It's the queerest thing. I do believe they're getting up a Christmas tree for themselves in there."

And Jones, quite respectfully, laughed. Mrs. Vandylke turned around in surprise.
"Why, who are they?" she asked; and at that instant the front door-bell sounded. Jones disappeared. Mrs. Vandylke waited a little, and then she went to the door and the answer to her question, but it was fully five minutes before he reappeared, and then his face betrayed a nervous perplexity and amusement that could not be concealed.

"Well, Jones," said Mrs. Vandylke. The man had in his hand a damp, heavy piece of paper, and he held it out with a funny twinkle in the eyes.
"If you please, ma'am," he explained, trying to look serious, "it is one of them very queer ones, and it is a tree they're fixing up, and—"

But Mrs. Vandylke waited to hear no more; she let Jones go away and relieve his feelings by a laugh in the kitchen with Joanna, the cook, and then she read the queer little letter the factory girl had written her, over and over again, with a feeling of bewilderment, in the midst of which something new to her heart retained the "lonely lady" from haunting outright for it might be something that it was a very unusual and funny proceeding.

"We're going to have a Christmas tree party in your shed, Miss Val," said Jones, "and will you come to it, please?—seven o'clock on Friday."

Always, I believe, there is a voice waiting in the air, and the children, better, but she herself remained silent before the letter when they went to open the long silent nursery. There was something in the poor little word of invitation that knocked gently on the very door of her heart, and she felt as if she were looking into a world which had been stirring within her mind that she perhaps had a duty to fill to wake into the feelings which for how much longer had been lying dormant, and that it was not doing her duty just to bow her head in submission or inactive endurance.

"Matilda," she said, decidedly, "bring my fur boots and my fur cloak and silk hood. I am going out."

Matilda gazed and wondered while she helped her mistress with her wraps. Still greater was her surprise when the lady said: "Ask Jones to get my things and come with me. I'm going over that shed. Do you know anything about those children, Matilda?"

"Why, no," said the housekeeper, anything about those children, Matilda? "It seems they're giving a Christmas party to some other poor children. We didn't deride the poor little things away, because they seemed so happy and innocent in it. I told Jones I was afraid it would get to your ears; but, indeed, I don't think the little things meant any harm."

But Matilda caught her breath suddenly, for into Mrs. Vandylke's face had come a look of intense interest. "What was that?" she asked. "I told Jones I was afraid it would get to your ears; but, indeed, I don't think the little things meant any harm."

"I have told you that for weeks some tender feelings had been stirring in her mind, and she had needed just this touch from some unexpected quarter to reveal to the poor 'lonely lady' what a treasure lay hidden in her daily life. It seemed to her as though Jones and his lantern never would appear; but they came at last, and in a few minutes the old shed was faintly illuminated while Mrs. Vandylke inspected the children's work with strange and remorseful sensations.

"That will do, Jones," she said at length, in so quiet a tone that the old servant declared afterward he could not tell what she meant to do or what she was thinking; but as they retraced their steps, and Jones' lantern swung ahead of her, lighting up large cold patches of lawn and garden, Mrs. Vandylke's mind was very busy. To begin with, she was delighted to think she had yielded to her impulse to send for the Williams children and Adelaide, the older cousin. What was it that had prompted this? Mrs. Vandylke believed it was something she had heard a child singing the last day she went down to the factory—a bit of an old hymn about Christmas Day and 'giving comfort.' Mrs. Vandylke remembered the tune and the singer—a little girl with a thin bright face and dark eyes, and an honest, brave sort of way with her work—and as that happened to be Val herself, singing as she planned her 'party,' the credit of giving the 'lonely lady' a merry Christmas belonged to her from the first.

The young Williams had been delighted at their invitation, and yet felt a little afraid of spending two whole days with Aunt Irene, who was so cold, although always kind in her manner; but there was a certain sense of exhilaration about arriving on a clear, cold night at the fine house, after a ten mile sleigh ride, with the prospect of a good hot supper before them, and a cosy chat with old Matilda, anyway, who was their staunch friend. So while Mrs. Vandylke was looking at Val's Christmas tree, and then laying off her wraps in the library to which she brought back a much more alert-manner and a happier expression, the big sleigh full of Christmas guests was turning the corner at the end of the main street, showing happy young faces to Val and Dolly, who with their mother were out again doing a little—a very little—Christmas shopping. The luxury of fresh meat and an apple dumpling had been decided upon, to Dolly's infinite delight, although in Mr. Jenkins' shop she had longed, while Val was wishing that they could have dinner enough for the twenty little guests she counted on at her party, for whom her mother had made twenty cakes, and Johnny Baker had procured twenty sticks of candy.

There's the 'lonely lady's' sleigh, called out Dolly, as the sleigh whirled by, and for an instant the four pairs of young eyes exchanged glances.
"Oh, perhaps she's going to have a party herself," cried Dolly in a tone of despair. Val was a little worried lest her scheme should be interfered with. Still, she was not to be deterred. "What if she is?" she said, bravely. "What if she is? I won't hurt anything or anybody with mine."

"But will be so old?" said poor Dolly upon whom the vision of the merry young people speeding towards Mrs. Vandylke's lovely home had a depressing effect. If Val thought of this, more than likely she did not say so, but trotted home, keeping Dolly's spirits up by thoughts of how pleasant the lane children in the alley would be, and how nice to have a real tree all for themselves. Still, even when the bells of the sleighs rang, Val had to admit to herself it was turning terribly cold, and a tear or two which she could not very well choke down, woke into the feelings which for how much longer had been lying dormant, and that it was not doing her duty just to bow her head in submission or inactive endurance.

"I never was more surprised, or amused, I hardly know which," Mrs. Vandylke said, laughing when her young guests had enjoyed a delicious supper, and were sitting around the library fire. "And now, girls, I don't suppose you'll mind entering into a plan I have for returning my invitation in the most appropriate manner. I am not certain whether you all know that upstairs—my children's nursery—has been closed for years. Tessa's boys and Phil's are there. Suppose, in the character of an unexpected Santa Claus, we take them over and leave the children to discover them?"

Dorothea's eyes fairly snapped with delight; and, hardly thinking no proposition could have suited the children better, by the closed door leading thence, wondering what the three rooms above contained, she was just before Christmas festivity that Tessa and little Phil had been called away.

Mrs. Vandylke summoned old Jones, and told her nephew where the keys were, but she herself remained silent before the letter when they went to open the long silent nursery. There was something in the poor little word of invitation that knocked gently on the very door of her heart, and she felt as if she were looking into a world which had been stirring within her mind that she perhaps had a duty to fill to wake into the feelings which for how much longer had been lying dormant, and that it was not doing her duty just to bow her head in submission or inactive endurance.

"THE LONELY LADY'S CHRISTMAS."
PART II.
It was Christmas-time again; Mrs. Vandylke was wondering if the season would ever cease to be so painful to her. She dreaded it and yet she believed—she faced it well; she imagined, like many other people, that the highest form of heroism was to endure and be silent. There was a light flurry of snow outside, and Mrs. Vandylke, who liked to see her servants enjoy themselves at such seasons, wondered if there would be much of a drift on the day itself. She moved over to the western window, while old Jones Porter, her faithful servant, came in to light the lamps and at this moment she caught sight of the long shed, with its flicker of candle-light brightly showing her the little children's heads—the little group who were trying so hard to make themselves 'feel like Christmas' for their poor and penniless mother.

"What is it, Jones?" Mrs. Vandylke asked last night. The children had disappeared from view now; the shed looked dark again.
"It's these children, ma'am, if you please," said the old servant. "It's the queerest thing. I do believe they're getting up a Christmas tree for themselves in there."

Mrs. Vandylke believed it was something she had heard a child singing the last day she went down to the factory—a bit of an old hymn about Christmas Day and 'giving comfort.' Mrs. Vandylke remembered the tune and the singer—a little girl with a thin bright face and dark eyes, and an honest, brave sort of way with her work—and as that happened to be Val herself, singing as she planned her 'party,' the credit of giving the 'lonely lady' a merry Christmas belonged to her from the first.

The young Williams had been delighted at their invitation, and yet felt a little afraid of spending two whole days with Aunt Irene, who was so cold, although always kind in her manner; but there was a certain sense of exhilaration about arriving on a clear, cold night at the fine house, after a ten mile sleigh ride, with the prospect of a good hot supper before them, and a cosy chat with old Matilda, anyway, who was their staunch friend. So while Mrs. Vandylke was looking at Val's Christmas tree, and then laying off her wraps in the library to which she brought back a much more alert-manner and a happier expression, the big sleigh full of Christmas guests was turning the corner at the end of the main street, showing happy young faces to Val and Dolly, who with their mother were out again doing a little—a very little—Christmas shopping. The luxury of fresh meat and an apple dumpling had been decided upon, to Dolly's infinite delight, although in Mr. Jenkins' shop she had

The movement for placing the Canadian flag on the schoolhouses on anniversary of Confederation is spreading rapidly throughout the Dominion and winning the hearty approval of all patriotic citizens. Already has done its share in helping on this movement by awarding a handsome flag to one school in each county of Ontario, but the number of enquiries from all parts of the Dominion as to how flags can be obtained by other schools has determined the publishers of THE EMPIRE to offer a handsome CANADIAN FLAG of best material, 12 feet long (regular price $10), at a premium price of $5.00. Yearly subscribers to THE EMPIRE, at $5.00 per annum, will receive a flag for their school. The EMPIRE will also supply flags for the purpose of the Dominion at 50 per centum of the regular price of each one. Subscriptions to THE EMPIRE, for 1891, are now being solicited. BRONCHITIS
The Empire

Is an inflammation of the bronchial tubes—the air-passages leading into the lungs. Few other complaints are so prevalent, or so dangerous, as this. It is caused by cold, or by exposure to wet, or by a general debility of the system. It is attended by a cough, which is at first dry, and afterwards productive of mucus. It is often accompanied by a fever, and sometimes by a haemorrhage from the lungs. It is a most dangerous disease, and if not treated promptly, it may terminate in death.

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral

C. O. Lepper, Druggist, Fort Wayne, Ind., writes: "My little sister, four years of age, was afflicted with bronchitis. We had almost given up hope of her recovery. Our family physician, a skillful man and of large experience, pronounced it useless to give her any more medicine, saying he had done all it was possible to do, and we must prepare for the worst. As a last resort, we determined to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and it can truly be said that it has saved her life. After taking a few doses she seemed to breathe easier, and within a few days she was out of danger. We continued giving the Pectoral until she was entirely well. This indisputable fact has given me unbounded confidence in the preparation, and I recommend it to my patients, knowing it cannot disappoint them."

Ayer's Cherry Pectoral cured me of a bad cough and my mother of bronchitis. I know of numerous cases in which this preparation has proved very beneficial in families of so that the medicine is known among them as the "consoler of the afflicted." James Edwin Yidal, San Francisco, Cal., writes: "A short time ago, I was taken with an attack of bronchitis. The remedies ordinarily used in such cases failed to give me relief. Almost in despair of ever finding anything to cure me, I bought a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and was helped by the first dose. I did not finish one bottle, but the disease left me, and my throat and lungs are as sound as ever." Geo. B. Hunter, Altoona, Pa.

Sarsaparilla

The Best

Blood Medicine

So say Leading Physicians and Druggists, and their opinion is endorsed by thousands cured by it of Scrofula, Eczema, Erysipelas, and other diseases of the blood.

"Ayer's Sarsaparilla has won its reputation by years of valuable service to the community. It is the best."—R. S. Lang,

Druggist, 212 Merrimack St., Lowell, Mass.

Dr. W. P. Wright, Paw Paw Ford, Tenn.,

says: "In my practice, I invariably prescribe Ayer's Sarsaparilla for chronic diseases of the blood.

"For many years I was afflicted with scrofulous running sores, which, at last became so bad that the doctors advised amputation of my legs to save my life. I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla and soon saw an improvement. After using about two bottles the sores were healed. I continue to take a few bottles of this medicine each year, for my blood, and am no longer troubled with sores. I have tried other reputed blood-purifiers, but none does so much good as Ayer's Sarsaparilla."—D. A. Robinson,

Nash, Kansas.
